Not drunk enough to do any better—
It rains in Shanghai,
Each droplet containing the toxicity of
A fairy holding her breath on Mars—
I watch Lost in Translation
For a little while
And make love to my wife until She comes—
I am proud for a little while with out
Thirteen month son lying beside us,
And his little brother or sister
Already contemplating for two Months in his or her
Mother's belly—
With all of the complications of Plato's
Ultimate form they are certain
To forget about
Once they awakened to the unbelievable
Carnival of this broken mirror world.

Robert Rorabeck

This Careless Dream

I feed my dogs steak as I wait for April:
I will almost be as old as Jesus; and I eat peanut Butter and jelly on white bread, and think how Such a briny sea flowed forth from the wound on His side; how he could have starred in any movie
At that point;
And if I had known him, and joined him there,
With the thief and the other man; If I had knelt with his Mother and Mary Madeleine, how I could have felt a Part of something, and helped him down from That sacrifice his father gave for the Business retreat,
And put him in his tomb, and played something glitzy
On the piano, and filled up the wilderness outside
With Broadway:
Those were some sick sons of b*tches who turned him in,
Who gave him those scars they couldn't do alone:
I have that evidence too, and here I am with My dogs, above you all, floating like a gray-haired
Zeppelin over the aging Manifest Destiny,
Seeing how even now the sea waits like a hungry leopard,
Blue and lapping, for someone to forget to close the Door to this careless dream.

Robert Rorabeck

This Childish Ride

I once read off entire auctions to amber cemeteries,
Sitting with the vanquished armies and calcifying judges;
How so, these are the things of the past- Which the grass
Transmogrifies picnicking in shade and dabbed early light,
So that I could harangue you from my begrudging place,
What betided the boiling motorways and the seesawing lovers-
The places where failed business men go to kiss metal hollowly,
So you sit upon the bones of his galloping thigh, jarred, and grin to Have seen me so far away, so far away beneath the hemming sky,
Each cloud a gathered stone all in the proximity of rivers of Airplanes- they hope to reach their summits by time;
But I am waving goodbye, for I have no more money
To motivate this childish ride....

Robert Rorabeck

This Cold Letter Day

She comes towards me while I drive:
My work, with the sun in my eyes- telling fabulous stories
Of a country that we, of course defeated:
That I have never been to, but once or twice:
And I think that all of her uncles she be pilots, half drunken,
On fabulous airplanes:
This alma, a muse- toying with the elements bruised
In the armpits of the sooty stars:
She goes up for a ways, turning around on her mark,
Never forgetting how she plays:
Watching soap operas in her room- thoughts of me slipping away
As she eats the last of the strawberries I sent to her this Cold letter of a day- on another valentines.

Robert Rorabeck

This Envious Sky

The world was held fast in green tourniquets of new Envy,
I held these pictures of you at arms length and wept and Thought of fire pits and the ways
That I better belonged deeply to a night of cypress and Crashed planes
Far from the sororities of stewardesses and always leaping
Across the succession of drainage ditches,
Because these were the pills I had to swallow
And the comet was for the first and the last time
Skipping like a precious stone across this envious sky.

Robert Rorabeck

This F%cki9ng Interstate

Days stretch out like nude versions of your Silhouette on paper that is burning
Before the golden eyes of an unidentified saint:
The conquistadors move up the sheer romances of Their jungle;
Sharon stops to bib the milky drizzle from her luscious
Plate upon which Sabine's eyes fixate
And dilate:
Erin is in her drunken rooms, serving the men and the Beasts,
And the airplanes are always trying to make love to the first
Of the sunshine rising in the east;
And you can be sure that it is coming up,
Just as likely as something else that is dying:
The copper cannons sit in the relegated majesty of their False repair,
Just upstairs from where Sharon's sister is crying:
Erin's sister is in Disney World where her little tourists are Dying:
Where all her pictures are all gone like smoke signals over
The make believe ocean;
I look at my bullies through chicken wire:
My neck has been bitten by a vampire, and the traffic is still Unmoving:
The cars pullulate with gold fish, the sugar canes fibrillate:
And I have two no good muses, busted and fat with roe of their Slippery pregnancy, fighting like wispy salmon to make It once more back up past the dazzling food courts that Diadem this f%cking interstate.

Robert Rorabeck

This Fine And So Futile Reason

Gilling together- bodies in gasoline and armpits:
When we get real smart, our houses start to grow like germs in the Full blow of a runaway Michigan winter:
And I really wanted to say the you would know me by now,
But all you like about boys is in their better built bodies:
Well, you can go up and up and sing you songs through your mouth and Nostrils,
But it will always still be the desert of a waiting room in a doctor's office;
And now I am fully grown, so I can stand up in my high heels and Feed the cheetah, while the jungle speaks for itself,
And if I wasn't here why then you would know where I was, for I
Was almost near the zoo; and if I wasn't there why the you wouldn't have Much else to do;
The bodies speak to themselves, and then why they dictate to the fuzz,
While I am lip sinking on some other grandmother's bed,
Just wondering who I was, while the ocean flips over and plays dead,
Just because it knows that is always was the reason for this fine and
So futile reason for because.

Robert Rorabeck

This Hidden Goddess

And I am in love but not in my prime:
Looking down through the Substrate like sifting through a wishing well:
Words that are forked,
Trying to find the hidden clefts of reindeer
Sniffing their fox gloves:
Prettily eating babies breath, as the sky cries
And, she, the river floods:
In beautiful fantasy- where areoled nipples
Rise:
This hidden goddess, brown as the streams
Underneath of airplanes
That ride like angels: she forever came from Mexico, but I think that she will never be My love.

Robert Rorabeck

This Hollow Green Soul

Reasonable silences give me the time of Day,
Holidays of silences, nature preserves of dead
Grandfathers now I never cared about,
Never carved turkey for;
And yet the sky is so pale you would think I
Had done something wrong;
And with your eyes given up on my body's
Burnished hinges, it's the truth that you really didn't Care.
Caught up in your stack of cards, fumbling on your Back with that moon-
Don't you know he doesn't have any light which is His,
And if you love him that way then subconsciously it
Is me you want, for you are the sunlight I Pickpocket to feed the hungry children latch-keyed in
The ironic living room of this hollow green soul.

Robert Rorabeck

This Imaginary

Every word a thimble of a tool,
I line surceases: thoughts flow
Like stains of ink,
Like posthumous shore, leaving the Entrails of its reasoning,
Going back to sleep in a bed under the Arc where all the animals
Are snoring;
And you are in the heavens above us all,
You are in a dream seeping down like rain that I continually get up thirsty for:
For I am just a little boy without a class walking
Barefooted and lustily up and down
This imaginary shore.

Robert Rorabeck

This Is A Kind Of Zoo

I've remembered the scars—how they've Settled into the soft light of Still burning foyers—and how I
Can listen to my wife yet breathing beside
Me—
An unborn son softly swimming—
Soft as antelope in her belly—
And this is a kind of zoo that grows hazy
Just before Christmas—
Where, in the dim morning, even the best of All Christians stumble—
And, biting their tongues—can sing that this Is not Shakespeare,
But a little voice—Perhaps the littlest voice
In all of the heavens—compared to
The speed boats of our uncles—
And yet, on the lakes,
As the leaves fall in autumn all around them,
And the beautiful birds, like swans,
Begin to settle around
All of the banishing graveyards of the old people
We know so well,
There seems to be someone else playing
Upon the lips of our dying summer—
As our childhood vanishes down
A beautiful hallway—
And we awaken almost remembering all that We cannot believe.

Robert Rorabeck

This Is How It Is

Is this where you will choose
To take me home and make love to me?
On this spot of sidewalk so many Lovers have used to walk to class
Their arms linked like an archway
For sunlight to cross and fidget
Sylphlike spirits digging with dollhouse
Shovels through shampooed curls,
Their hearts automatic Siamese twins,
The language of love spoken through fingertips,
Naïve rivers conjoined and inseparable
For a year or two
Until the dry seasons in the backcountry
Of famished mountains when their Sophomoric adoration vanishes to less
Than a trickle
And they disband—

But not us. We will be graduates
In love....

Can you see where it is? Just walk
Outside the bar and go down University
To the Catholic Church where I had
The Eucharist once for a class assignment—
We can go in together and they still won't Know. Jesus will know and he will be proud
Of us as we take the parts of him his Priest
Gives us to eat, and with the Holy Spirit
Snacked on walk to your home and make
Love with him inside us, so that little crumbs
Of his blessings are passed between our lips—

You've seen this I'm sure, even if you forget
The glow from the street lamp which comes down
Upon your blouse, like blue waters on white filigree,
The light your eyes travel along
To finally remember me across the drunken street
Where the old red-bricked buildings gather

Like ancient professors about the monolithic
Football stadium of an emperor.

Now you have seen me come back to You and you have realized this is what was Coming to you all the time you've been here,
Serving drinks and waiting,
Not even noticing how pretty
You look for the boys who've just come back from war,
And only have two days shore leave. How they Fight over you to occupy your time. And you've Played the games to make things go faster,

But soon I will be there and on the sidewalk
At the spot I've told you about, so when you come Toward me before we kiss you will Know for sure all that I have told you and Remember that this is how it is....

Robert Rorabeck

This Is My Dying Bliss

The day on the river chokes of sun-
Days of family, days of gun:
I have been so lost into the brighter splinters
Of a forest fire that doesn't ignite:
I fill like I am encircle at a table of absent knights,
Or the adjectives they use to describe themselves;
That I should revert again to calling out the Christian names of my one or two muses,
Like a sudden spelling bee cast out amidst
The key dear of the mangroves;
And maybe that's what Sharon thinks it means as far as Being alive,
But I prefer Disney World, the plastic stilettos of her
Eyes,
Because I am dying, dying into the traffics of the real world,
Dying with my need,
With my hands outstretched for something they should Be feeding,
And there is nothing more terribly sweet than this:
I am dying,
And this is my dying bliss.

Robert Rorabeck

This Is Too

I'm placing a bet on a house where the mountains
Live:
I'm almost certain there's a girl there who's a housewife
I could have sworn would never give:
I could have sworn she would never become halfway
Impregnated on waterslides,
Or cursing her blue eyes up through the open joys,
Experiencing the pit bull refraction on the underside of Aeroplanes:
That this is what she does, and how she belongs:
And this is how she comes to me working her day through
The tricks of songs:
I am sure that the tourists enjoy her, and the snowflakes roll
Un cut from the scissors of the most endearing entanglement
Where the hikers' corpses sleep forever in the bad dreams
Of weeping mothers,
Because this is the way she has become, and this too is Where she belongs.

Robert Rorabeck

This Joy In The Night

Now there is this joy in the night that I don't know—the movie theatre is virtually abandoned—
And you are abandoned:
There is only your echo—
And the night cries without you, infecting my ears
And my cheeks—
Giving infatuated goldfish to my promises—
And in the middle of the night, the fair gets up and moves Away—and then there occurs the most beautiful of Nebulas over the clouds—
Until the sunlight vanishes over the highways—and God shuts his mouth, figuring out that was all that was important
That he had left to say.

Robert Rorabeck

This Juvenile Rope

Well—so this juvenile rope
Hangs us as we won't go out and light the wicks
With the dragons coming home
Over the equinoxes—while our fairytale fathers fish
And look up at Saturn,
And can never be resolved if this is actually the place—
Maybe a beautiful uncle paints a mural in a trailer park
On the other side of the canal,
While something else plays on our television—
And the ghosts leave the burned wings of our paper
Airplanes—and go outside between the cypress and Melaleuca to explore
And explore.

Robert Rorabeck

This Lazy Old Town

If you are a traditional girl, look up at the Stars,
And the dragons making nests,
Bending down to sniff the sappy bouquets of
The tangled cypress:
Get nose bleeds on your knees, praying to airplanes,
If you can—
Or stand up slowly, while slowly raising both of Your hands:
And look across the land I cannot show you:
It is there with all of your people seeming to Move torpidly on the back of a tortoise;
But it is a frenetic merry-go-round:
Now it is here—too soon it will leave this lazy old town.

Robert Rorabeck

This Leaking Summer

Bony endives have their location while
The parks flood and the rabbits cluster;
And down there on the teeter-totter is your little Brother:
Just looking at the top of his head makes me sad,
And I want to make out with you in this flood:
Here comes grandmother in her old fashioned Gondola;
Yes, it's true: and just like us, airplanes are floating
In the sky:
The trees are just vermilion flowers in her great Blueness of meadow,
The waters hatching over her, manipulating our families,
But as long as I have you here with me and reserved,
I don't have to worry about you going away to college:
The closeness of you is a salve, and here are dolphins
Playing with glass bottles:
Here are the conquistadors blooming with the echinopsis
All between the flashy junctures of their exoskeletons:
But where is my mother: I want to bring you to Her, to show you off,
But in this leaking summer I'll be damned if she isn't ever home.

Robert Rorabeck

This Lighthearted Responsibility

I smell the clefts of books in place if finding the Face of Wallace Stevens.

And I would otherwise want to be anywhere, enlightened,
Stretched out like a cherry and golden worm:

Sure we can all graduate from the enlightened point of state college,
But how can we still touch ourselves while the paint is still Drying;

And now I have a scar on my temple that will soon disappear,
While you are still speaking uneasily to yourself;

And all the pretty girls grow like hedges, let them grow untamed and Feral; and they will grow just like Constantine's balloons,

While I keep the high grade liquor between my legs,

And they keep publishing things that they cannot know, while all of their Problems grow and grow; and their problems keep on getting multiplied,
While of their cities can find themselves trapped inside in slow

Motion, galloping on their ponies like the private séances

Of the waves and hibiscus; while the water moccasins prance,

And all of the stolen bicycles are stolen into the trances of watery bridges;

And the teal-high mothers don't have any other words for it other than that They are all spent on the trail head and that they are all but ready to become

All undone; and the night sure looks busy, but other than that I don't Claim any of all of this lighthearted responsibility.

Robert Rorabeck

This Little Song

Tank tops and tabernacles,
I dream of Michelle Obama:
I didn't do anything wrong- it's been a good some Years since I smoked hashes down in the cardboard
Crepuscle of Florida's nocturne,
And that was the last time I did anything very wrong:
My face looks like it could go wrong forever:
It can never take charge again, nor Somnambulate through Shakespeare;
And I wonder if I turned away, would she let me hold Her hand through the rains of the courtyard if we were
The only two buckaroos left in school:
And right now Romero is dreaming of blow jobs as He guards the pumpkins and I get loosely drunk on Something: Cabarnet Sauvignon;
It's not as good is whiskey, but at least it's something,
Though I wish it could be your forbidden tongue
Which instead helped me write this little song.

Robert Rorabeck

This Lovely Town

Sun to my diamond while I live at home—
Specks of emptiness in her eyes where she once
Required me—
As I go sleep-walking like a torn kite outside
Of Romeo and Juliet's tomb—
And this seems to be the place where we live—
Empty cul-de-sac
Beaten down—
As little girls leap across the ditches—
Absent minded of all of the pornographies—
They seem to take all of the world to be in love—
And they make theatres out of graveyards—
They cannot give up
Well then, this is a poem of a wounded creature—
Learning how to settle down—
In a trailer park or a baseball diamond—waiting
For all of the lamps to douse—
And all of the lonely hearts to leave this lovely town.

Robert Rorabeck

This Meaningless Traffic

The night is bad almost like any other,
And the words come out of the open wounds,
Pass by me like owls teaming together over
Wayward trailer parks,
And this is the way they come, half exposed over
The shivering fichus and the pink tongues of airplants:
And the cars parked in mass in the lots beside
The airport,
Then planes leaping like freed girlfriends
Going like steamy bottle rockets and seltzer all the way
To Colorado,
To buy wine, to get an excuse to look into a good woman's Indescribable eyes,
While I only eat fast food and glut next to bosomy coffins
Who remind me so well of my mother,
And when I get fully inebriated I no longer care how Ugly I am or how luckily I have failed, but go to sleep
With the friendly earth warms next to the open pits
The tranquil beds and plots for everyone,
Forgotten in between the better vendors of me,
Because in the morning there will be so many unhealthy
Bouquets as they are burying grandmother or one of my
More unwholesome ants,
Letting me know that it is yet still too early for me,
And yet I see how she must come,
The lady in the shadows jacketed with sharp hornets
With eyes that never close
Who cares nothing for all this meaningless traffic.

Robert Rorabeck

This Midnight's Disney World

In a classroom—In a bedroom—Or in a place
Not really here,
I killed or made love to the sea—
Falling all over her, while my wife sang pop songs
Into another ear—
Tomorrow will be our first year anniversary—
And wont there werewolves come up to look at
The moon,
Or any other thoughts I've had,
With the beautiful and the most beautiful girls
Dancing in the distance,
While the horses eat the grass,
And the bats fly out of the closed gates of This midnight's Disney World.

Robert Rorabeck

This Mortal's Reach

How loud are these whispers that I drink:
The full catastrophe that it is, coming around once more,
Putting the flowers into their trams for another bordering school
Out amidst the pharoses still trying to Plead their reason to exist underneath the Pleiades while
I am Alma jog into the zoo:
We get into her car and go away: we are getting married tomorrow,
Which is the horrible proof of the paradox of any promise that Must happen tomorrow:
It is always there in the backyard underneath the springs of things:
The richest of fruit curling above the infant's gums,
The serpent spilling the beans:
The luckiest of rabbits' foos still on the foos of a rabbit who Too well cultivates the fleeted of foot to ever be truly within
This mortal's reach.

Robert Rorabeck

This Most Unanswerable Of Poetry

Bags of gold fish breathing hard
Over my shoulder as a won gift, as Required- and the moonlight dull, but in Charge,
And your sisters around you in the moonlight
As sea level,
Telling nothing of the busses turning around,
Or the lions
In their perpetual moaning: soon I will Be but grafted into Your memory- all of my skills bereft like
Open wishes emolliated into the burning kiln
Of sea:
That I loved you and became your artist:
Un willfully, so too you became my muse, before
I must have ventured again- tramping
Turpentine- or at least the uneasy memory
Gathered with the syrups of her- and coagulated
Into your valley until it became so saturnine-
That I had to leave from there again,
Just to climb up another little ways- while
You lay basking in the architectures of your name
To which I had given you incisively from my unskillful
Attempts at this most unanswerable of poetry.

Robert Rorabeck

This Palm, This Ax, This Feather

Following the rains,
Aspen rise as knitted smoke,
A caroling sorority up on Their elevated saddle.
Lakes engorged in the nests,
Platypuses lather and slap-
Blue mountain lions swat at Fish in the plumped,
Excitable river:
She lays in the woodchips.
Smell her-
Her chest is on fire,
Her eyes the kindling embers:
Oh, she is sweet lumber.
I must use her to build a house,
The cumulus caracoles the Summit,
Hiding it for awhile,
Her areolas ripple;
They just shimmer for awhile,
Siamese penumbras of a hidden sphere,
Swaying in their naked crèche,
And her knees lay crossed like
Firs bent from dampened pleasure,
Like opal hinges for playthings
Displayed by the most modern pioneers.
She has crushed the wildflowers
With her sweet timber,
But they are not complaining,
But kiss along one side her,
As I kiss the other;
Her winds moan their moist weathers,
And verily she reveals her natures,
Christened by this palm,
This ax, this feather.

Robert Rorabeck

This Saturday

I can hear the traffic; it appears to be making love,
Or it stops for a little while and holds a yard sale;
And I have seen coral snakes curling in the wishing wells
And wash basins of those wheels,
That little opulent way out clenched between their teeth;
Then wouldn't ballrooms be just as big and wide open as graveyards,
Wouldn't they sing:
It would be like going to school again; it would be like going home
To a house that was usually empty, only to find it suddenly filled with All the girls you once thought you loved,
And so many beds for them:
By these means, the night speaks, the liquor flows like soft Cathedrals for honeymoons: And I am not Catholic, but I wouldn't Mind to be,
Because I will pray to the virginsita this night tonight;
And I will pray to her for every night, Alma, because you are still Reading my poems,
And you weren't particularly frightened when I told you that I knew where you lived, and that I'd been by once or twice,
And whistled for you the way the wind likes to whistle
For little innocent children, and little women standing in the shadows Against the lights, forever wondering when their men were Coming home, their wishes skipping across the waves;
And when you cried for Flaco to come save you when I was going to pick
You up and carry you home with me, but you agreed to meet me
In the new shadows of the house I bought for you
After work this Saturday.

Robert Rorabeck

This Should Be My America

As I was eating a bowl of rice,
What she was doing was kissing
Another man,
Eyes the sensing pistons, lips the Sport of birds of prey:
Angels resided in her bone structure,
I saw them first nest there in high school,
As she made her rounds with Strange little debutants, likely dykes:
I loved her even then
When she pinned me near the lockers
And made me swap spit without Pulling out our retainers:
How they drift now, the body taking
All of its figs down river
To listen to the fireside tales of the negros,
The cotton like lightless stars swaying
In the field,
Mark Twain calling down river,
His brother dead and he feeling guilty;
But this should be my America,
To see her last in a wayward eclipse,
Her body settling upon the newer acquaintances
Of love and business,
And finally marriage,
Her lips the sommeliers which swill
And then spit, her eyes the causeways
From which her judgment blooms;
All the waysides go by forgotten,
And the boys in their jogging shorts,
The smell of freshly cut grass and the grumbling
Automobiles, thus in evening her beauty
Lights the streets of nostalgia,
Swaying like the fingertips of waves the Moonlight covers,
And thus she goes, promising with the tide,
To afflict the hungry senses of this last of the Modern generations,
Now captivating the chastity through

Swinging doors,
Greeting patrons come in from
The flurrying snows,
For awhile a causeway, a muse curled
Up and busy with Easter decorations;
Already forgotten, cozily inebriated:
The subject of the colonial poet,
Bartering of rumors, canvas that allures,
This should be my America.

Robert Rorabeck

This Song Of Romance

Go f&ck yourself in mastiff peeks,
And long forgotten highways,
Or hide yourself well-exposed in bouquets
I will never buy you:
Flick out your cigarette alongside the rode of Forget-me-nots or so many tulips if we Are in the Netherlands,
Kick over the potted plants, smell of cheap
Fireworks and cheap friends;
And I am going my way high on blue bells,
All my veins are having hot flashes,
From liquor and lack of children-
The canal bows and winnows- It goes back to you
Again,
And all of your hinges and all of your blood are Such amusement,
Such luscious, unrequited flood that I don't know what
To do with myself,
But to remove the needle and then place it softly again
Over your soft vociferous lips and Start this song of romance over once again.

Robert Rorabeck

This Tomorrow's Torpid Stream

Kaleidoscopic mermaids
Swimming in the drowning sea:
Playing with waverly kids
In the sunken school bus,
Lost mothers bathing in the golden
Caesuras,
The fathers the silver kings,
Entombed in the granite skin,
Rusted so far down beneath
The archway of the crumbling Titan:
The words of the better life,
Have been buried beneath the Millennium's sands,
Heroes of yesteryears have Gone away, holding death's slight hand.
Outside the window where
You once swept your hair,
And tied your first French-kiss
Into my lips, with your friends'
Virgin dare:
All down the street now
The lights are out in fine, long rows,
And the cars are parked beneath
The flags which no longer flow:
In these awkward suburbs
Where the young professionals pledged,
The sunlight is combed over by
The sea's burnished edge,
And we are all the oldest children
Sleeping in a hypnotic dream,
Our mouths open but not breathing
This tomorrow's torpid stream.

Robert Rorabeck

This Too Shall Pass

I've said enough now to pop a cherry,
And if you had to be my sour grapes,
And I the bitter fox leaping toothily
Up from his determined elements, the dirty
Though truthful earth sick with gravity
To the skyline's harvest where your veins
Grew breasts nipples with pits, milky:
In truth, you pulled back and played games,
Took your commodities with you skipping the pearly clouds
On commuter airplanes; but still my tongue
Dripped self-inflicted blood as I high-jumped
For that metallic belly which held your thoughts,
And your jellies,
But you came to him instead, trundled in the night,
And creeping hidden of poetry, and fed him of yourself,
The inebriate knight who spent his off hours in Your restive loci, dripping honeyed- What needn't happen did, but after
He has eaten enough from you to earn an aching belly,
Do you really think he will head out to the dangerous border,
And slay your dragons and less definitive enemies?
Rather, might you think, that I with my cunning and Nocturnal pen could have done a better job at lovely assassinations;
Instead, I, as all self-imposed heroes must, I walk away from your Vineyards, taking nothing from you but the scornfulness
Of Precambrian tourism, heady though defeated,
Kicking up dusk, the windmills on the horizon my immortal
Enemy, I combat to keep this purity, you should neither see nor defend.

Robert Rorabeck

This Unfortunate This

Pain in a terrible candle of gold:
Leaping above the traffic, blinding the lighthouse,
And the better avenues down which I am
Too dumb to travel;
There I am in a little forgotten space, looking up
With my dogs,
Combining our senses to realize the least of imperfect
Things,
Even if she does exist, flickering like the last
Frictions of ash-
Smelling like an orchard where the ghosts sleep;
And then I lay down on the stones,
And pray to her- oracular but ashamed, while
The tourists trundle by Bleeding loose change- dissected on the spot,
It feels as if for a while I shouldn't
Have to exist;
Then the wound opens more revealing a little clearer
This unfortunate this.

Robert Rorabeck

This Unpublishable Suburbia

Old books in my hands,
Are rectangular planets of the psocids who live in them;
Each page a whispering continent prone to wispy quakes,
The spine an avenue which halves this earth,
The migrations of flagella over the landmasses of dark consonants;
The tattooed paragraphs flow ignored....

I dreamed last night that you had a terrible disease,
And while I slept you danced in the conversing shadows,
While the avengers of the world's evil doers
Flipped each page to move you on-
You were the zoetrope of a luminescent paramour,

That night I dreamed with my diminutive manager
Under the beer-can mobiles across the erstwhile yellow apartment,
In the dirty turnabout of the way station beneath the busy airplanes
And the flat tires in disregarded towers reaching
Up your slender ankle,

So where you worked became some kind of castle
For Don Quixote and my bankrupt uncle;
They came in every night when you were closing,
From the banking hill of the laughing windmills,
In the hour where your blouse glowed like slow cadmium;
The fuse persuading gunpowder from the impossible mine,
And your eyes, your eyes were at their most indescribable....

"A castle it is, " they said in the dream,
Looking at you like gold toothed mules,
The animal man survived from,
Climbing with their lucid thievery up your canyon- not knowing
Of your consumption,
And how those coy eyes flew over their grayish shoulders,
Searching out the tawny paladins of your affliction.

Then I would awake, confused,
Inebriated by the genius of celibacy, and the day's headlights....
As the industrious lawnmowers perambulated toothily across
The current page of this un-publishable suburbia.

Robert Rorabeck

This Unspoken World

These afternoons are going by Like the steady stream of jetliners
At your uncle's air show:
And you are still just a kid,
Growing gray from being
Touched by all the nameless ghosts.
Your fears are swinging beside
You in the park alone,
When you should've been in school,
Trying to emulate your peers,
Those pink felons dripping
Chlorine in their backyard swimming pools-
They have the eyes of one thousand songbirds,
Waiting on the power lines
For the children getting off the bus
To discard their mind's offspring
Seeding the sodden green
Scattered on their front lawns
The infinite cypress where the wind sways,
While their families are lost inside
The television in the living room.
Only the little boy on the roof's identity
Can see the momentary prism
Bridge the heads of pine trees,
Believing he saw a little girl air walking,
Her eyes a whisper of blue
Climbing up the nebular stairwell
Of the albino's monument,
Until preserved in the sun's yellow resin
On the other side of this unspoken world.

Robert Rorabeck

This Very Cold Holiday

Now your children whisper
And vanish-
Looking beautiful before the mirror of Your father's house,
But how long can you hope for
The to survive,
Whist another my stanzas vanishes-
Just as I pull out of another
Whorish
Pornography, wishing through the Haunted cornstalks,
It was you,
As the waves vanish,
And the airplanes roar into the very Eclipse of lions,
And now maybe my last true loves
Blooms far away,
Believe in nothing in which I believe
In except for myself-
Until it all because a carnival
Until the fish grow wings and fly through This very cold holiday into which I've Been touching myself and Trying to grow wings just so I can have one
Last chance to believe I can grow
Wings,
And stay warm into the cathedrals underneath
Of which I am afraid you are Forever lost.

Robert Rorabeck

This Very, Very Song

You said that you only wanted to be friends
But then we kissed
And I hurt myself even further along the journey:
And now look at all it has all turned out:
I bought you a book that you somehow finished, Alma:
And the sea is bright green and playing games,
And otherwise these words put me to shame,
And I loved the amber taste of your lips as I drank of Them in your car
Outside of McDonalds in the rain and the river of Carports,
And the lackadaisical musters of their queens;
But if I may be as honest as the most distant of all of Saturn's rings,
I love you and you are to me more precious than the most Precious of things,
And if this is how all of it must have to turn out,
And I have to continue getting my mail in my loneliness,
I suppose that it doesn't have to be so sad:
That I have tasted your wet butterfly like licking a stamp,
And I sailed away in a bed where neither of us belonged
And afterwards I went and sung this very,
Very song.

Robert Rorabeck

This Way At All

His Lancelot has been naked but courteous
To you,
And very familiar: so many times questing into your
Octopus grottos
As to make them so well tilled as to even bear
Children without any sort of wicked serpent's
Fangs,
Except for his; and they rose up springy,
And were met by the heavy hand of the gravity of your
Trailer parks and tom cats;
And this is what they said, but oh boy, and baseball:
Witches on red diamonds telling secrets to Dust devils, or the blue diamonds of pools enriched with Chlorine,
Your sister's eyes- and by her I mean anybody's sister:
I am not speaking directing to anybody, how could I,
Except that I mean that he is your knight,
Proud and religious and adhering to a king;
And you both know so little of the world: you are so young
And eager to be questing;
And when he falls asleep inside of you, when her furls and goes away
Then don't you close your eyes and realize that it was never Supposed to be this way at all.

Robert Rorabeck

This Way At All]

His Lancelot has been naked but courteous
To you,
And very familiar: so many times questing into your
Octopus grottos
As to make them so well tilled as to even bear
Children without any sort of wicked serpent's
Fangs,
Except for his; and they rose up springy,
And were met by the heavy hand of the gravity of your
Trailer parks and tom cats;
And this is what they said, but oh boy, and baseball:
Witches on red diamonds telling secrets to
Dust devils, or the blue diamonds of pools enriched with Chlorine,
Your sister's eyes- and by her I mean anybody's sister:
I am not speaking directing to anybody, how could I,
Except that I mean that he is your knight,
Proud and religious and adhering to a king;
And you both know so little of the world: you are so young
And eager to be questing;
And when he falls asleep inside of you, when her furls and goes away
Then don't you close your eyes and realize that it was never Supposed to be this way at all.

Robert Rorabeck

This White Liquor

A field fills up like a city with so many stars
Lost from the bedrooms of spaceships,
But these words just become latchkeys for foxes
And homophones—
Words that sound the same to the conventional franchises
That don't have to heal until they take a dive:
I am the product of the fast food mountains—
I am so deformed, when I pee it is from all of My joints and my eyes:
I am a Frankenstein burried up from roses:
I used to teach at your local high school,
I used to dig up both of my eyes to use
To bore into you who have beautiful daughters,
But not alone:
There are still racecars,
And beautiful water falls in Tennessee:
Let is pretend that they are falling from the water fountains
Of the rural high schools
And I do not have to proofread this poem before Going to sleep
Or drinking anymore of this white liquor:
Tomorrow, the cars will move back and forth across
Shanghai like ants,
And we will have very little else to prove Except that I am not beautiful and you will most Certainly not love forever.

Robert Rorabeck

Thoroughly Anonymously Enamored Over You

There's a black cat in the woods who leaves
Me whenever I am going,
And a man in the woods I have never seen,
But I am not looking for him anymore:
I am looking for a kind publisher- I am looking to Find a great bottle big enough for an entire armada
Of sailboats and help letters:
But mostly I am altruistic, fermented and drunk:
I could never be as beautiful as you ever wanted me to Be:
In fact now, I am all gone: Like the little boy told me today,
I'll have to be human for Halloween,
But like you, I'll love his mother anyways, and I'll Listen to songs which remind me of the forgotten holiday of You virgin streams, of our common high school hallways,
Of the water fountains where I saw you shivering as you
Cleaned your Siamese feathers,
Your song bird wings: and now you are up above the earth,
In the amusement parks of fine ether-
There are glacier pools about you, or they are just your eyes
Staring on to nothing;
Perhaps if they think of me, they imagine that I am as beautiful
As I would like to be,
But I am not, Sharon- but I am true,
And I will spend my entire life passed out in the red hibiscus
Thoroughly anonymously enamored over you.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Alienated Tatters

I've gone up the stairs and called down for Ghosts above the strawberry fields,
The little plots that the locusts love, and the possessed
Men in their cars,
Adopted and up to no good- and somehow all of the Best of us have lost important limbs,
While the dragon is fatly sated up in the winter-molested
Limbs of a feral Christmas tree;
And all of the white girls sleep like powdery ghosts
Contemplating proms,
But the girl I am thinking of is nocturnal and ringed by Gold,
And her children come into and out of her bedroom at Anytime while she is sleeping or making love;
And tomorrow I will meet her again at the fruit market,
Holding her eyes like a totem:
And maybe she will think of me, or maybe she will Think of you,
While the ghosts swing and try to fly, even though they Are only those alienated tatters that people once knew.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Beautifully Anonymous Waves

Plagiarized in soft flesh:

I want to go down touching the swell lips of her

Grave:

Don't care how many children she's had.

I've written so many more poems more naked and Imperfectly needing.

The fair is coming to town and I want to string out
With her and hopefully catch

A vermilion fire

Sparked off one of those bellicose airplanes,

From the match-head of simple tricks;

And buy her a secret diamond

And feel her up under the diademed machines,

Forgetting the reefs of séances our parents have wrecked

Us against;

Or if I was more clever, we could just hold hands:

To feel a woman's heart beat through her hands again

Would be glorious,

And this time I would know better, and really appreciate

That leggy carnival even if I was never aloud to Really slip inside:

And to win her prizes of each and every kind.

To feed candy apples to her lips, and laugh at the jealousy of Those red battles.

To smile while surmising the brightnesses of her coy

Duplicities beneath her belladonna eyes:

To dimple my fingers in what salty clefts she might wish to

Swing,

P%ssy-willows fluttering, never caring that I wasn't a mailman,

Or even a shadow of his occupation;

But that I had once thought of kissing her as I would do to

The effluvious nipples of all those beautifully

Anonymous waves.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Careless Mountains

Problems with the nuisances of the favors
Of the swellest wives:
I remember them standing there like salt licking
Deer
In their kitchens at cooking time,
As their pools were wimpled by the cheery
Breath of airplanes;
And all of it was so unreal, and in still life:
So now I can't even recall the feeling of myself there:
And I have to stand out alone against the stars
Who have meandered out of constellations,
Making no sense for anybody:
The children are lost but happy and on their backs
Breathing slowly as if they had found every last Easter Egg and are now holding their Coral snakes like cherished pets;
And I watch the n%ggers pointing out the rainstorms,
As the airplanes seem to roar like lions
Taking off their clothes in the sky,
As I see the last light of love from her eyes
Botoxed in my mother's brow,
And the little boy becomes a felon of iron pyrite,
Breaking his legs before the faith of his dogs up in the Nameless caesuras of those careless mountains.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Clever Accoutrements They'D Show To Any Boy

Please tell me she's lying on her bed,
Because I'm done now: I'm off my bike,
And I'm thoroughly drenched,
My fingers are cold and would wish to warm inside
A thicket of blue bells which I'll compare her to;
And I'm an awful man, not finished painting-
Didn't learn anything at the university today:
Didn't go to class, but rode around and drank in all
The open rooms, and as I tilted back it was just to Get a look at the perfect young ankles of all the Practicing housewives:
It was at first a revelation, a button-holed parade,
And I had to say there were a lot of heroes amidst them,
And the bravest of them bared teeth when they laughed
And seemed to freeze for me, and show me the Long hot row, so I could almost picture them in the very Neighborhood they were bound to transcend in to:
I could see them hanging glass balls on the Christmas tree
In the houses they made and kept their souls in;
And pies on the sills, and house cats along the eaves,
And crocodiles and roman candles and hangovers that wouldn't Go away;
But it got exhausting thinking of all of these, and even the Flowers turned to wilt, and the shade got runny- but the girls
Didn't leave: They were bound to show for me those clever Accoutrements they'd show to any boy- that got them into High school and college and free cigarettes;
So finally I had to look at the time myself and make up an excuse
I had no reason to procrastinate any more; and I hope my muse
Is waiting, waiting and that she has nothing on and her
Hair is undone and is as pale as an unmolested envelop set there
For me to lick and seal with my letters to put in and her
In that lonely lovely apartment so close to the amusement parks
And downtown racetracks that she could be one or the other herself;
And that is what I am waiting for, even though my words are Not my own: that she should have blue bells in her hair and likewise
Underarms, that her eyes should lay like blue birds half molested
In their nests, and sleepily speak to me gathered above her
Soft and snowy breasts.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Disciples Who Have Forgotten How To Pray

My hand: like a river that winnows,
Swaying in banks of light, mountainous
Knuckles when gripped Titans awakening,
When asleep punished by teenage gods,
A creative tool, an injunction,
A lift for trees and patter of wheat.
My hand has not been in Michigan for decades,
Not since my aunt's wedding,
But that is where it curled from mother's womb,
Like a yawning doll,
Conceived in the drooling mists of Appalachia;
My hand in the shadows, without scars,
Long curled fingers warp outward, my hand
The ledger, an instrument of bones and wine,
The typing instrument, thrilled to a drunken brain,
A face sometimes mustached who hasn't kissed
A woman's lips in years, a spider my hand
Conjoined. I think it odd that a male's hand
Should resemble a female's, or that the different
In sexes is only apparent erogenous,
A hand that should cup an infant, hosanna,
A hand that should cusp waves as if breasts,
And pay for the dinner outstretched,
A hand which pulled her hair and held her Neck, who shot the b.b. Gun, and gripped the stony Lips as it scrambled over my head to summit,
To climb four mountains in one day,
The highest in Colorado: my hand, the processor
Of humanity, like any other hand digging ditches
Looking for gold, my hand on the steering wheel
My lips singing to the radio, palm spread camaraderie,
Fingers tapdance unringed,
Or in need to catch a lover's tear or hide the Gum under the desk, refusing to learn Latin,
My hand an expletive, and jest, or any other symbol
My nerves comprehend, clutching chains, motivate the Arc of the frozen swing-set, light a cigarette burning
Cherries into the snow, my hand to steal, to foil,
To water-ski, or to reward the dog, to fold the book like

Manipulating a butterfly, to smack her ass, to lift the Beer to my slurping lips; my hand who Has forgotten how to pray, my hand who gives Correct change, or cuts the fruit to its salty core,
My hand in death remains the worn-out instrument of God the ants explore, who swings the weed-eater
Over the grass and touches the brail upraised in stone, Blindly notices the cooling of temperature walking into
The shadows, my hand like many others
Working, working, moving through the ceaseless play
Weathered into spiders, who has forgotten the joyful Avenues of women, their variables displayed on
A picnic table, and to explore with her hands as loudly
As lips, my hand with no sense of smell brings
Food to my lips, and secrets to my door,
Each finger conjoined to the other, disciples to the Heart's rhythm, and he the engine that irrigates each
Line and passage they should explore, and peal
Open, and devour, and reward....
Those disciples who have forgotten how to pray.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Feelings Who Let You In

Those feelings who let you in are going now,
Lighting out in that terrible fog:
The last one I can feel is the one letting me know,
Holding the door open as we wave the others goodbye:
What a foolish thing, ambition,
To want to know the avenues to your Neck, displayed like a creature
Of the sea naked on the foaming shore
Without its dress of shells:
I liked these words I curled for you,
Because I wanted them to be my tongue
Slipping between your lips when you were not looking:
When you were talking with the other man:
I wanted to surprise you,
And let that me by occupation:
To inhabit your heart as if it were my preservation:
I, a naturalism, and your chest the habitat of my study,
But I was never so good at satire
To make you look a second time at me:
The embolden language of my parents' rejection,
A child making a mess in his lonely room,
I accomplished that:
I became a fool for you, but look at this.
Here is the conclusion to the thing.
There are still many words to be said,
And people to say them as they wake up for class:
There is a room I am in,
And outside there are trees,
And the sky in its haunted night too cold to follow-
Languages and lovers and roller coasters aplenty,
But none for me-
I graduated and that is that,
And now is the time for my simpler plot:
No more essays, or thoughts of you:
The way you lighted the predawn hours
Where the men were busy selling the fruits
Which would soon travel northwards,
To be bought in the morning-
I loved you, as I told you, but I am still here:

My words should become silent now,
A mute theatre, a holocaust,
A simpler traveler abiding the rules:
And you, the untamed migration
That is lost.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Government Employed Automobiles

Lonely at the sauce, the stars stuttering jobless,
And the prairie is concrete, its orchards golden filigree:
But I still walk,
While the ponies shed off their riders and sip the waves
Like curious paramours lost on their first day
Of high school:
In between classes when the water fountains become an Oasis and made eeried by the bosom of their perfumes:
And then and at those times the buses laying in Waiting beneath the proposed of windmills,
And the finest cowboy who ever lives sleeps underneath the Best of those government employed automobiles.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Previous Songbirds

I go all day along struggling with this;
And lovers make love in parks, or at least young girls
Walk their strong young dogs with their mothers;
And I am certain I cannot belong,
Thinking of all the people I have loved who have gotten away
With not loving me,
And these superfluous words like the rain showers on holidays:
I suppose that they must mean very little, because my art is Drunken and tends to keep to itself like the fingertip of a lighted
Candle,
Like a jogger caracoling a park even until sundown,
While you touch his face and he burns into you his spears, his thrust Wishes, as if counting your years inside of you,
Tapping like a miner trapped in pink taffy until you have forgotten
All of your scars, and all of those previous songbirds who have Gone down wholeheartedly into your catastrophe.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Roses Put To Better Usage

I could be the boy you couldn't say;
Instead, the boy you couldn't see: I've had better Plans than loving the things I see most every Day,
Blue prints of you in the navy on leave on your Bicycle under the Spanish tambourine leaves,
Dripping like an olive, cursing on the move
Words that flow forth around you, the rushing
Sea to prove,
The non existent traffic, the different ways to Misspell words,
The deep despondent clouds which expel from
Your covetous body somehow;
And I am not ready to come to my senses,
Or at least make money by it anyhow- My word
I should dispense with like scattering rice
At weddings, feeding the snowbirds as they retire
To the south; this worthless vitriol that tumbles
From my mouth wishing to disprove what a brilliant
Society that cooked you up- I want to be the one
Who puts shoes on your feet, Eucharist in your mouth
And set you well fed and attentive,
Taming you just so you'll dance for me and call me
John with everything upon you but your lips,
Those roses we'll put to better usage.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Silhouettes Of The Wind-Tunnels

Burn my throat by those silhouettes
Of the wind-tunnels the airplanes
Flew into on Christmas Back on the day in Catalonia when I was a sophomore—
And the words spread like slip streams
For the muses
I didn't yet believe I would never Have—pale girls from High school I kept in love
With for a decade
As they were married and birth
Children,
And the snows melted from the Mountains every summer—
And the tourists came up
To their doorsteps
Trying to imagine the heavens
They could never have.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Unnecessary Waves

Maybe the bodies burn their cathedrals of samurais
All day long, but I don't blame them:
These are just the things that they do when they cant get Any reception, when there isn't or there aren't any good
Sci-fi on,
And Diana is making love to her bald man, even though she asked
Me to buy her lingerie:
And I love Diana even while the basil wilts in its little black bay:
And now I just have enough money to enjoy myself,
To forget my mother and father and their awful
Sorts of spouses: to make love to whores who enjoy making love
To me,
And their beautiful tattoos pointing the way like the first star
Of morning on their inner thigh,
Like a compass mouthing off and congratulating itself in the bay
Where the housewives are drowning luxuriously
And the stewardesses are as of you floundering, collecting themselves
In the head rooms of the violent green caesuras of all of those Unnecessary waves.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Unreturning Waves

In this conundrum there is nobody to buy
Ice-cream—the entire town has vanished
Like apples from their trees:
The day laborers have gone back to trailer
Parks—
The amusements have migrated
And the waves have receded—some brave
Men still believe that there are mermaids
Down in the grottos,
But the lighthouses have willfully blinded
These heavens to the skies—
The little girls' fathers are never returning Home again,
Having given themselves over to those Unreturning waves.

Robert Rorabeck

Those Very Promises

Words on the comb of a c$ck hypnotized
Before the caesuras of the very leaping waves of the sea:
And now this: now this,
I have a house just as little and just as yellow as me:
And the airplanes peruse, and as they purr,
She picks out the plums she'd rather take to her house,
And I bag them,
And then look away into the shadows under that very sun,
As she takes back her car keys and drives away
With the three bouquets that I've stolen for her:
Her children waiting for her brown bosom the same way
Hatchlings await for the return flight of their mother
From the strange opulences of the sea:
She brings them back all of her promises, and feeds them those Very promises she should have fed to me.

Robert Rorabeck

Thou Buzzards

Above or beneath me no one sleeps,
The windows keep their dressing,
The shadows their creeps; and if you are the Vision of high society
With a palate for a beefier dictionary,
You make me weep like a crocodile, like
An onion, like a tourist makes me weep
Shirtless like soulless for awhile,
So easily they are shed and driven around;
And led,
When they should be taking photographs
Of the deeper, brighter things, those housewives
With their afternoon strange, their favorite quiet
Places, their favorite books and places to take it
All off,
The favorite places to shop and stuff their Kids: In this beautiful stage-show neighborhood
Is where I met you, where you now live with All your ivy league flunkies and their ivy league
Sibs- There you displaced me like a generic
Sheet to the wind, you set me free to migrate
Some feet out your door and around the sizzling
Power lines to spin- I was an outside dog,
That very four legged soul you couldn't abide,
And I spent my afternoons of peanut-butter and jelly
Outside on the swings, and didn't wash-
Went from door to door, quietly stealing things like
The liquored conquistador using the pool's inflatable
Raft to sail the treacherously rewarding seas too rich
For thou buzzards to explore.

Robert Rorabeck

Though I Am Still Alive

When we stole into the Fountain of Youth
She didn't wear any panties.
As she climbed the wall
In the shadow of the concrete cross,
I saw her own shadow,
And it had only been with one man.
Later, she found out that she loved women,
But that night we were alone,
Young thieves in amnesia
Who wanted to live for ever.
It was so early, there were no tourists,
But the fountain's water tasted like Rotten eggs. Afterwards,
We were hungry in the misplaced graveyard
Where the Catholic Spaniards
Rested perpetually alongside the natives
And the stalwart fort that looked Anxiously across the sea
Where the waves were repeating in cavalry
The caesuras where mermaids bathe.
And looking at her hair
Whipping atop the parapets,
I thought there should be fireworks
With children and veterans on parade in sunshine,
But it has been so long,
And now the college in the oldest city
Is full of dead girls
Though I am still alive.

Robert Rorabeck

Thought In Their Bones

Pains in an organ, open to the trees,
Exposed to the sun:
Cadavers of little boys bathing in the shadows
Of school buses:
Words resurrected off their mollusks tongues,
While all the pretty girls like blue jays
Ate their lunches of Nectars and other boys,
And then went straight out into the sheer field,
Like kites stuck to the sweet whispers of what they Could find there:
The ants marched underneath them, their little ant
Hearts beating like drums- the suns stroking them
Like cats:
They marched on the straight edge, the alligators
Watching them without a thought in their bones.

Robert Rorabeck

Thoughts Of A Dearly Innocent World

Out in the pastures the knees of felines and antelope
Are knocking hard,
And the cars are getting washed by homeless knuckles:
Where the fruit trees basked filled with knowledge and Sleeping gentlemen;
And your house is right down there between the graveyard
And the supermarket:
And that is where you make love, and I can find you rinsing
Your hair and smiling through the transoms which
No longer reflect into me thoughts of a dearly innocent world.

Robert Rorabeck

Thoughts Of Cotton Candy And Pin-Up Girls

Colorful lightbulbs
Decorate the footpaths and the castles
Of the Mexicans-
And a river runs through the Center
Filled with paper boats
That happen to be
Love letters burning-
Burning-
The displaced rainbow trout
Stare up to-
As the clouds promise rain
With green horses drawing silver wagons
Filled with thoughts of cotton candy
And pin-up girls.

Robert Rorabeck

Thoughts Which Cannot Be Explained

They flow in these blues:
The thoughts which mountains have,
The dazed carnivores—
The way I looked at you
Across the rooms,
The great basins and wombs
Of glacial tears
The flower shops
The bees stumble through—
I stepped on your ring finger
Like a root
Growing over the carpet in some classroom—
These things I've never had,
Thoughts which cannot be explained
In the blink of an eye
As you walked away.

Robert Rorabeck

Thousand Flavors Of Housewife

Banished from the court of her cherished liquor,
I forget to look for anything beautiful,
I see the backside of my mother going into the Other room reflected on the door overlooking
The end of all things-
I start out with a sack over my shoulder meaning to Steal a thousand flavors of housewives,
But I only know a few things to whistle,
Even a fewer words: I have a repulsive novel,
A dog with bad farts, and a sister of serpents and scales;
But she is not real.
The girl is real outside my sold house and down a ways.
She's been waiting for me beside the fire- I shouldn't Think that she likes to roller skate,
Because it bugs her when I do; but I still think it, and I
Don't come and she falls in love with the closest of men,
And I take to new neighborhoods tongue in cheek,
The sky flashing like a clock out of whack-
The housewives steam out of their cracks; and I put my Tongue in their warm pets- We move with the traffic
And collect at the end of the highway they were smart enough
To lead down to the tide, because that's where everything
Not kept inside goes: we go there.
We go over the flea market, not stopping even to relieve ourselves.
I speak my four words and they unbundled and disrobe.
Yes, in fact, they fall away like children, weeping; they all get
Their own species at the end of the work day,
They never call out they are so happy, they swing in the waves,
And I have never seen anything so happy,
No matter which way they left,
And I will never see anything so happy again.

Robert Rorabeck

Thousand Songs

How are you while you are not imagining me:
There you are with husband and children after the ferris
Wheels are taken down,
And my wife is in the bathroom where you used to Fix your hair after we made love,
And the sports of winter are over,
And you are up there with those horses after
I have supposed a thousand songs for you—
Now he lays his brown body across the apiary that you
Once lost to me—
And your children coo indoors having no clue of How you once shared every bit of nothing with me.

Robert Rorabeck

Three Children Prompting Death

Three children prompting death- skipped school
Together to look into your eyes,
And you just smiled as if you didn't believe in death,
And the ice-cream man didn't come-
The air-plants didn't bloom- The liquor was watered
Down,
And the swing-set didn't arc high enough for any
Of the children to tickle papa's feet:
And I laid out somewhere at the bottom of Michigan
Listening to my great-uncle water-ski,
His powerboat making the noise I would like you to Make if I could pull your motor,
Put my tongue to your pistil and steal what is necessary
For a florist shop to survive;
But I still have both of my legs, and even scarred the pain
Is not great enough to start a fire from fiddling sticks:
Yes, the star falls, the planes die,
The UFOs pick up strange hitchhikers, but it is yet not Enough to realize the bloom of the cactus flower,
The strange ornithologies my father whispered last in my Ear as he took up his walking stick and struck out on Your trail, hoping to prove the sweet adulteries which Were never for sale in any store in his neighborhood;
And even then your eyes turned away,
Gesticulating long-lashed upon other men who sat like kings
In other hemispheres even as they too turned away.

Robert Rorabeck

Three Green Lies

Lost in the woods,
Three young girls make love,

Topless under the cypress
Flesh brushed by the do nothing wind
Which rustles amidst the forest, as If checking for loose change

As their fingers play posies,
Ringing around one another's rosies

Until the green man comes
With his cabbage-green guns
And chases them
Over the opal hills,

The wind picking up everything
They dropp to take back home, to vend
At the pawnshop.

They jog all the way downtown
To the cafes on the promenade,
Where they settle their blue pills
With tall glasses of beer and pink lemonade.

Then they are nice young girls,
With good postures and clean panties—
They have apple green cheeks which bunch
Up when they eat like sacks full of goods,
Swinging brightly from their eyes,

Here they wink and nudge,
And there are little pinwheels of pure delights
At the corners of their upturning lips
And smiling eyes

As the young boys go by,
Who they count, 2by2 and when they're Really lucky, 2by4, with pouts in their

Pockets, wanting just one more to stay,
To brush each of their thighs in hidden
Turns under the table, like charades for
The hard of hearing.

Here, in the purple city, where
All the girls look nice,
And half look pretty.

On the sidewalk,
Where the sun gets drunk,
And colors his love blushing,
The play of stoplights through the alders,
To the nuzzle of a grizzly bear....

I try and remember her in
My bed, her lips pressed
To my forehead, like a soft gun
She used to shoot at me with Gasoline and bottle-rockets,

Pure fun

Jovially,
She shot out my eye

From the window at the back of the bar,
The whole world starts out and keeps going
On like a tunnel down the walk.

Here there are the 3 girls still drinking beer
And lemonade, beginning to look at each other Like sly foxes, their foreheads warming to that Recent dream in the forest,

And their one poor boy, begins to look for a 2by4,
Now that they are playing together again,
His fingers have nothing to do.

And the green man, stooped around the corner,
Smoking a tree branch as he counts his bullets—
3 bullets shot into green flies,

The thrifty wind picks up, before letting them
By,

And I'm by myself, on the other side of the room,
Because she's done blowing her smoke into me,
And I have nothing else to do.

Robert Rorabeck

Three Legged Horse

I put up these broken things as decorations
For relatives I haven't seen before just flown in:
These are mute hyperboles on a television nobody
Is watching, but I just bought it, and I love it:
These are my sad persuasions to the middle-class
Saints, asking them to shake off their various staples
Of pietas and stigmata and come in! come in!
Because they are the very ones I've been looking for,
And I have a mermaid captured in the bathtub
I've been happily torturing to get a name for,
And we can talk and have sex
And hors d'oeuvres and look out into the back Yard where the dogs are burying their bones as the Foreground of a terrific pastel train wreck. We ask each other
About the weather to stave off salesmen, and the guilt
Of our knowledge that is everyman's inheritance, and our impotence in Comparison to each suave dancer out on the floor; but with all this Business, and the successful initiation of foreplay and Ennui, I find myself turning the world into a tank of Glass, farmers gossiping outside the four walls that we wear.
Like a ship turning undecided at sea, and then the entire house is a giant
Lung of the whale which has swallowed my imagination
For so long, and now that it is mine I can sit back and Say I am published, but it isn't very good. When the knock
Comes to the door, only the curious persuasion of my dinner
Guests will cause me to answer it; but instead I will leave
The uninvited guess to them, and head up stairs to my more
Saturated bed: caressing each of her lulls, her lips my carnal prayers Answered,
Asking for nothing more.

Robert Rorabeck

Through

Dissolving through the nocturnes,
I sing another song for the skeletons—as I try to make Believe
That my last mused loved me—knowing that it cannot
Be so:
Wanting to make a muse out of my wife,
Even though she lives on the other side of the earth
In an apartment I am too young to attend—
Knowing it is too hopeful to be a possibility—
Try to forgive myself—
A blind man walking into the shadows—
Who has tried to repossess a god so many times—
Who houses become smaller and smaller—
And the chartreuse busses that return to him that
Much larger—and larger:
These are the monsters that cannot be defeated—
These are the beams of sunlight that invade my dreams—
As you pretend to last forever—
Basking in the forts of the heavens that can only pretend
To be what they seem.

Robert Rorabeck

Through A Lonely Orange Tree

Every morning's light the fingers on the strings of A marionette that took a driving test
And passed, and now goes to work and drinks and gossips
At the water fountain with other marionettes
That bat wooden eyelashes and bob wooden heads-
And are sometimes taken across the ferts
Of plastic Indians to see the blue gills gulping green mildew
In the gutter- and the sunlight lifts a finger across
A lily, and it turns like a dial in the water Until someone of them is finally married- as in their House, their children sleep,
The rains kiss the frogs- and the cloths are cleaned and Dried out in the carport freckled by moonlight
Through a lonely orange tree.

Robert Rorabeck

Through All Of The Churches In Their Great Divides

The people are going back inside and I have a family
Who isn't really here:
I suppose that we can look through all of the churches in their Great divides,
Or we can look through the evidence of our blue bed sheets:
Alma, you were right here-
And what was there that was figured out: that you didn't love me,
And the rain clouds built such a sad and stodgy kingdom straight
Up to the doors of guilt
Where our better brothers were made all of gold,
And we had to lay quiet and listen to all the boring stories that they Paid to be told.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Another Daylight

You're all bastards:
Go play baseball underneath those witches
And get hard-ons:
The moon pulls on your Johnny's
And it feels
All right,
In the movie theatre with your girlfriend:
Or at home
In your bedroom in your wet dreams:
But you girls:
Beautiful pearls spilled out onto the orchard's
Floor,
You are the favorites of my classes:
And you can last so long-
Immortal beauty of your legs and breasts:
And I can write about you forever,
Underneath the lampposts and
The moon,
After the churches have spilled out on Sundays-
And the wines have been drunken for
The Eucharist
And the bees are all fat upon their sugar daddy flowers:
All fat and holding hands up in heaven,
While my muse has gone to do the Laundromat
To do her familiar clothes
Through another daylight where all of heaven flowers.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Each And Every Day

The birds seem to wonder about song,
Chattering through the train tracks in the trees:
Where, oh where is Vachel Lindsay,
With my fat and luscious hibiscus all stopped up in its Room,
And science class just a memory- a way to get out of Here:
Outside my window the green smoke of a fishtail palm,
A house for chameleons the size of churchyard cats and Dogs,
The roaring of light through the sun-washed fronds:
And the Virgin of Guadalupe in a grotto against my left ear
Who I pray to for Alma:
To her for Alma I pray, while the cars leave for all of
Their destinations
Through each and every day.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Every Season

The heavenly body in its burning valleys,
Tenebrous over the molting corpses,
Uncorking bouquets of ivory cenotaphs-
Something of the glorious, conquering scene
Like a commercial of centipedal truth:
That woman, a spider with the flagella of wildflowers
Looking down, inspecting with her unicorn,
And her Cyclops- I want her to take the meat right off
Of me, so that I might transform from the venal,
The presumptive lover-boy to a thing rich in her grasses,
In her wild barley- something snug and quilted by Her sisterhood of pleased roots:

There you see,
My unrequited love comes along the disinterested path,
Passes over me with the smells and ululations of Her fracturing monument- a pinprick of infinity, of course,
Where I lay sated and quill, nothing more of society,
Altogether moral, resplendent;
A rosy anemone with a wired jaw,
And she has marked me in a blue catacomb with golden
Thread,
And I can go on forever here now that her daughter has Crossed with her living void, with the good luck and Flatulence of her sing
Children:
And I am anonymously hers and pass as a hidden gift to Her along through every season.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Her Clefts

Ribbons in the sea, what will you do-
Now there is a fabulous holocaust,
As you come down from the mountain,
Losing your candle wax on the rocks- going forever
According to the way she does,
Sleeping in her midnight busses, underneath the Armpits of marionettes,
Or inside a dark forest that never stops to linger
For its knights-
Filled with witches underneath the seething stars,
Keeping wolves for pets
Who melt the snow to get to the wild nurseries
Before the foxes
To eat the things that grow- underneath the spindles
Of her sorority,
And through her clefts which tend to lose a Person,
Especially a man who falls too deeply in love with her.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Its Supposed Rings

Jubilance that is undone nearer the unrecorded surface of The lake:
Another day is taken away from the mouths that are already Underground—and in their long and slender
And tin-footed homes
Find a way to rest underneath the plastic roses—
And the sun molests them at the cheeks—
The rivers bend but only accordingly,
As the traffic flashes at the geometry of its butchery:
Long slow flashes,
Like Morris code telling of the missteps that can never Be behaved:
The justice of her home in an apiary that no longer
Produces anything sweetly—
But rides a pace until clawing its way indoors
And then stutters around the thresh-holds of housewives:
Where I have seen images of you—brilliant if destroyed
Kaleidoscope of inferior sorority -
As you sleep walk around your bed what must be a thousand Times like a blind tiger, tamed,
Trying to find a way through its supposed rings.

Robert Rorabeck

Through My Daylong Work

Pigment of another god,
Mexican beer and fireworks:
The sun slips through
The day,
And Joe shows me how it works;
And every woman has different eyes,
Like the windows into her bosom,
But they all seem to keep to a certain
Time,
Creaking in the sloughs,
And certainly gathering to shop in the Store-green estuaries.
They never loiter,
And they never have nothing to say;
And you are one of these ducks
Crossbred with an airplane,
You got further up,
Above my head and out of my league,
A snow crystal burning on gasoline,
Dirty from another tongue:
Joe knows how you work;
He pulls the string and you dance like
The sun's marionette,
Never with nothing to say,
Like pale celery crenulated from the Muck bottoms of Holland;
But no matter how many times that Old pale blue eyed man shows me,
He was divorced and his son
Drowned in a Michigan river or somewhere,
And now he never truly has the spirit
Of a magnificent conductor,
So I can never seem to get it right,
My job to control your toy species mucking about
All bosomy and certainly not nocturnal
Through my daylong work.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Oh So Many Ways

I can hardly taste the liquor
Coming from my mother's breast,
Like an Easter basket,
Or a hard boiled egg,
And I am wearing a gray suit, so it is Hard to tell how old I am:
I might be twelve, I might very well be
An old man,
But I will always know how to ride a
Bicycle,
Because once you learn it's like sex,
And the air is so fine cutting back and forth
Across your neighborhood of skill
That you can hardly remember where you
Come from,
Where you began,
And the sea is just awakening like a housewife,
Her Grecian bosom dun and fertile
Slipping from her petty coat:
She could be the next president with her second Day eye-makeup:
She could really care less with all that she's Gotten,
Even though she's forgotten how satisfied she Really is,
And does not know that I have tried approaching
Her through oh so many ways.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Stained-Glass

They keep their flights- and enamored to their shoulders,
The airplanes seer,
Pretending they are goddesses descending into an orchard-
But they only know one or two words,
And the world gets brighter as they climb down
Until the waves of the newly blessed ocean calm down
And can be petted by tourists-
So they understand that the rest of the world is round
And made to be beautiful,
And their hearts beat like gossiping hummingbirds
Through stained-glass.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Aluminum Sea

Sun set itself through the aluminum sea—
Paper and toy angels dancing
Through a midsummer's shopping mall
While my wife slept—
The colleges green but empty, friends
Evaporated—
And the sad look in your eyes, like a caged
Animal burned to the ground—
Beautiful flowers made to kneel by
The rain—a baby kicking in a pregnant
Mother on the Titanic—or through whatever
Beautiful justice brings the night,
When the bats come singing to blind women—
And the fox dreams of kissing the grapes one
More time.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Anonymity Of The Loams

Proud filters of cowboys and Boyscouts moving the herds and mowing the yards,
Crushing scuppernongs into wine,
And watching the terrapin disappear, retracting their Senses into a mossy rouse,
The cormorants down the rows from them like mailboxes
At the hair lips of caesuras,
As the gladness of overeager foams- and the girls
Ride the ponies far back into the storage rooms of Orchards until they find each other kissing
Themselves and spilling over the Variegated paper cuts that lay corrugated like nourishing
Crops upon which the fat and sated bellies of rattlesnakes
Make indistinguishable patterns,
As if the spilling of discarded foreskins or weathervanes
Through the anonymity of the loams.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Beautiful Time

I have new ways of being dismissive, of laying out
Long again
Yawning in the yard over which the waves of Airplanes are mowing:
I have unto myself new ways to believe again,
While all of this was just the usual ventures,
Passing through the casual hours in the limelight of Postumous cathedrals:
The hummingbirds are croaking, and their feet are sore.
And while it all has turned out,
It has all turned out burning on the floor, and it all seems to Be a venture in the strange trees in which the monsters are Pronouncing,
Looking for something that must seem beautiful against
The streets of space shuttles:
While then all it was, the lost adventures of housewives:
Why, then- that was all it was,
While they were all dancing shoeless around the dump
Truck, singing their songs:
Why, then, this was their song- and I still seem to pretend
To be singing:
Why, then, this is just another song, repeating as a heartbeat
As the night proceeds, and the new children come into Her, crossing their own hearts,
And swinging into her own cradle while they suck their Thumbs while her midnights proceed through the Beautiful time.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Darkly Lactating Combs Of My Night

The rains have a good time falling down,
And I have bought a house and this month is My birthday.
Right now I am still homeless with a cup of store
Brand rum between my legs
And my mother bending herself in the bathroom
Next door
While all of the night is outside curling up against
The broadways of canals,
The fleeted souls jumping the trains and abutments
Over the running lips of waves:
And it gets colder the further up you go, but the More gods you see anyway:
I will soon be moving into a warm cottage, and will not Have to mind all the teachers who accused me
Of plagiarism:
Even the Riviera Beach Police Department will be Publishing me for the crimes I have helped to solve:
And now my mother is indoors again,
And I can feel the throbbing of the moon's penumbra
Against these walls,
Repeating like another two lovers with their backs
Pressed against the fire hydrants all ready and super salient
Through the darkly lactating combs of my night.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Forest

Through the forest there is a path which the ax-man
Laid-
So you could come to town, to look so fetching on
You way through the Sad wilderness
For all of the wolves lounging in the shadows:
And you were skipping underneath a castle,
And you were ranging underneath a star
Whilst the sea curled and curled
And you imagined your way to her- dressed all in Red, you somehow emerged from the wilderness
Only to be eaten by the very one whom you thought
Was safe to be your own.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Forests Of The Sweetest Youngest Day

Alma- you are the soul of the muse:
You are whatever she has burning like a pearl or a lucky
Marble down deep in her bosom,
And even if you never come I will cherish you, because you are
The first inkling of what I have come to reason:
You are the beautiful mother protecting her young, while
All of the cars drive by at night,
And the airplanes leap, while the birds preen so prettily through
The yards of dens:
And I have lived another eight years than you, and I think all of the Empty mailboxes salivating for your rich brown skin:
How far back does it go, through the forests where the grandmothers
Of mariposas go to expire:
I loved you like a word on the wire, and you said it was a lie;
But if it was a lie, Alma- it was one that can never die, but spread
Like wildfire riding ungilded stallions fast across the land,
Their hoofs stamping on the green cloths whose virgin appeared our Superman;
And I love you, Alma, like the first light in the sky; and if I don't Love you, the airplanes will go to sleep in the sea,
And the songs that lay stolen from my ribs will yet go unsung:
But if I love you, then let us both hold hands and go into a country
Populated by youth- Where death is a lie,
And your eyes shine the movies of undeniable truth
For the parking lots of sweet young boys amidst which I lay,
And pray to you forever through the forests of the sweetest youngest day.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Grass

I cannot sleep: The day is mean against
My body:
I think of her, and the hours troop like snails:
Where are they going but to other
Grandmothers and grandfathers;
They are curling up the teak of her cherished
Heirlooms that are moving
Gallantly with her soft love: She is breathing his Name into his imperfect ear,
And he is having her over and over while the Seas make love
And the very young rattlesnakes go galloping
Through the grass.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Growing Afternoon

Almost three in Arizona,
And the sun goes here steadily and dry
Where used to flow a Precambrian sea,
Where ancient lips plucked thoughtlessly,
And nuzzled in the brine: Now there are Wondrous houses in the coral nooks,
And people in them, which is almost a miracle,
And people in the sky as well, and stewardesses
Serving them expensive liquor in plastic cups
So the ice doesn't wake up infants sated from A mother's breast. They pass over me and all of The uncounted forest, like diamond tree frogs
Leaping from the sun's branches;
And I know that I could love any of them, if They were to come down in some predestined fireball,
I would step outside and catch her as she fell just like Alice down a wishing well, and invite her inside for Holidays, through those doors which shrink and Change with the seasons and with cuckoldry.
If we both sat unquestionably still, after I served
Her the drink of her choice, then out in the yard we might Say to have seen old loved ones playing recklessly
In the fleeting gowns of leaves, but that would be our Choice; and gathering our strength, after what might Be perceived as an uncountable repose, we would toast
Each other and think up new jobs, and watch the other People strangely leaping through the cloudless sky,
And wonder thanklessly why they should go to and fro
In their gleeful commerce. Then, after the fireworks,
And the watermelons and tearful glances over the Next-door neighbor's wall, we would watch the waterfall
All the way down into the pregnant belly of the valley,
Where all the maidens bath nakedly with thieves and salt miners,
And then to each other again, as a man comes to a woman
After a long day of burdens, reach across the impassable
Bodies and remember how in that day we fell into each Others arms through the correlations by which divine Providence perambulated through the growing afternoon.

Through The Hearts Of Her Fair

I spend a day without loneliness,
And I can finally be comfortable with someone who Can take me away,
Even though I go to the movies and theatre hop in
The afternoon:
It was supposed to rain, but it doesn't rain, and that is The happiest consistency:
I have miss planted flowers in my shade, who need
The sun;
And other things that burn that way: the airplanes leap
At the starting gun,
And stewardesses fair through the zephyrs of late summer
Air,
Even though I am going to bed without a Christmas tree.
Tomorrow I will get up early and buy Cuban coffee
And Danishes,
And take them straight to where Alma, my soul lives,
In the midways beating through the hearts of her fair.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Heavenly Fires

It happened upon occasions that I was not
Here,
But I saw your grandmother out in her yard
Doing something with it:
She was barely dressed; and you see,
The cars are driving, driving
Across the interstate beside her. Soon she will
Be gone, sunken like the cordless
Reptiles beneath the billboards-
Sunken beneath the discarded mattresses,
And the burned out structures;
And the cars will still be driving, and I wonder
If you shall ever find a lock of her ashen
Hair at a flea market- I wonder if you will Ever hold another trinket of her
In your hand again, while the fruit is sold
In the circus,
And the sun leaps through the heavenly fires.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Hours Behind The Day

I want to be with you: I don't want to lie alone
Anymore upon the grass,
Watching the little gems of grasshoppers and cicadas leave their Old skins for the woods,
Watching to the way the southward angels fall, all hipped
From their class,
Like the failed sculptures of the students of blown glass:
Beautiful, if destroyed and falling that way, picking up speed
And being adulterous,
Coming to rest in the backyards of the missing philanthropists
Head first and during the hours of school;
I skip out to find you in the sunning weeds: I still want you for
A wife:
And I dream, and spell away naked and on my back,
Waiting for you to fall again through the hours behind the day.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Injustices Of Crepuscule

One child yelling in the court of
A scattering room- mother and father gone to Oblivion,
Two sisters both with boyfriends across the Canal:
Now the only sport is touching itself underneath the Ceiling fan,
Motes of plastic toys and witches in the yard,
The ants marching underneath her skirts:
The sugar cane is burning paper airplanes and Snowflakes.
The firecrackers have gone to oblivion- and the heavens
Diadem themselves through the injustices of Crepuscule, another day's zoetrope
Turning in common place around the mailboxes
That will have to watch the children get up again
And go to school.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Nocturnes

Dissolving through the nocturnes,
I sing another song for the skeletons—as I try to make Believe
That my last mused loved me—knowing that it cannot
Be so:
Wanting to make a muse out of my wife,
Even though she lives on the other side of the earth
In an apartment I am too young to attend—
Knowing it is too hopeful to be a possibility—
Try to forgive myself—
A blind man walking into the shadows—
Who has tried to repossess a god so many times—
Who houses become smaller and smaller—
And the chartreuse busses that return to him that
Much larger—and larger:
These are the monsters that cannot be defeated—
These are the beams of sunlight that invade my dreams—
As you pretend to last forever—
Basking in the forts of the heavens that can only pretend
To be what they seem.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Offerings Of His Day

Cave of envelopes in your dreams-
I've been sleeping for a while in the folding spaces—
Promises of whispers,
Lips of butterflies—
Rains descend over the cities of the cliff's side,
And we sell fireworks from the roadsides of Mars where Christmas trees grow
As tall as roofs,
And the men you love float about like snowflakes
Stuck in mascara—
And the little children who fall down from them,
Scabbing their knees on presents of Roller skates and bicycles
Think they see arrow heads and Indian nickels
In the open markets of the naked slopes—
Where one flower blooms at A time and the sun holds his hand out
Trying to panhandle through the offerings of his day.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Orange Groves

Unequaled vision of this pretty deity
To whom I rode my bicycle towards without remember
What notebook I left her number in:
There she is at the head of the class, giving strange
Configurations underneath the halogens:
While outside, the cars sit like a cathedral of Arrows
Underneath the stain glass noontime, and I try to Pick out the bouquet of the girls I love,
Resting in the intersections of my mind-
There she is, receding over the everglades, even
As I drive home, and I give her a good recommendation
Through my spirits, as my words linger like ash
Dripping onto her amber lips- she remains
My muse- muse of Guerrero Mexico,
Muse of fireworks and scars:
Of lightning and of all the billfolds of the petty
White men:
Kneeling underneath the virgin in my tiniest foyer,
I pray to you and make believe that you can even Feel me now- lingering through the orange groves
Of my spirit,
As the waves caress the Anglicism of the everglades,
Lingering nearer, and then departing-
The way housewives first determining the one whom They love before fleeing to their homes.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Pines

Downed by the desires of crimes
That they know will never fit:
The airplanes and their wives sleeping low,
Gliding and making love
Just as quiet as children waiting for sugar plums
As the world reciprocates with itself,
Seeming to come out into the park
Where all of the trees are opening, seeming for Awhile to winnow the greenery of their Souls-
And my true love is there, and she is down:
Axioms of light in a carnival that can be blown by The wind,
A flag of single minded patriotism in her hair,
A cul-de-sac that can bare children
Skipping school, fluctuating amidst the allocations of Play-
For awhile make believe, as the airplanes that they Know whisper through the trees,
Before touching down, their heartbeats drumming softly
Through the pines.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Quiet Order Of These Prayers

Wonderfully alone, without any sort of father,
And just looking at the trees, their slender throats Basking under the hidden lights- They go up and Up well trimmed, patient in their dances before
The red bricks of well inebriated sororities:
How I used to love her under here, I did- Like a child,
Tipping over my chairs and gin, thinking it was something else,
Six years ago, a house floating on the waves with so many Mothers lost in their kitchens, and airplanes far away
On the other side of slow going canals:
Oh, I am going to find her again, and I'm going
To pay for it by the Order of Jesus- all my ancient sins
On a collection plate whispered beneath those unturning
Boughs; They will wait and see how I come and gossip
About me all alone, like a very lonely wedding procession, Trouble on my brow; neither this or that, or any sort of Profession, but the shadows the dark ink of my work,
And I will be thinking about a nocturnal lover even while She inhabits the horizon's far distance, and turns over against Him in their well proportioned bed,
Their shed rind licked by the silver teeth of waves;
She spends her time remembering his name
And saying so, never realizing how I inhabit her through
The quiet order of these prayers.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Space Of Unicorns

I was staring through the space of unicorns
And listening to the captivated sea
Just before I was just about ready to fall asleep;
And I remembered Alma's hair tumbling through the Blue sheets,
And I was there like a ship making love to a
Mermaid:
There were things that our bodies said, and gave While the unions poured their choruses underneath the Rain clouds
That could take on any shape and be so proud of Themselves,
And how they covered the memories of our truancy:
How I suddenly began to live again this sweet afternoon
In Alma's arms, as the waves
Came with my breathing, and my swearing that I Wanted to be with her when she was a grandmother
Until she broke away once again over the fences,
Sounding her opulence and pointing her horn toward
The sun.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Stained Illusions

Lamppost of blue hallucinations- for Underneath there, in the street, in a
Cornucopia of penumbras cast
From the church- lies your sisters- they
Are done up like pretty marionettes,
And the oldest one is learning to drive-
In fact she drives everywhere,
Upriver and down river-
But there are no more flowers in their vases,
Nor songs in her heart,
And the fruit market you work in,
And sometimes have to sell your soul,
Is empty- and the paper avenues have gotten Wet in the mouths of dogs,
But sometimes you still know how well
I cry for you- and through the stained illusions
You have dreamed, I pledge to try and Believe that you also dream of me.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Surf

Made of clairvoyant tattoos in the bitter-hearted forest,
As this way all of the well transvested knight run,
Pooling their numbers,
Blue and purple hearted 'as the waves foam and fumble,
Until the last of them is wounded and heartbroken upon the steps
Of the forest,
One time lover of the sea 'He goes down into her, tip-toeing:
And she beckons him, open throated,
Throwing her bosoms at his chest,
Never thinking of the times we had together 'as the sun burns
His acolytes through the surf, wishing but once that he had a single one
Of her priorities 'as she sings to them, wishing to become surer
Towards her 'so they swim, salty-throated 'echoing men from their Abandoned ships 'and she catches them and knots them
And gives them all of the weeks of the sea to amend their love
For her 'smiling as she does all the time at me.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Throats Of The Mountains

Womb of cards and brick-a-brack
And all of the shoulder's happening—
Not in the busied amphitheatre,
But in the little city ensconced beneath the Pine trees,
Where I want to return to,
Like some post pubescent rebirth:
My sisters saw you even before
You were alive,
And were forced
To relive you
So many times
While my father was to teach them everything
That they would ever happen
To know,
Until one or two of them would die with Every happenstance or pleasure,
Pressed like the clouds
To their ever coyote lips,
And while this is—or was happening—we Sway back again,
Dream and day dream of primary numbers,
Of rainbows that happen in the interludes of Musicals,
Until nothing else has to exist anymore,
And we don't have to pray to Jesus anymore
For the safety of our unborn children—
We just have to continue writing these poems
To construct some kind of transcendental door way—
As by the reconstruction of our own mind,
They will infinitely let us into heaven,
And we can color by number the clouds
That happen to drift over our own cradles
On Christmas—
As if it was we, ourselves, who were attending the Birth of Christ—
And not just hoping to make love to his own
Mother, or misstep her own image for
The sake of our muses—

Anyways, it doesn't matter—
Our first born was born without incident,
And now we have our foot in the door way—
If we write any more tonight or this morning
We know it is only in hallucination,
For even the doll houses lined up in infinite rows,
Choreographed to correspond with sorority row—do not Give us the infinite right of entry,
But still we enter,
If just to show our first born's eyes eyes with to
The chandeliers of the worlds he must have been born from—
While the bats nip at the night
Like the first tastes of the wine glass from blind man—
And we don't have to settle anymore,
Just with this constant thing we seem to be displaying Just like the monsters—but up in the middle of the State you don't have to be aware,
You can go straight to your bedroom—
And to your bedroom to sleep for a million odd steps
Of the dinosaurs—
Infinitely uncountable beneath the spacemen until finally
They can pretend to dream of going to sleep with somebody else—
And the bodies coalesce with the advertisements of The movie theatres—
And somebody else moves into the places of the happenstances
Of their gardens, and they move along,
Slowly, perpetually in motions,
Like cadavers perpetually being pushed down by Avalanches through the throats of the mountains.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Transoms

The suckers field their catastrophes through the Disorganized space of baseball diamonds and birthday cakes;
And the land moves and you can feel it move:
I wonder how the birds feel it move, but they feel it;
And parks in spring wake up in bloom just as you touch
Yourself surfacing from sleep in your room-
Everybody needs a body as they disembark through the darkly
Fetching indentations of the sea:
They go sloughing through the transoms; they can't remember me.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Warm Day

There is a viper in the tall grass
Slithering toward her pink
Arched-a@s.
While the sun in his high house,
Beams down on a dead field-mouse.
The poet spies from up in the tall tree,
The gathering agents of God's epiphany.
The lady is licking her lunch
From her plump fingers,
As her husband is concentrating
On adding figures.
Upon the lake glistening like a mirror
Comes the timid sailboat of two youthful lovers.
The young lady arches her a@s
All the higher,
So God and the serpent soon conspire.
The poet in his tree-house is already
Sleeping
Through the warm day the clouds go unweeping.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Weepless Boughs

Sabbaticals of nothing- the world slips around in a
A high fever,
Ostriches and unicorns sweat off their spells, and uniform
Airplanes seem to float
While I lay on my back and wonder if I could touch each one,
Like bottle rockets in a confection of the very air:
And around all of that is the sea,
And the girls I've lost, and then when I am hungry and feeling
Alone and far away
There seems to be the hope of ships, each one of them immolating
In the night,
Their banners rippling like leaps of phosphorous over the sad
Currents,
Or I suppose that it happens that way while I lay on my back
And moan my unintelligible expressions up through the Weepless boughs,
And the world turns around, devouring itself.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Windows Of Our Life's House

I lie all day in bed and think that maybe it is over,
That a beautiful storm will never pass:
Alma, I will stop drinking for you, and I will write my poetry
For you sober,
But I will no longer describe to the emptiest rooms what You choose to do-
And I only put your name into my poems, Alma, hoping that You will find them:
I put your name into my poems as if it were a lighthouse
And I was its drowning sailor:
I just want your body breathing its soul into my rooms, filling up
My needing tankards,
For your eyes to brush across the walls like a painter's brooms:
For your soft wishes to linger through the consequences
Of so many afternoons
Until you are a grandmother, Alma: and I can sit beside you
And watch your body's zoetrope, spinning like the zenith of Undeserved amusement,
And when we are underneath the unending palm trees, so tall and Fine,
My travels will flutter the sweet distance to your body,
And the joy I felt would play with our children and theirs as well,
Cloistered like golden butterflies,
Laughing like the sunlight that echoes and swirls through the windows
Of our life's house.

Robert Rorabeck

Through The Zephyrs And Pigmies

I love you and I want your body with me in bed:
I want our toes to crochet together, while your hair is a
Shadowy red;
And never mind that I have ever loved a white skinned Indian
From Gainesville;
Her body is just like any other body; so pierced, but it cannot feel;
It can laugh with its tracks of ancestors, but it cannot feel,
Like a snowflake surely melts on the grill and the windowsill.
And they are taking the more sexier swing sets away,
But today is my tomorrow, and tomorrow is your birthday;
And I gave you wings just so I could touch them, and I got a gun
I stole from my father just so I wouldn't have to be afraid on your Tresses;
And even while I hear the zippers of the deepest graveyards in all of America, my cheek still itches as it thinks of thee:
Alma, Alma, body in the cul-de-sacs of Spain, everyday a Christmas
That is un-American- I love your states of America, and I touch Myself just as I wish that you would put me in your mouth
While the dogs leap and the cats go under the rain clouds and my mother
Takes her pills and then all of the show goes to sleep with one another's Lovers, and our shoes are tired but jubilant, and you choose me for The night, just as I choose you:
Alma, Alma: oh how I surely choose you: tonight and every other night
Through the zephyrs and pigmies of all that is our new Spain.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Those Infinite Heavens

Losing days as snakes shed skin,
Figuring out the chinks in the gardens of love,
And Mary saw a star in the sky after the movie,
Which I figured was an angel,
Because my belief in you is so strong that I can believe Anything,
And count on the many kisses you have to give to me,
Even though you have two children almost weebegone in the Student parking lot of the university you will never Attend,
But the waves still come in their bands of metamorphosis:
See how they commonly change,
Roiling in the strange dress of the sea; and now I almost said
That I loved you on the page of this truck stop:
I almost said something beautiful until I forgot my letters
Of regret in the empty spaces of despondent romances
That take up all of their time through those infinite heavens.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Your Melting Snow

I have never been as perfectly proportioned
As the animals that you know,
But I can drink liquor and I can grow
Like wet castles
Whose parapets are like magpies stealing pomegranates
Through your melting snow.

Robert Rorabeck

Through Your Unspeaking Roof

In your days of making friends I don't suppose you counted
On how many hands you'd have to hold,
Your eyes as brown as a politician's sun, until the night slipping
Over the gold-dog world and taking away all of Its fireworks and fanfares,
And all of the lights that we were so lucky to breathe during the Day;
And returning you to him, dolled into the playgrounds of your Bedroom where I can only guess of what he does there every night to
You,
Brown-silver as the moon inside your window, even while I slept
Inside your house, and the television made a paramour of your shadows;
And maybe five trucks slept on your little lawn,
Overgrown but fanciful, as if this was Mexico:
I could only suppose what sort of love he made to you while my Heart beat down like the hammer of a butterfly is morris code of brail
Through your unspeaking roof.

Robert Rorabeck

Throughout

As close as the nations of hummingbirds
Are to the soul of our high school—
I don't think happens to be such a sweet thing—
While the incisions are still opened:
They still seem to be miles
Away—
Astronauts orbiting the earth
Trying to kiss the sun
Marionettes on their leashes trying to
Jump and run—
And the hill is so far and wide—
And cannot even remember the nursery rhyme
That took us to this hill—
As the valley was lavished by rattlesnakes
All together or at least until up to
The footsteps of the windmill—
And then your dead mother had to pull back—
And your dead grandmother had to pull back—
And it was just you in the rain
Trying to hold the lightning—trying to keep
Base with the shadows that were disembarking
Towards the infatuations of their candle lights all
Throughout their evenings.

Robert Rorabeck

Throughout All That You've Never Had To Feel

Oh, Alma. Come with me,
And become unnaturally holy:
I will step outside and kiss your feet and say everything that There is to say about this and now
Unicorns, and now this, and all of the plumes of sciences

And the colors that they have passed: and your name is, alma,
And we have slept together and I have tasted your soul;

And now all of the world turns around like a Ferris Wheel that Isn't even real, and all of its joy seems to happen over
The infinite fields of strawberries where I guessed that We were making love,

But otherwise I couldn't
Even believe, while all of the numbers were counting themselves
And all of the numbers of themselves were gathering themselves
Up and bathing together in the rainclouds of
The rainforests that weren't even there,

And I kissed and held your hand today which I guessed wasn't even Real,
But that is what this all about, the pouting of your body
Before all of the eruptions of the penultimate summate,
While my parents are coming home again
Never minding what was had to be real;

And this is just the silent slender body shooting its way, Alma
All throughout all that you've never had to feel.

Robert Rorabeck

Throughout The Day

All off in the light of the ships that are never heard from
Again:
Wondering this way until Christmas or suicide underneath the Strange sheets of Blue ants and their queens; as the fieldtrips blow across the Mezzanines that Romeos are always figuring to climb
While the underage damsels are sleeping next to the treasure chests
During naptime;
And I don't suppose it has to finish like this, but it does;
And the vagrants go back to sleep in their avenues of Spain and Civil Wars,
Their eyes crying as their houses leek, as the serpents wind cantankerous
Until there is no longer any feeling for themselves;
And the black children sleep next to the Mexicans and the Guatemalans
In the tenements surceased next to the ghosts of my months old Self: we were still dreaming of Diana then, and living in an RV with my parents, and didn't have a house:
We didn't know Alma in the Spring of this very same year
In which, like a tourist, we have loved a many number of women,
But of which only one is still now our muse:
While Erin lives in Gainesville, and the ancient sheets of conquistadors Slip inches deeper into the limestone tenements wept into by
The curling offspring of the cypress that knew that knew them:
Who still keep a nursery of the over shed cicadas that weep themselves
Anew all throughout the day.

Robert Rorabeck

Throughout The Skies

Bodies come up and they have been singing their songs;
And I can break them down like daylight:
I can watch them curling into the very air as I hike,
And I remember the school yards and the places that I have been well into:
I can remember the girls in the playgrounds,
Like young goddesses curling their hair with their fingers:
And the bodies were yellow and springing:
They filled the voids well but coyly: They filled the voids well,
And then the bodies walk clacking with echoes down their corridors:
They walk this way like classy anchors going into the psalms of Princes and I have nothing left about me but the moribund bruises of their Prayers;
And so nothing I have ever had to say has lasted very long,
But I can still hear the cacophony of airplanes as they take apart this place
And make raucous love throughout the skies.

Robert Rorabeck

Throughout Their Evenings

As close as the nations of hummingbirds
Are to the soul of our high school—
I don't think happens to be such a sweet thing—
While the incisions are still opened:
They still seem to be miles
Away—
Astronauts orbiting the earth
Trying to kiss the sun
Marionettes on their leashes trying to
Jump and run—
And the hill is so far and wide—
And cannot even remember the nursery rhyme
That took us to this hill—
As the valley was lavished by rattlesnakes
All together or at least until up to
The footsteps of the windmill—
And then your dead mother had to pull back—
And your dead grandmother had to pull back—
And it was just you in the rain
Trying to hold the lightning—trying to keep
Base with the shadows that were disembarking
Towards the infatuations of their candle lights all
Throughout their evenings.

Robert Rorabeck

Thugs At A Bowling Alley

Levitation over a battleship—spikenard goliath
Of the sea,
Always making her rounds: the waves engulfing her
Like thugs at a bowling alley—

Robert Rorabeck

Thunderbird

I tried crying for you by the hour,
But you would not listen to me,
A next door conquistador, you awake
Bare-chested and full of rhyme
Spindled from the breakfast nooks, and
The eggs the other man has cooked for you:
You look the fool sucking in that professional
Ego, drinking the Chablis so carelessly refined,
What the television has said to tame and call you;
But my liquors make a better sport,
So much so that I would prefer crawling all around
You, the vagabond of a paramour,
And making love in the teal courts between unverified
Dreams and what I really have to say to you:
I pay no rent, but I have snuck in, and your expensive
Green space is now my home, and as I wish,
So shall I lounge about you, and smell you so,
As the sun cools your meals,
The pungent aroma reproducing bliss: your legs a shaven river
Ending in an addictive aqueduct: thus I come,
An unshaven troubadour to wrap you up
And get you done, and out the door, before your husband's Home with more expensive gifts for you,
And all he has to say and teach with the successful rewards
Such civility: And thus you curl, like escargot about his Hip, while I look in like a foundling out in the humid
Holiday, tasting the last of this salt from my lip,
Waiting until tomorrow again, to regain some more
Adulterous truancy.

Robert Rorabeck

Thundering Rains

Unicorns kindle like the virgins of green suicide:
You glide over the sight of me with the age old religious wound
In your side;
And now I will live in a house as old as a Bible, and I will Flip through pictures of you while I call you from my window:
And the children will smoke out of the chimney stacks
From the decrepit factories where they are working for Profit:
And I will give them chalk drawings at their feet like colorful
Murder;
And I will kiss the young girls' mouths just as they are coming Into age,
Just like the blooming yet illegal tributaries of sharks with strange
Conjunctions,
And I will show them my fleet of paper airplanes:
Maybe I will make them say Sharon's times like so many Hail Mary's
Even while she falls in love with another man other Than her husband once again in the soccer fields where she has Surely been playing again and once again in the deeper
And heavier thundering rains.

Robert Rorabeck

Thus Had Become Of Thee

Fireworks go to sleep like bees who Are done mouthing off,
Like wax figures who remembered finally
Who they are not,
And like dead relatives are done cremating
And have left off being scattered
To the hydra's multidirectional vanishings;
And I loved her for a week of Amnesia,
And she almost loved me until she too
Remembered what it was About her:
That she was a lake, or that she was a river;
And was always too busy with her preoccupations
Of weeping
To just love one boy- Thus setting me free,
I went to kill off the general of the dragons hoping
To forget what she never meant to mean to me;
And she fell away leaping,
All dressed up in the cataracts of her wedding,
While the airplanes continued along with their Heady leaping,
Wingspans stretched out and through the Wind whistling
Just as sweet and sappy as any old honey bee,
Never once stopping to think and consider thus had Become of thee.

Robert Rorabeck

Tickle Me To Death

We all have ass*les,
but hers' is the only one
With such pretty lips....

Robert Rorabeck

Tiffany Epiphany

Tonight I/ had an epiphany
And I wrote so many poems.
I think her name was Tiffany,
But I ain't Sherlock Holmes.

Robert Rorabeck

Tiger Cake

Perturbations in New Times Roman:

I am like a young girl, drunken on the street,
Almost perfected breasts momentarily ruined
By acne,
Wondering, momentarily drunken,
How will I get home—
But I am in Shanghai and I live on the other Side of the world.
For now, it is a beautiful place to get lost
In, but it is only because I am drunken
And lucid—

Now that I have my own family,
I don't write anymore:
I don't go down that beautiful way, anonymously:
My brother in law, a communist, just sold 10,000,000 copies of some book:
He is paid exquisitely for a Chinese: 8,000
RMB a month plus a 50,000 bonus on Chinese
New Years

(you can make almost the same working at A McDonald's in America.)

But, oh, what a beautiful world.
My father-in-law is dead, but he is following
Me; he has magical powers and has agreed
To help me raise my children.
Together we will put them into a position of Moderate wealth—
For now, he comes back every seven days
And eats the offerings of fish heads and tiger cake:
I can't blame him,
Famishing through storm-filled doorways.
Meanwhile, the world-wide economy is collapsing;

But fortunately for me, I lost my job two years ago, anyways:
I make some money at the flea-market—
Six figures, it turned out to be—

I make more money than the principle of that flea bitten high school—
The yellow eucalyptus turn their heads towards sunset:
The snow melts before it hits the ground in Shanghai,
But the pipes still freeze—

Beautiful women, drooling, look up before
They look both ways—
And this almost feels like an adventure novel
Or an epic fantasy,
I have written so little—
But tonight, tonight:
I have stolen some more booze from my mother-
In-law—
And the feeling is warm,
Like an apothecary moments before Romeo and Juliet's epiphany—

Or my wife awakening in the middle of the night,
Mouthing that she loves me,
Giving me an option just before I sky dive
And allowing Rimbaud's drunken boat to carry me away.

Robert Rorabeck

Tight Rope Walkers

I've lost the clarity of the five fingered discount:
I want to live too much in the bright hymning spokes
Of a bicycle learned to pedal for the first time:
I am turning into a white man right now, and I am
Not afraid to hum at weddings;
And the palm trees are well spindled and seem to Be drinking deeply from the pumiced roots
Of the ironed green conquistadors; now they are the Piqued speed bumps alongside the weedy borders
Of a half forgotten elementary school;
And I will not be accused of witch-craft, for a I
Have kept prayers for all my deceased house animals,
And a list of the girls who should have come over
To swim without moving, topless in the splashes of Shade wrought down for the over spilling sun:
Because the girls were too beautiful, it was impossible;
They own cake shops, and wine shops, and discount
Parlors, and had to be answering to the men who could Pay for that; and I trundled to the side without knowing
What it meant;
And so my mythology chose to fall in love with the Face of the girl who could not speak except for dancing, and took up drinking without paying for
It; and the lions in the downstreet amusement park took Up yawning because they couldn't care, though their Love digressing into laziness, their eyes wandering
Savagely over the little girls who wandered hand in hand
With little girls insouciantly safe along the predestined walks Outside that well-fed ferality, their legs still spry and Growing; though they themselves were likewise as uncomplicated
As the aerie of nimbus where the memory of failed tight rope
Walkers danced between buildings that should have existed.

Robert Rorabeck

Time

All of the contenders were still laughing whilst the sun
Was just graffiti—
And the mother of my wife told me to look up,
As her father smoked all of the cigarettes
I was forced to buy for our wedding banquet:
Sad stars—
Bright over the fairgrounds—
Turning around, menstruating over the individual Conundrums of the highways and the high schools:
It was all we had to do—
With the singing trucks selling icecream—
And another day was spilling its orgasms over the overpasses
Of her shoulders,
But she was just concerned with her children—
Like goldfish collected all together from all of the winners
Bedrooms—
Until there was gunfights and another architecture with
The paper airplanes and kites all up in the air:
And then we were moving into another impossibility
Of shadow—
And the schoolroom kept to itself—
As the fires burned like poisonous butterflies dancing all
Across the busses:
And contributing to nothing else—but the houses that they Kept in their minds—
Until their mothers found them and collected them,
Carrying all of them to their breasts
And reminding all of them that it was time.

Robert Rorabeck

Time And Another Place

Girls with the brown skin and brown eyes
Perplexing perpetually:
From the underbelly of the lactating out of doors—
Where are the tourists going once they Reach the end of the road?
Maybe the fields will melt underneath the angels of Billboards—
Maybe another story will begin from the bruised
Lips of the milk maid fallen down too many times.
Now who wants to take the trip again—
Wax elbows of the pieta in the middle of a baseball Game—the same sorrows
Stretched out of pace,
And girls in love and out of love, moving around
In a zoetrope—the wax illusions of men
Who dream to fly—
Inevitably, when they come down, the wishes from
The hot lamps of Ganymede—
And another burden in the shadows cooled
From the racetracks of another time and another place.

Robert Rorabeck

Time Crimes

Strange gifts here they are.
Some would say they don't come easy
From the shadows of the aloe,
Beside the blue carport across the sleeping canal;
Beneath the electric blankets of breathing dirt
Mommy and daddy are sleeping behind the Stringed beads,
The television is in its corner atop the Overtaken corn hamper,
And further down the white coral road
Imperfect from pot holes,
And the scattered lilacs of little flower-
Girls, kidnapped never to obtain sororities,
To feel the love of his eyes burning across some Extraordinary graveyard,
Unreachable neighbors live sawing alien lumber;
I live here, not knowing what I do, perceiving
What silence I turn in my hands better than the empiricisms
Of all the sensual armies, and that I should Use my occult knowledge to woo another girl,
Out of her place and time- Should I find her lectured by the Latin grammarians of my future,
Young legged, scatterbrained in her intermittent Virginity,
While white hot rabbits lie sleeping strewn through the Rock gardens of my mother's dusty throat,
To show her where the amphibians yet serenade,
Where the skies above the east are yet salmon
By the premiering influences of that opening light,
Where the mermaids bathe temporarily alleviated
From the leaping caesuras;
And if my words are not entirely pure,
And my temporal abductions slightly criminal,
To assure her we've started an infinite doubling that might Always come back to itself and try to hold its breath long Enough that she might metamorphose,
In to something that holds me together, like the spine going
All the way up to her eyes, for my hand to crawl intrepidly
Like the spider from its nursery rhyme,

And to her lips to drink their well, to mark them afterwards
The way some tramps carve in fence posts that everything is Good here,
That we should elope for awhile longer, mutually imposing
Our bodies to the juvenile dust,
And decide that here is a very fine place to breathe hands
Cupping what we should not see if We were both unaware; but taken together
This is very much real,
And the wind sleeps like a dozen kittens
Curled up in the aloe.

Robert Rorabeck

Time To Speak With No One

This is the time
To speak with no one
Once more,
The adversaries absconded
And drunk on the Front porch
Shouting love stories to
The sororities
Pouring out of the swamp
After the game.
Out of my left ear I
Can hear a river
Roaring down the sidewalk
Where there is
A blue woman soaring
Like an addictive moth
Around the street
Lamp on the corner of The Catholic church.
I open myself to Pronounce a word,
A sound to turn her
Gently toward me,
But she has flown into
A tiki torch and she is Burning, burning.
The party is just starting:
Gently graying salesmen are Getting drunk and Mooning,
And the strange and eerie
Boys in the living room
Are teaching bleached
Girls their tongue
And they are learning,
Learning;
Not so far to the East I
Can hear the ocean
Breathing,

Like a woman in heat
Trying to find her way
Toward me,
But there is nothing I
Would say
That could help her
Find me.

Robert Rorabeck

Time To Time

Another word grows dim in the Hobbies of the mind.
I've been playing with myself too much
To scratch her out of the earth,
Though her elbow continues to rise like
An ivory wave from the chameleon tub placed
Like a portrait up against the light-washed window
Above the train station and further on the university,
So as she cleans she can be something else too-
Something francophone and openly mysterious,
Watching the fraternities queue up holding their balls
And howling,
Never minding how the busy grass shivers by the Foreplay of the evening's wind,
Or how she must fart up there and the petit bubbles
Rise and press for a moment against her flower's mouth
Before rising up and clinging fleetingly to each breast;
Nor, how she thinks of them, like packs of wild
Dogs out in the frothing sun,
And how it must be a good trick to make them stay
And watch her from down beneath her dimpled chin, as the sun recedes swift and Forlorn like a British battleship sunk far from home, Rusting the red bricks where the old professors cough
Their knowledge;
And at that time, she feels as if she might be possessed
By her grandmother, a famous vaudeville actress, a Mature woman swaying between her eyes as if in the Cranberry dye of a bindi,
But such silliness swims away into the sullied water
Where her legs are now an even brighter opal,
But the boys remain, and she knows they will until she Towels herself and leaves the stage of windowsill,
But never does she see me reading across the tracks
In the library's forgotten enclave,
Nor do I see her, though there are rumors from Time to time.

Time To Wonder

I have a couple more experiments
Before I close up shop,
And do the grand finale by myself
With a cork and a pop:

Every time the phone rings,
I salivate like a dog,
In 30 second intervals of time,
My mind turns a little cog,

And now its doing one more line,
To satisfy the monster,
And if you can't call that's just fine,
I know you are a gangster.

But even as I'm driving across
The Navajo Reservation,
And I see the perfect sky above Ship Rock,
I can't help but think of your body's declination.

For you are moving far away
In the sleepy East,
And I am driving Route 66,
Neither man nor beast,

But somehow like a broken toy,
Rolled away from the city dump,
Sleeping in the concrete cave,
While the rain breaks its dry slump,

Where the world is unfurled like
A discount carpet,
And you are something like a dream
I only briefly met,

But that is why I turnout here,
Smiling sad and winsome,
For you could be my powdery coquet,
If I paid you your thoughtless ransom.

But for now the game is dimming,
Out on the red diamond,
The apposing teams are turning loose,
Walking away from the unbroken hymen.

Thus here is where I sit alone
And ponder,
Where you are,
I have all the time to wonder.

Robert Rorabeck

Timeless Secret

The forest is high and sad,
Where the wind cries until it is exhausted,
And the apartments are cheap
Where the men drink whose children are vampires.
They float down on the monkey-bars with
The snow,
Each as unique as an evil flower,
And the trunks split from the deepest absence of Warmth.
In the morning in the dimmest light there will Be no sports,
For all the children will sleep very hungrily,
And the mountains will watch them crowding the Somber tenements like wayward grandfathers too lit
To step inside;
But the children love each other: I used to walk
Amongst them, and dreamed into her eyes the speechless Motes of innocence before all the possible types of Theft: She was the one who changed me,
Who resurrected the unknowable remainders of time,
So she just goes on and on: perhaps another man's Wife now down in the greener valleys where there are Actual cars and flowers,
Another man's wife, a lie- But I will have always seen
Her breath clouding the icy garden,
And how her senses skated so finely permanent before
She budded and all of that she remembered
Was exposed to that weather and stolen, except for what I keep,
As the trees so barrenly justified,
A secret which does not bloom with time.

Robert Rorabeck

Tinfoil God

Silver rose in the golden sea:
The turtles who live there, knowing her spirit,
Looking up to her:
Tinfoil god sprinkled like tears from airplanes:
No longer the sport of crocodiles,
Just another song to tell their children to Put them to sleep—as we eat cotton candy and pet
Her hair, dark as all of the longitudes with the Sun upon the other side of her earth;
It was where I kissed her mouth, while her Husband was at work—but it didn't work,
As the otters slipped and played up again and again
All throughout their estuaries—and sad mothers,
Or girls who were not even mothers ate their Candied apples from the top of the Ferris wheels—
Their estuaries—as we sang songs of rebellion without Even knowing what we sang—as the pilots
Came down nearer to us, whispering, until they dived into The sky again.

Robert Rorabeck

Tin-Foil Swords

Words that are lost can't fill my pain:
Man of Arms can never be He-man, Erin:
What is wrong with your brain,
The paint by number figurines, Erin:
I am not even nearly as beautiful as your brain:
Tell me of your soul, let the wet paint run in the rain,
Erin:
Did your first love break your soul when he broke your Hymen:
I knew you in Latin class when you were still virginal,
And even then I knew what you would be doing;
And I am not beautiful, Erin:
I could never proceed through the pictures you
Break yourself in;
You are a starlet Erin: You shine- You are very bright,
And yet you don't wear any man's ring;
Is it the muscles of the gym which impress you, Erin?
I wish I could be more beautiful for you;
I wish I could be starlight; I wish I could be the bravery of your Flag,
Erin: There are houses that are vacant that need children and
Your touch,
But I don't think I can love you again after the flowers I gave
You have died like stillborn children;
After I had loved you that much, and you just stepped aside,
And kissed your pillows,
And gave the hunches of your game to the he-men of the story,
The pilferers of late night dragons,
While I could do nothing more than swing my lousy tin-foil
Swords and masturbate to dead writers
Who all together couldn't resurrect you from your egg sucking Hutch.

Robert Rorabeck

Tinsel

Laid in the corners of the fine
Fire field,
I used to consider in midday all
The things I could Steal
From the cardboard chest,
Plastic toys that Represented the real-
But your lady's heart is real,
So real,
And yet waking up so far
A field,
I still hope to take the things
I can steal
To make them feel my own;
To heal,
The strange occidental
In the theatre of this bedroom,
Where she no longer says your Christian name:
Where the rains are always as perfect
As tinsel.

Robert Rorabeck

To A Nebular Womb

I have returned to a nebular womb
Where there is a swing-set and a school book
Because it has always been my design to do so,
And I do not knowing anything else,
Except that sometimes airplanes look so good
In the heavens above the like minded baseball diamonds—
And I know just as little about you—
How we fell into or out of love once or twice
In between our earliest amusements while nothing Else I wrote ever sold, because there just so happened
That there was no time for it—
But then you were better at remembering these routine absences
Than I was,
And now I am here—happily lost in the playgrounds of A Disney World at blind midnight—never letting go of Everything you so easily abandoned—
Smelling what remains of the soul of your cadaver left like
The hoof prints of fresh paint across the playground—
After the buzzards and the helicopters and the Dragonflies have already crossed—
What joy to they bring to the paint by numbers—
What answers can they bring to the land of the crossed?

Robert Rorabeck

To A Nest That Aches Not To Be Alone

I've been reading and filling in the gaps over
Your make believe Guerrero, Alma:
I've been listening to little girls who are walking down
The street
And tonight I ate six tostadas that Mierna's sister
Caroline cooked and fed to me;
And I picked up all of Alan's dye cast cars that were Scattered like bright toys for the angels and the birds
At the feet of the Virgin of Guadalupe:
But I kept on loving you even when you were back in The traditions of your bad man:
And the boys and the men say that Mexican women need
It every night;
And I bought you a vase of roses and baby's breath
Late this afternoon, that you could not Take home with you,
Because you had to close your eyes and say that you could Never see the perfect snowflakes floating fall:
And you are still scared of dogs,
Even though I hold your hand, and I would carry you
Away from all those feral traditions to a nest that aches not to Be alone.

Robert Rorabeck

To A Place I Am Sure Doesn'T Belong

Heads of tallow now bonfires,
Little busses circling her wrists where lions jump:
Her tears are the little showers of Girls lockers they get naked in, victorious after The game;
And where am I, and why are they not singing about Me- a picture of Dorothy in my pocket
I will not return,
All of my friends smoking and telling little Secrets in the white washed huts in the waves.
I hear them singing better from the good side of my face;
And you can pay for the parade and walk down the Street with them, and ride on pasifinos with boys
Who can do simple illusions; I don't Care: I toss airplanes like coins in the sky, and I don't even need to fold them.
Everything has lost its apoplexy and drunken from the Fountain of youth, and the conquistadors are having Sleepovers and now I cannot sleep:
The beautiful woman I murdered and buried underneath the Roses in the garden of my novel,
I named Gloria, but now she has awakened up as if Fireflies had burned away her print,
But got sick off her and now are dying amidst the coral and Shells along the path leading up through the aspens,
And to a place I am sure doesn't belong.

Robert Rorabeck

To A Vanished Sea

My mother was washing her was—Oh,
In a pieta-
Of orange and green tinfoil:
A beautiful thing that could never be spoken in between
The courtyards
And the baseball diamonds of high-high school:
And the heavens ushered the rains
Through the forests
As something feral was getting married—
And it only took so much of awhile to plead for justice:
Until she came out of the night,
The chinaberry trees confusing the heavens behind her:
And in the crooks of that manifested sorority:
Hidden things for children:
Pornography and Easter Eggs,
And the torn strings
Of kites that whisper of heaven forever lost on their Way to a vanished sea.

Robert Rorabeck

To A World Built To Adore You

Marmalade on the lips of a bumble bee
On the lips of my muse: there you are cavorting in
The backyard, while all of the cars
Are sunken into the canal: your breasts are beautiful
If shallow,
And it does not matter what you want- they will Give you a house backed up to the hills and stacked With Indians and they will run liquors down your Naked form in the moonlight;
And they will ride you alongside a bicycle-
They will take pictures of your lungs that they will Give to little boys, and they will send off around
You in a procession of canoes:
Building their amusements in models one fifth your Size, their toy boats will carry roses to you and Funnel cakes- and when you are gone,
Making love to your man, they will have another girl
Step into your shoes: she will be nothing like
You, but she will learn so much just by being there-
And the sun will sweeten the throat of the sky,
And the birds there will sing to a world built to Adore you.

Robert Rorabeck

To A World That Didn'T Know It Should Care

Finish the glass like a little bit of Rainwater;
And now you're too slick for a rope.
There's never been a fish who's Hanged himself,
At least according to conventional rhymes;
But you are not that great:
And must concede that you only once lived
Near a beautiful pool
Where you could hear the fraternities raping
The night near the graveyards;
But you are too afraid or too good to Go back to school anymore:
You should have drunken more in Saint Louis,
Stolen somebody's cat, or lit off
Illegal fireworks. Then you would have Stayed. You didn't even go to Sarah's grave,
You custard- hypocrite you;
And now you aren't fighting for either side,
But just planning on getting rich and shooting
Of rainbows to a world that didn't Know it should care.

Robert Rorabeck

To Adore

Words- words every night under houses like snails:
Open mouthed for the love nests of birds:
These words
Cut their throats with the paper cuts of words, with the Spanish conquests of high school
That never seem to heal:
Even as the lonely forts crumble, and the tourists retreat
To their ice creams:
These words stumble underneath the blowing embraces
Of propellers and
Windmills exploring the world, or taunting quixotic nights;
Entire hillsides of caracoles,
Of graffitied desks- while the coffins race underneath
The red mountains of Colorado,
As the choleric brides are unearthed and dribble down
Like the landslides of birthday cakes:
And I watch my muses out on parade, their bodies like
A fire engine greased with marmalade,
While the rivers conceive around them whatever slender
Births they have left-
And the matadors fight their bulls, and the housewives
Their bets:
Until it is time to turn in beside their pools,
While the hobos slip through the canals like rummy conquistadors Finding their loves escaped from the circus in a tent of Palmettos fanning up from the easement
In the safely mowed fields in which the housewives can easily
Feel content to adore.

Robert Rorabeck

To Again Diminish

Even by myself, my body feels warm tonight for
I have drunken so much liquor by these thirsty lips,
Searching for a muse
Through the holy grounds of a bachelor's afterlife,
And even though all of it was a failure,
I have continued breathing tonight, and overcome by Your cloy spirits, I was possessed,
Like a girl in the first night of her sorority;
Or like a young mother experiencing the first night
Being tugged upon by a newborn,
Like the flag of a new country stuck to the wind,
Victorious know that it will be so long before it has to Again diminish.

Robert Rorabeck

To All Of Your Children Of Far Away

Too many words dulling the pain, making inebriations,
Make for bad poems:

But I sat with you on my swings the other day before you left

Me:

I sat and brought you into my neighborhood

Like a wolf into a virgin's bedroom: I guess my head didn't think
Of what my body was doing:

The woodland church where your body moved under the pitch
Of clouds, before you kissed my neck and

Drove away into the overly maddened crowd; and you never Returned,

But that shadow you stained the coral with is moving here today:

She is a beautiful woman who lines over me like

A crime scene,

While you are back in the warm contours of your folded house

Listening to all of your children of far away.

Robert Rorabeck

To Another Street Of Coquina

Cold as the soup kitchens that cannot feel;
Like the cold soup that a hypnotized chicken is cut into While it rains in my house
And over the everglades, and the bums and hobos and Their wino cousins take shelter underneath the overpasses:
My mother reads to my past childhood in the glowing Warmth of a library that has since shut down:
But while she did, her skin and body resonating as perfect
As a virgin in some grotto or some carport:
Why, there she was, blue sheets rippling and kissing lemon
Trees
And underneath the knees, Mexican candies: and she didn't Care about all of the cheap stuff I'd stolen from kindergarten,
Or the pornography I knew about across the street in the Woods:
She showed me tadpoles, and the kidnapped toys who slumbered
In the corrugations of the ditches:
She was like a stewardess taking time off to light off fireworks,
And if I ever saw her cross over the canal to get to another
Street of coquina just as poor as ours was,
Then I am sure that she would be taking me to another world.

