

Poetry Series

Diana Rosser
- poems -

Publication Date:
2019

Publisher:
Poemhunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive

Diana Rosser()

A Sonnet For Roger Federer

My thought full mind does struggle to express the weakened way in which my whole self feels when you perform with loose-limbed finesse.
Holding court; your beauty my heart steals.

My covetous heart does not beat alone.
There are many millions more such as mine whose eyes, eager, follow you as their own and cherish every moment of your time.

Do not think now youth's easy flush has left yet clamours new on your unguarded door that we will treasure you one fraction less, In truth, your preciousness is all the more.

So remember that you will be forever Our one and only, Roger Federer

Diana Rosser

A Thank You Note [tanka] above and beside steep cliffs, butterflies hover amongst wild flowers thank you my dear beloved for keeping my eyes open

Diana Rosser

A World Of Words

A world of words, dictionary, non-fiction book find glossary, meanings trembling on the tongue, new ones, beginning saplings young grow trees of terminology.

They bind into a promptory, a knowledge bound trajectory, bringing together all in one a world of words.

And with this vast vocabulary terms build the phraseology, linking the golden ladders rung to climb the wonders just begun building the greatest fantasy a world of words.

Diana Rosser

An English Spring Ramble

Spring is here in every new budding leaf that flourishes beneath this vast expansive sky of baby blue.
Wild pink cherry in blossom by the road covers soft yellow daffodils on show, fav'rite colours in a nursery hue.

Push'd into this expectant painted world first lambs, tails unfurled wobble under udders in fields of green.
Along hedgerows where I slowly amble, deep within the ancient knotted bramble Tree Sparrows flitter and twitter unseen.

Walking with my eyes and heart wide open silent words unspoken, the wayside has its own story to tell.
The wild birds' spring symphony holds me standing here beneath the sunlit cherry looking through branches at a clear blue sky.

Diana Rosser

Around The Corner

I wont tell you the stories he has told me, or the reason why for weeks and months he couldn't sleep.

About the walk around the corner, he kept walking round that corner, walking round that corner for days and months and weeks.

That isn't my story to tell you, only his; but I can tell you that he walks around that corner through his days and through his weeks.

I can tell you that he marched them home leading from the front, right down through the Guildhall to the sound of thudding drum.

I can tell you that he marched all those young boys home.
All of them, but one.

Diana Rosser

Bare Foot Driving Days

Warm sun strokes cotton clothed limbs caressing dormant youth awake the naked sole awaits a gentle push for these are bare foot driving days where flowers unfold their petals for birds and bees flying fancy on a wing

Diana Rosser

Birds

They fly through my heart small measures of joy beating away early morning melancholy.

I sit, wrapped with coffee feasting my eyes through the window on their coming and going.

The song of their voice replenishes me as I step out to fill their table.

Diana Rosser

Black Hounds Howl

Across the starless early morn black hounds howl in relentless rain.
The garden battered, broken, torn lies flat beneath the beasts refrain.

Duress heralds the bleakest dawn where daylight drags its feet in vain across the starless early morn.
Black hounds howl in relentless rain.

Grey ruthless light, through dark clouds drawn pushes with insolent disdain its need upon the sodden lawn; dull glow pillaging night's domain.
Across the starless early morn
black hounds howl in relentless rain.

Diana Rosser

Blooms

In my garden a new rose blooms, velvet red with heady sweet perfume.
The rose bush itself is carefully tended, fertilized, when best remembered.
Cut back yearly, pruned in March, so that when at last the summer sun breaks through in June the rose, displays a perfect bloom.

A small distance away, along a weathered fence; a rose left to ramble, reveals its own elegance.
It's white, pink flowers cluster in great multitudes along it's trailing limbs, clambering and lightly scented they grow and bloom untended.

Diana Rosser

Blown High

It is bewitching this wild winter sky that swirls livid coils past the window pane.
Rolling, twisting billows of grey that cry to merge, blend, before spiralling again; unfolding, captured in a rigid frame.
The base slices fractal branches of three ancient oaks that charcoal across the grain.
But the sky tumultuous tumbling free pulls on walking boots, jumpers, grabs the key; sweeps me buffeted beyond the fence swept wayward towards the familiar trees swaying beneath rootless magnificence.
There blown high amidst the gathering storm the pointless miseries of life are torn.

Diana Rosser

Blue Sky

Touch the grass it waves against my skin the lark can be heard to sing blue sky speaks of you and summer days

Walk with me slide fingers down my undress wrap me in the smallest death loose me here amongst the grass and swaying wind until I no longer feel where I begin pull your bow over the lark song watch it speed across the cloudless sky

until there is nothing but shimmering sun and you.

Diana Rosser

Buttercups 2013

Icy winds cut the chill held the warmth of seasons in an iron grip thick jumpers hung around breaking aureolin finally pushed aside the frigid sky enveloped the mellow mounds of hills the forgotten road side curbs the newly tended lawns in shinning silken petal cups that danced waves of sunshine through morning meadows and fallow fields.

Diana Rosser

Canned Heat

Heavy heat sighs

seeps through the ridges of warped backbones s p r e a d i n g between the blades of shoulders pressed shoulder to shoulder trickles into the crevices of buttocks pressed
buttock to buttock squeezes droplets from furrows etched on glistening temples drips rivulets down tired cheeks pooling beads across the top of parched lips.

Diana Rosser

Canvas

Composition of light slowly squeezed Acrylic dabbed and daubed New image gradually emerging Vision of raging tempest unfurling Across taut woven white Stormy sea pitching billowing sail

Diana Rosser

Childhood Slaughtered

I

Sweet sun, shone light, in clear blue sky.
Innocent feet went walking by.
Laughter rang out with voices high, said their goodbye; said their goodbye.

To grandma's village, family, friends along dirt track, up hills, round bends with thoughts of days that would befriend, until the end; until the end.

Gathered in the village square, sound wrapped by cricket filled night air, beneath bright stars that twinkle there, the wind blew fair; the wind blew fair.

Dawn broke red across deep dreaming fast running feet, warning, screaming "soldiers have left your village bleeding go, get leaving; go, get leaving"

In far distance fires burning fear for mother, no returning behind brother, full of yearning pounding, churning; pounding, churning

Running skinny long limbed child after brother, miles and miles through thick forest, eyes all wild relief smiled; relief smiled.

Sleeping, spent, in low down branches woken up by sunlight's glances hunger gnawing their advances weighing chances; weighing chances.

Warily retracing footsteps back to village where they last slept hoping loved ones were, safe kept how their hearts wept; how their hearts wept.

Smouldering, twisted, charred remains homes, dreams, wishes, innocent games, wood, friends, family, all the same blackened, maimed; blackened, maimed.

Hiding eyes- swivel, village square neighbours kneeling, bound, brought bare folded beneath an Ak's stare remaining there; remaining there

Triumph, blood soaked, laughing, jeering, weapons dance the village clearing boys and men their red eyes cheering disappearing; disappearing.

Pull from bushes one last slaughter Grandma's neighbour's weeping daughter Strap her to a tree and force her one last slaughter; one last slaughter.

