and the priests have forgotten my name my face my
everything

i am a stranger now estranged, detached from the navel of the catholic religion i do have a navel myself just one lonely, isolated navel uncleaned
unwashed with alcohol
i am unhygienic
avoid me i may contaminate you i am jose de la cruz convicted of bad faith
lost and hiding

do not judge me i draw the face of God everyday using my own
words
i am a mumble and a bubble do not mind me
i am still searching for apertures gasping for light simply wanting to be original not copying the bible away from the mob of those religious piteous copycats

save yourself as i also want to save
me.....
early morning
i am confronted with a choir of black birds crowning the fruitless mango tree fronting my window

RIC S. BASTASA
beyond this house where we live more or less ten meters away lies my neighbor's house painted white with a blue roof and magenta windows some walls are made of glass

honesty there is peace among us who are still on unspeakable terms

on good fences higher than ever
we have become perfect neighbors

there is independence when fire breaks
we are ready with our own pails already filled with stinking water

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetics.....

waste of time
but cannot be disregarded

sort of a stopover island where this plane
refuels without which it cannot arrive at its final destination

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetikos...

it is not tiresome
it is something that you do because you need to

it is a cure to a certain literary disease there are no rules now just pure emotions running over a brittleness of the

the mind
set on what should have been greater than thoughts built like a great wall stretching to something like an eternity of half-deaths

a string of bean-like probings somber, and sometimes even sober
yet drunk in some sense of a context

i do not really know if you are there
reading

it is not necessary to be read it is the release of what is stuck here like a bone of a fish
inside my throat

something that i hold for the night and having myself more than satisfied i let it go like it is some kind of garbage an excess an appendix

RIC S. BASTASA
when you begin to love this art you are into another possibility of carrying the whole world in such a beauty
and grace
in your own hands the possibility of drinking the ocean in your mouth the hatred dissipating away and love settling finally inside your heart

full of delight to such a wonder.

RIC S. BASTASA
such is a waste of my time and i regret this indulgence which to my mind has become my own self-inflicted torture as i have other many noble things to be done to glorify myself like some kind of a hero to my time and place

everything is just passing by everything is temporary we will not be here for all time we are just light fading water drops or some appearing rainbow and then quickly gone as though nothing significant had happened somehow i must realize there is this little benefit for a moment i am like a fruitfly alive on such a juicy rotten apple with a worm and a mold thrown by a child who is angry about his mother driving a car on a very busy road

it is this temporary feeling of anxiety that does this trick somehow it disappears when the last line is written as though a sculpture of a bust is finally finished and it is left there alone in the room smiling after the light is turned off and then the room is locked. it was not as serious as cancer stage 4
nothing of that sort it was more of having to see a buffered tab and then for the meantime that you wait
and the waiting is indeed long as the signal of the town's server is weak
you begin to scribble
and doodle like a toddler you write
whatever you think without being responsible really for what they will think

turtle, rabbit, monkey stone, thorns, banana river you have to make a link and understand what is this boredom
all about,

the rest of course
is nothing but porn....

RIC S. BASTASA
it starts as a quiver of a morning strands of light carry the sprouting words to the bedroom at night even in the middle of sleep words bloom into flowers perfume spreading in the darkness of my soul it becomes a habit a lifestyle an addiction of the divine shedding off some skin like an onion

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry And Politics And Law

to begin life again you stop being an artist

which means no poetry nothing about art for breakfast plain sunny side up egg orange juice and the job section in the news

poetry is instability art is being lost and weird there is no money in there but unnecessary emotion

it is not new stuff normal people you say talk that way

you are wrong
i have money, and fame and honor i landed in a high position makes decision about other people's lives and their properties it is the light of the day and the people that i meet that make stability

art fills in the gap to maintain a high sense of sanity poetry creates the music its cadence and rhythm make the march smooth and sound its depth has made the river navigable and its shores have become the comforting port of my weary soul

Poetry As A Ritual

poetry has become our ritual.

it is like washing your face
after waking up.

brushing your teeth
after breakfast.

removing the shoes
arriving home from office.

putting pajamas before going to sleep.

no, it is not watching tv to make you sleep.

it is more like, if sleep is slippery, putting on the table lamp and reading your work.

when it becomes everyday,
with everybody,
how can there be somebody?

we are simply looking forward to life.

as usual.

RIC S. BASTASA
discover that poetry are mere feelings, others who succeed at this craft have nothing to tell really, falling out of logic
and taking side with images
like a slide show of children's pictures with their overprotective mothers in fantasy land,
riding on teacups and having pleasantries with Alice in Wonderland,

know that poetry is a crutch, a dam of emotions, to protect the fields of corn
below the belly of the great river
of destruction,

you write more with a numb left arm now, the fear spreading on the chest, as the hour gets creepy, and threatens you with a sad goodbye.

there is a rush here
to take the bus you're late for almost every appointment,
it is raining and you have no umbrella,
you step inside
only to find that the heel of your right shoe is broken.

fear has more to offer
now, than love and lust.

and then, you keep on writing about it,
as though, words can help.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry Be Glad, Dance And Sing

despite the hectic schedule always there are reasons for a busy day nothing to loaf and not a crack on the wall for what should not have been done nothing to peep people are waiting outside deliberations without end but be glad my Lady dance and sing
as i close this room to dance and sing with you let the world spin

even without us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry Becomes Us

where does poetry come from?
from my heart? no, not at all times it comes from you, i learn it from you when we talk,

when you too, tell me about the lonely life in the village the slow sailing boat that you were taking, the silence of the lake and the occasional ripples from the mouth of a fish poetry is a social thing it rises from a fountain of humanity from a river where we take our baths from the rock where we dry ourselves under the sun you are never naked, but i would have preferred it that way

honesty is nice, but you have to sometimes pay the price i guess, you are afraid people of the past were not kind and some are still having a hard time understanding what kindness is what humanity is, what life is all about what poetry is driving at like a hammer to a nail poetry is a reaction, and you are the stimulus, on that push and pull, on that tagging and haggling we are poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry Blog

my daily poetry, a blog of nothing but thoughts of stone, petal, raindrop, a threadlike composition of colors and scents and personalized designs depicting mood swings moral, amoral or otherwise goes and goes like a train of thoughts day by day chronologically relevant trying always to figure out who am i really

it is not to entice or corrupt it is merely a signification of

here i am
are you there too?

no climbing
of ladders or blowing of horns
no choir
of angels or boasting
of this

oh my God
what a coincidence
you think
the way i think

nope, there is nothing worthy of my poetry
even myself

this write, all the poems but a poetry blog

and so by now express your angst

shout, rage, cool dude, subdue subdued

a stream of consciousness

the turtle swimming in the deepest part of this ocean

clouds like cotton submerging
to your pond

i watch, yes, let me watch i speak, yes, let me speak truly, i am not interested,
i write,
because i have something to write,
this destiny,
of i cannot get away,

yes, call me a rambling thought,

i am, i am, i am
it is all about, this i am, i am, i am, today, i am, i am feeling this heaviness and you sit in the dark corner, telling me, why do you write poetry, and yet here i am dying, and you do not really mind.....

i beg of you,
don't try to figure out, to understand, i beg

of you,
this is nothing, go away, go somewhere i am a cloud, i drift, i am this space groping for letters, a word will not do, i beg, i beg of you.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry En Masse

like bread in bakeries like automobiles from factories like pizzas in boxes for delivery like ordinary figurines for sale like drugs in the pharmacy like pineapples in the farm like apples in a basket like inhalers in the nose like manufactured gadgets spoons and forks and kitchen utensils mass produced without the romance of the personalized work the interaction of the mind with the body and soul must art be?

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry In Fibonacci Sequence

i listen,
to this sound tonight i see my
body,
i start from here, this syllable there is beyond this body, this face, there is this shape of my soul, its scent exuding, my aura beyond this is the light that my soul is wanting to reach, the sun, the Sun.
there is a word
it is first.
there is no change possible, it does not move, it is printed, it stays forever, here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry Is An Accelerator Of Time

i wake up at 3 a.m. symptomatic of old age and i open the PC and start scribbling whatever comes to my mind a memory a plan a stream of consciousness that i simply let go
like a flow of an idea like an electricity running inside
my veins

three poems
and then i stretch my legs and wriggle my hands and blink my eyes grasping for something new

now it is 4: 42 a.m.

how fast time can run
to a man as slow
as i am.
Poetry Is Not Just A Word In The Vocabulary Of Our Thoughts meaning can have a problem without a concrete equivalent.

a flower can only be a word and word cannot tease our senses if the petals are not shown if the sun does not reveal its colors of red and white and blue if scent is not smelled by our very own noses if wind cannot be cold if leaves cannot be touched if nerves are not tickled for what can a face of love be if not in the face you love for what can God be if your hunger is not satisfied?
what can our hands be if warmth is not felt in your very own palm?

poetry can simply be vocabulary if there is no dove in there that flies in the very air of your longing for what can poetry be if i have not touched your breasts kissed your lips
if we have not slept together that night when we are too lonesome lost and deprived?

how can i appreciate poetry in spirit there are bridges of the skin and flesh its rivers of feelings can take me there with you its fire from within, its rage from without.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry Is Not Just Feelings

i have long said that there is no definition to poetry
it is sui generis, a class of its own, a evolution of meanings and a transfiguration of words into substances beyond the limitations of our minds, if you say that poetry is feelings what is then those that we have not even felt and yet strikes us as poetic?

an enlightenment for instance a divine revelation handed in a dream in the form of metaphors what about those that strike us like a red wheelbarrow glazed with the rain beside those white chickens?

what about those live frogs in the imaginary gardens of our minds?

what about a new philosophy of life?
or the promiscuity of the glands?

there are no boxes that can contain all these in one container

let the poem be just a river going anywhere
let it just be the sea taking us anywhere let it be the waves to and fro arriving everywhere or what? you name it, you 'll have it.

Poetry Of Things

centric circles
my universe is not your universe i am a circle expanding and too i am a circle shrinking upon itself parchments of cloth mama's crochet patches of moments child's chilling chimera chimes of Chippewa a blue butterfly kept on moth balls, purple feathers, a white trunk a T-square, a picture of Nefertiti georgia o'keefe, a poetry of things an art, a form, a shape of pain, a mold of molds, we relate to this pain that clings to our feet like anklets. We are.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry Redefined

an attempt for something that you are not good at?

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry Time

forget work for a while leave the paper piles as they are let them grow up to the sky

let reality be a mountain before you
and let things work on
themselves
let them have hands and feet
let them have wings
and fly away

it is poetry time my heart is king and the rest of these fantasies
are nymphs and fauns

come butterflies
come stars
let them know that there are wings and light and fire and glitters and diamonds comes the moon shining this lady coming too early at noontime dancing on my table with fireflies and lies

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry To Me...

you open up like an umbrella
yet you are closed against the harsh heat of the sun....

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry Writing

how i can i ever stop when this act has become my life?

how can i ever tell you about sleepless nights?

my painful eyes, my bleeding heart
how can i ever tell you about these parts of me?

let me smile and laugh with you my poetry shall tell another tale and whichever is true, ask the wind and it shall tell you as my chair, ask my window and they shall tell you ask my eyeglasses and see what i am seeing, try to taste the salt on the floor,

they may be the residue of my tears

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry, Poesy, Ars Poetica, Erotica,

i am hooked to you.
i need rehabilitation in China, the bamboo rafts there can help, i will sail on the Yangtze river together with you my rudder on the shallow jade green waters,

i shall hear robins making love calls,
i am stuck on this trip lots of rainbow illusions colors in my mind
i am jailed in your arms my heart enthralled to this injunction

everyday i set aside other works, the plants are wilting and the trees are dying, my dogs are hungry
unfed
my chickens cross the fence
to feed on other grains

i am stuck in here because i like it here China can wait
the chickens may die
even my dogs
let them be impounded.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poets

the frogs of course love the sound of their own tribe

just like those who fuse their own vocal chords to form a choir of monotony  just like
the most common
bumping and dissipating waves of the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
she, too, dislikes it, because it gives her the feeling as though her head is taken off, makes her body cold so no fire can ever warm her again. One does not look on poetry as a closed work, the poems go on and on at all times on one’s head, and snip off a length.

You mush remember the homely definition, Poetry is the best words in their best order, words in their nth power.

Bony ideas, bloody nerves, held together by the delicate Tough skin of words...

Words...words...

I agree, I have never started a poem where I know the ending Always the ending is unpredictable.
Poetry is your personal Expression making it public, a revelation, a revolution of sort, you throw a pebble to the world.

In essence, poetry is an emotion, said, written in measured motion, And that motion is an art.

Drip pity, drip pity, drip drip drip drip

Like a dripping rain, from a leaking roof, while one sleeps To its rhythm.

A wording of highest thoughts, appearing as a Remembrance, it does not really mean anything, it is simply magical...

But be.

You make a poem, but the reader recognizes it as his own, But there is no accusation of thievery or plagiarism

A sea animal, evacuating to land, and now wanting to fly in the sky, that is poetry.
Making familiar things rare, as though they are Not familiar anymore.

Giving habitation to airy nothing.
Giving nothing to everything.

Giving a nobody a nice home like he is now a somebody.
The invisible, made visible, and the visible made invisible.

A quarrel within himself.
In his tranquility, he recollects powerful feelings, and give in To an spontaneous flow of giving.

That is poetry. Giving, and always giving, no taking, nothing taken.

I, too, dislike it at first.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poinsettia

showy shrub scarlet bracts beneath the small yellow flowerlike inflorescences

so beautiful to see but the drops of its white sap
may cause the blindness of your eyes

sad poinsettia
alone she prays
to the sun
to restore the sight of the man
she deeply loves

RIC S. BASTASA
Point Of View

gentle rain drizzle caress

water needles piercing earth

hushes of leaves and whispers

screams of the silence of the stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
we're in this undecipherable illusion

sticking to our
mind undecided with what to do

RIC S. BASTASA
Political Animals

You're a newcomer
and so you want to impress
me
that changes are imminent and that i should know that you are the best person to do the job and i must then support you

you babble on the misdeeds of those who are sitting there
and you must oust them so you can do much better

i am tired to all these

i have put mr. x and i have ousted mr. y

and after years
one has become worse than the other

there must be wrong with the system
which can change x
very much like
y, and y
has become another
bitter x

ahhh, human nature
who can ever trust one?

RIC S. BASTASA
Political Cannibalism

glass,
do not talk of honesty
there is none here
it is not a man neither is it a woman could be an eunuch that keeps things normal by not saying
anything
it is the silence that is honest
it is not her hands for they do what is not said anyway
so glass
do not give me that quibble
there is none here
not even loyalty welcome to the politics of survival
now
choose, eat,
do not think.

RIC S. BASTASA
in this country of mine there is so much politicking they want to know my color they want me black pure black

the other side wants me to be white unadulterated white

i tell them i want to have no color at all i just want to be myself like a neutral transparent rain water and all of them are angry i cannot please everybody i said but they do not listen

they put politics in the pulpit in the market even in the cemetery they put politics in the air and in the water and in the soil and even in the sub-soil the worms are getting political too and even the hawks and finches the pebbles have no choice but to go political too they are now in disagreement with the river and the bamboo trees

there is chaos in the mountain the waterfalls rage and then politics eventually destroys the ecosystem and the heavens and the purgatory now there is only hell.

this morning they put politics as breakfast on my table.
i decided finally not to eat any.
Polygonal Time....

the change
has many sides

it is not just a circle

polygons it is my truth

there is one that overruns
and there
are others that succor others succumb

filters like a comb traps like a net

explosive at times

blind, i hold on time like a rope

with a stone and a thud....

RIC S. BASTASA
Pond World

if this world is only a pond of crystal clear water the mirror of cotton clouds the intimate half of the sky if this world is only a matter of the moon sitting softly on the comfort of the marshes or some whispers of the reeds and an offering of beauty with the petals of the pink lotus and leaves opening to space embracing everything in a universe

i would not have walked away and looked for my star i would not have followed what the fingers of the sun hinted i would not have believed that somewhere at the foot of a rainbow lies my pot of gold

i would not have succumbed to the misery of the worms the tragedy of the broken wings

RIC S. BASTASA
there is something about you that i detest what i clean you make dirty all over again what i do not like you keep doing what i want to be kept you take it and display on the neighborhood for all of them to see you oppose me
my love is hate for you my life is death to you this time i like it how is wish that you must go
away
and if this be your philosophy then i must stay, i must love, i must sing i must keep what life is
till the end.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pondering About The Homeless Birds... the sounds of dislocated birds (homeless ones)

mark my morning, here,

far beyond, the mountains are denuded the trees are cut massively man's greed again, the caves are invaded for some kind of a need for bat soup, slashing, something of that sort, the saying goes, as God creates, Man destroys.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pondering About Time And Love

by appearance time is like a river in spirit time is nothing but
air
you breathe time
and become part of its history
love is a vast landscape it moves like a film inside
our eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Pondering Upon A Loss

sometimes i stop walking and rest under the shade of a tree.
i look at the clouds always shaping their faces.
i feel the wind always changing their songs and their directions.
i look at the mountain, high and steady, unmoved, unmoving. i transfer my gaze to the river, its job had always been to flow searching for the opening to the sea.
i listen to the chirping birds, i wonder how they fly and flee.
i look at the grass, still slowly crawling to cover the earth.
i ponder upon a loss and i do not ask any question. i dare not the sky, where the say the gods live.
i do not question the sun, its job has always been to shine.
i have no questions now, upon this loss, i have only submission.
i keep my emotions steady. I control my fate. It is my only job left.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ponderous

lips rest on the fist eyes nailed on the other side of the road crossing the glass boundary of the window

something crosses the mind focusing on the stillness of time that does not run for a while

on a standstill you capture an idea and then you shift your glance once more
to write the words arranging their placements like they are all about to perform a dance number

RIC S. BASTASA
Pongpong....

it is a nice feeling when Pongpong goes with me making the rounds of morning
always ahead of me
telling all dogs
to give way.

poor white cat chased towards the gate of its own
house

in the Park this dog is king.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poor Creature, You Are Not Effective.

unjustly treated
i decided not to leave

i did not dust my sandals.
i did not curse.

i stayed because i like it and i am not affected by anyone.

treat me unjustly i am still
myself.
Poor creature, you are not effective.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poor Man In Cyber Space

he got no
e-mails
or if there are any they are
all spams.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poor Man Rich Woman

as he kisses the bride the camera clicks, the shooter has taken a long time to forget and then forgive.

it is not love, it is lust. utilitarianism is not far behind. marijuana is a tool and here it is used to the most, poor man rich woman.

RIC S. BASTASA
Popping Out

people keep popping out
not surprising
they have been there and i pretend they're nowhere.

life is like that presence ignored
ignored
presence.

RIC S. BASTASA
without the numbers
and the name for what is popularity
then?

i like the privacy of incognito walking all alone
along the busy corners of the mall
taking all its own
time outside
tasting the sweetness of the park
and the familiarity with the streets

watching time passing by savoring the slow pacing
of loafing thinking and pondering without the shallow shrieking screaming demanding
mob
who for all you
know
has always cheated on you
and if you are not too careful
at the end
steals and destroy you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poquita

She was my playmate in the river
We swam together
We had no breasts then
We only have thoughts so clean

I went to the university She went to a far city
I came back to serve a town
And she is nowhere to be found

With her beauty and brain She can make a stately queen A lawyer, a doctor, a catch for men But she never was, as what I’ve seen

Mo longer innocent and fresh She has become a vendor of her flesh

RIC S. BASTASA
Porcelain Artist In Japan
	here will be no another man who was nice during the courting stage but changed
after the marriage
after all the good in her was taken away

her porcelain art pleases her now

she pours all the blood of her heart
in there...

RIC S. BASTASA
Porch *

Because it was what we thought was meant by family: Laughter.
A new house.
A party in the garden where the tables were filled with young faces. Who did not want this true and tender accomplishment?
This just reward handed over to the world’s honest men, its citizens.
Every house rested on its joys.
So when one of the guests nudged a glass when she was telling a joke which fell on the floor and broke, we laughed.
We were accountable merely for our own mistakes and committed solely.
And everything was part of the good story,
really.
How could we not love what it cost?
Crack on the marble floor just set, dent on a polished kitchen door.
A small window overlooks the children, one nimble,
one frail,
balancing
on the far edge of the porch.

*by

RIC S. BASTASA
Pornographic

it is all in the mind
the breasts like coconuts satisfying the hunger within the skin exposed to enliven
what is dying
the desire to make us see the color of the wind

to feel the other and see the rainbow links two distant mountains to make the waterfalls convert their rage into songs there is so much beauty in our bodies when we get naked

when we do not think that we are dirty and pornographic

Adam and Eve were not born with gowns and coats God loves them for what they are naked and true and with malice towards none to beauty they are one

RIC S. BASTASA
Portraits...

she lays there
her legs spread on the table like a turkey dinner

he kneels
and surrenders all that he has owned he breathes
and then takes time to take back what he has exhaled it is a picture of having to give and having to take someone may call it love perhaps but actually it is not what is intended to be

it is but a portrait and nothing else
it is still life
it is nothing but the connivance of the brush and the paint and the keeping that lies within the boundary of the frame

RIC S. BASTASA
Porumbescu

at night
the cry of violins permeates each nook
of this
tiny town,

i am inside
its tiny embrace
a dot
in the long sentence of eternal violence...

RIC S. BASTASA
Posterity? .....

you are sociable, articulate, you speak and remember, you are both a mouth, and a memory, and so you keep albums, black and white pictures, everything that your dad wrote, every piece makes you
remember
the greatness in us, of us, all about us, and i say, all these self-serving keeping, what are they for?

footprints in the sand... waves are eternally erasing everything, the activity is always covering

this is the origin of all that is new fresh and beautiful, we give way, they all come, we hide behind those furrows, we are underneath the sheets, we are the other last layers of those striated formations no one digs us, we are buried, some archeologists make the findings (sigh) we are not what they are saying how can we live for another 500 years?

tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Poverty

he is arrested today on a charge of grave threats against his very own aunt who owns a store selling rice and salted fish and sugar and coffee and eggs and mongo beans he has nothing to eat and hurt his back and cannot really walk straight like an ordinary man yesterday he asked a little help from his aunt for he was so hungry and had not eaten his breakfast as last night it rained so hard and his lamp went out and could not catch the American frogs on the pond that taste like chickens for his supper with his mother and two other siblings who are very hungry too and there are no more bananas and potatoes in their farm which did not yield a good harvest of rice as the cost of fertilizer has gone more than twice their price last month and they have nothing to spray to kill the army worms and the clerk asks if they have no chickens and there is none as all died because of bird flu that came too early this year and he was too angry because his aunt would not give them a little rice or at least let them borrow for the meantime that they have no work because the municipality is laying off all the casual employees that dig the ditch along the muddy road and so he threatened his aunt as he was so hungry and he took the chupa of rice and a cup of mongo beans and a piece of salted fish for home and so he is arrested today not just for grave threats but also for theft he is the thief that hunger and anger have successfully molded before our very eyes that know no pity no compassion, and we shall now ask:

what is the verdict your honor? is he guilty as charged?

RIC S. BASTASA
Power

power has built itself permanently on citadels you, an ant, cannot take the place of their monuments,
look for wood, conspire with the friendship of the termites,
the timid worms,
live on dungs, and begin the song of sorrow time listens
the storm comes,
tsunamis multiply,
earthquakes, and
floods,
you, the ant, takes only a leaf
to survive,
a grain of rice
will be too much,
a dew for survival,
soon the citadels of power crushes to the ground including the king and queen and their servants,
they all rot,
and you, the ant,
and termites long hiding on rotten wood,
and worms surviving
on the humus of dung shall build
for a beginning,
a hill, a path,
a throne of dung.

RIC S. BASTASA
Power And Children

it does not know how to whistle anymore that which a mother does when she does not know when father arrives during the domestic wars among brothers of the land it is arrogant and it does not know reason it kills and hurries to hide its sins murder and betrayal

without blinking eyes without trembling hands there is only the constant triggering bullets flow like water from the rocks on such sounds of horror the faces of men are shaped the hands of children fragile as a rose

disappear

RIC S. BASTASA
Powerful Star

I see you powerful star in this vast universe How you behave as a sweeping meteor Ravishing me with your glare and air How I hide away from your danger How I am amazed by your absolute power

You have taken me in contempt I am but this dust in space that You want to take and be nothing But a dust in your tails

You chide me you see me as nothing You spit over my being so tiny so insignificant But mind you powerful star I have you always in my mind Waiting for the Big Bang when at the end I can be the Sun and you beside me What can you be but be so distant At the end, so trivial so insignificant!

RIC S. BASTASA
Powerless...

he has steel hands
arms are made of platinum poles the brains from specialized computer chips he is as sharp as an unused sword but he is useless in this struggle for power

last night the old witch betrayed him
a single lock of his hair is taken by that woman of use, now, lies another Samson defeated

but not yet dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Practicing Loneliness

it is the i in we
that has attached like epoxy, indistinguishable like pinch of salt to water

sugar to milk and xanor to beer

tonight i will be alone sitting on a chair facing the outline of the hills light fading out until what i see is only the flickering stars above a sea of darkness

i will feel the chill of the cold night a silk of mist hovering over my skin it is the i, away from you and the we dissolving finally decanting the i,

purifying the i in me soon, i must learn this trick of being one with me in the darkness, in the cold, i keep myself warm.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pragmatism

it goes like this,
what he taught me when i was small

son, it does not matter which comes first the chicken
or the egg

what matters son is what makes us full

pragmatismo

dili na importante
kon unsay nauna
itlog ba o manok
ang importante
kon unsay makabusog..

hindi na mahalaga
kung alin ang nauuna
itlog ba o manok
ang mahalaga
ay ang nakakabusog.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pragmatism And Utility

it does not really matter for the utilitarian if God exists
what matters most is:
if God works

RIC S. BASTASA
Praise

praise lies within the confines of our fences something beyond this fence lies where praise is not a word
it is so unnecessary

something beyond us lies this something waiting
looking silently, he deserves it but does not want it he gives it
but does not want any return of it he smiles at us

the way we haggle for the stars when what is perfect is starless when what is complete is just
space

what is enough
light
illuminating this lock of hair and he calls it perfection

RIC S. BASTASA
Praise Be God In The Beautiful Morning

the grey sky turning golden fishermen arriving with fish on their nets the baby asleep in the cradle mother sweeping the leaves under the trees
children washing their feet and faces boat sliding on the clear water of the lake the buds unfolding
mongo seeds sprouting ducks on the river
geese in the air

praise be God for this beautiful morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Praise God On High

Praise God on High
He sits there and knows why
The reason for each housefly From fungi to the pie Even those far and nearby

Praise God on High
The Owner of the Sky
The sweetness of July
The secrets of my Sigh

He knows them all
He sees my fall
With love install
I hear no yawl.

He is what nature's sprawl
The snowfall, the menthol, the cat call.
My faults he does not recall Everything in Him is so beautiful.

Praise! Praise God on High For He has the Perfect Eye.

RIC S. BASTASA
Prayer Of The Starfish

star from heaven
thus prays the fish
please do not ever fall.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Prayer To The Magician.....

a child may wish you were here pulling a white rabbit from a black hat tearing newspaper into bits and with the sleigh of your hand convert them to dollar bills flowers from your wrists rainbow from your fingers rivers from your mind how did that rod turn into a snake?

someone is disgusted away from the bravura of the masses his silence you cannot hear and all he wishes is that you disappear from there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Praying For The Return Of Pleasure

when love is gone
to another island crossing the sea
i pray for pleasure
i light a candle
and offer the flowers for the grand icon

the winds are strong there is storm coming and love may not return the icon smiles

for the truth is when love is gone
it is gone
and there is no promise that it will return

in the eye of the storm love sinks and cannot come back
anymore

there are no reasons for separations
when love is broken and beyond repair.

RIC S. BASTASA
Praying For The Sky

the decision to change
for the better-
like getting rid of a fat body and having a new athletic fit one

all for health and all for beauty and all for the good guts inside us what is it like Sammy?

I am not a snake
but i read it
and then i know how it feels to molt like one with all the accompanying pains the moment
you shed off
skin.

in this ponderous moment i am shedding off an old self and like a tree that sheds of all its old leaves you do not have to tell me how i look a tree without leaves all fingers now bare, thin, dry,

but praying for the sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
Precipitation

(This comes from the wikipedia in a research made by my Nephew, a high school dropout, who still has a year of Thinking whether to go back to school or not, and he is no Good writer, simply cutting and pasting this report as follows :)

In meteorology, precipitation is any product of the condensation of atmospheric water vapor that is deposited on the earth's surface. It occurs when the atmosphere (being a large gaseous solution) becomes saturated with water vapour and the water condenses and falls out of solution (i.e., precipitates).

Air becomes saturated via two processes, cooling and adding moisture.
Precipitation that reaches the surface of the earth can occur in many different forms, including rain, freezing rain, drizzle, snow, sleet, and hail.

Virga is precipitation that begins falling to the earth but evaporates before reaching the surface.
Precipitation is a major component of the hydrologic cycle, and is responsible for depositing most of the fresh water on the planet.
Approximately 505,000 km³ of water falls as precipitation each year, 398,000 km³ of it over the earth's surface area, that means the globally-averaged annual precipitation is about 1 m, and the average annual precipitation over oceans is about 1.1 m.

My nephew is a mediocre student A moron who hates school And I do not really mind It is his matter of a find

He can have all his quick dives And consume all his nine lives Nine night lives of a cat If he dies or gets into trouble I remain his loyal uncle,

But so much so for that I will not be talking about him

I will be talking about The importance of precipitation

The factors of precipitation The precipitating factors

Why my friend in the Hall of Justice Swallowed a bottle of pesticide In the comfort room
And he instantly died Leaving a wife and five kids Leaving the vacancy of an interpreter

Why did he ever do that?

Was his soul an atmosphere largely A solution of bad memories of past gases And becoming saturated with All his present unacceptable gaseous Solutions in his being He has Become saturated with a devilish vapour And the foul liquids of his minds Condense and fall out of solution

Precipitating into a giving mind Surrendering like a hopeless enemy Going towards enemy lines Raising a white handkerchief

Here comes another loser Here comes a surrenderee

Giving up
He becomes so saturated
And so he commits himself to such a simple term on which we call commonly call a Suicide?

Could it be that denial is such a bad gas
And the precipitating factors of indifference From those inhuman around him

Made him finally fall as A dropping of another rain a precipitation which we shall now Assign in such a very simple term as Self-destruction.

RIC S. BASTASA
Precisely....

the day comes when we desire nothing and on that day
you become perfect

precisely, no one is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Predator And Prey....

the black cat
sits by the window cleaning its paws
with its red
long tongue and
on the other side
of the house where a tree is fronting a tiny brown sparrow is learning how to fly and the cat stops licking its paws and looks attentively to its future prey and the tiny sparrow sees it too and with all its strength flies
away toward the blue sky far away from it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Predator Prey Early Morning

i could be an early bird today that catches no worm

but i do not really mind being early is enough

having to find something to eat because there is nothing yet to prey upon a chance is another

at most an early bird does its best one time after another

time

till it is finally eaten
by another early predator

who makes the same complaint

RIC S. BASTASA
Pre-Departure Dialogues...

now my words
have become an ordinary conversation at the pre-departure lounge of the airport everyone is anticipating home minding the number of their luggage and checked-in baggage there are talks but no one takes them seriously
on the level of superficiality...

RIC S. BASTASA
Pre-Departure Poem 1

my eyes ache and i am afraid sooner if my hardheadedness persists a little longer i may become one blind old man begging for mercy and looking for love justly enough did you say that love is blind that true lovers cannot see that mercy is grace?

my heart aches and soon enough i may become a heartless old man remembering the pieces of broken hearts and shattered memories scattered on the floor
of my past

mirrors gleaming with light reflecting many faces with eyes flowing a river of tears

RIC S. BASTASA
when i am gone
please do not think of me because frankly speaking and this may hurt but this is true
and may liberate you
as wont
would have it let me tell you
in the honesty of my hands stretching out
for emptiness

i do not think of you
i will not miss you and don't cry don't scream you are a fool loving someone who never love you

is it harsh? yes it is.
i was there not just once but many times

i am angry at yourself
i am angrier to myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pre-Departure Poem 3

did the white rose know that the thorns
on her side
just below her petals are the ones that make her appear
pure and beautiful?

it is the logic
of contrast and the art of elimination that work out well
in making us give the most of what we are
and not the idealism
of the category which only says what we ought to be
we become because of constraint and necessity
and so here we are always on the reconstruction not because of the fulfillment of desire
but because of the prosperity and intensity the industry of pain

RIC S. BASTASA
Predicament

On this red spot
I mark my plight

A halt
A hole

A standoff in difficult times I want to go, but you are rising

An impasse
A white waving handkerchief

Your tears are holding me Like clutching claws.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pregabalinsky

to remove the pain
a man resorts to the promises of pregabalinksy it is the land of the drowsy that keeps you at peace with the world, birds flying in slow motion the white cabinet stands there like a guest in familiar terms like a penguin less the sea caps hope settles on a soft sofa dressed in sky blue imagining it to be a cloud something in you floats and settles elsewhere on your bed of roses, wet with your tears you want to connect things toe to toe like a logical arrangement of your ideas before or was it long ago, when you finally lost the validity of your arguments like trees shedding off leaves breaking its twigs with the slight touch of the wind from the North of your sun to the eastern part of your moon

'there is no star' you point to a black space embracing you

'yes, there is none' the darkness takes off its cape and dresses you into invisibility, into insignificance as you close your eyes in gentle surrender. You are a star now meteor, taken into another galaxy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Prelude To Kafka

one morning when i discover that i have turned into a cockroach
you may write
what i will do you may theorize that since i will be to shy to go out of my room just like what your character did then i may lock my room, not eat,
and only talk to my sister
that i may soon hate my father
and will soon forget my mother
i can relate to all these based on my readings
but i can see what i can do when i stink and soon fear light when even the air
which is suppose to hush a lullaby
now hurts too
just like the rest of those who are close to me
and turn themselves into disgusting monsters more disgusting
than my being a human-cockroach
you know very well
that i am brave enough to force the door
to the other room
the one that none of you has ever entered
i can use a knife
an ax or a hand grenade i can even use a bomb to break this back door open
i am brave and will always be restless on a broken wing
of a bird i can always still manage to fly
away.

RIC S. BASTASA
Prelude To Love

she undresses herself
facing the sun in the window inside this house of green curtains
she shows her back
and takes a glance at me turning the left side of her body and then she smiles

RIC S. BASTASA
Prelude To Love Tropicale....

then there is this quiet
sunset in a transition darkness is sprinkled with bright stars

tonight is lovelier
the moon is a boat sailing on a dark cloud kissing it is a lonely star under these heavenly bodies is a nipa hut where two shadows fuse against the light of

a lamp blown away
by a man's whisper
to an eager ear

RIC S. BASTASA
Prelude To Love Upon A Rainy Moment...

The rain falls heavily now upon the plains
the shadows of the hills turn foggy
turn foggy
turn foggy
the air is cold and wavy
wavy
wavy
upon our hair
we hear
we hear
we hear
the whispers
the whispers
the whispers
of love
of love
of love
incoming
incoming
incoming

the door is
the door is
the door is
excited to be closed
excited to be closed
excited to be closed
and the drapes
and the drapes
and the drapes
and the windows
and the windows
and the windows

light in the room
light in the room
light in the room
desires
desires
desires
to be dimmed.
to be dimmed.
to be dimmed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Prelude To Seeing More...

it is when the eyes fail
that you
begin to see what these really
are......

RIC S. BASTASA
Prelude To Sleep....

at night as i begin another journey towards a dream
i hear the earthworms
singing

RIC S. BASTASA
Prelude.....

it does not tick
there is no more click if it has
it was only a little bit lighter as dust in my cheek
the old feeling that old craving is gone
and now or if not now tomorrow
before the sun comes out in the open
i shall state my freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
Prematurity

it is still an early day the sun has not shone that brightly don't praise the day yet the evening may be as dark as a pit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pre-Menopausal Drama

when you leave
your panty on the white tiles of the bathroom
and a cockroach
comes along and sniffs it
i, your husband,
shall pick it up
and wash it well,
i think, i must be the one to understand you more
in this period of your shaky existence when all the love is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Preoccupation

the whole day is a Moslem holiday here and instead of watching a movie or going to the usual white sandy beach and have a sun bath

i preoccupied myself with reading cases about void and annulled marriages on so many grounds from alcoholism to genital incompatibility to homosexuality and psychological incapacity until my eyes get so tired that i decided to lay my body on a bamboo hammock and have my own kind of swing like i am a wall clock taking my own rhythm and beat there are so many of them in my country too those who think that marriage as an institution has become a mental asylum with numbered wards and screaming patients straitjacketed to traditions and religious convictions

but enough of these stupidities and helplessness

for the meantime i will read the latest poems of Carlo Betocci something about summer and the shadows of mulberry trees

about images that must comfort us in these times of my doubts and feelings of loss.
Preoccupied...

the paths mend
to themselves
grasses know how to sew what familiarity is torn the rivers too know how to wind and unwind
they curl upon
the banks and
carry those lonely
rocks
the tree that were cut are quick with their buds
the clouds that flee
come back with glee
the horses that die
always replace what is gone
with a number of their youngs these changes
mesmerize
these new views
hypnotize
and those unwary
and preoccupied
do not notice that we have long been
gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Prescribed Thought A Prescribed Mode Of Action

There is no such a thing
There is no such a thing as a most natural way There is no such a thing as a most natural way of expressing a thought There is no such a thing as a most natural way of expressing a thought a mode of action
There is no such a thing as a most natural way of expressing a thought a mode of action a form of logic After so much thought After so much thought about loneliness It becomes apparent Logic can no longer be relied upon Logic can no longer be relied upon as a base for studying the structure of language The structure of my poetry
The structure of my soul
The structure of my God

I dare think
I dare to know
I dare to think
I will not be hardwired from the thinking of my birth rising from some dogmatic slumber.

RIC S. BASTASA
Presumption Of Happiness...

she misses
being lonely,

she quips
and plunges
in Bahamas.

RIC S. BASTASA
pret my dog is happy
doesn't milk her puppy she lets them die
and does not lie pret my dog not a rodent uncaring and independent she kills her puppies and lives like the hippies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pretend That It Is Not Important, .... to something that you do not want to lose give it

its non-importance, take it for granted, no one minds it, no one likes to take it,
it stays,
no one is interested, because you make it not interesting, so? you'll keep it for years and it will be yours,

what we take as important they will always consider taking it away from you the secret is in the pretenses when you are ready to dispose it everyone begins taking other things from you this pain thing, this motive to inflict pain this is what they always want to do.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pretense

if you only cared
as i do, you could have appreciated
my little pretenses
they are not the usual inconveniences
they are the tickles
the taste of pickles
the scent of ripeness
the smoothness
of love
what delights us
we must say no matter what

reality that hurts
what use?

time is too short for truths that kill us time lies within our own points of view

now, ride in fantasy come with me
for i am yours

this is  pretense
this is happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pretenses

this is what they want to see of you

a handsome face, strong arms, clean fingernails,
broad shoulders,
determined eyes that look always forward scented ears
the best feet and
good standing,

to please them
you give those parts to all to them and what you will get in return is the
applause,

everybody is happy,
except you,
it was not you,
it will never be you, you are in truth not the one that you really are you only comply what what they want to see and surely they will get them they will get what they see

you go inside your room slowly disassemble yourself all those beautiful parts

a handsome face, strong arms, clean fingernails,
broad shoulders,
determined eyes that look always forward
scented ears
the best feet and
good standing,

you lie in your bed without looking at the mirror it takes only the rattling of your bones to tell you who you really are then you close your weary eyes and sleep

the dream will join you in these truths

RIC S. BASTASA
Pretenses...

what you see
is what you get that is the policy
here

there are errors
and you get them but i ask you
not to stop

correct them in your mind and then move on to the next page

it is blank and you must now have to write on your own

do not repeat the same errors
hold the flashlight and switch it on

let there be light
you must say so
and pretend that you are God.

RIC S. BASTASA
pretpret

romantic pretpret
poodle under my feet
wanting to sleep with at least a part of his body touching tenderly
a part of my toe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pretty

pretty is sweet and rose scented i go only for the hugging and the caressing she licks me though on my feet and toe but no matter how lonely i do not sleep with pretty

i still have fears of the fleas

RIC S. BASTASA
Pretty Rich

betty flies
to korea
with hubby dave just to watch the bursts
of autumn

RIC S. BASTASA
Pretty Smart, White Liar.

there is in them which we will never have, perhaps fame, but we do not really need this,
perhaps only perhaps there is in us which they will never have,

perhaps, only, perhaps,
but we keep journeying through the night and when we survive the darkness and soundlessness we become fierce as ever it is this anger that feeds us into life, but which, we perhaps, keep suppressing love is love and it is what we say even if, perhaps, we do not really mean it, perhaps, anymore.

pretty smart, white liar.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pre-Valentine Lines For My Love

surely my love, my only one (believe me, you are my only one) i enjoyed every moment with you my love, my lover, my friend, my mother, my teacher, my playmate, my bedmate, my goddess, my fortress, my enchantress, my mattress, my blanket, my pillow, my bathroom, my kitchen, my living room, my house, my garden, my veranda, my plaza, my mall, my market, my port, my golf partner, my right hand, my manager, my window, my door, my key, my car, for indeed, my wife, you are everything to me. let me just be a mere husband to you.

happy pre-valentines dear. let us make all the love available tonight.
i am tying this yellow ribbon on a tree, and it is you alone who can untie it this very sensitive twig, covered by a fig leaf, this little bird that flies only to your belly, your lips, that place between your legs

RIC S. BASTASA
Previous Worms

do not worry
one cannot just be a stone forever

we grow
we evolve into our destined
higher states of being

blaspheme your human nature
be the next
god beside the gods

haven't you heard what the snake said to the apple?

you can be another Eve

or you can be the next tree

it depends really on how strong is your faith

into the higher state of what you can be

if you worry too much
you can be
the worm
that worrier buried underneath
the moist soil

if you dream
you can grown wings
you can fly
you can escape from the bondage of how limited
you are

if you wish to be like them?
will the gods and goddesses worry?

the won't they are afraid to become their previous selves as worms, you know.

RIC S. BASTASA
Prick Of The Thorns

reality is not in the red petals of the rose decorated with six drops of dew it is in the prick of the thorns piercing your skin letting out drops and drops of blood

it is the pain in the mind when the body starts to move out of focus when the heart
begins to sing the old lines of the blues

RIC S. BASTASA
Pride

pride settles for many words words that stab back like the knives of the knaves shimmering and sharp and shaking pride flying without wings scaling the heights of mountains hollow body without bones feathered without flesh pride too light for wisdom too heavy with reasons less pride jumps out of the cliff lands on the sharp stones curses and crushes upon itself bloody and shattered and pierced mourns for no other but itself unto itself losing all upon itself knowing pretending

RIC S. BASTASA
Pride And Privacy

i know how to compromise not with the crowd
if you really miss me we can have a tea for two in my private jet to Hongkong

RIC S. BASTASA
Primary And Secondary

bread and butter thing water and white rice on the table eggs and vegetables spread on the covered table these are the primaries of life poetry is at nighttime reading aloud composing some more analyzing other poets' works telling to yourself

this smacks the senses this strikes the core of my being this will not make me sleep again invigorating worth the lost salt of myself not looking back moving on sailing on the boat in the middle of such storm seeking peace sleeping alone and dreaming these are the secondaries of existence tomorrow can be incompetent

today is the most evident the past is duly taken notice

the void comes and then to its wings i take my daily ride.

RIC S. BASTASA
things meeting you though new need not surprise you for you live here and it has been all those years you are familiar with the labyrinths of feelings
nothing shocks you or numbs you
you are alive and everything around you speaks to you in the language of the heart the feelings of the hands be glad you live here and you like it here

our world.

RIC S. BASTASA
Prism

you do not know
who you are what persons live in you blue, red, yellow unless you pass through me

for the meantime
you are named light

RIC S. BASTASA
Prisoner

because you handcuffed him
not a hand
can be raised for him to swear to an oath to tell the truth and nothing but the truth

RIC S. BASTASA
what if you have no children?
what if what is left of the family is just you and your spouse?
what if there is only you?

will you be less
of what you are?

RIC S. BASTASA
Proclaiming Independence

independence
is a responsibility to know where you are heeding

to know what to do what purpose
what motive what good is left
after all
these cruelties of friends and foes alike

you are alone now but never lonely
never afraid
never lost

there is no thought left for the selfish
quest
automated to this cause
for humanity

another year ends
and another years begins not a slave anymore
about time and its grips but a master of this universe
self-sufficient to its cause
shining like a star nurturing like the moon powerful like the sun for what is this green grass of home?
your independence
homes for no home no more anywhere is your everywhere now eye to eye with Moby Dick parting ways

and this courage without hope this living without
questions
moving on, moving on life a force of life to the movement of the water to the spins of this earth with the whole universe

RIC S. BASTASA
Procrastiation 101

piles of records wait like executioners have no plan
of putting my head for the cutting axe

they can always wait while i dance
while i climb mountains and see the fog
and the ships below
the wide expanse
of the sea

meanwhile i am sipping
tea
and savoring this slice of cake

this slice of life
how can i let them
waste it?

i am stopping by the woods to listen to the birds i am roaming the forest for the flowers

i like to stop for a while and wade on the river i like to flow like the wind to the willow trees

let the pile of records wait with their axes and spears i will then offer this body for their feasts...
Procrastination

in love with wait a minute
talking to lots of time anyway tomorrow is aplenty postponing what today could have done efficiently

nothing does better.

RIC S. BASTASA
Procrastination At 6 A.M.

the book is open
page 103 is waiting to be read and to be understood yet

you are into something more that pleases your hands it is the action now and not the contemplation

it is the moving on with what the lips shall utter to make you understand what is losing and what is regaining what is it to decompose and retake the composure

you do not read between the lines of a fusing self

the book closes upon itself showing you the face of the trunk, solid, stoic, and bland.

RIC S. BASTASA
Procrastinations Of The Hands

what to do? you know when to do it? wait a while there is so much time unwind, spend more time to what is unnecessary loaf like a unleavened bread
skip the moment and stare and then record all the things that you miss

there's so much undone
but more happiness of the mind

RIC S. BASTASA
Procrastinations......

always i say
tomorrow and i ask yes tomorrow and i
answer
back yes tomorrow
it will be tomorrow for all these things that i do not really like doing their place is tomorrow for tomorrow never ends and it pleases me not doing these things that i really do not like to do

but just the same must be must be done
yes tomorrow

the heart knows
i must do what tomorrow what must be done
the heart bleeds for tomorrow is always tomorrow and must be done
tomorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
Production Line

much is much and so many is like sand sprawling on the shore... so much so many and one who lays her body on the sandy shore takes sand for granted just another part of this mass production of things in her ordinary world: rocks, pebbles, stones, sands, what value can there be on a speck of dust a grain of sand
becomes like her sun, too ordinary for her sunburn-skin what's got the sun to do with me?

or the sand?
her sunglasses speak for her in the middle of her empty hours basking under the sun

production some times, so much for so many meaninglessness growing like fruits of the poisonous tree i could have kept one, just one kept it inside my heart, i could have known what is precious, diamond, just one,

glittering in the darkest hour of my night.

but there is no one really, all i have are mass produced, and like sand, i lay my body on the shore, spreading so thinly without feelings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Professional

he is the man who sits on his big black chair
smoking a cigar
earns a lot of money by simply doing
nothing

lots of phone calls
though
either for the safari in south Africa
or the affair in Jamaica

RIC S. BASTASA
Professional Virgin

the old town finally gets tired of her and junks her like an old tramp no one likes the sound of her name
and so she leaves this old town too
takes the bus and travel miles and days until she finds this sleepy town innocent in its manners and gives her respect

she wears her new clothes and sandals
she tells them a new name she pretends she is innocent not even knowing how to use the spoon and the fork in this town

she is precious
she is their virgin.

RIC S. BASTASA
Profiling...

the glasses are taken
and what you see is just the face,
the eyes that look beyond what the heart feels,
the skin with furrows exposing all the years
the white locks of hair expressing
those days of chaos
the mouth kept shut
hiding all those
words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Profound Ideas Are Taught In Simple Things

wasted time on dry sands slipping from your fingers love on the petals of the red rose

precious life on the air that we cannot see and yet we breathe daily unseen
and yet so essential

old age
on the sunset dimming and dimming until everything is dark night

death

and then eternity
in the moon and stars and the space endless our mortality

to these naked eyes seeing only what lies there and here

and not beyond

RIC S. BASTASA
Profundus

DEEP and dark silence probing gaining more
silence

profound and interesting
it is this that we encounter
and cannot comprehend

stunning!

RIC S. BASTASA
we slept under the cover of the trees those old ones with leaves spanning a hill we were so tired from a great escape of the crowd we slept like we were dead with all the fears we did not remember dreams we were not allowed to cook we had to transfer to another place after we woke up we trek the mountainside again leaving the profusions of light from the morning sun seeping the leaves of the old trees filtering what the underground bush does not really need we had the life of the vagabonds inside the heart of the rebellious there was always no permanent place to stay for life is but a journey and every scene is temporary

RIC S. BASTASA
Prognosis

perhaps i will miss you but i know it will only be for a certain while

then temporarily there will be uncertainty of what i can do in your absence time, time, more time at a snail pace of sorrow and then in between there is this emptiness that starts to expand like a cold air under the bed moving towards the window scattering to the sky

and then
i look back and see myself how i have become so wasted

and then
one gets fed up with missing one get tired
of loneliness

things come before you and some sighs keep repeating themselves like the monotonous sounds of the weeping sea

and then
nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Projection

you don't feel like talking to myself yet i insist that we talk things out thresh the chaff from the grain smoothen the edges
remove the creases
before the sun sets you don't mind me at all and now you are telling me that i am angry at myself.

it is solved. You feel for me.
Now i can sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Prolific

he will not be a river that runs dry
come drought

he will be the sea
as always deep and blue and mysterious
and he will speak
everything
interesting or not from continent to
continent
from shore to shore
till everything becomes the sea
till all the islands are erased
till all the glaciers melt till the world becomes eaten by the mouth of the big water

he will never have the writer's block
for in all truth
he will be everything but sense and nonsense
with the domination of the latter of course

and you
who is curious shall read till the last word because you too expects much
and then you make a sigh you relate
and say i am also what i am sense and nonsense
wise and otherwise.

RIC S. BASTASA
Prometheus V. Hercules

to think the consequences of that leap before the leap Oh Prometheus
how many pains do you have to suffer before the Pain,

Hercules
suffers only once he leaps when he leaps and the Cliff is still a Cliff.

RIC S. BASTASA
Promise Me My Love

promise me my love
that you will no longer mind our little differences that from now on you must begin to see the forest
(the whole of me)
rather than the trees (those trivial things that you bloat
that make me float
and take me away
from you)

promise me that for better or for worse you will love me

till the next life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Promises Promises Promises

promises promises promises
sounding like the biblical rameses rameses rameses
so noble, and so adorable
but like promises promises and more promises they are made more to be broken
sounds
like a broken hymen

RIC S. BASTASA
Pronouns

NOW i am very careful about my pronouns, I've been hiding from myself and from you.
You are what i have concealed from the rest of my humanity. You are an ambiguity that must remain in that timelessness of a pronoun.

They can be annoying. They are sometimes dictating how to be us, this I in you, and this You in me. Nevertheless, in the pursuit of pleasure, perhaps at first, and then in the fulfillment of love later, if this be love in fact, then we can get rid, of the senselessness of our masks in grammar and syntax. There will be a time when i will use your name and then put it beside mine.

They will protest. They will continue making the rules.
But You and I, and Us, have already made it from desire, to love, to forever, or if fate is not in our favor, then....death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Proper Anonymity

at the age of fifty i should have been somebody else someone great greater than the sun
famous, rich and powerful

somebody bigger than a rock boulder beside an old mountain for which travelers look at me as a great story that they can always tell to their children and grandchildren on the night times of their lifetime

i could have been a strong river wider than a lake bringing all sand and silt and storing them all in my own huge basin where all tourist come and praise and then plunge themselves for the unforgettable swim of their lives
in the watery belly of my greatness

but at the age of fifty (just like everyone else who drown themselves in the alcoholic contents of their bottles and who smoke their cigarettes endlessly like a chimney in winter)
i am still a nobody my name is very ordinary and people who pass by do not even give a glimpse as though i am, at least, a human being with the face like the moon boosted by a crown of stars

i dream,
i dream big, much bigger than your dreams when i was young but all my dreams have become wasted dumped and burned and in-order to live in peace i have forgotten all of them buried them alive screams drowned six feet below the ground

this is existence now it is not i who is the center of this universe it is the sun or someone else who still believes that he is the sun or can be with all possibilities statistics-wise the only sun surrounded by all the planets and accommodated by the vast expanse
of space

my mother says i have become a mature man by this she means i have accepted what i am and where my place is i guess we all have the same story we are finally here in the greatness and peace of our own anonymity

in the ordinariness of routine waiting for our own chosen (hopefully)    happy ending

RIC S. BASTASA
Prophylaxis

as an advance guard
the tooth without the lips is the real leader.
it cannot speak for itself no one, nothing speaks for it since the tongue is numb & sick and the lips find finds it a shame in fact it tries to conceal it and so you know what happens next the tooth creates the pain and all it does is this gritting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Prose V. Poetry

in geography prose is a vast plain there is no challenge to a sophistication of understanding

poetry is a valley
mountains embrace you as arms there is an ascent that leads you to the stars prose is plain hello poetry makes love with you

RIC S. BASTASA
Protesting Frogs

frogs protesting picketing
on polluted pond

not only in the Philippines.

RIC S. BASTASA
Proverb Poem #2

'Nothing succeeds like the appearance of success.' Christopher Lasch (1932-1994)

the tenet remains fake it until it becomes true

so today
appear and dress like you are a success
how can failure
understand
this?

RIC S. BASTASA
Proverb Poem 1

'An infallible method of conciliating a tiger is to allow oneself to be devoured.' Konrad Adenauer (1876-1967) devour me that is the cry of the hungry

there is no fear
anymore to be in the place where his hunger
lives
deep in the stomach
of the tiger

annihilation of the self sometimes become the solution
to the unbearable weight of being

RIC S. BASTASA
Proving Power

some prove their power by destroying what others built

and some get so disappointed their power to create seemingly defeated

and the other merely looks with indifference

and one takes the courage to ask

is God sleeping?

RIC S. BASTASA
Pruning A Very Long Poem

THIS IS A VERY LONG POEM AND I WANT IT PRUNED:

I used to like gardens, putting flowers on the row, Tending the soil, cutting the grass, Removing the weeds,
Pruning the lush greenery of trees And making the flor-de-luna vines Create a certain impression Of a landscape,
A certain motif
A theme of gladness Something to cherish

I take a good look around my Little garden
And then I would sit under the shade of flowering champaca trees throwing fragrance Sprinkling perfume
The neighbors say that the scent of ylang-ylang even reaches their houses And the white sampaguitas so exuding I used to dirty my hands putting soil on the flower pots Designing landscapes of love And patience, curves and hills, And tend to all the colors mixing in space,

I used to

I am telling you I stopped
When I married,
My wife comes to my garden And rearranges everything She puts what she wants And pulls what she Thinks repels her
She cuts the flowers Puts them on the vase
And uproots some species
That I love
And soon the garden has not become mine Crowded, and strange
And what used to be my little garden Green Bermuda grass and patterns Red Anthuriums heart shaped Pink Dahlias praying to the sun Orange Gumamelas dancing in the wind And yellow dancing ladies beaming with pride Olive Palms waiving to passers by with all cheers Violets so assuming White lilies in pure dignities Lotuses in meditation moods Husky Cactuses confident with thorns Finger Ferns so fine and cool

My garden
Now is a forest
The wanton chaos
My garden is gone
All the patterns changed Drastically

And she asks me
She asks me
Why I don’t tend the garden anymore
She asks me
If something is wrong
If everything has gone wrong She asks me if I still love my garden She asks me if I can begin planting some seeds again

She asks me if I still love her,

AND THIS IS HOW I PRUNED IT:

I like gardens
I don’t tend the garden anymore
I still love her, Pruning, Cutting, Trimming

today i shall trim
some wants, i will leave some needs, i shall cut protruding branches of bias and prejudice

i will suffer more pains in the process but that will just be short and temporary

i will check my roots remove those dead and unnecessary undergrowths

by then i shall look prim and proper
well shaped, and ready for spring &
bloom so well in summert

RIC S. BASTASA
Psalms 100: 1 - 3,5

all the lands and all the people here this place where I live make the noise that is joyful to the Lord let us serve Him with gladness let us sing Him the songs of praise it is time to be with Him and know Him He made us and we are His Sheep in His pasture

The Lord is Good and He is God His love endures forever and His faithfulness goes on and on For all our generations

Praise Him

RIC S. BASTASA
getting no response at all from calling me names short of a nickname
bound for copulation
you finally give
up
curl in bed and force
your eyes
to close in order not to witness a clue to ferocity and hardheadedness

and then you try again without any
name and you use this one:

pssssssssssssssssssssssssssssst!
catch me a bird
and push it in my belly

RIC S. BASTASA
Psychiatric Sessions

in Vietnam
i had noodles
almost everyday except for the genre bread
and some shrimps i miss the usual rice which they do not serve there and thinking of rice makes me miss my own country like you there in Ontario i began to count my days there in my fingers
and then my toes and then i decided to come home for i cannot imagine myself as a piece of a ceramic figurine
which fell from that display
breaking into pieces

it is very expensive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Psychological Comfort

a dog (a white poodle) sleeps against a wall of cement (unpainted still) a man (who just woke up) with unwashed face opens the computer, surfs for the morning news, checks his emails, comments on the Facebook, reads PoemHunter, and then begins to press the keys another usual poem, another useless endeavor time runs so fast, the sun is up, walking is dispensed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Psywar

let me see what side of the fence shall you take?

let me tell them what you are
and what they did to you that you do not
like

let me see both of you in a state of war

let me see if you come back to me

and then i will also know what side of the fence shall i take.

RIC S. BASTASA
Psy-War Of A Relationship

one thing with her is her honesty thus when she says if you want to go, then go don't look back if you keep hanging on that rope of pride go hang hang everything alive kill and be just one of those names she means every word she knows how to live alone and have no regret

one thing with her is her honesty
for tonight over a glass of wine surrendering to loneliness back to its cold arms she finally sheds her tears

she takes the tissue and wipes her tears
and then begins again
moving on to another quest of this illusive thing called happiness

RIC S. BASTASA
Puccini

imagine a butterfly
lost blown by the wind
to an island without a coconut.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pulang Bato

red stone, acryllic, try the metallic one, nope, the pulpy, the fleshy ones, three little red riding hoods, oopps, no, i mean the three tiny tips of the tipsy trips we once had at the balcony, whine, wine, whiskey, and rhum, so much sparkle of the perks at the jerk of the parking lot.

a lot, i need a lot of the reddish cheek of the red stone, something seething teething, and too lovely for my skin slimy, slippery, streaming, steaming, i love every scent of you. I jump in there.

There were flowers and butterflies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pumping Water At The Old Well....

since there is no electricity you pump water from the well, it is still dark, and the chickens are still on the trees, you sweat it out so you can have water in this village memories keep flashing scene by scene when you were once a young boy doing errands for mama when you were ordered to take the morning bath but you simply ignored it and climbed instead the balimbing tree the branch gave way and there you fell mama was hysterical as you lost consciousness your memory stopped right there and then you were always a disobedient boy and now a man it seems that there is still no difference to speak of and you remember someone wise enough to say that the child has always been the father of man

you pump more water and now you know what this really means.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pungent

your life
is pungent
like the expensive truffle when i take it

in my mouth
my whole body
shivers to such a delicacy

try taking care of it for once
good luck

RIC S. BASTASA
Punta Cruz

THE adventure of my ancestors from Bohol
where poverty drives them all the promises of Mindanao is land-marked by the cross planted on the shore of Miputak to protect them from the attacks of the pirates godless men from the south who without mercy took away their women
and children
as slaves and concubines.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is the other side of the mountain made of dessert sand nothing interesting in there no gems, everything diamond-like is just imagination

when a friend asks about this side we tell all these lies that at its foot is a comfortable cottage that beside it is a river there is a white horse, birds often make a stop-over here trees are fruiting and flowers bloom all year long to be fair there is also something true and beautiful in that other side

but no one knows it except you and on that same side of the mountain you still make lies afraid that someone shall take it away from you because you are weak and cannot protect it from the invasion of the masses from the shallowness of their minds their incapacity to understand that in there everything is good and can be seen and felt but not a bit shall be taken it is the world where the spectator must view the world with respect because it is untouched because it remains to be itself

untaken, untouchable, pure, and hence can never be us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pure Feeling

so you desire nothing more except
pure feeling,

how can i write about feeling?
pure feeling?

yes, without words, without borders no laces, plain cloth, sand on the pillow mold on the hammock, lost worm wriggling on the shiny floor, bird flying on brisk wings towards places that i imagine, depth into the sea

breathless

i lay my head upon your thighs without looking at your eyes as i close mine in full trust you thrush upon me in the darkness of it all love that rebuilds my empire desire that puts moon on my evening sky

pure feeling
no direction, nothing to ask and nothing to give

i ask sometimes if i am right if it is possible.
Purification

high fever your eyes losing sight of some images crisscrossing your
mind

you speak names
they hear
you mumble some facts they understand

you don't you are on fire
you are burning
with so much heat
your hair
smells of burnt ashes
you are charred
almost to death

that is how the feeling goes on this purification

you wake up
the following morning
naked
and pure and very simple you face
the window
and greets
some birds singing on the window sill

your eyes meet
and they chirp seeing the new you

you stretch your arms
and close your eyes
this is the beginning
of your happy moment

RIC S. BASTASA
Purple Opulence

purple petals in opulence closer, hanging, in bunches like lilac flares,
and cascading like
colored fountain
somewhere in Chicago spring.

RIC S. BASTASA
Purple World

in a purple world lavender clouds

a violet day
dusk pool

shadowy trees
black grasses

sickle moon gray mountains

tiny stars
reflected on the lake

let me ask you
were you there once?

RIC S. BASTASA
between us are the gaps of years
the oceans are faraway and there are no islands that remind us that somewhere or sometime
we can be connected

i only have wishes that this body may soon rot and another body in place to lead me to your haven

or that my spirit shall fly away like a hummingbird and look for another flower a dwelling of my untouched desire

you ask me if i am happy what metaphor shall i use again to mislead you into a thinking that fits my puzzling state?

a long time ago i have all the answers a map where i must go and find my self as treasure
as home

now i only have that sense that it is there and yet it can never be found or if found
i know i cannot fully understand it still happiness is hard to spell how can i ever pronounce it perfectly till then?

RIC S. BASTASA
Push Me To The Edge

in a little time you shall push me until i arrive at the edge my shoulder is about to feel the crushing of the wall and the marks of the fence write upon my skin
the limit of forbearance

soon i will show you how wings grow how flights are made soon you shall know how lonely can life go without me

i wish you will cry on the other hand i am definite you won't your world is not mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
Pusher

have patience for a i am the pusher of your dreams the wheelbarrow of your ideas glazed by your tears beside those black wild chickens have courage for soon you shall rise above my little spring

RIC S. BASTASA
Put To A Test

you put my love
on top
of this crucible

you put it
on fire

you blaze like a fire in the forest.

i turn to red porcelain

it is hot as hell (as though
i was once there)

you form me
in the shape of your love

i turn to fluid
and then after this crucible test

i turn solid again.
there is not much change inside, though

i feel stronger.
break me for i am yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Puti Nga Ikog....

gisulayan nato ug
patong ang usa ka pulong sa laing pulong

morag kalo sa ulo sa usa ka tiguwang morag bata sa iyang
abaga nga morag gahimo sa
iyaha nga usa ka kabayo samtang siya
ang naglingkod sa montora samtang gahawid sa
bunal nga morag ikog
sa pagi

kining pagpatungpatong sa pulong maoy nakaingon sa kataposang nilugdangan

ang pagkahagbong ang pagkakay-ag ang kusog nga tingog sa pagkahulog dayon ang pagbanos sa tumang kahilom kay dili ka buot nga ang bata nga malipayon sayong mahimong lain na usab nga masulub-on nga sama kanimo

sagdi lang, inig kahuman niining tanan samtang nangita pa kitag paagi nga walay mabasol, mobalik ra usab ang kinabuhi, modagan ang bata, magdula-dula sa gawas sa balay unya makit-an niya ang tinood nga kabayo nga sa kakulang sa iyang pagsabol wala siyay kahadlok nga basin ug masipaan siya samtang gisulayan niyag hikap ang kaanindot sa
iyang ikog nga puti,

RIC S. BASTASA
Putting A Person In A Box

when you put a person in a box
the box becomes the person
the box does not grow
it chokes
the pharynx
and shuns away light even air
the box cannot die it stays as a box for years
sometime when you are anxious you open the box
only to find out that the person
is not a box and he is not there
anymore
it was you inside
it
and it too was gone
and you did not notice
the box
the person
and you

RIC S. BASTASA
Putting All Creativity In Cessation.

words become monotonous when oft repeated without any sense, this vain repetition
is filling the space of thought without rhythmic dissonance

upon uniformity
sleep comes victorious putting all creativity in cessation.

RIC S. BASTASA
Putting All The Eggs In One Basket

Every time I leave Mother always reminds me This: do not put all your eggs In one basket,

Because when I fall
All the eggs will break and I will be left with

Nothing.

Even a nincompoop understands that.

Oh mama! I do not have those many eggs And she does not have any basket, We sure both, have nothing to lose.
Thanks for the reminder, anyway.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is this lady-judge who had two talented and intelligent sons with leadership qualities she loved them so much her husband is a lawyer who defended the poor and the oppressed

they live on top of a hill away from the rest they live a very private life and mind their own affairs her sons believed in an ideology of liberating the poor from their chains left her home and fled to the mountains the military searched them and they vanished

there were many things that were rumored one body was found beside a river ridden with bullets rotten and worms were consuming each wound another body was later found on the other side of the mountain under the forest trees with a face that is severely disfigured they speculated that they were the bodies of her two sons missing for years and now thought of dead the lady judge is strong we do not speak about it if she were weaker she would have gone insane her husband got sick and found no meaning in lawyering for the masses anymore

i must remember this and write about it because no one has done it this i put on record we did nothing to appease her we did nothing to put into the hands of the law those culprits those were the harsh times we only prayed we only offered flowers we only left towards our own respective homes

RIC S. BASTASA
Putting My Feet Inside Your Shoes

empathy

i shall enter your domains vicariously
from my mind
to your feelings,
and thoughts
it is the same
sadness i have been keeping like your ring

i may lose myself in the process of loving you much like rain pouring
all over you

it is me here and now
with you
i can always feel you

i shall kiss you
you will be nearer to the beatings of my heart the quivers of my soul

by this i too, shall become the mirror of myself
we become one in namelessness

it is me in you it is you in me Puust Ja Punaseks Ette Tegema you cut a tree

and make the wood

you take the wood
and paint it red

my dear friend
let us filter the river let us make things clear

Selge nagu seebivesi as clear as soapy water!

RIC S. BASTASA
Pyrrhic Victory

how do you make coercion your ally?

will you try to use
the moral lesson
that teaches nothing but fear?

i shall run the risk of this Pyrrhic victory

to have you in my heart
and yet negate you in my flesh

and that ally of the mind exploits
and negates
my triumph in love

RIC S. BASTASA
Qou Vadis, Melvin

Let us start with An immovable object Meeting an irresistible force, What happens, Melvin?

Start with a glass Half filled,
Half empty,
What now Melvin,
What do you see?
What will you say?

Or the most common Argument of a hand
With a small bird
Held by an old man,
And you are the young Boy asking, what do You say now Melvin?
Is the bird alive or Dead, is the bed forever Remembered or forgotten?

A squeaking bed,
A bed,
Now, just any kind of bed Reduced to an essence of bed Like any other kind of bed Where you sleep, in fact Where everybody sleeps

The bed is now forgotten
And all squeaking beds Are similar, nothing significant And all the faces you met Are similar faces in the Marketplace, in the most Common places of your heart, That is forgetting something That you cannot really forget,

Make them so familiar, so ordinary,
You get immunized, you get so numb All of them similar, so affordable

Nothing hurts anymore, nothing Even if you remember, there is nothing anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Qou Vadis?

he said one night he got the moon under his arms and he was serious we were so afraid and so we believe him he laughed so hard that the moon fell out from his arms it escaped

and took its comfort again in the skies he gazed at the moon and realized there is logic for things to be just right there in their proper places we confirm him again back to our arms

he bleeds and now he shall be healed again even without the moon under his arms where to, cousin?

RIC S. BASTASA
Qouting Ducky

Don't argue with an idiot; people watching may not be able to tell the difference.

RIC S. BASTASA
Qua Patet Orbis

free dreams
fill this world with all your dreams as far as this world extends no warping of time no black holes of simplifications move in and fly with the wings of your own
mind

RIC S. BASTASA
Quaerite Primum Regnum Dei

lots of failures, huh?
that is not the way you like it but it happens because you lack one thing man you have been searching for your self and there is no self to begin with self-esteem at the end destroys
the presence of the almighty

try again but this time seek first the hidden kingdom
of God

RIC S. BASTASA
Quarter Of Seven

indirect bribery
escapes my mind
so i open back the pages
of what he once did when he was
on top of it all that power that corrupted him absolutely

that lack of skill in mastering honesty

sometimes these capacities are forgotten

regret always comes late pain sips souls on the other hand earlier than the cells and bars expect

RIC S. BASTASA
Que Sera Sera

They content with the images of themselves proud of the genetic chain fulfilled through their children Yet they are empty too
for sometime
Just like me
Though i entertain not an image of anybody
NOT even myself or the other self of myself IT Is the NOw that i embrace on a door that closes and opens when i step outside

i sing, que sera sera whatever will be will be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Que Sera Sera, Whatever Will Be Will Be

Three blind girls did sing This que sera sera song This whatever will be will be

Their voices did blend well Their bodies stiff in their darkness Since birth then today they come On a heavenly cause

The three blind girls did make us cry
As we all watch them How long have we been blind too?
Uncaring about those with disabilities?
Those who are deaf, and blind and mute Those who cannot sing and walk and talk

We watch them sing we saw our tears falling Have they too opened our eyes from this stark blindness?
I still cry today, though there is no need for you to see,
I, too, grapple, with my wide eyes open This darkness at high noon This muteness with my gaping mouth wide open This silence amidst the boiling noise Inside these vast and empty halls

RIC S. BASTASA
Quem Deus Vult Perdere, Dementat Prius literally, for whom the gods would destroy they first make insane...

do not waste time
pretending
seek the help of your favorite shrink

the gods must be angry and now you must go crazy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Quem Di Diligunt Adulescens Moritur

the comfort
must be inculcated in your mind that those who die young the gods so dearly loved...

when Deneb was taken away at 3
the gods must be crazy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Queries...

what is shorter than short?
bluer than blue?
the pale shade of humility?
what is life short of life?
what is it that does not really
please?
what comes before death what is it that lives after?
what was there before
we were born?
what permission have i given?
what is the reason for asking undefined questions?
what limit can i put beyond my expectations?

what if? i do not.

RIC S. BASTASA
Question 1

how can i ever stop writing?
how can sadness be a non-sleeper?
how can an insomniac be so insistent, hard headed? and so dumb that it cannot count how many sheep are left when all of them are dead?

how can one be impossible? how can madness be so irresistible?
How can God be so holy and so distant like the eon distances of the sun? Those light years, which we thought to be flashing?

how can i ever cease? Now, stop it, Maman says, I am getting dangerous to myself.

How can one be in pain and yet so happy?
How can one be so mundane and yet be so divine?

Now the human being in me speaks.
I guess, it must be true, likewise, experience based.

RIC S. BASTASA
Question 10

Something is missing and yet why __id

you not writ__

it __s

a real _ _ought?

it is inevitable
and why are you afraid
about it?

RIC S. BASTASA
Question 2

i think i am Bukowski's reincarnation.

if he hears this, shall it make him happy?

If he still hears

What if, granting that there is no such thing as reincarnation, what if he hears this and he is not drunk?

will this make him mad?

what if, in truth, he was never mad into drinking and that poetry was really what he hated it to be and yet it just happens that he has no choice but to write because there is no vent to his inner angst?

what if, i never really want to be anybody else?

because there is only me, and that i am not also a reincarnate of anybody else?

that is the question.

i AM PRETTY

sure, I am not Bukowski.

RIC S. BASTASA
ONE guy, wearing an expensive black suit and a pair of shiny black pants with matching glossy black shoes, thinks that serious matters need not be mocked and that there is no place for something funny.

I guess he is a lawyer about to appear in a court of law and he is about to defend a multimillion damage suit.

His face is grim. His hands are made of brains. His bones are titanium. His brains are Apple computers.

I am having fun. I am laughing hard. I am dancing the boogie.

And he detests me. To him i am Mediocre. Society discards me for i am not serious in solving problems and chaos.

I ask him to fly away.
Geeeee, he can't.
But i kept my mouth shut.
I ask, Is he Mad?

RIC S. BASTASA
The problem with your declarative sentences is that they are all conclusive.

Then your interjections have become too shocking that we cannot really think that deep and well, intelligently.

I think you better try those clauses...and better still have more time with interrogatories, like

Is it true? Like, why is that?

Now look at you you look so open you look so beautiful, like an open door and open window

A river with a mouth A Suez canal

Oh, my, you have such an open mind?

I don't wonder that 'wander is still the beginning of your step to wisdome'

Is that you really?

RIC S. BASTASA
Question 5

if you are so sure of yourself

beware! ! !

where there is no doubt you are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Question 6

It is when i am weak that i become so strong it is when i am doubtful that i become too real it is when i become unreal that i become truly myself (was it also when God became Human that he becomes God?)

RIC S. BASTASA
Question 7

Did i stretch my mind too much?

wait, am i about to snap?

am i a rubber band or something?
wait, how elastic can i be to genius and madness at opposite ends?

RIC S. BASTASA
Question 8

An empty cup is not full of air?

it is filled

with nothing?

is air something

or is it nothing

because you cannot see it?

RIC S. BASTASA
Question 9

now i shall repeat the same
question
to you- -

are you a butterfly dreaming that you are a man?

or a you a man
dreaming
that you are
a butterfly?

RIC S. BASTASA
Questions And Answers Between Old Couples Still In Love and why do you hold my hand? because i don't want you to fall and why do you fear that i fall?

because i am your husband and why did you become my husband? because you said yes on that day and why did i say yes to you?

because you love me

and why do you love me? because you are so beautiful and why am i so beautiful? because you understand me and why do i understand you?

because you love me.

now let me hold your hand too.
i do not also want you to fall.

RIC S. BASTASA
Questions For The Rain

the rain has arrived heavily with so many questions why have the children gone sick?

where has the mother gone?
why is this woman still waiting for the lover?
and why did the lover not come?
why did the cruel men butcher the carabao?
and where have all the good men gone?
where are the stones to sip the rising water? where are the firewood to signal smoke?

when will this rain ever stop?
it is cold and there is no fire it is a lonely house since no one lives there it is going to flood and more shall drown and more shall die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Questions Of The Termite

i will nibble all i will start on the brittle part of the past that the owner left to be forgotten

crumbly sweet delicious

even if i am used
to this
i cannot but stop asking

if the past is delicious why was it left to decay

=================================
pangutana sa anay

kutkuton nako ang tanan ari ko magsugod sa gabok nga kagahapon
nga gitugyan sa tag-iya sa kalimot

dunot humok
lami

bisan naanad nako
ani di gihapon ko
kapugong
og pangutana kon lami man ang kagahapon nganong gipasagdang madunot

- JONA B. BERING
Tuburan, Cebu, Philippines

RIC S. BASTASA
Questions...

do we ever know for what reason that the sea which used to be coy and calm has become violent when it landed in that island?

do we ever know why it has taken a thousand lives when it has no use for them?
is it hungry like a man deprived of food or thirsty like a dog not given water? does this water, this sea ever feel the loss of mankind?
or is it just one of them, numb and insensitive like the mountains and stones?

does it hear the sobbing of those who are left in pain and madness?
does it not fear too their capacity for retaliation or revenge?

the sea and man
what relationship have you really?
friend or foe?

RIC S. BASTASA
Questions......

lady, (lady in black gown, black hat, and hand-gloves)

why do you want your coffee black?

why do you always want
bitterness?

why always alone sitting on a chair facing the sea and drinking the salt of the breeze
with your black coffee?

why sip bitterness
when
to my mind, coffee would be better with cream and honey

with someone beside you facing the sea and savoring the salt of the sea with that black coffee of yours?

lady, why mourn
when joy is just around the bend?

why can't we be alone
together?

RIC S. BASTASA
Questions?

i am tired of questions
all of them
too familiar and all
with ready homemade answers

canned questions
and answers
in one book
scanned for years
and you all know them

canned laughter
canned faces

canned souls
canned and caned and chained bones

they rattle and they shake and roll

i have no answers.
i am throwing all these questions away.

i live everyday. i look at the trees and the forests.

i simply live. Now.
i have no more questions.

neither will i demand
any answer from you.

go, go, find yourself.
i stay here wanting to find nothing at all.

i guess, after my 48 years there is this truth that i find: there is nothing nothing to find nothing to expect

nowhere to go
it is just this and this and this.

the one that i have in my hand the one that i keep on holding i enclose it and keep it warm and alive

and you do not even care this is it: me, myself, and I

RIC S. BASTASA
Quibble

Write about love
The greatness the loveliness the thirst the anticipation
Of love
The night of waiting for love the dawn consumed to writing About love the joy the ecstazy of the lines in between You, my poet so well engrossed

Here I am pretending sleep; it is you that I miss, Dreaming that I am waiting about your kiss

RIC S. BASTASA
Quickly

quickly they did it
under the shady
tree and nimbly they left

in a hurry they forget they rush
to a flat edge and fall away like broken glasses from the tiled sink

now they want to remember but there is nothing more left everything rushed to the wind
of the oblivious.

RIC S. BASTASA
Quid Pro Quo

A tooth for a tooth
An eye for an eye

You know what’s next (ok, just in case you don’t... until all would be toothless and blind)

a lie for a lie
hmm, hand them
brand new brushes each
&
more colgate toothpaste
please

they’re all lying on their teeth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Quiet

i hold a needle
in my fingers
and i let it fall freeing it
from a black thread
into a persian carpet

i hear
the sound of its call

and it is so quiet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Quiet (& Still)

quiet
this princess that dwells in the secret pond of my heart

the lotus
that blooms
in the stillness of the water above this mud

quiet
the stare that i give to darkness
to death

quiet
the hands that despite the odds
willingly shall surrender to God's law shall abide

RIC S. BASTASA
Quiet And Easy

It is when you work so hard and dispose your work efficiently that they notice you and soon will give you a bigger workload.

the old men in the circle know fully well what to do. Keep being lazy. Do not let yourself be noticed by those who are up there sipping coffee.

Be like the rest. Ordinary Guy. Or just be at the middle. Do things in moderation.

That is the best place. Quiet and easy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Quintessence

you should have known
this
quintessence

man is always a traveler

the journey
is this untrodden
path of dignified
solitude

this loneliness that justifies itself with the sweetest of all pains

RIC S. BASTASA
Quit Poetry For Good.

THE POET FROM OSLOB

with poetry how can he survive
these harsh times when prices for gas, water and electricity are always on the rise?

how can he feed his two kids and a wife with no work?

his is not the suffering of the thespian whom he says
is on pseudo-suffering
like a soap opera or that serial on tv every day where crying is non-stop and slapping is
forever

the latest from him is that now he is in manila applying for a construction job in Dubai

and hence has quit
poetry for good.

RIC S. BASTASA
Quite

WHO does not love
the quite? that peace that caresses the convolutions of the brain
who is not in love with a floating lotus flowering on top of a mirror pond

the clouds too are moving on with their lives but as silent as the glaciers the worlds spins without sound the Milky Way is like an spacecraft bringing us all towards the direction that it only knows by heart
with all the
quite....

RIC S. BASTASA
Quite A Long Time You Feel What Is Missing

quite a long time
you feel what is missing you mark time as a form of a tryst one day you will be one again fused in arms
you are too innocent about time how it changes hearts views, perspectives, the one you love has arrived and the questions begin to be asked who are you and why are you still here

RIC S. BASTASA
Quitting

quitting is putting all the trust and faith in yourself alone,

on the other hand
there is someone who keeps on moving not by the force inside him but something outside something beyond how can there be quitting?

the force is auto-subsisting

RIC S. BASTASA
Quitting....

we have decided to call it quits,

just that. just that.

in one blink of your eye after, everything is closed. everyone
ceases.

i would have uttered... it is for the both of us.
it is good.

i have not dared.
it is not that respect for the good times.

the end of everything as you well know is the soundless fall

in slow motion.

RIC S. BASTASA
the injustice of course lies in the camouflage and she knows all these but she never mentions that to you for she cannot live without you that even the hint of a possibility of a parting, just the slight movement of the finger from the hand she then starts to cry and touches you and tells you that you must never leave her for she has nothing and no one you are a man of compromises and you live between night and day you always miss the stars but you cannot even be gazing for them even for a night you love to play under the sun and take time at the beach and play ball and bathe under the softest light but you cannot have your feet settled on the sands this is what happens when you have not decided categorically one hand in heaven and the other in hell and your body wiggles as your face is divided your eyes are crossed and your feet cannot dance the way it should have been done perfectly on that harmony of love and affection because you have chosen only one.

RIC S. BASTASA
the mind is engrossed in thought the word is embossed in the skin the tattoo speaks to you and you ignore what is too obvious and immobile

at the beach
i pass you by
and you take a slight look which i surely will not mind then we face what is beside us we hold the hand that feed us we live in the house where love is another stranger that does not know

us.

RIC S. BASTASA
he does not take things sitting down now the legs have reminded them of their impatience the hands are wary and the eyes are no longer skeptical one must stand

one must take his stand now the crowd is taking that one voice of the brave man then he asks himself, what for? everything had been lost most of himself had been taken away and there is nothing left except the mind that he completely owns now that thought that he will never speak about it because if he will

the world will be lost, the castle of illusion shall crumble and those that who know courage for the last time

shall die

and to choose between silence and leaving away and having to see a world ruined by another hurricane of ideas he's rather have what it takes the lie to survive, darkness retreating to give way to light another new day without change another peaceful day with some tolerable tales it is not the right time yet perhaps, tomorrow, yes, perhaps when i am no longer with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
no matter how tight you hold captive the cat on the rope even if you shut it from the windows of your world into the vacuum of the most silent of all indifference into the consuming fires of hate you cannot hide the voice and put the face into the insignificance of the ash because the dust is dust and it will always speak about the truth of an origin because the past intimacy rises again to put you back at its own prison and in that clear pond where you once sat and took a look there, there you can see again the face of Narcissus, the shadow of selfishness it dives and then die there again

RIC S. BASTASA
R.

Rigor mortis
the body that stiffens because when it
died no one was in the house the wife hates him
and the kids detest his bad taste

Regimentation
that is.

RIC S. BASTASA
R. M. A Revelation

when he opens up the world closes in on him the headman closed the window the woman with the white long gown closes the door
they will change his name the one that fits his revelation of who he really is then he moves on to a new life

this now he is as brave as a lion carrying the truth of his sharp teeth his strong legs and claws make the great leap from one cliff to the other below him the abyss between him

the invisible bridge of his connection to the the truth long hidden he is silent now but free

his solitude becomes a tree with long leaves full of flowers are the branches now the butterflies like him are free like a chameleon tired of changing hues he sticks to the color of the wind the warmth of the sun on the lush grasses of the plains

RIC S. BASTASA
the years
are magnanimous enough to give you these dignified wrinkles

what youth did
to you?
what brim of overflowing happiness
was there
which are gone
which are no more than just but memories we cherish
since we cannot take them back again even in our usual denials

i see you in old age now
much the same as
myself

we feel young as
always
despite the timidity of our flesh and
bones
we feel the rancor
of the tremulous
fingers
hands that cannot hold much sands palms with broken
and gnarled lines

no regret my dearest our time has come and we are taking exits with the setting of the sun
so tenderly, so discreetly that tomorrow morning when the rooster cocks and the chickens jump from where they roost no one notices our passing
away

everyone does as mandated by life
on with their new houses new plans on with their next seeding with their coming weddings and baptisms

soonest, the funerals and the elegies
and dirges of those who like us do not want to remember
anyone or anything.....

RIC S. BASTASA
he does not know how to make long letters anymore circuitous comments are strangers in fact, he has become a one word man saying thanks.

RIC S. BASTASA
i let the darkness of dawn fade away
as i sculpt metaphors from the night that gives me nothing

a restless night
an empty room
on dead lights and dusty drapes

one from another world could be another room and another house figures out that this must be one happy world of ponderous loners and there are too many of them worshiping the Word bowing before no concrete images
letting themselves be carried by the fluidity of their own thoughts: the three faces of time its 24 nooks, the fast ferries of its trips hoping that one sees the light houses in this dark moments that in the following morning when the sun is bright one can see an island one arrives at the port of destination and then disembark
for good.

RIC S. BASTASA
Radio And The Laundrywoman

the radio is on
and the life of the laundrywoman now begins

RIC S. BASTASA
Raffy in Las Vegas always knew what to do with his life.
Nothing submerged, suppressed, everything waiving like hands Welcome, welcome,
Happiness, there is no tint of sadness on his face Lovers abound, There is no shame, There is always that touch That tickles his legs Of hair and Tongue,

He forgets home where his face is stuffed Like a bear.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rage

things are running wild and not in what you wish them all to be some are running against you and some are exploding before your very face indistinguishable
untouchable

ugly and not worth the watch you feel that there are storms coming inside your chest
you wait

what for? you are one that seeks self-destruction
you wait
for another explosion to include your whole being lost and never found

RIC S. BASTASA
Rain

The logic of rain
Is that when it comes it makes
And always makes the road wet.

Can the rain be illogical at any time?
Can the road also conspire? So that

When it rains the road would have its way Of not getting wet, and you are somehow Confused
And reason out that this cannot be true
And that logic
Will always be faithful to you.

Beware. The time comes when the road Deceives you. It deceived you once, and I can Deceive you some more You always walked on it With a raincoat
When the rain came
The road hid
In the flood of your asphyxiated mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rain At Dawn, I Am Silent As Usual

what i like most is the sound of the rain at dawn
when i am safe curling half asleep inside my room

and then i start remembering you
you were wet
and i came with a red umbrella
my arms around you and your arms around me too
and then we walk towards a shade
and then we fade
when the rain
finally stopped
and then we parted
you finally took your ride for home where your husband
and children are waiting for dinner

RIC S. BASTASA
there is this rain between my thighs there is this cloud inside my abdomen it is heavy with something that accumulates somewhere and within there is this tickling and tingling of everything i feel for you

in your absence
the clouds get so heavy and my abdomen gives in the rain falls under my feet and then i know it is the ripe time for sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
Rain Feeding

even in the planting
of rice
these brown people have remained faithful to the blessings
of the rain

it is fate always it is fate and will always be reliant on faith

outside their brown world progress came.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rain In Summer

the old wise men say de that when it rains in summer dhnen there is a feast in heaven.

ulan init

ulan init
pista kuno sa langit.

(an old bisayan proverb)

RIC S. BASTASA
Rain Songs....

i have figured the sound of tears
its rhythm from the moment you turn red
and sob
and then i hear again
the songs
of rain
from that faraway forest mountain

i, too, was all alone figuring out myself the song of sorrow how leaves fall
how grasses wilt how the termites build their empire upon the bones of tree trunks
how the ants
eat the monkeys'
failures.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rainbow

rain comes unexpectedly and i take shelter under a tree looking around for comfort in the cold

a bird sings
on a branch and i listen to the notes floating in the air

needles of rain
soft light arriving on the hills

a rainbow
bridging two feet
over there

i watch this beauty
i smile for a promise that the Lord has restated in my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Raindrop On The Eye Of The Wounded

'A dream
As a particle in eyes Remains as tear Wounded desire'

wounded
tears fall and
to mark the anniversary
of pain,

dew at the middle of the leaf,

eyes getting to know
another water
form,

a raindrop..

RIC S. BASTASA
Raise Your Hands To The Ceiling Touch God He Is There.

from a big pile of paper works you turn on the music gangnam style you face the mirror gaze at your increasing wrinkles your haggard look and crumpled shirt and you switch to loud music and then dance.

who cares? the world is full of music and this body wants to dance raise your hands to the ceiling touch God

He is there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ramble Of The Life In General

at home work is everyday and life follows always the needs

and routine is hard everybody is not certain in life generally because it does not follow

RIC S. BASTASA
Ramble Of Thoughts

Left,
the many happy
years
we've got

stick around until 110
i am
at least

Lose it
use you've got
it

RIC S. BASTASA
Rambling

everytthing is rrammblinng
here
one gets to know one she is studying as an actress the other one is doing something to impress making money
what is he interested at?
got no answer
music plays
and we listen
got to go there again to meet the gypsy but my lover is true and will come back to me someday
it's over.

RIC S. BASTASA
you once
had best friends

time breaks
bonds
you refuse to accept
broken friendships
you hope
someday
that relationships repair
and heal
themselves

you move on rethinking promising that you can live alone

chats are everywhere
nothing serious
about long lasting
and true
friendships

they cause pain during break-ups too many unkind words
said

others come back for some utilitarian
reasons and you have learned

a lot
nothing lasts really friendships are like promises

like things that you take in the house and simply outlive their importance
or need
or use

yes, it has always been the use

you are not
that never a user
and
they are
and will always be

and so
here you are chatting with yourself
in some kind of poetry

you always plant
the seeds here

and there is no
pain in seeding
you never get the chance
to taste
its fruits anyway

RIC S. BASTASA
when we follow the webs of thought (imagining a spider spinning its own saliva to build a trap, a house, a work of art clinging like fingers of silk in space,) when we follow the streams of ideas that we create, and we do not really have anything in mind, perhaps we see black spiders floating in the morning sea of space, and then we keep on expanding and spending time, i tell you, perhaps, there is a sting of a bee, that we want to ignore, and the pain is just a word, that we type and set aside for a while as a meaningless mark, we have no purpose, we are trying to empty a load of thoughts not to explain it but to eradicate ourselves from a complication of doubts, but how can we? the words keep coming like we are shores and they are waves, we want to expel something, and we follow a trail of irrelevance, a bush of irrationality, there are colors and shades of colors, and you ask, ' what colors? ' oh, these are colors of coldness bluish, sky like, and if you ask, only the ball of thorns inside the heart has the ability to give a complete answer.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rambling Thoughts This Moment

the thrill of the rope is just the beginning of my regrets
superficial grace,
there are other simple ways which cannot just be replaced because they are the permanences of loving memories

sometimes we need to wear the masks just to be plain happy at least for the moment when reality sinks and hurts and becomes so heavy and unbearable

this boocrap, please hear and listen do you listen still?

now what? steady, steady, keep moving the hands that still manage to write keep the thrill of hope and set aside the rope

RIC S. BASTASA
Ramblings

You cannot lock the door Now, night shall open it For fireflies to come in They slept in hiding

Like you, fireflies fly away Pallid cowards from rain Lest their lights die in the mist

You wait by the door

As true stars come again Lighting night skies My Fireflies shall reveal Inferior flickers under The now, brimming Skies bursting

II.
How many full moons passed Past your sad window?
Your fingers cannot tell They’re used to gripping Rusty doorknobs
A great deal to ancestry Our human hands corroded We cannot reach nor outrun Rust becomes us

III.
If we listen to dawn dreams
We shall hear prophets scream
Nothing
To a mutter
One speaks of the underworld so endless Unmoving as the sky stretches a distance of lies No farther
Or it will break

There are no skies no caves No edges no space
Nothing
To whisper

IV.
We are shooting stars in space Shot into nothing Yet we keep on shooting

For the moment
We close down
We set strong feet on land Like steel gates stilled

We look into our eyes Tears are dwindling
Thus far, we cannot cease fearing For nothing

V.
There is God
As the world keeps ears
For each earthworm in the void

He shall hear us Shouting the questions Dinning, Rocking the ruckus of cumulus
In this outcry

He shall know us
By eyes and mouth
By hand by footprints
And the grasses covering all Ramblings And More Ramblings

i like talking to myself, and so i just keep on talking about anything else
no one hears it of course except myself and like this sentence construction there is no period not even a comma for this is a kind of talk that does not want to end only when you are around and you talk endlessly too when i begin to listen. and attentively i give everything to you you fill me with words and words and the conversations keep going i like to think that i am making a poem for you silently in my mind.

but it is not

i am more of going inward lost in my thoughts unable to find where is the way out of this journey

RIC S. BASTASA
Ramblings At 1: 37

the background
is a garden of roses

fresh red roses
with lots of thorns

and then the white lady with falling hair comes with a pair of scissors and the roses fear no more for their daily deaths their executioner is here this art, this lady with a commitment to cut

the finer and more beautiful ones as offering

for her long dead husband crushed by a war

of suppression and depression face derided

face off, slashed wrist and compulsory writs

she picks one for me and i write one crazy poem for her just being fair to madness and art and compulsion

RIC S. BASTASA
what humiliates us is us. it is the thought that we are humiliated that humiliates us, not them, who are but perspectives, minds that we have no power to fathom, eyes that look where they want to,
it is a matter of decision actually to be humiliated or not in the same manner what give us dignity is us. what we think is what we are and we are dignified for as long as we think ourselves to be the manifestations matter, we agree, but these are perspectives still that matter not to them who are preoccupied with the art of living and the eventual and slow deaths that everyday enters upon us.

everything are mental constructs to keep our pieces intact we grope and always collect and think that we are whole again and again like a chant, a whisper winding to our ears

do not be too sensitive no one can kill

RIC S. BASTASA
Ramblings Of A Researcher

bury the head
deep into paper files
like one cormorant
looking for deep sea fish
one finally longs for air to breathe
a face to see
like the one you missed so much yet you cannot even touch
you rise with the fish on your beak
swallow everything but nothing satisfies
not the books
not the fish
not even that face that you long to see
this time
it is the memory of the deep sea that entangles you like a flower
vine creeping
holding on to the trellis

RIC S. BASTASA
Ramblings Of The Past.....

you go into the details of the leaf all parts of it
the map of its veins the inner part
the beauty of something that goes molecular that goes viral until then green becomes a space and space becomes its utmost form of universal nothingness.

x x x

for love is but some details too those fingers that caress your hundred locks of hair the layers of the lips that touch yours the chambers of the heart that serve as house for the restlessness of youth, 16 years old meets 15 years on the grass

that cold evening under the moon full of memories that now refrains itself from being told

how are these wounds doing to you?
those healing years
and the homecoming that smile which says, ' oh my God, was it I really? '

RIC S. BASTASA
Ramblings On A Sunday Morning

the white poodle keeps wagging its tail looking for my preferential attention the motorcycles on the road are noisy again

some children keep on tapping their feet
imitating the dance of the penguins

on the other hand the old woman slowly ekes his tired feet on the way to the church the church bell keeps on its clanging saying today is Sunday

i got no weekend
on a crisis of the pages of the books some poems to justify my contempt for rites and rituals and boring sermons do not judge the cover of the book until you dropp dead on the floor

RIC S. BASTASA
Ramona

laughs so hard that even sorrow smiles at her fights so strong that even fate accepts its defeat loves so true that even hatred walks out of the way and lives life so well that even death still loves to see her exist...

she is safe now
i hope.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ramona Remembered

you finally cracked when the teacher said, life is unfair
you cannot accept that fact that sticks in your skin like a tattoo since birth perhaps even till death the unfairness of it all was the shutting of your light for Ramona like the sun you could have shone like a very bright day in the middle of this darkness now, the teacher comes to class with nothing but a piece of chalk and convinced he writes there on that blackboard indeed, life is unfair. He packs his things and leave for the mountain and since then

no one hears about him again.

i am staying in this university and will continue writing all about these.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rampage....

direct to the point is blunt. So we look for the river that runs and winds its way beside the foot of a hill, taking the proverbial path of least resistance.

be logical, hit the center of your universe. Answer me directly, like a yes or no, nothing in between for some collateral justifications, point blank, no powder burns, you are looking for meaning, as though, if you fence a house everything would be safe, the dog wagging its tail, the parakeet teasing the women, the echo that keeps fidelity to your calling, the fog that beautifully cautiously walks beside the trees and then blindly an old man asks you what time does the train leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
Random

it was pure random
when i married
you, i thought it was not true
it was like i was sleeping and then i woke up and there
i found myself beside you and the cameras clicked and then
we were proclaimed
as married by the clapping of their hands and the
clinking of their wine glasses

pure random
i thought it was wrong

RIC S. BASTASA
Random For The Moment

tut, it's just me when i grow old, poo, after all, some men are born great, singing the love song of winter's night, hurting thoughts, kisses of life, because of you,
the women of saudi arabia are tried by fire round and around,
mysterious mists, and red presence as they all want something new.

RIC S. BASTASA
Random Images

i

two lean figures
dissolve
diffusing
diluted to the solution of distance a fusion with sunset then darkness like a black blanket on a bed of trees and grasses

ii

a soul rises from the body senses still complete the hearing but not talking the joining but not being a part of anything and anyone else a guiding light an exit of the tunnel

iii

a rose bud wilting petals falling from the sepal letting go raindrops from the roof the last leaf
the red ants at the foot of the tree a dead boy discovered on the cliff a rope covered with dust a bottle of mineral water emptied of its contents a man snoring at the beach drunk a woman undressing herself plunging her body into the deep sea looking for the pearl of great price

iv

'is love dead? ' you ask the lady of the night.
'will love die? ' you are philosophical with that last glass of wine.

'Love cannot die' you have read it somewhere but you cannot remember that book, the page, because the dog's ears are gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Random Images At 2 In The Morning....

smooth
comes after rough,

not that easily,
time, waves, rage,

tongue and chopstick, and

moon and skin,
abdomen,

tongue and lips,
too much tongue

tied, tight and slippery, that

hold of so many hands,

sliding doors and candle lit

rooms with aroma of pepper and

chandeliers above plaster of Paris

heads, busts, and
strong legs,

i gaze at that but my true love

is over there,
not really desire

which is much hidden under those

layers of formal attires.

RIC S. BASTASA
Random Pickings...

i do not wish
to lose the spontaneity of my beginnings

the moment a thought as guest arrives
i must, out of respect, treat such a
delight

words are picked up from her luggage that we carry into her room where she sleeps for the
night

the following morning
seeds sprout on the floor soon a bush, soon a tree and very very soon the fruits of the vine by the window a hummingbird hopes for a flower

when she is gone there will be another arrival sadness and despair
tears flooding on the stair.

RIC S. BASTASA
Random Thoughts

i

i YET have to see a little black girl wishing that she is white.

ii

that little brown girl
over there
sitting in one of the dark corners of her own messy tropical world wish that her skin is white her hair blond her parents
either British or American

iii

i wish that kids
shall remain as kids forever
not minding
the color of the skin when they become full blown
adults.

RIC S. BASTASA
Randomly Fools Move Against Strong Sunlight randomly a speck of dust

moves among the myriad dusts
against a ray of noon light
getting inside a door half-open
inside my room

wanton is the action of this glutton ion
in a grand reunion

species of their own kind on trails
so undefined

streamlined untwined
come moonshine

scattered molecules'
ghouls sub-rules and cesspools turning into the whirlpools
of all fools

RIC S. BASTASA
Randomness Of Thoughts

it is a rush,
there is no time anymore,
been busy,
lots of books piling up to read,
lots of papers to write,
many people to please and pamper, all pleasing tiger,
losing all teeth,
resigned
to the comforts of society's pleasures, yet still has to keep on doing
what is it?
no direction, this wind,
no wave, is this sea,
words without assuming any meaning,
flowing
water seeking its own level, and
why are you following?

same here
same there
you &
I,

IN THIS VOID.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rapid Thoughts Without Directions

i see a movie
i expect that at least this will make a difference but it is just like the rest saying love is still the best solution to all the problems of the world i do not even know which to believe now all the actors have the same faces all stories sound like the others the music does not appease me until it ended with the sun at the back of the world hiding
due to shame.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rat 1

IF you read any of my poems do not think that i am in there.
if you think that i am in there you will lose yourself you will be like a stone dropped in the middle of the ocean thinking that i am part of the corals or that i assume the shape of the shark or hitch upon a sperm whale and then you expect that i can take you to places

No. If you read any of my poems think that it is not me in there but someone else, like a rat or a pig, or a dog
the one that looks for something else you know what rats look for cheese, you know what pigs look for,
left-overs, you know what dogs look for,
the bone

then if you have finally finished reading the poem
try reflecting light from the mirror under the bed
and see if there is a face inside it try pondering

or try not even thinking about any of those that drifting cloud resting upon the shoulder of the hill
or the sun shining like a king or the moon cool upon the marshes savoring the peace of the night upon the river's face

now, you are here
there is nothing in there except those feelings.

and you know of course what feelings are. because you are one of them.

cool air, silent sighs, heart beats, rushes of red blood on your cheeks the angry word, the proposition of solitude the pat on the shoulder and then the drying of tears and too the unstoppable laughter the smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rat 10

i am finished
and i wish you well.
take care.
be yourself and please
do not mind me
at all.

i am an empty cup
but i do not wait for any rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
now one can figure out what this really means, except you because this is exclusively for you if you are really true in deciphering what is missing or what is obvious too obvious and too wordy that you cannot finally recognize it but this is all about you your shadow cast in stone it is too small and too deceiving i know what is that verbosity we do it during parties and people misunderstand it and misquote it as the progress of the pillar the stability of the wall the highness of the fence now, i give you a hint and you may not mind it

after all
your world is inhabited by busy letters and not a syllable must be wasted it is the message my dear so do not accuse the messenger.

RIC S. BASTASA
you must have heard about what they are saying.
i say, you have seen shadows cast on the walls of ignorance.
my hands are not birds.
they tell you that they are scissors.
my face does not have gentle eyes did they tell you that what i have are raging balls of fire? i have heard what you have heard too that in my world there lives the eye of the storm that in my orbit, there is this path that destroys evry passer-by or even the innocent traveler, i am tired of all these shadows and shadows

they have not gone deep inside the oceans of my being they have not felt the gentleness of my sands at the bottom they are wrong but in my silence i do not wish to correct that impression.

i know myself and that is enough instruction at the gate of Delphi where Tiresias is waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rat 4

I once laid my body on the white sand somewhere in that place where no one enters as a stranger,

i buried my head in there and tried learning how to breathe without air.

i have learned the meaning of death i have valued the essence of life since then.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rat 5

UP THE Bridge
painted red
one stops his car
and steps outside
to feel
the rage of the sea
below

it is inviting but who wants to respond?

not me.

RIC S. BASTASA
do you remember
rice fields? try imagining the green rice fields,
put some hills
more hills, and put a gap between two hills,
and put the sun shining brightly
and then put some black buffaloes grazing at the foot of the hills, and then on the left side try putting a nipa hut a window and a little girl looking out for sparrows and on the right side put the running river and a jumping fish

do you still think that this could be your home?

RIC S. BASTASA
Rat 7

i imagine you at your office perhaps at the 105th floor and you are busy with your usual paper works everything about strategies how to make more money and deciding about other people's lives, their properties and their liberties

now, try imagining if i can still
imagine
if you can still imagine me?

oh well, forget about it.
i have other plans myself and waiting for you at the ground floor could be nothing but a silly wish.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rat 8

it is nothing about rats.
this is about life.
the universal life, the life of a star
or the survival of the rings of Jupiter

dthis is about the mitosis and the splitting of the atom and the mushroom
and the bikini.

dthis is nothing about ourselves.
this is about a broken world trying to heal the broken patches dthis is about a black hole something that we feel though we have not even seen one dif you are bored di tell you, this is about nothing at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
this morning i read about a red hen laying eggs above the hay stacks
waiting

and there is this young writer saying that he is the hen and that his mentor is the one feeding him and that he is laying the eggs and that he is waiting for a surprise

know what? i get bored about other people's ego

as though everything is about themselves and that i must have to read about them crazy.

sometimes, i feel so angry i like to kill that red hen that has not laid the golden egg.

i feel so humiliated sometimes about self-centeredness

i like to let things pass and then sit alone and empty myself like a bag without any content.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ratatoulie

how a rat
is torn between pretending
to be a rat and a human being

how a rat
dreams
creates invents
mixes
cooks

how a rat
can have taste and language
and
be so different

how a rat
makes you remember
sweet memories
of youth

how a rat
finally becomes so human heart changed

could be
just a story
an ordinary story
to put you
to sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
Re Viewing A Broken Hear t is the moment when you kiss me And hug me that I feel the pain Thinking all the while In said close, tender moment

The shortness of space
The end of time

Between us
The acceptance that the kiss is a marker of our defeat

The passion shall be short Time kills
Time buries me again on the sands of regrets

On the widening space of emptiness We shall left behind us That need for more explanations

When you close your eyes
And without a word
You shall go
And be in the arms of the man that now completely owns you

RIC S. BASTASA
Re: Cleaning Time

it has been quite a long time when the cleaning has not been done the cabinet is dusty and the floors stained the walls bearing the unnecessary marks words of protests are written and the door creaks with hinges not oiled for long today i am looking for the clutter of those i do not need the garbage has to be discarded what has piled must be inspected the unimportant must go i also speak about my anger my indifference my selfishness like garbage they must go too lest i be like those that i have spoken before

RIC S. BASTASA
Read Aloud The Poem Of The Dying Soldier

PLEASE read aloud the poem of the dying soldier in Afghanistan Who gave all his heart, his flesh, his soul, his intestines who spilled his bloood in the desert sands this very hot day because his country has waged a war against Another country away from his home

So God may hear it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Read My Lips

verbal silence. read my lips.
if you see them.
read the words. read it here.

these words. read them like flowers in the garden.

despite these words speak a little.
tips of the iceberg. They are less compared to the color of my eyes the warmth of my fingers the suppressed beatings of my heart.

despite these words that you read.
if only you can see my lips.
if only you can see my face.
and body, naked on the flowing sheet of pure paper. IF only you know what silence means, how emptiness eats it, if only you know how inferior verbs and adjectives are compared to the caresses of the hands and the tenderness of the fingers,
touch.

read the lines silently.
these words do not shape my lips.

they come to your eyes.
in the silence of your understanding.

ever shall they speak about me. they only talk about the hands that write sometimes without any meaning at all.

infinitives are not infinite.
neither do verbs know what is it to be still.
and adjectives talk only about the surface.

depth under, the noise begins.
and silence of the verbs move to another side. now, the mountains of ideas collapse and bury the casualties of silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Read My Mind

would you like the cliche of having to read my lips?
people read lips some people only kiss
to read the essays of the heart some go for love
in bed
wanting to squeeze what juice is there hidden in the pulp bits of suppressed desire they extract
until everything becomes as dry as sponge
deprived of water light as air floating between that space claimed by both the roof and the ceiling

it's funny, you come out of the room with a quiz and there are no answers for there are no questions what do they need from you? you ask. if you pay attention, they only need your time and when this is taken you become one of those thrown away garbage of an imagination flower without petals glass without the gleam of promises.

RIC S. BASTASA
Read My Morning Poem

shake and rattle.
rock and dock.
lick the side of your cup and sip hot coffee and think about what it is to be a loser.

i like your game.
Hide and seek.
Lick and Bite.
Pretend that I love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Read This Aloud

i am beautiful
i am not alone
i am self-sufficient
i am kind
i am happy
i am peaceful
i am living in the grace of God
i am human i have erred &
i am forgiven
i am exuding happiness
i am a ray of hope i am the sun of warmth
i am the rain of satisfaction i fall upon the grass
i give life to the earth i am like a bird singing on a twig i am a song in the air
i am a lotus sitting on a pond of water i am a river flowing peacefully on the banks of the Nile i am the child of the universe i am a star
i am a tree

i am a leaf
i am a rose
i am a sailboat sailing peacefully at sea

i am everything that i can be i am a wish i come true

i am the happy child of God i am loved
i know how to love
i love
i am smiling
my eyes speak
my mouth waters
to the sweetness of this world

i am everything
i am this universe within me.
i believe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reading A Long Letter, Alone

last night he had his back turned at her,

she woke up
watched tv
and wrote a long letter

now he is reading it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reading His Palms For A Hidden Fortune

life's hard he says he is weary
and wants to die

when he sleeps sometimes he looks at the lines of his palms for answers

and then he closes his eyes as his fingers hang freely beyond the edge of his bed

RIC S. BASTASA
Reading Mahmoud Today

he passes away mahmoud, poet of the arab world the greatness of the man so the world shall mourn he met death with a stare of his eyes he too belongs there

he is not his
he is not ours

today there is reason to ponder his life his death his poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
Reading Rumi.....

it is dimming night is coming
the woods will be gone
you only feel what the wind wants to reveal
will it be the same
fear over and over again?
turn on the light
and the music
learn to live with it read rumi.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reading The Poems Of Other People honestly i should be flattered why you keep on following every poem that i have written

i know how hard it is since there are thousands and thousands of these posts,

i know what you think that poems are maps
towards
who i am really

roads that lead to a city
a rainbow that gives the myth
that at the end of it is the
pot of gold

you really flatter me but what if these are not maps

or there is no rainbow of there is no
pot of gold?

what if we have the same
thinking
that there is really no self

no city no map
what if there are only whims

or there is only shame or death

what if these are just footsteps of a lost man
and at the end there is only a cliff

where the man jumped and killed
himself

it could be so horrible

RIC S. BASTASA
Reading Your Love Poems

how i wish i could have written much better about my last nights with her her 30 styles of moaning a la

script of the vaginal monologues her way of conquering my territory and putting her mark of flag somewhere behind my back as i bite my lips
because of a blending of both pain
and pleasure and some others which words evidently fail in representing what ecstasy was there on those last five nights moonstruck about everything that was both hot and wet i bowed and stared at the center of my being

the sun turned off
the moon disappearing breathed snoring
in tiring perfection

love too elusive
to the hands of words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reading Your Sad Letters From Far Away

twas like making commercial hotcakes

mass made and sold at a cheaper price

then given to everyone who even do not need it feeling so cheap and vulgar and i said thanks anyway

keep the trade make the cakes and fill the world with stuff like that solve the hunger that is no longer there. Precisely.

emote freely, keep safe and

just just be happy in the most simple terms

do not complicate what is at most honest and sane.

RIC S. BASTASA
Real And Unreal...

in the imaginary garden the real toads are croaking in that imaginary room a real person is thinking
in that imaginary thought some real things
are broken.

RIC S. BASTASA
Real Beauty.....

love the wantonness
of the noodle

there is not much beauty in a manicured garden nothing in so much order just structures

do not put on a frame a falling leaf

do not detach the sea or the lake

at random, in chaos, perhaps under no law

real beauty lives as it dares.

RIC S. BASTASA
Real Fiction.....

There is a conversation where we keep on talking but we are never really involve as we tend to show it,

we name names, and try to make the impression that they are not really us we concoct imaginary stories but which really happened where we are really the characters involved but because we are not acceptable by this earth's standard we tell them those who listen that these are all the makings of the mind but the fiction was so real, images so vivid, places so tangible like rocks and brooks, and the birds that we tell flew away from us left some eddies to our minds and their minds wonder why there are winds in their ears too circling and soon have made tornadoes carrying them away all at once and they no longer know where they are and where they live and what their names are you are with them all the while assuring them that soon this will end that there will be no pain in this imagination that they are not really true that soon everything will return back to normal that everything is fine. But soon there will be another screaming and they will find that you are no longer there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Real Is Beautiful

when you go back from where you once stayed
you notice that there is a wrong there and it is messy very messy

and your friends who cannot believe it call your attention

it is a shame they say and it will be damaging to my reputation but i have no plan correcting it i leave it there to show me who i was and why i am at present elevating myself to another level after all i am the fruit of so many errors an improvement of my past mistakes and i am real

and so i leave things as they are unretouched and no matter how erroneous they had once become i still think that they are so beautiful because they are real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Real Play

this is no longer the play of children
when we begin to look at the sun direct to our gazes when what we see is too much
light
that hurt us when everything that spreads when we close our eyes to rest
is all bloody red

this is not a play anymore the silence is too mature it can kill

i may excuse myself for a while take my sleep
get rid of you
and forgive myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Realities And Illusions...

far pastures are always greener
the sea out there beyond this horizon is deep blue
in our deserts
there is a show of mirages floating princesses hazy kingdoms
air fantasies

others are so realistic and perhaps luckier they always love what is here and care for the now
the distance is an illusion beyond us is a rarefaction
light bends and begins to lie...

RIC S. BASTASA
Realities Of Our Lives

on the day that we were born we were tight and glossy they worship our slightest smile our laughter they always adore they are proud of our hair everything in us is divine time strips us slowly the days peel us

we are like slaves stripped of every possession

we bleed and we shed off tiny layers of our skins the surface gives up to what is deep within our structure there are pains
stabs of light and piercing stares we are laden with guilt and we go to some places to unload what seems to sink us to the bottom of our chaos

soon, time is fed up laughing at the way our bones rankle proclaiming its triumph over every loss we have

we are not shaken to this truth about dying and the fact that soon we will be forgotten we were so kind to give up everything we were so truthful to our nature we are strangers and we are not permanent dwellers here we tell time we were meant for something beyond it we are loved by the gods and we finally join them for the final feast of our lives.
Reality

for all its failings Reality is still lovable
because it is the only truth
available
it is the only door that leads to freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
you sleep in bed till 10 o’clock in the morning the room is closed the only hum you hear is the electricity
of the aircon,
light from the keyhole
strikes at your leg
it hurts
your eyes half open you want to set it aside you move a leg
and the light is still there sticking to the wall you close your eyes again there is nothing to do yesterday you get fired
and there is no
rumor about another job this is it
let somebody worry about you
there is nothing
you can do about them tonight mouths will scream at you
the light in the keyhole
is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reality And Fantasy

i

he turns into a frog that night when his wife kissed him on his lips

ii

the curse goes on until his paramour kisses his navel
and swears that she loves him

(not his money)

iii

his pocket is emaciated like a malnourished African child that worst drought in the history of the desert

iv

if he strips himself of all his skin an expose himself candidly to the sun of truth bare and naked
he becomes a king again in the castle of his dreams

v

meanwhile sleep takes him death sits beside him with a lasting reminder ‘thou must be pure’

RIC S. BASTASA
reality has a picture an old one, still black and white for which i have this love-hate relationship of keeping it and then throwing it away
again

reality has a way of showing me that i cannot escape and here i am as always visiting it alone when no one is watching we are friends finally and we keep secrets

reality knows how to keep this secret this Sphinx of my mind that black bird with strong wings that can fly away whenever it likes
to and stay on top of the situation saying:

' i can manage the weight of silence'

reality this venomous snake that bites me and can kill me
even but through time i have taken much dose by dose teeth to teeth

and so i gained this immunity of death and pain

'we get attuned
to heat'

the desert has this wisdom
somehow

reality is skin to my bones and flesh or bones and blood wrapped in sealed

epidermic containers

i have all the options for lying like the other woman next door
and then suffer
and then be too unhappy or just
be the happiest man
for the moment

two faces, day and night when we get older we know what is this all about and it is not even worth mentioning at all

RIC S. BASTASA
sometimes
it will take time to know that not everyone loves you and when you finally find
this
the world becomes so real as in truth
if it is made of love as others want to impress you with in the earlier days of your life it too is made up of hate, and as i discovered it myself
lately, in fact,
it is composed more of those elements
of indifference
as you see there are more rocks, sands,
trees, stones,
driftwood
cliffs, and deep oceans

less are the bridges
rainbows, rivers,
lesser are the lovers, those good men with pure hearts,
least is love and affection
kisses nil
hugs rare.
there is something inside him that moves it feels like a sparrow wanting to take flight from his mouth which had been closed for quite a time now soon it will come out and he imagines something more beautiful than a sparrow this beautiful thing could also be a bud wanting to come out from his teeth to bloom into a red, red rose the beauty of a flight finally coming out from its shell of a mouth or the red, red rose slowly unfolding to meet its perfection but along this imagination reality, as usual, bites, and keeps on biting like a snake releasing its deadly venom to his veins his fear has finally come this something is neither a sparrow nor a rose the following morning he wakes up spitting it out and it is nothing but just this usual human spittle and it stinks......

RIC S. BASTASA
Dream! Dream! Dream!
Fly! Fly! Fly! into the blue, blue, blue skies

Then you tire your wings of dreams your wings that fly and fly into the blue skies

Then you rest and pause and fall to this rugged land

It is rough and rocky and graveled and sandy It is hot and arid hurting your eyes your legs your feet

What you see and feel is reality And you do not have wings now All your dreams did not come true

In this reality, I welcome you partner.

we shall live here for a while.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reality Is An Elephant

reality is an elephant
what you touched was only the trunk be not blinded by the hand or the eyes

or take it from Plato the kitchen is only a deception it is just a play of the shadows of the cups and saucers

the forks and spoons and napkins are all illusions

RIC S. BASTASA
Reality Is Killing Lots Of People

reality has been killing a lot of people those who dare sometimes they do not recover despite the surrender hands raised and heads bowed reality still kills heads hanging on the gallows wrists cut and bubbling foams on the mouth that case of poisoning was never incidental it was real and true and harsh but that is what reality does the only thing that kills reality is not rage

there is this submission to truth the gentleness of acceptance the tranquility of avowal the simmering of guilt to the divine the touch of the hand of God the light eternal that pierces the darkness of the crevices of our souls

it is only this when reality is dead and you find yourself
alive
beaming with light
teeming with life so silent in your newly found joy still unnamed
undefined.

RIC S. BASTASA Reality Is...

the good ones die young, the swindlers thrive and the crooks progress
the hero unlike in the movies dies earlier and the antagonists
party.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reality On Sunday Mass

the sunday sermon of the priest on tv sometimes becomes noise
to me but in reverence of the church
i do not switch if off i do not change the channel
like the life we live we tolerate
the religion of the angry self-righteous and always soliciting
church

RIC S. BASTASA
Reality...

outside the door
as you close it
you say it is sunny
and the clouds are blue and the sky is clear like a transparency of a class,

inside your head
there are dark clouds and when you sleep in bed when the heart beats faster and faster you see a heavy downpour of rain as you close your eyes as your fingers begin to shape a fist,

the room is one empty storage of chaos
the confusion is spacious and something cannot really be filled,

unless, you retrace
some steps behind you until, you say
i accept i have not been loved enough and that you have never loved that much in return.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reality... Three

the sun is up
at 8 o'clock and here on this muddy path we meet

i know you
i look down my feet
you pass by me
i see only your shadow
at a side glance

you take a past pace
i think you even want to have wings and fly that instant

this is what mutual dislike is all about.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reality...One

in a field of grass underneath the morning clouds a man with a black hat white polo and marine blue pants rides on a red motorbike followed by a brown dog and a black horse

one upon the other they tread upon the road that you are talking blue birds fly the skies above the poplars

RIC S. BASTASA
Reality...Two
	hree well covered farmers plow the rice fields beating the carabao
under a drizzle of soft rain this november

at the right side of this scenery a herd of carabaos graze vast expanse of grass and beside them two children flying kites.

on the telephone wire
two finches watch

RIC S. BASTASA
Realization

to give and give and want nothing in return that is the higher realization the left hand is a doer the right hand

is blind.

RIC S. BASTASA
when we meet
i see hallways and a gate and a hollow alley and i have not hesitated to bribe the guards
and so i had all the ease going in where i am not supposed
to be because i ought not to belong there
damp rooms
and dusty curtains
and rusty pipes

faucets leaking
and rats
running on the ceiling and cockroaches
stepping on cheese and
bread

flies on cold coffee and fleas
on the off-white linens

i give in because you are there waiting for me
and in this kind of compromising situations

i have always been
weak.
Realization....

at the height of fifty thousand feet where the island looks like a mole on the cheek

you begin to realize everything in life
is so uncertain

death can happen anytime
anywhere
and there is only one of you....

then you hate
thinking about everything that much

RIC S. BASTASA
Realizations

it was not that long ago when i want to give you something smooth
as silk
or soft as a morning glory petal
those which are understandable and clear
and acceptable

it is like a sculpture of a chair
edges smooth well defined
ends

or a baby with a smile as real as bow and arrow

but time makes us strange
and make us pretend that we understand everything
everything

there is something that justifies our age and that is when we begin to accept the unreal and embrace the absurd as though they are our genitals

they are here
and we become a part of them without any questions asked and then we become as happy as the breeze of the sea early one morning

the reasons become accessories and then finally they are nothing but left-overs that we feed
to the dogs unfed for days

RIC S. BASTASA
Realizing Reality...

we have been filled
to the brim
our contents are overflowing what is it that we can choose?
except to empty what is full to discard what we think we can we do not rationalize anymore there is simply no place for
this
at this time of the state of our affairs when we are moving without an exact direction where we have to confess that all our compasses
are broken
our fingers do not point to the north
the skies are cloudy
and cold
in such a paradox of cold
and heat
all co-existing actually we must profess that understanding had always been at a loss
the confusion is gaining ground and then we begin to understand
we walk cool
there is no rush
our minds are empty
and we have become so confident saying this is it
this after all is the truth of my existence this purposeless life this non-fulfillment
of desire
this luster lust then we stand against the sunset welcoming whatever happens what happens happens
and must happen
and what do we have we have nothing
to lose

oh, pinch us we are real now
we are not sands anymore but stones

RIC S. BASTASA
Really Maddening....

for how long?
i ask myself.
for how long? i ask myself again
and again

you will not understand this question
you cannot relate
we are so private in this secret but it is indeed sad

for how long? it's been twenty years, it's been twenty long enduring
years

maybe not, maybe be no more
next year. It is really maddening.

RIC S. BASTASA
but i am used to these bad times
you see these happen most of the time, we get used to these bad times and after a while we are no longer affected, no longer ruled by these bad times and we become numb like we are prepared for an operation like the way how my gallbladder was removed four years ago and people
call me sweet and women taste me and say i am sweet and i like it

the bitterness is gone now and i am ready for something new something sweeter come what may i have open arms and interesting eyes that speak the language of

yucks! lust.

do you want to taste this chunk of lust?
or a slice of happiness? they call it love, endearment, but i like it when it is simply called by its plain name no euphemisms

lust, lust, lust, just lust, no heart i want a heartless love affair one that does not hurt

let me share it with you, but first tell me were you once bitter too?

Reaping What You Once Sowed...

many years ago
there was no closeness that stone that i was cannot remember

now, there is a tree touching the sky
on cold mornings

it has an intimacy with
the sun
and you look at it with admiration

you are the grass now the bird in you has flown away you want to be counted as part of the element of the sky it is too late they have known much of you and you fall short of the greatness

that they now possess

accept that life is like a wheel
you are not part of the hub
you are the beetle crushed
and dead....

RIC S. BASTASA
Rearrangement Of A Poem

there is hope because someone still believes and there is love because there is still hope and the inner flame remains because there is love

thanks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reason

i won't touch you
i only take a look and feast my eyes on you i know what happens when i touch you you turn into stone and i become fire that cannot burn you i burn all night and day because i cannot touch you because i won't dare

i burn all of myself without gaining from this heat i burn myself in sleep

there is reason that this fire cannot burn it is like you it is stone it is the only one that i can touch the one that now i can fully trust this stone is cold it is very cold look at me the burning finally stopped look at me and if you must feel me to your hands i am dust i am ashed

RIC S. BASTASA
Reasons

do not reason like a stone staring at you asking for some justifications about the flowing of a river.
Thoughs, plain thoughts. Nothing to argue about how the feet must go, without the hands.
There is no sense. The head keeps dignity.
And the heart plans a revolt of an outburst of red....more red, like a blend of carrots and a squeeze of oranges, and a roast Splashes of blues and greens.
Strokes. Brushes of realities.
Blend. White and Black. Faceless.
You are a brick wall. Tinged. Tanned.

You pretend walking on the sea. You ask for flight. This is the island of loneliness.
There is no boat. No bridges. Just hands without fingers. Mouth without lips. Shine.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reasons For Rapture

damn were reasons for rapture more are coming and the heart merely listens weak, and submissive to the speed of the brain's efficient delights: logic, pertinence, materiality, relevance,

reason brags, a smooth line, without curves, a stare of the eyes, unblinking to emotions, if this is this, then this must be that,
and given the facts, these are the only possibilities, nothing obscure, nothing absurd, and everything went on smoothly like a jet propulsion creating a smoke sort of impression on the clouds on that clear day when you held your hand at the tip of your cap, solid and stable, on the day of the hearts, where can reason be?

you receive no calls, no text, no card, this is passe, no rose, no email, no greetings from the gate or the path where you pass your life, tears flow like regret that came late, always late, well, this is not the end, you are strong, you know what to do, embrace reason again, and feel like a new machine.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rebecca

your father killed a friend of his and now he is in jail and what your mother knows is only to put the kettle over a fire to make water hot she does not know how to make you all siblings live and grow to be reliable men and women and so you are here with us to help us on our domestic chores: wash the dishes clean the house nurse grandmother and cook our meals years of your hardlife trust solidifies and now you tell us that you are going to marry this hardworking man from Cotabato we like you. to stay. but no we cannot hold you as your eyes speak of a flaming love our hands hold a dove and we open them to let this dove fly to her destiny just like you rebecca you shall be free now go! find the path where your heaven lies Rebecca For The Third Time

whoever put the bust of Abraham Lincoln by that door
must be answerable
to you Rebecca.

May your soul rest in peace for slamming Hilaire Belloc's
door.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rebecca On Another Note

why did you slam the door?
now, do you regret that you have finally died just because you slam
the door
and then this poet who writes about you
kills you with a mere slam?

don't you think that he is not just witty but too
a little bit cruel?

RIC S. BASTASA
Rebirth

from the fertile grounds of
silence

your tender caress

shall give fruit
to a very lovely
smile

to the envy
of the moon

RIC S. BASTASA
inside my mind are the stories they all related to me when i was small, mama, what i like about mama, was her story about the elastic man, who saved his woman of affection from the deep well by simply extending his rubber hands.
papa cannot be outdone, who with his reserved silence, when we rode horses, and checked the tenants of the land, told about the story of the emperor who had no clothes, my son be always aware that people cannot be trusted verify, check, counter check, do not believe outright.

there were myths, and parables, there are theories so many reminders about survival kits, about being calm and reasonable, there is no rush, time heals, people forget, sins are forgiven, matters of the heart must be kept inside the chest, and the family must always be the first to consider, less travels, save money, keep secrets, everything in moderation, keep the readings, donate to the church, be friendly with the powers that be, compromise with the communists, give in to what you cannot control, save the house, remember friends, be kind to animals, i am sculpted. I am like a stone shaped by the rain and the air. I am tired. But i am not giving up. I like to be a new house, not the renovated ancestral one.

I like to be in a strange place. I am going away then.

at the top of the mountain alone, (and powerful) where i can think more, discard all my built-in beliefs, i carry nothing. i talk to the wind. I look over the plain.

I sit alone and watch
the moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Recall The Vow

in your troubled times when yourself
appears as three separate entities

the id
go and superego

when all of them
fight
for their rights

and you go crazy
driving three horses in different directions on the same
chariot and
yoke

you call them let them sit comfortably
before you
and discuss the point
of peace

where they can be united

you recall the vow
the covenant
of lust
and love and standards

give them a day
each
to live and breathe
give them
each the space
y they all deserve

now be free

RIC S. BASTASA
Recalling The Thousand Cranes

if you recall i made a thousand paper cranes too
hoping to save a soul from the body of the burning flesh

the ten thousand cranes were useless

she died. i live.

RIC S. BASTASA
Receive What Ye Shall Ask

receive, ..Ask, .......................... and ye shall So.. i........................................... did..did i So? my answer... was swift, harsh was my answer what is asked..for was not..............my anwer i needed what i received.... to me unbeknown answered.....................are prayes sometimes underlyings within graced you least expect by them delivered, Him should we Give, for such privilege we thank, ....all in newfound wisdom, our needs, for receiving, receive...... what ask shall, .............................. yeah, .......yeah, ........yeah

RIC S. BASTASA
Recent Instructions From Noel

Always make your future bigger than your past Always make your contribution bigger than your reward Always make your performance greater than the applause Always make your gratitude greater than you success

On the premise:

That there is a future
That there is a contribution That there is performance That there is gratitude

There is no future, no contribution, no performance, no gratitude

The past shall be erased, the reward does not matter
The applause unnecessary and the success a surplusage

I do not need a reward, an applause,
And I do not need any success

Finding a soul in paper clip Finding a frog croaking in my throat

There is simply no brain on this bond paper

Air in a vacuum

A grand future in today’s little happy faces

A red rose tattoo inside my ailing heart

The best talk in my silence as mute as A dead ant that cannot climb
The coconut tree

Of the elephant in my palm Or that little bird in my hand And we were guessing Whether it is alive or dead
The little child always laughs at everything And we simply do not know His logic
We forget once our childlikeness

We simply forget
The reason of the heart

It is simple

There is no future in my books
There is only today

God bless you, Noel

I always Live for today
The moment
The second
I always see my life in the fresh leaves of lettuce My future in that in the red rose dewy in the flower vase of transparent glass

And what IS that?

Yes, eternity in the grain of sand Today in the glowing dew.

RIC S. BASTASA
Recklessness

we were not reckless really when we were so young your cheeks as pink as peaches my fingers as firm as twigs you got hurt you once told me when i had fears touching you we were so young then and the words of the elders were always harsh and threatening

we were not reckless really we always obeyed them bowing our heads and kissing their hands and not answering back and obeying them without any complaint

we were not reckless to the letter of the law and to every dictates of their cruelty and they successfully crushed the love that was so lively inside our young hearts and then they all died and we offered prayers but deep within our hearts we wanted to tell them they have caused us so much sorrow and now we do not really know how to be happy we have forgotten every guide even for little joys they have converted us into stones numb, unfeeling and dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reclining Woman

because i love you
i can make use of a single line and in an instant see you:

a face
a body reclining
on a sofa.

RIC S. BASTASA
Recognizing Her Excellence

my attention shall be focused on her she glows like a star now and i look at her in the sky i smile
she was once from the earth where i live
where i am mud
where i am a part of the sand
sometimes
where i once told her this place is not for you you are destined for something higher
than us

you are one of the daughters of the gods and you must rise and take your right
to be

good luck....

RIC S. BASTASA
Recoil

now i am king and now this is my universe.

and that comforts us once again that when no one is reading or watching then dance as though it is your last sing as though no one likes to listen

live life
the way life wants itself to be lived in such a short moment let there be no rules, let every line be free let there be only you in this office break, and say to yourself i am not dead yet

RIC S. BASTASA
i went back
looking at old pictures mama's smile when she got hospitalized for diabetes stings me existence

as though there was something wrong with me when she was
there

papa was well behaved during my wedding i recalled
he was never one like that before maybe he was happy either to get rid of myself in his house
or that i shall suffer the same predicament which he had entangled himself
when he got married
to my mother

i can be unfair
i can be ignorant as you like to see me
as a blank wall

bad thoughts
lonely memories
the incapacity
to remember
some happy moments
despite their detected presences
but i wonder sometimes how things may appear different
from a distance
that i measure
upon myself

it is like i have bad pieces of me that i form into a collage
and yet when i look at it from afar say here it has become the best painting
that for once
has brushed inside
my
mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
Recollecting The Shattered Pieces

if living life and recollecting its shattered pieces is as easy as gathering calachuchi flowers and making it into a garland for your neck
i could have done that even in a few minutes for i have long hands and my arms are still strong and i can still climb like the coconut man but it is never like that
and it is never the same as it once used to be

my lungs have dried and narrow tubes
like the thin capillaries of a leaf
which you inserted in one of those pages
of your book

i always ask for air more and more air but you heard nothing like this world which holds all the air from the trees and the seas and yet has nothing
to give
to that dying person in need.
Reconciliation

on slow calculated steps
shall you approach a door
you knock
there is no hesitation for a reconciliation on a remorse pain shall be forgotten
and then the door
shall open
the embrace waits
tears fall.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reconciliation Day...

rock the world
leave the past
dance with the hot bodies of the present, drink
margaritas, and forget bloody Mary, think of the future as your child running to be embraces by your strong hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reconstructing A (3) ....

Love, Friendship
Prayers
you can always have them and give them anytime...

Smiles,
Hugs,
they are always there for free...

All these, Aldo, the kind friend, is always willing to give
At any time.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reconstructing A. (2) ...

WE met at the mall and you look so beautiful in your outfit must be made exclusively for you

...

but i have decided to forget you.
i can.

i do not own you.
you are anchored to your own shoulders.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reconstructing A....

TO forgive and love you again let me see, let me see let me sleep my night through, let my money comfort me without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reconstructing An Image Of Self

to reconstruct
he took some portraits of himself, in different angles,
went to the photo editor adjusted the lighting,

contrast, experimenting on the hues the frames, and then saves each reconstruction, abstracts, hides the bad spots revises,
and then puts the mixture of gray and white,

someone opens it
and sees the different faces of yourself and concludes that indeed you are in deep thought contemplating
on shedding off
the unwanted ugliness that had long been residing in you
it makes the feeling that contains that needed
saving grace

it can be a lie
but it can also be redeeming

I've seen it myself i feel the gladness of the soul in me

go on, take more, reconstruct some more live!

live!
make the most of life
hide the ugliness
embrace the power of life that beauty promises to give
you

is it a lie?
don't bother
make use of the bad
side
take it to the good......

RIC S. BASTASA
Reconstructing The Self...

finally he fell into the trap of his own thinking a spider's web that his own saliva had woven now unable to move
like a baby elephant not overgrowing the very rope that tied it to his youth

it is here where chaos destruction and explosion must play their own parts
to rebuild subsumes within its own skin
that capacity to self-destruct three days three nights another you must be born again a new pair of eyes that can withstand the latest light of the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Reconstruction Game

you know
that when i write
i am not
inside
myself, i am somewhere else and you try to catch me with a phrase that reminds me of someone that you know
i love, but i have outlived your wits
and i have learned to live somewhere else where you do not know
how to find me,
and i keep talking
and you pretend to listen but there is no
meeting here
just the passing by and letting go
and yet keeping in touch just in case
things break down and we need each other
again
to reconstruct
and
be whole again
like

a machine with its bolts and screws.

RIC S. BASTASA
Recovery Disc

i know what you are up to.
i know that you do not forget pain and i know that that pain is still there and no matter how you hide it it comes like smoke from an old dirty chimney
and at winter time it shows all the black soot the gray smoke from the house to the sky

i know that when you invite me you do not really mean to please me.
you just want to show the changes in the house the rearrangement of the furniture it no longer the rose in the vase but a carnation that you say is loved by another but not you

i know what you are up to but i have already prepared myself for that in my heart i must tell you pain has no bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Recuerdos De La Alhambra

the walls listen to the sounds of spanish guitar
strings playing the

recuerdos de la Alhambra
silence stills itself

on this windless noon the fan did not move and the wooden chair is stifled if it has hands it would have chifted and it if has the mouth it would have said

'sublime! '

the carpet that keeps the pin
does not have wings

it transcended the feet a revered existence

lofty, splendiferous.
i felt something diving
penetrating my emptiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Red African Daisies

texts red African daisies that i carry in my hand remind me of mother and her anger

for once i was her son and i uprooted all the African daisies from her garden and let them all die under the sun that was during the middle of Lent when Christ they say suffered and finally died. That was the time when knew for once what rebellion was.

RIC S. BASTASA
Red Carnation

draw is nothing more attractive as a defense of pretense than a red carnation in the pocket of my black suit

it is the fire that catches you and here i am
appearing as your cage of love you expect more fire in this you are more beautiful now as you finally taste ash and feel the powder of burnt

skin.

draw is no fire in me not anymore none anymore there is only this oblivion see it and leave me i am bothered no more

RIC S. BASTASA
Red Flower

you are a red flower on red leaves
on red stalks
on red branches on a red soil fronting the red mountains
and the red wind

you doubt whether you have red eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Red Rose

red rose raped
apparently for no reason by this bee
without a sting

well, what nature can hand on a stingless bee is a verdict of an acquittal midlife crises

that is the ground
precisely

RIC S. BASTASA
Red Sando

black out.

on the other side
i hear your voice

i peep
seeing you in red sando
your face
against the candle light sweet voice

red sando to me is the fire of
love
radiating waves
of desire

i am wrapped in this
darkness
on the wrong wishes

i must study restraints
again
in chapter one.

i know i can' t have you i know, i know

you belong to someone else ditto with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Red Skies

that afternoon the skies are red as tulips
the emotions however are like stones
gray and dry

the world is sac-like

and one wonders
if music as a harmony within the heart of
solitude
can still jibe

come to think about it
the active element
is still you

work it out then like a piece of art

a sculpture of rivets
a canvass of smoke
a poem about chalk
and erasers,

diverse, reverse, collide like water molecules in sulfuric acid

RIC S. BASTASA
Red Sun, Black Air, Tiny Lights Of The City

Red glowing sun, fire, flames, hot spittles
To the tiny lights of the city, this city of sin, Black air that we breathe, smoke rising from Our hair, warmth from our armpits, sighs and Quivers, the longings that never stop, and the Rain that fall heavily today, our thirsts still Thirsting, our hungers still hungry, our instincts For destruction coming out from our throats and Hands, we can do more than what Is expected

We break some twigs, we pluck some flowers We never thought about the problem of how To reconnect twigs and flowers and scents

God creates, and we are so hardheaded Ours is always to destroy and then leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
Redeem Yourself, Boy

You botched
the last blow job but can redeem yourself on this one

compensate now for some fault repair the defect

the redeeming feature of the plan
its simplicity

your saving grace your sense of humor

Shop for books,
music
and more

FREE

restore honor, worth, reputation fulfill a pledge convert

save yourself from a state of sinfulness
and its consequences

such is the meaning of the word
redemption

RIC S. BASTASA
Reductionist

you do not have to give me the whole of you to love you a piece of your mind is enough it may not last a lifetime but it may help me survive as i begin to gather the shattered pieces of my being, as i begin to assemble my eyes, my nose my arms that you have taken.

RIC S. BASTASA
Redundancies

the contract is null and void it was part and parcel of the fraud involving Cash money laundered in Hot heat

such is a Dark black night Frozen ice still hangs on the trees True fact it is with a muddled Past history Free gift from his lover taken from a Safe haven the Time period must also have Basic fundamentals
it is my Considered opinion that the End result even though of Different kinds involving as it is with Individual persons and their Personal opinion leaning on True facts are as Equally as good as ours Combined into one and then by Consensus of opinion and Lapse in time let me think that First and foremost everything shall be Full and complete at last we have come to the final end

Stupid idiot

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflect Light

be a mirror
reflect whatever light is available under the bed
give them what they give you
it will not be too generous but it will be fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflecting Upon A Series Of Experiences For This Day.....

The experience has always been a shaping and reshaping seemingly without end like a journey to a horizon that has no limit to the exhaustion of the eyes.

It will always be an invention, and reinvention, like having to hope for hope because there is nothing good happening to life, it is like looking at a room, sitting on a sofa, staring at the ceiling, looking beyond the glass window by your side, and always asking, why is this room always unfinished, this house always a question of why? and for all we know, we fail to look at our own feet, to reflect our eyes on the mirror and assure ourselves that the hours actually also know how to wait for answers, actually, when i look at myself, i look at a stranger, but i know the name of course, but there is more beyond to this name, there is something speaking but never really known something inside us, that is with us, but detached, talking with all honesty, saying

'You are wrong! There is something that you need to correct!'

Tell her, do not be afraid, Go! Go!

This is divided self, inside it, in this chest, there are small cabinets, more doors, more windows, and endless tunnel without light.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection 0.2

when you arrive here
there is no stone not a single stone there is no moss not a single hair of a green moss then there was the pain of waiting time is always delaying its coming trains stopped and cars are having flat tires but you are faithful you keep on waiting you entertain promises like dear memories or dreams or wishes that come true somehow and you waited for so long now this place is filled with stones and moss grow in each body of the stone the waters spread their territories and land is emaciated and the house is covered with water and the roof is gone and there is nobody here anymore and it is only i who remember you and i tell them about you and they do not believe me and i feel like i am a ship that just sunk.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection 0.3

when loneliness is overwhelming miracles happen

tables speak to chairs and chairs are amazed to their new actions

the roof cannot be stopped telling something to the floor and the garden too and the fence and the stair and all of them here entangled in a relationship of such closeness that you begin to stop thinking about how to end and lose yourself

presences are born and they begin to speak and it is you who has become one inanimate human figure

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection 0.4

here i am turning off the stereo of my car listening to the silence inside that now
tries to speak to me in the language that it knows the one without words of course the one that only both of us can understand without really trying: the car and i.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection 0.5

there is always this unspeakable happiness when after the day
you have inculcated some ideas to the young minds
honing them hoping that they shall find themselves in greater heights that they shall rise above the sources of their inferior beings that as students soon they shall realize that they can be much better than you their mentor

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection 0.6

as i told you once when it rains in pours

you break the good news you now have a new found job in canada now it is raining luck all over you wait when it shall rain men and money

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection 0.7

i got your missed call
i was then too busy and almost forgot about it until this morning when i am overridden with guilt i call you back asking why you called and you tell me that she is finally breaking up with you and selling the house and lot where both of you had been living for 25 years

she will get everything as you had never been gainfully employed and you say that you will leave even before the sale and shall settle in the farms somewhere in Davao to live alone there and i say that is just perfect with an inspiration that you will have then a very good chance of beginning anew

find a new one who loves you without cost and finally forget her as she does not deserve you and i end the conversation with don't worry there is always a place for everyone under the sun that there will always be new beginnings and that no one is poor or rich forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection 0.L

we live in this same house it is big and the living room is having three sofas and the stairs are narrow like a single bamboo it is designed in such a way that departure is nil that we must get inside and never bother thinking about getting out we know leaving is extremely painful even if there is a promise that someday wounds can heal and we take pride that we have forgotten but leaving is a reality it is flood a deluge and we are invaded with water and we drown that is how we feel when we speak about stairs and roads you know i write this because i remember you see how smooth is my skin and there is no sign that there was once a wound here it is only you who knows where it is but i will not ask you anymore for details we speak about something else about the boat the wend sliding smoothly under the bridge and the man that sang you a song when you pass overhead like a bird flying away

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection 1

yes, Luisa, the more we think about our future,
the more we forget the present look at us, our faces are folding like tents in the middle of the rain because we have thought much about the future sunshine

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection 88..

on a small aquarium we can always be small fishes on the generosity of sharing whatever available space

but we are not destined to be simply like that everyday our gills breath for the salt of the ocean dreaming of the corals on the deepest ocean floors and then we are finally thrown to the sea

the oceans challenge us to swim faster
and fathom more depths
we develop our own radars
we grow into the sizes of whales
and some opted
as sharks

that is life again air that always occupies volume

flexible like rubber without that snap

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflection Upon A Nail

How can all those hammers
hide the sharpness of a nail
- a body drawn to the grave of wood
its head
finally lost with so much
force?

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflections

i

a certain garden is in flames
i wonder
who put one of the leaves on fire she calls it my garden of wonder

ii

she continues
that her heart can take any form a grazing grass for goats a nunnery for spinsters for the caterpillars, a big leaf a cradle for a baby dinner table for two a handkerchief for tears

iii

he says he only believes in
love
hate is only its absence where a queue ends it always ends in the love of humanity

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflections 101

he writes not because he wants to be read and be understood

got him wrong really he writes because he likes to live

life writes upon himself and so he writes upon life too.

RIC S. BASTASA
this is not a matter of search
anymore
but an addiction a routine that you take day by day because you have no one to talk to or if some people enter your door and talk to you it is nothing but the objectivity of a certain professional determination no one talks about directions here or the significance of a thought
or the finding of the correct meaning of life
everyone is preoccupied with problems and there seems to be no solution anymore that clicks to what must be or ought to be people are crazy falling into traps of a meaningless existence
they know it
but refuses to acknowledge it and you keep on staring to the faces that becomes a circus performance
tightropes and acrobatics then you look outside the window towards the sea and say what a wasted life what a fool have we all become all for the money and so much garbage.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflections On Good Friday Of Lent

reflections on good Friday are always personal.
there is this room which is also very personal.
you are there and He is there and both of your are having a very personal talk, you do not share it, it is very personal there is a room inside your heart, and He is there listening to you.
He lives there all the years of your life and you still do not believe it.
On good Friday you take the episodes of your life and you simply remember those that give you pain, less those that make you happy, images, so many images come like guest on a feast which is very personal, you serve them drinks, and food and then all of you begin to remember and agree to forgive and then all of them leave and you tell them it is good that everything is now forgotten.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflections On The Water

A Blue cloud shaped like a bird
spreading its wings
on the water,

a clover leaf falls
creating some ripples

a fish jumping
trying to reach an odd shaped flying
insect,

my face is crooked
waving like a silk scarf

reflections of half truths but naked still

RIC S. BASTASA
Reflejo De Luna

the way to dance
i hold your hand
you hold mine and i signal through my body that we move one step for ward and then two steps backward and later for a variation
when we sweat we move side-wise back and forth like a leaf blown by the east and west monsoons.
in this broad day light, the moon and the stars can be felt by the
locks of our hair
by the tips of
our warm fingers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Refraction

between you
and me
something
bends

RIC S. BASTASA
Regaining Freshness

every time that i say your name my wilting tongue, a leaf about to fall, slowly regains its green freshness maybe, not for long, it will slide back to the branch of my throat and fall back to the blooming
petals of my heart

Matag litok ko sa imong ngalan, ang lawos kong dila, dahon nga hapit na unta matagak, inanayng nalunhaw pag-usab.
Hayan, dili madugay motidlom kini balik sa sanga sa akong tutunlan ug mopatighulog ngadto sa mao pay pagbukhad nga biyuos sa akong kasingkasing.

Vicente Bandillo

RIC S. BASTASA
Regaining The Prestige

all you have to do is wait.
you do not have to do anything.
let them finish
themselves off, and you who merely sit and stand and sit again
regains what is reserved for the chair and the window
frame.

hope you know that there is always a season for everything leaves fall seeds crack
the fish that hibernates you think is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Regarding The Massacre

23 is not a stagnant number of the massacre
it will rise like the tide till it gets to a hundred more these insane murders in the name of politics

a white foreigner beside me chats with his Filipina girlfriend saying that life is insane he makes a point, i agree, deadth is inflicted and there will be no reasons left i have another definition of life now.

It is insane.

RIC S. BASTASA
i do not know much about turtles but i like to know one they say turtles are not really slow they are just gentle and cool
as they live more in the water rather than on land

i have regrets though not having known
that turtles
just want to be slow and be not rushed
like they are forced to be what they are not

by this rabbit
but there's one thing though that hurts when turtles claim the value of rationality as though it is the only ingredient of a good personality

i like to say, i like emotions too turtles and rabbits that feel and tell the world not to hurt each other anymore but just be themselves and be free and
be loved
and be appreciated
for what they are unique and long for a clique

i still think that this world is as beautiful as me as you
as we together
writing poems and have fun wading on the pond and basking in the sun come, come, let us join our hands rabbits and turtles on strong bonds

smile!

(see we have this picture now)

RIC S. BASTASA
Regret As I Piss

i piss
and look with affection
the tool that i am holding the thought that it was inside you last night

makes me
jerk

RIC S. BASTASA
Regrets

mushrooms of tall buildings
and concrete roads
steel rails
pavements made of red bricks

where will the stars be?
and the snails?

RIC S. BASTASA
Regrets Galore...

the drag is quite long.
it takes us to a street of dryness and dust makes eddies behind our feet.
i remember those dead gladiators being dragged away from the theaters i am amazed as Luna was once and he painted such Spolarium,

Death and being taken away No bargains.

the drag of life is quite long. There is thirst and hunger. when you sit upon an old chair and look far into another island.

No one waits for you there.
all you have here is the cold wind, the haze outside, the howling silence.

everything from me is taken away.
i had the foolish thought that all the while you love me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Regrets Of My Life

i have not passed the paths that you have taken, those that please the skin of your feet, i never for once, did not pass through them, i never heard the laughter of the vagabonds, danced with the gypsies, made love with the buxom girls, listened to the guitars strummed by singing men under the golden moon, by the side of the river, with the coolness of the trees, the spreading grasses as pillows of the happy nights.

i regret taking my journey alone, the paths winding, the climb too steep, the mountains too high, the cliffs too dangerous, my nights had been sleepless, the winds too harsh, my life too lonely, for such a young age, the years should have been spent frolicking in the woods, swimming in the river, sailing the seas, conquering the fears, clearing the shorelines, taking control of what what was there before.

i regret shaping my face to those frowning models.
i regret not having sung my favorite songs under the rain.
i regret not wasting my life to the bitterness of goodbyes.
i regret living a life of abundance and yet empty.
My spirit sighs, my hands not holding for something that must last.
My heart still thirsts, my mind still hungers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Regrets...

away in china
you leave everything in their proper places
furniture and
toiletries and blankets and belts
you do not carry a thing that reminds you
what sadness is or was then you find yourself in a land where no one knows you or understands you where language
becomes a problem and then you
fear
if this will last forever this having to forget
everything
this attempt to learn a new language
and learning a new self
that perhaps can set you free
and eventually you find more prisons
in there
and you want to come back and whisper a familiar word back
there to open some kind of closed doors
and you find out
there are more
opening arms right there and you begin to miss what you want to forget
or hate
you want to fly back on those old wrinkled wings
telling yourself
i have forgiven
every mistake
and i am ready
to face
what i wish i was not

RIC S. BASTASA
Regrets

i SHOULD have asked God what i shall do next with my life since i have already prepared more than what i can handle since i have already saved more than what i can spend my neighbor friend who did the same just died today...

and i am looking at myself in the mirror closely

RIC S. BASTASA
Reification

For instance,
a triangle will be perceived in picture A, although no triangle has actually been drawn

In the same manner
must you look at the illusory contours of my being through its fingertips

Through the hairs of my skin you must find
the wholeness of my body these toes
these locks of hair
must you feel everything that loves

RIC S. BASTASA
Reincarnate....

she says she had been here once
she remembers the exact details
he was frying an egg sunny side up as she wants it
to be
she sits on one of those rattan chairs beside a mahogany table

he is about to put a cup of coffee brewing on her table and that is it...

there was a big bang...flashes of light... then darkness... reality sucks...

RIC S. BASTASA
Reincarnation

Somewhere
I think of you
Somewhere
I remember you

You are with me like the wind
From a faraway land and I know it is you
The way you kiss me still makes me quiver Wind-lips touching my cheeks my neck Wind hands caressing my arms my hands my chest Wind-body hushing pressing against my body today

There is a sense of longing about two Past bodies,
Two past warm bodies pressing to Past warmth and past time somewhere Only that it is too hard to remember the details Of that past love, past the season, only that it is hard To remember why that love died untimely

Now we are here, I am in this present body of a writer For some reason you read me in your present body of a reader

You are telling me that something in my poem catches The eye of your soul and you begin to remember This is him, this is him, he was there with me before

Your way of telling me without seeing me is a feeling too
We were there before we were together we just can’t remember the details.

Today you are the thought that touches me like the wind-mind So gently, a thought comes to my brain, a feminine thought claiming A right that was there before, and which today vehemently denies.

The present seals it with birth.
Locked.
Another death is needed to open it.
Reincarnation Revisited

when we meet again
we keep the indentation of distance somehow i touch you but you deny it

when you comply with a wry smile

i shall pretend that nothing affects me

then we go hand and hand in the journey

into another time another place begrudging

i must realize that these are not the hands
i love

into another body into another mind i know what i am looking for how shall i know that it is the same soul? shall my heart still recognize whom?

or this love is nothing but another kind of fading light and into the darkness also shall forget itself its roots

it flowers all gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reinventing Absence

absence reinvented
i must remember its face first before i can go on with the restructuring
i am looking for it it is not there yet i grappling with a lot of presences soft and twisted gnarled and whorled
and dumped
and pliant
i want to touch it again despite the pain
it is not here yet it is far and dark and uncertain

RIC S. BASTASA
Reinventing Loneliness.....

what it is like to gather all the empty shells again put them in a basket take them to your room and turn on the study lamp relax yourself and scrutinize each shape and color and from out of the past memories you reinvent things like the way you put the shells on the table
create another entity of these unthinking things like the way you map out a journey for the soul towards your belief for eternity the shells are scattered but soon your hands shall learn what to make most from each of them.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reinventing Love...

nothing goes sentimental with the leaves and twigs the creek moves on and follows its instinct to the river the clouds drift without sighs the grass watch with indifference just like us both i just love it the way we reinvent love with so much independence seemingly with so much detachment we are like birds flying in opposite directions only to meet when the circle is completed

RIC S. BASTASA
Reinventing Ourselves

'Poetry has a great digestive system and can consume and recycle almost anything. It's the poet's persona that gives meaning to the process. The first important act of the imagination is to create the person who will write the poems. And that's not the end of it. We have to invent and reinvent who we are until we arrive at the self we can bear to live with and die with. Art demands of the artist the capacity for self-renewal. Without it, art withers. And so does the life.'
- STANLEY KUNITZ

what you were is not enough.
what you are is not enought either.
what you will be will always not suffice.

if you are a sigh
turn yourself into a word if you are a word reinvent reconvert
recycle
be not just a word
be a phrase
be this sentence
be this paragraph be this short story
be this novel
be this universal prayer of marvel

do not just be a nail but be a hammer do not just be snail but be sparrow what if you are nothing at all at the end? then be the perfection of nothing just be the best of this reinventing

RIC S. BASTASA
Reinventing Relearning

there is an age
where we relearn everything where there is no
iota of what we know where we throw every garbage that we saved for years

we go back to youth everything becomes too interesting nothing impossible

the first touch of rain the first kiss of sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Reiterating Arsie
	here are questions that are not meant to be answered you know that there are answers that do not answer the questions
you must know that there are those that need only the affection of the hands the sympathetic gaze the tap on the shoulder the way you say hello for no reason at all when you ask
not about what time it is but when the plane leaves and when it touches down to finally reach home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rejecting The Walk…

de, walk is negligible, compared
to the words that are like ships homing to the ports
of my mind
like pigeons roosting on the branches of my hair
for, now,
tree, sea, boat am i,
rolled into one

RIC S. BASTASA
Relating To A Certain Sadness With You

When the world was new, I could not relate To the loneliness of the song with you,
The colors of its sounds were too vibrant, mostly red
And orange, and the coolness of green Preoccupied my eyes to almost everything.
I was not interested perhaps,
I was too busy listening to something else.
My hands are crazy.
You did not mind of course.
You wait to the Slit of a new opening where you think that soon I will understand. I was moving here and there Like a pendulum
Under the principle of pleasure. Both of my hands Are holding on to something that I can easily Give up and then feel nothing. The craze of letting Things go and then forget and then embracing Something new again.

There is something
However that is meant to stay that when it is gone, You go with it and then you are lost.

There is this certain sadness with you that lingers
Like a very lonely song. Everyday it plays itself Like a bird alone on a twig. It does not go away and Enthralls me and then after it has unloaded all
The beauty of its notes, how it pleased my ears It stays unmoved and then keeps on its Chosen position until darkness hovers in Like a blanket to its black beak.

There is this silence
That stares and then tells you its name Honestly
The syllables of which sound very much like yours.
You know where it lives and so you do not bother.
Relax Orange

if you look for sense for sure there is none this is the place of senselessness like the birth of emotions and the death of emotions funeral like things are moving
at times
there are baptisms of fire when you arrive and you expect for the sun
inside your room
the moon hanging by your window or the stars
laid in bed like a twinkling mattress well, it is a crazy day the rivers are playing football in the banks the ocean is praying for rain like a nun the mountains are playing bowling with the hills and mounds i am not thinking
i am emoting i am not writing i am playing games that are not familiar with you it is like
oh well, catch me if you can don't get mad, we have a lot of them here and don't be too serious they are waiting to be listed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Relaxation Of A Native Woman

the night is very cold here on top of Mt. Malindang the old woman sits on the ground (there are no chairs here) puts her arm on her knee and begins to roll a leaf which she dried under the sun the whole day she tears a small portion of the tobacco leaf rolls it on the other leaf and then she lights the roll on the gas lamp she puffs her smoke

to the moon.

everyone understands what silence is all about

there are no more stories from exhausted bodies

the souls are rested on top of wilted grass

and then everybody is fast asleep
for tomorrow's same work.

i am new here and i am beginning to understand what is this big mountain all about?

why is it here
and why the people are not at all complaining?

RIC S. BASTASA
Relaxed Feet On The Table Surface

we do not wish to explore more what life is
we are here we must live it in daily celebration

i like the sunrise with my feet comforted by the surface of the table my shoes are dirty
but i never mind the weeping of the table cloth

i got lemonade on my hand pancake glazed with pure honey from the farm the world is standing still i shy away from silly talk this time

RIC S. BASTASA
Relearning

let not us be a currency of fixed value there is no such thing even a coin or a stamp

you must have known by now what nature is, what we are, and where we are going?

reeds on the marsh
lilies floating on the river a flower that one day lives and then tomorrow dies...

on the other hand
are the seeds and cuttings and grafts...

tight lipped buds still wanting to speak listen!

RIC S. BASTASA
'Release Me, You Fool! ' thrown into the water who cannot learn how to swim if the only choice left is to drown.

thrown into this world there is then only one conclusion left if the only choice left is that you die anyway, you better choose living.
a stone however learns nothing, thrown into the air or water or anywhere it remains what it is: a stone always you catch it, you hurt your hand, you hold it for a while, and then take a closer look and even ask it how it feels, did you see its eyes? it has no reaction at all.
it teases you, as though saying, 'release me, you fool! '

RIC S. BASTASA
Releasing A Treasure...

do not find me the will or that reason to release this treasure to air to remove this from
me,

find me that feeling that rain that wets this dry leaf so that i can be alive again green with dew

find me that sun that makes this wilting grass grow into a carpet of dreams

give me the moon
that shall spread its golden sheen again on the gray surfaces of sadness

find me the brook
of eternal waters
so i may not grow old somehow give me the impossible so i can live forever with you utter the word

so the i and me shall become
once more
the us again...

RIC S. BASTASA
Relics Of Love

the moon took away the memory
of you
the wind conceals the secrets your shadow dissolves in the days of my life
the river constantly murmurs about what happens to the forest jewels

my hands are closed they do not open to the water the rain is no exemption to this hiding

but then the blankets and the pillows where the locks of your hair are homed still whisper your name in the crevices of artful rocks your face is carved

RIC S. BASTASA
Religious Fervors

ALL towers
be it in Thailand or Singapore all mosques minarets be it in the Philippines or Vietnam

always
point to the same Sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
Relying On Feelings

tonight sleep is cruel.
she does not come to you and you go anywhere searching for her breasts, you are a new born child wanting to suck the milk of life from her teats, and you want to take her like she is a sow, and your hands are ready to caress her hair and her soft body but she is cruel and so insensitive and despite your endearments so she may sleep with you tonight she keeps that cruelty of a lover long jilted by you.

tonight sleep takes its vengeance.
and so
you have to compose the lines again to appease her.

speak of love, write about lovers making love beside the sea under the moon above the softness of the sands tell sleep about love on top of love caress sliding like a spill of honey to the lips of the beloved the tongue wriggles in such sweetness the mouth opens and takes every dripping desire plead sincerity and beg for mercy. perhaps, by then, sleep would be too kind to kiss your mouth and gift you with a bouquet of sweet roses for dreams.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remedial Law Prof

remedial law prof
has cancer of the prostate

he has enough of life: five children practicing their professions and 8 grandchildren to cheer him up

he is 78
and he says he is complete

no chemo
no surgery
nothing

saw him this pm
teaching still as if the bad news is nothing living life

and giving it the chance to end itself with all grace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remedial Measure

to learn to live with nothing but our own bare feet

on the soft green grass away from home...

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember

remember what we all did when we first landed here, we cried a lot.

remember when we leave
they cry a lot.

us? we didn't. we like going back to that home where we come from.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember David?

no, not the one that lives in Dakota
don't you remember him?
he lives in his pants
stupid.

RIC S. BASTASA
IN drawing my face
you rely on the lines
given by my words

in poetic motion &
on the night when you are alone you
recall a face of

someone you love
you utter my name
and then i hover
like a dream

what am i like?
am i just a kiss that gives the drafts of
the light careless wind?

on such a dark night
like this when what
you see is nothing but a thought of light

close your eyes and open your heart
and let your hands
fall freely like the rain

i become real only
if you still remember

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember My Own Body

your youth
is what we lack

we have taken
the alleys and we have survived

wisdom has grown
like lotus above
the murky waters
and the mud

your youth is what we lack now
and what we lack we love

how can you
tell me what love is?
you cannot love
back

we see you in the morning
sun
we fade in that most beauteous sadness of our past

i go out of my door swim to the sea and then
remember
my own body

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember That Silence Is Sometimes The Best Answer....

smile,
stand there,
look at the outside world,
go back to your room
lay your body
in bed,
put your hands
on the side
of your body,
feel the softness
of the linen,
close your eyes,
sip the silence
of the room,
do not disturb
it with your sound......

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell me
the truth
remember that?

We used to live by it.
And you know
what's so good about the truth?
Everyone knows what it is however long they've lived without it.
No one forgets
the truth
they just get better at lying

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember The Jar In The Yard Praying To The Moon

if you remember me
you must remember too the empty earthen jar places at the middle of the garden
it has no water
it has only air
but the flowers in the garden adore its invisible fullness
even when it rains
it feels the emptiness of the waters
and even when the sun shines all day
it fills the fullness of the light
for in truth
there is always reason
for one
who never ceases to live to crave for even, death, to know
the beauty of what is there
and is there not.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember The Promises, And Then Forgive

remember the promises
of love
remember how they were broken
remember
how new promises are made again
remember
how these new promises are meant to be broken again and again and again but you will always do the forgiving and forgiving again and again and again society hates you but you still love her over and over again that is love..................

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember The Three Stars?

do you remember the three stars one night that we have been seeing during those dangerous days of our union?

did i not tell you to take two,
as the other one has been taken by another person that i love?

you have been keeping them all those years
and nothing really happens how you kept the glow was a waste of time, really, no other stars pop-out like a round white mushroom in the dark sky

your time is over.
I am retaking one of the two stars.
It is mine.

Now i am taking over my own dark sky.
I will hang the star
named for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember This

it is at your worst
when you have written
best

it will be this paradox
that when you are at the bottom
you are actually
at the top of them
all

when death is near life is waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember......

a person is interesting
any person is

each has
a story to tell a struggle
each has moments of his own

each is a beautiful song
listen
and listen
and keep listening

sing with everyone in the harmony of the human rhythm

it is a misery joining with other miseries to create finally the symphony of the human situation

each man is a note
each creature is a score each joy each sorrow is our own

in that song
where everyone is a speck of dust
dancing against the light.

Remembering A Beginning

at first we need the push and when we fall we curse and blame and even take time for revenge this happens many many times and then we run out of feelings, we want to rest, and take some deep breaths there is a broken window of the house which admits light there is a leak somewhere and our curiosities have become geometric in shapes and movements we are no longer pushed yet we volunteer to fall only to learn the magic of flying there is a link then between force and a kick and a fall and a necessity to save oneself from dying it is a realization of wings and wind and how the two must go together to find the right direction we remember the push and the pain and then we somehow like all of them now the first time, we undertake thanksgiving.
The beginning of grace, the first taste of freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering A Face

i saw that face before but i just can't remember the name delightful like a glossy red apple alone in a tray
the face sees me as a face too deja vu
we remember each other as delights
like flowers newly picked from a garden then put in a vase against the morning light filtered by the green drapes we recall and then we remember what happened
between us
sometime ago in another party when we were drunk we smiled with each other and the we transferred our gaze to our respective partners their hands on our laps
i guess
they have no idea
even the slightest hint
of what we are
and what we did sometime that cold night when we were just strangers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering A Friend Through The Fish

we keep when we were children our treasures in a form of a fish inside our own little secret ponds we never intend to share them at first we fear the adults who steal we dislike them minding us telling us that fish is not interesting at all that the pond is just a very small world where our minds are convoluted like intestines of a fish do you remember the flood of adult water spreading rising higher than our knees? it was very sad all the fish we kept were taken away by the indifference of the majority

we give up
we went to other places and then we became too lonely they want us to hate the fish to be like them

and so here we are still keeping the fish in anger.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering A Memory Under The Moon

the way your eyes look at the way they look at you you generate an electricity of meanings neuron to another neuron making synapses of my static existence images of lonely shadows grow like leaves in those illuminated trees by the promise of the moon that silently sails upon the seas of my mind

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering A Poetry Teacher In High School

her powerful voice is thunder arriving on time
in my quiet moment and like a mushroom
i shed off all my shadows to the cracking ground
rain
my spores lay ripe for another seeding and growth mushing
forth

she reads with all passion the lines of Milton and Shelly and lo!

blithe spirit in me flies in the classroom

in my restlessness since then i shall always remember her she sowed the seeds of symmetry metaphor enamored in semaphores now i am sighing forever looking for the right word to this unfinished poem of my youth

old age comes sans any thought of surrender

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering A Summer Fling

we were short of pillows and blankets
and it was raining hard and so cold
inside an empty room
in fact
antiquated, abandoned and dilapidated windows
where we hear the thunder and see the lightning
cast two shadows fusing as one
in fast motion

two short lived and swift but i can still prettily remember
the sweet scent
of our sweat
the moaning sounds
drowned by the heavy rain
and the silence
of bliss
which reigned
after

we left early morning
since then
there is no
word for each of us

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering An Old English Teacher

i look at him
he has only one tooth left and his face is like a tin roof corrugated with too much heat and pressure i do not blame it with the english grammar that he once taught us with rigidity,
his degeneration or degradation has something to do with the way the walls around him keeping him away from the glow of the world and the glitter of everything that he is supposed to own and behold,
i look at him
his running nose cannot be stopped by any handkerchief that i gifted him on his 78th birthday, he does not want to use any gift, he does not want to remember the good old days, he wishes a happy death he said this on the nth time i detest this kind of unwanted endings, but i look at him again, this time i utter empathy
what can i give this old man so i can repay him what he had given when words were so hard to understand so harder to use with facility?

i look at him again his eyes are tired wanting to get eternal sleep his hands are shaking like a face refusing everything turning clockwise and counterclockwise he wants to die but he just cannot i look at him and now i am willing to give him all my fears.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering An Old Friend

now, i found you,
bald, and fat and black lipped.
your shirt is tight wrapping your loose body.
the abs are gone and the smile is having the pangs of pain, if i may say the exact word: the angst still hounds and sounds
the memories of the hissing snake looking for a secret moist place to live for another day.

now you found me too
very much like you, the shape of my body, the tone of my hair, the sound of my cracking bones, and the silence that reigns in my lips.

it is not that we are afraid to say something we feel within but it is just that we have nothing to say anymore perhaps we are fed-up with the oral word we keep our minds to searching the right words of our existence nothing about verbs anymore but mostly about adjectives

more in the past tense and too interrogative

let me explain this to you, somewhere perhaps, perhaps,
when we meet again

but how can i? as you said, our worlds are torn apart by a distance that we cannot bend to shorten it to make it closer

don't know, i still have to find my way back home that friendship that we thought may last.

i have my own world too,
and i know, you will not like it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Bukowski.... Hope This Is Nothing New To You

So You Want To Be A Writer?

if it doesn't come bursting out of you in spite of everything,
don't do it.
unless it comes unasked out of your heart and your mind and your mouth and your gut,
don't do it.
if you have to sit for hours staring at your computer screen or hunched over your typewriter
searching for words,
don't do it.
if you're doing it for money or
fame,
don't do it.
if you're doing it because you want
women in your bed,
don't do it.
if you have to sit there and rewrite it again and again,
don't do it.
if it's hard work just thinking about doing it,
don't do it.
if you're trying to write like somebody
else,
forget about it.
if you have to wait for it to roar out of
you,
then wait patiently.
if it never does roar out of you,
do something else.

if you first have to read it to your wife or your girlfriend or your boyfriend or your parents or to anybody at all, you're not ready.

don't be like so many writers, don't be like so many thousands of people who call themselves writers, don't be dull and boring and pretentious, don't be consumed with self-
love.
the libraries of the world have yawned themselves to sleep
over your kind.
don't add to that.
don't do it.
unless it comes out of your soul like a rocket, unless being still would drive you to madness or suicide or murder,
don't do it.
unless the sun inside you is burning your gut,
don't do it.

when it is truly time,
and if you have been chosen, it will do it by itself and it will keep on doing it until you die or it dies in you.

tHERE is no other way.

and there never was.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Carlota De Pio

she walked into a desert room where the window looks out directly to the open galaxy where shooting a star is the only common game and the only trees

she saw are open hands without roots
the people maybe had walked out from there a long time ago

(but how did she really know?) the only water there was a drop hanged frozen

between the ceiling and the floor

RIC S. BASTASA
by accident you come across an old picture
you recognize the face of your father beside your mother with his gun on the side of his body as reservist of the army you look closely
your mother pouts
and she is holding on to her white skirt
you father's right hand grips his gun while the left holds on to the chair just behind your mother's neck

there is a baby being held by your mother
it is sleeping and it looks like you

your father does not like you and you know it from the very start you know how to pretend till he died

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a ritual to serious writing.

you close the door, then the windows, you turn on the air-conditioner, you switch on light, not that harsh, like it dimmer, but not that blinding, you do not actually think, you let your fingers do the talking, there is nothing in particular but the images come and you want to capture it with your eyes, but the dreamer wants everything shut mouth, ears, eyes, and a new world opens you have never been there everything is new....this awe and wonder, you are not even a child, you do not know what you are a spirit perhaps, remembering for once an old time and this is where everything begins to be written.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche

I'm am going out fishing ideas

Do not laugh if you see me fishing in the public plaza

I am telling you
fish swim in the air

And i am catching them with my net
of hands

Do not ask me why I am lighting the trees during noon time

I am telling you the world is just too dark

I can see the fish
like stars in the skies

My fishing poles are my ten fingers

Believe me
the deep blue sea
is now
wading in the park

My boat is the kite
that is flirting with the coldest air
tonight.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Grandpa

grandpa was strict
i remember
for a Red Cross Donation that i asked from him and which he considers as my debt
he did not forget to remind me and thus collect

i was then 12 and he was 60
i was disappointed but he did not mind
a debt is a debt and must be paid

the years may have buried him for good but the memory of a debt paid still lingers
the numbers are clear
as always
some words may have faded but the feeling
sticks like a scar
in my face....

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Grandpa.......

he sees to it
that there will always be extra porridge
in the kitchen

not for us but for those weary travelers who may have lost their way

food must have no name trees do no choose whom to give its fruits there must always be food for everyone even if he has no name no position

no money to pay
no future to mention

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering J.

TWO kids on the side
of the river
and there was a big boulder sort of the Rock
on the other side
in between is a deep dark portion and they swam toward the other side
climb the steep stone and on wet hair and dripping waters from their skins
they bask under the sun and feel all the warmth of that friendship above their heads the white herons pass by

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Jong.....

she predicts
six months only she said we cannot last that long and we hear it but are not bothered

we believe somehow
and it is basic nothing lasts forever

we work so hard we forget the hours of the day

she goes around talking

three months are all she had and then she was buried by those who pity her and give her the much needed understanding

i am one of those who send her off to the other side of this world

i utter friendship
i keep it

what i can hand her with dignity is just the forgetting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Kierkigaard...

i have the cold arms of the earth
wet mud, my mind is a dew on a leaf,
my spirit do not soar
like a rocket in
space
i have numb thoughts
about this once loving arms
i have only ceilings without
stars
the heart is like a drum torn at its center
soundless at dawn
i want to go somewhere else to places without names
i am a future annihilation of what was once
constructed
a hardship that wants to fade
a love that looks like faded blue jeans desire is a straight line of that machine
telling that someone is dead there is this strong odor of chloroform in the bedroom one can hear the song of the ticks
the curtains sigh like air the pillow does not murmur there is this hum imagining the face of someone you know it but you cannot say it things like these happen they do
and then we say oh i am so sorry i am human and i will always be 'sadder than sad, bluer than blue' the contempt of my silence the thrill of what to do next the blur of the moment this sickness unto
death....

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Mama....

you must know how is it to swim alone with nothing to hold on except the waves and foams seagulls above you and deep blue skies the shore is faraway and you rely on no one you retain that faith in your arms and legs back to the essence of a body and mind and above all that spirit that does not know how to quit how to drown and die.

mother had always reminded when she was still alive
' do not swim alone, it is too dangerous the ripping current shall take you with all ease' it can not be avoided, mother, he tells her on the grave bringing salt and sighs, ' it is a fact, mother, you did not swim alone, and yet, you ventured on your own sea of sorrow, there were us. but it was always you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Merrian

she was fat and (ugly), thrived on veggies, curly hair, brown skin, had humps at her back like a camel, never like bohemian rhapsody
until she died, alone in her bed, away from her mom, also sick in the other room, beside their old house a santol tree, with falling leaves, sounding an autumn, upon a humid air, she liked guitar, and a man, who never came to his life, she cried hearing

' i killed a man', which she never really did,
until she died.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Monica....

remembering tina turner with her husky lovely voice is remembering monica in olingan
my tiny village of my boyhood
where the coconut trees are tall and reigning

one day we picked ripe oranges in the orchard of my papa

she was singing a tina turner song
when a venomous snake bit her on her knee

she died instantly.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Mother

my mother was cool
like halo-halo
she was too private and exclusive to me. The rest about us was always kept
as a secret.
When she died
she left me the sweetest smile. The rest of my siblings cried. Their faces broken.
They want to curse
and think that life is unfair that God did not hear their prayers.
I kept tradition. I wore my tinted sunglasses
i shed no tears at all.
She told me God is fair.
She took pride of her love for me. Always for me.
When her coffin was finally laid, I smiled.
She found rest and She is happy that I am
the only one
Who understood her.
My happy mother
I remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Mother Today

I know mother dear
You were never alone in your life Because you always Embraced me
My warm blanket always During those cold nights When papa was always away On his personal journeys

I know mother dear
You always have many thoughts Forethoughts
Second thoughts
Afterthoughts
To everything that you think and do You have always Considered me
More that anybody
Even setting aside
What you are to yourself In the hierarchy of things In the order of events
It was always me Above all

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Mother's Song.....

there are so many things to be written the mind asks

the mind begs to be excused from all these rantings which it thinks is no longer artistic and perhaps not serving well the noble interest of the masses the loss of idealism and the insufficiency of future guidelines as to what is beautiful and true you outlive use. you raise your eyes to see beyond this fence. it is always greener out there the wind that touches your hair is saying promises you are a tree rooted to your past. a black dog keeps on barking till nighttime and you learned this numbness of the stone the children keep coming everyday to tell you about the goodness of their spontaneity. They play tricks and climb and break their legs.

the thoughts are harmlessly journeying on the terrains of the forbidden. it is still a secret that not even yourself dare to know.

you are like an old cabinet with lots of layers. Inside, inside, more on the inside.

morning has broken the spell of this misgivings. you look around the beauty around you. Then you start a hum until you begin to sing the old song that mother once taught you when you were sucking your thumb.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Papa

Real work is plowing the fields clearing grass, tilling land, growing corn, raising chickens, grazing cows, pasturing carabaos, fetching water, repairing roofs, sowing seeds, fishing in the river, killing birds,
past time is drinking tuba, killing dogs, eating snakes dancing in the barrio halls, smoking tobacco, womanizing, boxing, shooting, hunting, scheming gains, expanding territories

i did not like it. I carve my own path of stones and pebbles.
took up law, write a lot, compose poems, write short stories, exposing our wrong traditions, the limited views of decadent ancestry.

i hate what we did. But just the same he made me what i am.

I visit his grave. Light candles for him. Less the flowers which he never liked ever since he had seen the first light.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Papa When He Was Still Alive......

i remember
riding a horse with papa
for days
to visit his land
five cents away from heaven

mama did not like
it
worrying about boas
in the forest
or black birds that eat monkeys
or big rats that kill deer

we followed man's trail behind us cliffs
and cliffs
we are high above sea level sometimes we only saw
fog
and lots of fog but papa kept on whistling
for the sun

up there we arrive
a hut stood with his native servants and a young woman whose name mama cannot mention

for weeks we stayed there with roots crops and wild boar's meat
and bird's eggs
and chickens.

papa never liked the city with all its guile
papa never loved grandpa greedy as he was not giving the fair share to the servants

and grandma died early and papa was happy and aunt lived far away in the capital city living with an aristocratic man serving the president

there were only two of them and there were only two of us then and he told me
never mind, never mind, we always have enough ok, no one dies in hunger no one dies in humiliation no one dies in loneliness no one dies, no one dies, keep knowing that.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Peter With His Guitar And Paganini And Linda

what do you remember paganini?

ah, it is peter who plays the guitar for linda

it is about love that died
a flower which never went into fruition

ah, you remember peter and the dry river bed somewhere in malala

ah, you remember linda whose hair was pulled into misery

ah, you remember society its rules, its stones, its unreasonability

ah, you remember the sadness of many lovers separated from each others' arms

ah, you always remember what is grievous, and cruel and harsh

well, peter played his guitar
so well,
and we all cried in vain Remembering Sunday

when all of them
left for Sunday mass
do you still remember
what happens
behind that door that you closed?

on your 15th wedding
anniversary
i still remember it

am here as guest and my mind is silent as curtain filtering the sun from a window pane
this morning

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering The Emperor....

to explore the boundaries between

meaning
and non-meaning

, the outer edges
of comprehension

, disrupting
cultural

norms.......i hear you.

u live between them.
i live here in the middle of the boundary

once i said, there is no
meaning,
and then i shifted to meaning to save a boat from sinking since it carrying a hundred kids,

i was not there.

where is the meaning of the boat that sank and killed
all of them?

to live you delete any meaning of that form.

to live, you draw a boat, you put children there and you put the good weather, there was no storm
after all

the blindness of the elephant, the waking old men the kindness of the emperor who smiles at the child there is no cover. that is the meaning of that truth. the truth is the nudity of it all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering The Old Notes Of The Love Song

same boring refrain you must tell this again
a man stroking the ukulele
with nothing but an old broken
love song in his mind

makes you sick
and vomit
but that is the truth and i will take it
with a good candid
heart

don't you ever know how to listen
and be hurt?

hurt me again if you will but i love you
still

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering The Philosophy Writing Club Of 1980

the ark, the cover is a drawing of three yellow sunflowers on a yellow cartolina it is cynthia v.
on the loose, and there was norman naromal, edith requina, flor chamen, elvi tamayo, ruschel salvana, lino moleta, boni quirog, susie cantos, bong jabla, paul suaybaguio, bong daray, jean lim, james piap, elsa lee, marking que, greg casino, we thanked fr. moga, lilia, fr. esquerra, fr. barcelon, and everyone, we thank them for everything there were small brown birds of the common species on the Ark of Noah

i was there on pages seven, ten, eight, and nine on the three levels of seeing there was this man who was trying to figure things, who am i? what i am up to? where am i going?

his name is

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering The Simpler Days Of Your Life

it was when your excitement was only the strong wind for the ripe mango to fall for you to pick

it was when your sadness was only about a failing grade on a math quiz

it was when your happiness was the carabao ride from your nipa hut to the public school

it was when your sweetness was tasted by your mama like an icing from a cake

it was when your escape was the plunge in the river with your naked friends it was when your conversations are about fairies and princesses and frogs and lost shoes

it was when the coolness was the thick grasses spreading on the plains

it was when joy was the playing and bathing under the rain on the month of November now these changes have made things more complicated people hard to deal with and a self that is deeper, darker and difficult to really understand.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering The Smell Of Youth smooth pillow, warm blanket, a woman's body so white and calm light is shun by the door of the room on closed silk curtains by the window i still taste the youth in spring its perfume still remaining in the air late at night, the same smell comes even in my sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
it was when there was not water anymore when i remember thirst i hold the glass peering carefully if there is still any water left there is none and so i go on and on the usual way that was everything still contained in the vessel of my childhood the ordinary wants still unsatisfied sleeping the whole night in thirst even so thirsty in dreams until finally forgetting thirst

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Those Leaves Of Summer....

i remember the day when Papa quit smoking, when he promised not to visit the cockpit anymore and gamble and he fulfilled his promise, and the family was happier then less the fights, gone were the loud arguments, i remember the day Mama died because of joy

i remember how she resurrected from the dead because of promises fulfilled i remember those days of rain how we bathed joyfully under them how our laughter mixed with those drops of tears i remember most those sunshine days when we rode on galloping horses on the mountain trails i remember those poems written for the beautiful orange-sunsets citrus flavored moments smokeless in the boulevard pure healthy talk, less the worries, diminishing darkness, well, those were the days that i like to remember and by now, you must have noticed how easily i too forget them.

those leaves have fallen, and what we did, if you remember was burn all of them must we keep burning still?

leaves all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Us

there is more beauty to horses wild galloping in the plains
together

hairs long and silky brown black and white tails plunging like scarfs on the neck of lovely women

i remember us
naked

alone in the room
and waiting.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering What We Did When We Were Young...

we were young
we danced our way to Galas spent nights there with all the girls

how the flowers at their early days were plucked unnecessarily we did not enjoy how they bloom to the fullest on such a bright day

we had our batch bathed in the river in Olingan fearing no rumored crocodiles we swam like mudfish and from tall trees on their branch the blue kingfishers watched....

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering You

when i remember you
and when i utter your name my tongue
a leaf about to wilt soon regains its green lush and tendril begin to grow like roots spreading down to my throat
reaching the trunk where my heart
starts to breathe

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering You From That Abandoned Place defect the building is abandoned defect no one likes to live there forever where recorded deaths are unexplained till the years

defect the door is open defect it cannot close the door is taken away in fact
and there is no
window anymore
neither the sea where it looks into defect the fields are brown for the grasses are burned by the drought that regularly comes the rains have promised not to visit this place again

and so
there are no butterflies or bees of flowers
no dew

defect the place is very unpoetical
but just the same because of you because we once made love here before that unexplained suffering that death of our innocence
i am
having the courage to remember it and devote
this poem for it.

i never ask
neither wish that we see each other again because i still want to live Remembering You On A Hot Summer Day college was not that cruel we were in fact crazy, looking for thrills dark movie houses, we tried to know what rubbing means and touching the wrong parts of our bodies, we spat we swallowed some errors and laughed the hardest when we finally got wet... with what? with whom?

when was that? do you remember?
do you miss them? or me?

the campus grounds were always greener the trees with more leaves and the chapel were full of us worshippers
we had written more poems that now when we try reading again our bodies shake we giggle about our romantic clumsiness when we fell in love to the wrong person the wrong time the wrong place you left the country for good hmmm, chicago and new york and maryland dollars, in the name of the mighty dollars and family above all college and a new house, a farm to develop students to send to universities it is a hot summer day here i am getting older and hmm, not really lonelier, just missing you just plain nostalgic moments this clumsiness of being out of love when everyone is getting over with poverty escaping away from third world prisons this sigh of not being one with the rest they have forgotten how to read the lines of poetry, moving on with their lives away..... where can the rest be? i do not know... but just in case.... here i am...it is still me on a hot summer day...those college days...still clumsy...

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering Your Friend

You still keep the yellow crumpled paper With a note “I love you too”

She calls you
To see her tonight she promises you a kiss in the campus dance

For this valentine’s celebration the music is so mellow you feel like a marshmallow then she finally kisses you your best friend winks and kisses her girlfriend too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering...

when all
the ipil-ipil leaves fall to the ground
because the bark has given to the fangs of fungus

somehow
the leaves help me
remember:

for instance
those wasted days
of December opportunities flying away

because i never grab them

words that were uttered which i never really mean
but hurting just the same

so many lovely days but filled with lust

great thoughts squandered like
the anger
for money

so many things
so many fallen souls
rotten selves
unredeemed....

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembrances Of The Chemistry Laboratory

this is the middle of the journey there are many more mirages illusions to uncover, deaths to conquer, more time is devoted to filtering doubts, decanting those seemingly insignificant experiences, purifying the adulterated legacies of great human thoughts, digesting the chunks of abrupt and wholesale misgivings, powdering those less understood, mixing with mercury to extract the gold in those passing years, poisoning the mind, destroying everything unacceptable, dissolving failures, subjective processes, finally getting nothing but kernels, a little chaff, on the petri dish inoculated bacteria, tested with fire, eyes gazing at the clouds from the window of the sixth floor.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reminders For This Day...

Early in the morning
I will be picking the goat from the mountain It is the payment of your Occupation of my land,

AT noon i will be getting my ticket for Saigon Booked in a Superior Room for Two

IN THE evening i will give finishing touches to what i have written

I would like to be fair and square with you.
I like this life
I love this work
and I am not moving out.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reminiscences....

to descend the stairs gently, to go down silently life, sundown, fading to ascend the stairs fulfilled to open a door to sit by the window waiting you remember that instance when you as the young boy jumping over the fence to explore the other side of the house transcendence perhaps you can reminisce how you flies the kite how strong the wind how cold and yet how happy the sounds of laughter of your youth

RIC S. BASTASA
Reminiscing

i look back to the last day of last year i leave you there you are enough for me
the pain has lingered
but today
i am finally removing your picture in my mind

i empty myself
i look forward to another image that must make me live and be so alive for the coming days of this year goodbye i had enough of the pain i must succumb to an overwhelming gladness of my own freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
Reminiscing Fear

friends, do not fear fear, find it, it exists for a purpose, try blinking, look inside, there is city there of shadows, of black lines and blunt curves, and flower of thorns and there is no free ride there, the paths are winding, and there are no directions, no one tells you where to go, and what to do, everyone there just keeps on doing and doing and going, no words, there is that world of fear, and in there it is a friendly fear, a teacher, makes you numb and strong, and thinking, and when you reach the heart of that city, you are no longer a fool, not a coward anymore, ask me, i live there,

RIC S. BASTASA
Reminiscing Joy And Pain

moonlight, grass, a tree whispers,
uninhibited
loose,
tight buds,
strong arms
a blanket of a pair of legs, an outburst

the silence of compassion the seed of love
a night that cannot be forgotten
and then

the parting of time a name deleted from a phone book forgiveness and moving on birds flying away, the sound of a ship departing an island dancing again

in another place
trying to forget
a drink, a toast to
the only self
you've got.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reminiscing The Dorm And The College Years

i had the chance of looking back at the pictures of our college years.

the thin guy so shy just making himself felt at the corner of the hall when she comes the thin guy leaves at once hiding his face behind the pile of books at the library

at the beach one Sunday he is at the back of everyone only his face is shown his body again hidden from the fat guy in front

he had crushes on those tall women with big breasts and white legs
but he had no courage to be himself

i look at the pictures again and i begin to laugh at myself i could have said all that i wanted to say all those years but i was a coward then and lived within the world of my own like the rain man.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reminiscing Those Carefree Days...

the days are coming and going the coconut tree that you once planted at the back of the house has become so tall and fruitful
rising above the roof and the other trees growing at you
neighbor's backyard

the nights are dark as usual but soon when you begin to look at those hind sides carefully
you will notice a collage of stars blinking
like city neon lights

a comet once passed this path but you were then asleep preoccupied with the thoughts of your past

those cliffs that you have not climbed ever the deep seas that seem to warn you about some people people in the past
drowning

do not fear bright mornings are still here everyday bringing you a bouquet of red roses and scents of coffee and toasted
bread

just be patient high noons are temporary the ticking of the clocks shall soon fade away to the voices of your carefree days once when you were a kid playing under a heavy rain with your best friend on some games of mud

a long, long time ago.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reminiscing...

ON THE floor
on the red carpet of this floor of this room there is no wind
i am still looking at those imaginary leaves of summer,
this shore is a seashore and i am the shadow listening to the songs of the seashells

there is no ill wind.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reminiscing......

once you reminisce
a face, your eyes look attentively the focus thins out to the body
you spread some thoughts that form a funnel
where all memories pass through and settle on the base of the bottle it is empty
and then it becomes full and pulls you deeper you feel that you are sucked by the mouth of another emptiness
you struggle
the past becomes hands grabbing you towards what were buried a long time ago it is hard to breathe some more in this situation where you are alone and crying and screaming
but for one thing
there is no audible sound
there is no
visible tear it is like Alice falling into the hole of the rabbit and so many possibilities happen on the same ending all pigments
to your red imagination you pinch it
nothing shouts
there is no flesh
there is no bone.
Remiscing What You Surrendered...

you stop in a certain space you spend time sometime longer than what that space requires then it gets crowded space grumbles
and time wants to run faster like a leopard

at a certain point you become a passive observer like a marker of the road you forget speech because time does not give you words you lose sight of corners space is arrogant

it is only for a while you gain flesh
you remember syllables your bones get back that hardness that it has surrendered before
because space and time give you love, and affection and then suddenly strip you with it

it is not late
there is still a few fireflies resting upon a crown of leaves

you glisten
now a meteor you move somewhere else because you do not fail to remember going there is remembering.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remorse

the past has wrongs buried by the sands
of time
and here you are the wave
restless anew
rolling like a mat
trying to wake
them all up
asking
for their names

what for? i ask.
for nothing, you say.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remote And Unconnected, But You Can Assemble Them Yourself

i must have said it before and here you are telling me that someone said it, sort of pretending that it wasn't me the church that you destroyed and built again

i missed the old facade where God must have been there waiting you changed the lights paved the way and made it too smooth for me what i see is a cheap structure to my utter dismay

but you are too good to be tackled too kind to be toppled down and so i healed the rift with a laughter that you can never hear there is still the guilt that lives at the bottom of things but soon i will dislodge it it does not deserve my dwelling which is always waiting for something else for something new

the old clothes are burned old needles shall use new threads to sew another pattern again

RIC S. BASTASA
Removing The Denial

at that time before love was professed there was already a hint of the hands
which closed and took the form of a fist
and the eyes which looked away from the intended focus of the imagined bonding or that wish for a more serious togetherness that promise of forever i shall be with you that time shall bless us when we become one
but no
the eyes of reality are awake there is no such love no such state but only an illusion of you loving me and i was too stupid to believe that i have wings to fly that i have this lightness to reside on the clouds

i stopped looking i breathed deeply summoning all the powers of the wind inside my lungs and i took all the courage to tell you this is not right and we must quit

and there there was this certain quite that i have learned slowly to spell
correctly

i remove boldly with my bare feet that filth of denial.

RIC S. BASTASA
Renewed Self After Being Broken By Love's Illusion

you are not my reason anymore for my arguments

i am my own reason
i chart my own matrices

i situate myself and then claim my freedom

it is not easy to be weak it is too inhuman for me to surrender who are you? a tumor to my brain a clot to my blood

a clog to my vein
i shall remove you from my system

i have more maps to draw more places to hide

i am not afraid even if you hold me i am hard as a nail i am slimy as my ulcer.

RIC S. BASTASA
Repeat

a pot of flowering magnolia beside a window below it a man walks innocently

i who sees what happens next
closes my eyes in utter invocation of what must be only a simplicity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Repeated Oppression - A Tradition

a bird in the sky
looks upon the sickness of the ant

poor ant it has worked so hard
and does not own even the sand
of the anthill
empire

when the ant dies another ant
shall replace it stronger
and dumber

the chronicler tries to justify that the life of the ant
is the beauty of a biography

a school of fish the bird has eaten
its eggs upon a nest have all hatched

another bird in the sky looks upon the ant
which has a tradition of sickness which has never healed

RIC S. BASTASA
Repeated Poem...

there is a handsome young man residing in a far away mountain he writes love poems...

it so happens that there is this lonely woman who reads each poem and amazed by said poems she climbs the mountain to see the man and tell him that she loves him too...

the man is puzzled and the woman asks why? those poems are not for her, he says
and the woman is sad goes down the mountain telling herself that the handsome young man is a liar and that from that time on she will never read any of his poems....

RIC S. BASTASA
Repetitions

from a hill
you go down the plain you pass by the river
and take your time
feeling the water by your hands and sitting on a rock beside the bank you let fall your feet just feeling the water pass by your soles

the coldness of repetition the monotony of its sound you hear all these
and feel
every moment of your life there is no complaint at all

it is
and will always be so refreshing and so beautiful!

RIC S. BASTASA
Repetitive Of A Nostalgia, A Moment Ago here is no poem that can stop this mess
this furniture of the room are not in place the table is under the rain
outside
the chairs are crumpled like paper in the drain
the books are opening their pages to the skies the pens are shooting like arrows in the air no one can stop the dead not this poem that only counts those who want to be buried no one can stop the grief not this poem, not that poem no poem can stop the flood of all emotions no poem can resist the burden of carrying all these like a carriage like a coffin.

RIC S. BASTASA
Replay....

there is this desert which is full of love
there is nothing in there except the ostracized
ostrich
you like it somehow saying, ah, love is still the answer

there is this paradise full of greens and reds fenced by the rules
loveless,
you do not like to live there despite the comfort of the apple trees
and the scents of the pines and the coolness of the blueness of the coves and
the clouds

now you must make the choice which one? i have chosen mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
Replaying Mozart's Serenade #3 In G middle age sits on a bench at the park

just watching people pass by-a fat lady with a pink purse as small as as a snail a thin man looking like he's dying of tuberculosis a little boy being held tight by his mom smiling at me two lovers as sweet as sugar and walking too close like a glued pair of slippers middle age sits alone and laughs loud like he's winning this lonely game of optical illusion this trajectory projection middle age inside this cell of himself looking for an opening

RIC S. BASTASA
Repost Pn A Memory

When the world was new, I could not relate
To the loneliness of the song with you,
The colors of its sounds were too vibrant,
mostly red
And orange, and the coolness of green Preoccupied my eyes to almost everything.
I was not interested perhaps,
I was too busy listening to something else.
My hands are crazy.
You did not mind of course.
You wait to the
Slit of a new opening where you think that soon
I will understand. I was moving here and there
Like a pendulum
Under the principle of pleasure. Both of my hands Are holding on to something that I can easily Give up and then feel nothing. The craze of letting Things go and then forget and then embracing Something new again.

There is something
However that is meant to stay that when it is gone,
You go with it and then you are lost.

There is this certain sadness with you that lingers
Like a very lonely song. Everyday it plays itself
Like a bird alone on a twig. It does not go away and Enthralls me and then after it has unloaded all
The beauty of its notes, how it pleased my ears
It stays unmoved and then keeps on its
Chosen position until darkness hovers in
Like a blanket to its black beak.