Robert Rorabeck

To Another World

The defeated spirits are as sure as their handlers
That I am not really here,
And the colors happen into the world from inside us,
As they escape like the breathing of misappropriated
Lovers,
And everything else that fails: and right now I have A blond come over who I will pay to Take me to another world.

Robert Rorabeck

To Any Room

Maybe you don't remember this time:
With the sun going down, and the ponies heading home:
That I cut myself looking at you,
Even as the rest of the people discovered so much gold.
Running to it, lapping,
Cliff dwellers whose dwellings were suddenly filled with
So many colorful pinwheels.
But you were there rippling over their shoulders,
Coming up as a reflection across the maize and the trout
Stream-
Like a good omen in the shoulders of our city,
Our enemy waiting as the zygotes of evil ghosts in the shells
Of silver terrapin;
And it was a long ways to fall, slipping all the way-
Then I was just a wave heading home, eager to be falling over
Itself, and to any room that would let me in.

Robert Rorabeck

To Any Room That Would Let Me In

Maybe you don't remember this time:
With the sun going down, and the ponies heading home:
That I cut myself looking at you,
Even as the rest of the people discovered so much gold.
Running to it, lapping,
Cliff dwellers whose dwellings were suddenly filled with
So many colorful pinwheels.
But you were there rippling over their shoulders,
Coming up as a reflection across the maize and the trout
Stream-
Like a good omen in the shoulders of our city,
Our enemy waiting as the zygotes of evil ghosts in the shells
Of silver terrapin;
And it was a long ways to fall, slipping all the way-
Then I was just a wave heading home, eager to be falling over
Itself, and to any room that would let me in.

Robert Rorabeck

To Anyone's Homes

Another sunlight going down for the short change
Of a word—
Another daylight of my life slipping down—
The mountains cool from their fires;
I do not know where you've been,
But we each have to do this alone.
My wife is in the kitchen walking towards me—
The hibiscus is in its grove, curling over
The concrete—
The feral cats making love on the road—
And nearer the beach, a sword fish stares at a shell,
While the cars honk on the overpass—
There was once a picture that existed over
The absences of my grandmother's house—
When, for now, the hours keep on piling towards me—
The dogs lick the souls of the fish—
The roads turn around, pilfering for themselves—
And the beautiful bouquets placed on the steps,
And the roads that don't lead to anyone's homes.

Robert Rorabeck

To Ask Another God Why

Now that it is passing, the axes fall,
And the liquor runs from the stemmed trunks of the Headless queen:
The trucks wont start but still the reptiles dream:
And I do all of this for you, Alma,
While I am sure that I will see you at work again, while your Body will run down the sidewalks of your world,
Trying to keep up with your children,
Until they become as old and over read as the story lines of Fairytale:
But you don't like to read anyways- Eventually the snow melts
And cries for itself down the hidden ways of the mountain:
And I went finding there for the footsteps that you never Planted-
So it goes this way this time, un routed, like the same management
As the clouds give to cartograph the sky;
So if I awaken beside you some un calligraphed tomorrow,
I swear that I will never have to ask another god why.

Robert Rorabeck

To Attend To Again

Warm perfumes in the rectories, as the pigeons return
With their messages:
Alma's favorite color is still green, and we ate camarones together
Today:
And her eyes, and her eyes: what did they say to me,
And what did they leave behind, spilling their ephemeral guts with
The apple seeds down my throat,
While the marionettes picked up and carried away:
The horses stumbling in the clutches of rattlesnakes, breaking
Their trifectas underneath the turquoise stones backlit
By the haunted mountains
Where the gold is buried, where I left my grandmother and my dogs
With their celibacy: and I joined the grave robbers behind my House,
And together across the cathedrals of a canal we began to sing to Her and to over imbibe,
And our house of loneliness began to swim as we learned her
Phone number;
But forgetting how many times we spoke of our love as we Made love to her, it felt as if we were lost
Like slaves who could not swim in the embargos of her landscaping,
Even while the street lights lamped our windows light churches,
And the hurricanes spoke like totems, like tattoos to
The magnitudes of the Atlantic that we could never even use
Our bicycles to understand;
And in other houses of her cousins the meals of corn were flattened
Into the dinner beneath the virgins and the roses,
While the rattlesnakes tucked in, wishing for the virtues of her legs
To slip into their venoms to kiss voluptuously poisoned
Across the fleshs of forests and classrooms that I am absolutely fearful
My love will never be so careful as to open her eyes to attend to Again.

Robert Rorabeck

To Awaken Again Too Many Times

I suppose that I am here, even though I won't be touching down
In the firehouse sea,
As I remember the clusters of all the absentmindedly
Glorious houses
That will never return again: the glory days are over,
The speak easies have passed out,
And my love for white women is altogether over; so that my colors
Have changed,
So still I blend in, but wait for a mother who has passed herself
Between the countries: who has probably been shot at While stripping naked across the frontera:
Who makes me want better Spanish, or to at least to call up the Verbs to jolt her into another metamorphosis that will Send her entire hundred pound body hurling towards My lips,
Even though there really is no ice-cream, and all of the dreams
Have been forgotten into the overused beds of hotels,
And all of the old girls I knew are done showing their legs,
And are now embarrassed, though with my apathy;
For now I only have Alma to cry for,
And the knife wound seeds she has planted in me, who are certain
To vanish should I have to awaken again too many times.

Robert Rorabeck

To Awaken And Go To School Tomorrow

Your body was good and brown:
Your body was as good as any woman's Under house surrounded by the indigenous landscaping;
And at the pools of your swimming night, my scars
Looked nice,
Laid out on the other side of the wall from the table and chairs:
The house that had a television, the house that had
A wife,
And the pool lay in unused shadows, the canal behind
In a constellation of twin red stars;
And I dreamed that you were my wife, while the entire Population slept, so that they could not believe that they would Have to awaken and go to school tomorrow.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be A Foolishly Welcoming Bride

Interacting with all of the catastrophe inside my Soul, listening to your children echo around your footsteps
Even as they fall'
And your heart spinning away 'the rain falling like Trinkets outside 'as if you were wanting to Return again to Mexico'
To see and kiss your children 'to remember what it
Was to be a foolishly welcoming bride.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Afforded Any Old Sort Of Wish

I love you, Diana, I love you:
And I am dying, even while I try you out,
And you wished that I would buy you negligee for your Birthday, so I went to the mall in Palm Beach Gardens and I did;
If only because I am not a mailbox and I am dying,
I am dying like a cat on the fence with all of his lives molting and Even with all of this air-conditioning, I am dying,
Dying: trying to not touch myself while I am going:
And look at all of these beautiful scars pin wheeling in the sweet
Home of this vortex:
Look at how I am dying for you and your daughter, Diana:
Look at how I am going even while you are having sex;
And that I love you, Diana, and I want to fall down between your Faggots like in a hearth, and smell out all of your sweet cadavers;
And don't you understand now, only if I was speaking English,
And this was shop class, and I was part of the erudite intelligences;
Even if I wore a corsage;
I am trying to mouth off for you in front of lions, but I am just a slender
Fish, or I am your sweetened coelacanth or gar learning all the roadways
Of your body, getting ticketed, just because I wished to be with you
And I wasn't beautiful enough to be afforded any old sort of wish.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Alone

Drowning in this life underneath the overpasses:
The working girls smelling like marbled steak and marbles:
Her hands like pigeon's feathers, dirty with fealty:
How will she answer to my mouthing wonder for her duel pregnancies:
Or that when far a field we make love, she always wants something,
Her sisters following behind her like a family of possums:
They live in one room beside her, and she beside them, and the night
Comes and wonders and brings down the hummingbirds
Of helicopters:
The lions seem to freeze in midair with their dirty tricks while the fires
Burn out, and the shoulders of the trapeze grown naked:
And then Alma is just this, a wounded child without a bicycle
Who I have spent all of my wishes on,
And time meanders and the rivers overflow and steal away children:
And houses crumble and lose their affluence through the Corn fields:
And all of Mexico rises up and presses its lips to bullfinches of Copper horns- and then there is a victory through the maze of solitude-
And maybe my soul realize in its wonder that it should no longer have
To be alone.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Anybody's Wife

Sometimes the sky feels bad out of love
And churns up her clouds like boiling degrees, like Throwing things out of all of her windows:
Then there are too many words like tourists picnicking on Deadpan mountains,
Like sweat pearled in the brow of a snobbish bride;
And I lay on my back while the better men get better
And fatten at your picking time:
Then tankards of trucks make noise through the jurisdiction
Of your windows;
It is a very long country I am thinking about with no messes
And you live there, just because you are just good Enough to be anybody's wife.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Awakened

Write in a cradle of luxury:
And wait for the traffic to pass by like
Beautiful lures
And housewives in their mouths:
Now I do not know which way I am going—
The concrete is so singular—
Airplanes touch-down maybe fifty feet
Away from me—
It is the year of the dragon, and she is my wife
As the angels fly into her,
Burning themselves—wishing to be freed,
As her hair darkens
Until it is finally time to be awakened.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Blond

Stars they vomit into graves
If that's what they do:
Mexicans can never drink rum,
And when they're done mowing they stay
Sideways in the gutters
And pet the slick wet backs of newly born
Kittens
And cheetahs, spotted,
As the white Mohawks share the good times
Of sweet spit and harems;
And the sky is a young god of good rock and Roll,
And the buses are yellow vultures in their Turn abouts,
And I just want to be loved:
I want to be blond,
And have ice-cream,
And then meet you out in the courtyard to count
The houses of cards
Building up to the clouds,
But
I don't have good enough patience to write a Sustainable novel:
I just sell Christmas trees and look at meaty centerfold
And then spend the rest of my time rubbing my palms together
And licking my lips,
Trying my best to jump across the canals without Getting wet,
Because that is the other side of the world
And that is where the sugar cane burns up from the homeopathic
Throats thousands of them balled like the mistletoe
Of all those coral snakes;
And Sharon,
I love you, but I struck out and its raining and the Bleachers smell like crackerjacks;
And Erin,
I lost a wonderful poem about you last night,
But you don't care-
You are laughing at me,

And the stewardesses don't care
Serving their ice-cream and cleavage to the usual business Men leaping across the choreographed city states;
The pullulating lights of reindeer pirouetting
In the turn stalls of their usual feeding grounds;
And I can't spell.
And my engine wont start.
And the mountain doesn't summit.
And I just want to be blond.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Him

Mutts get stuck in the patio perchance.
They don't have the right to ask the pretty Girls out to dance.
The alligators wait at the end of the gate,
And her father says to have her home by eight;
But what I am doing,
I don't really know- I just smoke and loiter
Outback at the end of the show,
And yet when I see you its like an entire carnival
Has lit up underneath the slash pines,
And the sky just keeps going forever upward
Like a baby-blue mind-
But this is something after the chance is over,
And the car has come and squashed the dog named Rover,
The old loyal fiend,
I couldn't hope that you'd remember,
Since you've gone and laid your roe all swarthy in the North river,
And now you daughter comes, leaping for awhile.
She too wants to taste the sweet rind of sky,
But very soon or eventually she has to go down
Believing
All the tired truths that fornicate through these school-
Bus days.
I try and find your eyes through the fire engine haze;
But this catastrophe makes me question where I am.
When I just want to be with you:
I want to be him.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be In Love

Everything else inside of us seems to be counting
The numbers that pull off the same way that unmentionable
Serpents shed their skin:
And I am doing this again, again, because I have become Unmentionably lost:
I exist in the same semipermeable strata of the pornographic Memories as the conquistadors who became so quilled with Arrows in the Floridian sand dunes,
That they had to stop for a dinner of themselves:
And so the buses whir for me, all less shad, all bright blue
And yellow,
Like flowers too big for corsages for submarines:
While the tracks that the Indians left behind are too famished to remember,
While your children are too beautiful to be forgotten,
Alma- and even though all of your world is so strange to me,
My heart hunts for you through the quietness of these concrete
Slopes which seem to come so easily,
While the liquor emolliates my skin, while I am at a loss for any other Words or numbers,
Save for you name, and that we found each other all too suddenly
And all too same, on this peninsula on this planet and all the same:
Even if you don't care to love me, I am the fool that you can Blame:
You can squat and piss over my unmentionable grave in the concrete
Shadows of a sieve,
And we will carry on apart like the strata of two species born to Far away from each other to ever be together, but know, at last,
That they were always meant to be in love.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Meat For Buzzards

Children who go on fieldtrips always go
But always come back again- and you are their Mother Alma;
And there are things inside you I will never know,
That I can never go too, beneath the spindling brown
Transoms of
Your deep, deep eyes; and though I have made love to You and held you hand,
You let the other fellow in more constantly- and your Heart gallops through a cool, cool night,
Displaying itself through the voids of your sub consciousness;
And it seems at last to find peace
And grazes off the coral that is too beautiful to be meat for Buzzards.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Noticed By Your Eyes

In families, the warmth of science's loneliness disguised
In religion's degrees: You whom think him your lover, Cannot actually touch him, your husband, for the both of You are forever encased in an electronic sheath—
You have to go to the sun; it's thermal reactions the metamorphosis—
Butterflies over Nagasaki and Pompeii—
While I was sleeping on your roof one hour before yesterday—
And in those words, filigreed with imperfections and enuendo,
I wrote you a thousand poems written in a language you do
Not know—
And when the coffins of your lovers and your ancestors
Are laid beneath the ground, they do not actually touch that Place—they are developed from the ectoplasms of outer space—
Better to be cremated in the fire that burns in these pages—
Better to have seperated from those lesser sages,
And awakened in these momentary arms—
Folded airplanes and paper butterflies dying as they try to Cross the canal to be noticed by your eyes.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Real

Heart implanted in a rock garden of Words that happen out of time:
The sky looks like lucky rabbits feet without Any airplanes:
The sky looks almost real, with the cats on my flesh,
So cautiously strung like harps.
Golden is the color of the sea, but it cannot be observed
From this ancient abode;
And some girls I love are just stoned.
They wait suppliantly like coyotes underneath their Mobile homes,
Kissed by rattlesnakes milking their bones.
The sky in the color of unfortunate salmon. The sky
A salon;
And then, with the curtain closing, the girls I loved
Are finally moving on-
And the garden is chirping with lightning.
The storm is coming that will carry on the gossip that used
To be real.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be Returned

Sometimes I climb the scarred hoods of Mountains three at a time;
And I take of my old baseball cap and Toast the storm,
Wait for lightning to teach me, but it
Is a fickle institution,
Far above your head and your erogenous
Arousals,
Like a haughty amusement park for ants
And beetles if we had any;
And very soon your daughter will grow up
To know everything you had to spill into
Her,
Whatever fell out of your sweet turnip truck and
Into her moist lips,
And I think it so sad that she might never Know how to spell the sweet crèches of those Mountains that live forever
Like blind men, as you are to them,
As you push your daughter in the swings of your Back yard,
Wanting her to fly a little bit,
Never temping her with the danger of the Burning sun,
Or the places I have seen god aroused, wounded
And dying,
And yet still crying your name,
As he ran away from me, escaping deeply quill-ed
With that unrequited love
I can never hope to be returned.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be The Day

This seemed to be the day
They kept talking to me about—
Without eyes—without a television
The tourists and
The girls working—
The clouds making many fantasies
Up in the sky—
The moon hung upon itself over
A tiny yellow hacienda—
The light falling—
There you can see my parents
Waiting for months in
My tiny living room
For their first grandchild to be born.

Robert Rorabeck

To Be The King Of You

Rainbows of cowboys, and I wish to die easily
To overcome all of these overpasses:
All of these state colleges shining their time before the Brow of professional deities,
As it seems to be calling to me right now as he comes Right into you;
As he went away to Mexico, only to come back again
To give you another child, to come into your fronteras
By your rights blooming in the sweet passages of Their wind tunnels,
And I guess now I don't feel anything more than this,
And that I am quite undone waiting for the fun banks of Unforgotten ghosts, and now:
And now all this: the savages overpasses to the new places
In the greenness that we land,
And he kisses your lips and he has all of you,
And all of the rest of this is an excuse, or at least it is an Apology,
Alma, and the daylight comes, and lays low all of it spells,
As he has the rest of you, and as he gives you children,
Even while all of my bouts are all done,
And he proves again to be the king of you.

Robert Rorabeck

To Beat A March

The fortifications became striking
At night—
The way they light up the wall
For the enemy,
Silhouetting the frightened soldiers—
The chirping crickets listen
To the ground purr far across
The distant land—
In the morning,
The lady with the red bicycle
Comes to visit, breathless and dewed,
The palms of her hands stained
From working in the vineyard—
All the soldiers tell her
She is a belladonna,
Some fortunate father's beautiful daughter,
And they sing love songs
When she rides up to the fort—
Sometimes they get drunk
And light off fireworks,
The quickly dying pinwheels,
The brightest colors of silvers and gold,
Cadmium and azure,
That, like her, exists nowhere else in the world
Except for the few leaping seconds in the crackling air;
But only one soldier truly loves her,
The one she goes to in the quiet corners
To kiss and press against his starched uniform—
But they are afraid to make love,
Because all the soldiers are waiting—
The woman is waiting too,
Lighted upon the battlements
As if standing on a street corner,
And her heart is like a hare waiting in the Tall whispering grass for its chance to move—
The land is waiting too.
Over the low hill where the daylight comes
In runny pools and shallow estuaries
Eddying through the dry olive groves.

Drums are slowly beginning to beat a march.

Robert Rorabeck

To Believe A Thing

Slipping through the abandoning collisions of children,
While all of the adults have to sit a spell,
Because all they have learned about the world is that it
Is up to no good;
And what they have trained to feel comfortable with,
Besides,
Has slipped out of their roofs and learned to swim like
Blue gills into cemeteries;
And even before the sun gets risen, the hobos and winos
Are there sharing their plots, unshaven,
Headstones and cenotaphs as pillows- the highways of A feral make believe the concessions of their mothers,
Like the trails that they must follow to fully unwind from Their jobs,
While the other larks of men continue to built preposterously
Above and beneath them these fleeting things
In disastrous slights of hand made to impress the ladies,
When what should be imagined is all of their fine lips uncorking
The romance of the cheap spirits in the vermilion gutters
That coil through the drainage of its ugly make-believe,
The snakes and devils speaking in the tongues of weeds and wildflowers,
While those of us who are with them never have to believe a thing.

Robert Rorabeck

To Believe In Unicorns

Filing in, warm alcohol clouds my feet,
Makes my lonely spirits warm
And reminds me of the time when I slept in Motels and hospitals alone.
Now I have a family and two children.
I have to get drunk and write in private.
Even as I can hear my wife,
I know it is not something I am supposed
To be doing—
But I still dream of other houses
And horses without names running
Through the waves—
It gets cloudy when I have to scratch my Head trying to think of the names of Vanished conquistadors.
They too used to own this place,
But now the planets align to empty palaces,
People who often speak Spanish now own this place
Again—and we go to their supermarkets to Buy a month's worth of meat.
I don't work at the high school anymore.
I got fired from that place because I couldn't Fit in with the school culture;
But it feels warm now here
For a while—
Warm from the rum of the Caribbean—
For a while I forget myself
And think that I am not supposed to be here
But then I remember to believe in unicorns.

Robert Rorabeck

To Better Boys In Better Lands

Day of laughter's surcease
And what is left to find in the shallows,
Your heart a kind of jellyfish still breathing
Painted by seahorses and uncommon jacks;
And then the sky,
And then the moon, the alleyways of fine men,
Feathered and keeping an insouciant shape with
The clouds,
The cliffs of far away raising up despondently
To the weathers,
Yours is a finer face I would like to reach and Touch but you pull away,
Like a paper kite whose string is cut,
Who wanders where the wind will take its Folded pleasures, I fear to think
To better boys in better lands so far away.

Robert Rorabeck

To Bless And Weep

I say I love you even as the petals weep and I don't Even know or not if you've been counting sheep,
And it hurts my soul that I had to lower my jaw and let you on Hope, like the lowest scoops of the Ferris wheel, like all of the white girls reading this and knowing
That I am not real;
But I am here waiting at the bottom of the teal, like an innocent
Drawn in its bathtub, Alma, I know that you can feel,
And I have been high up in our state, like the hot air balloons over
The lookouts of Ocala where you might even come to live;
But I will come down again, Alma, to kiss the soft pearly sheen of Your lips, While even the stewardesses are asking what they Can serve, to the burly men who don't even deserve;
And maybe it is that even now I can smell you, Alma; and I can Kiss your sheep high in the airy basins who blow the syllables of your Name, and who need no other reasons to bless and weep.

Robert Rorabeck

To Booze

Laid out my words sing like hollow instruments
From the lips of women that are passing

By:

They kick their eyes out of bed and beg the priest

Instead:

Like paper airplanes,

All my words fly for the length of several cars:

Newly buried, they kick like a fish one final time

Out into the open space of the fire,

But already the dirt of their store is closing down,

Better lovers are knotting fingers in the storm-

Erin is serving a private drink to some

Swell fraternity's infernal dorm:

I know what color anchors are on those better men's

Tattoos,

But tonight I'll just let them all starve out in the open

Air under the moon.

Let sailboats be sailboats, and butterflies the ends to

Their own means.

Tonight I just want to booze.

Robert Rorabeck

To Bother Her

What is the day doing in its night,
Finally undressed with new predators and Ghost ships,
The games of husbands and wives,
The nocturnal blooms and necrophilia's saints: Oh,
I don't know,
But the sounds of water falling of zippers of games:
The classes are done dear,
The fires are done, the ancestors cremated,
The dinosaurs:
The planets are less jealous and ashamed, and they swing
Like playgrounds around your unlaced boudoir:
I know that's what they were doing even Before I was born,
In the darkness of womb out deep in the sugar, sugar corn:
What sort of flowers bloom then in the night when We are doing these things,
And Kelly steps out and bathes with the butch roses,
And the moon is almost perfect and making her breasts momentarily
Levitate before they have to be tugged back down for their Newest new borns;
And she is no longer Catholic, and maybe she doesn't
Love me,
But her eyes are just as perfect and abandoned in the darkness:
And she kisses her man and falls back down beside him
Into the grotto where the dragons and the serpents are Also breathing;
But she has known them all day, so in the night they have No reason to bother her.

Robert Rorabeck

To Bring Them Down

Saved from drowning by
My grandmother's seashell doll,
All that is happening in the Orange orchards,
As the light moves as duplicitous as
Girls,
As stewardesses up in the air
Never imagining how they must have Gotten there,
But feeling good,
Knowing the spendthrifts of light over
The water and exactly how much time
It will take to bring them down.

Robert Rorabeck

To Bring To Here

Oh, well—we are home again,
And this is what it might at least as well be:
A forever weekend of video-gaming dungeons spilled
Out like gold fish all throughout the midway
As the sunshine runs forever the other way,
But by midnight she is clothed—and with songs to Sing:
She could die for you yesterday—but it is so far away
From here—so collect your own glasses- and remember
Whatever it was that she happened to bring to here.

Robert Rorabeck

To Burn Myself Into Your Memory

Pray to the birds in the nests of their pallid moons:
Far above the broken shells and armpits of eaten conquistadors;
And there is nothing really beautiful with all of this:
I am dying for a muse who lives with another man:
These are the gyps of abutments my grafittis shadow on the Underbellies of a criminal world;
And it is hardly enough, all of the mountains I had to climb alone,
Cursing and blissing Sharon,
Never knowing how to tie my shoes:
And now I wonder how it is I have to die, drinking my bad wine,
And writing to Alma,
Writing to her all of the time: like teardrops like raindrops,
They lament that they will not survive;
But your body gives me reason to believe in the ceilings of Heaven Alma:
You are my newest and most burning of muses;
And I want to take you to the Norton Art gallery to show you by What methods you inspire me;
And soon you will be going back to school, to learn through the Deep afternoon about nothing that never does;
And after we have separated and it rains outside and sad things curl
Up and growing clinging to stones,
Then I wish that you would stop your tears and look out of the Abundance of transoms and hold your breath, trying to gather Together the strange sticks which I previously gathered to burn
Myself into your memory.

Robert Rorabeck

To Buy Her Flowers

Earth come down around her shoulders
And say to the bereaving mountains that she does
Not work at the fruit market anymore:
But she has gone up onto the shoulders of
Her husband—
And what she can see from there:
Flea markets basking in their grottos, and soft,
Unmolested ways back to Mexico:
Her eyes—oceans—
But she is entirely dependent and too far away
For me to buy her flowers.

Robert Rorabeck

To Buy Your Ghost

Wherever you are living now
You always make me spend my art into the Dirt
With a glass between my legs watching the Dancers flirting
Under the cheery palm trees-
I can go out from under the wedding cemetery,
Go down underneath the fort beside the sea,
Listen to the tourists taking photographs
Of making love,
I can weep into the foamy summit of Every wave,
But I know you are not here, but sleeping in the Stores of beautiful mountains-
I should result in nothing as I try to recognize Your essence,
But it is too elusive, made up of so many things;
I can only give you the few words that are my Anonymous sport- They will end up dying long Before my love;
I finish off half a bottle of rum in one night,
I look upon the underbellies of airplanes like slick
Amusement rides under the yard lights,
But the swing set is empty. The alligator has nothing
To do- We are both waiting to become Better gentlemen, to find the true words of our Sincerity; Perhaps we are both ancient fools,
For you are so away,
And I will never have the talent to make enough Money to buy your ghost.

Robert Rorabeck

To Carry Us Away

Sarah Teasdale is buried in Bellefontaine,
And I wish to go and see her and water her grave
By a single tear I stole from the sea
Where all my cousin bachelors were sashaying
A shanty:
And if I worked all night and exhumed her long
Mane, then I could kiss her vanished lips,
And pour down them my wine,
As the cars of midnight salesmen trained
By the coal-lit road, and the sky full of nimbus moved
By, those ushering storms above naked trees,
Whose crooks are like arms raised upwards in Hungering petitions,
As around her old house, they planted dozens of red
Roses, even as by this hour they make an untried day,
I kneel at the head of her perfumed rest, and lay my senses
Upon her unmoved breast; and call her there, though
She never knew me, by a memoir of a silent liar:
Thus I name myself while my heart still knells my breath,
Until I lie too in the quieted death, with sad egos
Loosed into the sea. Then, would not her gimlet eyes flutter
Like the gray curtains' foreplay on the slatted shutters;
And see by the mutual light of those who have reposed,
Who are crowned by the epitaphs of gravestones,
And the fading pages left imprinted in the wilting stores;
Thus we might obtain new senses, to see by the dint of Our waywardly species, to mutually cusp one another
So as to be mistaken as two flowers in a coupling braid
Waiting through the quieting hours as the storm, mounting,
Approaches with those chariots the sun brings to reward
The living, and to carry us away.

Robert Rorabeck

To Catch A Glimpse At The Sun

Without air-conditioning, they can still make enigmas;
And I am growing fat because I ate at the Chinese buffet again tonight; and then I jogged
In the wet grass where the crocodiles fart
And now the souls of me feet look like exposed brains;
And I am still alone and waiting to fill a hotel room with my body
And a female's body that I should know:
All of these females in the world doing the same things that the Males do, getting up and lying down:
And going on quests:
One female for me under the street lights of the Church,
All the best ones educated and spoken for, sucking thumbs of their Favorite holidays;
Or all of the best ones already so far up into the air, serving drinks,
Looking down at the jigsaw puzzles that are Alma's favorite color
Interspersed with blue;
And the fact that most of the species lives in the oceans
Lessens my chances with the world:
All of those layers of dead grandmothers and whales wishes away into The bric-a-brac of séances,
My faces getting older and following behind the best of these women
Like their wedding tresses, like the long tails of a comet who throws
Her bouquets away without even looking as she continues onward
Breathlessly, giddily skipping to catch a glimpse at the sun.

Robert Rorabeck

To Come On

Oh my god, this is the police
In warm weather, in cold weather, and then in Warm weather again;
Or this is at least your uncle who has seen you naked
Like the tail of a kite drying itself
Above the trailer park where you believe;
And there is a raccoon outside your door, even before
Darkness;
And it seems to be waiting all of a sudden as if a statue
In a topiary;
And all of the houses are too expensive, all of the Horses have been ridden:
And there is your love out by the mailbox again, sending Letters away, but to whom are they for-
And the sky is looking green, but not in an angry light;
It just looks like a toddler who has eaten
A bad canteen of your mother's chicken noodle soup,
But that was a long time ago,
And maybe that isn't the color of the sky at all;
And all the raindrops are in fieldtrips over the swingsets
In the park,
And your little brother has stolen your mother's only
Car and run away to some sweet peninsula further north;
And you can't really blame him,
Considering how all of this has been going, with This just being another song to blow your time on,
Biting your nails and waiting for the next wave
To come on.

Robert Rorabeck

To Come On Down

How often he partakes of your body I must know;
Swing back and forth amidst the shoulder joints
And the tiny cyclones which have given your better
Furniture to eggplants,
And strewn your unmentionables every which way else;
When you are done it is so easy to imagine you smoking,
Your eyes as gone as your mother,
As untouchable and wild: the greatest amount of your love
Yes given to your mother,
Inseparable yes she took you from daycare and Separate the better part of you, the part neither he nor Anyone else has ever felt:
There she is floating through the air-light carnival,
Just as gleefully as before it all went down, beautifully blind
To all the senses that have so ravaged you,
Circling and circling the cheap vanities of your mobile
Home,
As light as feather which has learned that she never has to Come on down.

Robert Rorabeck

To Continue

In them houses stilted moon light unto Which I've run away-
My father asking for money: money,
His horses stamping hoof prints in the clay:
As the sun lights
Up and turns around, a zoetrope.
A virtual nursery rhyme for the blind:
And I keep pressing my chest out, and You keep promising- promising to come to Me- you haven't come, haven't
You, while the sunlight is still out,
Or the moonlight is still out siphoning
Underneath her: and I have lovers- other Lovers from you; so it is eventually
By them that I will have to siphon to Continue: as it is by them, eventually as Well, that I will finally have to take my Cue.

Robert Rorabeck

To Convince Ourselves

Geoding, broking world, awash with hallucinations
And misspellings,
You've come for me again underneath the swing-set
And moon,
Where the ants are crawling through the Grass, feeling each blade,
Lingering knife of the stars—
When cars move by during the day in strange séance,
Going to the wishing wells of their usual haunts,
And the dolphins play
Cavorting with the shoulders of naiads—
And people work and slumber
In nocturnal parapets:
Outside, race-horses asleep,
And each wave in cadence, coming against the stones
That we have placed here to convince ourselves
That we should remain for awhile.

Robert Rorabeck

To Cry Another Tear

House how yellowed, and how quieted- sometimes even
The hush of airplanes- and how many People have lived here- eighty-five years of people-
Homosexuals and sea-shells:
And I made love to Alma here forty-two times:
I made love to Alma here, but how many orgasms
Did I give her, like
Orange gorillas- I laid her down and entered her
Forty-two times,
But that is deceptive, like an electronic fire:
Each time I made love to Alma for an hour- and the Orgasms were many- her brown body from Mexico shivered, and felt me all over- and when She learned to feel it right,
She was like spilled gasoline that I ignited-
For each time, four or five orgasms-
She was so afraid that I would give her children,
But the entire night, and the entire woods glowed:
She burned away newly made,
Back to her husband- always to him. Today is her Birthday, and now it is all over-
She will never leave her family to be with me- I have Worked and lived here just to be with her:
I have written a thousand poems of our adultery, all imperfect
And all sincere: but it could never be enough
To compete with his witchcraft that he brought back with Him from the cauldrons of Mexico, stewing the fallen
Mariposas- and striking the map of his poisons into her Heart- she walked back into his shrunken cathedrals
Like the map of his sphere,
Leaving me with only the echoes of the sweetest orchard-
The bees and hummingbirds carrying news of him
Over her shoulders- tattooing her sun with his name,
Leaving me only to cry another tear.

Robert Rorabeck

To Cry For Real

If I think of you, it is in the cool concentricity of
The air-conditioned bellies of airplanes:
It is in the slow arcing moves into which the stewardesses
Serve: long and leggy and homeless,
And they don't use words: all they have to do is look;
And they don't sell things: they just give things away:
When you smile at me in the fruiteria in the middle of Our work day:
It does away with graves: Alma, and I have a chance of skipping Class, and holding hands with you as we truant across the Canal,
As we go into places that can be shared but don't have Official names,
And on larks into bedrooms of absent parents where we start
To cry for real.

Robert Rorabeck

To Cry Indoors

In another joyless aspersion,
The skeletons dance with the tortoises—
Jeweled in the pirouettes of Death,
Something like the sparkling narcoleptic
Dance of Europa or Ganymede around
Jupiter,
As my next housewife lies on the other side
Of the world,
Where her airplanes and helicopters
Fly and hover unseen—
And the birds and the hummingbirds drink
From her fountains:
She weighs less than a hundred pounds,
Less than a half of me—
And I finger paint through her,
As she lies sweating in still life's of cut up
Pineapple and mango
Sprinkled with the ghosts on the asphalt
Outside of another high school—
As I pretend to be amused another time by Her gifts—
But my strings are cut, and I am just waiting
For my tomorrow—
Fairytale all my own with her in the burned
Out center of my heart—
Another amusement park that has altogether
Skipped town,
Until the papier-mâché imps are once again
Dancing on my shoulders—
And we take our own busses through the cul-de-sacs,
Until the sunlight burns through the paper—
And the rainstorms have the unforgiving patients
Until we arrive home and cry indoors.

Robert Rorabeck

To Death By Your Kiss

Pull my teeth with warm Scottish whiskey,
And lay me down in the freshly cut pine of this Nailed together coffin,
Just under the shadows of the truncated overpass,
Or anywhere,
Really,
And see if I don't fit in quite nicely,
Me and all my scars, my half handsome beauty:
Then it will be like a used car lot on your dime.
And I can look up the sinful flow of my muses
Taught ribs,
The things she stole from me,
And the hot pink shorts in which she roller derbies:
And that will be that,
And you wont even have to put me down,
Or say you love me,
Because I will have felt for the entire afternoon
What it must be like to be vastly asleep,
Good and buried,
Like a virulent flower whose only desire is to be Awakened to death by your kiss.

Robert Rorabeck

To Describe

Alma, this is the darkness that your rabbits sleep in Every night:
This is how they feel: how I feel, when I am outside of your House,
Shivering in my cage of short fur suspended like a captured
Truant above the grasses:
This is how my body feels coming alongside your body,
Catching myself staring at the deep reflections of your curves:
Alma,
Your name is the soul of a candle in a carport, in a cage:
Alma, your eyes awaken from the sleep of our world, and they See things that dance, and make love;
But what else they see, I don't think I can bring myself to describe.

Robert Rorabeck

To Disappear

Laughing through the games and attending the news
While the jasmine blooms
Over the narcoleptic lakes: lakes so beautiful and yet no one
Thought to write a poem across them,
But this is my séance to them,
Even if my father doesn't care:
This, another way to awaken into the languishing shadows,
Breathing shallowly—and across the many directions
The airplanes cross:
Another way to believe in the perfumes over the circuses and
The family—
They are smiling through mirrors where they have had to Buy themselves—and across the unholy mountains—
They languish and disappear—
While—as of yet, some love holds out, and sings to her
While she sleeps alone
In her emptied house at the end of some cul-de-sac,
Waiting for her birthday candles
So she may cause them to disappear—as another night languishes
Up the busied rooms of her unoccupied heavens.

Robert Rorabeck

To Do With Her

Burning in the cold spittoons, the mountains rise
Up to the f%cking moons, and I have been betrayed again:
The mailman has fathered my earliest sun while
I was late to home again: The rabbit went down on his fairy,
The little girl has shrunken again;
And my words are just the whimpering of my loneliness after My tireless wife has hit the town again: If she were my wife,
And not another man's worry:
I want this to be the story that I am remembered for:
I want to be an American legend, and I am in a hurry:
And the night spills out semiprecious from its quarry: and the Planet Mercury is even nearer to my love:
And I haven't worn a bathing suit in so long, and the girl I loved
Has a husband; and I have never betted on dogs, though I think That I should have:
And the knights have gone down into the traffic, empty handed
From the mountain, and if my goddess was nearer toward me,
Wouldn't she just love another more endearing man:
And what about the apple trees uphill from my uncle's house in Michigan: what about that professor who is the head of his department:
I think he was the one who started all of this:
I think his backyard is the garden of Eden, and I am doing nothing:
I am just a runaway: a runaway from the sunniest states in the union,
And the girl in the movie, the girl I love, well, actually
I have never been beautiful enough to have had anything to do with Her.

Robert Rorabeck

To Dream Of Where You Really Belong

What falls here is not footsteps- it wants to be
A beating heart: what lies here, without the eyes
To perceive her- it is the thing that I want: it is a way
Home through the darkness,
And candle that does not diminish and comes back to Life after the wishes of her birthday:
It is the thing that I have been so insouciantly practicing,
While the ice moon of Ganymede keeps the secrets
To herself,
Like my mother before my last sister was born,
Out barefoot in the carport on Haverhill before it was paved
The rain storming- she steps on an open extension
Cord and is badly shocked, and it is here:
The first time I see her fall to her knees in pieta
Weeping not even for a child, that I want to think of you
Alma to put you in my bedroom
Underneath the heavens of a ceiling fan, and to turn my Senses around across your brown skin-
And to kiss you in the secret places beneath the busy traffics
That cannot even begin to dream of where you really belong.

Robert Rorabeck

To Drink The Sea

A deer in the cauldrons altogether:
Looking up, fathomless to the fathoms—
And stars and stars
Of places filled with ghosts—
Submarines lying in the trenches of the sea
And on Mars, Mars:
Two dogs leaping are her moons—
And in these streets at night,
The antithesis to Arizona's limbo—
And the things I saw today,
Riding on a bus, the caesuras of my wife's Legs, and the laziness of being alive
Brings us back to familiar places:
The dow in the meadow,
Eating grasses,
Chances upwards to see the ghost
As the moon, the thief,
Bends down to drink the sea.

Robert Rorabeck

To Drive Away And Work

Souls cradle in the wishing wells of flesh:
The hot prizes picked up at fairs that wont be around again
For another eight months,
Almost time enough for you to bare me a child, Alma:
You make your nimble body embarrassed with a mulatto child:
If I could cultivate your eyes to always turn up to me,
Like the fires of kindergarten leaping up to the shoulders of its Afternoon bus:
And we could take each other home while the sugarcane burned into Dusk,
While the dolphins laid dreary eyes and all the paled ghosts haunted
Their ticklish suburbia:
You know I have a house for you as empty as the soul like a Suffocating goldfish between my ribs: Alma, I have house and A body aching to be filled with the nocturnal perfumes
That your body's soul has to give:
Your eyes are the painless transoms of Geurrero Mexico no other
Boy from my high school has ever come close to dreaming about:
Your body is the phosphorous of an overused unicorn,
Lightning cultivated above the combing sea:
Alma, my house and my soul are empty, and you have promised to come
Tomorrow and fill them for an hour, as if I were a church,
With the slightest offering of your brown consciousness: Your skin is So beautiful, and I promise you that I think about you at every Opportunity, and will gladly worship you tomorrow for all the whiles
I have, before I have to drive away and work.

Robert Rorabeck

To Entirely Fulfill Another Mistaken Life

All the beautiful words shoeless and stripped naked
And then by the dark winos underneath the overpasses,
The quietest and most beautiful of flowers bloom,
As I call out for Alma in the somnolence of my inquietude:
And I bought a bicycle for her to come,
Something that could make love to my bicycle in high exegesis;
But it wasn't enough,
The clouds kept for her the pictures of her other world,
My words failed to build a house that would sustain her from The elements,
And now I can feel my face shedding the pitiless sorrows,
Like the cicadas who leave their legs and armors around the Necks of other trees to walk
Off all of a sudden into other romances; but, Alma, I really loved
You- or I have a disease:
But it is more likely that there is a drive in movie theatre in which You are naked and starring in my mind,
And I am the only gentleman you will know, but the irony is that You will overlook my postmodern chivalry,
And go on for so many uncounted heartbeats with him as to entirely
Fulfill another mistaken life.

Robert Rorabeck

To Escape What She Is Doing

If you still are a little boy and you step outside
Right now,
And the weather enraptures you, and blows you
Out like a little blonde candle,
I promise you can still love your movies in the Darkness,
Because the darkness is the best house for those Things you have made,
Covering your innocent head with the weathers of Apathetic solitude,
All the prettier girls not really needing to know
Who they are, and delighting in that fact that They don't have to be encouraged;
And then you can just slip away like the anonymous
Academics of a sing-song war:
You don't have to get on that jaundice bus, and make
It to the hallways of school,
Where you would surely smell her smoking like the Adolescent perfumes of a violet cannon;
And she would be the same name of flower
Attracting the bees, or the bumble bees, or the evil
Bumble bees;
But now that you have made it out instead, you can Spend all of this day floating beneath the holy,
Listening to the lions roaring as Knots,
And on your back well in the shady places of a good
Truancy's gloom,
You can imagine almost anything about love,
Because you are outdoors where it is so easy to escape
What she is doing.

Robert Rorabeck

To Evaporate

Family in the curfew of a
Clam,
In the boudoir of a music box of
The sea-
Curtains billowing fundamentally
With the juvenile girls
Looking down:
They are beautiful if puckish,
With hollow bones
And streaks of jade: they can sit all
Day watching the elephants
And combing their hair,
As the rivers proceed to evaporate
Just like young men desperate to Reach them.

Robert Rorabeck

To Even Get Started

Life may be as hungry as death, but I am certain
It is never as fulfilled:
As I set out, my body throbs like a coward:
I get my haircut with politicians while the other tourists
Jog around the lake
While the snowflakes are falling and the electricity
Is leaping from stake to stake;
And the moon seems polarized: It seems as if it's making
The feathers return to love birds,
And for awhile everything is turned back like curtains;
And I look up for a second,
And maybe I am beautiful, and maybe I am thinking that this
Doesn't even have to start;
And she is getting back out of her car or by whatever means
She chooses to travel away,
And maybe she is kissing me: maybe her eyes
For a second have reached their high water mark, and they Seem to be leaving an impression on me:
Why, aren't we back into the middle of school: We're both
Virgins:
The apples are yet unknown to her fingers, laying like unknown
Vocabularies in their tree;
And then for a second she floats up again and is bended like a
Rib under my wing:
Put back into place I linger: I am a truant who so immaturely
Wonders why we have to even get started.

Robert Rorabeck

To Ever Again Hope To See

I lost her to the fireworks- I don't want to lose you
Again too,
Even though we have been mouthing off and making love:
There was a milky jewel in your navel today:
It looked like a thimble of a tide pool;
And you were concerned because it took me so long,
Even though we levitated the bed again today,
And scared the mailman out of his boots- And I have already Told you that my words had no reasons of revenge:
They just happened that way because; and I imagine you Still further out in the great and unrequited bosque too surreal
To burn,
Riding an undepleatable stock of red dragons and silver unicorns:
Your brown skin a working jewel for the sun,
And the butterflies landing on you and opening love letters,
Gossiping of fairytales and your prince so far away,
Who was opening his bottles of hope for you underneath
The pregnant gravities of the moon which brought them on wings
To your lips metamorphosing into beings like your sisters
Who kept you company, and distracted you from
The leaden pains which would weigh you down into lingering
Where the shadows burn with the feral eyes
Of boys who are too far lost to ever again hope to see.

Robert Rorabeck

To Ever Come Hiking Down Again

By words I fold up my wings and tiptoe on the drinking
Fountain of a naked flower:
She has everything that you have, up in the basins as if you'd
Had some idea of this particular species growing in the tuff Islands between the broiling streams which Leap just like chorus lines coming down above tree line;
And I suppose I know that you have seen these things,
Because I would hate to know that you have been just like a tourist
In this nose-bleeding heaven;
And maybe you have taken your ski-lift up the naked back of Telluride,
Or tobogganed into the water parks in Ouray- but I hope that you
Have also swung your body up into them, enjoying the healthy
Sororities of lean and beauteous aspen who reflect your aspects
Back to you, Sharon- as if this nature was a mirror
Held up to you by our earth, your man- For I have seen you there,
And though my body fell back down again, like a coral stone from
The sea of stars, my soul is still there,
Hanging in the titular glee of your sparkling seraphim with no desire
To ever come hiking down again.

Robert Rorabeck

To Ever Remember

Sleep in a tomb of rum, in sticky fingers,
In days off.
I can hear my mother gossiping in the bathroom,
Her father isn't doing very good,
But who cares.
There should just be amusement parks and Girls named Sharon,
And every day should be free, the sky as blue
As petticoats without fear of Indians;
And conquistadors should always be burnished silver,
Whipping like swashbuckling flags around their Epileptic cross;
And now I will force you to with an over abundance of Conjunctions,
And all the money I've saved: I've saved so much Money,
Sharon that I could pay for your escape, or I could become
More beautiful.
Outfitted as your superhero on a boat with an outboard motor,
I could steal right up to those mountains,
I could float on the seas of crustaceans who had died;
I could pay for better words that might make you Care to remember how I once looked, and made you walk across Class once to sit with me and pretend how you really Feel now,
That it might not hurt your feelings at all to ever remember who
I might be,
Or who I am.

Robert Rorabeck

To Fairies Who Don'T Even Care

Rediscovering the tickets that cannot hold out,
With everyday our Sunday:
The traffic and the sun down, the palm trees
Easy,
And evening kneeling towards the carport of houses:
Mothers drifted into rivers, or with their Last breath escaped with our baby sisters from the fates
Of the canals:
The alligators there too: fat off the conquistadors;
The sugar cane burns:
The birds of prey nest, the bromeliads bloom,
The locusts slipping away from themselves in the jubilant
Pools and make love to fairies:
Make love to fairies who don't even care.

Robert Rorabeck

To Feed Make Dos

Into the heroisms of Bright tenements
I find myself dying,
Scarred and
Effaced again,
While I see you in
The effigy of his
Mexican relationship
Who from your Tawny kiln
Has produced both of
Your children,
Who come out to suckle off your Muddy banks,
The way fireworks gurgle
In brown sin
And chocolate milk;
Until like mud pies left on the sill
To feed make dos
You leave his continent.

Robert Rorabeck

To Feel A Bend

If you read me,
Touch my flesh.
I am a lonely goldfish in its Mortal bag underneath the moon,
Which is outside
Of society,
Society that is a used car,
A nuclear epoch:
I try to kiss ladies over the flats of Impatiens,
Cheap flowers that have no smell:
You can get eighteen for eight dollars
Where I work thirteen hour shifts
Seven days a week:
I have enough money saved to buy a
House outright:
I have enough money saved to buy a
Wife,
But I don't:
I just keep moving on, like a crypt orchid
Mythology hungry in the surf,
Saturnine and floating with the bleached
Orchids;
And I don't even know the Christian names
Of enough saints or monsters to Make it right;
And all I can give you is the names of my Two muses,
Like fists, like business cards,
But they are insouciant, and hung over from Their beauty,
So they don't care if I am writing to you of Them tonight,
Because they are both strung out in their Beds of husbands and Heavy men,
And their lives flow like rivers as smooth
As pure silver
That has never had to feel a bend....

Robert Rorabeck

To Figure Out Its Colors

The only difference between I and these fools,
These charlatans and plagiarists of daydreams, is that I love
You, Alma:
While he just wants to sell his cars and keep the chickens warm
And hallucinating,
While I go out on walks up mountains, while I wet my lips in Streams and all of them seem to be ribbons coming undone
In the snowmelts of your hair;
And that is why I lay alone at night while you rest alone with your Husband,
And your fingers splay through the backyards and their dying
Fruit trees where your rabbits' young have disappeared,
Where Heidi is still innocent and loved by her parents,
And has no excuses for me, even if I bought her coloring books and Pretended to be her uncle;
And she is your beauty rippling newly upon the world:
She is the flag and the weathervane whose lips have yet decided
To figure out its colors.

Robert Rorabeck

To Figure Out Who You Are

The party lasses are at their sport
Batting eyes across the flight plans of their daily tennis Courts:
And you ring up their acts on your machine Alma:
And half of your fingers are ringed:
And at least four with hearts from all the loves you couldn't Forget,
And one of those hearts my heart- the newest one, the whitest
One,
But please be blessed and remember that I bought it from Your tia and its band is made from 14 karat gold
From Guerrero Mexico,
But today I bought you flowers and you would not tell me the Name of the town in which you were burn,
And you would not say that you loved me:
It must be hard for any woman, or especially you: and you think
On so many things and all in one day:
I can see your eyes going to the sacred places of the virgins
I could barely begin to understand:
But there you are in my world, blowing me kisses,
And holding my hand:
And when I spend my wishes, sometimes we make love:
And I told you that my heart fills like a bet at the fair:
Spinning, spinning through the epilepsy of gaudy lights,
Praying that it should never have to come down
To figure out who you are.

Robert Rorabeck

To Fill In My Soul

My teeth are humid:
The highway is high, licking the heels of the sun;
And I have had you in bed,
And then I went under her and bought your dresses from
The flea market which you will Never wear,
Alma;
And I remember your brown skin and jet lag:
And I am sweating out of my skull,
While I sleep with my dog, because you are not here:
My entire house is empty and I am on the floor
Trying to swim,
Because you didn't cry when I left you, Alma,
But you wrapped your body around me and looked at the Dying roses I had bought for you,
While the waves rolled up wagging their tongues at
The doorstep I keep for you,
Hoping that you will invite my entire family to fill in my Soul.

Robert Rorabeck

To Find Her Play

Creams of eerie pastures- the delicacies behind open
And nude glass,
Like fixtures of lime trees beneath which the stranded mermaids
Bask,
Telling of the times when I used to devour books- when Foxes were young and glazed red
And danced like tailed fire from the open lips of their Story's bright cave:
Now, galloping- robbing banks, I cant even stand too sentences:
I drink liquor to gas the tank,
And I recite to Alma all the palpitations of my bloodied
News:
While her uncle makes live to her aunt back in the pueblo
Where she finished school early
And then went out barefooted on the open rocks and found
The hidden spring where the rattle snaked basks:
And bending, allowed him to kiss her forehead until she was Beautifully scarred: and he was the gentleman
Returned to her neighborhood novella that showed up every Afternoon in her adobe living room,
Chivalrous as a windmill drawing the sweat off wild strawberries,
And entrancing lazy foxes, seeing as she would no longer have to Travel so far a field to find her play.

Robert Rorabeck

To Find Her Way Home

Swallowing the whole penny
As some dogs look up at the strange sun—
And they cannot smell it,
Even as airplanes seem to leap over it:
This is the way that they go,
That they follow—
Some fourlegged fairytale in the pit of my Stomach
Laughing through the pitch-fork forest
That is the desire of her hours—
And she languishes—
A girl with a nose bleed above tree line
And not enough bread crumbs to find her way home.

Robert Rorabeck

To Find Oneself Climbing Towards

The mountains go up and up until they hug themselves
Shivering in the cold and open throats of playboys;
We have climbed up here to see how little that they are selling,
To see the whole jubilation like matches teasing the fire,
Where lost souls have been put to sleep by lightning,
Where little girls have been blown from the tricks of keystones
Into the gentling passes of abyss:
Underneath here the wildflowers dance like leggy and pistilous
Girls;
And they love their short seasons, how they are pollinated by
The demigods of angels- and they dream of fire trucks that they Hear the answer to further down in the water parks of those Dells
Where something is being sold to everyone, and your legs mark the Splits in the concrete like track stars making it easily to lunch;
But it is still something that I do not like to see, the simulacrum that know
But one or two things, and this it does beautifully routine;
And you have never been to my house, and neither have I,
But it is up here somewhere, a worthy destination to find oneself
Climbing towards.

Robert Rorabeck

To Fly Again Away

Boys cuddling in the pools,
And the moon pulls up and has nothing to prove:
Is as round and embarrassed as a midnighted sun:
Goes around the corners,
Eggs on the run; and it feels alright, stealing on the lips of Thunderbirded wine:
Why it feels alright straight into picking time, until finally
All the passions are laid low,
The snakes creep through the ditches that someone forgot
To hoe;
And this is the way she comes, like the lights in my heart,
Or like some many things I have forgotten to tell her that She was to me:
My final rose, and muse: my, alma, sleeping beside me
And making love for only hours in a day:
As if all of a sudden my life turned into a carnival, and I got To kiss and make my wishes upon her lips,
Until all too suddenly she had to fly again away.

Robert Rorabeck

To Forget Their Names

Enmeshed for Pocahontas in the Bible Belt Underneath the breasts of Colorado:
Doing my thing by the canoes pulled like lucky
Feathers by the harvest
Moon,
While the rabbits get out and make eyes
And eat endives,
The larger and grander boats smoking around them,
Gossiping- and gambling afloat
With so many working girls in their steaming
Weathers-
Eyes like cats hungry for the nights of wings-
Who can let them leave the Ground,
Even while their bodies are like orchestras of Graves:
And they can take off over the bosques, and the colonies
Of witches with the failed
Knights like wind chimes in their trees:
They can go where their father still keeps them as little Girls- climbing all upwards
Catching looks from the gods which metamorphosize
Them
And help their brothers to forget their names.

Robert Rorabeck

To Get Away

It is not shallow to want a sun:
To bathe right here in one light or another,
Stolen from this side or that Side of the galaxy:
It is not unwanted to want that terribly
Punctual dénouement:
That I wanted to try out the same and shallow
Estuaries that punctuate the very same Broadsides as these Startling and
These starving poets:
But we will start out for a little while in
Our littlest of paper boats,
Studying the newest cultures,
While they shoot some fireworks into the Sky for my grandfather's birthday—
And underneath our monuments of Anywhere we will try our say of anything—
And we will get together to say our peace
At the dinner table,
While the jet planes of our birthdays cloud
Up the sky, abandoning their presupposing presents,
As they try to get away.

Robert Rorabeck

To Glorious Life

Wearied by her day's long work,
She finally draws away
And prepares for rest.
She looks onward as her
Hands become still—Sunlight
Is falling through the window,
From which she can see her
Children coming towards her,
Their baskets overflowing from the crops
She has planted for them,
Now come to harvest.
Though just silhouettes moving
Amidst the falling light,
She recognizes each of them,
And calls them home to her.
Though weary and unable to Do more, her only wish is
To carry their burdens for them.
She does not think pridefully
Upon her work, now completed,
Her life spread out before her,
A blanket in which each thread is a
Single moment, woven together
The tapestry of her life she has Given to shelter and warmth for others.
Before she goes to rest,
She will use it this final night
To keep her children warm.
So after her sun sets,
She warms them still,
Her kind words and actions
Lightening their thoughts and Lifting their burdens
So that she remains always with them,
A gentle song sung in their hearts,
Mothering them still, sustaining their souls
Until, with the morning,
The meadow reawakens
And springs to glorious life.

Robert Rorabeck

To Go Around

Riding upon the broadening backs of Lushing aphrodisiacs,
As the noonlights spread their petals over the car show,
And the birthing mothers open their mouths and moan
Like weathervanes predicting the holidays:
Until the fruit of their vines disentangles the happenstance
Of the accord of their loins:
And then there is a new face that has to be named,
And the lions petted and tamed behind the fences that the tourists
Barely perceive:
As she wakes up again, marching, the brown skin of my muse
Collecting light and phone numbers;
It happens this way- I can barely get close to her and faces of men
I don't know, just casual shoppers, get obnoxious:
But she is my muse,
And I call to her this way- the unbeautifying butterfly
Collected by the mute wishes of her translucency of flames; -Alma-
And the entire world happens while I am around her, creating the Weathers and its calligraphies;
And she closes her eyes and smiles, dreams of her daughter riding
Merry Go Rounds at a fair that hasn't yet existed,
But to her I promise her, as everything around her happens to go around.

Robert Rorabeck

To Go Inside

Gun of fire-engines
How will you sound while the citrus is yet plucked
And yet round:
How will you echo over the graveyards and pet cemeteries
Of this town:
Even while I go down to the parks in the semi darks after
The gas stations have all closed,
As the roses cloth the anonymous graves of the dead
Working girls
To which the stewardesses become a symbol over:
Flying over
As I wonder if the alligators ever yawn: yawn,
As the kites are strung
As the key deer fawn- speckled, as the corn and the Cantaloupe grow from the coolers
Of make-believe- of almost believable snow:
When my jaw is broken like a cenotaph,
As the windmills yawn,
And her brown arms collide through the perfumes of metamorphosis:
As the tadpoles sing of fairy princesses:
Until we all have to take a step back,
Clutching our lucky rabbits' feet, escaping the kisses of Rattlesnakes- and thunderstorms,
To go inside.

Robert Rorabeck

To Grieve For The Heavens

Fit for a voyage on the tip of my tongue:
My dryer doesn't work anymore- the heavens have lost
Her name:
And she goes to bed with her children draped around her,
Forgetting the tastes of the nuptials of my vines,
The creamy breakfasts and the horses at hot trots
Who seem to pull the weight of the next Day through the mountains,
Pushing whatever savage purple nimbus remains,
And leaving room for a fair so great and so round
That it leaves nothing left to speak for itself:
And the chimneys of the devil's stone arise
Like bottlenecks over the television heads of latchkeyed
Children who sit there postulating fearlessly in their Unspoken for yet living rooms,
And never even hope to think to grieve for the heavens
That they have been missing.

Robert Rorabeck

To Have A Look Around

The ponies had a ride out to Lake Tahoe
To have a look around,
And to kiss the sharks underneath the purring airplanes:
There, the sky was so peaceful and evenly spread,
Like Alma's birthday cake on my bluest bed:
And I had dreams for her in the greenness of her favorite
Color,
And I roamed around sleepy eyed and looked up wet stones
To kiss,
And lay in Alma's lap while the animals played with toys:
Out in the sweaty bliss,
And men rode in off the seven seas, old heroes and ex-marines,
And they became our family and changed,
And slept in the clearest portions of our lake that we filled
With out tears,
And the pine trees spread like Alma's eyelashes reflecting
In the banks of her eyes,
And we fawned there forever, and forgot our goodbyes.

Robert Rorabeck

To Her Abandoned Fairytales

It cannot last and yet I go down
In the name less forever—
In the wells underneath
The heavens and the airplanes walking in them:
Wanting to become a soft sport,
Whistling underneath Christmas tree tents
And tending to learn new vocabulary even while Never having to cross the actual canal
Where my friend the Haitian lives:
What doesn't he know about voodoo and eating faces:
And the Christian billboards give over so
Much light to the pagans,
That the little phosphorescent angels swim in their Dime-store pageantries like the willow-wisps
Of candy-titted angels—
And on their high wire act they have to cross
All of the oceans—on my birthday or on my honeymoon—
While all of the sky is still silver
Cutting like a kitchen knife across the recesses of Hot air balloons,
As the mountains struggle upwards from her bedrooms—
And the heavens fall down forever
Try to kiss and to make love to her abandoned fairytales.

Robert Rorabeck

To Her Forgotten Name

A rain of pedophiles over the soft hearts of the fort,
Where the soldiers are now all but finally gone,
Their fireworks the spent fireworks of a more apoplectic world;
Only one of them remains, and he is like a windmill,
Calling down to the orange groves as across the burnished waves:
He is shouting from far away:
Featureless, a barren king: his wife all the delightful pestilence
Of a midway on parade, all those nubs of lights
And loudmouths guns gone into the grave,
All the fanciful illusions melted like wax into unspent wishes:
And now he sings to her like a cut throat from his high
And cannoned ditches,
Over the opened beds of the conquistadors where the roses
Grow, giving their colors over to her forgotten name.

Robert Rorabeck

To Her Light

And I have this dream of Screaming my mothers name
As a child
In the carport- as it rains:
The frogs laugh at me, the sky throws its Darts.
Airplanes are black phantasms-
And my mother, where is she:
Is she stuck to the black vine with him,
Kissing something that doesn't
Have any feet:
Has she flown across the canal with him
And lost herself in the holly
With the paper airplanes
And forgotten school buses;
And how do the cats cry for her
When they wish to come milking at Her feet?
Do they cry for her the way I cry for
Her-
And how can I go on the fieldtrip without
Her; and the washing machine
And the orange tree in the backyard seem
So empty without her:
And the moon doesn't have anything
To still,
And I have no one to feed me,
Or to hold up my words to her light.

Robert Rorabeck

To Her Love

If the earth grows dry of voice, now this:
Autumn curling through the parks and estuaries of Fairy princesses who are no longer even there;
And it is nice to be working beside the Mexicans,
Making a pittance so as not to despoil my soul:
Working beside Alma too, which means the same thing,
Looking up and getting nose bleeds underneath the southbound
Bellies of the usually unusually leaping airplanes;
And when I drive through her predominantly Hispanic
Neighborhood on my days off, getting so close to her house,
I can see the bleeding of old iron works rising up like
The false petitions of a god who by some fire abandoned
The women of his forest;
And now the heady frames recall a Ferris Wheel of Iron Pyrite, while whatever wishes I once had crawl up to her in my Overworked dreams and dissolve themselves this way
In the avenues of old hats that they have to go immolating the wishes
Of her birthday; and her sister will be coming to work at the Market on Sundays, even while I swear I am leaving to sell
Pumpkins and Christmas trees, as our hemisphere tilts further Away from the wetbacks of the star that gave us the first Instruments that would eventually lead to the knowledge of our science,
Just as my heart would lead me to her love.

Robert Rorabeck

To Hide Their Faces And Weep

The day has a brown river with a need for Going down hill-
The airplanes are making believe they are angels,
While there is someone in Africa far away:
Engines entwine with the hours of the day, and the Faces light up as the bodies
Move in: stewardesses opening up love letters over
My shoulders,
Brown and tan professors humming to the ululating of Their accepting seas:
If I drink anymore maybe I will die, but the mermaids
Will still pet and coo to their otters:
Alma cannot love me: she is finally at home cooking
For her man from Guerrero, the one she flew in with
From so far away;
But at least she doesn't want to hurt me,
And the big engines pretend that they are bullies in the sky,
And the littlest of children get off their discordant
Buses to run along home
And their to hide their faces and weep.

Robert Rorabeck

To Inherit The Earth

And then I will survive forever in nothing
In the absentee places where the highways leave
The Earth
Teaming,
Or I will enjoy the zoos, kissing before
The lips of the albino crocodile,
While the romances who never seem to Enjoy here always seem to embark from
The Earth—
As the weather gets colder, and you seem
To swim further away from you daydreams,
But it doesn't get any prettier—
While then the flowers flow and seem to Die into the river—without any words
Or any other intentions—
They just seem to do this according To the buildings of nothing—and the daylight
Eclipses the unannounced utopias
And my unborn children seem to inherit the Earth.

Robert Rorabeck

To Invite Her Heartbeat Home

I have lost myself the starship because I am
Not marigold-
I have failed like sunbeam tainted on the rust
Of the trailer parks;
Where the little girls wilt like flowers too
Succulent on the chlorine pools;
Like the little Madonnas enmeshed as tricks from
The traveling fair,
All strung out with dwarfish conquistadors and
Their bottle collects on the inflatable rafts;
As if they were magic rugs;
And I have two wrists, as butterflies have their wings;
And everything is paper thin,
As her love and star beams:
And what I am doing again I don't know,
Trying to become more asymmetrical beside the highway
Coiling in the glut;
Underside musseling by the commuters' sea;
And the delta of her grotto's sphere, where if you are
A heavier element you must go;
Where, I helped her move her furniture as if I was her Friend, while the other girls slept-
Trying to pretend I am dying as I drink this beer,
Trying to say I love you to an innocent friend-
A word upon the lips of a coffin epitomizes the human race
Which I despise, though for the brevity of innocence,
I thought to call her near to invite her heartbeat home.

Robert Rorabeck

To Kansas

There is nothing here to describe-
All of your senses in a frenzy of windmills-
Nothing without color, fireworks that weep for
The dead stamens of earthquakes-
A mousetrap of madness, my belt in your teeth,
While we amputate your social engagements:
The buzzards are beautiful, beating around the bush;
And we can kiss and make up in the aloe collapsed
Beside the carport
With the rebar and platoons of frogs and terrapins,
My mother like the Virgin of Guadalupe,
Coming out fresh-titted to be zapped by the open-
Faced extension cord,
Like a water moccasin kissing her shoe-less foot;
And then she is collapsing into Pieta without a child to Hold there,
Juxtaposed next to you and dragonflies,
And she wants what you've got- but when have you Ever cared;
And you make love to your man as the traffic of tourists
Comes in-
The snowflakes are as large as elephants and just as easily
Frightened;
And they are closing the roads down to make a creche of That winter wonderland:
You are above all of our heads, your hands as smooth
And intelligent as beavers dams;
And if you awakened suddenly frightened, and said enough
Of this,
Well then it's only a few well-placed steps to Kansas.

Robert Rorabeck

To Keep Death Warm

Back in the echinopsis of cowboys
Alma sticks her tongue out at me at high noon
In a cathedral of carnivals,
Like gum sticks to the roofs of school buses,
And fifty percent of the crossed legs are Virgins:
In the cafeterias, a play- In the art class, her hands
On wet clay,
Spinning around,
Turning into something really useful:
And on the land trucks:
And in the sky birds. All of it wonderfully colored,
Absurd:
But at night graveyards, cool sacks, leftovers,
Beautiful ashes of cooled embers,
And nocturnal firelight:
The ruby jewel of her eyes, even without warmth:
A tool for suicide,
A rich memory to keep death warm.

Robert Rorabeck

To Keep Such Beautiful Weather

Palm trees waiting for days, whispering the way
They can only do here,
So close beneath the overpasses of her ever burnished
Sea,
And some girls love their football,
But some girls don't love me:
And these are just words folded up on a page, making
No sense or decoration:
They don't even start out in the less than amber period
Before the dawn,
When there is nothing on the television, but the snow
Begins to fall;
And it falls so much that it makes the bicycles well invisible,
Topped over next to the shoe-polish
City like teenage romance,
Something that I cannot remember the taste of,
For the water moccasins in my canals are always making
Such an ochre ball that it is impossible for such weather
To persist underneath their venomous eyes,
Where one or two housewives pass home to cook dinner,
Their heels clicking like a despotic Dorothy,
But it is never enough
To keep such beautiful weather.

Robert Rorabeck

To Kiss The Sea

Parade of purple airplanes with nothing better to Do,
Going up in the sky and kissing clouds who haven't Decided just yet what projection they are:
And it is too far away anyways to know how long they've Made money while skipping school:
They travel across all of the canals so easily, and look
At the rural housewives inhaling as the sugar cane burns,
Their open blouses like offering confections
While the unglued armors of the katydids wait in the Pews of cypress-
And another girl goes to sleep dreaming of becoming A stewardess, as cars pass beneath the overpass
Dreaming of what it will be like to kiss the sea.

Robert Rorabeck

To Leave Behind

Down to the tender moments-
Currents returning to the ocean, traffic in a city
Winnowed into homes
Whose lights our doused: and in the yard,
The cats who somehow make love to the fish,
Like kidnappers with lips of pornography,
Or the lights over New Mexico
After all of the Navajos are inebriated
And hitchhiking along the devil's highway
For a dollar-
And the daughters have turned to salt after looking Back on all that they had to leave behind.

Robert Rorabeck

To Look Her In The Eyes

Not much to her, as the dead lay around
The Alamo—and the ghosts lit the candles of
The phosphorous of the stars,
And the boy who remained surviving,
Cupped his bugle and surrendered to the Mexican army,
But gave to them a bad omen even while he put up
His instruments of lovely equipment,
Reminding them that this one day would be
A ceremony for tourists to build their classrooms,
Their day spas, and their silent campuses—
Where housewives would survive better than The otters—underneath the moon and how she Finally had to look away
Her physical features admitting to her thievery
That the world was once made out of a feral
Joy the men from her high school died for,
And stood up for—saying the pledge of their Allegiances to her daydreams
Without being able to look her in the eyes.

Robert Rorabeck

To Look Into Your Eyes

Cars churn like washing machines in the distance,
Fifteen minutes before new work, scars like bruises on my Temples like orchards being overworked in a furnace;
And the sky going ever upward like drapes in a cathedral,
Like plumes of a forest fire, or the truancy of angels smoking
Underneath all those tall swings the authorities have since Dug up
To make the world a safer place, just so innocent children couldn't Get high enough to look into your eyes.

Robert Rorabeck

To Look Outside

Each world an echo
Restarted from the cacophony of the viaducts:
In time, there are tears
Even from the mountains
And men resurrected who
Only a little while ago
Were sleeping in their cars,
And as the world melted,
Forgetting its different species,
I had time enough to turn on the light
Of my room,
Though I remained too frightened
To look outside.

Robert Rorabeck

To Look Over Her World

This is not Halloween
But this is still Shanghai even some weeks from burning
Fake money to my wife's
Dead grandfather—
And it is past midnight
But the airplane that will take me home
Is still floating in the sky
And not sleeping inside of a pumpkin patch
and while I drink it continues to rain, .
Modestly,
And I have modest dreams
Of where myself and my family will Live once or twice,
Out of the limelight,
Where the vanished arcades must once
Have existed,
In between the fairy tales of Indians
And the race tracks underneath the mountain;
But eventually and for the mean time,
I will just have to close my eyes
And here then
Everything will have to get beautiful—
The rugged clams will have to close over
Her mouthful of pearls,
And sleeping beauty will just have to go
To sleep forever,
While the monsters of forever continue
To look over her world.

Robert Rorabeck

To Lose To Remember

Vaporized until finally hushed:
The vulpine mouths sated off of so many grapes
And housewife breasts:
And the roads again aquamarine, cooling softly and not
So eager for the hours to come after school:
Or any of this, like adolescent boys held up in bedrooms with Their best friends,
The way bottle rockets have made their landings on neighbors'
Roofs, never to fly again:
And the alligators down the stoops of the pool underneath
The ivory sheens of his topless sister enjoying the Comic books and the crenulations of
The pool:
Soon it will all surcease and surrender: these will be the last days
Of high school,
And college will come like a sun shower:
And there will be even prettier things; but they too will disappear,
Leaving us to find some other avenue to romanticize that
We will first have to lose to remember.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make A Grotto Out Of The Carport

Moving further in the mazes of New Mexico, or another heaven- getting further lost
With the Navajos,
Down the backsides of ships of rocks:
Words on your lips as poisonous and stuttering as Rattlesnakes:
Your house, back alone in a daydream of Syphilitic yellows- like girls from China knocking up the cinderblocks above
The freshly mewling kittens-
All the way up to the goldfish in a rainy bowl
Staring back at her with the same sort of eyes
That abbreviate even the mailboxes heading into Dusk-
Your mother stepping over your drunken absence,
Seeming to make a grotto out of the carport,
All sorts of toads serenading her, and even the Turtles singing with blue tongues,
And eyes that go away to hide again.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make A Romance With My Tomb

You have put me here,
Burned and blinded by your fire—I cannot call for A ride home—I only want to drink more
Liquor and wait for you—
Though you are married and taking up all of the Sunshine—
Pieces of enlightenment through the blindness
That surrounds you,
And another crippled airplane touching down-
I swore I saw you diving with the swans
As winter returned.
Now you make a throne beneath the ice
That tries to make a romance with my tomb.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make A Together

Slipping heretofore back and forth from
The general
And the specific, I wish to try my hand at comparing
The greatest things to you:
Alma;
I want Jove and the greatest gods to steal you away,
Even while I drive around with you on our homeopathic and Far fetched honeymoons,
Leaping across the blue or green graveyards like fifteen year
Old boys,
As I admire you ass, and all of the profundity of the profound
Nothingness my admiration for you surceases
Into my art form, or lack there us:
And I let us pretend that there grows up there strictly around
That little hut of the albino crocodile there at the zoo
After we had made love only one time-
Even though that very evening and very sincerely we would make Love again,
Even though my uncle would take the fruit market back from My parents,
Making them move back to Arizona and my dogs:
Just as you would have to move back to him nightly, in that overly
Mortgaged hatched,
Even though we've now made love approaching some two dozen
Times, though it hardly seems enough;
And the carriages are still wild and migratory, and cursing up
The heavily penumbrae slopes which just seem to go up and up
As if approaching the summit of some sincere adversary:
But until that time, I will still hold my breath
While we see different movies in the same movie house, our Whispering bodies still whispering to each other, and blowing
Across each of our stolen bones incorrectly as if we both are together
Waiting for the opportune time to make a together of our most important Wish.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make Believe

The sky cattles- up yip,
If that is what it does: the sky looks stormy while we
Have all gone indoors,
And my parents are coming home, and turning around,
And looking for baseball games:
They are bringing me my dog, and I can barely breathe:
The beautiful crenulations of the seas continue
On for many days, up thrusting, and showing their Wares:
Looking just as beautiful as any housewives, turning through the Showers up thrust around the maypole,
Curtaining ponies- and the entire world settles around the Basest of elements, the basalt around the pony's
Eyes,
While orchards await the blue gills to storm through the tenements
At their roots;
Even while all of their daydreams are right here and curling up
Around the sub tenements of the adulterous knees;
As the puppies jump yip wanting some salt
From her nubile games,
Hanging out of the windows,
Like a dowry of Siamese orchards, fruits awaiting at the end of Her games;
And her belly is a coiling misuse, echoing sometimes like a baby
Crying- and the sky echoes just what it does,
The city proving that the cats are only here to make-believe.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make Believe

The sky cattles- up yip,
If that is what it does: the sky looks stormy while we
Have all gone indoors,
And my parents are coming home, and turning around,
And looking for baseball games:
They are bringing me my dog, and I can barely breathe:
The beautiful crenulations of the seas continue
On for many days, up thrusting, and showing their
Wares:
Looking just as beautiful as any housewives, turning through the Showers up thrust around the maypole,
Curtaining ponies- and the entire world settles around the Basest of elements, the basalt around the pony's
Eyes,
While orchards await the blue gills to storm through the tenements
At their roots;
Even while all of their daydreams are right here and curling up
Around the sub tenements of the adulterous knees;
As the puppies jump yip wanting some salt
From her nubile games,
Hanging out of the windows,
Like a dowry of Siamese orchards, fruits awaiting at the end of Her games;
And her belly is a coiling misuse, echoing sometimes like a baby
Crying- and the sky echoes just what it does,
The city proving that the cats are only here to make-believe.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make Diana My Bride

Words drooling on the bone:
What is the moon doing but pulling up the bed sheets
Of tide,
After salty coitus,
Leaving all of the anemones shivering like pomegranates
In a cold and wearisome sun;
And I have good friends again, because I am slightly beautiful: I am good for getting drunk with,
And getting girls done:
I wear the dress code of ancient planets- My shoes
Have no laces.
I can be folded into cul-de-sac, or spit shine your beautiful
Sister's braces;
And the day is young; and the day is young, and all the Glaciers are just the tears of crocodiles;
And I want to take you on miles of miles of simpering fun:
I want to sit for strange photos with Dianita on my lap;
And then at night, all of your ancestor's lights blown
Out,
Kiss and throttle her tongue, make wishes, and burp her young:
All the tadpoles of ancient and ferocious rivers;
Now I am the conquistador, and I am the Indian Giver,
And I will make Diana my princess,
And we will eat together with the cannibals, and play bumper
Cars with the bodies of our two young mammals:
For Diana's ride are the plumes and cabbages of one sweet
Ride;
And for Diana I would doom anything, polishing my skeleton
To make Diana my bride.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make Her Mine

Looking up all holidays across the napes of Censual trees: you could say I've seen my mother here,
But I disbelieve:
The muse is elusive, brown bodied in the trackless skree,
Brushing the borderlines that were never drawn:
She came up lactating all of the calendars and golds from Mexico,
And now this has become my sport, to echo up the shadows
Of her unglamorous caves, all the passes that she has Survived from, nicking her feet too across the switchbacks
Of alligators and rattlesnakes
To arrive here and without fanfare in the pinprick of our America: she says that by the wells of her ancestry,
It is all that they ever talk about:
But when they get here, to my old neighborhood, they find out
It is not so much:
But she still kisses my mouth before or after closing time,
And she practices to become a citizen: my Alma,
Brownly damseled, she wishes that I would not write about her
So much: but I am like a caged animal,
And this is my lunch- and so I must awaken to her on time,
And kiss and growl and caracole her lovely instruments in the Insatiable hopes to make her mine.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make Him Real

Alma can never leave her family- and this is how she wakes up
In her little room,
Not knowing how to swim: her bellybutton filled with distemper
And the saltwater tears of all of her unfortunate unicorns-
And she wants a new bosom for Christmas;
As I remember way back when, four or five months ago
And the virgin white panties she wore the first time we made love:
And how she fixed her self up for me,
Like a child of brown coffees, and laughing in the caesuras of our Juvenile and open graves:
And it has been fun, the promises I have broken each successful time
We have made love,
The feral excitements I have gathered from her throats, the hickies
Like boy scout badges she has given my collar bones and limbs-
And the nights I've been tried spending myself alone,
Wanting to look her up:
And how we have lived together across so many streets: how I bought
Her a bicycle and had to return it, because she found out she would never Have the time:
And the time we went to the beach, and I held her up in the waves and Kiss her mouth and laughed because she couldn't swim but fitted against Me like two pieces of furniture that were a set,
With the tourists looking on: or how very early on in our love making,
My parents lost the fruit market
While we were at the zoo: Alma, that was only the second time we made love-
Now look what I have done to you,
Though your children are your life and it is still two months before Christmas- you are my life, and I cherish you- your soul is the symmetrical Trail that I follow from morning until noon:
I would wish to commit suicide without the familiar lights of your laughing
Cathedral, and my art is brandished by your soft and shaven fleshs;
As you come over to my house like the spendthrift light through the stained Glass in a church's transom:
Through you, I have become familiar with the Virginsita of Guadalupe,
And I kiss and bless her, and follow you home through the many wishes
Of my thoughts,
Like a wooden boy distended from so many lives, hoping to burry his final Truth in your fibrillating architectures to make him real.

To Make It Known

Striking out like the venom of a favorite color:
And I get drunk again: lose my promises: try to figure out the old
And vulgar sins of becoming for a little while
More beautiful:
Words without gods or presidents lying in the wishing wells of Their death beds:
Like bloodied rabbits in the suburban grasses while the Red toothed dogs are smiling:
Old words of luckless friends vanishing or selling Christmas trees
While the bodies ache far across the swaybacked wishbones
Of all of those mountains:
Forgotten muses selling wine working on their second children
And their mortgages:
While the luckless three legged rabbits leap, frightened by
The din of triangles who
Are doing their best to make it known at supper time.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make Love To The World

Wind through the palmettos sounds like
My mother's footsteps,
Sounds like the trafficking of beautiful patrons
Through my sleep;
And today I rode a will a real felon so he could Buy new trailer parts for My father,
And I thought of all that my venal muse had
To say:
How she would like to be with another man and
His other woman,
And the chickens kept time in the sky,
And even the headless ones were beautiful,
As I counted the hours of the day,
Thinking too of beautiful women in Colorado,
Women who could never be sold
Nor defeated,
Women who could take all of Africa and turn it into Holland for Joe;
And I thought of the tall Blackman James, from Kenya, and how he keeps on making me
Miss Kenya even if I have never been there,
Because he is so nice;
And I dismissed socialism,
And I pleased myself, but was too busy to Think of buying a house,
But one day soon I will have a home and my dogs
Will come running to me from Arizona,
And the winds will advertise like leaping tigers in the Sky, floating across the wings of airplanes like Hungry lovers,
Like flowers who open and close throughout the day
Unsure of how they should continue to make Love to the world.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make Love To You

The bodies are really here, terrifying through the shadows:
And I am sweating through all of my scars
Laying potbellied on the couch I bought last week at faith farms:
But I have no face other than in you,
Alma:
You are all the proof I need, your silhouette showing up in the dreams
That try to preach to anyone:
And when I awaken each morning, I can see through the great bay windows
Of my house,
Past the cataracts of the fox-tailed palms,
To the power lines and to the airplanes leaping away:
Eventually they get to the spot where they have no more wounds
And can hover together like love bugs pulling their bodies
Apart and make amends with one another in the sky:
In the spot where we cannot believe, and then I clean and dress,
And hope to find you awakened and in the fruiteria, moving around with The brilliances of dust:
Your body so brown beneath the leaping airplanes that have no business being
There,
And you standing out against the streams of traffic;
You in the sixty degrees of my line of sight, twice that of most alligators:
And I saw a coral snake today before she went away;
And I just wanted to make love to you,
Alma: I just wanted to make love to you, Alma.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make Room For Themselves

Employing myself in the graffiti of those hands,
I toss this world, and make pearl-glue:
I sew into the carport where the sailboats
Lie emasculated and jealous;
And I hold out until I can drive again to visit those Plush houses of red velvet,
The girls tattooed from Spain, or from the discothèque,
Up and like pretty juniper from their hostels,
Trying to burn wet logs while their knees are chattering,
Waiting for some roof to stop moving,
Or stop whispering of the traffic that drives its Apathetic ribbons;
And the mountains are just as long and uneven as an Impossibly solvable serpent,
The candles entrained in a mask of cold-hearted daycare;
And I've been singing to them of my wealth,
To make myself feel as beautiful as their tremulous shadows,
Like all the beasts trapped in the surf awaiting their
Time,
When all they wanted was something hardly empirical,
Pushing the ghosts from the red pits of junked cars,
Displacing the shucked bodies of yesterday's crustaceans to make Room for themselves tonight.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make Sure That You Will Never Die

I get drunk in the sweet graveyards of your Legs,
Alma, and I mine for gold with the canaries of my lips:
I give you besos
While your cousins pick clean the mangroves;
And I invite you into my house and kneel for you
Before the Virgin of Guadalupe:
I kiss the brown poles of your body the adventures have mishap-ed
And disappeared up;
And your roses have died in my foyer, and you have only been Bowling once,
But I love you, and the silence your lips give me,
And the sweat of a humid Florida:
I feel as if I awaken in your back yard every morning,
And I enjoy just sitting in your car, and watching your eyes
On me:
Are they just the transoms for a cruise ship your slender body
Delights up:
It seems to swim all the way up to the kitchens of heaven where Your Rosa is waiting,
Because I know you can never leave her; and cross my heart
As I sit down to my cine that you will serve me
Tomorrow:
That you are so beautiful, and I will work like a beast around the Slender humidity of your dun equators;
And I swear by all the low flying saints and airplanes, that I shall do my best to make sure that you will never die.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make You Mine

Build up your stores by the dozens
Because I have great legs;
Helped out by my dogs I yet can carry a Forest so far on my back,
My black jeans slimming:
There are only so many candles on a cake,
And verbs are awful things,
The way they wish to do upon the empiricisms
Like you wish to do upon,
And yet you are still a real beautiful girl:
I assure you without a doubt you are very real,
And even if it finishes me I will take what
I needs to build you the proof,
But you must be ready, a hoarder of wine;
And you must lay off kissing your husband,
Because I will have to learn to do the bruises
If I am going to make you mine.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make You Wet

Grandfather will have a new poem this Weekend,
But I won't be the one who gives a dime for
His tombstone,
And I am almost gone,
While the intelligentsia could give a damn-
They don't even know who I am,
But I still go on swinging my thing:
My sword, my gun, my pen:
To rust on after midnight because I have seen
Kelly naked:
The second or third girl I loved,
And she has five or so children, and they all
Have guns,
And race horses,
And they cannot lose, because they have a beautiful
Mother I want to go down under the crocodiles.
The bruise:
And all the night is flighty and all the night is good,
And I just want to run my engine nightly under her
Goddamned hood:
Painted up like a Celtic woman, someone who makes Love to his aunt,
While the nuclear engines are ignited,
And the feral supplants the land of shopping malls and Universities of well placed granite:
And I just want to love her,
Or I just want to fill her up:
I have been away from home for so long,
Just to feel her warm tits squeezed like utters in my Grasp would be enough,
With so far to go:
If my face could look good for one night under the moon,
Down by the trough of the milkmaid's song,
I could have her good in the mowed
Grass:
It wouldn't take long:
Kelly, the girl I named my cat after, my most Feral and antisocial pet,

I want to get to know you
And to make you wet.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make-Believe

The sky cattles- up yip,
If that is what it does: the sky looks stormy while we
Have all gone indoors,
And my parents are coming home, and turning around,
And looking for baseball games:
They are bringing me my dog, and I can barely breathe:
The beautiful crenulations of the seas continue
On for many days, up thrusting, and showing their
Wares:
Looking just as beautiful as any housewives, turning through the Showers up thrust around the maypole,
Curtaining ponies- and the entire world settles around the Basest of elements, the basalt around the pony's
Eyes,
While orchards await the blue gills to storm through the tenements
At their roots;
Even while all of their daydreams are right here and curling up
Around the sub tenements of the adulterous knees;
As the puppies jump yip wanting some salt
From her nubile games,
Hanging out of the windows,
Like a dowry of Siamese orchards, fruits awaiting at the end of Her games;
And her belly is a coiling misuse, echoing sometimes like a baby
Crying- and the sky echoes just what it does,
The city proving that the cats are only here to make-believe.

Robert Rorabeck

To Make-Believe Where The Trees Never

Dancing lights in the summer,
While I am just trying to live like a dog,
But your picture books are golden:
They live so long,
Slung over the shoulders of the canal,
Pretending to grow up and to be beautiful,
And you truly are
A goddess
All strung out and carrying your backpack-
And I will have to see you tomorrow,
And pretend to be you teacher,
But now, all strung out,
Maybe I love you even more than
My muse,
As the zoos slumber- don't you know that
They do,
And it all becomes a quieted epitaphs:
Yes, and they don't even have to sing to Themselves,
But it quiets for awhile so you can almost Here the angels whispering underneath the traffic
As we take her for awhile
In the echoing river walks of traffic,
While the dragonflies stand jewel-chested
Beautiful in a make-believe where the trees never Have to change.

Robert Rorabeck

To Me Anyway

All the story does it as if it was told,
And there is nothing new about it, and I am hung over:
Maybe I am even well hung; maybe I am even black
And well hung,
Given to the proportion of my phone calls,
And how you haven't answered me, just as I haven't Answered you,
Just as this isn't football, Kelly: just as this is even a new Game,
And you haven't as yet really been playing; and I am
As of yet cold and all a foot,
And this really isn't a mystery, because I am still all strung out
On rum,
So I haven't as yet considered all of the things you haven't
Yet been saying to me:
And yet, I know you will as yet will:
Say to me nothing, Kelly, because you are just a lucky Catch, Kelly: what are you really, underneath the rain and all of The hedgerows:
What is this satire you haven't yet been complaining about;
And maybe I am fully done, maybe I am so beautiful in angora
As to be what the other ladies have already been talking about:
Now while my mother's typewriter flumes,
I am like my very own Yosemite: I am coming home, and even Though I am not quite beautiful enough for you, Sharon,
The path are as easy as they are known:
And I am still young and struggling; and I still love you,
And this is the ocean of your early morning, so that by tomorrow
You might not even recognize me, because you are always so beautiful.
Maybe even by tomorrow Hollywood will have spilled away just How beautiful you are to me anyway.

Robert Rorabeck

To Me With Kisses

It flips over in good pools all over the world:
Her sisters write to me, thanking me for the strawberries I Bought for Alma on Valentines
That she shared with them, one for each of her beautiful
Sisters-
And she calls me herself, my muse- and thanks me,
But doesn't call me all of Sunday:
Her husband has taken her phone away and may be kidnapping
Her back into Mexico:
I read fantastical short fiction all the time while I wait for her:
I loose myself in the sunlight of my little yard,
As katydids disregard their seasonal armors on the armpits
And the thrombosis of the Kumquat tree:
Holding my breath- counting the zeros poorly armored in the Sky,
And the ants killed namelessly by little boys- for Monday,
When she might lose herself from her family again,
Coalesce my little brown muse inside my little house,
And make love on more time,
Like a joyful train stealing around a Christmas tree- returning
To me with kisses and haunting me wonderfully-
Even if she can never love me.

Robert Rorabeck

To Metamorphose

Now they have facts to imbibe their sounds:
And it feels very real, as the sea caresses the forts even while
There are no more tourists around:
And they have gone away from the orchards, to swap out
Apples for Disney World:
And they have been breathing anyways all of their candles Underneath the roller coasters and across all of the Canals that I used to bask in underneath the pine trees and beside
All of the blue gills,
Sending all of my kisses and all my cursing to the girls who
I guess once lived there,
Gilled and hiding out and eating pinecones: the gold around
Their wrists fluttering there and holding out
For their families to swim in on their canoes:
And for the princesses to become so white and milky, their blue
Eyes standing out like tears, cursing me for turning away
And finding my muse from Mexico: my soul, my Alma:
Even though on Sunday she never calls,
And I have to go and find all of my movies alone: though I never Stop thinking about her, or cutting my wishes for her deeper Into my wrists- my symmetry drinking its liquors and blessing in its House, and holding its breathe like a carnival of fish for My love to metamorphose into spouse.

Robert Rorabeck

To Metamorphosis

Then they have another song for you—
As their fingers are dying—
Spiders exhumed alongside the traffic:
As the same sun flickers
Torrentially—then you know it is him
And he will never awaken into you:
This song is your pilgrimage I write from My gut, like tadpoles wishing
To metamorphosis into you, knocking:
Don't you know they are here:
All of your princes, waiting for you to Let them into their truest form with'
Kisses,
As it rains over your shoulders when you
Take a fieldtrip to the museum—
Until another day is over,
And you return to the deformity you take
Every night in bed with him.

Robert Rorabeck

To My Comely Love

She has whims, and they change
While I drink sake:
She wears all of my white gold I bought from her
Aunt,
Who ran down to Miami, where everything comes From Cuba,
Or well- Oh well, Mexico:
And the night fights itself; and it curls around and sleeps
With mailboxes,
While the housewives are all fetched, and the baseball
Games are pleasured-
She changes the rings on her fingers anyway: my alma,
But beautiful brown soul: she is twenty four years old
But no older than five,
And the jeans she wears are just as tight as how she wants
Me to pull her hair:
But she doesn't want me to plant the magic beans in her:
Not now anyways:
But we are always getting married tomorrow, tomorrow:
And I plant dreams in her,
That curl around her five years of brown mind like a Voyage she is just learning the tongue to speak
To provide recompense
For the things that I can never give to her, that she is still Waiting around to receive:
Since everything comes to my comely love in time.

Robert Rorabeck

To My Dogs

Lancelot turned out the lights
So I could tell S- I loved her,
And she didn't even care that she cut her
Finger
At the joint between here and there.
She got so rich she bought the sky,
And finally found no reason to last forever.
We were all doing very good then-
We were saving animals,
And the rivers were so frozen I could hold
Her hands and gallop-
And the trees, how impossible to describe,
And yet they seemed like her, S-
They held her gaze while we walked in their Wild birth,
And cracked and exploded with heartbreak,
Like hoary fireworks,
While the other knights piled up without end-
And I went back home,
Empty handed, heartbroken, but to my dogs-
I thought of S-

Robert Rorabeck

To My Fingerprints

Hesitating beneath the slash-pines
Where the paper airplanes in their changing rooms
Fall—
Starting a kind of kindergartener's fire—
The hobos laugh and fart
And sling back more wine:
And the children of the blue color workers diadem the Communal pool:
I suppose you haven't seen us here while I was Writing to you,
Chivalrous and diademed in witch craft:
When becoming venal, trying to telephone you to Come down from your sorority's
Hall: anyways,
Naked sunlight falls upon the naked back of a rattlesnake,
Professors ride their bicycles home:
Adversaries cross the roller-skating rink,
Turning it into a pugilistic ballroom,
And the knights in the séances dance with death:
Dance with death,
While the marionettes slip into their lovers jaded
Bedrooms, and according to my fingerprints—
Have it all-

Robert Rorabeck

To My Old Neighborhood

Divine providence returned me to my old neighborhood
Just on the other end of Southern Boulevard
Not to win the lottery but to fall in love
With a girl from Guerrero Mexico: who the same old
And lucky dog had taken her so far this way
Herself,
Until we were like two butterflies perched in the same petal
Enjoying the same romance of our games of Love, neither wishing to return to the homes that once knew
Us
And the loved ones who had forgotten us to the steps
Of graveyards;
But only for the soft bliss in our tomorrows, holding hands
And driving together, sometimes east, toward the sea:
Which is always the best way: but you can only go so far
Before you are returned by the memories who refuse to Forget the furtive clothing, that like fire we were Trying to disrobe.

Robert Rorabeck

To My Sorrows

They keep their moonlight burning to my sorrows—
So very soon I will have to digress into the crypts of the banshees:
The dead girls brushing their hair—
And maybe they will not be able to survive tomorrow—
Maybe they will keep themselves like butterflies who have their wings
Folded over until the next sun shower—
And then they will suddenly be overcast in their virginity—
And then they will be birthing new children on the east side of Mexico and in their dawn—
While she doesn't read, breathing into the healthy numbers of The goldfish that only know one avenue of a canal to Survive—
Blimps, showing off their catastrophes and how they suddenly
Came to know the edge of the world—there they are standing at The very precipices—like two daughters who cannot keep Track of themselves—
Don't you see how beautiful I am now—or are you still asking what Happened—as the school spills into the sky,
And I continue writing books that are impossible for me to Understand.

Robert Rorabeck

To No Avail

Statures of Christmas trees always being sold
Into twilight to a zoetrope of high heeled housewives
As the foxes fish quite constantly from the side steps
Of the canal where the green and copper
And jade coffins lie like a Ferris wheel of unspeaking
Folklores- where the animals are lazy shoppers,
Picking flowers and leaving their trails:
And the sky and its hobos does what it always seems
To do, while the children- the children get out of School, going home to homes abandoned looking for Other things to sell- as I look into your eyes-
Into your brown, brown eyes, oh muse, but to no avail.

Robert Rorabeck

To Other Boys

Pour these imperfections to my throat:
Drown and swell the song birds that she pretended to give
To my eyes:
There is nothing more imperfect than my art:
Nothing more perfect than my pain: my pain like all of the Gathered memories souped up from forgotten ancestors
And made to swim around
A branded aquarium: and given the color of slaves:
It feels this way, coming back and forth-
Retinues that spill across the climbs, getting nose bleeds further
Up, transferring over the flowers that have died for her
And have been put away:
Here is just another hour of my disease, sluiced and lost
In the wasted affliction of my disease: as I dream of houses that She can never believe: my, Alma, acquitted of all of her states of Mexico; she came this way like a butterfly reborn
And spread her shoulders into a new world that called Itself America and promised her everything because she was The toy motor in its soul; but all she did was laugh and laugh
As she did summersaults in its cage and kissed and made love
To other boys until it could do nothing else
But look away.

Robert Rorabeck

To Other Women

I can follow you on our bicycles for quite some while:
We can move across the intercostals and further away from your Husbands,
And I will still be afraid of losing you; it seems that your body
Can never tire, carried by the transoms of your blue eyes
Like engines in the sun; and I could lay you down in my house
And you could never move, but I know the moment my eyes
Were distracted from the lagoons of your flesh which seemed to Be perfectly tamed, you would disappear like beautiful water lapped
By the daylight, like all of these neighborhoods which used
To be so full and pullulating- They have to be going somewhere,
And maybe that is where you return, your dresses molting
Like cicadas or drunken prom queens across the front yards
While the palm trees swayed and the cars slept with all of their quieted
Windows closed and darkened
While other men made love to other women deep, deep through the houses
That I am afraid I would surely lose you in.

Robert Rorabeck

To Our Dead Relatives

Poem a version

Of what was mentioned to happen
In art class if I were divided
And had the chance to hold hands with the girl
I love
To kiss her while a butterfly's wings divided
Over Mexico
And strut out and got horny into middle of
An august festival and a looked around
At all the open things they saw
Like windows on vines to which the foxes
Smiled
And danced, preening: and later on there
Was certainly roller coasters and water falls
To which I took all of my students to
And we made a day of it, holding hands
And flipping head over heels
Drinking libations to our dead relatives, and Try to forget about all of our days at school so far

Robert Rorabeck

To Pay For One More Hour

They'll put their pledges into your eyes—
Yes they will, and then you'll drive out of the parking lot
Of the mall,
Or your own driveway—just like the pieta half hidden
In the estranged corsages on the side of your house—
And then won't it be flat out painful—
And won't you guess, or can't you imagine:
Tomorrow, another day at school,
Or another borrowed dollar to pay for one more hour—
And the ship is wrecked, its beautiful negligee torn—
And the wolves stand alone
All but kissing your name.

Robert Rorabeck

To Pen Names Of Other Mirages

Flowers given to pen names and other
Mirages—
The savage boys who wear headdresses of
The most religious feathers,
And the rainstorms chant
Over the pin wheeling houses—
In the middle of the week,
While the schools are alive
The flea markets don't even exist—
Soft brown mothers well hidden in
The kitchens of your apiaries,
These are for you, I have found outside
While I just so happened to be Skipping stories—
Crippled though beautiful presents you
Would never find without me,
That you don't even see now
As I am holding them out to you,
And standing in your house—
Soon the star will rise above those rafters,
And you husband will come back home,
Having climbed down from
His latter—and aren't you too busy,
Even now—you have to call your children
Back inside and do your laundry—
You have to turn your back towards me,
And continue in these avenues of your Usual gardens without me.

Robert Rorabeck

To Pitiful Cinders

You're so mean-
I guess because your beauty is so ancient
An aphrodisiac,
You get to select your men by slaughtering them
First,
Decorating your forest's sorority with their Pitiful guts
Along the extended pine needles which are always quivering,
Alive and thorned,
They never lay off the green:
And it is your church, and it does you good on Sundays,
And the work days in between,
And I can feel you now spilling my guts to feed the angelic
Pigs,
The cloven hooped saints made practical by remote
Viewing,
And I get a little drunk as I fly like a torn but patriotic
Color over so many states to find you,
And to lay like a forgotten ornament on the side of your Table:
I can almost feel you beginning to pick me up to study me,
But I am not beautiful,
And there you go taking me down again,
Making me worship you even after the fire has burned
To pitiful cinders.

Robert Rorabeck

To Pleasure Her

I traffic in star-crossed lovers:
I cut them up and snort them and then look up
And try to match the stare of other
Planets,
Who go about according to the motions of the Very same sea that we have right here
In our backyards,
The sea of trailer parks comes to me,
Effortless, where truants are smoking green stuff
Underneath the recesses of her viaduct,
Never accounting for their songs,
And the bicycles lay in sleeping harems,
Stolen and made to run into her
Dresses which mote and dudgeon their bells,
And make their tassels somnambulate;
It makes them as lazy as liquor,
Like starfish who never crawl- and she never loved
Me,
But only moaned when I pulled the plug;
And when I walked away, she moaned again and finally Did come,
For another boy who I thought I was, the perfect shadow
I left behind to pleasure her.

Robert Rorabeck

To Procure The Golden Rule

Aplomb in the folds of this theatre that was
From a high school I imagine just because:
Lost in the early day gloom in the student parking
Lot sleeping through math or baseball games all afternoon:
Like a spell tossed down to the canal into the rosy
Glove of some crocodile, while the housewives
Were bathing in the sunshine for awhile- like bottle rockets
They was, into a mortgaged cathedral, filling their Doom: they made love to no one in every room all Afternoon, while the daylight molested their wine glasses
They bought for themselves, and the jasmine bloomed
Healthily, perfuming the nighttime when the foxes
Stole their hands out of their silky gloves and took them walking
Across the vermilion carpets of mowed grass
And down to the pastures of the canals which proved
To be their mortality's overpass: the cenotaphs of conquistadors
Sleeping there in undersea ballrooms, the alligators waiting
There, tearless, but happy for the venison raised
Without a thought from their dayrooms- as their young Children skipped off again into any school,
And they once again set out to procure the golden rule.

Robert Rorabeck

To Profit From Your Return

Imperfect whispers beneath my eyes,
Words like the tongues of monsters kissing between The thighs,
Wanting to swap meet with you, handy and cruel,
In lies since kindergarten; but the sky in autumn gave
You better romance:
Children and new cars and church:
You propositioned your boss in a lurch, but you
Married the cousin of far away.
When I was functional, and had a girlfriend,
We named our cat after you- She didn't even know.
Eventually she married and ran away and got together
With her lost tribes and made out in law school-
Thus on and on, like the lyrics of a merry-go-round,
And the cat was eaten by coyotes,
I bedded all the waves that I could, but I was never good
At science except what came before all of this history,
The path of words that might have led me through the hills
Of Christmas trees where the dragon was sleeping with
All my friends, in the lost civilizations of junkyards;
It could have been an empirical victory, but I couldn't understand
How to carry you around with me, a miracle that was always Changing- You were like so many other girls when thrown Up into the sky, what you turn into has wings
And definite migratory patterns, and you leave me in the bright Lights which you know aren't real,
Spinning, spinning, with no hope to profit from your return.

Robert Rorabeck

To Promise To Smile

The great waterfalls flow and take their clothes off
For men:
The cars stop and gawk, and the tourists grin:
And when I sleep and without motion I move,
You are there holding my hand above the feral boys:
You are there every time,
Fearless in the darkness while in the daylight there is fear:
You are the caress of an undiscovered species:
While the throats of the simulacrum enjoy their cheap liquors
One or two times,
I think in my cells I can always enjoy you, while the rainbows
Start and stop in mirages across the carports in the sky,
You are a mailbox that can never be touched,
Gleaming with her throat open and blushing like a naked
Song bird:
You are here, Alma, and you made it so far without moving A muscle:
All you had to do was to promise to smile.

Robert Rorabeck

To Prove To You

I walk to your house some nights, Alma, and sleep
Across it,
Because that is my migration, even if it makes you angry and Less likely to talk to me;
You still come to me in the few hours that you can and become A tiny brown marionette whose strings are like
The spit of caterpillars I succeed from:
And do those things for you that you always had planned:
Instead of watching televisions with your family,
I go outside and still the lactating flowers from the landscaping of Creamy white housewives:
And then I gallop along the shadows of waves so gallantly and so
Cruel,
To cut myself through the broken promises of your front yard;
And lie there famishing and exasperated like something cruelly punished,
Just to bring to you all that I have thought of you:
And to prove to you all that you truly are.

Robert Rorabeck

To Race Against The Abuse

In blue napalm wakes up singing to the pueblos
Until the wreckless butterflies are nearer,
And I have no more songs outside of the shopping
Malls of Walmart:
Even after I have stolen so many baseball caps,
And I am here just because I will every soon
Be married and then this will be Disney World
While you have been looking at me from the poolside
With your blue eyes just because:
And then this will become your satiated cannibalism:
This will be all that there is inside of hurricanes
Just because the stacks are stacked against
The Mexicans, while I have loved you from the giant Halls and labyrinths of Mexico:
Alma, I have loved you so far: I am here: here,
Standing in for the Minotaur, wanting to be
As beautiful as to be in a soap opera- a telenovela
For you Alma, while your children fixate together
Upon you breasts just because like hummingbirds
I am here- I am here for you, Alma and my Parents are superheroes while the lightning falls-
In the incest's of waterfalls for you, Alma- Yes,
Here it is, and yes it falls- Alma, coloring against
The walls- like the pornographies of your daughter,
As I was just here laughing with the thirty thousand Years of stolen history, trying to get it up with
The waterfalls and the wildflowers while my ancestors
Go to sleep against your racetracks- while it all Lines up speaking up against your old boyfriends-
Powerful if obtuse- and they are here Alma- revving
Their engines and getting ready, ready,
Ready- To race- race again the abuse.

Robert Rorabeck

To Rain Like This

It still happens to rain like this,
Into the avenues that forecasted ablutions—
Even while the pale, blue pilgrims were
Yet echoing to the swing-sets of the wishing wells—
Wishing and cursing that they should live forever—
While my gut bended outwards,
Even after the Catholic and Columbian girls of My midday playgrounds seemed to disappear—
That I was still beckoning,
As I seemed to do forever—poltergeist or Pomegranate, still sitting here whilst
My wife brushed her teeth:
There is no bigger narrative than that—
And all of the disenfranchised girls in the world
Can still dance in the ballrooms of the citrus;
And I can play amongst them
Cradled with my firstborn child—
And so I'll love you until the echoes of the pussywillows,
Or I won't even start out—weeping,
Weeping—the day and the sunlight bleeding their Forever obtrusions of echoes.

Robert Rorabeck

To Remember Any Of Our Names

I still think of you like a Chinese
Dinner is South Florida. It is so difficult to learn
Your tongue even though your parents
Are so worried about you,
And I am coming home to my world,
Leaving you pregnant and waiting for an interview
That will bring you to me in a few weeks to A month:
You thought my father's eyes were green:
And you said so repeatedly—Maybe he was the Better man for you, if only he wasn't so perpetually married
To my mother:
And we visited temples together—and made love,
Burring our heads in the old beliefs of junked cars—
And I kept getting drunkardly—on and off during The weekends,
And even while I am preparing to leave,
Shanghai is expecting a typhoon—maybe she will come
And drown out all of my other wishes,
But otherwise I am going home and wont you have To follow me eventually—
Down into those cyanide viaducts where it just so Happens we used to skip school,
And spend all of our otherwise wishes daydreaming,
And drooling in streams which otherwise ran to swing sets
And silver foxes that continued breathing long after high school
Without ever having to remember any of our names.

Robert Rorabeck

To Respond To Me

There is a lesson in my body
As it catches blue gills- then it lounges and thinks of Evil,
While the rattlesnake digests the heavy rabbit:
Pregnant and filled with magic tricks:
And even during school,
I can go out in the infinite sun and touch myself and Watch the way that the housewives run:
Back home to supper, to spill their goods, leaving trails
Behind them of betrayed damsels,
Of little girls yet lost in the woods:
And these words form like hernia- like the soft bellies
Of fears who come to a boil in the outside world,
While the spokes turn in place:
The static motion that defines the race:
Like windmills sipping the hijinx of the sea too:
And that is where we go when we stumble upon water fountains
And our guts spill like the inclinations of roe;
And they seem to be finding their own way through the sea:
And she is there doing breast strokes underneath a fountain that spigots
Its guts to a summer murdered glade who refuses
To respond to me.

Robert Rorabeck

To Return Home For Her

Empty as the way to
The trailer with the horses,
Or the field with
The horses- abbreviating- starting out
Like this,
As from one's familiar town,
Getting far enough to get Through Indians
And then through a few bushwhackers-
But eventually distracted:
Maybe, they think,
They will never make love to her again:
Her gold necklace lost
In the knife lips of the palmettos grown
Over the conquistadors
Who laid down there finally in the middle of The sixteen hundreds:
That was as far as their journey went:
No Disney World,
Not even Pocahontas- and it rattles out,
While some young lover,
Maybe even my muse, waits at the third
Cinder block
Up to the little house on Haverhill, the Night trilling,
Expectant, and the more insouciant things
Losing themselves on the naked
Trunks of cypress-
The carport as silent as an empty church-
For her husband- or for anyone
To return home for her.

Robert Rorabeck

To Return On Time

Succession of crepuscule into night on my littlest of Streets.
My vocabulary becomes dimmer, while the mailboxes
Shrink outside,
And the airplanes keep on rushing to the sea
In to which have sunken so many ships embarking from the Names of her memory- and it gets quieter
And then even the stars have their darkness- there becomes A greater folklore in that place without the eyes
For fires- for any and all sorts of creatures can live
In there- a museum without walls into which the blind
Men thrive,
Suckling the nubile women in their gossamers of shows,
Like foxes pulling down the vines:
The trees kneeling at the field's summit, the trucks passing
Cautiously-
And someone overseeing whose senses are kind,
Promising us that we shall arrive unhurried, the produce of Our labor slung over our shoulders like lap sacks of Pregnancies- and our young wives waiting for us
In the parks of softly lit trailers- making offerings to a comfortable
Nature for their husbands to return on time.

Robert Rorabeck

To Return The Favor

Her carpet matches the sea
Of blue matches,
Of tennis courts- a jealous epiphany
Topless in the front yard,
Her legs akimbo in roller skates,
Sweet wheels like marbles still taking out,
Revolving with the tiny energy stripped
From her sway:
I see her out before the fireworks are expenditures
To quick to parlay,
But she diminishes everything, as glittery
Sweat pearls from her bric-a-brac:
I loved her, but god knows,
Strung out in her wimpled rows,
She had no reason to love me back;
But she just closed her eyes which made the sky jealous
So he rained down on her all of his bright engine
Light,
But she had him so parched that he couldn't weather
A storm;
And he loved her, but god knows she had no good reason
To return the favor.

Robert Rorabeck

To Return To Us

Sad ribbon left on the vanity,
Who place it taken by the preferred barrette:
Come and stay with me,
Even though I too prefer the barrette more:
Walk in my hand as I go to See the alligators in my loneliness,
Far beneath the love of airplanes
Who are leaping away forevermore: when will
They ever let off leaping
Into the banquet of clouds: girls dressed up
For their pilots: they prefer barrettes,
But they have forgotten the smells of jasmine,
Or the slender teeth of foxes smiling
As they leap for the grapes of their windows,
Which leaves me right here with you:
A pinwheel in my other hand for example,
Turning, bemused- a little science experiment of How my heart leaps like a hummingbird,
Turning summersaults and kissing all of my Fingerprints all at once-
And I will take you through the natural disorder
Outside of your abandoned bedroom,
And tell you things I what I always meant to Be for her, even if she never means to return to us.

Robert Rorabeck

To Run Barefooted Back Again

If my body is here now; it will soon be a
Cenotaph, it will soon be a firework spent:
And even while I still have my bicycle, even it will not be Able to move after I am gone-
Then perhaps I am doing this right now, like a soldier
Being ruined in a war:
Like a wildflower humbled into the winter of its short life,
Even after its stamens have had at pollinated into so many Perfumes by the orchestrations of the Nose bleeding bumblebees:
And there are some mountains I cannot climb;
As Alma is sleeping again in her house right now, sleeping
Next to her man who builds swimming pools for Housewives right now: what he does for them is that he Puts in the blue;
At least that is all that Alma could explain to me.
As I took her back home from the orchards and the monasteries:
And we made love until we both found our summits,
But she was bound for home again,
To pick up her mother Rosa from work, to buy a bouquet for Her mother who died back in Mexico so many years from now;
But I still found her, opening like a basin into a wishing well,
And even the very same way that the water fountains have Fed their lips to hummingbirds
And cheerleaders, as the sky offered me her belly button to touch;
And even if I didn't nor ever will I win the lottery:
Nor will I know the destinations of most rain storms, or the Trailer parks in the northwest: I lied and pollinated with my Ever faithful muse today: our bodies sang together today like Angels, like rattlesnakes until she had to run barefooted back Again away,
And that will forever be enough.

Robert Rorabeck

To Save Me

Thank god I live in a trailer park underneath
The sun where all of the lamplight has Been burning,
And you've been counting your numbers
Outside of the orchards where
Your old lover makes love:
As the waves whisper to the forts,
And it all becomes contrived-
When all of life fails anyway- and culture fails,
And art,
And all of its homonyms- then you don't Have to speculate anyways,
Because all of the gold is gone, and all of The summits have crumbled-
And the fruits have dried at her sleeping lips:
And she isn't even in love-
She has made a flea market out of her heart,
And it is only the hearts of her rabbits that continue
Beating- and it feels strange to still be here,
But we are here- underneath the overpass with
The homeless men- and I wish there was someone
Here to save me or, at least, to buy a dollar from me,
Anyways.

Robert Rorabeck

To Say Her Amen's

I will not answer again:
My words will fall against the easel- they will Fall broken hearted through the clouds
And their friends are hoed from the amusements
Of personified rainstorms:
And it will be as if something beautiful came out
Of the student parking lot between classes,
And cursed
And showed its speckled wings before lunch
Before returning in again:
And it was true, before my car was keyed:
That this was my heart,
And I hungered toward you almost as extinct as A panther even while the Indians were Shooting their arrows and showing their Rib cages:
That I tried this way, escaping into the spotlights,
Despoiling myself for the science experiments:
That I became untrue and un unified:
As your sisters sat out upon the bleachers and cried
For me,
And ate their sugary nudity- and grew forked
Tongues and in their beauty knew of the tide's surceases,
But even in their pagan apertures could not save me-
As I was a happenstance for you, growing wings
Neither large enough to fly or escape from harm:
I sat at the end of the fire escape and did mathematics
Habitually, and waited out the hours
And sucked my thumb underneath the armpits of firemen
Who scrambled like red ants up the Ferris Wheels
Just to get a chance to bid for you before you moved Away again- the way a fire moves through
A forest,
Or the way a lonely housewife lies down to say her amen's.

