A Future Yet To Come:

I loved Victorian rooms as a child,
They made me think that the Good Old Days were.
But love back then was seen as truly wild,
And complications would often occur.
I used to say I was born the wrong time,
But now I know that this is not the case.
Although the way I feel was never crime,
I can't accept oppression based on race.
Not gender nor class nor the tongue you speak,
Should dictate anything about your life.
A world in which my friends would be called freak,
Is not a place to wish to spend a life.
So my childhood fixation has now gone,
And I dream of a future yet to come.

A Kiss:

We're always told to feel something
Although I do not quite know what.
It's not the Romeo die for you passion
Or throwing away dreams for a man.

It's a modern love fit around ambition
For a life beyond marriage's constraints.
I know it was a feminist vision
So why do I feel that I'm tied by restraints?

The fact is I planned to marry quite rich
For as long as I knew what love was.
But then a discovery caused me to switch
And I knew I must give up because

I cannot marry a rich wealthy man,
Not due to my values or drive.
But because his love and his money and wealth
Wouldn't allow romance to thrive.

I am a feminist and I'm proud of the fact
That we stand for giving women a choice.
My DNA chose my path. Which honestly makes me I used to dream of wedding bells in a church in the town where my family dwells.

But the fact is I'm gay and whatever way
I planned my life. It wasn't this.
But I'd give it all up. I knew from the moment she jokingly gave me a kiss.

A Mark That Can't Be Erased-

When thoughts can be punished and history
Changed with a few hastily typed alterations
What is existence? Why does war matter
If it is a perpetually occurring event?

If the world believes four is five
Then is it? What is history but Pages in a textbook and centuries
Old skeletons? - conjecture is all

We have as proof. No fossils can Provide the concrete evidence we Crave. So we trust. Did we not believe That Boudica was called Boadicea?

And did that change the fact that she Died fighting for our country? But Boadicea has ceased to exist. Just as
The dinosaurs who have been found

To be two halves jumbled together
Have ceased to exist. But the question is
If we believed them to exist then do they?
Is existence in memories and the mind

Enough? To be the sole enlightened person
In a society is insanity. So what is morality?
Who are we to distinguish right from wrong?
Left from right? A colourblind person would swear that blue is red. And what I think

Is green is different to what you think
How strange that makes our art teachers.
When they say mix this colour or that.

If in the end, you can be erased from the world
With simply the burning of a few documents
You know you have not lived, only existed.
So make your mark, a mark that's impossible to erase. Because every life should be remembered. We may only be cogs in a vast machine. But we are individuals. We are entitled to our thoughts and feelings.

When thoughts can be punished and history changed with a few hastily typed alterations
What is existence? Why does war matter
If it is a perpetually occurring event?

If in the end, you can be erased from the world
With simply the burning of a few documents
You know you have not lived, only existed.
So make a mark that's impossible to erase.

All My Pieces Are Cliché

Absolutely gazeboed and drop dead gorgeous,
I won't bang on about bad blood.
I've got a monkey on my back,
But that's just the tip of the iceberg.
Drown your sorrows, keep it under your hat.
If I'm not broke, don't fix me.
Yes, I eat like a pig. But in my mind's eye,
There's a chip on my shoulder. It keeps me on My toes, I suppose. I've got cold feet. I'm Dead as a Dodo- you're barking up the wrong tree;
So call it a day, don't bite your tongue.
I'll have you for breakfast- so you can eat my dust.
But only if you must. And I'd like to say.
All my pieces are cliché.

Am I The Enemy?

Gunshots pierce the peace
Tanks trample the track
They came with their loaded guns,
Forced us out of our homes

They threatened me – what could I do?
They shoved me down the road
The gun’s cold steel against my back
They threatened me – what could I do?

I heard the screams of my friends
Innocents like you
I wanted to save them
But, they threatened me, what would you do?

I see you- your eyes cold as ice
You wear their uniform
You pull the trigger
Watch without a shred of remorse as I fall

The blood pours from my gaping wound,
My life flashes through my eyes- I see my daughter,
My body drops,
You’ve slain an enemy,
Am I the enemy?

Will you remember me?
As the light faded from my blue eyes?
Will the memory of my scarlet blood pooling haunt you?
Or will you never give me a second thought?
The man who you murdered in cold blood,
Am I the enemy?

Arthur Sr And Charles:

A valet should not capture all his dreams.
His fate should lead him to a wealthy bride.
But no one could deny the fact, it seems.
Love had taken a quite different side.
He kept him by his side for his whole life,
Charles meant so much to him, he thought it right
Forsaking both his children and his wife
To be with him who made Arthur feel light.
The obsolete servant- and a true love;
Occupied all of Arthur's waking days.
He seemed as though from the heaven above
With a smile brighter than all the sun's rays.
The man was his and no one could deny,
That Charlie made him soar, as in the sky.

Authentically Frankie:

An obsession with Barbie dolls and with cutting their hair;
Not with Ken nor with Bratz Boys, although there.
I feigned that I just
Had a gender imbalance amongst my toys.

I did not; I just didn't fancy boys.

The Lingerie section at Primark
And watching period dramas.
My eye irresistibly drawn
To the female form alone.

My mother warned me-
With love-
That this would be
A lonely life.

I hadn't understood what she meant then
My friends seemed to be an abundance of queerness.
But now I know that we are the minority
And yes, that breeds insecurity.

But being able to say those two words
And for it not to be a rumour whispered about anymore Felt so freeing that I'd take any askance looks and Slam the closet door. Behind me.

We've come leaps and bounds since
'Dyke' was shouted across hallways
Or 'Lesbian' was a dirty word
But 'that's so gay' is not far enough away

To forget that we all said it.
Even me.
But my mother chastised me.
That Goddess-
She
Defended me before I truly knew
That I was also offending me.
Five years later and I'm out and proud
A member of the community
And I've never been more happy
Or more authentically- me.
Frankie.

Begrudgingly Evolved Identity:

I thought I knew who I was then.
Straw boater, Felt Hat, green and red.
Black school shoes for summer,
Red for winter. Hair up at all times.
A child. A blonde. A 'maths genius'.

Then I failed my Eleven Plus.
I joined IGS. That defined me too-
Grey pleated skirt, blazer and a tie. Blue

In colour but also mood. Intrusive
Thoughts entered my mind. OCD escalated.
So did suicidal thoughts. I was 11 years old.

London 2012 had brought Identity and the Jubilee.
But I was floundering; terrified of what 'woman' meant
And OCD caught hold of me.

Then I spoke up,
Overcame it. I still have ticks, but they don't control me.
I finished school. English my new speciality.

I volunteered, applied for Uni and Got ABC in my mocks, worse than my A*-A GCSEs
But they predicted me AAA.
Unconditionals flooded my way.

Thank God.

My EPQ and NEAS brought success and loud hoorays.
But tears overflowed when my exams came back BCC.
Stupid really considering that I had my place at Notts
And it wouldn't impact my future, nor my PGCE. But I wept and then clung to remark denial, needing a way to smile.