There is this silence
That stares and then tells you its name Honestly
The syllables of which sound very much like yours.
You know where it lives and so you do not bothe Repost....

a house is built made of bricks, red as blood at the center of the island black as a mole
at the middle of your right cheek it is fenced by the locks of your hair it is guarded by the cautious tongue of your face at the other side bounded by a big brown river is a cottage no living room, no kitchen not even a restroom it is just a square cottage with roof leaking

where i can see the stars

if you know me well enough for years that i have been with you and for days that i have left you you shall know where i live and if you love me well enough you'll take nothing with you to follow me

and i know you will never be lost until you find the place where my heart sings

RIC S. BASTASA
Request

love not the fading of the light darkness is its only offering oh the light of the moon and the stars oh there may be too many of them but their silence is deadening their flickers merely an additive wait for the twilight for it offers you the breaking of day the light of the sun

the merrymaking of the flowers and bees the whispers of love in the air the playful waves of the sea love me not for i am only the friend of the moon please go

i have nothing but the empty promises of the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Requiem For The Year 2011

at the last hour
we march toward a common grave bringing the flowers and some stones

eyear is kept inside a niche laced with white silk slowly the men with strong arms lowered the niche to the newly dug hole seven feet under the women with long black hair wept beside their innocent children the year is buried as we then throw the final stones then it is covered with its soil returned until it is full and then we put the flowers it is over

now

and then we go back to our houses it is nighttime
we close the doors and open the windows to see those beautiful stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Res Gestae

it is his belief that nearing death and conscious of his end feeling the lazy flow of his blood corpuscles on his nape
the numbness running from the tip of his ring finger to the veins of the heart, that a man shall tell the truth finally about his hidden love his thoughts long buried like a lost treasure in the secret recesses of his brain she waits as his head rests on her lap she has been waiting that long for him to tell the words

of love

he closed his eyes surrendering his soul to the heavens he did not say anything at all not even her name

despite that she shed some tears letting him go finally where his destiny takes him taking revenge she writes in her diary that on that day she shed some tears of joy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Res Ipsa Loquitor

my sister is so dumb she believes her husband when he said he was just smelling the other woman's cheek & not really kissing her

RIC S. BASTASA
Res Ipsa Loquitor (2)

let the poems
without mouths
and teeth without lips
and tongue

let these poems
speak for themselves
let them be
take them for whatever they are their appearances
let them smell the way they exude themselves
let them be
let their essence be within themselves even without our own thoughts impressing imposing dictating destroying annihilating

let the poems be like dew dissolving to the warm rays of the sun the poems-in-themselves even without the necessary english-ness...

let the poems have no shame in whatever language in whatever form

let the lousiness be a poem in itself let the ugliness make you feel its ugliness let the beauty be there side by side with everything: darkness and light evil and good order and chaos
stars and explosives
pins and touch
holiness and profaneness etc and the exclusive specifics and generalities you and them

and let your feelings go beyond all these in that field where anything does not matter where there is no more bother but just this companionship this togetherness this wonder this bewilderment without end this forever-ness, this eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reserve This Space For The Anonymous

be glad you have a name the one your mother thought when she first conceived you in her womb the name the world has given you in letter bold and big and strong you have been there on the mountain top and it was cold and so silent

now is the time to come down and meet your friends and dine with them

you leave the clouds and be with earth you leave that space now reserved for the anonymous faceless, weightless, empty let the unknown be full and let it be there you have breathed the thin air you felt the clouds in your fingers you have kissed the sun and you did not burn clip off your wings and come with me on an afternoon walk we shall see the sun setting so beautifully

RIC S. BASTASA
Resolving A Grudge

correct the shout
because the arm is painful forgive the scream because the mouth is full forgive the sadness it is not self-inflicted forgive the brashness
it is not intended

correct the croak
because the rain is falling the crickets are hiding because the children are coming the children are making fun because the river is full

RIC S. BASTASA
Resort To Nature

because they prohibit water and glass is hidden someone has to use & avail what nature has given the hands and rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Resort To Sleep....

in search of happiness
one gambles
one risks too much in the name of love or even lust
one puts at stake his one and only life, then one gets it

satisfies itself, even extends beyond it to such an avarice
of all those darkest and happiest moments what comes after of course is this pain

that goes hand in hand with happiness for they are always together and one grips it

counts it
and seemingly to such an extreme cannot endure it
anymore

one gives up

resorts to sleep and dream again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Respect And Silence........

you do not deserve it
but no one is telling.

you are my friend, i too can lie.

tonight you will be in the home of my arms safe and warm

studded with stars
your sky gleaming with pride
galaxy

art anyway is but an imitation
fake, so what is the heck?

in our own ways we are all artists
as we toast our drinks to our muses

up there, they are dead.
down here, we quarrel. or if we are silent, it is because of respect....

RIC S. BASTASA
Respect For Freedom

we have fully understood our true natures
and so we have resumed our peaceful existence

to each his and her own.

RIC S. BASTASA
Respect For The Death Of A Fly

A fly got stuck right in the middle of a spoonful of honey on the dining table.

i watch it die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Respecting My Silence

boredom comes like a wilting flower and you like to save yourself from seeing how such a kind of living thing die so gently facing the sun and letting the air take its scent and substance.

i look at things differently now. Let the petals take the form of a fulfillment.

Let the lone leaf grieve for a passing

Though momentarily we know that.
Things come and go, moving to and from a scale of one to ten and then back again to zero. Wisdom. There is so much wisdom is our silence. And she says, that is one thing that must also be respected, like how we take the melting of a snowflake in our palm.

RIC S. BASTASA
Responsibility From The Words Of Grandpa

we all eat together partake the white rice and the fried fish
and home made coffee every breakfast
as he tells stories about his exploits during World War II
and then when everyone is finished listening to every word
from his mouth placed on his square jaws
he makes the last remark that the last one to leave shall wash all
the plates

RIC S. BASTASA Responsibility.....

up there
the world gets to tiny

you float and
imagine
you have a pair
of wings

it will be just an hour and a half and then the plane touches
down
back to the place
of your birth

no one meets you at the airport
and when you arrive there is no one
there to make you call that this house is a home

well, you open the door with that key and put your bag
in your room and

you go to the kitchen check for water
a very cold water to quench your thirst

well, after that drink you open the window
look at those untrimmed bushes
those wild trees and just like your days
your life
wild and needs pruning

there is no time for
this
you go back to your working room
and see a pile of folders

cases to read
you ponder
this is not your life

oh well, this is other people’s lives and they are in your fingers your blank sheet of paper the keys of your computer so? do not think about your own life

think about the lives of others

the paper that you cut into pieces
the words that you want saved for the day
the lights you turn off the nights where you start a bonfire

you are now tuned to
silence
there is no need for confusion
the world waits for you so that it can spin.

RIC S. BASTASA
Responsibilitys

when i open like the petals of a flower you are the sun to receive me i do not burn in your heat for it is as gentle as the morning rays of the lovely beginning when you close your house and hide in the orange tinge of your bedroom i exude a certain scent so enticing so you may sleep with some dreams and i shall be there with you you have become a beautiful face and i am the flower in your hair whatever, i am responsible for this art of loving whatever, wherever, whenever, we shall meet again when you become a fruit i, may even assume to be the last worm.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rest Benefits

retreat not for defeat but for rest, plan strategies dream, imagine, give way for reason to take a break let the heart speak for a while then when the morning light arrives on the shutters and lands on your bed
and head
wake up again, take a deep breath, and dress yourself well equipped for your next war of the day...

RIC S. BASTASA
Rest...

there is a time when you like to surrender, everything in you is weakened eyes are sleepy and there is no glaze on the eyeballs as though it is staring to nothing, your shoulder hangs but no one is choked yet the rope is still an icing of the cake the last sound a tip of the iceberg and you want to go to bed and rest and take some sleep but sleep whips you with sharp beatings you are wide awake wanting to write about all these miseries but you cannot your hand rests on the shadow of its weariness your pen becomes simply another imagination the bed hardens like wood, feel its being steel, your back aches, yet, whatever you do ot any position does you good, just the same your eyelids dropp dead no one can stop you anymore signing 30. i mean... death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Restive

that early morning when the sun just comes up from the mountain side rising to the cone top

a yellow butterfly as tiny as my nail
flutters over a red rose petal holding still on a dew

slowing down this small world where i live becomes a home

my nerves rearrange their postures resolving an entanglement

now restive like a goat under a sycamore tree
chewing grass

RIC S. BASTASA
Restless And Freed

there is something in me that cannot be held by love no matter how gentle are its hands no matter how careful love warms me but i escape love caresses me but i long for more there is something beyond love it is not in the sky above it is down on my feet

the freedom of the dust the playfulness of the wind so do not just say you love me do not be too careful about me there is something in me that is restless and free something that you cannot gently hold there is this wild fire burning and your love cannot put it off i long to fly on the wings of my senses and you can not stop me with your fences

RIC S. BASTASA
Restlessness

stay put
be a tree spread your roots
extend your branches to the skies have more leaves and let some birds make their nests in you learn to know the sun better then the moon and then when the night is so dark imagine a crown of stars they become yours

without doing anything

stay put
be a tree
do not do anything
do not move
just grow and be yourself

RIC S. BASTASA
Restlessness In Stillness....

....because i am discontented here i am making it my own way, because no one remembers here i am remembering me,
because.....
no one satisfies my hunger and thirst here i go trekking my way into everywhere, and tired, and disappointed, here i am making a set of wings for me, these wings without the feathers of a bird, these wings without need of a wind,
because i feel so alone, here i am, inventing company,
i give birth to words, and sentences myself with all its punishments, this newly found joy in the prison of my thoughts in the vast expanse universe of my endless and limitless imagination this self without a river this river without water and stones this floating
existence
an angel without a wing because i am never appeased here i am exploding my own firecracker a boy driving his demons away with the use of one finger because i have more to say in this fear

here i am unceasingly writing who knows if i finally find you and then i can absolve myself and after telling everything i can finally find my own resting place

here i am, silent and still and staring.

RIC S. BASTASA
Restlessness Of The Spirit

to chat after midnight and to continue to read even when the eyes begin to fail to see the light to write
whatever comes to mind another poem
recalling the past mistakes uncorrected
a new word to redeem what the self lost retracing the patterns of the usual hands in surrender fingers without thoughts but still moving to capture a syllable fretting flitting
whatever
sleep that seems cruel to
dreams
this inability to choose to cease then i tell myself i do not really know a thing anymore.
about you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Restrained, Subdued, Standstill River

subdued
but never defeated

always loving but never really loved

arising
and then falling again to reclaim

what earth is always reserving

clear, now cleared the river turns into a mirror to reflect

the moon and
stars

RIC S. BASTASA
First Prize and the most popular receiving 3.6 million hits from among the educated and poetic members who taught poetry in their respective universities, for the reason that the poem has universal appeal:

Christmas is coming,

The geese are getting fat, Please put a penny
In the old man's hat.
If you haven't got a penny,
A ha'penny will do.
If you haven't got a ha'penny,
Then God bless you.

Second Prize, receiving 3.2 million hits, for its being an open-ended poem with some matching questions as to the existence of the real segregating the un-real, the black sheep and his charity to a master, which appealed to the philosopher-poets in American and Indian universities:

Baa, baa, black sheep,
Have you any wool?
Yes, sir, yes, sir,
Three bags full;
One for my master,
And one for my dame,
and one for the little boy
Who lives down the lane.
Baa, baa, black sheep,
Have you any wool?
Yes, sir, yes, sir,
Three bags full;
One for my master,
And one for my dame,
and one for the little boy
Who lives down the lane.

THIRD PRIZE goes to the poem below which got 3.1 million hits excluding the votes of the babies, aborted, and the unborn who still cannot play with the computers putting most of the poets in a state of stupor, a hush, an effect of a surreal and magical lullaby metaphoric of sleep and the variations of the word, and its other connotations of peace, rest and divine quite:

Hush-a-bye baby, on the tree top,
When the wind blows, the cradle will rock;
When the bough breaks, the cradle will fall.
And down will come baby, cradle, and all.
Down will come baby, cradle and all.

FINAL INSTRUCTIONS: The winning poems above mentioned written by unheard of poets from the United Kingdom, Canada and the U.S.A. shall be posted at poem hunter in the top charts for 2008, and the winning poets shall each receive the most coveted I-pod. Decision of the Board of Judges is final. No questions will be entertained. The Poets will be honored with a simple and exclusive ceremony plus free snacks at the White House on July 4, 2009 at 9 o’clock in the morning.
President George Bush will hand the I-pods personally assisted by Osama Bin Laden, who is making peace with all his enemies all in the name of poetry.

To all the poets in India, Nigeria, Mauritius, Africa, Malaysia, China, Mongolia, Bangladesh, and the Philippines keep on writing.

Who knows if you will be the next poet laureate for 2009?

THANK YOU.

RIC S. BASTASA
Resurface

this could be the word of the day for our conversation you check from time to time if i am still around because as you said
you do not like monologues for all you know i was into something deep

like i am a turtle lost in the foams and swallowed by the mouths of the sea waves and because you hate monologues of course i have to use your word i resurface.

But that is not what i really mean, there are ghost swimmers in my being those naked fairies or they call it furies in the blood of my veins like viruses
and when i begin to think seriously like i am about to die in a minute
they do what i do when you feel that you are alone

always they resurface
saying
that it is not good for me to go because i still owe them a lot

whatever is that my mouth is dead.
Retaliation

she says she likes to do it at 8 tonight
i say i am tired
maybe at 5 early morning he shall be turned on at 4 a.m. he hints her about the tryst

she too knows her way
she now says 'no'.

RIC S. BASTASA
Retrace

in Dumaguete
at 4 o'clock in the morning you went out of the ship to take a walk along the boulevard: an old one with a story to tell the one that you like to hear again and again

this time
the heavy rains intervened forgivable as it is the first heavy rain in the city for the past five months people stand along the side of the covered pathway watching

the rain

you sit on one of those benches where breakfast is served cheap

fish and rice and coffee the roof leaks
and drops of rain begins to hit your shoulder

a man beside you with some tattoo on his arms looks at you like you are the man whom he had been searching all the years of his life

you stare back sort of saying
you are not afraid
for this encounter

he looks away knowing that you also know what betrayal is what a war is what killing fields are

he sidesteps your gaze unzips his fly and urinates pointing to the heavy rain this is pure disrespect to the rain you stop eating brace the rain beyond the roof bathes there and walks away from there this world is not absurd it is logical

it knows when to stop and to begin again when to stare back when to back off and when to retrace its steps along the boulevard

now the stories are becoming clear and then the rain stops you remember that was the song precisely the lyrics are intact but what for? you ask again over and over again

you are so foolish.

RIC S. BASTASA
Retreat.....

AFTER You say the truth, when the other merely gives you nothing but that silly laughter
you shrink back into a nook
becoming a creek
winding your way
back
under the bamboo grove

Before you finally recede into a thin surface of sand you take a glimpse of the sky to take the much needed look of the moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Retreating To The Coolness Of Life

the sea is calm this morning and you try a little casual walk along the shore
you stare at the horizon you wish a cyclone
a tsunami
a whirlwind
a whirlpool

you wish the eye of the storm you wish for the hole of the earth to open up and swallow you
whole

no one of this nature does it for you, however the sea is still calm and the sands so soft and fine the breeze touches your face the sun ascends and finally on this sunny day you go back to retrace your steps find the shade of the tree retreating to its coolness now you still hope to find a dream a body

life is patient and still wanting
you

RIC S. BASTASA
Returning Home

Now I like to return
To my home
I left years ago
To see the mango trees Flowering again

RIC S. BASTASA
Returning To The Homes Of Our Selves

last night
we are even,

i was about to tell you about a wall i am making,

you said it first instead,
your wall in invincible both are unseen, but only felt we celebrate this mutual wish we are so near there are only a few words that divide us and yet we are so far and we feel it in trembling what we do not see when we first know love are the same unseen dimensions that make us go home

when i arrive there i meet myself and you too tell me that in your world

you have met the true self that you are the days are over the nights are longer

the full moons are gone and so are the stars

did i not tell you that sometimes it is in the dark that we see too well?
Reuniting The Rehash

the pieces do not remain as pieces in a certain longing they come back and find a way to compose themselves again like a quilt

an abstract painting of green leaves looking like some cuttings from a woman's old dress and black twigs protruding from a canvass like some needles and pins reuniting into a unified creature in space a porcupine fish perhaps or a brown cone from a pine tree images of the past summer streaks of light at twilight after two shadows finally say

'it is over'. They had enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reuniting With A Friend

at that point when we start to share what happens when we were not
together
the clicking of the clock stops the world stops spinning and on and on the friendship goes like a wheel with our laughter and cries and wishes and dreams
like the rain on the river the fishes jumping
and stirring the water to an endless passion to swim

RIC S. BASTASA
Revenge

in revenge
the rain
tears off
the banana leaves
doing nothing

panimalos

Sa kalagot
Gibitas bitas sa
Ulan ang mga
Waly nabuhat
Nga mga dahon
Sa saging

RIC S. BASTASA
Revenge (25)

i am indifferent
greater than that i am angry but nothing in my face shall show it this anger that spreads inside like a polluted mining pool
to the river
this stored fear
like yeast in poisoned bread which soon
you all shall eat

RIC S. BASTASA
Revenge On The Greatness Of Others

when you win
you are into the side of danger you think that you are the sun now and the rest are the grasses who need to worship your fingertips most winners are actually losers judged by a few who nonetheless see the world through their lopsided sights, their biases engraved on those medals their revenge on the greatness of others finally accomplished

RIC S. BASTASA
Reversals...

to make you believe that something is not true i must deny the truth about what really happened out there at the top of that plateau where each slate levels off to the usual

must i invent some pictures again to convince you that she was not there?

must i draw a river to make you believe that once upon a time a little fish swims its slimy way into my mind?

must i make a twist of words bend some phrases? must i end a clause with a semi-colon?

truth sometimes feels insulted on that day when Thomas demanded that he slips his fingers on the side of the newly born Christ who should not have been touched because it is still on its way to perfection...

RIC S. BASTASA
Reverse Psychology

in truth she invited you
with a hope that you will not come.

you are foolish enough to believe that she expects you to come and she is also foolish to expect that you will not believe her

RIC S. BASTASA
Reverse Psychology (2)

last night
actually late last night i was about to sleep when this someone pops up
saying

'i'm depressed
got a broken heart which cannot be mended'

the masochist is here again
and i tell him

'take the cure
how about suicide? '

'i am not
joking' his reply

'i am serious
take the cure
have a happy suicide
get a gun
and eat the bullet'

the following morning
we meet at the junction of Camus

i think someone, if he really means it, has to go to the other side
of this earth
who knows? it is the place called happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Reverse........

love me
till i bleed
till i drop dead till i sound like the moan of one rainy morning till i taste like a bitter wine till bitter becomes sweet love me oh love me even for not what i am just love me without a word without a question for i have no answers, you want answers?

i will manufacture answers just for you to love me...

love me, love me, i order you to love me.
made me believe, make me wander, make me wriggle.

i am testing you. i am putting you in my shoes.
for i have never, never really love you.

repeat what i am saying. Now you say it yourself.
tell me how it feels.

RIC S. BASTASA
you chose without doubt an inconvenient life you think your arms are stronger than steel that there is nothing slippery on your hold your hands are spiders

you must have prepared for this i have nothing to say
and will never say what i think are whales
in my mind

you have chosen the cross in the Calvary mistaking everything as love or Christlike

you bleed into your own death everyone stares at you with sadness asking

' Can he make it?
Is fate with him?
Has he talked to God about this sensitive and painful matter? ' you are young but we are not underestimating the orange birds in your eyes so must you go now do not take any word from us be proud you have what you claim will make you survive

there is a word from your father 'Son, do not ever come back'.

perhaps your father did not really mean it or perhaps he was just very much disappointed in you sometimes i ask why things are not working the way we want it but i stopped asking then

Let go
let go

This seems to be the motto People just come and they just go away, and no one has ever stopped what they want

where to go
how to spend the days in their lives you may ask me ' Can you help me, please? ' i have already told you, 'I can't anymore'

Lest you be not responsible.
Lest you do not become the real man for everyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Revised Poem For The Busy Businessman

as i place my feet in another country i step upon an internet cafe goggling upon a poem

inspired by the changes of the situation on some dreams of reforms i start to compose another poem for the wind
&
this i cannot forget a man on the other side loose tie and unbuttoned shirt
on my left busies himself with business receipts encoding
sending them to his boss
perhaps
to the main office signifying profits

i still wonder why a man like myself wastes so much time
in this
unkind endeavor

there is no money here but there is something more to it than money that keeps me going
despite
those marked differences i am no businessman neither a worker for any boss out there dictating what to do with my life after that lonely poem that i write
i rest my fingers upon nothing the man left hurriedly as other clients are waiting

he keeps issuing those receipts and must remit
encode each
over and over again
for an update with Boss

and then i stand up walk past him
towards
actually an uncertain direction

perhaps the busy streets this time where no one recognizes the greatness that i still keep intact inside my chest

for i am the anonymous poet in this new country that speaks not a nuance of my language the temperature rises but i still do not dream for the need of a Cesaro hat

to save me from this killing heat

RIC S. BASTASA
Revising A Belief

sometimes i think of you and the memory of the boat docked upon an old port comes back

there is no sound of rain anymore when the rain falls and makes my hair wet

i am not disturbed at all i begin to smile at myself and the one who notices me thinks that i am happy for the world and at ease with everyone the old woman who sells cigarettes is the one that has wisdom there is nothing really personal in this world it is all business and so one must manage his own keep sympathies and avoid any unnecessary conflagrations any entanglements that can cause more repercussions these self-caused pains because all the while you were so stupid enough to think that love is pure and giving.

RIC S. BASTASA
Revising Kobayashi....

kobayashi's
ducks quack and quack

in here in this heavy traffic
i am stuck.

RIC S. BASTASA
Revisiting A Friend.....

i have a friend
short, white and more of the silent
type when he was young
and dashing,

....(13 years passed
i have seen leaves
falling freely
on the park
on those humid and dry summers.....)

i meet this friend
again
now bald, aged much,
still short but no longer dashing

i did not say
any word to tell the truth
but i get curious
somehow
about how he gets lonely
and live alone by himself
thriving on a distant
lover...

that was the last
encounter
and it seems to me that after that confession
...it is a secret
but not that bad

now he hides went back to silent mode shrinking like a warp
of time whatever that is...

i have a life to live
and it does not matter

summing it up
i wish him to pursue love and always love....

RIC S. BASTASA
Revisiting An Old Self

wingless, the old self situates on the road that we once passed by

damn, it is thin and lean and tall and hungry

it is thirsty, and neglected it has screams never heard damn, that old self stinks scared and fearful of the touch damn, the old self knows not a smile or a hug

damn, the old self dies damn, the old self is gone and here i am looking at it dusts of the past

on wings i fly to the new world of dreams that come true of truth not bent of this reality that never changes

no longer a shadow
no longer a body

celestial beside the stars on thrones set for the permanent in the silence of the heavens the new self smiles

RIC S. BASTASA
Revisiting Narcissus, After A Friend Mentions Him In A Party

there he sits by the pool seeing only his reflection how handsome he is,

ecko watches him with pity how the world moves and changes there will be no concern whatsoever and this includes his demise how others say, he so deserves it selfish narcissus, did he ever care about his echo?

RIC S. BASTASA
Revisiting Our World Of Dreams

even in the room of my dreams when i invited you in you are till looking for that squeaking bed

of long ago, when we were so young and unrestrained

as the wind that gushes forth from one window to another i want to reinvent its softness all its four legs

but the mistress of my sleep dislikes it

what we have here are flat uncatalogued floors

a room without walls an empty space without stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Revisting Schindler's List

i look again
closely on the faces of the children

a girl hides under the bed
in that abandoned house

outside
everyone lies on the road without life

a boy with a white bonnet raises his hand
makes the sign of a slashing knife around his neck

the architect was shot dead right in her forehead as she was discussing the weakness of the building

RIC S. BASTASA
Revitalizing Your Life

there is nothing
too serious about this game of

adding life to some tired cells by way of simply smiling at the mirror seeing a face that you really own and then affirming what you are and will always be

or

trying to change the color of your hair
or

cutting your fingernails to make you

feel clean
and perhaps whole again like a noun connecting to the nearest verb

to tell another chapter of your story

that perhaps may interest

those who are shedding off days like

dirt on their skin

RIC S. BASTASA
Revival Of Vows...

she accepts each sacrifice as a stair
leading her home

they're going together
hand in hand.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rhyming Life

rhyming life
we try it

we listen to the drips of rain from the gutter

we wonder why the rain
stops

we feel the sensation of sunshine like droplets of warm light from the window

we pulsate
every red blood corpuscle that enters
the brain cells

we feel the beating
of the heart
near the other
person's heart

we listen carefully
we wish there is more rhyme to random
arrivals of molecules looking for crack on the pores of our skins

let me be honest
with you
i am numb and i feel none.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rice Fields

newly dressed
by the plow's caress
the rice fields
regal themselves in brown skirts

islets of water
from a distance
appear like dew

RIC S. BASTASA
Rickshaw

barrow, buggy, curricle, dolly, dray, gig, gurney, handcart, palanquin, pushcart, tilbury, truck, tumbrel, two-wheeler, wagon,

stop in there
there is this red wheelbarrow and it looks like a poem to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Riddle 2

A Food for You and Me
My first is in fish but not in snail, My second is in rabbit but not in tail.
My third is in up but not in down, My fourth is in tiara but not in crown.
My fifth is in tree you plainly see,
My whole a food for you and me.
What am I?

RIC S. BASTASA
Riddle 3

Look in my face, I am somebody; Look in my back, I am nobody.
What am I?

RIC S. BASTASA
Riddle Of Marie

a room has two doors for two faces

two arms for two inconsistent windows

its leaking roof
for a broken eye

a ceiling falling for a breaking self

the floor is always its saving grace

a warm bed can invent a promise

RIC S. BASTASA
Riddles And Riddles And More Riddles

the riddles are not getting rid of me and they keep on multiplying riddles and riddles and riddles without a hint as to the answer but i am not at all surprised or frightened or eager to answer each mystery, i am relaxed and comforted to the idea of
myself:

i am a question without an answer.
everyday i grow and i know not where these tendrils are anchoring themselves.
i go where the wind hushes where i think i may feel better.
i put my feet on the ground and the ground moves like a planet orbiting its own path within its unknown universe.
i breathe the air to live some days more but what is it that makes me alive?

i am not frightened anymore.
I get used to all these: i do not know. yes, i do not know. but

i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
Riding On The Clouds

there are friends of mine who ride on the clouds never was there a storm they say everything is light no one falls and gets hurt at Ward 9.

i visit some of them
and i keep on listening.
I don't talk anymore because of inner fears.

RIC S. BASTASA
you are a blithe spirit a very light bird with a bleeding heart to save yourself from lack of sleep you begin to ride on that thin thread of silence there is this fragility that keeps itself whole like an eggshell keeping a substance that waits for the right season to grow i keep you on the comfort of my palms and watch you closely like a sprouting seed on the soft decay of leaves you are asleep now you heart stops to bleed and then i begin to dream about us tomorrow i stretch the thread of silence trying to fathom how long how strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
Riding On The Wings Of A Butterfly

i walk the dream
where the street
breathes in the shadow of moon-light,
the lovers night.

oh, sweet love
long time coming longer time whispering
us free.

i sing your eyes
as willows stretching into the ever passing winds

i speak the words of my heart i sing the songs of my dreams i see in the water your image
and it’s true...

as i ride on the wings of the butterfly, i offer you a rose, if given the chance.

RIC S. BASTASA
Right Of Passage

this is not the first day of my life and this is my right to a final passage this is the fall where you my love, cannot catch me anymore this is the moment where everything about me dies

but perhaps cannot be said to be lost
or utterly wasted

i cannot be one who must be afraid this moment can be the last event for something greater than myself

need i say goodbye
need you wish me all the luck let me touch your face for the last heat in my hands

let my eyes have the last glance of you

the hour has come for these tired eyes to close and take its deepest plunge in sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
i may tell you
that this is all a matter of story telling the one that you invent because the nights are too long and slow
and they all drag you to your bed and the linens
do not make you sleep

meanwhile the ceiling plays with the lapses of the lizards as mosquitoes kept being fooled by light and shadows of the hands of the the restless arms

i think i am wrong
most of the times
and i give always the impression that i master what is right and adorable

i give you respect
through the signs of my fingers and the unspoken words of my mouth

and i beget respect like leaves upon leaves of the crowning glory of the living tree

i am wrong this time this is not about the world or
the stars
not even about you but this is all about myself it is boring
it wearing the eyes that are disinterested there is this routine the break is unseen

i guess, i am right this time when i tell you that you must go...

RIC S. BASTASA
you keep my secrets
i think i will love you more but i will not be telling you since for a change i am also paying for all this rubble.

i keep telling myself this is not about you or love or me or love this is just about letting time pass and then coming back to my senses when everything is calm when passions run away and leave me sane with my upheaval, when i find myself finally alone, strong, firm, decisive and right.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rila Monastery In Bulgaria

potable water
runs there without ceasing

fresh air
and enticing silence

if only my soul is free to get out of my body

it could have danced
so well

RIC S. BASTASA
Ripples

what i do always creates ripples sometimes we forget about this when a butterfly's wing is broken it too creates a ripple in the wind when a mouse is trapped the chickens have reasons to be restless when a dog cannot howl at night the moon becomes wary about it when i gaze and throw nothing but silence you may not believe it but the world trembles when the world starts to slow down it soon follows that mosquitoes get frozen things and people and event are always interconnected like ripples of the pond like dimples on the cheek of the battered woman one cannot fathom this because there is not much pain yet

RIC S. BASTASA
Rise Up Lazarus

Hell is Other people
So now rise up Lazarus and Just Be yourself learn learn To talk and laugh at Yourself, lazarus From the dead of the commons From the rotten flesh of the others among the rest Rise up Rise up And be yourself again A pine among the redwoods A duck among the geese Don’t bother now Being yourself is redemption enough

RIC S. BASTASA
Rise You Must Rise My Friend

you have fallen
and now enjoy the only possibility you must have you rise
like a bubble from the breath of the fish in the sea to the air and sky
to the sun
do not shrink like a melted candle in winter time enjoy the cycle of this life when you're down
you have no choice but to go
up.

RIC S. BASTASA
River Bund 9: 50 P.M.

they do not speak your language neither are they interested in you you pay for everything in this search for the cure of your loneliness you sail on a dragon boat along that river people are teeming cameras click on those tall buildings dressed in colored lights there is a journey of lights but not arriving at any place

you stand there
holding upon one of those railings amidst the crowd there is this revolution going inside your heart saying 'i do not belong here and tomorrow on the first flight i shall take my way back home'.

RIC S. BASTASA
River Of Tears

my eyes ache and i am afraid sooner
if my hardheadedness persists a little longer i may
become one blind old man
begging for mercy and looking for love

justly enough did you say that love is blind
that true lovers cannot see
that mercy is grace?

my heart aches and soon enough i may become
a heartless old man remembering the pieces
of broken hearts and shattered memories
scattered on the floor
of my past

mirrors gleaming with light reflecting
many faces with eyes flowing a river of tears

RIC S. BASTASA
River...Flowing...

the river flows
it is not the way
the rocks want it,

the clouds float
perhaps the air carries them but they choose when to disappear

you have no control for what all these natural occurrences

everyday you try to control yourself opting to do what could have been right

and then you go astray and run towards those mountains trying to figure out why

and these you take upon yourself: nature does it best, without much fuss.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rivera's Place...
	here was singing,
the girl with a pigtail has angelic voice the guy beside her strums the guitar most of the good guys here have white hairs
and the women are fat,
no one seems to be sexy attending
the funeral.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rivers Resting To The Common Sea

by Chance i watched The Bucket List, and i cried at the end of this movie, i am alone in the room
as she goes to church, i get cold, sick
and not desiring
anything,
i have become a different person then,
a stranger to myself,
unable to understand that i must anchor my mind to a certain faith
a belief that is more important than
myself
or this world,
i have that ending
that we are all rivers finally going to the same sea
and there
be silent forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
i agree
education is the key

when the door if finally opened in fact a long time ago
and

we already had 333 years in that Spanish convent and 43 years of that Hollywood experience another door has been closed

and still the key has to open it

one door leads to another
same key

the young keep on getting that key another door is close
more keys

each key has become more expensive
and some have thrown that key away

meanwhile the Authority is asking that doors outside the country be opened

export labor
brain drain
that is another key problem

on the other hand
it is not the money it is the open mind resilient to
poverty

taking time still to laugh at those hard times

i agree
despite the irrelevance it is still the rightful key

the door is open
and we are inside it
no one
no one can take this house
again
from us

RIC S. BASTASA
Roaming

light roams the earth as we too roam like
light
we are the mirrors of our souls looking for company
gets too lonely sometimes a loneliness that wants an irritation of the other lonely creatures
out there
wanting to get even like a seesaw.

RIC S. BASTASA
Roaming...

when the soul is blocked there is a reason, could be that the soul has become too familiar and as it insists, has become too unpleasant for the body,

at 2:30 in the morning the body is behaving like a dead man, pretending, perhaps since there is still that alcoholic breath, saliva sticking and nostrils wriggling

a mosquito bite becomes too irrelevant, a cockroach tumbles down on your hair and laughs,

nothing is happening to life, the soul and body at war, there is this room closed, morning light seeking an entrance to a night window that is still magnetized to
dream.

RIC S. BASTASA
Robert Revised....

the bird flies away from the bough
the ginger cat caught and ate the ambulant rat

RIC S. BASTASA
Robinson's Faura

i close my eyes
my feet stretch to the floor above me
the wide roof of the mall the noise of the chatter
crowds inside my ear as i wait
for you
my dear friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
Robot

inside the nest of your marriage your husband with a thick face has changed you into a robot-bird with mechanical wings, with a beak made of steel and with claws made of magnetic wires. another sadness.

another cruelty on the nest that they expect must bring love and rest. You give me a blank stare and i said to myself: i perfectly understand.

RIC S. BASTASA
Roca

lovely rock
heart shaped beside the shore of this old historical spot

g-spot of jose meeting josephine they made love here, so much love, to the envy of the trees and the vines the moon so full and the stars too many in silence

they have no stories to tell about the the traces where they went how they die and how we ought not to remember pain buried on the sands of time springing as corals and crustaceans from the deepest floors of the bleeding heart to the deepest sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rock Me

don't be shy.
be direct,
rock me baby
i am tired.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rock Me

because you fear me
and i fear you too because we are afraid what happens next in that farther place we finally stopped molding more words for our mouths to sculpt we smoothed the edges of silence like a jewelry for brides we admire its gloss its glaze that to no end have amazed our very eyes that is its beginning but fear like all other stories and novels shall end i sit here looking at you pass me by i have no expectations of suns and moons i am learning the art of rocks and stones it is my silence and hardness that shall speak for me i am rooted without branches i shall bear fruits without those leaves

RIC S. BASTASA
Rocks On People's Heads...

people carry rocks on their heads

nevertheless
all pretend not being affected with such a burden

still looking young and head high when they meet on the train
or walking past the streets

busily they move on fast and since these rocks are all invisible nothing nothing
seems significant.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rody

after how many plays
and stories written

Brody has remained an undergraduate

his impatience for listening
has grown fangs

venomous he scares
those who could have spoken

about what his truth is his inability to take the shape

of the mold
where he wants to fit in

genius i know he is but look at him

he is always overtaken by the worst nincompoop in town.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rody, The Impatient Genius

after how many plays
and stories written

Brody has remained an undergraduate

his impatience for listening
has grown fangs

venomous he scares
those who could have spoken

about what his truth is
his inability to take the shape

of the mold
where he wants to fit in

genius i know he is
but look at him

he is always overtaken by
the worst nincompoop in town

true he writes in fact the best in the city but i guess Brody isn't that smart enough to know what a system is and to fear its wisdom

RIC S. BASTASA
The true spirit does not start out with a system of preconceived ideas.

The true spirit possesses absolute liberty and unrivaled courage.

Each man entirely free to search wherever he pleased for the spiritual explanation of the spectacle of the universe.'

RIC S. BASTASA
Romance In The Plain...

the plateau
exists too in a relationship since it is plain we begin to play our usual games
not the hide and seek but the trip to Jerusalem

under the sun
we haggle for chairs
like all forms of reality others must stand and be left out

when the sun goes out we play the serious game we know so intimate and so private that romantic night that we never forget

RIC S. BASTASA
Romance Of The Beard And The White Woman

a middle aged man with beard is chasing a young woman with a white skin into the room they meet where the pillow which had been light and soft in bed suddenly carries their heads
the bed their bodies in fire the embroidered pillow case finally bathed in sweat....

RIC S. BASTASA
Romancing A Red Cherry Inside My Mouth

got one cherry
inside my mouth

letting it stay there
as my tongue

toys with a red sweet cherry

my lips, my lips
drenched

with such sweetness
i salivate

prelude to love
tonight

watery cherry
bursting in red

sweet blood
spreading on my tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
Romancing The Poverty Of Other People you look at the poverty of other people romancing it like a metaphor in your poetry the color of a man's unwashed shirt with mud and blood, dried sweat, the sound of a hungry baby like the sound of thunder coming from the breasts of mountains the ignorant woman like a beautiful native naked and bathing in the river and rising like a famous nude painting their poverty to the rhythm of some blues the colors in brown, and black and violet and scarlet the trembling hands and biting lips and blank stares the blackest background ever to a future as bleak as ember to a poverty hopeless as ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Romania (December 2009)

lured by bloodcurdling tales we made full trips out of Transylvania’s castles and lovely medieval Saxon towns like Sighișoara, where the ‘real Dracula’ (Vlad Țepeș ;)
first grew his teeth.

the suspense
made me forget what Liza did.

RIC S. BASTASA
Romans 5: 6 - 11

we are weak and ungodly no man dies for a righteous man

God dies for us sinners

it is death, like anything else that reconciles

mortal to immortal
divinity bowing low
to save
the mundane and earthly

think of love again how you swallowed your ego how you surrendered
everything
just to love the undeserving

RIC S. BASTASA
Ronnie

My friend Ronnie when he retired as literature teacher invested his money in books he bought crates and crates of books from the United States and brought them to the Philippines to include a number of his favorite poetry books bearing such authors as frost, walt, derek, etcetera and he invites me in for some hours as he loves to read these poems aloud and discuss the meaning of each metaphor for he is a poet in his own little way a right he claims somehow and modesty aside i also write some published sometimes and he finds me a compliment to this blank spaces and so we indulge in this higher state of literary affairs until he could not accept that i know more about his favorite poet than he does

i mean, i know it by heart he sometimes gets away from this kind of loving until he gets offended and shies away from my own way of intellectual desperation he did not invite me anymore his books took the revenge letting in more dusts more dusts more dusts with no finger prints

until he died, his greed for books went with him the books that till date, remained virgins.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rooted To Reality

the stars faithful to its glittering even in the storm the sun without failure shining every morning

the moon afloat on the river sailing by the marsh soundlessly

the creeks that flow against the pebbles

the grass that spreads itself upon itself

the clouds that drift
incessantly

the self that lives
despite

the consciousness that thrives amidst the numbness

of the dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a seed beneath you

it grows
and you feel it coming out from your mouth and anus

from your mouth is the tendril like some form of a hand and from your anus

roots spreading down to your feet trying to make you still fixed

the tendril stretches and multiplies and tries to reach the skies it is pulling you making you envious to the wings of the black bird

meanwhile the roots are getting stronger dereeper and fierce in the silence of its goal, always, always to fix you and make you feel a prisoner of this earth

two things, two contrasts between all these

the heart, and now you must choose and listen.

RIC S. BASTASA
Roots In The Water

It must be the water
It must be where you chose Living
Could be those clouds
For you have grown profuse roots Of opulence
Why do u float
Still?

RIC S. BASTASA
Ropes, , , ,

an umbilical cord
is a rope
mother cuts it
for good

despite this an imaginary cord still exists between two minds
a bridge
where no one wants to walk

imagination is cut there is now an empty space sort of conceived
independence

for me to grow and be full between us the bridge must be broken no ropes this time
no binding bond

between two continents will always be an ocean giant ships travel
a hundred whales
swim

i like is this way
between us
the Pacific ocean
no islands
just waves so huge
that sometimes
we are brave enough in hopelessness
no ropes this time
no hands and arms
between us
this blinding darkness this utter silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Roro's Birthday

they strong men hauled the videoke box on top of the hill where the nipa hut stands and they all connect the wires beside the natural spring of water and then Roro sits beside his birthday cake and they all sing

happy birthday dear son.

in a minute the roasted pig turns into a makeshift of bones

and then Tata and her mother begins to dance
the chacha.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rorsharch’s Test

Remember those inkblots
They have them ready
For you to tell them
About you

And so you begin
With the story of a Big Bear With sharp claws
Hair all over the body Big feet, and you said the Big Bear is walking towards The forest looking for Mama Bear Who left little bear cubs,

And then you go to the next You said you saw clowns Teasing each other and they have Extraordinary penises hanging On their clown pants. You think It was really funny. You were Just honest.

Then there was a Big Butterfly Lots of colors and you describe Wings spreading and you said they Are flying towards a warm place Because they look so cold and oppressed.

Then the Big Bat and you said you Are viewing it from the top And it is flying
It is flying
In such a speed
Faster than sound Jokingly you told Them how Einstein
Discovered the law of relativity All because of this Big Bat Flying faster than a speed of sound Its mass shirked and light got So distorted it lost itself in space.

And you look at the analyst Call it the psychiatrist Her eyes rolled and she Blinked and she moved her Face sidewise. She repeated If the bat, the bear, the butterfly The clowns move
And whether they move so fast.

And you said,
Definitely yes.

And she scribbled
Her secret notes about you

You know she’d say
There is something wrong
About you
You are schizophrenic
To a certain degree
You need to see a Full time psychiatrist

And you laugh

You have read about the test
And you could have pretended Sanity
Do not say the bat is flying Do not say the clown is jesting Do not say the butterfly is fluttering Do not say the Bear is shaggily tramping on ice Make them still Normal no movement
Something sane does not move Something normal is still Stationary, unprogressing Reality is ecstatic. Reality is something that stops.
A statue. A mannequin.
Reality is a picture. Dead piece of paper.

No imagination
No metaphor

You will be a hundred percent sane.

You know what she wrote in secret And you treat her for dinner Candlelight, you ask her name And tell her jokes
And tell her about yourself

You are a poet. You have imagination.
You have metaphor. You make objects move.
You have bats that fly for good reasons
You have clowns that dance the salsa and the boogie.
You have butterflies that flutter in your imaginary gardens
You have huggable bears.
Papa bear kissing Mama and little bears pissing them both.

You are trained for some creativity. For some action.
You are a fertile field where rains come and flowers grow And birds fly and sunshine comes with colors of seasons in a prism of raindrops.
And by all means, you tell her, as you sip your champagne Glass gleaming against a lazy light of this cozy café

"By all means I am not crazy. I am just a poet"

She pretends she understands. She sticks to her science, of course.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rose Mary

did she get what she wanted?
one may guess

she got a family lived in a house
a husband on her side kids that gave the sounds of laughter
in the room

her regrets perhaps i think i know not having the time to write a poem
about the sunrise
the warmth of days

i do not judge but i think she deserves a break the luxury of solitude the pleasure of just being herself
away from the senses of chattels and
tea cups and those diapers
and dirty floors

Danny thinks otherwise
to each his own

and so i go back to what i said Danny we can only guess.

RIC S. BASTASA
do not hate me,
for i am, this is all that i have wind in your palms when you close
you know what happens when you open again you know what is next

love me then for what i am a rose in your lips when you say something
like
i love you
you know what happens next surely

RIC S. BASTASA
Rosebuds, Dreams, Songs

perhaps,
a love song, a leaping heart in joy,
perhaps, it is everything,
an ocean, fire in the woods,
a gentle rain,
dreams that come true,
memories of childhood,
guitar strings,
perhaps, they do not know a deer, a twine,
a wind, a wave
perhaps, we all live forever, eternity and a love song
perhaps,
something you must know a whisper, a hug,
farewell,
perhaps, it is
love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Roses And Birds

red roses blooming
birds on trees chirping sun shining green grass

all but cliches.

RIC S. BASTASA
Roses And Birds...

it is when the roses are in full bloom
shall all these bees
make their wings too strong

RIC S. BASTASA
Roses Are Red

roses are red & violets are blue
flush the toilet
when you are through

RIC S. BASTASA
Roses Are Red And Violets Are Blue

i

roses are red
violets are blue
other poems rhyme

but this doesn't

ii

roses are blue violets are red sorry but i interchanged the two

iii

roses are red
violets are blue
please flush your poo
when you are through

iv

roses are red
violets are blue
you only read
poems in bed

v

roses are red
violets are blue
i am through now, continue

RIC S. BASTASA
this is the situation,
soon you will find
you live in prison walls, and those who see you tell you
you have no God.

perhaps they say that since they see no
icons on our walls
we bow not to sunsets
we make no wooden crosses

oh, let us tell them
we've grown roses in our prison walls on the fertile grounds of our heart
we speak to God in our poetry
with all the silence and gentleness
and patience of the snail

we have gone beyond
wood, and stone,
and images,
we have passed through all these walls
man-made as they are,
we have jumped over the fences of the flesh, and they who use their eyes
in the middle of their own human light
do not see
we, have, only, hearts.
we, are, pure, hearts.
we, are, love, solitude, in privacy with our God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rose-Scented.....

when you sleep with a broken heart
the eyes that ache
with lost sleep
and the hands that fail you

you drown in sorrow but in a certain miracle you do not succumb to death's final offer

you rise from a whirlpool of grief
nauseous

as usual a broken heart like a salamander
mends itself
repairs its chambers and begins to make a lovely sound, a call to love again, as the eyes wake up for another romantic moment, the hands too hold unto another pair of hands the whole system in you reinvents

discarding old memories buzzing
for a switch
that gives a brighter light in that room
rose scented.
Rotten Memories

a pen that you just keep but you have no time using, an outmoded cell phone that you are not willing to give up, a creaky bed, a rusty pin, a handkerchief with an embroidered name of your someone special a old diary, a tiny wild flower between the pages of your favorite book, locks of hair, what do i really need these things for?

ah, memories, rotten memories, so sweet still.

RIC S. BASTASA
Routine...

it is the same over and over again, no change, nothing unfamiliar,
the terrains we master, the confrontations too boring, all words, no images, nothing about metaphors, trains and rails, sky and grass, winds coming, and eddies leaving, air filled with dust, leaves blown away, women with straw hats,
hands of children, whistles of husbands, what more can this world give us?

perhaps, a global erasure. when we all perish, when no one blames anybody anymore
when cockroaches begin their rule.

RIC S. BASTASA
Roxas Boulevard…

yes, the sunset is terribly beautiful saffron, silky, smooth, mellow fire of the philosopher that we dearly love we can endure the stink of the dead bay, it is the funeral of the earth, rotten, the courage of the vultures dead fish floating rusty keels of yachts

yes we are the reminders of sinking flesh, of fagots eating the brains of those who cease to be alive, we pass by like ephemeral orange.

RIC S. BASTASA
Roy C.

he was not coy he was open and he knows how to use words to make you feel at home with his own angst,

his name was Roy from Subic Bay and he knew how to play the flute like a member of the heaven's choir he was sociable and mixes will all the sectors of the people

he was clean and spoke well about the necessity of being clean and shaven
we envied him and we wanted to be like him in all aspects and these made us lonely all the while as we lost contact of the uniqueness of ourselves we were lost along the way and we stepped out from the enclosure.

we came to know later that Roy was gone and could not be accounted for. how was that? we still ask that question all over again.

now i am 50, clueless and realistic.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rubber Ball

When you fall hard on a cemented floor bounce back
and go higher
to the hands that caused your falling
let those hands
not catch you let those that causd the pain
miss you
for now you have freed yourself
from the clutches of temporariness
bounce back
move higher
befriend the clouds
and learn
the tricks of drifting
till you settle finally in that heaven....

RIC S. BASTASA
Rubbing Your Body With Sponge

work the hardness
of a day until it gets soft in your heart
massage the sores
of existence figure out the leaks of lights
drink space and open the mouth
like a cocoon
set free a monarch butterfly
watch the colors
fly like a rainbow disappearing
so the rain can stop to shower
becloud and be still

relax the sponge
let the skin
open its pores Ruben's Mansion

it is not a house in fact, it is a white mansion placed on a one-hectare lot surrounded by a well-manicured garden and flowering shrubs and fruit trees
one that everyone cannot but always admire

when they come
and watch Ruben’s mansion
taking 2 years to finish and 12 million pesos
in expenditures

as you go inside
the glass door opens
leading you
to a living room
twice as large as my own house
in a remote barrio

the furniture are carved from molave trees shining with shellac
and glistening
with opulence
the motif of this
house

the kitchen is huge four times as wide
as my garage accommodating only my second hand car

and the garage
is one that can handle a party for the night of ten tables and fifty chairs and a hundred people

one wonders
why Ruben has to make a mansion like this

sheer taste perhaps or his money simply searching for something to buy and spend looking for some vents

did he remember how as a child
the family was shamed because visitors
from Bohol
in 1970 could not be accommodated
and they all murmured how poor they were?

it must be traumatic
for Ruben
as a child
and it must be some trauma
that molded his dream to build a mansion
like this?

(or am i just jealous
of his ambition)

i need not ask some more
his lips are sealed
he is dead
and he has no way explaining a sensitive matter as building a mansion while the rest still thrives on mediocre houses and unfinished makeshifts

and no one lives
in this house anymore

perhaps some dreams still live here
dreams unfulfilled

and once fulfilled
these dreams now
refuse to die

a mansion is still a house and when no one lives there need i say that it is never a home and after this party tendered in the name of Ruben we all go home

and then think for once i must build a home and for the meantime forget about a mansion or just a house.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rubs Her Head Under Your Hands

It's what happens after the party Which haunts the most.

The left-overs litter on the table
The plates are like faces of people looking at you Saying 'what now? what's next?'

You will be keeping memories Of those people who leave you Because they have their own homes Away from yours

The table will be empty again
The chairs too and the veranda Will be very silent

You go out of the room and lean On the railings of the stairs You look at the heavens To find out how distant are the stars

How beautiful are those which you Cannot touch

Until your favorite cat comes And rubs her head under your hands

RIC S. BASTASA
Rumor

the stone of discord that you throw at the beehive
daring and divisive!

RIC S. BASTASA
Rumors.....

wisdom is rumored to have many beginnings, subject to so much interpretations is this: that fear is the beginning of wisdom, that fear of God
that fear of one who loves you so much and whom you want to love but you for so many times
failed,
that to some however, the beginning of wisdom is wonder.
and so at night
you walk outside the house of your dreams and you gaze at the stars and you are lost and you stumble and you hit your head upon a rock and you are bleeding

that fear of God, that wonder that makes you bleed,
perhaps.

RIC S. BASTASA
Run And Dance And Play

'The mission of poetry is to create among people the possibility of wonder, admiration, mystery, the sense that life is marvelous...
To make life a marvel—that is the role of poetry.'
- OCTAVIO PAZ

she finally admits that she likes octavio but she does not understand him, and i quip that if that is the case, you must stop reading him, he is killing you and your initial desire to be in love with poetry isn't it that the mission of poetry is to create this marvel? this admiration? this feeling that life is marvelous?

that there is still this wonderful feeling left inside us
despite the odds?

if octavio makes you wonder about more wonders continue reading the magnificence of his lines marvel, marvel, marvel

but if he does not achieve that purpose in you try reading back those nursery rhymes those that make you feel better and make you go back to the niceties of your childhood run and play and dance and sing

RIC S. BASTASA
Run For Reality And Please Carry Some Dreams

don't waste your time looking back.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Running

running away
like a cat
trying to catch its own tail,

keep on running
try catching
a shadow

keep on running
sweat out
the feeling of air and breeze

and smoke and fog
all whipped up
by this wind

keep running
pursue the reasons why one must keep running does it really help you cope up

with what you are leaving?

RIC S. BASTASA
Running And Running Away

running away
from honesty
not touching
anything
not touched too
by anyone you keep on running and
running away?
no one is reached no one reaches
for you
you keep on running and running away from no one but yourself because what you touch
bites you
and what you love is always a stone
thrown at you
and so you keep on running and running away
from honesty
and having gained speed you have become the fastest lie
that even the winds of the northern seas
cannot catch even a glimpse of
who you are.

RIC S. BASTASA
Running Away From You....

to run away
is never to come back

i have never ran away from you

count the years
and the day when i am
back to your arms again....

RIC S. BASTASA
Rural Scene

what you see
is this:

a straw hat
covering her hair
against the sun

she is just a shadow

her eyes look
against you

you are blinded by her
presence

her lips are not delightful

as her hips
are no longer swaying to your dictates

this is what you do not see:
her tongue
in cheek

RIC S. BASTASA
Rural Sounds

mooing cows barking dogs
flowing river
grassy plains
hushing winds
tall mountains
foggy hillsides
rising cliffs

a little brown boy
harvesting water apples a little girl lifting her skirt to catch them

father plowing a rain fed field elder sister washing dirty clothes in the river brother catching fish for breakfast mother cooking rice

smoke rising from the chimney reaching for the gods residing in the skies

RIC S. BASTASA
things rush events want us to run faster time is silent actually it is as silent as a still painting of melting candle
but the hands of the clock creates all the noise with its new battery of anxieties
running in circles arriving
at nothing

all of these around and above me
want to make me run
and rush
to that finish line

i am not an athlete neither am i
performer of some incentive loading companies

sorry, i am nobody's personal property
i keep this hobby
wearing the hobbit
of the Franciscan probing what is real and spraying red paint on what is fake... x is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rustic Town

down the road this summer coats the leaves of mahogany trees looking more like snow for the soil here is off white like the gleam of pearls when it rains hard
the whiteness of the soil is smooth like a porcelain jar from faraway Osaka

nothing is fast like a gazelle gently events unfold like a slow motion film where you savor each sequence of a story
told by an old woman her head turbaned by her self-woven cloth passed to her by so many generations

at night the cicadas have become so silent just a while ago before the curtains of the day are folded into sheets of forgetting
the cicadas have engaged themselves in symphony of songs

then we witness the coming of fireflies adorning the crowns of trees as though someone queenly is coming to grace a night of stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Ryokan

Who says my poems are poems?
These poems are not poems.
When you can understand this,
then we can begin to speak of poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
the myth of sisyphus somehow after 50 years
is no longer a myth.
the rock is as true as the inclined uphill climb

i breathe
and take some air for i shall climb again and put this rock and roll it down again
and put it up again

i breathe
more life
and haven't mentioned yet that death
is a reasonable option.

RIC S. BASTASA
S10

Wacky thoughts
the legs dance
the hands wave
and the head shakes wacky days
dancing suns and whirling hours
mind parachuting
on no man’s land.

RIC S. BASTASA
and how do we know that God speaks to us?
invoke the beautiful garden there will always be a gardener even if you do not see the wind but the rustling leaves can tell that is God, appearing, manifesting but i want him to use words, to utter what i also utter, i want him, to speak my name as a master shall call a servant at dawn

50 years i waited, and all i have are still metaphors labyrinths, i want and pray that God be literal, and candid and frank and straightforward, as one friend would call me hey Ric, what's up? did you give bread to the hungry?

did you visit those who are in prison?
did you check if justice is done?
did you care for the poor and the oppressed?

could be in one dinner when he sits with me under the light of the fluorescent lamp nothing about my imagination that he speaks through my wife or through a visitor or through an event or through an accident that did not happen nothing like that, and in this case to be frank with you

God has not spoken yet.

RIC S. BASTASA
a burning heart, he says, he has a burning heart and i imagine a burning bush, as we wonder how come that there is also an eternal fire that does not burn and char anybody
a burning heart and it does not stop to burn there is still pain in there, but the burning heart is never consumed it burns love, and pain is always lesser there may be no joy anymore, but the giving insists everything, everything take them all away that is the only meaning of the burning heart always unconsumed, never charred, a stranger to the ashes.

RIC S. BASTASA
one thing with thought is that it is fluid.
do you like them to be stones? the sculptors are ready with their hammers. one thing with flexibility is that something always wants to remain open, a door for instance. sometimes to wait for the beloved it is never locked till midnight or that window that misses the moon it never closes till twilight for the love of light and cool air some have to be apertures and orifices my mouth is open for love my arms are unclosed circles my heart grasps for air something in it is still open in fact, as you have seen it, in its unclosed state, it is still bleeding my mind is open functioning as a parachute of my ambitions my body does not actually mind what happens next trusting in words, in another glass of red wine, cherries for the tongue the last one for the road, who knows?

RIC S. BASTASA
a candle melts as fire gets too near, water saves the drops
that fall upon the glass, shapes of freedom are formed melting ideas solidified by cold and contained once again in water and glass as the man that owns the scene finishes its work and
leaves.

RIC S. BASTASA
the walking days will still be there sometimes we shrug our shoulders feeling sorry the day is over and one body is still stuck on the seat of questioning forgetting that this is merely another walk on some short destinations arriving there we disembark only to be told to walk again

it is not weird
it is. it is. it is.

it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
let the days pass
let all the dreams ask

why are we still unfulfilled?
when will we become true?

let the days pass
let the mind be as busy as a marketplace let the haggling be haggling bargain bargain, compromises

let the days pass
let the hair on my head be all white let the days eat me whole and let me fade like a ghost let there be none of me again i have had enough

RIC S. BASTASA
now i am hearing the rushing steps of the fish vendor towards the market passing by the road fronting my blinds

a busy day,
the red ant below my feet is at it again finding some crumbs of cookies
under the computer table beside the swivel chair

i always have a word
despite,
the ant wonders
why are you doing this?

the nails have no feelings and so are the feet of the chairs the monitor is a eunuch the room fills itself with so much mess rambling books scattered papers still unread piling folders and dusty nooks

the light brown curtains need badly a laundrywoman

the walls are calling for a painter and the floors yell for a scrubbing and mopping this is the earth of being needing an update a cleansing of some sort a deluge perhaps and what must remain must only be the essentials a pen a piece of paper discard the table and the chair for man can squat

and still relate to what is bare and empty.

RIC S. BASTASA
cold wind on my skin from the sea and mountains i am at the middle and my heart is warm
i am unbeatable
i walk in the middle buffered and secure.

RIC S. BASTASA
Essex
in Essex the black ravens are hovering on a tree without leaves it is cold here
snow on the roof and on the ground frozen mailboxes of long time ago when the emails come forth
saying
Essex Essex
the world has changed and you have remained there constantly wondering
waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
early morning eyes
fresh from their dreams the mind recalls

the heart confirms

all the emotions still contained vivid images in technicolor the hands summon the fingers write, write, write

strike while the iron is hot cliche, cliche

now the thoughts rush like a flood from the forest mountains the fingers are adept at all these one with the mind and heart and so here we are again slaves of our art

redeemed risen anew
maybe still cold and perhaps even frozen thaw melt only to be solidified again when the sun comes irony of the mind paradoxes of the heart

listen
to you i am saying nothing

it is for me in the labyrinths of my confusions i am trying to find my way out trapped fly in a bottle buzzing for its wish for freedom

genie
wanting someone to rub its ancient lamp if you let me free

you may have four wishes and that is not just a promise it is a contract

morning thoughts
tunnels without end lights yet there is yet no exit and so you still find me here in my own shadow fog and mist trails filled with tall grasses up there is the house of my intentions a figure waits but i do not know yet who surprises surprises anticipations of life

these are all the reasons hazy as a refraction of light bending upon a glassy vision

RIC S. BASTASA
i like to tell you but you know i cannot.
and so i resort to scribbling some notes in my private part (a journal, i mean it)

dear x,
please be mine tonight
do not mind the rumors of the day
love you.
i am algebraic.
an equation unsolved. dear x.

please be there tonight i have money, please do not mind the morals of the morons of our days.
i love you.

this is y.
y still is a why, and there is no answer to my own stupidity. dear x.

dear x. please do not mind me.
you are the lesson of the day. you are the morals of the morons for the day.

dear x.
i am nearing the conclusion that i must be crazy. dear x.

inside the office i work all day and always thinking about x.
dear x. dear x. it whispers a solution. this is y and and this is x.

i snap a mosquito and it is dead between my palms.
dear x.

why do i love you dear x? and why can't i tell you about it dear x?
why can't i even utter your name?

i must be a coward dear x.

on the other hand, i must be strong too.
I got an A for self-discipline. a B+ for compromises and a C for cooperation.

my life is not an F.
dear x. i am happy now. i forget about you. and i shall lie about you.

got an A too for all the denials. gr graduated summa cum laude for living my life through despite a very lousy dissertation that my professors consider as perfect.

i wonder
why are their standards wrong?

dear x.
this is y. forever we shall remain unknown to ourselves.

that is the reason why. we are better this way. ghosts forever roaming the streets of horror.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Basakan Diin Hinog Na Ang Kahumayan

Hinog na usab ang mga lugas sa humay Sa among kaumahan diri sa Katipunan Bulaw ang bulok sa mga basakan Daw sama sa bulaw nga buhok Sa matahom nga amerkana Nga akong mahinumduman

Mihunong ako makadyot Sa kaanindot sa akong nakita

Apan sa tinood lang
Mikawat ako ug lantaw sa Dalaga nga naligo sa sapa Sa kilid sa mga bulaw nga Basakan sa among kaumahan

Taas ang iyang itom nga buhok Lagom ang iyang pamanit Apan bus-ok ang iyang dughan Ug ang tubig nga mibasa kaniya Mipasihagsihag sa tanan Nga gusto ko pa nga makit-an

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Bukid Nga Bulawan

nunot sa pagkatkat sa taas nga bungtod ug paglabang sa suba nga galikos-likos sama sa sawa

nadan-agan na gyod
ang payag ni anding nga nagpatunga ug
gipailawman sa kakahoyan nag-andam na diay silang tanan sa iyang banay ug nagdukdok ang iyang anak nga lalaki sa dako nga agong

ug misayaw
ang iyang anak nga dalaga samtang giihaw
ang usa ka itom nga baboy nagluto sila og dinuguan nag-adobo og naglata sa upat ka tiil og naggisa sa mga lumo og unod

pakahapon atubang sa adlaw nga talisalop na nanglingkod kami alirong sa talad ug gatagay dayon sa tuba nagsultianay kami kabahin sa akong tuyo kabahin sa iyang utang nga dugay na kaayo

nga wala niya nabayri gidugangan niya og tagay daghang baso pa
daghan pang sumsoman
nga sinugbang baboy
hangtod nga kaming
duha nangahubog
hangtod nakalimtan

ang utang hangtod
wala na mahisgoti
ang pagkobra sa bahin sa saging sa yuta

nga iyang giugmad
wala na mahisgoti
ang mga mais ug humay ug ang mga kamoteng kahoy

ug mga bunga sa mangga ang among gihisgotan mao na lamang ang mga idlas nga langgam nga pula

ang balahibo sa dughan hangtod nalimtan na
ang buluhisan ug ang utang apil na ang kahakog sa akong lolo ug tatay ugma sakay sa kabayo ni anding mopauli ko nga walay dala kon dili ang pasalig sa mga bag-ong tag-iya sa bukid sakit pa gihapon ang akong ulo ug nagngutngot kaayo akong mga tiil sa kalayo sa among gilakat ug mitapot ang kahumot sa ylang-ylang nga gihaplas sa tabonon nga panit sa anak nga dalaga ni anding nga nauga nunot sa baha padulong sa akong dughan latas sa duha ka aping Sa Dihang Akong Gikalibang Ang Balak

Naghinuktuk
Nag-atubang sa
Concrete wall Walay specific Nga gihunahuna
Kay kada
Buntag baya
Ako malibang

Miutong
Tubol baya
Ang unang
Gikalibang
Hapit magisi
Ang akong
Anus

Misunod ang
Medyo tubigon
Igit agi
Siguro sa
Hinog nga
Kapayas
Nga akong
Nakaon kagabii

Ug nahuman
Ang tanan
Apan sa dili
Pa iflush
Ako usab
Gireview ug
Tan-aw

Walay mais Wa baya koy Nakaon nga
Mais gahapon
Humay baya
Ang among Kinaon

Walay luha
Sa akong igit
Apan yuna Pa

Adunay pula nga
gakumpol
Sa akong tubol

Dugo?
Wa man koy Nakaon nga
Dugo

Dugo gayod
Aduna gayod diay
Dugo ang
Gikalibang ko
Nga balak.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Dili Madugay

kadiyot lang kita dinhi ayaw na anang mga kabalaka ug mga kahiubos

labi na ang kapungot

usa ra ang atong padulngan ang lubnganan

ug didto labaw na
nga walay pulos

didto diin labaw pa
sa semento ang kabugnaw

diin lihokan kaayo
ang mga ulod

sama dinhi diin daghan
ang mga wala'y dalunggan

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Gabii

Ayaw kahadlok. Ang tingog sa linti Tingog kana ni Tatay. Ang hagunos sa hangin Tambag ka na ni Nanay. Ang kilat Kihat kana ni Ibyang.

Katulog lang. Ayaw kabalaka kay niining Nasod sa kalayo, ikaw ang tubig.

Sa imong balay sila mga anino Lamang. Manglabay lang sila.
Ikaw ang tinood nga lawas.
Ug magpabilin ka.

Kon makakita ka og Sigbin nga nagtuwad sa imong salog, Ayaw kahadlok. Ikaw kana nga gisulaya’g Lumping sa kahayag sa bulan Ia imong bintana diin Daghang lumot.

Basa ang siradora. Ayaw kahadlok singot lang kana ug mga higala mo sila.
Tinuloan sa imong atop nga buslot.
Miulan na. Nagsugod na Og tulo. Ayaw kahadlok Nga ikaw mabasa. Miyukbo lang nimo Ang langit. Gihatdan ka lamang Sa daghang linya sa imong Mga balak karong gabhiona.

Ug anaa na pod ang mga baki, Pamatia. Nagsugod na og pangharana.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Gamay Pa Ako

Sa gamay pa ako gipakuyog ko nimo Aron manginhas sa bukana, didto

Diin nagtagbo ang suba ug dagat, didto Diin nangamang ang mga kinasong,

Ang balat, ang mga gagmayng kasag, Ug mga kugita. Ako nga dili pa kaayo Suheto sa atong panginabuhi isip inahan ug anak, sa imong pagpangita’g sud-an

Sa atong panihapon, nagkadam-ag-Dam-ag taw’n ko sa danlog nga mga bato

Ug mga lumot. Nisyagit ko sa kasakit Sa dihang natunok ko sa tuyom nga saag.

Gipaihi ko nimo ug imong gihidhiran Ang akong lapa-lapa, duha na ang imong

Gipas-an sa akong katapolan- basket sa atubangan, ako sa imong likoran.

Dihang ngitngit na, aduna na kita’y Sud-an sa atong panihapon. Gihayagan

Sa lampara, naglugit kita sa mga unod Ginamit ang alpirel samtang namati kita

Og drama kabahin sa mga sirena. Karon Nga dako na ko, ikaw na ang gapandol-

Pandol sa atong nataran, sa atong karaan Nga kusina. Labaw na sa lampara

Ang kahayag sa atong talad-kan-anan.
Dili ko ikaw biyaan, nay. Ako usab andam na Pag-agak nimo sa imong paghinumdom Sa atong panginhas dihang ako gamay pa.

- RIC S. BASTASA

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Hingtundan Nga Kuno Akong Gimahal

Sa tiilan sa taas nga bangaw Anaa ang sulbad sa atong kamingaw.

Sa habog nga bung-aw Pangitaa ang tungaw.

Gaksa ang iro nga maayong moaw-aw Dayon sakay sa tambok nga kabaw.

Didto ta magkita sa Davao.
Himamata ang akong kataw.

Sublion ta ang atong mga laraw-Supaon ang mais, apil na ang pakaw.

Dili ko matukib ang akong kamingaw.
Ang akong kaulag dili na kini tiaw-tiaw.

Kanus-a ba kita magkita sa isla sa Talicod?
Katol na bayo kaayo ang akong likod.

Kalimti ako ayaw, pangitaon ko ang katagbaw Dia ko gapaabot tapad sa plato nga bahaw.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Imong Impyerno

sa pag-abot nimo
gilibot sa imong mata ang dak-on ug kalapdon sa balay mga lingkoranan nga tugon nga karaan gasinawsinaw sa matag-adlaw gitapohan sa hagdanan pasaka sa ikaduhan undana sa lamesa nga puno sa pagkaon abi mo ug mao na kadtong tanan apan sayop ka, buang ang namuyo sa maong balay

ang tiguwang nga babaye nga inahan kuno kadto nagkaon ug tanod ang igsoon lalaki nagdula sa gabas ug martilyo siging gidokdok ug tabas adtong gabok nga kahoy dapit sa kusina

kadtong babaye nga imong gikaibgan dili kasugakod ug sugilon kon unsay nahitabo niadtong gamay pa siya samtang gasulirat ang iyang mata sa dihang ang iyang ig-agaw nga lalake nga taas ug barog dunay gisuksok sa iyang ailingagngag.

nakasakay ka na sa sakayang buslot.
matag adlaw gitapakan mo ang buslot unya karong tuiga mao na ang ikadisinuybe ka tuig sa imong tinipigang kabuang.

pit senyor, pit senyor walay hunong ang imong pagsyagit didto sa tungatunga sa lawod sa kalayo sa imong impyerno.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Imong Mga Balak

gamhanan gayod ang imong mga balak higala ko
sa mga panid sa pulong dagitab gibasa ko kini kaganiha sayod ka

gibasa ko na usab kini karon sa akong pag-abot halayo sa kagubot

nakakita ang mga buta nakayubit sa mga pulong ang mga amang nakasayaw ang mga bakol sa kathoh sa imong mga pulong nakadungog ang mga bungol nahingangha gayod ako sa mga kausaban sa tanan nahimong bino ang mga sapa sa akong tiilan nahimong pan de sal ang imong catatam nga kaniadto patay na

ug ang imong mga bukog wala gayod nila maputol bisan pa sa ilang mga kasilag ug sa kasuko

gibasa ko kining imong balak sa makatulo
ug mipiyo bayana ang manok ni san pedro

mipahiymo ka higala
karon nagmalipayon ka na kay ako nakaamgo na sa kagamhanan sa imong mga linya ug karon tugiti ako nga mangutana

kon kining tanan gikan ba' sa kinailawan sa imong kasingkasing?

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Imong Pagkamaayo Moluto

Saludo ko sa imong pagkamaayo moluto Sa akong mga paboritong putahe.
Sakto sa timpla sa asin, dunay gamayng tam-is sa asukar, Ug gamayng aslom sa biyasong nga moigot-igot sa akong dila.
Duna puy gamayng kapait pero lami lang gihapon Sa akong panglasa. Humot. May pagkahalanghalang.
Maayo g’yong pagkasagol ang mga sibuyas Ug ang kamatis ug ang ahos ug sili ug luy-a Nga gigisa sa mantika sa baboy ug Sa aslom nga suka gikan sa bahal nga tuba.

Saludo gayod ako. Nabati ko ang imong gugma Sa sulod sa dughan sa piniritong manok. Sobra nga gugma.
Morag gabukal nga sabaw sa tinolang manok nga bisaya Nga gitanglaran. Saktong pagkalata sa kalayo nga gikan Sa bukong ug takong ug lahing sa lubi. Dili mosabod kon Birahon ang unod sa bukog sa pakao ug sa paa. Kadako gayod Sa imong gugma kanako. Gibati ko kini sa imong Lami nga nilutuan sa matag kaon

Su’d sa akong tilaok, lapos sa Baba sa akong atay ug ngabil sa akong kasingkasing. Mihagok Ang akong tiyan sa tumang kabusog. Langitnon.
Apan karong gahbiona, aduna kay gitulo nga mas lami pa gyod Kay sa piniritong manok ug tinola. Humok nga karneng Baka. Imo kuno kining gibunalbunan disir Gihumol sa suka ug gamay nga asin ug paminta. Ginapahumok Sa daghang latos sa habol nga sundang sa tadtaran nga tugas.
Ayha nimo gipabukalan ug gigisa sa gamay nga mantika.

Akong gitilawan. Mas lami gayod. Mas nanam. Mas sabroso.
Surop ang kalami sa tanang buslot sa salog sa akong dila.
Lapos sa akong tilaok, sa kasing kasing sa atay sa tiyan sa tanang Liko-liko sa akong tinai. Nagdumili pa gani ang akong lubot Sa pagpagawas niini.

Gipangutana ko ikaw. Akong giunhan nga dili na kini gugma.
Kay natilawan ko na ang lami niini. Mas lami pa kini sa gugma.
Ingan ka. Ang kaloooy imonggilamog didto. Ang pagsabot sa mga kasaypanan. Ang pag-unong.

Ingon ka mas lami kini sa gugma. Kay ug kon wala na ang gugma Usa lamang ang imong pangayoon kanako. Bugti sa imong Pagkamaayo moluto. Pangayoon mo ang kalooy.
Andam ka ba mohatag sa imong kalooy bisan ug wala Na ang gugma? Andam ka bang mounong bisan ug wala na Ang kalami sa mga niluto?

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Kadaghan....

tungod kay kusog na man kaayo ang ulan
ang lusok niini wala
nay bili,

tungod sa pagbaha sa kahayag ang adlaw morag wala na lang diha sa mga panganod

sa tunga sa lawod nagpunay ka ug bugsay sa imong sakayan unya wa ka kaila kon unsay ngalan sa dagat kon unsay bili sa kaasgad kon unsay gamit sa mga balod ug hangin.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Kalisod Sa Pangutana

sa kalisod sa mga pangutana sa kinabuhi alang kaniya igo na lang siya pagduko sa iyang ulo ug gapahiyom nga nagpiyong paingon sa yuta- nakighimamat sa iyang duha ka tiil
ang iyang hunahuna

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Katre Sa Pakigharong Sa Kamatooran

Ang mahitabo sa katre dili bakak.
Tinuod. Hubo kamo sa kaugalingon.
Hubo kamo nga makigharong Sa inyong mga lawas ug hunahuna.

Ug pagkahuman sa lalom nga pakigkita Ug pakighimamat sa inyong mga kalag, Magpahulay. Dayon magbulag.
Buot ninyong maghiusa sa hangtod.
Apan aduna siya'y lawas. Lahi. Langkat.
Buot sa inyong mga hunahuna nga Ipadayon ang tanan. Apan lahi dinhi Sa kalibotan. Malangkat ang usa ka Bungbong. Madugta ang mga haligi.
Molupad ang mga atop. Hangtod nga Walay mabilin. Mao kana kitang duha.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Laing Bahin....

unta

dili mo na isulat ang bahin sa pagbiya

morag adobo nga wala'y

pamenta og asin

nawala na ang kananam

bisan gani ang

humba

wala na say lami

kon kini balikbalikon diha

sa atong

pamahaw

irog irog gamay paingon sa kalipay

unta ang imong

isulat kabahin sa panagtagbo karong gabii

sa duha ka uyab nga dugay

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive

13984 nang wala magkita

didto sa ilalom sa punoan

sa mangga

silong sa bulan nga tibook sa

kalangitan

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Lapyahan Sa Dagat

Kawras sa iring
Ang akong kagahapon
Gihandom ang bukog
Sa isda sa akong
Tutunlan
Kana ang akong karon
Ang imong kaanyag
Ania kanunay
Sa akong kasingkasing

Hagki ako pag-usab
Sama sa kainit sa adlaw Sa bag-ong kabuntagon Sa lapyahan
Sa linaw nga baybayon

Pagkasakit ba
Sa wala pagkasumpay
Sa atong mga damgo
Mga putol nga damyo
Mga nangabungkag
Nga tulay
Nangahulog sa suba Nangahimong mga
Gagmay baroto
gianod sa sulog sa dagat

Mga tipik
Mga dugmok nga bildo sa akong Panumduman
Gusto ko ikaw nga hikalimtan Apan anaa ka kanunay Sa bulan
Sa mga bitoon
Sa adlaw sa huyuhop hangin

Asa ba ako paingon karon?
Asa ko kaha ikaw ilubong Sa tumang kalimot?
Pasayloa ako nining balak Nga kanimo nagahandum Sa lapyahan sa baybayon Sugdan ko na usab Ang pagkulit sa puti nga balas ang imong panagway ang imong ngalan Didto nahipatik ang atong duha ka kasingkasing Mitulo ang dugo nga dili nako gustong makita

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Mga Sagbot Nga Haskang Hiloma

kahibawong motago ang mga kasakit og kahiubos sa usa ka dapit diin dili na sila makit-an morag mga tagolilong
morag aso morag mga hinungaw sa init kaayo nga yuta nga kalit lang giulan sa usa ka kaudtohon sa Marso

ang imong makita mao na lamang ang pahiym sa adlaw nga mihalok sa yuta nga kaganiha nag-alburoto

ang imong mabati mao na lamang ang huyohoy sa hangin ang awit sa usa ka tamsi nga mibatog sa punoan sa bayabas

ang imong makita mao na lamang
ang mga pungpong sa mga hinog nga bunga nga andam na nga mahulog diha sa kasagbotan
nga haskang hiloma

diha sa imong pahiym
nga haskang hilawa

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Misa Ni Fr. Roman

Sa pag-isa nimo sa
Kopa diin giipis ang mompo, Sa paghawid nimo sa puti nga ostiya

Sa paglitok mo nga mao kini Ang lawas ug dugo ni Hesukristo

Miduko ako ug sama kanila Miluhod dungan sa pagkiling-kiling Sa gamay nga bagting.

Nipiyong ko.

Pasayloa ko, Father Roman, Kay wala ko’y nakita nga Hesukristo sa akong dughan

Wala ko’y nabati nga kinaadman.

Ug diha sa akong silingan Wala ko’y nakita nga kalainan

Ug diha kanimo nga nagwali Sa akong atubangan
Wala ko’y nakitang timailhan

Ngitngit gyod lagi, Father Roman Bisa’g lamdag ang simbahan.

Saba gyod kaayo, Father Roman Bisa’g hilom kaayo ang mga lingkoranan Ug mga haligi ug bungbong.

Samok gyod gihapon bisa’g ang katawhan Nangaamang, nangabuta, nangabungol.

Pasayloa ako, Father Roman Kay mao kana ang nakita kong kamatuoran.
Gitawag ko nimo nga makasasala.

Tungod ba kay gibuka ko Ang akong mga mata ug gitagoan ko Ang duha ko ka kamot sa akong mga bulsa?

Gitaktak ko ang mga abog sa akong sapatos Atubangan sa pultahan sa imong balay.

Wala didto ang tinuod nga simbahan

RIC S. BASTASA
(hubad sa Iningles nga balak ni Mark Strand)

Nabuhat nato ang atong gusto.
Atong gibulabog ang mga damgo, gipalabi nato ang dagkong kakugi.

Ang matag usa kanato, naghangop sa kagul-anan Ug atong gidapit ang kapildihon sama sa usa ka naandan nga dili maputol.

Ug karon ania kita dinhi.
Ang panihapon andam na ug dili ta mangaon.
Ang karne naglingkod sa tin-aw nga lanaw sa iyang sulaan.
Nagpaabot ang bino.

Pag-abot dinhi
Anaa ang ganti: kay walay gisaad, wala usa’y pagadalhon.
Wala tay kasingkasing o makaluwas nga kaambong, Walay dapit nga kapaingnan, wala’y katarongan nga kita magpabilin.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Pagkatinuod

sa pagkatinuod
kon akong hunahunaon
sa maayo
bisan ang pagkalot
sa akong itlog
tungod sa tungaw
ug timos

pangadye baya
kana gihapon
katol, morag Ginoo...

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Punoan Sa Lanzones

Lahi baya kon mokaon ka og lanzones Sa taas sa iyang punoan.

Tapad sa imong aping ang mga hinog nga pungpong. Mokuha ka

Og usa ka buok nga lanzones.
Dali ra kang mabusog sa pagbuot

Sa mga asul nga mga panganod sa kilid Sa imong duha ka kamot.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Sementeryo Sa Dihang Mibisita Ko Kang Nanay Ug Tatay

Nay tay
Ania na usab ako mananghid kaninyo Ugma
Moadto na ako sa mental hospital Kay aduna na akoy Reservation didto
Basin didto una ako magpuyo Bisag tulo lang ka bulan Ug ma-extend basin
Tulo ka tuig depended sa akong Pagmugna ug mga balak didto

Didto man gud kuno kasagaran Mamugma ang pinakanindot nga Mga Balak

Mao nga nay tay
miboluntaryo Ako sa pagsulod didto Sa ilang pagtugot

Sayod ko nay tay nga kamo Nangimbitar usab kanako dinha sa inyong lugar Diin mas nindot pa ang mga balak Kay sa gimugna didto sa taga mental hospital

Apan sayod mo nay tay Dili pa ko andam mosulod sa inyong kwarto Kay daghan pa ako ug tinagoan Nga dili jud ninyo mapasaylo

Adto na ako nay tay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Silangan Sa Kasadpan

Samtang ang mga bata Sa silangan

Nagtampisaw sa
Pangaligo sa ilalom Sa ulan

Lahi usab didto
Sa kasadpan

Diin ang tigulang
Nagpungko

Sa iyang pag-inusara Namati sa tingog
Sa ulan

Naglantaw
Sa pagkahulog niini

Sa yuta nga sa kanunay Nagpaabort sa
Kataposan

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Taya Ania Nabutaan....

ania ka haduol na
sa tungang gabii

samtang nagsulat ko
anaa ka usab diay diha mibasa kanako
unya dili kitang duha kaila gani layo man gayod unta kita kaayo apar naa koy gibati nga kalipay, nga mora bag kita nagtapad unya
gibati nato ang kainit
sa atong mga kiliran

abi mo nakatulog ako
ug sayo sa kakapoy sa akong mga buluhaton
unya sa akong pagmata karong orasha akong gihagpat ang akong mga damgo sama sa paghagpat nako sa kalamunggay
aron akong ilunod sa lamian kaayong tinola nga malasugi,

karon ani ako ania
sa akong kaugalingon
nakighinabi sama sa
naandan, apan duna
laing nahitabo nako
karong gahbiona,

dili kini kabahin sa mga bitoon ug aninipot kabahin kini sa kahilom nga sa tinood diay sabaan usab, kay abi mo ang kasaba usahay dili diha sa pagsyagit, o sa pagyama yama, sa pagyubit sa pulong apan kabahin usab kini sa kasingkasing nga gustong mahigugma apan dili na niya matuhog pa ug balik ang mata sa dagom nga sa akong pagsusi
sa kadugay sa paghikalimot
sa taya ania nabutaan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Tinood Lang

sa tinood lang
sa sulog
magpaanod-anod
hayahay ang
pagsubay diha
sa abay-abay

wa kay ngalan
kuyog sa tanan
dili ka mahisgotan
ikaw ang tanan

mahimong hayahay
apan sa tinood lang
wa sab ka malipay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Tumang Kalood Gisuka Ko Ang Nanglabay

sa dihang
nakita ko ikaw pag-usab didto sa usa ka
dungguanan

naglagot ako sa
akong kaugalingon kon nganong kaniadto sa akong kabatan-on

nahigugma ako
kanimo
diha sa tumang katanga sa kagahi sa ulo
sa pagkawalay-buot

sa tumang kalood
gisuka ko
ang nanglabay

RIC S. BASTASA
Sa Wala Ka Sa Tuo Ko

Usahay, maglakaw akong mag-inusara Sa karsada sa inyong dakong syudad.
Dili ko kaharong magtan-aw kanimo Kon ikahinagbo ko ikaw Sa sementadong dalan.
Ikaw naglakaw usab nga nag-inusara Hangtod sa kaadlawon Gikan sa halawom nga kagabhion.
Gasadsad ang akong sapatos Usahay sa akong kahubog Ngdala og daghang lapok, Lamog sa abog. Ug ikaw usab labaw pa Kanako. Mas bug-at ang imong Tiil nga walay sapatos. Guba nga tsinelas.
Kagabii nagtagbo ang atong mga panan-aw.
Wala kita magasinultiay.
Nakita ko ang paglabay Sa hangin sa imong aping.
Napalid sa makadyot ang imong buhok Morag dunay buot ipasabot kanako.
Nangamay, morag nag-igon Hawiri ko. Ayaw ko biyai.

Apan wala kita magasinultiay.
Sa wala ka. Sa tuo ako.
Ug ikaw li-dali
Sa paglakaw mora bag dunay Balay ug mga anak pa nga paulian.
Sacred Structure

your eyes do not see the dark has no scrutiny it is the prism that does all the trick for you

you will be deciding the lives of ninety million more yet you leave inside the core there is always this bore inside the chest of the sore

i wonder how you write about liberties and their lives in solitary confinement you take pride in your refinement in the future someone writes about your destruction of the common, the lowly and the poor, and you will see with tears falling from your eyes: this cannot be! this cannot be!

the damage has been done your death is not enough to pay for the devil puff

RIC S. BASTASA
Sacrifice

ignite me

ignite me with just a spark from you in the dark and i will be this fire that burns that lights from day till night to warm your body and guide you in your way and when i am ashed tell them if they ask

i have done my duty
i had it my little own way from the spark of your love that never dies i have become the constant sacrifice

RIC S. BASTASA
Sacrifice Of The Stone

a stone has always been a stone numb and silent on the side of the pond
cool on the top of clay

it likes it that way no sadness
no happiness either

today
it ceases to be mindless to the clouds
that it has long disliked floaters

and drifters
these clouds
have always chided his numbness

the mosses beside its belly
are dying of dehydration

rain is needed for its friends to survive
and so
here is the stone
smiling
and humble and begging

RIC S. BASTASA
Sad (But True)

a poet in residence published his last book in 1982

his body was discovered several weeks later

at 49
it was found next to a bottle of gin and a
.44 caliber gun

RIC S. BASTASA
i read again and again the poem you sent me thru email it is sad, beautifully sad, like sunset, then the moon less the stars it speaks about the universe our humanity our capacity to transcend misfortune

i like the way it builds itself how it starts as lock of hair and then transforms itself into a human form like how a womb evolves into a woman's only girl i read it again and again looking for that happy angle that possibility of us, but there is nothing there where i can fill my emptiness the way you squander love into the sea like words spoken without the heart in the last line love still does not exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sad Lady

in her world her tears are pearls
her cries are songs of the beautiful women her loneliness is a bed of soft parakeet feathers the oppression
day by day is a way of life her hands are the ears of a rabbit
they have learned to listen
her lips are tight buds and had always forgotten how it is to bloom

RIC S. BASTASA
Sad Memories Of Home

The lightning flashes
The thunder roars
I hear old family voices
I see sudden memories

RIC S. BASTASA
Sad Memory One Autumn

the leaves fall from the brown bough pale yellow leaves of autumn their paleness clings to my brain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sad Sunset....

When one sits for a while beside the sandy shore and contemplate on the pouring of light early morning and the fading of light in the afternoon one feels that the sun too bleeds blood after a struggle
though you smell nothing and touch nothing and then you comfort yourself with the feeling that this poetry is nothing but a state of the
mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sad Times

i surf the face book of old faces i was very thin then, and silent looking my eyes are still sharp and i remember not one of you wants to speak to me. your hair was curly and you sat next to the girl who said she really loved me the other one kept the teasing making the match that i did not mind the last girl was as thin as myself but ate her words about staying patriotic.

After graduation i left immediately someone promised to kill me in the city so i left for the hills for i have my friends there. i was so afraid and needing all support.

The rest of you went out of the country looking for greener pastures, married old and having only one child with blonder hairs. I look at the pictures again. Time passed so quickly. As quick as thunder, and lighting. I got hit, and i feel dying. I am here with no definite plans, no place to go except old age, and a mortuary insurance all paid up.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sad To See

it is sad to see that in the middle of the rain you go and you leave me here
so guilty

when the rain stops
there is no peace
inside my mind
the rain goes on

why are you doing this to me?

soon i shall forget you as i drown and finally die
inside the flood that you have caused me

RIC S. BASTASA
Sad Twist Of Fate

for years
you swear you cannot love me and then this time you change heart and say you love me i have only one day to live and what shall i leave you then: sorrow?

RIC S. BASTASA
Sadness Over The Place We Left Five Days Ago

We left the place and we will not be coming back it is a definite resolve since we did not find ourselves we have been looking for days as though we are lost and beyond finding we pack up

and then we go

we remember only those rocky mountains those deeper blueness of the seas we had footprints on those steps going to the secret lake

if you follow
you must have seen

dried memories like
blood.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sadness Tops Them All.

in the honor list Happiness gets first.
Sadness cannot make it.
Top Ten is merrymaking.
Grief is an outsider.
But everyone gets out
of the room
to be inside the bus
back home.
Before that is the tragedy.
All those on the honors list die.

Here, Sadness tops
them all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sadness, In Consonance With Lady Grace

long cold nights
one wonders

if German sausages are still delicious if charred

RIC S. BASTASA
Safe

you are safe with your built-in principles gauges of the sages in all ages

that when something or someone a cure-all or a please-all or an offer of the whole world right in the opening palms of his hands

you always tell me

'oh my, this is something too good to be true' and you say no

and you are safe and at the end i am amazed you have always been right. out you go, now in the far away land, contented, looking at all of us we feel we are all fools and he is there smiling as the great wise man his feet rooted to the realities of the earth his hands stretching to the possibilities of heaven and i think, he is correct, and i admit, i still need to learn a lot of things from him.

a friend who tells me who am i really.
no holds bar.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sagada Stills In A Floating World By Marjorie Evasco

If with images
If with words
I
You
could catch on photographic film on silk paper a likeness of
You
of me
in Sagada
I would have
You would have to sit a thousand years with master of austere
Light
Measure
Masferré Shikibu
To learn the process of rendering of staining

Silence

Sound

RIC S. BASTASA
Sagada Tryst

The roads
move around the side of high mountains

fog hover like an ocean upon the valleys

at night the cold
seeps inside the skin and bones

the pine trees are tall and the rocks dress with moss we gather around a campfire of dried pine wood

we sit upon smooth stones we share the sanctity of silence

this is the place
which time wants to take back

RIC S. BASTASA
Sagdi Lang Ang Akong Pagkasuhi

kon magpareho ang atong mga tingog
dili lami pamation

pananglitan ang tanang
tingog sa gangis
sa ting-init
dili ba god sakit kaayo
sa atong
dunggan?

ang sitsit sa halas bisag upat lamang ka halas nga nagdungan
ug tago diha sulod
sa kakugnan
dili ba god sumo?

gani mawa man ang
atong kahadlok basin
ta paakon

maong paglipay nga ang
akong tingog
suhi,
dili ba ang suhi nga tingog
sama sa suhing bata mao may makamaong mohilot?

RIC S. BASTASA
Sahara Desert

for lack of love life or any sexual activity in new york
or even in san francisco a friend of mine
says
he feels like he is the sahara desert

dry and dying
to be indulged..

RIC S. BASTASA
Sail Boat On The River

at night we go boating along the shallow part of the Dicayo River
when the moon is full and when the winds are gentle

i paddle our way to the place where she lives
the river gives a silvery shimmer on the silent banks of the river and then i begin to hear her hum our favorite love song.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sailing Long Along Alone

you sail along alone on a mirror of water aboard a light bamboo raft at the other end
you create a direction the clouds glance at you down below the water level finding this matter of drifting too interesting
there is a relationship developing sailing all alone along the surface of liquids languid and languished lean and light
a flight from a fight this fool full of fear

RIC S. BASTASA
Sailing On...

there is this mutual dislike an expected repulsion is there a need to say it?

must there be more insult to an injury that refuses to heal?

the world is a wide ocean a vast continent

we must simply forget and sail on...

RIC S. BASTASA
and so tired of the weepy willows, ironic about the daily news of love abandoned, lovers abscond, about a love lost, lover betrayed, you heave a sigh and for once agree with your feet to stroll the shores of love: the hermit crabs finally exchanging shells for love beds, the worms giggling for new partners setting aside hermaproditic decisions, the seagulls mating on air and on top of the roofs of boats moving out to sea wave after wave of love you sail out to sea all alone still wishing that on the other island you shall meet your best find.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sakay Sa Sakayan Sa Nagbugsay

sakay ta sa sakayan ako ang magbugsay
pauli sa imong balay
tabok sa tampi
daplin sa dakong suba
ikaw ang maglantaw
sa unahan ikaw ang
moawit samtang ako
ang mamati samtang
ako ang maghatod
kanimo ngadto sa
imong pahulayan.

ayaw kagoul ayaw
ug kahadlok ayaw
ug kabalaka kay
sa imong balay
pahulayan wala na
ang kasakit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sakei

yasai ramen
hot and fuming to the nose

tongue is familiar to the taste of Japanese

noodles and you recall same old faces that make you smile
facing the passing crowd of people
in the mall

the banana split
comes later beside vanilla ice cream

you chin is resting upon your fist

everything is tolerable here
until

the toy train comes towed by a
plump white kid
whose hands are tightly held by a strict grandmother

what we see sometimes turns sour then bitter

at first glance
everything is sweet and we think that sweet is forever and desirable

smooth relationships
nothing messy
but it is never that way mind you

RIC S. BASTASA
Salad Bowl Of The Day

the day's bowl
birds' chirps
drops of honey
a green leaf
soft fingers of
the sun
an open window a patch of rosemary whispers of the winds
a memory of you
blank eyes
a waking heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
Salad Poetry

neruda’s chicken nuggets whitman's elbow macaroni william's mayonnaise dickinson's olive oil a little of elliot's salt and robert's frost, brautigan's catfish, lowell's skunk, sea canes of walcott,
bishop's broccoli with armadillo meat yeat's yeast bread an afternoon of friends in a party with robinson spring ice storm on mountain road in the poconos, as mayer says the grace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Salagma

sa dihang
naminyo
ako kanimo
salagma
lamang kadto

abi nako
ug dili
kay murag
daw sa talahaw
ako murag
ahanaw

ug kalit
mipakita
na ikaw ug
ako nagtapad nagpapicture

salagmaan
ra abi nako
ug dili mao

RIC S. BASTASA
Salesgirl Sa Mercury Drug Store Sa Quezon Avenue

ang iyang ngan Love, so ako siyang gitawag og Love

putation, bawod ug pilok bata pa, gwapa, dili kaayo taas,
mubo ang iyang buhok

morag lunhaw nga
kabuntagon ang iyang
mga mata

gitingob nakog palit
ang akong tambal sa high-blood unya si Love nangutana kon
molarga na ba kuno ako
sa america

mangutana ta ko kon mokuyog ba siya, apan wa na nako dayona

naa sa kilid akong
asawa.

RIC S. BASTASA
Salestalk

here comes the Vietcong
selling a dragon fruit anticancer
always good for your health
take it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Salí Despacio Para No Molestar A Nadie

the moon
left quietly
so not to disturb
even the silent
stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Salimuang Sa Kanahan Nga Nangandoy Ug Anak

Ang amahan kugos ang duha ka anak Ang inahan tapad
Posing silang upat sa kilid sa mga tulips

Balhin na pud sila sa tunga Dayon sa tuo Sa wala Sa sentro

Pagkaanindot jud tan-awon ang ilang family Picture, gusto sa pud unta ko pa-take ug family Picture Pila ra gud unta pagposing sama nila Maka-afford man sad kog bakasyon diha ba Palit ug round trip ticket Kuyog ang akong asawa Maka-afford man sad kog palit ug digital camera Bisan pa gani ug paliton nako ang mga tulips Kanang tanang klase sa kolor

Apan ang problema ug duna bay baligya Nga bata dihang lugara
Bisag for rent lang, para posing sad ming upat Aron duna na koy
Family picture with the tulips in the states Dayon akong i-email sa akong mga Close nga higala

RIC S. BASTASA
Salimuang Sa Kanahan Nga Nangandoy'g Anak

Ang amahan ug inahan kugos sa duha ka anak, Posing silang upat sa kilid sa mga tulips.

Balhin na pod sila sa tunga, Dayon sa tuo, sa wala, sa sentro. Pagkaanindot gyod Tan-awon ang ilang family pictures.

Gusto pod unta ko pa-take sama ana.
Pila ra ba unta’y pag-posing sama nila.
Maka-afford man sad ko'g bakasyon diha ba.
Palit og round-trip ticket Kuyog sa akong asawa.

Maka-afford man sad ko’g palit og digital camera Bisan pa gani og paliton nako ang mga tulips.

Apan ang problema og duna ba’y baligya Nga bata dihang lugara
Bisag for rent lang aron posing sad mi Aron duna na ko’y family picture with the tulips in the States, dayon akong i-email sa akong mga close nga higala.

RIC S. BASTASA
Salvador Dali Poem

writing what i want to really mean in a fashion that the surface must be unbelievable imagine snow in the desert grass in the sea penguins on the hills of sands lions sitting on the pews fish swimming in the air but mind you the fish, the lion, the penguins, the grass and sea and hills and sands, and those pews oh, they are all really really true, touch them.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sam Keen

'Human life is a journey whose end is not in sight. Searching, longing and questioning is in our DNA. Who we are and what we will become is determined by the questions that animate us, and by those we refuse to ask. Your questions are your quest. As you ask, so shall you be'

well, it boils down to
i am here
who i am
where am i going?

and soon i shall be actually it also depends on what you ask me to be

it is not just me it is also you
and us

for how can i be me without you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Sama Sa Mga Pato Diha Sa Tubig....

namahawa na kaha sila wala na igdungog kon asa na dili ba kaniadto mora silag mga sayaw-sayaw sa punoan sa mangga? ang uban nagpadungog dungog nga magsalag ang uban misaad nga moawit sa matag adlaw aron ang kasubo nato dinhi unta mahupay ang uban napakita sa ilang mga pahiym wala koy nakita nga nangyam-id niadtong pagsugod apan pagkagamhanan gayod sa kalimot og ang uban nga masaaron gitulon sa dakong baba sa kaligotgot ang uban nagpadaog sa mga bangkil sa kasapot og sa gamay lamang nga haguros sa hangin nanglupad sila sama sa mga langgam nga hadlok sa ulan sa linti sa dalogdog kita na lang duha dinhi gusto unta nakong makita nila ang atong gisaloan nga kalipay kalipay nga dili matukib sama sa pagtampisaw sa mga pato diha sa tubig

RIC S. BASTASA
Sama Sa Usa Ka Suba

Ang kinabuhi kuno sama sa usa ka suba Diin nato gihinay-hinay og hulog

Ang mga talulot sa atong mga bulak, Hinay-hinay og kuyog sa dagan sa tubig

Hangtod nga layo na kini sa atong Panglantaw, ug isunod nato paghatag

Ang atong mga dahon, hinay hinay lang Gihapon nga atong ipaanod ug ang atong

Mga sanga ato usab nga ipiyal sa suba Sa atong kinabuhi hangtod nga mahurot na

Ang tanan natong mahatag. Tan-awon nato Atong bulsa kon duna pa ba kitay mahatag

Kay kon wala na, moabot na ang dili Kapugngan. Ihatag na nato ang atong Lawas, ug dayon ang atong kalag.

Kasagaran buot nato nga magpabilin

Apan dili kini mahimo. Anaa ang balaod Sa suba ug sa mga talulot sa mga bulak.

Ipaanod ang tanan. Ang tanan gayod.
Atong iuli pinaagi sa pagpaanod.

RIC S. BASTASA
Samadhi

an old man
sweeps leaves and twigs
upon the grave of his master

an old poet loses himself upon a frog
that once jumps
into the pond

the last one
was lost in the middle of the green ocean

in this poem
something is happening

RIC S. BASTASA
Same

On a Sunday
at nine
he sits by the window
watching
people passing by bringing their burdens
he is not part
of this
sacrifice
he is the spectator
watching the day pass by

till the next level of his lazy enlightenment
the sun fades away
and now the moon
he sits by the window
imagining
the night away

it will be the same on another day of his life
this spectator

RIC S. BASTASA
Same Boat....

we are on the same boat all our hands are paddles here another storm is coming the heavy clouds are calligraphic over there bold and dark are the strokes of our longings i do not ask

i do not wonder why all of us are not talking....

RIC S. BASTASA
Same Canal Odors...

a stinking dog sits below me it has a way of feeling my feet with its canal flavored tummy affection it shows and that i must understand despite the dislike

i must somehow reciprocate it with a pat on its back

'nice dog' i say
faithful all the way

with its ultra sense of smell it has not registered any complaint at all about myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Same Ending...

stories about the lives
of people
i've read them throughout the night
after work
i hear no footsteps now on the road
where this window
faces
the trees are as still as a picture of trees in colored
books
it is still the usual sameness of things arranged
every day and night

da dog sits beside my feet with my brown socks still on fitting themselves on yellow
rubber slippers

it is the same ending composing a poem like this one that you are reading

there is no option to be unique
or different or outstanding
so you can notice
what i am
not or what can i
be in the next few minutes

i have no other ambition but to take another sound sleep tonight and so we have to part ways
again

it is my night now
as another morning in you begins to unfold like an umbrella that you have to take because you have conceived another
rain...

well, rain is a good
beginning

as a sound sleep that visits a very tired man makes a good
same ending.

RIC S. BASTASA
Same Ending.....

i am confident
that you will read this.
i know that you have been reading
me.

so i am writing this to inform you that he died yesterday.

Unlike the others, he was not killed, No, he did not also kill himself because you know very well that with the way he loves life and enjoys its zest, he would not dare pulling the trigger on his throat.

he died,
the reason is consistent.
even before i left you you already know what is that reason, if you believe that he can be forever in love with life and enjoy its zest,

you are wrong.

he lost control. he went to the wrong places, took the wrong medicine and live with the wrong people in the wrong country.

he wants to correct a wrong with another wrong showing fully well his lost faith in life, he rebels. he learned to hate poetry. he stopped writing since

then.

sunsets are no longer significant to him.
migrating birds are nonsensical.

he did not like fine dining. he went to the mountain. perhaps practiced yoga there. brags that he eats only worms.

he comes back to the city to find his wife and two kids. stays mostly on the sea. had all the salt of this world and then closed his eyes.

one thing i can be proud about him: he did not kill himself. you must learn to be brave. Live your life. Do not mind anymore if you are true to yourself.

it is irrelevant. Happiness too is immaterial. As sadness is. Same boat. Same river. Same ending.

RIC S. BASTASA
Same Message

like vincent

aldo this world could have loved someone as beautiful as you could have,
it didn’t i never did and never will listen to one as deep as you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Same Place, Same Song...

because the song is played you have no choice but to remember it at first you say it is just a song and you are a man

the song goes on and on and beneath the song is a big river wanting to end its life joyfully into the sea

because you are alone and you have no one to cling to you follow the river and the flow goes on and on and on and then you drown yourself inside that big river now you have chosen the song and it has become another part in you it settles in your heart and then you pay the bill, do not finish your beer and you go away to have a dose of fresh air same boulevard, same walk, but now at a different time because this place has become a part of you

and then you drown yourself into said memory what a joy can this be again and again and again.

RIC S. BASTASA
you give her space
because she needs it
she is blinded by your light, there is simply more of your immensity in her and you pity her for that as she is handling more than what she can take,
and so today you go on different destinations she will have her own way and you will not ask where she is going and when she is coming back..., ditto.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sammy You've Got Mail

I am imagining how you look today, perhaps you do not have time to cut your nails anymore no time to trim your beard and shape it like a nest for a bird no time to wash & shampoo your hair to give it a flowery smell no time to brush your teeth to make then appear pearly white to the girls perhaps you have not taken a bath for forty days and so you stink like an unwanted skunk on the lake why Sammy? don't you like the beauty and goodness of life anymore? why? do people shy away from you or you shy away from them? what did you put at the center of your universe? God or you?
Sammy life has got a lot to offer If and If you make God as its center.
Try it, and if all these else fails Come to me I'll give you the best Assistance for the suicide in your life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sammy, The Nurse...

just a question,
can pink imagine pink?

you are the pink flower miles away blooming in the whitest winter

supple firm pink
the centerpiece of the earth's feminine beauty

men can love you
in your imagination

but you telling it is another consideration talk about something better the one that you love

to hold

the one that you can boast for the night
when you are alone with lust

talk about cliffs misspelled about erect postures of the coconut climber

the wine and the frog legs, the adventures of the pink soul do not burp.

RIC S. BASTASA
Samtang......

samtang dili mo pa makita ang hangin samtang dili mo pa makumkom ang dagat samtang dili mo pa mapupo ang mga bitoon diha sa langit samtang dili ka pa makahibalo unsaon paghimo ang buwak nga antuwanga diha sa iyang sanga nan, dili mo pa gayod masulat ang pinakaanindot nga balak sa imong kinabuhi

RIC S. BASTASA
San Antonio

san antonio
lead us to a place where we are lost

and let us find

the way where we can find our way back home:

an empty space

a nothingness
a place where the walls are not painted where the doors are not locked where the windows look out

into an open universe where all of us

are alive with living fires where we become shooting stars that children see whose

mothers tell them:
make a wish!

RIC S. BASTASA
Sandy's Kid

Sandy's
eleven year old kid introduces himself as Kevin and he is asking me what do i want
to know

there is
this silence that is like an ear

'am i disturbing
you? ' he asks

'not really' i answered

oh Kevin you must be another lonely kid in town
whose favorite sport is wrestling

mad against mom
and a dad who is nowhere to be found

RIC S. BASTASA
Sanity...

did you know there was this woman who took up law and embraced practically each word in her heart
only to find out
at the end of the series of lectures that in reality

life is unfair

and that the purpose of the law is to level the fighting fields women elevated to cope up with cruel men and natives given the guns to learn the adage that after all
strength is might and might is the real law that the weak loses their thrones
to the wolves and foxes and snakes eventually she had a hard time balancing realities from concepts and literally she lost her mind and heart

she left
and roamed the world like pure air her heart did not turn to stone her mind did not turn into water i heard she writes poems she keeps them

forbidding others to read them i have conclusions and like her i always keep them to myself because i am still sane...

RIC S. BASTASA
Santana's Game Of Love

It just takes a little bit of this, a little bit of that It started with a kiss Now we’re up to bat
A little bit of laughs, a little bit of pain I’m telling you my babe It’s all in the game of love
It’s all in the game of love
It’s all in the game of love Let’s play the game of love

Roll me Control me Console me
Please hold me
In this game of love
I’m out here on my own

(excerpt from a song)

RIC S. BASTASA
Santorini Santorini

santorini santorini Zorba zorba shall i be.

we shall dance
the zorba the zorba

i have so much to take i have so much to give

we have so much to laugh we have so much to drink in santorini in santorini.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sapaw

gibalikan nako ang nangagi gihinayhinayan ko og langkat ang mga nagsapaw

nga panit sa akong nawong ug gilantaw nako pag-usab ang mga kalipay sa akong kabatan-on kadaghan kaayo

sa mga saad nga gipatik nako diha sa panit sa mga kahoy gilantaw ko pagbalik

ang mga lunhaw
ang mga asul
ug ang mga gilak

ang mga dahon
ang mga panganod
ang mga bituon

gihikap ko ang akong nawong gapiyong ko sa kahamis sa akong kagahapon akong gihapuhap akong ngabil atua ka pa gihapon nagpuyo sa suok sa akong unang halok nimo

RIC S. BASTASA
Sarcasm

lonely: i lonelier: you and i
joy: you
ecstasy: still i orgasm: just you pragmatism: you and i again marriage: of course, takes you and i survival: you approach the i at the end: just you and i, society demands a decent funeral

RIC S. BASTASA
Sashimi Loveliness

there is still something raw in that relationship which takes years to grow
the tendrils of illusions soft

it is like
salmon sashimi
sushi
bathed in wasabi cream
green hotness
which i leave softly still inside
my mouth
which my tongue savors
like
a pearl
a treasure of sesame oil
with rice wine and ginger

pleasure bathing longer in the pool
of time

i love that raw peel cold lemon juice around my gum
that my teeth have long readied
to take the last bite

there is something delicious in love that is raw watery softness
hidden tenderness
unspoken
because the mouth is closed
and full so privately
uninviting

RIC S. BASTASA
Sassy Sunday Here......

white sands and
the sea breeze and
hammocks and
coconut trees and watermelons and
barbecue, a bowl of rice, and wife and friends, and my dog waggles his tail
aboard the car.

RIC S. BASTASA
Saturation Points...

buying furniture
is not an option, where do you put them in this crowded house?

clothes are a
no no,
he is fat and clothes don't fit anymore

the spoons and forks we have enough of them left unattended
they rust in their secret places

in the kitchen
the porcelain plates are glossy
we become speechless
of such beauty in fidelity
despite the fact that we stop giving parties and they have become of no use

unlike before we cook the traditional way with firewood
and chimney and we send the smoke to the
sky

our way of communicating to God
daily.

now, we have become too secretive with technology
in our privacy
we do not keep any smoke because we know we cannot hold them
no matter how closed the windows are they always keep and tell the story

guess what?
there is a need to buy
more blankets
we are feeling this kind of indescribable cold
for the moment

RIC S. BASTASA
Saturday Morning

the maids here just do it removing sofa covers changing them all over something new the old has to go washing drying and ironing on a saturday morning

she goes out to buy some veggies and spices the flea market goes awry on a saturday

just sit there
and don't smile
nobody seems to mind
what you are
what you do
what you say

just be silent there pretend that you do not exist don't smile don't ever make a sound and make them think that you are laughing one maid looks at you she is young and intelligent and she is asking what are you doing in your computer

she does not think you are lazy and crazy she is just curious what is poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
Saturday Morning 2010

just surfing and chatting with friends and acquaintances nothing to love

no one worthy

the face of love
shredded by the

shard blades of broken memories

from now on
he says it's all about the flesh and nothing about the spirit

nothing to love
nothing worth it

someone to have sex with
at night

someone to fill the emptiness and the void

someone to talk to during late dinners

someone to say goodbye hellos not that warm

what is true love?
he does not know anymore
since then,
since then,

when his heart was thoroughly broken.

RIC S. BASTASA
Saturn

So you fill yourself with food and drink and with a bloated tummy you lie in bed spinning, spinning like a Saturn, huge, in your own planetary system
content with your rings of ice
not worrying where you are going
certain upon the flight where stars and meteors go together in the blindness of the laws of
silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Save The Zzzs, For My Friend Who Cannot Sleep Tonight

Skip the nap

Back to the womb make your room
comfortable
make it dark and
quiet

make an amniotic
temperature
remember when mother was pregnant of you and father
was putting his ear
listening how you kick

take a deep breath
wear your warmer
pink pajamas
keep an extra blanket
on this cold and damp night

keep your laptop
away
from bed
this bed
is only for sleep (and sex
if you have your partner
with you)
worry time
is daytime
tonight
is sleep time
do not
distract your eyes
with the problems of the DAY.

make your routine
same night
same sleep time
a nighttime of relaxation meditate
relax your muscles
it is sleep time
now

and do not forget Work out regularly

i tell you
tonight
will be your soundest sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Saving A Drowning Man...

just because i have saved the drowning man then i shall be forever responsible for him?

i disagree.

i saved a snake and it does not bite me. i sheltered a scorpion, i adopted a crocodile put them in their comfortable homes and the world has since then become a happier place for man and snakes and beasts.

RIC S. BASTASA
Savor The Moment And Let It Last Even Without You.

this is Sunday morning and what you have is fever a sore throat and a mind which wants nothing but to be rested on a pillow

others have gone to a picnic far away from town some friends agree for a hunting ground to kill birds and ducks some have opted for a dinner buffet in the city

'what is the matter with you? ' a friend from New York is asking 'you cannot waste your life, there is so much to to New York' he eagerly makes the tip

my life is here
rotting and i want to be everyone's fertilizer.

'just a joke, i tell him' i am going swimming and it is heavily raining here' would you want me do it for you?

and there's the irony of it all fan in winter, hot soup in summer.
as always, dislocated life, wrong timing, wrong person, wrong attitude, everything seems to be wrong from the point of view of others who, after all, has not fathomed what happiness really is.

so simple. savor the moment and let it last even without you.
hear the chirping of the birds on the heat-season of their aviary romance. more eggs on their nests.
more fledglings, everything new helpless and so lovable.

as is, where is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Savor These Realities....

my dearest
we are here
we are not watching
fake mountains

i am holding a real red rose
not those fabricated ones

we are trekking on real paths that wind themselves on the bellies of real lovely mountains

let us savor
these realities
for soon
we just don't know when all of these
shall be gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Savoring The Images Of An Early Morning Sunshine

needles of light pricking your face like Chinese acupuncture

blue and white butterfly-clouds gray crab-stones beetle-pebbles
showers of golden-dusts emerald mountains
ruby-twilight
turquoise-blue-dreams diamond hopes
platinum-self.

RIC S. BASTASA
Savoring The Silence Of Privacy

actually we learn more from ourselves by not talking much words are assuming the sounds of rain sometimes unnecessary thunder everything still like quite quiet
words become to crowded on such a limited space words that are meant not to be uttered
because they are too precious
in our privacy
not to be shared and we learn more from this respect for stillness for the poplar state no wonder how God has not put mouths to this earth which when it speaks shows its tongue in tsunamis its screams in volcanic eruptions its fears in quakes

i am studying in my lifetime the art of silence the beauty of words unspoken on my lips are embroidered tendrils of climbing
morning glories
on the trellis of my mind

RIC S. BASTASA
Say 'I Have No Toothache' Twenty Times....

a man realizes that one way to survive a toothache
is to look at the ceiling and say
'i have no toothache'
twenty times....

RIC S. BASTASA
Say I Love You To Yourself...

now why do hate yourself?
just because it is getting weaker and cannot earn you more income as expected?

oh, do not be so cruel
be kind, as you are kind to other people
so must you be kinder, if not kindest to yourself

it is time now to sit down with
yourself
relax on a bench in the park watch children play watch the old couple take their stroll
on a Sunday afternoon

listen, just listen to the sounds of the weaknesses of this world watch its beautiful way of fading and slowing down

watch the best sunset ever
in silence
and say, i love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
suffering shares the same eyes, same point of view
and as i see it sufferers take the same road of voluntarily taking so much suffering
on their hearts
sort of having learned and loved what suffering gives them and when sometimes they met accidentally in the park or in some Chinese restaurants drinking their kind of tea when their eyes meet they easily know the names of their
existence
without need of introduction and despite this seeming familiarity less the trifle
after having a short look at each other they nod their heads their lips back on the cup and without much effort to avoid it they continue the sipping slowly, slowly,
and when the cup is consumed they take leave say no excuses
and never really really
gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Say That Always, Life Is Beautiful! '

Keep on running keep on running, run away, she keeps on saying that to me. i am hardheaded, stayed put, stand my ground, and ask, who is she?

no one tells me what to do with my one and only life i live it the way i want it: not so good perhaps, but it is, and will always be mine alone.

not even the sickness can sway me to grieve not even your cruelty can make me change my mind to live, and to live fully and to say that always, life is beautiful! '

RIC S. BASTASA
Saying Thanks To You

you know it very well
and if we see each other again, you may take a gaze, or glimpse a little, but i am ready to forget
there is really a need to recall,
what for really?
what is your
reason for coming back?
everyone is nowhere
to be found,

i swallow
that fear, that shame,
and i will face you
and i will not be afraid, to say, ‘thank you’

RIC S. BASTASA
Sayo Sa Buntag

Kagawson na gyod.
Midagan ka paingon Sa tago diin duna'y
mahulog.

Pag-abot, gahubo
ug milingkod ka.
Mipiyong. Mitakilid.
Mipatunga. Mihawid
Sa kilid. Mipiyong
Pag-usab. Miagulo
Sa kalami lamog
Ang dyutay nga kasakit.
Mora ka'g gigawsan.
Ay, kahayahay!

Gikalibang na nimo
Ang nakaong santol, pinya Ug kinilaw nga bulinaw.

Nabasa nimo ang sinulat Sa usa ka banggiitan Nga Amerkano nga kining Klaseng panghitabo
Diha sa imong sampot Ug sa imong pantawan
Usa ka dakong kalipay Sama sa paghimugso
Sa usa ka himsog nga Balak. Busa paglipay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Says Romeo To Juliet

what time shall we meet? tonight or tomorrow night?

RIC S. BASTASA
Scaling.....The Slopes

there is this
blindness which society loves

it is justice, the blinder it is, the truer its verdict.

the blind one holds a sharp knife on one hand and a weighing scale on the other

blindly it slews what blindly it thinks was the cause of the calamity on those blind times, on those blind actions, the head dragon of society continues to scale the slopes of the mountains of injustice.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scar On Your Left Arm...

the mirror is always a good metaphor for solitude, on cold nights, the mist sticks on the glass, despite the coldness in solitude you sweat, there is heat inside you warm body, groping hands, the mirror faces you, blames you and ask: where have you been for all those years?

(sigh, emote, undress, on uncut pubic hair, somehow you manage an attitude of purity) i am here with you. all these years. i am. Faithful as a rose tattoo.

RIC S. BASTASA
in the fields of your dreams we were never just scare crows we were the flowers that bloomed in June the dews of dawn in May the merry makings
of December
the promises of January the forgotten deaths of April
in your life we cannot be disregarded
we are the integral parts
of you
do not look at us as though we are just your scare crows
we are your rivers too sometimes you touched the sides
of our being mountains and we shiver
like a squirrel
the one that runs away when you begin
to move in.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scarred People

one rainy day
the scarred people decide to take the plunge on the murky river

eye go naked
not for anything else but to simply see who got most of the scars from their faces
to their feet someone wins of course his scars look like snakes and centipedes practically naked he looks like a leopard

yet he is the most gentle person of them all they take their plunge into the murky river following where the flood may finally hide.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scars

sCARS are Trophies of suffering Display all of them and They will be Pleased and you will be Staying CONnected witH tHEM for EACH ONE EACH scar
is always a part of the whole of uS
for no one stays as an Island One broken wing Ripples the Sadness and Sorrow Throughout This Wide Universe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scatter

sky and earth can make a compromise
between them

air, and sun and
moon too, night and day, and between us
some words,

know by now
that for this world to keep on revolving, there must be some compromises,

win some, lose some,
you cannot have all of me as i cannot have all of you,

go, come back, go,

come back,
do not stay, as i will do the same.

a part of my time
a part of my place.
some space between.
air to take in and sighs to take out.

let us scatter.
spare some pieces.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scattered And Free

the normal mind goes for a unified view

thus whatever is scattered like stars the mind grapples to gather for a heap of leaves

thus whatever is dissonant the mind summons upon an eclectic rampage and creates a harmony somehow to put music
in one note

but no matter what this normal mind does what this universe opts is to explode and create a bang and scatter some more all its hidden particles

what order there is the flux sucks them all into a big hole and at the end of its tunnel vomits whatever is taken and spreads
everything like dust from the rear of a speeding car

one looks at it
in isolation
and one sees a chaos that is more beautiful than a system
than a cabinet of clothes with a lock of a closet

wanton beauty as one wants to put it the rain that drops without a count the sunlight that burst without cadence
the river that flows in rage without numbers
the clouds that drift
without
a specific direction the waves that rise and fall and reach a shore without staying upon a permanent dwelling

all these from a distance make me accept the crazy cadence of disorder
that my normal mind wants to grapple into a cat fight a struggle that i still want to understand a wrestle that wishes to win and stop

at the end let all things be scattered and free....

RIC S. BASTASA
Scattered Morning Thoughts

the rooster
has already crowed many times as i wake up early
at 4.

i sum up a life.

your life and mine, we sum it up.

has the nights lied about who we are behind our motives?

Love too has many faces and it speaks in many mouths.

i sum up Love.

It is measureless, no exact dimensions. It is always saying beautiful places for us.

a paradise. Where is it? a bed. Is it cold now?

the roosters are crowing they are not love songs anymore.

the nights has stars till morning. we never notice anymore.

we walk in different directions.
we promise nothing.

It is always the sound of bus fading on the street as it moves far away, far far away than we can with limits understand.

The rain starts to pour. The roof is a chatter.
The oasis of silence is gone.

The journey of the camel has begun.
We take shelter in that departing kiss.

For onward we go, looking for the city of our lives.
Without maps and compass.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scene Beside The Cemented Fence

a red motorcycle stands beside a cemented fence
where some vines
with yellow flowers are stucked

beside it is a sky blue van which is open
and empty

a man with bold
big stripes for a shirt is pressing keys
on his cellphone

the window of this room is closed
and the world is seemingly noiseless

except for the child who runs to the other side of the road
because the mother is busy asking questions to the banana cue vendor

a big truck on a fast speed is approaching the innocent child...

i cannot hear the sound of the big screech

people are crowding rushing

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive and i cannot see the child anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Scene One

i am seated on a chair naked and you kneel before me
naked
you lick my in between and suck it
i close my eyes
imagining the bursting of another universe
you stand
and kiss me
you lick my lips
as i hold your body
the center of my new world
we are in this act of creation
like God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scenes Of Losing

the earth is colder now the leaves keep on falling the winds are harsher swift and sweeping, the skies are turning gray and clouds are getting heavy the waves of the sea are getting bigger waters rise and flood is getting near lands recede, grass drown wells polluted,
landmarks gone.

i've been looking for you with a hope that you are still alive and still mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scenes.....

the night is a mannequin

and we are the recent harlequins
in the room

the night is no longer a mystery
it is colder
and the lights are not turned off because of fear

dimmer
like promises

the floor is silent
like the carpets
the dusts invade
like a catacomb
ambient

the scenes outside
are horrible
dead birds hanging
themselves
on the twigs of a fungal tree

nevertheless
a bunch of ripe guavas wait still to be picked by some hands of the boys.
Scent Of Rotten Meat

Rafflesia
Titan arum
North American pawpaw

For flies to pollinate them They must produce
The scent of a rotten meat

Name names in Your rotten world, now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scents & Flavors

Your hair
Ancient Egyptian kyphi
Your feet
Lavender oil
Your armpits
Palo santo wood
Your neck
Frankincense sticks
Your lips
Benzoin absolute siam

Your heart
Red strawberry

how much would that be?

RIC S. BASTASA
Schadenfreude

this word amazes me
one day
i write it on the surface of my table

when i look at it
i always remember the names of
people
who wait for that biggest laughter when i fall
and be on that pit of
of boiling oil
where i am fried
and charred

on the other hand
i am no exception either delighting
on your failures and misdemeanors

there were many & there will be many still
in fact
countless if we have to be too picky
about it

all my fingers and toes are not enough and my days are so delightful that i forget about my own precautionary measures too

i too fall and will fall as many times as falling does upon its own
fall
like a jack-stone ball

you see
we are a happy community rejoicing upon our own shortcomings

feasting upon our misfortunes a toast!

rejoice
for we are the real people in our lapses...

RIC S. BASTASA
the seed sprouts
and tells the true story about its being embedded beneath
the coat of its being beneath the fertile ground promises of leaves and roots

the sun is too harsh
to face
the moon too cold

survival is the aim of every red ant

the tree is big and tall and the clouds are friends

one day
it learns the song of the grasshopper after which the conversations become as nice as buds

there are truths to hide words to decorate
sweet
white lies

the story begins with a whim
caprice its complication there ought to be a nice ending a freeing it is all about the full blooming of a red rose

i have all the petals inside my hands to complete the story

you love it
do not tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Scorching Summer In 1981

in 1981
i met her
she was then a poetess

we were engaged to talk

and so we had a tryst
under a tree inside that walled house

it was summer
and the grasses were all brown

it was a useless
meeting
we did not say anything

we were meant for
nothing

we were only engaged
to talk

RIC S. BASTASA
My sister saw the black cat inside my monitor Black fur and sharp eyes Piercing like sharp claws Whiskers like catfish
In the mud,
It was staring at her
And felt its anger,

Of course, she did not like it,
She complains
Why of all screensavers

Anthurium (oh she loves Anthurium Red and white anthuriums)

Or four horses, white grazing horses, brown galloping horses For some screensavers’ lucky charm,

Why the black cat
As screensaver?

It was just the head of the black cat, Nothing else
Nothing more, popping up in the screen, A black cat as wallpaper

(Like one that unzips automatically The zipless type) ,

And I am afraid she may not like The sudden popping up,
She fears it may jump in front of her
And scratch her and totally scare her off Her years of Prudence,

And easy submission,
And her tradition,
Her sense of Propriety
And piety
It is indeed a delicate Issue

She had not seen, to my mind, Anything yet,
The way I scratch my head And turn it sidewise Once or twice to say no Ordinarily

And inside myself, I was laughing, She is scared
And funny
Skinny sister
Emaciated by too much Keeping
& unforgiving

I was not scared because
Anyway
She cannot understand
Me
My trauma at 2
My love at 15
My longings for all those years Carefree days in the river bathing naked With some brusque Friends and their passion for Carabaos
& then there were

Some sad stories about the cats in the alleys Black and white
Those that I really love and caress & Died and Those I cannot really mourn
& love
In the open
What will our neighbors say?
It is always the favorite question of my sister They would think that I am crazy I am cheap
I am an embarrassment
I am a burden
And deserve nothing
The whole family will be hurt & suffer incessantly Unnecessarily

As a matter of compromise The cat, the black cat as screensaver Shall be changed tonight, But frankly, I love its Sharp black eyes
Warm long black furs
I would still touch them In a dream
Slide its furs in my armpits And I would giggle, giggle, giggle, and giggle Alone
Away
The whole night giggles, giggles, giggles and giggles Deep and Dark

It is the being of giggling, the giggling, Yes
My dear sister
It is the giggling
That counts in my being
The whole being

And I am telling no one
And I can’t tell anyone

Who is really interested about Dead black, foul cats, with black furs For jinx?
Anyway, I’ll save
In the ‘shared pictures”
The
Black cat, and in nocturnal Dreams I’ll have scratches
All over my body
Of this black cat

My decision to be unwise for once
Is now

I am laughing inside myself (ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha!)

I face her,
My skinny sister
Un-giving
She faces the black cat Sharp eyes facing her,
She sees the head of the black cat
And she can even touch My face because of that Certain closeness,

But she will never, never,
Never know
The real name of that black cat
And the new name I call myself (Me, a name I call myself Fa a long long way to run)

Because, oh well, she never asked,
In the first place

RIC S. BASTASA
Scribbling On Your Wall...

it is
the bitterness
that makes his house stand
the doors
open
and the windows too
it is the same
bitterness that welcomes the wind
that sways the curtains
that keeps the ink fluid
that makes the pen write....

RIC S. BASTASA
Scribbling Some Lines

scribbling some lines
forms of escape from traps and grills
lines that give us wings
to fly
lines that give us claws to defend ourselves lines that shall make us understand what knots are there that we cannot untangle but sometimes i go within and inside myself

i say: what for? does understanding untie the knots that entangle us?
my friend, there is no need
to understand
no amount of understanding can set us free
just go, walk, and talk
and take your time
comfort yourself with a little drink
a little smile
a little rest
a little of everything
for soon
just like anything
everything puffs out and becomes over.

RIC S. BASTASA
DEPRESSION is not a sign of weakness it is a sign that you have been trying to be strong for too long.

Put this as your status if you know someone who has or has had depression.

Will you do it and leave it on your status for at least an hour?
Most people won't, but it's mental health week and 1 in 3 of us will suffer at some point in our lives.

Show your support good people.
I copy and pasted, will you?

RIC S. BASTASA
he first sculpted a very shapely body of a woman thin arms, slender body, soft fingers, porcelain smooth skin supple breasts complete with a face
and other body parts to the last detail possible
then he sculpted the man the usual man with strong arms gentle eyes and well chiseled thighs
complete with a face
and other body parts to the last detail
possible
he is so kind enough to leave the two in the privacy of their new found existence that his chisels
and hammers gave them
despite the fact that he is gay

RIC S. BASTASA
Sea Flower

sea flower
that fell on the white sands of the shore beside my footsteps

her petals
entangled on some twigs her scent spread out thinly

the sea breeze takes it away

as i sit merely watching
and then

the morning light comes warming my
cheek

RIC S. BASTASA
when my heart sinks in the deepest part of the sea of melancholy
i believe that it can survive on the evolution of sorrow when it creates its fins rising from the sea it assumes wings
fish-bird-heart-of-man
still alive
boatman, rocket, star,
a heart of stone,
this heart of mine
without prejudice
to love that may soon come
again
i know, i believe i care.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sea Sick

i am an old man now when i take the boat for a ride back home passing the islands and stopping over some ports i get dizzy

as you all enjoy the trip i lay in the corner with my vomit

contemplating again on something stable and steady

RIC S. BASTASA
Sea Story

At mararison island
You are my starfish
I am at a loss
As a clam
While the other black sea urchin waits For the perfect time
To kill

The boatman fails to tie His heart at the anchor Then the storm comes

RIC S. BASTASA
Seagull

at first to be frank with you i am choosy: friends and circles i go for only two to three not four for they will be too many and expensive to maintain at a certain level of intimacy and familiarity i change like the ordinary rest one gets lonely sometimes and needs a broader circle of friends somewhere where you float and not settle

where you hop from one island to another and feel the excitement of not being true at all playing a lot of game learning new ones
embracing everything a friend to all but not to anyone anymore one learns again to be alone in the mob
of faces
a sea of people you begin to sail
as a boat
for all
a seagull...among

RIC S. BASTASA
Searching

GRASS Blades
on the marsh
like swords
pointing to the skies,

empty open hands
like twigs
at winter time
asking for nothing

come spring
a bud gives hope another one speaks
of a promise

from a glass window
upon a frost
the eyes are gazing waiting for a sunny day, looking for light.

RIC S. BASTASA
Searching For Meaning

some travel far and wide sailing the oceans flying the skies
from edge to edge
shore to shore
to find the meaning
of their lives

some just stay
and listen
and be so silent listening to the beatings of their hearts and find something steady inside a flame
alive

and they say they found
themselves
there

without even using any word
or even a sigh

because there is nothing there to see and speak

RIC S. BASTASA
Season Of Loving And Dying

i

the season of loving is the song in the morning you keep humming
because the love last night was so warm

ii

on the next season comes that of the dying day when things are kept inside for fear that others may steal them from us when we lock the doors and windows when we light a candle in the darkness of our souls when we seek sleep because light begins to hurt
our eyes
when we take shelter on dreams because reality begins to hurt

RIC S. BASTASA
Seasoning Of Joy

'It is a fine seasoning for joy to think of those we love.' Moliere (1622-1673)

without you
everything tastes
bland
my taste buds
are dead

i only have to think
of you
to savor the sweetest taste of honey

i still love you
despite the death
of love
inside me.

RIC S. BASTASA
you know the seasons how the horizon changes its background light, fading, darkness coming, dusk and twilight and morning and noon and night we have embraced all these how many times together?
the rain and the drought the swollen river and the emaciated trees and the falling of the leaves and the budding and blooming and the seeding
over and over again

we are carried with the seasons and we too carry all these changes in our hearts not for just any reason but that we must learn to love and be patient and be alive do not tell me about death for surely it will come by itself and we can do nothing about it tell me about what you do to make another one happy no! do not tell me about how you make yourself happy that is not our essence we are meant for something else we have a purpose we did not come here by random by sheer luck or the popping out of circumstances and chances tell me for once
no! do not tell me why you are sad and lonely i have all the reasons and i have known them all by heart and soul
tell me for once
why you failed to live up to the true nature of yourself the ought the categorical imperative the seeking heart the loving and the tenderness of the caress tell me why you have given up life and refuse to listen to the palpitations of the heart tell me no more about the selfish longings of your mouth and tongue the journey of your fingers the watery nature of your hairs tell me about a flame a flicker a ray of light tell me about hope and desire to more to be beyond the grasp of your hands to be beyond the steps of your feet tell me about the secret tunnel of your mind and the light at the end an exit a door opening a window with the wind and then i shall also tell you about myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Seasons Of The Self

at the first hour
this morning
he puts his best foot forward at noon
his hands the best palms the plain white fingers
to the sun
in the afternoon he feels betrayed and asks himself what is he doing? for whom and
what for?
at night he stops meditates upon
the deeper oceans
of his whale
existence
he sends the message to the other end of the continent
he says yes
what am i doing? what for and for whom?
there is an answer
but it is too late
the desert has already become true

RIC S. BASTASA
at the F seat of the plane
the fat man with scattered white hair talks that his daughter is graduating tomorrow in high school,

the E seat man
makes a link that his son is graduating this afternoon in the elementary school they are overseas workers from Jeddah

they are talking about salaries and other incentives

the thin one brags that he can work overtime and on fridays he sidelines as driver in the desert
road

I am the D seat man
i close my eyes and take my sleep the plane sails like a ship in a very calm sea &

i really have nothing to say.

RIC S. BASTASA
and then the children come to you and you cannot tell who was it that you have carried in your arms a long, a long time ago, for now they have changed faces, most of them have lost the pink luster
of love
and innocence and you shy away from each
whose thoughts are no longer the same as yours and you are caught in this paranoia
that they are here finally to dislodge you in this overcrowded face of the earth and so this is what is happening next,
to escape from their wrath
you go back to being a child again
relearning
the art of innocence via those self-made diseases those pretensions
of youth
unlimited

RIC S. BASTASA
Second Sunday...

february is fickle
one gets inside a room, closes the door, and spreads the mat and turns off the light, but february does not sleep, it boasts of love till dawn,
there is an exit door at the left side
of the room
covered by a waterfall and
the sound of birds mating, you know, calls, like that,

somehow, february is fun, funny, makes the hearts of lonely people beat again, dances under the moon,
begins to love again the rain at midnight plucking rusty guitar strings and kissing moonbeams passionate as the night blanketing the tall trees erect to the cold.

i like february, but i have none
for now.
the second sunday may prove myself wrong,

she is coming, literally.

RIC S. BASTASA
Second Thoughts Of The Past

Her soft hands half-open About to touch mine
I shapes some words inside my mouth My tongue almost slipped But I stopped the conceived utterance We left without saying goodbye We traveled paths
That never crossed again I sometimes think this time What if she touched my hand They were trembling What if I uttered the words Necessary for said occasion
"I love you, please do not go! " Why did I close my mouth that day Why did she not touch me?
Love should have won.

RIC S. BASTASA
Secrecy

secrecy is a room gaping

when i enter this morning it closes itself

and says it will not open
again

love is demanding exclusive

outside lies hate
you keep it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Secret Garden

There is always a place where a soul shall rest.

And you never have to find it or ask

It is the garden that comes to you

It is the secret that opens itself

When you are ripe for it

When the hands of the clock finally touch it

And you shall smile and change into such lightness to flight

And just like them you shall never think about us again or even Coming back
To our chaos.

RIC S. BASTASA
in trying to escape
away from you
i touch other faces kiss other lips
and make love
with other bodies

nights and days
looking for peace

it did not really work despite the cork

i still love you
i still miss you
even in sleep in the middle of my dreams
i still want you

let me face you now, though, but still, i won't really tell you

(i love you. i really love you)

RIC S. BASTASA
Can you keep a secret?
I ask you
I will test you
About my loneliness
It is a secret
That I keep
And I want to share
It with you
If you can keep A secret

You cannot Keep a secret
Today a friend
Calls
911
For me

And so
my loneliness
Has spread
From one mouth
To another
Throughout the world

And all my friends
And acquaintances
Call today
Telling me

We share the same secrets

But I am lonelier
ever
I have another secret
That I can no longer Share with you

You cannot keep a secret You never knew what delicate means

RIC S. BASTASA
Secrets Of The Loving Person

the room where you sleep does not take hold of you your bed cannot be part of your skin and your windows are nothing but the ordinary closing and opening of your day

you like a door that opens to nowhere

you have diamonds in your hands you spread them

in the garden and you see how they all glitter for a while darkness folds and light of another day opens

you take a walk and whistle you don't remember the color of the blanket you forget what warmth was there on that bed you do not care whether the windows are closed or open you move to another house and tell your stories all over again there is no blink in your eyes there is no stammering in your tongue you do not tell them what you love there are no hands too familiar to hold you back

RIC S. BASTASA
Seduction

she is not direct she once lived in the land of winding ways she was brought up in the house where suggestion is an art where imagination is fertile she says she just had a nice warm shower and she is putting on her pink lingerie the night is cold and she is closing the glass window and made the lights dim inside her room on the phone she says she likes victoria's secret and she is spraying her breasts and ears her hair smells roses her tongue spanish lemon she says her lips are moist and she has taken a bite of red cherry a chunk of chocolate and she says she is sipping her mint flavored tea she says she wears no panty and bra when she sleeps tonight alone in her room and she reminds him she forgot her keys inside his electric blue fuego pick-up she reminds him it is 11: 30 p.m. and suggests that she is not sleeping yet that he may bring the keys for her to keep them tonight.

RIC S. BASTASA
See The Light (An Answer)

i am the light
of your soul
open your eyes
see the light
i am a body burning
i am a soul consumed
i am the light
of your soul
You are burning
You shall soon be also consumed.

RIC S. BASTASA
See The World In A Stand Still.

you sound like a robot. unaffected, and unable to say the nuances of the wind and the chimes, the sounds of the gritting pebbles on that sandy shore if your remember the boat that has arrived with a fisherman who got not a fish for his waiting daughter and wife but who deeply loves him for all these deficiencies....

be free to be you. Gather all those that you see along the way.
Do not think. Sway to the breeze. speak the first word.
do not mind the books.
discard what you learned before you have embraced the first consciousness.

junk every learning and then walk away
and if you bathe in the nearest river, be free to get naked for it is here where nobody sees you that you shall be you.

hear the sounds of the splash of the waters lower your body, let your head emerge from the depths and then see the world in a stand still.

RIC S. BASTASA
See You In Siberia Too

See you in Siberia
The nomads are waiting: the Yenets dancing on the sleeping land, the Nenets are bringing their cats with kittens, The Huns are not longer in their fighting mood
The Iranian Scythians are making kites for the winds in the snow The Turkic Uyghurs are playing their flutes.

Let us remember the Khan of Sibir in Tobolks who endorsed the Kubrat as Khagan in Avaria.

Be glad, Aldo, for the Mongols are gone.

Come summer, read those poems.

RIC S. BASTASA
See You Soon

a white butterfly bidding goodbye
to

a black butterfly

beside a very white flower

RIC S. BASTASA
 Seed

you think it is dead
and you bury it

one day
it rises
and cracks
the earth

it peeps
and gives
you
the finger

RIC S. BASTASA
Seed, Qou Vadis?

seed falling on the ground brought by a night bird wet by the rain of dusk

you have no choice but to crack your hard covering and then grow

some roots and leaves in time's blessing
some flowers
then fruits

then the silence of the wilting follows
to be back into a seed again eaten by this night bird and thrown back to a distant soil

seed,
you must begin
your cycle again

for what choice do you have?
the night bird does not even know
and the soil simply receives you and the rain of the dusk simply wets you
and they do not even know what & why they are doing all these

this is the cycle of the seed of life
and wilting and death Seeding

seeding the clouds
with doubt that is what i do for you i fly

the skies hovering on your face. I kiss you.

and then you cry.
and then the clouds rain and rain some drops of your pains

i see this pleasure.
i give you clear skies.

hoping that that is all you want. And then you tell me. You want them blue, in fact,

bluer than blue. I shake my  are not just irresistible. You are also impossible.

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeding Time

after the bloom of the dandelions the winds from the south come it is time for seeding it is time for flying away they leave now

not knowing where they soon stop

the next batch of dandelions grow how can there be sorrow?

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeds

in the fertile fields of our beings tiny seeds are sown and they always grow
and become flowers

they also exude scent and display bright colors
to the sun

and they wilt before we know it simply because we are too busy we could have given these seeds enough time to see how they become
themselves

so beautifully that we could have adored them even in a single moment a very brief moment

yet we didn't and now we are sad in this regret this reminiscing

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeds Of Life

the seeds of life are inside me and you shall be the fertile ground ninety moons shall be fed and then you shall bloom with the fullness of the last moon the rapture comes i shall proclaim your glory

i shall kiss you as i close my eyes tails of comets appear my universe explodes
giving birth to your star.

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing Hope On The Ground

i see hope in the seed sprouting on the ground lifting its head giving way to the green leaf
to roots and then throwing
away
the covering.

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing The Latest Picture Of Jojo

in America Jojo has no choice but to become
a man

no one cares for him
and so
he must care for himself

lest he perishes finally and without any significance
even when he inhales
his last breath

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing The Little Girl Inside The Lady's Body

if only
you see the little girl with a pink ribbon and white ruffle
dress inside her
&
holding a rag doll in the image of your sister when you first gifted her on her 4th birthday

or your mother when she too
was once
the cute little girl
of grandpa somewhere in China
in that old
black and white
picture
that was kept for long
in that rosewood trunk

the molestation
rape sexual abuse or any form of harassment
could not have happened

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing The Motorcycle Leave behind is the dust behind the dust is you when the dust settles

the tear is gone someone sits there waiting expecting no one
anymore

the town is silent as though another nuclear bomb is thrown

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing Their Causes

to each his own
causes
they all preach on the sidewalks
of our lives

i ponder
and even in my own home i reflect on all these

like the messages in my emails
they have become nothing but spam

i got my own
but i don't preach anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing Things In The New Light

adjust the focus
light and dark
far and near and then see the real

thing or the person

from here
you may see...

tell me

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing You Carefully

seeing you carefully is no easy job for me i do not easily jump into conclusions lest there be an injustice on the description of who you are the magnifying glass does not serve any purpose you are more than the little details scribbled in your skin something in you slips like a slimy fish, and i am trying to catch it the fish net is useless, the mesh too large for one as minute as you you are too small to be caught, too smart for the nylon threads i try yoga, and in deep meditation i use my mantra, i chant and fall into a deep sleep, i dream, i go into an astral travel to be with you and there you are, in the silence of the stars, in the brightness of the moon your soul, as beautiful as the goddess of secrecy, without flesh, now as infinite as divine. At the end, i failed to utter your name.,

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing You Makes My Heart Burn And I Stop The World Revolving

Seeing you my love my heart begins to burn and burn and burn Unstoppable to fire
I pause and look at you and take a hard look at you some more

You are simply beautiful!

So beautiful to behold in my burning burning burning heart Unstoppable to fire
I take another hard look I stop the world revolving To see you again and again and my heart burns and burns and burns Till I am consumed
Looking

Just the mere idea of looking at you

You look at me
Our eyes meet

I am speechless
And look away to the other side of dangling things

The world revolves again and I with it Leaving you because you can never be with me

In this Revolution

Meanwhile you wonder why the place where our eyes just met smells ash I said something just burned sometime somewhere perhaps last night or so

And so

You will never ever know

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing You To The Fullest...

i want to live
a life that is full

love it more if it is the fullest

the way i see a bunch of ripe mangoes hanging from a tree or those black grapes

freely attached to the vines

a glass filled to its brim

waters rising from the banks

i like that hat of yours covering

your hair, your forehead i love that smile

that fills all of your mouth that shows a row of pearls

the pinkness of a tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing You Watching Tv Sleeping

On a rocking chair you sleep again While watching TV and I rise from My bed not faraway from where You are sleeping in front of this

Colored TV on a loud volume With slowness and respect

I touch your cheek and you Wake up rubbing your eyes

Asking me what time is it,
You have slept again and I have to wake you up again In this cycle of pain and unrest

It is late and the night is deep And dark, some dogs howl

In the street another stranger Has arrived to this town again

It is late you have to transfer To my bed where we will again

Make a warm embrace as I tell You, I love you as I will always will.

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing Yourself In A Mirror

on a fading day between your busy hour and that moment when you want to stop or quit

you stand in front of a mirror and ask yourself: is this worth it?

there is this voice which says you must quit, you have had enough there is no use
of another day

you stare and another image stares back at you it is worth it there is no justification to quit you make a difference

then you tighten your belt and with your hands you iron out what is creased you promise
you will go neat with life you will finish what you have started the voice comes assuredly like a conscience
you make a difference
you are not a quitter
you are a winner.

RIC S. BASTASA
Seek Not Yourself But The Other

The self that you are seeking Is not you
It belongs to someone else
The more you seek yourself That more you shall be lost In the maze
Of your own selfishness Seek not yourself
But always the other
Beyond
There you will find
What you have been seeking
This bliss
This outburst
Of love and compassion
In the oneness of this universe Where you are but a drop In this ocean
Where you are but a speck of dust In this space
You are the air that you are now breathing Inside you
Outside you
You are here in this nowhere That you feel now, you are not alone
happier on a singing air

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeking Refuge

'And the end of all our exploring Will be to arrive where we started And know the place for the first time.'

- T.S. Eliot

you have gone that far to the edge of that cliff where you now stand to explore all the possibilities of touching a cloud and now that you are touching this cotton dream you are feeling nothing at all you look down below your feet to that village near the equator that you left years ago and you think finally that everything amounts to nothing except that pink cotton candy that you once tasted as the best metaphor for your dream-cloud your cotton dream
so sweet to your teeth

come to think of it it is never too late to build this bridge rather than jump and die in that muddy river just below the cliff where you are now
still standing

RIC S. BASTASA
Seema You'Re A Winnah

you say
you lose
everyday

you mean
you lose
yourself

and never find it

lost as in lost as in really lost

yourself?
that is what God wants us to be

he who loses
himself
in his name
finds himself

OmG,
seema
you're a winnah!

RIC S. BASTASA
Seemingly

things seem to be but upon a deeper silence without even looking things are stopping to wait for you and then happily you go your heart is full and no word deserves to be said again

RIC S. BASTASA
Seemingly You Like The Grey Area

i admit i live there. I live in the places of dawn and twilights where i have learned to tinker about anything.

dark are exceptions and exemptions there. it is no longer black or white, or either/or, it is a ray a rainbow of possibilities. I embrace gradients.

it is the meeting place of lost elements when they do not fit they come looking lost and then they say they finally find a home.

here they are accepted there they are excepted.

not that black and whites are not acceptable. No. and Yes. Not that. it is, 'it can be'

it is always here a myriad possibility where you become yourself that way you want it. Taste. Smell. Tick and Lick.

Imagination so powerful.
Unlimited thoughts.
Impossibilities becoming possibilities.

This is the grey area.
I live here. I am happier.
Do you know where this is?

Come. Undress their colors.
And know at first that in here color does not matter they mix, and there is no limit to their shades and pastels.

RIC S. BASTASA
we think about life as a seesaw a balancing act of two different weights at the center of the fulcrum
someone pushes another one makes the shove
to create a pleasurable game
you, up near the clouds as i fall down to the plains of the earth
we look at each other on smiling eyes
mouths in loud laughter excitement spread all over
space
you become confident to my push and i become trusting to your counters until one of us decides to jump and leave
the sound of the
blag of the world

RIC S. BASTASA
Segregation

to make myself special is a sad thing, for i may then be segregated away from you, and i cannot take in all the sadness let me just be an ordinary frog on that clear pond blessed by so much rain croaking happily with you

i do not need so much land neither the sun
for with you, the moon and the marsh and the reeds
are good enough,

let us have this good time swimming together beside the tadpoles

RIC S. BASTASA
Segurista

umang nga gakamang kanunay dala-dala ang iyang balay-gamay kay hadlok masunog ang baybay

RIC S. BASTASA
Segurista (Wary)

he hermit crab crawls always carrying its small shell house fearing that there might be fire on the shore

umang nga gakamang kanunay
dala-dala ang iyang balay-gamay
kay hadlok masunog ang baybay

RIC S. BASTASA
Sehnsucht

Between this and that

this fullness and this void

there is this
bridge

that my feet
like to remember

was i there
once?

memories fail
like broken pens

i have a finger
it points there and there i want to remember

but i can't

this sense of belonging thru a longing

there, it is there

fog on top of a mountain

feathers
inside my brain....

RIC S. BASTASA
Seldom

happiness is seldom it is the trend nowadays when our hand grapple for what we do not yet master for instance last night when you were asleep

i was touching my own thighs in the dark
i was familiarizing with the lines of my face down to the belly

in the darkness of my soul i still keep on thinking about someone else

someone whose love you have taken away from me someone who weeps and does not speak
someone whose heart has turned into stone whose door has become a wall
whose windows doubt whether to open for the sun or not

RIC S. BASTASA
Selective Memory

It is not about love, far from it,
It is not about us, we are already parted It is not about the world that is too much For me to think of and bear You must remember, no not about the wedding ring You pawned it, you must remember This is not about our home, you ruined it We do not think about the children
The court shall make the ruling, this is not about My emotions, I have squandered them all And you wasted all of them, I have thrown them All to the garbage cans and the dogs are feeding on them Do not forget, this is just an ordinary civil relation, You owe me money, and I am here to simply collect them,
There is no need to complicate, there is none,
And here is the promissory note that you signed Many, many years ago.

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Centered

you started it and i was just trying to put the finishing touches and then you cried foul and call me names

i am just returning what you have given

and then you said it was dirty and so unbecoming
of me

you feel that you are a star in your own universe so be it

burn yourself to death with that self-made glitter of yours i am a pebble that you have disregarded i stare and i do not know how to laugh

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Centered You

that the sun revolves around the earth is not at all a farce,
that all the stars and planets and meteors and other galaxies revolve around the planet earth where you are situated is not at all an outmoded astronomical belief

the way you speak
and believe in yourself speaks highly of this 'truth'

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Centered....

the blond
has a hand that carries a cone of vanilla ice cream

it is summer

he looks at the sea and lets his ice cream melt not licking it yet

the sea is so blue

a woman looks at his well chiseled body his butterfly back
his abs and
strong arms

the ice cream melts

the man looks at the sand and estimates the size of his shadow

the sand is so white

the woman with her long black hair in a two piece the main attraction of this poem backs out
and buys her own cone of
vanilla ice cream
and she licks it until the ice cream is consumed

the man goes to the sea and makes his needed dive

indeed the sea is so blue and it is a sad summer....

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Defense From Love's Twisted Shape

i am
tired of minding
love,

it is twisted and it is twisting me

it is hard headed
it is not learning anything from my logic

now i have decided not to mind it at all

my glimpse shall be its luxury

now i prefer talking to the deaf woman
dancing with the blind

singing with the mute listening to the crowd

this love is cruel
i will not allow it

killing me without my own defenses ready

RIC S. BASTASA
when old age visits actually you do not immediately detect its presence somehow you love to deny its inevitability
you keep yourself busy and focus on the strengths and flexibility of youth until you finally find it sitting beside you
and both of you are drunk making merry
trying to forget the numbers as the wrinkles become visible
spreading all over your
body
your skin losing the luster turning into a waistline larger than what you think and you look at yourself in the mirror oh God
what an oversized shirt what a lousy pair of pants you cannot even recognize that the bald man in front of you is really you but thanks God you were given the bonus of these unearned years

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Discovery

life is only in the doing those very unimportant matters (shall i enumerate them? they are not of your liking you who love highlights
fireworks
and what is on top of the building
beside the starry skies)

i do now the most simple things: sleep, sit, stand sit back, sleep again walk, talk to you,
cook and eat
and defecate,

there is no more ambition nothing of those fame getting stuff

i just discovered it.
Less is more
Simplicity is beauty
Life is just a moment.

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Gratification

what my hands hold you shall hold....is this what you came here for?
you hold my body like i am your lover and now you try to capture the spirit within it you can't, i have long told you love has already left the dwelling in my heart there is pleasure and it is dancing wildly like there is no more yesterday. it is celebrating because in truth it hates me like i am its molester and now it sings like a burlesque dancer at the bar it knows my secret and she keeps on telling every people that she meets that guy is dying and soon i shall be complete.

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Gratification Imagery....

the usual right hand and the biggest vein

raindropp and gushing forth
the final wish and relief

no guilt now just the release of what lies buried underneath
the flesh
and bone and meat of your contention

RIC S. BASTASA
Selfie

This is one of the newest words added to our dictionary. We invented it. But before it became a word, we had it already a long time ago. When you stroll on the shore alone and thinking, when you travel alone and sit on the bus and looking nowhere, or when you live alone in an apartment and anticipating that someone soon will join you to comfort you, to fill you with that emptiness, or when you arrive in an abandoned house and you stand at the front yard assessing the damage of the storm in your head, when you walk around the plaza and no one recognizes you anymore because you left the place 25 years ago and there are now so many changes that fail to account you, and when you know no one whom you can ask to take your picture of all these, by all means, these are all you worry no more. You admit that you're lonely at times. But you are happy.

There is not enough of you, in this long and lonely road.

RIC S. BASTASA
Selfie......

selfie

ang imong bugas

bugas sa aping

batok sa iyang bugas

bugas sa agtang

hilaw ang iyang

pahiyom

samas kahilaw sa

imoha

maong ang nagtan-aw

usab

sama nako

gibatig

sama sa kaaslom

sa manggang

bisaya

nga naa pay tagok

sa iyang baba Self-Inflicted Pain

a mosquito is biting
my face

my cheek and my hand argue till now

what proper thing to do a mutual concession perhaps....

RIC S. BASTASA
Selfish Religion

this is my body
it is firm and it is strong it is beautiful

you worship beauty
you desire what is firm you love what is strong this is my body and
it is beautiful

it is sacred and you cannot touch it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Pity

when you arrive home and there is no one when they all left for somewhere and you do not know when they are coming back you sit on a sofa you hear no sound there is no note no word the cellphone mute and there is no sound of any car coming or at a distance dust or smoke moving towards where you are silently seated

you then feel it

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Portrait

after she paints
herself in the canvass she puts her signature there

mebyme.

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Reflection....

i am looking inside
myself
trying to figure out if there are traces of envy

the denial is there
hope is dying
ambition wants to soar

i am afraid how my eyes are looking at the world how my mouth speak about the evil of others

(do i have my own wolves too? how many elves are there maneuvering
my moves?)

i look for you
to be my mirror
you speak the truth
and i do not complain
if you inflict the pain

for with you
i do not suffer alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Searching

we always want to spend Independence Day on the beach what is it that we want to be reminded of?
the sands? yes what about the sand?
the grains?

when we arrive there
the kids run to meet the sea with laughter the sea breeze is salty yet cool the trees are tall and big and shady the silent sands are peopled now we will be too busy with fun feeling saved and going public with all that happiness gives us the silent sands look at us with a gaze it has a record of the past it has absorbed the memories of the sea it looks at us with pity what is it about the sands and their silence? i think i know it but my friend you must find it yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
after that anonymous talk (since you never revealed your name, referring me to Rumpelstiltskin, to my chagrin, i realized,
how low is your opinion of myself, how debased have i been with your figures and stories, that i myself, have not even bothered for years, simply because they are not true and which you tried to impress upon me as God's truths,
and as you advised, i look at myself in the mirror
and i look at it with all compassion and i tell myself, this is all i got, and this is all that i can love
because you cannot
and never dared,
but just the same i say, thank you,
and at that time,
i tell the mirror, i wish that creature a happy death someday, one, where after smiling, one can hear the chasm of the earth divide, and there the intrigue is swallowed
whole

i do not know you
so how can i say what you are too, coward!

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Talk In That Secret....

at the end
i am about to cry

something bothers me
somehow
i can't

i hold the knob of the door
tightly
i want to go out from this old house
and be with you
but i finally loosen my hold and go back to the room of myself

the law speaks
tradition warns that something may happen
and i cannot take all the possible
harsh consequences

and so i give up my life and meaning
i stay in the comfort of ordinary days
unhappily

but it is worth it when i come back i find a house where i can still live

it is you that makes me live some more in the blur of our memories when you are finally gone with no address to refer to (you never write me letters) i stay put on my chair and immerse myself in the deep silence of my sad thoughts

it is the case again of i want to go but i must stay same rehashed argument when i ask you if you are happy your answer is yes and no, but i understand it perfectly it is the same answer that i write in my journal in those three perfect days i forgive myself but i can never forget you love stays

but time shall always try to vanish it without
our consent

RIC S. BASTASA
Self-Talk Is A Prayer.....

i have nothing
so urgent to say to you

i am at peace
and here i am savoring time like the way i am chewing gum that lost its sugar

i have nothing
to say anymore to you

i admit
i have not said anything at all

despite all those well chosen words arranged like books in their shelves

there is an age
where saying is admitted to make no difference at all where secrets are not secrets but irrelevant squabbles of the heart

they remain buried but they will not be dead the remain invisible like air but still very essential my lips are gravestones that is when i discovered that self-talk is actually a prayer

RIC S. BASTASA
Sense Of Humor For Reece Kay

i laugh so hard about your joke i'll take the hints of the sneeze and the orgasms and the tissue
and some pepper
the woman on the train with you,

now laugh,

i also laugh with you, yet not knowing me
really
we are miles apart, and you with your present problems
losing one of your identities this danny reynolds, you tell me i do not have they say this sense of humor, Loll

Lol,

it is unjust to say the least,
in my country one day i was admitted to the maternity hospital on bloated stomach
filled with laughter
they think
i am pregnant.

(ulol!) oh, lol!

RIC S. BASTASA
Senseless?

senselessly
make sense by being senseless at times we all need that to realize we are not what we are after all we too are what we are for what we are not senseless and numb

tencelessly why worry about sense at all?
bipolarity

flesh and spirit
mind and matter
brain and brass

don't you worry
take some beer and smoke watch what happens to the world in conflagration
of senseless thoughts

loafing is the work of another genius when the mind simply drifts like a butterfly on a windless day shopping for petals in the garden of no-man's land

RIC S. BASTASA
i will no longer guess

i tell you
and i bow before
this

the meaning of it all is that there is no meaning and so the senselessness has become the one and only truth

its sound is barbaric
and its true nature is uncertain

this the true journey grasping of air
to breathe and simply live all through
it....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sensing An Old Flame

everything's changed.
the park is gone.
the tree is cut.
the creek dried.

a row of houses here.
the residents talk different languages.
i can't find the big stone anymore.
the walls have gone higher and i can no longer see the bend of the road. People move to places.

and we come back to reminisce.
some strings of light. some shapes of shadows.
we try to figure out. what was there once.

i see you. you see me.
we know what to say.
we know what to do.
what we did once.

amidst all these changes.
we decided there will be no changes.

hello and then goodbye.
these words had always been a nice pair.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sensitivity

do not be oversensitive on this skin of mine it is nothing compared to the lusciousness of your lips

take pride
that i have stopped smoking after you
kissed my lips

after this
i will long for more dawn time till the break of
morning

i need sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sensitivity And Imagination In The World Of Poetry

the pebble that you have collected from the shore last spring

breathes like a tick the paper clip that lays on your study table

begins to move like a maggot

something is more beautiful than
this sensitivity widens
imagination
paving more pathways to the colored world
of dreams

the blank paper begins to have
a face
shaping a mouth
a tongue
that shapes a smile for you the table becomes the sea where sailboats take its long journey

nothing
no one falls at the edge

they just fade.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sensual Night With Sense

you lay with some memories your eyes fix on the ceiling where images
begin to dance
like some fairies
with silk hair
and gossamer wings

you tire
with fairy tales and fantasies
you begin
a more mature approach with your longings inside this empty room
for the night
where your waiting for her
has become another
failure

you close your eyes
and look inside them you hug your own body with your own arms
you bury yourself on soft blankets and pillows

you submerge
in ecstasy
your heart
throbbling
like crazy

and then
a raindrop
begins to fall from inside your pains

falling
on the mountain of your groin

you dropp dead
eyes closed
the pain
disappears
like some clouds
blown away

by this new wind of coping up
and learning
with sense sensuality
in automation

a flood of emotions
rush
to oblivion

tomorrow you wake up and face a new day again

ey they say you are a mature person living life that way it should be lived coping up self-automated no misery seeking company

just being alone,
strong, and not needing help from anyone.
Sensuality

Do not be slighted, Lust, return to me when i am strong again when my skin feels the tickle and the rub

Do not be shy
Come to my bed again
For my sheets are warm
My pillow dreamy.

Come back to me
AT night when i am alone again Caressing my body
In sin

Sensual pleasures
Come and feel the dryness of my Thighs
The blessings of my arms
The tenderness of my heart

For now I welcome all these I am alive
I am hungry and thirsty
For Love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sentro Sa Uniberso

Ug miabot ang adlaw nga gihimo nimong sentro ang kaugalingon sa imong uniberso.

Ikaw ang adlaw. Milingkod ka sa tunga Sa imong balay. Ang mga lingkoranan, lamesa, Ug mga aparador mao ang imong mga planeta.

Mipiyong ka, ug gihipos mo Ang imong mga bukton. Gikumo nimo Imong mga tudlo. Ikaw ang adlaw.

Ikaw ang sentro sa tanang mga nag-alirong nimo.
Nahimong kawanangan ang imong kwarto.
Ang kahayag nga nanglusot sa buslot

Sa imong bungbong ug atop mao ang mga bitoon, ug ang bulan mao ang planggana Sa imong pansayan. Naghimo ka sa kaugalingong

Luna sa kawanangan. Pagkahilom. Pagkanindot Sa dihang nagsugod na ang imong paglutaw Ug pagsibog layo sa imong gilingkoran.

Nindot ang paglawig. Morag usa ka sakayan Sa tunga sa lawod sa dagat. Buntag na. Misulod Ang imong iro. Mipaghot. Mikiwil ang ikog

U mitila sa imong mga tiil ug kamot. Mitan-aw Sa iyang amo: opaw, pangag, nangunot ang agtang, Walay panghinguko, taas ang bungot,

Walay kaligo, dako og tiyan, walay pamahaw.

Sa tanan, alang niya, ikaw ang kamatuoran.
Separate Lives...

with too much use of the mind one forgets sometimes if one has feet if the ground is still there the floor becoming insignificant the arms too disappear in the air fingers forgotten

you float in the middle of the sky inside your room
unmindful of the real situation someone knocks on the door the knocks become fast and loud and you fall on the floor with a big bang

it is night time again and when you go out of the room everybody is already silent inside their rooms perhaps sleeping or making love

you open the refrigerator for a glass of water you take a pill
and then everything is at a standstill you wish you have no dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Separate Paths

there are so many paths and there is only me this path of mud and holes and with you

there is this path that i do not really know surprises kill me at times but i keep the pain

please do not take mine it is too narrow please do not go with me go away, please go away i am simply not comfortable with you take the widest path you have.

there are many of you and the noise is everyday.

i love myself, this loneliness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Separated Between Two Walls between two walls

i find myself in but i do not tarry, i am,
the resilient wind
and i lift myself up and see the walls
from a distance.

they say they are
protective of me.
they say they want to keep me safe
and at bay with what is right and true.

the walls of fantasy
and the
the walls of reality.

these are not walls sooner i will make them myriad openings exits and entrances
to the house of my peace and happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Separations

Tonight my wife shall watch the full moon Alone over the hills in Katipunan I think sadly though of her Too young to understand this sudden separation Remembering once again our love in Cagayan In fragrant mist, her black hair is damp In the clear moonlight, her hands are cold In the distant mountain of Tabon I lean over this bamboo grove While the moonlight tries to dry some tears

RIC S. BASTASA
Septon 1

even fire produces
its best light before it dies, the most beautiful petal is the flower's last the most beautiful part of the film should be its ending, and this I like to happen in my life
with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
these are all experiences like 'I've been there' and 'here and even gone tomorrow, like a dream our love for illusions what we become a nostalgia
we like to hold like frost and mist.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is something
so important that i want to tell you but i just can't and knowing that you insist, and you do not want to be refused, and so i walk towards you as though you are an open window and i look at you and i see a night sky without the moon and stars and i am the candle light - -waning.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Septon 3

the man aims a gun at me who knows his name? but i know his eyes bland, and tasteless it is not seeing for itself it is dead as stone whose slave are you?
it does not mind and i look straight to the gut of the barrel if it bursts, - i will say, thanks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Septon 4

pain is the seed sown in the heart
time is the silence
which grows the root of thirst for God
and patience twigs out buds of hope that finally brings the flowers of our divinity

RIC S. BASTASA
Septon 5

having known
that you love me
the surge of the sea comes taking Samar to Bohol where hills grow mountains
touching clouds and then all the fish jump at night to kiss the moon

RIC S. BASTASA
Septon 6

we can be out of
touch sometimes and people who see us are so patient and with so much understanding dismiss the crazy idea and say with comfort that there is nothing wrong with poetry - - just wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
Septon 7

the one that makes us feel good must be too written like floating birds in the sky and swimming petals on the river the dancing fish on the pool the magician with his rabbit why? we really have to.
we must still live.

RIC S. BASTASA
Septon 8

i pass by the river
this morning and see some children bathing
i hear the sounds and the splash of the water and the throwing of stones and the loud laughter and then i am taken away flown to the farthest sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Septon 9

while in the car
alone driving myself
towards home
slowly i take the road with a song in my heart
'how great thou art
O Lord my God'- -
fear turns itself off hope flints, love's ablaze.

RIC S. BASTASA
Septon, Desperately Looking

to find myself
i must find you
and so when you are lost
i must be lost with
you
if you are lost without
myself
i will be lost forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Septonisque

what they need is nine, so, don’t leave it at eight it lacks the hour of one do not be too early then or too late cater to what is required otherwise it makes no sense what is needed is nine though ten is kind

RIC S. BASTASA
Serene

A sea of cloth on an early morning A wooden boat afloat
The cloth of blue and gray clouds Still touching Hands and Lips
A man wearing a straw hat A woman on green skirt watching Him sail back,
A child cradled on her arms Serene in sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
Serene Love

as we step into the clear water of the river we create the ripples we lose sight of the face of the blue clouds we find for ourselves an embroidery of drifting leaves

we dip our bodies to the coolness of the water i search for serene love at the bottom where you are waiting

we kiss and embrace beside the slippery stone the moss is green
each step as slippery as an ell
each kiss and breath a bubble we send to the surface of the river the water flows farther and farther until we begin not to see what happens.

RIC S. BASTASA
Serenity

inside the mall
with so many people
you are part of this senseless
crowd

you turn off
a switch
somewhere
first it becomes soundless
then you
changed
adjusted the colors
to black and white

and then
you sit there
on the table
and watch
everything

RIC S. BASTASA
Sergio Fiorentino Playing A Schumann

He shall patiently play him a piano piece a Sergio fiorentino
And he will Mimic a Schumann piece
Because

Today he sees him
In full view Bathing naked
On the river
He is a big man Like himself
Now he comes Back to the river
Where they once Bathed as children Naked and so
Blessedly innocent

There is malice
Now as he is Big and muscled
And some black Hairs decorated
His manhood
His armpits
His thighs
And his Chests

He calls him
To join him
As they were Once children

To have a river
To cleanse them
Both “come, come”
we shall have a bath in this river of our vibrant laughter”

he was inviting &

he was excited.

so
He took off his Clothes and Every covering
Of his body
His second Thoughts and Taking courage
He jumped Into the river
Where he Stood naked,

What he will say
He is prepared
To defend himself

It was him
Who made the Invitation and All he did was Simply to obey.

He promises
There will be no
Regret whatsoever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Seriously Speaking This Time

well this is what i can say even without you
asking me,
about poetry?
well, it should not be taken seriously it is just poetry anyway
nothing serious like a man dying to get to the hospital inside an ambulance
if only he hears the sound of that goddamn ambulance oh my
he must have known that it is joking.

RIC S. BASTASA
Serving God So Well....

so many things that you do with so much pleasure with so much esteem beyond money and awards noble

when you drive yourself to your way home at night on that long dark road you hear music inside your heart your fingers move upon a beat of indescribable pleasure you are your best friend

in silence

when you arrive home there is no one there no child greets you

you remove your shoes
undress

naked you hug your bed soft pillow

you sleep like a dead man and when you wake up
the following morning

you become a new man, strong, and firm and smiling to the sun by your window

there is no one here you feel confident,  God is so alive inside you you have served Him well.

RIC S. BASTASA
you were beating around the bush
when you are supposed to hit the root
and not just simply lie there running out of steam and this comes direct from the horse's mouth as i drop the line

set it free, it is not
for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Setting A Love Poem Aside For A While

I set aside a love poem for a moment let us all pause in silence in prayer for the lamentations of Bohol.

i gaze in silence for the
the destruction of Baclayon, the sinking of the bridge, those tilted houses built from the savings of the years, the screams of those who were shaken
for those who ran away for safety and found none i offer my silence for those who died and for those who are still unidentified i lay my silence to the cracks of the earth my silence for the children and mothers whose screams sank, faded, and now cannot be heard anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Setting Free The Little Black Bird...

and this i remember when i was yet a young boy in a far away village

i caught a black bird in my handmade trap and it was trying to escape from the hold of
my hands,

at first i liked to bring it home
and show to father
but then i looked at its eyes begging for mercy to be set free

and i heeded to its flee i released that little black bird free

x x x x

it is the same now between me and my body this trap and this soul that begs now to be set free this little black bird begging for mercy it shall be set free that young boy understands it is this body.

RIC S. BASTASA
Setting The Bird Free

after you have set the bird free
look!
your heart grows wings

and too
it starts to fly
high, and higher in the ever blue skies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Setting The Small Fry Free

a small fry is caught the net with a very fine mesh

you are the fisherman who catches the small fish in your hand
and then you sail back
to the sea
setting the small fry free!

RIC S. BASTASA
Setting You Free

i sit here with a gavel on hand dressed in black
you fear me for what i can do for i sit in judgment of you i look at you
and find this tranquility of your spirit and i humble myself before you, an innocent man silenced by the cruelty of the laws of his brethren and then i bang the gavel setting you free and then i get down from the heights of man's self-made bench glossy yet so cold and then i shake your hand it is warm and it had long been thirsty.

RIC S. BASTASA
Settled

the wind went to all directions the trees so confused the rivers crisscross and the sea like its waves was bewildered the north star looks upon them silent and determined

RIC S. BASTASA
Seven

some stars are falling and falling across the dark skies

you look with awe

and make your many wishes

RIC S. BASTASA
Seven-Sided Poem By C. Drummon Translated By Souza

When I was born, a crooked angel, the kind who live in shadows, said: Go, Carlos! Be gauche in life.

The houses spy the men chasing after women.
Perhaps if the afternoon were blue there wouldn’t be so many desires.

The tram passes by full of legs:
white black yellow legs.
Why so many legs, God, my heart asks.
But my eyes
ever ask a thing.

The man behind the mustache is serious, simple, and strong.
Almost never talks.
Has a few, close friends, that man behind the glasses and the mustache.

Lord, why did you abandon me if you knew I wasn’t God?
if you knew I was weak.

World world vast globe
if my name were Job
it would be a rhyme, not a solution.
World world vast globe
vaster still is my heart.

I ought not tell you,
but this moon
but this cognac gives us heartache like the devil.
Seventeen

we shall start being true to ourselves like how the world started in light, we shall start being true to others
that give us light too, words and actions
all true
all so beautiful to touch and hear and too beautiful to our smell
and so good to our sight our eyes too
so beautiful
how we look at ourselves inside us
then when all these are gathered together like some firewood and leaves and cinders
we shall burn
we have fire
we have smoke to offer to the skies then as we inhale and exhale the last fires within us
we shall begin again from the beginning we are not ready to write everything every detail

of that fire that kept us burning in our hearts that keep on loving soon they will

RIC S. BASTASA
Sex Before And After

at my age, there is more... before and after...

at my younger age, there is a need for more sex, before dinner after midnight

before dusk
after lunch

at this age of depression, all these years of tension, so much pressure, there is a need for more sex....

before noon,
after an office meeting before going home after a vacation

at this moment when crisis looms, this global recession, this legal separation, this pending divorce, this global warming problems... there is a need for more and more sex...

before death
after another birth....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sex Poem

a Spanish cannon is bombarding
the closed, steel door of the castle

RIC S. BASTASA
Sexual Harassment For Gatiting

some finally gave up, the office is so boring and so this thing on sexual harassment crops up, boss to subordinate

'close the door, kiss me, i will slide my hands inside your panty, i am lonely, please do not tell anybody, i am in love
with you'

subordinate,
gooseflesh, feeling hell wanting to run away but cannot closes her eyes, some tears falling, sweating cold, flesh trembling hands shaking,

she runs outside his room goes to the comfort room for women and there vomits everything the devil of his saliva
and his horrible scent, case will be filed

he will lie and she will be getting support from the other clerk,

he is dismissed finally and
put to jail,
a true story, well documented,
and now i am sharing it to you,

and here you are:
hope it does not happen
to you
happen what?
that i be sexually harassed.

funny.
but i know you are not laughing,
something wrong,
perhaps.

i like to vomit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sexual Starvation And Imagination In The Middle Of A Calamity...

as she saw it
on that clear day she remembered

how the tornado came and sucked a house and a cow smoothly to its throat,

the house was gone
it did not spit the whole cow and the tornado left the grasses on the yard were thick

and lush

she was so amazed with what she saw
there was no fear in her eyes it was pure excitement

she felt ecstasy
her groins excreted sweat

RIC S. BASTASA
Sexually Twisted

like a dog so deprived of food
my handsome friend while asleep
dreams of bones
and ribs.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sexy Sexy Sexy

there are so many things that one can remember about the word pumping,

the serious mechanical ones talk about
water and

body building and healthy options

but there are those who are tired about goodness and hard activities there are those that spend time at the beach watching someone so sexy with sunglasses on eyes feast and tongue salivate

like a dog thirsting
about summer

you pump blood into your head
your heart understands
somehow
this need

on something so sexy
for the moment
for this moment only

RIC S. BASTASA
Sexy Woman

white clouds
blue sea
green long island
on the shallow waters
a woman faces me
white bra
white panty (two piece)
at the middle
the water touches
the center of her
being
the grass of her earth is wet
she walks away
dripping
her hair is long and curly black
she does not own me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shade

by the shadow of the mountain
i am taking a shade

on the shade
of a tree
i take my shade

on the shade
of my body
i am taking
my shade

on the shade
of my soul
the mountain
the tree and
my body
also take their shade

RIC S. BASTASA
Shades Of Black And Gray

silence has only one color it is gray
scaled between the extremes of black and white
susceptible as you must know to the shades of different interpretations sometimes mine is dusky the color of scheme and strategy it is like a dog deprived of food sitting on the last stair of the house raising its head scattering its eyes

figuring out how to steal the goat's
clavicle....

RIC S. BASTASA
Shades, Shades. Shades....

first there was grey and then its fifty shades later (perhaps out of that billionaire amazement or the shades of it)
come the shades of green the ever ever multiple shades of imitations and other fabrications
thirty shades of confessions forty shades of
regrets
fifty shades of contemplations but one and only shade of death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shadow

i am asking you if you have something
to say

why do you keep on following me?

RIC S. BASTASA
Shadow Of A Fish

i swear i have seen the shadow of a dried fish its head hanging on the chimney on a very long thin thread of life and death

i like the scene of its shadow dancing on my empty white porcelain plate

RIC S. BASTASA
Shadow Of Doubt

oh! i know that you are there just lurking behind my own light but don't be angry for i don't really mind

for whether i like you or not or whether i finally get rid of you strangle you and kill you finally (am i a serial killer?) nothing changes the truth that i am part of you
and you are essentially a part of me

ah, you wait when i am pure blackness
when my light is gone when everything is nothing but absence

you reign, you win.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shadows Of All Of You

Outside it is dark
i am the only one
on that open road.

everyone is inside
their houses now
with their loved ones.

outside i am the only one walking still looking for a home.

my heart trembles for this, my brains flying like birds looking for more edible grains.

time is warped
i still like the past the future is a vague misty colored window where i only see
shadows of all of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shadows Of Wolves

we made an agreement
it was carved in stone to your mind i agree there must be no changes without prior notice
but you change it a bit and so i am canceling the whole of it that is what it is carved in stone, put a change the slightest one can break the whole of that stone a little change in temperature or pressure as the case maybe can make this world crack without prior notice
now don't cry foul for both of us prior to that have assumed the shadows of the wolves.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shadows Thinning Out

you all know that the shadow thins out at noontime

at high noon
the shadow and the body become one there is no more speculation about why the shadow and the body are different on extreme light

you see the truth casting no shadows of doubt something false flashes not shadow at this moment

such thing happens on the power of the stare when an eye looks straight to another eye when the other sobs into a cry then the telling of the true story begins.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shakespeare Rejected

not at all amazing that Shakespeare in his time was rejected for genius like wine is fortified by age becoming so valuable through time
and peers cannot understand society rejects what the world later on values as a gem discovered buried in the layers of time's hasty shallow judgment.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shaking My Head...

on this month of June the mango tree fronting our office is bearing so many fruits the children are happy hitting it with sticks and some who have the money use the slingshots

i can imagine myself being hit with round stones

i shake my head many time from this glass window.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall I Miss You?

the port sits there
the waves of the sea begin its travel you are on the trough and the ups and downs of the tides shall take you away from me you are in the foams and i am in the mist of the mornings the fog of my doubts has given me what certainties i need to make me strong

once i wrote you a letter when letters were the trend of those lonely day: dear beloved, i miss you but i guess that letter (which i somehow regret having written signed by another foolish pen) must not have reached your faithfulness because your patience has not afforded it the dignity
or concern of an answer

time is kind it makes us forget and even forget and forgo and teach us to live with a purpose saying: go on, move forward that is the only choice now, i have this pc, i have your email address i want to tell you: dear miss sue i must honestly tell you that i am happier now

without you.

i did not send it.
coz it does not really matter.
i have my own life now, and i am this fat, contented cow grazing on the green fields of my endeavor.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall I See You Again?

your long black hair blown by the wind of the sea you eyes closing to feel what is inside you some tears unseen from a distance you embrace yourself in the middle of this ice-cold morning
you stand there like a lonely post in the desert the wind howls and the rain begins to fall you run for shelter wet and cold and i see you but i shall not ask for your name.

i remain here also drowned by my own storm but i am not running for shelter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall I Tell You That Once We Were Broken And Unconnected Pieces?

when you find a chain pick it up

when i find my chain
i pick it up to and then when we meet we connect these chains like some missing links and then when bound together we will shout

our newly found freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall I Throw The Filter Too?

words begin to filter thoughts

after a longer time
the stones separate from the water and then you have to choose now

which to throw and which to keep

which is clearer which is more solid more heavy and worth the price of taking the weight or letting go that which keeps us cold words become either

air or light and when you begin to learn which is more useful or important, you think twice about this matter:

shall i throw the filter too?

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall She Throw Then The Apple Of Discord?

out there is the calm and the harmony of the leaves and the grass
the silence of the ants and the privacy of the worms

she does not like this she needs the chaos to divert the lulling ennui
that will soon numb and kill her and so she climbs the only living tree at the center of this paradise gets the only apple that she throws under the trees beside the grass and flowers and then the discord starts to unfold now she watches all of them in their domestic wars

the trees shake the leaves and the worms are eating the barks and the ants are building their empires on sands

simply because they have turned the blind eye the deaf ear the gaps of communication bore the holes of pandemonium she sits and weaves herself a bandanna now she is ready to go

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall There Be Fake Stars In Heaven?

i once named you
as one of the stars in heaven

every night
though distant
i look at you
my true star

time is cruel with its storms and
rain
and there are times when i simply gaze even if i see nothing of you

the years are patient and the leaves of thoughts keep on covering what naked bark and trunk is there upon the being of my existence

one night
when it was as dark as the color of depression

i begin to ask if in the heavens too
there are fake stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall We Be Shut Off?

water on our toes
we look down the minutest detail
of this
wandering

moss and pebbles
sand and foams and clouds and winds

up there
we shall not be shut
like night

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall We Depend Upon You?

the stairs have
been broken,
turning into firewood
it too burns the
house

the bridge of the river is also taken
all pieces down to the drain of the river

what now? what shall you do with your fury?
what shall we profit from you powers of destruction your capacity for annihilation?

make us all disappear
we have nothing now except our presence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall We Return To The Place Where We First Met?

SO, THE road has ended, what have we? a dead end, we cannot go somewhere now we have no choice but to confront each other you face me and i face you what have we got? i got nothing, you got nothing we are nothing now returning to that wish that we can be full that we can be someone or something bigger than ourselves our dreams what have we now? what have we become?

we are nothing and we are not saying anything about it.
we are martyrs of this nothing game.
we go back, since this is a dead end now.
that is the only choice. we must remember and go back there where we first met each other,
and that was what was it, face to face.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shall You Pray?

when the boat
sinks
know where you escape

when the house
crumbles
know where to go

when the world ends
as everything ends
and you know not
where to go
and you know not what
to do

shall you pray?

RIC S. BASTASA
Shallow

forget the deep
we have experienced what drowning is the past is over we begin again for something new this wading
in the shallow waters we bear witness to the whiteness of our flat feet
we store some confidences we throw unnecessary fears

sometimes
being a pig gives a nice feeling how does it feel perhaps to be a buffalo wallowing in the mud?

not thinking about what they think not thinking about the strict codes for tomorrow?

time's getting too short the hands of time have been too cruel let us take this moment little pleasures that may last us for another short lifetime

let 's swim, let's get muddy let us be happy

forget how was breathing when we were in the deep sinking

RIC S. BASTASA
Shallow Days...

well, there are shallow days, nothing deep something for my feet,

above me the sun
one and only one sun

just the sun and my head and the shallow waters on my toes

and the noon time walk when everyone is as usual

having lunch, and my toes get wet and i am making meanings

on the shallow waters

the body in the middle of this air, the hands are like eagles flying. the fingers are turning into feathers

RIC S. BASTASA
Shallow Questions

after dinner
the birthday party of her spinster sister the usual fried chicken and rice long noodles for long life an imagery of so much superstition some yellow mangoes sweet sour
red wine on the table some fine classic glasses a toast of her having to have another year of boredom

some questions after some drinks a little drunk he must be some personal questions as he carries his baby the mother is lazy i think and they must have quarreled with her mother-in-law i don't mind
i keep my own mind
there are other concerns but he is drunk now and asks me why i don't go to church on Sunday for the mass i evaded such a lousy question an interference on my religious belief my own convictions
God is somewhere and has a permanent residence In my heart in my mind in my body in my soul etcetera
but it is the dinner birthday party of her very lonely spinster sister i beg away from a drunken discussion about God and Politics No heated debates this time of the year this moment of happiness on a birthday like this Jokes and light matters Feathery and Smooth and Comfortable must be the theme and Points of Convergence i shift to something life.

'Hey, you have grown more hair, my friend'

we i think, is a happy ending.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shallow Thoughts...

along the shores
where the salty vines have covered our tracks the coconuts are growing tall and being so nearly planted their leaves reach for each other in a little distance the heaps of dry leaves and husks make a mountain and now covered by the vines and so concealed

beyond this place is a grass-less space it is where most of the strangers stay the mass of people gather and bask under the sun

the gates here are closed more often there are no kids neither are there old people who take their leisure here

this is my own place so private and so deserted i would like to call it another solitude but the coconut trees without nuts on this rainy December signify otherwise

it is lonely, the hut speaks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shalom Center, Rm C5

this room is a mess
and it is easily
eating
two days inside
me

this mess is mine alone
and i put a card at the door knob
which says
exactly as i want it
to be

Do not Disturb.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shalom My Friend....

shalom my friend
we have our own place in the here and there and even in the nowhere they've got theirs and they have become obvious like rocks and marks and lighthouses and tall buildings and even suns and moons

we have become one of those anonymous stars spread in those enormous skies

sparkling with the millions and trillions unaccountable beauties with all their mysteries

the great one
you must know is still having a hard time figuring out
what is our name.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shanghai Wrap

he spreads himself like a sheet in bed till the morning hours

no one is there to share his heat, no one, no one

no one, and so at night he comes folded
as tight as shanghai wrapping
fried in the heat of his unrequited love
forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Shanghai: 8 Days

through the eyes of a fish one copes up with mirage in the desert where you do not really belong,

how you survived the heat must be a miracle with cactus as food

i am definite about you how i wish i can have the hands of the squid again

RIC S. BASTASA
Shanghaied

shanghaied
to hawaii
the lupus patient many years ago

to save a democracy
in my country

then followed the widow
and then
and tobacco man
and then
the bearded playboy
and then
comes the midget

we shall love her for her thousand lies

RIC S. BASTASA
Sharing A Cup Of Civet Voffee

we share this cup
Of civet coffee

A delicious excrement
Of a cat

It does not make any Coffee different

But how people see us
With its high price

makes it So.

We have not discarded This show for vanity

we have saved however,
the Civet cat

from its potential extinction

RIC S. BASTASA
Sharing Logic...

if you do not want the cat to climb your table and eat your fried chicken legs then put them all down flat on the floor.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sharing Secrets

I was told that a secret between two people
remains a secret
when one of them
is dead

that is the risk

but today i revealed
a secret
to another who has a secret with me

we were whispering
and hushed and Blushed

one sheds tears
and binds herself to chains

i grow wings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sharp Incision

i cut through you sharply
on a bloodless incision you won't believe it until i do it to you,
like this,
close your eyes
and i will kiss you
i have a knife
on my tongue
and it will cut
a slice of your throat down to the chamber of your heart and you will know
love,
it kills us,
bloodlessly,
explodes
without the sparks of the 4th of July
you fell like running naked under a blue sky
and then
it rains.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sharp Knife

come to me as if you are a basket full of luscious, juicy, sweet mangoes and i will come to you as though i am one sharp knife with all slices of dreams in my hollow head

RIC S. BASTASA
Shattered Pieces

shattered pieces
my hands shall pick you up and they will bleed to make you whole again

shattered pieces
when you become whole

will you love me?

RIC S. BASTASA
She Admits She Keeps Her Thoughts To Herself

she shares a world
the room where her children make most of the mess and they say all the possible excuses
arguing as though they are all lawyers she talks about the small cubicle on the 17th floor

somewhere atop
New York

she swears she might have been transshipped
to another place but the place where she was born
was never taken inside her
guts

i listen attentively and can tell that she wants to keep things in their original flavor like ginger and spring onions

but as usual
what is said is normally different from what is done she is right
she may share her world but she keeps her own thoughts to herself and it is fair since that is what i am also doing now

RIC S. BASTASA
She Asks Me How Can I Tell Rain From Tears?

we are walking on the free lane
of love
and it starts to rain and we have no umbrella and she stays near my side that i can smell the scent
of her hair
and she looks at me
and asks me to stop
awhile
and she asks me
if i can tell the difference between her tears and the rain and i say yes

my love

i kiss her that long under the heavy rain and i know how salty are her tears how deep is her sorrow and i tell her after your tears are so sweet.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Asks Me How Should My Coffee Be?

and i tell her have it as hot as global warming
up the brim full as full put lots of sugar and cream
a spoonful of coffee black as the night when all the good men want to die

RIC S. BASTASA
She Brought Them All Kindly To Her Grave

of course i know what coldness is apart from something that is cool when mother died her hands were extremely cold for my hold

i let them go
there was no sadness
there was that happiness of letting her rest and giving myself a little space

for tomorrow
when coldness comes again in an empty room with open windows
i know not what panic shall be my hands are extremely cold these days when i kiss them my lips become frozen they break like glasses

i cannot speak
there is no way that my tongue shall give in to
words
it cannot face coldness in the mirror of my face

since you ask and you demand an explanation i open my hands and i let your hands touch them i cannot speak i am afraid i will be cruel you must hold these extreme coldness for a long time so you can all let them go like white birds against a dark sky so you can also experience what happiness i had when i let go off mama's fears

when mama closed her eyes because what was important she knew need not be said anymore
she brought them all kindly to her grave

RIC S. BASTASA
She Built A New House

she built a new house
on top of a hill

she had it painted and it looks like a grass

she installed a narrow door and a cross in the middle

she is old
and i know she wanted

a tomb
a mausoleum

she wants me to write a letter

and with all these what i wrote sounded more like a epitaph for her

i remember this
'here lies
the body of a woman
untouched'

RIC S. BASTASA
She Carried It Gladly Beyond....

the world waits for what we say oh, we must have said everything already the world still waits for what we really have to say

because it knows we still have not spoken what is in the heart it waits for the hour before that when only the truth is spoken he spoke,

and passed away, mama didn't i know, because like the world i keep on waiting she carried it gladly beyond a la

cumming

i am happy the world does not need really
to hear

none of the ear's business

RIC S. BASTASA
She Chanced To Dream

on years,
on the dance of whispers.
where have we gone

when the merry pranksters painted the soul of a child to woman born where dares she grow

from wood stock
she chanced to dream
but what did those years, mean.

she thought they would stay... forever.

but a child to woman grows it’s all a body knows
and
it’s the stains
that paint
on one’s remains as they ride the wind sweet wind

and so,
still she rides
on tomorrow’s dreams
sweeter wind stitching a wood stock witching
never...
and always free...

RIC S. BASTASA
She Comes Again But You Will Remember

she comes again inside this dusk with another mask but as soon as she sings you begin to remember the flowers of her youth the bridge that fell the chain of daisies on her hair one bright summer day the meteor's tail

the guitar strings
the violets and roses and the dance in her circle of life you recognize her because frankly my dear she is also you

RIC S. BASTASA
She Complains That She Is Not That Weak Woman In Passion

What you read is all there is If you cannot relate Then no problem
If you are not that woman Wriggling in my poem
Then let it be another woman

Another woman that
You mock
That you think is So unreal

A woman who is not you
A woman who cannot be you Is still the real woman That I hold and love and cherish She is still the woman that I love very much She is still the woman that I can die for She is the weak woman in my arms She is the woman hiding in my embraces She is the woman longing for my love She is the woman who cannot live without my love She is the woman who is by my side She is the woman lovable to me

We made a vow
And I will be with her forever Without me she is incomplete Without her I am incomplete
We will always be together

Will you hate the woman that I love?

Drop her. She is mine. I'll catch her.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Did Not See The Lilacs When They Bloomed One Summer in the past sense of my words she had not seen the lilacs when they once bloomed in her garden i swear they are so beautiful hanging on their stalks surrounded by their heart shaped leaves like a bouquet offering of spring for the first rain

RIC S. BASTASA
She Drinks My Soda

at the beach resort
she took the coca-cola that i have started drinking on its mouth

she drinks too the mouth of the coca-cola
for a while until such time that it was half consumed

she returned the bottle less its contents
her 'thank you' was the sweetest

RIC S. BASTASA
She Gets In

dawn silent
gate creaks
she is in

RIC S. BASTASA
She Had Too Much She Had Too Little

of this
she had too much of that she had too little and of this and of that i am a little bit confused what to take what to discard what to leave
what to believe buy this buy that throw this throw that away i take a step forward i am told to take another step backward i think it must be this but i think it can also be that of this and that of these and those it does not matter what she really thinks i have my own thoughts now about this and about that i will take this and only this from far away London
i shall have thoughts of my own
now.............................................

RIC S. BASTASA
She Hates Monologues

when i am silent
as a fog
by the side
of an abandoned
mountain

she hates it

she speaks
to herself
like she is disregarded
by her
lovers

like she is in a trance
of sort
and she says

i hate monologues

well, i give her the message
she must do what she hates
at times

it is curative

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Asleep

she lives in her own dreams now leave her
you wake up
to a certain reality that now you discover there is no more
rainbow
between her and you
there is no
pot of gold
at the end

you feel
the cold  mist
around you
you are so lonely
you wish
upon a storm
and not upon any star

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Bored

a routine for boredom at 4 o'clock in the afternoon she goes to the city to buy something that must distract her attention in this messy hours of the day when all things simply look the same indistinguishable

two parts have become too distinct one part needs a name the other stays unknown to keep life interesting.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Dead...

perhaps she had enough

there were men in her life, ah, that is expected

one must be open to something that is neither right or wrong there was even a priest

it is sad

when they begin to pretend that they do not know each other in Boracay someone judges her but i prefer the idea that there is that realm of something that is above right or wrong that feeling of extreme joy when everything becomes, no matter what, becomes a part of the many things forgiven,

they say she won't reach valentine's day she had her own time of the hearts, she lived a life without regret she had her suns and moons and stars, she bathed in the same river where we once had all these today she is dead and the goodness, all the goodness in her must triumph who are we? we are the mourners and please do not, do not ever say those bad words please, do not even whisper, we know.

may her soul finally find the peace, and love that eternal affection that only God can give.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Fading And Then The Night Swallows Her Including Her Shadow Of Doubt

while she was at the height of her fury like a dragon spitting fire on him and not stopping he merely looks at her unaffected though a portion of his lips twisted a bit as though saying this woman is impossible when will she disappear?

she is emptying herself and she wants all the fire to burn him but he knows how is it to be a rock and a salt he has mastered the art of being a nobody and hence he thrives she is fading and then the night swallows her including her shadow of doubt

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Homely

she is homely
heavy legs, dead toenails, crooked limbs, thick lips, round eyes like a
soccer ball,
twisted, twitching face,
wild eyebrows,
entangled hair,
rough skin,
flat nose,
by all means she is not like the rest
who are lovable
but i know you noble man loving a
betty la fea,
for if you do not love
her,
who may ever can?

thanks to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is In Love

she is in love, how can i not notice it? she wakes up early, goes into her garden and sings a beautiful song, very early this morning. she waters her roses, and feeds the chickens. she cooks breakfast. The eggs are fresh.
The meat well cooked and so tasty.
The coffee smells the aroma of coffee.
What else?
The room is clean, the kitchen so well kept.
My polo shirt is ready, my socks, handkerchief, my underwear, my shoes, my tie, they're all placed on bed for me to wear today.
The room smells with perfume Her favorite, Victoria's secret.
She kisses me twice now, and another one before i leave.
Life is beautiful, she repeats it again and again.
She stays in the house now. No travels this time.
No loafing with friends.

Tell me that i am conceited.
She is still in love with me. Now on our 12th year of marriage.
I look again at our wedding ring. The tiny diamond there still glitters.
Against the sunlight. Against all the odds.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Looking For The Simplicity Of You

she is looking for nothing but the simplicity of the sea the plain salt in water you may even remove the bluish part of it she is expecting nothing in the landscape but only the grass on the hills you may remove the house nearby and the running brook the moon at night need not even be there the star can be dispensed with you may only give her the darkness and the silence of the grass and the hills she is looking for nothing except that you the one she loves must be there tonight you may even dispense with the body the hands and the face and the thighs you may take them all away from her she needs only the presence of your words or even if you take the last word that you cannot give you leave her the sigh unspoken by you that will still suffice she loves you and it is enough for her to last for another day

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Mad

she is mad because i take in an insane electrician of the house connections and yes there are explosions like the fourth of July short circuits here and there and the kitchen burns itself so much go out

i let out what we had stored for years and then we go out of the house laughing hard we simply get rid what we do not need and then we become too light and happier.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Mother....

that early morning
the old woman who served well the government of this Republic until her retirement visited me in my working room and she asked me how am i doing and i told her that everything is fine and she commented that she is seeing light in my face and that everything must have been smooth and easy and i answered that probably it is because God has made it possible for me to survive the ordeals of our justice system and she assured me that the Holy Almighty will always be behind us, and we did not notice that we have been holding hands for a long time until she felt uneasy about the unusual matter and i took away my hand from her hand and i felt the unseen energy running away from me and i wondered if she was an angel sent to me by the Lord of Justice but i shrug the idea off for everything here is real and perhaps if things happen by reason of miracles, then it must be.

for the meantime, we cut short our concerns, work is here and invading us and we have to part finally.