Robert Rorabeck

To See Her In The Sky Again

Weakness drowning in the camouflage of a tiger,
I do not know how I will wake up again,
With the traffic going over the overpasses, and the Waves seeping up the sands- it does not feel
As if I have to wake up again, but in the morning
Airplanes will fly like silver knights into the sky:
And like them, I will will myself to want to Wake up again, to see her sky, to see her in the sky
Again.

Robert Rorabeck

To See Her Make Any Wishes

They made love over brown railroad tracks;
And in the web of her left hand,
Just as brown- as if she'd just come from playing Baseball,
His first initial for the rest of her life:
Though she slept with me off and on for a year,
Today it is all over- we told each other
As much.
I imagine the birthday cake I sent her has arrived,
But with a different meaning-
The last gift was the same as the first, but I was Not there to see her make any wishes-
Things she didn't have to believe in anyways.

Robert Rorabeck

To See What They Can Get

Rhythms in the creek of gist, foaming airplanes,
Open wrists: the body takes its times going from the leaking
Flea markets,
Sashaying to the navy- heliotrope is the desert of its Forest, where the wolves hunt
Outside the damp patios and Astroturf that zoetrope Cantinas;
And if you were lying low: as if you were lying right here:
Down enough to be the eking devil of my abode,
Why then I'd swear we could go together into that kind of Necrotic Disney World:
We could go all the way down, with the moans of cenotaphed
Seashells in our ears:
With the same type of feral rapture that her tiny brown wings of Lips gave to the lieutenants of my senses a couple weeks a Go;
And now holidays and fieldtrips- like bagworms crawling up
Walls trying to make it to the pawn shop
To see what they can get for their golden fears.

Robert Rorabeck

To Set You Free

Days building up their games in quiet rooms
On the tired green carpet where I've had at myself,
Almost leaving trails like slime,
My overbite the little indentation of the beak of
A terrapin,
I move like an obese winner in a trance;
And the pine trees peer inside, paper snowflakes
Stuffed like trucks of pillows into their armpits,
Time capsules in their roots soldiered by ants,
All the spent bottle rockets hanging around the yard
Like gaunt young cenotaphs;
And the world knows what I mean;
It just absolutely fizzes with lights,
Even with their own pin-shell identities that cannot Be identified by the queens tongue;
They are like the fibrillations of oral sex the swans wings
Give to the yard,
Carelessly and most pleasurable like crisp fruit
Moments before enjoyment;
Then it is there in your hand, firmness and color and ecstasy;
The very first senses of it already inhaled like unicorns
Or seahorses;
Something a mean stepmother would insist couldn't be real,
But there it is almost ready to set you free.

Robert Rorabeck

To Settle My Body And Cry At Your Coquina Doorstep

Like a leaf winnowing for the sun,
I come out and sing for your world:
I run my fingers down the rivers of your brown flesh
While the day plays like a girl in a seemingly everlasting
School yard:
The nights are bricked in red, and you lie down in another
Bed
In a house I have walked to and slept beside:
You told me I needed a new car but I would rather move inside
Of you, Alma:
In that unreal material in the opalescent grottos entered
Through the very fine transoms of your gaze,
Because that is where the precious beasts slumber when they Do not graze:
That is a cathedral without any room, more important than
A white house,
More successful than a pontiff, and I mean to lie in there
And cure my wounds,
Or I mean to settle my body and cry at your coquina doorstep
Until all I have left is bones.

Robert Rorabeck

To Shed A Tear

Gold leaf passing over an eel in the shallowest
Estuaries of a washboard sea:
Looking up and studying the moon: its eyes mother of Pearl,
As round and thoughtless as feral boys:
Swimming to and fro to the bleeding lap:
A sea so full of thoughts of salt that the animals in it Never need to shed a tear.

Robert Rorabeck

To Steal Your Hand

Vagabonds of hyphenated schoolmarms
I want to fall for you and unsettle your books,
And pin your plastic barrettes askew:
I hate the fact that you think you are married,
Because you are so brash,
I just want to wet your mouth underneath the Infinite feet of the old overpass;
Because the waves are feral and they are just
Some ways over,
And they go in packs and they fall in love
So many bodies without reason or names,
Even the sky is embarrassed for them;
And you have a car and hours you keep,
And a business number,
And sometimes reasons to weep,
But I want to take that all away from you
Make you surcease from the library of your thoughts,
Lay you down in a bed of collected forget-me-nots
And speak and smoke indescribable reason into you,
And watch you eyes turn colors from the immolation
Of the things who thought knew you,
That unreturning languages that don't keep their Identity underneath the unabashed snow;
To steal your hand and away we go.

Robert Rorabeck

To Step In Line

Overbearing to the next steps of
The millennium—
Overbearing until the next steps have come
And we, both have new, warm hearts
In the independent séances leading Towards the highlights of our Endeavors—until, finally now—
We have to step in line and look
Beautiful, or relatively beautiful
While dying—
And the sun becomes a master key over
The whole lot of the affair—
If approaching the middling séances
'I don't want to become lost again,
Then just what then Is the Answer to get out of here—
In truth, the cemeteries have no answers
But once again beautiful pictures and the same way as the old way
To get out of here:
Beautiful memories disguised
In a zoetrope, dancing with themselves, just so they won't be eaten in the pizzas
Of the zeotropes of a brand new midnight—
And that is about it, anyways—
At least from the fictional monuments where
I at least pretend to survive.

Robert Rorabeck

To Strengthen My Gut

If there seems to be a memory
Of her
Or of this place
Or of the cars we kissed in Let it happen over the graveyards
That are sure to contain us
Once we our in our place
And inescapable from Zeno's paradox—
Once upon a time,
Everything seemed to be beautiful
In a very absent and listless way—
I followed her home and slept on Her roof,
My parents lived in an RV—
Behind the canal and underneath the mountains,
And a side of my face was purple:
A Columbian woman swung on the swings,
one or two,
And in a month I would be robbed at gun point.
Now I am so far away there is only this:
The mythology of hummingbirds and
The cheapest Chinese rice wine
To strengthen my gut.

Robert Rorabeck

To Surrender To The Monsters

When the butterfly makes Its sounds in Bed it is time to Go to work,
Across the traintracks,
Inside the Mountain-
Where the darkest road
Goes nearest the Fingers of Blind men-
And the goblins say they Are in charge
And get no resistance-
Where school boys
Change into
Grown men drinking in
The lavatories
And masturbating
In the crawl
Spaces of crippled
Airplanes that lay like
Dungeons raising their hands to Surrender
To their monsters- as crepuscule makes Its charge across
The wooden necks of mailboxes-
And the mermaids take Their turns in the Shallowest baths of Infantile canvases-
For the foxes who are
Not brave enough to Reach them
And the pilots who are Too far gone to return.

Robert Rorabeck

To Survive

There are pizza parlors lost in The White Mountains—
Maybe even the pizza parlors are still even there,
In the little armpit dug up from the desert
And where it yet snows in Arizona,
Where we might be seen outside the Chinese
Restaurant that used to be a Taco Bell for less Than a year—
And in that ancient memory
Where only ghosts survive,
What will we celebrate but the ghosts of Capitalism and Jesus,
The only things that ever haunted the history
Of our monuments,
While we poked our heads out of our shells once
Or twice,
And thought of all the money that it would take Forever
To survive.

Robert Rorabeck

To Survive For Very Long

Purple elbows of a sparrow
And ashes of hurricanes over the sleepy canals
Of housewives:
You come home while I've been masturbating and Lighting off fireworks,
As Elvis sings-
And all of this is only the joy I gave to myself
Underneath the school bus-
But even the windows cannot destroy your Perfect body,
As the virgins arise from Mexico-
Can you see them now, with roses in their vases-
They are filled with the joy of their family:
Their little children coming home
With bleeding hinges,
But not one of them ever lamenting that they Should have to survive for very long.

Robert Rorabeck

To Tell

Now you are elected by what I must know
To become the milkmaid of my dream: I have put you
Here the queen of my everything,
And these words are for you like the breaths ornithologists
Give looking up into the sky:
Or looking up into your eyes, Sharon: You see that they are The same thing:
The same painlessly blue cases that your child looks up in;
And I want to be like your child, resting in your shade.
I want to be a passenger underneath you, riding all of these Poems as if in a merry go round of pain;
And if you happen to look for me, know that I can barely go
Outside; and I am not right for you:
I am not right for anyone: I am packed up and dreaming,
And I have traveled back some while so it is the middle of A school day and you are whispering attentively; but I am
Not even there: I am out in the world: I have stolen a lonely
Man's bicycle, and the yards are green and perfectly
Superfluous, as the houses are affluent: and I could move us
Right back in there right now, Sharon: without an occupation,
Without a mortgage: You wouldn't even have to marry me:
You could be my field- All you would have to do is step out Doors and collect the mail and the daylight; and I would Do good work for you: I would pronounce your childhood,
And that would be all right, because that is all I have ever done
For you:
And I have a bag of fireworks and two good legs, and miles and Miles of paths up to you:
And I have already been above your head, but would come back
Down for you, to look into your eyes for miles and miles:
For in their perfect darkness lies all the stories I could ever think
To tell.

Robert Rorabeck

To Temptations

Poem of vicissitude—of needle point
In the moonlight,
Underneath a skeleton of a lighthouse while
The airplanes are
Dancing,
Marionettes of witches over the old houses
Making silhouettes of a numb
Ballet over their bays of Green yards—
So easily mowed—across which their diamond
Eyes are sweating,
And the horses eat their apples, saying nothing
To the serpents who would try them to temptations.

Robert Rorabeck

To That Beautiful Holiday

I have been to Saint Louis, Alma,
Pulling all that I owned through a wind tunnel that Was trying to blow out Christmas,
But now I have come back home to find you shining like
A silver beast who has a cure for the homeless
Plague;
And you asked me who Sharon was, and I told you she was not Real,
Unless we moved to Colorado; but I am just as sure that Sharon wonders who you are;
But you are beautiful and young, Alma, and your beauty will linger
Beyond the precipices of this world,
And it is this undetectable horizon that I mean to explore,
For it is what my intelligence is good for: I am the captain of A frightened ship, but this is the way I go while all of The patrons and the saints are sleeping,
While the virgin has gone down lactating for her young in the grotto:
For I saw you and your man today, and it was not beautiful:
I walked straight by you like a phantasm, and it gave me power:
Alma,
I am not a popular novelist, but this is real, that I am so lonely because
All of my senses are dead to the world:
Alma, it is only you who I can feel, and I need you to brighten my yellow
House down the dead end street near the sea:
Alma, you are the candle stick that I would keep burning
Through the burning pinwheels,
To keep up all night the drunken forts of conquistadors:
Otherwise, I will burn away- Alma,
And it is such a shame, to disappear before the buses of your independence
Arrive,
And carry us to that beautiful holiday.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Adventures

Adjustments to the adventures that
No one reads—
Starting out again, going to the discount
Shop one or two blocks from The house—
To buy five dollar wine,
To blindly past the topiary
While the otters so eagerly sleep at
The zoo—now more going around and Around on the merry goes—
The children are very well gone too—
Words lying abandoned upon their Discount shelves,
And not a housewife exists who will Buy them—
But back near the sea—cenotaphs of Houses of monuments the elements
Forage,
Carving out the escargots,
Making us remember—that
Maybe there is something good left
For you—left for me.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Boreal Churches

Where I became lost in the space of A classroom,
Like a coffin in immense daylight holding
So many boys and girls-
And all of their pretty parts:
At first they seem to come in
To make love without windows,
To look at their teacher's face: what do they See when I am not there,
And my words are echoing beyond the mountains-
Do I think of there,
Caught up in the higher basins their eyes will never See,
As they will go home together and become a
Real illusion in the shadows,
And I will just write them off: I will go
Home myself,
And never have to return to the boreal churches of My muses, or even above then,
To look for the feverish meanings of impossible
Love again.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Bosom Of Mountains

Never sing to the bosom of Mountains anymore:
Their beauty gone, burned up by the fire that Pushed all of the bob cats forward
And the planes along—
With my parents lonely beneath her:
She isn't waiting for me to sing to her anymore:
There is a cloud at her knees
As she squats—the opals are gone from her throat
Like thieved cadavers—
But the beautiful lights of werewolves play
Across her shoulders,
Bathed in the full-full-
Full moonlight,
As I eat my lunch in a room far beneath her,
My head cocked to the waves: to the sea horses and
The mermaids,
With the virgins singing a lot in their grottos
To my muses across so many hiccups and caesuras:
To my wife of another land—
But the mountain I once sang to,
She has no words for this:
She just sits there; her lamp is blind—
The airplanes diadem her sporadically—but she couldn't Care—scarred, un beautified—but still
She has no reason to understand.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Children Of The Lovers

The little places of our hearts' cathedrals
Kept lit by the show and tell
Of the faith of Bon-fires—
My wife hums songs from across the Oceans,
And the words dissolve into theatres
Of metamorphosis—
I know who you are, strange girl of My Hollywood,
Silhouette still shining from the fireworks
That keep going off in the places
We've both abandoned—
And there is not one sea horse
Big enough to carry the both of
Us,
But we can make a carousel out of the Lies am telling,
And go around and around singing
To the children of the lovers
We once left behind.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Clouds

Admitting to the clouds that they will not rain,
But you can trust me to drive myself home- as you turn away
Over a golf course that your father maintains during the Day- after he has passed across all of the fronteras and made
Wonderful forts in the countries of our blues:
And you have a son, and you have a daughter and they live near
The Christmases that even the giants cannot pass;
And they wander through sly avenues and have children of their Own of sticks and hay: In the storms gathered by the mountains
Like wet clay, the horses stumbling in the peat bogs,
And the willow wisps flickering heatless promises:
The castles that were once so grand, are now all awash, and drool like Landslides that the dragonflies patter into like woebegone
Pilgrims who once were well on their way; and your uncle belongs
In Mexico hanging in the trees that shaded your childhood-
The places in which you belong, my Alma- my soul, which have Forgotten you, while I grow more imperfect trying to sing:
The swing sets diminish as the sunsets, and your children will soon
Be bussed into a high school to be taught things that you never Will- and that I sincerely wish I could never understand.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Comets

Sand dollar covering an areola or Covering up bad art-
Where the horses stumble along the shore-
Wounded after high school with Blue cats riding them, and lightning in a jumble
In a basket in the sky:
Everyday, writing some things that will never Survive next to the Ozarks in the park-
As new countries develop and then drift into the ocean:
And words surround her and make love to her
In bed, even though I am far away-
And the dinosaurs are gone- streamline and semi aquatic:
They raised their heads to the comets and Thought nothing- and now not a single one of them
Exists-
As you lay across his brown belly trying to forget what you
Must have thought of us.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Days Of Your Colored-In Curls

Little girls- dolls made of sweet corn husks
Surfing in the waves,
Won't you caracole and hula and pineapple right
To me and take me back to the Saturn rings of Better days-
There were days, discombobulated with yards dewed
From spilled rum,
And a few times fist fights with a succession of boys
Who now do construction that I always won:
And mostly truancies of days, day school skipping days
Where I was freeform on the canal, and in charge,
When I slipped up the easements with freshwater Otters and made love to the sisters and their housewives,
As I knew I oughter:
There were days of you up ghostly in the tree,
Days of pollinated spikenard and paper airplanes thrown
By the winds lips and thoughts of ye;
And I knew that sometime or another you thought of me,
And you were just the loneliness down lost over many Hair-lipped bridges,
Over so many lost and vanquished green yards-
Days, days of roman candles and Christmas trailer parks,
Swimming over the hills of teal caesuras:
Girls, girls so young and unreal, come take me back there
To the days of your colored-in curls.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Defeated Gods

They were laughing and they went to school:
Some of them while they were Still young, anyways: and soon in the dead of Winter,
They will be searching for coal,
As the butterflies die in the forests even as the Turtles come to them:
All of it remains unpublished even as the Stewardesses fly over graveyards-
Even as I have written so many psalms of so Few words,
Trying to abstract myself into the ashes of another
Playground,
A metamorphosis trumpeted into the flags of our Country while some poor girls
Have still been busy singing, trying to Make diamonds from the coal of their fathers' mining:
As the world stretches up to the defeated gods
And somehow pretends to carry on.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Devil Inside

Spasms of fish out of the sea—homeless men burning tires
Beneath the trees—and the entire world tethered
To a pole without any Christmas tree lights—
The entire heart of high school burned away,
Made into a cemetery—
And the forts we made out of blue fabric and the Kitchen table sunken into the forgetful gravities of
The children who cannot understand us—
It goes all week like this—words trying to kiss the Shoulders that have grown too high for them—
Fetishes strewn out for witchcraft drowned out
Underneath the busied flight paths of adulterous
Airplanes—and my soul waiting for a sign like a maiden
Beside a wishing well—perfumes that signify the evening
And dinner tables strewn out, tumbling with the results
Of the tender hooks of death that allow us to survive—
Yes, in the morning: angels who so gently lead us to the Devil inside.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Duny Park

Bodies getting smaller as they pass like strange
Calligraphy out of hand;
And maybe I can't understand any other world than this,
But when I take Alma by the hand,
And show her the blue resilience emolliating in
A sheet of feral angels off to the left;
It is all I need:
I ungreedily drink of the light her brown eyes sip;
And I compare her to the ocean and say,
This is exactly how beautiful you are, as we drive on
To the duny park to swing in the playgrounds
That will soon no longer be there.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Ears Of Drunken Horses

By the time this song is gone to the Heavens of stolen bicycles—
My dog is barking, my wife is Almost out of the shower,
And I am trying to get drunk for real—
Don't you remember the Time we folded paper airplanes in
The mausoleum
And waited all afternoon caressing the wildflowers
Of the crypts just to See the hummingbirds drinking of
The ethereal bouquets,
Like the stewardesses who seemed to levitate
Wherever they went—
Until they came down forever,
The paperweights and the lovers of sea horses—
Even if their song became a scar
To the ears of drunken horses who had learned how
To hold their breath forever.

Robert Rorabeck

To The East

I love you so the moon falls down while you were Bending to tie your skates;
And your son Michael wants so many things for his Birthday, Alma:
And you are there, enclave d into that little room of Your father's
House,
Over the train tracks and on the other side of your spouse;
But you never fear that I do not love you: you know that I love you,
And my hands make a mobile over your body,
Like the pantomime of the sub stellar airplanes across the moon
At night;
While I have just been drinking, and not doing much of Anything right: just waiting on the polished tarmacs of the ancient Fraternities of doused forest fires
For the heavens to give in, to your flights to surcease:
For you to return with you promises of fidelity by all of its morning,
Like the eucatastrophe of all of those extinct hemispheres,
Captivated by the tiny throat of a flute or a ukulele:
And then to lie with me atop the un bashful sheets and wait for the Ever loving morning to deliver the mail to the east.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Echoes Of Her Silence

Angels dance over the day—hurricanes turned
As the housewives hurry home:
My Mexican uncle is expecting twins—my Classroom laughs
And echoes in its laughter—as kidnappers
Disappear—
As I consider his niece—I haven't been Alive so long
And yet I loved her so many times underneath
The feet of rattlesnakes,
Even though I was only like a movie theatre
For her,
When she became lost in the mountains
Above tree line—
As the sun danced over Satan and lost itself
Eaten into its own shadows—
Now I am married to another girl on the other side
Of the earth—
And it means I can no longer give this once
Muse Christmas trees and fireworks,
And I cannot remember her as she lives—
Up in the orange groves and hoof prints—chanting
To the echoes of her silence,
Listening to herself because she is too afraid to
Be alone.

Robert Rorabeck

To The End

In the weekendâ€”balloons, babies in the daylight,
Brown skin:
They do not wonder who they areâ€”they have never Been to schoolâ€”
They are filled with the equalities of icecream;
And their parents buy things that no one else cares
About:
Their first cat has not died: their hearts never skip a
Beat,
And the kidnappers pass them by, villains set upon
Other delusionsâ€”
And in their trams, not knowing a single word,
They seem like they can go on to the end of the Roadâ€”
Fireworks that should never have to burn to the end.

Robert Rorabeck

To The English Professor

Out of the old habits of the moon,
I place myself with my dogs and start anew:
And we look over the rafters of each of our churches,
And down the sweet blouses of the Catholic girls inside
Putting on miracle plays and busting out the papier-mâché
Angel wings;
And we started out like this all together at the starting line;
And we were given roman candles and brown bags of store brand
Liquor by the state;
It was really swell as all the mariposas licked the armpits of
The apple orchards we all know so well:
And our dogs howled at the fornications of so many blimps
That they absolutely got in trouble;
And I named myself as the culprit and you the princess:
I bought lingerie for you on your birthday, but I would not Buy you a new truck; and then the moon was full and yellow:
It was like Spanish bullion sinking insouciantly through a sea
Of clouds;
And I had to touch myself and mouth off to the English professor,
But I was so drunk by then that neither I nor my muse gave Any sort of damn.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Fireworks Of Her Name

Her reams of brown skin spread out before me,
Like a picture book for everything lucky:
Because she has never know the venal sabotages of A suburban housewife, nor Any of her children: and the Alamo was capture by all of The best of her ancestors,
Even while my parents have returned to Arizona and Aren't doing anything so good; but are good at surviving,
Like a beautiful butterfly who spends most of Her life caught up in the tin confines of a stainless steal
Grotto of a trailer park of
An amusing estuary, while everything else fails,
And even the best of the angels tell lies to the warbling estuaries
Of the bromeliads who only come some times this way
Out of the armpits of air plants,
The way that even the best of stewardesses give up and finally Find clear ground,
Sweating and panting in the deepest and sandiest of epicenters,
Like cats panting in heart or for milk,
Or for me to stretch out my charity, finally caving in And admitting all of my beautiful faults to the fireworks of her name.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Flame Of Its Muse

Tombs of rattlesnakes shaking rainstorms
In protest and jasmine after the tanks are all closed,
And even the cars have
All stopped their driving:
And then there is just the pale, pale monoliths
Softly repeating,
Going up and up over the sororities, like escalators:
Like elevators,
Like ladders into the bereavement of whatever heavens
That I am sure they are:
And they end in lighthouses,
And commercial airliners- or they end in little rooms
Far, far above this stuff:
Through the strata of pornographies and conquistadors,
And Labor Days and home room classes:
Through the shed papers of firecrackers newly bloomed,
And the trailer parks:
And the fruit markets: they end in a peaceful grotto
All to themselves
Where a single candle burns to the flame of its muse.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Gentleness

Fornication is nice
When the shadows are involved:
The rabbits pullulate in the aloe, rubbing off of Hands,
The picnic then is backed up, the orbs are first
Hanging from the despotic bouquets of the tree;
And then they are in space-
Why cannot your eyes be the pools in a jungle
When I am thirsty and sleeping alone:
Why can't we only be friends coming together in an Agreement of love,
Coming like the palms of an agreeable religion refusing
To migrate away from one another,
Coming together and then scissoring like legs in PE:
I want to work out against you while
Your children are sleeping in dollhouses in the most Auspicious fires of then thousand stories,
While the horses rest and feed in the yards
Of neighbors in love,
So that tomorrow we don't have to learn a thing:
Don't you think that we've just about learned enough;
And so we can skip school
And I can busy myself with my longing to touch and be inside
Your flesh,
Like your legs brush themselves so rich from their all day long
Migrations that they just want to lie still for a little
To the gentleness of both of my lips;
And then move a little still like rivers joining flowers
Again, you know, to the gentleness of these kind though un begotten
Lips.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Ghosts

Now it says there is a sad column rising from
Her relatives
Because they wished that they had graves,
Wanderers piled inside the caravanerserai—
What lips they had still sing songs
When the wind plays them underneath the Lamplight stolen into the sky:
Unbeaming wishes in the architectures of Those bodies:
The wolves and dogs come and howl:
Somewhere close, a suburbia, and amusement park:
And trams to take the living home—
Emulations above the heads of these crypts
Where roses thought to drink—
And crickets dipped their necks like ticket holders
On a ride to the ghosts.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Glorious Women

Now they have friends here in the park,
After the footprints have left and the lake is quiet and full
Of manmade secrets;
And maybe there were no promises or rainbows here
Ever,
Or things to tie the knot: maybe this is the only place where Silence has always been Perfect,
And I can step out into here and feel the short cuts of Grass that sing their offerings to the sun
In the middle of the school day
When I was supposed to be in class,
And the clouds have come down low, so curious and experimental And doing things that the despondent housewives would Better off to be watching;
And where the seasons change without doors, and the fireworks
Bark:
Where little girls go to pray to the glorious women who Are not quite there as the world and all of its traffics travel on to dusk.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Heavens

Crepuscle in the mailboxes-
And another zoetrope returned to ash.
My favorite words lying with the rattlesnakes,
Like the bums beneath the overpass-
The crickets hungry in the yard- the lions open
Their mouths down the street-
The housewives disrobe to lie down somewhere Else.
The clouds leave the hall- the blueness fades
Into stolen light-
The banks close, and the memories slip back
Through the cypress-
All the way to the crashes of airplanes that Remain surviving-
And the little truanacies that I took to think
Of your love;
And our little brown hand in mine, Alma-
How we breathe sometimes together- coins
Are tossed in a well,
Until you come home to work, and your children
Relish you-
I watch you across the train tracks, and all of the Mothers coming home,
Until the movement of your body is blotted out,
As if offerings to the heavens.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Homecoming Of Our Supper Time

You don't have to tell me you read my words,

Alma:

I can tell by the rich auburn of your eyes when you look up and

Stare at me from across the fruiteria:

Then all the world shines, and I know I have been doing some good,

Because I am not beautiful enough to have you look at

Me that way on my own,

Alma:

And the customers come in and giddy-up to you, and they tell you

How beautiful you are,

Just as they tell my mother how beautiful she is; and the best I can

Hope for is to be mistaken as her brother,

And for your landlord, Alma: Your body is so sweet, and you have

Just one initial of a man tattooed on your body-

That is all I know about you,

Except that you are a butterfly migrating to work and home on

Cherry Road- I stole a pelota there for you:

Now I want to steal a kiss: I want to press my stygian hand to the furnace

Of your womb:

I want to say names into your breath that will be proven to be real:

I want to finish off this bottle of the cheapest wine,

And then see you again tomorrow and make you mine, so that I can see you

All the way to the homecoming of our supper time.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Hours Of The Tomb

Horses run around and around
As my mother is coming home:
I want to learn new words for her—
I want to be a cat curled up
Underneath a beautifully lit Christmas
Tree for her:
I don't want to have to go to school tomorrow:
I just want to wait beside the bus stop,
Pretending to be a good by while the lions yawn—
Both of us just to pass the time,
While better off boys make all of the money—
And then I just want to lie in the holly
And croon the larks of the midday soap-operas—
And maybe sometime after thirty I will get a Wife or graduate high school,
While all of this becomes the living disease of A living tomb—only so many words
Gathered in hand, like some Easter Eggs gathered
Some Easter by the hands of a blind-
Blind man—
And even with the sun coming up over some graveyards,
And even with some of the beautiful mothers coming
Home—
With the daylight coming down,
The night beckons in its loneliness—and hands grasp
For hands—because no one wishes to be alone
When it comes to the hours of this tomb.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Lips

Someone snores and I've made a
God of tracks and transoms that no one will Ever read,
And that is good because the candles and Curves of Colorado
Are tight,
And you have to keep your eyes wide opened
All goddamned night;
And whiskey is good,
And cats have nine lives, and her favorite color is Blue as it begins to fade into her eyes,
And the words sing atop of tilted flowers
And bird baths,
And the garden is homeless in a penumbra of incredible
Pestilence:
And I love her and want to live with her in an overgrown
House in Saint Augustine,
But instead I am selling these things for my father,
Waiting for the beautiful wings of whatever happenstance to Come singing around once again,
But the eyes of incredible alligators never falter
Once again the sweet perfume of the airtight vision,
Like the legs of stewardesses making their arcs and swings
Over the crenulated Atlantics,
Plurals that have no reason, like all the animals who have Died giving their bodies and their sexes,
Equally to the lips who are in stores,
Who wake up without wonder,
And who cannot breathe.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Lips Of The Heart

Various ways of impressing the Earth
Includes your breath on my Shoulders
And I don't have to be here
Right now-
But I came even through this Weather-
As rains fall in your absence,
Fall through the roof-
And I am getting too old for daycare-
Even if your children are not Home yet-
Because you don't have to go to Work-
You don't even have to Wear shoes,
Though you are in pain-
And I am on the other side
Of all things,
Of horses entwined in Deadfall-
Where there is not even Whisper of metamorphosis-
And names mean nothing
To the lips of the heart.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Midnight Rai

I am a good boy and I get up from an early
Number from my slumber,
And I say to the kissing teeth of the vipers
That from my windows
I can see it raining over the amusement parks that
Have stolen away from my heart
Who are up early anyways, dancing in migrations,
Tumbling,
Causing their amputations to look up ex-lovers
In these woods-
Passing by our shanty towns as the sugar cane burns,
As the lamp light is lit:
Husbands returning home to their wives,
Like foxes to their vineyard, cuddling with their
Boxes of knives
Above the bones of conquistadors- their pools
Are diamonds reflecting the abandoning skies
Recoiling in their mischief-
As their yards roll down to the throats of the canal,
The primordial suitors playing with the gold
Fish-
Until all the world engorges like a flower making love
To a hurricane,
As the daylight hours succumb to the midnight rain.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Midnight Rain

I am a good boy and I get up from an early
Number from my slumber,
And I say to the kissing teeth of the vipers
That from my windows
I can see it raining over the amusement parks that
Have stolen away from my heart
Who are up early anyways, dancing in migrations,
Tumbling,
Causing their amputations to look up ex-lovers
In these woods-
Passing by our shanty towns as the sugar cane burns,
As the lamp light is lit:
Husbands returning home to their wives,
Like foxes to their vineyard, cuddling with their
Boxes of knives
Above the bones of conquistadors- their pools
Are diamonds reflecting the abandoning skies
Recoiling in their mischief-
As their yards roll down to the throats of the canal,
The primordial suitors playing with the gold
Fish-
Until all the world engorges like a flower making love
To a hurricane,
As the daylight hours succumb to the midnight rain.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Mountains

If you love me, go with me now
Before this apple falls
And the earth turns over and becomes Uncovered
Before her perfumes are covered with earth
Before her avenues decay
Or my words are found out by carrion and taken Away across the boulders where
The rattlesnakes are lying all strung out
Like tangled extension chords
Carried away by the same mother whose ankle
Was bitten beneath a lighthouse
And the hummingbirds flew backwards to Just as the paper insects mopped and coated her
The waves ululating against
The pylons that they could not have her, or that
The road was forgotten
And still she found her way back through the virulent
Glens
And the stallions into a house that didn't even Exist anymore where she laid and curled until the crypts
Of the grasses overcame her, and the wild
Peonies told unbelievable stories of her to the mountains

Robert Rorabeck

To The Museums Or Breakfasts

It is Christmas and the gods die from too much Beauty,
I feel embarrassed from too much liquor, but the dawn
Knows that it will give itself to Better loves,
While it will find me working again down deep in Some little corner,
While there aren't enough caracoles to get around,
And Alma will wipe the drool from Her pretty mouth, and she will get up to leave her abolished
Man for the day,
And come nearer to me, like two electrons in an atom,
Dancing in mostly empty space,
But maybe I will take her to the beach tomorrow,
Or maybe I will make love to her: or maybe we'll Just f&ck, as the sexy swing sets wait for us
Closer to the infinity of nothing,
And we take a breather as she comes down, and changes
All together into her favorite color,
While I hold her hand, and think about all of the possibilities
Of where we might go together again
To the museums
Or breakfasts.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Pains Of Her Dance

These bodies play their bands, pumping,
In the chorus of the neighborhoods and the worlds:
They wake up and pat their children:
On Sundays the go to zoos or musicals:
If broken down they are symmetrical: they know so much beauty:
When asleep, they don't know it, but they float with the Man O'
War:
Then her dress is the perfect ocean-It is the séance, weeping,
Curling beautiful all of that green:
The sky evaporate of the same stuff, with corsages thrust into her Thrown from the coquina walls of the fort where the Bachelors hang out looking far across her
Standing like paled predestinations up from the sunken armor
Of the missing conquistadors:
They have been kidnapped by these centuries and taken mightily
Into her- maybe they are entranced into her gown
Like the leashes on a sled; and we wake up and rub our eyes
And then get busy moaning, our throats ululating as we hearken
To the pains of her dance.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Places I Could Never Belong

The antediluvian lights go out, and my hand falls upon her Undervalued knees; it is easier to speak to her with the crosshairs of A feral tongue,
To become for her more and less human, a forest fire too licking
Her salts she turned back upon:
And she told me this Thursday in the semidarkness that the blinds helped
To douse, that I took too long;
After she moaned in a headdress of sheets, like something that
Was learning to fly, but came down thirtily on my wounds
And multiplied- and green was her favorite color;
And it fit: that she had succeeded from Mexico, where I wished that I had known her as a little boy:
And from those springs that tasted her virginity, I had tasted the soul
Of my kindling muse:
My Alma, and read out behind her house the poems of horses that Would never disappear, even after she has wantonly traveled Home again to the places I could never belong.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Playgrounds Of My Soul

As true as an echo to the playgrounds of my soul,
Can't you see me dancing
Echo to your brilliant shadow
With the night moving over us like an entire Airplane
And the apple orchards shuddering like dancing girls:
There she will be tomorrow, held over in the species
Of her classrooms—
Overly complicated by her good-looks and by your Infatuations
As another truant peters out through the hallways:
Where is he going?
To the sea? To the moon? Or towards where you
Sent him,
For he has made himself an offering of the love you
Can never obey—
But, tomorrow, other boys will plagiarize him
Who you will fall in love with—
And after you have gone away with them
He will metamorphose into actors of Chalk and moonlight
That steal whatever they can from the Moonlight that resolves itself by the light of day.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Presumptions Of Epiphany

Silent auction of the lips,
Pursing- pensive, persistently disenchanted
And almost wet,
The way the fox's lips must feel as he leaps
For the grape,
Or the little vanities in stewardesses legs
As they too leap to and fro in their airplanes
Following sun up and sundown,
As the roosters grow and it gets up into some kind
Of mischievous song-
As the horizon, like some kind of curtain is Almost pulled back, leaving the slightest
Possibility of what lies unaware
To the presumptions of epiphany.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Rivers Or The Woods

Unfathomable numbers of one or the other,
Almost endless hallucinations of the sexes,
Both happening in the opposable gloom
In various degrees of destitute or beatification:
And Erin is there,
Glad of bicycles coming all of a sudden out of Crepuscle
Like serious cocaine, cauliflower, or gangsters;
And you could look straight up at her and lose yourself,
And call it a Christmas tree
While the sea bares repeating; and then all day long
The work-class would have a lark,
Figuring out how best it was, and how easy it was to Love a certain number:
You could draw her out of fine clay pot, like the Hangings of a ghost,
All of the pumice of distended antlers or the cremations
Of your aunts;
And then Diana would have to come again,
Busy with her business, all of those wildflowers yoking
With the lifting of the cold, the higher valleys beginning to Play heavy rock and roll,
And then you could tell her just how much you loved
Her, since she then would have the same number of Limbs as you;
As she no longer budded, as long as she chose to remain
With you, and did not return to the rivers or the woods.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Sea

If we have accounted our hearts together by the Sea.
It was only to sound beautiful in swinging adultery-
And I lifted you up,
And pressed your brown skin to the sun- because You could not swim:
It evaporated you, and made you fly; and I made a nest
For you in my arms,
But you went back home to him- and children without Words-
The moon watching you from outside your window;
It stole your light too;
But I'll be damned if it gave me anything to do-
So I made a gift of myself to the sea- but she, oh she-
Is still swimming inside of me.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Shoulders

Each railway bends to the shoulders,
Like seahorses looking around for kaleidoscopes:
And it just so happens that they cannot find any better
Numbers—
Each pigeon sleeps in the apoplexy of its rainbows—
Trash and concrete tied up
In the urbanity
Of sickly sweet espionage—
And the daylight floods like a dump truck over
The hedgerows of all over the place—
Wives are touching down wherever they can—
An apiary of wives discombobulated in their neighborhood—
Like sickly sweet cartoons learning kung fu—
Like the rhymes of the Telluride amusement parts while Your parents swing and skate—
But in the morning, they will be taking down the airplanes
From the mobiles of clouds—
And your wife will have already closed her eyes:
She will have already gone to sleep.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Sideshows

Bean sprouts of my songs and amusements:
Tadpoles kissing her
Toenails as she wades halfheartedly through
The shallows-
Salt and sweat peppering her from Their afternoons of Love making-
But it still seems a long ways up the slopes
Of the impenetrable mountains,
The coyotes laughing chaos
And slang,
The wicked snakes down beneath them,
Poisoning the debutants sweated off
The ballrooms of their proms:
As I've said I loved her a thousand times,
Howling from the corrugations of
The trailer parks to the side shows-
As the donkeys bray up to the monuments of Discombobulated windmills.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Silken Grotto

It's almost midnight and Nothing has changed;
I was held up at gunpoint
And pleaded for my Life;
But when they left with
My muse underarm,
Folded up like a kidnapped
Butterfly,
I ran after them
Screaming, screaming your Name;
And I got their license plate,
So the cops drove me around
And eventually took me
To the silken grotto where
You are living with Him unlawfully;
And I deified you even though
I didn't want rain;
And I am waiting for you
Still, because I know that Eventually you must come
Out; and you are mine.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Sky

Bones in a white box,
Bones in the sea: bones in a fish, in a bird,
Or in the sky:
Thrown up like luck over the mountebanks of Insouciant lions,
Hypnotized with the animals in the feral churches
Of ruby glass,
While the water is always falling, falling
Like the coattails of weather balloons over the vast And effortlessly tall jungles;
Only unto all of the mouths of minds have moved
Away,
Hibernation with the vast fairgrounds of northern Peninsulas
Into the vast and populous frescos of Teaming glaciers who call to them the tiny biplanes like Cattle,
Until so many pilots have landed into the tundra
Of borderless anachronisms
Upon whose missing ribs the butterflies sleep like resplendent
Badges;
And they flutter once more, remembering how they once
Flew,
And how once before all of this they changed so resplendently
Into the changing room that ultimately led them to the sky.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Spider's Web

Sacrifice to the spider's web,
Underneath the airplanes and the bats that fly
Out of the cauldrons and Witchcraft without stewardesses—
Enveloped in the blind acrobatics of a beauty's
Midnight,
They funnel over the universities like a narcoleptic
Daydream,
Fulfilling themselves with the ranges of solitude—
They know nothing about the beauties of the finest
Of women—
In fact, all of the housewives have already gone
Indoors—but they are out, collecting
Their silent infatuations to the strange atmospheres—
Until they cannot be resolved
Until the minute of the hour—
Into whatever felicitations they find themselves,
Run away to the bitter cul-de-sacs,
And to the crawling icebergs—and I love you
Crawling into the graveyards after the storms
Have stolen all of the plastic roses—
And the pilots have touched their bones to
The ground forever to sleep.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Sport's Loneliness

Spilling their contemplations down my throat,
I think of our honeymoon in Shangri-La—
Of all of the plasticine bedrooms attended underneath the Porcelain moon, as my hand found your ghostish thigh
And knew who you were in the fermented darkness,
While my thoughts wondered back across the airplanes
Like skipping stones,
To some ghost of a park in California,
Where I left my dream that way behind—
Where I couldn't look at my face, ruined in my post-
Adolescents—
And all of those dreams I had forgotten with me
As I drove back to Arizona—
The lost tankards of dreams—and now, in this House in the middle of my life,
New accoutrements to the sports loneliness find their Place inside my lips that speak of the whispers
That nest inside my mind.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Tomorrows Further Away

In the object of full disclosure,
I've always been attracted to you, Amanda:
Though I can barely remember you from middle school.
I remember John McGlaughlin had Nirvana's Nevermind
CD, and S- - was the only one who could Best me at four-square; and I really had a think for her,
And now she's with a hyphenated last name and even more
Than a frequent lover, and wine shop in Colorado:
But even more than that, I've had a thing for Erin,
For Erin: but we were all in Latin class together, now she's A waitress in Gainesville still, and I might even be going up there
To start a Ph.D., (only though when I applied to the school
I think I miss-spelled P.H, D, or something to the fact of that Case) .... But those were so many days ago, and I spent my afternoons
Farting in front of the television and listening to the lions roar
Down the street under a heliotrope sky. Now, Amanda, I am
Thinking of writing another novel, and I have a vague idea,
Even while I wait for word from a literary agent about another Novel, even as I imagine you in your big open house in Wellington- like your lover, affluent and well lit and covered with Your dew in the morning: Oh well, these things I have a tendency
To say when I wake up in the morning and raising my head like Chanticleer, looking out into the neighborhood and imagine the Most fabulous storms. So now, even if I am shot, and vanquished by Thuggish conquistadors, it won't even matter, because I've already Written enough to in most ways justify what I've had to say for myself:
And come morning, I will have more to say, even as I think of skipping
Out of class with Jordan and tightrope walking across the corrugations
Irrigating the canal. Maybe I love you, and yet there are so many things
I've seen you wouldn't even imagine. Your neighborhood is affluent
But unimaginative, even while you are a genius, I suppose, and you
Put off a beautifully ridiculous light self-illuminant in your church,
And I would like to give you a Christmas tree and lie with you in A crèche for awhile, and put of tomorrow, and put off the greater Persuasions awful gravity gives even more to the tomorrows
Further away.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Vicissitude Of Her Cardinal Sins

Drank so much soda pop that the embittered
And venal cop tried to arrest me for Public indecency;
But I still had my legs about me,
Escaped into the aspen grove, and did
The Cha-cha twist,
Stealing my grandmother's outlines of Chalk she'd spent busily there
Backside up towards the sun,
Trough ing old friends, trying to impress
Healthy young boys to the vicissitude
Of her cardinal sins.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Waves

I farted along in Saturday school,
Until I was expelled, and rejected from the clicks of High school drama. Still, I came faithfully
Everyday just to sneak back across the canal,
Salivating like Pavlov's dog in salty humidities:
Sat alone on the swings, thought of the Dwarf girl who lived there in a dugout around
The root of the squat palms, from which she had Escaped the circus yet came out in cooling rain showers
And danced naked in stunted opulence in the long
Mowed ruts of the soccer field which sloped down
As if a lip to the muddled bank where alligators
Lay like pets, torpid and untrainable:
I would row out to her in my underwear slogging gin,
On the inflatable raft smelling of chlorine stolen from The dentist's pool, after all the fireworks were spent
In the air and coming down in little wishes of forest fire:
Would draw up to her on the bank, her bee stung wishes
The areolas of little seashells, tell me how she thought
Of migrating on Monday to the sea, but needed a bicycle
Her size: I thought maybe she loved me, even though
I was quite busted and unbeautified- Couldn't imagine
Then how she might disappear, picked up on Halloween,
Mistaken for a Guatemalan and drafted into the step ladders
Of the orange grove, so I was left to salinate alone, tilting
In the grass like a ship going down, but not mortified:
So lazy there that the mosquitos didn't want to draw blood,
And when the principle drove around, fearing his wife,
He didn't even solicit me, as I swigged my brine, thought
How early the sky would blush, my farts would rhyme,
And the dalliances of youth went down like sneakered tramps,
The landscaping swell calligraphies: Each house held
A neat family, and a dime buried in a curse, and we all drifted Away from one another like hoarse survivors allotted to The waves.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Whispers Never Made

The wrong sided angels go flitting to the East;
And it is over the dark and angular caesuras of A feral sea,
That you can see them
Cavorting with the beast:
And wetting their tongues across the flotsam of Apple trees,
And speaking with the lips of multitudinous Apiaries;
And homeless- and shoeless- and like candle
Flames,
They slip their dresses off over the infinite regresses
In their unseen sorority whose Corsages pinprick into dust:
Whose bared shoulders cajole us, and make the Fire trucks rust;
And they are the darkness of overspent fireworks;
And they are the tombs in the shade,
As they curfew to the whispers never made by the Ants and the lions who first
Crawl and then lay in the undervaluing pornographies
Of a presumptive glade.

Robert Rorabeck

To The Zoo

Airplanes of many shades
And colors,
Moving around the playground,
Waiting for their parents after school,
The sky a mote around
A sand castle of tears,
The clouds so many insouciant television shows.
You can pick which one and grow a knot in your Throat watching it,
While the hobnobbing sprinklers spit and chew,
And the young Guatemalans drive around
In electronic vehicles tilling self effacing dirt;
And all the important words are in The bible,
And all the girls are in Colorado;
And the side of my face is a mess,
But all I want to do is think about you-
All I want to do is get drunk
And go to the zoo.

Robert Rorabeck

To Their Guardian Angels

You are dumb, and yellow
And stupid: your children also live in the armpits
Of a flower,
While the wolves hang out opened tongued
Waiting for the pottery wheels of school to start-
And even at her wedding,
It was brilliant and made of flowers: she has her newest
Love and they go around merrily
Attracting the tourists from their wonderful playgrounds:
Come and look at the new things they have found
Underneath the lighthouses
Who meant to speak to their guardian angels, and to Reminisce perpetually across the physical educations of Their equally mutual yesterdays.

Robert Rorabeck

To Their Impressive Work

Holding onto my skull through the days of Unsure fire- Racehorses tracking the sky with muddied
Abdomens-
I can hear their echoes all after noon, through the firedrills
In the halls- or afterwards,
Anyways, when all of it has emptied, and I am
Back at home, masturbating,
Sure that no old girlfriends are coming over.
I cut angels out of paper and send them up to the ceiling
Fans to dance-
I wait for mother and father to bring me fried chicken-
I read cheap books
Of cheap romance- and then the cinders fall from the sky
Once again in such kill joy;
It kills the toys in the park, and all of the children go
Home gloomy and stupefied,
But I watch them come the following morning returning
Accordingly to their impressive work.

Robert Rorabeck

To Their Own Conclusions

The same memory waits for no one more
Than this—
With the days caving in like sink holes over
Our lives—
Words come to their own conclusions
Outside of throats played like instruments
By their hearts—
And we get up, evolved into our necessities,
Wanting a drink at the very start,
Some elixir so to fall in love without having
To look anyone in the eye—
Brown skins piling up in their cars like
An apiary on the road—
See all of these strange girls, a menagerie
Of a harem escaped from the outskirts of
Mexico—
And I love them all, calling them with my bedroom
Thoughts,
Turning my scarred architectures their way,
And sometimes they come again,
Like waves at high tide—
My sorcery the same thievery as moon light
Upon gravity—
But never mindful, they soon forget,
And go back on that usual road,
Yet sizzling with the filament bright enough to
Dull a Ferris Wheel—
And up until that very moment when they step
Back in doors I like to imagine that they Think of me.

Robert Rorabeck

To Themselves

Rubric going off in bed with only a little bit
Of daylight left:
But just the false time, and studying for school:
When it clocks midnight around her wrist,
Everything will change again:
And she will get up only to lie down again:
While the waves roll green across the viaducts, musseling
And smoothing the stones,
Making immaterial things live there awhile, worrisome
Cousins of the banners in the sky-
In a jubilation of evaporating armies whose jingoisms
Will soon disappear:
Dissolving until looking down, finding only you resting in your Car,
The thieves surrounding you by many possible directions:
And the fairytales growing and telling many marvelous
Lies to themselves.

Robert Rorabeck

To These Mountains

Drinking, the body turns cold—like a cadaver
Hungering for the torch
The way carports huddle in the rain—
The used car salesman out of a job
As the planes fly in,
Flores licking their lips and snapping thier
Jaws, leaping for stewardesses whom are too
High up in their sorority's train—
Over somewhere there is a park,
And the nocturnal floods sucrease imperfectly,
Striking thier hidden flints against the tallows—
Trying to bear warmth to the nocturnes,
Some kind of warmth to these mountains who go
Without any names.

Robert Rorabeck

To These Things

Up cadaver: this is your apple, if you
Still have a tooth for the orchard:
This is your song:
Up, up, while the music still throws:
The kites are bending low
To dance with snakes in the yards of
I don't know:
Up, cadaver, bend your spikenard into
A bow
And from your appendages throw:
Throw the songs that I can never know- through the rivers
Cried from the sky:
Kiss and bless the things that have to Die:
Dance, all over the churchyard,
With its warbling bell:
Dance all over the schoolyard,
With its kisses and tells:
And then sing to the airplanes in the sky,
Sing that they will never come down
To die:
Sing of the apples blossomed from the bough
Sing to these things so that they never have to know.

Robert Rorabeck

To Think Of Me

Sunken, the plentiful land records itself:
New numbers and new scars in the flesh, tattoos of windmills
Recorded across the field,
And children lost on their way home: the fire too shy to ignite
The bush,
Stones in the clutches of rattlesnakes snuffed by the snouts
Of hounds before the remedy of the storms,
And all of the long phrases too far away from home
To account for the actions of the tourists
Who threw them just to get a jubilee out of the waves or anywhere:
The forts that stood there for so long, too proudly-
Eaten away by the sea- the dead prostitutes beneath them,
Buried beneath the canon balls- too young and too deeply
To be remembered by you,
To think of me.

Robert Rorabeck

To Think Of You

There they go- up there making love-
Wish of the wind has blown their paper carnivals-Swimming birds of grown up mobiles- Now what will
They do,
Impossibly above the mowed and mowed again grass:
Like paper airplanes above paper trees, who Will they sing to? The lion is asleep-
The fire has died, and the stewardesses are asleep in Class- The fireworks burned away after less than A minute and a half- These things,
Eyelashes and embers through the power lines and Orange fields- less than ghosts in love,
But do they know their own way, and what cathedrals
Are they going to, as the boys wander again
Away from school,
And my body gets up again to work, to think of you,
Knowing that it cannot fly.

Robert Rorabeck

To Think That They Too Never Think Of Me

You come upwards like a star of your high school:
You swim and baptize this way
Like a carnival fish, and I have survived so far because I have Seen you captivated in a saucy dish:
Lavender, eyes so blue- like lapiz lazuli graffiti going down
Into a subway:
Sharon, I think of you this way: I first sate and then starve this Way
All for you: your child is beautiful, and before she learns a Word, or how to stand and walk, she has defeated me:
Sharon, your daughter is my crucible:
She has made a simple man indefectible, invincible, immortal:
He will continue on now forever because of your accordance,
But has he ever seen the navel of the Grand Canyon,
Or has he ever played baseball alone with his friends in the Ashes of sugarcane blowing over Royal Palm Beach;
But he has taken his shirt off and laid across you; and now your House is blue from holding its breath, because it has so many wishes,
But I shall forever sing for you, entranced by the fata morganas
Cast from your body and far across the lapping bodies of our seas,
While the traffic bleeds beside the canal, weeping the joy of their careless Lights traveling home: they too are immortal in an imperfect way,
And it helps to think that they too never think of me.

Robert Rorabeck

To This

As tender as a kiss given over easy with the eggs
At breakfast:
Your brown body taugth with promises:
And I holding you there in that booth, swearing into your Eyes, just as any boy:
Your wordless lips lingering upon my clothes
As I got to work
Selling Christmas trees; and at night I have to make love
To girls neither of us knows
And the snow snows, but it isn't real- but paper cut up
By custard cowboys
Lingering in the plastic graves of kindergarten sung to
By kittens with wings and castanets of their Own,
Petted by Stewardesses who are always too busy to address
Us directly- their eyes lingering in the booths of Clouds- their pilots happening upon the sun:
And I think of you, sitting down to a
Feast that melts through the coops of my daydreams- Alma,
And finally comes to this.

Robert Rorabeck

To Touch Down

Enduring the shouts of echoes,
The yesterdays of airplanes
Over the summer fields of Preschool,
Talking about fieldtrips to the Sky.
Above where the rabbits lay so
Frantically
To the dinner bells of Supper time,
As I am left up in the Angelic armpits of
A lustrous tree;
She could even be a virgin
The wind doesn't know
And I wait in her arboreal
Nursery for my love to love in,
To touch down on the shore.

Robert Rorabeck

To Touch What I Was Not Meant To Feel

There is no easiness to this body's way-
There is goes, pretending to be of some good avenue,
When even near the major highways of sunlicked
Stock,
It is wandering off with its eyes:
I am wandering off, looking for the milkiness of Your sodden gold, the crèches down by the carports
Of your knocky thighs;
And, as a little boy- I had wishes; and I had dreams,
And I snuck across the property line
And drank the neighbor's beer;
And I have had wishes and dreams of you
Since first I ever saw you-
I have put you in the triage of aloe: I have put you
In a spell- You- so dashing, blue-bell,
Curled and tucked into mountain rind,
Abashed by the old forts of the old gods' sea-
I am trying to cheat fortune to hold your hand,
To brush one finger once across your tremulous lines-
To dab one spot of flesh onto your spot of gold,
Just once, while you are yet breathing and surreal;
And I do not know your proper names for the things you dream,
For the children you are yet to have;
I am but half winsome, comely and lost- and I'll go by my Own motorcades down away from you into the sweltering peat:
I'll fornicate in old graveyards if it's what I have to do,
And pay less attractive women to whisper venal nothings into My ear;
If that what it means to surround you in a turgid ghost,
To envelop you like a decrepit seal: with no royalty in my host,
To touch what I was not meant to feel.

Robert Rorabeck

To Try And Sculpt The Sea

I have a picture of you in my studio as a night
Cap—you seem to be coming home, kissing the purloined
Roots of the upturned flowers—
They would be plastic, if they were stolen from the graveyards,
As a new song bird sings—
And the boys get out their golden colors to paint their Faces—
And I stare out of my window at the moon: there is a new Cloud hanging over her: she seems to be in a movie,
Or in the middle of making one:
While I sometimes dream about writing a novel about Lancelot's
Child—
And my wife just wants to come to America baring our child:
And he will come,
And she will come, and fill up the hospitals with her screams—
While the flags whip in the wind,
And the waves continue to try and sculpt the sea.

Robert Rorabeck

To Unbutton Herself

Painted echoes upon the side of a standing horse:
I wait to go to the flea market,
The airplanes fly away, of course- -
And I have made an instrument of my unbeautified bones'
They can wait outside forever,
Dancing like the waves, the skin of the sea'
But eventually she will have to unbutton herself and let them in,
Where all of the echoes will take herself to me.

Robert Rorabeck

To Understand

Old professors having committed suicide
Somewhere outside the all night bars upstate
In the bonfires of state colleges
Her cadavers still perfume—
Luxuriant aphorisms for the things
That have never been found—
Lost boys like scattered coins along the road,
Just the foreknowledge of the expressions of Thoughts.

My wife loves our son and sits with him for Awhile,
Reading him books he doesn't care to understand.

Robert Rorabeck

To Vanish

Lucky clouds shroud the moon:
That is what she does with her frenetic weathers,
And cars and cables run well and long
Beneath her,
Through the cities and out between the well-
Open pastures,
And I have been thinking of her some nights,
Thinking over her like the diminutive wildflower
Above tree line on the mountain's
Nape,
Like a dragon-fly sipping wine- I already know she
Can do no good,
Because she is pushing the handy coffins toward me
In her races by her degrees of braver
And braver men:
But I've just been thinking of her and drinking whiskey,
Alone underneath the house of the one armed Farmer,
And I am not so presumptuous to consider myself
Beautiful anymore,
But I can still remember the way she looked in high school
And Disney World,
Which was so damned good to keep me writing of her
Far into old age,
Smelling her vanished but lucid bouquet
In the salty viaducts of my forever truancy, helping me
To remember as well the ways in which I
Have allowed myself to vanish.

Robert Rorabeck

To Vanished Angels

Trees can look after themselves- they do that very well,
Even when there is lightning,
And the grandmothers have all passed away;
And the carriages have wrecked down so far beneath the glaciers,
And they've spilled out their pornographies:
And the conquistadors have eaten themselves: and what They did not finish, the wolves have finished,
And now the table is set with silverware, and the fairytale
Princes' hair is golden,
But she doesn't care about the singing of such mines: she has lit
Right out of here,
Her birthstone an empty basket at picking time;
And the mountains groan from the indecisions of their loneliness,
And they stop up clouds and delay then for awhile just to encourage Tears to flow from the forlorn viaducts which attribute themselves
To vanished angels,
So that fountain spring from their summits, and plummet like
Promises through their perilous keyholes.

Robert Rorabeck

To Where All The Genies Live

Technically, the words can play for a little while,
Drunkenly
Five stories up in a Shanghai suburb
Even if no one else remembers me:
The little places we used to go,
Alone,
But with a glowing bottle,
And the language that we used in our nocturnal day
Was not so peaceable,
But it made love to flowers
And made fantasies out of acrobats—
In the morning, as the children return to lock and key,
You can only see the used car sales men
And all of the atrocities underneath the sun—
But for a little while
I ventured to where the genies live—
And we in our trauancies took a knee in the waves,
And cursed and threw all of our flowers,
Especially the roses, into the sea.

Robert Rorabeck

To Which Even Time

I want to have school buses and better fun:
I want the day to leap up and lick my hand;
So that every river is her eyes in amusement,
Meeting at forks like
Church dinners, like ways to do math;
And her nonsense should cover up the silence
Of cemeteries,
So even though her mouth isn't there, it is all Around me,
Mouthing off, doing its best to make friends-
We go to our amusements together now.
We build a house in the woods and shoot all the Indians even though they weren't but Bringing coffee cake like fat warm centipedes,
And in a millennium it will all be a Laundromat
With ancient arcades,
And ways to jog and amuse with her there,
But I can't wait that long.
I want to French kiss her right now- I haven't French
Kissed a woman like my dogs in nigh a decade,
Since there were warm pirates whose warm and topless
Maidens got their busts sizzled by candle wax
Dripping from the nobby,
Corked beards: Even though beautiful women come into My tent every day,
I don't know who they are:
I can only want to know one woman at a time,
And you are so far away,
When you are already saturated by the monsoons, the Pregnant bellies of snow clouds that gather around your Mountain and dropp their unique weather over the Hoods of race cars,
While you and your family are tranquil, having well imbibed
Those blue spirits I have sent to you,
To which even time has known no sword or talisman that Can kill.

Robert Rorabeck

To Win All That They Have To Lose

Scarred and selling in the woods, stilted by Windmills who stretch their tattooed necks- rookeries
For the pilgrims of song birds
In the motes of light distilled through the pantomiming
Keyholes
Of disgruntled mountains: the airplanes eating themselves
Through the over clouded passes,
And everything up in the basin shedding its sins, like a Typhoon broiled from a inland sea that dried into salt mines
Before any of us existed,
Like a burial mound looking into the drugged streets of Mexico,
Where little girls flitter on cobble stones, and leech
The milk of moribund alley cats:
In the spume of a glittering womb of a holy mother who is
All too sure of her voluptuous attributes:
And there she hovers like the boudoir of a rain cloud,
Pinching the nipples on the fetuses of grapes,
Weathering the copperhead skin of the farmers who worship
Her as muse,
Warming their hands so by her promises of her stones,
Shaped like the eggs spilling a preferential lottery that hopes
To win all that they have to lose.

Robert Rorabeck

To Wipe Its Old Self Clean Again

And the bodies are going to feel so real;
And the bodies are going to feel so real and come for me
In the gypsum bong fests,
That nothing else can very well be survived,
And this is just the verbiage of the very last of all of these ]Very pitiful bouquets,
But otherwise don't you know the very least of any of all of This,
And wont you at least admit that neither of us are the Attorneys or the vermin of Every single one of these tourisms;
And now at the very least we can all sing, with the Mickey Mouse ears of all of these tourisms,
And now that it all almost Felt good- I can liken you to the tourisms of my Neighborhood, while the old serpent licks its wounds until While it can battle again;
And by then the old standard will have wiped clean and have Gathered itself together to wipe its old self clean
Again.

Robert Rorabeck

To Yet Another World

Pestilence in a field of joy:
Little girls sleeping with spiders of tin-
Their dogs run away with foxes:
The sea wanting in- and across them, all of the Old wounds of mountains,
Of the old men sleeping in their wombs:
While across their bodies the shadows
Entomb,
Tattoos that float like clouds living there:
The vampires looking through the window:
Their hearts an apple orchard:
The sky filled with the jublations of fireworks,
Pinning around, collecting the dollars
Of their wishes from the throats
Of gold fish,
Little boys coming home off the streams of their Dying fathers
Don't say a word, but climb back into their Wombs like homeless turtles curling in the
The grottos
Where she cleans the laundry, and sings for them,
Her throat an underwater pearl
Returning the stolen moonlight to yet another world.

Robert Rorabeck

To You Right Now

Can't I say that I have been born into you,
While I put the bottle down and try to jump:
Sure, yes, I am going,
As I am leaping: Like a pretty butterfly while I am lying,
While all of the prettiest of white boys are Sleeping in their air-conditioned cars: while all of this they Are doing, reassured because the graveyard she is still blooming:
And they have seen the oysters sequestered in her grotto,
All the peals laid out thoroughly opened in her boudoir,
All as if the open throats of opals on Sundays in the jewelry rooms
Of her blonded boudoirs;
But I am just as sure, Alma, that they have never seen her;
Just as I am sure, that they will never see you, Alma;
They will never see you, but you are just as beautiful laying across
The places that they sleep, as brown as delicate as a picnic
Of mariposa, all the mariposa weeping the molasses of all the sweetest
Times while all of the gringos sleep and dream of fireworks shooting
Off that are never as so sweet and as near as you are to me right
Now, Alma: Alma, as I am to you right now, As I weep....
And weep.... And weep.

Robert Rorabeck

To Your Divine

I drink so much it is as if you are standing
Righteous before me,
Pushing your trams and your coffins,
Hawking your wears and jingling.
The child diadems your hip
And you are more verdant than any forest now
Extinct,
And make for good reason for the unnecessary ness
Of decrying whatever animals need never
To exist:
Only you are here, one deity arisen out of a species
Of titted sex;
And your tiny vestibule rises in the north like
A fox-grape monument that traffic turns
Toward,
As if hearing a perfume; and these words are the Barn door left open,
As the windmill squeaks protesting the quixotic
Nights,
And now the cliffs are real and moonlit,
Circled by the ghosts of gentlemanly birds,
And the highway is so long outside your door,
But you can just stand beside it and it
Fades away.
Then the snow comes and takes up the place,
And adds to your divine,
And multiplies you in my mind.

Robert Rorabeck

To Your Questionable Travels

Fine weave of Zoroastrian souls
Suspended between us and the clouds all day,
Wishing that it was my ancestors there
In that amber patina over the new crust:
In the distance, low backed mountains without Trees
As maroon as warlike grottos; and maybe you are There someplace indiscernible in my canvas:
Always there trying to migrate with your one good leg,
Counting the troubles which harangue the atmosphere
Over your eyes like the ghosts of defeated soldiers,
In the landscape of mothers baked in that clay
Which make your eyes stand out even more if you Ever chose to open them again, as if it made a difference,
Or gave even more wonderful sadness and
A destination to your questionable travels.

Robert Rorabeck

Today In A Rain Shower

Sitting on my laurels and drinking the last of my Guatemalan rum,
I am yet always hiking further and further up for you, Alma:
I have almost masturbated atop the pearly summit of Another orgasm,
While your sister laughs at you for being in love:
And then at night I light candles and pray to the Virgin of Guadalupe to give you the best carnivals the goodnesses that are Your pleasure:
While your body has already breastfed the god fearing lips of Another man's two children,
They are like the Siamese springs of a hidden cemetery still Breathing in the topknots of a cliff only the best climbers
Know how to survive up to:
And now that I have gotten here, I remember how you road me
Like a cowgirl up into the rowdy lights of a cherry-creek
Rodeo:
And we made love, face to face, while you smelled like the spilled
Syrup over a delectable and forbidden meal,
But it was the best love that I can remember: Alma, it was Real, and the gods remembered us,
Even while the airplanes fell down into the organic pits of the Gulf of Mexico:
Maybe that was where our ancestors met and ate themselves:
But can you imagine the breakfast our child would have if we came Together,
Two souls separated so far by all of these forbidden worlds:
They would be so brilliant as to be the first to go to even more forbidden
Planets,
And they would have no need for television: and she or he could feel our Roots growing through the rich abutments of their body, Alma:
I am sure that our child could feel this way,
But I can only imagine how he would see all of the stars in the heavens:
I can only imagine how she might feel the pulsing lights of the far Away stars as the rain kissed her skin, as I kissed your skin
Today in a rain shower in the living mausoleum of your sweet-ass car.

Robert Rorabeck

Tomatio

These tasks you give me ring like cicadas over
My sweat and tears,
And I put my fingers on the shedding green skin of A tomatio, and feel it like a jaded breast-
Then at night after the black children have graciously
Vacated my swings under the combusting canopies
Of slash pine,
I try to metamorphose beneath the very same moon
I have no doubt you are trying to sell under,
Though your face beneath it is indescribable,
A mask with so much power but no eyes.
And I thought I was trying to conjure you and your taught
Junoesque thighs,
But it seems that you know how to better handle this Cerulean airplane,
And so you glide your sweet coffins like a broom through
The floors of close space,
So every corridors becomes your song bird,
And you never have to look up to watch me die for what I was shooting for.

Robert Rorabeck

Tomato Dacaries

Give me motion without motion,
And I will show you
The male and female lives
Glowing at either end of a magnet
Or canoe:
The sides of my face switching sides
And finally surrendering
To the graves:
How I keep doing this,
Painting mountains and going to bed,
And rising again,
Wishing to worship the beautiful world
That has abandoned me,
Wishing for a beautiful woman to love
Who hasn't even thought of me enough
To have to leave me alone,
Because all the good girls wear the same
Uniforms and they always sit with Their legs on both sides of the saddle,
And the stop at all railroads
And obey the wishes of crossing guards.
They have never missed a candle on any of Their birthday cakes,
But they secretly love it when they come around
To the swamps,
And the mosquitoes steal tiny tomato dacaries from Their jiggling breasts.

Robert Rorabeck

Tombstones Of Their Crosses

Dawn cluttered with song birds- cannibals with Beautiful throats
And torn wings- fighting for superiority
As the curtains rise on the day
Like a movie theatre exposed to horribly
Carnality-
And somewhere in the chaos, looking down from Broken nests where there now lay
Only bleeding arrowheads- you down
There somewhere,
Riding across an alligator or a rhinoceros-
And you look beautiful, even eating that flesh:
And you make love to conquistadors until
They are cenotaphs,
And you bathe in their hearts underneath the pale
Light and tombstones of their crosses-
The sea a salty sister, with feral whispers, wishing
She were what you are....

Robert Rorabeck

Tomorrow And Tomorrow

Now I am down for awhile, underneath the planets,
Just as if I was a crèche of airplanes
Slumbering:
Just as if maybe you loved her for a little while,
But then you had to become all stuck up,
While this is just my dream repeating:
Maybe you don't even have to hold out, silent Song beautifully managed between the Breasts of the canyons:
Maybe this is just how I pretend to dissolve,
As the heavens matriculate before the management
Of the better tenements:
Maybe this is just how they do their thing, singing through Their bereavements, their flagella struggling
Like freshmen:
And this is just a new song in which they have to peruse themselves,
Trying to become better lovers,
While I can stand out and swear, like a unicorn, like
A werewolf,
That this is just the bouquet of another slumber echo- and I don't even have to manage to be here-
And I want you now,
But in your houses, the angels sing in their cages,
Of the wonderful but obtainable possibilities of tomorrow,
And tomorrow, and tomorrow.

Robert Rorabeck

Tomorrow And Tomorrow

The death of many things and all trespasses
Apathetically on the livings' cages:
And on their houses and what all, while I lived today,
Alma,
And ran my fingers across the blinds of your ribs:
Maybe it is true that you stole them from me,
And made it all the way home from Mexico, but I don't care:
You live here now, and I am yours, and maybe we will Have children,
But I don't care: whatever possibilities can blow on the Winds,
As long as you happen to me tomorrow, and tomorrow
Again and again.

Robert Rorabeck

Tomorrow's Consumptions

The city at night,
The city at large:
Open mouthed, swallowing,
The giant in the clouds;
It was swallowing its bridegrooms-
It was swallowing its anyways at night:

This wasn't just America,
Like a bridegroom awaiting
And this wasn't just a lonely
Wife pressed against
The canals-

Trying to press herself up against the saltwater
Tears
Of christmas.
This was all of the saltwater tears of all
Of the presidents
Awaiting the come down and the annexations
Of all of our houses:

Even after we had realized that we were just rabbits
Pressed into our hutches after hours
Of the openness of holidays:

This was just the last lamp that shed itself
After the last opening hours of all of the holidays:

And I have kept myself closed mouthed afterawhile
After the closings down of all of the openings of the highways:

The high schools are all of the pretty monuments:
In the bathrooms, all of the prettiest girls have been looking at Themselves after the bypasses of all of the highways:

But now, anyways, after the nights bloom,
I swallowed my pride and learned to walk sideways:

And this winds up to be shown into the wherewithal
Of all of those defeated decades:

The night blooming jasmine are coming soon
Before all of the echoes of the blooming tomorrows:
In beautiful decades, all of the housewives are opening and bedecking
themselves

And this just happens to be the last restoration
Of the colors by which they are costuming themselves tomorrow.

Robert Rorabeck

Tomorrow's Forever Rainbow

And all of the stars- what did they Know while the candles kept their bow—
And the heavens sang—
And the seas complained—
And the unkempt heroes slept beneath the Possibilities in tomorrow's forever rainbow.

Robert Rorabeck

Tongue In Cheek

So the world heaps up the joy for its grotesque
Figurines,
The cowboys and Indians fighting again in the sand,
As another day proceeds;
The wind brooms the faces of tombs, and mothers go out of their Rooms to go shopping in the yellow nude;
And they all have children who safely sing,
And who swing so safely on the safe, safe swings:
While the world spins in a perfect arc,
And the frogs go chirping after dark down to the dark, dark prominence
Of the slow canal:
And it goes creeping, creeping softly how it goes creeping past
The bedrooms for another week,
And all the wives kiss their husbands tongue in cheek.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Afraid To Visit The Graves Of The Girls I Love

Cold and almost down deep enough to see,
The sky is a blind woman clothed in shimmering
Rags;
And I am failing her- I can barely breathe,
And the girls who once sat against me in class
Like windblown trees, roller skate over my bones,
The innocuous cenotaphs lying on the blistered
Planes of Colorado- They are shooting forth to Find the cavaliers, to take shelter and wash themselves
Under the silver shields and platters:
She has made so many more important friends, well
Dressed, who graduate from Harvard and go
On cruises; and the truth is, I can't even fix cars,
And am even too afraid to visit the graves of the Girls I love, but I just keep doing this, tooting my Fading horn after all my cousins have already charged
Into marriage, sunken into the trailer parks of a Penniless saccharine malaise, they love the things they Love, and don't have to work for it, or try and appear
Proud and handsome- She is married now,
But my words are spilled down here the cheap forensic Evidence in the black and white noir, never found or Even thought to look for, with the wavering plastic weeds
The toy mermaids made of hard and knotted wood,
Who I have given my heart to, but it seems they also
Are never hungry.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Beautiful For Me To Describe

I drink as I stand and the night vanished
Without any reason—
I do not have any more personality than the morning,
And the most of what I've done should be Forgotten:
And then they are growing up—and the lungs of Infant babies are becoming butterfly wings—
Each wave a glass house that is soon
Destroyed—
And another number gone into the lost and Found of the playgrounds of the echoes of The churches—
Your old teacher was your beloved, but now
There are so many mice in the castles that There doesn't even seem to be a place to stand in The movie theatre—so the words are divorced
From their mouths—
And the night shutters its existence a kaleidoscope
Blinded by the daylight and the multitude of Things that are too beautiful for me to describe to Enjoy.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Busied

Wounded by airplanes and agape,
And then to be seeming to look away at new wounds:
The sky opens up,
Like the proverbial sea parting,
And the old lovers find untried things to say to themselves-
Their bed sparking of the utensils of heavily
Used fireworks,
As the rusty wolves wait in the timbers of the over-fallen
Woods,
Where even the tinniest of little girls have over-slipped
Their playgrounds
And are making new wounds into the dirt,
Their skirts all too open for the busiest of ants
Who are themselves too busied in their work.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Busy With Your Disbelieving

Anything for a cheap thrill:
Roller coasters, sorceresses, and that funny old sun
With nothing to do:
I looked into your eyes as long as you would let me:
I looked in them still while they were lowering me
Into the grave on the wayside of the Pilgrimage:
My body had lost its tingle and its shine,
And a pall had set across me like a gunfighter doused in Turpentine:
And I want to buy a house and invite you in like a
Vampire: You kissed me neck once, twice;
And then I kissed your lips like a fat hibiscus;
It was as if I drew my saber on an over-trained victim:
I became too good for the Olympics:
I defeated my master even before I was out of high school,
And now you cant look at your eyes in the mirror anymore:
You just eat after midnight with your sister,
Wondering why anything about you hasn't changed:
You were still very beautiful weeping above my grave,
Because that's how I wished you:
I brought you up as a daughter I could never kiss, because that is How I raised you to be;
And now you are immaculate, a fun house of perfected genuflection
Only in town for a week:
And other men will bring you flowers, and you will kiss their Cheeks,
But you can never see me again; because this is my carnival
And I am packed up and leaving
While the different sort of palm trees whisper your name;
And you are too busy with your disbelieving.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Close To Touch

Reiterations of the progenitors,
We ripple outwards
From our ancestors—
The craftsmanship of Ephemeral carpenters,
Each of us the latest
Attempt to realize the Original Form,
The desire of our species
To return to the loci of paradise;
So we amputate our self into
The opposite sex,
In the futile search to Recover the innocent childhood
Kidnapped like phosphorescent mica
Under forgetful stones
Scarring the historical battlefield,
Utterly imperfect with each
Passing generation
Stumbling blindfolded and Gut shot,
Feeling but not recognizing
The manic happiness
Of our breathless ancestors'
Lipless grinning;
With each attempt the God
Inside us becomes more miniaturized,
The domesticated kine
Who stands dumbly
Expecting to be fed for Scientific butchery,
Crying in our powerless homes,
Latchkey kids microwaving dinner
As those we love die
Similar lives
Surrounding us,
The paradoxical splendor too
Close for us to touch....

Too Coy To Be Frightened

Plenty to do this evening:

Fifty bins of pumpkins- so many spooks
For one holiday, but we hope to do
Our part at rotting teeth and welcoming in Satan:

Oh Satan, thank you for your greatest counterculture
We are never allowed to speak about,
And for helping me get this farmer's tan throughout
The day while the black men stoked up this White lung of a tent
The lights glow under like the softness of a suburban Foyer.

And there is a black cat stalking birds in the grass,
Which lights out towards the blue gills in the canal
Whenever she sees me-
Every animal with its survival instinct- That is why
I haven't looked into your eyes in so long,
And write short poems to get my fingers away from you
Before they entirely burn with insouciant poisons;
And the buses turn around every day like a wedding train
Of really fearful ghosts,
And I always check to see if you might be on one of them,
But you are never on one of them-
And this poem is keeping lit too long to justify any more
Of it being sent into the unreturning sea of obscurity,
Like fifty palates of pumpkins tumbling in the waves,
The moon's Amazonian breast smiling down upon them
And fluming its milky penumbra to feed the feral cats
Who are too coy to be frightened to say hello.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Enamored To Even Care

I eat kettle corn
And exhale through my sugar twinged
Lips,
And pretend that I've just come down
From working the Winged
Fair;
Or that I was its auctioneer
With so many words on my lips,
Or the lover of
Her fairer sister,
My fingers entwined with ribbons
Of absolutely nothing
I have stolen from her hair,
As she lay dazzled,
Bare breasted,
Giving her all to the sun so absentminded
And immortal it would do her no good:
It was as if he wasn't even there,
But, alas,
She was too enamored to even care.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Far Away To Listen

Which leg should die first:

On the contrary, I am sure things are getting worse,

And her eyes should look further away:

Bukowski should return in full conflagration,

And take charge of all I've forgotten,

And I should say her name:

I should say her name, but I am a vampire hunter

Without hope: Come and take my death and check

My billfold:

There is nothing here so important that it should be allowed

To stare out impishly under the stars and hope

To be understood:

Hood this curse, and gunny sack,

Take it home for a meal, nurse your sweet, toothy brood

On your pap, steal what you can not find wandering

Around the feral borders of your mind:

Wash the chassis of cars of strange young masters,

Check the stars for ensuing disasters,

And hurry on home to your curt your masters,

Twine your slenderest of fingers into his slender mustache;

And let your eyes fall away to the side, like sad toys;

Let your eyes fall away to the side like sad toys that I

Have refused to put away- uncork the rood and let it sail straight

Over the national forest of hot springs and antlers:

Let your spirits giggle nastily and in love; let the kindergarteners

Go out underneath spittooned sprinklers and enjoy the plastic

Heather,

While you and your bo lie suppliant rocking in the trailer

Atop the uneasy esplanade while your young toddlers learn how

To stand upright, mighty-fisted fighting cougars

And the wolfish who grin like politicians being just reintroduced

Like strangers to the headshots of your youthful ambitions,

Who sigh and bay behind their thrush of walls,

But your children are already too far away to listen.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Far Away To See

I set out on my horse- it was the Best thing I could do-
We galloped to the sea- it was the only Thing I could do,
And we drowned beneath the windmills
For her-
My horse and I, as my father watched,
But the stars were too far away to see.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Far From Her

You'll go this way, and we'll make love:
We'll sleep over alone together- the rivers will Flow around the empty rooms in Houses,
And the eagles will birth their young over the highest Canopies in the forest:
Their first born will be as blonde as a forest fire,
And in her freckled armpits he'll find shade,
As if in a fire escape or
An apple orchard:
He will learn how to stand up and breathe at a rest
Stop going up to her university
Oily and tanned, never learning a better language,
The airplanes traveling as if on
A scent overhead, the pinwheels and roller coasters
Curling in the peppermint hallucinations
Too sweet for the tourists to avoid-
And if there were any better words, or prayers to Sing to her- and if there is a better girl than Her to sing to,
He, of course will never know- because she will be
As far as he can learn,
And even all of his nights will be spent auburn, nude,
And wounded beneath her windows,
As she cries down to him the names of other loves,
In languages he is too far from her to understand.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Fearful To Go

Lights go out and the rides at Adolescent amusement parks slow down
And stop,
The oil lays asleep in a windless castanet
Far beneath the earth,
Gurgling and cooing,
And the traffic narrows, simplifies, as your Lawyers and doctors and stronger and even Braver men return to reciprocate;
And they have bought bouquets and been to the Jewelry store,
While I am the enigma on my stormy mountain
Trying to create enough static electricity through My joints to keep the show going,
To keep just the smallest town alight by Conducting energy through my toes to the Light bulbs in the snow;
And I haven't seen you for a decade, but I know
How you look,
How you can raise entire armies of enigmatic dead
From just your simple tears:
And I want to call down to you an orchestra of things
Highlighted and unreal,
But I want us to defy them all and stir up a hornets
Nest,
To crenellate a show above tree line,
A strange and better lit amusement where every tourist
Is too fearful to go.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Lighthearted For Anything I've Been Heard To Sau

Another put down séance to hide my face into:
So you won't find it where I've crept so far away from
Your town:
You will be going out tonight, your face so pale and Youthful under the banking clouds;
And your eyes will soar upwards, delighted and without Fear;
And your man will turn you around like a wind chime
Of a weather vane;
And the crocodiles will watch you with eyes just like
Your birthstones,
Watching you peel out gleefully underneath where little
Boys too fly,
Where I am so far away,
Where I am sleeping underneath a bus and hiding
My face in a selfish mirror of the very earth that you
Dance atop of, so garish and nude in your many miles
Of display;
It seems as if you'd be smothering me, if you weren't
Too lighthearted for anything I've been heard to say.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Lighthearted For Anything I've Been Heard To Say

Another put down séance to hide my face into:
So you won't find it where I've crept so far away from
Your town:
You will be going out tonight, your face so pale and Youthful under the banking clouds;
And your eyes will soar upwards, delighted and without Fear;
And your man will turn you around like a wind chime
Of a weather vane;
And the crocodiles will watch you with eyes just like
Your birthstones,
Watching you peel out gleefully underneath where little
Boys too fly,
Where I am so far away,
Where I am sleeping underneath a bus and hiding
My face in a selfish mirror of the very earth that you
Dance atop of, so garish and nude in your many miles
Of display;
It seems as if you'd be smothering me, if you weren't
Too lighthearted for anything I've been heard to say.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Many Bottles To Count

Do not applaud what is ninety-five Percent failure,
Unmarketable, expired:
The crenulations of a frozen river,
The ineffective sulfur of a homeopathic
Spell:
There is nothing true to these relations,
The city avoids what it can't sell,
The beautiful housewives living well
Displayed in the beautiful neighborhoods,
Each housewife's home a window
Displaying their aspects of a desirable
Gender;
Expensive wares are desirable and take
A long time to acquire,
The proper spelling to handle, and a
High position;
The waves are so brilliant, though down
From there- the dragons sleep in clutches
Like ship wrecks, green iron cannons molted
Together- the earth bubbles pearled flatulence,
Young gangsters holding hands go into cool
Movie theatres,
Little girls writing their dreams of princely loves;
But this has nothing to do with the soft
Murder I've done,
The fetal nebulous of uniformed glass, though
Glowing like a priceless miracle,
Disavowed and in second thought returned to
The un-enchanted womb, who is too busy
Fondling her better intended playboys,
To write excuses to such failures of chaos
In the rabid sea where there are already too
Many bottles to count.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Many Fanfares

Another Monday in the sun—looking up and searching the Airplanes leaping the burning everglades for the Answers—and the answers come:
Daycare and kindergarten—and any words are poems
Spoken from the misinformed tulips of the young:
And you were there bright as an angel on a fieldtrip
From her tomb—
Were you as careless in the suburbia's insouciantly green
Labyrinths as a youth could become—
And the world without a joy came to rest into its undiscovered
Fantasies on the other side of the canal—
Words of joy lost to the mouths of dogs—and I know that even Though you are taken for granted, a better place can Be spoken to you— and as the morning calls through the Daylights of its conquests, you will be made to come—
Harlequin of too many fanfares—a marionette of all too many young.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Many Feet

When the day lies down then so do I,
But before that I unharness my team of unanswerable dogs:
You see, they don't have to look anyone in the eye;
But you are a beautiful woman, and you are floating in the sky.
Maybe you were also in my dream while the cold cracked the Necks of trees, while the buzzards swang:
This you know made the stars so glib that they cut themselves and Fell down from the sky, and even the wolves howled with my Dogs
Until the entire world was painted out, and it became so frighteningly
Cold that it was forced to grow warm again
While life was giving out down the blisters of the street,
And you came loping towards me a creature of little heart and
Too many feet.

Robert Rorabeck

Too Many Worlds

Slides down into pools, baseball diamonds wimpled
And coy underwater:
I got my first gray cat when I learned how to pee in the toilet,
But I continued wetting the bed until I was twelve:
I loved Chelsea in kindergarten and she loved Michael;
I loved Denise in second grade:
I brought her tulips: I loved Kelly then, and kissed and tongued
Her once just off of Blue Heron:
Only once, and now she is driving back down to Tennessee to kiss
And hug her children,
And her husband, and by the middle of this week I will have a little Spanish house that will also be my grave:
And I want to love a woman, because I have jogged all alone for so Many nights side by side with the canals of this world:
I can no longer love white women, because they make me have nightmares
Of sleeping with my sister,
And their clothing is too beautiful to see myself in,
And the lips of Mexicans burn with fire, and the desire of new knowledge
To be born again,
To surrender to the flags of their third world countries,
And to wheel their leggy cannons into my new living room like green copper Trams to pin mobiles over, and underneath those plans to kiss and mew to Our mulatto children who through the both of us will know
Too many worlds to be contained by any of them.

Robert Rorabeck

Touch Down

This smoke without reason I will and cannot

Save:

Like a panhandler of the fateful aphrodisiacs, I

Have discovered that it is the really evil people

That get more than lucky in this world.

As the fish swim backwards up and down, dumping

Their row on the slick backs of rounded

Stones

The dogs never stop to paw:

And I have been in love in my solitude: I have traveled

Alone up the wedding gowns of so many uninhibited

Mountains,

And I have wet myself alone after crepuscule,

And after midnight, after all of the middle class housewives

Had already gone down and down:

As Alma has gone down,

And the roads become easy and almost like fairytales,

And they do this to survive, but again because it feels good:

And the roads turn into themselves,

Hugging in their gypsum like grandmothers who are even

Still breathing,

And beyond them there are only the clouds who bring the

Exegesis of so many possibilities;

As if they were bringing my muses uninhibited to me

Even while I slept aboard airplanes that refused to ever,

Ever touch down.

Robert Rorabeck

Touchdowns That Surround Her

Fruit market in the sunlight without any other muse:
Daydreams through the bright spokes
While I don't have anything else to lose: the government
Hardly pays anymore with the airplanes touching
Down- the private enterprises
Of angels spilled out across the frontiers that no longer
Have to believe anymore:
There they are all laid out in numerous cornucopia
While the apples of her delight never even had to spell
The world, but we are all awakened by her lips
Eventually, while she bights into the perfumed
Meat and swears: there is her country left behind her:
There, like the fireworks as if unlit,
And the other scars that could not be trained by circus
Trainers, and yet I may very well survive it:
There she lays, perpetually semi naked underneath the slants
Of her window- inside or outside of his arms:
He who fathered two children inside or at least around her,
While I remain still troubling in my fits-
Lost in the flight delusions which still whisper her name,
And which still hold something more than mere Delight by lighting their wings
And make touchdowns that surround her.

Robert Rorabeck

Toward The Finish Line

Quietly, quietly swing my stick
While the mist is whistling, while the school is still Locked;
And all the kids that will enter here in are back in the Tiny little ballrooms of their social classes,
Except that the prettiest of them has been given over
To the crenulated back of the alligator who waited
For her all after midnight,
Like some lazy whirligig fallen off the truck as the fair
Was leaving;
And she can be all somnolent, like the breath of a deity
In the wind blowing;
Something really old and turning out- there she was,
Seeming to float, blind to the swings and slick,
Silver amusements,
Dulling even the moon: she went to her motionless lover
And put herself on its horny back, like Europa did with Jove,
And he slid smiling into the slick canal where never an Orchid grew;
And I thought she would just go around for some times turning
In the grids that would confuse her of the sea,
But she never returned to the school-yard,
And I skipped class and slept for her in wayward cars like
Pine trees, and never learned the proper names for the sweltering
Flowers the Mexicans had planted there-
So eventually I graduated and left before the ceremony was over,
Like a fish out of his plastic bag, finally really breathing;
And ran through the parking lot my cap and gown streaming
Like a virgin in a vacuous library;
And I never found again where it was she disappeared into her dreamings,
And the ballplayers played, and the jockeys squinted on their Horses
Toward the finish line that they were sure wasn't a very long ways.

Robert Rorabeck

Toward The Jungle Of The Deeper Shore

Traffic is an endless dream:
That is what our Presidents are made of,
While the Mexicans crack ice,
And the great population of iguanas lick
Corduroy flies in their despotic jungle;
And today I ate my plantains,
And the sun and sky rolled nice for me-
Well, I wasn't the prettiest boy around, but I didn't need to be:
I was sharp and could dive down for miles,
And paid no attention to the housewife smiles:
They could not enter me for very long without Needing to come back up into the shallows;
And the Italian boys came in nicely bronzed,
With teeth like corns of ivory;
And their wives and lovers and day glow honeys
Sat up for awhile on the hay bales and took their pictures;
Studded and ringed- it is a funny two legged circus
They go around in- living their lives promenaded monkeys
On moony chains;
And the sad thing was I saw you there with them with your Auburn hair and your old soccer tan lines like beautiful scars,
And you were going around with them like a sweet titted
Goldy bear,
Bobbing alluringly in their sunny shadows, taking your pictures
To remember and compare
How illusory your world of his is, and how spare:
While I stared at you from underneath a gray hood and cheeky
Scars,
Watching you mop your cherries across the tables and the bars,
And it was all I needed to perceive
How lovely was your shallows, and how save I was
For from any side of your luscious contours it was only a step
Or two toward the jungles of the deeper shore.

Robert Rorabeck

Towards A Beast Of My Lovely Soul

The candles fix themselves after their mother has Died, and the paper airplanes
Fold their own wings: you can look for me on the other side
Of the canal,
And listen to my voice the wind sings through the cypress eaves:
And I am scarred and full of sorrows,
And I keep on taking back, and wishing my promises were more
Heartfelt; or that the Virgin of Guadalupe could get up
And stretch her wings and flying the same paths as the flight attendants,
Who cast through the shadows until their burning wheels are Cooled;
And then in the places that they land that I don't know: well, goodbye,
Like graveyards in the south of France
Where little girls take little ants onto the spittoons of their wrists,
And they talk to their silly things all day while real boys and Marionettes who are training to lie for themselves,
Take the trains in and out of heaven- and the other places where I
Should not belong- but you will still come high tomorrow,
In a silken pedigree out besides all of those mailboxes,
Rubbing elbows with the gods who are wearing gasmasks afraid to Breathe the same air as my muses, their horses, and cowboys,
Who all are smiling down through the rich substances of the valley
That pitch the cerulean tents of dollhouses and the other model Games that my knuckles crack like firecrackers in the lips of Roses; and in increments towards a beast of my lovely soul- toward My Alma, methodically moves.

Robert Rorabeck

Towards Heaven

In ways I bet like fire,
My belly growing pregnant with rattlesnakes and Liquor- yet, still
I struggle up the impregnable slopes, taking my Time, and finding my ways
Up the insurmountable- to kiss the lips of god,
My muse striped in the colors of
Mexico:
From here, the traffic looks like the toys of infants:
From here, I can see Mount Esquidilla like a goddess:
She rises still, her neck as white as from opals,
From the juvenile aspens that bud around her Neck
After the fire, after the grizzly bears- and I take my Time surrendering to her, counting my prayers
And climbing into a dead tree amidst the boulders
To have another photograph,
To think of my mother's cradle in the woods of Colorado now fifty years ago-
To rest like a bird
With my dogs, praying to some god I haven't even yet
Met,
The road beneath me an endless ribbon that the Anonymous traffic kisses,
Flooding themselves in the letters of nameless saviors,
Themselves not even sure that the way they are going
Is towards heaven.

Robert Rorabeck

Towards Her Abandoning

In these young stages of your echoes—
I will not fear you while I am your teacher,
And my poetry is remiss to echo or even to include
You—
And the part of my soul that includes you is Devoid of aesthetic beauty,
Because in the summer the planes come:
It costs a week's paycheck to ride upon them:
But you can ride over the playgrounds,
Or you can ride over the see—
The sun shines it's a$$ over the open abuses—
The housewives like the cloy bouquets over
The Bay of Bimini—
And the horses of the cavalry gallop—until they Are eaten by the spears of the sun—
And bottle rockets jump up like crickets to meet
The caresses of daylight,
As if all of their cavalcade was a soap opera
Delineated to the afternoons of a daydream—
And not a cabaret in the midnights of
A theme park where my darkest muses still come—
Nocturnal roses perfuming beneath a Ferris Wheel refusing to move on—
These are the places it cannot keep—as the song birds
Fall into the briars,
And I love her ceaselessly, even though abandoned of Her amusements—having to awaken again tomorrow,
To imagine her singing to her children
Awakening upstate alongside the rivers she had to Follow towards her abandoning.

Robert Rorabeck

Towards The Childhoods Of Delusions

Dancing towards the childhoods of delusions,
The moth becomes in love with the Flames,
Just as the midnights fall in love with the cadavers,
As the sunlight obsesses with the rains—
And didn't I see you at the football game, playing
The flute, your skin as brown as honey,
Your mind as undone as rum—
And you were laughing and blowing kisses
To the boys in the skies—
Each one of a pilot of your adolescence's goodbyes—
Words that escaped me and their heavens
Languished in your eyes,
As my memories ran around the fields for
Other girls—until I returned home and remembered
My wife—and the passions that lay narcoleptic
Behind the houses where we spend our lives—
The avenues of rivers that keep turning toward The seas—
The memories of angels of your adolescent trauancies
Shooting like fireworks on up into skies.

Robert Rorabeck

Toy Soldier, Plastic Boy

She might have won her war,

But I won my little battle.

Robert Rorabeck

Toys For Your Children

In this body, hunched—lycanthropic—
The memory of the sea trying to reach the Overpass where its homeless lovers
Wait—
The cars arrows of predestination—controlled,
Wheeling beneath the highways of Airplanes,
Peppered with the plantations and nurseries
Where the bees pollinate
For things of flowers—and where I've Thought of you,
Coming out like a mollusk from a tear:
There, I see you again:
Your wings are wet, but will soon dry—
It is your birthday
And there are toys for your children underneath
Your arms.

Robert Rorabeck

Transcendentalists

Tired, where the hole in the heart buzzes,
And hairy men who tell me they are transcendentalists
Keep going down, down, down, chewing nature food,
As they point out the molasses cataracts,
The steps they take inching the body's rhythms:
They pass through a hole in my ribs, and say,
"How so." Muir climbs up one and sleeps on it
On his back, says there is nothing more natural than the Un-abating love of silly fools. Thoreau, in a lady's Sunhat thinks quietly that he should build his house
Right here where the tissue is firmest, the darkening purple,
Beside a lake where day dreams splash like brook,
But Thoreau soon calls the others nearer to him, for He is in the lead and the darkest down, where there they Can sense the throbbing of all things pitiful. Here where There is hardly any light, though above my fingers flutter
Like frightened flocks of silly, featherless birds.
Here is where the dark spume resonates, and they say
Before turning back up never to return, "In these dark woods
We fear to go."

Robert Rorabeck

Transoms Of My

How it was that you have a family I don't Know,
Maybe it was that you had it while you were crossing over
From Mexico;
But this is my pledge, my Hibernian fire,
My paper airplane torches,
My love crossed bird on its wire: Alma, Alma; alighting,
Fly:
I give you the promise of hope- and I stab my heart and die,
I die:
Or I hang myself inside my yellow shelter, while my Bromeliads cavort,
This is the last report of my heartache, and the palpitations
Of my ever beating percussion:
Sometimes the sky wants rain, and sometimes the rain wants some:
But I followed you all the way home from work today:
At least all the way to Cherry lane, and almost all of the way
Home where it must happen that your two children
Were blossoming;
And it was some kind of Technicolor dream, caracoling on its
Merry-go-round, making fun of nothing:
Your eyes so brown and wild, filled with a sea of zorros:
Holding your pin knife, you cut the ears and heads and hearts
From the day old lettuce, until you looked up and saw through the Transoms of my days: my heart my soul- you let off and sucreated:
Together we were made whole.

Robert Rorabeck

Transoms Of My Days

How it was that you have a family I don't Know,
Maybe it was that you had it while you were crossing over
From Mexico;
But this is my pledge, my Hibernian fire,
My paper airplane torches,
My love crossed bird on its wire: Alma, Alma; alighting,
Fly:
I give you the promise of hope- and I stab my heart and die,
I die:
Or I hang myself inside my yellow shelter, while my Bromeliads cavort,
This is the last report of my heartache, and the palpitations
Of my ever beating percussion:
Sometimes the sky wants rain, and sometimes the rain wants some:
But I followed you all the way home from work today:
At least all the way to Cherry lane, and almost all of the way
Home where it must happen that your two children
Were blossoming;
And it was some kind of Technicolor dream, caracoling on its Merry-go-round, making fun of nothing:
Your eyes so brown and wild, filled with a sea of zorros:
Holding your pin knife, you cut the ears and heads and hearts
From the day old lettuce, until you looked up and saw through the
Transoms of my days: my heart my soul- you let off and sucreated:
Together we were made whole.

Robert Rorabeck

Transoms Of The School Bus

Everyday losing to the easements where
The butterflies infatuate
Over the anorexic pistils saluting airplanes,
Swimming in brandies and other
Forget-me-nots just because it is their job, a feral
Truancy they leave their impossible school for
In their season;
And all hung up to flirt with the molasses lips of Tortoises who trundle down from the brambles
Where the saturated foxes as red as gloves
Can still be found sleeping away forever;
And the animals go to play with the insects, as they both
Try to court and make love with her buttercup cafeteria
Strewn down from the daydreaming transoms
Of the school bus.

Robert Rorabeck

Traveler's Song

I'll have to get drunk to move;
And that's why I've packed my bags, and collected my Dogs and dolls,
And given proper notice-
And I am leaping across country and wearing an erudite
Mustache, and puritanical girdle;
And wishing I was more sound, or that I could swim straight Across the Kennedy Space center
Before liftoff;
That my eyes were blue, and good for collecting your eyes-
That I didn't worship cemeteries,
That I wrote poems as good and cleaning as a little black girl
Does while skipping through chalk:
That I was Sara Teasdale in her eternal bed,
Listening to those rhymes I collected and stole,
Sweating without air-conditioning,
And staring blindly at the stewardesses legs and streams,
And getting all choked up
Because I wasn't old or religious enough to be with you,
And I've almost forgotten that I was supposed to be Jack all along,
And you're my candle, or aren't you: That burning tale of a fairytale,
A religious allegory like cannibalistic hamburger bloodied in the somme:
I loved you: Oh dear, I loved you,
Especially on Christmas dinner, a fable for blue jays, laughing,
And still a fable: jet airplanes cutting through the silence,
Causing beautiful scars for the lonely commuters in Saint Augustine,
Or Saint Lewis:
Looking up, drooling jawed,
Because I am on the move, and I have died, but I go
Leaping over the yard where the sprinklers turn across your Naked body so young and strong,
A flame that licks my heals,
That perpetually kindles my traveler's song.

Robert Rorabeck

Traveling Home Again

Jumping over those hills feels like a joy
Even though grandmother is gone and I am no longer
A little boy- Going through those woods
Like a river in its cradle, smelling the burning sugar
Cane in the sky's ladle
While the apple trees are making parsimonious
Music again, and the rattlesnake is curling underneath
Her freckled shoulders again:
Soon she will be taken home to him, singing her song
Like rains upon stone, back into a story I can Never enter in- too soon will she be traveling home again.

Robert Rorabeck

Travelogue Of My Blood

This morning all my blood is Sweating off its alcohol-
All my blood is jogging, and circulating
Its early neighborhood,
Trying to become less reclusive
And more adaptable should any house-
Wife need a transfusion;
My blood thinks of swing-sets and long
Once-studious legs of women who have Wived college professors in obscure
Northern states,
Who are my uncle, who owns a swell house
Out on the lake:
And this morning my blood is already thirsty
For gibbous moons in south Africa,
And travel brochures to places which swing
Freely from a rain forest and out into the reddled
Savannah;
My blood gurgles through my ears and is attentive
To the things it hears outside boiling,
The lawnmower is fixed and mowing,
Commercial airplanes set in their ways go leaping
Like silver javelin blades,
Never thinking to stop and smell the flowers
Down in the rented meadows where my blood cools
And pools, and matriculates
Through these early morning hours.

Robert Rorabeck

Travis Mcgee Writes His Poem

Because she was more outwardly beautiful than
Me,
I got cold when we fixed cars; or I pretended to When alone,
Which was always the case
And she went mudding with relations who first Came to water ski on her lake;
And all the time my mother had a bad back;
It was her disks;
And I drank too much whiskey,
And I had to piss- Pertaining to that pain, I bought
A lot of sympathy,
And then it rained- I used someone else as my muse-
She tended bar in Gainesville,
Which was so very far away, and she didn't care-
She slept all day,
And watched He-Man, and who she really loved, I couldn't Say:
Honestly, your honor, I don't think she loved anyone,
But her dogs, but what does that prove?
I thought of her, and skipped school,
And lit off fireworks above the sweet young alligators-
They refused to move;
And then class was over, and we graduated-
Far away, in Colorado, the Rocky Mountains were saturated,
And marked by the foot-prints of my love,
Another girl: Irish? Catholic? A sommelier? She was already Married,
And so I disbanded to Florida to become a cavalier detective
In a novel by John D. McDonald.

Robert Rorabeck

Treats Of Lips

Architectures so near their water fountains—
Sometimes mirages—treats of lips—
Filling up the hallway—the greatest inventions of Mankind containing them—
Echoing of heartbeats and school books
Shifted against lacy vests—
So they go to classes and daydream,
And the grownup world forgets about them
During their hours of captivity—
A zoo the teachers feed or are eaten—but
Time goes by and the janitors clean the yards,
And grasshoppers look up through the Vermillion sunbeams
Concrete slabs holding up the electronic Tresses become the lighthouses for an ethereal
Heavens, and I write this when I get Home and feed rum to my heart—
And think about anything to write, like the place
Where I work and the girls who live there.

Robert Rorabeck

Tree Frogs And Ant Lions

Chicken noodle soup in a thermos
Made me sick in preschool
On some fieldtrip in Palm Beach, FL—
There are things I remember,
But not your love—
How it crept like a sleep at naptime
Through the heavy sherbet rug of Kindergarten
Where things startled me that I stole,
Pissing my pants waking up from
The dreams of tree frogs and ant lions—
There were toads in the rebar around
The carport where my mother
Slept in the rain—
And blue pornography across the street in Graveyard of drunken cars:
And the soft dunes where the conquistadors
Slept—
And soft boys, no longer running away—
And the sea that is still there
Saying the same name that I always wished to know.

Robert Rorabeck

Tree Or Butterfly At The Ends Of The Earth

Affixed to the ploughshares,
Like dust busters who can't Imagine their luck at Watching the horse thieves
Hang
Out in the open, like nudes
Working all day to Christmas,
The weather like ghosts
Pillaging
In the fruitful ambitions
Who range the Aphrodisiacs of lightning
While the stones gossip
Near the summit with Nary a tree or butterfly around
At the ends of the earth.

Robert Rorabeck

Tributary Into Those More Serious Of Rivers

These poems are memories of dead frogs
And bourbon,
And the chirping calls from the carport,
And children in blue pajamas,
And cerulean tarp flapping like throats
With too much skin atop the roofs,
Dancing for the hurricane and the Moon's ogle;
And if I were to bring you here tonight,
And lay my hand upon your knee,
And touch the plated joint, as well as your Eye: Would you as well allow yourself
The deeper inhalations atop the serenity of An un-aroused neighborhood,
And could we see from there the storm lain
Across the sea like the sheet a lover dries
Across a brittle yard, or a sun blinded shroud,
And our children playing there as well,
Un perplexed by the merriments of such Well-perceived chaos
Arranged for quiet sale, displayed in those Swaths of either gentle or apoplectic grandeurs,
Which, in either away, allows us to hold one Another in frivolity, until the stems are joined,
Made tributary into those more serious of rivers.

Robert Rorabeck

Trinket Of Her

It happened upon occasions that I was not
Here,
But I saw your grandmother out in her yard
Doing something with it:
She was barely dressed; and you see,
The cars are driving, driving
Across the interstate beside her. Soon she will
Be gone, sunken like the cordless
Reptiles beneath the billboards-
Sunken beneath the discarded mattresses,
And the burned out structures;
And the cars will still be driving, and I wonder
If you shall ever find a lock of her ashen
Hair at a flea market- I wonder if you will
Ever hold another trinket of her
In your hand again, while the fruit is sold
In the circus,
And the sun leaps through the heavenly fires.

Robert Rorabeck

Trip The Light Fantastic

There is no iceberg under my lines: Their enjambment
Is a rush hour of pining men, lines of silver cadavers voyaging
Into the great red forests pressing the Pacific:
Totem poles tilting in the Oregon mud, with drunk Indians
Sleeping in quaint patterns, something Delphic for their Slaughter gods: Hemmingway will never read these things,
The pennies in the wishing well of adolescent lies, the way
First loves run together trying to irrefute the storms:
Each skipping stone lapping up to her knees, then sinking before
Her like the topaz in the orphan's hand, her foster parents
Telling her to put it away, for it is a long drive: Intersections
Of states she can put her paws on and be four places at once,
The assembly line of rivers cutting the spine of the Grand Canyon:
Lip service for a prom queen now a real estate agent, who doesn't Remember how you slept in the teal courts where she played:
The greater poetesses of their times eyes wide as if for examinations,
These lines are so quaintly direct, without stamen of areolas
Exposed unlawfully in the summer parks, as the clouds swing like
A grazing herd of make-believe animals: The way they jog, my Words make easy time, place somewhere in the middle of foreplay,
Brush their brows and drink lemonade in the shade of a civil war,
Sleep in the studio apartment with their two cats purring, while the Sororities of naked laughing hold swim meets in the effluvia of chlorine,
Fish for keys in the bowl of the lauded professors, and the revered lips
Of greater satires, the men with motes and slabs for words,
The prophets and the lead singers, dazzling them in enslaving concert,
As we snore and mew.

Robert Rorabeck

Troubling Boredom

In this beautifully imprisoned tool
Now how do your echoes sound—
Since they've
Been practicing with a voice—
The joy of throats in the boxes collected
From off the playgrounds
As the school buses turn and turn Around and around—
Now here is your joy,
And here is the part which can almost be Perceived
Looking beautiful up in the echoes of the Echoes of the playgrounds—
Well the angels play here anyways—
And you were once my beautiful teacher—
Now you are falling asleep in the daydreams—
Isn't it a troubling boredom into which they Cannot recognize you—
And I love you—and I love—but just while
The echoes mention themselves to their trees.

Robert Rorabeck

Truce With The Sea

Imperfect, underneath an overpass,
Underneath the stolen moon- while bicycles
Recline in the dark shadows,
And turtles have more than one shell:
In the morning they will be selling outside of The school,
Outside of the church,
And the beautiful perfumes of the jasmine
Will be gone,
So you will smell each fine blade of grass
Where the cicadas will then be sleeping
In their new change of clothes,
As the trucks drive by,
Delivering produce and the news:
And then you will see for yourself who is Homeless and who is rich,
And you can reach up and touch your face
Just as the brown women are yelling
And selling things to the light-
For it will be the hour when all of the lighthouses
Are blind, and all of the sailors are enjoying A truce with the sea.

Robert Rorabeck

True Beauty

True beauty eludes me after I saw her
Out in the student park lot taking his cigarette
To lips, contemplative and sharing,
But just tasting the rolled tobacco
Eyes having never seen Bell Glade,
Not inhaling
All the brown sugar cane workers migration
In egg-shell blue busses past the last zoo to the West,
Never seen how they congregate and baptize
Down the cocklebur easement of that coagulated
Alligator tank with creepy lilies turning,
Eat ham and sour eggs on red clay,
Imparting bare-chested and naked-lipped
Drippy watermelon
Voodoo and fummy rum witchcraft approaching midnight;
Divvy up the moon as they meander to the dusky track,
Tarnished and yet forensic.
Could not see her before she took off with
The quarterback in a full dollar swoon
Blindly guided to his home turf in the gloomy afternoon
Of our suburbia, took off like the last wave cresting:
Her virginal notch now like a cinder stoked in a horn.
I suppose I should have followed her,
Began that tramp, thrown my books of algebra and Easy logic to the dogs and skunks,
Cavorted to a private war through the splicing
Shade of tight green palmettos like knives in a drawer,
Could have crawled up to the steamy window to
The pitter-patter of mostly affluent rain,
Been a onomatopoeia voyeur
Could have laid there smelling chlorine as the pool was Rippling, as the earth was swelling;
Rains fell cleaning
And maybe I howled believing the moon was full and rehearsing
Behind the cultish clouds like apoplectic satin:
Back in Plato's cave, having microwaved,
Alone in front of the television, masturbated on a green
Carpet of my derision, rhyming like a snail poking

Its head out of the curling salmon shell,
And then shrinking back in again:
Poor old man-
I cut paper and made airplanes and sold them over my Head to the ceiling gods, the little dusty gods who can't Even spell- Pretended she was on them serving
Drinks to horizontal windmills
While over my shoulder to the west with the day labor witches,
The sugarcane goes burning, fuming in an intoxicating swell.
Then in so foreign a place that it comes from the Opposition direction, like in a sad movie
They are interlocking bodies and fists, knuckles popping,
Silhouettes enthralled
While greedily over the canal, ululating, the sugarcane,
Roaring burns as brightly as a thundershower, obscuring what I know must be real:
How she loves in turns,
Things she's been told to love, and those which Are now just occurring,
Like grey lips on the television I cannot hear
But yet are moving.

Robert Rorabeck

Truth Of Windmills

Here is a new river, bubbling- making love with Gold light underneath the apple trees
Where the truants go to get freckled and to steal away from Each other every day:
Where the Mexicans sleep at the bottom of worthless ladders,
Knowing what they mean to themselves:
And I look up at your Anglicism, Alma, with the neverending
Truth of windmills stuck to the roof of my mouth.

Robert Rorabeck

Trying Themselves

One thousand gypsum fairytales
Just trying to keep my tailfins
Warm,
Pretending to be another
Metamorphosis
A thousand and ten miles away from
Home—
And when it gets cloudy, we sell
Christmas trees:
Just me and my wife,
And the dwarf—
And my grandfather, why,
He is dead,
But fully satisfied now that he has
His anatomical request—
And in the morning floods
And toy boats
With vaginas—
And my hands typing away in the Hedgerows beneath a cloud—
While a thousand girls get off to Themselves—
Inside the theatres of the hurricanes
That are trying themselves to be
Not so very loud.

Robert Rorabeck

Trying To Collect His Name

Exactly like her resemblance crossing
After coyote into Mexico-
There she is, a mirage at the airplanes' feet:
She will remain here
As the billboards fade, as the echinopsis of the cacti
Blush- that the careful lips pluck Beneath the cliff dwellers and the stewardesses who Rely so much upon which way the wind blows-
The philosophers and
Archaeologists beneath them- their civilizations
The metamorphosis of slender crops beside
The articulate river-
Going so far from tourists as to be hidden from
The show-
Their families blooming and running down hill
Into the deltas of casinos
And the statues of giant blue horses like lightning gods
Quailing to the heavens,
As it rains down from her window the silent
Thoughts of her high school- really, make-believe
Tears now that she doesn't believe in water:
But runs down hill, anyway, trying to collect his name.

Robert Rorabeck

Trying To Misspell Your Name

They seem to be laughing I want to think of
You with your brilliant, tender eyes as I buy a red barn,
And somehow seem to survive across the Graveyards for all of the winters while I am not there—
And in the absence of my presence a stallion—
As full of light and as majestic as the midnight of All of your vanishing cars—
But I'll awaken again tomorrow listening to the yawns
Of lions until all of our seats are lost on the busses—
And I can spend forever trying to misspell your name—
Until my classroom will be emptied—and there will Be nothing else left to call me recluse—
Just the movie theatres that somehow seemed to echo
Upon the vanishing enterprises of your misinterpreted
Game.

Robert Rorabeck

Trying To Reflect Your Beauty

Stay for awhile: the angels are making
Peace over the canal,
And maybe it is Christmas- there is
A new lawnmower in the neighbor's
Yard,
But their little girls have gone forever,
And your children are at home-
These new words I say of you to noone
You will never know-
I will say them to the emptied yards
After all of the heavens have come out again,
Trying to reflect your beauty-
After you have forgotten all of this Romance and gone indoors.

Robert Rorabeck

Tulip Farms Of Norway

Nefarious whispers- let them come,
If it's the only thing
You can do then let your drunkenly lascivious
Fingers run up and down-
Haunt me from that house in the woods
I read about once so far away.
Give me novel reasons to turn back again,
Looking for you across the playground gutters
Of Florida. Help me get feverish on the swings
Of your impossibly carnal joy,
And throw up my chicken noodle soup
Over the hydrangeas and the other frilly sex organs
They were trying to sell before I got to them;
Because I have new scars like wilted corners in
The bat wings of my cheeks- novel disturbing
Not quite knowing why it hangs out plastered beneath
The smoky sky when it should be in A whispering classroom wafting your perfumes over
Its song bird shoulders-
This is the only mathematics I seem to get out,
And I let it pour out of me, a flooded city at a subatomic level
While swearing like a transplanted sapling that I would Do better in your insouciant shade,
All the time knowing your permed roots curl deep around the Transformed cenotaph of a better love,
And for all of this I might only receive a freckled cage
In a richer man's side show;
And even then your heartbeat won't linger anywhere nearer
My drunken corner enthroned by enraptured
Though despotic metamorphosis;
Because you are always waking up in the bowers of A cerulean woods sharp and attractive with virginal light,
Tinseled by woodsmen and their handy oil-cans,
Guessing you can come down anytime you want,
And thumb the fat highway which spreads corpulent and flooded
As if laid out for you happening like a faithful sign both ways from the Convenient doorstep like the
Tulip farms of Norway where you choose to live.