But now I accept that A Levels just didn't reflect my ability
And I will tailor my course to suit me.
Uni is less cruel than Exam Boards;
I have higher hopes.

But I've gone from celebrated to mediocre
Because of three letters on a piece of paper and it's fucking
Disheartening to know that was all they cared about.

Never me.

I guess it figures.

But friendships end, families are distanced- cities apart.
And you struggle to piece together your broken heart and fractured self-worth.
All the while shaping, carving away at the notion of you. And your

Bigger Than The Box

Books lead me to poems and then singing but then there's history and Bonnie Prince Charlie and Fassfern and the Gothenburg. Perhaps Weymouth at Summer and the sea, you see-séance. The Séance Royale of the French Revolution. I'm Yorkshire born 'n bred and a Sagittarius. There's the Power of Three and friendships; the Wills' and the Sharps'. Lovers and Saumur, Cancer Research and British Heart- hearts not parts and books and my community- LGBT and Ilkley. On Ilkley Moor Bah Tat and all that. It's bigger than the box.

Blank Magic:

It was his eyes that he had noticed first,
Across the crowded bar- not his fangs.
He only noticed them after- in the alley,
But he was too caught up in the moment

He did not care. He had waited so long,
To feel this wanted. He simply wasn't going to let go of it now. So he leaned in-willing the vampire to devour him whole-

Almost. But still in his subconscious wishing that the kisses would be ash coated instead of copper tinged. But, at the front of his mind was desire. A

Desire that triumphed over all love and devotion to a boy who'd never love him back. And even if he did-with the passion that the vampire possessed at that moment. A fire unable to dwindle fuelled by years of isolation hiding from daylight. The nameless vampire would bleed him dry; or at least Charlie wanted to see him try.

An hour later, they lay- on the cold wooden floor of Clarence Renning's attic flat-
Charlie propped up against Clarence's chest hardly conscious of the lack of a heartbeat.

Due to the icy cold arms that were holding him and the too red lips that were brushing his neck.
Meanwhile James sprinted downstairs, pulled open the front door and flung himself

Into the open arms of his girlfriend.
Sapphire Rose. Her bright blonde hair spilled across his leather jacket and as She pulled away from his lips, she grinned
Said, "I thought you quit- you liar;"
But James' lips had always tasted of ash
Unlike her ex Rence's who tasted,
As she did- of faint blood.

She craved for the taste of his blood on her lips but railed against it.
She could survive without it for now,
She would do it for her love, for James.

In another room entirely was Karla James, forsaking her so called undying love, for Stan Morton for a stranger with ice blue eyes and white blonde hair.

They had met outside James and Charlie's flat.
Karla deciding to lend her coat and heart to the girl with the bright red lipstick.
As she pressed a forbidden kiss onto those lips.

For that was the real Black Magic.

Bubbles Fill Our World

We must remember that we are nothing
Compared to stars, we are just a speck
And that's calming as we move steadily on our course
Like the planets orbiting a ball of gas and dust

We oft' forget the worlds
That surround us- seeming
As they do to be interwoven with Ours and yet they are so distant from us

Microcosms are everyday life
For most as they wake surrounded
By familiar faces, the same old town - view
Never changing like the sea as it crashes on stretching sands

Some claim to be the centre of
The universe and while improbable
It's easy to believe it when, in your eyes
The world does seem to revolve around you

Bubbles fill our world
Houses of stone and mortar
That enclose sleeping loved ones
Or the planets orbiting a ball of gas and dust

We must remember that we are nothing
Compared to stars, we are just a speck and that's calming
Like watching the sea move eternally and feeling small in comparison
It's easy to forget worries or fears if you think wider, nothing really matters at all

We oft' forget the worlds
That surround us- seeming
By familiar faces, the same old town - view
To be ours and yet they are so distant from us

Some claim to be the centre of
The universe and while improbable
Microcosms are everyday life
For most as they wake surrounded by familiar faces.
We must remember that we are nothing
Compared to stars, we are just a speck and that's calming
Like watching the sea move eternally and feeling small in comparison
It's easy to forget worries or fears if you think wider, nothing really matters at all

We must remember that we are nothing
Compared to stars, we are just a speck
And that's calming as we move steadily on our course
Like the planets orbiting a ball of gas and dust

We must remember that we are nothing
Compared to stars, we are just a speck
And that's calming as we move steadily on our course
Nothing really matters at all.

Cannot Be:

Being away from people that I love
On the most special day of my whole year,
I have regained my faith in heav'n above.
And can only hope not to shed a tear
For that would be truly selfish of me.
If only I could find that comfort here.
But I find this just simply cannot be.
I'll have a less happy birthday this year.

F R Wills
Crumbling walls caked in moss and ivy, like mascara stains running down her cheeks. Curved foundations to resist attack, just like her sharp hand-painted nails. There were no cracks in her defences, no arrow loops for my words to permeate. But there was no moat, and the drawbridge would have been easy to find, had I cared enough to search for it and cut the ropes away—forever. But that's Ancient History, medieval. I'm going through my own personal Renaissance. She can fall to ruin for all that I care about it. That is a lie. There may now be a moat between us, a grassy mound and a metallic grate. You can send out your Knights to destroy a Damsel such as myself. I will not try to break down the walls and defences that surround you. And I will only ask whether you feel trapped or protected or both. Because you left me as a traitor, to rot in a solitary cell. While you dance the Volta with your adoring courtiers on the flagstone floors that double as my prison's ceiling. The peels of your laughter setting me reeling and the reek of your hypocrisy flooding my weak lungs. Whilst you secure a future for your royal line and drag my name through dirt, I can see the future of your façade, I can see it fall to wrack and ruin and become overgrown. With fine lines and aching bones, your fortress and once worshipped visage—crumbled, faded. What will be their worth then, these so-called flatterers who follow your every command? What is money and fame worth when your body turns to sand? Will you remember me— at the final battle, during the final stand? Or is this just a fantasy that's gotten out of hand? There may never be a chance for me to put this into words, but I know that you were overcome, a conquest and crusade. I know that it's not fair of me to act as though betrayed. There is nothing wrong with exiling someone from your life; nothing innately wrong with causing havoc and in turn strife. But in the way you're crumbling— I can see the conscience there. You wish that you had treated me in a way that was fair. And yet that's not how these things end, and if it were that's just pretend. Because a princess of the realm, could never fall so far as to accept the hand of a commoner like me. A Castle's walls don't just keep out the elements, they keep her in captivity. So, if it matters anymore please let me tell you this. There is nothing to forgive; no feud to be dismissed. A Castle can be ruined and overcome by nature's power. Just like a summer's day is ended with a dismal shower. She stands there on the hill, framed against the sky. The towers rise above; all enemies defy. But—she still crumbles and will surely die.

Chocolate Bar

Aeroplane wings sweep me away-
My body soars like an aeroplane-
Up high in the sky; aeroplane.
I feel like a chocolate bar-aero plain.

Hunger wings sweep me away.
My body soars like hunger.
Up high in the sky; hunger.
I feel like a chocolate bar- hunger.

