RIC S. BASTASA
- poems -

Publication Date: 2017

Publisher:
Poemhunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
RIC S. BASTASA()
there is something in other people that we all love adore even unreasonably that we like to touch and caress with our own hands

only to put dirt on their clean skins

even without talking we like to undress and scrutinize every hidden corner and see what is there

it makes our heart beat jump,
dive collide
burst, explode

it can even make us dangerous as some of them may be the cause of untimely deaths of some of us who cannot bear the agonies of our flesh

we keep on saying
'no regrets!' :
no hurt feelings,

this is the lifetime of joy

there is so much thinking
spending more whole nights
about wishing,
and dreaming even if in the process we also shrink ourselves into minute particles of insignificance

of brittleness
that make our eyes
shatter

nerves cut off systems turn off

when the first morning light however
comes through the leaks of our awakening
walls

we wake up rise from our positions of defeat & we proclaim incessantly
through a murmur:

'forget it,
it is not me! '
' I Am Not Lonely' He Quipped.

drunk.

there is something really wrong with you,
you have cut yourself off from the intestines of mankind, what is it that makes you stay?

that makes you look like a closed jar, what made you cut off that tongue what sharp difference have you made out of that lonely self?

' i am not lonely' he quipped.
and the room fell silent, the wall embarrassed about its nature.
and the window, compromised with a smile, perhaps 'well said'.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Last Dance Of Your Life

i

you don't really have to mind death what power do you have for it when it comes it comes none can prevent it from sitting beside you the doctors are honest and sometimes

too stupid to give you a promise for another extension of life a hope that poisons the mind instead and makes our recent stand rigid and unreasonable for those who have seen the light on one hand sees death as a welcome experience in fact a festivity another coming experience another full moon

at the bay

another bus that has arrived in a far away town another train that honks proudly its arrival in another station

another flight to a distant sky that dresses the world and puts it to a very silent sleep and this time whether you like it or not

you are set upon this journey that gives you fear
because there is no ticket for your coming back

it is the false notion that you can never come back

ii

you don't have to panic take this as easy as unbuttoning a shirt

zippering a pair of pants and unzipping it when the evident and the inevitable comes when the urge signifies an unloading

well, it looks like we simply have to pull a string let the curtain fall and just be ready for the next show of the garden blooming on the month of May

just the same
make the best out of it dance, dance
till you tire

but fall if you must, slip if you can have no shame
there is still another chance really
&
they call it
a surprise to nowhere
upon
somewhere.....

RIC S. BASTASA
HE'D BEEN there
he likes it
he will be coming over to stay quite longer he loves every nook
of it
he has memories there and will always wish to be there he knows he will die there and it will be a great shame not only for him but for his family
as well
he is set to be there again come June till July
despite the storms
or whatever
he loves the place and will always be loving it same dirty place for such a clean man that he is known to be

same lust
same desire same shame but this is it
the truth...

RIC S. BASTASA
'What Is Life? Let Us Talk About It'

ok, let us talk about life my cat Kuting has just given birth to three kittens

she must have loved their fathers too much
three for i love you

the bitch in the house is pregnant again we are sad
she is having a relationship with a native dog
the one that takes trash for breakfast no definite master and house a vagabond
she loves

i think and that is what we too believe a cat has nine lives and with her three kittens she gets an extended twenty-seven lives wow, that is amazing cats indeed know how to live a longer time than us people who is into birth controls

life is an early morning tea a view from the veranda to the sea a sunrise a run to take the dip of the salt of the sea closing your eyes and see everything that this world is offering life is a march of the ants keeping an empire stable feeding the queen to ensure a birth of a hundred or more soldiers life is what we are here for who thinks about death tomorrow? Nobody.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do People Keep Saying, I'M Sorry, For Things They Know They'LL Do Again?

because people always forgive them again and again and again and again and again and again and again...

a form of autism,
a hybrid of dyslexia.

RIC S. BASTASA
a woman dreams that she turns into an orange bird and on the other hand the orange bird seeing her so beautiful and complete less the orange wings and feathers dreams of having woman-hands soft and a flowing body like a slender river curving through along the side of a big mountain where the orange bird perches on a branch of an olive tree beside it convoluted, the thoughts unwind themselves in sleep wanting rest from all these warping of time and seasons and images and swapping between reality and dream surreal and mundane

RIC S. BASTASA
The Light

to the light
we aim ourselves
away from darkness
we swear

but i guess
not too much light in the same manner
that i do not have so much of this darkness

to both
we shall be blinded let us settle midway

to dusk let us toast this drink
of gray

RIC S. BASTASA
Watashi Wa Wakarimasen.

until then
the moon never says that it understands the language of the night
she is immersed
in the darkness
she is floating
in that immense
space
she is inside something that does not too understand
the meaning of
its light...

RIC S. BASTASA
Poetry in Perfection

I am waiting for the time When everything in me would Turn to poetry, when I breathe Nothing but the rhythm of Poetry, when I perspire poetry, When I cry poetry, when I laugh Poetry, when I sleep in poetry, When everything in me is poetry,

That would be perfect poetry. and I Would not be Myself anymore, I would be perfect Poetry,

There is no me, no soul no body, no mind,
No name, no personality, no knowledge, There is just poetry, and that would Be perfect, I would not Be me,

There is no such I as me, anyway, The wise man, so very well say, that is The perfection
Of poetry, there is no self in there But only perfection.

==================================================
======
Дождь울 ивреним, когда всютмо ясловы истанет, ислов бесхотрошны ховодаСоздасттиховкленигиграны?
Толедли, сталь? Теслыль, смех?
Топотли, кровь? Тоблагол, грез?
Ведьтопоэзиясама, имогутатьлиюдии?
Безтела, душиру иумы.
Мы просто жить итого будем.
Акакжеслововокакстих?
Какрифма, стиль ивершенство?
В седьмых, нитковых, над прозой музыке - главенство о. Пoesия в людском обличье - Седой мудрый, познавший языков ученье, без имени и без значенья.

RIC S. BASTASA
The sun is harsh, the winds are cruel
The trees unfeeling, the soil so unsympathetic The stones lack the courage, the grasses lose the enthusiasm The clouds spiritless
The moon is devoid of compassion
The stars are pitiless
You are unkind and I am disheartened My heart is broken

You are heartless
the ruler of my body

i have longed to touch you
to kiss you even just once

yet you are so high and far you are with the stars on my darkest skies

RIC S. BASTASA
a bonsai poem of love designed not to grow taller and wider inside
my miniature heart

or too small
and

pruned like a midget

the sun
laughs
one hot summer's day

RIC S. BASTASA
it is not only the mind they promise you if you agree it is also the heart that is washed clean.

now, into the cult, say your name.

RIC S. BASTASA
to see the world
crying
to hear the sweet sound of its rain

you are alone
by the window
not being wet by the rain outside
you

home sweet home
as always

RIC S. BASTASA
a small orifice
with a stalagmite
is this a cave?
i ask and then
desire boils in my head, i have to enter, guilt is born, this is not mine, but owned
by someone else,
i dream of red cherry inside my tongue, ahh, i must reason out in order to forget, this is nothing but a
speleothem;
purely nothing but calcium carbonate.

RIC S. BASTASA
Keep talking while I sing

My heart

We bask under the sun

The two of us

but not so close please

Where there is still a space for me to smile

RIC S. BASTASA
( X X X)

you leave an empty space when you left
and no one fills that empty space since then...

RIC S. BASTASA
((Hurting Realities))

no dispute about it, marvin boy realities hurt

but what hurt worse
are illusions

what hurt worst are delusions about the grandeur that was never there

RIC S. BASTASA
(a Fantasy At The Train Station)

the white man dropped the newspaper lay it aside seeing this woman with bangles and brightly colored clothes he sees beauty and she amazes him he goes near her and asks for her name he looks at her gently like he's a man in love for the first time in his life she looks down and then changes her mind she looks at him tells her name and asks of his origin

(and now back to reality) the white man lights his cigarettes and puffs up some smoke in the air

she never likes the masculine pollution the train arrives at the station hurriedly she gets off the train he stays looks at his watch and goes back to his vacant seat he read the papers again no longer amazed at the bright colors outside the train's window

RIC S. BASTASA
(is Cheating A Virtue?) on that examination day i caught her cheating and she can no longer

look at me
straight in my eyes

so she transferred to another law school oceans away

today the bar
exam is released and she passed

(time passes too quickly)

voila, she is seemingly,

i could be biased
but this is the
truth,

she is one of the best lawyers in my court today

(is cheating a virtue?)

RIC S. BASTASA
(princess Revised) ...

for looking back nostalgia
fails

you feel
to long because you
stare

RIC S. BASTASA
three stars in the heavens one for you another for her and the last one for you again

i am accustomed to having nothing

in my heavens i like it without stars

RIC S. BASTASA
just One Thing

just,
one,
thing,

start with being just i know what fair is,
sportsmanship,
give me
what is due me think of me
when i am sad drink with me when i am happy,
be just to me

one, i am one,
and will always be
one with myself,
one with nature,
one with you
just me, this one nothing less
nothing more,

and for one more thing, you like flowers
and call them things their scents, their colors the way they touch you on a certain closeness

and just one thing more, do not forget

i am still here
writing for you.
Pain

Like an uninvited Wind, building strength Gathering more winds
To make a storm

Pain comes not like A tear dropping Pain comes in waves
In flood

But I am a very wide Shore of sands
And paths of pebbles

But I am the sky and Empty Space

No pain contains me
No pain destroys me
I am always unfilled.

RIC S. BASTASA
.. Under The Most Stressful Circumstances....

before mother died
she had turned into a very sensitive old woman.

neighbors call her cranky but i know she was just too concerned about the needs of those who cannot afford it.

going to the city she saw a very silent man whose vision went beyond the jeepney windows towards the far away shores perhaps to another island of the peninsula.

' i have money from my son. If you need it you can have it' she offers.

the man smiles, wryly, telling her, 'my wife just died in the hospital and i am looking for a cheaper coffin' the family had always been at war with each other. Brother suspects that sister is taking advantage of an old mother, not telling the rest of the siblings about the true financial state and the expenses would have to be justified item per item.

the refrigerator is not filled with fruits, most are meat stuffed in the freezer and red wine is not found there. Father is a drunkard and kicks mother when she passes by the door.

Age is cruel. It does not remember love. Memory fades and never asks what is happening.

before mother died i held her hand and told her an angel is waiting to serve as her guide when she enters the gates of heaven.

then she smiles, tightly gripped my hand, and then finally loosening it, as though i was the butterfly which she is setting free for me to flutter finally outside the glass window of the government hospital.

i always remember this matter.
the family cracks. shattered. and most of us wish each other dead.

however, i understand all these.
This is the law of nature.
we are meant to scatter, otherwise there is no world.

no stars will be born unless there shall be a big bang of whatever we do not really understand.

meanwhile, the house has to be sold, money to be shared and then we all part ways.

as simple as that, my brother says it as though he had studied fully well what history is and where it must matter.

when my sister got crazy, we all visited her inside her room. and then we feel one family again. I think, we are crazier than her.

we need to take the wrong medication, have the prescription of the notorious physician. It will be a class suit. A family one once again in defending its common interest.

for what is true is that, we are enemies now, but when you have another enemy, we become brothers again against that common enemy.

this i love. coping up with all of you. always re-configuring what is best under the most stressful circumstances.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is a 1599 word
from the latin facetiae

facetieux from facetie jest

a joker a jester
waggish

it is meant to be humorous or funny and witty like you Robert like what i said before like someone who is not meant to be a faucet

where water goes out by force
and then we want stopped after a certain use

after we outlive its usefulness
we close it
and make it
silent

after a thirst
has been duly satiated.

RIC S. BASTASA
... So Much

at the second look you feel wasted that beautiful face seemingly should not have been yours it does not fit
the wrinkled soul
that you are

how unlucky is this body to have you how sad is the turn of events how miserable has the other become because she loves you
so much

RIC S. BASTASA
Papa on the horse

As I remember, Papa rode on the horse
the White horse

He was so cruel
And he would not Feed
The white horse
For days

One day
They went to the Sea
The white horse
And papa

I wished the White horse
Would swim
To the other island
And leave
Papa for good

He was so cruel
And he would beat
The white horse
For days

But the white horse Stayed
she was not fed
For days

One day
The White Horse
Got mad
And bit
Papa to death.

I did not wish
The horse
Would eat Papa whole.

I too would be Cruel then.

RIC S. BASTASA
.... A Beautiful Life....

while you are still half asleep tired of the last night's thrill having engulfed so many drinks with friends and kin

this early morning you hear the house-help sweeping the yard which is littered with paper and leaves and grass you hear the music of the sweeping and the the rolling pebbles and the leaves and grass and those wasted paper now forming into a heap and then you begin to remember the past years how the sweeping was made, how nature cleans its face the tsunami, the earthquake, the wars, the killing of the tribes, the bombing of cities, the mass evacuation of people away from their own countries, the flood and the wiping out of a village the bushfire somewhere in australia the huge conflagration in indonesia the black smoke reachign singapore and lots of other calamities deaths of famous philosophers, politicians, actors, etcetera etcetera and you reflect upon what the Lord has been saying, the sweeping of the yard, the weeding out in the garden, the separation of the goats from the sheep the slaughter and the punishment and rewards and the burning in hell how the weeds soon shall be taken out dried and burned how the goats should be slaughtered and in your bed you feel the grass growing on your chest crawling to your body and you touch your forehead trying to feel the goat's horn growing like a tree and you wake up rush to the bathroom and look at yourself in the mirror asking yourself:

where is the grass? where is the horn? have i become another goat fit to be slaughtered and burned?

and you open the window now seeing the house-help burning the wastes of last night's thrills, how the fire glare how she sits there smiling at you wanting to greet you about

a bright day, a beautiful morning a beautiful life....

RIC S. BASTASA
.... And Then I Fly Away....

do not make
writing a big thing

it is just another
routine

an early morning
breathing

breakfast matter
of words in plates and
cups

make it a conversation between you and another
stranger

do not mind if it does not reveal any name or address

keep going keep going let the hands busy on
something

and you will never be lost
and you will never beg

for a bucket of relationships for another date in the calendar

i breathe, i delete
i put some more what i think is
there

i draw a horse
i put the word wings

and then i fly away....
Will Just Be Forgotten
	sometimes you ask why is happiness so nil?

why are the waves of misfortune coming to the shores of our lives?

who was that killed at the early years of his life?
who was the mother who mourned for all those years?

that beautiful girl has cancer and she has only a month to live that beautiful boy had nothing to eat

the village was erased from the face of the earth all the houses burned and no one is left there and you, what have you done to change all these?

you sit there, contemplating, going inside the chambers of
your heart losing yourself in the tranquility of your soul

why sacrifice for a carpet when you can only have a pair of shoes? why change the world when you cannot even change yourself?

let and let live
let go, let go, let life take its own course
just watch, just be amazed for life has its own life to live and you are just at the end one of its own stories which, you have to accept, cannot last, and just like every story, every anecdote, every note, will just be forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
there should be no secrets what for are they?
i go for mysteries, those that still make me wonder how beauty can still exist how glory can still be found when you tell me what happens do not keep me detained to the secrecy of your apprehensions i cannot make myself mum or isolated
i am part of this whole universe in this symphony i am one small note but i make a sound just the same not heard but still uttered.

RIC S. BASTASA
......That Compassion

let me take first the flesh and blood
and most specially the bones and skin
something that makes all these matters
hold together
as one

let me not worry about what to wear what to smell what to touch or what to see

after this i shall leave
i am in a rush for something more important

we'll go for the essence
the quintessence
of our
existence

it is not the fashion but the passion
and most of all do not forget that compassion

RIC S. BASTASA
When the big tree falls Hit by lightning
Roared by thunder

When the big tree finally falls
And I was there
A big sound
Of a giant old tree
Falling finally to the ground

The arrogance
That used to be

By that big old tree
We all looked upon
It was so high
And we did not Climb it anyhow

For fear
And
Perhaps respect for its grandeur

And today this big tree falls Hit by lightning and roared by thunder

The universe claps upon the Fall of arrogance and pride
And a tree's belief about Its hugeness and Strength

Now this tree falls
And I am here watching it

You are not here
You are in some foreign country

How can I tell you
That this tree has fallen
And there is nothing to fear anymore?
When a tree falls and you are not there Your logic tells
There is no tree
There is no tree of such strength and posture There is no tree like that
That can ever fall
All because a lightning hits it
And all because the thunder roared Without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
.....Expect Nothing......Just Scrabble

when you finally decide not to take life seriously you go into a scrabble as you play with someone who is also bored with life and clings to no hope but wander. This wander makes you choose a letter and relate it with what letters are there at the moment available and then you form the word to show that this time you manage only with what is given. Expect nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
.....I Am Imitating You

.... let me flatter a friend (or is she.... a foe?)

....i am imitating him. Oh i want a color....red?

or......blue? I'll take something else........green?

how about trees? apple trees for a background.
how about sighs? for some sounds.
how about... yes.....moans.... lots of moans..... sex? could you?

.....you are bored and old and.....dying? ....are you?

how about cheese? lots of cheese oh i love fumodoro tomatoes? lots of sauce.

i love being with you.
I love doing things with you inside the room.
Let me have you.
Please stay.
I still have lots of cheese, and tomatoes, and apple trees, and reds and greens, and...

sighs.....

RIC S. BASTASA
even in the middle of a calamity
a poet should still be who and what he is as he must still sound poetic

amidst the rubble and the the squabble for space and place, despite the chaos the poet must still be poetic gracious under too much pressure watchful of his metaphors and perhaps even still be conscious of his poise and rhyme, the poet must at all times still be poetic.

rearrange facts, pick out what is still hopeful and beautiful. repaint what is horrendously real.
choose the colors, put the scents.
make this world poetic and still much and even better be...livable.

RIC S. BASTASA
.....Neat And Clean........

a clean sheet of paper on the table and a waiting pen i prefer it clean now, as clean as i too want to be nothing written, nothing thought i leave them as they are in their own state of affairs as i have to go somewhere else a place they will not know as i too shall do my own thing neat and clean.

RIC S. BASTASA
Not Really Enduring

it becomes a child playful, and you love it since it has too become you, ball and seesaw, playing top, and a doll's fake eyelashes you take a gun, remembering childhood, you pull the trigger to erase what was once so beautiful and nostalgic, all mothers are memories, all memories turn into mothers' skirts and tender hands the sight of tendrils of red flowers on the wall and a blue butterfly where the air is transparent like a cobweb, the little boy climbs a tree the branch falls creating laughter to the grass

a horse comes running creating an eddy of dusts, the tall man watches all these like a mirage grandfather had been a street full of landmarks, i remember he married a girl without a mind.

i hear a door forcibly opened. blood oozed from a broken head, all over the floor red liquid, sticky to the memory of the boy.
no one remains disturbed forever, i tell you, here i am writing whatever flows like ants carrying a morsel of bread to their dead queen.

 i guess something must also be beautiful or made beautiful, a mess arranged and rearranged to create beauty from the rags and tumble.

 colors need not be black and white, i tell you, Gary made the color gay and bright. i am not saying that he lived happily ever after for he did not even reach twenty when he met his eternity, feigned as a poseur-buyer drugging him to his extinction.

 life begins now, i tell you, sitting on a place mat like a cup of tea, brewing to the ceiling a hazy smoke of images, awesome, original, pure and well, i tell you, not really enduring.

 RIC S. BASTASA
the time has come for this when every road be it in iceland or sinaman
looks the same same edge, same horizon, same rock same tree, same air which means that now is the time to quit stay put, relax, chill out sip coffee

sit on a chair
turn on mozart
and hum the sacred music within your heart

alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
....And Birds......

polish an old coin
soon it will shine against
the light

train an old dog another trick, do not stereotype remind grandpa that it is never late to feel young again take the dove into your hand throw it in the air

give rebirth of old anguish let it cry out old scripts paint the wall white and then be a child again: take the box of crayons, draw your hills and mountain and birds...

RIC S. BASTASA
....And I Think I Am Not Dying.

I am the opposite.
everyday i thin about
my next vacation,

at night i think about
the next tryst,

the next date with my woman in a the restaurant that newly opened in town

the next picnic in a faraway beach with all white sand, the next movie this coming thursday,

the vacation in korea this
september,

all the nice things to come.

and i think i am not dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
....And I Think I Am Not Dying.(Revised)

I am the opposite.
everyday i think about
my next vacation,

at night i think about
the next tryst,

the next date with my
woman in a the restaurant
that newly opened in
town

the next picnic in a faraway
beach with all white sand,

the next movie this coming Thursday,

the vacation in Korea this September,

all the nice things to come.

and i think
i am not dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
....And Then An Empty Morning Sky

leaves float on the calm river

the wind did not come

birds hover on a tree

and then all of them flies away

leaving you behind and empty sky

RIC S. BASTASA
....And Why

To grow and mature in solitude

like an only tree
upon a high mountain to be a part of no cloud to be not a friend to the wind to bathe light under the sun to fold leaves

in the coldness of the night to stay afoot in its engulfing darkness

to sing no song

to whisper nothing to be content on what i am on where i am

and why.

RIC S. BASTASA
consider these: doubts are perfectly normal and it takes time to feel that God is not logic or reason but a mystery, and all his ways are not that comprehensible, you retreat, surrender, now, you are at peace with God, your journey is perfected

RIC S. BASTASA
because there are too many sand becomes sand to you each grain taken for granted dusts are just dusts at the butt of the bus in that faraway village, so insignificant but try to remember what we did there: how the sands have assumed the shape of our bodies, how the dusts left by the bus in that faraway village had become the left overs of our memories, the way that goodbye was said, the way all things settle down on the road, on matters which we have no control anymore. The silence after...

each molecule of dust each grain of sand because of you has become too memorable to me

so beautiful and sad to recall...

RIC S. BASTASA
....Because They Are Never Written

so many things happen thunder arrives years ago and lightning too like spears of light piercing the ears of this earth no one talks about it first they were not there but i go for the second we were there but we keep it to ourselves and they never exist to the eyes of another generation

because they are never written

RIC S. BASTASA
....But Perfection

neither happiness nor sadness
neither pain nor pleasure neither earth nor sky neither flesh nor spirit
neither you nor
i,

this is what it is all about
this is where we are and they are naming
it
not numbness but perfection

RIC S. BASTASA
...Death Is Well Taken......

at this hour of my life, please understand that everyone is beautiful

i am not telling anybody i am this master of secrets and strictness there is no secret between two people. know that.

i am bored inside my room letting go of my suppressed desires,

in that party i dance like crazy you say, it is understandable, for i am a believer of spontaneity, i could have loved all of you for i am desirable, i could have made love splendidly you look at me, i look at you, beyond this,

the world must not be careless, to kill you with love is my heroism.

i am a martyr, death is well taken....

RIC S. BASTASA
sooner they all become our personal confessions, and after reading some lines, we begin to hate ourselves, this betrayal of self, this having to expose some secrets into the open, though with some twists and turns, hoping to cover a little bit of the head, to confuse the hair, or to lose what is original, so much so, that like a trip you arrive at a lonely place where everyone has learned the happiness of being silent, and you wonder, what is this place? this horrible place which we at first deny, and then bargain, and then met with anger, and finally being attuned to depression, one enters into the door of submission, that acceptance of what, who and where and when, when by simply sitting there and not doing anything, everything is accomplished.

RIC S. BASTASA
you sit there
it is time that we shall tell you about your kindness
of the past, as you are told to desist from gaining access to the present and the future.
i am glad that you are sleepy like a stray cat
if you hear us
we are not that pleasing.
goodbye. we give you an alarm clock, you have to wake up still at those desired hours.
outside the clouds
are dark, it will rain and we are in a hurry to be home again.
just sit there
death is coming graciously for you alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
....Hairy

is it my hair?
or my flair?
is it my chair?
or my glare?
come closer
whisper to my ear
be mine, dear.

RIC S. BASTASA
to you
that touch was like anything else

to me when it landed on my hand
it was a burst of all my emotions

i am weak and lost
and the rest of the people there
are saying, 'what a waste'

you cannot dictate feelings
they are there and
are waking...

and you are the child again
curious as to what is happening

happy without any explanation at all....

RIC S. BASTASA
....How Foolish Could Love Be.....

the one you love
always stand out against the rest

in the company of friends in a black and white picture the face of the beloved is as red as a rose
the body as fragile as a petal
the eyes as gentle as an early morning sunrise if the beloved were a pigeon among the rest of the pigeons the feathers are not white but as red as a red rose that just bloomed on that early spring

and when all of them have flown away from you the one that you love most leaves its shadow its perfume its color
its shape, like a memory that you cherish
despite the passing of all the years and those who watch you in anger and pity deep within still say how foolish can your love be how foolish indeed for you to destroy a self and banish a world which should have been yours
forever.... it ended
dismally.

how sad
the start
was superb.

smooth life
longer than expected clear and clean
until it ended with all disgust.

you fell in love with the wrong person at the wrong time and everything is wrong.
all very wrong they all swear to God.

and you died
without the flowers.
and then they bury you the next day
all thinking that without you now they will all live
with dignity
happily ever after.

how ungrateful
you made them live you dress them
you feed them
you shelter them.
and then they tell you how you should love how you should live
how you should die.
how should you be buried and how you
deserve to be forgotten.
vanished from the very minds you have created.

RIC S. BASTASA
try to imagine how adam and eve looked like after eating the forbidden fruit

and how the snake reacted afterwards

how the forbidden fruit tasted all throughout the taste buds of those who were finally tempted how the world looked like a day after when God pretended that He did not know what they just did

RIC S. BASTASA
....Just Dust......

and that is the fact
my dear
you were alone when you arrive
and alone you must sooner leave

friends simply become blurred memories families mere pictures kin but passing days

and here you are at eighty-five coming to the house for a breakfast of egg and bread and coffee

where are your children?
did you not brag about them?
did you not say that the more kids you have the happier life can be?

you are alone now in that black dress and pearl accessories and a very much useful handkerchief to wipe your
tears

did i not tell you correctly what is this
all about?
there is a way to be happy and the earlier you accept what real happiness is the happier you can be just be yourself. do not gather much. do not think much. do not expect much. there is much wisdom in being alone opening the window of the house sitting on one of those chairs at the veranda watching the trees and the clouds slowly sipping coffee not rushing with the sweetness of a little bitterness for coffee is good the lesser sugar you put on it its coffeeeness more savored without much mixing to dote it is just dust.

RIC S. BASTASA
that early morning
the wind was strong and i flew a kite
in the sky against the sun, ...it comes to mind, reflecting upon our lives, that i have to cut the cord, and let my hand free from any hold....and the kite flies by itself against the blue sky, falling somewhere, and i tell myself i am
not anymore
responsible for what it is....i left the cord on the grass and went home alone feeling what freedom is.....it is the separation that makes us free...it is mostly departure, and not hello.

RIC S. BASTASA
for i cannot keep you and i really like this to go this ambivalence that loops from hate to love and back to love and hate again and there's this euphemism for indifference that sweetness of a pretension that you are you and you are strong and cannot be affected anymore, i like this finished, but how can i? for there you are in that simplest splendor, innocence which i love since i lost it moons ago with someone who can never love me for what i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
....Red Presence

now that you see something red in me

read my lips
utter the word
and then taste it

you are right
it is bloody.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Possibility In Us.....

dreams

and yet the mouth speaks a name and yet the heart keeps carefully
another

and yet one still dreams of a happiness that is not yet there?

as the mind roams in space wandering like a molecule of dust without a definite destination?

RIC S. BASTASA
....Why Worry? .....

dark heavy clouds
hang in the sky
i did not mind, then
the storm comes,
people left taking refuge in other far shelters, i did not mind at all, - these, will pass away,

love was there once,
oh, it was here for a while,
then gone, i did not mind too, when it comes back, i do not know when, i do not mind. All these come and go. No problem.
Guests are we, and so are they, so why worry?

RIC S. BASTASA
....Wordlessly Into The Magical Woods....

whatever happened to him could happen to you and i do not the least doubt how time behaves when you both are gone into a kind reclusive experimentation.

in this field one must realize the real purpose. it is not to please them but really to only please ourselves in this wordy undertaking. Do not expect hands to clap to your liking. we are never entertainers.

we are seekers of who we are.
we are taking off from the busy hours of our questioning.

we are under the trees silenced by silence itself and no other.
we are gazers never actors. we only tell about what we see.
if there are additions, which by our own sound discretion are added in another stanza, it is what we cannot restrain because we really feel it.

after all these, we receive no payment. We pay the price of our choice. We are doing what we want. and then we leave, wordlessly.

RIC S. BASTASA
a puppy rushes out of the house upon a negligently opened door it rushed further into the the careless gate into the busy road of the city wagging its tail jumping happily over its newly found freedom until it is run over by a mindless truck heading towards the forest and the puppy lies crushed dead on the busy road where passersby do not mind what is happening and you who had carelessly opened the door still reads a book while munching on fish chips and white wine inside your lonely room.

RIC S. BASTASA
before i leave let me say it.

you are a liar.
a profiteer.

you deceive people even those lowly ones

you deprive a client
of his landholding

protector you are not never was it

it is all about your having money

you have never served
at all

you have all the reasons marks of your eloquence money spent for your education was wasted

you are never an ideal you are a curse of mankind, all mankind wish for your perdition when you die all those monsters will take a bite of your flesh and take finally with them your only soul. And the you have your eyes will be taken from your sockets your bones will be chopped into tiny pieces

your mouth will be burned

your ears sliced into bits

and all these will never be enough to pay for your cruelty and deceptions....

RIC S. BASTASA
...A Dome Of Pebbles

it is a shame
now how love begs
how age bows
down
into submission

there is a time for recollection a posture of composure
that compassion
you finally lend to yourself and then you say
finally
i quit
i shall not humiliate myself
ever and ever again
even if it means getting back into the house of shell and be another hermit
upon a castle of sand
a dome of pebbles

RIC S. BASTASA
in the middle of all these struggles
to live
we must abide by that myriad compromises

a little of courage a little of rashness a little of cowardice
a little of attack
and by all means sometimes we try the betterment of surrender

take a little of myself not much in the same manner that i do that to you

a grain of sand
a drop of rain
a chunk of wood
a pebble for a dabble

by the window
a little of sunshine not that much for it could be blinding

a bit of love from you a pinch of mine
the rest remains in that beautiful dread
of empty moments

and then we take the fill and start again for another maze of mess

'what a lovely night
to such a bland wine! what dry lips are these that shall kiss mine'

RIC S. BASTASA
...Agony In The Garden Of Desire...

i have a perfumed body which you never smell lips ready for your kiss you never feel what i feel you have what i do not like logically

but which my heart all its life longs for it has no perfume and i wonder why i like its smell why i dream of it in all the nights of my life

RIC S. BASTASA
...Alive And So Beautiful....

it does not matter
what death had so well
taken

a video is left of that beauty
which we watch with dignity
still

it will be here remains of what was gone dust blown
but you are here still desirable and so
beautiful..

here death cannot touch you we own you now we watch you now
alive and so beautiful...

RIC S. BASTASA
...Always For The First Time....

it is not a new thing not a discovery neither an invention to know that at the lowest point of your life
at the ebbing of breaths you conclude
you write 30
and it is where the word begins to take life in so many ways in so many forms of wings and twigs
and leaves and
the hushes of the winds, and you are there outside the window
of the box simply watching intently seeing all these new,
always for the first time.....

RIC S. BASTASA
always unaffected

time ends searching for love
it, to gets, tired,
rests upon
an emptiness that behaves like a jar
under the rain
in the middle of a lush garden

everything
water and sunshine gets in there

always unaffected.

Ric s. bastasa
An Insane Man

man is i think,
insane

he kills and invokes
humanity

war can make heroes

war is an instrument of peace

great nations
make war
over a mole

invoking principles of pride

the leaders
stay in their mansions
watching on screen how many
are dead

it is all about numbers
and statistics
and collateral
damages

RIC S. BASTASA
...And Then I Fly Away...

do not make
writing a big thing

it is just another
routine

an early morning
breathing

breakfast matter
of words in plates and
cups

make it a conversation
between you and another
stranger

do not mind if it does not
reveal any name or address

keep going keep going
let the hands busy on
something

and you will never be lost
and you will never beg

for a bucket of relationships
for another date in the calendar

i breathe, i delete
i put some more what i think is
there

i draw a horse
i put the word wings

and then i fly away....
...And You Do Not Know It.

we all want speed.
blame the slow puts.
the Lilliputians prove that size does not matter. It is the will.
The mind. Small hands do much better with the will.

falling stars do it well.
and so dreams come true.
the galaxies move with the speed we know not about. Planets are born.
QUICK explosions unheard
of.

i am pointing to a part of me. You are here.
And you do not know it.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Another Beginning.....

you climb the mountain up to its peak
and on the cliff you stand and then
scream

the mountains beyond spread like the ocean
like the sky like the space into an eternity of fullness

you shout at the top of your voice
in an emptying prelude nature's desire

nothing is changed the mountains are mountains still like the skies and the ocean and the vastness of an occupying space

and then the silence that fills you again that ripples inside you like those winds entering the window vibrating to the silky curtains

the much needed
break, the pause, the beginning.

RIC S. BASTASA
...At The Shore....

the way the sea
speaks to the trees
the way the sands
sing its silence on a Sunday afternoon

endlessly amazing
your soul too sings

RIC S. BASTASA
...Backtracking....

at a certain age
of expected stability

where locks of hair shine in the whiteness of its acquired
wisdom

a love poem becomes funny to the taste of those beside you
and of your same age who had graduated from the hazards of love calling it even a boring subject matter

perhaps what they remember is the pain and the stupidity having given much without the desired returns of the day but today i am writing a love poem

for youth
a haiku for tight skin and peach
cheeks and long black hair less the stars

afraid of this shame i keep this to myself like a forbidden tattoo between my legs

there is this secret to
life retracing the tracks of youth
and for once retaking the grandeur of its beliefs and hopes

no matter what.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Because You Are Still Too Young To Do It.....

you may have written the best poem now in your life but your age will deny it it is yet not too ripe

the mango is raw and time says it will be more tomorrows salt has not crystallized it and there is rain coming the thread is not that long and the torn garment is old the boat has no sail and the storms are still coming....

RIC S. BASTASA
...Because You Expect Much

you expected too much from life
as though
life owed you a lot

so many things
from the time
you were born
and

so here you are angry
about
the non fulfillment
of your dreams
which
if you really mind
have become part of the hefty garbage

in the
the history of mankind.
you bet,

there is more coming.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Because You Expects Much

you expected too much from life
as though
life owed you a lot

so many things
from the time
you were born
and

so here you are angry
about
the non fulfillment
of your dreams
which
if you really mind
have become
part of the hefty garbage

in the
the history of
mankind.
you bet,

there is more coming.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Beyond Beliefs....

the apprehension from nighttime till daybreak was gone upon the assurance that you are that kind who keeps secrets as sacred mantra in the search for beauty and peace.

what the night did leave it there. Welcome the coming of the light slit from the darkness of the soul. We who long for love. We who refuse to die.

the heart rests and looks out the window where a garden of doves are drawing in the whiteness of the feathers.

i see you and you look at me.
we have no need for words.
I touch your hand and you smile.
i do not need for you to say it.
I know you understand and it is enough. Love is not the issue here.

it is a way against the rope.
It is the path towards a new vision.
people need to touch even without love.
people sleep together even without it.
dream together. Live together. beyond body and age. beyond beliefs.

RIC S. BASTASA
...By You Alone....

THERE is this longing (well-defined like a completed portrait of the beloved, the only one loved and desired)

there is this love unrequited like hands opening to space waiting for another hand to hold it tightly and be taken in to the window of the sky there is this empty space still unfilled, and hence the night is lonely and the room is dark

with a candle waiting to be lit by you alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
oftentimes the cage
is like an egg imprisoning a yolk
between something that is opaque
mistaken as a clear layer of water

you wait for the hatch

that is the catch

RIC S. BASTASA
...Compulsion 5

it is there
it goes out
you want to hide it in your palm in your clenched fist it escapes
as perfume

as smoke from the chimney
of the house
whose windows and doors you have closed

RIC S. BASTASA
you say you will not do it never again this sickness this sickening thing inside you

you smile
you breathe your stomach begins to deliver a speech this cannot be denial, denial, denial of the natural color of your hair one that blends
with your skin
one that speaks the words that your tongue has been keeping the one that you hide and pretend it is not there it grows and becomes big and so visible you knife it out

never shall it heal
this wound this life this is what you are and ever shall be forever, and yet you keep it hidden funny, because they are all seeing it and speaking about it it seems, you are the only one mute, deaf, blind and so dumb

RIC S. BASTASA
it happens
truth on both sides
truth on extreme ends truth on the left and truth on the right what you thought was false has become true
by now.

and so truth becomes two faced. each face is ture. Nothing is false there, you know it by heart. You love this and you love that. Both are truly loved.

you are not false and they are not too. Love is here with both hands and happy feet.
dancing to everyone.
Not just two but everyone.

both doors are true.
the house is true. There is no false door here or a false window.
each serves what truth is.

you enter by that door.
i leave on this door.
I look over this window.
You stay there.

now, are you still discerning whether what is claim is false?
hold my hand.
not one of us is false.
even if love has left us both. we remain to be true. Departure.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Destined To Be Gone.....

once i want to be like them they were on the streets raising fists,

they keep on saying the system is all wrong and all they need is reformation

to a certain extent they killed those leaders
they want reforms
they all want change then they win and take over properties are taken those who do not belong are executed

here they are another set of oppressors they are the change that need to be changed again a cycle of executions back to the barracks

oh yes, those who kill by the sword now also perish by the sword.
and i watch all these by my window from the house they burned before which i have reconstructed it is the same set of men with blood in their veins hearts of steel, bones of iron minds of rocks, all mortals destined to be gone.

...Dog Talk

and so too
i have a dog
whose only language is

bow. and wow.

and true to the limits of his language

as he walks and sways
and rolls and runs like a dog, and

true indeed to his nature this dog comes before him

and then it makes the bow and then
believing in his power and glory

this patriotic and loyal dog keeps on saying: wow wow wow

RIC S. BASTASA
looking for a cure
for this undetermined sickness unto death, the foundation of all philosophies combined trying to find a door as escape
into another house another door
into another escape after escape

this is eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Even Before We Are Born....

the world knows what it wants. what it wants to hear.
and you know that.

so speak only of hope, and happiness.
listen carefully.
it rejects what is bitter.
it frowns upon those who suffer.
those who are hateful, it shies away.

you must listen.
you must obey and comply with what it wants.
History is not poor.
It is rich with all its blotting.
How a village of sufferers is buried.
How a continent of blasphemers sinks to the bottom of the ocean.

