Sayed Abubakar (21 September 1972)

Sayed Abubakar is a contemporary poet of Bangladesh. He is regarded as the major poet of the 90th decade. He was born on September 21, 1972 at Rambhodrapur, Panjia under Keshabpur upazilla of Jessore district, Bangladesh. His father was Nur Mohammad Biswas, a renowned social worker and mother was Amena Khatun.

Literary Life

Sayed Abubakar started writing poems at a very early age. Then he was only 11. Many of those poems were published in local newspapers namely The Daily Sphulingo and The Daily Ranar. In those days he used to compose 60-70 poems per day because he was determined to defeat Rabindranath Tagore by the number of poems. Really it was a peculiar silly attempt of a young poet. Later he realized his mistake. But it helped him to be skilled both in rhymes and rhythm at the early stage of his life.

He never stopped running after poems. Actually poetry got mixed with his blood and soul. He was a brilliant student. He passed his SSC and HSC examinations in First Division in 1987 and 1989 respectively. Then he obtained his BA (Honours) in English Literature in 1992 and Masters Degree in English Literature in 1993 from Rajshahi University successfully. Then he joined the popular national fortnightly Palabadal as a sub-editor. He edited this literary magazine from 1998 to 1999. Then he left Dhaka city for Chittagong. He joined Faujdarhat Cadet College as a lecturer of English. The hills and the Bay of Bengal attracted the poet very much but the strict routine-bound life of cadet college did not suit him. He left Faujdarhat Cadet College in 2003 and joined Govt. Lalon Shah College passing the prestigious BCS examination. He is now assistant professor of English working at Sirajganj Govt. College. But not a single day he forgot his mission of writing poetry.

In national daily his poem was first published in 1988. Then he was the student of class XI at BL Govt. College in Khulna. While in Rajshahi University, he completed writing some of his best lyrics. All those were published then in all the most popular national newspapers and national magazines like the Ittefaq, the Sangbad, the Dainik Bangla, the Inqilab, the pakkhik Shoily, the Sachitra Bangladesh etc. His first book of poetry named Pranoyer Prathom Pap (The first sin of love) was published in 1996. It attracted the attention of the living famous poets. This very book made him famous as a poet in Bangladesh. The second edition of Pranoyer Prathom Pap was published in 2008. Now he has seven books of poetry in the market. Many of his poems have been translated in English language and Spanish language.

The famous publishing Company of USA, I-Proclaim Press, published his two books named 'Anthology of the World Poetry' and 'The Golden Kabin' (Translation of Al Mahmud's 'Sonali Kabin') in 2010. The famous publication of UK, Bubok, has published his 'Selected Poems: 2010-2012'in 2013.

He is the editor of an English little magazine named 'Bangla Literature'. Modern Bengali literature is presented here in English for the world readers.

Poet Syed Ali Ahsan, Syed Ali Ashraf, Al Mahmud, Abdul Mannan Syed, Nazib Wadud, Hasan Alim, Khurshid Alam Babu, Mokbul Mahfuz, Taufik Zahur, Dr Fazlul Haq Tuhin, Ahmad Basir, Hosne Ara Beauty, Shahin Saikat and others have written articles on this great poet. Al Mahmud has written essays two times on this poet, which is a rare incident in modern Bangla poetry. Al Mahmud in one of his essays on Sayeed Abubakar says: 'I got surprised while reading his poems published in newspapers.' Abdul Mannan Syed says, ' Sayeed Abubakar is a real poet from top to toe.' Once Khurshid Alam Babu says: ' It is high time we declared that Sayeed Abubakar is the greatest young poet of Bangladesh.'

After one hundred years
who will read this poem composed in tears,
remember, friends, on this day of three twelves
we swore by God dedicating us to ourselves
we will love like no others loved before;
and touching us we swore
we will die loving each other this way.
12.12.2012 on this very day we have loved as though we were flower and bee; and on your 12.12.2112 you all will love too sure.
On that day, o friends, remember for one moment our love;
like you, we had sung a love-song here on earth me and my dove.

4th March

4th March looks gay,
for it's my Lorena's birthday.

4th March feels proud, for on this day a golden time
Lorena was born, my poem, my love-rhyme.

Now 4th March means love, beauty, peace and joy;
4th March means Lorena, the most beautiful and most coy.

I love 4th March, for it's presented me
my Lorena, my life, my sky, my sea.

A Caged Bird

I am like a caged bird that doesn't ever get tired to find the way to fly
in the lovely blue sky.

I will fly, float and run
in the deep blue ocean.
I will sing when I roam;
Then I will come back home.

A Fairy Tale

Once these paths were rivers,
these fields the processions of water.

One day on the paths used to go a princess in pea-cock shed.
On these paths with huge goods the merchants used to move.

These paths were rivers,
these fields the processions of water.

In these fields the silvery fishes, touching the uprising waves, how nicely rolled up and down in the dark water!

Pedestrian,
Have I told you a fairy tale?

Sayeed Abubakar

A Guitar of Light

As though someone has thrown away a dark net
and the town has become a trout in the net;
as though no morning has ever approached here,
the town has submerged in overflowing darkness.

The town is, as it were, the island of a fairy tale.
I wonder who are, like the giants, snatching away
the tip on the forehead of a teen girl,
then devour the bone-marrow in rapture.

I wonder who finally by tearing up the civilization are eating up its bones and flesh.
Didn't ever a single pir* or saint come in this darkness here?

If so, you, the poet, take up the charge and play the guitar of light in the darkness.

A Poet's Beloved

If you surrender to a rich man, he may give you a house, delicious foods three times, nice clothes and physical pleasures.
He may give you a heart which is as dead as a withered river.
He may love you too and make you the owner of a vast land.

Tell me, can a vast land be the price of your body?
Those who are the slaves of body are not able to recognize the secret mine of mystery lying into the folds of your body.
Only the goldsmiths know the value of gold.

Save a poet, who knows what a jewel your beauty is?
Be my beloved, o girl, you will gain the life of a nymph.
For your one wink I will give you snatching the heart of all flowers and compose the new verses of kiss on your lips.

If you give me your heart, o sweetie, don't get afraid,
all on a sudden an immortal epic of love will be created for you.

A Rose

A rose has bloomed so far,
I get smell,
 can't see her.

A rose has bloomed so high, Nose gets smell,
 can't see Eye.

Daylight comes,
 daylight goes;
Sleepless I love the rose.

A Song of Faith

Blow the sail, boatman, in this unruly wind. Removing the sweat of destiny, grip the oar in the blister-stricken hand.
With successive strokes of faith, go forward cutting the angry waves and keep muttering the name of the kinsman of your existence.

Boatman, keep singing your soul-crushing song in his name.
In his name, raise an uncontrollable uproar of wailing. Watch the river resonate under the green wind, resonate the banks and waves.
In this wind, boatman, blow your sail of faith.

In his name, the night blooms into dawn shedding down all darkness.
In his name, the moon splits into two pieces of watermelon.
In his name, the river turns into the desired spring of honey.
Keep singing in his name, boatman, the song of faith.

If you cherish the coast of fortune having cut the angry waves, with the oar in hand, o boatman, start singing 'Rasul! Rasul*!'

A Stony Hero

Here death, killing, violence, hunger round the clock play the doom's game;
Snatching, hijacking, injustice, inconvenience grow the grass of sorrow in the field of life.

Here life is like the Padma@ on whose banks stands the sandy sad shoal vast, stretched and lonely; Still life does not bow down to sorrow
but stands erect like the rocks.

Here drought, flood, tidal surge come like giants in greed of life and then inflicts raids and riots on life like Azrael*.

Yet what a stony hero this country is- that does not get cracked into parts in drought of sorrow!