Robert Rorabeck

Tumbler's Eden

There is not much light
Anymore in the garden-
The cats are almost over the fence,
But why should it matter where they Are going?
I never owned but these scars,
A crescendo of lines seeming comical
But ending up disastrous,
Her perfect body which fades from too much
Jesting with alcohol-
The yeast doesn't rise,
What we had for dessert a fiasco, and even the Pressurized gazes of the fraternity turn inward
And sodden-
Waves are butchers and
I put down the pen: I don't have it in me
Anymore,
The rose is looking downward.
The serpent doesn't have any knowledge
To speak of.

Robert Rorabeck

Tumbleweeds

Staring at the sun,
Cheap books populate the eyes of minors
Run away from home;
Long haired latchkeys of the color-blind foundation,
Eat their tuna-fish lunch with grandmother under her tomb-
Some like to say they're pretty,
Some like to say they're sharp,
Some swing until they're dizzy,
But they all drink the mulberry wine deep in the bitter
Park after midnight;
Then is when I've seen them, staring until I know they're true;
Looking like lost cats who want to fly
Like torn curtains under the abandoned moons;
No one knows their names, and I don't suppose they should;
They walk around in parking lots wearing their somber, unmolested hoods.
They rumble, and they roll,
They jaunt, and they stroll.... And bound as they steal
Across the unfinished train tracks which cascade into the polluted waves.
They live in the boxcars like rusting land sharks,
And in the ditches like unwashed witches;
Some prefer the elbows of pine trees; they climb up with scabby knees,
While some will sleep in the concrete lap underneath the overpass;
Where they are going, they surely are,
And already the night is filled with the disinfected stares;
Like cold beads of unsteady corneas like eclipses in blue and green pools.
They go by the freeways like the detached shadows of an overcast afternoon,
They go into the field like any kind of hungry animal;
The spores of this earth, they look for a place to grow,
But already there is so much hustle on the cold metal show;
So just a little further down the road they amble,
Bobbing their heads, their way and their handle;
Looking for a roof to spool their knotted threads,
A bed with some warm blankets to rest their tangled heads.

Robert Rorabeck

Tumbling, Tumbling Tumbler

Tumbling through the orchard's sea:
Tumbling, tumbling tumbler;
Now you can't say what I am looking for-
That I am looking for her who the mountains
Cry for-
Who they en crèche,
Engorged plum-colored, yes;
And the tourists come down long skied off their Mountainous and acanthine esplanades,
And imbibe her spirits if they know what's good
For them
And I want beer, and I want wine for my long haired
Honey- Oh, she is fine-
And I drink cheap, cheap wine,
And look into the sky, and curse airplanes-
Why- Why- That I should drink alone at night,
And kiss the Spanish Conquistador;
It is not right:
That I am scarred, and drunk, and defeated onto the Floorboards of insouciant traffic and their haunts:
And I want to live forever,
And maybe I should- Or maybe not:
And the tent is breathing slight jazz,
And I really need my fallow faun:
My pallid doe, and if I was Don
John wouldn't I already have her opal
Orchards picked and plunder and blinking in my Suburban lawn.

Robert Rorabeck

Turning Away

Ephemeral in the hemisphere
Above her eyes,
As she looks up- froth of waves
In twilight;
And now she goes in to feed the roses,
As the surf touches the world one
Last time,
And the daylight caresses his
Petrified lover,
Before turning away and going to Bed with the night.

Robert Rorabeck

Turning Off All My Lights

Maybe you are just another little boy and this is My insecure monument to your amusing roadways:
They go forever deeper into the indistinguishable bric-a-brac
Of your landscaping singsong;
And maybe that makes my parents really pissed when my Parents finally get home all tapped out and unable to fly;
They sink like heavy wishes that once floated
For you sometime after kindergarten, and I really loved you
In that daycare; but now you are all strung out
And you have too many children for my two bedrooms:
I still live in a really holy place for you, even when I cannot Take off and darkness blooms and the pelicans sing with the Eyes of swiftly repeated ancestors;
And I know before I even start out that I have been singing to
The stillborn bedroom, because you are not here anymore:
You are wrapped in your husband's casual soiree, and it must Be a wonderful thought to know whose grave will singsong your Name, the way the smooth granite of tombstones call out
To you and your children: you will all sleep together at the end of Some dusty road, as you will all float together in the sky and Play a chorus so sickly sweet as to be incestual; as I cry out,
And turning off all my lights for you, curl into an indistinguishable
Ball in the darkness, and pray hopelessly.

Robert Rorabeck

Turpentine

Mad faceless men echoing from the Australian
Pines,
Sniffing their brillow pads of turpentine:
When I go to defecate in their woods-
They yell at me draped in blue gills and palmettos,
They at first they say get out, young boy-
And a loose airplane wheel drops on their head,
And then they have a change of attitude,
And they say come in, my boy, for you are looking real
When before you were looking like green shirted Thievery:
For we come from the stars and places and planets
Which have unfamiliar drapery unto this Technicolor
Landscaping,
And young mothers, and two and a half pets:
It is all strange to us- We have a gun, but she doesn't Know what she means to us-
And their pants hang like a suffocated flag, blue over their Smoldering fire:
They don't have enough money to buy beer or cards:
Their faces look even better than mine,
And that is why they spend their entire day waylaid
Amidst empty banisters going nowhere in rooms of alligator
Furniture, butchering their freshwater mermaids,
Sniffing turpentine.

Robert Rorabeck

Twice On Sundays

The professors can live forever.
I will eat her hymen; I don't care to know nothing about
Flowers, '
About flowers, except I guess I suppose she has one;
And she makes love to the bartender,
Under the feet of dolphin,
But I guess I suppose they will have to both awaken
Surprised In their graves of Sundays,
Smelling themselves,
Smelling themselves, I suppose; as the week carries on;
And the week jaunts like knights on a quest,
As my mother counts the money, as I can't sleep,
Which is best;
And the days thunder, and the days parade,
As all my muses as absolutely pretty,
As they absolutely get laid by boys,
By boys prettier than me; in their coffins all week singing
Like ice-cream trucks,
And twice, and twice on Sundays.

Robert Rorabeck

Twilight's Vacancy

Thus, feverishly, I pick another stem and hold it lilted to you
Gaze, but I am a thief, for you are not my attended gardens.

So the sea has washed his lower lip, and made it droop like wet
Grass, and the sands are measurable if time was petrified,
And the heavens were a sorority of far away oracles,

And the fort they made to extend the empire stands like a surveyor
On the perch of tourists, and the graveyard they gave to their penitence
Is awash in the gloom of a concrete cross,

Where little children not knowing who they are run around
In the allocated space of games, and lovers like overrun persimmons
Are in the angles of worship, where they are best seen in the Peripheries of twilight,

Thus in the air blooms the preservative of missing theme parks,
And the grand finale is on the coral parapets, crying the silence's joys,
For the tourists are glutting amphibiously upon the halogen wharf,

Faint latchkeys swim with mongrels around the satin hotel,
Now a haunted university, and the quicker lovers who will soon disperse,

Like spores to dry in autumn's impotency, rile in the act in their Possessed room beneath the flashing neon sign of a cheap motel
They will soon forget, as their weddings occur far away from one another.

Robert Rorabeck

Two Brothers

Up again, arisen into the world I should know
Filled and overflowing with cars and acrobats: one or two Birds are trilling,
Singing of goldfish in their bellies: And I will wash and Get to working,
But who will read me in this world in which school
Is over and all the girls have turned out to be Women,
Comely and well-legged and making their yards as fine as Playgrounds for their children:
They have turned out splendidly and not a one of them is Mine:
Women, women of the world, don't you know that this Day is mine, but I need of your number the one to fulfill my time,
To make of this old thing a new togetherness,
A fineness of our troubles,
A new day in a fine world for lovers that are doubled
Like the polygamy of souls, and of legs walking together,
And arms holding like a nest two hearts beating as if in A forge crafted by two brothers.

Robert Rorabeck

Two Brunettes Named Heather (Pedaling Nice And Slow)

Awake and sparkling in new amethyst:
My hair is almost red, but I haven't a job:
Its kind of just like I've tried to smile,
As she passes her way with a hiccup of eyes:
Where do such glands lead her that they should
Also lead so many boys:
Entire football teams; but I need to eat other Things. Why, won't you just look up into the Castanets of all these trees. They are truly
Weeping to have so much of their quiet souls
Go down into heaps. The students pass by so Unattending from points in their destinations of Their gardens of what can be used-
Sometimes a beautiful brunette stops to tie her Shoes, but what does she say to them that here can Be used; and I've made that up to be kind to my Sylvan audience: no brunettes passing by, but the Assured night and the canvas is empty afterwards
It has been well swept and put into the proper
Grammars that line the sidewalks without a word:
I thought they said I loved her, but I was only passing,
And what the trees did gossip I shouldn't care to know;
It is the same language as some bicycles, I saw together,
Carrying two brunettes named Heather, pedaling nice and slow.

Robert Rorabeck

Two Cherries

These psalms, these psalms, they are holding Mass for better Catholics,
Mowing couples swing like censers, smoky, unreal,
The dying Italian bourgeoisie;
I can't even spell them, but they make me so horny;
And look at my scars, and the cornices,
The bad places in the ceiling- The church bells ringing-
You can see the silver archway like a monument
To the religion she keeps ringing in the air,
Picking cottons and her tears- The Mississippi,
Gambling, sponge cake: I have two dogs who scrape off
All the paint of my new apartment,
Which seems to personify my own new scars,
And girls from high school, lingerie models calling to Me seeded and well fed by the sugar tooth for my look warm
Pornography: This is the way we go, but it is getting worse,
And they are all superficially married,
And superficially beautiful of course: And I want to be just like
Them, I want my horse to win: I want common stanzas,
And lukewarm rhyme schemes, and my teams to win:
I want to teach school again:
The city rings like church-bells, like reindeer bells from her Nipples, and she dances just enough to let me know she's Jogged to the door, though her shift is over but is not coming in, not even for two dollar bills rubbed together:
The point is meaningless, the sky so ff%cking beautiful and Never meaningfully fulfilled,
The city rolls over, two cherries then bust.

Robert Rorabeck

Two Dollar Bed

I write good sh@t for good honest people;
The oranges from my grove are safe to eat,
But sometimes bitter:
I plug into the electricity of locked houses and Ejaculate
While the boomslangs weep down to kiss
Me,
And at night in my roofless boudoir, arousal
Unfulfilled without the conduit of your tight
Mollusk,
Necrotic ambulances swing around like stiff
Gleeful horses,
Decrying my embittered virginity;
They sing with a chorus of bloated mermaids
That this won't last:
This talent, and this beauty blooming like
A magical bouquet by my lucky palm-
That I should grow even more grotesquely mundane,
While the crickets lay off the job of tweaking legs,
And campus security won't let me into the head-
So I have nothing to do but jog and swig
Two dollar beer:
And raise the skull and cross bones over my briny
Two dollar bed.

Robert Rorabeck

Two Glasses Of Wine

After two glasses of wine,
He tells me, the poems get good,
Because the body warms like cuddling,
Like an Indian blanket outside the Thunderstorm,
The same one they used on their honeymoon,
And a person begins to feel the words
As if coupling with a drawn out woman,
The kind that doesn't stop nor could you ask
Her to, and the little tinkling of words
Become more than representations of the Sad facts, become women themselves,
Or whatever you might want
There in your living room like a forest of Monarch butterflies alive but molting after
Their destinations,
And on their wings the tiny specks of the roads
They took, and the eyes which beheld them
Shyly from behind their uncle's curtains:
Those things wished to be said, the hesitant poisons,
Spill out as if from an anonymous wound,
And instead of slowly killing, they apologize
And remain there before their author like the Glimmering proof of evil, and mistyped love,
But at the same time they are coyly beautiful,
Almost like children, but with consecutive glasses
They begin to blur fully, fading some which Both dulls and multiplies their ineffective splendors,
So one might say before he goes to bed exhausted,
With a sloshing liver,
"These ones aren't real. Not real at all, "
But for their time they certainly were,
And they lay there now like lost wanderers
Expecting something more to happen.

Robert Rorabeck

Two Pieces

I.

Vulgarity: to have my Most cherished thoughts torn open
Like a new mother's blouse,
While she tries to sate her hungry infant
Even while the wolves divide
Her extremities,
So white branches erupt with seeping
Red, pealed before the vulturous eyes of The other passengers.

II.

I owe my writing to my nemeses.
I hate the fact,
And I should quite
And cut the sh*t
And jack off in the silence of pure ennui.

Robert Rorabeck

Two Soft Matches

When Sunday is finished how does it
Metamorphosis into a school day, unless it is Labor day—
And where does noon go after the stewardesses
Have flown over—
And with the sunset, the words of the housewives
Silenced,
And the candles gone from the birthday cakes
That have been eaten—
Traffic slows to the speed of canals—
And, of course, the lions yawn, but there are no More tourists about to see them going to sleep in the facsimile's exhibits—
And the love you once showed while brushing
My lips with your lips—
Two soft matches against a rose—
Only the albino's darkness found us,
And called us children who could not see, or Believe that in this very tomorrow you so quickly
Went away.

Robert Rorabeck

Two Things

Yellow throated thrush-
On a blue branch-
I don't know which one of you
Is more beautiful-
I don't want to know.

Robert Rorabeck

Two Tired Eyes

Two tired eyes,
Flat tires meaningless to road kill,
Just things we throw to the side
Bouquets with their tongues hanging out
Tangled shoes up on the Swaybacked power lines,
Knowing very little but wanting the Refreshments of your lips
Who don't care:
They are spry winged mockingbirds
Who sail over the shoulders of Better men and their paper towel
Laughters:
And you have a sweet tongue that pullulates
In the garden:
It doesn't need to sell things, but it
Does,
And your weathers are forever leaping
Without corners and balmy,
The nimbus of airplanes celebrating the Youth of your immortal holidays to which My eyes lay like shallow abscesses like
Puddles hidden under broken school
Buses,
And the soft bellies of alligators as they Lay dancing, dancing underneath the world,
As the jaws of the pearl tent flap and jabber walls,
With all the pretty things it has to Tell to you.

Robert Rorabeck

Unamerican

Mexican girls are so much prettier, if you can find
Them in their labyrinth of solitude the blue sky too tough to reach-
The blue sky that is never their eyes, and thank god;
Their narcissisms are quiet and as complex as ready fires; they have Their own pageants, when they go out into the night loving those Men who can never love them;
And I've felt them burning in my bones coming with the passion of Metamorphosing butterflies; and they awaken on their bicycles
And strike right out- They have their honeymoons in the darkness,
And never have enough to say about them, as they put myself
All in a tangle around the bones of my wrist,
So all the song birds they keep in their adobe houses are for the weddings
Of their small daughters: They only drink beer on Sundays then,
To look pretty for the conflagrations who will never see them:
They are the small daughters of the Virgin of Guadalupe, and I wished
That I could know everyone;
And I am so happy their love for football is particularly unAmerican.

Robert Rorabeck

Unanswerable Hellos

I'll pick-pocket in the black suites of Halloween—
I'll look down into the great ovoid valleys where my father
Is turning his tractor for no other reason than he is Perplexed,
And can't figure out how to avoid selling it:
And I doubt I should really make love again before I die,
Or if I ever did good love, or was it that I just hid behind
The Mezuzah she hung on our doorway to keep out
The young, industrious bike-thieves;
And there are faces of wayward angels who take up the Space where my face should be,
And lesser or great Indian chiefs are taking up my stool
Behind the glass exhibits underneath the Missouri Arch;
But it is like they have come around and discovered
That there are too many chiefs, and my scars shouldn't Be shown in public,
And there are no really good excuses for what I have done,
For cutting class and watching her leave the other way,
Pretending that there were topless angels schvitzing in the Delusions of shadows cut up like pieces of a shivering cake
In between the cars and football field;
And if it was something like this served at their wedding,
I wasn't there to know—because I don't live there anymore,
And her proud mother and father have sold that affluent house
I use to swim and know her in, anyway.

Robert Rorabeck

Unanswered Pain

The irrelevant hollow
Pushes from the grave,
The single plot encompasses the world,
A cornucopia in perspiring autumn
Unlooked upon by the young women
The sun dotes upon, hallowing and warming
Them as they go about their shopping,
Followed by many migrating eyes nibbling
On their breasts.

From the graveyard,
That unending necropolis without Points for definition, I struggle
Both motionless and wordless,
I cannot step beyond, neither
Should I, the language of my position.
My tongue blind and eyes mute,
I know I have always been here,
Defined by the deafness shot down by the Bright flow of feminine hair
Cascading like a picture book
As she walks along the outside of my boarders,
The black iron bars she never looks
Beyond, her first love a lost sailor
Drowning in the mists swarming the Perspiring backyards out of her vision.

In order to breathe, I need this Stationary hunger; I need to have a clear
Line of site to her, but can never move nearer.
I must stay the tree forever at the edge of
Her fertile sea, watching the other men
Disrobe and then to go leaping to swim in her.
Her waves lap against their chests, and they Taste the salt on their hungered lips.
I know myself by them in her. From where I watch, I must not say a thing. Remaining
The calm permanence of a lover's grave,
I find permanence in this unanswered pain.

Robert Rorabeck

Unbearable Ontologies

Its fun to speak of the gods
As if they were real,
And not something made up
For Halloween,
And blame them for taking her
Away upon the serpent's
Crest undulating in the Possessing Lights gowning the cemetery;
And not her Egyptian eyes,
The decadal senses who have Forgotten you,
Easily like a fast meal she had in
A remote classroom before
She was fully formed,
Her breasts just stung by Pubescent bees,
And understood what her
Gaze admired and leans into now,
They keystone of a hard knock sea,
Though she once thought
Of sitting beside you close to the Germanic fire;
Again, and again,
The pulsing womb a barb
That doesn't break away,
Thus mortified and stung,
Leaving you in a cage of Wanting lions undutifully educated,
Whose eyes are as sad as rain,
And as hungry as her eyes
Before they thought away
Along the serpentine avenues of forget;
Outside, the crooked trunks of Cypress bend like a canopy for A wide open bedroom,
The same as they would do
For any man,
And beyond them the cleft lip
Of the canal and the dunes
Where her flesh is warming the dusty

Marble of a crypt,
And he is there in his only form,
And laughing sweat,
Bending her like a smith,
With their bodies baking in a sawing kiln,
You cannot dispute the energies
Who leave you shackled to an Unrealized form,
Though you search everywhere,
Contesting the proof of gods.

Robert Rorabeck

Unbounded Wilderness

See even now her limbs enfold
The quieting places of his refuge—
The reedy trust his eyes partake
Their ransom of her ebony swoon,
In dimming bark reciprocate the Shed husks of diminished homes—
Swing now free in the hot azure,
In tangled pools the segues of Green thought in her ripples—
Taken to trust the unfastened mollusks
Of her fragile carriage,
Swimming in the drunken fauna
A swarm of seedless infants—
In the leaking basins of his grip,
She steps forward for baptism,
Allowing her knees to perish
Her stance into the reverberating
Throat of unbounded wilderness.

Robert Rorabeck

Unbreakable Family

Surely reptiles hording over their mean
Plates:
I mean the bone yard of my childhood—primordially
Thinking underneath their thorny hoods
Of eating ponies
And other forget-me-nots:
This is the place, dressed in a haunted wedding of Crepuscule,
And that is her book of stolen children tossed
Into the aloe after the hour when
My parents were supposed to have returned home:
And all of the neighborhood has fled,
As if to the sea, as it fills up with your emptiness:
A burning nest that was supposed
To be filled with soft eggs—or a warm Ferris Wheel that you broached to my heart only to take Away,
Carrying it over the mountains and to another world
Decorated with the banners of rattlesnakes-
To feed to your unbreakable family.

Robert Rorabeck

Uncensored

Read my words,
The fruit of ignorance,
And you'll have nothing left to do
But to return, uncensored,
To God's original design—
Duck you head as you
Pass beneath the flaming
Sword,
Like in a line at Disney
World,
And inside disrobe in the Beating lights; its okay,
Everyone here is an honorary
Virgin—
Just drape the handy foliage
Over your pistils and stamens
And stand still for the cartoonist
To draw you into an illustration for A Child's Bible—
Now come on. Here we go....
On our left if we're lucky
You might catch glimpses through
The rose thickets of Rimbaud
Trying to force himself upon Baudelaire—
What could be better?
And further in,
Here is the Marque de Sade
Handing out party gifts
And precious hats, like papier-mâché
Sea-shells
To protect you from God's eyes
Who shines the ever brighter here
Looking down through a hole
In the atmosphere, a voyeur
Way up high with his angelic entourage;
He has binoculars to spy on us.
He makes everything grow 10 ft. taller,
Now that we have returned to him
All of his original collection,

His eternal petting zoo.

Robert Rorabeck

Uncertain Promises Of Rain

When the sky promises rain,
And the highway is fuming like a volcanic serpent
Expressing the revenues of her men,
I find myself kneeling beneath you in the cut of Graveyard intertwined with the pharmaceutical Sororities and the cheap yellow studios
Where sometimes serial killers live but never grieve:
In the cradle of the iron gates capped by spikenards
Where the greyhound tramps of thin and flea bitten
Hides whine to be set free from in between the unmovable bars,
Where holiday is the sweet abdomen in the limp grasses,
And the topaz flies congregate around the navel
With its smells of long since births,
I pray with shadows in the narcoleptic eulogies,
And the darkening concentricities beneath my eyes do
Not pretend that you have moved away, graduated
Into the biceped shorthairs of flaxen day-laborers,
Those poor men who live thoughtlessly colored by happiness,
Who without a thought girls like you swim to, glistening
And perfumed, and play unbuttoning games with work uniforms;
Believe in the shallow permanencies of flesh and bone,
And the type of love which rides along with them
Like a carnival hibiscus in his vanilla lapel;
But I do not believe in anything but this stone, the New heads which are slow to cave, the greater denouements,
The novels which follow the short stories of our breaths,
The pronouncements of simple truth and thus more
Eternal form: here, in French, lies a great poet only 37,
Pray for him, they say, in French, and I do, but not long enough,
Beneath the lindens and heavy oaks where the windows are Like unobserving eyes, and the cars epitaphs of streams,
The girls simply lovers in a few bright days, they too unnoticed
Me in my habits, black ants trailing my jeans,
Everything all at once, and thus mostly nothing,
As the sky gives uncertain promises of rain.

Robert Rorabeck

Unconditional Reign

Isn't your husband jealous because his Baby is lost in a swelter of Hollywood-
Where I've been skipping
Before there was mountains;
And everyone looks beautifully available even in The libraries of Hollywood-
And out on the street legs and billboards
Selling,
Selling pleasures of grapefruit, and cheated escapades
Which go great around concrete ballrooms;
And when I was really young,
I stayed long enough to put my feet in the Pacific,
And ran away,
And that is what I do professionally here today-
Though you still look so good,
With your fingers smoking plums, your mind around
The caracoles of highways where old Spanish
Ghosts dream well fermented in the legions of Orange trees,
Or up in the roman abutments where athletic tourists
Still fall in love,
Recalling every sad glance of your face- even if they Had never seen it, or gone to high school with you,
You are there hung up like a Christmas ornament in The Spanish moon,
And the traffic tries deafly quiet beneath you as if in
A mute ballet,
And even more importantly young Catalanian shepherds
Come all alone as if into a bucolic theatre
Where you are deep in soliloquy, the waves your loitering
Marionettes,
And they rest captivated, dusted red like prehistoric pots,
And eat venal grapes from careless infested vines
As down against the night dreamt tide, empty sailboats wait
In bright folds seeming to cherish you unnaturally
Like Spanish butterflies who have stayed up very late
To glance up despondently like unbelieving children at your Unconditional reign.

Unconditional Transcendences

Going down the graveyards whistle in the North,
And I am getting too old to be doing this.
For to look into your sweet eyes
Is to consider the prospect of bedding the sea,
Where the caesuras are so many thighs
Slipping back and forth all along what they Need,
Like waitresses in cocktail bars
Who have painted their nails as they look away,
Whistling;
And you are so far north bedding your time,
And the children wait for you in the snow.
They do not know that this is what they do,
As airplanes shoot arrows in the sky,
And all the other common possibilities, the proofs
Toward a better sun,
And better lines than these:
And mother and daughter in fine transcendence,
But eventually one shall eat the other;
Thus as the first recedes, I will love her just the same
For infinity,
But never does she come back again returning
My unconditional transcendences.

Robert Rorabeck

Unconscious Spell

My tail bone like a vanished dousing rod,
Used to send out strange tremulous messages to you-
Half destroyed by the wars of high school,
Always bleeding in bed, attended by a blind nurse,
It rushes cross-legged through the states:
Sometimes it bounds pell-mell underneath the fences
Of clouds-
If you are not having an important conversation,
Stop for a moment, and listen to what I am doing:
We once crawled together on a rock which still hissed
And popped erudite with important time criminals:
And our double-lidded eyes perceived the bloom of the Very first flower,
Just a crimson paint brush thought up by nothing through
The misaligned lava pools,
Cooling in the stone rhythm I ran my tongue along your Beautiful platelets amidst the micas and gypsum,
And the premonitions of later sororities jubileed the air;
And the sun shone down from its preschool solar system,
Still learning the conflagrations of its otherwise
Unconscious spell.

Robert Rorabeck

Under All Of The Muse's Tears

More graffiti for stewardesses while
My wife sleeps curled up in a shell, a baby inside
Of her like a fully engaged pearl—
Her land of faraway overpopulated by midgets—
Words get twisted
Around the maypole where firemen dressed
As rabbits dance—
And it rains outside making the grasses bury eggs—
Dogs get old and die, but then they are Reincarnated—
And lines as swift as trains appear out of nowhere,
Going home sometimes takes them all week—
Winos lifting jugs in the fog where the big Ships sleep, wondering where they buried
Their lucky numbers—beautiful teams of words,
As if raising from the water fountains that advertise
Eternal youth in the middle of a school day—
The popularity that is never used eventually goes Unnoticed—
The werewolves sing to the unicorns in their sleep,
And other things come to us from the metropolis
Of the houses that inevitably drown
Under all of the muse's tears.

Robert Rorabeck

Under All These Many Things

Posthumous I may be
Two percent immortal,
Good enough for looking at while passing
Through to more important ways
By car
Or fast train:
I may be your esoteric Mickey Mouse
With fat, almost Jewish lips,
With eyes of spendthrift cadaver;
If you would see me rot out in the open
Air market knee high with the Spikenard
And the red armpits of cypress,
Then you would know me,
And how I feel for you with a new side
Of my face scarred,
Like a little boy with a divining rod
Wanting to searching out your pullulating womb
Down there in the aloe beside the muggy
Carport,
And once found, dig his garden house into you,
To see how deep the water has a home
Under the citrus tree,
Under the moon,
And under all these many things.

Robert Rorabeck

Under Another Silly Moon

Your body in surplice in candlelight
Walking somnambulant deep into the dreary hours
Of a department store;
I see you- I bite my wrist: my eyes flicker like Aroused fires who've been fed that very stuff;
And the English isn't good, just golden loin pirates;
But you are the stuff,
While the oxygen dies again like seraphim way up
Into the hungry mouths of the ceiling fans:
There you are entrained to the gorgeousness to which You are heir:
You are a nursery in your crenulated underwear;
And I want to hear you with my tongue; I want to plant
You just right here; and caracole that pearl which wimples
The head of your children as they come out like Propitious porcelain dolls at first cerulean until they Start to weep;
And then your life comes to me like a sickly sweet movie in The dark;
And maybe the butterflies will make love to the moths
Entering the forest of crepuscule,
As your mouth will open moist gardens of rumors to my Carport of a mouth; and the day wont have any reason to last
Any longer, and spill us out in a psychosomatic cornucopia
Together where the manikins gather,
The lovely ladies bathing forever just like housewives
Wanting for nothing, seeming to watch our brushfires
Once again under another silly moon.

Robert Rorabeck

Under Each And Every Feet

Laying in the hedgerows, nose red with rum,
The rattlesnakes despising the cotton mouths up from the Banks of the really torpid drainage:
The sky all blue with shark's teeth and shark's wounds;
And you are in school: you are learning how to hit the town;
But you don't see that the sky is cooking above this Feathery esplanade: each blade of grass a vermilion wing under
The fine shoes of housewives:
They are in the kitchen nooks tipping glasses up to skies,
Bosom sore with their new retinues, their little kids like little rabbits
With sore red eyes;
So the clouds gurgle and spume: they are living evidence that Bodies move up from the shores of the earth, up from the grove
Lands: All gathered from the teeter-totters; the middle ground
Is their changing room,
And now they are in the sky cooking up something sweet, and We are looking up, the housewives and I as well, while the Various menageries of despised serpents curl under each and every feet.

Robert Rorabeck

Under The Chandeliers

When my scars go away, you are not
There: I have no need for you to be there.
I am mostly beautiful,
And know my way up and down mountains now,
Know the witchcraft of the lay of the land,
Or I know the vulpine grin and can lay it out at The dinner table while he and you are talking, at which While the whole family is gathering around
Telling how it is done- up and down Broadway,
Under the chandeliers.

When my scars go away, I float too. There is No more reason for these words, there is no more Tattoos, or to cry this ink into her gondolas, into
A childhood of espionage and wet carpets drunken
In San Antonio. When my scars go away,
There aren't anymore heroes to take down,
And her lips are mature and yet still hung upon the tree;
They garland there; they grapes they wait, perhaps to speak a new Christmas carol, to make the fox leap. Or when my scars go away, I am
Out in a blizzard trying to call in my charges from frost-
Bite, those like minded marks of birth and fret:
How they did in the poetess, how they gave her a better
Grave, and laid upon her dress there, and built upon her Coffin: How they should lay upon me still,
Or nock for wanting to come deeper in, and grow
New ones in the spring, how they give it to me still,
How when my scars go away like strangely misty acrobats,
How they should migrate and take my better parts,
Take my more conscious and oozing parts, and leave me
Only there muddled into a suburbia, holding a gentled heart
Like a chalice while the otters swim braiding with the alligators
Behind the glass: How they make love by the coupling of Their species, and wait to eat or be eaten until afterwards
In the driven parks where lovers neck, where cigarettes
Perfume, and where I in my agelessness have run away,
Arcing as if something heavy with mercury:
I loved her, but it was an uneasy charge, but if these winter marks
Should disappear, if I should become an unchallengeable prince,
What then would they make of me, or more rightly so,

What could I ever make of myself?

Robert Rorabeck

Under The Homeless Swing Sets

Gambling for this new night
Down in the hollows,
Drinking my watered down spirits,
Hoping to see real life- moonlit humanity
Strolling by
Or cycling like spark lengths of
A bitter poem;
It has been such a long while since I collected
That mammalian press,
Since she was one dozen of my flowers,
Or I caught her auburn turn underneath the Receptive lights of a supermarket;
And the parking lot is filled with domestic Ghosts,
And the lake down past the delinquent graffiti
Of the suburban grotto still Floats rosy tampons like summer camp lotus'
And I never did hold her hand;
I was just wishfull thinking somewhere
Lost in the middling crowd,
While the clouds got up to suntan above the sea,
And my family celebrated a long succession of Birthdays under the homeless swing sets
And pine trees;
And I suppose I'll never see her again,
That beautiful memory lost yet more quixotic than Every wave in the advancing sea.

Robert Rorabeck

Under The Loose Wheels Of The Cars

Regaled in the energy of its clever
Turbines,
The city covets with the damp foreheads of
Its sunbeams:
These simulacra sit inside boisterous as Humid ice-creams:
I don't know that I must know that I have Seen you
Through the transoms of these portholes,
Waiting out on your spot in the light of your yard,
Every inch of you ticking from rhyme:
I think I must have seen you after the rains had come,
And the city was as fancy as a
Newly minted dime at harvest time:
And there you was, and there you were,
Spinning in gaiety, but not spinning at all:
It was the look impregnated in your eyes as if I could have seen
Them:
You were starring on Broadway in the sticks in the weeds,
As you put talcum powder over your newborn's crotch;
And you looked over across the fiberboard you
Mistook for the skies in Colorado;
You wept and the crowd roared,
Throwing bones and fireworks under the loose wheels of the Cars.

Robert Rorabeck

Under The Pursed Lips, The Awakened Stars

Now this mouth is almost dead.
Painted up,
It has said what it could,
In the language taught to the ear,
But she has walked away
Drunkenly cursing these words,
Believing she is still too young
To behave for any man.
Now that these lips are spoken,
They purse silently,
The subtle fixations like
The vibrations in the resting mollusk;
The mind has given up
The motivating action,
The sterility of thought leaves
The blue army milling in the valley.
Soon disbanded,
The broken boys will return,
Though some may range widely
And follow the private whims into
The breadbasket,
The poor hopes in the lake less planes
Of the great midlands,
Where trailer parks of defeated
Dictions spread out in corrugated rivers,
And at night look beautiful and real
Beneath the awakened stars.

Robert Rorabeck

Under The Sprinklers And In The Rains

I don't want to use you up, because this is not
Your grotto and my mother only has one flashlight,
But still very soon I will be touching myself
And then I will be traveling long footed across
The baseball diamond just to see the girls
In the fibrillose tents underneath the airplane's Garden:
They do good work and they are always from Spain
But they are very expensive, which I never fail to mention:
And they are always pseudonyms for the real things:
Housewives and cousins walking back to back
Under the sprinklers and in the rains.

Robert Rorabeck

Under Your Wings

If they are words they are tumbling through the mystery
Of air-condition and ceiling fans
While we are ruining the world and I didn't get to see you again
Today because someone was sick:
Your daughter whose second birthday is coming soon,
And look at all of these cars and buses now like wishes,
Alma:
And the houses that travel the lanes like icing, and you are there,
And the flowering of your house seems to bemuse you:
You clean your house and you cook dinner:
How many times do you comb your hair, to keep so beautiful,
Alma,
When the last time you saw mountains you were passing from Your home, and away into America,
Like a butterfly with a backwards stare: and now what is in your Dark eyes, your brown skin such a beautiful metamorphosis
Standing out amidst the pedestrians;
And can you imagine what our boy would look like, Alma,
Standing right there, under the roofs,
Under your wings.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath A Christmas Tree

Their zoo is your dry crypt
And we go here to touch ourselves:
Newlyweds in another world as the sun shines
And the tourists go home, embalmed with wet
Pants:
I can say that you never saw me underneath a Christmas
Tree—
Even though the airplanes were scuttled
And made to retreat until we no longer believed ourselves
Beautiful;
But it wasn't out country that lost anyways—
And our lips were like seashells resting up seashells that Were left unburied
Across the chest of a labyrinth that basked repeatedly into
The caressing shadows—
Until there were children around us and soft words—
And we both swore that we would last long enough to See them grow up
And ride bicycles propped up by the moonlight like
Motels—where my parents made love
And at least a half of us—so we arose our eyes to Where the sun beckoned—
And so showed us all of that beauty that could Never be properly named.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath A Graveyard Of Broken Down School Buses

Ancient prisms of kaleidoscopes whose wealth is Lost as it is made more beautiful,
As the sorority of hurricanes makes the grassy gems of Suburbia suppliant, and all of the truants I knew
Hide to close to the canal, light off fireworks
As the silent wonderment of alligators arises:
And the drowsing bees like tourists of a wayward apiary
Crowd the busily hung intersections of hibiscus
Across the train tracks of a brown girl I once knew
Who lies down again with her brown men, as the stars
Shine like wax on a chicken coop with windswung doors
Open to the hungry foxes and wait their mystified
In the lovemaking tantrums like a garden of orchids
Waiting underneath a graveyard of broken down
School buses for all of the African tortoises to play
Hooky from the zoo.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath A Jealous Streetlight

Pages turning to the yellow crayon dust of A soul,
And a fox who has learned to walk steps out
Underneath a jealous streetlight—
There are robbers in the graveyard—and Thieves of airplanes in the sky—
The classrooms are emptied, and the ways
He has been thinking about it are emptied—
He has echoes of the thoughts of going home:
The road in his mind used to be like going
Into the caracoles of a shell
Where you can still hear the oceans of her
Name,
Before she forced him into the venal metamorphosis
Of an all too common jealousy,
Taking her fried chicken and watermelons up
Into the clouds—sharing and sleeping with pilots
And their stewardesses—never looking down
To where is mobiles hung, limpid—
Where he continued jumping his impotence—
Like birthday candles burned out of their wish's flame.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath A Lighthouse

They were sleeping tantamount to banshees
And she didn't care,
I suppose:
The city spilling over and combing over
Itself,
And another beauty was discovered, just
As another household was toppled- and the spring
Became the summer-
And I had to look up into the cloudy heavens:
It was a forest fire burning there
That the airplanes somehow commuted through,
While their pageantry of wishes burned
And yet I continued singing out for her,
My tongue forked, trying to touch her at both
Ends,
But neither of us disguising who we were pretending
To be underneath the commuter heavens,
While the students divided themselves into the primordial
Lunches of their churches,
And then there was just this burning- while
The leopards leapt, spottedly, and the angels burned,
Searching for another heavens that could soon
Be noticed,
Underneath a lighthouse that always burned.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath All Of The Moonbeams

The angels cannot die,
Even though the heroes are singing from
The throats of your graveyards,
As it all takes awhile to be illuminated and Then to be believed,
While your sorority has touched down
Upon the finish line,
And what about the vanishing bouquets:
Another word spent into the night
As the lovers make
Love again, telling their tales to no one Outside of the heroisms of their Very own bedroom
That bares their children, as it all takes awhile
To coalesce,
But then their existence cannot possibly be Resolved,
But after the daylight, the honeymoons
Proceed in their hotel rooms underneath all of The moonbeams-
As it all remains some kind of curse we were Never meant to resolve.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath All Your Beautifully Glowing Sisters

I want to make love to the coin of your lips,
And propose to you down in the glittering river walks
Of San Antonio,
And embrace in the tourism of our greatest defeats:

Oh, there are so many places we should've been,
So many fields of wildflowers that are still virgins;
While you are still serving your liquored cups to Undeserving men:

Scarred, I am still starving over you in my Parents' basement. Dreaming of loneliness without you
In Saint Augustine,
Looking across the easy tricks from my house of some working class
Golf course.

Do your legs scissor brown and longing
Words that I have yet to misspell. It is raining outside,
But they won't let me back into school, because I am lying,
And the stars are so far away-

They have forgotten their lines, and now they are weeping
For dead children authors- Men who were so kind as to write
Back to all of us. They were greater than Disney World;
And look at all those stars.

Like you, they are so far away- and they are all beautiful
Women. How can I forget about them when they perpetuate themselves Above my earth like a house of mirrors, doing everything
Angels are supposed to do,

As you lay down in a bed so far away, glowing like a candle
At his touch, forgetting the reasons for the youthful exercise of our Long extinguished glances;
But your abandoning perfumes still remind me
Of echoing high school hallways

So I write this for you

As I drink alone underneath all your beautifully glowing sisters.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath An Overpass

And very soon there will be other women:
Hourglass women
Up in their romantic trees taking solace with baboons:
And zeppelins like barrettes in their hair
Off to the side of long wandering parks- and her eyes
Underneath the moon like Siamese twins
On trapeze or bicycles:
It will be a beautiful sight even if it does inevitably Become entirely undone:
As I kissed her mouth like an open wound across
The dune falling into the Amusements of the sea- and later, sobered,
We slept together underneath an overpass for all of That night- and I held her close, but she always felt
So very far away from me.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath Her Bonfires

I still read my stuff to the lions of Rum,
After the lights have turned out,
After the heroes are home:
And I am out of job—
The carnival of bric-a-brac
Has turned away:
The sea has gone away with the Other tourists.
The housewives have turned in
With their best or at least their Better men:
And the one or two muses are
In their graveyards—
And they are so cold that they Do not need to be warm—
And there is a green cloud in
The sky
Following the way the eyes of
The witch moves—
But she is just keeping the thoughts
To herself—
Whenever she means to she can make
The graveyards spring to life—
And all of her loves that are buried
Backwards so that they are Facing the monuments of canyons
Instead of sunshines,
Can spring to it like jack-in-the-boxes—
Can call heaven to her shoulders
To cloak her in daisies fondled by apiaries—
To make the sea foam a heaven underneath
Her bonfires,
To hold its breath and think of her,
And see her
As a muse as she stands there
Almost believing that she is enough.

Underneath Her Tree

I'll drink the tears, after the genie has Deceived you underneath her tree, while the busses
Wait beside the portables,

And the schools and libraries are closed:
And it is a beautiful world, filled with grass and trees-
The students walk through here,
And the most beautiful girls with scabbed knees

While the tortoises snore-
And heavens daydream in their perambulating
Estuaries- and the foxes lay, fat bellied-

They are counting the housewives leaping the grapes
Of the vineyard like candle flames:
And seeing what they've been growing,
The simulacrum finally arrives at the predestined
Conclusion

That he is a real boy.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath Our Semiprecious Sky

Lost to the cycling's of my gray youth,
With dreams of stealing bicycles and moving out
Into the great processions of the masses,
Of joining men with the same color and clothing as I,
And riding out dutifully into an extravaganza too big for the Screen:
And the sky panting out over us, waiting for fireworks and Then the moon;
And the little whispers we would give to our lovers all up
And down the rocks at the seashore, lost in their green eyes
All alike as the waves:
Multitudinous and happening, and escaping again into houses
On a block as big as a country, with children underneath
Parasols watching boisterous sprinklers
Holding hands with them like little offerings while standing out
And smiling across the street and up and down at my Winsome brothers:
All of us motioning to different herons that would dive
Like bottle rockets fast and swift and gurgling into the canals:
And the mailmen would come while the stewardesses we Supposed shot overhead;
And we would go inside and listen to the silently industrious whim
Of the air-conditioning; and the ceiling fans making it as well,
Like creatures of similar designs, so that eventually Satisfied stillness and crickets waxing their legs: the little curls
Of homeopathic processions through the grasses,
And the hot stifling of making love from house to house for Blocks around in fields and fields underneath our semiprecious sky.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Abandoned Highways

With all of the shadows bending,
And my dog looking again at me from the floor—
And all of the shadows healthy as
A newly cut Christmas tree,
I think of writing my last and final muse again—
As the last of the sunlight slithers upon the Floor,
But there is no amusement underneath the Abandoned highways of the resting airplanes—
Sometimes she takes off by herself
Even though I tell her that she cannot fly—
And she looms in the headlights,
And she makes love to herself over the waves—
And I have tried time and time to save her,
Even though she pretends that there is nothing left
Which can be saved.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Alamo

Lost in the water fountains of another high school
Looking up and down
And up and down her legs: where is she headed to—
Like best wishes blown—
Like ashes blown over a birthday cake, over all of The pretty fish of the sea—teaming, aquamarine,
Basking and fluted and so alive!
Underneath the skies in their teaming banners
With no help from their godd$mned mothers:
They will have to go to school tomorrow, as she goes
To the supermarket—
And the Ferris wheels to another town,
As the golden fish continue to swim around and around
In the forgotten rivers underneath the Alamo.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Angel-Like Airplanes

I cant tell time by the candles who are Burning for the Virgin of Guadalupe: I still have termites
In my house and no family,
But Alma looked good in the out fit I bought her at the Flea Market abajo I-95:
And she served me a dish of pazoli, and I ate it while her Children swung wishfully at a piñata, like a mache gondola
On a clothing line:
Then it rained and yesterday Alma had a white eyelash as White as the sun on her forehead;
It seemed so white that my mother must have been the owner,
And these houses I live in are so old that they have Forgotten all about the Christmas trees who once lived in Them,
And the soft footsteps over their octogenarian woods-
And the racing horses that my father has been so abashedly pedaling:
The cars only come once in a while: they barely disturb
The neighborhoods of ghosts who live here while the school yards
Of hungry children pass right through their otherworldly filaments
Eager to be back into their cartoon mausoleums,
Where their even young mothers bless them like virgins in kitchen-like Grottos underneath the angel-like airplanes.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Broken School Bus

Sometimes words are cruel and dredge deeper than Canals
Where kidnappers put all of their sleeping children
Abed and to reptilian breast vivisected like dark
And maggoty presents for A satanic Christmas;
And it is a sad lonely place periodically no deeper than A puddle,
And I have been musing and biting on my lip for a Bit,
Wondering upon what pretty lady my eyes will feast upon
Throughout the slanting sundials of ever present hours.
Anna-bell says that they are food for the teeth
And not the eyes;
He recommends sex with cornflakes and milk,
Not cherrios-
And today a very fine gringa asked him at what hour
I would get off work-
Imagine her surprise when she found out I was the boss,
And now my father is hooking up the trailer in the Dark and like a superhero to go and save all of his horses,
And maybe my mother is walking towards me in the blinding
Light,
But all I can think about is Diana, the Columbian who drives
The lunch wagon,
Who looks like the prettiest and most curvaceous woman
To ever exist, and Anna-bell says she thinks I'm cute
And wants to date me,
But I have to get my tongue unstuck first. I should really go ahead
And shoot myself,
Because each word is another step further down the ironic
Easement to where the awful mirrors reveal the faces of dark
Children and the unsteady turn of reptilian water wheels,
In the horned gyrations of a venal water spout,
Where the ice-cream and the sounds are all runny as an oil slick,
Like a once beautiful orchid which has long since wilted from Disuse underneath the broken school bus.

Underneath The Canons Of The Lord

Waking up everyday, thinking of what suicide
Some wolves will give, if they invade me now
The release they'd give:
Fjords around my eyes, awful maidens behind
Them:
I want to get drunk, I want to get drunk and feed
The horses;
It's all of my capability to show penitence beneath
This dishonest star: To say its name, to slur
And to fail immediately, the spotlight cast haplessly
Across the human sea, watching as every relative
Is canned into wooden boxes: You know who they Are, you've seen them,
And the light flickering like an early stage,
Painted women are taking a break, laughing, smoking
When they were before being paid to dance.
Now that they've seen the tricks of the cannonball's
Thunder, they are no longer incredulous, nor afraid
Of the first snows;
And I am lying beneath them, lying as a humbug in the Crass weathers of oily flesh,
Not knowing what my next meal will be- Preferring
To eat myself like a worm on a flower, than to return
To this dust, this frightened old country chapped by that Star, the ageless old curse-
The release by a beautiful woman's eyes, the freedom
Of her sensory bliss: its all I have to do this for, but she Is not mine, another man's child hung nursing upon her tit.
Gathered around a Christmas tree of so many warm souls,
I grow even more consumptive, my last candle burns blue;
And I wait for the final wagon to turn by,
To sleep in its ruts, sprawled out like a unclean outcast
Beneath the resounding claptraps the mountains seem to collect, Diminished to the selfsame oblivion underneath the Canons of the lord.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Castle

Very beautiful underneath the castle of the Yellow moon—while my wife sleeps I look at you
And drink rum—
I do not feel guilty—in the morning will be the Weekend—I will get my car washed,
I will clean the floor—
And there will come a million or at least a thousand Ways to come around to finding you—
In that brilliant daylight of your Playground while no one else is looking
And nothing else can be found.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Ceiling Fans

Mountains and mountains of Werewolves jackknifed into switchblades:
Boys who could have been pretty
But wasn't and weren't:
Beneath a sky filled with the bitterness of unsealed promises
Of lotteries of virgins given over to the cul-de-sacs
Of insatiable demons:
Getting their tattoos underneath the ceiling fans
Just becomes the housewives would be too busy to attend
Their games anyways- and the fuses were lighted
From their churchyards across the street from
The pet cemeteries of their papier-mâché
Hearts: and I wanted to love them,
But the hotel rooms were empty anyways
When I got to them- and the entire campus was an echo-
And echo-
And the true lovers were found down in their basements
Spinning bottles- and trying to grow up without truly understanding
Who they really were.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Clouds

Broken adventures moving against the Stream:
This is my family,
And these are the few words I know-
And none of it belongs here:
These yards and houses do not belong,
Nor the airplanes leaping over them,
Nor the girls here
Who are shortly to be women: women,
Long-legged,
Bronzed women of a special cast-
They who will know their families like fishing
Leaping
Fast- fast:
Women of the year: women of a single snowflake
Evaporating underneath a single sun:
My words are just for her,
Women- my words are meant to be the flower
That signifies the metamorphosis of Everything,
And casts its perfumes into the aqueducts of
The beating heart of her trauancies,
While she goes out all night long-
This is the staple of my belonging handed out readily
Upon the highway-
A broadside for the busy avenues all headed to See her being,
As she goes back to school again, as the airplanes
Fall asleep underneath the clouds.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Crepuscule

Preliminary daydreams in the afternoon's
Truancy-
There I suppose you were, sunning on the rooftops
Over the fairytale otters,
Pretending to be beautiful, while the fireworks
Sparked like misfits,
And the entire theatre began to fade as the housewives
Returned home, circulatory:
See the things they have brought with them beneath you-
What artwork in their tender clefts:
In their dimpled chins,
Out dancing in the spotlight of their living rooms,
While their pools pretend so many diamonds
Underneath the crepuscule of the inevitable moon.

Preliminary daydreams in the afternoon's
Truancy-
There I suppose you were, sunning on the rooftops
Over the fairytale otters,
Pretending to be beautiful, while the fireworks
Sparked like misfits,
And the entire theatre began to fade as the housewives
Returned home, circulatory:
See the things they have brought with them beneath you-
What artwork in their tender clefts:
In their dimpled chins,
Out dancing in the spotlight of their living rooms,
While their pools pretend so many diamonds
Underneath the crepuscule of the inevitable moon.

Preliminary daydreams in the afternoon's
Truancy-
There I suppose you were, sunning on the rooftops
Over the fairytale otters,

Pretending to be beautiful, while the fireworks
Sparked like misfits,
And the entire theatre began to fade as the housewives
Returned home, circulatory:
See the things they have brought with them beneath you-
What artwork in their tender clefts:
In their dimpled chins,
Out dancing in the spotlight of their living rooms,
While their pools pretend so many diamonds
Underneath the crepuscule of the inevitable moon.
Preliminary daydreams in the afternoon's
Truancy-
There I suppose you were, sunning on the rooftops
Over the fairytale otters,
Pretending to be beautiful, while the fireworks
Sparked like misfits,
And the entire theatre began to fade as the housewives
Returned home, circulatory:
See the things they have brought with them beneath you-
What artwork in their tender clefts:
In their dimpled chins,
Out dancing in the spotlight of their living rooms,
While their pools pretend so many diamonds
Underneath the crepuscule of the inevitable moon.
Preliminary daydreams in the afternoon's
Truancy-
There I suppose you were, sunning on the rooftops
Over the fairytale otters,
Pretending to be beautiful, while the fireworks
Sparked like misfits,
And the entire theatre began to fade as the housewives
Returned home, circulatory:
See the things they have brought with them beneath you-
What artwork in their tender clefts:
In their dimpled chins,
Out dancing in the spotlight of their living rooms,
While their pools pretend so many diamonds
Underneath the crepuscule of the inevitable moon.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Flowers

I develop you while walking the way I know
Home-
The day is hot- the sea is foam:
I have two beers in a plastic sack and a serpent
To germ-
My friends, they are buried with the stewardesses
And the prostitutes, over the canals
Or the chain link fences- and we can see them
If we learn to swim through the shallows.
Their voices are healthy underneath the flowers,
And in their palms like instruments the dens
Of ant lions,
And in their eyes like decorations, the fires of Chrysalis over the way that it turned out-
The airplanes touch down softly over
Their cenotaphs, the foxes leaping at their Zoetrope-
The stewardesses laugh at their excursions like Monarchs,
And they will go home to abandon their children
In the milk weed,
Who will grow up to follow them like shadows
Over that which has already vanished.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Gaze Of The Castillo De San Marcos

This Sunday morning I am trying to write poetry sober:
I am inside my yellow house, but it is a long ways until October:
I have the Virgin of Guadalupe inside the foyer of my house;
It is her grotto,
But for now I am the only soul inside my house,
And the sky swings above the roof as smoky as a censer:
I can hear the lips of airplanes whispering above my roof,
And the legs of pedestrians chattering along the sidewalk:
All the pretty things do is talk,
And my nights are as green as emerald and Alma's eyes
Haunt me as dark as drift wood:
Her eyes haunt me as dark as the drift wood that passes through The channels with the sword fish underneath the gaze of The Castillo de San Marcos.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Grounds Of Her Amusements

I made love to your wife a thousand times underneath the Moonlight while I was still awakening and then this Job: half arisen into the seas of wherever—supposing you never Collected yourselves—
Well, at least—It was perceived as another beautiful amusement—
Well, until the flowers happened,
Over spilling and over spilling—making new words for The phantasms of the day cares and becoming recreational—
A day time of brilliancies into whichever way that she Spilled- beauty piled atop of beauty—until night became another Phantasm and was introduced into the playgrounds of
The architects—and then she had to rest forever,
After her first or second husband—
Brilliant as the last blooms of a daydream—a really beautiful
Creation regressed underneath the floorboards
As her mansions sped underneath the ground
And her amusements matriculated themselves away and away.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Hot And Florid Sun

In another house where housewives love,
Where no one could possibly ever read-
Down on the easement with my dogs, like a short
Mowed prairie for tamed fairy-tales-
I take another glass and that is all- That is my Poisonous heaven- and I can never be what is not Allowed. How they have betrayed me, finely suited, Already seated at their dinner table in their Gated community- I sleep in a crypt underneath my Parents, above their heads- I have an old tattoo from Spain; I can never be buried where they are buried.
They will sleep together forever- I have scars against My navel- Pick me, and discard me, leave me on The hooks or retail. Emolliate me on stage-
Make the girls who never loved me, who never read my Stuff have one creamy orgasm- scatter my ashes over McDonalds- Go out and rent a movie, park in between Her legs, the barking penumbras where I used to lunch:
Never read this column which has forever been here for You, a single lonely basilisk out of place but erect
In the otherwise retention of used cars- Like her eyes,
With many flecks all of one color, I can stand up many Trees for you: look at my scars, I will deliver,
But will you choose ever a one: She lives in her gated community,
Insouciant, predictable in the petting zoo underneath the hot
And florid sun.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Misconceptions

Distant ships on a river
Passing down a stream of a
Millennium's eyes-
I no longer call you on your Birthday-
I've forgotten how your Mother lost her rabbits
Like the gifts I bought
For your children-
As the heavens breed above
Th earth
Multiplying their decorations
Of mirages-
Where immature gods swim
Like tadpoles,
Minds of dispossessed zygotes
Heady from the featherlight
Atmosphere-
Underneath the Misconceptions of Caricoles,
Fathers of fledgling tourists
Take winebagos through
The arid regions of New Mexico's desert
We stole away from your Grandmother who never guessed
That we would ever think of you.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Mountains

Gross circuits of a Pegasus—bloom in blue
Oasis—across the tendrils of Bamboo where a university used to live and seize up—
But the rockets burned away to other planets
And even moons
Perhaps of ice-locked oceans—and roller-rinks—
The prettiest jasmine bloomed in the unapologetic moonlight
Trying to figure itself out—
The artisans continuing evangelically unapologetic—
High stepping through the monsoons through the Jungles of the prettiest wildflowers overflowing the Highest basins—
As she stepped out of the shower and then the boudoir
Of her room—and went to school—
Vipered with perfume—and translated for a thousand Years the queer abbreviations
Telegraphed from the constellations in the amusements
Parks that just so happened over the Wisped heads of the truants and the latch keyed hooligans—
Reminisces in the strange romances,
Runaways crying in the bathrooms illuminating
Underneath the mountains
Underneath the stars.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Mountains Of Beauty

Beauty in a shop without a care:
Underneath a mountain, collecting the weather
Like a bouquet-
Let us diadem her, let us make her wet:
Beauty, where are you:
Stepped out into a forest fire
The bears are bathing in- and the velveteen
Antlers dance like multiply spears
Amidst the canopy
Where all of your favorite animals can finally Talk- speaking of that ruckus-
And about there somewhere, a rose bush
That used to grow over the grave of our love-
Now a cenotaph of thorns
Where beautiful maidens go to prick
Themselves and sleep for a thousand years-
Beauties underneath the mountain who Haven't a care.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Overpass

They said that in her eyes were a million
Golden arrows—
I don't know what cages she Kept in her sparrows—
They lied me underneath the overpass—
Underneath the sun
And bought things off of me, and Haggled over me—
While the sea we imagined sitting
In our classrooms leapt and Run.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Overpasses

Then it feels like soft gold- worn by Alma:
And they make love again
Only to disappear like her rabbits and the grass grows:
The foliage crenulates awaiting her overtime
Heroes and the songs of Their epic exploitations: they get penny candy on their Bicycles:
They masturbate underneath the healthy trees in the park
Overeagerly before bedtime,
Spilling of their abuse into graveyards- even handling apples
Wrong,
As their grandmothers turn away and follow the old
Tramlines
Underneath which the wolves are always leaping and snapping Until they get somewhere along the sidesteps of Metamorphosis:
Maybe then there is an entire sea all the way beneath them,
And even she is casting off her close and telling her sisters,
Who are busily working the washing machines,
Or handling their tomorrows into flea markets
Underneath the overpasses:
Whispering as light as a homeopathic armory of cinnamon
Of this good, good deeds.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Paper Snowflakes

Letting a spider dance
Over the fairgrounds
Which—as it happens to chance—
Had just come to town—
For a season—
Cycles of werewolves and Bicycles—
Words left forgotten
Like abandoned houses
Beside the canal—
Or our Christmas trees
For the garbage men
On New Years—
Or your younger
Sister's virginity -
Don't you see—
She doesn't care—
Emotions given to the
Marriages of limbo—
As the professors
I once knew
Commit suicide
Underneath the Paper snowflakes.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Penumbras Of The Migratory Ferris-Wheels

The tiniest fingers of a heart playing a flute
Over the embers of a kindergarten
Fills the pit where I've been singing—
Watched by the cold gems in the eyes of Crocodiles and alligators that once
Watched me kissing you on the mouth
While the whole world turned:
Teachers who were full of themselves,
And housewives too—
Going to and from stores, air-conditioned—
Petty, always forgetful of how they once
Wore roller-skates—
Or how the firefighters slid down the poles
Backlit by the prepubescent mountains
That carried the purple and blue mountain lions
Not so far away from them,
But kept all of their finest secrets to themselves
In the keyholes of their bosoms—
Until the rainstorms came, so full of gasoline
And forgotten fairytales—then the goldfish
Gossiped inside of their wishing wells and Plastic bags—
And mothers whispered to themselves
Underneath the penumbras of the migratory
Ferris-Wheels, where they swore and swore
That they could say nothing bad about anyone else.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Pine Trees

Everything will get taken care of underneath the pine trees
As the cars turn around
Like a merry-go-round
Where we once came across one another
To stare into each others' brown
Eyes through the forest:
I thought you were a butterfly,
But I do not know what you thought
I was,
And the clouds went through the sky,
But they weren't anything anyways.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Red Cliffs

Days underneath the red cliffs
Of the rider-less saddles
As my mother burns sugarcane
And my father sells fireworks beside
The highway,
Not far from the garden of Eden where
The leopards still lie down
Underneath the ceiling fans-
And the spotless virgins flip in the sky
Like a mantilla of candles:
And the lions yawn, filling up with Goldfish that are just mirages:
They burn away like eager wishes-
And the sky doesn't know
What to say:
It just flips the page,
And the night waits for your pretty Voice to fill it with Unicorns.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Shade

Comatose beauty singing through the slits of her
Elbows—
Articulated and unarticulated and flying back again:
Paper airplane bound upon picking up
His paper paycheck
As upon this paper this paper song is sung:
Folded up at the elbows:
Folded up at the creek:
Folded up in the folded memory of a folded week:
Slipped through the reservoirs,
Slipped through the press boxes: there is the king,
And there are your foxes:
As he sings—horned in death and rainbows—
Butterfly adjacent to the graveyard
Or the garden in the rainstorm—
As mute as a box he keeps lighted underneath the shade:
Here is where I left you—
That is what I made.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Stars

When I get really good I cant even spell that Alma prefers her family,
And goes back to them like something trained, or
On a string,
The way a wary canary tries to flee the vaporous mine
Underneath the stars in their make believe
Chicken wire, in the invisible fences in which we made
Yards for them,
And all called up in a chorus of pretty girls who were Evicted from even prettier cars;
And it was as if the night came gushing like the defeat
Of a dam over all of those roads and intersections,
And crawled up the fences and the mezzanines
To say its chaos of promises
To the half light of the bedrooms arranged in the phantasms
Of lace, to the girls
Where they'd just had at dreaming away all of the sailors
Into a song,
And it was so delightful that they were hardly bothered at Awakening;
In fact, the peals in the pinched flowers of their Saltwater clams were still humming.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Sun

Copper plated world filled to
The gills with
The hard evidence of the places
I guess we have to go,
To end up-
Coming home again, touching down
Just as the mirages of Airplanes,
And all of this a busy place,
Like minded,
Filled with little hope: in spume of
Words and roe,
Like lights out in the quieted streets,
Like venison still with beating
Hearts
Newly born and walking down to your
Pretty house
Where you haven't guessed yet that I love
You,
As I lay out in your yard underneath
The heavens, waiting to
Be the metamorphosis of anything,
Drooling with the crickets
Underneath the mailboxes- the jasmine make
A necklace of perfume,
And in the morning the roman candles will
Bloom,
And each of the comely housewives will grab
Their keys and strut across their
Yards,
Their children will go again to schools:
And I will teach them underneath the sun,
The very sun where the angels whisper
And the faucets run.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Vanished Stars

In this graveyard, in this cathedral—the girls look up—
And now they seem delighted—
And now they are turning away, turning up the rocks
Towards the faces of god knows what—
And soon they will disappear—like amusement rides we will Never have to see again—
And when they are gone—well, oh, what mystery:
And I set candles out for them—
And offer prayers that I am unsure of, and call their names
All of the way up to the moon—
But then I already know that they are employed by the Better elements—into the sororities of the Girls who keep holding out unto all of the weathers—
And the night is old and priceless—
And we steal the bicycles of our old professors on Thanksgiving and we keep riding out and riding out—
And you keep longing for me, or something else you cannot Believe in—until the yards are spoiled and bright red
With paint and blood and Abandoned apples—□
And we are left out of all of the establishments, learning to Sing for ourselves—until the hurricanes are almost gone,
And the candles are almost finished—
And the light of god can almost be seen—titillating
On the brink of the precipice of
The joys they let off of the ships that she abandoned—
And she only did this because of alliteration and Because of other things—
And now she is a memory into the east, like the sun
Waking up—until she is not a memory at all—
And the world has awakened underneath the vanished stars.

Robert Rorabeck

Underneath The Window

What will you say about the roses some Werewolf threw down the well:
Now that I love who will paint my scars
With her fingernails
And say her rules to my little house:
As you feed your children around the Starving dogs of Mexico,
And my words spread like wet seed in a dusty
Bed:
Little strange fever around your eyes:
Areolas of the porticos of engraven airplanes
Circling the vultures of starving whelps-
My specific language needs so
Many things,
But you are with him, and there is a
Volcano underneath the window
Where the werewolf grins.

Robert Rorabeck

Understand

Sharon- I don't have much,
Considering what you've destroyed through cheap drink
And the false smiles of our pre-socratics:
Pastels and paunches in the rooms I can Smell you in:
Yes, I am defeated and you are victorious
With nothing else on but some roller-skates,
But isn't it enough:
I am fully famished, and about ready to move up
From this Satanic university,
Floating up like this in my Satanic University.
Nothing better than this,
Nothing ungodly, thoroughly enmeshed,
Haven't you called me- haven't you called me,
So many times,
With your blue eyes so combative,
Almost really undone,
Almost really all that and all my newest scars
Peeling like a submarine,
AND we aren't at war and you are good enough to be Another state,
Sharon,
I am inebriate, but I am leaping, leaping:
And I will spend all of my liquor all at once underneath you
God-gorgeous lips if you lay me, Sharon.
I will sell myself toward you underneath the beaten rhapsodies of That young sun who is yet beating and epileptic underneath for your Jaw-bone love,
Epileptic and truant for you while even diving underneath the higher
Divinations of an untruthful atmosphere my more
Intrepid jumpsuits have already led me to understood,
Sharon:
And this is all I am,
Caught up and dying in the Allegany gut-shots of proms and sideways
In buckskin suede you could possibly Apple mouthed in your own milky taught patriotisms
Running out of gas
Couldn't yet understand..... Understand, Sharon....
Understand?

Robert Rorabeck

Undressing In Sky

I.

The areola is mine.
I saw it hanging around the sun

And the golden trees which Signify death,
But not mine....

The little girls swaying
Inside pink hula-hoops-
Where are you?

II.

You are undressing in
The sky garden,
In the bowers of the Lonely persimmon tree...

Cars drive by on the crowded
Highway,
Men who have missed you,
Like weeds in the garden,

But you do not mind,
Your lips brush the neck of your shirt,
As you take it off

III.

You swim in the unclaimed light,
Faithlessly charmed,

Perhaps for awhile until
You are thoroughly reassured.
Then, stepping out,
You are taken up by
The first John who swims the avenue

And what I see of you now,
Is that thoughtless spot your form
Left in the woods above the earth,
Which I claim.

Robert Rorabeck

Undressing Poetry

This poetry is undressed,
And her eyes stare through the window,
Stare down the long horizon,
Eclipsing the subtle bergs, the pawn shops,
The slithering roadways,
The abandoned farms; ignoring the fried-chicken
Drive-thrus, the dirty yellow laundry-mats,
The speak easies, and the bright billboards;
This poetry has a thing for you,
And watches you lying on the coverless bed,
Matted with dog hair and lazing delinquencies,
Drool and spot on rum,
As the grass shivers like strange children
Congregated underneath the molten lights,
As the day sinks,
As the earth recedes into a ball of shadowy
Masks,
As your dry lips crack contemplatively,
And your briar patch of a brain stumbles further
Into the steaming swamp of cold blooded serenades,
Through the mottled cypress jeweled with
The forgotten memories of cicadas eager to move
On- There she sees you typing her trifles,
The microscopic barbs which tingle her mammography,
And sets her mind to concentration for a little while,
As if on this page you had succeeded in Scribbling up to her, a tiny dimple she didn't Know she had, and thus peak her interest infinitesimally.

Robert Rorabeck

Unfathomable Bibles

With whatever songs there are to sing in
The dungeons are picking up the better sticks:
It comes for awhile alive and over
The unstable forms of the buildings of all of Those bricks:
This is the estuary that they should all together
Enjoy—while we was bringing ourselves together
With all of the conjoined joy of the extinguishing
Butterfly—
As the thief flies over the river—as he goes
Over the switchbacks of all of the unremembered Gardens—as the mountains loom over all of The unsanctioned joys that always remember to Be here no matter the origins of all of the Unfathomable bibles which they've been fighting.

Robert Rorabeck

Unfortunate Souvenir

Cherry red souvenir,
I see that you have no motor,
So what is it that animates you,
Going homeless down the streets,
Trucking your bad language
Spitting watermelon seeds-
One could almost say that I thought
I knew you,
But that was in the past when there
Was still cities,
And you had steady work-
I could see that you were in demand from
The windows,
But now it's just the wind, androgynous;
It doesn't even care to call your name,
And yet you still move-
There must have been something inside
You that you've stolen,
Or is it only something make believe:
There you go, slightly out of orbit now
When you used to sing:
I thought I saw you, but Now there isn't anybody left in to believe.

Robert Rorabeck

Unfortunately

Unfortunately,

I've had to live without
You for so long

I've forgotten how I
Made you c-me.

Robert Rorabeck

Unfortunately Serendipitous

Seas of tiny—even infantile shelters scarred
With glitter—
And over them, a movie theatre,
Revealing the apexes and labyrinths of coral—
The moon,
A projector of stolen light—casting over
Hidden bicycles
And mermaids colored by the apertures of water:
Night-dreaming of boys in a high school
They will never have to attending—languishing,
Unfortunately serendipitous

Robert Rorabeck

Unfulfilled

She hid her eyes from me
Like cognizant blue diamonds
That once searched under her lashes'
Sexy canopy.
She ran away and buried them
When from far overseas I wrote
To her that I loved her in a thousand
Letters scribbled out on the frontlines
Where fear gripped me in the trenches
As the heavens had turned into the Screeching of heavy iron doors,
And the earth exploded from the rain
Of icepicks on those steel shores—
She couldn't admit what she might Have seen in me;
That, while holding hands and eating
Melting ice-cream in the summer's promenade,
She had seen death crawling in me like
A creeping servant of time,
So under the lemony sun and through
The sleepy curtains of citric light,
She had smelled the decaying mutation
Of my tragic end,
And thus she refused to look at me,
To return my love from so far away,
Making her bury her beautiful sight so
That when I died, the exploded husk sleeping
With his rifle in the dirt as men screamed,
She could not see me from so far away—
Only in the dark, fingertips feeling through
The warm prick of a candle's single flame,
After my letters had stopped
And my uncle had sent me home to Sleep forever under her, did she dare to open
Her eyes again upon the man who had survived.
In the dark warmth of their bed she revealed
Her eyes, while they lived in the night,
The sleepy blueness of those things she needed to Show. When the day slipped over the horizon

Like an intrusive priest upon her private sorrows,
She put them away again,
Cast them toward the earth
Where my eyes seemed to stare back up at
Her from so far away
Refusing to see my love for her unfulfilled.

Robert Rorabeck

Unfurls

Traffic unfurls like this line of poetry;
It unfurls like a snail, or like the ribbon for Her fairytale hair: she should be beautiful, '
But her eyes are his, and like pearls, peeking
Out from underwater. She swims all day
To and from work. The power lines hem,
And this tells a story.... This unfurls like a story
Crumbled and curled in the aloe beside the carport
With the rebar and poisonous toads. And I am Writing without the aids of liquor, without a drum
To store by, and with it to sell. And this is a poem
About cars, big and beautiful and affluent, and the Woman in the store, break necking her shadow so
That her hair unfurls like a ribbon, like a long vase Pouring silk. In fact it cascades, and gives reason to My fingers and there is nothing more to it. In fact,
That is all, and I should lie here on my back and see
Her here, through the dreamy spokes of a Ferris Wheel
And give all of this to her, as she drives away streaming
The pennants of a winning team, busty like the goddess
Learning to fly and exchange her elements. She flies right
Over houses and their apexing roofs, and silent brooms.
She curls into Cadillacs, and over misty baseball diamonds.
She sleeps in hotels and in parking spaces freshly painted
In that easy geometry. I spy her and how she moves,
And write this even as she unfurls.

Robert Rorabeck

Unglorified Peach In An Unexplainable Rainstorm

If you weep vermilion over the starless passion
Of your eyes,
What brail will buy me fruit; like a strayed terrapin,
Upon which
Hibiscus will I survive;
My neck is open like a honey dewed flower anticipating
The sting of your barb:
The sea has so many marionettes that she hired
To keep the sailors
Enchanted;
And there you go leaping like a butterfly driving in its
Car;
And I wanted to walk out with you into the meaty cloisters
Of anemones,
But it is already past the season for Pomegranates;
And really there are so many beautiful women devoiced into
The world:
They slip like paper cuts over the footpaths of fur traders;
And sometimes they make it all
The way up to Colorado; and sometimes they get Distracted by the Mississippi;
But I have found you now, and pressed your body to me like
And entomologist with his kingdom of species;
And I tasted your lips like the star fruit
Underneath the flaming sword of the overpass;
And then I got nervous and blustered away from the really beautiful
Magic trick or dream,
The way things stay extended into the air underneath careless
Airplanes;
But if I came back to you now, I think I would find you still there,
As beautiful and breathless as the still life
Of a myriad graveyard:
If you are something that can last forever, blooming like
An un glorified peach in an unexplainable rainstorm.

Robert Rorabeck

Unicorns

It rained today:
In the afternoon- I thought
Of suicide most of it,
But now I'm drunk,
Half naked, and dealing with it:
I found out today
Who you're with,
How to tie a noose,
The problems with race relations
In America:
I wonder if the sky is new everyday,
Virgin,
Always complex and expecting;
I wonder if you even care:
Its Friday after all,
And you tend bar-
I am not erudite, I can't even spell
The word:
That is why I'm moving to Saint Louis,
And not New York City:
That is why I have to find
A job, before I die.
Before I die,
I have to tell you the truth:
My brother in law is quite better
Looking than me:
That is how he got my sister,
A doctor,
But he is looking for a job too,
And ugly boys are better at giving deserving
Girls, like you, their tongue,
Round-about, roller-coaster, washing
And drying,
And there are pictures of girls I know
Visiting Africa,
And places I suppose I've been in another
Life,
A time or two:
And fairy-tales I've chased you in,

I've smelled you on your way
To grandmother's,
And taken you off the side of the path
Where you shouldn't have been:
I've eaten what you had in your Basket,
And seen what you keep red cloaked,
And shown to you unicorns,
Unicorns....
Unicorns.

Robert Rorabeck

Unimposed By Prose

Nothing sad tonight, nothing poisoned
By the maudlin treacle of a rummy rose.
Tonight I'll be a sober gentleman far out and Alone in the mowed field underneath the halogens
Where the cars stream by, frosty eyed
Like the expeditious cavalry of our nations industrial Complex, swimming to and from beds of Business, beds of sex, and the entire cavalcade of Glossy housewives whipping eggs in matching kitchenettes-
No more slurred and stuttered dictions,
But like a man bedecked for his sister's wedding,
Cleaning shaved, possibly young enveloped by the clingy
Night, enwrapped by the frothy hustle of waves and Clouds, the bodies turning imperiously even while Esteem scientists begin to fade,
Darker shadowed by the whisking trees, and the soft Singing bees all curled up for the night, sleeping in their Waxy combs, a gemmy corsage hanging at his breast like
A valediction, his rank and stature not imposed.
Tonight, should the crowds come all of a sudden, each line
Will be ready to maneuver straight and clear footed from one
To the next, like the tightrope artist walking above the Cerulean heads of timeless ghosts of some Grecian fort,
Weaponless but unafraid,
Looking up and going effortlessly and surefooted as the Fireworks bloom far beneath the unapproachable constellations
He cannot name,
And the warm exhalations of the streamline and fertile lover
Kisses his neck as she would for anyone she doesn't know.

Robert Rorabeck

Universal, Expanding Gas

There are these apocalyptic turds in Space
Hurtling toward us
We give them the primetime
Time-slot
Tuesdays after SEX
And inser them with Mercury
Car commercials
Super sexy tanned and slipped
Spaced-super models
Before we all danced on the Edge of the earth
And sacrificed 26 men in a submarine
Before WWII
We parked our cars on the edge of
The valleys of Mars to have Sex like Tom Parris
And look half pretty naked in Overflowing cities commercialized
Rush
Half erect
Our real-estate skyrockets
In between molestations the Serial killer procreate we Ejaculate, pollinate,
And play pool in small rooms of Spain
And pray to the gigantic emptiness
To be sexy and skinny
Like the sticks and lipstick
On the T.V.
The fart expanding in the head.

Robert Rorabeck

Unnecessary Bouquets

Bright rainbow underneath the overpass
And I am not right here,
While you have discovered your bedroom waiting
For a rainstorm-
And I get home and do my job,
Waiting for my parents to bring me fried
Chicken:
Well, you can't look me in the eye, but this is Still just a roller coaster
Or a Ferris wheel getting up into nowhere:
Beautiful words meaning nothing
While I am making love
With your younger sister in her bedroom- and the cafes
Are booming,
And the stewardesses are still wondering about coming
Home-
But during lunch, teatime of butterflies in the mouth
Of a lycanthrope,
Laughing and drooling through the basins that they Told you to believe-
Waiting in the sidelines of many moons:
This is just science-fiction, and I am still waiting out of Breath for you,
My heart and soul overfilled with these unnecessary bouquets.

Robert Rorabeck

Unnecessary Senses Of Arbitrary Light

Still entrained to our Coited flesh
How many years
Will it take
Before we've evolved
Into our birthday
Wishes
And I can fly open
Armed
Right into your bed and
Like the tide
Gently do away with
The otherwise
Unnecessary senses of Arbitrary
Light.

Robert Rorabeck

Unopened Yesterdays

I've left them all in a shadow of a shell:
It was the best and the last of anything that There ever happened to be
Tattooed together upon their hemisphere
So outside of their agricultures of the places
Where they persist but cannot love—
And, anyhow,
We've had a banquet for awhile anyway. Atleast while they were loading their guns:
And it doesn't have to be a place, anyways—but Just a cave that the shadows remember
Under Neptune:
And this is how I happened to survive:
For awhile repeating the happy kites
Even for the minimum of memory even while the heavenly ships sailed off so heavenly
And all we were left with was the forest:
The forest, the forest and the snow and
Her captain while she just keeps remembering
And rememberingt and calling
Used bookstores to her and to her the memory—
While I have driven and driven to her so many Times the memory—
Eventually there are the condolences and then tomorrow—
Or the tomorrow's tomorrows anyways burned beneath
The shadows anyways—and, perhaps, I never loved her—
Anyways—and just because it seemed to happened—well,
There it was, and it just so happened, or it never Happened into the shadows of all of those mouthless
And unopened yesterdays.

Robert Rorabeck

Unpublished Epitaphs And Things Like This

I have 16 lbs of sh.t in my gut;
Daddy takes the tractor down the hill
Almost as many times,
And I call the trees around him alligator
Oaks, because they used to grow-up
Here when it was only a sea: and alligators
Have been around that long,
Even as the sun tanked, even as it tanked
And swam;
And there aren't even any ravens, though
They would be cool, especially on Christmas:
Ravens in the yard, a fresco with Cadillacs, and Hot plums destroyed by curiosity and scars;
But now when the sun goes down, we will Be moving away. My book is curling up on The kitchen table. My mother reads it as she Cuts onions, cries, because she doesn't understand
Why I did it. I tell her, mother, I don't love
Anyone anymore, the rivers have gone down to The sea, the butterflies are all in Mexico,
And this is not a poem, mother, but a personification
Of a disturbing dream walking around like a craven man
With a pinwheel in his gut, turning like a child's game
In the front yard, and there are yet the snows to do
The cover-up, even as she leaps into his ribs,
And takes one as her own; but they will come tomorrow, when
The sun stretches the shadows furthest, when the enemies arrive
By tallowed ships and we will meet them overzealously at the fjord,
Crying headily and shaking our fists: the lasts
Republics of winos and out of work gigantisms;
And sacrifice to them our new leaders, and brand new Cars: Then there will be no more poetry, but Things like this, and Bonfires and curling husks which no longer scream, (though we remember how they screamed,
So negative are they inside of the living)
Against which all the maidens will be taken, and The virginal boys will suffer no more, in rigamortis beside the Grayish ways, their heels sticking up like exclamations, like

Donkey's ears, or cocoons dripping in blue silk which Before took them many places so many Times. For now her lips are like a quiet moon
Given to other continents, and pressed there no longer
Consider destroying our celibacy with a fine harpoon,
Crafted from her own amputated celebrations, a thigh
Bone of ivory she had no longer use for,
For no longer does she jog like a lighted doe across campus,
Because she has consented, and settled,
And ceased those odd visits
To these breathing graveyards to read the Longest, and unpublished epitaphs.

Robert Rorabeck

Unpublished Scribblers Tediously Feral Petting Zoo

Amanuensis is a hungry sort,
And restless is the lion in the ivory cages
Of its mechanism,
And likely to try and bight
The hand of the hack who feeds it so irresponsibly,
Still a bachelor with no sweeter meats;

With the river flowing so close and possible,
Prowling with so many feet,
Brilliant and life-giving, though apathetic to the Careless tourists who don't bring it gifts-

She is so close playing just beyond the Grasp of this industry's starving prison,
Knowing just how near she can swim,
Showing off opal limbs to the cast-iron banks without Boasting the responsibilities, true love of the chaste.

Robert Rorabeck

Unreal Surrenders

How sad again that I can't even remember college,
What I was doing, and with which body with;
And later on she was sad when she found out all along that She'd been doing it with me,
Somebody out of a halfway talented fairy-tale,
So while I was previously engaged in Colorado sounding out
The pewter sun-dogs of a more glorious muse along
The lines of skree,
She turned tricks with a freshman, which turned her away from
Me:
Eventually she was married in a kipa, and I once again
Started writing my inglorious poetry:
The stuff you find weeping in the backs of the throats of stores,
Kittens floating for the last time in the canals out back of doors;
And Erin is a singular muse,
And Erin the flame burning swiftly at the end of its fuse:
And I am filled with scars and little things-
When I go to the movies I see nothing but pains;
And I sleep under the dress of clouds. Looking up,
A Victorian desert with all the sad shapes of evaporated sounds;
And this day is no good, my parents are no good,
And Erin has forgotten about or congratulated herself over all the Forlorn bouquets I had sent her;
She is becoming a fan of the more talented Shakespeare's,
Laughing and beaming themselves away into the casual darkness;
And what is she doing out front of a house with a cutthroat
Mailbox;
And what is she doing now, just a shapely silhouette serving
Liquor, becoming just amber into crepuscule;
And what is Erin doing, serving her beautifully talent less body
To the anonymously talent less men,
While my lions are roaring all the time, hungry,
And forcing the red throats of such flowers to open up
In beautiful, and unreal surrenders.

Robert Rorabeck

Unrealistic Enough To Fly

Thoughts of god aren't much real consolation
To the pigeons who roost in holes:
That they should live forever,
Flying rats above the city-traffic never imbibing
The fatty waves that sing to them
Like sirens of jumbling tallow by and by.
They weep when they lay down,
When starvation doesn't occupy everything.
They seem to realize who they are,
That they don't have fists to meet each other
To settle arguments,
Or palms to spread real marriages of church
And nurseries.
Then their eyes waver like real flames
That cry a curious envy,
Because they most especially want you on a soft
Bed, whispering their curious pigeon names,
And maybe they even hate you,
A woman not for pigeons, all legs and pistons
Well kept in her union of firehouses and Expeditious paramedics,
A woman who the real men love
Openly on the slick throats moaning
Up to the gothic vestibules, the pigeons
As envious and flickering as a roost of candles
Smoldering shelved in their holes,
Cursing the mistaken trucks of god for making
Them unrealistic enough to fly.

Robert Rorabeck

Unrelated Relatives

Terrible, Tristan, Terrible!

I want to be married to Murielle.

I've done all I can with my wife named Roseanne,

But she tastes just as terrible as Sara bell.

2.

How many licks does it take to get

To the center of clichéd hypnoses?

If you eat too much toast you'll catch halitosis.

If you've got a nice boss you can kiss is ass

While the ants crawl over the rose bushes.

3.

The third stanza is like baking a cake,

Your two patrons have been waiting all week

They think its quite sheik, this tongue and cheek,

Since they've had nothing to eat but dull proses.

Robert Rorabeck

Unrequited Receptions

Empty all the ink onto this page,
Spill it out if it means anything:
Drive around her old neighborhood with Your window down, smelling her, the places
In which she exercised and farted like
A hummingbird:
Hum her busty patriotism on your lips,
Paint up your scars by sunlight beside the Pool. Touch your cousin's swollen belly,
Like a cantaloupe: She is in her third trimester,
And her husband, injured in Iraq is building
Her a 3,000 square foot home in Idaho:
Put down these things in the camouflaging gust,
The way an octopus or squid goes to escape:
Put your finger to your lips,
And then surprise her with a laugh, admire
Her work space and how well she keeps herself
For the ballroom of eyes. Don't let down,
Or lay in the anthills with the thousands of poisonous
Abdomens no bigger than the science-fiction of Far away stars and planets, the soundless revolutions:
See her face, and know that her sex is for you:
Made to fit together as mountains enfold a sea,
And so overturn the night's vase and overspill into Her all the humming and extemporaneous ecstasy,
The way better men do it and are able to earn their Turkey sandwiches, legs folded beneath the power lines, so do it for her, and call her out
Into the dusk of her settling neighborhood and kneel
Before her, christen by the cypress and evacuated
Homes of cicadas,
And tell her those few words which are hers by right,
The crickets like the static of empty streets,
To either listen to, or ignore.

Robert Rorabeck

Unseen

Unseen,
Nothing was,
Clothed in Unfamiliarity, a
Similiar claus-
The world walked by,
Supposing what they Saw was-
Unmind,
The soul safe,
Uncracked,
Perfect-jawed,
An invaluable
Vein
The priceless mineral
Kept
Anonymity to the Grave.

Robert Rorabeck

Unsettled Sea

The line is drawn
cross it if you want to leave my head before the Mexican General comes with his shining men; the sharp sticks curious little boys use to blind dead dogs-

Can't you see there is no hope for victory inside,
we will all die,
when she walks away, far far away across her white washed hills,

To let those other men in- her porcelain wash basins drip the blood of the innocent.
There are too many on her,
so they will trample our walls down
as they inebriate and queue against her
bed,
A filling station on her fumes, and men pay to watch the intoxicating shape her flesh breathes and moves in-
She is always open
for them,
hanging their guns on her brass bed knobbs,

And now the time is come
The line is drawn,

this highway men still living driving down upon

and the storm casting out the unweighted clouds that gather with sickness of thoughtlessness drives us from her far away to some place unseen upon the unsettled sea.

Robert Rorabeck

Unsolvable

If the phone is ringing:
It is a baby crying,
Then it is a banshee bleating:
Something competing in the Household's estuary, mother.
Oh, Lord! How I wish to hold you,
But you are only a voice who never speaks.
Men love you.
Your father let you in that car.
Where you drive around in a wildlife
Preserve of your Christian name,
And there is all god in you
In the bright grasses feeding.
And beautiful animals:
The otters in blue glass eat clams,
The house of delicate mammals.
Recorded, you do miracles,
You get the president elected,
Perpetuate the words like the strata of reefs
Hold out for another day
The nude sketches, the shore
Extends refusing to inhale,
When you do not come to the rich community.
Your absence is playfulness of slaughter,
The prism's ablution in the canal,
The sink of autumn's corneas
The bridge's structural collapse,
Sounds like something rings
In the distant living rooms,
Though you never speak to me,
The transient numbers,
Killings feeding the unsolvable flies.

Robert Rorabeck

Unsubmissive Road

Pennies in the arcade of her eyes,
And anyways we made love and had an excuse:
Little child evacuated from her body,
Helped me move further away from the vortex
Of my venal love,
Truly:
And in the morning—morning and tenaments and Roses:
Roses in jubilee and poems amidst the cars in
The highway
And islands carressing in The Keys
And poems that are lost at the hands to the lips
Of a madman—and little spaces left abandoned beside
The road—
While the usual spaces are bedded in remembrance,
But the night sleeps just as emptied beside the road—
And to you who cannot love me,
We are both abandoned in worship underneath
The torn canopy,
And the bull frogs and the faeries lie so open lipped
And opened throated
As the become like the woebegone heirlooms to
The vanishing key deer
Amidst the emptying playgrounds of another
Unsubmissive road.

Robert Rorabeck

Until Another Man Called You Home

Almost all poets end up drinking and then
Hopping one legged into the corners of death to Emote their love
To the spiders busily sewing their threads above
The overgrown jungles
Of the slaves of love; and I found you and picked you
Like flower somehow while I was turning around
In a ride so far away:
I felt you upside down as you ran to me, and your brown
Fingers curled into mine like reindeer lying down
Into snow:
Your eyes became so young and overgrown with the amber
Of a Spanish lycanthropy,
And my words the words of sailors drowning, half born
To a world in chaos typing,
The plumes of giants the gods came slaughtering;
And I fell beneath you, and you became a beautiful forest
Slicked with the favorite colors of your soul;
And we drove hand in hand, Alma, until another man Called you home.

Robert Rorabeck

Until Every Last Member Of The Family

Tabling constellations of fruit: if she doesn't
Love me,
I want to move to Mexico and become drunkenly in front
Of her sister:
I want to forget all of the promises and lies that my Colloquial tongue has told me
With the airplanes shooting above the vinegars and salt mines:
The days bereaving the children of existence:
My art failing as all is given up into closing time-
The efforts of my body's ululating remaining fallen into the Grasses after the doors of new mothers have closed;
And the traffic is all returned; the Christmas trees are Sparkling
With silver clouds, the green snakes remaining entwined Serendipitously until every last member of the family is Called out from hiding.

Robert Rorabeck

Until Everything Dissappeared

This is not the only thing I stole tonight:
Here are my fingerprints running down your sister's Sand dollars while your brother was out trying on His bicycle, and you gave all of your kisses
To the man in the shadows across your window
With the planes striking his shoulders like matches
As they were touching down- and you broke
The spider's web as you both came together,
And were undone as if in a sarcophagus' garden
The bats flew over like heartless angels, where your Guardian angels were mummified and I played
Baseball with foxes and stillborns- but I still remembered
You as I drank beer to dull the blisters on my fingers,
As you sister got darker with the creatures in the park
And your brother rode his bicycle until everything disappeared.

Robert Rorabeck

Until Halloween

I go out to movies with teachers of my Unrequited love:
They were the ones who gave me the first
Taste of my dram of your Sweet love;
And everything is beautiful, even though I can't Remember the exact name of the Palms we walk under,
Through the balmy night and past the convalescing Homes where one day
We all ought to belong,
Past the rusty baseball diamonds and into the Cinema;
And we have a good time, according to the needs
Of our sweet race to be entertained,
By the moving pictures of our ever flowing
Society underneath the airplanes,
And maybe I still love you,
And how you drank from your flask and danced
For me in the front most seats of the Matinee,
Even though you were always a bad woman,
And hardly did care:
But you never did become a stewardess, so I guess
You go yours,
And I don't have to tell you that it will be such a long
Time again until Halloween.

Robert Rorabeck

Until I Have To Leave Myself

Cursing, but taking the time to sleep with myself:
Or to really clean up, manhandling if softly, and in any kind of weather:
Or both by themselves:
As now you have to call it like it is, as the Ferris Wheels turn themselves
Around,
And Alma likes me more and more:
And maybe she is finally found out, as if in the foundation of an unsociable
Fire that has finally touched ground:
And what about the airplanes that used to live there: and what, oh
What have they been doing, but making their own
Galleries of a nubile show: and then they really impress themselves
Like the first spittoons off the waves of gallant horses
Who have always been winning themselves:
As the storm clouds pirouette into surrender, as the bayonets of Whatever enemies we were fighting bleed themselves dry:
As my uncle's market makes so much money
Until I have to leave myself, and wave my muse, Alma, goodbye.

Robert Rorabeck

Until I Was A Cathedral

Swing-set above the world
I didn't believe in anyways- starless busses
And wind tunnels into the Canyons of lost jobs: the fireworks didn't go
Off,
Just as no one said the Pledge of Allegiance:
It was a filthy class,
And as I taught to them, I secretly thought
Of metamorphosis as I prayed to the god
Right there:
Said, god- give me wings of any sort:
I don't care- but mostly give me wings for My mind, so that it may fly over the carports
At feeding time
And see all the housewives bathing there:
Leaping over the aloe and the cenotaphs of Conquistadors- Oh, it was the finest sort of Wish- and if you didn't believe me,
Then you cannot fathom my gift-
But I learned to fly like folded paper over those Honeys- saw down their skirts
And counted their monies- until I was a cathedral
In my own sort of air- and if I ever came down again
I couldn't care.

Robert Rorabeck

Until She Thinks To Look At Me

All the clouds have woken up—
Just you know what they've been doing,
While my ancestors were farming the jaundice
Celery;
And Sharon in Colorado tasting her canines
While the clouds look over
All the plum-thumbed children expectantly;
All their parents just as sweet as cadavers they Never knew they were:
Then the world is such a quieted place and
So beautiful and just in time for sex underneath
The broken down school buses in the penumbras
Of an inept school yard,
The terrapins have been busy suckling—and Suckling all through the word as it was awakening up;
And she put her hands into the clay and has forgotten
To mouth off to her dead father—
The weather farts just in time for parade,
And all of it was a long time ago while I looked at Her and she looked far, far away;
And even further still through the sad eyes of the stained Glass of churches I have never thought to heal,
But she still wears green stars around the lips of her
Child and they will never die until she thinks to look
At me.

Robert Rorabeck

Until The Daylight Surrenders

Potion of earth underneath
The roses:
Where your mothers lie who were Never home:
But in words of their silent
Lips,
They make their supposes
As the waves
And the airplanes come and circulate
Around
The dog tracks of your hips
And in the games of their memory:
Laughingly jubilant-
Until the daylight surrenders to the rainstorms.

Robert Rorabeck

Until The Moonlight Is Mocking The Same

Toiling of problems upon the Underside of littlest streams- under the light
Of her eyes,
A merry-go-round hardly breathing through
The classrooms of an afternoon-
The words felt around her cheeks that her tears
Eat like ants the Menstruations of the hemispheres
That gather together in their senses and string
Out across the room in a roe of feelings,
In that nebulous ecstasy that helps
As the day is passing-
So very soon, how she will be returning-
Back into the fanfare of her estuaries, and along her
Silent trips to suburbia's cathedrals
Where everything holds a very little name that is Echoing, as the sun dries off them,
Until the moonlight is mocking the same.

Robert Rorabeck

Until The Morning

Trying again against the cul-de-sacs of water moccassins,
Trying to fill out loneliness with well meaning words,
Eulogizing the bright meanings of your beautiful brown flesh
Across the roadways and high watermarks of illusions
In a forest of dry theatre,
In a living room of nursery rhyme: while the windmills troop
Across the frozen lakes to wide to wish across;
And you are once more in your little room bunked down
Before the birthdays of hurricanes;
And it feels alright to have you missing beside me as I dance
Like a tiger through its ringing flames,
Whilst the angels make trapeze, and the sleepless commuters
Blaze,
Until the morning when the comets tuck their tails in
And run.

Robert Rorabeck

Until The Morning Dawns

At the certain hour after the country has finished its bath it goes downstairs to its room and towels off in the dark corner kneels beside the bed the sun is under it when the cats are on the fence and the boxers have finished lacing up their gloves and the country says a prayer to its manager and goes down to sleep while David Letterman is amusing two people in the living room but the rest of us have opened the door between our ears and taken the stairwell deep down in our throat through to our secretly decorated dens dimly lit antechambers just south of the 17th vertebra filled with the selected ghosts we wish to drink with that particular night you walk over in the room and fill the glass of an ex-lover with gin and watch her eyes she has him in their candle's flame, but she promises one drink with you before she leaves if only because there's John Wayne playing pool with Kurt Cobain and Pocahontas is sprawled out naked on the Indian rug with Princess Diane they are doing the hum of your dreams the dead people who you've thought about opening through you taking leaps from your open jaw drooling on the pillow pretending you know them you sit with the rest of your country on the divan to watch the interaction of selected parts held up with you in the backyard of your mowed gut;
a religious person might call this room your soul, but you figure it is actually a strange inner-body void that connects you to the bohemianism of an early 20th century impressionistic French cabaret in which you imagine leggy courtesans walking up and down the nightlife in the Montmartre district of Paris through the ten year old interplay of adolescent eyes across a South Florida courtyard in your high school drunk on vodka the last day before Spring Break when someone sets off a quarter-stick of dynamite near where you've been quietly dancing drunk, watching a special ed. African American girl smiling at you, believing in the beauty of a single extra chromosome, like a new born puppy dog/ when the principal and the circus midget hustle over to you on the stage with the leggy dancing French women doing the high-step, asking if you saw anything/when you hold your breath and don't declare that you most certainly saw the ghost of Baudelaire hang-gliding in a static capture in a deliberate spot 30 feet above you trying to outdo Jesus/and because Vodka don't smell, and you've been drinking it out of a two liter Sprite bottle, the establishment and circus clowns leave you alone but next year Mrs. Inglis expels you from High-school yearbook staff, but not after you've posed for pictures in all the clubs you were never in like swimming, track and field, canoeing, scuba diving, chess, checkers, and Chinese water polo, science, mathematics, aerodynamics, the Young Conservatives Clubs of America United Against the Kennedys and Gay Marriage, and The Gay and Lesbian Cat Tranquilizer S@x Club/relaxing back in the static room 30 feet inside your chest you realize Princess Diane and Pocahontas have gone off to find someplace inside you that is private/and the ghost of your ex-lover has dissolved back into the current body of a current lover's bed undoubtedly surrounded by the manicured lawns of her newly adorned c@ck with good paint job/ and all that remains in your soul is a pool table with unfamiliar eyeballs blinking in Morris Code at your back/ when you saddle-up to the bar and finish off a bottle of whiskey with the ghosts of John Wayne and Johnny Cash with Baudelaire drunk under the table serenading you little bits of beautiful poems until the morning dawns.

Until The Night Surceases

Willfully, I want to see you again soon;
I want to see you like a bad prince in an overgrown
Fairytale:
I want to take us to our beaches atop the hills that Surrounded a Disney World of Rome,
And here hide with you in the preaching of the huts
Of dried fronds:
I want to palaver with your eyes and your tongue
Underneath the speakeasies of temptation's windmills,
Alma;
And undress you underneath the equal ceiling fans of My two bedrooms,
One of crying blue, and the other of the sky;
And meet the caesuras of your brown undulations like Cheerleaders meeting quarterbacks;
And it doesn't have to be unreal, and you can flirt with Anyone throughout your washing machine of days,
Like a butterfly who gives its exegesis of colors freely
But always floats away to me,
Across the neighbors and their retiring breweries;
And all of the flowers and the puppies in their ditches,
Sung to by rattlesnakes;
And comes to me here of all places, and here puts her brown
Lips to my brakes;
And says she loves me just as quietly as she pleases
Until the day continues until the night surceases.

Robert Rorabeck

Until The Reindeer Lost Their Minds

Chasing through the parks of the beaver and the Bear,
Chasing through the aspens, where the young hearts fire
Like roman candles
And bottle rockets: leap out of the school yards
And ask, what is going on here-
And there are blue lights in the jasmine, and drunken
Wishes with the goldfish who are so pale:
They can remember the carnivals that left them orphaned,
And moved away from this suburbia-
Ran up into the snows and forest fires,
And became oblivious- until the reindeer lost their minds
And turned around as if in a spell,
Tramping the grail in the tundra that was never found.

Robert Rorabeck

Until The Tears Run It Away

Up these recesses, the fingerprints who are the hoodlums
Of no criminals:
Just the turpentines of used up Ferris Wheels and the grounds
They grew in:
The little feet and eyes that stumbled in their ways to get
To their sweets or wherever they were;
And it feels alright to say these things, even while you
And your daughter have swung into his arms, and bricked into
That fairytale house I will never have to tell my own lingering Children about, you close your eyes against the catastrophes of
The stars- and your many maddening explanations:
And the trailer parks lie all about like dirty silver terrapin making
Their love for billboards:
And so things are sold and bought in their way, and car doors
Are closed and driven away;
And, summering, the mountain turns golden with all its giving away
Of things:
And then it lies, naked, barren, waiting for the foul canvas like
A lover unmasked before a rudely masterful day:
That paints it white with fear, until the tears run it away.

Robert Rorabeck

Until The Weathers Became

Panhandling myself out of doors, knowing such littleness of Nothing is unkeen to survive,
And yet watching as the nubile virgins once again made such Games in the little squares sectioned off in their yards
Beside the junked cars and the weather vanes;
And the words seemed to curl around like bright cobras and touch
Themselves,
And they were either making love or poisoning themselves unto Death;
And when the airplanes roared above such wonderful pittance of Such constructions,
It most certainly seemed as if they purred; and they turned around
An uncountable number of times in the air,
Dancing as they did so, like enamored mice in a garden,
Which held our attentions until the weathers became too distracting
To be ignored.

Robert Rorabeck

Until There Is No More Heavens

Golden,
Going to sleep with your brown man-
What apple orchard is this
That my muse lives in? 1, 000 square foot
House,
Housing eight: mother, father- mi vida,
Michael, Heidi-
Her man, Nelson-,
And two teenage sisters in the other room,
As exquisite as vespers,
One about to marry another Mexican in a Trailer park,
My muse, my soul, saying she is in love
With me,
But that she will never leave them-
That Aztec world in whatever hypnosis across
The canal-
Yards and yards the tiniest in all of America,
And more beautiful-
She drives to and fro from, smoldering in Shoulders and flesh of Amber- Catholic, remembering her home state
That she fled north from.
She comes to my house sometimes and
We make love,
Or we do not make love- and I just look at her,
Remembering how she fled into Me for shelter
But could not stay- so she will be Gone,
And the seasons will change their inclinations,
And the angels will Burn candles over the sea
Until there is no more heavens.

Robert Rorabeck

Until They Roamed Far And Wide

I spoked my bike behind the waves,
And counted down
To when the night would finally douse the sky
And hopefully your gaze-
I rode home beside the rich houses, and tried to Forget your name,
While one side of the world was cool and seemed To forget forever
In the roiling of its powers and in its womanhood,
While you did not come to my little House today, Alma- and my soul was all washed up,
And now I am trying to find the pretty words to speak
To you
As you are not listening, flashed into the sweet sauces
Of your bedroom,
And making love to the man of all of your years,
The eagerness of two hearts I will never know
Roaming the caesuras of ribs that were stolen from Each other until they roamed
Far and wide and were found again.

Robert Rorabeck

Until You Nod Off

In the green fields of if, there is your toy
Lost like a cloud of young men
Above the playgrounds, or the cathedrals,
When it rains—
Remembering the hallucination,
The bare feet beside the creeks of Rattlesnakes while the trees are changing—
Or you remember her,
While you were going down the lonesome
Memories of another afternoon—
As she is playing for you with her penumbras
Of estrangement: she runs to you
Across the red bricks steaming,
Becoming a new angel until you nod off.

Robert Rorabeck

Unto Others

If you sneak into my house
With your fire-ax
And cut off my head
While I am sleeping on the couch,
I will have ten seconds
In which my eyes on the floor
Will direct my body
To the shot gun propped
In the corner,
Already loaded,
To do to you what you have Already done.

Robert Rorabeck

Unto The Flowers

Mean as the pillboxes for the deceased

Army men:

I know they are just toys, but you didn't have to grin;

As the sky made a mean sandwich out of its weathers of

Sin,

And pile drove over our sandy graves again: while the Sea was just leaping, and leaping thirsty toothed

For they hand me downs of perpetual youth,

The proletariat hanging on the line, washing out the rust

With turpentine, the graffiti on their joints covering the

Rhyming gold of the burnished sea,

Like a flight attendant foaming at the mouth while she thought

Of me,

And the sky was just climbing up, and climbing up like a flight

Of very steep stairs,

Diademed at the summit by a bomb shell sex symbol that

Caught me unawares,

And spread her lips across my mouth and took away my

Spells,

And the fickle candlelight of my wishes, and blessed me with

This bottle whose slaving genie can grant me so many wishes;

Who by which every night I become a new man

According to the powers,

And flows with the daffodils who themselves account to other

Flowers;

And then it was just driving, and curling, and clutching to the

Overripe harvest, the hearts spilling their misused abuses

Over the centripetal marigolds whose season wasn't even ours;

But we wished them the best,

And kissed them all the same, and then like visiting relatives,

We tipped our hats and turned away as we boarded that forever

Proverbial plane-

And smitten by our chances, we brushed off even our most

Charismatic of glances,

And shot that way that the body fields enjoying the golden corridors

Of the changing rooms of metamorphosis;

And we knew exactly this, what was hers was hers;

And what was hers was ours,

As the sun made its advances unto the flowers.

Robert Rorabeck

Unusual Sin

When I smoked near the canal for the first
Time,
From a tinfoil bowl made from rolling it around
A number 2 pencil,
All it did was made me slightly horny,
And the reticulated python slightly curious:
She came toward me with the usual jewel green
Satin eyes-
They were dolls eyes, you see, she had borrowed,
And she floated for awhile, her tail dragging along
The earth and making the Most curious of markings: She was so bloated from Eating rabbit she couldn't any longer
Fly around the forbidden fruit trees:
And if she was a woman, I would have wanted to make Love to her,
But all she did was dictate me across the reptilian
Shadows of the canal, and then across the sugar cane fields
Along well past rush hour, and into smoldering
Crepuscule,
And she showed me the ways that all things must die,
How they lose composure and molecular cohesion,
And I poked my phallus into the moist rows,
And afterwards she came along and dripped in her
Glowing seeds of venom-
Whatever grew there I never saw, nor did the cypress change
For me into beautiful girls,
Because I grew too old and bought a car,
And I never smoked again,
And after I had gone the poor roots of transplanted Australian
Pines collapsed and block the way,
The dead fall I guess god pushed over to hide my trauancies
Of unusual sin.

Robert Rorabeck

Unwavering Immodesty Of My Cerulean Highway

Cerulean feelings mean I'm blue.
I've been driving in this truck for too long:
There have been no exits since high school.

She hung her cares in the library to dry;
Sparrows came and pricked the folklore
Until it bled fire:
Now she runs naked and meaningless,
Leaping the barbed fields.

They will send men to scout the foals,
While the airplanes sleep in the forested lakes,
Young men will drive alone with trunks
Full of dynamite;
Leaving their proms and the perfumed corsages
On their girlfriends' kitchen tables:

I tried a rouse,
And made it to Colorado:
There were kids getting off the bus,
And my mother in elementary school with Her brother,
And the mountain had a hairlip
Where the naked lovers lay
Where they shouldn't have been,
The river was a ribbon
Entwining them with fish,

Where it ended up there were men in boats
With lobster cages,
Grizzlies in the nettled borders;
I drove back around,
Turning the spider on its web into
A holy censer;
Thought of eating lunch while viewing
Her powdered bosom,
And the red baseball diamonds filled in autumn;

But I had no other rouse,

And drove once again past the pedantic fields
Where other lovers lay
Too swiftly, so they couldn't see how I left them;
Or to hear the allegories shaken down
From the trees,
Embarrassed by such immodesty.

Robert Rorabeck

Unyielding My Optimisms

I want to join you now
Even before we have to eat lunch:
I want to place my hand on the browned opals of your Knee:
I want to kiss and kiss again,
Like the wind upon your flesh; and it doesn't matter if Everyone or no one is looking,
Just as the very mountains rise, and the airplanes take their Passengers and their cargos deep through the Evaporating skies;
As at night, I wonder if you miss me when I am gone,
As the sun comes up and climbs again, up again like a fireman
Surveying his same old world:
Up there he can see your home so close to mine,
Alma;
And just like me he knows that you do not like to read,
And just like me he wonders who it is that you love:
Who is that lucky person,
Alma, as I hold my breath, unyielding my optimisms
That, yes, I am the he whom is you love.

Robert Rorabeck

Up

Up where they are singing,
It will be getting later in the valley—
The angels will be outside,
Shampooing—my wife will still be in the Shower. And while she does,
I will sneak outside to drink from
The bottle—
I will be sure not to bother her father:
And in my rhyme drunkenness,
Waiting for the surprises of her foreseen
Pregnancy,
I will jump up and down in the fairgrounds
Of my many delusions—
Now that I have known her heart
And I have great abundance—
Even though I do not know how to sing—
There are still delightful children in the playground—
And there is still springtime's reason in the senses:
See them being born again over and over,
Wedding bouquets thrown over the shoulders
Of the love-grounds of my once muses—
And the animals in the habitats they don't know
How to get out of—Now like this,
While my wife is being distracted—
Throw the bottle back—
Throw the bottle back—
And wait for the room to get larger—
Wait for the moon and the sun to become
The discombobulated headlights—
Wait for real news in the headlines—
Wait for my son to be born tomorrow—
There in the headlands while no one important
Is looking.

Robert Rorabeck

Up All The Mountains

Flesh of sows spread over the transoms of Ghosts,
And the poor men cannot vacation, but look where I have been,
Up all the mountains and their skirts,
And atop of Alma's roof; and I've had that goddess in My bed,
While it is almost time to close- The men with great Big smiles laughing make-believe in the Exterior sun;
Why they don't know where it is they go when they Sleep,
But the places are yet here to remember, echoing,
Echoing and
Measurelessly deep.

Robert Rorabeck

Up In The Morning

Coming up in the morning,
Like a fish drowning- somebody's
Swift sided pet,
Who has never seen trees or television
Channels which aren't waving,
Like the séances
Of working girls, come in doors
Carrying their baskets for grandmother,
Not having anything else to sell-
They have to do this, work naked in the Glowing kitchen,
Until they become that color, all tawny
And delivered,
Like ornaments in a tree house in a storm
In Delray;
Hot pies for thumbs, dimpled pillows,
Basins where a slender drip of water echoes
The loving jewelry taken off necks-
For both eyes, these are good, and it is morning
Once more, and I am swimming up
To meet them, a rose in my teeth like a pollinated
Bone, unrequited,
Because there's really no other work,
And the country joins me from the lip of the bowl,
And the kelp sways and gurgles-
In this manner, we enjoy her highways as she carelessly
Ballerinas the house until it is as clean as a new thing.

Robert Rorabeck

Up Into A Blue World

Making my neat rows of imperfections, I am almost over:
Weaponless, I am also out of liquor:
Just a squirt, and my dying world becomes hung over in your favorite colors:
I guess I shouldn't write about you anymore, or at least not use your Name so you will never find out
How imperfectly enamored I am;
And maybe I will make it through to Christmas and sell trees under A tent,
But all the time I will be looking up into a blue world which doesn't Exist,
Because you have taken it away.

Robert Rorabeck

Up Into Cathedrals

I get up into Cathedrals: Alma walks around
Stroking and cooing to her children:
The walls are of her favorite color:
The leap in foxtail palms and everglades- and the children
Ripple through them
Skipping nursery rhymes over the rich banks of a baseball diamond
Where she sees me from across the field
And her eyes, like undiscovered plagiarisms, tell me that I don't have to leave.

Robert Rorabeck

Up Into His Arms

I have new desires as I lay alone in the Same old bed- and the weathers proceed overhead:
Whipping the soups of their tendrils,
They gone forever happening bringing sadness
To the books of the word- and the girls
I dream of mark me like beautiful scars
The rabbits travel towards as the lions yawn:
The words of crushed hemlock, of crushed
Songs- and I do whatever it takes to move
Up again, like a pony laughed at by jackals
Upon a highway that never ends- while she Has won a prize, a blue ribbon,
And her saddle is as silver as it is golden:
And she gets up into his arms, feeling so light
That she might fly away-
She swings over my grave as it rains,
And she does not listen to what I cannot say.

Robert Rorabeck

Up Into The Clouds

Look at the new places where we live—higher
Up on the shelves—
And only reachable by the ladders from our Orchards—
While we spend all day outside in our playgrounds—
And helicopters stumble upon us
Like bumblebees in search of sugar time flowers:
I remember you in your miniskirt in the Middle of the day,
As we tried to play some kind of sport next to The sea—until
They kicked us out—until they sent us away—
And all of this has only pretended to be some kind of Send up of some kind of love—
A daisy arcade for the afterlife of jelly-gfish
With the shadowy echoes and the faint sounds
Of airplanes—
And my love butchered upon the gambit—
The last of the last stars in the sky—another greeting
Card for the fire of dead mothers—
And tomorrow another day of high school—
With the angels looking up into the heavens
And the heavens looking up into the clouds.

Robert Rorabeck

Up One Level

I deal with power,
And now you know me:
I watch good movies,
And I am being considered by Fine men to which it is their job to Consider me,
And I am a silent presence, and I
Will not tell you what I am doing,
But I am doing it,
And these scars are my trials,
They given me new aphorisms that I hand over to you, and I am not Catholic, but I write as a member of That church,
And I make love to lonely saints underneath
The bows of poisonous oleander,
And this is such a little thing,
But I don't obey the law, and there is
No harm in it,
And my largest organ is damaged,
And I lost my leg,
But my muscles are fine; they are workman Muscles: I lift three hundred pounds and Tie it to the top of their cars,
And they drive away,
And now you know me, but never again will
You see me, for like a whisper in naked
Sunlight I give this to you,
But it is the only thing I will give.
Now I walk away,
And now you know me, but that is all there is.