Gone.

Speak cleanly. Write what is good.
Sculpt what is beautiful

You may skip the truth.
the one which hurts, the one which shakes us.
the one that kills
even before we are born.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Flush, Flush...Flush...

bleach the bowl
into the whiteness
of sky

the flavor of vanilla sit in there and feel your kind of heaven

flush.
flush.
flush.

feel the cleanliness of your soul

flush.
flush.
flush.

do you talk about the other toilet bowls?

RIC S. BASTASA
...For All Is Fair In Love....

all is fair in love repeat it to yourself when you find yourself empty again, alone with all your failures
alone with all your longings unsatisfied by fate and time for here i have seen a king beg for love to a native, like a lion pulling all his teeth in exchange for a handful of cares surrendering a kingdom only for a kiss.

RIC S. BASTASA
...For I Am No Longer There......

if you read
this you must disown
me

you must throw
this
and take back what i was

you have your own idea about what i must be

what i should become
and what happens next is
the way you choke
me to death

you keep that stuffed toy
as me pleasing inside your glass cage

when you go back to the house where i live
when you open the door
and switch on the light

the night will be perfectly empty
for i am no longer there.

RIC S. BASTASA
...For I Still Love You...

i spread feathers
in the air
filling some space in the neighbor's
yards
and they start talking like parakeets

something about you
which i have never touched

but i have no regrets for i still rely on feelings which never lie to me perhaps i was misled

and betrayed
but it does not matter
for i still love you

RIC S. BASTASA
...For Mama.....

i wonder
mama why the fire
i put on the empty jar
dies?

and so mama
i fill it with
water
since we both
never liked the howling
air....

RIC S. BASTASA
that was the moment when value was put to a letter one which you read so many times alone always remembering that kiss that hug, the sleeping together in one room one rainy night when home is far away, when there is only the two of you not remembering what passed, that land which landed on her breast, that foot on hers, the paper went yellow, like a pencil with a cut head, which you do not wish sharpened, and there was that night, when everything was thrown in the dark the window did not wink, the stars were not there, and you are alone, mumbling going crazy over nothing, remembering that which does not remember you that which has no love, cannot love and never ever ever was any kind of love, foul and stinking.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Free And Happy

at night under the stars
dancing with my own shadow

as you watch me with all
contempt and i perfectly understand it

tomorrow i
build a house
of my own
where i can just be myself

free and happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
my elder sister has chosen a blond hair as she aged.

she is dying, and she finally got her wish, a blonde hair.

the die is cast she said. she gambled her life and she lost.

i pause to consider fate. we never really had choices or if we had, what happened was always beyond our control for instance her wish before was only to be a teacher to follow mother's footsteps but she got sick and had to stay at home and just watch her life flow like a river while she remains a leaf carried to any direction as the wind pleases.

at the peak of this hot month of june on a tuesday we felt that it is really the first time that we talked. No pity this time.

nothing about regrets just the trivial matters about nothing for instance the fact that her leche flan is not that sweet to cause me my tonsilitis and that i may have bactridol again or another round of ten days for antibiotics or that it is surprising to know that wonder woman is hercules' sister? oh my, they never taught us that. We are at the surface of things, glossy and artificial.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Hence The Sadness....

i have so many dreams
i gather them inside my cup of hands and then i throw them
away spread them like seeds of sunflowers for soon

i create a landscape while i am away on a trip faraway like the one that you cannot see anymore from where you are undressing in that garden of longings,

there is one dream that i want to share with you
i hope you are there it is the sun rising from the sea of despair

spreading its hands to the forest of hopes

inside the darkness there i find you, we are naked, we fuse, and then we do not know which of us is us.... i do not know who penetrated home inside that room of illusion...

many forget this. and hence the sadness.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Hope You Understand....

you it is fake.
what you are watching is just a film.
actors playing roles.
making love. for fame and money and even survival.

life is recreated. sadness is veiled.
happiness is a confetti and all the children with their mothers watch.

you know that it is not true. but you are carried just the same.
you cried. you laughed. you remember.
even during sleep
within it, you are pilfered.

you know it is true. You want to be true.
nothing is true.

on this sorrow, you invent.
what is not true become true.
and it does not matter.
everything is passing away.
everyone is dying.

this is temporary. so does it matter if it is fake?

i watch it too and i do not mind. it is made with so much artistry and make-believe, if you wouldn't mind, is a necessity.

it is fake, hope you understand. just let it go, relax, and then have a good night sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Human Nature......

the fruit is high up the tree with all the dangers when you climb it to finally
get that dream

once you get it
however
it becomes so insignificant that you finally throw it away

from fruit to stone to nothing at all

RIC S. BASTASA
...I Love You.....

what i touch
i love
it is not what i have touched
that i love
it is you in there
as always
i love
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
...I Will Perish....

you should not be ashamed of me

for i am simply the mirror of you

i strip myself and you must like it.

do not turn off the light.
i will perish.

RIC S. BASTASA
...In Bed With Our Bodies...

today i remember you lady and why? it was you who said you shed tears on what i have written and you always ask how i am doing then i told you just like the rest that i also tell when they ask, i am not my

poems

and you do not believe me, i am someone else i give you mary poppins and the sound of music is not the world a happy place?

i am always fluid, a man with a hundred eyes and a thousand hands, not literally though, since i pay attention, even to the minutest detail about the lives and feelings of other people papa mistakes me for a priest and mother too thinks that i could make a good dramatic actor as a child i 've been drawing a lot of faces am i the portraitist?

and i got clay and shaped a mermaid and mama shook her head, saying these are all not true i never stop writing though, it is a must, if i do not do it, the theresias in the nipa hut is telling me that i will die a violent death i keep notes, songs, poems in my head. if i crack the one who can find it first will surely adore me for that it does not matter, i have multitasked so well dabbling from law to anti matter to chemistry and philosophy and mind you this is the jack of all trades speaking in pain but who believes me? nobody nobody when we talk it will be the top of our happy voices on some silly stories and sorties, who would believe me about the castle and the ponytail?

papa is dead and so is mama. They suffered, but how did we really know? they always quarrel and so the truths of their pains were never really exposed.

now we are facing a door. IF it opens watch out. we will be sucked in and they will not be looking for us.

space is limited and they need that. what we occupy shall then be theirs and they will say we did all so well, and finished all our missions.

they are gone for good. and they will offer flowers and even cupcakes, and expensive blue colored candles, saying thank you, now everything shall be ours. sorry, we easily forget. Goodbye everybody.

the world stays. for the meantime we shall enjoy it.
goodbye philosopher, we are just eaters and drinkers.

happy, just happy. in bed with our bodies.

so where are you now? stay safe and be happy.
and what is your name again?

RIC S. BASTASA
In Finding True Love

the way to my heart she says is through my stomach for years this will work but soon it will not anymore to live this life and never finding true love

to die with all bitterness and please the last worm give the choice i shall choose to be born again

hoping to find true love hoping that it is still you hoping still that i may know what true love really is.....

RIC S. BASTASA
In The Circle Of Life

in this circle of
life
where we are like caterpillars moving on each others' ass
it does not really matter who leads who follows
who dies ahead or who is born
for now

RIC S. BASTASA
...In This Stay Of Sanity

every moment
is a learning experience
every weave on that tapestry
of hate
and love
every thread
of angst
every needle of need every separation and union everything and everyone
every rush and rest every touch
and breath
emptiness and fulness
to and fro
in this pendulum of madness
in this
stay of sanity

RIC S. BASTASA
...In Vegas.....
	hey warn you
and you believe them
in vegas

that what happened
there remains there

what was felt was meant only to be felt
there

everything, dirt or gem flipflopping
waste or precious

you all leave it there because you know what?

ty they are meant to be nothing at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
...It Need Not Be Said Actually, But The Heart Knows.....

i know you understand what is not said or not even seen yet that is what love does when betrayal starts which the other keeps on denying, your eyes do not have to look at the way the hands are moving inside the shirt your heart knows what is not done yet the other keeps on rationalizing nothing is done in the haze or in the darkness it is feeling, yes that feeling which tells you that there is really something wrong and those who do not want it ended keep on looking to the other side of the river seeing white herons feeding on the tadpoles.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Janet's Apple Of Her Eyes

all her life janet has devoted all her time to the apple of her eye

on her wedding day as i remembered it clearly her mother cried her father did not attend it for the man that she married has remained to be unacceptable to their family of wealth and comfort love is hard-headed and it always follows the reasons of the heart like the way janet finds her way towards this mess

for she loves her man, and husband above all
and now that she has a son, back to square one janet denies herself of the luxuries that would have been showered on her

they all think that she had chosen misery rather than bliss that she picks up pain rather than joy
that she had taken the wrong direction in her life that she is wrong and a complete failure

but no, Janet thinks otherwise as she looks at the apple of her eyes
now

her son, her one and only son the fruit of her love the joys of all her labors the reason of her living.

RIC S. BASTASA
now you wonder
why for all those night when we made love
we never really kissed?

it could be that the kiss is not that important the lips so insignificant the tongue irrelevant it could be that we are not so concerned about what to say to us
for perhaps who we are and what we are doing (in the name of love)
is not worth telling

but it could be that if the mouth is love and the thighs and legs are lust it could be that we really preferred to take the latter

or it could be that we are now shying away from words from the moans and the drama
from unnecessary romance for it could be that we just want this done quick and easy and without much fuss and less the involvement just the indulgence for we still have some more things to do lies to tell later and more important characters to meet in the stage of life and as soon as the curtain falls there is nothing to carry like guilt and regrets and we live life again as though nothing regrettable happens and as soon as we are prepared for the next play as soon as the curtains rise up we wear other faces again entertain the audience and tell them

'it's show time again! ' and to be exact about it less the feelings

it is nothing more and nothing less but just another jest.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Just The Splash....

to keep abreast
we shorten it
to finish it
we end it.

and then you become silent.

and this is the problem.

there is no sound which can be heard in this silence.

its depth which we want to measure
is like a well when we drop the coin

it is just the splash which we remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Like Forgiven

Sipping coffee
is a way of provoking thought

sometimes a seduction really

the slow sound
savored as the tongue catches
with something

which is sweet now
and later bitter

hot too, and to cope with it

you blow, you breathe and in between these kind rituals you begin to remember

love and breaking
love
collecting the pieces
and then breathing again
sighing

what if? what if?
waste of time

'keep on moving!'
wait, someone is

knocking the door,
'open it!'

don't hide, keep calm, it could be love that you broke, which upon itself has taken the burden of self-repair and now ready to have you again like..forgiven.

RIC S. BASTASA
...May Those Who Are Still Alive Always Remember the church bells are tolling early dawn

the dogs are howling on the lamp posts

as usual upon cold winds an old woman departs

opens the door and the gate of the house

covers her face with a bandanna and then walks

the lonely streets of her ancestry

enters the usual church of all the old scented candles prays for her kin and kids and grand children

may life be good may the years of life be long may the dead have eternal life may those alive always remember...

RIC S. BASTASA
there is no
such thing as you can have everything there is always something missing: a link, a key,
a thought,
always, always something is slipping
on the tongue, someone you love
sometimes forgotten,
someone you miss is left alone, there is no such thing as the complete me, as always there is an emptiness which you say, can only be filled by God, can only be taken, and returned and found by

God, and sometimes it is God which is missing, forgotten, left out,
unfound, uncalled.

RIC S. BASTASA
...My Little Sparrow....

you are
just one the variations of my mind

a creation of my own time, another pattern of this embroidery

another emotion, a hand of a fan, at the middle of these fingers is love, next is the ring, of fire, and wind, you are the smallest i play with early morning when the church bells stop tolling do not ever think of love it is not here

think simply of the the passing wind that hushes to my ear that cools a portion of my cheek to be exact

it is nothing more and nothing less

the sparrow is more like it roosting a night on a twig by the front of the window of this house as soon as you hold my hand it flies away and gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
beloved
here we are on the same sad fate

you detest me
and the one you love
detests you too
in the same
and even almost identical manner

and so here i am
with the cuckoos and the eagles

admiring the sky believing in the power of the desert winds

i never blame you
for now i have stopped hurting anybody
myself included....

RIC S. BASTASA
...Neon Lights....

i cannot leave this place
i will miss the sounds of birds

i can sacrifice the loneliness of bird seeds

i can sit here for hours listening to bird angsts grief is shared here, miseries divided the glory of lives shared and spread like air in the forest trees like breaths of butterflies on those wild flowers amid the stones and rocks and mountain peaks as the morning sun begins its usual peek.

city creature, leave me here for good i am no longer the slave of your neon lights.

RIC S. BASTASA
...No Regret...

love, i descend
i can even descend
some more, to reach the floor of death, and i do not mind, for the pleasure is even greater still even if i perish.

love, count me in,
i am knocking at
the door of your heart, let me in,
i am ready to be taken into this oblivion, i, can, remember, or even if not, i have lived and loved
you to the fullest.

RIC S. BASTASA
...No Regrets For Freedom....

does not care what freedom's name

we kill and be killed we never talk about love not even this love of country
which has fooled too many

t here may be regret for love but there must never be any regret for freedom
here we eat even raw flesh we chop even the hardest bone what is this price that we pay for?
butterflies coming out of their cocoons ants breaking away from their hills leaving the queen bee to its death black birds roaming the skies snakes spitting venom to each other houses falling, continents rising a woman giving birth and the child spilling its first cry.

t this feeling of freedom is horrendous.
it can kill me but it does not matter.
meaning is here and i am grabbing it.
between our country's lovely legs.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Nostalgia....

rushing to the sunset when the jeep broke down marking book lines that breaks his heart at midnight still wishing for the meeting of an old flame

back to the university where no one knows him anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
you have power
in your hands
you promise to change this world, but not without any bloodshed and lots of x

the one you use to mark those who are dead, or who had been murdered, whatever is the right term, they all end up, pursuant to plan, and one afternoon i had an appointment with you and i have to pass three doors, and have to wait for hours just to speak to you, busy figure, a very important man in this country, and then you arrive and we talk, you keep on talking i prefer to listen, this time, you claim, the needed reforms are not finished yet, it is just an inch of your finger, the whole body of this country needs a total repair, again you emphasize, not without a bloodshed, because this is war, this is a revolution and the wheels of change do not need gas, they need blood, of all our brothers, and fathers and even mothers, and you use the word, damn, damn all these demons, these devils who do nothing but destroy this country. I look at my watch, it is already 5 pm. and traffic will be heavy, and i really have to go back to my hotel, and i said, i am going and you said you can go,

i expect a little amusement, i’d say a little courtesy, for i am your friend and buddy, with our sense of personal history, i never got it, not even a cup of coffee.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Not Finding Love At All.....

what was kept
as a secret was not that we made love, where it is forbidden

we bring both to our graves that fact that in there
there was no love
at all, but just the purest of all
lusts

the needs of the flesh
the demands of our well pressured times the longings and all the cravings of lonely
people

wanting to erase pain with pleasure
not finding love at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Not Your Fault?

when there is no love
there is only you

no matter who sits there the chair is still an empty chair the water you drink is as bitter as you

the moon by the window is just a floater

when you walk alone on that beach this morning you are more of a philosopher than a poet where there is no love all trees have no fruits

i know what you will say it is not your fault.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Of Letting Things Go....

we discipline words that is why we become writers she likes to say that as a disciplinarian in the literature and arts
perhaps i must have taken the wrong direction having pampered words which have become spoiled children roaming in the part without the prescribed directions and one looks at this with this awareness that this child is not your child but of their own universes and so there is goes in the spontaneity of merely watching and letting things grow and go.

RIC S. BASTASA
...One Sky....

i see you in that body
it is not that body it is you that is in my mind in that other body it is you which i do not have but i will have that body since i cannot have you that is why there is a need for me to switch off the light close my eyes and inside my mind i must, by all means, make you my one and only poem from the thousands of my scribbling.

you do not realize how hard it is to make a poem as you, one which i cannot touch, not because i cannot, but because it should be not.

so i live in the darkness of my hours in the middle of this world's light. so i have to live in my mind in the hypocrisy of all flesh and bones that keep on saying things which are not.

i do not invite you to be with me.
my world is exclusive. all doors are closed.
and there is only one window, into my soul, the exit of which goes up to only one blue sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Out Like A Dry And Wasted Lang Where Fear Begins To Grow...

you know how time runs like a sprinter
at first it does not bother you, the busy man with all his art and politics combined like a bouquet of flowers for a wedding day, but then the flower girl has become a bride and your hair has thinned...

RIC S. BASTASA
...Phenixes......

i got dreams that never fulfill themselves
and i attribute
it to bad luck or even fate.

i know how to handle
all these and learned to live with all
of them

for i am the father of broken dreams

they all look like broken bricks
red with dried blood all over

dead dreams are my silent
victories and i see all
of them
through their dust and ashes

 tomorrow
all rising like a hundred phoenix(es)
RIC S. BASTASA
...Prison

too much brevity too can be a prison

you are choked inside a guess

because she speaks
less and then leaves

you without anything.
you wish she said it.

RIC S. BASTASA
and this is the irony of love.
ever mind.

i like you, perhaps i love you but i do not sleep with you.
i am sleeping with another whom i do not love anymore.

i look at you, and i regret having so much time.
time is a lonely clock ticking and ticking.
there is no reason.

i love you. i like to kiss you and make love with you.
but i cannot simply do it. there are rules of this game.

so i sleep with the one that i do not really love or like, but i am a very compromising lover.

i imagine you. i have this power to be with you in another body.

what i do is just to close my eyes, change images, travel, make my own scene, you and i, all in love, every bit, every moment.

when it is over, how simple it is.
life is simple indeed. we sleep and dream again.

did someone older and wiser tell us that after all, reality is another illusion?

RIC S. BASTASA
...Romanticism.....
	sing for me
do not talk
kiss me
do not fret

do not show me love which i cannot see which i cannot feel

touch my hair whisper to me
even those sweet nothings

be near me
be mine for i am
yours...

RIC S. BASTASA
i envy the hands that touch your lips, your hands actually,
you have been strict with yourself
and too selfish not to have my hands even caress your hair as though Eros has no place in
your soul,
i beg you, in the uneasiness of my soul, pacify me,
let me, at least, stay beside you, allow my shyness to overcome itself, allow my finger to wipe the blood in your lips,
allow me to heal that wound, sad soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Same Things......

if you ask me how i am i always refer
you to my fingers

they have learned well the art of touch

the art of speech without the use of syllables running slowly into your spine

you soon shall forget everything that you want to remember

if you mind enough
there is bud, and there are tendrils

it is a beautiful morning and the sunshine and the tendrils and the fingers
all refer to the same things

RIC S. BASTASA
...Sands And Pebbles.....

writing smoothly
on one hand trying to get away with the rules of this game one does only have to remember and jot
like picking shells on the shore and viewing them against the sun gleaming
and then putting one them to your ears listening to that music that the wind is composing only for you

moving on to the other side thoughts are emptied like the ebbing of the waters
clearly for a while scrutinizing what the sands and pebbles could offer.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Seeing All Things Anew With All Awe......

how to end
is a set of many choices

one takes the rope
the other takes the jump

one does not necessarily take that kind of sad ending

someone simply leaves and be gone away and if there be changes, he may come back again

and then begin as if he is a stranger to the place

seeing everything new with all awe....

RIC S. BASTASA
...Simple Sharing...
	hey found
an egg
and both of them are equally hungry
and so they fought about what they found what he thought belongs exclusively to him, and in the course of their fight
the egg was broken
the yolk splattered
on the ground
and what they have
is the
eggshell...yes,
just the eggshell
for such stupid fools who did not think about the peace that can be found in simple sharing.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Sin, Society

to keep you from harming them they invent sin, make a society, build a kingdom, and surround you with soldiers and spies they put gods around you and you worship them they instill guilt, remorse, and since then love is overshadowed now, we are still looking for it seemingly it is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
there is also a gift of being not interested seldom it happens but it happens

like when the sun rises and someone stops to admire it and you keep on walking rushing for something more important disregarding what is poetic and looking forward to what gives you something to survive: money you know you cannot live by bread alone they keep on hammering that to you but here you are hungry and thirsty for food and water and looking for what satisfies your affection and this gift of being uninterested works for you, going back to that unpoetic self, and those old friends of yours treat you for a drink, here comes a friend telling you, welcome back to reality...make money away from psychological weaknesses and personal whims, and anxieties, take back yourself stone, pillar, no clouds, no rivers, rock, soil, sand, scorpion, viper, venom, the other more candid, says, be the man you are.

make money, support your family, solid, smart.
...Some Thoughts Of History

if you wish let there be a big bang of this universe
again

do you hate the war that it has given at itself?

do you also lose
patience over the dormancy for a hundred million
years?

forest to forest nonspeaking
of its wanton wilderness?

a spread of the dry desert for another billion years?

layers and layers of forgotten
existence?

sometimes a seed
grows
and creates another
world?

an egg gets hatched to begin life
again

have you figured out
for now
the DNA of
this universe?

RIC S. BASTASA
...Somewhere In California.....

old mother is wearing a crown of leaves
her head half covered as some white locks peep like a shy child from a window
as the rain keeps on falling
from a dark sky

old mother writes about broken bridges
loosened bearings
caught by rivers
composing many ships

somewhere in california
you hum a song
play the piano
beside no one...

RIC S. BASTASA
...Square

please stop
don't do it sir

please stop
i don't like it sir

please stop
i am leaving sir

i am not queer
i am square

RIC S. BASTASA
...Stereotypes....

when you told her that you are a poet
she opted silence

she remembers if you
tavel inside her mind James, the village poet who recites poems
of praise for the village queen who wins her crown through a bidding where money is poured and counted and the one who obtains the highest cash becomes the queen of the sea

the pearl, the moon and the stars all that they are used to saying even without meaning

in their village the poet works for a pay and hence cannot have poems without your money you are not distinct from the genetic pool of liars and flatterers and so when she finally takes a look at you

she just smiles and keeps on keeping that bad opinion to herself

until you responded too with deep silence, that poem within which you have kept for years not meant to be shared for the nincompoops and stereotypes.

RIC S. BASTASA
the fact is that when you are too tired after a hard day's work and when you arrive at the house finally after a heavy
city traffic you just drop dead on your bed and when you wake up
and everyone had already left for their personal endeavors
you do not mind being alone you do not even remember whether you
had dreams
or even nightmares for here the devil could do nothing for your divine situation: tired helpless
but still wanting to do more.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Stnking Rusts....

if only
you look outside the window you will find no one

it is not wrong to just stay inside and think that the world thinks about you and that some are looking forward to meet you
at the party

if that is the only cue for your survival
by all means take it.

if you walk outside the neighborhood is at odds with each other over minor concerns over bloated problems which they think have no reconcilable solutions if you sail to the other side

you will find an island of graveyards dead bodies on their shallow graves
without flowers without any widow or children grieving over them it is such a lonely world outside your room

so, there is no use going over there after all
at the end of the day the weapons of mass destruction inhibit this earth embraced by fungus and moss and stinking rusts

RIC S. BASTASA
...Stupid....

the pencil is a mongol which for the past had served you well and if it were your soldier you could have decorated it like hell.

now its head is cut and needs well the desired sharpening but what's the use?
you discard it, you don't have use for it
anymore.

you quit what you love. No, not the mongol.
it is this writing, stupid.

RIC S. BASTASA
...The Agony Of Waiting

to take the most essential matters of the heart
you really need
time

to rush is to spoil it

savor the taste of
life
make a way to always remember the taste

of love, of happy moments of hopes and dreams

give yourself more space occupy each inch when love is there
gently embrace it
whisper, gasp, grasp,

do not prolong the agony of waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Controversial Sermon Of The Parish Priest In The Sleepy Town.

lazy juan who waited for the ripe guava to fall on his mouth lays asleep under the tree

while sleeping a naughty boy, son of his hardworking neighbor stealthily grabbed the ripe guava from that dwarfish tree and ran away out of extreme depression juan died while the child bragged about what he did to the other children of the sleepy neighborhood.

that following morning
the parish priest delivered his controversial sermon.

RIC S. BASTASA
...The Debtor....

when i wrote this it is 9: 59 in zurich
wednesday and i know that she is there lurking in her bed

still trying to avoid me and i am asking:

what did she owe
me and may family
why she is behaving
like a fugitive
being chased by the arms of the law?

she knows it and now
she is gone

as we wait for the right time for her to see the light and then perhaps

pay.

RIC S. BASTASA
...The Glass....

what we desire
we buy and take in our house keep in a cabinet
we seldom use if ever only on very special occasions

for instance
on anniversaries of weddings and births

no, no we do not use it for deaths
we use something else which is dispensable

this is something expensive and beautiful and glassy and gleams against
the sun

we are too careful like we are always on guard with our toes

today, it fell.
it broke.

and since then we are not speaking.

RIC S. BASTASA
...The Life Of Alexander Papa.....

his name is alexander papa no, not pope, not the pope in your literary mind, and he died in 1887, no not 1987, it was a long time ago, you see, this alexander papa, who lived a short life, living it to the max, in rage, engaged, betrayed, stabbed to death by the lover of his wife, not my mama, but their mama, a woman hailed from Paris, well bred highly educated, restrained for years, and finally got stuck with a gardener who took a bath by the river, naked and well built, to the amazement of the restrained woman, not so well loved by her husband, yes, alexander papa, the man of culture, adored poet of his time, revered man of science, who preferred entomology than making love under the moon lit by a million stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Little Boy Is Back At You

now you seek the silence de the city which you can no longer find

the tiny room is a choker and it does not look good does not sound that good enough
for you

you have changed into a boy seeking the arms of mother in that old town by the sea the silence of the birds nesting laying the eggs for the next generation

this is the season of longing where you wake up at dawn trying to listen
what time had hidden from you because once you refused to know the seasons are changing people move from here to there as the sun keeps drawing what is up there and down here the moon as usual still peeps by your window

ah you must have remembered the little boy scolded by his mother because till the night he was still outside playing.

RIC S. BASTASA
...The Man Of Peace....

he lived in peace
he rested in peace.

remember him who
was much afraid to hold a gun and pull the trigger.

RIC S. BASTASA
...The Narcissistic Self.....

i refused
going with you	onight

i justify that a balding man (or one in his middle fifties)
would rather stay in the house sleep in bed
if made to choose whether to attend a friend's birthday
party,

i am a liar
he once said,
and lies are not that bad,
he says again,
if the main reason is
to survive,

know what,
the real reason is
that there is this narcissism of the self which finds pleasure at home
alone and no longer begging for another
hand or another's mind.
The Simpleton....

a simple thinking
from a simpleton, forgive me for the term, says that there are only two people in this country, (or say this world)
the killer and the killed.

like a man or a woman.
day or night, such a simple division, without any complication or sophistication, why should one befuddle a simpleton?
why should there be too many colors of this rainbow? there should only be black or white, nothing in between that is how simple things are: do not confuse a simpleton. Life is simple.
There are only two division.

dark and light, evil and good.
and going back to his two classifications: dead or alive killer or killed...what about those who wee and do not weep?
those who carry the coffin without weeping, or the children of the poor in the cemetery who are not involved except to wait for the free food that are given by those badly affected?

i am glad i met a simpleton.
there is a house without a door.
and he lives there.
...The Stony Poem

A poem stays to be a poem even if you never read it it is stony it stays on the road despite the passage of all cars until it hits you on the head....

RIC S. BASTASA
many still wonder why Sisyphus till now keeps on pushing that round and heavy rock
on that mountain for quite a long time
uphill and backhill, unceasingly
those who watch him have aching eyes and they are crying and those who love him broke their hearts into pieces and someone who suffers like him could not longer hold this matter for granted went near him wanting to help and ask him:

'why are you doing this sisyphus? '

and the philosophical
creature answers:

'..because i love
doing it'.

in the same manner that one answers why he still keeps on writing
poetry

besides the undeniable fact that indeed it is a very thankless endeavor.
lots and lots of these and those everyday, every minute, every second, at first we lose the it and then the he and she and then the you and you think about regrets and remorse but how can i ever tell you to change now you are back to a certain beginning about this and that i give up. i close my ears. i listen to my i-pod. i see you talking. i will not hear you.

you are far away, like a newly discovered planet still unnamed. indeed, even that, you are still a controversy, a rumor, to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
i always laugh
at the idea that i matter
to you

but i do not need
it, or the laughter,
or that matter

i may matter, but it is not what matters,

there is no us, in the first
place,
nothing matters actually,
all shall pass, everything, everything shall always pass and we are not even some kind of memories that they need to move on, to step forward and live their lives the way we once did

it is sad, but it is true, nothing matters, we do not matter i do not matter

so what we can do is just live, and live and live, until there is nothing of us to live until there are no more reasons for living until we accept this temporary sojourn this tavern, this night, this matter.
...To Care About Nothing.....

we have chameleons here and every time we meet they do not just change their colors oh, they change their names, adopt another kind of personality, enter your door and walk out without much fuss,
and when you finally say that you do not mind at all, they change back to their original selves and then tell you their real names, where they were born and where they really like to live, but preoccupied with your own confusion, you too do the same walk out from their lives and care about nothing at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
...To Change The Name Of The Author Of The Poem

to change a name from time to time may not change the color and texture of a poem

the one i have read and noted still opens its body to me it will be the same sadness but rereading it somehow creates a certain superficiality for it is a poem denied the dignity of its writer

disowned, and given away it becomes another stranger in my page and i have decided not to talk to it or about it, for seemingly it is hard to expose myself unnecessarily to another insensitive soul

looking itself in another body in another layer of time

RIC S. BASTASA
...To Papa Who Died In 1887

papa i still remember your anger
and what you did with it

and here i am
angry too and imitating
you

and perhaps, yes perhaps,
i, now, understand you.

the horror in us
the harrowing pain,
a love so huge
and flaming
betrayed by wind and fire
and to our feet this ashes of disdain.

RIC S. BASTASA
...True Love....

here is your flower red and shiny
fresh and dainty

you love it
still even without its scent

a day from
now
it wilts.

RIC S. BASTASA
…Until He Found Out That He Never Had The Wisdom….

Ferris once with a loud voice enunciated
what wisdom is

the student enumerates different swim strokes from butterfly to breast to back to dog to mixed

he speaks and describes how the body swims

until one day
he was thrown by Ferris in the middle of the sea

only to find out that he never had the wisdom to swim and survive and live though not happily ever after….

RIC S. BASTASA
of course
you choose the lesser evil
where good is not there

it is not easy when sometimes what seems to be good
hurts both of you

and so you choose
yourself
the lesser evil between the two
of you

the waiting is
over
and we have discovered
the answer

i have tasted
the best in you once, twice, thrice
and last night
i realized how love can be too deceiving

what seems to be
my pain
becomes your pleasure
vice versa.....

RIC S. BASTASA
...We Are In The Middle Of This Desert.....

last night i punished you.
you came home very late.
you have a cell phone you did not tell me where you are and why you are late.
i deserve to know all these.
i waited for hours with all my worries.

we all suffer for these.
we did not sleep. we felt the emptiness of our longings.
i was burned by my guilt feelings.
i think of the mosquitoes all over your body.
My bed is soft, my room is cool.
i have a think blanket around me.

we are in the middle of this mirage misleads us into believing that at the end is the shoreline of the sea that will take us inside a boat into another land of bounty.

here, death has no meaning. Life too has no meaning at all.
this desert of vengeance, and guilt and loveless state.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Weakening

do hands are willing but the eyes are weak

do mind is the football player in the field but the body is this bird without wings.

RIC S. BASTASA
...What Do I Have Here, Anyway? .....

a mysterious voice from the crevice softy, gently teases him, it will be 2017 your time to go, and he listens intently like a child to his mother holding his hand with the strength of an iron pole and he smiles to the air, gently, softly, like a wind to his hair, it is time to go, i know, he keeps saying, and muttering later, at any rate, what do i have here?

RIC S. BASTASA
...What Do You Have To Lose? .......

the moral immoral and the amoral
all die
together in one ride
of life

the hope and your hope is that they go to different destinations wherever that be

i am not so sure i must admit but it is this gut this voice within that keeps telling

keep a good life
what do you have to lose?

RIC S. BASTASA
...What I Saw In The Problem....

the solution to their modern problem

(which cannot be solved either by legislation
much more by war or by arbitration)

is a woman between two men who finds pleasure in such a silly conversation

one beautiful body
soon rejected by four arms.

RIC S. BASTASA
things are not what they appear to be not what you think they really are
and not what we expect them to end.

they are not definitely what we are not.

not only that not even that this world is not what it is too
that cave is not a cave
that moron is not at all a moron
as color is not the property of that object
but accordingly the property of light
which is not the property of color itself.

and so it is not what it is not really as words are not that words at most
the way how they are not used.

RIC S. BASTASA
...When I Am Finally On Top Of You....

What i imagine
Is a sun at noon
On top of the earth

I can be that
On top of you Linked like a chain

And then like the Sun at midday
I shall burst with So much sunshine

And then face away
At the ripe time
When all the grass
Are hungry no more.

RIC S. BASTASA
language is waiting in broken parts, mostly,
not new, but disassembled waiting for you missing you as always on early mornings before you have taken that needed deep breaths.

it is not feeling anything unless you begin taking it one by one, creating and recreating meaning using the letters like blocks of a system, a house, a vehicle, red corpuscles gathered in one container with labyrinthine thoughts, trying to tell you what and who you are.

now in a paragraph you read yourself, deciphering where you are finally heading.

RIC S. BASTASA
...Without Speaking

forget about it
it is nothing
do not think about it anymore
it is gone
tonight, just tonight it must be nothing
it is gone
and it will be another forgotten thing

who cannot ever
refuse going back there who cannot resist
taking another chance
who cannot resist
ever holding these hands
again
kissing you from behind and feeling your neck against mine

it is a beautiful feeling oh it is cold and damp and
dark
but it is always beautiful and for now we must forget but tomorrow when light fades away again we will see each other same time same place

without speaking

RIC S. BASTASA
...Worst As Ever....

that beast
though a part of it is eaten it simply turned a blank face against
the moon

something is missing
is hurting
yet that brute shows nothing to see

after the meal
the brutish beast leaves
the table
goes out of the house and plays
the game

out there it eats
another
someone is missing and lost
it consumes it
and goes back home without any hint
at all

you ask and there is no answer
you insist and what you get is just that wry smile

you think it is innocent it is never
it is more than you
worst as ever....
...Wound

a wound will always be a wound.

a scar may come to say you are healed but soon it will remember the wound.

perhaps you have not loved enough to learn from those whose hearts are broken, they say: forgive and forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
...You Beside Me....

just tell me my dear
if i wasted the whole morning trying to figure out how i want to live the rest of my
life
with you and this little poetry

sun rising above the hills birds flying toward the sea winds caressing the curtains of this house
and you beside me.

RIC S. BASTASA
...You Wander Still....

some storied
which you do not finish
writing
help themselves with their own words
and so they finish themselves with their own choices which from now on is called freedom.

usually the end is that these stories live happily ever after which all readers of course love to read over and over again.

seldom do storied end with their own sadness, their everlasting sorrows, their unsolved problems, and there is that which confronted itself with eternal damnation which no one liked but which is the truest of them all.

it is a bad story. they all fear it.
how can they read? someone tritely retorts, 'when they are all inside that collection of stories inside a book, where their souls are kept dog-eared, reserved for the dusts that settle there till eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
...You, The People

why do you fear
about the unqualified and the inexperienced?

isn't everything an experiment? did not all start with it?

why worry about the incompetent? did not everyone start with being one?

after all, my dearest,
these leaders merely reflect their electors

after all, my dearest,
you make them, you put them and there they are

despite their mistakes

still work that hard to please you people...

RIC S. BASTASA
...Your Hubris....

to say
that you never needed help

or that you are not into praise

to behave like a whale

to feel electricity
without source

to turn fists
into stones

to close the door and windows and

to believe that you can live with just a book....

RIC S. BASTASA
...Your Nature....

you wish and then dream but it is not enough you move on to touch and caress and kiss and hug
but they are still not enough you do more but they are still not enough until it hurts

from a flicker to a heart of fire to a wild fire until your whole world burns unceasingly until you become another eternally burning sun star in the vast universe of this vacuous emptiness

and yet it is still not enough, never, never enough....

RIC S. BASTASA
..A Floating Rock

as soon as you find
the truth
you find peace it is like words turning into air
and what you see is the infinity of this wisdom where beginnings have no more endings
and you are there under a tree
a floating rock

RIC S. BASTASA
..A Legal Story....

the mother who killed her boy in 2013 the uncle who wounded a nephew on his head in 2015 have reasons to be happy.

there are no more witnesses.

the prosecutor is a lazy bone focused more on his new projects a new house, another car, a summer vacation in the Maldives.

the public defender is happier with nothing in mind but to ease his case folder.

the old judge thinks of his retirement package. A home far from the noise of the city. A reunion with his grandchildren and successful children.

two cases are dismissed. One soul is still searching for a goddess and her name is justice.

RIC S. BASTASA
..A Little Note On Sin....

the trick is always in the losing

when everything has no importance

the self for instance at this point is not afraid to die, to travel, to be stranded to fall into an unknown landscape without asking for help or any saving mechanism for here it is the letting go

letting life take itself into life or even death this is the trick to have no sense of self everything turns out fine even if you do not remember where is life? death are you here? they look the same with their scarred faces your scared face your trembling body boneless and without flesh air as you want it, more than what you feel, what you scream what you silence above the skies are skies birds below them

butterflies wingless on some grass of cruelty

a can is a pandora's box releasing all the toxins a worm comes out from that apple that Adam had eaten it is calling eve, eve, calm the viper.....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Sublime

the sound of rain
the smell of pine trees

the mist by the window the dim light from the lamp the night getting colder in this we are together in another place in another time we meet again for a love sublime.

RIC S. BASTASA
..A Poem...

something
that gathers inside your mouth
and it keeps on growing and you spit it
out
with utter relief
and
pleasure.....

RIC S. BASTASA
..About Robert, The Fly

so there you are robert inside your room still writing the poems that no one cares to read one time at the party of your mama someone asks what do you do in life and you said that you write poems and they fell silent as though keeping to themselves that idea that it is not a way to make a living and that there is no money to it but you are alone robert and you have no one and you think that that is the only way for you to live and they keep on drinking until they are all drunk and told you finally that you are nobody a no good lazy bone and a liability to the family and to the clan and so there you are robert without any regret still writing the poems that no one reads and that you keep them to yourself as another fuel for another living and this you have always thought for yourself and this they can never understand for they belong to the world and you didn't.