God be with you, she finally leaves, such words of comfort.

she is mother.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is No Longer Innocent About The Ways Of The World

you think she is as fragile as a thin glass of cherry wine that when you touch the tip with your finger she blushes and the glass gets warmer with your thumb its bottom at the mercy of your palm you like to think that she is a flower blooming on the month of May where the dews are as careful as the sap of the red melon nothing that stains the skin and dirties the white linen then you discover a lot of things first, the way she uses the pillow putting it just bellow her buttocks then the way she calls your name like the hush of the break of day's breeze from the distant sea mournful and yet so awakening to your senses the way she puts her legs and spreads her arms to hold your body she is like the full moon peeping over the window that you open you let her in and she sleeps like a fantasy dream on your bed every sense of you wakes up like there is a fire in the house adrenalin rushes inside your thighs you are undressed and in the naked truth you come to her something unspeakable unfathomed

giving you the freedom to plunge in the paradise long denied by them for you you found the map to her labyrinth of pleasure and once there you do not want to leave this is your home your niche where your hands thrive like the needles of grass where you mind glows like the stars alive and singing

this is pleasure immeasurable her lips her breasts her arms her abdomen her eyes her hands gripping your hands her feet entwined like the vine to the pillar of your house her soft voice her moans the cock is crowing and by all means say hello to a very nice morning

a new day to the first day of your life.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Not Also Looking For Anybody.

...And then we behave like beggars in need of affection if you see us dressed on our Sunday's best waiting along the busy road for someone who never arrives you would have known what pity is all about we eat time, we squander it like a prodigal son, we do not mind what is left loneliness too is tiresome expensive and senseless

you know what i mean
look at you, you are fully dressed ‘but you are not going anywhere’ you are waiting
for no one

there is one who arrives here but what a pity
she is not also looking for anybody.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Playing Misty With Me

i do not mean that this fling can cling and hurt, it started as a minor poem in my heart and then she swallowed love hook, line and sinker, taking this bait, he thought he loves her, it does not work that way for something deeper than a mere poem of the minor category the mist is being played and the fatal attraction grows into a murderous affair, and she might be there holding a knife and Alex comes to the scene and finding her shoots her with a gun.

she bathes in her own blood, the police came again at the late hour of the night.

God! thanks it is just another nightmare.
I wake up and take a glass of ice cold water.

I need to go back to sleep again.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Right

with all the loves
i have wasted
i must visit the church and light
the candles
for each love that i have squandered
on each boulevard
each park
each boat

each port
each kiss....

i must offer flowers
for the death of love.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is Sleepless, She Is Probing

They read your lines
They perhaps like you
They try to read you In between
she is sleepless
And she pities you
she is probing
And she writes for you too
And you feel so honored

Comes our arrogance
You say you write
Only for yourself
For art’s sake
You say you cannot Write for no other
You say you cannot Stop writing
Your essence is just that
To write for no other

To write or you die

Be kind
Let them read you through the night Let them follow you Warn them though
They may have followed A blind man eking his way through His darkness

Without even a cane to feel his way.

The Virgin Mary
And Veronica
The crying mother
And the cloth to wipe a bloody face

Don’t stretch further
There is no Christ in me.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Is There

i see some bamboo poles lining up on the shallow sea
she is there
watching some fishes without fins without scales
she is there on some exclamations this cannot be!
this cannot be!
the fish i know have fins!
the fish i know have scales all over their elongated bodies!
the fish i know can swim!
why are these fishes dying?
why are these fishes swimless in the sea where they belong?
yes my dear, the fishes and the sea, you do not belong there the fishes are not yours and you do not belong to them they have their own salty, slimy, scaly world, they have gills and fins and round eyes that do not blink

so you cannot tell them what to do, what to become.

in fact, you are neither fish nor fowl

RIC S. BASTASA
She Jumps

she jumps into a pool of water her hair falls freely and she dives in the deep blue spot she is lost in the fog she creates the ripples in my mind

she rises like the moon from the night clouds

i bite my lips as i watch her she is such a lovely poem tonight

RIC S. BASTASA
She Likes A Dimmer

She likes a dimmer
On a yellow chandelier Dimming
A little bit dimmer
Than yellow sun Fading to light orange
To darker Reddish sunset
On a sea horizon
Where everything
Turns to gray
Then dark
To total darkness
Of her night

She is simply Dramatizing
Her life in Old age,

Like fading colors
To a fading life
In ages past Like forgetting something too painful

The yellow lights dimming On the chandelier on a Dimmer does the trick for her

I too like it.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Likes It Here

she likes it here
inside this small aquarium she is the most beautiful goldfish
alone with her own bubbles

RIC S. BASTASA
She Likes To Begin Again

she likes to begin again
on some new lines of her poetry a brand new metaphor like a newly born baby to a mother crying with joy as father watches

she likes another beginning it is still sad deceiving herself that the end approaches her like a candle about to burn the floor sometimes i pity her embarking on a new journey of self-denial

another trip to the land of lies but somehow it is good or better shall i say
at least
she is not riding on that old angry train
again

RIC S. BASTASA
She Loves Her Hair Stretched

accustomed to curly hair when we were yet children living in the same house

I feel uneasy why she wears stretched hair
And she takes pride about her new found fashion And taste for something straight.

Curly hairs and split ends Never gave her luck
She got an ugly husband Who does not understand her Rich maybe, but slaps her

It is time she gains confidence In herself to a newer face A stretched hair, straight And candid and ready to Fight now, win or lose,

At whatever costs she must Deny her old self, the one With the curly hair, she is Ready for the consequences.

Her right as a new woman With stretched hair is now

Or never, she has no time left Anymore for hiding and cowardice and tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Loves Me ........

last night she woke up to an unholy hour
felt my chest
and thought that i was dead which i played so willingly to test how she reacts to said
circumstance

she loves me.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Makes Me Remember

she is old, her hair diminished, still black but dry, and her skin cannot betray her being overworked and abused by society,
i face her now and she reminds me that she was the one who took care of me when i was a baby, mama was a teacher and papa was a drunkard yet he was rich by that time's standard, glasses were thrown away from the kitchen and broke themselves on the pavement of the strangers, she took care of me like a mama, forlorn, and betrayed she asks money for the rum i give her, and she is happy now i look at her again when she leaves the place she is disappointment looking for some pleasure
to forget,
she stinks but she is still one of the family treasures. mama died and if she was only her i know she would hug her as tight as an apron
on her waist.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Masters Now The Art Of Losing

at first she lost a coin then her purse and then her bag and then her blouse and then her skirt and pants and then it went back to losing her underwears until she becomes naked she gets used to losing and when she finally lost herself she did not complain

she is used to losing she has mastered losing as a form of art itself she has become an artist and losing has become her main business now, i have loved her and i am having this problem of finding her

i guess i must learn too, this art of losing

RIC S. BASTASA
She May Have Told You

she may have told you that i do not write for you since i write for her she may not have lied to you for she tells the truth as she loves me too but she must not have told you as i have not told her that i love you too.

RIC S. BASTASA
She May Not Come

she leaves at any moment when she wants it and we who are left live on our own resources. We are sad.
In darkness we thrive.
Each sharing a slice of pain. And then one day from out of the blue she comes and says, why is everything dark? Why black? Change it. That is not the right color.

She does not have any sense of light at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Must Too Help Me Forget

her silence stabs me, despite any word
i say
water on the hot cinders of hate,
she keeps on fueling that unresolved anger,
she must know that i am having too
my own hard times
harsh as hers
in that foreign land all the while she thinks i betrayed her
and cause the brokenness of her future,
no, it isn't
there are words that i cannot
say
words that also kill me at one moment
she must still not know them unless she forgets me

there is this freedom
inside
and i still have it within she has no right to enter

RIC S. BASTASA
She Needs A Jealous Man

she needs a very jealous man in her life to make her feel that she is lovable that she is still worth the hassle that she is still a crystal bubble she needs a very jealous man to prick her so she can burst into a very lovely flower to face the sun with beauty and this time with oozing sex appeal and more this time with concrete self-confidence

RIC S. BASTASA
She Needs Years To Make A Poem

i am not surprised with what she just said to make a poem of her life she needs years and years perhaps a hundred years if need be to make the best poem of her life

her words are days and days her stanzas her dwelling place her commas and punctuations her naps and long hours of sleep her poem is her life

she lives inside it she breathes every word every letter and when she reads it when it is finished she speaks her last, hounding silence

RIC S. BASTASA
She Plays Too Well

she plays too well
he is amazed at this when his anger
melts into love
when his love
melts into the sense
of the divine
the silence clings
like a vine to the wall
the cold winds blow
the leaves undefeated

he tells her well done
he asks her to slow down a bit
so he can savor
the notes of her song like sweetness to his tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
She Really Deserves The Best...

inside last night's dream she appears again: light skinned too young for her age
smiling
seducing you to be in her side again

you have actually forgotten her name but her face speaks
a language that makes you remember what it was before between you and her
in that past

she holds your hand
she does not speak
she takes you to a very silent place where she plants a kiss on your lips

you love her
still
that is what you can only recall but you cannot love her anymore
and that is a matter of a firm decision

you left her again but this time
she is no longer crying
when the dream closed
like a door
and you are out into the open field of your disposition

you are definite
there is no guilt there is only that
happiness
that somehow tells you
she deserves
the best

and you are not just
that.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Returns I Refuse....

if you have lots and lots of money, this you can do: burn them and laugh.

for instance, there is this old woman so stingy, she does not buy anything for herself, lends money at high interest, collects everything in deposit, she does not travel, money is meant to be hoarded, she does not give to charity, what a waste of money, all the idle lazy people in the world, she does not even help relatives, sad to say even her kids, left her for good, and she is left alone in her bed of money, she masters loneliness, despite, it is the money that makes her alive at 85, she remains to be that way, except for the flattery and that gullibility, and this she did, she burns all her money and it was me who laughed, for regret always comes at the end, she returns, i refuse.

RIC S. BASTASA
and how is it going?
it is bad, i said.
before the year ends
the flowers wilt, since no one is watering the pots. The pigs are butchered and i can still hear the wailing.
it is hot most of the time and the drama of leaves falling still stick on the mind.
There were heavy rains
too, the bridge soon will collapse. The waters rise eager to gobble
the nearby weak houses.

You are just bitter, she said. The sun is bright, winds are gentle, and people are in jubilation.
The poor are buying gifts.
The children are laughing.
And promises of good tidings and good will are abounding.

Maybe, i answered. I am just more real than the rest of you here. Still dreaming and hoping sticking to the world like worms and leeches.

You are bitter, she said.
You have never loved at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Says

she tells me before we broke up that i may be able to love two persons at the same time but never at the same level and so she gave up on me, and i think, (i did not tell her of course) i am happier this time without her.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Says She Is Not The Fourth Woman

I give her the benefit of the doubt Well, when I wrote that poem she was inside my head And I dived as a submarine Into a little sea of understanding And she is the periscope

There are waves and Some uncertain destinations

Where to go
Where to stop

How to describe the places above land And underwater

She was in my mind when I wrote that
And I gave her a lot of forms:
a bird,
a bat,
a dinosaur,
a fighter,
a warrior

And I was so sure about her, because She once told me About her agitations

I got premonitions though that when she reads it She will deny herself
The pleasure of seeing her own movie Her own character in the game That she loves and she is Really into.

Indeed, she says she is not.
I give her
Due process. She may not be that fourth woman But to my mind
she is and she giggles in my brain

And she even asks me: how much is that brain?
That pound of flesh? Did you buy me respect?

Darling, my brain is yours through and through My flesh is just a finger away, a lip away, a tongue away

Respect is not for sale, it is earned

with time, and Honesty
To feelings

Now, I give respect you respect.
You are that fourth woman.
You are the woman of my life.

I appear to you naked.
Touch me. Feel me.

Be honest.
Say that you love me.

Tell me that you care.

I am your submarine. You will be my sea and I will not be afraid

Of uncertain destinations. I am bound to be lost anyway.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Says Ten

I say two words
She replies with ten Summer is hot
And bickering
Like a flame

RIC S. BASTASA
She Says That A Kiss Is A No-Brainer Task

her face shows it unkissed, she destroys the best medicine
of a woman's lackluster

but she is right somehow it is the heart
we use, when we like to kiss

RIC S. BASTASA
She Sobbed.

He wept.
Finally, he left.

She couldn't believe it.
She had doubts.
And her doubts finally devoured her.
Hook, line and sinker.
She is gone too.

But I finally hear the sobs.
On air. There is no one there. It seems.
But I know. It is her.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Tells The Truth And No One Believes...

our belief has been that i dying
we conquer death
that in giving
we conquer greed
that in losing ourselves we find ourselves
at the end...

(in the ironies
however, of life we thrive;

upon the hunger of others we are blind
we keep water away
from the thirst of the masses
we progress because we oppress
and from behind every fortune that we amass
a crime is hidden)

we continue with our solemnities:
we support charities
with publicity
we like our faces
seen on TV
we hug a child to convince them of our love for the helpless and the new
we like our names put in the posterity of all those walls
we like a street named for us
we put a pillar in society bearing our ancestry...

comes now Janus
double-faced
comes now the diamond
of multiple behaviors

there is this Cassandra screaming at the crossroads of history

she tells the truth and no one believes...

RIC S. BASTASA
She Walks Her Talk

Ruth is a nice woman she does not climb the ladder the ladder climbs for her i remember how the ladder puts her feet on the step and the ladder keeps on carrying her to the top
so that she can see what is wrong with the plain and she does what she is supposed to
do
trimming the stars dimming the heavens sometimes to create the ambiance of an accommodation
she does what the gods tell her to do down to the last detail sacrificing sometimes what she thinks is right from her own human perception the trees love her and so do the sand and grass

i am telling you i love the woman you know it well
she walks her talk.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Was Simply Looking At The Bulge Of My In Between

I wanted something else, more than what she really wanted from me. I want a talk, a longer talk, a sleepy talk to while my boring hours away,
And she looks at me differently, her eyes falling in between my legs, Trying to unzip me by her looks, her hands busily slowly sliding in the pockets of my pants,
I did not complain, there is no reason, and it would be humiliating her Own kind of simple joys as a woman,
She takes the first initiative that is her style, she is not recessive

She slides her fingers holding my Bulge, respectful of her courageous tenderness,

She is heating me, I pretend I am gentle, and I keep on talking About something else, like how I cared for her, when she’s lonely I can be a listener

She’s drunk. And she is an honest woman, her fingers gripped Me frankly demanding that I should not talk

I shut up and gave in. She will have no regrets. I gripped her hands And lead it to something she really liked

She is drunk, and I am so forgiving. She will start her dinner and she need not speak

Her mouth is full.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Wears A Scarf

loss of hair

she wears a bandanna

even inside the house

we do not ask.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Whipped The Little Naughty Boy....

because mother did not take him to the funeral
he took his own unique revenge uprooting all the blooming African daisies in her garden
and taking everything to the road where the big truck runs them all down over when mother saw it she wept.

she whipped him so hard that he almost fainted.
and both of them could never forget each other.

the map to forgiveness was lost.
and love is an island hidden by a giant fog.
the only boat available had lots of holes. the childless boatman died.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Who Wears The White Hairs

she who wears the white hairs
teaches me what to do with my life i embrace her and take the clue from the scent of her wisdom earned by her for years and years the weight burdening much on her bare shoulders

her wrinkles speak of the struggles of the past warring on the moles of her cheeks the furrows where tears rush and fall and then seep on the floor i kiss her tonight for it is her birthday and i whisper to her my gratitude i smell the sweetness of her soul and it sinks deeper into the recesses of my heart: here is the lady who made me i once remember the Chinese eyes in me my brown skin so tight to my bones my complacency removed from my youth my mind soaring like a blithe spirit in the air she was there all the days of my life teaching, guiding and patiently noting what i lack, what i need and what i must be soon i shall have her white hairs too her wrinkles her sad smile her own death soon like her i will stand proud too she did her best and we were brought to the test she does not mind her passing we are ready for the timing we shall switch roles, she dies we save more souls

RIC S. BASTASA
She Will Speak About Some Men

almost bald, some hair have consistently fallen bigger tummies bloated to some earthly experience the men of her life
smelling beer
and saline sweat

but always she will remember them always feeling sexy

the dark room
the musk perfume
the warm blankets
some pillow cases
smelling pungent still inside her lonely mind her heart has stopped bleeding

the men of her life
oh! they were sexy too tall and strong and naked always penetrating
her emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
She Wins This Time

She takes my mother-in-law She knows what weakens her And she wrecks
What used to be smooth
She plants the wrinkles
Of this legal relationship, Then she will be taking
My wife
And there will be pain Inflicted somewhere
Somebody gets hit so badly
She does it
She sees to it that it will be me

But no one knows it is her wrecking Every dream I have, every plan I set Every posturing

She wins, I give her a win
This time and tomorrow she still wins She takes everything from me

But I have no worry at all She is instrumental to my perfect plan

On the day that I enter this house And mingle with her My only plan is to be out of the door To walk out from this floor I could have jumped out of the window Or break open some walls Or take the ceiling to the roof Where I can breathe Where I can be out from here And be gone with some drifting clouds

With her it was so unnecessary She does it for me
She does it all for me
And with the thinking that she is winning this game

And this time, sorry to tell her,
This time I win.

RIC S. BASTASA
She Won'T Last Long There

at her age of 66
she won't last long
in the land of the snow

anticipate that on the 30th day
she will be back
worried about her
pig, and jack fruits
and chickens
and dogs

missing her daily
prayers in the church

RIC S. BASTASA
She Wronged Herself

what was wrong?
she took a corner
and put herself there for the whole day
she stayed denying the demands of movements like
the way the fingers
must wriggle for the hands like the way
the hair must dance
with the wind to freshen the scalp
to make the brain
alive to put life to her eyes

everything is wrong
she wronged herself.

RIC S. BASTASA
She....

she is a tiny yellow
butterfly
that hovers over my ring finger
too fragile
i keep my fingers
open
throughout the night
long.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a way
always to detect if the water has
a fish, though the river is brackish
and murky. even the
mussels in the mud, even the shells on
the sands, ...the stars in the heavens
are obvious at night,
the winds that carry those dead leaves
plucked from the life of the trees,
the sun fading sinking
to the depths of the horizon, ....
there is a need to spend time, to simmer yourself, and be with them: shells, mussels, fish, and sand.

RIC S. BASTASA
you shift from poetry with regret you must get into the ramifications of the law of bread and butter, you want to kill time and just lay there, the law, the law, how dry can these laws be,
you gaze outside the window, sighing, looking to the blue sea and feeling the breeze salty to your brain, ahhh, it is this salt of the earth, talking. I shift my head now to these lines,
i live for the moment.
now, back to what i detest, this bread, this butter, i too live here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shikataganai (That's The Way It Goes) ...

(i got to scramble your words to build a poem which may not be a poem at all, who knows what a poem is?

chopping a celery and putting it in the middle of a salad, pouring hot water to a coffee inside a porcelain cup...

to qoute:

I cannot help but smile at the fine touch of wit mixed with irony bits.

I may know well that wakarimasen

Get it often when people try to avoid further discussions may just take the

I don't know
into their arms,

holding tight to those words as there would never be another chance to find another ways
to solve a problem..

RIC S. BASTASA
Shimsu

shimsu is lying on the ground
dying and my wife who has attached herself
to such a
grey hound is crying....

RIC S. BASTASA
Quote of the day:

'Whatever you give a woman, she will make it greater.
If you give her
sperm, she'll give you a baby.
If you give her a house, she'll give you
a home.
If you give her groceries, she'll give you a meal.
If you give her a smile, she'll give you her heart.
She multiplies and
enlarges what is given to her.
So, if you give her any crap, be ready to receive a ton of shit.'

RIC S. BASTASA
my hands are trembling on your story
of a plot that vibrates with fear
like the leaves of an aspen one autumn breeze

like i were a child quaking always asking for more

like the quivering poplar tree

my shaking knees
on shaky feet

i changed perspective
about this shivering

i must see
the sparkling lights from some shivering
crystals
of the chandeliers
of this
old house

where this family
of mine
still thrive

wanting to get rid of trembling hands

RIC S. BASTASA
Shock

a chick away from the hen's wings on the ground
looking for grain

a hawk glides
and takes it

too late for the hen the clouds drift by

the sky
shows no sigh of shock

nature's normal ways a predator is taking its much deserved breakfast plain strategy
a skill for the kill.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shocking Stories....

i

the vulture preys
on the carcass of the helpless victim robbed and killed in the desert abandoned
with fellow vultures the feast is not over it will continue for days

ii

the old monkey asks for food and help
as he sits upon his mountain of gold

iii

crocodile that lives on the murky river denies that yesterday it has swallowed an innocent boy from that uneducated village

RIC S. BASTASA
Shocking To The Conscience Of Man

a young woman in maroon dress with a red scarf
sweeps the side of the street
with her broom

an old man walks
slowly
from the gate of his house
across the street

and then
suddenly one crazy guy on his loud motorcycle passes by

i can't tell you what happened next

you're eating apple pie...

RIC S. BASTASA
Shoot Shoot Shoot

in his firm
steady grip
in his hand
is the bow
of all creative
ergies

RIC S. BASTASA
Shoot The Shooting Star

you wished upon a star
the first star
was a fake
you wished upon another star it was a failure you wished upon the third star it was useless and gave you nothing you wished again on the fourth star it was ungrateful and took almost everything from you and then another star and then another star shooting before you they all gave you despair and you believe not on any star anymore

then you learned to live without any star
the stars are not true

and you are so disappointed with all the falsities they are telling you
finally
you have this shotgun in your hand and then this lone shooting star came one night splendid in such a dark space you shot it hit it
and there it exploded, shattered it was the only star intended for you and it was true

RIC S. BASTASA
Shooting Stars

those were the stars where you say all your wishes they're all gone now they live their lives only in seconds

RIC S. BASTASA
Short Contemplation....

you look at your face this forest hair
the space is too small
for the feel of prison you find a mole
it is an island where you can stay
you look closer there is this pore in your skin
you think
there is something in there that can possibly make you free...

RIC S. BASTASA
Short Poem...

when there is nothing to say?
ask.

RIC S. BASTASA
you create the hero
and then the villain
and to make the story short
the hero finally gets hold of the gun and points it to the head of the villain
pleading for mercy
and then bang!

RIC S. BASTASA
Shortie #1

anticipation

a bowl unflushed
there is no
more blood

kahinam

Wa pa maflush ang
Bowl
Wala nay dugo

RIC S. BASTASA
Shortie 1

a rainbow generation after the rain of turmoil whistles its way towards the church
for the wedding of anger and empathy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shortie 2: Turn Your Hate Around

there is so much hate in you it is too tiring to feel much tiring to think beneath this drums of despair turn it around like a clock finish the night with one revolution of the hands of time
get done, dance the reggae or the waltz with me be fed up, be guilty
time for change
open that fist.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shortie 3 My Defense

my defense is simple enough for you to hear it is the whisper of forgiveness the joyful dance of reunification around the circle of our humanity
come, come
our defense must not be revenge it's God's.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shortie 4: At Home Or Abroad

at home, all these mountains are ours abroad, all these dreams are ours at home, all the people are our brothers abroad, they're not, they're the others.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shortie 5: Bondage

i do not ask you to set me free from the bondage that i always revere, these chains that i love, that i worship, these golden chains of my dreams, that i still wish may come true.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shortie 6: Coming In And Out Of Your Life

sweet angel voice
the last time i cried you hear it somewhere on the mountains with ice caps, the echoes reechoing, without stopping in my mind

let you go
but i can't you know and even though i am not with you
i need you so.

kill me softly then with that angelic song asking for my freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
Shortie 7: Ships

ships in my mind
sails in the ocean
seagulls flying
at this hour
sleep is real.

RIC S. BASTASA
can't really smile without you but let me try smiling within me be glad, you cannot murder me with your absence, look at me inside myself, i am alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shortie 9: Baby You Will Always Be Mine

i decide it for myself baby you will always be mine in the realm of thoughts in the fences of my dreams baby, you will always be mine/

RIC S. BASTASA
Shoulder

pains on his shoulder creepy
like snakes looking for the big bite

poisonous lethal bite for the night

dead ma
a white man does not understand what is it

deadma
no one's dead here

it simply means the unmindfulness of the surrounding pain or the itch

and the scratch

the fingernails have reasons not to scratch anymore

too disturbing
too important to be give the attention leave them do whatever they want and just like anything else they too leave when not a pinch of attention is given or the pain becomes a part of routine like a the chase of the blinking signs of traffic on the road

RIC S. BASTASA
Shoulders Support The World

There comes a time when we no longer say: my God.
A time of absolute purity.
A time when we no longer say: my love.
Because love proved useless.
And eyes don’t cry.
And hands only weave in rough work.
And the heart is dry.

Women knock at the door in vain, don’t open it.
You stay alone, the light goes out, and in the dark your eyes glow enormous.

-Carlos Drummond De Andrade translated from the Portuguese by Len Sousa

You’re convinced, you no longer know suffering.
And you expect nothing from friends.

Old age matters little, what is old age?
Your shoulders support the world and it weighs no more than a child’s hand.
The wars, famines, and talks in buildings only prove that life goes on and not all have freed themselves yet.
Some, finding the spectacle barbarous, prefer (the delicates) to die.
There comes a time when there’s no point in dying.
There comes a time when life is an order.
Merely life, without perplexity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Show Me The Happy One

show me the happy one
and i shall show you

the dead one show me
the man who says the wars shall end and i will show you all the dead lining up the streets witnessing the end of the wars that mankind has invented

RIC S. BASTASA
Showcase

socialite clouds rest on the top of Malindang Mountain the common trees look at them with envy
the grasses chide that there is no point to this the clouds are meant to pass the trees are meant to be cut and burned and the grasses win.

RIC S. BASTASA
Showdowned

i was following you holding a camera
and shooting an old chinese man sitting beside the door of his chinatown store

i was expecting something more about a showdown
like that old man
defeating Bruce Lee in a common KungFu Film, or

him becoming a flying tiger over bamboo trees showing his magic prowess against a lioness
chinese actress.

but i understand
completely there is no such showdown in chinatown
except the camera
shooting an old man
and then you go back to your room
watching the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Showing The True Color

when i wake up this early morning she was not already beside me.

i do not want to rise and fold the blanket and go somewhere else.

or read the papers, or sip coffee, there is this laziness that infects my bones, a disease of meaning, another slow day, the routine is eating me, and i behave in a manner that i am like a lame duck being aimed at by all the bystanders i am opening my eyes, and the ceiling is off white, it has been that way ever since i got married, why did i leave it that way? i have the money to have it painted pure white, like a very clean slate where i can write what i must mean, but i didn't, i let things that way they are from the beginning, and perhaps they will still be at the end. This is what i do next, always always i do this: i rise from my bed, go to my circular mirror and look at my face, they also do it, and then i touch my cheeks and chin, feeling the roughness of the beard, how they have grown long and so untidy, the razor is ready, and the soap and water, but this time i will do what i cannot do the other days of my life, i will not trim the unruly ones, i will not wash my face, i may slap myself, and then i give the mirror the grin of the man that is used to all these doubts and shame.

i will tell it, i am now then i will the bathroom another tune for my whistle, nobody, nobody but me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I am away from home
It is nighttime in this big city
And i am inside this room Writing
Absurd travelling
Flying that far only to write about same Things over and over again Like a boat moving in circles Yet
I am not tired Sleeplessly
Ignited by joy that i am alone & Still managed
To be
Sharp and Sane

RIC S. BASTASA
Shut Up....

the sea is enough with its waves and foams and driftwood
and sunken boats
and swallowed screams and missing
names.....

no word please.
I've had enough.
even from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shut....

there is so much in the heart
the mind is a swimmer
it is waiting for the highest dive
the spirit is the light inside a refrigerator
the mouth is a closed door the tongue is still drunk

RIC S. BASTASA
Shutting Up....

if i only knew

the objective of art is to keep things in order

convert chaos into a well kept room

no messing
everything neat in its place

perhaps that is what i am doing right now

threshing out
emotions early morning

putting them inside a canvass of this monitor

a window where emotions take the shape of words shit

shut.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shutting You Out Of My Life

i hear you speak
i like it.

It is past however
&
there is this fear
that with you in my life

i may cease
to be what i am.

so i think at night

if like a bulb by the kitchen door outside the house, i should switch you off the one that sometimes we like to forget doing.

if i continue adoring you i will be lost
and if i allow this for more
days,
i may not find myself again.

so i shut you out
the way i close a window the way i pull the drapes from the ceiling to the floor
to put back the cool shade of dark,

you must understand
i could be
my own disaster too.
Shy

para sa mga bisdak shy, bow

shy taglaba, shy tagluto shy mangompra
shy magbudget
shy hawod
shy magbuot
mao nga
ako? na lang mangambot

RIC S. BASTASA
Shying Away

when the two young creatures start to tease each other at the beach this sunny day the old creature looks the other way

he shies away
not wanting to remember her anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Shying Away From Shakespeare

i know how is it to love Shakespeare or Shelly,

he shakes you and peels you like a pear hits your brain with his spear

and so does his ally Shelly
makes you bleed
and suffer
the agony of the intellectual spasms

i burn poetry books only to miss them again this masochism at the level of an obsession-compulsion malady

i quit them both
and write my own

i am not great but i have learned how to live a happy life again

RIC S. BASTASA
it is not the falsity that makes someone shy away it is the truth that like a turtle plunges deep inside a pail of left-overs showing its head only when all of them leave and as he again recovers his privacy he finally shows the house of its body.

RIC S. BASTASA
Shying.....

to write and keep on writing he says with final conviction requires zero talent because all you have to do is to keep on writing even without purpose even without knowing what comes next what happens after

but there is a way to make a difference
shy away from fame,
respect the masters
by never never ever telling them your real name, and when they ask for it and find you tell them it was not you and never you for as you see and you swear you were never cultured never intellectualized never influenced never knew whether the rules in tablets exist like the law of Moses you never was a learned gentlemen whom women

adore and dream about,

you swear again,
fame is the most irrelevant thing and you never liked it.
Si Papa Ug Ang Iyang Puting Kabayo

Usa ka adlaw niana
Misakay si papa sa iyang puting kabayo Padulong siya sa baybayon Aron sa sayo maligo Walay kaon ang kabayo Apan si papa walay puangod Siging bunal sa kabayo Siging syagit nga magpaspas Ug dagan hala paspas pa gyod Ug dagan kanang morag naglupad Sa dihang naa na sila sa dagat Gusto ko na untang sulsulan ang Puting kabayo aron molangoy Kini sa pikas nga isla aron Dili na kani mabunalan Sa akong walay puangod nga amahan Apan wala akoy nahimo Sa kaisog sa akong palibot Usa ka adlaw niana
Miabot ang dautang balita Adunay kunoy dako nga tawo Gikilaw sa iyang kaugalingong kabayo

RIC S. BASTASA
Siatchon?

what i shall remember about you is your claim for the beauty in selfishness that giving makes more selfish people more selfish than ever before and so on your birthday you take refuge on one of those beautiful ankor wat temples

freed from the clutches of humanity walking the streets of the night market alone not giving anything neither taking anyone

RIC S. BASTASA
Side By Side We Must Go Beyond The Boundaries Of Beliefs

as you followed me not to earn your ire
neither you
earning mine
i also followed you
and that makes it fair
enough
i get to know each story
about you
and you getting mine
then we share each others' ups and downs sometimes we rest upon some shadows
getting the answers for our riddles
time
gives us the moments of who and what we are we discover secret gardens collected pebbles
we sit side by side now
watching
waves rolling upon our feet
do you follow me
again?
who shall follow whom when we are holding each others' hands
like the river and the hill?

RIC S. BASTASA
Siempre Me Quedara - Bebe

alone in the boulevard amidst the rush of evening people, i am, one of those who come here and drink some more of these sunset glasses while feeling the surge of life passing by all of us where loneliness gives more color to the blandness of the majority of human frailness.

RIC S. BASTASA
with grief are black veils of women trying to filter the gleaming of tears with grief are the hands trying to sift and shift the sounds of the cries with grief are women mourning for the deaths of men for the loss of children for the rape of the earth the thin crust of morals dirt of the feet
dusts.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sigh

OH how beautiful is
the moon!
Oh, how beautiful are
the stars!

They need not be mine.
Wonder is enough
To be amazed in their natural beauty
is enough.
Beauty need not be owned
to be beautiful.
In the realm of the hearts,
beauty lives there
and that is enough
for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sigh Of The Returnee

it is not the fullness that overflows
it is the emptiness

of the house when you arrive when the door that feigns the abundance within the room finally surrenders to the brokenness of the hinges it is the fullness that spreads too quickly like an ink of the squid from the previous paths of its escapades from the threats of the predating ell it is the silence that fills the nothingness that sings the unmoving furniture dressed in dust the tempura that is left uneaten and now

filled with molds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sighed

i'll miss those days when both of you and mom are going together on a trip and there is no more news what is happening
in your destination

i like the silence for once a news blackout where i can also be left
alone
tending about how i am going
with my own self

i will miss those moments when you tell me that you are having fun with mom
and telling me that she is one ideal woman

...i like it

she is never my mom and i erred having you

i think i miss myself with the other woman
who left me with all her tears

RIC S. BASTASA
Signs Of My Old Age

just wet my pant
this morning
i was holding it it was too short
to be seen
after i had it full
in my mouth
the bottle of mineral water
in my hand

RIC S. BASTASA
Signs Of Your Times

at first you forget what you recall
and then
you forget what you have
forgotten
finally you choose not to recall
anything

RIC S. BASTASA
Signs....

a pending volcanic eruption in Irosin earthquake in New zealand protests in Libya Iran

mUBArak ousted floods in Punta mispelled wordss trgemblin letters shattered beliefs bloated stomachs thorns in the throat

goiter, cancer, hypertension series of deaths February and March Matchs ticks...

RIC S. BASTASA
Signs?

you dream of the storm
last night

shaken
you go to church to pray

will there be another catastrophe?

God, please protect us helpless, and innocent

unable to see what lies beyond this storm and darkness

as you are praying
a black butterfly passes by
and it is so sudden

RIC S. BASTASA
Silence

silence is when you simply read the lines of the person you miss and stop right there

you remember the past with no regret you say she was your first love the first penetrating love that you cannot ever forget like an arrow from a bow with a string stretched that far shooting deep into the chambers of your heart that you can hardly breathe you almost die because of too much bliss

you stay there
like a vacant chair outside unkind for the night thinking some more

what if you did not say the words which hurt her you could have been together still happy with each other you could have given her children there would have been laughter and chasing and playing in the room of your house you stare at the window which is open to a place far away

there is no regret
you keep on saying that there are no possibilities anymore for the chains of love to reconnect there is no more bond to a past left to rot in the gutters to your wise judgment

she is dead
and she must be dead forever you are honest enough to admit that at one time you love her and you gave her that love without expecting something in return it is sad

she never loved you
she felt nothing
even with the feeling of the smallest grain of sand facts and facts of a broken heart healing itself with years and years of bitterness it is alright now that you have survived in that faraway land with some autumns and winters and summers and springs do you feel better now? no regrets, bury her and say some prayers too like you were one of the merry men without sighs because their wives left them and they felt it was for their own good and that at the end all will be back at their right places

RIC S. BASTASA
Silence Beacons Silence.

the dark room
has played you with its usual tricks

you smell perfume
you felt heaven
you even told your mother that you have seen the face of God

Until you step outside
the door
which at first held its laughter about you

the world has so much to offer
the mountains' mouth
call you into singing and the sea too

the birds have spoken and the clouds by their mere
silence
even tell a lot more truths come marching in like soldiers bound for the war and it is not a question of perfumes and happiness anymore

issues come like rain and thunder
silence beacons silence.
silence is a form of vindication to the harsh questions in life do not give it the dignity of a mind stay silent

mum

to a recent calamity where dead people teem a once busy street silence is a blanket cover them all
stay
calm do not weep weeping is letting it know that the calamity has won over you
stay
solid like a pavement

a widow may waddle in a sea of depression & sing the same song over and over again asking God that the burden be taken when you see her all her hair turn gray

her eyes sunken
her cheeks hollow like a nut without meat her looks hazy like a foggy road at night in the mountain do not say any word stay unaffected hold her hand and make her feel that you are secure

still in the chosen space of your inner silence

silence is your private space where you are lone ruler of it all.
Silence Is Like A Spool Of White Thread

silence is like a spool of white thread
take the the tip and walk away

at the end
after you have traveled a very long distance you come back and tell me if this is worth it the long silence of the white thread what did it tell you?

you come back.

RIC S. BASTASA
Silence Is Musical

silence has a way of lulling us to sleep
it is the womb of the hush of the falling leaf the whisper of the ground seeps in
a dream without a soundtrack
sunsets and sunrises
in one minute.

RIC S. BASTASA
you're of age now,
you look older to what you actually are.
i do not call upon you to respect me, i do not impose it, i like to earn it, i will not say a word, that i am much better than you, no, i will not show it, i know, i am, when you look at me without a word, i bow my head, courteous to what the world offers me you go where you want to go conquer the world as you may with all might and force and and

disrespect, cutting the trees of power and mowing the grasses of the common people leveling digging graves and showing that you deserve
this
to live like a king of the frogs you croak like Tarzan as i sit still and listen and look with authority you must know that silence is power and noise cannot enslave you must fathom the wisdom of the deepest sea how it rules the depths of the earth without the sound of its waves silence is power and i am making it grow inside my heart

you heard it well enough as you have decided to make your mouth shut.

RIC S. BASTASA
Silence Sputtering....

rain from the roof tops
finding its way to the gutter exiting
at a post of the house near me

sputtering
my silence that hides
in my unutterances

RIC S. BASTASA
Silenced.....

i am done
throwing a bowl of fireflies into a dark sky.

so here i am
watching, silenced.

RIC S. BASTASA
Silencio....

Still on the Insistence of the fading Lights where the boredom is not well Estimated, despite the presence of the Nonsensical, numbness never felt that much Craving for more of the clues for more Inspiration, on such a lovely Opulence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Silent Cocoon

at the end
to make yourself a shield from all those invasive matters of the
heart
you keep yourself enclosed in that same cocoon

always that same same cocoon hard so hard outside

dthis time you promise yourself there shall be no butterfly ending more of keeping the silence of that cocoon hanging upon a twig

under those
dead leaves

RIC S. BASTASA
Silent Screams

the artist in you
even in the silence of this breakfast table still knows how to illustrate the state of our beings

since the words are consumed and the mouth is tired and the neighborhood have been to noisy with their own lives screaming on the bustling sounds of jets, sirens and ambulances the sound of the city
the cries of the slums

you sit with me
get your spoon and poured some sticky choco on the plate

the choco screams
i hear and see it, but just like you i maintain the decorum of silence our code of living life to the fullest till its last drop

RIC S. BASTASA
Silent Stones Peaceful Pond

the stones are silent the pond is peaceful

i have nothing to say
i have nothing to look for

there is nothing more that i shall ever find nothing that i shall want

RIC S. BASTASA
Silhouette Of Pain

I was too young then gazing at the door
when you promised that you will come.

we co-authored love
and we parted.

you got married and i got married too.

so many events make us forget, our paths
did not cross.

i am getting older and
i sit on the same bed gazing at the door when it shall be opened again hoping that it will be your hands again.

i am a silhouette of pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unwanted pregnancies
Women into adultery & men in concubinage dropping out of school into drugs
driving children away from homes resigning from a job when times are hard and job is scarce not compromising with politics having principles keeping integrity
taking care of old people devotion to the catholic church reckless driving killing a pedestrian trusting a friend divulging secrets
not attending a class reunion snubbing a mother-in-law ignoring a reader
loving myself
thinking about the past preoccupied about what happens next taking hypertensive drugs for maintenance loving a wife caring for the dogs
writing poems
listening to a lonely friend pouring out breathing fresh air in the boulevard questioning the meaning of my life asking, where do I go from here?

Hearing tv mass
Cutting off relationships Getting into new ones Giving away old clothes to the poor Buying new clothes
Not keeping your body in shape Saving so much money
Not buying a new car for this year Keeping distance from relatives

&
st ay
i ng

al
i
ve

These are some of the silly things that humans do Sometimes

& lastly, calling other people sil ly

for writing this crap

and reading this

crap

till dawn when nobody

is a ski

ng.

RIC S. BASTASA
Silly Talk, Shallow Talk

what
who where
when

who?
what?
where?
when?

who?
who?
who?

OMG!

RIC S. BASTASA
Simple Blessing

3 p.m. we sit on a chair the table has a tray of ripe guavas four slices of toasted sandwich two cups of coffee with cream italian pasta and a nice conversation lasting for a hour or more the air from the sea blows and refreshes our bodies and then we try your new salad combination:
buco and durian chilled last night.

we gaze upon the passing of 12 years.
nothing changed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Simple Joy

a man paddles a boat on a crystal river the moon shines brightly the head of his beloved rests on on his chest

RIC S. BASTASA
Simple Joys

I go near you and the skin in your arm Just an inch away is too warm for me

I get hot; you do not know it.

We talk and talk
I am giving instructions on some words For you to transcribe

You look at your notes as you scribble
Your pen busily
I am looking at your hair so black so Silky and must be so soft to touch

I get hot; you do not know it.

Then I stop talking and you look at me Again saying, is there anything more sir?
I look at you & you look at me

It was enough mutuality that I seek Just a simple short gaze From you this morning
A meter apart

I get hot; you do not know

All these simple joys you are giving me We are already bound
To our respective chains

We are inside our Respective prisons

I always get hot seeing you Near you but it is better this way

And you will never know about me I get hot always alone
It is you always in my imagination.

RIC S. BASTASA
Simple Matters As Rain And Night

we sit here on top of this floor

seeing stars
and feeling the touch of a dark night

through the air
from the sea

you recline as i stand to go near you
and touch your body with my lips

we close our eyes
as i move closer

scents of flowers
and tastes of salt and sugar and these little sips of something sour
and bitter

our hands move to explore the contours of our bodies

naked before the moon and everything tonight

nature, as always shall be speechless
to the ways of love

to the manners
of lushing lust

mixed feelings of the satiated and the satiator

tonight, yes,
the two of us on this

nocturnal trysts of outbursts and fusions

RIC S. BASTASA
Simple Things

simple things are the simple thoughts to a simple man

like me

simple things like a coin where there is no face of me or you
but it can buy me something to shame me of my poverty and helplessness a simple yawn

i haven't really slept
to the minimum that my eyes need and look at these eyes they are sinking to my sockets

a simple word is all i need and i will always repeat it

'love'

'me'

this is the simple man, let there be no complications
about spelling
or ethics

i am a simple man and morality is too hard for me to understand all i ask is that you must

love me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Simple Trust

you let me go to find myself somewhere unknown and far away
you nod your head
you know that i will come back because you are always my home

RIC S. BASTASA
Simplicity

before a table
a cup of rice and few pieces of fish

you put your knee
near your mouth
as you mold
sticky white rice
with your bare hands

you open your mouth and swallow what you have inorder
to live.

(shall i say
poverty?)

RIC S. BASTASA
Simplicity Of His Art

to demonstrate silence he takes a stone halfway submerges it in water
he leave it there until the moon comes he watches it
with coldness

RIC S. BASTASA
Simplicity Of Just Being Alone

four yellow petals
on a green stalk
no thorns
the sun above
the sea below
a bee and a butterfly in a small garden
three pebbles
and a droplet of water
no tears no sighs breeze
no sound of radio
you sit alone
on a wooden floor beside a door
not waiting for anybody

RIC S. BASTASA
Simplicity Of The Music Of The Spirit attuned i pluck the strings of guitar and music is soothing as usual

my spirit soars
leaving a painful body behind

now it is
the song that plucks the guitar strings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Simplifying Life

back to the basics now when it is hard soften it when is dry
wet it when it is too hot wait

when it is bland
put a little salt

or a pinch of sugar
if you want it a little bit sweet or sour then use a little vinegar

or add some drops of lemon

a cube of seasoning or to appease the tongue put the black pepper or the chili sauce

when things are frozen thaw it

it is just like life when things get rough my dear
be tough

RIC S. BASTASA
Simply Must You Speak The Truth...

tonight,
the air spreads the news
our single witness is the moon on windows that open on lights divine and yet dim skin to skin, no clothes to bother like the way you make love with me when you feel like it say it do not attempt to choose the word euphemism does not work here speak the truth in simple terms

RIC S. BASTASA
Simultaneously

did you see the image?

one is about to leave have all things packed ready for the door and his motorcycle the key on hand
and shoes ready to kick for the final hour

on the other hand
there is someone who is not ready yet still stuck on his personal computer figuring out
what to write
despite the pressure of the world outside him like paper works and family demands and nature's frolicking or the tease
and the appeasement of what tomorrow may bring there is another soul searching for meaning

through the fingers of the hands there is someone indifferent about what this world is all about it could be me but how will you know it back to zero back to square one imagine the image.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sin.....

I've seen greatness
i love it,
i feel the wings
of the eagles of this land

i, decrepit and aging
lowly creature of the cold and slum marvel on the sharp claws of the great minds ahead of me

I've seen them live on the ivory towers of their heads

i come late and people ask the reason why i seem to rejoice
on that predicament

i bring no explanation
i have no flowers in my hands

i believe in myself and though i worship great minds i do not imitate them
their passions and fame are all theirs
they deserve a name carved on marbles
and stones
on bold letters of gold and embellished with chunks of polished diamonds

i repeat
i do not imitate them i am like no other
i am original
like sin.

RIC S. BASTASA
Since It Is Midnight

and since there is no prince who is about to chase you into love, i think i have to agree with you that shoes when they are left as you walk away do not really matter.

now, i am learning from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Since It Was Only A Misencounter

since it was only a misencounter
as termed by you
hence only 64 cops were killed
if it were not it would have been more monstrous than expected

the number may continue to grow
but by then
i have to search
another word
for you

RIC S. BASTASA
Since More Is Given To Me

i just realized that since more is given to me
talents, money,
luck, honor,
i must give more since more shall be demanded this is the law of charity that i must confess (some say that this is pure conceit, i say nothing except to accept this truth)

I am still lucky for God has not yet asked me to surrender
everything that he has entrusted.

I am but a steward of this fortune, Everything simply passes through me
like a bank teller.

RIC S. BASTASA
Since We Are Still Here

since we are still here
we make the best we can to make the stay worth the while we may have longer hours

of boredom
we may have more hours for the small stuff

we sweat all these out small stuff, little things, trivial matters somehow we ask why?
oh, these little things if we do not mind they make the boat leak they make us sick & make the boat sink

RIC S. BASTASA
Since You Also Love Me And I Am Married

then there is only one solution and i agree with
you...

clone me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Since You Are A Friend

then you
must know me

i've been angry and soon i shall be angrier but no i won't for you know that i also know how to get even

RIC S. BASTASA
Since You Are Too Human....

there are always choices we are born to these oceans of choices wave upon wave
we travel to choose then we land and take feet upon the sands
into the gardens
on rocks
and rivers
to the heavens we take the shape of clouds and rain
for we have learned this art to evolve

now tell me who owns us?
tell yourself that, we cannot hear you you are too human and earthbound
you are stuck on the chains of your self-defined treasures that finally bury all your bones soon we shall turn back at you dusts, all dusts that we blow and scatter to all the rivers

if you remember leaves, you shall remember us...

RIC S. BASTASA
Sinful Duet

our sins are like stars shining through the night and so i will not lie to you neither should you about the sins we shared that wake us up after a sound sleep when we start to wash our dirty faces.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sinfulness

it is like dipping my tongue to so much sugar and the time has come that what is sweet has become bitter, it is like burning my whole body with gasoline until i become the remains of myself, ashed, at this moment, i confide to God, you are correct, i should not have liked it at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sing For Me

sing for me
if you wish, sing for me a very lonely song one that fits the darkness of my days the sound of my silence

sing for me
the song of sickness unto death i am burying the dead memories of my loved ones their souls still waiting for their guiding lights.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sing For The Rain

the frogs at three o'clock in the morning
sing
for the rain

i provide the lyrics
'coldness is real
it is lonely in here'

but look at us
and hear us

we are singing still
for the rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sing!

LET THOSE
who have no voice
sing

let the mute talk let the blind see let the deaf hear
let the maim walk

LET THOSE
who have no courage
fight

God tells us so.

RIC S. BASTASA
Singsing...

ang singsing sa kaminyoon wala mag-alingasa
sa dihang ang iyang taas nga kumingking mipunit sa tam-is kaayo nga ubas tupad sa pula kaayo nga mansanitas

RIC S. BASTASA
everyday he makes the choices feeding the bad wolf he chops his heart into chunks and throws them
to the serrated tongues of
sin

at the end he is eaten the flesh of his body sliced and in all the nooks of his room his friends look for him

he is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sipyat

Sipyat ang usa ka bulak nga manirado sa iyang mga gihay inig gabii kay sa kalibotan sa mga lamian ang kagabhion baya maoy pagpangabre sa mga gamingaw nga kasingkasing, mgd dughan nga haw-ang
sa mga bulsa sa karsones, ang pagkagisi sa mga sidsid
anang mga pang-ilalom,
anang mga tabon-tabon.

Sipyat ang mga bulak
sa ilang pangindahay nga di mahikap ang mga pungpong sa kalipay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sister And Brother

why do we have to be vigilant about each other? a little complacent one finds himself defrauded a sister swindling a brother this is not rare

a brother fights for his inheritance that sister takes without being just unable to agree on common terms they bring each other in court not surprising says the clerk we are attuned to this as early as Cain and Abel sibling rivalry is not nil murder is near roots are bitter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sister D....

you were 5 years old thin and sickly,

what you cannot forget
was that birthday

when papa gave you a chicken with white feathers when he let you ride on his horse
to the sea

with five sisters
there is one who gave you a brown sweater to protect you from the cold month of December

know what?
it is really true
you always remember
people who once made you feel
good

their kindness sticks to your skin

even if the seasons
change
even if time passes by
like
the way the snakes in your place
molted their bodies peeling off
from one pain to another.
Sisyphus My Friend

sisyphus my friend
what rock shall we roll
tonight
on this hilltop?

tell me, what size of rock fits my size today, i am big and my shoulders are broad i have a happy disposition i am used to all these burdens and they all seem the same to me i get used to rolling rocks and i like them all they all feel the same to me you see, my friend,

nothing is heavy now nothing hurts
nothing is worth thinking nothing is worth complaining i like everything i like all these burdens everything is a play now a game

a gimmickry, a role playing, a sham, and i am so shocked

why they write about us why they think we are stupid, dumb, and so unjust

come my friend
let us be as absurd as ever

come my friend
let us be great
let us carve our names in stone twin sisyphus, the confused, yet, still so strong...

RIC S. BASTASA
Sitting By My Window

by this window
my world is made and seen

you pass by a lonely shadow

shaded by the full moon

in silence you always pass
by and i sit by this window

seeing you
my loneliness
reflected in yours

this is our world now
you pass by
while i stay always looking what passes away next.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sitting Upon The Stairway

lean upon a rail of the stair
your head
finds a wall thoughts in prison
bars
of the mind

the feeling of
being compressed arrives
this early morning

eyes ache but not squeaking poor set
these tools for that are dependent on light

hands like driftwood land on stair ways
upon the steps of your perceived luck

you will be luckier yesterday was a curse
the stars last night
keep saying

in this little town some roads are still on their way to somewhere
else

a bus flowering with
people
windows all blanks
filled with straight faces
passes you by

you are staying put there will be an absence that they will not ask or miss

dusts from the street layer upon your eyelids and you do not blink

you bite your lips
tasting another flavor of your own blood

RIC S. BASTASA
Sitting, Waiting

sitting, as simple as sitting on a stair you look around through dragonfly eyes from higher places like a cliff overlooking a village closer to cotton clouds patches of hissing
winds up here,
alone,
you sit, sitting is simple, it is not complicated as waiting which is heavier sometimes with a person who is not showing some shadows for the coming, sit,
i sit,
i am sitting viewing a wide horizon, a vast expanse of a field, some white herons heaving leaves blown from dead trees this summer, they fly away from you, they fly away from where you are seated, from your country, you remain sitting,
sit, like a dog to his master telling him to sit,
sit,
it is simple as being yourself alone, not even waiting things end in darkness dust settles finally on the ground after a truck fully loaded with almost everything leaves
the road heading far away from you, you are not waiting for anything you have no time left for waiting, everything leaves and goes away, always everybody utters the word goodbye except these, the rain, the rain, there are many of them, these hordes of rains

they are coming and you sit and do the last thing possible
listen

RIC S. BASTASA
Situationer

cold hands
drooping eyes
heaving sighs
late arrival
sitting on a chair
staring on
the wall
thinking and then undressing
and switching off
the lights
and then
shutting up
inside this
dark niche

come colored
dreams
forget forget

another time another sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
Six

A red hibiscus that blooms
In the morning
Closes, wilts, in the afternoon,
You expect another one of its kind tomorrow,
A china rose,
Your night life,
At the outdoor café, sitting on light fabricated Silver chairs, sipping tea, puffing smoke, sipping Margarita, gazing
Slight stolen looks
At young handsome Men rated per hour,
It is your policy of giving false names and wrong address, They know
What you are doing,
They understand
Your needs & wants
For a fleeting night
A cure for an itch

Momentary piecemeal pleasures, Allusions about a broken love of what used to be,
Illusions of what you could have been,

Momentary
Thoughts, momentary projections, when you make love with your catch, as you puff your smoke to Confuse the ceiling with your gaze of momentary Emptiness,
You are the first one
To leave, after paying the bills, They always pretend asleep, While naked,
As you leave his due on the side table,
You go home on shriveled hair, Driving a red car, Smokeless to the road,
Your cellphone rings,
Your son in his father’s house calls “Mommy, I want to go home” “I am driving, ’you call him, A flash of momentary happiness,
A momentary sadness,
Flip-flopping to your mind,
What are these really, these that meet your gaze for something that should have been permanent,

That red hibiscus, that blooms only for a day,
Is ephemeral,
Like stolen nights,
Like the way your child calls you, because father is always away, “I am in Cebu for a week”, said many times over and over again,

Her stint for a night is ephemeral, Electronic calls are ephemeral,
A happy home, her dream, was sort of, kinda like red hibiscus Ephemeral too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Six Fifteen In The Evening

got to go got a class at 6:30
and it is a long drive to the university

just read your poem about this Adonis thing and the dog barking the wrong tree and the calming down of a car travelling on a narrow pathway which might hit a pole and there might be trouble please, poems have nothing to do with our realities, but just imaginary gardens with imaginary toads in them.

gtg.. i will explain later. there is no volcano erupting it is just about the universal angst of the universal man in his universal brief.

nothing grows nothing dies

RIC S. BASTASA
Six Thirty Nine In The Morning

it is raining
but the way the things are going this morning seems to be so soft and gentle tiny needles of rain like some snowflakes
in my mind

i have not been to chicago or to new jersey or to any place where there is snow where the coldness perhaps strikes at the core of the heart where my loneliness though how far taken to make it disappear like a car running to the farthest road and like a dot dissolving in the horizon shall not perish not even diminish like a number five subtracted from four it is cold even when the sun starts to shine simply because you are not here with me

RIC S. BASTASA
when she says goodbye waives her hand
and sort of cry some tears like she will be missing us all a lot,

try not looking at her let her be
if you must climb some stairs or feed the chickens or busy yourself with the pigs

let us see
if her goodbye is honest if she does not have some crocodile tears if she comes back again on the same
ship taking her away
let us see
actually, i do not have any plan welcoming her back
i have found my life and she is not a part of it anymore even a doorknob or a button to my shirt or a cuff link her hands are never ture.

RIC S. BASTASA
Siya Nawad-An.

wala sa hunahuna nga gisulat ang iyang mga gibati

una, wa siya'y tumong nga kini mahibaw-an sa hingtundan kay sayod siya nga ang iyang ipugas mahimutang lamang sa umahan nga kabatuhan

ikaduha, mga pagbati lamang kini nga mas angayan nga isabwag sa hangin nga sama sa mga dahon ipalid lamang
unya dili na gani mangutana kon asa kini sila
milanding

ikatulo, ang iyang dunggan og mga mata hagbay ra nga nanira momata lang kini aron matulog mamati lang kini aron maalaan nga siya ganahan pang mabuhi sa kataposan ikaw lang man seguro ang misalig gihapon sa kamatinud-anon anang mga pagbati

siya nawad-an.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sketches For A Fine Day

actually i like the sound of brooms sweeping the street today a young girl

short for her age
and brown and bow legged

does her assigned task in the street gathering dead leaves

as i watch
it is a bright day

the street light is turned off a young boy's hand is held by her mother crossing the street waiting for the school bus

a white dog pisses
on the side of the trunk of the mahogany tree

a black car from the right side of the village wheels its way towards the boulevard a young woman with short blue jeans jogs along the green valley the sea is sky

blue and the sun slowly rises from the horizon like a man's face peeping upon a table's edge the long line of trees along the faded street

RIC S. BASTASA
Sketches Of Life

early morning
it will be the same sound of cocks
crowing,

harbingers of a new day

up on the tree
their only guide whether to take the jump
to the ground is the
sun,

she is safe in sleep as i take the usual journey
again
with all the cocks
crowing

the trees have black leaves roads and fences are bold strokes of the Chinese brush from a painter in Vietnam
i remember
his feet are cut

one wonders if we can be whole
again
when the fragile glasses of our arms are all broken

early mornings when the hens are silent

when the ref murmur
a nameless song

when i sound like an empty gong
love emaciated
like a malnourished African child

one exhibits the boredom of his words like one malling without anything in mind to buy
nothing specific except the will to kill time that does not serve any use

at the pasta room where the tea people are not around on one table the two lesbians are drinking beer while the two queers on the other table near the rest room are exchanging some pleasantries of notes
they are not singing but giggling

a man that they call as dark and handsome passes by
it is strange because he is not wearing anything his face is covered with black cloth as though he is bound for the gallows

there is yet no food on my table the waitress is busy biting her nails the mother beside a kid is slapping herself it is strange here and i put some money on the table and leave

i need some air to breathe this world is suffocating.
Sketching My Face From A Mirror using a ballpoint pen i sketch my face from the mirror

looking carefully on every line of my face i let my pen run tracing every year
of my past stopping on some pores and hairs and moles marking some points of emptiness and hiding places and foxholes
and burial grounds and long boulevards
and tunnels
and plains and green fields and deserts and mountains

yhey are all on my face my eyes looking at my eyes not completely with disgust
the parameters and contours
of my past

on such a beautiful face as this how can i ever fail the next time around

RIC S. BASTASA
the shadow is cast
on the wall

such a tall shadow without feet

against the wall it edges itself like a huge wormy creature

not slimy though but snail paced is the loneliness

of this kind of betrayed
existence

a few drops of rain actually tears fall from the sky of her cheeks from the veins

of her heart

from a memory of a madness that she keeps to herself with the city on her heels at the command of the fingertips of the darker master dead unmasking the color of blue neon lights light like pins and needles of pine and silver

very much unlike the hands of the past lover long gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Sketchy (2)

how dare
am i sketching flowers
in her garden
and coloring them
all in blue

she cries

when she sleeps
i change my mind

got some colors
put the stars and a moon

glows of red and sparkles of light
bursting
petals of yellow and orange
sun flowers and lush of grass
green and spreading

she wakes up
and smiles

i am no longer there
into the world
of blue oceans
i have
swam

RIC S. BASTASA
Sketchy Ideas Of A Would-Be Dead Philosopher

it is like a picture
of me
smooth, colored and edited but it becomes too unlike me deep inside
i am chalk and charcoal with some fuzzy fleas crawling inside the locks of my hair searching for answers

it is like converting something so obvious into something too hazy because it becomes more real something felt away from something only thought of

RIC S. BASTASA
Skull Of Life

against the backdrop of an evening
light
lies the skull of a busy life

in the morning some gnats put on the dress of flesh in the helplessness of the veins

the rain water shakes its locks of hair

a butterfly comes here once in a while
as an inspiration of the poetess

meanwhile the rivers sings a song of a triumphant arrival to the sea to the sea to the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Sky

white skies look upon the earth to grasp the tiny reasons
of the sands

RIC S. BASTASA
Skyline

clouds
hang there

dripping rain
us, below
them

the sun arrives
naked

all clothes
gone...

RIC S. BASTASA
Slashed

EITHER/OR

either you're the prey or the predator
the parasite or the host the swindled
or the swindler

either you're the slave or the master

between this either
or is another choice

but in effect
you are just the separator

in other words just a symbol.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleep

slowly i lift this soft blanket

i slide my soul
inside this warmth

like it is my body
going to sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleep And Love

ingulfed by
a sigh
you unleash
sleep

sleep has not cradled
you

you wish
for its hands taking the shape
of a fist

you wait
but when it opens
it caresses
another hair

and so you
persevere upon
a thought
that is drunken

upon a sigh
that takes another sigh

you moan and love
finally remembers

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleep And Snore

the sounds of its steps arrive inside the room on the silence of the blanket white and thick on the hum of the night breeze
from the sea
sleep begins to snore

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleep As Endline.

what we must accept is that turning point of simply remembering pieces of self that we pick along the road and reassembling them again like a robot the jigsaw puzzle is nothing our minds are no longer bothered by a clutter the whistling man is picking daisies along the way counting and plucking each petal like a girl at the end of this waking and walking game what do we really get?

not even memories, they fade like denims what we have is perhaps a scent of dying roses which reminds us of regret and hate and which we finally throw away as trash it does not matter who gives it we retreat at night, ponder upon these things get tired and sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleep Mode

the hands clench,
make a shape of a beautiful fist but do not strike
lay themselves down on the table of wood
beside a lemonade
and then put themselves in a sleep mode

fed up for the day with wars on TV
about the struggle for democracy

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleep Now Baby

sleep now, it is dark,
darker than before,

sleep now, it is silent the night is so silent

silent than ever,
so sleep now, and
dream, and

be inside the colors of your dream

crimson, and skyblue and yellowgreen and lavender and
scarlet and red orange

there is a tree
there, full of
poetry....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleeping

it is alright really to sleep for a while for a day, or even for the whole week, if that is what you really want.

do you really like to take the much needed sleep?
just asking you from the bottom of my heart.
you may. you must if you really need it.
you must if you really feel like doing it.

you may finally decide to die.
it is your life. you wear the desired shoes.
you take the color that you intend.
it too, shall be your chosen death.

we may mourn, but you know that we too have our own concerns.
we cannot mourn for that long.
we have our journeys too.
our own battles, and when you lay there, a dead man on the street as we rush, we may forget to bury you.

it is time that you too must learn to bury yourself.
it goes naturally, as a consequence of your learning how to die.

as others still fight to get their last breath you take the plunge.
into that darkness, into that emptiness.

meanwhile, this saturday, we are set to go on a picnic.
under the blue clouds, we may talk about you.
i am not sure really. perhaps. maybe.

do not blame us. we have chosen life.
we also know how to forgive and then forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleeping On Bad Dreams

the house sinks
down to the bottom of the sea the trees swallowed by mud monsters
the biggest wave comes like a huge tongue of the of the Giant Lizard swallowing kids and houses watching all these you dream of a glass of cold water a light switching on throughout the night

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleeping One Night Under The Cover Of The Sky

lost I finally find myself on tired feet
beside a jagged ridge where its tip
almost touches the night sky
beside the handful of
stars

and then I lie down my head facing up
the widest space of my life
I feel the emptiness
wrap my head and
body
and I feel the wondrous power of God all over me

awed am I
and now on top of the world I hear the hush of the wind whispering finally that with the stars
all around me

I am never alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleeping Time

when their eyes become sleepy like falling leaves
of the evening wind
like windows
closing
like lights being turned off from a distance
i become a bag egg refusing to crack as others wait
what is inside the shell i sort of close my door and continue
what i do and
never stop doing it.
you know what i mean
as you are following what i am doing now. i am not alone in this for you are here with me doing the thing that you cannot stop doing.
i know what you mean
and i know what you are up to what you are at what you want to do
till darkness cracks
to a morning slit of light.
you know me now
for i do
what you do
too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleeping Together And Then Leaving

what is a cold morning to a warm blanket?

what is warm blanket
to our
warmer bodies?

but love is always warmer than everything that is cold and unforgiving

Time lurks and silent as a tiptoe slowly takes everything away

leaving the blanket
cold

colder than the
morning

that keeps the tears and grows
those fears

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleepless In Mindanao Island

the mind is nude
the air is warm inside this darkness
a single lamp flickers... i am sleepless again in Mindanao island the last window is closed.

the monitor lights and blinks and the sound of the keys start to run, fingers playing on words, words making love with thoughts the ecstasy is felt once, twice, and then the rapture of beauty, the dance of grace, the steady trickle of emotions, there is music this poem for you.

love and sleeplessness.
lust and restlessness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleepless Nights

sleepless nights
are always involuntary for who wants not to enjoy the rest God's gift to a busy man earning honestly
his keep

beyond our will sleeps sometimes is cruel refusing to visit
the windows of our
eyes

the whole night you
wake up
recording the night's travails
keeping in touch with the lives of cockroaches
and mosquitoes

it is a cruel world but you have not erred not sinned and so

so you are forgiven.

RIC S. BASTASA
a beautiful horse in the same manner that there is also a beautiful cat a beautiful rat and a beautiful fish, a beautiful woman like another beautiful man, a beautiful mountain a beautiful river
so many things and people beautiful today
like the leaves of the fan
cooling and refreshing
my taste and
quest for beauty.

RIC S. BASTASA
Slip Disc

at C-6
and C-7
the numbness is far beyond the real cause, it spreads at the tip

and you are so confused, things are not working well, and the flesh and nerve swell, it is not a plane or a place not a car

there is the bamboo inserted
between

your spine surrenders.

RIC S. BASTASA
Slow....

slowly
one finds what had long been missing, it is not seen
it is just felt by the lines of the palms
by the tips of
the fingers
slowly one remembers the scent
it is not seen
it is getting inside the nerves of the nostrils
and then one begins to remember
and then
the lips begin to part shaping that lonesome
smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
did we not believe that something that is fast is good, equating it with the benevolence of efficiency? we are convinced and we get carried away and so our nerves are fast our bones do not rattle our feet keep on running and our hands are always on for something something to do as though idleness is death and sickness, as though rest is a mortal sin and death is heinous, our eyes roll and we keep on talking and talking about plans plan A, and if this does not work proceed to plan B, B-1 to B-5, and everyday is always a commotion of beeps and buzzers, and the doors keep on closing and opening, ever shutting up like our mouths meetings and overnight discussions with what to do with this world too, it is never at rest, spinning on its axis and engaging in revolutions.

old age comes with staff and near blindness, arms shaking, feet mossy, and minds getting stoical to doubts and confusions: it is time to stop to slow down a bit, to know what wishful thinking is all about: what if? there are ifs now, and soon there will be a bed of regrets to bury our weary bodies, soon, there will be a silence not anymore wanting to ever speak.

RIC S. BASTASA
Slowing Down A Bit

to calm myself
from this anxiety of the usual procrastination

the sighs are not helping me
some packets of clean air inside my lungs are mere tourists
living the scene after a view

somehow i tell my feet we have to slow down a bit my brain shall empty
everything
like a garage sale selling everything at a cheaper price
all these used and second hand beliefs

i rest upon a chair
put my feet at par with my eyes my toes breathe

and listen to the sensual classics of Beethoven

it is 10:07 in the morning the sun is slowly climbing upon a coconut tree

RIC S. BASTASA
Slowly I Go

snail paced
it will take me nights
to earn
the distance of the bridge
between your two eyes
i am not
rushing my existence in your face savoring every taste every scent
every love
that i have found
in there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Slowly And Surely

slowly but surely and surely is slow is
and slowly is surely is a snail climbing its way up riding upon the merits of its saliva
slowly, slowly,
winning whining
whining winning till all of them drop dead and slowly but surely does the snail take its pace as the rabbit watches upon the tease
of sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
Slowly Slowly

slowly the slow snail slowly climbs the smooth side of the nipa palm on the side of the river slowly, slowly the slow snail takes its sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Slowly You Slay The Monster Growing On The Left Side Of Your Shoulder in time's affluence you become another

tanka poet,

slowly you slay the monster growing on the left side of your shoulder

very much looking like you

RIC S. BASTASA
Slug And Pearls

my tongue
is a blithe spirit
free bird

finding finally a little resting place
from its tiring flight

between those tiny spaces of your lovely
teeth

you are pearls
i am slug.

that clam in you
flesh and danger lurking if you suddenly close i could
die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Small Is Beautiful

small is beautiful
black is also beautiful

be proud for you are small and he is black

I'll be between you both i am medium sized and i am brown

RIC S. BASTASA
Small People

we are the small people we take the size of the dusts and termites
down to the minute cells the virus
and the neurons...
we have the capacity to hurt without your knowing

so be cautious
try using the microscopes before you say you are taking control

we are the small people
we know you but you do not know us

RIC S. BASTASA
Small Time

small time, you call it small time writing
is small time, there is no money in writing, like a politician, look at him, he does not write, someone writes for him and he gets the prize the money
the pot
the jackpot
and look at you
you keep on writing
and writing
and writing

oh la la
poems, fit for a woman her limited mind her gullibility
her passion for words and words and words her imagination

and look at you
poor man, poor, poor, poor what you give
to this world, what are you giving to this world it is not even a flower just a poem for her, and you claim that you are winning her heart?

RIC S. BASTASA
Small,

for under your feet
you do not see the ants until you feel the sting of their bites, the bee above your head

will its buzz
be enough
for you to mind its
existence?

a flower has no mouth a mountain has only its belly a wind simply whispers the sea as usual have no feet the clouds have no hands when will you ever mind them?

until something happens in Tokyo you must have uttered the word

sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Smallness....

believe
that you are
the sun

let me just be a pebble
under

or a grain of sand
or a paramecium

one day
you will discover how is it
to be small

in our journey towards the unknown
with the other galaxies

polka dots
in the universe....

RIC S. BASTASA
Smile

smile,
i've seen your world fall upon your face
your body bent
like weakened Atlas
this world is too heavy to bear
only if you know how leave it
let it roll upon other people's back get away from it
join me
i am air, floating, i am like air drifting, i am an eagle sightseeing
looking for my prey
my breakfast today
i am the rain
i am whatever i am
because i believe it that way because i can be whatever i can be a matter of choice
a decision to be light
lighter than a red feather
brighter than the crescent moon steady like a rock of Gibraltar
so temporary like
dew.

RIC S. BASTASA
Smoke

smoke from the chimney rises to the sky
and then gone

like us, did you not notice?
we are from here this heart and then in pain we rise up
we mix in space
there, do you see still us?

i do not see me anymore

i am fog dissolving in the morning i am mist dissipating on glass i am smoke rising to the sky from the chimney
and then gone....

RIC S. BASTASA
Smoke, Alcohol And Talk

something in us
feels the need for smoke for alcohol
for talk & more talk
to keep us
sane and going

it is not at all times
that talk is there
so we compromise
with smoke and alcohol

we must not expect much from talkers

they too need to talk
somewhere
and with someone else
other
than us

smoke gives you
the idea
about how is it to float
and be gone

alcohol
illustrates the value of loss
the need to take in something without
gaining anything

RIC S. BASTASA
Smooth

i want words
to be smooth

smoothly said
and smoothly
understood

like rum sliding
in my throat directly inside
my belly

smooth as tiles
on the floor
effervescent as your breath in
my mouth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Smooth....

you squirt like a squid holy squirt, black splash to a green sea

you squirt everything like a filthy squid everything to the greenish portion of the sea

all the anemones sigh sea corals dance
all spawns of womanhood spread all over the vast green

on the surface the object of your desire is half-nude fishing a dream

you never for once told him about your hidden song

he is smooth, cool, able bodied all the while wanting to catch you and take you home
alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Snail Paced Ironies Of Love And Marriage

A man plays with love like a kitten to a ball of thread

the thread rolls a length that a kitten cannot locate and then a man finds love but there is nothing to bond with just as the kitten cannot relate a bone to that of the puppy so does love and permanence so does a lifetime and a spark come to terms with and life crawls on

upon a slime and a stalk snailed, hard covered, slow mindlessly.

RIC S. BASTASA
Snakepit

when you find yourself inside a snake pit
you can not just be naive to be bitten and even swallowed by another
snake
you become a snake
yourself and bite
as many as you can

this is the law of the survival of the fittest snake and when you emerge as the victor

go back to your form
coy dove, white feathers, lovely beak
gentle claws

RIC S. BASTASA
Snap

shadow running
no shelter
bang! bang!

RIC S. BASTASA
Snorkling

as she drops her body to a clear sea water

on refracted weeds and blue and silver fish as she takes into her mouth the breathing apparatus he looks at her with so much pity i know there is no more love he could have let her go to the depths of death but we were there looking at him we are not angry, we are indifferent we snorkle to see beauty and not ugliness we keep on breathing

we all want to be alive despite the storm.

RIC S. BASTASA
Snorkling At Crocodile Island

you jump into the sea with a wish to sea the world of the fish blue and green and some bubbles

and slimy and slim
and slippery
to hold

you open your eyes
to the world of seaweeds and sea urchins

you find something different now the world where you do not utter a word to describe
if something is beautiful you find something's shut

up
your ears and nose and mouth

you open your eyes
to the possibility that in the world so beautiful as inside the sea

you need not have a nose a mouth, two ears

because beauty need not be said they can only be seen

and contemplated upon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Snow

i haven't felt and seen snow evern once perhaps in movies or on tv but with you this evening cold and closed and not giving in to my touch and conversation looking at someone else from this table where we are seated, i think, i know what snow is what snow storm is there inside your mind

RIC S. BASTASA
inside that cheap apartment you sit on the chair facing a dining table a bowl of oatmeal

a cup of coffee
three asparagus sticks sea noodle cup ready for lunch crackers and biscuits for dinner

Mozart is played as you look beyond the glass doors and windows facing a clean sheet of snow covering the path leading to the gate and the road on the other side of the house

Facebook is open and you just take a peek on those that drop by and say hello

you write a line saying,
'dear friend i am editing some pictures...' taken last night at the party and you will be emailing some of the happy pictures back home those with the smiles of the big snowman it is another lonely night you want to kill yourself but you just can't because some people who love you wait for you back home as you promised

'whew! The pictures are simply out of focus!'
your hands keep busy
always on some other things to keep them out from that barren desert
'Cool! ' you make a comment on the Friendster picture of a friend hugging a new boyfriend in Hongkong.

It is so cold. It is so lonely.
But it does not kill you somehow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Snow Storm

i cannot write it
there is simply none here.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Be It...

it is nice to be drunk
i know that feeling no hesitations, no restraint what is there is that flowing feeling, that well wished spontaneity,

and so here i am
drunk of wine
drunk of you
drunk of love drunk of practically everything and i am writing

do you feel it?
do you feel love gushing forth like
the wind
from one window to another from one space to another space to the world to the milky way to another galaxy

you hear a sound
it is so sweet
you feel life
it is pulsating in your veins you taste love from one lip to another from one thigh to another thigh you do not care about names anymore or what place is this you float like a spirit you sense this freedom this being anywhere

you are alive
and that is the only thing that matters...

RIC S. BASTASA
So Contagious

i only have to smile at you

oh i become one contagious guy

i only have to begin it by smiling at you

RIC S. BASTASA
So Estranged

so estranged are we, on this outrage exchanged, we trek on this range less the sage powerless, breathless, penniless, even hopeless thriving mess, we suppress, in disgrace, lots of stress we transgress, and confess, and nonetheless on hydraulic press, yet so strange, i wonder how, with so many misfortunes & miscalculations we survive, we revive, we are vilified: we are the masters of innovations we mustered the complications and recovered our reputations.

RIC S. BASTASA
So How Many Women Do I Really Have In My Life?

i was never lonely then.
to have all the many women in my life.

first, there was this Lady Luck,
then Mother Earth,
then the Chairwoman of the Jury then the Girl Next Door, the Most Holy Virgin that i kneel before and Pray, did you hint that i must face the Goddess of Peace?

RIC S. BASTASA
So I Can Be Full Grown Again

i meet them only once and miss them more than many times
in my mind how can i begin to get rid of each face
that clings to my heart like leaves
that climbs to the mind like vines
i am happy
to love and be a loser
once again
to such a pain as beautiful as a longing
as sad
as shedding skin
so i can be full grown again

RIC S. BASTASA
So I Can Be What I Must Be

i never got what i want never had what i love

i'll put it on record in caution of the cord

the days are coming fast meet me in the face and go away a few days more and soon this will be over

it is good
for i hope for somewhere else for someone not like myself and for someone not like yourself who knows? life and death will always find a way so i can be what i must be.

RIC S. BASTASA
So I Chose Finally Me

how i wish i could write the simplest lines.
perhaps in a poem,
the one that gives me joy in something less.

it could have been just the word
'you'
but you are so complicated like an epic, and so at the end,

RIC S. BASTASA
So I May Forget You

so i may forget you
the one that i truly love the one that persists in time like a moss to a stone i have decided to be with so many and so shallow and so fast swift, supersonic ball of fire.

alacritous,
fleet footed bird
high up in the air
and diving headlong
to the ground
dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
So It Will Be Taxes For The Meantime

so these weeks and for more other weeks perhaps it will all be about taxes: allowable deductions, exemptions and assessments, and avoidances and perhaps evasions
be careful
be careful
do not be too gross in setting aside the poems from those stack of notes and in depth-studies something might go wrong in your stock of metaphors you need balance

have poetry during breaktime and some more poetry before going to sleep but i find poetry more useful before i start my day with taxes and new laws and circulars and even before i bang my gavel

the poems seem to make the reminders: this is life, this is humanity, there is God and every man and woman and children are his children and flock and friends

be careful
be careful

your poems shall judge you in time and their Furies shall soon come and pull your hair or the nymphs shall take you to the green valleys by the side of the cool rivers your conscience speaks to you
at night
your pillows your blankets soon they will speak what time is it? it's still 6:36 in the morning here. you see? i know that you know that i am true to what i am saying.

So Long Lonesome

let me say
You did not find God
He finds you,
so long
lonesome
God loves you
much better than you
do.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Many Essences Have Been As Always Forgotten…..

be content
with what you have

i, too, it is more than enough
that i
still leave

i have to close my eyes
to know once more that i am
breathing

so many essences have been
as always
forgotten…….

RIC S. BASTASA
So Many Loves....

such beautiful eyes
riding upon a very sweet smile

a boat arrives thru the river of my love into the shores of my heart into a home

i must be in love but why to so many at the same time? i doubt now, these lips keep on talking about love, and love and love, my heart used to brag, love is only once, the rest are but shadows that on a very clear day, disappear.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Many Poets

so many poets
so many poems
all popping up like mushrooms after the lightning and thunder no one comes to see no one comes to say the mushrooms are not so white not so good

so many poems
so many poets
the readers are few, the readers are lesser

but what can you do?

what do you expect?

well, i am just writing my diary, and i am the reader who reads it myself to ease this pain, to let myself know that with all my unrequited loves, i still dare to write and exist.
and i don't really care.

so many poets
look at these poems they all look and sound the same

RIC S. BASTASA
So Many Silences

it is no longer that question whether one is happy or not it is a matter of just meeting moments using the eye

feeling those hands and then as usual making goodbyes it is a routine repeating one after the other meanings rubbing elbows with other elbows useless chatter empty promises rolling stones nothing mossy temporary wetness sunny days cool shades eyeopening nothing pleading

washing out letting go social cliches drained brains broken hearts repairing visions living more making more beginnings candle lights and then the pretenses of so many silences.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Many Things Beg For Understanding

so many things
beg for understanding so to arrive at that place you draw a map
like some hands of trees veins of leaves it is like writing a word to capture a bird
hoping that in touching the feathers
you will understand each other's longings
this is what writing is
all about
but then when you
keep an accounting they begin to worship
you: this not knowing

is itself
amazing.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Many Things To Do.....

do not say that you have nothing to do, there are so many things to be done, to be fixed, do not kill the clock, its hands are very much alive like ours

do not silence its ticking, lest matters become unbearable. The rope and the tree, the blades of ggrass where dew await for the coming invisibility again, glitter.

even in sleep our minds keep on going, our eyeballs play a certain rhythm of the waves that arrive on the shore of ourselves,

foaming....

RIC S. BASTASA
So Many Things To Write

but all i got
is lesser time,
a bad neck,
a painful back,
and frequent
blackouts.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Much Depends

so much depends
on the pink sprinkler
beside
an iron pump
glazed with rust
where the black hens and the red
roosters bump

RIC S. BASTASA
So Much Depends As I Once Remember It Then

so much depends
upon a swirl
of paints
of yellow
and green
and violet

so much depends
upon the silence
of the plow

so much depends
upon the farmer
still

so much depends
upon your vanishment.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Much Depends On This Experience

one night when you arrive home it is you that opens the garage you have to step out of the car and expose yourself to this inevitable coldness of a nightfall no one is home

tonight

when you open the door using your own duplicate key you switch on the light

no one is home tonight the garage and house is now well lighted you close the door and all the windows you go straight to your bedroom

&
switch on the air-conditioner you feel the arrival of a very cold packet of wind from the tip of your feet and it arrives like a jackal as you begin to imagine it to be like the one that you read in those horror books it howls so loud trying to break the tympanum of your ears and it is going to bite you with its sharp eyes and teeth but there is something so wrong with you:

you are not afraid, you do not mind jackals, and now you are ready to bite this crazy one you like this cold, and you smell the frost you lick it

there is something so wrong with you:
you are aroused, and you do not like to sleep at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Much Reality Is Unreal....

when i first saw it and i was young then, young as
uncut as i was once,
it was like i was sucked and swallowed and i could not find myself where i was,
i was lost in the whirlpool of
the recent and the unaccounted,

i did not regret when it first happened,
i was caught and i could not just escape and i loved it when i was in that prison
it was exciting and i was like a Pepsi cola bubbling

then i frequented the occurrences it was like bathing in the river washing myself, drying and diving and retrieving myself
again and again
as though i am
both bait and hook and trap
i was always caught and i did not mind it
i simple loved what was happening
as an oppression
of the corporal works of
'love'

then i got older
older and older and then these matters are nothing but works of art, literature, and mumbo-jumbo there is nothing magical anymore and come to think of it i feel so guilty that this reality does not make me live

so much of it
so much of the reality of pain and regret and guilt
is so unreal.

RIC S. BASTASA
to be honest with you so much of my time has been taken by this foolishness
so much effort
squeezing my brain and stretching my bones and pinching my ears and biting my fingernails this poetry
but what can i do?
i am hooked to its whims and caprices it imagery and logical imagination

got no regrets somehow i still love this 'imaginary garden with real toads in them'

RIC S. BASTASA
So Much Time...

time has become a big room complete with amenities, there are windows, light from the sun comes freely, and the floor shines, the doom jams strong, all framed, there are lots of things to be done and with so much leeway, the problem is the bed is so seductive, and one is confused what to do, what to begin with.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Much Worrying As To What Happens To My Inheritance When I Die....

what i like
for the moment

for the moment
is this
favorite dog of mine curling under my feet
soft brown hair touching my toes
do i have really to worry about the future mother?

RIC S. BASTASA
So Often

we are caught empty handed and time laughs and then asks: what have you done to your collar? it is destructive of your neck it is choking you and you still say you like the color of the buttons we are caught so afraid and we are silent about this and time begins to frown and leaves us all askance, and we ask what fraudulent creeping scorpion has time become

it bites and takes a portion of our limbs but then we also learn this kind of game and time confronts us we know what it will say and we are ready with our silence too

after all
time was never a friend all along it has always been a foe giving us that feeling of slippery eels those thorny porcupines those roses that enthuses us only for a while then we are again reminded of the wilting and the passing away of what we think belongs to us

RIC S. BASTASA
So Soon

So soon
he shall find his way to the top of the mountain too
just like you
but this time
he will not promise
anyone
that he will fix whatever is crooked
and misshapen
on the horizon

he will sit there
take his deep breathe
and watch
all the phenomenal

RIC S. BASTASA
So Tenderly And So Lovely

the saddest day
of your life
is when you rise
early in the morning
doing all those usual things and chores until the sun had risen up from the faces of those mountains and you have not noticed the hidden magic
of its thousand fingers of soft light
caressing those mountains and hills
passionately kissing
all those tendrils, so tenderly and so lovely

RIC S. BASTASA
So There Is No Us Really

my heart longs for your love.
i wait like a stranger waiting for the next bus to take me out of town perhaps for another vacation where i may find myself again to discover some hidden joys, to make my skin ready for another peeling for some new feelings perhaps love, or desire, or lust, but whatever that is, my heart still longs for your love, i had you and i did not have enough of you and then you said no, this is enough, this is arriving us at nothing. I let you go, you ask for freedom. My arms since then are as empty and so light as floating balloons taking the chances on air. I know you see all of them bursting.
You feel the essence of my silence.
Tell me what is it?

It is about a patient love, like a stranger waiting for another bus to take it out of town.
Still finding more chances to find you back again so my arms may not be as light as a floating balloon taking its chances for an upward air.

RIC S. BASTASA
So There Will Be Eternal Peace

the war rages on many will still die
i grieve
but only for a while and then i wish

and this is something which i myself rebel that with this unceasing conflict
i finally wish that all will perish
and that no one shall live to start another war
again
so there will be eternal peace

RIC S. BASTASA
So They May Jump And Kill Themselves

I am sick
And tired
I let go
My dreams
Resting
On the Cliff
so they may jump and kill
themselves

RIC S. BASTASA
So This Is All A Game

So this is all a game
I put my name tag on You look at my face
Complete

And you are there lurking From a balcony
Looking at me

I am real. I am the specimen.

You are all wearing masks In a balcony of Darkness

I am real.

And you all laughed so hard

"How can this real guy be so stupid?"

The bastards are still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Tired But Not Upset

some friendly metaphors fly like tiny butterflies all yellowish hover over my hair

i am tired and they make a show of acrobatic letters and flowing words like a cool stream beside a hill

i am not upset because all i need is sleep.
and they understand
that sometimes

i may not write about them and their unusual existences
like an aberration of light
a rarefaction
of lengths and a contortion of shapes and they leave but i whisper to one of those whose wings are too small for its fragile body

perhaps, soon.
soon.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Trivial...A Promise

tomorrow at nine o'clock in the morning he shall have his ears cleaned of wax,

he shall buy an new mouse and a new keyboard for his private computer

he will not talk about his malady that will do nothing but destroy his new day.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Unlike Me.....

there was a time when you are so in love but you did nothing

there was that time when someone was so in love
with you
doing everything and yet just the same you
did nothing

it was more of letting things be, letting people be, letting all come and go on the basic premise of
numbness

you do not mind, you have nothing to do with everyone with everything

i envy you, you are perfect to me, you are never wounded firm stone, nothing to do with rain or shine

i envy you, so unlike me:
wounded, and bitter.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Very Young

pretty young one
you know how it will be soon when you grow old without us

pretty young one
you will know how this journey will be when we start to sail without the rudder

pretty young one
what will you be when i am dead and gone?

oh very young one
what will you leave us next time?

RIC S. BASTASA
So Weary And So Dedicated Sleeping

it is this painstaking
choice of words
for a nice handiwork
knitting some fairies
in some mathematical colors of threads some butterflies
and flowers in bright colors using strictly the mandate of numbers

a painting in cloth and threads taking her
time when she is finally hypnotized
falling into a deep sleep inside a room
where she is alone
on a dim light
of her loneliness

i open the door
to check on her

i see the handiwork of God a woman so indulged so engrossed
in her art
so weary
and dedicated

sleeping.

RIC S. BASTASA
So What Are You Doing With Your Life Now?

She says

She stares blankly on the wall
She is busy Counting the lamp posts on the streets
She is so busy
She thinks God is preparing something Grand for her and she is so busy Too preparing something for God Who prepares for her.

I am amazed
I ask her

"So, did you stare long enough on that blank wall Was it really blank? Did you really stare?
What made the wall so blank? Is the stare really Worth making on a blank wall?
And how many lamp posts have you counted?
Is the street filled with lamp posts?
How is God? When will the preparation last?
How are you doing with God? Is God busy too?"

She is a little bit understanding to my way of thinking.

"There you are making a poem again. You have never changed."

She said.

RIC S. BASTASA
So What Do You Expect From The Title?

the poet writes the title
first,
he is the messy kind that writes whatever comes first even though
literally each word
seems not to be significant to the next one

practically like strangers coming together inside a train whose common ground is only to go somewhere
else

nothing like care, or affection
they merely stand there and wait
and then take their respective exits

he writes: so what do you expect from life?
changing it later:

so what do you expect
from the title? trying to conceal the essence of his question

and then he keeps on writing like a lost kid looking for its mother who seems to be very busy with her own
kind of obsessive
compulsive shopping
and then you arrive at the end line which says: hey why are you stalking me?

changes it later to something courteous: do i know you?
are you following me?

do you like me? funny, but sometimes it is true

RIC S. BASTASA
So What Is The Gender Of Your Computer?

The men's group decided that 'computer' should > definitely be of the feminine gender ('la computadora'), because:
> > 1. No one but their creator understands their internal logic; > > 2. The native language they use to communicate with > > other computers is incomprehensible to everyone else; > > 3. Even the smallest mistakes are stored in long > > term memory for possible later retrieval; and > > 4. As soon as you make a commitment to one, you find > > yourself spending half your paycheck on accessories for it.
> > (THIS GETS BETTER!)
> > The women's group, however, concluded that computers > > should be Masculine ('el computador'), because:
> > 1. In order to do anything with them, you have to turn them on;
> > 2. They have a lot of data but still can't think for themselves; > > 3. They are supposed to help you solve problems, but half the time > > they ARE the problem; and > > 4. As soon as you commit to one, you realize that if you had waited > > a little longer, you could have gotten a better model.

The women won.

RIC S. BASTASA
So What? ....

yes farther
is always the greener pasture, gotcha
but what?
when you write about it it is great and they clap their hands am so confused
when i start to talk about
they all leave
one by one
like trickles of
rain
until i am left
with nothing
but your footsteps
on mud

can't figure out
why?
is there is something wrong with the way
i part my hair?

RIC S. BASTASA
So What? So What?

so it was the red pepper that fell off
the salad bowl,
not the green one,
so then?

what? am still confused
what is art?

RIC S. BASTASA
So Where Is The Sunflower Poetess?

you will have a chance seeing the sunflower
poetess
only
once,

a glimpse
you love it but you can only love it once when it faced the sun so bravely chanting

singing her one and only song then she goes away like the sunflower
wilting

bowing to the ground surrendering her many seeds falling scattering

it is only the rain that comes to bring her back to life again her seeds sprouting not just with a mother song but children's poems

all along.

RIC S. BASTASA
So Where Will You Start?

you do not start at the end you will not be understood but you insist to start from the end itself it will be interesting you say and they will follow you through confused
they will mind every word because they cannot understand it is the end
you say is the most important the most dramatic part and that is all that they want so you start from there and end from the very beginning inverted
but not really perverted not for the fun
but for the run, now i understand you like rashomon
more arguments shall come like battered wives complaining about their husbands like children lost finding their home in the streets like some of us wanting to start with nice endings always finding hard to end with new beginnings for a start
but indeed, there is nothing that is so hard that cannot really be learned

RIC S. BASTASA
So Why Bother? .......

we always feel short of
time
this feeling that we have not really done
enough
that something is left undone that someone is left out uncared

yet if we see how we simply talked and talked and sit by the cafe watching time pass us by we could have realized how inconsistent
we have become

we all wasted time and then we tell ourselves we lack time
as usual we do it making fools out of our failures and then justifying, 'well at least i am happy. I always have time for myself.'

let time pass, we do not own it anyway.
it is meant to be with itself, so why bother?

RIC S. BASTASA
So Why Should I Think About You?

i think of you when i write this and then i keep on writing and too keep on thinking still about you what we did and what we did not finish doing and what i think about what you think when you were doing it to me.

there is this orchid with white petal on the bark of a narra tree and there is this caterpillar lost upon the luscious leaves and i understand perfectly that a home can be a consumption

that relationships are rituals of a feast on something so delectable and delicious within the mantel of our beings did you know that we were like eating our souls together and that we like the food that we serve upon each other that we forget that we are half consumed and about to be gone into nothing?

i keep on thinking of you and then i was eating you like bread to my mouth like ice to my tongue and then it was sort of late for me to know when i have already consumed you and then you have become nothing to me. at the time when my mouth closed like a door at the end of the happy hour

and that is the time that i tell myself i have forgotten you.

Like food in those cheap eateries, the taste no longer teases me.

So why should i think about you?

RIC S. BASTASA
So William Is Not Dying

i have long told you, a poem is detached from the poet

the stranger talking to you might have been talking about another stranger too

be detached
like a mirror
and yet so immersed
in the image of your own face

the realities we write are lies behind
the realities of others

william has just told you the reality of death and he pretended it was him in that coffin surrounded by friends, parents

and children
and lovers
could be just all in his mind but the truth
has been told
and you
received them
fairly verily

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Are Back Reading This Poem Again

I see you sitting alone in a coffee shop Two cups of coffee now, just to pass the hours away Waiting for nobody
You pretend
Busy with your wireless laptop Typing some words
Looking at the road beyond the glass walls Cars keep passing by Not one is stopping Shall you pretend some more That any of those cars is the inspiration Of your write-up for today?
Okay, you are into advocacies for women For the underprivileged
For the kids
For those who do not know how to smile But let me suggest
As you read this poem
Back to my arms again
This time
Take more time with me
In this game
Of loneliness this passion for boredom Have compassion to both Of us-lonely souls searching meanings In laptops in coffeehouses on more Cups of coffee

I am taking the mug, it is bigger And its holding effect is a little longer And some cigars this time.

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Are Leaving?

on to a series of song
g for the night

tomorrow you shall leave our country

you bring your guitar and beautiful songs with you to the foreign land and there you shall suffer more loser!

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Boil Down To Money

how long did it take you to boil down
all about
you
things and people to money?

was it long enough
to find yourself
sitting on a bench
and then
think
of green bucks
and tell yourself

this is the real world why did they not
tell me
in school

why was not it studied
as a curriculum
in the university?

why did we study
religion
or ethics
or philosophy

when

when when everything is said and done
it is after all the money that matters most of all the more i have that more i want to have all these money money talks

and so here you are listening, got some you say, and it will take a lot of sentimentalism to part with some bucks, and mind you, just like them all of them in this world no one gives money without something in exchange

you see,
that is the truth that you have discovered and you are sticking to it boil all your sentiments and values and let things simmer down money, money

the flower of all evils, now smell it

and think for a while what life
will it give you

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Don'T Like The Sour Man?

so, here you are again, feeling sorry for the sour man the one who does not know how to stretch his face to make a smile
the one consumed by the ghosts of his own worries that never came the one who stays in the nook afraid,
you do not like this sour man scared, not easy to handle, expensive to the pocket
you do not find him
a good company to your sports
laughter
and happy-go-lucky
merry, merry, merry,
round and round
telling people hey life is short why not just enjoy every minute of it savor the moments lick every sweet dropp of life like honey to your finger finger licking good till the last dropp till the supply lasts take today, today, today, why worry about tomorrow oh, you do not like the sour man and you are angry at him well, it is sad, the sour man has conquered you.

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Feel You Do Not Like To Work something stopped when you said it could be the clock of my life or the chimes of some bells

in my fingers
when you said your lines, that you do not like to work because the haiku and the tanka are all there like children waiting to play with you they want to be written by nobody but you, just you, like some animated kites wanting to fly from the strings of your hands now having air and tails

i feel the same, i see this river bed drying and i am like a dam filled with water wanting to burst and flood
the earth
with poems
i am this cracking lips and inside is my tongue wet so wet with this fluid wanting to spit what i have inside me but i am not that true to this calling

the dam is fortified and my flood did not happen and my tongue likes to sleep tired and so afraid swallowing everything
and so
nothing revolutionary really happens time can wait, i need sleep, i need to eat, and i need a little rest and silence tonight again with the uncomplaining stars

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Have Not Really Danced With Me to make a poem is to dare to be naked and then dance like a tongue of fire

i dance naked before you and you watch me with all pleasure i am dancing in an island of light while you keep yourself concealed in the dark i know that you like going naked too and dance like the way i keep myself alive at night but you have restrained yourself as you continue watching me in a trance in the dark you are naked too and your spirit is dancing with my body

but what can you do
it is you who have cut your feet yourself and so you have not really danced with me

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Have Read Merli Alunan's Poem

i know what merly wrote about how to search for the man of your life there are many choices and she enumerated them one by one which accounts for the length of her lines the witty one that may slap you the dumb one that may embarrass you the fat one that may only love your cooking skills and the thin one that may offend your menu and the scheming one who may look at your account and the real one, the one that loves you who may have died many years ago do not worry so much about looking for him if he is alive he will soon come to take your hand in marriage and your dreams of living happily ever after may soon come true do not force yourself on the recent one in cyberspace he may not be the right one whose name is 'soul mate' and forever your life may always be half-empty half-full

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Like To See Things Upside Down?

let us try how does it feel when the clouds become the sea when the stars
become the fish

oh you will like it.
when you exchange
places and forms
with the gods

they won't.
they never will.

so just try seeing things as they really are.
be human and wait for your turn.

for the meantime let us eat dinner and watch the next episode of our favorite show.

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Tell Me

so you will tell me God so loved us but he is no longer in speaking terms with us for we have offended him since the time of Moses. so you will tell me that all i have to see is the grass, the beautiful flowers along my way, the blue clouds, the sun that rises without failing, the moon that comes out without trying,
the rivers flowing, the sea constantly giving us the waves, the fish and fruits and animals and money and things and work and house all these through these and by all these God is speaking.

must i disagree, i know, you will not hesitate to crucify me, and put me into damnation, as this heretic to be burned in electrical stakes.

i don't know. who ever killed God? can man kill God? I don't know.
into softer things, into higher things, into the cool shades of heaven.
into the comforts of belief, into the fold of faith.

where do i leap from here? Speak to me my God, i have big ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Were Told To Just Sit There And Relax.

i've read everything then and found a map of those disasters which until now we cannot speak with candidness for fear of another disaster so we speak in codes, like,
a disaster is not really a disaster, it could be something else which we understand by just the two of us, for i am here and you are there and we meet here in this kind of decoded disaster, like a friend need not really be a friend, but a mastermind, of sorts, and going to the beach to take a dip, is not the sea we mean, as it is something else, and this is what is happening now.

you read the same paper authored by an unknown guy, who of course, we both really know who he is, and it is too disastrous, a monstrosity, of a line of keels, and calibers, of course, you know who and whom, who fell from the stairs and who kept the key to this tunnel of violence.

those who authored it are right behind you, carrying the cross and the candle, and speaking in tongues, and you look at them from behind as others say the impossibility of it all, but now you are convinced of the disaster, and the authors of the same.

it is not time yet, so you were told to just sit there and relax.

RIC S. BASTASA
So You Will Know Where You Will End

I stopped being nice
To be happy for once
And so today
you will find the word
No
in my dictionary,
I will keep things
Short and sweet
I won’t gabble
I won’t give you
A rope to hang you with I won’t engage
And apologize
Or even explain
I won’t give you the Fuel to use against me
And I get my 'no'
In quickly
I set the marker Right from the Beginning
So you will Know where You will end.

RIC S. BASTASA
So You’re On A Mission Again

Where is that I do not have to ask
Why is that I do not have to ask
When is that I do not have to ask
I am not interested
I am simply disinterested I am not giving attention To you and your excuses

Who is that?
It is all about you
Yes it is all about you For whom is that?
You tell me it is for them
The poor and the underprivileged The marginal and the oppressed

I will ask you again For whom really is that?
And I will give
The correct answer

It is still for you
It is all about you

You you you you
You you you you
You you you you
You you you you
You you you you

It is never about me
It was never about me
It was never about us
There is no me
And there will never be us.

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
So You'Re Here

hi, you ready for the next drink?
a couple of minutes
hi, (silence) got to make this out a triumph for anything was it?
i guess not take your time will you do me a favor
hmmm
millions, ... there is a baby, , , would you mind going out
again
and saying that you are mistaken?
take it easy
i'll tell.
(goes out and closes the door) steps are coming dark room, narrow alley, white floors,
motors running.
i mean it baby
you're the only one.
thank you.

RIC S. BASTASA
So?

...oh, the rat says she has her own world to share with all the twists and short stories to tell but nothing
about poetry
lest she be nothing but a second rate trying hard copycat

she is honest
and means every word and means that what she says is her own world shared the messy room? the missed momma the hardwork in the office all these stuff

on the other hand
i still assert that we too write for other people empathize with them and they too become sources of our own literature a shared world
a study
a way of putting our own feet in their own shoes

and i tell her too
i am missing
i lose myself in the world of other people and find myself
under the moon hanging its face on the twigs of a tree
that i too feel the shadows of the wind
hear the voices of the desert attentive
to the protests of the waves
of the sea
the rage of the storm
the implacable
chatters of those who never want to die
as early as the bud that the child nipped.

RIC S. BASTASA
So? Better Not Do It

what you do today
like putting a black ribbon to your red hair
soon
they will know it and they will propagate you like a vine in the air
and people will believe because it is true you put a black ribbon in your red hair and you eyelashes wave like a storm in Taiwan

if you do not want any talk any scandal in your red hair there is still one important precaution

don't do it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soap

you wish i were true to every word i wrote in my poems like sadness that i must be sad when my poems talk about sadness

like separation and disgust and pain that i must suffer with the poems i write that i must have despair and pain too
and disgust
for every word of disgust written in every word in every line

how cruel of you
how cruel of truth
how can i justify my death when i speak only of death and in the very poem where i write the word
death

there is soap there is this box of untruths in pandora and when i open it they must spread and you may refuse to believe me again

but it would be very cruel of you to make these poems all these poems be my life my only life and lived and day by day lived in accordance with the mouths of these poems

carapace is the word, it is like i am putting my feet in another person's shoes

then i write, and i could have written about this word: happiness joy, bliss
ecstasy, light, and amazing glory

i choose not to,
i think, i have too much of it, and i do not share it for now there is no necessity and i cannot really help with so much loneliness and sadness out there with them i stretch my hands to hold them and feel them and they all become myself. it is not soap then, and there are no bubbles in the skies there is no child playing amazed by the bubbles that burst and by the bubbles that are so abundant.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sober

t'was that moment when he realized
he was never true

awake
he keeps on telling her
'i love you'

and she who knows what is drunkenness
and sobriety
keeps on believing him

'it does not matter'
she is happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sober And Learned

so it is like playing the piano without looking at a book of notes

the fingers keep playing and the music keeps its own pacing like both are dancing the tango together

there is no place for a sigh in this place of revelry all you see are the hands lifting their glasses
foaming beer and loud music and souls coming out from their bodies
wandering in those smokes and dancing to the wild beats of the music

the way to lose and then finds ourselves back
sober and learned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sober……

the house where you live
has a ghost,

a white lady
whom many had seen

every night when you are away

enjoying the night
with someone else

whose name you cannot even recall

every following morning when you are finally

sober.

RIC S. BASTASA
Social Chickens

i wonder why the white and red chickens
escape from their
house

tonight they roost upon the branch of an old
tree
so high that they can see
above our fence
the road

the red and white chickens too of my other neighbor's yard
roosting on the other tree

RIC S. BASTASA
Social Studies

i

a mother taking care of a son who just had a nervous breakdown there is no way for a mental asylum

ii

there is this woman who writes poems translates them from bisayan to english making the poems
the little burdens of grammar school

iii

there are siblings who quarrel all the days of their life forgetting the color of their blood too near and so too far cutting navels, making fences, choking necks

iv

how did we end? we started with some social sketches defining what social studies is all about sweet nothings, and trivial matters bridging gaps, comparing black and white and dreaming of rainbows

v

no lust. a friendly chat. something platonic.
a brother to a sister. birds hiding some wings.
oral intercourse.
social studies. a little poetry. a human craving.
empty. full. empty. lull. wanting to go. but staying still.

vi
oh my, i tell myself finally as we say goodbye i still have work to do. something legal piles up. an issue on international law. some circular reasoning begging the questions. i lied.
in fact, i am still here.

vii

back to poetry. some metaphors are popping out the ceiling speaks. a lizard shows its tongue. speaking. come, come, catch me, i am a meta4, this is absurd. the ceiling sings.

viii

8. this is the number that climbs up.
complete and round and round like two moons up and above. over each other.
a monkey. a cat without ears and a hidden tail.
free thoughts. use the period. breathers.

ix

nine lives. do i get nine lives after twelve years of writing poems? no it is not just twelve.
i am 49, and i will turn fifty, on the nth poem.
jalousie songs. palm trees opening leaves.
roots i hear roots ripping my robes.

x

this will be the last. ten. put an o. and you know what i mean.
the white people do not understand the power of (o) ten. they do not speak the brown language. Or the black one.
stiff and hard and long. nothing lousy. or lusty. just clean fun.
a play with words. what can words do? did you say you cry? this is the last. and you know very well. i have to go. i made promises. i have Frost. And Neruda too. and yes, what about myke O?

social studies. nothing about the P.... I'm finished.
Society Could Subsist Even If Everyone Does Nothing

You worry much Doing this and that Cooking the rice Washing the laundry Cleaning the house
Feeding the pigs Cleaning the yard

You are doing everything And taking everything
You are having the Burden of this world

And I pity you
I am here
Sitting watching
The sunrise
And marveling
And I Simply wonder About everything
Everyday
All these things
Are always new
To me
And this Afternoon
I will be marveling
At the orange ness
And redness of Sunset

The cool evening
The glitters of stars
And the song of Night birds
And the hymns
Of the nearby
Church
And you complain
Of back pains
And a sprained Leg and a cracking Bone and a nerve Wracked and wrecked

The problem with You is you are Overworking
You are at fault

Society could Subsist
Even if everyone Did nothing

I have things
And nature
To enjoy
And talents
Not to Waste

The society where I live can subsist even if I do nothing.
And you are not a part of it. You refused to.

RIC S. BASTASA
my country is rooted to the sultanate tradition, one sultan and his children and four wives ruling a territory those that block the way are beheaded, though not really that literally in the modern sense of my world, they finally name it a dynasty of political warlords and rag and drag leaders, one must know the word kowtow the figurative language of toeing the line and fidelity or else fatality, somehow, in my own little way, i think, there is a need for relief from this secretly hated tradition of putting power to the few families over a long, long time like an old classical novel of War and Peace, and somehow i like to go on the Color Purple midway between Fiddler on the Roof and Gone with the Wind, my mind bloats and i become a daydreamer of sort, detached from reality of abc, to xyz, i do not quit, i continue dreaming for change and relief i travel to America and Canada, meet some friends, and get to know how they are doing, flying kites and rolling snow balls, and chasing rainbows so to speak, after all is said and done, i come to the conclusion that i go back in my country and meet the Sultan again, missing me, his long gone son.

RIC S. BASTASA
Socrates Revisited

an unreflected life
is worth leaving

RIC S. BASTASA
it is nice, he did it well, the word gnat becomes a real gnat, and the tail gives way to a parody,
and there Socrates stood,

he knows his ways to another reality, the gnat smells like a gnat, and it sounds like it is flying and the tail begins to whip, and then the tale is woven and we are there stultified having spent most the much needed time, we smell gnats, we hear flying, we face Socrates, and then just like the way it ended a long time ago, we all mourned for the loss of a great man, and we call him beloved.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soft As Reed But Hard As Steel

you know how
is it
when you step
upon me
as though i am
another
pathway or an old shoe

i bite
and i transform my teeth
into fangs
my saliva into deadly venom and i spit upon
you to maim you and if need be
to kill
you

i could be
you best friend sweet
as sugarcane
but when you disrespect me
and attack
my own
domain
i am as cruel
as your worst
enemy
you should have known better

RIC S. BASTASA
how can i divorce a wife who keeps me posted about my whereabouts briefs me about her likes and dislikes washes my brain and lets go my mind
to our mutual desire to be always together wherever and whatever
oh!
my mind is as soft as clay and she shapes it with her loving hands into very nice pottery

i used to like to wander and then i ponder

my wife is still the best excelling from among the rest she lets me fly away and here i am coming back to her arm like a very meek lamb

RIC S. BASTASA
Soft Cotton In My Heart

on my way home
inside the car
silence speaks to me

i imagine God
who is so forgiving

we talked
and i told him
i sometimes took some initiatives
and gave my best to love what i did not fully grasp

i gave in
finally his will is best for me

with so much pain
i declare that there is just little

a tint of inconvenience which has not killed me these years

i thanked him
for giving me
that glimpse of the face of
death,

more so
of the side in Him
that i
slowly touch like some soft cotton in my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Softly The Truth Speaks And Wins Over You what? you wage war against the truth?

through all your wiles and lies?

you will be powerless
you will not win

you kick against the spikes and wound yourself

you spit to God
you spit on yourself

calm down
and think

and listen, hear the truth softly speaking

always winning over you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sogno

A blind man has a beard
uncut for days
for weeks
confused and
abandoned,

he begs in the streets of his
misfortune
with his cane
as his guide with his can as begging symbolism

i take him in bathe him and dress him and feed him like
he is my only brother

at night as i begin to play
the saddest tune
of my violin
he sings an aria for me

together we
dream
my eyes see for him his heart sees for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
the sun still brightly shining to the glory of her husband and two sons sleepy
from too much work and yet still manages an email or two to assure us
that everything is okay,
that life is beautiful
that life is fine
with everyone
wishing me and my wife to have a vacation somewhere, well,
sol,
my friend, the sun
may you keep shining through and through let the sunshine
come
let the flowers grow let the grass be greener as we take our glimpses too
of the moon
this evening
just the two of us together in silence, because we are not sleepy yet,
thanks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soldier

it is a nice life soldier is it not? you are well fed and you are given the power to kill with rewards even if you have killed many of our enemies,

you are well traveled and well trained with all those free high powered guns and ammunition

you do not have to spend any neuron in your brain
you only follow orders and that is what matters most like a guard dog, a sniff dog that amazes me at the airport

soldier, i like you, but i cannot be one like you because for reasons unknown to you, you also kill some of our brothers in the name of the state and this world, in the name of war and of peace always following orders.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soledad

in true faith to her name she lives alone in a small house on the side of a hill the trees are cut and the grasses have grown taller

the house sheds of window panes pillars recede their heights soledad in true faith to her name continues to live alone in that small house on the side of the dead hill she waits for her beloved who long died in the war.

RIC S. BASTASA
Solemn

sit on a chair
beside a bush
put my feet on another
chair and then i lay my head
on a pillow
facing the
moon and
the stars

i close my eyes
and feel
the lightness
of the world around me

tonight
is the solemnity of solitude

i am but a witness
of its events

RIC S. BASTASA
Solicitor

she enters the door and i ask her to be seated polite
i am to a stranger
i am busy then
on a paper work that could not be finished in a day
her curly hair
signifies a complicated request
for money,
i am shocked to this kind of
felicity,
turned down the request for sponsorship on
something
that i cannot watch
i am not a politician
go somewhere else
i do not
kowtow

RIC S. BASTASA
Soliloquy

in prison
am i
inside the mystery of your arms

i lose myself
and i tremble

i search for my soul
it is nowhere

not knowing what to do to regain who i am

i explore the labyrinths
of your heart

every chamber and corner and passage

there is that exit
of familiarity

outside i see nothing but contempt of you

RIC S. BASTASA
mad at my arms
i promise not to stretch them keep them
tied to my body with the strong rope
of my fingers

i am fixed by the
locks of my hair
and cannot move for days in boredom's kingdom

i try to take control of my speech
i bite my tongue and it bleeds and my mouth drinks
all the salt and red corpuscles the platelets decrease in number

it is like that it happens sometimes
on the verge of something killing

i am drinking myself to sustain myself from this fixation of the teeth
and gum

i close my eyes and remember my eyelids are restless
about
the code
that i am the king of this small universe
of a human body

my heart is the planet
my head is the sun
from now on the emotions are caged like a white bird restrained to the vertical lines of a cage
the waters of the mind are squeezed and shall flow as directed kept well inside

my solid dam

expect the next thing that happens
the one that you dream
about

the bursting
of the bubble and the explosion of another
wild
imagination

fireworks on the jolly days of july

RIC S. BASTASA
Soliloquy #3, On Imagination

so i may not be flushed out from the system like any fecal matter i comply with what you ask of me i am now a flower and behind me are blue clouds and on my stalks are leaves

no thorns, no worms for you do not like them now it is your time to love me and keep me

forever
you must pretend that you are not a worm that you are not a relative of the thorn now it is your time to become a bee now you must buzz around this garden in our minds now you must pollinate me it is all in the imagination imaginary bee imaginary flower how perfect can our imaginary world become!

kiss me in my imagination shape your thoughts like the lips of a lover now all too hungry for my love

RIC S. BASTASA
Soliloquy For An Early Morning Sigh

syllables soon
form the word that you want to utter this early morning, they
lurk there for the whole night
like a cocoon
and then something like a moth comes out and so you open your mouth something blue and winged and beautiful and it flies away like a pebble that you thrown away against the dark

you may pretend that it does not know you but hell
sure it knows you
well enough and it is seeking the help of the dusk

who can deny it?
not your heart that
stil still beat for love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soliloquy...

life is hard
you always tell me
in every chat

there is no money
and there is no work people are hard up that is how you see life

i am far from you
i live in an island where there is no mall no roads
for many cars
and there are not much people to relate with

i overspend my time to nature's offerings trees and sea
shells and cats
wind and songs
green grass on the plains hills and climbs rivers and rocks
these are all i have here all these i do not own
and yet
i have enjoyed most

i got not much money
too
but i have much time i do not have much friends but i have myself this best friend of mine

you see
life is happiest most when spent
without itineraries
nothing to buy
nothing to need

for i eat a little drink a little and just live a life in wonder

i write and never stopped since then when i discovered that words speak to me more than i speak to them this is an interactive world in the irony of solitude the paradox of life when it exudes itself most in the darkness of our nights in the silence of our desires in the liveliness of inactivity in the kindness of leaving ourselves alone from the loneliness of the crowd in the anxieties of what we can never be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Solilukoy

nangutana ang amahan nga nabyudo
sa pag-abot sa kwarenta dias gikan sa haya
sa iyang asawa

unsa ba ang anaa diha sa taas sa balay? mihangad siya nga morag nangita ug damgo didto sa langit

walay tawo diha tay hagbay rang namahawa ang nagpuyo nga magtiayon sa dihang wala na sila nagkasinabot
sa ilang mga gibati

karong gabii dalhan mo ako ug batan-ong babaye
gusto ko nga diha ko matulog sa abogon nga katre

mihangad sab ang anak didto sa langit
gisubay sab kon duna pa bay nahibilin nga damgo alang usab kaniya

sulod sa iyang dughan nagbalik balik ang pangadyeon nga unta iiway siya sa kadaotan

'...ug dili mo kami itugyan sa panulay hinonoa luwasa kami sa daotan' unsa ba ang daotan? nangutana ang wala pay buot nga kamanghoran Solitaries...

no one stops you
from being solitary.

no one stops you
from being you as you never stop them also from being them

solitary posts along the boulevard after a heavy rage of the early morning rain

RIC S. BASTASA
Solitary...

you fit in
you don't

square peg in a round hole you are you try again

they all rebel

you junk them they laugh

in your island
you are king

in that crowd
there is no peace

why
bother?

RIC S. BASTASA
Solitude

early morning
when dusk is about to leave a dew glistening

at the tip of a rose petal sunlight comes gently dissolving some pearls into thin air leaving this warmth inside my heart light pulsates like blood so alive rushing in my head

my cheeks redden
a little bird starts to sing on a branch

RIC S. BASTASA
Solitude And The Song

alone i only have to treasure the peace in my mind my heart sings but let no one
hear it
not even the leaves looking for a song
their ears dipping
in the wind

alone the Furies lets me on the clear conscience there are no fears nothing itches nothing bites there is only the soothing effect of words the lines that lull me to sleep in the hammock of my dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Solitude And The Sunset

if you wrote your poem in a room without walls mine remains inside
my brain
while i sit on the sands along the seashore
staring at the setting of my sun

kon gisulat mo ang
imong balak
sa balay nga walay bungbong kining akoa
nagpabilin lang sa akong utok samtang ako naglingkod sa balas sa
daplin sa baybayon
mitutok sa pagsalop sa akong adlaw

RIC S. BASTASA
Solitude, At Its Best Use...

amidst the mountains with all its trails and enthralls

in the void and stillness in doors without any exits us, you, they all past pronouns now getting to know the me better

it is

i....just

RIC S. BASTASA
Solo

he takes his stand and claims the right to be where
he is
he holds the phone and sings
his song composed

in front of the wall

his chairs and table
his beam
his audience
attentive

RIC S. BASTASA
Solo Flight......

Flawless
skin
smooth to my hand

beautiful body rising from the sea

moaning sound
scents of flowers
abound

inside a room
i am alone

wildest in my imagination

RIC S. BASTASA
Solving The Problem....

you have come to an age where feelings have become mere decorations of your hours,

as you look at that christmas tree your feelings have become nothing but decorative balls depending on the season kept and then exposed again and sometimes if too worn and irrelevant are simply thrown away

you have graduated from all these nonsense, grabbing all the way, now the most important matter, this logic of living life, freed from the waves of uncertainties, loving the unlovable, sticking to unreliability, mourning for the living, even mourning for yourself who is all too alive for your unbecoming tears.

you have come to the age of reason, that is how they call it, so, keep it up, live it, avail of all the dimensions, use the xs and ys, and find the answer.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Aspects Are Irreconciliable

this is the story
you meet someone whom you think is very interesting and you go to a busy place buy beer and talk a while the usual get to know scripts more bottles to make a certain familiarity

more words
and less periods
less question marks now more of introspection
and then
all the questions are erased the answers are too much to take the conversations drag and contempt comes at the last drink 'one for the road' the other says you leave and you realize home is always sweeter even without anyone whom you at first think is very interesting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Birds' Cries

There is nowhere
To escape
From the Harshness of This world

That is what I think

In the mountains’
Farthest
In the forest’s deepest
I still hear
Some birds’ cries

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Changes That We Need

we need to fill the cracks on the walls some trickles of light may hurt on the roof the rain as always will be bad for the floor
some leaks must be sealed the stones on the pavement choked by the grass that has been crawling for all the years i have to pick up so my foot may not be hurt
and then some goodbyes maybe said even without the hellos yet we settle, that is a good word, we move on, i think that is much better

i am closing a door and so i am opening a window like what you are doing i am taking sleep only to be taken by a dream i am flying only to stop for a while tomorrow is a new day, as always, i am not closing my eyes for another view of the sea there will be new seagulls coming but i have stopped counting each of them since then as always they shall feast on my schools of fish and i do not really mind at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Chunks Of Bitter Realities

some chunks of bitter realities are handed to him. the rule of the game is: do not refuse, take everything with all willingness.

the game continues and from day to day, he has become the most acceptable yes man.

he continues receiving chunks of bitterness and he keeps it to himself. there is no room for complaints. that is another rule of the game.

at night, when alone, with all the bitterness, he looks upon the pages of an old book, the one containing the pictures of his friends back home, in school where he finished high school, in the university where he finished his degree with honors.

damn, he tells himself, ' i am much better than them! ' yet he never really made good: he remains poor, and unknown, and envious. Life must be unfair. Or God must not exist.

He becomes a doubter.

Agnosticism was never his trait in college.
He was handsome and girls were pulling him right and left.
The professors loved him and exempted him from taking the final exams.

The years are cruel.
The government is unfair.
Power is slipping from his hands.

He sleeps and finds rest in his dreams.
There is something wrong with the system.
The good are not rewarded.
The bad triumphs.

HE could not ask WHY?
He is into this game. There shall be no complaining.
He is here. There is no asking now.

Tomorrow, he washes his face, removes the iota of doubt.
The motes of confusions.

He goes into the office. He is the yes man for now.
There shall be no grumbling.

THAT in fact, is the rule. The attitude acceptable.
And so his silence remains. Until his ps.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Deadly Drops Of My Being Fell On The Floor

i am tired of blood
or even orange

some drops
from me fall on the floor

and i regret
why i
never kiss
you

i regret
why i am a coward

why i shy away from what makes me complete

some drops
of my being
fall on the
floor

dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Denials Are The Most Truthful Image Of Truth

the sound of poetry
is the sound of denial,

not all denials are horrible

some denials are the most truthful image of truth and behind all these the most beautiful sound of your poems come in the form of hidden honesty the one that says i am not here in front of the other.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Fireflies Under The Full Moon

shiny creatures
of the night
you glow
in full splendor with fire in your bellies

the day
remembers you
as a meadow resplendent
with wild flowers
by the side
of the mountain
forest

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Fun With Balloons On A Midnight Candle some colored balloons in my room floating towards the ceiling they are light

wanting to escape
their nature of flight

they can fly away from this roof and they all gleam on borrowed light of the moon like some colored lights fruits, floating fruits dissolving in dark skies above a midnight candle they stay for a while and travel a certain distance in this heat this dark confusion in my mind each shall burst, i have not heard this sound cracking in this darkness floating, i am, it is me, how well do i know? this burst this natural death in space

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Hands

some hands are always ready to hold a flower and hand it
to another

others however have remained closed
like a rock
where no flower ever grows how i wish that this world shall be filled with flowers like hands that open like buds slowly blooming caressed as they are with the warm rays of the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Hidden Lines Of The Traveller Who Just Arrived

faraway
no one is talking to you.
you are
shuttered like an open
window

there are leaks
you cover it
with silk cloth

smooth silence
gleaming colors
of gray
like the body of a catfish

and reddish bloody
imagination

turn to pink my blue day

and admire the transformation of your thoughts
like a twilight

there is this orange
that smells like
an orange
because it is
orange

you touch it
and peel it and taste it

juicy existence palatable life
dripping sweetness crushed pulps
bursting bits
soft bites

the room changes into
a home
and you lay your head on the pillow thinking good about the ceiling

it is not the harshness of the wall anymore

there is no obstacle to thoughts piercing to the wood and playing with the light
bulb

things go and become a lively game of shadows the lizard and the fly become one in that chance
of predator-prey relationship

i guess i must have been too personal that the mirror fails to relate anymore to a face
facing it all day long waiting for no one

there is no letter somehow in fact, there is no one inviting or invited
where am i now? what mistake have i done to the books?
did i betray the pages
and argue myself with those ears?

so long. so long.
I've been hiding and the pain of putting my head inside the bag that having to breathe so hard in the sacrifice of monks and novices.

i am letting go a part of my index finger the baby does not have to notice it since it is asleep like a fish inside the tank of water

figure out then why am i doing this writing for nothing else but selfishness

offering kindness where it is not needed
actually

i am playing with fire like an eater
there is no one hurt
in fact
everyone enjoys it like a show in the circus

my mouth smells like gas babbling tongue
my soul is burning and i do not want it put off.
Some Houses Along The Road

as we speed up in a bus heading towards home

the houses along the road are like pages of a book as fast as they can they want nothing of these sad memories anymore they must be forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Images That I Want To Remember

my little brown dog bringing back
the black stick
that i have thrown to the yard

the gray gravel
and purple pebbles
scattered
on a pathway
to her garden

the ylang-ylang tree still blossoming
on this hot
month of november

a parked maroon
pick-up some leaves
falling on the hood

glass jalousies
still closed
some dusts
on the computer keyboard

opening something closed

and dusting off some unwanted memories

my hands
shall caress the letters
and i shall start thinking again

what now?
where to?
and where
and why?

i am empty
and i am now ready to fill myself again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Kind Of A Face

shall i pretend to you that i have only one face forever?
you are silent
you think like a deep river making no sound at all despite the storm when the waters from the mountains come and force you to rise and run and rage and they accuse you of having caused the flood as i watch in sadness you are my night and day and you have seen the changing of my hues i turn red like a rose become white like a carnation become sturdy like a bark of the oak tree sometimes i turn into stone hard and unmoving you see me and touch me with your wind and mist like a diamond i wear some corners some faces for me to glitter for me to find meaning in the life that i carry within my arms a lull sometimes almond eyes a rocking of my feet these are the mechanisms of my coping up to be a man in your silence i set aside my masks and face you shed off some faces and look at you with the eyes of my soul oh, i become so vulnerable to the truth of this one and only face as you kiss me in my lips

i quiver i become so light i become so alive i become so real as all the other faces fade like fume from the funnel

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Lives Are Destined To Be Wasted

it has become my habit lately to sleep late at night and wake up late

breakfast is forgotten and lunch sometimes is set aside lack of appetite
the absence of life
the blankets unfolded
the windows unopened the darkness kept like a cold that does not leave me like a flu this fever that makes living inconvenient yet providing all the reasons for not being part of everything in the family that i hate to relate with i have broken drinking glasses on clumsy hands sleepy moods

ups and downs of my life downs mostly this desperation that keeps on staying in my room

i turn off everything i want mostly those associated with endings a glass of milk that my puppy drinks hotdogs cold and greasy i cannot eat them today

my polo shirt is ready my pants well ironed some calls from the office on an emergency conference i am sick i have aches all over my body they say i need a doctor or i need love i must have a lover and change them as often as i change the cover on the chair

you guess it right
some lives are destined to be wasted
i am having mine and i am ready with this garbage can

in a minute

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Lizard Thoughts On Another Night When I’m Alone

the lizard licks its tail in a playful mood remembering the younger days of its short life,

IT is playing with light wishing that there will be fire on the ceiling too eager to please itself upon itself

which by the way is our way of defining what narcissism is all
about,

the lizard bit its own tail and eat it

not worrying though because it can grow another tail
in the manner of
auto-regeneration
which we humans do not have really the ability to do i watch it closely like the cover page of the poems of Gratian

still now, i cannot really figure out whether envy has seeded its discord inside my
heart

or i am just hungry myself and wish i had a tail for me to eat
for supper....

RIC S. BASTASA
Some More

it says
it needs some more
and i frisk myself touch my pockets
there is nothing
more in there
nothing more inside myself
but for the love of it
i go somewhere else
borrow and beg
to give you more this passion to give this humanity
to make another live
some more
until i bleed
my hands tremble
there is no grumble.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Morning Lines For This Old Village

At 5 in the morning
the bells toll the church calls everyone to wake up and pray you cannot just evade a religious responsibility upon a loud call

and then the women come out of the house with their prayer books at hand rushing to the tiled floors of religion

when everyone is inside the walls and when the bells stop tolling when the windows are still closed you begin to hear the birds singing

fifteen minutes later the early worms are ready for their pecking and from a distance
you hear another call from nature the sound of the sea breeze the choir of the leaves of those trees lining the old boulevard of our broken dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Mornings Are Like Christmas Socks Hanging On The Door

you wake up early you open the door
and with excitement
of check what was put by santa claus
on your red socks

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Notes About You

reading what you have written
excites me.

I salute your sweetness in being candid to every word.

reading one poem leads to another
until i get to know you every hair lock every nail
bite.

and then i experience
not just the high of your thoughts
but the
fear too, that i can be soon like
you

lost, sad, and in pain.

and so today i call it quits.

after reading you it feels like visiting Beijing
and then
promising myself that i shall not return
to such place
again.

there is this exhaustion,
that rises above
the respect for what is old and miserable.
RIC S. BASTASA
Some Notes For My Being

the transparent thing is left. the opaque ones continue to strive for light those which we touched finally surrender they are contained in a life span.

we are the eyes that see well in darkness sensitive to the fragments of light we let sparks arrive and then we let them pass we do not need much of the glimmer and the simmer we know our containers too when we pass away they shall never know what grief is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Notes For Paris.....

the numbers of the dead are many
and that is in the place of your dreams
one of those found in your bucket list
this place called Paris the world mourns and presidents expressed their words of sympathies urging all the people to keep this peace about the madness of the few and the persistence violence of the misguided

i will be spending more time on CNN
and perhaps i may shed some tears too and even express my deepest sympathy for those who were mercilessly killed while drinking beer in the pub or watching football or intently with ecstasy listening to the concert of the hall meanwhile in the interior places of Olingan & Galas and Sinaman

some farmers are busy harvesting their golden grains for drying later under the sun after which after some days shall be kept in their barns meanwhile some children are bathing in the river and then catch fish and go home whistling some native mothers are singing lullabies for their babies to sleep soundly on their cribs meanwhile when a lover waits for a tryst as his target is still washing the dishes as father is now going to sleep after a hard day's work in the farm somewhere in Sinuyak they have no CNN and no worry about what this world shall become

i should have envied them i suppose but how can i really?

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Notes From My Heart

there are some notes inside my heart you need not sing them for they are sad

you do not deserve this sadness and i do not preach the philosophy of loneliness

i may have told you about sorrow a hopeless tomorrow but i really do not mean to you are young and restless learn the songs of my youth open my cabinet take the box out there with the drums and the trumpets play the song and learn the dances of the wild and the listless bring me the flute for i am now at an age where solitude thrives best in the quiet i shall remember her again

RIC S. BASTASA
it is this old road that i always remember and then i go back to it wondering if it by itself shall also change somehow i pray to the silver sky that i may not recognize it anymore thinking that i can be free at last but it is a hard road and even if the rocks and thorny roses have all been taken away by some adherents for a reconstruction of its face and body it still wears the same face of a very lonely woman with a pointing finger at me and full of guilt i bring it flowers and it offer it some of my old poems which are like rusty nails
not fit for any joining of wooden planks
to make a stair
or a beam for a new
house
it is here where you hear children laughing
but of course
sane as you are you can not insist anymore that they still live here
for they all died in the places of your memories
and now like all these calls you must endure
the deafness of a prolonged
emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Notes To A Friend In Florida

alone in your room
as usual

you turn on the tv and then you turn it off

you hear the sound of the wind from the city getting inside your room you welcome it no one is alive here

all mosquitoes and cockroaches have been eliminated by you there is a sound inside yourself telling you: when will this stop?

what is it? you ask it goes back to sleep it is too tired to confront you this room is only for sleeping no one has been here for once to make love with you

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Notes To Ponder Between Two Life Beginners

Selfish humanists are that way
i don't know
i have to find it out within me we are supposed to do good because it is an end in itself not a means for another end still learning about myself

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Notes To Take Up Later

been on some errors,
i put note one,
been on some redundancies, and unnecessary statements.
been to what i lack, and forgive, i project

so there are those who teach because they fail,

those that are here to cope with what they think they have not done i have some notes for life to make it better

when this war breaks
i only need a place where i can sit no need to run

no need of notes

we have nowhere to go, at least we shall for the last time talk. Just talk.

Some Notes Why We Shy Away...

perhaps we shy away because we did not get much

oh that is wrong, we already got much

or perhaps we wanted more than enough, or more than that much so we shy away like that and leave the giver with a heavy conscience but we have our own miserable fault or faults if i really have to account for that, oh, when she got sick we shied away, oh, when she got too lonely did we care? we did not, too pay attention to her needs of warmth of flattery, which those who want to take something from her are very much willing to give, and we thought we are not like them, we shy away because we tell the truth and we hurt.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Of The Choices

we have choices, let us try some of these can we be mirrors, reflect light and share its brightness to other whom we think still live in the crevices of darkness?

or can we just be open windows letting light pass through retain our space and have more breathing moments?

there are those that bend light and make illusions of depths and shallowness there are those that crack and break and shattered pieces they become there are those who are merely passages, channels, gutters, streets letting them all go and make their own choices too....

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Of The Doctors Who Only Go For The Money...

someday i will write a story about some doctors swallowed by the big mouth of their love for money and when they are finally swallowed digested by the fangs of their greed, i will invent those long winding intestines with lots of hydrochloric acid so that all of them shall become nothing but fluids discharged smoothly in my anus
as i feel that pleasure of excreting those that consumed my budget reserved for other works of charity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Of You Will Be Dead.

welcome to the world of terror.
please be seated.
enjoy your complimentary drinks and luxurious accommodation a big room with opening windows to the sea of commotions.

enjoy your meal
have fun drink your California red wine smoke Cuba
laugh with the rest of the gang who knows what this future brings some of you will be dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Open Ended Statements

be happy sometimes that people are not blunt they have open ended sentences giving you the options of what should have been said on their minds again you supply the missing links
it could be another verb from a nerd
or an adjective which you do not like to read
you read from their lips and begin to say the missing word when you are alone and ready to cry without anyone seeing you life is like that one must appear as brave as anyone can be in the broadness of daylight
in the privacy of your life nothing is missing.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am surprised with some people writing nice titles on the wall just walls there are no doors where i can be in and take some drinks and eat
or dance and sing,
there are only graffiti of paper and colors
there is nothing there but signs where to go but there is nowhere to go
really.
it's a pity but what can i do it too is reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some People Are Afraid To Show Their True Colors

i am not
i don't hide

i have nothing to hide
i am what i am i am brown, i am a Filipino, and I am not afraid, I am what i am, i show who and what i am, and i take responsibility
for what i am
for what i do for what i say mountains do not hide, how can they? the seas keep their bodies in the open their waves blown by the air, for how can they be what they are when they are in hiding?

the trees and the plains, the valleys and the hills, what can they be if they are in hiding? shall you see a vast desert of them then? the air, if only they have that nature to be seen, they could have assumed such forms that you see, they too are happy to be seen so that you may believe in
them,
for in truth, those true and giving do no hide, and if you cannot see them, they always try,
in some conceivable manifestations, in some shapes, colors and forms like some leaves falling when the wind passes by, like some trees bending, like some pieces of paper blown to the other end.

why are you in hiding?

RIC S. BASTASA
Some People To Avoid And Not To Abide

ey they come handing you an envelope of problems
crazy people asking for solutions to their well
self-made puzzles for which they know the answers but ask you
just the same
and then they shed tears and show the inept inconvenience they are always wary about anything
ticks and termites monster clouds
acidic rains
rising tides and
global warming
the killer whales and melting glaciers
the dangers of too much fat and hedonic hunger

to calm them you serve them tea but without respect for time they keep on knocking you for actually they are lonely unloved in childhood and rejected by those who are supposed to love them you know this and you tell them to leave for you have other better things to do

and they leave
yes
but when they are on the road with their driver in flashy cars inside
they smile
for this remarkable success of spreading
what loneliness they suffer they get even but you shall not allow it the next time they ring the bell of your door you are surely out of town

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Portals

as you enter this solid portal you heave a sigh and realize the minuteness of the sand granule in your being you go inside and keep your rage time calms you down and the shortness of your breath says it is time to leave, and you summon haste like some tiny wings on your feet you're gone and those that stay mind you, are not disturbed at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Possibilities Of Moving Up The Ladder Of Awareness

d. the first possibility is,
and this is what we believe, that there is really light beyond us, and we will soon see after so much sufferings, the test, the trials, the fittest the blessed shall see, how can we refuse to believe it without being condemned to float in an eternal abyss
without a bottom.

d. the second possibility is,
there is none. this nothingness.
that we are not after all blind.
that we are given the light inside our little minds.
that we are fireflies of the night and the reality is nothing but just this tree this dark sky this cold air the moon above us. mute too.

d. there are other possibilities.
myriad possibilities. under the sun.
everything is possible. we believe what we want to. endless theories.

what matters most is you believe.
for those who stayed, they admit they are blind.
and for those who left, they brag that the have seen the best light.
words, ideas, beliefs. faith and a little disturbance. this ripple in the water because a raindropp has started to fall and i feel it right g on to the next ladder.
but another doubt backsteps my feet.
onward. my own little mind, seige the light beyond.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions

for years of harnessing the horses of word scrubbing the back of phrases what shall my hands become?

shall these hands be a vase for flowers wilting in your room?
shall these hands be barks of trees where your moss and lichens thrive wild? shall these hands be finally exhausted and grope again the shaken beams of my own confusions?

or soon shall i speak in tongues in the tower of babel shall my thoughts become tribes scattered in different directions?

shall i soon speak like you on the eloquence of the pedestals?
i look forward to this art as a savior of my crucifixion i look forward to Frankensteins finally converted as angels as fairies in the lands of my fantasies or shall i be roaming on the fields of realities
stark and open lighted with the sun and refreshed with the true winds from the waving seas?

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions Cropping In My Mind

The steel bars are eaten by salt

rust is a fading memory

the wooden frame
of the window turns hollow

the termites are disappointments

what then lasts forever?
your love? your heart?

it settles for a stroke in just one stroke of neglect of a mistake

and so?

take note, nothing,
nothing lasts forever

your soul? do you still worry?

a bush that burns
a flame in flames

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions For Janna

how can you
separate a man from his person?
or a person from
a man?
do you dissect him like a frog
and soak each body part in formalin?

and then you say
you need more time to study
to know
the man and love his person?

how many scalpels do you need
to asses how his brain
understands your impatience?

you need a glove
not to infect your hands or to infect the person his heart and
veins
for you to know how long can he
love?

will his person be different
just because you do not
like
the man in him?

janna, it is not that simple
you cannot ask this time and demand for quick and straightforward answers

man is complicated
his person is a fan
with so many leaves

he is a growing bean and his stalks are not reaching your
skies....

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions For Love's Possibility

when i
state what i think is my love
for you
and then when you finally
know
about this silly
matter
does it really
matter?
granting that
in such a remote possibility
that you
shall love me
too
are you sure
that i
too will take the risk
of dying?

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions For Me...

perhaps i am too serious as a mountain unmoved by the grief of those clouds drifting seeking comfort in the air that now dominates them because they have no direction
where to go
and no reason why they are going there i am too serious, people are damned and they do not make a sound about this mountain that does not move and keep on numb
and unfeeling and indifferent to what is happening
to the river
the snails and the squirrels and rats and grass
perhaps i am dead perhaps i am another senseless mountain not knowing why i am here perhaps i have become a stone
a grain of sand
a gasp of air
perhaps i have become another meaningless cloud hanging upon my side...

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions For You

How can these eggs
Break a stone?

And how can your Spread fingers
Be a spoon?

How can you hold
Two watermelons
With one hand?

How can you be Happy with A thousand Desires?

How can your
One hand
Eclipse the sun?

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions For You This Morning

do you smile?
or have you forgotten how to smile to people do you know that they too are lonely and scared?

do you know what a hug means?

do you hug
the homeless ones?

you use things
no argument about that you use people?

that can be a good question for you today do you love yourself?

yes yourself too?

not just them in co-dependency wash your face with the gentleness of water in your hands dove soap it

wipe your face and look at yourself in the mirror comb your hair

spray perfume in your hair the smell of lemon grass

you don't like it?
pick your choice

you have choices
you make decisions
please yourself
be free
and come to me

thus says the Lord your friend for a lifetime beside you
as always

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions In My Mind

Do I have to brag that I Have a thousand dreams?

Do I have to tell a lie
To be more honest to all?

What makes lies white?
What white lies are permissible?

Do I have to dream a thousand times To be called free?

Do I have to be friendly
To be good?

Will my youth justify My old age?

Do you have to read me
To say that I am a good writer?

Do I have to have power To be responsible?

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions In My Mind...

how does my silence
blend well with the sounds of the cars outside my hotel
window?

how can my prayer
co-exist with the heavy rain
tonight?

how can i be so helpless despite these strong arms these legs
this mind that probes like a scalpel
to a restless tumor
in the brain?

how can i be so timid against the rage of the other people's storms?

how can i not be myself despite my own knowledge?

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions To Himself

he suspects he must have said something that offends your divine sense
for you have gone away like a sigh
at night,

he thinks the mind of the depth well, the only oasis in your Sahara what poisonous insect flew
over there
that rips the senses of the fullness of the
water

on the other hand,
he justifies his decision to stop thinking about the righteous camel that walks the desert with the Bedouins

there is more beauty to the moon now that he is alone whispering nothings to the distant stars dreaming about the sea wondering if the starfish is still there trysting with the urchins.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Questions To Myself On My Quest To Happiness

ask me, and i will answer:

i got what i wanted from this life, but despite that fact, there is still the question to and fro like a doubtful philosopher like a pendulum of grandfather's clock:

what did i really want?

i did call myself my own beloved (am i not narcissistic in this sense?) i felt myself with my own fingers, my chest, my body, my thighs, my feet so attached to the ground like i am monument of a war hero, but there is still this question that walks to and fro on the yard, like a doubtful philosopher:

who am i really? why am i here?

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Raindrops On The Roof On The Leaves Of The Bushes

it is a rainy day today.
rain falls unceasingly on the rooftop tracing the hidden ways of the gutter falling gently on pines and leaves of gentle bushes planted beside a steel gate

painted time comes when the rain is so gentle and slow pouring in rhythm with the swaying of the palm leaves

every dropp like the meeting of a dew to another dew glistening before my eyes gentle sounds of raindrops in cadence like a hammock a swing like the flapping of a pigeon's wings

as i write this poem

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Ramifications Of My Being

why did it take me
a very long time to see the beauty of delay?
the wonders of loafing the excitement that procrastinations have caressed in my whole body?
why did you not make me understand the kindness of postponements?
the usefulness of emptiness?
the fulness of this hollowed
existence

had i known the joy of absence i should not have come with you had i felt the perfection of myself

alone

i would not have consented the world to touch me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Reasons Why The Dog Is Chasing Its Own Tail it could be that there is a flea at the end of its tail and it is wanting to remove it it could be that it simply wants to call your attention the way you laugh and it simply wants to please you it could be that he is a chaser by nature instinct, its history of chasing sheeps and foxes in the farm in the forest or it could be something else beyond our comprehension because we have not been dogs for once

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Sailed West

some sailed west and never returned and for years
we who are left here arrived at the belief that they must have been dead
swallowed by this big gray whale but some believed that they have turned into petals

after a harsh winter when the most beautiful spring later came and they they spoke about petals that turned into shells that fell into the bottom of the atlantic ocean and since then we never heard of them again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Set Of Questions For Beauty....

it is such a beauty,
many are amazed
many idolized what is beauty all about,
talk of the town
this model, this epitome of godly beauty and
perhaps
even wisdom,

the picture is dated march 5, 1934

and you wonder where is this epitome of beauty now?
what is its looks?

darn,
loose, crumpled skin
too much hair loss,
toothless,
furrowed brows
darn
dark sunken eyes
like holes
where crabs live

what beauty was there before
is gone

are you arrogant still?
did you fill your mind with so much pride?

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes
I know that you do not like poetry Like the way you detest Drama

I know that you pretend you like poetry Since I sided with you
When we talk we converge At the junction of our Likings

You know that I too hold on to poetry Like a rope on that mountainside When we reach the top of that Three thousand steps

Don't bother
I like the way you do not like it
It makes me feel
That some people too are odd That they are not like me And that makes a nice tapestry Of blue and black White and yellow
Red and green

Like a basket of ball Peppers
Of mangoes and guavas

Like the way how nature presents itself to us Some sky some stones
Some birds some worms.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Spaces Some Silences

by being not confident at first you may wear masks lots of them
in different sizes
and colors

and you face yourself with mirrors around you
and you laugh
this is very interesting
I will not be hurt
I will even hurt
Them

Then Someone comes
She loves you
And wants
The real you

And you love
Her

When the time
To make love & kiss you remove the masks
both of you
it is more exciting
than interesting

this time
the pain is stronger
too

it is the fairness of hide and seek that tells about pain and pleasure

wearing masks and removing them
making love and undressing

naked both of you feel something more is concealed

this time
you go beyond
you peel skins
subcutaneously

the soul demands
no bodies as masks

and as you close
both of your eyes
and see what is beyond these bodies
these subcutaneous masks

tell yourselves
beyond these bodies
there is still more as true love so demands

some spaces some silences
between you and him where God must dwell.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Spooks

an early morning hose spitting orange juice a stream squeezing the wind to a rest, noxious rain clouds stepping down catching the lily without a dew and then the dots signified the end like this....................

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Stories

some stories
about ourselves
are also the stories of
themselves
and then we write these stories and
pretend that these are but some short stories from our mind

now in different names
and places
we read them and then we wish that some of these short stories are not true at all

sometimes for those we want to be
we want to believe them to be true

wishes and hopes and regrets, what if? what if i chose that rather than this?

we poets write about pain and joys and we tell sometimes that we only fake them

deep inside we are silent we prefer just to be left alone

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Tears Cannot Help Falling

When in distress
Through life’s blows
So Cruel
My life
Still sticks with me In fidelity
And dignity

You may Say I am brave and strong
But when I am
Alone
Some tears
cannot help
falling Breaking forth
From my sorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Tenses

confused
his sense of time is twisted how he makes the past sound like the present sometimes is weird, others have long commented is this just plain lapse of grammar?
he is not an Englishman
after all
but a native of another lesser country

most of the times
his future is vanished like some lines
that he just erased

but everyone understands
this

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Things Are Not True

some things are not true
though they all want to adopt the color of truth they just can't be because they are false, they will always be
that is the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Things Do Hurt

some things shall hurt they are designed for that purpose by some people these architects of pain but we shall not be swayed into the ways of the curse and degradation

let them draw the plan and let them construct what they want to

they will make doors that lock when we get in and we shall have to look for ways ourselves to get out from their schemes

they will make windows that will only close and not open and we shall look for holes where we can take in air and breathe

we shall be their pawns and the experimental guinea pigs of their pains and distress

they may laugh for a while and drink to our fate they may proclaim that they are winning to their pre-conceived notions of what they believe as our own stupidity and gullibility we shall wait for the time and that is what we are also designed to do we shall wait when they all fall asleep drunk to their evil ways for soon this darkness will turn the table and side with us and we shall have the time to open the windows and summon the moon to hear our pleas to unlock the doors and summon the sun to brighten our twilights of woes we escape and we shall see that house of pain burned to ashes

now it is our time
the last laugh, our freedom, our revenge.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Things Do Not Meet

heaven and earth floors and ceilings
fish and fire
the plus and minus

in between is the sky, air and space
the bottom and the zero

imagine
you are sleeping
on your bed
and then the floor and the ceiling kiss

the plus and minus
touching hands electrically

the fish catching fire on its tails
without the
the cookware
in between

imagine
the marriage of heaven
and earth

where shall you be?

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Things In Life Do Work well, it will not be totally true

that nothing in this life
works

some still do, in fact the way
you handle reality like
tools before you: a screw
a hammer
a nail
some pieces
of wood
and some glue

glued to reality
hammer the nails
with the force
of your determinations

you mean
things
and things may mean what they mean when you
mean them
to mean what they must mean

feet rooted
to the ground
standing
when you
are right bowing for forgiveness
when sometimes
you are wrong

screw life
a little bit loosen where everything seems too tight

and tighten where there are loose ends

it is a matter of flexibility
salt to taste
sugar to sweeten
tea to a certain hotness
or coffee
with a little cream

and then
watch a movie

life, and death
funeral and weddings
and baptisms too

sleep or walk away
these are your choices

and in the ocean
of choices you
sail
on that boat
of responsibility

with no one to blame
or praise

just you
and nothing but you
baby

the little soul thrown into the space
of sea

swimming sperm finding the right egg

till you are fully human and fully alive

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Things That Can Happen With A Fish

A fish that drinks like a fish, that is a fish in excess A fish that fishes in troubled waters, that is a fish taking advantage of another fish in trouble
A fish that fishes or cuts bait, well, to be or not to be, to retreat or to attack, that is the fishy question
A fish that is neither fish nor fowl, is a fish that is neither one nor the other, lacking some convictions A fish out of water, is a fish feeling left out, no longer in his accustomed environment

Do you have other fish to fry for now?

Is there other matter requiring my attention?

Poor fish,
the lake is finally fished out from his fishy mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Things That We Keep Forever

a handwritten name on a grade one paper a handkerchief with a name embroidered on it locks of baby's hair inside the page of a fairytale book an old wooden box

these are some of the things mother kept for me:
my first paper when i learned to write
my name,
a handkerchief that mother gave me on my 5th birthday,
locks of my hair
on my first hair cut,

mother kept them all,

mother's love, i too,
shall keep it forever.

I love you mama.
I always will.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Thoughts Haunting My Mind

i write a few numbers i have not really read carefully what happens next but i press just the same ok,
something runs in my spine but i know how to stop it i will create the pain but i promise myself this will end and must end happily no, not sadly gone by, just an end, just an end, it is all that i want one that ends
well
all my resources drip like rain from a bucket but i stop worrying since then for in this house when i leave
no one stays....

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Thoughts On Scorpio

meaning
exploding into more
meanings,

as beauty
too
like a single cell spreading into more beautiful
mass

like islands
of white sands
like sea of many foams

like bats getting out of the cave
on an early evening

like a confetti of pink signaling your victory

life so many life
chips

scattering
into more
life forms

like stars and meteors
and diamonds
upon the faces of skies

how beautiful
can scorpions be when they begin to crawl like one big company

upon a rock
like
you

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Thoughts That Keep On Coming....

a mosquito caught in a net is happy.

a fly inside a bottle sealed, is an old story.

gentleness is sought for it is missing.

back to the leaf riding upon the passing wind.

back to the cat licking its fur, soundlessly.

back to the drops of rain, about to end.

back to the old pool
with one and only koi.

a rainy season spells
a steady foot upon a stool.

glass windows are mute inside a happy house.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Thoughts While We Pass By The Scenic Mountain

what i have are nothing but the notes of our trip she expects to renew our ties see what is no longer seen because of routine i have nothing in mind no fruit but this journey only every step covers a distance and i keep no meaning but only sight

i keep an open eye even if she kisses me as though it were our first time learning about lips and tongue

i do not have the names of the places well, the raspberries are sweeter than the strawberries but they keep rotting every hour before they are finally eaten

i keep the diary of what have flashed in my eyes every sound that resounds in my ears nothing really stays that long the moment we pass by the images of life die i forgo the scent of evenings i leave ego
unto its own care

a beautiful lake is but an image of the beautiful lake i cannot hold its water in my hand you see, you have not seen at all, it is sad, but it is a fact.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Trails Of Dreamy Thoughts

there are times of
sleep
walking, and there is no one there to tell you about it, but you
sort of
remember,

clouds surrounding your hair rain falling upon your cheeks
waters rushing under the bridge of your nose

dawn is the coldness of your hands sunlight, yes,
warm in your armpits,
winds, songs of birds, inside your brain, an island a moat,
a palace without soldiers a kingdom of stones without a queen

there are princesses of reminisces
old pages inside a room with candles still burning
the eyelashes of your past.

RIC S. BASTASA
Some Whistles

Some whistles do frighten me like That policeman’s whistle when I jaywalk, That lewd whistle from an ill-mannered man Pestering a sexy woman is another thing, It is so demeaning, unkind, uncalled for Some mean order like a teacher’s whistle On a P.E. class to start an exercise in school Or a kindergarten teacher whistling children to fall in line, But one whistle really so intrigues me,
The whistle of a young man outside the gate Of this house, on unholy hours of the night, While I am writing poetry, this guy whistles And whistles some curious songs in intermittent notes Like a love song of a nightingale, So sensual, so seductive, so magical, almost Three times a night three times a week, Till one day, my domestic helper got confused, and comes for my advice, Why her stomach is mysteriously bloated.

You guessed it right, that magical whistle made her pregnant.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someday

someday
i like to taste again the glass of orange juice that you gave me on that Sunday afternoon when we were left alone in the house
of your aunt.

it was so sweet &
so refreshing..

there is no other glass of orange juice like that in my lifetime

RIC S. BASTASA
Someday I May Leave You

there will be a time of reckoning and someday i will have the will to leave everything like the leaves heaping at the side of my door, and i will slowly take my sighs away from the wind beside my window.

do not leave the door half open for some changes my senses will have no time for doubts. When i leave, i leave and even if the monsters and storms in my open sea shall become unbeatable, i shall prefer my own sinking to the deepest part of the ocean my decent burial grounds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someday I Shall Understand.....

someday i shall understand

why old people wake up at 3 a.m.
and do nothing but wait why someone travels in a very far place and arriving there decides not to remember why a glass of water is put on a table in the middle of a garden not drinking it someday i shall understand why thinking must stop

why the faces of children do not make me write anymore

on that day i do not bother about myself
about you....

RIC S. BASTASA
Someday I Will Write A Poem Of Tears For You

Our love story was a little bit tragic Starting with youthful laughter & joys Some quarrels and disappointments
For a while
On love that never knew whether it ended When and where You ask me if I also shed some tears I did not answer I was gone for good I have only tears since then In my eyes
You had tears for a while but then You have learned to laugh again
Somewhere
Someday I will write you a poem Where all the words will all be tears Where the poet has not known Laughter, or joy ever again.
Because In truth
My years are counted by drops of tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
Somehow, Somehow

somehow i feel cheated

like how fathers should have been a gentle hand
to their sons

somehow i feel
too small to face the door of the world and the houses that i see when i go in
are too huge for my
body

somehow i feel that i cannot reach the ceiling even if i have to use the family
ladder to touch what a cellar is
and feel
its roughness

i have seen the worst
of people
and so i have nothing but mistrust
and love has become too nil
to touch and
then
make a belief about
its
soundness and fragility

I'd like to change
like the way the heat of the sun surrenders to the mildness of an afternoon light

and then bravely shall i give in to coldness where i see no one trying to love me again like a
fallen nut

it will be dark and then i would be sleepy

and by then perhaps i can forget
what unkindness was
and how it twisted
my views against the world

I'd like to see beauty in tomorrow's morning

perhaps i like getting old
and then
have this fading memory so i can start anew: innocent and smiling again
like the way it was when i
was once my mother's child.

RIC S. BASTASA
Somehow, You Keep Thinking, Has GodForgiven You?

a shortness of breath.
something pierces your heart.
the wife is frying fish
in the kitchen.
the houseboy is sweeping the yard and feeding
the pigs.
every step you make is another hardship.
somehow, you keep thinking, has God forgiven you?
are you ready for the next
show?
how does the garden
look there?
what is it that illuminates the darkness of the heart?

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Greater Than Us

we raise hopes we make dreams we weave stories we, who were long loveless we draw fairies, we paint sunrises, we sketch daffodils in those frosty days, all these warmth sustain us until this day, we strive to fill this empty cup when someone greater than us could have filled it with ease.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Inside Us.... here is someone inside us someone who is outside the fence and wants to go inside a house who keeps on waiting for the right time to open the door and then close it again and there is another one lurking behind a door peeping upon a hole and wanting to see the world out there always planning a escape but who cannot because he holds the key and then loses it after so much thinking on how to really live while waiting for the light that comes only from the moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Is Alone In The Room....

someone is alone in the room
you know the name and you want to make love again, but you hesitate you do not know exactly what is happening, or you really know it by heart but the mind has doubts, as to what happens after all these crazy thoughts, what settles down may be explosive and it will hurt even those who are not here yet inside this room where love is alone with you, but you have doubts if it is love at all.

your heart is about to break, your arms are lost, your lips dry, and your nerves are running wildly into the darkness of what you are now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Is Always In Charge for instance the driver of this car whose name we do not know whose life story we do not investigate

we are inside this car and we do not know the mechanics the name of its part and how it functions

what is important is that we will be here only for a short while since we have an office, a home, or any place
for a destination

we know what to do, when we arrive there we pay what is due, then we go out of the car and that is the end of that Someone who has taken charge of our life only for that moment.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Like My Niece

at the party i chance to sit next to her on a white covered sofa we are so careful not to stain it watching the food that we fork the orange juice that we drink from a shiny glass no drops please her mother warns, she's is my sister too concerned about her furniture she likes her hair long and falling like herself i suppose falling into a certain despair, her mother, unable to accept, she pretends she is more concerned about the fate of her new rosewood furniture

' i do not like myself' she whispers to her glass half filled with tequila, she sets aside the orange juice too mild, she quips,

' i like to run away from her' she insists, telling me that no one understands her here that this house is full of indifferent people i fix my gaze at the TV pretending i am not interested. there is this soap opera about a mom who just lost her son to a war somewhere in Jolo.

how can a mother's love be so misunderstood? the mother knows how to pretend, and the daughter drowns herself inside the bubbles of a glass wine tequila, i am sure about that..

' i like the love story most. The brother takes his brother's girlfriend and he punishes himself at the end. Tears and death.' I am evading her leading questions.
she's groggy. She leaves me and says she is sleepy. She goes to her room and locks the door.

Then i tell myself, this world is fair. I am lucky not to have someone like that niece. I am alone but not sad. Anyway, the soap opera ends. Something new crops up tomorrow. A twist of fate. But i will not watch anymore.I had enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
someone lives alone
even with a wife and child around him he can always feel the dusk even at noontime

someone feels the wind fresh, even inside a vacuum of a bottle of wine tightly covered by its cork

someone remembers
water
in the years of dried river beds she can feel still the hands

that pressed her breasts even if what she has for presence are just ashes under her barren feet someone still knows the happy meaning

of flowers
beside those silent tombs someone lives the hours in silence even in the middle of protests someone still loves and continues loving even if he is abandoned someone still knows the story by heart because the books are burned these are the poetic moments

and we have,
we still have all these we never learn, we do not ask we do not even search all these in far away places

or in the foxholes or
under the bed

they are within the reach of the hands of our hearts

so near, that sometimes we conclude these moments are nothing but us, or if you are that sharp enough like a polished nail

in those lonely days of your past lives, and still getting stronger and stronger soon you shall declare

it is, I.
just I.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Must Be Made Happier Than I Am

everyday i promise myself someone must be made happier than i am i must not take anything i have to give something that can hurt me i am no masochist
neither am i foolish
i just want to diminish myself make it lighter
like a flame of mama's lamp when we both shared the same light while reading a book

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone New And Someone Old

someone new summons us all us who are old and bored us who are not anymore bold and this someone is filled with courage and length of perorations what it is how it was and where we all shall go where we once were how we were patterned us all of us who are all old and bored
merely listen not expecting not wanting
and when this someone who is new and daring is finished we who are old and not anymore bold shall leave him

we are taking nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Out There Wants To Be Free

someone out there is awake, even in the middle of the night inside a room
all alone

i know it. i do not see it. i can feel it.
you are with me
one in this, one in this silence, one in this pressing of keys, without looking at the letters riding on the memory of our fingertips someone out there wants to be free, from the walls of his self-imposed unhappiness someone out there is asleep, beside someone who is awake staring at the ceiling, not wanting any light from any bulb someone out there travels, beyond, beyond the limitations of dreams, beyond dreams in chant, repeating, and repeating, hoping to just forget what is pain in everything.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Reads Me

Just as I think I should pause and End this stuff
Another one comes and says Nuts! I like what you are driving at

I, doubt

Lingering to this kind of appreciation Opulent, she could be Volatile as passing sweet musk perfume Eggshell white-pure well meant and

Yes, I may give this stuff a chance Over and over again, what some sad people in Utmost need could be, what I can fill in.

Last night
Out in the open space where darkness reigns Vouchsafe, as I see it I am an Egregious error to myself

Much as I want
Ever shall I reconsider options to proceed

Take time
Occults may work this time Over a love that may not come in a lifetime.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Says

someone says the days are chasing the passing hours and the locked door waits there for the arrival of the wind someone says the song is over and no one ever notice someone sees the stars and

says

they are so far away so tiny

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Says (2)

someone so important in the government ladder says that the prison cell of a certain Ampatuan is so cute there is so much breathing space and it is well perfumed with bureaucratic pretensions the prisoner she says is coddled.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone So Important

myself felt so aggrieved over this business at dawn when the world
sleeps when i remain sleepless

i search myself again and again all the corners in my mind how can i regret?

Are you there my God?

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone That I Must Love Without Change my hands will always try to reach you my heart shall always feel you everything i own and shall give shall always be because of you there is no other one, just you someone that i can trust for years unchanged, and loving till the end:

i speak for you: it's me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone That You Love Very Much

you are into a paradox of loving someone to the utmost you give all that you have you surrender
you empty every detail
you lose every significance
and then
at a certain moment when you are already nothing that someone is gone
they say
you never understand the word
love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Wants To Dream And Be The Beloved....

someone stood at the back of the house putting water on the naked body what was more alluring was the one covered with a black cloth

water flowed like a river on the body leading to the sea of all desires someone cannot sleep tonight thinking about water body and desire

someone wants to dream and then be the beloved.

RIC S. BASTASA
Someone Who Never Drops You

you want to belong
but they never belong to you so what do you do?

you go back to a room of your past, you open that door and feast on remembrances you make your own coffee and hold it for your own sipping all these done with you alone, but you are never alone as you begin to know a self which you have almost forgotten for years you have taken this for granted

because you are always
together
and you even think that you are one and that there is no other others have learned it before you did, shaking your hand with your own hand, answering your own questions, having a good conversation with yourself, and finally discover that, as others have dropped you,

this time, you have yourself,

someone who never drops you someone you can not drop too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something

bites like a bee
stings like a bee
but never is a bee.
this is the self
this is the word
the last word
it stings
it bites
it stays.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Absurd Keeps Going

there is something absurd that keeps on going inside us this constant craving for what we do not know yet we claim we want we feel the need and yet we cannot really touch it and when we touch it it gets so painful and we step a foot backward and then we ponder and then we go forward we first dislike it and then we touch it again there is this feeling that we cannot describe with the word that we know it is elating and elevating us one stair up and then the winds carry us we do not know what nowhere is but it is there, it is there, it is....

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Alive Inside

does something so alive inside it has the eyes of the lizard there is no winking but it is palpitating life it sleeps there inside the white shell of an egg it is waiting for time to leap to another age where life is more abundant where there is no end it waits for me to go outside and
walk away

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Beautiful

something so beautiful something so mysterious excellently something that i do not understand this is poetry. sounds beautiful to me but to be honest with you, let me ask:

what do you really mean?

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Between The Reader And The Writer

far from my expectations never did it come to my mind that you like to read poems, and that, who would believe, that i, too, come down the plains to scribble on the sands which of course, either the wind, or the rain, or the grass either erase or cover, it is in my life map, all roads and paths lead to something metaphorical, which i know, being an avid reader, and which i hope, you understand, but, still, has not earned that courage to utter, or perhaps to tell yourself, that we are in this boat together.
the words are all there in your heart, your mind is as hardheaded as that wall, and it refuses even to link with a star.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Bitter

something bitter
so bitter
if at all
does not kill you at once and if you swallow it and still survive
all the bitterness in every leaf a day another day
a night
and another night
till you sweat things out just like any other game of life by all means
i salute you

shake my hand my friend welcome, this is our new world now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Deep Down In My Heart

something deep down in my heart is so beautiful it is like a blue bird with black shiny bear one early morning it sings a song

it is lovely
it is sweet
it is gentle

something deep down in my heart is a beautiful poem that once you have read and shall never forget

it is crisp and fragile and it is for you and it says deep down from the bottom of my soul

i love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Deep Down In My Heart (2)

something deep down in my heart is so beautiful it is like a blue bird with black shiny beak one early morning it sings a song

it is lovely
it is sweet
it is gentle

something deep down in my heart is a beautiful poem
that once you have read and shall never forget

it is crisp and fragile
and it is for you and it says deep down from the bottom of my soul

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Descriptive Only For What Is In There

inside a wicker basket are two red apples beside three persimmons on top of them is a ripe mango

still
there is no sound
even a ripple of air
from the window
covered with white lace curtains.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Different

outside the window
the wind begins to blow it is colder now
the chickens are restless the pigs stunned

i shiver looking at the leaves falling off from the branches

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Easy And Unequivocal

A joke creeps in like a scorpion to your spine
it bites
but only in air somehow you expect something else
more different to happen like a kiss perhaps from a spider nearby
which can be deadly if we allow it

and so it becomes easier taking things down like some notes for tomorrows usual living: a pat on your shoulder a shake from my hand a word or two which can either mean goodbye or hello

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Forgotten

obsessed with the moon, one night when it is full,
as it sits on the arm of the river
i swim towards its feet
my soul rising embracing finally its borrowed
light.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Foul And Sweet

you smell something foul and at first you may say at once ' i don't like this! '

and then you feel something thorny and you will say ' i detest this'

and then you see the pale color of the flesh and you say ' what is this? '

then you taste it
lick it with your tongue and savor every meat letting it roll inside
your mouth,

enjoy the milky
texture and then you say

'Omg! this is heaven! '

such is the durian experience.
try it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Fragile

something so fragile when it breaks
shall never be the same again though you pick up the pieces and make the rebinding and pretend that something is the same back to its wholeness on the same placement

yes, i am talking about love the fragile heart that was broken it will never be the same again now, it is stronger.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Graceful And Decent....

a poem
actually is a landmark
to a feeling

something happened
and you have no guts telling it like a story where the characters have vivid dialogues

you are torn between clarity and isolation
between that someone who a while ago has been stoned and ostracized
and that important figure who lies with admiration skilled in metaphors
knows how to arrange the furniture
against the backdrop of chaos

one poem is a yesterday the one who was with you cannot tell if he was
there

you cover a mask with a face you hide the mole with hair you give birth to another world within a world

you write this poem
and you forget whether you have written it by accident you meet it again, (was it at the bar or at the flea market? was it in egypt or israel?) it smiles at you gives its real name and tells you it happened. this is what happened. continue pretending.

the poem does not betray.
it keeps the fear within.
and what you like most is this:

it hides noise. exudes beauty.
ever forgets. but stays graceful and decent.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Harsh

something brash comes in the afternoon life has overslept on the hammock of time something harsh knocks on the door you try to shoo it away and it comes anyway less the courtesy of knocking or greeting something insensitive sits on the sofa of the house where life has been relaxing and the confrontation begins which is actually unnecessary, but just the same the inevitable happens. Life has big ears, and the holes extend from the right side to the left side, like north pole tunneling its secret passage to the south pole

Life learns its lessons well. Now it does not bother.
It is not bothered. It sits like a young boy looking over the window. It whistles a song to the sky.

It sleeps well on the ground where the grass is green and cool, where dew is not a metaphor for tears, where black birds assume a new meaning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something I Gave Her

it was something which i gave her which she cannot really forget and she cannot take that something again for i already belong to the arms of another it was something so beautiful which i gave her which she wants to have with her again but time betrays her like any other and she cannot any longer have that most beautiful thing which i gave her and i know this made her angry forever let me say i am sorry i am very sorry we were never meant for each other

RIC S. BASTASA
Something I Learned From You....

i listened well when you first told me.
you were crying then, and i placed my hands over your hair to appease you.

you said you were abused, and the stigma still clings like clams to a rock, like parasites to an intestine.

i could have believed you until i have seen you and the abuser together in the park of your dreams, still close, and sharing.

was it ice cream? or a bed? or was it the sweater?
i can't exactly remember. But i learned my lesson.
Trust is seldom. Truth is a tooth. I am better all alone. You lied and i still want to believe you.

You miss your abuser. You love to be with him again.

what an irony of life. How tragic can it be!

RIC S. BASTASA
Something I Remember....

edu's father
left her mom
for an old woman
with strategy.
with means.
it is for citizenship
he justifies.
edu's mom is
a republic.
she says she does not give a damn.
and then there is
this edu's wedding.
i am drinking
wine beside my wife
and savoring
my salad.
edu's father comes and opens a
topic.
know what? divorce is painful
it tears hearts.
longer than you
can think of.
and i answered.
there is one thing about divorce.
it is also a reality.
in fact if you really need it
for whatever purpose
it serves,
it becomes one sweet
reality.
the music is so loud.
some women are dancing
the wobble.
the children want to get away from the watchful eyes of their mama.
when he left,
i wonder
how and why i say such an intriguing
theory.

statistics will tell.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something In Me Cannot Cry

mother told me once my boy
cry if you will do not hide your feelings men cry
your Papa cried when your Grandpa passed away twenty years ago
you were then a toddler in the row

i have grown
and there were so many pains like pins and grains

i have cried not just once but more than thrice till the nth time when something in me cannot cry anymore got no tear glands now my eyes are made of steel like the way you hammered my heart when you broke it

once

and never got repaired.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something In Me Does Not Rest

Perhaps it is my soul
It is restless It is up to something else Something more important than what I am doing now It is wriggling. It is conscious of something.
To come.
It is up for something greater than everyday.
I do not know.
I really do not know. It is not speaking to me.

It is like an egg. It is the shell and transparent Something alive is wriggling wanting to be born.
I am wanting to be reborn. I am not speaking to myself.
It is delicate. It is perhaps something holy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Though stepped upon by all those feet that come here for no reason but pleasure

more is found in the sea than depth for we come here not for its mysteries or what unknowns are there that it is offering

we who like to wallow in the
shallow
we who says we are tasting the same salt
all over
we who are talking things lightly to drive all the demons that keep us away from the gentle touches of our own hands
from the placid shores of our own eternities.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Is Missing Get It For Me Please In That Room

Wait, something is missing With my face I am speaking loosely Mumbling Babbling Rambling I am not thinking Wait, get me my brain I left it in class what? i do not have any?

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Is Spontaneous Within

what i know and really know is that there is something inside us that asks to be written it would have been better spoken to someone intimate or even to someone that we chance to meet in the park
in the mall
or even in the hospital where we are waiting for the results of our blood chemistry results or even in the pre-departure area of the plane where we are waiting for the flight to take us away somewhere because either we want to forget or to create a certain distance to distract us from the narrowness of our paths which seems to choke us and even kill us,

there are tiny blue birds inside our throats and they are singing there are heavy clouds in our hearts and they will explode soon as typhoon
if you do not know how to rain gently

this is the right place just be yourself and travel farther to know it more to grasp
and be open and no longer be damned
in the damaging
cancer of self-doubt, self-pity and the underestimation of who we really
are

in places near death i know it, i can be everything i can be everybody and who really is this one?

he is the one that does not mind the world anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Is Wrong With Silence

So sensitive is the name of silence

i call

hello! silence! Are you there?

And it is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Is Wrong With The Poor Too

something is wrong with the poor too
snobbing the rich like they are like them.

too sensitive, they shy away when touched by our attempts to characterize charity, too sentimental they cry at the slightest remark of hunger and thirst and they seem hate water and food that we keep inside our cabinets and glasses, we stoop a little to accommodate their way of seeing things. we look for cracks, we let in light too faint too small for that camel to fit, too flimsy an excuse, we relate, we cannot be one like them, oh, arrogance, oh selfishness oh pretensions, oh that usual blame, shit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Like

something like a wet pea is inside my gut
it moves along my veins towards my glans
something like a strawberry candy in my tongue
i like to spit it out for a heavenly relief

how i wish you were here to see it
and then feel it on the floor

even taste it as it is still hot like cinder

RIC S. BASTASA
Something More Beautiful Than A Well With Water

we always want a well full of water like a glass to its brim there is more beauty somehow to a well running out of water the hollowness beneath the sound of the wind filling its emptiness

much different than the dripping
of the rain
from a rooftop
where one may feel so safe inside the darkness of the bottom the dryness of the soil beneath

it is in there that some real voices speak the one that you have not heard

they are so deep and real that they cannot refuse to tell you the truth it is like someone is moaning and you feel that you are one of them seeking the voice of God

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Mystical Tonight...

a very sick soul,
emaciated transparency behind a glass door it manifests itself inside a sore throat a dry cough whooping throughout the night depression time anxiety grows like five headed dragons this is no myth this is real you want to cure the body feverish and thirsty on pale hands a shrinking veins webs of spiders cover the eyes confess upon yourself be both priest and penitent be silent

sit down contemplate upon
the goodness of this universe

let your spirit
flow
and be washed
anew

it is not late
you can still be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Negligible

like small amounts of caffeine small doses of morphine a little sugar
a pinch of salt
a dropp of honey
some other matters negligible
an out of town date with infidelity
a tint of light
a shadow of a chunk of a body of a quart of solubility diffusing into a very small space a little part of water and sand
a little of everything
until you become little too tiny like a grain of iron filling
still attached magnetically to something
undefined.

RIC S. BASTASA
things are meant not to last there is always the right time for them to break into pieces and no matter how we piece them together they still shatter like telling you that they are meant to go, to be broken, to be thrown away a lap top has a time frame of its own the virus come in waiting and then all of its essence is gone you weep for things? don't. They do not weep for you. You are sad when they break? Don't They don't feel anything at all for you.

a car for twelve years is not your car anymore the chassis simply take in rust and some wires get meshed up with tantrums and like nerves they too go awry and die malfunction so to say from the language of things and tools now, we see each other. I am human. I am not a piece, a thing.

I am not a car. I am not a lap top with a time frame for its breaking a time for throwing and trading-in a time simply for replacing

Look at me. I have tears. My skin bleeds when you hurt me.
My heart beats faster when you kiss me.

As we throw away what we do not need now After all the years of keeping, we reflect.

I have this heart that beats for you. I have time outside the frame of utility. We grow. We commit. We are present.

For twelve years now, You will always be someone new.
Let the sun shine. Let the heart beat for a new meaning. Love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something New.....

time has matured
when i arrived here i never thought of going back

i never think of home
not death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Nuclear...

smallness creates a myriad possibilities tiny cannot be underestimated
i agree
the atom explodes

shock is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Plain

something so plain is as obvious as both of you
very well understand there is that tinge of little pains
but on a stormy day like this
both of you have no time yet to speak about it

you wait
when the day is clear when the storm is over it is plain and obvious and both of you know that you really understand it but you still do not speak about it like, someone is knocking at your door and both of you
knows who that visitor is but you do not open the door you keep pretending there is no one in this house
no one
not even the past voices
of children
not even a hand
waving goodbye

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Political

beside the woman with short hair chinese eyes
plain clother
all black is another woman with long hair
thick glasses
holding a cell phone and a black leather bag which she carries with her left hand they are boarding a plane to the central city to talk the president about a political proposal

the president has a mole on her left cheek always smiling....

what is the point of all these?
nothing. The plan is kept as a top secret.

do you feel being fooled?
that is normal.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Real

along the street on a sunny day we met
we have not spoken for years perhaps affected by a family feud but then this time
you stop your car
open the window
and greet me
hello
i am surprised to see you back from the States
for years
and you ask me how am i doing all these years
and what are my plans in such a short span and then she says she is not leaving
anymore
she will be working here and will be building a new house for herself

and then she says
so long see yah

she closes the car window and speeds her way out of town

i know what she is up to her car is expensive and brand new the latest model
the only one in town

a show off i think
to make me envious

but i will give her the benefit of the doubt so long and i will still see yah Something Sad And Beautiful...

she puts a red rose in a glass vase on his table and writes a poem it is her wish that the war the in Syria may finally end so that the veiled woman who lost her husband and son may soon grow the roses in her abandoned garden to bloom next spring.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Situational

what we write is always situational and for those who are interested enough they bring shovels to dig out soil and find the roots of beauty
which are in most ways the very roots of conflict
an inner one

how these roots have penetrated depths (more than the oceans) and even broke the stones open like some petals

of a budding
morning

how these have pierced the ears of timeso the layers of history can hear

how these stories have outlived their hiding places on some little lies in fiction
to give art to pain and make it look like a scripture

to color its incoming madness
sufficing
memories with the polka dots of some imagined joys along city streets where others sometimes take things away from you stealthily,
those that surpassed hypocrisies and finally land in the silence
of acceptances,
watching TV news
and at the same time computing
inner losses
longings that die on the face of innocence

i have sailed too far from my shores and in the middle of this ocean there are no ports visible the lighthouses have been destroyed by the recent storms

everything is a dark sky and endless horizons have become our definition of what eternity is you see i am about to give up leave everything

because what is there that grows like grass and weeds without the fear of fire is only
anger
regret arms that raise themselves up not in praise
but in surrender

that i should not have entered into that circle that society have promoted like a discounted sale mobbed by ordinary people in the mall and as you see i am only moving around inside it and i am already dizzy i vomit

and i do not clean up what mess
is there in front of me
and people begin to question me
about this
unkindness

disgust is waiting to be told an ugly face is coming from the mold this numbness that has perfected the emulation of a hundred deaths

this seems to be the bad karma of my own logic the cannibalized system full of locks and security codes
and keys
that sometimes do not work
anymore
where the word fit becomes and alien

the object of my affection has become the object of my regret i am looking for an opening perhaps a gate

for an exit

or a backdoor of the dirty kitchen
where mother stayed for years wearing no apron
at all

it is not empathy
you are wrong
i do not need it in fact i have given all of it away like a political dole-out
an investment without any expected returns

what i need is freedom that white dove with a bleeding heart it cannot fly

anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something So Beautiful Inside Myself

something is inside me much precious than you think i am showing it to you you deny that it exists you set aside what is beautiful i do not mind at all

there are so many places to go you must think it over

why i am staying here with you why i am not saying a word.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something So Faraway Finally Reaches The Bridge...

7:25 in the morning
a ray of light
strikes the bridge of my nose

mummifying
phenomenon

for how long did this ray of light
travel
what distance before it reaches its unfortunate
destination?

RIC S. BASTASA
Something So Ordinary Can Be Poetic

Something like
NO PARKING
Is poetic to me
You are a soul
Lost to this Town of indifference
And you have Been roaming Around in your Old car of a Soul and you Want to rest
And think
And what they Say is

NO PARKING

That is actually Poetic

Or shall we say

THIS WAY TO THE RESTROOM

Oh that is really Poetic signifying Relief that in this country There still exists A WAY TO

A way a path a footpath for someone lost someone wanting to empty Himself like a heavy cloud Wanting to empty
Its accumulating heaviness Like your urinary bladder Looking for a restroom and Oh heavens
This is the way to the rest room This is the way to the heavens Where I can just Have the freedom of pursuing my happiness Of a simple poetic pee
So this way to the rest room Is a feeling of relief

It is a feeling of relief and poetry is just like that You look for a way to unburden yourself A way to this and that of relieving your Urinary bladder your poetic urinary bladder Discharging a discomfort A heaviness of unwanted liquids Which you have accumulated In time

And you hold your thing in the manner that you Want it held and in the process that you want it done Without anybody looking

Without anybody saying you this is the proper way to pee And no other else that can make your pee wholesome To prescribed rules

And you point it to the big basin of a bowl You pee
You have just discharged a discomfort With all the images of

THIS WAY PLEASE TO THE COMFORT ROOM

To your comfort zone Because you have been in such a discomforting fit In complete release
You feel relief
And that to me is very poetic

THIS WAY TO THE COMFORT ROOM PLEASE when all you want in life is to pee On that instance that moment is the best poetry To the lines and verses of a person simply peeing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something So Sweet

something so sweet must have happened between that two of you on that bench last night the ants have built a monument of a hill

and they are all crazy and craving.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Sour In my Salad

sometimes i asks
fear
what is your reason
for being here
with me?

it has been long
and we haven't known
each other too well

why are you staying?
why me?

i look at it
straight in the eye
confronting it
with my own bravery

telling it
you cannot stay with me
forever
for even with fear
i too get bored with you

and then, as you insists,
i accepted you
and let you be just you in me
and since then

we live in peace
in harmony with ourselves

for fear, you too,
are a reality,
something sour in
my salad
yet makes the whole
thing
delicious to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Sour In my Salad (2)

sometimes i ask
fear
what is your reason
for being here
with me?

it has been long
and we haven't known
each other too well

why are you staying?
why me?

i look at it
straight in the eye
confronting it
with my own bravery

telling it
you cannot stay with me
forever
for even with fear
i too get
bored with you

and then, as you insists,
i accepted you
and let you be just you in me
and since then

we live in peace
in harmony with ourselves

for fear, you too,
are a reality,
something sour in
my salad
yet makes the whole
thing
delicious to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Spiritual....

they were just playing games those kids in all of us nothing really serious nothing to think much
and here you are
in deep thought in deep sorrow as you go in this journey thinking where to land...

every minute is a destination every talk is an offer every touch is sense, grab each and just leave it there, for when you begin to carry each, all these would be too heavy and as we walk and as they look at you it would be crazy.

my hands are empty and so is my head even.
i have nothing on. Just as the wind is invisible.

be a spirit this time. leave that body behind.

RIC S. BASTASA
FINALLY you tell me
you like an empty house something minimal all white with no curves just straight lines

your want is small now something that makes us close something that shrinks to make an intimacy

you want a house just for the two of us i am thinking if these thoughts are a little bit late my dreams are different i am thinking of a bird-house i am thinking of grains i am thinking of water something that i can leave something that i can give something that flows away

RIC S. BASTASA
Something That I Ask Of You....

because of love
i kneel before you
and kissed your feet

this shames me a bit but i can do nothing
about it

it is inevitable
love surges into surrender
for the beloved

you smile and look down at me humbled

at this moment
i ask you to please turn off the
light

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

14830

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
palihog
ipalong na lang ko
sa suga

RIC S. BASTASA
Something That I Can'T Do

how i wish i can imitate the flow of water in my life that choice of taking the path of least resistance

how i wish i can have the language
of the rain
that which assuages pain that which satisfies the thirst of grass
that which jives with the slow pacing of the stones

i can't.

i am already born with the language of my parents
it is the language that i know the only language of my body and soul i have to like it there is no other sound no other choice
except to speak it again and
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something That I Have Always Kept Away From You

i keep this love. It will be a secret.
there is no use for you to know it.
it is there. and will always be there.
this smile, this hug, this kiss, do they not speak enough? and the years? and the time melting like a candle thriving on its own light. is this not enough for you? you cry. i am asking for reasons, you say there are not reasons, these are just tears, and i wonder: what have i done to deserve this kind of darkness, the enigma, the mystery of your silence. i move. i stop. i look back. there is something that grows, like cancer, there is this death what for? do you have to know every inch of my soul? let us stop this guessing game. i am tired. let us sleep. there is no use talking. the stars are gone.
and the moon. i am hearing the silent whispers of darkness. we are alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something That I Have Not Touched With My Hands while in bed i am enumerating a lot of things that i really don't know what they are and where they come from and what use could they be in my emptiness i think that something fuller this time is what i need like hot water perhaps for a cup for an afternoon tea but the image is too ordinary for a whim of this imagination something's got to be better this time something that i have not touched with my hand that i have not tasted with my tongue i know, i know what it is, but i know that i cannot have it and so i just lay in bed, enumerate the other things silly and wise, and empty and full, and paths and mountains and labyrinths, until i am a flash in full speed of images until i am sleepy and then i forget what is it that i know that i want and yet i cannot have and i begin counting sheep and ships and imagine the whole ocean blanket to my body and face and then i sleep

i am tired and when this happens i do not mind what happens next and i do not wish about anything

i am done.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something That Is Better If Uncertain

if it were an exhibition disguised as avoiding a storm upon a steep climb you somersault
like a circus man
and land upon an ocean leaving another horrible mark in a sad story.

RIC S. BASTASA
...because i allow it,
because of the way i keep my hands, my fingers are falling apart, and to keep my hands
intact, as i try too, as i compose myself
as i reinvent my face through your
eyes,
and then, something slips away,
it hurts,
but i know it will not last long,
otherwise,
i will not be true to myself, i will be dead.
and i can't allow it, so here i am, as usual, too normal like the sun that shines every morning
because everyone expects it to happen.

don't know if i feel my own heat. don't care really. it is not about myself. anymore. it is about the sun and the day that it is duty bound to give to the grasses
and to the rooftops.

RIC S. BASTASA
It happened, the taxi was taken, both of you took the ride No one wanted to take the front, Passengers
Sitting beside, no names, just chance, Together, that moment, there was rain,

Sweat, abundant sweat, the aircon is high Music was loud and the travel was long A convention, you did not see malice

Friendship, sweat, abundant sweat Even when the aircon was set higher Drink, lots of drinks, until both of you were drunk

You hate to use pronouns now
The verb is untamed, your hair standing, your drunkenness Suddenly lost, slowly, slowly, caresses, Bursting you lost everything in your mind

Was the night that long really? Were the curtains Thick? Were the windows open? Was there a moon By the window? Were the lights off?

You do not remember, Morning comes, light Enters the door filtered by the curtains.

You wished you were alone. You weren’t. Last night Something happened, years ago, you simply could not remember The face.

It is still horrible. Something you cannot write until now.
Your pronouns are not meant to be visible.
The shadows even not defined.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something They Must See

outside the rain begins and you think that this may never end

you stare
beyond this window your cheeks are wet with tears

you undress
and take away every covering of your body it is dark anyway and this time no one shall see what you shall do

you step out of the door and walk straight to the yard feeling the grass
on your feet

feeling the rain flowing in your hair on the sides of your ears and cheeks

you cry some more you shout with a wish that your anger may reach the heavens

you run towards a thick forest and then dissolve inside this darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Too Personal

among the crowd
myself stands like it were not me i put one in front and the other behind the happy face is there what lurks behind is the sad one
sometimes i doubt or pretend to doubt which one is real
i laugh and then promise myself a try not to cry
mastered this game
of having to lose
and then win
make some imitations and other selves
and you ask me why?
i tell you
i lost that appetite to kill myself
and if i have to really survive
all the other days of my life
then you must
understand
why there are so many selves now claiming to be the real one

do not underestimate my knowledge of who i am
even if i close my eyes
i know
which of me is real it is the happy self but never tells it all

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Too Sweet Destroys

beware my dear
something too sweet destroys try something bitter once in a while this concoction heals.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Uncommon

the little boy cried last night he clenched his fist and demanded in fury that the window be opened the mother who was not there talked over the phone through the elder girl who was in charge of their affairs
sensing the danger of what may happen when the window is opened

it was simple
i mean the boy's demand was simple he clenched his fist against the moon for what reason

i do not really know
at his young age at three though i've been there once i still cannot figure out why?

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Understandable

in your busy life
there is no time for
a puzzle
and so to make things easier for you
i am simplifying words
i am giving you
all nouns and adjectives
i am setting aside all the verbs like a still painting
you may stop
and find yourself
there
immobile
calm and still stuffed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Universal

something universal
is not just for one eye to see but for all the eyes of this universe, the eye of the storm the eye of the wound
the needle's eye
even the eyes of those who are blind for they can always have the eyes of their hearts

it is not just for you it is for us all to feast like the air we breathe

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Visual

Something visual and so vivid Are still hard to write

One shot in film
Would have been easy

To picture curves
And tangential lines
That even criss-cross Using words
Is a big challenge,

Like
Capturing a crocodile
On a fish net, it would even Be harder using words
To capture illusive motions Of white milk spilt on Monochromatic tiles,
Or
The leaping of a fish
On the pond trying to Eat a moth or a dragonfly Hovering on a blade of Grass and what about Air,
Invisible getting Inside my lungs, that Feeling of life moving Inside me,
And
What about
Blood running in the veins To remove numbness of My fingers,
All
These
Are challenges in words
In what to write,
To a jumping fish Capturing, swallowing
A blue dragonfly,
Or
The air rushing
To my lungs,
Or
To the Blood rushing to my numb Fingers,
All these give a feeling Of relief,
All
These somehow Return life, and it makes Us all feel good...

Something visual in words Motions captured and colors Brushed in word, in words Something visual
And life-giving
To be caged in words,

Such will be your big challenge.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something Wonderful

picking strawberries from
the garden

choosing the plump ones dipping each on mayonnaise

letting each stay inside your mouth
sometime

RIC S. BASTASA
Something/Someone

something that is so beautiful that i want to hug, kiss, and even sleep with something so near and yet i keep faraway something to touch and yet i will not something that makes me so alive and i may kill myself something that makes my blood runs wildly inside my veins something that disrupts and makes my heart burst into bliss something that i can only think of but i cannot speak someone, actually someone so special so dear, and yet i must set aside and let go something that i love and cannot be mine
someone with me
but must not even know that i exist

RIC S. BASTASA
Somethings Become Missing....

the first thing in the morning is not a cup of coffee it is cold as usual and the heavy rain last night just stops that must make me survive but it is as personal as the armpits
it could even be the bland taste of my own saliva
keeping myself intact with my own resources nothing about cups of coffee and melting butters
it is the fingers that we press upon words that we play with our own tongues hugged by our teeth

RIC S. BASTASA
Something's Wrong

when there is no magic anymore the house becomes a bore we walk around and talk somehow like zombies on the prow

RIC S. BASTASA
Something's Wrong Really

you went to sea
bringing your fish net and that night
you caught a lot filling the boat heavy towards the port

when you arrive there you cannot accept the fact that when they come you still have nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Something's Wrong With Me

why have i not risen to the higher ranks? i try to answer that. It is perhaps of my own kind of arrogance not bending myself on other people's bodies except perhaps to help those who have fallen from grace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Somethins Is Not Repeated, Everything Is Always New

The one that i see is a face

eyes about to cry
and those weary feet that cannot stop walking i am cold like a stone covered by too much moss by time's burying of all dead thoughts when you walk away i say nothing

what else can be covered by words?

what else can this heart deny?

i have been seeing so many sunsets

i sleep sometimes in places that keep empty glasses and charred wood

when i wake up i do not ask so many questions

i keep watching the sea and amaze myself again with something new like another sunrise which tells me that nothing is repeated and dull what comes embraces you not with same arms kisses you again not with same lips

i am happy
i have no more old thoughts the stones in my hand are never mine neither are its empty spaces between my fingers

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometime Sometimes

on a hammock mid noon you watch a bird’s feather fall from the tree where a nest just let go two birds,

takes time to land
and you concentrate on the falling until softly it lands on a gray rock just beside the house

sometime
you thinks about sometimes that light feeling of not being you you don't know what is it it sinks in your mind like a word that you cannot forget because it is so easy and yet you misspell it it is an error of flight and grossly an error of a bad landing you close your eyes against the light

and what you see is
as expected
all red

you imagine sunset at mid noon you imagine the end of life at the midst of vibrant feeling what a waste! how times passed so fast... how many more are like you daydreaming on a hammock dreaming about the feather softly landing on the rock portion of your soul

Sometimes

sometimes i feel so stupid and so stupid that i like being called stupid by other stupid people out there who think that they are not stupid sometimes i like to laugh at myself and call myself crazy and behave like i am crazy and then suddenly a man comes next to me and asks me

why am i happy?

i think he is not stupid anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I Am Not Okey

Sometimes i have tantrums too like i have deep depressions
sharper tongues like that of a Philippine king cobra willing to spit my venom my fatal bite to an innocent passer-by we all have the breeding of some sphinx traceable to the lines of some Medusas and cyclops and dragons

do not deny the nerves and veins of the devil still clinging to our flesh, running and so alive we have all these sometimes like some storms and tornadoes and flash floods and volcanic eruptions and tsunamis.... the forces of nature tattooed in our skins stained in our brains

just give me time while i write the poetry of anger, and madness and hate, do not even wait as i simmer down to indifference leave me alone in my destructive destinations wait, and wait some more if you have love at all, let me go, let me vent, let me shout, let me explode for tonight when the moon is full, i lay tired on the grass by the tranquil pool,

still trees, cool but undisturbed by any ripple when all these pass, come, share a drink with me come, let us again talk in whispers then some smiles then a loud laughter

we shall be always together, when all these bad things are over

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I Also Wonder If

sometimes i wonder if this world is listening to every word that each man is shouting against each other to every verbal abuse that husbands inflict against their wives

sometimes i wonder if this world too feels the harshness of the sound of the door that is banged against each frame
at the edge when hinges begin to fall out from each rusted
screw

sometimes i ask if it knows the pain that nails inflict upon wood

the decent sharpness of the axe that cuts across barks and trunks
in every tree that falls down to the forest
grounds

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I Am Amazed Of The Magic That Is Done

It all started with something insignificant Like dust,
Sticking on a window pane, and I want it Dusted off, it is dirt, it is unwanted,
And I do not even know what to do next About such Insignificance and feelings of simply Trying to get rid of dust immediately, But then, I begin to think about this Dust, this me, this dust in me, Some dusts on my feet, some dusts on My forehead, and some dusts in my ears, Some dusts in my eyes so obstructive Of what I really am, and I know what to do next,
The bulb lighting in my head in a sudden,
I touch the dust,
I feel the dust with my fingers, and I am crazy enough I taste the dust on my window pane,
And I shiver,
I am shaking to its taste, the taste of nothingness If was from dust that I really come,
I now remember,
It will be to dust that I shall return,
I am now reminded,
And the dust that I used to see As dirt, as something so insignificant, is now, A magical patch, glistening, so filled with meaning,
I am nothing but dust; I am biting the dust,

I am very insignificant, in that window pane, at first.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I Am Misinterpreted

i admit
sometimes i am misinterpreted

to have a familiarity and make this talk a little interesting, let us revise, like we admit sometimes we are misinterpreted when we care when we give a glass of water for instance they will take it as a form of seduction, Good Heavens i am through all these, we admit, we are most often misinterpreted, when we kiss, they think we are in love and that we are ready to enter into a revolution to defend and die for love, God Forbid, time has changed a lot, the river has dried and fish do not exist on scales

anymore,

an old fortress has become a river, and the river on the other side of the road has become a mount of neon lights,

Oh mY! what we did was just a gesture of kindness a selfless act of redeeming what we once lost for nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I Close My Eyes

sometimes my friend i close my eyes to see what i have not seen inside the domains of
my heart

and then i open them again to see what blinded me

there is so much light to some things that i daily see and have not seen realistically.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I Ponder

sometimes i ponder on the useless things that i think i have done with so much importance for the day:

ing on a white bridge in Dikayo and seeing the flood of the brown river seeing the floating coconuts and some drift woods

stopping the car.

2. standing beside a bay window seeing the sea torn into halves brown on the shore and blue on the upper portion

stop the reading.

3. setting aside the curtain to let in the light from the morning sun turning off the lights and getting away from the hazards of the computer screen

stopping, stopping.
stooping.

4. looking over the road from this two-storey building left by the Spaniards that once ruled this old town

aimlessly.

5. stopping for a while. wanting this world to stop revolving.

wishing.
sometimes i wonder, if all these useless things that i do can change the world or just my small world.

I am doing all these. Without thinking much if the time is wasted.

i sit back on my chair. Staring on a blank wall that is painted with the color of the chalk.

Back to writing. The chalk reminds. The chalk that resembles the pen.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I Think

sometimes, (i always keep it to myself) (i am better than you how you approach a problem using a very circuitous solution as i look at you keeping such a busy day i sigh and look away
i could have done much better

but you are there so high, you are put on such a pedestal of distinction with more medals and plaques the way you have danced well with the powers that be with the gods of our society you always wear a smile and take the posture of obeisance and always ready with your

yes, sir, yes, sir
and some expensive gifts

(how can i ever do that without disrespecting myself?) now you got what you wished for my master

i become your inferior and wait for your orders

you cannot issue them you do not know what to do they are all waiting for the solution, they are now hoping for you

(i could have done much better as i wait for your orders
but what can i do?
you are the system
and i am but this silent dissenter) Sometimes I Think Of Leaving You

One day
I think I must leave.

This is not my World
I said silently
To myself

i do not belong to your world
you do not belong to mine
either: i sometimes think like this

odd.

As I face
You. I say further
I do not like
What is happening
Between us.

We are trees
Without fruits.

We are ponds Without Any moss
Or fish

We are a night Without stars

We are mornings
Without the sun.