Jealousy wings sweep me away
My body soars like jealousy
Up high in the sky; jealousy
I feel like a chocolate bar- jealousy.

Christmas Is Not Christmas..

Christmas is not christmas
When you are alone
Christmas is not christmas
Without a family or a home

Christmas is just a day
Another gruelling day
When you are under threat
And those you love have gone away

Christians all around the earth
Are facing fear and disease
Not thinking of the birth
Christmas Day is lost to these

Everyone deserves to be happy
At the best time of the year
Don't bomb people at christmas
Don't make them feel fear

It wasn't them who did it
Not these innocents that lay
Craving a peaceful 24 hours
For their christmas day

Christmas is not christmas
When you are alone
Christmas is not christmas
Without family or a home

Cocooned:

Cocooned or larvae, and a leaf hanging off a stem.
That's what life felt to me back then.
It wasn't certain- a fine line between safety and insecurity.
The unifying and protective force was -as usual- me.
I felt as though the blue of the sky was the grounding element
Of a feeling that was at once frightened and jubilant.
Because you would both learn to fly away and leave me here alone,
I'd pray
That it would not be so.
And I'd cocoon you so as to let you grow.
I'd shield you from things you needn't know.

But at the end of it all,
I'll have to let you go.

F R Wills
Cup:

A cup.
It seems mundane and isolated.
And yet it takes me back.
To that room, and her eyes.
But they were a disguise;
A guise to mimic a deeper fear-
Of the unknown. Of people knowing.

Of showing my deepest secret.
A coffee cup crusted with the Remains of a Caramel Latte and
A fragile, flimsy plastic container,
Coated with a slight pink film.

Frappes were the domain of platonic coffee dates-
Not meant to be paired with real feelings.
A sugar rush- blood rush- blush.

And a heart beating against
A corset-tight ribcage
Almost tight-laced by surroundings and Internalised preconceptions.

Dread.

Dread and the dregs of a Caramel Coffee in a bone-thin china cup.

Daisy And Charlotte

She was her new Lady's Maid and her eyes,
Shone like the summer's rays on morning dew.
There was a kind of wonder in her sighs.
And between them a strange new longing grew.
She had to be by her side just to smile,
Exchanged sweet nothings when out of earshot.
Hours and hours together would they while,
Society would wish this was forgot.
Daisy's brown hair cascaded down her back,
Charlotte's straight locks wound round her fingertips.
One had pale skin, the other's skin was black,
Love beat the odds at each touch of their lips.
Society would not condone their love,
But it was sent from the heaven above.

Danger-Deep Water Ahead

The thought of my God's people, sends my skin peeling. I tread silent footsteps on the stairs towards my blissful sin.

It's hard to reconcile passion with faith while everybody's spitting holy water down on me-darkness; smoke seeping from

A hole in a rotten log.
Ambience is nothing but grass and fire. What about diversity?
A hanging basket of daffodil yellow

Sometimes beats heather purple.
Do you see? I feel walked over-
I cannot do my duty- I stumble on edges of labels and faith.

I am lost-not found.
Danger- deep water ahead.

Distance Murder

Stolen glances
Forbidden fervour
True love lances
Distance murder

Three letters
To define
'Peaceful faiths'
To despise

Closet doors
Mocking phrases
Societal flaws
Talks of phases

Pain invades
Hopeful feelings
Hate crusades
'It's just leanings'

The glinting knife
Hateful relief
When a life
Fills with grief

Blood pooling
Forbidden fervour
Hatred ruling
Distance murder

It's not they,
who take their life.
But those who fill their life with strife.

Blood floods from veins,
Like hateful refrains.
It can be stopped.
If hatred is dropped.
Until then, it will not end.
Don't be a murderer,
Be a friend.

Do You Still Write Just Like This?

I don't think, just write.
Then she's there-
full stops and speech marks.
It's not a conscious thing,
I can't explain it- a trance.

When I stop and don't Think but just listen.
The barrier clears away;
And she's there- my voice.

Maybe- transformed to another,
I can't help but love her.
She only exists in the pages- so she'll stay.

Until new minds see her,
and those deep brown eyes.
Is that how it happened- or is it just lies?
Do you still write just like this?

F R Wills
Dress:

She pulls it over her head,
Ignoring the dread. A fear surfaces.
Panic? Distress? Just a dress. But ‘There's no prospect of admirers-

Let alone lovers- unless you show some skin'
He said.

At night, under starlight- tigers come out
To play. Whether they wine or they dine-
A technique they refine- to manipulate
A girl who's merely a dress and a smile

In their eyes- so what's wrong with lies?
Isn't her makeup a lie too?
But their lies run deeper- their words spinning
Yarns that- like the frayed hem of her Little Black Dress- will soon unravel.

Beyond repair.
Is she thus forsaken- or will someone care?
For the girl- not the dress and the hair?

Durdle Door

Soldier
Brave; bold
Defying the waves
Rising from the depths

Deadly
Sea serpents
Patient lies
The ocean's wake

Web thin cracks
Aqua abrasion
Faults trembling
Beautiful destruction

Hollows expanding
Persistent pressure
Cavernous cave
Water whiles away

Scenic sight
Archway to Atlantis
Mythical mermaids
Realms out of reach

Doomed doorway
Fated to fall
Crumbled crag
Solitary stack

Broken stone
Litters the seabed
The dull stump
A faded memory

Helpless

Sitting there helpless,
'cause there's nothing
you can do.
When they're crying.

Wanting to stop
Those silent tears, wrap them up;
In loving arms.

Shaking with laughter;
But their cheeks
Are wet. It hurts and I can't help.

Useless-what kind of person are you?
Can't help them,
Can't even hold them.

So you clench your fists.
Make yourself busy.
Wishing to tell them,
How perfect they are.

In your eyes.
They can be so strong, but crumble at the slightest thing.

And all you want to do,
Is scream and shout.
Make them stop,
'cause they're tearing you apart.

Sitting there helpless,
Because there's nothing
you can do
To heal them.
Hope Is Just A Word; That Melody Makes My Spirits Soar

The gunshots still ring;
Like sirens wailing
Inside my mind
They fill my senses

The sound takes me back
To the shrapnel
And churned up mud
Of the battle field

My throat burns
At the memory
Of myself, shouting:
Until my throat was raw

No use,
They couldn't hear me
And then I felt it
Like a bubble bursting

Suddenly everything stopped
The world kept spinning
We kept charging
And all I could hear was the gunshot

The gunshots still ring;
Like sirens wailing
Inside my mind
They fill my senses

When I came home,
I skipped the celebrations
They sent the medal in the post
It's lost in some drawer or other

I lost it all
And they gave me this
This scrap of metal
Carved with a name that I barely recognise

I lock myself away
From friends; family
No one can see me
Like this

The gas burned my throat
Flames that licked
My voice -box
Leaving it dry

When I try to speak
It comes out like I'm coughing
Every breath I take-Catches in my throat

I used to sing
I sometimes wander down
The twisting alleyways
Of my memories and hear my favourite song