RIC S. BASTASA
I congratulate you for that newly-found freedom of yours

the way you refuse to open the car door of His Eminence the candid way by which you said that he better have fun and go outside to see the sun feel the beats and pulse of the ordinary man.

i love the way you say it.
And we reflect upon the times of our lives
when were we born?
what did we do?
what dreams did we murder?
what words did we suppress?
what restraints made us hypocrites and sociopaths and schizophrenic?

we have always written the metaphors for fear of the candid which doubtless had punished those who were so young before us and those who were not able to bloom like the flowers in the wild fields.

i admire you my dear.
Keep the liveliness of dissent keep the honesty of your faith we cannot follow you any longer we had long been dead and buried in those undisclosed places of our blank-eyes chambers and blinded rooms where we are embalmed and stuffed like the heads of the prized hunter..
RIC S. BASTASA
..Adam And Eve Inside Us...

now adam
you have taken the forbidden
fruit in the garden that you never own

now eve
ask if you have not been instrumental too in this eating about what is forbidden

God is still asking where are you
and why are you feeling
shame when it was never taught you

RIC S. BASTASA
..And So I Chose You...

some have become so clean and yet so unhappy others have chosen the mundane the filth, and remained true to what cheers this world flaming it with the usual fire of humanity

and so i chose you.

RIC S. BASTASA
..And Then.....

..and then you
discover another self lurking
from the very beginning you learned
breath
which you do not name it will be unlikely that they would like it and you stare at it touch it as it touches you since you are strangers
to each other
you do not love it but it loves you more and wants always to be with you
forever....

RIC S. BASTASA
..As The Numbers Keep Rising

the world is telling you what is happiness
where to get it and when
and why

it never thinks about you what happiness is where to get it
and why

you always have your own definition and it does not fit the definition of the world and it watches you closely inside a fence
a cell a box a chain and once you go out from the box or jump over the fence or break that chain

you better have wings to make you fly far far away
the world has a gun for a freak like you and they never mind whom to shoot whom to kill
as the numbers keep rising....

RIC S. BASTASA
..At The End Of You....

the shadow
always lurks
in the dark side
of you

it fears light for it will be gone by then

it is just like your two faces
one looking at the light the other
to the dark

this time you realize one can't live without the other

and so here you are loving both light and
darkness
not that you really want all of them

along the journey towards your final destination
not one must perish
all must see what happens at the end of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Reunion.....

last night
we had a reunion.

twenty five years
ago we were teaching in a science
high school to the best of our abilities.

tonight we met
some of the brightest students we had.

one has become a judge in a higher court, the other a lawyer and an accountant.

the other has become another teacher like us and he sits silently at one of the corner chairs

the conversations are overlapping and laughter reigns as we remember the good times

our lapses too
and shortcomings which we suppress as we want to forget them
all

in one corner i pick up a book about an adulterer who could not sleep that night when he read somewhere that it is not happiness which matters but the passions that you are living in your
life
thus taking all the risks of losing a job
a family and even the sad past.

RIC S. BASTASA
..At This Hour...

all the nerves
meet, and they all entangle, in such a mess,

the little boy
watching intently
cannot find which is the beginning and
the end of these nerve threads

it is dreaming of a kite one summer
where it can fly and run and fly again

on those green fields under blue skies....

meanwhile the nerves are at war with each other

not remembering that they are all those roots coming from the same tree

RIC S. BASTASA
..Battery Failure....

you are
right about the need to be alone again after that early departure the blanket lies flat on the floor like a dead body your eyes are nailed at the ceiling and light is just too glaring then another story comes up again linking the one which was cut shortly with another emptiness like metallic chains and here you are again meeting yourself again in another telling blocks of memories fall and begin to break on the floor

like another engine breakdown and there you are looking for people to push the car hoping for an ignition for it to run again as though nothing is wrong.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Because They Are Never Real....

the last poem
for tonight, here in the place where ideas live, is dedicated to a beautiful body, the one, which i could have touched or caressed, but which too, exists only in the mind, and what are dedications for?
that which we only dream
because they are never real.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Bloody Muddy Mary....

look at that one written by a skypoet tasting like heaven

this one is different tasting like mud
it is written by you

earthling, bloody muddy mary....

RIC S. BASTASA
..Bombs.....Everywhere

some persons are prohibited to love.
if they love, or make love, they will die.
IF they will not die, they will be cursed.
If the curse is not effective, they will be excluded from the circle, they have to go away, or they will be dragged away from the village.

and you ask what is this all about? love is everyone. Love is love, and it is encompassing. Love is care. Love is sweet. Love is all that is desired for.

There is a kind of love which is ostracizing. It is exclusive only for those who are loved by the world, its rules and its laws.

There are so many people already murdered in the name of love.
Many territories taken away because they love. Because they love only themselves and their own people.

Love should have been much nobler, much better, most divine.

But it is not, here, here, and there, it is not.
and will never be.

Your hands are broken.
Fingers are severed. And you are headless on the mirror. You cannot see because your eyes are plucked out from your sockets.

And this is the journey which only the Sphinx can ask, to the unwary traveler, whose head shall fall a few meters away from here.

unless, they detonate their bombs, hidden everywhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
..But Life Is Not As Simple As You Think

really?

as you sit on a chair enjoying the place new guests come in, and let me enumerate them unpaid rental of the house the credit card that is due threats of foreclosure a death threat

some thoughts about the pain on your left side (can it be a cancerous mass?) family feud, soon cases will be filed, a possible criminal prosecution for tax evasion
a brother caught as drug mule a cousin committing suicide secret sins, mortal enemies tears fall, thoughts of suicide come fast heart beats, pulse drumming heart failure, you cannot think clearly problems tripling, begetting more problems than solutions

so, is this chair comfortable the coffee is cold now, and it is raining heavily you run back to the house you are embraced by dead arms.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Dislocations....

note the dislocation

words on the
water

love is not in the air

principles on the bottom

and truth is nowhere to be found

where are my
eyes?

i cannot feel
my very own
hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Ecstasy

slowly gently light penetrates
dusk

as twilight explodes
on the mountains

RIC S. BASTASA
memories flash
like falling rain

makes you wet
and then makes you dance

you get cold you shiver upon a loss

under the skies
flashes of lightning

you meet the child
in you
begging for what should not have been

on one sees you crying
in the rain
thunder hides the sob
of the woman

ripe mangoes fall
the child in you runs to pick them up

you hear mother calling father is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Floating On The Water....

since it is a holiday here we have decided to go to the beach to enjoy sun and sand and shade of trees beside the shores, two dogs, a gray poodle and a dachshund fish for dinner and melon for dessert exchange of pleasantries and then the dip.

i float in the water looking at the sun thinking about nothing for hours and hours.

i feel like i am emptying myself to the sun and the sea and the vast space before me.

and then i hear nothing about you and the island.
the dogs wait on the shore yelping for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Foolish Love....

if you only knew
it would have been different
you would have taken the hands of
compassion

but it does not matter
to me
i, this sufferer

my words are not bound for explanations silence is the cradle
of grief

for how long shall desire inflict
and pierce the flesh of my love?

this love is a bus bound to an endless road ending upon a cliff at night and then falls off to its own destruction

RIC S. BASTASA
..Giving In....

i am giving in to you
finally
and here i am without much thoughts anymore

i am filled and yet how come i am still so empty?

RIC S. BASTASA
..Going To Sleep....

the eyes
are falling asleep
and thoughts are leaves falling at dusk
softly to the grassy part of the ground....

RIC S. BASTASA
i touch your face
i ask you questions
rooting down to the kiss if you really like it
too

am i the only one remembering it?
was i the only one who likes its taste?
did you fake the smile hiding in your silence?

is silence a suffering inside you?
i got a nod and it was enough for me to stop loving you

i myself doubt love. i doubt if i love you. was it just my loneliness which made you mine? a property, a thing to use. a chattel of the roman period.

my temporary winter is gone.
comes spring with all the flowers and the
the butterflies comes now the world of colors and scents
and you have become one of those insignificant choices that i leave on the grass

the last bit of the cone the wrapper of my burger
the tissue that i wipe my face with to dry my sweat and to keep me from foul smell

i regain my silence now as i walk away not even wanting to remember you i could not hate myself that long got to go.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Hands As Chains

no one can be both eyes and ears
you cannot
be both
head and feet someone has to be
something
and this is how we must exist one upon the other
upon certain dependencies
at the end of this tunnel
is the light of interdependency

empathize
brother, sister,
our hands are our chains

RIC S. BASTASA
..Honestly Without Us....

if you remember
try to. If you believe
try deja vu.
a shadow relates to a rainbow
and envies color.
you identify with someone who enters
the same
restaurant that you
frequent wearing the same shoes that you are wearing.
you take a glance and a glance is reciprocally given, less the conversation, as shyness or perhaps restraint out of civil courtesy
is seemingly the rule of this game.

and then it happened.
honestly, without us.

RIC S. BASTASA
..In The Middle Of These Hours...

it is past midnight here where i live and sleepless i write a poem without a purpose it is thoughtless but i write it as i write it as though it is a dictation from someone else from somewhere i do not really know where someone without a name yet somehow without rhyme or reason it is a way to check on me and you too why you are reading me why we are here meeting in the middle of a poem at the middle of these hours and we must admit we are lost but never afraid we are confident that in so doing we may find ourselves but we never give it any significance at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
..In The Mood For Love....

in the mood for love
amidst so much love what more could you ask perhaps the intimacy in so much secrecy in this world where words are nothing but useless chips meant to fall on the thick carpet without even the slightest sound of the needle pines.

RIC S. BASTASA
with an italian song
in his heart imagining the canal waters of venice the gondola and the woman beside him

he walks out the busy street
struts around and hums

life is beautiful
the city is alive

he feels the pain on his shoulder
the flesh is trembling
the eyes blur
at a distance he only sees outlines like a Manet painting

the buttons of his shirt are not complete
something is missing
always something is missing in between all these there is nothing to hold now not even a cane

not even a child's hand or someone who knows you and takes a glance about what you feel
for his stability

the old man is weak
and burdened

the city sees him as everyone else's

for in this corner of the world
amidst the crowd the rubble and the babble

no one is significant.

RIC S. BASTASA
..In Your Own Poetry....

early morning
she was asking for good health

i do not ask for what i have

then she prays for wealth

i still do not ask
for it

and then finally she asks for wisdom

and i join her since after all those years despite all the efforts exerted
obviously i still do not have it

no wise man is stuck in his own
poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Into Anonymity....

he knows he is lost but he knows
too well the excitement of being lost much greater
that the feeling o
not finding the way
to home again

you lose nothing
nothing is there anymore

all the bridges are burned
all paths are covered
with water

out there a new door is opened
you are reborn into the amazement of anonymity.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Into Stones...

to each his foolishness there is no perfection without that stain of stupidity how can i be human without this blemish? forgive me for loving you.
you will get what you see.
all i have is this honesty.
you are stupid too, as love is stupid.
takes time to understand what is this stupidity all about.
takes time to accept how we lose how pride had eaten us and turned us all into stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Leaves Of Grapes....

they will never know that when i left
the house
inside my car
it is raining heavily

outside the sun is hot
as ever
the leaves of the grapes are withering...

RIC S. BASTASA
you said it well
you just cut one of her fingers that play the piano

one key is taken the piano never sings again the woman had lost her voice her heart
her only love
the only lively feeling she has

and you keep the threat you shall cut another finger again another finger

and do you really think that love shall go away scared and trembling?

no, she says, with blood oozing from her hands
no, no, no.
her love will always be true and not for him
again.....

RIC S. BASTASA
..Little Bud....

virginia
do not mind them stay as a bud
keep it
never mind the pain
do not be tempted to that flowering
the pain is there
and will always be
there
keep it
you are more beautiful as you are now
little bud.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Loving The Young One....The Tragedy Of The Rose Bud

the magnificent sun has arrived
confessing its secret to the rose bud

kisses it and burns it.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Mist And Wind....

what is in you
that teaches this lame heart to dance again
to the rhythm of light and rain?

i am wrong thinking
all these times
that i am complete and needing nobody

i am in love with you
and here i am helpless to your indifference

i realized how blind
am i i am a leaf falling from a twig
taken by the surge of the mist and wind...

RIC S. BASTASA
if you cut her fiver fingers simply because she no longer loves you in her pain she can still play the piano much beautiful this time that the whole universe stops to listen

if you break the piano or throw away everything that resembles the piano the earth offers all the trees and wind and leaves to be her piano you cannot blame her for changing for she never did it it is love that changes her it is love that tricks her into loving another which she cannot prevent from happening she will be mute and never learn how to speak to ask for forgiveness she will die without having to regret how she had loved another love has its own ways of betrayal love has its own ways of putting frailties in so much grief in tragedies that become immortal ..Nothing To Save....

takes time to learn this harsh truth
what you took for love is just trash to the other you're so serious and stupid the other is wise and rabid.

be a dog to the dogs if need be kill for the bone run wildly and feel the stone make love then leave there is nothing to save.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Of Madness And Atrocity

some have been looking for the exact spot of happiness

where is it? to a snake where does it lie?

sometimes that very spot is beside death itself which keeps on reminding not to touch it unless you too are willing to pay the price

a boy about to reach manhood touches it with his finger and he becomes ill

her mother had gone to consult the witch doctor who tells about the exact spot where death lies beside a brief moment of pleasure that every boy wants to become the men have become accustomed to this and having earned so much money they pay the price for other to die for them

and the women who dream of power love this event that had taken a toll on the lives of ambitious poor men from faraway lands whose villages are nothing but dots
in the map of madness and atrocity.

RIC S. BASTASA
..On The Left Foot And The Solo Tree....

there is this sea tree standing on a rock alone

the color of the sea is bluish and silvery

and he writes blue is perhaps the warmest color and he remembers how he put his left foot

on the sands where she left hers once

RIC S. BASTASA
your poetry
have become my shadow

as mine too
had always been

and so we have become more of shadows
to ourselves

lost in darkness
we talk about something else

oh, reality is not fun at all
as we touch our bodies feeling like
stones

or if we are those roses
on a frosty night
we have grown more thorns

RIC S. BASTASA
i am telling you
and i will always tell you this it is the pain that makes it beautiful and the more pain there is the more beautiful it becomes do not ask what is it

what it is
it is just as it is
and nothing else

and here comes the ultimate thing that i must tell you that ultimate beauty in pain that perfects what beauty is there left in the course of the flow of all these, all these, all these they you lie with eyes closed and a half smile surrounded by a cloud of flowers in perfect beauty in perfect peace as they say the prayers allegedly for you but without their knowing that they say these prayers for themselves who still think that there is another exit other than this....

RIC S. BASTASA
..Parasite To My Skin...

dthis came to me when i have so many things to do and i do not know where to start

you arrive at the point when i am numb and senseless but we try to manage somehow we are normal and alive the ugliness is not well arranged which could have been done by the skills of art and contained emotions when beauty came the door already closed itself for the much needed sleep and you make dreams as tools as you claim something spiritual in you mist in my eyes, sweat to my brow, scar of my heart, parasite to my skin.

RIC S. BASTASA
do not suffer
the ache of my own tooth lest you be too assuming it is your hypocrisy that repels me

look at me, carefully look at the creases of my peace words of grief are not well kept in place

sobs scatter like mosquitoes on the swamps sadness crumples like waste paper in the screen basket you have suffered the same curling inside a room like a cocoon

it is always a sigh of relief that 'when' is a word that invites the 'period'

write 30 on the diary and in one of those pages note a reminder, 'i was once in love the feeling reels like a snake on my neck

and when it bites and i feel the trigger of electric emotions i know, i never had the antidote for love, if it was hate or indifference, it never cured me, and here lies the epitaph of not thinking, just living and loving and then the dying' life is short, it was either boredom or grief. The new born child cries, perhaps, it knows from the very beginning.

RIC S. BASTASA
for all you know
just be honest, as i am.
when i decide to go
i go, and i do not come back to take back what once was mine.
you once said i am unreasonable, fragile ego, arrogant,
with a pride as high
as a mountain,
i myself cannot control all these frailties,
once offended, i leave.
and i do not really come back begging, even if i die.
i hurt most mother.
you cannot forget that.
i welcome hate. i am free.
i have no one, and i do not belong to anyone.

i am into feelings of course, but i always rise from there to go back to square one again.

i love beginnings, know that. i am into new places of my heart.
know that.
i am not frightened about ending
a relationship.
For i always know how to start all over again.

perhaps mother when she conceived me had an eye on the lizard which when its tail is cut knows how to grow its tail
again.
you do not know the pain.
just like the lizard in the ceiling.

well, i guess, this having no fear of losing, whatever, losing you, and losing everyone else,
is actually not my cup of te.

in fact, i have managed to stay with you for, say, nineteen years?

i must be too foolish to stick it out, but it is true, i have so many choices, and i am too foolish to be stuck, like iron fillings to your magnet.

was i really in love?
am i really that lost in you?

years, if you have mouths, please speak to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Poesy.....

when you prepare for the worst to come when you are made aware of what is most essential
what is ultimate

and he blames you
for what you are doing
right now

yes, right now, what are you doing and what i am doing.....

as others claim that now it is the end of the world.

RIC S. BASTASA
in the guise of educating a very young heart
what love is all
about

a fertile field where migrating birds spread
the seeds

tall grasses and nesting herons on the lilies

a boy paddles its way in the middle of this chaos dreaming of all the eggs for the hunger of a family darkness soon falls and the mating begins tonight the rain falls
heavily soon

a cleansing flood creates another beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
what is the matter with us?
we are shaken but none has fallen.
we are tickled but none has exploded.
we are normal we keep on assuring ourselves our community our God. yet the matter is here our thirst remains, our hunger is still here we drink without satisfaction we eat without being full we make love all night and we end up looking at the shapes of faces in the smoke inside the room
we look for eyes in the ceiling the geckos do not live here anymore the lizards fall to the ground the floor shapes our footprints on the dust the window is a whore letting in whatever air is there.
there is something good in this prostitution.
we are given much leeway to breath and we breathe deeply and we feel this sense of humanity.
the air that feels our lungs.
the blood that keeps on running inside our veins.
the aches are here and we no longer feel.

RIC S. BASTASA
the betrayal is quick
the fear is great but the pleasure has always been greater

you repeat it twice then thrice
and you say there is nothing wrong about this thievery oh, they are just affections oh they are just emotions which you cannot see the pleasure is much greater when you are almost get caught and you keep on saying the only thing wrong is when you are caught red-handed, and there with your stoic looks always ready to be hanged.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remembering You....

i will not forget it when you humiliated me though you may not have been too aware about it, because you are a senseless, insensitive ugly woman whose lust started when you were still even fourteen i think and so you have a grand daughter at the age of 25 could be like mother like daughter.

sometimes i wonder myself why i did not react to that.
i must have been too patient to simply disregard it or
perhaps

you are just too insignificant for me, but why is it that i remember you now?

you are foolish, to love me, and i am foolish to refuse you.
i detest you. And i keep on remembering that hell hath no fury than a woman scorned.

in my class you daughter sits at the back of the room with her daughter. She looks like you.

the past is a mirror. and we all walk through it. at the other side is the good side of our longings.

i touch clarity with a finger. I feel the coldness of logic. ultimately, i like walking all alone by myself back to the seashore where hermit crabs live in the silence of their old familiar songs.

it is just the wind. Just as always the wind blowing here and there as i take a look at the side of my body, wondering, if i still love living my life
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Rest In Peace..Power Woman

she used
people

power woman
exploiter

what i know
recently is

and you know
it too...

sad, but no one wants

to ever
remember her
anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Sleep Well In The Morning

take care my friend those around you are looking up the sky and then look down the ground trying to measure the height of your fall take care my friend you are not surrounded by friends but by your traitors keep the calm of the still pond keep eyeing on those vultures they will surely like the taste of your cadaver take care my friend shy away from blind trusts and blanket authorities at night keep that third eye waking sleep well in the morning when they are all gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a way
to deal with separation a game of departure sometimes is not unusual

you say you want to leave but there will be no leaving you decide to stay but in the house you are not a part of it

anymore

alright you sing, i do not like to leave but i cannot stay which of course befuddles the one who thinks still loves you there is mud all over the floor and the windows are shut so you cannot see the stars so the moon cannot take a peep in the room

and what happens next still remains to be a mystery between the bed and the ceiling, a haggle between the pillows and the blankets

all these sorts of inconsistencies and ironies which play well with the audience inside a dark theater where you can hear the drooping of a pincushion, where a camel goes through the eye of the needle that is the show of course of your 56 years acting and keeping up with the script what to say, and how to act your lines so well, without expecting any reward except the hope perhaps that this would soon be over, and that you finally find the one whom you love so truly despite the tragedies that it had given you and so here we are back to our lonely lines always ending with soon, soon, soon, soon.....

RIC S. BASTASA
..Star Of The Night Sky

It is in darkness where you are most beautiful

very far away when your silence is appreciated most

it is at that time when you fall when all their wishes are said
and then come true

RIC S. BASTASA
..That I Have Lied....

i pretend to teach you
about love
i was behind you and then my hands are telling you to stand still as they slide from your breast to your navel, and must to my disgust you blocked my arms and faced me with such a merciful face begging for a kiss which i have never imagined for even once in the entire humdrum of my life.

and then i tell those who want to listen that i have lied.

RIC S. BASTASA
..The Apple Vendors Of Galas

we stopped to hear apple vendors in Galas
talking about politics

one talks of federalism
and the other asks what is it and she responds it will make us rich.

RIC S. BASTASA
..The Crocodiles Feast.....

the houseboy is patient with me.
perhaps, he is angry why we care for the flowers.
These are the things that we cannot eat there.
His face is grumbling like a hungry pig.
In the mountains where hunger is the law the flowers are not even grown for the few who die at an early age.
there is a need to change the soil in the pot.
The magnolias are pale. The roses are dying.
One has to remove the roots, leave only a few to give room for growth and later lushness.
His hands are sturdy. They are ready for plows and the buffaloes. When they swim in the river it is not for pleasure but to catch fish.
Time to stroll on the mountain sides to have another view of the daffodils.
He is in doubt. Walking in the mountains was never for daffodils. You walk to fetch water or to pasture the cows.
You run to escape the tulisanes.
Come, sharpen the bolo, we have to graft the sampaguita bush.
No, he said, we sharpen this bolo to let the enemy know that we are ready to kill and be killed.
There is no common ground between the poor and the rich. The native is here to be paid his dues. He plants your song of india for a wage Not for anything else.

Then he was asked to sit beside him.
He did not like had been dreaming of his dead mother and his sick brother who has no medicine in Marupay. His father is infected with malaria and here he is planting more flowers along the road leading to the old house of a master.

He admires the sunset. He curses it.
They were never the same. Though made of the same materials: flesh and bones, one has a dream, the other has the nightmare.

When you die, i will bury you.
When we die, the river takes us.
The deep water swallows us all.
The crocodiles feast.

RIC S. BASTASA
..The Exit.....

early morning you must learn how is it really
to live and survive
the whole day

time is a circle

you can go in and
be a part of its cycle or you can go out and be simply beyond its touch

there is a secret door
i know where is it

you just don't take off your clothes

it is not easy but it is certain
you have to take off your body

and then you forget everything about you

that is the exit.

RIC S. BASTASA
..The Fury Of The Eyes Of One Who Does Not Believe In Love Anymore

Anna, you should know how it is to kiss dead lips how to find where love has gone mad into streets without names how it feels to be in the desert again in the middle of nowhere at this coldest night where my heart has found no shelter you could have seen the fury of protest from the eyes of one who does not believe in love anymore who is dead and has no choice left what to do with coldness how to be a friend of an angry wind?

RIC S. BASTASA
anger is not at all bad. You say it.

at times when peace does not arrive why not entertain anger.

it makes you alive.
takes you away from self-pity and regret or remorse welcome the storm rage against it with all your anger.

set to sail. Live or die. it is the anger that propels you.

if you survive, pass this on

RIC S. BASTASA
to repeat, remember when we once met, years ago, facing the sun setting as we have nothing to offer but our silence, that golden silence which we take pride of because it healed us, for we were sick and then no one was telling for fear that we be taken into that isolated island where only shadows live i have nothing to say as always. I live with my mouth shut. It is like mama's door and the only noise was when papa kicked it to force it open because he wanted to keep the family whole

never mind, that is not what i want to recall, i am here. The rain just stopped. Someone has arrived singing trying to please the house for whatever it is worth.

i am not myself but i no telling the wall.
it has scattered ears on the floor.

sometimes actually you write to kill the hours.
and you kill the hours because you cannot kill anybody at least for now.

the murder is done. Now you feel comfortable. Unlike everybody else, who by their most normal selves, feel the horror which you have already mastered.

RIC S. BASTASA
..The Interstices

the interstices
had given us a view of the other place
beyond us

too, it has provided the paths for air
which come and go to make us breathe
and thus live.....

RIC S. BASTASA
i saw the one
drooping with white hair mouth covered to avoid infection

she says he needs more sessions for the chemotherapy she lost hope but he insists there is

first time to see him after two years and then

i sit on one of those breakfast tables of the center thinking like the way my wife does everything in life is fair what you took shall be always, as always, given back your hands cannot hold anything you body cannot.

RIC S. BASTASA
..The Lonely Man In The Making

and so he gave money to the owner of happiness which also by years of poverty has learned to trade it to those who badly needs it inorder to survive

and so he paid
gave the money and got a hand and then the whole body and then a memory

happiness understands what is necessary
it too understands what is surplusage
much more about waste

deep in his heart
there is nothing and he knows this and so he went there
again
to ask from more which is also hurriedly given nights and nights and more nights of seeking pleasure and presumably also having taken it with all ease

and

secrecy, but in the silence of dawn
he can hear his heart sobbing which he tries evading always telling him, that it is wrong, that it is a very horrible wrong to seek happiness using money but he said, i am tired of love which hurts
i am only asking for the shallow part of it where i do not have to swim anymore tonight the stars are coming out again trying to draw a story in the sky and he will be there watching them all in contempt and disbelief the years had been rough and the stars have never told him

the best story ever

not yet, perhaps.

RIC S. BASTASA
...The Love Of Self....

this day i have seen the other side of my island it is ugly but it is beautiful you will not understand it in my island there is only one coconut tree and it understands only me

it is ugly but it is beautiful
if you really know what i mean.

RIC S. BASTASA
..The One That You Really Love Is Not This....Stone

you finally find what the other loves a stone, glossy and golden but not gold, still with the warmth of the palm, smooth to your tongue,
tasking like salt, but it is not salt, just a stone, but it is not a stone completely, it has the imprint of a recent hold, not to you but from the other, still bearing the scent of recency which you want to put into eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
now look at me
my friend my love
i am a broken shell egg yolk spilled
on the plate ready for your frying.

it is the breaking
that gives me the sense of freedom
now i am free
i surrender to be eaten at your breakfast table

i wish you were alone in the loneliness of your own morning when you slice me into bits of fine pieces into the mouth of your pleasures.

do not tell me about love i am but an egg shell cheap, and all markets have me taken for granted.

RIC S. BASTASA
..The Poor Creatures...

everything in me the wind shall take and there is no need to bury the wind eats
what it once vomited

me...and you.

RIC S. BASTASA
to tread upon a path of less excitement
less joy but there you are with your mouth
closed
hands confident and feet strong about what you really believe in.

after all
it is not the happiness you have that gauges who you are your worth as a man

among the choices there is only one which is right it is not the happiness it is what is right

in a place where you stay proud for what you are you appreciate yourself and believe in you more than ever

RIC S. BASTASA
..The Sadness That Has Come....

did to sa gawas mora kag malumos sa kangitngit

outside the house
you are like drowning
in the darkness

ang kalibotan lapad
dako
unya ikaw rang usa
gamiting nga walay
pulos

the world is wide and big then you are alone
tiny
and insignificant

madungog mo ang
pagbangutan sa imong
kasingkasing

you can hear the grief
of your heart

ang imong pulso nagluksolukso nga morag mga baki
sa pag-abot sa ting-ulan your pulse is jumping like the frogs when the rain has arrived

apan lahi
dili kini sa kalipay mahitungod kini sa
kasakit
nga wala pa nagpaila
sa iyang
tinood nga ngalan

happiness has nothing to do with it
it is about the sadness that comes and who has not yet told you what is its name

RIC S. BASTASA
there were those who were constrained to take the opaque world,
embrace the metaphors and take hints from simple things like a grain of sand, or a speck of light
or the flint of a collisions, the spectacular firefly, the farthest star, because if you understand and if you utter the correct word of their state, the way they ought to live and be happy themselves or just be the way they are, being born and concealed, growth suppressed like a seed inside a can, a peeping hole for its existence, then you may finally find a way to annihilate them, and proclaim that they are the hazards of this world who must be eliminated at once.

you sleep with them you work with them, but you will never know them.

in poetry they are your metaphors, for they too are metaphors themselves, which take meaning depending on the shape of your taste, the truth in you, the mirror of your projections, the scope of your own
imagination.
The Seven Heads Of The Dragon In The Place Where We Live.... in where we stay there is a dragon with seven heads the first head has an apprehending hand a net the second has a pen and it writes what is wrong how it should be punished or corrected the third head has no eyes only ears and its hands are holding a knife and a scale the fourth head is the listener always protective like all mothers to their children the fifth head is the keeper of the key of the door of the big house without windows the sixth spits fire and gives off toxic gas the usual dragon that you have known since the birth of movies the seventh is the most casual and ordinary,

the man and woman in the streets
who smoke and drink beer and who may choose not to speak about anything or they may indulge in your liking
speak the truth and then be heard.

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Bleeding Rose And The Dying Child

on the first day you are the white bleeding rose even the vase at the living room does not wish to have you in who wants pain anyway? and so the lady of the house has only disgust for you white bleeding rose thrown away into the bin until a child finds you in the garbage place treasuring you as its one and only flower that cheers it for the rest of his life and that is where meaning is found which wilting has not destroyed the white bleeding rose bleeds no more to the happy face of the dying child....

RIC S. BASTASA
i know how fast are the days moving. flashes of night and day. it is all about walking and sleeping all over again, like calendar pages that we tear month by month. Rolled.

forgive my preoccupation about all these mundane matters of liberty and seclusion. A pile of paper works.

i look forward to that day when you tell me that i am dead, which i may have missed knowing. Know that i have always told you, how always happy am i. Meaning is self-made. Your art is a shape and color of endless definitions. an empty wall, a smudge of paints. Bottle of colors and scents of flower petals by the window. There you are emptying again.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Those That See The Sorrow....

the temptation in poetry is its self-centeredness most of it, is about the i, me, and myself thing

it is here where the earth becomes the center of the universe the sun cannot complain and the stars fully understand this matter there is another option however when you as the earth emits fire to light the sun and yet be not mocked or be subject as their laughing matter the earth is trying to light its own path and the sun understands and the stars do not complain for it is here where the earth grieves in its darkness and those who see the sorrow, just let it go.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Till I Finally Sleep....

you know i have always wanted to tell you about the story of conching.

i have already planned everything, from that nice beginning to that sad ending.

but i changed my mind. i decided to keep the story to myself.
i cannot share what breaks hearts.

it is the beautiful pain of my dear cousin which i want to keep and hence finally decided not to share.

it is more beautiful in its private box. I rewind constantly its song, over and over again. Till i finally sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
..To A Love That Must Remain Not Uttered Even In The Graves

it has been my wish today to write you a poem of love like a slight rain on the grass a tap on your shoulder not a wink from my eye it will be vulgar
i like to send you a gentle hush from my breaths
i could have told you in whisper that i am ready for this moonless night, where it will be dark, where we do not speak, where our hands are lovely in the cold, our bodies wrapping up a present for our two longing hearts.

you must understand that i am never allowed by these rules to even put your name.

RIC S. BASTASA
..To All Those Concerned

if example
cannot teach
you,

how can
words ever?

RIC S. BASTASA
..To Dance Again....

and then it was learned oh, they're back to each other's arms once again
and not one of them has told you what's love all about that it 's lovelier the second time around

their smiles grow that flower of envy like a willow, like a cattail, and the lovely air hums its sound that can kill what's is there in your ear philosophy comes in with a succor life is like that you cannot take everyone you cannot have everything what you love does not love you and the one that loves you more you do not ever care.

and then tomorrow comes like
everyone else
you move into these facts of life with burdens in your head and you live life as though nothing happens

everything comes and goes like everybody else

here comes the rain and your feet are ready to dance
again

RIC S. BASTASA
..To Find My Lamb.....

wolf
i cannot feed you all the time

i like your song
and i sing it sometimes i love your tail
and your teeth
i wish i had them too

but you know that i cannot be you for i am still human and we had been friends for quite a time

but this time i am on my own
i travel alone
and i am taking you out of my mine

i cannot feed you now
wolf
i am getting away
to find my lamb.

RIC S. BASTASA
..To Love.......

ang paghigugma
sa wala nahigugma kanimo balaanon
dili mo matabag nga paghikog ang
sama sa ingon

to love someone who does not love you
is sacred
you cannot say that there
you are
committing suicide

ang paghigugma sa
dili angayan nga higugmaon usa ka pagsukod
sa kalawmon sa gugma

to love someone who does not deserved to be loved to measure the depth of love higugmaon mo ang nahigugma nimo

kasagaran maoy makalumos nimo sa kahaw-ang
kay mao man god kini ang kasagarang naandan

to love someone who loves you most of the times is the one that drowns you into emptiness because this is usual this is traditional most likely as they all say usa ka gamayng kalibotan napuno sa kabulakan bug-at, makalanag na ang pangalimyon

pagkadaghan sa mga buyog nga mamaak
naglibotlibot kamong duha dayog kalilong

a small world full of flowers
heavy on its scent which has become toxic
there will be so many bees
circling to take a bite and there you are too close and crowded
drowsy and tired

RIC S. BASTASA
To Save Me Away From You

now i still write about love but this will not last that long soon i will go beyond all these illusions

like a child running away from a mad dog
i will jump higher
over this fence into the wild grasses and forest away from that old house i know about a black bird who was once myself and it is coming back to save me away from you

RIC S. BASTASA
..To The Old Woman Who Is Greedy And Shrewd

old woman take what you have to abuse the power
that you have
now
grab and grab whatever is to you a much needed luxury
another new car
more money
another mansion in the suburb
continue being the shrew
the devil is waiting for the taking
of your
wicked soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
To You The Angry One...

KNOW THAT
when i begin writing these lines i am exhausted for this day’s work for i have overworked myself drag myself beyond the prescribed limits
i am thinking despite all these sadness, pain and anxieties if there is still something in poetry which appeases, or pleases or makes us redeem ourselves from beast to bird, from rock to seed,
if there is still hope in the tenderness
of words,
the comfort of syllables the beauty of imagination, the coyness of the literal dove which even without wings still struggle to fly towards its one legged house up in the hill where the clouds have already retreated to the nearby mountain as night hovers in like an eagle with glowing eyes like the embers of your anger.

RIC S. BASTASA
to capture beauty with your bare hands the fingers
have to be hurt

to hold peace
you cannot do it with your hands in the shape of a fist

to be king
you only have to be
alone

to regain speech
one must take the cudgel
of silence

yes, it is this sacrifice that gathers the pieces back to the treasure box of the self
again

RIC S. BASTASA
..Turns Sweet Thereafter.....

attuned for quite a long time about the taste of a failing love,

time finally teaches us more to its realistic menu,

bitterness often repeated
turns sweet thereafter.....

RIC S. BASTASA
..Under The Sun

it is unfair
you realize how you give a world
and yet
how selfish is the other not even lending you
a glimpse
of his piece, a shadow a sound
a moonlit room

you grab love undeserved
you see a face
of grimace
as you ask for a just a feather
of affection which no one, no one is willing to pluck out from a body of birds

it is time now
for a gathering of fallen hairs

wear a hat and roam
the daisy fields
under the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
..Unsung As You Named It....

i will be a song
old one kept in a trunk written on a dusty paper.
ink is fading and soon
i will be gone.
you have to sing.
you must.
you have to sing me.
you must love me.

if you won't and if you can't another will in another time
i could be sweet
i could not be
for then i will become an uncertain song
not one will remember so sing me now
sing me, sing me
if you can.

RIC S. BASTASA
time passes
without our knowing

the sunrise turning into sunset

the plane finally on a touchdown

without our knowing it
music and poetry did it

movies and memories
songs and dances

our conversations from home to home

without our knowing it
we just lived.

RIC S. BASTASA
..We Never Really Made It....

i can still remember though honestly i do not wish to anymore

that port where the boat was leaving and there you were waiving your hand as though we still love each other, and that was the last.

when we see each other again this summer, i wish i cannot remember, foremost that pain of having loved you truly but we were never really meant for each other, we just didn't make it through our dark nights.

RIC S. BASTASA
..We Tipsy....

the one we love
is not reason it is beyond
behind
or in the middle of that reason
which is not exactly reason for we are
tipsy even without the first drink
and we shake like a boat amidst a very calm weather upon a bright
day.

RIC S. BASTASA
..We'll Wait With A Drink.

day you predict it
many times the world is about to end and hell is coming for those who have fallen short of prayers

it is always a calling for repentance people must i imagine myself, what if i have to wear a sack for a dress and hit my head on the wall so that the blood of my own redemption shall come,

as always on the date of the ending the world still is rotating and revolving without bullets of the gun no one is hit, no one falls dead on the floor, no one dies on the street, no balls of fire, no choir of angels, the traffic is getting worse, the haze comes, there is a need for masks, we still eat our meals and snacks drink coffee and engage in talks i like it this way, just listening to you (but i guess not that seriously enough when we were once kids deciding for a jump to the river from the coconut tree or killing doves with our slings using our magic stones, or the way we believe that we can be david to the goliaths of our dreams...

well, life goes on and on, and if you still be the doomsday prophet of my time i still feel free, not to take you seriously, if sooner we die, and we know it's certain, let death do its work, ..we'll wait with a drink.