@the biggest river of Bangladesh, now dead
* the angel of death

A Strange Boy

An innocent boy leaving the lap of mom opened his fearful eyes in the war-trodden world, and asked in a depressed voice, 'Where have I come? '
I told him the name of the earth.

The boy looked at the corners of the earth and with wonder and pain, seeing the towns and paths full of corpses and heart-rending bloods
he further said,
'Tell me how man lives in this hell.'

I said to him, 'Oh, it's a shame!
Where is man in this hell? '

Un niño extraño

Un niño inocente saliendo del regazo de mama
Abrió sus temeroso ojos en el mundo pisoteado por la guerra,
Y dijo con voz deprimente, '¿De dónde vengo? '
Le dije el nombre de la tierra.

El niño miró en los rincones de la tierra
Y con asombro y dolor, viendo las ciudades y caminos
Llenos de cadáveres y sangrientos corazones desgarrados Ademas dijo,
'Dime cómo el hombre vive en este infierno.

Yo le dije, 'Oh, es una pena!
¿Dónde estás viendo hombre en este infierno? '

A Tragedy

I have forgotten her face once I loved.
I have forgotten her name once I recited in dream.
I have forgotten her love once I got mad for,
forgotten all meat, all fish, all sweets and all cream.

What is love then when it's lost forever?
What is life then when it's frost forever?

Sayeed Abubakar

An Isolated Tree

Do you tell me to set my roots into air?
Say, when and where did the procession of trees raise the slogan of storm and seize the blue of the sky
by its palms, being isolated from soil?

Do you say it living? Say, this continual isolation of a tree and soil-is it the name of living?

Think of that soil, o Love, on whose breast
there exist no trees, no carpet of herbs, leaves and grass, where no farmer comes ever taking his plow to sing the song of crops and no bird comes to fill the arteries of wind with the song of blood, where only dust and sand round the year
mourn and scream soundless like a grave-do you want to be such a soil, such a waste land?

O my Soil,
I will give you forests, a vast world of eternal green
where animals roam, birds crowd and chirp;
I will give you clouds, rains and storms of peace
if you, loving me, devour all my roots.

Sayeed Abubakar

Appetite

There's no appetite in heart,
appetite rises only in body-remains infinite desolate appetite into my two eyes.

There's no appetite in heart
for, o darling,
my heart is over-loaded with your love.

Sayeed Abubakar

At Last

At last I've understood
this life isolated from you isn't good.

The foolish bird
only gets tired
trying to go out of the sky;
it may go and go and will die before finding its end. O Love, I sing your song because I've understood this life without your song isn't good.

Sayeed Abubakar

At Midnight

At midnight I go to bed but cannot sleep.
In the air I hear the cry of the suppressed and the oppressed.

Some cry under bombing, some for hunger.
I ask myself, 'What can I do for them? '

The pen replies, 'Take me and compose such a poem
by which the oppressors may be taught a lesson.'

The sword says, 'Seize me. May the war start. For survival there's no substitute for dying and killing some culprits.'

I take the pen in one hand, the sword in another.
My blood starts dancing. By that dance eating and sleeping of mine have been forbidden for ever.

Bangabandhu

How many poems you have written, o Tagore!
How many poems, o Jibananando Das!
How many immortal pictures you have drawn, o Joinul!
How many songs you have composed, o Nazrul!

Bangabandhu throughout his whole life has written only one poem -'Bangladesh'.
Only one song he has sung with the tune of heart and only one picture he has drawn-'Bangladesh'.

Sayeed Abubakar

Bangladesh

Sitting on the peak of mountain, whose face frequently I see; walking with my beloved on the streets of Rome, whose words I remember;
like a pet pigeon, to whom my heart and body
come back when the sun sets; setting whose eyes into my eyes, I see the beauty of a yellow bird and seeing the prosaic fly of crow and shalik
I get every day speechless both in joy and wonder-

she is my Bangladesh, as dearest to me as water for thirst at a noon of Chaitra; in a winter-morning she is my shawl of Kashmir, my safe home during a storm and rain, and the sail of my good luck upstream swelling like a tander-bread.
Writing my name on that sail, I, the last boatman of century,
have started rowing my boat laying stake to life.

*shalik- a kind of bird * tander- a kind of big bread

Best

Birth of Love

love born.
When sin gets uprooted,
love born.

When hatred leaves our mind,
love born.
When you say 'I love you',
love born.

Birthday of Love

Bees, birds, winds and all trees say you were born on 8th May in a joyous morning while all nightingales were singing to celebrate your birth on earth.

O my Love, my red Princess Rose,
since then, my day comes and day goes,
night comes and passes night,
I, in darkness or light,
adore you and take your sweet smell
and to the world your sovereignty I tell.

Sayeed Abubakar

Borderless

Break down all walls.
Break down all boundaries.
The whole world is a country where we live.

We are the citizens of one country named Earth.
All are equal here- men and women,
the haves and the have-nots.
Our king is our God, only who knows how to judge equally.

Break down all walls.
Let us live in a border-less human country.

Sayeed Abubakar

Country

Birds have no country,
Fishes no country.
Rivers count no Army, no Border.

Showing thumbs to all raising guns and mighty kings,
the rivers move running, tearing all barbed wires
of the Border.

O Man, where have you got the Border and the border-guards?

Sayeed Abubakar

Desire

If I were a river, I would go to see the sea.
If the moon, I would float smiling on the sky.

If I were a cloud, I would pour water over the paddy and jute-fields.
If a lamp, I would spread light in the corner of each dark house.

If I were crops, I would grow like gold.
If fire, I would burn on the body of an oppressor.

But if a missile, I would kill those who bring only war on this beautiful earth.

Earth

From night to day,
sorrow to peace,
pride to courtesy,
hatred to love
is our journey.

We can't turn back.
We can't stop here.
Man is crying,
crying children,
flowers and birds;

Friends, we are the last hope of Earth.

Easier and Difficult

Death is easier.
Difficult is birth.

Destruction is easier.
Difficult is construction.

Thorn is easier.
Difficult is flower.

Hatred is easier.
Difficult is love.

War is easier.
Difficult is civilization.

False

Once her false speeches
tasted very sweet;
all the chamchams* of Porabari^ became tasteless in shame.

Once her false promises seemed to be the inevitable laws of Constitution which must be implemented by the government.

Once her false smiles faded the smiling face of Mona Lisa,
and considering her love-letters valuable assets,
I preserved them all into an iron-box.

Now when I go passing her,
it seems that she never knew me.

Now when I see her,
life seems to be very false.
How meaningless the promises of a girl may be!

First Sin of Love

Let others say whatever they like, why didn't you say: 'Love is never a sin'?
Why haven't you once said, standing for a while in the court of love:
'The person engaged in love-making becomes the killer, becomes the fire, becomes the storm, becomes the tidal surge
if you afford the power, either kill him or exile
but never call him a sinner'?

Did Abel command more capability to love thee, Aklima?
Was Abel more manly, more war-loving, more love-mongering than I?
Was Abel more destitute to the world of love than I?

It is I- who only for you- stroke the brother's brain
into pieces like a glass broken at a single blow.
With the ceaseless rain of blood I made the cornfield stained and damp.
And only for your sake, Aklima, I invited the cruel Death in the eternal din of life.

Disclose what's the fault I bear- why did you get so lucrative like the alluring grapes?
Why did you get so irresistibly delicious
like the colourful mangoes ripe to the core?
Why did you start- by smearing the fire of beauty on lips and cheeks- heating, as the oven, the fry-pan of youth and baking the bread of heart so severely?