Or at least
I think that I do
It's only faint,
But the tune is so familiar -

That it could be nothing else
It fills me to the head
With morning sunrises
And glistening snow

Hope is a word
That I have long given up on-
But that melody,
Makes my spirits soar

And anything seems possible-
I'm back there
Next to the record player
Just letting the notes wash over me

I bask in them
Like they are sunrays
Warming my soul-
Pulling out of practice lips into a smile

I try to reach out-
To grasp the notes,
Hear them
Feel hope again

So, I go -
To the record player
And I put on my song
And let it spin

It turns and turns,
So constant-
That it's comforting
And I feel my body sway

I can't hear the beat,
But in that movement-
That constant turning,
Somehow- I can feel the rhythm

And I open my mouth
And I'm singing
And my lungs are on fire
But I don't care

I have to stop-
To drink-
But I start again
And suddenly I can hear it

I can hear my voice
And for once, the sound
Of gunshots and sirens-
Fades to silence

Replaced by the melody;
Replaced by hope,
I find the medal -
It may be just a scrap of metal:

But it's hope
And I just sang again,
And the silence-
That deafening silence-

Is finally over
Hope is just a word,
But that melody
Makes my spirits soar.

I Don't Like Flowers:

I was scared of flowers- Of how they'd taste,
Scared that love would go to waste.
But talking to you felt right inside
And I knew that wasn't something to hide.

So I told you I loved you and you said it back
But each time we met I'd a heart attack.
She frowns always except when with you,
She's open and honest and knows what is true.

I left you for safety, my closet, a boy.
I left you but god I hate seeing your joy.
And that's selfish, and awful. As I broke your heart.
But I wish I'd known then that we needn't part.

Because loving you, hugging you, kissing you too.
Those are the things that I wanted to do.
I don't like flowers, or the way they taste.
I don't like his flowers, I don't like his face.

Your visage, your words and the way my heart raced.
Those are the things that can't be replaced.
I messed up, I'm sorry, but I want you to know.
I fell deep in love with you during that show.

I'd watch you sing, transfixed and confused.
I hate that I could ever make you feel used.
You deserve so much more, than my closeted lies.
And I think that you've found her, I see it in your eyes.

So let's call it even, and smile in the halls.
I wish that back then, I'd let down my walls.
But that's not what happened, and that I can't change.
Because the bricks of our foundation are hard to rearrange.

I Feel No Love For You:

Wilde loved Bosie, and it made him forsake Robbie. I did the same for you, Wilde loved Bosie, and he treated him like dirt. You did the same to me.
Wilde loved Bosie, and it caused his arrest. How can I then complain?
Wilde loved Bosie, but in the end, he turned to Robbie again.
Wilde loved Bosie until the day he died. I do not intend the same.
Wilde loved Bosie and trusted that love. You played me like a game.
I have stopped my obsession and long for the day when I find my Robbie Ross.
But until then I know- that quite unlike Oscar Wilde and Lord Alfred Douglas-
I feel no love for you.

I've been a Volunteer
I'm related to Barons
I'm one quarter Scottish
I'm three quarters English
I'm an ex-blonde
I used to be 'cute'
I used to be fat
I had waist length hair
I've had a bob
I had an undercut
I cut five inches of my own hair off once
I've questioned my gender identity and realised I'm cis
I've gone weeks without shaving my legs
I've had suicidal thoughts and one panic attack
I have OCD
I have intrusive thoughts
I used to wear makeup daily
Then I wore none for almost a year
I used to be addicted to coffee
Then I went cold Turkey
Now I love it but don't need it.
I love books
I love films
I love tv
I love Musical Theatre
I hate sport
I like watching dancing
I like food
I like being slim
I like being strong
I like being healthy.
More and more so-
I like being me.

I should not pretend:
I saw someone today who looked just like she had done;
It was as if my memories had re-formed into a new being.
The truth is that I understood it then, like I never had before-
Why people move on without really doing so.

She was everything that I loved about you Without the hatred I now feel mixed in.
A reminder of a forgotten history of heart racing,
Touches of skin and the woman whose feet I'd kiss if she only asked.

She even smelt like you did or maybe that was just a fabrication
Like Christmas and home and beauty and longing.
I swore to myself that I wouldn't think of you now that we're far apart. But the truth is that

I've mentioned you far too much for that.
We had mundane conversation, but it was as if I was with you Again. Like before.
So yes, this was all fantasy and yes, she's a new friend.

But I know that I'll never stop loving you, so I should not pretend.

Ilkley Grammar School:

I can't fight the waves of missing you that roll over me.
I'm helpless on the shore as you retreat and leave me here.
We all wished for the end, but I cried on the way home;
Because you were mine for so long. Almost half my life.

I'll miss your crappy toilets, the one with the broken door.
I'll miss your slimy benches and I'll miss running on the Moor.
I miss your Physics classrooms, the pre-fabs and the Macs.
I'll miss the scummy swimming pool and the worn-down grass tracks.

I love the bleached smell of C floor of a morning,
And those hideous Common Room sofas
Where we sat, and she cried
And I ached; and the scary walk every morning.

I'll miss the lockers where I thought my heart would beat out of my chest,
Because somebody said I was worth more than the rest.
But more than that,
I'll miss the B floor stage and Teachers I loved best.

The school trips, the parties,
Watching horror films in the dark.
The lido at the end of term or Hanging in the park.

Going on platonic coffee dates or swimming in the River.
Those were the best days of my life and I'll never forgive her.

Myself, for forsaking all those days, wishing for the summer.
I forgot to cherish English class, orchestra, choir too.

I forgot all of the times
That I found identity in you.
I know that life has to move on and that I've done it all before.
I know that this University will become a new home for me.

But I miss Leeds, and Wetherspoons
and cups of tea.
I miss being able to sit and watch tv surrounded by my Mum and Dad, my family.

And when I see you, I swear and say 'good riddance' but what I mean to say is Thank you,
I miss you.

And I'll never forget the seven years that I spent inside your walls.
Ilkley Grammar School, you're not perfect.
That is true.

But honestly, I can't express
How much I cherish you.

It Has Layers:

It has layers,
Scruffy while writing. A cloud- a stop sign.
Temporary; ink on the carpet. Acorns, pears and figs. Retreating from beauty.
Rocks and leaves- a maple leaf and a mug, against a window pane. My trainers on hot tarmac. Retreat. The arch and marriage and commitment- improvement.
Roots but vibrato breathing-
I'm a sapling. How can this be love?
How can this be love?

It's Never Coming Back:

Your childhood, her friendship, the lost chance of love.
The chance to do it all again will never come.
You have to live with it. Those were your mistakes-

It doesn't matter if your cells have replaced themselves-
Your conscience persists regardless. You made mistakes.

Apologise, change, own that you were wrong.
If you want to be a good person, then you are half-way there.
You'll promise yourself not to wish away the hours
Like you used to- then find yourself staring at the clock-
Again.