Tough hands grab the newest soldier rifle slung from floor to shoulder, give him a blade, make him older "obey order; obey order"

In front of hidden, hiding eyes captive stands, before captive prize slits her throat from side to side watches her die; watches her die.

High five; he has lost his new crown comrades hand him, snort of 'brown-brown' lads laughing leave, to 'paint the town' no coming down; no coming down

II

Childhood slaughtered by their seeing, brothers, silent, frozen, weeping loose connection to their feeling plan their leaving; plan their leaving

Grab from butchered burnt remains remnants of life left to sustain a journey weighted down by pain all in vain; all in vain

Days and months of hunger driven survival tortured, safety riven no childhood slip ever forgiven bravely striven; bravely striven.

Until new dawning of the day that dearest brother slipped away died, just like that at break of day nothing to say; nothing to say

Broken skinny long limbed child Roaring, raging, grief stricken, wild finds a tribe, self soldier styled so reviled; so reviled

Raiding then the newest soldier with rifle hung from floor to shoulder rages through violent disorder red eyes smoulder; red eyes smoulder

III

Captive stands before captive prize childhood slaughtered. Blazing eyes slice gaping gut from side to side watching life slide; watching life slide

High five; he has lost his new crown
comrades hand him, snort of 'brown-brown'
lads laughing leave, to 'paint the town'
no coming down; no coming down.

Diana Rosser

Cogs

She cut her teeth on his broad shoulders, honed them on his words.

Slotted herself into his so he could spin her anyway he wanted;

but she could bring him to a stop, leave his heart pounding.

Diana Rosser

Complete

I did not expect to find myself here ambling along amidst these grave yard stones, high on the cliff top with the air so clear making my way towards skeleton bones; the old Abbey ruins, rising majestic silhouetted on a back drop of blue.
I did not expect to find myself here walking once more in the sunshine with you.

I did not expect to find myself here
sitting on this mound amidst butterflies watching the gentle breeze cotton clouds steer up lit, granite grey, Benedictine sides.
With you in the sunlight reading the past the swallows skimming right low near my feet I did not expect to find myself here, here in this moment, utterly complete.

Diana Rosser

Crocuses

Crocuses bloom above the grass that winter, which has yet to pass has kept from growing in the parks and gardens.

They blossomed very late this year I thought they never might appear but I was wrong and now they're here in rainbows.

Their heads of purple, white and gold abundant in the bitter cold catch the sunshine as they unfold their petals.

Diana Rosser

Daylight And The Dark

My own, as the sunrise greets the morning my head is here but elsewhere is my heart for we are the deepest oceans apart and the ghost of our love lies there haunting this vast distant chasm between us yawning.

Bolts shot from Eros always leave a mark unforgotten through daylight and the dark.
Evening comes flirting as day is dawning.

Diana Rosser

Dazzling Song

Perched high on the tallest bare brown branch the red-breasted robin sings full throated.
This year, though perhaps I have just noted, his chest seems so much brighter than before.

Underneath the rays of golden sunshine the gorgeous jewel blazing crimson ruby puffs itself up into all its glory and bathes this new morning in dazzling song.

Diana Rosser

Dead Flowers

On the lamp post dead flowers hang from a thread.

The thread that held her here was cut and now she's dead.

Her mother's head hangs like those dead flowers.

Diana Rosser

Desert Sands

Invisible, amidst grains of sand; blinding heat beads sweat that rivers run from furrowed brow to hollow hands that wipe along the sting that lands on skin stretched beneath blazing sun.

Each and every way the warm wind blows shards of glass swirl into heaving mounds that shift and change the way to go.
A moving sea that dips and throws unsteady feet on to drifting ground.

How is direction to be embraced, when all that can be seen is endless, desert marked by displacing face.
Where travelled footprints leave no trace and all around barren emptiness.

Diana Rosser

Do Not Leave Me

Do not leave me in this world without you.
You are woven through the fabric of my life.
If you abandon me I will unravel slowly, thread by thread, until I am nothing but holes.
How then will I continue when so much of me is missing?

Diana Rosser

Dream Catcher

Enchanted web woven by silken touch, a crowd of tangled dreams to filter through; Visions of raw enmeshed sight too much, torment by night before morning anew.

O come bright dance, flutter around sleep's head.
Feathers on soft tendrils by warm spell sown, hang down throughout long night above tucked bed up coil tortured spectres, make them your own.

Send forth from wooded hills the eagle hawk.
Gather in talons sharp discarded fright, leave dreams full of nature's bounteous walk across eyes that sleep still through gentle night.

Let knowing wind ancient lullabies sing and protect love's dreams under catcher's wing

Diana Rosser

Early Summer

Down a dusty dirt track, behind the old football stadium with its broken white washed wall and rickety wooden stand there lived a lady who squatted when she washed her clothes with sun light soap and grew top leaves and flowers.

These she wrapped in the same newspaper she used to make cones of freshly roasted peanuts.

She showed us, all shorts, bare foot and wild sun, how to fold swimming towels that could be thrown through the air like a rugby ball and not unravel.

They kept our secret safe when charging home to roll it out, mixed with tobacco scrapped out from 'ten centies', smoked in the guava tree, sweet of fruit,
that grew in a garden that lingers still in dreams and the sunshine of early summer.

Diana Rosser

Easter

The vernal equinox has come.
Eostre, Goddess of the dawn awakes due east this happy morn.
Dark days of biting cold are done.
Virgin shoots show; life has begun.
Church bells ring that hope is risen.
Winter's sins will be forgiven.
Easter, time of new beginning is here.

Lovingly laid in secret places many coloured ovals lie.
Some will spread their wings and fly, whilst others pluck'd from their spaces vanish into chocolate faces.
Golden trumpets everywhere herald that spring is in the air, and in the fields the mad march hare boxes.

Diana Rosser

Easy Does It

This perfect day warm and easy spreads itself so light and breezy across lost hours gardening where new plants find their beginning amidst the sprung green and leafy.

Languid limbs tired and sleepy stretch themselves beneath the pear tree under a blue sky blossoming this perfect day

From the branch perch in the ivy a speckled breast small and tiny cocks its head to where I'm lying makes its first attempt at flying this perfect day.

Diana Rosser

First Thoughts On Seeing Birds Over Copacabana

What are these nameless birds that rise bent wing on slow thermal winds.

Strolling bare foot in the early morning they appear one by one over the sea gathering with vultures to carpet the city skies rising like a lazy inversed tornado high over the backdrop mountains and the sugar loaf.

Weightless on the hotel bed I watch them hardly flap a wing relaxed in the rising heat.

In the evening as the sky begins to blush they return over the water.

I have watched them all day and still don't know their name

Diana Rosser

Flash Point

a picture captures a single flash point in time a snap shot for memory a memory keeps fuller and brighter inside the weave of a Poem the instant you start to read the flood gates open and there you are once again back in the moment through a worm hole of senses to where all the words began

Diana Rosser

Flight

A spiders web breaks the ocean of dark, Alexandria's matrix, gold under the stretching wing.

My eyes catch with wonder the cross of night over Africa's start.

How is the city that has left its mark on wisdom and war? Do you still slumber, or will unrest cause the sound of thunder once more, to tear your heated streets apart?