For only your sake, I ventured to disobey the Lord of darkness and light;
yet how strangely you rejected me by calling me heartless!
For only your sake, I rudely invented the festival of killing on earth;
still how surprisingly you flung me into the dustbin of despair.

Aklima, is love a sin? Is love a fruit of the forbidden tree?

SPANISH VERSION

Primer Pecado de Amor

Que otros digan lo que quieran, ¿por qué no dices: El amor nunca es un pecado?
Porque nunca se ha dicho, mientras se esta de pie en la corte del amor:
La persona comprometida con el amor se convierte en asesino, se convierte en fuego.
se convierte en tormenta, se convierte en marejada si le otorgas el poder, para matarlo o para exiliarlo sin que le llamen pecador?

¿Abel comando con mas habilidad para el amor que tu, Aklima?
¿Es Abel más varonil, mas amante de la Guerra, mas amante que yo?
¿Está Abel más desprovisto en el mundo del amor que yo?

Soy yo -quien sólo por ti- rompí el cerebro de tu hermano en pedazos como un cristal que se rompe con un simple golpe.
Con la incesante lluvia de sangre hice humedecer y manche las milpas
Y solo por tu bien, Aklima, invite a la muerte cruel
En el eterno fragor de la vida

Revelar cual es la culpa que cargo - ¿Por qué sacaste tanto provecho mi como de las cautivadoras uvas?
¿Porque eres tan deliciosamente irresistible
como los mangos maduros hasta su Corazón?
¿Porque comenzaste- por calumniar el fuego de la belleza en los labios y en las ardientes mejillas, como el horno, el sartén de la juventud y horneas el pan del corazón tan severamente?

Solo por tu bien, me atrevi a desobedecer al Señor de las tinieblas y la luz;
Además me rechazad de una manera muy extraña llamándome cruel!
Solo por tu bien, invente con rudeza el festival de la muerte en la tierra;
y todavía sorpresivamente me arrojaste dentro del basurero de la desesperacion

Aklima, ¿es el amor es un pecado? ¿Es el amor un fruto del árbol prohibido?

Florist

I went to a flower-shop of my town.
I asked the florist, 'Why have you chosen this profession? Is it the cause that you love flowers most? ' He said, 'No, sir, I have chosen it because it's profitable and people now spend money in buying flowers.' I asked, 'Why do people buy it?
Is it the cause that they love flowers most? '
He said, 'No. They buy it because it helps them get cheap inconstant love of others.'

For Ever

When dusk appears here,
day starts at your place.
Night marches with snake's hood;
my heart and eyebrow tremble in fear.

When night approaches at your place,
our magpies whistle here;
your whole body sweats in fright
as if there were venom in the air.

Lorena, o my sweet bride,
we won't live more on two distant shores;
we will taste honey of same flowers,
we will cultivate love-crops in same fields.

We will see the same dawn with our four eyes
touching the same night by our two hearts;
If we become two graves for our love, we will be but we will stay side by side in the same soil for ever.

Sayed Abubakar

For Your One Kiss

I can sacrifice all,
both big and small;

my sky and my country
I can give free;

I can jump into fire
(I am no liar)

my peace, o Love.

Forget Me Not

Forget me not,
Forget not me.
Forget day hot,
Keep night with thee.

I will touch you

I won't too you.
You my sweet thought green, calm, soft, new.

Grace of Perfume

Let us move to a land where only flowers are cultivated and gardens throughout the year remain full of flowers;
there men satisfy their hunger only on perfume
and satisfy their thirst of desert-souls in beauty.

Sayeed Abubakar

Greed

I dream a scene of a baby falling asleep having sucked a pair of breasts resembling two pomegranates weighing ten kgs;
I desire a blue sky unadulterated
by vulture-like coquettishly killing planes;
and, o my Love, I bear the inborn greed to stare at you in the open corridor of life by sitting thousand years together.

Only her two eyes yet float into my eyes.
Still those two eyes make me mad
and make me love her blindly.

let's move in forests;

Sayeed Abubakar

Hero

The play has reached its climax.
The spectators are getting frightened.
O hero, it's high time you came to kill the villains;
it's high time you rescued your motherland;
it's high time you declared loudly:
'O mother, my soil, don't cry more because I've returned.'

How far is Mexico?
An expert of Geography says, 'Thousand miles.'

How long does one need to reach Mexico?

A pilot says, 'At least half a day.'

When I say to them,
'I reach there within few seconds every day',
they all get astonished,
'How is it possible? '

I say, 'There are many things strange which happen in case of love.

My Eurydice Lorena lives in Mexico.
Every moment I visit her, she visits me.

How Many Lives I Live

How many lives I live!
To son-daughters I give Love, affection, kindness,
Teaching, shelter, fine dress.

To my bad harmful foes
Only my hatred goes,
Nothing good I give them;
Isn't a matter of shame?

To my friends I am kind,
My cruelty others find.
In the mosque I like loss,
In office a cruel boss.

For which life that I live
Dear God will Heaven give?

How Shall I Prove My Love

My heart cries for you;
You can't hear that cry.
My eyes wet with dew;
Before you see, it gets dry.

Tell me, o Dove,
How shall I prove my love?

Sayeed Abubakar

Hypocrisy of Love

You say, 'I love the rain'.
But when it starts raining,
you raise your umbrella over your head.

You say, 'I love the Sun.'
But when it spreads its rays,
you start looking for shade.

You say, 'I love the storm.'
But when it starts blowing, closing doors and windows you get seated.

You say, 'I do love man.'
But when man comes at your door in danger,
in anger and in scorn your face turns red.

You say, 'I love revolution.'
But when revolution knocks at your door,
you fall asleep fast on your bed.

O my Love, do you say each day
to me 'I love you' in that way?

I Can't Realize

I realize buds, flowers and their blooming in the gardens of earth;
Only I can't realize their falling down from trees.

I realize clouds, rain and the sweet soft sound of its fall;
Only I can't realize the thunder.

Rivers, fields, oceans, forests, hills, mountains—
I realize them all;
Only I can't realize the deserts.

I realize fish, shark, deer and bright striped tiger;
Only I can't realize a shark beside a fish and a tiger beside a deer.

I realize life,
many turns of life I realize very clearly;
Only the ice-cold death I can't realize any way.

Sayeed Abubakar

I Do Not Know

I do not know
what will happen tomorrow

Even I cannot say
After one hour what will happen today.

Sayeed Abubakar

I Dream a World

I dream a world where there is no war,
no suffering, no cry and sorrow.
I dream a world where all are rich,
a man needs nothing to borrow.

I dream a world where there is no hatred;
only Love reigns her rule.
I dream a world filled with pleasure, smile and smell-extremely beautiful.

I dream a world where there is no USA,
no snake, no shirk.
I dream a world full of flowers and men,
no hyena and mad dogs bark.

Sayed Abubakar

I Fear to Show

I have a heart broken and destitute;
I fear to show her that.
If she sees once, she may turn her face back and forget me for good.

Sayeed Abubakar

I Live with Your Heart Now

I live with your heart now
and you with mine.
So my life's desert now beautiful, fine.

Though we stay so far now,
we live so near.
We roam everywhere now
as if two deer.

Sayeed Abubakar

I Look for Her

Losing her again and again,
I look for her here and there.
Getting her again and again,
I lose her now and then.

Sayeed Abubakar

I Love You Means

I love you means I love all.
I love you means I love both great and small.

Love begins at home and home means you.
You are ever old, you are ever new.

Sayeed Abubakar

I Play the Flute of War

How will I write a poem on Moon tonight when fight
is going on against those beasts who are doing feast
with the meat of my brothers and sisters?
How will I write a poem tonight on stars
when the soil of Earth is soaked with the blood of my people? When flood of death and suffering
has submerged my home, then how can I sing
the songs of Spring? That's why, I play the flute of war day and night, night and day forgetting the moonlight, beloved's kiss and all false peace.