Robert Rorabeck

Up The Alley's Open Chimney

These windows out to seas are no good-
They have fogged up,
Or turned away:
Nobody says I am beautiful anymore;
And the lighthouse has tripped a fuse.
There are so many things to consider, walking
Alone in the dark, biting my lip,
Trying to ignore how easily the heavens are Smothered;

The dogs have left my side- They are
Dividing up the streets to keep their prospects
From other dogs, but they are lazy:
They do not wake as the shepherd steps
Over their flea-bitten manes with his flock a-braying,
And soon all of such wealth has floated away
Like so much rusted flecks up the alley's
Open chimney:
And though the oysters are dancing,
There is nothing left worth fighting;

And she has gone down the wet stones to make Love to the sea- She has done this with the deliberation
Of an unsatisfied lover,
Waiting for the moon to breach from cover
And wax over my hand, to distract and palaver:
And now when all the lights are out and every Essential family is slowly breathing,
She leaps naked into his white comb,
And thus swims coyly away like
A somnambulist of that caesura's
Golden foam,
With two guiltily satisfied hearts a-beating.

Robert Rorabeck

Up The Heaven

The day estranges its silhouettes and I make due—
I just got over getting over you—
Paper airplanes flying over her eyes like twin diseases—
And the night is old hoarding her bosom of Suburban gold—
The lights go out on the Christmas tree—the trailer park Turns out empty—and the bull-rings underneath the Burned down mountains—
The breakfast table is vast but without a family—
My wife says sweet dreams to a room that has emptied—
And the colleges emerge like hallucinations into
The burned down heavens—
School again tomorrow—latchkeys that will turn out luckily
Into homes that cannot live without them—
School again tomorrow—borrowing the time of a graveyard
That stares up to heaven.

Robert Rorabeck

Up The Skirts Of Grizzly Bears

Doubts who presume their colors:
The overpasses go slouching their stone abusively,
The airplanes spin in pirouettes
As they all die into the valleys where the legumes are all
Emptied and eaten;
And to take this out in the open and show it to your eyes,
Costs a pittance;
But it is really here, where I've been walking,
Trying to fornicate with the pregnant belly of the heavens
Angry at the preternatural abasements of whatever gods
Ransacked her:
And I get to what seems to be the top where the angels
Jellyroll, where their lieutenants with busted hips
And lungs pressed in demand such revelry:
And there are songs, oh gorgeous- don't you know like
Women painted in oils,
Spilling like goldmines for the reclusive hermits who Pray to themselves,
As they fingers run like otters in the rivers of their Seamless employments:
Until all of their days are clouded by that topaz spit shined
For tourists
Who these mountains never remember the names of:
In fact they don't care: they just sunbathe in their split hair sorority,
Until the lightning kicks in their orgasms whenever it does,
And sets the aspens on fire, and lifts up the skirts of Grizzly bears,
But that isn't even what I was talking about.

Robert Rorabeck

Up To The Enviously Starless Day

Everything is EE Cummings in double-
Soft yard lights:
Bric-a-brac of dragon spine,
The esotericism of delightful aphrodisiacs
And I can feel myself becoming Aroused,
Sweating purple drooling like homeopathic
Walruses, and I want to go
Home- but no one is home underneath that School bus or mountain where you live,
And it used to be said there are prettier girls
Living in the sea,
But they all got new allocations with fireman;
And they weren't pretty enough to survive
The tenements emollition
And the sweaty fraternities play the stolen guitars
All night,
When it was supposed to be lost in Spain nigh over
Two decades ago- In Salvador Dali, in Port Bou-
And the tree is as crooked as your spine;
And you make your money outside of blood banks
Just by smiling,
And the sun in all its wishy-washy esplanade has no
Right to you,
And you make your money buy selling its light back
Up to the enviously starless day.

Robert Rorabeck

Up To The Mountains

Openings in the woods leading to where
They are buried,
Beside the carriages of rattlesnakes- as the wildlife
Listens to sirens and tourists
Buying ice-cream- and angels lay across their Canopies
Glowing like the wreaths of signal fires,
And yearning up to the mountains,
Searing,
Believing that they are the roof that the lesser Animals must climb to peer across.

Robert Rorabeck

Up To Their Goddess Of Airplanes

Doing this by and for the counting of
So many unanswered hours,
Moving her birthday cake around the fruiteria just to find
A place a little more forgiving of the wind and its adulterous
Powers,
Just so that Alma: my soul: my Alma, could have her wishes
Out on the floors of this earth on her birthday,
But otherwise being very unfair to it: if that was what I was doing
And am doing still,
Riding my verbs across the transoms of her windowsill,
Calling her out of the volcanic footpaths of Mexico, just to Bathe in her eyes: her eyes, who have already seen motherhood,
Who kissed my lips yesterday after a fortnight of nothingness:
And to who, yesterday, I made love to, drunkenly
While some dumb cat was up on my roof, and I was so full of The fires of my apologies:
And she was so afraid in a hurry to blow down my house,
To pick up her mother, Rosa, from the restaurant on Okeechobee
That she must be busy at all most of days:
While there are so many palm trees rising up and splaying to kiss
The sun's esplanade in the amusement parks of this sea level glade:
And all of the forts just sit together restlessly,
Waiting for the return of their resplendent conquistadors, their Green cannons singing up to the wily eyed birds and Their airplanes: singing of this or singing of anything
While, eventually, the leafs fall, and the birds sing up to their goddess
Of airplanes: if they remember to sing to anything at all.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon A Vanishing Midway

Then there was a poem for you
Buried in the sand by the cat
By the wolf—
They said they would turn it into a tree
For you, but no one read it—
It was an un coalescing joy, but your children
Continued to sing around it something like
The abandoned gifts of an inconsequential Christmas—
Whatever catastrophe there was South of Disney World
North of the North pole—I kept on abandoning
You perpetually until the stewardesses all
Took flight—skipping the souls of their bosoms
Across the absolute ponds of a very midnight—
Until whatever sang for you ran and ran away—
And whatever still hoped to make its love to you
Had to play out its abandoning pockets upon a Vanishing midway.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon An Emptied Theatre

Raindrops in a tortoise's shell,
Overturned beside the road—no more little Souls inside of it,
And no reason to call this a soup of tears:
The wolves no longer give off colors,
Red or blue,
Going either way, and in their guts are no longer
Pinwheels—the sky is no longer brightened,
But neither is it afraid:
The gardens are not hidden—the waves lay where They are laid,
And the curtains open upon an emptied theatre,
And the sun opens upon an emptied glade.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon The Banks Of Michigan

The day trades its dreams upon a Freudian soufflé
Until its afternoon wherein I drink hard liquor and look at pictures
Of old classmates who made it all of the way to New York,
And are doing well, with their white wives- and cats-

Men with troubles tell me to believe in Jesus, because times are Hard and parts of the body have to be operated upon:
Angels come into their room and rearrange the furniture:
They are getting worked upon; it is a miracle:

And what are the Glaciers doing? But giving the face
Of Michigan dermabrasion: in those deep ruts, there is beauty,
And soft things grow,
And the great lakes spread fjord-like for ships, cold waters as soft as gowns-
And upon the banks of Michigan, flowers abound, hiding the Dead soldiers,
In those Hyborian theatres where flower shops are known
To be graveyards:

The is its beauty, tossed alongside the road:
Asleep in Rimbaud's valleys- it is where we kind find an answer
For Jesus:
He is lying down here too, trying to rest
From the paparazzi who, given enough time, will forget
And begin to follow other men who are also trying to become Rich and famous.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon The Boughs

Lapsing like the tides underneath Saturn's rings,
Into another arena after the dusks of
The world I pretended to know and to read upon Days of riches and soft shells served at Restaurants
The plagiarisms of those days cannot go uncounted
Or the fires they kept in the courtyards underneath
The eyes of the libraries:
It seemed as if the days were growing shorter and Shorter, as was the wisdom of the men who Kept themselves there; though they were no longer
Fighting their own hunger:
Women whom they had remembered from high school
Kept dancing toward them,
Turning into bartenders and stewardesses
As the lights traipsed across the sky,
Like foxes leaping for fruit
Like nuptials upon the boughs that would Never bend.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon The Garden Of Eden

Boys are lucky who don't know hallways:
They can swim for ever like blue gills
And teeth upon the sun—imaculate tit in the sky
With an aeriola of sky:
Just one foundation with a roof that freckles
With the heavens
That dinosaurs once saw before they stumbled
Upon the Garden of Eden
Vanishing forever.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon The Midway Of The Midwest

Balancing on this dowel,
Lined up beside the likeliest men
In the middle of a rickety midway
In some Midwest,
I could be a songbird if I
Shaved. Coughing blood,
Little girls, or daughters of bankrupt
Pioneers, line up because they Can win prizes by shooting out
My heart. What a situation my Hunger has gotten me into, not having Considered my I.Q. Is 130,
And not the right tool for this
Desired immortality; when other men,
Better endowed can come by and Knock me from this perch, and set up
Shop without breaking a sweat.
Unbuttoning their collar, and spreading
Polyester lapels, displaying desirably
Plush hearts openly ululating,
Catching the attentions of daughters ad
Their grandmothers who might Spend all day there laughing until
He has won a pinkish marble bust which Should valiantly grin for ages after
I have packed up and jaunted further on,
Wayward and anonymously starving for my next meal.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon The Rooftops Of Another Sea

Coitus at the bus stop:
A knot of rainbows
Drinking at the birdbath
Of a sooty love;
My muse's name scrawled in the Bathroom,
As outside the Palm trees whisper the Equinox of their love
Up to the airplanes
That are skipping
Like airconditioned stones,
Far across my hopes and Fears,
To land caressing like roman candles
Upon the rooftops of another sea.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon The Strings Of The Moon

They tried to teach us as the sun showers
Fell across the moonbeams
And the unicorns made love to their Cousins in
The happenstance of the roadside motels:
And the oceans matriculated
And carried off the roses of dead prostitutes
Beside the honeymoon forts
Upon which they fell,
And the dreams of school teachers still come
Nocturnal,
Haunting and scenting their favorite
Places of moonbeam tourisms,
Where their children string wild foxes
To their wrists—
Wild animals long of tail who go leaping like Bottle rockets towards the grapes of
The gift shops:
And talking cartoons fill the streets alongside
Their light shows—
Zeppelins reach up and zigzagging steal the lights out
Of the moon,
But someone else is going home anyways—
Can't you see that gentleman crossing the street,
Leaving the bedside of your mother—
Until all is lost, and the honeymoons forgotten,
And yet the children still find some kind of haunted
Warmth in their classrooms,
As the rainstorms caress the abandoned fairgrounds of
The Ferris Wheels—
Who now kiss other lips beneath in seas who dance
Upon the strings of the moon.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon The Windsome Saddle Of This Uncountable Mountain

What ships the quietness under trees,
When the wind is done complaining,
The roots of men under the earth and cold-
Bitten daisies- There they are like little children
In their dusty cribs.
What an emotionless crop buried with their pocket's worth of Gold at the edge of most holidays,
And the clouds are coming in like weary travelers
To see a half involved play.

Where up above, like almost incandescent gods,
Her branches form a rustic bouquet,
Like the quietly irrefutable mother trying to collect
Her children all at once as they disperse like
Spores from lips making a once-only wish;
And I would have liked to save her,
And play with them, but the succession of busy hours
Makes me soporific and my eyes
As drowsy as a hanged man-

For her, I wish I
Was a better poet, considering all that she has given me,
And that my words weren't just because of all these scars
And loneliness, but she will protect me still, indomitable
Back against the fickle weather,
And I will not complain as I go to sleep in her dusking
Shadows, as she plays me a bucolic lullaby,
And I pretending that I am just a boy settling down
From bright play, and she my mother,
Not just another tree in the forest upon the winsome
Saddle of this uncountable mountain.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon Whom To Lie The Blame

If your dreams could sleep in unison, then what Would it matter if our bodies would never touch:
Imagine two candles like brothers and sisters in a candelabrum:
Remember the secret games with your aunt spreading
Like spurious cousins across the backyards of the plantation:
And we could run together through the Christmas
Trees, making eyes:
And the fields would fill and pollinate, and our masks would Be our disguise;
Because, Alma, I love you, and your body is so near, but I fear
That our bodies may never enjoy the same bonfires, or that you will Never teach me how to cook- and that this is all a game:
Alma, our constellations may roam together but if their pinpoints never Coalesce to touch then I hate to wonder upon whom to lie the blame.

Robert Rorabeck

Upon Your Vulpine Lawn

Passing along,
a heartbeat for a blue letter-
Other words that disassemble:
This is America,
and we are made to preamble along our ways-
Girls that take off early tend to amble,
Halfway studies of the boardwalks along
The busied highways-
In the open air musical halls it gets noisy,
Little boys, such as Pinocchio, such as my son,
have forgotten to look both ways:
But I have made them up,
Anyways-
and all of the commercials are filled with
The cauldrons which awaken the dead-
Dead authors whom I have loved along the Ways-
Cadavers of my elementary school that I have called up against the waves-
I have loved you here,
tattooed into a spot of anonymous epiphany, whilst other people have been watching the traffics which come and go both ways-
The airplanes whom shoot up as bottle rockets who apex to kiss the lips of clouds only die as butterflies do reaching the foothills of the mountains of old
Mexico-
schools awaken again and again at the mailboxes of dawn-the love letters lying sweating, waxen,
upon your vulpine lawn.

Robert Rorabeck

Us

Two birds fetching in the sky-
Slow down to kiss:
Really,
They are airplanes engorged
In a cloud,
Or they are us.

Robert Rorabeck

Us All Along Our Way

They felt like their child of other features,
Lost in the garden or only turning around; and
It might have been but some awful trick,
The way I was spelling myself all mumbojumbo
Besides the day going traffic:
And the house that we all lay under was wide and yellow,
And the waves sang a disastrous chorus,
Spreading themselves at their table- curiously,
They came nearer, only to scour away- and then some Bird sang, and the trucks struck out again like lances, Mounting the highways that leapt over all that Could be seen and gallantly charged us all along our way.

Robert Rorabeck

Used Book Stores

Into used books stores in the bosoms
Of those mountains—I am finally going down,
I am falling,
As if into a movie theatre after it has been shut down—
And the strange weapons of our defenseless enemies have Finally awakened—
And this is the blooming sensuality of the armpits
Of their gardens—
This is finally the peaceful comfort of the getaway
Cars-
Cars clouded with women who worship the billboards—
Cars clouded with the statures of the nameless
Bouquets given each Sunday to the manikins in Their graveyards—
And you know who they are, into all of those places
Who don't breathe to survive—
And other perpetuities of wishing wells, hung upon
A thread, the fireworks well-displayed, or who Are duds—gathered together or who are swept up
Across the desert—
And the mountain lion yawns bored by the blue-eyed
Banshee—and eventually the fire-scarred mountain
Blooms—as if you knew my mother on her birthday
And she has stepped towards us—
And as if she was still right here,
As if these were the things saying a ceremony over
Her very name.

Robert Rorabeck

Useless

In the morning, work- and the silence of Cars going by their way:
Like rattlesnakes in their joys of being unperturbed:
Like dogs who whisper to the cats
In the rain;
And I jogged past your house so many times
After midnight,
Never saying a thing, the night balm, melting ice-cream:
The forts on her shoulders naked of Their tourisms:
Not a cloud in the sky, and the heavens as peaceful there
While you slept in that house
Next to your mother's womb, dreaming of your children,
Alma; who would soon come-
As you would learn better English, and your mother
Would wash dishes for a living;
And I would find you for a little while, before you too
Would drive along your way,
After I had given you fireworks, and white gold in the shape
Of a rosary- and flowers,
Flowers- and anything else I could think of- all of It useless, as your love slipped away.

Robert Rorabeck

Useless Architecture

Useless architects build their paper bridges
Up to her eyes,
But ever are my words pilgrims without Recompense,
For even now she is leaning into her lover's
Ear,
And the tears which become the slow
Orgasm
Easily wash away those efforts of less fortunate
Men, my windswept brothers-
Those men without educations,
And misfortunate kindergartens who knew
Only the manifestation of thoughts of her Coming on like a shade less light within their Feeble perception,
So now she doesn't even think of how they must go,
Their hearts palpitating like two year old rabbits
Clutched in the mouth of an overeager dog,
Who will soon have their necropsy down on
The leafy carpet of adolescent ejaculations and palm fronds-
Within the border of their infatuated visages,
Their tongues rolling like stormy clouds,
Teeth clack against each others' smiling throats
Like batwing shutters;
So hopes melt like the solutions of dusk, homesteaders
Traveling westward in a great depression,
Their bridges of love letters falling away behind them,
Their hyphenated dreams dropping out into obscurity,
As the young fortunates bed in the pleasurable
Syllables brought into annunciation by lips and tongue.

Robert Rorabeck

Utilitarian Scripture

I get drunk because I am a dog all over you. How many years
Now since I seen your lips
Sparking like a box of matches from that Speedy distance,
Like a nebula skipping town:
And in high school we jaunted
The same halls,
Smoked the same smokes, laughed the same
Echoes;
And I came courting for you after a good rain shower
Further north than the Everglades,
The same courtyards as the HariKrishnas, the football
Jocks, the early morning traders:
I used to get up every morning and think of you-
You were my eggs and butter and marmalade.
Leaving her like a solemn tributary,
I'd smell you out like a wolf beneath the banyans and the Silver windowed hauntings. Now after so many years
I still don't know what I'm doing, but Drinking the cheapest liquor and trying to sound you out,
Testing the depths of each shot glass hoping for the Sonar of your fingerprints or lips-
I really don't know what I am doing at all,
Except that I am the sort of anthropologist who doesn't give Up on your leggy civilizations, even if you ride the buses
Of other mostly apple-cheeked boys,
Those guitar players, or soothsayers, or super-heros
Sprawling with the midges of their forensic evidence all over
You in the beastly pollinated meadows of a Victorian novel
With its widely populated lascivious undertones:
They've long since closed the doors to their class rooms and Shut me out,
But I'll tip my bottle upwards in the unobstructed rains and Salute my sailors and their fantasies of high romance,
And when I finally see you once more up so many ladders,
In your high towers and shopping malls,
And escalators and bean-stocked habits,
The skyscrapers of your successful beauty,

I shall call up to you once more, and tell you my name
In voluble successions until you know my game,
And can see it in my eyes,
How you are reflected for such finite perfection,
And then maybe you'll ride the elevator down to the lobby,
And we'll make sweet love that mixes our nectars,
The blood and zygotes which tend to go roaming
The oppositions of the regular paths and parkways
While the shady preachers scry and the blue birds twitter,
The soft lesbians nuzzle, and the red alcoholics jitter,
And the aces flicker in the spokes of so many fast and Wondering bicycles,
Because I am just a drifting schoolboy,
And you my ever beautifully apocryphal scripture.

Robert Rorabeck

Vachel's Rhyme

Goodly drunk fools conversing by their pools,
Investing all their time in business and not rhyme;
Look at their children good behaving as their should,
They shall grow up tall and speechless down the hall;
And the women there with pale freckles and fare hair,
Sipping their glass in time I think to make them mine,
But it will do no good for things are as they should,
Their gossip is not mine they care nothing for the rhyme.

Robert Rorabeck

Valencia

These words are tourists who almost find god
Lost in Valencia, Spain;
They ask their directions from the crinkled lady selling
Tulips, but keeping the orchids for herself,
And the blind man, she still loves him as a young boy:
He is the old man eating grapes on the crumbled stoop
In the bare sun.
Bright cotton shirt and democratic paunch,
She points at you into a certain way,
And tells these words either right or straight,
But from her mouth they both sound the same,
Like two moths daring each other before the blue flame:
Down the cobbled grottos we creak,
The few meaningless lines looking for salvation,
Smelling the salt slathered from the sea's undulating
Coitus, the cats from the sills hiss and spray,
And the ladies doing their laundries on rooftops enjoy us;
But soon we are in the pollinated hills,
The old guitar hills, the crippled ballerinas of olive trees,
The slender premodonnas of citrus trees in a Chorus line of green with orange bobbles where lovers hide and inebriate
In twined bodies; This way we go, looking for love,
Looking for god, and the unmarked graves of better poets
Beneath the rubles of the Roman forts where Unearthed ghosts creep to the pull of the moon's penumbra:
Their legions are swaying way down in the waves-
Some of these words are still lost in high school,
Looking at her expanding corneas yet fully grown across the room;
Some of these words are calling in empty fields for Comets to come down and light upon them like solar butterflies;
Other words are examining the opal wrist of a puppet queen,
Hoping to steal gems by her good favor;
Though they will let her keep her birth stone, hidden in her wrist;
And the rest are crawling through her suburban front yard,
Each stem of grass hung over from dew,
But the corpse of the entire troop is still in Spain
Watching an abandoned kite flirt with the cliffs,
As the fists of the new sun lance like pugilists;
We go walking up the stone steps,

And on each one there are elderly men in succession,
And a new dropp of sun-
Escaping their youth and selling ice-cream;
Asking them if they have found god in any sentence,
They smile, unknowing but unafraid, and motion us
Patiently past them....

Robert Rorabeck

Valentine

Give now care to the basins of the flesh,
On the day of roses spread your lips in her name,
Though she doesn't know you a single jot,
Live with her missing in your ribs,
And take a pilgrimage of the mind,
Into the sweltering paradise her pose displays,
And lay with her alone,
Upon this day of days,
Where the flowers bloom everywhere
But on the tombs, and lovers slip
Amidst the caesuras of high school-
If you dream of her, this valentine,
And expose her to your word,
She will love your never mind,
For the subconscious is in the garden
Of the Universe, and after all
You are but stars holding hands,
A constellation in the sky.

Robert Rorabeck

Valentines Gifts

Prevalence of lost as the cars go home,
And smoke drifts
To the sky like evaporations of sign language:
Girls bouncing in school,
As if across a lake- they go jogging along
The curbs,
Their little ankles kissed by pigeons and Water moccasins who sleep there,
Though I suppose you've never seen them:
Damsels hypnotized by Spokes of bicycles with golden ingots
In the braids of their handlebars:
The traffic lights and the power lines
Behind them for decoration,
And the sky tumbling like a heavy confection
In the orange groves which smell of Her long neck,
Pollinated- like a naked hollow
Where she rests, and the ants drink her sweat
Or carry it down to their opulent queen
For valentines gifts the size of diamonds.

Robert Rorabeck

Valkyries On Neptune, Little Girls In France

You beckon me in through the seems of Stolen valleys, where you no longer live,
Where the sky is a ribbon dangled high above
And breathtaking. I do not know
The names of the flowers which grow here
In nocturnal clumps of dark industry,
But I give them your name when you are Too far away to hear, and there isn't a lick
Of water, and even the night is sweating and
The echoes sojourn with me,

Back at home, I have thoughtlessly left
A living doll with your name and inclinations,
The vulpine fevers of her lips left to kiss
Each wall, and I think I have done a better job
Than you in defining the shapes and humors
Of your shadow, and she is so young and Yet taken by one of your gentlemen;
I should say she is mine, but so, she is just
As much yours, a daughter,

I suppose that this will end with you once it
All opens, and thus the sky will spread as a doorway
And there will be kings and ships,
And valkyries in their polished kits and garb,
And yet so far away isolated on the tundra
Of Neptune, as if a star, that they will sit the Game out; but I will not need them, if you
Stop running, for devilish exertions can only
Get you so far without a modern automobile:

I should come for you just the same,
Stepping over the wilderness you grew until Bastioned in a gregarious society so much like a harem;
I will take your hand, weaponless and without a clue,
And lead you back to the fairground of my lips,
The red canisters the skipping boys have painted,
And drape you like a wedding gown over
The piston of an arm,

While our daughter laughs,
If only because that is the only thing she knows how.

Robert Rorabeck

Valley Of Windmills

Crawling to the forefront of another misery of
Guatemala—I drink my rum,
I say my lines—and I await for another day to splay me open
To the eyes and senses of fishermen—
Or, if I suppose, the sunlight cannot keep you here
From another catastrophe,
Like stolen bicycles sleep walking back to their masters—
Cannot keep you from his love,
Or from the marionettes of his children he
Conceived inside of you—then the cave is stolen,
But in its zoetrope still dances—
Laughing under the moonlight for the wolves to come
Into its movie theatre, or for the planes flying above
It to look down,
Causing another catastrophe, awakening—
The moonlight over a valley of windmills—cousins to
The caesuras—they spring around them,
Never bothering to wonder what is laughing at the Same time with the moon.

Robert Rorabeck

Valley Song

The mountains are whistling:

Jing, jingle-lang, jingle-loo

The spear tips of earth are wreathing,
Like waves, like steadily entangled hips:

Jing, jingle-lang, jingle-loo

Every blade of grass grows and is happy:
The strummers of insects vibrate in
The open throats of flowers:

Jing, jingle-lang, jingle-loo

The sun is a whirligig, a queen dancing with fire,
Rainbows are bathing in waterfalls,
And the unshelled knight is in a vermilion
Tourniquet,

His horse is eating the tart plums
Enveloped in blue midges,
And glamorous shimmers from the water lady's mirror:

Jing, jingle-lang, jingle-loo

Blushing purple goes the day over the hills,
Down into the channel of hazy valleys-
So brightly, each leaf is burning harmlessly at each tip:

Jing, jingle-lang, jingle-loo

Robert Rorabeck

Valleyside Of Rubrum

The time has not come before
And this is new.
The light is opening for the day
An ingénue displaying her bosom
To man's face-
I remember when
I was young in following her.
Her tassels feeling through the trees
And drinking roots,
She laughed even while
Alone;
Giggling,
She rode her bicycle across campus.
I staid up all night and prayed for her.
When tired, she slept
In the shade of a house-
Eyes half closed. I came to her,
She yawned and turned me away.
She said she loved me
Only when she was drunk,
And it was yet that time-
So long ago, yesterday...
Then early this morning she came to me
And offered me the quaff
Of lips.
Dripping nectar on the limbs,
She said, "Never before now, old man,"
As they lowered me in the grave,
Her light budded
A valleyside of rubrum,
A wedding at my funeral.

Robert Rorabeck

Van Gough Wants My Ear

My ear wants van Gough:
There is a prostitute in a
Red slip:
This is for her.
Rap it up in a burning ship.
Make it something grand
She can dance with.
Do in all the hooligans
With my knife,
So even the bourgeoisie can't sleep.
Do you hear me, Theo?
Mark the grenadiers with
A piece of chalk,
Even the ones who are Dead and smoking the Drunk whore's cigarettes:
Clickety-clack, Crickety-smack
His teeth go like this,
Do you hear me?
His teeth go like that,
As I said!
Then we can go down to the Sea and paint:
Carmine, cobalt and emerald green.
Lilting stamens all the way....
In Montmartre for the last 2 years, listening to mice
Crawling into conches
In the blue stars,
Beneath the stairs of sepia's hue:
You'll take this to her on a plate
From Arles down to Auvers-sur-Oise
I'll give you a head start,
And then swim in the gutters:
Where the proletariat
Stretch their legs:
Little opal waves:
There you will see the Prettiest girls with no last names.

To dance with one is Pure suicide,
As I am missing pieces
Of my last still-life?
Do you hear me, and
Have you done as I said?
The penumbra of my gist.

Robert Rorabeck

Vanity

When she walks down his lonely streets,
A mismanaged gunfighter,
She speaks words that mirror light,
Like a fish looking into a mirror
Wondering what she is....

Robert Rorabeck

Vanity Of Your Galaxies

Stars go leaping, leaping like stainless steel
Frogs:
When they are young, stars go leaping,
Leaping like coal tadpoles
Out from the center of her amphibian butchery:
And each of them has a reason for existence,
Or they have no reason at all:
And each of them has a bedroom where you live
And sometimes answer phone calls from
All your boys,
And yards where you swing outside almost thoughtless,
Almost naked,
And you have so balmy of holidays and memories of When you walked all the way down into the Little parks and almost cried for somebody;
But there are now so many cars on the streets of Your galaxies, that they threaten to make your Stars endangered-
Cars on insouciant streets of big words, going headily
Over the land, never thinking of romantic languages,
Never having been to Spain,
In red shift and gold fish- seeming to come back and Forth like a strangely organized tide,
And where now have they carried all of your boys,
For they no longer think of you in the vanity of Your galaxies,
And doesn't that seem almost impossible?

Robert Rorabeck

Various Poems

Writing various poems-
Weaving a blue
Shirt,
Sea horses descend past
the windows-
And a zoetrope dances
On the otherside
Of the street- The Insects are playing loud
Music because they
Will be dying within a
Week,
And the various days are Howling at the feet
Of unsinkable unicorns,
Because they've all
Shared a premonition
That you will not be Coming home-
As airplanes flying in Whispers over the Cenotaphs
Of the green knuckled
Bones of Conquistadors-
For all we can see,
They died this
Way-
Kneeling at the grassy Doorways,
Their throats blessed
Or cursed
By the lofty flights of Arrowheads
Of iambic pentameter-

Robert Rorabeck

Vast Prairies Of Sleepwalking Thieves

Everyday budding routines of envy-
I shouldn't be doing this, but its like I'm
In a spell- The cartoon housewives have turned Their backs to me. They let me finish off
The last of my week's rum without Entertainment, but their house is spotless,
So how can I complain- I want to hear the Enchanted ululations of China Forbes fill up my Delusions- To lean back on this snow white
Divan, and imagine the great ivies crenellating
Steps in the rain where high heels are echoing
Quickly, pressing books to her chest,
A girl who never looks up until she's married,
But I keep seeing her down that steep row
Perhaps following the regal promises of some red
Jove, pipe to teeth and an entire fortune to back him
Up- It wasn't hard to infect my amnesias,
To entertainment me with half involved women,
While I puzzle the inner states in yellow gloves-
Their sugar cookies, oldest daughters reading cheap
Romance by the pool- these patterns I keep saying,
Over and over as we wait together for great white
Salesmen to cross over, show us the catalogue of Bibles pressed open like moths returned to the vast Prairies of sleepwalking thieves.

Robert Rorabeck

Velvet

You made fun of me in the parks after Midnight,
Until I wished that I wasn't home,
And ended up accidentally killing the Dragon in the carport in a
Monsoon,
And the sky flashed like the inside of
A shell or a cunt,
And my friends came up and ate the Apples you were meaning to Save for your
Bridal shower:
And you had to use the tremulous plums,
While I went away and made Television,
And went and slept into the homes of the Foreclosed rich,
And masturbated on their private beaches
While I drooled over how you used
To put your hands all over wet clay:
And this is another scar,
This is just the way I do, after you found
Me out and hung me
Like a breathy corpse for eternity deep in
The dreamy efficiency of your velvet
Tongued soul.

Robert Rorabeck

Venal Attritions

Venal attritions of an overcast day—
Lonely sounds of a girl going home to her apartment
Next to the blinded sea—
Wanting to touch the gray hair of a goddess behind
Her eyes—
Maybe she is in love with her own mother as
Her own heart burns—
There is a grotto in there, and a little plastic
Alter, a nativity and a pieta
That her father once gave her in her childhood
When he poured a dollar's worth of quarts
Into the machine that looked like
A mouth of a lion and spit out things of wax—now
When she dreams,
There is only a green yard, and a topiary around
The church she never enters—
There is a swing-set in the student ghetto—
And muses she guesses she never loved.

Robert Rorabeck

Venal Flytrap Of Enamored Miracles

I'd rather love you than watch baseball,
Or play pac-man,
Or even read Baudelaire, and even he is all about Getting off on your balmy autumn hair:
I'd rather sign ships into bottles for you than Run for track;
And kiss you, messing up the rubrum underneath
The bleachers than
Watch that tawny quarterback-
But look at how swiftly you've moved on-
It hasn't even been a universal hour, and you've Already laid upon your back for That new John,
Like a lazy doe, like a windless flag:
I want to blow smoke up your as$- why is that
So dang bad:
I'd rather sit out with you and peel the world, and Listen to the new kitchens hatching from boa constrictor
Eggs in Spain,
Than take one step further into the clinging void
Of things that don't need to be said:
Because I love you: without you I'd just be the softly
Humming dead,
Spinning away my hours in a song-less fugue-
With you, I can while away the hours decomposing in a Venus Fly Trap of enamored miracles.

Robert Rorabeck

Venal, Green-Eyed Muse

You know that I smell like the smoke
Of Satanic fires;
They've been licking the sky all day,
The ragged flags of screaming countries,
Maybe where your sister disappeared,
And where all my money went to:
Today, I cleaned up the mountain without any Trees,
The witches brewing men into stags:
I was careful, and didn't buy the cheap house
Underneath the brewery;
And you spun, and spun; and lifting up your Skirts stamped the grapes,
Caught hummingbirds in your teeth like a
Sly cat: danced in four states at once;
And it's been a long time since high-school,
But you are still the burning swing,
The sink hole: Did you ever go there,
The Devil's Mill hopper, where I trained for Alaska;
Or are you the devil's mistress yourself?
You get men so high by winking at them-
More importantly you help me write poetry,
Venal, green eyed muse;
But I am not Baudelaire; I got a C in French
Under the palm trees,
But you are not yet breathless,
And I am still alive.

Robert Rorabeck

Verdant Though Killjoy Stars

So this is how the world works: bodies so brown and beautiful
Going about and fawning,
Making the world more beautiful, and you must have seen them
Diving through the red clays of the university,
Looking for something good, and calling out the names of the Girls they knew for them to come to them,
And I don't know what else there was,
But failure in the places in which the dreams of the captains and pilots
Rust,
And after she is done working with me, she drives on home and removes
Her semblances of candor,
And she rests next to her husband as stranger to her as is a spaceman:
Alma rests with her husband,
And they seem now to me as if resting in the greenest fields of the Verdant though killjoy stars.

Robert Rorabeck

Very Much A Lake Of Fire

This is my little house:

In its fire flaming: In my little art, a forest blazing;

And if I had the heart, I would look across

The hills,

My father's trucks burning, and your godmother's baby shower

All lit up like light bulbs of a Ferris Wheel that would Soon leave town,

While estuaries meandered heartlessly, while the fables flooded

Even while their vines rose and seemed to yawn exaggeratedly

Towards the summits

And to the underbellies of airplanes:

The convections of cotton candy and candied apples of a celestial

Baseball game,

And then while even then we looked up together and saw

The lions and the mountain lions yawning mutually:

While then the day was capped

And made to snow its tears, and the lambs shared dreams with

The grizzly bears, while over the fires the shadows of men and their

Cousins leapt:

They leapt like dark creatures over the movie theatres that wept,

And lit their last stalwart roman candles and bottle rockets

In memory of the sweetest cheerleaders and stewardesses

Until the entire campus was like a forest fire, full of hosannas,

And very much a lake of fire.

Robert Rorabeck

Very Providential Eternal Rest

My days are finally over, or in this zygote just Beginning:
Same moon in the same hemisphere, what it is doing
To the tides, I couldn't calculate:
All pitied up, scars all painted and ready for another
Nights journey into a bachelor's Consumptive sleep-
The muse bled richly across my peripheral vision,
Still leaping and elusive,
My dogs far away into a snowy park,
Sharon tucked in with her husband and child and all of Her mugs and perfect skin;
Erin tucked in, drooling like a preschooler in day school,
Like an oyster simply pearled in its bed:
And I must become again the effervescing child smoking off
Of whatever liquor he can find,
Fingering and making rude in the waves of whatever séance,
The airplanes with their bombshell sororities of Stewardesses too flighty to come down,
The houses of all this land going out like candles on a cake
Of a god who takes a very long time to make a wish;
So that we have all grown old and left the stage
By the time his desire awakens and strip-dances
Like so many winsome clouds before his astonished eyes,
Until they close again, like chapters having done all
That they could for us, and finally contemplating us to rest
Segregated into the graveyards like scuppernongs into a
Very providential eternal rest.

Robert Rorabeck

Very Well Sure

They have some good gods in Colorado,
Just misplaced off summits where the tourists
Ski,
Drink wine and palaver on to dinner time:
You have to do a little work to see them gods,
And hung over,
Your girlfriend cheating still over the old Spanish
Bones of conquistadors
All the way the f$ck down in Florida:
You can see dem gods,
Fornicating in dem briar patches of clouds,
Tying lightning to make some animals
The rain produces
As the others die: I was even then thinking of Sharon,
Coming down from Elbert,
Having made love to Mount Massive the same day:
And no one else was thinking about me,
And I was getting half done with my master's in Tallahasee
That I guess I always knew I would never use,
But I have it now,
As I circulate the segregated graveyards of dust,
And there isn't even a single flower,
And she is married, and Sharon is married too
And has a beautiful daughter:
I guess I always knew that was how it always was,
That these girls had better things to do;
And I was how I always was,
Not exactly a tourist, but still excited as a dog to see
Those sights,
Where they hang their braziers up after closing times,
After midnights,
And their jiggling zoos breast fed and man fed
And dog fed too:
And their gods, of course, I have seen them ludely through Their open ended dungeons in the sky,
Making new flowers and never having to die
Like the tourists of sweet nothingness whose fat
Bald heads still sweat in inconsequential sport

Miles beneath where I am mortally wounded
And very well sure to die.

Robert Rorabeck

Victim Victorious

You delivered the bomb
The last summer,
Your pilots destroyed our civilization,
Our inland empire;
Your older siblings showed you how.
Even your parents were encouraging—
Legion, your eyes blazed with napalm
And my villagers went screaming
As I learned you could call down angel's
Murder in suburban parks
Where sunlight runs in singing rivers.
You laid open the bomb-bay doors of your soul,
The skating rinks down to the pit of Hell—
You cut off the lights
And shut down the rides; Laughing,
You only stopped the massacre
To back over me. Injured, I ran away—
Pieces of me are still falling off from the Radioactive breakup—There are great holes in Me where sky creeps through,
Like showpieces of your macabre crafts,
The arts of genocide, the red canvas.
Banshee, you wiped out my entire ancestry.
My infrastructure is destroyed;
It will take generations to recover. Until then
I devolve into the dark spaces hoarded by monsters,
While you drive around practicing ventriloquisms
Of your coworkers and neighbors, Brutus
Singing how you've long since forgotten me,
Cutting your hair, courting your Mark Anthony,
Teasing him with a parade
Of your body in our bed;
The grave where my civilization lays ghosted.

Robert Rorabeck

Victorious Dark

Yeah- yeah, feral Christmas tree decorated with all
The blue jays and escaped pet store snakes,
Blue jays gorging off the shapes of more minor birds,
And the snakes off of them,
And the cousins off themselves;
Which brings a stranger's light, a semiannual death out
Into the tree, swimming like the ghosts of Arthur's Knights, disemboweled and never finding that grail-
They swing there is if from the memory of the witch's
Tits
And armpits,
While the birds and legless creatures chirp and fart;
They swing like uncorked censers,
Perfuming the unquieted, apathetic canopy of Victorious dark.

Robert Rorabeck

Victory Of Hope

My body is stages paling into loneliness:
I lost my soul somewhere back in the middle of high school
Like the greedy armor of a cicada stuck by its barbs to the neck
Of a cypress;
And what I am now is the midget in his Ides of March climbing
Down from a tree of gold,
Spooking the king into a paraplegic, entrancing him with the Rattlesnakes,
Muting the pet dogs on their chains, as I come down for you
Like dewdrops cried in the Andes: and this is a sport to a place
We have never been, but yearn for repeatedly in the esotericism of Bodies lost homes:
I remove myself in layers as snakes shed their skin like tears,
And I enjoy evaporating for you,
Dreaming obsessively of the venal inflictions I can give to the Orchards that bloom, remembering that I once Questioned my parents on the indelibility of marriage, while we Drove past the hospitals and the insouciant sports of the indigenous Reptiles, while I had you on my mind all the way, Hoping to experience your respiring carnivals while I still had Hope of victory.

Robert Rorabeck

Video-Game

I like to hypothesize that you love me,
That I have the gift to connect with my leggy god
At a personal level;
But I am mad from cleaning hats in mercury,
Of jumping over the candle flames in a fable of Golden mice who swim forever
Floating in the ancient Aegean sea, wherever that is:
I go all the way back to the old country,
The Spanish flocks kissing my ankles: I am beautiful
Back here in the corner of my room,
Sharon; and you have given up and moved on:
And you sell your wine like naked bottles flaunting before
The snow,
And the tourists come like confused snowbirds gagging
In the languages of their ice-cream know-how;
And I get drunk every night and write poetry, because it
Is your destiny;
And I can love you best from her, from my positronic bedside.
I will never send you flowers or call you, because you Just aren't that kind of muse, but I will spend an hour or Two a night writing poems for you,
Which added up equals more making love than I am afraid you
Have, because I have been practicing for you:
Sharon, aren't you right now my Elizabeth Shue.
I want to leave Las Vegas for you, Sharon, but not anymore
Tonight. I am done putting the glue to the balsam wood
Joints of your model ship,
And now it's time to neglect another pastime:
I want to try you out for real in my mind. I want to put a
Joystick in my hands and play a video-game.

Robert Rorabeck

Virgin Mary In The Mexico Of Her Poisonous And Absolutely Beautiful Metamorphosis

I want to drink like a fish- John Cabot,
But I really don't drink that much-
Just enough to go out onto the unpaved
Street, barefooted,
And light off illegal fireworks-
I drink a glass to affect Poetry like this,
I drink to move all the way to Missouri,
To forget her- to call her up,
To have sex with a beautiful woman in Orlando,
To spend a weekend at Disney World,
To feel the emotionless motion of commercial
Roller-coasters,
To sing beautifully and then repose
In a springtime's Easter crèche-
Well hidden and comfortable,
And, in general, to loose the verbiage,
Like an archeologist with his wheedling trough (Though I can never match Gwendolyn Brooks,
This I know, and thus rhyme,
And am no longer afraid)
To pick flowers after dark
And get horny enough to light out of my Skeleton,
To pretend to spell everything good enough
For my sophomore English teacher, Mrs. Brown,
To get another tattoo in Spain,
To look beautiful blind,
To pickpocket cheap wine,
And lend my obtuse floodlight to the Lord
So that he might affect justice,
To reclaim his runaways,
To finish the pyramids,
To count out enough money for the call girl,
And visualize the every possible angle in the Motorized exhibitions of her legs,

Leggy zoos and muggy, short-haired habitats,
Slices of sweet cherry pie
In exercise or just fawning in Sweaty and dun repose,
To visit all the old pets
In the cemeteries of feral relaxation,
To forget the troubles of my bank account,
The conditions of my expensive paramour
And effortlessly perfume;
To holler through the wind tunnels of Spain on Christmas Eve so many years ago,
All the way to the Hispanic forest and Lunch hours to
A Virgin Mary in the Mexico
Of her poisonous and Absolutely beautiful
Metamorphosis.

Robert Rorabeck

Visa Versa

I want to be down in the mines of your Body,
Smelling your back and your front,
Gripping you;
Not even believing in myself, but moaning your Name like a song bird,
Holding your hips like a kid on the swings:
Maybe you are Michigan and I have just Run away again,
Pressing against your body like a monolithic
Butterfly,
Smelling your front to back, and visa versa.

Robert Rorabeck

Visions Of A Far Away Mexico

Lions who are alive in an apiary of Sadomasochism worshipping the sunlight as
The very same tourists watch them
Again and again—
Very strange and vulgar zoetrope,
Like a washing machine around some Lazy planet—
The words get muddled and seem to Bend around the horizon:
The very atmosphere of this gravity
Pressing down airplanes until They are condensed into the semiprecious
Metal of a tourist's trinket—
And into the places where I kissed your Mouth once or twice until the very last time—
Seen before the hillside where all of your Ancestors are laid low—
As the horses keep on stamping the Arrowheads—and the read cliffs arise—
The frontera—where skeletons stalk,
Visions of a far away Mexico.

Robert Rorabeck

Vitriols Of Another Canal

Tumbling back some more I Ran so around to another god-
And I am Chanticleer
With holes in my ears
Up for salvation along the
Vitriols of another canal
As satan caresses you,
Spitting and caressing like a
Rattle snake:
And now like in the hollows of your Being; in the knees of your bones,
Looking up your skirts
For even just a drink of voodoo-
Waiting again for the familiarity of satin
To give even a preemptory
Wink

Robert Rorabeck

Voluptuous Catastrophes

Churches and playgrounds where
The kind hearts recede—
And the lilac airplanes can be seen doing anything to
The purple hemisphere—
Just like arrows fleeing Valentine's Day—and Other echoes
Called from the tulips of housewives—
There they are on their verandas imaging that they could Be making love with the Mailman or the milkman—until he comes, and he looks away—
They go back the mirages in the grottos of their Kitchens—the evolutions of their destiny—
They keep trying to remember the schools they attended
And the boys they loved—
But their thoughts keep eluding me—as I write to them
And it rains—a figment of my imagination in a Playground of voluptuous catastrophes.

Robert Rorabeck

Voracious Gravity

I am thankful that cenotaphs don't need to be fed,
So I can just lie quietly next to my vanished love
And love her quietly in the wormy bed:
And the nights wake up and trumpet, sounding the Invasions of a fresh kill;
And the countries move in- the boys in blue leaping,
Leaping,
Little wicks as jubilant as steely flowers in their Thorns-
The entire armada amassed before her bed and holding Conquest,
Their heads of state enjoying a banquet over her
Out of doors senses,
As beneath her shoulders the lesbians socialize like
Jaundice goldfish in the communal pool;
And I should have told her to get out when she could,
But I was just the little man in the deep end of the pool;
And when her weapons woke up and realized
They tried to take over death, or they just tried on new Summer dresses in the changing room of her last breath,
Until she was truly petrified and made to stay there
In her wonderful new home,
While her friends and family stood in line to view her
As unlucky as the corpse end of a wish-bone:
Like a line of tourists waiting for a ride that they would
All have to pay,
Knowing, sadly relishing, that they took would become Objectified and made to lie there too, just Like her someday,
While the orange groves wept leaves of salty lips under
The garish leaps of airplanes the only thing which this Voracious gravity seemed to have no affect.

Robert Rorabeck

Voyeurs Of Stewardesses

Christmas windows—
Voyeurs of stewardesses—
I'm in love with a
Mexican—
Her mother cleans
My house;
I love her but
Her heart is as Tiny as a mouse-

Robert Rorabeck

Wait And Wait And Wait

Nights shed like katydids or that is what they do:

Oh, I just want to hear the heartbeat atop of Alma's roof:

All of her extended family living like a clutch of lucky breaths,

While the waves pullulate and the airplanes reach their

Stretch;

In the breeze of my childhood, in the candles of the saints,

I lay down like a panther on a path of stones for the featureless

Armies;

And like children on the lip of Christmas:

I wait, and wait- and wait.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting At The Desk Of Scribbles For The Sea To Take Us Too

This night sinks, sinks,
Sings—like a drowning woman
She is doing very well:
Looking at myself now, gray and boorish,
Somehow distracting from her lavish protestations:
A virgin bride underwater,
Slipping, slipping,
Singing now, being distracted by her own song,
Being this:
A knife in the eyeball of a poet's illusions,
Trying to figure out this liquor,
The downfall of all of our grandfathers,
And the bad arrangements which distracted and Sank the ship,
And the lights are on at the very dregs of the ocean,
And the waves are like the bangs of a gargantuan mistress
Who eats her little girls and eggs all day,
And to this goes our uneasy, feverish psalm,
The first again tonight to be done with the spice of cheap
Liquor,
When both of her daughters are down and easy in their Beds, well situated with their professional illusions,
I do this uneasy work,
I tip the burnish glass as vanished friends give me no
Reason,
And I get up into early morning to cheer over the Paltry games of ghosts,
And my skin envelops me like a shroud,
And I fail math, and drool at my desk of scribbles,
As the ladies sink, singing a song which gets me into detention,
And Saturday school which was like being in a movie
Where I met so many friends where we sat and made games
In the sand and waited for everything to get deeper
And take us too.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting For A Real Hero

I wanted to say something about
Hummingbird eggs,
So I did, but I am no longer sure.
For is a coral snake like Satan in the Garden of a hummingbird,
Or am I just drunk? Of course I am,
But what about a hummingbird's nest
Like a doll house in the expansive
Forest without its beginning or end,
Like a fairytale started in the middle
And kept up through the Ages to stave off starvation, or the preordained
Judgment of gods who are lighter than air,
And yet who are way too big to be held
Up too long by the fickle,
Overworked winds of wonderful reality,
Who nuzzle the littlest of things and keeps
Their secrets all the time waiting for A real hero to emerge.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting For Her To Fall Asleep

They made up Plate Tectonics for Sharon,
This sick muse,
Mouthing off in Sunday school, a liar of good-looking Science:
I know now this Earth doesn't move;
It is a quiet place made all at once, a nature preserve
With cars that purr:
I remember gold fish in the bowl waiting quietly to Die
So that they could bask in the amber pools of gods
Hands.
Why can't I, if this is the place, and the swing-set isn't Being used.
I look up into the sky of the sick muse,
And if it is coming down seems to be slit by Occam's
Razor,
The easiest of science is the ambergris in her empirical
Eyes: The hardest to disprove, empirical senses
That combat the utter beauty of my drunken angels,
Who always seem to be made up with broken wings
Anyway- So they give up to her world of really sweet
Traffic,
And clutter about her knees waiting for her to fall asleep.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting For Her To Get On Home

Scarred in all too little ways- waiting for you
To come around, kicking balls,
Your jaw so well outlined in the pullulating rind of Sun:
And I have cannon balls, and bathroom passes,
And reasons to believe that I am a straight shot of a Conquistador,
Reason to believe that this last little bit might survive,
Even while the flamingos fart,
And I untie the expensive lace of another flirt,
And you don't come,
And Disney World is such a trip- decapitated, flash-
Bulbed, waltzing now with the last of the senior Class still flecking the promenade like the lazy shells of All the palindromes and paladins:
I do this to check the rigging- To hear the whispers of Xs of buried wealth, to pretend to stream out on an inflatable
Raft, to take my kindergarten and all its stolen goods out
Underneath some brightly pollinated flowers-
You know the ones, and show the poor boy the topless dwarf,
The stranded lady out beside the insignificant sea:
And all I am doing is just the runaway slop of several distant
Singers whose minds are not their own,
Who laugh and sway in a sauntering chorus to which I conduct
Them while their mother is out shopping,
And I am well and horny waiting for the return of anything
Feminine with shopping bags of hash and cheese,
While my beanstalk grows and grows, mostly unjustly
Unpublished, waiting for her to get on home.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting For My Time To Pass

The lesbians caress beneath me in a pool;
As If I have summated and am now looking down into The armpits beneath her bosom while she sleeps
With her fireman or anybody who is cool;
And isn't this my ship sinking into the breakers of the clouds,
Maybe the lighthouse is still turning, making its loving rounds:
But I need a girl who loves me just as I love her;
But the only person on this earth who ever loved a person as I loved her was Jesus,
And he loved us all; and we shot him in the back;
And now I am not a college professor, and I fantasize about you;
But you know it doesn't matter anyway, because it is over
And the plants are loving animals, reciprocating like mother
And father and the world seems to be tied up in coitus;
The planet is a kissing ball, and I wish I knew so many more words
To possess her; I wish I was the college professor out articulating
In her park of dreams that every so many feet has tiny little Churches just as precious as dolls;
And her floorboards creak even barefoot through the glass,
Because she is always sneaking out to go and find another lover,
And the waves crash like mute lovers,
While this is what I have been doing, biting my lip in perpetual
Agony, and waiting for my time to pass.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting For So Many Things

What should it mean that I am here again,
Singing my praises to the open sky above the vacant
Theatre,
Or that once long ago I came from the womb of A very fine woman;
Or that my scars are fading, becoming the beauty marks
Around the eyes of an exceptionally benevolent king.
No, I am not Mark Twain-
I have never captained on the Mississippi
At best when I was five I went into the bluesy dunes across
The street, the bed blankets for conquistadors and GI Joes
And looked at the pornography inside the junked cars
Beneath the Australian pines-
Up through that, I have appreciated women from their Distance, fancied myself an auteur in need of Representation; but even that doesn't matter anymore.
The cartoon rabbit has defeated the kidnapers.
Blue birds are singing to wise old black men up in the lees.
The dead men have jumped out of the river and are jigging away
Their gold:
I have loved her through seasons of her humid forgetfulness,
Sleeping uneasily with the drooling canines;
But today, I am taking a walk outside through the caesuras
Of hills, as I am waiting for so many things.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting For The Rain

Driving to the east, driving home the sky was
As gray as gray rhinoceroses- I even drove past Alma's
House,
And Alma's roses, because she didn't ring me all today:
When I got home the air-condition didn't work,
But I think that's okay-
I am still waiting for the rain, and maybe I have broken my Promise to her:
Maybe there are fearful satellites coming close to airplanes:
The sky just goes up like the funniest layers of a dream,
While relatives close their eyes and go to rest like Cicadas praying forever on cypress;
Even if that is just close to what I mean: I am finally in my house
And I can hear the fornications of the world,
But the green waterfall leaping from my window is as quiet as A blind man kneeling for a blessing,
And Alma is home and at rest with her beautiful family,
While I am breaking my promises and waiting for the rain.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting For You

I live inside a finished book,
Set aside and mostly unrecalled-
A book of furtive sentences over before
They begin,
And brilliant wounds spilling like massacred
Angels out of self-contained libraries of inner-towns:
My life is driving down one road
Under a few moments of sunlight and drying yards,
A moment when you walk by,
Your youthful body brilliant and insouciant
As wet paint,
You are gone from my life, not even looking in My direction as you leap your exercises:
Moving further and further away from the Isolated neighborhood where I roam
Until the houses are just shells of mollusks
Unreproduced by the briny womb of a sea
Now but a swimming pool evaporated into Green disuse;
There are no more whistles in the windblown yards,
For everyone has graduated, or divorced, and moved
On: Though I see pictures of you in strange neighborhoods,
I know they are no more real than I am now,
Just as you have stepped from that husk that once roamed,
I look to revive the memory of your unhemmed brow:
The auburn girl of fitless eyes, the claret lips who
I have never tasted hang somewhere here still:
In a cocoon of robbed intentions,
Or in the hollow amber of a cicadas' armor on the cypress,
In a humid room where the air-conditioning has died,
And the ceiling fan sleeps in the shady afternoon;
The latchkey of an empty living room hypnotized by Her gloomy shadow upon the television's dusty mirror:
So here I roam, my wheels turning like panthers,
As the tumbleweeds blow beneath the empty sky
Waiting to find you.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting To Get Drunk

The night can be telescopic, and my eye got Punched;
I'm waiting for the stores to shut down-
I'm waiting for the arcades to wind down, for
The students to pass out from drink,
To slip into the street with their guitars unstrung,
To slip into the street and drool in the gutters of What dreams they have laid over from Highschool-
Waiting for the cats to trick like coyotes,
And for the old girlfriend to finally stop pulling out
Her hair;
Here, in the golden turnabout where a cop pulled Me over a decade ago, I think of you as I thought of You a decade ago: Here, across the street from The Chinese junks, from the yellow studios and the Naturally hairy lesbians nude in the nude pool-
All that is different is that I have new scars, I've switched places- old friends have faded away into
New families, better words, employed;
And I'm still off in that night getting drunk my manager,
Will be leaving soon for Tallahassee to get my degree,
To fart and light off fireworks for Halloween,
To sunbathe in the graveyard of segregated confederates,
Wandering what tricks you would pull that night-
That night of sleeping bicycles and all my impotent haunts:
I knew you were calling off work, tasting the hemispheres
Of your blue fireman, and that was why I was getting drunk;
And that is why I'll be getting drunk again tonight.
Because, don't you still live in Gainesville, and aren't You still a beautiful auburn girl? Wherever my old girl is,
I'm sure she still has a bald spot,
And the only thing that is different is I have new scars,
And I'm waiting to get drunk.

Robert Rorabeck

Waiting To Grow Tall Enough

So It happens that I am going down again into the fjords
Of body builders of throats and lips
And tongues to dredge up again the songs that will never move:
Here, eternally, my ever-loving sister is falling between the fjords,
As the pages are forever stuck together and this is just a String of popcorn decorated around the Christmas tree:
This is just a necklace for Alma that she will never feel,
But it is all for her,
And soon it will be that I will die, and then I will just be just a lick of Spit stuck by an inopportune kiss to some indescribable lick of wall:
And all of it will ever be remembered for the long lances of Conquistadors who have just become indescribable again,
Disappearing again into the fabled mists of junked cars,
While the kidnappers get away with their innocent songs.
And the day revolves as if on carousels,
And for a moment the lion yawns, and I can remember how beautiful
You are, Alma, as if perfected in a perfect picture that never Moves:
Nubile and receptive and attuned to all of the necessities nude
And open and waiting for and out upon the empty green jaws
That otherwise make an arcade for a beautiful nothing high out and far
Upon the unnamed johns of the deep and multiplying ranges:
Or whatever it is, while all of the kites sing and my father make money
High up the hallucinations and all of its cotton candy fables to the Strange boys who happen to be waiting to grow tall enough to be Called or then to be christened kings.

Robert Rorabeck

Wake Up, Little Susy

The work I am doing is An Extreme mishap;

I can never be buried in
A coffin of joy-

All the Catholic boys are Dead or loitering;

There's a smiling alligator up
On the first time
Step,

They just repackaged it and Sold it to you this Way,

But it's the same song,
And now where have all the pretty
Girls gone anyway.

Robert Rorabeck

Walk In The Wind

I am the only one who Orgasms
An origami jungle
Screaming in papier-mâché
Vertebrates
Where the sun is a paper
Plate
Burning orange-flamed lips
At the picnic,
Turn to curling ash in the whispering
Grass,
As something like 10,000
Army ants march past,
The pomegranate armored conquistadors
Of a luscious past,
Looking for the fabled city
Through the bladed forest,
All that wealth fallen from my sticky
Splayed fingers, piano players
Stretching out from my slumbering palm,
Made entirely from sweet vermillion
Watermelon
Which glistens in ruby pyramids
In butchered geometry toward the sun,
Circled by gossiping horseflies
Who are taking a walk
In the wind.

Robert Rorabeck

Walking The Cow

We are leading our linoleum cows
Down the compassed hill,
Down to the forever basin
Of the perpetuating sea:
The sun is a mad conductor
Leaping in his bright cauldron,
And little children are playing on the rind:
Secret lovers siesta unnoticed
In the cradled bowers of citrus plantations,
Amidst the shipping trucks and busy work,
While grandmothers leap up barking
That: They still love you,
They still love you:
When they sink again they are never found.
Inside the caves of houses
Housewives are weeping,
They have cut themselves in the Perforated kitchen,
And their backyards of young Billy-boys
See how far they can stick
Serpentine hoses in the ground,
The curious gudgeonings-
But she who we care about is Nowhere to be found:
So we go down, down, down.
We are walking the cow.

Robert Rorabeck

Wanderers

Reindeer are stepping deeper in the bitter moss,
Mindless of the little fingers of blue hypnosis;
Clutching the smooth stones of the swaying west,
Not even the natives remember, as they hunt,
The ones who have died here and gone before.

What religion the moon casts onto the antlers' arc,
Across those red stems where felt collects like Calcifying minerals, dusted with the earlier snows;
Here is something not even the quiet speaks of,
A procession of white throated does,

Their eyes the perception of her unconcerned migrations,
Their bellies where the snow clings in tufts and balls,
Where the boreal caterpillars cocoon in moist antechambers;
When they change it will be too early, and they will freeze
Like slips of sunlight joined together in a curse,

And they will fall away from the amber steps of hooves,
The unperturbed steady trunks of the horned wanderers,
Their kids tugging on the black nipples at their bellies,
The orchids of forthright animals, the milk of talc,

And northward where the glaciers climb in ways of deep ruts,
Past the splendid death buried in its time,
The moments of lucid trinkets sparkling a wonderful mystery
Freed of the concerned stems which motivated the restless bodies,
Beneath the swaying monuments of vermilion hue,
And the breathless curtain pricked by furnaces, keeping pace.

Robert Rorabeck

Waning Marble Spine

Harrowed to the acanthine bone-
You once was a conquistador,
Sister a teacher to the oldest towns,
But now what are you, Now that Even the scabrous eyes of Engulfing mothers don't look up;
You suppose that wearing a
Ringing on your fluted finger and Slinging some vows would resurrect
This town,
Would bloom this celibate mausoleum,
And draw the curtains, and green the Room,
But even his soft kiss has gone overused,
As to be only as palatial as an Ant mound,
With your eyes changing greedy colors
Just as uncaring
As that taciturn creed I've seen you
Grow yourself;
So that you should never look up,
And keeping going down cast
Counting the cracks in the starving
Esplanade of you mother's
Waning marble spine.

Robert Rorabeck

Wanting Her Memory

The traffic doesn't hear me when I am tucking to bed,
When the traffic has mostly done gnawing the bones of the road
Where angels float like smoke
Whipping jingoistic across the drum-beats of the world:
My mother and father have had cantankerous sex in the sports
Utility vehicle;
I have tried to read Stevens, while I pushed all day with the Mexicans,
And sojourned to and from our jobs laying grass
In the white bred neighborhoods;
Now the ants rest with their legs splayed like kittens;
And there is no rain,
And the traffic moves so far away, like the wound in my mind
Waiting to open a little further and pour the red visions that are Wanting her memory.

Robert Rorabeck

Wanting To Be Hers

New rivers in the full horizon- beautiful words that I don't even know
Newly budding in a cemetery- and how they hold over
For her like candles
On her holidays- ripe as corn in an unabashed field-
Brown as her body looking at the Sugar cane burning,
As she came over to America and pulled up to the movies,
As the raindrops of another place-
Hit her body once or twice wanting to be hers.

Robert Rorabeck

Warm Bottles Of Suicide

I grease the snow over
Which the Cannon balls
Practice magic tricks,
Floating like old
Fashioned jaw breakers,
Lovers of little
Children,
Confections of high
Ball
Dreams,
Bowling alley trances,
And the ways
You look
At him;
You are such a match,
On your voyage to Damage my liver-
I raise my flag and Surrender
But it's just a
Trick of light to Buy me time,
As I watch the Heavy iron kiss
Snowflakes
In the low sky
Yet somehow safe
Above where you've Set up your Pretty coffins
To sell you warm bottles
Of suicide.

Robert Rorabeck

Warm Insouciance

A tingling in my neck: a warm insouciance,
And I think of the underaged English girl who comes Every year to run between the evergreens we put up
To sell in South Florida: She will be coming into her Own, and I am published in her country,
Even though she will not know: Her father, or grandfather
Is a grand thespian and a drunk, and a used car salesman,
And bankrupt. She has the lips of a terrible carp;
For in which to fit an entire sandwich, a pensive fist,
A thrusting tongue, or this, and this: The night is warm,
And either way goes a long way without her: And my ship
Is burning with effluvious energies, just by the kinetic Energy put off my walking towards her, without even Walking: Or, likewise, with quiet celebrating of my departure,
When I should leave without her, without touting my Lines to her, my furtive off-hour lines which hang over and Wait to be picked up for work, crowding what must certainly Have been more industrious junctures: Now the bourbon
Swims like the coattails on a groom waltzing in a flooded Night, and I drift and wander on, and place bets on if The flirtatious French women will come so that I might deliver
A Christmas tree to their house, so they might smile and say Things in the language Rimbaud wrote, under the gloom of Their roof, and their beautiful daughter in the kitchen making Eyes with her cousin, who is also beautiful; and watching their Petit fingers move through the verdant boughs I have trimmed,
And heavy breathing, and my eyes on her, as her eyes on him.

Robert Rorabeck

Was An Echo Of A Daydream

In a classroom of echoes
How can we go on fieldtrips where billboards and Rainstorms fade over wherever it was
In the places where
I remember you—Looking up from the ceiling fans
In the bedrooms you shared with you
Unlucky husband:
As I cradled you from the parapets and made love to you
As the purpled and marmaladed butterflies past:
As I taught another day from the water fountain
Trying to control myself as all of the prettiest girls past—
And in all of the day—and in all of the classroom
There was an echo of a daydream
That meant nothing to her anyway.

Robert Rorabeck

Was That All It Was?

Was that all it was,
To call me once to see again
My ugly face echoed in my voice
Five states away? To question me
Like a concerned middle-class mother
Whose daughter is dating a Chinese vagrant?
Did you not hear me whisper I love
You over the line, a much softer rendition
Than the last 4th of July, when I shouted
Your name to the night's sky-line,
As the fireworks burst their bloody colorful
Bodies overhead like exploding deities,
As dead cars and ghost trains passed away along Highway 66....
Was that all it was?
I could die in a plane crash tomorrow
Like Patsy Cline, I could fall to pieces, and you still wouldn't call
To give your condolences....
Call me, and we will not worry about
The long silences,
The way your mind skips town,
Leaving your lips with nothing to put on,
As you, humming a stroll, with pretty boys
From your town who you are not so far away from,
Forget my name and the nervous ways I came
On to you once or twice after six years....
Was that all it was
Or are you secretly engaged?
I could tell you wanted to tell me something,
But what was it? Are you seeing somebody?
Or do you not remember the ways you put on for men,
The type of men you like. You say I don't know you,
And I don't, but that has not stopped me from writing
You into every line, because that is all I know to do.
To lay you down as if in bed,
And to run my tongue across you like ink on a page,
Making your body numb to the hurt and pain,
Even when you are so far away from me,

Even when you call his name and forget mine....
But, was that all it was....
Was it the last time?

Robert Rorabeck

Watch Me Dance

In the still-life she draws to try
And save animals,
Those flowers are not real,

Though to her lips the beer froths,
The yeast of a microbrewery tattooed
On her left breast,
And the nun looking up, and the sparrow
Above that:

When the winter is in the finest nudity,
She steals Robert Frost,
And breastfeeds him in the empty hutch
Where she choreographed the rabbits all summer;

All this afternoon I used to think
She could be my wife, if I brought her to church,
Where I watched her in the dim suicide pictures
In the surf,

But it turns out that she laid her wrists
Across the earth like a handcuffed angel off to Disney World, and French Guiana, and let the machetes
Clear the deadfall of her junior year,

She wanted to save the earth, but the doctors
And their priest kept her medicated, and in the Nor'easter
She took off her blouse and came on to Dorothy,
Until they were both picked clean and carried off to The South of France.

Now that ends the story. Watch me dance.

Robert Rorabeck

Watching Midnight Express After John Hurt's Death

This the residential neighborhood
I think you remember-
You grew up here, child of woman and of man-
But while you have slept, the nocturnal animals are reclaiming their playgrounds-
Where you used to sleep, growing up as a boy,
was once their cannibalistic fairgrounds-
Terrapins and jaguars, spotted, lethargically, hunting for orchids and hares as in the fields converted shadows made love to your cousins:

The roses you once tried to give to her are buried here-
the skeletons made to rest here are re animated during the work week while your mother and father have driven away to their reconciled plots:

And I am left at home watching movies that I was once too immature for-
Watching Midnight Express after John Hurt's death-
The storylines of puppets you used to master for me while I slept,

And the airplane spread their wings.
They are leaping to kiss the volcanoes, as the girls that work on them have learned to fly to and from their places of work and of lovers:

In fact, all of the actors in the show are changing forms- women fleeing the staged shadows of feral kings, recruiting the metamorphosis of wild birds that struggle to rise from the stony pits, the haunted suburbia of our once shared childhoods-

Now these graveyards.

Robert Rorabeck

Water Lilly

Words in dying error:
Kiss the wrong girl,
Or don't kiss at all:

A ghazal of love stuttered to
A stork,
She is up to her knees in things I didn't know,
But I'd like to watch the magic beans
Curl up her legs,
And sit on her patched knee
While she eats her jelly sandwich

Her bum in the mud

In the croaking glades;
The reptilian harem,
And she has a book out, a nursery rhyme,
A nip of gin for her bib,
She rides cross-legged on the back of the racing snail
Who smells like an apple barrel,
Having a staring contest with the tortoise.

The weathervanes are mangled in the undergrowth,
And her nails are black from diggings:
She whispered something to the thorny fish,
And he's gone off to sleep in the thighs of slower currents,

I've tried to find her nudged in the watery bramble:
Sometimes she doesn't wake up for days;
The sun glazes her like a student's vase,
As she sleeps curled up in a black tire of a plane crash,

But she doesn't remember
I went to her high school where the Turtles crawled up to the moon and spawned tar diamonds
That fell to the earth again like toppled coal into the waves;
When she made her escape,
From canal to river to estuary and then everglade;

She was a frantic beauty with wild complexes;
I'd wait for hours just to see her swim in inky puddles
On suburban roads after the thunderheads'
Embarrassing display;
But my kiss glanced off her unconcerned shoulder,
And fell to someone different,
After she touched purple water and did not surface.

Robert Rorabeck

Waterfall Playing Over Purple Flowers

There was a waterfall
Playing over purple flowers—drinking them,
Feeding them the apiary of Sunlight,
Down from where they could not grow,
Distilling angels:
It was not the easiest thing to describe to Anyone
Even though a thousand angels walked Down her path after midnight—
After the cars had parked
And the dogs had run: Now, those who could Be kissing were kissing,
But a million more just so happened to
Be lost in their echoes—
Those who turned around were turned
To salt and so could not run—
They remained in the valley forever,
Topiary of salt-lick with Salt mine hearts—the dear came and kissed
Them down to their knees:
It was kissing time down in the valley—
And everyone who possibly could stood
There listening—
After they paid their tickets, as the mountains
Listened to the breeze.

Robert Rorabeck

Watermelon And Fried Chicken

We'll go into the day's lesson as the hummingbirds Drink their fill, just like the cheerleaders from the Water fountains from the blocks of our high school—
The airplanes will leap the everglades
And the echinopsis will bloom in the cypress trees:
A unicorn will lay in a bed that was made by Alligators swearing to the pit of her—
They will tell of her in the books in which they keep for Tomorrow, and swing up to her from her censures—
And the apricots will entwine with the poison ivy—
And the congregation will sing in their pitiless senses of His infinite glory—my mother kneeling in the Carport—my father coming home with armpits filled
With watermelon and fried chicken.

Robert Rorabeck

Waves

I could love the waves
As they came upon me with great unconsciousness,
Love the salt of a tremulous embrace,
And the mimesis they return to the sun
As he goes down on them,
The throbbing pain of her blood in the wound,
The magician's rabbit I palpate on the floating log,
Hyperventilating while homeless men
Fish, and midwives hike up their skirts
And move into her to give unquestionable deliveries:
But if I answered her solicitations, I could not Return to the dry home where my parents
Eyes dwell on me, where they suppose I am
Brushing my hair in the mirror,
But forever would I know and see her in those Multitudes, how she becomes even now when I
Have yet to draw the shades and let her in,
For she is too ready to proceed, and this is how It is, most akin to blood;
Thus I must concede, and let this be a testimony,
For she has made a carriage of this house,
Taking it deeper in, and from every window
The light refracts like splinters, and her whispers
Are swimming from the throat I wish
To enter in with my entire body.

Robert Rorabeck

Waving Goodbye

Golden-
Curfews of all
The things you said,
As you
Get ready for Business,
And comb your Hair for Bed
As the rockets are Mouthing off
To the Sky;
The sun a
Sunflower in
Her warm
Bed,
And we Are all
Waving
Goodbye.

Robert Rorabeck

We Commence

Sometimes scars mean I love you,
And the glittering webs the rain makes on school
Bus windows coming home;
Slowly bending down,
It feels like a thousand years ago,
Even when the sun comes out and rustles through
The grasses,
Huffing on each green blade until its cloudy with light-
I half expect it to find something,
And you are there, as you are in all of it,
Even though I think that this was even long before
I met you;
And you were in the canal, and in the red beads of The Florida Holly,
In the sweaty bulbous citrus like blushing lures on Each stem.
I used to wake up to your humid translucence,
And tried to put you on over my youthful loneliness's;
And when you did come, what an example of life:
You bloomed once in my classroom,
Auburn and floating and then you were gone,
A priceless furniture of teak,
Tidal and retreated.
Paradoxically, I saw you everywhere and used to skip Class and smoke in the eastern waves just to get close to
You. Then, as if in a dream, you kissed my neck when I
Was a man and then walked away and folded yourself against Your true love, or whoever he is; and I was left with So many splintering echoes of your fledged embraces.
Now I think of moving next to you,
Of buying a home which will inspire you to think of me
Again, to reawaken you to my slow ochre glances,
The drift wood of my long distance romance,
And the vigilant terrapin who I keep as a pet watching you,
To the weathers I move in over you;
And even if it is all too late, and this is my grave I am dressing
Into, I will still come, because it is the nature of every man
To be flawed and needy,
To lay his scars bare before your sightless reflection,

To watch your beauty play out across the awake and dreaming
Heavens,
And to know you by the early mourning silences,
Before the cars, and restaurants, and sports of the luckier men
Rejuvenate to teem over you with all their frustrating
Distractions,
The time I yet have before you turn your gaze upon me
And we commence,
Breathlessly and mute, drowning by the dusk of the road,
Rolling where all the grasses are mowed and drowsily affluent:
This settled, we'll nod and sweat
And drink whatever liquor will quiet the uncertainty of your
Lips,
And turn our mutual gazes to that steadfast terrapin,
My friend eating the proverbial orchid, and the dogs,
And I will try to explain what he means to us.

Robert Rorabeck

We No Longer Go To School Together

Cars can-up the road,
And business is good,
And mail boxes are choking:
Girls in the shortest skirts you've ever seen are Walking their dogs,
Leading them into the open throats of crepuscule,
Leading them to the good lakes of sad colors.
Then the world is only blue and has an easier alphabet:
You could spell it once or twice with your first words.
In this place there are only so many houses in the world,
And they turn all the same way
In their zoetrope neighborhood. Coyotes chase them innocuously,
And I fall asleep open mouthed
While dragon flies capitulate around the ringing light
Of the foyer's centerpiece;
And all the dinner guests have died, but they have not Walked away,
Because death is talking a piece;
His scythe like a shepherd's cane resting over beside The wheat.
And it is warm and cool outside across the yards of modest
Sepia that don't even try to grow but an inch a year;
And I sat out there amidst the faux roman Pillars and wrote this you would love me many latening
Evening ago;
And the world was so polite even the insects didn't bother me;
But I confused politeness with apathy,
Because I can no longer climb those mountains between us.
I am blinded by my loneliness, you have taken his name,
And we no longer go to school together.

Robert Rorabeck

We Who Are Missing

In the high canyons where
The mad inventors live
Hand in hand with the last of The Cherokee Indians,
The last of the wolves,
And the first of the heathens,
I go to give offerings
Of leprosy to the hungry axe:
A hand a foot,
A lip a tooth:
We can use these to buy things,
The parts of the body that by themselves
Are useless,
That, alone, you would not have:
So, I barter them for beaver pelts
And sacks of grain,
And rice,
And a daughter none others wanted
Because she only has one eye,
But with it, on the shadowed prairie
Where I am ever still Moving away from you, and the Bedroom in which you would not have My things,
I show my daughter the moon's
Sallow reflection on the flaxen seas,
And the promise of mountains
To the west
Where the rainstorms stampede down,
The plentiful timber and game,
With which we who are missing
Can build an acceptable home.

Robert Rorabeck

Wealthy And Amused

Nothing can be wounded eternally-
Eventually, left out in the cold it dies:
It dies and sinks quite peacefully into the sea;
It grows sedentary, unseemly irate- it takes up law,
And fails to appreciate the high stamens of Stewardess' flirtations on the busy crafts of their show;
But I keep on doing this as my some sort of Dysfunctioning reveille:
I salute all my pitiful paper crafts to the fashion of Your warm body pressed against his,
Drinking rummy bouquets- I suppose he has never Done this for you,
Trying to drink your contractual immortality,
Or driven alone and screamed halfway across the mortality
Of our patriotisms:
And I am a wreck, but looking down the coral is so beautiful
It is not a pain to die:
And I will die for you- Bare the brunt of his spume,
And all that reckless wealth busily wasted to persuade your Heliotropic demons- I still love you underneath the effluvious
Buses,
And I have summated mountains for you, and realized the Bastardization of his angels- and grown more distant and more
Scarred for you:
And I have grown to appreciate lightning storms and pearl handled
Firearms- tucked into the double entendre of your silk purse;
And I would dam the Atlantic for you,
Or flood the Pacific across our manifest destiny, and put two Mammals of each sex behind each kiss pressed into your adultery,
So stop selling what you consider news,
And look to me,
I who am wealthy and amused.

Robert Rorabeck

Wedding At My Funeral

The time has not come before
And this is new.
The light is opening for the day
An ingénue displaying her bosom
To man's face-
I remember when
I was young in following her.
Her tassels feeling through the trees
And drinking roots,
She laughed even while
Alone;
Giggling,
She rode her bicycle across campus.
I staid up all night and prayed for her.
When tired, she slept
In the shade of a house-
Eyes half closed. I came to her,
She yawned and turned me away.
She said she loved me
Only when she was drunk,
And it was yet that time-
So long ago, yesterday...
Then early this morning she came to me
And offered me the quaff
Of lips.
Dripping nectar on the limbs,
She said, "Never before now, old man,"
As they lowered me in the grave,
Her light budded
A valleyide of rubrum,
A wedding at my funeral.

Robert Rorabeck

Wedding Of Midnight

They held all of their flowers in their
Make-believe wedding of midnight,
But it was just a funeral,
Like looking at my face before the Graveyard:
What could be more beautiful, Except
For a movie theatre after closing time—
And all of the amusements that Ate themselves—
So, I suppose I can all her, if I knew
A few more words,
And the bard kept wondering while
The griot ate the stars:
But we've already taken a few too
Many steps,
Up the contraptions of the marionettes—
And I suppose that we've come too far
To figure out what it really takes to Save ourselves, with the lights coming
Home over the waves—
None of this will sell, and all is for nothing,
But at least we can pretend to remember
That there is no one else to save.

Robert Rorabeck

Weeds

Hope in abandoned fields
Fertilize our retreat:
She is sitting on a couch in
Her living room,
Using his tongue as a
Slippery treat:
The waves go on and on,
Saying everything that is Never heard,
The greatest poets trapped in
Her panting, dying by the hour.
If she steps outside
To see him out,
She might trip over us,
She might injure herself
On our inebriated poses
Passed out,
Hoping to be picked up as strays.
Left on her windowsill,
We could bloom every hour
As she slips out of her bra
For afternoons and days,
But it is not within her
Line of sight,
The ones she never sees,
So we stay right just where we are,
And learn to grow up with the weeds.

Robert Rorabeck

Weeping All The Way Down

Bodies become impaired at sunset, Sharon,
Or they fall in love, as you spend all day long in A cradle of yellow abyss:
Rams drink the ribbons that curl down through the crust
Like cracks in porcelain dolls,
And when I think about you, I wonder if either of your Grandmothers are still living,
And how near they are to you; and yet I know that you
Still must be a girl
Who loves her car, but who would also love flowers
Once in awhile: flowers, flowers I can give to you and Songs,
But I am mute of camaraderie, only because I am strange,
And I do my best romances from the celibacy of light
Towers where I always keep out for you
And smell you as the orange groves are awakened,
You taking your daughter through the rain marching up the Hill with the other tourists, and yet apart:
And I drink to you alone tonight, Sharon, even if it is because You are the only girl it is safe to drink to;
And I hope that is enough: and I think of your grandmother;
And the pets you have lost, and the places you used to live
I can only imagine, or the things that are even more precious
To you while you attend to your shop
And I try to capture you there in the still-life of a make-believe
Church while the mountains are weeping all the way down
To the coffins, but at least they are taking their time about it.

Robert Rorabeck

Weeping And Making Love

By strange visions I strike out, the lion defeated
And his pride taken over by strong drink:
I work all day and am harassed by knights whose skeletons can Be seen through their suits:
We hustle the cadavers of landscaping straight beside the traffic,
And sometimes when the day is failing you can see the moon:
And Alma comes like a republic; and my words for her are Stuck on the roof of my mouth, but they are plenty;
And Alma thinks my house is beautiful: and it is also Alma's
House, if my dreams are as real as Disney World:
And the ocean moves, oh doesn't it, just as beautiful as a prom queen;
And just as apathetic for me; and right now I can hear my beautiful mother Counting the beautiful money, but very soon I won't have to hear it at All:
I will have my own rooms, and get my five hundred a week and be happier
For it,
And if a true woman doesn't move in with me posthaste, I have other women
To choose from, whose kites are tattooed on their person; and their souls
Are so good that they can love any man, and I have felt them coming Towards me for so long,
These beautiful women who are stowaways on the ships of this earth;
And the graveyards are populated by their silent mothers,
And we go to visit them with these flowers, weeping and making love.

Robert Rorabeck

Weeping Naked With My Unfortunate Eyes

There is a transom in her eyes
They see at more degrees than an alligator
Who saw me leaving school
Before denouement;
And I have return to her many times,
Underneath the penumbra of the moony skies;
And I have returned to her and drunken alone,
Until my rucksacks were empty of My father's fireworks,
And I was done with my soda,
And with my jerks;
So I imagined her there above the busty head
Of a gray wolverine,
Shooting like streamers of pure crinoline:
She had her busts turned into twin engines juggling
Gas,
And Jack was planting his beanstalk under her
Belly:
She was almost waiting for him,
With that promiscuous glint in her eye,
Her black fields almost green, while I knew
I could never really be entirely enough for her,
Because she had so many stewardesses serving drinks
Between the wingspan of her opulent thighs:
She had so many things changed inside of her,
That she was never more perfectly in disguise,
While I looked forever up at her,
Weeping naked with my unfortunate eyes.

Robert Rorabeck

Weeping To Be Inside

Failed into flames, lapsed into tortoises,
Just trying the words to sing-
The busy throats, the ways on home: envisioned by Words unremembered,
The laughing games of homeless homes,
The busy bodies of boneless bones- the cracks in the basalt
That steams from the stones,
And girls lying there, virgins to the rectitudes, suppliant
Transoms of their mother's wombs:
Lying there like the deep purpled throats of some flowers,
And never singing:
But waiting with busied eyes just as if at a baseball game,
With the weathers coming in with hopes a wild:
These gifts of lonesome visions,
Sand in their eyes, bosoms waxy- and the evils grinning,
Looming atop their salient dishes,
Packages employing limbs and little carnal dishes,
Weeping, weeping to be inside.

Robert Rorabeck

Welcome To Early Morning Preschool

I am a fan of dying, of never learning French.
I plan on never leaving the cafeteria. I have eaten my gelatin
But I am so embarrassed- I started out fine,
The way you see things relaxing in runny amber;
Oh, in the balmy reasons in squinting hijinx farting
Quite happily under the swings-
I said my things to the escargot of sweet little girl's ears,
Curling, curling like fun slides;
And my mother would hold my hand without reason,
And I'd make up excuses for stealing things from my peers;
I'd stand there for some time supposing about the tin
Horns and copperheads at the pet cemetery,
While the buses encircled me like rattling cartoons-
Back at home, sweet death, grandmothers and goldfish,
An impure ghost in the corner behind the Christmas tree,
Erin Adamson- I'd play with my sisters; I'd kidnap them for a Swell, and he'd pay me in penny candy,
But I was just doing my thing- I don't imagine there is anything
More heinous than the misspelling of my anonymous crimes.
Conquistadors saluting consumptive mermaids in the sea
Under the clacking overpass with green copper cannons.
Tourists in restaurants and hotels like hypnotized chickens-
Let us sell them things to make up for what we've done,
And at night, down on the scabrous knee, implore god for his Fealty, and his recommendations for how to make up
For what we've done.

Robert Rorabeck

Well Accustomed To Alma's Blaze

Waiting until morning for my fair, hoping that
She keeps her promises
And is neither fearful of her uncle or the wolf,
For she has come far across all of Mexico
And found me here,
Like a wound waiting to be closed, and she has:
For the moment,
Even while all of the dangerous amusements are being Taken down:
Her lips brush across me, and we go to town:
Like the very wave that forever combs,
Like a woman who transforms my room into the grotto
Of a Ferris Wheel;
And everything that just has to metamorphosis and move
On,
Instead waits and looks into the charisma of her eyes;
Understanding that she can be the hero for all of them,
They keep their skins
And thus become well accustomed to Alma's blaze.

Robert Rorabeck

Well Before She Could Even Say

Days going away, growing up like ladders pressed like Clinging girlfriends through a Faberge orchard of fireman lovers;
And we have so much fun, that the blonds can't help but running
To us and collecting us from where we've Fallen off the stage; and they are the apples of our eye,
While their father's quit the Navy and disappear into otherworldly
Families;
And she shakes her tears in the bedroom, like a sky taking things
Off:
She becomes a child of rolling milk, the tears of a silver body
Raining in the soft basins framed with human bone:
To make love to such a doll, such a philologist, who cleans up afterwards
In so many languages;
And the sun over brand new cadavers; and we hold hands in the valley,
The good boys in California making good movies;
And me like a smiling crease in her brightness, finally rewarded for Learning all about her and using it to my advantage well before she Could even say who I was.

Robert Rorabeck

Well Of Holes

A sea of trees brimming at the edge:
A well of holes of words pretending to fill a soul—
And Jack-O-Lanterns on a porch,
And pornography across the canal—and many, many More things that I can neither tell nor
Spell,
But I see someone else's paper airplane up in your Tree, as the cicadas are digging their week long lives
Up into the graveyards of a harmless suburbia—
As little boys steal fireworks underneath the housewives'
Untrained eye,
And doppelganger shadows move from the necks
Of their mailboxes—
Sometimes there is someone home,
And sometimes I have wet dreams of your sister
Who I never think about anymore.

Robert Rorabeck

Well Of Moonlight

This moon,
This moon,
This moon is not real:
There is another moon up
On a hill,
And my that moonlight
I draw water from the well.

Now my sister is getting married,
While I am waiting,
Waiting,
Wondering if I should stand sometime
Beside her stone
Beneath the well;
In autumn, or in summer,
I cannot tell.

My scars are salmon,
Salmon underneath the stars
And the pallid aspens, like sisters
All up and down the hill,
They stand so very, very still
Just down the draw
Where the moon spills its light
Like water down into the well;

And onto the stone
Where beneath my sister lies yet married,
So very, very, very still.

Robert Rorabeck

Well Suited By The Encroaching Distance

Heavenly clichés,
Masturbate to your hump
Until the night is a cured nirvana,
And I don't care where you are:
I'm just doing this out of reflex,
Recognizing the chief convictions of mountain
Ranges in their great loneliness;
And high up in the cold there lives
A celibate god,
Recording the world, watching out
For wildfires,
Burs at his hips, he grows and seems to Call me from upstairs,
Handing out the cads to the middle-class
Until I remember the golf-date out in the rain,
And lose my virginity near beside the Alligators and their primordial circumstance;
When it is all over,
I forget to apologize, and handed over her
Stuff so she could ride away on her bicycle
And turn back in to the mysteries of tame households;
And I could get back by four am,
To lose myself in a sooty dictionary, like Cinderella Looking away into telescopes while
She got married and metamorphosed into something Else, though very similar to a housewife,
As he worked her through the threshold,
And I sowed my old friends awake from the dragons
Fangs, the sea growing in between us like a violent
Collage until it was useless except to drink,
For we were both well suited by the encroaching distance.

Robert Rorabeck

Wellington

I fall asleep in the middle of the day,
Because of the wounds you gave me, the wounds
Which have come naturally, unattended;
I give myself newer chances at metamorphosis,
As if I could awake myself opportunely,
Become your noontime bachelor, put on toothy grins;
I lay down across an entire suburbia, melancholic
And yawning who doesn't remember me,
Who in kind go out into their romantic yards and fall asleep
In the landscaping of quarter-acre lots, like
Toy countries of kind old men:
I see you swimming around the single cypress in the Daubing humidity- Wasps clean your mouth humming,
And birth their young underneath your bawdy eyes,
I try to write down what I see, to say mutely
To nobody, or a stewardess busy on an airplane
Pretending to show an interest, I try to become beautiful
For her, and the entire mess that spilled out after graduating,
Where they fly now from home to home, kissing lips
I've never heard speak, while my mind wanders the red Clay of the baseball diamond behind the high school in A merd-brown fog, and girls no longer young think
They hear the quobbling of basketballs in the picturesque
Moats of light, romantically, from the fairy-tale
Courtyards where used to be their game.

Robert Rorabeck

Well-Sated Menagerie

I take refuge in fathomless scars-
With my dogs, or alone, I sleep in cars,
Or bare-naked in the upper Peninsulas of Michigan,
Or I hide out in the corner of English class
And wait for the band to march me out to lunch,
And the courtyard is bricked with red clay and the bones
Of ancient baseball players. Where I call her from this Tomb, she doesn't answer; I drive along her window and Watch her open mouthed, sharing her secrets with an Innocent boy. There is no joy, but it rains, and the Streets are pensive, and well matured; Inside their church,
The housewives are fully breasted and putting on reckless Plays, trying on lingerie. Some times they become so light hearted,
They float up into the rafters. Their lipstick stains the spotlights,
And the waves echo repeatedly like guns going off like footsteps
Running from a suicide down a hallway; but she isn't there
Anymore, and the center is hollow and put on, the hall is empty and there
Is no one there to bear my cup, blond-headed, eyes like hungry
Song-birds. I be a champion alone. I slay a dragon one handed,
But go without reward. She is in Colorado selling wine, perchance
By the cleverly laconic bone structure which got her so many boyfriends,
And eventually a husband who drapes across her warmly when it
Snows. And the tourists move around her, like socialites in a maze, Entranced by her addictive perfections, seeing what I used to see,
Such a magnificent playground full of clever arcs. Now I cannot speak
The innocent questions I used to ask telepathically to her like this Across the classroom, foraging; but from the drifting continents,
I try to do the same; she brings the glass to her lips, and drinks homeopathically; there is time proceeding in everything, marching like a Bollero, like a canal I have dredged up to my doorstep the way a little boy
Plays in the sand, imploring the waves to turn into faithful pets, in a Well-sated menagerie following his footsteps all the way home.

Robert Rorabeck

Weren'T You Already A Lion Yourself

Zoos and zoos of lions open mouthed
And remote control boats
And tiny roads for entire families to circulate,
And plastic mermaids:
I once lived here and listened to the hyenas,
But never got their jokes;
And she lives further south, doesn't she in her
New house,
And broken in husband,
And everyone has a new house,
And every yard as at least one windmill that I Must battle,
And I love you,
But I got the sh%t beaten out of me by a punchy
Butterfly,
But I still love you: I would feed you every ounce
Of my body:
My teeth would make a good luck charm for Your child,
After she was fat and burping from the wild scuppernongs,
And don't you understand,
I am not real,
And I missed the bus,
And I am going the other way,
And the lions are so hungry and yet so sleepy,
And there are battle boats and bags of peanuts for you
Or your loved one
Or the elephants
And the unicorn,
And you can go all the way across the canal,
But I doubt you even live here anymore,
But if you did it would be so beautiful,
And we could skip school
And feed the lions if
You weren't already a lion yourself,
Of course.

Robert Rorabeck

West Again

How does it happen? This swift speculation, come to me.
Like mercury, I draw you. Is it not in my blood;
Is the harpsichord not being played down against the river,
For the new constructions: And my wife? No, don't tell me
Where she has gone, or where the grounds fold upward wanting Storm. Eventually they go so far north they get what they deserve:
They cannot breathe, and there is the moon she wants; she Stands on her tiptoes and offers up a muddled breast. I say,
I have seen it many times where she hopes to enfold beyond the Tattering of this frontier. At her feet there is no longer prairie,
Nor miner's print, no substance empirical to man: She wishes
To escape? Hah, for I tell you, my interest, she is a dance-hall girl
Of the finest sort, and I've swiftly taken her from closer to the Pacific, and dropped her many paces east, until it is mostly west again where there is yet paint on the buildings;
And the sawing continues from breakfast to dinner, the hard-heads patter the nails by the seconds, with preachers uncorked; And it has confounded her, and that is all. She has yet to make money,
But there will be time, and good earnings, and I expect she will settle Still and come back down and do those things finely shown up on The stage we build for her, as we expect her to, those things that once Settled she knows how to perform, and I have seen her do many Times before, over many hills:
She will perform her stuff: That is why I married her, and because they call her Carmine Ridiculous;
It is rumored she killed her father, and that is her picture on the poster hung beside the door: Its ten cents to see her, but if you wait until tomorrow
I will only charge you five. If you are a good climber,
I wont have any choice to but let you get a good look at her tonight
For free. Either way,
She will make us rich, once she comes down, for everything must settle
Into its place, even like the gold they are taking out of the riverbed.

Robert Rorabeck

Wet And Yielding Clay

If my body warms in the scars of my pools,
It means I am going there-
Barefoot, without cars:
Going to the underbellies of my childhood, going to see
Blonde hair,
Where I keep my stolen bicycles above the refrigerator,
Where my mother is young and plays like supple instrument
Behind the beaded curtains of my father's hands;
Going to go where I've never yet been up a mountain
Except for straddled to my father's back:
Look here, America is younger, and all of my classmates
And peers are younger and not yet ready to accumulate
Into a high school which will affect me
Intrinsically: they have not yet seen the beautiful herons mugging
Above the sleeping buses that I will see:
And I will see Sharon putting her hands on the field,
Her eyes so cruel; and it will yield to her- and I will yield
Until she peels and zooms away;
And I am going where I have yet to be Sharon's wet, and yielding
Clay.

Robert Rorabeck

Wet Dream Of A Well Crafted Boy

Now through the arrhythmias in the screen doors of Common hotels,
I can hear the traffic dismissingly burning their taillights
Like the devil's lanterns, like the red tide of her
Sea life,
In the wishy-washy gardens of open keyholes where the little Fruits slither,
Where the eyes of man and ambiguous baseball players
Peep
When she is raining naked on the handball courts, body raised
Like a thug peeling into a migration stuck like wet paper
To the lip of a wet dream of a well crafted boy in A private school.

Robert Rorabeck

Wh Auden's Ode To Lord Byron's Ode To Bukowski

Fine liquors are not to be drunk lightly.

They are, in fact, to be drunk day and nightly.

Robert Rorabeck

What All Of The Kings Have Made Her Do

My mother doesn't play baseball:
She does the laundry—her eyes follow all of the heavens
The trails my father left across the Rebar and sycophantic toads to go picking with
The rest of the knights in the orchards,
Having taken with him the last of our dromedaries,
But that is not why my mother weeps or doesn't Wear any shoes:
The open extension cord has bitten her naked ankle
So many times it looks like a birth mark
And it doesn't care—the heavens send down tiny
Sparks that pirouette like little Chinese houses
For new years—and the iguanas roll and splay pot bellied
In the rock garden, nostrils flaring from
The perfumes of the night blooming jasmine:
Why she is desperate next to the blue Cadillac with electric
Doors is because she is waiting for it to rain
And for a young boy, maybe her son, to climb down
From the cross and lay like all of the weeping holidays—
Giving back to her what the thieves have stolen,
And what all of the kings have made her do.

Robert Rorabeck

What Colors Of The Flowers

Fireworks which used to be everywhere in My soul, sold out—
Burning into whatever color it was meant to be Used to deceive the sky—
What colors of the flowers which were Meant to be underneath of her,
I don't know—
The pathways of delusions confuse the knights
Underneath the windowsills of
The windmills—
Until it feels all right, that she ever had to breathe,
That we collected ourselves and found
Out that we were alright even Though we both lived in very different Cities—
And the schoolyards confounded us—
And yet they grew wide in their illusions,
And in the middle of the imaginary days, the rabbits
Grew to the proportions of rhinoceroses
And disparaged into and outside of Holes, spilling candies, ripping clothes—
And remembering that it was still alright to Hold out and breathe, as
The graveyards waited and the heavens sneezed.

Robert Rorabeck

What Do I Have Left To Prove

All my muses cut from high school,
And now my body lags from the breathless
Irrigation cured from
The sandbags of the flooded rivers;
Or whatever they have been doing; these rivers
Like candles on your birthday floating into your Lips as you inhale;
And it is a very sad thing, like being a city in the Middle of this country:
You get wonderful thunderstorms and ancient cartoons,
But you really cant feel a thing,
How these oceans are pushing you with your turmoil;
And I guess you've never had to find out,
Or fill the concentrically fluming of the parades I
Keep for you,
As if flames lit for the fuses of your high mass;
If you'd actually wanted a lover, then we'd both have the Very same children
Fast asleep under the over pass;
But you don't actually love those things you can use;
And yet you still are my awful, awful, venal muse; so what Do I have left to prove.

Robert Rorabeck

What Else Can You Expect Of Me

The day is over and Alma is lost to me again;
It rained today- I thought of killing myself,
Because my house has termites, but even without a
House I could vagabond,
Underneath the turtledoves resting in the armpits
Of the sweet statuaries;
But rather I wanted to kill myself because Alma said
That she couldn't love me
While I looked over at her baseball brown skin in her
Car,
And I touched her the way a feather touches its wing,
And the cat had seven kittens under the brown-
Red fuselage of the trailer
While you were away in Ocala, Alma- and I thought I would kill myself because I asked you if You loved him, and you said why did I think you were
With him,
And that you could not love me, or leave your family;
But instead I am drinking Alma, after the rains have left
The sky and she has nothing to do:
It is just the same as me, Alma- alone as a shell flipped over
Beside the intercourses of the road- I am drinking,
Drinking, because what else can you expect of me.

Robert Rorabeck

What Else I Have To Say

Collecting yourself to the shadows of was—
Now I sing songs and dance for just because—
While my pregnant wife sleeps in an
Empty doll house lost at sea—
I dream of you while you dream of me,
And the shadows grow across the continents
That spill over the prairies and down the hills:
Jack and Jill making their make believe love,
Playing doctor and drinking
Orange juice in the shade—
Soon they will be returning home by going
The other way—
As the light vanishes over the homesteads
Beside where the arrowheads are buried—
I haven't forgotten you,
But now I am married—
As my father sells Christmas trees across the Growing sand—
And the Christians pray to a religion they cannot Understand—
Made up to remember the loves our unconsciousness
Held so dear—
The bottle rockets shoot across the final year:
The astronauts return home,
This is their space—
If they didn't truly love you,
At least they won the race—
As Disney World fell into the light of the stars—
And you lost your consciousness singing at bars—
The remedy was a cold acumen
They kept using to buy new customers—
As she took off her clothes, her jewelry, and her negligee—
And reclined for nobody,
Because across her bedroom the space was infinite—
She lost herself and she was negligent
But beautiful in a most uncertain way—
Maybe I am done singing—at least
I do not know what else I have left to say.

What Escapes The Land Of Silence And Darkness

No one answers these pitiful queries:
In time I will shed and not re-grow;
The yard stumbles lost in the season,
A paramour for grandmothers,
I bleed ketchup and stolen dimes.
The dog farts smelling like tiny repetitions
Or seizures in the earth;
It rains the paper snowflakes which I've Cut, and I'm doing no good-
When you get dumb and you've never Been a soldier, what an allusive trick, and
Your only tattoo is hidden,
And you haven't done any time-
Some old English teacher has accused you of Plagiarism and called you out behind the portable
Which was erected because of the student overflow.
Why, then just look at her and smile,
And say to her, here I am some twelve years later,
As fresh as a spring chicken and churning my butter;
And it may be true that no one gives damned,
And in the morning the rides will be closed anyways,
But the virgin will still be impregnated- then show
Her how many things can grow in the water stained Livelihood of vacillating tide;
And explain to her that life sometimes mussels under The underbellies of commercial airplanes, like
Skipping stones or snowballs;
And you have been to the summit of so many things,
Though little published, it should not matter what Escapes the land of silence and darkness.

Robert Rorabeck

What Happens

This is what happens walking towards the ends
Of those lost paths:
This is in the strange shadows of sharks and the other
Aquatic wildlife
Of the strange shadows of
The displays of again another high school
According to its elements:
This is what happens when you get off track—
And drink too much,
And cannot come home,
But look beautiful with a husband you love
Who is too big for you—
And when you never think of cemeteries
In those coldest of shelves of whatever their estuaries—
And, Oh my god,
I do not have any muses left—
As my first born son changes to his mothers
Last and second breasts—this is how it happens—
This is how it happens, after the sun has already gone down,
And the horny toads have already left town—
This is how it happens with the sun luxuriating into
The decrepit parapets—
Sunlight and moonbeams and anywhere but so far away
From here—

Robert Rorabeck

What Her First Daughter's First Word Must Be

Listening to the bodies partying in the rain
Like the red shoots in the armpits of cypress, there is a
Good chance that I will begin making love again
Just as steadily as two wayward cats in a rainstorm;
And I love thinking like this, my head as numbed as a goldfish
Crossing county lines in a plastic bag,
Homeless from a state fair that has packed its bags and it
Too is moving away;
And here out on the shell rock avenues, I imagine I can perk
My ears and hear her breathing:
She seems like she is coming from a broadcast in Colorado,
And I crane my neck and flutter my lucky gills just to Catch a glimpse of her,
But I am no more lucky than a penny of a wish tossed into A drinking fountain on a lunch break, while she is swimming further
And further up her sweet accoutrements,
Forgetting all of the superfluous wishes of her youth, and now
Only dreaming about what her first daughter's first word must be.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Already Told You

Under the influences of my class,
I am getting sedentary;
I don't go out and shop for shells,
I don't wear my jean-jacket,
Or walk my dog beside the red diamond
Underneath the sweaty palmettos-
I no longer jog brown-eyed after Midnight to catch glimpses of sweet little Girls unhinging of their dresses from
The blown-glass boudoirs;
And my memory is fading-
I am no longer the captain of this ship,
My body doing things without me I can't remember,
Kissing only the cadences of early morning or Evening insects who think they are musicians,
Never going near the hideouts or grottos of Old lovers newly christened with the names of Men who remind them of their fathers;
But while I am still somehow in control of
The least of my faculties,
Though torn out and burned and wandering the Yard downward like a fading paper airplane,
Remembering his college years,
The liberal arts football teams who could never score
A goal,
Getting drunk and bowling instead of teaching the Classes he couldn't afford to school anyways,
I should say that I love you,
And given pause, I should say again I love you,
And I am not Herman Melville,
And I am not Ernest Hemmingway,
Nor Mark Twain,
Nor Steinbeck,
But I've ridden my bicycle through your neighborhood
Even while the curtains were closing,
The working middle-class returning to get drunk
And eventually sleep,
And if I cannot remember who I am,
At least I am able to recall what I already told you.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Am Looking For

The day has no attention, nor attributes anything to

It:

The housewives thought that I should begin the day each morning

Starting out filing in the crenellated shadows

Of the sea creatures and mammals

Lost but still hunting beneath my eyes: I think that they Must be starving in the dimples of sweet young glaciers,

Stacked so high upon themselves, it would be dangerous

To really find them;

And they don't seem to want to behave;

And I wish I knew better words for them, this fetishism of My desire they never address in church;

And they have taken down all the spectacular swings to keep

Them out of reach-

There are only black cats in the graveyard, strutting like innocent

Panthers. Maybe that is what they think they are.

Maybe that is what I am looking for.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Could Feel

Words of clues to find beauty,
And grandmother,
So that I become shot full of false arrows.
I bleed ketchup from my armpits
In the cactus and the paper
Snow,
Which is why no one cares,
One car goes by.
My sisters look at me, and the lizards.
My parents make love upstairs,
But I never counted the steps up into Them in the green carpet like
A forest where I have sometimes hidden
Crumb cake and taken
Lukewarm pisses when I felt the urge;
And airplanes shot down from there,
Down from the Aristotelian spheres of
The ceiling fans,
And looking back at it all I might think
That I was beautiful in my Little theatre,
Except that you were never there to see me,
You better airplanes touching down in the Muck bottom fields across the canal.
And who were you kissing in the sunken
Shadows of baseball fields,
What witchcraft were you bending like a golden
Bough,
With your tongue a simple minded flagella
Just feeling up what it could feel.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Had Left To Sell

I do not deserve to live here,
Happening like the mishap of Conquistadors
Through the despotic dunes,
Sweating it out inches from the pornographies
Of the blue saber tooth,
Each of their fat bellies swinging impotent,
Pruning swords,
So chock full of long shafted arrows that they Will soon be shiskabobs;
And there will be hurricanes and taboo,
And Narvaez will eat all of his horses somewhere
Off the Gulf all the way west
Of Tallahassee,
And the rest of them will only survive through good Wholesome cannibalism,
Which will bring us straight up to the new and Holy Séances of your eyes:
I worked and strutted Christmas trees all day long,
And then a drank a beer and tried to write this Think,
While you just sold me milk and pastries and Then drove away,
Like Erin did so many years ago after she had eaten
All of my flowers:
She went straight back in, legs and all into her shell
Hole,
Saying as she did so and all the way,
That she loved me, that she loved me,
And that she would be around later and maybe buy
What I had left to sell.... Maybe.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Had To Say

After lunch, I crawled underneath the School bus and cried into an oil slick,
That I was not an author, and that I had been Accused unfairly of plagiarism.
Out behind the portables which schooled the Overflow, the old spinster of a withered bard,
Scolded me by the wrist, even though I
Told her with my dower eyes that I might explain;
That there certainly was a passage by Don Quixote
I had misquoted, but might find again.
Towering over us, the windmills swam with arms of Propeller blades, and I sweated as she let me go,
Like a fish, and afterwards, then, I took to the Hallways, hoping to be persuaded anew by the auburn Goddess, but when I saw her there, taken breathless,
She only passed me by; and after all these years I
Have not forgotten how she passed me by, or her eyes
Sensed her body through the motes beyond younger men:
And so, inexcusably, I tend to the weeds, and turquoise
Dragonflies nipping at buds, the tenderloin-infant stings.
Like a page turned in an overdue book, I pretend to Brush her thigh, and these are the things I say,
Which I have not stolen, but borrowed the recipes of,
And the spinster in her grammary dusk continues to Parcel on the parts of speech, in such a gloomy way that
The country all recedes around her, as she never heard at all
What I had to say.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Have Left To Say

Collecting yourself to the shadows of was—
Now I sing songs and dance for just because—
While my pregnant wife sleeps in an
Empty doll house lost at sea—
I dream of you while you dream of me,
And the shadows grow across the continents
That spill over the prairies and down the hills:
Jack and Jill making their make believe love,
Playing doctor and drinking
Orange juice in the shade—
Soon they will be returning home by going
The other way—
As the light vanished over the homesteads
Beside where the arrowheads are buried—
I haven't forgotten you,
But now I am married—
As my father sells Christmas trees across the Growing sand—
And the Christians pray to a religion they cannot Understand—
Made up to remember the loves our unconsciousness
Held so dear—
The bottle rockets shoot across the final year:
The astronauts return home,
This is their space—
If they didn't truly love you,
At least they won the race—
As Disney World fell into the light of the stars—
And you lost your consciousness singing at bars—
The remedy was a cold acumen
They kept using to buy new customers—
As she took off her clothes, her jewelry, and her negligee—
And reclined for nobody,
Because across her bedroom the space was infinite—
She lost herself and she was negligent
But beautiful in a most uncertain way—
Maybe I am done singing—at least
I do not know what I have left to say.

What I Mean

All my life in Hell
With a wife I've never Had,
Rolling boulders
Trying to create children out
Of clown fish:
When will I ever wake up,
When will I ever stop being Raymond Carver.
Not tonight.
Tonight I still live
In the same sports
Utility vehicle,
Like a salty dog,
Like a sardine.
My father is a werewolf,
My mother is
A mermaid,
And you are my
Muse
And at least I love you,
Or at least you
Know what I mean.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Mean To Say

If you want to find me,
I'll soon be selling fireworks under
The desert sun,
Even if I am dying, out of water,
The truest of conquistadors,
Coughing up a lung, or with the swine flue-
Unmasked, an immodest superhero-
I'll soon have a little house,
Occupied by a little spouse,
And little children like fairy-tales in the garden-
A car that halfway runs,
A halfway job in the middle of nowhere:
It is a fine story book,
And yet so far away from the stewardesses,
The shopping malls, and the better truth of the Amusement parks which carry the stamp of Your beauty and youth;
But it is better to dream for a little while,
To go out and work and sell what things you
Have to sell,
To survive by not stealing horses or hanging
Yourself,
By masturbating extemporaneously in the restroom
Stalls of wayside markets
And anything at all- unkempt, with distemper,
Or without reason- an experiment towards a new class,
A space shuttle for tourists,
A diminutive font, a little prison, dancing on the head
Of an angelic pin or the fountain of her areola-ed
Nipple-
Just to be alive for this next line,
Naked and beautiful, leaping well-tongued:
This is what I'll do to try out how to distill
My American liquor to pour full mouthed into the next Way station or grotto, the cavernaserai of our youth
Yet unimpeded by the day laborer's pluck from Atop the ladder,
The steady, uncaring traffic of the interstate going by Serenaded by the ululations of commercial reptiles:

Or it never ends, the epitaphs of comely conquistadors
In polished stone,
Cupid's arrow through the pullulating hearts,
Their armor well polished like serenading crustaceans;
Or, if I'm drunk, at least you get what I mean.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Meant By Being Sincere

Let me nuzzle up to your gorgeous golf Courses,
To the bows in your swayed esplanade:
Let me ruin endings and Airplanes for you:
Let me talk straight out; Oh, gosh, I'd like
To say your name,
But who are you listening to now,
The baby tugging your long list of satin
Accomplishments;
I'll just sit here and refrain as one of your hounds.
You help me put down the gun:
And I can pretend for you to be on a ride in the sea,
Each of your sisters nibbling our gunny sides,
My toned biceps scrimshawed with chorus
Lines from Tex-Arkana; say that you remember me
Now, some gumshoe out lost around the Terrible borders of high-school,
And I'll gallop you all the faster to the dinner of Scallops and sweet disaster,
But you must tell me first what it is you really want.
You are so gallant, yourself: I think you must have Chosen your husband with much discretion,
And so you care so very little for this flagrant bouquet of Passion;
But I won't yet be shut: but stamp my fingers softly in Your pink hutches, and use my tongue to get you along
As a crutch: and I'll sail gingerly along the whimsy
Of my hunches,
And bring such pestilent rich flowers to your dimmed window
After brunch, that you will be so well and flustered,
That maybe you'll let me in and on the sheets of rippled
Plate tectonics, back my front up to your haunches,
And whisper your name,
And curl a lock of dampening hair around your ear,
Hoping that by some apple-orchard or at least dinner,
You will remember what
I meant by being sincere.

What I Might

Realizing that I am something else past its Prime,
While you have been enjoying him for time in Memorial;
I get all religious and go into a nose dive,
My pintails fluttering:
I become the midday catastrophe advertised over
Your eyes,
Abounding the slopes underneath the doomful
Mountain,
You look up with the other tourists and agape with Wonder;
And it is something to look out for while it is Happening,
While there is like a brilliant bullet hole through
The chest of skyway,
Creating an easily discernable mote where angels
Shout the reckonings of the depths to their Stalwart captain;
And I am glad that I could be this for them,
Like a bottle rocket shot down past the blue gills in
The canal,
Like a truant falling from his afternoon tree,
Like a catch of twigs breaking against the river that Is tickling your ribs
Making you think to look up and speculate on What I might momentarily be.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Suppose Doesn'T Have To Be Real

Monday before work, and I'm trying to get out
Again to steal some bases:
I think of girls, and mostly I have longings to write
Them better eulogies:
Maybe I have a longing too to kidnap them above
The clouds,
In the breathless spaces where the sororities
Of their cousins move so finely to make most mammals
Feel broken down.
What eerie baptisms to be made of clouds and thoughts,
Bones no more, no more grease or tears,
Uncorked hinges that effervesce and make years of Lost girlfriends meaningless,
The solar shade wimpling through us like cheery flags,
Like those feral pets leaping toward a master's smell,
In another revelry of an esplanade above our walls,
Diademing what I suppose doesn't have to be real.