The lights fade into the returning dark.
Easing the chair, I tuck myself under the free blanket.
Removed from the wonder I cross the night into Africa's heart.

Diana Rosser

Folded

folded
in your nakedness - a lotus flower

Diana Rosser

For You

You are my love, my Garden of Eden, my safe harbour in life's hostile tempest; the place I fold into when all things else have left me raging and almost beaten.
When desolate clouds have choked all reason and dark grim despair beguiled comforts rest, where even nature's hand remains unblessed, there you abide through every season an anomalous beam in sightless mist.
Though ripeness has stolen youth's bright luster you smell as sweet as those first teenage days.
Summer meadows still lie within your kiss and bound within the curve of your laughter still exists amidst dreams and love's warm gaze.

Diana Rosser

Freedom

I shall just lie here and feel the wind blow gentle.
I shall just lie here and listen to the song in the trees.
I shall just lie here as the bees keep busy, and shut my eyes lightly under shimmering blue.

I can sleep easy as the wind licks around me.
I can sleep easy beneath this cherished English sky.
I can sleep easy.
Far up high, swifts dance swiftly, whilst I drift sleepily under shimmering blue.

Diana Rosser

Frosty Morning - Triolet

Across the field frost lies thickly covering tapered blades in white; sparkling silver moulded stiffly across the field. Frost lies thickly upon which soft wings land swiftly captured by bright morning light across the field. Frost lies thickly covering tapered blades in white.

Diana Rosser

Fugu

Time passes

The child that built sandcastles meters across is long gone

castle turrets adorned strong wide walls battered by spade baked by sun

cannon balls pounded the incoming sea the tide could never be held back when it was out you could walk a long way towards the reef swimming through the rock pools with the puffer fish getting them to puffer up with their spikes sticking out like a hedgehog slow swimmers it was easy to catch them though you had to be careful of their poisonous spines

it takes seven years of training to slice them into Fugu on a plate.

Gift

Beneath a meteor shower in cold November wrapped in a duvet on an old lounging chair, stretched out, watching streaks of flaming embers race across the dark, crystal clear midnight air,

I almost wished upon one bright shooting star; but checked greed's impulse as I remembered there a saying my father taught, brought from afar 'he who wants all misses all'. so I lived in the moment, given by that star.

Diana Rosser

Give Hope A Chance

Death, you have spent too long in the desert, move away. Let kindly soothing winds wrap gentle discourse around past pain and hurt and mend the rift that tears the growing gap.

Dawn struggles over the harsh horizon.
Let it through, so it can gradu'lly fill with warmth those souls whose thoughts and hearts harden at any compromise or change of will.

Bear your banner towards the river Styx.
Gather two coins to pay the ferry man.
Weigh down your cutting scythe with heavy bricks.
Float upon the changing tide, leave this land.

Let Hope born by temperate wings arise and fill with light, broken desert skies.

Diana Rosser

Give Me A Drink

Before me thy beauty sparkles.

Woven into your long cool deliciousness bubbles rise perfect in their minuteness.

What would I give to dive into that blackness?

Submerge myself in cool sweetness.

Feel myself sink Beneath the ice
Weighted to the bottom Holding my breath

Rise slowly in their upward stream towards the surface past the floating lime bursting to the top gasping for air with my mouth wide open.

Lick my lips and return to the bottom once more.

Diana Rosser

Golden

In the garden the morning light beams a shining shaft, golden bright on the newly built wooden fence erected as a firm defense against the winters raging might.

It is such a glorious sight to see this beacon of delight spotlight the crocuses growing in the garden.

I watch the spreading shaft highlight the swaying daffodils upright some with only small buds showing others with their trumpets blowing all audacious in the sunlight in the garden.

Diana Rosser

Golden Autumn

Golden autumn sparkles starlight stained glass fractures of sunlight gleaming, glinting through fated leaves turning in the billowing breeze into flickering flames of light, that burn against a breathless sight; a sky of deep purple delight across which, soft shimmering, weaves golden autumn

into an arc of colour bright that sweeps all hues from left to right above glistening green blade seas dancing beneath the flaming trees spinning the spark that does ignite golden autumn.

Diana Rosser

Gone

It is the hollow of your shoulder blade where I rest my head safe against your soft skin curved along the strength of your backbone that

I

m i s s when you are

g o n e

my place of safety

my harbour against the storm of the world but you are

g o n e

and I must wait for your safe return.

Diana Rosser

Grey

Grey road stretched through grey rain.
Grey rain fell through grey mist.
Grey mist enveloped all, all the eye could see,
all the land,
all the sky and me.
Grey covered all,
all the way down to the sea.

Glimpsed through grey the swell of the ocean, riding the waves a wind surfer surfing, chopping, fighting the crests with swift motion skirting the spray, sail unfurling.
Stopping, I stared at that sight in the mist, oh how he came dancing over the sea, right through the rain a state of sheer bliss, the wondrous frolic rippling throughout me making me tingle right down deep inside.
That misty image ripped all grey apart a glorious vision of freedom untied, returning tremendous joy to my heart filling me up, bringing tears to my eyes, emerging from grey a great love of life.

Diana Rosser

Haiku - Spring

a crocus blossoms beneath the wild cherry plum - a single bugle

Diana Rosser

Halcyon Days

Cool water pushes up against my face.
Eyes searching, left, right, Enchantment, pure delight.
Darting colours dashing through.
From twilight shadows wonders move I hang, buoyant, watching, mesmerized Enraptured by this lustrous paradise.

Diana Rosser

Half A Chance

I will know death.
So will you and there is nothing you or I can do.
We will know death.

It will come today, tomorrow, sometime, when.

There is no escape no exit route to take us to some other place.
We will know death.

But for now you and I are living breathing things.
Grasp the life that will not be.
Live and live before the door is shut

Do not close it prematurely.
Life may yet surprise you if you give it
half a chance.

Diana Rosser

Happiness

In a quiet moment it is there now easy as the gentle breeze, soft like the falling rain it fills the well found accidently on a train in the poetry of Roykan; discovered on a journey when the pursuit of pleasure and happiness were muddled and the difference unknown.

Diana Rosser

He Has Gone

He has gone to shadow in sweet shade, out of the glare from the ancient sun, placed his footsteps in footsteps done, left the ripe rose garden that he laid.
The coloured roses they have stayed, their fragrant petals float down undone, now their beheading must be begun, their life and death be duly weighed.
I handle now his familiar shears, recognize the Christmas gifts I bought, remember how we sat down to talk on the corner bench through many years; just a week before the words he taught njia, the way runs through my tears.

Diana Rosser

He Raised His Voice

Ken Saro-Wiwa spoke out against the environmental degradation of the land and waters of the Ogoni.

Ken Saro-Wiwa raised his voice
but not his fist

His home land in the Niger delta ravaged, polluted by decades of crude oil dumping.

Ken Saro-Wiwa raised his voice
but not his fist

He chastised the Nigerian government for refusing to enforce regulations that would have protected Ogoni land

Ken Saro-Wiwa raised his voice
but not his fist
for this,
Ken Saro-Wiwa was hanged.