Sayeed Abubakar

I Sigh for You

I sigh for you, Lorena, day and night-
as a blind man sighs every day for light,
as a mother sighs for lost son-daughter and falling on soil a fish for water.

I sigh in waking and in sleep I sigh;
I die and get alive, again I die.

Sayeed Abubakar

I Will Love You

I will love you, my bird,
Until you become tired,
Until you say in grief,
'Let me love you and sleep.'

You will fall asleep then
On my heart half-broken.
In your dream you will find
My love before, behind.

When you open your eye,
You will see earth and sky
Full of my love, pure, fine,
Soft as dew and divine.

I will love you, my bird
Until you say, 'Tired! Tired! '

Sayeed Abubakar

If

If it becomes the last day,
Before I say Goodbye
I die,
Forgive me then,
My children.

Forgive, o Sun
Forgive, o Moon
I couldn't understand
I have to go so soon
Leaving all Great and small.

Sayeed Abubakar

If I Forget You

If I forget you, Love,
no dove
will sing songs more in the forests;
all the sparrows leaving their nests will fly in sky
and die crying;
no spring
will come more on this earth;
all cows will stop giving new birth
to calves; civilization will come to an end;
and God will send all happiness to hell for good;
it should be so because, o Love, if I forget you, every thing will be meaningless, wrong and lie.

Sayeed Abubakar

If I See

I recognize her if I see but have forgotten her home.

Her face, her eyes-I can remember all;
only I have forgotten her mind
which was like a rose.

Sayeed Abubakar

Into a Rose Garden

You were with me into a rose garden among the roses.
I was once looking at roses and then at you.
I said to God with relief, 'Thanks God,
you have created my Lorena more beautiful.'

Sayeed Abubakar

Into Your Heart

I live so far (in sorrow my heart dies!) ,
so far from you;
For this separation, from your two eyes
fall down sad dew.

But don't worry, to you all my loves bend;
Into your heart
always I stay. With you all my nights end and all my days start.

Sayed Abubakar

Islam

Islam is in books now,
Islam in sermon.
Once the world could see Islam -
That memory smiles now in lecture.

Like flowers, Islam bloomed once;
People tell that tale now, o Lord.
We have read Islam, we have heard Islam -
We have never seen it, o Lord.

Sayeed Abubakar

It's Such A Night

It's such a night that never wants to be dawn..
It's such a flame that never gets extinguished.
It's such a pain that has no remedy,
only turns the body and the soul into ashes burning them cruelly.

Translated from Bengali by the poet

Sayeed Abubakar

Kapatakkha River by Michael Modhusudan Dutt

Always, o river, you peep in my mind.
Always I think you in this loneliness.
Always I soothe my ears with the murmur
Of your waters in illusion, the way
Men hear songs of illusion in a dream.
Many a river I have seen on earth;
But which can quench my thirst the way you do?
You're the flow of milk in my homeland's breasts.

Will I meet you ever? As long as you Go to kinglike ocean to pay the tax
Of water, I beg to you, sing my name
Into the ears of people of Bengal,
Sing his name, o dear, who in this far land
Sings your name in all his songs for Bengal.

Sayeed Abubakar

Leaves of a Tree

We have no control over us. We have no power.
Like the leaves of a tree in a storm, our lives are here run
in darkness of the night and in the sun.

Only the fools among the crowd boast of their strength and they feel proud as if they were Pharaohs. When they get drowned into the deep failure of life, their crowns seem to be dust
so fast
and then they cry
before dying but their eyes remain stone-like dry.

We are the leaves of a tree in a storm.
We look for only His mercy who forms and who destroys like toys.

Sayeed Abubakar

Life of a Song-Bird

When a song-bird gets tired of singing love-songs, then the bird does not remain
a song-bird more.
Therefore
twenty four hours I sing,
I am singing,
I will sing for you, o my rose.
This way my life will go and goes.

Sayeed Abubakar

Lorena

My heart has fallen down under your feet;
Listening to your love-song
coming from the distant shore of the Atlantic ocean,
my heart has utterly been destroyed like the land fallen prey to an earthquake,
and I, taking the flute of Orpheus at my hand,
have been obsessed in singing you day and night.

Lorena, my Eurydice, will you then come back on this earth?
I shall see your flower-bloomed face
in the sunrise of morning again.
In the moonlight of night, I shall see again
your sweet smile flowing like a spring among the hills.

Sayed Abubakar

Love

Love, an atom, destroys our life.

Love, a poison,
carries our death.

Love, a storm,
uproots our peace.

Yet I am ready to die for love.
What a tragedy,
I die for love!

Spanish Version

Amor

Amor, un atomo,
Destruye nuestra vida.

Amor, un veneno,
nos conduce a la muerte.

Amor, una tormenta,
Desarraiga nuestra paz.

Sin embargo estoy listo para morir por amor.
Que tragedia,
Morir por amor

Love Is Something Secret

Love is something secret-
you know I know.
It does not let me go
one inch far from you.
It is beautiful but it has no hue.

Sayeed Abubakar

Lovenama

Every day I swear,
every day I determine:
I will never let her enter my heart.
But my foolish phone breaking down my determination reaches her number every day.

Lover is he who laments every moment
laying down his heart under the feet of his beloved.
Truly love makes a man a perfect coward and a supreme slave.

Sayeed Abubakar

Mad: 1

He was angling fish sitting on the high way, frequently making the hook dance and all on a sudden, pulling the fishing rod so forcefully that it seemed a big catfish had certainly swallowed the hook.
He was then repenting loudly showing others really a big fish had been successful to flee making him a fool.

Pedestrians were watching him shaking their necks
and bursting into laughter.
An unhappy man stopped his purple colored car beside the road and opening the window asked him aloud, 'Brother, have you got any fish? '

He raised his eyes at forehead with surprise and said, 'Alas!
Who has ever got any fish on a dry street? '

Sayeed Abubakar

Mad: 2

He walks on the water of an ocean;
his legs don't get wet.
He walks through the incessant rain;
his body doesn't get wet.

One day someone invited him at his home
and offered a room to sleep.
At midnight he started shouting-'Help! Help! ' because he was floating like water-hyacinth
on the water of the house.

Sayed Abubakar

Mad: 3

He was getting flushed with shame.
He was scolding all the animals
calling them uncivil and uncultured.
Then he was forcefully dressing all those who were unknowingly going near him.

The dogs were sweating in heat wearing the civil attire.
The cocks and hens were running to and fro with discomfort.
Wearing the ultramodern tight British dress,
the helpless cats were mewing in the streets.

The towns-folk burst into laughter
seeing his acts.
Seeing that, he suddenly cried out in anger,
'Brethren or gentlemen, now you, yes you,
kindly start putting off all your cloths.
You have no right to be covered with this civil dress
because you have already lost that right.'

Sayeed Abubakar

Mad: 4

Sometimes he cannot recognize himself.
He cannot recognize his own hands, own legs, own shape, even his own voice. It seems to him that he is an alien,
a man of different language who has been haunting him
for twenty four hours like a shadow.

Sometimes he calls himself by his own name.
It seems to him that thousand years have already passed.
Has his corpse been rotten then, or has he himself been a mummy? Is he in a dwelling house or in a museum?

All on a sudden, he shouted loudly saying 'Thief! Thief! ' Saying 'Police! Police! ', he caught red-handed his one hand by the other and said to himself, 'Who are you at this inopportune moment here? ' And instantly he releases that hand, nobody knows why, getting afraid very much.