Unconsciously wishing for time to pass, evening-
Weekend, holiday, Birthday, Christmas.
Suddenly a year has passed. Like it was nothing-

And though you experienced it in real time,
It's distorted now. Your intrusive thoughts focus on the bad.
Your ego emphasises the good. The truth? Somewhere in between.

But it's never coming back.
So, stop saying you've regrets.
They are futile. Just do better.

It's never coming back.
Your childhood
Her friendship
Your 'soulmate' is gone.
And the chance to do it all again...will simply never come.

Jade And Kathy

She was a woman who shone like a star,
And Jade had never fallen quite so fast.
She knew that for her she would travel far,
And that her worth was well and truly vast.
The facts were these, she didn't feel enough,
To hold such a Greek Goddess in her arms.
And so, she feigned to be aloof and tough,
Instead of showing Kathy her true charms.
The love that blossomed in them would burn out,
If neither chose to put their hearts to word.
But Kathy feared the fatal words come out,
While Jade found her fears to be quite absurd.
It took a year of isolation to,
Discover that the love they shared was true.

Life After Love

I don't love you
I swear It everyday
The words are natural
As your name once was on my lips

I used to worship your every word
Follow you with misty eyes
Smile at the sound of your voice Obsession

Jealousy burning
Crazed confusion
Do I wish for you
Or just wish you alone?

Do my feelings still remain?
Or are the butterflies just remnants
Of forgotten summer days?
When loving flew on the breeze

I still pair your name with I love you
I still compare your name
With mine

To you I compare everyone Perfect?
'The one'
was I blind?

Blissful dreams
Filled with you
Singing me sweet love songs
Holding me in your arms

What is love?
The pain that burns you
When alone confusion?
Is love eternal
Or just a game
Is faith a show?
Always played the same perilous perfection Wasted smiles flying is just falling slowly

True love always leaves you lonely

Loss:

Just when I thought that I had processed your loss, and comprehended a world without you in it,
On the tears came. And I can't believe you're gone. It's Entirely surreal that someone who was such a huge
Part of my life, my childhood, could just be gone.
Although we'd drifted apart, I always thought we'd speak again someday.
Last year I'd refer to you in passing and it wouldn't make me cry- but now it's Useless trying to hold back the tears as it would only render me numb.
More than anything, I wish that I'd swallowed my pride, and said hi when we passed
But hindsight is a fine thing, that no one can hope to possess at the time.
On the years will go. But I will never be whole again, now that my first ever friend has gone.

F R Wills
Lovely

Lovely, that's what she seems.
But truly, that's all dreams.
She tries, of that she's sure,
But at empathy she's poor.
Patronise you, she will not.
But just in case you forgot.
Lovely, is what she seems.
Will she fall for you in her dreams?
That's not the question you must ask.
Instead tell her you'll forgive her past.

Make Me Whole:

There are pimples on my arms that flare up in the heat.
I have two scars next to my left eye,
a large mole on my neck,
bags under my eyes and many open pores.

I have astigmatism, wonky glasses, love handles and cellulite.
My fingers are double jointed, and my ankles are weak.

I have veiny forearms and asymmetrical cheeks.
And don’t get me started on my giant nose.

My eyes are often bloodshot, and I cannot wink.
My feet are ugly,
and my toes are hooked and crooked

I have a big bum and small boobs.
The 2000s would hate me.
I can’t wear trousers well except skinny jeans.

I'm 5 foot ten and counting and have the hands of a man.
I've been told I'm androgynous
And I don't like to tan.

My hair is naturally a dull mousy brown and I have to pluck my facial hair.
Does this scare you?
Why should I care?

I do not shave my legs and I refuse to wear stilettos.
I've stopped wearing makeup everyday, and I don't go to the gym.
I don't eat pudding, but rest assured I eat my fill.

I stopped overeating when it made me physically sick;
A legacy of social eating from my childhood.
I had thought that eating was a battle to see who could eat the most.
But then I almost choked and could not eat for a while. I lost weight then. I felt great then. I'd already started to suck in my chest to look more like them. My skinny peers.

But then I grew up; had a growth spurt and went through puberty. My round belly turned to curvy hips and I felt truly pretty. Before then the best I'd got was 'you're not pretty but you're not ugly'. Praise indeed.

I used to detox to attempt to make it go away The food I ate countered by a pint of peppermint tea.

I forgot lunch or breakfast in favour of putting on my face. Neither of these lifestyles were healthy. I know now but this was my reality.

I donated my hair and then saw all my imperfections accentuated again. Then I guess I let it go.

I got unfit and overate and I didn't care a bit. Until I did and then I even tried out corsets And secret meal supplements for lunches.

I made unhealthy choices but then I discovered endorphins And it all changed.

Beauty is being healthy, I realised that then. But we have so much further to go. There is still so much pain.

Because girls are taught that Beauty is about a weighing scale and A label in a dress. And it is, I guess.

I cut off all my hair, distressed about my life. It changed the way people saw me. More than it really should.

I have longer hair now and plan to donate it again. I have a healthy lifestyle and I don’t plan to relapse again.
But I still think of it too much
The desire to be like them.
I still pinch my thighs and feel ashamed of my biceps.

But.

Beauty should be healthy
And about loving who you are.
Beauty shouldn't be a concept
Best seen from afar.

So, if you love a woman,
Don't say: you look perfect.
Instead say you are beautiful
Because of who you are.

Your looks may fade
But I will always see
The beauty in your soul.

And with everything that you do.
You help to make me whole.
Please help to make me whole.

Mapping My Life:

If my life were to be mapped,
The church would have to figure.
And a book store full of dusty paperback volumes of the classics
And modern novels alike.
My family would sculpt the contours,
My friends the mountains.
My anger would spark volcanoes,
Perhaps my tears would fill the oceans.
But you would be the focal point, the cathedral.
In the map of my life,
You would be the only landmark.

Mary Magdelene

They called her concubine,
But on gold she would dine.
She loved every one,
Of those who used her for fun.

She had no choice,
Without that dress, she'd no voice.
So she picks up the dregs,
Of satin stocking legs.

Recalls loves gone by,
as each part will surely die.
She writes them all down,
The tales of her youth.

Once presented as truth.
Not marred by folly,
on the lips of the holy.
He forgives me it all;

So I know I will fall.
His friends condemn me as whore.
But like never before,
I am absolved of the pain.

In his eyes, redeemed again.

Municipal Screaming

I sit at my father’s workbench
Elbows propped up on the wood,
I can see the frown lines that crease his face,
He has always seemed to look this way.

What does my future hold?
A life in the dingy workshop,
I will never prosper,
Never achieve my dreams.
They promised us equality, and this is what we got?
A life of misery, devoid of hope,
Whatever happened to progress, prospects
We have nothing.

I have nothing,
The anger burns inside me,
The hatred boils behind my brown eyes,
This must stop.

Municipal screaming,
Trapped inside us all,
Waiting to come out.
Waiting, but not forever...