Ken Saro-Wiwa was hanged
but not silenced

His words live on to be read a thousand times by millions of other outspoken voices.

Diana Rosser

Hengist And Horsa

Land left unguarded by Roman might painted Picts came southward, swift warriors, in stealth and at night.
Half naked Hiberni came westward from the long Irish shore ruthless looters, adept with the sword.
Vortigern wanted raiders no more.
So he called defenders, yes he called defenders, and defenders came riding the waves with longboat and oar.

Vortigern bought the fiercest fighters, mercenaries renowned for their fearless battle bold prowess.
The mighty best of those that he found stormed uncertain rough deep skirting the coast they then came aground in Pegwell bay, Ebbsfleet.
So landed the Jutemen, the best of the Jutemen, the first of the Jutemen and Saxons this lush land to keep.

Menacing mist lay on the water as on Britannia's sand stepped those Jute twins Hengist and Horsa.
Chieftain brothers in search of new land for their own Danish tribe.
Straight to battle with smiting sword hand; stood at Vortigern's side they slaughtered Pict raiders the painted Pict raiders, they repelled Pict raiders who ran back to the Northlands to hide.

Fine feasting with wild mead drinking took place in the palace where Hengist and Horsa were staying.

Fringed by the legacy lands in place Hengist liked what he saw told Vortigern that to keep them safe his warriors would need many more So Hengist sent for Jutes.
Yes he sent for more Jutes and more Jute warriors came sailing Britannia's fertile shore.

In return for their might the Jutemen were given, the fertile coastal Isle of Thanet to live on.
Hengist in conciliatory style asked for a 'hide of land' Vortigern who thought just a short while gave all to the devious Juteman; who sought the biggest bull then slew the biggest bull stripped the big bull's hide then thinly sliced and stretched it with his hand.

The stretched bull hide a vast circle drew upon Britannia's ground, in which Hengist built a fortress new to keep his expanding foothold sound.
Into this fortress went his daughter, the fairest to be found Vortigern's hunger would not relent so he took Rowena fair beguiling Rowena beautiful blue-eyed Rowena and gave Hengist the land of Kent.

Diana Rosser

Hope

When there is only mournful dark despair shut your weary eyes and visualise the flicker of peppered stars, now there blazing the milky way in desert skies.

See easy light breath life in shadow shapes as the black horizon gives way to sun.
Watch the flush of morning draw back night's drapes, lie still, whilst final sparks in blue are done.

Linger upon the slowly rising orb, feel warmth embolden lifeless weakened limbs, let all the glorious heat be absorbed,
'til the dawn chorus in your heart does sing.

Then in that moment in that tranquil space let expanding hope, dark despair replace.

Diana Rosser

Hush Now

Hush now

The world awakens yawning and stretching pushing new growth through the raging winter night into this crisp blue morning.

Through the sob sob sobbing of the rain here comes life,

Here comes spring again.

Diana Rosser

I Am Here

Supposing I became the cool breeze that slipped through your early morning window brushing your day and cheek awake, would you know me then wrapped around you holding you safe?
Supposing I became the gentle sun that broke your first steps into the working week, would you know me there on the pavement warm beneath your feet?
Or perhaps the starling in the sky above or the heron by the low running creek or the purple thistle by the rugged path which holds you standing watching the fluttering wings of a butterfly landing.
Would you know me then?
For I am here in all nature's bounteous gifts.

Diana Rosser

I Cannot Recall The First Drop Of Rain

I cannot recall the first drop of rain, but after the first fall the splatters came.
They hit the grey pavement with great big splots.
Splat, splat, splat they arrived, drop after drop.
They fell down through the clouds slowly at first then faster, faster till the whole sky burst.

Diana Rosser

I Choose Happiness

Harsh words burst forth from your brutal mouth

I watch them babble away in a sparkling brook jumping joyous over damming rocks

soft moss clings to the sodden edge

sunlight glistens a warm gentle promise

high above the ever changing sky hangs constant

Today I choose happiness.

Diana Rosser

I Have Been Home

I have been home.
I never thought I would step foot again beneath the jacaranda trees that line a drive where scrapped knees learnt to ride a bike and Smile straight legs into the air.
But I have been back there and though both house and child are changed the jacaranda trees remain.

Diana Rosser

I Have Buried Her In Hadaba

I have buried her in Hadaba beneath the crescent moon overlooking the shimmering sea.

Far below someone is night diving in gently waving slick black waters, their luminous green light signal shines.

I see her sitting on the swing seat forwards and backwards on the cliff top, backwards and forwards on the cliff top overlooking the shimmering sea.

Diana Rosser

I Looked At My Everyday Love In A Mindful Way

I looked at my everyday love in a mindful way saw his thumb behind his ear hand pressed against his face I have seen that thumb upright, fingers clenched as he tackles his way along the football pitch.
Eyes bright he'd flash me his youthful grin and I I would marvel at the pace of him.

He plays still and I have felt that thumb more than once get buttons undone.

I looked at my everyday love in a mindful way connecting a loose wire.
Lost in concentration, tongue tip poking between his lips I have seen those lips drink tea and beer curve in jokes and bright asides rage, snarl cut me to the quick

I have felt those lips moisten into the most tender kiss

I looked at my love in a mindful way I have seen the hair on his chest grow and grey for thirty seven years he has been my everyday.

Diana Rosser

I See You

I see you
amongst the falling brown making your way.

I have been desolate in damp mist and there you are filling me with possibility and lighter step, raising my eyes from the muddy ground into your sight.

How grateful
I am that you are here this dark morning.

Diana Rosser

I Stepped Out Into Autumn

I stepped out into autumn
the sight held my breath at bay burnished dressed in copper red against sky of purple grey.

The sharp sun glinted golden perfect rainbow did display
I stepped out into autumn
and it took my breath away.

Diana Rosser

I Went Walking

I went walking beneath an English sky, around dormant fields churned winter brown.
The chill air on my face was crisp and dry.
The path I walked waved up and down gentle undulating hills.

I followed an ancient bridle way that crossed my track whilst wandering free sometime around the middle of the day as I emerged into greenery covering the way ahead.

Lit it was, with dappled sunlight dancing flickering golden stars on to the ground "come follow" called this path enchanting so I, with freedom at my heels found myself out upon those hills.

Diana Rosser

In This Moment

In this moment in front of me a sparrow flown down from a tree has folded its magnificent wings.
Feather'd tessellated markings in multicoloured brown can be the most beautiful sight to see.

I examine each carefully; Deliberately noticing
in this moment

that my thoughts which weigh'd heavily have lighten'd and my heart feels free.
Thankfulness grows with these feelings for nature which keeps on giving.
Gratefully, I sit still; carefree in this moment.

Diana Rosser

Inside Me Was The Stillness

Woven, high between bare branches rooks nests gather where new growth sprouts, amidst the stillness inside me.

A tiny blue tit twittering, flitters towards a coconut, feeding the stillness inside me

The sky, open, glistening blue, white clouds sailing, a seagull soaring, through the stillness inside me.

A purple pansy perfect as the stillness inside me until..... people came knocking, ringing, wanting Then the stillness was gone.