Sayed Abubakar

Mexico

I love Mexico; it's a land of love.
On its green trees nightingale, myna, dove sing songs all months. Its wind is wet always with fragrance of roses. Its Sun gives rays, its Moon the shadow of the Paradise.
Its cities are full of blue nymphs. Here lies the peace of all heroes. In this dreamland lives Lorena without whom this life's sand, this life's hell, this life's a complete lie. So I love Lorena and her Mexico.

Mind has been burnt in love,
the branches of shimul* tree covered with flowers;
I sense the advent of spring that had appeared in the age of ice.

My Blue-Eyed Dove

Night is growing dark and deep.
I see you go to sleep
leaving me alone awake.
I will pass the night this way for your sake
for your love,
my blue-eyed dove.

Sayeed Abubakar

My Daughter

A red rose everyday goes to school people see.
She is only Nine.
Blooming a rose is fine
but going far away leaving me alone is like keeping on my heart a heavy stone.

Sayeed Abubakar

My Heart

My heart doesn't let me sleep for a single moment,
the whole night he shouts loudly like an ass.
When I close my eyes, he hurts me throwing his legs.
If I forbid to stop, he runs after me like a leopard.
I ask, 'What's happened to you? '
He says, 'I won't tell you.'
'Let me sleep then', I say.
He replies, 'I won't let you.'

Translated from Bengali by the poet

Sayeed Abubakar

My Heart Aches

My heart aches
for her who bakes
my heart putting on an oven.

My heart cries
for her who fries
my heart putting on an oven.

My heart worships her because she is my killer.

Sayed Abubakar

My Life

I was a babe
who always feared darkness and grave;

then started growing throwing
all fear aside;

now hide
myself seeing snakelike men who deny love and truth
though I am in full youth.

Sayeed Abubakar

My Mind Has Gone Insane

My mind has gone insane
as if it were a mad-river flowing desperately breaking the civilization of its two banks.
Come and prevent my mind, o friend,
from destroying the civilization of all my fruits and flowers.

Sayeed Abubakar

My Moon

Never love came to me so deep,
Never love came to me so high;
Now without you I cannot sleep,
Without your love now I do die
As a fish dies without water,
As a tree can't live without soil.
O my Love, Nature's cute daughter,
Without you now all my dreams spoil.

The Moon now looks ugly and fake
As I have got you, o my Moon;
There is now no beautiful lake,
Beautiful sea and fair monsoon,
All the beauties of Nature break
Seeing your face, o Love, o my Moon.

Sayed Abubakar

My Mother

My mother my paradise
when closed her eyes,
my earth got lost in darkness. Now frost grows on my eyelid.
On earth I'm a helpless motherless kid.

Sayeed Abubakar

My Paradise

My heart cries for you
and dew,
O Love, my Paradise, grows on my eyes.
Every moment here I only feel bored and lonely-
Can you kill it?
My mind always runs after you, do you feel it?

Sayeed Abubakar

My Poems

Those who will go back to the civilization of cow-carts and go back to the age of hand-fans made of palm-leaves;

Those who want to cross the seven oceans and thirteen rivers on foot;
and want to fill up the the east and the west by odors of corpses;

Those who will go back to the spell of witches and go back to talismans and superstitions;

Those who believe in 'dogs are more faithful than men'
and trust on fate-ghosts more than on war, procession and slogan;

Those who will destroy dwellings of the mankind with bulldozers and build up on that debris the palace for fox and boar;

for those idiots, angry like cobra and ferocious like hyena,
my poems bear sad news only burnt in fire.

Sayeed Abubakar

My Sorrow

My sorrow
once I knew you.
My sorrow
now I don't know you.

My sorrow
once I loved you.
My sorrow
now I don't love you.

Sayed Abubakar

My Two Eyes

My two eyes may seem to be dead like the dead rivers of Bangladesh where there is no sign of water now.
But, o my Love,
within my heart there flows a sweet river very dark and deep;
the tide of pain rises there 24 hours every day.

Sayeed Abubakar

My War Against Rapists

I won't come back my home
until the rapists die in Delhi, New York, Rome
any place where they lie.

My war against those beasts who love my mother's meat who together make feast with her body and eat.

I am in battlefield,
like Hercules I roam.
Until the rapists killed
I won't come back my home.

Sayed Abubakar

Nazma

Allah, only you the supreme power.
Our
All good and bad
Which make happy and sad
Are only on your hand.
I earnestly believe and understand
Nothing there is impossible for you.
So I pray with cry with eyes full of dew:
Place my sister in Paradise
Because she dies
To respond your inevitable call Leaving on earth her all.

Sayeed Abubakar

No Foe I Have

If someone is rejected in love, s/he shall turn into a foe.
My born-blind heart has never fallen in love with anybody; throughout the whole life, he has walked alone on the dry path putting on a pair of old shoes.
That's why, I have enmity with none.

Translated from Bengali by the poet

Sayeed Abubakar

No Gain

What is a life if there are no struggle and gain?
What's love if there are no joy and pain?

Existing like the dead lying on the bed of soil will spoil
the goal of life, o Man.
Who can be a Mojnu* if he does not fall in the sea of pain?
Without suffering, there's no gain.

* a legendary lover

Sayeed Abubakar

None

There is no fool
who says his homeland is not beautiful.
There is no mad
who says his mother is so bad.
There is no bird
that, singing songs, get tired.
There is no dove
hates love.

Sayeed Abubakar

Nothing To Do But To Wait for You

Now one second seems to be one hour,
one minute one day.
one day one year.

When you said you would remain busy for a whole week,
I got dumb like a piece of stone
because I knew here one week means seven years.

Yet I will wait for you.
I will wait till the end of the week.
I will wait until the doomsday comes.
I will wait because I have nothing to do but to wait for you.

Sayed Abubakar

O Lorena

It's a small hut among the innumerable stars of the sky
that has windows between each one hand gap;
through those windows, the light of stars enters in;
eyes get stuck to half light, to half darkness;
it is neither a day nor a night-what a sight it is!
watching the sky lying on the bed is the only task
that has no end;
fascination remains in two eyes, joy within heart;
in that desolation, O Lorena, I wish to have your company.

Sayed Abubakar

O My Love Red Red Rose

Tomorrow will be today tomorrow,
today will be yesterday.
This happiness will be sorrow
when 'Goodbye' you, Love, say.

O my Love, rose like red,
if this love once hatred-
why have we come so close?
O my Love, red red rose!

Sayeed Abubakar

O Soil

Soil,
Don't be fertile more,
Don't be a mother;
Child-traffickers, like mad dogs,
are moving everywhere.

Don't conceive any green more,
Don't conceive any forest;
The blue-eyed woodcutters, like butchers,
are sharpening their axes.

O Soil,
Rather become a desolate graveyard,
Rather become a melancholic desert.

Translated from Bengali by the poet

Sayeed Abubakar

O the Cowboy

Hundred years back where were you?
When your mom was a little girl growing like a pine tree,
did anyone conceive that a hero-like man was hidden In the folds of the girl's body resembling a pan swelling up with heated juice?

Or did your dad- as a vulture from the high sky searches for a dead cow- nose out the scent of your existence in the rolls of your mom's body while unfolding her like a sari
in the pitchy darkness of youth?
If the case so, where were you?
Hundred years hence like the smoke of a cigar
where will you be?

Love existed in the world when you were out of existence.
Then too darkness like the wrestler played the mysterious game with the alien light.
Then women- having spoken of hearts- spent nights wet with lust beside men blind with love.
When you pass away from the earth, stars will bloom like flowers, then too women like playful ducks will swim in the liting sea of night with their bodies uncovered and undressed.
But you think, no woman in absence of you
any longer becomes a mother, in absence of you all sports on earth get stopped for ever like a clock out of order.