I will never escape,
From this prison they call equality,
From this hell they deem perfection,
But some day- one of us will.
Municipal screaming,
Trapped inside us all,
Waiting to come out
Biding its time

My Most Beloved Hated Vice:

Memory is a rotting strawberry.
No beauty remains. Only confusion and decay.

Old selfies make me feel fat.
Either now or then. Or innately. Hiding it.

A closet-obese woman who obsesses over calories
And yet socially overeats. So that I balance at ‘curvy’.
Pear-shaped; child-bearing hips; hourglass-
Golden Age of Hollywood.

Except they weren't Size Fourteens.
And their curves came from girdles
Not saturated fats or sugar.
They barely ate anything unhealthy. Pointless.

We live in an era of Body Positivity.
We live in an era of Obesity.
We live in an era of Eating Disorders.

We live in an era where famines occur.
We live in an era of Food Inequality.

Some hail ideas of ‘wellness' and Plant-Based Diets.
Some live on a diet of Chicken Nuggets and Hamburgers alone.

Food to humans is both orgasmic and poisonous.
Excessive and absent.

It is my best friend and worst enemy;
my survival and my death sentence.
My most beloved hated vice.

No Longer Relevant:

Most days I can forget that I ever loved and lost you
And then I’m less broken than I was. But Recently I made a Photo-Album of old photos and You dominate them. It must be the same for you- about me.
What’s passed is irreversible, and I wouldn't change it now,
I wish that I hadn't lashed out, but you pushed me down for too long-Loving and loathing are not contradictions. They are closer than loving and apathy.
Losing your friendship wasn't something I experienced then, but the year before.
I still miss an abstract concept of you, though, and it fucking hurts.
All of the memories are marred with hindsight, like how you dragged me down,
Made me insecure and stopped me from singing in front of you while you
No longer relevant.

Not That It Ever Is

Plastic rice- lead to bulk up bread,
It's all the same story; it's all poverty.
The "general maximum" of France; modern day food banks,
All I know is history, but I can use my empathy.

The risky days- I chose not to eat, worried about the size of my thighs.
So ungrateful- when there's some without a choice.
I once developed an eating disorder
-not that kind- it's just that I physically could not swallow.
I guess I can use that to understand-feeling empty Losing weight-great.
But lightheaded- hair limp and greasy
Faded vision- legs giving way.

Not like my mate on Ramadan, not a fast like Lent.
But necessity- so empty.
She stares at me; cheeks sunken.
She looks like a supermodel; but she'll die soon.

She'll die if we don't help, it's not a choice.
Not fashion, hobbies, or juice cleanse.
Not that it ever is-she cannot breathe, her stomach swells.
And now we'll hear the mourning bells.

Except she doesn't have to starve- find some coins-
She's someone's daughter- we're all the same.
Just find it in you, don't refrain.
Help a girl who's just like me to eat again.

On Your Doorstep

The heather whistled in the wind
The waterfall crashed over the rocks
The sound of children's voices rang
The flag flew in the soft wind

The cottage stood strong
Windows thrown open in welcome
A thin trail of smoke rose from the chimney
The roses climbed the walls

Girls ran in the meadow
Daisy chains around their necks
White cotton skirts flowing
Bare feet wet with dew

A regiment came to the town
They mentioned a war
They called it the Great War
They said they needed help

They called for men to fight
No one came
They asked again
No one came

They went back to their homes
Never thinking of it again
That was until they came
With their loaded guns

Boots trampled the mud
The mud is all that is left
The grass decimated by tanks
The river bed stands dry

The flag is trodden into the mud
Only a hint of blue can be seen
The meadow is a barren battle field
The Daisies all are gone
The cottage stands in ruin
It's walls burnt to the ground
The only faint memory
A singed rose petal

They'd called for men to fight
No one came
They'd asked again
No one came

Photographs As Personality

I've been told
He'd bounce me
on his knee

Laughing and talking
But not understanding
A word
Or so he'd said

I wished for so long
That I would remember
That I saw photographs
As personality

But I never knew
Him, I never saw him
First year of school
And he was gone.

I was just a toddler
How could I have Remembered? And yet
I hate her for forgetting

For letting those Moments slip through Her tiny mind
Thinking Grandad would Always be there

I grew so numb
That I'd forgotten
The tears as I stood

At the gravestone
Getting the water,
Freezing cold
As it splashed back
At me
But I was numb
Not with cold
Then I cried

Because I had Nothing. To look Back on
No way of grieving

I guess I'd never Noticed the hole
In my life
Then I was bringing

In the washing
Carefully, removing
Each peg
And I realised

That he'd chosen
The house just for
The garden.
I looked over at the swings

That I played on
As a child
Or the wood
We'd burned in the Garden, lugging branches

In lopsided wheelbarrows
Over hopscotch stones
In uncut grass and the willow tree

That was cut each time.
The shuttlecock
Got stuck in it
In a badminton game, once

He played badminton
We'd been throwing stones
With the rackets
In lake Windermere

And the glare I'd got That's when I knew
How great a man
He must have been

I came in from
The garden
With its daisies
That hid nettles

And said
I should have Known him
He should have

Been a part of my life
Birthdays
Christmas
Everything he's missed

And I never even Got to speak to him
Barely met him
And my mum

She just nodded
And I felt
For the first time
The gap in my life

I've been told
He'd bounce me
on his knee

Laughing and talking
But not understanding
A word
Or so he'd said
I wished for so long
That I would remember
That I saw photographs
As personality

Pretty Looks:

I can see the light, and everything is clear.

She was never mine, so I have nothing to fear.

Loving her rendered me numb,

Like damp, sodden washing-

Just hanging from a line.

But now that the spirit

Has penetrated my system,

And liquor is coating my teeth,

Tongue and lips.

I can finally say that I'm leaving it behind me,

This duvet of memories that

I'm trapped beneath-

Suffocated.
I'm intoxicated

But I've never felt more alert.

I know that a lover

Isn't someone to desert

Nor someone to hurt.

Apologies if this hurts you.

I truly don't want to.
You can call me bitch behind closed doors
Or even to my face. This will change nothing.
I'll still cherish your face, and hair
And worship the memory, the ghost of you.
Because I can't just forget somebody who taught me to love.
I will try to forget you, but heaven's above.
You're the one.
I can't move on.
So, come on.
Don't lead me on, just so someone will still miss you,
When your pretty looks have gone.

Provide Me Shade

Dead leaves fall to the floor,
She is bare. Born again in spring,
She knows it. But she won't wait,
Until then- fall. Free falling.
Into a sleep, salvaging freedom
Of the past- at once calm and frenzied.
The forest rests, completed by the symbiotic melody of the forest's songs.
She's not alone any longer,
She's a part of something so much stronger.
The forest glade will provide her shade,
and when the bashful sun begins to fade.
She will come home.

Rolling Ocean Waves:

Isolation,
some would say
Is blissful, like rolling ocean waves.

But when you are the boat,
With white sails stretching
To the sky.
You only want to dock.

In a familiar harbour,
or secret cove.
To be surrounded by,
sandy beaches or pebbles.

For trees to shade you,
From sunrays.
That would fade,
Your paintwork.