And I keep
On saying
To myself this must Be ended
For once for good

I look at the road
And they are So inviting

They narrow down Somewhere to
The foot of a rainbow to a promise of an oasis
in a vast desert
that i am in.

The horizon
Calls my name

I look at you again
A long glance
And your face
Looks so innocent

Asking me:
(1) Where are you taking
Me?
Telling me:
(2) I am going where You will take
Me

(3) I have nowhere
To go
(4) When you leave
I will die

(5) When you leave
I will kill
Myself.
There are more
Enumerations.
I can recall them.
Always.

And so I am
Staying with you.

I am so afraid
I am everything to you.
And you have been
All too pleasing

For any kind Of betrayal

that is not worth its salt and color
of a promise

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I Wish I Were Not A Part Of You

My feet are pinched
With needles.
Your hands are not there.

I try to relieve myself from pain.
It is not happening.
There is no miracle.
There is no cure.

The world is a big space.
I can leave anytime and Take the shape
Of air.

I can be gone.
How come that I become A part of you
And her?

I do not remember myself coming Here and sitting on this chair.
Fate.
Cruel fate.
I want to leave but I cannot go
I do not want to stay but I am staying.

How I wish I were not a part Of this mess:
This cruelty inflicted
From your hand
To my hand.

How I wish I were Someone else

Here I am.
I am your hair to your head.
Your fingers to your hand.
Your toes to your feet.
I guess. We must learn to live With each other.
Dislikes disregarded
We begin
Our silent wars.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I Wonder

at this moment, when i begin to write again another set of poems

(i stop for a while, away from official matters this business of the mind thinking clearly and logically, setting aside premises and dogmas and theorems, not wanting any proof of my sanity and reasonableness

i relax a bit, on some matters of the heart the emotions all colored wildly like a dream a wet dream, to be specific....

sometimes i ask, if i can still write about libido, the wanton directionless cravings of the thighs and the caprices of the fingers...

i get lost with reason and i become as firm as an iron rod, shunning feelings, oh, how do i like to be a rock?

it is sad to be numb. I detest when this happens as a matter of everyday business, and i become tense if at all, i have ceased to be human, or if i have changed myself suddenly to be nothing but a cabinet or a desk or a mess in front of my eyes... i daydream, once i was a young man, once i was so carefree that was the time when poetry was vibrating like a man's flesh between my legs... i miss the river and the baths and the fish swimming under my belly.

i miss the songs of the frogs, how they prayed for rain and how the celebrate when it comes.

i miss the summer months of April and May when love was as abundant as bees.
I miss you. Your gaze burns me.
Your kiss makes me feel so alive.

thinking about you, yes, about love in abundance, and then oh, the ecstasy of words.

i have written, i shall speak, when you return.
I have written the happy poem, tell me when shall i write it again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes In Our Sadness

sometimes in our sadness
we mistake the sparrows flying low on a field of grass as dry leaves blown away by a very dry wind

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes In Wanting To Be Civil

sometimes
in wanting to be civil i close my mouth
i suppress the exact words
i prune what is in my mind like some bonsai

under the sun
what appears are remnants of beauty

sometimes in wanting to endure
our inevitable sufferings we simply close
our eyes

to the truth
we pretend we like the way we live
we surmise these do not last anyway

then we forget to tell the truth altogether
we even forget that we are its bearers

simply because we too want to survive a flood of lies a catastrophe
of ingenuinity & falsities

but with you
i am honest enough to admit
i lied
because i am afraid

to lose you

that you must remember

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes In Your Sadness

sometimes in your sadness
the flying sparrows of the fields are nothing but dry leaves blown by a very dry wind towards the mountains in your sorrow the roses blooming along your paths become nothing but lumps of mud sticking to their thorny branches and the leaves are but trash paper bound for some burning turning to ash sometimes in your long mourning you do not see the shining stars and you wish that the moon and sun may altogether stop making the nights and days.

you wish total darkness. You like that everything becomes mute and blind and deaf.
Your friends and those who love you have became straw men on the rice fields. They have become to you utterly useless.

Just because the person you love had perished.
Everything has become useless.
The world looks at you and asks: Is there only one person who is lovable that all those creatures around you become nothing?

The world understands and mourns with you only for a while. They have counted the time. They have waited for so long. They cannot endure sorrow. They have all other beautiful things to enjoy, joys to savor.
They are impatient now. Sorrow has a beginning. It has also an end. Sadness cannot be forever. There is no such ting as overwhelming sorrow.

Now they have contempt for you. The length of your sadness has exceeded the limits that they have set. The boundaries of joy, and bliss and happiness have been encroached.
Look over there. There is happiness waiting. There is dancing over the other fence. They are waiting for you.

Do not frustrate them. They have mourned with you.
And it is over. Now you have to be with them too.
They love life. They like to sing. They like to jump with joy.

Now that you have come back to your senses.
Sadness is over. Let us begin the first step to happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes It Is Nice To Be Away

away from the usual colors today he wears black from head to toe it is hot and the heat stings and the black color you know absorbs everything he feels like he is blazing with fire from his blackness
a black heart
a gray choice of the part of day gloomy parks at night with only one neon

sometimes you are on fire and Holy Goodness
you do not want to put it off you are like the burning bush and your soul takes off sheds off its slippers at the entrance door well, sometimes, sometimes we like not to understand we miss the mystery of our own ignorance and we take pleasure with what we hide

something like a burning heart beside a volcanic magma a different joy and yet so alone making stones and instant cliffs no one bothers that is the ecstasy of it all when no one bothers when you become a child again watching through the glass window on your favorite toy the red one

with stripes of black Sometimes It Is Not The Poem But The Poet

how i want to be a pseudonym of a pseudo-poet all: pseudohematuria pseudoxoma, this sham shame this counterfeit eshete, this fake classic this pretense inside this deception, false sun shining on the sand, 'nom de Usenet best-known and funniest hoax this BIFF BIFF BIFF Many flamers/ entities, that AI program of sophistication yet to exist

and the exits
travesty generator to simulate

oh! ass!
a significant number of people like us
fooled by the forgeries they debate over their authenticity eventually settled only when the perpetrator came forward publicly admitting the hoax.

acidic Ph, test it.
taste it, let us see how your tongue works to know the truth

i shall now reveal
you have loved the poet but his poems you despise.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes It Is Really Hard To Understand

she works with us as our domestic helper her father is 35 her mother is 34 and there are twelve of them in the family in that far away mountain, 50 kilometers from here her brother works as a laborer in that copra buyer a few meters from here and he just met an accident and he is sent to the hospital because he finds it hard to breathe and he cannot speak a word.

her sister is pregnant with a new baby and the wife of the master drives her away and she has no place to stay & nowhere to go.

she wants to tell more sad stories about her family but I tell her to stop. I do not want to know.

I look up to the sky, and I know God is listening.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes It Must Be Me Who Must Say: Sorry you apply for a job and they are the bosses who give you the requirements from 1 to 20 and you comply and then they take a look at your papers and they say they need another set of requirements from A to D, and they tell you the deadline and they leave you the final note that you comply otherwise you will not be considered and everything in your life will simply be a jeopardy, or even double jeopardy and they say that they do not want to say the word sorry

to you
at the final rejection

you finally give up and make a protest to this kind of injustice and you write your latest entry in your journal:

' i finally gave up, and sometimes, dear diary, it must be me who must say:
sorry, you also do not deserve me.
i quit'

love,

myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes Somewhere

time is times when i simply stand beside a rail on a platform that looks out to the sea that does not exist seagulls of the mind fly like white foams fishing for thoughts and digesting what solid resolves
are.

then the mind becomes a cloud that drifts on another floating orange horizon then the body becomes a river looking for its banks and then the eyes blink undecided whether to become a moon or a star

there are times when i simply sit and watch time going by and there is no certain direction but i simply let all these doubts pass hoping that they all die like some kind of martyrs namelessly

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes We Allow It

there are times when darkness triumphs against light sometimes we even allow it,

like
when we allow ourselves to be hateful

than lovable

like
when we make love without any meaning at all

like when the touch is not warm enough to dry the tears.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes We Are These

i am like a pole

my hands
are folded
like
a letter
inside
an envelope

i possess
height but i have never touched
my tip

i look at you
we are so apart
and you simply look
like a trail of an ant

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes We Are Too Busy Despite The Free Time

along the white sands on a sunny morning by the sea i collect shells and pebbles

there are too many of them but only few are chosen the only standard is that 'i like this' and there is no other more and then you put all those few ones in my pocket and when i arrive at the cottage i view them all atop the table it is the viewing that keeps the mind busy and so busy that it cannot listen to each story that the pebble wants to tell that the mouth of the shell wants to say beautifully in a song

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes We Know That We Are Here

sometimes
this is what they say
sometimes

we know that we are both here
together
yet we prefer to respect our silence

we extend it further
maybe

may be even deeper
like the blue ocean
refusing to talk to the river

they all look forward to bluer clouds
and sunny skies

and for these
what is the need of words?

what is the need of the struggle to speak? it is the silence that makes some bonds

stronger

sometimes, they always say that,
sometimes

some time, we may like it like this way
mute and yet so revealing Sometimes We Let Go And Then We Become Ourselves

sometimes
we feel so real
when we fall

we feel so perfect
with our tears cascading

we feel so nearly divine when emptied
and left out

sometimes we let go
and then we become more ourselves

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes We Simply Have To Look Beyond Our Sadness

sometimes you give up and i can see that your sad face that looks somewhere beyond the window looking for nothing the world becomes an empty canvass of futile light

the sky blue clouds no matter how beautiful the sun no matter how orange-bright and warm the verdant fields filled with trees and flowers the blithe butterflies and winged winds....

sometimes in too much selfish pondering we lose the power of hope-imagining how life moves by itself growing without your noticing how the earth silently makes the nights and days how each day unfolds what beauty all nature holds how surprises burst here and there like fireworks because you are carried by the river of sadness choked by the flash floods of its flounders all these have become useless pieces if only... you try looking outside the gates of your preoccupations you will see a world out there with arms opening, offering always wanting to embrace you always wanting to make the best for you you will never see your eyes have always been covered with tears your ears shut up in selfishness your mouth cannot speak your tongue tied to bitterness

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes What You Cover With Your Hands

sometimes what you cover with your hands if they misinterpret that is not really intended for hiding not the selfishness of your very own fingers
but if they only know it by heart are offerings asking if you too are ready and willing to give them the way you cover things are manners of asking are you also willing to give and give wholeheartedly without asking for anything in return?
sometimes let me tell you when i cover some lovely parts of myself which you misinterpret again as utter selfishness nay, it is not the way you see things skin deep stones protruding on the low ebbing of the season

sometimes let me tell you
when i cover the most vulnerable portion of my being it is, in truth, just a manner of my asking if indeed, in itself, and by itself, if your love is true.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes When I Have Nothing To Say

sometimes when i have nothing to say like the silence of the closed window or the nights on the grass or the twinkle of the stars... i feel so full and when i get so full, i feel like vomiting my existence,

i am nauseous to this hiding, sometimes i want to say it all, and then i become so empty and when empty i float, i feel like i am nothing but air, and then i surrender again to the walls.... talking and talking to the walls and i do not really care about the rumors that they have ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes When We Emote That Much

sometimes when we emote that much like some bleeding hearts blinded by the colors of the blood and sweat of the dying sun

we fail to see that the day has ended

that it is time to sleep and dream

that it is time to give way for other souls to cry to weep to sigh

that it is time for some other creatures who died when they were once
children
to play their forgotten games
in the dark

sometimes we must accept this is not just ours this is also theirs

and the tears that dry on the sand may not be just ours after all

we may meet them
in due time, but for now let me meet myself, let me drink with it let me know his name

we are still strangers of the very shining light.
Sometimes When You Look At The Stars

sometimes when you look at the stars and there are many of them tonight and you are all alone by the window
thinking

sometimes you grasp the reason why you want to forget a face glowing at the fireside of your living room

you want to be free from an enclosure
of love
unrequited, you want to escape as a wing of a bird from the bones of its body rotten flesh

and so you carefully place your chin on top of your right hand shaped like a fist
you open your eyes
to this window of the universe and yes there are so many stars
tonight

you think there are still so many of them and you regret having loved just one you think you are foolish and you are so right you feel you are wasted.

and you are right.

you feel that you cannot recover and stand tall to look at things carefully again.
this time
i must tell you, you are wrong.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes You Wish Someone Will Know The Greatness Of A Poem

sometimes as you write a hundred or more poems you wish someone with taste the one without which nothing will be called 'poetic' shall read you and understand the greatness of your words and style, someone with a long black hair smooth skin and possessing that intellectual flare reads one of your poems and says ' i like this and i shall keep this did you really write this? '

and you are so flattered that you forget that all the while on the 5,000th poem you have been writing all about yourself on some pain of rejection that love interest that never responded that one so beautiful and yet had never laid her eyes on you.

and then, you smile, after all on that poem inside those images, you appear to be lovable and she, is never one ordinary fan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes...

we need to be alone but not as cold as stone it is like that sunflower standing tall as ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes....

sometimes, when i look at the world through one narrow window of the airplane,
i shrink about the idea of jumping off again (which i once tried when i was too confused to take another day of life, during one of those lousy college days, when life seems to be too saggy, like a carpet losing hold of its thick threads,

sometimes, one has to look at the clouds thick, white, cottons, up there to know that, well, there is nothing certain about everything

up there
or down here
there will always be chaos.

RIC S. BASTASA
somewhere you speak of a star bigger thirty times than our star and you say you have seen it from your telescope
where you stand how the star explodes
and then
gone, leaving just a space, a patch of black dot
in your eyes,

i do not wish to understand you further with your calculations about the risks, the dangers, the consequences of what happens in that distant sky

here i am in my daily cares, i remember feeding corn to the chickens, or cleaning my car, or frying my cues, or simply sitting by the stair and just merely looking at the passing butterfly hovering
in the summer air

what do i know about distance?
what do i care about distant stars how they explode and how the space starts to become empty, and grow another star again?

what i know of is simple enough
i do not know you
anymore, and i think, i am about to explode and i think i may become empty like what you are telling me about that space left by the exploding star and i am afraid
i am the kind of person in this place
of the universe
that does not know how to grow a star again after an explosion

RIC S. BASTASA
Somewhere In The Wilderness

eddies of the travelling mind downward the ripples keep coming wading and wading to the shore and then coming back again rewinding and upsurging and then deathly on the sands the starfish kegs of crabs and squids over the lushing greens of seaweeds foams and air and whispers ingrained and imagined.

love, love, love and always love
over and over again
until death shall claim all these whims into that abyss

somewhere in the wilderness....

RIC S. BASTASA
Somewhere In An Old City Where He Was All Alone, what most he talked about was a record of the actions he chose, walking under the cover of dawn cold winds, and silence of the streets somewhere in an old city where he was all alone,

buttoning his shirt, zipping his jacket covering his head with a black scarf taking his time to think what to do next under this anxious circumstances he puts his hands inside the pocket of his pants, and then moves on....

RIC S. BASTASA
Somewhere In Chicago

health care is not in danger not affected by recession because the white people and the black people all level up to old age and no child shall ever have the time to care for each of them and so here you are too confident about your future cleaning the sheets administering the medication taking and throwing shits.

RIC S. BASTASA
somewhere in the middle of this journey is the chaos of our presence we like to dislodge and vomit of this nostalgia of where we come from we like to go back to the womb and regret having grown our legs we blame the hands of the midwife we want to pinpoint who slapped us we like to hear the sound of vengeance of our first cries

did we cry for help? did i cry because i never asked to be put here? or did i cry because i am just making a lot of nonsense about my innocence about despair?

i get some names of fathers and mothers and siblings i write them on a page of a book and i ask what if they were not there what could have been? what could i be part of?

i shout, i am an individual, i am not a part of this relating places i am not a connection of the branches and roots i stretch my hands wanting to touch and get hold of a rope there is nothing there to put my neck in shame.

we get some comfort to the miseries of others. we become brave from the stories of their sorrows and misfortunes.
we read the stories and the poems of those who know what is wrong.
what is pain, what is so distressing.

soon we learn this game. This art of shrugging our shoulders and then putting the payment on the table, not drinking the glass of beer.
Leaving the table and not saying any word at all. And this we tell ourselves, i am courageous. I am silent. I grow alone. I die alone. I am beautiful. it meets some people somehow and then it forgets

someday
what has been a big bother from that point of origin it is like shedding off skins and moving on undressing clothes and living a new life again in the eyes of pleasure it is like being born again along the way and hearing another sound of a cry that signifies another beginning somewhere is an opening a conversation that tells you something but always incompletely because you want it more interesting to someone who has not gladly traveled beyond
the clutches of one's hands
somehow
somewhere is an open hand still wanting to hold and be alive
with someone you just met giving you
a new island to explore a shore to walk upon without a specific direction free unrestrained and always not completely understood but still gives the possibility of love somehow you have not really lived transcendentally like a kite above the clouds like a fish above the water like a boat without a port like a bird above the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Somewhere Sometime Someday

carry this dream:
someday somewhere something which is best for your life will happen the windows shall open and the doors too without your hands touching them the hearts of your loved ones shall open and give you another room they will all welcome you and embrace you and you shall have tears of joy
so much joy that you cannot hold with your fingers all the dreams you have shall come true that one evening

the sky shall part and you slip through it into a world that you have never seen

RIC S. BASTASA
somewhere
i will go to a place that no one has ever gone,
somewhere
i shall take my rest and be myself again away from all of you my friends and lovers and halfway acquaintances
somewhere
i will meet someone that i have loved forever myself and my God (may He grant me peace and mercy)

RIC S. BASTASA
silliman memory twenty five years ago at the port in dumaguete my boat arrived from Cebu
from Davao
and there was a little shower of rain so fine and my hair was wet
and damp

and there she was waiting as i went down the stairs of the boat lowered down
she held me
by her hand
telling me that her love was true
and i kissed her telling her that my love was as true as hers

+++++++++++++++++
outside the rain begins
and it will never end
+++++++++++++++++

that was twenty five years ago for a love that never pushed through for a love that should have been true.

RIC S. BASTASA
Song Of A Rebel

When I tell you that I love you Always have in mind That I am human

I do not have the power
To bring you some faraway Stars to light
Your highness
Or dive the deepest oceans To bring you the precious Pearls
To adorn your Royal ears

When I tell you I will care for you Please understand
I am still on earth

Just like your other lovers
And friends
I experience the same pains
And joys
I carry with me common troubles

I am not superman or batman I am and look at me as I am Ordinary Human.

I am like the rest who also Know how to love this country.

I have my own world too
And so when I say that I love you And if you love me too,

Love me and the world that I carry Love too my world Love too my cause
Love too my rebellion.
(inspired by G.G.)

RIC S. BASTASA
Song Of India

we planted the songs of India just beside the fence at the front of our porch and they all see the beauty of the green and yellow stripes on the leaves of this bush so beautiful that a passerby cannot help but cut the twig and pretend that nothing is wrong with being a thief about something as beautiful as the Indian song

RIC S. BASTASA
Song Of The Kabuki Player

There is a pain aimless in the air tonight and it finds me as I am thinking of you I tighten my robe a bit thinking this way I shall be closer to what I suffer closer still to all that shame that once gathered arms against me then I hum to myself the odd song of the beggar maid to the storm knowing that something terribly old and ancient has been passed on to us by way of this air we breathe
and it is not saying anything

* Lilia Lopez-Chua

RIC S. BASTASA
i agree songs strike deeper in our inner cores each note striking a chord right at the center of our hearts, the lyrics spellbinding and the images create a world of each own so different from where we are sitting: your songs have spoken well and i think i am beginning to understand more: we have become a scale lesser than immortals but a scale higher than ordinary mortals, midway between feelings and dreams just a note higher than reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sonia......

she left
Israel
flew back to Mumbai
feeling secure that God
now lives
still
inside
her heart.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sons Snd Daughters Of My Country...

yes, they all come back,

sons and daughters of my country
wherever they may have sailed wherever they may have flown to search
that greener pastures in their minds,

after a while on dreams fulfilled or dreams that failed

they all come back and repair what had been neglected and put back what had been lost and broken their children lost from the warmth of their love soon shall find a home in the memory of their minds their country destroyed soon shall find the comfort back to their working hands

yes, they all come back
no matter what
this country is their home the place where their dead hearts shall soon be entombed

RIC S. BASTASA
Soon

soon my girl when the pain is unbearable
when your heart says
i won't beat anymore
i can't stand this misery of being left alone in the quagmire of your indifference

soon my girl when the night is dark and crowded with its thoughts and cares

soon when the burden seems to be heavier than the nine planets

the force is laid upon your shoulders
and head
and so you must kneel to receive all these in the name of God and all the saints and all the souls

it is not you who can save yourself
anymore.

Bow and say God Help me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soon I Will Write You A Nice Poem

if you can wait sooner than perhaps tomorrow evening i will write you a nice poem a simple one perhaps about the pigeons roosting in the roof of the house or perhaps about a spider spinning its own web of thoughts and fantasies or perhaps about a child building his snow castles in the air complete with his own fairytale or i can write you a food poem delicious to your tongue beef steaks
ice cream and salads and desserts

oh you are salivating you love food
ok, i'll write you some tomorrow but for now

i got to go and find my own survival kit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soon No One Stays

your friends
some of them your lovers your light in your darkness soon they shall pack their bags soon they shall leave
one by one
like the natural death of some flowers along the way that you pick there are no goodbyes no notes no letters left on the table or under your lampshade you cannot hear their footsteps moving away from you silently they all leave and you do not ask why and you do not cry

you know they will all leave you as they used to do leaving their loved ones too like the stories they are telling you incompatibility, utility, loss of love, waking up one day betrayed, the boredom of acquaintances, the marriage that did not work out, the broken home, the love that was untrue, the friendship of motives, unbearability of having this and that in the house, you have heard them, you get used to them, now, you do not care you let them go and look for places where they tell the same stories again again and again, this human frailty, this inability to stay, to stick it out this search for perfection where there is none

this search for the perfect partner where there is none this impossibilities of none probabilities

let them go
you have your own peace, at your own pace
your partner,
this imperfection that you sleep with you do not care now, where they go, what they will say again and again

you stay, in your silence, you have always stayed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soon You Shall Understand

There, there is
it is there, always, betrayal, it is, it is,
survival, there is, betrayal
that you do not
know,
it does not destroy,
it builds a home,
it does not hurt, it is a secret,
for the lives of both

RIC S. BASTASA
Soon You Will Be Like Us

soon you will be like us
we have grown our wings not without the pain for every bone and feather like the teeth growing on the gums of children there were cries and sighs why us?

why only us? where are the rest of the lonely people of this world?
are they dead?
did they kill them?
or are they just there in the nooks of silence waiting for us for every word that we say they must be looking and scrutinizing every syllable appraising every metaphor they are saying we do not deserve this loneliness we have not written much we have not filled each and every space the abscess and the absence we have not fully explained

RIC S. BASTASA
Soon You Will Find Out The True Taste Of My Being

you think of me
sweet as candy
you remember
my young days
of your yore

then we meet again one night
and i know how it feels like to pretend to be as sweet as you expect me to be

we talk we are sober we laugh
we like it
we listen to the music of the night
and we were so
silent we remember
so many things

and then you kiss me in my lips
and you know
how tasteless
my tongue has become through my lonely years

i know

when i close my eyes
i do not remember
anything at all

the image is like
the wind
and it merely passess coldly

so swift i never had the chance to feel anything

RIC S. BASTASA
Soon, Sometime

soon, is mother's usual word for hope so i may not retreat and lurk by the dark corner and weep.

soon when your papa comes soon when he is finally forgiven, soon when the storm is over soon when the house is again strengthenened by its walls and scaffolds soon when you grow up to be a man soon when you are big enough to understand what really is the matter why the roof leaks why the door is always closed why the glass windows are misty soon my son she says soon you will have stronger hands to hold on to a pillar soon my son you will have a brain that travels beyond this trifles soon my son you will have wings to fly and soon you will know that this life is our journey towards an uncertain destination soon my son you will know that you will always be going and going and goind soon you will know my son, that there is no stopping that there is only an overlapping

of waves and shore and waves and shore in the

never ending ebb and rise of life and death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sophistication

sophistication amidst the hunger of the masses becomes a curse to your further progress,

soon no native likes the company of your strictures no river is willing to carry you to the other end of the sea no moon shines upon you no sun rises on your brow how many times shall the black bird tell you in the plainest notes of her ordinary song simplicity is beauty

there is no other effective tool to be loved by your own people

be with them in the most ordinary even of their lives breakfast consisting of fish and rice and water and then a very nice conversation about the recent adventure in fishing there is no other effective tool than being loved by ordinary people as they are themselves, so shall you be yourself no pretensions
no sophistication
just simplicity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soren Kierkegaard is the existential, who one day reacted against tradition by insisting that the highest good for the individual is to find his uniqueness.

His journal reads,

'I must find a truth that is true for me... the idea for which I can live or die'

i agree. my own morality depends on me and not someone else my truth is the truth that i see from my very eyes for how can i look through the eye of another?

RIC S. BASTASA
Sorrow And Silence Walking Hand In Hand it is the sorrow that is always cold cold as the moist ground where the earthworms live it has hands less the warmth of the callousness

and it is the silence with a veil nothing to speak about that keeps on holding my heart it has no hands anymore but it has strong wings and sharp beak

there is a land somewhere where the eggs must be put to finally make out a sense of home

RIC S. BASTASA
Sorrow's Poem

now the letters start to blur the hands with its fingers turn the page of humiliation.

the mind sharp as a scalpel takes out the pus of existence puts it on a glass plate for viewing upon a high powered microscope and in it one sees the realism of the minutest detail about who we are not what we shall not become.

in simple terms, the dilemma of old age enters the temple walks steadily upon a bridge and finds again the tears a little fountain of the eyes where birds dare not.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sorry But I Don’R Follow Instructions

so i read your poem.

fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
but it is not my habit to find out how you are doing when you are no longer there to greet me when i arrive from a very long trip with someone else that you do not know that you are not interested with since it simply inflicts that pain that you are getting used to hello is strange word now. it is not my friend, neither is the word goodbye do not tell me that once i have said the word i get tired of its face the 'why' embedded in it is perplexing

if at all i give it a thought or a piece of my
mind

i like birds with strong wings those that travel far away and do not come back it they come back they only bring memories and sad stories

do i have to make a pool of tears again where some 'unfit' organisms for a time swim and then die?

i like birds with claws those that know what wars to fight out there sharp claws
that promise them to live some more years do not underestimate my capacity for sorrow my love for death

besides the birds i also have worms, lots of worms as friends they are too sympathetic to our causes accommodating to our weariness they know when to eat and rest and sing the funeral hymns.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sorry I Do Not Have A Foolish Heart

Sorry I do not have a foolish heart Loving her when she loves him Loving her when she fits him Loving her when the stars made her for him

I keep a love that loves someone who loves me I keep a love that makes the other grow I love the love that loves me in return

Sorry I do not have a foolish heart like hers She loves him but he loves the other She keeps him walls
she puts him in a cage
He runs he escapes he keeps on calling the other She loves him but he does not love her and she keeps insisting Sorry I do not keep a foolish heart.

That indeed makes my love so fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sorry Love

sorry
love for out of need
and practicality i,

who keeps my heart
below my head

has to feign you sometimes for reasons that you cannot understand

when i close my eyes
to kiss your lips
i am thinking of the future of my world

keeping it away from utter destruction
from its suicidal tendencies

and so tonight when the lights are off i shed off
all honesty

i embrace you on another pretense passionate and firm

RIC S. BASTASA
Sorry Sleep Is Too Short

It feels like
i have fallen
from bed

in that dream when i was about to kiss you

and then the
awakening comes too quickly

RIC S. BASTASA
Sorry, But There Is No Condom In My Pocket

so sorry, about last night i didn't have a pink condom in my pocket. I know pink is your favorite, and your flavor is strawberry and your lipstick is as red as what i can offer you. But i don't go for what is safe.

Oh, you must know the dangers that we are into.
Without condoms included.
I got this ring, you lose yours.
My wife is very understanding.
And we keep on talking that No one will know, that his is the best secret place in town.

I drive the red car to hell.
You think that this is heaven.
We eat fire. We excrete guilt.

When will be the next trip?
I am sorry, there is none.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sorry's Face

i look closely at what Sorry could be
its face:

eyeballs towards
the sky
chin stooping to
the earth
ears thinning
lips sealed every tooth hidden arms on the side as hands
conceal the fingers in the warm
pockets of the pants

the feet kneeling begging toes

and then the heart
stops beating like the drums of the wild hunters in Africa

then their is this quiet

sunset in a transition
darkness is sprinkled with
bright stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Sort Of Compliance....

guess you must have noticed that for the past few days this little world has been sick nausea as they name it has attacked the borders of creativity

but just the same the eyes have to wake up as a matter of habit and the hands continue to grapple with the keys pressing the words

sometimes the words themselves ask if they are really necessary for this morning’s attempts the mind does not explain everything must go and each must have a function of this certain compliance. As days go by, there must be at least a line or two along the doorway

Know Thyself. In fact it takes only two words to complete what we sometimes call as the responsibility of compliance.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soshana

i have spoken my lines that is what i am told to do and you have spoken your lines too and that is what they are telling you to do you cannot be my comfort distance are not arms and distance is cold like ice your words are mere words like faces without names i have spoken and you have spoken now i am going back to sleep it is done.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soul

tonight how can i be alone with my soul immersed inside a matter of not having to point the edge where substance begins where ether ends mesh and mash and wires and trenches
the body feels a fenced property on the other hand the soul feels this energy of atomic particles radiating like light penetrating glass a quantum physics kept which a want to read and yet i cannot really understand too well this intertwining of soul and body of thoughts and awareness of laughter and silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soul Mate

a day is not complete without her
and the nights are not as cold as they used to be until she takes the place of emptiness
on your side

in sleep you are more confident
no one harms
you even when old nightmares
come

you place back
your hands to the blossom of your mother

she places her hands on your hair sleeps is as sound
as the silence
of the cotton

RIC S. BASTASA
Soul Mate

your legs do not make me a waterfall,
your tongue do not make me
a river,
i am static as a rock amidst this turmoil i am a rope between two pillars that do not snap out,

it is strange
i do not delight in that skin and
flesh,
it is over now, and i arrive at the conclusion
i am not a vampire that needs your blood
i am no dog to your bone, i do not wish to taste anymore of your flesh

it is not over yet
i still love what essence is there i am looking for what you are not

to me
for all these years

i like you are air to my lungs as memory to my mind,

i like the conclusion now my soul wants to feel yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soul Mate, Are We

when we meet
we feel like we are complete i am always half of you and we fuse

how can we ever forget old stories and how can we ever stop telling about new ones?

i like to cut this tryst so i can go my way and you like to do the same we have scissors in our hands the sharp shiny ones yet we keep on going on and on like we are children of old longings

we make the daisy chains and there is no way we can cut the flowers no way to butt in with the seasons summer and springtime night and day

how do we really mind these ups and downs of pain and bliss?

they always intertwine always telling us over and over again that we are one that we are supposed to be one this time, this place, these bodies, these minds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soul Please Understand

Soul, you must understand how this body sleeps with you.

Soul, you must remember it has separate manners with you.

Soul, learn the sensual pleasures of this body, its twists and turns, its crooked ways, its perverted ways, its insatiability, even its evil ways,

Soul, you have all the patience, when the body is rested before its time is over, Soul, awaken it, shake it, let it shed off its dusts of errors, its stains of lusts, wash it with fasting, and repentance

Soul, be wise, and kind enough to save this Body, until it rusts and to dust it shall return, and Soul when you go up there, Forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
Soul, Life...

no poem teaches us poetry not an ant

thology of laureated poets, the books of grammar teaches only

places and the pauses like a flower arrangement do you still have life?

it is the one that teaches all things and leads you to all places

grammar and then metaphors of

what sorrows, lamentations, grief, greed,

joys, ecstacies.
bliss,

it is the vase with water the one in the garden that you choose to cut and aver and adore

not books, not other person's poems yours truly....

do you have a soul?

it is Soul/Body/I

body
i have to use you

soul
stay there
for a while

sooner
i will take care of you

body
keep calm
since i am
here
we shall be together

soul
tell me
when shall my angel
come?

RIC S. BASTASA
Sounds

i love the sound of the pouring of ice cold tea in the glass i watch your hands gracefully handling this matter between us i love the sound of your sipping i love the sight of your hands holding

i love life
i love everything around me as my world revolves around you i want to tell you, i love you so.... just a wish, nothing is real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sounds From Kindergarten Kids

Kindergarten kids Running, shouting, playing, chasing

Wild, cheering, mocking and quarreling and befriending In such short span

From where you are writing And studying, thick files, and big books And you look into these things Taking notes

Through your thick reading glasses You look at time

How time passed so quickly?

Once, the kindergarten in you and your mama telling you she will always be watching you and on that first day, you did not cry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sour

some fruits are loved for their being sour

it is their sourness that reminds of their essence like the green mango it is even missed more than when it ripened

but with you my love
do not worry

sour or sweet or bitter
we will always be together

RIC S. BASTASA
Sour And Salty Taste

to choose between the sweetest lie
and the bitterest
truth
the way you
evaded me
i guess
you have chosen
the former

my truths
are never sweet
i am also both salty and
sour

RIC S. BASTASA
South Of The River

how can i forget south of the river? in May, the flowers are red all over the bend in April the purple plums are ready for the picking in March, the river is clear the pebbles showy for our frolicking and swimming, we first kissed there behind that heart shaped rock
south of the river

RIC S. BASTASA
Southern California

how i wish to say:

'You are so beautiful Southern California...

i see
In Southern California
the wine makers Planting their grapes in their fields '

but i have never been to Southern California and i would be lying if not bluffing to say

the same,

but let me (see) er, SAY:

Barangay Dos, Katipunan
You are so beautiful to me the muscled arms of Filipino farmers are plowing the brown muddy fields while the women bow down wearing their buri hats planting the rice......

i am watching them
under a tree
the wind blows
on my luxury.

RIC S. BASTASA
Souvenir Items....

one takes a part
only of the whole
to remind you
of everything.

that is the secret
of remembering.

for instance, when i went to Iceland,
i only pick a pebble
which i got near the geyser.

a leaf from Vienna
was enough, which i put between the pages of my favorite novel.

the most usual thing which is easier to carry is a ref magnet.

no postcards this time but some pictures in my cellphone.

in the Buddhist temple in taiwan, i only took with me within my lungs
the cold air there and many are wondering if it stays there

i am sure. For as long as i live, it will always be
there
for now, all the ref magnets fell, losing their magnetic grip on the metal plates

i still believe in air, it is lasting. Next time i will take a chunk of Tibet's cloud.

or perhaps sunshine from Mongolia as though it is like a note which i keep inside my pocket.

RIC S. BASTASA
'And gradually they're beginning to recognize the fact that there's nothing more secure than a democratic, accountable, and participatory form of government. But it's sunk in only theoretically, it has not yet sunk in completely in practical terms.'

on practical terms
the neighbors are still selfish with their words and works

deep in their hearts
they never like
the democracy
that you are giving them: they still like to be violent and kill whoever blocks
their way to their churches and houses and cinemas and gambling dens

RIC S. BASTASA
'When I first came out - I spoke just now about this need for human company, but after I first came out, I remember that after a few days I just couldn't stand so much company.
It became too much again for me and I couldn't wait until I could go away
and isolate myself somewhere.'

did i not talk about my wish to have wings
and be with you
sitting on a tree
and be with all of you in the field of ripe rice grains?

did i not think after that i need to be alone and wish that i have fins
to be in the silence of the depths
of the sea?

did i not wish at the end that i have always wanted simply to be a stone to be thrown to the face of another person?

did i not wish simpy to be under a handful of stars without any syllable in my tongue?
Soyinka, At The Tip Of My Hair

I don't really consider myself a poet, it just came out purely by accident.

i just fell down from a stair down to the grassy ground and that started the first poem to another poem to another poem like a stair leading me to nowhere but there is no fear really just this sense of comfort and beauty all around the dusk and twilights of my moments

RIC S. BASTASA
Soyinka, In My Body

'I found, when I left, that there were others who felt the same way. We'd meet, they'd come and seek me out, we'd talk about the future. And I found that their depression and pessimism was every bit as acute as mine.' and i remember the talk when we simply sit down on that small space in the park where all the children have already left for home when we face the sunset and when we were talking on the same vibrations same vocabulary

same talk same theme same outlooks and same hope for the healing of the dying light

when we feel at home with ourselves without seeing each others' eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Soyinka, Intro

'But the ultimate lesson is just sit down and write.
That's all.'

so with you charles.
and so with me
here i am writing and writing ang writing

that's all
no questions asked
anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Space Between...

there is a space between the eyes
it sees better the eyes also of the observer

RIC S. BASTASA
Space Is Beautiful

i need not teach you where to escape the exit is always there waiting for you
and from a distance
when the tremor of your sad beginning is heard
once again
you must sing
to conceal what tragic ending awaits you

i do not point
with my fingers where you must be happy
you know it

it is always away from home always it is out there beyond us
as the chasm widens
we shall notice that space is not emptiness at all but beauty
unspoken.

RIC S. BASTASA
Spam

patiently you weave the mat put there the design of life hope
love
and you color it with a special dye blood
sweat
tears
and when the mat is finished you look at it with a certain contentment all your longings are interwoven a beautiful mat where my love can sleep the mat contains the wind and the coolness of ferns the warmth of two lovers not seeing each other for years what your neighbors say do not really matter now

RIC S. BASTASA
Spasm

promises
of the red scythe
now rusty
with the urine
of the frog

and so the eagle soars
in the sky

because
all the
the good men do nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Speak About The Love She Gave You speak about it freely given

all of it
nothing left for anyone else

the love she gave you is everything
inside her
she is emptied
like a balloon
that you just pricked deflated

only you can make her whole again breathe in the love you have taken empty yourself too
and be deflated
for once

how does it feel?
it feels like
you are rising
the more you breathe out the more air
you too breathe in

it feels like
you are full
you are so light
and now you are flying

RIC S. BASTASA
the night deepens
burying me ten fathoms more without the stars
i take courage in my silence speak i not till the sun comes till the flowers bloom again i speak not of my own sorrow
even to hear them must i not for it is mine alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Speaking

someone inside me wants to speak with his heart i know who it is but i am not listening for he smells like a rotten fish after all those years of being caught uncooked.

RIC S. BASTASA
Speaking Before A Gathering In Marriage

i spoke before a gathering of the newlywed
whose faces are as fresh
as the newest morning in the village and this i emphasized that for a marriage to work even when the flickers
of love fade
always resort to the comfort of having no expectations
at all

that you cannot change
what you are
and so the only thing
to do
is accept what is there and not to
question
what we are and how we become.

RIC S. BASTASA
Speaking The Truth...

simply must you speak the truth,
do not choose the word,
say it when you fell like it,
like the way you make love with me,
no clothes, skin to skin, no light, windows open,
the moon is our single witness,
the air spreads the news
tonight...

RIC S. BASTASA
Speaking The Words Of Loneliness....

i speak the words of loneliness it flows with the rush of the river it flies with the wind from the west it is blown towards you who live at the foot of the mountain under the tall trees

despite the drought

this worm waits when will be the next leaves come when will be the next bloom of flowers in the middle of my drought.

RIC S. BASTASA
Spectator

On a Sunday
at nine
he sits by the window
watching
people passing by bringing their burdens
he is not part
of this
sacrifice
he is the spectator
watching the day pass by

till the next level of
his lazy enlightenment
the sun fades away
and now the moon
he sits by the window
imagining
the night away

it will be the same on
another day of his life
this spectator

RIC S. BASTASA
Speech Of The Father's Bride To The Groom On Their Wedding

tonight i shall be giving away my daughter to become your wife i have taken care of her
so well
no mosquito has ever landed on her skin no fly hovered over her hair tomorrow she shall live with you and she will be taking her clothes and other belongings

please love her just like the way we love her but if for some reason there may be disagreements and you decide to part away from her please do not say any unkind word do not hit her with your hands just let her return to us and that will be enough.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Speech To Myself

i do not want to be responsible about what i write like the way i write some words on the sands of the shore where the waves of the sea do the erasing to give me another clean slate again but it is not as simple as that, i guess what i write on some pages of this space is read by a lonely creature who takes everything by heart in order to live for another day and i like the way how my words may serve as guide or inspiration for the night like some stars distant but giving light still but what if i had written something too depressing and then the reader puts an end to life will i still be not responsible?

oh, i must be careful with what i write there are lonely people out there like boats without anchor without ports to go needing the light of the North star

or the lighthouse somewhere who knows? we could be these lonely people

or the lighthouses giving the light of home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Speechless And Blank Space

a speechless woman
meets her blank space as she rides on a glass windowed bus
back home

she steps outside her world
embraces love and hate both to same degree

she sets aside all words in favor of thoughts she sits facing the mountains and then the sea

it is all in her head and there is no space for writing that's why. Yes, that is the reason why she married

solitude.

RIC S. BASTASA
Speechless.....

it is blank, i do not see anything but here is everything spread before me, all, all of it, tiny little things, with all the colors in broad daylight,
i simply have not chosen any word yet for it i am confused, there is so much abundance, profuse, opulent
light and dancing leaves wind, and breeze and colored clothes hanging there
boats with their rainbow sails,

i am speechless
there is so much and i have no word for all these beauty,

perhaps, there is no fair word to describe what beauty is, or what could i be to them.

RIC S. BASTASA
Speechless.....X X X

I, perhaps
love you
because your face looks like the past
that i love so well

if, you can read my mind,
i know
that this is grossly unfair

my love is mute

but the word that i give
you

is (to please you once more)

speechless....

RIC S. BASTASA
Speed

rising from oneself to the highest
sky
alone flying and diving
and those who watch
thought that this is plain nonsense
for that seagull
may finally shatter its bird's head
to a rock
it is not as simple as that
the seagull has learned the trick
of smashing itself
on the water
like a rocket
with a fuel at its back to speed to art

to life!

RIC S. BASTASA
Spell Sorrow

you give him the image of the moon as it shines now without the stars as you gaze upon the sky alone (you skip the two 'r's intentionally and you throw away the 's')

the two 'o's of the moon are there as usual you keep what was doubled when you simply stand there without any word.

it is you.

RIC S. BASTASA
you will hear the language that I learn when I speak to you
it will only be myself who shall understand

RIC S. BASTASA
Spiritual Nudity

the challenge for spiritual nudity is not exciting at all, imagine what are you baring?

what are you daring?

you bare spiritually naked and then parade your spirit by the pool and those who expect something exciting only sees nothing.

i am not excited at nothing.
and Nothing excites me anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Spit To God

how foolish of you to spit to God who lives in the sky
the spit returns
back to you who lives on earth below

and you smell
as foul as your own dried spittle.

spit to God &
you spit on your face.

as you hate me
shall you hate yourself

you get hurt so badly
and i am so sorry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Spitting And The Principle Of Utilitarianism

it starts with a little agitation inside your throat the nerves send the signal to the brain for a clearer understanding of this tiny disturbance reverberating this tickle not really pain, this mass of liquids telling you it is a saliva wanting to get out from your system and all the nerves now keep telling you there is no use keeping such a mass of disturbance inside your throat there is no need anymore and the last thing you know is what you did without regret

you spit it out away from you

RIC S. BASTASA
Splinters

there are
silent
explosions of our worlds
which we keep as secrets

eye are not the kind that fourths of july speak about

we collide sometimes explosions occur again & again
and splinters of broken selves
lay in space
floating like spaceships with consumed
batteries

what is strange is that we see all the splinters ourselves and we entertain hope that soon this will be over and that our very hands wounded

can still pick up the pieces and make an artistic mosaic of our bits and pieces
and we shall call them
us.
Splitting Images

often repeated
days are folding
a fault line
an image of land splitting rivers rise
between us an ocean in such a short time
yet we never notice it until we never see each other's shadow again two islands
between us boats
going to other places talking of other ports
my fault
i never told you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Splitting...

now i am comforted.
got used to doing another and thinking about another, if only i have
to survive,
i have to split this self into halves, one for you
savor it
and one for me
so i can always
forget.

then we live
as happily as ever after.

i am assured
this world too is split into a day and
a night

a face of demarcations the happy one
and the
grieving one

in their unity
a world is created
yours, mine
theirs, ours,

do not guess
this is more real

RIC S. BASTASA
Sponges Of The Heart....

faces do not matter now a long time ago
a mole cannot escape
the mention

of an island
that lonely thing that keeps us agape
about why

faces come like waves of people that we do not really care to know who they are

and what they are apt to

they pass us by
and we pass them too
in that mutuality
of indifference

we are like saturated sponges all wanting heat to be empty again

RIC S. BASTASA
Spontaneity

on a spontaneity
i begin to put words, whatever comes, without much selection process i put the word
without so much scrutiny as to what happens next without weighing the possible consequences i know the law of physics much more the rules of a good composition we were taught that in the university but the the rules true to its standing are meant to be broken one gets a style of his own depending on the kind of grief
the face of joy the state of compulsion the phobia and the scruples that crowd the head
the heart,
i sit on the chair facing the screen of the computer and begin to put the line of words
one by one
like they are vines growing right from my mouth coming out from my chest
and then
something shows
a face of words, the eyes of the certain mood, someone moves in there dancing and then stopping on a pause confrontational about what is this all about
and why.

RIC S. BASTASA
Spontaneity...

spontaneity is when you are busy eating your breakfast and suddenly a chicken egg is thrown at you and
with all the powers of your instinct
despite that sausage
stuck in your mouth you still catch that surprise
saving it
from crashing to the floor
thus catching it
whole.

RIC S. BASTASA
Spontaneously

luck knocks at the door
you ask it
to leave

it doesn't
it is hardheaded
it claims you
as its new master

then you dismiss it
again
you are still hurt
for many years
you prayed for it wasted all your days and nights invoking it

waddled in pain dreaming for it
it did not come
it did not listen to you

and now?
you shoo it
like an unwanted bird in your field
of sunflowers

in your garden of ordinary days where you expect
nothing
anymore from anybody or anything
anywhere

this way
you make a conclusion
with or without it
you live
and you are happy
spontaneously.

RIC S. BASTASA
Spontaniety

the kids have it
their ways too easy on this play, one's offense so easily forgiven

when they are new they do not need much time to befriend their own kind they do not ask for names when they meet they become attuned to their feelings and the all become one gang of friends in the neighborhood there are quarrels and petty as they seem to be but they do not fight wars for that long

peace perhaps shall reign when we become children again

RIC S. BASTASA
Spontaniety 101

no excuses at this hour we do what we can do just that no language barrier over feelings that gush like wall clocks and springboards you stand naked on top of our sights on that board below is the blue water of the pool it is deep and then you let go of that body and like a bullet penetrates the plainness
not painless really but there is this sense of i did it
i did it
on purpose and those of you you see that embrace regret.

RIC S. BASTASA
Spoon Feeding

when love is handed
on a platter
one begins to take it for granted

when love is being spoon-fed
on a mouth that is not as hungry
as a lover deprived of sex for months
love becomes so ordinary like a traffic routine
like brushing your teeth
every morning or taking a hot shower
at night

love misses
wants something like the adventures of tarzan
the quest of freedom
for a
lawrence of arabia
love misses
those which are
film-like a movie of the night
where endings
sometimes
are too surprising where beginnings
are strange
enough to know that love has just began

we must try
this: love unknown.

RIC S. BASTASA
Spring Of The Soul

over there
the flowers are waking from bud
sleep

open a window
give God a little space to be with you

put an empty chair of the
heart
where God may sit and dwell

on the same direction
both eyes
thirst for joy....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sprouting As A Phoenix By Em

does no less than denude its object of the one thing which he has which is of value, and so it degrades him effectively.' subjectify me?

where?

it is only through our communion that you make me a subject when you go away again

you may think
that i have become a stone

you are wrong
you have already subjectified me as a bird with eight wings did you not see it in the navel of my body?

did you not smell it on the scent of my armpits? when you were inside me did you not feel that i am someone so different than before when you only caressed my hair and kissed my neck and licked my butt? lover, do not underestimate my being for i am being and you are being
in fact
i am more free than what you are to your pebbles i am the river to your twigs i am the leaves to your clouds i am now the winds of chances i now own the world
inside my mouth
and my tongue knows how to play your games i am now a goddess transformed by your love from the mud that i used to be it is enough then as you leave to your world where your heart belongs i have already sprouted as a Phoenix.

RIC S. BASTASA
Square Minds...

do not wonder amigo why we think the same, do not forget we were in kindergarten together and the same
ms. old maid trimmed our circle minds into square cuts like the way we look today: square jaws, square minds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Squirting And Whirling

poetry is sawdust
after you have sewn wood

it is what you throw after you peel

it is the settling of sand
that you pour upon a glass of water

something that i draw wildly
upon an empty canvass with paints
whirling and squirting

confetti during a revolution somewhere in manila
after the dictator left.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ssssssssssh, Please Do Not Talk About It

sssssssssssshhhh
be silent now, do not ever mention my name the connotations of my name the one i talk about me about you
and us,
the rumors are always sweet and you like them and you cannot hold yourself from spreading them to everyone who knows the power of my name its magic spell its sweetness like a coconut dessert with you now my name shall have its stains and i will be in ruin ssssssssssssshhh, stop do not talk about my name now, the rumors may be sweet to the ears of my enemies and false friends

they will have the dose now, of their own medicines, thinking that i am down, depressed, or even dead to the last detail of my own perdition, i will rise to save myself and tell them all that the rumors are not true, i will show them a happy face and some dancing steps some pictures of my big smile no, they will not believe me they will believe you, as expected, i have anticipated all these today, i will die laughing....

RIC S. BASTASA
St Anthony The Great

He saw all the devil's traps set upon the earth, and groaned and said, 'Who do you think can pass through them?'

And he heard a voice saying, 'Humility.'

RIC S. BASTASA
St Frances Xavier Cabrini

he travelled he worked and his health suffered he met and was weakened by a thousand difficulties but to him
all those were nothing

this world is so small the sufferings whatever were they were just few to him this world is nothing

the space is too small
imperceptible

because he is accustomed to dwell in eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
St. Catherine

the first time
i saw a Bedouin in St. Catherine

he drove us in his old white car
fading with the dust
everywhere

he has four wives and eighteen children
and four horses

he owns no house but he has also five camels

he tells his story about Moses and Sinai and the burning bush and the tablets

at twelve the monks will hold mass
inside the monastery

we have to pay him 30 U.S. dollars each.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sta. Ana Wind

have you ever
send autumn leaves
falling
making a heap
of yellow and brown
and orange
on the ground?

in the same manner
i have not seen
the sta. ana wind but you make me feel
as though
i am within the softness of the wind

the falling of the leaves so sweetly

i love it
when you set me free finally

my hair
keeping some of the
sta. ana wind
my hands
letting go the autumn leaves
in my mind

RIC S. BASTASA
Stability

when you wake up
in the morning
the night before when you were drunk

you open same window beside your bed
you watch the same clock and you reset it
at the same time

the air outside is cold and the drapes begin to dance to the nuances of what is sad and daily same thing over and over

again
upon enumerated acts and
things

this is living and there is nothing new this is pure routine and
stability.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stabs Of Silences

a word slips from my tongue slithering to your mouth and from this distance i look at you as you oblige a smile which disturbs my peace for i must have revealed much of myself to you who already knew all the answers to my dead end questions. these are the moments of you know me and i know you and we often end each other with that stabs of silences....

RIC S. BASTASA
Stage Four

stage four is of course, sure death.
the nerves are swerving and convoluted to utter disbelief. he says, four months more, no bonus, not bogus, not a leaf of lettuce that you play with your teeth or tongue no figure of speech can save this inevitable crashing of cells. age four, spell four, i will spell it for you. There is no word to start with about tomorrow. There is no tomorrow. It is clipped.
And cut and set aside. There will be some discussions for a while.
Where to leave the pen and paper. And the basket of daisies and glossy red apples. The green ones have to be give away as early as the sixth day of our agony. Less pain you want it?
A glass of clear water. Pills and pins. Touch my hand.
I will tell you i love you (20x) but it is late. The sun at the port is setting earlier than expected. The steamer has arrived.
No it isn’t. It is an old wooden boat docked by the side of a very old river. Shadows. Darkness. Ripples of the river.
I hear the sound of the black bird. It is your name now that is called.
A hand with a candle. I see you taken,

What is important now is the peace of this bed.
It will be empty at the nearest hour. My love shall never die.
I whisper it to you. Closed eyes. Another journey and then That man in the dark, drives us away and takes you.

To the other side of this lonely island.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stage Three

no one enters the house using the door.
The doors close without the use of hinges and locks.
The living room is turned upside down.
The traces of my steps are a myriad labyrinths of puzzles, cross, crescent, moon, sun, stars, and dead leaves just below the body of a rotting log.

Log on. Say some more. This is freedom.
The railings are roses. The stairs are rivers.
The walls are faces of the one you make love.
The roofs are ideas. Theories live there and metaphors Abound in the living is an old piano and you Begin to play: Vienna woods. You dance the waltz with her.

Whispers mossy on the carpets. The toilet is kept empty And shiny white tiles, glossy to the feel of your fingers.
The bedroom is bare. You too complete the picture.
An hour of sex. Gracious! This house is the most beautiful House of our neighborhood.

It is not our home yet. Tomorrow we unpack.
The distance is our journey. And it is somewhere else With someone you still love. It is not I.

I am just a picture: black and white, and dusty.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stages Of Discovery

soon the walls are no longer working, the stairs are not worth the climb, the skin no longer holds this flesh, at first, you are naked and beautiful, then you become those ugly bones, and then you are gone the place is without any mist there is no air, and then what irony is this, we are both complete and happier, in this newly found emptiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stages Of My Own Growing

All the defenses i made have fallen

i have become vulnerable
and now

waiting to be slaughtered by the armored

truths of my being, but i still have hope that all these are but stages of my own growing

till i become invulnerable
again

RIC S. BASTASA
Stained And Even

It was only one dirty word You had thrown in my face My right eye caught it like it Were a hand
My tears carried the word Like a virus to my veins Infecting all my organs As I got sick the following days
Of my life

I know what happens next But I cannot just die until I vomit that dirty word That now I throw back At you, then the rest becomes History,

Some eulogies are written
As a compromise
Of this hate,
This one is for you
That you rest in peace
As I wait
For my own peace too
In my own time sooner Than tomorrow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stalk

some get penalized
for stalks,

stalkers not allowed here
and you are warned.

what are stalks
anyway?
why should we dislike
stalkers?

come to think of it. Hold the stalk and let your fingers run
towards the flower.
Feel the petals
and smell
the scent.

now you are a stalker.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stand By Me

on the night that has come
on a night that is so dark when the moon
even we cannot see

please stand by me
stand by me
oh stand by me

(do you remember the song? sing it for me then)

RIC S. BASTASA
Stand Or Even Leave.

please
take your seat.
Sit if you like,
If you don't Stand
or even leave.

please
i say the word.
please.

but i do not
beg.
i say it with dignity.
stay.
if you like.

when i say
please
i accept
that you are not
at all
completely mine.

and neither i am yours
completely.

now, since you
are staying
i am thinking
far away.

i mean,
the consequences.
i think
this is wisdom.

Love
always understands.
why.

RIC S. BASTASA
Standing By The Brook One Day

a stone from my hand ripples the waters of the brook taking me to the turmoils of childhood.

RIC S. BASTASA
Staring At A Word...

it is this spontaneity that keeps us going there is no count nothing about what's next
nothing planned, we are passive receptors of what this future brings us upon a plate of waiting, chairs may float in the air the house may sail like a ship the skies may just be like space trips and unexplained as they are unidentified

like the way we feel when we come again together in this nakedness of thoughts flowers blossom no one pulls its stamen the sun is up at whose command?

the waves move together towards that direction as clocks tick, and ducks sail as i try to capture the words to make things what they are. There is no such thing.

i stare at a word, and force no meaning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Staring At My Face In The Mirror One Evening for a long time that i stared at my face in the mirror one evening when the church bell

went ringing

midnight, yes, that was midnight

i saw my face as a skull and i was not afraid anymore i must have been dreaming i am not sure anymore

was it my soul in the mirror?
i doubt it

it was so white.

RIC S. BASTASA
Staring At The Ceiling

it was when i was about to squirt
a useful, clinging idea between my head and ceiling
when the lights went out it is a blackout again in this ruined country

i go up the house
lay on a bamboo bed
and rest my hands on my head
opening my eyes
i stare on the ceiling for more questions on my mind
this existential questions like lizards
waiting for mosquitoes
lost
ready for the eating

RIC S. BASTASA
Staring At The Dead Mouse

i poisoned that mouse which ate my cheese
that i left
under my bed,
till now i do not know
the reason,
why that cheese
was there, why i left the mouse dead
on the floor,
why i stared at it
as though
i am sharing my guilt with the cheese
and the poison.

RIC S. BASTASA
Staring At The Monitor

i know i am not alone experiencing this kind of stare at the monitor when you think you cannot write not because there is nothing to write anymore but because you will not to.

of course you regret such kind of decision that negates what you are what you do what hardheaded man are you,

you begin again not thinking what thoughts are shaped of there is no form that convinces you everything is fluid like air shaping itself upon every emptiness of its container

what makes this void that takes a shape inside our brains?
what keeps us busy thinking about nothing what makes us so passive like empty balloons taking the shape of air pushed from the mouth of our beholder?

ah, you may say you are beholden to no one it is the same thing that i keep on saying to myself we like to think that all are smooth that at the end paradise reigns
again
that we are welcome that no one shall be punished and forsaken but i have seen the death of one there inside his locked room three days
gunned
foul
his body rotten the guide was the group of flies telling

here is the one who thought there are no rules even in love

ddy is he
he is dead and those who are alive has something again to think about the void that fills the spaces of our pores our hearts hungry again for instruction our bodies
waiting for the next line

RIC S. BASTASA
Staring At The Sun In Protest

staring at the sun on a noonday in protest of what is happening to all of the honest people the annihilation of those who still have integrity

i get blinded with too much heat and penetrating light of the powers that be expectantly i must surrender for there is no other choice they keep on reminding me but i did not and i will not in too much loneliness and feeling left out in the corner of my choices i begin to see the faces of my truths these truths

all these painful truths of a democracy veiled in the euphemisms of evil ones

i have no regret the voice of God speaks and that is enough for me my body is torn and rotten my soul is emerging triumphant at the end...

RIC S. BASTASA
Staring At You

We sound the same
I mimicked you for twelve years Like a mynah bird
Your choice of words
Your accent
Nasal like the American guest professor of ateneo de manila university

To a certain point
I wanted to be like you.

One night I went out
Of my body
Like a wind
I went into you as you breathe For air

I took the tours
In your mind and detours in your heart And even in the sensitive Places of your loins & groins
To find what is in you
That I love

I stayed longer in the chambers
Of your heart
On a closer scan of your arteries a closer, careful look

I did not find you there I did not even see My picture of my face that you said You really love

We sound the same I thought We were never alike
We have never really spoken i am shaken
Now I am back in my body
To be myself, this time just be myself

Staring at you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stars

the stars
are not just cozetted
in the heavens

if i trace my feelings
the stars are in your hair

down to your neck down to your thighs

i gaze at all these stars
trap them in the net of my hands smell them
and even taste
all of them

stars of my flesh
stars of my soul

RIC S. BASTASA
Starting Anew

i touch my chin
and scratch my cheek
there is something
a thought that keeps recurring with a note of an old piano
music
i am trying to remember it
but i can't

it is about our love, i suppose, it was nice,
but i must, i decide, bury the note in the deep silence
of the sea

i am making new tracks
on the shore
i am passing a river

RIC S. BASTASA
Starving

i may have starved for food not having dinner with you but i have seen you tonight and you smile at me and you wave your hand

and i let you go with him my love i am more than full i may be hurt, but my love i am satisfied i am more than full seeing you so happy with him

RIC S. BASTASA
State Of Affairs

there is a stain of cocoanut oil in my eyeglass and i keep on writing
and writing
whatever comes in my mind i am patient with the vagueness that the glass is providing me at any rate
the feeling is that i am shedding tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
State Of Mind

what i keep on hearing today are the sounds of your footsteps moving away from me, what can i say

i have no hold of you

i wish you a good life i wish that love like a star shall give you light to guide your way...

take care
this journey is not over...

RIC S. BASTASA
Stating The Obvious

when i arrive here
she left

there is no note
or text message

i do not have to say anything too

we both understand what need not be said

i love it here
she goes home without me home is without her too

RIC S. BASTASA
Statue

for how long can i be a statue in this house

stuffed

afraid to make the wrong move that you finally discover that i am human too

........it will depend when you finally leave

tomorrow

next week will be quite long for our pretenses we will be humans again you are always cruel

in your quest for perfection

RIC S. BASTASA
Status Quo

350 days he studies it and arrives at a conclusion that it should be that (what motive is there? what weather has changed? the prosecutor is asking) in 35 days after the careful scrutiny as it is named there is a change of his mind it should not be that, the bird caught in the net must be set free

and so the broken winged bird was freed no way it can fly
a bone had been permanently broken and the cage has been a nice home to it i am left with this emptiness a space between bench and door between a you and I,

I will be writing a short sentence to all these
chaos.

i shall leave things as they are.

RIC S. BASTASA
Status Quo Ante

looking at her in my silence how i wish i can tell her the sweetest lie that i can muster to whisper in her ear

i myself cannot tell it to myself i let things go as smooth as perfect as it should be in status quou ante

there is no problem there is no problem really or if there is any it will just take care of itself even if i shrink like a gnat i will keep my silence just to make her happy

( Perhaps ) because i have loved her that much and i do not want to accept it definitely, it has nothing to do with the charms of an attraction it is not there

the room is empty of its scent and the wind is not there anymore it is the solitude of an empty room lights are switched off and the beautiful evening begins anew no complication no questions just the two of us sleeping soundly like the notes of music on a score that is closed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stay And Die....

others may have come seeking pleasure others merely for the unleashing of a burden for so many reasons
there will be more arrivals
and there will be no more
leavings
no goodbyes
this is the place to stay
and die....

RIC S. BASTASA
Stay Put

dearly beloved my dearly beloved self
stay put
sit and settle upon your feet haggled upon your hands upon your fingers let all things come upon you
the air caressing your body the world under your feet your soul crowned by the clouds the space the universe building its castle upon you this being hugged by everywhere
and everything

chair offering a seat for you house offering a roof stairs spreading before your feet they are all coming for you have become aware and enlightened and
set free.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stay, And Let Him Solve The Puzzle Of A Door,

the way to avoid a silly confrontation is to take silence as an option, let the disturbance
talk, provide the words, follow each thought walk through it till the end, if there be a dead end,
stay, and let him solve the puzzle of a door, let him discover the story of the escapist who jumped over the fence, run his way to the other field, and declare his own freedom never to return to you
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Staying At Home...

amidst the heavy rain beneath the roof we built beside our walls and on the surface of the warmth of our floors
we habituate on this house that with love and compassion we are humble enough to call our home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Staying Put.....

because i like to make things simple now, or even simpler than simple i cut edges, prune time, taking only what is necessary to my hand and not to the eye less colors, belittling events, unifying tiny forces into one
breathless moment abstracting the least from the most significant trimming even gestures chewing syllables to my delight reviewing patterns and staying put.

RIC S. BASTASA
Steam

Steam
of the body
letting out heat absorbing
the kindness of the other one who does not love you but gives in because the other begs even for a very slight fleeting moment
of time's
careses.

RIC S. BASTASA
Steam Bath Thoughts

it is hazy, inside there are clouds hanging on the ceiling, lots of steam in here,

and it is here that i find what i want love seems to be not what i want anymore

it is hazy, but i find it here it is hot and steamy and it makes me forget what i am and who you are.

RIC S. BASTASA
things that amaze you sometimes your hands holding on to something too tightly yet you hold not a grain of those beans spilling all over your feet the sound of violin playing slowly at the opening and then faster
at the end
your feet cannot hold the dance hidden inside your heels you step and tiptoe on the street as people gaze at you a girl looks attentively and sways her head saying it does not look good for a woman at 45 still behaving like a child what a shame she says when she behaves like a woman despite the pinches that she receives from mother and there is the man who dusts off a tinderbox as he finally finds his hidden treasure his toy soldiers all stuff like that taken away from him when he was once a young boy beaten almost to death by a cruel father.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stenographic Notes

every word is accounted for there are numbers
there is weight and probative value you either win or lose by the scales of another creature's subjective mind

good luck
may you not rot
but grow

wisdom is slim and lean and scarce
it is both hunger and thirst at the common denominator you know is pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stenogrphe

i catch her reading my poems
on the internet

and she could not believe it why i am writing poems

and she asks me
why?

well, i write because i have nothing to do and i like it

when no one understands me who likes to read poetry anyway?

you?

drama.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stepping Into Something New This Summer

white sea spreading before me so silky
tiny ripples of the wind from a far bringing some stories from the other island

some leaves fall from the pitogo tree
some flowers pink and white lay on the shore

white sands of silence
and peace
soft whispers of the winds seeping in my skin
i am barefoot
i am naked down to the waist
i am waiting for the sun to descend upon the bosom of the horizon
i am dreaming of palm trees soft winds
of summer

a door opens in my mind i get in stepping into something new this summer

RIC S. BASTASA
Stepping On The Stairs

in wanting to go up you step on the stairs

on the first step you have to please this black dog with the meat of a cat

on the second step you have to deceive this white cat with the whiskers of a fish on the third step you have to please this pink mouse with a collar of a black dog rising on the fourth step you have to convince the hawk that the white cat is dead advancing on the fifth step the bull demands that the fish must be caught with its fins clipped off the sixth step is meticulous you have to find a way to reconcile the black cat and the white dog on the seventh you will be confused what to do and whom to really please to reach the eight step the ninth step has this owl speaking to you to finally proceed to the tenth step

and you want to advance some more trying to figure out what these animals are asking you to do without creating all the chaos you want to please them all to get what you want finally you take the tenth step and you are too weary and guilty and up there you find there is really nothing worth the taking at the end

there is just the wind blowing your hair telling you nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Stepping Out Of The Door After A Cruel Storm

i step out of the door

i open a world
of surviving daisies

foliate
to find
the first light of the morning
sun

after the night's cruel storm

RIC S. BASTASA
Stereotyping

for one thing
the insects work on instincts

the lone ant
always follow the other ant

just like the worms
en masse
going to a direction that they do not really know

the misdeed of one cannot always be the misdeed
of all

a tick
and another tick how can they
be the same?
for sure

RIC S. BASTASA
Stevens

after he gave him the money he walks away just like that and it was many years back then and he cannot remember his face
anymore
except
the flowers and the tributes

it is very cold

of course,
he died.

that is what
happened.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stewardship

you claim ownership based on hardship, this land, this house this car
you touch the skin of your forehead reminding those who see you emaciated
of the sweat and the hairs lost

there is that time when the car breaks down, the house foreclosed (as it is on mortgage) when the land does not bear any fruit someone takes it you begin to read the trend you ask how is this happening you can't take this you cannot breathe and sleep someone tells you, this is life, welcome stewards all are we, we pass, we were just visitors here all these never for all the times belong to us we only discover and then they find their own ways back to the real owner.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sticking To Each Other Alone

3 p.m. meeting it starts with a hesitation to go or not to go but i have decided to go and speak as they listen offering some solutions which i should have kept as mine alone, what is there within me that opens up
to those that have been putting me into disgrace?
i am trying to capture words to help me understand this void hoping that there must be something as concrete as a stone in there or perhaps a snail feeling the smooth feel of a plant skin i drive me way home imagining the grimaces of those who pretended to listen and who signified that they will consider my points for ponder a reflection in a mirror as that old wicked woman was trying to say but i closed my mouth and did not blink
staring at her saying silently to my soul
'this is the enemy that i must pulverize'
and for which for years i had no courage she is here in a confrontational situation still mocking me with her yeses.

i look at my watch signifying that i must leave now as the driver is waiting my wife signals that she is going with me we do not ride the car we tell the driver to wait as we still need a walk have pizza and start to review matters and talk about what are we doing with our lives why are we anchoring it on them

i am silent
i will not tell her that that will be the last i don't fit there

i am neither round nor square.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sticky.......

the spanish guitar plays i love the sounds of strings they are like Russian ballet dancers tiptoeing then dropping their toes on the stage floors my fingers giggle like excited seaweeds on a clear sea my feet are dancing and my mind is traveling to Barcelona where some sticky memories were left and perhaps with this long absence must have dried on the floor where we once rubbed our bodies tightly knit like silk threads in the pillow of a recently married princess to her prince.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stiff Like Steel With Nothing To Feel...Or Fear

i am not
doing what i am
supposed to do
today

i am simply flowing with the tide of
time

i let myself be taken where it is heading feeling like a leaf fallen and nothing

somehow it is giving me that feeling of this lightness
of my being where i am no longer in control

i can control this i know i can stop whenever i want to but no i will allow this tide of time to take me where it wants to

i just want to know if time too is responsible for my future for what happens next whether i grow or shrink

i feel happy sometimes when i am no longer in control for whatever happens i have always someone to blame and i am not responsible but this will be only for a moment a break of my hard days a little gift of surrender let me be weak today for you must know i have been strong for all those years and you get bored with strength stiff like steel with nothing to feel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stigma

he rose from the ashes after the fire
he lost his house and everything he has are nothing but chars

years the stigma sticks the trauma continues to rig his heart

it is not gone
like the way he continues to live his life rising as a star though distant but shining still

RIC S. BASTASA
Stigmatic.....

body is bent
the neck is arched carried by the head
as the hand begins to press those letters on the keyboard
trying to figure out what is more important

the search for wisdom
on the winding paths of dawn
the labyrinthine
cries of the boy
upon the trickles of rain
stigmatic

RIC S. BASTASA
Still A Man's Best Friend

a dog is a good escape you take it with you in your arms towards the door of the house into a garden into a path that leads to the woods and you walk with it and you think a lot and the dog does not speak

you like this
the world listens the dog jumps waggles its tail and moves ahead of you always the best of friends.

RIC S. BASTASA
Still A Taboo....

and i remember
zorba, the great
zorba,

his dance, his
romance,
his life, and then

i wish i were
zorba,

i open my eyes

i cannot be zorba, i am in this place where zorba is still a taboo....

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Alice....

Love
is still the final word
even during that inevitable forgetting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Alive

When I feel that I am nothing, Empty hands and light head When I feel that I am floating Not knowing where to go Or what to do Not remembering where I come from Not knowing why
Things must go and disappear

I touch myself
I pinch my skin
I move and occupy another space To check

If I still set aside What Is there and what isn’t

I move to fill an emptiness I go I step forward
To know where life is

I inflict pain
Just to know if I am still alive

RIC S. BASTASA
Still As Always Flawless

unbroken
that is what ought we are always unbroken

whole unyielding
bread unsliced
wood uncut

though at times erratic but still as always flawless

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Breathless In Disbelief

it is always to see a world of openness, like the way the fingers open when you burst in love like the way the heart breaks loose from the buttoned shirt to become a sun shining upon the hills and penetrate the windows of so many souls,

it is always easy to tell that you are the magnanimous space always occupying what world is there a relative of air that fills the lungs of those who are still afraid to breathe

i am always at a loss of words the reality is too much a rage of wisdom a profusion of grace a gush of all life and it is here
in my fingertips

still breathless in disbelief....

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Dark Like The One Last Night

a dark rose growing from a dark concrete crevice of this deserted building on a dark night spreading its dark petals for dark dreams on a fine morning when darkness is gone the dark rose comes out in the open to meet the sun embracing it with so much light turning into something sort of a blood reddish colored rose something like glowing but still dark like the one last night.

RIC S. BASTASA
Still In

On that hammock
i keep on telling myself

'this is temporary
soon things return
to its original smooth
and proper
dimensions'

i do not pray much but i pray

that life irons out its own creases

that i soon know how to live again
just like that smooth skinned yesterday woman

that the river will recontain water on its banks

that my mouth shall thirst for tongues

that my tongue shall keep some words till dawn

i pray and i pray some more
until

morning breaks again with light on its hands

there is mug of coffee on the rail by the window and its fumes are showing me how life breathes in space there is a vine with more leaves da flower at the end da tendril still imitating the fingers of my longings everything is alive here everyone is singing out there why i do not join them?

why? why in the world will i say that i do not know how to live my life everyday?

it is all in the mind
it is all in the mind

decide for now, i tell myself oh yes, i am still in

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Looking

I am still looking for the taste of that last kiss

the kind of warmth that the last hug can give me

the kindest word that can move me into
tears

of joy and the most justifying goodbye that must be said

so that if i finally go away i may not look back and turn to salt

like the wife of Lot.

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Not Stilled.

Caesar
complains that he had become alone
finally

his parents
died and the house is big

all the servants
are still there

how can he relate to their fears

and sorrows and
poverty?

caesar must not complain about being left alone finally

karma, karma works in all walks of life to caesar and the rest of the caesars

the scissor cuts now these paper hearts

falling into the sea and the floors

floating, then sinking low, lower

and still not stilled.

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Ongoing...Reforming....Bloody Country

something is going on in my country

it is this killing of my brothers and even sisters and fathers, and mothers too and do not exclude the children, and so i went up there in the palace and ask someone closer to the king who is a friend of mine and he said, it is just the beginning and there is no point worrying for we are killing the criminals and they must hide where they are now for to the utmost we are still pursuing them, till hell,

pretending satisfaction i left the palace still frightened, and the question keeps coming back,

'by the way, who are these criminals? ' simple answer: they are on the list.

and what is the list?

answer: it is confidential.

what a life!

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Searching For Meaning.....

alone you find a place
a newly painted room off-white
without an odor or scent
the curtain is old
orange
with suspicious dust and recalcitrant roaches,
the music is the sound of the air-conditioner which is not that
cold
to make you alive, but here you are writing another
poem
searching for meaning,
and sometimes the meaning you find
is the meaninglessness
of every item:

a blunt stapler
a stain remover
a pencil without a head an ear cleaner

a sunless world
a moonless nook

somehow you want a connection whatever that be
to survive another hour.

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Sleepy (But Cannot Sleep)

a red rose with sixteen petals
dew on one of those three leaves seventeen thorns
a blue butterfly fluttering and now hovering
proboscis connecting dawn, cold air

twilight, light seeping in
my mind
three hundred sheep
i am still not asleep

in my mind
light, warm light breaks in through the shutters
of my mind ....

RIC S. BASTASA
Still Worth It

his only gift to his friends after those long 25 years in today's reunion is to say the grace before meals we understand of course his prayerful nature and his stingy ways his greed for money and selfishness were never lost despite the loneliness of the years....

RIC S. BASTASA
Stimulus Response.....

when you feel that you are pushed to the edge and there is no more possible space for patience what kind of language would you like me to speak? what mode of courtesy do you expect?

blame me not for the foul language, the curse and damnation that i bombard you every minute of your day forgive me but i am just giving you what i think you deserve. you violence begets my violence, you ill wind begets my storms.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stinking And Kinky

an aching tooth
is a whetting of stone with a knife
of steel

it winds itself to the inner core of the brain

the pain lingers
like an old memory no distraction
removes it

by analogy is this aching heart making me soundless
in the middle o
this crowd
deaf to the sounds of your celebrations
lame to the calisthenics of love blind to the delights of romance

an auger to an ogre sticking to what is stinking and
kinky....

RIC S. BASTASA
Stinking Fool In The Pool

sometimes
the heart is also heavily loaded like a cloud gathering mist and shall in any moment rain

sometimes
you lose control about what you are carrying something slips away and no matter how you pick it up you can never hold it back sometimes what is wingless turns otherwise

a stone turns into a fish just to lose itself from its prison

sometimes i fell just like that heavily loaded and i want to have the wings of any bird just to get away from what is here

from what is unfortunate from what is miscalculated from something that i can change and be simply away from it all sometimes there is no choice however except to stay and be numb and be no bird but a

stone

deep in that muddy and murky pool stinking like any other fool
Stone

how is it to be a stone?
how is it to be hard and unfeeling?

how is it to be still
and immobile
rooted in its place for years and centuries
not growing
not speaking not listening to the songs and sighs
of the river?

how is it to be completely defenseless against the moss
that invades and covers
your body
of stone

the coldness of the rain and the boredom of the time in years, in centuries?

how is it to be just being inanimate
unmoved
untouched and untouching?

you
you touch no one and nobody touches you an island
of stone
you are the stone
the rock
against the middle of the raging river

and i am asking all these questions to you.

oh! i am always the foolish one petrified facing you all day and getting no answers

RIC S. BASTASA
Stone Is Not A Decision

It could be
That i have chosen the Stone

Rather than the Tendril

Trees still Amaze me

But it is still
Me

Stone upon a Path
When you pick
Me

Not my fault

When you

Hit yourself

I have nothing
To do with any

Bad blood Shed

RIC S. BASTASA

how well do you know each stone?
there is no dispute to its color, its silence, its shape. You have taken one inside your room, and stared at it for long. Its silence captivates you.
Here, silence begins to have a conversation with you.
To another level however, since silence uses not a word, ot a sound, but there is this ongoing communication.
The stone asks you: why have you chosen me?
You tell it, you have so many things in common since birth.

you have been stoned.
you are stone.

and so there must be time to know each other much better.

stone to stone.
silence to silence.
hardheadedness to hardheadedness.

hit me the stone screams. hit me.
and so you hit yourself with it thinking that by doing so you have followed its pact with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stones And Butterflies

We talk about stones

Stones can be Sensations if We keep on Talking about Stones not as Stones

You have stones
You like them
They become Diamonds which You keep

Those who watch
Us feel stupid
They laugh and Laugh

And we laugh at Them
And then they become Stones
Which are Sensational

I am stupid
I laugh with you
But i never like
Stones

They’re hard and Faceless and Silent and
So stupid for me

I like butterflies
And so i set them Free to look for The flowers they
Love

What i like in Them is that They die in a Day or two

Without a trace
Where their broken Wings are

RIC S. BASTASA
Stones And Sands....

i guess we have never learned the right use for this we have not mastered
its nuances
for the sounds of the wind and the lullaby of the grass still remain strange like someone who left years ago and has now arrived but we fail to recognize for we all have changed into the numbness of
stones and sands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stones From Heaven...

Joy died.

The Spinster sends the text Message which the Flirt reads aloud in the Gathering of the Living. It says:

Dear Flirt,
I cannot answer all of your messages.
I am grieving over the death of Joy.
I refrained using words. But this i must tell you I am in grief, I cry all day, and sometimes I think that when Joy died earlier than expected, I think, she must be lucky, as the Living Them brought the Niche, decked with assorted flowers, and garnished with evening prayers.
I wish I had the same death.

I heard this in the Gathering of The Living, and I joked that I am praying for Spinster's early death and I will be bringing flowers and some followers to recite the Usual Prayers.

Flirt says, If the Spinster hears this There will be another ten months of Non-Speaking Terms.

Well, I admit, there is more plasticity always going on in the Gathering of the Living.
Meanwhile, to lighten the Moments of Grief the Bad Guys are playing Cards, drink their rum, smoke their cigars, and you say it correctly

They always find Joy in polluting this Innocent World Deprive it with Fresh Air and claim that they are the proper residents of the Gathering of the Living.
Stooping Inorder To Conquer to lead you

i must follow you a while to teach you how is it to be both a leader
and a follower
we climb the steps
to heaven
we descend the stairs
to hell
and when this education thing is finally completed i leave you
to follow and lead yourself either you finally go to heaven or you burn in hell it all depends on what leadership qualities have you finally got.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stop

she wants me to stop spilling the beans she wants to cook
all of them
with a little salt and seasoning she begs that we dine together and eat all those jelly beans

RIC S. BASTASA
Stop Is Such A Taboo In The World Of Inspiration in the world of inspiration where the fireworks come like an everyday feast in the world of colors like dusk and twilight and summer nights and auroras of the stars and the silvery moon sliding on the shiny river, the word 'stop' is a taboo, for in the world of imagination where everything comes and goes like the snap of a finger or the blink of an eye the world is a long, and wide, and winding river without banks and ends with a mouth always opening to the sea beyond this horizon where everything that floats and swims along with it is taken and made a part of the beautiful world of sights and sounds and space and sense in my world there is only the ceaseless flow of freedom of thought, no one stops me i may rest for a while and take a look at something that catches my attention like the burst of red oranges in the sky

and too,
like that creature that person that takes a mutual look once in a while, a pause, a comma, a hyphen

but then, i am back to the world of the river the world of clauses and dashes, flowing, floating, flowering forever flowing, unstopping, unceasing, always going and going and on and on and on, to the flowing waters of the soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stopping

This morning i did not attend mass i woke up earlier than yesterday and i was carried away by thoughts that keep coming like profuse light outside, and into the window of my soul i did not think at all it is like the world is heavy with ice in the sky and then it melted abruptly causing flood to my

brain,

i felt a cascade of what i cannot explain i did not even bother what all these mean when you are carried away logic dies when you are carried by a flood and you think you will drown when you see a drift wood ahead of you and you are about to be hit by its weight you do not scream

what i remember was that feeling of being a stranger
to the world

it is a river taking every piece of us to nowhere and we are travelers with empty pockets and trembling hands without right to ask where shall we be taken it is just this drift. so poetic and formless taking its shape to what we want to utter but still can't so i keep on writing, my hands blind on the keys but punching the letters making the words, forming phrases which i do not understand too well, the same way that you feel when you like me arrive at the last word

a word that means nothing but stopping

RIC S. BASTASA
Storm

stuffed on the shadowy green of coconut leaves just below the window

vibrations of green captured in camera

RIC S. BASTASA
Storm...

i remember
i did not stop the car
as i brace myself for the well announced
storm

large drops of rain hitting the windshield
there is no
road visible lightning and thunder hitting the trees
with a flash of ghostly images

i was always ready
i had no one
and no one
had me....

RIC S. BASTASA
Storms

no storm has a strong wind that takes the roof of your house
that levels coconut trees to kiss the ground like some lizards kissing
the floors
on late afternoons

no storm is harsher than those that erases a neighborhood
waters rising
people perishing
cattle and cars
stolen from you on the wink
of an eye

no storm is greater than this

this storm inside
us that nobody sees
and feels except the heart to a time ticking
and soon
will burst and kill and erase
the whole world
right at the very cold stare
of your eyes

the tempest within and you shall be lost forever only if you do not hold on to life
you must beg

RIC S. BASTASA
Storms In Our Lives

do not fear the storms
you will always be there set by time they follow the cycle of life and all so temporary when the damage is done we will still be there to repair
when the sun is up again when the sky is as blue as the sea we shall learn how to play again to live and survive to have fun
to laugh to sing to dance and when the storms come again we dig foxholes
where we hide our dreams and aspirations....

RIC S. BASTASA
Storms Just Come And Go

storms come and go
what is important
is still you

my dove
with a green leaf on its beak
on the ark's window
pecking

RIC S. BASTASA
Strategies For Living Life when he goes out into the world there are no arms waiting it is loneliness that walks with him so he decided to stay and close the doors and windows

thinking that in this way the world will love him as others expect the rope of loneliness chokes him and so he prepares to go back into the open he dresses well enough to face the wind and dance with the shadows they demand that he tells him his real name and not wear a mask and sing the usual song he refuses to cater to a brutality he goes back to his room and reads a book and closed the door again and he grows up into a very strong silence confident upon the soundless nook and expects no one to call his name again at the end he learns this game of responsible loneliness

the one that does not speak when hurt that does not smile even when seduced by joy

RIC S. BASTASA
Strawberry Lips

her lips can shape
the words
even if we are distant like star
to the sailing boat on the sea

her secrets are the sounds
hanging in the air

i am deciphering
each word
through the luscious
lips
so red
so real and so moist

RIC S. BASTASA
Streams Of The Rivers Waters

the meditations of the man on the river how long will it take him to his nirvana?

the lotus in him is what i am seeing now and his eyes do not mind the working of this world. I see waters running on his head.

I see rivers in his veins. I am silent and still.

I am this pond watching how a lotus grows.
How things are with the toads. How time falls like a teardrop, creating the ripples of my it is. Beauty at its core.

RIC S. BASTASA
Streams Of Thoughts

the streams of thoughts are like the locks of the hair of a woman
flowing with the air one windy day tonight these streams of thoughts flow like a river

to the sea
to your mouth to the door of your heart
this time
the exit is unknown hidden by the consonants of your words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Streams Of Thoughts Into The Sea Of Our Loneliness....

love has journeyed
to a certain destination where our bodies are not needed anymore

our thoughts bloom into flowers along this road towards a castle
and we both know the magic word to open its door once inside we realize what love is: you go right and i go left, and then we sing the song we love, mine to mine and yours to yours

for love is respectful of our own ending songs
i go for the birds you go for the rabbits

streams of thoughts into the sea of our loneliness....

RIC S. BASTASA
Streams Of Thoughts...

when alive and young he teaches what should be loved telling all the reasons why the heart patiently listens and with its slow beat signifies that it understands all these and that it knows what compromises are for the good of the body and the society

following the code and giving honor to the family

your sister need not be ashamed of you or you yourself humiliating your own kind time sides with the obedient and life proceeds smoothly like a road without bumps soon the heart turns dumb but too honest with its sense though not drunk but feeling that it has overworked its veins and crowded its chambers with dictated feelings of what must and should be it sighs for rest and now must stop where is love you ask? it was never here the heart had been empty since then no one so true lodges inside it in its emptiness the heart sinks and lays flat on the dry land of the chest flat, moronic in its stares, lost and never knew what next to do

Reason tries to resuscitate but it never liked its air, its lips it dies, but Reason does not really know the real cause

it justifies: it dies a natural death
just like everyone else.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stressed Out

too many thoughts come rushing each wanting a peculiar treatment one wants to be a syllable dressed in the blackness of the lonely night

while the other wants to be a clause without a comma hating the period it wants to be a mouth open like the crocodile silent on the bank of the river
waiting for a fly who is lost along its riveted ways
wishing to swallow a dropp of the bucket realities of course there is this sentence without a thought of its own the penalty that not any of you bothers whether mankind which suffers

i know
deserves to kill that lost fly in the mouth of this alligator society.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stretch A Hand

when i stretch a hand to touch your confusion thinking that confusion is coldness and that my clarity is a hand of light
i am not really counting some numbers as though i am rehearsing for a dance
it just happens and as you call it just the way it is it is as spontaneous as rain falling upon those brown grasses dying on the mountains.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stricter Face

On a summer's day
I look at my face
Into the mirror
Finding Grandpa's
Stricter face

RIC S. BASTASA
String, Kite

i complete something today dawn, there is dawn searching for the door to morning and it is closed

i look at an inspiration it is not really good for me but it completes me
this morning
the words that lay open and never shut
to a conclusion
the one that makes me happier to another day

there is something like a flesh and it is pressed like a cloth between two iron sheets there is heat
and it is not burned

there is a string in my hand that holds a kite
i will cut it now and release what all i had to the air

it falls down helpless to the ground and no child ever picks it up today

Monday, the second day of the year the kite is free and it has no power to fly again in clear skies separated from the string nothing is noted to be significant the way you see it Stripped Of Love

stripped of love
a god of love falls

to the ground he feels anew for

now he must face
lust to make himself

a man, his new face as a lover glows

a new fire to the hearts of all the lonely women

RIC S. BASTASA
Striptease

she undresses slowly like a flower shedding off
her petals

it is this slowness that hooks me unable to stop
my gaze goes wild like a hawk until she lets go off everything that covers her and then when everything is seen what is left is this pity seeing nothing but the emptiness of my humanity

RIC S. BASTASA
Strolling On The Memory Lane

oh, i went to memory lane
too,

i've seen much already.

i come back to what i am and what i have become,
i hold on to my vision,
my dreams

i write about hope, and imagine

my future, another 20 years, another 30 years more,

i pray,

the memory lane is black and white
and then

it faded like a denim a murky river where i lift my feet up above the water and as i move towards the shore, i decided, i thought,

the memory lane serves me
no more

it was short, and it will not be repeated

i wake up, and then i forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
Strong And Alone

when i am taken away and you cannot do anything but stay

ah, you cannot but learn the tricks of life's final decision you live alone

and strong on the waiting for the next trip

where your name is listed on a yellow paper on a bus that has no return that driver that does not speak on a name tag that is blank

RIC S. BASTASA
Strong Belief In The Self

i believe in
myself
i believe that i have something to say
i believe that i badly need to say what i have to say
and that you
badly need to hear all these before it is too late
and so here i am speaking before
you in the silence
of my letters
pressed by me
fingers on the keys

and now i must rise to speak
twitting like a bird not a Marc Anthony to his beloved Caesar

and now when i am through i must bow before you
and then
i leave
fully emptied.

RIC S. BASTASA
STRONGLY worded
the good men did nothing and so evil triumphed,

well said on that day of our independence,

after clutching all those six years
the bad men flourished, crime rates
fly like black birds in the skies, and all the bad men laughed and those caught in the national penitentiary continue with their air-conditioned rooms spa and sauna, and money and high tech cellphones, did you say you did well?

we had given you the chances
and everything
yet nothing has changed.

we voted for that man whom you call bad, murderer, and dictator, because you never did well,

now, do not tell us whom to choose, because we chose you in the past and nothing happened.

STRONGLY worded, you have
to shut up because you never put up
now, move out and let another one
take the reigns of this country with a lot of wild horses and beasts.

Again, we wait,
take a look and
vote again, after another six long
years.

STRONGLY WORDED, we have no faith in you anymore.

Goodbye sadly...

RIC S. BASTASA
Struggles...

fifteen minutes of poetry
life.

then everything
anything goes in my life

a struggle for words, and deeds never chosen but fed
just fed, in this world of work and
survival,

rafts on a sea of rage stars shining even on mornings

RIC S. BASTASA
Stunning

Such is Singapore
To Him
Cheaper than Australia
And yet so Stunning

The buildings rise
Touching the Skyline
The air is clean
There is no Traffic

And poetry abounds
Like butterflies
Like Orchids
In rainbow colors

RIC S. BASTASA
Stupid

Honestly, I like the word
Stupid,
I like you calling me
Stupid
In all the stupid things That you think
I do
Which I think are Stupid too,

Stupid!

Stupid makes me feel
That I am
Non-stupid
That I am nobody
That I am not Like you calling me
Stupid
That I am not like you
That I am not
Alone
That I have no reason To be sad
That confusion is not A disease
That we all belong to one Beautiful world

Stupid!

That is enough
Heaven for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Stupid And Warm....

he was too trusting
and stupid and his hands are cups
of coffee that the woman beside her
are holding on.

they both make fire
to light the place where they do not really want to see their faces....

RIC S. BASTASA
Stupid Cupid

stupid cupid
on that stupid day
hits my stupid heart with his stupid arrow stupid blood flows from my stupid heart

and you are there
stupid enough to just watch me

on that stupid day
i fall in love with you and so stupid enough i never tell you

and you are there
on that stupid day
watching me
and stupid enough
you love me too
but never tell me

stupid day stupid love stupid cupid stupid us

RIC S. BASTASA
Stupid Lust....

you know that you are so tempting
and you keep on tempting me to do
such a thing which i have not resisted for the past times with
you

actually, this i must say without much pretense,

you are not pretty
at all
nothing of such significance
you do not stand well in a crowd

except that perhaps you are tempting and you have been tempting me that much teasingly which i have not really try hard resisting

i always end up in you kissing you
and closing my eyes
and i wonder why
i keep closing my eyes for every kiss that i have planted on your lips

(must i be ashamed about the fool in me?
have i demeaned myself
that much?)

i keep on arguing with myself as though i am a split bamboo
one different from the other
as though i am two different selves
one for the good one for the bad)

at any rate i sum up the experience

it makes me feel
beautiful
makes me fly like
a bird in the sky
you make me feel
a stranger to myself
someone new in another day of my life)

and you are someone
which i must keep a secret.
someone that i do not know about.
someone i put inside me all supressed
because you are
despite the ugliness still, i find this hard to admit,
so beautiful to me)

stupid lust.
i shall never name you
love.
Stupid She Felt

stupid she must have felt like the way i do but she must know that last night was so
sweet
that no regret or remorse can spoil it

watching the rain and smiling again letting the consequences pass
away
and then move on for another sweet
mistake

RIC S. BASTASA
Sturdy

above you
you hold the centerpiece
of my existence
you rub love
you throb intimacy
to my pleasure
	his is the feast of our bodies
no shame
your hands caress my sanctity

no one understands where love attaches itself at the branch
of lust
leaves of desire
roots of memories dews of glances falling rain on the rocks suffuse air

earth satisfied
asleep at dawn

RIC S. BASTASA
Stuttering

shutters when you exercise the word close open close open they stutter and begin to make a panid of its blinds. What are you doing, asks the window? I am winnowing. I am peeping to the slits of the rainbow. The colors dance like a wild flower under a heavy rain, drunk, and groggy to the syrup of saps of this tree and that. Shrubs and blurbs, gather and gargle. Heavy stuff.
I vomit you and you rise from the slime of my breath. You face me and things come back again like a welcome.
So it is you. You love me. You love me again and again. Here you are. Here i am. I am carpentering for words, from some pieces of puzzles. That crap. Why stutter like an autistic savant? All you have to do is hold my hand. The world becomes a safe bridge deck. Two strangers their arms on hold, looking at the pier. Waiting for names of their incoming solace.

i know you well. You stutter when you fall in love again.
The boat blown by the wind. The moon sinks deep down under.

RIC S. BASTASA
It is only the constancy of Emotions. Highs and Downs, These things you must accept with gladness Like the birth of a Smile.
Hug a reality. Dance with an Illusion.
Settle on a Doubt.
Believe on the Impossible.
Have faith on Yourself and Always take the Big Bite of the Dust.
Life Moves On. You dance as though it is your last.
You say I am Alone but I am Lovely.
Let the Spirit Soar. Let the color of the Day be Red.
and Slash.
Give way to the River. Have vents. Bend and Sway and Point your Feet To Somewhere. Over there.
Love, Yes Love Above ALL.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sub Rosa Affair

it was the bluntness of clarity which destroys
the suspense
which we equate with the beauty of a morning
conversation

as i raise my cup of coffee
the tongue curls
my hand trembles a bit

you should have taken the grace of some metaphors

last night was not something that you can reduce as prose

for i still consider it as magnificently
poetic

our story lies in the a coded room where intimacy as a must
should be another
rose at the door way

RIC S. BASTASA
Subconsciously

at the surface is a roy could be roy something else you face him
beneath a roy could be a jerry something that you have met but could not fully
remember
you are determined not to be confused and so you focus on the road that the the yellow bus is taking you it is nothing but imagination you are in the house doing nothing because writing is actually nothing beneath you is someone else and it (a thing or something) is telling you what to write you are not alarmed it is nothing it is nothing but words and words are nothing as a matter of familiarity beneath your mind is the heart beneath that heart are so many things you try to enumerate names and more names
and places
until you reach a certain marker, shades of red, pathways of veins, flowing blood, all kept and contained within the sound system and then you look at your hands beneath it someone so lovely and beautiful someone you desired for long beneath you

and then you stop.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sub-Language

a lustful desire suppressed takes a language of its own at first you disregard it but soon it finds its own grammar & syntax in your lips, you taste it again, lick it, roll it inside your gum, sip and swallow, your teeth delighting, your tongue trembling to such sweetness, you love it, and at the end, it becomes your main language again this time more subtle metaphorical, lyrical,
and more responsible.

RIC S. BASTASA
she signed out without at least saying gtg
or simply bye

where's my usual
lol
?

as i rest from other things
of equal importance

as she appears invisible
or busy
or walked out

i stop
for a while, thinking, thinking, thinking, thinking about what to do

with my life

so many choices now but the emptiness keeps invading
every word
i have in my mind, as though they no longer have any significance
at all

i log out
i log in i sign out
i sign in again

and there she is the snobbish soul still keeping her own things matters of greater importance than myself
who i am?
i still ask, who i am? she rejects my pleas, her silence so hurting

i feel the pain of abandonment, rejection and

ignorance,

lapse of time, wasting moments useless thoughts, destructive imaginings

i have one choice though....

submit a new poem

a breather.

RIC S. BASTASA
Subtle Goodbyes

I've been practicing how to say Goodbye

Words are hurting

So I try casual ones Unannounced like an uncertain hour

A place not named yet

X x x

You put a paid bill or a Red rose in bed

A well folded towel beside it

A taxi rushes you to the airport Cellphone is turned off

At the departure area you Write another poem

It is not sounding sad
It's anxious for the next stop

Planes keep arriving
And leaving

RIC S. BASTASA
Success

success is simply a matter of how we think things turn out to be,

born losers are those whose parents think they are, losers from the start till they end until they decide to change the ability to see through the mess and rise above
a certain familiarity
away from the crowd
and inside
the magnificent feeling that i am what i think...

think like a winner and act like a winner don’t quit keep moving
for in truth
failure is just success delayed
a little bit...

RIC S. BASTASA
Succor....

This is also a reality, you can't say it is peculiar for me, it is a common occurrence,

A dimming light from an incandescent bulb in a room dressed up in darkness look closely! someone is engrossed with a book that promises to relinquish him from the grip of poverty and anguish that it will pull out the nails driven to the palm of our daily deaths

Now and again to appease the pain he shall place the sun or the moon, and the stars or the blue crystal ball on the crimson ceiling shrouded as he begins to write his verses but when the weary eyes and wounded heart say that it is enough we give up, soon the windows will open again letting in the wind to sing its songs
again

RIC S. BASTASA
Such A Rainy Day

such a rainy day
she comes to my door knocking for help for some comfort in the coldness of a rainy day some winds too strong dry leaves blown to the other side some trees giving to a crack to a fall she comes on such a rainy day she is wet and so pitiful to look at her clothes pasting to her frail body of a woman deserted

her hair uncombed and blown and scattered she stands by my door

my brother left her just an hour ago she is wet, her hair, her body some rain still drips how can i forget her?

my brother did not love her and he left her she is crying and her tears drip on her cheeks on her body how can i be so cruel for not telling her i love her so,

but she leaves, she is crying and the rain starts pouring again she is only looking for my brother who left her how can i help her?

she never utters my name in her heart, i do not exist.

she loves him, he left her,

i love her, she leaves me the rain keeps on pouring and fate plays so well like a crazy child on us

on a rain that comes unplanned, unasked, and goes away unnoticed.

i stand on this door.

i have to close it,

fate does it always better.

i am that crazy child playing in the rain, in my brain

i am wet, my thoughts dripping like rain, like droplets and my tears,

i am glad, my tears are invisible.

RIC S. BASTASA
Such A Short Stay

it is such a short stay
and will always be
so temporary
the moment one arrives
he prepares for another departure
such is our nature
the moment one is born he begins to die

RIC S. BASTASA
Sucker

for a poem
to be itchy
it must be a flea,

Socrates
proposed gnats
those hurting
biting gnats

when i first read it in the dialogues courtesy of Plato
i felt this cow in me

coward,
cow-pea, cowed
in a barn milked like a woman

i dread that feeling
but it is real that i begin to moooo

nonetheless
i cannot help but just be back into a
man without use to anyone
in my own chosen
freedom
there is Socrates
with all his dignity
intact

who did not get to be old enough to really befriend death

i too propose
gnats, and fleas
and
lice

suckers of wisdom
from the head of this universe

RIC S. BASTASA
Suduko

we love it
this suduko
this game of numbers
but no
there is something much better than the
numbness
of the numbers

it is the letter 's'
something subsumed
and we who want this intimacy
once in a while knows the secret of happines's'

if you ask me
please ask her.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sueno Mama

om mother's day
i prefer the white
magnolias for you,
mama,
white candles
for the five of us your children, and one candle
with a a black ribbon still through all
these years,
we shall never forget
how you have loves us all
alone,
the hours despite
and all those respites
beyond graves and knaves.

RIC S. BASTASA
be happy that you are not like one of us we call ourselves bards.

others want the grander term, poet.
be happy that you are not one of us, bards or poets or mumblers, the truth is we have suffered a lot and we shall suffer still.

self-inflicted or not or just givens, the truth is we are suffering and will suffer still and words just keep coming and going to ease the pains....

RIC S. BASTASA
Suffering

a word from you
and then you stop
something choppy somewhere inside your tongue

i like to listen more from you cut, i am having a hard time, what is it with you
that wants to hold me i stop to listen again some scratching sounds from your hair some gnashing from your teeth i listen still cautiously there are pauses, you stretch your arms
trying to reach me i tap my ears
there is this suppression of meaning and then you finally open your eyes
tears are falling

i see
your heart is broken and your mouth haggles for words your mind grasps for thoughts for a love that they always misunderstand. I see.

blood inside your mouth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Suffering Is Always Personal And Better Left Unshared And Unspoken

my words are waking me up my hand is ready, the computer beeps i like to write an email for you how many times shall this happen? this urge to let you know this morning, i again blame myself because i can't

i am thinking of the consequences i know how painful is it to fall how empty can the house become how a night without a stars can make us cry
sometimes

how the sound of the river when you walk alone gives you the sound of the cry of the pebbles they break their silence they scream

for truths still untold to rules that cannot be broken when you enter that empty room again a ball of silence meets you you sit beside it

it speaks to you

this is the first time that you have seen its nature
it is dressed with lips and when they begin to open to about to speak to you you close your hands
turning them into fists and you hit your chest and the ball of silence moves away from you it is respect for pain when silence pretends again that it is just a ball and that it can go away for men suffer all alone on unsaid proportion with that ability to embrace no description

RIC S. BASTASA
manny pops out from somewhere opens the door and begs that we listen to him sing: i wanna live live live until i die we obliged of course just to help him ease himself from too much intellectual pressure and even if we do not like the song or because we cannot really relate to it because we pride ourselves as sane and stable
we sing the song just the same he is a toe
and when he is wounded
we are feeling
too the pain

indeed his body shook like Vanuatu with an intensity 7 earthquake we expect tsunamis later but they did not come and then manny is gone went the U.S.A and true to his last word just to be a nobody

and this
philosophically
has made him
happy.

i have to be honest till now i never really like that song or that i need to be shaken i have these poem anyway and perhaps if Manny reads it

somewhere
i guess i have to tell him
i have enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
sufi music
sunday, the rain
just ceased,
bird singing..

RIC S. BASTASA
Sugar High

sugar high
blueberry cake
sweet surrender

RIC S. BASTASA
Sugarland

how situation changes sometimes we do not notice you look at the child's face you think it is still the usual girl's face the usual humiliation comes with a name a old name

you fail to recognize that beyond the girl's face is a strong woman that you fail to recognize you refuse to give way to the changes

look at you
miserable as a rat jumping from the boat just to save yourself and yet when you see the girl in that woman's face you keep on clinging to what was once great falling like debris upon the present citadel of broken pieces how can you not see the misery in you now? poor as a rat but prouder still like a lion without teeth disregarding the near death

ahead of you
miserable rich, wretched by the price of your time

look at you
how can you not see that rat in you

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
we think water does not taste anything,

quite true
for like God
water is in Itself By Itself

and as mysterious as it is Incomparable

you ask for the name of God

It is.
It is just what
It is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Suicidal

all the fingers point to him

a knife is beside his throat

his hand
holds it

blood will flow

his own.

RIC S. BASTASA
Suicide Bomber

a suicide bomber
is a person who preaches life's despair
and lives it
actually
with others who are forced to die
with him

RIC S. BASTASA
Suicide Is A Harsh Option

you just don't die here your vindictiveness still crawls on the walls of the conscience of those who are left for the prayer and vigil you still have the guts to make them feel that they don't deserve you

eyou can't just throw us off they know their stand off you go and gone forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Suite For Two Lutes, Edward Martin & Paul Berget

I like the dance of a man and a woman Just the two of them
The man dances always behind the woman And they mimic the art of wooing

To the sound of two lutes Edward martin & paul berget

at first the dance was sweet and charming the man almost kissing the woman while he holds her swaying hips somehow the dance did not last that long and people are aghast

the woman fell down hurt her leg and so embarrassed she could not stand the man could not help it he called for medical help for first-aid

it was not the plan
all the lights were turned off the curtains fell

it was more than the dance that I saw accidents do happen even on stage.

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer

summer is an ancestral house surrounded with antique trees blushing leaves
rainbow flowers
nearby the blue sea
white sticky rice and grilled tangigue
fresh buko juice and straw hat and a swing between two coconut trees.

and silence and sea breeze.

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Breeze

a straw hat on my head dark sunglasses on my eyes cotton beach shorts barefoot i walk along the shore i stop a while the summer breeze is so cool
early morning
the sea is peaceful the trees spreading branches a shower of yellowing leaves for the passing air the sun spreads the first rays a fine morning a promising day
for you and me

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Contentment

half naked
he lays his body on a bench savor the morning sunshine under him his guarding dog
getting some sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Days

love the summer days a farm hut on the side of a hill a bowl of fruits on the table roasted chicken on banana leaf upland rice on earthen jar fresh water from the spring a big mahogany tree for covering your head on my shoulder my hand on your hair your feet above mine under the night of stars away from them all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Days

a swimmer on summer days looks at the sea

it is calm and very lovable

endearing as the arms of a woman

if he only knows what is deeper than what the surface is showing him his summer days his beach and orange juices he should have seen how cruel are the sharks preying on the small fish not reaching the fullness of their existence

the seaweeds as usual are silent never speaking of the dirty linens in their house ah, these summer days bright sun and chase of lovers inside the cool hut where love is made again who cares about the story of predators who cares about those miserable prey?

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Days...

the sun comes up
finally
summer is summer when it is so hot

we take the sacks of rice
some have already sprouted and dry them on the yard

it is a fine day you say it while enjoying the comforts of the roof
inside the house
still watching the soap opera

outside
the backs are deep brown bare bowing down to the rigors of work lest we have nothing to eat for the rainy days

indeed we are like the ant empire the queen ant does not work
the soldiers do the chores everyone has work to do

i have another important matter to talk about this arrangement
but no
i will say it when Berto recovers from his depression or when Marta finally returns from her
infidelity tour...

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Fields

February heat comes too early.
The fields turn brown
And men with bent backs Harvest the premature Golden grains
of rice
March should have come
But it didn't.
The grasses wilt, the dust roams around The wheels of the hauling tractor Sounds the start
Of another season
Covered eyes and noses
And the silence of the mouth.

It is time to keep memories.
It is this time of the year when sadness goes away.
Another one bites the dust So to say.

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Here

lots of sunshine
in my place of running hills

temperature rises at 37 degrees
sweat like dew
on the grass in my forehead
sliding to my cheek

under the shade of the Java Plum Tree
i lick jack fruit flavored Popsicle.

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Is Here

summer is here again the sun scorches our skins this hot summer

black crows flying low on blue skies
hawks flying high preying on innocent
chickens

dolphins in shallow waters
white sandy beaches children chasing catching colored frisbees

curves and bulges
strolling on the beach

summer time
i'll get some tan
lots of fun

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Lovers

he kissed her all over from her mouth
to her toes

as though
she is an unknown
landscape
that he is exploring

on that day
she knows the heat
of the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Oh Summer

time to keep moving walk a trail
trek a mountain climb to the peaks
go beyond mists and fog go agog
walk the plateaus volley the valleys
go high on cliffs
hang and jump
and let go
on a pack of parachute
fall on the deep river ride the rage swim and kick
and join the fall of the waterfall
wrestle the alligator coil with the snakes this crazy summer

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer Time

THIS morning we go fishing in the river
got this hook, line and sinker nothing much for logic rhythm and rhyme
just this worm as pawn and the fading moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
summer has become an infidel
the rice grains are feeling betrayed the beach abandoned the sun is not in its usual form
and the moon veils its face with dark clouds the frogs laugh so loud the crickets are crippled....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sun In An Early Morning.

if poetry makes us
a little bit fit, or when it sheds off our much-earned fat,
makes us strong
and in happy disposition, everyone could have taken that by now.

you won't take the bite not the trend
but there is this everlasting effect

this cause of our
sorrow
and consequences of all our actions...

i am telling you it is.
and it does.

at the end of the day
one wonders why i still have this hidden energy still coming out like

sun in an early morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sun Of Life To Me

after the rain
there is a crack
on the surface of the soil
a seed in there begins to show a tip looking for the first sun of its life

RIC S. BASTASA
Sun Setting At The Dipolog Boulevard

the most beautiful sunset
is here

profusely bright yellow alamanda
melting into orange
and then red
strawberry until it fell to the horizon
and then
gone away

the street lights
wake up
blink for a while and keep the whole night guard

and the people come and busy themselves with their own
versions of
happiness...

RIC S. BASTASA
Sun Worshipper

stretched arms embracing the sun
too comfortably warm
the morning sun
because it is too far

RIC S. BASTASA
Sun, Sun, Sun

master sun
do not be too harsh on her for she is a dainty flower all white and too tiny for the heat of your hands

let her go let her petals fall at the right time of the day just one day
let her be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sun/Moon

the moon always comes alone sometimes the stars accompany her cressing
the light of her golden hair that she borrows from the sun that she loves
but is condemned
never never to be touched
even for just once.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunbathing

one of the things i like to do really is to bathe under the sun as though the sunshine is like water raindrops on my skin

i like being warmed a little bit by these sunrays as i feel them like fingers on my face and body
and legs
and toes

i like the sun penetrating my heart piercing it with its heat because mT heart is freezing cold as dry ice and melting it may help me live some more direct to vapor

another day perhaps or months another year will be too long for a bonus well, i have learned one lesson like what Jorge Luis Borges the dead Argentinian used to preach i will have more of the lighter moments more fun

less serious and yes more engaged more accepting yes, yes, and more yes to everything

'I'll try,
- to make more mistakes,
I won't try to be so perfect, I'll be more relaxed,
I'll be more full - than I am now,
In fact, I'll take fewer things seriously, I'll be less hygenic,
I'll take more risks,
I'll take more trips,
I'll watch more sunsets, I'll climb more mountains, I'll swim more rivers, I'll go to more places - I've never been,
I'll eat more ice creams and less (lime) beans, I'll have more real problems - and less imaginary ones'

I think i like Jorge say some more..
But i have no time anymore from his final words:

If I could live again - I will travel light, If I could live again - I'll try to work bare feet at the beginning of spring till the end of autumn,
I'll ride more carts,
I'll watch more sunrises and play with more children,
If I have the life to live - but now I am 85,
- and I know that I am dying...

I AM NOT EVEN 85 YET.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunday

sundae Sunday with mommy on the lobby a boy trying to get loose from her hold

a fledgling with untried wings looks at them from its mother's nest on a tree fronting the lobby

the boy looks at it eye to eye they relate themselves to fright

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunday 4: 44 A.M.

the church bell sounds.
you wake up.
you wash your face.
comb your hair and wear the best dress
on sunday.
you look again
in the mirror to check if all about you is well and presentable.
you take the rosary
and the prayer book.
you read the gospel.
you mumble your prayers,
you thank your husband.
you take the puppy.
you smile again in the mirror. you thank God.
now you open the gate
and head for the nearby church and hear mass and the usual sermon of the parish priest.

90% of your life
is devoted to religion.
10% is devoted to anything else.
you have aged.
you still mumble.

i still wonder whether it is you who misunderstands me or i misunderstanding you. everything seems to be mangled and mingled.
when you come back
breakfast is ready and everyone in the house pretends that there is nothing wrong with the table, or the cover, or the broken pieces of the maid is quick in sweeping them away from the door into that thick grass beside the window of this house.

sunday morning is still our morning. A nice one. the sun has come and we are planning for another picnic in the nearby beach. there will be no questions.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunday Morning Despite The Hectic Shedule

today the mountains are well dressed with green grass and trees the flocks of sheep and goats and cows crowd with its abundance the sun shines brightly and the sea afar is a horizon so tranquil the birds are coming to feed on the grains clouds meet on the top of the hill today all of them are joyful praising the wonders of creation today God is felt.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunday School......

i was drawn into it
a feather to a whirlpool

i try to do something so that you may at least see me resisting

everything happens
and i say i never intended it i swim in the water

i am dressed in mud and i wrestled all my days

i let it happen
years and years

and then i am free from mud
from whirlpools

and then i shall face and boldly must i tell you i truly love you but you have never believed me i am dressed now for Sunday school.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunday Swim

upon a blue sky
hangs the clouds

upon a blue sea
the floor is light gray

between this two walls i

put myself
amidst the winds

blowing my hair
as i struggle

against the waves away from shore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunday Thoughts.....

understand that when people are grouchy and so unkind, it must be, because the world had been too cruel on them too, and at the back of their minds, God seems to be nowhere, seems to be not working for them how selfish it can be
but understand that most minds are shallow and most beings thrive as though they are the sun and the center of this
universe,

which is not so, understand that this matter is hard to understand and we ourselves sometimes are caught in the same trap disregarding God
as though he is tool
a gadget
as though we are Gods that have control
about everything

understand this that without that root and the tree where can leaves and flowers be?

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunday, Saturday, Friday, Thursday, Wednesday......

when days get reversed
like 10,9,8,7,6,5,4,3,2,1

then O

till monday morning, when suddenly the counting stops till sunday evening when i sleep

till then
you run as fast as you can back to the past
back to recovery

when all the petals
of the roses fall

you only see them all
sleeping
their eyes
without any regret

because you are
still here
in their name

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunflower Goddess

i once wrote a poem for you and then you were gone

no trace. no whisper. no cue.
no clue.

you worship the sun
always. always.

i am the moon
and tonight i always wait for you my golden sheen

and my hundred stars are looking for you when you have finally arrived you are dead sunflower goddess i bleed light

and so are the stars

they twinkle nothing but signals of sadness

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunflowers

sun
bringing with it
in its face
& body the seeds for tomorrow's flowers

RIC S. BASTASA
Sungkilaw Falls

so there were Japs pretending to plant trees and rehabilitate the place and with the collaboration of the mayor the project went through only after a while when they finally got what they really wanted the gold bars hidden beneath the belly
of the mountain
where Sungkilaw Falls beautifully flow

after that time the Japs left and the mayor too was rich bought two mansions a beach property and three expensive cars

there are always thieves and exploiters and their conspirators

as i watch Sungkilaw Falls i feel gratified that somehow there is still something worth seeing in this place which thieves cannot steal the beauty of the water freely falling on the rocks below the fresh air

the song of the birds that occasionally pass by some decided to stay and nest their eggs

on the trees
that the Japs planted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunny Day Today

sunny day
mellow light on the leaves
of the san franciscos

bright colors
trying to please
the pains
of the heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunrise

a routine
the most familiar
taken for granted
and sometimes
not admired
neglected by
the mind
for those who chase time
running a dog
eat dog world

for one who stops
a while
and ponder upon this event
of sun reappearing
as the night
fades giving way to day

i say' what a miracle of all miracles! '

first sunrise
after so many rainy days

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunrise Is Coming....

seeing a movie is a good pastime, with lots of educational content it there even if it is nothing but a comedy, because some film writers know how to disguise
a malady from a comedy, like in a whodunnit movie for instance, the actor says, he knows the real serial killer, and he killed it at the end of the scene where all the cherry blossoms all white of them fell like snow to the pavement, like tiny angels singing a hymn for the stones,

well, do not attempt to understand
all these,
you cannot, because it begins with a belief on your prejudices, at first glance, you look like a professor who knows nothing about the book of life, aha, you cannot reach those two fools now, they are there
in heaven, protected by their gods, and they are saying the truths of what is happening underneath the earth, all cans of worms, all battered bats, as the dragon sleeps there dreaming of its long forgotten home.

tomorrow morning we wear our robes, but look at the right side of this blackness there is a spot of blood, and it is alive, deep in those magnifying glasses are the heads of those who meet their untimely deaths.

their guardian angels are taking their swords, and opening their wings, and they are now asking for justice.

it is right, you cannot sleep.
sunrise is coming.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunrise, Sunshine

time for my sunrise
time for sun shining spreading the warmth for all those colder nooks time for light on my window time for the songs of the wind time for the plunge time for the depths
time for the surfacing of all thing supressed time for exposing all those hidden it is time for love it is time for its fulfillment overheating desire, unquenched thirst, i am taking all the waters, i am drinking the fullness, i am swallowing the goodness of all of you, i am drinking your rivers, i am swimming your seas, i am climbing your hills, i am plunging in your valleys, i am erupting as your volcano, my hot flaming magma all yours flowing in your belly, filling all your thighs & all your empty pores

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunrise's Entrance

sunrise is such a lady with a fashion sense

clad in rays of light slim between the shadows of the trees jeweled with diamond
warm like a lover's hand sunrise dramatically arrives full of hope for another brand new day

there is a fruit tray by the
window
five shiny red apples there is a base of white magnolias inside a golden vase by
the window

there is breakfast on the table: smiling fried egg tasty hot dogs, pearl white rice, brewed coffee and a slice of ripe yellow mango.

poetry in bliss
music from the breeze

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunset

sunset
weak rays of the sun
not so warm
dying

a brown dog plays in the sunset of grass taking a jaw bone of a pig from the farm nearby a white dog comes to play with him, but there is no more time for this silly

thing to do,

this time all quarrels end it is dimmer
now and all the children have to go home
now,
sunset, the white and brown dogs find comfort in the dark with their glowing eyes in the dark
tonight

not just the jaw bone, the hind legs and the ears and the belly of another pig come astray.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunset (The One We Agreed Upon)

i like your sunset flaming firmament
hues of fire, red hot iron and orange fruit combined tasting like salt and sugar and vinegar to me v-shaped seagulls like fighting planes and the silence of the vast space like i am in the library the librarian on sick leave and all the books are taken did i forget the flavor?

(remember we agree on a poem with a color, taste, sound, smell and whatever)

vanilla, and the sound, i already told you,

pssst, silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunset As I Remember It

It is an afternoon Walk by the Beach

An orange sunset Follows me Like
I am closely Guarded for some Unknown Danger

I walk alone
The sea foams
surging from Time to time Touch my heels and toes

An alternate
Of sand Foam
And sea
And sunset
Rinsing
My footsteps

I am looking For some Shells of My past

On a sunset shore Retracing It to
The mouth
Of the river
At the Other end

River Meets Sea as I closely watch

The sunset closely guarding.
Sunshine

sunshine
seeps in
the slits of my shutters
i am sassy
to a sash
of shining sun on my shin.

ssshhh.

shine my shoe, shy
seemingly sheepish
sissy sham
soya sauce
semblance of the shell

this coffin
of the wind.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunshine And Flowers And Your Way Of Loving

sunshine, spreading sunshine, warming my face spreading this warm caress to my body, my shoulders, bathe
take the basins of sunshine in the cups of your hands feel close your eyes and feel the sunshine falling in your hair running to your ears then open your eyes to the blooms of flowers, the roses and daffodils in the garden where a chair is there where you sit looking at me, beside you, bathing to sunshine, closing my eyes feeling the warmth of the gazes of your eyes, the pulse of your wrist the palm
your hands running
slowly all over me, sunshine and hands and eyes closing opening to dazzling color and closing again to the thoughts of love of you always loving me

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunshine And Green Fields

it will never be boring the same sun shining on the same green field and the same man sitting under the same tall tree watching a day go by like it is the last day of his life

sunshine touching
his face like the hands of a remembrance

green fields appeasing him like some souvenir from a far away
memory

and there is this wind always whispering
to his ears:

wait for me
i am coming.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sunshine Friends

develops and weddings and even funerals not because they are happy when i am happy or sad when i am sad not that they mourn or rejoice with me it is because of the food served hot on the table and the drinks ice-cold the ice still clinking some sparkles and glitter only for a while

RIC S. BASTASA
Superobama

FROM the most powerful nation
of this world
SuperObama is produced, fly[ing beyond the speed of light the mind that encompasses the anticipation of the universe dam of the immense flood saving each American from a predicted
poverty
for the next twenty years or more
perhaps,
the Third World in faithful adherence shall share the grief and mourns
in utter
silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Superstitious....

it's like
lighting a candle in daylight
inside your room you let it stand and then you tilt it towards your wrist and you pour what is melting
in your skin where some configurations
begin to form
and it is where you foretell who is harming you and you deduce
and deduce some more,
saying, this is it,
this is it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Suppressed Anger

it is as if the belly of a woman is pregnant with a very long snake and slowly it exits its way through the esophagus but you cannot see it first because the teeth is still gritting and the mouth is still closed but on the spur of the moment when restraint gives way the mouth suddenly opens the teeth stops gritting and the head of that very long snake comes out showing its sharp fang
and suddenly
without any talk
bites the object of its
affection.

RIC S. BASTASA
Suppressed Desires

Her only home is herself her only contact to her body her hands untouched by man who want to sleep with her in the nest
of desire,
she refuses all offers regardless of color and shape deep within her pressure is building
like a tornado
but she keeps herself composed like a placid lake like an undisturbed sky glittering with the beauty of
the stars
a volcano is erupting inside her breasts
she refuses hands and lips and mouths
her house is herself abandoned by the sun and the rain
she is alone and too lovely
still
the moon tonight by her open window shall be her lover she is after all a metaphor of suppressed desires.

RIC S. BASTASA
Seeing you
I hear my heart beats
Like drums of Korea

I put my hand
On my chest Suppressing
The loud sound

Like the mouth of a fan screaming to the sight of its idol

My hand is the rag
That covers it

RIC S. BASTASA
Supressed Love

how you kept that flower inside a closed jar and still let it bloom
for 47 summers

how you kept
that kitten inside a dark cage
for 47 summers
and let it meow
meow all those years

you must be crazy
and so cruel
to yourself

how did you ever survive without any breath

you choke all day
i am amazed
you did not even ever ask for any help

RIC S. BASTASA
he was in grade three, neat and clean and well taken cared of, his tv shows screened kissing scenes a taboo and sexist language strictly filtered, movies prohibited and loose behavior restrained catholic boy in an exclusive religious school of st. vincent's in a small city, where girls are on the other side of the gate, where the boys look for them like some hidden gems, to me that is segregation, a supression of my right to be me as a boy and for me to see girls and have fun with them, it was not easy, but there was this incident which i could not really forget and perhaps justifies my rebellion for what is evil in segregation for what is wrong with supression,

my classmates, all boys, hid themselves in the compost pit and rolled down their trousers, their eyes like fire lighting the centerfold of the Playgirl magazine sometime in 1964.

i was the little catholic boy raised in the strictest tradition neat and clean and feeling so ousted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sure, A Bad Day Comes

surely bad days come and they are not just normal sometimes
there are too many of them and then you

learn to live with them just like your ordinary good days. You say hell, but then heaven comes on a brand new day like this: a perfect timing: you are here and i am here and we have nothing to do except to talk and talk and talk and then finally at last we find a common ground: we kiss and touch each other's soul, deeper than before.

RIC S. BASTASA
'Surely It Is Not I, Rabbi? ' He Answered, 'You Have Said So.'

Ah, the traitor in history has kept the answer: It is not me.

Ah, God in his wisdom returns his stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Surfaces

at the surface it may be smooth like varnished furniture but then it is not the surface that really counts the inner layer makes the difference is it made of steel or plain wood?

what stuff are you made of?

what heart is there? what spleen?

softness of cotton absorbent to failures the hardness of clay that cracks to heat

RIC S. BASTASA
Surprise

You do not like the crowd you hide in the darker side of the park On the same spot Another figure sits beside you wow
oh wow
She is the superstar Whom the crowd is looking they all adore her and she is hiding too

And she is asking for your name.

RIC S. BASTASA
Surprise Tomorrow

ala
aldo k.

i am waiting
for God's surprise
tomorrow

whatever,
i shall accept it
as the smiling
child of God

He knows best.
i am least.

RIC S. BASTASA
Surprise Your Mother Today

surprise your mother today
with your

silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Surreal

hazy
that is all that i remember on that trip last night where a dream like a veil wraps my head
covers my eyes
and seals my lips
my eyes saw all that yet i have no words there is simply none enough to describe what really happened that is all that i can remember the haze.

RIC S. BASTASA
Surreal.....

though
mouthless this
body
keeps on telling something:

'you overdid it'

the mind is scarred black birds hover on the hair the soul travels somewhere in the cliffs of your dreams beside the bones there is pain inside the flesh there is certain nervousness

: 'why are you not listening? ' the nerves keep telling

'you are overdoing it'

tonight the body takes its revenge thought scramble beneath an overheated heart the women lose themselves like cars with broken brakes and you are the man, driver of their woes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Surrealistic

lip glossed
lip of glass
cold water
and a dream
your lips
to my lips
a mist by the window
the widow
dreams at noonday.

RIC S. BASTASA
Surrender

He is tired and now left alone After the wars he fought
In broad daylight
Underneath the tall building This is not the war of Achilles Or Odysseus
This is not the blinding of Oedipus Of the weakness of Hamlet This is the war of his own days Stabs of light
Piercing of dusk
The confusions of twilight
This is the war
Of modern battles fought Within the lonely rooms Of the condominium
Where he arrives and departs
Alone
This is the war that he fights Against himself
He prays to the face
At the headboard
And talks to the picture On this wallet
It is him that fights
And it is him that dies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Surrenderee

the noise at noon
can be heard
between our distances

you walk too fast
and so i followed
the procession of your footsteps

maybe it was i who was too slow or maybe it was you who was walking too fast

and then i was thinking things over between us you are too fast for me i decided to change my direction looking for the path who shall embrace my slow steps

RIC S. BASTASA
Surrendering My Own Voice

Subdued, I lost, I have no choice But to surrender my own voice Now I have to go to places Missing your embraces
I am but just a shadow
In a nook without tomorrow I walk under the rain
Where I am wet & drained
And cold in the night
In darkness I lose my sight This is the time of losing In his arms you are smiling And you will not be with me With him you can only be I understand perfectly what losing is you are not with me, you are his This is not the end however, This is just another fever
I must get out from this wall.
I must rise from where I fall

RIC S. BASTASA
Survey Says

that a short poem as this is the only one that you can afford
to read.

autumn leaves
faster please!

RIC S. BASTASA
Survival

it is always nice to know that how far is the island of the thoughts of our lust and desire no matter how endless the horizon is no matter how moonless the sea could be at night at times there is always someone whom you believe to be thinking of you in the manner that the heart keeps beating no matter what no matter harsh the now is like the rays of the sun one morning when you stand still facing the sea thinking of that someone out there, out there, somewhere, you always remember at night, on the darkness and the coldness of the room and the pavement you look at the stars, and you feel how distant memories can be, how tiny, how surreal....

RIC S. BASTASA
Survival Kit

d the grass accepts death of all it has, leaves and roots its color blends with the dust and parched mud cracking surfaces it also knows to preserve its species burying resilient seeds on the cracks
and when it rains it begins to grow buds roots and all and the whole ground is green again

meanwhile on cracked grounds where once the pond was the whiskers of the catfish begin to wriggle
shedding off mud around its skin the fish begins to swim

RIC S. BASTASA
Surviving In A Rainy World....

it must be raining hard and you cannot go out of your cubicle and outside it is muddy and the children are playing and running under the rain as you watch happily how the world is going under the heavy rains and rumored typhoons....

that is why you write and post a poem
like me.

well, we know how to survive even with only words as shield against the sins of our idleness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Survivor

we are here
we mark
a point
we live
for the moment
we do not look forward
as though
we are on moving
up
towards the top of the mountain
we care only for the latest thing to hold on to
we do not look
down
we will be sucked
to the
past,
we see cracks
we feel it
we move slowly
up
we do not know
who is beside
us,
not a word
need be said
in this constant moving at this minute.

RIC S. BASTASA
Survivor Kit....

on his way to the top of the hill
he traces the path of slow circular footage like a way of recalling a past that so badly
hurts,
slowly rising along
the side
of the belly of this mountain
like an ant or more of this green turtle
or this dove
this fledgling
wannabe eagle

feeling so abandoned but coping
saying i am my best friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
Suso Sa Sapa Ang Mga Tanghaga

nangalap tag
g mga tanghaga
nga morag
suso sa sapa

pag-abot sa balay
akong gihugasan
dayon gitunuan
gipanakotan giasinan
gitusok gituhog
aron makaon ang
unod.

RIC S. BASTASA
Suspicious Mind

the five dogs
are barking again
against the fence
towards the
road
someone is coming someone
evil someone destructive of your palace of peace your haven of love your portal
of insanity
someone as paranoid
as the black knight
of the night
the angel of death
the prince of sorrow the king of maladies
the queen of deception the princess of chaos

inside your heart kindles love that drives them all away the dogs stop barking on your feet their tongues lick you on your side they yelp
the soul of their master and then they sleep and dream like you
the monsters of the night
are gone
as peace of the mind now reigns
in the kingdom of the self where privacy is king Swaggering Thoughts....

I've been writing about what i have not told you or never shall it tell each part of this roving whole this whale in my belly these planktons in my mind

at a certain point
there is that predator and prey page of my life that you shall not ever read and this gives me my dream of freedom where i am myself without your knowing

i am always myself but my touch to your cheek shall not tell it

there is always an inside
story
on a writer's documentary episode

this face that has not given you the clue
of that brewing revolution inside the world
drawn by my eyes
into the labyrinths of my intestinal anxieties acidic storms
spasmodic series

soon someone shall tell you and hand you the maps of my journey and you shall be surprised what places have i visited
without you

i fear that hour of revelation where i shall become completely a stranger
to you

where your hands shall shake when your tongue dislikes the taste of my
existence
my flavor is as bland as
old age

you will tell your friends on one of those parties-
'oh, he is like that he is an imagination of my mind he is a mist in the mountain he is the fog

that hangs on one of the trees' and you assure them this matter will just come to pass an ice melting seeping on one of those porous rocks and then be invisible to the layers of rain on a sunny day nothing is surprising anymore everything is as normal as switching light to a room when the night comes without any excuse

after denial, you know what comes
next wholehearted acceptance no matter how silly how sinful perhaps

i like it this way-
'i am a thought, you can always dismiss me as a foam of the mouth of the guy who is suffering from seizure

a whiffing cream on a home baked cake

a dew on the morning's leaf
an orange
appearing with a glossy skin beside an afternoon
window...'

RIC S. BASTASA
Swallowing Everything....

one dead leaf
has fallen from dried twigs
under the
tree of bones
on a very humid high noon

you still have many things to swallow inside your throat

pride for instance

you take everything
now
without any complaint

there is no sound
no grumble

a book full.

------------------------

sa usa ka patay nga dahon
sa silong sa mga sanga nga uga
diha sa punoan nga nakalabira
sa tumang kainit sa
kaudtuhon

daghan kag malad-ok
sa imong tutunlan

ang garbo pananglitan

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
tunlon mo ang tanan sa walay tingog

usa ka librohan

RIC S. BASTASA
involuntarily he swallows something bitter not perfectly round definitely bitter
but for now he shall not spit it out he needs time
perhaps it will be years he cannot even open his mouth to speak they call him mute and dumb and deaf but inside his ears are sharp his understanding like the seed so bitter his hope is only that day when by having learned all the bitterness

he shall spit fire
and magma comes out from his mouth and rocks and everything thermoplastic like he is bomb that shakes all their worlds into tiny splinters

RIC S. BASTASA
Swallowing The Seed

swallowing the seed
fear begins to grow
the seed sprouts inside his belly and roots begin to travel inside his prostate down to his bottom unto his feet immobilizing him

the seed begins to have buds and leaves
and twigs and huge trunks

his eyes shrink on the barks his nose all gone there are no signs of the original man he swallowed the seed of life that no one dared.

RIC S. BASTASA
Swan Song

black swan song
red tai chi foggy forest
damp swamp

RIC S. BASTASA
Swan, Lake, Leaf, Moon....

Your hands are leaves Leaves that float on the water
The water is the body
I am the body
Where your dead leaves
Float
I cannot in this
Be the sun
And you cannot be the green Comforting Grass
of the Hills Those lonely hills that stay awake
at Night
The moon shines on the lake Waiting for the Swan
She is the Swan
and He is the Moon
You are a dead Leaf and I am the Body of Water We are somehow Nothing but Spectators to the Swan
Moon Affair
But sad is this game of Irony Again some love more Love have remained Unrequited....

RIC S. BASTASA
Sweet Nothings Of My Being

WHATEVER i am
to me
is my secret
i am the song
and the singer at the same time
i am both night and day between all these are the twilights
of my doubts

i respect who i am
keeping
what properly belongs
to the
chambers of my heart

all these treasures
deep in the sea
buried
without a map

i find joy in this conversation
where i am both speaker and listener
at the same time

this is the enigma of my being always forgiving gentle, kind and compassionate about what i have done and what i have never done my eyes are two moons my mouth my cave

my throat the tunnel to my
heart
i hear its beating
low upon the hill
echoing
sweet nothings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sweet Rumors

Deserted house
With thatched roof
Along the Dicayo River
Rumors are sweet
On a swarm of bees
Who now live there

RIC S. BASTASA
Sweet Snow In Korea

December is Korea
lots of snow there

with your family
there is always a reason for warmth

joy reigns, and

snow becomes as sweet as Fuji apple

RIC S. BASTASA
Sweet Stupidity

There is this ambiguity sometimes when i think i love you and i want to make love with you i compress distance in a dream my mouth is being conquered by your tongue i am helpless and i surrender to that beautiful gesture of defeat i am ready
i pack my bags, buy a ticket, and a map where to find you on that long journey i dream of the moon i dream of stars caressing my hair i glimmer like a distant sparkle of a fish on the sea by the side of the boat of the fisherman who just make love with his woman by the shore when i arrive there i see you waiting and longing for me wanting to hold me like an old jacket during that stormy night but it is a sad thing i've seen what you bare all of it like a nude painting of a woman who had been sitting for hours before her patron and benefactor and lover and all rolled into one i did not put my clothes on your bed and without a word i left you. if you only know, i also shed tears for this sweet stupidity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sweet Surrender

i had enough of it enough of you
and i go back to the pages of my old self

those times when with a kiss, a hug, of a smile everything is solved and ironed

i vomit thinking about
all these sweet surrender turning so bitter stupidity uncovered
made possible
by distance

you are such a distant star and i too have become one

RIC S. BASTASA
Sweetest Of All Your Freedom........

i do not give interviews

when you ask my name or my number at most i can only tell lies
and if you insist
i give dignity to your
questions
by not answering any of
them

somehow i have learned the value of secrecy
ah, this privacy this anonymity
and quiet desperation as he terms it this solitude of dimming lights this silence of the dusk this utter submission to fading

i like the silence of the leaves when they fall
which they feel as flying in the song i like the silence of heaps and mounds
i like the silence of silence itself

i like the way i meet you when you pass me by and pretend that you never know me that we never had those nights i like this distance that expands that later on sees only a dot

a haze of another horizon

i am this low profile willing to be forgotten it is like a prelude to dying a little cry, and then the acceptance of a wry smile

and then
the abandon

sweetest of all your freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
Sweetheart

Sweetheart, in my hand is this bird
Of desire
It sings a song from the bottom
Of my heart
On my shoulder it hovers On my head it flies Round in circle inside
My mind

On my hand this bird returns With so much kindness
And grace
This bird sings again
About the love
It knew It found
Now nestling in the warm leaves Of your memories

Sweetheart, undress yourself
For love has so desired us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sweet-Nothings

your mouth is close to my ear
and you whisper
something
that i really do not like
to hear

it is your breath
warming my lips

i want your kiss

stop this sweet-nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Swift Times

i met her
mom
we were then co-teachers in an old college

now i am still here
teaching criminal law

his son
a fruit of a broken marriage
says
that his mom is sending
the best regards

i must be so old

that time his boyfriend impregnated
her
he was his student jobless
and carefree
and
a drug addict

dthis time
dthis boy
looks very much like her mother

too
brokenhearted
too careless
too gullible

i must be very old
time
is too unforgiving

RIC S. BASTASA
Swimming With The Dark Queen

how i wish to swim with the dark queen how i like it that way where i make the strokes, set aside the water with my hands
breathe,
and travel a distance,
wading through all the liquids wrapping my body the coldness and warmth all mixed up the rhythm of the body sipping through losing itself to a certain depth and coming out again triumphantly experiencing little deaths and surging up to life again i may pretend that i drown and i may resurrect myself with that big lie and tell myself there is more to life than death there is more to the struggle than simply lose myself in the depths of defeats and some uncertainties

Swim! Swim! Swim! Plunge yourself into the wates of Life That is what my father too used to tell me once when he was alive and so cruel and strict and unfeeling and then i met you dark queen writing everything about swimming how i wish to swim back to life again and what i like most about it is that it can be done without so much talking.

RIC S. BASTASA
Swimming With The River's Rage

when the meaning of water ceases to be fluid one fish swims with the rage of the river looking for sharp stones to tear off its fins looking for a crazy fisherman to catch it hook, like and sinker

RIC S. BASTASA
Swinging My Neck....

early morning
before diving down deep to this workplace
i take time for a tico tico and a habanera
as i swing my neck to such simple joys of the violin strings producing the music that pierces the loneliness of my own soul....

RIC S. BASTASA
Switch On The Light, Please

I always rise from a fall From the floor I lift my bottom Up this table
And from this table I stand And reach this ceiling

It is dark and you simply sit there Like a blind creature Learning to live & even love
♥
This darkness

You keep telling me about your Broken dreams
The walls enclosing you
The wails of the past Screaming at you

Up here I hold this Fluorescent bulb
And put it on the socket
On the ceiling and now
It is finally done & ready

To have light however It is still you
Who must stand
Move to that dark corner And then switch on This tiny thing
♥

RIC S. BASTASA
Sycamore Trees....

i don't imagine sycamore trees we don't have them

i can't imagine the sea-breeze bringing to me the perfume of your hair or remembering once that there was spring and that you were with me not that i do not like spring but because there is no spring here and one last thing, i can't remember you because you are no longer here with me honestly what for? do i take another dagger and stab my heart again with it?

how foolish can i be- that is what my friends are telling me.

i don't remember sycamore trees, and i have no plans remembering them.
we don't have it here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Syllables

we are here
always learning how to capture the essence of beauty

our tools:

syllables &
words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sylvia Is Dead

all the stages are for her, she burned her head whole inside an oven and she keeps the riddles of the nine syllables crisp, and firm, and creepy that is sylvia's best and look
here comes the rest, they follow.

intense, so so intense.
painful death and deadly poetry.

my soul rises to the 7th heaven.
i, am, too,
intense, like, you, too, two, the
two of you,
intensity lost
recovered
in a minute or so, so so intense.

i feign death.
i still love to solve the tenth riddle.
the three monkeys are still with me.

they are so cute.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ariel

Stasis in darkness.
Then the substanceless blue Pour of tor and distances.

God’s lioness,
How one we grow,
Pivot of heels and knees! -The furrow

Splits and passes, sister to The brown arc
Of the neck I cannot catch,

Nigger-eye
Berries cast dark Hooks -

Black sweet blood mouthfuls, Shadows.
Something else

Hauls me through air - Thighs, hair;
Flakes from my heels.

White
Godiva, I unpeel -
Dead hands, dead stringencies.

And now I Foam to wheat, a glitter of seas.
The child's cry

Melts in the wall.
And I Am the arrow,

The dew that flies, Suicidal, at one with the drive Into the red

Eye, the cauldron of morning.

P.S.

sylvia and the rest of the girls who know you send their best regards. Still whole to find the holes? and stiff and tickling?

musta ka na conejo? good, you’re still with us.
WELCOME TO THE SHOW.

RIC S. BASTASA
Symbiosis

you are the glass
and on your open mouth
i am the water
i will fill every space
of your body
do not feel my coldness
you do not deserve it.
keep the thirst
i shall quench it.
do not be carried away
by my coldness
do not spill me i need you as vessel of my directionless fluidity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Symbolism

the black wings of
a butterfly
are on top of the red slice of melon

she fabricates
some stories
from there

she says i cannot say i am not part of the black wings the slice of the red melon fears are embedded on the red blood and

... finally i resign, she never knew what a poem means, to me it is my universe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Symbolism Of A Cigarette Ads here is this brown room with closed windows two men are smoking down seven feet below
the soil level up there is a view of the priest with violet vestige spreading the holy water as they all watch with shallow sadness

RIC S. BASTASA
Sympathy

i am happy to see you flying freely in the skies like you are making a painting with the wind

go, take time with the friendly pluffy clouds go, be aware of the colors and scent of the waft- winds
wait, in a moment,
watch the bursting of the sun
the birth
of a star- it is you
now
the center of this universe the apple

of my eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Symptoms Of A Loser

blurring visions
that see tired tigers retreating inside a cave away from humanity,

cracking bones
shouting for repair,

falling hair
lots of locks on the pillow that early morning when there is no feeling of waking up,

a mouth that is shut munching words
and swallowing pride,

a heart that no longer
weeps,

hands that reside
inside the pocket,
feet that refuse to take another mile
of tolerance,

poems growing
like molds on left-over bread

a cockroach proclaiming victory over unwashed coffee mugs.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sync....

the hands know when to take side
with shame
as you begin to cover your face and run away

RIC S. BASTASA
Synergy

the weak and the strong hate and love, religion and science, night and day, sun and moon, water and fire, heaven and earth man and God, sky and sea, the chasm and the abyss,

flowers and grains, grass and pebbles, bees and butterflies, song and poems, prose and stories, paper and pen, cats and dogs and rains, fleas and ants, water and oil, stone and paper, scissors and glass and diamonds, thoughts and actions, friends and foes, mountains and plains and valleys, eels and ladles, pins and sands, thread and needles, stars and fish, sheep and shit, silence and noise, solitude and emptiness, i-pods and beans, cells and phones, cliches and idioms, foams and fowls, and come to think, well, don't laugh: you and me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Synthesis....

we were in israel, then we crossed the border moving towards egypt, we passed by Lot, and then arrived in cairo. Had a cruise in the nile, watched the belly dancer.

we moved back to jordan. heard a lot of views. bathed in the dead sea. roamed Petra.

no, it is not the travel, no longer excited actually but the realization that religion is not that important. Or not the issue.

it should have been love of humanity.
love of self.
or just love.

love could have been just love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Szymborska 's Miniature Worlds

'You can find the entire cosmos lurking in its least remarkable objects.'

a grain of sand
a speck of dust
a vein of the leaf little twilights

finally me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Szymborska 's Yearns

'Poets yearn, of course, to be published, read, and understood, but they do little, if anything, to set themselves above the common herd and the daily grind.'

i do not have the wish anymore
to be understood by you or anybody

i belong to the common things you cannot see me in the herd
i am in my daily endeavors

unknown to you i still write without any wish that you
recognize my voice or feel the longings of my hands or see the scars in my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Szymborska, I Am Drowning

'I'm drowning in papers.' it is all about the poems that i have written for years they stay on these papers and have become an ocean where i am a little boat sinking, i am like you drowning but the gods have not condemned me yet to die as they have given me another minute

RIC S. BASTASA
'Let the people who never find true love keep saying that there's no such thing. Their faith will make it easier for them to live and die.'

that is the problem of finding true love and having it in your arms and thighs

you do not know anymore when and how to die as easier as you want it now without the other

RIC S. BASTASA
Szymborska's Getting To Know You

Get to know other worlds, if only for comparison.

I am near, too near for him to dream of me.'

try another word to describe an old experience try another world to destroy the old world that destroyed you try another fence jump over another field greener to your eyes and dream with me try keep on trying let things go let things be let us belong

RIC S. BASTASA
'Somewhere out there the world must have an end.'

and then my wife throws out the last porcelain out of the window and then i stop writing an unfinished poem because the gas stove is not giving its flame

RIC S. BASTASA
tom took the train to toledo
totally tickled
to the top
of
the tip

RIC S. BASTASA
T.

t IS the tea party
i have with me
i slice my cake
and eat it without anybody seeing me

t is my own tete-a-tete with my own temple

my own soul
a
T

Truth

RIC S. BASTASA
every written word
takes away a part of me i am chipped off

bit by bit

an eyes is missing an ear is cut off

as i appear before you my mirror

i become incomplete because i am always giving and i walk away my hair is cut and some locks fall faraway from misgivings i sit beside a clear pool of water there are no ripples the moon is full

darkness subsides
and then i am full.

RIC S. BASTASA
the green tiles of the garage reinvent this old house it is more livable now the hammock newly washed the shoes newly brushed and the table newly painted this house has reinvented itself into something more admirable decent, confident, renewed, this could be a start

as you must begin to recreate what you once was too

do not be just yourself go beyond what is admirable reinvent your mind dye your hair, polish your nails scent your soap and wash your hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
you must have noticed that in all my stories i am always the hero precisely that is what history is all about, the storyteller is the survivor, the victor triumphant one the lone survivor shall always tell direct from the horse's mouth

i know that sometimes you suspect if the king is telling a lie or that the princess is having false teeth

i keep mum to all those suspended beliefs i have my stories only for myself, on limited edition not even my wife knows about the emperor's clothes he is naked, the child laughs i am in the marketplace and i don't give a damn about rip van winkle or that rapunzel what i have inside my room are the true ones someone is killed and the murderer is a rich man still at-large..

RIC S. BASTASA
between the divine law and the laws of men

between the id and the superego the wall and the other wall between the floor and the ceiling

between sin and forgiveness between my flesh and my spirit lies the secret of my sanity and like civil law there shall always be compromises plea bargaining, the golden mean of Aristotle between right and wrong, there is something that must make us alive for the meantime that this journey is not over yet between my left and right ear we must listen so we can hear between two words are the spaces these are places of compromises at the extremes of pure solidity there lies this stupidity.

RIC S. BASTASA
a day goes beyond sunset lengthened to a few meters darkness dances under colored neon lights
there is more to it even than what i
in fidelity does: teaching a class of law going beyond precarium and mens rea there was something more in Oedipus and Antigone the brooch that he used to remove his eyes from its sockets and roam the world as a beggar holding only a staff and his empty bowl because even if he once was king(destiny toyed what he is) he sinned, and there is no law that punishes him
he punishes himself.

their eyes turn round the skies are gray
i hear the rain from the alum roofs the class is dismissed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Oedipus well demonstrated that since his eyes did not see the truth then they are of no use and so he plucked them off their sockets self-inflicted punishment with him as judge

faraway from what this college of law is teaching: this doctrine of self-preservation due process, and equal protection the right of the accused to life to lie the right of his lawyer to lie for him the poisonous tree and its fruits benefit him to freedom justice is a child without a mother on tattered clothes, foul and begging on the streets emaciated, lost and tomorrow

shall die.

RIC S. BASTASA
yes, the news is spread by her poetess of the northern skies her book is just out of the oven buttered bread, glossy topping i can smell the scent of her poems and soon i must touch it shall my brain afford the luxury of her metaphors? the sharpness of her wits?

shall i write her for a free copy and tell her that it is the best poetry that i have ever read in my entire life?

given a chance to decide which to take fried chicken or toasted poetry?

you bet.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a winding river beside tall mountains you must know that we have crossed this river
ten times already

it is the same river winding through the banks of these foggy mountains the tall cogon grasses can deceive us and so are the boulders of rocks that lie along our paths

we are grasping for air to reach the highest peak of these range of mountains and valleys and

plains

at the topmost there we can see the truth and negate that we can never step twice on that same river that winds through the hillsides snake, boa, venomous circuitous foggy paths damned, we stepped on the same river more than twice this is the tenth, and this is the highest peak the world is nothing but a winding snake.

RIC S. BASTASA
Table Lamp

Sooner we shall forget that taste of sweetness take a look at that oil that sleeps upon a smooth porcelain plate

it is the coldness that makes some things hard

that makes us surrender to the nook and we cover our bodies with what memory there is to make us warm

when we are apart when nothing is heard of it is the darkness of this room

the silence of the floor the stillness of the door upon a lock that makes life so secure that will lull me to sleep and then the moon sails pass by my window as i turn myself off like a switch of a table lamp.

RIC S. BASTASA
Table Manners

i happen to be in the party of the rich where each spoon, fork and knife has a specific purpose,
the napkin, and the bowl.
you do not have to howl
the food on the table
delicious as they maybe
and here i am
as hungry as can be,
but there are rules
which keep on
telling,
the way to hold this and
that
the manner to sip
and spit
all eyes on me,
and so
there is no way now
to be just me.

i leave early,
that is not the place
really for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tabula Rasa

this is a blank wall or as you wish it, this could be a blank page, or you may consider this a blank mind of a child and you will be teaching him some things for the first time, go, scroll, and find something, do you remember now, why the child is still in pain? why the walls are stronger? why the blank page still have stains of blood in there?

some sad memories that refuse to leave?
don't lose hope, there are still more blank spaces of the mind imagine it to be some kind of a sky now, put the stars and the moon, and try wishing something nice and beautiful like a boat filled with flowers and some light and then silently it sails on a very peaceful sea like a fine silky cloth covering the dining table to the place that you always dream to live

forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Taciturn

Indeed she is different from papa, this aunt of mine Is reserved, in speech and manners Inclined always to the silence in grandma’s garden Her expressions are always silent like a nod When she means yes, like a waving of her hand When she wants to leave, she is like A quiet pond, she is like the silent fish in there, She is like the lotus amidst the ripples of this Family in disagreement about wealth and money,

Her reticence, her reluctance to join in the family Conversation amazes me, her fragility I am bound To respect like she is a delicate beautiful butterfly

But then, when the extrajudicial partition was Laid on the table, she cries foul, she wants more Than what we must fairly get, and we all say that this Is unfair, oh sure, I realize, she is stern, she is Silent for some other reasons, she must be thinking

That we her nephews and nieces are morons Enough not to know the law of inheritance, about

The fact that when she and papa were young She was always adored and grandpa’s favorite.

In fact, papa died a very sour, shouting old man.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tacloban At The Santo Nino Shrine

what i saw was the luxury of the past ivory birds, octupus chandeliers, chekoslovakian furnitures russian dolls and persian carpets these are all found here icons of Christ and the Holy Virgin Mary in marble chips from Italy the paintings of Malakas and Maganda the banig walls that took two years of polish and paste it is totally a different world thirty-seaters or twenty seaters of chosen dignataries for dining and dancing the wide halls of this palace

the tourist guide guides us to different rooms of this country of fools each with an austrian mirror polished black and white floors the chosen hard wood and the glossy varnishes these
all these
the people have suffered in poverty and too much confusion of the times what have we got now?

we have this trauma, of never again

everything is dust.
everyone is dust

i am going back to the past perhaps i shall bleed again, cry...

RIC S. BASTASA
Tactless...

He is tactless
and to punish himself he reigns in the kingdom of silence he is condemned not to Speak but he finds a solution to this predicament:

he writes
becoming friendly with the word, he reaches for the other world acquainted with the high spirits someone who reads this writes me one day that i owe her an explanation

i guess this is already an invasion.

i sign off. I fade, until i become a blank space

she looks for me
not even a dot i am

it is the emptiness that remains the most loyal friend in the kingdom of silence where i am alone but king not really lonely but perhaps lovely

and free.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tagabukid

Adtos syudad
Tan-aw sa metro
Taas ang liog
Nangita sa iyang
Kapalaran

Sa iyang kaulaw Dihang nakabuak
Sa baso
Nga baratohon
Ra baya pod unta
Sa dihang siya Giayog kasaba

Gihandom niya ang
Ngiub nga Langub

Ang lalom nga suba
Sa ilang bukid

Diin siya usahay
Kaniadto nagtago

Ug nagpaharohay
Sa tumang kalipay

RIC S. BASTASA
Tagaytay Note After The Rain

the pines glisten with what remains of the rain
this morning

someone stands by his window thinking about what he stands for

there will be no change
rain or shine
one sticks for love
despite the weariness it gives

some black birds come
again
on that same spot you learn what is a moment the shortness of arrivals and the sureness of departures most of all the uncertainty of what's next when the sun shines when the rain begins to pour when the road opens up

for you
too, to leave, with no definite day for your return

now goodbyes are painless like taxi rides
moments are just breakfasts and lunch

RIC S. BASTASA
Taghoy....

nagsulat kita aron
malabang ang kusog nga sulog sa baha.

dili pisi ang atong gisulat. sakayan kini. bugsay. mga lig-on nga bukton.

nagsulat kita aron makatkat ang habog kaayo nga bukid. subay sa dalan, hangtod nga matumban ang kinatumyan, dayon natog kanaog paingon sa patag aron mahimamat na usab ang atong minahal.

dili bug-at nga bato ang atong gisulat.
mga ang-ang kini. dili dapanas. mga kahoy kini nga lig-on ug gamot. mga sanga nga sarang nato kawahiran. kalo sa kainit.

nagsulat kita aron maluwas nato ang atong kaugalingon apil na ang atong mga igsoon. sa kapit-os sa kinabuhi. sa kawad-on.

dili kini pagpangilkil. dili kini pagkumkom.
abri ang palad. taghoy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tai Chi Chuan

let me harmonize
your yin and yang

let us be passive and active in this

flowing,
rhythmic,

d

e l

i
b er
a
t

e

m o
v
e m en
t

take your stance
take your position

let no master teach us
the same things
all at the same time

look at me
i am not looking at
you exactly

RIC S. BASTASA
Taj

the screen of the computer monitor if it has thoughts i guess may think that i am crazy smiling at nobody, nobody, but (don't laugh)

me...

RIC S. BASTASA
Take A Pick For The Moment

we meet i only have one layer we talk and i added another layer we discuss and i added more layers we dive to a certain depth and of course i have to add more and more layers so i may not drown
so i may not be too vulnerable to pressure and when we come out of the water our faces surfacing you do not recognize me anymore i have layers and layers of myself that even me i cannot anymore recognize the violence within this turbulence of the self this storm inside us this layers and layers of selves covering the truth

how can i ever uncover what my depths cover from time to time when you utter my name?

when you tell me that i am myself.

there is no self.
There is no us.

There is no future.
I have only the past and My now

Like a fruit basket
all fresh on top of your table.

Just take one
The apple perhaps.
And fill yourself.

For the moment.

RIC S. BASTASA
Take Again The Cliches Of Ourselves,

i also know how to close doors, in fact, i have closed so many,
to my own delight,
though, i have to be honest that at times, closing a door leaves in me the sound of sad hinges, nevertheless, i have managed to familiarize myself with the sound of rusty hands, and the rattles of nails, after all, learning to survive the hazards of walling in and walling out is the only means that we use to arrive at survival rooms, where we feel safe and take the soundness

of sleep

we take again the cliches of ourselves, the redundancies of our usual beginnings our modest cruelties, our capacity to escape and be strangers to places of our lonely hearts.

RIC S. BASTASA
Take Care My Dear....

did you forget what he said? that a friend in need is a friend to avoid.

that what you sow
shall you reap
that what foul shit you have thrown to the face of the heavens
all these
shall come back to you?

learn by now that your 'foolishness will always go back to your own body'

and so take care yourself love it, and don't behave as though you two are not united, one soul, one body,
sound mind, sound heart, eventually, it is you who shall either suffer or cheer.

RIC S. BASTASA
Take Care Yourself

how you wish that this trip be long
so we can be together for long
you like the conversations and the stories that make you cry
and laugh bitter yet and sweet still you like the sound of the bus and every bus stop is a memory
of sorts
you like the comfort of the seat
and the coolness of the rural air that meets the skin of your face but this journey will not be long
it will be over for the satisfaction of all not just you
and soon you will cry and laugh
again
but this time alone and no longer in this journey
for i will be gone away on a trip
of my own
and so shall you

RIC S. BASTASA
Take Care. I Love You.

i've been attempting to write you a letter and send it through the post.

it will be something that you will least expect: what with facebook and emails and Skype etcetera.

but i miss the ritual of writing a letter on a yellow sheet of paper detached from the pad and then scribbling my thoughts for you as though i am writing a good composition or a poem. i think you will be honored by such a meticulous deed.

i will take time to walk from my house to the post office talk to the officer there and ask how much will it cost me to mail this letter for you. how many days and i begin to imagine when a postman finally hands the letter which you do not expect at all from me or anybody.

then you will open the envelope and read the letter which i sealed with my kiss (literally my saliva).

i will not ask how you feel about it. i am just expressing my love for you from a very far distance away from my lonely house (not a home).

i won't bother you for an answer. it is a rainy season here and everything is wet and damp but do not worry. i am warm and safe, embraced by my own arms.

i just want you to feel that i still love tradition and perhaps in your modern world, where you belong, i have become out of tune.
take care. i love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Take Me

take half of what i have
half-heartedly

RIC S. BASTASA
Take Off That Load For A While

I see,
Your problem is heavy
I can feel its load
And I too cannot carry it, But if you are kind to yourself Like a friend
Why not take that load off
A while
And take your rest Breathe deeply as you take A walk around
This peaceful lake
Try meeting the Colored fishes
In the transparencies
Of its waters
Touch a tree
Feel the strength
Of brown barks Climb if you want
And see some Nests with eggs
Hear the songs
Of birds on this Hilltop and then Walk again around
This lake

Let us see if the Load is really
That heavy Afterwards

You may come Back tonight
And see the Full moon
Sailing on
The placid water
Take The Bad News With You...Sleep Now.

you bring the bad news and i am not listening

i make my own day
please my own nights

i light my own lamps hang my own stars

take the bad news with you i have enough of all these the nights howl in me and the wolves are many.

RIC S. BASTASA
Take The Narrow Road

you must take the narrow road that leads you to freedom it is the same narrow road that the camel took to save itself it the same camel who passed through the eye of the *needle

* a small, slender piece of steel with a sharp point at one end and a hole for thread at the other used for spiritual surgical sutures

RIC S. BASTASA
Take This Empty Cup

take this empty paper cup i have in my hand
it is empty
and you will fill it i ask of you

you think of the hot water and coffee
so i may not sleep for days

you change your mind
you take the cup
and fill it with coldness like chunks of ice

no i will not crack
on this sudden change like the empty cup
in your hand
i am simply made of paper throw me crumple me i am prepared and i really do not mind at all

i have always felt the same love for you even in the midst of a frosty day
on thick fogs
on cold tin roofs

RIC S. BASTASA
Take This Step

take this step
of fragility
follow me
inside myself

my inner voice
shall be your inner voice

my echo
shall be your echo

take this step now
take this offer of an imitation

this & this
and that

that which which makes you me and
you
too me

this step to oneness
of silence
and bliss

RIC S. BASTASA
Takes Time To Learn That...

there are too many paths leading to poetry at first you like to copy from them and be one of them and being like all the rest you adore each other soon, you depart from them and find your own way and they won't like it and call you a freak but there is only one path actually and that is when you speak what your heart says when being troubled you listen to your own sound hoping that from its own syllables you can find out the cure.

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking A Bath

last night stains
of pretensions now gone soap and water on an early morning bath less the whistle

just the pressure and then anew you come out of the bathroom

the usual day the usual activity: always hoping

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking A Glance At You

taking a glance at you
is poetry in itself, by itself and for itself.

there are words in my eyes they speak in silence. They long to tell you what I feel.

there are hands on my lips. There are fingers there.
They long to go near you and kiss your lips too.

I see you as words too. Your eyes are images of my own happiness. Your lips are shaping the shapes of ships and they have sails to take me away to ecstacies.

I feel you as words of love, and lust and desire insatiable. my fingers want to read every syllable in your face.

you have always been my there are so many of you in all of them.

words, and images, and ecstacies. faces and compositions.
i love all of them. And this time I take a glance again. at you. this poem. this is you. Believe me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking Advantage Of Her Loneliness...

someone from the u.s.
working as a nurse
has arrived and she will finance a reunion

a class reunion for twenty five thousand pesos from one single pocket and so, all the parasites are there, eating for free, laughing because another stupid working gal, is stupid enough to spend her money to all these lazy people taking advantage of her loneliness....

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking Advantage Of The Calamity

I sometimes think that in times of calamities the wolves are still there wearing the best sheep's clothes and in packs they go to the places where people are asking help and with their instincts they do what they always do: taking bites and finally taking all of them for their sumptuous dinner.

Not to be outdone are the vultures who are waiting for their own time. The dead are useful too for their breakfast.

There are only few good Samaritans. And they work without any nameplates at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking Courage

there is no escape
when our eyes
meet again
on a morning like this

my feet are tired of running from the dreams of
my hands
the heart speaks
and my mind
keeps the intricate tendrils of its logic

all of them point to the flower of love
that blooms

finally i cut it from its stalk
and deep in the hollows of my heart
this vase
without water
i shall watch it wilt

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking His Cue On Nike Shoes

i know mr. lou about the story of the nike shoe about corporate imperialism in the world of the little girl somewhere in India
stitching
the nike in the shoe bound for the ads: made in the USA

AND you bought a pair of nike shoes
and you are confused about the thought you gave to the little girl whose
hands
bleed the blood of imperial oppression

we discussed this matter over a glass of beer
after a class in economics

it roots down
to this

the poor getting poorer and the rich getting richer
thing

it boils down
to
i know but what can i do?

that has always been the situation and it has always been the question asked since
time immemorial, a cliche of our ancestors who welcome oppression like a good neighbor and who thrive in such an arrangement by reason of tolerance and just to make precious peace

a dream about harmony and just being civil about economic war and be at peace with everybody no deal

you are confused, Mr. Lou about the Nike shoe

it boils down to this:
i am just a speck of dust in this universe, yes, what can you really do, Mr. Lou?

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking Life As A Friend

life knows you

and joins you
in the table
of your

joys and sorrows

give it space
take a chair
give it a glass of wine that it deserves

- -
and say cheers!

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking The Narrow Path

this is the narrow path of disbelief
one gets elbow to elbow with uncertainties in a party of masks one talks to someone without a name
with no place to stay
this is the narrow path
it only you that fits in and all they say when they pass are excuses
this is the narrow path of silence questions hang like stars in the skies you are a grain of sand below a full moon
you look for light and comfort
there is so much
but you have none

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking The Stairs

we lift a body
using the legs
and stair upon stair
we breathe
we do not even ask why are we bent
on going upward?

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking Things In Passing

you chide me for taking things in passing and looking at them as though they are tiny

ants on a hill grasshoppers playing on the grass moths circling around the light fleas on the rug

i could have told you that many days back in my youth i was worshiping the sun had time with flowers and took more moments with the rivers those were the huge things in my life where i placed more significance but then they were so hurting at times and then i shun

what we think are important i like the dips and i stay on the surface of things

no longer wanting to swim but you may see me (not miraculously) walk on top of the water gliding on the shimmer of its skin and then without the use of so many words i leave and then go away and what you always see (though this may not be true after all) is always the happiness subsumed in my suppressed smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
Taking Time

i tried to ask myself what are days for they always equate it with walking and the nights always with sleep. Some have taken the courage to redefine the colors.
black need not be dark, and white need not be waking,
sleep would be pink at times and twilight blue.
i do most of the thinking at night when everyone hides in the darkness of their sleep. there are colors and sounds and scents.
and i begin to love the variations, the aberrations have become adventures and no one in the house knows no one understands what is happening to my eyelids, my mouth does not speak and my eyes, having seen much, have desired days to be the place for the dead, the white mausoleums, the scents of the flowers for the weary.
i sleep and dream at noontime and nobody is there anymore to mind. I am alone and i have began to love this moment.
my day is dark. my night is light.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tal Vez Mejor Con Un Cantante Español. Quizás..?

in fighting
depression she presses
her ears
on the radio in an old house of an unpainted wall inside her room intently listening to a spanish sonata

and then she dances alone in her messy room.

RIC S. BASTASA
when you write me was it with the objective that i cannot understand you?

do you conceal true intent with words that from time to time i have to refer to a dictionary
threshing out
a connotation from a denotation?

if you hand me metaphors on a platter for breakfast i may be lost in the labyrinths of the poem and i cannot be back home on time
and you will regret my being lost because you tell me that you cannot wait forever

clicking clock
cruel running monotones next time, please write to me in simple terms one that draws me nearer to you so that i may understand how you are doing, what you are, and where are you going

because it will be same with me when i say i am lost, i am lost, i am not into a Greek tragedy facing the cyclops and looking for the golden fleece or building that horse to the enemies

you have a bow and arrow strike me at the center of my heart do not talk about the apple on my hair i know how to wriggle in pain
with you, just tell me
and soon
this will be over.

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking About The Obvious

it is not hard, i suppose, to talk about hidden matters, people do these most of the time, like what happened behind the scenes and the real stories still untold, people know them more than we do,

what seems to be hard
not just to understand, but even to talk about, are the obvious ones
those found in our very noses,

we seldom see them
but others will

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking With A Stranger

he says he is in china teaching, then he says
not teaching only,
he is researching on the roots of language, mandarin he speaks
and bisaya too,
a man of the world
from the island
where i live
and call
home,
he is a stranger and i tell him my name, my work, i show myself with what i write and he takes time to read all
until
he sees something wrong and he corrects it, my choice of words
my spelling, the do's and don't's in poetry in writing a letter to a friend in composing an eulogy a song of departure a poem of regret, the last thing he says was that he once fished and that the sea has become his home, and then i knew him, but i will not tell him who he is.

it is enough that we have become friends.

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking To My Own Snakes....

everyone is obsessed with
themselves
when a conversation is struck
be it in the bus or somewhere
else
a path is mapped out leading to the self, his kids,
her husband,
his accomplishments, his house, her cat, some cooking and family dinner

the door is closed for you to get inside and feel the ambiance of the soul

the world of each man is self-centered all planets and all suns revolving around this selfishness and with this in mind i am no longer bothered

i have accepted this tenet this rule of engagement and thus when i talk to you even before you have spoken the first word or invoked the first image i have already forgiven you.

in some deaf moments it is there where i make a space of my own in the middle of your forest trees i also talk to my own snakes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking To Myself, As You Think That You Like Me.

i think i will admire you more for not being like me, if you imitate me, it might be funny, or if you insist, i may be flattered on the illusion that i am of your liking, but i do not need it, it is not that i am bored of myself, but it is more of saying that i am more dignified if there is only one kind of me, and that you also deserve that praise that you have become more of yourself, less anyone else.

i have enough of myself, and i am not like history that repeats itself, like an error.

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking To Oneself

i arrived with a heavy heart i was dragging my feet home my arms seemingly lost their bones i am weakened uttered the words which should not have been said
full of regrets
i reviewed every syllable only to find
that they must be said because they are
ture

those who listened behaved like mirrors reflecting light
to each wall

some have become walls
actually
forming part of the room shying away from the eruption of volcanic truths

i was justifying to the window of the car
they were not ripe for those lines

meanwhile i was left alone at peace with the noise of the strong wind
the trees were about to fall on me

but that time was not an excuse anymore
it was enough
i said it all.... i said everything and whatever regret that this mind kept on repeating could just be a matter of opinion that anyone to include the one talking to me
now
that must be kept unto itself
forever...

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking To Oneself

why do you follow me?

i repeat
i do not have roses in my hands i do not carry a bowl of soup a basket of fried chickens do you like the contours of my back?

there are no muscles on it nothing smooth like the skin of a morning leaf do you see a map there? or a pot of gold at the feet of my rainbow?

how can i ever have
a rainbow?
there is no pot of gold pure myth

are you falling in love with my tracks?
they are not like the tracks of gazelles
nothing like the softness of deers they are all sculptures of mud

animal dung are its possibilities of content

unlike all journeys you must know by now that mine has no
exact destination
there is no time here nothing like the calculated arrivals of weathers nothing like the predictability of the seasons why do you follow me? why are you always following me? i am a little bit disturbed likely and sooner i will be perturbed do you love the bounty of my emptiness? it is an empty bowl on the side of the abandoned house are you not scared by the monster of my nothingness? they are the ghosts who cannot locate the entrances of their rests they are those long dead but who could not find eternal peace they are the restless screams of the unthinkable souls of Hades

i always move away that is the only kind of motion that i know shadow, oh shadow, why do you follow me? light, oh amazing light, why do you cast it upon myself?

this is the only pleasure that i have i talk to myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking To 'Them'

talking to 'them' has become a burden just lately
i notice it  and my mind travels along the paths of the streams of its own consciousness totally detached from every word that is said...

i look at my heart and feel the running of the river in my veins blood flooding in the fields of my mind i am amazed at this opportunity of not having to need anybody to make me think deeply....

i rise above society now like i have new wings to fly what they say do not affect me how i live is my own lookout
where i go, i go where i intend to stay and rest and be there i decide....

i am my own man now and i do not mind what is in store for me.
i guess, this is it.
my life, my decision
my destiny, my own action.

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking To Yourself

you talk to yourself because you can talk to nobody because you have talked to the tree beside you and it is not enough to unload what burdens you this thing that fills your head that bloats your stomach

this hubris
this angst

this thing that kills the beating of your heart which shames love and which diminishes your faith

you talk to yourself because there is no sense talking to them
these judgmental creatures without ears and erased eyes those that do not feel those who have died ahead of you and yet still pretend to know and touch you

you talk to yourself everyday now you feel so light and then you begin to flap your wings and fly away forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking Too Much

i have said so much what follows next is regret why i talk too much

the next thing is reactionary silence
stubborn silence chosen option not to talk for a day even if it is a case of an emergency

there is fire in the house and they’re looking for the fire extinguisher and i know where i keep it but i am not telling because i have said so much and i still have much regret

RIC S. BASTASA
Talking Upon One's Self Upon A Resolution Of A Conflict since i cannot hold you i let myself go somewhere else to hold another

there is no one like you but i can always close my eyes and find you
there

i can hold you as though you are mine just that

even in my dream
even in the cheapest of my illusion you dread me

death looks upon me and smiles
as though
i shall love it as though i can finally find you
in those dark arms

i do not own my world neither shall i conquer yours by force i tend my own garden of sorrow
then
I'll make a gate where one may enter I'll put a door
where i can be alone

i am also myself
my own faithful lover
without any
repulsion
without any condition for i can be my own magical concoction for i must live to claim a world of my own alone and still be whole happy and acceptable upon my own terms and conditions

RIC S. BASTASA
Taludoy

he last saw me when i was four years old, barely able to walk from a rare disease,
he was father's side kick in the farm where flood rises and they would have to use boats to plant the rice.
he couldn't believe how i have become so unlike of myself as a boy, i have a big body now, and speaks too fluently their own language, father spoke their language from the heart but he was so cruel then beating him with a bamboo stick,
he did not cry though as expected from a brave brown native of the subanen tribe known for their resilience.
Uncle Peping wants him evicted and he has nowhere to go only this land that his father entrusted to him as a tenant of the third generation.
i said he cannot leave just like that there is a law between us, from where i started as a boy with a sense of charity and
indebtedness of the past.
He taught me how to ride the buffalo and then he let me go fall
into the river
and swim
all by myself, alone unafraid about the mythical tale-eating crocodile.
Now his life in in my hands.
And i must not fail this time.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tambok Nga Babaye

Itom ang iyang sandalyas Mobo siya morag Katasyon sa among Cabinet nga butanganan Og kape og gatas

Daghan nag puti ang Iyang buhok
Mubo usab morag
Lampaso ang
Iyang mga bangs

Ang iyang blouse
Itom nga dahon og
Puti nga mga bulak

Ang iyang karsones
Maong nga morag
Asul nga panapton
Nga nalimtan og
Bulad sa mahal nga
Adlaw kay napughaw

Nag-antiohos dayon
Sige siyag teks teks Dayon tan-aw tan-aw Sa unahan dayon duko Na pod dayon teks teks Na pod morag dunay Gipangita gipaabot

Sa kadugayan misibog Paingon siya sa punoan Sa nangka sa kilid sa

Dayon og lakaw paingon Sa estasyonan sa mga Easyride og habal-habal.
Taming, Domesticating Us... the fear of having sown many seeds

is here,
upon a storm, a lonely woman, picks some of the sprouts, puts them on her skirt, lifting and cares for all these inside her house, trying to figure out what are all these,

there is only little light from the window she closes them all day some drops of rain from a leaking roof it is something so unnatural what she does she does for herself her own curiosity that has killed thirteen cats some more may die

these seeds
may not grow leaves anymore how can anyone so sound have disbelief that the wild is the true niche? she believes in pots and her greenhouse she kills all the insects that visit the frames of her windows that is my fear when the world dies because the learned so many of them

have tamed their hearts domesticated their wild foxes murdered the essence of my earth

RIC S. BASTASA
Tan-Awon Lang Ang Moabot

Ang kagahapon nakita niya Sa gamayng bata. Malipayon Nga nanghingugmo sa sanga Sa punoan sa balimbing

Samtang ang iyang nanay Namilo sa iyang mga habol Ug nanawag alang sa sayo Nga pangaligo sa atabay.

Gahi'g ulo ang iyang kagahapon.
Ug nahulog siya kuyog sa nabali Nga sanga sa gabok nga balimbing.

Sa iyang pagmata, wala na Iyang nanay. Karon, siya Mitutok sa kalsada paingon Sa iyang padulngan.

Gikapoy na siya. Nagpungko sa Daplin sa karsada. Naglantaw sa Nanglabay. Nagpakahilom. kabalaka.

Walay kahadlok. Kon kinsa kadtong Moabot, dili na siya mangutana.
Kon kinsa ug unsay iyang tuyo.
Ug kon kinsay mopahawa.

RIC S. BASTASA
I do not know if you tried Tanduay rum 65

i tell you take it
even once

savor the smooth flow of the spirits inside your throat running slowly into you lungs then into your heart feel it there like a tinder if you can only see it it has some spark of flints and just wait a little until you remember how was it that you were charged with rape and you are imprisoned for 7 years for all the lies that she peddled in court and only if the judge himself has not tasted Tanduay rum 65

when he was 17

he could not have felt so well inside his lungs and heart that you were the innocent boy at heart molested by that 27 year old unhappy woman who really want to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tango

takes two to tango
takes one to ballet

it may take three to boogie five or four to do the twist but let me tell you friend i am classical and i like ballet most specially the split.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tango....

life must be a tango
it is a step forward and another step backward the woman bends gracefully
so the man sees what beauty lies
there
the man stands proud
about this
human combination
one must give
and the other takes one voluntarily surrenders
and the other takes care of the rest

RIC S. BASTASA
Tarimah

dance with me Tarimah
do not ask me about what time is it

look at me
i have a healthy body
my eyes have
the sparkle of the morning sun
my scent is that of the fields in Samarah
fresh perfume of sunflower seeds roasted for a morning dish come dance with me for i have not danced my nights away

you need sleep?
yes i understand.

RIC S. BASTASA
scattered hair by the wind here in the desert you sing feet dancing like cobra to a flute and walk and run and swing your arms raise your hands to the sky shake your head and nod at the end, kusu kusu kusu....

RIC S. BASTASA
Tarts And Warts

on a sweet conversation like this when you open and i ask some more of this openness
in you,
you become my tart
i like the taste of fruits and milk and some cheese to last finger licking goodness

then you take your turn trying to open me like a canned fruit juice
i stick to my lock and key and you find it hard to open
you like to drink the four seasons
in me
i refuse
i shifted your questions to something else like the full moon last night and you do not like this one way traffic
between us
my road is closed
i only have mysterious ends your thirst shall not be quenched you should know by now i am not a tart
i am your wart

and so the saying goes like a road diverging
i'll take the other one you take that one
i know
the one less travelled by you are the poet
i am less

RIC S. BASTASA
it is a matter of taste years of bitterness cannot teach you
in a day what sweetness is

years of searching cannot give you an hour of a solution to the problems you are grappling with you mellow down through the years what tastes so sweet to them in your discriminating expertise is never sweet to you you keep a glass of your favorite concoction the one that makes you live she takes the courage of taking a sip her face changes and she vomits what makes you live is always the exquisite taste of bitterness the one that strengthens your mind and that makes a lot of difference

RIC S. BASTASA
Tawo Gihapon Ako

akong basihan ang sulti sa akong lolo, ang lalaki kinahanglang adunay baroganan walay daghang pulong kay ang iyang pulong usa lang ug dili na kani maparog kon iya nang mabuhian

ug misunod ang akong amahan ang lalaki dili alang sa panimalay kon dili sa darohan diin ang iyang mga kanding, kabayo ug mga kabaw sa daghang sagbot matagbaw nadungog ko sila sa klaro sa wala pa sila mibanaw apan bisan sa akong tumang kamingaw gidasig ako

sa paghatag ug kahulugan kon unsa ba ang lalaki kon unsa ba ako

tawo gihapon ako
usahay gani mahutdan sa pulong usahay mawad-an sa baroganan usahay mabalian ug bukog usahay magkiang
magsangkiig sa kalibog ug kahadlok ug kabalaka kon unsay dangatan sa akong ugma sa akong kapalaran masayop usab ako madam-ag maulawan mawad-an ug kusog

ug sakto nga barog

usahay moiyak usab ako sa tumang kasuko ug sa tumang kalipay nasuta ko kini sa akong kaugalingon

ug sa tumang paubos gidawat ko ang akong kahuyang ang akong kakulangon
sa akong kaugalingon

ug labi na sa tanan gidawat ko ang akong pagkinahanglan kanimo babaye
karon nga akong gihalaran

RIC S. BASTASA
Tea Pot

how nice for it
to react under such stress despite being heated it still manages to whistle...

RIC S. BASTASA
Teach Me

teach me
in the name of ethics and morality
and peace
in our family
not to love you
teach me
how to unbreak
this heart
teach me
to leave you without pain
so i may not have lived
in vain

RIC S. BASTASA
Teach Them How To Fish

you may give them fish but for how long will you be giving them fish? for how long will you fish yourself?
teach them how to fish and they will also teach others how to fish.
that is wiser that way.

teach them poetry at first. let them read the easiest one to understand. let them see the beauty of the simplest lines from you and from the poet that you love.

teach them how to write one from the fingers of their hand. love their work and tell them how beautiful are they. there is always beauty in every personalized line. i know.i am telling you. your lines speak what is in your heart and everything inside our hearts are always innately beautiful let them read their lines. let them speak the meaning that they are hiding in there. that which you have never seen yourself. let them defend beauty and grace and truth in their own work. beauty and truth and goodness have to be defended by its creator too.

listen. open your mind. listen attentively. teacher. listen to them. they are now making their own.
love each work.

teacher listen. now they are teaching you. now you are learning some more. they have their own wings now.

teacher, see the sky. see them. oh how beautiful are they. they are all flying and singing. do not wish them to come back to you. let them fly them see the big wide world. let them find the other universes.

they are not yours. they belong to themselves. they are now free. that is your happiness that even the gods cannot give you.
sit back. and write another poem for another batch. some more. some time.

RIC S. BASTASA
Teaching Our Hearts To Love The Right Person

we aim for a brigh future and sometimes we teach our hearts to love the right person
at the right time
we want logic
to reign in our hearts
and then
the heart that loves without reason but only for the feel of love suddenly shrinks
like a raisin and then dies its natural death

because love cannot be taught
it is the teacher

RIC S. BASTASA
for you to be closer to God you must learn to pray every morning and there is really no need of any formula or chants or creeds or novenas

talk to him like he is your friend, he likes friends he has already more of those servants and slaves and soldiers and counsels. Befriend God, that is prayer enough, no mumbo, no jumbo
dance the mambo
try the limbo-limbo-rock with his angels and flock

RIC S. BASTASA
Teachnique In Writing Poems

she asks how to make a poem she is going to teach the kids to make poems

i tell her just let them write and it is then that they will know how to write one

RIC S. BASTASA
Tears

i want you to fall
naked
i want rain and i want that when you
fall
it must be with rain and you are naked through and through

they are afraid that you will die in the cold i do not fear
this to happen to you

how can you, how can you be that way?

RIC S. BASTASA
Tears And Pearls

i gifted her pearls
and she remembers
all her tears

i showed her my tears
and she wiped them with her bare hands

and then she
kissed me

and then i remember the pearls
that i have stolen from his eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tears And Storms

on the other hand
the storms simply did what they are supposed to do, clean the mess
that men imposed upon themselves they keep the dust and dirt and then go away.

just like the tears in our eyes the sweat.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tears Dry At The Bottom.....

we keep
the game of a candle alive
as we put much light
we burn
that fast and then gone.

tears dry
at the bottom of our existence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tears, How Can I Refuse Your Tears?

as i was about to turn my back
from you
there was this silence that never speaks this void that keeps a hurting space

you let out a cry
your mouth does not lie your tongue keeps the parting words

and the room had become as lonely as ever lovers parting saying the last goodbye after all those years
of sweet bonding

and then i unpacked my bag and decided to be back in your arms ' i am not going away'

my hands caressed your hair and then i wiped away your tears

RIC S. BASTASA
Tease

shall i fly with you on a first class suite to the blue skies
the soft cottony clouds our mattresses the moon our bed
the stars our glittering lights and the wind
of the night
our air conditioning delights how the grass shall envy us how the earth shall look at us with suspense as we make love till dusk and as tired as lovers are we sleep like two white feathers left inside the nest we like to think that way but how can this ever be?

night and day, that is what we are, how can we ever be together?
earth and sky, floor and ceiling two parallel lines running in opposite directions we shall never ever meet

RIC S. BASTASA
Teasing The Bridge

The summer is hot
He crosses the river through Teasing the bridge
With his water buffalo

RIC S. BASTASA
Teasing...

do not worry
these are but little teases of fate

if you take a closer look at the tears
you could have seen their tiny lips smiling for their final release

if you have listened quite a little longer
you could have heard the suppressed laughter of your eyelids
before they finally close but you are so tired and have not noticed

all these
having entered finally the narrow door
of your day dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Teasing......

the snail loves the veins of the hands

they are the maps
to its licking pleasures it feels blood

palpitating to its mouth

sacrifice beauteous not consumed just felt

the hard house is always the wall

that keeps it from the hazards of the winds

from the minding of the the leaves

from the mocking of the moon

from the paleness of death there is always the lingering pleasure of non-consummation fluid kept at the middle part of the pelvis at the center of the ecstasy of gravity

RIC S. BASTASA
Techonology Versus Nature

rumba music from an old radio

against the slight rain from the sky

RIC S. BASTASA
Teething Thoughts....

the white pigeons
find their home inside

the ceiling of this
house

every night i hear their moaning sounds

they're like the weeping willows meeting the winds from the far away mountains there is a packet of winds trapped in this room

forming a whirl soon the walls shall tremble something must give way to a storm

lest these windows break frames dismantled

to give birth to a pair of eyes that will not flicker when it starts to stare to the sun or waver to the salt of the earth these tongues of the twines these teething thoughts

RIC S. BASTASA
Teh Mongo Experiment....

yes, we put the mongo seed inside a cardboard box and there is no opening, not even a peeping hole,

on the other same sized cardboard box with another similar mongo seed an orifice is made,

the two sprouted but the one with the opening finally finds its exit and we meet the word heliotropic as discussed by the late mrs. villasica, that was years ago,

we were then in grade six at that time, and martial law was declared and there were those who disappeared
those who finally became mad, literally no metaphor intended then i learned such words hamletting,

summary execution
government persecution
zoning
martial law babies,

i turn to the mango seed experiment without an orifice deprived of light though given water
and soil to thrive,

the cardboard box and the dream of the borrowed light
of the moon

because there is no sun because there is utter deprivation we go for dreams as substitute some died in that hunger strike at least, dubbed as the child of the borrowed light of the moon, one still keeps writing and the other one still keeps reading call them the surviving lunatics

not in the literal sense now but sort of, in a lighter sense metaphoric.

RIC S. BASTASA
Telegraphic

mountain breeze blowing tree tops swinging upon cliffs rising from the sea shores where sea shells abound maiden walking along the seaweeds picking some pieces of her past that dims like a lamp without oil or gas without a child hands covering the wick from the harshness of the night wind..who wants the light dead?

RIC S. BASTASA
Telegraphic Poems...

used to be that during those old time... mama dead, come home immediately.

or...happy birthday, may you have more birthdays to come...or... we share your victory...happy graduation... or papa cannot come home, bad weather... or send money, tuition....or those times... communication is...very slow....sometimes, the dead was already buried...or resurrected...when the telegram for condolences arrived....

got you poem today...in the same manner...telegraphic in form... deciphered... like... each word has a value....bill follows.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Telekineses

telekineses:
an old alchemy
of turning lead
to gold
of making telephone lines
move like electricity to the
ear
hearing words
greetings
of morning chill

crazy me waiting to convert her heart to love me

RIC S. BASTASA
Teleman, Viola Concerto

We were three close Friends
When we were young
We go to a river
At the back
Of our house
There is a big Plank of driftwood
And we all ride
On it as though It were a big Boat and our Hands are paddles

We sail
And we laugh
The place
Is off limits
For us children
In fact
Father says
Beware
A big crocodile
Lives there
And swallows
A child in whole

We did not take Heed
We are the Hardheaded
Children and this Something
Traumatic
On that river
At the back of The house Where the Big plank
Of wood which We ride on Carried us
All laughing
To the other
Side

Only the two
Of us
Survived
What we heard
Was only a Splash
And the river
Was staining
The color
Of blood

It was the splash
That swallowed
My hardheaded
Youth.

I remember
This teleman
Viola concerto
A burial
Without a Dead body
Twas a simple Floating of A candle boat
On the river
And then
All the violins
And the viola Sounded to the Cry of the mother Who never Believed my Story of a splash.
Tell Me

Tell me what you wish for Bring them all to me
I will keep them in my hands Away from the Wicked eyes of his world.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell Me How Is It To Live On Tiptoes afraid to make a mistake and be beaten by grandpa tell me again about how you ran away from the house and cried the whole night and slept on the cogon grass on that moonless night tell me more about how afraid you are to go to hell because they are telling you that everything that you are doing is sinful tell me about your suppressed life how you have become related to a bonsai

how many days have you skipped lunch and then dinner and then wake up in the morning and looking for a friend to give you breakfast that time when you were dumped by a lover whom you cannot take anymore you never knew what love is all about it is all about survival, and escape and fantasy and monologues for future revenge

for that coming back and be someone else, tell me, and i will tell you, you are not alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell Me If There Is Really A Need For Change doesn’t there be no changes any weapons of survival remain the same same morning

same nighttime

same faces adore your
space
same words trickle
from the ceiling

same eyes waking up
same moons below your eyelids if you cannot take all these monotonous landscapes and sonorous sounds of sameness all about us

there can be a little change like temporary departures for possible comparisons

you leave and then you may come back

tell me if there is a need for change
tell me if i really have to love another and then forget

you forget us

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell Me Not About Your Quality Moments

tell me not sincerely, there is no part in me that is interested

or will interest you about me.
but let me tell you what i see in the grass and the clouds
and the river

they are all i have and they are all enough.
one moment, one life,
one word. ENOUGH.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell Me Please Tell Me.

let the whirlpool of life take you let me watch intently and then i let life be if ever you come back from said vertigo
i will come back
with you
and i will ask a lot what happened

tell me
please tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell Me What Am I?

Sometimes I get tired too Asking some philosophical questions about My existence, purpose, and life becomes like one Security guard asking me a lot As I am about to enter a building

What floor?
What for?
Whom would you want to see?
Your ID please
Leave it,

And I pretend I have a very important purpose in my life A very important vision for a very important mission And upon a certain arrival On the topmost floor
I end up, so this is the floor,

what for?

What am I doing here?
Like a scratch paper I crumple myself
This is not my paper, I have not written the right thing This is waste for a wastebasket I crumple this scratch of scribblings without Any real meaning,
She calls it cranky
I call this a nursery rhyme of my life

Questions which seem hard But actually there are none of such But playful stuff of who am i?

Try these:

1) There was a girl in our town,
Silk an’ satin was her gown, Silk an’ satin, gold an’ velvet, Guess her name, three times I’ve told it.

2) As soft as silk, as white as milk,
As bitter as gall, a thick green wall,
And a green coat covers me all.
What am i?

3) Make three fourths of a cross,
And a circle complete;
And let two semicircles
On a perpendicular meet; Next add a triangle
That stands on two feet;
Next two semicircles,
And a circle complete.
What am i?

4) Flour of England, fruit of Spain, Met together in a shower of rain;
Put in a bag tied round with a string,
If you’ll tell me this riddle, I’ll give you a ring.
What am i?

5) In marble walls as white as milk, Lined with a skin as soft as silk, Within a fountain crystal clear,
A golden apple doth appear.
No doors there are to this stronghold, Yet thieves break in and steal the gold.
What am i?

6) Long legs, crooked thighs, Little head and no eyes.
What am i?

7) Formed long ago, yet made to-day, Employed while others sleep;
What few would like to give away, Nor any wish to keep.
What am i?

8) Lives in winter,
Dies in summer,
And grows with its root upwards.
What am i?

9) Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall, Humpty Dumpty had a great fall;
All the king’s horses and all the king’s men Cannot put Humpty Dumpty together again.
What am I?

You will answer.

And you laugh, these are for kindergarten kids Not for me, but honestly I figure out Kindergarten stuff
In truth, that is what my life is all about

What am i?
What am i?
come play with me

Pin pin de sirapin de cuchillo de almacen How how the carabao the batuten

Amy Susie and the rosemarie Amy Susie and the rosemary

Do you remember all of these?
When you remember what do you feel?
Does not life itself Smile and laugh a bit Relieved from its hazards Rested like a head on a hammock on my arms?

Actually, that is what I am all about Seeing everything thorough the eye of the child

Thru an eye of a needle.
Tell Me What Is It

tell me what is it that stays on the water the whole night and does not get wet it is the moon reflected on the clear pond.

nothing is broken.
or consumed. i am seeing it well and tomorrow i shall see the rising sun completely in one dew of the grass.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell Me Where Our Love Shall Go?

All my sighs, all my regrets spread in space Back to the air, where air is their nature The tears are fluids, dropping to the river Have flown to the sea, its source and mother But my love, this love that refuses to die Where shall it go? Tell me, where?

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell Me Why?

you have what you call
a success,
you have a beautiful wife who fathered
you six healthy children you have a fortune to waste a big house to settle and a circle of friends to enclose you

you have all that i could possibly envy
you have it all what a lucky guy
are you?

it is strange
you come home drunk
you want to burn the house and you do not want to play with the kids
and you break the law and you wish
that you were dead...

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell Me, (Who Wrote These Lines, Please, Did You?)

Because it all just breaks apart, and the pieces scatter and rearrange without much fanfare or notice.

Because you can't and don't remember the step that kicked up dust and left this planet—you'd give up even more now now.

Because the body itself—the heart's not dead but deeper, wrapped up in curtains, a different color, among the railings and the pigeons, the rooftops and walls—for all you know it's a question of bread or beer.

Because even love returns. The city's all brightness and shadow, deckle-edged, bluer than air—there's no help anywhere—you no longer know how to listen.

And love says, love—midnight to midnight, already ablaze. And the boulevard—wide-open. And the well-stocked crowdless market, and a lone taxi blears.

Even happiness—the way anger's come back to roost again. And joy, though joy's not in the ear or the eye. On this walk.

The gulls hover offshore and the islands are speckled with fire.

Even love, even because.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell Us The Truth....

welcome back
my friend you have come home again

d this is home
d this is our beautiful home t he flowers know your name t he bushes miss your hair the trees keep talking
about you

we miss you from this glass to the teapot
we have heard a lot about your past
the present blurred that much

now sit with us
let us sip coffee and have our cookies
the ones that we love when we were once children at heart you belong to us

tell us the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tempest In The Teapot

it is the tea
not the teapot
it is the air
not the wall
it is the soul
not the body

it is the tea
in the water
its essence
is not the water the at first was peaceful
and then
with heat
rages on and on...

RIC S. BASTASA
Temporality.....

nothing is kept forever each day we lose part of our skin our feet dissolve in water
our heads evaporate in air
time
we are immersed in it like a solution
we diffuse like molecules of ink
we invade what seems at first is colorless
then each of us settles like moss
to rocks
we think that finally stability
is there
the rocks crumple like chalk turning to dust again upon our fingers the wind comes blows everything we imagine we exist until our imagination leaves us we become strangers again like a migrating bird upon a tree
in an unknown island

RIC S. BASTASA
Temporary

everything is temporary
passing through is the state of this human flow
don't get stuck on something so fleeting have your wings ready
my dear
for another journey

RIC S. BASTASA
Temporary Moments....

people come and they go rivers passing us by and we think that the water is still there we imagine that it is only the sound of the river that is leaving us.

we sit beside it and always think that it is always the same.

RIC S. BASTASA
Temporary Sleep......

the voice inside keeps guidance, keep right write, write, there is so much to be written

when will this dictation end? it will not.

for this voice is a journey and its destination is eternity

the voice inside keeps saying listen, listen

no one dies
one only temporarily sleeps

RIC S. BASTASA
Ten

ten is my lucky number ten is the number that i assign to a poem for my day
ten is perfect
ten is one and zero ten is a pillar and a moon ten is an exercise of that little child ten is my count of when things must end ten is the number of sheep in my dream
ten is not eleven ten with another moon becomes a hundred whatever you think of me i rate myself
a ten
that is a matter of personal decision and if you die because of envy it is because ten has always been my favorite number
even if i wallow
in my own stupidity, i still cling to ten because i am not yet perfect and would soon become one
Oh God, where are you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Ten In The Morning....

the important thing is that you have done what you think is right end of the story

not all the good things that we do go to its full use we are relating to some other evils and we cannot do anything if they twist whatever good was done that is now their own responsibility too no longer ours

RIC S. BASTASA
Tender Eternity

we all felt it
we were cheated

what we earned
they all take away

what we have become however
remains as is now and forever

has become
the two of us in
one
tender eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
Tending Pain In My Own New Garden

When you left me
i did not show any pain

i have no tears
i have no eyes

you never mention my name to our new destination

you are alone and you have always been

you keep telling strangers you were born alone

when you left me
i learned a lot

i can be happy too
tending pain like

sprouting seed in my own new garden

RIC S. BASTASA
Tendrils

I like tendrils clinging On a bridge Towards the other Side of the River

Like hands of a girl Reaching
To the other side
Of her
self.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tendrils In The Dark

THEN You fade
others see you as a torn denim
a plastic
flower dusty beside
a wall

but your hope is the sunset
a big, warm, orange consolation because it simply

faded as beautifully as it is.

and you silence fruits with those tendrils in the dark

RIC S. BASTASA
Termination

the sea is gray
the tree on the river bank is dead

the nipa roof
of a cottage is blown by the wind

there is no man
in this place

there is only the
murmur of the sea breeze

as usual the sands
of course are silent as ever

RIC S. BASTASA
Terms Of Endearment

For love’s delights
We savor
For love’s demands
We labor

That is how it works
My love
This life
My life
And your life

There is no such thing
As a free meal
As love that is handed Without a risk
And uncommitted

In everything we Must always Labor
& pray

For love to be love Sacrifices are
Terms of endearment.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are times when we fell like waste paper, that uselessness, when we seem to be not connected at all even to our very own self when we are scattering sheets of paper
in the air
falling like confetti to the ground and then it rains
and everything is wet
drained
to the dirty canals of our cities down, down to the worst of our histories

i let go off these all,
i simply wait for another sun
and rainbow after the rain things do not last anyway
the good and the bad end themselves beauty and ugliness
sadness and happiness

then every hump levels up there is the plain, and then the grass and then the gaze.