RIC S. BASTASA
..What The Song Did For You....

because you love that song
you keep on singing it

the lyrics give you
life
the melody makes you
fly

and your lips change to a hum
your gums more alive
like a newly found friend your tongue
is marvelous in its new outfit of desire

the truth about that song is that it is owned by air and you know what it is

how air is, how fleeting and in the morning you find yourself with that truth littering
the floor

your mouth bleeds your tongue is dead
a tooth is missing

RIC S. BASTASA
..What Was....

i may say
i love you
when you are inside my own box

in my own
terms and conditions

outside the box
i free you
and you fly
away

how can i say i love you when you fear me?

how can love
love someone whom it cannot tame?

so go away
find what you love
and in the same manner
let it kill you
too

firely, moth,
fire, light
hand, and the snap....
at the end
death claims
what you love
what loves you what does not
love
what cannot love
what was

RIC S. BASTASA
..What You Want From Me, To Please You Finally

i say, i have learned the trick
of living, in order to live one must keep on moving one place to another, one forgetting another forgetting,

and more shall come for remembering all the bluebirds are here on the tree that we have chosen in another place like this they become more beautiful their songs more pleasing the rock on the cliff faces the sea of storms

it is not the same from where we stood, or once sat on top of its head

the boats sail at a distance seagulls hover upon a school of fish the sea is silky and the sun is a woman with a golden hair spread across the shores let me hold your hand, please, do not fear me, i assure you, in a moment, i soon, shall leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
the one you married loves you more than you do and you know it too well from the very first day you never change

suspicious of all people not trusting
because of the past pains in the crowd you are always

alone
in the house you feel the same as dinner is served as wine is drank
as food is consumed as guests leave

in bed you make love like everyone
the gasps and gaps are still there as usual exhausted you take yourself into sleep carrying you to the recesses of your mind into the depths of your angry past

you wake up sweating for the
truth journeying again into the labyrinths of what you still do not know until you arrive at a certain dead-end

and it is here where you sit and talk to yourself again
beside a wall
under the sky where black birds begin to fly.

RIC S. BASTASA
..Who Knows....

until then
i have never wished that you be me
or i be you

it is simply impossible the years are telling their heads are shaking and so we walk separate ways in our lonely choices

if at all we meet again it is only desire which decides that, if ever it is still there in the house of our longings

let us wait for the birth of another year
let us hear its cry and it if recovers its wisdom or just even its consciousness let us keep our fingers crossed

who knows?

RIC S. BASTASA
..With All Those Spilled Pail Of Water.....

just like any jack and jill you also fall down from the hill

it's not surprising what you say about any spilled water from the pail

the best part however and this you shall not be ashamed of is when you rise from the fall and sing again about jack and jill falling from the hill

with all those spilled pail of water

RIC S. BASTASA
..Without Questions Asked....

inside this body
is something unseen

soul if you believe mind if you ever think bouquets of intangible

desires
blooming and cut like flowers for a wedding

thrown, all thrown away after an occasion wilting somewhere
without questions asked.

RIC S. BASTASA
..You Do Not Love Me....

i find your arms
hanging
to the floor when i kiss your lips
i try to bring them back
on my neck
and shoulder
and there they are still hanging on a clothesline cold waters
dripping
and some are blown by the wind away
from me....

RIC S. BASTASA
When I join in a journey with you I never ask for the destination I never ask when will this end Or when shall we begin again

When I walk with you
I hope that this will never end I wish that this journey never ceases When you are with me

I float in so much space With the stars and meteors In the darkness we have so much light In our hearts in this journey we have so much joy

RIC S. BASTASA
already Taken

No one is ever taken Since no one is ever given

Life lives and thrives upon itself And death dies upon its shift

In love no one is taken Everything is simply freely given

I love so much and so many more Yet I was never really taken

I have been given and giving still Yet I am whole and always full

RIC S. BASTASA
.can’t Transfer To The Other Side

I am broken, scattered Can’t simply transfer to the other side Where more than half of me Is already there Less is here
But I cannot really go there There is not much air.

I am here,
Lonely but alive

RIC S. BASTASA
.facing This Wall

I see this face
My face
I like it
it is still my face as it was When I first saw it

No regrets
Time has been true to me Despite
I can tell the loss and gains
I can hold them all again Somehow
Nosedive and eyeblink Tongue curling
To my teeth
Greet the day without misgivings Everything is alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
.i Like The Sound Of Violin

Sharp and probing Pricking like needles
My heart is numb and painful Acupuncture violin
Pricking my heart my soul

I become lost too unbecoming My defined peace
It is here in settled absences Nothing fills it

Now it must be something coming new Filling pricking needles of violins Make me live make me pain some more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ja Sam Tek Danas Ovo Otvorila

, taman mi je pasalo vidjet ovu ljepotu i sklad nakon sivila kojim me ispunil kineski film kojeg sam gledala ovaj vikend 'Zvijezda koja nedostaje '...putovanje kroz unutrašnjost Kine koje mi je totalno ubilo volju da idem to ikad vidjeti...prašina, prljavština, bijeda....jedina ziva boja u cijelom filmu su crveni šljemovi radnika u &amp;#269; eli&amp;#263; ani: D...no, ono po &amp;#263; emu ga zelim pamtiti je..... 'Kinezi te prvo sruše a onda ti pomognu da ustaneš'

Kinezi jesu gadni, jako su krvolo&amp;#269; ni i zivot ne zna&amp;#269; i puno. al imaju jaku reakciju na to, Lao-Tsea, sli&amp;#269; no kak i Japanci imaju Zen kak reakciju na njihov gadni zivot. Japanci su kak Niemci, sam kaj su Niemci ostali bez te reakcije ljudskosti, bez profinjesti Zena.
Isto tak se i Kinezi gadno trude prevladati vse te pese koje tisu&amp;#269; lje&amp;#269; ima kolju i jedu, kroz sakralizaciju svieta oko sebe na vse te vsoje razne na&amp;#269; ine, i ta sakralizacija je jako jaka.

Mene v zadnjej vrieme drzi Nick Drake, imam ta 4 cdeja od njega,3 albuma i 1 demoi i neizdano, i od gda sem nabavl ove kable sam gitara i glas, i malo gudala v pozadini...nevjerojatna svezina neposrednosti.

RIC S. BASTASA
Life In The Islands.....

we easily forget with one glass of coconut wine
we have easily forgotten

what his father
did to all of us

your uncle was killed in broad daylight
his body thrown into the murky river
and was gone

your mother was robbed
and she roams the street
screaming
like a mad woman

your brother was taken
and has since been not found
listed as another victim

how easily do
we forget
what he did to us what cruelty was
there
now his son is here
smiling
offering a glass of wine
seeking reconciliation and we drink with him
as another found friend

how easily do we forget
he was with his father when your sister
was raped

the houses of our relatives were burned
by the bodyguards
of his father

how easily do we
forget
how shallow
how small are our brains how twisted
are our visions

with just a glass of wine
how easy is it for us to believe that things are better now that our enemies have changed
and that we ought to forget and then
move on with our lives....
how twisted!
how shallow!
how poor!

RIC S. BASTASA
.when Love Is Dead

You cut a twig
The leaves wilt
And then you say
Love is dead

I plant the twig
And bury the leaves
I dream of flowers
I wait for days

A bud springs
Then love is alive

RIC S. BASTASA
Snake Pit/
i could have died
from asphyxiation
but i did not because of you as i laugh looking at you
looking for a dictionary skimming trying to find out what i really meant about the word with an x on it.
you are fat and proud and people love you for that
on the other hand
your being dumb and helpless and on the positive side of it your being innocent and guileless
ah, that is it,
not being like them they will love you for that for most of them have turned to snakes, poisonous and lethal
biting each other in the snake pit of their temples.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Air

i got caught in a corner for quite a time
pondering
why? i glance on all
its side, out and in,
right and left, and i begin to write what i have not thought of
for a while, no rabbit from a black hat, but there is a white mouse that my hand has followed suit like a curiosity which is always unsatisfied and being so i left the corner to regain what i have lost for hours the air i breathe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Promise Me

make me a promise
let us talk about the sunrise those lively hills
a flock of seagulls
a bloom of bromeliads winging butterflies
and ripe mangoes

promise me a new day
for us
a fulfilling sunset fading gold
a lovely evening
a glass of champagne

RIC S. BASTASA
i still wonder why benjamin was there how come? where did he enter?
i know, these eyes,
have been
too deceiving,
these fingers too
daring,
and moving faster than what i see
there, there benjamin has entered the scene
murdering what i really mean.

RIC S. BASTASA
Quick And Brief....

i've sown the seed
on the barren ground cracks of rocks and desert sand

the joy was so little a moment of sprouting then death, a quick one nothing lingering
so brief, then gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
in this life
there will be more questions than answers everything seems to start with a what followed up with when and where but the most intriguing of course, that which is unquenchable that which demands the intervention of some divinification
is the.....why?

so it is common: why me? why me?
why this? why did this happen to me?

fly to this world like a bird and gather the leaves of whys
or just see them they are like dusts, like sands of the shore, they are like the particles in space, some meteors that they shoot some planets unrevealed some other galaxies unknown to us, why? why?

it goes back again to why, it is true, this world is filled more with questions
and the answers are getting less and less credible, somehow others have given up the quest for answers drowning in wine and drugged themselves to this puzzle, this confusion, this unknowables,

it is true, there must be a reason why, we demand an explanation for the whys in our lives, but then think somehow,

who are we to ask why?
we must go back to the basics of what, again for another start.

what are we? who are we?
we are but specks of light in the ocean of space we are but the pebbles of the great rock we are but fine granules of sand in the shore of this great universe.

i, think, let us be humble enough to bow our heads, then look to the skies with awe and wonder, then wait for a while till the right when comes, then let us ask, why?

RIC S. BASTASA
a halo
and four wings

angels and demons a head

you give a wing clipped dipped
rage,

why do you mistake the rage
of the sea
as her anger?

you sing. it is the singing sea that sings
when you finally left her,

the rage is yours,
on four wings

the halo fades
and turns into the sun

the sun surrenders
its rays

to the petals of the china flower

four wings, a halo, an angel falling

it bears the initials of my name

RIC S. BASTASA
three flowers &amp;#1689; &amp;#1689; &amp;#1689;
and two worms ~ ~
and some cloudy complaints&amp;#1691; &amp;#1692; &amp;#1693;

and there you are giving this advice &amp;#8594;

i am worried about the
three flowers &amp;#1689; &amp;#1689; &amp;#1689;

i need some birds
to take the two worms
away from me ~ ~

RIC S. BASTASA
¿puede Hablar Más Despacio?

at the time of the breaking
and that was before the falling

of everything glass
between us
i only ask of you to speak all these quietly

because i can understand everything perfectly

most of those that you did not ever say...

RIC S. BASTASA
“where Do I Go Now? ” He Asks The Young Man

He says ask me young man Not what places I have gone to Ask me what place have i Not gone.

Antarctica.

Now, I have no other place to Go
Except inside myself,

There is no jet
No cruise
Not even a raft

Inside me, and this will be Young man
The hardest travel that I must take,

Alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
• Little Packages

• 'Evil things
• come in
• little packages'

• Buffy, Giles, Xander, Willow, Dawn, Anya and Tara

The little evil things that they do Are sent in little packages

You receive them and You do not notice

Two little horns hidden growing inside
your black thick hair.

RIC S. BASTASA
my mind drifts
in the space of thoughts
passing by some trees
i gather thoughts
bunches
of gloss and refinement,
every morning
i take the pleasure
of putting them
here, lest they go away, like
fading light
like a voice
suppressed
in silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
1,000,000,000 Periods Per Second

This is one gigahertz Speaking, listening
Now at 256 gigahertz
With you writing poems
What can be achieved?

To answer my call from Your ordinary telephone You need only 5.8 GHz
And 2.4 for wireless phones And other computers &
In fact other machines

Now at 256 GHz,
What do you feel?

RIC S. BASTASA
1: 21

guess the hour
of my madness

when loneliness begins to rise
and move

like a smoke
from the chimney

it is dark and there is nowhere to go

RIC S. BASTASA
inside my mind
is the moon with you
i am lighted heart
filled with so much love, desire like blood rushing through my veins: sin and life pleasure and survival rose buds and fingers sky and sun, we are here now, we shall take most of what is left our time is up. Let me stay like dew to a blade
of this moment. Let me
be. I was not once even before. Sin
and life, i must embrace my own.

then on an early morning, i shall ask
for another
forgiveness.

RIC S. BASTASA
1: 38 Dawn...

inside the room
divided by the light brown drapes between me and the window beyond the steel gates is the world... it is cold and dark and there is no one walking on the road...i peep and let the cold wind enter the orifice of my nostrils...it is cold and dark and there is no one in this house... everyone is either asleep or gone away for good,
their names are listed and there are some short biographies...this must be a little scary says the listening wall...

it is. Sickness confronts the eyes of those who want to write some short notes of their brief stay or visit as you want to call it...
Eye to eye, in the most silent silence, the man in his usual black robe,
through his hands
speak.

and the world trembles we want to kneel and ask for more but nothing shall be given.... that is a fact.

RIC S. BASTASA
1: 55 A.M.

the cicadas still sing
that early
in this small town and everyone is

in fact everything is so quite that if you are awake at this hour unholy as they call it

(but so holy to me
i think)

i can still hear the voice wanting to be spoken deep inside the linings of my esophagus

there is this mummy
of the sarcophagus wanting to be reborn

honestly the name
still slips
in my tongue

perhaps this could be the poem
about cicadas
and their songs

or the sound of quiet
the murmur
of peace
long gone
now

trembling at the tip of my lips

who knows?
if at a little stare
on the wall
soon i shall understand and decipher
what slime is there that wants to speak
inside my throat
but still wanting to be swallowed honestly

RIC S. BASTASA
what i am

time erases from time to time what i write the letters fade and what comes back to my mind is the blankness
of the wall

i have no complain about the ways of this
eraser
in fact that is the way how i want myself to be

fresh to the waking up
of all hours
new to every eyes horizons stretching without end
roads flying roads birds with four to eight wings

RIC S. BASTASA
10 Minutes More

10 minutes more to go please say 'i love you so' then i will repay you

RIC S. BASTASA
10: 29 P.M.

between us
are these glass window panes dusty and misty combined

i see a body
above it profuse light it is facing me
as i write
my story and this
poem

i know there is no one living in this house all are in the monotony of abandon

i am not afraid of you another sculpted space
i call it
emptiness still unaccepted

he calls himself ghost
but i do not really mind
i too
have unfinished business
and by all means
i must finish it
now....

RIC S. BASTASA
i've read your poem.
had a hard time understanding it.
i feel like wasting my time.
perhaps i am too shallow i do not have your depth.
you are deep and i do not have those gears and other props
or perhaps i am just too lazy to jump into your
water
or perhaps i just want to have fun
reading

the words you use are bellicose, too much blood in there, the scenes are deadly
so many are drowning,
and no help is coming

getting to know you
is cumbersome
you are trying to confuse my state of hibernation am but a simple catfish frozen in mud it is drought time here and everybody is leaving

i do not have your feet i have my own fins
captured in suspension
i feel like a block of soil, pushed and abandoned
i may envy you but i do not understand why you are new, and original i am old and wobbled

i am frozen in my own hibernating world of a block of soil, solidified petrified, but in peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
imagine a face
a silhouette of nose and eyelashes and forehead black shadow against the afternoon sun dark orange turning into black
a journey towards a night all the birds in your hair have gone they are all home now in the place that you want to remember but you

just can't

because the word departure which was once too painful has been erased in the glossary of your memories but you remember as always home

arms, and breasts and the silence of togetherness because you are home now and it is as always sweet and peaceful

RIC S. BASTASA
another insomniac song from a hard bone

wooing the softness
of your lightness

feather floating
on the winds of chances

let me sit and watch when your feather
finally lands
on my lap

RIC S. BASTASA
there is this sickness that compels me to write. There is this nausea that makes me capture the words. There is this pain that opens me up to images all images that soon appear like shadows of birds on the side of a hill above the full moon.

there is this void that behaves like a big mouth but cannot speak. there is this silence that dignifies my loneliness.

It is like an old woman waiting for no one by the stairs facing the dusty road in an old country.

i have these eyes that look for nothing like a dead man staring without feeling what lies there in front of those who scrutinize an event.

there is this trembling of the flesh in the arms while facing the monitor inside a closed room.

there is this peace in exhaustion. there is this knowledge of a dead end and there are no cars there. No doors but only walls.

der is this walk without a definite direction. there is this purpose that you cannot describe.

there are lots of lost meanings that slip from our tongues and which we cannot utter.

there is this game of boredom where we are all losers. there is this acceptance without question because there is nothing worth asking anymore.

after all these years when we age and we do not care.
you brag that life is not complicated everything is simple like, baring yourself, nothing hidden, speaking, shying away from silence because silence is strange it is not named specifically like a goat with horns, a bird with claws a fish with fins,

you speak your mind,
a square is a square
a spade is a spade
not a thing is the same, everything unique simplify, simplify, is that a hard thing to do? i say it is not.

you grow, you experience pain, you shed tears on people they do not really consider important

time and pressure are two twins now you like to die, you once tell me as candid as tomorrow you will take your like away like jumping from the 12th floor or simply, as you put, withholding breath or pulling the trigger

'bang!' is that complicated? i say it is not since life, your life, is always your hands there is meaning to all these, i tell you, you look for it like standing by and looking at the faces of people who suffer like us,

then life unfolds with so many petals, it becomes a tree with so many rings worn inside its body so many twigs, branching out as though it is following an edict you follow the veins of a dried leaf or listen to the stories of the child you begin to count the stars in the dark skies or lull yourself with the eternal numbers that the waves of the sea are carrying to the shore endless, moon to moon, sun to sun, horizons that tire your eyes deserts that make you feel the thirst numerous deaths, births and rebirths of thoughts and memories of windchimes

it is now simple to accept, sometimes one cannot tell a person that you love and that your love is something that you cannot really grasp beyond speech,
beyond hold,
beyond feeling, it is what you see at noon when you stare at the sun hurting, you cannot attack that long, lest you get blinded by so much light now i know how is it to write to someone and you try hard that you cannot be understood

because

life is not simple, and saying i love you is not just to utter the word and then everything turns to be alright

it is more than that honestly, until now, i cannot say it, or if i say it, until now i have never understood it

do not attempt to understand what i too have not understood it is like this: when i tell you that i love you, everything in me vanishes day turns to night, and i will be lost forever denying what i am destroying what i have built from the beginning my love is a nihilist.

you, as always, can be my sun, without you feeling it.
When he was insulted, he returned no insult some questions i will ask for you today, did you show your left cheek when your right was slapped?

did you walk another extra mile when you were ordered to walk the required mile?
did you take his eye because your eye was taken away?
did you take his teeth because your teeth were removed by him?

did you insult him because he insulted you?
did you fight him because he started the fight himself?

did he oppress you and you remained silent? did he steal from you and you tell the police that you freely gave the stolen thing from you to him?

please answer me.

Did it now occur to you that it is hard to be a christian?

please answer me.

RIC S. BASTASA
101

Do you remember?

The river where we bathed As children
Innocent in our nudity
The fish we caught
The fire we made
When we all ate together As friends as neighbors
So close like bees in the hive.

RIC S. BASTASA
beauty

i agree what you say about inner beauty

the windows of your soul
through your eyes
to the secret chambers of your heart holiness and peace
glow like burning fire in your head as you evoke your presence forgive me, but i am more tempted

as usual
to the external
the flesh that wraps your bones the curves that travel around your body the warmth of your arms the softness of your touch your lips
and breasts your thighs and groins
i see them more now as i kiss you i am young. so young to see to want these all.

i do not bother about your soul

RIC S. BASTASA
To rise from where I fall

Subdued, I lost, I have no choice But to surrender my own voice

Now I have to go to places Missing your embraces

I am but just a shadow
In a nook without tomorrow

I walk under the rain
Where I am wet & drained

And cold in the night
In darkness I lose my sight

This is the time of losing In his arms you are smiling

And you will not be with me With him you can only be

I understand perfectly what losing is you are not mine, you are all his

This is not the end however, This is just another kind of fever

I must go out from this wall.
I must rise from where I fall

RIC S. BASTASA
This is the house of my father
The termites eat every wall The beams fall
And the roofs shatter
And the ceiling splits with the gutter

I come back today to remember
The past
And here I am to reconstruct better
The future i must

The present
Shall be this condiment this complement

Now, these hands shall be the hammer To every nail in the mind of this dreamer

This house shall stand again Proud against the wind & rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
105

Waiting

I wait for the cogon door To lay your name on the floor

After a time you transform into a cloud wearing that crimson shroud you like to gleam Like my new dream

Regally dressed in my sleep
As I fathom words so deep

RIC S. BASTASA
the celebration

In the morning we shall find ourselves
Many of us
Babies in slow swinging cradles Still drunk of the night’s lullaby

We shall find out Waking with poems in our palms We shall chant together

The sun has come
In the manner of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
at dawn break

i open the windows on the rear pale lights from the eastern side of the window pane enter

i stretch my arms and hands rub my eyes like sands
the cock has crowed
the church bells toll, i bow

it is the paleness of light, the color of sadness landing slowly like a tiny wind in my emptiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
young poetess, ignis fatuus

come with me, come with me we shall be silent under a sky full of stars

come with me come with me and be so so silent like me we will be seeing a dark sky full of stars we shall be silent without their wars we will only be the wisps of the winds whispering whims and hymns

RIC S. BASTASA
a view of this place that i remember the back space of this house used to be a green ricefield

and there was that tall mango tree where i used to sit underneath shading me from the scourging sun i always remember
the view
of the carabaos grazing with white herons standing on their back and blue cottony clouds drifting above

the place is now cemented with a wall as high as three men added-up high buildings rise from here reaching the cottony clouds out there and the river is no longer a hype but a big silent hard steel pipe.

RIC S. BASTASA
we keep on untangling the vines
that choke us
each hand has no place on the secrecy of old time's breast

it is the season of
freedom
freedom from roots and barks
tasting the bitterness of what this self has inflicted upon its flesh

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a coat
that covers a seed

it is thick
and dry and the seed is safe inside it

the seasons are inviting one time, there is so much rain

and it would have been a good time to throw the seed and let it grow

but you have decided not to it is not the kind of seed that they know by tradition

it did not come from their own familiar farms established with strict adherence to rules and penalties

you keep the seed as a symbol of
your eternal restraint

you are a good man
and they think of you and will always do until you die

the seed is in your body swallowed
like your pride in self-denial because you will always be a good man until they die.

RIC S. BASTASA
inside our pockets
is the privacy of our own stones outside our faces are the familiarities of our traditions

when we party
we say the same words actually
we fear
other people's anger
we cannot afford to disappoint the visitors of our common faith

the usual mess will be there
part of the party you know sometimes we let go
we let loose what is too tight in our necks we spit what is bitter outside the windows of our tongues

there is always time for restraint in a few glasses of alcohol
there is a time to make our mouths shut up tying our tongues like ropes on the railings of the house of civility

personally i do not like this party where we become decent fools
choosing the words
afraid of the truth
always fearing that we should have broken some rules of engagements

most of the time we deny what our hearts are looking for cold hands hold another set of cold hands empty heads bang with other empty heads on hollow sounds of flattery

one time i left the room where the party is going on it is 11: 10 in the evening and it has become too intolerable

i need to be alone in order to be free i imagine you and i love this atonement when you still do not mind how i feel

i am complicating it so much restraint because even if i am now outside everybody i still retain the decency of what is right and wrong which i always carry around.

RIC S. BASTASA
now that i have fed all the mosquitoes i think, i must go to sleep, and this is the last poem for all the female mosquitoes that i have loved before and still love
tonight

all of them
have sucked my skin
and all of them are now
silent

contented perhaps and so happy
that there is still a man
as generous and understanding
as i

on said gesture
i can now have my sound
sleep

good night, my darlings may you give birth
to a thousand baby mosquitoes
tomorrow
morning

may all of you spread my genes
manyfold
like the sands
in the sahara desert

RIC S. BASTASA
when i tell you that i have loved you since i first saw you, i know what you will give me: a quizzical look, a sense of disbelief, it will be milder, but i expect greater than that: that shock in war, that vomit in gluttony, that feeling of having a snake in your bed, i must have overate this, but i know what consequences are there:
like a mother you will cut an umbilical cord that connects me to you,
i am that helpless premature baby inside your womb, i will die and you will like seeing that slow death like a boa constricting my body, i can imagine the horror of the Vietnam war, the massacre of innocent lives, blood is the river, bodies rotting on the banks, worms everywhere, a no man's island, you will laugh, and you will see the Frankenstein in me loving screws and bolts, and junks and rusts and useless parts i always look at myself in the mirror of your eyes, i see that i am a gentle moon traversing the placid lake of our junctures, i do not wish to disturb the peace between our two countries, i remain a diplomat in my own chosen field of silence.

soft winds blowing the reeds upon the Nile shadows of pyramids fading with the sun and now embracing the golden like of the moon a Bedouin riding on his camel still dreaming of a home of oasis in the desert of his unrequited love, an emptiness unfilled, a self unrealized agonizing in the silence of the tumor that keeps growing inside his head do not nod, i perfectly understand why it should be this way.

RIC S. BASTASA
11: 37 A.M.

autumn
from the Four Seasons

the violins are crying like mourning women all for the honor of the death of a revolutionary

who loved them all equally and gave them all the children that they all deserve

after the funeral the women talk
and they all agree that all in the name of love
is forgiven

that betrayal and deceit only exist in war
that it is love
that can only thrive
in their lust and passion that what they remember most of all is only the kiss lingering still in their tongues and throats and parting teeth

RIC S. BASTASA
11: 53 In The Evening

goodnight to you my blue butterfly
i have to go now
back to my leafy friends in the mountains now that you are still angry at me i, this red dragonfly have to take my hiding in the forest i shall pass my night there in the middle of exotic orchids with all my lovely, wild flowers

goodnight to you my blue butterfly

i shall not say 'i love you' anymore you don't believe me, - am i a boar?

RIC S. BASTASA
because i cannot
sleep
does not mean that i think of
you

there is more about me and it goes beyond
you

or even us

it is the nausea of selfishness
that makes my eyes open
till dawn

the nausea of an existence that is folded many times

until such time
that there is no possibility to
find
where the centerfold
is

until such time that what you face is an eternal wall as you grope
for an infinite edge

there are no more reasons and the waking continues

on and on and on and on

on and one and on and on no numbers no images

no measure
no beat

RIC S. BASTASA
my secret love

I look at you again today for the same Question, this boring repetition,

Why do I really love you?
(And why can’t you love me?)

Your face is beautiful
I make glimpses; your arms tickle me,
To the bone, your hair makes me shake,
Your lips make my heart beat,
Your eyes, they make me melt Your nose makes me gosh

The way you walk makes me hungry For love tonight,
And then you look at me I shy away, this cannot be

Why do I love you?
(How can I ever tell you?)

I have not. I cannot.
I am crazy. I am mute. I am patient.
I am angry. But I will be always silent In loving you,

Shall I call it forever? .....Cool.
(You will never know, this fool)

RIC S. BASTASA
The useless poem

He knows that his poetry Is a useless endeavor
As you put it,
There is no money for a poet,
Not even fame when he is alive Or even dead, perhaps for some,
Whose lines are judged for greatness

His poetry is nothing but a way of laundering His emotions,
Not even read
Nobody really cared
How many nights did he spend to make a poem?
His heart bleeds
For more pain, his stomach acidifies for more Harmful corrosive liquids rising to his brain Through all his intestines and veins

And he goes groggy Nauseous,
Till dawn breaks he makes his lines Like a fool
He wants to stop and put an end to everything He is suffering
He knows the end

Cannot refer to this poem But to his life
He ends it
His poetry may live on some pages But (again) not even read because nobody

Nobody really cared

Perhaps someday when another useless poet Comes accidentally along Surfing
Or
Writes the same useless Lines like the way he wrote his By a slim chance
He shall then
Be read for once
Through this poem

Again
And again
Because in fact
There are many of them
More than you will expect Rereading the useless poems Still bleeding asking for care and even forgiveness

(The vice of asking for attention The uselessness of recognition)

Another one reads it this time It is, I will not mind, You

RIC S. BASTASA
I used to like gardens, putting flowers on the row, Tending the soil, cutting the grass, Removing the weeds,
Pruning the lush greenery of trees And making the flor-de-luna vines Create a certain impression Of a landscape,
A certain motif
A theme of gladness Something to cherish

I take a good look around my Little garden
And then I would sit under the shade of flowering champaca trees throwing fragrance Sprinkling perfume
The neighbors say that the scent of ylang-ylang even reaches their houses And the white sampaguitas so exuding I used to dirty my hands putting soil on the flower pots Designing landscapes of love And patience, curves and hills,
And tend to all the colors mixing in space,

I used to

I am telling you I stopped When I married,
My wife comes to my garden
And rearranges everything
She puts what she wants And pulls what she Thinks repels her
She cuts the flowers Puts them on the vase
And uproots some species
That I love
And soon the garden has not become mine Crowded, and strange
And what used to be my little garden Green Bermuda grass and patterns Red Anthuriums heart shaped Pink Dahlias praying to the sun Orange Gumamelas dancing in the wind And yellow dancing ladies beaming with pride Olive Palms waiving to passers by with all cheers Violets so assuming White lilies in pure dignities Lotuses in meditation moods Husky Cactuses confident with thorns Finger Ferns so fine and cool

My garden
Now is a forest
The wanton chaos
My garden is gone
All the patterns changed Drastically

And she asks me
She asks me
Why I don’t tend the garden anymore
She asks me
If something is wrong
If everything has gone wrong
She asks me if I still love my garden She asks me if I can begin planting some seeds again

She asks me if I still love her,

AND THIS IS HOW I PRUNED IT:

I like gardens
I don’t tend the garden anymore
I still love her,
She is the only one that moves now Her soundless feet keen on the floor Her silence seeps
In empty corners where all the sorrows sleep

She dances in the grace of afternoon petals falling off Her cold breath hovers
In the roofs that vigil the death of the noisy crowd

A loner
A curious clone of a black ghost She visits abandoned rooms And cracks stories concealed by the muted angers

She drops a secret like a feather Floating and I though awake Throughout her wakings and walk-ins Could not recall having caught one In such slowness
What she really says amidst the silence Or meant in all these dark passages

The mirror on the wall stares And glares at me with anger One must have just died
The killer fled Hidden by her black capes Another secret I supposed And though I thought I knew

She had already flown away Like a black bird into the night

I want to make some rains for her Or offer her a lace of my tears But by then another morning has come Gently touching me

With flowers
And dove on my palms.

RIC S. BASTASA
from a distance
misery is nothing but rectangles and squares
and just even lines, and dots,
and blotches

or smears of mental constructs

no wonder
you have successfully maintained
that fortitude of detachment

no one feels what is hazy
no one cries for a shadow

shadows are doubts
and haze is confusion

RIC S. BASTASA
the clown

the black eye of society underneath the heavy paints of faces
the teary eye
and the bruises
the gritting teeth
inside a cup
of ice cream

RIC S. BASTASA
ESCAPE ROUTES

I've seen yours
you open a door on a page of a book and you are gone

been there and i am back

Yours too
there is a door on the cork of a bottle of wine you open it and there you are pretending to be lost in your own hideaway

yours is dangerous
into that door into that labyrinth where explosives are adornments of your chosen confidences and yours too

a crystal and there too is the tiny door of your chosen freedom if you come back everyone becomes strangers in a new world
of hallucinations

been to dangers to and bubbles and a little of that crystal world
and i am back

all escapes are always useless at the end we are caught and those that catch us always returns us to ourselves at long last we have no choice but to be responsible i am telling you, i am back and this is what i mean i am back to the open wandering again looking to the stars for directions and still tripping from one stone to another as if everything is real there is only one exit and none of them are those escape routes which i have mentioned.

RIC S. BASTASA
listening to a child singing another innocence

preaches
In a sweet song
From tight lips
A song of love
She barely knows
perhaps
Only has the feel of A world new to her eyes

Such a song
such fantasy
Good for children Shall cure a little of this Big wound that keeps rotting
In poisonous odors
Such pains
that keep pinning Hearts that curse almost Learning all blasting blasphemy

Such song for us
all living
Every breakfast time
We dread to remember
we
Who are dumped in a damp Loveless locomotion

I hear her sing
to a world
That I already misunderstood
My tired eyes are wanting of escape-dreams
My dirty feet shiver
for these rough Foundations

Ah, sweet song yet
only a child-song Who can stop such a short swing to eternity?
And forget
everything
everything
everything
... We can do noting for her and for her song we can do nothing too so we just listen
and go back to our work
work
work
and
work again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your escapades and your having to wear red

So you have gone to Burma Blending with the natives in the jungle there You trembled in East Timor Afraid that you cannot return home You were like a louse Hiding in the eye of the storm In the middle of their war In your escapades

Shocks!

And all the rest were also shocked Mr. Takahashi
Has become your new name While you bade goodbye
To the French journalist
At the airport
If the plane somehow crashes Your name on the list is Takahashi

“it is no longer funny” you said

Now you are wearing red Your way of supporting The oppressed monks of Burma Who were tied on the posts In Rangoon
And gunned by the soldiers there Balding themselves
Pretending to be monks

And some were cremated Alive

And you quipped “Hello, what I am doing Is both a political and Fashion statement”
A joke and Something serious
Like you and i Just like chatting
Could be true
Could be false
I have no trust
What if the person beside me Is only faking Cheating me
What if what he said
Were all lies
We are just playing games Hide and seek Catching flies because Everything is merely
To cover
Boredom

Sandwich fillings
Closing and opening
This lust
Close open
Close open
A baby’s game
Could be also because of missing the Feeling of having to love again Returning to the past
The shells long ago broken Near the white thighs of the Sea..

“Crazy” “Fool”

That is actually what life is all about True and false Playful
Fate

Sometimes we travel to far places East Timor, Burma, china, united states of America even the sierra madre, the malindang mountains

Got urinated by a tarsier Got pecked by a monkey-eating eagle The white cobra spat on me>

I have always flown away On a plane
Always riding on a bus On train, fast crafts, chopper and even On a submarine then take the pick-up On a pedicab on a motorcycle Went down got on my worn-out sneakers Walk again for hours and hours Always crossing rivers
Eight or the ninth crossing the same river Winding on the same mountain and the same forest and valleys Then again crossing the same river Sometimes too shallow on my heel then deeper up to my neck and chin and sometimes I have to swim On the murky river and trip on big boulders Walk, swim, and walk, Trek again on the footpaths under the cogon grasses Climb the cliffs
Take narrowing footpaths Sharp stones
And then comes the muddy paths Places which had much rain And get flooded
Because of the rain
But there is another rain
I tell you
The rain of bullets
The rain of screams
For those who died here Rain of sighs
Rain of cries of brains I have seen much of this sort Of rain
Shouting, crying, running, hiding, Catch, hold, squat, dropp to the ground, Jump, fall, run, catch, run, Tie, beat, tie, and beat, Slap, questions
There are no answers
Threat, ask, threat, Convince,
Hit, box,
Wounds, bruises,
Inflamed, blood,
The wide expanse and the deepening depths
Of silence
Diffusing
All walked away
They left, they journeyed
And what was left on the river Was the sound of a crying child Looking for mother and father And his three siblings

The wind caressed the leaves of the ipil-ipil Stained by blood Sticking
And diffusing on the roots
The Nipa huts
Are dead
Muted by all the sounds of pain A while ago its doors Were kicked and forced open
And there were holes on its windows Where the bullets went through With sparks

I have seen many of those who cried in my journeys
The cry of the widow sounding like cows bridled Cries of children sounding like goats caught by their own rope
The cry of the beautiful maiden Tears falling on her cheeks absorbed by her long and thick black hair Sometimes with the many cries I heard and saw The constancy and the frequency Seemingly endless

And other ambiances or funeral senses>

Sometimes sometimes I begin to hear nothing Sometimes I do not see anymore Even if I have to face them I seem to look much farther And see nothing at all near me My thoughts have gone to a very far journey Away from them
Just like you
My thoughts will be traveling far, far away Away from all these that face me

< I HAVE BECOME NUMB TO ALL THESE MELODRAMA OF STRATEGIES AND RETALIATION THIS ENDLESS WAR OF IDEOLOGIES THESE MEANINGLESS STRUGGLES ALL THESE CRAP>

I am now in the faraway jungles of Burma In East Timor, in the United States of America
I always have this dream I have always traveled in this dream

I have to journey towards myself I have to get inside my own brain
And I ask

For everything, for the places I have gone, Have I gone to myself?
Have I ever gone to myself?
Where is this place?
Where is this going to be?
What ride will I take?
Going towards myself?

Hey pedicab driver,
Pedal me, take me
Towards myself
Please take me there
And dropp me by.

AND so in wearing red
And for those, those which you want to do and say
And the other thousand things you want done Surely, There are, surely, still many of them That my fingers cannot count and the other toes included

I will see you and your dreams And your hopes
A face complete with a nose, a mouth, Eyelids and ears
Cheeks and lashes &
Hair

I HAVE UNDERSTOOD NOTHING I AM SEEING FARAWAY THINGS YET I HAVE NOT SEEN ANYTHING I HAVE TRAVELED FAR
YET I HAVE NOT ARRIVED ANYWHERE

These are what I have cried for The cries
I have heard
More horrible than the cries I heard on that river
On that river
Where my friends were gunned And killed
Worst

WORST THAN THE SOUND OF THE SHOVELS THAT DUG THE SHALLOW GRAVES For ALL OF THEM
THE SOUND MUCH LOUDER _THAN THE BULLETSTM THAT RIPPED THEIR HEARTS
THAT TORE THEIR CHEEKS THAT PENETRATED THEIR SKINS AND FLESH

Had the chance to bite Because mother and father Had kept watch Throughout the night>

This is my cry
Loud cry
Loud crying
Tears flooding from my eyes Like the flood from the mountains Where the tornado fell
But in that thunderous Loud sound
Nonetheless

It is only I
Who heard it

This is
This is
This the cry
Of myself
I am
I am the only
It is only me
Mine alone
I am the only one hearing it.

