Publication Date:
2022

Publisher:
Poemhunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
fatemeh zolfagharian()

I'm an Iranian teacher.
a Ph.D. student in educational psychology.
I'm a poet.
The Goddess Of Colors

My mother is a goddess
she is a protector of beauty
And recreates the colors
Every morning
Before the sunlight shine from the edge of the highs Boasting the golden yellow to her
She has lined up the wet dyed yarns
In her evergreen lovely yard
Like a colored miracle
The ruby red
A sign of love for the garden
Which boils in the bloody heart
Of a pomegranate
The azure blue
Like a generous mirror
Which reflected the sky in the ocean
And thousands of green, white, pink Then she waves the warp and weft
To create the immortal patterns
In the name of a carpet
She ties the colors together Flower by flower
And always leaves a part of herself
In the knots
When tides the yarns
With her wounded delicate fingers Dropping blood
Sometimes she gets so engrossed in the lines
As I think
She is a part of the plot!
That playing a role of a goddess
In the middle of the carpet Which is woven with her beautiful mind

fatemeh zolfagharian
The Moon Vertex

the lovelorn sky
which enchanted by the incantation of a hex

maybe it was the bye Picture of the sky
that my regretful eyes will watch from narthex

the full moon covert behind the white events glamouring
leave me
perplex

I saw your face tonight in that slinky light
when the whites
release the moon vertex

having the privilege watching your charming face is the grand heaven
That I Couldn’t express!

fatemeh zolfagharian
The Dream Of The River

Well besides the line
Of the old trees
A wandering runnel
flows toward beneath

clouds piled above
removed their fluff
because the shiny sun decided to see

The roundness of her Beauty, in the mirror
Of the clean water
That sings murmuring

But, the roar of stream
Just ruined her dream
She asked it to rest
For a little breath

The river explained
By a lucid claim I'm always willing To see your gleam

So be satisfied
To see my flow
Let me be your dream
As you are my dream

fatemeh zolfagharian