Diana Rosser

Into The Shadow

Come; let us walk towards the water's edge through soft green grass, adorned with wild flowers.
Sheltered on a blanket spread, we will stretch beneath the shadow of the Alder's boughs.

I shall lean sure against your beating heart as setting sun dips towards ev'ning sky.
While long fingers creep silently across the day, in knowledge of you, I shall lie.

When darkness moves into the dim of night and we must fold the blanket of our dreams into the ending of our grateful lives closing our way along the bright white beam may dominion keep our two hands entwined and keep them thus until the end of time.

Diana Rosser

It Is Enough

Push..... glide..... slide.....cup pull back.

Push..... glide..... slide.....cup
pull back.

Easing, feeling, cold water pleasing

Push.....glide..... slide.....cup
pull back.

Nothing but that

Nothing but that

Just

push..... glide.....slide.....cup
pull back.

Diana Rosser

Joy

Rushing cold glides over smooth rock.
Sun light catches small stars dancing across naked feet paddling at the waters edge.

Diana Rosser

Leaving

He left gradually like water evaporating after the rains

no moment signalled the beginning of his leaving the lushness that surrounded him just slipped away waters became muddier crowded with predators snarling snapping at the retreating edge then he was gone

leaving nothing but dust.

Diana Rosser

Life

Sunlight seeps into the garden.
Soon it will be pushing through winter bursting into life.

Gone will be the comfort of these days snuggled on the sofa spent in the company of poems and birds.

There is no need to clamour for change:
with the seasons life itself brings new beginnings and ends.

Diana Rosser

Living

it is the moment when the sun breaks through early morning mist and touches your face the sight of white wispy gossamer threads scurrying over a high cornflower

blue sky

a green parakeet in an English garden the pull of cool water and the feel of your hand in mine

Diana Rosser

Lonesome Road

Grey winding
lonesome road laments beyond high hedgerows hiding sun blushing rose spilling throughout darkening day sky.
Speed teasing devils push homeward lyrics screaming bring pent-up release driving out sorrow lures transient peace

Diana Rosser

May You Never Know

May you never know sorrows such as these stifling grey clouds of wretchedness that seep through strangling vines that flourish in their deep dark dankness. Cold fingers that wind and squeeze crushing and bending until your stout knees buckle. Neither wept pray nor drugged sleep stops their insidious dampness from creep-ing inside last hopes that flicker and tease.
How to endure a mountain such as this, where even tenacious boots cannot grip and each way forward is a backward slip?
It offers no hiding place or state of bliss to starve the bleakness of this final trip.
Salvation lies only in deaths sweet kiss.

Diana Rosser

My Father Is Dead

My father is dead
and I loved him.
Life carries on but he's dead and all that I was,
is not there anymore because he is not there, to open the door at eleven in the morning and just say to me, it is time do you think for a glass of the red and to sit on the bench and discuss what is said My father is dead
and I loved him.

Diana Rosser

Nature Consists In Motion

Sitting on the tube looking length ways down a moving carriage boring through a tunnel rushing past.

Dust speck on a finger a galaxy of stars.

The carriage not enough to contain the observable universe.

Sunlight breaks the window flurries catch the light.
Swirling specks on invisible currents.

Death disputed unravelling silently amongst the living.

Spinning embers of a new beginning

Diana Rosser

Nesting Storks

When I return and time permits I shall write of these white nesting storks with their large bulky twigged nests dangling atop old cylinders of iron and wooded telegraph poles.

Their nursery lines the train track for miles and miles across the spread of land that flattens wide towards the narrow sea.
Plucked straight from childhood stories they stand erect with folded black backed wings

Their dark eyes speak of ancient secrets their long red bills of treasured dreams; and just before they outstretch fingers into glide their vast wings beat to the rock of the train.

Diana Rosser

No Better Place

The tulips have been battered by the wind All their colours lay strewn upon the lawn
The end of day is split across the clouds The drawing night plays echoes to the dawn

A symphony of splattered colours amongst the sprawling wild winds of grey.
Streaked yellow, red and crimson petals lost upon glistening green at end of day.

And I will tell you this there is no better place to lie than in this English garden with the wind, wild across the sky

Diana Rosser

No Place To Hide

Splintered fragments shatter cohesive thought searching through the ratter, tat, tat, to no understanding.

He knew

Someone, somewhere saw the unravelling the brilliance dissipating fragmenting, splintering.

Someone, somewhere
shouted, screamed, pleaded to help him.

Others talked, pushing paper and ideas precious time slipping through inaction and indecision whilst pictures built and voices came louder, louder, louder urging the stock piling, the building, the buying until the ratter, tat, tat burst through the remnants of ordinary lives spraying misery over broken remains bleeding out into debates that rage through precious time slipping

Diana Rosser

Nothing

Nothing
weighs heavily.

It contains the gravity of the situation.

Diana Rosser

'Nothing'

amongst olive groves warm sunlight sparked fires that burn centuries later a torch in dark places where nothing has a measurable existence

Diana Rosser

On The Road Again

On the road again
Trav'ling with my friend Kicking up the surf Singing the sweet song Strolling sandy shores Under heavens wings Beneath the outstretched arms of the Redeemer

Diana Rosser

Open

Do not hide in the living room amidst the familiar and well thumbed

Open the door

Feel the air trace its fingers along your face and hands

Open your hands

Breathe in Open your eyes

Breathe out your mark upon the day

Diana Rosser

Packing Up Christmas

Packing up Christmas,
taping up memories.

A flock of green parakeets are sitting in the bare pear tree, Chaffinches fall to the ground like leaves.

The fairy from Arusha, how old is it now?
Nearly half a century, maybe more.

A golden string of notes unravelling from school days not so long ago.

Mum and Dad's tree,
my childhood,
their childhood.

Folded away into a box labelled South African sherry.
How far that has travelled,
Nigeria, Switzerland, Home.

Diana Rosser

Patient Death

High above rich wetland a lone kestrel.

Patient death beating, fixed in measureless blue.

Elegant white swans swim through rare grasses greeting migrating geese sliding in with the setting sun.

Darkness falls, who will sing the requiem?

Diana Rosser

Priceless Moment

through the golden leaves falling down from golden trees in a golden flash there flew the prettiest thing a goldfinch on golden wing

Diana Rosser

Rainbow Sky

Through soft sandy gums layered deep like teeth of sharks, mountains rise.

Rocky serrated pink, purple, chiselled.
Edge a quiet blue

The small stillness breaths the silent wind

Leaving heat curves its stretch along the whole horizon

spilling blood orange.
A catch of breath in the return of bright.

How the light yellow band glows flows never seen green blending blue into indigo sprung with s t a r s

Diana Rosser

Relief

Gathering winds cumulate moisture seeds rolling athwart tempestuous seas, that float in gossamer clouds on cooling breeze, easing savage summer swelter parching stark expectant fields.
Sweeping inward monsoon black, lightning Flash! crack!
Thunder, splat! Heavy drops, dance, dart, dash.
Joyful hands clap! Young feet, jump, splish, splash; relief floods. Torrents rain down warm on earth's upturned face, rivulets run wild along nakedness, baptising thirsty toiled fields made ready for planting.