RIC S. BASTASA
Th Drink That You Hand Me

the drink that you hand to me shall take my mouth watering to your
lips,
the drink that you give me shall take all of me
to you
the drink shall take another drink and another drink
from you
and i shall not be quenched until i am drunk
of all of you
and then you take me
all of me
and then i shall be lost
all of me
lovingly to you

my body dissolving like ice cubes to your glass your spirit in mine
our bodies mixing as one and then we both shall be drunk so gently
so lovingly as though this glass owns the night

RIC S. BASTASA
Th Monkey Island....

have more time,
push, like waves on the sea tickle the legs of the shore find its pelvic bone and worship it like you're a monk for 100 years still searching for perfection,

time is like the sands of the shore can you eat all of them?
have time, drink it and believe in its miracles be impossible,
swallow the earth and be that rumored monster that swallowed the moon

be the impossible
have more time
and be someone else

ah, they will all believe you and then put you
the first number and you fool yourself with all these elation

fool to fool, you create a link a theater, that it, have peace congratulate yourself

it is all these craze to be popular...in that island where you are king and the rest of the monkeys always say yes....

RIC S. BASTASA
Th View From Here

the sunflowers
are nodding, to the last breath of their falling petals,
to the
victory of the seeds,

the night is about to end, and twilight in slow steps is moving to the edge of the bush

a squirrel appears taking something hard and round
to its mouth

i sit here watching
how each of these creatures
crush their respective versions of
reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tha Pains That Pile Up In Our Youth

When young things are easy we suppose that words are what the heart needs if it loves it can say so easily manifest what is inside and then ask if it's okay and then the pains pile up like firewood and in that campfire the firewood begins to burn what is left of course is the ash that looks at us direct to eye we have gotten old and what we need most is the silence that pays vigil about the feelings long dead inside our hearts

RIC S. BASTASA
one day more
that poem should have been written by you but as usual you are tired and late and cramped the man at the other end of the world has taken it
and a day more is wasted because you have never believed in the power of your imagination

a pen in your hand soon shall turn into a snake and bite you.
a soul a mind as numb as rubber.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thailand November 2009 (2)

In Nakhon Pathom
we posed for the tallest Buddhist pagoda then watched
The greatest Elephant Show

In Phetchaburi
we sunbathed in Cha-am Beach, and had time viewing the
scenic mountains,
limestone caves,
and ancient temples.

Finally in Prachuap Khiri we went inside Klai Kangwon Palace, a summer palace of the King and the Royal Family, courtesy of the ambassador friend of my father-in-law.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thailand: November 25, 2009

IN Kanchanaburi
we were confessed
nature lovers rafting
our way along the River Kwai

then
on a trip to Saraburi
we pay homage to the Buddha's Footprint
there

finally in Lop Buri we prayed in the Khmer shrine
where the remains of King Narai's palaces of the 17th century still survive

we rested in the sunflower fields extremely beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank God For Not Giving You What You Want...

thank God for not giving you what you are praying for

when it is not given
it is because it does not belong to you because if given
it can cause you more harm than God for God knows what is inside our hearts his omniscience extends seven thousand years ahead

than your seven seconds

always thank the Lord
for he knows best
do not worry
do not complain
He shall give you the best for you

at the right time
and for the right reason.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank God That You Are Still Alive....

speak to yourself offer a toast to loneliness dance with your shadows let the moon cast the light
open your windows let the air and wind be your guests write if you will do not mind grammar and style or what language to use whirl, rotate,

collide with what life is giving grab, toss, stamp, shake and tremble on the floor jump if you can run around, rest, mimic the murmurs of those wind chimes

be drunk to the happy moments that life is still giving you be human (if you could, try being god yourself)

laugh, gargle, swallow, spit, lick, or be tongue-tied have those slip of the tongues tickle and heckle chew some more, swallow again, do whatever you want,

thank your God
because today
you are still alive.
thank God for not giving you what you are praying for

when it is not given
it is because it does not belong to you

because if given
it can cause you more harm than good

God knows what is inside our hearts you really don’t

his omniscience extends seven thousand years ahead
than your seven seconds

always thank the Lord
for he knows best

do not worry
do not complain
do not rush
do not push that much He shall give you the best for you
soon

at the right time
and for the right reason.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank Him

for the one who writes so s/he may not be understood for him/her who writes merely to impress and leave us lost in the crevices of his mysteries

the labyrinths of his pretensions

let us all say thank you for the doubts and for being part of our confusions

let us gather the leaves of the laurel and put that as a crown on his/her hair
she/he deserves the tile and name

poet/ess
of the day.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank The Illusion, It Has Given You Life...

you must thank the illusion that refraction of your body in the deep it gives you the image of a beautiful fairy with gossamer wings when you are about to end your life by jumping into that water

you should thank the lie that saves your precious life

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You

thank you
sweet words
sweeter than chocolates not even like ice cream cool to the tongue sweetest to the heart that the mind will always
remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You Ads

my loneliness
is diminished
because you are funny
and oh i am so sorry
if i am making you angry

i must have conquered
you

P.S.
oNE THAT angers you
Conquers You

(surf who said
that?)

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You Again

for being with me
not just once

but perhaps till eternity....

would you ever believe about friendship
faceless in a void world?

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You Barbara

sad to know your love did not last long but good to know

i am not alone

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You For Loving Me

honey thank you for loving me you love me for what i am look at my hands, i am bound look at my feet, they are bound too look at my body, bound to the strongest pillar that mankind has built for all its men look at my tongue, it is hidden my mouth, i am shut

you come closer to me and touch me you give me water you give me bread you give me hope and will not own me you kiss me and you do not say goodbye i am bound, i am not free, and yet you still love me.

thank you my dear for kissing me in my prison cell.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You For The Distance

i once told you about the strong house its pillars
are having distances to support
the weight of the roof and the beams

like us now our distance shall support the weight of dispositions this house
this acquaintance shall shelter
what memories we have kept

the pillars are stable now the house is not shaky we leave it that way we take chances somewhere under the stars
outside the door

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You For The Light

thank you for the light

i am just the broken mirror capturing and reflecting the light to those who have not seen your truth

thank you for the light

for i am not the light, i am not with the light i am in the dark corner always waiting for your coming and in your departure, i am left with a memory of light and remain in my shattered state with all the pieces.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You For The Picture You Sent Me

i received it yesterday the picture of two persons (lovers as you term it)
on top of a hill
you and her she wears her dark sunglasses and her hat while you were proud of your thick black glossy hair a not so receding hairline but looking still young and manageable

she looks younger and happy her hands are holding the rails a little distant from your lean muscular body you hide something too in those covered eyes the usual thick tinted sunglasses

she said
nothing happened between you and her but you claim otherwise i look at the picture again scrutinizing the element of closeness searching for the innate marks of intimacy the evidence for that usual terms of endearments at all angles and noting carefully the colors and shapes of your smile and her poise

and then i jumped into a conclusion whatever it is, i keep it to myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You For Writing A Poem For Me

i am your fan
many years and more years to come i shall remain your avid fan

thank you for writing me a poem about love
and sleepless nights thank you for writing about the ward the man bound in straitjacket
that glass of water that has to be taken everyday to slide the pills smoothly in your throat
thank you for writing about the children who shall still find their mothers their homes
thank you for bearing with us all these years when we ourselves have nothing to write anymore thank you for being there always and forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You For Your Lies

and what about your lies?
yes those sweet ones, beside the old wine jug fermented, so close to the nose so lively, those honey coated assurances, for which i have become so alive (never for once in my life have i danced under the rain under the darkness of my night) am i supposed to be angry about the way how you made me live again?

shall i speak the words of wrath and blame you for all these awakenings?

never, never shall i remind you of those hidden truths for whatever was it that made me alive no matter how unfounded have served so well its purpose here i am, you lies have freed me and now, wherever you search for me i shall not be found but i may give you the hint i am the invisible song of the sonorous wind the chime of the star studded night the whisper of a man's lips to the woman's ears the silence that sleeps soundly in the middle of your breasts

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You Manolita

a ten 4 my
o ten

(ha ha ha ha)

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You Tai Chi

for not including
me
in the list of the nameless
and shameless

in some respects
i am shamelessly devoted
to you.

salamat po.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thank You....

i have wasted so much time talking to you, i could have stopped as early as this, when my patience has been consumed, i could have talked to someone much deserving, to someone not as stupid and as narrow as you, where you only fit in the conversation, but sometimes, i do not blame myself into this tragedy of our mutual errors, i must accept with all humble honesty, that somehow your stupidity

lightens my load, in common language, you

please me, and what wasted time is there, is duly accounted  you goodbye. I left a thank you note, on the right side of your bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thanking God...

i thank God today for giving me that gift to like what i
do.

For what seems hard at first, after so many attempts, becomes as easy as it goes.

i am not climbing a mountain anymore
i am sliding on its
belly.

I could have stopped dreaming. I could have quit reality.

I could not have joined two opposing worlds, i could not have liked myself, i could not have loved you,

that first glance was beguiling
imagination is wild like that spoiled child,
that favorite dog,
the kitten that sleeps
with me at night,
that tolerated spider
that caught a fly,
that destroyed innocence...

today has changed, and so I thank you Lord.
Thanks It Is Just A Nightmare...

the storms wait
by the window
the sea rises upon your door
the flood passes
through your dining room
bats hang on the ceiling
snakes sleep on your bed
and cockroaches
live in your cabinets

what must you do?

wake up!

you are asleep catch
in a nightmare.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thanks She Says For The Beautiful Scenes

the castles of salzburg the prairies of prussia the tundras of russia the rivers of Arno ang the Volga the towers of France and America the snow in Dubai and the islands miniaturized in his world

all these beautiful places she says, she had been there except the place in his heart. She is so sorry.

She has not seen
love there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thanks To Me

there is such thing as being lost as others see you because you are not doing what they expect you to do i need not mention all those passages or rituals like... but i am more into this self-discovery thing such as doing what i really want to do but those that do not destroy me those that do not make me fall into fear but into the comforts of my own space, my own paradise, and i guess i have found it, something like just being myself without the interference of other's moral codes or majority's etiquette
thus i wake up at night and sleep
the following morning
i write more than have to speak and just stay inside rather than have fun with what we deem as friends or kin

this way i am like a seed growing in my own soil moving at my own pace and slowly unfolding as myself and no other....

RIC S. BASTASA
Thanks To The Black Bird....

i did not
isolate myself as a fallen leaf

but a seed,

and here i am
in an isolate island sprouting again
to new life

thanks to the black
bird. thanks to the island.
thanks to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
there will always be compromises no limit. between the teeth and lips between my hands and yours, a space.

my right hand on your cheek exclude the hair. another space. no words.

between your silence and mind, a space for feigned ignorance. I do not profess to love you, and you do    do not know it. a space for a crime, think, a space for ethical considerations. Shame and punishment.

your lips are almost there. a space again for my gaze. A little distance to stop and overload of gasps, a gap for contemplation. put a space for fear.

a hesitation of distaste and dislike.
massage, and vassalage, a passage and discharge. a space for the night. sleep alone, say goodbye. Thanks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thanksgiving Prayer (From The Hungry Boy)

Lord You are Good
Thank You For the Food.

Amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Afternoon

i was there again
standing by the side of the old glass windows hazy because of the dust it is hazy, hazy the sea is linen white the coconut trees as tall as they are very old planted perhaps before the war before the Japanese came and ravished the spirits of our innocent people
i was there again
standing on a moment
always seeing that rusty van parked without its front wheel nobody from there is asking
what is happening
it is hazy, as hazy as dusts on that old glass window then a black bird flies through it breaking the thin old glass into shattered pieces

the afternoon ended on that sudden noise
i am telling you
i am not shocked because i am not new to this how can i be? i am as old and as tall as that coconut tree i am from this place and i know each grain of sand
on the shore
of that white linen sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Aim For Success....

i've heard this music before

i cannot fail them i have told

myself over and over
again

like some notes of piano music rippling

on the water where a boat without a rig

sails on with nothing to guide it

except the guts of intuition that at the end of this journey you embark upon an island

a paradise that you shall now call as your own.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Beach Where We Sit Together

that beach where we sit together beside the sea where our hands stretch out to be held again like yesterday is actually a vow, a promise that never shall again the sea and the earth part like two lovers taking opposite ways the sea licks the thighs of the earth and the earth surrenders in utter pleasure

RIC S. BASTASA
i am not at all
shock
when she finally says that this beautiful art of flying over your body seeing it then as a piece of medium log
heavy on the bed
can be accomplished
so well
in such a brief instant of the gunshot
on the head
or through the mouth.

plain suicide
as simple as you can do it
i can do it, but i am not that stupid to sacrifice
my own life
for the sake of this art.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Big Black Bird That Does Not Leave The House...

and there is a big black bird actually the neighborhood calls it the crow with red eyes

the children who ask do not know where it really comes from

it is staying by the window and feeds on the noise of a couple who discuss about divorce possibilities it likes the way the children carry on the confusion about where to go and whether they are loved the housemaid is driving it away but it doesn't have that capacity there is a wound in its heart and its wings are clipped off from the sickness of indecision

it loves to watch the way how the housemaids are stealing stories from their masters it is quite a long time now and the wound is healed and the wings have grown to their original sizes it is ready to fly away but it cannot it loves the show of other peoples miseries and concealed motives the black bird's first name is everyday and its surname is everyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Boat In You

when love was an order
i followed it
it becomes a law
i am obliged

courtship, marriage
fidelity,
compassion, sticking with time through and through
getting wet and getting dry sleeping and waking up and moving

you build a house
feel a home
go somewhere and contemplate

changes of frames of mind from time to time
wishing as if
as though, as if i could have been someone
else
or it could have been otherwise

summing it up,
you are still there
like a foot
inside the same old shoe

you are a tree
a very old tree you claim you have tasted the world residing on the same spot till rotten
till cut and chopped till what is left in you
is just
the firewood
love is freedom
be it unrequited love is redeeming
despite the pain
and love is pain
despite the joy
circle, circle, circumnavigate till
you sail back
to where you were first built and tasted the first salty water
on that very same port where every plank
of you
shatters.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Book Of Poetry....

there is no need
to pay
a semester of poetry from any teacher of poetry

who teaches whom?
can poetry be taught?
can poetry have
a dictated form?

no one teaches whom and it cannot be taught neither can it have a form for poetry is here deep in the heart of man embedded in the mind felt and then whether you like it or not becomes written

RIC S. BASTASA
That Bottled Philosopher

sort of A fly caught Inside a long necked Bottle of Whiskey

RIC S. BASTASA
That Breakfast In Bed....

i should have known better,
you,
having seen only your name and what you write, i have read those lovely lines that speak about two bodies of fusing shadows, under the olive trees,
i should have known better,
that breakfast in bed
does not serve my woes any better,

shall i be Psyche all the time and you be the Cupid in that darkness?

i turn off the candle of trust, to feel you, but my hands and fingers do not know what softness is,
from the harsh climate of the forest, my manners have become ten monkeys,

shall i have a nice sleep with you in bed?
you ugly gorilla
thick skin and flabby face, foul hair and drooping eyes,
old and dying,

for in truth, the only living thing is you is the thought between the lines you are as distant as the horizon as false as the mythical pot at the foot of the rainbow.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Butterfly Inside My Hand

Inside my hand
i keep a butterfly

it makes me happy
when it stays there

i do not bother asking if it is one day i see a teardrop on my palm

and so without much waste of thinking

i let it go
and then i realize

i have become happier than before, ever....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Certain Goodness

two mortal enemies
fight one another and there you are with your motives of peace meeting them for a win-win solution

no one listens and so you make a world
of your own distant and peaceful

and they keep on fighting until they wipe each other from the face of the earth

and then you say.
like God, or perhaps assuming the posture of God, you finally say,

'hmm, this is good'.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Certain Man Named Belebel

when you call i am somewhere in Pedro Gil
an hour ago i was in Taft feeling the crowd of Kabayan

i stop for a while thinking where to go next but then i find myself lurking in a room
without nothing in mind

it is not strange to me i am always on the move but i am not looking for anything they say that we were born with feet so we have to use them it is just this time that i realize what mother told me once about a certain Belebel

who is he? mother tells me that he was a man of God condemned to walk and never stop because something in him is longing for something that he never once found until he died and then God smiled at him because he walked and then he lived and then he died
with all his feet
connected to earth.....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Child Hiding In One Of The Nooks Of The Busy Kitchen

there there
there is that child that hides in one of the nooks of the kitchen badly beaten
and crying in silence

for years he is hiding there and everyone is disregarding him justifying
he is one of those pasts and pasts
shall be forgotten

there there
there is that child that keeps on crying silently and endlessly for years my attention is always caught
saying

i am you and you are in me do not pretend that the years have grown some callous skin in your hands that you are hard and impenetrable

i am your father my child and you cannot just treat me like a shrug on a shoulder like dandruff on your hair like some old uncut fingernails

think some more for solutions

and if you find it this trembling room shall stop trembling your nightmares
finally gone
That Corrupt Woman

what i hear this morning is about the news of her disorientation she repeats the names of those who left her over and over again she keeps asking for her pills she has aches all over her body when she goes to the doctor the latter finds nothing wrong it is the apathy of her soul the Furies are pulling her hair and breaking her every bone bad karma is the knife that slices every portion of her skin she will be returned home now there is no cure she will speak in ciphers that she herself cannot understand there is pain everywhere but there is no visible wound she finds no comfort in air she is grasping for breath she tears her own clothes and roams naked in her mansion her children are asking her but her answers are dumb.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Day When The Rain Stopped.

all the while you will continue writing, your voice too flattering
you hear a sound
the falling of a thread on the carpeted floor the song of those sampaguita petals white on the veranda of your house the silence of a black cat on the window sill that day when the rain stopped.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Dead Man Feeling

i am at the center of your attraction and you make me happy at night when you are not around i ask myself if this is really true i rely on gut feeling there is this ceiling that keeps on pressing me to the floor it knows how it feels to be inside a coffin

RIC S. BASTASA
That Decision....

it was within my reach but i keep my hands inside my pocket my eyes compensated but soon did they close and rested upon the clutches of Reason and then there was this quiet
where the immortal soul sleeps

RIC S. BASTASA
That Early Morning

under the trees
you tread upon a heap of leaves only a few feet walked on this path the winds came and gave a hush it has been this way
since

meanwhile some rays of light begin to pierce crevices between touchy the leaves fall like a confetti

you remember
once when freedom first arrived in the streets of the city you hear the shouts of joy for liberation
you remember opening hands some fists

it is over now
and what you have are the sounds of footsteps on the heaps of leaves on this path
where no one likes to tread again

you are alone again but stronger this time

RIC S. BASTASA
That Early Morning Before You Go For A Walk

you dream about a court litigation, there was this man, emaciated suffering from tuberculosis, his bed is worn out, blood stains on his pillow and blanket unwashed, you can estimate how this foul smell emasculates him, he does not sound a complaint, yet you know he does not like everything around him, including himself,

don't you care for him, he is left alone to die, and you see these things above him you are the spirit of his dream, his son, and he is your father,

there are unresolved issues between you and him years ago, you are ambivalent, did he destroy you? or was it him who placed you in the throne of your success now?

Hamlet, to be or not to be,
you murmur the lines in your sleep.

you wake up, remembering a friend under the same circumstances. some of them, too, died in despair, unable to understand the madness of the Furies existing in the mind of the weak and the feeble minded.

things are simple. Doubt is a reality.
Ambivalence is human nature too.
What is important is this: they belong to their world now and you are on your own in this contested Paradise.

Why not enjoy it now? Savor, and just be yourself.
Go on. Write about it and be the redeemed man that you are.
With God beside you, who can be against you?

Ah, not even your cruel father. Not even your insensitive self.
It simple. Life is simple. Do not complicate it with the unnecessary Metaphors. Words are nothing but words.

Dreams are just dreams. The cockroaches are merely symbols.
The man with TB was never him. Funny, but it could be you.

Meanwhile, you take a walk, and be under the power of the sun.
Stare at it. Close your eyes. Savor what red is there.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Early Morning.....

this is what happened that morning all i heard was the sound of chirping birds haggling for a home upon those crown of trees luscious leaves firm branches tarring twigs

it might be an illusion since when the morning light came in profusion upon those grounds
there is nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
That Earthquake (A Dream)

the whole building went down the ground the earth cave in like a big mouth
and swallowed
the whole of it

i worry about you
who is inside that room
alone,

i trust you
and God

then minutes later you come out of that mess casually dusting off your feet walking down the pathway towards the house

whistling.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Elegance...

grace refining itself and propriety
dignifying hand in hand is simplicity and consistency
beauty restrained
in the opulence of
light
a tasteful richness
on furnishings
of a sumptuous feast
the eyes in
yes.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Element Of Trust...

our foundation is respect in the house, it is the floor we all sleep on it, out tables and chairs are placed on it,
in fact, what we eat, to include the appetizers and desserts is all based on that menu of respect it's when i told you that we may grow together in this but you can always take a different direction perhaps another point of view another perspective to see the same object that i hold and cherish
we go smoothly on this we appreciated different flowers on the same glass vase assuming much that the fragility may break and we can still collect the pieces in one wedding the mother speaks about trust as she gives away her daughter for the man of the hour and when it was my turn to speak i speak the same about respect and she added trust which honestly i cannot even mention

because all the while a life lived in mistrust from my point of view always learns
how to survive
find a way when things go wrong when betrayal as a common instinct like a tiger eats the pawn
i have told you
i always doubt and recalling Descartes i think, therefore, i still exist

RIC S. BASTASA
That Evening....

that evening i smell the stinking truth hidden inside your rain clothes
when i get near you i am badly bitten
by its sharp teeth
its forked tongue
makes me tremble
but because i love you i swallowed all these in the deepest layer of patience
i shall enter the castle of your being and so i still have to swim this moat.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Feeling

that feeling of being a gold fish
inside a round glass bowl where your world
is only water and
sand

and then hand takes it and breaks the bowl on the floor a gold fish wriggles gasping for air

there is none
do you feel this now?

RIC S. BASTASA
That Feeling Of Doubt

from her stern face it seems that she only had certainty her face is square like most windows but hers is different since it is always closed like the one for winter during summer when the clouds are blue and the skies are clear and so beautiful to watch with the sun and the greenness of the world out there she is still stern
closed

i may believe her firmness but i have never known what is inside here for judging her is beyond the openness of my door one day she fell in a hole no one knows who dug it along the usual path where she takes her walk and she broke a bone and despite the skill of her doctor she never knew how to walk again her eyes sank like a boat to the ocean her cheeks shrunk like a cake dough short of yeast she fell short of faith like a candle eating her own body until it consumed its light doubt mounted on her like the dust of her furniture she became more stern as ever

harsh and hard and finally the her window was broken the frame gave in and fell and blown by this strong wind of change when she met doubt her world shattered into pieces unlike others

the rest of us even live in there though uncomfortably but without anger and denial

RIC S. BASTASA
That Feeling Of Honesty And Goodness...

early this morning
when you wake up you tell me about a dream: that you were naked walking along the river and you ran and later on plunged yourself on a very clear water

you fear that this dream must have warned you about an incoming poverty, everything that keeps you warm is taken away

will i be broke? you ask

as i see it
it is not that way:

to run naked is to be honest
you have stripped yourself of all lies
and in all honesty
with nothing to hide you plunged yourself in the clear river of life and i must tell you that it must have made

you feel

good.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Feeling Of Numbness

numbness crawls like centipede on the side of my legs something hollow keeps it inside an existential question forms itself on the womb of my being insecurity is fertilized the oblong gets sustenance fingers touch the sacred place my crotch
i sow the seed of desire
it grows
and hardens and i thank God I am still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Feeling Of Self-Importance

indeed sir you are a figure to watch as you enter the room a strange air diffuses from the pores of your skin perfumed with power and glossy with privileges the gods of fortune have given you more than what most of us could have deserved after all those distasteful years of sisyphus
how we pulled the stone on top and how it was rolled over and over again and we ordinary mortals picked it up
over and over again

we do not laugh at ourselves to our generous endeavors we all tried to please the gods yet our offerings are always inferior to yours sir nature has treated you special and we do not wonder why sir your name is engraved in marble and the letters are made of gold your genealogy matters most your roots they preserved with utmost concern you descended from kings you ascended as the rightful king to the throne reserved for you and so this morning as you enter the room you slid your finger to us dusts of the cabinet and you signified we deserved to be blown away just like that you signaled to the guards we do not deserve to sit on chairs because the floors are ours the air is dense and your pride made it humid i am fed up and i rise from my coyness and decided to leave i am weary of pretenses. i am tired of my silence. i have wings. i belong to the birds. And now it is my time to fly away.

in our world of wings, we do not keep air, we give them all away. we are so light, and we fly to our kind of height. we are always alone.
That Feeling Thing.....

there is a sound
within us
which we equate with music

with texture smooth and soft
as sweet gelatin and tasty with milk and honey combined

there is a scenery
inside our hearts
in mellow colors tangerine and light green
and the lovely hues of orange and reds

there is a scent of peach and taste of tang always alluring the tongue and the mind
into the stairs of heaven.

this morning, i am remembering all of them feeling, feeling and feeling each thing.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Feeling...

the dews
they are temporary you know but try looking at them on an early morning

when they hang on the leaf

when they are together and then in a moment

gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Feeling......

that feeling when you sit on the side of the river and you put your hook line and sinker and you wait for a time until a fish comes along and swallows everything

hook line and sinker and you finally caught said fish and it is yours alone but then not learning how to cook it you finally decide to throw it back to where it rightfully belongs.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Final Knowledge....

the closest to your heart was burned, literally, the body into ashes

from ashes to ashes you screamed against the heavens and the heavens answered that it could have been you but you were spared so that your eyes can see and your ears can hear, it will only be for a time that you question all these and find the roots and perhaps uproot that tree that caused the madness of revenge now, look at you after burying the signals of the times you are back in the race of rats

the dogs howl again
and in the darkness you fly again when the moon is full another one suffers from the harshness of your hands you have forgotten how is it to be more powerful in patience

in the tenderness of the human heart sooner shall the leaves of live bury you and then perhaps you shall finally know.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Fire And My Friend

Everyday i put myself in fire not the firewood nothing about flames

it is an imaginary fire that burns all day inside my guts

when you see me i am a placid lake
green ferns surround me blue clouds crown my head and butterflies hover in my own space the fire is eternal there is nothing charred nothing burned

i know a friend who used to be like this but she is gone and lost somewhere in time she writes a lot

and since then
finds no home.

RIC S. BASTASA
boxed i once wrote about cells
there was a hole at the right side of the top sort of ceiling of the house a leak
light filtering in hoping that
the seed survives
and extends its tendril
finally to the sun

i think it was always about a escape either from a box
a bottle or some bars
of steel
a high fence
pointed gates

RIC S. BASTASA
That For Now I Shall Be Alone

i do not wish to see you
like a blank sheet of paper

i have nothing to write there
and if i try to scribble
you may complain
more
and tell the world that i made you all the more unhappier

perhaps i can leave
you in the contents of your
silence

will you be complete without me?

will you smile when i become
a shadow?

i have a long list of places for my new journey
and i am telling my hosts there
that for now

i shall be alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Garde Of Stones....

on Wednesday afternoon your visitors from different orientations arrived all were well composed, calm and at first very silent, still feeling what is new but not yet reacting,

you served coffee, others of course from the East preferred tea when all were feeling that sense of home you invited all of them from that room towards another door which exited to a garden which they in truth did not expect

a garden of sand and stones and then you make them all know why they are all here and when are they going to leave what they have to see shall only for the moment not lasting more than the blinking of an eye

you can see the disappointment in their faces all they imagine really are roses red red roses

and without thorns....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Girl

That girl
with bangs on her hair
a pink headband, thick lips pure red, curly hair, mini skirt, and bleached legs as white as may sky, the way she sits tells me that she is a woman now beautiful to be with because of her
bad habits.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Girl Sirah....

sirah climbs a mountain
early morning
just to watch the sun rising
from there

she is eighteen, in love, and
lost
perhaps the first time for her to meet a love unrequited.

and then exactly as i traced it, she learns to write her first poem of pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Girl With A Pearl Earring

i've taken a peek and i know it is expensive.

how did it go that way?
perhaps because of the stories.

we are told she has an earring of pearl, but at a close look, as the story goes, and which i have taken a real peek, is that she has none, just a smudge of paint from her maker,

is she going to the market?
is she leaving her husband and the house?
is she coming home after all?
is she pregnant with an unwanted baby?
is it her husband's?
questions are propping

our thoughts are complicated.
we make her complicated, and a few are getting rich and more will be getting richer by her because of these stories.

how about the painter? oh well, he died in his infamy. Poor as a rat.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Guy On The Side Of The Wooden Door

what is it that he takes pride of?
why are the girls running after him?
does he hold the key to liberty?
is it the key to the door of our puberty?

fool, don't you get any sex education at all?
it is not the key, it is that blunt something that he calls his thing and it is not like your clock that is ticking.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Happiness Of Rest....

how can i escape
the sweet clutches of your embrace

a chain of flower words on the walls of my fences

the mind is a black bird with strong wings and strong winds taking me to longer distances i cannot map out my destination on this journey into uncertainties unless i cease and be water i may escape this destiny of fading it is when the mind wanders like a wisp that magic comes like greenish aurora boreales in Iceland landscapes

where we are lost but had no fear as beauty catches us in awe and wonder, in the happiness of ease and less.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Hatred....

shall being unloved be the cause of it all?

you create wars provokes those in peace to fight against
you

you lambast people with cruelty
wish them all burned
to hell

was it your unhappy childhood?
has anybody ever
loved you truly?

or is it simply your incapacity to change

to try to understand and level up with what was not there

you have to free yourself from this hatred

it is not real
and it is killing
you...

RIC S. BASTASA
That I Can Always Suffer Too With Or Without You

..and so i must declare that at the end of this day i have still lived
so well
with or without
you,

... and so i must now have shown to
you,
that i can be my own
best friend,
with or without
you,

the fact is,
i miss you too, but i assure myself for days now,
that i can be my own
in suffering,
that i can always suffer
too
with or without you

...but just the same
let me say

thanks.

RIC S. BASTASA
That I Have Survived...

i know what it is to stay in a room and lock yourself
there the whole day on the pretense
that you have to write poetry

it is prison it is the strap of lonely metal around your wrists
it does not tell time it pays no respect for norms of humanity

i know that feeling of a hundred storms that waiting for calmness that seems to have no end

i know the travails of the mind its mazes

its labyrinths of unconscionable
literature

its whiffs of trembling its twists of terror

as you read these lines i do not have to tell you that i have survived.

RIC S. BASTASA
That I Shall Call Mine

to accept defeat is not my cup of tea to lose hope is my own impossibility

i believe
there is always a sun for early mornings
always

there is always a solution to every conceivable problem

i believe time knows how to wait destiny knows how to draw and life always beats for a right time the perfect moment

that i shall call mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
That In Their Happy Wanderings They Are Actually Dying......

at the workshop
i have become another
stranger

i am many strangers actually to many strangers those you take a short glance and walk away

you are teaching them how to write you are teaching them to like you you are trying to make more strangers in this small hall of famers they cannot be like you though they may like you for a moment but only for a moment for after this free meal and free association they all go out to become free verses

again
wild in their own surroundings and would not even know that in their happy wanderings they are actually dying......

RIC S. BASTASA
That Incapacity To Remain Silent...

i should have not
said much, i could have kept my mouth shut,

how can i? how could you?
if we are shut,
we are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Incapacity To Remain Silent...(2)

i should have not
said much, i could have
kept my mouth shut,

how can i? how could you?
if we are shut,
we are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Intimate Dog

she goes near and lies on the floor touches her ear
on the soles of your feet
and then sleeps

RIC S. BASTASA
That Is All That I Really Wanted

the path today is dusty slowly, i walk and you pass by

on the same direction
you walk past me like you are in a rush for something you're fast that is what you want to tell me i do not really mind for you do not exist at all i am thinking of pebbles. They are unmoved.

They are faceless. They are saying more important things than your speed, your fast paced conclusions, you think that you are as high as a cliff, and unreachable by the worm you are wrong, i may have been drifting like a cloud i gather rain and then i feed all that thirst on the earth i vanish soon leaving no mark. That is all that i really wanted.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Is Another Story.

there are layers of behavior, such matters which are purely relational, like a shirt for work, a collar for seriousness, a button to a closure, a tie for a finishing touch, you must learn to discern how is it to just pass the night and then end the conversation because it is already dark and the stars have become more beautiful than the lights of the city streets people come and people walk away, just that, we have mastered these realities we mature, they say, we accept flaws, we walk our own talk, live and relive and die without regret, when i say hello, i say it, because it is a must, we are here and there is no one else around to hear it we keep those presumptions, and guard our opinions, we simply want a work done, after dinner, and then a walk, if there is a need to touch the heart, by all means do it, a little perhaps, but to immerse yourself in deep water and be lost or be drowned, oh...

that is another story.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Is For......My Eyes Are Closed

1

this is for The soldier who died today in your unfinished poem God has heard all

His sighs.

2

Unfinished poems
Are miraculous

They make God
Hear us

They make us
Think.

they make us
write

our own to finish our own to fill our own
emptiness

3

He is great
He is good

He is wise
He is omnipresent

He is omnipotent
He is compassionate
He is Love
He is grand

He is the Answer
He is peace

4

Let us have vodka
For a drink

The people here are poor Let us have rice wine instead.

5

Let not the other half of The darkness that you see

Create the eclipse of your Light, let the other half that

You claim you own shine some more

6

I am watching with my ears Wide open,

because my eyes are Closed from the beginning.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Is Perhaps What Poetry Is All About a seed thrown on the ground beside a bush, it grows and you do not notice.

it is sad to say, neglect does not bother.
time is its ally, and it begins to feel its roots and dreams of fruits.

the seed is now a tree, and it summons children to play, to climb its branches and to reap its fruits. that is its only joy. To give.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Is The Question

this morning as i wake up with you still closing
your eyes

i write a question for you: lipstick on the mirror do you still love me?

p.s.

just tell me and everything shall be removed from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Is The Truth....

to save yourself you have learned to lie.
your wife does not want you to live perhaps she hates you this i think i should know, because on every lie you make,
she is there to correct it and claims that it is not so, that this is it, what lies you make, she is there always ready to correct, perhaps, she does not love you that much she loves herself more, and that is the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Is What Is Happening To You

Ice cream on rainy days black hot coffee for summer

No saver for the flood no firemen for the fire

RIC S. BASTASA

it is when everything is fully seen all details exposed like a grassy plain like an open sky that the mystery is faced off and this worshipful ignorance wakes up from its hibernation and finally finds the real meaning to what is seen and felt and fashioned upon itself.

that is what light does what air really wants.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Is What Papa Said To Me Before He Died Too.

i dread to this idea of you leaving me and

me all alone in a room worrying about my being left out because you have died of a disease and that everyone is there wishing me

to move on it will be perhaps an unbearable sorrow but i remember grandpa who to cure his wholesale loneliness wooed a woman who at the age of 19 waddles in poverty and now would have a chance to wed an old man for his security

grandpa was into such a scandalous affair for he was then 75 and still hoping for an affair to make last for more years in such a blissful state to cut the story short he married a hooker and a gold digger which he very well knew not underestimating his wisdom and keen business acumen from which he accumulated wealth to himself

but there he was lonely and abandoned by his grown up children with lives of their own he thought he still deserved a life of his own a happiness which his children could not provide for him so he took the risk, chose happiness despite the swindling and the fraudulent schemes

until he died peacefully and we attended the burial and i was there all alone too understanding his predicament his children talked about his wealth and whatever was left all about these inheritance and share conflicts

i am in his situation now and just like him
i do not really care.

that is what papa said
to me before he died too.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Is Where Everything Begins.

in a situation like this,
you become a poet. It is when the jar is emptied and there is no water and you are thirsty
and dying,

usually it happens that way. I was once a child frolicking. There was poetry all around: sun rays, beach balls, shore foams, sands, and pebbles, soft feet, and hermit crabs, corals and seaweeds,

but i was not a poet,
it was beautiful then and i was so innocent,

now, the road shortens, my feet calloused, nothing carousing, my lips crack, my skin shedding off,
my bones hollow

time has a way of showing a misfortune, and then you write.

that is where everything
begins.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Isolation

watching the two of you in such a huddle
at noon
till nighttime
i can imagine the pain
in those suppressed silence

i could be too stupid to dare ask your face shows the magnificent pretense

just like the other

when i look to the other side you show the truth

i do not bother checking some more you both, are entitled to your own opinions of the flesh, as i try somewhere else to find what ought to be right what ought to be done it is after all not a question of pain or ecstasy

but i think it is more of the nobility that dignity in the journey of solitude, of distance, of identity in honored isolation.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Kindness Before Death....

he said that at that moment when he knew he was about to die he forgot those who borrowed him money, but for those with whom he borrowed, he kept on enumerating them, with the last request that they all shall be paid from the wealth that he had amassed for himself when he was still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Lack Of Education...

the multi eyed creature did not escape
from my
trap of silent fingers

i caught it during my childhood

i took its head off pulled its red tail away from its body and cut its wings into pieces

how cruel indeed is this lack of education...

RIC S. BASTASA
That Letter

i will be honest with you i once wrote a letter
for you
many years ago
telling
that I LOVE YOU

but then something wrong went with my mind childish, immature

selfish,
fleshy, they call me

i took the letter
and read it again
under the lamp
dim
near my bed

i was hesitant to tell you what i really feel because i know you would not believe me
anyway

(liar! liar! you always call me that name)

and so let me be honest
with you
i decided not to send
it
despite its truth

i folded it
shaped it into the form of a japanese crane (origami, that is the art of paper folding and the Japanese believe that an origami crane can cure the sick
the loved one
and I believe that
too)

I looked at it carefully when it was finished the shape of a crane, the white one with letters on it and then I opened my window

it was cold and dark and I sent the crane into the open space
beyond me

I never dreamed that it will reach
you
I did not believe
in love
I did not believe
in you

RIC S. BASTASA
That Life Inside The Dream...

definitions

there is someone inside you that comes to you like a stranger at dawn
you look closely
and the face speaks like it were you that noon time it speaks of an inner wish which of course you pretend you do not really understand because of so much fear that it could be the real you finally it is on this land of cloudy paths and glimmering waters where you take exceptions you compromise a bit since the strength of your reason is fast asleep and you operate merely on the trickles of the sweat on your skin
it is cold here
and you need the pleasure of hot oil rubbed on your nape
and the soles of your feet that really tickles you
much

how many years have you lived here? you know it well and you until now has not desired any form of escape there is death of everything in you beyond this threshold again you are reminded
'i live on compromises'

you finish the dream and when you are awake you just dismiss the story as one that you cannot really remove too lightly

then you dress yourself brush your teeth look at your face in the mirror forget about it
and then move on with another segment of your life

'this is life' you assure yourself then you admire the way you have been acting on your thoughts

RIC S. BASTASA
That Little Black Bird

...at first i liked to bring it home
and show to father
but then i looked at its eyes
begging for mercy to be
set free

and i heeded to its plea
i released that little black bird free....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Little Boy

last night
that little boy of yours for the first time has learned
to whistle,

he wants to make the stars dance with his new art

but as usual
not a single star heeds his wish

this is not funny but i was once like him just recently.....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Little Pig

that pig you said
is a problem, in fact, a very big problem and so when it asks to leave you agree at once,

you are alone in your house and for a time thinks that you do not have a headache anymore

that little pig
your pain in the ass keeps on coming back in your mind always filling up that empty space that you cannot take away even in that pigsty at night you begin to think someone shall catch that little pig and keep it that pain in your ass shall become their food, a tasty roasted little pig that will always haunt your lonely mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Little Talk About A Wedding

my wife has this to say on your wedding day, that i must not speak about statistics

majority of which marriages are shattered how the man has not coped up with the heavy responsibilities how the woman cannot accept the hidden facts and so i will speak of bliss of sweet honey and wine of the miracle at Cana and everything so divine

my wife is happy now having looked at the icing of the cake licked the rosy part and swallowed the cherry on her drink

on the other hand she is right optimism is still the right trait to keep a marriage bond intact

RIC S. BASTASA
That Lonely Spring Back Home

what i can bring you is good news
it is like a fresh flower from Beijing
it has a unique promise that it will never change
it is beauty and strangeness
it is this feeling of loss this tragedy of having to leave and be back again to your senses
when all strange places are not at all strange but imbued with all that sameness of rocks and cities
and dust and bushes everywhere you go there is only you and there is

nothing
no one else
that suffers for you

it is the universality that finally burdens you
with
i have nowhere to hide it is the same face again that greets you where you left that last step and you remember that old feeling that you want to discard but here it rises again
like spring of water
wetting your face
with its lonesome
squirt

RIC S. BASTASA
That Lonely World Out There....

draw the line
complete the circle this is the fence
no one enters
and no gets out

exclusive world
elite

the world of the rich and the famous exclusive clubs and a language of their own well you must by now understand that is the authentic language of mess

RIC S. BASTASA
That Long And Verbose Decision

i know it
when you, all of you, are guilty about what you are doing, you take refuge in a long composition, a vine of words, bushes that you run about,
hoping that
the stain in the paragraphs cannot be seen by this eye, this

eye of truth, that leaves no stone
standing on the road, but if you accept the wrongdoing you could have said
a little, or nothing at all, or you could have written only a poem,

for words hide, and silence exposes
what lies, what monster is
there
ready to eat you all
alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Love That You Once Gave Me...

i'd like to think that i will be the man who waits for you on that third step of the stairs at the facade of the biggest mall
in Asia

there is a certain kind of anticipation in waiting for someone you think
loves you

i had it so many times but all of them always end up in wanton abandon each regretting
nothing

there are ships that pass at night on that not so well lighted ports they disappear
as usual
but there are ghost ships that keep on
coming back

and perhaps that is the reason why i keep on waiting
again
at the stairways of the malls
then
to dim ports
out of nowhere

i am a lot of nonsense too but mind you
i am more alive in this that feeling that i was the one abandoned and no one comes back for no reason at all

for in truth
it is not my love that makes me live but yours & yours
alone....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Man From La Mancha

after all, the huffs and puffs, the drinks and long conversations, i guess i need rest and as i lay in bed with you with windows open
i think i still like to hear again the song of the man from La Mancha

i am sleepy please hum it for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Meaningless Abundance...

perhaps i know why you have come back to this place which cannot be seen but only felt

d this house where we speak not in plain language but in images where others have long left unable to survive the hazards of imaginings

you see, i guess you must by now know how empty is wealth how valueless are those expensive cars and watches how anxiety crawls in those expensive mansions
how meaningless those books of money have become and in the midst of all these bounties,

suicide comes like an unwanted guest,
you drive it away but it stays finally robs you whatever is left in those trembling breaths.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Midnight

She is the only one that moves now

Her soundless feet keen on the floor

Her silence seeps

In empty corners where all the sorrows sleep

She dances in the grace of afternoon petals falling off

Her cold breath hovers

In the roofs that vigil the death of the noisy crowd

A loner

A curious clone of a black ghost

She visits abandoned rooms

And cracks stories concealed by the muted angers

She drops a secret like a feather

Floating and I though awake

Throughout her wakings and walk-ins

Could not recall having caught one

In such slowness

What she really says amidst the silence

Or meant in all these dark passage

The mirror on the wall stares

And glares at me with anger One must have just died
The killer fled Hidden by her black capes Another secret I supposed And though I thought I knew
She had already flown away Like a black bird into the night I want to make some rain for her Or offer her a lace of my tears But by then another morning has come Gently touching me
With flowers
And dove on my palms.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Morning I Remember Rightly

what was visible then was only the outlines of the leaves of the coconut tree hanging like a pair of pants on the clothesline

and this tiny boat sailing away towards an island that looked like
nothing but
just this shadow of a horizontal line

reminding me
of my father's death...when his heart
failed,
the line was straight, horizontal on the screen it was flat like the shadow of the island fronting from where i stand it was flat, i always remember that. and then after the beeping sound silence came.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Morning Walk....

in locomotion ideas unravel
as though
when the feet pedal something in the forehead pops out the two walk hand in hand like friends
the mind on foot towards an enlightened destination on a boat of darkness the sails move out to the open meeting the light

awed we prostrate on the grounds of our traditions we kneel and rise and with open arms embrace the newness of each thing each idea like flashes of the northern lights in technicolor....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Morning Years Ago

the chickens just jumped from the branches
where at night they are birds

the white magnolia just bloomed
such a nice scent spread
in the air

the bamboo leaves start to dance with the wind from the hills

the sun is about to shine we are two bodies
making the river sing on the crystal waters.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Most Beautiful Star

she comes like air inside your nose passing through your esophagus and resides in the chamber of your heart telling you
you're good, and kind, and the best of the rest and she makes you feel at home with yourself until then
she begins to make you feel that the rest should behave like you and that this world would have been better if all people are like you she makes you feel the arrogance of the mountain and you become the center of this universe because you have become the sun that beautiful star from where we have not gone

RIC S. BASTASA
That Most Candid Criticism Of The Self

things are running wild and not in what you wish them all to be there is this rage of self against self some 'selves' are running against you and some are exploding before your very face indistinguishable untouchable yet there is this sense of i am i that one is me too that i am some pieces scattered and that there is also another self that keeps gathering and assembling parts into a whole ugly and not worth the watch these are your hands spread your fingers just for a show like a peacock at the peak of its heat you feel that there are storms coming inside your chest you wait for tornadoes and boats and calls for help then the calm that is the idea of your thesis and antithesis a woman a man a peace of quiet and some chunks of motors chomping on a stretch of day what for? you are that one too that seeks self-destruction you wait for another explosion to include your whole being you lift the weight of the sighs of righteousness lost and never found, here is this man,

and yet
you reap anger for those who wait and see you are smiling still and then moving away

RIC S. BASTASA
That Movie

after that day when she was killed by harsh men she did not look back she went ahead to where there is more the restlessness she left to earth whatever they did after that the day after the next day she did not mind

because in the place where she is now definitely it is more than what beauty speaks more peaceful than what peace cannot say

eventually justice has no use.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Naked Birthday Cake

the best hour to think
is this

3 o'clock
when it is still dark

when finally dusk breaks the famed virginity of a morning
light

it is the perfect time when your mind is like glass
with frost

and you write your pains in bold letters using your index finger no one reads it

and then the mist outside as it is still very cold covers all the letters again the way you like the icing so sweet that your dear mother once put on your naked birthday cake

RIC S. BASTASA
That Name Was Never Yours

when you arrived here they never know you and so they give you your name which you never ask in the first place since you do not know the rules of their living that one to live here must have a name in the first place that is life she keeps on telling you you start with a name and live with that name and die with that name

when you leave finally as others did as all are destined to their final departures you take nothing with you you leave a name
and then they think that with that name you have lived a life you liked.

(which was not really the case,
that name was never yours)

RIC S. BASTASA
That Nameless Island

when he makes a world of his own
and this takes too little time and effort

when he draws a small circle around his world
and then you find out that you are excluded no matter how small that circle is he knows what you feel you are excluded, at worst, you feel ostracized

and then you begin to feel that pain of exclusion

and then you begin to understand what it is to be excluded, a mutant,
an outsider,
the unwanted, the possible intruder

to be in that circle again you must make a promise and you must make it right now

you see
that island that has no name in the most stormy part of the ocean
when you are thrown into the vast uncharted sea is what you need

it is what you badly need because you are now in trouble

RIC S. BASTASA
That New Sound Of Silence...

to some extent
where there are no flowers when the sun
is beclouded
to survive you learn to paint combine colors with light mix them with your thoughts
until you create your own world you remember a boy abandoned by mother and taken in a very strange place away from his friends sitting in a nook playing with the new sounds of

silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Night When My Poem Was Stolen

that night when my poem was stolen i looked up the sky and saw the moon smiling and the stars winking more beautifully than before and i was wondering
the change

something must be special about what i told them my poem was stolen

the wind was in a hurry leaving a message that i should have been angry and should have reacted the way other poets do report the matter to the authorities and file the charge of intellectual thievery

i could have reacted like an angry man deprived of a priced possession but on the other hand i, go beyond what others think, i could be more kind and understanding and more compassionate to thieves
i ask: does he like the poem? does he love it so as to steal it?
will he sell it? will he keep it throughout his life and treasure it the way i treasure it too?

in the last analysis, that poem is not really mine too it is God given, a gift during another birthday of emptiness, another day of loneliness and in fact, the poem was about a black rose unfolding its petals on a very dark night and then coming out of a crevice from a deserted building and then found a way to bloom one morning but darker still....

all my poems, anyway, are written for someone or anybody out there, lurking in the dark, looking for an opening, wanting to drink the coming light of day, searching for their angels of light and freedom and happiness well, that poem that was stolen, could be intended or meant for the thief, and so, i have come to the conclusion that i might as well, finally,

give it to him or her, i don't even know who that shadow was,

there was simply this shadow fading in the ward.
that poem now shall be my gift to whoever shall have it in the future

i think, i know, how it feels now, to really give, even if it hurts.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Old Streetcar Already Named Desire

blue jasmine
you are not as blue as that lady who once rode the streetcar named desire

and sometimes
there is that question of
beauty
verging on a thin line
of

insanity as it could be but who would want that to be

dr this beauty that you are jasmine bluer than that blonde in that old streetcar already named
desire

RIC S. BASTASA
That Old Water Well In Olingan

it is far from civilization
only a few have reached
there

it is deep and full and my genealogy source of survival

i go back there
again
refreshed and thirst quenched
for its memories

mother bathing a boy
horse drinking from a pail natives filling their drums
maidens singing and men
wooing them
for a night of
love
after

when the needy have left
to take their much needed rest

there the well stays
sighing
but meaningfully filled

it has served
so well
less the selfishness
of all
men.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Old Woman That I Know....

the old woman
goes to church everyday reads her novena, spends more time in church than in the house

she is close to the parish priest gives sums of money to the religious activities noted for charity and enjoys many indulgences from the Pope

always she is dressed in the proper whiteness
her head covered by the required embroidery her movement restrained her poise reserved
holy and
silent

what they do not know (and this is her secret that i have discovered) is that just this morning she slapped her maid because her coffee was served and no longer that hot to satisfy her cold longings

exactly the opposite of what she is in society this old woman takes away the faith of the maid
from the same God that she adores in her Sunday church.

RIC S. BASTASA
That One Must Learn To Forget And Simply Move On With The Rest

reality at a closer look is a cactus plant and if you stay longer you feel the heat of the desert
at high noon

a little thinking takes you away from this static existence when you begin to move your feet and use your head that life is not meant to be at one desert only so many places so many people that one must learn to forget and simply move on with the rest

RIC S. BASTASA
That Open-Ended Novel... is that the way you want to end a story? nothing definite, not the usual one, where the hero stands

against the sun
and then his lady comes and kisses him
and then
The End with the matching music that satisfies the heart that justice is served and that once again the good has triumped.

how did you end our story?
you left me hanging upon a cliff and the audience did not see how i fell from a thousand feet and smash my head on the rocks below and how my blood oozed
and squirted and make the sea red.

what kind of writer are you?
you left the last page blank.
the monitor is anxious and the keys are idle still for hours until there was a blackout and the computer's off.

for days the blog is left undecided.
for years the last lines waited.

i guess that is how you wanted it very much like life

individualist, one can make or unmake oneself smashed the little bird or set it free from your hands that hold it there is this will this human will

and i the actor of your novel must use it now.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Other Kind Of Leaving

one is too obvious, folding the clothes, putting them all in the bag, closing the door and walking out, this happens almost everyday to people i know,
and i see tears, and i feel what they feel, some claim they do not know how to laugh anymore after that event, a few are envious, we keep this marriage working, though they do not ask how or why, we show them about distances,

the paradox of unions
and dissociation
how two people miss themselves when they are far away emotionally

i guess i must also tell them about my departure the art of leaving
vicariously,

you are here, but in quintessence you are never here

giving no importance to something trivial like a scar of long ago still sticking somewhere at your right foot

RIC S. BASTASA
That Page Of Life

there is this page of life of my last resort when everything seems to be disturbing

glossy and pleasurable all pictures that makes life sort of entertaining and though not wholesome but for a while shall make us forget what pain is there in our bones

we go back there lift the cover and search again the glossy pages

the pictures are not appealing anymore we have graduated to the next level of unsatisfaction we move on to another page not really appeasing but something new we smell it

and taste it

it is bitter and yet we prefer it now our age has advanced us to the level of the cure to the stage where we recognize and accept the sickness
of our humanity

we gloss over and over again we shine
like the spirits of the east like the ghosts of the christmas future now we think

if we finally found it.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Pain....

who who lives
without pain
is never alive
even once,

the beginning of life was your first
cry,

you did not cry
because you were
happy,

you did not choose
it,
it was not self-inflicted because given the choice
you would not have chosen to be here

that hand that slapped your bottom
made you taste it
first

your life was put to the test
with the sound of your cries...

RIC S. BASTASA
That Parasite Named Envy

it enters through one of the holes in your skin penetrates your
flesh
and then your bone marrows

it eats
all of you
and yet
you will never know it

you look for yourself
it is nowhere
to be found

RIC S. BASTASA
That Part Of A Whole

it is a tiny part as tiny as a grain of sand you hardly give it
attention
you keep on saying what is in this grain of sand that philosophers
say contain this universe something so tiny yet to contain everything and so you hold the grain of sand against the light and revolve it around your fingers little finger planets to the sun grain of sand you cannot believe what you felt and saw and so you throw away that grain of sand to the air eating it like a big mouthed monsters

you are lost
your world dissolves
like ice
you turn to air
and there you are
gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Party....

ey invited me to a party that they know i will never attend

it is my ego
it was once hurt and it still refuses to be cured it is the cancer of this society going crazy over the smell of the masses that pretend to like it

and yet
when the back is behind another one's back pressed against the wall and on dead end streets it breaks out in laughter and says this man believes us we were only joking

we have our own agenda
after those lectures we have our minds and visions we do not want to be like him a loser

the fingers of corruption are at work again the party goers love its caressing flesh sending the sensations of luxury
rising above the sufferings of others everyone loves

being well-off
being ahead of the common giefs one blows the whistle and the party however goes on and on and on the beams do not shake a bit the grounds remain firm

i am out of the picture
there is no party within me and i am not drunk
with the perks of power.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Perfect Me....

given the choice
i should not have gone to school
i should not have met you
i should not have loved and married, given the choice if indeed given that choice,
i should have not chosen
parents,
i should not have chosen to live with you
i should have not chosen
birth
i should have not chosen
life.
i should have been
i had forgotten,
i should not have remembered
what was once
i felt was the perfect me.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Pigeon

Tony just brought a pigeon
in his house
put it in a cage and feed it
some grains
beside a bowl of
water

Every night since then i cannot sleep
hearing always the sound of a sobbing woman grieving

i keep telling myself that it is just a pigeon temporarily adopting to a momentary loss of her freedom

Horrible nights
lots of horrible nights the sounds of groaning grieves are penetrating the walls of my mind until one day the pigeon died and Tony buried it beside his house now the pebbles are giving me the silence of the dead the air is so quiet looking at an empty cage somehow i feel guilty not about the pigeon but about Tony well, the story is quite long what business do i have there? last night i was thinking

15577www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
what if it was Tony who died and the pigeon went out of that cage and buried him there beside that lonely house?
shall i not hear the grieving sounds of that pigeon again?

RIC S. BASTASA
That Poet Looking At The Window Of The Train

this is the world that they never mind
each walks past the other like bicycle and pedestrian one is focused on the page of a newspaper
early morning
and the streets slide like flashes of light as one stands amidst the crowd transported by a train to another station looking to the glass window without anything in mind

RIC S. BASTASA
That 'Poetry Is To Be The Voice Of Others'....

it is midway between the path of light and pond
that goldfish appears nearer

the tunnel of the water from its source to the receiver who in turn becomes another giver and then
another

by now you must have understood what i have been driving at this nail
penetrating the soft wood this hammer banging

what am i to you is not really what i am for i am but a messenger a medium of the sufferings of others i am but a hand opening catching flakes of snow and light and rain and sun and even lightning i am but a vessel where water is poured hot or cold or not so warm and not so cold the xylem and the phloem the trachea

the larynx and the pipe the flute and the straw

i speak now for myself
from all those
that have rested and those who are still tired those at war with everyone and with himself

i am the paper where words are written
i am the pen where the ink passes through i am not the thought itself but i am always what others had been and will be....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Poetry......

it is a part of us
and much of me as it comes and goes like a pendulum of day and night it catches me and i catch it back

i hold on to it but i give it up to please

it too, and it leaves me honestly, devastated

as though much of me had been taken and not a bit was ever returned. I cry foul and it laughs sensing that i love it more that it had ever loved me.....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Porcelain Bowl

my heart delights to see an empty porcelain bowl
on the table

i wish i'd be one empty and can still be filled someday you may fill me

again

like a fish
soup.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Poverty

how can i forget your having to play with hunger at the boulevard somewhere in the seventies when the president declared martial law and we were then scampering for our own safety, there was this apple vendor whom you entertained with your stories about the struggle of the lion to be freed from the cage of ropes saved by the city rat which got lost in the mountain of trees and when his mouth gaped to the bright moon at the boulevard you took an apple and then we walked away and we took turns biting the redness of the crunchy fruit, and then we parted ways and then what i know was that a man like your face was shot to death by the oppressors of the city and your body was buried on the shallow sand of the river bank and it was your mother who finally came and reburied you with decency.

i heard, and i could not forget, she did not shed a tear.
i think, i did.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Quest For Excellence Against Your Previous Self....

first they welcome you they like you to be here they assure you
the rules are fair

the hunger games begin and you run for your shelter this hiding game in order to win

like that film
each one kills one another until only one wins

you do not do that kind of thing you run, and the faster you run away the better for you to feel that safety

and then finally when you find that torch of victory when you carry it with your hands to light
their darkness

they will say, it is foul, it is not meant to be that way the color of your skin is brown, it is earthly and filthy and simply unacceptable to the royalty of the past the glorious renaissance of the white and the blue you give in, you disrobe yourself and you are naked

the world sees the truth in nudity how beautiful it can be and you run as fast as you can because that is the only way to be human after all, you add, winning is not what is sought for it is the dignity of the journey the excellence against your self.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Quest For God

always
something has been made impersonal

faceless desire unresolved thirst eternal hunger
that no one will ever satisfy

the silence of
stars
the distance
this longing
for the infinite a God whose name
you have no right
even to know.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Quest For Originality

others are too conscious about originality

what they write or think, if you scrutinize it so well, is never theirs

they're not the first to have conceived what light
is there
what darkness lies what roundness does this earth own?

i guess
everything is but a mutation of an originality which was never there in the first place nostalgia remembers takes in what was there before

you don't exactly remember the details
but you know the essence
and you
claim it solely as yours

what a shame

RIC S. BASTASA
That Quick Little Brown Dog

that quick little brown dog jumps over the fence near the bank of the river, it is not your dog,
but you happen to be there when it jumped,
over the fence near the bank of the river
into the river
that deep river with a overrunning of the water the dog was struggling to swim back to the safety of the bank but it failed and the dog was taken away by the river and it was gone,
you wonder why until now you think about that dead dog
it is not yours but it sticks to your mind as though it is yours somehow you think as though you own it and that you feel so painful about such loss and you cannot sleep and then you dream about that quick little brown dog that drowned
it is barking so hard trying to be alive again
you wake up
with lots of cold sweat somehow you think again inside that dream
the face of the quick little brown dog that jumped over the fence into the deep river is yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Red Rooster On The Stony Ground

the red rooster knows its place on the stony grounds it crows three times and then attracts the white hen
and then shits its dirt on the cracks.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Red Tailed Fish

how i wish to think
that
that red tailed fish
which roamed the small aquarium world throughout its life is happy

but this is what i feel

like those sweet slices of pineapple
and melon chunks
which i kept inside the refrigerator

how chilly can loneliness
be?

how cold, how silent but when eaten

still fresh and so sweet.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Reunion Feeling (2012, Marco Polo, Aggies)

the farmer asks:

Father, would you rather have me visit the church and think about my farm or that i work in the farm and think about God?

i listen attentively and i who have the nerves entwined in my bones and embedded in my cartilages want to speak:

there is propriety in all that we do.

when you are in the farm work like a farmer and think about what you can do with the farm, and when you are in church praying, think solely about God.

i admire Dodot for raising it before the elders.
But Dodot is still strange, and to those who watch him closely did not see it.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Reunion On The Merry Month Of May

on a shorter notice we had the reunion set on the merry month of May,
candid,
a spot for the day, we gather the faces again
of youth,
high school scents spreading in the halls of this
room,
agging is late again (her breast sags, though she has not been married) catalina lost some of her teeth (she is contemplating of suicide, had an attempt but survived it)
ernie, still looks good with his marine blue polo shirt (though not well ironed he split with wife, now in the US starts anew with his second wife and a math whiz kid for inspiration)
fredelita, bony cheeks emaciated, depressed (had a baby with this parish priest)
sir berto, haggardly high blood pressure wants to deliver his speech to an audience of six
mrs. ratilla, still smart and quick, sits silently and her eyes are roving like she is the famous thinker, i understand,

i got the money to spend and they order what they want to eat, i am this writer, the standard-bearer, the entertainer, i love to sing again the songs of high school to recite again the poems i once wote i once read while they open their mouths looking for meanings

the rest did not come perhaps some of them
have died, perhaps some of them want to die,
perhaps some of them
pretended to be dead,

whatever, it was that month of May 2007
and i like to think we were all drunk
and merry,

the high school memories how can we bury them?

without dying ourselves

i was looking for her she was not there anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Room

... it was simply wider
for me

i was like a pebble falling to the ocean floor of the Surigao
trench

...it made me lonelier
it made me think of you that room was a night of long sleeplessness

the following morning
my eye sockets deepen like a black hole of
my self
made universe

i am still looking for myself and i am afraid

i have not found it still someone is talking and writing and i do not recognize

it

it is strange and it seems to be the truest of my lie.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Sadness In Your State

an autobiography appears life a blurred picture you are lost in the tracks of the past greatness is never spotted because you have considered each as a mere folder another item, just like any other number that slides from your fingers then something bites you the pain makes you jerk, and you begin to watch carefully the tip of your thumb, this hurts, who is this? who are you?
and you know the person well, the one that hurt you makes you remember a name the face sticks in your brain somehow, you remember, he is the greater one which you did not mind and now you claim
we were together in that same school of thought and i believe you,

why do you have to be like that? when there is no scream there is no one. when you do not hear the jump into the storm from the ship of prolonged blot of dark blue color, or that scarlet of bloody discrimination from the rest of the oppressing humanity
then
that is the only time that you begin to mind that there is someone out there and he is calling for help why do you think of help only when you are dying yourself? why do you begin to think of caring when you are hurt yourself?

you only feel, when the pain starts to take its house in you.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Sadness That Irony And That Waste

i still have Papa's picture
when he was old and sickly and dying and i remember we were talking seriously
at the patio
of that old house that he built from all his sacrifices
and it was you brother you took that picture with father's finger pointing at me
and what that really meant we both
really knew
and i still feel the sadness
the irony
and the
waste.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Sandwich

as you take that sandwich
i remember 1971

the ham, and mayonnaise
the purple sliced onions
and cucumber
that you slip between
a big sandwich which you say is too delicious

that is not how i saw it in the 70's you were too young then to know the connotation of the word or the metaphor of being sandwiched between two warring forces who wanted to win by killing each other they were all civilians mind you sandwiched between the armed and dangerous government and the armed and more dangerous rebels

the ham, and mayonnaise
the purple sliced onions
and cucumber
that you slip between
a big sandwich which you
say is too delicious

in the 70's they were not delicious at all they were maimed, and bloody, killed on the streets and public plazas bombed and brains scattered on the hot cemented pavements people kept in hog wires and secret detention places

brothers all but so insensitive to the the roots of humanity Cains and Abels
the ham, and mayonnaise
the purple sliced onions
and cucumber
that you slip between
a big sandwich which you
say is too delicious

when all i need is simply a bitter tasting coffee without the sugar and cream

RIC S. BASTASA
That Secret Love

love is concealed upon the heart that is buried in the muscle of my chest fenced by bones, bound by veins around a pool of blood

i give thanks to the Lord for i love you and you know not for i have sinned and they know not for i am the only one that feels it and hears its beat in utter silence

RIC S. BASTASA
That Secret Meeting...

a voice faint coming from the valleys of the heart the whistle of the boy from beneath the barns of youth memories surging like flowers lotus unfolding on the ponds of solitude the voice joins with the other voices from the desert places of the lonely hearts (how many? finally there are many like sands slipping from a crevice of profanity) a choir of singing scenes, mountains and hills under the fog and mist, trails winding, and trees like broccoli on the backyard of abandoned women the sun comes out in splendor rain showers faint like a smile of the shy maiden a rainbow slices the spheres

between us.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Self-Confidence

i can feel it
the moment i read your lines

just don't be offended i won't tell you

but i have always told myself
though
arrogantly

that i know, within, with this fire burning, i can always do

much better
but i will not show that to you

i will read
and i will listen

i won't talk at all
i am full and i am still writing

RIC S. BASTASA
That Selfless Beginning.....

there is nothing
no one is original

some are true, but most are fake

everything are echoes echoing echoes

you will notice all these repetitions when you are about to lose your voice

your life, your marks
everything

what makes all these new again?

how you see them
how you feel them back to the arms of your mind to the hands of your heart one is repeated but your view is not that awe and wonder

that selfless beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
That Sense Of Going...

There is pain in the soul it is invincible
the whole body feels it
and it is undeniable

You know it when you start to cease
you cannot tell it to anyone what you tell them is the joy of the smile
the stories of the nice days to come

For you are afraid of the sound of the wailing of the clock the sobbing of the bedsheets the cries of the walls the darkness of the heavens the pouring of the heavy rain

You are their love and they have become all your fears
but the hands of the clock signal the green light of going and so you must go silently
you tiptoe like air beyond the threshold of the door

The next morning the pain in your soul is gone it is taken from the strings of your body you can see people crying but you cannot hear them what is the use of this movie you ask yourself there is no sound and it is boring like an old Chaplin and so you finally go

To a place where it is as tranquil as a bay without boats and birds airy, and as they have promised you perfect
beyond the arms of the words beyond the lips of the mouth....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Sense Of Outrage....

i would have said something direct to the point

like an arrow to the heart of the tree i could have shouted eureka i could have followed my heart and walked away and find a home in someone's face

i could have been someone that you have never known a handshake that you have never felt we could have been more intimate than friends contented in the poverty of our souls

but it is not just possible i don't mind the hardship or the looseness

but it is not just possible it does not fit, something feels so good but at a distance it is ugly and undesirable and for a moment when i search for my true face and find it it becomes so horrible it gives me this sense of outrage that i have never lived at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Shame Of The Past....

in the afternoon
of my life
i read my past,

funny. sad.
some happy times,
but there was also that shame that i want
kept hidden,

i have no word
for that,
no name, no place,
i erase all the
images,

somehow you know it
and if we see each
other again, you may make me glimpse
a little, but i am ready to forget but if there is really a need to recall, i swallow

that fear, that shame,
and i will face you
and i will not be afraid,

i will tell you thanks,
i learned a lot.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Simple Happiness....

of spitting
just a little and once and
for all
while riding on a boat sliding on the river
and then
maintaining that same posture
moving on
on a journey that will never be over...

RIC S. BASTASA
That Skinny Past

the past is skinny
it does not speak much
it goes to church
everyday

it is shy, but it thinks much better, deeper and probing like
a scalpel to the
gum and decaying teeth

it is what you only know and you are surprised how skin deep things were until you wake up
and embrace the wonders of
change

the past is buried
it is skinny and dead
you want it
it can never be yours again

you meet a face
it is plump, and alienating it does not recognize you it is still hurt
and kept its composure
in indifference

RIC S. BASTASA
That Sleep....

sleep too is an illusion and there are so many of them the sleep that is cruel when we needed it
it leaves us
staring to the ceiling

the sleep that rocks us like babies to loving mothers who does not want to have them and remember them
once again?

that sleep that takes us and never returns us that rest that we soon shall have but we keep on postponing the inevitable

that closes our eyes and never opens them ever again....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Softness Of Childhood

You must remember still how comfortable
was it
when you as a
baby
hugged the mattress
when they fooled
you that mama is just right there
preparing your milk in the bottle.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Solitude With The Stars And Harmless Words

the last night
together our fingers entwine i keep your love inside my palms i keep it inside my heart when i leave bound for home at twilight

you go
you keep yourself in your freedom you go alone
where your heart takes you the last embrace

i leave all that is valuable to myself on your shoulder

i left some tears on the white blankets
as souvenir

i will be back in the house where i am alone again

inside the car
i weep

RIC S. BASTASA
That Something Which Went Wrong

there is a ripe papaya too ripe for my hold and i climb it too weak for my body the tree swings to the other side and then the papaya fruit falls to the ground
crushed

something goes wrong somewhere something that you are about to hold and yet crushes to the ground looks like a vomit & you don't want to eat it
back

RIC S. BASTASA
That Spot....

this is a blank slate.
when i write some words on it and you begin to read each something really happens though you do not know it because you are too busy with the reading of the word either a part of me dies or lives it depends on where you stop and when

tomorrow i shall write again you must learn where you stopped and
when.

it is that precise moment that you make me begin to write again.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Stage Of Denial....

i do not wish to write about pain, an artist has to clean the mess and write instead
about

happiness, but it is not here and what is here instead insistent and forceful is pain, but i refuse to give in to its demands to inflict pain to my words,

i smile,
i offer silence,
i like to hear the falling of the pin on that carpeted
floor,

i hear it,
i walk away, i dabble in all that the trees are singing on a rainy day,

i do not wish to write about your pain, i do not feel it somehow,

i feel mine, but what is the use of recognizing the one that hurts you and destroys you

for when, until when,
i choose now,

i shall write about a landscape of green grass, where trees are tall and huge, where plains travel infinitely into space where seas are calm where fish sleeps comfortably on the seaweeds and corals,

where butterflies flutter like shreds of paper from a building high, on this stage of denial i shall dance my mambo.

That Stairs That Must Lead Us Home...

building those stairs that lead to the gates of the heavens
in the skies?

how funny can that be if not impossible

what about the simplest stairs that lead us to the living room of the house that we may call
as home?

RIC S. BASTASA
That State Of Wellness

WELL, well, well
Here we are again
Back to each other’s mouths?
You and i
Me,
The three sides
Tripod
Talk to me You
I am
(not exactly lonely
But I must confess
I need to talk to someone Who must confess
To like me (Silly? But I think we really need
Still
That confirmation that we have Followed the rules
And that we are Ok)

Well, well, well
There’s no island
Like a man
Or at least man can be a chain Linked to one another That chain that chains his body
To his soul
His soul to another body A body to another body
All messed up
In the joys and pleasures Of sorrows and pains Salad
Days and hours and seconds
And Silence
How many more? How many more Are becoming dead like Everyone else
Searching for the meaning of our Hundred ripening silences Justifications for pains Elevating pleasures for blissful joys How many murmurs more?
At dawn.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Steel Hearted Lady

the power lady steel at heart
and iron winged multi-eyed
and fingers closed

hope you noticed
she stoops too low in order to conquer
you

RIC S. BASTASA
That Stony Feeling...

the storms
and drought
the devastation
of the quakes and floods
no way
they cannot affect him
anymore

he is the stone that hits your forehead

he'd been hurt
but not anymore

he hurts and will always hurt

in all the times of his numbness

wasn't it you babe
who told him
not to mind
feelings?

RIC S. BASTASA
That Strangeness

we are layered with years like skins shedding off
and then
the new ones that you see smooth, young supple

how many years?
we are silent still to this strangeness

i wonder how this love sees you always new to me vibrant illumined shadow to my shadow mist to my mountain

waves to my shore soft breeze constant leaving and coming i shy away from familiarity i tiptoe towards the door of our memories

RIC S. BASTASA
That The Chicken Crossed The Road.

when randy
asked me what did
the chicken
really do?

confessing that he did not really
know

i told him the usual answer without much goad
that the chicken just crossed the
road.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Thing Called Duterte....

once i had a friend who asked me
why my skin looks shiny and healthy.

I told him urine
is a good remedy.
I drink my own urine.

Days later,
he came back,
saying his skin
did not improve.
He drank his own urine.

And i laughed,
telling him that i was just joking.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Thing That Happened And It Was So Beautiful

he remembers it
but he keeps it to himself most of the time when he rides a bus seeing the trees flashing by the window in the countryside there is something crude and even rude but it is always beautiful there is some kind of repulsion nothing about magnetism some stones perhaps that grate upon themselves against the water or a dying moon or a swan leaving the pond or grasses growing tall beside an abandoned house and you are watching it with a self-created distance it is something that perhaps will not happen again but definitely it was beautiful and you always want it to remember again though you want to bury it

forever

it is passing like a cold wind upon your cheek that has forgotten the taste of tears....

RIC S. BASTASA
That Tomorrow Morning I Will Be No More

i am afraid i can no longer walk alone.
or fly alone
or be in bed alone,
no
matter how i try to close my eyes
the heart beats faster and my mind runs berserk
like a mad man trying to extricate itself from a shadow on the wall (which by logical reasoning cannot really exist)

i am afraid, my feet exist no more
my hands
are watery leaves dissolving on the river and so i write you a letter that my trip to the island where i can be a lotus is cancelled indefinitely

even if i shall love death as i once tell you
yet when it comes near me with a scent
i shiver
even on the thought that tomorrow morning i will be no more

RIC S. BASTASA
That Tryst Worth Forgetting

i see you
and you follow me
my gaze tells you,

inside my room where i have been all alone, where my loneliness is killing me, you know what i want, you have a heart, i need love, more love, and you know it, and you follow me inside my room, as i undress myself, and you understand, my thirst and my hunger, my longing and my pain, and you undress yourself, and you touch my face, and i touch yours, and then i kiss you and you smile, and you wipe away my fears, and then we make love throughout the night, and the morning after, i still see you sleeping, and i leave you a note, (and some money too) , i know, it will be the last, since deep within, i found no love from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Tuktuk Feeling

warm
day, sunny
sky

we take the tuktuk
in going to Lolie

our hairs
fly away so much
air meets
our eyes

there is this
feeling
that in cambodia
riding in a tuktuk

i am king
and you
are my queen

de-stressed
only for a while.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Unhappy Woman

that is the window
a woman is unhappy and she is always closing and opening that window and people keep on looking figuring out why that window is unhappy
and they are all happy about the proclaimed unhappiness of the other that woman that window not this woman not this window not my woman not my window always looking out somewhere except this writer
this piece
this one not this one that one over there not me but her

RIC S. BASTASA
That Unusual Search Of The 'In' Thing

when ideas rule the world it thirsts for images and so images are made like shadows and mirages
concrete mountains where we put our feet and walk real rivers where we swim and drown stones that we feel stray dogs that we stare at
and be afraid of it is always a story of what is not there and gathering them all and then the trend is lost and we wish for something else that one which is always coming and soon to come and soon to be worshiped
another idol another hands that turns fruits into gold another hunger of Midas another dead Sphinx another myth rising from the ashes of centuries

delicy

this afternoon i sit upon a white easy chair facing the blue sea my search is over actually there is nothing there everything is just hearsay
a rumor passed from one bad mouth to another
from one moron to another i need sleep and i assure you everything is fine
it is enough.
That Voice Within

somehow i am tasked to write what actually happened

and they seem to be not interesting at all

man pushing another man woman pulling the hair of another woman the clerk engrossed in the records and the stenographer with her notes for the day there are those who leave the court feeling so victorious saying, justice is served at last

there are some who fails to accept what burden is laid on their backs somehow i sit on an easy chair on a blurred vision on that painstaking scrutiny less the guilt

somehow something is missing more is yet still to be done every aspect is like another stone not lifted from its being stuck in mud

there is a sound which says do something more your best is not enough and i ain't seen nothing yet

RIC S. BASTASA
That Was The First Time When I Shouted At You

i was surprised myself at what i just did oh my i feel like a real man shouting at you
the first time in my life when i think you never understood me when i decided to shout the words the words baffle you about who i am, and what i am really up to i like the way things are now you must listen otherwise, i will keep on shouting until i will get my own meaning.

RIC S. BASTASA
That We Have Become Free

we accept
in silence the noise
within us
we embrace all their arms
kiss them all in the mouth
we signified love
and give all the understanding that we can muster within the lines of our palms
and then we look at each other without posing any question at all
we open all doors and windows
and let the cool wind come in
and then we smile to the world beyond us we welcome
whatever is there
shadows and shapes
and volumes and weights

they know by now that we are free

RIC S. BASTASA
That We Once Existed That We Once Loved.

i thought that it is easy something sweet something passing something that could be easily forgotten that which we can just dismiss and then move on and do other things we are wrong

i am the most wrong we have wronged not just ourselves but those whom we love and still want to love we parted but there is a time when we meet again and our gazes cross each other midway between honesty and carelessness it was not pleasurable we thought so it was pain that penetrates the core of our souls we can take it for granted now we can pretend that it is over we meet again our sighs in tight embrace we want to lose ourselves and forget that we once existed that we once loved.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Which Is In History Still Unwritten

only if you ask shall i answer like a wall flower i am a passive listener
if you ask me to talk, i will, but it will be brief, a commensurate answer, they call it justice, but there is something more to it which they call love, compassion, kindness, empathy you do not have to pay for my words, or invite me to your party for my talk, or send me a shirt, or pair of shoes for what i have shared with you, if it is a quid pro quo then what's the value of what i am?

or what we are?

a tooth for a tooth, an eye for an eye, until someone gets toothless or blind?

in the same manner that if you always pay for what i will do, there will come a time that i will do nothing because you have nothing to pay me
anymore

which should not be the case we shall stop this nonsense, we serve because we must,

because without that we can be incomplete our essences wasted

that we can never become who we really are until all the sacrifices are given:
gifts, serve, with nothing in return, ideal, human perfection, that sacrifice that is still in history unwritten.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Whole Night I Slept Alone

dear self,

i congratulate you
for finally waking
up early this morning
without remembering that last night
you slept well
alone

your snore
was music to your ears

sincerely
yours.

myself

RIC S. BASTASA
That Will Be The Last Reunion

i assure myself, i was lost, in that reunion, their faces are no longer the same their noses are elongated and their words are smelling like
death fish their vision about us float like stinging jellyfish the world has changed a lot, old friends are tied to broken families

ex-girlfriends have become wild grasses in the forests nothing and no one is as tamed as that old closeness that knows what sympathy was all about the perfume of empathy is lost in the air of indifference nothing good spreads there i listen a lot and i have heard what i must vomit everything ends at ten o'clock in the evening and then i flag a taxi that takes me to a hotel which shows me the bareness of luxury and style

i do not stop from there i have to go somewhere else to appease what boils within the rage of too much expectations that fail

perhaps at eleven o'clock a bottle of rhum while watching a comedy show of transvestites and clowns something too far and farce.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Window Which Is Half Open

HE

is still excited by the scent of an orange peel diffusing inside a candle-lit
room

SHE

has unbuttoned her blouse
unzipped her shorts and sets aside the orange rolling on the floor

They

like it here
all alone in their secret
whispers

a tryst of youth and escapism

The

moon is the uninvited peeping tom by that window which is half open.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Woman

that woman, when did she ever learn not to slap you again?

she will never tell you when she will stop.
and you have always been compliant a christian

as soon as she is finished slapping your right cheek you soon ready the left cheek and you give her all the joy of her sadism.

you are not the are my wife. and i am teaching you that her reign is over.

my hands have touched your cheeks and healed the bruise the pain that seeps down to the layers of your skin to the years of your burden let me touch them again like i am a leaf to a whorled vine i have the cure

this love of mine

i have these fingers that can unlock the reason of your pain. let me open the door for you. let me close it away from that witch let the white dove fly finally to the skies look at me. now my dear wife you are free!

RIC S. BASTASA
That Word Of Yellow Corn....

how do you touch
words? how can you use your hands
to feel each syllable like a grain of yellow corn? perhaps change the question. How do words touch you? your fingers are smiling.

RIC S. BASTASA
That Wound Which Was More Than What Silence Can Boast Of....

what justifies
it was that honesty

the feeling deep down
the deepest of your
heart

the world is silent seeing the truth feeling
you

how love can be harsh sometimes bringing the truth of a liberation

twas like a burst of something hidden from within the inflamed flesh

the world is silent but it was that wound which was more than what silence
can boast of....

RIC S. BASTASA
That You, By Myself, Be Always Worshiped.

I might be unfair
if i say that God has been deaf to all my pleas.

For last night and in the last crucial seven days of my life he saved me from the harms that my self could have inflicted upon itself: those sleepless eyes the tumults inside the mind, the uprising of the acids inside my intestines the whirling of the thoughts the storms of the past the tornadoes of hasty judgments and all those sorts for which if you try looking at it from a distance
you definitely have lost control of.

There was that Hand that keeps on guiding and holding and caressing even in my sleep even if i do not remember anymore
what happened.

There was that breath that was not mine anymore.
That soothing that came from without That comfort which i do not know from where Which i guess, i may call now as Heaven.

Whatever i am, and wherever I'd been This early morning, i bow before you Oh Lord

Thank you Very Much. Thy name be forever Praised.
That you, by myself, be always worshiped.

RIC S. BASTASA
That's Life

her only baby
dies, that's life

a man on top of his promising singing stint has cancer o the throat, that's life my dear

the shallow talker
lazy bone but boss sucker goes up in the office ladder that too is life

an outstanding teacher
low paid cannot send his kids to college
that's life

a carpenter without a house a pedophile priest a corrupt politician forming his own dynasty
that's life

a poet without a book a sick doctor
a nurse dying in her room these too is what life is all about

RIC S. BASTASA
That's Why I Am Here With You....

again this is just an outpouring
of rain
all my loneliness dropping like
rain
all my sadness dripping like rain
again, this is nothing about anthologies or who gets the Poet of the Month
thing
in any community magazine this is rain outpouring this is a form of therapy on everyday malady nothing about art or musing when tomorrow rains again i will be here

when sunshine comes and flowers bloom in the field when my beloved sings and sleeps with me in bed

why should i be here?

RIC S. BASTASA
That skinny Past

the past is skinny
it does not speak much
it goes to church
everyday

it is shy, but it thinks
much better, deeper and
probing like
a scalpel to the
gum and decaying teeth

it is what you only know
and you are surprised
how skin deep things were
until you wake up
and embrace the wonders of
change

the past is buried
it is skinny and dead
you want it
it can never be yours again

you meet a face
it is plump, and alienating
it does not recognize you
it is still hurt
and kept its composure
in indifference

RIC S. BASTASA
The Boy At Laoy

the boy is selling charcoal the teacher marks him absent from school another boy cannot make it this year for graduation in his sixth grade his mother is in the house resting as she just delivered a new baby girl the boy has to buy her food a chicken soup to warm her guts his father died two months ago lost in the sea the typhoon came without notice

RIC S. BASTASA
The City And The Town

dthis is what the city has to offer neon lights, ambulance screams, loin music, beer and ale, a small room, a busy life,
a little sleep,
exquisite dinners,
late shows, gags, gigs.
buts I have enough of all these,

I went to the little town and have this wooden house, beside a river, there are flowers blooming and vegetable gardens, and tranquil horizons,
a beautiful sunset
a brighter sunrise,
crustal clear rivers,
home fishing, and mountain treks, and fresh smell of green grass, and cool shades of trees,
mountain shadows,
full moons and singing birds love calls, and fresh fruits direct from the trees, wild chickens, and horses to ride and carabaos to pasture, goats to feed and turkey chases,

a very peaceful sleep at night
under the moon
lamp-lit room and some cicadas in concert with the frogs and crickets and worms and then the rain starts to fall
you hear the sweet hum of the nearby river
The Dignity Of My Tears

I will not blame the moon For bringing me this Pale sadness
On some pictures of grief
I lift up my face
To present the dignity
Of my tears

RIC S. BASTASA
The Islands....

two islands to keep that fidelity upon their true natures must always retain the sea between them

with only the winds of chance as bridge this world can be intact
united.

RIC S. BASTASA
The   Little Things That I Can Do

to be what i am
is first,
to affirm what you are
is another,
to be in harmony
with nature,
to live in peace
to work for progress to respect others to love God and country but God above all with all my mind, my heart and soul these are the little things that i think i can do well even without my government aiding.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradox Of Trying

the more you try to be pleasing the more they become angry they will not like it. Don't try other tricks. Do not force yourself you are you and they are them.

you are in a quicksand.
Be still.

Or you'll sink
earlier than expected.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poor Rich Boy Named Al

you say, you pity him, he has everything and today, he commits the greatest blunder of living killing himself

did he leave a note? did he call you before he took his last breath?
he didn't he wants to die a silent death, one that can be mistaken as a happy death, goodbye, pretty world, i am finally leaving you no problems

sometimes i may get you wrong pitying the poor little rich boy who had everything and who despite everything he has, , , , this everything, these all these all these that you want to have but couldn't have any cars, boats, diversified business, real estate, cruises, money, money and more money buying happiness here and there
only to find that he is finally lost and cannot find his way back home
to himself
finding the emptiness of a mother who dies more recently, because of extreme loneliness amidst the crowd, the socializing and the loud music of not belonging to anything to anyone

he still kills himself, and you feel this kind of pity, this wastage of human resource, you are thinking and you have this line of thinking that those who died by killing themselves are a waste an epitome of unhappiness bizarre, a sadness galore, unexplainable i disagree, they are happier, and have chosen the smooth path of laying their lives with their own hands in the altar of the gods of early, handy, packaged death and i wonder if you feel the guilt of them thinking i am taking this life, and it is none of your business, damn, damn, this empty space is now reserved for you because, who knows, you may be next, my dear jeannie.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pride Of Darkness

darkness has its own merits like the night giving us a splurge of stars

the moon alone above the marshes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sounds Of Jeepneys Are Gone

The sounds of jeepneys are gone
The champaca trees bloom again This evening beside you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Strait Man

You mislead my eyes
For the strait man you wrote How this brain works
I am beginning not to understand The straight man you were writing Did not have the the gee ("g")
And the itch ("h")

That you etched through the lines
You are indeed witty Referring to the narrow body of water Connecting two other bodies The estrecho, aprieto, knipa, the sikinti The sor durum, the ciesnina, uzina, prieliv, The sund, the bogaz Whatever it was it was so difficult That distress, or need:
Ill and penniless,
The strait man was in sad straits indeed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sun

almighty
the sun continually burns itself at the center of this universe to give life light to everyone the single cell the widest ocean

RIC S. BASTASA
The (F) Rying Woman....

to pry upon his weakness and to discover some artifacts from his house is her past time and every hour when there is a break from the wanton hours and the monotonous menu of the day she opens the usual window and watch what the worm is doing inside the terrarium she records the possibility that this can be a landmark of history and significant for what others say as a phenomenon other people's lives matter and sometimes the worm that looks at her too asks: why?

the worm, and she does not know this, is also prying upon her her shrinking breasts, her skin that looks like dry tobacco leaf her life that to the worm has become more of a raisin stuffed inside a boxed, with a history of having been dried by the sun the worm is fair though, in its latest description she is still sweet though neutral in smell, and deserves still to be liked to be eaten someday

p.s. the worm remarks, kids will like her.

RIC S. BASTASA
The 23rd Psalm Of The Lowly Snail

the snail shall not want it shall lie down in green ponds it shall reside beside still waters it shall restore its flesh it shall be lead in the paths of wetness for your name's sake it will fear no evil for you are with it

its hand shall comfort it and it shall prepare a leaf before it in the presence of all the other insects its saliva runneth over it shall anoint its snail with the rainwater

RIC S. BASTASA
The 6th Sense

Love has fooled you.
First

so you fool love in return you pretend you are Love You are second.

The Third one is the Newcomer
in this game

a tragic play in fact where both are losers at the end

First there is A hELLO
THEN

The goodbye, The fourth one is not forgotten

but the Fifth one learns from Love itself

It forgets, heals, takes time to ponder

and decides that the only way to live is still

To love again.
This is the Sixth sense.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Abandoned And Lonely Nipa Hut

then we come back to this place where the grasses are tall and the yard is filled with trash
of goat steps and cow dung
the scent is horrible to an ordinary stranger who recalls nothing of what we once did here when we too felt like we were abandoned
by the moon
and the wind
when the stars fickle upon a black sky
winked

RIC S. BASTASA
The Abandoned House And The Man Who Drags His Shoes To Make The Necessary Sound when you arrive in the house (the house that both of you built 17 years ago) no one is there not even the three white dogs you have accepted this face of loneliness without a mouth

it is its nature now gentle in silence

there is nothing to talk about with someone else when someone else is far away and seemingly taking all the hearts out the door and the hinges have to keep things for themselves for in truth, those who left the stairs they still love

you have the key to the door of the kitchen and that is where you start the journey towards the living room you scurry on some little memories it is like putting some words in your notes in here and there beyond the margins but it is not that endless really for whatever it be joy or death there's got to be an end that is the truth of the meaning of this word

it could be a dead-end a street of walls & then actually you are caught in flagrante
where your only choice is to go back,
retrace,
remember,
refresh
refrains, refrains
of a love song

you go back to the room look longingly at the bed the blankets are dusty and the pillows are stained with so much emptiness or guilt
scrapes
Freudian analysis
Carl Jung's other possibilities of reconciliation

this is a very soundless world and every part here is keeping its mouth shut their layers of concealment are thick and their canopies of self-defenses are hard you feel like this is one kind of a giant shell and you are inside it its flesh

all blistering
flesh

you decide to wear your shoes all throughout this scrutiny this journey into marriage into childlessness
into what if's

you drag your feet with your shoes on as though someone is suffering and wanting to die and you hold the collar and you hurt the backbone and in that open window you imagine that someone may finally jump like a scared cat

nine lives
thirty-six softest feet you purposely make a sound with your shoes tapping and tapping and tapping
to create those sounds of the past dances
just to fill an empty room some thoughts jump out of the window dressed in euphemisms as the ceiling creates its own crankiness its cloudiness

nine cats in you jump out that window falling softly on the grass below all thirty-six
dreams

it is nice to see of course nine unharmed cats like fluffy cotton blown by the wind and gently softly land on the grass it is no wonder why men sometimes invoke the sound of their whistling indeed it is by this time very relaxing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Absence

i have long waited for this time
when
you cannot seduce
me anymore
like no matter what you do
whether you spread your legs
at 180 degrees
or lick the muscles of my legs for
a day
all these cannot cause a tremor
to my layered existence

i have long waited for this
time
when i become a wall and you wilt
as a vine
when you are but a forgotten tendril still fighting for a hold in my trellis

now that time has come and i am calling some of my friend to dine and drink with me and we had a good time
recalling what you have done
to me

i told them you ruined me and i was like a house that fell down on the ground
dynamited

and then they all left me when the wine is all consumed when the food is nothing but left-overs for the dog now it is just me and my dog and then the dog is asleep on the rug beside a door

that i have not closed

somehow, i am back to this emptiness again and i still wonder how can i ever be a void to be filled again like an empty glass still wishing for the pouring of the old wine

RIC S. BASTASA
The Absurd

the absurd
lies in the sunless sea

there is no fading
rising or setting there and having learned of this rare but occuring

phenomenon

where all time either is dark
or gray or something like a boundary

they begin to suspect that there is no hope for the light
though

they retain their last and only belief
about eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
The Absurd On Our Skins

the absurd lies on the surface of our skins like a rose tattoo that shirks and shrinks with time crumpled lines and fading dyes and a story that refuses to die you ask me if somehow i have obtained some meaning to my life something that i cannot say i soon tell you it is more of a growing thing that does not really show itself unless you wait till the right season comes the wind gives it a light feeling and the sun warms it a bit surprise comes like a bud and bliss comes like a red flower so dainty and beautiful but you know it well: a very short moment like a breath a sigh like a puff of whisper to the ear it is a show of life, we gather dry leaves and then burn them we clean the ashes and we wait for the grass to grow back we anticipate the coming of hope, the rain, the clouds, the sun sometimes it is all dark, we are blind, and then things, all things begin to be real, it is all the same, too much light is also blinding.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Academe...

it is circular in shape the usual
nothing to start with
and nothing to end up, it is no longer
open ended like a bowl of aquarium
with a gold fish
swimming within its limited
confines,

i am inside it
and you cannot just touch me for this world
excludes you
and lots of them

it thrives on its own
and by now having felt all your exploitations
rejects your manipulations

it is a pond
of newly bred lilies
underneath
are supersonic fishes behaving
like ordinary commonly spotted black orange
kois.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ache Of Separation

now we are far away, the distance divides us, like torn cloth

there is a purpose,
and we know it, now, the ache has its own reasons, for you to bear more fruits

for me
to make silence my best friend chartering a new course, we look at the farthest star, we beat the heart of loneliness, for soon it will end, and soon we shall never be parted, love grows in separation, takes roots, and invisible inside our

bodies,

we shall bloom, we shall be the same branches again on one tree

RIC S. BASTASA
The Acing Tooth...

it takes an aching tooth this excruciating, penetrating, pain to forget for once what lust was there, that lust for sweet moments,
that greed for slush,
that avarice, (would you mention too, that hunger for fire and
flesh?)

the child in us refuses treatment, fears the dentist, shuns away the cure, this pain endures and those who know what it is
and how to cure it,
blast in anger.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Act Of Doing Good...

whatever good that i do i just do it
wherever that good deed goes to hell or heaven
whether it falls to the hands of the devil or to the wings of those angels
it does not matter

the responsibility is passed to the port where the ship has docked and anchored its weight

meanwhile i shall do another good deed again simply because it is my nature my essence
my duty and i shall not be hurt
anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
The Act Of Losing

i am floating today
feeling like
a butterfly
flattering the wind and teasing
the flowers
in this beautiful city garden
inside a public park

i realize
i like living the life of a foolish blue butterfly knowing fully well how short my life span can be
and yet
still busying myself with things no less important

like
not deciding what to do with any flower
or cloud
not having to say yes to any wind or cloud
neither saying no something lies
beyond
any decision

just like it
belonging to no one not subjecting my proboscis
to the dictates of the hands
of time
it is a very light existence without a thought a direction
not even a clue
of who am
i
really
in this flitting
moment
where i am just another anonymous
in the mall
in the park

RIC S. BASTASA
The Act Of Wonder

dr. conoce donde empezar la mañana es un gran girasol rojo abriendo y flexionando hacia el sol

y no sabe todavía qué hacer con ello lo que no sabe es que al abrir la puerta y caminar hacia el gran girasol amarillo y mirarlo tan asombrado que se olvida de qué hacer con su vida o la de los demás que dependen de él ya hizo todo lo que estaba bien y posible

RIC S. BASTASA
The Addiction

The addiction to writing Is worse than drug Addiction to shabu
Or marijuana

You want solitude
You do not talk
You shy away from friends And your wife Misunderstands your silence As coldness of a lover

“Do you still love me? ”

it is worse
there is no hospital for writers there are no rehabilitation centers where they diagnose you for an addiction for a certain precise disease

why this man prefers solitude why he does not dance why he does not talk anymore there is no drug prescribable to this addiction

there is no doctor
there is no cure

meanwhile the symptoms keep manifesting

looking beyond the window in deep thought sleeping late and waking earlier than usual

He lives too far from everybody Kin, friends, lovers, and country
RIC S. BASTASA
The Addiction To Write

THIS is my addiction: to write my failure: sometimes i write without a direction and my success: i am writing about everything that happened here without missing a thing thru symbols and signs when things i met are unbearable thru stories to illustrate what misery have others inflicted upon others and themselves thru poems that can speak what i do not wish to tell you this is my addiction: writing without a purpose except to spend time with you descriptive and not judgmental letting the hours go and not imprisoning them in the cells of my mind accepting the fact that i am as insignificant as you that we pass this way and we do not really know where we are finally going we hope that this is not just this but that there is something beyond we suspect but we kill it we live each moment and so we live without fear we are here because we are here we step upon a path because it is a path we think we think we always do this thinking and it must not be for nothing we think, we think.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ads....

do your own thing
dance to the sound of your own drums believe in yourself
because we do....

smart....not odd..

RIC S. BASTASA
The Adults

inside their rooms
they do in secret what we all know they do not kiss and tell they keep to themselves what this world
tells to everyone
the more educated they become the more they conceal the more closed
are their doors
and the collaboration
is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Advisory...Repeate.

come election count how many glasses of friendship did you break?

how many threads of connections
cut?

how many bridges are falling down?

you defend your presidentiable and for God's sake, he does not even know if you exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
The African In You

Man, forget the African in You
We are all Men
Part of Humanity
There is no more African, Russian, American and Neither shall i be Filipino nor shall he be also Japanese

Neither shall there be Plutonians Nor Marsian
In One Universal Quest
for Oneness
One Humanity
One Race
Borne of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Agnostic

the whole universe is as a grain from a balance, or a droplet of morning dew come down upon the earth and i am nothing but a sigh from your breath O lord.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Agony Of The Long Waiting

i understand fully well what is this agony of waiting i’d been there six months, and some false alarms there were rumors

and bad news

i waited for the good news
it did not come
what arrived was something unbearable father hid the knife and mother asked me to listen to her i know the agony of waiting i know the pain of arrivals (and departures too)

i was once there
and no amount of comfort was enough neither balm nor herb neither drug nor injection no amount of psychiatric treatment did cure yet i survive

i am still here with you silent and strong

it is our agony
and we understand.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Agony Of Waiting

the agony in the garden of Gethsemane the sweat turning to blood Jesus asking for the will of God driving has been dragging judgment suspended, i am sleeping.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Agony Of Waiting...

now
when the day is gone we chase it no more like those days of yore!

the days flash like game cards on our faces then the magician keeps text them all in his hand all days are gone

the night has come
and we can do nothing but sleep or wake up thinking about nothing
what comes next simply is unthought of the nights and days are the same now nothing is distinctive in this waiting game of life...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Agony....

in the middle of manila
in the ocean of buses and cars
inside your car immobilized by the endless traffic
you look out the window blurred by the
rain......

RIC S. BASTASA
The Agrarian Tenant

eddie is the guy he used to be a lover of women in the town when his father Toldo died he inherits

tenancy, and so he married early got six kids, wife ligated, and lived a simple life beside a ricefield, on the empty fields he can see the black crows and the sparrows and the scarecrows, for year and years

he tilled the land left by my forefathers as we finish our courses this time i come back to see him how old has he become, emaciated, deep brown skin dry long hair, cracking lips, gnarled fingers,

i though he too would not recognize me we had a talk about the farm and the rice produce, the cost of fertilizers and pesticides and the chinese cartel and the massive importation from vietnam killing all of their dreams i have not done my duty, but here he is surviving on few grains left on salted fish

all his children gone domesticated in other homes of the rich few in Hongkong one in Dubai the other one opens her parlor in Vigan

at the end, there is only the two of them his ligated wife and himself unbending.

RIC S. BASTASA
as i sleep the airconditioner inside our room hums a tune to my ear sounding very much like your poem recently posted at PH last night when i arrived late from the office

Monotonous like the Rural Transit bus that takes you daily from the house to the city then back

Silly like a nursery rhyme a la Jack and Jill or ba ba black sheep There is no philosophical content whatsoever like a very dry well No water in here no pebbles just plain dust and sand

There is no color like the blue skies and black birds No motion for wings no notion of movement like our emotions There is no odor (there is a little bit of rotten fish and wilting leaves of mahogany, like some fertile humus in mama's backyard)

Forget what i said. It is your poem my dear.
And i must love it.

It is like the hmmmmm of the airconditioner and It is making me sleep soundly beside you. Anyway

I am here.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Alien...

it is never the desire
of him
who writes so well to become another poet in the halls of fame, no, not, and far from it, all that he did was merely to unload what was in his mind on those dark nights
when he felt terribly

either sad, or horrified or lonely, it is only sometimes when he felt bliss or those tiny pieces of happy minutes that comfort his mind that eases his heart on this long and lonely journey toward a faraway place which he thinks he must have been but he cannot anymore remember except that feeling
of

missing, that longing that no word has ever filled that nostalgia that never disappears while waiting while standing by on a train station that takes him back to a rented room

while sitting on a chair as everything flashes on him like lightning
when he sees only shadows of trees and rooftops

and then the heavy rain compels him to close the window though
this time
brave as he is on his own
there are no
more tears...

RIC S. BASTASA
in that dry desert room
the blanket
sands fold into dune shapes against the paper wall
horizon

the sound of
the rain
outside this mind house remains to be the soothing
music of the alienated
soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Allegories Of That Early Morning

one can after a time see the dichotomy
of the body
& mind

the mind
has its own territory
it grows its own garden
plants its own towers
of ivory

the body
constructs
its rivers
destroy the fences
and demolishes
walls

in the mirror
you see a face
and you are carried with so much
sympathy

the carriage
with a black horse
begins
to take the body

the mind is the white horse
galloping in a different direction

the peace of your world
depends on the power of your hands to whip and
caress

meanwhile the flowers in your garden
bloom and wilt
the tower of ivory
begins to shoot its light against that vast dark landscape

RIC S. BASTASA
The Allegory Of An Unintentional Meeting

the meeting was incisive lie the way my tooth is relieved from pain but he thought about what i said before that moment when the glass was emptied of its black contents that night inside a cube of ice when what followed was the transparency

of air
when both sides can be seen at one glance when goodbyes and hellos look the same like Siamese twins when one finally sees through a hole and for a while glances like a window of rain where you cannot help but just stay as you do not like to dance and then he says that the universe is there and it is nothing at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Allegory Of Good And Evil

i made a cottage
of nipa and bamboo
and rattan
by the side of the
sea

it is not that luxurious

any common man of this village may come and
rest

i put the sign that any tired man may sleep there any traveler may use it for free

i was away for three days when i visited it

the vandals drew a big penis and a vagina as big as a platter poured black paint on the floor and scattered drift wood in the center of the floor how unkind are these unknown vandals?

but we cannot be outdone we clean it again
repaint it with green and beige to cover the obscenity

i guess, what devil destroy God is never tired repairing because we have promised to be instruments of good then we must all comply now the cottage stands clean again welcoming still a tired traveler.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Allegory Of Pleasure...

there is more to find in this mountain the snails have not reached here the birds are not telling the complete view a vista of clouds and little white houses beside a river there is more on top of the trees you have seen a lot but there is nothing that can be touched for the pleasure of the hands so what is the use?

the feet are ready and tomorrow is the final leaving

there is no regret
somehow he will try getting into the body of the cow it will be nice there there is more pleasure with the grass and there is no moral code to adopt

mud is still cooler for the body dress is but a prison without a key

RIC S. BASTASA
The Allegory Of The Cave In Lesser Words

there is an exit
from the shackles of darkness from the depths of ignorance to the liberating light follow the tunnel of your dreams awaken from sickening sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
The Allegory Of The Cycle Of Doors and so there is this door that appears before you and you open it and then when you enter the room another door appears this is the cycle of doors that keep on appearing and you keep on opening but the room still appears from a distance always distant from your eager feet to enter you say to enter the room i must please the door but the room moves away just the same and the door tells you to keep the room you have to burn it and when the room is burned the door finally disappears and then both the door and the room shall tell you now be happy

for you now have a house of your own

RIC S. BASTASA
The Alligator...

detach the cover
the book is naked its face is blanked
it has no identity

open the page
there are no changes in those prints
the letters still make the command

the sentences end in their usual paragraphs in a new sense, to signify a little difference there shall be no periods, as you notice
there are only commas,

there is a meaning to this,
something in us always moves, continues, serrated, double-edged sharpness of the mind sometimes, a comma creates a sense of suspension, like a bridge, a lull, a disbelief, no one likes it, because everyone in us, trained as we were in schools with always in mind completions, and endings, we, do hate, incomplete returns like a rumor with nothing definite as to what happened to the subject,

the scene is frozen, nothing thaws it, the word is hanging, the journey of the feeling is still at the middle of the map, the red dot still unreached, and there is no stopping and this precisely makes you breathless like you are having a swing, like you are suspended in a rope still not well tightened, feel it, do not be horrified, just feel it, precisely, this is the truth about our existence sword of Damocles up and the gaping mouth of the abyss beneath looking like the more than sign in basic mathematics

the mouth of the
see you later alligator,

RIC S. BASTASA
The Amazing Grace Of God

HIS WIFE, and two daughters and son
and his mother were on that bus that lost a brake and banged its head on the old trunk of the big acacia tree
on the road
to Isabela,

they were visiting the miraculous church of Manaoag
as a family

all of them died except him who is now
lighting a candle and offering prayers to five coffins,

and yet when asked
he says
he still feels the AMAZING GRACE OF GOD.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ambitious Guests...

her cell phone rings she is fast asleep, i am thinking, what if,

what if,

i cannot tell you,
what is my desire, but i just arrived, it is useless to build a beautiful house at this age, our legs shake, our bones rattle, it is useless very useless, to build a beautiful house, for you cannot assess anymore what they really love,

your beautiful house or us, at this moment when you have no one to please, except pleasure, perhaps, when everyone who lives there looks at the ceiling with those luxurious chandeliers, dreaming, someday, this will be mine, for they are dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Amor Secos.

some leaves and moss
on water and stones at the side of a river crystal mirror to the sky early morning on a walk with your dog as the wind gently blows
the amor secos.

birds flying away from you the silence is a memory of a tunnel until a pebble hits the side of the metal as the boy looks for the bird that falls

another bird from a branch above your head looks in fear.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Amor Secos......

the amor
secos are the dry kind
of grass
which stick to you when you touch it
and pass by

at one glance they are insignificant

grasses are meant to be removed from the garden and
be taken as trash

somehow if you look closely as i have done recently sleeping on the grass
beside them they are not that ugly at
all

they are nice to look at and when i stand
and leave
some have already taken a patch of my
pants

they must be lonely.
i guess.

on the other hand if they could talk, would they have not said
that they just want to comfort you
because you are lonely too?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Analogous

everything has an analogy

for instance these hands with fingers

are they not rivers and creeks a source and tributaries?

for instance this body this temple where my soul rests

this eye
this window of the house

the sun
the eye of the earth

a friend of the stars the wonders of our longings

for instance
the silence
a dash in our talk a space of our doubts

many more
for instance you and me two hands in prayer

RIC S. BASTASA
The Anchored Boats At The Pier

noise has become the subject of his painting lots of colors in chaos furiously the red blots invade the canvass with the black streaks as ally
drops of dark blue and a little softness with mint greens strokes of ash gray and the violence of strong oranges which ignited fire to the minds of the viewer it is a picture of pressure that in a little while you can even hear the explosion or the passage of a cyclone

he looks at it
calmly like an early morning
sea

as he remembers the seagulls and the anchored boats at the pier.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Angel Of Death

and then the angel of death flies and stops beside her, and she who was prepared with what to say didn't say much,
she smiled,
raised her hand
to hold his,
as though to welcome her in an embrace
and she did embrace her yet how can we not see what joy she had seen that moment

and then she closed
her eyes
into an infinite
bliss.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Anger In Your Eyes....

THE morning is cold lit by the angry flint in your eyes and i, who love you, perhaps love you more, couldn't care less, perhaps this is not love at all,

or perhaps it is,

unaffected by what you are, despite the anger that burns the beauty of that flower that in early morning starts to bloom.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Angry Sea

a boy sits behind the angry sea

the artist captures
such anger

it's like a peacock
white
its feathers spreading behind
the fears of the boy

it is indeed
an anger so beautiful and unless you see it

then you
can understand...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Angst...

Lament
knows better Joy dances with Bliss but as soon as Grief arrives Joy cries and Lament
as usual sits down
reflects
writes and knows the exit towards Enlightenment.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Anomalous...

when an anomaly exposes itself like a face when wrinkles before did not destroy it soon you will tremble about what you cannot believe a man rises from the sea with a tail of a dragon and his arms soon turn into the wings of a giant bat and if you are not careful enough because you have been too complacent or too trustful in such a stupidity of the foulest of all fools you can be one of those gobbled up eaten raw like the way he had wantonly eaten his last best friend

RIC S. BASTASA
The Anonymity Of Pain....

...because of pain, one hides, who wants the sounds of pain to be heard by people whose concern is not even equal to a curiosity?
one takes shelter in the privacy of a room, closes the doors and windows and then bleed
and shout in pain,

no one hears this tragedy this private thing that demands the patience
of an enduring injury,

one keeps a record of his privacy, here, he writes, his name is a falsity, his place faraway.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Anonymous Flowers

someone anonymous sends the flowers all white and we who receive them are all in guesses
for whom?

and since we do not know for whom for sure we leave the flowers a bouquet of flowers on the table and no one puts it inside a vase they all wilt for no one cared to put water on the leaves it is like love that you give to everyone and none in particular when that love goes away no one weeps.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Anonymous....

when i look at you for a long time
i feel pity for you

somehow you do not deserve this i am at a loss of words i want to tell you
everything

you are always silent and i like you for that and then i look at myself a very long searching gaze and there is anger there somehow i must have done

you
injustice, and the pity expands like an oil pollution spilling to the ocean

many innocent birds suffer and waddle in the helplessness of their situation

i want to be away from you to pull you out from me but that is impossible because you are myself

you are in me
and i am in you

we are one and somehow we are beginning to be a dichotomy of two words

it is not the either or of the situation it is the immersion of an impossibility of a separation i am you and you are i,

no one has ever escaped on this phenomenon not even in the syntax of our human grammar our way of using words as forms of liberation or escape the way they tell us that you and i can be free in some unknown or undiscovered formulation i look at you with pity and you look at me with anger the two blend together in the inevitable acceptance of who we really are we are one in two mouths our hands remain a pair of helpless parts two people are talking within this one soul one body anonymous.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Answer

The love you must have given must have been choking like a rope ready around his neck too much love

the other unloving because there is no dictation
for love
it is spontaneous nobody tells someone you love me as i have loved you but love the unbelieving the unbelieving just the same and when you die loving tell him/her the harshest words ever that you can muster:

i still love you
i love you very much.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Answer From Two Daughters When Asked How Is Their Mom their mom has terminal cancer.

and i ask the younger daugher, how is mommy? she says on the phone, ' she is doing fine. we are are the airport and waiting for our 3 p.m. flight back home' and the older daugher's answer to the same question:

' mommy has breast c, and she is feeling the pain
...she's not entertaining the option of invasive surgery, , , or the costly chemotheraphy.. the doctor is giving her some options...but she's definit.. she simply wants to be home and be with her dog and garden... she does not change her mind... she's definite... God's will... let us pray for her. Regards to you and Em.'

Got it. Progenies coming from the same source of genes, sometimes are different. How does one see a tragedy?
or an end to something? how does one treat someone dying?

i may tell the truth. Who knows? I may not too. Who knows?
Tragic really.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Answers Are Too Many To Be Said

i must tell you about this trip

do not ask about
what's next

look behind us they already burned the bridge

look over there
the house where we live
cannot be seen anymore

do not ask where is next

i am not sad
there are so many reasons for excitement

you see
we have no more of that past it is the bridge and the house we do not need them

you see
we have so many places to go the mind is our own companion

creator

and imagination is infinite

do not ask me
where we are going
the answers are too many to be said

RIC S. BASTASA
The Answers....

we raise our eyes to the heavens hoping to find the answers to our nighttime we see the same stars same moon twinkling glistening giving patches of light to our faces

we felt the answers in the depths of that endless darkness in the coming and going of the winds...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ant Empire

on the side of an old mango tree
the ants built their empire
of
soft sand and porous soil where they hid their Queen
where the soldiers
heavily guard
where every worker
brings the food

one night
a heavy rain falls and flood comes and the empire
in an instant
is gone

the Queen is nowhere to be found the soft sands level like a desert the porous soil nothing but mud the soldiers all dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ant Worm Story...

shall i finish the story of the ant and the worm?

at the cliff the worm jumps landing on the arms of the grounded worm and there and then willfully, euphoniously, they both lived happily ever-after

if you only write it yourself i could have read a better ending than what i have lazily imagined.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Apache II Scale

Medical studies have demonstrated that most doctors are overly optimistic when giving prognostic information, that is, they tend to overstate how long the patient might live.

For patients who are critically ill, particularly those in an intensive care unit, there are numerical prognostic scoring systems that are more accurate.

'You still have one week more to go'

That is the best poem so far you have written.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Apology....

i am asking forgiveness for the things that i have not done,

not for the things that i cannot do

neither shall ask an apology for those that i have done

for which i have carefully taken my stand

if i suffer
it does not really matter
upon myself
i stir.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Apple And The Worm

you meet a woman
she wears a smile

and you pass each other slowly by

she looks at you
and she seems to tell you

'\text{i know you}'

you step back and gaze at her slender shoulder

''i know her'you tell yourself
silently

you remember her name but there is no feeling anymore you look back again

she is gone

but it does not really matter the past is rotten

(she is the apple and you were once her worm and someone so nice ate her whole)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Argument

do not ever ask why God should care for you but ask yourself how you can care for God?

To love someone you cannot love
Is the best love that you can give to God

To care for someone whom everyone has abandoned Is the utmost care that you can give to God

For God and Man are One.
You are not just Man.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Arms Of Your Beloved

there is a place up
the house

you had it constructed purposely to see the stars

it has no roof
it is as open as the arms of your beloved

the sky at nighttime so filled with stars!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Arrival

cheat me in all these endeavors forget me tell bad stories
what bad moon is there in my sky write me all the bad poems leave me
ignore who i am
do not include me in the list of your fame and glory
i do not mind
in this world i put a self and whether it makes a difference
it does not matter
i am into this journey and i keep moving nights and days are waves of the seas the scenes change all islands come and go ports are temporary what we do are left behind until the ultimate destination comes before our eyes and then back to square one ground zero
and we have only one denominator for all these

we have arrived safely and sound.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Arrival Of The Sparrows

at first glance they look like stones raining on the fields

my surprise is immense

i am stunned

when i get near ah, these are the small brown sparrows from faraway
landing on the rice-fields of the fields of hay the village sings again!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Arrogance Of Goodness

the irony about money is that when you do not need it they come to you and knock at your door and having been disappointed about life and its moral infirmities you decline it and have your door closed throughout the night of your grief and intolerance.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Arrow The Chair And The Falling Star

the chair is silent it has feet but it does not leave it screeches sometimes because you are heavy with your load (this burden this baggage of the
soul)

the chair faces the sea because your finger points to a falling star and the chair like you
makes a wish

like you
it wishes that the moon may soon have lips
that you can kiss throughout the night

unlike you
the chair never dreams of arms.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Art Of Consonant Cries....

So shall i congratulate myself for finally learning
not to love you?

Does one celebrate the triumph
of pain
the death of love
the entrance to the gate of oblivion?

Must you give me a hug having conquered loneliness?

I have abandoned a place moving towards another abandoned place i have no one there and shall expect no one too

Shall you smile for me now that my prison bars had been cut?

Do not think that i am free like you i live in another prison now to bars not witnessed by you

You call it doors or perhaps fences of my heart where i can jump away
and say
this is another greener pasture of my life

I have yet to name it from the point of view of those eyes that have mastered
the art of consonant cries...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Art Of Giving....

AS stressed the right hand must give without the left hand even knowing when and how
and what...

by said secrecy
giving has become a high form of art the mouth is shut
the eyes are blind and there seems to be a distrust between the left and the right

of course in the middle of these states the heart will always be at the center of our universe
always beating....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Art Of Killing

he never for once imagined that he could kill killing

the simple thought of killing makes him puke

he tried once
killing a fruit fly in a snap reasoning that it infected its dessert
that whole night
he could not sleep
for he was worn with guilt

his brother is a moron
the worst in class
makes most of the fame
by killing
many fruit flies

he is the top of his class but he laughs at him short of respect for his fear of killing

'it is a phobia' his brother says and just like everything else runs berserk and becomes an unreasonable generalization

let me cut this story short he did not make money waddled in poverty and feared the art of killing helpless n& useless in-himself his wife
deserted him and his kids lost that respect because he will never kill a fly again

i do not want to make this story long and agonizing,

know what?
he killed himself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Art Of Living

at the center of my room delight
on fresh roses
like your red lips

on my bed
soft and warm silk blankets strawberry juice on the side table and cherry on the glass

the window is open fresh air from the sea cools the room

silence is gold here and solitude is silver

every moment is a moment
every hour is not a rush but on softer touch

every inch of skin
is a caress
every thought is
beautiful

every reality is true embracing and embraced

this is the art of living every second a relaxation sleep comes on cat's feet like a cloud drifting away peace in the corner privacy in my door

and yes, love is always air-conditioned.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Art Of Love Making...

undress
remove those coverings of restraints undress
wear the skin of desire touch, kiss, rub those bodies of stone and sand hug the world and believe in the innocence of natures colliding inevitably to the silence of ecstasy

spill and simmer savor and favor

taste the bliss
bless this peace

desire culminates at the top of the mountain saying Oh my God How beautiful Life Can be!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Art Of Poetry

To gaze at a river made of time and water and remember Time is another river.
To know we stray like a river and our faces vanish like water.

To feel that waking is another dream that dreams of not dreaming and that the death we fear in our bones is the death that every night we call a dream.

To see in every day and year a symbol of all the days of man and his years, and convert the outrage of the years into a music, a sound, and a symbol.

To see in death a dream, in the sunset a golden sadness such is poetry, humble and immortal, poetry, returning, like dawn and the sunset.

Sometimes at evening there's a face that sees us from the deeps of a mirror.
Art must be that sort of mirror, disclosing to each of us his face.

They say Ulysses, wearied of wonders, wept with love on seeing Ithaca, humble and green. Art is that Ithaca, a green eternity, not wonders.

Art is endless like a river flowing, passing, yet remaining, a mirror to the same inconstant Heraclitus, who is the same and yet another, like the river flowing.

- Jorge Luis Borges

RIC S. BASTASA
The Art Of Scribbling

this is art.
this is not really just a game or a habit.
it is not a barrier not a bar or dart.
this is the art of concealment but which hungers for an opinion. this is the player at the backstage putting a mask, or a thick layer of make up winks, and practices the movement of eyeballs.

this is the art of conveying emotions a little bit exaggerated to get you direct to the point nothing about pegs on square holes.

this is the art of dressing up for the proper occasion. you pay attention to particular details expecting that he can also understand the protest of your color and insignias.

this is what you read and analyze and say perhaps this is it.
that this is what i am and this is all about what happened to me in the past or that the future is already well drawn and with your conclusions, then i am what you think i am.

but this is not what i am.
precisely because this is art.

just a dart.

that is the circle where you throw the dart you did not hit the red zone.

you see, why should you blame me for just being happy for just living a certain moment?

this is art and this is not what i am.

this is the world, this is what we actually are.

RIC S. BASTASA
to scribble
in symbols, some lines drawn by the sharpness of a knife
upon a bark of a tree or this steel chisel
upon a rock

some dashes of my stick
upon the sands
i ponder upon these truths

it is raining again slowly some lines shall be taken away the sea rises and its tongues of waves lick the smooth thigh of the shore romance, and love lines that are dissolving upon the water and the gentle rain that robs me slowly

of what i remember

silence sits upon my lips longer
and i do not wish to drive it away

somehow
it is making me happier

the deep sea settles upon my forehead sinks there like a boat where all the passengers scream
only for a while only to be swallowed whole
by that big mouth
of emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Artificial And The Real

In this world, the artificial and the Real mix, and sometimes it is hard To distinguish one from the other,

So here is the gauge:

The artificial man does not bleed,
The real man does,
The real man is not afraid to love,
The artificial does not

The real flower has a dew and Can be torn apart and gives off a scent The artificial flower gives a blank Stare at you
And there is no question thrown
Away

The plastic, the wax, the foam,
The flesh, the blood, the sweat,

The dust, the stiffness, the wires
The feeling, the softness, the veins

But you must beware, I may feel you And you may feel me, but I can still

Be not real, but artificial in some subtle Sense, in some secret ways, so what is

The real gauge this time? It is just you, Be real yourself, and let them be, whatever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Artist....

she cries,
she wants to talk,
she wants him to listen

' i am unhappy' she tells him, she wipes her tears
her cheeks are red
she bursts

'and so are the millions of us! ! ' he shouts at her she leaves her he drinks himself to death the other woman who really loves him comes and joins with him

now they are talking.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Artists Of The World.....

word weavers history reveals
pluck-out pair of
eyes

bleeding hands
stigmatic

trembling fingers home horrors

what a bleak future
what anguish

yet how sweet sounding what tapestry is this

painter of woes
sculptor of pains

dreamer of nightmares singer of sins....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Artists.....

the role of a true artist is to put order to the messy state of things chopped lines are interconnected again colors are categorized to a harmonious blending a room of scattered old and dirty clothes bedsheets in disarray pillows on the floor
d paper scratches and pens and ink spilled the artist picks them all up and puts them properly back to the places where they must be

for at the beginning there was an order of perfection but then this universe bangs itself against a black space of a wall and goes into an accelerated entropy a scattering, a chaos pursuing upon another chaos expanding litters of planets and stars and God the Artist gathers them all into One Harmony, the Silenced Storm, the Wellness and Wholeness of These All

We are all these Artists, God's Children looking for Peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Asker...

i hear the sounds of engines running the road, and then the children holding hands lead by the mother there are screeches of brakes a busy street, a mob of people an entrance to the mall filled with so many people,
i see a taxi unloading passengers i chance upon a falling rain and two lovers running for shelter blinking lights against a dark night smoke from the lips of waiters clicking high heels of women on shiny tiles,

how can i just be another disinterested onlooker? how can i seal my ears and live a world where i am just the only occupant?

how can i cease to be this one kind of child asking so many questions?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Assurance

worry not Uncle Miguel
despite the odds
whatever those be despite the heaviness of the inevitable goodbye
i still know how to fly

for my heart has wings and i will always not forget those flights of days gone by

RIC S. BASTASA
The Atom In You

This is a vowel
And this a consonant

A sound is made
A poem is born
And prose propagates like the people of the earth

This is sand and lime from where we make A brick that builds the house of stone and palaces of kings

This is you,
And this is the atom that makes every you

It is from this where humanity must grow to become Your world

For centuries this had always been you all the chromosomal evidence Point to you, this is you from where the whole universe comes

So please do not deny it, you are the atom the source of all these

The chaos and the peace, the solitude and loneliness, the joys and sorrows, All these come from you. Stare, some more, take a closer look, it is indeed you.

I see. You are silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Avid Reader

i guess, if she is true, she will tell me, that i what i write is a strange black bird looking for a white home along the olive green reeds thriving on the mirror pond wanting to be a bluish sky not so blue but a little shade of pale embarrassed kid having taken the bite of a cake
prohibited by mom,

sometimes i think
is she after my body or the body of the poem?
my conceit again hovers on the mountain tops on cliffs
without trees

what i think is that we all somehow want to be read even if not understood for what use is a poem or a word when there is no one alive in this abandoned abalone
world?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Back View

I walk around an oval path unloading all thoughts
to the spiral winds

from a distance i see an man with a faded blue coat and a boy beside him wearing a straw hat

they are watching a herd of
water
buffaloes grazing on a stretch of grass

the morning is calm and
cold

a cable wire connects two long poles
running above the man and
and the boy

on the cable wire is a white dove
perching

I walk around the oval
ground
and no one is taking the walk with
me
this early morning

from a distance i am indifferent
seeing
only
the back view of
of things

RIC S. BASTASA
he was not fully briefed about the harshness of the situation arriving in Sampurna the search lights roamed like basins the old woman like the rest jumped over the boat the two remaining boatmen have to pull the nets and pretend that they are all fishermen
meanwhile he vomited and vomited it was cold and dark and everything that they know was fear and the uncertainty of it all made them shiver to the idea that at that night they would all be shot and simply be buried in the sea he regretted leaving Gulayon where life is free and not as miserable as they met their fate there

the religious women called for all the names of the saints santiago, santa maria, san gabriel, san antonio santa felomina

the old man named Toreno who had lost faith despite the pain as he was shot on his leg laughed at all these saints saying, ' mention some more ladies, how can you keep them all inside this sack? '

it was horrible, it was so horrible when he told me about this he was crying

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bad Hostess...

she says
come early
we miss you
we just arrive
from las vegas

asap

7: 30 pm dinner starts conversations
roll
like marbles
or pins

and she says
i remember when you were still so young you and your mom slept in our ancestral house
you were so smart articulate

and you
called me
dumb.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bad Mouthing....

the president has found his new tool to demonstrate his love of his country and his people

shaming those who are corrupt
in public saying what he feels at the moment
no holds bar.

he is into war against terror
he is into the killing fields
his soldiers in rampage against the terrorists

those who are not performing receives the bad mouthing those who pretend to be clean

shall get the worst
of him

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bad Reality

i spit out the last words

life is unfair
this is a reality that is clear a number of hands take out the sunglasses from their eyes

they look at each other now and they shake their heads some say they all work hard for it and now they must claim their just share others claim their ancestors die at an early age and they must reap the fruits of their labor i spit out the words again life is never fair

and that is very very clear someone cannot bear it break into sobs and run for the rest of her life another nervous breakdown i count

for another unbeliever
but that is how clearly i see this matter

the unjust wins
the cruel ones thrive
the greedy have more the oppressor gets them all there is a movie with a bad ending the killer is set free and the innocent gets inside for a fee

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bad, The Worse And The Worst

THE bad has arrived how can i refuse it? Then it gets worse,
i have no cure for it,
and then
it goes worst,
it wants to eat me
but i stay cool
there is no reason to panic

i hold on to the arms
of reason

the bad is temporary just like the worse
the worst is simply the symptom that bad is about end

when they leave
they leave together

so i just sit there fan myself
and do not mind about
all of them
at all

they are bad anyway
and do not deserve my attention

in that room
i only prepare a cup of vanilla
ice cream
for myself
having traveled most with distances multiplying upon itself like a replicating virus, one reaps the fruits of the silences of distances
the wisdom of the road that is never satisfied upon its length long longing
for rest
like a baggage that you leave upon the road asking if somebody is dishonest to keep it up for good not revealing the cruelty of ownership to anyone who comes back and claims to be the
it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bags

the three bags are standing near the door of our room waiting they are full of clothes they are anxious what will follow next the clothes are tired they want to go back to the cabinets and sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bamboo Fence

my view
is divided between the rotten bamboo
fence
and the blue sea

on top of coconut trees
are black crows stopping
for rest

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bamboo Tree Poem

see the coming of the wind from the prairies see how it is playing with the leaves of the bamboo tree see how a bamboo leaf falls

to the ground
withered by the sun
and now flip-flopping like an Olympic diver

see how it finally touches the womb of the earth silently it lies there soundlessly it appears like any other leaf beside a woman now
sleeping

RIC S. BASTASA
The Banana Cake

you bake so well
my dear

the banana cake
is just perfect for me

the flavor is so banana and the texture
so soft to my palate

it is still hot and i do not like to take the slice

i like it colder my dear like my dream of ice last night i like this black coffee too harsh like my dream of winter last night now it is time

give me the best slice for i am leaving

RIC S. BASTASA
The Banana Vender In Ho Chi Minh

as i clicked the camera she shies away taking away all her bananas

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bananas Of Catalina...

the bananas of Catalina
do not have fruits the winds here are strong and the trees all have fallen
to the ground

the bananas of Catalina
still do not have fruits but always
mind you always they have always been strong...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Banquet For The Spectator

the table is abundant like life, but to be happy i eat nothing,

i watch them all
fill their appetites

after this banquet
i ask them to take away all that is unconsumed.

when the table is empty what i have is full satisfaction of course, i never tell them i am polite.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Barking Dog Inside Your Mind

it must be noisy
inside your mind
as you complain about the barking dog barking all day long in your lifetime,

and it must be
also unfair if
as you feel it,
you are always the wrong tree
being barked
at,

so you are the tree wronged
and i, this human being writing
some lines for
a conversation,
shall always be
that barking dog
inside your
mind.

let us talk
let us exchange places, or let us
settle for a little
compromise,
there is no dog,
and there is no
wrong tree,

on the very first day next year
at the very first hour,
let us talk,
as new friends,
let us begin again
as strangers
in a new place
wanting to know what each street is named after.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Barking Dog On The Wall Of The Room

turn your hand side wise and let its shadow be cast against the wall of your room ahead is the light of the bulb
and again to please yourself and be a child again you try to find that barking dog in deeper silence in the shadows of the walls

RIC S. BASTASA
The Barking Dogs Of Katipunan House

after a choir of cicada voices rising into the open sky
what you hear next early this morning is the loud barking of dogs announcing to your dislike the arrival of a guest for whom you are not interested as you are engrossed grossly in another not so well fine-tuned poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beware the barreness of a busy life.
(Socrates)

bored as barren
a body that is bone-dry,
a walk in the desert,

dry as dust,
moistureless existence
lips parched,
a thirsty soul,
a life waterless

busy, busy, busy,
that is what you are.

beware, for soon
in seeking life
busy, busy, busy,
you lose it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Barrio In The South

the green waters rise to rinse the roots of the coconut trees

the lilies float
the ripples carry them to a joyful journey to the banks of the river where the children play this is the place that you miss an island a hut a river the peace and quiet of the ipil-ipil leaves showering when the wind passes

RIC S. BASTASA
The Basic Law Of Survival

when you are so hungry hungrier than a dog who cares about the cleanliness of the food that is available for your taking?

when you are too tired you do not mind what place is it that sleep takes you you just dropp dead
and snore

in the most basic instincts man can be anything in the worst form of our emptiness whatever is it that fills us for the meantime we shall take in

we do not bother if it comes from God anymore heaven and hell become nothing in the making it is the basic law of survival religion, morality, ethical standards do not matter.

RIC S. BASTASA
he runs
out of luck
whatever he touches
turns into
nothing
she looks at those who also runs
out of luck
and she smiles
i had it all when i was young and still have it when i have become older
numbed,
it does not affect her anymore
she dismisses luck
she needs none of
them,
she is on her own now
and she
advises him too well what we need says she are so simple
we breathe
and so we live.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Basics Of The Legal Self

i enter a room
and discuss
law

there is nothing
there
except law

no one sees me
except law

no one amazes me
except law

and everyone thinks that all my nerves
and flesh and bones
and even my organ of reproduction are nothing but laws

what they see is only the hard core of myself the carapace of
of a blue crab
and that i must have loved only sand
and the waves that constantly erase what law has written

they want to find if i have a heart

someone finally asks if i have any and where must have i placed it hoping to find the soft part of my turgid
existence

it makes me
egoistic at times when questions like these are asked

i've lost my ego a long long time ago
and i lost it when poetry was born

i do not know exactly when but even if by chance a memorandum shall tell me

how can i ever tell you?

what you shall see perhaps is a spatter of water coming from a broken
bowl of glass

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bathroom Door

this early morning
you are depressed
you face the mirror when she left
and you tell yourself this cannot be true
you rehearsed yourself
again
to a line that you have long wanted to say
years back
but just the same
you fall short of the courage that all gentlemen are said to still posses
you wash your face
with a handful of cold water and slap your cheek with that usual perfume that makes her love you more

you forget the lines and promise yourself to say it some other time you give the mirror
your silly grin
and leave the bathroom half-open.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bearable State Of Being

laughter is a mask.
the louder it is, the more colorful.

wholesome conversations too. And social concerns, like the way you tell them
that you are
sad about the sadness of others

we show them these masks. We step out and mingle.

we get tired often
and fear that we soon shall forget our names

so we go back to a room where we are true and comfortable with our real nature

we take out the mask and touch our faces

still smooth and soft the bones in our jaws still strong,
the hideous still
bearable.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beautiful Bird On A Cage

a beautiful bird is trapped

a boy transports
it in a cage
in their house in the village the bird is asking some questions:

what crime have i committed to deserve this sentence? :
is flying a crime?
little boy, do you really need to keep beauty
inside your cage?

but the boy of course
in his youthfulness
does not care

he does not understand his parents have not given him the need to understand all these his parents too do not understand what flight is what rights are what beauty is what cages are

and so life goes on and on with birds inside a cage boys devising traps house having cages by their windows parents proud of their boys and boys watching the sadness of birds
every morning
in the little village
The Beautiful Creases

i tried to look at the corners of my
 past,

and just like the present there are some creases there of life's fabrics

and you predicted well about what i did and what i will do i am consistent

 i do not want to change anything the creases of the fabrics are beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beautiful Flower

there is a very beautiful
flower
in the garden of life

it is admired by many and so even before it wilted someone plucked it so suddenly

RIC S. BASTASA
'you do not touch
the one you love,'
the soothsayer
tells him, 'you will turn into a snake
and you cannot help but bite love to death'.

'but why me' he asks
and the soothsayer closed
his eyes
touched the magic ball
again
and from there had
this to say
'you are designed to suffer
because your have a beautiful soul'.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beautiful Soul.....(Revised)

'you do not touch
the one you love, '
the soothsayer
tells him, 'you will
turn into a snake
and you cannot help
but bite love to
death'.

'but why me? ' he asks
and the soothsayer closed
his eyes
touched the magic ball
again
and from there had
this to say

'you are designed to
suffer
because you have
a beautiful soul'.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beauty Conscious Neighbor Of Mine

She walks slowly to the coffin Bends a little and has closely seen

The dead woman’s face Her neighbor for 360 days

Then she goes back to her Seat beside me, and fans her hair

’Closer’, she whispers to my ear “she needs a good make-up, dear”

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beauty In You

slowly the beauty in you unfolds like the petals of a rose, in slow motion unfolding on screen,

not your flat nose, for it will always be flat despite the passing of the years,

my dear, it is your kind heart, they have not seen it yet, it is your wisdom, growing deep in the soil,
like roots.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beauty Of Decency

it is when you bare it tall that i do not see anything
anymore

and so i go back to your way of teasing my senses piece by piece as you put again the puzzle back like a tree putting back its leaves

regaining its crown back to its beauty of being dressed

as decent as hills being dressed to the regal greenness of grass

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beauty Of Its Unique Design

did i not tell you that sadness is beautiful too? that beauty is like a fan with many blades wide and long and makes you refreshed in humid places like
us?

sometimes if you note,
we are simply places, not people, simply numbers, not humans by all means, do not take pride of your fullness

for soon, you will be emptied still like an empty shell you too shall keep a song like an empty heart, you too shall fill it with sadness which, i must not lament,
has its own
innate beauty too

they have their own beautiful stories
to tell
that only if you listen, will amaze you to no end there are too,

empty hearts and empty people, who by their own merit, and style and personal touch are still imbued with beauty and grace

there are empty shells and yet possess still the beauty of its unique design holder of songs still if you hold them closer to
your ears

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
The Beauty Of My Own Silence.....

i am an addict
to my own love for
you
and you are there
so cruel
unaffected and so i have voluntarily
confessed to the persons who love me
that i urgently need a rehabilitation

that night he said
to me and i kept my gaze to the moon and the stars and has since then kept the beauty of my own silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beauty That Resides In Sadness

it is with great sadness that i write
you a letter,
everything in it is all about sadness it is not just about us
or you,
it is about the whole massive humanity that is never drowned with sadness but struggles in that ocean of choices and so alone amidst the
storms and the other survivors

it is with great sadness that we gather here and begin to hear the sounds of all these forms and shapes and colors of
sadness

i listen to you on an impromptu and you listen to me with all patience and with all sadness we embrace ourselves share sadness with hugs and
at the end
we are filled with so much beauty feeling so beautiful with these massive sadness that never leaves us free

we are bound, and yet when we face ourselves in the mirror of
ourselves
my goodness, we are so
beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bed

the bed is all that matters now it has become the central solution to all the problems of the house

I agree with Freud after all he made sense for all those troubling years of his lifetime that to all these marital misunderstandings the bed has always been the solution why do wives leave their husbands?

simply because of the unused bed where time has been spent mostly for sleeping now, i have felt what father used to confide that the bed, yes the bed, is always the solution even when both of them are nearing their 60s and father did all the bed grooming at my age now i must agree i must say i completely agree we always do it on the bed and the problem is solved. yes, we do the serious talking there.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bee And The Rose....

i may have misled the rose to think that it can sing well
like
a bluebird

i pity her with the loss of her thorns

it sings now and leaves wilt prematurely

it is all my fault
how flowers hate themselves
now

someone's got to help take the rose from this misfortune

let the bee come let it tell her the fate of bluebirds....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bees And The Flowers

done
the flowers bloom
and then wilt

nothing happens
in between

t he bees fly
and hover in between the flowers that bloom

and wilt

again there is no word because nothing really does happen in between the flowers bloom

& the bees fly away and then the flowers that bloom that wilt

and nothing ever happens in between the flowers and the bees

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bees Cannot Live Without The Flowers

in her bosom
the buds are coming out

she nips them all self-righteous woman

the irony of course is when she looks for bees missing their stings for she loves the pain

rather than the
joy of unfolding

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beggar

i look at you
and i see a beautiful world it is your soft wind that makes my heart soar to the sky

i feel like a kite connected to your hand

i am alive then until you cut the cord

and i flip-flop in my own speechless air

someone cries for help for mercy
but then

you are gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beggar Of The Spiritual

my body is telling me something i ignore it
it screams on the street i am not affected people who hear and say something about a complaining body
do not influence me
i am telling my body that i hear it completely and by saying so i assure it that i am not ignoring it and it demands that i do something about a neglect but i am not into this anymore i am not in the mood for a physical cure that realm of the epidermal sphere
i am into something more the parallel divine sphere that i have not spoken to
for years
as it is ignoring me like i have the leprosy of the spirit i am begging and kneeling before it
it is getting even it is still ignoring me but i am not stopping
i am
and will always be unhappy if i cannot have it finally when the door is opened
and then
i am in
at the end

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beginning Of Philosophy

i agree
and that will be completely that the beginning of philosophy is wonder,

that the beginning of wisdom is not the fear of God but love

that the beginning of poetry is feeling
one that you cannot speak about frontally or directly because what is obvious loses the meaning of its truth

that what i feel sometimes may all be too disturbing to you and so here i am in the world of metaphors masking

if only to reveal the true face of
myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beginning Of Understanding

at a certain point when you begin to doubt every word that i say i start to believe that you are beginning to believe me to understand what could have been understood from the point of doubt you ask what if this is true and what if this is not possibilities are beginnings i begin to believe you if you only know that the foundation of everything is doubt a la Descartes

to the conclusion that you the doubter exist
and that is the most certain thing possible under the heavy clouds of doubts.

i think i doubt, therefore i think the doubter exists.
it is the mind after all making a mind unto itself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beginning Of Understanding....

it is not the head
do not be misled
it is not the finer thoughts but the shady ones where you must find comfort and it is not
in those neurons of convoluted matter
that will make the finest being in you than the rest of this ocean
of humanity

rest a little do not think unload what bias of thoughts are there be renewed,
anew

feel the coolness of the tree listen to the song of the sea breeze
lay your head on the breasts
of this earth
it is where the heart is.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beginning Of Wisdom

the beginning of wisdom
the theologians keep saying is the fear of God i am afraid it is not at all true for why should i fear my beloved?
why should i be afraid of my father?
why should i be dumb before him?
the great Plato says the beginning of wisdom is the acceptance that i do not know anything at all inside the cave i am but a shadow searching to the end of the tunnel where the exit shows the flaming light and so here i am knowing none and feeling so near to God Thy will be done for I, this human, knows at all none.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beginning...

we try to link drinking coconut wine with merry making specifically, alcohol has a way of numbing sorrow and making happiness sprout like mongo seeds from the sack cloth wet with water it will be cold but the warmth in our smiles shall start the fire what next can we do when sorrow leaves us?
just say it, perhaps i may oblige for like you i am in deep mourning for i have lost a part of me many years ago, sort of saying, sentimentally that i am incomplete and hopefully after this drink and another drink you may see that i am so empty and needs to be filled again

do not kiss me yet, my mouth is full.

RIC S. BASTASA
...and there
the danger lies,

when you cannot believe in me when i cannot too believe in myself anymore,

i happened. I am glad, i did not pack
up and leave,

i keep myself
even in my own disbelief, as you left me
for another, i still keep myself, even if i cannot believe in me

anymore, ....

i do not have any other, if i lose myself,
i have nothing.

this is faith.
To keep this self,
in its lowest ebb.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Beliefs Of The Masses

All these have become monuments Roads always taken and have become so evident All the while the masses believe that
On this obvious evidence No one shall be lost no one shall have doubts These structures of concrete White paint and towers
There is no more fresh wind That roam freely on my face The birds have no more wings
The flowers do not bloom Pavements smooth and sliding It is not the road I am taking I like this one. Grassy, muddy, There are no footsteps yet Except mine, I pass this way I do not live here. I do not sleep here.
There are no certainties. This is the one.
Let me go then, let me kiss this holy ground.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Actress

she stares at her trophy
the statue of a naked
man
proclaiming her genius

around her are the news papers where the best about her are written by critics of her times

her head is bloated
and painful

she feels it now once achieved it becomes nothing at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Beginning

the time for losing is not a waste of time the time for rethinking is a chance for finding what you have once written you read again

there will be changes something shall be erased sometimes you pretend that there is Nothing

Only to find what Everything means what Someone really is Churches fall into shatters Governments are not that kind

Schools perhaps have mis-educated a lot of us

We do not exist for the work alone Or the money

We exist for the breathing and the walking and the daily thinking

We perhaps must have miscalculated us Our Potentials overlooked

Our Talents and Time all wasted We perhaps have not known what Us mean

There is a time to erase and undo This is the time to Unload and Delete Tomorrow morning after a Nigh's Good Sleep
We go back to the Basics

It is the Waking first and then The Breathing

Then everything shall be new Without any name at all.

That i think must be the Best Beginning.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Competition

be gentle like the morning sun just shine

don’t bother
about the other creatures of this vast universe mind yourself

compete with yourself if it is necessary compare yourself to yourself rise from your old self and be the best that you can be on that basis alone let the rest take their own quest for like you they have to fight their own battles too for like you their quest for perfection is a fight against annihilation for like you they carve their own future too from the sands of time till the explosion of another star this big bang! this ning nang nang!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Lines Must Not End In Suicide...A Wish

those ahead of us
devotees of the craft have arrived at the conclusion that the best lines must end in a suicide,

those that remained have always prayed for them and for all of us still in this usual everyday of struggle, we wish we pray keep us away from the best lines give us the wisdom of the divine verses the freshness of life

the helplessness of the baby waking up and then crying for help always wanting of affection our poems must yield to the pink cheeks of youth

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Of Me I Still Forego

this thing called love how i look at things above this thing called emotion how did i believe in a potion?
i have tried to be the best of what i can be to you but it is still all a pest
the best of me i still forego.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Part Of The Afternoon

the best part in the afternoon is what i have just seen two white doves

rubbing their beaks on top of the other

i must have disturbed
them

i am lonely
and they fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Picture At The Reunion

the best picture I've seen this Christmas is that one

taken at the beach for my four beautiful nieces one in yellow with two dimples

the other one in
white
with freely blown
black hair

the other two are growing up fast anticipating what we once had

happy moments
at the sea
wanting it all to be endless
and so free.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Poems I Have Read

click image for more

the best poems i have read have been too instructional on the road it says: do not enter no u-turn pedestrians crossing one way no left turn at the door of the newly weds on their honeymoon:

do not disturb

and in my house when you enter:
you are welcome

i guess it is all there is on these poetics i have tried soaring myself to the skies pretending to be a bird painted sunlight carefully with the color and flavor of my words it did work for a while sending some sensations to my heart it did not last long: i am looking for some doctor's prescriptions

Rx: poetry
one capsule,3x a day after breakfast

no alcohol
just plain water

to my failing health it was the best

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
The Best Teacher

the best teacher is the midwife

she helps you give birth to ideas

she eases the pain
she wipes the blood
she takes the baby
from you
yet you know that everything is safe and sound you hear you baby cry as she raises him

invertedly up against the sky

then she leaves in tiptoeing silence as you sleep soundly again closing your eyes for more sweet dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Time

six p.m. is the best time to find you, when you sit upon a fallen tree

drifting upon the oceans of your self-pity,

six p.m. is my best time too to feed myself

with hope, when the rest of you are inching steps

towards the

Dipolog cemetery

the people there are zombies walking to and fro

like metallic pendulums with their bob heads

unwavering for the possibilities of life's

compromises

RIC S. BASTASA
The Best Way To Be

you're correct
philosophically

the best way is just
'to be'

that is how we are taught how we think we thought that 'to be' is inevitable a clear and calm eye of the pebble, as he sees it and holds it with the false warmth of his hand

lacking the ardor
closing the door.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bickerings Are Over: A Forecast

rocks upon rocks and mountains upon mountains of rocks and heaps of sand upon heaps of sand, red blood spilling on this soil, and bodies scattered along the parths, and too much writings of hate on the
walls,

the white horse has been sent and the light from the great sun has penetrated every heart

now in the state of grace each man shall be contented and silenced.

the weather is fine and there is food for all on the table.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Big And Empty House...

when you arrive
from church in your usual everning
mass

the dogs of this house meet you with all
bravura
wagging their tails jumping and dancing and there is one
the smallest of them all which spins like a top

i watch these things happen and i come to grips with some reasons for
living

happiness takes its form in so many shapes

one has simply to discern from everyday
living

even from dancing dogs and wagging tails
in a big and empty house.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Big C

those who fear it cannot call it by its own name

big C for cancer, but cancer is cancer
no more no less
depends on what stage
then you are taken as the next
victim by an old expert culprit
so unforgiving
mercilessly taking the lives of those
destined to die

cancer is cancer
no more no less

a friend of mine dies today of cancer of the liver.

period. I say another prayer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Big Problem....

There is this BIG PROBLEM
WE decided not to talk about it We think that that problem must solve itself Auto-resolution

So day and night the problem stays there Like a drunkard in the room Vomiting
To every nook of the house
The house
That smells like fucking Shit

But that problem is never considered a problem
There is a room for it to stay And it can stay
It cannot consume us
It has no mouth and so it has no teeth
It has no tongue it cannot say a word It stays there like a piece of art And we begin to appreciate it Like a piece of rock Unchanged in the middle of the living room We eat lunch there
They prepare nice dinners
We drink red wine
We munch chocolates
And sweet berries
The problem stays but it cannot nag us Because we can pretend That it is a brother
That we cannot junk but only love And keep as part of the Company

There is still this problem
And it did not solve itself We live by this problem and this problem lives with us Symbiosis
And so now
What is the problem? Is this a problem after all these years?
It is not anymore
We have learned that it is not a problem anymore We die soon
And it shall perhaps disappear Shall it weep over our departure?
That is its problem.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bikini Principle...

the secret of being readable lies

in the principle of a bikini

keep it
hide only what is important use little. remember time is precious

bask your body upon a sunny day.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bird And Its Nest

there is no bird
that spends its lifetime in a nest

there is no nest made of concrete

the fledglings look forward to the pain of its first wing there is always the first push and the fall

and there is the innate way of learning how to fly

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bird In A Cage

a bird inside a cage sings of freedom
a cage tied to a wall dreams of resurrection direct to heaven
with lines from a halo inside a blue bird with big blue wings
flying away
from here.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bird In The Golden Cage

as i watch the bluebird inside its golden cage i am somehow carried by mysterious
 pity

you hear it sing a very sad song you hear it making a plea that you open the lock of its door so it can fly away

touched i opened it so it may use its wings but then this is the sadder part it has come back asking for grains inside my hands now it is making another plea to open the door of the cage so she can sleep back soundly than it used to before

ahh, look what habits are formed by the prisons of our lives

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bird That Flies Away Without Having To Return Back To Where It Once Stopped what i have

i already have and i have never asked for more because i always tell myself: what for?

i am not that old
to surrender
i still have tight skin on my forehead
my cheeks still display the gold in sunshine my feet are still agile like the gazelles that i often dream
my hands still long for a curved body
to be traced like a map
to my fingers still looking for new destinations

what i have i keep
for now
what you give
i may refuse since i always tell myself: what for?

it is the mind that keeps an illusion
that this body still roars like a lion
and loves like
a dog.
i have other dreams
though
a bird that flies
away
without having to return back
from where it stopped.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birds

the birds, sparrows and robins and some herons are flying on the blue sky you watch them
a robin comes near you and makes a stare
the white heron glides past your face and flies away without much ado a sparrow feeds on your palm and after all the grains are consumed it goes its way north and finally the kingfisher which is late tries to give you its catch, a small fish.

you see the difference
and then you go south,
i mean, the difference,
towards another direction, that one that gives and not the one that takes,
the one that thinks about others
and not more about oneself.

you are supposed to be that a giver not a taker.
one bird has shown you
with a very small fish and that was enough to feed you in another long and lonely journey: south.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birds And The Worrier

it is raining and as usual the worrier is worried about the birds they have no house of their own and they may die in the cold she says unknown to her the birds are happier flying in the rain chirping and catching all the prey that are too worried about where to stay

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birds Are Not Singing

it is nighttime
that is why

the moon is full
and the stars
are brighter as ever

the clouds are thin
as a quick brush of the Chinese painter

the temple is empty and the candles are turned off by the wind from
the sea

the birds with their
dreams
do not sing
the usual sad songs
that you hear

now it is you who must listen to the songs of
solitude

that silence that dances
the classical ballet

that silence that anchors the boat
by the side of your lovely island

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birds Are Returning Home

some birds who migrated last season to places that i do not really know come back to the yard of the house with a new song as i feed them again with the same rice grains and same bland water from the old well.

and then i remember home, the family, a brother, a foe, and my best friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birds Chattering Inside Your Mouth...

dic the birds in your mouth chatter, one bird has blue feathers and it makes the sweetest song, the white bird keeps mum over all these caged noise, perhaps it understands the language
of the soul,
there is a brick red sparrow looking out the window it is speaking in tongues as i listen attentively and watch all these within the fences of your face i feel, but i have to be honest there is nothing that i understand,
i do not wish to
i have had enough, of those blue, red, and white birds.

but they must all agree that it is not the song not their songs, but their common cage, for not one of them has uttered the nicest word in the history of captives,

freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birds In Some Angry People

there is a nice irony in leaving on top of a cliff where there is no other choice you can kick someone out whom you have not thought of as having wings and so happily shall it fly away!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birds In The Air

DID they not tell you about their lightness?
oh, must you forget that their beaks and feathers are designed for wordless existence?
i may figure it out
on their songs
their freedom

Did you not read
that the sing because they have their own songs?
It must follow that they have to fly because they have their wings
otherwise
what is lightness for what use are feathers their beaks and claws

RIC S. BASTASA
they've been under your care for years you've done much and then the ripe time comes for them to be set free

oh, these birds, they belong to the air and you watch them fly away somehow you cried like a child it is not the parting which is fatal if they only knew how as a child you wish upon a star to be like them someday

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birth Of Another Seed (Revised)

a bud sighs
throws a question into the air

there is no
answer

the bud turns
into a flower

the air has no answer to the question that
was thrown to
it

the flower wilts
and then the air
has come up with an
answer

which the soil now
receives as it lulls
the birth
of another seed....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birth Of Another Seed......

a bud sighs
throws a question into
the air

there is no
answer

the bud turns
into a flower

the air has
no answer to the
question that
was thrown to
it

the flower wilts
and then the air
has come up with an
answer

which the soil now
receives as i lulls
the birth
of another seed....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Birth Of The Yellow Butterfly

on the gumamela leaf the small cocoon hangs there for days and
you wait for the usual surprise in this garden

it wriggles out and pulls itself from a tight house

it holds itself at the tip of the leaf and gets a fan from
the wind and then
stretches itself
and spreads its wings and finally flies away

how beautiful
to see
the birth of another yellow butterfly

regally erect and flutters from flower
to flower like she were a princess in her green castle

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bitch

the white dog
with a brown spot on its right eye sleeps comfortably
on my bed
trusting that i shall never betray it

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bitter Art...

it was the lesson learned while fishing for catfish on the river in that small creek mossy, and covered with some coconut leaves rotten
where the catfish liked to swim and be caught
for the divine purpose of lunch for the poor,

i have learned the bitter art of waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bitterness Of Rain

making love makes us wet all over you sleep because you are exhausted

i can't
the ceiling is pouring
rain

and i taste a dropp of rain inside my tongue
it is bitter.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black And White Movement

in the academe
i see faces and bodies which are either black or white

in a sense what political monotony is
this?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Bird

the black bird flies and loses itself in the darkness of the night
not stopping going beyond
fog
wanting to find the star tired it stops for rest on top of the highest cliff looking the plains below house like dots

alone
and lonely perhaps but strong and determined tonight it starts again its journey
to nowhere

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Bird Is Flying Alone Beyond The Horizon

i am naked before you and i am telling you you are my only happiness my hands are empty
my head is light there no chains on my feet i smell dust
i have nothing to lose
i am free and i could all be yours only if you understand

sleep now do not mind me i accept this nobody and this no one. good night. I will be gone and you shall still be in the arms of your own dreams.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Bird On The Cable Wire

there is this one bird on the cable
wire connecting two distant
posts

behind is the sun rising like a cape of so much light below are the green fields of rice in rectangles

it is the first day of October and not so cold yet

the path that i am taking stretches kilometers

tall grasses in random lines are here beside me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Bird That Keeps On Flying

the black bird
keeps on flying over my head

its wing tips
touch my hair

the black bird
weeps
and my mind
cannot ignore
it

it is seeing you
again
and it does not know
what to do
with its beak

it wants to kiss you but your eyes are angry
it wants to land over
your hair
but they are hard as wires

the black bird
has no nest for its eggs
you never mind it
your mind
thinks always of that white bird
in the sky

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Bird Winging Its Way Inward

that early morning
the door opens and you hear the rush of steps going out of the house
the gate opens and closes once again
and you
find yourself enclosed in your freedom of thought again
transforms into a black bird stretching its wings to the breasts of dawn
and then
without so much hesitation fly away again.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Bird...

it was her black bird first that saw and i never stopped thinking since then figuring what is the meaning of having those black wings flying
and to where is this direction heading?

from my mouth is borne the blackbird bearing my own name at the tip of its beak
and it is flying now too low to touch the needles of the pines do you not see that it is tired and wants to hover on one of those twigs?

how can you relate to blackbirds? they grown from our throats and comes out from our lips
and they keep on flying wishing you can keep it flying still higher and higher until you finally give up and tell the truth about its flesh and bones until you remove all its black feathers and burn all them for the gods to smell.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Box

it is there, i know, it has always been there, and will always be there, even if i shy away from its darkness, always, i find myself taking the steps towards its oblong door, i promise myself, and keep more promises, attuned, the promises do not mean a thing,
and now i am inside this black box again, the walls are silent like the starless sky, the floors are ready to receive me back to their feet, i lie on the bed of desire, on the mattress of emptiness, i spit, and i spit on my face, it does not matter now, there is no trace of sleep, there is only the stare, but i do not have the fear anymore, the confrontation is serious, i sin, and i must sin responsibly. i hug my own body, and i kiss my face, the mirror that faces me understands all these, and now, it smiles, and goes back to the silence that accepts. I have dues to pay.
My pocket is ready to empty its body.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Butterfly....

the black butterfly
has again entered my window circling around the room of this old house

as i sit idly on a chair facing the garden

it flutters and then lands on my hair

and which as usual i do not really mind to catch it is not my cup of tea

any preconceived cruelty to put it on a frame is out of the question

i know what it does best:
to mystify a believer of an incoming tragedy

i put upon my eyes the looks of numbness
and then a little gaze of compassion

it leaves without anything
changed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Crow Flies Away

From a leafless siniguelas tree
The black crow flies away Then the swaying ends
As the rain begins to fall

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Crow In You

soon you shall learn the trick, such magical skill picking a stone hiding it behind your skirt and then coming up with a white lily, and hiding it again inside your pocket and from behind you comes a black crow
and you want to end it there and you leave like a helpless kid unable to retrieve that stone from the crow that replaces you on stage saying it is really you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Dog

early morning when the door of the house is finally opened the black dog enters missing his master
the owner of the door of the house it wants to speak but since it has no power over the words it simply wags its tail puts his head on the lap of the master and from this gesture
one can see
that everything is well said by it...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Hooded Man

the black hooded man sometimes comes and you face him with a stare he nods down and looks at the list your name is not yet there and you ask

why?

he says it is simply written

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Parasols...

the coming of the rain is so sudden

but they are ready somehow

in that silent place of green grasses

above them she watches the

openings of black parasols

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Rose

from a crevice of a rock a black rose grows

it blooms on dark dreams its petals are the ones that you do not ordinarily see in the morning

the sun sometimes pays attention to its being unusual not being just any rose in the garden

it gives it more light hoping that someday it may become white

the black rose is faithful until it wilted

the dews miss it: the black rose is true to its nature.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Stone Of My Being

i never want to disregard this stone it is shiny and too black for a stone somehow and no one wonders how come i am keeping it and hiding it as a gem you may believe that it isn't but it shines and it is black as ever it is comforting my palm keeping the lines there at course like the orbits of the planets this is the stone of my being it keeps me sane
it makes all the bones connected to one another it makes me whole again and so back to it i never want to disregard this it is shiny and blacker than any of my sad nights it makes me feel that i have somebody at hand i know it deludes me but it does not matter
no one wonders anyway
if i am still sane.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Black Stool

is the symbol of that ending you smile because now you know something it is sure
it is sure
you tell yourself the doubter now you are sure
and you stop talking.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blackbird

the black bird knows
places
it has flown all these years but it is not
telling stories
what is in there?
what is the reason
for coming back?

the black stone
is its king and comes back
again
to worship it

until it takes it pebble by pebble
inside its beak
inside its heart

and then the blackbird flies again not coming back

it has taken what it loves inside its heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blackbird In You...

the red bird had the same experience as yours you were told soared to the seventh sky and dove fearlessly on the water which according to their final story felt like an iron wall smashing its tiny body into mashed meat like a melon crashing into the cemented street of the city you are a blackbird and you always know what to do not listening to stories but still learning a lot from those who lived to the full you perched upon a twig facing the sea felt the breeze fell asleep.... the pain is not gone it is still there, but who cares?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blackbird Metaphor

custom the Beatles had it as the struggle for freedom of the blacks that blackbird singing in the dark wanting to be free

custom the Americans had that blackbird swirling in Vietnam that chopper that saved lives that war that caused them humiliation in the world's opinion that lie of Nixon

Steven Wallace had eight ways of seeing that blackbird Noah sent that blackbird that did not come back since it was happy picking on the rotten flesh of the remains of the dead the ninth way
of seeing disobedience

One writes again about the blackbird that lives singing the songs of neurosis in his mind
at winter time
The poet commits suicide His colleagues bury him with eulogies and 'what ifs'

One sleeps with a blackbird The other sings with a blackbird Someone flew away with a blackbird and did not come back since then
So many stories
So many poems are written

Now i have to write about this blackbird too But there shall be no disturbance No unhappy ending
I swear to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blank Pages...

each day
we open the pages of a book each page is empty this book of our lives

we write some words we are careful not to hurt and be dismayed

we always take the opportunity the somehow we also know how to enlighten ourselves and be happy with the originality of our thoughts everyday is always an opportunity to discover the little wonders of our unique beings

there is no one like me, and this

i will always say.
i love myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blank Paper

den blank paper is like a virgin
woman,
it is not blank because it wants to
there is this inner desire to be scribbled be it love or lust or whatever it is just its nature
to be written
anything that fills it up with words for its perfection or even for its destruction
and soon
it will have its fate a love letter kept for years or a scratch paper crumpled in the bin burned by another man's lighter or torn by a woman's
anger.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blank Space Inside Us

there are blank pages some say that it is a must that something must be drawn words to be written thoughts to stifle, capture,
stuffed,

there is a day that you prefer to keep a blank sky a dark sky without stars no light

when you close your eyes
you are at home with this blank page words become invincible
but they are all there perfectly correct
well viewed by the eyes of your heart somehow you go beyond your every day fences

move away, jump and run towards an island of light a patch of green grass

still no stars
pure blank it is when you do not believe in the power of thoughts when what preoccupies you is nothing when you are finally one with all
space
it is too peaceful to even dropp a word like a pin on a shiny floor of tiles....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blank Wall Waits For You...You Must Decide What To Do With It...

from time to time you face a blank wall and you are confronted what to do with it carrying with you the past walls which had become too dirty to read and you have dreams about a wall of art and you have thought carefully what to put on this blank wall it must be something beautiful and dignified and worthy of an honor it must not contain the regret of what is wasted and abused about what is neglected and disturbing and this is the problem now note it well you doubt if this time you will write something on it or not at all because you want to be safe and clean and restrained.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bless Of My Own Silence....

in this place
the first thing that i hear every morning is the song of the birds on top of trees
as they prepare to leave after a night's sleep

as i open my window
and light is still young like some eyes blinking
i wonder
what are these birds up to they do not build their nests here they just come
spend a night and then leave and are back again on the same hour of the same night

i try to ask more questions that i myself have to answer
but then
something comes up within the reasons do not really matter it is their songs
the harmony with the wind
the joy of the trees
the bliss
of my own silence....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blessing In Disguise....

i hope you have read about the man who came to the office late somewhere in New York on such a blessing in disguise he never became one of those numbers counted as casualties in that tower bombing, and can't we say then
sometimes
being late is a hidden virtue God's way of having to care for you placing you away from the clutches of that inevitable
death....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blind Woman

she will tell us how to live and perhaps
even how to end our lives

when we have so much bread to eat
she will say we have to give them away
because the bread
are meant for the children
and for all the children
to come
and feed

when we tell her that we can build a new house she tells us
it is a waste of time because we are
too old to live in it

as though our feet are not feeling the smoothness of floors
anymore

as though are hands are filled with wrinkles and must not hold anything soft & fragile as the wings of the winds through
the windows that we still love
there is so much emptiness in us
and they are still giving us more and we feel that it is not only her that wants us to fade
but all of them
we are getting paranoid and we are more afraid about all these we also have the capacity to rule
and harm
i am angry at all these and i am not a fool just to submit to all her own designs and wishes
i am prepared for the mob i have stored time within my arms i have a mind of my own and i can be as destructive as a sting about somewhere & somehow but i know how to wait when my patience runneth over it will be time to show her who we are my tongue is a cobra a bomb
is my mind and i will be venomous and explosive at the same
time
for a perfect murder at a perfect time and may God who is both Loving and Just forgive me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blind Woman........

it is brazen candid, straightforward there is no wink in the eye and so you
believe it

to be the truth and then you decide about fate
of this
simpleton

who is defended by another simpleton

upon a crime that the did not commit but which he cannot prove your eyes are hiding behind those thick eyeglasses they are not responsible when you

finally speak about
death

the rest believe you because behind you are the cabinets of books

old books, filled with dusts all over their hard covers

you are a blind woman
speaking
with that firm voice
like steel in rusty tones rabid
as a dog.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bliss Of My Own Silence (Revised)

in this place
the first thing that i hear every morning
is the song of the birds
on top of trees
as they prepare to leave
after a night's sleep

as i open my window
and light is still young like some eyes blinking

i wonder
what are these birds up to?

they do not build their nests here
they just come
spend a night and then leave and are back again on the same hour of the another night

i try to ask more questions
that i myself have to answer

but then
something comes up within
the reasons do not really matter

it is their songs
the harmony with the wind
the joy of the trees
the bliss
of my own silence....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bloke Is Broke

The bloke is broke
Takes a coke and lots of smoke Stroke a joke and leaves the yoke Spoke and poke and went back folk Remembering baroque
With a golf stroke Scrubs an oak with Another sick joke
Woke and evoke
And even provoke
A gun smoke Goes amok
With a butterfly stroke Wild with a James Knox Towards valley oak spoke a practical joke Ending with a choke
that broken bloke

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blood Of This Vampire Too

poetry is personal.

personal is detailed.

it knows roots
and phloem.

it can trace the
mole in your asshole.

sometimes you do not speak at all

but poetry makes
you write

as i told you
creativity runs in the blood of this vampire too.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blood That Runs In His Veins....

the way to explain his brother's warlike behavior, his friends say, is because he got blood from a prisoner in jail charged with murder and rebellion
foremost,

blood transfused inside his system makes him what he is,

the blood donor is to blamed for all these war like behavior, father agrees,

how incredible, the doctor screams...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blue Bird

the blue bird
has come
confused with the blue cloud
it sings
forgiveness
inviting you
to join to its journey
far, so far
away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blue Jeans I Remember

the blue jeans i remember
after a very cold season in that coconut farm

tight blue jeans
smelling my swelling
legs
and dirty with saline
taste

unwashed in the corner of my room
i always see your warm hands
sliding inside them

damn blue jeans
spare my sanity!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Blue Roses Of July

when you finally find the blue roses with blood running in the veins of its petals
then you must have found the place where i have lots of friends where we enjoy the daily games and drink the cup of our wines where we become at home with ourselves because that place is our paradise complete with cool rivers and fine trees and electric blue clouds if you find the place
please tell me
if you find it earlier than expected then by now you must have know who i am and you shall understand but if you find it even with closed eyes and bound hands
please come closer to me dip your ear to mine like bread to wine and i will whisper to you who you are too......

RIC S. BASTASA
The Boat

i am drawing
this situation, this is the boat, it has four arms spreading on the wide face of the sea these arms shall caress and make love with its bounty some waters sound a slush like the sand announcing your safe and soft arrival the boat has eyes too just like us inside it its gaze spreading the vision of where we are going the boat looks upon us with envy we are the lovers inside its mouth the boat slides on calm seas this peaceful twilight when the seagulls have gone away here, we make love again the boat compromising with a restful state this time everything is so warm the fires in our hearts the boat surely understands something that burns yet so unconsumed undiminished

RIC S. BASTASA
The Boatman In Boracay

the muscular boatman in pale red shirt waits beside his boat

for a customer to be taken to the island of desire tonight

whatever
sex.

RIC S. BASTASA
When i look at the body i do not look for a name
i only see the contours
of the body
looking for the map
and the signs
where i may finally get in

body to body just this no names just places plain touch loveless and so careless this moment
and then the next and the next

no strings no bridge just the flow of the river no docking no ports no stopping

just this kiss for today
and then
nothing for what tomorrow may say

RIC S. BASTASA
The Body And The Soul

i hear the body speak through its mouth there is no God
there is no God

i see the body wasting itself like a tree whose roots are eaten by the fungus but inside that body is the soul that raises his hands to the skies looking at God and calling his name

My God why have you abandoned me?

there is only the usual silence and the soul is restless anticipating to get out from the body that is killing and wasting itself and the time has come for the soul to be liberated to be alone

in itself moving towards the light, dancing in the dark, and singing out aloud

My God here i am back to you
It is only in You that i find back peace and happiness & bliss.

Let that soul be me My Lord.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Body Of The Beautiful Woman One Evening

naked in bed
in shades of gray
lies the body of the beautiful woman
unconquered yet
by the magnificence
of words

RIC S. BASTASA
The Body Of The Future....

there is this abundance that flows within you it goes outside looking for a place to settle

you have been searching no one fits
the world is looking for that magic about you going into the woods and finding the best wild flower for you to take home and offer it to someone who can love you for what
you are

it is absurd
no one believes it
no one can love you as true as you can love that someone

even the world accepts its own blindness it cannot give you
what you long for the equation for mutuality lies there upon its half body without a face yet

the hands are still drawn so that you can touch
the body of the future

RIC S. BASTASA
The Boholano

You have your camote
I have my kettle

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bomb

today the sun is furious it brought some needles pricking my skin somehow it is telling me something
this global warming thing is true
something worst will come when the sun shall bring
the bomb.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bombing....

to write what is evident is a superfluity

but sometimes it has to be
done

what is evident what is too evident sometimes had become invisible too much familiarity removes that thing

from our common view

something trivial is missed which creates the chaos what is here is written what is touched is exposed as it is the curtains have been removed the doors and windows are opened the stairs are repaired and even a toddler can crawl up here the lights are not turned off even in the morning

it shall be seen and it shall always be remembered

on record 20 are dead 60 are wounded....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bone Of The House

in the house
he is a bone,

not a flesh on
the side

dogs outside are waiting

he is not the kind of bone

that any dog
wants,

the useless bone
in the kitchen

mere shadow of the soup-stock

left-over of the flesh inside the garbage can.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Book And The Rain....

outside
the rain is heavy.

just the two
of us

beside us a lamplight

my lips to
yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Boredom Of My Days On The Chant Of Ten Numbers

8756
54321

12345
6789
10

87654321
123456789
10 121212
34563456 4567 4567
89 10
89 10 everyday they practice dancing in the gym

on loud speakers
reciting the monotony
of numbers
my ears are bursting!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bother

there is a bother and it keeps bothering you my dearest it is that door where you enter and then what you find is nothing but darkness you say hello and what comes back to you is just an echo

it is not a shallow place it is a labyrinth and sometimes you suspect that with its hollowness it can be nothing but another
cave

in the dark where no one knows you you begin to wish you were Medusa turning all those stones into more stones devoid of feeling wanting more revenge

even if it has become too hard and unjust.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bottle Of Wine And The Wife

my wife is confident the bottle of wine is always the losing rival of tonight's competition for affection

i do not have a cork opener.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bowl...

yes, this is a case of a candle burning itself on both sides and below it on two heads of fire is a bowl full of water shaping what could be the truth when the final shape is taken as usual we go back to that empty bowl but less the candle the melted one shedding off lights

RIC S. BASTASA
The Box Of Life

you live inside a box
and a box has no window people see you as they pass by
and take a long glance at you it is a glass box and you are human inside it
and you also take a glance at them
and you smile and then the look at themselves querulous, ' why is he living inside that glass box? '
and you ask the same question,
'why are they living in that big box walled by air? ' and in such a decent pretension as though they are completely free from the reality of boxes.

who does not live inside a box?
who? if you have hands you are now free to feel it

some boxes are walled by clouds
some by words

RIC S. BASTASA
The Box Of Pandora

most of the time
i tell you honestly
i have not really understood what the word means what the picture says what the messages are you have been a wizard of all sorts

you take note of the murmur of this tremor
you read what the clouds write in the skies
you take so much silence with closed eyes to the horizon
as the waves of the sea keep pounding the walls of this civilization

i have seen a father cry over the death of his child i have imagined how boats capsize
how engines stop
how people scream
and scamper for safety

this world is getting smaller how can i ever say so?
yesterday i tread upon a path of tall grass and mountain peaks and i stand there
at noon
amazed by the vastness of the sky and the endless horizon men have always waged war against

themselves
and the children and women are the victims hapless

d this is what till now i have not understood
why?

to kill and be killed
to live to die without a cork to seal this leak of bad spirits

Pandora’s box, tell me, how to close it?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Box....

foolishly i cried
my face opens to you with all tears so unlikely of my present position but there is enough time for hiding and it is already killing a part of my body and soul
and so today as you face me i have become less of a man
of this world
as i break open
the divine
that stoops, or even bows down and weeps asking for forgiveness beyond all this justice, love, beyond love
what could it be possibly?
an openness for the inevitable Lord when you ask that i finally leave?
i confess my innocence this unrepairable brokenness this box....

RIC S. BASTASA
you live inside a box
and a box has no window
people see you as they pass by
and take a long glance at you
it is a glass box and you are
human inside it
and you also take a glance at them
and you smile and then the look at themselves
querulous, ' why is he living inside that glass box? '
and you ask the same question,
'why are they living in that big box walled by air? '
and in such a decent pretension
as though they are completely free
from the reality of boxes.

who does not live inside a box?
who? if you have hands you are now
free to feel it

some boxes are walled by clouds
some by words

RIC S. BASTASA
The Boy Who Cried Wolf....

you are the boy
who cried wolf

once the innocent whom we believe

you are the boy
who cried wolf whom we love just as you are despite the wolves who surround us and whom we all defeated just for you because you are the boy who cried wolf whom we love despite the odds

RIC S. BASTASA
The Boy....

the boy has turned into a man
on his shoulders still rest the scruples
the unforgotten twists
of his mouth
those moments when his jaw stiffened

i remember what he said that boy has fathered him into the man that he is
now,

those little things like marbles rolling inside the bowl of his brains

he can hears sounds
which no longer exist, he can see those smiles long gone
like mirage to the vast desert of this past

RIC S. BASTASA
The Boys And Men....

the boys are playing with guns

and when they become grown-up they are here playing with the missiles

nothing's changed their play area
is our backyard

mother did not mind until the whole house is burned....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Brazil In My Mind

where is the last beat?
i should have told you it is somewhere in Brazil, no, i am not reminded of the soft blue sea and the white sands no, it is not the glow of the light in the cottage on those blackouts of my mind, you have seen it, somewhere in the pages of the book that i did not finish my heart wants to die still in my country despite its prison bars but i must give credits to Brazil whose hands shall caress me with the joys of my imagination before i die

my heart still utters the word life
despite the disappointment

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bread That My Hand Made

unlike the bread produced by the most efficient
machine,
the bread of the human hand tastes always better.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Breakfast Of The Old Farts

the old farts
did meet for breakfast of coffee and cookies and fish and rice and a pomelo and camote chunks and they all fart
and part and meet again only to fart some more this lunchtime.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Breaking Of The Dam

silence is the dam,
grief rains nights
lament screams
the dam breaks out
unable to hold
further the weight
of grief

those that listen
and do not do anything
down the plains
must now know what is extreme pain
what is sorrow
what is unbearable

your flood shall take some of those who had always been insensitive.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Breathers....

alone in the night
below the moon
you can hear them
all breathing: the trees, grass,
river, air, and
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bridge Who Dreams Of Being A River

the bridge finally confesses to the river

that in every surge of the water below it

it experiences what human males call an erection

it strengthens every cable that runs inside it the heavy clouds rain on it and the sun scorches it with heat every bridge confesses innocence to this nonsense

the bridge after all is not what it is, ...it is still going to be not just a bridge but soon when it collapses...a river too.

RIC S. BASTASA
think of the laughter of the children not the weepings of the widows the blooming of the flower not the wilting of the leaves the shooting stars in the galaxies not the blackholes or the death of stars plunge into the sea of life and take the best swim

see the bright colors of the corals and the fish hiding in the rocks and stones in the war of our words let us the ceasefire we're dining and in the middle of things is this red flower let us wonder about the redness of life and set aside the blackness of the night

RIC S. BASTASA
The Brigidaire General Speaks At The Wedding

during the wedding at the wedding in an open garden, about marriage, that one must marry for love

and no other
because when love is gone then everything is gone

i look at my wife waiting for her turn to speak
and i am thinking: what if love is gone?

what if love flies out of the window like a black bird tired of its nest wanting to go and find another island a new breeding ground a direction for another migration away from a very cold season towards a warmer ground?

i think, one marries more than love, one makes a promise for better or for worse, for richer or poorer, in sickness and in health till death do us part: one marries not just for love but for a promise, for marriage is more than that, it is more than a contract,

it is a covenant,

that we who love, that we sometime when we fall out of love looks at the covenant and abides by what is found there that we live together, that we are one, and only death can separate us.

the assumption is: love sometimes burns itself, and is consumed like our bodies that rot, like our bones that turn to dust, like the life that dies, that the mind that shuts down i think, i am falling out of love, i think, i must abide by the covenant.

after the General has spoken i shake his hand, and make a nod, i admit, i still have more to say, but it shall be my wife who must say it.

she signed the covenant too inside our heart, our souls know it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bringer Of Deaths....

when mother died
she cried
she swore she cannot live alone

and he called
life is like that
some are born today
some die
most of us are left
alone
to struggle and survive

be calm
be cautious
in the city the gnawing hunger crawls like a monster and will swallow those who remain inflexible

this world does not stop
if you decide somehow
to die

the merry go round would still be merry
children still astray
the market shouts
for buyers to come
the whole year round

everyone is going to waste everyone always unconsumed.

another layer patches up the dead
another set of feet dance
on the floor

for life is always welcome despite the deaths that it always brings....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Broken Pieces Of The Heart

I've seen her
leaving

four broken pieces of her heart on the floor

i expect her to pick the pieces but she didn't

i could not pick them since they're not mine

somehow i guess
she does not need any piece anymore learning perhaps that to live well and survive the hazards of love and living one does not have to have a heart

anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
The Brother Of Talent

IF Brevity be the sister of talent
then correct spelling
must be his brother

RIC S. BASTASA
The Brown And The Blue...

it is not between blue or brown
it brown within the coolness of blue

it is when the brown is let go
when the blue rests
on the floor

as brown and scarlet seek each other's hold.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Brown Leaf Along The Road Near The River

it a brown leaf.
it falls from a tall tree and slowly it stops at the bottom of the road in Bankerohan...

it is a sunny day for a week and the brown leaf stays there for there is no wind...

a beautiful maiden picks it up one day... so crisp...

it crumples in her very own hand...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Brown Out And The Brown Barking Dog

yes, the last poem was saved from a sudden brownout and yes the brown dog did not stop barking on the road lined with pruned indian trees where a stack of leaves are left to dry on a very hot noon day in my poor country until the knock on the door is heard and finally the maid opens the door to the stranger: your brother gone abroad for work to save money for his six children to feed and send to school and he brings you some gifts toblerone chocolates and californian red wine

hugs and hugs and warmth and some stories to tell about the united states of america chicago in particular and las vegas at the end where one of your cousins made a good fortune where some invitations are extended where you may stay for three days and enjoy the casino and the moving lights and some parties the brown barking dog now lays peacefully by the door with big ears listening to a conversation between brothers: one who likes to stay forever in one place and one who seeks his destiny somewhere else some snacks no smoke no lies now just stories and missing and a promise to be good to offer prayers for our dead parents mass tomorrow morning and a coming party for the relatives little joys, bitter memories, some expectations and hopes for a better future slice the cake and sip the soup some thoughts that better be left inside our minds silence and in between words that like to lurk inside the walls of our mouths what do you really expect from me? from what i write, well, well, sometimes, there is nothing to say, except to tell you the brown-out is still here, and i am working on a standby power rushing with my lines keeping with my word to save my last poem, and it may not be the last after all just finishing it for you, trying to tell you that sometimes in our lives we say nothing on purpose but just to be descriptive about what is happening

between us
no judgments, no choosing and telling which is wrong which is right just watching and savoring ourselves and not commenting anymore just living together sometimes even better with each other on some distance so when we meet we say we miss each other: just describing and watching and telling and

yes writing using some other powers: the standby power till it is finally exhausted and gone

RIC S. BASTASA
The Brown Teachers In Alabama

finally they fly away from the brown land to teach black kids in Alabama

then they put their pictures on the Facebook posing for souvenirs kissing the stuffed deers and pretending they like to read the books featuring Alice

when all the while, what they want is to be back home to their brown land 12 thousand miles away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Brown Woman Walking In The Street Of The Town Early Morning

i meet a brown woman
early this morning
walking down the
street of the town

she wears a transparent
blouse
her tits are protruding bra-lessly
her hips swaying like a tsunami her lips are wet with too much gloss of red in there her shorts are too short her bottom is calling for you to lust on her she is showing her navel and her middle is cracking

i guess she is simply telling you
that she is ready for any war
and her tits and cracks
and nipples
and hips
are her potent weapons

and you go home
wanting to explode

she may destroy & defeat you
after all
with all your hidden weaknesses

RIC S. BASTASA
The Brown's Man's Nocturnal Anxieties

brown man with thick lips flat nose and bold eyelashes your face rests on your right arm you need sleep

you can't

tomorrow is still filled with anxiety

the night will be insomniac your eyes are suspicious always when the lights are finally turned off.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Budget Traveler

somewhere
in the maldives
he's gonna wear
something blue

or bluer than blue with a friend who spends for his round trip
fare

maldives will cost his lunch $$$$$$
so they will be there for a day
and lots of pictures

then to sri lanka
for a hop then back to Kuala Lumpur than back home then
in manila

where realities are realities
freed from those tour constraints
back to his lonely
arms again

RIC S. BASTASA
sometimes he is so concerned about the facade of the building, asking if the signage is correct, the color of the paint,
the metal used,
he walks away,
holds his chin,
takes a look again,
and turns his face
smirks,
he sits on the side of the road fronting the structure he is silent
and then comes up with a word but he does not want to say it, definitely there will be no changes in the facade she tells him firmly

just like what her mother did to her dad whom she always called stupid lazy-bone
good for nothing
male,

he is different
he sees to it that history does not repeat itself this time he calls the engineer thru his celfon

'my own decision finally is to demolish the building' he said with a firm deep voice like the ocean
he assumes the shape of the whale
this time.

there will be no other one,
the land must have only space nothing but space no one deserves to be in this place anymore

she commented though everything is for sale at the right price.

RIC S. BASTASA
attuned to the bulk of my poetry day to day in volumes and volumes one day she will be missing a poem from me for on the null days of my life when the words sometimes are mere appendages of truths
there shall be no more poem to post writer's block and a consciousness growing helplessly screaming for the glorious and the great
One
panicky, and trembling, now facing the greatness of the Light of the Great One speechless and awed and bowing to the True One poetry vanishes
to such beauty indescribable and so sweet and peaceful tranquility in perfection no ripples on the river no stone on the sand no tree on the road no cliff no heights no mountain no plain such is the place i have seen my lips like chocolate dissolving my mouth unable to speak my eyes unable to see

Oh Great One
Take me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Burden…

there are burdens
like sack filled with rocks at our backs
we feel the weights
pulling us
to the holes of this earth but those who underestimated us cannot see

we carry these burdens
silently
those that watch and humiliate us shall never know
the wisdom we have our sacrifices are invisible our faces show nothing but satisfaction

there are burdens
that make our lives worth living in another hour.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Burning Heart....

my heart always sees
you
my heart always feels
you

it has bleeding eyes it has callous hands it has scars and it will still have more wounds that may never heal
on time.

my heart is always on fire when you are with me my heart burns all day it has no need for help it has no firetrucks coming...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Bursting Of Happiness.....

now i know why i have been flying in my dreams why i have those big black wings amid the blue skies i know why the morning sky gives the light showers behind it the faintest light from the early sun i know why the earth is joyous wet by your passion why the seeds of the jackfruit finally shed off their skin to give way to tiny leaves in between those cracks of old rocks that open their hidden eyes to the first showing of the tender hands of happy years of your unfolding like umbrella to the noonday sun filtering finally what is hot and stinging....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Busy Man.....

he must talk
to divert the attention of his conscience he has to laugh out loud to forget what the past is constantly repeating he has to sing and dance to appease the anger of that silence he has to walk away, run as fast as he can pre-occupy his feet and arms with all the things about to be done and say that always there are unfinished business to convince death that it has to wait more that the days and nights will never be over....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Butcher.....

i am so sorry
to hear from you with all the grunts
and the runts
here you are at the prime time of the hours
mistaking again another prose for a
poem
i am so sorry you deserve something greater than this which does not sound so well like a well oiled
machine

sorrier to you my dear whose taste for nursery rhyme has not waned
whose love for the limericks still prick

dear pig, be quite the butcher is here.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Butterfly Effect

when you swat a fly another glacier crumbles to the bottom of the sea another cruise ship sinks when you slap a servant another economic system in Europe collapses millions will be jobless when you abort an innocent fetus another unknown virus plagues with no known cure in China, Africa and India

but if you are kind and compassionate to the ant carrying a morsel of bread global warming becomes another myth there will be sufficient rice and wheat there will be so much food to eat.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Butterfly In Poetry.....

writing poetry is such a waste of time

i could have finished my research on invalidated contracts

or could have read the end chapter of my friend's novel

or i could have sipped coffee at the veranda while watching the morning sun coming out from the breasts
of the mountain

i dislike what i do wasting my time on this kind of stuff that most of my friends do not really waste time reading

but here it is we waste time on things that we love to do that which we really do not understand why we love doing it i still ask myself why?

time runs fast and i am caught in surprise.

poetry makes me a snail
this time
and a caterpillar too sometimes waiting soon makes me a butterfly and perhaps that is the real reason

why.

it is this wonder of flying.
yes, this flying spirit. Yes.

It is.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Butterfly

the caterpillar
has been and will always be a victim of bad publicity by the bees
and those maggots until it becomes a butterfly and without that sense of revenge or demand for rectification it simply hovers happily from one flower to another nibbling the nectar
of its basic
truth....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cactus In The Desert

looking at you
i remember the cactus

no, not the thorns,
you are wrong
no, not the prickly
experience

it has something to do with how we survive in that desert
and how we still flower despite

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cactus Truth

Truth can be a cactus and so we sometimes place a blue sky above it
and in one extremely hot day some thorns turn into tiny flowers that we hardly see at night we see the moon beside it and then the wind is so cool

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cadaver

if you ask my opinion about the recent violence you may not like what i hear but let me give you a hint i go for quick justice

i like swift wings of justice that arrive at conclusions without much court drama

who was that who said that it is better for lawyers to be killed?

harsh, too harsh for a thirsty city for a very hungry country just let them disappear that judges after all are wearing the black robes of hoodlums who are indebted for who put them there

and could not render what is fair

i like to go to the previous states of tooth for a tooth eye for an eye

the world is toothless and the world is blind and you find a situation where you cannot ask anymore

'where to? ' because everything has been corrupted and the system has become one rotten cadaver stinking and nameless and undeserving of a decent burial.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cage....

one can see
an unaffected wire cage on days when the lovebirds
are set free

it has no wings
only squares and squares of the usual
indifference

whether the door is open or close what does it matter to it?

an instrument will always be the usual instrument there is no imagination no dream
not even the temporary bliss of an illusion

RIC S. BASTASA
The Caged Bird Cries...

i do not know why a caged bird sings?
or shall it sing when caged?
or shall it cry instead?
i know cages, and i have met some birds, i have seen birds on cages and i have heard them sing on trees i have listened them when caged it is not a song, but a cry, it is not a dance, but a struggle, it is not a poem, but the saddest prose.

RIC S. BASTASA
we are never quite immediately aware of what we know deep in our bones and consciousness it creeps slowly into little clues details that finally come to mind and in the considering of the jigsaw puzzle premonitions that had escaped us but now reveal their colors in the borders of the whole image how we languish between them and when the truth arrives with us clutching at the falsehoods in the trick routes of the mind not knowing that a falseness can just as soon in another light can seem to be the truth but with all the frazzling of nerves and worry and dementia and discontent one should realize it is a waste of time deciding what is true and not although with most thinking beings it is not possible to escape that we do so love to worry about ourselves scared stiff at being outwitted being laughed at for being such quickly gentle fools of our imagination and the fantasies we fill our empty lives with even my laughter scares me sometimes like it emanates from some deep euphoric cave some ancient time complete with mythical dragons meanwhile desertwise like a cloud the camel floats

RIC S. BASTASA
The Camiguin Escapade....

on those nights in that island i was confronted with configurations, curves, strong lines, bold strokes, opulence, complacency

dark corners, dead ends, walls, twisted paths, roasted scents, too general for you to really specifically picture, heat, hot springs, cool nights, bird calls, dewy leaves, roots of tall ancient trees, i disregarded memories, i am into creativity, into something new,

what i never had before, falls, ripples, floating drifting wood, rivers,

i never make a call, and i never receive calls from you,
my mornings are stares, gazes into far seas, there were some storms that no one ever notice such is the story behind my escapade.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cancer Notification

there is a time
and i know it has dawned upon you late that night that you do not want any pore of your skin or tip of your hair for another scrutinizing scan

cancer is just a cell that screams and goes berserk runs amok
in those complacent organs and chokes everyone that it meets

soon it will be a time-bomb that explodes and kills all those innocent bystanders

you are prepared i know and there is nothing to worry cancer is your paid ticket to another trip

this time

the place will be exciting exotic

or quixotic

since everyone goes there anyway and those who left earlier so far did not come back to report about such an enigmatic travel

look for a travelogue there are no notes

enjoy the trip
grab the ticket
it is free

the flight is certain nothing canceled
nothing rerouted

but this time there are no duty free stores around

you are

alone.....

(perhaps still scared) and you look at the announcing electronic board there is no fixed time yet oh yes, the doctor will tell you approximately

not the travel agent of yours

RIC S. BASTASA
The Candice Theory

something true is smooth if false, it will be rough so true love is as smooth as
tanduay rum
and false love is as rough as sick skin
yet those who are not true thrive well
and those who are true suffer

why my dear?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Candle As Metaphor For Grief

the white candle must have a heart not showing any emotion when we parted much feeling but there is a pretense for nothing dismissing what is complicated in the resting place the candle is lighted shedding tears till dawn

RIC S. BASTASA
The Candy Inside My Mouth

i have this round and sweet Chinese delicacy from shanghai
i remove it from its cellophane wrapping and as i write this poem
it is wet inside
my mouth

i want it slow and sure savory
and without any intention for biting
and quickly
breaking it

to my bitter tongue
i must submit

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cannivals Of Serongan....

now you learned how they were eating those who died

it is not the hunger but the love
for here they simply eat a slice of the flesh to make those who they love a part of them
literally.

and have i not told you that they drink
their blood too?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Capa De Leon...

sticking upon a big tree you thrive, you have become so huge, sucking the rottenness of another existence, until you begin to wilt, but you have already prepared for
all these,
the spores are ready all concealed beneath your cape, and then the winds take them all

another tree, another fool.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Capacity To Change

the chameleon after all is true it is not just a metaphor the way we change colors depending on those who really touch us
the way we change ourselves
for the better
because we are loved
despite the odds

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cardiologist-Surgeon

Operates on a poem
with a heart disease

a Bypass Quadruple in fact

Since then heartless poem is born and Becomes a trend

metaphor-less dead poem

hardly beating.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Careful One....

he waits for the flower inside that hand

one rainy day love comes without an umbrella

with a flower inside a hand crumpled perhaps

but never wet....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Case Of A Waterfall

a waterfall can be seen in different angles different versions can be said how a waterfall falls from a very high cliff the first version is the waterfall itself the second as you turn clockwise gives you the version of a fog hanging on a cliff or a horizon of white clouds the third version, as you turn another quarter again on a clockwise direction gives you a water fountain going up the sky and the last version on another clockwise or quarter turn gives you the rage of the river flowing to the sea

that is how reality appears to our very eyes some points of view

how life becomes depends on how we see it coupled with our faith within ourselves to one who sees a twisted point of view from a dog's eyes life appears like a tick sucking blood from the armpit of a puppy

blood is drained and stored on a bloating stomach of the tick. Life is actually, how you see it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Case Of Mr. Death

Mr. Death you are accused of stealing live people and killing them instantaneously without giving them notice and the opportunity to prepare
so that at least they can finish their business

not only that Mr. Death you are also doing some illegal activities as genocide
mass poisoning
of people
mass killing during wars, typhoons,
cyclones
and earthquakes
and floods

what can you say about these charges Mr. Death?

and Mr. Death says
' I am just doing the Will of the Lord
I too am His Servant'

and the Jury
The People
understand and hand the verdict of Acquittal
The Cat And The Dog In The House Of Their Master

today the cat and the dog of this house have a holiday of their eternal quarrel and jealousy none speaks a bad word for each other none of them
initiates an argument about whom of them the master
loves better
none of them
speaks ill about the other neighboring cats or dogs
the dog does not speak about the bone the cat does not speak about the rats both of them are silent and sad and none wants to speak beside their master

sick and dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cat By The Window Sill....

depressed you know what you feel
like a cat
confident about the graces of its feeder.

by the window sill
the sun comes and rests beside the cat
licking its paws and then back to the gentle laps of sleep and dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cat That Could Not Find A Rat and yes that is the story about a cat which could not find a single rat inside a house filled with hay during the harshest part of drought he keeps on telling her that always, always, w/o regret.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cat, The House And The Trees here is this cat that looks like a feline version of batman though without a cape and a bat-mobile

it sits on a fence
and waits

the trees murmur
and the house stares at it curiously without blinking this cat has one life to live the other eight it lost to the years of his giving up that despair and psychological confusion

now it is prepared to give
the last one

the house is afraid and closes its door

the wooden fence shakes like a bridge losing its hold on the other side tomorrow the cat shall be dead yet it is prepared with an epitaph of no regret, its life is always lived for another and this is it that really matter

RIC S. BASTASA
The Categorical Imperative

i could have stayed and
done what i really wanted, but there is something that i must do and i didn't like it, something that we do not like cannot just be left undone it is bitter and not too rewarding but it ought to be done just the same

it is not for me it is for the rest of the world and the universe and the galaxies

it does not end when it is finished by the shape of my hands it leaves me empty

but i am relieved and now i am glad & so let me begin again from the beginning

i could have stayed and
done what i really wanted,

but there is something that i must do
and now i am thinking that i must like it... it is The imperative.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Caterpillars

the caterpillars all climb line per line to claim the topmost leaf
of the tree
and when they arrive there they find out that there is nothing after all to eat and be merry

like a race for votes in poetry there is nothing there just speak your mind and think of all the metaphors that jibe with your sadness or your joys

and your happiness and bliss if you have them
show them

tell them that all your syllables know how to dance and that all your words know how to sing no matter where you are whatever the limitations be show the color of your lines let them smell the scent of your stanzas you may even tell a story they too need something to appease them

RIC S. BASTASA
The Caution From The Man Who Taught Evolution

he says that any creature which does not use a part of its body soon will lose it. It is the use that makes it exist. Thus, when a fish gets off the water because it likes to fly, it becomes a bird in due time, Thus, when that bird peroccupies itself with swimming ultimately becomes the sting-ray. Thus the moss on the stone which wants to roll with the stone becomes the worms of earth. Time makes them what they want to become. Thus the jellyfish that crawls to the ground becomes another blob. And so on and so forth.

It also happens to us humans. When we start to be complacent and not use our minds to think, we become shrink into stone where the rivers pass by us unrespecting of our dignities, where those who walk upon us, simply consider as us nothing but foot stools.