Robert Rorabeck

What I Wish To Say To Her

Any word can be picked,
If she carries the needed sound, said
With the intonations lilting like a great midway
Of a world's fair:
For one, her hair is streaming deep out in the Flaxen field,
And I know her eyes are casting far across the Furrowed earth, so wizened and unyielding:
Yet the clouds are there curtailing to the wind their Forgetful sorrows- They will decide when to Weep, but for now they are congregating high up
In the hall, and I am in the cemetery trying
To learn to spell:
The grass here is greener than anywhere, and Though the willows weep, I know their roots go
Very deep, and touch the cheeks of young men no Longer here,
And when the centipede comes crawling red and cheeky
Over the basilisk-like masonry, I think of her Far across her field; with feckless tools I wish to Earn her gaze, to draw her element into arcing play,
But she is not there- She is not real,
Though the insects rise up with the unmoved rain,
Like indecisive cannibals off to meandering war:
I'll see her somewhere unexpectedly driving along
My border,
But when she comes she will be moving so assuredly,
As if a front before more sang-froid weather
That I will bight my tongue as she carries across
The sculpture of her body and then gone again,
Like an apparition on an early lake, but, truly,
What more could I have said to her?

Robert Rorabeck

What Is Made

I am a quiet man: These are what I do,
What I say:
The clouds lay across the land.
You drive inside the cars: and I wonder what is Inside you, like what is inside cars:
The dogs are on the patio, any dogs with blue eyes.
The flies are laying low with the blue eyed butterflies.
The carport is a grotto, is a land for saturnine
Tigers;
Your hair is flaxen, yes it glows: one of the lower deities
Always on her toes:
The goldfish blows in the living room. The curtains
Flutter.
Alone in the houses of your sisters. Where, oh where is Your mother:
Everything broken down in a school yard, in a ghost yard
Of chalk games, of outlines of how I laid out for you.
Now who am I to blame? I am just a quiet man
Biding my time while the wolves are in the glades:
They always seem to be grinning amidst the stock of easy
Days,
Leaping inside the beds of your dusky trucks,
Making you say their name: I am just a quiet man, while They always seem to have what is made.

Robert Rorabeck

What Is There But A Greater Morality

Rhododendrons, rhododendrons
In the wheel well of her eyes,
And little garden snakes slightly sleeping- And theme parks
Overcrowded on midsummer Sundays,
But shut down from the rain:
Where I stand shivering with my middle-class
Family, the wife with the temporary newborn
Slipped down to her awesome hip,
The drool and encrusted sour milks.

Still I think I can see her like a glimmer from the east
Over the cobalt blue castles of stucco and chicken wire,
Just on the other side of the failing fireworks,
Over the backyard habitats of crinoline swimming pools,
Like memos scrunched up and set afire when there is sunlight
And beer:

Something bottle green and coming down to the sea,
Where things in love lose their otherwise permanent expressions,
Where there are no librarians,
But the dalliances of shooting stars and leaping airplanes.
She is there; where there are no gates in the waves,
No fees, nor the common definitions given between Two sexes queuing for the obtainment of the usual fair:
Embedded far to the east
Like a fairytale for feral boys and flight attendants,
What is there but a greater morality.

Robert Rorabeck

What It Is

And my heart like a lavish dinner laid bare alongside the mollusks
In the hyperventilating shore;
And it was as if, sitting down, we both shared a heart
And ate popcorn while looking at the most pitiful of animals in the Zoo,
Never minding what the clouds were doing; we were along with
The housewives and their steady stock:
We were underneath the regular gazebo of airplanes, and there
Wasn't any use to looking up:
You wouldn't allow me to ride the merry go round with you,
Alma,
Because it must have reminded you of the hapless freedom which You had when you was single,
But we both got to look at the panther together, which you said
Was your most favorite of those animals;
And we kissed and held each other in so many kinds of ways
Like animals being tamed ourselves,
While the whitish housewives were looking on, but I swore I Never saw them
Because the only thing that I truly remember is kissing your mouth
In that little aquatic hut which held the albino crocodile.
It was the only creature in the world who saw us doing this,
And I am sure he still remembers: perhaps it is all he thinks about These months and some months later while I am in my own
House, and under its old roof as it is raining,
And raining: thinking and thinking of what it is that you must Be thinking.

Robert Rorabeck

What It Is That You Really Have To Say

Abbreviated by a dandelion

And made to laugh at yourself- forgetting where

You misplaced your liquors or how Far you really ran from the wolf you

Really wanted-

And at night like a goldfish won at the fair,

Sleeping with your husband who really isn't there:

Or getting nose bleeds up on the Ferris

Wheel,

Even after it has packed up and moved away-

Now how is that that can really happen,

And what is it that you really have to say.

Robert Rorabeck

What It Is They Truly Want

Her hair wakes up in the second grade and Burns golden.
Until all of the story books are closed and it is time
For napping
And the trials of the thieves and bed wettings:
It is at this time that the overeager buses look in through The monopolies of windows,
Spying on their beautiful charges: how like the pilgrims;
Some boys nuzzle up to girls,
Breathing heavy over their shoulders,
Like anchors of party favors trying to drag down wishes,
Like cats looking into the gilded cages of Inviolable song birds; yes, realizing what it is they Truly want.

Robert Rorabeck

What It Means To Me To Be In Heaven

I have been to the mailboxes which have had their Seasons:
I have bought tickets to see the opened breasts of witches,
And now I have my own house
And it is really beautiful:
It is the fieldtrip of a dream you have traveled too far away
From to enter,
And the brick layers lay down,
And the clouds grow fat and equally embarrassed,
But the cars don't slow down:
And all of the things I have to say, unequivocally,
I have said:
And the cat has had her kittens, and the rattlesnake her milk
Bottles of venom;
And even right now the professionals are touching down,
And all I have to say for myself is that I am glad that it is not My job when it comes to bury them:
But it is my job to steal fireworks and light them off
While looking Alma in the eyes under or atop of her favorite
Color,
And telling her that this is what it means to me to be in heaven.

Robert Rorabeck

What It Seems To You

Morning trills sound beautiful to the untrained ear:
But maybe there are more than blue eyes opening to this Sound everywhere in the trailer parks
Of the open country:
Girls who have fallen asleep halfway to the door,
Feet entwined with thistles and those corpulent rattlesnakes,
They finally get up off their laurels
And go inside to fix themselves while their delicate
Little ears are ringing from all of these musicals,
If that is what it seems to you.

Robert Rorabeck

What It Was

Fire spume
Across the monuments: and I suppose I am not Alone,
While the bulls fight and the rockets take off:
And your son smiled today at me,
Muse, without discovering who
I was: while I drove by him, and then I continued
Away- while the sky struck up
And floundered underneath the airplanes
Like dancers with nosebleeds
Trying to figure out what it was
That they hadn't seen in the mobile hanging
Over the crib of the day:
But their neighborhoods were finally collected
In a book that was passed around the cathedrals and Lavished and baptized- and it was a long way
That it traveled while the dragons bathed
Through unimaginable waves
Until was finally discovered just how exactly it
Was that they had stolen what it was
That they had meant to say.

Robert Rorabeck

What It Was They Imagined

Words in the graveyards of little pets:
Thoughts of paper thin things that hardly were ever
Awakened enough to breathe,
Like a family of membranous voodoo cast in a game of Bones,
And eerily displayed through the broken reflections of An industrial swimming pool
At a water park of geeks, or in an sluttish aquarium
Where they let the dolphins fornicate
For the commercials of our sweet Disney Worlds;
As the sun receded into commas where it no longer realizes
How attached it is to this World, and the Mexicans fall asleep straight under the Orchards
Where the busses wait for them until morning like good
Lovers, their engines idling,
Making oily breaststrokes, and ever one of them remembering
How the truants once slept under their motor boxes,
And cursed the scarred hopes of Their high school's infatuated love: before they were stolen
Away;
And like simulacrum who can only imagine one or two Things,
Are wondering still, while the terrapin steal from the courtyard,
And go out to fornicate under the saucy eaves
Of saltwater embankments, stolen by egrets or left by Morning before they realize the tarry payoffs
Of what it was they imagined they had to sell.

Robert Rorabeck

What Kind Of Angels There Are

I am right here again- and here is where
I've been found out:
Underneath the practices of tunnels- as if
For a little while in another World holding together its statuary without Anymore of its candles:
Trying to find for awhile and burn for itself:
Otherwise, it has been Dancing,
And trying to find itself own way through The busied
Architectures: as, at last, it seems to come
Out loud and once again
Into the holidays that only my one true muse
Can know-
While, otherwise, it has been to busy trying
To find out once again for itself-
What- exactly what kind of angels there are
In the skies- and, just as likely,
I'm afraid,
What kind of resolution can there possibly Be to this.

Robert Rorabeck

What Kind Of Creature I Might Be

She laid on her back and I touched her shoulders,
Like two rivers bowed in the rocks;
And we had been going somewhere-
I made love to her for several seconds and found out
That was enough,
Caressing her for the rest of our hour together,
She told me that she was from Seville but grew up in New York:
She had the tattoo of the man who'd turned her out on the Nape of her neck.
She told me she fell asleep every night to the disaster
Movie where the buildings are always falling;
And I didn't know what to do with her:
That her eyes were blue, but even they weren't their real color.
Her earrings were even like gang symbols,
And we were lost in the dark night of our love,
And when our hands slipped through the door it was a very Real possibility that other men would be coming in.
I found out it was comforting that she should never have to Be alone,
That she had given her grapes to me with little protest;
And that I could pleasure her without her wondering
What kind of creature I might be.

Robert Rorabeck

What Lavender Is Left

I want to buy a produce market for her shadows,
And leave myself alone for awhile in its kale of make believe;
I want to surrender to the shallows, and bouquets of Rich laments spent away,
Dashed to the fences where the broken legged horses are All given up like an evening of wishes,
Even bled from the supermarkets and Spanish cantinas,
Like whores fed up of love, like pennies spent of presidents-
And what an easy life,
Folding down the corners to this concrete prairie, running off
Into a the statuary of basilisks where all of the used up
Grandmothers are buried
Spent off their days of care giving and kindergarten,
Moving only to take things apart- what lavender is left has fallen
From their berries,
And our worlds are rendered apart.

Robert Rorabeck

What Little I Have Made

Put my rope up into the air
Where your sweet trees are missing;
It will stand and I will go up and
Disappear,
The busses turning around beneath me
In sweet circles,
Caracoling like timid fingers around
The doorbells,
And the locks of her hair.
When she laid down in bed like a serene
Octopus,
I thought I would be her mystic,
But I am not even a writer:
The words on stage doing battle in plywood
Weathers:
I wish all of the green world would push
It down,
And the vermilion cracks to open all around,
The tennis courts of sea,
Because this is all I have repeating in me,
Anonymous bicycles through
The uneasy glades; and I am weeping
Like the green enamel of Envious butterflies, so easily destroying
What little I have made.

Robert Rorabeck

What Makes The Stars

Where will your children sleep—the car going down the Road,
The music making its hum—the day entirely lost—
Strange visions in your head as your take Your young family into
The south—
Their hearts beating around you—fearful of witches
And the illusions in the sky—
As the knights you never see drip with sweat which Feeds the amphibians and the only airplanes burn
In the sky—their fires are what makes the stars,
But they are nothing to make wishes upon.

Robert Rorabeck

What Might Be Its Worth

And it goes away, as paper snowflakes melt for my Grandmother,
As the warmest of fires melt in my stomach-
By morning I will have more scars,
Fabulous and collecting like gold in a forsaken bank-
And otherwise, the flowers will turn towards the sun,
And the traffic will return home,
Fleeing in their numbers, the homeless men staying out
Underneath the moon, fleeing themselves,
The alligators smiling as bright as death, mindless,
And absolutely lucky, not even having to think that this Is their place- the traffic scratching a pitiful fire
On concrete, burying the cenotaphs of Mindless playboys as deep as a fingernail-
The queen of ants waiting in her foot deep abode,
The knight of her paradise coming into her
To re-appropriate the population after Christmas,
The dead buried five feet beneath her,
Curling their toes-
Their hair the garland for super-heroes, as Saturn revolves alongside
The earth, and birds take their baths beneath the trees,
The sun settling against the crowns of houses, counting its change,
Figuring to itself what might be its worth.

Robert Rorabeck

What Must Be Real

Oh,
God of cancer, god of spikenard,
Don't you remember me and all of my drugs? Yes,
Your remember me and me in my speakeasy tumult with all of My thugs, getting dizzy
Getting pretty while the mountains snugged:
While the mountains hugged like long lost sisters and then they Jugged:
Yes, you know, bar-muse, just how exactly that they have jugged,
And the night is pretty; and the night is dizzy;
And maybe the night is even Spanish for rainbow all alongside
The river walks and all of those defeated forts
Now abandoned except for all of those yard lights and all of those Football games: getting things done,
And turning things out: and now look at all of her beautiful children
Spume-ing like exceptional windfalls,
While the airplanes drool downwind turning, and turning,
Trying again to get a scent of what is real, what must be real.

Robert Rorabeck

What Must Bloom On A Cadaver

What strange hope this fettering tool
Which gives me to breathe each morning and at Dusk,
And puts this elongated mammal into its familiar
Occupancies, sets me out like a string of pearls
Tossed in the underhoof sundown;
What I might call form, the reckless spume scattered Around the ankles of a morgue-ish orchard-
These lines I cut less expensive than a thief,
To make what estuary you might find at a fieldtrip of Kindergarten, the shoals for Easter eggs and Spanish
Muses with an entire nursery lining up for refreshment
From your sore and bleeding venders:
I would give this to you in a gunpowder bouquet,
I would orchestrate my pastimes for you into a routine
You could feel, that would blend us into a second class
Immortality of policemen and bar maids,
If you only turned once again from looking at your marriage
Tomb, and see that I have flooded the spaces unrecognized
By your senses with the beasts I have torn right out of My self and captured, and made into a three ring mythology
For you, something once thought feral by now
Hypnotized and wishing to swing before you underneath
The penumbra of the moons tent, wouldn't you realize How long and horribly I have thought of you; and how Even if you fell in love with me, how inexorable all my Spent fluids and ink are- See how I have made myself into An utter failure alone and roomy- Press your erogenous
Vitalities to my fading dimples, and find out what must bloom
On a cadaver.

Robert Rorabeck

What She Might Say

Insouciant feelings for me,
Like she doesn't know what to eat:
She might love me for an hour,
She might love me for a week,

But she always comes back to him,
Like a philanthropic uncle patronizing her Disabilities,
If her leg bleeds in its stigmata of cicadas
And mantis,
He will put the lucky balm on it,
He will,
He will,
And she will say his name like a monosyllabic
Prayer,
And she will heal:

I think about her by the hours spinning in My bed. The earth pirouettes on her axis, like
A morbidly obese savant of space,
And she whispers throughout the shades of light
Flickering like a dragonfly's static prance
Before my eyes- Like water rippling from a
Faucet where her lips overflow,
And places the cleaned dishes on the sunlit windowsill:

Out in the yard, the leaves are Curling in dusk,
And the bicycles lie like unearthed fossils and rusting,
And sometimes for an hour or so,
She sits on the innocuous porch of cinder blocks,
And lets her fingers drag the cigarette to her claret lips;
Sometimes like these, while the earth dances,
And her diffuse eyes wander away,
She gets lost in her thoughts of who I might be,
And if she saw me tomorrow, what she might say....

Robert Rorabeck

What She Said

Drinking out the side of my mouth,
And looking the other way into the mirror,
I try to forget your smile,
Or how you gave your man my poems,
So I learned to never trust a girl
With eyes as lovely and wooded as her
Hair;
And when she says she loves you she Keeps her hair long,
And in the same free flowing manner that Whipped like a wind vane after she leapt all those Hurdles like ditches,
Like canals way back in high school,
How she time traveled over those things;
But, if you saw her,
You would see she has cut it, or permed it,
Or worse,
And she hasn't loved you for ever so long,
And she has made love to men in strange pools,
Both of which you will never see,
And you will never smell her again,
At least the way that she seemed to smell across
The halls of high school,
Something so young and so sweet and so
Surreal,
And yet you believed what she said.

Robert Rorabeck

What She Will Do Tomorrow

I have another word that slips into the covers
Of the fire,
While my glass melts- becomes butterflies, if it
Wants to:
And it was supposed to rain, but it didn't,
So my muse came over and made love to me.
Then I took her to the store and bought a present for Her daughter's birthday,
Until her husband called and stole her away,
Leaving me alone to wonder what she will do tomorrow.

Robert Rorabeck

What The Wind Had Done

The windmills were laughing beside
The ripe old sun.
The windmills were laughing at what
The wind had done.

Robert Rorabeck

What There Is To Buy

The pleasing flesh opening
Like flowers exposed to the school buses-
On a palate of pure white
Marble,
As if on the steps to a museum we took a
Fieldtrip to in kindergarten,
And then just the sunlight kissing through the Effluvious wings of
A dragonfly- until the invisible architect
Returns to the store,
And the ladies dance around them, kissing,
Bemused, their lips turning the color
Of lilacs or for-get-me-knots
Too busy to breathe, wondering what there is to buy.

Robert Rorabeck

What They Are Doing

Scars of Colorado- fabulously indistinguishable mothers
On their second child,
Lactating ice-cream for tourists, while all of this flat lining
Traffic dreams,
And the rabbits hide in the brush- hearts as fabulous as Runaway rubies,
Pounding, pounding: making sounds into the grass,
Drumming for the mounts of ants and other things with so Many legs that they move without even knowing what They are doing.

Robert Rorabeck

What They Are Worth

I told her that if she was my girl,
I'd give her all of the money that we need:
She laughed at me and spit in my face,
While the tide receded:
The airplanes took to the sky too, jingling their Drinks,
And counting sideways the greened corks over the earth,
Dastardly and menacing for the neophyte superheroes
Crammed into the out of work phone booths:
And who knows if they would ever know just Exactly what they are worth.

Robert Rorabeck

What They Have Become

Woebegone, the headless knight flies over his battle:
Like brown stems, he will grow anew:
Dictations of my thoughts for him,
Waving at the panhandle- conquistadors eating their Own horses
And building rafts underneath the thoughtless processions
Of dead windmills-
Sand dunes in her armpits, and panthers in her tongue-
Her eyes look up so brown and long
At this- Siamese tigers leaping through duality of burning forest:
And this is what they have become.
The children play with rattlesnakes- and candles fill up
Their boats,
Rain washes through the empty gullies of forests-
Shed antlers collect like horned drift wood- and the naked kings
Bow and kiss the mud.
Their sisters embrace them earnestly- and this is what they have Become.

Robert Rorabeck

What They Know But Not What Is

I'll dress myself up as a gentleman,
And you a society lady,
And buttoned in our new finery, we'll
Remove ourselves from the shady valley:
No longer vagabonds,
How you got drunk and swam naked
With the regiment,
Firing their cannons and laughing
At you, lascivious;
Now thespians, and you a better wife
With peacock feathers in your hat and tresses,
I will cut my fingers, redmarking each page
Of the sparse script: How we will kiss
Under the spotlight, and drink wine and laugh.
Himalayas will be the backdropp for our Bedroom, resounding in echoing ram horns,
Risking our pride for the pennies of the crowd;
And after our stage is vacated, the real
Show, extemporaneous, and terse,
Rags with switchblades upon the Pulsating throats of piggish judges,
Their governors and their society ladies:
Hiccups of uncorked blood, the actual money,
And savoring the anonymity of a better art;
Letting the bourgeoisie applaud, queuing in a
Snooty cavalcade, not a spot of consumption
On the frilly handkerchiefs waved from open windows:
The opal ululations of egg-white jugulars,
See how they will love us, when we match the Behaviors of their dress, the fineries and Linens of sweaty ennui; Up on the stage before
All of our society, kiss me now,
But hide the knife which does the real work
Behind your dress,
And share in the churlish thrill, of what we have Made ourselves, what they know but not what is.

Robert Rorabeck

What They Really Are

They get fat off of their echoes like Tourists enjoying all of my scars- they just Happen to shed their skin
As they slide in and out of trailer parks, and Ferris Wheels,
And flea markets: with her little children beckoning
Beside her like miniature lighthouses,
How is it that she can ever again think of me:
But I gave her son Michael fireworks
For his last holiday,
And the planes continuing galloping
Across the mowed field where she parks her car:
As she falls asleep beside him again for one
More night, neither one of them interested in Discovering what they really are.

Robert Rorabeck

What They Used To Love

Now all the children are done and grown up,
And they have put away their video games
And high school crushes;
They've staved off getting some dreams all this Long,
But otherwise their houses are beautiful,
Even if they are not their houses:
And they create no more art, if they ever did.
And their swimming pools are beautiful,
And their wives are beautiful.
They have dinner and some kids,
And yet the canal creeps as it always does
The paradox of human dredge where the ancient Gods sleep keeping tabs on all those wishes
The conquistadors superimposed;
So now, reintroduced, the iguanas find new abode
Down the embankments of yesteryears
Slapping kisses with the semitamed otters
Who come over and cluck and crack nuts upon the Open breasts of venal sisters,
While all their grown up boys are away and hauling
Their heavy loads,
Just because they never moved too far down the Ways of what they used to love.

Robert Rorabeck

What They Were Named Anyways

Flowers who close their blue eyes at night,
Stems who quiver like strings and the wind the bow:
I have seen you there sleeping too,
The sky a fire of untouchable passion, and the waves beside
You, like dogs beckoned to your knees:
And right now you are for real in the tall grass, shoeless,
Spectacle of anemic crosses in your ears;
And maybe tiny lights come on above you in the fiberboard,
And the ceiling fans spin like the roulette wheels
Of domesticated hallucinations:
Your new tattoos curl across the overpass of your ankle,
And your husband sleeps beside you too:
The bb gun is propped up in your oldest child's room;
And they all dream of differently similar things than you:
This is your family in the wildfire grotto of your eyes,
Unperceiving, though breathed from your womb;
And I have tried so many times to justify myself to you,
Waking up, yawning and kidnapped with new scars and complexes:
The high rises fall like penitent sinners, and you close your eyes,
Though your eyes were already incredibly far away;
And new men come toward you repeatedly, allowing you to either
Pass or exit;
But your marriage remains in the tall grass that you stepped barefoot
Through, nearing the rattlesnake in its semipermeable cocoon:
I waited for it to strike you, but it only reached out as if it had Lips,
And it kissed the flower on your ankle, and from its unpromised
Poison,
The butterfly resumed while you were sleeping, and the stars twinkled,
And divided like the mitosis of starfish,
Which is what they were named after anyways; and which is what You are.

Robert Rorabeck

What They Were Never Meant To Explore

I have chances to believe
While my dog drinks his fill of water, and my muse
Is in another house,
Around her, her children as if at a fair-
In the theatre of her television, her favorite telenovela;
And her umbilical hernia mending,
So in a week or more we might make love again,
While the airplanes keep on roaring,
Roaring: going straight at it,
Reaching their destinations skipped across the seas-
The mermaids in their grottos, the gods at their Ease,
And never a single creature here on the earth ever missing
What they were never meant to explore.

Robert Rorabeck

What Truly Is

If I could be what I am not, I would be a Ferris wheel
And assign you the wind. Guess where I would look?
Or I would have you tear pages out of dime store novels
And give them to your throat as airplanes, to let you
Take them casually to the orange groves, your naked dressing
Room to read over casually, and to laugh;

Or, I would like to be an imperfection in your eye without Anchor; something that floats around according to where you look.
When you are watching migrations then you would throw me
Up like snow and I would float down for the rest of the day,
Coming across your gaze while you ate lunch or whatnot;

The world is full of quiet places and those are where I look for You, on any old lawn out behind the house. The rattlesnake slithers Across your belly when he has nowhere else to go and his tongue is Tapping the humid air as if it were sweet confection;

And if I had time and was smart enough to get myself out of School for the day, I would kick off on some trustworthy swings,
And fan my shadow back and forth across your shoulder
And we could imbibe in the perfect quiet of best friends;
And go off together like the fine end of something, and forget all
These words and birthmarks which place us in our cars.
Instead, we could be what truly is:

What we make time to be when no one else is looking,
Or paying any mind.

Robert Rorabeck

What Usual Reward

Cornucopia of Cyclops and unicorns-
Wasn't this what the kaleidoscope was supposed to Make out of the heavens-
While I fold paper airplanes and shoot them off
Across the perfumes of my armpits,
Dreaming of you in lactating castles: but someone Else has stolen you,
And how did this happen, evaporating carnations
As the housewives return home to their Particular section of their well manicured tombs:
Bright in eyes and full in bosom:
What usual reward will they use to receive the night-
While their little boys with sore thumbs from Hitchhiking out of school, fly the kites they have Stolen through the molesting night.

Robert Rorabeck

What Was Its Yesterday

Windmills: windmills of that banal architecture,
While traveling through the hallways it
Seems as if very little else has changed;
But the fruit still falls from the tree
Of baseball diamonds,
And you are still looking up: up, up,
Casually around the world,
Trying to dispel your unusual language:
Well, here it is, while the octopus runs away:
Away,
In the inky censers of what was its yesterday:
Gone with the playgrounds in the albino
Snow,
Gone with the tomorrow- the tomorrow,
I'll suppose I'll never know.

Robert Rorabeck

What Was Right

Errors of a pueblo-
There is your brown family gossiping around
A surrendered flag
And on Monday I'll get up and go to school
Again, noticing all to whom I've been around:
See the parade of Chivalrous insects in a chorus whose songs I Cannot understand,
While far around here the moats of housewives
Lay with lavender painted toes:
They swing in their own shadows,
And smell like insomnia's jasmine-
And they lay painted on the road back to the Orange groves,
Or the smoking prairie grounds of rum:
Listen to them echoing in the bathroom- see them
Playing over the concrete-
They stay up all night batting lashes at foxes
And smelling so bitter sweet:
And the libraries keep their lights on,
And the tourists return to echoes- and the ash
Falls on her shoulders like small cathedrals
As changes to meet him in the tall weeds around
The swing-sets of her echoes:
She changes to meet him, singing like a humming bird
Stuck underneath the moon after midnight-
After all of that metamorphosis was stylized and All of us were reminded of what was wrong
And what was right.

Robert Rorabeck

What Was Supposed To Have Been An Ode To Zucker's Bicycle

How easily we can be defeated
By any word we choose next—
An entire classroom of Wrong answers in
A high school of enemies—

Like businesses of trophies
Seemingly triumphant
All of a sudden
Shot down into the Shark filled abysses by Enemy airplanes—

Now, entire decades later—
I have children and a family,
But before that I was alone on Thanksgiving—
And I stole Zucker's bicycle
And rode to the closed down high school—
And, entering crepuscule,
When all of the mailboxes- according to
The regular laws of suburbia,
Like all of the crickets and housewives
Crossing and uncrossing their legs
And making twilight noises
With their scissorings-
Began to seem to hum
And to glow
As if perplexed by a fairyland's contingency of amusements—

I stood upon the common asphalt and concrete monuments
And it seemed, momentarily,
As if I was finally triumphant upon the aforementioned holiday:

In all of the holidays practiced upon by America through
The daylights upon this resurrected peninsula
So exhumed from the salty boudoir
Of the feral and surreal daydreams of the sea's daughter—

With my son laughing in my ear
And exalting in his newfound comprehensions of money—
I seemed momentarily glorious and alone—
My soul felt as if it were a closed-down amusement
Placed like a slumbering lover atop
The abandoned daydreams—
All of the lost children who also did not know the corrected answers—
They seemed there before me—
Nameless constellations that were long since placed above
Me, properly attributing to the heavens—
Like little golden teardrops pricked upon the fingertips
Of the aforementioned teachers:

I stood there alone and beneath the stars—
As the alligators hibernated underneath of the school buses—
And the other children,
Lost and found, beneath the roofs of their own houses—
Like gingerbread houses filled to the rafters by their Salty dinners,
Tended to yawn and look up—
And forget of themselves as rivers graduating towards
The state universities they would find their new commonly Accepted identities destined towards:

Tributaries I had at first run away from only to Return to,
Lost and frightened and delicately frost-bitten:
Looking at the parked school-busses,
I was lost again;
But, having stolen my favorite teacher's bicycle to Return to here
I felt momentarily heart-broken—like a rabbit
Trapped against a high wall between here and Mexico:

Half a decade later,
Having been rejected from that place of a holy cemetery—
Having drunken half a bottle of $10 rum,
My son fawning and making trucks dance around my elbows—
I try to remember something that once was Absolutely beautiful—

An esoteric and occultish beauty that we were forced to Find inside the places the state would force us:
Inside a hidden cave into which our parents
Could not even begin to pretend to love:

And our favorite teacher's bicycle:
An instrument once animated—a muse
That we lifted from her habitat—
There she slept beneath the increases of our monuments—
And here we write to her, forlorn and yet collecting for Evermore,
As if we were the waves surceasing—
Battings upon the lashes of a daydream that happens once
In a while as the rockets that are supposed to leave the Earth fail and return again, exploding into
The lips of gravity
And back into the whitewashed daydreams of an Adolescent's afternoon.

Robert Rorabeck

What You Are Making Them

Swamp of metropolis and limos:
I am just trying to meet my quota as some Cinderella's
Coach turns back into a pumpkin,
And the mice eat the cheese:
And I sit and watch with my dirty baseball cap well
Pulled down,
So that I'll continue fitting in, and won't be exposed:
It's always good to wear a baseball cap when you are out,
And male,
And don't want to be found out- That one of your ears
Should be missing for the busy waitress who just Doesn't give a d$mned:
And I am in the Montemarte district of West Palm Beach-
And I have something like three thousand pumpkins,
And I haven't yet given one away to a pretty girl
With piss brown eyes-
You know, but if that mother comes back, I really want to Buy her a bicycle:
And when I'm finished, I want to masturbate alone
And then die into a truck or somewhere,
And the nights are well shut off and balmy and the crickets
Are always complaining-
And I can't stop thinking about womb deep wildflowers-
Girls who live so far away,
Even slightly above the earth in observatories of mountain
Napes:
They sell wine and when you run your finger around their Glass, they sing without even having to acknowledge
What you are making them.

Robert Rorabeck

What You Can Become....

Though the whole night screams,
I can only whisper silently with my brown eyes
Who have to do their job across country—
Where they look up at constellations, maps
To your pretty eyes as they bat about unabated
In the places you work and play—
There you go surfing again, your entire young Body wet and in motion communicating with the Other young and healthy bodies moving
About with you—
Seldom do you take a break from your gambols,
And when you look up the stars seem just stars,
Immeasurable gaseous bodies that punctuate the Black tarp, under which you might have a drink
With others of your species, but that's all they are—

The same way as when your thoughts may fall
In passing upon me, a boy who once circulated you
A couple times at most, icy and distant, a nameless comet
That still turns about primarily unobserved, as is my Wish, except with you— For you are right, I am
Just a boy, rather flawed but harmless, though I have Been through space and have seen the stars up close,
And know them to be much like you, immeasurable
And heavenly bodies, circling about through the voids
Of light and darkness, set into their spirals—

If you take my hand the next time I come by you, Say in a few decades or so, then I can show you who they
And you are and, with me, what you can become....

Robert Rorabeck

What You Do To Me

Because I can never be
As beautiful as my mother,
And because I can never be
As truthful as my father was,
Nor will I ever own a winning racehorse,
I am writing to you now,
Because you owe me nothing but an ear:
And you are too late to know,
That these words are blackmail,
Because I cry to tell the world what You've done: never coming by,
Taking strange boys out to dinner,
And enjoying the air and satellites
Without me: The revolutions of your Society in the communal salts,
In the work hall's dim lights,
Because I see you there
Kissing a man you know less than me:
Just because you work with him
When no one else is around,
Saying his name in the dark
And groaning,
Because you love me but you cannot care:
To know that I am weeping for you,
And casually recording all the pains,
The gentle machoisms
Your instincts gravitate you towards,
Until you grow old and mindful,
And might sit down next to the lamp
And by it read of me the thoughts of you,
Thoughts you couldn't imagine:
The world you hang is already passing,
But here is an immortal bouquet
Set off to the corner,
Or a sweater you can wear
When you want something on your Shoulders- a reminder
That I will holdout through the pain,
Until I meet you some time,

So you might see for yourself
what you do to me.

Robert Rorabeck

What You Have Pretended To Save

Kiss me on either side of my face,
If you are from Seville
And it is your whim: Play your radio and Back off,
As old men drive away back through the Perfidy of their adolescence:
Think of the time you spent mocking me in High school,
The cumulostratus or whatever you call
The flying holocaust it put me through:
Build up and pull over and make love at the Anonymous road stop underneath the Great stone bridges where the Indians died
Or at least gave way,
Because you are the greatly educated:
So proud of yourself and your football teams.
Your bedroom is full of red and blue ribbons,
Either coming or going away,
But it is just a very thin wall, thankless,
Persuaded,
When the wolf comes with cheeks gorgeous enough
For orchards,
Biceps strong enough for batting cages:
Then you will know who I am, like the culprit of
The deceitful fable, I will not be denied;
And your eyes are just wimples in the dark floating not Even like candles inches apart,
Hoping against the window that I will have the bravado
To take what you have pretended to save.

Robert Rorabeck

Whatever- I Am Not Here

I am gone now—
A million moons away, going to China—A million
Requests away underneath the Christmas trees
Of a blistering Christmas
As we sell ourselves away—
As we cry out—
For those who are not here—
Who are fanfare and comatose beneath the milky way—
As a I loved you a thousands miles—
As I closed my eyes and pretended to count coup on you
And the lawns stretched out all of their Greenest mouths for you—
Emerald and other words for green—
As the graveyards lay just right there—a million
Diamonds in a checkerboard of un-played
Dimensions—
And it was all right here for all of this time—
In the unopened story books and the unmouthed rhymes—
But I am going away, while the pictures repeat
Masturbating themselves,
And pissing on the feet of the clouds.

Robert Rorabeck

Whatever Existence

I don't want to play around with you
Again, around the parks of the dead railroads
Or the willows of the murdered
Girls: I have felt your brown skin in my ghostly
Hand,
And put it inside you like clay in a lost school
Yard the children are abandoning
Like hapless kites, as the weather floods
Whatever existence that is there's to have,
And they go away:
Softly. Butterflies laugh at them, and the housewives Never look up to see how it is that their Children all but disappear.

Robert Rorabeck

Whatever Gold Summers

Killing whatever gold summers come in their outgoing vestments-
You step out in a purple curtain,
And smile through your brownness: and I like it, when you remember
Where the cars drive alongside the overgrown fences,
And the crooked mailboxes that sway like nodding gravestones:
They just go this way, and I have to imagine the ways that you take Home to your kids,
Because you get angry when I follow you too far, the insouciant airplanes
Taking off like bottle rockets,
And other assured but meaningless things, who only move because They have to.

Robert Rorabeck

Whatever It Is

Weak children brushing down on airplanes,
Never wondering where it is that they should land,
Never understanding the concepts brushed from the Lips of the mountains' graces;
Only their mothers' breasts and now this, clouds in
The fog of make-believe, and the stars the spitfires
Of far away giants:
Words that seem to move, but don't move at all,
Stumbling forever drunk out into the beautifully studded
Esplanades of the graveyards; and there truncated,
To mew up to the sensory mausoleums of the billboards
Who are even less than ceiling fans,
While the airplanes fumble their innocent holidays into the Earth,
They just sit there mutely chattering about whatever it
Is that they must sell.

Robert Rorabeck

Whatever It Wa

Indebted to whatever hemispheres there were;
I was not a wise man, but I came baring gifts, and stealing
Bicycles;
One ear pressed to the waves, a lucky rabbit slowly murdered
In the grass underneath the hoof prints of terrapin who Didn't belong there anyways,
Like busses who took a round about underneath the burning
Sugar cane,
Who only carried in their custard tresses the pantomiming
Pharoses of pubescent
Truancy;
And the color of my soul was green: Alma, it was my favorite
Thing while it was waking up;
And by tomorrow I will know if you do not love me,
While the boomslangs sizzle above the trapeze of teepees:
They say all of the awful things:
That you will never make it to water, that your dog will know the Luck of the gods before
You come to your senses; and that the Hibernian woods will have Decorated all of their Christmases even before you get out of
The yawning of your trailer park,
While your dumb wife is sunbathing topless beside the communal Pool,
Or estuary; and there are always still fireworks to sell across
The seven seas who penumbra the desert like the evaporates of Metamorphosis,
As the kings crown in chrysalis, their youngish boys jouncing
Across the earth,
Shooting their bows into the heart of harts, biting their lips and wet-
Dreaming of whatever it is that they will become.

Robert Rorabeck

Whatever It Was

Indebted to whatever hemispheres there were;
I was not a wise man, but I came baring gifts, and stealing
Bicycles;
One ear pressed to the waves, a lucky rabbit slowly murdered
In the grass underneath the hoof prints of terrapin who Didn't belong there anyways,
Like busses who took a round about underneath the burning
Sugar cane,
Who only carried in their custard tresses the pantomiming
Pharoses of pubescent
Truancy;
And the color of my soul was green: Alma, it was my favorite
Thing while it was waking up;
And by tomorrow I will know if you do not love me,
While the boomslangs sizzle above the trapeze of teepees:
They say all of the awful things:
That you will never make it to water, that your dog will know the Luck of the gods before
You come to your senses; and that the Hibernian woods will have Decorated all of their Christmases even before you get out of
The yawning of your trailer park,
While your dumb wife is sunbathing topless beside the communal
Pool,
Or estuary; and there are always still fireworks to sell across
The seven seas who penumbra the desert like the evaporates of Metamorphosis,
As the kings crown in chrysalis, their youngish boys jouncing
Across the earth,
Shooting their bows into the heart of harts, biting their lips and wet-
Dreaming of whatever it is that they will become.

Robert Rorabeck

Whatever Rhymes I Choose Tonight

Your friends are super-fine
And I've seen them in the back seats
In the back of the bus
Or the movie theatre figuring 69:
And this is what I do when I am not Hiking,
When my imbedded molars are aching
From cheap liquor,
And I persistent to write in freeform,
Not rhyme:
But there you go, in silent parks which aren't
Real,
Under slash-pine: sweaty, humid and recreational
In the daytime:
They have no sums or parking codes,
But at night they provide shelter for the nocturnal
Scavengers and homosexual hobos:
Beardless, how could you tell Walt Whitman
From most anyone else,
Even his poetry couldn't keep time;
And these words are an enigma, like in the Shallow pine forest next to the golf course I used
To jog in and bemuse myself with jealousy over
The desirous position of my major professor;
But now you situated yourself into a greater design of Love, another of your ancient tribe;
But I've read about the Macabees, and I am that Kind of warrior: Listen to me scream well rummed
To the Roman night:
I never loved you, but amused myself by the lesbian Theatre down in the bohemian pool- You don't even Remember: housewife to a lawyer now just slightly
North of Boca,
And I have certain scars you shall never see, new forms
Of embarkations on the old form body,
And tonight the park close to your abandoned house
Is mine: I will not petition the moon for you;
Whatever rhymes I choose tonight are mine.

When All The Woods Are Black

What can live in this sea
When all the woods are all black, but the sky is still blue
Without even thieves, the robbers of her fretful eyes.
Where the feet in their cerulean stockings stick out like
Hoods in the waxy hollies;
Where the thwarted flies bother.
This place has been here forever, but the women
Have all been stolen by the gods no one believes anymore,
And the sea retains the hints of their claret leave-takings
The grass' green is turning chartreuse, and snakes
Live coiled in balls where it has gone unmowed,
And cars rust on cinderblocks down the throat of the steep Hills, the darkness of the black woods beginning to Eclipse their taciturn chassis;
The grottos here in the nape of mountains are without pieta,
And motionless in algae and purplish lilies
Who do not sing, nor do maidens step blood-pricked
Out from brambles, nor the secret chests of aspens,
For eyes forage here, but they do not wander nor bight their lips;
The school in the little clearing is quite extinct, though
Each square in the linoleum floor is well mopped
And in good geometry, for neither sex has moped across it
For some time; This is the beautiful valley of her dressing room,
But she has been stolen away by a sucker quarterback
With good aim, now all the forest is beautifully meaningless
When all the woods are all black, but the sky is still blue.

Robert Rorabeck

When He Was Asleep

While you were waiting for
A sound from the tomb,
Of a vampire or werewolf,
I was right there
Outside of your car or atop of Your roof
With a foolproof spear in my heart
And cold-hearted airplanes in
The sky—
The flying monkeys were on the Warpath,
Another villain was having an industrious
Epiphany—
With the night settling in all around me
Like a cloak of the sinking
Sea—
And you with your family swimming in Movie stars,
Awash in that jungle you called paradise—
And my heart dripping out
Like the meat of
A terrapin—
And your lips drooling like lion whose hungry
Grew exponentially all because he Didn't know when he was asleep.

Robert Rorabeck

When I Am Not Really Alon

How great to illusion myself in the demiurge of evening,
To drink the last of this amber substance
In the leaking air-conditioning, to sing that I am not alone:
Mind and body co-mingle,
As Alma is disarrayed into the house her father promises her,
Slipped into the bed beside her thief of a husband;
And her mind even further away, thinking nothing of the Rude and erudite suburbias cut like gems all around her:
Her newly migrated weeds are somehow more precious,
Her body more supple; her mind in unspoken of corridors:
She doesn't like to read, but I have felt her heart on the pages
That should be written down:
Her daughter dances before her in the moonlight that she owns
In her room;
And this is how I think of her when I am not really alone.

Robert Rorabeck

When I Am Not Really Alone

How great to illusion myself in the demiurge of evening,
To drink the last of this amber substance
In the leaking air-conditioning, to sing that I am not alone:
Mind and body co-mingle,
As Alma is disarrayed into the house her father promises her,
Slipped into the bed beside her thief of a husband;
And her mind even further away, thinking nothing of the
Rude and erudite suburbias cut like gems all around her:
Her newly migrated weeds are somehow more precious,
Her body more supple; her mind in unspoken of corridors:
She doesn't like to read, but I have felt her heart on the pages
That should be written down:
Her daughter dances before her in the moonlight that she owns
In her room;
And this is how I think of her when I am not really alone.

Robert Rorabeck

When I Disappear

Birds make love next to the canals I jog:
Birds fly over me and terrapins disappear into that inkjets
Of ribbon,
And the highway roars with housewives busy from shopping;
The money is gobbled up faster than my legs can exercise
The burry earth:
But it is true that girls move and it is raining, and eyes look out
Of the windows of their houses,
And I am not just a little boy anymore;
I am a man by this river who is trying to hawk his ribs to any woman
Who needs an extra spear;
And I will put children in her to make sure that I do not disappear
When I disappear.

Robert Rorabeck

When I Heard Death....

I heard death for the first time
In a human voice when I was very young
And my blonde aunt argued with her husband
On the other side of the screen door,
Upon the small green yard with color changing
Lizards and mother's rock garden ringed with stones—

Between the palms and the humid sky,
The last shades of vermillion before the Sun was shut behind the door,
Her voice died in certain way like a
Sea butchered by a silver knife
And bled dry, wind and Waves departed
And she laid flat on a marble slab
On the other side of cold inoculated doors
That was how it sounded
When I heard death for the first time
In a human voice.

Robert Rorabeck

When I Take Walks With My Mother

When I take walks with my mother
I am a tree in the wind— I move,
But I go nowhere; it is beautiful
Sometimes to shimmer—
The light of the moon over running water,
The memory of her face reflected by the sea—
The aching memories that wash and run over
Me, move within me, stampede,
And, exhausted hibernate, but they never leave
Me, the soul's locksmiths,
Tarnished metals and rings waiting in my chest—
When I take walks with my mother,
I can feel myself in her womb, just to
Be close to the woman who loves you,
A gosling under her wing as she explains
How God turns tadpoles into toads,
How mountains rose their heads from the sea,
How a rainbow leaping over a red ridge
Is his promise that you will go on forever in him,
Strolling in that immortal chest, a perfect memory,
Like a present bought for a lover,
The cherished pet of a young child,
A piece of blown glass still warm to the touch
And glowing beneath the window....
When I take walks with my mother, light falls
Down from the other side of the dizzy universe.
Exhausted travelers rest in between the space of moving
Bodies as the dogs chase a herd of elk through the dusk—
I move but don't move— I breathe and the memories,
For this short while stand quiet and listen....
When I take walks with my mother.

Robert Rorabeck

When I Was A Wolverine

you were a virgin learning about Greek gods and trying to speak Russian.
Alone in those shady halls
I studied tears.
We sat across from each other and made fleeting teases with our eyes gunning each other down as our minds raced like Tennessee studs
and undressed each other,
fucking all day
or at least through Latin Class.
And how my thoughts echo for you now where you stained perfect
a beauty mark in my ugly mind across the distance of blasted years
In blasted lands
I long for you and howl your name
to the mountains
I hear your beauty in the naming whispers among the aspens;
but you are all gone
from here,
you have walked between the bloody waters
to your own promised land.
Here,
virgins are for sacrifices and you would not cut off one bit
for me and I have forgotten how to speak, with my eyes,

the language of our high school that has laid dead
for a decade

Robert Rorabeck

When I Write

When I write I write
Maybe an hour or 2 a day but the #s stay with Me like lead
From my fingertips
Seeping deeper
Ink on my lips
My face molts
I rust
When I write the feeling
Creeps through me like
The morning after too
Much alcohol
Cold shivers a mirror
I can't get it out of my face
And her
When I write
She turns on over my bed
A lamp shaped like a leg
Filled with effervescing
Beer and drunken fish,
Possibilities,
Prizes,
Games
And carnivals
When I write God puts
Her rib back into me
The first pain
Her breath in me
Her love in me
When I write I can't get
Her out,
And it would be okay
If I had her,
But I don't even know her number
When I write her favorite
Color is blue
When I write she only
Wears a fig leaf

And my fingers
When I write
Her fingers tear apart
My temples
Like rotten fruit
When I write
God flies for hours my Teeth taste like microwaved metal
When I she's just
There
She's just there the next door
Over
When I write
I cup her breast
Oh, God, how long it's been
When I write for just an hour
It's all it takes
And she's with me all day
Nakedness and beautiful eyes
And milk and sweat and Redness and the places on her
I put myself
When I write
When I write
It's like mercury settling
In a crown around my temple
Silt
Gently
Higher and higher
When I write I'm Harvey
Silver
Jack Micheline's alter ego
Jewish actor
Rimbaudian misfit
When I write
I'm with her
When I write I'm burned
Through Bukowski's fire
When I write I'm in Michelangelo's
Fresco
Reaching out for God
His hand the promise

The self I lie in when
I write
She's in my mouth
I can taste her
It's just too much not to have
Her
I put the pen down to Spit her out but I've Already swallowed her
Candy poison
When I write
It's like being inside her.

Robert Rorabeck

When She Isn'T In My House

There you are, a pieta drooling the honey of Her children into her lap-
The last curse of beauty serenades by the Feral cats,
As the songs of the habitually lonely continue
Around her- as I slept on her roof,
And wrote to her so many rosy tombs
Underneath the ripe bellies of the Helicopters,
And underneath the jump rope of the stewardesses
In their airplanes-
What a delight, say the church goes on Sunday underneath the graveyards where their Grandmothers are buried alongside the Catholics and the Indians-
Strange per severances that don't always have to Survive-
As she culls her children again to her womb
Amidst the lilacs,
And this is how I sing to her when she isn't
In my house,
And yet doesn't have to be alone.

Robert Rorabeck

When The Dead Walk The Earths

Used car salesman of kites and bric-a-brac
The tender fabrics of high school, but it has no
Fingerprints to remember,
The gentle molestations of slight penny-birds,
The wishes of housewives,
Lingerie slipping like the skin of a beautiful snake
From the surcease of her mind:
And where does she live, where does my heart
Fling like proverbial messenger bird on a string
Of unspooling copper wires, stolen from
The galvanized esplanade; but looking up into the Sky it spells lightning,
And wild horses and fortified wines:
And it is a strange vortex of costume jewelry I am
Selling;
And it belongs to no cabalistic green eyes, though
It continues laying out more taught line, wishing for Her Translunary amusements,
On holidays, or valentines, where the dead walk the Earths and float in the skies.

Robert Rorabeck

When The Meteors Sing To The Moon

I never think of dragons anymore in
The unpalatable rooms underneath the paper trees
In the midst of a hurricane-
Why, I'll just lay out here, baptizing in the raiment
Of tadpoles-
Soon I'll be their dessert, and the long
Chords of unicorns will embrace the shore in a Beautiful effect,
As we ourselves try to escape to the river-
And any hopes of your family are lost to our love-
And maybe tomorrow will be the time
Beginning the great romance that surrounds us
And keeps us from the specters moaning in the forest-
As I hold your hand,
And wait to distill the pornography of the rainforest
Into your lions for the famished rabbits
And the lions:
Why cant we become our own amusements- our Own carnival,
Even though I am neither famous nor talented enough,
As I tend to be for awhile
Greatly in love with you without the panoply of Wonderful words to diadem your nuptials,
Or to call you to me in the nights when
The meteors sing to the moon.

Robert Rorabeck

When The Sun And The Moon Are Down

Sunlight mottles through the blinds
Of another day;
Yes it does, as if at the hospital; and old loves
Never weep,
They just turn to the side,
And we forget words and thoughts:
And the thoughts we don't know are the words
We'll never have,
Words of other countries, of knights young and Old defeated by the basilisk and his frosty
Witches;
And yet the dwarfs have great libidos dripping like Fertile gardens somehow three times their stature;
But they are still too dense for bicycles
Or swimming in water that isn't for children:
So when she comes, they whistle,
Entire tribes of bearded men, and the dragons swoop
And holler. When she comes, they forget their vast Wealth,
Their weak spots, which she takes advantage of squinting
Her eyes to feel the turquoise feather stretch to her Cheek:
A marksman, she has many scalps, scaled and wonderful,
And she keeps them at a steady clip as she leaps
Through town,
Only stopping to drink in mountains when the moon
And the sun are down.

Robert Rorabeck

When They Are Lucky

Rising to the occasion,
To the cobwebs of her family;
Nothing about her is old,
Or kept away too long:
In the opal ladders of her Siamese
Estuaries,
Her pillbox of a womb has Birthed two children,
Bilingual,
Straight out of the old habitats
Of cliff dwellers and Conquistadors:
She knows how to use the Government,
But not how to swim,
So I carry her out into the Breaking brim, and Alma's
Little brown body braces against My stalwart show,
Like a fox leaping into
An Eskimo,
An anarchistic fable
Of our time of the week
When butterflies get the day off,
When they are lucky.

Robert Rorabeck

When They Too Will Leave

The lions roar to their upland gods,
And I do not feel alright.
I wonder what is alright to believe in even While the birds sing all of their songs-
All of the swing sets are being taken away,
And maidens swim across the lake-
Where are they going, and what lake is this:
Even so, they look so beautiful even while they Are leaving.
Replacing them, birds travel in from the north:
They are foreigners to this country,
And they say nothing to the sky- their bodies
Fold up and swim,
Like a new kind of wedding- I hold my breath
And clutch my heart-
A birthday cake waits uphill candleless in Another empty house,
As I wonder when they too will leave.

Robert Rorabeck

When We Go Back To School

The bed is a
Spendthrift ride- and
It seems we've
Been going to Worship so many
Ferris Wheels-
And they are already
Gone-
The way summer will Have to be
When we go back to school.

Robert Rorabeck

When You Are A Sailor Without Any Sea

My wife grew up in a one bedroom apartment in Lanxiou, China
At 3,000 meters,
So she assures me she won't get a headache if we go to visit my parents
In Nutrioso, Arizona:
But she found out she was pregnant today and grew slightly depressed.
I said, it is a good time to be pregnant, as we took a walk
With our one year old child around the neighborhood,
In the suburbs of Shanghai, China—
I've been sick since we got here over a month ago—
I keep worry about our car and house back in Florida:
I cannot enjoy myself—
We are going to the People's 10th Hospital tomorrow to see if We can fix my hearing,
So today I just stayed in and looked at houses in Show Low, Arizona,
In the less than $250,000 range:
Meanwhile, I probably looked at my face a hundred times in between Playing with my first born child.
I ate two cheese burgers for lunch, and that is all.
I need to lose weight. I weigh close to 250 pounds
But I am a healthy day laborer back from where I come from.
I am the only man who can pile four boxes of Idaho potatoes on top
Of each other and carry them all at once to the delivery truck—
This is the job I went back to after being fired from my high School teaching job—
I am doing just fine
And halfway saved up to buying a second modest home
And semi retirement—Like I said, I am looking at Show Low,
Arizona—
I want to take my wife there next summer—
By that time, if all goes well, we will have our second child—
Now, while everyone is sleeping,
I drink fifty proof Chinese white wine—
It is like visiting the moon while I write this thing:
And on and on, these things I do,
Anonymously for all posterity—
It is the only thing that feels okay to do,
My miniscule progressions through an unseeing,
Unbelieving, and unforgiving world—
I wrote ten note book pages earlier on a sloppy novella I am

Almost finished with About finding the Holy Grail in China,
Only the Holy Grail is a Mexican woman—my old muse:
It is a laughable mess,
And this is not a poem, but it goes this way
Sometimes
When you are a sailor without any sea.

Robert Rorabeck

When You Cut Your Hair

When you cut your hair, we made love;
And I made rounds with my sweetheart- and I never had to come
Down:
I wrote something when I was twenty four that was published but Never read;
But I still have a story, and you are definitely in it right now:
While the music plays just as carelessly as rain:
And the faeries moan in their green chateaus; but I like you,
And marmalade:
And even as you yawn, why even then the stars rise up and the windmills
Gather around,
And I fight off the banishments of my lonely diseases, and I cry just
To fill up middle class swimming pools,
While the new children of my peerless grownups gather still in the Same high schools that my ancient footsteps echo around;
And it is as proof less as the fireworks who never Have existed; and yet I finally have made love to my soul,
And it feels as good and as luckily placed as a ship in its bottle into which The waves have finally settled down:
And in those museums even the airplanes stop to pause, their armpits
Smelling like wildflowers, who from those transoms all of the agogs of the Seamless stewardesses, through their streak less transoms, finally settle down.

Robert Rorabeck

When You Make Me

If you linger here, maybe midnight will find us both
Kissing in the graveyard:
Maybe Michael will read Mark Twain before he goes to sleep
Tonight,
Alma, because I bought him The Prince and The Pauper for Two dollars at the dollar store
That for all I know may be the nearest to the sea;
And when I hold your hand I feel good;
And when I kiss your lips I fill better-
And I am not Shakespeare except when you make me
Shakespeare:
Alma- And, Alma, why I'll be damned if you don't always Make me Shakespeare.

Robert Rorabeck

Where All The Wayward Paper Airplanes Fall

Reindeer in my afternoon are just other words
I do not know,
But I've been so long away-
I've been away- and I'm going to Mexico:
Why cant you come with me,
Why cant you remember how the green clouds
Came to be, diademing the fields of maize
And the consumptive volcanoes:
Where your grandmothers lived forever like Jealous rubies
While I keep poisoned arrows for my Competitors
Because our houses are all too close together,
And I do not love my neighbors-
I said I loved you, but that was just my coffin
Speaking,
As you didn't answer, as the busses turned around,
Waiting for the swans to return to them,
But they had gone away forever:
They had changed into some that was too beautiful
For us,
And your children have run away across the canal-
Into another world where there may not be
A Christmas, where all of the wayward paper airplanes
Fall- I told you that I loved you,
But you said that you'd heard it all-

Robert Rorabeck

Where And Whom They Are

Beginning again to taste the comely
Sailboats scrimshawed into my drinking glass,
The albatrosses swimming like chalices
Away from hapless knights
Who will eventually swing green and envious
From the witch's
Tree-
The traffic, the waves- all of it continues,
While there are Christmas trees in beautiful
Homes,
Unbounded and spilling like beautiful women with Their throats slit,
Eyes as open and dark as hungry tigers,
Their corneas eating it all, the baseball players of
The dark burs and stars
And the red lights swim over the cars
Like great heavenly lights that are coming nearer
For warmth,
Like lonesome young men who have forgotten
Where and whom they are.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Cold Planets Live

In the soft whiteness of her daydreaming skin,
The way some highways move across
An evaporating landscape—
And the fruit of the cactus goes to sleep,
Pedaling to the waves
Tuliping in their cadence—
A sister buys a soft merry-go-round,
Remembering to the eyes of the darkness
Of an often time playboy's
Nostalgic zoo—
Where there are still estuaries where Make-believe crocodiles cry
Toy airplanes
After a graveyard's curfew—
Animals hallucinate of men
Selling them places that they could move to,
Outside the corners beyond the yards,
The separations of fingertips,
The lost acres that I left to you—
Imprints of children and washing machines
And other holidays
Where cold planets live.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Does The Dog Go?

Where does the dog go?

When the preachers are preaching
And the teachers are teaching

And the societal bowl is being passed
Around with the opposable thumbs,
Followed by bright eyes and egotistical,
Self-righteous smiles

And dollars flow religiously into
The collection bowl....

Where does the dog go?

Escaping the sermon of the human tongue,
He squats down low and crawls under the fence
At the edge of the parking lot.

Outside the master's borders he is free to Follow his nose. Here, loping down the street,
He sees the world not through the old grey television set
Of his eyes, but through his wet, throbbing snout—
He tastes the world with this and his tongue, hanging out.

When a good breeze comes by, he gets a whiff
Of the still frozen snows from a mountain miles away,
And the golden taste of aspen leaves just before they fall....

Walking along, he can smell the fear and sadness of a
Cuckolded man and he can taste the whiskey on his breath....

He can smell the newly born love on the woman's lips,
And can taste the swaying heat over her eager hips....

When children come to play with him for awhile, he enjoys
Their fingers, like sapling branches still to grow, running through His fur-coat, and he sniffs deeply of their new feelings still stretching Out into the world, and their flavor is pure without hurt.

So the dog goes along where he wills and as he wishes,
Not consciously understanding the ordered nature of man, but Getting startling whiffs of how things run, the hungry hearts and Damaged dreams spilling out of human vessels, like broken pots,
Wavering in bright colors about him....

And when he returns, he might get a pat or a bone,
But not often does his master think of where he's been....

When the preachers are preaching
And the teachers are teaching
While the sun is the great warmth above it all

And the world of human thoughts reach out and Intertwine in burry knots, the dog settles down at the feet
Of men, his illiterate master, and sees them pouring out into his world,
Reaching out beyond occupations and positions, titles and incomes,
the dog smells them how they really are in the world under the sun and loves them as he will.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Every Wildflower Still Grows

She was about to kiss me,
And I wanted that kiss:
I haven't kissed a female soul in this side of A decade,
But I demurred, and my father has bought rose
Bushes;
And coming home from the little black children's Park,
The light is still on in the trailer;
And when I get inside I listen to Keats;
My mother farts: She is still beautiful, and that Kiss would have been mine,
If I wasn't afraid of you becoming your mother;
But lets pretend that I will return in the spring,
And we will live in the country,
And I will find your kiss again on Tuesday,
And we will go to bed while the sun is still high
In a garden where every wildflower still grows.

Robert Rorabeck

Where I Am Necessary To Belong

All of the clairvoyant statistics fracture like tragedies of Our sky,
Like the ashes of birthday wishes over the maelstrom of our green
Planes, of our prettiest and favorite colors;
And I can see Alma all day, and she even parrots my name,
After I cry out hers in my sincerest of pains;
And I dance for her, and I turn around drunkenly, but she says she Doesn't want to dance:
Alma has a skull on her phone:
Where does Alma live except where all of the Mexicans live,
And now I can give her a house to prove her body justice; I can give Her breath under the caterwauling moon: I can skip school for Alma and remind her that in her secret estuaries is where I am
Necessary to belong.

Robert Rorabeck

Where I Cannot Say Her Name

Putting words together like playing,
Like guns
Over the landscapes where there is no airconditioning
As there is no returning of this love:
And now I know that it doesn't feel real:
Little feet floating up mountains
Skirting lions with their tails between their legs,
Dead cars arranged in a certain way
And all made up in the yellow school yards of the desert
While I am waiting in the rock garden to be discovered
Not far afield from the scars and cenotaphs of Conquistadors quilled like badges into the disappearing
Pornography;
This is where I always set out and happen to wait for Her: this is where I cannot say her name.

Robert Rorabeck

Where I Guess The Airplanes Fly

Roosters crowing in the fireworks
Produce bright sunshine
That isn't anywhere, but flowing over
The yard-
Vermillion possibility that has left
This house
And is floating over it, spying in the Nebulous in its arc
Over slash pines and blue gills
Clairvoyant as it does
Over birthdays in the park where Girls I don't know curl in the sand dunes
And kiss the blisters of abandoned
Pornographies- there they are,
Burying themselves before school,
Getting thorns in their paws.
The coral snakes, wishing to be up and Down their brown avenues
Like their mothers' jewelry being passed
Down from beneath the ballrooms
Where I guess the airplanes fly.

Robert Rorabeck

Where I Have Never Belonged

Days of vigilance abroad;
And other sketches brought to
The corners of
The skip, collected as if Marbles in their mouths-
The traffic still going
Home in the sunlight;
Her soft whisperings
Blowing across the cerulean
Headdress
Of another imposter who
Has no proof of being here,
Except that I have worshipped
Him in Disgust- and now I dream
Of the color blue from the Open sills of Blue gills-
As the little girls fight
Form themselves
Across the open wounds and Caesuras of the frontera
Until once again
Cradled by the names of spices,
Nesting into the soft green pueblos
Underneath the redondos of Impassable and paganistic ranges-
The horned animals masturbating
Where I have never belonged.

Robert Rorabeck

Where I Have Thought

I don't want to live without you- for a little while
As the hours die:
The sea of horses jumping over the house, despising
Its suburban wives;
And I said that you were so beautiful, calling back again
The first memory of your belonging-
While my blood is filled with the tearless rubies of Crocodiles,
My face smoldering the tears sweated from the armpits
Of angels who weren't even your cousins:
Why, aren't we in the same world,
Alma, counting our good luck and trigonometry, as the entire House flies,
And the flowers I've stolen for you are getting so old:
And I go out to the sea and look at its outcasts- the beauty of Its equipage the same memory as I have you in:
While the petty government has stolen away my swings,
And the helicopters fly in the colors of coral snakes:
Yellow, and red up in their strange- and I do not know
Who I am:
But a cenotaph in the hibiscus, a zoetrope of grandmother luxury
Turning around outside your bedroom,
As you get off of your love- and you know that I love you,
And I want to go back to Mexico, anyways,
And to a place where I have thought I have never been.

Robert Rorabeck

Where I Left Off With You

Somber novels, you give me a street awash in rain, Lullabyed from the waves across the boulevard, where
The cheap red women are making love standing up:
The men in innocuous shadow, men as brave as my father,
Holding them as if they could hold them like the weather,
And my childhood in the median with an albino,
And thus the trees record a whisper: a fruit falls cylindrical,
Each blade of grass is mowed,
And salted as if by a fairy's tear, for the heroes have Gone and done a massacre, and the housewives are naked
In perpetual straddle moving halfway up to their necks
Mounted upon the Precambrian crocodiles: They do not cry,
For it is as if they never gave birth, still young, unmolested,
Treaded high, as yet in sorority, they move in unexpected
Patterns of eternal hunger,
And I watch them leaping like the bird of time at the Apex of this bridge, joined by the auburn otter, the soft-shelled
Tortoise, he torpid and religious like the conquistador;
I suppose I can never die here, as the shadows linger and
The neighborhood's lights presuppose the evening: Far away,
Upon another shore, the virgin succumbs topless to his lottery,
But I can only suppose the meaning of that sacrifice,
For now the workers leave their machinery in the quitted field,
The teachers remove themselves from the desk to grade papers,
And the lions in the zoo close their copper muzzles and thus repose,
And I remove myself from this immortality,
Picking up again where I left off with you....

Robert Rorabeck

Where I Remain Dreaming

When the lions germinate they are asleep:
The airplanes are silver quarters in the arcade of cerulean sky:
And this is south Florida, or this an arcade:
And the lights are out, but the power lines, like camels,
Are still good for something:
And the canals form a safety grid so that the afterlife of Crocodiles doesn't flood in and disturb our Christmas;
And I don't know what better words to use
To become the special place of fawning reptiles: If you are not Around to receive this attention, then make sure to garland yourself
And your daughter in the sweet shade;
For it was never my intention to vulgarize you in the salt-lick plane:
Yes, I have been up the backside of so many mountains, I have effervesced with blue collar legs from the insouciant of Ice-cream shops of tourism;
And now why don't you serve rum, or why haven't you become
The better iconoclast of my sleepless harem:
Why don't you turn off the lights and become brail:
Why are you still starving me with empty lunch pales you use to Build sand castles when you know the tide is coming in,
And your cousins the mermaids will soon be sautering with firemen
And the better licks of the green flames of fireworks:
I don't know what it means to be, for I am yet still in the last stages of High school and you are the captain of the soccer team:
And I have never seen your house let alone your bedroom; and yet
Those very same orange groves is where I remaining dream.

Robert Rorabeck

Where It Certainly Is Supposed To Belong

They give good rhymes to cars, and in passing,
Their daughters look really beautiful; and didn't I fail to Mention that all of them may be moving to Georgia
To convolute with the wavering harems of indistinguishable
Serial killers:
All the voids of parked cars diademed by icy bodies which Have been demoted in their hemispheres to something less Than planets;
But it doesn't change a thing: The fact that I loved them anyways,
And now their black police force is publishing me anyways,
Because I sucked up to them like an egg sucking dog
Pissing on a blushing fire hydrant:
And tonight I will leap the hedge again and swing on the Swings of sleeping pedestrians:
There I can turn the moon into a glowing ladle: I can make
The moon move with me through my very own constellations;
And there is no question that what I am doing
Has its own ornithology:
When I am in the darkness with my prayers flags of women not A single person on this earth can touch me:
Airconditioned into their make believe cars like being on safe
In a game of bandit children: All the pretty girls and boys who I
Call out to as if crying in the voice of their dead mothers:
So they have to come
And trust the alligators to take them across to my deep orchard
Where the mariposas light up and glow like some vast and Religious holiday congregated and finally moving off of its Trails and footpaths,
Realizing with some certainty that this place underneath the fireworks
Of airplanes and Spanish gondolas
Is where it certainly is supposed to belong.

Robert Rorabeck

Where It Is Most Needed

Houses on rivers pirouetting just for the Reflections of their lovers,
Housewives stuck in the snags of the high grasses
Like torn kites,
While rabbits snuffle the grasses;
They eat the velvet thistles and they make no
Corrections,
The terrapins returning to the containers of Eucharist;
You could say that they are touching themselves,
If you listened to anything different than the young mouths
Of rock `n roll,
Like the splinter religions of this country,
You think that your young gods are priceless, but they Are just hungry;
And they want you mouth in the soft though tourist
Light of the Castillo of Saint Marcos
Where there is only saw grass, and I don't know How many of these disinfected heirlooms you've been with;
And it shouldn't matter to me-
When I barely stop at the rest stop, I cannot even begin to Look at my face;
And I drive by you and around again like a bird enraptured
By your flowers held by your favorite man;
Soon you will be dying, you don't know; or maybe you
Only need a rest and soon you will be sleeping,
As this new cold front rolls in and pushes out the nimbus,
Does away with any unnecessary imagination;
As if mowing the stars,
And you can wake up again and believe in anything you want to,
Like the amnesias of a fire hydrant that doesn't have to stay
Where it belongs,
Or where it is most needed.

Robert Rorabeck

Where It Never Snows

Folded up into a showroom of our bodies:
Boiling cadavers over spilling for pirates at the beach:
Old words found on the lips of Trailer parks-
She works on Mondays, and has no room for love,
And we move alone being chased by a zoetrope of Our shadows,
Everything we have to say, drunken, furtive
And dismissed by the greater discoveries in the stars:
Like any bit of desert out there in the barren spheres
Between two adversaries:
In a strange and meaningless path that her grandmother
Had to cross, being led out by her special saints
Into a new town to find a job
And a place to keep her horse where it never snows.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Its Prize Is Won

Spokes on bicycles
Falling through her hair- as if birds
Realizing they are on holiday,
As the waves leap like dogs:
And that they are real, when they travel
Through the cathedrals of time,
And she happens again to be there,
Like a firework who is never done
Clapping-
And her interludes resonate- they look out
Of the windows of her kindreds house,
Where above her the sky is
An apiary burning down the armpits
Of the hemisphere,
And then she swallows her pride and goes
Out into all of the summer,
While back inside the gold fish waits
For her,
A little prize with a littler heart,
Like an enormous spoon that the fly spies,
And drapes its multifaceted simplicity
On the windowsill
Where its prize is won.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Lies The Lost Language Of God

Where lies the lost language of God, his affixed words
Which were the things themselves, grown sour and Sweet things on vines off his tongue to trample down and Relax upon the infant earth and there to spread as God
Directed them, his fingers spindling life through the rows
And waves, new heads and sprouts arising inquisitive?

She is one of the words, I know, and the sea is another,
I believe, and strung together make the first and the last,
Mixed together they join into the unction of love spilled into hearts,
And they sometimes lead to marriage and mortgage, but More often collapse into heartache and loneliness... And was God not distraught by these indomitable forces spat
Out before they had time to be cooled and tempered
To fit and lay beside him, as he lounged exhausted under
The hot word sun, to be tamed beside the nude beasts of nature?

God, like the young
Poet drunk on lemonade and beer, a waltzing seventeen
Years old experimenting with his eyes on newly born
Ladies' delectable parts, the pink sugars and powdery meats,
To be stung by a sinister star spearing down, ,
Did not yet know the wild
Tempest wetted from his tongue and set loose like a Herd of primordial horses stampeding down the interstate.
He had not the experience, a virgin to the feel of grass on His sandaled feet, a motherless thing yet to suckle from
The pearlescent breast. Unable yet to fly, he had nothing to do but stare
At the results of his gardening, and the succulent flow
Made him come, but would not stop and lie beside Him lovingly as he had commanded.

I don't know, but he must have become lost under
All that ragged time that soon trampled down on top of Him, not expecting the words to perpetuate themselves,
The sad hungering, and the delighting of the devoured,
With the words she and sea coming first and foremost,
Mounting and surging in frothy combs, in sweaty female legs
Undulating and bucking through a dangerous forest, sweeping him away, feasting, drowning his perfect garden and brilliant swing-sets he had set too close to her

Raging shores, not realizing the moon was hers.

There with him went so many of his words,
Drowned sailors and lost epitaphs to things yet unseen and Possibilities yet unrealized by the young benevolent, our Creator, to die so young, only 17, and in a death perpetuated
From the grief of lost love cast in her sea which engulfs all Men ignorant enough to step into her shore when Her tides are writhing and her shoals are red. So, He must Sleep forever down deep in her coral beds, those later words
He had yet to speak, those spells which would have come with maturity,
Blinding cures and multicolored beasts of transformation
Hidden in his breast, are never to seed and grow upon her earth,
For now in his breathless chest those treasures lay dark and hinged,
And none may know the vermillion splendors affixed in,
The secrets her sea sways forever upon.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Love Is

Now there is no music,
And of course you are here.
You say the meanest things,
And my body is sad for love of your Body,
Or maybe since kindergarten I've made
A terrible mistake,
And I never found out what love is;
I've just been on one long extended field-
Trip eyes bugging out over the naked
Still life in the painted arcades,
Or the football stadiums;
And I wanted to be profound for you,
Wanted to crawl on my back up between the Pink-shell keystone of you breast,
And say good things to your napes and stems,
To see where your rivers started,
To smell your wildflowers,
And to lay my tongues on them;
But you have found your pretty boys busting
Bricks in other exhibits,
And I can't seem to find your soul behind the blue
Velvet forest fires of your eyes;
And I guess nobody can tell me where love is....

Robert Rorabeck

Where My Hope Can Be Found

The bottle is emptied as if your milk has dried,
And I have been saying for so long it seems that I have Become an echo of myself,
While the buses are still turning and returning home,
Like woe begotten merry go rounds,
And you can walk down the street and pick up your Children and taken them home
While the sunlight hits and rebounds, and you cast your Eyes a little further across the esplanades of ground:
Alma,
But if you are not home, nor anywhere around,
Then where, oh where, can my hope be found?

Robert Rorabeck

Where My Sisters Live

They give it to me while whichever
Way you've been smiling up beside the vaudeville
And the theatre continuing down
To the dungeons where the dwarves and the heirlooms
Are dancing or whatever
In the preposterous mines: and it becomes
Like a photo in a school yard,
And we all get so bummed out, that are school days
Are so echoed,
And the night is not filled with ribbons
Are of plastic barrettes, but, otherwise,
Our mouths are becoming so filled up and down
The highways,
And she loves me, or she loves by the ways that she Knows to love a gringo,
And I call to her from the hallucinates blooming in
The armpits underneath the cypress
As if decorations for the egrets- and I love her,
But this is just another song not happening to belong
To the angels who haven't attended their gardens
Anyways- this isn't even an echo,
But the night continues on into the hubris of the quite Impossible volcanoes- as you attempt to summit
Anyways, and the highways cross and cross through the Delusions of the populations of the desert,
Where my father stores his fireworks and the Instruments of his dark and illustrious worship- or Where my sisters live, anyways.

Robert Rorabeck

Where No Flowers Can Grow

The parks fill with the cadmium lights on evil sparklers:
Underneath the phosphorous sin,
The phosphorating pinwheels of really American holidays,
I can see the innocence that hasn't been banished,
And so I go to the other side of the park and am alone:
The swings have been removed, like the teeth of my love:
How will I ever eat a candied apple again,
How will I joust through the groves. Now in the light of day
My parents are coming over to see my new house,
But Sharon is still a young mother in Colorado: Listen to these Airplanes gliding like self-aware rain, touching down just As quietly as new lovers in a new bed,
While the peonies blossom underfoot in the cages at the zoo,
But they will soon be taken over by the cool semidarkness of
The banyans; but it is even more beautiful where no flowers can grow.

Robert Rorabeck

Where No One Else Can Be Found

Voices of tourists,
Miss matched song birds-
The Mexicans are sleeping in the aloe
Beside the carport,
And I havent seen anything more beautiful-
I can go along like this
Like a little girl completely unaware
That the sunshine loves her,
Her shoulder blades innocent like
The handles of a bicycle still hung up
In a store somewhere,
Waiting for a man to come around
And take her to the sea and the places
Where people meet under the ancient crossways,
Until the words are spoken by the beautiful
Godmother who will put the kingdom to sleep,
And I will find a bed with you in a chamber
Where no one else can be found.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Nobody Really Belongs

Sad that no one is reading the songs or the odes,
Sleeping in abandoned train cars,
Eating their breakfast, kissing horny toads-
And I am no longer in AZ-
I am no longer anywhere, as I've been for so long
Dreaming of beautiful jaundiced women, gazes scarred
Like jetting stars,
Sleeping alone; and when I leave my dogs howl,
Even though I am not going anywhere- No matter
Where I leave them, I am always around;
And I want to get drunk,
But I have to look for a job, and smile, and tell
Them all about myself-worth, that even in strange
Cities I can drive cars,
I can get around and lean against the woods and see
The shadows undressing themselves and making love;
All the lost girls banter and tongue;
And I give them a crooked, lazy smile, according to My face; but I do not tell their secrets,
But if I smoked, I'd light a cigarette and burn a long
Silent cherry,
And appreciate them for having escaped the rat race,
As the traffic perambulates along the driving roads
Where nobody really belongs.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Only You And I Can Play

You need to leave him
With the sun coming up
And shooting through the sodden fields
As if an angelic sorority
Crossing the interstate;
You need to lay off the Uneasy masks of Disney World,
And take a seat at my plate,
Into the amusements of empty
Cathedrals
Filled with the starvations of
Your eyes
Or the dreams of your forest
Grown off the aquamarine esplanades
I have dredged for you
Stolen from and no
Longer of mermaids
And the temptations of amphibian
Habitat;
I will cross myself with the Most
Majestic of harts,
And come to you like stolen royalty
And take you to the midways of Exemplary amusement,
Where only you and I can play.

Robert Rorabeck

Where She Becomes Quite Undone

As sure as there are contrivances in the moon,
There is this,
Or the confusion of the animals in the park all during school,
When the sun becomes paradoxically estranged,
And all over our mouths it slips its hopes into the packages
Of our wounds,
Just as I told Alma today that I would give her all of my blood,
So she doesn't have to pay for anything
When her children assume the world, and their eyes remember
The fronteras of the sad ballrooms.
And how they past away from all of Mexico, just so that Their parents could assume their dusty jobs
To tackle each other again at night in their little rooms,
Where she forgets all about me, where she becomes quite Undone.

Robert Rorabeck

Where She Belongs

Diana, I count old issues before I sleep,
Before and while my mother is still watching me,
And bending the ass I came out of to count the Trash;
And we both live so near I-95 where the tourists
Are still counting;
And the days leap so far, Diana, to be aflame;
Tomorrow I want to show you a copy of my book tomorrow.
Diana,
Because that is how desperate I am for your light;
Diana:
I get inebriated and count to myself to prove to myself that I can still breathe, while my sick muse Sharon has a baby who's About to turn one in Colorado;
And her shade breathes with the penumbra of whatever moon
It is;
And maybe I love Kelly, who is this sweetly tattooed wife who Lives in a trailer instead of a house in the middle of many a cricketing
Acre in the middle of Loxahatchee,
Like a narcoleptic lover to the golf courses and to the ceiling fans;
And tonight while I pretend to fold airplanes
All to be closer to Kelly's lips, I dream of you as well,
Even though you can't read poetry; even you my venal muse is filling the Frothy jubilees for the more cavaliers gods well above both
Our heads,
I will sing to you moving around in your truck of ice and reefer,
Like something silky fine anthem from Antarctica who, I guess,
Doesn't yet know where she belongs.

Robert Rorabeck

Where That Must Leave Me

Two bodies, opposable-ly jarred
Sequined by mud,
The remunerations of the forget-me-nots of
Their vanished children,
Tasseled like silver comets still buzzing
Around each other,
Glowing-up at night like sticks in a fire;
And they make love
No longer fearing the population of the earth;
The bicycles unused and asleep
In the tool-shed.
The rabbit asleep beside it, restive of heart,
Not wearing any tennis shoes;
And it's a good old world, perfectly done:
There are tennis courts on the elbows,
And money in the bank-
While all your clay pots are waiting on shelves.
Each one has a name,
While you are with your husband in the first
Numbers of this countdown-
Not even thinking as your pinwheels finally cool,
That you should finally come Down from harassing to the lake where my Parents sleep,
And being like them, making love across the ripples
Of sweet Colorado,
Always waking up like flowers on the mend and
Where that must leave me.

Robert Rorabeck

Where The Angels Whisper And The Faucets Run

Copper plated world filled to
The gills with
The hard evidence of the places
I guess we have to go,
To end up-
Coming home again, touching down
Just as the mirages of
Airplanes,
And all of this a busy place,
Like minded,
Filled with little hope: in spume of
Words and roe,
Like lights out in the quieted streets,
Like venison still with beating
Hearts
Newly born and walking down to your
Pretty house
Where you haven't guessed yet that I love
You,
As I lay out in your yard underneath
The heavens, waiting to
Be the metamorphosis of anything,
Drooling with the crickets
Underneath the mailboxes- the jasmine make
A necklace of perfume,
And in the morning the roman candles will
Bloom,
And each of the comely housewives will grab
Their keys and strut across their
Yards,
Their children will go again to schools:
And I will teach them underneath the sun,
The very sun where the angels whisper
And the faucets run.

Robert Rorabeck

Where The Beautiful Girls Are Always Flying

I still live underneath the flight paths of
So many vagabonding airplanes:
Like a sorority of silver bellied girls who get up Every morning knowing exactly what they
Do:
They start out and then they go: they seem to Fly to New York
Through their sky of ice and snow:
And the sun warms them and curls their Hair like a lover,
While down below we sell produce and knickknacks
Beside the river- and our days seem long,
But sooner are later we go away anonymous-
Our dreams spread out of our breathing
And disappear without anymore alarm or amusement
Into the sky where the beautiful girls
Are always flying

Robert Rorabeck

Where The Bicycles Lay All Sleepy

I can start out a new:

I can stare far out the windows of a beating class

As the rain comes,

As you have stepped up and pushed back your chair

And taken off:

Then the school is darkened and quiet and doesn't

Use any lights,

And the easements are no longer giddied but filled up

To the brim with mallards either fornicating

Or being fed upon by the horn backed alligators;

And maybe I slept under some bus that day you were

Kissing him,

And he was telling you the better words of mute children

Or blinded carpenters,

The sun just a spear gutting the side of that

Courtyard

Where the bicycles lay all sleepy and naked and the world

Swelled all together and bloomed as if there was

An orchestra playing in time to your physical education.

Robert Rorabeck

Where The Devils Creased

If I have existed forever, I have only been remembered
In the writings of love,
Then the horses stand still when it snows, and the moon is Covered up while she is cold by Furtive blankets; and then it feels this way all across the World,
That the virgins are crying for the wild flowers again,
Because in the highness of the patriotic basins,
Only the flash pan of the silver pot bellied airplanes are Leaping,
And each stewardess inside their winged lamps just
As callous as a math or gym teacher from second grade:
Except that for somewhere beyond her extend,
And through the wilderness and wild trash of finished
Baseball games, she really exists:
She is maybe even right there over the railroad tracks:
Even while she, your muse, your Alma, told you today that She had never ridden in a train;
And you told her the story of how you took one to Washington
DC in Fifth grade:
Then you held hands with her all the way in the car, until Her man called and she had to go home, and prepare the feast
That her family would enjoy even after the fires had died,
And all of the horses had wandered off, and disappeared
Into the wilderness that seemed to envelop where the devils creased.

Robert Rorabeck

Where The Jet Engines Crisscross The Spaceshuttles

If it rained over your lips as you kissed
Him outside a beautiful house
That was not yours, I would not tell a lie-Underneath the rafters and the solar Flairs making our
Star look as if it were an arachnid full of changing
Space, in the black web of Blackness:
But I would hold you there, in my delusion
Out beside the pretty canal
The unicorns came to drink from: why aren't
They just right there:
As the cars stop so they can take pictures-
And the jet engines crisscross the space shuttles
Until they woven a quilt in the very air-
And I wanted to call for my grandmother to come
And see this but I am afraid that she's gone off
And died somewhere.

Robert Rorabeck

Where The Mermaids Have Been Sleeping

Each pinwheel burns across a new caesura:

They say this is where the mermaids have been sleeping,
Bathing in the foam underneath the pomegranate crosses:

But that the men who came to love them

Having crossed the ocean—

It is not enough: checking the window, there is no airplane:

They bathe there feral outside of school forever:

They know nothing of cul-de-sacs singing sweetly inside

Of vermilion suburbias: they only know that all of that

Has been made up:

The busses turning around pretending to believe in butterflies—

The fairies who hold clitoral orgasms in the apexes of their wings:

What do they know of business:

All of theirs is the fanfare—everywhere like pollen over the fields

Of a holiday—maybe they will even fire the poor boys tomorrow,

But, at least, they will never have to grow up—

If this is what is real: concrete, and professions, and dead ends,

Then let tomorrow be a hidden thing,

And the beautiful spirits grow in the grottos underneath the cypresses

That lactate their pollens bell tides to an ocean who knows

All of their names.

Robert Rorabeck

Where The Sky Whistles

Let's get out of here and go
To where the sky whistles,
Where even now she is getting laid
In places beautiful,
Where the waves rile their parade,
And the sky exonerates in humid scepters:
This, through the succession of underpasses
In epileptic reoccurrence,
Where helicopters float as dreamy wasps
Above the orchards of round and fragrant citrus,
Above the limestone where she whispers,
The wheels beneath us doing their empirical Cessations- Oh, there are tourists wearing
Their moribund corpulence,
And fine young navy men singing their Jingoisms, and white haired men selling
Ice-cream in the cross's wispy shadow, but the lips of one thing surrender
To the lip of the other, and slip beneath her
As she pleases, and live with her there in Innumerable caresses in the shallows,
Cradles for the teaming of gilled children,
And this poem gives little answer to all the Waves which lull their slumber,
But let us go and sit and wonder where they Make love inside their bed of lucid spittle,
And make things up in puckish kisses,
Where the land ceases its existence, in Keen mirages falling like unclothed wrapping,
Here is where we should sit to name our children,
Our lips mirror sea and shore,
And the sky is whistling.

Robert Rorabeck

Where The Super Heroes Fail

Coming swiftly towards Christmas while
All of the boats and their Pirates swing-
And the oceans look so beautiful, whilst the rose
Bushes are all awash-
And the forts of your harems are always so beautiful
That their colors cannot even be described,
But they keep to themselves,
And keep flying their unsundered flags
Underneath the heavens whilst I search for My own home,
As the sea swells and becomes too beautiful and Doesn't even care,
As my sisters travel further and further away from
Me,
As you keep your mouth to my ear, and keep Wanting to promise me "promises, "
Forcing me to spend the weekends alone-
Getting massages,
And losing all of my faiths as the sea swells,
And the airplanes fly higher and higher, managing themselves,
And trying to keep up the witchcrafts- whilst, eventually,
I cannot even bother,
As the sunlight burns forever through the windows of Trailer parks, and the evil I know just gets more
Evil- and the super heroes fail while we all travel back
Again to the shadowy passages of another school.

Robert Rorabeck

Where There Lovers Seem To Go

Even when there is a stage of eyes made into an Ocean of tears—
And the sword fish metamorphosize into the beaten breasts
Of waves
Underneath the armless clocks of sky—
Even there—from the windows of the zoos, the peacocks
See—lighting around them their fan's body—
Like a Ferris Wheel in a verdant cage—
Trying to distract her attention even after she has evaporated,
Becoming another man's bride—
As the swordfish flash their bills to an innocence
Gone before to the horizon—
Where their lovers seem to go as they are left behind

Robert Rorabeck

Where They Belong

This has to happen sometime, with the sun coming up:
The working girls exhausted like the nocturnal blooms of Cesspool weeping flowers
Underneath the hangnails of the moon
Who has collected so many wimble bellies of weightless
Cosmo naught s
The curious angels flaunt around like comely goldfish
Above the apple orchards and the forts who smear
Their wreaths into the sea;
And it goes so far away until the first inklings of the morning's School day comes up and shows the weariness in the surface
Of trailer parks:
Mickey Mouse who lays off the whores, and gets to fitting himself
Back on,
And the carnival takes to the road again, like hungry, dirty
Butterflies just trying to figure out where they belong.

Robert Rorabeck

Where They Were Bound

All in a place of fealty let off of monsters,
Kissing though breathless like Deep purple lilies,
Like a brother and a sister who never knew,
And a sword that sang up through the jungles
And eucatastrophes,
Every teardrop of a waterfall that hummed until
The blood has stopped weeping
From the wound,
And the body laid empty, like cenotaph,
Like tomb;
And the night around the school buses caracoled
While the mountains rose up
The oldest of old,
And the murder underneath the rose thorns was Never solved,
I just looked up into your eyes until I saw that she did
Not love me,
She did not love me, even though she kept her brown
Hours around my ghostly town,
Like the ghosts of sailors who finally laid up against
The whitewash of a lighthouse:
Their souls, their almas no longer safe, but restless,
As if they were the butterflies courting back to Mexico;
Or even after that:
Who knows where they were bound.

Robert Rorabeck

Where To Find Her Next Meal

Some casualties are stolen by the wind:
That is when the busses pick up, and the baseball players
Start swigging their gin,
That is when the loam in her throat starts burning the notes,
Like a weathervane across the old valley's moat:
This is where I've swung for you, and stretched my fattened
Body towards your holidays;
And this is where you've sighed for me, as the wind brushed
The mowed sod blanketing a comely grave:
And where I failed in the repeated motions, the way a headless
Chicken starves out in the tundra before the eyes
Of a heavily sated mountain lion, blue and lucky anyways,
Purring as she knows where to find her next meal.

Robert Rorabeck

Where To Look

Call now down the boy from his dreams,
Because the day itself is weary and the school yard
Is going away,
Like a vase of flowers emptied;
And aren't you at your window, looking so good:
Maybe somewhere over your shoulder the music
Is playing you recorded yourself,
As if a fish from its thoughts; and you are calling
All the pretty birds to your father's Ornithology: And I haven't forgotten you:
I've even been stealing bicycles for you; and I've Met Orson Wells, and been to the planetarium
In the middle of my lunch break. I didn't once look for the Waves,
But caught you in the distant hemispheres, opening your Window and undressing in your boudoir for all the world
To see,
Like Mary in her heavenly grotto while all the birds were Singing. Crossed by intersections.
Your holy image shows up everywhere we drive;
And at nights right smack dap in the boulevard your penumbra
Is in its holy suite; and I care all about you and wish
To show my friends, if they only knew where to look.

Robert Rorabeck

Where You Are

Where you are
The space between me and you
The platterless green table
Devoid of edges and silver wear
The dead vermilion sea our eyes
Look across but never meet—
Upon the void of casual living,
You lay yourself down for a man
With casual hands, who keeps you
Timed with a stopwatch
On a tiny plot of sodden land;

Your house is on the corner
By which other cars divide
Into tiny white tombstone
Homes like yours,
With one cypress tree in the front yard,
Lonely and confused,
You walk your toy dog back and forth—
Never thinking of staring
For the length of a TV show
At the corrugated pink underbelly
Of the clouds wrangled in off
The invisible sea,
Or to walk down the green embankment
To stare at the sopophoric alligator
Who, if you feed it your hand,
Will tell you my name.

Robert Rorabeck

Where You Wish To Be

My head in its amusements, a castaway not caring
What the crazy thoughts it might jig;
Going like the splendid cut-throat light amidst the Caesuras; Sharon, aren't you reading this-
Cut-throat bouquets of piratical jargon- it is fun,
Sharon:
I wish you could share in what I am doing, Sharon,
Cosmonaut: I know who you are- I know beauty,
I have really, really been to mars:
F$ck all my sisters and my great uncles, they just know
Animals the judges of this species; but we are really something
Sharon,
And we can take Erin along as a kick-throat spell, like Going along together for a very long while, a fairy-tale first
Along through the aloe an then through the very unending
Desert of lieutenants and petroleum jelly:
Like jelly-fish, we can't have no feeling except for what we Can kill- what we can dispel; and I am already some sort
Of homely god, lost without directions or lights of traffic
To kill;
It is the best place to be without the lights fall on my face,
Sharon, and you could be here if you were more sensitive,
And now all the word is a verb with a fin:
Sharon, Sharon, Sharon: your breath is just a kicking-globe,
And how does your child feel: going into the deep cauldrons
Of red-lipped valleys,
And I would like to say your child's name while she tugs
Away at your breasts, Sharon.
Which one does she prefer, but that would be too unfair,
Sharon- that would be too surreal, while my dogs howl,
Sharon, Sharon:
I would change your tires, I would set you happily again along
You way through the Indian casinos through the headless pines,
The depthless estuaries, Sharon
If that is where you are- If that is where you wish to be.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Your Gold Is Buried

No honey on the lake of concrete:
A yard of concrete costs a buck, and you can Cover all of the beautiful vineyard
For a penny,
And the entire hills will roll like a marble
Arcade,
But I still wish I was in Colorado,
Stealing a beautiful mother,
Going to get laid;
And I loved- I loved a bird.
I loved a salamander, so long I loved:
Atop the apexes of rotting houses,
I loved,
Alone: Mermaids and naked creatures undressed
Of exoskeletons,
Screaming for the pot and without guns or Belt buckles;
And nothing but the night is still waiting for me,
And the swings are waiting to take me nearer
The pine trees' ankles,
While a housewife in South Africa loves me,
And I her:
And I love the gentle tears you might shed if you Ever thought to climb high enough to get to Where I've been,
Sharon,
Riding the narrow gauge backs of slender trains,
Sharon,
Because you are the only good muse I know,
And I want to make love to you inside blue tents,
While hiding a lamp close to your Choreographed backside as it leaps like a fairytale,
Because I am mystified by every river of your being,
And I most earnestly wish to know
Where your gold is buried.

Robert Rorabeck

Where Your Paper Angels Turned

Pomegranates growing outside of the Orange and yellow flea markets:
But you will never forget about me,
How I brushed your sugar cane shoulders with My astral fingers,
And made you come out loud like a full color
Television turned to its highest volume:
Made you scream through the minuets
As the girls high school volley ball team was Playing a tournament-
Made you weep and orgasms right on the rug
Of your childhood living room,
Made you sweat and beat your breasts
Right up to the ceiling fans,
Where your paper angels turned around in Dunned moats: but eventually they came down,
And rested quite perpetually underneath your Sweat and tears.

Robert Rorabeck

Wherever We Wished

All the picture books have told you that you
Have been in a triumph of Sabbath schools for so long
That you can't remember the park where we swung:
With our instruments down our spines, and our dice
In liquor sacks
And the mice running in between the smooth, lucky stones
Of our tracks;
And the world glittered; and the world shone,
And there wasn't an officer around who could send us home:
And the pine trees spoke to us, and the moon gave us fish,
I asked you to look at me and then we glided in tandem off to Sleep,
And the waves lapped like mouthy kittens their milk from
The dish,
And the trailers came bringing new homes like seashells where Diminutive mermaids lived; and they combed their hair
And fit into our pockets;
And we took them along with us wherever we wished.

Robert Rorabeck

Wherever We Wishes

All the picture books have told you that you
Have been in a triumph of Sabbath schools for so long
That you can't remember the park where we swung:
With our instruments down our spines, and our dice
In liquor sacks
And the mice running in between the smooth, lucky stones
Of our tracks;
And the world glittered; and the world shone,
And there wasn't an officer around who could send us home:
And the pine trees spoke to us, and the moon gave us fish,
I asked you to look at me and then we glided in tandem off to Sleep,
And the waves lapped like mouthy kittens their milk from
The dish,
And the trailers came bringing new homes like seashells where Diminutive mermaids lived; and they combed their hair
And fit into our pockets;
And we took them along with us wherever we wished.

Robert Rorabeck

Wherever We Wished

All the picture books have told you that you
Have been in a triumph of Sabbath schools for so long
That you can't remember the park where we swung:
With our instruments down our spines, and our dice
In liquor sacks
And the mice running in between the smooth, lucky stones
Of our tracks;
And the world glittered; and the world shone,
And there wasn't an officer around who could send us home:
And the pine trees spoke to us, and the moon gave us fish,
I asked you to look at me and then we glided in tandem off to Sleep,
And the waves lapped like mouthy kittens their milk from
The dish,
And the trailers came bringing new homes like seashells where Diminutive mermaids lived; and they combed their hair
And fit into our pockets;
And we took them along with us wherever we wished.

Robert Rorabeck

Which Flower Is This

Which flower is this? They don't have penny Candy
Anymore- They have plenty of dollar stores
With dollar candy, which used to be penny candy:
They aren't accepting applications; they've got a stack
Of them so high,
The skyscrapers cause falls of shadows in the heart of A Midwestern city,
But not enough time: I write this because I brag I Gave a hobo all my pennies today,
Two fifty cent pieces I stole from home:
They were both worth fifty cents;
He can buy a little beer. Look at the scars on This side of my face, mirror- Now look away;
And I haven't been to visit your grave, I'm sorry;
I'm too depressed to get out the door- Its too long a drive
Now that you're my neighbor, honey-
Those silent green neighborhoods they don't make anymore.
Now its all cemeteries:
Like Viking Kings in their houses, what great dogs
And chattel rubbed together it makes for Slender tourism: I've seen her jogging everywhere, and her Hair cascades the autumn where so many leaves sleep
Upon my floor.

Robert Rorabeck

Which Is What You Are

Flowers who close their blue eyes at night,
Stems who quiver like strings and the wind the bow:
I have seen you there sleeping too,
The sky a fire of untouchable passion, and the waves beside
You, like dogs beckoned to your knees:
And right now you are for real in the tall grass, shoeless,
Spectacle of anemic crosses in your ears;
And maybe tiny lights come on above you in the fiberboard,
And the ceiling fans spin like the roulette wheels
Of domesticated hallucinations:
Your new tattoos curl across the overpass of your ankle,
And your husband sleeps beside you too:
The bb gun is propped up in your oldest child's room;
And they all dream of differently similar things than you:
This is your family in the wildfire grotto of your eyes,
Unperceiving, though breathed from your womb;
And I have tried so many times to justify myself to you,
Waking up, yawning and kidnapped with new scars and complexes:
The high rises fall like penitent sinners, and you close your eyes,
Though your eyes were already incredibly far away;
And new men come toward you repeatedly, allowing you to either
Pass or exit;
But your marriage remains in the tall grass that you stepped barefoot
Through, nearing the rattlesnake in its semipermeable cocoon:
I waited for it to strike you, but it only reached out as if it had Lips,
And it kissed the flower on your ankle, and from its unpromised
Poison,
The butterfly resumed while you were sleeping, and the stars twinkled,
And divided like the mitosis of starfish,
Which is what they were named after anyways; and which is what You are.

Robert Rorabeck

Which Makes Me The Boss

Undying pinafores, I was worshipping you, I said
The pledge of allegiance to you from atop our mountain,
While the rains cried cheekily all week;
And I hadn't written poems to you the last two days
Of this sodden week;
But now the deluge it comes like a surprise, like kittens
On your birthday; I guess I wanted to live forever,
And I guess I will:
My grandfather wanted to live forever, but now he is gone:
My grandfather is gone, he could not last,
He disappears like smoking diesel underneath the Crenulated overpass; and he wanted to build a house,
And he wanted to last- His wife was young and Christian- and all of my aunts and uncles have so many Children-
But that is not important; it is important that these words
Should grow and come again, should worship their Own heads after the green, green frost, should masturbate
Alone without any tourists,
And in the savage green sea get tossed; and now I have bested
Him: my father, my grandfather; and I am lost;
And the sea is sea-green and teal with envy-
And who do I love, I don't know- I am lost; I am not Even who I once was, but who cares:
I will live forever- I will live forever,
Which makes me the boss.

Robert Rorabeck

Which One Of Us Was In Charge

I groped her body like a blind gardener;
And she was yet too taught to have any children or
To have drunken much liquor,
So I imagine that tomorrow she will be shopping,
A pretty flower right next to the fine and opulent
Shore; and it can go on forever
That one body next to the fine and opulent shore,
While the trees are all bent and leeward:
So that the children of innocent young mothers can Play and lean upon them,
And even yet exercise their animals upon them
With periods of alligators through the mowed grass
And airplanes in the sky;
And if you were to search out there tomorrow you
Would find me out there almost nude in the pale green
Underlying of that almost infinite sky;
And we could make love together while the motors
Didn't question us with their cylinders or barbs;
And the greater emperors or grandmothers wouldn't have
To reawaken from their graves to question us
About which one of us was in charge.

Robert Rorabeck

Which Way To Land

Into the heroisms of
Bright tenements,
I find myself dying,
Scarred and
Effaced again,
While I see you in
The effigy of his
Mexican relationship, who from
Your tawny kiln
Has produced both
Of your children,
Who came out to suckle off
Your mud,
The way fireworks gurgle
In brown sin; until like mud pies
For baby dolls left out in
The sill to tempt
Mockingbirds,
You leave that continent and return
Quite faithfully with olive branches in Your teeth
To show me which way to land.

Robert Rorabeck

Which Yet May Be Real

Now does the spider dream of me,
As I dream of him,
The poisonous expectation set up shop in
The bends of cemented plumbing, vibrating
Around the knees of the pump house's tinned hum;
Or, like me, is he unable to conceive the ambitions
Of higher men as they reach the summit of petroleum,
As we go down the other side like lost children
Just learning to walk, as I spill out reckless novels
For a half hour a day, as excuses for my hours
Of self-inebriated recreations,
Though surely I continue to conceive him spun in That diminutive world, waiting for the monsoons to Grow the flies,
Just as many legs as her, the galloping centipede,
The ambitious love with honey-split lips, though how Can I know of her except that she busies me in Unwanted sleep, and I keep up on her with my words,
Like spindles of love from a hypothetical thorax,
Just as the spider weeps a life on lesser fluids,
Weary of the multitudinous cannibalism of his offspring,
So I see him resting there in the dryness of his cove,
While mothers wash and wash the clothes, just as their Children, until they are sure that these are clean, and smell
So- But if they saw him as I did, would they not call for His extinction, only because they smell as soap and lavender,
And have not yet perceived him watching me in fitful conception
Of slumbering wounds, as I behold him steadily in kind,
Assuring one another that we are the halves of the complexity
Which yet may be real.

Robert Rorabeck

Which You Have So Faithfully Have Strayed

A casual touch to be the end of me, like the purring of A ghost:
I carried your cigarettes to the cemetery, and you were
The most utmost;
But you could not linger in my dally,
Weren't your eyes made of far away:
Weren't they just as newly painted as the happenstance of An all of a sudden story,
And I will not say your name to save me:
My joy was the joy of a firework making for a moment
The curb brilliant,
Making even the most religious of mailmen hesitate:
All of these colors foaming and sizzling down into your Hot plate;
And this was just you out there in the outstanding cold,
Lost for a little while pressed to the jubilee of a needy child at His favorite game:
Hot and wild, until my paper flamed and curled,
And all that I loved darkened and mewed to you, which made
You realize that I wasn't your favorite,
And that this wasn't even real, and that you had a home,
And a father whose warmth was even more certain than the empty
Darkness to which you
No longer linger, from which you so faithfully have strayed.

Robert Rorabeck

Which You Will Eventually Have To Eat

Alma: you are not wounded:

You came from Guerra Mexico like a monarch butterfly

Who had forgotten what it was

Seven years ago:

You've been here as long as I should have been celibate,

Biting my lip and playing video games with the moon,

While you made love to your sometimes husband and brought

Two children into the world:

Michael and Heidi,

And I don't know exactly where you live, only that it is Very near here and with your parents: I know you already have

Papers, but not if you can vote; but that means if you

Have any sort of use for me it would be out of consideration,

Or that I have promised you my new little house near the sea

And a tandem bicycle:

I told you I was published, but that was just to make you think I

Was macho, but not macho like your husband who didn't

Want you to finish nursing school;

And that is why you were separated for two years, but macho like

A fish basking in the shallows of your nearly ochre eyes,

Because you love scary movies, even if you said you were only

Playing

And you didn't accept my bouquet of gladiolas tonight, the purple ones;

But you did accept the little potted flower which I don't know the Name for, and you had the audacity to ask me what kind of

Shade it liked when you knew the only thing I am really good

At is selling fireworks;

But you are very good medicine for me Alma, and you are truly beautiful:

You really are a vibrant mariposa, and vermillion,

Because green is your favorite color; and you are helping me to forget

The other mariposa who drive lunch trucks or who disappear into

Tennessee and Colorado;

Even if you do have two children cooing in the basins of your parents'

Carports; and even if I am not really beautiful enough for you.

At least I will always know that your favorite color is green,

And you love the two rabbits one of which you promised to name after me;

Both of which you will eventually have to eat.

While Everyone Decides What To Do

Made for the green terraces, with the sorority of moons
Above the unicorns,
Grazing- grazing and purple throated- what frogs and Princes there are watching them,
Ululating in the imaginations of shell and rebar,
Your mother in the grotto
Or the carport, barely even twenty- and she is sweating over
That machine, swearing and crossing herself
For your father to come home, skipping across the skulls
And bones,
The cenotaphs and pornographies of conquistadors and Abandoned school girls, just so that she can feel okay-
The sound of her work so furious she cannot even Hear the warning of the rattlesnake
As it comes out across orange extensions cords,
Wanting to kiss her too,
To put a vile of venomous pearl beneath her knee,
And then it rains, while everyone decides what to do.

Robert Rorabeck

While Feeding Its Young

Flowers who can never exist in sandboxes:

What are they looking up to now, with the world of make believe
And little fingers surrounding them,
The imprints of a game that the wind takes away,
Arousing the stewardesses as they turn around like a game of Prizes at the midway,
Or sudden fires from the small lips of bottles, cantankerous
But fickle under the moonlight of a playground,
Are good for only one kiss,
Dripping the mocking lamentations like the insincere love songs
Of a bird
Who, dripping its wings across the surf of ant lions,
Is only on the search for pretty things,
To diadem its brambly carriages, back at home where it does its Best jobs while feeding its young.

Robert Rorabeck

While I Am More Beautiful Than Enough

Night slips through my hidden sorrows and I enjoy
This new pain:
It comes up to me like panthers wanting a free meal, and I
Only having my tired body:
Really, Erin, what did you expect of me, if you are still reading
This painted stuff:
That I was celibate for almost seven years, and now I'm going to Get my muff; and that I saved up a pretty time for you,
While you didn't return my calls:
Did you expect that I would spend it all in the aquarium of the Last paganisms of a final Catholic school in Missouri?
I hardly had enough, Erin: Erin:
So follow your fire engine boys and blow hard, hard, Erin:
Because your beauty hardly is enough, but I can still remember you
From high school Latin, Erin, blowing hard:
You are rightly beautiful, but you are hardly beautiful enough to shine my Horse, Erin,
While I am more beautiful than enough.

Robert Rorabeck

While In The Sky

Blue wood:

He says he made it for my mother,

But I can tell he is lying:

He chanced upon it,

Or he stole it- and it is not for her:

It is for him-

But the carport is for her,

Barefooted- the open chord, orange-

Throated,

Will sting her lying there in Pieta-

And that will be her grotto

That he rents,

But not for her:

And when it rains, the canals will

Overspill,

And her children will come and go-

At first from elementary and

Then from high school,

And the heavens will linger for

A little while in the sky-

And he will say they are for her,

But I am sure they are not even his to give away.

Robert Rorabeck

While It Moves Away

Mitts of hidden roses to play baseball,
Oracular hollows in the woods for the eyes of Boyfriends to see your steaming fires,
Your hair as black as frightened octopus,
The liquors of your amber skin,
Diana- The park of your natural beauty is filled
With the molar pillars that can have no rest-
Truants are always smoking and ejaculating within
The bunches of your spikenard midst;
And you came to the fruiteria on Saturday when it
Was spitting raining, with your boyfriend,
And asked for me, only you called me guapo hombre,
Your handsome man- Not even my own mother
Would believe your kindness; and how am I to love
You tomorrow after tonight I have pitifully described your Parks and estuaries and your boyfriend who flits there
The like king of your huckleberries,
When this is a dream that will be hung-over when the liquor
Is finished; and when I see you tomorrow I want to give You all the flowers we sell,
While the traffic runs so prettily; it runs on and on,
But how should your body then move when it realizes how It fully occupies the body of my hapless souls-
Will it be just as migratory as a gallery as I already know:
Will you take all the roses that I know to give you:
On its pretty fine-ass wheels, will it moves away with my soul....

Robert Rorabeck

While My Heart, The Slave

They have some plan to cut the uncircumcised cake
Far back into an estuary or a glade
In the forest underneath the overpass where the bums and winos
Are all passed out from doing the same exact thing
On furniture your Lebanese carpenters have Discarded:
And there is a plutonium factory here at the end of the hall
After so many windows that they have shut down and turned into A fireworks factory:
So all now they turn out is whistling cuckoos that end with a Bang into the night anyways,
While you have taken off all of our clothes and slipped into
The sheets in the grotto of your bed,
Already well supposing that you are some man's muse:
In a warm and quiet place, as steadfast as a grave:
Their he rests beside you: your jailor: Alma- while my heart,
The slave.

Robert Rorabeck

While My Wife Takes A Shower

While my wife takes a shower,
Brushes her teeth,
I get drunk—it is almost all of the time
I have—this watermelon field of Disney
World is almost over—
My mom is calling;
It sounds like oblivions—
Tonight or tomorrow my very first Child will be born—
Don't you know wherever it is I will have to Take him
While the daylight of my childhood
Remains upon the last elbow of Another kaleidoscope of my vanished
Bachelorhood—
Now don't you see that I have to survive like
This, no longer looking beautiful,
And having to accentuate my gut:
Now it feels as if I have to write my latest and Strongest mews,
While of it sounds like echoes of elbows touching:
And this is all that I have for tonight
Or forever
While the vampires are practicing their
Espionage to the werewolves of the forest—
I have loved you for a little while,
Anyways—but now, I am sad to say, this is all
That was made to happen.

Robert Rorabeck

While Our Eyes Are Closed

My son is here beside me-
My half-blood son,
Naked-
The stone is sleeping,
And soon my son will sleep.
Outside,
All of Shanghai is naked
And making excuses for
The way the world is turning-
The planes are sunken,
And my father in law is having An operation tomorrow-
My birthday-
For now, all of the lights
Are turned out
And the quiet intrudes-
All of the daylight's fondlings
Through the daytime's interludes-
And I think about my blue collar
Job on the otherside of
The world,
Something I cannot be excused from,
And the poem I just lost-
As the night opens its romance
For strangers down upon the street-
My son goes to sleep in a room
Beside mine-
The lights go out,
As our hearts, close together, like
The circus, move to another town
While our eyes are closed.

Robert Rorabeck

While She Is Crying

I watch the alley cats' ablutions
Next to the fire hydrant-
Not knowing what it is, except that it is peaceful-
And for Christmas they will eat
Discarded turkey and Swordfish-
And in their dreams, great cicadas as tall as Red woods,
And stewardesses as grand as giants to love them,
And let them indoors
To give them unending saucers of strawberry milk
And sing songs to them that they Can understand beneath the greater and lesser
Heavens
And her planets who come as gallantly as gallants,
Singing her songs and Slaying her witches- and ringing about her
In unending lessons of servitude and Virtue- but she will love them less than the alley cats:
And she will let them go,
While she will keep them- and they will bestow upon
Her luck and virtue,
And keep her bed so warm even through the nights
While she is crying.

Robert Rorabeck

While The Orchard Sings

I very much appreciate breathing in the shadowed
Real-estate of your distance:
All the cars seem to be buzzing upward satisfied in their Air-conditioning, while I get quotes on house insurance:
I drive past golden lions to look at my yellow house sleeping like
A mariposa fat and sated, escaped from the zoo
Where I grew up as a little boy; and then I had to matriculate into Highschool, and I had to see you- and it really busted me up:
Now I am a minor poet destitute from the red bricks of state university:
Gone from the gong shows of the sweet titted sororities and all of their Hosts:
I used to jog the graveyard shift all around your university, Sharon;
And I thought of you creased in the armpits of love letters while I slept
With a woman who could never know how to really sleep with me;
And the wind whistled your name, Sharon;
And I have hidden beautiful heirlooms in the wombs of trees that you Will never find, which would have been the secret marriage of my Love if you ever skipped out of class and smelled the resin on my baking Blocks, Sharon:
Now I have a house which is a perfect miniature of the Alamo, and I can Bicycle down to the sea any arbitrary evening and kiss her mouth instead Of yours;
While all the lucky cats are dying, and the housewives sleep in the unlucky
Guts of the harpooned albatrosses, and the numbers for all of these Crimes come with the territory, I still whistle for you like a day laborer
Out in the fine morning, his fingers numbed and fibrillating Excited if hardly paid for his picking time; while the orchard sings and Vibrates in your beautiful name.

Robert Rorabeck

While The Tadpoles Metamorphosis

Here in the twilit distance of nothing that was ever
Perfect,
I hold your head against the ancient walls that cry with your Spanish decrees:
That you were my first and only muse that I have made love
To,
And this, and now this:
The terrapin poking its head from the shell, as if from a bowling
Alley,
While your kids wonder and kiss the green arcades of nothing
That you have given to them,
Under the sun or your roof that I once made a bed out of, Alma;
And now all of this is floating like protoplasm,
Like the matters over our heads that can never be explained,
Like Christmas presents or the satyrs that can never be real,
But the airplanes come,
And the dogs chase the perfumes of your runny legs in the park,
And it is okay to be afraid, Alma;
And now this; and if I hold your lips up next to me and drink
While the tadpoles metamorphosis; why then, now everything.

Robert Rorabeck

While The Waterfountains Await Your Lips

Imperfections waiting there,
And in the hall:
All of the locker combinations, and my father
Wants to borrow more:
And here I am drinking alone, lingering,
Remembering Sharon in the sunlight of fire drill-
The places that will not fill,
Except that Alma is so brown, and she has become the Amber fire of my town,
Licking the school houses and the elbows of Sweet things that even now fail to move,
While the water fountains await your lips or mine.