Diana Rosser

Repose

Oh sweet repose, thou doth call me.
Quiet I shall come and rest easy on the silken canvas laid by your silent hand.

Slacken as I bend into your patient restraint, for my body is heavy with peaceful inactivity and my mind tranquil in the quiet stillness.

Diana Rosser

Resolution Sonnet

Sometimes I let my spirit get so down hearted. I let it slide into darkness; bury it in the cold, build walls around, bolt hatches, so it will not feel homeless.

Sometimes I let my spirit get so down hearted; I forget to bring it weightless into the present moment and surround it in the kindness of quiet stillness.

But this year, now that dawn is upon me and so many people the black dogs hound, I shall hold my spirit resolutely; lift it up into the happiness found when breathing out all of life's confusion.

This is, my years, New Year's resolution.

Diana Rosser

Rock A Bye Train

Rock -a- bye train, rock-a-bye train rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye train all the way, from Paris to Spain
rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye train.

Over the mountains, push through the snow rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye slow Pressed to the window, moon riding high rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye, sleepy old eye.

Rock -a- bye train, rock-a-bye train
rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye train
all the way, from Paris to Spain
rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye, rock-a-bye train.

Diana Rosser

Ryokan

I have followed him to his hermitage.
Stalked by loneliness he has revealed a better way and shared with me Zazen through writings and the sound of the Hototogisu.

I have carried him on the tube and into my working week where he has shown me winter passing and the passage of spring

I have sat in the garden
In the quiet stillness and learnt the impermanence of all things.

Diana Rosser

Shelling Peas

Shelling peas in the sunshine, sitting with legs outstretched, feeling golden; rays of warmth spread across my cotton chest.

Shelling peas in the sunshine, pressing each pod down the line splitting each pea pod wide open shelling peas, one at a time.

Shelling peas in the sunshine, list'ning to birds in the trees, feeling golden; rays of warmth spread across my bowl of peas.

Diana Rosser

Show [tanka]

It is in the falling light that sweeps the purple skies that autumn glow that this seasons true beauty puts on its glorious show

Diana Rosser

So As Dreams

Bright new day, familiar in its dawning ripens as swelling fruit on the apple tree; full of song this maturing morning promising sweet for the autumn table.

So as dreams begin their road with dreaming and paths to walk with hopeful wishing thoughts, when inertia steps to first foot leaving and stifling negatives untie their knots;

When anticipation finds its action and the die cast is thrown into the wind, when inside flight turns to fight reaction the blood inside my veins begins to sing.

The new dawn rose on such a day as this It' s time to cast the past aside and live.

Diana Rosser

Soft Wind

A million golden suns on slender stems weave amongst wild grasses.
How lucky my eyes.

How lucky my limbs wandering amongst them, fingers trailing over their waxed perfect petals.

How lucky my cheek brushed by the soft wind.

Diana Rosser

Sorrowful - Tanka

she is sorrow-full her heart lies heavy as lead below her sad eyes tears pool in deep grey hollows their weight spills over silence

Diana Rosser

Still

Still silent fingers write volumes of absence.

The barren blank screen screams.
Turn the sound down, I can't think!

Diana Rosser

Such Wondrous Things Are These

A path lay beneath trees nestling soft bare foot wanderings and the to and fro shhhhh of the shore.

On the path lay the aftermath conceived by the cloud burst that serenaded the sweet night before

And there splashing in sunlight a Great Kiskadee bathing spot lit in that ring on the floor.

Diana Rosser

Sun Loaded Juices

Small sour waits for ripening sun, soaking up warm rays 'til plum coloured sweet upon the tongue.

Plum coloured sweet upon the tongue merry mixed with old and young naked feet, then danced upon.

Young naked feet then danced upon sweetness ripened by the sun.
Loaded juices run and run.

Sun loaded juices run and run, lazy sleeping until one day long mellow pouring done.

One day long mellow pouring done to gather all for that one first noble tasting on the tongue

Diana Rosser

Sunday

He reached out and took my hand, lingering warmth from the early morning flowed between us.

Bird song piped and twittered.

Gentle spring sunshine broke through the chill March wind.

By the edge of the canal

I placed one foot in front of the other and my heart smiled.

Diana Rosser

Sunset Sky

Gold ruptures shining pearl splitting ashen powdered nebula languidly changing form.
Infused fuchsia wisps unfold drowsily thread by thread trailing athwart the resplendent crimson orb seductively slipping into twilight.

Diana Rosser

The Day We Walked To Glastonbury

That day we followed the ancient byway that wound round the old farm house, past the new and on sun drenched towards the river Brue.

You and I wandered slow, whilst summer's promise swooped down low over green level pastures.

Passing incidental hedgerow trees full of bird song, growing free along the drove, we lingered at the grassy edge where orange tipped peacock eyed butterflies danced.
Occasionally we glanced towards the sacred tor to mark our way.

Meandering talk and country lanes led to Arthur's court yard, in the Vale of Avalon.
Where, to the sound of the Buddhist's Om I walked the healing pool, held by a gentle hand.

You waited beneath a budding tree opposite the lion's mouth kept company by a brambling.
I had one too in branches high above, whilst my bare feet were rubbed with love and unscented oil.

I returned to sit beside you and with easy talk you told me of your brambling.

That was the day of the apple blossom drop.

As we sat together side by side on that bench in the garden of the chalice well with warming eyes you turned to me as clouds of apple blossom fell smiled, and said 'I organised that just for you'

Diana Rosser

The Elephant In The Refrigerator

'There's a elephant in my refrigerator! ' I shouted through the door

'It's.. an.. elephant, darling, I thought I told you that before'

'Well does that really matter now; sometimes you're such a bore there's an elephant in my refrigerator, that I've never seen before'

'Are you positive my darling, the refrigerator's rather small you surely are mistaken, as you can hardly see at all peer a little closer, take a little care the refrigerator's too small to find a large beast there'

'Did I say it was a large one? I don't believe I did I don't want to be personal but I know when big is big and the elephant in the refrigerator certainly is not it the problem's not the size, but the fact that it is it'

'Darling if it isn't big can't you push it to the side I'm getting rather thirsty and you only went for ice'.

Diana Rosser

The Garden

Weary and downcast, carrying the many heavy cares of the day I enter the garden.

Picking up the patient rake, with steady rhythm I gather the last of withered autumn into damp brown pools.

Green grass glistens and parts.

There is life's new shoots poking through beneath the pear tree.

With easing breath and straightening limbs I bear the fallen leaves to the compost heap.

A gossamer spider's web stretches, perfect and taut against the wooden frame.

The resident robin contemplates my movement.

Sitting in the familiar chair in which I have spent many idle hours I look out over the garden.

Peace descends slowly like the gathering night.

Diana Rosser

The Khanjar

Deleterious dagger crafted in Qajar.

Medial ridge running through bevelled cutting edge down to honed thickened tip.

Etched into heavy steel the intricate design of birds, beasts and occasionally man.

Diana Rosser

The Morning Sky

The morning sky burns bright golden.
Such a sight to be beholden; soft white clouds that sail new blue are under laid with pinkish hue and the robins breast is swollen.