We may think of the divine. Let us see what happens next.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cave Woman....

i am silent
i listen to you
i smile
and you said
all the words
to convince me
to do what you want me to do....

do not
underestimate me i may love you
and i may say i may love you forever

but i have a mind
of my own
my head above my heart and when the time comes when i say it is over then it is over

and i know very well
the way towards the light in the middle of this tunnel

i know myself
and without any notice
i go where i really want to

alone in this journey
i whistle
to the tune of my own
song

away from the cave
the home you love.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Celebration

In the morning we shall find ourselves Many of us
Babies in slow swinging cradles Still drunk of the night’s lullaby

We shall find out Waking with poems in our palms We shall chant together

The sun has come
In the manner of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Celibate

as expected the celibate has written a poem about a desert the listener junks it for it makes her feel thirst and gives a hint on death

the poem is revised speaking now about the princess bathing in the oasis
singing
attracting the black bird perched on the date palm

she rises from the water her breasts supple to the wind she is waiting for the horse riding Bedouin to carry her to his kingdom

the reader is overjoyed in this and sheds
the tears of joy

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cell Phone Syndrome

most of these cellphones are no longer meant for communication they have become our hiding places

and we have become so comfortable within it

that we do not mind anymore if we need someone to be with

to love, or simply to be on our side and give us warmth, they're now our safe-houses and we live there

most of the time

RIC S. BASTASA
The Center Of Our Universe

universe
lies the tongue

warm flesh
moist, flexible
this little queen naked inside
our mouths

in our loneliness
it stores the words
and make us
utter

love
compassion,
understanding

it shows forth
how sunshine can be us and how can we be trees again
rising from the plains

when we are silent it waits
patiently

for love to be strong again until such time
that we are ready
to give
that kiss again....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chair And The Tree

many hours
you sit there on that chair beside the tree and had a monologue
telling yourself how she breaks your heart & causes
you so much pain

you go to bed early
to dream and hoping to forget
everything
wanting to begin a new life
tomorrow morning

‘one does not have to live longer on that
pain
neither one has to be overwhelmed with sorrow
life moves on’
you write in your diary

the whole night
the chair and the tree have a very serious talk

and they say
they have all empathy for yo

the following morning
the ground is all wet
with tears
and what all the grass blades have
are salt for dews

RIC S. BASTASA
The Challenge Of The Day

on a rush you step outside the room without a window thick drapes
sealing you away from the noise of the world solitude and silence your treasures
as soon as you open the door the heavy rains and traffic greet you with a challenge
'this is the real world, come out!' there is no place to hide there are always places to go and faces to deal with amidst the crowd find the solitude and the silence from within your soul your heart must know and your mind must adopt lest you shall be one of those carried by the flood of meaningless existence
out there
cold and dead

RIC S. BASTASA
The Change....

in life something comes up unacceptable we are like horses needing more rending soon we give up the struggle we stop kicking and punching we lay peacefully saying yes to everything a frog wonders and croaks we are not affected anymore we are ponds now as peaceful as a leaf floating as soft as rain falling on the water making ripples without sound

RIC S. BASTASA
The Changes

the ideas come and they do not wait.
they enter your door and they do not knock.
they leave without any permission from your house. they have colored wings and they simply fly away upon their liking.

they are so beautiful and deep and glistening.
enlightening and you miss them now you sit there, speechless on the blankness of your world. why did you not write when they were here beautifully dancing and singing?

you know how is it with the clouds the more with air
and mists

they always change and they do it as quickly as a wink

you know what clouds do the form upon you some stories the rainy ones sometimes and you shed tears in the same manner with the air and mists the air passes and sometimes you do not even feel it and so you miss the story that it is bringing the story of a journey into somewhere

and the mists bring you some notes about what to do in the darkness of the night yet you tarry on the grass and on the side of the hill you miss the essence of our beings we are ghosts and we do not know where we are hidden.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Changes In Her Life

SHE used to sing and dance play the piano and strum the guitar and fiddle the violin,

NOW, she is changed
she second fiddles with violence.
she drums the guitar, she pays the pianist.
she hates to sing and detests any dance.

AFTER, he was gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Changes Of The Garden

was it the time? or was it us?
or was it change itself that keeps on wriggling through history like a worm or like a cocoon finally getting into a short-lived butterfly?

i remember green grass and blooming roses here.
there was a pool of goldfish and water lilies.

now when i come back everything is gravel and rocks and trees without leaves the clouds are heavy and gray and the roots are foul and rotten shall this be a stage of change? shall this be just temporary? do you water all these with tears?

the winds have turned into sobs?

shall i believe you? shall i pretend that this garden is still livable?
when shall be start changing the change?

i will sit here and wait for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Changes Of The Times

when we took vacations in your place my dear cousins we brought you lots of things: sacks of bananas, another sacks of camote, sacks of rice and some fruits from our farm in zamboanga that was in the late 70s when we truly missed each other and you cooked our bananas and camote and rice and you drank the juice and licked the pulp of our fruits and you my dear cousins in returning our kindness you also treated us for a picnic in the nearby river where there were still lots of fishes and big rocks and crystal clear waters where the wild ducks sometimes land to drink and rest and then fly in flocks where the myth of the beautiful mermaid and her human lover on a forbidden tryst continue their madness on a full mooned night and we listen and someting magical still rings like a longing in our hearts we told lots of stories and time ran so quickly without notice there was no delay at all, no boring moment we simply ate and drank and sang some songs we surely missed each other on those abundant times but my dear cousins, times have changed, kindness now not given and if given is not returned you have been too busy and we too have been too busy too looking for ways to survive these hard times we do not visit your place again, neither you visit us too, i heard the news that the river in your place has dried and all the fishes there die and the mermaid story was no longer told as no one wants to listen to myths and no one believes anymore about fantasies and giving and being kind has become a waste of time and i no longer hear the excitement of the word 'cousin' anymore

i have seen the changes, and let me tell you, i do not blame anyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Changes...

when i was a college student and as expected of my own gullibility in search of my relevance i went to the streets and had a juggling of such words as freedom, democracy,
and independence
and due to such nitpicking there are lots of differences and semantics work well with the clubs and bruises and hamlets

things change always for the better i suppose bellies protrude, wrinkles grow like grasses, hears and anger mellow down like melted ice boiling water cools down, people settle, marry, have children and miss picnics and class reunions no one talks about freedom nowadays and they find these topics redundant

the state is on the verge of extinction and so is the world time is too short for brewing and the sipping may not be coming after all a family sits on the grass with their dog a baby is warmed by sunshine on the cradle there are new grandchildren coming from the nearby town there will be barbecue and beer and apples grandpa sits on the reclining chair and looks silently at the sunset on an unlimited horizon

RIC S. BASTASA
The Changes....

alone in your private study you hear the slamming of doors this recently happens and you expect them from hands not soiled with love unwashed by compassion selfish hearts longing for something that does not always return you get used to it and the sounds begin to faint whispers on the other hand become louder it is you, it will always be you in all these quivers from within

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chant Of Boredom

i repeat words
and i have a chew
of my syllables

love
love
love
love

crazy this mind is crazy
having gained all the years and yet can still mishandle an error
oft repeated

i have focused on the form
and is misled by its contours
its lines like labyrinths of the confused
mind

in willingness
to be lost
to such a ecstasy that cannot be easily forgotten

the promises are rains
beyond the paths of the gutters
overflowing

there is this
collaboration to be destroyed
a form of masochism
because of the beatings of
the flesh

i rest upon
time
and pierces upon the form
going deeper into the ramifications
of reason

i sleep upon the breasts of time
and at the center of its meaning
i regain the composure
of truth

lotus position
i give a bloom of my flower arm
to the sky

i chant the song of the leaves
i simulate the posture of the pond

and so here i am with
you
beyond the reach of the flesh

in peace and harmony with this poem

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chaos Of Chaos

sun from another universe to sun to another universe the planets of the two universes and even the distant stars have always feared their fusion but no matter what: love they say has its own reasons of fusion and whatever destruction is caused to the surrounding planets and neighboring stars, the wild rupture the massive explosion, love they say always triumphs with justifications saying there is another new smarter beginning and what is it but love & love just the same

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chase

you chase the numbers and you are at a loss

how can the numbers feel?
you are in a discomfort in some fits and not at ease with yourself

because you believe in numbers and like horses you want to capture each with a rope of your tired imagination

disregard the numbers and begin to believe in the words those syllables
even in the simplest form of the comma,
the period.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chatter Of My Soul

There is no stopping now what is done is done and what is going to be done shall, too, be done for i am incomplete without having to do what is in my mind for i am nothing without having to say what i want to say what i want to write puts me on paper, puts me on the go with life's ever flowing river a paper boat, a real sea, an imaginary self haunted by what is too mundane, that which regrets for not having realized

the divine, the God in my Heart, The palace in the sky,
the universe in my brain,
the chatter of my soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chicken Burrito (An Ad)

she loves guacamole!

Thus
the creation
of the

Lahaina Chicken Burrito.
Filled

with guacamole, sour cream, grilled chicken and rice. Every bite is full of flavor.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Child Is A Symbol Of What Tomorrow Shall Be

the child is a symbol of what tomorrow
shall be

what you say
is written in stone
tables
like the ten commandments

how you act
is embedded in his skull
and will never be forgotten

the child is a clean sheet of paper
what you write stays forever

so mom and dad
and who the powers that here be

be gentle, be careful,
be decent, be loving your empire is here your future is built.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Child Forced To Be A Man

all the silver statues of men are laughing
and i the child screams for help as i am new to this kind of arrangement they're too big and i am too small upon a slippery road where the rain does not stop

Mama is not here definitely to defend me from all their mockeries and so i am forced to become a strong man

in such a short time

even without Papa's image to follow no shadows no light.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Child In Us

playful, runs, and hides this is the child in me in us, always in the side of carelessness,
mistakes, and always changing dispositions, the incapacity to hold anger, and the capacity always to forget,
enemies now, friends again, no ambitions, just the toys and always be with mother, though father may come and hug sometimes and produce memories
unforgotten,
the child in us
the innocence that was lost the imagination undiscovered how we wish be be children again how can we be?
we are about to close the door it is dark and there is no time to play anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Child In Us As Outsider Of The House Of Luxury

the child is dirty he peeps upon a hole created by him on the wall of a house where the rich man lives with his luxuries how he wishes he were inside that room and be part of the happy people he is peeping and always peeping he is tom

now the girl inside the room sees him and signals with her hand to let him in he runs away

he only wants the luxuries of life inside that room he does not like the curl of the girl's black hair when the girl is away on a trip with her papa riding on a white horse towards the prairies to gather black flowers the little boy comes back again his name is really tom

he dreams of life
inside a room away from all people even before Sartre has articulated it philosophically he seems to know that heaven is only the nice room the people inside it are always hell.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Child Made The Choice

when you were a child you crawled to two choices one for the life of the red rose
and another one for the short lived burst of the gun
you grabbed the rose and that was enough

RIC S. BASTASA
The Child Who Does Not Recognize His Mother

when his mother comes he does not utter the word mama the mother tells him Me, Mama, and hugs him but he wrestles her away he grabs a ball and throws it away and he chases it he falls on the ground and shouts for help

his mother rushes to help him removes the dirt from his shirt and calms him down

then the boy utters the word at last Mama
the mother smiles and kisses him

RIC S. BASTASA
i look at the child
at the farther nook of a old house.
there is no chair and beside the door is a box, it is empty and the child in fear took its hiding there a favorite place
safety box, safe house, the four corners are so silent
and the child is happy asleep in a moment.....

time travels like horses with wings.

there is a man with a long bird his toenails are long, no time to cut them it throat is swollen bacterial infection again or the weather changes cold this time then hot in a moment

dusts all over the place and white painted houses it is lonely, child and man

at the same time
and not one of him speaks they become one box
and one flap opens to a sky

always there are no extra hands. it is reality.

there is an old man with words of thread sewing upon its lips.

there is a very dark night.
the child, the man and the old man are asleep
inside a box, safe and
silent.

there is no morning.
it is final.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Childhood Swing.....

i do not need much
in so many ways i am always contented with what is there for me with the here and now the future waits for me do i have a say?

so there you are they are having pictures with power hoping to get some and take it to their homes

i look at the crowd and tell life to just keep on watching for did he not say that life has a life of its own and fulfills itself to you and that all you have to do is discern
and then nod your head and make the signal
for

the needed going and coming like the childhood swing?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Childless And The Anonymous....

we shall be the ones who once walked this earth and leave no tracks
no scent

we do not wish to be remembered that we once were here we shall be the ones who had everything when we were once here and just like the rest (of those who had busts and statues of their greatness) we shall lose every page that is written we love it this way we are not meant to be here forever anyway

RIC S. BASTASA
The Childless Spectator

dark blue coats and uniforms are playing hide and seek
in the school

at first glance i thought it is like that
but beyond what i seemingly see i guess something is wrong

one is closing the door the other hides his face and the little girl wants to leave but her face looks behind her someone is weeping

i guess
but look at me
i am not really interested.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Childless State

i shy away from seeing pictures of mothers feeding their babies with fathers beside them it is giving me all fears it is like i am moving into a place where no one shall meet me i remember one time getting off the train when a deep silence or vast emptiness meet me while the people around feast on the chatter of their wives and the giggle of their kids i guess i simply have to create a world of my own where i will have no more fears where there are no children as securities for the future where families are not just them

but everyone.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Children

let us be careful then about these children whatever footstep we leave they always follow and delve and if they are lost along the way we will be blamed for the dismal day

RIC S. BASTASA
The Children Bathing On The Beach One Summer look at them as they wade in the water listen to their smiles and follow the steps of their chase from the sand to the water to the depths

our worries are always endless what they will become how we did make so much noise on the silence of what did not happen.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Children In The House

the eyelids are heavy children need more sleep the rain last night was long the night was noisy on the rooftop

this early morning the children rush outside they are happy
watching the rainbow

so momentary
before they pointed their fingers
it is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
The Children Of Silence.

it is the unresolved conflict that will make us all restless. No one wants a solution.
Solutions can be judgments. Do you react about something terminal?

what will you do when you wait? Think, Think, it is tiresome, it makes the body a very useless structure.
It shrinks like a deflated balloon.

it is this restlessness actually that makes us creative. we thank God for this. Our house is incomplete. Who has a house without stairs?

When i visit an old place, there is this shock that the river is  did the river go?
Again, the hands of man, let it go.

Disappointed. The child stays in the house of his mother forever.
HE has no dreams. His fingers hold upon a needle and a thread creating once again a heart of silk.

it is the unresolved conflict within us that makes us whole. we are so restless, we dream of sand and shore and waves and foams.
we travel with the ocean, we drink its depth.

we are the children of silence. We are destined to write.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Children Of Sisyphus

yes your children to walk and talk
and more often
you see them fall from time to time you take them
by their arm
and help
them rise
and let them go
and they keep on falling
and you
keep on helping

there is hope this
time

seeing
the children
grow
and then go

experience explore expose expose
explore
experience

yes, ariel
when they grow up and answer
back

you always
know what to tell them

in this absurdity
you tell
them
to shut up

and get lost for they are not

yours, though they come
from you

you do not
give them
your mind

they have their own when they were first born

it is Time in turn
that tells us best:

we too
shut up
we too
get lost

fair enough

RIC S. BASTASA
The Children Playing On The Beach

poets too have pride.

chicken's pride
is fried.

oil is hot and everyone wants it
spicy.

fried chicken is served on a
flatter.

if somehow you
are hurt
it will, and will always be.

quite funny
for we are all here on a beach
under the sun
in a paradise
just playing with the white sand
and wondering why
the sea
has foams....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Child's Love To Their Parents

it is a reversal of roles now the parents in their old age begin to forget the children grown into strong maturity begin to remember how mother sings to make the child once sleep because she has other things to do in her life now the children too wish also the parents' rest for they too have many other things to do in their life
besides parenting the old square and fair, everything leads to rest in eternity singing Requeiscat en Pace.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chinese New Year

as we welcome the Water Dragon
enter our rivers and seas let us not fail to see
the woods growing alongside the banks and
shores slowly growing new leaves promising us full harvests of better fruits next year

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chirping Birds Of The Town

seldom do they come here because most of the trees are already cut and there is no place for the seasons of nests but here comes a blue heron with a white breast and a black beak perched upon a palm alone and we find ourselves staring at each other there is no pond here and there is therefore no fish there is nothing that shall make it stay and so after a while it flies away until it becomes a mere dot

and then gone
and what is left is the mirage of distance on a reflection, i am more like it when you are not with me in this journey this search of place where i could have sung a song the one that you like when you first gave me that hug that kiss.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chocolate Woman

shapely chocolate woman firm breasts
body curved like a bow mind like an arrow
tall like a tree
so sweet
when i kiss you like the sun
that shines warmly
on the hills

you melt

RIC S. BASTASA
The Choice

the choice
of wearing back the dancing
shoes tonight

leaves me
with your implied admission

you have chosen
to live
like a common man

than die
like a miserable poet

deprived of the most common
need

the loss of love
the shortness of words

RIC S. BASTASA
The Choice Between The Two Huge Mountains

in the deepest part of the night one gets to know the deepest portion of wisdom

it too is alone and you begin to admire yourself
because it is also like you

sufficient in the middle of
this darkness
that engulfs all that have known and had taken pride of light and what is it all about its honorable deception with its commensurate consolations about dreams that do not come true and those realities that pretend to hurt us

and yet
can never destroy us

silence is darkness and darkness which had long been equated with what is not good
has become
false

what we have been taught is only about white and black with nothing in between
their true colors
shallow and deceptive between these two huge mountains of given choices are myriad plains and valleys
where i have chosen to reside.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Choice Is Within Us

out there
the fields are blooming with red and yellow flowers the grass greener
the skies so clear
with patches of white and blue

why just sit there
and focus on the nails of
your feet?

why count the pebbles on the muddy grounds?

why cry? when what our God loves is the smile
of the child in us when we are molded to his happy face?

why reserve those tears of sorrows
when we are meant to shout for joy and finally give in to those happy tears

RIC S. BASTASA
The Choice To Be Happy With Other Happy People

it should have been all about love and family and home

and places of our wonders
and friends who are coming
to join us in this merry making

we have chosen this place we have agreed
this time nothing about tears or bombings or wars or hatred nothing about betrayals and murders or plots
nothing about rebellion and conspiracies

we choose to be happy we choose to be one in this spot we are at peace
we are in love.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Choice....

between dog
and wife, he finally makes
the choice....

come, come,
roll, run,
sit, stand
fetch, go, go, go!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Choices That An Artist Has To Make So That He May Not Be Forgotten By His Stalkers look at this man alone in a boat

on a journey of his own,

you ask some questions: why is he alone? where is his wife? no kids?
no parents?
no paddles? no
game? no sails?
or masts?

is this how an artist has to portray man?
why not fill the boat with people partying in the middle of the sea?
lots of music and drinks and dancing and singing? some rooms for intimacies people have to make love and enjoy their flesh how can an artist be so cruel about a man's state?

now, listen, can you do much better than this?
why not art be
a celebration of life? Put this man in a cruise,
provide him
the needed luxuries,
ballroom, buffet,
live band music,
etcetera,
then have a twist
that everyone cannot forget and remember you instead
sink the Titanic.
RIC S. BASTASA
The Choices We Make...

AT THE time when the pool was murky
you decided finally to bathe

wrong timing i said but just the same you liked it.

at the time when every nook of the pool is crystal clear you leave the place

wrong timing i said, i add what sadness takes you away just the same you say, it is nothing, time is vast there will be more choices to make

i like you, but i did not say it, or if you know, just the same, it is nothing, i say, it is better this way no pain, no glory.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Choices...

he never wished to be just another contributor of ugliness
to this world,
in fact, he wants to be another great artist
to convert all trash
into a beautiful magnum opus
to cover all shit in one huge can and bury it on earth
to hide all evil back in Pandora's box

obviously, another
mission impossible

it is easier this way let shit be shit
and let beauty be beauty let them thrive

and let us see who wins this drive

meanwhile, let us sit
and relax,
we shall just be the gods and
if not
at least be judges
or jury
or

just another garbage
collector.
The Choir, The Bells The Church

he changed
not attracted anymore to the angelic sounds of the choir the tolling bells or its chimes
the church
that used to be his second home has now become a place where he merely passes by unfazed.

RIC S. BASTASA
now i need not blame the culprit of this chopping incident: the head thrown from a cliff rolling down
the deep part of the river below a taxi driver did it where blood of some fish try to conceal
the stink of the the human blood of two women

their four arms wrapped in black plastic bags apart from their thighs thrown in different places of the town

the police officers found some other human parts
under the bridge
far from the others finally located in the canal
of a distant barrio

i read the papers
the headlines of the city about a cold murder

the killer said he admitted the killing and will serve the sentence in jail all because of the woman's word demeaning his manhood all because she wanted him out of her life the words that finally know how to kill to chop and throw the mouth, the lips, the teeth, the tongue the arms and legs and thighs

apart from each other

i do not mean to side with the killer we simply have to be careful with the word that also knows how to kill simple courtesy could have avoided a cold murder

a kind word could have make a better place a world of peace

RIC S. BASTASA
The Chosen Silence Amidst The Indifference

you may think that this world is looking at you asking perhaps if you are alright

the sad point is that it isn't

it is you who must look at it as though you have a thousand eyes and then think that perhaps you have no tongue at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Christening Of The Poet

blue butterflies come out fluttering as soon as he opens his mouth and when he slowly closes it silence is retained like a patch of green grass of that faraway home

thus i christen him:
poet

RIC S. BASTASA
The Church Bell Rings Too Early

call the church bell rings too early call the town's electrician bald and ugly

poor and lonely
he was looking for his wife who left with another man taking with her
his only son

call he could not eat breakfast skipped his supper and would not care for any lunch and then the church bell tolled for him

though not as early as he once did it we shall always remember grief, lament, the sound of the bell too sonorous

to remember
lost affections, betrayal, death and lack of prayer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Churches Of This World

since then the churches of the world have gone mad undesigned are they
to mangers and sheeps and no light from any star gets in there is no window where the moon can shine

its roof is a thick as their self-made tenets their walls are impenetrable by the simplicities of our lives their seats are reserved for the kinds and other majesties

there is no crib in there for the baby to cry
and sleep

its floors in shining marbles its pillars in gold and silver that even God would have second thoughts
coming.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Circle That Circles In...

when i speak
i do not really map out home when the home erases the paths towards it

it does not speak about a misfortune

such is the rule of the pigeons their sense of home is tattooed on their feathers as light as a paper where a letter about sorrow is written as it is

things only become themselves as air becomes guests of the curtains they signify what presence is all about it could be about us or the others

there is no perfect map to differences that scatter themselves like fingers but soon when a prayer is formed the hands cup like home where as you see we first began

RIC S. BASTASA
The Circuit....

before it was like you are entering the gateway to an island a paradise in your mind and you wish all your relatives are there people meet you and they seem to look the same you ask for their names and you find out we all come from the same line in this island of too much familiarity, the smallness of a world where everyone is so interconnected and yet what the heck they find their own common greed and selfishness until finally they stay away from you to eat their own food and drink what they brought here, and when they start to sing because they too become drunk with what they are, you finally find yourself looking for the boat to take you back away from them....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Circuitous Route Of Existence

i should have stopped a long time ago, i should have ceased like a light feeding upon itself a candle eating all its body of wax,

i should have done it earlier, quit and leave and not look back,

i never did it, and there must be a reason an explanation for this addiction, a justification for moving on,

i am not saying that it is you,
neither myself,

perhaps it is this emptiness that is seeking fullness

this fullness that empties itself because it is not at comfortable when things are heavy on a journey,

perhaps it is a circle, and there is no knowing where to start where to end nothing marked,
all the same, dance of life, monotonous, consuming, and yet never knowing....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Circus Of The Grasshoppers his summer grass is tall and everywhere
the sun is hot and the clouds are clear and lo, there you see the dancing grasshoppers in a circus of a caucus sounding of the sounds of mating.

RIC S. BASTASA
The City

the city was once a forest of trees
when the pioneers
arrive with their axes and each tree fell
and the river swollen mothers had to have more children
and fathers had to plow more fields
and plant the rows and rows of corn
as monkeys on top of the remaining trees
tease
the grasshoppers
find enough sleep
and the ants keep on building their empire on mounds
and mounds of dry land

that was how a city was formed
my father said

RIC S. BASTASA
The City At Night

oh my
the city at night
is full of lonely men and women
begging for love

the neon lights
blink without shame

RIC S. BASTASA
The City Lights

when the day changes its color from pale to gray then absolute darkness
i start to get into this little frenzy of sitting on the roof of the house and see how the city lights itself
like a glittering
woman ready for the next party

accept the fact that even in darkness
the city too knows how to please itself
and continue with its usual moans
and noise

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clan Meeting

we were inside a circle talking about the past the years have made us forget what our old folks taught us there is always a time for nothing but free talk until some of you begins to cajole and flatter and i begin to see dogs and foxes around the table some shall act as temporary prey lots of words to seduce and entice but here we are we are no longer innocent children and we are no longer giving and as compassionate as those war times that give birth to mercy we are numb as stone with unpredictable thoughts inside our bodies crawling like snakes so wary about the next prey no one loses neither anybody wins in this game of lies and then i look at my watch it is 4:30 in the afternoon and i really have

to go
i have a sunset to watch another orange picture to take.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Class Of 2011

i get lost in their calls, they were so gentle in their pleas i got swayed into a dance of the masses
i gave in
went down that tower of ivory and told myself from now own
there will be no more standards nothing strict but simply a camaraderie a familiarity
a letting go

they shall be judged by themselves in their own standards and it will be too sweeping and annihilating

at the end, it is the self and nothing more that suffers upon its own negligence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Class Reunion 2010

when i go back there again riding in the same car that i bought twelve years ago, i surely know what happens again with all same faces and same talks always remembering those who perennially are absentees backbiting those whom we think never liked us even for once i know that it will be the same sadness same old song rewinding in short, another boring event of my life and so, to surprise myself, that i am not the kind of worm that follows what is felt ahead of me, i decided finally just to stay put, read my favorite novel and then take my much needed nap.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clean And Dirty Side Of Our Lives

the clean side of us is the one we wear like a white suit with a red carnation in a pocket it is less visited but we like to have it always worn in practically all occasions, we are proud of it but deep inside it we detest it since it makes us tiptoe upon what we really are and what we want that happens ever since and all of us wants to deny it but we always understand what is this truth all about no one speaks from the crowd and when one speaks we do not bother for fear that we may be identified and well you know how this small world can be too private and too cruel you do not get it perfectly the situation is tense

the dirty side of us is actually inside that suit it stinks but it is the most delicious stink that we ever tasted it is food and we love it secretly in the dining table of our room we feast upon it and out mouths and hands catch the dirt that it is bringing yet we have many tissues or rugs or handkerchiefs to rub away what makes others uncomfortable specially those who are more pretentious than we are pretense is a virtue nowadays and being a hypocrite is being professional with our everyday dealings

be it the church or the capitol or even with the village chief

i do not want to go direct to the point for now i am hazy, the world is grey anyway and look at you there is dirt in your lips and your fingernails are uncut.

i, of course, understand this matter perfectly, the norms perhaps you must have noticed by now why the haze is intended why the fog is not taken from the path where we all must pass tonight.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cleanest Man....

he is clean
he prides about the beard that he has just shaven

he is clean
there is no hair left on his head no hair between his thighs
and legs

he is clean
his chest is bare now his heart slowly
beating

he is clean as he is empty
like a room without furniture and drapes

he is clean and without
sin
he who has not done
anything
and can do not wrong again...

he is clean now
for he is dead....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clear Lines Of Our Battlefields In The Modern World Of Deception

i have met the bad ones and noted them

i made a stand to fight them one by one

i made enemies where they used to be friends and here we shall again make a clear division of our battle lines.

RIC S. BASTASA
oh,
for the freshness
this limpid river competes
with the clarity
of the white skies

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clever And The Kind

it is not surprising that the clever and the kind do not go together for one gives the other takes away

one keeps the head high the other one keep its heart higher but when they come together and be admired somewhere it is only when both have died.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clicking Of The Camera

you are the guest here cousin and we do not wish to disappoint you and show you some pains and so we had dinners with you together we are one family with sweeter concerns for each little futures: no sutures, no vultures on the last day that you are with us yes, this vacation of yours we will be at the porch sending you off with your bags and some of our goods we pose as a family, we all smile and there you go with your clicking again:

smile! we all smile as you have instructed.
and then you go with our sweet memories.

if you have only seen the nearby mountain laden with gray clouds, on top of our roofs these gray clouds shall start to pour its rain

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cliff......

even the cliff
has its own way of becoming like a river

when the wind touches its peak
it flows and cannot stop the fog worries much how to stop
it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cliffs Are Still There Inanimately Intimate Upon Itself Without Any Word To Say the mountains are there and with their heights they overlook the sea and the

plains

one stands at this height sitting upon a rock his chin upon his fist
contemplating

if one man jumps from this cliff and decide to end his life the mountains are still there

and with their heights they overlook
the sea and the
plain

the cliffs are still there inanimately intimate upon itself without any word
to say

RIC S. BASTASA
The Closed Door

on that day i lost the key to the room
i waited for some solutions breaking the locks and open the door or climbing on the other side and entering through the window but my arms for intrusion are weaker now my hands tremble at the thought that once in my childhood i did climb walls and break open
the window
and was so badly beaten

i keep on waiting for some solutions until i realized that anyway this is not my room and there is nothing in there and so not being that foolish
i simply walked away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Closet?

everything in there
is clean
folded neatly
that is what you will see
when you finally open it it is locked and somehow you have no key what you see is not what you get what you give is only what your mind
feeds

do you remember what beast survives
in that unending struggle of the good/bad wolf
indian story?

ahh, you got it.
the one that you feed
finally wins.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clothes We Wear

come to think of it
the bodies we wear are clothes

so wear it well

keep the dignity intact and walk as though you own the world
as though no one owns
you

keep that healthy mind abreast with sound thoughts and be always the
light

the moon at night and the sun throughout the days
of your life

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clothesline

it tells it all the real score
my neighbor's house
silent as a dead rat

at the clothesline
only his brief and socks

her panties are no longer there
and the nagging stopped

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cloud And The Wind

back to the basics of our longing back to the cloud and the wind
and the river
and the grass and our shadows those were the times when what we need is all that we carry light and cloudy
less light more shadows less words more of the silence there was more understanding then no arguments about the winding paths as to where these may finally lead us to destruction or construction to life or death?

i zip my pants and then move on.
you stay and settle for more imagination i am the cloud and the wind pieces of lightness and shapelessness you are the earth and the tree heavy and stuck

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cloud As A Self Floating In Space

I can only think of a cloud as the only comparison

i think of it, and thinking makes it more like it thoughts floating, self floating, no anchor is visible no rope no reason is enough to hold it and put it steadily upon an accepted principle a universal dogma

i am tired of catching a self it will be futile, night and day, it is the same trembling saying i do not know anymore how to live i do not know anymore how to be calm perhaps the floating is just the usual way of things to be steady some other time after it has spent all that is necessary no one feels for me, or for us we are tired too making configurations

it is the same birds that form in our minds even boats, even kites, even leaves what we feel is always the fleet of flitting moments

let us leave it that way.
Let things simmer down a bit.

Float, float self, do not attempt to hold on to anything be like a cloud, go anywhere

be free
until space is traversed completely, and then at that end you may be steady again like a continent of trees and stones and dried magma

by then when it is through give a little way to a crack for our new selves to grow again.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cloud Dweller

it is indeed confusing why you have given more importance to those which do not give you anything in return the tree that bore much fruit you have not minded at all one is asking if you have gone out of your mind why chase those that float rather than those which you can hold and touch you are living on the clouds leaving the castle of your land

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clouds Of Narcissus

the clouds of narcissus pass by today along a clear pond by the side of a rice paddy they stop to get a good glimpse of their faces and bodies cottony white, shades of blue, pluffy, and soft they stop and take a longer gaze, admiring every beauty of its hands and fingers, a longer time an island of grass some reeds and dry leaves get curious about what is happening why the clouds stop and made a longer stare over the clear reflection of their bodies on the little pond. They talk. They are curious.

and then the clouds finally get done with what is usual. they left. Slowly sail away from what they are seeing lovingly.

Nothing happens since then. They own no one owns them.
They leave. They do not know how to love. Neither are they loved.

They are gone. The island of grass is silent. The reeds hush.
And the pond has become murky.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clouds Too Have A Way Of Looking

the clouds too have a way of looking at themselves on the pond its mirror for a while they stay there and admire their puffs and cottons the reeds standing by the murky water

take pride

an island of grass stays beside them then the clouds slowly move away nobody owns them and they do not touch anybody too.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clown

the blackeye of society underneath the heavy paints
of faces
the teary eye
and the bruises
the gritting teeth
inside a cup
of ice cream

RIC S. BASTASA
The Clown And Dracula....

welcome both
the black and white birds often they come uninvited perching upon a tree that fronts your house

meanwhile the stairs that lead to the road to the city waits for the sounds of your footsteps....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cluelessness Of An Affair

i was there
she said and found it allegedly she
when she arrived there she lost herself clueless as to what happened to her but that was it when she saw him naked in the garden doing his own thing which he said was also a way of discovering himself and losing it
just the same
they were in this together
and then they parted without really knowing
why

she was just herself and so was he

we who heard about it remained clueless
but who would care?

RIC S. BASTASA
last night
it rained heavily and in your sleep
you hear the loud cries of the rain drops on the roof of your house

the cats and dogs
are asleep
the carpets all too
silent

the waters rose
the cockroaches are
flying
it is the season of their mating....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cockroach's Survival....

i guess the secret of the cockroaches survival underneath the filth is its having to accept the edict that one must only mind its own business,

of loving dirt and feeding upon it, and of loving fellow filthy underground elements and pretend that all is well for as long as no one preys and eats another dirty dozen or filthy fellow, and when everyone is tired and asleep and dreaming and mindless, one simply has to enjoy that beautiful world, alone in the kitchen and always nibbling.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coconut

the tree of life
this coconut tree leaves for the roof midribs for the broom its meat all around from food to dessert
to cooking oil to diesel and even engine fuel

diesel and even
engine fuel

this coconut poem shade for lovers
on the sandy beach
an imagery of breast for sucking to
a man's zest,
a poet's quest
best, blessed

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coconut Tree

i won't say that it is you. I always hide things away from you. You see it is the house where we live. It is happy. You say i am not in my mind. How can a house be happy?

(how can i tell you that i am unhappy? i look for an island in this house, and it is happy that i have not found it here)

what is that island all about? it is all about me. It is a small island, with one coconut tree that i love.
It is touching the sky. And yet it has no roots to make it stay.
Soon the wind comes and the cocoanut tree shall be taken. I want to hold on to that tree. But i cannot find that island.

when i tell you this, you will say you're crazy. You lied to me. If you only tell me the truth

(if i tell you the truth i will find the island but the tree that i love will no longer be there. That is the curse.
When i find it, it will be gone.) do you think that that tree has leaves of gold, has trunks of silver? do not accuse of me of greed. It is a tree without roots. It has wings. And this saddens me.

A lot.
The Code.....

we know all about it because we lived it,
we were there, we touched, we knew every nook of the place every thread, every hole, we felt the warmth of burnt wood, we almost suffocated with the smoke, we heard each scream, felt envy for the groans before that, we knew the hardness of the metal, the loudness of the bullet, we knew the lengths of silence, the right time to go,
the exact time to slip away, everything must be understood by heart, no word must be wasted, you do not have to hear the clicking of the clock,
mud on the wrist, rain on our heads,
the creaking of bones,
short sighted love, suppressed desires, unexplained departures,
uncertain hellos,
the life of a vagabond, the lawless mind,
the rebel in all of us, all the mountains, and the plains even the rivers, have kept their mouths shut.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coin Inside My Shoes....

there is a certain coldness of our hands which we want to feel alone by ourselves
not wanting to share it because it may destroy what goodness lies in our pretenses,

perhaps, yet this time, we are not yet ready for the consequences that the truth may bring us

who shall want a house that suddenly destroys itself like the sandcastles of our shores? there is a theory that things move from order to chaos love fades away as always, people go to war and kill their own kind, trees fall, water surrenders in the dry bed, whatever that rises, bursts whatever goes up, goes down, abased.

you know me, i give up, i raise my hands in surrender, i walk away, and find new paths new niches, where order and peace finds its new nest you know me, whatever happens, i keep hope, like a coin inside my shoes and i can tell for sure now that my dead mother is still right....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cold Cuts Of God ...

the night is cold
inside the room
our bodies are colder our emotions
frozen
and we are
like the cold cuts
of God
served upon a platter
with no one picking

but don't worry
for soon
sunshine comes like some knives
by the shutters of our morning
windows

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cold Night

calls me to write
a poem

it expects something romantic
to inspire it

the moon is waiting and the stars are excited but i realize who am i to please them?

and who are they
to be pleased?

and so they all ended disappointed

and then inside my room i write the poetry of
my life

it did not inspire me
at all
neither did it excite me like the way the stars and moon dream it to be

but i guess i have told myself what i have never told
the world
and that is good enough
for me

if the cold night calls me again to write poems
i shall tell it frankly i am cold myself
and you do not need me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cold Tea Of Otteri

do i get a cold tea?

i prefer it hot really
and the green one
and a moist butter cake to go with it.

cool...

the cold tea
or colder, i detest
the trauma is still there in the coldness of her body and hands when she slept with me

she was dead

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coldness Of Indifference

i watch a bonfire it spreads upon a bush into the forest of dry trees

i watch a conflagration
i am inside it
i am burning and burning
still

i am not consumed
i am fire
i eat the forest of dry trees i spread in the bush until all is consumed and then i stop

i am back to myself nothing really happened then we resume the conversation about fire

you speak about it your heart is not involved you never felt any heat i know because you are cold there is no heat in you you, in a few minutes, die.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coldness Of Stones

it is good
you have finally settled not for less

you have found love
stay there

we who are still floating
in the sky
have to move on and even till eternity for our hunger is best when not satisfied

we know who we are we are more that what love can give sometimes we are the clouds you see it is sad
you have not felt the joys we have when we assume the drops of
rain
the vagueness of fog
the coldness of stones

RIC S. BASTASA
The Collaterals

the collateral and peripheries of this world play truant

like a child on the beach gets a stick and begins to scribble whatever thoughts come to his
mind

the woman sitting under the coconut tree does not see how silly it is how meaningless

she is the mother
what she thinks is only love of her flesh
and bone of her bone

in my stroll alone early morning i also understand once a child once i had that mother.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Color Of Lust

electric blue
body of a man muscular and strong and firm
and silent

he is the backdrop of the principal figure of a leaf
whose tip is melting
butter
dripping
like a dropp of red melon juice
cut
slit from a deep
wound.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Color Purple

a friend of mine is obsessed with purple she says it's a royal color fits for kings and queens and she feels like a princess on her purple hair
her purple dress
and purple bra and purple shoes
the walls of her house are painted the railings of the stairs the windows
the doors are all purple now the flowers in her garden and the leaves of her trees the grass
all purple too
her speech is purple too the movies she watch are all in the shade of purple her car turned purple too royal color that is what she says i tell her bluntly, ' You are boring, purple! '

RIC S. BASTASA
The Colors

sky blue clouds
saffron flowers
green green grass
orange horizons
fading afternoon
black starless nights pastel brown nipples
spreading legs
on white mattresses.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Comfort

there is comfort
in let it be
let go
let it be done

like you are in a ship
not bound for
anywhere

but death and you do not really know what lies ahead what to do at the last hour when the ship
collides to the closing of your eyes sad, tragic perhaps but let it be done

let his will be done and you rest like you finally decide to just lay in bed
think of nothing
not even the next step

just being here and wait till everything is gone away like an evaporating mist

RIC S. BASTASA
The Comfort And Ease That We Embrace In Certainties

there is always comfort in something certain basics of life: where to go what to do when it is finished

there is ease
knowing what a chair is all about or the exact time when darkness comes

but there is something more something that we perhaps all know there is calamity too in being certain in the flowing and the expulsion of the tight hold of the bud

how can one face the sun? when wilting is certain sooner than thought how can one face the mirror and count the factitious of years the shedding of masks the slow showing of the first bone of the skull

RIC S. BASTASA
The Comfort Of Silence

silence is, and will always be, comfortable, like a stone, mute to the changes of the season, and no matter who takes it, a child or an old man, the stone keeps the secrets of their wrongdoings.

the comfort of silence
to the wrongdoer, makes the stone, the most trusted friend, no one talks inside the hardness even if it is broken, into shattered pieces the stone carries the silence it is numbed by the centuries of human oppression.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Comfort Zone

when i let you go, when i help you pack your things because you need more space i simply want to impress upon you that i am easing your pain my arms are not enough the skies are bluer and the seas are wider

as always

your hands are too small you lips have shun away the wonders of smiles this world is a circle and it is circling even without us it will keep revolving even if we want to cease the pain will always be there and i have learned to master it like the way i have kept control about what my arms can do about what my eyes can choose what to see and what to imagine

you need to understand some more and i know who can better teach you go with the waves and let them carry you to the navel of the earth

let the winds carry you to the edge of your world
let there be no ill-feelings let there be memories let them be children who shall give you tiny voices urging you to find
home

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coming Company....

i thought i am the only person in the room
there is no sound
of a bird chirping
outside there is the gift of evening
tiny stars hanging and the glow of city lights far from here i thought i was the only one gifted with sadness that which by time i have learned to love i thought life is not that fair with me put in the the utmost prejudice of a soundless existence

then one day you came a shadow cast from that morning light
on the door that i have never opened.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coming Election...

doing the season of good images the language of our bright future is here more promises and the usual lies and deceptions we have first lighted the candles for the dead and rejoice over a decadent past we mean nothing now as we listen for some more

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coming Of Inspiration

the likes of you may have the power
to kick doors
and break it open

but i know you gentle dog of my premises
you know how to wait and wag your tail
as you sit there waiting for inspiration to come like a mad master who does not know what time is it in the morning to timely eat breakfast barking won't work either it can make it angry

sit there gentleness if you must try sleeping for a while dreams sometimes come like a fog cold and hazy temporarily blinding

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coming Out From The Door Of The House

the excitement came like a gushing water from the mountain of stone that moment when you turn off the lights of the house and you go out of the door as i wait for you

at the road and then we smile and kiss and we hold hands to make another stroll to the night of our lives for as i have told you there is more to this world, even at night, the stars still dot the skies and the air is fresh from the far mountains coming here just to make us feel how important we

are

how beautiful is life, how meaningful is living, how the world still needs us for its being.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coming Psychosis

the rain falls
heavily on my roof with all windows closed where no wind can be as close
and free,
i hear hoofs of horses
and cows
getting near me
and i just feel that i am nowhere to
go
with no place to
be....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Coming...

how many dances are there? what is the name of each step?

how many more lines? give me the name of that poem?

i was there.
we watch the dance of death. We stare at the growing chaos, the mayhem, and the pandemonium, the dogs keep on barking, some one bad is coming.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Comma That Makes The Big Difference due the children who walk and pass along the road where your house is facing are always noisy you pay attention to what they are talking about you call it nonsense and it angers your quest for deep understanding you are quite sad and very unhappy in your chosen niche of silent isolation they are carefree and unconcerned about you happy about their nonsense & selfishness there is a big difference between you and them that i think, you must explore some more it is the comma that makes the big difference in the sentence that you have duly imposed upon your self.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Commandments Of Poetry

I shall love poetry
For it is the conversation of God Over my world

This is not a godless art Though I name no God
I am bearing witness
To Him creating these Poems

I do not write poetry
To excite myself
I write them
To sustain
My soul

I shall never use poetry
As a pretext
For fame and glory
It is my spiritual Devotion

Poetry is pure Virginal
It is not found In conformity

I shall bring forth my poems
As a mother brings forth Her children
Out of my own flesh
And blood

This poem shall not be An analgesic to kill the pain But it shall be the wine That puts me to action

Each poem created Shall leave me humble
It can never equal my dreams
And always inferior
To God’s marvelous Creations
Always second
To Nature.

Poetry rises from my heart
In these words
And they have no purpose But to purify

This poetry shall grow
The flowers of compassion To console
The hearts of the lonely
And those who are lost

RIC S. BASTASA
The Commercial Horse In The Crowded City...

the horse in Quiapo listens to its footsteps sets on another commercial trip guided only by the whipping of

its master,

the driver
who earns only what is enough for a day's survival

it is all about himself only no one else
not for any horse or this old horse
with stinking dung

on covered eyes it sees no danger

the reality that the city is crowded with ten wheeler trucks and taxis and
jeepneys and luxury cars, and people without purpose
at all

a native is bloody lying dead hit by a car without a plate number another victim of hit and run there are no stories of interest to tell the policeman is smoking at the nearby eatery, reading a komiks magazine the horse, back to the servant hourse, it is cool

it is not disturbed at all....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Commission On Audit

gets so corrupt here even in audit

commission first then audit later

try it baby.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Common Ground....

God even has to cover all skeletons with flesh
and skin,

perhaps to make all these ugly structures appear tolerable, nay even more admirable than what they actually are,

it is this covering that created that sense of inequality

all skeletons are equal all bones are the same no woman, no man, no rich no poor,
no straight no gay
no priest no layman
no worker no master

all mountains level down to the plains of our commonality

and God is so wise to make us arrive at this ending bone to dust and then the silence of it all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Competition

as i wake up
i prepare for another round of competition about the day's strategies the hour's demands the dictates of the last seconds

i rub my eyes
wake up
carry my body dragging it like a heavy metal

i wash my face
check my attache case
taking in all the papers

i see myself in the mirror
dressed for the day an attire
not fit for any embarrassment polished shoes
oiled hair
well ironed pants infallible polo shirt

i step out of the door
get inside my car
and now i am ready to compete against the previous self
that i had.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Compulsion To Settle For Simplicity....

there is no denying that as a native i think like a native

am no Englishman from London Bridge
but a Bisayan from Mindanao,

as such, i have no choice but just to be myself, in the utter simplicity of my language translating myself word by word in the nuances of your Anglo-American world, there is this attempt to be a part of

your world

did they say that Enlightenment? that Genius of ideas is only possible in your world and not in the land of my ancestors who know nothing but only about spices and spears and arrows and jugs of wine and tattoos and barbaric songs?

let me say what i want to say in a few vocabularies you may not listen, but at least i have spoken.

I am thus compelled for that simplicity that allows me to write this way.

Because i have nothing more to offer you Because what i have is only this insistence to open my heart and speak what little love is still left in there.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Compulsory Encasement

i shall miss the wind outside how it feels when i am inside a room encased inside
a glass window and a door that must remain closed because it is needed...

i shall miss the sound of the city and i shall miss you but for the meantime i must find joy
in the flower by my window kissed by a butterfly that merely passes by....

no one stops here, everyone leaves...

RIC S. BASTASA
'The Concept Of The Artist As A Rebel'

revolutionary,
insurgent,
revolutionist,
mutineer,
insurrectionist
guerrilla,
terrorist,
freedom fighter
a person who resists authority control, or convention.
nonconformist,
dissenter,
dissident,
iconoclast,
maverick;
informal

bad boy

eye are all your synonyms.

nonrhymer
unpoetic, heresy,
blank versist,
ugly version

bat, upside down stilts in the skies
roof on the sea

boats flying int he sky bridges without rivers

artists without cause floating, floating like a cloud against Aleppo skies you pick up a coin and you bend for a time and i have a time looking at you

for that moment
i begin talking to myself as you rise
and look at the side of the road where cars are passing by

this thought is mine alone if i share it to you i may hurt

i have a conclusion
but i will keep it forever to myself
i have no right to hurt you with all our
years

you look at the menu you like a strawberry shake

i prefer a cup of hot green
tea

i am the one bitter
i admire you for staying sweet

i am bitter and it is not your fault it will be unfair
if i keep on justifying my errors
for love

love is always unfinished it will always grow its roots and tendrils and climb upon other fences

i sip bitterness how i wish to tell you something else you order a tiramisu you offer a slice and you put it in my mouth

how can i refuse it?
in the middle of my bitterness i still keep that respect and so i swallow it

'it is delicious' i say and then you smile

i am guilty. I am.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Condemnation

i am condemned to write without end
because you never loved me because i never confessed it to you because if i confess it to you you shall condemn love in return vomit all its contents before my face and love does look like love anymore i am condemned to write and many shall read because of pity

i never wanted to be pitied i have my own dignity.

i shall be writing forever
about love
unrequited, and the world shall know about a pain without end.

i shall find hope in reincarnation.
i shall be a tree with shiny leaves.
you shall take shade.
i shall be the bed where you shall sleep the nights of your lifetime.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Condemnor....

i have forgiven her,
like the saints
i have to justify

she does not know what she is saying she despised the one i love most she hates what i like she is beautiful (but i honestly think inside she is horrible i just can't say it i do not really know her to well- but i have forgiven her and i like it that way she is not my love and i am not the way she talks

i am not the way she condemns love and the beloved i perfectly understand, she is lost in the midst of this honest to goodness conversation, and were it not for the man she loves i could have hit her with my tongue.

The Conditions Are Clear

the first time i met you (and you said you like me) i have already warned you (that i am good for nothing that you must not expect anything for i am no good)

the conditions are clear
from the beginning when we proclaimed that we are too in love we promised we look for nothing and take nothing except what we are and what we have within the grasp of our hands you changed, and i too changed we begin to look for something beyond our grasps we have become insatiable and we want to hold the future that is still not there we realize that this is the end and so we make a new door with an exit sign we left a smile and then we parted.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Consequence...

she spends most of her time (she does not know perhaps that it has been shortened) building a new house choosing the landscape of her new cottage at the Mediterranean territory had some chosen lovers to sleep with on those lonely nights (and she will still have more than enough, she giggles) drunk more, laughed louder than before everything seems to be funny and the wit keeps flowing from the gutters and canals of her pastimes that following dawn

it was so cold (her last, i tell you)

before the first fighting cock in the fenced house cocks she lies there

breathless....

slashed throat, bathing with her own sticky drying blood

alone

and even those walls and soft expensive bed do not give the clue as to who and why.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Consequences Of Being Outcasts... the feeling that what we ask is not given makes us what we are not supposed to be protesters

we set aside the serious business of being responsible we give in to the seduction of our souls we pamper ourselves with all these pleasures possible why should we be like all of you? when we are not
really
inside your circles
we are the outcasts now and with all the disguises of these blessings
we can now do what we want no one tells us
since we do not follow we do not look for roads anymore because these lead us to nowhere anyway
all the places belong to us now because we belong to no
one

RIC S. BASTASA
The Consolation....

when a leaf falls down lands on the the face of the river that flows finally to the arms of the sea
what is really the consolation?

the leaf has kissed the lips of the water and those who say that a kiss is not sweet is altogether wrong...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Conspirators.....

ey fit.
one was like
the bullet
to the gun.

waiting in ambush
for what they have long desired.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Constancy Of A Noble Purpose

how must i tell you again it is not the intelligence but the constancy of purpose
at first and then you either do not listen when you heard me clear or you simply cannot accept it and
change
you believe always on intelligence and so i watch you risk everything upon it trying to explain every grain of sand and there too many of them and they invade your intelligence and they bury it
then
finally killing you suffocating you because the sands in their constancy of purpose
never believe what intelligence preaches and bragged.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Constant Black Bird On A Wire In My Mind

...of all the things that i see here:
goosed fields of Oryza needle rains, ice cold air, Y-paths, footsteps on mud, murky water, leafless trees, bald mountains, cracked rocks, abandoned hut, emaciated buffalo, naked child,

why you? why the importance of you going into my head like a leech and taking what blood i still have in my veins?

even if you are just a memory you kick, you push me, you make me feel the liveliness of pain black bird on a wire, alone, ostracized by the flock or just loving it alone

in the dark?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Consuming Anguish

true,
the anguish is always found in the need that is not always satisfied the useless anguish that consumes us
if we do not mind what to really do and rightly so in our next moves...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Contemplative

i rest my chin
on my left palm

i focus my eyes
in you lying in bed

with no clothes on while you sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Contemplative...

an empty platter left in the yard of green grass filled with the songs of birds as breakfast

to blend with the lyrics
of an empty mind

an empty stomach
those idle hands and these numb arms

the tranquil soil
begins to say those prayers

RIC S. BASTASA
you shall hate me because i pretend that i do not know and i have decided not to speak anymore
about
what happened on those disappearing years on those disappearances of whom we put love
so much

for instance about our love for an ideology how many years have we studied the book and put each page into practice?

did you count the catastrophe the numbers which have remained numbers
because we have become so numb like a piece of rotten wood

a paddle
not for the boat but for the infliction of pain?

i hate the details now and i shall not enumerate the names
of those that parted without saying the right word for it

when we meet
we do not know each other that is the agreement we forged
upon a rock
we wrote upon the sea
we spread upon those dusty mountains
without trails for those who still want to follow

i am stopping now and that is what i think justice is all about

i am an individual now i carry a name
i wear a uniform and fill up a daily time record i am a tool
as i have told you
and i am not a candidate anymore for any disappearances

call me a contented cow
i am numb and i do not care anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
The Contentment

i delight seeing the boat leave the smoke is in our side thick black smoke seemingly like hands still reaching for the abandoned land as though it is attached to the shore and the old buildings

i wonder sometimes why i delight in departures why i at the same promise myself that this is the only land i have
and i will be staying here forever

at night i am in love too much in love to the silence of my solitude

from here where i stand beside this window looking at the shadow of that boat i am happier

simplifying and filtering my thoughts sipping the joy of the moment i do not dream of more i ask nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Contrast Between The Film And The Reality Outside The House.

at the end of the film was at the top of the tower meeting the villain Kenji telling him that he is nothing without a wife without a child.

i do not know but it was at that point when i finally heard that it is raining outside.

how is it that i am too fixed at that nothingness.

the world is filled with rain.
the earth is thirsty.
and the leaves are singing.
the cicadas finally keep their mouths closed.

and then the frogs
merry on the grass, jumping and swimming.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Contrasts

cemented pavements
green grass

sounds of motorized cabs songs of birds on the trees towering skyscrapers tall old mahogany trees

neon lights on city escapes stars on moonlit skies

watching the mountains half covered with morning mists busy on TV for the serial stories strolling on the white sandy beach observing the behavior of seagulls window shopping at the malls watching 3D movies

eating deep fried chicken wings licking very sweet strawberry ice cream peeling the ripe mango savoring the yellow juice feeling the pulp watching the sunset from a high mountain reading a best seller novel inside your room.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Conversationalist....

he can strike a note on the side of the glass with his fork and then begin to sing or hum an old tune and retain the lyrics in his mind and move on till the last line he talks about it without any emotion involved nothing personal anyway he keeps on murmuring this is pure recollection, those tea and dates when he had a good time in the desert with her when what surrounds them are the uninterested sands when the sun keeps the heat as they cool themselves inside the car as their lips keep burning as he keeps on licking what does not hurt he is a good conversationalist who talks alone responsive to the demands of his solitude.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cooking Pot

our cooking pot is not made of porcelain or silver or gold but it is made of the mud
of this earth
hardened by time and fire and too much waiting

our patience consumed our waiting had been too long about this cooking pot, earthen
where we put all our dreams and cook them like rice porridge, all of our dreams fired by the woods of our reminiscence our longings our loneliness our daily concerns our future wishes

and then when the time comes to open and see and smell what rice porridge is we say we like it we say we love it only to be repulsed by this visitor in the house

'this is not cooking! This is not good! ' and he stares at us and says, we need more fire, more wood, more time to have the perfect porridge i went out unable to stand this hunger unable to see what this visitor says it is our fault we allowed him in we open our doors and windows and let him sleep in our room as we lay on the floors and keep ourselves on the stairs.

'this is too much' i said.

'he must leave this house at once' i told you.

this is our pot. this is our porridge. this is our cooking.
and we must eat. we must love what we have.

'get out of my house' i said.

and then i am relieved from an opression.
i am happier now. My pot is earthen. Its bottom is sooty black.

i am blue. And i do not really mind.
This is my porridge. You may take it, if you like.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cool Living Waters

cold living waters of spring plunge in like a hot rod wanting pacification flames of fire cinders of desire let us be calm and swim in the cool living waters of divinity

nude we realize there is shame and we stand and take the clothes of morality then we rest under the cool shades of green trees beside the brook
the winds from the mountains refresh what dimples we have and we reflect upon the words of God time moves and stays a while and this evil of boredom comes idle moments craving for more and then we stand and play under the sun we run, we play, we sweat and those that watch us begin to think that we are sinners on the loose cold living waters i ask bathe and wash all their dirty minds

RIC S. BASTASA
The Copy.....

it has always been that way.
you have never changed always wanting for change, always discarding what is here, what comes next, and what should have stayed.

what stars
made you? what sign? what discontent is
there
implanted in your genetic code.

you invited
this and then later you tell
it is not.

there must be
this curse.
you never want
fame,
no honor suits
you.

if they only knew where your greatness lies,
they would have
copied you.
The Core In Her Being

there is a core in her being that you must penetrate, that spot where you also release all that you have

where your souls fuse and become free

it is where stones are converted into birds of freedom thoughts exploding like suns giving birth to a number of stars

RIC S. BASTASA
The Core Of Our Being

what i was to the core remains to be what i am today and perhaps even tomorrow: same thirst, same hunger, same longing, this constant unsatisfaction lingers like time and tide and surge and sting, the skin loosens, the bones break, these feet tremble, hairs fall, cheeks shrink, eyes fail, death comes....

it will be the same to the core nothing changes.................................................................
...........................................................................................................................................................
...........................................................................................................................................................
...........................................................................................................................................................

RIC S. BASTASA
The Corrupt Couple

at the dining table they discuss how to finish their big swimming pool fronting their mansion surrounded by a high cr concrete perimeter fence

Ric S. Bastasa
The Country

i let you drive
as i sit calmly on the rear side of the car, i do not wish to speak to you as i watch the countryside on a very hot summer

rice fields newly harvested cracking chunks of soil, brown grass, stacks of hay, trees with yellow leaves, smoke from the house chimneys, patches of fog hanging on mountains behind us on this road towards home dusts, dusts, dusts.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Couple Sings

evidently, they are a nice pair both of them are songbirds in their own right

ey they had a duet in the party and we clapped our hands ey they are old now and yet still very much in love with each other

as they were singing a love song when we clapped
he made chances on her butt while she touched his face what a melodrama

and then at the end of the love song they kissed each other

there is joy
we cheered them

Love so true which age cannot murder. This is when the couple sings
their own love song.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Couple...

she is weaving
she has an intricate design inside her mind and for now
i do not see it
she is secretive and does not want to be asked just like me
in my own privacy

i am also weaving
stories of my own
and the plot is complicated
in the manner of
whodunnit.

we are the weavers inside this room and it is not so well lighted by the moon

we seldom discuss what is missing
we decide not to talk about what mess we are in

tomorrow morning
we shall weave again
under the heat of the sun we are never burned
never charred

tonight we shall be in this room
again
we shall weave again
the designs in our minds our fingers entwine on matters sanguine.
The Courage To Be Human

have caution
and this is another irony have caution about what we must say in whispers
in baited breaths
so the gods may not be offended so we shall not be hit with their lightning rods reducing us all into ashes

it is enough
this cautioning is over i shall confront the gods and demigods about this and that this that emaciates me
that which
makes a scarecrow of me that which makes nothing of men but hays and rags
and rotten eggs
and dusty fields.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Craving Of The Flesh

when i write this i am full, my stomach bloats i am holding something
inside me
with all restraint and if i do not follow the law of expulsion
i may die of this poison

i must empty what is here inside
to make me feel well

there is poetry in my head poetry in my stomach
soon
if i keep them and not let them go out
i may die

and so here i am
noting this metaphor of expulsion to let you know that i cannot stop writing for health reasons and not for anything else

RIC S. BASTASA
The Crazy Cat....

when the naught
cat pushed the aquarium
it broke on the floor
water spilled sipped
on the Persian carpet
as the lone goldfish
grasped for breaths
the crazy cat
took its delicious bite
and into the window it slips
away
with its
ten lives.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Crazy Thing That Is About To Happen...

she is tense
i know it from the very start the house is too big for her presence

the emptiness is magnified by the huge windows and the living room with only a chair as furniture

the loneliness is creepy like an old vine by the window without leaves

she is getting more tense and i am getting afraid what follows next

until the moon appears until light is spread in the room and in the garden

until she begins to write her own poetry too

and now i am confident that with all these changes

no one screams and no one runs away.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Crazy Woman

she is a neighbor
they think she is crazy what we have
we keep

tolerance and tolerance

she asks for coffee and cookies
watches tv
and decides which channel to watch

i am about to burst until she gets away with sanity

she says
what she has is tolerance and tolerance for me

fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cream Of The Crop Of Worriers

we thought we know because time has been so kind with us we were silent though and pretended that what we know cannot hurt us we were wrong for every thing learned there is always a price to pay pain in exchange of some nuggets of wisdom anxiety for every knowledge that comes our way those that do not desire to know are too lucky they simply wait and do not worry at all things come to them and they explain themselves they simplify and what they do is just listen they are not interested and they are not harmed yes, look at those pigs, they do not know what pearls are they do not have any worry that soon those who pretend to care for them shall butcher them and eat them and feast on all of them now do you regret that we are the cream of the crop of the worriers?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Creativity Of An Artist

from a mere paper cut out Jesus is risen
from the
dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Creeks Of Thoughts

there is this poetry that wriggles like a snake that transforms itself into a creek that coddles the banks of the rivers
the feet of mountains that mirrors the moon
that serves as map
for clouds drifting
there is this pathway
full of grass
that leads us to nowhere
but we are confident
about the happy ending

RIC S. BASTASA
The Creep In Him...

The waitress was fooled by the creep who orders steak and says that her steak is shit and throws the plate to the floor creating a scene in the restaurant and... then runs away.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Creeping Loneliness In The Days Of The Beasts....

most nights are haunting the beasts too are lonely haunted by some sickness which even the forest experience,

the nights go on and on with its lonely moons and lonely winds as though the only word the only reigning message is the chirp of loneliness from the birds themselves who just arrived from their long long trips, it will not be over the beasts talk among themselves discreetly unable to accept this kind of unwanted calamity,

and loneliness keeps coming and coming and going and going until the caterpillar finally got its own wings to fly into the open skies, discovering one thing,

it will pass, it will pass the preaching is unending to the forests and the winds but the beasts keeps it among themselves this loneliness that has never passed them,

until they ended their lives with their own teeth and claws and tails.

oh how miserable it is says the butterfly before it dies one day at a time.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Crickets

under the leaves
the crickets are singing non-stopping tonight the crickets
will continue singing lulling me to sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
The Critique

if he wouldn't mind for me to believe him i think, and this i must submit that he must at least write a good one
something to tickle my armpit
or make me salivate
a line to make me
remember
about him that belittles mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Crooked Ways Of The Tiny Birds

feelings are sometimes like the tiny birds of summer feeding on a few grains on the wide yards of the garden where the grasses spread far

some feels being smothered by the indifference of other tiny birds

separated by the distance of the long lines of parallel electric poles

imagine the image of tiny birds sitting in there looking for pecking

one notices the vastness of the sky
the unfinished climb of the hill

the vanishing paths of trails long untrue feelings like tiny birds fly away

but there is no reason to be afraid on the facts of nonreciprocating birds

ah, the world is wide and too interesting to be ignored

RIC S. BASTASA
The Crooked Ways Of The Tiny Birds 2

feelings are sometimes like the tiny birds
of summer feeding on a few grains

on the wide yards of the garden where the grasses
spread far

some do feel being smothered by the indifference of other tiny birds

separated by the distance of the long lines of
parallel electric poles

imagine the image of tiny birds sitting in there
looking for pecking

one notices the vastness of the sky
the unfinished climb of the hill

the vanishing paths of trails long untrue
feelings like tiny birds fly away

but there is no reason to be afraid on the
facts of nonreciprocating birds

ah, the world is wide and too interesting
to be ignored

on a few grains one feeds upon and having satisfied sits lonelier on the line of an electric pole

RIC S. BASTASA
The Crown Of Thorns....

if you only wore the crown of thorns even for once you could have known what a father is the one whom you said left you when you were so young so hurt...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cruelty Of Fire...

so many fallen leaves on graveled grounds less are the worms
and the moss

someone so cruel
who does not have the patience of water
resorts to the abruptness of fire
and burns them all....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Crying Ladies Stay Jobless.

he did not hire
an old carpenter out of pity

it would be too demeaning and an inefficient decision.

and so the error has been corrected.

yesterday the old man died so he was not able finally to redeem all his tools

he sent the flowers and the card.

so this is a cruel
smart world.

evidently we outlive
our usefulness

and the smart ones
mercilessly hand the rejection

there will be no
survivors

the crying ladies
stay jobless.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Curse

the soothsayer reads the lines in your palms and
she says

you will marry
a beautiful woman
and you will have a son
you will live a very long life you will be rich

she continues

your marriage will not last long the beautiful woman shall betray you and go with another man your son will be gay your money will be taken by your partner your life will be long but it will be in sickness and bitterness there will be no cure for your disease and the doctors will give up you will scream as loud as thunder but even the nearest star cannot hear you your life looks full like a bag filled with air it will be deep like a well but without water

your only hope left is death only if you wish for it.

RIC S. BASTASA
as you must have observed, she speaks, in tatters, disconnected but transparent, and transcendent, having that grip of psychic possession, witnessing what passed and what shall come

have you read about such words as awe, horror and pity?
and the helplessness that follows
next,
those frightened sing and always will be unable to understand
her,
she goes backstage,
with the fall comprehension of what's there waiting

her own murder.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Cycle...

the flowers of my youth have all wilted

but i am ready for the dryness of these seeds

hoping for the next sowing season for soon

i will be back again with all the flowers of my youth expecting to see you again my only sun

and soon to die again for another sad moment

under the warmth of your hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Daffodils Are Gone

On the daffodils
The morning dews
Dry out slowly

Now, blow if you will Humid wind
The daffodils are gone

RIC S. BASTASA
The Daily Poems

these may just be words letters that one need not read carefully as they are not instructions or manuals for daily living not something edible to eat not a ball to play with on late afternoons when you have nothing to do not a bar of beauty soap for your face not a lotion for your skin not a piece of cake or a fried potato for your breakfast table neither is it a cup of hot coffee they are not necessities of life yet somehow the daily poems of our lives make us live
a day more,
an hour more of promise a moment of more tolerance another year of patience with ourselves a night of nice sleep

under the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
along the way
beside the ditch
are the daisies
to choose

the white ones are too pure
and the yellows are jealous
the...

why do i have to tell much?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dali Bees....

it is a blank wall. No, i was not the one which put it there.
It is.It is there
we never made it.
when we face it
we forget whether we have words.
We make signs.
You nod your head.
I agree. This is a white wall. It has no scent. You imagine

a vine can give meaning.
the last leaf was the last attempt. You put winter there. Like God.

we are speechless.
but even then we think we understand.
There is another world
beyond words.
It is more spacious.
More understandable.

This is not a white wall.
This is a white

then the words come flying into your head like bees. Stinging all of us for not telling the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dance

ey were dancing in circles some with huge bellies and there was this emaciated figure trying to fit in learning the steps of the dance others complain for he is not like all of them the weakest link
perhaps
and they do not want to spoil
the dance
of drunkards

i wonder why, the tall lean figure emaciated as he is still wants to fit in and pretend that he is enjoying the dance of the drunkards?

again, another astonishing study of weird human behavior that liking to be in.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dance Of Carmen

that was the last time that i have seen Carmen her last dance of the last scene of death she was wearing the purple tutu white laced and glittering on the dark stage as she lay in that island of light

her right hand touches the heavens
her left
waving goodbye to
the earth

it was the perfect split and then she closed her eyes all the lights faded and what i saw was this perfect darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dance Of Life

the steps are easy to follow if we only follow repetitive in fact and numbered and it is the same music all over again handed to us

but something happens interpolations and matters are interchanged substituted and prostituted the steps become harder to follow in fact unpredictable and surprising this dance becomes so interesting somehow i get out from the waiting line jump into the circle and dance the strange music that is played eclectic, exotic, magical bathing in my own perspiration i signal to you saying that i am beginning to like it this is the dance of uncertainty where tomorrow may not come

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dance Of Life (2)

the dance of life
goes on and on within the circle of our
none awareness

time moves like a silent creeper
in the garden
you do not see until it goes over the field of another to someone whom you do not know it is something that you feel not having even met once that one and this one so unfamiliar yet we nod

beyond fences
and sometimes beyond repair the dance of life is one which you cannot refuse

on tired feet still you must stamp
sometimes
even sans the music
and the rhythm

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dance Of Life (3)

the dance of life
is not loneliness

it is meant to be shared in a circle of friends
two for a tango
three can be a boogie five or more in a disco

shouts for joy
energy overflowing
like a waterfall

the dance of life
the ecstasy the bliss of everyday the joys of the many

the dance of life
children merry on the playground mothers watching and fathers working with so much awe and inspirations

the dance of life
grandpas holding hands with grandmas strolling on the beach

the dance of life
sunshine early morning on the grass moonlight and stars on top of the roof sipping coffee

reading a book of poems

the dance of life
stopping in a moment and then contemplating on an end somehow there is this stopping for a moment
silence
and then returning to the power of fireworks friends giggling
over an interesting love affair

the dance of life
with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dance Of Life (4)

square pegs
trying to take the steps of the circle

holes everywhere
lapses
dark spots explosions
and weeping on one side at the other side of this world is the big party people laughing and dancing

and children
chasing each other

that storm and time
and still ponds and sitting lotuses a baby on the crib and a young couple making love in bed a window opens to a beautiful sunset sadness and truth and lies sprouting like grasses in an open field seeds turning into trees and rain stopping one evening

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dance Of Life In Circles...

the dance of life
in circles

nauseous...

feeling dizzy still about those missteps...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dance Of Life Is A Circle

if the dance of life is really a circle where we imagine a fusion of
the beginning and the end then what are we waiting for?

do you have hands?
let us hold each other and join this dance.

forever comes inside our hearts, you have no end

and i have no beginning life's dance of ugliness and beauty holding hands together of sorrow and joy, of pain and relief, of evil and good, of black and white, of earth and sky, of yin and yang, of male and female and those caught in between the grip of the hands of life to the stone, to the tree, to the sky, to an infinite space now if you speak about a beginning and an end, you are out of the circle. Or if you are wise enough, You think you are inside the circle.

and the rest of the world, revolves around you.

you are in and they are out, it is still part of the circle. sky and earth. down and up. your eyes take a look at the stars, and the stars take a look at you.

you breathed the night air. You close your eyes.
You see what is infinite. You grasp eternity to the farthest star that you put on top of your pointing finger.

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
The Dance Of The Children Around A Burning House will you be surprised when all your children will dance because the old house is finally burned?

i will be Papa
but only for a while perhaps only upon that superficial level of self-respect for those who built the house from their own sweat
and died.

and then Papa
i will have to join the dance
myself

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dance Of The Sky And The Earth

there is something
in that dance that reveals what he is.

his hands try to reach a chunk of sky

his feet grinding the earth perhaps to make them sharp and probing and so it comes to my mind that here is a guy wanting to discover what the sky can give what the earth can bury, for good.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dancer's Feet

the dancer's feet are on the air
the body is so light in extreme joy
bliss like a balloon
floats the body
as light as air

such is the short moment of flight of life's dance until the tip of the body touches once again
the hard and harsh floor of reality

and then one says
sorry, but this is life it is all about roots and anchor
bliss is fleeting like feet on the air

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dancing Natives Of Cogon

trained now in the art of tourism
all for the love of money they change costumes when the white guests arrive upon prior notice relearn their old language practice the dance of their old ancestors using the wooden spears and shield as props on a rehashed warrior dance or the wedding march or the symbolic courtship of the birds

in proper places now the tourists from America has arrived like a stage show or a big pretense as i may call this (unable to land for employment on their chosen degrees)
they dance for them
and let them hear an old language an old song
a lullaby that their mothers used to sing for them all for the dollars.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Danger About Happiness

happiness can be dangerous.

It looks inside you
and closes your eyes
to see
a world in agony.

it settles only in the confined picture of a family.
son, daughter, dad,
dog, cat
household pictures,
coffee mug,
a private letter,
a box,
a slit
a venetian blind
a feather duster,
a line of shoes
a collection of stamps, an album
a poetry collection,
a fence,
a secret door
just in case.

have a little of it
just enough to make you live

a san mig lite
some foams for the night and then look around you

sadness helps a lot.
it makes you
a bird.
The Dark Days

those were the dark days, i say i love you but i never meant to.

those were the bleak days, i do things that i do not really like.

those were the saddest
days of my life,
when i am not me because it was meant to be,

otherwise i cannot be here now, free, with eight wings on my feet
the winds in my hands light in my forehead thunder in my lips.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dark Hour.....

now the eyes
have become suspects

of age's betrayal for what it sees is not anymore true for what it keeps are all faulty

which the brain objects the heart detests

these eyes wide as open as the ocean

yet as blind as the darkest hours of our misjudgments...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dark Night Comes, Not For Me Alone, But For All Of Us

Well, I see this moon
And I am sad
My thoughts are sadder still The dark night comes Not just for me Alone, I know
but for all
of us..

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a dark room
in our house where we stay for
a while
to admire how strong
we are
how beautiful we feel when are so alone
and quite

there is this corner of the room where we lay our bottoms
where we close our eyes and rest

there is this window that we keep closed
where we refuse to see the world outside where the winds are so cold where leaves fall and blown
away

there is this self that you want to meet and shake hands
with
ask its name again for the nth time
and then you shake your head saying you do not remember

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dark Rose

a dark rose growing from a dark cracked concrete crevice of this deserted building on a dark night
spreading its dark petals for dark dreams

on a fine morning when darkness
is gone
the dark rose
comes out in the open to meet the sun
embracing it
with so much light turning into something sort of a blood reddish colored rose
something like
glowing

but still dark
like the one last night.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Darkness And The Storm, ...

i took a deep breath
facing the high risk criminal in these islands
known to have beheaded the European

our eyes met and like Obama and Putin
this meeting will go be viral

i keep my sense
of balance
like that scale

i will set aside fear and rumors
and prejudices

and so now
back to the courtroom
i gaze at everyone

as if i were the light from that only tower in the island

still and roaming
the
darkness and
the storm.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Darkness Of The Night ...

it is only in the darkness
of the night
that we really begin
to see ...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dash In The Years

dramatic spans years and years of waiting to get exactly what you want in what you do you reflect the need to wait for the return of a particular quality of light, time of day,

or time of year,
in order to proceed

selecting the mood waiting for the right time to unfold

about your struggles with uncooperative weather or other alterations in your chosen motifs, in your effort to record faithfully what you see and feel

all very impressive
such excessive literalness your only aim, devoid of interest

early surrealizing images to recent staccato cityscape and suave sculptures and refined poetry

you were never literal because at the end
you put the last line

exactly,
truth is never exact as they always want to see and write about it

RIC S. BASTASA
The Date

she picks you with her car and asks you to drive it for her
you are going to a place where she is known to be a star a patroness of the arts there you listen to independent women singing their songs of liberty how they map out their destiny without their men anymore at first you like the light beer and the electric guitar and the drums and tambourines you begin to like to the voices of hope and independence, and a weary-free life you begin to love the night with her

you notice how tight her skin is how shiny her red lips like tulips

you tell yourself you love life now you like nights

then you ask something that you know she also likes to give she says no
for a while, and you know that she means she loves you too like she wants to be back to her heydays

both of you
just you and her

whatever happened? nothing happened it is late in the morning and you did not have the soundest sleep that you needed most but you thank God just the same you still have your mind in total peace, unshattered, unbowed, unbeaten

RIC S. BASTASA
The Day Comes When You Become The Center Of The Universe

You sit in the middle of your house
The chairs and table and the trunks Have become the planets that Revolve around you.
You close your eyes and keep Your arms beneath you.
You become the sun and the Slits of lights coming from the Leak of your roof and the windows And shutters and blinds Become your stars.
The silver basin on the sink
Has become your moon.
You clench your fists.
Your room has become The empty space of your Self-made universe.
The world is silent in its Wholeness. You float and you Travel alone along the edges
Of emptiness.
The morning comes and the Dog opens your door Licking your feet and face And wagging its tail to Catch your attention.
It sees you: bald, untrimmed Beard, stinking skin, loose skin In the arms and neck, broken teeth, Bloated guts, crooked backbone.

It is the dog that loves you
You are its truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Day Is About To Close

the light by the window blinks

may it be a very tiring day
without any misgiving

may you be hurt
and yet still be forgiving

may you have wounds that knows how to heal
themselves

may you shake the hands
of the night
may you kiss its palms with all gratitude

may your sleep be sound may your heart be emptied of all the fears of all the worries that the day has given you for all its heavenly intentions.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Day Of The Elderly

they gather this morning
at the park
and had a marathon,

and then they shared dinner with the mayor having dried fish
and steamed rice

and then they dance
the kuracha and the
tango
as others sing the old songs

how nice is the color of the sunset

RIC S. BASTASA
The Day We Met

the day we met
our eyes level

our hands entwine
both full grown and mature

our heads are different mine is bigger and yours so hard and brittle

yet we agree on something
and some feelings

we agree
we do not have to change you or me
or both of us

we agree
on this love

we accept
everything
what i have you take what you have i too, take it is all yes

there is no no

but for our survival
we agree
that on some blanks
we may fill up
and make our own answers

brief and concise and no tearing
of pages

no return no exchange

these are the rules these are the instructions

now, we may proceed let us turn to the next page, please...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Day You Left Me

Through my reading glasses Smears of my fingerprints I see you blur
With my falling tears

RIC S. BASTASA
The Days Of Pretenses.....

there are always days of
pretenses
no guilt, deep within,
everyone is indulging to this past time of living what we are not and what we cannot become as the mind compensates with imagined invincibility x-ray visions, telekinetic energy, flight, levitation, invisibility, and the numbness of all rocks
the earth combined.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Days Of Waiting

an old man
a black book
a cigarette
and some smoke
a room
a black suit
a table and a footstool a poetry to read
and then
a sound sleep....

there are dreams that follow
soon
but like his grand days of youth
he will find it hard to remember..

his days and nights are nothing but matters of waiting
and waiting
all these
drag.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dead Fish Speaking For Itself

the best evidence of that dead fish is its body bloating
and stinking
floating on the murky river

the rage of the river tries to report the sad story to the deep
blue sea

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dead Fish.......

a river has its low tide a dry mouth in one of those months here you can see those buried pebbles, and colored sands, dressed in mud, and a dead fish who had not gone with the tide.

if you are not that cautious enough it could be you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dead Parents And The Prodigal Sons

at this point of their lives the stingy parents now dead shall have no regrets for then their time shall come to squander what was saved: land and jewelries
and whatever
shall be thrown away like garbage for the pigs,

sometimes one asks
if the prodigal sons are prodigal because when they were young they were deprived of what is due

kids who were not allowed to play stored in the room like some stuffed toys.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dead Sea

there is a river that is filled with salt as it takes in from all tributaries everything that they are giving it is not giving away anything in return
it is dead,

no one sinks there
try it.

it is dead
there is no fish there no shell

taste it when you go there
it is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dead Tree At The Center Of Our Garden

a tree at the center of our garden is shedding off all its leaves

the wind at night
blows away all the leaves
away

in the morning
sunlight passes through it leafless throughout the day

we have become
illuminated

our sad faces are now telling stories

sooner the tree dies replaced by a new one to keep the balance

we do not stop moving

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dead Trees

the trees in the forest that you cut
come back
for revenge

the tragedy is that those that died in that flood with all the dead trees are the most innocent

you escape this time but the trees soon will find you soon, soon,

i pray.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dead....

he showed to me the dead
rat
which the cat
cought
last night

quite big and quite long and perhaps notorious in the yard

he wanted to throw it away but i said no
told him to bury it
near the mango tree

for the dead
like the rat
shall feed the trees
this earth

for the dead
shall feed humanity
like those martyred by war
those killed by time
shall nurture back
this earth
to its own life.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Deal Of Being Together

there is this simple agreement between two people when they want to stay together they will not look for something that is not there for how can they find what does not exist and so they both live happily
everafter

RIC S. BASTASA
The Deal To Make Others Happy

i make a deal with myself everyday i must find a way to make other people happy

tough deal
but i must: connect the missing link of love

find the lost photo album of the spinster

bring the old man at the metro station and described to his blindness the colors that i see the music that lies in the heart amidst the noise
of this world

little pleasures of the hands of children dipping fingers on the cool water of the creek by the side of the big canal
of an old house abandoned by the couple
that i must make them to reconnect
on love letters long gone i must retrieve what has been fading

there is a lonely man sitting
waiting
i must provide him with another name

tough deal
but worth it, it is.
The Death Of A Revolution

i was once there
in that island of

questions
all questions

its shores in circles
do not have any answer

i move around there and i am dizzy

feeling the spin
and the effects of my own self-imposed revolutions

quite a decade

and all the children i have were eaten by the big hungry mouth of the revolutions of my youth
my past

i preach a new story now

times changed i tell you and i am not left like a step that you have taken

there is exhaustion
there is an end
where our mouths knowing about the dying of the lips have to tell the truth finally and you are not listening with your gun in your hand

listen! everything has changed you must see the new light of my dawn

i have no word for you must you pull the trigger now?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Death Of The Liar

you lied
you have reversed heaven
and earth
put yourself in between and hanged
your head in there on that line
of fame

of course,
the world clap its hands the heavens do not cry the dogs refrain
their howls

RIC S. BASTASA
The Death That Perfects Me

i like the way you show your back to me i see you and you do not see me that is the principle of my secret.
my world changes when you face me in your being disinterested nothing matters
i do not wish for more, i do not need some stars in my heavens.

my gaze to you is enough as i go home again
incomplete,
like two hands opening to the sky asking for light or even rain and nothing comes to fill what my palms are longing i close my hands again to cover my face in shame.

For i have not changed.

No matter how,
i will never change.
i am this child and i am the father of this man.

in my old age,
i am still my own child the child whose mouth not any milk from any mother can satiate

it is written in the skies
my name.

It is the name of dissatisfaction and it wants to have a body which must be reborn until it finds what it has been searching where is true love?

have you found it?
if sometime i find it,
that when i kiss i am also kissed back when my fire is burned by another fire when all of me is a forest and consumed by wild fire what can i ask?

i will not ask even for a dropp of rain or a pinch of salt or a syllable for understanding

i have enough.

But i do not have it now.
I know what is enough.

I have long defined it in my series of deaths.

i know when it comes,
i can recognize completely its face when it arrives.
when i hold it, i shall die but i shall not ask to be born again.

for by that time,
i am rested as a stone
beside a hill

i do not wish to be rolled again neither shall i ask Sisyphus to put me back to that same place on top

for by that time
i am dead and so complete.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Death Theory....

let us make it simple,

energy is never created is destroyed it can simply be transformed from one form to another yes the soul, from one time frame to another this is simpler now the body is left and the spirit goes away it is met by light and it is taken away guided towards its real place and then the silence no one wants to come back it is self-explanatory no one comes back to a place which has become inferior.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Decision To Be Happy

I am watching water dripping from the gutter

the rain has just stopped
falling

the sun begins its part spreading soft light on the window panes my wife has finished taking her bath and kisses me on my cheeks breakfast is ready on the table and the smell of rice and pork grill spreads in the house the water that drips from the gutter to the leaves of the fortune plant appears like diamonds bringing all that gladness to the younger hours of the day well, ask me what is this all about oh yeah, this is all about this decision to be just simply happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Decision To Stick Together

i know what you know and i do not talk about it neither shall you

the usual truth
that hurts
that breaks
our hearts
the kind of truth that somehow shall set us free

we have no choice
we can do nothing
when faced with these usual faces of diamond truths but we shall remain as cow herons in symbiosis with Asian water buffaloes we admire each others' silence we have glasses and the only thing that we hear is the clink of our agreement to a dignified

silence

'cheers, cheers! '
our hearts are happy

what we have is respect and what follows next is hope
and perhaps
love
again

we are glad despite the pains
we still have each other in the silence of our embrace
and the cold night is cold
no more

RIC S. BASTASA
The Deer With A Golden Fleece?

and then mori became too small for sufi.
galaxies away, mori had become a very tiny star not visible when you are too complacent sleeping upon a bed of grass looking up above the stars sufi shines like a sun to the sea and the desert scorching every forest where hunters bring their spears still hoping to catch the deer with a golden fleece.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Defeat Of Words....

i am lost in the forest of words i always have more to say, more is there in the thinking that chokes whatever word i like to say, and i end up foolish, before an audience that waits for my mouth to shape an embroidered idea,
a dressed woman ready for the ball,
a young woman undressing before she bathes in the river

of time

a word, and then i look at all of them those who wants to be awed mouths open, agape
hands

and i ask myself
what is there to be said?

there is so much to be thought about
and there is no
moment wasted in trying to capture what beauty is there which must stay as beautiful as it is never
said., ,

it is more proper untouched by the fingers of words just like life, at first i feel that it must be written

sort of

this was it, this was how it felt, what we saw what be believe in
ah, on an afternoon,
finding those drift woods washed ashore children pulling their arms you realize how emphatic things are rather than calculate, and emote and do logic,

a circus of numbers,
tightrope equations,

there is more that the stars are saying there is more to the wide open skies in all their silence for they have long spoken before i was born

RIC S. BASTASA
The Delay

they had two flat tires, the river swell like an infected wound, the road was muddy like mad and then it rained heavily time ran so fast, and when they arrived here, the birthday party was already over

they explained the delay about some rebels shooting the soldiers and they hid behind the bushes on the hills we were not afraid, our lives must move on the party pushed through the music was turned on and the dance started with a salsa.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Demand For Justice...

because you inflict pain on me and i cannot touch you then i might as well inflict pain to the society as a whole for you said you love society more than what i am
as your next neighbor....

and then you cry out for justice
to the world
and then you call me
the congenital terrorist?

sometimes i throw this question to the air how can you love the world without loving me first your very next door?

how do you ever distinguish this tree from those shadows of the forest?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Demands

her demands are clear she need the money now because her feet are rotten her daughter has to enroll for a college education she is selling land owned by her forefathers she does not need anything now except the money
there is no importance of memory of family treasures of blood of veins
there is nothing sacred about a family tradition it is her life, her rotten life her prodigality, her rebellion, it her insanity
her own perdition
her hatred
and nothing more
i am perturbed i am shaky about my very own sister.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Demands Of Our Poetry....

it looks like a race of letters there is this old typewriter writing everyday till nighttime till dawn and the numbers have become so many looking tired and clumsy

it so appears that the words do not experience any meaning at all what is it to be a word in this sentence? what is the meaning of such a literal existence? is there a feeling between two conjunctions?
are the prepositions making the necessary links?
what clinching statement are you trying to impress upon this
twink? there are no more stars in the heavens, the moon has faded like a blue jean pair of pants, the sun looks like a yellow button and the universe has reduced itself into a plain white shirt worn by an irresponsible teeter.

where are these evens leading us to? a devastated part of this island speaks of the logical suicide, ah, damned, the pigeons are not homing and the chickens no longer roost on the same branch of the tree indeed, the word do not entice anymore to live a good life the whole novel is not new, it is melodramatic still detached from that tsunami reality, pure soap, pure tearjecker i wish to a truthful concern one that touches not just the heart but the hair one that surrenders and not just win one that cares and cares and cares and cares till the end......

RIC S. BASTASA
The Denial Of A Health Problem

tomorrow when we meet again i will take off my clothes and show you the tightness of my chest my arms flexed
my fingers crossed

i'll show you a hundred push-ups a set of sit-ups
i will do an hour of aerobics a dance and a jumping jack you will think that i am healthy less the tumors and their sealed lips i am not telling myself that someone is dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Depth Of Patience

how deep is the patience?
how long is the rope for you to fetch the water within to cool the heat
to avoid the bursting the evade
death?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Depths Are Not Meant For Us...

do not ever let that submarine of thoughts go deeper than what is necessary or required of
us

those depths
are not meant for us mortals

and for this which is made of inferior metal and flesh

for in there we shrink like a paper box
pressed against all its four sides

RIC S. BASTASA
The Descriptive Approach To Art...

descriptive, nothing but descriptive uninvolved, spectator, watcher, unattached, even you to the poem, surreal and yet so real, adjecify, non-action, suffering dispersed, like mahogany seeds.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Desert Desire

There is no way to stop upon an endless stretch of a highway on a land without a sea upon a world without water

RIC S. BASTASA
The Desert Likes You

You are dry
acrid, no flower blooms, here
the rocks feast
on sun and
moon,
winds come like
visitors,
nothing is entertaining
except the silence
which strums itself
in the cadence of breathing, no one
like you, except the desert.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Deserted Fields

seldom do you find this place tall grasses on the fields white herons feeding upon the green frogs gallivanting on the muddy pools bluer skies fresh air trees nested by sparrows trails of men
there are no houses here flowers on the pavement bloom nobody comes here anymore most of them have left for good for the city where work is available where money can be harvested like fruits from concrete trees from cemented fields under the flicker of neon lights from unfriendly people

i am here, at home, with all my silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Desire For Revenge

after the rain
the heart mellows down like a bush
with wet leaves
drenched in the freshness of the atmosphere

the fire that burns
this forest
is stopped

the tongues of heat are shut to the mouths of enlightened
ash

the head turns to the sky the arms opens
the fingers spread

revenge is gone
what comes again is peace freedom from anger
the soul rests beside the pond of
solitude

it is because you prayed
it is not you now but God

RIC S. BASTASA
The Desire To Eat A Tulip

One day
she writes about
A poem that looks life
A map
For some directions
To a location
Of a hidden rock
Of gold and i
Who dream of
One day getting Rich read it,

Only to find
This Woman
Smelling my Tulip

Wanting to eat it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Desired Law Of Motion

we are not lost our feet are merry on the ground they have the agility of horses in the wild
we think sometimes that we are and people wonder why and we have all the answers why we think seemingly lost in our stable positions

they say
those boats safe in the harbor are no longer boats but anchors themselves and the sea
with contempt finds no use for their sails

their keels rust
and each rust turns to dust and each dust
become part of the
floor
whose mouth is as big as a bay
and swallows all of their history

we are not lost and so we think when our feet though like those of wild horses are steady on the ground and the mountains are angry and the air summons the storm and the earth gapes to spit its fire on that complacency

our world moves
our galaxy moves and there is no sound reason why we should not be moving
with all of them

for it is a conclusion standstill and you are lost
forever

RIC S. BASTASA
The Desperate Man....

perhaps you were born with a certain kind of stigma not that kind which bleeds like an eye

of a widow weeping

the stigma of youth which found no pleasure in the river

or that which pricks your finger with the thorn of a rose perhaps you never had a happy childhood to make you a man of accomplishments you have remained to be just a child, the most disturbed one which fathered a psychopath

sad, but compelling, true and nonfunctional, however, as evident as a nail with its head stuck on the hardest wood, there is still you in the disguises of masks in the mirror of life still, firm, tight lipped, unwavering, to life, to life,

onward,

less the cowardice of a thousand deaths which most of the men have desperately suffered.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Destroyers Of This Earth....

what do get from all these noise the shouting women screaming madness
all the commands of men

we get feed with something that we always like to vomit in the streets of this shattering cities

we will be missing what was once there a running brook, sunshine softly shining on the green fields of wheat children cheering one another upon their innocent little games white dogs beside the working men carrying their spades for digging the women bathing and washing by the river we are no longer happy people having sinned destroying what was once green and fresh and alluring

RIC S. BASTASA
The Details

one gets too particular about the details of the morning picture: there are two rainbows from the top of the galvanized roof of the old house surrounded by trees its other foot extending to the hazy hills the rain is soft landing on the small ponds below the trees with few brownish leaves making some ripples
the grass is wilting by the previous summer heat the wind whispers softly like a woman in love the horizon gives a gray boundary of the foot of the hills some houses look like pigments of black and brown spots too distant for my sight i sit here
my mind is calm like a pigeon roosting on the steel beam of the gymnasium

they say
that when one gets too lonely the details of the world becomes too visible
one can even hear the flapping wings of a butterfly lost inside the room of your heart

RIC S. BASTASA
The Deterioration Of The Word Hello

the indifferent man on the other side of the cyber line
perhaps has misunderstood my
hello
as a mode of great concern thinking that i must be a man without means with ignoble intentions for his silence

hmmm, hellos are cliches sometimes you say it just to check if people are still there more of hey i am not alone in this silence there are too many of us
to be ignored
by that usual indifference that feeling that everybody is gone deep to the caves of
death
and that this world is numb and foolish
hello if he knows somehow is of the lesser kind inferior to good morning i am here bastardized abused
word that for a time exists on a faded meaning
in fact
demoted deteriorated to no meaning at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Devil

one that knows not how to ask forgiveness for his transgressions one that knows not what humility is one that knows not how to accept failures and offer the sacrifices to the Lord one that knows not how to pray and beg for mercy one that know not how to rejoice in everything that comes in one's life happiness or grief
one that knows not what is the difference between the temporal and the eternal one that does not hope but lives in the darkness of his anger and hate one that knows not how to love to heal and be well again one that knows not how to help one that knows how to hurt instead and take justice in revenge and retaliation is the devil

RIC S. BASTASA
The Devil Has Taken You

when you're so good he tells you, nothing significant happens to your life you're nothing but a straight line on paper the devil continues, try me, i give you everything you need fame, fortune, life eternal the angel is silent, trusting you, that you do not take side with the comfort of some deceptive lines but woe to you, the angel weeps, you have taken the side of the devil who now rejoices in hell another one comes open the gates, give him the best, for now we shall take him he shall bathe in that ocean of fire that never stops.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Devils In Law School

there are
devils even in law schools
engaging others
to gossip
talk in the middle of my lectures

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dew In You....

always give a space
for doubt,
spare some people through a hole where light still gets in and illuminate

who knows?
it is someone else
and not you.

you are lovable as a flower of the early morn
in full bloom
and laden with dew
by the window

no one, not even their doubts can take it away from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dew On The Lower Side Of The Leaf Of Grass

The dew knows
That for a short moment
The sun comes
And they shall be wiped Out

These pearls of the morning Somehow glitter
And make my sad self Sing a song
To the coldness of this Early season

They know soon
They will be gone

But happy to note
That tomorrow soon too
They will be back
To cheer another sad heart Lost in this Wanton garden of grass
And pebbles

These pearls of the early morning In a short moment

Yet so intense
In the cold their confidence linger

RIC S. BASTASA
The Diabetic

she's actually 40
but she looks like 50

at the party
she is taking a case of beer drinks like a drum and eats like there is no more food

for tomorrow

on a frothy mouth
she says she is hopeless and would not hesitate if she dies tomorrow or even today

her husband is younger by six years
and she swears he loves her even if she is broke

she drinks more beer and had more steak
more rice more spaghetti

at 4 p.m. the waves of the sea in this island start to grow bigger the wind starts to blow and she rushes the boatman to take her back to the city

after all i guess
she is still afraid of the coming typhoon is she afraid of drowning?

i guess not
she says she is not afraid to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Diary

one day you shall write about a ship in the middle of the sea
on a dark night

one day you shall write about the man who was there without any hint about where he is and where he is going

you will finish writing about it and let it stay there until you close the pages and declare that this is what life is all about one day you shall open it again and write about the man who plunged into the middle of the sea to find the message of its depths whatever happens close your diary for a while wait until you feel the switch inside the dark room of your heart find the sea and find the right hour to plunge just as it was written

RIC S. BASTASA
The Difference Between A Rooster And A Man on the grass i see this rooster wearing a thick red comb, tall for its lowly status, and well muscled as may be gleaned from the thickness of its black, red and white feathers how can he notice me stopping by to observe it when its attention is focused on two slender hens one is red the other white getting near it and without any inhibition at all he copulated on each of those two slender hens, quickly as a quickie i can imagine in a few days, the two hens cackle with lots of eggs for the owner now prepared with a big basket to bring the produce to a crowded market if i as a man does what a rooster does, you very well know what happens next

it will be the people of this republic v. ric and his dismissal from the government service it makes me think however, on the other hand, the happiness of the owner selling more eggs in the market because the rooster had been kind and obliging to the two hens and the other hens in the yard what about it God?

RIC S. BASTASA
at the hospital
i saw two views

in room 306
a father cradles
his new born son
beside the
sleeping mom

in another room
an old woman is taking her
leviteracetam
and flumucil
as her husband
gives her a glass
of water

i am 56 now
and still trying to evaluate from myself
where is hope and where is despair....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Difference Between Prose And Poetry

it is prose
so i followed my head

it is when i follow my heart where poetry begins.

you dance for a pay
i play.

i dance under the rain
no one is watching me.

you dance in the grand hall. the clap is deafening.

someone does it for the money.
others do it for free.

as one said it once,
i kill for the money but since you are my friend
i kill you for free.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Difference Between Us

i

what we know
has scared us
and we can even predict when we end our days

we know where it
is now,
it is inside our
veins
and flows like a venom
from the snake
which bit and then crawls
quickly into a thick bush.

we are not afraid
about it for now
nay, we have become powerful with such knowledge
we have embraced
wisdom
like Socrates with his poison.

ii

you are all happy with your coming days
the summer and the sea, the ball and
the boat
the foams of joys
where you dip your bodies for a week or son

there is something
however that we all know and which you still refuse to know
and act as quickly as we did to ourselves

there is a sword in
above your head
there is a time bomb
in your heart

we are about to see what you do not want
to be seen

and yet, why should we be scared about you?

Enjoy your days
Have fun and love
as fast as you can....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Difference Between You And Me....

perhaps we have the same vices, we write to confuse, but we drive some points,
like nails on sandalwood, not those rusty ones that make the sound of 'trying hard'
we are original in these, competing only with our own syllables,
we may have the same vices i may have written all those words to confuse but mine is a series of stairs leading to the door to the room to the window to the skies and then everything i am is gone but you do not notice it you think that i am still the chair and the table the napkin and the spoon.

my wings are hands
my hands are winds,
my mind are planes,
my soul a boat,
what i write are mirages
you see, you cannot touch.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Difference......

i see your picture
and i remember you
black lipped woman
curly hair and wide open eyes with tears about to fall but i shy away, i could have been someone else
into the hills i could have died,
but i have chosen to be myself among the many where you think i am
a loser
having lost everything original about me while you stay there
as yourself toxic as usual and cursing and too honest, i have no regrets as one among the many unrecognizable now, because there are so many of us and you cannot point at
me anymore,

i am alive. And you are dead.
that is the difference.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dignified Rebel

for you to win, you should have adopted the chameleon thing, take the color of who is powerful hold their hands, and be them even for the moment that you still need them you are as hardheaded as a rebel whose color is blood against those walls of the towers you raise your hands in the shape of a fist and shout your freedom in the streets of murder look at you, you're out now, ostracized, stinking fool i pity you

but on the other hand, you are true and dignified a true man in the bravery of a defeat seldom growing in the fields of honor.

i must salute you then.
you let me live.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dignity Of Words

i agree as you say that words must still keep that dignity they used to have before we meet

after all we started with a few words took some more and savored its flavors the scents of its letters the tastes of its sweet vowels

when we kissed if you remember we swallowed words

when we made love we let go some consonants
to our satisfaction
the thrill seemingly without end now while dining we are four seats apart you seat at the front

i at the rear of this distance
between us

the words are not reborn only this silence
constricting like a boa swallowing
the crowd of thoughts in concrete on walls of words our heads finally collide

i could have opted for the mute and deaf
the dumb who loves me for whatever i am

regret is not my choice it is here and not leaving it is eating me like i am a delicious delicacy

i am sorry, i keep my mouth shut. what will i say? i am back to the silent world of my solitude

long time ago, this was paradise of clauses now, you say it, this is a complete sentence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dipping Of The Spoon

the happiness of this world is summed up with the dipping of the spoon to a hot coffee inside a porcelain cup that lonely tongue that gets inside our mouth as you close your eyes playing with your teeth and gums there is that thought playing inside the womb

a baby is kicking you and you have pleasure

that love that gets inside your heart and gives you
a home.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dirty Linens

now that all the dirty linens had been washed neat and clean
she wants
that from this time on we shall always sleep together
make love and deny
everything

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dirty Old Man

the dirty old man is eating his favorite vanilla flavored oatmeal he is mean and cheap as he was in his younger days filled with stories of his conquests of the many women of the town he looks at my wife his relative he laughs and then looks back at me and he said that it was all about a mother growing the bones of a daughter and a man comes along boring a bigger hole inside her she did not find it funny of course something lewd is not laudable i look at his mustache some oatmeal got stuck somehow.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dirty White Linen

after the love
you sleep facing the bed
down
you fall in a trance
of a fantasy fulfilled

the room is dimly lit a glass half empty stands below the lampshade

the dirty linen is set aside stained and ready for another washing
tomorrow morning

RIC S. BASTASA
The Disappointment Of The Filipino Poet...

we're like seeding a field at the noontime of our lives when the sun sets finally we retire and there are no fruits a child is asking, 'where's the food, daddy?' oh we have none, we are waiting for mom.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Disappointment...

everyone looks
for changes
those that bring us
for the better
and yet we fail to find any that satiates our thirst
for the better
one...we look at ourselves mirror to mirror
and we find what we do not wish to become...us.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Discomfort Of Pebbles

The river runs
Cool on my feet Underneath
I feel
The discomfort
Of pebbles

RIC S. BASTASA
The Discriminated Poet....

she will mistake
art as a form of disorder it is not unlikely since fails in the Rorschach test where butterflies leave from the frame of a page and goes somewhere else and there will be more stories of its adventures no longer
warranted by the inkblots of her mind

she will degrade you
into a candidate for an electric cure
some capsules for medications so recommendations to another doctor

you are not a poet
but a madman eating words drinking ink
barking like a dog
at the wrong tree
of this world

you keep you wisdom
shut your mouth
leave the place
and grow your flowers somewhere else.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dislike Is Mutual

the dislike is mutual
it just happens
there is no explanation possible time changes the enemy now old and begging and wants to know why you have disliked him that much

it just happens
there's is no explanation possible even if the location is changed from here to there from there to the other world from the other world to nowhere the dislike is still there

it just happens
and there even at the end of it all there is still no explanation possible

RIC S. BASTASA
The Distance

let these pillars between
us maintain a better distance this house is too heavy and the pigeons
are flying
away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Distance....

when two kinds of delicate matters come too close everything becomes molecular and there will be a hard time figuring out
what is beautiful or real or true

there is a need for the proper distance an arrangement where focus is at its best in the same manner is love and friendship maintain that distance not too close and not too far balance

so that nothing falls and nothing floats

RIC S. BASTASA
The Disturbing Poem, To A Woman...

you should have known that when a man leaves you, he will never come back your tears have no power even your regrets

your asking for forgiveness because of your rude manners

has no more power for his strong wings flying towards the faraway land of his own dreams without you of course he can still be happier.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dive In The Depths

take the plunge dive into the depths
and then
do not attempt to rise
there
is where real salvation lies!

do not listen for things are weird and meaningless.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Divided Sea

after the flood subsides the sea becomes divided at the tip is deep blue near the shore is the paleness of the brown river still confused
about what to do

somehow
the parting is gone
now the sea
is confident again in peace
in the depths of its blueness
in the joys of its foams
as the seagulls dive for its bountiful fish
once again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Divine

i

to understand how is it to be human he went to the womb and was born he passed each stage

ii

part of humanity he was ordinary he bled and died

iii

to conquer death he died to conquer lust he lusted

iv

the divine experiences how is it be human humanity makes a glimpse, divinity in morsels

v

a little light shines in the darkness flickering and then fading and then waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Doctor

dr. cannot hide her madness at the patient who has always been gaining weight
despite the
written prescription for the strict diet
of vegetables and fruits and less carbohydrates with a definite no on smoking and alcohol and fats....

dr. happens
the oily pork beside the chocolate cakes the coca cola and rum and Peking duck
goading, and hoarding
and overeating

he knows what he wants she doesn't he has always been praying for that quick and happy death

dr. is too much all his life he is the scarecrow in the field the black birds tease him the children stone him the locusts have no fear of him the golden fields have no need of him the humiliating days are not over he knows what he wish the dr. is foolish

RIC S. BASTASA
The Doctrine Of Self-Preservation

the benefits of doubts come to help you, and on reasonable doubt, the kind comrade of truth, extends a hand of comfort, and the eyes see you, compassion as woman, mother and sister, pleads, as the hammer strikes renders a judgment, for your final acquittal.

deep inside the room of your conscience, lies the most evil of your hidden guilt. The self blindly protects.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog

the dog bites
surely
it has no fists
anyway.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog And The Man

you know
the dog that meets
you at the gate
of the house
wagging its tail
jumping to embrace you
and follows you
towards the
kitchen
and sits just below
the table
when you dine
alone

it is a question
between the two of you
as the dog
pushes itself to the level of the beloved.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog And Your Man

Dog stay and dog stays Dog run and dog runs Dog stand and dog stands

Dog catch and dog catches Dog roll and dog rolls Dog lick and dog licks Dog hug and dog hugs

You are indeed a liberated woman
I don’t have to ask if that dog is your man.

RIC S. BASTASA
you cannot
have a custom cut tailored morning
outfit

not always coffee and cookie and perhaps
another
banana or honey and cream

this morning i hear you strum the guitar
while i struggle upon a left over mashed potato still cold from the ref

we cannot keep forever slaves
in our brains for we got to row this boat ourselves into nowhere
as usual

i'll keep the music alive as i leave

you stay and just be that dog
in my mind......

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog Is Dead (Grammar Corrected)

the dog he gave us
was fed & well groomed

how can we tell him that it
died

ran-over by a Volkswagen in
the street
of the subdivision?

our house is fenced
but it found a way toward
the street

in the middle of the street it stopped there
and laid its body flat
looking towards the
sea

even dogs know what missing is and how sometimes it leads to a casualty

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog Is Dead....

dog he
gave us
was feed well

how can we
tell him that it
died

ran-over by a Volkswagen in
the street
of the subdivision?

our house is fenced
but it found a way toward
the street

in the middle of the
street it stopped there
and laid its body flat
looking towards the
sea

even dogs know what missing
is and how sometimes it leads
to a casualty

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog Of My Father

the dog that my father loved on that day when they buried him always finds a home no matter what it is not going with anyone and the rain finally took it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog Of The House......

the dog of the house who always opted to go to church
early morning
with my wife has finally changed having chosen the
pig's bone instead of the morning
mass, and there he is enjoying to the most his early morning
choice.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog On The Wall Of Childhood

turn your hand sidewise
and let its shadow be cast
against the wall of your room
ahead is the light of the
incandescent bulb

and again to please yourself
and be a child again
try to find that barking dog

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog Poo

i have a dog whose vice is to poo in the neighborhood

its favorite poo place is mrs. mendoza's backyard since it is not fenced

the old woman of course is pissed
about the poo and the pee in her flower garden

one day she told me
that that dog must be put in the dog-pound
if necessary if i cannot attend to putting it in a dog house or leash it

it is my favorite dog and i cannot afford to do
it

here in the village all dogs are free to go around and play with other dogs of the neighborhood

i must have been too liberal or lax with the misdeeds of my dog

spontaneously, with much regret, i told her that she better talk to my dog and settle their differences i have talked to this dog and nothing's changed it is still a dog ever since who looks at me quizzically as though saying
' i am so sorry
but in our dog world we poo and pee
anywhere when we feel doing it and it is us without much fuss'

i look at it as it wags its tail and sits beside me

'how can i ever ever send this dog away? '

i wish mrs. mendoza should have a dog too and perhaps later understand what is a dog poo.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog That Ate The Moon

the dog that ate the moon
beside the cat
who wished for stars
had its own reasons,

it spat the moon into tiny pieces of stars making their mutual dark existence
well lighted

and the cat who wished for
stars
after that moment
understood the meaning of friendship
and trust.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog That We Love...

and there will come a time that the only possible living creature to love on earth is only our dog.

living only on its needs not on luxuries or want, can fight only for a chicken bone a bowl of milk,
and a little space
with rag for a home.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog Which Gives Its Last Yelp And Then Dies.

your favorite dog senses your arrival waits at the gate, by the garage, and runs to meet you
impatient about the meeting and rushing to you it stumbles upon the path where you drive your car which runs over the dog which gives its last yelp and then dies.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is this new house beside Petron

it is the house of a new couple loving as they
are they never had a child

so they keep a puppy
instead

until one day the wife met an accident
and instantly died

this leaves a man in extreme sorrow drinking his life
away

and this leaves the dog alone in the house which was later sold

the dog has no one to feed it and most of the time spends its days in the Petron gasoline station

which made the gasoline boys take their time feeding it until it became their property and friend soon all the gasoline boys had to leave seeking greener pastures
somewhere
else

this leaves the dog alone
again
sitting on the side of the gasoline station still dreaming
for its long lasting master

of course,
there is none
and this leaves the dog alone again

unfed, waiting for its life span to end

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog Who Wants To Get Out Of The House

the Japanese fritz
is brown

the gate is closed
and it waits
for an exit by chance
there is so much
road to run
outside the walls

as i open the gate
it raises its head
and starts to scratch the cemented
floor

i go out alone without
the dog
the gate is closed again i carry with me

a feeling that i cannot yet describe

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog With A Leash

if my goodness
depends on the way
i have followed your wishes

forgive me in advance but by now
i shall admire more
my ugliness

what good does it provide if the only dog that you consider
as adorable is the one with a leash
on its neck?

however intelligent
as you may call it
that parrot in the cage will always be
deplorable

for as the cliche says the best singing bird is still the one flying free in the forest

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dog, Leaf And Worm

THERE is this dog
and it lives a dog's life it's life has always been all for the bone.

THERE is this leaf
true to its being a leaf lives the short life destined to fall
blown away
rot or burned.

There is this worm
it burrows itself in that cold and damp
and then
returned to its humus origin

BUT there is this fish that
i know
a gold fish that swims against the tide of the Yellow River
jumps higher than the barrier
cliff and transforms itself
into a Red Dragon

THE dog, worm
and leaf
do not believe this

They all call me
a story teller.
The Dog, The Fence And The Search For Meaning

this is a room
of ideas
a free country
let the words come as they come
i am not choosy

' i did not come
to please everyone'
you said it.

'no one likes you'

'how dare you? '

we trek upon a snake
path

leading to the summit of Mt. Diwalwal

(it means drool tongue is out looking for an adventure

or meaning

what it means to look
for meaning?)

there is a hungry dog waiting outside the gate which you have closed like a broken heart

the dog is angry
and anyone who comes out shall be bitten bitterly

if you kill it
it offers you the comfort of its chosen silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dogs

the dogs in different colors all four of them lay silent on the porch
until you come this
morning
bringing that smile
that they all suspect is something wrong
the dogs smell
always
whatever disaster is
coming
even if they already know your name.

go away, go away.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dogs Bark To The Moon

can be a joy to the moon and the wrong trees
and the wrong trees
and the full moon they all know have no
ears to listen to their woes
but they know too that the full moon and the bark trees do not and cannot listen to their woes

'they are just our modes of expression', the dogs said and rested for a while and then the are back howlin and howling all over again.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dogs Of That Place.....

this is the place
of reserved people

the men must be silent
the women
head bowed

the children
cannot play in
the park

the sound of their church bell is extremely sorrowful though restrained with its clanging

there will be no
mass for those who hang themselves

the only ones who are free
what to do
and can do it
anywhere
are the dogs

their tongues
lick
the tail wags
and they bark
always at the wrong
tree.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dogs....

because we have dogs we pretend that we are their parents and that they are our children

my wife sleeps with one of them as i watch and then go to sleep

i am not comfortable with this situation this life of pretenses but that is how we are supposed to survive and live a little longer it is a sad truth that since we have not obtained true love and compassion from people then we proceed into a situation where we say we can get these matters from dogs

it has been this way
and it seems if you mind asking me that everything is okey, until something very bad happens, but for now i cannot tell you.

to know these you must begin living with dogs.
share them your house
your bed, your dreams, and let all these things in a short while die with
all of them.

RIC S. BASTASA
TheDoing....

in the realm of
doing
you just have to learn to do it
or just
do it, if you can.

there are no
explanations, there is no need really.

you get what you see
and you see what you get.

after it is done,
what explanation is necessary?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dolphins Of The Seas Of Apo Island

does the dolphins of the seas shiny and fast and sliding tossing the foams of the seas of Apo Island

we are on this boat and they are on our sides we are traveling to another island
of desire
where we too can be home the dolphins always following our destinations

they are our friends do you hear them laugh as they play at sea?
look at their fins, look at their teeth do you see them smiling at you?

they are not asking anything
from us
they are our friends and they have given us their sea and foams and splashes?

do we torture them then?
do we eat our friends?
do we kill them and make soup of their fins?
do we deprive them of their oils into our heartlessness?

think my friend, do you kill the creatures who love you? these dolphins, these friends let us learn to love and swim with them today

RIC S. BASTASA
The Door And The Windows

what i shall bring you is a door of colored glass
behind it is profuse light the one at 10 o'clock

what i have in my hand is the warmth i borrowed it from the sun what i cannot say is not what i am hiding what i give you is a camouflage if you listen closely and if you close your eyes what my hand just gave you is the only truth if you love me more than enough you must not mention the need for windows

RIC S. BASTASA
The Door Between Two Worlds

this the door between our two worlds it divides the inside and the outside the light and the darkness the choice is yours

there is no lock there is only the hinge that holds the door to its place when you open it
there is no sound
and when you close it there is only this silence of the air sealed inside our minds my heart does not sing inside it is muted by the darkness that moment your gentle hands close the door

it is patient, the mind the incompatibilities of the things outside us are too inviting they tempt us to step outside and promise us the magical wonders of freedom we feel so light like our joys like cottons and clouds they are no different from our wishes i am in the middle of this door between us & you look at me like i am the last man of this earth your heart opens with eyes too careful not to know what i do next is the suspense of this uncertainty your eyes close, my heart bleeds my hands wilt, your mind wanders like a lost wind the door closes finally walling us in

it locks upon itself and the world sleeps soundly curling its feet on the beds of the heavens

RIC S. BASTASA
The Door Of The Hill

i got nothing but only wind on my chest
please let me in open the door of the chilly hill.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Door Of The House Of My Ancestors

currently amid confronted with an old door of the old house of my ancestors,

the rust that eats the hinges finally frees the door
at last!

it was enslaved by the haunting sounds of the sudden slam

RIC S. BASTASA
The Door Of The Stone...

things are not what they ordinarily seem to be,

it will just take time perhaps even more
for the stone to finally admit that it has a window,
that with my plea
that i need to be inside it even for a little while and satisfy my curiosity about its century old silence its empty rooms
its feigned hardness and sealed domain
shall also be finally granted.

sometimes i ask
why must i bother it too with my words?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Door What You Wanted To Enter....

oh we wished for the same door
to open

i invented the magic words for it
it never opened for
years

by chance the gods favored me
told me about its secret tickled the spot
and then the door
opened for me

i tendered a party for the unlucky ones
those who dream and fail
we had fun together as i shared their pains and their envy

i alone entered the door and i do not know what
to do

and here i am writing a letter which no postman could send and so it is just for me and not for all of you

i invented words for that to appease me in this grief and
sorrow

given the chance to go out again i will be preaching the same thing.
the gods has punished me there will be no believers anymore.
yes, not even myself whose only dream now is to move out from this room.

the door is dark and tight and strong.
it has no ears to ever listen.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Doorbell

as i wait for you
when it is late on evenings when i am alone when it rings
i wish it were not another (just you)
but it is not always the case, i look through the bay window it is the same uncared prankster that child running away from

an opening door

till now we never know for sure his name.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Door's Grief

ah, the door's grief is not really brief, it has been there since the hinges were fixed, though it does not sound like an old man grumbling, though its creaking sound is hidden on a dropp of mechanical oil, there are those who still slam it and out of too much fear its grief lies hidden continually on every closing

when you open it, it gives a respectable smile yet you fail to understand what was suppressed from what was not so valiantly expressed there is no word for this even the door cannot describe it till this moment when you close it again and again as it becomes another wall of the house again.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Doors And Windows

the windows would have been more beautiful wider than the sea and the doors are as tight as the cracks of the cliff so that the thoughts may fly and the secrets may find it hard to escape from themselves

mas nindot unta kon ang mga bintana sama kalapad sa dagat ug ang mga pultahan
sama kakipot sa mga liki sa pangpang aron dali ang paglupad sa hunahuna ug lisod ang tinagoan sa pagpahawa

RIC S. BASTASA
The Doubtful Witness

at first the gecko
last night
the owl fronting
the window
on the mango tree and then the cuckoo farther in the pond as it started to rain that night and then early that morning
the rooster
at dawn in the house of the mayor
the twilight brought the rapid bursts of gun fires.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dough

canadian dough

alice is not everything they come always even sometimes when you do not need them you put the yeast of your dreams and soon everything alice will rise just be patient and always do not think about those ugly witches sit by His side say something i am beautiful this world is beautiful this is beauty this is love this is my hand and it is holding on to yours.

The Doves And The Tree

what i first see are the doves hovering on the tree they are many and the tree looks as though its leaves are plenty

for one thing
the doves when they hover they hover together
as a flock
and when they leave they also leave together
as a flock
and the tree can do nothing about it and thus it happens the doves all left at the same time leaving the tree to the truth of its existence

it has no leaves at all this summer when hot is really hot in here when all the doves fly away together

the tree
looks like the thin, worn fingers of a very old man opening, stretching to the skies praying for mercies

and what about it God?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Drag

conversations at night when you cannot sleep arrive at a drag, not like the one we had nights and nights before when we still do not know much about each other our bodies and pasts, our way of projecting ourselves to a certain future, we begin to search for the meaning of a present and i realize there is nothing much to meaning, just a drag, to let the hours pass, without killing us neither tickling us, boredom works full time and we do not ask when will this last. we are the experienced class, the category that asks no more, because we think we know for sure, we think we already know what we do not.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dragonflies That Cynthia Sings From Afar

cynthia from far sings about the fluttering wings of some dragonflies those that i see in my dreams:

blue elongated bodies, red gossamer wings of dragonflies flying on the yellow green and baby pink winds floating softly in my dreams from a faraway place my dear cynthia sings her dragonfly songs those that ease my pains all about love and its truth that the hands of the past can no longer ever hold

RIC S. BASTASA
The Drawing

IN drawing my face
you rely on the lines
given by my words

in poetic motion &
on the night when
you are alone you
recall a face of

someone you love
you utter my name
and then i hover
like a dream

what am i like?
am i just a kiss that
gives the drafts of
the light wind

on such a dark night
like this when what
you see is nothing
but a thought of me

close your eyes and
open your heart
and let your hands
fall freely

i become real only
if you still remember

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dread....

who is next? such a dreadful

question which the drunkard
asks to the woman who detests
him
at the wake of a neighbor whose only son
met an accident
that afternoon
from work
his head smashed
without his helmet on.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dream

i like this to be simple.

she was tiny and smooth like a shell (not the shell of an egg) a sea
shell, she has a song from the wind
it is sad, but i love it,
her, she is the other woman, on a bamboo bed,
she my time unexplained i make love to her
she pretends, i am hurt,
but it does not matter,
i am lonely, and feeling so lost, i am a ship
needing an ocean not an anchor i have no port
of origin and arrival, that night, the sphinx
was shattered, and the following morning, she was dead
asleep, she was so exhausted like a slave woman, feeding me the love that i have not tasted, i was a puppy, yelping for help,
for meat,
and then i wake up early, for some anxiety, what time is it, where am i,
i am leaving, i offered her not flowers, i planted a kiss, it was not part of the contract, but just the same i kissed her, for she is dead asleep dreaming perhaps of the man she really loved.
i put on my pants combed my hair, and silently left the room, locked the door, and be myself again.

it is as simple as that, back home, i do not need any complication.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dream At Dawn

it was dark
and he rushed to the room where Fr. S. was waiting for his confession, it took an hour
for the recollection about the bad things he did,

and it was completely recited, after-which the sentences of hail mary's, our father's, and glory be's were recited,

when he came out
the church door was already closed and it was eerie walking through that narrow path that spits a sinner out of its holy door

outside it is raining and there are no more people in the park
with few lights gleaming giving a scenery of impenetrable haze
of shadows and
guesses,

he felt light. His feet began to float in the air and he rose above
the acacia trees
where in the amazement
of a miracle
he spent more hours in the air and rain
and darkness contemplating still

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dream For Peace

to dream of lasting peace to an extent of sacrificing our own dreams giving away a part of us is another delusion for peace is just a nap and soon whether you like it or not chaos comes as a matter of rain when we get wet that is normal the rain stops anyway

to dream that a piece of paper can make an everlasting peace is to wade into another quicksand trap oh, many died on that same spot already and history has a complete record of this and that i learn to walk my day just like anyone else into that daily road of non-expectations and so i have peace in my heart and an open mind that accepts whatever comes my way

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dream Murderer

DO NOT think ill of him this giver of misfortune this killer of your dreams for he does not think ill of you he is the waker of your sleepy nights so you may be like the virgin prepared with the oil and the light and the lamp for the thief

think of him as a portend a harbinger
an angel for the coming of your many deaths
so you can live
forever

think of yourself as the child who wants to have backbones and wings and venom

when he is not gone you are ready for your own battles armored knight of the night vertebrate manager
winged god
dragon ready with its mouth and tongue of fire venomous snake
holy cow.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dream Of Dew

that we are never satisfied is an accepted
phenomenon

the other is always incomplete

the beautiful house is never finished

this and that is always possessing the finishing touches

one's life is always an unfinished business

that stair is asking for another step

a mountain waits for it is never that high

no path is even a dead end to a vagabond

and so there they are open-minded

Sahara deserts dreaming of rain, of snow, of dew....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dream Of You Dreaming Everyday

let us take some reverses let us make the dream dream about us will it remember u?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dream We Pursue Still Slips Like Fish From Our Palms

the dream we pursue still slips like fish from our palms slimy and wet and full of life fresh from its habitat at sea
as you let go of it like a friend you promise yourself from its failures to capture at least one for the moment to make life bearable to finally make yourself say that i for once know how to end a misery.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dreamland Is Fading

on the early years of our union this marriage this institution of always being together we know
we entered a dreamland of what you and i ought to be in our own dreams and expectations we were disappointed for a time

we wanted to be gods we will never be we fall again
to this earth
on the ugliness that opens
to our faces
mocking us
for dreams that never come true by then we recall our promises we remember the love we invoke what we are from the beginning dreamers in dreamland now waking up

touching our eyes rubbing them again to these realities

we are still in love our bodies have changed we feel the soul inside us still with so much life we hold hands again taking the slow steps we will be there looking to the same direction we shall be together

despite the odds
the dreamland fades
we shall touch the barks of the trees

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dressed Chicken

father kills the black chicken and marks a cross of blood on the temple of the birthday celebrant he claims life is a matter of sacrifice a chicken dressed for something

The blood from the neck of the chicken gushes forth there is silence in this bloody ritual

between father and son inside both of them they hold that the spirits understand how they must be appeased from all ills and bad luck the son must be protected a father then washes the knife that killed the black chicken he is ready to kill someday somehow when

another human being just in case kills a son, that brute that base.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dresser

she is all dressed
sits on a chair
waits for the wind
she is not going
anywhere

RIC S. BASTASA
The Drops Of Dew On A Morning Leaf

the drops of dew glitter on the leaves
this early morning

how beautiful to see!
pleasing to the heart
that grieves

for a short moment they shall be gone when the warmth of day arrives after dusk

but there is no worry for tomorrow at the same hour they shall be back

they will glitter again to please another heart grieving on an early morning

=================================================================

ang mga lusok sa yamog sa dahon sa kabuntagon migilak ang mga lusok sa yamog diha sa mga dahon ning sayong kabuntagon pagkaanindot nga lantawon!

makalipay sa kasingkasing nga masulob-on

hamubo lang kaayong higayon mawagtang sila pag-abot sa kainit lapas sa kaadlawon
apan wala ang kabalaka kay uigma sa samang oras sa laing buntag mobalik sila mogilak sila pag-usab iyawat makalipay sa laing maghilak ning dapita

RIC S. BASTASA
The Drowning Silence

i am into this drowning silence
and i am this driver of the pearl
of solitude
that even in the depths of sadness gleams
even without the help of light

drowning silence
makes me
admire the need for breathing

a streak of light is all i need in the darkness of these depths

RIC S. BASTASA
The Drum.......

the drum
clothed with sheep's skin is absolutely hollow inside

it is named nothing yet

know its power for it can call enemies to war

make naked men
and women dance
for love

it is hollow
you open it
it has only air
and yet

hit it with your fist and it will wake all powers of this world

it can decide
war or peace
live or die
dance or kill

love or love or
love?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Drunk Man Falls Into The Mudhole Of The Carabaos

drunk
of power the rich and powerful man fell of the road face muddy
and still wants to rise walk towards home but could not find any walks again and falls on the mud-hole where big eyes dilate ears spread
and noses bleed and saliva poured
from all those
horned
creatures.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dry Land

dusts reign in the dry land beneath are the skeletons of our dreams in hopelessness even the worms of the dead are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dry Leaf

Look at the dry leaf
And follow the lines of its dead veins

There is song there
It is about death not love
It is about the crumpling of the earth It is about the toppling down of an edifice It is an egg without the yolk A dryness that Finally crumples like a white eggshell Too dry
To stand on its own feet

A broken heart
A hopeless dream

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dry Leaves

you have an ear
i guess

for the sound of dry leaves and voices calling for help and footfalls
or footprints losing their ways seeking for the way back home i see you keeping a heap of them not burning them but letting them be humus of the earth

you lead the voices to the green mountains their echoes becoming a symphony of bird songs the footfalls and footprints you give them your home as their home now silent and sleeping and when they wake up they look for you

their mother and guide

i wonder what kind of a star are you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dry River

what shall i expect from this dry river,

it has a bed
but there is no more water there is no more song no rhyme

there are stones and sands there is a desert

there are dry leaves and naked trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dumb Poem

that which makes you angry that which conquers you that which makes you feel so dumb that which you say this poem sucks

this dumb poem

but it exists
because you have just read it and makes you feel just the way it is

dumb.

meanwhile, i am numb.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dummy In The House

i leave a note in the house you keep it by heart

when someone looks for me tell them that i am away

i am the master of the house you are the good servant

when i tell lies you must keep these lies as truths if i tell you that i am one of the gods tell them and insist on the truth of my assertion and when i am dead and when finally you are free find another one for you will always be the dummy of the century

RIC S. BASTASA
The Duration Of The Show

For how long is this fashion show of the beautiful gowns of hypocrisy?

for as long as they will love the show of course for as long as they will continue paying the
hours
with their selfish attention.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dusts Of Summer

the restless dusts of summer lay restive on the path after a blessing of rain

RIC S. BASTASA
The Dying Too....

the bed takes only sleep it has lessened its variety before that
years ago
it was something else it was more than its nature a playground, even a sea where boats sail where seagulls nest it was a spread of green cool grass even clouds it was even an island of paradise with parakeets and orchids and singing creeks or squeaks

a bed ages
those who are in love, and remains to be so keeps it friendship starts to seed flowers bloom, roots widespread and the bed still becomes a home of shed skin, white hair, uncut fingernails

and missing words, and unspoken dreams it's long partners, the ceiling and the fan and the bulb that blinks sometimes still vigil the whole night time changes everything, it is sad, the bed wears the blanket in white dusts accumulate, pictures are removed from the headboard

the bed also dies, and then waits again sometime, for the weary, the hopeful and the like all the rest, the dying too.
The Eagle And The Man...

like an eagle one soars and tries to scuttle for an island where it may nest and lay its eggs hoping for the cliffs and some sticks and trunks of deadwood wandering if there is a monkey for dinner to start with none so far attracts the beginning of greatness

there is no height and there is no sound for prey

the eagle wanders dissolving in a far horizon

the man stays foot under the big tree envious of the searching trip unable to dissolve itself in his chosen horizon

in his world of fences and walls safe and yet so unhappy.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Early Morning Church Bell

i remember the sound of the early church bell but i do not remember the feeling anymore...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Early Morning Prayer

as the heron
meets the new day it stands still looking at the new rising sun on a clear pool
of water
that its own feet protects
it casts a shadow on the clear water listening, listening, listening....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Early Morning Sunshine

i wait for your caresses in my little garden on soft feet you arrive gently touching my cold cheeks
my damp body

on my feet the grasses offer their dews
the calendula its petals in saffron

RIC S. BASTASA
The Early Morning Verse

Peace I leave with you;
my peace I give to you.

(as i read these lines i am chewing my new medicine a black herb so bitter to my tongue to be swallowed when finally liquefied)

do you know the sickness of the mind of the poet out there? Just like you he is looking for the cure, the madness to be well again.

it is not the score of the hour it is the easing of the pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Early Morning Walk

the night is gone
the rains stop

to start with i take a walk

to greet the early morning with the silence of my heart to listen to the songs of birds

high on those trees as i tread the grass that covers the path where some friends used to walk

someone so active has succumbed to cancer of the colon the other with a white beard gave in to a coronary defect the old couple still take their walk here and when we meet we smile perhaps thanking the Lord that we are still here talking

our usual walk on an early morning waiting for the sun to shine upon our weary minds.

as i lay my body
upon the grass

coldness seeps
in my garment
then to my skin
penetrating my
body
into the recesses of my brain

it is the logic
and emotion conjoining
like twins

there is this coldness that i allow
somehow

from the earth
to my spine
to my heart

it comforts me
that we are still connected the warmth of my flesh

and blood

into the silence and coldness of

this Earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Earth For Free...

sensing that you do not wish to talk or engage in

oral intercourse like those previous free falling conversations
which we conclude to be honest and candid and free and agreeable

i stopped talking too

talking is not important anyway because my fingers
have taken as many mouths as there are without being loud

i respect your silence but somehow i detest your way of surrendering to the helplessness of

silence

i remember when i was told that tomorrow will be my last day and which happened to be false i visited friends and knock from one door to another telling them that i love talking and that talking relieves me from the pain of having been given only one day to live when i have not gathered the sunflower which shall bloom in February when my book shall arrive next week before i shall close my eyes and cease breathing

we were under a pyramidal roof surrounded by coconut trees beyond us the sea and some white painted boats the seagulls are busy catching fish on their beaks while fishermen arrive with salt on their bodies and it was that time that I notice that this world is so beautiful and the people too friendly

and yet
when we leave and be away for good and think that out there there is more to all these there is that sense of obligation to comply this is not our home but just a hotel and we must not be too ungrateful to stay

some more

because we did not pay anything at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Earthen Jar In The Garden During The Rain

it is there
it has a mouth gaping filling itself
with the rain

this is a rainy day and it will rain here
for weeks

the jar takes all the water
drinks it like it is a thirsty
woman

yet just like us
it can never be full even for weeks
or for years

there is always a spill
of what is full
there is always
the emptiness
even in the physical fullness

the jar is there
alone
it is raining and it will rain for weeks

the jar never breaks
it is
alone.
The Earthly Bias....

you are
this man torn between sky and sea

you belong to the earth take note

pray
that the sky shall not blind you neither the sea to drown you take the middle

compromise, compromise,
compromise

always have that compromise

the earth is still the most beautiful place
to live

give it the bias
that for the meantime it deserves

RIC S. BASTASA
The Echo

i make a sound
around the sides of the mountain like walls to my being the sound comes back to me
over and over again
like a conscience barking a dog fenced
barking without end i listened
and i wonder if it is the first sound i made

what we do and say comes back to us begging
that it would have been better if we have not done and said them at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Echo Of The Words

when you say something
i simply copy and paste
and you think i am not ok
when you say something
i simply copy and paste
and you think i am not ok
when you say something
i simply copy and paste
and you think i am not ok
when you say something
i simply copy and paste
and you think i am not ok
but i am ok, i am ok, i am ok.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Echo, The Mocking Bird to produce the echo i need one single voice to make the sound

i need the hill and another hill sort of wall where the voice is trapped and bounce
from one corner to another and there you have
the echo

you are the sound
i am the hill
and another hill
i am many much many than you expect

do you see that tree
higher than your roof?
i am that hill beyond
the grassy field
do you see the mockingbird sitting on the twig?

please do not mention
any name
do not drag
another one

but if no one admits
well,
it could be me
i supposed so, it can be me too.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Eclipse

you are asking:
where is the sun?
why is the sky still pale when it is already 8 a.m.?

and this is my answer:
the eclipse of my heart has eaten it
swallowed it whole
without mercy

it was terrifying.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Editor
	onight
he will read many poems and he cannot sleep because as always there will be many poems from me. he asked for them anyway. and everything i have in my mind will always be poems.

the editor is an insomniac.
and from the hundred that i emailed for his perusal.

i guess. i need only to see one that he thinks deserves his choice.

i laugh. how can he ever find that piece of little garbage as art form?

funny. dear editor, everything is a fake.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Effects Of Distrust .... the point that the finger of distrust shows is that you become what you are firm and unperturbed as others cannot make you comfortable about what to do and where you experience this way of looking at things straight to the eye and without any question anymore the way you walk alone on that pavement where you are too definite where to go and stop

you have become a horse driving no carriage listening to no master there is nothing that blinds the side of your eyes you listen to the wind and you leap upon its imagination of a mirage, a desert that you can cross the oasis that waits for you and the date palms with abundant fruits there is no one now that deserves your voice it is you and you alone that must speak and be heard you alone that live and die for in truth there is no one that has that ability to save you for now, being alone is strength a recuperation from a brokenness a reconstruction, a redemption....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Egg

the egg
is never a circle
we were made to believe it
that way
like the way they twist the shape of our earth once
the egg at first was a tear solidified by the persistence of time stretched a bit
it is elongated now shaped as an oblong
like the truth
stretched to a tip transparent against the light fragile
and if not handled with cautions
it breaks and scatters
the yolk yellow as the moon at night stares at you
on a wasted
silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Eggs In The Basket

eight eggs in the basket-hopes wanting to hatch.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Eggs Of The Blue Bird On The Nest

the blue bird
takes care of its nest all the white eggs
warm beneath its feathers

all those nights
and even cold days

and then when the eggs hatch the fledgelings prematurely spread their wings fall off from the branch where the nest hangs

on the following morning you see the ants feasting on their flesh ah! the blue bird sings again readies itself for the rain it escapes away from its sorrows and flies away...far, far away far, far away....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ego

what bursts outside those that explode and still try to entice into not believing what truths lie so obvious inside the heart
the still pond is as cool as ice it always tells what
you are
and yet you care not to listen what stillness has this that your conscience keeps there is no equation for the troubles that we seek to conquer

there is mother and grandpa always telling us to keep right to do right
to speak the truth
and always triumph

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ego In Meditation....

Many many times i raise my hands in prayer prostate my body on the floor, and close my eyes in deep meditation i bite my lips. I hide my tongue in shame.

Many, many times i make promises to change myself, to redeem an old dirty self and wash it, and cleanse it with all remorse

Many many times the pain comes back and lashes me with its whip.

i enter my room. I lock the door. I keep myself inside myself.
Many many doors become many many doors.

This house, this temple, This self Always loved, always forgiven.

Many, many times, so many many times.
It is endless. I cannot just stop it.

It is not mine anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Electric Fan

as the electric fan on this third world pleasure blows its wind beside your feet spreading what coolness is required of your skin it too sucks
the bottom part of the curtain touching the floor

RIC S. BASTASA
The Element Of Freedom

two puppies
playing beneath
my chair,

running to every nook of my
room,

defecating
when they like it

i don't mind
we're happy
in this pursuit of little happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Emerald Ship

entertain no
grief over the sinking of the emerald ship

ships sink
it is not unusual in this ocean of blue dark blue
ships normally sink
lots of ships
their numbers unrecorded

we do not have to grieve anymore
about the losses
we accept them
as diaries of
the most common
day

when we meet again
i do not say anything grief is not part of our vocabulary we can talk about anything the usual moon and stars and suns and rivers
those beach umbrellas in rainbow colors
beer foams, steamy diddums dim lights
resort huts, starry skies jokes,
leave law books and principles

for now
there is only trivial talk sort of variation from too much dipping diving into whirlpools of serious doubts

hold on to a glass of beer take a look at that sexy woman passing by

RIC S. BASTASA
The Emerging Clarity Of Your Situation

In the midst of all these
it is you
alone in the picture surrounded by an ocean of faces and bodies
all fading
into a face of blankness
a body of liquefied ice block

it is cold and hazy upon a background of a picture
blurred by the flow of some tears

you emerge in the most beautiful texture of a clarity
that is rarely spoken
by mankind.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Emptiness Real Than Ever.....

i, too was surprised i, too could not believe that it is me, that i could be me, but beforehand, my hands gave the signals, that that could be me, detached, creating a mirror to my mirror, and i have to be just another patient spider, watcher, and predator, i touched the image before me, i feel cotton, then i take a part,

it is snow dissolving in my finger, but it is me, it will always be me which i have always denied, spurned, covered, and pretend to all those who are happy with me, that there is only one me, and no other.

at night the dreams are mushrooming showing all the same faces of myself, wanting water, always thirsting, and i wake up to the horror of an empty glass beside my table, the dreams put it there, saying, the glass is real,
the emptiness real than ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Emptiness That Eats Poems, And Yet Still Hungry

(my) emptiness is greedy it eats as breakfast five to six poems in a day it will require more for lunch and an unspecified number for dinner

when midnight comes it complains

it is still hungry.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Emptiness That He Can Only Fill

when you wake up
you know that the woman you sleep with throughout the night has already left for the morning church and here you are still carrying inside your body an emptiness which she has not filled
despite....

and you mumble again forgive forgive me Lord i make a plea for You to come inside me to fill me
it is this emptiness which no one ever fills
this nest where you shall hover and stay to lay the eggs as blessings for my fading future....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Empty Boat In The Lake

there is a time when you want to be left alone like an empty boat left in the quiet still waters of the lake above you the white clouds drifting on the blue skies below you the transparency of the clear depths fish swim beneath you minding only their own separate lives weeds along the side of the lake growing without eyes and ears

RIC S. BASTASA
The Empty Boat On A Very Low Tide

the empty boat on a very low tide is filled with the light of the moon

RIC S. BASTASA
The Empty Cup, After...

honestly, it was not the tea that pleased me

its odor and taste
after all those years
the tea finally bored me there is no more joy in the sipping no pleasure anymore
in the vapor

this is a little bit surprising honestly, it is the emptiness of the cup the hollow space around its mouth
into its base that depth of unfathomable silence that in no end

pleases me,

amazed, i am intrigued plagued into the explanation of the burden that it has passed to the fingers of my hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Empty Hole

i think the spring from which this poetry comes is Eros, desire, suspended desire, one which are like spiders from your belly crawling out to build cobwebs waiting for a prey, but why should it be a prey? because the spider is not a flower or the sun that is welcome to every green vast field it branches out into rain because no one is there to make the clouds of a bright day it is always dusky and the door which is open has no one signifying the coming

Eros dying, speaking in tiny tongues, unheard, and no one comes to listen to love and return love with love it moans upon itself, day and night, it sings the saddest song of its isolation the cobwebs have remained empty and then the sun sets and then the spider curls itself like an island in the middle of a black ocean each day is a moan each day is a missing word that you cannot find to fit to the hole of your final idea.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Empty Shell On The Abandoned Shores

priding on its big mouth without teeth and lips the empty shell sings about its past, and the abandoned shore begins to weep, and the cocoanut leaves start to fall, and the........

world stops to ponder.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Empty Sky....

now we are divided
you are confident, this shall fade away it is a wind without roots anyway.

your beard is long and mixed white.
your hand is caressing its tip and you fix your eyes on me.

i am not attuned to this killing.
so many. Now, are those i very well know.

tell me a story of your suffering.
prison. torture. redemption. any neutral and tasteless word.

i know places are exchanged for memories.
avante garde. carpe diem. does it really matter?

two hours is long enough for strangers.
we have turned the cards against each other.
the wall is bricked. each hall is without a door and a window.

i never dream of becoming a prisoner or your slave.
i go down. i take back my i.d. and my freedom.

outside the streets are crowded with taxi cabs and jaywalkers. I flag down a yellow cab and asked the driver to take me to the biggest mall of this city.

i eat at kimono ken. ALone. And then watch a movie.
Unmarried wife, and let the hours pass away neutrally.

nothing political now. Nothing to justify the next victims of this political order. I know you but i am not telling anybody.

There is God. Judge and Executioner.
Tonight, there is no moon. How can i love an empty sky?
The Empty Spaces Of The Dark Sky

to what shall i compare my life in this world?
it is my way of saying hello to you resounding to your door and rebounding to your windows passing through your kitchen backdoor and off into the empty spaces of the vast sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
all those tiny birds
all the lost cats and homeless dogs and this early morning an abandoned puppy, come, come, have your good time in the empty yard that my dead ancestors left for me and those that rest before the night comes in mournful embellishments of fading, come, come to this place of silence and solitude, where i too, sit, and continue on this ponder.

RIC S. BASTASA
The End Of The Love Team...

how it ended
i was only told they split in Chicago
one cold day

another sad
reality about how a love team
ends

i thought they'd be forever
just a thought
anyway

at any rate i look at their posts in Facebook a day after Christmas

the smiles are better
this time
the girl has her new Jack and the boy has his new Jill

next week the guy will be married
and i got invited

meanwhile the girl still loves Chicago's hot grill.

RIC S. BASTASA
The End Of The Rainy Days

the kid is taking out from the cabinet his sneakers

the bike is ready, and the kite his father made out there in the open fields his friends are waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
The End Of The Story Of The Creature Who Feared The Sun And Man

..and so the creature who had feet and skin for fear of the sun learns to live on the water evolving into a fish with gills and scales & some fins and lots of slime purposely to evade the touch of the fingers of the moss and stones its mouth forever silenced by its noble choice just to be its lonely and isolated self

RIC S. BASTASA
The End Of This Gossamer Dream

The final view
I will not see
It is the end
Of this gossamer
dream

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ending Silence Of Departure

when the house breaks like a porcelain plate

tiny pieces can hurt the hands and feet

i know the reason of my birth i will be the one to pick the broken pieces

days and nights my fingers busy on the piecing tears are glue and sobriety is the faithful house help

the ruins stand back the house takes a ball of light on top of the cliff

a lighthouse summoning ships to take the safe path collisions are avoidance and parting becomes new meetings a hug is the cure for all these lonely stories, the ending is the silence of departing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Enviable Family Pictures Of Christmas

the pictures are viral, family, yes family

a woman who is pregnant for her second baby, beside her son, and smiling husband, in the porch of the house the sun shines brightly and the grasses too green for the season, and you scroll some more and this is more enviable grandma and grandpa beside each other, with all their married children and surrounding them ten or more grandchildren

the picture is rectangular to fit all of them in one happy picture this Christmas to mark another milestone of their lives in prosperity and posterity while we just look on, turn on the TV and focus more on what is happening in Aleppo or in Australia or Germany we divest ourselves of this happy moment and divert out attention to something worth taking and talking because, we cannot have it, we can't we simply can't, we reason out, we are designed that way, Period.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Envy Of Friends

we who have everything if you only come closer do not have anything at all you should know that by now

you do not have to envy us we just know how to package our faces in a box of smile and that hurried laughter beside the pool where the party is going

what we do not have
is all you have what you do not have
is actually not important ours is mere paper
yours is pure affection bear the lightness of your load do not look beyond our fences sit comfortably within the confines of your wife and children on that ordinary but warm sofa

you know very well
we do not have ourselves we have an expensive house a number of cars, a bloated bank account a network of friends and super influence but come closer closer than closer
we do not have
actually a home
we do not have sincerity we are not genuine
we are like wax that burn
when the sun
begins to shine

so you see all is fair and square turn off that green color
of your eyes
live your life like you have never lived before like you have never known us that closer enough

RIC S. BASTASA
The Error

this is not an ordinary error that one corrects like a grammatical mistake that with a slight stroke of the pen everything becomes correct
and acceptable

this is repeated error one knows it is an error but one does not correct it it plunges and pushes and pulls back to the same error again something delicious so sweet to the tongue
the mouth salivates
and the heart pounces upon a thousand breathings

this is the error that one always looks forward to see one evening and another in a room the two of you sharing it you kneel and pray and soar to heights without so many words wasted

RIC S. BASTASA
The Escape Door

I want an escape and so i run away towards a door which has writing hands overlooking a pathway of oceans where imagination looks like it, vast expanse of a dark blue
field
filled with monsters.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Essence Of A Departure

upon leaving another one passes me by in fact has already decided to forget perhaps realizing that i am another wasted time or a shape of regret an abandoned house where the grasses have become free where birds begin to think that they own this beam how many women slept here and rearranged their hair and looked at their faces in that old mirror of the dusty room?

there is no attachment whatsoever each is bound by the compulsion to leave because someone is waiting and
waiting
and expecting for a meeting falling leaves outside the winds are tossing them you only hear the usual sound of the rustling but only for a time and then back to the usual silence that no one is interested to question someone is familiar and shakes her head and shoulders and we do not react because we fully understand

RIC S. BASTASA
The Essence Of A Woman

much has been said about the essence of womanhood Miss Bulalacao says it is motherhood. So the childless one is not a woman anymore?

one must go back to the basics of Plato,

the essence of man, which without it he ceases to be one,

and this applies also to the woman is this capacity to think, which if one surrenders thinking to motherhood, or to greed, or even to art, or lust

or luxury,

she ceases to be one.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Essence Of The Waterfall

the essence of the waterfall
its beauty
the reason for its existence is the falling

day and night it falls and falls and falls
you cannot stop it

let it be let it be like the way you are falling from the skies of your dreams it is your essence it is the beauty of your existence it is the meaning of your being you

let it be let it be
find the bottom of it all you shall find rest there.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Established One

a rare encounter
tempts, another seduction (if you only learned about this art earlier, no harm could have fallen in your heart now in pieces all broken, now blood dripping, vein exploding)

embrace familiarity dance everyday let lust hug you and master the giggles
on your toes,
have a dose of all its qualms drink every dew that morning leaves offer
to your lips,

by then, your arms are stronger your tongue possessing discriminating tastes, now the silence gives you power the stare stable,
you are not shaken by the hair the touch does not give you fear
you are what makes the house a
palace.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Eternal Chase

since they cannot really live together the sun and the moon keep chasing each other

hence our nights and days hence you and I
hence the rest of those who choose the peace of the night and the brightness of their days in this eternal chase

RIC S. BASTASA
The Excesses Of Life....

the heart aches
not always for love
unrequited
the body fails not always for food uneaten
it is not the lack that states the reason for this
foremost
it is the excess....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Experience With Nature....

you focus on the paper and put the rain there
added the trees and grass
and the
wet wide plains

you rust the river of course and some buffaloes
and the whip and the leader of the pack
of wolves
and the lost sheep and the shepherd

you miss the experience instead: outside, how water feels with your palms and feet and naked body the slime on the rocks the salt in there to your tongue the snail to your nipples the moss to your lips....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Exploration

one does not easily forget

a rose tattoo
an inch below
one's navel

as one's hands
explore
farther

the meaning of
life
down under.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Expression, Yes, Just The Expression

after all is said and done one can say
poetry has nothing to do with it
not the words and rhyme or whatever
matter
not the rules of what is an ideal form not the sound the way that once you demanded that it must be magical
at the end
it is only the expressed emotion that really matter i feel it and i exposed it to the world hoping that too
once i existed just like the rest of all the components of what we think is the wave of humanity what we perceive perhaps as merely the sounds of dolphins and elephants or as eels and that most ordinary dog that you dub as barking the wrong tree.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Eye Of The Storm

look at you, the eye of the storm looks at you
and you stand still
and the storm
winks about this game
and the storm
goes away it has no eye for you who you? who are you?
you are nobody
the storm even detests you finds you irrelevant for its meaningful destruction

you stand still what do you feel? it is irrelevant you are but another eye eying another eye destructive too but silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Eye Of The Universe

The one and only eye
of the universe
looks down upon all of
us

its laughter is at a vibration level which we cannot hear

we are inside it
and we think that we too are eyes who can see clearly what is there and what is not there we argue more than the

dusts
we like to compare ourselves with the orbits of the planets that move without
a thought

the one and only eye of the universe does not blink
it moves and moves and moves
away

like the star ship of our movies until we sleep and too pass away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Eyebrows

for doing nothing for simply being there
the eyebrows
are given a higher place than the nose
the eyes
the mouth

they who feel more important functionally feel aggrieved about the arrangement
the hierarchy

and the eyebrows that know the reason simply
niked wanting to laugh to something funny that the future
has imagined

you know what jealousy may give sometimes a comedy
and the inevitable chaos

RIC S. BASTASA
The Eyes Are Not That Keen

the hand knows how to deceive the lazy eyes
and the mind pleases
itself with such a magic

paper shreds turning into peso bills
the rod transforms into a bouquet of daisies
the black hat giving birth to a white rabbit

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fable Of The Turtle, The You That You Imagine To Be.

you see, more are running ahead of you, they’re taking the shape of rabbits and foxes, and even kangaroos, and you stop a little bit, drink water from the pond, for you are the turtle of the race, and butterflies and dragonflies sympathize with you, the cricket advises you to quit, there is no use for the race, some are simply created to run the speed of sound or light, such an exaggeration could have made you bow down to defeat and accept the nature of your slowness, or clumsiness as the snail calls you, one who contents itself with its own path of slime and silence, but here you are, stretching legs, and nerves carrying same house, or heart

of steel perhaps taking the race again.

The legend remains
or that fable, which you call
as destiny,
foretelling
as always
your winning at the end.

'it is', you say,

'it is enough
that i was the turtle who won
at the end of the story'
and

there you are, in the books of that fable history binder, ...

the winner.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Face Of Agony

pale, and abandoned
this is the face i see on the paper veiled woman in black lips cracked
teeth protruding
closed eyes
yet she swears
she knows where she is going what she sees inside her dream
in that nightmare
are obstructions
of guns bursting
she flees
and they find her he kicks her
and laughs
he is dominion
she is a mystery
he is the shackle
she is freedom
seeking freedom
he is force
she is resistance
he laughs
she does not die.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Face Of Anger

somehow in the mirror your face of anger has distorted the lines of your face you have changed the dark hues of hate in horrible reds have changed your hair into locks of fire your eyes do not see clearly now as they are full of cinders your words are all screaming and unintelligible we like to help you regain the face of God our waters of compassion are not quenching our love have been all useless you try to burn whatever you touch and leave ashes of them on the grounds do not blame everyone that abandons you under the circumstances it is the wisest and the most practicable choice you consume yourself alone hate has owned you you have become another casualty of evil and we are nothing but helpless spectators.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Face Of Guilt...

he looks at himself intently like he were a stranger,

trying to find out how time, they say, distorts the personal truths in each of us, his face is square, used to be, but it looks like a triangle now, tip extended like a boat on sail, his lips from reddish cherry have turned into gray, heavy clouds, his beard has grown into a forest attracting monkeys and birds, and so is his hair unwed to chaos before but lives with such a confused mistress, his eyelids droop heavy with problems, his eyelashes do not have the waves of the pacific, his chin the arrow before has become the bow,

he looks at his eyes with veins like craters of the moon, and asks: why did he ever do such a mess?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Face Of Ponder

the classic one
naked, butt on a rock legs extended body sits and hands
supporting the jaw
like a pillar
to a cellar

got one today with my glasses on i stare to the sea
amidst the storm
with my window
open

i am not naked
nay,
i am fully dressed
without any plan of going to any place

my hands hold the frame my feet rooted on the floor my soul like water inside a glass overflowing

i am emptying because i am full.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Face Of The Philosophy Student

the face
does not breed the contempt of familiarity
it forges a smile
beneath the logical confusions it shakes the hand of the teacher who now
is too old to remember what reason what cause
what knowledge was once
there
on the shoulders of youth on the crisis of middle age
on the thrill of what must finally come that peace
ever nal.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Face Of Your Anger

the face of anger
stares at you
and you ask yourself what is it that i have done that causes this storm inside you
your cheeks bury the teeth that gnash
your lips are the prison wall of past wars
you were defeated there conquered but was set free for your humiliation you hair runs against the wind wet with the tears
of the earth
your nose protrude like a spear longing to strike the kill she runs away from you and hides in the forest for safety all night
she sees your face
there is love
growing in her heart
moss to the stone
wet with dew.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Faces Of Failures

a boy before he can talk and walk must be taught that life has two faces the first face is that of success the other is dismal failure the latter has more than five shadows and they always chase you to disarm you

and then kill you

a father must train the boy to love not just the first face but also the second lest he can be a candidate for
extinction

when this boy grows to be a man the faces of failure and its thousand shadows cannot defeat him
not one of them
even the one with live snakes on her head can turn him into a useless piece of stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fact Is, In The World Of Lies, Life Is Fair

accept the fact that sometimes we say things that we do not mean, that sometimes we burst in anger and we hurt and then we apologize that we do not really mean to hurt sometimes we show feelings too that we do not really want to express. sometime we say 'i love you' and yet we are just compelled to do so someone is dying and he needs you badly at the end of her day. sometimes, accept the fact, that time strains us and we become the liars, the hypocrites, the fraud, and the swindler. and most of all, we keep it for a time, making some stares straight in the eye.

accept this fact, we are humans and in some harsh times we decide, to survive, at all costs, no matter what.

now, we shall talk, and you shall listen and i shall write about the truth of this fact. we are us conjoined twins in the art of deception.

lie to me as i lie to you and then we accept this fact: life is fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fact....

they pretended to be there and they want us naked

one day, and it is as usual cold they ask us to undress and hypnotized we do everything just as they wanted...

they are drinking their cups of tea and their bodies are well wrapped with their clothes their heads with caps and their feet with their socks and shoes on...

we believe what they are always telling us that everything is all right that there is nothing to worry about these truths that when naked everything will be fine and as the rule keeps on saying we shall soon be happy and free....

it is nighttime
and there is no star not a single star in the heavens and we follow their orders and we plunge into that cold and wide river we are like the buffaloes

we shiver
it is so cold in here and there is no star in the heavens there is only the whisper of the incoming rain the stoic silence of the night the sighs of the air

we think we are dreaming for when we open our eyes again after we dip ourselves in the waters they are no longer there anymore leaving us with the traces of their laughter the coldness of their indifference the acridity of their hatred

we are fools
we follow the orders and we have never used those innate lights within our hearts

our heads bow our feet in complete surrender our toes protrude in the open but it is not late yet we still have time to wake up and to get away from this cold river we rise

we dry our hair and resume with the comfort of the heat of our clothes we take our walk toward the house
back home
and settle in our own fireplace we take our seats now properly as we listen finally to the dictates of our conscience our own songs

as we make ourselves open to the coming of our own destinies beside us is reason.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Facts

to live
and to learn to live alone and to learn to live alone with all courage in peace and in harmony with the rhythm of the rain and the song of the sunshine to be what you are and simply be what you are imitating no one depending on nobody

nobody but you
nobody nobody but you

it is simple
indeed it is very simple stick to the facts be real
stick to the reality of what you are rather than what you ought to be too much pressure and you explode listen to your heart

be calm
be cool

hold your hands
cover your ears
and nose

then jump.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fading Of The Day

God in his usual strokes splashing the colors

from indigo to magenta to light blue to saffron paints another day in the lifetime of the black canvass of our lives.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Failed Tryst

even the moon
would be impatient
on that first date
you were late

even the moon shall
soon
take a star upon a tryst that you have failed

you, you
diamond faced lover....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Failure Of Rhyme

it i were to speak to you in rhyme
and well thought of metaphors it will take me more time

and i do not have much of it and i cannot possibly tell you what i have within
completely

i have no dream of perfection there is no such things as us as perfect as a cup or a ring and we will be at a loss at the end not having said what should have been stated so clearly and spontaneously

as river and rain or as dew on a leaf of grass early dawn

when metaphors fail when rhythm and rhyme stand aloof along the boulevard without rails the streams of our consciousness is always there to save us
willing to adopt us in the form of a sacrifice

i am here now and i am talking to myself and since you are here not to listen i reserve this space for you for the future for time that does not die

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fairness Of The Choices....

we choose that is basic

whether to write about the blooming cherry blossom
come spring

or the falling
and wilting and then rotting of the leaves of autumn

sometimes
whichever way is that whether to choose what is inside
and shy away from what is outside

whether you turn left or take the right side of the two-faced
road

somehow
there is this fairness of one's choosing

whether there is pain or joy
beauty remains unabandoned

truth resides in both houses
and peeps in any
window

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive it is the same house
actually
the same road
same sky
same river same heart whatever, whichever
at the
end.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Faith Of Abundance...

I DO NOT question this universe about how poverty arises, I do not have exclamations for
the system,

I LIVE here and I breathe each molecule of air, I am sent, and I am situated, this place, I have received and I have not worked for what i am surrounded THIS OPULENCE, this body, this mind,
THese are all given
I HAVE NO investment,
i am a fact, and there are theorems,
i am here,

I WATCH, I LISTEN A lot i sleep and wake up and the table of the world is ready the house opens its windows and so are the doors My feet are taking me to the river my hands bathe me
The trees shade me and the ripe fruits fall beside me I have cooked rice within my reach I have roasted chicken on my hand ALL GOD GIVEN

I AM THE CHILD OF GOD
and I HAVE not worked at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Faithful Lover....

you have misjudged the death of that flower which you gave me.

did you not say that a flower dies twice?

once when you cut it from its stalk and second when you gave it away to someone i accept the fact of its wilting but to say that it has died in the middle of the page of the poem that i wrote for you

you are wrong.
this flower lives forever and you do not even remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fall (An Extension) ....

When i fall
this i must tell you
i am hurt
i will be really hurt but don't come near me and insult me with your help or
sympathy
i am complete and more self-sufficient than you i am prepared and had long prepared for this fall my own causing my own fault
my own way of surrendering to God

and when it is your time to fall too i will just watch because i have suffered the same because it must happen because you know always what to do too because you are
by now
stronger than me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fall Of The Honest Man

THIS IS for you
an honest
dignified man whose word
is steel
whose fire is pure

you shall fall
as God allows it but it shall be as gentle as a yellow leaf
and the breast of the river receives you
well
for there dead must you
be
but full of sweet dreams
on sleep

as tender as the shower of rain
on the green grass

early
morning
so quiet...

RIC S. BASTASA
hidden beneath the layers of soil and heaps and heaps of dry leaves after several dry seasons is the bullfrog,

it is kept there for good because when it starts to croak
on such a deep, determined and truthful voice our little world will be turning into chaos...

perhaps out of respect for such a free creature we promise to set it free in due time when the rain is heavy, when thunders roar, when the flood comes and takes away everything around this little place this narrow river
so that when it croaks the truth about us the rain and thunder may still conceal what we fear the most that shame of the future this scandal,

this fall.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fallen Tree And The Children

all its leaves fell the morning after the storm and what you see are the twigs which look like the thin fingers of old women widowed and bowed by years of patience and sacrifices another strong wind pushed it bending upon another tree to lean upon but its hands have finally given up the struggle to stand erect with dignity the cleaner of the town cut it into pieces to be thrown in the smoky heap of garbage far from the place where children still remember how climbing its branches had been a delight of their memories.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Falling Leaves

it is not the leaves you care about but the falling it is not that the trees have become leafless ribs or that the thorns and scabs have become so visible
it is not

but the falling you want to know how does falling fall how does this falling feel the past that pains you the present that you do not give space the future that you refuse to dream i see you falling falling and falling like the leaves that you are seeing this summer afternoon for whom you love they leave like birds flying away from the lonely tunnel where you have long resided

i see you hugging the fallen leaves feeling what falling means treasuring the failures unnecessarily tonight i see no stars like you seeing none in the skies black night silent night dead night i got this last stick of this match i light this cigarrette i sigh i live some more i sleep i dream i have this candle still that tomorrow i may begin to light

RIC S. BASTASA
The Falling Sands Of Time

the falling sands of time
spend themselves like the way you lose yourself bit by bit to the floors of waste but you have your hands and your eyes do not fail to watch you have the power in your mind to turn back the sundial and let the sands of time recover themselves all for you giving back that confidence for rebirth always always there are beginnings your heart shall tell

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fame After

what does fame
remedy
the dead body of a young man shot to death
by the armed force
without
a badge?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Familiarity And Monotony Of Love...

we both
accept it: we do not believe that love has something to do with it

we decide always we decide what to do with our life marriage included,

agreements renewed
vows restated,

on the same table
of monotony

we serve love
we slice love and take the bite we pour love in our glasses we drink love

we smoke love
we sigh
we converse love in the middle of the night we are tired of love and we sleep love

in that bed of monotony we wake up filled with love we have love for breakfast we go to work carrying love inside our pockets we were love in our faces there is always that familiarity in the routine of love and with so much love sprayed in our bodies day and night

we forget its meaning we take it as potable water we do not notice if it still satisfies our thirst if it fills our hunger like the food that we prepare and eat we declare after so many years together still intact under the roof of marriage we wear love we do not notice if we are dressed at all we sleep and we are so tired love is here and yet we do not mind it anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Family Tree....

as predicted
the dragon came breathed fire
killing some of
our forefathers,

my father slayed
it, and i was born,

from the body of that rotten dragon
grows a tree where in all those leaves
names are written

as the leaves on autumn begin to fall
the winds
come singing

a mournful song
a song for heroes

and children look beyond the glass windows on cold afternoons....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Famous One, And His Wish....

i know. You are one of those who aim for the top. You wear a name tag. You study well the way of the jungle, some notes on the labyrinths of fame and fortune. You love crabs. You are flexible, a reptilian by orientation, result oriented and wants always to be first in everything. i know. you got no talent at all. you use another name at night. During the day you drop names of other people. Hot potatoes you suddenly drop. oh i know you, but i keep my mouth shut. star of all seasons. sweet, then sour and then bitter. so what now? keep moving. be sane. change now. you are getting crazy, alone, and yes, dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Famous Pagan Activity

the mob follows the mob is it faith?

or is it the color and
the vibrancy of the occasion?

perhaps it is the loud chant and the sound only of the tapping of the million feet on that pavement

the shouts of the male drums the grace of the female dancers the tiaras on their heads the flowers on their hairs as the caterpillars follow the tail of the last caterpillar so the crowd shall follow its leader

moving in circles and not arriving at
anything

ah, what a joy is there reverberating in the steel hearts of a million emptiness combined on the last day the streets will be filled with litter

and then fading on those darkness is the laughter......

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fan

the fan today is the most inconsistent electrical gadget in the house
it is raining
the winds from the mountain are profusely invading every nook of the house and to cut this story short

i am leaving.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Farmer And The Stray Dog

the farmer arrives
bringing with him his viand and rice
places it in the corner of his hut,

the stray dog
gets in through its sense of smell
and finds its catch the farmer's
viand and rice

the catch is taken
far away

the farmer
is not angry for soon

a woman with a long black hair arrives
bringing him
his broiled fish
and newly cooked rice

the woman is not
his wife
and there they are under the shade of the mango tree

the stray dog watches as this story unfolds to the final chapter inside the hut
on such a very dark night the dog is clever and it knows the ending the farmer is not angry for dogs. mind you,

ever tell.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Farmer And The White Herons Of Katipunan

the heavy rain
is the signal of the new planting season and this early morning the farmer begins
the task of plowing
his plot

nearby the herons
are feeding on some frogs those who made their most beautiful croaks
this morning

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fast Ferry

down by the shore
the fast ferry
runs on a very calm sea like a pen writing on a very clear paper
leaving
a trail of some words, thoughts

about loved ones who perished
one night

the same calm sea
swallowed
a very big boat
and having
satisfied itself

to the full
like a boa
on bulging stomach
it rests
and closed its eyes
and sleeps

beside the fast ferry where I ride
are dolphins accompanying
this silent merrymaking
of the mind

the eyes
look at them still puzzled
quizzical
the heart
is still unaccepting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fat Daughter Who Plays Beethoven facing me

she brags as he looks at his dad

'you bet, best dad in the world! ' she takes coca-cola for a drink

i am not so sure but she gestured
a tongue-in-cheek at such a distance
visible to my eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fat In You  Triumphs

as usual
the morning is swindled
upon the
intricacies of the labyrinthine
syllables

the feet are impatient for the walk tramples upon a
lost cockroach and kills it without
mercy

now the odor of foulness spreads in the enclosed room
and finally takes its revenge upon a cruel writer

the fat in you
triumphs
and the interrogative
is

- - 'who cares? '

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fat Man And His Origami

the fat man one day gets fed up with so much noise. he goes out and faces the traffic and with his strong determined hands he folds cars into deers demented streets into stairways high rise buildings into cliffs and mountains traffic signs into sunflowers and electric poles into poplar trees the smog into some breeze from the sea the crazy world into the hum of an old Chinese village somewhere in Shanghai he lives there as Lao Tzu

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fate Of The Black Bird

the black bird flies alone against the blue sky it is lonely and that is the truth that lies in every black feather of its strong wings if only it can change its course and find a place where there are other black birds like it perhaps it will turn back and learn to sing the song of the black flock it is not a way of life that its father had handed to it upon its beak and claws it is not even a choice and never did it ever imagine that it shall be alone against the blue skies against the black nights and against the towering peaks of mountains there is no other way of rationalizing about it except fate, it is the destiny that chose its path and it is simply following the dictates of the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fate Of The Lonely Woman life exacts the price for your cowardice alone in the apartment you will be pondering about how other people took life using their own hands that independence of not having to put guilt on the neighbor that suppression of what should have been said the mouth trembles the heart pounds upon every atrium bloods rush like a flood and so you are drowned soon another room is forced open foul odor rushes out proclaiming another wrong

RIC S. BASTASA
The Father Of Man

THERE was this child whom Mama shooed away when the doctor of the village comes once
in a while

he was the same child whom Papa left home when he went away on a hunting trip for days and comes back with the head of wild deer

his eyes are lonely peeping upon a hole of the wall where the termites live for years silently consuming everything that was built there no one is lonely forever sometimes loneliness grows an edifice

and then a fence
where that lonely smile is kept away from everybody

when both Mama and Papa passed away
when the doctor met his untimely death
when the head of the deer was stolen away when the termites came triumphantly

when everything that hurt him becomes forever
forgotten
this child has become the father of man
who now writes you this poem

RIC S. BASTASA
The Father Said To Me

Last night at eight
the Father said
to me:

i do not give a
portion of my fortune and treasure
of my kingdom and power

since you are my child
i give you whole

and this morning
he said to me:

believe always in
me
and you shall have no worry.

RIC S. BASTASA
in the christian way of life, it is not a question of the self deciding, either to live or die,
like the way you decide not to breathe and say it is the simplest way to die,
no, it is not that,
our option is to live
and live this life
fully, not of our own will, but to the will of our Creator,
we live, till Death takes us, we live even if we have no more reason to,
we live even if life is miserable, because this is what the Devil lacks, to push through with the misery and be purified with all those pains and know how and what a sacrifice is...
the Devil does not know how to kneel,
to be hanged on the cross and call for its Father,
simply because it has none.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fault Of The Flowers In Closing Their Petals At Night

it is faulty for the flowers to close their petals at night because in the savory world it is during the night where the lonely hearts open the hollow breasts
the pockets of the pants the tearing of the seams of those undergarments and those that are covered the petals of the flowers will be wasted not tasting the bunch of happiness

Sipyat ang usa ka bulak nga manirado
sa iyang mga gihay inig gabii
kay sa kalibotan sa mga lamian
ang kagabhion baya maoy pagpangabre
sa mga gamingaw nga kasingkasing, mga dughan nga haw-ang
sa mga bulsa sa karsones,
ang pagkagisi sa mga sidsid
anang mga pang-ilalom,
anang mga tabon-tabon.

Sipyat ang mga bulak
sa ilang pangindahay nga di mahikap
ang mga pungpong sa kalipay.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fauns Of Dohinob

this is their game
pied piping with the wind making songs sometimes with the flute
under the trees
at night when the moon comes and shines in full for their next trip to the paths of
happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fear

I am confronting
This ghost now
What is really the reason for its coming Inside this antique room Does it really know me like a page of my law book?

Why did I allow myself to be carried by it Like a helpless kid?

This angry man above my shoulder Shall drive it away
This solid stare shall dissolve it Like crystals
Of salt that I drop in a glass of water

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fear Of Being Followed...

i am afraid that my words have become your fetters, so i stop talking
but the more i keep the silence within the frame like a painting the more i feel the brokenness of
my face
i touch each portion with the fingers only to feel the roughness of
my soul

i am afraid i am clearing a path for you to follow me you think it is a right direction and you write my name in your notebook i am paranoia
look, there is no path, this is not the path, this path is merely an attempt to find my world, not yours, i am afraid that i may be responsible for another loss, and so i quit

i still have other places to go each step i erase like a scribbling of a chalk on the board there is no scent in my vowels, no color in my consonants look, look inside your throat there is something red there like a sunset there is no shadow of a tree in fact, there is nothing there to fill the thirst

and the hunger

i leave you now,
and for sure, i assure you, you will be happier
without me

if you follow me still,
the rope shall win.....
The Fear Of Loving

by being too religious you fear the hand of the man destined to love you
till the end

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fear...

my fear has come
i do not excite myself and you are no longer exciting too....

how many times
have i promised myself not to keep these things from spreading on early morning?

time, busy days.
longer hours,
flitting seconds....

must i overcome this fear
and learn
to accept my fate and live with you throughout my undeserving life?

there are no images anymore
except
the bluntness of light the numbness of walls the blindness
feigned.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Feather Of Yuri

if a dove leaves a feather
white,
pure,
it does not just tell you that it was once here it tells you also of another thing that there is a good reason for keeping something like a memory the sweet one
it does not tell you to discard pain but to remember everything
and learn

like you i am not a dove does not speak the language of doves does not have feathers to leave for some people i love
to remember

but i have some pieces of me some memories
some pieces of my mind and they are not feathers though they may like feathers be light, soft, pure, and beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
The Feel Of A Poem

the words are there squatting
not in a position to attack they're more of
in between
a choice of whether to retreat accept defeat or surge and collide and burst and die

the pen looks at all of them they're so helpless like unborn babies
like hatched turtles that do not know where the sea is

and with a rash decision the pen strikes at all of them the hands are fed up the heart is broken
the mind is dizzy
and the poet goes outside the house looks at the garden heaves a sigh
and then keeps a secret upon itself it is the feel of the poem and no one knows it except the words themselves who finally opened up

their wings and flew away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Feeling....

sometimes we feel this waste of having to write on water something that we never really walked upon but we never really mind

we know what we are doing we are these friends of the air and even if we do not know what happens next or where we are ultimately going we simply keep doing and going and going because we have to, because we really have to someone is dictating us, what to write, what word to use, and then the fountains of wisdom keep flowing and flowing and flowing i guess, you feel it right, this is the prelude about eternity, about the unceasing journey into something heavenly, something noble, and yet just felt never seen, never tasted, never touched.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fever

the temperature is high i see mirage in this desert in the room all sands
i lie on the left side holding to my own knees
when i close my eyes
i see the volcanoes erupting it is only me trying to save myself from the lava
and the fire

RIC S. BASTASA
The Few

this is a sad flight of people who never knew themselves now they are dead even in the middle of their lives the desire has been sucked and the body is empty the soul is hollow and it quests to be filled again it has a beginning that was forgotten it has an end but it has not known it since then this is a sad flight of people who have chosen death in the midst of noise this is a lonely fight of people who have long surrendered there are no questions and there are no answers there is this cycle that only a few have broken

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fierceness Of Memories...

the fierceness of a memory is carried by the colored flags of this island it should have been a celebration but it is not the wind is strong in this low season and the waves are eating too much of the white sands i can sense your anger, but i am walking away like a man without thoughts i have accepted all these anger like the way i am walking away from everything i sit upon a chair i take a number on that early morning when chairs are all empty when stores are closed the money changers have not opened yet and i wait and i go through these process of surfing without something definite, there are no questions in my mind there is only my presence to myself i am bound, i know, i am helpless i am still bound to you, and when love comes i close my eyes thinking about your face and body, and when i burst into a scream i take the composure of decency by not mentioning even the syllable of your name it is still respect for love despite its cruelty to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fifth Symphony....

yes, it is the fifth symphony and it is all about
you alone without me
there
begging for you

time teaches well
as taste dwindles until bitterness
puts the seed for the inevitable

we all take time to leave without saying when to return

most of the time
i do not come back since turning back is another bitter pill which i cannot swallow

i will be in Ibiza dancing to electronic music no, not Iceland where i first met you.

you were the symphony of ice on my notes of fire....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fifth Woman

She was my sin, because I promised her the sun the moon and the stars.
I of course, cannot comply,
I must say I am joking
I must say, I am cruel.
She was the first actually, and I was her first kiss, embrace,
And first heaven.

We believe in dreams together.
We weave, we make some patterns With fingers intertwined
We have eyes that look in the same Direction, hands that clap We believe in forever

I was her dream.
She need not sleep forever.

I walk away. She looks for the goodbye note Everywhere in the room where we once made love.
There was nothing.
And so she waited for all those years Sitting by the window
A man may come running towards her house That man did not come.

I walk away, I did not come back.
She died.

There is no way that I can attend the funeral.
I am caged in what we two believe in.

This is forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Filipino Poem 1

As written by Bimboy a grade two pupil in Olingan elementary school section sampaguita:

The sun comes to my barrio this morning It peeps between two hills and on the side Is our nipa hut and on the ricefield my father Pasturing the carabao while mother cooks the Mudfish in the kitchen while my sister looks Out the window and waives at me who is Holding this pen writing this poem on paper.

RIC S. BASTASA
The sun rises in my little barrio in Olingan And sits on two hill where our nipa hut lies The sun is like a handsome face looking At two hills like the twin plump breasts of a Beautiful maiden and his sunrays are like Fingers lovingly caressing them with too much Warmth the coconuts, yes, the coconuts like nipples Spread on the hillsides and his tongue licks them his mouth sucking them these young coconuts while my papa Leads the carabao to a mudhole to wallow While my mother takes some hot chilis for viand My sister is not there on the window she Eloped with her boyfriend so you can find Nobody looking out the window of the hut.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Filipino Poem 3

The Filipino poem as written by Bimboy A college student of the Ateneo de Davao University taking up BS Chemistry on a Cocofed scholarship grant:

The sun rises on the two hills in my barrio.
You cannot find Papa and Mama there anymore They always quarrel over their extramarital affairs And the nipa hut is just too crowded for the two of them.
My sister had two sons but you cannot find them there Because they live in another nipa hut on the other Side of the river while the ricefields are dry and did not Yield any harvest because of drought and the carabao Is also not there in that scene because it died, butchered And sold as meat to the hungry neighborhood.
The sun sets on the hills like a bunsen burner turned off.
The two hills protrude like two empty glass flasks turned upside down.
You cannot find me there I am here still writing this poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Filthy Rich Woman Flirting In The Escalator

she met him at the escalator
they did not talk but their eyes were laughing
taunting
for more of this mutual understanding

there is no
need for elaboration
for what both people know

there was a certain intimacy in their
silence
not unusual for this filth

this way of loving only in the mind

with a stranger
she looked down
not at the floor somewhere between the ceiling and his shoes

between his legs i supposed

there is a short
lapse

and they cannot forget it
that crisp crunch
a steady thump
sweet stud
a thud.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Final Decision

i wrote a very long sentence

and i pause at the spot where i could have put an end

and then i press the cursor
back

i have deleted you
in there

RIC S. BASTASA
The Final Departure

you know what happens at the final departure you are not allowed to take anything including your body, your thoughts, yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Final Destination

in this game of life
i am like a yo-yo that bouncing thing that is thrown away and rebounds always in the final gesture of having to return to the hands of its Creator.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Final Dot

so here you are a dot wanting relevance in a long sentence

no one wants you they want something that does not end and so they are bombarded with lots of question marks and bombastic interjections not the fourth of July stuff but those that tears every nerve that shreds off every skin and flesh oh, it is too painful and they find no hope in happiness

now

now, they pause, they want you

they want you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Final Insignificance

to know what is real you must pass through a labyrinth of doors
you will be lost that is the first test
you must find
that key of losing
without having to feel any emotion
be it gladness or sadness

after passing that door you are transformed into another path
where other lost people pass at you
and does not ask your name
or what you are you become a floor

and all their feet
step upon you
but you will not know this because this just happens as a matter of consequence

when all the strangers
pass
and there is no one left you are granted a pair
of wings

that door in the clouds is the next
no one sees it
except you
and you fly through
it
until you become a little star
hanging yourself in the corridors of
space

you have no choice
here
except to give light

you fulfill what you are finally one of those that glitter
and yet no one really minds what you have become

for in truth
you are just one of the billions and hence
insignificant

RIC S. BASTASA
The Final Plunge

i have taken the plunge deep in the bosom of the blue sea into the depths of the ocean to be with the fish and the corals of this sandy floor there is no coming back there are no reasons on the surface there is this final plunge searching for eternity

forget me then, creature of light

RIC S. BASTASA
The Finality Of Solitude

I, too, commit the same mistake. I fear being alone as though i was born with you from my mother's womb as though i was conceived in the the pronoun We as though the crib was a market with lots of people roaming in there we are not us. I am i. And will always be in its solo flight from what i am to what i will be.

For the meantime, there is this marketplace, this mall, this house, this home, but at the end, there is always this silence, that of a leaf and the pond without a single ripple....then a hush.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Finder Of The Exit

AROUND us are WALLS, ALWAYS walls,
all walls, and up our longings are our longings like a sky up there all sky, pure blue sky

we are never birds
by design
we are the geckos on walls we always sound echoes, lots of echoes that return to us from these walls around us we are an island surrounded by water down there

down here
there must be an exit

we must dive and be not afraid to drown because we are never birds by design there must be a cave where these waters get inside us

we dive, dive deeper into our oceans of doubt
there is an exit

i know, now, where. Follow me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Finest Glass

expect later on that the finest glass
shall be broken

that 's how things are meant to be the good die young

the finest shall be taken

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fingers And The Eyes

our eyes are weaker unlike our fingers much quicker in its moves and hence the eyes are deceived

but we believe more in what we see rather than what is done secretly the fingers keep on its tricks as the eyes keep its faith in the canvass where dark shades dance.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fireflies Of Puerto P.

we take the boat at night the sea is having its low tide we are going to the place where the fireflies are mating we trace the rivers like blood to our veins the moon has not come at that hour the trees along the banks are mere shadows the fireflies are all there glistening like stars in the heavens there is so much silence what we can hear is only the sound of the boat sliding on the river i've seen for once the magic of their lights and there i am but a mere shadow against the trees the journey towards my childhood begins where Papa trapped all of them inside a jar for us to marvel how life gives light and how quick shall death take it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fireflies......

you do not hold the fireflies in your hands or put them in a jar

they belong to the
space
to the place upon the crown of trees
to the night where they are most beautiful
when they glitter
like
the silent sparks of the fire crackers
of the Chinese New Year

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Agreement On Marriage

first and foremost we agreed
whatever is there is there no expectations no demands be content with what i have and i shall be contented with what she has to offer nothing compulsive or obsessive

second one must always keep that personal happiness

be happy first pamper yourself with yourself then share

since if you are happy
i can be happy
and marriage by itself can be a happy union

i guess this works on our 15th anniversary

no wars except the pacts of peace

love, love, love
just do it, don't need to say it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Arrival Of Love In My Heart... of the many people who got out of

the church
that Sunday evening
of 1985

despite the dimming light of the passing years my failing eyesight considered it was only you, just you, and nothing but you that i clearly saw....

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Impressions That Last For A Lifetime

you do not have the x-ray eyes
to see my real
bones
wrapped by my brown skin
all over
me, what you see is my broken lip
my twisted nose
my strict eyes square jaw
and they are all enough you say
you know me now
and you do not like
the shape
of my shadow
the glow of my eyes
devilish,

you have not seen my anguish you could have seen that in the sea that raged
last night

it sank the boat ten passengers are still missing

you listen first how it was like that why it happened

hear me
then strike, if you will,

i will not mind
the first impressions last and for a lifetime injustice reigns

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Long Rainy Night

it is the first long rainy night tonight.
now i can sleep
satisfied about its own explanation whey the day had been so, so hot.

i turn the air conditioner off and listen to the most real poem of nature the first long rainy night tonight.
the sound of rain on my roof.
the sound of water dripping on the side of the house that feeling of being hard and wet beside her.

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Love You Have Made With

darkness
is a mole

the skin becomes an ocean

wide wide
wild wild
imagination
like dolphins and seagulls

a big idea
comes like a whale

light is a needle like a pine

a cone is a fruit
of waiting

what i see is a fireplace

a lighthouse
no one is a ship

not one is a port on this

emptiness engulfing
a big idea

of a whale and planktons

sounds of sipping
coffee on my table like a piece of yellow paper like a lake where letters become kayaks where speaking becomes a waterfall hitting rocks where swimmers always find time to laugh like children once, away from books, away from imposing fathers dispensed from impulsive mothers as memories flock like doves upon a wire, a thread of thoughts connecting into something not so significant but lingering like a lingerie of the first love you have made with.
The First Morning Of 2013

at the garden
under the trees
three empty chairs
and a table

dry leaves
still unswept
on the pebble ground

the word for this year
is still
solitude

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Morning Of The New Year and now everyone is back to sleep last night's revelry was a must firecrackers, heavy drinking, loud music, motors honking and at the last countdown the clinking of wine glasses for the toasts

a happy new year they all promised themselves

i slept early last night after a silent prayer

waking up at 4 in the morning another silence meets me and this silence shall be the same for another year

strong, and ponderous trying not to disturb anyone curling satisfactorily upon itself like a boa that i just fed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Part Of The Misleading Venture

the poor [ i.e. workers of the farm, pregnant corn husker, the driver of the pedicab, the smoking tomato gatherer, the sweet potato washer}

i am lost in the symbols of humanity, i am trying to decipher again the meaning of their visit and they decision here to spend the night at the second floor of this house where my father-in-law died because his son pushed him towards the stair and hit his head on the grinding stone

the bolo is sharp, blood flowed from the pig's neck
after that scream

there is noise, and some magicians are selling potions when someone needs love so badly and then resorts
of spells

the natives are smelling so bad there is no water in the river where they come from they are thin
there stomachs are filled with air hairs with lice

i guess you know when this happens and why this happens because, it is fiesta time and there is no more road for us to use.

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Rain

got a good look at the falling of the first rain in my town up on the hill where i am contemplating about the game of hate and love and greed and giving and power and subjection like bow and arrow and water and fire all in my head

i wait and then it come all umbrellas open some windows begin to close i like most to see the rush for shelter

another form of in/humanity looking for safety praying for the rain and confused when to close and when to open.

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Scene Of Childhood

the first scene is white. Against the snow trees without leaves beneath their feet
are the fallen
leaves,
red,
the air is cold, and howling no one lives here
anymore.

do not go there,
it can make you like myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Sigh

i think i have to write this
before i die.

You are beautiful.

I like to be a part of you.
But God has disapproved it.

His people had spoken and They are his Sole Voice

The Iron Rod that burns People who renege Upon The Order,

Because There Must be
One System,

One Color,

The Other Version is An Outlaw.

Ideas Other Than This One
Are Hanged.

Dead. Infamous.
Sham.

You are Beautiful and I love you: Your soul & Your Body.

It is sad I never told you
About this.

If I did, I cannot imagine What's Next.

Let us just forget
I am not what you Resemble Me to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Time

the first time i see you i have seen the beauty of the world outside my fences such a short time about the little talk about love
and its possibilities

but then i have come back to my senses i begin to miss my silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Time As Always

sweet will it always be the first kiss
the first love making behind the barn on the hay stacks sweet as the remembrance be the first walk by the sea the first holding of the hands sweet to recollect all the first pieces of you treasures of the mind the heart that falls in love for the first time after grieving.

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Wave

the first wave is a little cruel it makes creeps in my spine but then it sounds its message clear there is no joke
and there will be no other beginning the second wave comes this time everything is well understood the warning has been duly given everything now is calm like the morning sea i say yes and i give a sweet smile no regrets

we start a journey and there is no coming back
that is the truth

RIC S. BASTASA
The First Woman

She’s old but man she is so powerful In this block,
Her favorite is black
And she makes robots Makes them love her with a simple Click.
She’s chinky eyed, reminiscent Of china, where she is rooted And she filters light, like she is Filtering people

She is never true, she is Doublespeak and she looks so frail In her blacks and whites She stabs you in the back You bleed and you’re out You just don’t know.

I do not like her, and she knows it And she has no way of Entering my door, I have always closed It for her, or her friends or even My mother-in-law or even
My wife.
She has no way getting in But she manages somehow Inside my dream

There she says she misses me and Asks me what am I doing to myself And that she can do everything for
Me
She can be my robot

I refuse. There is no way that she can Take even a single hair.
She cannot just pretend to be a robot.
That is never true.
I have known her and made Her a period. She’s small and insignificant And I want her to leave at once Go away.
She is power. I do not need her.
Even in my dream.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fish Bones

the door is high on the mountain if a fish swims its way it is more probable that its fins are torn before it even reached one of the banks of the river
below the feet of grassy lands the old wise man once tells the story of the great fish who made it there flying with the power of a borrowed wing

a friend to the winds humble to the reeds
and the fish as soon as its gills become adopted to the hazards of mountain peaks suddenly turn into a dragon heir to the thrown of the volcanic kingdom how it has learned to breath fire and spit embers

how it has grown leather like wings and sharp scalpel nails is a legend

that old men always want to tell to their grandchildren with nothing in mind that they shall become great (and never like them who have succumbed as mere fish bone thrown into infamous pits)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fish In The Fishbowl...

i see fish in a bowl
the size of the fish is just enough for the bowl and water is half-full
the fish swims freely and breathes air and lets it pass through its lungs and three bubbles rise up
and then disappears
at the surface

outside the house it is raining heavily the news of the river overflowing
the banks
is flashed on tv

warnings are given by the government evacuation is eminent carry only those which are necessary foremost
save lives of the children and the old sector

we are ready
we are not taking this fish bowl the fish can take of itself when we left the fish flips its fins and breathes faster releasing more bubbles on the surface of the water it is the only creature i think that is happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fish That You Caught With Your Fishing Rod

the fish that you caught with your fishing rod while you were alone at sea tastes more delicious than the one that you bought in the market

you have worked for it you waited for long to catch it and hold it with your bare hands you can still feel the vibrations of the nylon string which caught the mouth of the fish that now you are cooking and eating the excitement still resounds inside your tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fish Without A Bone....

way back
he had always been good, the emulated
god
way back, back to his old ways,
he had catered to all the needs
and codes of conducts invented by those who had long
been dead
and cruel, way back his thoughts are copying machines
now
when their consciences
and lives are gone to the beyond
he is left with an empty mind
a fish without a bone
a kite with a wire for a string
a puppet whose strings are cut
now lying inanimate on the wooden floor

eyour mistakes
he is a duck
this willing target for the terrors
about
to come
The Fishbone In Your Throat

Something you swallowed Sticks to your throat
And you do not really like it, You suspect it is a bone
Of a fish
It hurts
you get a cat to Scratch
Your neck,
You feel the needle Pricking your Esophagus,
Tonight you cannot sleep
The pain stays
Throughout your mind
Your body
And you remember then
The friend who betrayed you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fisherman And His Wife

she waits on the shore while he goes to the sea

the full moon comes the seagulls fly on the horizon

he arrives and hands her a basket of fish
with a follow-up kiss
then he whistles
as he ties his boat
to the coconut tree

then they both go home
hand in hand together

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fists (A Revised Poem)

faced with a blank wall the mind passes through it over the fences

it goes beyond
kicks and jumps away

reinventing wings and sharpening claws on its personal journey into the unknown more real than what can be touched by the hands

too theoretical ephemeral

as one wakes up for another usual morning the fingers close upon a fist lays itself upon the navel one preaches

'what is here inside my fist
is real'

the wings in my head are upcoming unable to flap
and resigned.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fittest

to see to it that only the fittest survive we opted to eliminate we did not mind the pain of others we have in mind excellence

when only a few have been left when the world has become lonelier than ever we face them

we welcome them in this world of the fittest this is the heartless society
this is the logical corner of the universe less human robotic calculating devoid of emotions
there is no love

no one dies here
always awake and guarding

no tears, no screams all pressing keys and looking for the solutions of problems
stuffed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Five Blue Beach Empty Chairs

five blue beach chairs empty facing the foamy sea the big rainbow colored umbrella casts its little shadow

as usual the sands have nothing to say there are no more people here on this stormy day this is the day of the haunting memories like dragons of old spitting fire

tell me if you have seen them.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Five Petals Of The White Gumamela

i was ready with the white gumamela
flower in my hand
to give you

i waited

hour by hour
i tore each petal
until all of them
fell to the ground

i went away

five years passed
got married to another woman who live in the house with me
less my heart

i bled
on a wound

when you came back from America
you look for me

i was already lost
no one
found me anymore

even myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flame Of A Writer....

if you stop writing you actually detonate
a bomb

if you explode you lose
your self

and you cannot find you they cannot

so you keep on writing to place yourself
under the happy state of a fuse

you light a room
you have become a bulb in the darkness

you are so beautiful
the fireflies
shy away from you

after all just like those moths
eye die when their wings touch you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flitting Things

be reminded again on the fluidity of our affairs look at my body this is a boat carrying my spirit
to the other side of this island

this earth is another ball
that our hands have taken hold on a fickle play

what is this place?
we kneel
most of the times to feel nothing but sand and hear nothing but the songs of the worms

what is this mind?
it is a temple for words where sometimes
all prayers are
forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
The Floating Feeling

drastic world is not a boat at sea
where we wait for the ports
of our
known destinations

d i try sleeping
one day
on the 20th floor
of the hotel
in the city

d i feel the floating
distance
above the earth and
the roads
have become simply threads
of the needle

d the world has become a cloth where i embroider
all my longings
for the sky

RIC S. BASTASA
The Floor Of Our Beings

To get to the bottom and savor the floor of our beings and then to rise again and be new, despite the feeling that there
we have drowned.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flower Arrangement Holds True

heaven
man &
earth

the
leaf
shall take
the place
of
a
woman

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flower In The Living Room

there is this flower inside a vase early this morning in the living room
of the house
when everyone had left
to their offices
and somewhere else

in my loneliness it give
delight

like your poem Meg

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flower Song...

Life is too short

all the petals that bloom
this early morning
begin to sing
the funeral hymn

As darkness reigns some buds prepare for the morning
show....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flowers In Her Garden

sosperos de amor
dama de noche
cadena de amor

the longings of love
the lady of the night
the chains of love

and then
she left him

what grows wildly
around are the

amor seco...

she means it, she has no plans of coming back.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flowers In My Garden Bloom Perfectly In The Morning

you never notice the flowers in my garden

they bloom perfectly this morning

it is always
the rain
yes the rain that you detest

it is always the rain that you complain of

and the rocks scattered on the road

the dead butterfly
the biting ants

my flowers bloom
perfectly still

and they are
the reasons why we may soon
part

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flowers In Your Garden

you are telling me that the flowers in your garden must not be of one and the same kind or else there will be so much boredom you are telling me the need of variety:

roses and jasmines
and suntans and daisies, colors and scents all in multiplicity as you talk your eyelashes curve a little lower than i expected and your mouth twitches a little bit just to show your dislike and contempt of the word:

boredom

unnecessary uniformity, that human need of variety equated with a taste for something new and even unusual

i completely agree with you.
Let me take you inside my heart where my garden lies:

flowers of different colors and scents

i have grown them all inside my heart, feelings of love and desire, in a variety or sorts in a diversification of breeds and if by now you ask me and demand that i may tell the truth inside my heart, in my garden of love, you are a very beautiful flower so sweet scented and well loved and cared by me but there are other beautiful flowers growing in there,

you are not just the one and only, as you would like to think that to be

and i will tell you again, I agree with you, there is a need really for a variety,
the one that removes the word

boredom

from the beautiful garden of our vocabulary.

RIC S. BASTASA
i accept
emotions, who can disregard it without getting sick and so i accept all emotions as real as my tongue
bitten by my teeth
and bleeding
as i taste blood
like nectar from a
a tiny flower that you pull
with your
cruel hands

i am a bouquet of the yellow flowers of an emotional breakdown the doctor who is a poet writes that
poem

the heart shrinks like a fake cloth from the chinks

it is a drowning man who never knows the hands that swim in the body of a woman

i accept all emotions of anger and pain and envy and hate (that is as crazy as an erupting volcano wiping out a town from the face of the province burying those who are still screaming in a number of seconds the town becomes a flattened rock a steel plate still fuming mad with toxic smoke

time sides with me
the saints and angels come in hordes and hordes

God points his finger to my heart the flowers of compassion bloom a new landscape is drawn i am converted. i am new.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flowers Of Her Sorrows

The flowers of her sorrows
Grow in the garden
Of her eyes

Tears
And they glitter in my light
And I look at them Though sad

But oh
They are too beautiful
Too
Like tiny diamonds
In the sky
Of her eyelids

In the sea of her cheeks Flowing and floating Like yachts
Like seagulls

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flowers Of May

the children are picking
the flowers of May
as offering for the Immaculate Mother

the flowers only bloom
once a year
to meet such an instant
fate
of bloom not reaching the 30th day

tradition does not think that much.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flowers Of Our College Years In Ateneo De Davao University

the buds bloom into flowers around the world their fragrances are spread in every corner of this universe

the gentle showers
of barcelon
the warm sunshine of dotterwich
the ardent tillers of
of the university

we say what most of humanity sometimes forget

thank you very much

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flowers Of The Nipa Palm

the flowers of the nipa palm assume the color of the brown, brackish swamp expectedly, these flowers shine on the swamp like fists of an angry man deep within the thick covering, if one tries hard enough to open what it has closed for all these years is a white cloud, thick with syrup, something sweet its fruits, from the flowers of its fists.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flute And Carmen

yes, i remember that night when i sent you the song about carmen

just a flute, and i know it made you cry

i may pretend
and ask you why

deep in my heart
i know

what pain is when there is no cure

RIC S. BASTASA
The Flux........

the more you understand the more you accept, and if you accept things as they are, how can you complain? what you understand is that everything is in a flux, and what is in flux, is moving, changing, going, moving, ever static, and you realize the wisdom that this whole universe is vending you:

everything is temporary.
the change you want now, is overrun by another, and another, and another

until you yourself is gone and you do not even know who you are.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Foams Of The Sea

everyday the sea
brings us waves
stopping by the shore then going back to its journey again
to unknown shores
faraway continents

the joy, the beauty
is always there no matter if nobody is watching.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Foe...

