

Poetry Series

suresh bhandari
- poems -

Publication Date:
2007

Publisher:
Poemhunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive

suresh bhandari()

suresh bhandari is eldest son of babulal bhandari and sabitra was born in nepal, country of wrote poems from his childhood conveying a nostalgic and alfathic tone of mother nature, his country, a dream a man sees, social dissatisfaction, inequality, injustice and pain in different way.

He hopes with his imaginable power he can atleast create a situation where people would come to know how powerful is a langaugae of words.

In A Street Of Million Dollor

terrifying search for a good dream awful match for the departure ignorance of his own well being higher up the sky
in a street of million dolor,
a man strive for 50 cent
for his drink
and for his minimum digestion a story, real one is this of a small man and a tall house he proked from the way with lighting stuff announcing power allocation but he was isolated

not by rule
but by rule makers

in a real sence,
in a street of million dolor
a man strive for 50 cent

suresh bhandari

Retrospect

dearth of my fathom
today, sorry,
its exacerbate due to yours law of motion being a destitute up and demur with centripetal
i examine them as a power of centrifugal good luck to newton and good night to kan with the breakfast offer from california institute of technology lunch from leeds university suffer of smithsonian institute in washington u may think i generate a law of science but overcoming,
i found a law of life
with the same,
good night and good luck
to mine life
with aspiration beats,
what i discover is
other than
general law
universe is not expanding its constant
what a paradox
it all says my life long law of retrospect

suresh bhandari