Beneath feet, red leaves have fallen onto the rustling gold of autumn; above, wing lit seagulls weave through the morning sky.

This feast does the heart embolden to find darkness has not stolen eyes that still can see it's true; a new dawn brings hope into view as the rising sun breaks open the morning sky.

Diana Rosser

The New Bedroom

The new bedroom,
which I built in my head for what seemed an endless time waits, with full boxes for her return.

There is no furniture yet, though ordered and on its way, the room expectant, vacant, pauses; until it will be pushed and pulled into welcoming display.

How long I have dreamt, since they were small that they would all, have their special space to come, when life rained or sunshine shone and they felt the need for home; for I never had that place to come.

Now, it is nearly done and through the window, beyond the weathered fence where the rambling rose and ivy grow; the high field waves with summer grass and buttercups.

Diana Rosser

The Old Tree Weeps

The old tree weeps, its branches low bend over a path, winding slow through tilting, toppling, broken stones fading remains of treasured bones hidden where moss and ivy grow.

Here lies John Peachey of Harrow On which Byron sought long ago phrases of love, amongst deaths thrones, the old tree weeps.

Where young Allegra's remains know that words are not enough to show the lives that die beneath headstones she was denied one of her own her father's sins repaid her, so the old tree weeps.

Diana Rosser

The Shady Path

If your reckless mind unobserved wanders into the deep dark sea, then swim towards the lapping shore and walk towards the tall oak tree at the start of the ancient wood.

It's there you will find the shady path you walked that English summer's day when the sun shone through high above and sprinkled stars along the way lighting the ground beneath your feet.

Remember, you were not alone, walking beside you was the one who showed that the shady path was an adventure that begun at the start of the ancient wood.

Diana Rosser

The Silent Wood

The nightingale does not sing in my wood, nor does the robin or the black bird sing.
On every branch on every tree, nothing; for there is nothing here of any good.
I will scream at you with my broken heart,
The nightingale does not sing in my wood, that lost of hope there is nothing of good, and in that nothing there is time to part.
Then you will yell that it was I who seized All the songs from out the bare leafed trees I'll turn to remonstrate, but this time cease Enough you've never heard a single plea Nightingales sing in the summer wood Not here in this winter of nothing good.

Diana Rosser

The Sky Was Blue

The sky was blue today.
Sun light glinted on my eye lids and bare stretching branches.
Along the railway embankment, though it is early spring, the spindly matted trees, silhouetted against the cloudless sky, glistened a golden russet red.
Melodious song rung out from the hedgerows and, as I walked,
the wind caressed my face.
Today the sky was blue and nature held my heavy heart in her tender warm embrace.

Diana Rosser

The Undying Light

He is happy, more than that, joyous light filled, buoyant, weightless, I feel it inside vast and sky blue

Life an unbounded clock Stretched either side Each way endless Tick tock, one chime at the striking hour

He will leave soon, now that he has left already.
I hope the spark remains that fills my chest, enables me to feel
the undying light
within his death.

Diana Rosser

The Vision Quest

Wandering pine, with rolled rug slung across her back walked bare foot to feel the rich earth beneath her feet.

The trees, high pines either side, shielded the low sun casting shadows bringing the ancestors.

Breaking through the pines into crystal blue she laid her rug.

Calling on the four winds North to prowling Bear West to snarling Panther East to breathing Moose South to follow the doe eyed fawn she began her vision quest seated in a circle on the ground.

Cross legged she waited stilled her mind drew her quiet breath and breathed the mountain air slowly for the longest time.

Then it came.....
The rising.....
The oneness.....
The wholeness..... and The knowing spreading through her like the four winds.

There she stayed.....

until the morning of the fourth day when she rose quietly, rolled her rug and descended through the pines; with the rich earth beneath her feet and the sound of running water at her side.

Diana Rosser

The Walkway

The walkway through the high pines wire meshed on either side damp with fine constant rain swings its way across a raging gorge below.

Will you follow me over sure footed in familiar walking boots and blue kagoule catching me when I stumble, slip or fall.

Or shall I walk behind you, as you step in steady time blind to anything but you; one hand clutching a close fold like a child.

Always afraid of heights but a lover of high places I have climbed many mountains with you my enduring scaffold uplifting the way.

Diana Rosser

The Waterfall

Carved between two forests scented with pine and peat, crystal cold water rushes across a mountain shelf over 200 ft deep.

Splashing,

tangling in tremendous motion roaring like the raging tide over flint grey rock it tumbles thundering downward running wild

spraying sparkling

silver

out into the air.
Filling it full of misty mornings smelling of pine damp grass.
Leaving a lingering taste of iced spring pearls served in rock crystal glass.

Diana Rosser

This Autumn Day

This autumn day, gossamer mist lies low across the field kiss'd by tiny glist'ning pearls cleaving to tawny buckled blades weaving amongst fawn thistles in their midst.

Beside this matted mound exists a swath of grass on which persists a green woodpecker hammering this autumn day.

The stoic far cornered oak resists the urge to shed into the mist its glorious copper crowning, shinning in the diffused rising of the sun that stubbornly persists this autumn day.

Diana Rosser

This Day

It is morning and the promise of day sweeps across the sky.
Meadow grasses oscillate gently in the dolce wind.
Wild vermilion poppies dance.
Amongst yellow buttercups lethargy submerges limbs beneath the undulating carpet.
Plucking one small cup I hold it beneath your chin.

Sunshine alights

Swallows skim the top of the old oak tree, swooping down low over our sea of Anemones.
Zeus himself would pay homage to this day.

Diana Rosser

Thoughts Of You

My words will carry swift upon the wind and speed across the stormy ocean waves.
No hurricane will stunt their flying wings or find them left outcast amongst the brave.
For though you think I am so faint of heart and prone to acts that lack a mindful way, In truth not one does play the smallest part of knowing what my head would wish to say.
But words alone cannot express the true profoundness, held within my thoughts of you.

Diana Rosser

Time

Your feathered tips stretch out my fingers the sway of your wings my arms.

With you above
I swerve like a child.

The light wind is beneath you and in my hair.
Bright sun glints in your eye.
On the water it dances over the snouts of hippos.

Diana Rosser

Today I'M Missing You

Blue morning, bare foot on the garden grass, wet dew between my toes as I make my way amid misty plays that softly pass through familiar words of days long gone by.

If I could save time goes through me rippling, a breaking wave on lost dreams broken shore dragging yesteryears sharp splinter, catching me missing you as countless times before.

If in your imperforate life I placed myself, would the mirrors sharp fractured shard that returns to haunt, melt and be erased and blessed sunshine's beam complete my heart.

Or has time distorted dreams old and new I know not, but today I'm missing you.

Diana Rosser

Unexpected

A gentle breeze ripples a smile across your face just for a moment I catch the warm caress of it then it is gone popping up later like the bobbing duck

unexpected
preening its feathers putting on a display

Diana Rosser

Utenzi Wa Kwanza

Siwezi kusema sauti ya nchi ya kuzaliwa yangu ingawa hapa wao ni kuponda katika kifua changu kumpiga kwa sauti

Diana Rosser

Varanasi

Amongst the filth
the sweet sound of the flute player carries through the heated air and everywhere, down the Ghats at sunrise, the pilgrims gather along the sacred river Ganges; devoted to life,
birth and death.
Here in ancient Varanasi against the backdropp of temples centuries old, the soul of man finds its own way home amongst the filth.