(i must write it now, lest this be forgotten
when you read this perhaps by chance
this will tell you
that it is you and i cannot forget what i think you did
and that it could have been disastrous

but i am never affected and despite all those malicious intents
i stay whole and moving towards my own specific direction)

then this afternoon we meet
again

(you are older now some white locks of hair tell me that i must pity you and hence must forgive you have nothing to pay
me
you have no debt)

if you ask me
i could have told you
no man can put a good man down and the evil that you inflict upon another
always comes back to you with
twice as much destruction or even more
the worst has become your true friend and the one who orders
you to destroy me
has vanished
in vain
erased from the map
and no one
remembers
or hates to remember his name it is tautologous with inequity)

i am inside my white car
and i open my power
window

and i see you walking in the rain
like a helpless
wet all over chick

what a pitiful sight
for one
who was once
very powerful (and too corrupt and very very cruel!
how many innocent
souls have you
thrown to your hell?
how many have you ordered liquidated?)
i cannot say any word but then i say something pleasing to your ears when i say'

'Get inside the car!
I'll drive you
home.
It is raining.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fog And The Abandon

we know well how is it to be nothing
we were in that past which pushed us today which has nothing in hand to offer and we look forward to the future with fog and abandon the silence of which is killing all hopes and desires.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fog Inside Your Dream

Inside a dream, someone waits for you, she is crying,
inside the dream there is rain, she does not run away she looks like a hopeless woman there is no sound in that dream she looks peaceful and patient the rain falls heavily water rushes to the the canals that are overflowing

inside that dream you are helpless and you cannot touch her you try touching her and she is gone like a fog when the sun comes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Follies Of This World....

i will be reading
the pages written by two men who had died years ago, and i will scrutinizing
their arguments about the lives of their patrons, and those whose names were written as judges who too passed away with no significance at all.

there are three pages left and i am now grossly affected what to do next.

at the last page i will write a number.
and then i shall walk away
for a while to figure out what is wrong with this world and how come i still live with all its follies.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Follower

she was looking for something direct and clear
something so candid and distinct something so particular and descriptive of her state, every moment identifying with what i have once offered to the gods to please and appease them she was looking for that kind of pain
that inner struggle that sigh i am at a loss and i say i am sorry i am reborn and i don't have them anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Food On The Table

sour,
a little sweet
nothing bitter
like you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fool

build the strength
not in the pillars of your house not in the height of your walls

build it
within the confines of your mind within the beautiful boundaries of your tongue

the handsome face
crumbles on the moronic mind

the dumb finds itself ousted sooner the fool and his money shall be parted

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fool And His Money

build the strength
not in the pillars of your house
not in the height of your walls

build it
within the confines of your mind
within the beautiful boundaries of your tongue

the handsome face
crumbles on the moronic mind

the dumb finds itself ousted
sooner the fool and his money shall be parted

RIC S. BASTASA
The Foolish Monkey And The Spaceship Looking For A Viable Planet

the white man looks upon the brown man sitting,

a poem is written about a monkey with cut tail sitting on a mountain of gold the white man has a gun the monkey is that barbarian a thesis is written about imperialism and the destruction of capitalism

the epilogue mentions about environmental perdition about an earth finally committing suicide about a few on spaceships looking for another viable planet

RIC S. BASTASA
when you are not there yet you aspire for it, it is like a magical mountain the apex of which you dream to step upon, and every day of your life you prepare to be there, every step is carefully done every strategy studied so well, until you reach there, and what do you see?

the plains below, just like another scene
anywhere
you hear the song of the wind there you touch the fog you feel the rugged texture of its soil orchids hang on its sides but they are all the same in all those places that you have been there is really no difference and you come down and others who see you adore you and ask you questions about the song at the peak of that mountain by the wind how does it feel to be on top?

you tell them that it is all the same that there is nothing that makes that peak so significant that you devote all your life trying to reach it but no one believes you and you regret to see them following the footsteps of the fools over and over again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Forbidden Apple.

on one hand love. quite heavy.
on the other lust, not that bad.
between them, an office hardened face.
strict and strong. and so hypocritical.

at the party you tell a friend that is how to survive a confusion. one has to pretend. and one must admit this matter. Like the rest

i am like the rest. An accepted norm.
lust on one hand. love on the other.
and the silence between. an accepted norm.

no one talks about it. But everyone understands.
the pressure, and the angst, the pleasures and the secrets.

at noon, the lady with a very well kept hair wears her highly tinted glass.
that capacity to see and yet does not want to be known to have seen it. or touched it or even having eaten it. The forbidden apple.

and of course, the secret paradise.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Forbidden Fruit Of The Tree In Paradise....

i think I've known love when i first met you.

it happened when my spirit went away from me just to kiss you, while my body in full civilized and shy restraint kept its static appearance like a bowl without its content of water.

it was then that I've known for certain that love does not always take the wings of freedom, that it hides what it feels, that it surrenders upon its chains, sleeps alone in its cage and weeps like no one ever did.

o, i am talking about you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Forbidden Touch After The Marriage

watching you somehow makes me alive, just watching you, what i do not wish is having to touch you,
for i know the rules of our place, when i touch you, i am condemned.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Forbidden You

let me live for another hour allow me
to take a bite of something forbidden

you
how beautiful
my planets revolve
around you
sun

just a bite of this cake of lust
allow me
let me live after this a lifetime of regret....

am i prepared for a series
of short deaths?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Forest Inside

once i went inside the forest it was like a cave of trees the labyrinths are many islands and slits of lights drizzles of rain from up high it is gray world cold, damp, and very silent
as though it is the first day of the earth and i were the first man created.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Forgiving Society, ....

he accepts his dishonesty & by doing so he has become another virtuous man in town people embrace him welcoming a new brother it was only that little spot unstretchable that he situated himself but all is gone now forgiven &
sometimes she wonders how easily was it done the stains he left on her are still there enumerable, the children hate him, and time have been too long to institute the repair ah, here is society, fickle and amnesiac over things badly done rough on sand.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Forgotten Thought....

there was a thought at dawn which i forgot writing at noon i tried to remember it but nothing comes out i waited for the night with eyes that sees well in darkness, with hands that feels well when the noise is gone and oh, i remember it it was about us
that we have started
to forget....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Forrest-Rose Secret At 100 & 90

'Take your time and get to know one another.

Get to know if you like all the things that person stands for....

Be forgiving and patient and say I love you once in a while.'

RIC S. BASTASA
The Four Women Of Your Life Brother brother it is important to have

1) a woman who is intelligent who can correct your spelling and help you with some deep ideas

2) a woman who knows how to cook
   tasty exotic food
   to fill our cravings

3) a woman who is beautiful one you can be proud of
   as you take a walk in the plaza

4) a woman who is caring affectionate and tickles you to the bone and takes away the boredom in your life

these women are important but what is most important is that these women must not know each other

[that was his joke
before he was murdered]

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fourth Amendment

THERE IS always something
to say,
something that you may not want to hear and break the drums
of your ear,
the truths are always covered and sealed
like pressurized champagne which when finally opened in a surprising bang
bang
all attention is caught to the scents of life

the smell of vapor from the pine trees
the sparkles of champagne on the glass
that you hold tenderly and slowly
sip

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fourth Of July

she just called
from L.A.
It is the fourth of July
a holiday and

true
as william describes it, the colors of red blue yellow orange
green
and
even
gold
glow

in the dark skies of liberty

fireworks
it is all
fireworks
nothing
but fireworks

she calls
they just stay inside
the house
where the white senior citizen is sleeping
and they hope that she may not wake
up
and ask them

what are they doing?
who are they
and why
they are
still laughing

despite the cold
wind blowing
outside
the window
panes

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fourth Woman

I am honest enough to appear As myself to her: a naked man that she can touch In a dark room, as dark as her hair

She was laughing and keeps on changing her Form, she is liquid, and takes a lot of shapes She transforms from bat to frog, to tigress To lioness to kangaroo to dino To amazon to samurai to warrior to mulan To a street protester to clenched fists

She loves me she cannot love me like I am a man to her, who kisses her and Licks her, she cannot have anything overwhelming She cannot be overpowered with anything Including desire.

Naked, I pulled my brief and trousers and belted Myself and took my shirt and buttoned loose ends I am tight tongued.

She looks away but she is back in her form: a woman A beautiful woman betrayed.

She kisses me. It was too late, I have become invisible I was no longer in her room, as dark as her hair.

I take some pains with me. It won’t take long, I will be home.
My geisha is waiting. She is always there in the fealty of woman.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fragments Of My Life....

so many fragments of my life
scattered on the floor

on the skies they were taken by the wind

to the oceans they were pressed by the rain

there were risings and fallings there were so many fillings i always move on not bothering to pick them up i cut myself into pieces again time after time into more countless fragments

i do not bother those parts those sheddings

for they are no longer mine but for the world

and then the last fragment was taken away and i am left with nothing and then the perfection was done i am from nothing and to nothing i must go

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fraudulent Merchants.....

the merchants have done it again the scent of the desert put it in your skin the scent lasts till eternity just a drop, buy now, or you regret later and so we bought, and they say just wait, have your coffee, tea or soda while we prepare your order packed for the plane when we arrived home it was just oil with a drop of the scent of the desert in one big jug and there the scent did not last long in the eternity that you were promised....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Freak...

all they did was follow setting aside what light is there on their heads to my consternation
i have become the freak the subject of their talks during meal times

and then one day like the rats of Hamlin they followed the flute player into the cliff
and they all fall to the sea and drown

you see, this is what freaks do ey they run against the streams of authority rely on their own lonely light keep its fire amidst the storms and live...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Free Bird

i shall not talk about the free bird about the cage judge shall i not about what really happened after the fruition of freedom for the bird may be free and now flying all the corners of directions the heavens and the gardens and rivers of love flowing yet on the night when it rests upon a branch

the thought comes somehow unavoidably

the cage though to her a prison has sometime in one precious moment pure love and devotion

she once felt.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Free Captive...

the years
caged me, i am held captive by the time that it is keeping,
i keep memories of captivity,
i peck upon those grains and rest upon a satisfied
belly,
some people are bothered why i do not escape
when the door is open
and there is no
one
guarding it,
the captor had long died due to insomnia

time made me
fall in love
with captivity and since
then
it has made me feel
that i
am freer than those who dive in air
and plunge themselves too painfully
on land.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Free Dogs Of The Town

these dogs are free and they move from one field to another roam the town play with other dogs and chase cats and sleep on the grass on summers and they bark but never bite.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are people ahead of us and who enjoy their own fame who like to teach us how to make frames

that there are desired shapes of words with their own colors and tones and like light we ought to mix them to their own
precise delight

when i was new i had always been clumsy because i always want to think like them each hour i command my hands to take their own shapes of fingers

there are always desired sizes and colors and tones
and for years

i have lived in so much restraint that i finally discern that i am not free because i must live the way i ought to be like by them too suffocating like i am covering my head with a helmet

so as not to harm myself from their preconceived accidents my voice thinned out and my hands became moles

then too tired to take their commands i escaped
into the mountains and i learned the language of the birds and the trees the songs of the wind and wilderness my arms become rivers and my feet mountains my hair the forest and my eyes the sun and moon my breath is the wind dthis is what freedom does dthis is the fruit restlessness dthis is the poem that you are reading now.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Free Thinker.....

dlaw the free
thinker wants always to be left alone in the river of his thoughts as he swims like a fish inside the murky water never wanted to be seen lest it be caught
and be fried
at the end
for someone's dinner whose face is as ordinary as a bridge whose name sounds like the most common street of that unknown town south of nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
the powerful has no visible arms but it will always make you feel that you are nothing without it and if you do not take side, what are you?

a leaf fallen.

a used tissue paper with all the dirt wet with the rain lost in the mud.

they will say you are a loser because you have never taken side with power whatever that be whoever shall it oppress and it should not have been you if only you have chosen to obey the rules and just be with them and play

your mental constitution rebels for it has always been independent as the wind that goes in and out of a window and hovers for no
one.

what do you want to prove? that you are better than the rest?
that you are not corruptible?

these are the questions that hang on the ceiling of your innocent mind like bats
they do not have cages like bats they only live on their free nights because the days are prisoners
because the common light is a yoke

you are alone now and so to live you must sing your songs of independence to your ears be light like a cloud and have no mountain as master hang there for a while and then drift endlessly is this not freedom?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Freedom To Choose

early morning
one rubs his eyes upon waking up
one goes to the rest room for the usual beginning
and then finally
looks at himself
in the mirror and in there he sees
the wide ocean of choices in his eyes.

he washes his fears
with the cold water inside the cup of his bare hands.

Now
is another day of
freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Freedom To Write And Just Be No One...

another one this morning is proclaimed prince of words golden crown on his head a smile on his face

reflect: do you want the same?
do want to have a crown or laurel?

what he did he so deserves what you aim is not what you like.

feel the comfort in the freedom of your use: nothing to a kingdom no one to princedom, nothing to prestige, and here you are enjoying your choice of words, nothing to rhyme nothing to measure, vagabond, gypsy, you are king, without minions, you are prince, without a princess.

RIC S. BASTASA
outside freedom waits it is not naked like the way they draw it on paper or sculpt in marble or mold with the plaster of Paris, in fact it is well dressed, light sneakers, straw hat, and a travel bag, ready to grab the exit
from here

it is not the opening of any door or the breaking of seals and locks it is the ready heart, the opening arms it is a pair of imaginary wings but it is calm, well composed gentle, and not outspoken.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Freedoms

you see it is not the gate of the house that sets you free
it is not the stairs not the hole in the roof that gives you some needles of light actually it is the breath that you take it is air that is free it is the space of green spreading in your garden
those tall grasses you decide to mow it is the pebbles that you collect and begin to recall the story of each fragment
and cracks
it is the clouds that you see when you lay your head upon the arm of an old sofa where you father once rested from too much exhaustion
it is the memory of someone that you remember you love and who loves you in return and who was stripped off away from you like a sticker on the wall mind you, it is your wise invention with wings that give you flight when everything gets too bitter mind you, it is the mind it is the spirit, never these sets of fingers these smooth skins

this open mouth...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Friendship Of The Frogs

this the picture of a green frog with big rolling eyes like a golf ball

it floats on a lily leaf beside it a big yellow lily flower the waters ripple

it is a happy frog of friendship that my friends sent me an hour ago and my friend wants it back in a minute

to assure that i still want her back i am thinking like a slimy frog.

shall i send it back or not?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Friendship....

over the rice fields
this hot summer
the constant company of the buffalo and the white heron still remain...

best friends forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Frog Of Basho

the frog of basho
made its
jump into the water.

others say
there was this

flash that made the frog famous not in Hollywood

but in the pages of an old poetry book.

the pond is forgotten.
it was it who said: flok!

not really flash, like light bending itself to the power of the water.

basho of course
the poet, lives forever.

is this what we really want?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Front And Full View Of Lust...

i have seen the fullness of the glory of the front i am awed
my mouth gaped
my saliva flowed the heart has no words to say there is marvel in every nerve barbaric in some places setting aside wisdom embracing the moment
loving each minute
lusting that may last for hours thirst that never satisfies itself with water the hunger that cannot be filled with the wheatness of bread i ask you to make the the turn so i can see the past the fullness of your back the smoothness of that hidden skin the curves that have given me the sense of danger but all these, beauty and desire must prevail there is glory everywhere there are songs in every corner a poem found in every slit there are treasures shown by the maps of every wanting always insatiable

always unbearable.
The Frozen Tears Of Silence...

it is at the lowest ebb of the water
that you see the crabs
and snails and urchins, and corals
and

mussels and then when you come for them, and force open their hideousness,

you may see the pearls,
the frozen tears of their subsumed silence

for a hundred years,
of isolation....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Frozen Waves Of The Sea On Canvass

as i look at the frozen waves of the sea on canvass by a clever painter there is always that feeling of anticipating the falling of things, and thoughts one, the watcher or the spectator, though stalled and cramped for the eventuality of things that come somehow feels that things like these though happen
an icy mind, solid and sharp piercing more
the bleeding heart that waiting which you know shall never come someone that says tomorrow i shall be with you and yet by this distance there is nothing that binds

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fruit Of His Silence And Indifference

what he remembers most was that time when he asks for a glass of water which was denied him he was angry at first hysterical about his thirst his view on death that comes like a black horse from far but he calmed down ultimately knowing that nothing happens anyway despite his scream the wind is still the wind that goes out from the hold of the mountain not ever minding his situation the trees are cruel too taking care only of their own roots and so he grabbed silence he coiled with the ropes of indifference and take himself for a rock beside a cliff and then they look for him regretting perhaps what they have forgotten such a value for a rose but then he has no eyes as identifying marks and no matter how they search despite his presence they could not find him now they are all crazy like the tribes driven out from Babel and he simply watched them all in silence and indifference they murmur and cry out in the darkness of their souls it is time now he says to reap the fruits of his labor.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fruit Of His Vine

my own view of Christmas
has changed

no longer gifts
not even the greetings
oh, i find them redundant already

now it is my spirit and the spirit of this season it is inward
and unseen

it is this feeling that i am stronger this time unaffected by some lonely tinge I've grown strong bones this strong mind

not anymore about any envy about that happy family beside those gifts
and the tall green tree or that star and glistening stars

i have my own life to live under God's infinite grace his will unto mine
am the fruit of his vine.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fruits Of Sleep

the real job is to house-keep what is not knee-deep one knows how to leap and go away from the sheep

the mountains are steep more women shall weep things simmer and seep comes the time to reap all the fruits of nice sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fruits On The Table

I love the papayas Spread on the table Reddish orange papayas Plump and Smooth to my Hands

And some purple grapes Sweet pulp Luscious to my Lips

Some rambutans
Hairy fruits in red Tickling to my Fingers

Pungent durian Tasting like Heaven to My mind

They are all spread on The table

And I would caress smooth Reddish papayas with My bare hands
Put a grape in my mouth
And my tongue
Does the savoring of Juicy rambutans
My lips close in
To a juicy roundness
As I breathe on some Red hairs
Of this magical luscious fruit

The durian is opened
And the taste of heaven Comes to my mind With eyes closed as Though I own all the passions
Of this world

When we were young and Crazy about ourselves
I laid her on the table And spread herself there She was all those kinds of Fruits to me and I was the Hands, the mouth, the lips,
The tongue
The stomach that swallowed her all

Every bit that was juicy Every freshness every plumpness She was all fruits to me
She was all nature giving in, all over To the passions of this fruit lover.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fulfillment

sadness, becomes the fruit of the fulfillment of my
desires,
the satisfaction of my wishes the dreams that come
true...
on one hand, these leave me dry and meaningless into the abyss of a pig contented
no art, no poetry,
plain living
nothing exciting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Full Moon And The Little Girl

a little girl by the window looking out
to the sea,

the full moon shines spreading soft light on the trees and the vast expanse of the sea beyond her fresh air caresses her face scents of leaves and flowers a taste of salt carried by the sea breeze hushing sounds

mother is still not home and father is far away the moon shines brightly that night loneliness is very much like it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Full Moon Shining

Dusk finally falls
Off
I shall look
Up the sky
To see
The full moon
All shining

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fullness Of You In Me....

def:visitor
in:house
mouth
slime
warmth slither
your tongue

the last thong
did it so well

mornings have turned into beautiful nights stars fill the skies
of my heart

i was such vast space yet you filled it
so well....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Function Of Poetry....

i am that impatient reading your poem about a foot long but not to disappoint you as you spent hours and perhaps a week writing it carefully choosing the words which sound alike at the end of a phrase, and counting each syllable to really make a fit like the way masons make a brick house i browse over them in your presence and read everything there aloud only to see you crying and then sobbing and then taking pity on yourself and then saying that you wish you were never born and that you have those who put you here and you still do not know if God exists and i stop right there and bluntly tell you to stop writing because you are in effect have become so disconnected and i pretty think that it is not the function of poetry to kill you.

i invited you outside to see the full moon, feel the cool night breeze and hear the giggling lovers happily enjoying each other's company along the beach.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Functions Of Poesy

mend the anguish
protect the thin line between sanity

and intellectuality

express in words
what you cannot say

fertilize imagination with metaphors

you display in some ways what you conceal

dreams become alive
like dead resuscitated

you create a world
you have the key

to that only door and you enter smiling

understanding the language you invented for yourself freed from the usual worries of the day released from the walls of your limits you fly as a swift bird uncaught by the hands of time the cruelty of the present you stretch your sight far beyond their clutches.

The Furies And The Fears the weight of guilt is horrible

i thought i could not carry it
until you winked at me for the promised silence.

while at the islands
the waves are hinting fears i look to the horizon thinking of you back home will there be stories to tell and what will i be in

there?
i want to rewrite what happened the possibility had become so nil

so here i am and there you are becoming strangers again content without anything to say in order to survive.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Fusion

i once was flesh
the vultures fed on me i once had bones
the cold and heat
made a dust out of me now i am just air
anywhere
breathed inside you
we are one.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Future And The Past

give these two shall disappear when you live on the vertical sphere
The Now

Here the two do not exist.
The Now,
This awareness of a Presence Time becomes meaningless.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Future Is In Deep Sleep And Does Not Bother....

i look back (with minor regrets)
a life unedited
asking for some corrections

i look back again and again i can do more than this and that it could have been something else i could have been someone more enlightened

i look back
it has become one bad habit for me until i bump
a wall and it hurts my face awakens me

it is this present this wall this soundless pain
this complacency

too much of the past i know, emaciates the present on slipping hours on hands with leaks
on dimming lights on lazy afternoons and colder nights

the future in deep sleep does not bother.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gadfly

the donkey's
tail was badly bitten by the gadfly

the goddamn gadfly
made the tail swell
got infected
and the donkey
died

the donkey
has a spirit and it rises high above its dead body
above the grass and the table where its body is laid

and when it sees everything now clearly and accurately
why the gadfly bites &
why he died
not by fate alone but for a reason

it knows this:
the gadfly suffers
a lot
from being disliked
by everyone

it killed the donkey far from making it move and do
a lot of work better and faster
far from its motive of efficiency
it died instantly
causing much sorrow
to its master
its user and abuser

but the donkey still recommends
more gadflies in society

and adopts Darwin's legacy
let the most fit survive let the weak become the humus of
the earth
for the seeds of the trees for the moss
for all those roots
for all future fertility.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gadfly Of Desire

there used to be a frenzied
passion,

this rut
and panic of the nerves

the madness of the desirous mind
wanting to eat even if it
full

it craves for water
and air when water is sea-full when air
is a storm

you go awry
you run without direction the ass
hole in you rules

you tumble
you fall
regret is all around you mourning in a funeral
and you are
the star of the dead show

years shut you up
and you hold a cane your knees now
tremble

come to think of it
you sit on one of the stair planks of the old house

you still like it coming back to you the falling is sweeter
than this
monotonous sitting down
waiting for no one
waiting for nothing

the hours drag you like you are the defeated gladiator that soon they will through
upon a cliff
soon to be eaten by those hungry
vultures

where's that frenzy
that kills you?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gaiety Of Reflection

'Irony is the gaiety of reflection
and the joy of wisdom.'

Anatole France (1844-1924)

ON that clear day on that clear
pond
i see the face of irony it is myself
and it is not myself
both
in the paradox of belief and disbelief

there is joy
in the wisdom of acceptance in the domain
of my own
laughter having seen
what i am
and what i am not what i ought to be
and what i want to be it makes sense
in this
loneliness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Galaxies

the galaxies drift
the stars are swimming in the ocean
of space
it is dark but all the planets are feeling confident there are laws to follow there will be no collisions the big bang was so terrible some stars explode on the other hand another galaxy is born somewhere in space
all these meteors and stars and earths paradise
in random chaos
we must all know is still the best poem
ever

you see? the stars over there they are twinkling they agree and do not question

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gambler

the gambler one day while sitting on a chair facing the sea watching the sunset looks at the poet like him alone on a worship of the fading day wondering what was it that keeps digging inside his heart the gambler starts a conversation telling the poet that he envies his solitude his grace with the use of the words his beauty and his journey along the paths of the spiritual and the divine communion with God the poet is not amazed and takes a simple gaze at the gambler's face he give the gamble a little smile telling him

nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Game Is Over....

this May we are supposed to fly to Las Vegas
visit Hollywood and Disneyland and have fun with cousins Liclic and Rodin

perhaps we will cook
the best adobo
and then we eat outdoors under the summer sun
under the trees
and look at the panorama of west coast

we changed plans
we stop in L.A. then we go to Mexico

i dislike it actually but my wife insists
she knows that you are there having married a mexican, allegedly happily thereafter

i do not really know
what happens
when we see each other again my wife wants me to be honest

and wants perhaps to see how my face blushes
how my tongue plays with
my mouth
perhaps to give a smile and how i must say the words that love is gone or that the game is over.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Game That You Play....

what a naughty dream when i have learned to forget you showed up naked in my sleep and when i wake up from said slumber
you are not really there

RIC S. BASTASA
The Game...

this game of light and dark
has finally shaped
a body
that i have always yearned
for all these
years

it is not meant to be mine it is a product of nothing
and nothing
gets it back
like what it owns
it scatters and then gladly
it disappears
not verifying for once what one feels

i sigh
some things are meant to be sighed not meant to be held for a moment
of caresses.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Garden Of The House, The Trees And The Birds, And The Little Child In Us....

because the birds always come here
every morning
renders their songs and stay for a while because you are kind with your grains
not selfish with your time because the trees offer themselves as homes because the boy was taught to just watch how they fly away
there is no chaos here nothing bloody
there is harmony
because this is it
keeping each in place and in freedom this nook has long yielded itself to peace and quiet....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gas Lamp And The Morning Sun...

at night we are faced with the light from the lamp that sets itself
off
we are accustomed somehow
to the comfort of darkness

sometimes it is
us
that blows the light away we kill it

we have known the meaning of death

that morning
we are met with a different light that lives a life of its own that depends on no gas or fuel

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gathering Of Hurt People

what we had on the table was finally consumed
all the ripe ones even the raw ones were taken there was silence
one looks beyond the window finally breaking the silence saying, look the clouds are coming laden with rain

ah, the one who was optimistic hums a song an offering for the rainbow that soon he knows will show again the colors the promise that we shall never be destroyed
again

then we all smiled
we have returned to our hopes our senses open like petals blooming for another day....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gay Waiter

oh i am happy to see the gay waiter after work at the bar
now waiting for his prince charming
outside
to fetch him
at dawn where they will mix pleasure and love
together.

the cold and the dark outside the warmth and love entwined in their arms and lips inside.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gecko

last night there was a gecko
hiding behind the frame of a painting
from ho chi minh

its tail was visible

when i turned off the light it came out and had all the free time catching its prey of roaches
and mosquitoes

i was relaxing myself on a hammock at the right side of the house it was such a night without the moon the world is still without a windy atmosphere what do you expect from this?

i guess that gecko was just shy it knew however to eat and live without us.

RIC S. BASTASA
as i sit on one of those veranda benches
at the second floor of
the house
as the moon wanes behind those dark clouds there the gecko crawls
on the ceiling beside the lighted bulb
waiting for its favorite moth, mosquitoes, and even lost cockroaches.

tonight it may rain and the mosquitoes may not be around to satisfy its hunger.

it is steady on the wall silent on its feet or hands.
ready for the ambush....

RIC S. BASTASA
The General's Funeral... will there be a heavy rain on the general's funeral?

the family members say, please understand, do not need your flowers.

they wish there must always be sunshine and at least fifteen minutes of silence, that will be enough, to pay for the last respect, and then back to chaos.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Genius In Each Of Us

the genius in each of us
lies in the ordinariness of the clothes we wear and the ordinary walk that we take on ordinary lanes the genius of air, and sunlight, and wind the one that gets inside us without notice yet makes everyone live the one that caresses us without feeling so important and yet makes us survive the one that refreshes us in the shores along ships that we are in taking us to our destinations tell me if they have special names and special functions

the ordinary air, the ordinary sunlight, the ordinary wind is that not the genius of the earth the fire, the land, the sky are they not so ordinary for us to take and use and love?

they are the strokes of the genius of the Lord and yet they never have names of their own they are everywhere, they are anywhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Genius Inside Us

genius is just a matter of playing games. Nothing serious when you fall down
no matter how deep
and painful,
just smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gentlemen Of Canivarø

i look at him
as i look at myself, and i know we have something in common, that stupidity that is buried in our
epidermal existence,
but we keep it so discreet within our own system, more into the secrets of the arts,
the functionality of a cosine, the realm of a stormy
state of
an athletic form, (do not inject your own vision, it may be destructive to the canvass of what life must be)

listen, this stupidity is not too obvious on you, who is dressed in white for the first communion,
your hair is oiled and
well combed,
and your shoes are as shiny
as an auto paint,

we stand for the show,
and we are decent,
and we walk the aisle
along us the Greek pillars, and at the end of the hallway, we are met
by our ex-girlfriends and our ever patient wives.

(do not interpret the we here as we)
The Gestalt

knowing that it will suffer the same fate as Oedipus
he puts himself inside
a box
puts a hole for a window enough for him to breathe and perhaps live for a while until this horrible thing happens, he grows tendrils all over his body,
with roots for armpits
and nerves,
and what cannot be stopped eventually is his coming out of the box
as a vine, at the end he ends up craving for the sun

heliotrope, that is what he is, darkness could have killed him,
wife of this father,
who he wanted killed.

his leaves are made of wax all trunks melted... and so he has become too disconnected, puzzle pieces, not fitting in to a whole picture,

jigsawed...gestalt.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gift Of Ennui

laugh at me
i want to hear the hardest laugh
from you

at the last hour
i want to see that wry smile of the monotony

everyday i come to you for worship
bowing before your seductions

and everyday i pray before God and ask forgiveness for my failures
i pray that He may grant me
the gift of ennui
that at the end you may become one tedious thing so i may not come back again and ask for your graces & mercies

laugh at me
i will say i love you i will say i adore you
and that i cannot live without you laugh the hardest & i will keep on hearing your music to my ears

i am waiting for the moment of boredom
so i can finally be free from this desire this love
that i know is never meant for its fulfillment the reasons are not on our side the world and the heavens do not give its blessing

Oh God! when shall its end be!
Oh Monotony! where the hell are you?

RIC S. BASTASA
we may think that those she turned to stone

hate her, but how do we know?
we haven't heard yet

any stone talking?

sometimes i wonder
stones are happier for whatever happened

i need to know those stories before the turning

for sometimes i think that Medusa is a gift, there are those who, in reality, have become stones but never really come out

in the open.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gift Of Privacy

you look at something where desire is mixed with fear and that is where the excitement seems both near and far &
you look behind you
no one is looking the doors are locked and the windows are well covered with thick orange colored drapes this is the world inside you and you begin to do what you really want discreetly

the privacy visits you
and hands you
the most beautiful surprise
of your life
where you are real
true
and happily left alone sailing
in the oceans of your dreams
fulfilled.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gift Of Silence......

somehow i begin to suspect
blood

we come from the same mother
it is a fact which we cannot deny

i do not drink wine
with you
and when we go for dinner we take the shallow part of the conversation

we are all dishonest not telling what we are really up to

no one is burying any hatchet
no one is mending fences got no sealant for the broken porcelain bowl

i keep on hiding my fortunes away from you and there you are keeping the saying that a person in need is someone to avoid

when you got sick it never came into my mind that i have to visit you and bring something that pleases you

there was a time when you said i am a coward but i disregarded it saying well it is not true i am just being courteous
to you

ultimately we never ask anymore why we have not really become the brothers that we are.

we know what is wrong and we keep it that way...avoiding a confrontation buying peace, and waiting for the gift of silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gift Of The Magi: Wedding Anniversary

she went to the market then back to the kitchen and cooked spaghetti

the table is set green mantle, silver spoon and fork silk hands

i went to the school and had a legal lecture on divorce and its consequences in Philippine setting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gift.....

i cannot be another slave because you have something to give me

i think that in utter simplicity i do not really need
anything

if you only told me that all that you
can give is not a thing but your self
i could have paused a minute
think about it
and then
resolve to accept
you

somehow you are still in the realm
of things

and i am in the realm of persons

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gifts Of Medusa...

we may think that those she turned
to stone

hate her, but how do we know?
we haven't hears yet

any stone talking?

sometimes i wonder
stones are happier for whatever happened

i need to know those stories before
the turning

for sometimes i think
that Medusa is a gift, there are those

who, in reality, have become stones
but never really come out

in the open.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Girl In You Antonio?

the girl in you antonio
must have been smothered all the red ribbons now kept secret in your closets but now the woman speaks about the porcelain plates and the scented water that lay so cold in the tub.

the girl in you antonio
does not die, it creeps like a lizard in your skin and faces you as a doll.

if indeed the child is the father of man, so antonio the girl in you shall be the mother of all your desires.

RIC S. BASTASA
yes, yuri, the girl from cebu whose heart has turned to stone is not an exception, if fact she is a general rule, they are uprooted from the clutches of poverty from fathers who are unemployed from mothers who earn their living on the simplest chores of household keeping where there is nothing to keep, of fish vending where there is no fish, of selling vegetables
where there is no
good harvest, and so these girls have to attend to themselves,
and the internet has become the tool,
display their wares seduce the south african male for an exotic treat of oriental coyness
and shyness feigned, enticing the whites
and blacks to pour their dollars on their
innocent breasts,
these occur so regularly as a matter of accepted occupation, predator prey relationships thrive, vultures come and wait, because there are dead meat offered in our streets aplenty in the internet.....blame them? reprimand who?

let them play their games let them find out who is the prey and who is the predator, because Yuri, they are all big enough and we just mind our own business, let one find his pleasure, and let the other give it to him.

and let us watch who punishes whom, who gains who loses in their own free games.

RIC S. BASTASA
must i tell you that we have arrived at the same frame? the irresistible force has arrived at the immovable wall and then you, heroine, horse,
goddess, magic wand,
chalk,
whatever you pretend to be or want to impress
us to be,
the solver of the problem the conflict mediator buffering medium

it's been years and we are at a stalemate invite us, and we shall not attend if i were the immovable the other is the irresistible are you angry? or plain crazy? this is the old war, as old as a shell and as crazy as hell you go between, you are nothing at all,

you have become
our common enemy, now.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Goal Of Poetry

it is simply to reach out to people
with our verbal hands these mental arms
and make them
look

deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper
deeper

too, within
themselves

RIC S. BASTASA
The Goat

you are the goat
set free on the field of green grass
and you eat every herb that your eyes feast upon

unleashed your feet jump for your freedom

now your master
has come and takes a glance
of your beautiful
body

he stares at you looking closely
in your face for that last laughter

RIC S. BASTASA
The Goat Crossing The Moat

The Capote is afloat beside the goat Crossing the moat to read the note And keep the quote in its throat

A tote does not vote that is what you wrote So back to the rote eating the oat and Smash the mote hidden on the boat

The seas bloat so you devote a bank note For the seed coat of a wild oat & scare quote for your strep throat As Joseph’s coat dote the eight note.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Goat.....

you remember how it was a kind of play with that goat
in the mountain of your father

the goat chases you
and you run
like a child to avoid its sharp horns

sometimes however you confront this dilemma of horns
and you hold it with your hands and test your powers as you begin to twist its neck or lift it up to the sky and feel that you are like Hercules

when the goat cries in pain you return to your senses unable to kill the animal for it is not time yet for there are reasons for killing

there is always a ripe time to get more meat and cook it well and share it with your friends on the dining table

for it is all set the goat must graze and live only for a time for its purpose is but to be food for the master and his kin

there is no remembering about how pleasurable it was when it was alive
how good looking how obedient how it has pleased your children in that playful bout of chase and run in the mountain of your father.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Goddess Of Justice

you want to have a goddess of justice with eyes all covered one hand with the sword and on the other the scale

you demand somehow that she will take side always with you in the same manner that your adversary wants it to be to be true to herself she must stay still at the center unmoved by all your pleadings until she finds the law that fits and then imposes her will without your farce or force.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Goddess Of Love, Art And Beauty

he meets the Goddess of Love &
Art and Grace and what she touches
even those that are so mundane
from the beginning
at the end
transforms themselves into the most
divine.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gold Laurel In The Non-Human

we are fooled
that one has no
face no hands
no body
there is nothing
like that
here
but what is happening
he is declare
the number one
human being with laurels of gold
on the head
and we all watch with disbelief
and we still ask
why is this?

but we care no more
there is no need for
any explanation
i plant more seeds
and you sow more corn
in these fields of
all our endeavors
soon it will be over
we expect
to harvest nothing
and we leave this place
with a song in our
heart

we do not really care
we were doing it because we all love to be human and that creature
who got it all
is none of our concern
we are here
in another place
contented
and self-declared.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gold Laurel In The Non-Human (2)

we are fooled
that one has no
face
no hands
no body
there is nothing
like that
here
but what is happening
he is declared
the number one
human being with
laurels of gold
on the head
and we all watch with
disbelief
and we still ask
why is this?

but we care no more
there is no need for
any explanation
i plant more seeds
and you sow more corn
in these fields of
all our endeavors
soon it will be over
we expect
to harvest nothing
and we leave this place
with a song in our
heart

we do not really care
we were doing it because
we all love to be human
and that creature
who got it all
is none of our concern
we are here
in another place
contented
and self-declared.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Golden Fields Of Rice

soon it will be harvest time and you will see the women all wrapped in their sarong their heads covered against the sun bowing before these golden ricefields harvesting the produce of their plowing and sowing men soon it will be another happy hour of drinking and singing and merry making some debts will be paid off the children shall remain in school delicious dinners shall be served on the table and happy conversations shall be in place in the backyards of these working people soon the fields will be empty again some dried stalks will be left some grains remain unpicked by then it will be summer and the sun will be so scorching

there will be changes going between the sowing and the harvesting my faith shall keep staying amidst the cycles of the sun and the rain the wet and the dry seasons of this tropical place the mudding and the cracking of the paths i will always keep going to walk on like i am bound for a certain destination

RIC S. BASTASA
The Golden Fool

he is foolish
his name Coco
he is like the monkey who sits on the mountain of gold though he owns it
everyday
he goes to town
to beg
for him to live

RIC S. BASTASA
The Golden Rule

mind other people’s business first before they mind yours live life that way you want it and live it well before they give you their bad examples be punctual, be there first before they talk about you and don't leave before they all leave better talk about them rather than they talk about you

take note
beauty gets second place to an innovative ugly woman.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gone Lover....

this is what she writes at
the wall,

full moon,
and promises,
shines on a day
and then
fades the other days until what is left is utter darkness,

and then we wait
she says,
for the new moon again
not giving up
those waning hours shall cause sorrows for a while but not for all those times
when one begins to count with her fingers other memories

sugar coated, and pinches of salt.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Good And The Harsh

upon a plate of steamed rice and salted fish

with you
this morning's breakfast

the day shall start

as TV news breaks out with another
killing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Good Men Do Nothing....

when the beetle is smashed as the child leaves to another game of his i get a stone and mark another violence where no one is punished for beetles are just beetles and children are merely children, i always have a stone to mark an unforgettable story wherever i go

it is always a story of a crime unsolved, a violence without cause, another story of a crime which get laid and paid.

even within our family circle, i also have stones.

stones which i do not throw at anybody who committed the offense a blunder an injustice against man committed by his fellowman

i have never thrown any stone at them i only bury them in utter silence, as markers for me to remember that somehow i too have committed this common mistake of simply gazing

doing nothing and then somehow move on either with a guilty conscience or this sense of helplessness the biggest sin for all those other good men who did nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Good Men....

everyday the strangers come i have always kept the door open they do not have to knock for i understand why they are here and what they want to do
the dogs do not bark them the cats come sliding on their feet the birds comes to rest upon their shoulders,

they do not open their mouths their eyes gentle upon the morning light and like all those memorable and valuable moments, these men of art and honor, and passion

ey do not stay that long they come and go and come back again just like any breeze, any wind any hush of leaves and husks and filaments of light and shadows and souls...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Good News And The Sad News

the little girl with lots of curls
and two deep dimples
on her cheeks who smiles at you
early morning giving you the most needed hug to last you for another day

is dead....

a terrorist sprayed bullets in their home this morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Good Ones Die Earlier

cause the good most often die earlier caused by others' envies & cruelties and those who are left behind refuse to understand why one as good
as this must die instead of them

RIC S. BASTASA
The Good Poet

For the good poet knows who he is, when asked if he is good (and wise and beautiful) he looks up into space showing to you that up there there is an unlimited edition.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Good That Does Nothing But Good Perishes
First....

it is a fact to me that the good are those that perish first the just are killed mercilessly in their homes and those who are at peace are being dragged into the war that others have made for
themselves,

i am good and i am waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Good That You Do Unto Others....

ask, please ask, if you have the heart every moment that you do good for another if it pleases her too in the same manner that we do not really want to hurt or inflict what innate badness we keep we must always ask if the other is enjoying what we do and we keep on doing ask, and you must know if the good that you do is good for the other for in truth we do not know where that person is going his needs and wants, his dreams and wishes, his past traumas, his scruples and unresolved conflicts so please my friend, i have to tell you again the good that you have done in me has hurt me and that is the truth when you laugh, you have become the worst person that i have known and met when you say it does not matter, you have become a worm a parasite to my body and by all means forgive me when i finally decide to deform you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Good Tree

the good tree
bears a lot of fruits and when it is time for the picking

of the ripe ones
there are no questions of who you are and what do you deserve

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gospel

it is this rebellion about freedom suppressed about desire restrained and
cut
this bleeding that never stops this heart that cannot mend itself
like a lizard's tail
it is this listlessness this opinion of others that i am lost and desecrated
that i have abused and dehumanized what lies sacred within my guts
it is all these that have converted me as one of those hundred and thousands of strangers losing their homes unable to locate the next address of their next sleep
restless and now so free not to read any dogma not to take seriously any rule learning somehow
how to live life by simply waiting sitting down standing by

RIC S. BASTASA
The Graciousness Of Experience....

i justify it
before myself.
down into the caves of death
we walk to know it much better
to see clearly
its face and listen
to its voice.
of course, it is frightening.
the thought that we can go back to that door would not have been possible
until the graciousness
of experience
lays the way towards it and opens its doors even without a magic word.
there is no magic
here. it is the graciousness of experience the humility of subjecting ourselves to his original mess to fully understand it.
i was there i only feel it and to say that i understand it is a lie.

i come out as a dove from Noah's ark
faithful to my promise to tell you about my new world which shall be ours,
mine to write now.
and yours to wonder whether it is really
ture.

this is the graciousness
of experience
the enumeration of pains the description of what is hell
and it is not other people but us experiencing fire
and feeling its horrors.

it is not hell as written it is hell as experienced.

it was you there and myself. we fathomed the secrets of our beings.

i come out then as an open wound
less the blood of my imagining.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Graft

from a tree without fruit the one that is about to be an uproot God did graft
a twig with three green leaves glossy on the bark
and so
fully alive,

this is what had been prayed and this is what has been granted.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Grandeur And The Majesties Of Nature

the sea will always be there always surfaces moving and sometimes i ask if it is just the wind that creates in it
that baby's curly hair between the sea and this mountain is the neutral shore white thighs of a woman spreading her legs to every manly wave even to the feminine winds from far amorous skies love and lust with always be here these players of the games that nature plays upon us when we watch a mountain come out from the fog wearing the white hair of snow caps when we see heights that move us into an awe and then we begin to mentions so many names
of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Grass

as no one tends them
here
they grow wild
then.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Grass And Trees.....

under those
tall towers
following trails
amidst the crowd of mute
people
the way to home missing it is such a desperate event
as you begin
to feed those squirrels beside those duck
sculptures where the only thing
that is cool and real is the grass and some old trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Grass Grows Wild On Paths Unknown

the grass grows wild along the paths unknown they thrive and spread and bloom
with no one tilling and caring
and cultivating
except with nature's sun
and rain
in some vicissitudes of warmth
and cold

how much you my love whom i care so dearly
so tenderly and
and deeply?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Grass, Not The Bench

It is not the Bench that gives me that feeling that i have touched the face of the sky grope my hands upon a bunch of stars or slide my doubting finger to a fresh wound
of resurrection
I sit there All Day and finds nothing that redeems me From Oblivion

It is the grass and the ground that it has covered for years faithfully that have given me the essential strength of my bones the tingling feeling on my heel

the feeling is more than that i am surrounded by silent stars cumulus clouds
feather winds
filled with foams

RIC S. BASTASA
as i pass by this place the green stretch of grass the sky blue flowers and the towering trees
all these
know how to mend
the wounds of the hurt
earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Grasses At The Beach

the grasses in the beach are thick and tall spreading upon the edges of the concrete fences perhaps wanting to go out of its rectangular cage

it is unattended no one visits them
the time is only at least once a week

the grasses are tall and thick perhaps because they are all free

RIC S. BASTASA
The Grasses Wilt In Summer

On the hour of my death
The ricefields are empty
The grasses wilt in summer

RIC S. BASTASA
The Grateful Visiton

the ease with which the door opens the pleasure of a hundred entrances graceful and dignified

and hence let me say: thank you very much

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gray Shade Of Black

For darkness to die it must fade first
to gray then to the paler side of gray
until it becomes
lighter than orange not so much of saffron
but more like your apron when you start to fry the egg and throw the shell away.

RIC S. BASTASA
i have seen those white petals at the hotel in that big city where we are billeted as important guests at the lobby we stop but you were looking excitedly for the room with a queen size bed your mind revolves upon the anticipations of fun mine is settling on those white petals for hours as i was waiting for no one i am not crazy

i do not wish to be one on those white petals i was waiting for gray....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Great Dive

they were talking about the dive the older woman who talked about it before had already been duly rewarded oh, she was grasping for breath she almost died

people always love to talk about grasping for breath
a situation where one almost dies hands grappling for anything be it a shadow of a coral or even a yellow finned fish some however do not help one to rise and live but they bite and make you bleed inspiring the sharks

we all undergo this great dive into the dark blue depths into the blackness that we have never been too but we have the feeling
we know

honestly i have been there i am not rewarded at all i do not expect anything anyway and i personally do not want to talk about it never.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Great Man Who Ate Cow Dung All His Life (Secretly)

everyday
he feeds himself with cow dung
but this is done
discreetly
for who in this normal world would like to satisfy himself with dung
who in this society would love a man who eats and smells like
cow dung?

of course, he feared that soon if society knows he shall be another ostracized
ostrich
electrically fenced
and monitored
and segregated
at Ward 8
for social rehabilitation

he didn't like dung
reason and logic
so tell him well but he couldn't resist the smell of dung
even if it is kilometers away there is simply this obsession for
cow dung
and he begins to salivate even for the word dung and for so many nights he prayed that his mind-set be changed so that he can prefer steak medium rare than watery cow dung life has its own idiosyncrasies for he prefers dung than barbecue despite his genius for good food and so not to deprive himself of what he really loves in his whole life he eats cow dung stores them in his refrigerator and eats cow dung regularly savoring every fiber and enjoying that rotten sticky smell of rotten grass

and leaves or hay

how he wishes that the shrink can teach him to hate
dung
but this never happened
he never referred the matter
somehow
for fear of information leaks
for modesty aside
he is a great man
in his field of endeavor

no one knows this

this is his secret and i have known this only about a year & a half after he died

when i found his black diary hidden
under the old creaky bed
because it
smells dung itself
in his luxurious house beside
a river

you know him
he is one of the greatest men in our history
a philosopher
writer philanthropist scientist artist
sculptor
a genius
who ate cow dung
all his life

well adored by history a hero for all humanity the Renaissance man as they dub him to be the man who ate
and secretly loved cow dung all this life

do not bother let us keep his greatness history is always right do not argue

great men revered the cow
ate cow dung
and become famous throughout the life
of history

their names written in the pages of books like sticky
piece of dung
but shits
unknown

RIC S. BASTASA
The Great Power Of Silence

it merely looks takes more time premeditating
what next to devour and
you
the great one
complacent
about your fame
does not mind

the hands of silence
grab you into its mouth

you shout
there is no voice coming out

you struggle
there is no exit from its belly

you come out
at the end
as insignificant
as a short-time
fart

RIC S. BASTASA
The Great Void

as i grope for words, i let go my hold for something so important as love, and something more important as lust, i let go off these two, as i grope for words to give you something more important than love or sex or even politics,

i groove for something so important.
i look for it, and then seemingly it is gone.

and now i still wonder, what was it? was it a white moth?
or a black butterfly?

was it the void in me? you see, let me tell you frankly, never in my life has love or sex once ever fill me,
and so,
i try something more fulfilling than that:
not love not sex
not lust not even tenderness

but the emptiness which we have everyday
the one that i  worship the one that  reminds me

of
God.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Greater Part

The greater part in us is beyond the legal books majority of the pie is sweet, decorated with raisins and cathedral jellies much of us is plump and bouncy and glossy
no less than the maple syrup on a pancake
early morning served with hot brewed coffee

i talk to myself
convinced that much of myself is just myself in a soliloquy
actually a nice selfish conversation where every part of my cell is happy and if a part of it is hurt i worry
since i only hurt myself and no one else like those who think that they always talk with sense

my favorite is a heaving a sigh as though i am fetching water from a deep well at least to convince myself that i am still thinking and sticking to the essence of what and who i am

i know myself,
that is why.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Greatest Book

x x x x
is not the one whose message
engraves itself
on the
brain

x x x x
- but the one
whose vital impact
opens up
other viewpoints,

x x x x

and from writer
to reader spreads
the fire

x x x x

that is fed by the various essences,

x x x x
until it becomes a vast conflagration
leaping from forest to forest.'

- roland roland
The Greatness In You

i understand
what a butterfly is

when it lands on your hair
it does not tell about its struggles
once as a caterpillar

i understand you
and knowing how was it on those years
way back when you and i parted
i never thought of any envy

as others make the applause
i simply watch
for any applause is never enough

after this
you fly again

flutter your wings
to change
another planet

RIC S. BASTASA
The Greed Of The Boy At The Candy Store

greed is as young as a little boy in the candy store whose only dialogue is this and that and that too and this too he points again to this and this and that and that too while pulling his mama's shirt and looking at every jar arrayed before his eyes all wide open like a flash of the lighthouse one dark night on the vast sea

RIC S. BASTASA
The Greed Of The River

brown to its existence the river as usual is silent it borrows the sound of the slashing boat and from the time to time talks it asks. 'where to boatman? ' but the boatman does not answer he does not know how this river works how this river feels it has taken people away it has taken people back to their places it has swallowed lives and then in silence it sleeps its belly full

RIC S. BASTASA
The Green Boat As Spoken Of By Lorenzo

a green boat is laid down on the white sands of the shore pointing its tip like his phallus

to the wide bosom of the
sea

its arms make the balance between lust and love

the sea wonders
if she is the only one sailed by this green boat

the green boat
stays on the ground

lorenzo sees what these matters tell him sometimes he says there is this talk between two men alone

in whispers

RIC S. BASTASA
The Green Eyed Lady

described the lady
as you see is such a grand beauty gentle, loving eyes seductive, when they blink they are like

love calls
sweet to the ears of hungry men

when she walks (oh, she walks in beauty and i am not original on this) when she passes at you she makes you grow
your jeans getting tighter and tighter
they may tear apart between the legs

the lady with green eyes is asking for you your love and nothing else so love her like she is the only princess in the castles of the blooming springs but beware, be so aware you pain her you betray her

the lady with green eyes
knows her ways

fed up, she returns and be the green eyed dragon spitting fire
burning everything
and then she flies away with her hurting wings

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
The Green Grass Of Your Home... they are the silent witnesses of my first love those spreading green grass of your home away from mine

when we first kiss and when we finally made love sweet juices flow on such blanket of green so fresh then warm...

they shall be the same silent witness of my last breath those wilting grasses of your home
away from mine
when we finally part and when the wreath is placed above my home
away from yours
the elegy shall be said and the dirge shall be played and the wilting grasses shall have heard the sounds of my final rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Greener Field Beyond Our Place

always, it is
it is always the case that the other side of the fence appears greener and when you sit on the bench inside your house beside a window looking into the other side you wish you have a new pair of shoes a hat and a pack bag you dream upon a tomorrow where you can be there with your brown dog

in the afternoon after a day inside your backyard under the lemon tree
you change your mind
it is dark and your only wish is to stay and spend the night communing with the stars in the skies gazing at your patio

RIC S. BASTASA
The Greeting That Pleases Her Senses....

hello, hello
soft and mellow
hello hello hello
crazy over you...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Grey Areas

you think and teach you that black is black and white is white

that either you are moral or immoral that either you leave or stay that either you die or leave that there are only choices of either/or they tell you do not do this do not do that they prohibit you and tell you it is for your own good as though they are gods

and you are the dogs

an old man with bright eyes asked me to go near him and he says: try the middle of things it is not just black or white but there are shades and shades of choices in there everything is allowed.

the grey areas. the exceptions. the exemptions.

try them. they are all exciting. like the colors of the rainbow like the patches of red, and orange and blue and pink you see, who is telling you that there are no other colors than black and white?

i am neither good nor bad. In truth, i am just myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
they think and teach you
that black is black and white is white

that either you are moral or immoral
that either you leave or stay that either you die or live that there are only choices of either/or

eye tell you do not do this donot do that don only this and that they prohibit you and tell you

it is for your own good
as though they are gods
and you are the dogs

an old man with bright eyes
asks me to go near him
and he says: try the middle of things it is not just black or white but there are shades and shades of choices in between

in there everything is allowed.
the grey areas. the exceptions. the exemptions.

try them. they are all exciting. like the colors of the rainbow
like the patches of red, and orange and blue and pink

you see, who is telling you that there are no other colors
than black and white?

i am neither good nor bad.
In truth, i am just myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Growing Consciousness

for such is the true nature of our state
the growing consciousness

always the unfolding of the petals to become the flower
the sprouting of the seeds the ripening of the fruit the surprises of the buds like tips of your fingers for always the sun spreads its rays and shows its dominion for the day for always the moon shall transform paleness to fullness to the joys of our eyes to the satisfaction of our feelings and longings for always the leaves thicken themselves and they fall only to grow the greener leaves again for always my dear from you fall you shall rise from your silence you must be tranquil for always you must keep the hope growing the love stronger for always you must believe that things will always turn better that at the end there shall be this perfection of who we are and what shall we become believe in this wisdom and you shall begin to hear the songs.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Gruesome Murder And The Popularity

i told him about the tragedy of a 63 year old gay doctor who was stabbed to death by two teens inside the bathroom of his house in bacolod city it was gruesome

as it was filmed and the killer winked and smiled after the murder

the teener feels that now he makes it to the headline and to the person with whom i told the tragedy he simply laughed it out he wants the comedy part of the horrible error faraway from home

he says, there is no place like america

RIC S. BASTASA
The Guava Parable

i do not know if you realize what is happening between us it could be sad for me but let me try to explain it there was a child climbing a guava tree and got all the ripe ones put them in a basket but never ate one he gave each stranger the fruit of his adventure about what he stole from his childhood to the old ones who never had one yet for dessert

despite the passage of all those years

we parted and then we meet again i watch you climb the guava tree again i could not climb it myself anymore i have become too old for it and i am about to give up what dream is there i could have told you, yes, i was once a child who had the fruits too but i never really wanted one and i am asking myself what trait is this which squanders and yet knows not the reason

why

i have given much why i do not desire what i got why i have this content of seeing the tree die and why i am happier now without any guava at all.
The Guest Of Our House

when you arrive here
you sing for us, then you dance and then you recite a poem and we listen, we tap our feet, we like your song we cry for the sadness of your poem we are amazed till you left us the same question is asked: when are you coming back? will you sing for us again? will there be new dance steps to please us? will the poem be sadder?

at any rate
nothing is changed.

it is the same rock in the middle of the road, the same mud on all the sides the dead bird hanging on the tree has become an skeleton in our closets nothing has changed and we never expect any somehow.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Guilt

i know how it feels,
for i also know how to junk someone like a hot potato,

i know how it feels to reject a certain value and i know how to come back at it without its knowing,

i begin to be interested at it familiarize myself with its pungency and memorize its color

i kiss its traces and hug the old unwashed shirt hanging inside the drawer

i also know how to leave

close the door and tell myself, i will not come back to this place anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Guilt And The Pain Of The Tiny Flesh

the flesh will always have its own way of giving you guilt, there is always that accompanying pain with slow and gentle pleasure the pressure to transcend its shallowness however the necessity of its warmth and hair and surface
you take it and learn that art of having to rub life with death no words are uttered
on some deaths that beat inside our hearts somehow there is something that diminishes us
after something that spreads us like a dirty linen against the almighty
sun
but the need is always
there
which without out
it
we shall wither
and crumple like brown leaves without dew
on cracked
soil

as i told you this is the pendulum of compromises of plea bargainings

we take sometimes
the necessity of having to plea guilty on the lesser liabilities
of some
tiny flesh which however deep we are we by default
take the option of the fools
and facing another stupid being we give them
a straight face of
i was there and
you have no right
to judge me
you have no
scar.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Habit

the habit is an epoxy attaching a part of my thoughts to your thoughts yet somehow there is no spark
of understanding
like a star bursting and so everyday as the sun rises killing the shadows of leaves

in my mind
i keep taking track of what happens a word stands as a boundary a punctuation marks a departure
and there are questions like guards and sentries of the parapet

there are birds unable to fly from the hammocks of the mind there are works unable to come out from the hollows of the heart and so the journey to another desert with the camel and the carpet starts all over again there is no end this habit has no purpose but to satisfy what i do not know

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hamlets Of Our Time

early morning i argue with myself

a la Hamlet: to be or not to be

and i remember one writer great as he is

who curse himself for having made
so many Hamlets

who despite the fruits of the years are still undecided

whether to live or not to live.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Handiwork Of God

it is this painstaking
choice of words
for a nice handiwork
knitting some fairies
in some
mathematical colors of threads
some butterflies
and flowers in bright colors
using strictly the mandate
of numbers

a painting in cloth and threads
taking her
time
when she is finally
hypnotized
falling into a deep sleep
inside a room
where she is alone
on a dim light
of her loneliness

i open the door
to check on her
inside the cramped room

i see the handiwork of God
a woman so indulged
so engrossed
in her art
so weary
and dedicated

in passion sleeping.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hands Are Asking You....

it is the same thing
and will always be
the same thing, these hands that smashed your breasts, shall be the same hands, that shall smash theirs don't you think that the earthly resources for maximum benefit
must be shared? these same
hands
for example
don't you find them too limited if they shall be exclusively yours?
are you the same selfish wife of Lot who turned into salt
because she wants to see those hands
of the past
misgivings?
look at your hands
how misshapen have they become
because you never shared them

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hands Of An Angry Man

a hand ready for action on the side of the leg

such is the hand of the man beforehand oppressed what lies on the other side of his hate and disgust the right hand keeps always invisible to your eye

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hands Of Fate

in not all instances perfect as you consider them to be these hands are not meant always for taking something in not at all there are enlightening moments when the hands are meant for giving without having an exchange or value
there are dances of the hands clasped in the solemnity of prayer open to the art of acceptances the solitude of keeping them inside your pockets or the holding of the face of love bringing it near yours for the kiss

the heart guides you what to do with what life likes to give you and what you must accept without any remorse....

the hands knows when to take sides
with shame
as you begin to cover your face
and run away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hands Of Midas

it is this desire that settles outside the fence it can get in there and proclaim itself
he can dare
he'd done it once twice
but he cannot do it
this time

in all those times when he tried
when he achieved it
not one of them
has told him honestly that they were happy

it was more of giving in because of pity
it is set temporarily because it said situation eternity is a mockery

it is the hands of Midas now what he touches because he loves shall turn into stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hands Of The Clock

when we were young
we do not mind the clock we are not so sure about pendulums
we can even mistake the long for the short hand or if we mind time
for sometime
it is because we are late for the dance or the drinking spree

and then time has a way of calling our attention when our hairs starts to look like seaweeds drying under the summer
sun

now we are old like tree shedding off most of its leaves our twigs are infested with fungus
and some of the tips of our roots are rotten

then time begins to have fingernails scratching our bellies we begin to grow the seeds of fear in our palms
our foreheads have furrows like the pathways of the plow at night we know how the long hand runs with speed it is 2:30 a.m. and then we switch the light again

and too confused how the clocks strikes 4 a.m.
we cannot go back to sleep as we fall on the chasms of the past we try to drink a cold glass of the future
and it begins to have the bitter taste of the love
unrequited.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hands Of Whom We Love

what i have been writing is simply the product of a big distraction

it is like the blind writing about light

i hear it and i know it but i cannot clearly see it
and hence
i have never fully understood it if i understood it i shall not bother writing about it this doubt shall make me live to write for more i have it in my tongue but it slips the moment i want to utter it behind me are scenes of my rumored true being i set it aside for a while to describe it in words but words are too shallow i cannot bury my feet on them and so the same things happen night after night

sleepless after sleepless hands groping for a dark and elusive fish in space i submerge into unfathomable madness do not get me wrong i am sane as the brightest star tonight but just like it

there is no intimacy
for clarity
there is only beauty at a distance like the way we wish to hold the hands of whom we love we long that much but we do not die.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hands That Touched Pain

they are your hands those that touched so much pain they glitter
with many diamonds
in the dark

RIC S. BASTASA
it does not always follow that the house where your live is your home,
that your home is in the heart need not be what you call it is. sometimes, it is not just that.
a house can be a home the home is also a necessity and throughout your life you never lived there perhaps a home need not be here those who lived better say so and just like love and marriage and living and loving,
these matters can be interpolated and
and need not be even interlaced in one fabric that you make into a dress for the best occasion of your life someone you miss, something you need something you take, someone you dispense there is someone there who says that his life is perfect that he has already everything and he has nothing more to ask for in his lifetime it is so sad, he is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happily Retired Law Professor

the law professor has retired

he goes in cognito
in that place
covered by mountains on all sides

a shangrila
with a secret river a tunnel
that leads you to a door into another door and there he prays that finally

Death be so kind
to him
that he be fetched earlier than what was promised.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happiness Of A Poet

the most divine thing that can happen
to you

O Poet...is when no one reads your enigmatic
creations, ....for

in this way
your secrets are still very well
yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Beginnings.....

happy endings
are endings and hence not really that lasting

migz, take another
thing

go for happy beginnings...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Child Of God

there is no other
metaphor for the child of God

it is the smile
after the rain
that you show to the trees and the skies

it is the silence in you that best speaks

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Conclusion....

you know
that time when my eyes failed me when my heart too was blind
when my hands are rebellious
when my feet argue when i have moved back and forth
when i want to go
and at the same
time
want also to return
to you
you know that time
and i have to tell you
i am torn
i am broken
and you were not there to mend me
you know that time
when i have finally opened up
like a clam when i found out that the world out
there
did not cheer for my coming
you know that well
that time when i too, finally do not belong to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Drunkard....

he had wine, at first he did not like it, it is strong, and he chokes like a kid, but he takes another drink and true to the saying the drink takes him, again and again, until he feels the comfort of wine, as friend and confidante, a comforter of his uneasiness to life, to everyday, and this he does every night, taking glasses of wine, and making himself drunk, and he becomes an alcoholic, cannot live without a drink, cannot write without it, he is always drunk, and wish he drinks all the wine in the world, and just be a happy man he writes a letter to his beloved: my dear i am about to die, tell the world, and my enemies, i am a drunkard but i am happy i never stole money, never had another woman, never had any other God. though a drunkard, i am better than all the sad men in the world.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Ending In The Garden

... AND then as it was told the princess meets her prince in the Secret Garden

they sow the seeds of love respect time soon the flowers begin to bloom soon the trees bear the fruit in the garden of love so private.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Man....

you think it is a struggle that is why you are having a hard time you must remember how a man has not worked in his whole lifetime?

and you must ask why?

he did not go for reason or rhyme he went outside and played his ball with all the children in the village he kicked and ran and jumped and danced and even tip toed when needed, he climbed those trees, and swam those rivers, he slept his nights and played his guitar, he plowed the fields and caught the fish, and yet no matter what on storms and floods and quakes, he merely whistled his way unlike the usual everybody

no doubt about it, he liked everything and so he never worked at all. He loved everyone, and so nothing worried him.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Monkey.....

the monkey
is happily eating
a ripe banana,

and you, the sad one, is looking at this scene with envy, forgetting your essence, you

wish to be a monkey eating a banana,
happily,

and then a naughty
child passes by
picks up a stone and hits the monkey
which hastily escapes flies on top the tree clings to a branch
and jumps.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Ones

when the one that concerns them
died that afternoon

when for days she called them all fools one by one she called them names

names that they never accepted but with due respect they all answered her with the decency of silence

when she died
and they mourned
and they did not sleep
for nights

i will not say it but i know what they really mean.

when i left them
i am happy

i know who they are
and i left them just the way they are

and we think we are
the happy ones.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Sea....

The sea is peaceful in the morning.
The gladness of its own kind That mellowed silence with gentle slushes on the austere sands it yearns for no one complete in itself
the sun comes
cressing what it cannot take away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Soul

the happy soul thrives upon its own solitude feeds upon its happy moments and looks forward to the happiness of the other days

it does not think about you and does not listen to your woes
it has its own rhythm and rhyme it feels the songs of the wind it sees the colors of the sphere layer upon layer it understands the wisdom of the season it smells the perfume of the red roses it dances with the trees and feels the cool comfort of the grass it relates to the journey of the rivers it knows the home of the birds the words of the worms the fullness of the beautiful foams it knows where to rest its weariness it sleeps and dreams it does not even care if this world speaks about an end there is only bliss there is always nothing to miss

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Stars....

perhaps you have taken Lady Freedom for granted so she left you for good. Now you have to get to know well with the other Lady inside your cell.

She is mean but not that cruel. She will remind you of the rituals which you have forgotten.

You have to comb your hair a hundred times before you sleep. You have to sleep on a flat bed.

Your view to the world is limited, Only through the slit eyes of those steel bars can you see the happy stars

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy State....

happiness rests on my sofa i am beside it you paint an image of me in bright colors
i become the sun
in your early morning you put the last stroke of the brush and sign your name your name is happiness too we part when darkness falls we dress for another rehearsal
of the dance of life
alone

i have seen so many happy steps at daybreak
i put a smile and keep it again and you wonder what are those things that i have seen that you have not seen?
i sigh
to the wonders of my secret my morning rituals
before the monitor of this word tool

i am happy, i am happy my soul dances on the mountains reaches for the chunks of my skies at the top of my voice i sing

you will never know why there is no reason to put on the wings of my newly found
freedom
The Happy Weaver Of The Multicolored Mat

the mat-weaver of the far place named Star has not bed to sleep on given the place to stop for rest in the mountain she falls to sleep and snores.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Happy Weaver Of The Multicolored Mat (2)

the mat-weaver of the far place named Star
has not a bed to sleep on

given any point to stop for rest in the mountain

she falls to sleep and snores.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hard Lesson...

before that you fear their eyes that gaze at you as if you were the rat and they are the owls

it is pretty tiring tip toeing on your heels like you are a battered ballet dancer

it can change you got to and so the day has come when you arrive as a dragon and the are owls and you spit fire on them and the burn.

then back to your mouse existence
again
you just taught them their hard lesson.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hard Worker Who Never Arrived To The Gate Of Success

the best thing to do is throw a coin in the wishing well then wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hardheaded Man

because i am hardheaded
i do not look back,

i have learned from the woman who turned into salt and look at what i have done upon myself i grow errors

i glance at each of them i shrug my shoulder and then walk away, or move on as they want to say i want to live a life that does nothing with what has been erroneously done

leave them as they are for me to see that i am not perfect that others may learn to approximate to the maximum the reality about mistakes which if left uncorrected shall ultimately symbolize who we really are... the perfect example of human imperfection

God's ally, God's beloved since it is from us that God also sees who He really is.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hardheaded You, The Wasted Romantic

what we know is you have loved that rose for so long so that even if it had already wilted with all the memories of roses fallen under the feet of dead trees what disgust is there for us who care for the sun
in your eyes
and the moon in your hair when you still keep that thorn stuck in your skin like a nail to the wall of an old house long abandoned by the rivers of the winds.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hardheaded Young Poet

dr this morning he finds the last line he decided to put the last word there is no period and the image is that of a verb dr this push and pull without restraint dr the yin and yang and the moon and sun i suggest another thing perhaps another verb like a flowing river a falling rain

dr but he said he has decided to put what may sound at most dr pornographic dr i embrace silence since i know what a poet is dr this hardheaded creature who makes the walls and doors of stones and roofs with all the Spanish tiles dr sometimes i wonder if hearts can be made of platinum too dr for mine is as red as bricks with wires as veins and chest like steel.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Harmony Man To Nature

she says
the trees and stones and the beautiful landscape of sands and moon have no words
to say

no lips, no mouth, not even the capacity for thinking inanimate rocks, indifferent sea, mountains unthinking something deep inside us speaks for all of them and we hear it loudly in the silence of our souls now you must hear the songs of the mountains the hushing of the sands, the serene musings of the moon, the deepest sighs of the seas, the hardest principles of rocks we are their friends and allies and we are in harmony with all of them and they, in their patience, have given us the right to speak and now, give them all your attention, they are listening

and if we do not speak for them they will speak for us in thunder.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Harmony Of All Elements

your mind is the wind your body is the earth your heart is the river your love will always be sun, fire, volcanic eruptions,
and so it will not be defeated by grief
which is rain and
dew, and fog and
mist,
but love is not always
happiness
unless all these elements mingle as one
in harmony.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Harmony Of Sorrow And Joy

oH jOY
oH gRIEf
come sit beside me
for i am Real And
we aRe
One.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Harsh Truths About Other People

IN ONE of those streetcars named desire one shall glean
that truth hurts sometimes and even kills

it would have been better
if out of respect for life one simply should have been more gentler
about the harsh truths about others

we can be harsh on ourselves because we are not afraid to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Harsh Truths And The Will To Survive...

it is very hard to accept what is not here
what does not arrive no matter how we must learn to manage about these harsh truths
the hardness of stones and the impeccability of gravitation

about that friend, that rain, that roof, that silence that play, that continual laughter the drink and the pause
that stare and the nod,
all these

the tree over the other side of the world had taken much root you may think that it is impossible to uproot it and carry it across the sea across the continent and plant it again in front of our yard where our children play and put a swing or hang a rope or build a tent or climb for those fruits that we tell them have been hanging on the tree waiting for the pickers the mind is powerful the will is steady this faith has moved a mountain and that is just a tree a sea a continent

the door to every opening is the closing of the eyes our hands cover all these impossibilities and voila
the magic of all magic begins to unfold

eureka! eureka!
we have discovered we have invented
all these

we are naked and we run into the fulfillment of everything
right inside the water inside the tub inside the house
inside the darkness where we live

(and for how long shall we shun the light? the half closed shutters? the violet Venetian blinds?)

ah, for as long as we live and that is, as always, and will be happily ever after)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Harvest

from here
where we stand
we shall see fields of gold

rice grains ripe
from their stalks heavy with our thoughts
bending to the call of the brown soil

strong men and women
arrive on the golden fields of our heritage harvesting....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hatchet.....

how foolish
to fall in love with you so one night i bang my head

on the wall
but it did not work i still love you and your face sticks to my heart like a metal with that epoxy

metal to metal
sticking that tight
a car can be lifted
to this high

i went away to a bar get myself a tequila wanting to quit logic which did not serve my wits

there is this feeling that now you are free to fall in love and make it
real

if the object of my affection is here i would have confessed my foolishness drain my head with those demons drain my veins with that toxic fluids
of love

at the height of the power of tequila i cried. I am not myself. You completely own me.
And nowhere at the stage of my princely life that i have become your willing slave.
Tomorrow i will kneel before a mirror and start chanting, asking for forgiveness to my stern self,
this rock,
sharpened by time and now ready to hit like a hatchet
to another warrior.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hate That Destroys The World

when hate arrives with silent fury like a tsunami, so many lives are broken so many houses are buried beneath the muddy waters have pity for the little girl who was playing with her doll when your gigantic waves buried her alive, that little boy was climbing the apple tree to gather the ripe ones mothers were frying bacon in the kitchen as fathers went to work all day in the ceramics factory it was your hate that washed and buried them all alive and now when you are at peace on a subsiding fury what do you have to see?

an island of debris a long line of hungry people waiting for food and water slippery roads muddy feet an open ground without shelter lost dogs roaming the streets an island that is warped in time in utter distress a sudden loneliness the whole world watches with horror and pity inside you is another world full of guilt what your hate has destroyed you can never pay...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hawk, The Hen And The Chick

the hawk masters
the wind

it rides smoothly
its eyes fixed on the chick beside the hen who having many neglects one who goes a little astray as the hawk in one quick flight snatches what it can for now eat....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hazards Of Poetics

i have learned to face the hazards of poetics when all the bright colors are mixed everything turns black

just like the brightness of my days it blinded me

when all have been too indirect to create these unnecessary mysteries that i do not really need when flowers sometimes turn to steel when dreams become concrete roads when the house is turned upside down when the the car turns turtle and falls on a cliff and keeps on hanging there when you finally find yourself calling for help and when you practically do not like what these fools are doing with words and stanzas when there is nothing left but more questions without answers because life itself is absurd and shies away from definitions and boundaries between meaning and feeling it is then that i bite my tongue and keep my silence it is then when my fingers declare that they have mouths and shout: it is enough all i need are the simplest of all the simplest things i only need a yawn to make me sleep a little sleep to make me dream and a piece of blanket to cover my nakedness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Headless Man

there is this
handsome
man in the neighborhood who
begins to stutter when dead enters
in the conversation

an invited guest
as he calls it

to him it would be horrible and to some extent
impolite

holding his glass of red wine
against the glow of the
sun
and munching his greens
as usual

he always feels that life has so much to offer
and that there must no
space to allow the dread of sickness and death
in any talk in order to be wholesome

i am looking at him with
disbelief
i must be drunk perhaps
because
as i see him
he has no head
at all
i think
he is not real at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Headless Man (Edited)

down is this handsome
man in the neighborhood who
begins to
stutter when death as a topic
enters
in the conversation

an uninvited guest
as he calls it

perhaps even a shameless
gatecrasher

to him it would be horrible
and to some extent
impolite

he can even summon
the police to arrest it
and have it charged for violence in the blotter
book

holding his glass of red wine
against the glow of summer
and munching his greens
as usual

he always feels that life
has so much to offer
and that there must no
space to allow
the dread of sickness and death
in any
talk in order to be
wholesome

i am looking at him with
disbelief
i must be drunk perhaps
because
as i see him
he has no head
at all

i think
he is not real

RIC S. BASTASA
The Healling Process....

Those tiny mirrors are giving you pictures of myself so many of myself like a picture of teardrops frozen into needles
like blades of grass
posing as swords

you are giving me the impression that i know very well how to hurt eye tell you

i cause pain and if you ask me i shall tell you
they are all true
so many are bleeding and so the toxins are taken away did they not tell you that with all the pain

they have become healed?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heart Has A Longing Of Its Own Apart From The Beautiful

who can dictate
what the heart can love?
no one

on that day of sorrow
the beautiful princess gives up her royal right
to a shepherd
that she loved

travels a desert and a forest
crosses six rivers sleeps over grass
for three nights
just t to be with him and she enters his thatched-roof house surrounded with chickens and goats

and asks him to make love with her tonight

she undresses herself
her white body
scented by fresh roses and precious perfume lighted
by the moon

but all that the shepherd did was to look at the stars
and then
sleep
the night is cold
with its eerie silence and the princess kills herself

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heart Has Always Its Own Ready Made Answer

often i imagine separation

it starts with a perfume that offends you and you decide to sleep in another room which does not bother me since i never drive you

away

you choose a lifestyle
i stick to mine

the next day another reason comes about it will be another
house
for another night

perhaps i imagine
too often that it will soon be another country
or perhaps another kind of
galaxy

it does not bother
me
i candidly admit
there was never any intimacy

it is the body that you trust
perhaps you should have asked the
heart
and it is ready
with its long prepared and ready
made
answer

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heart Is At The Basement....

what did i say to love?
that i do not believe in you anymore.
what did i say at the end of love?
i shall find another.
i set aside my heart and welcome the waking of the mind for love does nothing but hurt and hide what the mind does not,
logical, consequential, cautious, and walks with the head as crown the heart controlled still on the ground floor wondering what the mind can do next time.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heart May Be A Lonely Hunter

thick grass
a forest of trees

a man lives there and his heart is the lonely hunter

maybe
and may be for a time when the grass is thick and the forest of trees lush

there is a time
for opening for going and going back home where mother and father keep the waiting and your one and only

smiling
waiting for the warm embrace the sad one thinking always for your coming back home

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heart That Loses Its Grip On Love

you speak of revenge for how long will you speak
about it,

your heart beats for something else for someone long lost
and never comes back
to you

your heart captured in the hands of someone you detest you speak of freedom you speak of a heart that wants to see the end of the beginning now, i understand, how is it when your heart

loses a grip on love its hands must have wanted to hold on to a double-edged knife bleeding
waiting

dreaming of another
beginning to this end

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heart Too Asks For Pleasure

do not underestimate the heart it too shall take pleasure it is not pure love as gentle as the softness of the cloud that merely drifts upon the orders of the wind it also know what pleasure is so appease it with the wildness of your love: crush it with the strength of your loving arms.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heart......

It is all in the mind.
I am comforting a friend who is dying.
Heaven and hell are all in the mind.
Death is all in the mind.
Living too, is all in the mind.
And the mind
is just a mind.

We still have something better than our minds.
I showed her my heart.
I lead her hands to her heart.
It is the one that feels.
It is the one that sees too well, what is next to come.

It is where God dwells.
And it is there where everyone finds rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hearts Of Children In The Minds Of All Men.

it is not the blood that makes us brothers it is this common bond that binds us

everyday in everyone eating and laughing and praying we're here, you're here all with care and compassion this earth as everyone's home nothing to own but everything to spare and share love trickles like rain to the bold and bald alike the hearts of children in the minds of all men.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hearts Of Stones

i do not wish
to hear any cry on
that chosen hour

i need you to keep wearing
that heart of stone

i want rocks
all rocks
upon the mounds

when the last shovel is finally put you can take all the hearts of
stones

and there peacefully put them down

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heavy Rain

del the heavy rain makes you stop and you knock on my door and i open it, and then we talk about a lot of things about us, our family, our lands and ways of surviving the hardships of this present day life, i offer you coffee and cookies and we talk some more about the future, politics and economics and religion and philosophy and poetry. And then the rain stops.

del the conversation ends. You say thank are leaving
now. You are like the rain.
I am like the door. We are like the conversations. And we know when to stop and where to begin again. It is the heavy rain. It stopped.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heavy Rain Last Night

the roofs never had the time to sleep and in darkness the fingers of all nails keep themselves in the side pockets of the beams

the rivers rise like a platform for driftwoods and leaves and coconuts in a fast parade
as a little boy watches the show

and then
the frogs' hands begin to clap

the crickets are not in the mood for
singing

RIC S. BASTASA
as i watch the heavy rain by my window
i write this poem
every word is like a rain every sound every coldness here is rain every loneliness is rain and unless you are here
beside me
you can never feel this rain as you read each word you still wonder what is rain, how does it fall what is its sound
the word is never rain as the poem is never real

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heavy Rain...(2)

when i wake up this morning the rain just poured bringing with it strong winds and noise

have i changed my senses?
have i switched perceptions?

was it not just a while when i thought rain as a poem of counted meters and ringing rhyme?

what have you done to me? Age, are you a cruel friend?

the rain has moved from tree to window and its drops have stepped on the floor by the open door and they are not welcome anymore.

have i not revealed to you the secret of my longing?
is this rain hiding something from me?

why have you not arrived from the distance of this love?
i miss the night and the candle light i wish to hear what you have been saying to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Heavy Rains....

the heavy rains come too like the usual path of the season but look
the yellow daisies keep their stalks strong and tall and not one is destroyed beside the sunflowers always hoping for the sun to come as usual too like the paths of the seasons and there you are all wet taking the bath that you need under the rain
and sky
wading through the vast air with dew on your hair with tongue licking the bland taste of
the rain
on your lips.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hell Of Boredom

She works as nanny during the day as call center agent at night weekends are fully booked for some other part time jobs her body aches, her eyes need sleep but for one thing, and this she likes best her deep seated depression is gone.

she is like Christ crucified. This time she saves, not the whole world but herself, from the hell of boredom.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Here And Now

for the meantime take the here and now what choice do we have?
we are beggars we have nothing we were taken here without our knowing we were naked we were spanked on the very first hour of our arrival in mother’ bed in that cheap government hospital there were no fathers or priests or politicians they heard our first cry
and since then
life begins to have no meaning what we have is the here and now but will that be an end? a misdemeanor? will that be a burden forever? a curse?

a suffering that is senseless a sorrow that is soaring and roaring? the here and now is in our palms look at it closely, there are tiny lines there the directions and instructions are there embedded we shall trace where we are and where we are going in the tiny lines of our palms we locate our hidden fortunes we shall find where the secret lies the real meaning of this existence and if need be we must create and invent what we will be in the future

let us see from our feelings the coolness of blue the fires of red the clouds, the sun and the moon all lie in the hold of our hands from this here and now

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hidden Agendum....

how can a bee
ever claim that there
is still
nectar on that wilted
flower?

unless it is after the bud beside it
about to bloom an hour later.

the earth is not that young to know what real motives
are.

the sun is not blind the moon is not that naive and stupid.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hidden Furies After The Tryst

you have a situation where you refuse gentleness when romancing the river becomes an allergy to your skin when you meet you like to be just behind

to kiss the neck and then care all sides of the body with the loveliness of your hands and the wildness of your fingers inside the room everything promises not even to make a whisper

all nooks are giving you signs that these tiny holes can seal themselves and keep a secret

but there is this only chamber
in your heart
that knows the price of cheating there are Furies there which stay and keep the silence but only for a while for soon after this chosen enigma after the kiss from behind the neck and the playing of fingers on the sides of the hips and the hidden agonies of the loins they begin to rub their eyes spread their hair

open their mouths and speak to you honestly and with all anger slap you with that edict:
you have gone astray
you have sinned and you must pay.

RIC S. BASTASA
imagine
one tranquil day when you can hear ants moving
under your feet

you lay your body
on the grass
under the old tree with many leaves that look like small fingers
of a baby

you have emptied yourself of thoughts
you become one big empty
basket

you are an open
cave
inviting restless vagabonds to take
rest
one dark & cold night at least for a certain while

the days come
and go
and you feel like a river passing by

leaves blown by the strong wind far north

on some normal days a hundred butterflies flutter and hover homing to you

migrant birds perch upon your hair

imagine that you are no longer you but a wide door without a lock an open window that welcomes the moon an earth

sky
and infinite space

a universe in itself stripped of identity and greed

now sleep, and inside this chamber
close your eyes some more
time

you have become
a poem vested in eternity

some call you an angel someone will dare calling you one of the gods beside the gods
in the temple of heaven

what is important is that you are at peace, happy, engrossed in grace
so much blessing
pouring unto your heart

do not think about you you can no longer do that there is no you now

do not think of contempt you have become more than what you are you have flown above the earth you have crossed the river of ire and disbelief
	his is the hidden possibility

the truth that we now see.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hiding Place

you have been here
you must remember
i am back and i shall have no regrets
this is my hiding place with no description it is only you knowing this knowing me knowing what is this all about this comfort of silence this longing unsatisfied this dreams unrealized

nature does not weep it simply grows and blooms like everybody else

you and i do not belong to the open
we are not overlooking
the sea
we are inside this cave deep down in its dampness we are shadows
we weep because we are alive

we ask when and what next we wait for there is no answer yet this is our hiding place this place of the heart this beating and pumping never-ending never gaining
anything
yet never losing too gazing at the eyes of life uncomplaining uncompromising

if nature now weeps
so let it be soon we shall know its answer
perhaps after this heavy rain

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hiding Place Of Sadness sadness when kept alone by you knows a place where to hide it is like an arid soil at noon when temperatures are high and then an unexpected rain falls

what you see is this quick rising of hot air
to the sky

and then the sun smiles at you as though nothing happened.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hinges Sound Differently

you are back from a trip the dogs meet you
the house help serves the usual food that you like: hot soup and some greens you open the door of your room the usual smell of wood and newly put linens meet you
the trip has done you good the casualness have changed for the better now it is an old world right but it makes sense now the chairs dance, the table no longer tiptoes the curtains unfold, the winds are fresh this time
the hinges sound differently together they make an orchestra for you as though saying: we are glad you're back we are sad no more....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hippopotamus

i want to make no sense and so i write senselessly trusting nothing but this instinct of being nonsensical
which ultimately becomes a measure of how well we have accepted this fact that nonsense is much better than this hubris of having to say that i know everything too well
and yet miss one very important thing

the truth: i am an ignoramus.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hoax

when someone emails you that he has 3 million pounds and he is giving
all of it to you,

will you believe him?

you ask me
if i believe him too?

alright, i may believe him and give my name and address and telephone number my status, my other particulars
even my credit card number and you will say

OH MY GOD
how gullible can i be!

well, it does not really
matter
all these, my name, my address and telephone number and other particulars
even my credit card number
and ATM PIN

all these are fakes too
exactly just like him and his 3 million pounds

you see,
i was also not born yesterday

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hole In The Doughnut

i am full
eating is useless
my stomach
has no purpose
i have this doughnut and i raise it in space
and i look through its hole

i want to see
what is the reason
for emptiness

the hole has more content
than the doughnut
itself

i put my finger inside it
and somehow
i begin to feel confident

inside the hole
i know
i am not alone anymore.

inside the hole
again i become whole.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hole In The Jar.....

there is a hole
of this huge earthen jar round and shaped like a doughnut which gapes itself open throughout the night

the meaning of its existence seems to lie on its much liked activity of sifting and sipping air and storing all of it inside its oval shaped belly

this it does without quitting steady and consistent and seemingly unperturbed by those surrounding it to name some the stones and
the vines
even the old trees which are getting worried about its meaningless hoarding

air of course is inexhaustible no one should have been bothered but it is not the air it is the sifting and sipping and hoarding
it is the limitation of choices the dying as the clouds are whispering to the waves of the
sea
to the starfish and the sea porcupines

the stars know what the problem is at night when everyone rests the earthen jar sings its emptiness to
the sky
the moon is shaken with empathy and the inexhaustible space of the galaxy
tries to comfort its anxiety
'
dear jar
you are not alone.
Take it for it
is real

sincerely yours,

Galaxy'

p.s

keep the journey
live the moment
keep yourself open.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hollow Drum

it takes in air
and imprisons it
and being both full and
empty it begins to recite
loud poetry

the mad woman
naked beside the church door
dances wildly
like a duck on the rising tide

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hollow Man

it is the hollow man who abandons
God.

God waits.
The hollow man floats away.

God goes near him.
The hollow man drifts farther away from His Bounty.

God understands.
The hollow man does not listen.
Ears are perforated by his ego and
pride.

Then, the end has come.
The hollow man goes
to hell.
Combustible
the fires of Hell
so easily consumed him.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Home For The Aged

we visited a home for the aged

we do not really know why

we saw an old woman always repeating the names of her three children where they are now and what they are doing happy with their kids

she keeps on folding her clothes and wiping her table and chairs alone in her room under the watchful eyes of her caregiver and there is an old man who keeps on looking at the window always waiting for his son to visit him another one is busy with his set of dominoes places them on the table and then asks if we have seen his set of dominoes we do not know why we pity them perhaps we are just normal beings in a normal situation and soon shall become like each of them we are now suspicious of our money we are sure it can help but we are also sure it cannot save us from such eventuality.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Home Of My Home....

slowly you lift
the veil
and a face is shown to my surprise
it is my own

this is the veil
of darkness
covering another dusk
of my own time

there is no word for
this revelation there is nothing to described

what i disown
what i used to disregard is actually what i own what i am
what i was
and what i will be

it is sad
the women are sobbing
the boats left
that early morning

i look again at the clarity of the pond
it is still my own
the face of my narcissism the pain of my pleasures

the home of my home....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Honest Corrector...

when there is something that is missing you supply the lapse and i begin to develop that trust, words are not the only non-living thing that are misspelled, others, who despite, their massive experience of this daily world, do not know how to spell at at times and we move in places where our heads are marked for correction we wear the red of errors and nobody dares to tell us, they just don't care at all,

with you i am safe, and no matter how erroneous my life had been or will be,
i am secure,
you are there to correct this life,
and i go to sleep soundly

warm inside that blanket beside you....

RIC S. BASTASA
1. I have to tell you that In the last conversation we had All I told you were lies And with all honesty now I am telling you
That I am a liar.

2. When you asked me Whether I am dying
I told you I am not
But I have only
A month to live
That is the truth
But look
I am not responsible for you I am the one
That is dying here.
It is not you.

3. When we speak
I do not demand that You tell me the truth
We are talking
Because we are here
What you say to me
Is none of my business
To require that you tell Me the truth
Is in fact, an overburden Our agreement is Simple enough
That we just talk
It is nothing more
But a contract of presence
a conversation.

4. In fact what you say Is the bonus
And it does not matter
Truth or falsehood
We just talk
For a while
While I am here
I am going somewhere
I am leaving
You will be left
And you still have
All the time to contrive
The choice is yours
I have none anymore

5. so that is it
Keep on talking
As I pretend I am listening I keep on talking too
But my mind
Forgive me
Is somewhere else
You may not understand
It at first
But you will soon
Understand
This world is not simply meant For one, for one like me.
Or for us.

6. at this stage
Truth and falsehood
Are irrelevant,
Out there
Is beyond truth and falsehood
It is our place.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Honest Spectator

you feel cheated
you will be sad for quite a time but just like anything else that sadness won't last there is this urge to cheat another as a way of getting even

but you are different you do not make yourself just like the rest of them

you stay there
honest to yourself
no longer sad

now gifted with wisdom you think you understand in the silence of that wisdom you rise above this world divided between those that cheat and those who were cheated

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hope For A Reunion...

for one who believes in future reunions departures are not goodbyes but merely temporary separations
for the moment
as soon as the right time comes in flashes of light and alterations of gray and black and dimmer
not to exclude the glimmer and the glamor of some outburst of feelings like lightning and sparks we shall have the hope of meeting again remembering
and opting to be one again with each other like long lost friends meeting in unexpected places of the heart shaking hands
deciding to have coffee at the veranda of a beach resort sipping slowly what time is left until then...

RIC S. BASTASA
for i have aged a ripe fruit

another time comes not that long

i will be falling hope there will be a child lost in this place who will pick

me up and find me
a delicious relish for his innocent hunger for by then at that moment

my life shall have another meaning.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hope Of The Desert....

there are points of no return, bridge burned, ship wrecked, rain dropped,

i fear doing that but i did it so many times, leaving, taking less, and not looking back, fearing Lot's wife, besides, there is nothing there when you leave,

a desert, only shadows of the hills, and some ghostly winds, what is in your heart is the excitement of what is there: do not be negative you comfort your mind, it is not another empty place, the promise of oasis, and camels and date palms, beyond this vast land of nothingness, a lake, a boat and many friends.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hope That Will Always Be There

most of the time
i waited for the final showdown of this battle between good and evil

for the moment the bad one wins and teases me
for not siding with it but i am attuned to

waiting
i always hope that at the end it is only the good that triumphs

for the meantime i watch the evil one laugh and dance and drink
all the luxuries of this
earth

there is this patience of faith
that never falters

RIC S. BASTASA
then finally, the horse that i am riding, the black one with long hair and long feet, flying without wings, speed nearing the speed of light, has taken the lead, and the rest follow tirelessly still,
i do not look back,
i do not beat the horse with a stick i keep on riding making the horse feel confident that i am still supporting its cause, to be first,
to be famous

and then my horse wins, the owner gets the real buck,
and i the jockey,
merely receives a little name and a little commission.

the horse gets nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Horses....

i was wrong
i thought i cannot live without you

now, it is you who cannot live without me
and you were right
all along.

it was like i was the horse who jumped over the fence and found a new pasture of my own because you locked the gate and i have nowhere to rest my body on.

i was wrong since there are so many places
so many greener pastures so many horses
who share the same hopes of grass with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hottest Part Of The Year....

it surprises me
not
this early morning
i see
the empty jar in the yard
more beautiful than ever
in an empty garden

flowers wilt upon this extremely hot
March

RIC S. BASTASA
The House

there is no other place to go after work
when the darkness of the night starts to hover on my roof
this house where I rest my feet where I put my hands where I shut my mouth
and you are there
moving from one corner to another asking where I put some bones
of my body
you sing as you once knew the songs the ones that I love that which from where my heart rests and lulled

this is the house, a mere house where I put my body safely
no longer a home
my soul like a little bird had flown somewhere
years ago
I know where it is sleeping
you ask me
but I will not tell you how will you ever know?

the place
it is so quiet you are restless and noisy and messy so loveless
so sad and you keep on laughing taunting about my loss
my death

RIC S. BASTASA
The House Made Of Glass Door That Overlooks The Garden

the house has a huge glass door that overlooks the garden i mean it is a house with a glass door at the ground floor that is overlooking a garden where the cock feeds on worms with a red hen that lays eggs on the haystack near the back window, oh it is not messy and it is far from what you think nothing is poetic here there is simply a day that drags itself to its sunset burial site.

RIC S. BASTASA
The House Of My Neighbor

no one lives there anymore all left for good there is so much fuss about almost anything, a mess of who must own it finally,

at night, a man with a striped red and blue shirt climbs the fence and enters the room without breaking the glass window the moon wants to scream but it is ruled by its code of silence there is tinkering bell and tonight someone touches it shakes it

to make a noise

the moon wants to scream again but this time the black clouds come and with their hands
the moon is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The House Of The Soul

i see
everything fails everything human and warm and touching the leaves fall and the ants all die in winter the only rose at the door finally wilted
expectantly
there are no surprises involved in this misery as predicted
the last living lover takes leave
saying
things end and relationships do not last like every kind of business every endeavor simply burns out like a wick of the candle i am not surprised why we are all here no questions asked no answers offered we feel the wind and we root our feet strongly on the sand wanting to have a hold of this slippery being

'OMG! ' you exclaim
how could you forget your body?

RIC S. BASTASA
The House Story

the fence keeps a happy disposition. it does not need it. The house does.

despite its disagreement with the door, somehow, i gives a square disposition, as though, everything here is tolerable, the house is keeping so many secrets shying away from the scrutiny of visitors but it trusts the fence and can sleep soundly at night, except the light bulb which is fixed at the back of the kitchen it keeps on blinking, wanting to tell it all, but the master switch of the basement is quick everything is shut off, and then the silence reigns, it is the queen, it grieves without a word, it takes in what the house cannot take anymore, and the fence as the facade, maintains its happy disposition, deceiving all that merely pass by.

RIC S. BASTASA
The House That Does Not Speak About Anything...

how time swiftly flies without wings of birds i wake up at dawn lacking sleep into writing, into deeper thoughts on soundless hours and how fast, how fast has morning arrived i am innocent how stupid can i be inventing hope and trying to modify the shape of my days the lights of the door and the kitchen are not turned off the neighbors are worried i am home but i am not opening the windows and the door i am into writing, into the deeper thoughts of my soundless hours let the neighbors think that i am on vacation again

for weeks

i am into a waking slumber gathering dreams, ripe fruits of sleep of the waking and sleeping again and again i love a house that doesn't speak about anything that cannot remember anybody

the dark loves me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The House That Tiago And Konsay Left

when finally Tiago and Konsay decided to split they left the house that they once built by the sea

since then, when time passed the windows become the eyes of the blind man begging the doors refused to open to any passerby, the hinges accumulated rust until they turned to dust due to extreme coldness and loneliness the clouds there turned into big black birds that like the wind simply come and go passing through the blind dark windows

RIC S. BASTASA
The House With Many Doors

the house i love is a house with many doors
the usual house you have a front door and the back door when one enters and there is nothing to hide, one simply takes the back door and be gone to the woods, i can be imaginative at times one door must open to the earth another door must open to
the sky
and now, i must find a way how to grow wings or if destiny is too cruel i must grow sharper claws for digging the rocks of this
earth
now you must know that i have many choices

up or
down.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Houseband

tonight to please her he brings chicken feathers the yellow one put all of them on his head and around his body covering his thighs and
legs
and then when she comes home
he executes a dance before dinner

after that on such a private entertainment he makes love to her to cheer the stressed body of his working woman

RIC S. BASTASA
The Human Being Who Committed Suicide...

what a waste!
oh, everything

everything seemingly looks
perfect

at all angles.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Human Being...

a thirst remains a thirst a thirst for everything a hunger for everyone always dissatisfied...

wo/man

RIC S. BASTASA
do not forget
now that you are ready

pleasure to be pleasurable must be shared

mutually, and that this must bear the fruits of love when pleasure dies like everything else

during those times of drought and hibernation

another season must connect like a human chain

the seeds must be ready to sprout again

winters turning into spring agony back into pleasure again....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Human Face

upon his face
the smile floats like a gondola
on the River of Venice

one can hear the song of the gondolier

the eyes of his face are windows opening because the songs are tempting they are the eyes of women looking for love

the nose serves as the only bridge there to connect the ears and chin in that atmosphere of indifference the princess is the tongue salivating

RIC S. BASTASA
The Human Judge

AFTER A serious business of the day when he alters fortunes and liberties and slays what others conceive to be monsters he pauses for a while, looks at the pale green blinders and sighs for silence and asks himself am i fair? am i right?

IT IS hard.
The questions confront him as though he is still a kid and can be fooled at times by the orderly presentation of the eloquent and the shining logic of those who are trained to be so,
He listens to the voice within the one which is both comforting
and safe and then he tells himself:

i am fair. I am right.
I am doing the best of what i can do under these circumstances.

Then he stands up to find his old pair of shoes on the side of the door arranges his worn collar, trims his beard,
and glances at all these cautionsary fixtures
in the mirror.

He closes the books that he opened.
Shuts the computer off.
He leaves the room,
enters his car and whistles his way
towards home.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Human Race

in this race
everyone is a participant
for no one
is exempted for no one is special
there is leveling
at the finishing line where lame or dumb or articulate and intelligent
come
and there those who were ahead of us
do not wait
do not cheer for they have to go to another open space that someone talks
about
there are no winners
neither losers
there are only
finishers
who must proceed to a higher game
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Human Worth...

But what's the value of you?

in the future how much are you worth?

yes, this human body
this human capital

i have become another
set of integers

but what is really my net worth?

it depends on how much you still love me
i am
and will always be at your mercy
for without your love
i am useless
without your care
and affection
i will but be another hopeless case

i am but a feather
blown by air
landing on the sands of my empty shore
without you....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Humble Servant

learning to embrace whoever whatever comes make them all feel the amenities of your home
their names: Grief, Remorse, Misfortune
they’re not always dressed for the proper occasion
and gives you
humiliation dress them all to propriety
accommodate and always reserve a room for them all they are your constant visitors anyway
when they leave
smile, wave your hands, send them off with a good heart and ask them to come back in the same manner with your seldom guests: Joy, Bliss and Hope
after all they belong to the same family
and you are one of their compliant amiable and humble servant

RIC S. BASTASA
The Humiliation Of My People

my rich brother politician is humiliating my people poor people, never empowered to stand on their own feet, they keep waiting for masters
to make them whole again crippled, and limping my rich brother's hand keep pretending to take them from the quicksands of poverty but i know the mind of my rich brother whose laughter sounds like the devil
now that he needs all of them he feeds them and clothes them but soon these will simmer and fade and the truth about my rich brother comes out but it will be late already my rich brother has already taken the power and enriches himself some more leaving my poor people back in their shanties again scavenging for food and begging for clothing the humiliation will never stop from time to time all of them shall be hailed like those in the Schindler's list.

but soon there will be light and music and progress

streams of yellow rays from the Sun God possessed with Integrity and Truth and Justice and Goodness.
i could have chosen the rhyme
so there will be a song singing its own
song

i could have taken the tapping measure of the mathematical
meter
of the feet and toes like a dancer

but it simply runs against the spontaneity of my sighs
the everyday touch of the hands loving the uneven fingers
caressing to the beat of my hair splitting and spreading away to the gentle blow of the breeze
from the raging sea

the truth of the matter is there is reality to the lines of wanton wilderness the random specks of sands
blown away
by the sandstorm in the desert every hour of
my day
on a safari
the deer running away from the lion
the fledgling swallow flapping its wings jumping from its nest in constant fear of falling the leaf flip flopping its way down to the sandy earth the grass spreading without the desire measure of the numbers

i like to rhyme but my life doesn't it isn't and it can't and so here i am on the freedom of my verses a fish swimming where it will to escape the teeth of the shark a bird soaring up the skies its eyes closed to the beauty of speed unseen even for the time being un-felt by the intentional rhyming of the words the craft of man wanting fidelity to the English language now open ended

to the present questions: quo vadis?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hunger And Thirst Of The Mountain

on a Sunday of a hot summer i went to the far mountain where my father used to spend his youth i was met by his followers of long ago and they were telling me stories as i waited for them to cook the rice and fry the fish that i brought for them then we dined and i listened to their conflicts about land their problems about food, and water their hunger and their thirst some of their women offered their ethnic dances with the younger men the sounds of gongs reverberated and echoed on the walls of the mountains we drank native wine until the light of the day faded until the stars arrived and the moon reigned and floated in the nearby silvery river there were more stories about my father his love and his wife my mother and some of my other brothers and sisters we became one people and then we were so tired we slept and then we had common dreams i am their new leader now and they are as always my father's people

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hunger And Thirst Of The Mountain (2)

it is not in the water and rice and dried fish alone that they hunger they, the mountain people hunger for more of our preferential attention attentive ears, caring hands, understanding mind to assure them that they still have a place in our hearts

that we have never abandoned them i, too, hunger for their stories and poems, and when we meet this time again, it will be the city descends to the river and hills, and the grassy plains.

Halfway between us, is this thin line of hate suppressed, love rekindled, ambivalence that seemingly still exist, this doubt, this mistrust, this humanity trying to be free and real.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hunger For Freedom

i have this cake of freedom if you need a slice i can spare some since i have too much of it (and sometimes) &

in truth i doubt what to do with it
most of the time.

if brother, you are hungry for freedom come to my table
i have so many for you to spare taste it and tell me if it is really sweet.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hunters....

the birds of prey
are here
the hunters are ready

shedding off
compassion
they shot

some blood stains
the leaves of wild flowers

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hurry....

to insist, that is power enough.
to rise up, after a fall, that is cliche that we are not afraid to use, we are that.
stagnant pools collect,
and they die.
to run, and keep on running that is cleansing.
to stop but only for a while to ponder upon the plight of the dead bird lying on the street
no one lasts long forever, that is the most basic fact that we take along with us in our long journey.
i collect moments now. I will have more before I die.
My neighbor wants to go with me for a hunt i tell him do not bring any sling.
This is different, Totally different.
We are looking for silent nooks.
WE want moons, we drink only dew and dine only those tips of the green ferns along the way.
Black birds are overhead.
Clouds conspire with the wind and then gone.
If we stop again, we will lose.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Hurt Ego....

some windows really are kept open ev'en at midnight
the moon in its fullness has always been that welcome visitor that sense of mystery long gone opening a window has always been considered a healthy option

and people who pass the street look at you standing by the window

in openness
you trust that openness being arms that know the value of embrace can be redeeming in fact some children who play in the yard have a way of looking at you as their idol they clap their hands and dance for you it happens almost all days of the year the open window appears like a warm smile on the face of sorrow not everyone likes it though there is a crazy old man and he picks a stone and throws it against your glass window

your window cracks and your smile become a word with double meaning

what damage must have the old man caused?
you should know, you have too wisdom still lies with the old their discipline is still in the stone that leave a scar on the shattered glass

the ego, this self.
RIC S. BASTASA
The Husband And The Wife

he said to her death does not exist for i am dead, and she retorted, yes that is a fact now, you have become my own ghost, how terrible have you become two black pants are ironed and place neatly in the cabinet, and there is one thing that he missed: a note saying, i love you still, i miss you very much.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Husband And The Wife (2)

she is the rain and he is the umbrella
to the woman
with the black veil

RIC S. BASTASA
once a year i climb the mountain with you.
the steps have changed and we know it.
our words too. our way of choosing silence as we cross one river to another as we shift from one cliff to another as we rest on valleys and take turns at gripping with heavy breaths to recoup what we lost.

my hands are busy and i have nothing to hold much. so i left you busy too with your own ways of survival.

this year we reach the top again and looking at the plains and the tiny houses and the winding roads we are stilled like a tree without a sea breeze at noon.

we sit on two stones about an arm apart. we do not look at each other now but i do not worry for i know that you are looking at the very same view that i am making myself so preoccupied.

for you were once a child too who played with pebbles who miss the sand on the beach, the foam of the sea, the shade of the coconut tree, the taste of its water, the hush of that old wind, the chimes of silver by the window of the house.

RIC S. BASTASA
The 'I' In 'Me'

if i were to change,
i'd keep it in slow silence.
you will not see it, but i can compromise what you want to see that is changing in me. i shall wear different hats, or caps, or peci, so i can be what you want to see. But what i cannot compromise is this face. it will be always the same.

it is still the 'i' in 'me'

RIC S. BASTASA
to start with
i read what you have written and then i think about it
i go beyond it
and savor what flavor have you put into it
and then i go on my own taveling inside
myself
trying to see what i have not seen
so well
and then i begin to write choose my words jibing it with what i am feeling for the day
somehow
i have some vents
created some openings for what is building and smoking and gasping
inside my system and
then
everything is confronted their names are revealed
t heir shapes more definite with the particularity of their colors
it is getting to know myself and the rest of
myself
as though there are too many of me or
us
some turn to be birds and happily they fly away as i see them
winging their ways to their destinations and then there is someone who is left now strong and
quiet
simply gazing and
forgiving.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Icon Made Of Paint And Paper

eyou cannot see the weights
on your shoulder
and you do not exhibit all the heaviness in your
eyes

you look good they say and envy you for being happy there is a way to make this world know that your sorrow is your own your pleasures too

your hair is shiny
your nose still sharp like a beak of that eagle in the high mountains

you only feel the thinness
of your soul
you are looking for gods to assure you what may soon turn out tomorrow

here you are again
mild in your silence warm in your affections the women look at an icon made of paint and paper the men all had left towards the wars of their own softly the children sing the lullabies of their really tired mothers.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Idea

you come surprisingly and i am amazed about what you are you are risky
and gives me the shivers of the dangers that you are giving me you are quick to appear and too quickly you
disappear
you tell me that i must be prepared to record you in memory that i must have a paper and pen on hand ready for the keeping

you are the idea
so much has been wasted because i am raged with age too lax
and lazy and to time has become a slave
bound for oblivion.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ideal One

under a roof
under the rain
under the sky
under one God.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ideas Shall Always Be Coming...

for as long as the roses have thorns as long as the fish bone is in the throat butterflies inside the belly worms under the feet flies inside the bottle sealed still wanting to breathe and still crazy over life

RIC S. BASTASA
The Idle Man Who Thinks That Nothing Is The Same No Matter How Repeated

There is this man who has become a professional watcher
of the changing guards of the
horizon

he wakes up when the sun rises and sleeps when the sun sets he is amazed

each sunrise is not the same as another sunrise that lands upon his gaze

not any sunset is the same as
the other

repetition is a show that never ends upon a similarity

nothing is the same in the flow of sadness and happiness

two faces and another face of nature bringing gifts to the heart in shapes of warmth and coldness love, bliss, lament and fears each molecule is a fingerprint of someone else there is this man who is always amazed

just watching something familiar which to
him
is phenomenal

alone and yet so filled with
joy....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Iguana

between me and the city is a glass window with drops of
rain

below me are tiny taxicabs waiting for passengers

at the other end is the red planet and elizabeth

outside do not imagine the noise of the city
keep the peace and quiet inside
the room of your heart

meanwhile i still remember you somehow the fear keeps its howling sound somewhere in the desert the iguana is calling

i remember the moon, i miss the stars and the softness of the sands from the warmth of your hands

RIC S. BASTASA
The Illicit Plea To The Unresponsive Lover...

love, i have found you, but i never touched you as you never know how i have loved you, it is now correct to say,

to love the unloving you,

i have always died,
day to day, hour to hour,

have mercy, have mercy
to this thousand deaths, leave me. leave me.

( notes from the heart of L.)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Illogical Dream

it rains ash on the roof all the residents hide in fear and then it stops a child climbs the roof opens his mouth and lets his tongue taste the ash

there is something inside it the child calls his mother saying it tastes like shrimps and so all the people climb the house stays on the roof and had their feasts that whole day when the sun never shines.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Illusions Are Here

if we trust what we see that is normal because our eyes always assure us about what is there in tri-dimension and we smell what we see we believe more on what the basic senses offer we rest on these logical consequences we even have to trust the structure of numbers and how they work upon us we take pride something is true and something always works with results, desired and exalted we fall sometimes to lapses and we begin to ask about causes, we dig deeper to failures and sometimes we forget successes

we forget the beauty of having to discover submitting ourselves more to the distress of failures we elucidate more on errors we lurk in depression

i have enough of these illusions there are more reasons for a jubilation there is a need for a priority jamming with joy and creative celebration

i have decided to forget sadness and set aside the quest for greatness that has always been nothing but
a mess

these are nothing but peripheries and collateral at the center of all these decorations is this mission, this knowledge that this is but a journey that i am a pilgrim, a steward, and i do not desire anything i do not own any and i do not owe anybody at all i have only dreams, and wishes oh, they are not actually even mine at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Image...

twilight
an old man walks in the park trying to breathe in fresh air

morning comes with the fingers of light the old man sits on one of the benches
in the park
hold his staff
and looks at the horizon alone and peaceful as children pass by rushing for the early school

RIC S. BASTASA
The Imaginary Piano Player In The Poetry Within Us....

you realize that it is all like playing the piano this time, it will be always in the early morning while the mind is clear and daring like a wrestler of the mud, it is different though since there are no notes to make the music be heard by someone else like the sad neighbor nearby mourning for the loss of a son who was killed yesterday by unknown assailants as they term it on the TV news

the words keep coming and the hands are adept at sculpting them all here and they they start to state what is hidden beneath those pretenses of the lips and the eyes which are learning well the art of denial today is the anger and all the servants are packing their clothes to work somewhere else

acceptance is still very very far away.

meanwhile this imaginary piano player closes the piano and keeps the silence of the keys

he has other works to do and cannot all the time attend to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Impeccable...

each word is well chosen it has a history and significance each syllable is important to build the empire
of his poem,

majestic now
people keep on reading amazed and awed
by the impeccable,

and yet for how long will this majesty last?

only for once,
and then the reading is over and no one talks about the word, and the syllable is not even uttered only for once and then gone forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Impermanence Of Our Lives

what we carefully build for years and years like a mandala sand painting of the monks

we soon shall destroy we soon shall leave and had that feeling of abandon like the colored sands that we finally sprinkle on the river

of life.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Impression

over a cup of coffee you begin to talk about social studies her eyes gaping wide her pupils dilated

it's about a woman depressed her husband left her for another man

crazy, she laughs, she cries she sobs

she loves him still, despite crazy, she laughs, she cries, she sobs we are alone now

as i get another cup

she warns
i may not be able to sleep tonight caffeine is inconsistent with contentment

lousy, i am lousy
i said to myself as i leave and close the door behind me she opens a book

and hides her blush.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Inability To Accept Change

we always want the comfort of what is here with us not taking the risk of what lies ahead we fear the coming of things new and uncertain this is what we are, and what we want to be we refuse change, we doubt innovations, we are solid as a rock, we are as hardheaded as the stones we settle as peebles, we stick as moss and the river leaves us on its important journey we have never the chance to see the wonders of the deep blue sea we are the inanimates, we are the unwanted of the earth the drifting clouds hate us, the changing winds despise us yet we are the majority, and oh yes, we are very happy

RIC S. BASTASA
The Inability To Tell The Truth

yesorno trueorfalso
whatisit
thatyou
willfinally
believe?

makeastand
decideand becounted

in taking the truth
embracing it, there is a need for a certain detachment
the closeness distracts

RIC S. BASTASA
The Inability...

i should have gone to the other side beyond this boundary

where i can be left alone

to speak

to the wind

i should have flapped my wings and leave this place for good but what shall that wind have me to offer?

what shall that island give me?

shall it entertain me with all my secret longings?

shall the wind promise me more places for my own imaginative consumption?

shall there be more strange ideas that i have to embrace like those whores in my silly dreams?

i am staying because there is an ear of this page that is still listening there is still the hand of your time that is holding me so that my tongue can dance so that my eyes can see more about what is not here about what is not familiar about what i never hold like love, like the minutest of affection for i am telling you i have become a gong always sounding what nothing keeps on saying i have not met love

i have not shared affection

i am guilty as judged by the standards of the masses by the cruelty of the mob the gallows of emptiness are hanging me in mid-air my feet cannot touch the ground my eyes cannot see the sky my arms are tied and can never touch freedom i am as helpless as a dry leaf blown by the desert winds towards a horizon that is now beyond description.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Inanimate 'It'

Now i know the real reason why i write

because i love doing it.

I am the It.
We are the It.

We go and get It.

Its Us. Its passion.

And compassion.

Nothing about credit.
Just the It.

And those who feel the same,
Go and Get It.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Inanimate Moon......

the moon
is a slave of the rule

despite its love
for you it must go

and here you are with this routine

you come back at night and meet her

and it goes on and on
and on...

and on, and on, until you are gone

but the moon still keeps on coming

inanimate as ever...as ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Independence Of The Self

independence of the self is an earning. It is a day to day saving,
no one gives you a glass of water you get it yourself, you stand, you reach out for something that you have to do for yourself, you travel alone, you make yourself comfortable with yourself,
you think for yourself, you figure out shapes reflect upon the kind of sounds that you hear from outside you,
you sit upon a chair ins silence keeping that poise nothing threatens you now you are at your own pace,
confident,
even without her, you are still happy you are an island lots of trees grow in there birds visit you and then you are not afraid if they do not come back you are not attached, you are a flux a diffusion,
and you fill every space that comes to you now, you are complete

RIC S. BASTASA
The Independent Woman....

we are in this house that from our sweat built there are only two of us in this house
which we have not really called as home, something's missing
you give me a hint
not the glass window or the ceiling fan,
i know it but how can i
tell you?
i won't tell, it will hurt you,
we continue living
somehow
just the two of us in this house

we have our own careers and every morning we rush to go on our different ways the night is the only place of our tryst
we manage to spend time for love we sleep together and share what we can

there will be a time when this house shall fall because it is not a home for us all there will be one morning when you will finally leave and take away everything from me and then i will write it on the wall this house is never a home, she never wanted a child to bear.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Indescribable...

it is this flow remember water, and rain and some drops from those leaking roofs of those old houses
in our hearts

it has a sweet sound, no words can capture it it has not possessed the power of vowels

in consonance with consonants life goes on our hearts leap, feeling oppressed with the indescribable the mouth spits anger what can it do in utter speechlessness?

i have learned it.
i cannot tell you.

watch me watching you.
i am the spectator in you the spectator too.

at the end we are not bound to say what we have seen for it is enough that we have seen it all with happy hearts

have you spoken joy
have you written misery

i am listening to bocherini when i am writing this i do not understand a thing nor attempt to do it to understand it but here i am happy to this contentment that i am still here

writing....
i remember bliss and the woman who once entered the room of my house as she watches a fruit bowl by the window she did nothing. we did nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Indifference Of Nature

poverty and hate
live in the little village where old coconut trees fence out the depth blue
sea

dthis place is ravaged by a tribal war
each kin killing another kin
without mercy

just last week
a father with his three sons were beheaded
the wife ran away
mad

the house is empty
abandoned

a lonely man lives alone in the nearby little hut under the cover of a dark night filled with stars

he plays his old guitar strumming his sadness telling the stars
about this wasteland
this horrible
place of killing fields of vengeful men against their fellow men

this green place
could have been a paradise in peace

the stars glitter in innocence
as the song floats in air and just like the sands of this bloody shore

seem to feel nothing
at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Indifference Of The Masses....

some have given me
the indignity of their silence i have asked the questions hoping for answers
they only respond with that quizzical looks something in me is diminishing but i know how to cope up with it i know silence too
i have slept with it
i showered it with the rain of my tears i give it the mouth that swallowed me my screams are daggers that has killed it sometime gone hysterical
i have retaken what voice i had this confidence
this word that spits to the indifference of their silence sigh, there is a syllable in it that produces the sound of my own unique existence there is a word that is like a bird in my mouth soon, i will let it fly, soon i will utter it and give it wings....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Indifferent Road....

when she was slapped
she did not react of course the humiliation is greater than the pain she did not mind
at all

she continues her chores all the days have same faces she rests for a while and reflects on these sad events sits on the stairs and looks over the road still waiting for that love to come back and save her it will be years and years and she may die ahead of him the room of the house is getting narrower everyday of the year hope is her railing and she is as patient as the hands of the clock in order not to stop the good will always triumph suffering will be rewarded and all the lonely people shall have rooms reserved in heaven: the reasons are too many, ...yes too many she did not notice sometimes how she falls asleep on the stairs overlooking the indifferent road.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Indifferent Woman

after you build a higher iron grilled fence round your house
letting the bushes rise grass untrimmed and letting all the dust accumulate in your old inherited furniture after you bought more locks the house door

and windows all shut

your phone line cut added another dog to frighten away possible guests

i said to myself, i don't care anymore since you don't care anymore too in anyway in anything
at any time

i guess you'll know the consequences of your acts when you die you must learn to bury your own corpse.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Indirect Communication

You want me to adopt views Concepts principles where I stand and be counted, I, Do not wish this to happen You must simply read my Work, my essays, my poem At their face value, without Attributing it to my personal Life, my lifestyle, my own Loneliness, awesomeness, I am not an authority I can Only be your interpretation.
Read this poem and that poem
It is not me, it is a view of my window.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Indoor Poet Is Sick

it would have been more truthful, or earthly, well grounded candid, or exciting if he had taken his way out of the door to the garden and once again see the trees leaves falling birds pecking on some grains bees taking some pollen here he would be an spectator a story teller a fact gatherer nature lover restive and feasting on what the earth has to offer here he has no waste for words feelings fly thoughts on some unseen wings things change door hinges are rusting gives the noise when you try to open it like creaking bones and so he stays in his room focuses on imagination more often sleeps and relies on dreams which are nothing

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive but the same emotions revealing to him
who he really is psychedelic and more like psychiatric sessions with no one but he himself as shrink
and patient rolled into
one

he follows his heart into the road maps of his poetry in adversity
metaphors of
necessity

RIC S. BASTASA
The Infinitesimal

small is Infinitesimal
a small grain of rice
contains all the food
of this world

need i repeat when he once said that one must see the universe in the grain of sand the whole of love and affection in the hands the magnificence of creation in the mere spark of stone to stone the magical grace of the earth in the sway of the bamboo tip of change in the mere blink of an eye

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ingrate

The mirror is not an ingrate.
It is just. It returns what you give.
It reflects you. When you smile it smiles back.
It tells the truth and patient about what you do next.
Never does it decide how to please and pacify you. It all depends on you.
You make yourself and the mirror looks at you with clear indifference.

you are not the mirror.
Ingrate. I give you a smile you give me that frown.
you are the beast in front of me.
I have this spear, and knife.
And a gun too.

By now you already know what i can really do.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ingrates

sometimes
we are given so much life

all the beautiful flowers blooming wildly along our usual paths to the mountains and seas we are given so much of air this invisible abundance we breathe and take every packet of freshness in our lungs and we, out of this familiarity, and routine,

take all these for granted even as rights
rather than privileges

even if you we do not ask all these are given handed like fruits ripe on a golden platter

and we have all become ingrates

and so the Giver has become so sad regretting that He has created us finally contemplating upon a destruction

like the way a disappointed writer deletes his composition more of myself too erasing what i have so carefully thought of and written on the sand

there was once a time i did not leave it for the waves

i did it myself stamping all those castles, destroying each letter leaving everything in a mess that it really deserves after all, i am but a man angry about ungratefulness....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Initial Stage

it shall start on a compulsion
for there is this lack of disciple
they were like babies thriving on milk
like sheep looking for a shepherd
but all these are nothing but preparations for the ultimate end when governance is self to self
that frees itself from the shackles of itself from the prison cell of freedom itself

RIC S. BASTASA
The Injustice

power occupies your place puts up its throne with glistening stones as crown and the tail of the man ray as scepter
you worship it as it hits you not just once but for as long as you live until you die and then it leaves
everyone
as empty as the ground where all the trees are uprooted the soil all bald
the grasses all taken

RIC S. BASTASA
The Injustice That Thrives...

injustice is to an art, too in the arts, not just in politics, in governance,
even in family circles,
even within ourselves,
this life in restraint,
in self-denial, at first,
it sounds unfair,
a neglect, an unkindness,
sort of disrespect for what we are and what we can be, for what i am, but soon, or sooner,
the realization comes,
it is all for the human good,
that humanity to make this race survive, the i, that one must forget,
so that a name gets stuck in iron or stone on the walls, in the skies,
in the heavens.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Injustice....

what must you not forget was what i felt that past exclusion when everyone got inside the bus and i was last and i was told they're full and there was no more seat available it was that feeling of being abandoned
that made us brave to move on with our journey

alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Inner Devil

to be famous
he says
we need sometimes to listen to the inner devil
inside our
guts

sometimes i ask
what is fame for?

do you really need it?
don't you like the privacy inside
the comfort of your good self?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Inner Journey....

i must learn to enjoy this wave
the ebbs and tides
like i am riding this hammock
from east to west

i must know how to close my eyes
and travel inside
deep down under the darkness
in my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
The Inner Me

My aspirations hurt me
I escape from the mistakes I commit They anger me
The hardships I have Rise above me
These confusions of desire Against the walls of my mind Breaking some well locked doors Tearing the closed windows apart The colors that I want to see Blind me for a while I float in the air
Over the wide sea
I look for wings
To fly and sustain me
I rest a while Close my eyes
And listen to this sound Singing and chanting Inside me
I am dying to live
And be myself
Sublime and strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Inner Side Of Your Perfection

to get intimacy
you make love

to be more intimate you need to make love some more like a string of buds of tiny flowers

seemingly you want it without an ending

eternity & infinity
side by side

but there is no intimacy in intimacy since after each lovemaking you return to the emptiness of your arms again less the other arms of those other nights & other nights before them

a cold night returns with empty hands and winds begin to pass by your face
between your eyes
beyond your hair
outside all of you

finally you try embracing yourself again
as though
you are another distinct set of arms unto your inner arms

and then you become one without need
of any other

silent and
complete

RIC S. BASTASA
i have my own voice but i am not a good singer as you and so i keep this voice only for myself and i begin to speak silently

only to myself for i am not pleasing at all for
the world

it is a sad voice it is filled with envy and regret it is a silent voice and yet so restless as a traffic noise it is contained and restrained afraid to displease the whole world it frees itself from its throat and roams the confines of the mouth it speaks silently for itself on the letters of an ink on the hardness of the teeth

RIC S. BASTASA
The Innocent Happiness Of Children

he's a polio victim a grade three pupil walking so uneasy
on what seems to be uneven floors

we were walking together and then he met another child, soon to be his classmate,
this harelipped
child not so tall
than him

they were exhanging glances and then shared these smiles

soon they were playing on the school grounds

a beautiful sight
shared laughters
not minding
what defects
are there

RIC S. BASTASA
The Innocent One...

you present your painting before her she looks at it with an eagle's eye the next day your poem is next and she reads it aloud to you and you are patient as you listen and you nod your head for all those criticisms it was her love which you painted same love that you wrote in that poem she is too cruel to say that all these are works of the mind all imaginations you nod your head and you say yes, and she never knew that it would be hurting her most.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Insecurities Of Aging...

the more you age
the more you keep things to yourself can ever experience the palpitations of being alone you can hear it like the sounds of korean drums the cascading waterfalls the horns of taxis in city traffic

I assure you... you can't. So? get yourself attuned have an empty cup and learn to drink from it you must feign the satisfaction of thirst, because it can't be long.

The Insensitive Beast

it should have been better if he did not say it he knows it somehow from the tip to bottom he's gonna hurt someone with all the clear intentions
and that is bad.

everyone knows that it is bad.
the man has sacrificed a lot to embrace it hides, dives, and holds his breath just to please the sightseers
and then after all these years this man mimics a monkey and says that he is of inferior quality funny and cannot be considered seriously tremendously unfair silence is always golden

dignified.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Insertion...

the insertion was a little bit slimy, the Senate says, 'Foul!' I am watching it for some meanings perhaps it will be more significant if done tightly, and without any inhibition at all, you think, it would have been real with all the flesh, and not with corrupted legal technicalities.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Insider

you know there is someone inside me it speaks

i hate to listen to this creature it sounds like myself

sometimes it demands something that horrifies me

and i don't want to give in because it seems not to mind if i am hurt most i press it like a marshmallow keeping it small and almost invisible but this creature knows how to scream like a cow and to stop the humiliation i finally give in and keep myself running pursuant to its instructions it drinks some blood from my dog sips it like soda

it bathes itself in mud and does not want to be rubbed

it shows itself naked in the mall what a shame to my soul but then when all his wants are given it says sorry and then says that now i am free it hides inside in my tummy and then sleeps there all day now i am back to my senses on a life of compromises The Insignificant

they let you in and you feel a little bit elated it is their party and they offer you a drink and you like it they tell you stories and you like them

and then they ask about you all about you not just your name not just the place of your birth not just the name of your parents what you do and how much do you earn right there they will ask about the details every necessary detail and then after you tell them your story take care of yourself

you are now alone they just kick you out

you should have known too well it is their party and they make the rules

you bet
you have become the 'it' the one that bites the dust another one that has become insignificant

RIC S. BASTASA
The Insignificant Wall Flower

untouched she is but a flower on the wall
disguising as a vine

you look at it
she is insignificant how can desire be emphatic upon a wall
upon a passive
stalk?

she is looking at you her silence is her prison she wants to be taken you are the senseless wind passing simply dashing
like a vagabond

touch her serration feel the thorn of her hands provoke her into a dance of lust

once your lips touch hers she becomes ignited like fire
that once started as a flicker yet with your love she can be the bushfire that burns
the whole forest
of far Australia

RIC S. BASTASA
The Insomniac Is Alive

there is yet no pillow designed for him to make him sleep soundly instantly like a click of fluorescent light or the blink

the flash of hypnotism or the tap of his hand

then sleep like a dead dog, this insomniac, like you (it is 2:09 a.m. now, and what blinks it only this power of the computer and it buzzing sound like an insomniac bee in a sleepless garden)

sleep is too cruel and unkind not even trying to hold my collar and pull me to a soft bed and give me peace and rest well then go, go away sleepy butterflies go away to the place of waking flowers and be distant, distinct and disappear, there is no logic in this manner on a restless brain of the insomniac sleepless again but taking most of the time he writes letters to friends, emails to peers, ecards to nephews and nieces, articles for journals, pause and think, and press the keys of the computer again, a rat passes by so afraid, a cockroach flies on my ear, a dragonfly is lost again flying like a chopper on the ceiling a lizard waits and lets loose its tongue to engulf an early breakfast a cold wind, a soul touches my head, my hair moves like a river my fingers tic tac toe, my mind on an abra ca dabra, opening caves where treasures lie and you follow me on this lonely trek in the night in the coming of morning, looking for meanings in this literary locomotion stop there, because in truth, an insomniac who is still alive has nothing to offer except that you, must tell some other stories, in this mutual state, your eyes awake, your nerves wrecked, your minds still rambling

i am through
it is now your turn to speak how fast the clock ticks how time runs without our knowing it is now 2:20 a.m. in the place of my sleeplessness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Insomniac Song Of Myke O.

Another insomnia night
till dawn

in the morning you finally sleep

there is a bee encircling a flower
growing from the mouth of your snores

RIC S. BASTASA
The Insomniac Who Drew The Head Of A Sheep Wildly On A White Paper

the insomniac's heart is bleeding. she is in pain tonight like the other past night. she thinks she is dying right on her own bed. changing positions. finding the right way to sleep. she could not find it. she is lost in the darkness of this loneliness. she goes naked towards the refrigerator to get a cold glass of water. ice cubes. water rushing to the glass. clicking sound of glass and another glass. coldness rushing to her esophagus. Coldness multiplying in her burning heart. her blankets burning. She could not sleep tonight. She gets a white paper, a pen and begings to scribble her life: wildly, some lines run. Shaping the head of a sheep. one. two. three. four. five. Five eyes. She stops. She needs five eyes to see everything. Awake. The ceiling where the lizards grow to become alligators on the plywood swamp. No grasses but cobwebs of sleepy spiders. Five Jacks are hidden on the ears. On the ears are hairs of corn. Blonde. On the nose are paper clips. With them, she is cruel. Then she hides a bull inside her pharynx, the one that shits inside her mouth. She stinks. The bull makes a call for desire. For lust. She closes it with the prison wall of her teeth and gums and lips. Her lips are sealed now. All the five eyes are open throughout the night. Looking for love. Love is not found. Her heart bleeds. Stains of blood penetrate the white paper.

She had not slept for five nights. She will add another five eyes. She knows if this happens again and again, she will die. She pretends that she is strong. She will not forget these nights. Preludes to her death. She writes some hieroglyphics all over the empty spaces of the white paper. She will not forget what each line and curve and sharp edges mean. She codes them. She writes the date 9.2.2008.

She does not put her name. It is enough that no one knows and remembers.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Insomniac Works Again

It is almost 12 midnight nigh i cannot
sleep

i cannot say that i am thinking of you
it is just
random thoughts
like tiny meteors shooting
in all corners of my
mind

i like to simplify that perhaps at the strike of the forbidden hour

a chariot turns into a pumpkin
a princess loses her
shoe
and i can be back
into a mouse

the hour has come
i am back to my nightmares

RIC S. BASTASA
Batog na, kabog,
sa akong tabon-tabon.
Kaadlawon na.

Sa kilom-kilom
Kutob: buwak ug buyog Sa akong hagok.

come little bat
land on my temple
it is dawn

when twilight
comes: a flower and a bee in my snore

RIC S. BASTASA
The Insomniac....

the stars in the heavens shine
brightly

from my window i watch
the moon

beyond me the shadows of hills

by the side of this house where i live for a while a brook sings a lonely river runs slowly

tonight i think of nothing my only wish: a very sound sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Intangible...

this moment
a tiny bit of my long day i find pleasure
on this flow, feeling like water flowing on the river, a ripple of the sea, wings of this seagull, woman, woman, wading to a pool, like a gliding kite, or a drop of water on the faucet,
a little sound a flicker, some connections of thought and touch, little pieces of memories rushing inside this room of my mind, i float, this is happiness, which as you may feel i am trying to capture through these words, oh really nonsensical, but there is this joy of tiny pieces, bites of sweetness, intangible.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Intervals

you laugh
at the intervals

at the spaces
between
seriousness and craziness

between lucidity
and insanity

between the interstitial satire
and the solidity of
desire

this if infinitesimal life a burst of laughter between the bangs of the hammer you guess you made it he lied

it is someone else
far beyond your imagination far beyond your control you look at it again it looks like you wearing that hair without any shampoo

RIC S. BASTASA
The Introvert

poems are hanging like stars inside
his room on a very low ceiling
which he can reach so easily with his hands

it is always night time there and the worries outside keep on knocking the door....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Intruder Of A Family Affair

there are so many who died taking with them in their own graves

the lies of their lives,

it is unethical to judge them the way you wanted to make them divulge these secrets is an invasion you destroy their territories you burn their safe-houses it is like stepping upon the sand palaces of the ants and then spraying their whole population with pesticide

you think that you have served so well those who are still living look at them, they mourn and still will mourn for the years they feel being deceived and tricked into a misery that they do not deserve because you have taken hold of the truth of the dead and revealed them to the grieving

(it is none of your business, intruder! you deserve a thousand deaths!)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Invincible Concept Cannot Be Drawn Actually

i like it simply because it is simple and so we make it as simple as it should & must be more graphical representation of what is not yet inconceivable?

an empty page with definite boundaries it is a rectangular world with ballpoint edges

our thoughts are likened to boats of old people who believe that beyond these rectangular boundaries
we all must fall
and eaten by dragons
raised by the gods who take vengeance upon us
and our ancestors
because we are
hardheaded

about what?

they say Here, here,
and then There

but where? and then
they say
the blank page is actually
an elephant's pachysandra
where we ride

and that the elephant is carried by another elephant and another elephant
on top of each other's
innocence

i shake my head seventy-seven times seven upon this faulty picture of a contrived reality is this the way

to explain that we must survive
without so many
questions?

i must think that beyond the four corners of this rectangular world are birds with a million wings
and they are invincible

and we do not know where they are now
we haven't heard
and so here we are in the middle of this journey this falling with no one to catch us dreaming of ocean floors
wishing for the blue skies

RIC S. BASTASA
The Invincible Giant

i am a giant
not a silly cyclop
i have two beautiful eyes two moons

you are pygmies
ants
am a carabao

i am a tower of light
you are boat abducted
by a storm

i am a rock
you are the rain
with all these i only speak

i do not touch you
i only whisper
i am all these but you shall never see

RIC S. BASTASA
The Invitation Of The Earth To Hear Its Songs....

the earth
if you listen enough ears on those walls
buried
to each fiber of wood has composed a lot of songs for the goodness
of our souls: the songs of the sea waves against the sands, such a shushing sound the thin air that kisses those daffodils the soft feet of rain tiptoeing on the grass the whispers of the flowing waters from your fingers to the skins on your belly the lips that kiss
the bodies that meet in desire rubbing against each other on lonelier nights
the flights of bird wings above the treetops
the fluttering butterflies landing on the petals of a rose sad is the man who does not hear all these and love life sadder is the man who hears all these but shuts his heart like slamming doors

locked
without keys

RIC S. BASTASA
The Iron Cables Laid To Sea

the iron cables
buried underneath cement to create your pavement

bleed

in rust and lose their substance to the sea whose waves

lick

like hands of waves as if to assure that everything here is fine.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony

people who look at me as dispenser of justice do not know, that i am a victim of injustice myself.

as i wear the black robe, i too, hide within this cloth my own suffering from the political system that swears that everything is owned, one must have a master, that in this small stage, they try to make marionettes out of our broken bones, their hands are there manipulating the strings and those who do not follow, who do not dance shall be severely punished

i keep this irony, i close my mouth and then i bang the gavel hard, i give you justice, no one gives me the same.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony Of Delay

what the heart wants to speak the mouth tries to hide the teeth grits in anger the tongue genuflects upon its tail then the right time comes the heart speaks
but by then the body has become weak the mind too fickle and so when finally the heart has spoken what true love is there the niche is ready for the funeral of the limbs.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony Of It

at first, we start on a very trivial conversation
what you do
and what you like doing how we arrive at common grounds like the places we have visited and describing in details what we have seen there as though we are watching the same film

then we do not just take glances anymore i catch you stealing a hard look at me and i responded in the same manner that you give that lovely stare i advanced a step closer to you

my mouth waters
like what a man must do under same circumstances i chance to hold your hand and you welcome it
with a smile

then we leave the place going somewhere else where we can be alone to explore the other possibilities of love i forget to know what your name was.

i guess, you are love, you must be for now, i again meet the beautiful feeling of happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony Of Life

youth

when i had you
i did not have the fortune

&
fortune

when you came i did not have

youth

anymore

what can't you both
leave me?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony Of Life (3)

the wall is blank
this morning
the rain stops leaving marks of water still no words but
i wonder
still how happy i am even without a morning
poem but ironic is this fact writing
about
a blank wall as the heart beats for joy how fresh a world appears before me as the rain stops.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony Of My Existence

when we are on the plains when i still suffer from those storms you entice me into having wings designed into a flight to the sky

you lay the rules and i admit them saying it's a deal
you have the numbers
and the penalties

you say there is a mold to follow
and if i were to succeed i must obey
down to the last letter of the law

i agree, &
i suffered more than i expect

i just want to succeed
i burn my nights

i grow more days
seeding my years with more moons spreading more stars to my lonely
skies

and i go on top breathing the peaks of winds at last seeing everything
now,
it is beautiful
i am successful
i have achieved
your goals for
me

and then suddenly you change the rules
you call me
i must go down again to begin

i tell you again
there are no shapes no molds

for the heart that strives there are only
longings

i must tell you again that i have done more by not doing
anything

i have seen the truth by not looking at the rules

i have traveled more by merely staying at peace with myself

no more wounds to lick
as i have cut my tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony Of My Society

the liars are well placed on their high thrones the incompetents and the misfits dancing on their undeserved success, the filthy rich have power the leaders corrupted and yet we pray to the same God and yet we receive the blessings from the same God.

meanwhile, the innocent ones are convicted and electrocuted meanwhile the poor gets to become as poorer as they were once evil reigns and there seems to be no end to this,

the good ones starve and have fears for breakfast the bad eggs hatch and fed and pampered.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony Of Our Absences...

it is booming time
in our town

all the flowers bloom in a frenzy

the nights are perfumed and the women are
beautiful

sad to say, we both are not there.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony Of You.....

here you are
a flower who dreams full bloom
but only at night

one who wants to shine but only upon a borrowed
light

a boat ready to sail only if the rudder
is cut

here you are
the irony of ironies wanting to be famous
but without a name.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Irony Of Your Life

so many things litter empty bottles wrappers
rugs, slippers with lost pairs dog's hair
banana peelings,

in the kitchen after you eat you are always caught up with so many reasons to leave early

so many things to attend to words to fabricate
sentences to make at the rush hour you risk life in the middle of a jammed traffic of the city streets and then when you arrive at your destination you find the irony of life you are trapped inside the net of a jejune so many papers piling up like a mountain and then you have no nerve to make the climb

you sit there
look beyond the glass windows your legs are crossed
and then you
do nothing

and that is the final decision.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Island

true the island looks like a crocodile a protruding mouth sharp teeth and a very long tail but at the end be amazed the women there are tall and white and so free like the wind and the breeze and the waves surging on the laps of the shore

RIC S. BASTASA
The Island In The Sea

there is this island
a very small island where i once escaped away from the death that the crowd has inflicted there is this lonely island where the only house i have is just an old chair and throughout the nine full moons i simply sit there gazing looking at the small tree the leaf of which is only one its veins too tiny for my eyes to love it gets lonely here most of the time but i owe all my life to this very small island it saved me once from the death inflicted on me by the crowd my body becomes a geisha of gratitude my mouth becomes the kiss of the slave woman to the nth power of Abram i live in this island and on the last dropp of the day i become forever

there will be another north star in the heavens and it shall have my own name there is this island shaped like a heart and it sheds real blood because it is real i am but a white grain of sand perhaps, but i have become this grain of gratitude and i have become a star forever hanging on the heavens.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Island That Anger Makes

because the past is rude and always angry at me i also learned to be one like it

it is always the anger that energizes me and day by day the anger grows and spreads to every layer of my skin
to every nerve to every cell of my body

i do not look in the mirror to see my anger that burns me it will be too
frightening

time knows
it always knows what to do with anger somehow there is another angle to anger something that negates it consuming nature

it makes an island
that is sufficient upon its own resources it has strong trees

white sandy shores virginal in its decision for isolation one day a visitor comes asking to stay

for a while

all it can see is the goodness of the place the peace of its isolation the fertility of its suppression.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Island Tryst In My Mind A Long Time Ago

at first the tip of the boat shows and then the image becomes more detailed you are there standing half naked looking at the far horizon to an island where we will be spending the night
alone

the rest has assumed the color of the night fire at the center
rain in our hair mist between us moans reaching the heavens where the stars are watching

RIC S. BASTASA
The Jar In The Garden

it is earthen
and bound to the emptiness of the air that fills it,
it contains nothing but to you it is important,

more important even to the beauty of my words, it easily breaks to the pressures of the weathers on a quick change it may perish despite this
you claim to love even more its natural fragility to me this jar had always been a worthless form a useless shape

yet its curve and its flattened base have become symbols of your persistence it is hollow it is plain earth solidified by an artist by the gentleness of its hands by the cruel tests of fire and by the silence of its years your love is like it and you are asking me if it is time for me to forget you for us to part ways for i have loved the clouds more the way they float the way they turn blue and then fade away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Jaundiced Eye

to a jaundiced eye the world appears yellow and that includes all the details and shades: the graffiti and the effete

a society overrefined turning yellow green with age and envy

over the happiness of others those who jumped over the fence to find the unique pleasures of violet grass and
purple clouds and gray sun

one must not be bothered by the latest news of himself narrated by an acquaintance from far north where the buffaloes are butchered a name is kicked out from the pages of the morning papers over a cup of cold coffee another refined destruction of an icon

in you

listen the mesmerizing sound of your name as you pray to your favorite saints
do not be afraid that is what is always said inside your heart be not confused in the middle of the crowd there is the lonely you listen to it carefully it is the only true and honest voice it does not betray you

and so
obey it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Jealous Friend

green with envy
is the jealous friend of ours lurking in the dark wetting herself
with tears

she has mistaken us
as lovers

her lips are still unkissed her skin still untouched

her face unwashed and so is her jealous mind

RIC S. BASTASA
The Jealous Other Woman

when i told her that we are taking the suite at the hotel
where we will be spending
three days
alone with ourselves on a mode of rediscovering flames
she responded with

hmmmm

as though i am
the liar
trying to make the other woman envious
about an old love
trying to rekindle
what has long been
and supposedly
been dead

please understand

i am trying to walk on the path of light away from the darkness of our hidden sins

RIC S. BASTASA
The Jejemon In Town

miss candy raised in an exclusive school for girls asks what is jejemon?

how would she know jejemons do not exist in her rich exclusive environment she is not being discriminated and with the affluence of her parents she can spell correctly and express herself in english well, jejemons are her exact opposites and they are too many to be ignored and they breed so well, here's an example of a jejemon:

miSzMaldiTahh111: EoW pFuOh! You: Huh? miszMaldiTahh111: i LLyK tO knOw moR3 bOut u, PwfoH. crE 2 t3ll mE yur N@me? jejejejeje! You: You are a jejemon! Don't talk to me, you uneducated retard!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Jesuit Father

not one child
has your name

but your name is the name of all your students

those who learned from your teachings
that life is beautiful
that it has meaning that it must be lived to the full

not one child
is owned by you
not one child
gives you paternal posterity

but there are hundreds of those who call you father those whose lives you touched those that found a home in your class those that learned to be one with the world those that give glory to God they all have become your children, father.

you have served, and loved them all.
you are their father and they are your sons, your family.

now they are thanking you and your name will live and linger.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Joke At Golgotha
	ry going to golgotha
and see if you can find a joke there ry your wits and humour on skulls
and carcass
and crosses and crucifixions

yes the carcass
funny
you can see her ass.

(ha ha ha)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Joke Is That You Think It Is One...

ha ha ha

ha ha ha

ha ha ha

nine itches(es)
and nine a(hs)
bending
for happiness

gtg
i really gtg

goodbye.

God bless you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Joker...

there is this little boy an attraction in the circus because he does not have experience yet...i mean the showmanship is innocence, and those that surround him who want to say, they want to help him become like them

contortionists, clowns, magicians, elephant men,
frog ladies,
jumpers, etc... i am not really familiar with their names and what they do

one day, the contortionist ask him to imitate him to get rid of his bones and bend like some
water
fluid and painless
and the boy
does what he is told

he dies
bones crack and eyes still seeing pain and terror
looking to the sky for
help...

he is innocence gone

but the show must go on that is what they say and the clown who watches what the boy does and how he dies

you bet, continues laughing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Jolly Bee...

they say
love will always stay

based on the experience of the jolly bee
it is not at all
true

there are chickens
in love
at first they cackle
but then
they do not hatch
their eggs at
all

there are words that touch
and go

there are options
unthought of

there are
empty hollow words
without
any weight

there are nights
without days....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Journey Of The Self

I've shut my world away from yours
i have sewn my lips
i am muted
on self-volition
what is the use of any coalition for this very personal journey on a ship without name and rudder
do you feel my fears
for waves?
there is no captain
or crew here
rules are rules
there are no exceptions of the self
i am raising my sails in the middle of my storms there is darkness and occasional lightnings
i do not mind
the thunders
everyone claims
they all have them
too

tomorrow
perhaps shall be a bright day i challenge myself
once again
i tell myself
this boat be better burned

so i will know how far can i swim

RIC S. BASTASA
The Journey To Self-Discovery

in closing all windows and shutting the door

inside the silent belly of the room you are being consumed in the content of solitude you shall find your true self

RIC S. BASTASA
The Journey To Your Destiny

on that early morning just before the first streak of light arrives
at your window

you step out of the door
and listen to the wind
you close your eyes
you shut your senses
you unload what fetters
your soul

the wind assures that everything is now ready the boat on the side of the river is now calling it is time to go before the sun sees you

you embark upon a journey that must lead you to your destiny

RIC S. BASTASA
The Journey Towards That Place

You see the place a haven of grace
an island of happiness

you love it and wish for it
but there is something that hinders
you somehow

the pain of the passage the frightening journey the path of thorns
the bridge of fire

beneath you feet are the sharpest nails
beside you are the daggers of doubts

close your eyes
and dream and then continue
going

now you see the place again a have of so much grace an indescribable happiness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Journey Towards The Top...

your wish must be mothered by passion your first step maybe desire but it will not always be the same the other steps till the end of your journey towards that highest peak will all be bleeding sacrifices of the feet you carry with you the heavy weight of silence like four sacks of rice burdening your back you are no longer fragile as a morning glory your eyes pierce the skin of the ground, daggers all.

you forget your name you shed off masks you do not know a face you keep that spirit you have become all the elements of nature: wind, sea, mountain, space, meteor, sun and moon, but you are still one as the steel self that you are, a man apart from the rest.

you know beforehand about your ending, you become a stone part of the cliff, kissed by the clouds, sings with the wind, overlooking the plains.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Journeys Of My Mind

it is always a mixture of this and that the this that i want to tell and the that that keeps on shutting

this is it, and it is life that is it, and it can be death so many times the sky wants to split and open up like a bread that you divide it offers promises, views of moons and slices of so many suns but what comes instead is the grayness and heaviness of these and those these rains, those cold nights where we keep blankets of comfort in our own liking

and so it rains with cats and dogs instead and our ears break like shatters of mirrors that we pick and ask if our faces are still in tact we have so many and we become so many in these games that we usually play we sometimes stay together and watch how the world is going from where we talk and drink from our verandas of comings and leavings we are mostly sad but we never show it we are often lonely but we do not care and when we're happy we keep it to ourselves we differ a lot but our loneliness keep us solid together in this boat of misery where we are taken to the places of dismay

i actually and honestly do not know where we are going and so i always keep on talking.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Joy Of Having Nothing

THE women are dancing in open fields their veils thrown away into the golden stacks of hay the children too are carrying their drums and tambourines The men are singing
The old men and women with all the years stored in their ears watch with joy

RIC S. BASTASA
The Joy Of Loving

the joy of loving
is not in that taking but in the giving i tried taking too much and put them in my hands oh! everything becomes a mess there are spills and dirt everywhere i take the other option of simply opening my hands and letting things go like letting five butterflies fly away from my palms into the garden of flowers like setting free the two lovebirds spending all their lifetime inside the metal cage that mother bought like giving away the last saving of my life so that you may find finally the person that you really love

i have emptied myself of everything i keep now happiness comes and fills every hollow corner of my being

i walk along the shores of my life.
singing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Joy Of Taking Less

i must be a fool parting more of what i have and then given back something so little
and sometimes
nothing in return

my wife says this is too much and if i do not change she might as well leave me for good

people lack wisdom it is basic
the more you give more shall be given it is not an immediate
grace
i know, it happens most of the time without my knowing
it,

God's grace in the most unexpected places the beggar that i face today
who knows
is God's angel.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Jump Of Manuelito

What is it inside you, Must be boiling
Could be erupting
A hollow bag filled with So much pressure
About to burst

They wonder why
The decision to jump is made By you at the unexpected hour When all the rest are sick Looking for the cure
When most are lost
Looking for an opening

And there you are Not minding, undefining What loss is What pain is?
What everything
In our common ills
Is all about?

I am petrified.

Matter of fact
I stopped asking.

It is your major jump
And there must be a major reason It must be the thin line Between life and death
It must be feeling
The great divide

What we see is a major loss.

But who knows
It is not to you
I remember when you first Looked for an opening
You insisted
You struggled
Only to find out
You don’t need it After all those years

It is
The situation actually Getting, needing, wanting, Then throwing everything Perhaps just Going back to beginnings
To start after a backtrack

To be new again
The want to be at a blank wall Or at Dead ends
The mind would be
And could be Once again
And we become Real?

Disrobed of all the coatings
We accumulated Now naked, now new Now facing everything as though Everything is strange
From mere scratch....
To a quick snatch
I can’t possibly do
What you have done
So far
It is not as simple
As you think
I for years have taken Complexity
Preferring the certainty More than The real
It is what makes me Live some more
And what is
it
I can’t tell you I won’t really
It is my own
Sphinx...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Jumping Horses Of The Carnival

Do you still remember
the jumping horses of the carnival
when we were yet small?

Do you remember sometime in July of 1968?
The horses are made of tin
in different colors,

practically all other colors which are impossible for real horses

Those horses did not jump on their own You bet
and when you guess wins, you get either a plastic glass or a cheap teddy bear

Those horses move with the music of the record player and there was a Big Man holding the microphone

Dictating who shall move next till your number wins

That is the beginning of my criticism.
Now, i am going back there to obtain more data Perhaps, i shall then be Enlightened.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do you still remember
the jumping horses of the carnival
when we were yet small?

Do you remember sometime
in July of 1968?

The horses were made of tin
in different colors,

practically all other colors
which were impossible for real horses that we knew of black, gray, white, brown, spotted there were pink, yellow green and rainbow horses

(i hope you remember that you preferred the black ones)

Those horses did not jump on their own
You bet

A hand held their feet and when your guess won, you got

a cheap teddy bear

Those horses move with the music of the old record player with a harsh and confused voice like a desert storm

and there was a Big Man
holding the microphone
Dictating who shall move next
till your number won the prize of your persistence

i called you stupid &

That was the beginning of my criticism Turned treatise of Reason

Now, i am going back there to obtain more data Perhaps, i shall then be Enlightened in black and white, perhaps,
i am not sure anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
The Kamuning Trees Are Blooming...

under the kamuning tree its white blossoms are falling i sit upon a white chair in the garden as petals fall softly like snow flakes from the sky a wind blows us all happily away from here i have become one kamuning scented soul

i feel so light searching for my heaven.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Key And The Closing Of The Door

half open, you signify a little doubt
about what to do,
there is this dichotomy about leaving and entering at the middle of a decision, one stops to ponder whether who at the end is hurt will it be just myself? or someone else, someone you like to love but cannot then you go outside and close the door behind you locking it and taking the key you own the world now, what is inside that room no one can take away, in this case, there is the decision to come back until the mind

settles for the big thing whatever is it
you cannot say it for the meantime that you still have the key in your hand time passes. You let it simmer defrost the hardness of the cold then you come back and open the door again nothing taken, but this time you leave the key under the rag and you tell somebody, the one you love, that the key is there and it is all hers.

that is the saddest thing that you can do. but i know, inside, it is the happiest thing that you have done in your entire life
ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Key To The Door Of Madness

be not confident and try not to tell me that i should not be driven by seizures and fits for just a while i was holding the key to the door of my madness
an old
they say even reliable key
and that is our presumption of this given right-handed sanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Keychain....

there is always a compromise between want and need and so you take one, just one, just once, and you tell no one but then this secret creeps and goes into the mall, and begins to be seen by all those who are cats in their curious suits, and so the secrets goes on sale with ads and bidding, the need begets wants and myriad compromises come like peanuts mashed into butter caught in a bottle for sale at 999.99 per kilo and the lady there sings like heaven and the the angels come in a plaster of Paris where the apple of discord is thrown and hence the war and refugees abound.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Kids In Us...

it is not because one is fat or huge that one does not fit it is because one does not summon his senses and see therefore all the transparencies the shadows beyond the films there will always be secrets something concealed but like children borne from the mountain's belly the tiny eyes peep and open wide on those leaks of the walls they always know what is wonder it is when the children in us begin to play again and remember those games even how dark the night has become that we see again these fireflies of the hidden world the tree and the moon resting upon its leaves

RIC S. BASTASA
The Killer Instincts Of Thoughts....

his thoughts are like tall, untamed grasses
no one lives there anymore
and everyone is
afraid,
even the dogs, they sniff
a story
of a bitch who went in there
and never came back, alive.

the grasses are sharp like swords and tricky like a mad magician who kills its willing subjects alive and escapes in the air like a whiff of
a sigh

the grasses are alluring, and one white dog thinking of the bone and the meat of the jackal
one night
slipped in there like a thief the sounds of one choked fade like a denim.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Killer Of Poetry

whoever defines what poetry is and how must it be written kills it.

poetry is alive
it is in the fragile wings of a butterfly it flutters and hovers to the flower that it likes whoever it favors shall bloom in full

RIC S. BASTASA
The Killers In Santo Domingo...

it made you feel good vengeance satisfied, you keep on chanting it is good, it makes you feel good, you &
your friends drink to that, it is good, you keep on repeating it it made you all feel good, but, and this is the big but, it was never right, it was unlawful, and now you have to keep on running and hiding...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Kind Of Falling

There is this kind of falling that is free, and it does not think of any floor or end, the trip continues down and down
and darker and darker

you close your hands
and put them on the side of your hips, and you keep on waiting about the
expected

deadly impact, you want it done
and done so quickly

for years this free falling has been with you
and you are into this feeling always

where to
and when and what
and why

it's been like this from
the beginning
no floors no ceiling
no walls now
and all the doors are closed

except the windows of course that you keep on seeing there is the wind that keeps on going and going passing through and through
inside your heart

the freedom of falling it is here always inside your heart you are numb
and there is nothing difficult to understand letting go and just this feeling of falling the consolation is that you are always on top of things explains, thus, this falling for why should i fall? i ask sometimes. thanks God, i must be up here, and there is no end to this tunnel let me see, let me see the light, with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Kindness Of Simply Letting Go

the son is too cruel to keep her 90 year old mother alive
still alive

diabetic at first it was her gangrened toes which were severed from her foot then the foot followed suit the lower leg then finally the upper leg

the cutting stops an inch below the genitalia
you cannot cut the large intestines anymore the doctor says

i once told him that on my part i live in a shack on top of a hill where i set all the pigeons free on their wings they finally go with the final wind i never ask them to come back the cold winds from faraway blows my hair o how fresh o how beautiful is their passing merely passing by, just merely passing by my hands really never really hold on any of them letting go, letting go, that is what kindness is all about

RIC S. BASTASA
The Kindness Of Sin

where virtue fails vice comes for succor at least for a moment you have lived a life
so full (and come to think of it) look behind how empty it had been.

RIC S. BASTASA
The King Of The Chairs

no matter how qualified and competent is the king of the chairs to the mind of the table

the king of the chairs
will always remain as only one of its serving knights.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Kiss

It is your kiss that makes him a handsome prince again This croaking toad

Why will you deny that to him?

The book did not say that you have to kiss on the lips Passionately

you may kiss his feet if you vomit the slime on his tongue & you may close your eyes that long enough you run as fast as you can till his smell till this misery is lost in the rushes of the air

RIC S. BASTASA
The Kiss Of The Spider

yours is the kiss of the spider mine is the touch of the feather yours is the sting of a bee i am delighted i am bitten i am inflamed with love

if you are the sniper aiming a gun at me i am your most easy target and when you squeeze the trigger i shall face you with all the weakness of an honest man i shall stare at the bullet penetrating the softest chamber of my heart now you must know how to love as you kill the most willing victim falling from the firm stand of integrity into the slums of shame how foolish! how stupid can i be!

my friends and foes all say you have the gun and i come near you now squeeze, look at me, do i look like i need pity?

on your selfishness i have long died how can you kill me then?
love dies only once and that is courage enough to muster and be gone for good.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Kiss The Tongue And The Twitting Bird....

when you get near me when you press your lips against mine, you shall feel the coldness of my dawn, you keep your mind open like eyes staring at the sun, yet what you see is still the haze, the fog hanging by the mountain since it has always been a very cold day, when you put your tongue inside my mouth, you feel the rain rushing making a river of rippling waters and it is the force inside that you will feel

you close your eyes and trace where it is going, and you shall know that every dropp of rain that makes this river is always going away from you away from us, and you start to browse over the silence of the my day, and you shall find that this day is an empty page where all my words have already been erased because i do not want you to know anymore what i feel and who i am, i am detached, i am numb, and i do not wish to know what love is all about and where it is going,

i just like to hear a bird twitting alone on that old tree.

whatever is it that it is singing, i do not really care.

for what i know is that i am alive, and for what purpose, who cares?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Kites

the kites
take pride of their freedom befriending the proud winds and elbowing with the hands of the great sun they swim in the clouds and sing the songs of the mighty and the free they look down

and to lowly places and creatures frown forgetting perhaps the strings that tie them to the hands

of children

RIC S. BASTASA
The Knife, The Rock And Grief

grief has a knife

that stabs
the rock

that breaks
it from where

water comes out
for you

to drink so that you can have

life again
for you to drink

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ladder

when you climb the ladder you have become too insensitive focusing your eyes upon the fruits up the tree you have had not the chance to ask about its own ambitions too or at least about some of its most simple dreams

to lean upon a wall

when you step upon one of its arms you never ever heard any complaint from its feet

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lady At Your Side

moon at noontime

sun at midnight

she is that

beautiful
one
at the wrong
time

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lady Of The House....

travel has become one form of negligence.

in the house the words are waiting they become grass

turning into weeds, they grow thorns on their stalks warning you of a revenge when you come back the path is barred you have to cut weeds to enter the door the door cannot embrace you it hints you with a door knob to welcome you back the computers suffer a breakdown and the fan has become a throttle less the air you have so many things to tell the room but the blankets are still covering their ears your lady who had been waiting impatiently removes her dress

and you see how wounded are her breasts.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lady Who Leaned On The Pillar Of The Court

the one who took the shot must be an artist he knew how to portray the state of justice in this country a sad lady abandoned by a lover who murders a maid
and goes into hiding helped by a powerful dad and the case is simply left in the archives
forgotten

i have written a poem for that sadness
a forced smile
coerced beauty
a leaning that is accompanied by trembling
that something might fall and break her into shattered pieces of glass
sharp and still vengeful to the soles of the feet of the innocent guest
looking for more names....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lady Who Lost Her Love

there is no love
life anymore with

dthis lady whose husband left her

she sleeps with her most favorite ggranddaughter after telling her stories

about the prince and the princess

in that old kingdom
washed by the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lady With A Blue Blouse

lady, you break a friendship it is like a glass of wine you drink last night and drunk you throw the glass away it lands on the cemented pavement and breaks

the following morning
no one is in the house where you live they are all gone
not even waiting for dawn the shatters are there no one picks the pieces alcohol dries up

the sun arrives angrily on the French blinds of your window why are you crying? now, you have understood what is missing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lake Is Silent The Leaf Is Gone.

you are the strong man taking the calm of the lake placid waters, still boat, to the gentleness of the floating

leaf

you told me, keep the storms with
your head
let them rage there
while you sleep

do not use any word to tell anyone about the chaos
they have their own words for themselves keep the chaos without your heart it makes you stronger

you are the strongman
in this world, we never see you again we have forgotten your name the lake is silent

the leaf is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lamb Of God

Lamb of God
you take away
the sins
of the avaricious

Lamb of God
you take away
the taste
of sin

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lame Boy By The Window

that boy by the window had long been gone
it dreamt of snow but there is no snow here where the tropic of cancer lies where summer is as hot as burning coal where pigs are slaughtered and grilled for a family affair where the girls dance with their father where boys run and catch dragonflies where the river sometimes dry up where wells need to be dug up deeper, that boy who dreamt of snow knows from where it comes the book that mother bought from London

he had never learned how to walk and throught out his life the sourness sticks....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Language Of Anything

everyone
speaks for itself, the leaf
when it falls always has something
to say
and says it
painlessly, and so does the waves that break their liquid
bodies ashore
spreading
into foams
may murmur
but goes back again
to where it must go and then belong

we too
in our own joys and sorrows
say something in words and yet some do not really understand what we feel,

the world
knows each language and keeps on listening still......

RIC S. BASTASA
The Language Of Intangibility

complacency
sleeps at the yard,
the thief comes
like an accident,
the object of pleasure is
taken away,
at the breakfast
table is the blank stare
in this house
every caution
is given up,
the accident can come invited,
what happens is
what happens.
fate declares
it is destiny.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Language Of Light

when light arrives
welcome it

you who is still on the shade of darkness move away from fear and anxiety

listen

do not speak
you may not hear

light is not just light it speaks

it hovers on your breast bringing you some gifts warnings and golden pleas

hoping that you shall remain with it for in the house reserved for you you shall sooner rest and feel what happiness is there still unfathomed

RIC S. BASTASA
The Language Of The Tree

i am looking for a new voice it lurks still inside my throat i want to speak but i still can't my father does not like it if i were to speak the language that i know since i was a kid my father shall rise from his grave to stop what i must utter i am still looking for a new voice it must not sound like his law it shall speak the language of the tree deprived of leaves and yet still keeps all the twigs.

i like the chirps of birds, the whimpers of wings, the sweet silence of the shells....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Language That The Poor Wants To Speak

do you speak good English? do you take pride in it and then use it to impress others and swindle them into a belief that they are inferior?

they have feelings too of humiliation which even in such a sad state wish that their humiliation speak good English still they always think that English will give them a good job

a better standing in the society a flare of fashionable tongue you make them cry but still they want to speak that cry in English too foolish!

but can you blame them?
you who hold that power and might you who have taken all what they once had and made them
worse within
themselves

despite which,
they still want to be like you to speak like you
a god

how sad!

you have never known the language of love the grammar of generosity the syntax of sympathy that language that good English sometimes has forgotten to utter

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Argument Of The Egg And The Chicken

i will always agree on this last, that at the end
it does not really matter which came first the egg or the chicken because what matters most is what makes us
friends again.

take the chicken
i'll have the eggs.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Beauty That We Take With Us

it is late for me to know that you have a ghostly opinion
about
who we are

we have nerves
that explode
and you finally do not like it

at first you love what we say you read our wonders
you are amazed with the scenes we draw upon thoughts

then there was something about having to die
having to sail and be lost forever in a strange horizon having to suffer for the good of all and you do not like exactly the possible consequences of our choices

you tell us
why do we have to suffer?
despite the fruits
why do we have to be injured?
despite the luxuries and the lushness of our brains

we do not know
our genes are secretive we only feel that what is sacred to us
can be
also so wrong

we end in sadness
we admire the last beauty that we take with us.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Day On Earth

shall i say that the last day of the earth is the last day
of man?

for when man is gone all the stories to be told shall be gone but the earth is there shivering for all the harsh things that have been done

doo there was an explosion forming a very huge mushroom on that last day
of man

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Day....

the last day in your life is in your mind

when the mind shuts up then that is it

the last day is at the tip of the last word that slips from out of your tongue
that in a minute you
remember
but in the last second you forgo
because it is just it

ping!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Donkey

I am gathering laurels to crown the last donkey in my town

It is the only donkey which thinks that soon i will be having the heydays of my writing career

I will have this donkey paraded in town
To be cheered by all the nitwits and nincompoops And then the feast at home begins All menu based on donkey meat.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Fifteen Minutes Before Leaving

in fifteen minutes you create something that they will like, something to think about, not found here yet it is about someone they want to understand but cannot because it eludes belief it escapes routine

it is outside the box, bird-like wearing light,
and sounds very much just like anybody's conscience always talking upon itself and sound very much like anybody's voice.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Five Minutes Of Your Life

given the last five minutes
of your life
what shall you do?

let the last five minutes be a waiting let there be that willingness to go where the last five minutes take you let there be a respect for an ending
let it be as nice as the first welcome let it be as silent as a cat's feet on the carpet embrace the last five minutes like your long lost friend tightly
without any tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Flight

denial of what was there a long time ago it sits there like a statue beside the door of the house where the window is always closed there is always a reason why the words keep flowing

like a river
why the river is always filled with running water despite the drought

you see the bones of cows the dust of the sands in the desert it was once an oasis where date palms abound where women bathe with their men where they make love
under the crescent moon

there is always a reason that you know but you do not tell but which i will always deny as truth

it is this denial that keeps my hands going like soldiers ready for a kill in that theater of war it is this roaring lion that does not bite that keeps me
in fear that keeps me speaking inside myself
there is no one here
there is no wall anymore the winds are waiting with all the wings of the dead birds it is ready

i am undressing
this is the flight.
there are times when we fell like
waste paper, that uselessness,
when we seem to be not connected at all
even to our very own self
when we are scattering sheets of paper
in the air
falling like confetti to the ground
and then it rains
and everything is wet
drained
to the dirty canals of our cities
down, down to the
worst of our histories

i let go off these all,
i simply wait for another sun
and rainbow after the rain
things do not last anyway
the good and the bad end themselves
beauty and ugliness
sadness and happiness

then every hump levels up
there is the plain, and then the grass and then the gaze.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Item.....

building another house is diversionary tactic as life's sands fall slowly towards its drastic end.

your attention will be catched between this wall and that wall, that railing and another, from one stair to another, one room, a kitchen which by its tradition, gives you a sense of what a smoke is.
the scent of roasted meat, and removal of fish scales, and burnt wood, and rushing water from the pipe. And into the sale where you will put again the old pictures of those who already left you. perhaps, what is more divesting is the picture of a baby and the mother, beside it, a crib, a gun, and newspaper. Which of course leads you back, takes you back for all those well founded fears. You imagine where to put the cage of a parakeet, the music box, the rattler, the guitar, those dancing shoes, and the last one, which you keep by heart but which you can not tell for now.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Leaf Story

i did not agree with the last leaf painting on the wall last winter to keep love alive

i took the last leaf i simply want that you take your rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Option....

if you cannot be the sea try being an island and if being an island makes it worse (define loneliness)
try being a fish live in a coral leave, swim and be lost in all directions
if somehow you get tired of this freedom
try the prison of your own thoughts
live there like a book open the pages like a monk and wander like a word and if you want it better (define what is better) try being a syllable
or an atom or a positron be gone

if being tiny & lost or invisible makes you
miserable
or vulnerable
try being huge like a mountain
spread your feet to the plains
and be a wide world of your own making

you see, there is this will this willingness that if you really want it you can be everything but if you get tired of
everything (I've been there
i know it)
there is one last option that you can choose

you know it,
i shrug my shoulder
too,
it is that moment
when we embrace
nothing
its arms tight in
our bodies

perhaps that is the last option that we can take perhaps that is the only truth that we are.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Poem For Ramon

from a long trip
he arrived home
feverish,
he said he needed
rest
a very long rest in the ancestral house
of his father
where the trees are old and tall
where the air is refreshing
where the silence is abundant for he is tired
and wants to have his much needed rest

it was too late for him to know that he has stage 4
for lung cancer
for which he succumbed in his death bed yesterday morning
in the ancestral house of his father his home away from home now
away from wife
and his three children

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Poem Shall Tinker With Mood And Meaning silence silenced, and dreams dreamt, and the speaker that listens upon the beatings of his heart like a little drum inside his chest. it is this resounding. this re-echoing that like a spoon and knife to a porcelain plate tinkers with the meat and beans, segregating, and choosing little things in colors and smell, and swallowing some and throwing out the rest of what we like to have inside us. sorrow and pain. joy and bliss. yours and mine. you and i.

these are categories that we see and feel, and care and care less and choose.
we tinker with mood. we like always to choose, and discriminate, the spoon is a spoon and the fork is a fork.
and the knife that cuts, we are careful enough. There is meaning now.
Blood drops out from your veins, and some beans turn red. You cull out, what you want to believe. you leave and carry with you what is painless. That is as simple as that.

more or less, either/or. write the name of the person that you love. Burn those that hurt you. Close the door.
Open the window. See the sun. And let always the moon to kiss you by your window. It does not know what a door is.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Reminder....

soon he will write the happiest lines in his life
many times he dreams about it there was this pond hidden by shrubs and there the love of his life is bathing it is vague with mists and fog it is so beautiful that he does not want to wake up or even live his life again the most beautiful poem that he cannot even

name

because it is forbidden because he would be descending stairs throughout his lifetime because if he grabs that dream inside that dream castles will fall, roads erase themselves destinations become uncertain all his roots uprooted and there will be no more tree for him to mark his very own existence.

'it is an obligation' Life tells him.
You cannot just quite- -that is the rule.
Dreams are not real, that is basic.
There is hell, that is the last reminder.

RIC S. BASTASA
do not waste the last warmth of my hand
hold it with your hand
do not waste the last warmth
take it
it will only be for a while and then i ask you
to forget
let me not be your grief

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Scene Of Sorrow....

in extreme sorrow over your having departed me without an advance notice to make me prepare for a funeral i have chosen a corner, in fact, a dead end where no one goes out there, no opportunity for escape,

this is my art now
the repetitive utterances sounding like the waves of the sea at night when we sat at the port trying to figure out where the horizon ends as boats come again to rest with their big ropes again tied to their necks.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Season

i now welcome the last season it is not winter, it is the season of forgetting, and next to it is spring not really spring in the manner that flowers bloom again but it is the season for us who divided by a very distant silence shall begin a new journey alone, because we want to think some more without us together a pair of tracks, crossing a river a new slate of water erasing what we have gone through for we rise from the river and approach another plain it is the grass now that conceals what our feet tread upon it is the sound of softness that greenness of undiscovered ways

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Stage

a crooked line straightens itself finally with a beeping sound, not once, penetrating, traveling to an insistence, it is turned off. A sob from a little girl beside the bed. A punch on the wall of a man's fist. A white blanket covering a pair of eyes. Blankness.

a caravan of nomads, a camel a desert a dark night, full moon, a distant call and then sleep and silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Thing To Bring

nothing but love
still,
it is the last thing that i carry with me alone
to the other side of this river.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Trip

that was the last trip.
and there will be no more returning
we only try to imagine another set of surroundings there is no coffee here it is only a vision of us sipping away what was there
before

there is no more city nestling on the valley no more melodies of the savages, we are now on this last trip where there is no more
returning

be glad.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Wish

i have a wish
to make before you
leave
and it is this:

let the last word
be kind
and gentle.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Words Of Revenge

one day more
let us meet again.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last

enough is enough is enough

promises are made
to be broken

enough is enough is enough

however always without finality words are always words apart from what is done and undone as always looking for the perfect step of the dance in your mind looking for the perfect syllable to a poem of your dreams looking for the last mark the last metaphor which is not as always there the last note for my music the last flower of your spring.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Late Arrival Of The Promised Life

oH! LIIFE! Why so late?

death Has tolled
the Bell

and Toil's
a toilet bowl

and Hope's a Grasshopper

Ah Death
Dreadfully
damned.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Late Bloom Of Spring

the beginning of thought
is the
trap where the firefly
finds itself,

where you find a broken wing of a butterfly or that wasp, an empty nest of mud

hanging upon a twig

the last drop of rain and the fading sound of a tweeting until an ending becomes visible,

and this is where you start
to ponder

that end, that leaving.

it seems to me that death is a johnny-come-lately

then thinking is born, a late bloom new in spring.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Late Realization Of Eliezer

after so many failures despite all the hard work and so many tries on the promises of another day the assurances of hope and the salvos of

no retreat
no surrender

Eliezer still flunks and falls down to the bottom of the floors of disappointments no sooner did he realize when he gave up everything (to include his precious life) that his only purpose in life was only to praise God

His Creator

RIC S. BASTASA
The Latest Fear Of Silence

someday you may ask
'how come you have always something to say?' as though you have always wished that for a moment
i should have been silent or say nothing about this world anymore

about you
about the coldness of your arm and mine

' i have always something to say to this world'

in my silence that i have compromised with you i could have said that deep within my soul there is a place without trees and shores there are no leaves that fall and cover my rugged land no breeze to appease my emptied wells

or i could have simply told you that silence can kill me that without the noise and my voice i could have already been lost in the void that my only link to this world is a word
so many of them
and they wall me out from the eternal threat of
an empty space
a meaningless vacuum that has sucked many souls into oblivion

RIC S. BASTASA
The Latest Of Summer

the tree
is set for another fashion show this latest of
summer

apple green sleeves
rusty brown trunks
a crown of stars
lace from her twigs and branches
flowing to the river

RIC S. BASTASA
The Latest Word From You

oh yes, i agree, when one gets too much love when one gives more than too much of that love, one gets crazy
one gets to do all the crazy things splitting hairs spreading legs
open arms
narrow mind
blind eyes
traveling fingers
wet lips silent teeth
trembling heart
ballet of emotions unbalanced arms
body no longer in symphony with the soul

a trip
you trip and fall and then what?

tears and tears
and sobs and gritting tooth after so much glory comes the death and then wait
comes along what we need most the redemption
of what died
the moving on
of what wants to cease and stop and annihilate

buds and flowers again
silent summer
soothing breeze whispering winds
to love again
without looking at the eyes of regrets

RIC S. BASTASA
The Law Classes

when the semester opens i usually create a bing bang to those who come wanting to be lawyers, telling them that the study of law is not that easy, in fact, an eternal damnation,
for laws are made by man and man changes laws everytime he wants to sneeze.

and they think i am bluffing testing their capacity for endurance, like Louise, i tell them the story of sisyphus, how he pushes the stone meaninglessly
on top of the mountain, and repeats the acts with diligent efforts, though there seems to be no reward at the end,

but how can they ever believe me when lawyers at every bend ride in flashy cars and live in luxury
smoke the best cigars and take most of the money well respected in the highest echelons of political society, and i tell then again to do their best, whatever that be,

when the class is dismissed, they all laugh & tell themselves what is there in law that should consume them, when laws are not really well studied or applied and only ten percent shall be faithfully used or followed at the end, to succeed,
they say,
law is set aside,
what challenges them more
perhaps
is the subtle art of lying,
without blinking an eye for truth, a kind of
projection,
image packaging,
psywars,
knowing the gods,
the art of pulling stings and fidelity to networks

pointing
where Zeus lives,
and knowing fully well
what thunderbolts to use, integrity? principle?

honesty?
they all laugh again,
you cannot eat them

just lick them.

and so, i tell them again next meeting, that
sisyphus
is nothing but just a myth, forget it, meanwhile the oral recitation shall start
and there they are
their heads fuming
like mad
monsters..

RIC S. BASTASA
The Law Of Closure

day you did not say anything

ing the veranda got no messages where you are and what you are doing response and silence is deep and sinister you do not have to say it doors half-open and i am here to completely close it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Law Of Nature

the tree is not here to please us, that will be too much to require it it is already too pleasing with its shade and fruits and wood we are trying to make it understand it cannot, with or without us the tree simply unloads what it cannot keep forever it is the law of nature embedded in its barks and pith
to simply give and not us why to be all self-giving without asking anything in return

RIC S. BASTASA
The Law Of Nature Has No Mercy

those who swatted a fly gathered eggs of birds torn a wing of the butterfly bit a bee, clawed a cow, those who scared the crow belted a bull, flagged a fluke be aware that the law of nature has no mercy
you shall be punished and swatted too, and torn and bitten, and clawed, and scared, and belted, and flagged to death,
you burned the grass
you shall be burned and you shall die under the merciless law of nature

you shall perish but the earth has become green again the trees shall be trees again to embrace another forest the rivers become rivers the sea shall be the old sea again boundless, wide, and mysterious for the earth shall remain and those that abused it shall perish forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Law Of The Few

too many speakers and few of the doers
too many workers
less of the thinkers
too many visions
so few implemented
so many men and women yet few are human.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Law That Keeps You Intact

he shall betray you and you know it he is fed up with what you are not but he shall keep you, not because love is there on that nest of being together it is the law that keeps things in tact and with full maturity, neither love nor hate can tear what is interwoven you are there with a headdress and he is there with his pipe on his mouth smoke rises in the air continuously

inside that frame of nothing but black and white

RIC S. BASTASA
The Law.....

the law is the mold
where we are supposed to take shape as though we are water or air and it is the vessel, and the vessel after we have been shaped to its likeness

from its mouth tries to tell the world that here we are happily married to the prescribed form all, uniform, all so cruelly shaped to the likeness of everyone and those who complained about the pain is met by the adage at the gate dura lex, sed lex

dura lex, sed lex.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Laws Of Change

i is no you,
there is no me in the permanence of the firmaments. there is only the law of constant look into my eyes everyday, the ripples are not the same yesterday.
some fish live there in different colors and you think of rainbows. feel the beat of my heart. move closer and make your palms be like sensors of my pains and joys. i change. yesterday moves out like dusk turning to light in the morning window. drapes are removed, and new ones are put on and no, they are not the same hands, not you, it is today's face that faces me and i am always on the look out for the signs.
your child today may be tomorrow's monster that kills your kindness today may soon transform to indifference, to hate, life shuts off in any moment like a switch and you lay in your bed feeling for once, this is another day, another me, another tired body, another soul chanting, about an end about a beginning about this cycles without seemingly any visible crack of light for escape.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Laws Of Life.....

the laws of life
are more than traffic signs go jaywalking
you get fined.

over-speeding
you crash upon death
your calendar
ends

what more is the law of
life?
the price of greed
the consequences of promiscuity
the guilt of cheating
the damnation of abomination

the Furies know how to chase
an outlaw
that circular chase inside the mind that gives you no place to run

in the living of the life of the law one is safe protected and confident there is tomorrow that waits

and promises
that when you are free and harms no neighbor
befriends the earth and
the sea
worships the sun and moon adores the beauty of nature and communes with its rivers and valleys

and with a grateful heart to all these creations

the Creator looks upon you with pride
because you are its glory the center of its universal divinity

RIC S. BASTASA
The Laws That Man Made On Earth

the laws that man made on earth are like sandcastles. and the men who made them are like children playing on the beach one summer's day. each hand takes a mouthful of sand and forms the minarets and walls and doors of the castle. A path for their prince. A stable for their horses. A special chamber for the king and queen. A training ground for their warriors and soldiers to protect them. A court for their counsels and judges. Every structure geared to protect self-interest.

the laws and sandcastles. The men who made them are the children on the beach. And here comes God the Big Wave, and in an instant, on a single wash of its mighty hand, or tongue, or cape, all these laws are washed away.

Then the afternoon comes. The sun sets. The children go home and sleep.

Tomorrow is another play. Another game. Another sandcastles. Nearby the waves keep looking.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lawyer And Artist Rolled Into One....

i'd say it will not be confusing

neither tiresome to swing from left to right to and fro, back and forth, poetry to law

mathematics to language art to reality

it will not be taxing nay, to a man of all whims and practical caprice

there will be pleasure and feasts and
adventure....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lawyer Is Under Fire...

let it be
rationalize justify what you have chosen

but at first
there is always that decision

to choose: for whom? what for?
why?

you were bashed
you look like an addict you sound like a used-car agent then you tell them it is nothing personal this is professional work he is the client and he must not be refused pursuant to the oath

now you are wriggling into that hot oil
inside the pan below you

fire.

RIC S. BASTASA
she lies there in the living room on that sofa, herself swells, and her husband says she is another hopeless case in whispers seeing to it that she does not hear any word
about being hopeless, but i think she knows it, she is not dumb after all that all these are obvious enough herself does not feel anything now herself speak a lot but her mouth does not release a word herself tongue coils inside her cheek the room is filled with the smell of death urine, fecal matter, i say a prayer for her repose.

the images of a woman playing tennis during saturday mornings in sneakers, drinking wine with her husband at the veranda a lawyer fed up with life's drama their children have lives of their own
and soon
he will be facing life all alone when she finally closes her eyes to see another world before her
closed eyes

saturdays will never be the same again but he is strong, he will always be strong he will have another defense... it is too painful an image to see and so i shifted my gaze to the durian tree lush leaves, strong branches, and fruitless

The Layers Of My Existence

peel me, not like an onion where you shall cry for every layer, no, i do not require tears here, at most, you may need only to smile, and then be so patient, as you peel me layer by layer, as i watch, and as you carefully peel me with your bare hands, i will allow it, all for you and your curiousity, you discover the erotic layer and in there exists the desire for an adventure, the disregarding of sin, and then peel me further move on,

find the layer of my intellect, you shall find what i have told you all about, my nerves and common sense, my strivings to go deeper towards my self, and then peel me further, you see the bone of my contentions, my hardened principles and uncompromises then peel me further, find the marrow that makes all the blood of my life, my sorrows and pains, my exhilarations and bliss and joys and happiness, and you will say there is nothing more to find.

you are wrong. There is this last peel that you cannot see. It is like air, and it floats and it gets in, it always finds an empty space, and you cannot find it there anymore, it is now inside you and you cannot get that out of your system you must accept this:

i have become an essential part of you, and there is nothing now that you can do.

you see, in peeling me, you find no exit anymore. Whether you you will be happy or sad, it is already beyond my control.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Leaf And The Tree And The Roots

if i had to write it again then i had to, as i must let you fully understand the true nature of a vine

the way the leaf swerves with the wind to give itself to a fateful fall, the one that completes its existence as a leaf to a tree, a part of a whole, the way it must settle on the ground and be with the worms and rot and fulfills the cycle of its short existence, and by then it tells the roots, i am a leaf i am back and you must now eat everything in me so i can be with the bark again so i can be a leaf again to a tree that holds me back and then for another time lets me fall again.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Leaking Roof

it is raining and here i am stuck under the roof of a deserted house the windows are open nobody has come to close four windows looking to the street like an insomniac, the door is creaky like a sore throat sounding like an incurable allergic sneeze the crazy wind bangs it from time to time and i do not mind the routine of noise for a while a walk to and fro like i am making a picket observing the details of how a deserted house can look like or feel like: there seems to be a growling silence abbreviating itself like a scream cut short by my hands kept inside my pocket i look up and see the leaking roof making a rhythm of the dripping beat of this poem.

i have nothing in mind, i am empty and emptying still. I take in so much quantity of silence, the weight of thoughts, the silly purposeless probe of what i am suppose to be and where i must be going after this temporariness of loafing.

The rain stops. I am leaving.
The rhythm ceases.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Leaking Roof....

there is no use
repairing the leak of the roof
of this
house

it is raining
let it rain let the water wet this floor and the furniture

let us wait when will this dark night
end
when this heavy rain shall stop on the same leak we shall see the light that falls on those wet floors and furniture

it will show us the truth and shall guide us what to do next

RIC S. BASTASA
The Leaking Roof........

after the rain
drops from the leaking
roof
to the floor
as i lay sleepless was  mesmerizing

and i remember
that old love poem which i sent you
years ago.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Least You Expect It

it is at the time when you least expect it that things happen in your life that people come to you for help.

bad luck, and events come bringing you all the regrets.

mosquitoes and ants, and termites, and snakes...

imagine, butterflies and birds and bees and flowers.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Leaves Of The Mango Tree

from my window
the mango tree stands
tall

proud about the fruits last harvest

now is the rainy day and fungus start growing on its bark

then the falls
for the dying season
start to fall

i watch some of them
falling
as the wind begins to blow stronger

there is this leaf
that falls flip flopping carried by the wind to the other side of the fence and i can't help but begin to think about you too

RIC S. BASTASA
The Leaves Of This Tree Speak To The Top Of Their Voices As Clouds Drift Dumb And Deaf.

i do not
wonder why jason likes a bukowski goldfish

his smile is not the smile of henry's mother

i guess he is a happy and contented cow with all the grasses spreading on the backyard of his own
house

something creep within me and i now wonder why a man like jason would like a bukowski goldfish

never mind
i give him the benefit of the doubt that his life is not miserable that he did not have a battered mother that he once had a happy childhood that he did not have a father whom he could hate throughout his life and whom he could have wished he killed himself

i lied
i wonder why he liked a bukowski goldfish

i know his mother and father and i have a copy of his mental state

all eyes gaze on emptiness as life goes on with jason and the bukowski goldfish poetry has roots and the leaves of this tree speak to the top of their voices as clouds drift

dumb and deaf.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Left And The Right

the left and the right
they learn to co-exist numbers and words
poetry and prose mediocrity and seriousness money and love passions and reservations
the flowers and the bees
i am making a balance of the yin and the yang the crowd and solitude heaven and hell.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lemon

there is no alcohol in my lemon juice
if you are sensitive enough you could have noticed that this poem
is sour

there is nothing that levitates in here

nothing drifts
there is no image of a leaf floating in air

it is trying to refresh the heart of summer trying to recall the flowers all wilting
along the paths of dead desires.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lesbian Couple

four years
they have been together in one house
and they mingle socially in the neighborhood without much ado.

life is an experiment love is the answer
could be the motto
of the two

i have suspicions sometimes one has the money and the other doesn't have any.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lesbian Philosophy Teacher

i guess it does not really matter whether she is a lesbian or not at the university she teaches the philosophy of man and she ticks, bites, slashes, and rubs our minds with the sharp knife of her understanding as to who we are, what we are and what we are apt to this becoming of being crawls from her very tongue the one that she uses to make love love, to make love work in an age of hatred and war her fingers are gentle and i know how they are used to make her lover feel the love that much often real men deny her outside the doors of the university she lets out smoke and somehow she exits regrets that pleasure and its extremes can be obtained not inside the book at the libraries of this world but in the intimacies inside her locked room with someone whose name she cannot even reveal for fear of reprisals she has to earn her bread to live
and at the same time
make her life a secret rose a tight bud, a falling leaf a twisted twig, a hidden island.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lesson Learned

i have traveled so far
away

but i dare not ask myself
why

what am i looking for?

i know what i lack
i have mastered so well what i need

i have drawn in my heart what may satisfy me and make me silent

i can grab it from you and from someone else

but what is the use?

i have traveled so far
communed with the hills rushed with the rivers and make ends with the sea

i have come back to tell you that i am humbled

by what i have done
the past has told me what i must hear

and so here i am
giving up what i need
saying
i do not need anything

i have volunteered myself for more sacrifices and my heart is teaching me what real wisdom is it is not getting what i want it is giving what i can...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Letter M For M.

all letters to me when i was that smart and strong and adventurous are the same, not even meant to be read, i mean, some letters are but objects of another sound all sounding monotonous, until i met you, the letter m too small at first had become capitalized for me
day and night,
perhaps even for the last days of my life, a secret which you and i only know, inside a word the letter m becomes a divine thing, occupying the seat of god, and i let it be,
i flow with it, tasting its delicate flavor, which i only keep to myself with you.

too late for me to think that you are destroying me without malice, or intent, and so i set it aside
for a while for me to escape from the dungeon of illusion.

i have to choose between the depth blue sea and the devil, and i perfectly understand it, and i do not utter a syllable or a word, to clear my mind
from you,

your helplessness is my liability.
my education has become my Achilles' heel
but i made an oath,
i shall not be taken away i shall not be overwhelmed with love and its mistakes
i keep my tongue.

you are the sky,
i must remain on earth.
let this division be
clear
there shall be no
ocean in between.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Letter Y

thy letter y is messy
y is smelly
fishy

y?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Liars....

those who lied
you know
can never face the light arriving

instead of seeing well they get blinded...

=================================
kadton mga bakakon
sayod ka
dili gayod kaharong sa moabot nga kahayag

imbis makakita
mabutaan...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Liberating Truth...

to write the truth
takes a lot of courage

could be that you dance naked on the dance floor before the drunkards and the killer and rapist gang so you try to write something nearer to it, in exchange for self-esteem or fulfillment as mandated by the gods the truth is harsh, much worse, hurting, but it can be told in the most artistic way, to make it sweet sounding, a little melody a little shade, brighter hues, with all the metaphors of sunshine and showers of July rain....

at night you are at this ritual again staring at the ceiling wishing there are stars, trying to figure out the right map towards your liberation.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lie Or The Truth?

she'd rather have the lie that makes her live even for a moment
than have a truth
that kills....

life is still beautiful she preaches

and whether you like it or not that is a big lie....

take it,
you have no choice

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lie....

i steal
a look at you
that is all that i have done
against you

love has spoken
i remain
as silent
as a turtle
on those pebbles

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lies That We Silently Preach

brace yourself to all these lies
for in the next room at the next door
and at the next window and at the next open porch after all these lies may be truths and you are no longer willing to believe them because they too know how to hurt you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lies That You Must Keep On Telling

if i were you
since you really love her that much do not tell the truth

do not hurt her with your truth
keep the lie alive
to make her happy

if i were you
caught in the act of betrayal i should have told her i thought it was you
i really thought it was you forgive my indiscretion tell her,

it was me who was seduced i never kissed her she kissed me

and since she loves you still she delights upon your lies and imagines all her life that it was the fault of the other woman

(whom you love much truly than the fat, ugly one)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lies We Make When We Lie For A Night Together

seeing you makes me full and i am reminded of my utter helplessness in my emptiness and then i long to touch you and be with you for the whole of my short lifetime i put my trust in my blind fingers i shut my light out i betrayed my eyes i have flowed with my heart but this will only be for a while a day perhaps or just a night for i too, know how to wake up and then be wise i may call you love and deny myself that wisdom but i know where i stand and where i hide and where i die and where i live as i know hellos i also learned a lot from those goodbyes so lie with me

i have no words for now lie with me

when you speak i put my ring finger to your lips i bid you say no more lies for me i understand how a night can be a gem how it can be fake

i tell you i know what food is good for me what is delicious and what kills me come lie with me only for tonight tomorrow morning

please don't bother same with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Life Of A Thinker

you do not know how is it to live as a thinker literature has portrayed an old man to this art long white beard, silver hair unkempt baths sacrificed for the constant write hands on the paper before him dawn and night and day nothing matters really now except those thoughts heaps and heaps of books and files of papers abounding the room and wall practically all not just pulp but binders and paper clips as well outside him the world changes seasons keep on changing light and darkness exchanged vows the journey is about to end he knows where he is a place where time is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Life Of Poets

the poet
finally lost his job
the price of oil
went low another one had to quit his post
the working conditions
have become unbearable

ars poetica
what now?

spread your wings save them

fly higher save us

another poet
dies in gruesome murder
shot by the bullets paid by him
with this government

those who know
the ways of the fox
still sing with the Crown

black and white
meek and scheming
just like everyone
else

poems scatter.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Life Of The Christian.....

in real life what we say is what it is, there

is simply no plan
to a song or order since we have no control about how reality moves and
where it is going,

this is the place
where we cannot say no, or if you say yes, or whatever, for it does not really matter,

things happen, and you sometimes do not like it, so you mourn, you scream, you drop on the ground and cry, others who have already adjusted themselves to the songs of life

simply live, and live and live, and live

they wish to die but just can't...

a few have entrusted their fate to faith sailed on their lives and look happy, just,
that, just that.
The Life Of Touch And Go....

this is a random way
of living
like the way you write a poem
upon a
constricted frame of mind when time is raw and thin like an expensive salmon sashimi upon a platter of white fragile
porcelain from nagasaki

this is touch and go this is the rule of harshness the law is the law no matter how harsh the circumstances have become

when you look at the lines again some words are misspelled but there is no more time and you let that stay

this is the random way of living
let the wrongs live for themselves if they grow then they grow you have a journey to fulfill and the road is as endless as a number leave the dead behind let them bury themselves let those who know you forget leave the world it is here and it was here even before you have become another seed go my friend, sail on, another boat is waiting The Life That's More Real ... Here It's ....

before you arrive there on that valley
you think that everything will be smooth no creases, no cuts, nothing about dirty paths or gardens of silence fruitless trees, brown grasses waterless spots,
no dew
at dawn

one who is real somehow begins to accept
all these: expectations tumbling down a life drawn with crooked lines people are nothing but shadows without faces hopes smothered like crumpled babies a life that you never once imagined papers burning themselves poems that scream instead of sing
birds that crawl though gifted with complete wings a twisted world a dusty room
books without pages
toothless stairs Styrofoam rails paths with pebbles
and thorns
roses that wilt as buds

the people that you trust
and love
they all lied.
The Life We Still Live....

you know very well that when i betray you i also kill myself, so why should i do it?

i still like to live
the live we have.

somehow i will test the deep waters not with my two feet.
i have not declared myself foolish like the rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Life You Live.......

a poem can simply be descriptive

fog and mountains and trails
and rain and grasses and
some spotted cows inside those fences

life, our lives,
in simplicity,
can also be just descriptive

nothing to do much to change it
nothing much to be done to make it great
hoping that
statutes be erected so that we can be remembered
from here to perhaps eternity

which is not really the case, a sad truth which most kings
and gods
cannot accept,

you live as a spectator only writing what you felt and
saw
nothing about any judgments at
all

you have become
a phenomenologist
in your own right
a matter of
passive philosophizing until you reach the ending part of your life

not having known
yourself
not having known who you really are
and what you are supposed to do
who created you what meaning is there what purpose to serve what mission to accomplish

well, nothing is wasted. no one really knows what is best
what is true
what is good

in the safest place
of your home
those who live
shall bury you....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Light At The End Of The Tunnel....

to each his own
light
its own tunnel
its own
end

RIC S. BASTASA
The Light From The Shutters....

do not say a word
write it.

do not disturb the silence of the corridors

when light comes in trickles from the shutters of your window stand still.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Light House Stands Tall In An Island to storms that we can do nothing about the light house stands proud

tall and unchallenged on a beacon of
light
it tells the world

the storms have not bent my light
the mists are not enough to conceal it when i save lives
and ships
no one owes to thank
me

RIC S. BASTASA
The Light Of The Star Embedded Deep In My Mind

its flicker
magical
it sings
a star sings
inside my mind
embedded a star
like the flicker of the
mind
sparks of thoughts ideas of
the mind
flickering
thinking star inside
the mind
embedded singing
star of the minds
thought sparkling sparks kindling
the mind flickering
star thinking of the mind inside
embedded singing
star sparkling
flicker sparks of the mind
thoughts
so alive
open fire
fire open in the sparks
of the mind
embedded star

all mixed up chant chant
coming back
sparks light star singing
The Light That He Was Talking About

IT takes me months to realize that it was him who saw the
light,

HE stayed inside
the cubicles of his wisdom I strayed
from the doors of my prison
I chose to become a blue butterfly
fluttering my blue wings
in the garden
of love (and lust as he sees
it)
I have chosen
a short span,
this perceived quality
of a life
well lived in the beauty of my errors,
my truths,
my altruistic feeling that i have done what i must do

They that command me have found
the uselessness of their mandatory lists of what not what ifs
what musts.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Light Without A Switch Off

one best thing is this:
we write from the bottom of our hearts,
guessing that perhaps this is what others feel too.

we simply describe our state of mind, in the most simple way understandable by that common man on the street a fish vendor if he reads that we are feeling like rotten fish if you tell him, how rotten fish smells and what a wasted feeling is it when it is there unsold look at his face? make him understand that we are all vendors of our feelings, that our feelings sometimes do not sell, he will understand that, everything is classified as a commercial act writing, speaking, wooing, what a humiliation of what we really are hawkers of beliefs, ambulant chasers of emotions what a demeaning purpose, this must stop, it is not real, it is a prostitution of our

faith,

we write from the bottom of our hearts and you feel it, that is why you are following the sounds of drums
at the center of the island where we grow a bonfire, where smoke rises to the sky where evenings become so lighted, where dance assumes true meaning our shadows are pure, our bodies own them and the moon at night makes them all alive you are telling me that this fire is invisible and it has not switch for you to put it off.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lighter Side Of Life

do you still remember chasing the bagel up and down the city street? You were so light with that red umbrella and you have become another Mary Poppins flying with the wind hope you can still recall going inside a room and then seeing a vase of red roses early morning against a cathedral window which let in the spectrum of light as though they are the shades of your dreams fulfilled?

It is bliss. Nothing about money or career.
It is the appearance of lightheartedness.
The lightness of being which elevates us to the category of fog, or cloud drifting and staying for a while on top of a cliff overlooking some cars speeding up upon a road still wet with the morning rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lighter Side Of Things

it happens when there are no attachments when you sleep in a room and you leave
early morning
you leave a trace of the scent
of your body
and you pack all your things again you walk fast to another destination
you think of other things those that do not sink you nothing metallic
at all
just the soft cotton side of life a feather thin air on the mountain top distant little towns below and the wide sea at the horizon clouds hover
fog reside temporarily mists come and everything just leaves away
when the sun
gets in over the shutters of your window you dabble on a far sighted view these things
do not settle you
you float on them
on the wings of the winds
silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lightness Of Being...

unloading,
this is the plan
book-less is the bookworm in school empty handed she wants to be as light as a spider's web
as slick and thin as the tick's feet sliding on one of the bristles of the Persian carpet

unloading
she slips through the crowd in anonymity
one grain of sand in the shores
of the common man

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lightness Of The Useless Wings....

a butterfly
what for you ask?
something
that you cannot fry
and eat
what use is this fluttering
soul?
these fragile wings
this
floater?

find the value of
something
when you do nothing but just watch

write that feeling.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Likeness.....