Robert Rorabeck

While The Wine Glasses Shatter

I can smell my belly-button coming undone;
Its what turned my ex-girlfriend off me,
So she went to other resorts,
Exclusively Jewish with belly-buttons not Deep enough to attract the dogs;
And I have begun to think about that more,
How the skin is like an entire sheet that wraps
Up something otherwise unsavory;
And how my skin is coming off, and I am
Becoming the monster outside of society,
Not invited into the loci of heroes and their Cupbearers, the fine locks, the powdered breasts:
People who dress up on Friday night and pay for Dinners, and smile, and say now if the food was good,
Or if it was not good they find someone to replace it
With better food. I cannot say that I know these people,
But I imagine each of their belly buttons, tightly wound,
Attributing to their prosperous accords. Tomorrow I
Will be able to fit two fingers into my belly button,
In a month my fist, so that by New Years, my stomach will Be nothing more than a rippling sheet with a frayed hole,
And beneath it all that stench, the moaning wound,
And the scars I have there from rock climbing and Chickenpox, they will fly away with the rest of me when There is a strong wind, if I forget about the dangers of the Beach: I will go with the kites, and my major organ will fly
On its own, and the rest of me will sit down and ponder
A grave that doesn't yet exist, while the wine glasses shatter,
As the women scream.

Robert Rorabeck

While They Are Away

What word to begin with to cross the fjord
Of troublingly planted anthems:
There they are waving like a sea of grass, like Girls in bells or Poisonous tulips;
And I can hear the truck coming even now,
Coming to pick me up and take me off to work or School;
But down there the dragon sleeps in his quiet and Tiny sororities;
Sleeps with the colonies of water flutes:
He wake up and divides and all day long the dwarves
Bring him his gold,
And thieves tell him where he can find things:
All day long he doesn't even open an eye, all cool
And green and wimbled
Like water chestnuts-
So very sly and comfortable is this mighty king
In his shady hold,
That he doesn't even mind that I've been peeking down
Into the cracks of a highway's well just to Get an envious vision of his court;
For even I begin imaging what I he needs from me
While I close my eyes through the tightly vested lectures
Of arithmetic and green lawnmowers;
How I might go down to him and appease him
And bring him gifts of approach to become mutual in the steep
Valley of his wonderful truancy,
Maybe like a soccer field sunken in her distantly burn eyes,
That only seem to be sad while they are away.

Robert Rorabeck

While They Serve Their Handsome Men Their Pretty Dinner

All this gaff for no limelight-
Slipping into the shadows of the lockjaw
Curb,
Waiting for her to leave and for it to rain:
I suppose she kissed me once in the opening act
Of this awful long winded play-
Corn-pone or cobblestone,
Looking forlornly through rain thrashed windows-
At the steaming plumbs, the plump and steamy
Housewives with red rocket ships tucked between Their thighs-
Just literary ejaculation, the stage craft of a weary
Soul licking his lips to get to Venus-
But isn't even virile enough to erect the tent of His blue phallus:
There are names I love, and girls too in all kinds of Winter;
In all kinds of winter I am perpetually looking in While they serve their handsome men their Pretty dinner.

Robert Rorabeck

While You Give In Your Eternity

Sisters in the same room,
But one at a time; and I've been doing nothing
Beautiful except for you,
Maybe once a month, or not at all, but one at a time:
Slowly and really economically:
While your bodies are just as coy as the disembodied
Cheshire Cat underneath the airplanes:
That is how you play out for me and any old boy who Is willing to pay;
And maybe like a satire, or like a sitcom; or maybe just like
The letter S, I will see
You again this Friday, because I want to come in out
Of the rain,
And I want to feast upon you perfumed in your lingerie,
Because I am allowed to fall down upon you like a man
Impressed by his savior in his grapevines,
Like old or even extinct lovers getting together in rest stops
To pass the discordant time;
And because of this you are like Disney World, and I am
Just getting started; but I want to be all busy all over you,
While the night transoms into itself,
While the ships sink, and while your other sisters who are Only half as beautiful have fallen so far away
To have forgotten the important business you do for me
Takes away from the flirtatious meaning they only give with Their eyes in passing, while you give in your entirety,
Which is why you are so remembered and absolutely praised.

Robert Rorabeck

While You Lay Asleep

Going through the motions of a work place,
Trying to make eyes with Alma:
Brown, saturnine, always cleaning: Alma:
Sometimes you look up at me and my soul tears away
Like a little boy releasing his kite,
Hoping it will go past the power lines and be free:
Sometimes you don't look at me at all, and I stand beside
The water cooler
And know it is because I can't put together two good stanzas:
I've been doing this all week:
Drinking and bumming for you, Alma, while you make love
To Nelson;
And where do your children sleep?
Where do your parents sleep:
You have so many beautifully and golden rings on your fingers:
You shop at the Sunshine Flea Market where I used to play in the open Theatre of trees as a boy, past the clutches of Rattle snakes and the dams of water moccasins:
I was alive a full seven years before you were conceived and then
Set out like a paper boat through the tiny saints of Guerrero Mexico;
But you found your way here, Alma,
To my playground, and we happened together as I made my way home:
And now I have no other wish but to find you out,
Alma,
To find out what your dreams sound like while you lay asleep.

Robert Rorabeck

While Your Birth Mother Is Away

The wind blew to me all today:
Blew and blew like a mother of sweet ferality:
She swam and swum and couched over me,
While my birth mother was at work:
I sat alone nursing at scars, thinking of a girl who Cannot love me,
Because I cannot love, and the places that are lost
To me,
A god I cannot pray to, because I cannot;
I went outside once after the rain, giving up on so
Many of the darkneses that would Have set me free:
There is a stack of cinderblocks and weeds next to
The canal;
And it will be there tomorrow, and the wind will Blow like a mother who cannot be caught or made
To understand:
She will blow out all of your wishes while your Birth mother is away;
And tomorrow, and tomorrow, and tomorrow.

Robert Rorabeck

Whiskey

I get drunk. I tear down
Mountains,
Grab my father's gun
And shoot up and down
The night until the Coyote howls. I kill
10 Indians.
I forget to say my Prayers. I kneel down
At the foot of the Bed and vomit.
Then I passed out on
Her birthday last year
And wrote her love
Letters while I slept
I can't remember.

Robert Rorabeck

Whistling

Published in a bloodspot
On a canary
As he's sent into the odorless mines
To sing no more,
To sing no more

Robert Rorabeck

White Christmas

The ghost unobserved in a sea
Of cacophonous Latinos,

I saw white Christmas
For the last time
At the exhibit of Anglos
Behind the glass
In the museum of New Mexico

The stuffed family of luxury
Grazing about the winking bows,
The brightest of metals remembered,
Dipping branches in the sad dissonance,
Deaf ears on mannequins can never explain
The new waves of blue-collar wonderment
Flooding in from the scorpion-dessert,
Ushering in the sadly wonderful change
Of social evolutionism
Which has forever mutated the color and appetite
Of America's skin.

The plastic children were very polite,
Holding half eaten bits of holiday cake
In their cherubic, polished fingers,
Shaded in the spindles of holy light
Their eyes glutting on the feast of presents,
They never seem to ask where their souls
Are hidden

The father and mother smiling rather slightly,
Resting tiny porcelain tea saucers in their laps,
The last unbroken bit of their empire,
Now like frozen polar bears in naked rhapsody
For the voyeuristic eyes on the new waves of Modern conquistadors

I, their impotent cousin, look on like
Some sort of ghostly dessert slowly melting
Away and evaporated by the heat of the emerging

Bodies, spiced by chili and the scent of Strange tobaccos hissed between their silver-shingled teeth.

Hispanic mothers, corpulent and fertile,
Their smooth bowled skin followed by a health train
Of offspring speak inspirational epitaphs to the dead.
"Bonitas blancas, " they whisper religiously and the smallest of their Young cry. "Pero ahora totales son muertos."

But their drunken husbands, walking at the tail end,
As if trying to stabilize on an inebriated ship, say the truth of their feelings.
"Gringos putas. No mas Patronos ahora. No mas Vatos.
Ahora total son dinosaurios."
And all the men in agreement, they zip down
Their pants and try to piss on the exhibit, but the Glass splashes the fiery urine back onto the faces of their Smallest children, making their women curse them.

They wear the true religion now, in small
Busy streets cluttered with smells of meat cooking,
With men playing dice in dirty intersections,
And the unabashed love fornicating wherever there
Is light and space to do so

Bullfighting and drag racing are the new National sports played in the stadiums of great Red corrals, where battalions of dust devils spin whenever God breathes in the expansive sprawl of poor cities
Those splay out like the veined flesh of sweet fruit
Across the great desert beds which are no longer empty

Here where there is no longer reasons for one to Take position above the other, where God is readily Available to any man and can be seen lighted by sacred Candles nearby bowls of sacrament for strangers to feed upon
As they look into the smooth glass face of the Holy Virgin

Here, where the new language sings upwards through Bustling streets, the strangest cities and byways built by The absent landlords whose providences now lay scattered far a field.
The white man, who has transgressed his religions,
Aborted the wishes of his destiny,

Spilled semen into condoms and Slaughtered the hopes of children upon the spasms of contraceptive
Fields,
So that the red man rose plentiful from the earth
Once more in crops of excellent corn,
Plentiful and multitudinous on the great planes stretched between seas.

And pyramids began to arise again,
And there were human sacrifices,
But not many and they were quick and bloody
Shows out in the open
Displayed without excuses so blood
Stained the saltlick for cows
And people lost their heads once again
But this time for the glory of god,
And not to fill their gas tanks.

Impotent and vaporous,
I was hollowed, one of the last of
The pale men, a blunderbust
Staring there in the peppered throngs
At my ancestors like new-age Neanderthals
In their airless tomb, waiting for one
Of their eyes to raise to me and pull the Heavy weight of my soul off my shoulders

When one of the smallest children
Came up and tried to press her little hand
Into mine. Her father came, swaying up
Drunkenly from behind,
And I thought he would curse me.
Instead, he only took her hand in his
And, as he turned away with her,
Said to me, "Adios."

Robert Rorabeck

Who Am I

S- begat the stars,
Began the clothes lines and haberdasheries of all science,
Begot this too:
This little wound, this thing touching down on the Lemony promenade without any other
Traffic around,
Begot the bouquets in the thirsty windows,
Begot Arthur Rimbaud;
And Erin sat in the storefront and smiled:
Brown, brown eyes the epiphany of the earlier modern Science,
Of men in light beards,
Of light bulbs.
She thought of me, and drank domestic liquor for An awful long while,
Which was according to the Catholic Church and its great long
Antennae;
But I sat alone on my greatly unpublished perch where I pretended that I was a pirate
With candles of virgins licking his beard:
I pretended I finally made love to someone or something
That was real,
And the wheels spun without moving, which was the Sensation of all of this carnival,
But I only knew so many words, and I misspelled;
And I thought of girls in Colorado,
And beautifully made up skin,
And selling Christmas trees and drinking British gin,
And if I was a pirate,
Or a rumor I once heard, like a grand old ship floating up
In the trees,
As if the river was thirsty,
And I was petting my better hand through E-'s suppliant hair;
But, open eyed, she was making love to better,
Better men:
She never called,
She never wrote: she never footed the bill,
So who am I to care,
Care,

Care.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Am I To Say?

Did you rent your paint for my name,
As the sea licked it away?
Weren't you just the one candle burning in
The cardboard of our cheap play?
And now the city is fully wounded and baked
From a kiln of your fingerprinted
Clay,
And yet the waves come leaping, leaping out
Of the kennels of their combs,
Crying your name, crying your name and Attributing to your false sciences
Each and every day; and I have made gold out
Of you, but I don't even know who you are;
And I just want to swing and play badminton in
The wings of a heavy wind,
And who are you? But who am I to say?

Robert Rorabeck

Who Are Almost Real

I have friends who are gods in shallow graveyards,
Taking dust baths like wormy hummingbirds:
I assure you, I have friends who take pledge drives,
Who spume dirt and sod in little gurgling fountains in un-
Exumed parks, under feverish swings:
I have friends who are gods who cannot sing;
And the traffic is up and early, and doing everything:
See that it is not- How can you believe that the morning is Mourning, and when you wake up if you have a voice to sing:
Your eyes are auburn, your hair is the flume of a trumpeting
Mammal,
And this is another day and we will both sell some things;
And other girls will sell some things,
And mammals like us will perform in their concentric rings:
And there is the sun, and there is the moon, or earlier gods,
Now just our friends, going around in the celestial carnival:
I have friends underground, didn't I tell you-
I have friends who are almost sleeping, who are almost real.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Are Always Getting Up Again

Sun comes up, up- paling the marionette boy,
Gasoline ribbons through the strange rows of trees-
Traffic lamps bleed away her beauty,
And every swimming swing is put to quiet and people
Get up and flume in tattered souls of jelly-fish work:
And entire sororities of neighborhoods of beautifully
Anchored housewives get up,
Like an entire farm of tulips rising open, pits of drool
On lips and tongue- wiped away,
Eggs and areolas, playgrounds of soft sand and Somnambulant chickens- beautiful housewives without Scars, with discerning eyes can go everywhere
And do not have to wear baseball caps: Their legs
Bats and lamps through the mowed grass, sashaying like Long legged cats- And we sell watermelons and Cantaloupes to these women while staring for a long ways
Into their eyes; and then at night we slip subconsciously
Invited through the windows of foyers, faux crystal
Chandeliers floating like gas moats,
And we take back from them those whispering espionages
Those dates to the prom they couldn't see before,
And seed them again into the graveyards of young dirt,
So in the early morning they will be news and ready
To be given unto the tamed wildflowers, the women
Who are always getting up again.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Are They Really Are

Missives prove otherwise than cars: things that seem
To go anywhere,
But who are they really, anyways: while epitaphs on stones
For grooms that never got to their bridal rooms:
The night pervades the stars, you can bet, like adolescent
Truants:
The yards get wet, and the bicycles whisper that they too
Are going somewhere;
But where, oh where can they be going,
And who are they really are.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Come Out Singing

People behaving like butterflies
Drunk off the taters of doggerel
In the mirages of
The Sahara or the Gobi- or-
Growing up bigger and bigger,
Their shoulders are the shoulders of Airplanes:
Their teeth and their eyes are the windows,
And they court the survivors of
The luminous omnipresence- there is nothing
Special about how they behave.
The lighthouse spreads its wings over their Grave,
And they metamorphosis through the pages
Of paper snowflakes like ash over the Cathedral-
They bloom through the high masses of their Umbilical arrangements,
Like cantaloupes getting fat on the vine,
Lying there like serpents awaiting the virgins
Who come out singing at picking time.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Has Forgotten How To Fly

Waking up to your children:

They are there, Alma, nuzzling at your olfactory,
And other heirlooms that don't come without A cost,

While the canoes are lost underneath Colorado:

They keep collecting for themselves underneath the Accumulations of Pocahontas,

And into the ways by which I've delved for you,
Coming up thunderstruck,

And crippled- while your children are ready,
Elementary,

And as beautiful as the headlong weeds:

The roads they move along are wooded, green in their Verdure: the mailboxes drool:

There seems to be stones here mounted from the armpits
And tear ducts of god:

Either he bleeds or he sweats, while the dogs that you
Named leap:

And the keystones weep in chorus,

They moon around and wait for you to come home:

It seems as if you are like my mother playing hooky with Her younger brother,

And this is yet another world I don't know a thing about,
That I sing to while I am lost and

Throwing unanswered prayers to the fire,

Waiting for you, a brown angel who has forgotten how
To fly, to step around.

Robert Rorabeck

Who I Actually Was

The body blooms: it shoots off and molests itself,
While I tell everything that I own that I have just enough to barter
With her with, but that is not so:
I know no one in this place, in the kingly grotto where her ripples
Sing,
Where her children play mating games, and she takes off down the Rows like jubilant squid;
The manatees and sting rays surrounding her and looking into her
Vast eyes like transoms above her tumbling surplices,
They can see her in her living room and then into her kitchen,
Almost naked and making things,
As if she were a tomboy in shop class; as if I had found her and Stolen her away from her husband with absolute certainty and met
With her in the thorny park and swapped tongue
And continued congratulating her into my newly purchased bedroom
If she could only believe in me, and if only I was certain enough
To tell her with some certainty who I actually was.

Robert Rorabeck

Who I Am

Palm trees are so humble they only blush their Reasons for god at the very top of Their anorexic spindles,
And maybe that is why you are so beautiful,
Making love to quiet gentleman,
Listening to the hungry tourisms in your shop;
And we are separated by so many canals,
The silent tortures,
The American avenues without any gondolas;
And there are so many homeless under the Skirts of these empty boxes-
They throw quite a fit of gin, too; but it is not Even sad,
Because they only want what the best of the bankers
And politicians want.
They just don't know how, and they don't even Sing songs;
But you have a dimple in your chin. You are an orchard
All to yourself, and you know how to fight,
And your daughter was lost in the forgotten architectures
Of Spain but found her way back according to her Understandings of subtle taste,
That she inherited from you, which is a wonderful thing;
As you stand like a xenophobic fish, a basilisk all to yourself
In Heraclitus's rivers,
Which is what makes you delectably beautiful,
And is the foremost of the many reasons why you do not Care to remember who I am.

Robert Rorabeck

Who I Am Supposed To Be

Couples look beautiful when they're not yuppies-
Slightly beatnik, selling wines under Pike's Peak where the cars are making test runs
And the mountain goats are horny.
My mother was born around there- You can look her
Up, but I am unsure about my real voice;
It seems to me to be calling from anywhere,
So I don't know what position I have to play,
But I want to do good for you- I want to show you who
I really am. That's why I drink my dram-
To get healthy; but I've lived out of a suitcase for ten Years. I haven't bought any clothes in all that time.
All my jeans have holes. I couldn't get up in front of the Class even though I know what I'll be selling-
I can't imagine how I made it through college-
I am very poor at writing good prose, but I think of your Eyes- Your eyes like sad tennis courts, your eyes like a poet's Color, giving of shades of green, all the clichés of Ancient societies in the sea- My words have always failed
You before, but if they ever succeed I will request a tiny
Sliver of your polygamy- And success will be when your lips
Part as if about to disclose a thought of my name,
Close again, become of the resolute distance of all of our Kind. In more lucid incidences, I think of William Carlos
Williams. Maybe that is who I am or, for you,
Who I am supposed to be.

Robert Rorabeck

Who I Might Be Or Who I Really Am

She got married on the same damned day that another
She was put in the show before the grave:
And the fair came and gathered up the eyes of the churchgoers
And the gravediggers,
While I pretended to sit on the lap of both my living and dead
Muses and practiced the patience I would need to Call the rain:
And the cars came and the cars, flipping like switchblades before
The alligators' thirty degrees of old vision:
Like wolves leaping in a zoetrope, or in the geisha's fan:
And just as well, because I was skipping school, and bighting my Tongue, saluting the hidden grotto while you made open thoughts
Of your man;
And you never graduated high school, so what are you doing now
But one thing or the other, but the living are still living,
And the dead are still damned,
And you drive home in the morning weeping never once figuring
Upon who I might be or who I really am.

Robert Rorabeck

Who I Really Am

I love the smell of your body:
Each of your ears are like the bouquets of wildflowers
Who don't yet know what they're Going to hear;
And the fact that you live in a trailer park, and are Yet so smooth:
I love the smell of your body against your husband's Clean shaven face,
Bear hugging;
And all of these tattoos of fanfares:
The I am left unintelligible and without responsibility:
I don't know but that I love you
And that I stake out for you underneath the bleachers of Carnivals;
And this is the way I move through the undulations of My mistaken scars,
And the soda pops of high school cannot uncork you;
And this is the way that you move,
Fanning before me through all the hibiscus and the weeping
Plumbagos; and that you know me,
Because our bodies have increased our bodies in little ways
In the sheerest bluenesses underneath the overpasses;
And that you think that you should like to know
Who I am,
Even though I have yet to hold your hand, or to unfold into you
The seeds of the garden beneath the sheer tinfoil
Of the leaderless kites who might yet tell you about the man
Who I really am-
Who I really am.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Knows Who

Pinpricks of marks of foreplays of beasts
In the graveyard and brass wires under the street;
Your bare feet balancing on chicken wire
Over the zoo of housewives and alligators
And who knows who;
And you seem to still be in love with the acrobats of Bodies and darkness,
The boys who have nonsensical pleasures deposited
Like locusts manifesting wishes on your too soft lips:
They go down hungrily beneath the control towers
Of your blue beams;
They go down meaning to drink from the warm bath of Your body's springs;
And you seem to let them; its what you seem to do
And I wonder if you would let me too
Join into those softened playgrounds of your who Knows who.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Might Still Be Trying To Survive

Skipping through the hard courts of Mexico,
And someone else dies:
As the purples bloom on a wedding vest- the brown
Excursions through the monsters of the Bosque:
The way sometimes a wanderer must leave his family to Convalesce in a foreign country with no one that he loves,
Until the babies are born novel underneath the Crepuscule of school buses;
And it all comes back around and touches itself after school:
Where I've seen you in the shadows,
Alma, playing with the confederates, arms filled with Cheap prizes of their popgun games,
While the entire extent off it rose up above your head; blowing
Thunderously,
Teetering like something the municipalities would never allow:
As I caracoled your neighborhood with the Virgin of Guadalupe looking out the back of my car
To cast a spell of fortunate luck, like fishes won at a fair before
The cat's eyes:
As if the entire graveyard was filled chock full of fireworks;
And your lips brushed across mine in the graveyards next door to The university you'd never been to, but you came up breathlessly
In lips of brown sugar-
In cornfields of rattlesnakes- just trying to knock off to The extravagant fire engines and they already headed towards
And trying to save just about anyone who might still Be trying to survive.

Robert Rorabeck

Who She Is At All

Seashells I once had,
Buried by the throats of daycare:
When I drive alone, I look at the fire through the Clouds:
I see a woman from Columbia driving everywhere:
As lost as I am,
Only that she has found love, and very successfully
Left her husband behind in Columbia:
I bought my little house on her birthday,
But fell in love with another girl for a year:
She too already had a husband lost in a cloudy
Bedroom where she sleeps with him,
Her two children all twisted around her- sometimes
They look up and they see that she is their mother;
And sometimes they look up and do not know
Who she is at all.

Robert Rorabeck

Who She Might Become

Rivers flowing in the brown surceases of our Ancient timbered veins:
And I sit on my couch with Alma and ask her who is the President,
And what is the biggest longest river:
Alma is sincere, aquiline: Alma smells of oleander and night
Blooming jasmine,
But she doesn't like how she cut her hair: I think she cut her
Hair for me,
Because that is what happens to women who find a new Man to love,
And I kiss Alma during lunch and pull her closer to me,
To smell her sitting there
Still in the metamorphosis, as darling as a mother can be Who doesn't yet know who she might become.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Then Would Be Set Free?

Whippoorwill trills at 3: 36.

I used to believe that someone was going to

Die,

To get his throat cut, or get lost in kindergarten on

A fieldtrip to the art museum

To never return,

To eat fried chicken and sleep in graveyards

And be called by the woman in the sea with great tits:

To never return,

But now I do not think it is possible to never return,

Because you drove in today,

And you knew nothing about me, only that it was Halloween

And your son was going to be a human,

Because I asked him,

And your daughter was going to be a witch,

Because that is what she shouted at me-

And I drank a bottle of wine, according to the jocular skeleton

And then passed through the clock down through the secret

Passage where the unicorns had forgotten themselves

Under the gray kings sea,

And I became seriously puzzled,

As I thought of the porcelain shelves of your calves:

Was I the gray king, or was he me,

And if I stepped out into those breaking combs

Who then would be set free?

Robert Rorabeck

Who They Really Are

I am having trouble passing through the day:
Something has gone from inside me, gone over the sea
Rushing to find the stone that Skipped away; and I make my ideas up in my head,
So I can breathe:
So I worship strange girls across the world like laurel leaves
Placed on the crown of the fastest emperor in town:
And I park my eyes underneath her mile high bridges and Breathe;
And it is not right: These candles are not mine,
But they will do for the night: Their little warmth like Nocturnal butterflies weeping molten in my palm;
And I look at their light passing away, whispering like amber
Against the vinyl of my sunken car;
And they seem to dance for me like little wishes and Wonderfully ornate cheerleaders
Kidnapped from music boxes too delicate to wonder who They really are.

Robert Rorabeck

Who They Truly Are

The herald of the kings mother has gone
Up again,
Like a stork in shallow water; coming out of The bath,
He sings across the freshly mowed school
Yard:
Where are the busses of students coming
Around,
Where is that cacophonous apiary-
Now the janitors bristle in gossip, and I eat
Lunch with my old teacher:
It rains, but there is no one there to be Avoided- and there are no ghosts here,
Even those too have wised up and figured out
Who they truly are.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Time Cannot Kill

I can talk this way, my voice yet
Reacting to the scars, so that I sound vulnerable
And well-made: I can lounge around in the Humid duns: I cannot look at cars, but I can hear them,
While Pedro makes a little extra money cutting
Branches for wreathes: And it is Tuesday and slow,
And mom and dad came early with blue berry pancakes
And requests and admonitions of guilt, and tickets
To price things: I've have put so much poison into the Grass, but the ants are still building their kingdoms beneath
The stars, with so many legs: the mythological race
Which will succeed us: strange apoplectic kingdoms of Daub and mastication, hired by queens and reacting
The scents of her pullulating abdomen: stranger sorts
Of men lounge upon the earth, like Martians presupposed
By Ray Bradbury; and us sown into the earth, and our Headstones eaten away into just the roots of convenient
Monuments, and all those billions of human squadrons,
Of entire families and nations who feuded, resting
Like a feverish book finally laid to rest: all those dun men
And their epitaphs given over to a new sort who might Not even acknowledge us except by their radicals, in their Apogrypha: those sorts made to drink hemlock, who do
Not shave, whose eyes deserve the unruliness of a sailor's
Sky: those men who even as magma reemerge to tumble like Newborn puppies of fire, who I can almost remember,
Who time cannot kill.

Robert Rorabeck

Who Was My First Love

I am more interested in the art than the life
And I cannot imagine how this must Be demeaning for you,
While the pitch-perfect echoes are swollen
And then are left unattended to be believed in by All of the people who are left outside
Of their graveyards—
Spinning in the echoes of their Christmases—
Tending to become the less brighter amusements
That have to read the unenlightened papers
While the rest of us head inside for breakfast—
Until the day of the manifest comes
And there are two of each animal—
And the angels play hooky—and the world swells
Form the whore's tits—swells and swells
And becomes manifold—because that just a world
That keeps to the tracks of its unambitious joy,
While you have your mother waiting at home
For you far across the world—
As your brother is playing a game I cannot spell
And falling in love with another woman from
The north country—
There it seems to be her joy spread like jam across Country—
While the peasants go unlistening to the knights who Are errands anyways—and
I sometimes wonder who you cannot love,
While I try to figure out who was my first love,
Anyways.

Robert Rorabeck

Who We Intend To Be

A poem of horses outside my door;
It does not belong to me,
But then it is there in the darkness,
And tomorrow I want to ask you what it
Is like to be in this world a beautiful
Woman,
The trinkets of your eyes a revelry for
All kinds of men,
Bosom the chest wounds of penultimate
Wildflowers;
Or if you get jealous of your betters and
In between:
You told me at our last meeting that I should buy a boat instead of a house,
And then you stared out into the intercostals
And a boat just seemed to appear at your Very wish;
And I wondered if it was your boat,
And where you had gone even though you
Were still baring your shoulders right
There beside me on the bench for the hour
We shared;
And the day should not be any longer than your Hair,
While my better and more consistent muses
Are sharing their times with their more likewise
Men,
While Diana is traveling around town,
Her nameless daughter transforming in the daycare
Of the stars
Wandering what love truly was-
Then I want to go underneath the bridge with you
And open up,
And say I am yours without knowing what I
Truly am,
While all these reoccurrences of daylight tend to become Meaningless until we finally understand and Disappear entirely into the occurrence of who we Are, or taken together, at least,

Who we intend to be.

Robert Rorabeck

Who You Are

Scarred gray-
Today is a sepia holiday:
Knocking on your womb, wanting in:
Wanting to prick you with the mammalian barb,
Dreaming a little of owning a boat,
And taking you out in the scarred webs the Spider-sun spins,
Each wave a crucifixion, a lunge a woman throws,
Rippling herself into the shore:
Like the hood of a car after a head on collision,
But you have no room for aphorisms,
As you are the steady contributions of inebriation,
A failed lover now an impotent nemesis,
An entire period of artistic discovery, the fallow
Enterprise of breath;
Once so close, I could have looked out the window
And seen you playing the guitar,
As I drove around you like a pointless ghost-
Now further away than the dimmest star,
I swear by Christ I know who you are.

Robert Rorabeck

Who, If Anyone: 12: 11 Mountain Time

Sometimes its best to be the background noise,
Especially while going to heaven,
Or your sister's wedding;
And tonight I'll sleep on an air mattress,
And listen to the fish tankle filter, like the littleness
And confined dreams of the afirmed middle-class;
I write this, not having been invited to the Bachelor party,
Withou the aid of a well-paid editor,
With a shot of tequilla, in my sister's
Living room. Two and 1/2 years younger than me,
And she's a veterinary doctor,
And this Sunday she is getting married;
I will play my spotty part,
Anonymous, dreaming for girls so many miles away.
Then next year either go back to school,
Or buy a home,
But continue to write,
Busted and wreckless, because
Today I read 700 pages, finished Stephen
King's Duma Key plus the back end of a Bret Harte compilation,
And now I should have another shot before bed,
Wondering who, if anyone, will read this...
12: 11 mountain time

Robert Rorabeck

Whoever

You deserve better words than mine,
Angled in soft lies, like prehistoric trout found
In the oily conservation of their brief lives:
I flow upstream for you with all I can,
But I am thinking only of myself, like into a mirror
At dusk. A little more money, and I can buy
A house at the sea's lip and swim in her for my job,
And say to you when you are not there,
Now this is you in perfect matter: this is you
In your wedding dress, the one you wore that day
As you walked down the street kissing towards
The trees' canopy, and the sunlight rushing to fondle
You and swim around your bosom like goldfish won
At tossing games; When you are on the street,
Strangers and birds stop to palaver with you, but
You don't have time to translate their harangues of love,
Sometimes you even forget your name, and cussing
You try to forget even more, and the secrets that lie
Inside you have an entire nation within you, plusing and Adding into you the infinite ways things may combine:
But I give to you no cessation in my lines, for they crowd
Into the next enjambment like force feeding French kisses,
And I know I haven't figured you out, or done you
Justice, but you still pretend to know where you are,
But you are also here, for here is a kingdom I have Gardened, and a castle with a sundial for your nudity anytime
Of day: Lay across me with your eyes, and I will say I Love you, even if you don't know why, or who you are.

Robert Rorabeck

Whom I Had On My Mind

All of the Shakespears are of a kind, as their Dogs remember the moon like old masters; as all of the snakes
Are green and curling up to the sleeping
Housewives
Whose svelte bosoms the out of worker otters had been cracking
Legumes upon,
As the piano's metronome kept the time
For the unicorns in gray keys out on the foam;
And traveling through the highways of the fjords where
The nocturnal flowers swam,
It all seemed out and out so beautiful, as the sky made monotonous
Love to the land; and it was calling up to him,
Like a prayer of a hard-up wife clutched around her knees
And shoals by all of her hard-up children:
They were coughing blood and coins to pay the ferryman:
And he came through the canal just as the billy goats were Crossing over,
All brothers of a kind; and I have to tell you that I hate to tell you
That it was you whom I had on my mind.

Robert Rorabeck

Whom I Really Love

Parks smolder like little girls upset for Valentine's
Day;
And I go out from their Sabbath School Grottos and watch
Them French Kissing fresh Thom's in the parking lot;
And they last for so long, until once again they go back inside
And start out anew:
And I am left alone in the gray undertones of the pines:
My shoes are almost gone,
My sweet eyes hung over like censers hung up on hat racks,
Their chains the new somnolence of an opulent cat:
And I wonder about you, and where you really live:
I already know you get up every day and attend your work like Love,
But where you really live, I don't know: I will never know who
You are, or looking up, who is traveling with you on your airplanes;
I cannot explain enough for you: How I have failed in the easiness
Of the air-conditioning, how I am especially failing for you tonight;
But I once fenced and beat an Olympic fencer, or his son
Before I ran away to Michigan, but now I am myself all beat,
And the words just come, but they are not the words that were Best meant for you; and you are off again in your night
In your rose colored states of love; and I know to whom you give Your body to every night, and whom washes your clothes in the Grottos of blissful doves, but I still don't know whom you Really love.

Robert Rorabeck

Whom She Came To Ask

I was going to the cooler to become a thinker
When all of a sudden a blond girl comes into the market:
She is winsome as anything that might mentioned,
And she wants to know about trees:
Trees, and she is from Poland and she wants to send that Certain type of pine tree back home to her sister,
Or someone who should be so lucky;
And she stands right next to me and points across the way,
So I have to squint because I am not sure, but I dearly wish to please
Her:
She is such a sudden treat and puts suicide back into its closeted
Nothing, but now I don't know what the tree is:
I can barely see it, because it is so far away: it is across the street
And the next yard and rising like a gaunt titan under the skirt
Of the power lines;
Yes, that is the one, and now I have the same type of pine tree growing
In my future yard, but for the girl I could say nothing:
Trying to keep her there as long as I could, I promised to ask the little Guatemalan and he in turn asked the Venezuelan and we all stood Around her like three of the dumbest wise men, sharing wolfish looks,
Our nostrils flaring from her mail-order bouquet;
And I guess that she knew that she must all the time be doing this,
And causing the disgusting self mutilations in the lonely nights transgressions,
Or by ourselves in the long silver trailer parks of the day: weeks later
I think of her, because I am buying a soft yellow house with that same
Sort of tree rising up from the yard, bowed like an imperfect phallus
And yet something extremely beautiful;
And that is why she wanted to know the proper name for him,
And I am still glad that it was I who she came to ask.

Robert Rorabeck

Whomever It Seems That You Love

As it happens I am getting up higher and higher, Laughing at the filaments of banshees: I don't even pretend to Write to Erin,
Anymore; and I gain more weight: I can do ten pushups in the Fruiteria all at once,
Which was nothing I could even pretend to do in high school
When I didn't even know, Alma:
My muse who is probably even now sleeping opened lipped
And drooling against the deep brownest shoulder blades of Her illegal husband;
And I have never been to Mexico, but I have been in her:
I have kissed her damp butterfly the way a mother cat cleans
Her young,
Instinctually and forever, while the nocturnes howl over the open
Throats of drive in movies,
While young lovers kiss like vampires all night long,
And until the awful truths of manana's morning happens, it seems Like forever:
And that is when the grass seems to be filled with so many tears,
And you can drive to the quietest corners and kiss for a very long
Time whomever it seems that you love.

Robert Rorabeck

Who's To Say

Cars pull in beside tombs and who should Get out but the silhouettes of movie stars,
And soccer girls from high school,
And the night is so heady with their atmosphere that It sways as if being tugged like a table cloth,
Like the sea by the moon:
And even the souls of the dying radiate like the flagella
Of maypoles,
And the water near the shore is so shallow that it brings
All together such wildlife in rapacious harmony;
And Amanda has been to Africa,
But I have seen the corpulent tortoise under the bus,
Tugging out the engine of orchids like a child who is Not bashful,
And even though I leapt away like a little girl over the Heads of the disinterested alligators,
Who's to say now that I don't care, or that I won't once Again be beautiful,
Or that my mother isn't weeping over the walky-talky
Because I am bivouacked so far up I diadem
You subconscious, and even though it is much too late for Me- Who's to say I won't once again be beautiful.

Robert Rorabeck

Whose Afterbirths Are Rainbows

Another anthem without the girls:

Here is the down trodden making love to the Blistered leaves,
In a cathedral of ant lions that the sky presumes
Above,

The buses having turned around:

The butterflies, they are in Mexico, being stolen
But multiplying- the words work for and Figure out themselves, against the suppliant
Branches:

Pull them back and find, marble arcades,
And carports where laundry spins, and toads
Sing to the clouds, with mottled throats
And spotted bellies: they sing there up to the Curtains whose afterbirths are rainbows,
But not unicorns come to them,
And the housewives fold up the clothes for Themselves:

Done praying, they go inside, and wait for their Children to approach them.

Robert Rorabeck

Whose Burns Are Very Real

As if the very wildflowers were your family:
Alma, but I am still right
Here, like a rattlesnake with a sweet tooth for your Woebegone ankles,
And it feels alright to lie that I wont bite you:
You only weigh one hundred and ten pounds and you
Are really a sight, especially when I can lie down
Across you like a buzzard on its eviscerated
Highway and make love for eons,
As the moon showers us with the preposterous and light
Hearted gifts,
As the lines end and begin again, underneath the Indian Monuments of the earth,
The stone rainbows, or the ways to remember you own kind;
And to just kiss your lips again in the semi-permeable
Atmospheres underneath the overpasses of any kind of flea Market would feel like it would be enough,
As quarters are enough for the homeless regiments surrounded
By the eager cannibals,
Lying down after dinner to sleep with the man of your young;
And it all seems to bleed away into other immortal promises
That you swear you will no longer read:
But the Virgin of Guadalupe remains your goddess,
Remains my goddess,
And the fires in her hearth of promises are like ephemeral roses
Whose burns are very real.

Robert Rorabeck

Whose Purest Of Natures Is Not For Me To Describe

Now if you evaporate what will I have Left to drink,
For the railroads and all the cemeteries are perfectly
White:
They seem to have the same telltale face as my Mother on her wedding day,
For she was something of perfect beauty;
And she still is,
Like stamp on a rifle but, like antlers yet to shed from
The horns of the toughest stags from the opal
Pure necks of all of these mountains,
Because October is a beautiful holiday,
And it is still coming around; and a sorority of girls with That birthstone seem to be getting up and diademing my Silly head,
Spitting with well sewn breasts and lips. And they will never Let up,
Even if they can't believe in who they still are,
They are still leaping like a carnival predestined on its Providential tracks;
So there is no reason for me to fear of their savior;
Maybe they are mine, for they are always leaping
As tall and wide as a movie theatre,
Just as lustrous as the feral lips of the sweetest gods
Whose purest of natures is not for me to describe.

Robert Rorabeck

Whose Song I Could Never Own

When your body gets home, it makes love:
The fish are in the sea, the turtles dream of doves:
And I have slept on the roof of your house
In the penumbras of the airplanes that were waking up
And taking breakfast:
And it seemed to me as if I had found, the temple of Love rising up from the grounds
Of an illegal suburbia so overgrown:
And you were the goddess whose song I could sing,
But whose song I could never own.

Robert Rorabeck

Whose Time Is Still Coming

The snake pulls back its hood
And spits disgustedly at the rope trick.
I gave Kelly opals
And hid in the bathroom:
I am hiding there still while the movie plays,
And I have pissed myself.
Already all the ghosts have come out and haunted
And gone back home,
And Kelly is a mother, and she goes home too
And lays down like a velveteen cathedral in all of her
Tattoos;
And she forgets about me, and the swings we Enjoyed upon: She doesn't recognize how beautiful I Am,
Absolutely,
And somewhere in Missouri there is a riverboat who Has exploded quite luxuriously maybe a century
Before us,
And bits of it are still falling like
Meteorites for the forth of July;
It is still falling,
And I shoot off to sleep in my bygone lonely, and Kelly
Curls up in her tinderbox in the saw grass beside
Her husband;
And she has the easiest time forgetting about me,
Like a brother who has long since gone before her
Whose time is still coming.

Robert Rorabeck

Why I Can'T Believe In Anything But You

Growing closer whichever way
The sun
Crosses you,

All day long making
Cold cuts of reason;
This is why you exhibit
Such
Feverish treason
To the spectacular ruby
In the Crocodilian gaze;

You never step
Down or Hold hands;
All you need is a
Glass of water
And you are ready to Skip
School again,

Spurious,
Pugilistic and saucy,
But able to shape pottery;
And the traffic slows
Even though you are far away,
Knee high in a suburban field:

They still have the senses,
The creep of unexplainable wonder,

But I know for certain that this is
The way that you does,
And it is why I can't believe in Anything but you again.

Robert Rorabeck

Why I Run Away

Houses grid by canals lined out in a peaceable world,
Ennui schvitzing, and I used to be a truant articulating on the Swings of this
Inconsequential masterpiece: I suppose I thought I was Beautiful, doing something to get rid of high school:
The birds who were there are immortal,
They follow me around- I can hear them outside of my trailer Gossiping as they collect a beautifully loose woman's Clothes off the ground:
The traffic is immortal too, sending like nerves do up and down
I-95, running the beautiful appliance of Florida
Where high schools still grow, the training centers for off-white
Gardens,
The universities around her shoulders where Erin somehow still Makes love,
Childless but well sated;
And we play out here, eyes like lousy diamonds- the natives have Found someway to replace themselves with Mexicans and South Americans, of which I saw very little in my high school:
The beauty of these brown skinned girls to which I have Very little words for, the tongue of a gringo
Like the bathing suit of a grandmother; and I guess that is still Why I run away.

Robert Rorabeck

Why We Have Yet To Even Get Started

Life may be as hungry as death, but I am certain
It is never as fulfilled:
As I set out, my body throbs like a coward:
I get my haircut with politicians while the other tourists
Jog around the lake
While the snowflakes are falling and the electricity
Is leaping from stake to stake;
And the moon seems polarized: It seems as if it's making
The feathers return to love birds,
And for awhile everything is turned back like curtains;
And I look up for a second,
And maybe I am beautiful, and maybe I am thinking that this
Doesn't even have to start;
And she is getting back out of her car or by whatever means
She chooses to travel away,
And maybe she is kissing me: maybe her eyes
For a second have reached their high water mark, and they Seem to be leaving an impression on me:
Why, aren't we back into the middle of school: We're both
Virgins:
The apples are yet unknown to her fingers, laying like unknown
Vocabularies in their tree;
And then for a second she floats up again and is bended like a
Rib under my wing:
Put back into place I linger: I am a truant who so immaturely
Wonders why we have to even get started.

Robert Rorabeck

Why You Are My Venal Muse

Lights that peel out forlornly behind wimpled
Windows,
The dead poetesses who sleep out bare-chested now
In the dead center of black town,
Little black boys pissing on their graves,
But only half as worse as the corpulent tourists
With cantaloupe sized hearts,
Freeze-dried lawyers for sh&t canning astronauts
Walking their dogs,
And moping through the ruckus of this canopy
The way little lives do
Every day through the franchised and fast food Drive through,
While you are in your sport,
And liking bedding down, while you imagine
Puffy unicorns up in the sky with black eyes without Reason,
And your he-men running around on your Color television, bare footed and fighting the skeletons
Of lesser men's diseased;
And they tore down the church to expand your work,
And right now the professors are sniffing paper bags
Of glue,
And your university looks so red and shiny,
As shiny as a ruby shoe, but everything about it is Venal,
Caught around a line of tenements and things that Have a hard time breathing,
And your eyes go on forever seeming, auburn
Fires of old news:
This is why you are my venal muse.

Robert Rorabeck

Why You've Forsaken Me

Everything is lighting up in the very Plausible world of butterfly midgets:
Everything can be seen even where There's shadows,
And I'm pressing my palms to my eyes in a
Heartbeat mask;
And I've known where you are for so long,
Sitting at that strange desk the roof pretending to Separate you from the stars;
And it is my unquenchable horror to be in the same Room with you and for you to be in Love with another man; but look at all these walls
The four winds of our room.
Midnight is laughing bloody murder and all the churches
Are just as naked as an orchard,
Because the sea is in love with the stars;
And isn't that who you are, why you've forsaken me.

Robert Rorabeck

Wide And Beatific

Glade of spirits- origin myth in the eyes of
My classroom,
And there are eyes, dark brown and dark blue
And all over my classroom,
Trying to discover things, skateboarding,
And trying to make sure everything turns out
Alright-
And I am not trying to control this menagerie:
I am just trying to make sure that it
Is beautiful,
While the children of your father skip down
The path underneath of which the
Airplanes fly,
And beside of which the cypress trees grow,
And the ocean's waves leap and frolic;
This is for them,
And for your children that will disappear into
School tomorrow,
As I try to impress you anonymously,
As I just try to survive down the river that is Too wide to dream across
Without waking up and realizing the mistakes
That happen altogether through its wide
And beatific course.

Robert Rorabeck

Wilderness Of Disinterest

You've said this is the summer,
But you do not know, but are just attempting To wax poetical,
Even though a better poet than I am,
When you are drunk and your lips burned on Cigarettes and just beginning to black out,
But I don't really know about such things,
How to be cool, how to meet girls and Persuade them, but I like to sound like I know.
Rather, I am thirty and woke up today after
A wet dream I'd rather not go into explanations
Of, and changed my pants and walk outside
As if in the first stages of a sleeping sickness,
And moaned under the sun, and watered the horses....
But it is better, for I no longer wonder if You read my poetry, and would really rather prefer
If you didn't- For it is true, that you have separated
Yourself from my pleafal dysfunctions,
Spread yourself open like a garden overrun with Pollinating bees, laid yourself like a red bible
Suppliant to the religion of his smooth hands;
If I was a better poet, women would love me as they Know how, and maybe even you would love me
And come into my room whispering with the eyes of Your disquiet, but my physicality would be just as scarred
And unappealing, and I would lay out just the same
Beside the yellow pools, the zoo of sterilized ocean,
And let my fingers howl unrestively, like wolves
Hunting through your unbuttoned preservation,
Starving in the wilderness of disinterest.

Robert Rorabeck

Will There Be Cake?

On the day I die
Will there be time to eat cake,
Or will everyone be too busy trying
To put me back together on the table
Of my broken shell,
And will I hear the new languages of Insects buzzing all around me in
Their greedy way,
Waiting to crawl into my leaking orifices,
Like the skin of putrid fruit
Burst from wrong gases above my eyes
And along my collar bones? Or Will I be the only one to turn with
The boring nock on the door,
The inevitable salesman of returnable goods,
The reaper of useless necessities coming
To collect his recall,
And then to jot down my soul into a little Notebook of names and times he keeps in a pocket protector
Of his polyester work shirt?
Will that be all then, the processions of Common grief, the sermon unasked for,
And thus the nearly anonymous burial down
The rows from my aunt and grandmother,
An epitaph on stone that cost a grand
But says nothing of who I might have been,
And then, thankfully, the top secret corruption
And ruination from greasy head to grimy toe?
Some plastic flowers,
Some days of rain and more of sun, some of Snow, but none of it experienced or toiled through,
My dreams left unrealized, as her pulse
Beats onward clasped in another's hand;
But what must be answered before all this hubbub,
And the howling of my lonely dogs through the Friendless nights in the basest amounts of pain
More smelt than suffered;
Is, will there be cake?

Will Work For Food

Work me like a dog.
Pay me like a whore.
The decapitated reindeer's
Head
Drips clotty red into the Pasture
(Merry Christmas
    You bought me)
What does it matter?
No pretty girls are Available.
All the pretty girls
Are loosely tangles:
Engaged in Oregon,
Married in Colorado,
Serving drinks
In deep amnesia
The sun is a long Distance
Swimmer doing laps
In the sky's
Highschool gym.
The seasons change
The color of her eyes
The fastforward love
Into death,
Corrupted into beds of Eternal rest.
Choaking on the red flesh
Enchanted by the Jealous stepmothers,
They slumber-

Robert Rorabeck

Windmill Dancing For Its Lover

The grasses were talking even after the Day was gone,
And the airplanes in their dresses dancing
With pearled bellies over the sea:
Did you see which way they were going,
Or notice their laughter as it disappeared?
And I just sat there and thought of
Her,
As the Ferris Wheels went up and then around:
Around, waving their hands
As if they were on an island- after the traffic
Had gone home,
Past the scuppernongs growing on the fences
And the mailboxes
As somewhere far a field a windmill stopped
Dancing for its lover,
And all of the heavens went indoors.

Robert Rorabeck

Windmills Of Our Wandering Bones

When they make love through the strings of catgut underneath
The power lines-
I don't suppose either of them ever wore roller skates or Ever flew in airplanes:
And she tried to prepare her reasons for her love for me,
But it was just because I bought her so much
Gold for her brown fingers-
And I continued singing to her as roses ached over my Bones:
And she smiled and played gamed- translucent
And phosphorescent:
This specter, what did she care about my sun- while I was Seizing the rapidly increasing embraces of Windmills- as the cars drove home over the old cradles
Of our wandering bones.

Robert Rorabeck

Window Haiku

I have new eyes for Awhile the windows
Of my orgasm.

Robert Rorabeck

Windy Night For Boo Radely

Good and drunk enough now
To write about a Guatemalan wife:

When I swore I wouldn't:

What a sad and tragic display to write
About a beautiful woman
You see ever day

When she is just trying to feed her children
Or her boyfriend
And make the car payments
And pass the time

When you are so troubled and Silver on a tree
That she can barely look at you,

When you love better and more venal women
Who are always so much further away,
And your father sells star fruit,

And your life is a famished joke,
In which you once jogged the length of a marathon
In Okaheelee Park with no one to see
When you were still with another girl,
Who just bought a house with her husband
Who is also a small time lawyer,

And yet you managed off enough gin and water coloring
Tonight
To get this all out there
And finished the game early in the seventh because you
Kept throwing duds
And managed to turn her eyes even further away
In the grass where the jaundice
Lions are panting
While the tourists fart
And take photographs:

And thus the word is concluded,
The muse turned around and led back to the Suburban butchery:

She doesn't love you,
She- She is a beautiful mouse in Disney World

And it is another windy night for Boo Radely.

Robert Rorabeck

Wings To Fly

It is hot inside this truck,
Like a body inside a soul
When it shouldn't
Be there,
When it should be the other way
Around,
And yet it has no place to go,
As stars divine like goldfish,
If that's what they really do-
And lines are to the point
While airplanes seem to hover overhead
Feasting wild and light-eyed on the tragedy
Of our race
Which has so many legs, and eyes,
And wants,
But so words to describe those things,
And no wings to fly.

Robert Rorabeck

Winning

Evil men win in this World- I saw you dancing with Him- I saw you dance.

Robert Rorabeck

Winter Is Coming

Winter is waiting down at the gate to the park like a vein of chalk scribbled in the fleeting warmth of adolescent love
amidst the swinging sliding metal silvers.

She is scaring away the song birds and hurrying the remnants of Spring to close up;
Spiders go busily unhinging murder-cobbed webs to dissolve with the weather upon the bladed lips of anemic grass;
Their children unseen except for their many legged thought, hurry into the autumn hay bales stacked at the edge of the murmuring creek;
so they are gone when he comes, falling from the sky on his white and chilly steed, when she steps forward;
Then this sphere is its furthest from the sun, and in her night sways like a drunken lover in the snowy sheets-
The trees are naked and frozen, as she reaches out to touch the
earth;
her tears solidify his lap,
saying things I cannot hear, though alone in this house

I watch her lips begin to blister the windows, the material of her dress is the hoarfrost on the lawn, as her lonely footsteps echo up to meet me from the other side of the door.

Robert Rorabeck

Winter Surely Comes

Troubling to look in the mirror since
Middle-school, when everything else was just shear
Nirvana,
And I hadn't yet drunken hard liquor, or known the Delights of venal distemper;
And you were just the zygote of unbeaten memory,
Or I had really just laid off you in the cool green
Rug in front of Saturday morning cartoons
Up the stairs where I had hidden the last of the crumbs
Of the birthday cake I wasn't suppose to eat for the Next day or two,
With piss stains and come; and I'd stolen from
The rich white paper folded into airplanes, to count
Coo on the satanic femme fatals lounging on day trips
Between the rafters;
And fans, and fans, and above that a zoo of airplanes;
And there was just one beautiful orange tree, budding, spun:
And you were just a little girl I had thought of,
Now cornered, a housewife on the run,
A daughter too- A tiny house in a forest that is shooting off,
Amidst the trees I had never seen, whose cones are pure
Gold and silver,
Ornamental they fall down and hypnotize the very wolves
They reintroduced to seduce you; how you do that,
I don't want to know, and yet winter surely comes.

Robert Rorabeck

Wintertime's Wedding Party

When we begin like this on the evening,
It is because we know no better; but these words
Are ours, and they are married, and speak within
The embers of a stoked fire;
And there returning from the caesuras of an engulfing
Basin, the clouds come tromping over the mountain's
Lips and womb of estuaries,
And soon the pallid snows, in whose tresses
The days are receding, the colors dulling,
And within them like the glances over the stranger's
Shoulders, as from the highest reaches the storms
Plunge downward, down away from the polished bellies
Of airplanes, and the horses of dead riders who go
Forever leaping, as confederate lovers from the arboreal cataracts;

This is the time where I should hear you breathing,
As steadily as the great hunters in their hibernating,
But far away I can only imagine you laughing, your body's Salts reciprocating with the sea's salinous caressing;
Your own vocabularies are treasonous to the season,
As I would have you enfolded in my arms and these walls,
As the Furies begin their cyclical howling; they are
As beautiful as they are deadly, as you are imbibing
Warmly the daylight of your new steady; unfortunately,
Your heart is never beating nearer me, and yet here comes
The lupine pattering across the last garments daylight sheds
As it is fleeting, revealing the utter beauty of the waning Living; and how shameful it is that you are not near to Hold me; for me to smell your oily perfumes by olfactory,
Or our bodies to relay heat as if by the careful study of A pacaderm's memory;
But so wants this fate, as fleeting as love, as splendidly turns
The embellished season, and the billows resend again, as Finely dressed as the last members of wintertime's wedding party.

Robert Rorabeck

Wished Upon

I live so close to the rivers of Old people
That you would not believe
Me darling
That last night I got robbed,
But otherwise I have Never looked so good; and I
Flit after the perps
Singing their gold toothed
Lullabies
And it was fun and exciting;
At the police station
I drew you as a stream
Running through a forest of Aspen and evergreen just like
That week I drew you in High school when I just wanted
To sleep underneath
The penumbra of your Desk across the sky,
For it to be my shelter,
Its cheap metal frame my Crossbeams,
The chicken wire my stars and
You the goddess swimming there
Still a virgin and able to be wished upon.

Robert Rorabeck

Wishes That Disappear

Trundling of golden marbles
Down the lips of a child or a songbird:
So many words,
So few to mention: new born mothers getting up,
Looking startled,
Shoulderblades and tableclothes as lost blue
As egg shells:
My muse down in the sandpits making love to Rattlesnakes
In the discombobulated sun: bit of her evaporating,
The steam of a meaningless engine:
They float up so far,
They become wishes that disappear,
And then there is another fieldtrip, her children so Far down below
Growing less bashful, moving on without realizing
That their mother was once my goddess,
As she also leads them astray.

Robert Rorabeck

Wishes Upon Her

Up in the candles into which she has been Busy praying and weeping
For any boy- as the customers come in according To custom,
As airplanes fly in the air- and it doesn't hurt
Me anymore, how she has bothered me-
As she has started first to cry,
And then to wean herself from an easy pain,
To kiss the fists of pugilists-
And she is breathing the brown air, and she is Panting or cursing just as busily as Any rattlesnake- so come the dusk, in the farmer's Yards she is purring- like a hot jewel she is Cooling- and I stare at her in my fashion across
The canal, forgetting anyway home as I think up
Wishes upon her.

Robert Rorabeck

Wishes You Will Not Have

Icicles melt off her toes
She falls in love on an airplane: she is going somewhere:
And it feels alright to look up into A church—
Stained glass still weeping over the basins
Of Colorado—
While the innocent tourists lick the ice-cream melting on their Fingers, like svelte
Dripping from the crenulations of the antlers of some young
Stag:
Up in the bosoms of the mountains weeping
Like centipedes with breasts: so close to where the stewardesses
Leap in the never waning dreams:
They seem to have escaped the atmosphere:
Birthday candles licking underneath them:
Maybe they will leap forever,
Escaping over the wishes that you will not have.

Robert Rorabeck

Wishing At The Well

Moon grows over the snakes
As I wonder what they are feeling: their bodies
Must feel the grass, each
Blade like a kiss, as they sojourn to the well,
And they wonder who their favorite maiden will be Kissing this night,
As the bucket waits in the pale.
Maybe they will climb the apple trees and Whisper to the apples too,
And linger there like ropes- and the curl,
As the children travel too lately home from School,
And the guitar picks the throats of seashells-
It lingers over her,
As she makes love as she will- the waves not
So far away are a romance,
Kissing as they swell, but the snakes will feel
Every inch of her body,
As she lies wishing at the well.

Robert Rorabeck

Wishing That It Had Never Happened

The fine young make-believes have already started
Shooting in:
From the gated communities of Parkland they've Drifted,
And young Italian girls take photographs of each other,
And I take photographs of them:
They are venal and cottage cheese-
They will go to college, or they'll do as they please:
Like you, they might make love to me,
If they have to, but they will never fantasies over
These estuaries as I have had to:
How I've tried to compare you to the muses of Baudelaire, the two strangers made sisters by his Pervasive charges,
The sick muse and the venal muse: I didn't remember
That before you used to play soccer together,
But who as really in charge;
And if you'd won the season for our white tributary,
What then would have stopped your taught calved
Sorority from kissing under the bleachers,
And then to pass out like carnal wildflowers;
If it's not what happened, it is at least what used to happen
When my mind awakened from happenstance
And began to matriculate toward the better causes of Missing graduation- wishing that it had never happened.

Robert Rorabeck

Wishing That You Were Mine

Oh wont you find me a cenotaph
Stuck like an old piece in your yard,
High enough to be perceived by the ever building
Snows;
And won't you hold on for a minute and Watch out for me,
And think in the entirely opposite directions the Tourisms of your state are leading you,
Because I have fallen down from the mountains
Where nary a girl thought to look at
Me:
I have shot down like a killed star: really just like
A piece of asteroid,
Like a junked video game from an old arcade
That you can still hear laughing and ululating down
Your street with the tumbleweeds;
And hold on for a minute, and press you child
Nearer your breast like a fat vine,
And remember the first word she happens to sing
To you,
Knowing that I have fallen so far, tumbling downhill
From hell,
Wishing that you were mine.

Robert Rorabeck

Wishing Well

I want to collide with your anatomy.
I especially,
Most especially want
You c%nt:
I want to collide into you like an atom splitter
And make you say my name
So many times
Like a fat piggy bank breaking apart and crying
As it falls down
Jack and Jill's
Wishing Well.

Robert Rorabeck

Witch Defeats A Paladin

my god

I invade the privacy of witches check the drawers to see how many r@bbers you've had inside you while I was in Colorado 14,000 feet up, wanting to f—rings of sunlight which ascend in golden rain
Oh, if you could have seen
mountains
upon the rolling shores of my reddening plain you would have not been so jealous, you would have slept like a cat in my lap and we'd had rolled forth to Alaska
Instead you used sewing needles to pierce my throat and cut me from your crippling ship
You said you didn't f— him, not yet, and not that you didn't want to,
but there was only one condom in That suspicious drawer—meticulously placed for show,
The box behind it was empty
I dreamed I loved you, but then he was there with you in the dark and under your skirt
Now I am left with the need to explore the laborious slopes of another's body to swim like angels into the flesh
She is a vagrant and a truant but at least she doesn't pretend to love me
and doesn't place c@ndoms
there
as if she were arranging

dinnerware

Robert Rorabeck

Witchcraft

The scarlet ingénue
Swings in the cloudless park;
The sky is bare naked blue.
Her lips are humming
Like the song of a downed Power-line
In the arc at play,
Her talented backbone is Arthur's sword
Sheathed between her
Breasts, the tip piercing
Her opulent lake, the truth of Her fits drooling like a clutching orchid,
Where the sun swims torpidly
In the humidity expelled from
Her petite body.
The alchemy for precious metals
Repressed in her lips,
She whispers of divinity
And she smiles
At the boys she's turned away,
Disavowing the Touch of morality—
The fuse is lit like
Phosphorous packed into a
Sling,
She burns the air—
She blinds airplanes;
A nebula is her talent exploding
There in the park just off the way;
Six feet off the ground,
She calls housewives to
Their windows to partake
In the act of a
Young God
Learning her craft.

Robert Rorabeck

With A Man

I drink green beer
And I really want to see your stupid
D$ck, joto:
Policias, banditos, bandejos, maricons.
We'll go to the movies often
And pray-
Tip your flask and show me your best
Dance,
Like a tipsy zoetrope in a sinking ship
All before the scentless
Plum trees,
Tremulous-
Coyotes coming to your lips,
Scenting your grave,
Because I have seen you in the segregated
Graveyard
In a crèche of rotten spikenard,
But I love you and cursed you,
Dousing your vivisected abutments with Gasoline and army ants,
And the little known sins you committed in your Bedroom during high school:
The boys you loved,
Their torn shadows populating you now,
Or ululating like horrible arcades and pinball
Machines of giant painted breasts
And consumptive vampires.
Now you are lost in an overwhelming house
With a man that has penetrated you so many Times as to become numb,
Now a disproved science,
Wanting new golden apes, bighting your clenched
Fist as it snows fabulously metamorphosis angels.
Who cares if I say I love you,
If you never choose to look up to the sky
To acknowledge how beautifully you are crowned.

Robert Rorabeck

With A Man I've Never Known

Why haven't you written the most beautiful eulogies,
If your senses are so impaired: why only essays and religious Treatises
Making the same wages of your pronged love as an airplane
Pilot flicking ash over the green pools,
Because down in those whirling machines they are washing
Angels,
And little girls who have skipped school and are hanging out
In their effluvious surplices
Dreaming of unborn sons in the eyes of the intelligence of Fish that can see behind the curtains of this stage,
Because that is where you are my darling, head being hooded
By a veil of snow,
Like at your wedding, making out and swimming with a man I've Never known.

Robert Rorabeck

With A Nude Midway

Oh that rainbow is good for poetry and going Down on her on display in the window of her brown reality:
There it is: she made it across so many canals,
And through so many forests, like a butterfly who had no
Intentions of dying, or of ever coming that way again,
Like a fair returning to my heart
To light upon it with a nude midway made of a surprising
Panoply that somehow learned to keep itself burning.

Robert Rorabeck

With All Her Aeroplanes

I think I did a good job
With the show,
Displaying all my scars
And making apologies for the soldered mermaid-
A finer piece of criticism
Couldn't be found
For much cheaper in any university's Book store,
Given the week or two it
Took me to write,
Which is all I'm good for,
Being that all I have in me is
The attention of an insect's gestation;
And that is why my love
For her
Has all burned out,
And my novels lay unfinished,
Spread open and disavowed like failed moths
Still quite sure of their ideology
On the floor of the old carport;
And I skip school
And remain completely mystified
Out in the empty parking lots
Underneath the faded sky-
Hemmed by the inexpressible
Reptiles
Who bejewel rough-hewn the chapped tennis courts
Underneath the low voiced palm trees
Far after the traffic has died,
And everyone else is Back at home and unspeakably peaceful,
And the all important heron has Flid far across Aristotle's spheres,
Across the crinoline-glades,
Splayed and rippling the currents of its Usual migrations,
And disappeared along with all her
Aeroplanes.

With All Of Its Breath

My body is as scarred and indecisive as a Manticore;
And when I mount you, I feel like a lucky mountain
Surmounting a unicorn;
And none of it feels entirely real, except that I know that
Your favorite color is green,
And your eyes are more beautiful than the breathless
Panoramas that I have seen atop the highest mountains
Of Colorado and California,
That I have illegally hiked and thus been fined;
And now that I have found you, it feels as if I have been given
An entire orchard that cannot entirely be mine,
But from which I eat and imbibe illegally, while all of the Guns go off so high above Christmas and all of the ancient Alligators of my old alma maters,
While the cars turn around, and the weather vanes;
And the world finally turns out and shows how it does
All the tricks that somehow combine together
And blow with all of its breath my secret wishes for your name.

Robert Rorabeck

With All Of My Scars

Embroidered with all of my scars
Why don't we buy Chinese food on Christmas:
And then we can eat together and enjoy the smacking of our Warmth and we can always look into our eyes
Afterwards, sated, and blood on our snout
And laugh out loud and out of doors at the school kids
Collecting there
Like snowflakes in our yards: and then you will tell to me
By the words from your lips that we can never Understand even though we are struggling up from the canyons
To get to Phoenix by our cars:
We are not Navajo, and we spin across the earth:
We eat ice-cream and light off fireworks and whatever else
I do not know:
You see, Alma: you fall asleep in the very same house as your sisters,
Though you have made love to me almost three dozen times
Which is as sacred to me as donuts are to cops:
And I am your dog: and I am entirely gone into the poppies
That I guess you never deserved unrequited and from a bachelor
Who spent too long in the sanctities of universities embalmed:
As the newborn hatchlings lactate from the sky and from
The summit towards which we are hiking,
Bringing our bones as offers- or otherwise just dying to see you
Off- as you lay your shoulders bare as moonlight through Aspens and other similes which I guess would make you laugh and Which you would fretfully disavow.

Robert Rorabeck

With Another Softness

Beginning with another softness
Like light in the woods lost before crepuscule
And wondering all about dinner—
A little girl wandered off meant to see the fair
That has picked up and moved away,
The lover she would never know—
Until other fears come around in the sky:
The dragons in the rivers, the witches in the moons:
She sits in a circle of fungus sucking her thumbs:
They are as red as her cheeks;
I am afraid she is lost—
The busses go down the roads, and the bicycles after Them—the fiancés on their way to affairs of school
Will never see her again,
As she is abducted under tear under the stolen
Light of the moon.

Robert Rorabeck

With Ant Hills And Que Seras

Down in the lime-green valleys
With ant-hills and que seras,
With those beautiful instructors paid to mend,
Paid to say almost anything;
And they are looking me in the eyes- Oh lord,
The joy of the blowing grasses on
The indestructible prairie, like the joy of Unmolested skin running around on those courts-
I'd giving anything just to sit down and have My lunch under those eyes,
Unemployed so that my being might stem anywhere,
Go in any direction following the dusk
And the more languid ambiances glowing outdoors
From so many windows,
And the smiling housewives beneath, being shut in,
Like folded up angels:
This is a park where I can sing and drive,
And run my fingers through the air and see how so like Truthful fabric is this humid breeze, and all the herons
Are quiet and well-migrated, and all the furniture moved;
And her eyes Are settling down,
And she is being placed vertical in that bed like a prize,
After they've stomped the ritualistic crystal,
After they've touched brows and lips, like much Enamored cousins who upon holiday drive through the Countryside, crossbreeding with the vibrating stamens,
Drinking porously the same affluence, groping until dusk,
And saying to each other the names of expensive flowers,
And the seahorses that come from Europe
Or another world.

Robert Rorabeck

With Eyes Such As Yours

How many girls have blue eyes,
But they are not like yours: They are the yoke of Graveyards compared to you eyes-
And in all sincerely of parks filled with children chasing
Hidden eggs on Easter,
I want to find you; I have always wanted to find you,
Even while a paraplegic being driven
To Alaska by my father to participate in gunfights;
And then to have my hand pressed in the coat of the grandest
Grizzlies with sleep apneas;
I really have to congratulate that I did this to myself,
While keeping my eyes turned up and cursing and bighting my Tongue like a lobster trap of escargot:
And it was fun, and I got to ride a moose and buy shaven
Jewels with so many other tourists as fat and copulating as An entire aquatic nursery of gurgling terrapins
While the otters swam and listened to the sea from the bellies of
The nuts they were cracking;
And you are special joy, Kelly- fibrillating against the species
Of really unexpected clouds;
And you make me think of rainstorms, and how someone really Entrepreneurial can follow them across country,
Like a mighty exegesis on a book of manifest
Destiny;
And now you couldn't care what I have been saying about Myself:
This is just the glittery strata fornicating with the down syndrome
Moths on the top of the shelf:
And Kelly you go away now, into your doublewide kingdom of Alligators and whippoorwills;
And lay into your poor husband, and make him sing for you
The way any poor minstrel should have to proposition a queen
With legs of muscle cars and trick ponies,
And too with eyes such as yours.

Robert Rorabeck

With Fathomless Kisses

If I and the cattle were all here, and burning our Lips on the side of the mother loving sea;
And I looked up, and saw you as a brown
Angel swimming with her hair and eyelashes waving towards
Me;
And then I in a helpful mood waves as a misaligned reflection,
Trying to match the beautiful movement in the body
Of that carriage,
What would the purpose be but to climb up the newly grafted
Stairways of our college in your name,
Listening to the church bells chattering like bluebells
In the arboreal firehouses that shaded all of the students
Of my thoughts for your bliss coming to me,
Like a newborn child of a starlit ballerina folding back into A paper airplane whose lighter than air edges had Caressed by fingertips for all of a moment before I sent it away, Steaming like a bottle in a vermilion sea over all of that Yard, looping and tying invisible knots around the Maleleuca trees,
Until for its final while gamboling still, being peppered there
By curious ants who carry away the scents of your Divinity down into their fathomless castles
To be greeted with fathomless kisses by their most homeopathic Queen.

Robert Rorabeck

With Forest Fires

If I go to New Mexico
Again, and leave my true love behind
For a little while-
Will she become like that hallucination without My trust:
Will she be the busy noise of an airplane
As it skips across the Ocean,
Or the fire after it has eaten a forest
The butterflies have sifted into after a long Journey-
Or even the fair after it has packed up and Metamorphosed
Leaving only its prizes of gold fish to the housewives
Who are too young to care-
Will I become like a memory passed a thousand
Times a day on a busy highway,
The night and its descendants smelling of Jasmine and the spent
Noises of engines- like a manmade
Ferality,
And will I have to spend away the waves of My midnight thinking of her,
Hollowing and whittling her grottos into My chest,
Like scars or tattoos, just trying to become
A longer poem holding out for her absence-
While she remains greener in another man's mind,
Blazing like an airport of jealous jewelry-
Until she finally stops reminiscing of my make-believe Promises,
And returns again to his sterile joy,
Losing all of her favorite color,
And her soul- her child busy at the hips of Her playground,
And they ring around her again-
The sky blazes with forest fires that never signal
My name.

With Games I Cannot Understand

It opens up in all of us
A smoking ballroom
Where the airplanes
Fighter jet, or dissapear;
And the sanguined
Bees lose their wings,
And their flowershops,
And tend to crawl
Around of
The carpet of some Living room for Hours and hours-
Without any movement
Of her hands
To get them where they Are going long after
The tourists have driven
Home,
Super saturated-
All of their advertisements
Cut down as if Airplanes from a mobile,
Like fish escaping
Back into the sea;
Finished with games
I cannot understand-

Robert Rorabeck

With Gold And With Oranges

Bodies who lay laughing without wings
Ringed in the salt of insignificant stings- here
They say you lay almost faithful upon your Wedding day,
And the echoes of joy enjoyed the candles
Flames:
Your house was filled with gold and with oranges,
And your chariots never had to change:
In your little bedroom like a story book after Midnight,
As you must be taking part in your love making,
As your children lay sprawled as if after a holiday
Of confetti- They seem to enjoy the weather
As the airplanes touch down like feathers,
And you hold your brown heads
Together
And whisper.

Robert Rorabeck

With Her Eyes

Forecasted as the memory—beautifully scarred
In the student parking lot
And drowsing until the lights come on and the crickets
Sawing the bows of their cricket legs
After the girls have gone home, silencing the water fountains.
There is only my cherry red Oldsmobile
And my cheeks flaming:
I dream that there are fireworks in the sky
Going off,
And in the middle of the afternoons of my truancies,
Housewives percolating as the grass wreathes and struggles
In the moats of sunlight:
And all of us boys are up on her roof getting off,
As the canal twinkles like a metamorphosis:
In the eyes of the alligators and rattlesnakes rubies that are Busy listening,
As the children come home and ring around her,
As she lays down her glass and sings to them with her eyes.

Robert Rorabeck

With Her Eyes Closed Or Her Eyes Opened

What is it I want in the female body
My sad mind wonders on fermented sugar cane;
Maybe I am just listening to her song,
Just another of my unexplainable species, her legs
Scissors like crickets out under the stars-
All the wonderful happenstance of that strange science fiction
Keeps me young in fits;
And the night is terrible, terrible, with or without this:
Freshman year I was in love with a palindrome who has since Changed her name and bared children;
And sometimes in the middle of the week my aunt comes wearing
The costumes of the post-office,
And I give her money- Then it's always crepuscule, and the Sprinklers chew, and the traffic comes back and forth
With or without policeman,
But I am never being so bold as to just come right out and say it;
And I wonder what I truly intend to mean,
Being that I've never been any good at playing sports,
Though I once sweated and fenced:
Maybe I am just trying to save myself by all of this,
Scribbling in the snow as if trying to reinvent electricity under the Teary eyes of hidden glaciers and the virgins of their Breathless grottos:
And don't the days tremble, and I still don't know all the names
For these flowers;
And I still only keep one or two regular muses, both either
Unavailable or disinterested;
But if I keep at it these will become swings for my children,
And I will be able to taste her mouth again
With her eyes closed or her eyes opened.

Robert Rorabeck

With Her Other And More Nameless Of Men

I am not alright to feel these wordless things:
Wingless, like wingless airplanes:
I am not alright to move again, until the days come
With all of their fathers
Lifting up all of their children; and I am not alright again, Thirstily down at the foothills of my mother's Most precious of mountains, where she was raised
And where she has come again,
And lifted up across all of the snows and the caracoles of Tourisms,
Lifted up even past the youngest and most vibrant of Overpasses,
Who are like hopeful suitors rising their backs like saddles
Of the rushes of virile flowers to her:
Of which of them my she choose, I cannot choose for her;
And it does not feel alright to wish for any of them,
While all of those fish are swaying underneath the manes of Panting lions,
As the school buses make their rounds again across the vibrantly
Weed-strewn yards where me soul is sleeping off a ways again;
And where Alma is sleeping again, off a ways from the path
Again with her other an more nameless of men.

Robert Rorabeck

With Her Unkempt Eyes

Half the bottle is gone and I am even more empty
Than I was before,
With the school buses circling around,
The schoolyards mating just as they was before;
And all of the light going down,
And the schoolyard closing, and all of my muses going home,
Back into the schoolyards that there were even before
Presupposing:
And the houses loom like magnified terrapin:
They loom and loom,
And the words of diamonds stretch out so languid before
All of them;
And they wait like precious minerals in the mines of their Dorms,
Until the lighters come like stalwart young gentlemen,
Touching their brightest of heads to their flumes;
And then they come brightly erecting like glowing and Cerulean tents in the gloom of schoolyards miles
Above the mausoleums of mice and tourists,
Glowing as I have seen you yet lighting out above the gloom,
Glowing like ghostly candles touching the lips
Of unconquerable fireworks mouthing off in the rock sewn
Bosoms utterly far above the graveyards
Of your popular aphorisms; and then you just douse your self.
And you realize that you love your new child and You husband equally, Sharon, in the snowflakes that you have Cut yourself out of the snowstorm;
And that I was never beautiful enough to truly love you;
And so you go walking like an unatuned orchestra over the Dams that might yet glow with the leaking mysteries that My mother still my yet give me with her unkempt eyes,
Sharon.... Sharon.

Robert Rorabeck

With Hips Of Tattoos

Turning up for brail like children without any sense,
Wimpled in pieces of dismissive alphabet reaching for the Sun:

You know that is just how your bodies are, like spindles of Golden castles on the run:

Cresting atop of my pistols, and pointing all of your guns,
The eurhythmics of cheetahs with hips of tattoos,

And your eyes far away atop of your nubile pedestal:

This is how I think of you after you have conquered,

And won over me by what you have done.

Robert Rorabeck

With Its Heartbroken Love

My mother does the wash behind my back
While I feel up my bad cheek:
The Guatemalans are now well home to sleep,
And I read some Borges in translation.
Then I read a poem I've written before to Erin.
And it is not good:
The way I masturbate into the ever ready night
With the background noises of the way
Things have always began,
The way they are always going.
The things you can't get back, things covered
Up by weather,
And all the sad mermaids matriculated in from the Everglades,
Or places I can no longer believe in,
While she works in the despondency of a true misfit,
And I have accidentally erased the more
Beautiful things I had to say to her,
When I promised not to say anything at all to her
Once more or ever again:
The mythology of a good woman walking alone in the Park,
Baring children like fruit,
Her eyes so lonely, but her body so well perceived;
And prop airplanes flying low in the dark,
Sound like the dangerous kisses of Venal lovers while
I don't remember how I began to speak of this fugue,
How I hoped that it might resonate for years after Instead of coming out as a stillborn prepackaged into A coffin,
Something that will break my parents hearts until
Their very own graves,
And yet no one else on earth will be familiar with its Heartbroken love
At all.

Robert Rorabeck

With Mute Efficiency

Following the sparks of egrets, my soul has sparklers
That burn across the glades of Kindergarten: at first they seem to make a sound,
But then the prospect goes away
As if led off by kidnappers who only supposed for A little while they were in love;
But the sunlight falls, metamorphosing the rain and Ice cream,
The little plates underneath the trees catching both
But spilling down to the homogenized sea,
They offer this to nobody- and the words speak for Themselves
With mute efficiency and this is what they say.

Robert Rorabeck

With My Bedroom Thoughts

The same memory waits for no one more
Than this—
With the days caving in like sink holes over
Our lives—
Words come to their own conclusions
Outside of throats played like instruments
By their hearts—
And we get up, evolved into our necessities,
Wanting a drink at the very start,
Some elixir so to fall in love without having
To look anyone in the eye—
Brown skins piling up in their cars like
An apiary on the road—
See all of these strange girls, a menagerie
Of a harem escaped from the outskirts of
Mexico—
And I love them all, calling them with my bedroom
Thoughts,
Turning my scarred architectures their way,
And sometimes they come again,
Like waves at high tide—
My sorcery the same thievery as moon light
Upon gravity—
But never mindful, they soon forget,
And go back on that usual road,
Yet sizzling with the filament bright enough to
Dull a Ferris Wheel—
And up until that very moment when they step
Back in doors I like to imagine that they Think of me.

Robert Rorabeck

With My Mutely Jubilant Tongue

Born in the silver forts and there you are, Alma:
Brown as the most auburns of snows in my bed:
And we lay together,
And I paint your copper cannons green with my tongue,
While the starving conquistadors filibuster
And the stars rust together until the night cannot close
And the horses and their riders are forced to waylay around
The Christmas tree with the little train and the presents I
Have bought for you during all of these weekdays,
As I run away underneath the busy overpasses praying that I get back in time to do your dishes, to clean you like a mother
Cat with her kitten with my mutely jubilant tongue.

Robert Rorabeck

With My Reassuring Sacrifices

Now I have a new tomb generally right here
Next to the railroad cars next to the elephants being loaded
And underneath the mountains I once thought
To climb to pick the vineyards of the lightning,
Themselves beneath the heavens:
As my muse lays in a cerulean bed not too far away from here,
Not too far away with her children, or with her man-
And I become her living cenotaph, glowing around
The parks and the graveyards, something unspoken about
But as toothy as a fox:
And if she could see the hieroglyphics of my skeleton right
Now on this spot wouldn't she understand like a snowflake
Melting in her brown palm across the ways from
All of those rivers she had to cross just to get here
To find me- insouciant and disbanded, and standing over
Me like a windmill without any breath
In the palm of her brown hand- her womb opening like
A rose garden underneath the crosses and the echoes
Of the waves of some Spanish fort that represented
The vacancies of another pit stop that I supposed
At one time or another her family owned:
And I want to take her Christian name, and to voyage
With her across the many hallucinations until we find our Honeymoon- and out this very spot coalesce- tattooed
In the dressed of our souls, while her children turn around
Beneath us, lucid, ovoid stars in their game- and I inhaling her
Heavens, with my reassuring sacrifices telling her what it
Is all about.

Robert Rorabeck

With My Song Of This

Really desperate, as desperate as boys wanting
To become real,
Or trying to figure hard on what it is to be exactly what
They were yesterday in the biz,
While the water fountains gathered at her tan lips,
And the teachers' echoes called
Over the migratory steps of a red Mexico: the landscaping her Favorite color:
While we kissed open mouthed before the eyes of The albino alligator, and Alma says she remembers this,
While the bicycles park in suburban bliss,
And she recedes like a well placed waterfall back into her
Neighborhoods that I somehow miss,
While the stewardesses call their captains in the skies:
And they all wear pristine platinum wings over
Cerulean uniforms, their arms spread like wildflowers, this way
And this inside their leaping cabins:
And I must say that I know nothing about her, but that I think About her all of the time,
And call to her with my song of this.

Robert Rorabeck

With My Wonderful Mother

Nooses of sky over green pepper fields-
A grandfather and a granddaughter attending,
The coral snakes under hooves of loose thoughts drifting
Away like stolen bicycles,
Or muses that don't reorganize themselves anymore- words that feel
A money changer's scale provide no intercourse for
The senseless at heart,
As the mother I once knew waits in doors, the cicadas
Waiting in their changing rooms of trees
With the schools closed down and the selkies lay
With the fallen oranges molding beneath the trees:
I thought I saw your eyes once, I thought I saw them looking Away while my guardian angel evaporated with the Burning lighthouses kneeling in the senseless day-
With my wonderful mother underneath the roof,
The thieveries of moonlight stealing all that she was away.

Robert Rorabeck

With New Poems

With new poems, a fever of under developed
Skeletons—
Sea monkeys in a petri dish—
That believes itself a storm—
My dog walks into my room
Underneath the ceiling fan—
Across the threshold,
My wives cries not to drink too much,
But this house is only a thousand feet—
There is not enough air in its lungs to breathe
In and out—
A swordfish on some old gods mantle
Caught out of time
Like poor old Gatsby—
His dreams of golden heifers, the same way
I thought of you—
I still have the stem of that first rose
That you returned to me—
Now it has mostly fallen from the trellis
Of this yellow house,
But the sun is shining above the pines—
And the airplanes are singing beneath of her,
Their breasts out—
They are just as drunk as I am,
And they are not sad that they aren't going home.

Robert Rorabeck

With No One Around

Nights are cool and sibilant and unreal.
They are the best times to be out,
Alone and drinking
Just off the block of Military Trail where
The girls are always selling,
And now you can think about them safely,
Now that you are getting too drunk to Drive,
And you can just masturbate to female sailors,
Those leggy stewardesses and busty
Astronauts,
Fail into the maggots eating your jive,
Fail right smack dab into the middle of your class,
Licking your lips over Disney World,
And the hot names of plants used for South Florida
Landscaping:
It's what you're selling now, and it would be best
To memorize them,
To be good at your job, just like the mailman knows
And shakes hands with everyone on his Block:
And the traffic is moving,
While your gut is lazy, and yet the trains seem to be Hanging out: They could take you to Colorado,
Or back home to your dogs.
Why did you have to leave your dogs? There was No reason:
Like this night, it was inconsequential and yet so
Profound,
And not a woman on the earth loves you,
But for this second its like magic, remembering their Pretty plumes and flowers
Brighter than they ever bloomed, even now,
With no one around.

Robert Rorabeck

With Nothing Left To Prove

Yes, the country dies fighting dragons:
It dies gallantly not knowing that it is Beowulf fighting its Last monster:
The country dies into trucks and cars,
Blaring with all of its country stars:
Right into the middle of Bellefontaine Cemetery it gives its Last ballyhoo;
And the monoliths of its last breath rise up like skyscrapers of Honey bells:
The country dies as it touches itself; and you don't write
Because you don't have anything to prove;
And I swam on the swings with Kelly today, swam in the black
Man's playground on new Pompeii,
Neglecting to collect the new coloring books of animals for My papier-mâché arc- My father's name is Mark,
And I am the captivated sailor who farms from his main staff
A rich topiary of honey-spectacular seahorses;
And in the grottos of grizzly bears I transform with the Conquistadors into carnivals of cannibalistic carnivores;
And the old poets burn like leading waves,
Like girls heavily perfumed on strawberry floats in Saint Augustine:
You are the richness of my soul, and I watched you being planted
Today;
You fell down burping blood and little plastic dolls right
Next to Sara Teasdale who'd just come up shopping from her
Immortal malls;
And we held her hand like a conduit; and I listened to you Breathing like a lonely washing machine in a carport the rains were Spitting over like a typhoon; and the country gave its final throws;
The pitchers closed on the mound
And the golems rose; and I fell asleep with you underneath the Bleachers in a country of losers:
From that high school you got thrown out from as a freshman,
That I graduated from but still live in,
Like the lucky old son of a felon, behind the illusions of your Tragically sellable eyes,
The country dies, love struck and battle weary,
Like an old veteran in the blistering trams of an epileptic playground

With nothing left to prove.

Robert Rorabeck

With Nothing On Their Mind

They come out from the door
They've been making love behind.
They make it all the way to San Francisco with nothing on Their mind.

Robert Rorabeck

With Nothing To Survive

Mutilated with the horrendous flowers
In a freezer of romance,
Bleeding out words that come shoeless to the fair
And baseball games after she has already Left-
The pickup artists pack up and leave and take the Grass out of the field that was once
Soft and young, expectant of your Truancies-
And even the eyes of the alligator which were Once the biggest of marbles,
Are gone,
And they seem there beneath the surface like
The inevitable death of music,
Their tongues hunger less- the airplanes above
Them as mute as punished children,
And the sun is a mother who abandons her young,
Gone away without any feeling at all
Leaving them with nothing to survive.

Robert Rorabeck

With Only Me

Making their marks in red jackets,
Like burning paper flirting with the windy popcorn
Over the fair- and all of it without a home:
Comely though dejected and playing hooky while
All of their better fathers are working Losing fingers down by the sawmill while they take their Cane poles to the fishing hole
Where the selkies curse in the slow moving pinwheel dreams;
While at night she echoes that she only wants to Be with him; and her brother is off to war
Where the mines evaporate bodies into wishes-
And she returns igniting her keys into her car-
Only wanting to be with him,
While the birds sing, and the fish swim, and she lays down
Again with only me.

Robert Rorabeck

With Our Swords That Flame

The snake has tracked its lions all across the earth,
And maybe it hates the man, as in its religion this is its evil,
And all of its folklore is bent around the monsters
With legs,
As it also inhabits the gardens that burn, that we too
Have made so strange with our swords
That flame.

Robert Rorabeck

With Plans Of Yesterday

It is my job to drink this
Liquor,
To sit like a scarred basement
Underneath
The tinfoil fascinations
Gazing down
From the heavens-
And reconsider, while the Gears in our lovestruck
Bodies compound
Their tensions
And windmills our hopes-
Loves like
Bicycles gulping the Caesuras-
Through the birth canals of
The old avenues-
Aquamarine-
And teardrops of sea horses:
In relations of Queen Anne's Wheels,
Or the diadems of hemispheres
Who are perpetually
Fertilizing their inner concentricity's-
Revealing the yokes swimming
There, like young sisters
Teasing their bare shoulder blades
To the sunlight
With plans of yesterday-

Robert Rorabeck

With So Many Songs

It doesn't happen that I am here and counting down
And brandishing magpies in my cathedrals,
And becoming all of the otherwise thoroughly unhooked,
And making love to the misaligned maypoles of the acolytes of Paganistic cathedrals:
And now in whispers over all of those canals, where the winos
Have misappropriated the most blondish of blond boys
From their fieldtrips:
I settle down: and I hunker down, and I finally make a theme,
A day laborer in a day dream: of his burning soul, his Gasoline, his Alma:
And I can still smell her brown skin coming for me like
A sheet on a clothes line through all of the burning sugar cane:
And it was that it happened that our loins met,
And we made love:
But however two butterflies or mariposas happen to meet
And make love, I don't care, and I don't wish to know:
All I do is sell fireworks: I sell Christmas trees:
And I have laid down in love with you, Alma,
And swatted the fires that burned across your sea: and this was Enough to know for all of the love in me;
And I love you, and I burn up into a thousand ways of failure,
Just to warm you in a bed, in a kingdom who with so many songs
Of blue jays eating themselves have no further needs for me.

Robert Rorabeck

With Such Blindness

I saw her there and held my breath
While the busses were turning around like equal marionettes
In the counterclockwise lamentations of a funnel
Cloud;
And even though she had turned her rears to me, and walked Away with him; it was as if I could see her acceptance Taking shape like a metamorphosis crawling out of Nap time into the crepuscules of music class
In which the rhythms of young bodies get up and bow,
Hoods congratulating the soft encouragements of the young
Teachers getting experience permeated by the airconditioning;
Until it was all a hoot, and the things that were
In fact never seen,
Still called out until there was darkness through the mowed
Grass and then into the lounging cypress like feral
Christmas trees, and it went that way following and seeming
To light her path with such blindness.

Robert Rorabeck

With That Fox

Burning up in prayers of our semiprecious beliefs:
Like commuters waiting on the tarmacs for the divine providence
To touch down as airplanes,
While everything around them has an action, both good and bad,
But always dying and forgetting to mail letters,
While loins cross and bleed, and her little children look out from Windows that she once made love behind:
The very love that created them, and sent then cascading through the Acrobatics of their living rooms and into Christmas,
Until everything falls like a séances that doesn't matter,
Both gods and devils making love,
And the fat bellies of airplanes touching down, hungry to be Sated,
Like the embarrassment of a vineyard ripping its clothes of the vine
To get in bed with that fox.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Beautiful Species You Employ

Your lips are beginning the fine creases of a Distinguished grandmother, which is no insult-
I have never kissed them, but sung of them by my Own lips, the insecure choices you will never hear;
Perhaps, I will drink a bottle of Lysol next Summer, and go the way of Vachel Lindsay when the Aspens are still green, their bodies reminding me
Of you swaying like a wave in a varnished hallway,
And then as a ghost I will sleep in the dimples of Your pottery, and know those things about you no one Could describe; and enter those things like an old Spanish
Fort, your lovely narcissisms, the roots your flesh Enfolds your blood like Spanish wine- Only then I would Know the ways. Though sleeping on some sad hill underneath
The cold crosses, the chicken wire strewn through the Plenitude of corpse weed; I might then be considered fully Formed, and go about you bathing as if in the reservoirs
Of a crustacean, preferring the tributaries you most often
Employ, running along the appendages of your carriage
Like light slipping down through the bay windows of a Living room- For otherwise I will know nothing of your off-colored Crèches,
Like lamplight which cradles your child,
kindled by your elegant lashes; and I am lazy and play no sports,
But wrestle all day in the arid basins where your perfume
Wafts like lavender pollens, or the descriptions of species
That you would know better, having petted and fed them along a Path I have only come to in passing, struggling through the boreal Scars; and, not invited upon, never learned to speak French,
Having to sleep under the leaky guts of school buses during lunch
Time,
You already in a deep esoteric conversation,
Like in a fairytale's trance with the beautiful species you employ.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Butterfly

Like thunderbolts they've been Snapping up the rainstorms—
Well, dogs, they've been leaping,
Leaping:
Until they are going home without
Any answers:
There they are, just as beautiful as Any home on the other side
Of stained glass windows without
Any answers,
As I've been calling through
The monuments of the eye-less skydivers:
And this is the place where they belong,
Calling together into their shadows,
I don't even suppose they can Reason for themselves—with or Without their star-crossed lovers,
As they've been beating away for hours and Hours—
Burying their wings into the places that cannot Hold without any shadows—
Until the lances beckon for the sweethearts of Her children,
And the highways end up right in the sweet spots
Of her bedrooms—
And the waves glisten off the lips of the prepubescent
Giants,
And all of the night laughs away into their cathedrals:
And the airplanes touch down in the foothills
Of the truants' memories,
Until it already feels alright to survive,
And you are called back to a home that feels Entirely believable—next to me,
And to the tortoise who is happily eating his Breakfast with the butterfly.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Colors Of Your Soul

I've even been up in the fanfare of markets
Above the tree lines of your beauty and of your
Flea markets:
I've sauntered up in the mineral ways, while cursing
The sun like looking in your eyes,
And remembering the way down through my Hallucinations,
Following the shed horns of elk like bred crumbs
Through a tree less forest-
Like an instrument that plays the sweet sound of Your soul through this insurmountable pain-
As if I found the only firework in the world
That blazed for a moment with the colors of your Soul.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Constellations

Burning throughout its own echoes,
The suburbia enjoys the laziness of crepuscule,
And its green yards go to sleep:
Its flags and housewives go to sleep,
While above all of the abandoned forts
And baseball diamonds,
The airplanes leap through the sky with the perpetuity
Of inspired lovers:
And I swear that I have seen you hear,
Through the blue lights of the hibernating churches-
When the hummingbirds no longer molest the roses,
And the children surcease from the playgrounds-
Then my eyes awaken to the other world
That perfumes the graveyards and the lakes,
And I hold my eyes up to your beauty
And your candle light burns with the constellations.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Drumming Of Excited Hearts

Sommeliers are singing in their wine
Gardens;
That is what they're doing, or they're turning
Into seagulls,
And scooping silver fish from the sea,
Like great strips of tinsel floating in the long
Green hair of a vast and naturalistic maiden:
That was always what I supposed;
And when they get thirsty, they lie down in the French sawdust right next to the slender
Docks with the gondolas where I am trying to Sell my bread for words;
And we pour wine from a box into her lips,
Until her eyes turn demure and askance toward
The Eiffel tower where the tourists are churning up
Like mechanical confections;
And entire clutches of hummingbirds hatch from out
Her nose, and baby's breath, and tiny dolphins;
And they all swim down those dimpled avenues,
Gently sloshing around her lips;
They stain her white lapels until her infant cries and wants her
Home;
And we'll take her hand, knowing that it is what
We must do, and enjoying it, for doesn't she have the bone
Structure of an angel, which still gives us license to write
Even in her absence of over ten years. We saw
Her when our occupation was stealing bicycles briefly,
And then only for ten seconds inside the Chinese restaurant;
We had to watch her kiss the cook,
But if he is her husband now it is not relevant; and even if It is someone else, it is our hand she is relying upon to Guide her lactating flesh under the franc aphonic heavens;
It is just delightful to turn even briefly through the Ways with her,
And listen to our footsteps intermingle with the drumming of Excited hearts.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Graces Of Pretty Flowers

Graveyards filled with the graces of Pretty flowers and pretty
Stones—
Ways beyond here,
Going up to the dumping grounds—
As you lay into his shoulder blades like a fetish
Of unrecognizable kites trying to Make a pornographic movie high up
In the switchback gloom—
Ways that we have gone being lost forever
Inside a thunder shower that lasts only for a small Part of one particular afternoon—
Flowers that hang over the Battlements of lost grandfathers—
And your shoulders open to the sun,
Running red and brown,
Brown and red—
Castigated and stumbling over all of the Remaining bodies of those whom they will love
For forever more.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Moon

Crawling to the forefront of another misery of
Guatemala—I drink my rum,
I say my lines—and I await for another day to splay me open
To the eyes and senses of fishermen—
Or, if I suppose, the sunlight cannot keep you here
From another catastrophe,
Like stolen bicycles sleep walking back to their masters—
Cannot keep you from his love,
Or from the marionettes of his children he
Conceived inside of you—then the cave is stolen,
But in its zoetrope still dances—
Laughing under the moonlight for the wolves to come
Into its movie theatre, or for the planes flying above
It to look down,
Causing another catastrophe, awakening—
The moonlight over a valley of windmills—cousins to
The caesuras—they spring around them,
Never bothering to wonder what is laughing at the Same time with the moon.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Premonitions Of A Greater Truth

These words who burn my throat like lies:
Alma says that I am a liar,
That I am always lying: but the clouds lie too when they Seem to perceive the images of our language,
And at least my lies are pitiful and homeopathic:
They cannot swallow much,
And they wind up on her doorstep- to a girl who has never Been to Colorado to see where my mother was born,
While the newborn unicorns curl their horns in the Thunderbrush of their woodland creche,
And the traffic jams of rains pile up through the aspens,
I show all of my wounds to you,
Alma- and if they are not great, I apologize;
But I can still see you here all the same, the wooden hallways
Smoking with your basic instruments:
Your body wears the day, or it is a mirage, and something
I cannot help lying about,
For its divine aesthetics ring with the premonitions of a greater Truth.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Same Beautiful Eyes

Long days of love making coming outside of the houses
That are not ours,
And running our scarred bodies into the first breaths of the sea,
Trying how to find out how the waves come
Up and down with the even pressures; maybe all of this is bound
To kill my liver,
But not before my loneliness takes me whole: The loneliness of looking At all of these houses bound up in great fits the same way we are,
The way our bodies are made to coil together,
To press and need together, to know our astral signs that birthed us
In the pinstripes weathers;
And I dream of a road going through the country with tall grass and Tall trees:
I dream of you along this road winding, and how we stop and make love
And almost lose ourselves while the murderers and grave robbers pass
Us by and forget about us;
And I dream that in all of this world there is really only one house,
And one beautiful woman to fill my life with her companionship;
And all the remaining answers are just the wrong doors that dropp off
The cliffs where the cars are crushed;
And under the eyes of this woman lies the seas filled with the only answers
That I need,
But besides this death is all around me and is filled with the same beautiful Eyes that she seems to want to make for me.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Shadows, Mary

What has the evil troubadour done to Mary?
I have checked the hay-loft, I have checked the dairy;
But she has gone like the summer's river, like
The Spring-time's cherry;

Now the snows crowd her new job, and there
Are Mary's footprints in the snow's jaw: She is working,
But I cannot find her. Taken new routs, so I cannot Find her, but I can smell the kiss upon her flesh,
Of a fine John,

It makes me so hungry and so feverish,
That I begin my drooling stutter; I would like some Bones with pie and butter;
And as I leap from crook to shutter, I moan
And this I mutter:

"Mary, Mary, our children are hungry without Your breasts to suckle, and Mary, Mary,
I am hungry without your flesh to mould and knuckle,
But your kiss has gone away, Mary,
Mary, gone away, but I will follow the steps it took,
Mary, Mary,
Because there are all sorts of trails in these woods,
And the new weddings and hair cuts shall do no good,
For I am coming with the shadows, Mary,
Mary, with the shadows to do no good."

Robert Rorabeck

With The Shoulders Over The Gloom

And they make love in the pieces of the forest
After the school has closed
And the graveyard has opened—
New and oiled
Are the werewolves and no one knows
Where they are going,
Back and forth
Through the bric-a-brac as through the gloom,
Taking their applesauce parcels upon their shoulders,
Trying to look high and mighty even as they Get lost and eventually are enveloped
As envelopes are kissed by werewolves—
And now here you are somewhere,
While the fish are breeding—
And the long nights get lonely
And there is nothing left to save for ourselves—
And you condescend one more time to kiss
The shoulders over the gloom.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Silence That Evaporates

With the silence that evaporates the cars from their houses—
It inaugurates these congregations of misspellings the frogs
Are serenading,
So I don't suppose you know a single bit of my love—
Even though it seems to last forever, and has been about you
For so long—until eventually even the yellowness echoes
In evaporations and the sunlight has nowhere else to go—
The last pools of it remain in the mispronounced ivy
Of narrow-minded bachelors until they are too
Drunk with shame and liquor to see—
And even though my love has never found out, I still Wake up every morning and teach your children—
Anonymous mispronunciations across the day light graveyards
Whose sadness is drowned by the daylight that is too blinded to see.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Speed Of Light

Baseball games are the openings of the day's lunch boxes—
Don't you see how they make pretty news in between the playgrounds
Of the day's pretty tears:
Well, she was here anyways—reclusive, until she got bored,
Cardboard marionette torn about by the passionate Happenstance of fireworks—
And the highways proceed swerving around her,
Going all of the way off to Tennessee or some other
Out of the way place, filled with isolated grottos
And mermaids who have become cenotaphs
Until there is no other way to run—
And all of the Goldilocks have been defeated—
Places that leave us in the dust,
As if we've been looking back for a million years,
And she has gone forwards with the speed of light.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Sun Going Down With Nowhere To Go

With scars adept to traffic,
I go sideways: The dogs want out.
They are very needy, and the days are needy
Too. Another one has eaten the world,
My soul is joyous- but my face tired-
If I sold wine, I'd be beautiful,
I'd have a little family, and a house in the Snow- I'd play with my daughter under the Tree, and I wouldn't listen no matter what
The serpent sang to me;
And my soul is joyous, it has nowhere to go.
Maybe tomorrow it will follow the sun outside
And around the world a bit;
Maybe it will visit you and crenellate your daughter
Like a good luck charm, and influence more
People to consummate you- They consummate you
Already with the sun going down,
The cars swirling down the mountain as if in a Clever, automated dream; their faces winding down,
But I should think that their souls would like
To crenellate your daughter with me too.
She is drooling on a bib you wear over your gown,
With the sun going down with nowhere to go.

Robert Rorabeck

With The Tigers And The Lions

Angels have earned the right to Own knives, and to hold them
Over the bushes,
The airplanes have burned into
With the tigers and
The lions—
In two weeks of an end of Winter amusement—
While my cousins all get married
And build their married houses
Further and further up the
Mountains—
So when they step down, oh what
An orchestra—
To the super markets
And the movie theatres—and their Shadows glisten,
And sometimes a hidden daycare
Of unobtainable flowers blooms in
The hidden passageways,
As if seeming to want to follow them.

Robert Rorabeck

With Their Eyes

Beautiful simpletons using brail until
The circus comes
Counting midnight backwards- and the clouds
Fail to tidy up or foreshadow
The sexy romance
Of airplanes entangled with Titans:
That in their bedroom of worlds above us,
They do so much nonesuch-
And the world comes down around their shoulders:
Cascades of waxy tears
Or salty candles: and we hold hands in the roses
Underneath the overpasses:
And especially on weekends, they come to Sell things from far and wide around Us- and we get liver disease from wishing to Be like too many pilots-
Anxious, with green ax handles, and the girls getting Out of high school and melting around us:
Developing in the higher basins until they are Nothing more than something vermilion
In a sky of wounds- in an arcade of Perfumes and open doorways until they finally make
The decision for us to let us in or to not Let us in with their eyes.

Robert Rorabeck

With Their Feverish Lips

Airplanes in the sky with the clouds:
Child's mobile up in our thoughts,
As it snows over the rivers
And love freezes at our lips, as bouquets-
There are knives in the mountains all
Winter,
And your shop lies beneath them with your
Two children at your hip in
Pieta- in your little shop- and it isn't right,
But you remember nothing of our Diminished high school, but I have returned
Again,
And teach there, lying in the mowed grasses
As the rivers run all over your gardens
And sing to you of the hoary men they have Metamorphosed of: yes, they sing of
I with their feverish lips coming down,
Making new wounds beneath the heavens-
And of other things, I suppose you will Never know- but which I've said for so long.

Robert Rorabeck

With Their Husbands And Their Children

Lost in the sections of an oval race
As sunlight falls on the wrong side of my face,
And the housewives come home
To their vineyards along the groves of the sea-
Like young goddesses upon their seahorses
Who never have to think of me.
Eventually they will slip away, their metamorphosis
Migrating,
And they will make love underneath mountains
Beneath the keystones of their ruddy peeks:
Never suspecting the mysteries of the higher aeries:
That I was once above them, looking down
Counting my loves to a lightning storm.
And in the morning they arose with their husbands
And their children
And drove the few blocks that it took to buy ice-cream.

Robert Rorabeck

With Their Most Beloved Of Men

Joyless tabernacle of dollar bills:
Housewives jumping out their window sills.
As the days of any number spill
And spill-
Goldfish in a choir remembering the heavens of
The sea now separated
In the suburbia of a pet shop awaiting epiphany,
Or any cloud in the sky
To rain its long abandoned cares upon them
Just as sometimes mermaids cry their salt back into
The sea
Lamenting that they are legless to dance
With their most beloved of men.

Robert Rorabeck

With Things To Say

Perfume of cadavers and
Another word strikes out for the night,
And I am old before the time
And looking at all of my spume,
The spend threats for the arachnids with beautiful
Legs,
Young women in the waves having better things
To do than to pass their time to me;
And yet I remember that one time deep in Suburbia when all three of them showed Up for me at that party
And I was so drunk I just crisscrossed the yard
And farted
And wished I had some fireworks while all three beautiful
Wombs beat it home;
But I was still good,
And I had beautiful things to say,
And I am still saying them, so far away from the cold party,
And one day I will have a coffin,
And even a tomb stone if I am lucky enough
With things to say....

Robert Rorabeck

With Touches From The Rain

Dancing in the shadows as I stood alone:
Now you look like
My uncle,
Now you look like a tomb- but the night is Easy to see by anyways-
And it wont lake long for the heroes
To walk with the virgins
Back home through the forest:
Hand in hand,
And I wonder if they will kiss-
Or, if in the morning, you will be my bride-
But, either way, it will take awhile to Ride out and get a good look at the other side,
And in the meantime I suppose you've Thought that you were just beautiful,
While the waves were lapping at the Ferris wheels
Or, in the very least,
The foothills of pinwheels- and then it wasn't
So long anyways- Just another
Starting out, knees keeping warm beside
The open fire,
As the dragon sang up to the airplanes leaping
Across the oceans to Spain-
As the girls spilled out from the hallways so
Beautifully beneath them,
Like pearls from the love letters of Waves being dimpled with touches from the rain.

Robert Rorabeck

With Utter Civility

Bottles and perfumes of popgun antics
Distilled from your distemper
And I am supposed to be getting up and giving
You negligee on your birthday:
I chose robin blue, because its what your daughter
Would have wanted
And we could all be lying in bed together reading books
Underneath innocent mobiles,
The perfect models of commuter airlines replete with Stewardesses serving rum and captains with little Roman candles smoking in their beards:
Every day would be just as smoky as the perimeter of a
Forest fire we had under control,
Just so we could watch the wildlife leaping and to send
Or blossoming patrols on trains to see the capitol
And all of its godly monuments:
We would be like giants, like the primordial gods,
Or like sea monsters who had finally decided to settle Down and stepping out onto open land learned to breath
With utter civility.

Robert Rorabeck

With Weekends Of Forever

A life of loneliness lines the road—as people
Are going as they're told,
As their shadows are going all days of the week—
As the waters follow the contours of the creek—
And the day laborers go to the orchards
To sweat—
And the housewives bet on who to bet—
And every syllable is like a creature imagined from Childhood—
As though the devils were angels,
And they are up to no good—
And the pilots have developed no fear
For the sky—
Who skip their stewardesses like stones
That must never lie—
And in the morning there must be another
Truth to be told—
As the young grow up to do what they're told—
And your shadows will follow us to
The holidays lost—
With weekends of forever whatever the cost.

Robert Rorabeck

With Whatever Cenotaphs

All day long in a cloud of dynamite
Rattle teeth as
Golden as the armpits of the moon, until finally Released
And settled down and sucreased in the shallows-
There off in the penumbras
Of the satellites of Anywhere, I wonder what it must feel like
To come down off the cooling steps
Of the bus and to fiddle on home
Like a crustacean touching its open wounds:
Like a firework who has figured out how to handle itself:
Over the bridgeworks of bleeding gums where
The otters still swim anyways,
And the hobos toss their overused bottles underhand
Like flutes with too much spit,
Cursing and writing to the awful green grass in short
Hand,
Mystified again by what the day has done to them:
Until the housewives scuttle across their heady bones
All in a home ward circus of Cadillacs and roses,
Esteemed that the day is just going to be all right,
And then their in their weeping bodies
Crying with whatever cenotaphs who can bleed all throughout
The night.

Robert Rorabeck

With Your Brown Eyes

How it opens- bright as tennis courts
In a voiceless springtime: so privileged, and with their Young hands on their bodies,
Watching the waves over half a hemisphere:
Sometimes it must come across them that
This is exactly what the conquistadors came across-
But, very soon,
Their young bodies are busied by the pestilence
Of their busy arcs,
And the silver airplanes cross them like werewolves,
And their art dissolved
And becomes the better part of another transparency of
The middle glass-
And it never gets better than this:
A little vermillion Christmas tree a kissing cousin
To the television,
And their little sisters sleeping side by side with the Very science fiction of ghosts:
And when they wake up tomorrow- somehow
Losing another tooth- they will finally decide What they've figured out- and you will Slip down beside him,
Kissing his brown lips- and loving him with your brown
Eyes.

Robert Rorabeck

With Your Brown Hair Flowing

A few glasses
And a few more words for you,
A simpler time:
A common beauty.
That is what you are
With your brown hair flowing.
How many boys have chased after
You in your life time?
Plenty, I think- and you are too modest,
Save when you've been toking,
And can laugh at your own beauty
And then demand sex-
I am surprised you are not famous:
I imagine you in so many ways:
You eclipse the famous women
Who attract me:
Patsy Cline,
Loretta Lynn,
Liv Ullman-
I think of you and espousing,
You become my premeditated muse:
Look at this. Here you are.
Another page for you,
And another day without knowing
You- Are so many waves,
So many lines and hours....
I should be filled by now.
Can you love a common man,
A pilgrim searching for you?
Then here I am, and hurry up,
Because with another sip of this,
It is getting too cold to feel....
What folly, to consider you,
To believe you to be the reincarnation
Of my ancestors' romance....
What narcissism to believe as such,
Though the tomb is waiting,
To finish all that,
And soon there will only be

The stone mason's calligraphy,
Some words facing east,
And the horrible wind blowing:
A thought, a word and its memory....
My feeble attempt to reach out to you:
If you do not hurry,
Then you will not know me,
And there will only be this....
Graffiti on the high altitude cliffs
That no one reads....
And another glass:
I am waiting for you still,
And holding myself until
You come to take up that duty.

Robert Rorabeck

With Your Help

Joy to the ingénues- the bug bears,
The aces of the swags in the sky:
Joy to your lips that shall never die:
While I haven't been keeping count of the hours
On the swings:
Why, I swear I don't even know how much money we Have made,
While the paper still burns,
And the airplanes still sing, and the penumbras bring in the
The fieldtrips of feral but kind things:
Maybe they bring in the bodies of your offspring:
Things who aren't yet wearied and so sing:
They don't even remember what tomorrow is Monday:
They just sit and clap beside the fire
And they call down the angels who burn there,
And maybe they know the keystones of heaven or at least
Purgatory;
And all of this time I've just been singing or moaning while
My father and his brother had a miraculous bout,
And I don't even know what my dog is feeling now,
Alma:
But with your help I'll find out.

Robert Rorabeck

With Your Undying Forgetfulness

Temples burn from free liquor,
The mosquitoes say nothing while they drink
My legs,
While the cicadas say so much but do nothing,
And somewhere around here there is A snake as tiny and ringed as a ribbon in your Indecisive hair;
And it can do just as much to me,
And quite as easily as your insouciant decisions;
If I want to press it to my sweating hinges,
If I want to caress it to the nest of purple veins,
And offer up the delectable avenues and Choice thoroughfares to the star fruit tree tremulous
With the self-inflicting light of my soul:
This coral snake as tender as the most unnoticed wanderer
Through the weeds and wild crèches,
Like your sightless wanton kisses can do to me,
Lay me akimbo in the crime scene awaiting recognition,
The suicide of a unsparing cat
Who has no choice but to like the way the poison purrs
Like your hand upon its oily coat,
And thus lose all of its inauspicious lives to lie down and digest
Into unstoppable mounds of industrious stingers,
A cenotaph barbed so lucidly with your undying forgetfulness.

Robert Rorabeck

Within The Anonymity Of So Many Vanishing Years

Chinese people waking up around
Me and drying their eyes:
Walking upon tiptoes around me—It
Is as if this is the planet Mercury
And something even more beautiful:
The wait gets down
And they seem to be losing their places:
All accompanied by the weight of so many years—
And I love you's, and I love you's
While eating dumplings
Within the full penumbra of the shoplifting
District—Now
Doesn't it seem, or will it soon seem
That we have been doing something so beautiful
All up in her eyes and the cataracts district:
The streets get cloudy and then they bloom:
All of the virgins holding bouquets
As they head off to school.
And I was just waiting for you to read my poem—
As the horizons of denouements settled upon the cemeteries
Where both my aunt and grandmother are buried—
But we don't have to go so far from here:
Here is where we can end our story—
And I can touch you softy within the anonymity
Of so many vanishing years.

Robert Rorabeck

Within The Lactations Of A Suggestive Schoolyard

Within the lactations of a suggestive schoolyard—
Memories such as gravediggers and dwarves
Conjugated from the merriment of some alcohol
To diadem my make-believe loneliness.
After we have escaped the better situated elements of Society,
And crawled under the glowing blankets of inebriated
Grottos,
We can kiss the poisonous darkness here,
Finding the fork-tongued stamp they warned us about
Before we all rose and said the Pledge of Allegiance—
And we can do other things, skeletons vibrating
Towards the roar of airplanes,
Tuning forks conjoining until we glow together
In a rainy and pagan forest—
We can say our I-love-you's with our eyes closed
And no one anywhere around us can tell us anything better to say.