RIC S. BASTASA
the sounds of my day

it is four o' clock in the morning this computers hums the loudest the dogs howl on the road seeing strangers pass that early i can hear the winds of dawn break the engine of the bus on the highway going to faraway Zambezi the first trip i suppose the clock is ticking

the door is clicking

some footsteps
on the road going away from me they are all sounds of departure

RIC S. BASTASA
mozart overture

this is quite different from a trance
the music that curled in my sleep on that soft blue sofa foam, cotton, kapok softness on my head some notes of a lullaby
some notes getting into my ears and my nostrils a deep sleep
inhaling

this overture is quite different it is the rising from this deep sleep of kapok,
foamy softness

i rise and stretch my hands to the ceiling

i wake up and i hear
the notes come again like dripping morning rain from the nipa roof
falling on
some white pebbles
on my pavement

like my tears

RIC S. BASTASA
Death

i

The wake up call in the morning Telling you
It is time to go

ii

The taxi driver taking you to the airport Early morning
Without any conversation To keep the trip alive

iii

The pilot that you cannot see In the cockpit Taking you to your destination

iv

Then another story shall be told That is the surprise
And you cannot help it
So just take your seat Relax and sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
11thousandth...

i vow my head
to myself and put laurels to my head and clap my hands to honor me...

no one offers and no one dares.

one must understand perfectly the lonely journey the little stop on the 11thousandth

poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
what appears is what it is
that is how simple it is
and how beautiful can it be a petal of a flower is nothing but a petal of a flower falling to the ground on a windless day

caused by no other than this pull of gravity

we watch a world unfolding we only use words because there is a need to write what beautiful thing we have seen

but there is more to the simplicity of all these things those that we have seen and felt and
cannot completely tell you even in the most simple words of our poetry

the experience of beauty is so personal like how i experience the poetry of the heart it is like this, no, it is like this... words fail now

(........)

RIC S. BASTASA
12 Midnight

Now the master sleeps Leaving you some of his poems Now it is midnight
Now the master has to sleep Take care yourselves Take care of his poems
They are now yours,
All his disciples
The master sleeps.

Now, see, how the master breathes Listen to the rhythm of his sighs Some poems are coming out from His nostrils some poems are coming out From his mouth and ears

The master poet is asleep Even in dreams he weaves some images Dreamy, surreal, ephemeral, his sleep Has rhyme & rhythm, he is a soul breathing

RIC S. BASTASA
i am Aquarius

the dawning
of a new world

i am
water ever flowing

i believe in a world

without end

amen

RIC S. BASTASA
12: 11 Noon (Office Break)

three cases disposed and a chat of a friend from Bohol is finished it has been a very busy morning more files are coming

i composed this poem and posted it just to mark a moment

everything is welcome here the poetic, the non-poetic and the a-poetic publication is free and life after this goes on as usual as yesterday you are afraid that soon a writer's block sets in because you expect more from you we are but witnesses and we write what we have seen and felt in fact, as you can see, when we begin to talk to ourselves when everyone left at this hour you will realize there is even no audience to speak of and that comforts us once again that when no one is reading or watching the dance as though it is your last sing as though no one likes to listen

live life
the way life wants itself to be lived in such a short moment let there be no rules, let every line be free let there be only you in this office break, and say to yourself now i am king and now this is my universe.

RIC S. BASTASA
the last drop,
the tongue crawls and licks the reddish mound living its life to the last drop, deliciously
taking in what this beating life has to offer, this last drop still the best,
in sleep still dream
the last drop, the last of the moaning drop,
an ode to
the delicious offering
of the pink mound,
glistening dew
this rose of a woman.

RIC S. BASTASA
at this hour the sound of the electric fan is at its loudest everything has surrendered to the much needed silence it is the reign of the dark and there is no wind and the dog is fast asleep i am the new spectator and i speak inside myself like a stranger asking so many questions what is this place? why is it going deeper?
where have all the people gone?
why are the trees shedding off all its leaves? it boils down to who i am and what i am doing at this very late hour i watch a scene
i pay attention to the flashes of shapes and colors there is no scent
there is no flavor
the sound of the fan screams i am so patient and i still listen to keep myself preoccupied i keep on talking but i know for sure that at this hour no one listens

RIC S. BASTASA
The theory and remedy

Time in a billion years after Shall cease
And everything grinds to a halt,

Do you not feel the distant stars Moving faster away from you?

Things move away rapidly Stars explode
On the fringes of this universe Shooting through space

Jump then to another
Universe
Before ours gets used up

The luxury of worrying About our age

Shall now dissipate
On a rundown universe

At any rate why Worry? I do not intend to go 60
33 was just perfect.

RIC S. BASTASA
the fisherman and his wife

she waits on the shore while he goes to the sea

the full moon comes the seagulls fly on the horizon

he arrives and hands her a basket of fish
with a follow-up kiss
then he whistles
as he ties his boat
to the coconut tree

then they both go home
hand in hand together

RIC S. BASTASA
simplicity

before a table
a cup of rice and few pieces of fish

you put your knee
near your mouth
as you mold
sticky white rice
with your bare hands

you open your mouth
and swallow what you have in order
to live.

(shall i say poverty?)

RIC S. BASTASA
when a star falls

when you said that a star falls in your home i beg to be clarified that you are just in any manner speaking poetically

otherwise
in plain, simple understandable language what you are speaking will mean a catastrophe that will not just be in any way particular but in the gross sense a universal explosion not just of your house or home but of this rotten world where you and i both live.

RIC S. BASTASA
after making love

After making love
We split
Our bodies
Into Perfect halves
We hold hands
Kiss
Then close
Our eyes

We dream
Something Very peaceful
Everything
Is so calm
So perfectly Quiet.

We hear
The footprints
Of ants
Journeying
On the ceiling,

Dreamy
Red ants
On chocolate & bread Crumb.

RIC S. BASTASA
dancing in the rain

Let the children dance
In the rain
They are free!
Let them run on the Green grass in the rain
They are free!
Let us hear their sounds Of excitement
They are free!
Let us see them drink Raindrops
They are free!
Their shoulders caressed By rain dropping from Roof tops to their toes Let us see them Play in the rain and in the Mud
Let them get dirty
Let them be washed by the rain again
They are free!

Don’t you see we are all These children dancing
In the rain?

We are free!

RIC S. BASTASA
izza on a merry-go-round izza is my my niece she rides on a merry-go-round at the carnival

today

before riding it
however
she raises her eyebrow puzzled
whether to ride or not to ride
thinking that if all these horses
run in circles
it will not be arriving at any place pointless
futile

on the other hand
all the other cousins
her age
are riding
and she too must ride it for fifteen minutes

i see she is enjoying every minute of the ride she finally decides to mount herself
like the rest
waiving her hand
to her mother taking pictures on her first ride on the merry go round when it ends
she dismounts
at last

i ask her how does it feel
to ride in circles

she says
'it is so wonderful'

she claps her hands and i tell her
'good! '

in silence
i could have told her this,
izza
that is what life is all about a merry go round
where we are all children
enjoying our ride
in circles
arriving at nowhere arriving at no ends
and
your mother is just like God
taking the pictures of us waiving
our hands with joy
the joy of life
that joy
on that merry go round too short
for fifteen minutes......

RIC S. BASTASA
bring back the good old times cousin, let us bring back the good old times climbing trees gathering mangoes on the green hills bathing nude on light brown rivers basking in the sun on that big rock fishing on ponds for mud fish with earthworms as baits jumping from tree trunks to rivers below

riding on carabaos
barefoot on mud holes swinging on half-fallen coconut trees chasing dragonflies making ripples on the blue seas sailing on wooden boats paddling on clear days suns shining full and moons glowing cool

cousin, let us bring back the old glorious times we go back to where we once were children, where our innocence like incense in the Taoist temples glows and spreads
a certain pure perfume in nature back united
to us

we are awed
we now wander....

RIC S. BASTASA
Always dissatisfied with what one has,
The power of nothingness Engulfs
Whatever you also engulf Or take as a possession,

What comes into you Goes out of you and everything Goes in there only to Go out later,

There is nothing you can hold,
It is simply meant that way,
The flow
Life, birth, life, death, rebirth,
And then back to Nothingness

Unless you believe
In something Else
To cling to Like a moss to an old stone Albeit,

The stone rolls just the same
In an ancient flowing river

Then while here
We do not really know What happens

There are many stories
That the bird outside us Cannot yet sing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Perhaps to Basho the twins are boring

He himself does not want To be imitated

Too boring like
A melon cut into half Mirroring each other

Aren’t these twins Boring?

Or Basho was just envious He may be a poet of his age

But his poems never bore Him a son

Or a mirror of his own face.

RIC S. BASTASA
ONE That tells me
the true color of my soul intimacies like vine
to a tree
faithfulness like
the sun to the mountain shining on early mornings without fail
one that i am at home with
with others are taken by the storms of my confusions
and needs
one who takes me for
what i am
identifies with me
during my crucifixions
one who stands by me
when i sink as a ship
abandoned by
all the rats
and cockroaches
water to my pail
air to my lungs
sugar to my coffee
lemon to my honey.

RIC S. BASTASA
a possible explanation for the cause of chest pain

The pain is on the left side of my chest
And runs to the other half of my arm Sometimes it settles in my hand

I think I know why
On the left side is the woman who lives
With me
On the other half of my arm
Is another one

She runs to my hand so I may hold her
For all the days of my life
But I can’t I just can’t,
It is not simply possible

But above all these
The pain lingers at the center
Of my heart
Because I have not offered
My heart
Like a ripe mango, my heart,
To the real one
Who deserves it because She came first
Before I have known
The meaning of lust Forever she will last
And the pain is never gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
When you are rejected

When finally you are rejected Just go, don’t feel busted Find another place
Be with someone else
Forget the scar Whatever you are

Go to a place Where you are an ace
Where you smell the air Of love everywhere

RIC S. BASTASA
i had no money then so i dated her along Gomez street walking under the trees when the moon was full

we were holding hands and i thought she was ready for the kiss

a hopeless romantic and too afraid
i recited my love poem instead

the following morning
in one of those university halls she introduced me to her new boyfriend

ah, i knew then how love could die.

RIC S. BASTASA
to reminisce

to reminisce is not to surrender to the past and be defeated

it is to indulge in what you had been with the people you loved and who loved you truly in the past they are the everlasting flowers from Baguio

that you put in your altar to make your prayers warmer so that the morning in its coldness may also be delighted

RIC S. BASTASA
when you read a poem do not expect too much

when you read a poem do not expect too much from every word

my words too falter and fall short of strength like the runner who always wins his sprint and now in his worst state mourns for his knee which is broken

my images too wilt like some red roses that a lover offered once to his true love but now deserted and looks at them in the state of dryness when you read this poem do not therefore expect too much this is just a sigh looking for an opening in the crevices of an understanding heart this poem is just a mirror and you will be the face who must give your smile

the light from the window shall provide the glimmer

RIC S. BASTASA
i will try to write a poem like Li Po i will write the poem like Li Po a poem that does not need an axe to break a coconut to eat the meat it will just need your soft hands to cut half the water apple * and so easily you will hand it to your mouth to quench your thirst & savor its watery flavor the seeds are not even necessary to be kept you simply throw them away for the next season of summer.

RIC S. BASTASA
i know you live a very simple life i know my friend that you live a very simple life out there waking up in the morning working in the office buying food in the market watch tv
sleep early at night wake up early again
listen to the morning news a visit in the chapel work in the office again a chat with friends a little drink of cali with them sometimes
and no broken heart to nourish like a wound that does not heal.

RIC S. BASTASA
diminishing

you do not have to obey the law of diminishing returns on your material resources that limit themselves to their utility & unbreakability you are not the harsh object of the law you are human and miracles are made & meant

for you

and so today do not think of your hurt feet & scarred hands dream of the gossamer wings that will make you fly your eyes in truth do not only see they also feel like your heart that does not only beat for this kind of life all that is found in you is not only darkness and dampness if you only open your heart hard enough

you have always been designed & meant for what is beyond the ordinary grasps of humanity these miracles of dreams & hopes & anticipations they do not diminish, they add & grow and they even multiply as many as you wish

RIC S. BASTASA
in friendship
distances
get shortened
and even cut
like stalks of roses
scorn of thorns
only the red petals and their sweet scents stay close in
my heart
still beating
for your presence

RIC S. BASTASA
to a friend this moment you ask me if i am nowhere to be found
why am i nowhere
to be seen,
whether you lose me whether i am lost
no, my friend,
i am always in this nook mysterious as i want it silently watching...... i like staying in this corner where my silence is comfortable like some mildew
allow me to grow.

RIC S. BASTASA
thank you
sweet words
sweeter than chocolates not even like ice cream cool to the tongue sweetest to the heart that the mind will always remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
13th Of February

he was born
on that day. her mother's heart was not full.
it was torn apart.
and then he was crying
just like any boy
being born without a father
beside him.

he grew up to be the most normal man that you see
except the things he kept inside him.
hate. anger.

one day he had to choose. to kill those who are responsible for his extreme silence or to kill the silence within him

forever.

he had chosen.
and this is all about him.
this poem,

RIC S. BASTASA
for i am empty
my song is as blank as the
desert sand

there are no lyrics yet except some memories of us

there is no tune except the passing of the wind

come beside me and i will sing it with you

our distance
makes it a song of despair

your promise
puts the notes in anticipation like birds on the telephone wire

you give me rain
on a song drying up
under the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
now i am that chicken that lays all those fourteen thousand eggs, this small chicken

has tiny feathers
it cannot fly away but it cannot lay its butt upon all these fourteen thousand eggs

it is sad,
these fourteen thousand eggs shall not hatch

how i wish i can hear the songs of fourteen thousand chicks what can their tiny voices be to God? to those higher skies?

what cant they be?
shall they be angelic like those seraphims and cherubmims?
or shall they be the sounds of wailing of grieving widows of dissatisfied workers of disappointed humanity of men and women loveless upon the tracks of life of children abandoned of marriages in shackles and shattering soon i shall retrace what i have said

open the pages of this journal and find out again
what life is,
if i have lived in vain.
jumping to the other side of the fence

i always love the thought of jumping to the other side of the fence where the grass is greener and the air is fresher

my heart beats for all the excitement when i will be there on the other side with you i ask if you will walk beside me when i am there finally but you did not say a word i know i am not welcome but i still dream of going there for other possibilities of loving and be loved without any condition at all, not necessarily you, i am a fast learner, you know.

RIC S. BASTASA
In love
I lose my reason
I become An illusion
I can’t figure Out what to do
Where to go
I will let Someone
Do the explaining
For me

RIC S. BASTASA
A METAPHOR OF STRENGTH

what i have is strong but it lifts no one

some will say i have a mirror

for it reflects light in the dark under my bed but i doubt it when i throw it on the floor it is never broken

it is still strong and whole

what i have is strong
i know this from the start

RIC S. BASTASA
What you leave
Is an impression
I look at the moon
I look at the river
I look at the sky
Your face is there
My love is forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone in my room
Her face blooms
I see her body
Growing
I feel it smooth
In the fingers
Of my Imagination

RIC S. BASTASA
Surprising
The grasses
Are flowering
So seldom
Do we Notice

People Pass and Step upon Them
And they Just wither

RIC S. BASTASA
All year Round
I flow like
A shallow River
This time
It will
Be the last
Of this Round
I will
Be deep
So there
Will be No rapids
Just depths
And silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
It is like
I dive in
The depth
Of the sea
I stop breathing
And all
Of them
Are waiting
Time
And tide
Go on
And on

RIC S. BASTASA
Dusk finally falls
Off
I shall look
Up the sky
To see
The full moon
All shining

RIC S. BASTASA
In this lonely island
I will go
Where the hermit
Crabs
Dry their borrowed shells
As they bathe Themselves
Under
The sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Goodbye,
Like all things
those that are sensational

Humans

I go I pass
Like the dew

On the leaf
That you
View

As pearls
Or Tears and

Then
Gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
14th February 2011

do not tempt me with
forever,
just hand me
the
here and now

it is enough for
me.
there is no future in
love.

RIC S. BASTASA
THERE is still light
piercing the
blinds,

it settles on the soft spot
of the pillow

it hits the iris
of my eye

it says there is a reason for mornings

for mourning
for sorrow
for wings and buds
for rivers that keep on flowing for the rain that finally stops.

RIC S. BASTASA
I am sick
And tired
I let go
My dreams
Resting
On the Cliff
so they may jump and kill
themselves

RIC S. BASTASA
If you speak
To me
Your parting
Words
Let it be Tasteless
Like
The water
From the Mountain
Spring.

RIC S. BASTASA
The river runs
Cool on my feet Underneath
I feel
The discomfort
Of pebbles

RIC S. BASTASA
Over the earth
And in the skies
There are Trapped dusts
And mists
I see clouds
And rainbows
Arching
After the Rain at the Foot
Of the hill.

RIC S. BASTASA
154

I will miss you my Friend

On the other hand
I will loathe you
In due time

i like to Leave you again

It is the end
Of my rainy days

RIC S. BASTASA
The final view
I will not see
It is the end
Of this gossamer
dream

RIC S. BASTASA
The rain dripping from this Old nipa roof Wakes me up from This drunkenness.

RIC S. BASTASA
My companion to this Last journey

A cicada shell

RIC S. BASTASA
On a summer’s
day Bright is the sun
To make this
last journey

RIC S. BASTASA
On the daffodils
The morning dews
Dry out slowly

Now, blow if you will Humid wind
The daffodils are gone

RIC S. BASTASA
my mind drifts
in the space of
thoughts
passing by
some trees
i gather thoughts
bunches
of gloss and
refinement,
every morning
i take the pleasure
of putting them
here, lest they
go away, like
fading light
like a voice
suppressed
in silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
I leap from this shallow
River
To the deep
To find out where I am really going

RIC S. BASTASA
On the hour of my death
The rice fields are empty The grasses wilt in summer

RIC S. BASTASA
Riding on the moon
I am bound to the stars Without any backpack

RIC S. BASTASA
Avoiding me
You get wet
In the rain
Under the tree
At the foot
Of the hill

How I wish
I were the Rain
The tree
And the foot
Of the hill

RIC S. BASTASA
16373

THE LOTUS IN US

we're different
if you notice it

our roots are not in the soil but on the water

we float above the mud

we flower
we drift with the air

we live in peace
that is what they think

RIC S. BASTASA
the night
comes handing
darkness
in Mt. Apo
where the monkey-eating eagle
cries out calling for the rain to come

RIC S. BASTASA
The summer breeze
Rises on the shore
Of Olingan
And those white
And red china roses
That you see
Are they really flowers Or not?
Or only your Usual dreams
That fade out
On the beach
When you wake
Up?

RIC S. BASTASA
The red and orange hues Of sunset
Fade too quickly
As you see
Once all
So beautiful
Then nothing
But darkness
Even with The stars and
The moon
Just like these Memories
In my mind
Growing old
Thoughts like rain Ceaselessly
Dripping

RIC S. BASTASA
On the old trees
The dancing ladies are clinging
On its barks
They are all yellow and blooming
From My heart too
Shall spring forth
Renewed vows & commitments.

RIC S. BASTASA
You may feel
That your life
Is full of sorrow
And sometimes Unbearable
But you just Cannot fly away
When you
Feel Like flying
In any instant
Since you
Are not a bird

I may feel the Same way
Too
And want
To swim
And slip away
In any instant
To my liking
In the deepest Sea
But I am
Not a fish

so why not just stay and wait
and see? .

RIC S. BASTASA
This is me,
In a photograph,
The same number of Senses as you have,
Look at me
With your eyes,
Touch me & hear me do not use your heart yet

this is me again
she tells you
philanderer
lying bastard unfaithful
you will listen
and you too will speak about me
touch, retouch,
view, review,
impressions of me
beyond the photograph
what you believe from what I am
how you perceive
some slides
of me
presented to you

this is me
this is not me
there will be doubts

and I will die laughing in my forest dream
with your dwarfs
but soon
I will stop
What am
I and what I am Not, what is True from What is fake Finally when I find
What true Love is and What it can Really do

With my own Dwarfs now
In my own Dreams in My own time

Even without
Your wishes.

RIC S. BASTASA
i guess i am too vain (handsome and naughty
to their tastes
sweet to their tongues accommodating to their mouths
caving in for some pungent pleasures)
it is love that gets inside my house
as i open the door and let it in too kind, i let love undress my coyness
dinner is ready served right above my abdomen
down the most wanted
and demanded part,
it is me now
moaning, the sun shining inside my chest,
as soft fingers roll
like spiders,
i am patient to love
and those love-deprived all giving to their fantasies and adventures i am love conquered and yet
all over triumphant
to the sound of the thousand Arabian nights love belly dancing
love water to the oasis camel to the desert Moon above
the sleepy sands.

RIC S. BASTASA
On a summer break
Do not read your law books It is a chance for you
To the see the moon
In Boracay beach

RIC S. BASTASA
to see loneliness
a mango tree
just one leaf

RIC S. BASTASA
The sounds of jeepneys are gone
The champaca trees bloom This evening with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bringing home
overripe Durian
I arrive home
full of regrets

RIC S. BASTASA
Now I like to return
To my home
I left years ago
To see the mango trees Flowering again

RIC S. BASTASA
My restless friend
If only you were here
Seeing the limpid river Sleeping
On top
Of Malindang Mountain

RIC S. BASTASA
It is a lovely thing to see
In this room
My sun spreading its light
In your dark galaxy

RIC S. BASTASA
177 hopelessness - a coiled Water hose has forgotten

That it should whoosh

RIC S. BASTASA
Look at your pride Flaming with bitterness
On the brink of this cliff

RIC S. BASTASA
I will do only what is necessary i can walk alone
without need of you,

i have a room that i am renting i lock my door

The night will be long and tense and awkward but i have wisely chosen it and i will be responsible for my silence.

i bleed alright, but it is my own blood.
please, it is none of your business.

i am only doing what fits, what ought to be Let me pass. Let me sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unfulfilled dreams
Become freckled rice
To produce
The foul wine

RIC S. BASTASA
IT is election time
and the powers that be paves the way to Tabon gravel is hauled and poured fitting the wider version of the road everything is slippery during the rain the farmer slides and his basket of fruits roll on the hill after election time the road shall be what it used to be no one cares.

RIC S. BASTASA
Quiet around the aquamarine park In Clarin
I see dolphins playing
Up to the skies
The nuclear jets are roaring Towards Gaza
Onward moving

RIC S. BASTASA
181

Looking in the night skies Alone in the park
I see this monstrous space Pass by.

RIC S. BASTASA
On the rainy season
I see some tadpoles
On the pond
Near the house
When mother-in-law arrives
I hear all of them croaking

RIC S. BASTASA
I and the internet

Sensitive nerves Concentrate in My finger tips

Making sweet sounds
in silence

RIC S. BASTASA
A sad song I whistle in the air
Like a river floating
And then the strong wind comes My hat flies away

RIC S. BASTASA
A flashlight
I point to the night
Above me
To measure the depth
the distance
Of this darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
Another strong typhoon on the brink It is asking
Which boat is next to sink?

RIC S. BASTASA
I say two words
She replies with ten Summer is hot
And bickering
Like a flame

RIC S. BASTASA
A dead dog long buried
And yet-
Some yelps are still heard
Near the doormat
Even without a bee
Stinging
or anybody coming
back home

RIC S. BASTASA
when i get to be an old man i shall not speak of any regret about the past that i buried in the silent city of my ancestors i carry with me a poem in my heart as i look forward to the coming of the black horse that will carry me to the shore and i shall wait for the boatman to carry me to another island my heart is expectant like a child waiting for mother from the market like a man in love waiting for his woman under the trees beside a silvery river under the moon kissing and knowing beforehand destined eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
The lightning flashes
The thunder roars
I hear old family voices
I see sudden memories

RIC S. BASTASA
The summer is hot
He crosses the river through Teasing the bridge
With his water buffalo

RIC S. BASTASA
The sky darkens
As clouds slowly
Make the rain
While I wait for you
On a cold wind

RIC S. BASTASA
A poor village
Covered with dust
Then the sound
Of first rain Comes from The mountain

RIC S. BASTASA
a child takes a single bite of Jolibee chicken

she offers what remains To the dog beside her

RIC S. BASTASA
To death]
On top of my roof
I can not sleep
In the middle of this Cold night

RIC S. BASTASA
I want to sleep now]

Please switch off
The computer

And stop thinking

About death & poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
1967, March

i looked to the left side to see those who were watching us i was sitting on your lap as you focus on the one taking the picture it was 1967 when i was barely 5 i did not know then what was the significance of the taking
i was crying for attention and no one cared childish they all complained why i was there disturbing the mood of that occasion when school ends when parting could have been cheerful

RIC S. BASTASA
The rice planters
Are all muddy Except their dreams of rain and songs of summer loves

RIC S. BASTASA
From the mountain
I will throw this stone
To the nearby river Try to see if the River gets murky

RIC S. BASTASA
I can kill
A fly
On the dining table
With all of you
Watching

RIC S. BASTASA
squeezing
what dropp is left from the mind
it is not blood nothing like
pus, it is air,
this emptiness
that keeps giving off what i have not seen before,
it is crying to be let out, so i may give room for the unknown,
the mysterious
and glorious,
the x and y,
until there is meaning, a solution, a redemption.

RIC S. BASTASA
2: 20 P.M. Roxas

you are first if you keep on searching, you will know more than what is necessary for tomorrow you are the first to know and will tell those who know to obey the dictates of silence for a while there is no more argument possible in this but only that silence that rifts what flesh is found in the bone do not worry that much, there is no need after all because i will be next and i am not telling you you will not be glad, but you will not be alone anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
2: 21 A.M.

at 2: 21 a.m.
the right hand corner of my computer shows that you are offline or at least you pretended to be offline i know you like me you sometimes want to choose being invisible then another poem speaks another poem is born and it bites it kisses you in such a distant silence that always asks why?
goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are things that do not jibe round peg to a square hole for instance birds that dive and fly in the belly of the sea or fish that swim in the molten lava of the earth us, for instance, is another thing we have ceased to be human tired of the power of words in our lips we should have kissed as often as we signify a love that does not change but, we are some of these things that do not jibe at last our dances have become awkward people are watching and they just couldn't say it honestly that we have to stop us, scarecrows not scared but powerless over the vultures that feed on our flesh over those birds that steal the grains of our youth over time that is too cruel us, feeding upon us, about to puke.

RIC S. BASTASA
2: 26......

Upon an aching heart, flinging arms, pause of fingers, someone says
it's time to sigh off.

bye baby,
take care yourself.

be good, avoid evil,
live and let live.

grab the best and disregard the rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
waking up from a dream this one says, i am making love with my neighbor's wife i rise from bed and drink a glass of cold water and then i sigh

it is not true after all and i have not sinned indeed why such a subconscious train of thought inside the tunnel of secret desire and where shall this map lead me?

i shiver to this, i sense a snail breaking its own shell i hear the cracking sound of popcorn and smell the butter from the kitchen window my wife wakes up and follows me in the wind screen of dawn. It is cold she says and she lands on my lap and kisses me.

there is nothing wrong i tell her.
there is really nothing wrong, i assure myself as i type the last word for this poem.

love is better in the silent mode.

RIC S. BASTASA
2: 53 A.M.

loudest is the sound of the cock crowing
though far from this house of hay

it cannot hear us somehow on another cock crowing on your hands
of cotton

RIC S. BASTASA
2: 55 A.M.

at this hour
the exhaust fan of the computer sounds loudest

second to that is the murmur of each key as i press upon a letter

to make this
waking poem make its faintest sound

it is like
the sigh of the pin dropping
on the carpeted
floor
of an empty room with doors and windows
closed.

RIC S. BASTASA
2: 58 A.M.

he has seen
blunt dreams and he wishes that one may finally opt for
a change,

he has seen insistent dreamers
praying
for the realization of their own deaths

slow deaths, painful ones that they can boast before their suffering gods

somehow he thinks that this masochism must be stopped
but no one listens
the blunt dreamers
thrive

multiplied in millions almost stopping
the earth's capacity for more revolutions

he hopes somehow that beyond this global blunting and lengthening of sorrows thickening of the veins of wrong blood flowing all creatures
the earth included is sick only for a certain time trembling in heat and panicky about syndromes

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive feverish

and then it begins to auto-heal itself
back to its fighting form back to serving those who doubt themselves and those who live despite the aftermath of that self-destruction

RIC S. BASTASA
2:15 P.M. Roxas

we smile because they tell us to smile we project what this world must be or ought to be, but after that last click we go back to the beginning when we were going somewhere without a definite direction when it was raining so hard and we found no shelter when every part of us, present and future is wet with anxiety, and there is no sign that the rain will stop, that the door will open showing us the way to the fire

no two persons with separate arms and legs will have to stay in one room forever the feet walk away

the eyes fly
thoughts roam the world and will be glad to know each cloud of doubt each sting an education each wound a seed of growth we shall soon know this and we give way to our soul traveling, traveling, until you become so strange as a creature i have not ever met before

a myth, a story, and then you smile realizing the truth of being blown by the wind dusts, yes dusts,

that is what we are
and will always be, into the nothingness of what we have not ever thought before a pen that you just keep but you have no time using, an outmoded cell phone that you are not willing to give up, a creaky bed, a rusty pin, a handkerchief with an embroidered name of your someone special a old diary, a tiny wild flower between the pages of your favorite book, locks of hair, what do i really need these things for?

ah, memories, rotten memories, so sweet still.

RIC S. BASTASA
The rain of March suddenly falls It catches me naked In Diwan river

RIC S. BASTASA
201

On a very peaceful night Like this My neighbor sings again
Her videoke
Is still out of tune

RIC S. BASTASA
On a summer's day
I look at my face
Into the mirror
Finding Grandpa’s
Stricter face

RIC S. BASTASA
From a leafless siniguelas tree
The black crow flies away Then the swaying ends
As the rain begins to fall

RIC S. BASTASA
So he refuses to talk
He twirls a flower Instead between His fingers

Then the other said
I must speak
For words to be Passed on

Then the heavens Speak by Changing the seasons
A hundred more
Are born

He fears
That when the heavens Speak some more
There will be
No more justice
To the words
Of Men

RIC S. BASTASA
your poem is young dress it up with an armor

and a helmet
let it go to the battlefield and fight its own wars do not give it tranquility that is not its real color

RIC S. BASTASA
Lose your mind
Do not tie your mind
Lose it
Set it free
Do not strain it Let it go
Alone
It comes back Wherever
It wills

RIC S. BASTASA
If the poem is really yours

It will come back
Like your cat
Which has run off Somewhere sometime
It will come back
You are the master
You are his home

RIC S. BASTASA
When you write poetry
Do not be preoccupied
With writing one

The metaphors
Will be confused

And will not settle

With the words
You are choosing

RIC S. BASTASA
of course
he knew too well

He heard Of this path That we all Must tread]

But he did Not really expect that He is going To walk

On it Today.

RIC S. BASTASA
There will be rain here
We normally run for shelter Who wants to be wet in the rain And look like a helpless chick in the drain?

There will be rain
And we will be seeking shades under the trees And run towards waiting sheds where the rain Cannot harm our sensibilities,

There will be rain and more rains to come In our lives, and we always run for secure Shelters, and we always have umbrellas,
And raincoats, and closed cars, we hide to places Where The rain cannot harm us,

But today, there is rain, and I will take Another action, I will not run for shelter, Or take shades in trees, or be in waiting sheds, I will not even open my car, get into it and close it,

I am not afraid of rain now; I have no fears getting wet And look like a helpless chick, I will run in the Middle of the rain, I will play in the rain, I will Be with the rain throughout its pouring, I will be wet, and it will rain and rain, Let it rain and rain and rain
You will not see, my tears falling, tears hiding in the rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
whatever she says
be it about sadness or peace
or war and unhappiness

he did not mind
he is in the mountain
thinking
how the mosquitoes
are pestering him
and he cannot sleep

soon she will be silent and then he begins to write

his shorter poems

RIC S. BASTASA
he now prefers
the caterpillar
to bring the news of his death

RIC S. BASTASA
He knows his end is near He dreams last night that There is a big river flowing In the Sahara

RIC S. BASTASA
Hey, froggie!

Why are you
Jumping in An asphalted road?

There will be no
Sound of water

RIC S. BASTASA
it is no longer you whom I
wait
by my window

time passes....

my beard
all white reaches
the floor

RIC S. BASTASA
to while the hours away

Without you
I lie among the grasses
In the backyard Listening to The twinkling
Of stars

RIC S. BASTASA
letting go of sadness
I let go
All my sadness
to the edge of dusk Among disappearings
twilight
RIC S. BASTASA
to our youngest

in leaving this place I shall recall
You wearing your Sunday’s best With mama & papa
Still holding hands

RIC S. BASTASA
early fears

there is no moment of peace for a heart that loves the scent of the blooming
white sampaguitas
when the wind starts to blow its breath tonight

RIC S. BASTASA
I still love you

How can I not love
This world
And be sad
When I soon leave

When my heart still Beats for you

RIC S. BASTASA
21st Year

Papa lets you go at this age you are free now marry
have kids and love
the woman
that you can have
do not regret
do not blame anyone
all the opportunities have been served like your regular meals
and you were give time to savor
the salt and sugar and the whiteness of rice
like pearls
if you are confused by all means that is normal now go Papa sets you free
do not be lonely
do not be frightened by that ocean of freedom by that space of options course your own orbit spin revolve
make your own number of nights and days
embrace the darkness as well as the light
do not just be an asteroid be the comet

explode if you may to create your own
new universe......
As I cannot touch you
With my fingers, as I cannot take a longer Gaze at you without being condemned As I cannot be always with you even longer than a minute, as I cannot sit beside you without being Despised, as I cannot talk to you about How people love and love so true Without being ridiculed, As I cannot
Offer you fresh white flowers as symbols of my affection,
As I cannot send you a greeting card wishing you well,

As I cannot hold your hand even in casual friendship,
As I cannot Take you to dinner and be myself sharing What I can give you,
As I cannot
Hug you and kiss you and make love to you even in the wildest of my dreams imaginations without me dying in sin and guilt

As I cannot walk with you in a park Without being

Ostracized by this decent society

I will just think of you in milder forms in decent thoughts,
And write about you in clean and clear words,

That will just be enough.

I always look at you on this one-way mirror tinted with silver,
And so you do not notice
And so no one knows.
Because,
Strictly, I am prohibited
And that to me is loud and clear.
And by all means within my powers, I have to gently obey.
on your fifth birthday
you will begin to know what happiness is you will soon grow reaching your eleventh then sorrows begin to show

RIC S. BASTASA
221

As the coldness of the night Comes over my window
I know deep in my heart Your loneliness in the big city

RIC S. BASTASA
caregiver leaving again

The children of Punta Sing you a sad song
We hear the whirring Sounds of dragonfly wings
Then the plane flies you To Chicago
As you make Many flying kisses

RIC S. BASTASA
sweet rumors

Deserted house
With thatched roof
Along the Dicayo River
Rumors are sweet
On a swarm of bees
Who now live there

RIC S. BASTASA
the day you left me

Through my reading glasses Smears of my fingerprints I see you blur
With my falling tears

RIC S. BASTASA
AS WE LEAVE A BEAUTIFUL PLACE

I am riding in my car driving it myself but i am not alone the mountains are green this time rain has not been remiss the trees along the streets are having a show of their fruits i open the window and breathe such a very fresh air

i know this is a beautiful morning but how sad, we are leaving.

RIC S. BASTASA
in the embrace of another man

.........................she left Where the pastures are greener .........beyond my boundary lines

RIC S. BASTASA
what the white owl does besides flapping its wings

The white owl flaps its wings Deep in the night
Hovers on the trees
I think the leaves
I hear the sparrows chirping
In the morning
Some dead feathers are falling

RIC S. BASTASA
do not believe what your friend says, think

Are you my friend? .............
Messenger of good and evil?
Hmmm, ..........Let me think You are stepping on my feet.

RIC S. BASTASA
a poem for the highest leader of our land

Quiapo Underpass
Some blossoms of graffiti
We are tired of lies
The whole year round
Chasing tails
The cats and dogs.

RIC S. BASTASA
poem for the keeper of my heart

This heart
of mine

Must not be Given to Others

it will explode

RIC S. BASTASA
what is right can sometimes be wrong, like the right of a state to kill,
that to me is wrong,
like the right to have slaves that was wrong, but they once thought it was right, something that feels so right may, sometimes, be also be wrong, like feeling love, and too much love for a neighbor or yourself, it can be intoxicating at times,

and it can kill you,

because what is right exists only in our human minds, limited, too narrow, too confined in our flesh and blood, in the context of our culture, in the frames of our time, to the dictates of religion the liberality of our education, to our biases and prejudices, what we believe in, what we touch with faith in dark places what we try to light with candles, or see in microscopes or see in telescopes, or see with our eyes and hearts wide open,

may still be wrong, or still be not right,

so what is right after all?
Possibly, this can be right, But possibly this can also be wrong,
We can always pray. But the doubt Is always there. Cogito ergo sum.

Who can really be sure?

RIC S. BASTASA
teardrops from My eyes
to my cheek
slowly
to my lips
my tongue licks it my mouth
swallows

I need tears
to drink
To become The salt
Of this Earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Press Statement

46 million Filipinos Go hungry everyday 3.8 million Filipino Families experienced Having nothing
To eat in 2009
Now, the price of rice
Has increased

So?

I am just writing
Upon Ariel’s prodding.

RIC S. BASTASA
So many poems
in this world remain
unwritten,
unsaid,
undone.

So many poets cry out,
each one longing
for a masterpiece -
words strung
emotive,
expressive,
true.

Poems, poets Linger they must in the colonnades of time under trees in the sky waiting, straining
for birth.

Unfortunately
they at sunrise seek A bosom mother - from whom they must spring eternal at first light; sorry for now
but unwritten she is,
unsaid too,
unborn.

Wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flor de luna

White flower
Blooming
Only at night
When no
one is Watching

And so easily forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
maria theresa leonora

I drink water
From this well Using my Bare hands

My shirt gets Wet
Your dryness
Now
Is what I need.

RIC S. BASTASA
the reason why pain is inflicted sometimes

Feeling the need
To have pearls Around your neck
I will give you pain
To make you cry

Now you have all
The pearls gleaming
In your eyes, cheeks Then around your white slender neck

RIC S. BASTASA
Conversations of Tess and her light and my darkness

i
Come to the light
And let yourself be known Shine

ii
I live in the dark
I glow there
I am not visible
In your light

iii
Do take pride
About light
I will take Darkness

iv
I have seen your light It still looks dark to me

v
No, go out
See the light
And be uplifted

vi
Ah, I bask in the light Of my poetry
There is enough moonlight
For me

RIC S. BASTASA
An open letter to Filipino Artists by Emmanuel Lacaba

A poet must also learn how to lead an attack
- Ho Chi Minh

I
Invisible the mountain routes to strangers:
For rushing toes an inch-wide strip on boulders
And for the hand that's free a twig to grasp,
Or else we headlong fall below to rocks
And waterfalls of death so instant that Too soon they're red with skulls of carabaos.