Nowhere you've seen an undying tree, o the cowboy
nor you've seen any deathless lamb;
Why do you like to capture in your fist for good the breast of earth degraded with rapes since her birth?

Sayeed Abubakar

O Yusuf

How does a man- by rejecting woman's enchanting youth ripe and purple like mangoes- manage to rush towards the power-house of the invisible
as an impotent, incomplete male? Burning like the coal in the fiery oven of youth, how does one manage to say:
'I fear the Emperor of the invisible'?
Having got all glory of woman in hand, how does one,
by withdrawing flesh and blood somewhere,
like a coward escape into the chest of the infinite zero
as the chickens safely hide themselves into the breast of hen in fear of hawks? How does one manage to turn down the rapturous sex with a woman most excellent of all, Yusuf?
When Zulekha's hands like pincers grip the sleeves of the shirt,
how has it to be said: 'I seek shelter, o the Owner of the infinite'?
How has it to be said cowardishly?

But I can't help offering a basket of snail-kisses
when a woman like a duck stretches her lips wet with sunlight.
When a woman stretches her love-lorn hands, o Yusuf,
I can't refuse her like an impotent male.
As I fail to refuse, there rises the norwester in the beach of life and evil approaches the earth and the earth gradually becomes diseased.

In essence, I'm a coward, Yusuf, in essence I'm youthless.
As I'm youthless like the clouds of the rainy season,
my faith remains motionless turning into a dead body
in the stinking dustbin of woman's youth, motionless remains my soul's skeleton.
As I'm youthless like the clouds of the rainy season,
I can't touch, like you, the perennial perfect summit of the infinite jumping over the wall of woman's desire, o Yusuf.

Ode to Flower

Toiletries are not necessary for your beauty,
silk-sari and gold ornaments are not necessary;
o flower, which dress you stay in, your beauty speaks penetrating each cell of your whole body.

Sayeed Abubakar

Ode to Lorena

I do not look at the ripe mangoes
because I have looked at you.

I do not listen to the songs of cuckoos
because I have listened to your voice.

I do not want to see the depth of oceans
because I have seen your heart.

I do not want to explore the sky
because I have explored your eyes.

I do not want to conquer any land like Alexander because I have conquered you.

The whole universe I find in you.
That is why, I do not go anywhere leaving you alone.

Oily Men's Song

We only want to oil the heads of oily men.
We have no oil for those who have no oil at all.

You, the owners and traders of oil,
are our relatives and friends only-
we want to declare it again and again.

But those who are poor and beggars,
who are going to embrace death very soon
are none to us and they have no value on earth.

Once and Now

Once you were yours
and I was mine;
to our pleasures
we were confined.

Now you are mine
and I am yours;
our refined love
all our pains cures.

Opening Your Window

Opening your window,
look at the Sun, Lorena, in your Mexico
in the morning each day.
You will find the Sun with red rosy ray.
This ray is my love, she borrowed from me.
I saw this Sun in Bangladesh which now you see.

Opening your window,
look at the Moon, Lorena, in your Mexico
at night. You will find the silver-Moon beautiful with her white ray. This ray is my love, she borrowed from me.
I saw this Moon in Bangladesh which now you see.

Paper Flowers

PREFACE

Immortal and undecaying these poems, I know, shall die one day; one day all fame and immortality shall fall flat among the debris. The Keokaradang, the Himalayas, the Twin Tower and the Great Wall of China shall be flying in the air like the light dry skins of onions. The eyes of Newton and Einstein shall be upturned; upon those eyes, the blue ashes of the utterly destroyed stars shall be falling down ceaselessly. Alas, where will be lost for ever science, technology, art, literature, music and paintings earned through thousand years!

When these poems will die one day; when all fame and immortality shall fall flat one day among the debris; when the Keokaradang, the Himalayas, the Twin Tower and the Great Wall of China will be flying in the air like the light dry skins of onions; when the eyes of Newton and Einstein will be upturned; when upon those eyes, the blue ashes of the utterly destroyed stars will be falling down ceaselessly; alas, when where will be lost for ever science, technology, art, literature, music and paintings earned through thousand years; that day, o God, pour down those poems into my soul, listening to which, all the nymphs and inhabitants of Paradise will start dancing in joy.

I walk bearing such a soul which plays like a flute, sings like a cuckoo, runs stirring murmuring sounds like a spring and dances unfolding its feathers like a pea-cock. If I were not submerged utterly into the darkness of the worldly life, my soul would play such a way, your sky would start trembling; it would sing such a way, the passers-by would remain standing by speechless; it would run stirring murmuring sound such a way, poems after poems would fall down into the souls of the poets; and it would dance unfolding its feathers such a way, the eyes of the beauty-lovers would be dazzled in wonder. My soul is, as it were, a cuckoo who has mistakenly entered a city; he sings songs but the outcry of the machine-monsters does not let them enter the ears of lords and ladies.

RIDDLE

The wise say, our soul does not die. But, alas, my soul is utterly dead now! The way the water of a pond reaches its bottom for the terrible drought of Summer, the fishes of the pond cannot save then themselves from the clutch of death though they hide into mud; that way, my soul has lost its existence dying gradually everyday by my own torture. Hi, what is the way to live now?

My murshid said, 'The way the seeds sowed into the soil get back becoming trees again; the way the herds of fishes come out of their eggs mixed with the bottom of a bog dry like a log, when water get stocked in it; that way, dead souls return to life if they get rain, if, in that incessant rain, darkness is washed away for ever.'

I asked, 'What is true then—life or death? What is the difference between life and death, o lord?'

'You won't be able to comprehend the shape of truth if the light of day and the darkness of night are not removed from your eyes. If the eyes of skin are not destroyed, the eye of soul cannot see properly. And how will those, who have not conquered their body, fly in the indefinite sky with the wings of Gabriel? O lad, you have fallen, I see, into the riddle of life and death. May God bless you.'

THE DIVINE EYE

He wanted to be exposed. So the universe was created. The hills and mountains, oceans, rivers, forests and the sky were created. Were created the Sun, the Moon, the nebula, the galaxy way, darkness and light. Tigers, lions, bears, deer, sheep, goats and dogs were created. Were created even the cockroach, snakes and the earth-worms.

The lightning-speedy angels and Jins. Adam and Eve.
 Man said to Him, 'Won't we be able to see you?' He said, 'The eyed ones will see. Those who possess ears will hear me. Those who have noses will smell me. And those who are the owners of heart will be able to feel me deeply.'
 Then He spread politics, states, science, knowledge, good and bad among men creating them within a moment. He created love, created hatred. Created honey and bitter. Creating days and nights, He said to them, 'Touch each other if you can!'
 Then few men returned to Him. He asked, 'Could you see me?' Most of them looked at Him in bewilderment as if they had been dumb by birth; it seemed that they did not hear and understood nothing. Only a handful men opened their mouth joyfully.
 Someone said, 'Seeing the Kanchenjunga, the moonshine flooded nights, the swelling feathers of pea-cocks, the peaks of two breasts of my beloved, the softness of rain, the green darkness of a deep forest, the morning dew lying on the blade of grass and the heaps of waves tumbling down on the breast of ocean, I understood that they all are samples of your eternal beauty.' Another one said, 'I could see you into sounds. When the spring songs of cuckoos, the howling of clouds of the rainy season, the whistle of magpies during autumn, the sad tone of the hilly brooks, the swelling music of the wave-lyres of seas and your nectar speeches playing into the throats of men entered into my ears, I could see you within my existence.' Another one said, 'I startled having the perfume of bakul flowers. I asked the kathalchapa flowers, 'Who has given you this scent?' The hasnahena flowers of the night spread the intoxication of perfumes into my sleep. Setting my nose on the kadom flowers of rain, the sheuli flowers of morning and the lemon flowers bloomed on the bank of pond, I continued seeing closing my eyes the spreading light of your smell.' Then the last man said, 'Picking up my first child into my lap, I could see you. The red china rose love of a lass pierced like a spear into my heart opened the doors of my two eyes. It seemed that crossing the seven skies I rushed somewhere where the current of the eternity has got united. Surrounding it, there exist the songs of cuckoos, the strange perfumes of roses and the soft sunrays of dawn. One day seeing the footprints of elephants on the soil of a forest, I exactly told my friends that elephants lived in that forest. Witnessing the truth, they all became astonished. But they kept their faces aside when I told them about your presence everywhere. I said, 'The unfathomable ocean is telling me, 'He exists.' The sky is telling me, 'He exists.'" They raised the question, 'Then why can't we see Him?' I said, 'Because a veil has drawn on your eyes. So you won't be able to see Him.' Then, you know, how ferociously they all jumped upon me like hyenas! Tearing me into pieces, they buried me beneath the soil. Hi, if they could realise! If they could see! If they were not blind like the born blind men!'