Diana Rosser

Visiting Mum And Dad

1.

They sleep, upright, head tilted

I watch my father's chest

Rise and fall

Try to ignore

His shrunken legs stretched out

Beneath his shorts

Behind him

They stride, firm, sun-kissed.

11.

She moans

The pain wakes him

He heaves himself up

Moves to her need

They talk, brown envelopes

Bank mandates

Power of attorney

I sit there in agony.

111.

"Less paper-work if I go first"

"You've a point there"

Dad smiles

Mum laughs

Rising for the old decanter

Catching the sunlight

"I've got a good Lindeman"

He says.

Diana Rosser

Waiting For A Response

Tell me how can I shake your eloquent branches?
Make your fruitful words fall to the ground where I wait, hungry for your sweet or sour.

Diana Rosser

Walk With Me

Put on your walking boots the ones with the old frayed laces,
So I can take my grief where harsh wind whines and rages, tearing across desolate hills.
I shall lean myself on your shoulder.
Say nothing, let me sob into the rain.

Diana Rosser

Wamblee

High up on a rocky crag, Wamblee, near to the cliff edge sat cross legged in a circle on the ground calling softly to the four winds.

His long plaits, threaded with silver lay beneath feathers running down his back.
Far below him the canyon stretched out dusty and red hot.

As the hypnotic chant of his words caught the warm air riding the canyon top his heart took flight soaring above the high dusty plain.

Born on the wind, his eagle wings outstretched he sailed aloft snow covered mountains glinting in the light of Grandfather Sun.

South through deep valleys, lush with green and wonder, feeling the rhythm of the world beneath his feathers.

Across the turbulent southern ocean full of the whale's song, eastward across the great African Plain, northward towards the Northern lights.

Onward and upward feeling the firmament and the dawn of stars he flew between darkness and light.

There, in that sacred space between the creator and the created Wamblee saw with clear vision the beauty of the Great Spirit laid out before him in the earth below and the heavens above.

Diana Rosser

Wandering

Without beginning or end the journey walks with familiar boots that smell of fields winter and summer skies the rustle of autumn leaves.

They turn up sitting beside me as the slipping sun dips into warm oceans.
The unfamiliar blowing across in the wind.

Riding through colour spices, saffron, cumin on windowless buses jostling over pot holes they rest.

Diana Rosser

Warmth

Yellow

mimosa grows

beneath the blue mountain, lit by the early morning sun.

Birds sing.

Diana Rosser

Wars Make History

Rounding the corner a desolate wind slices through clothing like a blade of steel wrapping the lost souls of the battlefield into a tight sorrow that drags the sting of salty tears from somewhere deep within.
Red and blue flags on high white poles reveal lines drawn across the tough gorse and thistle and it is here, I hear the skylark sing.
You are explaining that wars make hist'ry searching grassy mounds for the fallen foe wondering why there remains a myst'ry where the victors fell there's nothing to show but here are their legacy, you and me walking this battlefield from long ago.

Diana Rosser

Watching

I watched from off the sofa seat high backed beside the sliding doors, that window on the garden neat raked and pruned by winter chores, the white sky fall
upon the ground.
I watched all day the quiet sound.

I watched the swift white gulls soar high beneath and through the falling flakes, their black tipped wings against the sky a symphony with no harsh breaks.
I watched all day
the quiet sound fall soft upon the frozen ground.

I watched the red breast robin hop along the brown and slatted fence swoop down upon the seeds that dropped into the gathering white pretence that did transpose the frozen ground.
I watched all day the quiet sound.

I watched the blackbird chase away a rival for his garden throne return and watch his lady play where his orange break had shown the bounty in the fallen snow
I watched his rival come and go.

I saw the blue tits dart and dash in and out the ivy cover and great tits, shinning sleek and flash larger than their little brother gather seeds from mesh hung snow
I saw their colours come and go.

I watched the stripped brown sparrows' line that drew itself along the fence sparser now than previous time but still full in its homeliness share together in harmony the food upon the feeder tree

I saw parakeets shrunken cold, immobile in the floating white the newest to the garden fold, watch too the changing winter sight their glist'ning hue like fresh green paint brushed silent by the snows restraint.

I watched the red face goldfinch hang orgasmic on the Niger seeds the raiding speckled starling gang fight and squabble on iron trees I sat and watched the snowflakes thin did nothing else, not a thing.

I saw the dappled finches' wing fall Chaffinches down from the trees then flap across the white rising that swirled in gusts upon the breeze I watched all day
the white sky fall
did nothing else, nothing at all.

Diana Rosser

Welcoming Spring

On lucent gossamer wings fulgent in my precious garden nymphs spin golden trumpets welcoming spring. Gentian bells sway blithely beneath jubilant incantations arousing cupids ardent desire blossoming cherry pink.

Diana Rosser

What Do You Want?

Why should I cough myself up?
Spew myself out.
Spatter myself.

I cannot step inside you I can hardly find my way around you.

So many words and wants rattling, chattering, clambering to be heard.

It is exhausting listening to the sound.

but when I look at wisps of white in a high cornflower blue sky my heart stills and my breath comes easy.

Diana Rosser

Who Knows Where The Time Goes time wraps itself warm as the Christmas coat chosen for me the wild weather sings in my heart and the gulls cry the perfect hat the perfect day

not just that day but the next and the one that followed after.

time strung across red bracken grey winter light and starlings in the heavens

Diana Rosser

Winter Malaise

Festering leaves hem colourless trees; lifeless silhouettes in somber air.
Silence, sulky, wet, hangs everywhere.
The clogging path upward guarantees a digging deep for both thighs and knees.
Freezing shards slicing grey gloom declare a demand to prospect and prepare a way winter malaise to appease.
Yet underneath the washed brown branches clear, shimmering, shinning, small pearls cling.
The orbs high up slide free in flashes greeting the fall with tiny splashes.
Afar a church bell is heard to ring.
Here, the hidden red-breast starts to sing.

Diana Rosser

Winter Tanka

wind blows relentless winter howls its discontent upon sodden land through the storm a tiny blue tit gathers sunflower seeds

Diana Rosser

Working Cats

Working cats slink silently over cool shadows pressed into Medina walls; round contours of emporia spice keeping low, skirting colourful displays in and out of long languid days, down narrow street leading to bright sunlight glinting off cobbles and stone.

Casting form on to ancient grounds arching their back away from fevered crowds turning a lazy eye into the heat of day stretched out, waiting for the cover of night.

Diana Rosser

Your Beating Heart

I love to lie upon your beating heart hear it pound the sound of African drums see shields glinting in the sun

I love to lie upon your beating heart feel its steady rhythm beneath my ear close my eyes and disappear listening to its primal thud I know why African drums beat so

I love to lie upon your beating heart
hear it pound the sound of African drums.

Diana Rosser