But patient guides and teachers are the masses:
Of forty mountains and a hundred rivers;
Of plowing, planting, weeding, and the harvest;
And of a dozen dialects that dwarf This foreign tongue we write each other in Who must transcend our bourgeois origins.

South Cotabato
May 1, 1975

II

You want to know, companions of my youth
How much has changed the wild but shy young poet Forever writing last poem after last poem;
You hear he's dark as earth, barefoot,
A turban round his head, a bolo at his side,
His ballpen blown up to a long-barreled gun:
Deeper still the struggling change inside.

Like husks of coconut he tears away
The billion layers of his selfishness.
Or learns to cage his longing like the bird
Of legend, fire, and song within his chest.
Now of consequence is his anemia
From lack of sleep: no longer for Bohemia,
The lumpen culturati, but for the people, yes.

He mixes metaphors but values more
A holographic and geometric memory
For mountains: not because they are there But because the masses are there where Routes are jigsaw puzzles he must piece together.
Though he has been called a brown Rimbaud,
He is no bandit but a people's warrior.

South Cotabato and Davao del Norte November 1975

III

We are tribeless and all tribes are ours.
We are homeless and all homes are ours.
We are nameless and all names are ours.
To the fascists we are the faceless enemy
Who come like thieves in the night, angels of death:
The ever moving, shining, secret eye of the storm.

The road less traveled by we've taken-
And that has made all the difference:
The barefoot army of the wilderness
We all should be in time. Awakened, the masses are Messiah.
Here among workers and peasants our lost Generation has found its true, its only home.

Davao del Norte
January 1976

RIC S. BASTASA
Homeward again under foreign stars, history was a strange gush of wind from memory that came to echo waterfalls of those years:
home to find the place lost among galaxies of signs. The hills were gone. The river trail was forgotten... Trying to remember meadowlark and those who perished in the vanishing land (bones in the earth where our parents died poor) , the journey fell into heavy tides of flowing scorn that echoed and reechoed time there.

The sun was most unkind to the place:
history: names of men: patterns of life:
all that distant floodtide heaved and moved, breaking familiar names that immortal tongues clipped for the heart to cry, 'Home is a foreign address, every step toward it is a step toward three hundred years of exile from the truth...'

It was not homeward to the first known land, nor escape to white sea sprays blossoming on inland shore, nor love leaping the boundaries naked in the soul, but a vast heritage of war and destruction breaking too soon for the living and willing to die.

Life is a foreign language. Every man mispronounced it...

RIC S. BASTASA
I.
I teach my child
To survive.
I begin with our words,
The simple words first
And last.
They are hardest to learn.
Words like home,
Or friend, or to forgive.
These words are relations.
They are difficult to bear;
Their fruits are unseen.
Or words that promise
Or dream.
Words like honor, or certainty,
Or cheer.
Rarest of sound,
Their roots run deep;
These are words that aspire,
They cast no shade.
These are not words
To speak.
These are the words
Of which we consist,
Indefinite,
Without other ground.

II.
My child
Is without syllables
To utter him,
Captive yet to his origin
In silence.
By every word
To rule his space,
He is released;
He is shaped by his speech.
Every act, too,
Is first without words.
There's no rehearsal
To adjust your deed
From direction of its words.
The words are given,

But there's no script.
Their play is hidden,
We are their stage.
These are the words
That offer to our care Both sky and earth,
These same words
That may elude our acts.
If we speak them
But cannot meet their sound, They strand us still In our void,
Blank like the child
With the uphill silence
Of his words' climb.
And so,
I teach my child
To survive.
I begin with our words,
The simple words first
And last.

RIC S. BASTASA
in reply to jean's theory of asexuality

Once you ask me
Why I live among
The distant hills
I just smile
I do not make replies
I do not really care
I stare in your eyes
Like you are a river
And I have no fear
And my thoughts Flow like leaves
Falling from tall, old, Trees
Blown into the unknown
I realize and
You too must
I have a world of my own Apart from yours
And the rest
Of Everyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
in a crowd of people, in a sea of people you can just be a wooden sail, and sail like there are no people in there, in the sea of people, you can just be yourself, like they do not exist, you can even just be any kind of wave in there, a small gentle wave with the usual sea cap, a white foamy sea cap, indistinguishable like the rest of the people in the sea of people, and in this sea where you are just one of them, there is really no problem, you are just like them, behaving just like anyone of them, and you can always be with them, lonely, lonely like them, always being like them, in a crowd, in this uniformity, in this anonymity, but once it may occur to you, that there is something in yourself that simply shouts, I can be out from here, out of here, from this cacophony, from this loneliness,

I cannot wait anymore, in the sea of people, I can be out, An outcast, and it does not matter, deep within I know I can feel it now, my mother was a seagull, and I have always known how to fly.

The time is now to spread the wings that I have been hiding.

RIC S. BASTASA
a reunion

Often a man's life is such that he seldom sees his friends, like the night and day
never sharing the same hours In the skies
Seldom does he share
His evenings with friends
Or his mornings
His lamp light unshared
His mornings unspent
How long will this Distance last?

Hairs have turned White and lesser
As we inquire about
Friends and other
Acquaintances only
To find out that half of Them have turned
To ghosts,

Shocks and torments
Of this heart, cries
But I will try again
To enter your home
Twenty five years
And now you have
Two sons and three Daughters to greet
Me by the door
I thought you never Married and they all Kiss my hands and
Before I can ask the Questions you drive
Them off to the grounds
To play away from us
As we talk about Lasting friendships
And how we have Almost forgotten them

Tomorrow I will be drunk
Again back to my own Affairs in the big city
We will be separated
Again by these peaks
Of mountains and we Shall again lose each Other’s friendly views.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight his wife shall watch the full moon Alone over the hills in Marupay He will think sadly though of her Too young to understand this sudden separation

Remembering once again their love in Cagayan In fragrant mist, her black hair was perfumed In the clear moonlight, her hands were cold

In the distant mountain of Tabon She leans over this bamboo grove While the moonlight tries to dry some tears

RIC S. BASTASA
then the tears shall start to fall

Another year has ended Summer has come for us to bask in the sun In sandy white beaches with friends, But I must now take leave My time has come Alas, the ylang-ylang trees in our garden Without me
Shall still bloom and spread its scents When the wind comes again
Tonight
Then the tears shall start
To fall

RIC S. BASTASA
THE NORMAL PASSAGE OF A HUMAN BEING

there was this friend who wrote sonnets in high school it was the first time that he fell in love with a girl with thick glasses and fists like stones i saw how she hit him and he did not do anything except perhaps to write more sonnets their love did not make it they did not marry for love

Life did teach them many lessons sometimes marriage is not love profession is not daily bread survival is not a struggle but simply numbness living is just a day to day waking up and sleeping and nights are even not for sleeping anymore if you are my age you will know that this is not madness but something that everyone in their normal lives undergo, like a communion, a confession, a crucifixion and a redemption

sometimes you are enlightened like a yogi, you only live for the moment your children are not yours your properties are just passing things like leaves blown away like memories that no matter how you keep in photographs

all, all still fade away and that one day, someone asks, ' what is this all about?

who is this? ' and someone who has a tight skin and a small lit eye says and lightly, utters, ' i don't really know' but if they only care enough the one who was forgotten was the one who wrote sonnets and the one who said i do not know is the youngest daughter of the girl with thick glasses and fists of stones who died not for love but only for the money.

RIC S. BASTASA
contrasts

The food in the ref
Of the wealthy Spoil themselves unnecessarily

Outside the door

A child begs because He has Nothing
to eat

RIC S. BASTASA
In our old house made of limestone Many ferns and moss Grow

But though how lush
And numerous have They become

My memories
Still outnumber them

RIC S. BASTASA
like the dry cogon in flames

Like the dry cogon
That I burn
This evening
On the ricefield
All myself
Is flaming

Waiting for
You

Who never Comes

I understand
Now
the meaning

Of instant flames

And the ash
They are leaving

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Lovers Get Married Today

because they claim to be in heaven

i still have to convince myself that i can see stars in their skies

RIC S. BASTASA
It is not the flowers
That wilt
It is not the wind
That whirls
And goes

It is not the world
That ends

In this place

But it is
We ourselves

It is I

That wither
And pass away

RIC S. BASTASA
all i did was hide my love for you

Like an iron gate
That rusts

Weakened by the Salt from the sea,

So I must
I live on

To hide my love
At last I have

Staled and Failed.

RIC S. BASTASA
till my life ends

After one brief tryst
A night as short

A blade of grass
Briefly cut

In Silliman-

Must I long for her
Forever?

With my whole heart
Till my life ends?

RIC S. BASTASA
the dignity of my tears

I will not blame the moon For bringing me this

Pale sadness

On some pictures of grief

I lift up my face
To present the dignity
Of my tears

RIC S. BASTASA
If I speak of love, it is because love speaks To me, like we are having this conversation About love itself, and I ask love that if I speak Of love, will love believe me?
And love sighed, and finds this question Too self-serving for itself, for love could Be biased too, telling me that if I speak Of her, she will believe me, oh, that would Be too unnecessary of love, to speak about itself, For love to believe in love from love itself Who is asking about love, About me and telling me, she will believe me,
In fact, this would be too confusing, too confusing,
But I speak of her today, and I speak of myself Too, believing about this love of mine,
And so confused we see each other eye to eye,
The eye of love to my eye of true love,
Talking heart to a true heart,
The heart of love talking to the heart of true love, and finally, though confused, and still taking breaths, love, she finally,

Said, yes, love believes me, love believes my love, love speaks of love, love believes in love,
In my love, and there is no other. Love begets love.

RIC S. BASTASA
some birds' cries

There is nowhere
To escape
From the Harshness of This world

That is what I think

In the mountains'
Farthest

In the forests'
deepest

I still hear
Some birds’
cries

RIC S. BASTASA
251

When in distress
Through life's blows

So Cruel
My life

Still sticks with me
In fidelity
And dignity

You may Say I am brave
and strong

But when I am
Alone

Some tears
cannot help
falling

Breaking forth
From my sorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
loneliness

When I turned my Eyes to the place Where I heard Someone calling
The only one I see
Is my own shadow

RIC S. BASTASA
When I ask her
If her love will Last forever

She does not Answer

Now, my thoughts
Are in disarray

Like your books
When you

Transferred
To another house.

RIC S. BASTASA
Though the rapid waters Are divided by this Big rock

At the end
The waters are united
Again

Like this love
Of ours
For now

RIC S. BASTASA
A single dew
On the leaf
Shall promise Life to this Plant still Wanting to Grow,

So will
Does this
New vow
That I
Make for
You

Let this Year pass
And let
The drought
Come again

Let us see.

RIC S. BASTASA
In our distance
In my heart
This love
Shall bloom
Like a flower

Please,
Do not let Your doubts
Be the mists
To hide
This view

RIC S. BASTASA
Let me thank the fish bone stuck in my throat Let me praise the tooth aching throughout the night Let me write about the rusty nail that pierced my stupid foot in that dark garden Let me remember a white horse which died because the grass arrived late Let me recall the treatise of the gnat biting the donkey's ear Let me check the fruit fly trapped in the empty wine bottle tightly corked Let me know if the rabid dog which bit a neglected child in the neighborhood is dead.

I have not learned my lessons by heart

Give me another time for me to nail another beginning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sooner my life shall end
And when I am gone Beyond this world
And I am forgotten
Let it be remembered
That I have met you
And loved you through
sincerely & truly

RIC S. BASTASA
Sleeping all alone
Through the long hours
Of the night

Then the day comes Morning light

I still cannot figure out How I survived

The loneliness
The emptiness

Of such much?

RIC S. BASTASA
Surely there is no one Who speaks with Authority
Or pity
About the pain
Of my lost love

Now is the time
To kick out
This feeling of Pain &
Emptiness

Go on
Get out
Self-pity.

RIC S. BASTASA
25th Of June, Dawn

a dream is so beautiful
at dawn,
it comes wounding me
but it is alright
it is the most usual thing that happens in my life
and so here i am again licking my wounds
nurturing it
so that i may heal
again and again

deep within i do not wish this wound to heal
somehow it is this orifice that creates an opening to my life
day to day

RIC S. BASTASA
That veil was the first symbolism Of her lies, it covered The truth of her origin,

Her face underneath, you never really Saw the truth of her eyes,

You were blinded by the cloth
You were tempted by the part that was still covered,

When the veil was lifted It was then that you saw, the truth, of what was felt,

You wanted to back out,
And stop the ceremony of a commitment

But there were lots of people in the church Ready to clap their hands, after the much awaited kiss

You kissed her, and the people clapped in Jubilation of your beginnings

You did not really mean it,
But it was too late; you have already sealed the contract

With that kiss and all the people in the church clapped their hands
The rest in your life to come shall be without the participation Of your senses.

RIC S. BASTASA
How can I hide
From my face
This fondness
This secret love
When she comes
To face me
She asks
If there is Something Wrong
As I leave
and say
Nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Like a cold dawn
Your love is Uncompromising
I ask for pity
When we parted
There was none
The morning comes
I say I do not like Any coffee or tea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Summer loneliness
In my mountain
Grows lonelier
When friends
Are gone like Leaves and grasses
All withered and Finally burned.

RIC S. BASTASA
What is broken
scatters

a glass that you throw on the window feeds the splinters

diamond like to the mornings of my life

i guess
one can still have faith
even in the breaking of whatever

when, for instance,
this morning
breaks into splinters of twilight

i too break into pieces of amazement
after the darkness
of my night

RIC S. BASTASA
If all the mahogany leaves In Tabon mountain
Are hearts
Like the way I bleed
When you left
The rivers below
Will surely flood
With blood

RIC S. BASTASA
If a friend
true to her
Is you

Is there any way Hidden from me

A gaze
perhaps

That you can do
To draw her back
To me?

RIC S. BASTASA
Well, I see this moon
And I am sad

My thoughts are sadder still The dark night comes

Not just for me Alone, I know

but for all of us..

RIC S. BASTASA
As of this time
I bring you no offering

Here I am
Bringing nothing

Just lies...
A bouquet of beautiful lies

RIC S. BASTASA
This poem shall remember The port of Dumaguete
The gentle waves of the boulevard Where we once walked Under the moon and stars Where the wind was fresh and cool Where time was once eternal

To your children and husband And to my wife
And even to our friends This poem is nothing After all we never made it

But to me
This poem is more than significant This is a love poem
To be recited again
In Dumaguete

The moon and stars
shining at night
And the waves of the sea Bouncing on the boulevard Still so excited

Like how I feel today as I write This poem

I am not sure Somehow somewhere
sometime
If it is still
With you

***************************************************************************
and if by chance you read this do not blame me or anybody
or yourself

do not even blame the stars
they are just taking their
own course

************************

this is nothing but just another poem for you

RIC S. BASTASA
Can you keep a secret?
I ask you
I will test you
About my loneliness
It is a secret
That I keep
And I want to share
It with you
If you can keep A secret

You cannot Keep a secret
Today a friend
Calls
911
For me

And so
my loneliness
Has spread
From one mouth
To another
Throughout the world

And all my friends
And acquaintances
Call today
Telling me

We share the same secrets

But I am lonelier
ever
I have another secret
That I can no longer Share with you

You cannot keep a secret You never knew what delicate means

RIC S. BASTASA
love life my friend it is the only one you've got

you have loved love once
it did not love you

so now my friend
learn to love life
it shall live with you
through and through

RIC S. BASTASA
see the path of life in opaqueness, learn to breathe through the eyes, do not trust love that much for it, like everything else, comes and goes,
bliss, hatred,
rottenness,
each man stands
by the side of his doorway and hides his hands inside his pocket
some however learns to shove or hold their hands out to be free.

RIC S. BASTASA
What shall I tell this great mountain?
That I have seen everything from here?
I breathe thin air here
Day and night
I stretch my hands to the clouds I touch
I tire my eyes to the sun above I follow the birds flying to the other island But I shall not rest
I shall climb this great and high mountain some more To see everything
In a single glance
Without even moving an eyelash.

RIC S. BASTASA
Slanting rays of the morning sun Carabaos, goats, and pigs Along the grassy lane
An old man with a staff Sits by the door
Of his thatched hut
Waiting for his grandson,

Chickens, ducks, and pigeons Scatter on the backyard
He feeds them
All he has now
Is this simple life
In a farm house in Dicayo River Waiting for an angel
To sing his final song

He sighs soon he shall die
the river flows nearby

RIC S. BASTASA
after betrayal
of trust you have the nerve to ask if i am angry

i am not
i am
hurt and that makes the difference

between you and me
there shall be a chasm

an abyss
but you will never hear me shouting

RIC S. BASTASA
try to look at it from a different perspective
dexter

when your prayers are not granted it is not because you do not deserve to be there
it is not because you are lesser that those who are now seated in the front handshaking with greatness

it is simply because God has barred the door where you are going to enter the room of your perdition

just wait
the right door for you is yet unfinished
the room there is suited for you
and for no other

soon, you will understand but i know for sure God has always heard you

RIC S. BASTASA
we were talking under the talisay tree about our future
one summer
when the leaves are brown and falling to the ground where the red ants

are busy taking their food under a heap of dry leaves

we will be there
to reach our destinies

but we may not be there together

there is always a season for me and for you
the wisdom lies in the waiting the goodness in the waiting and the beauty that we will see lies in the content of our eyes the tranquility of the pond where the moss begins to grow again

in stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
what you got from me are lies and it was a test

wrong informations were passed by you to all my friends and they will now ask me if these are true

i will tell them about your lies now, not mine

and now it is you who is in hot water as i relax in my bed figuring out what to do next

RIC S. BASTASA
you have all the reasons to be sad and be afraid

like a tree
you have no roots
and where you grow
around are rocks

when the typhoon comes you have nowhere to hold and you cannot stand against the harsh winds you will be uprooted and blown away

you will be washed away to the river and then to the sea

because you have not really loved
truly.

RIC S. BASTASA
you sent the slideshow
of the little white daisy contented in the forest where all the other plants are confused

the oak wanting to be a lilac the lilac wanting to be a pine the pine wanting to be a daisy

you are the daisy
i suppose so

how can i ever believe you when all the while you have been dreaming
of wings to fly away?

RIC S. BASTASA
with your big mouth

Silence-

Devour me

Whole

I want to be eaten

And be peaceful

Inside your belly

RIC S. BASTASA
you have shown me how to convert this newspaper strips
into money

how this flower
turns into a white rabbit

how the rabbit turns into a hat

then back to a newspaper strips again

magician, i am tired of your illusions
how your hands
deftly deceived my weaker eyes

now i have my last request please perform this magic:

make yourself disappear.

RIC S. BASTASA
I will always be here, here in this place Worshiping you, remembering you Always, even if you forget, even if you do not anymore remember A trace of my presence

I will always be here, here in this place Because I made a promise to always remember A trace of your memory.

RIC S. BASTASA
now you are here
alone
facing me
singing your own songs smiling at me
as i clap my hands

you are so beautiful
your voice magical
and it is so nice
of you

to be here again
as i hear
your voice

pure, and diffused
inside
what we call our very own welcome to originality to you and nothing but just you

i am listening

RIC S. BASTASA
the reason why i want to be you is because you like to be me too we become mirrors then i to you

and you to me

what i do you shall do and what you do i shall do too

it happens all the time and all the people in the neighborhood talk and laugh

about this mimicry
they call it crazy

we look like a melon cut into
perfect halves

how boring, how nauseating because you are still a woman and i have remained my own man

RIC S. BASTASA
For my love is like ice Put it in your armpit
It will melt
And make you wet

Put it in the coldness of the freezer
in your ref
It will harden
And even crack

Put it under the Sun and it will Evaporate

Put me in your Mouth and let Me melt in your Tongue
I become the water
drink me
To quench your Thirst and i will make You live

RIC S. BASTASA
When I look at you
Oh my lovely tree
Alone on a hill
How I wish that I may become A honeysuckle
A clinging vine
That from your Root to top
I may entwine

But I am just
A bookworm

Still trapped
In this book

That she is still Reading.

RIC S. BASTASA
hey mister poet
find me a poem
that i will read this sunday upon
the behest of
our chapel chaplain,

hey mister poet
find me a death poem to be read this sunday evening

and mister poet answered

hey lady i will make a death poem for you

but it shall be read by me this sunday

and you will be there but you cannot hear

you will be there and they will be there

because of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
in the rain and storms of my life My father is the boat
And my mother is the lighthouse My country is the land Where I am safe and fine

RIC S. BASTASA
Of what use shall the Saudi riyal
That Japanese yen be

When you are no longer by my side?

RIC S. BASTASA
you are up
and i am down

i am down
and you are up

i get bored
and tired
with this routine

so i give you
the surprise
of your life

i step away suddenly
and you fall to the ground

now i am happy to see so angry

and so alive
on this see-saw
of our lives

RIC S. BASTASA
There is nothing
Exceptional,
Nothing special
With me,

I am just ordinary

In decency, in status,
I am what you call
the average man,
Of no special rank
Of lesser significance

I am found
In the most common Places, undistinguished
in the most common men
in the market, in the mall,
in the park, in the beach,
in the streets, in the church,
in anywhere in everywhere

I am what you see
As plain, the usual
The most customary
that you meet &
easily forget

I am the Normal person that you Shake hands with,
whose name
does not linger
long enough in your mind

I live in the many
I am the numerous
I breathe the common Air
I drink the water
For everyone
I smell like the Sweat of the rest
I look like everyone
Because I am the average Because I am the ordinary

But without me
You will never be Special

In truth it is us
The common ones
In this whole world
The background
These ordinary Occurrences and Resemblances

That make you
Exist,

We, the average,
We, the people of this world
We are the ordinary
And you cannot Disregard us,

We are the many,
And we can always Disregard you
If we really want to

we make you
and we can always unmake you mister special..

RIC S. BASTASA
Read the poems and meet the words Like they are strangers They do not know you
And you do not know them But then you Get to know each other With how you feel
And what they feel for you They flow into your mind And float there Then they sink because You rock them in your Blood and thirst and Loneliness, and you ask If it is you in the poem?

Did I not tell you the magic Of my poetry? Or of poetry itself?

I will tell you again
You read them and then feel them, Then they become you Because now you see yourself Inside them
And the poems own you Because now you own them too.

is it you? yes, it is also us.

RIC S. BASTASA
you have nowhere to go your heart is trapped locked in the gates of her cares, your eyes are covered by the gentleness of her gaze, you are now caught in the truth of her love you hands bound by her desires your lips lost in her sweetness, now you dwell in your weaknesses, now you surrender to her longings you now belong entirely to her,

with nowhere to go
you are doomed
to die in her bosom
as her chattel
her prized possession
her love mind you
has turned you
into a thing, a property but you did not mind your heart is made of wood that which was real at first was already taken and this one does not matter anymore any longer

there is no beating.

RIC S. BASTASA
29 January

Aquarius goes on to acquire 50 hands

more faces, water, droplets of rain, more fingers, twigs of trees more feet, roots and more roots and more capillaries more of these nonsense, foolishness of men wisdom of God

less reason, junk food, broken computer chairs, dragging hours, more emotions, flowers on my bed, candles by the side of my bathroom stay more on the left side of the brain, giving justice for the lost moments, striking the chords of despair and repairing the broken strings of awe, why not? why limit myself to usual possibilities of office, home, church, work, honor, position, pedestal when the mountain ranges are waiting, less trodden paths where only my two feet fit,

muddy rivers, pigs, doghouses, bee hives, chase and chase myths on the 29th, i like being away from me. i will meet myself as a stranger, offer it hot tea on cold morning, no asking of where it hails from, and where it is going, just being together, mirroring, no teasing, no guilt, no comparisons,

i keep on writing for no one.

RIC S. BASTASA
because of what happens in the night (a night full of love a night full of passion) you hum at dawn break you sing in the morning you dance at noon and you laugh in the afternoon and then with so much happy anticipation
you look forward to the coming night with another ready passion because you love her and she loves you too

RIC S. BASTASA
as you cook breakfast today for him
thinking about the menu that he loves most you will sing again
the songs of love
that you once sang
only in the bathroom
when the summer
gets so hot when once he was not with you but in some other person's arms in another's warmer
embraces.

RIC S. BASTASA
i do not demand much
that you give me so much
love,
i have lots of love to give

i am love myself
overflowing
and if i love you
and tell you so that i love you
i do not demand much

i am in love with you
and i do the loving because in truth it is the loving that is the giving and it is not the taking that matters to the one who truly
loves to the one who loves to love being loved is not really that important

when i love
i give i do not take

RIC S. BASTASA
Dance, dance
Mister ordinary
If you won’t
I shall junk you

Sing, sing,
Mister ordinary
If you won’t
I shall leave you

Obey, obey Mister ordinary
Listen to me
And follow what I say

I will trample you
I will tread upon you
You will do what I want you to do

I may even humiliate
And tamper you Because you allow
It to be so.

RIC S. BASTASA
i ask the old man
of our neighborhood
sitting on a chair
in his yard
just in front
our house
as i water
the plants
in my garden,

his answer
is simple enough

'well, i like to die because my friends
and classmates
are all gone, and what use will this life be? '

i agree.

RIC S. BASTASA
And we shall not leave
This country we shall build

Because it is ours
Throughout the golden hours

Here we belong
For quite long

Our great forefather
Was buried here

And though in poverty
We must stay

As we enjoy what we have Under the sun we love

The coolness of the moon
We all swoon and don

We shall be proud as a tree
We enjoy our liberty

We shall live we shall die There is no reason to cry

RIC S. BASTASA
This love of mine
That you always doubt
Despite the passion
We always have,

Is not always strong
To keep you warm
Of course, you soon
Will grow cold as ice
In my hand and so soon
You shall melt like Water slipping through My fingers,

I am ready for this
I have kept the other Hand warm to hold
My other hand when
The night gets Colder and you are No longer there.

RIC S. BASTASA
I bought you a dress
Wear it
You are so beautiful
In it
You stand
And I will look
At you
You turn to the left
And to the right
And then
I ask you
To raise your head
With dignity
You will speak
To me
The words
I write on the letter
I sent with the Money
You must say
You love me
Then I will Bow before you
Inside this room
I will ask you
To take out the dress
Again
I want to see
This time
If you are Already real
But you may
Not
If you don’t Really like
It, so I can Now take my honest
exit..
you will have a chance seeing the sunflower poetess
only once,

a glimpse
you love it but you can only love it once when it faced the sun so bravely chanting

singing her one and only song then she goes away like the sunflower
wilting

bowing to the ground surrendering her many seeds falling scattering

it is only the rain that comes to bring her back to life again her seeds sprouting again not just with a mother song but children poems

all along.

RIC S. BASTASA
at first i contemplate about the sunflower as a princess but it will not do her justice because she is the queen of the sun,
she rules the fields of green and blue
and red too, these sunsets and even sunrises playing well tagging her along to paths of joys & sorrows she stands flower high to the clouds to storms and tempests she yields like any flower still queenly to her bowing only to rise again with her seeds yes, her many princesses by her side wilted yellowed petals and withered stalk some soft winds sad some drops of rain still about to fall

RIC S. BASTASA
as usual
it is just you and the moon ever mute and blind but wide awake
together the night
giving you
that much needed light though dim
but light just the same do not be hopeless 2nyt
wait
there is always a sun though little and far
tomorrow
tomorrow morning
for each
and everyone
hold on to your self even it be another lie
do not damn that
life
return the gift
as nicely wrapped as when you first received it

2nyt i must see you again
please wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
when he wakes up his thoughts are heavy
like ripe plums,

java he remembers,
big waves, and
volcanic eruptions,
humanity running away
to save what is it
that values themselves to the right to live

java plums, violet, darker than that, miserable,
covered by magma,
heights and disbelief
it happened in one wink, and then one buries all to forget, like a book one goes to the next chapter: this one is about discovery, happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
3 O'Clock In The Morning

the rain stopped and i have just awakened from a deep sleep

it was earlier than usual and what i heard are the raindrops leaving the last words of their lives a tapping of the roof a heave of a sigh

some monotonous sounds of the waves of the shore not far from where i am writing the last whispers of the winds from the trees about to shed their last leaves the sounds of wild ducks leaving knowing that another storm is coming

i think of you
i think of your search of yourself i think of myself how i was once broken and destroyed by the changes of the winds how i picked up the pieces like some leaves scattered in the forest beyond repair, i write some memories. weary, i imagine some moments that i may have been at rest with myself.

i think of you. I think about when the rain shall stop forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
the rain finally stops, soothing silence hushes

until the main door of the neighbor's house fronting ours
is banged

the usual drunkard husband and the nagging wife

midnight, dawn,
banging.

RIC S. BASTASA
3: 22 A.M.

it is funny if you give a smile at this hour in the mirror by that cemented wall no one is awake here to testify about it and tell the world that once and for all you have become another happy man

God's child who knows by heart the meaning of happiness

but just the same, smile somehow, keep the image of your white teeth aligning inside your pink gum

RIC S. BASTASA
i waited for this moment and it has come, this awakening, of your mind, you and i, still waking up, when the rest of the world is sleeping, this is the moment, i will seize it,
like the way the chameleon strikes the approaching fly with its tongue

you ask me, 'are you still awake, sir? ' and i answer, ' yes, i slept early last night' on the surface of things there is this shallowness in our casualness you only see my shirt and notice the particulars at first glance: color, shape, the sound of my voice, the posture of the person against the window

amidst the morning light how can we trap the inner cravings?

what about me? and what about you?
the reason why thoughts wake up because they have been unsaid wanting to breathe and be in the open

surely, i still have many words to say and to keep to write them, like opening a bottle of champagne removing the cork finally and you will be trembling with the sound of popping out of letting go what was trapped so beautifully inside the bottle but it will only be for a while soon you will taste the flavor of the sparkle and i hope you wil soon like it

RIC S. BASTASA
3: 36 A.M.

just doing something that touches
the deeper part of the marrow of my bone

the spirit is alive
the body is weak

there are questions popping up like mushrooms after a rainy night

you ponder upon each shape and color
round and pale and expanding
and still tough like a question begging for an answer

there is this emptiness that even a poem at dusk cannot fill

it exists and its duty is not to disappear it enters your heart and makes its home there

God says
he dwells there as well

RIC S. BASTASA
3: 40 A.M.

i am not alone
you are there too
talking to yourself and i am hearing
every word that you are uttering

i am not alone
there is this cock crowing three times six times there is this dog barking without a sign that it will be stopping there is this howl

and it is inside my heart

there is this prison without an opening

there is this leaf
about to fall

there is this river
always running

there is this bird wanting to fly away

there is this island still undiscovered by you

there is this pebble
staring at you

there is this silence always pervading

there is this word
still unspoken

there is this anger surrounded by thick walls

there is this emptiness
never filled

there is this longing
on its journey towards eternity

there is this wish wanting to be blessed

there is this death
sitting beside your sadness

there is this happiness still waiting to be harnessed

RIC S. BASTASA
3: 51 A.M.

the cocks in the neighborhood inside their fences are crowing others answer the call as though telling we are already awake and ready for the day's fights, one cock however remains rested between his two ash-colored hens.

RIC S. BASTASA
“I write what comes to mind.
It is like sharing a piece of yourself.
I guess I am just a lover of words”

We call it spontaneity, something that Comes from an impulse

Effortlessly,
There is nothing premeditated,
Like a burst of applause

Indigenous, something that grows Without any cultivation like some ferns
And lichens or moss on the rocks
Of our watered paths

That which nature gives Freely and unconstrained Like sunshine like rain

In fact, this spontaneity Is the highest and best form of efficiency

it is Not forethought
it is As instinctive as breathing As involuntary as Suspense and surprise
Combined less the promptitude

An ad-lib,
is that what you are,
My friend, and automatic hi
And automatic hello?

A spontaneous combustion,
A spontaneous propulsion?

Like the three Princes of Serendip Whose discoveries are made By accident and sagacity and not
By an old quest, or conquest

Yes, I agree, the poems work that way.

RIC S. BASTASA
she had her storms the past few months

her husband
sired a baby with another woman and she cried in all these blunders events she cannot accept at first

the seas will be rough and she will be in a boat where she will find it hard to move and breathe

she sails and she is now back home
to her senses

it is her birthday today and my brother-in-law greets her with a kiss and perhaps more promises

she will smile with the guests us and the rest will cheer for her and sing her a birthday song

all along we pretend that we do not know a thing about the storm
whether there were those who sank and drowned

and counted as a number a casualty

who wins who loses
we cannot count with our fingers the minuses and the pluses

the party goes on with more food, desserts and
hard liquor

we pretend all along that we do not know a thing like life
my dear sister, life goes on stick with it, let them those who hurt you

sink and be forgotten the sea is calm you might as well decide to take your happy swim or just take a dip and wet

a part of your lip

see? nothing happened and those that happened have become stories merely not even wanting to be told repeatedly,

we are merry
we have decided to be happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
301 sweet chocolates
who will ever resist
sweet chocolates

we take with our bare fingers handing these chocolates inside
our mouths melting

sweetly these chocolates in our tongues

putting heaven
sweet chocolate
so sweet inside
our mouths

playing with our tongues

guilt food and sin how do you really love the sweetness inside
our mouths
melting with our tongues
these sweet
chocolates of hidden sins

burning our souls.....

RIC S. BASTASA
everything has been concealed
for years
i have lived with the pigs in the mud
and ate the left-over foods of our masters

but then today
i feel the feathers growing on my side i have strong wings my claws are pushing in my feet no longer hoofs
and hair

the wind from the sea breaks the truth it brings on my beak is the break once upon a time a seagull lost an egg in the pigsty unaccounted

i was that egg

i am a seagull now
to the full
of my potentials

goodbye brother pigs now i must fly away to the farther seas to the higher skies

my destiny

RIC S. BASTASA
be silent now, do not ever mention my name the connotations of my name the one i talk about me about you and us,
the rumors are always sweet and you like them and you cannot hold yourself from spreading them to everyone who knows the power of my name its magic spell its sweetness like a coconut dessert with you now my name shall have its stains and i will be in ruin ssssssssssssshhh, stop do not talk about my name now, the rumors may be sweet to the ears of my enemies and false friends

they will have the dose now, of their own medicines, thinking that i am down, depressed, or even dead to the last detail of my own perdition, i will rise to save myself and tell them all that the rumors are not true, i will show them a happy face and some dancing steps some pictures of my big smile no, they will not believe me they will believe you, as expected, i have anticipated all these today, i will die laughing....

RIC S. BASTASA
when i write about beauty i always have the sunflower in mind
and the sun
and the soft winds from the evergreen mountains

i will add some chromatic butterflies and a very beautiful morning like some petals of red roses

and i will also think of tiny round leaves like drops of rain showering
falling on
the spreading patches of glimpses of grass

and then when everything beautiful is in their proper places with matching colors bright and scents all pleasing to my senses and emotions like to dance with the wind and rays of the sun when feelings are so tranquil like a very calm sea on an early morning when everything now is so lovely
there
then
will i invite you,

come, my friend!
come, my love!

i will be here
waiting for you
it will be beautiful indeed!
alone on a hill
stands a cherry tree
without leaves
only twigs
stretching to the
the moon
on this cold
and damp
night
like some kind of human hands
and thin body
in the act
of a very deep prayer

(except for
me
it does not know you)

RIC S. BASTASA
she is a doctor and he is a lawyer looks like they are sweet after three years of marriage
compatible, super, she says as she takes a sip of her pineapple juice while he prefers not beer but just plain water, well, he knows more about asthma and heart disease but i do not know more about legal terms, she tells me again, one time, he tells me in the email, he cannot live without her even for a minute

super, really super, this lovey-dovey couple i like them

but sometimes, i couldn't help thinking they are still new on this trade, this marriage, and still there will be more storms to come

superstorms

i still have yet twelve years i and emma, and we still need more storms to shake this boat

this marriage
and if there are none to come

i will rock it, let me see how anger makes her more human and strong and true
and perhaps even more
beautiful,

then soon, when these couple for three blissful years comes again

it will now be a nicer dinner for four.

RIC S. BASTASA
well she starts with hello how are you
i say, i am fine how about you?

she is not, perhaps, she has a quarrel with her boyfriend
and they will soon be married this september then to be changed this june

is she confused? i ask myself as i type my messages, she says, maybe,

then we shifted to movies,
wings, chicago, as good as it gets,
the corny titanic, and i recommended il postino, i tell her, watch it tonight and you will like neruda

and this postman and this love

how a poet makes love
more open and visible and expressable
to the lips of a seasick man in an island that does not move with time

slow, and almost forgotten until, the son of a dead man who thanked the poet
talks to him

his father gone
but the love still lingers in the island
where some poems were born
because
one must love
and be loved and the poems must give the tongue

for that expression.
more readers
write you, i like your poems, excellently written i can feel them,
i can relate to them,

true you tell yourself, how these poems are written with all simplicity and humility experience-based years ago and now coming back in metaphors as a matter of remembering what happened, how, and importantly why,

but sometimes he has regrets with some other poems written and not so appreciated because they are too deep and need a lot of deciphering, too personal,

metaphors too well derived from some darkness
when he was all alone gripped with fear and trembling to ghosts that do not exist

a beautiful mind,
the crazy mind he had in the dormitory in the cemetery, haunting him his passions on some squeaky beds and foul rooms

cheap motels having a love affair with a woman he never loved but whom he pitied,

makes him feel so inhuman and he writes them again with a sense of betrayal and self
humiliation
they do not like them people ordinarily do not like such poems,

bad poems, not relational, but more of selfish, selfcentered, egotistical like my mirror,

my walls,
my fences,
my closed windows,
a closed train station where the trains are all grounded broken wheels

well, he bleeds for all these but what can he do they find them irrelevant, the poems he likes most are unpopular

the readers junked.

RIC S. BASTASA
sunset
weak rays of the sun
not so warm
dying

a brown dog plays in the sunset of grass taking a jaw bone of a pig from the farm nearby a white dog comes to play with him, but there is no more time for this silly

thing to do,

this time all quarrels end
it is dimmer
now and all the children have to go home
now,
sunset, the white and brown dogs find comfort in the dark with their glowing eyes in the dark
tonight

not just the jaw bone, the hind legs and the ears and the belly of another pig come astray.