Robert Rorabeck

Without A Single Word

I want to believe that going to the movies
Is the only activity that I can take a stand in—
And I want to message your brother who is now your Sister in Dallas, Texas—that I still love you—
And maybe there are reindeer who are still mirages in
The dry desert climate,
While you've still been climbing out of the shark tank—
And maybe I still love you,
Or maybe now I am just an echo that you want
To forget about—
After the long day is gone and all of the horses
Are already praying to the stained glass of the mountain—
And I loved you—and I loved you a thousands times—
While all of the rest of it became echoes and echoes
I could not pronounce—
The joy in the bellies of the spacemen—and another day
Languishing to the tenements of the self-same free
Cadavers—
As all of the cars were parked near the sea
As all of the monuments were erected without a single Word for me.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Airplanes

They made room for us in
The beehive.
We're the busy French girls.
We're taking off our clothes
And spreading out
Arms like stewardesses
Who want to fly
Without airplanes.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Any Audience

Time for pigeons packed away in excelsior packed away
Beneath the skyscrapers of Shanghai—
Time for a honeymoon in the foothills of the Himalayans—
And half-blood children in
The oasis of a penny-arcade: there they will be, the fulfilled
Exegesis of my father's loins:
Lions and housewives done with their laundries and folklore—
And an arcade blaring away underneath the Sky—
Leading to the secret hollows of fairies no bigger than A venal midway's prizes—
They seem to be dancing and making love in a diorama
Within the windowsill across from the church—
And inside from where the dwarfs live in the palmettos anyways—
If this was a holiday, they would be out upon the bond of Any news—
But they seem to be keeping to themselves,
And whispering softly—
Like fireworks going off without any audience.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Any Sense Of Direction

For awhile now in a world of Fay gutters where I have to sport-
Even when I get up to mew, to drive
Seemingly for recreation,
To pick up fast food so swiftly that they Never see how I have become;
To drive around intoxicated, to fall in with Bums and alligators and all they have Masticated;
And the sea, she is over there:
She is just over there, reticulating in her
Creamy nest:
She goes on in every direction. She is a real
Resort;
But we don't go to her in prayer.
We don't bed with her, even though she is always
In our minds,
And she seems to be filling our body like a vase,
Softly trickling inside the mould that has the contours
Of a little boy who has grown old and Despondent from too many movies, from too many Misbeliefs in the tomorrows of his beauty;
We can climb up the orchard's perverted navel,
And try to get a sight of her and all her cerulean pinwheels,
Like gesticulations of wrong fire,
Or a colony of beautifully eyed windmills; but then it
Would be to see how truly far away she is:
How many children and husbands she has, and the jobs
They have created together,
And how they love each other; it would make us fall so Far as to fall down without a chance of resurrection;
For now let our lonely pieces come together and fit
The best they can,
And move around and shake hands, curling
Slightly in false sympathy at the obligatory dinner party
Without any sense of direction.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Any Thoughts

On Sunday there are wildflowers,
And I make love to Alma high up in church on those Mountains,
Because, mother, don't you see me now,
And all of the beautiful joy that out of your heart I've Stolen;
And now it might as well be time for the fair to come
Around again,
Because I am laughing, and I am just a day laborer,
While a couple young boys fight out underneath
The yolks of sun of another yard;
And all I have left to explain myself is this:
The aero buses having picnics through the cerulean
Blueness above the Indians,
And the parks becoming unwound, and the fireworks having
To say what they have to say for themselves,
While everything else in untrue, their monsters the killjoy of Merry go rounds, until finally the morning is picking up,
And the year is returning young; while your family still doesn't Know who I am,
Famishing and burning, but sparking such joy, whistling
Against the fresh haircuts who cloud their memory without Any thoughts of ever coming down.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Anything To Say

Beginning to stutter in a rain shower,
I take my face down from the portrait and Vacuum the house in despair:
Ink stains and semen helix the carpet like
Adjoining wounds, and when my mother calls
Me from another state, she addresses me, "Hey Guy. I think your dog is sick, " but her voice is Less real than the rain, and the nimble fumbblings
Of school yard boys and Mexicans at their games
Of marbles and yeguas:
Every time my father passes me in the yards of Azure flies and mounds of horse excrement, he Sighs busily outwards as if I give him a toothache:
Sometimes he burps, but I haven't been paid
Eight months wages, and I dream of the sea when Nobody trusts me and I'm not even good enough
To place in poetry competitions,
But I prefer to kick the can a little further down the Road, where the suburbia is cloistered with bright
Flowers and flowing cars,
And little families dance in amnesias and dreams of Circuses and rodeos all the way down past the swings,
Where the alligators live on like immortal spectators
Without anything to say.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Asking

Days of zoetrope addiction,
Little red riding hoods with their virgin apples,
So sweet and deceptive underneath
The banners of heaven,
The leggy bouquets for the reintroduced wolves;
And it rained all day long, but we still sold the most of
It,
And I sang about how I was wrong,
And still I got the most of it: Two muses mouth-F$cking
In the dark on the swings in the park,
The moon on a rise through the pinnacles of the skies:
Two moons, one white and one blue,
Semiprecious but as patriotic as the stars:
Swans before the moons,
Swans who could steal your homes, who mouthed off
As teenagers in the lunch room,
Who couldn't care less for Shakespeare:
Swans named Sharon, there they are: Two girls named Sharon,
Leaping,
Drinking the red belches of fairytales:
Their eyes the pomegranates and geodes of the places
Where I've sold fireworks:
How many times have I come across the homes of the Names of these girls,
Going scarred to my sister's wedding and graduation,
Waking up again and hiking toward a funeral
Where the greatest of beliefs can only be found atop the arisen
Cleavage of mountains:
Sharon, I saw your angels there while the girl I was with had Parked her car and started making love,
Never caring for the rain, the kittens all strung out through the Wet, tremulous hibiscus:
Sharon, you are sweet on the brain, and you lamp the arcades
Of your quiet streets, as the snow ploughs through the Amber globes of the first scientific feats,
You are like the thing I was looking for above the misfits
Of tenebrous concrete;
And it is because of you I lost who I was all those years ago,
And it is for that very reason that tonight I am beautiful,

And you are like the honey-water spilled from the Gut of the average god,
I put my mouth too like a vampiric-mutt tonight,
Sharon,
And try and suckle upon your infinity of wounds,
Without asking or even hesitating.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Darkness

I jogged twice today and I ate so much;
And, hey honey:
It costs too much to see the lions, to go as the invisible
Man into the cages where they are eating
Fiery meat torn from the instruments you don't know
How to play;
And now how do your eyes turn like pages fanning your Children,
The little squirts with rubber bands and toy guns:
I love every one of them, as I love letters I never write or Send to you,
Because this is the graveyard where I sit alone and choke on Peanut butter and jelly; and my eyes water
Because I have lost my diplomas and I don't talk enough to Perk your fancy anyways:
And the deciduous lights of the city enter you; and they enter
You anyways:
And there are two boys walking toward you in the darkness.
I didn't see them but it seems like they want to hold hands,
While the rattlesnakes coil and masturbate until the Day is with warmth and without darkness.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Even Knowing Why

The ships of dead kings sleep underneath the Mabinogean orchards- and you have stepped across
The cinderblocks and rebar;
And the cars on blocks seem to know your name;
And all the pigeon wire making love in strange
Suppositions up into the unearthly sky,
Maybe they know who you are even if I can't;
And this is why I sit out with myself
And try to change colors, wishing I was more of a cowboy
For you;
But that is all there is too it; and your day is your own day:
It is just one single candle, and yet the jellyfish still seem
To be dying any way they can upon the shore
Next to the luxurious grottos; and I still have both my ears,
And my nostrils like comely biceps that pick up
And weight lift your smell like unbridled bouquets:
Kelly, Kelly; today is your day; and everyday is your day
In the valleys that wake up and coil like rattlesnakes
All the way down the switchbacks of tourists with eyes too bright
To every find your gold,
While the rivers go roaring diving your folds, and your children
Sit out on the bleachers and wait to be picked up Swinging their eyes into the batting cages of the very dreams which Divided them into the real live earth underneath this burning sky;
And like them, Kelly, I love you without even knowing why.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Even Smiling

I want to walk to your house
Again, Alma, and sleep in the roofs and look down the blouses
Of the red throated mailboxes,
Because I have hit the conclusions again, Alma: but I don't have Any movies in my house,
And I am a citizen of the united states of America, but this is not Your country,
And I wonder where I look at when I look at your eyes,
But I cannot possibly see those places and I suppose that is why
I am no poet laureate:
I just croon my feast, while Romero heads west with my father to slay
The infinite beast,
And then he will go south past Chihuahua and catch up with Tanya,
Who is Mierna's Sancha:
But Mierna is my beautiful aunt, Alma: and I hate to think of who You will be sleeping with underneath the wash basins of those Milky eyed stars,
While I invite the coral snakes up to my wrists like bumble bees to Drink my blood like pollen,
And to lay me low in those soft grottos where your mother cleans
Without batting an eye: without even smiling.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Even Trying

Open up sparrow- can-open your voice
To the leather tramping sun,
You haven't a choice:
Your canaries are all wrecked in their minds,
Slumbering poetesses for men
With burning-coal eyes;
Your voice recedes- your voice comes again,
Like so many things that haven't a mind,
Like traffic, like swings,
And waves.
The tiniest of the littlest girls on their knees
For trinkets-
The trucks honking. The airplanes are speaking too,
And writing your name in the sky.
They are really trying, even though they can't Spell.
They haven't passed kindergarten, but it is just As well,
Because if they were more gallant you would love
Them without even trying.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Having To Say One Thing

One highly functional genius
May loiter
At the truck stop for hrs-
And get nary a play;

While the leggy mongoloid
Will be engaged
For many an hr-,
Her lips will without question
Be useful—

They buy enough gas to make it
To the next carnival,
Even while the blue morning,
Like a hair lip curls
Indigo under the trees

Without having to say one thing.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Ourselves

Cloudbanks of cold and hot innuendos
While you are waiting for the forever lonesome stewardess
To take of—
You can go anywhere
Across the earth,
While she is shaking her evergreen shoulders
In a forever golden filigree—
Pigeons that at first
Prance and then make love over
The mastiffs of their bedrooms—
Cooling,
Dandelions—of anywhere that was just because—
Words that started out as lions,
Peeling their wares for the shoulder blades of Rusting airplanes—
And we made love—and we made love,
Or at least I thought we did—
Words struggling- -
Tugging for breath in and amongst the Amphitheatres—
Words that are lying to themselves and waiting
At least for a while to just try to take off—
Pigeons in the practice of dance—
Of ballet—
Of other words trying to reform themselves—
To strike out again,
Northwards in the better weathers—
And feathers flying by themselves—
Or falling down—
Floating without dreams—
Wondering if they could ever discover
The murders of whoever they are with our
Without ourselves.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Prestige

I am through performing Grotesquely muted
Against this voyeuristic
Wall
As clear as a shallow sea
Prostrate before a
Warlord star.

A gift
For your casual soul
Window-shopping.
My heart is hung around my Neck with your name.

Your pet,
My only trick is to Disappear as you
Walk away
Holding whoever's hand.

Without prestige,
I prefer to be discovered
Only by fanatical misfits
And deep sea divers
In the obscurity
Like a good gentleman.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Rainbows

Dancing man with married fingers,
You still wait for the girls
To get off the bus
Sweaty and discombobulated as
The airplanes fly:
They crease their brows once or twice,
And then try to swing their Hips over the side-
Pretty, but without rainbows,
And the numbers
Somehow manage to win- and in the night,
Through his married windows,
He thinks he's going to Get you again-
As the night sky is blue and creaseless,
And all of the stewardesses and all of the Waves have gone somewhere
Else, and it is just like an empty injustice
Spread over an empty wedding table
Another bachelor is weeping over
In the deep, deep south.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Sunset And No End To Cross

I don't have anything left,
Riding on the coattails of grandpa's pantheism,
I plagiarize the sea,
But I still can't stare at pretty girls;
Their eyes get in the way of their souls,
They hang out in front of vanities and sneeze:
They have so many children-
Attending to all the homesick passengers,
Giving the free milk and liquors; oh how their legs
Sway, playground of the sky, Happenstance of my eager truanities. I nudge my Buddies; say, lets make movies out of their expenditures,
Get them while we can, before they go home nuzzling
Husbands in sweetly cleaned beds, honeybears-
Ornithologists sick off of categorizing saccharine feeders;
And then, until I have to go back to school,
Give them my little things, this way and that, a little-pitter
Pat, as they slap their dough and twirl them over head,
Their infants lunching on their sweet bread;
And I would lay her still across the sky, like a highway
Without sunset and no end to cross.

Robert Rorabeck

Without The Ice-Cream's Romance

In days of artificial lights the girls play
In- I was always afraid of interrupting;
And today I felt an electric charge start up
From the ground,
And I bolted and hid in the truck and didn't
Die;
But tried to think that there was something
Mystical in the trees we're cutting down-
So the earth is redder, going around,
The truer epicenter of the old neighborhood,
Centaur's migrating around us, leaping
From their ice beds; and this evening they were Beautiful falling tannebaums reminding me
Of girls I'll never see again,
Making me get out my mind and float with
The eerie mysticisms around some half-sunken
Lunchroom where the alligators are always Grinning; and my father is laughing at me,
Because I've forgotten the passage and I'm out
Of time; Exhausted, succulent darkness around
The university's eyes,
I stumble into the beer hall dying of thirst,
And from her lacquers burst all the meaningful things
Of a young and self conscious religion;
And I go to her, and I tip her well; and I propose to Her, but she will not think to even kiss a man
So short as I; leaving me in rouge orbit tattoos of Anchors and sighing breath, I return wounded to
The barren mountains, the coyotes and crosses, wooden Askance; I float like root beer without the ice cream's Romance.

Robert Rorabeck

Without Waking Up

Glade of spirits- origin myth in the eyes of
My classroom,
And there are eyes, dark brown and dark blue
And all over my classroom,
Trying to discover things, skateboarding,
And trying to make sure everything turns out
Alright-
And I am not trying to control this menagerie:
I am just trying to make sure that it
Is beautiful,
While the children of your father skip down
The path underneath of which the
Airplanes fly,
And beside of which the cypress trees grow,
And the ocean's waves leap and frolic;
This is for them,
And for your children that will disappear into
School tomorrow,
As I try to impress you anonymously,
As I just try to survive down the river that is
Too wide to dream across
Without waking up and realizing the mistakes
That happen altogether through its wide
And beatific course.

Robert Rorabeck

Wolves!

Wolves!

Come on, Wolves!

I am not afraid-

I will kill you in your element:

When I step outside to relieve myself:

I know who you really are,

And I do not care:

Today,

I saw three revolvers beneath my father's bed:

Even in the night,

When you are howling between

Your gnawing on the horse's hoof:

Even when you are sniffing Death's crotch:

I know that you are

Hybrid with the local dogs:

You are illegal:

You are a major political party,

And I will skin you alive

For you maudlin hypocrisy:

Oh, Muse!

Sing my song,

And obey my yellow avenues:

Hold my hand, and we will defeat

The feral child together:

It does not matter who is elected,

As long as I have you

We will live together amidst the slash pine,

And our children will skip on outwards

From our groins' rhyme:

See me now, wolves!

Howling better than you:

Baring my teeth for the muse,

I will reclaim her from your night,

And banish you again

Into your rightful extinction:

Armless, I will search you out;

As your brother, I will howl,

And extinguish you into the feral children's tale,

From which little girls hide

Their collections inside trees:
And swaying in the wind
I will reclaim my muse,
Oh, wolves!
I know you,
And I am no longer afraid....

Robert Rorabeck

Woman At My Door

I need a woman at my door to drive home to some long honey momma who will love me simply and cook frijoles for me a woman I can lie down on the couch with and just love appreciate her silhouette a red earth woman who always wants to sleep all night long careless in my arms a woman who miraculously will not look at other men to judge them sexually or not sexually worthy a woman who likes my face and the lines and briars it takes and doesn't mind that the paint flecks from my truck when it gets up past fifty-five and doesn't care how long my hair gets a woman who can show me new ways to religion and introduce me to this world
again the right way this time and might not care or be concerned that I write poetry good or bad about her or question my questioning of capitalism's excess waste and this fucked up interpretation of Judeo-Christian religion that supports it a woman who will work beside me breathe and live on my ribs

kiss me deeply with her pretty
lips
show off her self only to me in new lingerie look good forgives my atheisms shows me how to light candles for Catholicism reminds me of those old great saints who saw god in everything wet comes at me like bright news like bathing my eyes with light and doesn't come until I come lets me use my tongue longs
all day for our bed gives me head rides horses with me in those green sea washed valleys that split the land like a woman when she takes me back to the classic forest to let me swim in the pool the moon
birthed her in and then to sleep all night inside her flesh when she sleeps with me entwined in a tree.

Robert Rorabeck

Womb Of A Coiling Succubus

Coiling at the corners,
Womb of a coiling succubus,
And drinking tequila—
Now I have to pee,
While the remote control boats
Look so beautiful,
Floating on their own regards,
Left outside after midnight
With no adolescent fingers to Attend to them,
And new bonfires echoing
Like the unsubtle teasings of Amusement parks,
And now she is left to fend for herself,
And now she gives all of her unorganized
Complexes of espionage the cold shoulder—
Once dreaming of making something
Absolutely beautiful,
Even after the weebegone child wrecks
All of his trains around the Christmas tree
This holiday season—
Spoiling the reasons
Why I fell in love with him in the First place
And for the very same reason wrote
Many things down with ever hoping for An audience.

Robert Rorabeck

Women Out In The Routes And Bays Of Old 66

I'll watch sitcoms with Charlie Sheen,
Or I'll make love with my dogs- anything to Pass the time
Until we are set up and ready to sell everything,
And I'll be out under the white tent like a
Giant, dumbo lung,
Like a circus tent beside the desert stream
Without any midgets or pacaderms;
Not saving anything, but not meaning any harm;
And beautiful women will come in and decide
Upon the show,
Like girls I used to imagine that I knew,
And I'll breath the clays with them, and the skies
Will bleed from the commercial airplanes and their Sharp straight wings;
And I should say now that I've only been keeping this
Up to pass the time,
And from the bay in Catalonia a block south of where Dali was born,
You can see a woman standing out in the rocks waiting
For her man's return,
And you can drink sangria while watching her,
And even trick yourself into thinking she'll notice you-
But that's not how it is-
She's graduated from a fine college,
And is smoking her brand of cigarettes- Picking at Her crotch of rose thorns, she has a curve on her lips of Stone, a great philosopher because great philosophers
Said so, she has a many disciplined degree,
And she could help you out if she'd only condescend
A word,
But her merry-go-round is done hunting;
And though she is beautiful and heartbroken,
She knows so many words she belongs in a museum;
You can get your pants wet over her,
And swim out into the frame, but she will still be made of Stone:
She knows so many words,
But not any of their meaning.

Robert Rorabeck

Women Who Begin With Letter S

Never published majorly,
But far beneath the sea, while I
Wake up on Tuesday after a holiday,
Holding my breath as a school of Fish waits at the bus-: stop underfoot from
The lion,
I am surprised that I have arms and Hands extended,
And a history brief and not well planned,
But sure,
And there are women who oppose my sex,
Who I am supposed to fit into,
Marry, love, support and reproduce into,
To eventually drift away every night
Our togetherness of the coital bed only
Highlighting how different planets we are,
But now I should move my fingers
And swim upward,
For there are bills and car insurance,
And naked speckled swimming in the shadows,
Their legs good enough to compete in The Olympics,
For, you see, I created them. One of them
I named Lynn, all the others start with the Letter S, and one day they might see the light
Of day,
So when the general populace wakes up
Sporadically, swimming into mass produced
Consciousness, they might see my women too,
And swim up into the belt of sun where Green things grow, and notice how the sorority
Of freckled navels indent like flirting come-ons,
Like the bosom of fruit still clinging to its tree.

Robert Rorabeck

Wonderful Story

Now the night moons itself while I have been Counting perfect:
Maybe I am the perfect director for your divorce of Numbers and coelacanth,
Because otherwise f%ck these birthday wishes that You were supposed to mean to me,
While even my brother in law was taking it easy
Before his wedding to my sister above my head:
And oh my god, he is so perfectly more beautiful man me,
But he will never be the conductor of these things,
And you have four children, and I am so done:
I am laid out immaculate and awaiting the virgin Mary
To sing her most usual of usual songs to me:
Now you suck your sugar cane and sing your semi Religious hymns to the religious that has seemed to have So easily floated towards me:
And now I remember your bed or anything that has so
Unsteadily arranged itself towards me: You have lived
Such an exciting live, but now I am just the bright eyed
Ingénue in a bright eyed story and the theatre
Has gone but hello, Sharon, you are still the clear eyed Mused clearing the acres necessary for my another
Wonderful story.

Robert Rorabeck

Wonderfully Awful, Emperical, And Real

I drink tequila and kill the worm
By coming up unsuspected from the fjord
Where they're
Growing purple tulips:
And dying, he has so many things he says
To me:
In fact he has a list of all the men you've been
With,
Or dreamed of conquering;
And you park your car underneath the palm
Tree and go to class,
And you never think to look up into the eyes of
The man standing on the Borderline
Who kills such wonderful monsters for you;
And now you are a mother,
And still a beautiful swimmer-
In fact they have named some many aqueducts
And dams and power plants after you,
But you just keep holding back your lips,
So that the cactuses bud fatly,
And the hummingbirds suckle and the great giant
Beasts dry up like science fiction,
So there is no use for my sharp innuendos anymore,
And you are just like a sister to me now
Who threw herself down deep into the Cataracts
When she found out we were related,
And became a mermaid
Who sat up on the thorny rock and farmed spikenard
Alone;
So that I came to the faraway shore and imagined your Silhouette out in the glittering spume,
And played a harp for you that I had stolen
And was not very good at,
So that I could hear your laughter all day long after Your lunch break,
And the squeaking breaks of sudden cars;
And it was all so wonderfully awful,

Empirical,
And real.

Robert Rorabeck

Wondering Where All Of Her Boys Have Gone

There are cowbells in the high basins,
In the guts of grizzly bears, in the wombs of Sometimes stormy and sometimes yellow
Mountains;
And you can't hear them, as they go through
The neck high weeds
And raspberry thickets- going to hibernate
In their caves as the rivers
Freeze,
And the tourists go away- yes, they go down
To her- and she serves them all winter
Even though there are no more wildflowers
Or ways up to heaven:
She serves them even though they find it Difficult to carry on:
And on her way home, walking purposefully,
She looks up to those frozen basins wondering,
Wondering where all of her boys have gone.

Robert Rorabeck

Wondering Who You Are

Strange goddesses walk
Floridian parks at midnight.
They talk to themselves
In the voice of songbirds.
They don't know how many Young men love them,
But they figure it's a lot....
They glide through the mossy
Grove upon the princely backs
Of quiet alligators who enjoy
The feel of their marble legs
Surrounding them....
They are a sorority in the mists
Of your thoughts
Who stare out from the lichen
And cypress boughs
As the world turns ever slower
Wondering who you are.

Robert Rorabeck

Wondering Why I Must Die Alone

Alligators in the canals like long lines of Quarterbacks,
Nights and nights of feverish unrelieved contagions,
Somehow smoldering in the gurgling
Brush;
And I have your phone number and your home town,
But the days go so far back into the nights,
So humid and so scarred:
So long since I've been beautiful,
And craven to your body's rush; and watched you sit
In art class your what I supposed to be Yet virgin thighs superimposed around the potter's
Wheel,
In a creche of red clay you called up the meaning of
The afternoon;
And even as the buses churned and churned
Soft-serving us back into our all too many white,
White homes,
I thought of you: blue-eyed beauty,
Buzzard of great tits and little, fluted wrists- I went along
My way and got confronted by even worse bullies
With plywood and 2 by 4s underneath the Florida
Holly and flatulent jet planes;
And I took my punches, and I rolled with the licks:
I rolled snake eyes and read Baudelaire,
And the trains cut over the flooded anime all the way to Japan,
Where I couldn't stop to quit remembering you: S-,
And there you are still Fooling your quarterbacks, making love in a splendidly
Unkempt rush;
And I guess I am really no more uglier than I was when You thought about me
Like a red ant bight along your wrist;
While now I can hardly stand to feel what is ring must Feel like faithfully banded around your humming bird
Of a finger,
As if a homeopathic soul,
Giving you just a hint of a farmer's tan while I stand out in

The un resurrected row
Wondering why I must die alone.

Robert Rorabeck

Woo

I am quited by the bottle, but when I look into Alma's
Eyes I sing
Of their dark brown rivers: Of how they have seemed to fit
Into a state of America that has no record of her existence;
And yet she goes on and on,
Surprisingly beautiful, and a better light for the cops:
Alma, I am so happy for you, and your body is a weathervane of Brown fireworks:
I want to pick it up and smell its wooden battlements,
The hinges that play across it and are good for your metamorphosis;
And I am sorry if I have done you wrong,
That I am not completely beautiful for you, Alma:
I got inside your car today and it was so clean: I must have left you
Three dozen tulips that I wouldn't allow you to give back to me;
And when I am in my graveyards, Alma,
When the bottle is empty and my lips are like over-drunken caterpillars,
I warm up to you on the grasses of your unkind yards
And make believe that I know you, and that I can sing to you in the Ways that would make you sure of the poisonous wisdoms
I have called up for you from the small pits of the classrooms
That I came to learn in so many years ago
That my eyes became brown as well- and I road my bicycle until there
Was a storm,
And in the storm I cried your name; for it is you who I believe has taken
My missing rib:
I do not want it back, but I would like to lay beside it every night on The springs of an old teachers bed in the house I have bought just To woo.

Robert Rorabeck

Woods Of A Wino's Mind

I drink to monuments of wine-
I tilt my head back, jolted, to look away from
The mirrors of a sad Disney World:
I do this every time, and there is no one to Hold me or feed me from her fleshy vines:
Boys in coitus and Toyotas, making magical peach-
Smooth prominence,
And I'm just going, going, ever fearful of her
Unbanished skies:
And the billboards talk unreasonably-
The alligators are wearing the suits of their less fortunate
Cousins,
And soon again it will be feeding time,
So I stand and wait out amidst the cinder blocks
And cut palms,
Unreasonably hoping she will pass this time
And devour all that is mine:
At least that's what I having going on in the smoldering
Woods of a wino's mind.

Robert Rorabeck

Wordplay

I like to play tricks with words,
Because they feel so much better than

The tricks I played with you.

Robert Rorabeck

Words & Phrases

Here these simple strings of words,
Come out for her again,
Like honest men telling lies &....
.....& from the porch light shed the tears,
They are working men
Troughing deeply the sea level flesh,
For motes to gather the crocodile's
Sorrow, the micras of glistening distance,
In spears of light taillights send receding....
The way the dogs angle their snouts
And howl in the innocence of pure pain,
When the hand that feeds
Steps outside &....
.....& and is gone for even so little time.
They would steal any greater man's
Words,
The divine longings of the masters,
The humid entanglements of ink and page,
A few bread crumbs tossed to doves,
Just to get her to step near them,
To stand awhile breathing the proximity &....
.....& the scents she gives off,
To nuzzle her palm and feel the lines,
And to know where friendship is,
The gratitude of strangers' perplexing embraces,
Why they stop to kiss in the gardens
Walking home by themselves.

Robert Rorabeck

Words I Have Already Written

They are down again-
Underneath the stones underneath where the Fish are leaping:
Strange girls with gills- maybe they hope to Understand the sunlight of our Neighborhood,
But we feed them anyways as pets, as the pilots
Perambulate again,
Touching all the breasts that they can
While the lions yawn,
Like the very tulips of pornography- as nothing Else that I've said ever was:
But the busses pirouette- preternatural,
And surreal,
Just as I suppose they always will- just as the fires
Will pretend to burn,
And we will continue, forever,
In the memories of our bouquets, like two Flowers sharing
Their suffocation- in a world of make-believe:
Even after your children grow up,
I will know you- even though I do not wish
To proofread the words I have already written.

Robert Rorabeck

Words In A Classroom

Eccentricity of words in a classroom:

Where there would be blue bells and meadows

And little fish spilling from over turned

Mason jars like soft boys drooling on soft pillows—

If there were any windows, or ways out of

Here—

But the door has swung, and the bell has rung—

And it will be another day's graveyard before we have

Any hopes of getting out of here—

So I will look into your uncanny eyes, which

Mouthlessly tell you best to me—

As the sun paints the sky so close above that

We cannot see.

Robert Rorabeck

Words None Of Us Can Remember

Banks of sad monuments have their Thrill:
I am your secret admirer.
I am Daniel Boone, even if its been so long Since I've gone to Spain,
Or risen up and
Masturbated in the fair rains over your house:
You did not complain to me,
Or when I pretended to die for my grandmother;
And now that she is dead,
And sometimes my dogs weep:
The drillmaster puts me through all of his unkind
Drills.
Though I have a knife, I don't know if I will ever
Use it;
But the lake is nearby where all the bicycles and
Their ladies go.
The bell tower's shadow slips right into it,
And the grass is high.
I want to steal you away from your husband.
He won't mind if I run my fingers down your thigh
Into the shadows
Even your children cannot remember;
Into the shallows when weren't they just minnows before
The metamorphosis of our first words
None of us can remember.

Robert Rorabeck

Words That Bloom In Wishful Fountains

Words are foam-

Words can be inebriation, when they help:

They can be guardian angels,

They can be transportation; If you went Ivy League,

Then likely your words are very,

Very terse and good:

But if you are like me, your words are made of wood,

Like marionettes of boys jerked straight up,

Strange wood-buttoned and lips hungry for cheetah paps;

Words that lay down on long green ejaculated

Carpets,

Wanting naps:

Words of cowboys and words of Indians, words of reindeer

And spikenard and teak bat winged cabinets out in

The spring nearby the fauna of Jordan's slightly

Older sister, raven black hair, jet black hair- I don't care:

Hair- Lovely long Indian hair, black-luck,

And hair down there, bee-stung clichéd nipples out for the Week getting sunny, sunny cheeked-

And I spy with my little word eyes apple pies spitting smoke

From the kitchen,

And I grab one swiftly with my malediction and go down to

The green Astroturf easement under eyes and pierce my

Warm fingers through the warm crust,

And take out a piece of the sinfully cinnamon bust,

And engorged and confectioned stuff of lies and falsifying liquor

Pies,

And wait for the better stuff of creamier words to go floating

Through the ever worshipful sky convinced by the currents

Of other words floating just above my head,

Words I guess I never thought nor said.

Robert Rorabeck

Working Girl Of Metamorphosis

Simple affection of a human palm upon the back of a feline.
The settling of a disjointed, oily body upon the cushions of an afternoon,
As airplanes leap like mechanical jacks over a candle's flame-

The boys are rounding third- and she is taking off her knickers-
In the cul-de-sacs bejeweled by the night-lit pools:

Oh see them there, strangely irritated dreams such as Semiprecious stones pressed into the secret pages of a privileged diary-

Caesuras over a birthday cake surrounded by the loam
Of a purple cathedral,

And irises of monsters looking down, straining their truncated necks
To get a peek into her cage: a working girl of metamorphosis:

She pricks her finger and falls asleep, but dreams as a bird
Through a city of fallen shadows:
Each car on the street a representation of a coffin in a graveyard.

Robert Rorabeck

World Parades

Chandelier boats of words that don't belong,
Like a drenched dinner guest under the kiva of her
Jewish wedding,
And helicopters trail blaze underneath the Cornish
Sun-
As all day long feathers start their new paths plucked
By whirling dervishes with great cerulean bosoms:
The feathers fall waywardly like homeopathic spells,
Like Hallmark movies,
And they cut across your eyes and make them softly
Wounded,
And they take you to unearthed graveyards where the dead
Are arriving like an Easter amusement park:
And see them come up holding plastic bouquets like Love struck boys in the check out line;
And all the parking lots are slicked and postcard worthy
And all the girls are stricken by the beating of Baboon hearts,
Or they've taken nips of liquor from blue bells and Honey suckle, and the gunman is tucked away snugly in His clock tower,
And he's missed the motorcade and all the dreams are filled
With students, and the graves are green- They resurrect the Entire state and all of its islands, and the conquistadors are Like green copper cannons,
And their cross is like an arcade causing epileptic seizures,
And they go across the moats of waves,
And nothing dies- not day, not night, not earth or sky,
And your love you never had for me before is resurrected
And plucked from you as if from an orchard of shoulder blades
And spine,
And it is a splendiferous chore, and such a treat-
And I suckle upon it all day, and twirl it between my gapped teeth;
It making me a boy of only five years old,
And you are like a substitute teacher I wet my pants for,
And stuttering watch you pointing out the alphabet while the World parades in the three most playful Aristotelian spheres

Worshipping The Beauties From The Backside Of My Canoe

Looking at the dog-star adds planets to your Soul; but it does no good,
She's still selling her wines deep in the snow,
After the avalanche has fallen,
And school is over, and it is raining dampening
The bees onto the snouts of dyspeptic alligators,
When I used to sneak up on roofs
And look down the blouses of the sweet Administrators: Now, I don't believe in god
Anymore, and I'm even losing faith in beautiful
Actresses: They show us terrible car accidents
Between classes. I still drink and grease pigs
And light off quarter sticks of dynamite:
I masturbate underneath the splash of shade from Palms- I dream I have better friends. My shoes
Don't fit. The black kid laps me at tryouts.
I sleep in Dave's fan- No one cares,
And when I get days off, long uncaring days, I slip
Through the canals, floating on my back or in a canoe,
I search out the housewives and their sisters in law
Sunbathing topless in the sparse orchards, slipping
On the slick grasses of the easement, they pretend they Are going down, and I pretend too- to be an otter,
Lapping at their breasts with their eyes, the mammalian
Confections, or I pick up feral baseball games when it
Is almost midnight and all the tourists are home in their Hotel rooms sick- That is when she casts her industrious spells,
Sleeping under her ceiling fans like spiral galaxies,
And I lie back and dream how deeply she'll never know
Loosing the equilibriums to discover the beauties that don't Really care how you worship them,
As long as you worship, and I do.

Robert Rorabeck

Wounded Bird

Wounded bird: I hold you—
Now you sing, out of the window
Like a child of my kidnapped home:
As I remember the scars
Of my reflection,
To the soft lullaby of the waves called to
The bedside of a richer man:
That all of this is my plunder without
Sunshine,
In the night when the pools are blind:
And I lay beside you again in the darkness:
Muse of stolen opals
And birthday presents—The Christmas
Trees are in the trash and in the gutters:
The stolen bicycles have been abandoned to Jewel the necks of canals:
As very soon you will be waking up over
Then—brown eyed with Browned eyed children, kissing your man
Like glass blown in another world.

Robert Rorabeck

Wounded Haiku

I am wounded but your
Tits and your scars are all
I need to be saved.

Robert Rorabeck

Wounded In A Crooked Garden

Wounded in a crooked garden
While the ants make love
And sculptures of each of your breasts;
And I let the homeopathic conquistadors
Enter me,
If only to displease housewives and their Grotesque habits of Natural selection;
And I always knew that it wouldn't be me
Who entered her demure;
Not me; and I don't have a house,
And I don't have a bicycle- and I tell myself
I am practicing delayed gratification,
But now there is so little time,
Even the furthest stars are turning away,
Having caught the perfumes off one of our
More adventurous satellites,
And all the girls from high school who were Any good are now entrained,
Higher up in heels and tall vehicles;
And none of this is good, I don't know:
They are all getting down on their knees to pleasure
New ovens,
And it is no wonder there are so many pies
Cooling on their windowsills,
Enjoying the steady traffic, the spikenard wheels
Of mackerels, but not a one for me,
Not even a flaxen haired older sister for me.

Robert Rorabeck

Wounded In A Pretty Forest

Wounded in a pretty forest,
The last of the bravest knights falls—
In a dry country without any lights—
The same place the last of The ferris wheels moved away from
So many years ago,
Forgetting her birthday,
And how their light used to dance in
Her hair—
While other minds got wound up,
The decapitated heads in the witch's tree—
The knight on his knees prayed most Jingoistically
For the mermaid to dissolve his problems
Right into the very sea—
And she came at midnight and Took his head,
And threw him there, as he flew through
The aloe's bled—he watched my mother
Washing clothes in the carport before
My second sister was born,
While the frogs were serenading her,
Never realizing they had not yet taken their Ultimate form—
And so he found himself swimming in
The banyans at night until his last girlfriend
Kissed him at took him a flight—
For it just so happened that she was a wayward
Kite—fashioned out of the geometries of Grief,
She led him to the fairy reef,
Where the cup he was looking for was glowing in A coral fjord guarded by a water snake as Big as a board—
Who consented to let him taste the salted beef,
Just so long as he promised him one look
At the thief who was willing to steal the promises of
The eyes from his lord.

Wounds Of Love

Because there is nothing under the sad moon,
I keep singing to you from the inconsiderable house atop the hill;
My tears are falling where there use to grow
A thicket of anemones,
And a contradictory sea, in love with the motionless shift;
The swathing ocean between our eyes, the striped lighthouses
Of the burning soul;

Now how the night is void, zeroed into extinction of lesser mammals:
The lions are loosed and eating the fish
Jerked onto the naked rocks- The boys with manes and footballs,
Who sink inebriated rhymes into your throat;
The way your cadaver swoons instructing the masculine Students of your newly surreptitious science;

So swiftly the un-cherished tide recedes,
Taking away her silken tresses, and her nubile offerings;
She looked away, scattered in a nebula attached like afterbirth
To the fiery meadows; You strolled away with the dawn,
The perfectly unrepentant haze,
The bell ringing class like the homicide of desperate regrets;

And the hung-over ghosts receded into the park,
Shelled inside the heart of spiked palms,
Fearing your unshared glow....

Robert Rorabeck

Wreaths Of Flames

Railroad tracks of bottle rockets
Running their rebel jackets, running their makebelieve
Flags:
And I have been down from the fences for a long time:
And I haven't been to the dog track;
But picking up the bottle again sure feels good,
But doesn't take the place of your brown skin:
Like Christmas at the movies
All alone- with the fanciful armies that they let in:
To display the knights in trees,
And the children running home through the twilight:
The surplices filled with
The connivances of bees- the queen of my eyes
Somehow returning home past the Mailboxes of Disney World- Alma
In the immense twilight: her birthday cake taken from her:
Her love on the mend, her lost children
Eclipsing beside
Her- just as Saturn has rings- and lions leap bloody Lipped through their wreaths of flames.

Robert Rorabeck

Writing On You With Nothing

If I have had undiminished thoughts of you,
It is because your body is yet old-
Taught and wired in its cages, I drive around like the Other men,
My fingers hungry to undress you in the voyeuristic
Boudoir of things that just happen to be real:
That is why I try to get the highest score in ancient Video games,
Why I color Mighty Mouse- and then when dreaming
With wine strummed lips, break into Empty affluent houses, and float in the pools like
Giant cut stones of butchered deity tears:
And I'll love you until you aren't beautiful,
And in your bedroom's success, an older sister,
I'll lift your shirt and run my fingers along those ventures,
The vermilion and crimson and chartreuse scars
You hoped that nobody would see,
But I'll run along them and put yard snails on them
And call out their depths,
And then your eyes will close like obnoxious children
Sleeping,
Because then you wouldn't have anymore use believing
All the falsehood they tried to show you,
That I can better show you- snuck into your house like
A wiry dragon,
Swinging there in your indigo moats of porcelain
Dolls and indigo headdresses,
Your divine inheritance as well as what I have added
By writing on you with nothing.

Robert Rorabeck

Writings To The Sea

Secretive act,
Sobering, a few words on a palette—
Lines of coke snorted before a wide-eyed
Tiger:
I took my last drink in Shanghai
And it tore away my smile.
My wife said I could not drink anymore.
Two months before our second
Child,
A girl—
And I am not allowed to drink to muses
Anymore,
To cultivate the wounds of a bachelor
Who lilted into other mens' bedrooms
Using the broken feet of
A mind quilled by passion—
Like a hart wounded in a forest
Beneath the cliffs of almost vanished ghosts—

As a result of this edict:
For the most part, happiness:
Family, and a drying up of the world—
The muses remain less poisonous,
Hanging out in the amusement parks that
Are forever too expensive for me:
But in the curling hours of the afternoons,
As I imagine twilight and thus Crepuscule beginning to fall upon all
Of the woebegone mailboxes of Suburbia,
I allow myself to wander there again—
Thirsty,
I look out into the grotto of shipwrecks
And imagine all of the mermaids
Shopping there,
Mythologies which once toasted my heart,
Impossible dreams that yet pang in
The shallows—

And I let the words fall in a few
Sauntering lines,
Like trying to sew a crop into
A parking lot—
And thus pleasure myself—
My family asleep in another room,
Safe
From the illusionary storms
Troughed from the lines I cast out
To a callously beautiful sea.

Robert Rorabeck

Yankee Boy

These valleys are all the same,
And the path through them linear,
But men still get lost even a mile from
The train-
When I have come down from the high
Basins, and the water is singing in the glowering cleft,
And I have summited two Siamese mountains,
Clutched between Silverton and Durango
And still have time to bight my lip:
What I have done is not the average tourism,
To scramble like a philosophical ram above tree line,
Following the cairns of leather tramps,
Over where the voices of the trees worry
Of the lightning,
Where even the air is minimal, and the people
Very rare, but haggard, crippled,
And mostly indomitable- my friends;
I have followed the rim from Windom to Sunshine,
Eating granola and smacking sweet farts that Tang bumblebees,
And around the glacial lakes of wet nurses,
Where there is neither echo nor ripple,
And the water is newly transformed and curious,
Where college students yet evolving make love,
And peel the gear off each other like cicadas molting;
And then roll like angels amidst the dirty white
Coats of the mountain goats and their harems;
When the time before I got lost on Jupiter,
Following the wrong lines,
And went down early though reaching her throat, because I feared
That serrated goddesses of many ridges and shortcomings,
The false ways she could take me after beckoning,
And I felt her watching me dissatisfied as I fled like
The runoff of melting snows
Down her bosom and into the great table of stunted juniper
And bear dung, and the nourishment of mud slicked down from her chin;
But on this trip I succeeded in her eyes inside me:
The whys of my gazelle-legs leaping the class three

Rocks, grinning up as if in ancient worship,
As the sun removes a mimic of my soul;
There at the top she is open bossomed and expansive,
Unmined and yet elusive franchise, the lazy politicians
Have yet though to elicit,
Where the sons who work long days for their fathers
Can open up new furtive lots with epiphany,
And her tricks are pure and tangled like a disarrayed festival
Of permanence and unbearable truths,
And I can almost see all the way to where she lives,
Neither aware or turned to me in unrecognizable appreciations;
But I have done it for her,
And the way down is beautiful even in the dark and the Herding weathers- I am the only one of my company
To see her face lucid and immortal in the falling light.
When I left her I did not go all the way,
For I keep her still though she doesn't know,
For she doesn't even suspect me
Where her dreamless head rises above the hardpan plateaus
And the nocturnal city's airy lamps. At the trailhead,
I gave the lost man water and showed him the way
Back to the train where my aunt was waiting
And impressed.

Robert Rorabeck

Yankee Doodle Dandy

I am holding my head against
A cathedral- or a marionette: it is as brilliant
As a Christmas tree
Come home to no particular holiday: then it
Has to think again about what was its Yesterday,
As the sisters underneath the house cloud through Their bedrooms
And there is light singing as they undress and make
A profound use of the shower's
Acoustics- and it feels alright to rain against Their freckles- tears spot them where They've not been crying,
And tears run down across where the flames
Are dying, as they forget the boys from their school:
As they surcease into their bedrooms and Take it easy underneath the ceiling
Fans which are the only way-
As I lift a bottle to their memory as suck the head
Of that genie just like escargot,
Or Yankee Doodle Dandy.

Robert Rorabeck

Yard $ales In The Mouthy Storm

A few men have the banner of songs,
And pin wheeled whistles on their lapels,
Something winning up their sleeves
When they walk into the restaurant of
Devourous dins,
The way polite and poker-nosed people
Eat the meat other people have prepared for them,
the way socialites concern
Over their marbled ham chased with wine,
and the veins which stick
Like petroglyphs between kerneled teeth,
Then the evening becomes their theatre,
And they open the sky up for them, and ask,
"Is this all right? "
And it is, they suppose, as they make their
Money in the fluid ways of ancient celebrations,
The charnel hums, the subtle electrocutions at
The dinner tables,

You can see their brains pulsing up their noses.

Out in her front yard, they keep their motors
Humming, so she knows that they are waiting,
And she must hurry,

For such sunny men are well known to be
Migratory,
For fine weather is known to pass
Like unlined leather across her ass,

Verily, she leaps from the window in her veil,
And he punches the gas,

And they will not wait for long,
Paper marriages in their springy arcs
Burn like yard sales in the mouthy storm.

Robert Rorabeck

Yard Sales In The Mouthy Storm

A few men have the banner of songs,
And pin wheeled whistles on their lapels,
Something winning up their sleeves
When they walk into the restaurant of
Devourous dins,
The way polite and poker-nosed people
Eat the meat other people have prepared for them,
the way socialites concern
Over their marbled ham chased with wine,
and the veins which stick
Like petroglyphs between kerneled teeth,
Then the evening becomes their theatre,
And they open the sky up for them, and ask,
"Is this all right? "
And it is, they suppose, as they make their
Money in the fluid ways of ancient celebrations,
The charnel hums, the subtle electrocutions at
The dinner tables,

You can see their brains pulsing up their noses.

Out in her front yard, they keep their motors
Humming, so she knows that they are waiting,
And she must hurry,

For such sunny men are well known to be
Migratory,
For fine weather is known to pass
Like unlined leather across her ass,

Verily, she leaps from the window in her veil,
And he punches the gas,

And they will not wait for long,
Paper marriages in their springy arcs
Burn like yard sales in the mouthy storm.

Robert Rorabeck

Yeah, Whatever

People forget themselves in the dark:
The stars are smoking,
They will soon be run-
People forget themselves,
And mountains are unforgiving but Beautiful-
I never made it to prom:
I ran out of time,
But here breasts are still magnanimous-
The angelic flesh of mermaids is paradoxically
Without legs-
I think I could make a living selling ice-cream
At the Castillo de San Marcos-
I haven't enough to buy the rest of the sentence,
My legs are cold,
They are out of rum,
But will soon lie down like lambs before the mouth
Of the video-game- I.e.
There is a pool where I'll dropp out in:
I'll spend my cash,
I'll smoke my last dime,
The sea is pitifully beautiful,
And my ex-lover wrote me to say that she is sorry
To see the face of my last story,
And this poem is drunken and without rhyme,
But I still love her,
And somewhere deep in the heart of suburbia the lights
Are still glowing over the names of places
Where faithful people still live,
Suckling, eating their corn-flakes,
Believing in celebrities,
At least until the world burns,
Her car leaves the cul-de-sac, and God returns,
Fists up, a pugilist whose heart palpitates
In the middle of Africa,
Trying to disbelieve what he's done, how he's Made us,
Until I knock him out, and collect,
My just reward.

Robert Rorabeck

Year After Year

Going back home to the sad Indian adventures:
The conquered continents are all right here
In the same way we've been ready at believing- in the same
Clouds around the unreachable summits:
Trying out again,
Setting out their limbs up into the avenues that cannot Be described,
Eventually to go back home again- to mothers in their beehives
Drinking steadily beside the strange ululations of their pools:
And it doesn't seem to belong anymore,
The aborigines in the dismissed conundrums, nor any of it:
Not even the tadpole in its mud bath: how will it
Proceed from here,
And yet the traffic keeps busily at its stations,
As the ghosts haunt their very own castles year after year
After year.

Robert Rorabeck

Yellow On The Honey

So they said in that park of yellow,
And so they set to away:
Knights and heroes themselves on a grand adventure
They couldn't spell;
As the day looked away from them, accounting to
The elements of its sunshine,
And hoping for new brides,
And time to travel the seas,
Even though it wasn't possible- the honey bees
Sleep each one of their two weeks,
And then they go their way- forever, impossibly:
They seem to be singing at their Work, even as they are dying, painting the mouth
Yellow on the honey- and agaping trees.

Robert Rorabeck

Yellow Soul

Watching children run away from her classrooms—
Minds of hummingbirds—
Souls of canaries—going to the markets—
Nursery rhymes like delicate
Snakes around fruit climbed down from The vines—
Foxes laying in Easter grasses
As we wore our Sunday's best—
My sisters holding golden rabbits
Sunlight's yolks running from their Shoulders to the grass
Where ants hurry to steal a yellow soul.

Robert Rorabeck

Yellow Words In The Scree

I went up her again today, the beautiful easy mountain-
Old gal; I suppose you'd say I was yelling, walking silently
Through the comely changing aspens: that was what they were Doing- drinking too much sun to sicken then to die:
That I was trying to show off with my dogs when there was No one else in the world around;
And that's why I write this poetry, you suppose:
Am I trying to give death a bad hand? Or, am I just trying to Send you flowers without having to pay?
- I climbed Mount Elbert and Mount Massive in one day,
And I professed to having seen god, slipping down the slopes
Like yellow liquor, like an unidentified serpent,
Some entity not a single religion could either identify or Dispel; and I wept- I wept and decided I loved my girl,
While she was making love to the anonymous Joe- I know:
And I went down with four grandmothers, and they were so proud
Of me, their little scarred Indian- but they didn't stop to help me Change a tire I had no spare for once they passed me coming into Some tourist infested Colorado town: And I am not beautiful,
And that is why I do it: To become beautiful, to become right for You, a suitor to your beauty; and you are being a vulgar paramour
To service any other gentleman than I- Because I have seen angels
Like baseball players- Even if it was only the minor leagues,
I beheld their sport like cryptic yellow roses, like hydras waving out
Of the crackling scree; and they whispered quite conspiratorially
That you should love me, love me, even you don't know who
You are- Even if you don't believe these words, and I am a lemon Suited monster- Just love me, because I have done enough for Your love.

Robert Rorabeck

Yellow Yes

A green skiff goes sailing in my head.
Everyone on it has long since died,
And there is no longer a cartographer for the sky,
But the sea keeps trying to carry it on
As if nothing has happened;
She is humming up a beautiful day for no
One to see in the heart of her, in my head;
In the long doldrums where she can barely move
And it just sits there like a coffin in a dull living room,
But she will not admit to what she has done,
The long absences in the careless wind-
The lips she tastes under the lampshades' dim;
The undo currencies she gave to my men,
The diseases which place the bones on the boards
And shifted them for rats:
The stowaways of death she complacently conscribed.
Now all there is the floating thing. Not a continent,
Not a wound to describe in detail how it happened:
The sun is a brandished yellow yes,
But that is not how it happened; She did it
Who is carrying us along slowly in a daze:
Up and down the road of someone who is guilty looking For the brambles in the clog, steady aquamarine rain,
The carnivores of the forest to flood us and sink
Us into her skirts, where she can look down at us
And dream of us unwholesomely deeper inside her shadowed innocence.

Robert Rorabeck

Yesterday's Rains

And you are wrong in all of your slumbers
Perpetually on some other day's Afternoon while I can hardly breathe at the pollinations
Of some dog track
And you are getting nailed against a beautiful wall
Until the sea wharfs in its grotto
And I drink all of the wine which calls the chickens home:
The children get up for kindergarten,
They steal things, they go home until tomorrow jumps
Up as yellow and unmolested as a feral child
And across the yellow playgrounds it runs wild
Still not thinking up all of its things;
Until tomorrow springs upon its playgrounds,
As the graveyards of her ancestors cry remembering yesterday's Rains.

Robert Rorabeck

Yet A Mirage I Knew To Be

I remember the wind tunnels of Spain on Christmas:
There were no gifts,
But a lost guitar, and I got drunk and the tattoo
Of a sword now faded on my thirty year old
Gut,
And the drunk boats are swimming too gray to Be Arthur Rimbaud,
But I am still dressing out for physical educations,
Running my laps I cannot possibly ever win,
Eating my crackerjacks And swinging my bats
Looking for better and better prizes
AS the more beautiful and younger girls come in sweltering,
Bosomy and without care
While the young white tent breaths,
And they've never read Shakespeare,
So they don't care how many words are missing or misspelled;
And I can feel myself in them.
But I can only love one of them at a time, Sharon
Like a single rose on your grave,
And a tender dog wining there. I would not feel comfortable taking
You out to dinner,
But the castillos are still beautiful, and I've stolen so many fireworks;
And I am no longer beautiful,
But this is how it works,
And I'll love you forever going through the turnstiles of
The other world,
Rejoining our common ancestors until we can't feel alone again;
And this is how it works,
So eventually the lions will surcease from yawning up to the Constellations and settling down continue with Their Christmas meals,
Of the long legged ibex slaughters out in the middle of The Kalahari,
A place I felt you in,
Yet a mirage I knew to be unreal.

Robert Rorabeck

Yet Another Simple Harmony

Sensory cocoons the miners going into Mines,
The moon rises up its lantern to see what she Can steal as she finds what she can find:
And the cars leave their mothers house,
The horses sleep in the valley
After the sun has left the world- but two Bodies coming together can still Make children,
Like hands clapping in applause appreciates
The attempts to bring
Yet another simple harmony into the world.

Robert Rorabeck

Yet So Far To Go

Airplanes like sugar cans with their
Leggy effervescence leaping over my head:
Going on sabbaticals of sunken mausoleums completely equipped
With mermaids:
And Alma, I didn't know you a month before hand,
But I know you now,
And I enjoy buying you lunch and watching you eat habaneras
Out beneath the fox tail palms,
The way you did for me today, and then we both watched the Imagine of the Virgin of Guadalupe appear in the lost window
Of my car,
Just as she appeared on that cape long ago in Mexico;
And you have come so far to get here,
Alma, but I pray you have yet so far to go.

Robert Rorabeck

Yet Sweet Harems

While all of the fruits of its body pours
We have been drinking the stock of our friends, while the rainbows Curse into the flight paths of mariposas the very bitterest of Ends;
And Sharon your grandfather clock is already becoming gentrified
And we can burn into your bark, and softly glowing become Realized with the other white-haired sparrows of your disease:
Sharon, I am a coffin and I am touching myself:
I used to think that I was marrying you, Sharon; but just look At these crocodiles and these amphibians- they go back; and don't They go back and what have they been doing, while the stars
Have been luscious and haven't they been picked and just bundled
Together for the architectures of your harems; and I don't really want
To start out anymore: I don't want to do this again- and where Was I running away to anyways, while the sky was all shut out
And the stage resuscitated into the brightness of the stars of your harem;
But shouldn't I just shut that out as well: Or, I can love you forever,
And invite you in into the venal plentitudes that are happy to please
The first greenness of clouds of my latest and yet always indulgent
Of homeless and yet sweet harems.

Robert Rorabeck

You Are So Beautiful That My Heart Doesn'T Care Where It Resides

Disillusioned by caracoles, this is not Christmas;
But then havent your toes been painted since then;
And I ride bicycles across the rows of Crocodiles or close cousins of whatever they are;
And we have fun until the nightgowns douse;
And we light off fireworks out front of your paper house;
And Zackery and Jessie have BB Guns;
And there are glowworms in the earth:
We get citrus in today, and the plains reciprocate through the Sky;
But, Kelly, what are you doing now; what are your very fine
Lips smoking, Kelly-
You are a beautiful woman, and you have already broken me in;
And I want nothing else than you,
For my fine saddle for my bride, if you can never mind my scars;
Then I want you inside to heirloom my house in The cherry orchard of rainstorms that destroy my chalk stories,
The other romances I've been denied;
But you are so beautiful that my heart doesn't even care where It resides- as long as I have you inside, inside.

Robert Rorabeck

You Are There

I have been to Spain, which is the best compliment
Of a drunken man:
I have been to Spain and the whole time I kept
My eyes closed,
While I got tattoos and ate oranges;
And the 2-cycle motorcycles purred, luxuriant and Bilious parade over the olive esplanade:
And I have been to Spain, or I have caught yourself
Looking in your eyes:
That thing that has eaten, eaten what has come up from
The red,
Red petticoats of ancestral highway men;
And you didn't care that I burned cypress with my Uninhibited gasolines;
Or that I caught the shadows of séance or of Light weight devils:
That I might careen down into you in a part that is just As good as the whole,
With my eyes clinched shut, like a yard sale overrun
By burning ants,
Having a debate about what is real and what can be Gotten away with:
I was in both Spain and France for Christmas- and I love you,
But haven't yet opened by eyes to see if, finally,
You are there.

Robert Rorabeck

You Beckoned?

If I am wounded attend to me with liquor,
D.H. Lawrence and snake bights:
Your eyes sumptuously vermilion across the Patio like hauntingly drunken street lights;
I am famished from these bullet wounds,
These hungry pen-knives: Poor it in each a thimble
Full, listen to each pullulate like tom cats
Down in the harshest grottoes after midnight-
Then attend to me no more, for the sea is crying from Its futility and yours; and yet you have so many hours
And so many worlds- So many children that tend
To occur as epiphanies of your higher altitude beauty;
But you have done enough for this dying soldier,
Your plastic paramour: He who will never be talented Enough to procure your lasting beauty; but transcend him
To the sea, his queuing mother and enter him into her
Foaming doors- become him awash in agony,
And step lightly where no one else should have to see
This sad sight getting carried away: Trace the steps you took to Find his stone-cursed morgue, and attend again to those Living men your voice yet implores; and beckon them
To do your bidding, to bring you children and whatever more;
For they are of the kind living, and they will love you
For ever more- So says the lost one vanished with the Waves cursing upon the shore- I am sure; I am sure.

Robert Rorabeck

You Like My Poems Because.... (Censored)

You like my poems
Because you know they're
All for you....

Even when you slip
Into the arms of other men,
Even when you die together
Into rapturous sin,

You know my every word is Yours,

And even after I follow my
Ex-lover's lead and stagger defeated
In the material realm to dig myself a Married grave,

You will remain there hovering,
Like a power-line,
The truest form of womanhood,
A creature birthed from Plato's lips....,
Immaculate and wielding everlasting beauty
Your body cast in the armor of Naked radiance, bejeweled in the Glorious reds of
Your parted places,
Those flowers that lay upon you,
The stimulated filigrees....,

Though I will fall into the disgraceful
Spoiled bowl of human commitment,
Of social shackles,
Where I may marry a politician's daughter,
A defeated nun, a p*rn star,
Or even the rare female ax-murderer,
Who will split my head in to two
Instead of stabbing me while I look away
Towards you....,

You will remain
Perfect in those imperfect lines
I have taken from your realm out into this Cold globe, to show all around what you really are-Blooming,
Perpetual spring
The ancients spoke of
When they invented knowledge.....,

This is why you like my poems,
Dearest soul,
Burn me up until I am almost gone
Knowing on and on
They are all for you....

Robert Rorabeck

You Lost Your Car

Your birthday again in a dozen days or two—
And it wouldn't have to be so bad—if you ever believed in
Me—
If I never believed in you—but for now, anyways—
I will give you this castle—
Isn't it so ever bright—it is made from the emerald of The blown glass of these bottles that I have spent for you—
Wonderfully delirious affection—
Another day in a house or in a ballroom—and you
Lost your car,
But it wasn't so bad—you kept both of your children—
And moved into a world that seemed to disappear above
The clouds.

Robert Rorabeck

You Really Couldn'T Care

And this ache is something wonderful,
And it helps me magnify the font, to make Something profound for infants;
And how many times to I have to retry penning
For you the bouquets of sick immigrants
I can't even spell; and, when exploring,
Would like to lay you down like bending supple
Foliage where, of course, your legs are like Either aloe fronds, or curtains shaved beneath the Windmill my lips to tickle and turn like giant-Hunky lips, and by my words do you without even Speaking to you,
While I pour the rum into my glass and dream,
And smile a little lopsided and bruised with caracoles,
And the shadows of speckled things in shallowness,
But you don't care:
You have begun to see phantoms, haven't you?
And I imagine those ghosts are well-suited in offices
Overlooking the city, and he may be married but you
Are still his surf, I imagine that you are; and that you
Have many friends, and not one of them will wake up Early and read by just awakening traffic lights my Mystified dreams of you; because they still come this Way, come when I call them, and with the liquor,
Come because I haven't yet moved to find another
Muse,
Subtle and falling like gossamer in my hand,
Dewed by moths and their midshipmen,
And by that newer flesh bare children and more publishable
Dreams, while all the time the seas are rising, quietly,
Horny and out to get you, and cover you up with effluvious
Satins I can see you through,
Naked and capitulating, because your are lackadaisical
In your games, petting terrapin,
Lunching with orchids in your hair,
Smiling halfway insouciant because
You don't care: you really couldn't care.

Young And Over Eager Skeletons

With jewelry bent in their hands,
They gave us such a blessing, while the circuses
Cursed,
And the pilots cursed- I wonder where it
Was that they were going,
While the bobcats sat on the blue cliffs
Above where the Indians were yet mowing:
Their forgotten arrowheads in the indentations
OF their necks- the forlorn architectures
That crippled the first blue cavalries-
They set out justly suited to their pommels,
But the rains killed the joys in their General directions:
It souped up the blue jays and gave trouble
To their complexions:
And now where they lay amidst the delaying
Pinions, scalped while out on holiday
Senseless- without direction-
And copper bugles pressed to the lips of Too young and over eager skeletons.

Robert Rorabeck

Your 10-4 Prerogative

So suitably you play
Down in your silly hilly city:
Watching as the nights sashay into days,
Driving in your cars beneath the stars
With your poky little puppies
In and out of lukewarm bars:
Swimming with the neat and yellow fishes,
In and out of the their mothers modern kitchens:
Keeping to your 10-4 prerogative
You eyes highlighted by their fascinations
With it all, as you tiptoe zigzagging
Down the cathedraled study hall:
On your slender silken wrist is a number,
A cheat sheet and a phone call,
But you really don't have time to remember,
Because you are desperately, desperately late
As you tiptoe in cursive
Down the vaulted study hall.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Absolutely Gorgeous Worth

Next time again I see you
Against the sun angel with bosom:
I want to fall on my knees for you and snack
Off your perfumes,
Even if the boats in the harbor don't know you
At all:
Even if this is the orchid I forgot to lay thirsty
Rooted
As sacrifice to your family's crypt:
I want to smell you like the branch of a great long tree
That never lets off its givings of fruit,
The selected offerings of the glade,
The nuptials where you are always leaking like a book
Of parables;
And it makes me wish to close my eyes and regress,
To fall like waves of sunlight over your unnoticed abyss:
This is where you live,
And this is this: while the students multiply in the university,
While the armies ant:
I see you out reconstructing the nature of being in the Freckled diadems of the arbor
Beside the carport, beside the church,
Not even thinking, like the words on the tip of a candle blessed
In a church:
You are going out tonight with your sister, while the earth turns,
Baring your shoulders, giving us a delicate peep show
Of your absolutely gorgeous worth.

Robert Rorabeck

Your All Too Happy Conquistador

If I want to slow and beautiful,
Wouldn't it be like combing your hair under
The trick lights of a carnival-
I don't know- I don't know,
But even the cars are weeping
While the airplanes leap like gentle gentlemen
Through the air,
And I know your name, and who you've
Been with in the smoking jackets of awful weather;
And that is why I've had to climb so many
Mountains,
And even tonight I say your name to put Pedro to sleep,
Because it is not beautiful where I live:
There are awful gang fights, and hungry mice
Who cannot speak,
But if I had you here then we could roller coaster
Across the crenulated space of chlorinated
Amusements:
That's what we're going to do, once you leave
Your life
Behind,
And let me become your all too happy conquistador.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Almost Beauty

I stand in you the shallowness of echoes
Waiting for the bus
As the lions yawn- and your children whose Pink ribs are as if candy
As if roses scattered across the shell rock:
I am sure they would rather me at home-
I am sure that they would rather be almost anywhere
Else, as the sun rises
And the earth in her neighborhoods effervesces,
As she has been at this a long time
While there has been so many restaurants and daycares
Planted about her,
And so many things she doesn't care about
But are lucrative, just as I saw you the other day,
Golden, hatching, but you went off following
Him- and my neighborhoods smelled of your perfume:
And my wrists smelled of the tears and carnivals
Of your body,
Even though it was not echoing- so it too became A franchise of saltwater and horseshoes-
And then like a lament over a battlefield decorated
By arrowheads, you gave yourself to another man-
And I left the asymmetrical fields of your almost Beauty, my defeated warriors never to be entertained by you
Again.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Amens

The neighborhood is becoming gentrified,
And this isn't the first rodeo she's been too, but you can still Step outside and see the motorcycles being ridden away
By graduating bicycle thieves;
And there is only a little bit of winter metering in the Unkempt eaves-
Here we will be upriver from my old girlfriend, and we can Send her things, marble packages of paper rings;
And I can send for my dogs, and they can come with their Swift lives burning,
The tails churning and flagging through the air, cutting
Like faithful tarps across the street,
Never minding the injustices of men; and we can sell grapefruit
And cantaloupe-
I could pollinate your stamen and turn our grandmothers' graves
Into apiaries of queens and their slaves;
And then we'd postulate every night and press our hands together
Like baking things,
And then I'd put my tongue to you and press and feel and say
And taste and smell your amen's.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Beautiful Insouciance

Oh, the pain of roller coasters that I have:
And I walk with you near the sea, and I remember you in 4th grade,
And I wish I was so beautiful as to catch you,
And line you out and slit you from gill to gill, cleaned;
But you have beautiful ears,
And your sons shall play baseball, and Gracie will prick her Finger on a loom and fall asleep for so many thousands Of years;
And this is the grayness of my scuppernongs in the deep norths
Of Michigan that howl for you now uncontained,
Like werewolves out jouncing on the untestified footpaths of Tourists
While the fireflies are dying;
And then today, amidst the traffics and hullabalooos,
Didn't we press like powder kegs, like mammals in the chimpanzoo:
Didn't we press our juxtapositions,
And then we kissed like little golden books;
And I was so afraid of all my scars next to your perfect perfections;
And we kissed, and your lips were the afterlife of Nocturnal gardens taking their time with me under the overpasses
Of this life;
And so I swear by you and bury my head like a terrapin in the wet
Cement of another dream,
The emotions of censers reciprocating on the swings;
And I dream like a windmill of a dream drinking from a the water fountain
Of your soul;
As you turn and spin, effortlessly- and your beautiful insouciance
Makes me whole.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Beauty

Your beauty has no identity:
Your beauty is who you are,
And it is just why I love you,
But it doesn't get me very far.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Beauty's Spirit Haiku

I just want to be Homeless with my dogs in Your beauty's spirit.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Because

The nights I have loved in high school when I was A wolverine, I am still resonating out from:
I am a still born in a glass masons shop, being reintroduced
To the forge as punishment for my plagiarism and pornographies;
And the only conquistadors I have ever known where Ants stinging my palm like toy soldiers,
The only combatants I have ever loved; and what about your Love, Sharon:
Sharon, all washed up like torn and pleading paper dolls on the Beaches of Normandy: Defeated, this is the new world,
With the sky coming up like the make believe filigree above your Dollhouse, Sharon;
And I sing to you because you are the only muse who I haven't Afforded the change to betray me:
And I've saved enough money to buy a house outright or to Climb Mountain Everest under the moonlight; but that really isn't Enough to get you to believe in me;
And Sharon, Sharon: The earth is moving beneath us, and I have Finished off most of a bottle but I am not a fine lady, Sharon:
And tonight is your night, added to your like galleons to your conquest:
Tonight is your night, and for you I am doing my best:
I wish I was the tin-man for you: I wish I was going down to vacuum
Your caesuras: I wish I had the confidants you had toward this Life, Sharon:
I wish I obeyed your natural laws, and that I was a butterfly whose Final declaration was upon the tarmac of your softly crenulated Bosom, Sharon; because that is the only thing anymore that Ever draws me to, Sharon:
And I wish I was a beautiful man for you, Sharon:
I wish that I was your because.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Body's Flirt

How are you doing what the dry and Coughing road sent you for,
The things hung in its easements the Accoutrements for your dirty
Bust,
Your eyes long song birds scuffing the Ruts,
While the university is already sold out,
Its stolen bicycles now homeless,
And even the new gosh dang its have better
Eyes than you:
Full aglow, like a preachers they never talk
To sing,
While the ephemeral homelessness lathers
You like a less than holy thing-
While you are going up where the road
Pretends its voyage,
As if your stride was a smoky censer swung before
He laid you; at its full dawning I saw up what
You are, but you kept on into the shadows
Of other mailboxes and their crepuscule,
Like the humming of dangerous cords
And their jellyfish dirt:
You still down know how you are,
As you swing your body's flirt.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Body's Sea

Nimble suicide;
How you tickle me,
Run up and down my spine on your back legs
Like a trained dog:
How you swallow the alcohol like a hungry
Bird
To stay alive in a windowless nest
All the things which death says to us,
As he veils the day with a quick laugh-
Selling his apocrypha door to door:
Should we let him in now,
Or let him in tomorrow;
If he stays too long, he will eat
All the oranges of our citrus tree before they ripen.
The canker of his eyes are like white persimmons-
For, we've made an appointment,
And he has to come in eventually.

You little whore- who have you been Playing with today,
When the neighbor asks you over to Fix his washing machine-
How come you are gone so long,
And I have to listen to the toads proclaim
In the aloe next to the carport
Procreating on the stacks of rusting rebar\Until You come back smelling of His brand of cigarettes and aftershave:
The chamber of the single bullet
Is more assertive than a game of cards-
In this rented house which is Closer to the canal than it is to the sea,
And the dated pornography stacked in the Junked cars amidst the pine trees;
Your lips lay as far away from me on the bed
As they can, and we are both so young,
Already starving;

You don't have to get to your knees to me

And pray, because I am leaving:
The children are still just unplanted thoughts,
Though the rabbits are dead in the rock garden;
Death is sitting there lightly touching a blue cactus,
And cocking his head for no reason:
If I go outside now, he will have me as soon
As my back is turned;
Barefooted, he will jump on me and ride
Me until I spill into the flooding ditch
Attributing to the canal; but soon are all
The greater things deceased,
As the skyscrapers raise their cocaine heads in Miami;
Even if the horizon above the sea is beautiful,
Those who are bought and paid for will not allow it,
But death will allow,
And find me like a fallen fruit tarnishing the Concrete easement;
He will take me up like a dry leaf and crumble me
Between his fingers, like he does to cats;
And after that is done,
You might creep out in your lucid slip,
And go share a beer with the neighbor and Explain to him, like foreplay, how it was done to
Me;
As he tastes your tongue with his,
The beer effervescing your lips, the yeast rising
The fermented death sailing on your body's sea....

Robert Rorabeck

Your Brown Again

Brown as the brownest parts of a day:
Brown as the brownest midway, and full of lights,
And just as absentminded of the things I say:
Perched in my curling sheets of gray:
I sing to you like the earth falling down like a marble in Colossal game through the heavens,
Like an auburn tear, your body sheds through an autumn
Year:
Brown and as beautiful as a leaf coming down
Across the crossed browned streets like the dun ribbons
In the hair of cafes:
Brown and as important as a reddish brown brick in the Façade of a university while I am sure that you will never Attend;
You crossed barefooted from your tiny brown town
To the other end of America:
You crossed the frontera in your little brown time:
And now I intend to make your brown mine,
For when I awaken I can see your brownness floating atop
The topless sea:
Airplanes are touching down in the deep red brown fields of Your hair,
And your sisters come around a delight with you there;
And you seem to call to me from across the other end of a brown
Pool,
And you cannot even swim, but I swim to you, and press
Your brown presents to my pale skin: Alma: I kiss you, and Take you further out into the dun dim, where we kiss once more
And I sing of your brown again.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Brown And Unending Shows

In the yellow houses that the bodies carouse,
Some making love, and some abuse: all of the whirligigs of Tantamount success,
The housewives in the nomenclatures depending on the rooms
Of their house:
The winos forever underneath the repleted overpass:
The wildflowers in the wild glass;
And your bare feet out against the propitious paths over
The neighborhoods that you pass,
Like a lovely angel, a fine girl of proletarian class:
And I look out for you, and call you by the waywardness of my soul
That has found its home in your Brown cradle,
Like a warm cave where immaculate things so come to pass:
Where butterflies winter, where rainbows drink,
Famished from their blue hallways, your perfumes so likely
To linger,
Even as your journey continues over the ribcages of my zoetropes,
Beatings its strobes the way windows let in the fanfares
Of airplanes into a darkened room,
Or across the glittering spine of girls, even where beautiful girls
Are looking up into the dancing hallways of
Your brown and unending shows.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Busy Garden

In your body's movement, a religion:
And sea-life:
Pink lettered sandboxes and orchestra,
Gypsum:
Underneath your corduroy an artist's garden
These topiaries of limbs
I know we can sell: your bosom an ice-cream
Truck for your children:
And I am just the man at the door singing what
He hopes will be your name,
Two silver pales strung across a wishbone along
His shoulders:
Maybe he is just a wolf that wants to be kind
Enough to lay down with the innocent lambs
Of your busy garden.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Carelessly Wimpled Shoulders

In the callous divine of spikenard
And ambergris and bear-cats
What are you doing, but making your Ever ready,
Playing topless hooky into trailer parks,
And looking good on the mobile vine,
While the little children are sunning in
The rusting bathtubs,
While the marble fauns are proudly
Crumbling,
And the torpid teachers are put to dull
Pasture,
Chewing their every day verbs and Equations:
And the sun is winnowing like grain through
The declivities,
Through the stony canopies where the Water orgasms like freckles or chickenpox
On your carelessly wimpled shoulders.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Chosen Foxes

Angels half asleep in forgotten neighborhoods
Because they've been here for so long,
Practicing each of their religions,
Waiting as if the wind veins of your old school
To return
With the frogs open throated,
Like paper bags in movies; and I don't know
How they feel
Just because
You are not going home,
And this is my heart all venal and chartreuse,
My greatest organ is just a mirage;
It has a harelip,
And it is filled without a care,
Cyclical, pantomiming like a ride at the fair
A zoetrope of trained animals out in your driveway
Waiting for you to come;
And maybe you used to tell the editor of
The school newspaper how you felt about me:
Maybe you skipped lunch and danced
For rain,
And made your hapless clays into something useful,
Like a goddess;
But you are gone now, gone with the surcease of time,
Gone on a forever trip to the mountains,
And this is just a poor attempt to call you back,
To looking you up,
But the angels are evaporating like apple pies in sweet
Tinfoil,
And the buses have stopped coming around suspecting
That now that you are just crying wolf,
Your grapes so much sweeter on the other side of the World,
Hung low enough for your chosen foxes to eat.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Coquettish Supposition

The wind curls the hair of the girl who he loves,
Verbatim- Sometimes he come leaping like a tiger from
The poem above the great Atlantic Basin,
Knocking into sturdy walls of coquina: I am so sad,
Because she will not have him. The pagan wind, he is no
Catholic- He does away with crèches along the bible-studies
Near the shore, he thrashes mangroves, and he is apoplectic,
Which is a study word, remember it:
And in all his bags of tricks he is seldom recognized when he Is subtle, when he is fondling candle's flames like a careful Father over his married daughter making full grown coitus on That bed with so many dime sized stains, and so many quarter Sized stains when the sex is better; but here he has forgotten his Carefulness over that daughter, and he goes growling down the highway
Which is also careless and the sun is in its azure tenement and
The knives have all be tossed into the opaque waterways and Estuaries, and all the widows have laid subtly bare-chested,
Have lit candles hoping to begin a paragraph of forbearance
Near their bedrooms, hoping that he might part the palmettos
Outside their lonely windows like a thief or a thespian;
But the wind is done being a prop, a handyman who ushers commercial Airliners over the heads of bubbly faced infants in the roar of Humid shelters. None of this is a thing to him. Half feral, he Dropped out in tenth grade and he is coming towards her like a Track star on cocaine, or nothing more than this trick of a poem,
My insouciantly penniless occupation. The rest, sweet dear, is left
In the hands of your coquettish supposition.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Crimes Of Amnesia

Make love in your Denouement
It is almost over and then
You'll graduate,
Take off your water skis and Eat warm meatloaf while Looking across the celibate
Piano and down into the very Strange lake from which you dried Off and came from;
And tiny green apples will be growing
On the hill,
Filled with tiny green worms,
Like the vastly lesser children of your
First influence;
And you may grow pregnant living in
The loose swelter of your uncle's
House,
But hijacked there are parks and Cemeteries and bicycles that know the Way to penny candies and Cold medicines:
And you would have friends there and Quiet instances in which to pray,
To collect yourself and run away again,
To get to the train stations like the arteries
In a giant and careless heart beneath the Coal stack mountains in Fare Colorado,
And there again to discover what type of Criminal you are,
And how much exactly your crimes of Amnesia are worth.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Delivering Mind

I've seen you baring breasts in the east,
Walking on waves that are lavishly caressing your Calves
While I drowned underneath you, as I drowned underneath
That bus:
And I've always thought of you though even now I Am not young
And no longer know that ladder up to your grapes
The sly fox has in his lips anyway, the man that has
Your name,
So like everything that is clever with anything you
Are driving forever away through the storm,
Your headlights looking at new animals,
So all I can see is you leaving, like all the planets that should Have existed like tiny orbs for my lips and phallus to First suckle and then to prick,
So that all I have are these feeble words, these younger
Man's toys, who feed their sorrows to the fish,
And then go on wishing their Sophomoric pines, while you have turned into an Incredible Indian with a beautifully alien world shooting
Up red tongued through the sweet armpits of
Your delivering mind.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Divine Dissapearing Acts

The stores are freshly open; they are waiting
As in this very night the moon sweeps clean the Streets;
And it haloes a goddess, she is you;
But tonight I went to the theatre with my sister,
And sat for hours just eating peanuts,
Because I couldn't figure out the attraction without Your soliloquies, the remote control
Boats in the papier-mâché sea were not there,
Telegraphed by your eyes,
All the blue-green creatures of the zoo well-spun
In their false habitats were gone;
And the little girls were weeping from the cypress
Shoots before transmogrifying into herons,
And they too flew away;
So I drove home, watching out for elk, barely speaking,
So dysfunctional- Went straight to the liquor cabinet
And to bed,
Hoping I might find you there, but you never spoke
To me; unless your eyes were closed and camouflaged;
Restless, I struck out for the moon, and thought to See you lying there like a flickering lamp in an ancient Room, but coming to it I saw that it was another Girl, she herself hoping to find a gentle young man,
But I did not love her,
And making some excuse fell to bed weeping,
Wanting the airplanes you fly upon wherever you are
To land restive like tin-can birds, and you there only passenger
Strung out finally having found a good place to stay the winter.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Doused Religion

I've tried doing better for you,
Even as the sun was old and disappearing
Behind the slats of trees,
Into the autumns seasons which misspell
And do not get up again after they have bent down:
And I have looked out for you against the traffic's Flow, and through the rattling shadows from the Landscaping brushed against the dun buildings:
Somehow they have made it all to hide you,
And everything is more forgetful even as it comes into Its time; and I am chained and unrequited
And my eyes are brown and so are yours:
They want to move across you lazily and calm,
And give truisms into the loci of rest bowed into your arms,
But already the old are disappearing and the shadows congest,
The sea is leaping and yipping into the west,
And there are better men for you who are breathing in Their time, and they move about you in the gentle gravities
Of courtship, and the dunes have drunken in the tide
When I would have thought to find you
Where the palm trees stand like a stoical chorus or Sorority, and move with you there clasped in a coupling
Arc, and to have swung with you in a studious dream,
Until nested in a crèche made from the springy, pealed bows
Of your doused religion.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Esoteric And So Young Body

It rains in my garage as the clouds come down
Over some nameless guy riding his bicycle,
But it becomes so easy, because there are no mountains;
And all of my dogs are missing,
But the world is no less beautiful: he gives you hickeys for All the world to see: you give my those too, but for Us alone,
And our two bodies become a private midway that I don't want
Taken from me;
Even though I am so bankrupt and so fallow, and the lions
Are staring at me with eyes wider than their glorious mouths:
I want you to travel towards me now, you little brown
Feet as lucky as rabbits multiplying in a house of mirrors,
Forgiving to me my prolific failures,
And enrapturing me in a garden returned to me of your esoteric
And so young body.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Eyes Never Turned My Way

Your eyes do not answer me:
You have a lover you stare upon.
Like a hungry bird,
You put your lips to his open
Palm and give soft pecks,
Dewing his lifeline with your spittle
In which your tears catch like blue flies.
And he tames you like a skilled Trainer, placing you
Into the better days where your life
Strokes like a teenage athlete
Warm under the sun at a swim meet.
The chlorine in the pool makes sure
Your body is clean as you
Kick your line and
Sun the shellacs you an auburn sheen
The elastic curves of your swimsuit,
Keeping your hidden flesh
The color of a whitewashed picket fence,
Punctuated by a couple roses.
You sometimes allow your eyes to Admire your virgin flowers as you decide what
To wear to school.
Finished and placing well,
You drive away in his car.
Giving long stares to his silhouette,
You fall into his arms in a dark
And comfortable living room
Paid for in the heart of
The malaise of suburbia
You lounge and make advances toward Love making, but only allow Him to taste your lips,
To put his thumbprints in secret
Stamps under your clothes,
To kiss recklessly again, like
Water spilled out from buckets
Hurriedly handed from one to the next
Filled one way with gasoline

And the next water,
To first start and then put out
A fire.
You take a shower
As he cooks you brownies
And then uses his fingers to Shovel food into your cheeks.
Wearing a towel,
You eat and
Fall asleep in his arms until he drives away.
In class you dream of him,
Through mathematics and English,
Science and social studies, your Mind performs experimental fantasies
Starring him.
I watch you from the back corner
Of class, but you never turn my way
Or speak my name.
Your eyes have nothing to say to me,
But I see you five days a week
And the boy you always eat lunch with.
I don't know who he is Only that he captivates your stare
As he attracts your attention.
One day you graduated and drove away
With him. I am still standing on
The last spot I saw you,
Watching you faithfully, a senior
Lost in the labyrinth of these high School memories
Where your eyes never turned my way.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Favorite Mexican Boy

Burning through the spirits of your ancestors,
Alma,
I've begun having feverish dreams of the skinny valleys of Guerrero Mexico,
Your home town and how you like your men: maybe that is Why you flirt with Armando, the little maricon,
Even though today at lunch you echoed my syllables when I Told you I loved you,
Even though you would like to put it off as a lie,
But I can tell you only the empiricisms of the world can tell you
The tin kettle joys of the coral snake on your roof:
There he is, and you will never see him, but I have culled him out
Of the places your family works together,
Those who are renting:
Your extended family has done so well for themselves in the eight
Years that they have been in this foreign country:
I could do half as well, except that I am a gringo and accustomed to The penumbras of these rolling overpasses,
And the divine mirages of the slowly floating helicopters,
And these sad lies- Except that I love you, Alma,
And I have my house that you've been to four times, and the last time
We made love for hours,
And you came multiple times: and your favorite color is still green,
Alma,
And I pray every night to the virginsita that I have done work good Enough to become your favorite Mexican boy.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Foremost Of Senses

If I am waiting to fill out and become the Man that can drive you around in Barrel-chested trucks, will you come for me
When I am ready for you,
And let me take you out into the bonfires
Of the southwest;
And I wont cut my hair- and it will be just as gray
And silver as the smoke and the airplanes through it;
And you wont even have to look at me,
You can just cast your eyes high into those nets,
Dreaming of acrobats always falling through the burning Serenity in
A pleasant though arresting way;
And I can keep a steady glance on you watching you like
A cat watches a child, full of daydreams and hunger,
So that when your eyes finally come to my own
I can return your foremost of senses;
And we can believe together that most of this is real.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Glorious Perfumes

My sense of smell is not real;
I will give you this bouquet, and then I
Will go away and die.
My dogs will wait for me barking like a
Cenotaph in the waves,
The cormorants wonderful as kites
Of little boys,
Your oldest sons who look at you, whose Love I cannot steal;
And when I will be gone, like Jesus, like
Cars to school,
Then my nose will disappear as if it was lost in A knife fight;
And you will have good reason not to love me,
A nose less man,
Knowing of the unstopped aromas of your Boudoir;
It is laughable that we should all go this way,
The baseball players in the red gems of sky;
And I in my golden gem of fireworks,
Brain-sunken now like a gaunt tortoise beside
The black cats hyperventilating beneath your canal;
And you will come swimming like a pungent mermaid,
And I wont even be able to smell your farts;
And I would have other men describe them to me,
But they will be as mute and piss-stain as Frightened children,
I could easily still friend and hide their plastic rewards
Above the church of my mother's refrigerator;
And then tomorrow afternoon, Tuesday,
Meet you in the park and see your new Butterfly tattoo,
And grab your leg like a speech and try to smell the Flower on your ankle;
But I really just want to smell your flower before
I die,
And am so noxious as to overpower myself for the love
Of your glorious perfumes.

Your Golden Rules

Daffodils in the penumbra of my uneasy afflictions;
And unicorns,
And I know you cannot look at me, or be my true love,
But I just want to escort you still out into the Yard,
To hold your hand like the page of a soft mammal,
To watch you metamorphose on the strings;
To leave off you like a dead boy with Blue socks in the weeds to Canterbury,
If you can't be my fable, if you can't be my dream:
Then I will not want to take your beauty,
The hope of all your freckles, the shadows of the heavens
Or goldfish flirting with the cat's saber tooth;
I just want to pay my dollar to get a good look at you,
To tip my bottle and well perceive the beauty as You wash your feet in the lucky river;
If want to be your weary fetish, the knuckle bone of skeleton
Rubbed in your pocket, your silver boy kept in the Secrets of the railroad tracks;
And if you are never to come around again, to be like a single raindrop Quiver on your roof, never looking indoors as you learn from Your teachers, as you have children and pools,
As you divide and multiply and live by your golden rules.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Heavens

The telltale signs I don't believe in:
I am missing the rest areas, and my dogs- but the pain is Gone with the seasons of glasses,
But Alma is also gone, which seems to be the aphorisms
Of these days' particular colloquialisms;
And it really feels strange being in the direct gaze
Of her eyes,
While my parents are pillaging in Arizona, searching
For movies;
And the stars come out too in particular constellations:
And you are one of these, estrella,
As you made my wishes as I made love to you,
Looking up and down into the various positions in which I placed your heavens.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Hopeless Name

And the busied fruit market gone
With the bumble bees underneath the airplanes,
Just as my dreams of Houses or marriages with you:
You have leapt across the canal
And back
Into Mexico,
Brown eyed beside the firelight beside your
Children
Where your husband keeps you,
Because you used me—because you could not love
Me,
But took me down from the sky and played with My wings:
And now my wife is busy breathing on the Other side of the Earth:
But soon I will have her, which makes me think of You, even though you are gone,
And it is only these things burning which linger,
Trying to carry your scent at least up to the clouds
To amuse another god with your hopeless name.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Hungry Snows

The family sleeps in gloom, and I am just waking up:
And the world hasn't recognized me, just as I haven't yet learned
The gloom of all of these flowers:
I am absolutely imperfect and beautiful, and I am going down on
You in a wishing well,
Because I Haven't yet given up on you:
My whole life is a musical, and I cherish on swings in the midnight,
Or in crepuscule,
And I don't even care that I don't even know the law:
Or that all that I can see you in is in black and white,
Or that you are only my sick muse
And turned down the part of Frankenstein, and this is just A train ride of a little girl in a cherished hurricane;
Or that I cannot drive a truck right now, Sharon, or that I haven't Chased a girl on into Mexico, as if I weren't a butterfly
Impossibly changing, or drinking your spirits,
Because you are my unicorn: Sharon: you are my America,
And I cannot help but to keep waking up for you and doing what I do for you,
Sharing my spirits with the toothless hobos underneath the overpass:
And I have new dreams that aren't even right,
Because I have stolen new bicycles underneath the censers of Mars and you aren't even mine;
And again, tonight, tonight: you aren't even mine, tonight,
But to the throat of a funny werewolf you go, like a rose that has no
Home but to the strange placed you give, placed in the theaters
Of your hungry snows.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Husband's Everydays

Cracking farts who applaud Australia,
But I will never be the star of that seafaring
Movie:
If I even will be, O', I will have my bit part:
I will think of immaculate teachers,
The cars they drive,
And their apple-rind farts, given to them like
Jazz by their most beautiful pets,
But when I's think of you it make's me wets,
Like wet paints drying on a wall
Nearer the houses nearer the sea, the old movie
Theatres,
The hills of Spain,
And red wagons moving softly down hills,
And coffins filled with little girls
In curls,
The locomotion's of haunted planes,
And little girls again in red wagons going down
Hills to their sweet professions
Like gifts of holidays,
And to you again, and it makes me wish to say
Your name,
Like the secret senses tucked away in the deaf
Dumb brain that kicks up its heels
And lights out after the world is buried,
As you think of me while you make love to all of
Your husband's everydays.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Intangible Amusements

Lions underneath the airplanes
And other toys-
The knights started out but got distracted,
Such as this:
And on, and on- and through the trees
A forest:
I loved you, it was plane,
But I couldn't force you to do the same:
Up in the apertures
Of girls with golden hair-
I saw my muse, but she couldn't care:
So my words are bitter
As if on a wild persimmon tree-
You could see me there
If I hadn't fallen into a wishing well
And sprained my knee:
Now I love you- now I don't-
I could forget you, but I won't-
As the daylight proceeds beneath the cathedral
Of airplanes, the spectators looking down:
But they will forget your intangible
Amusements before
They touch down.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Little Girl

If this is a game in cricks and solitude,
I have no bats to swing: the birds have no cages in which
To sing,
And they go out and make a naked Christmas underneath the Naked wings of holiday's airplanes:
And I love you,
Alma: Oh, how I love you- even while my words dry up in the Hidden pools of venal mermaids:
Even under the shade cloths of the Mercado which bares your name:
That you have kissed me and we have tugged our Bodies through the rolling air-conditions,
That I have strutted like a rooster around the water cooler rustling my Comb and blushing and calling out the hours clearly:
How much time I have left to live, and for the pilgrims of our Legacy to rustle their heads up from the hungry walls of our ancestral Adobes,
And to march out again across the highways, over the orange groves
And the sugar canes,
Swinging their censers and making a smoky dragon while the airplanes
Leap and pinwheels like little girls have birthdays:
Just the same as you held your little girl named
Heidi today and for a little while she turned and smiled to me.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Long List Of Pretty Things

Homeless in the low hanging clouds,
Baseball players without any clothes; and I don't Know where this is going,
Except to the inevitable whore house;
And you are in Colorado and this is my banjo
Hoping to echo all the way up to your basin,
And be clear enough for you to distinguish me from the Other tourisms;
But enough for tonight, and enough for so long;
I can't really remember you, and this ain't our song:
This is just the memory of the exact moment of when I Decided to leap out of school:
I leapt straight out of the window, sure that you were watching
Me, and hoping that you thought I was cool:
While the sun cheered and then the moon beamed, and I
Swept on the swings on into crepuscule, trying so hard not
To believe in another single one of your long list of pretty things.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Mothering Shoulders

I have a book of all of your shoulders—
And you do not remember who I am—But Won't the dolphins surrender to the sun—
Evaporations of the merry-go-round of
Your mothering shoulders—
Until all of the day is cradled in the night of Those mountains,
And the magnificent spins—a world of spiders in Their equinox—and other things I do not Wish to comprehend—I can hear a muse putting Her fingers in the kiln to Retrieve her children—they are already something
I haven't knocked—
And the sun blooms in its kaleidoscope of knuckles,
Another easy if insouciant wish—
They day is a pinwheel of airplanes and arrowheads—
Another soldier goes dying in the amusing waves
Of her hungering dish-

Robert Rorabeck

Your Mother's Rabbits

And I said I loved you, but I almost Failed math:
You didn't even finish school outside of Mexico:
Your house is your jewelry and it goes well,
Smoothing like smooth stones skipped on the soft
Brown elbows of your likely agitated body;
And if we made love,
I wasn't there: I was on another shore, battling with My fraternity of heroes:
I just spied you for awhile, and we made love that way,
Through our small change of wishes:
And your children grew up and learned all that you
Had to teach them- Don't you ever think of what they Will learn
In the green elbows of your house where all of your Mother's rabbits have all but disappeared.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Never Mind

I try to line up words for you
Glass bottles filling with sunlight
On the fence, rows of speckled birds
Who I have taught to sing your name,

You write me on my birthday,
A couple distant words the snake into my heart,
And once or twice you glance across the crackling fields
Down to where I have caught afire and dancing—

You slant you head as if trying to figure something
Out, and your blue hair falls like waves upon
Your neck's opalescent trunk,
But too soon men in red trucks drive around your porch,
Hollering your name like sledges nailing train trestles.

Distracted by the tautness in their young smiles,
You go away with them too soon as not to see
The tremendous blaze I have ignited myself,
And all of a sudden I am consumed and lost
In the cluttered and rusting backyards of your never mind.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Nude Knees

I am as mute as the cathedral, and I
Am dreaming
And all of this is the reason that the snow falls
Across the television:
I don't suppose it is anything entirely beautiful
But then it was just the weather
Across the television in her high heels
And then I guess I knew what it was you
Were talking about through the echoes
Or through the trees while there was still
A reason and it remained echoing- echoing
Across the forgotten chassis-
While the sweet- sweet pornographies sang
Of the open estuaries of your nude
Elbows- or, or they sang as well of your Open estuaries of your nude- or
Your nude knees.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Pretty Things

The power of the stars has Jesus' name on them,
And now, my find young sisters, Sharon is melting the snow,
And my Alma cant describe for herself what to Do:
Oh, If I was more beautiful and more Mexican:
If I had come all the way from Guerrero on the same bus
That she knew,
Pregnant, and breathed from her mother and father:
Oh what would I know:
I only know graveyards and the silvery bellies of fish,
The boats of warriors overturned,
And snowflakes in the amusements of the times that were lost
And can never be reclaimed:
The cats are all pregnant and as fast as speed boats,
And in the morning my forehead will brush through all the Fiery motes
And you will just have to forgive of all of this,
While I drink my wine and kill my dragons and defeat my own
Mobile flames:
I will go down to sleep tomorrow believing that I am still the same
One who deserves the blame,
While you spread your wings and save your cities
And sing your pretty things.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Real Boy

Would that you called- but you have never Spoken to me:
Never seen my eyes. Senseless like the lying Wind,
You roll up your windows and sing down your Pretty highway which is lighted
So brightly that butterflies and f-ed up unicorns
Play by the concrete atolls even by Midnight;
And how many dreams have you killed,
That you didn't even care- It's just that you like Football,
And bouncers- and your ups with more up:
I have lock jaw from singing too loudly of this rust
I can't molt,
Or confessing my infections to ghosts and cheerleaders
In junked railroad cars in the burned hills
Of California; and now I am guessing that you Can't read- You just blow your nails;
And you have nothing to crawl into- you've never Wanted for shelter other than in the busty anchored arms,
That blue ink you lick with your tongue
A creature of pools and highfalutin causeways;
Infected with attractive ploys sewn together under your Sinister trumpeted flag,
Reanimated with the kiss of an acetylene torch- you tick off
Like every phosphorous angel too heavy for the abodes
Of heaven,
Coming crashing down on horseback trips to drink with Modern cowboys in rushing jungles of the Grand Canyon;
And I have no friends who are not typed out between The pages of a deep winter chrysalis where we pray for Your ice-crystal lips to open us into a fantastical pulp reality;
But I am yet in disbelief that you can make me
Your real boy,
Even though I already know how to fly.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Roman Sky

Gradually receding sounds go to forage
Further away underneath the coolly banyons
Where buses sleep in beds
Of sweet pornography,
Where lizards mate with colorful birds in the Joints of trees which spread
Like fans who reach out to caress airplanes,
And the sky is so rich it is like drinking wine:
And the boys come and lay out and dine,
While the serpents move,
Whispering the special's menu,
And I am here wrapped in the filigree from Falling off a cliff bereaving like a great Pagan in its tinsel:
And we all lay out and crack open books,
And smoke and drink and steal our looks
Through the sky
And your metal buses with arms stretched out,
For we know that there you are leaping
And riding in your chariots of superimposed
Gods,
And we share every breath with eyes glued to the Blue,
Because you are our only god,
Titted pie, and we would lie there for always for Just one glance down from you;
We would do your laundry until we died,
Just to get one whiff of you like an orb of Spanish citrus flung like a perfumed baseball through Your Roman sky.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Sincerely Beautiful Soul

There are things that I shouldn't say,
That you shouldn't hear,
But I want to anyways, while the Ferris Wheels are Caesuraing perpetually into the sky,
Like soldiers saluting the president, but secretly keeping
Bright ideas,
While everything around them fails and goes away, but Only for a little while,
As the tide swallows itself and all the lost boys and their Kites;
And now you are in one of those moods, Alma, and you've Forgotten your English,
And all the mayhem I've made for you, skipping school in My own tongue,
But it has been a fairytale that you have loved me,
And have stolen from me everything that I left cooling out
On the windowsill:
It has been unreal, the way the airplanes make extended crosses
In the sky,
Like visions I don't really believe in, as your eyes will cut
Across me tomorrow,
In the traffic or in the rain, while all of the virgins sleep in Their grottos,
And I know for certain that the only way that you have love
Him is through the avenues of your daughter,
But even that illusion will eviscerate as she learns to grow up
And walk right out of the transoms of your sincerely
Beautiful soul.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Sisters' Fair Promenade

Ghosts of this avenue's heredity don't have To be afraid-
They are never getting ingrown toenails again,
Or carrying unnecessary books.
Doors mean flat out nothing.
They hang from meat hooks,
While Pedro ejaculates to Mexico and doesn't
Have to displace her into the sea.
My friends drowned entering her salt-lick
Carnival,
And gave her all the aphrodisiacs of her horns,
And cried softly like swing-sets
As she broke them down into their Better elements.
She never cared, but came like a tiger in the dark
With eyes of soft tulips
Maybe like the ones I gave to Denise in second Grade,
Or maybe the ones now trampled by the Elephants and the hurricanes,
The beefy tourists you feed,
As you never once think to look up with your eyes
Past their usual arcade,
To see the hoods of mountains,
Your sisters' fair promenade.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Strange And Sad Numbers

I stayed here for you- Alma:
And now that the baseball game is over, and my Parents have left:
And I've been in the flowerbed of prostitutes, who Will sing my sad song:
As your sister dies again into the beds of high school:
Until the night really has to wake up and fly away
Like a bridesmaid in the latening afternoon:
Even while we realize that all of the fish we could catch
Could never truly be described:
Until we remember the fort, and how it hung and to itself,
And the sad marionettes that made up the backyards of Its drainage:
Until the green decorated from its cannons up on the terraplane
Of its second story, Alma: and everything else that it never Had to do:
Until all of it was a fire, gurgling, saying its first words to
The fight that was already won, while you were taking your strange
And sad numbers home to him kidnapped into the bags
I'd already fulfilled for you.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Stranger Wedding Day

I came back from California
And fell asleep at the movies:
And the town was empty from
All the girls I knew drifting away:
And the lake was empty of its woman
Out beside the swings and Graffiti,
And crepuscule came and cut the throats
Of all the needy toolboxes and Mailboxes and things with chests
To be filled
Like hollow trees;
And then I could see the sword in the lake,
All aglow,
But there was no swan to dive down and Pick it up,
No teacher with the words to make it grow:
And it was as if I was without a car,
Or especially a bicycle,
And all the lions couldn't roar:
They couldn't even purr,
And the rain fell without sweet sound,
Without the noise of the heavens raining down,
And you were up in college,
Putting your hands on strange new clay,
Making love to strange boys I wonder if you Happen to recall on your stranger wedding day.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Thigh's Pinkish Highway

Follow me to the door if I will be going,
And the greater lights are turning down across
The drills and water tanks, the men unbound
From them and drop their tools and queue
Into bars and fight, but I have come to you; my Lips get off to salivating, prepared to speak,
And your door is painted all white and daisies
Are in red clay pots, but it is getting dark.
I noticed the flag was up on the box, and a shadow
Of a tall man through the window, but I will knock,
Because I've driven so far down from the oil rigs
And chainsaws, and if you should kiss my neck
Beneath the scars, my eyes will light little fires on You and keep warm in those opal nooks, the Tongue purveys, another attempt at children to run
Backdoors and down into the tangle ribbons in
The trees; If I stay tomorrow, I will catch a fish
From the brilliant stream and making you naked
Lay it upon your inner thigh, and compare it,
While your eyes swoon to the hidden nest of birds
And patches of light and panting green; This is the Way you should swoon in between the whistle's
Blow and the engine's steam, and the surveyors Diving rods: I should find your well, and test the Depths and in the morning yawn and feast, and Put my index finger on the text of your breast, or Point to it if out of reach. Then you should let me out
With a lunchbox and a hardhat, and paint the door
In the morning, and turn your back as I go to work,
And bend your ass, and yawn the drooling way eggs
Crack into the bowl, or if you allowed me, to Drip upon you the inky dough, my tongue the dividing Line of your thigh's pinkish highway.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Tiny Birthstone

Mailmen can never be found on my Alcoholic swings, because they are whistling and attending
To your neighborhood of sweet knees;
You dab your lips to boy sized dragons in the apiaries of your Boudoir;
And you swing as light as a cypress bough doing magic,
Making the tiniest of airplanes fall asleep in their Bird houses:
And little people come out in tiny worlds,
And scarecrows fall in love with perfect strangers:
Each finger of the dark glove is its own galaxy which claps
And grabs in a waltz in the carport where the ghost of my Mother still survives:
And the dogs come out like gentlemen still learning to speak
Under the meaning of your eyes;
And the toads hold court with rebar and thoughtless places
That seem to recall the meager brightness of the colors you have Dreamed in,
As you come just as wonderless over the busted lips of Conquistadors now as good as cenotaphs; and yet if you know the Signs then the world speaks of all its history of adoring murders,
As the guilty fall before you; as I would and use all that I have learned today in the wayward fruiteria to pleasure you,
To give you a divine buffet in the centerfield of your Red diamond,
Pitching, pitching, and saying tiny prayers into a paper bag full
Of jewelry,
Your tiny birthstone you keep hidden in your unawares.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Tongue

Cadaver that has to listen to the dogs breathe
Above it—
Who, broken hearted, howl to the moon,
Or to the floating ships
That glide against the half-hearted balloons—
While my mother and father sleep
Together in their monogamous
Ballrooms—
But what words I have left only rhyme with Their echoes—
The daylight is no longer young—
All of the bicycles are stolen—
The cat has got your tongue—
With your eyes so blue and petrified—
Against the billboards over
The cities that only sing to themselves—
The world is far and the world is wide
While the virgins cannot even count on themselves.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Utterly Beautiful Eyes

I tip my glass back and have my fill,
And the entire world turns like a boat
Of bootlegged rum,
And I dip in my glass
And have my fill without even once
Having to admit myself to the burnishing
Cathedral of your utterly beautiful eyes.

Robert Rorabeck

Your Very First Boyfriends

In their gardens was this pledge,
That they were having sex and beating chords;
Just as the pitcher on his mound
Was wound up to throw,
And the jackrabbit had buried his long ankles all deep
Into snow;
And wound down, like an accordion in drag:
And the sky fell over and got a good view of her scars
With the exploded cars in their canyons,
And the venison in its gunny sacks: the mountains looked Like sad teenagers, but I
Take that back; and it was okay to report that this Didn't really happen to me:
I was just a raconteur's heart beating its bicycles into the Sea,
While all of the flashy broads had already swam away,
Folded into the paper airplanes,
Or tossed unceremoniously into the golden hay:
As all of the latch key children were looking up and drown into Their out of state graves,
As all of their colleges were burning up to cinders,
Just as your very first boyfriends were just learning how to shave.

Robert Rorabeck

Yuppie's Prayer

Dear God,
Do yourself a favor,
And get a haircut.

Robert Rorabeck

Zeno

Everything that is born
Moves from the earth,
Crowds for the sun,
Sings on the swings.
Has a favorite color
And a way of getting around:
Legs, flagella, or roller skates.
Wants your lips on Their lips,
Is tortured by the motivations
And the expanding beauty,
Writes notes to you
In class,
Whispers to the sea,
When looking up,
Is mystified by the aeroplanes,
Goes on fieldtrips
Works in factories
Lives in trailer parks,
Can't remember the last time
They touched,
Or came across eyes that
Said they too wanted to touch.
Made a movie
And the whole time in it
You were walking away,
Went over the bridge three times,
But each time a different color
And a new sound,
Though you never changed,
The country changed,
Birds migrated,
Neighbors moved,
Relatives passed away:
Committed a crime
Went to prison,
Then outside again with gray hair
And a new name,
Saw you there shimmering on

The street,
Any number of
A manner of things:
But still the same,
A girl I knew who went
Jogging by my red car so long ago,
Then there you are Making love
I never knew,
In the rain coming again,
Or are you just passing through,
Even so it is the same,
Every word belonging to This place:
Your eyes
Your lips
Your name,
This thing I see,
You know,
Nothing changes.

Robert Rorabeck

Zigheil, Jungfrau

The heater is on and it smells like
Roasted peanuts,
But the theatre is quiet and all the Young gentlemen gone:
The four-ring tent is still up, though,
And so I shall continue rehearsing my act.
In fact, Arthur Rimbaud is deep in his Weepy one-legged grave;
And you can't barely hear his farts,
He's been so well plundered by lesser poets;
But there's still time left for one
More poem after midnight,
If only because I've been reading Mark Twain's
Concerning the Jews,
While this coach has returned to a pumpkin;
And though it isn't likely that I should use
Any of it directly for my dissertation,
It is the truth that I once did love her,
She who is so easily related to Satan, and kept Her in my bed while the clock was still Concerning under the hour of the bicycle thieves;
And we had a mezuzah taped on the door,
And she cooked potato latkes-
When she farted it sounded like Dumbo trumpeting;
And I guess that's why she finally left me,
Because I was gone exploring my Rocky Mountains,
Such a goy, my farts like goldfish in a tiny bowl
The cat plays with, so demure;
And this is what I've meant to say, that she's gone
And married a local lawyer of her same proclivities:
She's gone and shut the door and hyphened her last name,
And continued on with her tefillin and civilities:
Nothing more than expected-
Those used-car days,
And I'm sure that I could grit my teeth and explore the Long list of anti-Semitic possibilities, but what for?
Instead, I should stand tall in my revelry because I am more of a Jew than she ever will be;
She's just lightly-frosted secular, leasing her Lexus

And BMW's- Calling her man in to eat at Friday's,
While I'm published,
Will soon be studying for a Ph.D.-
Of this I'm sure,
I once loved her- her entire race.
Now bow down to me, because though a
Goy, I'm much more the Jew than she Ever will be,
Sure.

Robert Rorabeck

Zing-Zang, Charlemagne

This just in today:

Two match-stick suicides on the back of a Wild brome pony:

Death and Co. &, she wrote:

a mother and son team,

Boys, that's the real kicker-

With nowhere else to go, the headlines proclaim,

There could only be one conclusion.

Yes, that she was beautiful, mightily so,

Even with that black spot in the upper plateau

Of her left cheek and her smoke-dried poesy

Of a husband.

She didn't get bucked, not her,

But stuck her head in the oven. Zing-zang,

Charlemagne- Her eyes, why even closed,

While even preached upon and laid around with

That bright polished wood of her snow-white coffin

They sang like real live blue jays,

They sang to us all who were there and jotting it down:

Swinging through the bell-jars of life's aberration.

Nothing so sweet can last so long;

Why, its just as contagious as poison,

And I want you to write that down.

Like Siamese twins as blue as virgins

Flirting with all of the tweed jacket bull-pen.

Hee-haw and Scooby-doo, and her son too,

Just yesterday, in fact- That big boy up in Alaska

Studying trout, or whatever he was up to:

Not as big as a woopy-doo as the mother,

But a big boy- forty-two, I've been led to understand,

His hands clasped and as sweet as kittens.

Nothing surpasses the real corruption of female beauty, though,

Especially ones with her talented legs and nearly

Infallible acumen: but it was a real shame.

They say it runs in the family, and the more they get to Know about suicidal brains, the less they tend to go out

When it rains. I.E., he hung himself from the rafters,

Just high enough so the grizzlies couldn't get after him

Except for a trickle of primordial svelte

Like expensive fur across the souls of his effortless feet.
So that's the flawed chapter, boys, that's how it
Ends, almost floating: Already yesterday's headlines,
Except for the sweet lines her corpse still sings in all Types of continuing weathers,
Like sweet lullabies, boys from the lips of Dead lilies- She still sings to her children,
As she sings to all men, the uneasy penumbra twittering
Alongside the dishes of her darkened kitchen,
Singing to us who are all of her boys, us grown men:
Who must come to her when she calls us now,
The wife and mother who calls us down in swift conclusions,
To contribute to that knowledge which flows so wonderfully
Chock full of mothen secrets,
So deep that there is no clear bottom; but down there still
The typing of the unjust machines: the weeping of That sweet mother and all her fine and effortless children.

Robert Rorabeck

Zoetrope Around The Moon

I'll put another disguise upon your hour—I press another
Glass to my lips, and then I'll go to sleep:
I'll get up again, mummified—brilliant—like the all of The phosphorous lined around all of the Cadavers down the banks of the canal where we used to Sell Christmas trees:
It was the happiest time, if you cannot remember:
I was in love with you—and you were married—
The paper boats sailed out to the brink of the stars—
The hummingbirds settle upon the vanishing archipelagos
And we all sang happy birthdays to the black holes that Made a zoetrope around the moon.

Robert Rorabeck

Zoetrope For The Marionettes

In daylight echoes
New words for old loves,
Strangely finally deciding to Be together
While my wife sleeps—
And I drink rum—
And the airplanes dream of
The rough necks of baseball
Diamonds underneath them—
Sweltering,
Covered with the innings of Their games—
And I notice you, as you
Watching them—
Even after all of the professors
Have evaporated or Metamorphosed from the naptimes
Of our once university—
And the world spins like
A zoetrope for the marionettes
Who are still trying to close
Their wooden eyes just so
They can try and dream of Becoming real boys.

Robert Rorabeck

Zoetrope To Your Shadow

Like the prettiest rooms of the closets,
Everybody who loves Disney World keeps saying your Name—
And the shore in its endless lovers perpetuates
Our illusions:
There you are, a mermaid of a water coloring
I lost somewhere amidst the backyards of
High school
As you became more and more aware of the Special places of your desire—like beautiful children
In the daydream of a church's bathroom—
Aunts and nephews bathing together beneath the Stained glass Pietas and Eucharist's.
I want you to attend my eyes as I steal away your bicycles,
As I hijacks your airplanes—but you have already Gone down into the holes of your Earths,
You are already warm and dry—
Goldilocks of a children's story—
When you awaken after the thundershower,
Will you eat all of the dandelions underneath the sky—
Or will you remain for a moment with your ruby soul
As nude as the junked cars underneath the moon—
Will you look at me hiking up the hill towards the fire tower
That looks down over all of the properties
Lying like pilgrims beneath you—
And will you recognize that I remain a zoetrope to your Shadow, dancing like something that isn't real
Through the ashes of the fire that has long since burned away.

Robert Rorabeck

Zoetropes

You all get together and make love, and this is what
You all have been doing for so long that you all
Have become accustomed to the song:
Now the ponies ride: The kites glide, and the kittens are oh so
Mewing beside the fire-lit side of the gold fish who are oh so
A glowing;
And I have this Alma in my side, like a feathered arrow-tipped bride,
And this is what I have been doing for so long,
So that this is my age old proverbial song; That I am so alone,
That I am now sunken into the cottage cheese pornographic folklore
Underneath the far away bastions that the airplanes are sewing;
That it doesn't feel right, that your bodying is mowing my bones through
The night,
That my body should know better: That my body is cast away:
My body is just a cast in the carriage, while your body is so fully lit
And laughing with its family that it should be in Christmas,
While they come again the strange tattoos, the entire crews,
Laughing and prancing their zoetropes across the epidermis of the Bays.

Robert Rorabeck

Zoetropes Closing Shop

As the mountain who fevers me goes down
Singing nocturnes,
And the zoetropes close up their winking shops,
My wife sleeps beside me
Not in a forest but in a house—
In her belly another house for this developing Thing,
Made of mine and hers, rainbows and katydids—
All of the muses put away beneath
Their blistering waterfalls—
All the metamorphoses returned home—
No more borrowing of others' things—
This is the land that we've made
Where the airplanes sleep amidst the clouds
Waiting for their pilots to come home.

Robert Rorabeck