THE MIRROR
limits what we are there is no shadow
behind us only the face and the likeness of it
flat and staring
and clear.

THERE IS
another face at the back of our mind opaque
silent
and deep seated sockets
and wavy eyelashes
and well kept hair
and smooth skin
and glowing

WE HAVE NOT seen much of it

But we shall always feel it
yes,
at the back of our minds wanting to find us.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lily In Your Mind (For Susan)

be thankful that it was quick love suddenly skinned out from your bosom like a vaccine injection and then you realize everything is gone like a wink and then what you see is an empty room a bed without a shadow of a man against the moon on an open window i do not send flowers nor cards they cannot help drown the grief i leave you alone with the memories of the lilies white lilies and soft winds caressing your hair one night sleep now Susan, dream some more, do not wake up early tomorrow comes and you must know another name

soon.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Limbo

i see her putting the left side of her face flat on the working table she must have been tire of life but i cannot blame her or she may just have been trying to recover the pieces of her lost self which i may admire like the way how broken people pick up the pieces and assemble a new courageous self ready for the next morning of their lives and i see her with closed eyes in the middle of the rush hours lost in sleep

and no one minds, or if they notice, they care by just ignoring what is this all about i leave the place where she is asleep i do not want to be there again, that old self weary of its own cares, once unable to move on awakened by shock, and finally regaining hold for life is meant to be lived, never sleep, never let this limbo take what you are not.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Limitations Of The Body...

sometimes i forget that i have a body it is only when i eat that i remember i have one but most of the times

i am full and so i almost forget all about this body i am feeding it with wrong things ideas, more ideas, i am covering it with mysteries that it cannot relate because a body is just a body earthly, mundane

clay,
stick, creepy
skin, hair
sunken eyes,
trembling hands

it is flesh, bones, cartilages,
and

nerves, and when all these nerves take revenge on me i shall finally lose this body which i welcome somehow because i have not experienced it yet fully

i live in the mind, my castle is in my imagination, and i eat nothing for the day but words and i drink nothing for the day but ink and i touch nothing for the day but keys

the body is forgotten and so are my chains, my prisons, my
dark rooms,
my body, this fetter,
this
ball and chain that hold me in hunger and pain and thirst and
constant urination,
disturbing
defecation

sometimes i like to become nothing but air so you cannot see me anymore so i can go places and be lost forever because i am not this body, and i do not want to be caught in here

a little longer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lingering Concerns

some books open up
and show their pages like tongues
and you watch them
as you begin
to salivate like a
mad dog,
there is nothing new in
there
except the ears and the words that dissolve too in a distance
those that you like to go back again
and grapple with or perhaps even embrace and shed tears again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Literal Pain

with due respect to poetry
let me set aside
you,
to the comfort of
your rhyme,
let me try prose this
time
so i can make my point
clear,
dearly beloved,
let me confess to you
my enduring
pains, my inviolate resolve
to go away far from all that is
sweet and adorable, let me bleed this time in the most accurate description of a narrative
dearly beloved,
now you must understand that pain
is not
a metaphor,
it is literal,
it is real.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Bird That Was Eaten By The Hungry Cat

it is alright now you feel freedom too in such a very short,
delicate moment setting a little bird
free
from the hold of your
hands

it is hopping still unable to fly and from such short distance between you
and it
you see this hungry cat snapping it from the grass
taking its lifeless body towards the alley

you regret
you have miscalculated the need for freedom

by analogy
you have miscalculated
you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Black Bird And The Wooden Railing

it is a black bird with a shade of red on its upper wing that perches on the wooden beam cracking under the sun last summer

below the beam are the tall reeds i forget whether it was the black bird or the tall reeds
which was singing

but i am sure i heard a song so sad like a dying note from the throat of a mad man.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Black Bird: A Poem For The Other Woman

the little black bird go home in a cave
just below her belly
between her legs

it sings about love that she always kills
for nothing

before midnight the blackbird flies
seeking the warmth of other blackbirds
it is cold and
dying
in her keeping

now she sings alone
like a blackbird cursing
the trees and the flowers

she wants to disown the
blackbird
in exchange for the earthworm

she likes it that way
wriggling
without any feet at all pointed and penetrating

the curse continues it can never be hers
and the blackbird
keeps coming back mocking her like
an old man

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Blue Bird

do not feel
the importance of you
hands,
the blue bird has always ready wings
to fly on the right season
you may think
that it cannot survive

you are wrong
the wings know where their home is.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Boy And The Father

the little boy cannot understand why papa is not buying him toys, when he grows up he will ask his papa where did he really come from

was it from the slit of the giant bamboo?
he will not cry
he had knows suffering since then soon he will doubt what fathers are whether his papa comes from the womb of a boar because he had been so cruel time fills the gaps assures that the wrongs are forgivable a man rises from the head of the little boy all questions are wilted flowers for soon he shall start his own journey with another woman to his mind he will never be like that man from the womb of the boar and he will have his own images, his children and kin the cycle repeats itself there will be little boys who will doubt where their papas come from and they will utter the word boars in their hearts and papas die and memories crawl like vines looking for water and the world shall weep and soon shall be keen observing what silence had been what screams are whose faces are scarred whose limbs survive

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Boy In My Hometown

a little boy
finds the house too crowded his father beats his mother in the kitchen where fish is grilled

his sisters pull each other's hair
in the living room where he wants
to read

his brother breaks the chair and throws plates over the window
when no money is given

it is like the house is always on fire
and there is not even a pail of water

and so the little boy
wants to run away

but there is no other
place
as the town is also too crowded for itself

people are shouting and beating each other

the park is neither a peaceful place to stay as bullies too
overcrowd there

and so the little boy
climbs a tree and
finally
finds a very cool place to pray.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Brown Boy From Luyuran

he is the eldest of four age is 7
he quit school

his mother is a drunkard and lives with another man in the village

his father is killed by the lover of her mother

that early morning
four of them are fetched to live with his grandma

they buried his father and his mother
is nowhere to be found

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Brown Girl In Estaka

as early as six a.m.
this little girl who stays in the house of a stranger
faraway from her family as she eats her morning porridge when a fly perhaps too hungry like her landed on the hot and moist

side of the plate and the only conclusion she arrives at is:

this fly also wants to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Cycle Of The Flower And The Caterpillar

the flower may curse the caterpillar at first glance consuming its leaves greedily
rushing for the next stage of its life

then the silence of the cocoon where the flower
doubts

and then the excitement of the birth of the yellow butterfly

the hope of the flower
and when
the flying begins
the flower unfolds
blooms

and the consortium begins the nectar flows

and the flower
turns into another fruit
back
to its seed form as the butterfly nears its span
like a glimpse

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Girl In The Middle Of The River

she is looking at us passing by the river
she has no fear

she is attuned
to her mother's beatings her father's fists

that little girl in the middle of the river stares at us simply passing by on a wooden boat she does not know what sympathy is or even pity she does not know what happens when finally she jumps from the raft to the depths of the river she does not know what death is where she will go

she does not call for help even in pain
she does not know what it is to call for help

we never taught her what sympathy is what help is

we just left her as she stares at us and we merely passed by her

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Girl With Curly Hair

there is this little girl with black curly hair flat nose, thin eyelashes, wavy goatish eyelids, sitting on a bamboo pole (the common furniture there) with bare hands and bare feet staring at me, for I am new here and I have a big tummy and I am white skinned, and I have candied inside my pockets, she knows that soon I will throw all these candies in the air for all the other children but there is something strange about this little brown girl with curly hair sitting all alone on that bamboo chair

her father and mother were killed in the last rebellion.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Girls On The Road Waiting For The Bus To Bring Them To School on their green uniforms and red hats

to what shall i compare them three to be like?

i remember my wife's nasturtiums. Very pretty.
their smiles
like the tiny leaves.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Shy Grass Along Your Path

the little shy grass along the path the one with thorns and hairy leaves stepped upon by the hoofs of cows and carabaos and goats and pigs has taken the patience and courage to grow three red flowers on its branch as i see them bloom under the hot sun the shy little grass has a word for you:

the three lovely red flowers are for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Talk

it is the lull
of the night
that little talk
about
a silly thing

nothing heavy everything light
and senseless
	night passes us by we are its little things
its tiny thoughts

we too are the passers-by
the night our silly friend

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Things That Make My Teeth Clean

Of course, the champion is the toothpick Always the wooden, bamboo toothpick Or could be the fine dental floss But I always need a mirror to use that And eventually I find it more expensive And time consuming

And then I can have a little twig Of guava,
I like the odor and I have the Last chew and
Oh my
I can chew the same and swallow

But without the toothpick or the floss And when I am in a bus and there is No guava tree

I simply have my tongue and the Nail helping it to get rid

Of
You know what.

Life is like that.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Littly Irony About Love

he always keeps the line bold and drawn between their two intimate bodies no matter how near there is always kept the distance of a certain space that gives him the comfort of his own mystery in this anonymity of feelings like some cover of a nut that is hard and thick
the other knows this of course but keeps his mouth shut
she likes it that way
the mystery of love dressed in husks and shell
hard so hard outside but soft and meaty inside milky when grated and squeezed like coconut

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lizard

there is this friendship between this lizard
and me,
one day it lands on my nape
and crawls on its cold tiny feet on my nape
to my head and stays as my watcher
on my hair
and then i slept so tight forgetting about everything sad
and depressing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loan

what you do is always a form of a loan after a certain time the collector comes and reminds you of the capital and the interest and the corresponding penalties for every delay,

if you do well enough you shall get all the incentives and the loan shall even be forgotten and if there be penalties the same are condoned.

what you are is a capital your body is the medium, the bridge where you walk upon time is of the essence to all these transactions to some extent there will always be unfinished businesses but the owner of the sky and the mountains & the seas the owner of your body and your soul

knows everything

he tells you
time is up
then
he lets you see a candle that is about to consume its wax the fading light

and then the darkness that you have been familiarized with but do not lose hope the end of the tunnel is true the light at the end is never false.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Logical And Relevant Professor

How can you explain
The sure serenity of a silent shadow, The malevolence of maleness
The expenses of expectations The fairness of pain?

We think of those hidden in White winters, and those appearing Blueness in blue skies, or just Plain jealousy of the seasons, Strummed and stung
by reason dung

We blow all those soap bubbles Off to the sky

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lone Dissenter

he stands firm
his mouth is an inch away from the microphone his words of dissent reach the roof
and he sees pigeons
free from their cages he wants to tell them all about these white birds but the audience whose faces are serious like lockers only see bats and crows the lights went off and he finds himself all alone in the silence of his darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loneliness Amidst Everyone...

at night he comes home he is sleepy driving his car the classical music on somehow the angels set him away from malignant collisions he has more things to do ah, these unfinished businesses when he arrives home as usual he is alone and feels like is simply dramatizing his unique situation

alone in the middle of everyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loneliness In You...

a lonely soul
speaks
the sweetest

like a bird
that you trapped
with the sap
of the jack fruit tree

now caged
inside your
mind

so must you
sing now

shy away from prose
onward

the language of the music of
your soul

how lonely must it be but how sweetest

so must you speak no more
about where you are and when and
why

you are what you are now oh! lonely self

speaking with the silence of the deepest ocean

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loneliness Of A Fisherman Of Ideas....

you fish at night
the moon is fading

it is when the night is so dark
that you see the realities of fish

squids having neon lights around its body
a school of fish appears like a diamond
city

you fish alone in the deepest part of the ocean where all the stars have all gone into hiding

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loneliness Of A Homecoming

the man older than me (by 20 years) writes about his going back home (after 30 years of working in the U.S.) AND he was talking about
changes: the old house where he spent his childhood was demolished giving way to a new
mall,
the creek was reclaimed for an italian restaurant the park is still there dotting with the younger generation who cannot recognize him neither him knowing them he is a stranger now in his hometown

all his friends are gone some dead
some went away to find greener pastures abroad

canada, new zealand
dubai, malaysia

others have gone underground wanted rebels of the system

he is practically alone now perhaps regretting why he came back

what made him do that?

he has no home now, he has no country, no people.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loneliness Of The Untiring Writer

with equanimity i write for this audience, deaf,

blind,
mute,

....imagine some monkeys and rats, and worms and squirrels mute, blind, deaf,

i have no regret at all,

their hearts are bigger than the islands of paradise, the mute claps with three hundred hands, the blind sings with all the angelic voices in tens of hundreds the deaf dances like some kind of a wiggling worm vitally replicating its numbers geometrically there is still this wanting to be caught by a hungry

black bird

it is the silence of the mute that speaks so loudly like a speaker of the house, it is the restlessness of the deaf that shakes me, and i tremble like a cymbal clanging ceaselessly the chants of the blind, mystifies me, scented cinders, lighted candles, fireflies on the trees conclusion: we have become one happy family and tonight, i will be writing some more for them

I've got no other valuable audience anyway.
and, let me finally add, it is only my dead mother who still loves me.

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
a man was sitting on the road and this woman who is always the incurable churchgoer passed by and the man asked her
why
what is in that church that attracts her like a magnetic field and she answered with an ironic twitch on her face because i worship God and God is in that church (Is God not everywhere? the man asked his heart and soul but dared not to insult the woman whose life is enclosed on those four walls and old pillars

none of his business anyway but as he looked on the woman who is not that old to still love he arrived at the conclusion that the woman needed more love from a lustful man than her memorized prayers but of course, it is none of his business for he is a lustful man and lived in his silence and loneliness too)

both are junctions and both have successfully traversed their parting ways

sad world indeed, people not discovering the truths about their longings

could have been perfect but never.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Bird And I

my little bird
is still in its cage
for years
i never hear it tweet
a happy song

i know it has kept that song for years but i never ask it to sing it for me

i like to set it free but it has learned to love its solitude
in the cage

birds from the fields on early mornings
seduce it to come out and fly with them
but it is loyal to my company

i have not asked it about any desire for
freedom
sometimes i tell it something about the blue sky and the fresh wind
and the beauty of some far places
that i have been
to

there were many times when i left it alone and when i come back it does not say anything about loneliness

at all

when i think that it must be dead
it stretches its wings rebutting my theory that it is possibly a dead resurrected

for indeed it is alive and in loneliness
have learned to thrive

it taunts me sometimes that we have so many things in common but it kept things the way they should be always in secrecy

always with self-respect about our own self-inflicted choices about our honest acceptance of who we are and of what have we become you ask me about loneliness and i have all the answers but try asking my bird about it it still remains in its chosen field of dignified silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Black Bird In The Crowded City

in the crowded city there is always a lonely black bird
which has no place
to land on and so it keeps flying

ultimately making all its wings strong and then it accepts the fact that its house is
the air
its only friend no one
and nobody.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Cat By The Sofa

A white cat with blue eyes lays its head on the arm of the sofa it is a sunny day again and it has not smelled something fishy.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Heart.....

the heart is a lady in the forest lost and guided with nothing but the faint light
of the moon
it finally finds its way towards home with no one but the coldness of the floor
again
at the close of darkness a ray of light lands upon her skin

dry as a desert
lonelier than the sands

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Hearts Club Of Ibsen

i do not like it it is barbaric
words are becoming acidic full of tricks
and such a maverick

for years survival
stuck
at Innsbruck they all got starstruck

such a huge truck
and the bric-a-brac covering much track
and the whole block

oh we are here
not liking everything
lonely even in the Spring.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Man

he finished reading a poem by frost
sips his coffee
and looks to the sea
from his window
inside a room
with a locked door

alone
in order to forget he begins to caress himself he begins to do what he does

with his own
flesh

his imagination
must save him
from the wrath
of his failure, his guilt
his sin.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Man...

he stands at the fourth floor all the walls are made of glass and he can see the people going in and out of the mall he is alone now and the other people here already left it is 5:30 in the afternoon and the sky is getting dimmer he is comforted by this idea that life is too short and those who enrich themselves always at the expense of the gullible and the ignorant raking money from those stupid believers
should never be envied

he must go out from this enclosure walk his way towards home where everyone is happily waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Moon

one night
the moon sits on the clear pond
and sees how beautiful she is shining like a mother pearl

she begins to sing
with the wind
and that night
the moon was never lonely ever again.

alone perhaps but so lovely!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Poet

again i tell myself if i have one reader left though ugly and old
i must write the poem
still...

RIC S. BASTASA
a lonely professor of law has cracked lips for lack of a kiss does nobody love him?
no ugly girl in class? no hooker in town?
travel somewhere and pay love, disregard emotions, and say what's love got to do with need?

he is an expert in his field well admired in fact respected and idolized
what they do not know
is his state of lifelessness a new word for being another lonely stranger in this unruly crowd must he find a home? a wife waiting?

kids laughing? a garden of green grass and a scene of mowing and replanting flowers after a cold
winter
far from it
there is no home even no dog by the door
no cat by the window
there are no cups and saucers for a coffee moment
with someone else
in a room filled with books and notes

in such a way that the writing of a diary is completely forgotten or that unfinished poem that he once started to scribble no way can he finish it the theme is love
and he has no more trust on that word it hurt him so from the very beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Room

to give me company
i look for a friendly word because there is no one
somehow
available here
someone
even to be present with not even talk

i choose a vowel
something that can give me a sound to put a little presence in this room

the O comes then the Y
and then U, which i try to spell
as You
but then i have already forgotten how you sound to me

it's been years
and my memory has failed me
and then
i had nothing but
Me

it is enough
i am at home now with all the consonants
in this room which has already forgotten the joys of sound

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Woman And The Man Who Predicted His Own Death

The lonely woman took a liter of costly perfumed oil made from genuine aromatic nard and anointed his feet and dried them with her hair; the house was filled with the fragrance of the oil

If you are with me
Then you will know at once who the woman was
for whom we identify our own
loneliness
who the man was who died for all of us nailed feet
bloodied hair

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lonely Woman And The Sea

tonight the lonely woman sits beside the sea again her feet are too small and her hands too gentle she speaks about what is missing and she recalls what she cannot find she likes the song of the empty shells the hermit crabs are too clumsy for her her hair falls on the rocks and she begins to shed some tears the sea keeps on waving, signalling as though sending the message

' please don't i have so much salt inside my belly' but the lonely woman keeps on crying and she cannot be stopped the sea is mute and the lonely woman is deaf the tree says they make a good pair and someone says further they can, who knows, without a hitch, live happily ever after

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loner

she smiles
when provoked
when she is angry she seeks a corner where her mind cannot speak
when she loves
she keeps it when she dies
she prefers
not to be buried but just to be cremated
she is as silent as her ashes
on her final departure
she owns the earth
spreads
far and wide
to the ocean
to the trees
to all the hearts of beings
she is not a stranger
anymore
she speaks now
truly
for you
and me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Long And Winding Road

we were there on those long and winding roads i got dizzy
and you talk about them like you talk about a love that is still to come a tryst, a night designed for love, a honeymoon, after a woo, a worship, honestly, i do not love these long and winding roads, i get dizzy all the time, why should roads be long and winding who ever fixed it that way? who ever ruled the earth with long and winding roads why can't roads be straight like the way we long and look at the sky?

i like bridges, those long and straight ones, my gaze is fixed, my travel determined, you drive the car, and i sleep all through our journey.
now, i don't get dizzy at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Long Journey Into A Recalling

actually
he did not choose to be here

he was told
he was thrown here when he was a baby
when he had no sense at
all
about time and place
and people

just like everyone here with a mind of their own as they grow older they begin to entertain questions handed to them
by grief
and confusion

it was confusion that made them think it was grief that ask them what happiness is and how illusive it seems

time gives them
those philosophical robes that remain wet with rain

someone who has outlived all these quibbling closed his mouth and took the journey
with all calm

it is the silence that
after all
give them wisdom

it is the peace within that pacified their storms

then they claim they understand that they are not supposed to be gnats
in the world of carcasses that they should walk peacefully and look at the stars at night when they take their temporary rests on this still long

journey

into that longing about what once was there
but they cannot completely remember

RIC S. BASTASA
The Longings Of My Tongue

I promised my eyes that i will love them all like the way i cared for the longings of

my tongue

i have given them all but bags of burdens

sore to the mirror of my
morning

tryst to myself and to myself what revenge shall they give me?

ah, this blindness to what is near to my touch to what is pleasing but so distant

what i touch is rough and ugly far from what i imagine things to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Look Of Hatred And The Innocent Man

he gazed at all the eyes that gazed on him inside that smoky room

there was one eye which looked at him with the gentleness of the man of compassion

he knew it
as it was devoid of the usual cruelty
that all of them inflicted upon his innocence.

he knew it
because it was fake
in fact in truth
it was made of marble

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loopholes Of Our Laws

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lord God Has Given Me A Well-Trained Tongue, That I Might Know How To Speak To The Weary A Word That Will Rouse Them.

even after all the years tongues from the skies of blue skies of clear waters tiny lights hanging like fireflies on the trees in multitudes

drips of light hovering resting on the hair of my head unlike the disciples i do not speak
those tongues
i only write them
from here
where i sit miles and miles away from you i, trying to make a connection
to you, empty hands to empty hands
in space
we have never all meet but we are beginning to understand the wisdom of interlinks that fence that separates my house from your house where a morning glory climbs, hold on with her roots
reaches to a sky
with its tendrils
and greets you
with the sweetest petal of a very simple
hello
The Loser

the loser is ruled by anger
it is licking the blood oozing from its wounds
it is like a dog
yelping
but there is no
master around to help it it is looking for a house but it is far
the loser looks at you now
as its enemy
it refuses any memory
of you
it rests under a big rock taking the shelter of the shadows
of its past.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loss Of Contact

without contact
there is no flare

no electricity for months
and you scream

that you will be dead soon

it is like night without moon & stars

like a dried river bank all bare stones

an abandoned well
waters stinking

veins without blood cracked lips without clue of water without gloss and shine

talk to me
if this is all about sex.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lost Dog..

the dog was lost last night the houseboy made the search and found it in the town cemetery

we understand why.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lost Meanings...

two nights dance
to their lustful ways
each step
a miscalculation of
happiness

morning has its cup of coffee
spilled on the sands

the hammock rocks
to and fro to such a monotonous direction

meanwhile the sun shines faithfully
both to the drunk and the sober
the praying mantis and its prey
those who are still asleep for those lost meanings

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lost Mothers...

not all mothers nurture some have also lost their kind ways their children neglected others given away

nature has a way of creating deviant mothers
those who prefer their men rather than their children those that slap innocence those that sell those buds of beauty before they ever bloom those that lead them to perdition

but just the same
all are forgotten and forgiven mothers too commit mistakes humans as they are too like everyone

happy mothers' day just the same from your faithful and forgiving children

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lost Power Of The Rain

it has been with us for so many years

despite its being there we do not anymore mind

until remembering dies
we think it is lost

we do not desire finding it back

we get homesick
we are dying

we miss it but then it is no longer there we pray it comes back it won't

it has no more power to become the rain again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lost Self Of Possibilities

I AM learning
mind you, to be alone,
it will take time,
and you too,
it will perhaps take a little longer,

a poem helps me cope up it has wings and claws

it can transform itself into a landscape too

everything is possible here and i am finally found.

RIC S. BASTASA
there were three of us in the room you could not forget that Meryl look-alike transvestite (who did not mind your coming) and this oozing-sex-appeal bra-less (not brainless) law student who was spongy on the receptive mode of a listener,

i sat on a bench wearing my black shirt from Singapore (perhaps for want of a little sophistication with the motive of making myself distinct from those local brands)

this shallow conceit that is tucking that book in Evidence earmarked on the subject of judicial notice you forgot obviously to comb your hair, but the plunging neckline saved you from the humiliation of neglect, upon a little flair for fashion and taste but it was sheer honesty (and i admire you for that) when you finally declared that you are lost.

whatever that means, figuratively or literally

i am telling you,
you are never alone in all these.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Angle....

wait,
conclude not
that early,

so much talk
crawled on the grape vine

one says
its political the other says it was the drug, the most common excuse

the manicurist
for whom we do not give much importance, lowly as her state
has presented
another angle:

the love triangle
still exists
he was murdered
by the husband
himself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love In Your Eyes

the love in your eyes is blue, and so the world thought that lovely eyes are blue, we look at you with awe your eyes are blue like the sea to the sky boundless love borderless on any shore spreading love like all the arms of mankind opening to the heavens

soon, we shall meet each other after the storms and deaths of many thousands buried in mud and poverty

my eyes are black mourning and shining with anger and tears the eyes of the storms of these orient seas find love in there gaze at me with the blueness of your eyes the blue sea the blue skies they are all yours

you own them
my eyes are black
i am in those storms how can you see me crying?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Lyrics Under The Shower

it may be nice after a hard night
pouring all over the papers
waking up in the morning
naked
going to the bathroom and she is there ahead
with the shower and she sings
the lyrics
of love though you cannot exactly figure out the exact words
since you cannot sing it yourself

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Of God

by his omnipotence his love pervades my whole being but there is nothing more godlike that a human body touching hands kissing lips tight arms around my body bodies intertwined

eyes closed fluids mixing sweat and saliva all ablaze in ecstasy until both of us utter, Oh My God! we rest and then in sweet darkness we see the face of God we feel his love complete.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Of Light....

upon the window of trees i rest my weary eyes, the aches dissipate on the leaves my forehead rests on the hands of the wind, i lean upon the walls of this house the comfort zone of the mind the roof beats like a heart and opens its breast to the soft touches of the clouds happier in blue and then the black birds come with the sweeter sounds of the flapping of their wings how happy is this state
of my soul
sitting upon the friendly bone of my body
the light of the sun
lands upon my hair
i am as always and will always be its respecter and friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Of Self...

i
always love
my own
scent

my own
dirt my own
spit

i too must love my own
defeats
my own short comings
my broken
dreams
my dimming
years

it will be a happy ending
because it is
my own
ending....

the flowers
that wilted
in my garden

the stars
blocked by those dark clouds

the river that runs dry
and sun which faded

ey are all mine
and i
do confirm i all love them

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Of The Fog

on top of the mountain she sees how the fog loves the breasts of the hills

all gently covered tenderly at night till dawn with the linens of the white
fog.

RIC S. BASTASA
mankind has invented the love of the unknown. unknown has no face. Or if it has, it is masked. only the eyes can be viewed, and the one viewing it has no emotions.
it is honored. Loving the unknown is fame.
The mask is glorified.
One does not reveal what love is, no one has it anyway.
the whole face is wrapped the other stands without a heart by the door.
the only sun there is the bulb and shadows make their show.
Pity looks at you with pity.
This the hour for giving and forgiving.
You take a body, like you take God.
It is given with another cup of blood, and then the ceremony begins.

at the end both are satisfied.
names are not called. The bulb is turned off.
The time for departure has come.

The rule is still: secrecy, this is the meeting place of the mundane and the divine,
the giver and the recipient, respect and honor is there leaving a door and then locking it forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Of The Work....

one who loves his work like the way one wants to search the truth never falls short of the excitement of the child who still wonders what dragonflies are made of what if, the head is taken from the tail? what if all the legs are pulled? what if what is left is only the broken wing?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Poem...

the poet who writes a love poem cannot but be filled by awe
when the woman whom he does not know thinks that the poem is for her

miles apart the poem is a universe
in itself.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Scene

he goes behind her kisses her neck and slides his hands under she faces him kisses his lips and pulls his body towards her there she opens as he closes in she is shut like the night as he appears like the glowing moon there is rain

the leaves sing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love That I Do Not Deserve....

i want to link with you in a manner that it would be metaphorical well, we are completely not alike. The contrast is beyond their understanding. Nail and jel.

button and mushroom.
electric eel to a percolator.

opera house and a cancer hospital.
comfort room and space lab.

we are too far. I am from pluto and you are from venus.

i hate mosquitoes you live with them.
i love letters you like fritters.

but (i really like you and i feel so irrelevant and i look at myself in the mirror and i begin to hate myself. I will be another moron.

another jackal. Much like an ash after the holocaust.

i want to have you but i vomit at the same time at this thought.

i may close my eyes and for a while dream about what i imagine you to be.

seeing you, i feel this stupidity. but what can i do? i like you. and i am feeling so helpless about it.

i'd hang my qualifications upon an onion tree.
kill myself with sugar and chocolates.

i told that kid, i will report you to your dad.
and then I shut up.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love That I Have For You....

outside i watch you

you are inside yourself
a room
a wall but there is window still that allows light to come in and dress you like a night without the armor

i am the light
and i like the way things are going with us you just do not know what is it
to be just light without a body
what is it to have so many fingers & yet without a hand

the room is darker but i know what it is to be a tiny sun

you fan yourself with your innocence
your hands are callous and it is a little bit colder when by chance you touch my rays and sheen

when i meet you like i am water bathing your body as i dress you once again with the cloth

of my silk
soul
i quiver like a soft wind on the reeds
of the moonlit night

i love it this way
this invisible presence this nameless light this desire that fulfills itself
without you
feeling it

must i be selfish?
or must i be the one that does not let you suffer because you cannot love
light
because your coldness is uncertain about the gift of warmth
its truth beyond all truths

when i am done with you i summon the rain & bathe myself again to wash away
the dirt of guilt
the scars of pain
though
remaining

look at me
i am the morning light that spreads on the garden of your thighs and
legs

as you watch
with all delight
you only see the wonder of light and its accompanying music

and then
satisfied with all the caresses of thoughts that i have always loved you i go with the herds of rain and what is left to please me more is your own
fading face
like those ripples on the pond that the lonely leaf had given the shape of love that i carry with me as air embracing the heavens

again....

RIC S. BASTASA
that old song
no matter how far and faint
against the dying
light
in that afternoon aftermath
is clearly heard by the heart
that loves.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love That You Can Offer To The Broken Woman

you see this broken woman outside the house outside the fence finally under the noonday sun she walks without an umbrella looking forward to another day on weary feet
she takes the path that carries her to her freedom

i wrote a poem last night and i knew she was able to read it i did not see whether her hands tremble but she asked me if i have this kind of love to offer to make her live to make her dream she is free now and in truth i do not really know what i have everything i have is in the house and there is a woman there who owns the letters of my name who keeps the key to the door that is locked

and she says
i am chained there and she brags that i am the willing victim

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love Unremovable

setting poetry aside, let this poem state direct to the point what it wants to convey,
it is all about you (no names, nothing personal)

i hate loving you, but just the same, i am a fool always loving you,

the heart is foolish
the mind is powerless it keeps strength
at noon
steel but when the evening comes when the rest leaves you
abandoned
it confesses upon the weakness of snow melting flakes surrendering to the love of your soil
self

hate you, love you, hate you, love you crazy indeed
but what can i do
it is true. it is always true.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Love We Had Behind That Door One Sunday Afternoon

the love behind that door one sunday afternoon when all of them were gone to church we were silly and hot and thrilled to the tempest of our flesh the passions that burn like a wildfire in the camp we closed the door with our two bodies in fear but the heat was even more tempting we set aside possibilities in hell all we thought of was heaven and the songs of angels we banged the door together we were afraid no more of consequences we had thrown clothes and underwears under the chairs the world and its rules did not matter we were making a stand of teen-age love

the supple youth that must rule the world of unfounded fears what we remembered most were the volcanoes

they all erupted and we closed our eyes and the magma flowed all the lava moved all the fiery fires and sounds of cracking pyroplastics the sweet explosions in our ears then we listened afterwards the mellow songs of our hearts we take our calm seats we hold our tired hands and then the sunday door opened again as though nothing important really happened we assured ourselves by the mutual silent gazes of our eyes the scented air came in and we were refreshed again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Loveless Self...

behind you is the dark the dark is also in front of you

there is a sound of the bling bling and the blang blang and the scenery of the fling fling and the flong flong you are confused

and you ask
what are all these?
these should have been understood by you since you are not deaf and blind

by all means you are healthy and perfectly sound

your hands know how to grasp steel and smooth and ready all these must never be told it will serve you right if they are not at all understood (lest you will die laughing and say that all these are nothing and do not serve any purpose at all all too trivial and do not deserve the dignities of your responses) these can never be understood since no one owns you...

.... loveless self...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lovely Animation Of The Mouse....

oh look at you, so demanding.
Firstly, the moral of the story is still the original
.. the story was peaceful (as you can see from the background music) and the lion wasn't a 'softie' you power hungry piece of crap.

He was majestic and calm.
As are most people who are truly secure of their power.

The animation style was beautiful and in it's own style, more natural.
That's why the trap was of vines.

my god! you sound so lame screaming over nothing and being so&#65279; demanding over lovely animation.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lovely Encounter

if you could only see what i have seen as i try to write these lines how many times have i told you about seeing love and then writing about it?

love is not just an idea there is flesh, younger flesh on strong bones there is that softness of the hair the scent of magnolias there is this sound of the sea breeze there is color like the yellowness of the fabric that covers desire there is this taste of a little salt from the sea the sweetness of cherry and the flavor of rum and the sound of a hum

if you could only see what i see and feel and taste and touch what i have here beside me

i know you

shall forget writing these lines
... you shall write everything about all these after.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lovely Medic

i am not drowning
she applies mouth to mouth resuscitation
i am not dying
i have much air
in my lungs but i am not the kind of person that refuses a nice offer so here we go again mouth to mouth.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lovers And The Fly That Dies In Ice Cream...

death is no threat, not having to help someone is not a problem of the mind people die anyway, like flies, people talk anyway like lovers mindless about what happens near them eyes fixed hearts beating
the world spinning
another day
another numbness....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lovers' State Of Mind

tell me who makes you gentle it is you she confesses tell me who makes you graceful it is you he says tell me who makes this world a better place for us to live and not have any worry at all what is next what is tomorrow
whether we falter or fall it is us but they are not uttering it they only hold their hands now without fear treading upon a path
of thorns

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lowly Men...

we are these lowly men of the plains
and you little gods
on the clouds
have no eyes for us

we feast on shrimps
and coconut wine
we butchered swine
and feel divine....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lstone In The Middle Of The River....

it feels like i am drained of all my running water the fishes in me are jumping gasping for precious breath i have this mouth but it cannot speak

after all, she says, i must be a river

always, she continues, without more water

how can she love me forever?
she is the stone in the middle of my pool, and when i run dry on a hot day of summer

she will just be another stone of this death-bed beside a mountain.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lucky Cat

i've seen this black cat that walked at night amidst the busy city road passing straight one speedy car to another without fear and never crushed i've seen her eyes unruffled her feet so nimble and light like a flash of lightning without the sound of thunder i've seen her sit upon a rail up on the 13th floor of this building without any fear of falling at all i've seen her without any worry at all where to eat her next meal where to attract a prey and take it at bay

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lust Scare....

my hello has now
become a scare to you,

after all those years
of myself spreading my arms open
for you

i regret having hinted that my legs can open too....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Lusting Heart

the old places
still tickle from the toe
to the hair old places
of the
lusting heart
in between an outburst of fire flowing like magma
on my thighs

RIC S. BASTASA
The Luxury Of A Certain Privacy....

it makes life better the word is livable, sort of hey i am just around but you must not know about me a lot, i am just mr. private,
that nobody that you meet on the faceless street that somebody that you look for
a while but not fit to be with, things are better if one knows what momentary is,
a shadow that disappears because everything is dark because the season fades into a twilight,
cold and indifferent because there is no need really to know what happens next where and
why.

because as i once said it it is none of one's business because it is unethical to ask every detail
because as one aptly says it this is my life and i am not interested in yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Luxury Of Privacy

so many things should have been given away so many words could have been written so many secrets should have been thrown away many friends are waiting some people that you have not met for once keep on expecting the walls are there waiting for your hidden words ears are adrift with their wings folded and ready to fly your grief is girdled and you sorrow is a cool man smoking its way to the labyrinths of living your bliss explodes happiness too can grow like weeds that neighbors want uprooted privacy is a treasure and so you keep all these things to yourself by all intents

your house is having a gate locked glass windows are not see through and you have no stone to throw to the other house which is made of glass too privacy is a luxury and you enjoy it to the most like a cowboy sipping tequila enjoying how soft orange can a sunset be

RIC S. BASTASA
The Luxury Of Silence...

in the luxury of our silence we still refuse to spend a word for that is the irony of luxury of the rich
when they have more in words they keep them well always having second thoughts releasing them into air or woods or into the comforting numbness of the listening ears of the mob
or the other people

which Sartre had long defined as hell....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mad Electrician

i heave
a big sigh
to compose
this,

this is the story
of the death
of a mad electrician

he electrocuted
himself

and the sad thing is that nobody
minded.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mad Man

there is this mad man on the street carrying a lighted lamp at midday
he screams that this world is about to end
and people do not listen he sometimes laughs at the top of his voice when all of them are all gone in the middle of the night he sings the song of chaos he gives the warning but then the world is asleep and numb, the following morning you ask me about the mad man how come that he screams, and lights a lamp during the day, singing the songs of chaos foretelling the doom of the world

i have no answer of course but there is one thing i am sure of it is about us not having understood him a bit.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Madnesss Of Your Metaphors

here comes the madness of your metaphors

an elephant for a world elephant upon another elephant ad aeternum

money as water
life as that of a cat
sky for roof
stars as fish in the ocean of
galaxies

whales are galaxies
man not even a memory

an empty page a blank stare a mug of beer
beside a cuban cigar.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Magic

sitting down and looking at the menu turns miraculous when i have the closest chance looking at you
by a dim candle light

i see a sparkle in your eyes that i have not ever seen before and you too glance at me and you stop for a while close the menu
and touch my hand atop the table

23 years pass us by and here we are looking at ourselves again as though we have no names i know what you will say but i need not hear it.

i am full.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Magic Crystal Clear Pool

when i look at the pool in its tranquility
i only see myself

my storms cannot disturb the peace of this pool
i am not powerful
enough to disturb its
peace
with all the twisters
inside my mind

my heart envies at the image that the pool reflects at me in this amazement i have become a loud sound without an echo.

i am mapping out the cause of my sorrow hoping that in this maze i can still find the lost treasure
in my face.

the pool whispers that i am a weary soul that i have aged and mellowed and that wisdom is just near in the grasp of my breath
held hostage inside
my lips.

the pool stares at me with all
forgiveness
it understands the plight of many who have approached it
and left feeling triumphant again
despite
the odds.

the pool is a mirror
i am human.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Magic In You....

what magic is there

when i touch a bit of you i ooze with so much life that i forget the sadness of my own past....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Magic Of Our Own Creations.

in a world of delusion, the tongue learns
another language
apart from that of the hand and the eye and what appears beyond all these severances is the magic of our own creations.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Magic Wand Of The Too Familiar

it happens all the time the most familiar things and events and people come daily and they become so ordinary

and then
you wonder
somehow
something

unfamiliar begins to strike you making some furrows in your face it becomes magical

a wand of the familiar turns you into a prince a sword is handed to you a horse for you to mount upon

a heart that begins its journey on some adventures that were there once
in your youth

you become alive
then the world changes its colors and you realize

you never notice something had long been put here

how foolish you have been for not noticing such a familiar thing?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Magician

he thought they like him and he asked them what next would he like them to do like handkerchiefs transformed into roses
this man was honest enough to tell him
to immediately disappear

RIC S. BASTASA
The Magnificat

do not try seeing hear it
and listen to it so well on the last dance
of your life
leave everything
now
leave everything
now
to the
spontaneity of your feet
your hands will be the very ones who shall guide you what to feel it is the light
that will tell you
what to do
and where to finally
go

RIC S. BASTASA
The Magnificence Of Distance And Silence

it is not the title not the fame not the name not the prestige
not the popularity

all these do not excite me in search of meaning the tall thin sorrowing man searches his path in the middle of this case the same man searches the light at the and

of this tunnel

the bat may rely on sound but there is no sound the snake may rely on the smell of the stones but there is no scent
and there are no
stones

i cannot rely on my senses i still stick to the logic of losses the logic of locating and the consequences of finding what i have lost that i may soon find

upon reaching there i shall surrender this noise within if the stars permit
i will join in the magnificence of their distance and silence

RIC S. BASTASA
The Main And The Peripheries

sometimes i am amazed at my own irrationality i set the bread and butter aside today telling myself i have enough of the ham and the bacon in my freezer,

there will be no office, there will be no class, there will be no conferences, no discussions about the future of my light and darkness

i take the slipper and set aside the shoes i fold the tie and the white underwear the coat is hanged, and the wool is returned to the sheep the leather is promised to the crocodiles and the snakes the fur to the fox and the gold back to the holes of the earth i leave the slippers and the hat and even the polo shirt i change my mind and i do not care i go naked to the fields of my youth and then i rest my body under the morning sun all exposed to the light and air and think of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Majestic Halls Of Silence

years and years tradition marked these halls with the power of its own silence, not a dropp of needle is heard here.

there is this black robe with velvet ropes there is this hat of the academe there is this discipline that outlasts lives of men suddenly, all these are engulfed by the conspiracy of the minds in protecting the house with a clean and white fainted facade the interiors have not become well tended a faulty wiring that may cause the fire soon infested walls, termite territory this has become no one, no one, expects the crumpling of the structure one day all will be gone who fiddles when the fire begins?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Majority

the majority votes
say we won,

and i the minority
say i abide

and then to drive
the point
they say bye.

i was not given
the chance
to say welcome.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Male Bird Praying For Freedom

When will he be free? says the male bird with blue wings it is eating its claw like a bread stick it is trying to remove all feathers with each breath to the Sky it begs, to the clouds it is asking intercession but darkness closed in and the clouds have long vanished.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mama In You

when i go berserk always the mama in you is there
to save
my shattered pieces

when time get rough there is the mama in you that calms down those that are violent

when i go crazy over matters there is the mama in you that becomes my sanity pills

i am sleepy, where is papa anyway?

p.s.

baduy ba?
ha ha ha

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man And The Doors

two doors open for you at the time when you have no more liking for doors anymore and then another one opens, and so does another you have no more feeling for any door and even if slighted the doors do not close they keep on teasing showing half of what is inside the room but you are no longer interested whatever is inside and then patiently the doors close and now they all believe you that after all, they are not important and they look at you through their peeping holes wondering what you shall do next.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man And The Woman

a man and a woman
meet for the first time their eyes meet and

understand

but both of them are not free slaves of their past and still subjects to the whispers of the hazy future

their paths crisscross
and they admit they're only there

for the moment
each takes the ride to nowhere and shall only remember and then of course, forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Behind The Scenes

the best fruit is produced by the tree
the man behind the scenes did the watering
and the cultivating it is the tree
not the man it is the fruit that counts to your taste
the one at the background fades
there is no name
no history

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Beside Me

now we are sailing on a bamboo raft floating on a silk river bound to the other side except for the man with a long bamboo pole to touch the floor and push us more

there is this man
beside me murmuring his face is covered by the shadow of his big straw hat

the natives respect him thinking that he is god sent knowing the words of the mountain gods who give them rain after the drought he chatters the song of the cicadas he murmurs the heaves of the rain finally he stops and hands in the silence of the rocks that protrude in the middle of the river the waters rise flood rages on and i begin to hear another song of the incoming storm then we arrive at the other side of the river this time we have become one in the fold of the fury asking the protection of the mountain's belly the morning news shall tell about two men who are fuming the seeds of discontent of the plains and the city we have no names here just coincidences

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Named Miggy

Others have finally given up on him
he is not what they expect him to be

he is a broken glass
who wants to drink water with him?
no one wants a twisted path he too is.

cleaning the house is a waste of time he says
let the world clean itself he says mother was too worried about his future and of course he never cared and so mother died but he never cried 'what's the use? ' he said, 'mother died and she must know', he continues

'i am different'

' i do not want to change this world in the same manner that i do not want the world to change me' his philosophy

' i live the moment, the sun is setting and i only have a month to live' he writes and then he died young and then that was the only time that they all missed him.

except his dog who had always loved him for what he is without any questions asked.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Of La Mancha

if you mind
he lives in his own mind he has his Dulcinia, the bartender who slept with a lot of drunkards, he has his windmills
to conquer
he has his impossible dream when he begins to sing we cry

when he was gone
we remember him

and then we laugh again for what we have not become
after all
we are too impossible every blood is thin
like the cowardice within.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Sitting Alone At The Cafeteria Of Perpetual Succor Hospital

he is black, native Filipino wears a coat, white polo shirt fat and big tummy sipping coffee and alone a book on the right side of his table he is not reading it an attache case is on his left leg he is at the side of the glass window of the second floor of this hospital run by nuns below is the garden of palm trees and grass and perennial violets and vietnam roses he is not taking any breakfast perhaps he is waiting for someone i sit over a corner fronting him i am observing the details of his existence i know it is another sad story but he is not talking about it i know there is no use what for is sharing another story about life's tragedy?

will it be another story of a husband contemplating about his next move what to do with a wife stricken with breast cancer at stage 4?

i look around there is another man in shorts riding on a wheel chair pushed by a woman in her forties an old woman, a child crying, etc. etc. etc.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Smoking His Way Heavily On A Rural Bus Back Home.

most of the world is too cruel not to mind the grass on a hill the flower on the rock of a cliff the tree in the middle of high mountains the fish swimming in a murky swamp the man smoking his way heavily on a rural bus back home.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Under The Sunshine At 9 O'Clock In The Morning

one day
he takes his walk
in the Oval

it is a sunny day

he is half
naked

he is taking hours
sun bathing

people are curious and looking

it is 9 o'clock in the morning

is it not easy
to imagine

how sunshine
can also be water?

he thinks
there is something wrong with the people
here

they simply lack imagination
they think
that sunbathing
is obscene

9 o'clock
should have been used
for plowing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Who Climbs The Highest Pole Of The Bridge...

at the highest bridge on the city of Cebu a man in his twenties climbs the pole and sits there overlooking
the city
the City is in panic for he must be saved his name is taken: Juan Molina, 32 years old,
a thief, jobless, and without any known relatives and he is so hungry and it is so hot at the top and he is coming down if there is something to eat they thought he is going to jump and kill himself

which is not the fact of the case he simply wants to see the whole damned city of leaders who cannot understand that he too needs work to have money to buy something to eat to pay for the rent of his boarding space, his bills, and his toothpaste and soap all the while the city is angry this man must be sent to prison we are so disturbed and he creates the massive confusion sad, sad city.

suicidal masses luxurious lifestyles of the rich and the famous elite

most of the poor and the lost do not ask anymore where is God?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Who Dipped His Fingers In Salt And Lick Them All

he dips his fingers in salt and licks them all people look at him with all surprise he is weird and they do not like him He is detestable they say he does this everyday all the days of the week all the weeks of months all the months of those years the people shut him away they close their doors they vomit when they see him they look at him with contempt they throw him away from their cities they ban him from all other countries

he keeps the salt all to himself he eats them and drinks them all he has become sick very sick like one rusty nail he died and people did not mourn for him good riddance so to say the city dances in jubilation the world turns into a fourth of july

if they only knew him well that i know him to be they should have known how he disliked salt
how all his senses revolt against this instinct of having his fingers dip in salt
and of his having his tongue
lick
and how his mouth eats all the stuff that destroys his body
how every night he vomits how his system fails how he knew that with all these he is actually killing himself people do not know there are things that happen without his control there are times when one has no choice but to dip the fingers in salt no matter how bad it turns out to be until he dies

society denies instincts conceals the existence of vampires and gnomes and parasites and ghouls society keeps its own beautiful face hides the scars and the disease who wants to eat salt all his life? who wants to rust like a nail and die like a brown dust on the ground?

who wants to be a scrap of iron and melt in salt?
who wants to be a robot? a man of hay?

nobody. i repeat nobody.
He never liked it himself.
Society has not asked it never cares
The Man Who Had Forgotten How To Cry...

i do not weep
i must be weird
for i do not know how to cry

when my loved ones
died
i buried them &
some have to cry
for me
to satisfy
our tradition

people who notice this
talk
and they talk behind
my back

i pinch my cheek
and hurt my eyes
there are no more tears
the mirror
speaks

i must be that boy who had forgotten how to cry

i could be that man who can never cry

for what use is crying?
will it save papa from
dying?
will it heal a
bleeding heart?

will it change my
predicament?
will it make flowers
grow?
will it turn these stones
into bread?
will it save me from
falling?

will it pacify a storm will it still the whirlpools of my
mind?

i have no one to cry for i am not that selfish to cry for my own self i am not a masochist i have no pity for my own misfortune i do not blame myself for all my failures i don't have a place to let my tears fall there is simply no time for it

anymore....

RIC S. BASTASA
another man and this is usual has imagined that he is loved because he had loved the most boasting that tonight that love will be forceful to sink him to unfathomable depths melting him with all sweet gaze

tsk tsk tsk
another foolish man bites the dust filling his lungs with sand and soil burying his body and his lust

tsk tsk tsk
the lover is pretending closing his eyes in order not to see that ugliness

tsk tsk tsk
when will he ever learn that that someone has never loved him?

for he is dust
all dust and nothing more.
The Man With Three Wives...

you ask,
how can did he manage to have three wives?

well, he always buys things in three sets:

three kilos of sugar
three bags of rice
three pieces of fish
three pinches of salt three sachets of native coffee three coffee mugs three dresses with same design and so everyone is happy

ever after.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Man Writes A Poem

did a beetle which bored a hole in his head while he was sleeping and then the hole seals
itself,

"heal thyself" says the wind passing by his hair and since then he has changed with the beetle still inside his head,

"the pain is too much" says the butterfly riding in the air that took away its life in a day's span,

he never knew what is happening but he is not the telling kind and so he keeps everything to himself and from that pain he learns the art of using words to describe his pain in so many ways:

' i got a butterfly inside my brain imagining the brain as flowers in the garden' he intimates to the wind and the wind keeps on going and passing and the moon sees a happy man

'everything is in place this world is beautiful to live a life and i am a happy man'

the man writes a poem but never used a word that sounds like a beetle..

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mango Tree And The Children

the mango tree
blooms on the month of May

fruits are heavy
soon

on all its branches
is opulence

Comes June
the children come with their sticks and slings
and stones

the mango tree is hit once again
and all the fruits
fall to the ground

the children
have all the fun

saliva flows from tongues
dipping in salt

as early as that they know what fun is

by hurting those that fruit so well

by taking the fruits
beyond
what they actually
need

RIC S. BASTASA
The Manipulator

Dance, dance Mister ordinary
If you won’t
I shall junk you

Sing, sing,
Mister ordinary
If you won’t
I shall leave you

Obey, obey Mister ordinary
Listen to me
And follow what I say

I will trample you
I will tread upon you
You will do what I want you to do

I may even humiliate
And tamper you Because you allow
It to be so.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Manner Of The Flowing

what i like most before the drink is the flow of the wine from the bottle to the glass the hands that gently hold the tip and the gentleness by which the wine if poured slowly like love enjoying the foreplay before everything begins to be uncontrollable

i like the sound of caress smooth as it flows down to my throat to the veins of my heart on one such lovely evening.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Marsh

i know how the marshes smell, used to have the smell of fish and mud untouched by the body of a boat, a wooden boat
definitely without the noise of the machine and the gun
and the bearded men that carry the guns less the children and their mothers who have never come and stayed an inch deep in the water i have gone there once i was a virgin, a fresh mind like the lily of the marsh
i was the pure air of the lilies, i breathe and they breathe with me until i become like some of the bearded men who come with the noise of the machine and the guns
i do not like the smell of the marshes now there are dead bodies of children and women and unaccounted men rotten, time and the waters finally buried them less the usual ritual of good men.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Marsh And The Moon And Myself

i always love
the coolness of the marsh

the moon has chosen it as its bed tonight

between them
i am the worshiper
of silence
bathed in that sheen of gold

upon the humility
of a borrowed
light

RIC S. BASTASA
The Martyr

you built the house
and there they live

you planted those what they shall reap

you bought all these and they shall use

you write the poems they earn the credits

you cook the food
and there they eat

and then they kill you so they shall live

RIC S. BASTASA
The Martyr....

from the blood of his wrist and his neck

are borne scarlet butterflies and some purple ones

and like a short moment their wings last only for a while as they migrate to eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mask

yes, there was this man in the village he was happy.

yet, no one know who he really was even until death.

all his life he wore the mask of the happy man dignified and praised.

when he lived till 60 he wore the mask through and through he was famous for his love and charity.

till his funeral the people cried there i saw the mask, smiling and always willing to help always empathizing, always willing to understand the plight of each and everyone and he was buried a happy man time buries all including the mask of the happy man if only they had taken time to dig him out from his grave they could have seen the rotten ugliness beneath the mask of happiness let him go, those who knew later said he was a happy man, he served us so well, let him be, we pray.

i know the ugliness of his true self but i guess, no one likes to hear what it is.

my lips are sealed
now we must praise him again: posthumously.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mask Of Respect...

at the heart breaking ceremony i have seen to it that i must be absent it will be a great shame & folly for me not to shed any tear at all that the mask of respect for all those with broken hearts in this universe
must always
be at all times
worn.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Masochist Culture....

this incurable fanatic is condemned every morning it opens the pages of its own realities as though it is opening a wound and lets the blood ooze it finds joy in this kind opening those which have healed and had been closed for years now

this is the culture of masochism manipulating the past giving it is unnecessary presence
perhaps because there is nothing to see at all nothing to do perhaps to lessen the absurdity of what is here there is nothing to touch except these pages of pain

RIC S. BASTASA
The Masses....

they did not like it

the ugly duckling

these insensitive
mass
prefers her roasted.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mastery Of Familiarity

it is a matter of familiarity

the caresses of the hands of time always give us the mastery of what we take and give away the windows let the winds come and go without so much hassle

at first the stairs are adamant about the steps that come up and much often go down and never make the footfalls
stay

it is a matter of use and disuse you master the common art of abuse the sense of coming and going of arriving and leaving becomes a way of life and so where is sorrow? the sound of sighs?

at the train station there are no more sad stories about the coming of the train & about its synchronized leaving these are daily occurrences

anyway
and there is nothing significant about them anymore in the house where we live we do not talk about these matters as they have become so repetitive and hence so boring....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Matter Of You And I

The garden
where we sow the seeds of love has a wall

so high it reaches
the clouds

the gate is locked
and the door is closed

it is so silent
as it is just a matter of you and i.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mayor Of The Town

at first he offers you a basket of bread perhaps he knows that you are hungry not having eaten for a day you touch one, tear it, and have yourself a fill it is fine

you exchange ideas
laugh at matters which both of you think funny he offers a drink and you take a glass thinking that this guy must be sincere in helping you away from hunger and thirst you sleep soundly the whole night and the following morning he comes to you again bringing some strings and you think this must be a way to strengthen bonds

then he speaks about a puppet and you do not like it and he burst into anger that is the end of the political affair you do not want to be that puppet on a string.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mazes Of My Life, Of Our Lives

we are mazes,
and some people who take us as important, follow us in that maze, every turn, every quizzical path, scheming mind, and at those corners where there are celebrations, they scrutinize, the reasons, and in the loopholes of our disappointments, they begin to smile, embrace the comfort that they are not alone in all these miseries, that we are all one race, one experience of leaps and bounds, of manholes and mounds, of hills and trenches, sometimes, i look at this maze, and i say with all confidence, i have mastered these secret passages, i have no fear, i always arrive at what i desire i don't jump for pains, neither joys, this is just a path that i have to walk on and go through, and finish, and when i arrive there, another maze opens itself, like some kind of doors which lock and close themselves the moment i enter for what life is exactly? it is personal, it is i who must wade through its water flow to its river fall from its cliffs, rise to its skies, explode to its jubilation, rain to its drought, fill in the cracks, conceal its cancers, survive its hurdles, drink its poisons, and then die with all my colors flowers on my sides, sunset at my back, their tears on my palms their whispers passing through my ears end to end like a wind gushing through my windows......

RIC S. BASTASA
The Meaning Of Distance

i think i understand now
the meaning of distance

it is a way of avoiding how to hurt you once more what i can offer is only a shady memory of this and that a shadow in the night walking away because there can be no permanence in us we touch and go and the pain lingers more and this is what distance can do it can very well heal us both again and make us live life perhaps a little longer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Meaning Of My Name....

'forever or alone,
ruler;
peaceful ruler;
powerful leader'.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Meaning Of My Sunset

i know what a sunset means you always equate it with surrender and defeat

i have a different version though it is the flaming

the burning of the last cloud the spreading of my blood to the sea the blackening of my horizon an end that deserves

a commendation
for its bravery

still glorious till the last orange light, the last fight for light.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Meaning Of Our Lives

the meanings of our lives are not laundry clothes waiting for the sun waiting to become clean and dry

the meanings of our lives are on the women with dirty hands surveying the stains and putting bleaching agents and taking care of everything the go where the real action is they’re not lazybones they make things done they know what a nice finish is all about.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Meaning Of Those Three Words....

the sun had set then we too turn off the lights i still do not know why we count not stop playing with the meaning of those three words...

x x x x

misalop ang adlaw
gipalong ta ang suga ambot nganong di man
kita makaundang sa pagduladula sa
kahulugan sa tulo
ka pulong....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mediocre In Class Who Made Good Money

class reunions serve no purpose other than advertising yourself at the end of the year that you made good.

you are there not because you are interested about the welfare of those who failed you are there to be acknowledged that the teachers did you wrong by not putting you at the top on those years you are there to prove to them that you were no nonsense never a nincompoop, you are going to spend a lot of money to drive your point and you shall be at your pedestal of success the most honest of all the teachers who is old and retired still is not convinced about you you were the cheat in the class and you are still the worst cheat in the city sometimes the cheat wins you just proved it now.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Meeting At Shakey's Davao City

i know why you did not come as invited
at the Shakey's

after 35 years it would have been another opportunity for knowing you

seeing you
and perhaps hugging you and kissing you for another goodbye

are you afraid for the ugly change? we suffer the same destiny

the wrinkled hands
the memory loss
the long sought and chosen door in that temple
of silence

we had the courage to be there eating pizza and drinking soda
and having fried chicken and mojos
and for once not talking about our medicine and diseases

we have seen our ugly selves and we are not afraid the mirror and the glass the crowd and the noise we miss all these we were once young and we had no regrets

onward we say after that meeting
to the great divide we will work out for this belief
that we shall still remember that we still recognize each other despite the pains....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Meeting: A Monologue Of Elizabeth Bishop, His Translator

'I didn't know him at all.
He's supposed to be very shy.
I'm supposed to be very shy.

We've met once — on the sidewalk at night.
We had just come out of the same restaurant, and he kissed my hand politely when we were introduced.'

RIC S. BASTASA
The Melting Snowman

crhistmas is coming and the snowman
is here in the tropical country such as the Philippines

a carrot for its nose mangosteen for its eyes and white soap suds for its body and face

a home made scarf will do to give it a feel of winter

when i was small i imagine how nice is snow how good looking is the snowman how a sled feels how fragile could snowflakes be as awareness grows extending boundaries

from the north pole to the south from iceland to dubai imaginations fall
realities are stacks of boxes in the warehouses of
the mind

now, as i see it in the middle of the heat in this third world state a snowman would surely melt....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Memories

the memories have become brown leaves with the slight touch of the wind this summer
all of them fall to the ground some will be blown far away some will stay and crack and become dust

in a little while,

i will hear the sound of everything the wind blowing,
the falling of the leaves
the cracking and then how the dust
whispers

that it still want to stay and wait even longer for the next season of rain like some seeds.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Men Are Killing The Life Of The Air....

this early morning
i take my walk on the path leading to the rice-fields

the men are killing the worms with Japanese pesticides the white herons feed on poison

what else could that be?

the national geographic makes the news that eggs of herons easily cracks and fledgling do not survive agricultural teachers die of colon cancer

and the causes remain undisclosed
there is no cure

for men killing air for companies making poisons the herons still fly and catch and eat the double dead worms

the air is foul and turn back from the walk i cannot carry my heart it is heavier than steel.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Men In Tabon

in the mountains of Tabon
the folks are into a revolution

even they cry, 'we want to take our land back!
this is ours!'

i remember once as a child when father took me here riding on a horse for three days before reaching the old shack i have only seen the monkeys mocking at our presence grandfather hired the natives who only love bananas to plant the coconut trees as they make love with their many wives morning till night time wanting to seed the earth who had more to give for their generation now they are crying, ' we want this land back! this is ours!'

it is too late, the land is bald.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Men Of Hay

the Board has declared that men of hay
are curse to society
and that
this society cannot function that well and strong enough if men are put there and they are all those kinds of stuff that hay is made of

so they burn all men of hay and they think that is the right move for society to survive

laws are made to ban hay

i look at their fields
i go inside their backyards there they plant hay and make breeds of them there they mold the men of hay and give them names

when you look at their creations they never look like hay anymore never smell like one of them those that they once decreed to be burned

when the men of hay that they breed and give names are all ready

you introduce them to society they are now the leaders of their new games for in truth they love their own men of hay for they follow orders from them and give them fame and fortune and make them believe that they all shall live in grandeur forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Men Of Her Life

a hundred or some men of her life coming and getting out of her mind

names of men
yet not one of their lips and tongues and hands or a finger has taken hold of her single nipple

the evenings
are figments of her
imagination
the bed has not sounded
the squeaks
the moans
never, the legs
still fathoms apart

bodies of men
piled like boats one after the other with their names
on each, burning falling, ashes

the sea clear
and silent
like patience merely staring

not a word
shall insult

RIC S. BASTASA
The Merciful God.....

his revelations
about his past gives me that feeling of awe, that feeling that you never expect him
to be so,

if you could have only known that course of life would have been different not thinking that you were in the same boat with him and,

what you had in mind
was like moon gleaming
at noon, like sun setting at the wrong hour, like stars that keep on falling without that regard that a dark night would be too grievous,

now everything has changed, appearances turn off what used to be a spark of those moments, he keeps

enigma as you keep on writing about what could have been, thankful that what happened to him,

did not happen to you and God must be as always at your side
always ready with his Mercy.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Message

o master, i get the point i must write, and must make them understand about a place that is devoid of houses and trains. o master, i get the message i must write a poem about a mirage, things that seem to be, but are not,
i must take them to that place of haze, and yet the flowers are so real, that someone did not just smell but take some petals to eat. all of these ransom faces they take for granted what reality
is all about.
It is the understanding that things are better be left alone.
They grow without us, the grass.
They spin, without us, the planets The sun stays in place, even if explode our minds.
This the message, we are here to drink the water
why do we have to make one?
why do we have to explain why?
O master, let us live.
We have taken everything for granted.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Message Of The Wind

it is your coldness
typed in sighs
in the wind.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Message Straight From The Heart

i wonder
how you love a friend?
what message is there
from your heart when you do not even know how to say
hello.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Metamorphosis Of F. Kafka

one day
he finds himself converted into a giant cockroach he does not know about it at first until he wakes up and looks at himself in the mirror he changes his taste for food now attracted to left overs dislikes water and

light
dislikes people and events
and cannot relate to the morning news on TV

his door has now remained closed and no one is allowed to enter except his dear sister who feeds him morsels

in time he begins to understand how is it to be a cockroach how humans have been too cruel to their state

and then
he writes about Kafka and The Metamorphosis

that is the real story until the cockroach dies until Kafka recovers again away from Ward 10.

RIC S. BASTASA
i have descended following instinct.

i shall rise with wisdom totally changed.

and then the pain diminishes and then the grief is gone.

silence reigns the heart is confident as steel.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Metaphor Of Himself

what are you saying in what you paint? the wall clock in your head your left eye is closed your right eyes stare to the wind the big lizard flies in the canvass of yellow and the louse is made gigantic than the sun that lies beside a tree without leaves
the frame is a window and it looks out to the sea
it is not there
the big water
are you trying to say that time heals?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Metaphor Of Madaya Hunger that emaciated child asking for food for his younger sister is but a part of the bigger picture, beyond this frame is the complete story of the powers that be whom we do not see but who can stop and make go of

everything
they who hold the switch of even day and night, war and peace, two faces of civilization: one that they destroy on screen and the other that they build on sand, the sky is broken, buildings like chalk crumple and children are murdered.

The one that asks for bread on winter time is you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Metaphor Of The Pigeons Cooing

pigeons live inside the ceiling taking the entrance at the broken side of the gutter

i can hear them coo

some eggs hatch and some fledglings are cooing

one day i have not heard of them anymore and the rats are singing like pigeons cooing these rats wanting to get attention tomorrow i will take away the gutter so the pigeons will know that we are missing them

RIC S. BASTASA
The Metaphoric Garden...

all the while, literalism is wished. Why bother with some allusions? One can be direct to the point and be understood point-blank, no holds bar, black is black and white is white,
a spade is a spade is a spade, the cause is that which the cause is caused,
bluntly, candidly,
what the heck is this going around the bush and figuring out what is hidden through symbols and concealed through some metaphors....

but my dear, this is the realm of what we want you to know and on the other hand we also want you not to know
so well....

and that is, precisely this thrill, remember those imaginary toads in the real garden?

or those real toads in the imaginary garden,

feel them, they are all here, hear them, but my god, by god, you cannot see them
here... not yet....
The Metaphors Of My Morning After A Nightmare

you have misplaced yourself and regrets are here abounding the white monkey sits upon a red rock dreaming about the white crows the spotted panther runs in the desert of chocolate and got stuck upon a wish of sandy stars in the dusty galaxy where the pink owls are building a home most things are misty and dew is a place where most of the lost ones put their hopes the blue school of fish are happy with your torn nets with the eyes of panda as mesh your boat though confident with its rudders and rigs bleeds upon a hole in its heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Midnight Song That I Hear tonight i know something so lovely your midnight song speaking of someone who cannot sleep tonight because tomorrow

he will be burying his beloved who died of cancer of the breast tonight i know something so sad and meaningful it speaks of departure of someone that he loves now resting

in the arms of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Migratory Birds....

singing praises
to God
early morning before the birds roosting on the tree
begin anew their migration towards faraway
lands where you yourself have not gone to....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mind

all these are in the mind.
Without the mind, what can i be?
or You be?

Tonight, i shall sleep alone.
I enter in my mind and embrace happiness there.

It is free. IT is delightful.
Just me without any complication at all.

The mind.
It is all in there.

Why should i waste my time with you?
I am fed up.
You don't make any sense at all.

You are a tapestry
Unfinished with my hands.

You are the sun
Yet i am no longer within your galaxy.

Out of orbit
I QUIT.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mind Always Returns Home...

the mind as usual is at its selfish tour it says after a hard day’s work it deserves to be pampered by such experience it goes to places where it has never been and meets what in reality should not have been it wears the uninhibited wings and arrives on such prohibited portions hopping and hoping to find what it thinks it must find upon arriving there it looks around and finds desire mostly lust to be blunt about it the one that it cannot hold when time is sane and sober when it is at the embrace of logic and reason it loses itself in some dark nooks and meets the characters of this fiction the dances begin the drunkeness is bottle by bottle and the unimaginable wildness is from one forest tree to another then a hand with the faces of some shadows tries to pull his body and signals where and how insanity must be fulfilled somehow

at that moment
he stands still and remembers yet not removing the masks and fingers he ponders that this cannot be that this has gone beyond what it can take within lest there will be bursting and later on the scattering and the eventual dying of the spirit

there are things which are too beautiful and yet cannot be touched
&
so

he backs out and flies away coming home the mirror sees and does not say anything but the welcome gestures are clear the house opens its arms the windows greet him about a beautiful bright day the self who is king and sane is now in breakfast is ready and the morning news on TV is on display there is no murder and there is nothing about slander.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mind Of The Wise Man Is Life A Roof

the mind of the wise is like a roof

it welcomes everything
rain and sun and snow and hail and sand and even cats and dogs
and even the rumored rain
of fish
and spears

and like a roof everything slides, and falls and then become gone below it the house of life stays

the dining table and the candle lights the glass of wine and the lips of the beloved

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mind That Is Inside Your Skull

it is small your stomach i am sure is bigger
unlike your feet
it does not travel
unlike your eyes
it does not close
it is there
even in your dreams
your imagination
travels like the wind to lands unknown
when you are hurt
the mind finds shelter in reason unlike the heart that weeps until all the tears run dry
the mind is here but its essence is out there groping in the dark dancing with the winds of change
sunbathing like you
wanting also a little tan.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mind...

travels and travels
some more
non-stopping at junctions disregarding
the intersections and intertwines
even if you say that all those forty years are faithful to your side
the mind knows no bounds
except the limits sets
by our own
hands
we should have let it go and even be gone without any regrets at all
because it is its nature
it is beyond our body
our hold
we should have set it like our souls
ephemeral
infinite
always grasping for what we have not met
what we have not tasted
that which shocks us
for a while
and yet
rightfully ours.
The Mindless Skies.....

far from it
love has nothing to do with it

i take your
body
you take mine
we do what is shameless to them
which we enjoy most with all the feelings
in our fingertips

i told you do not turn on the light because what
you see
will be harsh

i whisper
close your eyes
my dearest
if possible
imagine
all other things
besides us

the sea
the chasing lovers
the silent sands
the musical waves
the mindless
skies....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Miniature Universe

the space is your mind every blood in you is a journey of
water
every bone is land and flesh
a home
you are a universe of your own why can't you see the glory of your stars the haven of your moon why can't you shine as
the sun?
your heart and your mind are your gods.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mining Story

they scraped the hills with trees
the green grasses of homes
are gone
they dug those big holes
looking for metals

manganese, gold,
for your jewelries
and other accessories
coal for your fuels

the natives are dislocated the children lost their birds chickens and pigs are butchered for they have no place to stay

the hills are like criminals their heads cut off the trails here are like intestines penetrating the belly of this
earth

listen! do you hear the drunkards the government and mining firms! listen! do you hear the sounds of guns and the last living screams of the chieftains
the mayors whom they voted betrayed them

listen! do you hear the explosions of bombs
the mountains are cracking skulls
brains are spilling on the rocks

listen!  do you hear the guards coming with their M-16s
and barking dogs

Run! Run! Run for your lives Lest you forget
We are the last chickens and pigs alive

Do not look back

Those  are the children and wives of the chieftains
Those  are the hungry natives begging in the cities

Their Homes gone
Their Hopes shattered

RIC S. BASTASA
The Miracle Of Psalm 23

played on the You-tube psalm 23
letters synchronized with the notes
of the piano music

somehow
the days become confident drops of water knowing what rivers are perfection comes in a heart that is full

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mirage Beyond

what is in your mind?
a house to build,
a path to make that which brings you
to a home
a clear pond
where you soon must bathe and cool your skin
a tree full of leaves sturdy barks and strong trunks
a place for you to
rest

perhaps you are thinking about death
and all of those who find you still useful
shall knock the wood.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mirror One Night

Last night I stood before Lolo Enggoy’s mirror
When he died in April
I never cried
In the holes of my eyes
I jump
Into the suicidal cliffs Of his death
Carrying with me my fingers
My hands
I travel where I come from Where there are no footprints Into blindness into nothingness Into vast dark silences I return to the surface
Of my eyes—
The mirror breaks to the floor In a hundred bleeding piece
RIC S. BASTASA
The Mirror Self....

and the day comes when you finally write this one it looms here inside the heart for such a long long time until it finally comes out telling you its name its origins
its hang-ups and dreams and you gaze at it all with pity and it smiles at you full of understanding saying its name so sounding just like you...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mirror That Never Breaks

here i am
feeling abandoned

those who face me
stab me at my back
and i am hit
badly but

then
i leave them
all
smiling,

i shall not tell the whole truth about how i feel

it's all mine
this world
i have conquered it with a wry smile

there is no use fighting now
or arguing about who i am i found a place where i am at a complete
rest

there is a mirror there that receives no light from anyone it has that inner light that speaks
that i am doing right

it is this mirror that matters
it never breaks
The Mirror....

it is the one that shows the back of my back,
and the front
of my front,
it is not the normal mirror that you see that you can buy anywhere or just have somewhere

it is the mirror of art, the pathways of the subconscious the credible lies of the obvious

it is art, it does not die, neither does it live, it just slips away for no known
cause
there is no need to explain it only demands
a little
feeling.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mirror.......

i check myself.
One way, and i think the best one is seeing myself in the mirror.

Close-up.
Touching my mustache.
Staring at my own eyes.
Following the lines of my cheek, down the chin,

opening my mouth,
my teeth are not that white my tongue is not red something is hanging
inside
like a bat, it can make the sound

eyes are wrong
i am not ugly
i have not gotten old like my contemporaries

some died early
i do not blame them perhaps life is not that promising

majority says it is a misery
always sorrow here and there and disappointments

if it is a painting there is more smudge
of black and deep red
boldness in the strokes and lines
i check myself
feel my temples

i am alive and that is good enough
for me.

i guess, like you,
(as you read this)
we are still lucky

do you have a hand?
shake mine.

do not ask me if i have lips
because for sure i still have them

and the only possibility for it to still be lips is to share them

if you like....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Miseries Of Men...

on this meeting let us avoid talking about miseries what for? what is the use?

for sure, we have the same common denominators

why talk about us? there is only this fear, this falling out from the wings of the plane

dis this ship without anchors dis this sinking without a floor let us be drunk and make merry we are into this and we are too many

RIC S. BASTASA
The Misery Of Others

there is fun when one talks about the misery of other people, there is joy in the realization that others' miseries are far greater than yours, there is this celebration of lesser pains, there is this misery in us in not grieving for the misery of those whom we have not known so well,
those whose beatings of the heart are slowing,

we do not think that we also slowly die upon the death of another

we have not seen such link between our misery and theirs it is the thin line that divides the true man from the least of the the animal kingdom

there is this comfort that the worm cannot say anything

RIC S. BASTASA
The Misery That Seeks More Company

when failures
fall down
they decide not to rise from the place of their perdition

from where they fall hardly surviving on hands grappling
and breaths grasping

they simply sit there
silently
looking for more of their kin and kind like some kind of bus passengers waiting for their trip

to nowhere

RIC S. BASTASA
The Misery That Seeks More Company....

if there is something wrong i console myself with, oh, it is just a state of the mind, a matter of perspective, nothing to worry about, but then things are really going wrong, blood pressure rises, anxiety sets in, loneliness gets wacky, and emptiness spreads like a mantel on the table, but oh, i still assure myself, it is just a matter of feeling, of looking at these things, we are miserable because we allow ourselves to feel miserable. But, let us get this straight, we are miserable, and then the last defense comes, to save ourselves and just survive, and this is it, so what? so what?

are you not miserable? ows?

RIC S. BASTASA
what i learned was not the case of an instant coffee with readily available cream.

no, it isn't.

i walk for five days.
pass a river eight times.
climb a mountain for a week.
i tell you
there is no rest.
not a second.
it is not prohibited
it is not
not just available.

it is not a race for
time,
it is just the inevitable.
something you cannot
avoid.
a life time
a life style.

oh it was an arduous task, a very hard journey
and it is not worth telling.

however, when i begin
to write,
it cannot be avoided
it shows itself.

unnecessarily.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Misgiving Of Alessandra

alessandra
though a poetess in her own right
still entertains
misgivings
against paul who brought her in an isolated island
taking a boat
just the two of them
for there
he only asked her to gaze at the moon
which had shown brightly that night

love did nothing
to wipe the wetness of her lips....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Misplaced Poem Of Gluck

The Wish

Hi There!
I see you're enjoying the site, and just wanted to extend an invitation to register for our free site.
The members of old poetry strive to make this a fun place to learn and share - hope you join us! - Kevin

the wish of Louise Gluck?

surely, something is missing somewhere, the wish is suppressed.

anybody, find that wish for me?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mistake

it was a different thing that you see from that you feel a war between the bulge of the eyes and the pumps of the heart the lines of the palms are clear nobody wants to mind now in the middle of too much desire it is the heart that wins slashing the blinks of the wondering eyes
the lines of the palms are clear there is no doubt the heart bleeds upon its mistake and begins to remember the veils and the sonorous sounds of the funeral bells of the little town

the lines of the palms are clear
there is no doubt about it at the end every part shall accept the fate no regret
once again the self rides upon the wings of destiny until the final word of the years rest

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mists Of The Mountain

we sit here facing the mists of the mountains
this November as we escape city life
we catch a glimpse of who we are what we really are the mists slowly fade away and we stop

to ponder
we exhale we inhale we taste a moment
of life
we feel a little of death we prepare for the next step

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moan Of Man....

on an island
he escapes
hoping that he can sing
hymns of praise harping on a helluva halleluiah
halleluiah

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mob

it only takes the touching of the tail end and the nose of one caterpillar
to form the unthinking mob

then the motion
in circles begin

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mob Detests An Obstruction

the mob has no tolerance for obstructions, a rock for instance in the middle of a river shall soon be removed, by force and later what you see is a vast river flowing endlessly.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mocking Bird

she is new here and she does not know that on the roof of this house beside a big tree under the blue clouds lives the mockingbird...

she is the butterfly fluttering over the flowers defaf she never hears about two mocking birds talking to each other in perfect understanding without the use of any word

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mocking Bird On The Tree Fronting The House...

a mocking bird sits on a branch of a tree that fronts the house that papa made

papa is gone.

a mocking bird left but one
sunny day

after the heavy rains for months the mocking bird comes back it is bringing silence unlike all the other mocking birds in town

the mocking bird is dead a boy abandoned by his mother stoned it

now the window if you walk a little distant from the house and sit on a bench across the road looks like a Cheshire cat giving Alice that fable smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Model

feelings are here
guests on my breakfast table, in the dark they are crazy dancers playful like disco lights, this is a bright day for me i set aside feelings, choke love, and even murder it i want to appear like a king to my kin unblemished by the alterations of feelings, i am a model of restraint my polo shirt is white and my shoes are shiny black i put my suit and my tie i pocket my smile
and
go inside my office
stiff-necked
and hurt.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Model Couple Of The Century: We

We are angry and so we decide to take a walk today She carries a knife in her pocket

But I will be ready; I am taking her for nice walk On a cliff.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Model Of The Community

inside a man in my stomach speaks and it is drunk as can be heard with the use of words hastily spoken and i pretend that i am listening, when i pretend, actually i hear nothing i am listening to another voice outside my ears it is the song of a bird at nigh time when all birds are supposed to be asleep except the bats which do not speak to me but busy with what they catch for eating, to survive this ordeal of having someone live inside you you are compelled to be a pretender forever and people who do not understand and who mistake your silence as a virtue, will always like you for by then to them you are a man of peace, you live in the house of your silence you disturb no neighbor, you raise no eyebrow, you spread the gospel of contentment, and all around your houses are the doves that you feed everyday without fail.

i tell you, i am about to crack like a glass with hot water boiling inside my fragile emptiness but i have mastered this art of silence, and to a certain extent have learned to live with it like anybody else who like me for what i really am not.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Modern Critic

You are the coolest Monkey
Jumping on my gullibility I tried to put on my ears Back alive in my head Reviewing my raucous listening
Of your underpinning
I put on the face of the gargoyle
To frighten you
Yet you keep rolling
On the vines of my hair I try to be academic But I have become moot
And so hypothetical
I tried Victorian poetry
To repel you
But you are still there Teasing me
In fact, you are laughing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Modern Martyr In The Kingdom Of God

i've just seen the picture of a man devout catholic gunned down in broad day, falling to the ground,
and declared another martyr for mother church,

sooner he becomes a saint because he died
to the hands of the fanatics the unbelievers, sometimes i ask myself if this is the only way to become a martyr, the only way to be a saint, (does it really matter if one becomes a saint?) i guess, there is another happy child of God who has worked for the church who cooked faith, who served beliefs, who traveled far just to show how good God is,

the happy child does not have to die for God wants him to be with his side, smiling and alive,

He too is a saint. He sowed happiness.
He did not plant guilt. He did not grown scruples.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Modernity Of Technology Perhaps, Disowns It.

the church bell rings
at 5 in the morning

the door in the kitchen makes the sound of its opening the brown maiden starts sweeping the leaves on the streets last night's howls of the storm still haunts

silence is precious
so nil, so rare

the modernity of technology perhaps, disowns it and those who dislike it grow the madness inside their minds, like cancers without cure

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moment

..and then i discover what a moment is it is like a stair each time when i take the step when i hold the rail on its side when i savor what warmth and hardness is when i gaze upon a step that i put upon another

wood
and then on another looking only whenever i take it no longer beyond
or after

and without knowing i have reached the door and into my room
i enter where i am met by this chair where i sit
for a while where a bed covered with blankets and laid with silk covered pillows meet me
and then
seduce me
to soundly sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moment Has Come

the moment has come when i have to leave everything as is d this as is where is basis of mind frame where an object at rest must remain at rest and that object in motion must remain in motion conception it is. it was. it will be.

d this tree i promise it i will not cut it i will not pluck from any of its stem any leaf the shoelace remains tied upon its tip a toe shall continue with a nail uncut there will be no trimming until a forest tree fulfills itself with its wish to kiss the cheek of the sky this is the moment when i leave everything to themselves because i will not be around anymore

it is a happy moment d the one who leaves smiles towards its place of destination and the one who is left nods to the ground that is holding its feet the sky shall be well lighted by the sun d the rivers glow and the shorelines run into that distance of eternity this is the moment that i have been waiting all my life d that for once you shall be happy because i have given up all rules and have set myself free from all your sorrows.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moment I See Your Face

i can steal some more gazes beside you
i will not be bored in this trip sliding across the foamy seas crossing longer bridges hopping from one island to another seeing old ancestral houses made of hardwood recalling the ormoc disasters with thousands dead floating bloating on the river

i see your face again i have always seen them all over again i am alive again i should have been dead years ago
without you

i hold your hand
you look at me
there are no words
on these wanderings these travels
of thoughts and cares
inside our hearts

the tourist guide speaks
'this is the house he made for her the shrine and these walls to protect her from harm' we are holding each others arms as we listen

i do not think of walls neither will i in the future build them for you

your face is beside mine the camera clicks and another picture is taken now we shall go to another room the tour guide speaks again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moment That Love Is Gone

when the heart is too far away
the mouth begins to shout so the ears can be heard

two people whose skins
touch
yet when the hearts are too distant
the sounds become inaudible
between them
imaginary mountains
wide seas
and newly created
monsters

RIC S. BASTASA
The Momentary

a busy life
stops for a while

like sipping coffee
inside a restaurant

facing the road merely looking

passing time staring at the moment

RIC S. BASTASA
The Monkey In The Neighborhood....

i love that monkey

it asks food from me and when given it hides it all inside his mouth tongue-in-check if you have seen it and then it asks some more begging like a pitiful child without a mother and if begging does not work it charms you with its tiny hands its fingers mapping for lice in your hair while its tail tickles your armpit you feel that and remember something before when you were once as young & horny as that imaginary gazelle it is this begging game

that you like most

you are not a monkey

stop it

it does not look good for you

you lose your charm
and even the monkey thinks that by imitating it
you have become detestable.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Monkeys

and after he cut the grasses plowed the farm and planted it all with corn

the monkeys simply watch and keep on playing on the branches of the trees,

and when
the corn grew and showed their big ears and
golden hair,

there and then the monkeys came and made their claim.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Monotony Of A Vicious Circle

when you run in a circle you arrive at nowhere you pass by the same lane over and over again

so to kill this monotony you build your own set of fences and walls with the end that even if you pass on the same lane over and over again somehow the walls may create the illusion of a border the fence an illusion of height so that you may then claim that you have hurdled an obstruction passed a hard test survived a certain difficult trial which you have freely created yourself

you think you can deceive the circle?
sorry but this circle will always remain as a circle even if the walls reach the heavens even if the fences shut you away from the neighbors who live on the same lane with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Monster Of Nothingness

As we grow older the monster of nothingness comes with very sharp teeth and thick skin and tongues of fire

many are swallowed by it, feeling so useless that they lose their names and identities, nowhere to go on addresses forgotten the monster of nothingness has claimed lives and lives on islands not connected by

any bridge
no boats sail there nothing to connect meaning to another meaning losing the fulness of life, the succor to sudden deaths to the chasms of void cliffs falling, falling, fading, losing every sound of life which can only be heard in youth now, i am too confronted with this monster but i have already prepared my defenses i turn into a rock obstructing its path hard as steel, its teeth break into glass fragments, its thick skin pierced by the sharpness of my walls i shut my eyes, memorize my name, kept a home the address of my being this is the Rock, i am it, and i am perfectly protected.

For now, to be a rock is to be alive again and defeat the monster of nothingness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Monsters Within The Earth

Be not harsh to me and be not quick
be gentle as a cat
fur, softness, whiskers pliant to the tips
of my fingers
be kind
be so compassionate to my plight
for i have lived in the layers of
my skin
to every pain and struggle in every bark in every phloem
be so deep as an ocean in understanding what love i have buried inside my bones
you do not know how secretly i have loved you how i sealed my lips and closed my eyes and open then again with the salt of my tears how i have hidden from the world my protest against its unreasonable rules its skewed definition of love and its terrains
where some have stayed instead in caves rather than run naked
in the open
fields where reeds sing above marshes where birds lay eggs on the waters where monsters
hide deep in the earth not knowing that they too know how to love and care for what the world have never known much.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Monument Of All Our Wrongs

i build a house
no one likes it.

the house is empty
i put some chairs.

someone comes and says, this house is lonely, it needs a sound it is boring and needs a paint i put a tree beside its stairs i grow another fence

i put a lone bulb on a post and leave the house for good that is what the house is made there is always missing something is always wrong this is the house of regret it is the monument of all our wrongs.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon And The Frog

the frog had some regrets marring the moon
that forever in its life as frog
the moon it can never swallow tonight they will talk under the shadow of its majestic light

the frog
croaks about this final resolve this separation
for good

let the croaking begin

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon And The Window

it is the middle of the night
open the window
let the moon in

yes the moon always gets in through the window not the door

did you not notice it?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon And Us

'Now and then it is good to pause in our pursuit of happiness
and
just be happy'

tonight
we shall sit on one of those benches in the park

we'll just be
silent
upon the touch of our hands

as the moon showers us
with its golden light

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon Chasing That Sole Shining Star

how sad to see the moon taking the shape of a ship chasing a single shining star ahead between them
a huge continent of
black clouds,

and when it rained
finally
everything is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon Comes With Dignity and all the trees standing still on the mountains greeted her with sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon Is Full Tonight

calldred by the crystal sea and the waters

are so calm like the silk robe that you undress before me

life is too beautiful for the sadness that we bring to desires we must fulfill to love we must death till the moon is so full tonight let us embrace that lovely light.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon On The Veranda Of The House

the moon tonight is a river of light slowly flowing on the wooden floor
of the veranda of my house...

i bathe

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon Over The Pond

the moon sits over the pond her legs refracted
in shimmers

her gown spreading love all over the grass

the grasses seep every delight satisfy their blades and then soundly sleep

the little blue bird high up on the tree
looks with all wonder

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon Realizes The Importance Of The Sun

feminine moon
fearing the masculine sun preferring
the presence of the friendly
eunuch stars

halfway in the darkness of its night
the moon realizes
the sun is missed

badly enough it wishes for the break of day but then the curse
has been made

there is no way for feminine moon to be with the masculine sun again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon Sighed

perhaps the moon
sighed

how could i have been so cowardly

not to have kissed
your lips

under its golden
light

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon Was An Orange And So Full.

it told her that time when we were sixteen that there is a place where the moon is orange and full, and she believed me and so we went there and she asked what do we do here and i did not answer.

so many things happened then time is and had always been another magician the illusionist in us cannot but love it just the same.
we thought we have forgotten our own chosen madness which was too delicious on something too sumptuous a party for two, a drink for one, and a smoke in circles inside a room of secrets. someday we shall master time make it come back and then make us see how sweet we were
that time when we were sixteen in that place where the moon was an orange and so full.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moon, The Sun And The Fire

to the moon
i gaze the whole night at the balcony of this house

to the sun
i raise my arms and
close my eyes
to its power i see
red

and to the fire within myself
i keep always
alive

to all these i thank durga

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moonless In You...

so many yes so many and so insignificant that sometimes
you think
what for? there is no meaning there? there is nothing that i cannot understand in what you are saying?

you challenge the world tell me directly
why all the winding ways? why all these concealed destinations?

you are blind
and yet so fully awake

you are here at the center of this universe but you are never
the sun....

RIC S. BASTASA
The More Distance There Is The More People Become Wise.

what happens when you create a certain distance?

blind spots are slowly disappearing and what used to be really exciting had become so very very boring and even, create more space and distance and slide a bit to another block of time nay, it gives out what once used to be subsumed as detestable.

the more distance there is the more people become wise

give me space then give me more time it is this isolation that makes me think some more and find all the reasons why should i be wrong.

RIC S. BASTASA
The More Of Me In There, The Merrier It Would Be

i am happy
i am telling the mirror who is always silent about whatever i say since it only reflects me a silent movie,

i am happy i reasoned out because i do not care.
because i do not mind what hurts me.
because when you hurt me i always respond by deleting you from my world and then you do not exist and then when you are in pain
i always say i do not know you i haven't heard about you.

and that is what is peace to us.
did i not get you right when you said that i have nothing to do with your decisions since it is yours then it will always be yours whatever it means.

and i always repeat what my teacher used to say
hell is other people.

today i write something personal.
it has nothing to do with you.
it is indeed impersonal, it has nothing to do with me either.

you see, i only get what i see.
i do not even say a word to avoid any judgment.
i am amazed i am telling myself in front of the mirror.
i am curious. You see, i have no feelings at all.

for now i am the mirror myself reflecting everything away from what arrives on me they pass through me and i do not hold anything. i let them all go, as i delve deeper into the silence of my own glass.

birds sometimes mistake me as a window.
and i really did not mind it when they hit me and then die.
it happens most of the time.
i expect it and it means nothing at all.

and so i always talk to myself.
and i am telling you, i am happier that way.
i do not need you. i do not need anybody.

if a stone, by chance hits and breaks me into pieces, do not worry. i become many, and as the saying goes,
the more of me in there, the merrier it would be.

RIC S. BASTASA
relationships are inversely proportional, like what we say sometimes we do not really mean, like when we are angry, we curse even the people we love, and then, but then, when they die their horrible deaths, we cry like a river, and we miss them, as though we too like to die tomorrow, when we love, we put a break, sometimes not to collide, in such speed, and kill the innocent ones, who think that we are careful enough, but this is one thing, when by chance we see our faces in the mirror, their eyes, speak much about our true natures, and then we begin to filter, to sift grains from gaff, or seeds from dusk, tasks from ask, what i finally love most is my freedom to lie, when i also have to protect myself from you, and in my sleep, i think how funny this world has become, dignifying fraud, loving shallowness, lording it over, keeping hearts from pains, making more mysteries, and the more things are not understood, the better it is to be likable.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Morning After By A Room Window Where We Sleep

one thing with light is its beautiful muteness

it comes bringing silence and lands on the pillows and blankets not even the cat's careful feet not even the soft feather of a sparrow the curtains open and everything is still someone leaves without the use of a word i must stop thinking for i too must keep going

RIC S. BASTASA
The Morning Chants

ty they are like
)cicadas
chirping on the dry
seasons
trying to harmonize
the sadness of the fallen leaves
every morning
when the winds are dead when the chimes
are silent
there the chants begin to fill in the spaces of this dying town
my heart listens.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Morning Chill....

it would have been a nice, easy walk, in the park, or in the mountain trails, or on the shore,
or just along the countryside pathways, leading to a river, crossing it, and taking the walk on deserted lands, it would have been more healthful with sweat coming out taking away the toxins from this sedentary lifestyle, but here you are facing the screen, pressing the keys, into a more pondering state, deep thoughts, winding and rewinding some tapes of regrets and disappointments that most of your friends do not know or if they know, they won't bother, for this is what it is about, living your life as they also live theirs, taking your burdens with you as they also lift theirs,
for in the actual state of affairs we only have to care about ourselves, learning how to live how to survive, how to project that image of happiness hoping to help them too.

the convolutions of thoughts in the brain, going somewhere, far away, returning still at the break of morning, steady on a chair.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Morning Is Full

The morning is full of storm in the heart of summer.

The clouds travel like white handkerchiefs of goodbye, the wind, traveling, waving them in its hands.

The numberless heart of the wind beating above our loving silence.

Orchestral and divine, resounding among the trees like a language full of wars and songs.

Wind that bears off the dead leaves with a quick raid and deflects the pulsing arrows of the birds.

Wind that topples her in a wave without spray and substance without weight, and leaning fires.

Her mass of kisses breaks and sinks, assailed in the door of the summer's wind.

(a pablo neruda collection)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Morning Is The Poetess

as you relax
this early morning
you meet it ... and greet it,

saying hello to its newly arrived light
from the window of your
soul
from the gates of your temple
from the warm arms of your room
you hug
a very intangible
lover .... this morning

this cool
beautiful morning

dressed in light golden

you do not compose
a poem for it
it composes a poem
for you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Morning Lights Outside The Kitchen Door...

must it be habit
that makes you turn off the light outside the kitchen at the break of day when the birds start to sing their songs

you save on electricity in the same manner that you budget your time and money

i've tried it once not putting off the lights from morning till night

some early birds that pick the early worms passing by the house with closed doors and windows with lights not switched off think that i am
dead

RIC S. BASTASA
The Morning Sun In Your Body

your veil is blown by the morning breeze
and your head shows a flowing hair touching your protruding breasts inviting me
to see the fullness of the morning sun

RIC S. BASTASA
The Morning World

this morning world of mine used to be calm and peaceful like my secret pond where the only guests are the blue kingfisher and the yellow fish on a predator-prey relationship on a stalemate of who's gonna eat who at the end
of the day
don't get lost for i am not through yet i may be lost myself these few days but i still have a hold of the rope that they hang on the beam of the ceiling of my
house

drun this morning the world is giving me the sounds of thunder with flashes of lightning like a disco house enclosed to rock loud music,
i prefer to be naked again and go back to sleep.

the signs are bad and i do not want to be part of any rage any anger any pain anymore i do not want to be a part of this conspiracy to inflict to eat what i cannot swallow to digest what poisons me i prefer to make love with you rather than scream and be one of those bad souls in a devil's party.

i hate conflagrations.
The Moslem And The Christian

by mere chance one day the christian and the moslem become neighbors the moslem fenced his house for fear that the christian may squat a part of its porch the christian on the other hand instructs his children not to befriend his children for fear of betrayal the moslem too instructs his kids to watch over their sleepers the christians mind you steal from the moslems he said the christian is cautious too on the thinking that moslems are terrorists on these set of prejudices they can never live happily ever after thus the christian-moslem story never ends.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mosquito And The Star....

out there
on top of the tree
the mosquito prided
that it has
flown above the star
inside the moon
its shadow
in huge proportion a gigantic feeling
on the reeling.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mosquito The Wall Clock And The Lonely Rose

imagine today that you are one of those wall clocks and your business is just to hang
on the wall
ticking and ticking

or just a flower vase with a rose filled with water not lonely though with a living mosquito wriggling
for its freedom

and so if you ask me at the stage of my life when everyone seems to be away from me i still wish that i would still be
myself
still human in all my endeavors

i can't imagine myself hanging on the wall ticking and ticking
or that lonely rose on the vase without
its feet
or that wriggling mosquito not even knowing what it will become when it gets its final freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moss Sleeps On The Rock Beside A River

how serene
the moss sleepy on the rock beside the river as rain gently falls

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moss That Loves The Stone

It is the moss that loves the stone Most. No matter what or when, the Moss somehow manages to stay Even without a why, they say.
But the moss keeps on sticking To the body of the stone that Keeps its nonminding stiffness.
It is cold, it is hard, it is unfeeling At all. It is the moss that keeps its Love. It sticks with it, rain or shine.
It rolls with it. It stays with it even In the desert, even it if means its Own death. It is the moss that sticks To the stone. It is its true lover.
In the river, the water has ordered The moss to leave. It ordered the stone To crush it. The moss cannot be Removed. It covered the stone.
It is loving it stone has Become the moss, and the stone
Is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Most Famous Poem

don't worry
be happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Most Normal Thing That Happens In The Mall

an ocean of people
inside the mall
many people are talking within themselves no one listens
to each his own minding the most normal thing that happens
here in the mall

RIC S. BASTASA
The Most Reliable Boat On Earth Through The Ages....

i've seen the shadow of a boat coming
it is still far but it is getting near the port
where i live
in one of those houses lining the white shore, at night i dream of its mast and its oar and some men busy with their tasks of keeping things smooth and in order

a dream is a black and white affair of silence like a charlie chaplin movie and the one sleeping is always its interesting watcher one cold and foggy morning i take a walk thinking that everything is still all right but whatever happens my dear (i may have not told you about it and hence i am so sorry) at that moment when i feel a prick

in my heart
i just keep calm and tell myself this happens normally everytime to every normal man...
(i assure myself there is nothing to worry God is kind, just and reasonable)

x x x x

this boat is decent may be old but it has always been the most reliable one through the ages and eons passengers who take the ride here always arrive at their destination safe and sound
and always on time....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Most That We Can Be

ah, shy away from imitation
there is no one
worth it

see yourself in the mirror what fine hair you have what sharp eyes
what big beautiful body what strong arm
what long and muscled
legs

you are the most beautiful man that you are there is no other
be the most of what you can be there is no other
you anyway

RIC S. BASTASA
The Most Usual Evening

ingrossed again
to the pages of the book you keep that
silence
contemptible silence unnoticed by this poet
lost in the pages of his thoughts into the labyrinths of barriers

forgive me
but it will always be like this the wings of ponder
never rest

RIC S. BASTASA
The Most Visible Mask

you have loved the most visible mask i have
my face

everyday, this face, tomorrow this face, yesterday this face

you are proud of my nose, and you tell all your friends about it aquiline, conquest of a nose, occupying almost all parts of your territory not even the hands but this face the mouth that eats you the eyes that close when i kiss you

the tongue that maps out what has to be found when lost this face, the most visible mask

inside
is the real face, the face of my mind it is thinking something else

all these years

the invisible mask is silent tomorrow shall be the scorn you must bear it,

you are fond of the most visible though not really enduring.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moth And The Flame In My Own Story

just this morning i look at you seeing to it that you shall not notice it to be honest, i look at your legs for they excite me making me a flying bird inside my small dark world a night of myself

for if you notice, what has it get to do with you
anyway

just this morning i keep an image of your pair of legs and they will excite me the whole day as though i am
victorious

i do not wish that you will recompense me for being foolish for being true in loving you i do not wish to make myself stupid to make you love me
you see
there is this big difference this distance that i have measured and it is so near to my destruction and so i keep it simple and segregated just your legs and my eyes, nothing more and nothing less beyond this two shortest distance are the restrained movements i know, if i go beyond this, i become a moth getting too near to a flame and then surely i will be burning my wings, fall to the ground and die or to be honest with you i become wingless, and the lizard nearby shall swallow me whole mercilessly.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moth Story

what saddens the moth was its loneliness in the darkness that covers its world it says that light is lovelier this nook is killing me and so it takes flight to its suicidal journey that it never knew was
until
you know what happened attracted by light it bathed itself in fire it died
what we did not know
and this we were not told was that it had lived happily ever after in its next life as part of light itself what we only saw was ash

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mother And The Little Child

there is a feeling sometimes that there are two of us in one room, when one talks one hears an echo but there is no surprise this happens most of the time one must stand corrected there is a war being waged the other one is dominant and calls the other stupid who after all does not listen and simply does what is felt what is wanted what is needed for the time being there is a wolf there and there is an white lamb there is a witch and there is a trusting traveler of a child one feels that this is just a cottage and lodging thing something that you can stay for the night and then leave early morning tomorrow and then shrug your shoulder and forget what happened on that dark night

when one cannot believe it and hence simply thinks that it is just a dream or even call it a dismissible nightmare something that is inevitable and as one pinches his arm

that thing
that horrible thing is simply forgotten one goes on a usual journey taking with him two shattered faces within him the dominant one keeps talking and talking like a nagging mother and just the same that little child inside you keeps its games not minding everything.

For as long as the toy is in the hands and for as long as it is not too dark to stop playing

'who cares? ' that is what is being muttered.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mother Of All Errors....

she regrets
having to split with her she wants to restore what was originally theirs, but, , ,

there is this big but,
there is no way that she can come back and take her hands again it is simply impossible the world as affected shrinks into a valueless cent, and those who surround her will never like it,

she went into a tantrum unable to read the name of her medicine her own dose of her own poison

bad karma, she finds herself in a situation of a dilemma

she is cursed to be alone now, crushed by her own loneliness defeated by the power of her own guilt Kim.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mother Per Fr. Orbos

SOMEONE SAID that robots will play a big role in the future—they function for hours, they never seem to run down, they are low on maintenance, and they do everything without praise, acknowledgment or attention.
Actually, robots are nothing new.

They used to be called mothers.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mother Sparrow

the mother sparrow does not know about a funeral how can it hold a white flower & entertain meaning using its black short beak?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mother Sparrow Grieves Upon The Untimely Death Of Her Beloved Fledgling today, there is no grand funeral like that of the death of a statesman

or that simple funeral fit for a laborer in the world of mankind,

the mother sparrow grieves over the death of her fledgling there is no burial

they do not know what are white flowers their meaning

the torn wings are carried by the worker-ants some useless feathers are left above a sand mound soon there are skeletons of frail bones baked throughout the year by the sun soon only dusts

the mother sparrow as we knew it from science does not keep a memory

they keep on their far journey nest from nest to nest on those seasons

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mother Who Hid Her Psycho Son

You drugged him in your house

The friendship was fine but what you did Was not right what you did was cheap

You bragged that everything is safe that Everyone in the house is sound that the Weather is fine that the state-of-affairs is okay What you did was cheap, you gave him

The drug for him to sleep the day long He swallowed what you gave him Hook, line and sinker
While we Party and drink. eat and laugh he was

There inside with all his tantrums & nightmares
He was screaming and wanted to run away from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mountain And The Snake

a long black yellow snake with stripes arrives hissing looking for a prey
a rat perhaps but there is none
not even an ant for a snack and so the long black yellow snake with stripes of green slides its way to a dark, moist cave tight on its door pushing its long slimy body to the tip of the cave's orifice to the end of its intestine

it was a good tickle and the whole body of the mountain gives a tremble
a moan and from the slits of its sides to the tip of its feet and toes and trees
the whole body of the mountain moans
happy with the long slimy body of the snake's skin and bone.

RIC S. BASTASA
the double cab climbs the road for hours

our purpose is only to see the highest mountain in Asia

when we arrive there
it is cold but the sun is shining brightly the panoramic view is clear and accurate to the eyes

it is Li Po
drunk who is imagining things

the mountain is not staring at me

it is me that stares at it i am not speechless it is the mountain
that is speechless since it cannot really speak naturally

this is not an issue
anymore
it cannot be something debatable

and then i am taking pride talking to myself
giving my hand a handshake:

I am sane and i am not imagining things i am seeing this mountain as it is treating it as it has to be

inanimate, still,
 lifeless and
 stuck upon its foot

it has no feelings and i've read
 that there were times when it was cruel

(the tour guide keeps on talking)

taking lives of men who want to give the impression that they can conquer it

when it cannot be when it is not

and does not
 know
 what war is all about

in truth all these conflicts are simplistically speaking man-made and self-inflicted

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mountain Lovers

See the winding path Like a thousand connecting boas Frozen in false stillness Leading to the foot of the mountain
And there
Hear the quick fall
Of a ripe mango
And the stringing
Of the bamboo leaves
The cracking
Of a bamboo stairway Antiquity
Leading to a cogon-masked Door
Walling in a masterpiece
Of a man
And a woman
In love

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mountain Of Malady

in the mountain of malady the sharp fingernails of probity on the hands of faith dig the wells of whereto time as usual is so patient no stone is left unturned layer by layer of fossilized moments upturned and the quizzical look of mercy continues to please the stabs of light sometimes hurt like murderous intent but the quest has to continue we all look for what is inside this centuries of mysteries

time is cold. trees are felled.
it rains all night. the winds are angry.

at the bottom of it all beyond the thick layer of lust and desire, pain and betrayal, shame and fall?

what did you really find?

chunks of golden silence. platinum gaze. diamond existence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mountain Of Poverty

this is what i can tell you:
the children are running in the hills looking for their favorite butterflies to play chasing dreams, i suppose, who knows what they really know and feel, i was once a child myself, perhaps i have the right to guess what simple wants they have,

freedom, but i can tell you about something else, their breakfast today is only brown sugar and rice, and they have not taken their baths in the river because the water is dirty, and there is no water system in the hills, primitive, and still undeveloped, the grasses are not cut tall and wild, and the coconut trees are not bearing much fruits, there is drought, and the tenants do not have a good harvest of their upland rice and there are rats infesting the rice fields, it rains so hard, the road is slippery and we all have to walk slowly to keep themselves warm, the men drink wine and smoke the women do not weave mats anymore, they're sold cheap and they are so disappointed with what they are getting sugar is a precious commodity here, no coffee, salt is expensive, salted fish is a luxury, bread is like gold here and children do not know what is bread all about cookies do not exist here stone age, this is stone age in the midst of an expanding world the children here are left out i stare at them as they throw stones at play, dirt and foul smell, but on the other hand i look at the pictures that i took on that day less the smell, less the dirt on their faces, they are so beautiful, and the mountains are still hopeful.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mountains

you feel like a leaf steady on a pool of water, around you is thick fog and beyond is the haze of a misty morning the house on the river bank is deserted and the boulders of rocks are gray and hard the grass is nil dipping its tongue on the shallow waters ripples of the wind bring the shadows of shimmer the mountains stand still merely looking without any hint that it is curious at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mouse In Me Is Back Tiptoeing In The Unwary Kitchen sleep now my dearly beloved let me hear the music of your snores let me turn off the light of the room let your sleep be so sound and and comforting for by then when everything is safe and secure the mouse in me is back tiptoeing in the unwary kitchen to eat what is so luscious and delicious and so forbidden.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mouth Of The Sea

the sea this afternoon is divided into two halves parallel to each other the brown part touches the shore the one faraway is the bluish one, deep and
silent,

once again, the mountain has reached its destination through its river swallowed by the mouth of the sea into the depths of its silence on this cycle of life
and then
unto death.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Movie In Your Slumber....

at night
in bed the ceiling puts a movie
in your mind

the wings of an angel
flaps around the light bulb
stars hang there like jewels
space of darkness
expands
and you are on your own
as you travel in the labyrinths of
slumber....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Movies And Us

back to the thrill
in the movies
we are caught in the web of its transparent truths
we stop for a while like posts
when electric lights
begin to blink, when we finally see ourselves in the characters
when we wake up
and find that we too
fall short of the measure for goodness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Moving Train Of Thought

people are busy untangling knots thinking about how much time to spend
and money to waste on setting themselves free from what binds
their hands

is there a need i ask?
what makes you free is ultimately the mind

even if you have untangled the knot or one by one destroy the link of one chain to another if the mind is stuck like a fly to a sticky trap the wings still cannot fly there are no forests

no trees
to a moving train

RIC S. BASTASA
The Much Abused Stars

speaking of stars sometimes, speaking of sometimes
the moon
why always the moon? what crime in poetry has it committed to always accuse it of being too silent?

screeching cars, searching for scars, breaching brakes, couched screams ice cream on rocky road flavors tongue twisting on a trip for tarts
for a start

i guess, things are alright with us here waiting for the bus.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Much Needed Rest.....

the day
is ending and here
you are
too exhausted for the long day's
toil,

you stop for
a while
looks at the sky and tells God
i've done it,

with a little conceit though saying, "God you owe me lots
of the deprivations
today." (and

i hope that you pay it with all your love
and compassion,
that when i finally meet my end too
just like this ending day,
i may find
my rest in
You.)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Multiple Selves Inside A Conversation

you want to catch me and we talk you propose i accede they you are into a conclusion and i agree

and then when you are about to leave i say the last message that i only give you back what you had given me within the framework of your mind everything taken by us is enclosed and i look for myself there there isn't any.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Murmur Of The Sea

you look for a company it is a strange land the sands there do not have footprints it is what you like uninhabited landscape
rocks with small crabs
huge eyes
it is the sea that murmurs you have been junked.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Muscles

the muscles shrink
the fats bloom like fertilized flowers uglier now to the brain that does not stop thinking to the feet that do not know already how to dance to the abdomen that does not bend what have you when you look at yourself in the mirror you become a denial of your true nature
a freak ballooning on a baloney of the future that does not bring you a tray of fruits
a bouquet of flowers but it has a gift for your handwork a niche
and six feet under

RIC S. BASTASA
the thin, tall man, is looking for those words, that he must garnish on his short story on the making, for he leaves poetry for the moment falling short of metaphors, he seeks advice from me, whom he thinks is taller, and thinner, and already at home with the words that he thinks i have chosen so well, but i without hesitation tells him pointblank, like killing him with those empty bullets, that he must not believe me, as i am only inventing myself, recreating every part of me from a long time immersion of a drowning experience, lucky, i have not died, and on fortitude, i have learned the art of breathing through my mouth, my nostrils uncooperative to this endeavor of living, it is the experience that reinvents us, redefining our borders, sorting out those conflicts unsolved by wars, not living in peace most of those times, the struggles keep coming, and describing those words with bloody bodies lying on the road deserted, and feeling all completely abandoned, i ask him if he sees those poems naked and dead those short stories buried and without titles yet.

he is blind because of the money, he is lost, because he is trying to satisfy his own hunger and thirst.

and so, there he is, without poems, strapped of sentences to start his short story: the journey is canceled.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Museum In Calbayog

what could be inside these burial jars,
some souls of our dead ancestors
perhaps restless in our ignorance these log coffins
and jarlets and cups and howls and saucers
and dishes back to the 14th century

coins, heirlooms
our wooden saints the altars they constructed chalices and monstrances how can i not know?

how can i be an alien
to my own country?

they have plates
and saucers and spoons
how could they have eaten on bare hands?

they have their God
and religious chalices
how could they be pagans?

hey, i am thirsty
i need more drink
about my history.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Music In My Mind

orange notes
fading for the yellow sun

RIC S. BASTASA
The Music Of The Moon

THERE IS pain in my eyes but the glisten like glass against the
light,
there is pain in my arm but my fingers make a circus
show
to cover the pain
inside,

there is pain in my heart but my mouth speaks about other things
and true enough no one notices
what suffering is all about

Will pain be more painful if it is known?
Or will it do good for the rest if we keep this pain silently as our own?

Soon i shall know that people are just moving on with their lives Pains kept secret Disappointments remaining unshared

Perhaps none can help
There is no balm that usages

I tried telling a friend once and he's saying It's none of his business

Pain is beautiful
In the silence of the room Where the sound of sobbing becomes music for the moon.
The Music Of The People....

there are times when we lose control this time our necks
are tempted
our feet are mindless our hearts beat not for us but for that which comes- -

this music from the streets, the music of
the people
and the children at
the park
the ladies at the museum and the men on the farm

our necks swing like the beatings of our hearts our mouths scream with joy
our feet do the gangnam and we are freed from the restraints of the system

sometimes we even shout the name of our idols, or even the name of our God.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Must To Listen....

i am listening to a piano music it is cheap, there are no hands playing the piano keys there is no piano even, and there is no pianist no chair where the pianist is supposed to sit and there are no hands to make the much needed applause no one judges here

whether the notes are perfectly drawn or the musical score appreciable or light that is not the concern, there are no concerns whatsoever even it is just the listening pleasure without people listening without a hall no exits and no entrances nothing to enthrall you, but this short pleasure of just being you alone and receptive paying attention to loneliness that is shared by many if not all of these creatures who claim that by being alive they must listen...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mutants Of Mole Hill

it is the nature of your kind mutants of mole hills not to feast on repetition not to eat a bore
the first glance is enough once is always over it is always a craving for something new there is no one, nothing about fidelity the scatter is love, life is just a wink of the eye the other world is just a theorem of a philosopher that does not deserve a second of your time.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Myriad Stars....

never mind it may be too late

at any rate there is no use being like them. you have yourself somehow and it is enough. feel the comfort of your

uniqueness and do not look to the right or to the left some are much better

or some are worse better look at the sky

be enthralled with
the myriad stars....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mysteries Of The Night

after the rain
you go back to the garden

below the rustic palms and the old mango tree

you sit upon a bench

the air is cool
you contemplate
deply

now the trees are speaking to you
and they are grieving

you listen to the footsteps of the ants

you feel the softness of butterfly wings all over your skin your mind scatters like fireflies

the night makes an agreement with you

you shall be muted
to keep the secrets of this silent moments

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mystery Of Our Faith...

the seed
has to be buried
and time
careses it
silence mourns
the sky cries sheds rains for
tears
no one minds this symbolism
of our faith
until the seed
cracks
the top of the soil
as one begins
to see the sprouting
bud

it is alive
it is alive!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mystery Of Silence Deep And So Intriguing

sometimes we are misled illusions are too many to detect and delete the way objects appear to move in circles when they are not it is so hard to convince ourselves that the movement is straight stabbing the dark secrets of the weaker mind and the sluggish hands the way we generalize and forget about the accuracy of a detail like the lines on the tails of the slimy fish swimming upon a brackish water that in a moment disappears from you leaving you only a ripple of waters and then the mystery of silence deep and so intriguing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mystery Of You

it is the mystery of you that mystifies me

as i worship you
you turn into light

as i chant before you you turn into fire

as i fuse into you
you become this blazing fire of the world

not consuming it like a big nuclear destructive explosion

you become again
the light and the warmth

you burn us all in love and we become the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mystery...

it's the mystery that you have invented, and she loves you touching your ear with her tongue....

time tell the truth,

and love is gone it is gone, just like that....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mystical

ALL that i want
that i dream about is that i shall occupy
that place that rightfully belongs to me the seat at the last the floor at the bottom of the sea
the edge
where i am no longer myself all i want is to be lost forever not remembering anything it is not that chair where we know what sitting is or the bed that we have learned to recline and take sleep it is not the sky where wings of birds fly it is not the sea where fish as we all know swim it is always something else that we all yet have to know

RIC S. BASTASA
The Mystical Boat....

what was most valuable, even memories of mother, even memories of myself,
i have always
and will always be ready to throw
them away,
the function of forgetting is to prepare you
to another dimension, for if you cannot discard them
or if you hesitate
the binds become stronger and you cannot jump into another boat in that mystical moat, it was as simple as he says it,
discard, throw away,
shed off your skin,
leave those eyes
cut the tongue,
remove your feet
and hands,
where can those shoes be?
for at any moment
the boat without any rudder arrives,
without anchor too
and you are never told

where to?
The Naked Body In The River

i put you in the river
naked,

perfect body for my feast at night till dawn

and then i sleep in
the morning

too tired
these loving eyes

still dead about you someone beyond

the touch of my fingers naked body

so beautiful but it has no eyes

and hence
cannot see me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Native Of The House

he mistakes joseph
as the shepherd
and the thought the sheep are goats
he does not know what the star means or what does Mary do or what is the significance of the baby at the manger

and yet the world claims that it has educated already
all the people....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Natives Of Tabon

they sat on a mountain of gold and ate wild ferns and beetles sometimes they blame the gods for their
misfortune....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nature Of Freedom

freedom is movement, the flying of arms the winged hands
fish fingers

we look at it from the severance point of view the possibility of coming back for another wholeness is nil

it is the union with another one distinct from us like a star to grass like ships without anchor without any definite port to land like meteors moving to an uncertain destination freedom is not a wall never a pillar

it is the wind always the wind no matter how you try to hold it with your hands

its escape is its nature.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nature Of Tyranny

blood has flowed
so much of it
under the bridge

life is wasted
in future's name

tyrans are overturned replaced by heroes who in due time
shall become
themselves
tyrans in their own name

RIC S. BASTASA
naughty kid.
mother did not take him to the neighbor's funeral on a very hot day,
naughty kid
kept in the house
wanted retaliation by pulling all mother's African daisies
to die under the sun,

naughty kid
wanted mother to buy him a boat which costs a week salary of papa
broke all papa's chairs naughty kid now that you have kids of your own feel how is it to have naughty kids too and a hard-headed mom,

keep the generation intact
do not complain
dance the cha-cha which mother taught you when she was alive...

you really have to...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need For Affirmation

how i tried to be just myself in the corner like a stone
but it is not at all possible i am not just a stone i am a worm

how i wish just to wriggle and live in that small leaf
but it is not at all possible
i am a butterfly

how i wish just to flutter from one flower to
another
but it is not at all possible
i am a bird

how i wish to be just a bird, a cloud, the sun, the moon or the thousand stars and then i become

a man

and it is enough
you just called my name and it is perfectly a good beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need For An Institution And A Philosophy

do not be too proud to say that you do not need temples and houses and philosophies

I've been there and it does not please me at all the rain was heavy and the night was so dark i miscalculated it

the air was so cold
and the foxes are many

the snakes are still assessing whether to attack and then bite and take what is good for their bellies

i am going back home
for good.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need For Drama

let us say, Goliath, finally realized that he really loves Bathsheba who is now in Chicago finally taking care of the old woman. Bathsheba sent the rumor that she is now living-in with somebody and that is the end of their marriage. Goliath isn't huge at the last, and Bathsheba isn't that pure anyway. They lead their own lives now. As true individuals.

The journey of separate souls is a big drama. One does not really like it. But this happens.

Crying, and then of course at the end, one gets used to it. Behind two kissing lips, the sun rises after.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need For Emptiness

a door's way
to welcome you is simply to open
itself

the living room
outdoes it
but letting you breathe
more space

the common denominator of this entertainment equation is still the capacity to contain
emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need For God

sometimes we deny this need.
most of the times, it is more of forgetting, because there is so much fun, so much noise, and we are drunk, and always when sober, there is someone beside to provide the heat and the smoke.

then you fall, and badly hurt, then you find yourself alone in the room and you are having seizures, sick, and poor, and no one answers your call for help. The bankbook is empty.
The clouds are dark. There is thunder. Lightning strikes your roof. The fire burns your house.
No fireman is water.

God comes in. You did not even call.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need For Poetry

Poetry is not social climbing

its stairs somehow
are not easy to make

hands are trembling
and body is having its uncalled for seizures.

when i am lost
poetry is a map.

when life is messy
it becomes a mop.

when life becomes harsh, unbearable
or questionable,

it becomes my
saving grace

although poetry does not provide the answers, it creates an ambiance for solitude where life smoothes out like a flatiron to my crumpled shirt,

it's a hammock
where i can sleep and a checklist what to do for the rest of the fearful hours.

poetry is therapy.
it embraces those who belong to the category of the injured,
the confused,
the stricken,
the bleeder,
the crying loser,
the depressed
and even those on the verge of insanity

those who go out of the herd
jump over the fence,
steal the moon,
sifts the light of the sun,
deant poison,
concoct
a potion, and

like those goldfish
or salmon or koi
run counter the flow and rage against all odds
of the masses

to become enlightened
to be cured,
to be whole
again,
to be integrated back
to life,
to the pulse,
to glory,
to Light
to God.
The Need For Sleep

What we watch pushes us to leap some to death but i prefer
faith,

a leap of faith as soren calls it what i watch i soon conceive and deliver birth to baby ideas

birth, rebirths, lovely blooms of roses and

thorns but these are just but hazards to growth

what i watch pushes me to write what i love what i feel with disgust i keep these eyes wide open throughout the darkness of my life gazing

i am not looking for answers anymore i am just trying to enjoy the view savor

what lesson can i take back into my sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need For Tolerance.

when that frog wants everyone to be frogs, when it says that everything watery belongs to it, when rain is the only solution to all the problems of this world, or that the tongue is the most powerful tool to convince how life must be lived, the love for that slime, ruling that each intelligence is measure by the length of one's jump, or that eyes must rotate a hundred and twenty degrees, i shrug my shoulders, twist my nose, i raise my hand and for the last time says, it is time to say goodbye.

my world lies on the brink of a disaster and the only way to survive is to make tolerance official.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need To Be Broken

we may never realize the need to be broken, to be shattered, and be scattered into fine pieces like a pod, like some seeds with wings from fruits that ripen and rot and dry and ferns that wilt and crack and turn to powder, that the wind takes and brings to the far corners of the world in grafitti,
like the pores of mushrooms shaken by thunder and lightning during a very strong storm and spread like dust and grow again like white round stones on fertile hays and on the side of banana shrubs because it is only thru this breaking and shaking that some lives begin to grow and flourish

like us

when we are broken when we open like basins trapping and saving and drinking the pouring rain nature's wisdom seeping to the crevices of our brokeness and our openness as the expulsion begins

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need To Be Faraway

it is only when i am far away

beyond the reach of this civilization

that for a little while

i quit
writing because it is this distance
that keeps me
sane

it is the nearness of all these little things around me that keeps my hands moving

cultivating a garden of words
to hide
the weeds

to please what has been creating havoc in that warring hole of my empty being

RIC S. BASTASA
The Need To Be Shaken

a novice somewhere in Tamontaka
one day
was asked to take leave and advised to live his life outside the silent walls of the old seminary

he is sad of course for in his whole life all he wants is to become a priest

i ask him the reason
why
he was junked, (a word too cruel for him
to hear)

he was told
by his superior
'Manny, you need to be shaken! '

i know what it means.
He didn't

but just the same
i left the place where he wanted to stay

all his life

RIC S. BASTASA
The Needed Change

we lived a life, repeated over and over again on one code of restraint coupled with the taboos of our traditions made by no other legislators who are humans like us

those ahead of us lived a very lonely life sticking it out even on verges of depressions and on the thin boundary line of sanity and cleanliness

we are taking the same road, tired and helpless and so predictable and those who swerved and delineated from the line are turning into ostriches with their muddy feet and useless wings soon they will be slaughtered their bones chopped into pieces their flesh eaten by the bastards of our times i am the suspicious man at the back seat of the car i doubt the driver and i have questions for the man beside him i like the view outside: green mountains and roadsides flowering and bird flying low over the heads of hills searching for their prey soon i will demand that the car be stopped i am getting out and be the master of the winds i protest and summon all creatures for the needed change.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Neglected Pond

i may have neglected this pond some fish are no longer swimming eventually die in the water their same burial place some moss float and the lotus has not borne any flower since that day of mourning

someone as i leave may take notice of this pond and have pity and pour everything there
to revive it or take more perhaps for the replacement

a new koi or a gold fish
white pebbles and a janitor fish

it does not matter for i still grieve and grieving does not know what hope is what a new house means the trails to San Antonio what are they? but same vomiting mud and i won't take it for an answer

RIC S. BASTASA
The Neighbor

it begins with a bouquet of white flowers beside the red carnation in that big house by the sea

listen to the sound of the water fountain
it greets us welcome
with a song

then the white car beside the yellow road closed and too private on the other side of the road someone looks at us in confusion, smiles a bit and shows disdain

RIC S. BASTASA
The Neighbor In A State Of Depression...

he had the bad motives
she knew it
when they make love
he overdoes it
she suspects something wrong the more when she is sleepy he keeps touching her hands saying i love you so much she picks him up from the ruins of his bipolar self he was nowhere to be found broke and broken
she knew it from the beginning this man is her gold digger she cooks for him
she washes his clothes and keeps his secrets until one day she burst into utter sadness depression is back she lost her fortune and he is nowhere to be found.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Neighborhood

in this affluent neighborhood noise is a stranger it is kept away by the fences that keep taller
every year
by the bushes that are trimmed like pillars
by the vines that stick like epoxy on the walls of their houses by the turrets that look to the road always with suspicion

there is always the feeling of fear and loneliness on every gates
which by the way are mostly painted blue.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Neighborhood At Night

at night
the cats on the roof

in heat.

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Arrival

back to the room
the silence keeps sticking on the curtains
unmoving despite the breaths that he had brought along
to make the lonely room envious
of his
becoming.

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Hero....(A Parody)

Killing is a way to telling that society has exceeded the limits of tolerance

it is an invitation too to kill the killer

but, somehow, no one has picked the challenge yet

the non-violent has grieved buried the victims and prayed for peace released the doves to the sky instigating once more the killer
to kill some more until it gets bored
with its dastardly act.

there is a time for boredom too killing included

the good man has not even tried killing a fly
or a mosquito

so what's next killer?
we have a crowd for you.
Feast on them
We will count the dead and buy the coffins we will sing the funeral songs praise the heavens
you have served as the best terminator of other people's suffering.
good job, Keep going.
You are a hero.

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Journey

it must have been the fruit of a trance i must have spoken about a truth that upon waking up (whatever that is)
i do not remember

it is a stranger that i face that insists upon a name and address
hoping that i will soon remember it and give it a temporary home

what was it? i still do not remember i tell it i do not remember there is no exactness about this remembering game

i resign into a chasing game, look i could be you and you could be me i am certain now, there is something else between us that we love to identify with

ah, it is you, i can feel it, there is no longer a bridge there the river rises and overflows someone at the other side of the bank calls your name with missing letters, with some syllables that you have to guess and then you walk away, and you know where it is now and whom.

RIC S. BASTASA
any new 'lady' in town has always the right to claim the crown that she is a professional virgin much to all paying men's ironic chagrin.

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Light Has Come From On My Jalousie Windows the first thing i do in the morning is write my new poem borne of the night

too weary to dream but this poem keeps on stalking always wanting to be written

write,
stare to space and let that stare linger for a while like gathering some dust in air or spraying the air with your shower of thoughts speak
to yourself
like reminding yourself with words that have become too unfamiliar because they are not spoken words too get impatient and jealous because of unuse and furious too because of abuse words too have lives of their own and even feelings of their own so you are telling me be cautious be too patient and considerate be compassionate be strong

be happy be prayerful

i write the words again on the positive side of things the happier
hopeful categories

i open some shutters slide some thoughts
inser my gaze and spread some scrutinies

i am seeing a new light from the jalousies

it is the soft morning light and i really like it

i stand still and look above this room down to the things below me

i see people moving wearing the uniform
to their offices
they go

i almost forget,
it is a working day also for me.
the morning light has enticed me again, i repeat, my friend, i still like it

here.

RIC S. BASTASA
on those younger days when i went up to the high and lonely mountain i wrote about a young emaciated brown girl in the faraway hill thriving on a chunk of muscovado sugar and a handful of off-white steamed rice for breakfast there was no dried fish on the plate of a banana leaf i had written about an unjust social order and i dreamed of immediate reforms it was when i too was struggling then over a loss of an identity in the city over a poverty that struck us like a plague of the century

now things have changed a lot i cannot trace that girl and the place where she once lived had been all erased from the map the road had been closed and the hill flattened to the ground and i do not long for change anymore my voice has mellowed like a cat with a wriggling fish in its mouth it is silenced by my own social sinfulness this contentment from within because the social order now has fed me well i have become a man stripped of its restless soul masked and displayed as another useful tool

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Poet In Town

the new poet in town laughs at his finding that when he write
his poems
his only purpose is that the poem
must not be understood by anybody
because it is only through this way
that they will say
the new poet in town
is deep
with his sorrow
and panicky with his pain and lamentable with his foment

the critique
scratches his head and proclaims
the glory of the new poet in town
saying

'this is the best poem i have read' (because he does not understand what it means though sounding like a hollow pipe that you sling with a stone saying ' ping, xing, tsing, ting, tang tong, oinnk., , toinkk'

'excellent' the last critic with a tainted glass declares.

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Room...

as i open another door and enter the room, i see a different world, but i guess this is it, it is destined to be mine, and i am faced with challenges now, what to do, with what is at the command of my hands,

i sit on the chair, which i think had long been reserved for me by destiny, and i begin to think, 'what can i do with
all these?'

the inner voice says, 'you are going to be different',
'you can do much better'
'you are going to correct the errors of those who committed the wrongs' in this room, in this sinful table, on this shameful floors.

'shall i call in the priest to bless this room again?'

'there is no need', the voice sings, and you merely have to listen.

and i tell myself. I shall die here, and it will be in peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Routine

dinner at six pm blackout comes at 7
so we sleep as early as that time and with nothing to do we make love in the dark and too tired
we oversleep till 5 the next morning when electricity resumes we sleep without air-conditioning pre-conditioned now to this long lasting emergency situation

i content myself to the sound of silence some chirping birds sometimes and crowing cocks at dawn and screaming chickens landing

on the ground

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Scary Thing About America

i am told about the new scare and i am scared
and you have to start moving on
somewhere
here back at home
with our nipa huts
and morning glory salads less the winter and the chill
we are waiting

welcome back
my old friend
the river is not as cold
as you think
and the trunks of the trees are not as rotten
as you once wrote

the road back home
is not bumpy
anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Stone In The Hallway

what he did was indeed notorious hiding himself on different names
using his expertise on hurting
an innocent bystander
like you

what adds injury to insult is when you meet him
he is as gentle as a lamb
coy as a puppy

at your back he is the fire dragon by which if you are careless enough
you get burned
in seconds

i've heard him
laugh
in one of his common
occasions

if only
he had known
that you are
descended from the lineage of Medusa

he could have not turned into a stone

as he deserves it
so

he gazed at you
fearlessly

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Story In Town...

ey they thought all of them that no man can ever step on the moon this is outrageous!
impossible!
they all think love never blooms in the world of soldier ants those that are hungry for themselves that night there lived a writer somewhere in those misty hills

i do not know whether he is talking about himself or someone else but it is a fact now
the characters are true and still alive

they who raised violets in the desert one moonless night they put a star
their last hope
that morning
a tiny flower blooms
so tiny
that it escapes the attention of camels and their riders

from where waters rise into the sky building a new river majority of course
despite having drank a glass full
still do not signify belief they all claim
we are still asleep...

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Teacher

he prides himself about this job
where he is all wise and his students listen he drives the points like he's the hammer to his nails

somehow the old teacher listens

it is not supposed to
be

he picks a snail
a house actually where the hermit crab lives

he whistles and the crab comes
out
learning the song of the master

the wind, soft as breeze the openness like the wide gate of the morning sun
between the breasts of the hills

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Trend...

there is a way
to be direct, even in this you tell the truth

not wrapped in metaphors

you let the world know using the right word

in bold statements and then you disappear

somehow there is another way to be indirect

about our personal truths which should not ruin

others, or carry them into a contagious affection

now this is it
your truth sandwiched by delicious similes

and comfortable metaphors

you may use a fable or even a fantasy

you drive a point or
a nail

not using hammers but that hush and whisper

your flowers are hands you touch a tendril
The New Trends...

we keep on going places
now
the places take us into forgetting what calamities of the minds we have had what lapses of the common experience the black and white color of life assumes the rosy cheeks of delights the daffodils on the mountainside the cottons in those clouds the vastness of the plains that we pass by the ranges of mountains that amaze us we are conquering the limits of our daily wishes
we are trying to reread the signs and find new dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
The New Venus...

all wet
this morning
at the beach
she rises
from the water
like a new born Venus
from her
shell

RIC S. BASTASA
The Newly Adopted

he is happy about his first born

a girl, a beautiful one but he cannot marry the mother since he is still too young

then he comes to us crying for help

now we shall have another life in the middle of our emptiness

this is the filling up of the void
and this will make him smile
for another day

RIC S. BASTASA
The Newly Found Love For Isolation

i am going for the lighter side of life i pretend that i am recently born with a mind of my own

i promise myself that i can stand alone and behave like an island of the vast ocean

the irony happens

people come they become interested about the meaning
of isolation

they search for what is virginal
they want something original

and then they will say they will miss me a lot

that they really love me and it is late that they realize this the come in hordes bringing with them their boats when they arrive however i am no longer there

RIC S. BASTASA
The News About Tony

when i learned the other day that tony my classmate in philosophy has become Jesuit provincial i did not take that as something that must be envied as something that must make a man greater than himself or anybody else.

what he is is what he is. a stone is a stone. birds shall always be birds and sky changes nothing every fading every rising of the sun.
every run that runs is still nothing but run.

running is running in the run.

the basic man. simplicity nothing more like a petal that a flower owns it cannot boast anything of it to the sun who knows every second.

shedding off. wearing clothes. going to another place.
putting bags in a hotel room after a plane ride.

all these are but fabrics of time in our body. i am into a choice of oblivion. Every track i have i keep on erasing.

each day is a note. Like a magnet decor on the ref.
Like a word that i say to you. Like this poem that you read which shoots like a sigh in the air.

what do you see? nothing. What have you heard? come to think again.
Nothing. Nothing.

Come on. Come to the conclusion. Everything here is nothing.
This is not the er is this the hour.

Tony is not happy. And so Am I. That is the truth that the empty earthen jar has been preaching to the mountain when we left it there sipping rain, keeping sunshine.

RIC S. BASTASA
The News On TV

the news on TV have given all the illogicality of the present times thus she says
the innocent go to prison the guilty are set free the rich become richer the poorer becoming poorer
to each his own
no one cares
this is her country going berserk over selfish interests the early morning news tell it all she fasts
she feasts on sighs
and numbness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Next Boat To Ride

Another strong typhoon on the brink It is asking
Which boat is next to sink?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Next Life

In the next life
you will be a tree
grounded,
immobilized but fruitful still

next is you,
you become a turtle
with a finished house to live and carry

next is you,
always having light
a firefly

and you
shall be the crocodile
you can live
well both in land and water

and you
shall be the star
so beautiful and yet so distant

and you
shall be the stone
hard and so unfeeling
no worries
no angst
no pain
no joys either

and you
who has suffered much but survived
without any word
of protest
shall become one
of those
gods
in your chosen sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Next Monday

i wonder what Monday
shall give me? what shall i amount too?
but soon it will come
and i am trying to explain to myself,

what dying can possibly
mean.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Next Poem
	his is the next poem that i am telling you about. it wants to tell you something, but not in secret really, i am open, and i like open fields, like open ideas wanting to embrace and be embraced by the world.

absence too, is open. The open arms wait for the coming of absence. Absence is a wide space wanting to be filled by love, and love is elusive, and love is unresponding to the emergencies we are in.

but let me not talk about it. Let me tell you and take you back to what i have started. I like the mirror in the living room broken into a hundred pieces, all in the name of love.

i like to have as many mirrors as i can have. Tiny broken pieces.
I will take one. And all i want in this short life that we have,
the life of a fruitfly inside that experimental cupboard, or that transparent cellophane, let death come.

i have this piece of broken glass. I want to reflect my light.
Do you like it? I want to reflect the light of God, do you like it?

Take it for what it is. Each piece has a reflective index of its own.
The face value of things. Do you like it?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Next Sunrise…

mother died from diabetes and father too lonely to bear the loss
followed soon by drinking his way to the other side
finally he died from a heart attack

it was only a year
of difference
when he put mama's picture always on his cHEST as he watered life with so much
tears

he did not like to live
anymore
as he removes those dextrose from his
veins

now you are feeling sad about your mother's death my dear cousin

be sad but be brief and be concise about what you want to happen
next

put in mind
they have finally taken their rest
as we still continue this wrest

today is a beautiful day do not be lonely
if you are going to be sad make it brief
more days are coming like waves if you are not that quick and wise, you may not see the next sunrise....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nice And Responsible Crowd

it is not human oh, the ocean of people at the mall though without waves can drown us all into anonymity and oblivion they are not the choices of the hour
the isolation amidst the crowd
the scream that only the buzzing sound of the masses
can ignore

there is more to these books, poetry, history, law science
the novelties of thought the lonely flights of thought
deeper
and deeper into the jungles of truths

you discover what they cannot find these responsible crowd of leaves and pages or indexes and
and streams of ideas
long asleep and never awakened
by the daring knight
of the isolated self

i imagine sometimes the purification of mud into the filters of sand and pebbles

there is no speech much nobler that the gushes of the air and water
and the firmness
of land.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nice, Good Feeling

Love like all knowledge Is a remembering
It has its own wisdom
Its forebodings in This individual, I,

I shall travel this World, not on the pages Of your book, to find
This place, in you,
That which I lack,
That which my being Points always points Towards you, till you Are next to me, so near,
Filling me; this emptiness,
I am transfixed; transfigured For my real self, this feeling, It is nice to be here, at last.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nicest Theme

What’s is the nicest theme to write about?
Girls with blue dresses coming out of the red car Without panties
The cooperative wind
The onlookers
In their wildest dreams
The excitement of having to see Reds and blues
And blacks

White too. Shades. Grays and pastels.
Nuns praying the rosary. Priests getting out Of their habits.

We read a lot. Anything. Magazines.
Comic books. Serious novels. Nice themes.
All about them. Their getting out into the open.
Their darkest hours. Those empty rooms.
Cloud nine. Thirteenth floor.
Whatever.

There is also the nicest thing about
Myself.
Not arrogance. Not self-pity either.
Not the usual secrets. Motels and hideaways.
Islands with white sands. Or having to fly Kites in the rain.

There is something nice about myself.
But I know you will not like to hear about it.
I am not telling. I am not writing.

There are images. In-between. There is this Murky river. A painting with nothing but a river.

Think seriously. I am there with you.
I know, you won’t say something.
It is not over yet. But it is not worth any sense.
Forget about it. Let’s move on.

RIC S. BASTASA
I remember pretty well
As I write these Poems, these unlikely Unbecoming poems
Of a legal mind Wanting still
To craft
A bridge poem
To connect
Two untalking
Worlds

Nick Joaquin indeed Wrote so well and Won the hearts
Of Filipino
Literati when He gave them
The Portrait of
A Filipino as
An Artist

In fact the story
Was made into A play and Nick
Was invited to watch

An actress who Played a minor role
Was so irritated
About this drunken Old rugged Foul smelling Alcoholic
dirty
Man,
And seeing him
drank as Usual with lots
Of beer,
she shouted
omigod!
shouted at
At him

"old man, this is a nice play, so please do not watch it drunk and disappoint us
with your unruly
behaviour!"

she felt he was just kind of rude uncultured
and disrespectful
to the content of the play of the portrait of the Filipino as an Artist.

she agreed
the story was grand
the play grander

what she did not know
she was shouting
at Nick Joaquin
the author of the story
the mighty author
of the story
that was made into a grander play
of the century

Nick Joaquin left the theater The actress did not really know What she was saying about Authorship
and behavior.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Night After Love

it makes me guilty sometimes that i prefer
to be alone
early in the morning but the happiness of simply being myself embraced in the silence of my own arms transmutes this stone into a sunflower

i guess you have felt the
magic
that solitude brings when lovers finally part ways
after that ecstatic fusion of light and motion.

RIC S. BASTASA
on that night i slipped on the cold field and fell upon a certain hole
with the depth of a thousand silences
and then
i experienced the pain
so much pain
that i heard a certain howling
of my soul

nobody hears
perhaps only the ears with the wisdom of nothingness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Night Deepens

the night deepens
silence shares its solemnity
more felt than seen teaming up with darkness where light in the form of a wick from a burning candle reminds you
about self-consumption
the way
a path ends itself in losing

the way a view blurs
as it joins an endless horizon

RIC S. BASTASA
The Night Has Come

i am like an empty cup the tea i have has been sipped by you and what i have now is air specifically i agree it is your sigh left by the mark of you lips.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Night In The Mountains Of My Birth

the usual day here starts with the songs of birds waking us up

and then we continue what we do gazing and lazy with what this paradise
is giving us

fresh air is not a bowl clear skies is not a just a roof white sandy beaches at the other end of this open window chants with the swaying fronds outside the children are beginning to play chasing goats and chickens jumping and running to the vibrancy of life there is no hurry for life here one is confident about what is enough cooking potatoes and roasting young chickens and fresh vegetables from the farm serve as salad on the table the night ends with a handful of stars and a saucer moon and then the silence of contentment where love fills the night upon those sleepy eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Night Is A Good Listener

The night is a good listener How I wonder how huge its ears are, How deep its patience in the silence Of an ocean floor, how wide its embrace, Like a cool thick forest, like a coiling river,
As though time does not even exist,

The night is listening to me Intently, like I were her only son, Because the rest of her servants and mistresses Are all asleep,
She is so silent, in tiptoes, in a hush,
This night, I can hear how the ants crawl for crumbs, How the lizards run and play & catch its prey on the ceiling, How the prey on the other hand, struggles to escape, How the air gushes on the window pane, How the whispers of my heart sound like Some dews dropping on some soft green blades of grass, Indeed night is so patient, so ever silent, Though sleepy, it gazes in me, trying to Understand what all these silent conversation is all about,
The night understands, lip-reading my thoughts, Listening intently, the night sits, and Now, signals for an embrace, with arms and heart wide open Some of her tears are starting to fall.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Night Is A Morning Song Of A Woman

after the night of love the morning is becomes her song perhaps even a secret hum inside her heart
at noon
she perfects a symphony the kitchen sings with her the spoons and grindstones and even the knife and glasses and plates she whistles to the stove
in the afternoon
she is ready with a dirge at night the funeral hymn begins
it's  a drag
towards eternal peace

life is like that
in its quest for perfection

RIC S. BASTASA
The Night Is Over

the night was filled with rain that fell through dawn it was darker as the stars and the moon
were kept in the bins
of the loneliness of
space

but nothing lasts forever a night of storm calms down in due time the rain exhausts itself like the tears of widow mourning over a love gone to the other
edge of time

this is our hope for the cocoon sleep seeds in time transformed into full butterflies
of maturity and responsibility sorrow finally does not overwhelm death is never an end

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nihilist

today i am reflecting on that usual human trait that he must be treated as special someone important as though the world dies without him
as though everything alive or moving stops
when he does not participate in the process
of living

only to realize that this world is inanimate
it does not care because it cannot care it has no feelings at all how can a road feel your feet?

how can those railings feel your hands?
how can the sun feel that you are having fever?

this is but realistic man/woman you are not the center of this universe you have invented the soul you have taken pride in your imagination your calculations and measure your literature and love and hate and romance and celebrations what have you now?

that humiliation because even if you die or suffer for years the world still continues its daily routine of spinning and revolving of making days and nights of making waves and ice and blowing sands and flooding cities

at the last moment before the end of the hours when all your eyes close when they say you die and live again
somewhere
come back please and tell me that what i am telling is not
ture.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nihilist Guest

when you come
we welcome you

faceless and
voiceless yet
you fill the room with sounds of restlessness
with faces of all our fears
and despite the years we still have no name for each ripple
each disturbance

and so
what can we do?
we must take you
as guest welcome you as part of us

you sit on the most important
chair and dine
with us
and we hesitate what to say

we serve you
smoke and
drink and you leave them
as is unconsumed
you roam around each part of the room
we guide you
with our helplessness

i spread petals
upon your path
there is no word
still from you

i keep my word
i stick to my comforting logic

no one lasts
forever
nothing lasts
forever

i am calm and i stare at you
cluless as to what is your
purpose

why do you come
and make us
uneasy with what we are?
and what we are about to become?

you have become part of our lives
and the more we think the more we know that people suffer and without saying a word just keep on moving on with their lives

misery is universal it is a purgative
and we who must accept what is this
all about
less the necessary
denial
have learned to live

each day a struggle
without the bugle.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Noise

the people of this world has produced so much noise the honk, the fan, the sirens, all these machines that pierce the ears of silence all these restlessness making holes in our hearts i know, you are not loved and there is so much noise from your pains the miseries that seek the company of more miseries i know you have loved much much greater much painful than you can even afford to give the babbles, the ramblings, the rattling of the bones stripped of their flesh the restless mind looking for the cure these aches in every corner of the mind drink some glasses of hard liquor take the analgesics of other friends on the same boat with you the noise is too much unbearable in fact not only to our ears but the protest of all our senses but wait, try this, this sacrifice that sits on the corner of this nook silently talking to itself the irony of loving and being hurt the tragedy of the smile that you force upon your mouth the upper lip that kisses the lower lip your hands may caress all that you are your mind shall rest in the soft comforting bosom of your heart try this unprotesting silence and the noise dies

then you have triumphed the contentment of your loving arms embracing no one but the self that you have accepted as your friend

the noise leaves, the silence lies like that beautiful lady waiting on your bed

RIC S. BASTASA
The Noiseless Patient Spider  Of Walt

after reading walt's poem on the noiseless patient spider i, tried to verify it outside, i, stepped out the door and sought that spider
or any spider for that matter and i, found one hanging
motionless on its web between the jack fruit tree and the wall of the tamarind and with my camera i began clicking
i, want to catch what is noiseless, and patient and motionless

i, must, have been too careless or impatient when i fed the shot in my pc the patience cannot be seen the spider
even
is missing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Non-Believer

between a party and a book, i choose to write.
between two words, i
bridge our meanings.
upon a heap of rotten leaves, i ask a prayer of worms what to say at the end i never say amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Non-Conformist

Sorry
says the non-conformist i can't do the rhyme
does not do
it
will not and ever won't

it's my life
and thread
my web
like a black spider
in your nape....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Non-Conformist...

to survive
the art of compromises sells better in the market
of ideas
the best seller of course are those pirated ideas imitations

to conform is still the code of the all time winner

does not convince me however i still love the art of sacrifices confrontational always with what is right
and true

everyone avoids my products i stay inside a small house
and it does not matter
i only need a little space to breathe
and live comfortably i feast only with the sights that my eyes have learned to fully gaze

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nonsensical

IT IS 11: 46 p.m. Philippine time, i wake up feeling so congested, messy, perhaps it is all about the dream i just had,
climbing a very steep mountain to take something that i have forgotten and then i go down
only to remember which way, whichever the feeling of being exhausted so unlike the washing machine or the egg beater
and the blender all mechanical without complaint of being overused by its master
so unlike me, oh, here i am again complaining about my existence, the worm that waits
smiles
wanting to get even with me there is something wrong i know in this monosyllabic monologue of the heart empty like a soccer field after the game one shadow left still looking for the ball the noise fading in the horizon light is taken back yet the sigh is still insisting that something is left like a coin or a cigarette butt
nonsense
he strikes back, stupid foolish sigh, and arms emptied of content like a soft drink bottle
left out waiting for the garbage collector to pick it up nonsense, now i must say waste of time
loveless still.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Novel....

divide and the one that you started many years back about your hero
that you regret writing

now you want to change him his vision and what he is going to do in the next chapters something that he cannot do too because of what he is known already to the other characters they do not expect him to do that the twist of his character is simply too unexpected and they are getting apprehensive that this novel may not have a happy ending after all you think about it for days you ask and even beg him to understand that he must fall and be humiliated and be condemned but he definitely disagrees and warns you that if that is the case then he better be killed and simply be ended in Chapter X of the novel you feel pity for him you think for more days you give it time tonight and you decide no to kill him the novel will not be that good to kill him or not that is your eventual decision at dawn you start typing the next chapter

you keep him alive but the novel shall be damned the other characters of course shall continue adoring him till the last chapter.

there shall be no other sequel on such a bland and usual novel of that happy ending that saddest ever-after.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Now And Then

we do not remember anymore where we come from as we all gaze at the endless space of the night we cannot figure out how to return and what we once were we do not remember anymore how hurt we were we finally decided to stay, here, this moment,
now.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Now In The Noise In The Ripple

It is this interest in the
now
in the noise
In the ripple of the concrete splash As the stone is dropped in a running river

It is not the tomorrow or even the tonight
Of our wishes that is making me live,

In fact our wishes about another nice evening In the garden’s candle lighted dinner Is what makes me leave, that will be too much Honesty for me, it is the life of my lies

That supplies blood to the veins of my existence I do not have life since then, living has been so Miserable, your touch is pain, your gaze is pain,

Your asking me how am I, is causing me pain, I am not true to you, I am not yours anymore,
It is pain, it is this pain, that must decide,
To live like a coward or die once like a brave man

I am a shameless man, and you are too honest.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nth Time....

the slim woman
is licking the ice cream cone
as though it is the only ice cream cone in her whole lifetime

the ice cream vendor who had been watching her is urinating for the nth time

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nuclear Jets

Quiet around the aquamarine park In Clarin
I see dolphins playing
Up to the skies
The nuclear jets are roaring Toward Iraq moving

RIC S. BASTASA
The Nuclear Thing

the giant mushroom
that mankind grows on
the sea

erushing rushing all of us to an abrupt finesse

how lucky the cockroaches
are
this world has become their own kitchen
restroom and bedroom all rolled into one.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Number Is 4.

The tiny capillaries of the gumamela I see. I like to open my palms Somewhere in snowy Vienna.
Nordic walks

On this month of the year.
No coffee. Just green tea.
Just lasagna and pasta.
No rice. Red tomatoes.

Strictly English, but my little german will make a little fun. Danke schon. Yes, gratitude counts wherever we go.

I do not wish to waste myself away.
I must travel now, or if I don’t I may not find a glimpse Of eternity. I like to call a friend In Calgary and crack a joke and stomp My feet and make the hardest laugh.
She must hear it.
Soonest. I don’t like
To tell her, I don’t read in my room.
I don’t eat much either. I don’t pray.
I left my rosary in Sto. Rosario.
A child must have found it, there Is no sign that it shall be returned.

Got tired finally of listening to A young priest’s sermon. He needs a new perhaps a boyfriend.
Could be a sugar mama.

I recall the names of women
I make up in bed before I sleep.
There are so many. So untrue. But There is one name she knows. I like Her buried there. In her conclusions.
In this memory, tears fall inward Like a movie played in reverse.

I don’t really like life.
But I still breathe air, like A hungry man
Grabbing with all hands Pizza and iced tea. Not minding Young girls on the other side Of his table. The number is 4.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Numbers

i think i am beginning to know the numbers their meanings

inside the big dome the dancers are practicing the steps are numbered and the whole day the leader keeps the count one two three four five six

seven eight nine ten

eight seven six five
four three
two one

four three two one
five six seven eight eight seven six five four three
two one

the whole day for the whole week for the whole month these numbers are counted like

one two three four
five six
seven eight nine ten

eight seven six five
four three
two one

four three two one
five six seven eight
eight seven six five four three
two one

i am standing by the door looking at the dancers jump to the count of six five four three

two one hey run and stop and run again and stamp on the left and on the right and point and slash and jump and kick and sway and stand and kneel
and kick and slash

eight seven six five
four three two one

four three
four three two one

numbers indeed
are numbing
	hey make us numb	hey are making us dumb five four three two one.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Numbness Of Being

sometimes we feel
we are trees
birds roost on one of our nights
and early morning
even before the sun shines
upon our leaves
we already experience
a series of departures

and because these departures come in so many forms and colors
soon we become so attuned to all

pain becomes a natural thing
like rain
like leaves falling like winds coming and then going somewhere and we have the courage to say,

'who cares? '

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ocean Of Animosities

you just do not really know if the happy faces you meet on the street of this holiday reason are truly happy, or they just feign it, smiles here and there, greetings too, to cheer you up and not to contaminate you with the deepest sadness of this humanity: alone on christmas, save money for the rainy days, cannot be with family in faraway places, heavy working schedule, broken relationships, trying hard to cope up, and always keeping that thought, to keep things to themselves, mind their own life, and struggle hard just to survive.

oh, it's a concrete jungle right here, a maddening crowd, an ocean of animosities....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ocean Of Choices

in the ocean of choices ships sometimes collide and you become one of the fatalities
a part of yourself becomes a passenger unaccounted you become one of the fishes in one of the myriad corals you become part of the one of the sands of the ocean floor

in the ocean of choices
you are one of the yachts racing for a prize
against the storms
and betrayals

then you never become a bridge you are always one of the islands
in the ocean of choices
you try to swim and then you drown
to become one of the tiny stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Octopus

it is enough
that you know
about an octopus

eight hands
with lots of suckers and a black
spray to lose
you on your way

do not associate.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Oedipus Complex

to this lonely boy the father image has gone blurred like a fog and so the boy runs wild in the forest never fears the rain no monsters in his brain still looking for father's face and body in all the nooks of his fellow men.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Tree And The Mad Dog

you barked
like a mad dog

i stood my ground like an old tree

with what you did i became stronger

and here i am
thanks to you
i love myself
more than ever

do not leave
me
if you only knew beforehand

you should have stopped
for i have no ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Dog That I Met This Morning

its right eye is missing there is no eyeball
to see, it is blank and
black,
its left eye looks at me
asking for a master

to feed it
and take it away from the long
road
that takes it somewhere

i am helpless
and proceeded
to take my own direction

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Door Of Ancestry

it is an old door,
the jams are eaten by termites the lock is not working the hinges are rusty and without the frame of my hands it will just fall as pieces

i imagine the house back to restore our ancestry, and i travel to places to gather what memories are left the old men in those far places are telling me stories my notebook is swelling like a river of tears about to flood the banks of my

heart

many have abandoned
what the house of ancestry has to offer there is nothing to eat there and no one is cooking some noble concoctions

i am the son of Gregorio and my grandfather is Domingo who is one of the five children of Juan who was married to Rosa

they sailed away from Maribujoc
and it was Modesto's rebellion that carried them
away
to the island of Mindanao and they cut the trees of the forest built their homes and cared for their families

now i am moving places into some other places of no interest

the hours are fading and the heirlooms are forgotten i am looking for my roots for i do not have what i call my own i knock at the old broken door of my ancestry

asking for pity.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Flame Is Finally Gone

there was this old flame inside the house made of wood it is alive supported by a wick and a bowl of oil it is a comfort for blackouts and we all look at it with wonder we keep it from the wind and the rain and it stands still one day we find ourselves in great grief the bowl of glass is shattered and the oil is spilled on the ground the wick is gone and we searched for it for days someone so cruel destroyed what we looked up to then the night comes in without electricity we grappled the house is silent under a sky without stars

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Flame Of The Heart

i still wonder why she doesn't want to talk to me when i broke her heart 25 long years ago.

shall i think that she still
love me?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Flower....

there is only one flower that i have
i am hiding it behind my back and it is not for you

it is for someone else..

i am hiding it behind my back so you may not see what it is so you may not quarrel about it

it is for someone else...

i have only one flower in my hand behind my back it does not have complete petals it is wilting and does not have any scent
it is dead
it is a dead flower and i am hiding it behind my back

it is for someone else....

this is an old flower that i have taken from my antique trunk tonight i shall burn it and it shall have the smoke which shall tell my story to the cold moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old House Of My Grandfather

sometimes as i walk early morning when the suns starts to climb up on the hill i think of grandfather's house old, and spacious on top of a hill overlooking his farm where his carabaos graze his goat and cows and ducks teem, oh, those were the years of bounty and there was no worry, about what to eat what to do
where to go,
times changed, and now we are always on a race taking much work, and buying lots of things sometimes we regret, taking and throwing going and then returning apparently, for no purpose and without meaning, we live in a new house now with glass windows and iron grill and high and thick walls and fences we speak less, we move more, we laugh less, we discuss more,
the old house of grandfather was burned in 1968. this new house burns all day, and there is no fireman coming.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old House.....

after arriving from the u.s. dodong went straight to the ancestral house in milad, it is quite big, with two storeys, made of hard wood, and nipa roofed.

it stands upon a hill overlooking the sea far away from the city.

he opened the front door which squeaked wanting to perhaps greet him and tell a horrible story of what really happened before they left the place for good after ten long years of wanting to forget.

it is a shame of the family his father said before he died. This must be kept a secret, something which he carried to his grave.

dodong understands that pain is always there, coming like a stab in his chest. He can hear the cries of her two sisters, the loud screams of his mother. He was then a small boy before those three monsters.

it was the time of their fall.
He was tied to a chair where mother was killed. The whole town knew.
But it was still kept a secret.

Happiness is a hypocrisy. Silence is an option. Leaving things slipping like water from one’s hands.
Now he is back with nothing to do but to pray and forgive. This is not home. This is a graveyard of family's tragedy. After a few minutes, he is now ready, to burn this house.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Houses Of Vigan

the old houses
claim their right
not not be changed

they shiver when you touch
any of their
walls

they fear that you may soon change
your mind
and proclaim that beauty lives in new creations

you ask yourself
if truth is truer
when tested by the fading of time

or its ultimate disappearance upon
the cajolery of recent promises

the truth frowns upon
you
you are late
and you walk upon the shallowness of those reddish bricks

the old houses are howling with the winds of
change

they have outlived fire and played on those earthquakes and
floods

you walk away
and you simply let them be beautiful in their own ways magnificent in those dresses of cracking paints

they still look regal on those faces framed by stones

surely, they have the right still to be here.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Lady

i am saddened by her disposition she takes side with her word and honor and she makes it clear she is with my enemies,

her name is mother-in-law.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man

sits on the hard wood chair
beside the door
facing the
road
always always
waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man  In Our Minds...

we have seen the same old man sitting along the sidewalk smoking his cigarette
not feeling the pain
perhaps
when that red glow
touches the skin of his finger...

did he count the cars passing by?

did he have any thoughts at all?

we cannot go inside
his mind
neither can we probe
the labyrinths
of his heart

we pass him by
and we face the world again

we will soon be like him
and we shrug off all these fears.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man And His Chair....

the leaves of years
swiftly fall

the winds of change
the summers of acceptance are quicker

the branches of time have turned bald

a man is alone but not sad as you expect it thinks of a boat

sailing
it knows of a place
beyond his chair

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man And The Young Boy

don't do this, and don't do that' the young boy, unable to understand asks, ' what is this and what is that? ' the old man beats him with a cane and makes him kneel before God

the young boy still does not understand
why he is being punished for not having understood at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man Beside A Huge Tree

i have seen the picture of an old man beside a huge oak tree

the picture is old black and white and the kind of one that is strong for it will last another lifetime

i have not seen the old man neither the huge oak tree for real i have the picture of the old man and the old oak tree and the younger man sleeping his smooth skin caressed by the fluffing grass there is a story there and it is all about gods and dogs

a film about a director who lost his fame and fortune about a young gardener who captures a heart and made it bleed

at the end the old man met a happy death the old oak tree was gone but i have not really seen what is real i have seen only the picture of what i thought could have been real black and white

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man Friday Of Our House...

dr. ric s. bastasa

The Old Man Friday Of Our House...

dr. ric s. bastasa

the old man friday is back with us leaving his wife in the mountains to keep her sense of home and now he is here mopping the floors of this ancestral house which in the coming years shall be empty too as we definitely proceed to the journey without any promise of return, and where shall he be after this torture of life and living?
he will leave no child as he is into another oblivious fathering into the nothingness of all human endeavors just like what is happening to us who were here ahead of his bickering.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man Has Found True Love Again

If you see him you may not recognize the old man whose hair is black as asphalt
whose nails shine like the new moon his face a little bit stretched by the magic of dermatological advanced technology as a young woman, 19 to be exact clings over his arms like a sexy leech lifted from the nearby creek

and he struts this news about his new found love in church and in the plaza and most of the time at the mall
while he takes charge of all the bills after a hectic shopping schedule of his true love

a young man looks at them and then from his face creates a grin as the young woman winks at him as though saying

'tonight at ten'.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man In Greece...

somewhere in Greece
now i remember
because of your letter there was an old man who holds a piece of a shattered mirror that he carries everywhere and those that he cannot confront
or say
see directly he does with his mirror
and he had since then seen them all

whatever light he captures he reflects it to those who are sad like him and he tells himself now
i understand
now i am no longer afraid now i can proceed to the ways of being alone
what road is left he must traverse
what thought is there
he must think for
himself
and before he died (because he died in truth alone in his bedroom)
he wrote his view of the world
in that shattered piece of mirror
still reflecting whatever small light
he stored
from within....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man Is Bitten

the little boy says
he misses you

and then whispers
he needs money

you are stung but keeps your calm

'boy' you tell him
' it is bad to ask money from an old man'

' Grand pa' the young boy argues

' what will you do
with your money? '

the old man is bitten
by Death who appears as a young boy
to him

RIC S. BASTASA
there was this old man and i always remember him tenant of the family for years of the vast coconut land we own

he was poor and lived in a very small nipa hut
all house to him no sala, no furnitures, just this soil kitchen and dirty kettles and unwashed tin cups and and firewood and pail of water from the nearby river

he got two sons and 3 daughters all gone to the city also becoming as domestic helpers and he would bring a chicken from the farm and a goat and some fruits to grandpa and grandpa would scold him for being too lazy that the chicken was thin and the goat was small and the fruits were not ripe yet for harvest and what i remember of the old man was that no matter what verbal abuse or (even physical abuse) that was accorded to him he never answered or frowned or complained

he had that smile always that i saw and i always remember always with a sad heart since then even if i had already become a lawyer and tried to defend the poor peasants of our little town where the vast coconut farm has thrived and still conquered what little injustices still left unsolved

he died years ago
and i could have died with him
if not for the reason.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Man Who Comes Back To His Old Hometown

the days indeed pass by swiftly the seasons are like the flaps of a bird’s wing our moments are like the movements of billiard balls we hear sounds of collisions and then some colors are gone the boy that mother coddled before died a few years back before growing his fingernails mother shrunk like a deflated balloon and what is left is her scent of milk the sound of the cradle turns into a creak of an old door the footsteps of Papa on that pavement are like the steps on the sand dunes easily blown by the winds of changing times when you come back to a previous place the faces that meet you give you the blank looks not even quizzical for no one knows you or any member of your family your heart is an empty home looking for anyone who can remember the sounds of children who can identify the games that once were played under the moon but there is no one there anymore and so you take the bus heading to the new place of your existence you are like an old woman gathering the white cloth and the needle and the colored threads beginning another design for another embroidery and mo matter how sweet are the memories they have to take their exits giving chance to the incoming ones which to your mind are not really that exciting anymore

The Old Man....

there is this garden that you tend you put the seeds and they all sprout in time time waters it
the changes take place
soon the flowers bloom and you watch all these with patience
there is this light feeling that comes like butterfly wings white against the dusk

there is nothing new in that garden you are sick and takes the rest you sit by the window the same window all these 50 years time is you boring attendant independent from your grasp it can exist without you you sit and watch the world passing by like a flower slowly unfolding and you never notice it you go out

you have recovered from a disease
you
take a walk
visit some friends come back in the afternoon you watch the view from the window
again
this you do perhaps for another 50 years
of your life
setting aside fears of not having to step upon 60
life is short for those who have no one to love it is the same field same mountain bald and brown

same clouds
pale blue and drifting same fog
fading like a magical show same window

that you close again because it is dark
and cold inside your old wooden bed
that you have inherited from your forefathers

as usual
you take your sleep
time passes you by the room is so silent
as though
it is the home for
the dead

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Miserable Woman....

you must understand
and please do not be hurt that between you and
and that old woman
she will choose the latter, forget your wit, hide your humor discard your wisdom, throw away all confidences, --keep your money make more, save, hoard, do not spend, do not talk, keep that tree of abundance grow, make it tall, let all the green leaves of summer come about, keep the mystery, live privately for soon, when you sit again beside that old woman, she will finally choose you- -

and then do not mind her, she will soon die, and be forgotten, live your life fully erase her completely and do not ever compare yourself to that old woman, how she caused so much misery to you, how you have learned, to love yourself, follow your ambition, and fulfill what you wish you were not.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Nipa Hut In Shambles...

in the middle of the rice field after the harvest

March, wet days, the nipa hut stands alone

the grasses have grown tall no one arrives neither someone leaves abandoned, the heart sometimes cannot anymore remember

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Place Of Sin

you already left
for days
laundering your soul
far away

things settle stones sink

you try to hold your hands and your feet
but no
they have no minds of their own eye all take you back to that old house of sin where you do not sleep

and honestly you must admit you like it
too

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Poet

he speaks of the sea
the vastness of space occupied nonetheless by water & salt suddenly he says a door appears for him to enter for me to see

he enters
and the door closes in
as i watch
his grace and grandeur

then he is lost forever while i reflect on what happens also to me
the next time

this time
i prefer more windows
this time
i like to study more
the air & mountains

for i am new and the ocean will be too much and this door thing will be very hard to understand a black bird comes to me it speaks of freedom

i look at it eye to eye i say i like it more sitting flying is still the future today is still mine without wings.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Poet And The Young Poet

a young poet complains the life of a poet gets too boring when there are no readers or hands clapping perhaps he is searching for fame or honor the old poet believes otherwise the years of silence bury him into oblivion

he had those hands clapping in the passions of his youth the summit of fame is the mountain he worked for

he once lived on top of the hill the naives think he is the cloud king it is when you still love to write even if no one is listening that the life of the poet becomes a perfect volcanic cone on the day of the eruption red magma not lava flows on the river no one screams

there are no more hands asking for help
no one no one
tells any story

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Soft Pillow To Rest My Head This Christmas

an empty room is still a room, and it has become mine,

to accept that it is empty and it shall be like that for the coming years is freedom from too many expectations
or bridles

all i had is a soft pillow to rest my head and it made me feel so good that i overslept that night

RIC S. BASTASA
Fr. Finster administered the Body of Christ in the Davao City Jail Perhaps he thought that humanity is still found in the cell where whorled souls are kept One day the disciple of the Devil stabbed him
The murder was done
And no one was there to help him

He died with a note that he had forgiven the Malefactor

The hall of this university is named after him This is where I reflected on the meaning of humanity.
This is where I think of Doubt That strips me of Faith This is where I left and this is where I must come back To redeem what was lost in me.

This empty hall
This hall where shadows lurk Where there is no door that closes when one Leaves for good

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Wisdom Of Grandma Oris

if you do not wish to get burned

do not go near to any place of fire

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Woman And Her Loyal Maid

the old woman is very rich she has two children, a lovely daughter and a very naughty son the lovely daughter dislikes her and the naughty son wants to kill her she slaps her often and the more the daughter wants to go away from her the son is disturbed and furious because he did not know his father enough the daughter married a gentle man and the son went away with no know address no known destination he never came back while she lives her own life away from the rich woman the old woman has a loyal maid who has no memory of humiliating words that the old woman more often inflicts in her person

the old woman is dying but the son and daughter have no respect anymore for such word as mother.

meanwhile the loyal maid keeps swallowing the pesters of the old woman expecting a part of the wealth as her pay and legacy well, this story cannot have an ending yet the old woman is still alive and the son and daughter are still making up their minds

what to do next.

Life is a comma. The ending always waits for something that will be a happy one.

But who knows, except this one, something tragic may happen at the end. Who knows?
I will for sure.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Woman Beside The Nipa Hut...

as i walk away
she calls my name
i am not related to her and exactly
i do not her too,

she calls for help
and mentions names of his children

and her husband long dead
years ago

i walk faster and not looking back and i thank myself for all these contentments everything is fair

nothing diminishes me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Woman In That House Of Hate....

she makes a scarecrow out of us

the girl on the yellow road has turned into a witch

she only knows the tin man and the hay stack

does she ever forget that beyond the story is us?

we were shaped as swords you the strongest jagged edge dagger that i know of

she makes a fool out of us and we retaliate for we know how all the while and in the coming days of her remaining life she has died, when she rots, there is no need for any ritual no flowers, no funeral dirge we know what not to do to make us alive, her bones when the turn to dust, shall be given to the winds. She was never with us and we never belong to her.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Woman Of The School...

she believes in you
and that was the most important thing that happens to the life of the student...

the old teacher who had taught you well how to speak English and write a story using that language...

the importance of feelings and how you made the other people feel she had made you competitive and ambitious not forgetting the value of poetry and the humanity that lies embedded in the great literary works

of the masters

she gave you wings which remained invisible
she created you a world which you only know and where you still live with dignity and pride

when she died
you recited an eulogy which could have narrated the best about her when she was alive and so inspiring but your tears and sobs did speak for her more and those who attended the funeral understood so well.

The Old Women In The Village Where I Live

The old women at 4:58 dawn are in the streets
again

with lighted
lamps on their
hands

they walk the cold pavements

and chant
their old prayers

round and round
the kiosk

until the first morning light

arrives warming
their

wilting hands
the furrows on their foreheads

their worn cheeks

and slowly like turtles

they converge
inside an empty

chapel of this quiet village where i write
where i live.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Women Of The Barangay

i feel quite uncomfortable to the old women in this barangay on a mumbo-jumbo of memorized prayers like a playing tape recorder of those old times reading a nowernario from page one to twenty.

after then they walk their way back home from church
talking about other people's lives condemning, laughing, and too judgmental they're happy & contented and sure of their own rooms reserved for them in heaven.

i envy their own certainties.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Old Women Of The Water Village

i

they are singing paddling the boats that we are riding following the path of a river that shows us
old houses made of stones

we pass the bridge where once the famous Chinese painter
brushed
water colors for the emperor

ii

for a fee
we have given them work we are the tourists and they are
singing

if only we can understand the lyrics of their old serenade a la Venice

we could have realized how stupid we are...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Om

three slices of fresh philosophy existential

a half ounce of law on family
conflict

a pinch of a childhood sour grape

another slice of sweet lemon at the age of 16

ground bitterness like pepper
still hot in my throat

a little milk of my first love

six of honey from my college friends

make my salad of my critical years

i sit on the table
facing an ocean of possibilities

i contemplate of halting the days

and escape Time
and find refuge in perhaps

Death with an expectation of A surprise to Reincarnation, i can chant for now the Om

i am silent
There is no one Here

It is good sometimes
To be Alone

Holding my Pulse Listening attentively

If i am still here
If i am myself, My true Self

and no Other.
I am listening. I am listening.

Om.

RIC S. BASTASA
The One That I Bought....

the first painting is a lushness of deep red and black bold lines a mournful of deserted houses people having abandoned them a long time ago due to terror the second one is a crowd of women carrying baskets of fish and men landing their boats on the shore beside a market place of the most ordinary village where trade is booming the third one are five children resting beside a water buffalo and there was that one child with a hat reading his book while the other one is whistling and the rest are sleeping

you are dismayed with what i chose i bought the one with a white boat and an orange sail back-grounded by light blue clouds and coconut trees and you told me that the fisherman is not there and i responded that he is with his wife inside their house making up with the time lost.

RIC S. BASTASA
The One Thousand Herons

you have sent a thousand herons in the blue skies they will be landing on some places you have not been to, meeting races of men, at different times even when you are already gone. These herons will always be alive, even when the blue skies turn gray, even when the places become hazy, even when all the races disappear.

congratulations!
i hear the flaps of their wings their songs and silence sometimes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The One Who Notices The Earthworms

if you notice how the earthworms die and you you hear their last sad songs
the night before they all perished
on that pavement
at the last hour
when the waters
rise
when you hear them scream
after their saddest sighs
the last one

when you
finally hear their silence
like a period
of the long sentence that you have written

i know your name

you are
the poet
from the line of issa

RIC S. BASTASA
The One Whom Karen Interviewed...

i envy this woman who is running for a seat in the senate

she makes a mark in our history: that a human being can still be admirable

even if she has no brains even if her answers are out of touch now, she has become a possibility and then well, we applaud her for being too honest, candid and too empty....

RIC S. BASTASA
The One You Fear  That Which Finally Makes You Unknown....

i perfectly understand
sir
i was once there

i tell you it was not that fulfilling
never did i dream about
that thing

i love the plains
the grasses
i rode a horse towards the edge i did not fall as you expected the world is never flat just the rest of the riders i become a dot from far into the horizon the one you fear that which finally makes you unknown....

i am so sorry
but you missed the real point of the whole story what you think is wrong but keep it just the same i am happy with the thought that you are happy... do not quit soon you will find what i found,

air in my lungs,
water in my hands
sands in my feet
ash on the hearth
fire in the sky
foams of the sea
song of the desert
a crack of a nut
the breaking of glass
the blindness of
the window
the jamming of the door tears on the floor

be happy, do not ever
ever think again.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The One...

the one that you meet
and at night
always remember
and can't forget

the one that cannot stay with you
tears your heart bleeds you blood

you shake hands kiss cheek to cheek
and say those words that only the sea
understands

since then you wander heartlessly....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Only Witness....

she alleges she was raped that night by the man who was drunk beside her
three-month old baby who did not cry...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Only Fish In Your Lake

it is beautiful
pure heart of gold
inside you
it is a moon surrounded by stars
a face veiled hair laced with white flowers
it is a lake
and in it
swims the only fish
of your life
that without it
everything in you
dies

you love it
yet you never touch it you never had the time to kiss and hug it

if there is only in a dream

RIC S. BASTASA
The Only Point Of The Story....

inside the room
there are two pigs
the black one is hungry
the white one is always thirsty and they make a good pair for a show
on a Sunday
fair

the room is a chapel and the priest is making a sermon
why pigs are tolerated
to become clowns
and why clowns are different instead of making children

laugh
they keep on making them
cry
for their heads have horns and their hands are
thorns

the shoes on the floor are dogs who keep on barking the moon whose face as usual is blank like an unwritten letter to an old grandmother who lives seven seas away solitude is all over the place like the light of the moon over the roof and the esplanades and the garden where weeds begin singing the silence of the stones and the twigs cut by owls who are not looking wise anyway

up there is a boy on a tree running away from home

actually that is the only point of the story.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Only Rose?

i sit here
away from you
city...

little prince
decanting...

only rose?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Only Way To Do It With All Respect Is To Leave....

all these rusty things, door knobs, and keys
spoons and
tin plates
gates of iron and lamp posts
the stove that mother
used
the knife that father kept rust that smells
failures
and falling and hitting the bottom of the truth the one that sinks
and settles making you see all those passing
moments

rusting relationships sour or salty feelings
you jerk
for the first time but you cannot just jerk and jerk forever no one must tremble permanently one relaxes
and the only way to do it with full respect is just to leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Only Way To Understand What We Have Been Talking About...

let me write about peace then.

the irony is that peace has no use of words, like silence,

when you utter it, it is not there anymore.

let me paint peace then, ah, the very sound of the brush disturbs it, the way we choose the color, creates an argument let me have a camera and take a picture of peace, disregard the click and the flash just imagine it,

early dawn, a fisherman casts his net on a noiseless sea all the fish have gone to the other side of the island.

the earlier you accept that you have been rightfully abandoned the easier is it to understand what we have been talking about.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Oppressed Frog

a frog
who is never given the pond that he deserves
cannot appreciate
what beauty is,

and the white crane
whose beauty you
adore
who takes frogs for dinner
of course
shall never be his goddess

RIC S. BASTASA
The Oppressor

the oppressor comes
with a smile
your mother has already been bound by the sweetness of her
words
tied to the tree of her deceptions
from a distance you see the slyness of her tricks
the quickness of her hands your eyes are puzzled but as you are trained in the silence of your solitude to see the worst of
others
whose hearts are black whose breaths are foul who mocks the pure
and kills the innocent you stare at her
the oppressor and stabs her with your honesty
that look of the saintly that judgment of the god who tells her
of the eventuality
the penalty laid in the pages of the hearts of good men
she falls on the floor of her madness
her bat wings clipped her fire reduced to smoke
her body
to ashes
now you are feeling better
in this poem
that must punish her kill her! kill her!
it shouts in all the kingdoms of the air

RIC S. BASTASA
The Option

i do not have to believe you.
there are limits to what we can be.
to beliefs
and to my upbringing.
i cannot be another murderer and take pride in what i have done to a humanity that kills and never feels any guilt thereafter.

i cannot be with you in the belief that robbing a bank is a protest against the ownership and oppression of the
the few
those who believe that they have the right to own everything and leave nothing to
anyone.

i cannot swim to your pool.
i am no swimmer at all.

you should have noticed that in my hunger and humiliation,
i have only resorted to the
nothing
but the lines of my chosen poetry.

beyond these words,
i desire nothing anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Option In The Middle Of A Very Sound Sleep

the poem is a dream it arrives in the middle of my sound sleep it wants to wake me up it is severely disturbed it wants to be written

i am so tired
and i ask it
why it does have to be written?

i do not have the answer to fabricate its purpose i know it has so many reasons

but i respect it somehow and i leave it undeciphered

at the last hour of my
sleep

it leaves me perturbed somehow but when i wake up and gets myself busy with the ordinary days of my life it becomes another item forgotten

perhaps its reason is that it is in the middle of a very sound sleep and so it has all the option to tell the truth

RIC S. BASTASA
The Orange Cat With One Eye

lazy cat
the rats are playing again on the cellar
can't you catch
for once
their mother?

do not ask me again
about the possibility of you having to read a poem.
an eye
can be so dangerous
without a claw
to catch a single mouse.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Order Of Our Personal Universe

the head comes first then the heart
and then the hands
and then the feet

micro, macro, minute, cosmos
this order shall be followed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Origin Of A Poem....

eventually words do not just come in the air which you catch as a butterfly and which then shall lay helpless to the caprices of your fingers that cruel and senseless hand that stoic indifference of mankind, there is such thing as an origin like the way how eve came about from the ribs of adam, it was the long deep sleep which made you forget how butterflies were born and how each fragile and short story is forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
The Origin Of Greed

it started when we were yet children playing marbles and rubber bands play money and toy guns and gunpowders

we hoard them like some kind of treasures

then we move to food
and other goods

to houses and lots and
money,

it does not end there we move to other matters like time and places and diamonds and islands and planes and even submarines

then to power, how other people's lives have become mere words within the touch of the tips of our fingers we like to be god,

God,

but God has His own mysterious ways, today your life has End.

to God, you have become the flower of the day taken by the wind and gone dust you shall return, and there is no more name left for that.

You are nothing. Nothing.
The Ostrich....

the child in you still stays within your guts unspoiled you tell the spade that it is precisely what it is, unsolicited. You look at the leaking roof and tells everyone

at the party

about what it is really, as it is, despite everything, how the roof can sanction you to live with all your storms forever, outside the house, where the yard keeps you in its corners ostracized, as you begin another ostrich life out there in the mountains with your head up high chasing all storms and leaving them all behind you as you reach the placid lake, wishing for some fish.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Other

i have long known that without the other
there is no us,

the familiarity begins
words bind us
the us becomes the i
the i recognizes
the better we

and so the song begins to sing upon itself
the song of life

the dirge fades out like a rocket at night
flickering
dissolving in such vast space

RIC S. BASTASA
The Other Greener Pasture

that is the usual case when you look over the fence that you just built your eyes gaze to the other side greener than yours
i mean, the grass, not the greenness of your iris if you could have built a higher fence so that you can narrow your gaze within the four corners of your walls and live this life that is all yours to own you could have been happier here but life is not meant to be just that four walls, a higher fence, taking all that come sitting down and breathing the air inside the lungs

which until now have not seen the rays of the sun

play the game climb a tree
try jumping over your fences

it is only then when you realize
that after all
your grass has always been greener
your air more fresh your fence most stable.

after all you got a poodle a rose, a butterfly, a bird, and this PC

that knows how to write poetry.
The Other Now Speaks

i love you
secretly

every night
you in my dreams

every aspect of you
is precious

you are gold to
me

but what am i
to you? i dare ask
now.

(you answer)

i know what a pain in the ass means.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Other Side Of Imagination....

fear is the other side of
imagination

a barren land
a monster lives there feeding on children
and women

the skies are black light is hurting
a house is on its ruins

on the other hand
one can always reinvent wings and hops
and scales and rudders

one can always gather all the winds
and puff and

bluff to take back that life in confidences that heritage which those who had long died before us had long wanted to hand us.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Other Side Of Self-Centeredness

no one believes that the earth is the center of this universe or that our universe is the center of all other universes insignificant, that is a fact i am insignificant

but this insignificance can kill

what is meaningless hurts
the most

this, i, for instance, and so we go on faith,

i am the center of this universe, and i have the right to be so there is a bulb that lights

in my heart

spread throughout the darkness of my nights

there is paradise inside my body there are skies in my eyes and look, the colors of my world

change

blooms, and shines, and blinks, i am at the center of it all,

alive and meaningful....
The Other Side Of The Coin Is Rusting

after you have seen it all you commented that the other side of the coin is rusting
while the other side is gleaming like shiny silver ware and you ask the question what do you wish to do about it?

you will say there is still hope i am saying now as i told you once and i will tell it again life is what you make it life is not fair

just do what you think is best under your own circumstances

RIC S. BASTASA
you make things vague for me and i respect you for that
sometimes
i feel it is better that way where i can see most of what you are not and having seen so i know more of what you really are sometimes it is the dark side that we live in that makes us love more
the coming light
it is in those vaguest terms that we begin to embrace the value of things most certain that we have long taken for granted

RIC S. BASTASA
The Outcast

as i see it
from page to page it seems that he does not like you to write anything at all be it prose or poetry minute by minute every second
he puts the words
and on every line
there is no vacant
space for you

where do you insert your thought? there is one space
for you
and it is outside his big circle.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Overflowing Heart

in a place where you are no longer welcome
what will you do?

you may go there but you are no longer there it is the mind that takes revenge the heart however stands still with patience overflowing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Overseas Workers

we are empty people like sacks, like rubber balloons we like to be light in air so we seek being filled up it is not helium or hydrogen it is this need for a talk a chat,

and we are here for this a missing you and a missing me we talk about places, work, masters, discrimination, then we end with we have no choice anyway we remain patient and callous and we conclude with we are the survivors of this chasing game we are happy and we want to stay for what can we do in those places which we call home?

no one lives there anymore and when we arrive at those doors we are simply met by rats and bugs

i miss the flowers, they are all gone now the furniture are old and the gloss has faded the house is for sale, and my bags are always ready to go anywhere
i do not really know

we are your overseas workers, your heroes and heroines we have no home for now.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Overwhelming....

once more
you have written a group of lines
without a vortex

waters are spilled
all over
into a desert of sand so much sun
nothing is worth seeing nothing drips or trips

you wait for the night when all the stars come out
into the open
darkness of the sky

the glittering lights of
emptiness
the overwhelming silence of impermanence

RIC S. BASTASA
happiness has five fingers.
to each its length, at some degrees, or intensities, how i feast on you and how i read gluck on the other.

the pages of life are not the same, unsynchronized even.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pain From Which The Soul Dances With So Much Joy to be a poet is to be a soul to deny the body of its place on earth is what the soul asserts to be a body again when you fall short of something divine inside you that undeniable force that drives you crazy when you write in that trance the body whips upon itself the pain from which the soul dances with so much joy

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pain In His Heart

If you only see him Holding his heart with his hands Trying to stop the bleeding
The flow of blood
Under his feet

You were there
You were so beautiful indeed

You were like the gushing wind Merely passing him by Not a glance
Not a sense of even a little Touch of compassion

You were gone in such a very short moment Like the wind rushing to somewhere
The edge
The shore the endless horizon

Some screams are heard on the earth These are the blood from his heart About to turn into stones

RIC S. BASTASA
for one thing
if you finally see me here in the exact location of where i am you will find me surely inconsistent,
for i, this peritoneal complainant and protester
is sleeping with the pain in my ass.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pain Of Carrying A Basketful Of Guilt

somehow i have not given up the need for hiding places my choice of words has always been that of discrimination

i want to spell things correctly except that you have the habit of bringing in the wrong word definitely i still go for secret gardens and of those caves that appear like waterfalls

i still adore them for what they are not for all their deceiving appearances no one is as open as a field of corn now even the ants have their own secret labyrinths and unusual destinations to the secret places of the heart you always brag about that to each her own woman to each his own masculinity the sharing is but a flash, a flask of feelings discarded like wastes people meet, make love in the dark, put their clothes own and walk away it is as simple as that if you ask for more, the problem of what is right and wrong comes along who shall carry a basketful of guilt for you? no one, but if you want it, by all means carry it in the parks in the wild let us see, let us see how painful can pure be

RIC S. BASTASA
The Painting Inside The Court

so there was this prisoner on a drug case who's rather watch a painting than hear his lawyer argue his case for all those ten years perhaps so tired of the drag and the lull of legal delays he finally gives up the hope of his freedom claiming his innocence all along angered by the way the police officers planted the shabu in his pocket while being handcuffed the painting was put there by the judge as a way of making the room alive which looks like a doomsday to all those who had been there there is this man and woman harvesting the golden fields of rice in summer beside the hills is a nipa hut and by the window a little girl is looking at them above the hut is the blue clouds the sun and some migratory birds heading for some unknown destination

RIC S. BASTASA
so there was this prisoner on a drug case who'd rather watch a painting than hear his lawyer argue his case for all those ten years

perhaps so tired of the drag and the lull of legal delays he finally gives up the hope of his freedom claiming his innocence
all along
angered by the way the police officers planted the shabu in his pocket while being handcuffed

the painting was put there by the judge as a way of making the room
alive
which looks like a doomsday to all those who had been there there is this man and woman harvesting

the golden fields of rice in summer beside the hills is a nipa hut and by
the window
a little girl is looking at them above the hut is the blue clouds the sun and some migratory birds heading for some unknown destination

RIC S. BASTASA
The Panther With Red Wings

from childhood

the mind
gives you a black panther with red wings

piano music
flies like white doves in the air alone in a faraway island you stroll
no tree for a shade

the black panther with red wings lands on the spot of your solitude staring at you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradise That Was There Which Our Blindness Had Not Seen here we are we dream of this journey we conceive

a destination of

paradise which is not here.

we cut the bridge
back home
we burned our houses in that old place

now we construct
our own houses of more dreams

create another path that must eventually lead towards us

we do not like it here but we have no more options because we were so
hardheaded
and stupid, because we did not listen to what truth lies in the present state

the good it has given the promises it fulfilled the paradise that was there which our blindness had not seen.
The Paradox

my being here
and my being there too

things that go up
and yet stay down here

a thing and yet
a soul

a body and yet
light as air

i will go there
you're late

and yet we're there
together

so the same
and yet so different

is that what you mean and didn't mean at all?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradox Between Us

I'm back to my comfort zone it is an island

inside you where i live when you look at it
carefully
like a telescope to the star farthest from you
i am actually outside
everyone

your hands can touch me but it is only my pair of hands there is more to my fingers that drip like rain from a leaking roof which falls on the floor and goes down the drain until it is lost and no one can find it not even myself who proclaims that i know much better than anyone else i am not true and that it is a fact.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradox Of Christmas

whatever was it that we value in our hands, with so much love, carefully closed inside our fingers, saying ' this is mine totally now! ' my dear friend to make these things yours forever you must know, must always be given away you must have seen, how they are taken away from those who wanted them selfishly.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradox Of Giving

Whatever you hold in your hands so carefully, wish so much love, yours so totally, my companion, you must give away
in order for it to become yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradox Of Giving....

i was looking for happiness
just like all the
rest

it seems that happiness is in hiding
and seemingly very hard to find something you want to reach somewhere

like a bird on top of a glider

like a nugget of gold
underneath
this earth

or a star far far into the darkest sky

i stopped looking for
happiness
and it somehow looks for
me

could i be happiness
too?
and i cannot be found slippery like
an ell

into the deepest sea
of my mind
i linger

till you come and tell
me
happiness lies in the other which we must find through giving

what i have is in you and i must give it to you the paradox of finding for it is only in the giving.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradox Of Hunger

half the melons
flowed red
and much of the oranges are sun-drenched
all guavas glowed
like moons of the nights of June
roasted calf rolled like scaled thunder
on May longings
the hunger is there
but for now
satisfaction shies.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradox Of Summer

summer is here
and i do not have plans,

morning
for the sea
a stroll
a dip
a splash
a sun bath

noon
for my favorite resto
lots of sashimi and sushi too
and green tea

nighttime
is dinner with you
red wine
pork steak Arabian bread candle light Mozart music
carrot cake

stargazing
leaning over a steel rail at the 10th floor
of the hotel

holding hands
talking about anything

no plans really
letting go
whatever
reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradox Of Wish And Want

you insist to see it all night you long to touch it it is in your house of dreams every space is filled you salivate and hunger
you think nothing else except that it is an inch away from the touch of your fingers
a sigh away from your wish it a hair that rises from your skin
a blush a blink of your sleepy eye
it has been this way
for all those passing years until one moment this moment of a lifetime you hug it it is there you kiss it and lick it
and move away as though you now own it
completely

only to realize it is not what you wanted it is something else and your heart weeps

RIC S. BASTASA
The Paradox Of You

i learned a lot.

by not saying so much i realize i can say everything

by only showing you the tip of the iceberg
i know
that you will always remember the sinking and everything follows like a wholesale of emotions

i learned a lot from you that in silence the noise gets trapped it screams but no one shall hear it and no one shall be disturbed anymore i learned a lot from your surrender.

i know, you win.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Parting...

let the parting be as formal as an invitation card let the date be specific the rituals well defined let us forgo the waving of the hands try the flying kiss as you embark on a trip back grounded by the deep honk of
the boat
let it be said there are no final goodbyes just like temporary hellos
people change and like the seasons follow the cycle of here and now
and see you later

as the iguanas shed off their skins so must we in our beliefs in pain we molt but in due time we are smooth again rebounding

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
The Parts In Relation To The Whole

te the parts in relation to the whole are hard to muster i get lost somehow confused on this seemingly unrelated part to another part like seeing the legs of this millipede when it would have been easier to think of it as a worm,

i remember being lost in a forest of trees wild growing trees where i can no longer figure out the shape of a single leaf
because it is too dark
and damp

too many little things, too many details, that hinder us from grasping the wholeness of
things
and people and daily events, i get tired of all these, parts and parts and parts and some more miniatures of parts, a letter to the word, speaking in cut phrases how can i ever understand this and that?

show me the whole
be whole to me as i am whole to you touch the parts later relate it always to me this love is whole, it was never meant to be chopped like some garlic and onions this love is an apple that you see and pick from the tree take it first in its appleness, then start to bite every part is sweet, every part is me,

this love

this me, this whole world is me it must be first to you then love becomes us.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Party Is Over

when the party is over you will be alone again on some leftovers
and stained mantels
empty wine glasses
with some respect for drops unconsumed tables with some morsels and crumbs

her perfume sticking to the curtains his smoke
clinging to glass
ash trays

the feigned affections cliched by this outdated display of overused hugs
and kisses

the laughter that reverberates
practically nothing

when they all leave one by one like trickles of moderate
rains

you are still asking about your relevance

you are very drunk
and so you sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
The Party Of Masks....

in the party of masks names become a taboo
you do not ask for addresses or numbers.
the rule there is
take each as he/she is.
serve yourself, gaze.
mind your own business.
keep doing what you want.
if you dance, then dance.
if you leave, you may.
this he says, is reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Party Of Masks.....

you are into this party of masks and concealment unaccustomed to this crowd and perhaps unprepared to something strange and new you are the only one who wears your own face, unconcealed and they all look at you with mockery and even contempt why you are you in this party where everything is concealed to get more fun and without any responsibility no attachment no past, and perhaps no future too.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Passing Away Of Orange Shades

you gather symbols
the metaphors confuse you but just the same you take a stone, a rose, a knife chunks of clouds for a dinner

of loneliness
the night appears like a steel pipe singing the songs of the winds on empty holes

the rust are many and the powder of regrets stumble upon the circular edge of day

south of the moon's directions against the coldness of the walls you listen for something that you do not like to hear you grapple for the touch of looseness
dripping sounds from the bottom of the orange sun sinking on the line of black horizon

until you see nothing but the humming of the soul inside your brain
nothing seems significant except the murmur

that old murmur that becomes a chant to survive the havoc of the day you paint a sigh using some fixtures of the firmaments dissolving while a meteor passes away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Passion

how can i be too stupid not to know the power of attraction which for years my body was starved my throat strangulated by the hands of my denial
there is slit of light outside piercing the foulness of my room my body aches for more of this
light
this pouring of light in the bowl of my head
how i not know the passion of the body from the strains of my constraints the pain is over now when i have awakened from the sweetness of sleep i will touch you and kiss you and make love with you at whatever cost.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Passion Fruits

there were too many passion fruits in the garden
of my Papa
it is a vine that climbs atop trees covering them

ey all fall this summer these ripe passion fruits that most of our neighbors know nothing about how they taste what is their use
&

as a consequence of that ignorance no one takes a passion fruit for a cold refreshing juice this summer

RIC S. BASTASA
The Past

I still carry you
With both arms

They are strong
And will carry you for long

I kiss your forehead
And you sleep

I dream
That you are gone

RIC S. BASTASA
The Past Beloved

Beside the wall is an old mirror framed with wood designed as flowers
carved in petal and
sepal on accurate
details
so intricate that you forget to see what you want to see inside that room below is the floor

of oft-white tiles
so clean and tidy that sometimes you have second thoughts stepping on it
mistaken instead as a dining table
due to the food
and fruit designs embedded on each
surface

there is a window that sees you like you were a camel and it behaves more like eyes of mother's needles
and you begin to shiver it seems that all that you see are misleading you into something

a mirror that makes you forget your intentions a floor that makes you long
for dinner
and a window that makes you remember your sinful
nature

you pause for a while close your eyes and breathe some air and when you are composed like a song or a poem
you open your eyes
again
to see a door before you
which is open

it looks like open arms wanting to have you but now you doubt all these things
and you hold your feet deciding that you stay that going out is not what you really wanted

you feel that home is here and not over there. Arms wide open which you cannot trust because there is no body out there shaped like your past
beloved.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Past Haunts

the past haunts
like poems on repose

do not read them again but you are not following your heart bleeds again and they will have more time laughing you go back to places of pain and lick your wounds again this is your ritual year after year back to pain again

oh, i see, i know, i get the point you gain the strength, learning the lessons of your failures rising back from where you are falling nothing kills you all these are here again, i see, i know always making you stronger.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Past Is A Faithful Reminiscer Of The Heart

into the lake the past takes a slow, silent breathe bathing with the swans of time engulfing air and releasing bubbles of the water of memories swallowing spitting not only what is necessary but something bittersweet and expendable.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Past, The Present And The Future

a blanket is neatly folded and kept inside a cabinet you wake up, open a window and you see the road leading to an endless horizon

you go downstairs
sit on the floor and listen to the sound of the day

RIC S. BASTASA
The Past

it is when you are alone in the car driving from dipolog to zamboanga

seven hours drive
when you hear nothing but only the usual rantings of your mind

at the middle of the journey you cried
you stopped for a while park your car on the road’s shoulder and shed all your tears until finally nothing comes out and there you feel once more that empty basket which Mama filled with ripe mangoes the good memories come rushing into that empty mind and you start the car and continue on that journey back to your one and only home.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Past...Now, It Is Just You And Me.

i speed away from the past, it has no use
i tell myself the future has more to say i scurry for the present items: a pen and paper draw a leaf, imagine the sun, and a little space for something that is yet to come, last nigh the dreams take revenge it is the past that i choke and bury and they are too many a gun aims by the road towards the glass window piles of books in the dormitory still unread the lights do not turn off till morning the food in the platter is light and i so think is deficient for my hunger there are those who stay in the house laughing about what i am doing....and the car is missing..

i am quick to this. i wake up, turn on the switch and face the fluorescent light,
the magic has always been a simple glass of cold water, then i am back again: it is only between you and me and the rest?

mere peripheries.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Path Is A Respecr Of Fate....

the path knows whom to respect

those who leave
the path does not follow

and those who stay
the path holds
like a house
and grass

those who want to quit the path waits
makes a hollow space where to put you and tries not to put a mark or trace for the path respects those who are coming to tread life

and leads them
to somewhere
to meet a dream
come true.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pathway Of The Tear

the pain is unbearable sorrow overwhelming
the world's roof falls on my head a tear flows from my eyes more tears flooding my cheeks the pathways now untraceable

RIC S. BASTASA
The Patience Of A Man Playing Spider

i am not afraid if soon you will miss the dogs earlier