TIGER AND DEER

I asked him, 'Tigers devour deer; why do deer live beside the tigers then?'
 'They will live beside tigers. It is the doctrine. Tigers never jump over deer if they don't feel hungry. If the deer did not stay beside tigers, they would extinct from earth many days ago. Men would then enter the Sundarbans, loading trucks with deer would come back to slaughter-house and destroy them over night.'

FEAR

Saying 'Where has gone fear?', a man was running breathlessly. I rushed to him and asked, 'Hi, what are you looking for this way?' Halting abruptly, pantingly he said, 'Fear! I'm looking for fear but it's not being found anywhere in this city of Pharaoh.'
 'Alas, I see nothing in this city but fear!', I said. 'Where I stare, I see only fear: the fear of gun, the fear of falchion, the fear of slaughtering, the fear of being arrested, the fear of bombing by plane, the fear of famine, the fear of hijacking, the fear of being kidnapped. Floating on so many fears, are you looking for fear on the streets this way?

He said, 'Yes, I'm looking for that fear, losing what, this city has become a living hell; losing what, man is devouring man like a hyena tearing his bones, flesh, dreams and desires. I'm looking for that fear, having which into bosom, the whole body would turn into a volcano with valour; having which into bosom, the heart would turn into the Atlantic ocean and its waves would sing and dance with joy day and night. I'm looking for that fear, having which into bosom, the sword of Simar*, the death-sentence by hanging, the pan of boiling oil, sorrows, miseries, prison, suppression, oppression and injustice would seem to be nothing at all; having which into bosom, it would be as easy as that of Yusuf to throw away the nude youth of Zulekha like a piece of torn dirty cloth; having which into bosom, the believers would forsake this city for ever like the dog of the seven sleepers and take shelter into the inevitable den of death.'

I got stunned and asked, 'Which fear is it? '

He kept his mouth into my ear and said in a whisper, 'The fear of Allah.' Then he got lost into the bright daylight of civilization which way a shadow gets lost into noon.

Groping into the darkness of my worm-eaten heart, I asked myself with wonder, 'Hi, can you say, o Sayeed, where lies that fear? '

Poem of Hatred

When, like cancer, people fear war and death
as a rat fears a cat;
when people detest war and death
like a dead rotten rat that spreads intolerable bad smell
which way a mad dog detests water for its hydrophobia;
when a bright city crowded like a river full to the brim gets vacant all on a sudden just after seeing a gun-what can the city be named then?

Avoiding war is the nature of the Queen of Sheba because a woman means getting boiled like an egg lying under the aggressive virility of a man surrendering completely to his lust;
and a man is always like the King Solomon,
at whose beckoning with finger the Queen of Sheba
along with her state gets belonged to him.
But what a city is it, where the disgraced men hearing the name of war enter the latrines running fast like the patients of diarrhoea?
What an ill-fated country is it, where men and women calumniate the war in their sky-rending chorus?

In ancient days women chose only knights and warriors
as their bridegrooms; and for their beloved heroes, they made ready their shields and swords
so that they could leap into the fathomless beauty of war
if the battle-drum was heard beating.
When they returned to their homes, their wives welcomed them laying their hearts and tears of eyes under their feet.
If they got martyred, the wives felt proud of losing their husbands, as the full Moon feels proud of sacrificing her light for the earth.

When a woman gets inclined only to her body,
when no noble thought can enter her brain except the thought of her uterus, only then she clasps her bed-mate like pincers listening to the sweet slogan of a procession.

But tell me, o ass men, which cancer makes men such boneless like earth-worms? Being affected by which tuberculosis, men start shouting heart and soul like asses, saying 'Save! Save! ' listening to the maddening war-song in the air and the sky?

When people detest war and death
like a dead rotten rat that spreads intolerable bad smell
which way a mad dog detests water for its hydrophobia, - that habitation then can be called a country of worthless people where the sun should not rise ever, it should not rain and crops should not grow in the fields.

Prayer of a Broom

Much I have swept floor, veranda, yard,
the shade under the mango tree, that of the lemon tree,
and all the passages of the house. I do not know,
in which intoxication or hobby, the rough hand of our housewife has made all surroundings neat and tidy
by using me every day.

How many brooms there are to accomplish such simple household chores!
O God, manage for me such a vigorous sweeper who will sweep with me the whole earth once.

How many garbage and waste are lying on all sides of earth
as if it were a corpse swollen with rottenness!
It is spreading rapturously a terrible bad smell
and the air is getting wet more and more.

O God, manage today such a vigorous sweeper for me
who will sweep the whole earth only once.

Sayeed Day

No Valentine ever did love like me;
Who where loved his beloved from so far as I love you, Lorena? If you see anyone in whole world, I'm a liar.

No Valentine suffered ever as I do for your love. For my isolation from you, every day, Lorena, I die and get alive for you with full passion.

From Bangladesh every second I pull your heart; my heart peacefully rests with you.
Seeing my love, Valentine becomes a fool,
all the eyes of lovers get full with dew.

Lorena, o my Mexican nymph, say:
'It's not Valentine, it's my Sayeed Day.'

Shadow of a Black Dog

'I have walked across the shadow of a black dog.
Alas! What would happen to me? ' saying it,
he started crying loudly.

I asked, 'What's the problem then? '
He said, 'I may cost my life for it.'

Listening to his cry, the black dog came back.
The man said to him, 'O dog,
I have crossed your shadow today.
What would happen to me? '

The dog replied, weeping, 'Brother, sorry, I don't know it at all.'

Sleep

When the enemies surrounded their house, their guns were sleeping tight pouring oil
into their noses.

When their mothers, sisters, wives and daughters were getting raped together on the same bed,
their guns were sleeping tight like Kumbhakarna.*

At last when they were attacked and felling them on the ground
they were being slaughtered like bulls, still their guns were into deep sleep.

Someone coming to them said, 'Brethren, kindly awake your guns now.'
They, setting hands on his mouth, said,
'By God, never utter such a word and let the guns sleep peacefully which way they are sleeping and we want to see them sleeping even after the doomsday, to see that no one has come break their innocent sleep.'

Song of New Year

Both in the sun and rain without umbrella
a boy beside the road works ceaselessly from dawn to dusk breaking the bricks into pieces.

In both eyes he entertains a dream desolate
of merely three handfuls of meals;
the dream certainly not for rich dishes—korma, kabab
nor for princely recipe on the table.

Still everyday remains he unfed
in sun and rain beside the road, spends his poisonous days-
O the happy men, do you think of him once?