All you want is a forest,
To be among those
You were stolen from.
Not rolling on ocean waves.

Because that is bliss,
In a familiar harbour.
Surrounded by friends,
far from rolling ocean waves.

I sing you a song
Of life so long
Of life so short
Of more life bought

For the price of a soul
She will make you whole
With sheer delight
The woman of the night

Hell would be bliss
Compared to her kiss
Icy embrace
Distorted face

Wish you could die?
You can't even try
Once you've sold yourself to the devil.

She has you now
In her power
That mythical woman
Of evil

Though there's no escape
It's a risk you will take
For one night with the woman of evil,
Now you've sold your soul to the devil.

Seas Of Silence

Nothing
You can hear nothing
Nothing but the blood
Pumping through your ears

And the slow drumbeat
That is your pulse
You become acutely aware
Of everything around you

Every creak, every footstep
Is amplified
So that it fills you
Echoing through your senses

Your eyes are sealed shut
And it's as if the world
Has closed in on you
Is orbiting around you

And it's cold
Silence - is cold
Like a vacuum
And there is nothing

And you are nothing
In the darkness-
Just a body
Curled up into a ball

Silence filling you
Up to the head
With nothing
With everything

Because silence
Just accentuates
Every other sense
And you can feel the world
As it spins around you
It never makes a sound
But in the slow drumbeat
Of the blood in your veins

There is a noise
And it's so quiet
But compared to the silence
It's a symphony

There is nothing more beautiful
Than the sound of the blood
Pumping through you -
It sounds like the ocean

Someone once told me you can hear the sea
In conch shells
But it's the blood

Rushing through your ears
It sounds like waves
Swooshing around
Filling your senses

Tides of silence
Wash over you
And the undertow
Drags you into space

And you are alone
With your thoughts
And the silence
And your heartbeat

'Wake up' they say
And you float
On seas of silence
Back to sound

Speciation Is Cyclical

Just as surface area increases and
So the surface area to volume ratio
Increases. I feel the heat flow
Out of me when I see your eyes

They say natural selection could Explain your eyes. Perhaps some Ancestor we share had eyes
That did not resemble our own

These would have prevented
This ancient's ability to get
What he needed- mates,
Food, territory. Out competed

And dead. Survival of the fittest.
And yet, no science can explain
The heavy yet light feeling
That fills my stomach when I see you.

Just as animals who live in harsh Conditions have thicker skin
I have gained one due to the Pain they have caused me

Body fat they need makes me feel Ugly. Not insulation, but lack of Exercise. My insulating coat is
My parka. My camouflage is contouring

To hide from the predators. Or the prey?
Or maybe I'm more like the desert cacti
Spikes to stop water loss through Transpiration or tears?

Stops the predators. My body
Can't store the water that spills
Over my eyelids somehow,
When I am sad but is just excess
The only extensive root system that I have
Is my family, not bringing water
Sometimes helping retain, otherwise
The reason for it's spilling.

Perhaps I've become adapted
For a specific feature of my life
Are the walls I have built my thorns?
My shy glances away nothing

Like the warning symbols or
The poison of the natural World. No, I warn them away
With my words or lack of them.

There was no lichen
To warn of the level
Of pollution in our love
I needed to have a living

Indicator of your sulphur
Dioxide lies. Invertebrate
Animals were not there
When you kissed me with

Your eyes open. Testing for oxygen level even as I gasped
For breath. Or perhaps it was the Non living indicators - temperature

Of your skin against mine. The oxygen level between our lips
The rainfall of our tears muddying
Our love. Evolving romance between Us turned to nothing. Survival of the Fittest. I know that genes gave us

The varied characteristics, but science
Got it right when it mutated to form

The humans we are. Completely Different in species to our simpler
Ancestors. Natural selection
Because of variation and

Competition. Just as I competed
For your attention and craved
Your varied smiles. Darwin.
Rapid changes that occurred

Due to our change of environment.
Mutated but still perfect. Separated
So we both varied to different environments
Eventually through natural selection

We grew too distant, too changed
Different species now. Even if we met
Our love would only come to nothing
- a barren love that could bring nothing.

If only I could have fossilised
The look in your eyes
But love is soft and doesn't Preserve well. Weathering

From another girl's lips. Not Even the claws and bones of
The arguments remain, they've Been replaced by the minerals

Of the mascara that runs down
My face as I let myself cry.
Not even a rootless trace
Or a footprint of our love remains.

Destroyed by the geological activity
Or was it the chemistry between you
That made you forget our history?
But maybe that's how life developed

Betraying the past for the sake of The future. A future with her. Not me.
Our love is gone now. Lost. Passion
Had long been extinguished. Extinct.

Changes over geographical time
Or her eyes, distance between us.
Survival of the fittest. Doubt spread
Like a disease with no vaccination.

Love couldn't survive the new predator.
She was a more successful predator
A catastrophic event, I could not call it
And yet, ever so slowly, I lost you

Our love died. It was no volcanic
Eruption. There was no asteroid.
Only her. Only you and I but not Us, separated. Speciation is Cyclical. Two populations -

Separated. A divide between our Love. Not only empty sheets. But
A mountain range, a river.

Genetic variation and the Natural selection that I could Not win through competition.
Alleles favoured her and not me

Nature selected her for you.
Now we couldn't love successfully
We have become far too different.
Almost different species. Extinct.

The Rainbow In The Rain:

There was a boy born to save all our skins,
His death would wash our souls free of our sins.
God loved him so but made the sacrifice.
So how can we then view his heart as ice?
God is so powerful, that much is true.
But there is only so much he can do.
The world can be both flawed and beautiful.
It doesn’t mean God did not intend well.
The fact is God loves each and every one
Of his children, every daughter and son.
God caused evolution so how could he
Judge someone based on their colour or creed?
God only condemns sin for causing pain.
You must look for the rainbow in the rain.

The feel of mud under my feet
Still takes me back there.
To the screaming, sirens
And the earth shaking throbbing.

Of my heart.

You see all that I could focus on,
Against the brown of the battle field-were his eyes.
His blue eyes were a beacon.

It seems insane that I'd fall in love in the midst of a battle.
But they were all I could live for;
His bright blue eyes.

And I think it was them,
That I saw- closed finally.
On the beige, muddied stretcher.
But I'm still searching for him.

I see him grow old without me.
So I stopped caring.
I threw myself on that mine;
and now I see him.

He's married, got kids.
But he takes out my Photograph- and weeps.
That's when I hold him,

In my transparent arms,
Kiss him again.
My boy with the blue eyes.
And the soldier's heart.
Too Caught Up In Her To Know It:

Loving you was terrifying to me,
I think that I'm scared of committing to Anyone who makes me feel I am loved,
Lest I begin to base my life on you.
It bloody scares me if I tell the truth,
To know that you once pondered on my eyes.
That you saw in me something to adore,
I'd never felt close to this way before.
You made me feel my heart was going to break,
I've built such walls, but you could knock them down.
So I made up every excuse I could,
To force all of my real feelings back down.
The truth is you were my very first love,
But I was too caught up in her to know it.