RIC S. BASTASA
A fish that drinks like a fish, that is a fish in excess A fish that fishes in troubled waters, that is a fish taking advantage of another fish in trouble
A fish that fishes or cuts bait, well, to be or not to be, to retreat or to attack, that is the fishy question
A fish that is neither fish nor fowl, is a fish that is neither one nor the other, lacking some convictions A fish out of water, is a fish feeling left out, no longer in his accustomed environment

Do you have other fish to fry for now?

Is there other matter requiring my attention?

Poor fish,
the lake is finally fished out from his fishy mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
sleep now baby it is late dreams, have some dreams you need dreams to appease you i will not be with you

anymore

come summer time
the sun shines in full glory and i will be with my sunflowers

the wind
and the moon and some stars to carry me away from my previous rainy days, so sleep now,

dream about the sunflowers and let your hair flow freely
with the wind,

forget him for a while, think some more,
destiny awaits you
with so much anticipation, without plans.

RIC S. BASTASA
today the cat and the dog of this house have a holiday of their eternal quarrel and jealousy none speaks a bad word for each other none of them

initiates an argument about whom of them the master
loves better

none of them
speaks ill about the other neighboring cats or dogs

the dog does not speak about the bone the cat does not speak about the rats both of them are silent and sad and none wants to speak beside their master

he is sick and dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
pity, sympathy,
illwill, backbites,
fear, rage, anger,
envy,

need you utter them?
to the man drunk with his failures (or even success)

do not, they serve no purpose but to make pain more serious, intoxicating
seeping, penetrating pain
grief,
lamentations

just a tap,
a hug,
an embrace, a gentle gaze,
a shake of the hand,
or just sitting beside him

in silence, , , , , , , , , , you think that i should be excluded because i opposed you it is natural tendency to crush an opposition

but you should have remembered about the bow and arrow

without the strong string of opposition where can the arrow be?

it is the string in me that pushed you to a distance

i made you win and that is enough satisfaction that i get from this usual rejection. I have not explained myself.

I do not wish to be understood.

Let your fate be your own confusion.
without my laws of gravitation you could have not fallen to the solid ground of your stability you could have floated in space forever and find for yourself forever lost in that black hole of an uncertain existence.

Everyone will know, except you, who shall continue blowing that horn of arrogance.

Soon it will be worthless. As i have predicted.

RIC S. BASTASA
the voice
the conscience
the interpreter,
she is

Nadine, not naive,
the African
lover of words,

the loot,

to pick things from life from reality

land politics,
fractured human relationships, AIDS,
violence,
belonging,
identity,
corruption,
education,
the situation of refugees in Africa, ecology
globalization.
third birth.

what now,
Nobel prize?

RIC S. BASTASA
of this
she had too much of that she had too little and of this and of that i am a little bit confused what to take what to discard what to leave
what to believe buy this buy that throw this throw that away i take a step forward i am told to take another step backward i think it must be this but i think it can also be that of this and that of these and those it does not matter what she really thinks i have my own thoughts now about this and about that i will take this and only this from far away London
i shall have thoughts of my own
now.............................................

RIC S. BASTASA
the whirlpools of my mind on a narrow strip my thoughts shall flow and then strangely enough the path widens unnecessarily from this island
some whirlpools
giant whirlpools in fact i see from a distance where i stand
but i have no fears
because i am with you and you are always silent i take your hands to my hands
and bring the mirror in the ship sailing west bound for England
perhaps there we will see some images but not of ourselves theirs
shall we be sad?

there is no bother
they are our brothers too.

RIC S. BASTASA
stained,
you find a place there in that nook where you can be alone and find some solutions
cleaning some stains sticking to your arms and hands, but it will not be long i smell chlorine concentrated chlorine from where she works
day and night
graveyard shifts
and other extra hours uncomplaining

she will join you for the cleansing, it will not really take that long just a matter of one hand then it will be over but your eyes will be hurt a little bit you know it.

RIC S. BASTASA
you do not start at the end you will not be understood but you insist to start from the end itself it will be interesting you say and they will follow you through confused
they will mind every word because they cannot understand
it is the end
you say is the most important the most dramatic part and that is all that they want so you start from there and end from the very beginning inverted
but not really perverted not for the fun
but for the run, now i understand you like rashomon
more arguments shall come like battered wives complaining about their husbands like children lost finding their home in the streets like some of us wanting to start with nice endings always finding hard to end with new beginnings for a start but indeed, there is nothing that is so hard that cannot really be learned

RIC S. BASTASA
here they all come beaming with pride and solid hopes
the upcoming generation, and i give them
all my respect
what is due them now they shall take i have given them
all that i have all that i am
and all that i will ever be

here they all come
i am giving way
i am all fed-up
now is their time to feed us too

here they all come
and so i will go away....

RIC S. BASTASA
a common plague here
how a fly hovering on a carabao's back now behaves and feels like that big black carabao itself?

not uncommon yet everyone speaks to no one about this discrepancy as the carabao grazes on the pastureland stupidly as usual

RIC S. BASTASA
His fingers are strong and determined And when he loves you
He chases, and follows you wherever you go Like a river flowing like a brown river flooding Scurrying its way to the mouth
Of the sea
Taking the least of resistance But if obstructed
Like the river
There will be an overflowing A strong raging of the waters Of his fury Taking everything Houses trees fowls Children, men, and women And boulders
And lands
Those that block his way

His arms embrace you
And he suffocates you with the pungent odor Of his masculine love
He breathes deeply saving all his strength He holds you tight
His chiseled muscled body pressed Against yours
He bends he stands he kneels he bends Again he bows to you Touches you from the Tip of your toe
To the tip of you
Hair and he surveys Every inch of Your flesh-territories
Obeys your wishes
Takes your command
And your desires
In full obeisance
Like a slave
He breathes deeply taking the strengths Of a hundred bulls
He breathes in the force of the forests And the trees
And taking all the grace in you He thrusts at you like a storm A strong wind
You are at the center of his power You are loved you are not destroyed You are one beautiful weakness giving in To this force his strength his thrusts And when this coiling
These bombardments
These lovely conquests
Are over
As he eats whatever He needs to make His fill
Of your love Famished as he is
To his longings
Of you
Like an overfed boa
He lies next to you
His eyes gentle
His hands so tender Resting on your breast Caressing your thighs like a soft wind A soft breeze from the green trees of the valleys His lips to your nipples You are warm and wet
In so sweet still warm embrace It is over
He is exhausted
And you are Satiated.

RIC S. BASTASA
it happens all the time when the right man feels that he has wed the wrong woman when the wrong woman too feels that he has
wed the wrong man,
mutuality of affections on errors

i sometimes feel that too and i ask again have i married the wrong woman?

have i been the right man claiming all along that i am the right man?

why? did the trials not work for both of us?

twelve years
the feeling about right and wrong is over now i wake up early dawn still sleeping beside her at least in the silent lonely hours of my life i have this companion and she is warm beside me and then i think again she can be right

and i can be wrong

who knows?

RIC S. BASTASA
your picture had long been taken out from my pocket
i have thrown it
in the river that flows to the sea
who knows where it may be

i care not to know
i have long forced myself to forget you

but then true love no matter what even with forceful forgetting comes to you again
whispering her name

it seems that even without your picture you name is still embedded in my brain
your face is a memory
that cannot be forgotten
in the deepest crevice
of my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
on that night i slipped on the snow and fell upon
a certain coldness
with the depth
of a thousand silences
and then
i experienced the pain
so much pain
that i heard a certain howling
of my soul

nobody hears
perhaps only the ears
with the wisdom
of nothingness

RIC S. BASTASA
some travel far and wide sailing the oceans flying the skies
from edge to edge
shore to shore
to find the meaning
of their lives

some just stay
and listen
and be so silent
listening to
the beatings of their hearts and find something steady inside a flame
alive

and they say they found themselves
there

without even using any word
or even a sigh

because there is nothing there to see and speak

RIC S. BASTASA
somewhere silence came in between them
creating a space of indifference though they want to fill the space again
with desire

love if love is true cannot just leave them in emptiness they have imagined
this fullness
but it isn't there they claim it was there but they made it leave and so they want another round of courtship of asking that love may come again she insists that a condom is a must and that they cannot just romanticize love and have regrets later as she enumerates a list of possibilities: AIDS, Hepatitis A, B, C, D and STDs

(she is the doctor and he is a lawyer and both are married) and he argues, 'when you make love do you imagine diseases? what kind of lover are you? ' and she says, ' I am just a practical lover, i don't take risks'

' I don't mind the disease. I only mind the face and body and soul of the person i make love with. We all die anyway, and i don't want quantity i am contented with quality! ' she demands that he use the condom still and he dismisses the order, as it was no longer a request and he said

as a matter of conclusion
'honey, i am ready for what you can infect me', he kisses her and tears begin to fall from her eyes.
she kisses him back forgetting her past, her present and his future.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are so many paths and there is only me and with you
there are only two of us

please do not take mine it is too narrow please do not go with me i am simply not comfortable with you

RIC S. BASTASA
the sweetness
lies
when the two of us simply wish
upon a single star

when we look forward
in the same direction to one sky
no matter
how dark

when we wish
for the moon
to shine
upon us

when we do not have
time
to look for the speck
of dust in each other's eye

when we close our eyes
and dream
we we lose ourselves
in us
without asking why

RIC S. BASTASA
what is it that the vacuum cleaner takes from you? dust and dirt and scattered pieces on the floor
in your room and in your kitchen
from the carpets

and what is that the cotton takes too?
or the sponge? or the rags?
they will take in water, moisture,
and stains
from the walls
and your ears

and what does my heart take from you?
it will take your gaze
your smiles
your breaths and your whispers and your kisses
and your warm memories
it will take even your rivers your sea
your world your universe
the stars and the moon
even your suns

RIC S. BASTASA
i like the irony of you talking to me and me listening to you but then when i start on an initiative of getting to know you, you tell me you prefer it that way at first when we remain as nothing but acquaintances that is you have no name i have no name we keep on living without touching i know this kind of mentality, you are this island that touches no one and i am an island too that must not touch you like men without fingers and hands and yet we take pride that we still have the heart to live with our hurts, i perfectly understand the meaning of distance this privacy elevating itself to a mystery in short, i like it when you become another very important hypocrite in my list worthy to be placed in the category of those who must be avoided.

RIC S. BASTASA
you cannot blame me
if i have not touched your cheek with my fingers you were too high for my reach and my hands are feeling short of that distance now that i am alone you cannot blame me if i touch myself with my own hands and rub it like an Aladdin's lamp when i even have to stretch myself and giggle and then something in me explodes and for all the
the women whom i have not kissed i am none of your goddamn business

RIC S. BASTASA
A woman’s passion is easy to understand The usual silence is her overwhelming
Yes,
It is her no that is consuming her really A no to a kiss
A no to a hug
A no to a holding of her hand A no to the fondle of her plump breast

A monster eating her Longings and whims
Her desire
To spread to love against the skies

She will tell you
And she means it
She will kiss you with a Spider’s kiss
Her hug would mean your surrender And when she holds your hand she Says there will be no stopping There will be no excuses
There will be no reservation anymore And when you fondle her breasts She will rub your muscled chest Her manner of hitting back She would kill you if you would not Go down under
And dig deeper
To her soul
Her fragility
Her unique nuances
Her calling sounds
Her moaning
Her way of loving you
A manner of reciprocating Your advances
She is true too
In thoughts and in deeds For what God has joined together Let the man go further under.

RIC S. BASTASA
the sweetness
lies
when the two of us
simply wish
upon a single star

when we look forward
in the same
direction to one sky
no matter
how dark

when we wish
for the moon
to shine
upon us

when we do not have
time
to look for the speck
of dust in each
other's eye

when we close our eyes
and dream
when we lose ourselves
in us
without asking why

RIC S. BASTASA
what is it that the vacuum cleaner
takes from you?

dust and dirt and scattered pieces
on the floor
in your room and in your kitchen
from the carpets

and what is that the cotton takes too?
or the sponge? or the rags?

they will take in water, moisture,
and stains
from the walls
and your ears

and what does my heart take from you?

it will take your gaze
your smiles
your breaths and your whispers and your kisses

and your warm memories
it will take even your rivers
your sea

your world your universe
the stars and the moon
even your suns

RIC S. BASTASA
i like the irony of you talking to me
and me listening to you but then when i start on an initiative of getting to know
you,
you tell me you
prefer it that way
at first when we remain as nothing but acquaintances
that is
you have no name
i have no name
we keep on living without touching
i know
this kind of mentality, you are this island that touches
no one and i am an island too that must not touch you
like
men without fingers and hands and yet we take pride that we still have the heart to live with our hurts, i perfectly understand the meaning of distance this privacy elevating itself to a mystery

in short, i like it when you become another very important hypocrite in my list worthy to be placed in the category of those who must be avoided.

RIC S. BASTASA
i like you
you are candid and smart and outspoken we are afraid to know that you are dying it is obvious
and you are speaking clearly with your words chosen from the courage of the veins in your heart with so much bravery with so much brevity you are penning
this
requiem
without a dent of regret whatsoever

RIC S. BASTASA
'Poetry has a great digestive system and can consume and recycle almost anything. It's the poet's persona that gives meaning to the process. The first important act of the imagination is to create the person who will write the poems. And that's not the end of it. We have to invent and reinvent who we are until we arrive at the self we can bear to live with and die with. Art demands of the artist the capacity for self-renewal. Without it, art withers. And so does the life.'
- STANLEY KUNITZ

what you were is not enough.
what you are is not enought either.
what you will be will always not suffice.

if you are a sigh
turn yourself into a word if you are a word reinvent reconvert
recycle
be not just a word
be a phrase
be this sentence
be this paragraph be this short story
be this novel
be this universal prayer of marvel

do not just be a nail but be a hammer do not just be snail but be sparrow what if you are nothing at all at the end? then be the perfection of nothing just be the best of this reinventing

RIC S. BASTASA
Do not stand at my grave and weep;
I am not there. I do not sleep.
I am a thousand winds that blow.
I am the diamond glints on snow.
I am the sunlight on ripened grain.
I am the gentle autumn rain.
When you awaken in the morning's hush I am the swift uplifting rush Of quiet birds in circled flight.
I am the soft stars that shine at night.
Do not stand at my grave and cry;
I am not there. I did not die.

Written at least 50 years ago, this poem has been attributed at different times to J.T. Wiggins (an English emigre to America), two Americans: Mary E. Fry and Marianne Reinhardt, and more recently to Stephen Cummins, a British soldier killed in Northern Ireland who left a copy for his relatives. Others claim it is a Navajo burial prayer.

RIC S. BASTASA
the main entry
of course in tonight’s activity is the crotch

I like it as a noun
And will always Be itself a Very hot noun

They say it Might probably be an Alteration
Of a crutch

In 1563
It was a pole with a forked end A prop of old men

Actually as we see it
A crotch
Is just an angle formed by The parting of two legs

This is the one
That I like best
An image of parting legs Now this becomes
My favorite verb: parting.

RIC S. BASTASA
tonight is a parting of two legs and the meeting of another two legs

tonight it is dark and we shall provide the fire that gives the heart a hearth

it will be filled with light and warmth inside our armpits and hairs
and sweat

there is no reason to be sad and be depressed in a darkness that we do not make

inside our minds we must make the sun shine
we must make our own mornings and clouds and grassy grounds

RIC S. BASTASA
grief, sadness,
loneliness, devastation,
ruin

scene: a barren wasteland time: the final hours of the night character: Aldo alone song: all by myself recommendations: write more poems, stroll the park early morning and take your xanor drugs. Do not forget to wear tight jeans.

RIC S. BASTASA
you are telling me about a stone who refuses to admit anyone simply because it has no door, no room and no space for someone like you,

you who does not even know what knowing someone really means. you ask the stone for a space and it says no
and you tell the stone that it has a space where the leaf and a dropp of water live the stone says no, and you insist because of the state you are in you are dying and you need a place perhaps a burial space where you may finally lay yourself to rest, but the stone still says no, telling you that it has no feelings that for centuries it has always been its nature stony, stony silence, stony stares, unfeeling, that in its house of stone, there exists no word for sympathy that it is simply living up to the demands of its true nature its tradition, and you finally understand, yet somehow you tell the stone about what it does not know inside it there is this leaf with dew, there is dropp of water coming from the rain, that until now it has not fully known, that inside its stony silence, there is still this song that it has a heart that it keeps denying.

RIC S. BASTASA
you begin your story about the birds walking on telephone wires or are they just there holding on with their lives intact with the clouds at their claws and beaks

and then you tell your story about a man walking on top of the water and the many ways you can really do it like some miracles they all remember jesus!

i cannot be beaten. i write a poem about a drifter who names his two kids clouds and fog

i bring a cat for you to see to listen to its paws

how silent they are.
like a cloud. like a fog on the harbor of the city this crap about Robert frost. we know them.

so please do not tell me again that it was you who walk on top of the water and i will not tell you about my kind of kid poetry, cat's paws and harbors and fogs and the silence in my room that i have chosen as a delicacy for your kind of escape, to the windmills, and to Miguel his pony and his Spanish prison.

dramatic spans
years and years of waiting to get exactly what you want in what you do you reflect the need to wait for the return of a particular quality of light, time of day,

or time of year,
in order to proceed

selecting the mood waiting for the right time to unfold

about your struggles with uncooperative weather or other alterations in your chosen motifs, in your effort to record faithfully what you see and feel

all very impressive
such excessive literalness your only aim, devoid of interest

early surrealistic images to recent staccato cityscape and suave sculptures and refined poetry

you were never literal because at the end
you put the last line

exactly,
truth is never exact as they always want to see and write about it

RIC S. BASTASA
The river in you moves Taking the least resistance You shall be the water That seeks your own level In calm and still moments Let me fish
In your moments of rage
I shall be the rock
In the moments of your dryness I shall be the river bed nearby We shall be always here I shall be the bamboo grove And you shall be the waters of the creek Slowly passing, gently flowing by

RIC S. BASTASA
It is the moment when you kiss me And hug me that I feel the pain Thinking all the while In said close, tender moment
The shortness of space
Between us
The acceptance that the kiss
The passion shall be short Time kills
Time buries me again
On the widening space of emptiness We left behind us
When you close your eyes
And without a word
You shall go
And be in the arms that own you

RIC S. BASTASA
You have seen my face
You have seen the way I smile the way I bend my back My shoulder leaning on the door
As though greeting you
A nice day a promising future
The glow of sun
The coolness of the moon
The splash on the clear blue waters
By the pool
By the sea
The sail boat passing by The ship on anchor
By the wharf
And the cotton clouds hanging
By the green mountains

The poems I write are sad You read them and you cry
You say you relate
You say you feel
The sadness of my lines

Now you ask me
Who am i?
Was I the butterfly dreaming about the sad man?
Or was I the sad man dreaming about the butterfly?

You are confused
I am not; I choose what I want to be
I am what I am
This moment,
And the moments that you imagine me to be

I write what I want
I am what I am
The lines may be lying But read them again I may be somewhere in the lines between if you search me if you love me that enough you will find me in the rain without an umbrella you do not find me rushing i have no reason to rush and take the safety of a shed you will find me shivering my hair wet and uncombed you will find me cold my lips are pale my arms are shaking you will find me helpless and weak and almost dying

you have to find me i have no reason to live

please....

RIC S. BASTASA
we shall meet again on the shallow banks of the running river on mossy rocks greener and water drenched by the constant rain darker horizons colder air and shivering silence we meet again as wrinkled skin and white hair bent and weak and surrendering to whatever that comes and finally goes passing us by we will just take a glimpse and confirm the reasons for what happened and why it happened it is enough, we shall take the last look of ourselves and then we close our eyes and die

RIC S. BASTASA
our themes are always revivals

how did i spend my summer vacation?

what can i tell you about myself?

Lies i tell to mother are the same lies i tell to friends

Truths that we keep to ourselves are the same truths forever

The longer they are kept private the more sober we become our themes remain us how soon we realize that we are just a theme written and rewritten copy and paste.

RIC S. BASTASA
when i left her i left no note she was in that state of suspension what to really believe there were words on the table but they were vague she had kiss marks but they were confused and she had reasons to be sad at first then she was lost and then she said she was angry to the laziness of time to its withholding of what could have been easily said and should have been well said and well meant life was not easy and life need not be clear to be blunt and be understood with so much pain it is better hanging like a leaf waiting for the gracious wind to pluck it off and fall without so much knowing as though it was merely riding on its puff and huff and then dry, and rot and be gone we shall meet again when our minds are calm and strong when our hearts are toughened by extant sorrows when our faces have thickened when our smiles are smoothed i have already prepared my self with what words to say for 25 years or more that i too have suffered and what she might say i have rehearsed my ears what to hear and be not guilty and be not pained anymore life is easier now i have enough space for guilt a stronger heart to carry them all and then leave and move on with my life as though nothing really happened

RIC S. BASTASA
the water is getting too hot. it is inside a glass. The sun is at its highest.

There is hot coal beneath it.
You know what happens.
A glass is about to break into pieces.

It is your own making.
It is the kind of thing that you watch.
You like it. You expect it.

You have no choice later but to leave it. You have planned this.

You go somewhere else.
It is not your place anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
so you have proclaimed freedom you have said it all: no food, no shelter, no clothing, no nothing except freedom
just the feel of being free and being freed from everything naked, and homeless, and hungry, and then so

unfree.....

freedom, what is freedom, there is more to be learned there is more to be done there is more to be responsible about it this freedom from need, from want, from being so ignorant and shackled with that limitless desire to be free from feelings without the mind?

RIC S. BASTASA
You have grown well
Soft hands
A Tender heart
A reflective mind
Going over the past
And finding something
Some gems
And they glitter
In your memory
Now, you shall write about them They shall speak to you And you shall listen

RIC S. BASTASA
Some are not really causes
But just symptoms
And we misdiagnose
A sickness
For a symptom
Of the real sickness

The cause
And the effect
Are often interchanged

For instance
Is poverty the cause
Of crime
Or is poverty
Only the symptom
Of it?

For instance
Is ignorance
The cause of poverty
Or is it simply An effect of poverty?

Or is poverty
Nothing but an effect
Of ignorance?

Or is poverty
Just an effect
Of an oppression
Of the rich
Taking much
From the poor
Who gets poorer
Everyday
Because there
Are no reforms Coming
To solve
His poverty
His ignorance
His having to commit a crime
To survive
His poverty
His ignorance
His being a crime
Of
Society itself
who never cared
And wanted him
Who never Instituted the much Promised reforms?

And so you doubt
The cause and effect
The effect from cause
And if you did not mind so Well
They may always be Interchanged
And mistaken
For the symptoms
The conditions
That always
Are
there deceiving.

RIC S. BASTASA
35 Degrees Centigrade

at 35 degrees
girl! it is hot

and i am sweating

at 45 degrees
i am ready

on to bed
i am sleepless

i am a log rolling
trying to catch moss

i am a stone
silent and hardened

i look at the moon
and i ask for wisdom

what's love got to do with this?
i am hot and loveless

RIC S. BASTASA
Slowly you shall let them see your eyes Lifting some veils and setting aside the curtains To let in some light
The air to freshen a bit of this Twosome Discomfort
This hiding and pretending not to seek What lies ahead
The two of us
You dream you are a butterfly And you tell them one night That you have known how to flutter Away from me
Into the world of your own dreams I have no cause to hold you now On your powdered wings
You shall go to farther places Even without me Mapping out your destinations I will be sad for a while But I will be happy soon I have let you be
I shall set you free
To be yourself again
Now you must tell me
How the nectars of your chosen flowers taste

RIC S. BASTASA
the flowers of youth are growing brown around your garden the leaves fall and the buds grown tight, no longer unfolding bridges lose their bearings and rivers catch them falling the splintered wood float like so many boats drifting things decay, strength is forgotten in the face of weakness loneliness conquers even the memory of brighter hours soon your face will be a small photograph almost like a stamp on a very important letter that i mailed to someone very far away

RIC S. BASTASA
sad indeed,

there are other freedoms
still

freedom from having no ideas, from this dryness, freedom from having you
as a poet on forced wit and half-cooked cleverness freedom from a reader
who has nothing to offer except his own loneliness
his having nothing to do freedom from being bored
to death
freedom from having nothing to say and comment
freedom from this feeling of emptiness this bigotry
this indigestion of dumb thoughts
freedom
from impertinence, immateriality, irrelevance, freedom from thinking about freedom freedom from freedom itself there are more

freedom from pain
is useless now

that you are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
i see you walking on the snowy land
alone
there is no shining sun the paths too slippery for your asian feet

you feel the world is too narrow for you and you do not fit
like thread
to the eye of the needle

you have cried more than many times that your fingers can no longer count them you have put too much salt
on the snow

the air is dry and everything is humid there are no leaves on the trees no birds singing on this harsh foreign land you are still
alone

on a broken heart you shall thrive on broken wings you shall try to fly away again but for how long
my friend?

my friend do not be lonely your home is waiting warmer
the sun is always there to caress your cold skin and the moon at night awaits you
for some more poems that i make to appease the anger in your heart

come home my friend they have been waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
reedom
what shape is freedom?
a flicker
on the candle in the dark night the wind blows and the flicker moves anywhere the wind goes

freedom?
the strong wind puts the light out on a single blow

freedom?
the candle knows how to make its own flame and lets go some of its melting matter freely flowing its own body consuming itself
down the drain
to its foot

like tears
the molten drops slide and solidify

taking some shapes misconceived
unassigned by us

freedom?
the freedom to take our own shapes the freedom to consume ourselves the freedom to be finally extinguished

freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
i see you rise from the ashes to become a star

up there in the skies you glitter
in the deep black night you are glorious in your light the distance between us this separation stone am i in this garden star you are to the heavens there is only silence and up there you do not see me you do not even remember perhaps the significance of any stone or dust

you were once just a dust on a leaf
you once were but a patch of me

oh, i watch you tonight oh, you glorious star in the heavens you have been given a place with the gods and goddesses but in a sense
i do not envy you
in truth i may have missed you and i may have followed you the ways and means that i have taught you how to be a star how to be a shining glory but i didn't

i like it here
i love it here in this little garden of earth where i am but a stone for these little ants where they are building a home measure my love
i will love you without measure there you shall fail this love has no number unquantifiable

your measure cannot measure this love immeasurable this love so
unbearable

you measure me again this love like a flame on your oil lamp shall then die

RIC S. BASTASA
tomorrow is another day where you mark another boundary of awareness your mind adds another layer the layers of the past like onions that you peel with your fingers your eyes staring
taking each peeled reality as a must the tears fall
your eyes dry
tomorrow you shall say thank you you have lived and shall live some more you shall be sorry for those who died for those who left you empty halls and empty rooms you have more reasons to live and continue what they have really wanted to do but didn’t have the time hastily cut and utterly wasted by untimely deaths tomorrow my friend
you must start wearing beautiful eyes those that smile those that must assure the world about a fulfillment of its dreams and wishes those that must affirm beauty and wisdom and truth shed off old skins and take the new ones a brave mind, a calm spirit, a determined body take a self that can hold much because others are weak and failing look out for dreams that shall make you whole gather the fragments, make this mosaic of love and happiness take the petals of happy moments one by one in your hands put them in the bowl of your emptiness put there the cool waters of your composure take all sense and scents and sit in solitude be not disturbed about sadness and insecurities all these are now under the soles of your feet all these are now taking their own defeat you stand facing the sun, brave and bold there is more to hold and to mold there is more to be done in this world there is more to be written and spoken to behold!

(happy birthday, one day more, another destiny)

RIC S. BASTASA
you once said
you are unhappy
you live on this hard shell of a tortoise
and your burden is such that you cannot really move freely
as a bird with its wings

you wish the burden melts into your skin
and it is done

then you say
the skin binds you
and the flesh and bone are burdens too

you want something
lighter like the feathers of a free bird
something light and easy and verily free
and it is done

i am happy to see you flying in the skies doing some acrobatics
in space
chirping some melodies
under the trees
diving in the sea
teasing the rivers
and this hovering
on the cows

and today i hear a different song
a sad song from a bird
by my window
it is you
you want to return to the hard shell of the tortoise
you miss the silence and the privacy
of your hiding

now, you have doubts what burdens are what freedom is
and this cannot just be easily done

RIC S. BASTASA
take this empty paper cup i have in my hand it is empty
and you will fill it i ask of you

you think of the hot water
and coffee
so i may not sleep for days you change your mind you take the cup

and fill it with coldness like chunks of ice

no i will not crack
on this sudden change like the empty cup
in your hand
i am simply made of paper throw me crumple me i am prepared and i really do not mind at all

i have always felt the same love for you even in the midst of a frosty day
on thick fogs
on cold tin roofs

RIC S. BASTASA
a metaphor is easy to make
and so easy to recall

remember the cat's feet like a fog leaving softly the harbor in the city?
remember a misery that jumps like a flea & bites you and you cannot sleep and you say life is like that a flea

remember
you think of time as a growing child
a man,
a wild man running and chasing virgins that must make most of their time
because
time is a-flying and
the rose that blooms today
tomorrow
may be dying

remember time in a bottle remember life like a fruit fly trapped trying to figure out how to escape

and you say life is like that
a fruit fly

remember death
like a woman sleeping in her chambers closing the curtains
and you say
death is like that a mere closing of a curtain

just like that

remember how loneliness is like a steel tunnel
you get in there,
some birds hover and fly away from you
you get in there,
and there seems to be no light visible
at the end

loneliness

life is like that

you see metaphors and dissect every vein every artery
every bone and cartilage of these metaphors that you say do not exist
in prose

, , , , , , , , , , that you say do not exist in my prose

mine is not poetry
mine is a poverty of poetry and you claim
yours is the basket the cornucopia of true poetry

good for you, you are the prima donna
of this
dance
this quibble in poetry

it does not matter

give me some metaphors
about poverty, discrimination, meaninglessness,
purposelessness,
non-being, the metaphysics of early death a being-in-distress
an addict
a streetchild
a battered wife
a cruel father
a hypocrit priest
an embittered professor a disgruntled student
give me some metaphors about corruption, lying presidents, secret killings

you are the master of metaphor you are the queen of slave metaphors

so be it.
make me a poem to the strictures of metaphor give poems a strange face a hybrid of dog and man

make them read and not understand delude them
give them illusions
confusions

make them baffled, submissive, uncritical, uncomplaining complacent, bewilder them to your secret, derivative and too personalized

metaphors

and you are happy
they do not understand a thing

and they will believe that you are God.

for those that we do not understand we call it mystery
we call it metaphor
we call it

unquestionable.

let the oppression stay.
let the discrimination live in the metaphors that you have made.

RIC S. BASTASA
hair blown by the wind the two of us in the morning meadows laughing and light as the air that carries us to the sea you hold my hand you lead me you pull the kite with you colors of blue and white spreading in the skies you tie the kite on a tree and we lay ourselves on the grass softness is you and my heart beats the notes of our love song we sit side by side we feel we own this wide world we hear the birds sing we listen to the flow of the river we see how free are the fish riding on the currents we look at each other's eyes, then we by instinct close what was once open, we go inside us, gently our lips touch there is so much color when our eyes closed it tastes so sweet that our souls are like tongues licking the sweetest honey on our skins on our whole bodies we write happiness not in the usual words that they use the ink is invisible the pen moves not with the hand but with the heart with the soul

RIC S. BASTASA
Here is a man who cannot tell a lie anymore.

You surely will not like him.

He is this

Dead man in the coffin.

RIC S. BASTASA
r Pig And Her Piglets

The mother walks ahead with so much pride While the children lower their heads in shame

RIC S. BASTASA
Not Blame Your Father

it is you
my dear child
who is the father of man

learn to grow
and feel how it was when your father
too
was younger

RIC S. BASTASA
Greed And Corruption

he deceives
the lowly turtle
taking all the ripe bananas
that the slow put planted

up there
where he situates
his stinking hairs
he puts the bananas

in his belly his cheeks
his feet his tail

this monkey
and his two friends see
the title
for better
reference

RIC S. BASTASA
War The Cost Is Great

and by all means
plain citizen of this republic

the cost
shall be added
as another burden on your backs

RIC S. BASTASA
366. In Fifteen Lines

you write
2. a poem
fifteen lines

4. i always look rd
the fifteenth line

best line
there
it will just be the line 10. i read

last line

is deigned
dignity

15. condescendingly, a respect to the brevity of poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
we need a smile
give it
we need a hug
give it
we need a happy
disposition
give it
just the same

that is the spirit
tonight
you may cry
alone
we are tired of tears
we are bored
with sadness

tonight
inside our respective hideaways

we suffer alone
that my dear
is patriotism

RIC S. BASTASA
Geese, Wild Geese

when was it that you started to fly?

when was it
when you learned
the power
of the V-formation?

tell us humans, we who also want to fly

using the power
of our poems

RIC S. BASTASA
Dark Like The One Last Night

a dark rose growing from a dark concrete crevice of this deserted building
on a dark night
spreading its dark petals for dark dreams

on a fine morning when darkness
is gone
the dark rose
comes out in the open
to meet the sun
embracing it
with so much light
turning into something sort of a blood reddish colored rose
something like glowing

but still dark
like the one last night.

RIC S. BASTASA
A dance in the dark Is a nude dance
Two forms Fuse as one

Shades in the Dark with some Specks of light
A dance of Coming and going

One that tells me Out you go And yet takes Me by her hand

And without a Word the two Forms kiss and Lose themselves In an empty space

Where the specks Of light may Turn into fire a wild fire A burning dance A wild dance

And it stops only As the Two Lovely Forms Become the dark And an empty space.

RIC S. BASTASA
Heart Is Stained With Utter Loneliness

departure has no color but when you leave me

my heart
is stained with the utter blot of loneliness

it's color is black
it is night

RIC S. BASTASA
371. A Fan Of Basho

From the 15th floor of this building
You said you will jump
Do not expect the sound of water

Now, stop acting like a frog Death is not poetic

RIC S. BASTASA
To let go
Off the disturbing ripples of doubts inside my heart I will sit beside this placid pond To see the full moon Sitting at its throne.

RIC S. BASTASA
People come and go Moving away
To new places
Looking for conformity

I am here
Allured by the sweet scent Of sampaguita

On this mountain
Of tranquility

And like the tender Flowers of Dove Orchids

Clinging to The barks tenaciously

I have decided
To stay.

RIC S. BASTASA
tell me honey
how does it feel to be lonely to be faceless
to be loveless
in a crowd of people, thousands of them walking roaming this earth all looking for love and not finding any in a crowd of namelessness always looking at each other in short glimpses without saying
hello?
tell me how does it feel now when he left you and when you told him i do not need you

when your heart
calls for his name saying
i still love you,
but you didn't tell me how to tell myself when i have pretended too much not needing anyone when alone in my room now i wish
i in an instant dies, begging for company
for someone to touch
warmth
tell me how to breathe now tell me how to live tell me how to love and keep love and live this broken
heart
in this faceless, loveless locomotion in a crowd
where there is practically no one
to say
hello

not even goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
Along the rough mountains Passing a winding river Crossing some forests
You shall pass
To meet me
For this night of rendezvous

In my little hut
The night may be cold and damp This love between us Shall build a fire
To withstand coldness
And destroy distances

RIC S. BASTASA
when he sits beside her she knows what she wanted

him

and she pretends that she is just nothing but a girl whose hands are small and so fragile and he of course will be tender to any kind of girl like

her

but she is more than a girl now that he must know
she knows where to touch him and tell him you are sitting beside this

woman

he must take a look some more her eyes are not innocent he will remember the eyes of the woman
who slept in bed with him
last night
this smell that she has stolen this smell of a woman, now she looks at him again lingering
if he still sees the same little girl whose hands he thought are innocent

and so fragile.

RIC S. BASTASA
i enjoy

the reflections of your light

from a distance

where you burn

when you see me

looking at you

i enjoy your flame

it is warm

from where i stand

i go near you

i may burn

like you and may hurt myself but it does not matter now

i have no name

to protect i have nobody to comfort me

i have no choice but to burn

myself with you

and they will not remember anything.

RIC S. BASTASA
when you step in my garden of earth
water
and fire

you are the woman there looking softly daintily whispering to the cherry blossoms

that now they must bloom because love is here and for the moment
it will be full
whole,

stay there
and let the cherry blossoms take a moment with you in excitement
some of them dance with the wind and sadly now you shall watch them softly daintily falling like some tiny white butterflies still learning how to flutter.....................

RIC S. BASTASA
how small and far can we be when love
breaks, how small is our way of looking at love's other possibilities when love is lost
and gone away,
we shrink in pain and we become so insignificant like a dropp of rain to the ocean or a granule of sand
on the shore

yet love is vast its domain is encompassing the earth and space
the whole of this expansive universe so why cry when one love is gone when this or that love leaves you it is just one moment come to think a little higher and be lighter to reach the feelings of the stars the foresightings of the moon learn to love again and be stronger in every loss rise higher from every fall mend that broken heart and embroider in there the golden threads of another love even lovelier than before because for once you know what love is when it dies
it is reborn resurrects itself always lovelier that ever before..... wipe your tears and let you eyes glow brightly to another soul another face waiting for you, he loves you so....
Seeing you my love my heart begins to burn and burn and burn Unstoppable to fire
I pause and look at you and take a hard look at you some more

You are simply beautiful!

So beautiful to behold in my burning burning burning heart Unstoppable to fire
I take another hard look I stop the world revolving To see you again and again and my heart burns and burns and burns Till I am consumed
Looking

Just the mere idea of looking at you

You look at me
Our eyes meet

I am speechless
And look away to the other side of dangling things

The world revolves again and I with it Leaving you because you can never be with me

In this Revolution

Meanwhile you wonder why the place where our eyes just met smells ash I said something just burned sometime somewhere perhaps last night or so

And so

You will never ever know

RIC S. BASTASA
i will be sad today
a new road is constructed sort of shortcut leading to my village direct to the veins of the city gloom rules my day
the sun dips below the eaves no tree is spared
old
and many of the new ones too are felled in the name of progress,
i revolt to this but i bow to that i am helpless,

i will be one of the steps going away
back
to that old road where the trees shall grow freely, taller and proud on this long and winding road
intense going inwards to the tranquility of the mind's intimate intricacies

RIC S. BASTASA
Many kiss the hand they wish cut off we despise the pleasure of pleasing people whom we despise

The lips are smiling, but is the heart?

A hypocrite is the kind of politician who would cut down a redwood tree, then mount the stump and make a speech for conservation

The value of an idea has nothing to do with the success of the man who expresses it.