New year, the new guest, sprinkles links of love
in the breast of all.
Collecting those links, you, the rich,
fill up your hands and eat up to your marks
all the things you like best.
But why does that boy remain such a day helplessly unable to feed himself with a single handful of plain rice?

Songs for Lorena

O my Lorena,
You I miss;
Give me kiss.
I want to give you
Morning dew,
Love and peace.

O my Dove Beautiful,
O my Love
Warm and cool,
I want you to take
To love-lake,
To love-beach.

Every day
Every night
To get you
I do fight.
I want to gain you,
Obtain you,
You to reach.

I have made,
Lorena,
A love-bed,
Lorena;
Won't you come
To stay there Forever?

The bed is made of peace;
There we will hug and kiss;
When I will play love-game,
Your face will become red,
Lorena.

This bed is made of light;
There will pass
day and night;
When you feel tired, o Love,
On my arms
keep your head, Lorena.

3.

I do love you,
I do you love you,
Lorena.
You are my Moon,
My song-dove you,
Lorena.

Still Some People

Still here are some people who prefer darkness
and prefer going to village
with their wives and children.
At least at the departure of electricity (Victory to load-shedding!) some people climb the roof for free air and look upward to the sky by mistake.

Still here are some people
who venture to purchase books of poetry, listen to Hemonto's* songs,
stare at the starry sky and groan 'Mom! Mom! ' seeing her face in a dream.

Still here are some people
who, seeing the axes and the woodcutters, feel their hearts being heavy with pain and disgust.
Still here are some people
who love trees,
love rivers
and extract pleasure from fertile women.

The Hand of a Jew

Thinking him a man,
I stretched out my right hand towards him.

As soon as I kept my hand on his hand,
my hand got wet with a horrid smell.

I washed my hand many times with ashes
and with sweet-smelling soaps.

I went bathing many times in the Ganges and in all the oceans.

Even I bathed my whole body
with sacredness, hatred and love.

Yet that horrid smell has not vanished at all
from my right hand and from my whole body.

Alas! now I think of that hand-
Was it the hand of a fox scratching corpses?
Or was it the hand of a vulture or of a hyena?

The Ism of Life

Those who stretched out their chests like lions in front of the pipes of guns are now the kings of highways.
Those who died helplessly jumping into the gape of the invading shark are now alive in the din and bustle of life.
And those who escaped hiding themselves into the darkness of their cunning are now mere oblivion, mere broken graveyard surrounded by dreary emptiness.
Actually those who have learnt to contempt the eyes of vulture have the right of living only.
Only those who have learnt like pincers to uproot the poisonous teeth of cobra have the right of love.
Those who know how to show thumb to the carnivorous animals have the right of life.
Freedom and sovereignty are only for those who have learnt to play with life like chopper and spear
and who have learnt to shed one river blood for flowers and poems,
for man and soil.

Behold, those who were alive are now mere ghosts
having died and got rotten utterly.
But those who sacrificed their lives in the inflame of love are now reigning in the realm of life.

Truly the detestable death of man is in his foolish living;
life is only in war and death.

Sayed Abubakar

The Last White Pigeon of Peace

Going to slaughter the death like a bull felling it on ground binding tightly its four legs, we have made our earth full of death more.

Going to uproot the shrubs of weeds,
we have filled our life-land with more weeds.
Going to destroy the darkness with all its roots,
we have fallen down slipping into the darkest ditch.

Our wisdom is now eating our whole body
pecking at all limbs like a vulture.
All our books and idle times of our laboratories are biting our soul and existence, raising their hoods like a cobra.
We do not know where we have reached running like a bull tearing its rope.
Our science and technology are pouring black heat upon our skulls.

Our dull eyes are getting overturned again and again
like an unhappy housewife hanging herself with a ceiling fan.
Even the eyes of our heart are growing feeble and inactive by getting fade every day.

Spitting upon all our rotten knowledge, wit, welfare and blessing, spitting upon our democracy twinging like a septic boil
and spitting upon all our destructive inventions, we are eagerly waiting like swallows, like the thirsty fish of a dry pond or like the cracked fields of Summer-if it rains!
if peace descends!
if the last white pigeon comes flying from the distant sky-civilization out of this sky engulfed with bombing planes, carrying the message of peace!

The Saviour

Behold, how horribly the hungry Fire gapes at us like a python, like a ravenous whale
and like the Bermuda Triangle.
How terribly the maddened Fire devours bricks and stones,
and drinks all the snow-hills like a tasty wine!
Like a demon, the Fire eats crunching the bones of Cain and the skeleton of Lahab*, eats like the kernel of a palm uprooting the blue eyes of Genghis.

Where are you running fast, o Man, like a bewildered horse?
O the lost horse, where are you going madly raising your tail?
Breaking down the wall of sight, behold, how horribly
the Fire gapes at us!
It is is such a fire which devours not only our body
but also our invisible soul. Like a rat, it eats into the coconut of our heart bit by bit.

There is no Jesus more who will absorb all your sins in his cross.
There is no Gautama more who will play the flute of wisdom sitting under the shade of the pee-pul tree.
There is no Krisna more who will pour down a cloud of love into the thirsty eyes of Radha.
There is no Mohammad more who will save you running from the clutch of the hungry Fire.

O Man, O Horse, O Bull,
There is no prophet more, keep it in your mind.
Keep in mind, there is no saviour more except a love-lorn poet.

The World at this Moment of Night

The world at this moment of night has turned into a mosque.
The world at this moment of night has turned a silent sweet mat of prayer.

All the movements have come to a close,
all the dins of horizon have become still.

After the day's toil of tilling sins and virtues like a tractor
the tired locality like a dead body has entered into the stony sleep.
In the province of sleep, only the sleepless stars bathing in the moonlight of Jikir* blaze to decorate the sky.

The world at this moment of night has turned into a mosque,
has turned into the quite solitude of the grave.

Like a pot made of glass
let the sleep be broken to those
let the sleep be broken to those
let the sleep be broken to those who are wiling to subdue the moaning of heart who are wiling to pick up the gold of timeless pardon in their blissful fists.

Two Years and a House-inmate

Having soaked up two eyes in tears,
the dying year said in a crying tone,
'Dear,
Adieu! the bell of my departure has rung.'

Listening to her cry, the inmate of the house broods over the day when he will also go away like her.

Smearing kajal in eyes, drawing colorful design on forehead and lips, holding ornaments and expensive saree on body, the new year, coming hastily, knocks at the door.

When the inmate opens the door, the new year,
showing exceeding joy and raising stormy smile on face,
asks, 'Dear,
May I come in? '

The inmate, having looked at her, thinks,
this smile of her will disappear if the time expires.

Village Modhupur

At the farthest corner of the world
there remains my village Modhupur small and smart.
Birds chirp there, farmers render songs,
flowers sprinkle flavor all the year round.

The sun rises like a silver disk in the east;
at evening it sets in the west.
At night the moon appears to dispel dark.
The village neat and nice has no match at all.

Tasting berries, lichees and mangoes, and sporting in its fields, I spent my delicious childhood there.
Leaving behind that sweet, splendid, unforgettable village
I wander restlessly now from one country to another.
How long I have not stepped in my village!

War Is Life

I can go in war this very day
with those who are against hunger, who are against death
and who take arms against the invaders.

The boars are now destroying all crops of life
entering into the fields of civilization;
The jackals are devouring all corpses of our kith and kin digging the graves;
The vultures are singing the rotten withered song of democracy clutching the map of our heart; Leaving my home for ever, I can go away with those who are against these boars, against these jackals and these vultures
and who draw irritated hands against their aggressive hands.
My heart cries now saying war war.
Saying war war, my heart bursts into anger
like an atom bomb.

Life is nothing but war,
and warlessness means mere death.