Turquoise Ocean Depths

Water floods your senses
And you float off into dreams
The feeling of it - smooth against skin
Lulls you to sleep and you slip away

Waves roll over you
As you lie there
Hair flowing like seaweed
Behind you - drifting with the current

You dive down
And feel the sandy seabed
Your ears pop and your eyes sting
But you must stay under

Flashes of red and silver Swim into your vision and sea shells
Brush your feet

The constant fear of
The deeper blue
And creatures
With sharp teeth and fins

But you still swim out
Not knowing whether
You want to Reach the cliffs

Or touch the horizon
But you keep swimming
Feeling the tension
As you push through heavy water

And as you
Come up for air
The sting of the sun and salt is glorious
And you feel
Like a mermaid or siren
In the turquoise
Ocean depths

Waves roll over you
As you lie there
Hair flowing like seaweed
Behind you- drifting with the current

Water floods your senses
And you float off into dreams
The feeling of it - smooth against skin
Lulls you to sleep and you slip away

Not knowing whether you want to Reach the cliffs or touch the horizon

Valley View:

All sat around that table we would eat,
Toasties and soup for my breakfast one time.
Greeted with tins of scones and all things sweet,
As we read poems out from books of rhyme.
The old stuffed sofas and cosy pillows,
A garden where I played in every tree.
It seems strange now, as the time apart grows,
That house was one such a large part of me.
And Valley View holds so many memories,
Of trips to York, Grandma Kaye and tea.
Scarborough with a pound of pocket money.
When there I truly felt that I was free.
The family meals, and enforced washing up,
Were a core part of my growing up.

Wake Up:

She takes my hand,
It all comes back.
I know I'm dreaming,
But I don't care.
She's holding my hand,
Our palms are colliding.
Why would I want to wake up?

Whenever You Fall:

Our culture emphasises sexual freedom. There's a lack of exclusivity and a fear Of the word love. But that's not healthy.

If you can feel love, which not everyone can You shouldn't stunt it out of fear That your heart will be broken. It will anyway.

Lovers come and go but you should always Be able to remember the heart racing, Skin tingling excitement of the fall.

If all you have at the end of it all, Are a string of hook-ups and heartless Text exchanges. No photographs, No feelings. Then what was it all for?

In the past, there was a restriction on Love. It was seen as something frivolous And not something to pursue. But the Human mind cannot be chained to that So- people had mistresses, lovers, Ran away with the footman.

Because love doesn't stay quiet For long. But our society glorifies Celebrity romances and yet Promotes a work life that Won't allow for love.

Love is seen as fleeting, A honeymoon stage and then You settle into domestic life.

Love shouldn't be boring, Although now familiar. Love shouldn't be cautious And held back, commitment phobic.
What is the point of a label
A ring, a home and a family
If it is not grounded in a Beautiful and precious love?

I'm asking. I'm asking
Because I had to fight my Own demons to even Get to this stage and now
I'm supposed to be Casual.

When my entire Life has been a lead up
To the first time I truly
Felt another's soul
Collide with mine
In perfect harmony.

People say that love is dead,
But it's not killed by clichés.
Instead it's the cynics who find it
All so nauseating because they think it shameful.
They call real love co-dependent. As all they feel is liking.

If you miss someone when they're gone,
It's called caring. And it's what love is.
I think we all need a healthy dose of hope
And idealism before we fall into a pit of Settling for less than perfection.

Love takes work so own that,
And don't run to the hills at the first hurdle.
Once you grow up, you'll know that Distance wasn't the problem but weak love.

Any love that fades, didn't burn bright enough to start with.
In an equal love, there should be no need to forgive.
A love based on looks is not a love at all.
So be careful, but also hopeful, whenever you fall.
Where I'd Never Lived Before:

It had been overwhelming, the door as a barrier, a barricade Between me and the sea of new faces. I'm an introvertprefer small groups. School was easier as it was classes, tutor groups, choir and orchestra. Then theatre companies and writers group and even volunteering. But this was new and although I'd been at UEA and made friends there- a summer school felt different to the real, immersed experience.

Flu, or just a bad cold really and not being able to sing like I had back home- at the top of my lungs except at choir but even then, it was restricted.
Writing, of an evening but missing the squash and biscuits and Christchurch from back home.

Sitting in lectures and suddenly feeling empty because I'd never be back there again; at Ilkley Grammar School. It's not that I wanted to retake exams-no. But the teachers, the hallways-my friends. I missed it all. I didn't think I'd miss so much about Ilkley or being somewhere where the majority can pronounce scone correctly.

The Language Lecture touched on the supper, dinner conflict but we all call it 'tea'. It's as if I'm all at sea

But I'm not far from the shore. There's land ahoy and I'm beginning to rediscover joy. It will take time and I will never learn not to miss Ilkley Moor.
But I'm learning to love a place where I'd never lived before.

Whom The Queen Adores:

The corset's bones dug into her abdomen as she sentenced him to death, Her favourite- the courtier that she had loved and lost, she had to do it. He had to die. But she remembered the tokens, the kisses and flowers. Courtly love, no more. But not less either. She couldn't bear it. So she focused

On the bones of her corset. Did this make her no better than her father? Sentencing a lover scorned for a supposed betrayal, an unfounded accusation. And now she had lost two she loved to the power of the royal sentence to death. So she focused on her corset and her furs and her lead clogged pores.

This was commonplace. This was the way. Better to have lost him than have him betray her and mock her. He was a traitor. But she would never love another man, he was the only man for her. Don't pity, All was not lost for the red haired empress! To lose the only man you loved is not to lose love entirely. And Lust? She had never felt it for the man. Was it worth sharing her power for a mere emotional bond? Feelings flutter and then fly away. Why should she give it up for him? Or any he at all? But her lady in waiting, with the spun gold hair and lips as red as the sky at night when the shepherds have means to rejoice.

She

Would be worth risking it all. So she took her into her life, and she kissed sweet kisses across her brow, but never her lips. She stopped at the lips. Knowing that she would break apart and let her soul be consumed, if she so much as brushed those rubies. She focuses on her corset, and her lead clogged pores.

For it is sinful. Whom the Queen adores.

Without Me:

My love, you once made me feel so special.
My love, I never felt I deserved your kindness.
My love, your eyes were the Reichenbach Waterfall.
My love, danger and beauty married in your laughter.

My hate, you once made me feel so worthless.
My hate, I never deserved your cruel words.
My hate, your jokes stung like sleet against skin.
My hate, beauty marred by unkindness. Ugly within.

My past, you have become irrelevant.
My past, I cannot forget the golden days. Now copper.
My past, your name is no longer cherished but abhorred. Painful.
My past, you are a danger. I hope that you've changed. I hope I have too.

Because, at times I was as cruel as you, I know that you have kindness in you.
I hope that you learn not to push others down and grow up some too.
And when this has occurred, I hope you find someone who adores you.
My love. I adored you and I hated you. But now I wish you a truly happy life, just without me in it.