It is with pious fraud as with a bad action; it begets a calamitous necessity of going on.
Every man alone is sincere;
at the entrance of a second person hypocrisy begins.

The wolf was sick,
he vowed a monk to be-
But when he got well,
a wolf once more was he.

It is a trick among the dishonest to offer sacrifices that are not needed, or not possible,
to avoid making

For neither man
nor angel can discern hypocrisy, the only evil
that walks invisible.
those that are required.

RIC S. BASTASA
your face
it is not beautiful

but nonetheless
your face
fills my mind

yet i think of you everyday
in my mind

this love persists
i cannot explain somehow this foolishness
of my dumb heart

i am in love to an ugliness that i cannot explain

my brain is angry though but nonetheless

it manages to fabricate an explanation

to kill this love so true

RIC S. BASTASA
a word from you, then you stop something choppy
i like to listen more from you another word, cut into half
i am having a hard time figuring out what is there with you that wants to hold me, i stop to listen again, some scratches from your tongue, some gnashing from your teeth, i am listening still,
some more words, more of pauses, like some commas are constructed by you on purpose, i am tired in this,
i am impatient, you stretch your arms to reach me again, as i go nearer tapping my ears,
for you, yet there is this
suppression of meaning,
i am listening still, you close your eyes and then open them, this time some tears fall, like ripe drops
of rain from dark clouds,

i see, your heart is broken and your mind cannot understand perfectly,
your mouth haggles
with words that your tongue cannot form

simply because love is always misunderstood.

RIC S. BASTASA
how i wish the world is blind to see me naked and broken they always say ever since i was small this little boy is ugly he will not have a promising future (did they think that i better be thrown to the sea and be eaten by sharks or to the forest so i can be the prey to those predators?)

they let me live, however, thanks, nonetheless, and i have grown to be what i am

ugly
learning to live this way
ugly

time however has told me a different story about the ugliness that lies only on the surface of things, and living memories have grown in me
the seeds

some possibilities for beauty

like i can grow a mind of my own like i can be cultivated like a beautiful flower of my choosing
in my own garden

like i can have the possibility of a sweet scent
or i can be a slender plant that will bear some luscious fruits to feed the world and make it feel that i can quench its thirst or satisfy its hunger
i have learned patiently how to be a better possibility and long time ago when i undressed myself removing some layers of sadness and confusion
skin upon skin upon skin

i was once afraid of everything the windows
the cracks and the crevices i was once afraid of the hundred eyes of this world those walls barring me those writings on the fences of my existence shouting that i am ugly (that i do not have the right to live or anything to live with)

i go naked again
time places another mirror at the center of my
thoughts,

to see another me
i am beautiful
in my nakedness

now, i do not wish anymore a blind world so it can see the unfolding the coming of my thousand possibilities like some kind winds white sea caps and gentle sands, i am beautiful and i really know it now by heart

this confident soul undressed and still so beautiful.

that you, my lovely world, must start to see.
i like you and i am not that naive so i tell you frankly i like you but i am honest enough not to use the word
love
it is too early to use that in this brief meeting and there will be no meaning
at all

time
let time walk with us for long you may hold my hand and then tell what do you feel when we see leaves falling let us wait what goodbye tells us

if it says it hurts if time mentions the word longing
then sooner i may tell you the word
love
and then i will tell the right way to say this word us, or

we

perhaps it will be very lovely

RIC S. BASTASA
if there is no place that can accommodate your sadness,
i know how sweet is the feeling of departure

you are prepared to spread your wings but your heart is still as heavy as the weight of your legs
but then you have the right to fly away from sorrow
to drift away from lament happy trip my friend i send you my blessings i wish you all the luck to finally reach your destination happy flying with your wings but before you finally go let me know

the secret of your having grown those pair of big and strong wings tell me which part of your body are you hiding your hands for soon if i have some i may fly away from sadness too.

RIC S. BASTASA
how i wish to put my world in the four corners of a can where i can be at peace in such smallness

but i know that cannot be done it is not only me it is also you and such a space will be too small

we cannot fit there anymore so open up let us try the world where the river flows where our vast dreams may sail

you and i
and these uncertainties of murky waters of hazy clouds of morning mists
dark nights
and howling dogs

RIC S. BASTASA
it is the rain once again that keeps this conversation alive even if we do not intend to like it

the road is muddy and this rain continues to fall heavily on the roof of my house the river along the path that you shall take shall rise and may threaten

you

there is no choice for you but to stay a while and keep this conversation alive about the rain

the rain that we are not making
they come
not from the clouds
they come
deep within our hearts
they gather

to give way to tears

RIC S. BASTASA
August 6, 1945,
B-29......
Enola Gay..... the island of Tinian headed north by northwest..... on the deltas.....

Honshu Island

.....civilian population of 300,000 and
....43,000 soldiers.

Little Boy, The bomber, 509th...Colonel Paul Tibbets, ....31,000 8: 15 a.m. Hiroshima released 'Little Boy, ' 9,700-pound uranium bomb, over the city. Tibbets dove away avoid the anticipated shock wave.

Forty-three seconds later, a huge explosion
lit the morning sky

Japanese Second Army
were doing calisthenics.

'The city was hidden by that awful cloud...
boiling up,
mushrooming,
terrible and
incredibly tall, ' Tibbets recalled.

RIC S. BASTASA
This knot which binds us Is killing me
You just don’t know
And I cannot tell you
I am choked
And you are kissing me.
Please, please
Do not close your eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
her name is marjorie and she locks herself in a room for seven days to make a poem, weaving her dreams, folding an empty paper to make her crane, carefully, folding distances between the seasons as she gathers wind

and fire

she takes a plant to survive and water it care, she must care lest she too dies

she opens a window one day to let her crane fly away pure & empty, the crane unfolds its wings as she watches her years go by like the way she wants some things to be unclear and undefined because they are simply meant to be that way, like the way that I try to confine her in my frame of mind she is and she will be, always, pure and then empty.

RIC S. BASTASA
we stand at the scrub board of a laundry sink filled with soaking sheets

strangely moving,
close-cropped images

banal becoming eloquent the tension between the baroque folds of crumpled white cloth

the geometry of the unremarkable the transparent plane of the water's surface transforming the space in another dimension

we stand and watch
in Spain.

RIC S. BASTASA
despot rants - no trust bestowed on boudoir and chest leech beast beaten

RIC S. BASTASA
Do not be surprised now in these dark times
I have no fears
Nothing is late for you to play with me In this dark room
Or outside where there is no moon Where the only presence we know Are our words without our bodies Our sounds of endearment
There are no eyes not even the nose Sometimes the hands
When occasionally
You learn to touch me

When mothers celebrate life Or fathers take pride in their posterity
The names of their children and grandchildren Their grand place in this world We cannot take part
We cannot even watch
We turn into moles
They belong to the center stage of life And the sun shines on all of them Except us

Did we choose this place Where the trees do not have fruits Where the shrubs do not have flowers Where the root crops do not have any flesh?
Where the vines do not have the perfect tendrils?

We did not
We wanted to live just like them Or anybody else
We have asked the questions
They do not have the answers I see your face blankly staring at the window On this dark night
I pity you
I have the answers but I will not tell you It is getting late and we need The sound sleep we too deserve We have more nice places inside our dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
incense, sweat
flower-scent and candle smoke
and yes, burnt good years charred goodbyes
mortar fire
rotten hellos
and tear gas

earthy tobacco
from cigars lit
in a four-star mouth

stench of fear
the smell of terror from a furious horde reeking of dying heroes of these domestic wars and splattered brains
of us
poets
the ones
whom you do not know
the ones whom you do not notice

RIC S. BASTASA
he taught me this one thing, that pain knows no size
no breadth
it understands no bigger no smaller no more no less it is the same thing for men and women and children the rich

and the poor feel it

with pain everyone
becomes the saddest person in this world

(i know you are feeling it, now)

RIC S. BASTASA
this will be confrontational life-size views of grimy bathrooms - a glimpse of a toilet,
a window,
and a shower pan,
or of a bathroom sink

In the last, he plays tricks with perspective kind and gentle
i, stand before the fictive sink;
the mirror returning my image, i see the blank tile wall behind me, as if i had become invisible your expectations at once dislocated and defeated how can you paint a confrontation like this?

RIC S. BASTASA
when we are far away from each other at continent's length we want to reach each other's arms and when we cannot we always have someone some other cause to blame like the zodiac, or the alignment of the stars and the planets, or the society or even the structures like some falling pillars and blasted walls

but in truth when we meet and become so near like a dinner for two or a dance where our cheeks lean over each other we soon realize this feeling of i detest you and you detest me we soon realize, that this feeling of indifference has stayed within our hearts for truly we have identified with the world in pain and to take revenge for a sickness without cure we pretend we are humans missing another likeness. it happens, right there where we exchanged words we must accept, another relationship has ended and we in fact, really do not care less.

RIC S. BASTASA
words like a forest hide me and you will not see me crying because my eyes have become leaves without tearglands

words like a wall of rain cover my weeping with the sound of its heavy rainfall and you cannot hear me anymore except the tender sound of a shower and the rolling of the accompanying thunder now i have grown words like a garden of grass and some seeds are groomed to become trees now i have kept my words like wild vines and climbers and they cover everything about my grief and lamentations now you ask me where i am, ask my words oh they will not tell you. You are my pain.

And there is no word equivalent to your name anymore in this forest, in this grassy garden.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a crisis in faith because one has looked up there where the stars are faithless themselves their doubts are as myriad as their twinklings

their being lost are shown with the way they die
one by one in an explosion
that is missed by your limited eyes

try moving inward, into the caves of your heart where the silence of the veins and arteries are found

where red blood of life passes in and out of the valves without much complaint where the heart works all its lifetime to tell you about love
and tenderness

and care and patience and passion to love the words of God till the end of its own time.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are things that do not last, wood,
what with termites,
and metal, what with
the salt and the sea that gives us
more memories,
yes, memories too
same thing with love unrequited, pain, same manner with temporary joys, success, same thing with failures....
ah, nothing lasts forever, something that still comes may outlast
us...

RIC S. BASTASA
on a spell of awe,
something is written,
with regret, something that is borne out of a heavy heart, a weary mind, like a stranger moving into another land,
broken houses, sad homes,
a lost teen-age son,
there are lines that
show them,
but still on another
show
like a beach with a blue umbrella
a woman with a
straw hat and a man with his pipe
and sunglasses....

RIC S. BASTASA
a flood of love
who can stop it?
don't ask
i will, i am strong,
i can stop a rush of waters inside
my chest, the storms
rage on i am sailing
without the motors,
but i stopped it though
with so much
collateral damage,
but i did,
at noon, i shrug
my shoulders
and laugh out loud, but at night
when i am weak
and asleep
the flood of love
rush inside
a dream
you cannot see it
somehow
and that is the most important matter

everything is well
in that dream
i am an open highway
with cactus on the side
of the road
and sun above
my head
do not blame me
as i also understand myself passionate
but not ultimately crazy on some
calculated risks and tiptoe dances,
i have some compromises
to make
i dream of you and hug you and make love with you there in haze
and misty scenes
hot, torrid, and elusive as a eel

slimy feeling, brutish touches, lips on fire, cinder hands, i shall never tell you that i love you because it will be a comedy of errors, a circus, forget it, there are strangers of the night that settle for shadows, the poems are useful in all these there is a vent, air passes in there the room gets freshened, breathe, breathe, life exhales like a smoke

live, and be happy like a fly on some kind of dung....

RIC S. BASTASA
even if she flies away inside that plane for eighteen hours, the memory of his love still lingers like it is a woman inside a plane for eighteen hours and arriving on that land of coldness he still lingers like a scar on her cheek

RIC S. BASTASA
inside this room
many sweet moments
carpet, glossy reds,
scented oranges,
coolest greens,

they do not have to be all here
to be remembered

sands
steps waves of amber foamy sighs
it was never the madness of wolves
never

furious ecstasies
wandering lusts
settled
love was there
it was love
why can't you learn to accept the fact of scars and deformities
parts of inner longings too

do not pretend there was love
there was love too....

RIC S. BASTASA
this is the nook
some of the words here are pleasing prostitutes
they are all well dressed for the occasion
of loneliness
but they know how to give the best of what is here
we toast for thoughts we murmur the metaphors all products of our drunkenness
we shake hands with the hands of ideas that we know for the first
time
exist
the dancers are naked
we watch and gaze
we salivate
as they paginate this is a soft bound world cheap and papery
dusts abound because it cannot be read
the spiders make their homes here weaving lies....
RIC S. BASTASA
when you wear a thong love begins to love you you imitate its nudity and look for intimacy like some stings and strings when you go naked all the way with pubic hairs in some array on an island of light nipples protruding and legs on a graceful spread in bed
dim lights and scents of magnolias things perhaps shall make some changes
departures turning into welcomes arms into wings feet into ponds
how peaceful after love how caressing time becomes why not?

RIC S. BASTASA
to go to you
i must enter a room

i open a door
of dreams

when i am there
finally
i try to touch your face
your body

i long again
to make love with
you

you are a mirage
on such pretenses

a shadow from the moon

a mist on a very cold morning

you have not withstood the crucible
test
of light.....

RIC S. BASTASA
throughout these years
do not mind the tempest what is important is that we remain as teas pleasing to the taste buds
of the gods,
it is not us anymore that
matter
it is the idea about us it sticks as carbonates inside the bottom
no one sees it
but its weight creates
that fact...

RIC S. BASTASA
THERE is still light
piercing the
blinds,

it settles on the
soft spot
of the pillow

it hits the iris
of my eye

it says there is
a reason for
mornings

for mourning
for sorrow
for wings and buds
for rivers that keep on flowing
for the rain that finally stops.

RIC S. BASTASA
4 O'Clock In The Afternoon

a small maroon van is parked beside an unfinished pillar along a gray road

a pile of rocks stands still at the other side

a thin woman with short blond-dyed hair is wiping the roof of a yellow painted pedicab and then she pedals away towards an old cemetery the rain begins to pour heavily the sonorous sound of the rain amplifies itself on the rusty galvanized roof of this building where i am writing the ceiling at the typing room leaks some drops of rain as though it is crying

RIC S. BASTASA
4 O'Clock In The Morning

missing mother
i play the 'ili-ili tulog anay' at the You-tube

at dawn when the world is still sleeping mama comes again
singing to me
the 'ili-ili'

i close my eyes
and there she is smiling.

RIC S. BASTASA
my day is over
i will not die, i shall take my rest i will brush my teeth and check my face
about the suspicion of another wrinkle of another white lock of hair or another loss of a beard
or an encroachment of more hairless forehead to the center of my head
i have no fear of these changes now that my day is over i am anticipating a mellowed self one that makes a sigh and care for nothing less and
nothing more
something perhaps that will give the excitement of a riddle a puzzle
something to solve inside a dream in complete multicolor like a hybrid rainbow whatever that be before i sleep tonight
i shall remember you whoever you are
My God.

RIC S. BASTASA
4: 00 A.M.

a little cat
is crying in the rain in the middle of the road not far from where i am seated

down this is thrown away by its mother because it has no milk to feed it

and its mother is thrown away by the owner
because there is no more food in the kitchen to feed
it

there is no more
free meal to speak of these days

and feeding cats
is not an exception to this new rule

meanwhile the rain has become stronger
the typhoon has come as predicted

i can hear the little cat no more
tomorrow
perhaps the road will be empty
and clean

RIC S. BASTASA
4: 02 Am

Sunday
forgive my having to work on a Sunday
a call for duty
this kind of putting hopes on those who desire to climb
the steep mountain of ambition

at what cost?
body, mind, soul,
stretch, stress
testing
elasticity
till it snaps

RIC S. BASTASA
i am imagining two blue whales far away from each other one in the deep oceans of South Africa
the other one in the deep trenches
of the Philippines
they still communicate with what or why?
who knows? something magical or mysterious
they still have to know what signals are there to be clearly
deciphered
from extreme distances

a call for help?
but perhaps something more or just a feeling for something they want to be familiar with

do you ever believe in previous lives?
if so, what were we?
were we together once?
or are we just ordinary strangers meeting on a train on a short trip on temporary acquaintances?
we glance, look down,
and then
go away

tell me
before i end this writing let me not forget those hypocrites who make the procession at dawn announcing their prayers on speakers on the streets of this little town

disturbing the peace of Moslems and pagans

do they not see how the trees stretch their arms in prayer
to the boundless skies all in the silence of its thousand leaves?

or the sea
with boundless shores extending far beyond its narrow confines praying to God for the calm seas?

or the air
that merely whispers?

or the footprints following God less the noise of the wheels and the machines?

i miss the clear pond tranquil mirroring the clouds and the sun all in the perfect harmony of silence and isolation
yet upon so much clarity....

RIC S. BASTASA
4: 16 A.M.

the rain begins

to fall

on the nipa roof

of the house

soothing sounds

solemn song of the humble house to

God

this early morning

as one reads silently

a Matin....

RIC S. BASTASA
4: 39 A.M.

the strong wind keeps on blowing
howling
above the house and the trees bending in different directions there is this sound of tin roofs about to be blown away i hear them

and feel the fury of someone
coming

to the mind of my wife
it is nothing
but a typhoon coming on schedule
as predicted by the weather bureau yesterday

and to her
i am just overdoing thoughts and things playing always the role of the poet
even when the wind is the wind
and nothing but the wind

and nothing else

RIC S. BASTASA
4: 45 P.M. Office

i call it another form of familiarity between a superior and a subordinate

trivial matters like how can a married woman betray a husband?

the clerk knows how to make the story more interesting on such a small place as this where each knows every lock of hair before it falls

the husband knows what is the real score
but keeps a blind eye he does not love the wife anyway and he does not value honor loves to curl and just be henpecked and economically dependent

talks move on to politics who the probable senators are and what this new crop of party list can possibly do to change the state of this nation

until then,
the clock strikes for the closing of the office i think i was babbling and they were not really listening just that

RIC S. BASTASA
katulgon pa baya unta ko apan unsaon ta man
alas kwatro man ang iyang gi-set sa iyang alarm og dayon niyag mata og pamalak sa atubangan sa mga altar sa tanan niyang mga santos

balik-balik og basa
anang iyang moingon kag pulo ka klase-klaseng nobenahan
nga imported pa niya sa kilid sa simbahan sa Baclaran

mimata na lang sab ko og ania nagmugna ning balak sa 4: 50 sa
kaadlawon

managlahi usahay
ang among ginabuhat
kagahapon gipang-ibot niya ang akong tinanom nga mga camote
kay giaisan niyag
dama de noche

ug ang akong paboritong firetree kalooy sa Dyos
iyang gipatutol
kay ang bulok kuno
sa mga bulak
isog ra kaayo
sa iyang panglantaw
og gidaog ang mga
kaputi sa iyang mga
pangadlaw

managlahi na usab
ang among mga agianan
ako gustong
mogawas sa sala apan mas ganahan siya
anang exit sa kusina

ang akong gikahadlokan mao ang pag-abot sa
panahon nga managlahi na ang among padulngan

siya paingon kaniya og ako paingon na unya
kanimo

amo lang jud kining sa hinay-hinay sabot-sabotan kanang dili pa tagad manglood ang among mga bugan

RIC S. BASTASA
and so it will be that i will give you the flesh that you love and you shall live well and i will keep the bones those cranky ones that you set aside and i will listen to the sounds of old age
and i will keep what i have learned from this experience
you are the geek
that keeps what splices of happiness is there those that are temporary and i am the outmoded that keeps what i think shall last forever but at the end
we are even beyond these musings
and callings
along the roads of our choices these patches and parches we all shall turn into nothing but dusts
and i shall take pride no more of what i am and what i had been neither shall you whose name must i have also forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
4: 59 In The Early Morning

the church bells nearby toll
for whom, for you,
some prayers
broadcast on the microphone in this place of little christianities,

you wash your face
put on your clothes church this morning
i forget, we used to have church every morning when we were newly married,

changes, time,
ebb, high tides,
moons and more moons,
moorings and more moorings mornings and lots of boring mornings, i have changed and you have changed too.

i walk, i walk away, and you will pray, i will pray too but in other silent places far away from us, from you, from everything familiar

too boring, but not sad yet, we are anticipating sadness like noontime
lunch with so much chili and pepper, and cold rice, the one we had
for breakfast,
these kinds, you know, are not my favorites....

yet without any word, you will serve them.

RIC S. BASTASA
Three dark Shadows lurking
In the dark park
On a dark night
One leads
The two others
Follow wearing Black raincoats
On a dark road
I lead
I tell them
My name
My work
My place

The two Did not follow
Since then
They realized
Perhaps that With what I tell them
I am blacker
Than black
On a dark Raincoat
On a dark
Park
On a dark
Road
&
In my dark Mind
It would Be so hard
For them
To follow Through &
Through.

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive They quit
They split
&
So I Walk alone
In the dark
As one lonely
Shadow
Darker than Dark
&
Now
It is you
Here
Following me?
In fact
We change
And it is
You
In effect
Who is Leading me
Through These lines
Flowing
Slowly
Gradually Getting Darker than Dark

You have Indulged & Surely
You are Involved
Deeply
Long enough

You win & lose... her blond hair unkempt
her eyes looking at the side of this page and she does not say it as she holds her piece of burnt pancake with her tiny hands all too dirty for a child like her

why not do a good turn for me?
i am helpless.

RIC S. BASTASA
this summer she wears her pink kimono and she will walk under the pink blossoms of the pink sakura she will carry a pink umbrella and she will cross the pink bridge of kokoma pink leaves on her feet pink fingernails on her pink wooden shoes in honor of her love that never bloomed to complete red she will sit on a pink bench praying for pink clouds to drift on the pink skies.

RIC S. BASTASA
402

snow melts
in the river a maple leaf
begins its travel

RIC S. BASTASA
bird on wing
again
air whispers
another name
a distant island

RIC S. BASTASA
the cold front of February
Siberian winds
in confusion

RIC S. BASTASA
white samurai
falling to the ground a hush of wind
some stories to tell again

RIC S. BASTASA
406

he mistakes
the depth of the river
by the ducks
on the surface floating

RIC S. BASTASA
breakfast with my sister today

she is broke

we talk about
childhood

clouds and frost

RIC S. BASTASA
truth is naked before my eyes

i am naked
before you

RIC S. BASTASA
on a trip to Chiba
snowflakes
falling on my shoulder
i am bare

RIC S. BASTASA
by being not confident at first you may wear masks lots of them
in different sizes
and colors

and you face yourself with mirrors around you and you laugh
this is very interesting
I will not be hurt
I will even hurt
Them

Then Someone comes
She loves you
And wants
The real you

And you love
Her

When the time
To make love & kiss you remove the masks
both of you
it is more exciting
than interesting

this time
the pain is stronger
too

it is the fairness of hide and seek
that tells about pain and pleasure

wearing masks and removing them
making love and undressing

naked both of you feel something more is concealed

this time
you go beyond
you peel skins
subcutaneously

the soul demands
no bodies as masks

and as you close
both of your eyes
and see what is beyond these bodies
these subcutaneous masks

tell yourselves
beyond these bodies
there is still more as true love so demands some spaces some silences between you and him where God must dwell.

RIC S. BASTASA
that winter
i close the window
behind me

Mt. Fuji

RIC S. BASTASA
your picture had long been
taken out from my pocket
i have thrown it
in the river that flows to the sea
who knows where
it may be

i care not to know
i have long forced myself to forget you

but then true love no matter what
even with forceful forgetting
comes to you again
whispering her name

it seems that even without your picture
you name is still
embedded in my brain
your face is a memory
that cannot be forgotten
in the deepest crevice
of my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
i

remember
when you love you swallow your words

you even take back what you vomit

you're foolish
but you like it

ii

when you love what you do you become even more foolish you do not mind being diminished even if you perish you simply go on doing what you love and dying happily ever after.

RIC S. BASTASA
on that night i slipped on the snow
and fell upon
a certain coldness
with the depth
of a thousand silences
and then
i experienced the pain
so much pain
that i heard a certain
howling
of my soul

nobody hears
perhaps only the ears
with the wisdom
of nothingness

RIC S. BASTASA
full moon
lying low on the lake
kissing the treetops

RIC S. BASTASA
paper room
lamplight
two shadows
struggling for love

RIC S. BASTASA
WE are lovers
always on the run for myriad pleasures and to every friend
we are proud
keeping that in mind we are always lovers on the go

we get old and we start diminishing
we lose friends they're always moving

we miss what was there a long time ago
we want to go back
we cannot
nevertheless we tell them we are friends at night we have long stories to tell
and we laugh and
wake up at dawn and tell stories again

our kind of pleasures
change
we have chosen what lasts with us
we have become our very own homes.

RIC S. BASTASA
dark night
in the woods

house lamplight
peace and quiet

RIC S. BASTASA
the things that we do are simply done

is there a need of putting a name on the plate that you have washed?

is there a need for the tree that bore the fruit to put the name of the owner and the grower of the fruit that falls
on the ground

that you pick and pickle?

the giver, the real giver does not have a name he simply gives because when he does not he gets hurt and dies.

RIC S. BASTASA
the genius in each of us lies in the ordinariness of the clothes we wear and the ordinary walk that we take on ordinary lanes the genius of air, and sunlight, and wind the one that gets inside us without notice yet makes everyone live the one that caresses us without feeling so important and yet makes us survive the one that refreshes us in the shores along ships that we are in taking us to our destinations tell me if they have special names and special functions

the ordinary air, the ordinary sunlight, the ordinary wind is that not the genius of the earth the fire, the land, the sky are they not so ordinary for us to take and use and love?

they are the strokes of the genius of the Lord and yet they never have names of their own they are everywhere, they are anywhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
tonight you wrap me like a blanket to your body,

you use me again
i know how is it not to be really loved and yet pretend that love exists inside the circle of your arms i keep on saying you love me, you love me i am in your embrace.

you sleep and dream

of her somewhere in the place you know

just between you and her
but i do not really mind

this stolen moment is my lifetime.

RIC S. BASTASA
tonight she takes us to Dubai the place where new dreams are woven from sand

they left the lands of their birth to work in the land where the color of gold is black my friend writes:

the pot of gold is found right here

come, come and be with us there is nothing in the land where you live the promise is broken there is no token

come, come and be with us let us partake of this sadness from the sand and sun of Dubai you must say goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
silliman memory twenty five years ago at the port in dumaguete my boat arrived from Cebu
from Davao
and there was a little shower of rain so fine and my hair was wet
and damp

and there she was waiting as i went down the stairs of the boat lowered down
she held me
by her hand
telling me that her love was true
and i kissed her telling her
that my love
was as true as hers

+++++++++++++++++
outside the rain begins and it will never end
+++++++++++++++++

that was twenty five years ago for a love that never pushed through for a love that should have been true.

RIC S. BASTASA
the touch you give me is the feel of silk today the color is pink and the scent is this link between you and i

sweet and high

you are so soft
how can i be aloof?

you are so beautiful
naked and full.

RIC S. BASTASA
these tiny leaves falling from my hair on this day warm and fair are yours

all yours

you shake my body
this tree of energy

your fingers run through me i moan, i am happy

i close my eyes
and time slowly flies

you kiss my lips
i die in dips.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am tired of the rhyme and rhyme just to rhyme with you at the expense of my thoughts at the loss of my spirit at the defeat of my spontaniety my streams flowing and stopping looking for the proper word that sounds like the previous word until i am drowned by the rage and upsurge of my emotions just let me be myself let me flow like a river without the banks restraining me in the canalization of my dreams i will be nothing but a line parallel to yours and they do not really look and sound right i am afraid to say i am sorry i will not be beautiful with you i will be beautiful alone so alone in my own peaceful solitude.

RIC S. BASTASA
our instinct is always to look at the color of the butterfly first

we do not bother if it is lost in our room and anxious to find where is the exit window which you closed beforehand if it is black it could mean death the brown one means money what i have today is a white one fluttering like a dream it is so beautiful

but i have no right to kill it by letting it stay

there is no nectar for a flower in my room to survive for at least this day its admired purity has to go outside my window

RIC S. BASTASA
1,2, Buckle my shoe.
3,4 Shut the door.
5,6 Pick up sticks.
7,8 Lay them straight.
9,10 A big fat hen!

i know you like the rhyme.
i mean it, the nursery rhyme.

RIC S. BASTASA
it must be really cold
out there
as your picture shows

my fingers on the keys are frozen

RIC S. BASTASA
one more day papa for me to get to know you more how the days and years have built a wall between us how you kept on telling me that after mama died the years had become so hollow and even so cruel one day more papa
you have always repeated that we are destined to be split like a bamboo
and that sharp bolo does it with nothing but seconds

i leave back to where i am and you will be staying to where you are you tell me your heart is broken but i will not tell you that mine too is bleeding one day more papa and there will be no other days i have long been dead away from your hands

RIC S. BASTASA
thank you for drinking with me for days gone by thank you for all the kindness and in my emptiness something gets filled
somehow
something reborn after a little shedding
of an old skin

thank you, i like this tea in fact, the red one it tastes much strong much bitter now

RIC S. BASTASA
All of her days have gone soft and cloudy
All of her dreams have gone dry All of her nights have gone sad and shady She’s getting ready to fly

Fly away, fly away, fly away

Life in the city can make you crazy For sounds of the sand and the sea Life in a high-rise can make you hungry For things that you can’t even see

Fly away, fly away, fly away

In this whole world there’s nobody as lonely as she There’s nowhere to go and there’s nowhere that she’d rather be

She’s looking for lovers and children playing She’s looking for signs of the spring She listens for laughter and sounds of dancing She listens for any old thing

Fly away, fly away, fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
ignite me with just a spark from you in the dark and i will be this fire that burns that lights from day till night to warm your body and guide you in your way and when i am ashed tell them if they ask

i have done my duty
i had it my little own way from the spark of your love that never dies i have become the constant fire of sacrifice

RIC S. BASTASA
in my room the window is open as i sleep tonight

you shall be the moon as i wait for your shining light

in my room the window is open
come tonight

wrap me with the warmth of the fullness of your moonlight

RIC S. BASTASA
It is an afternoon Walk by the Beach

An orange sunset Follows me
Like
I am closely Guarded for some Unknown
Danger

I walk alone
The sea foams
surging

from Time to time Touch my heels and toes

An alternate
Of sand
Foam
And sea
And sunset
Rinsing
My footsteps

I am looking For some Shells of My past

On a sunset shore Retracing
It to
The mouth
Of the river
At the Other end

River
Meets Sea as I closely watch

The sunset closely guarding.

RIC S. BASTASA
as i wait for you
i shall hear the wind blowing
from the sea
to the mountains

i shall hear the gentle hush
of the leaves falling

i am listening
for the coming of your steps

by the side of my door
and then with all my pleasure

i shall have it opened because tonight i am all yours

come inside my room
and i will tell you the magic of the moon

RIC S. BASTASA
431 To A Friend Who Died As Poet

I Have Seen The Power Of Your Poems
Those That
Make The Blind See
The Mute Finally Speaking About Beauty
The Deaf Hearing The Songs Of Love And The Crippled Finally Dancing To The Rhythm Of Your Lines

I Am Amazed And So Convinced
About The Magic Of The Poems That You Wrote
When You Were Once Alive Before They Buried You On A Shallow Grave With Their Anger
And Hatred

They Were Not Able To Cut Your Tongue And Tear Your Mouth And Break The Bones
Of The Body Of
Your Poetry

Now Let Me Ask You
If These Poems Come From The Deepest Chamber Of Your Heart

Are Its Roots Your Pains And Unfathomable Sorrows Or Is It Grown From The Seeds Of Your Bliss
That When Summer Comes They Bloom Into Sunflowers?

I See You In Your Images Smiling
And I Can Hear That Suppressed Laughter On The Lake On A Clear Morning

What Is This All About My Friend?
Tell Me, For They Do Not Like My Sadness Neither Do They Share My Joys And Happiness

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Got In
I Went Out
Such Is The Wrong Timing
Of Your Compassion

Then We Talk
About The Proper Timing Of Our Desires

You Set The Time, The Place, And The Mood Now It Is Not Just Desire But
Love

Yes, Love,
But Sometimes I Still Wonder What Love Is
When Two People Meet At The Proper Time The Proper Place, And The Proper Mood

When Everything Seems Right
And Yet
Feels So Wrong
When Everything Is Supposedly Proper
And Yet
There Is Still This Feeling Of Impropriety

I Am 48 Years Old And You Are 49
And I Am Just Asking
When We All Want To Be Inside The Room Of Ecstacy

And Yet
They All Want Us
Out

Just Because They Also Feel That The Timing May Be Right But It Simply Does Not Look All Right

And Then You Are A Little Bit Irritated And You Ask Finally

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture In Black And White Always Brings Nostalgia
For Instance The Picture Of Mama And Papa
Beside Their Daughters
Named Leonor With The Pony Tail Betty With The Tiny Curls
And Delia
With Her Expensive Smile
(She Seems To Frown In All The Other Pictures)
And There Was This Bouncy, Plump Boy
Wrapped With Silky Cloth
That Mama Held So Tightly In Her Arms
As Papa Sat On A Big Rosewood Chair
Like General Mcarthur
Not Afraid Of The War
His Left Hand Inside His Pant Pocket While
The Other Hand Was Holding Mama’s Waist
I Know That Boy
With A Big Smile As Though Life Is A Big Joke That Boy Was Supposedly Their Only Boy
It Was Me
And Then Ten Years Later My Brother Came I Did Not Know Why There Was No Other Picture Like That A Family, For The Time Being
Let My Brother Tell You
We Are Never Close And I Do Not Like
To Tell The Truth

RIC S. BASTASA
She Writes A Poem She Also Wears
Her Shades
For What Reason That Is Something That We All Have To Figure Out But I Remember Something About What She Once Said While We Were Walking At The Park
Her Ratiocination
Of Wearing Shades

She Looks At People In Detail Without Them Knowing That She Is Looking

In Short, Manny, She Goes Out But She Never Lets Others In
Just Like In Her Life, It Has Always Been This One-Way Drive She Pops Out
And Then She Closes Everything

Her Mouth Shut
And Her Heart Closed Tightly
And Coldly
Like The Sweet Honey (I Meant The Sweet Person That She Is Or Was)

Stiff And Hardened
In The Freezer Frozen

RIC S. BASTASA
The Police Officer Arrested Them
Last Night While They Were Strolling On The Park And This Is The Story:
He Asks For Their Names And They Say They Have None

He Asks From Where They Come From And They Say They Do Not Really Know He Asks Them Where They Are Going And They Tell Him
They Are Still Undecided

He Asks Them What Is In Their Bags And They Say They Are Just Nothing He Asks Them Some More And They Say They Have Nothing To Say Of Themselves They Come From Nowhere

And They Are Heading Nowhere And The Police Handcuffed Them
These Vagrants
These Potential Terrorists Of This Rural Place Where The People Still Love Peace

And This Afternoon The Police Officer Brings Them All To Me And He Tells Me About The Whole Story About His Questions And Their Answers

And I Am Looking At Them And They Look At Me Straight In My Eyes
With Dignity And Without Shame
With All Pride

That They Are Telling The Truth, The Whole Truth And Nothing But The Truth That This One Whose Age Is 16 And This Other One Whose Age Is 18 Are Simply Talking About Themselves And About Us And About The Policeman Himself

And Surely, I Agree
We Have No Names, We Do Not Know Where We Come From And We Do Not Really Know Where We Are Going We Are All Like That, In TheStrictest Sense Of The Word, Except For Our Little Pretensions
And So I Ordered The Policeman To Release Them All And Let Them Be Themselves And Let Them Go In Peace And Finish Their Journey With All Ease

RIC S. BASTASA
we are fools listen we are really foolish we have been deceived for quite long they have been stealing from us right in the front of our faces when we discover this we go mad and run on the streets make noise and shout for their ouster
we cannot be appeased
but only for a while

now, we like to see them again dancing before us and we say we are wrong we miss them and we want them still to proceed with the show, they walk on the rope they spit fire they sing and they look beautiful with all our money

back home be ready with what the mirror will show:
we look like them
foolishly incurable

RIC S. BASTASA
NOSTALGIA

AN old friend of mine is bringing me to the place where he received the yes of his wife

it will take us a day of travel, then we walk another three kilometers until we reach a grassy portion of the hill overlooking a little town far north when we arrived there he fell silent closed his eyes and recited silently his prayers we only spent twenty minutes there as i gaze on the grass, the trees and the clouds now at 54 i think i know what he felt saying prayers for the dead right in the spot where life was taken away where love did not die.

RIC S. BASTASA
It Is A Hug That You Need
When Some Parts Of You Dangle
On Your Shoulder
Like The Way Your Your Hair

Shouts For Help
For Fear Of Falling
And Here I Am Coming To Hug You

This Kind Of Hug That Sings
The Song Of
Apple Pickers
And

Garbage Collectors
Whose Hands
Are Sworn To Clean The Mess
And Keep The Pieces

To Put Them All Away
And Burn Them
As Often As Necessary

I Will Hug You Baby
But Only For A While

I Am Both
This Apple Picker Somewhere In The North
And A Garbage Collector
Some Place In The South

Let Us Talk About Love Some Other Time
I Am Still Learning The Art Of Loving THE OLDER YOU ARE THE MUTER YOU BECOME

it is true
and let me speak from experience when you grow old after you have read so many books in fact a corridor of books looking like the catacombs of Allan you realize that what you know is too small

from what you have learned they are nothing but freckles of your

youth

but this time you do not raise any eyebrow
for a question

there is that old man who keeps on saying yes to life

i ask him why and he says the answers are in the years but how they talk is measured in their silence

RIC S. BASTASA
On A Trip Well Planned
When Most Of The Hours
Are Spent Inside The Car
Where You Dream

About What Lies There
On The Place Of Your Destination
Some Flowers
And Treks On Mountain Trails

And Bridges
And Rivers Where You Look Down Below
Cloud-Filled Skies
And Big Mountains With Enormous Shadows And Cold Places
At Their Peaks

You Find Rest Somewhere
On A Rock Under A Big Pine Tree
High On This Plateau
Where You Can See
The Green Valley Below

You Think Of Home
Your Bed And Your Room
And The Poetry Books
And Some Love Poems
Of Friends That You
Miss Reading

You Realize You Are Getting Old
And Your Taste For The World Has Gone Cold

Inside Another Long Journey Is Waiting
And You Think It Is More Exciting

RIC S. BASTASA
To Choose Between A Hot Breakfast Ready On The Table And Finishing Another Poem
I Choose The Breakfast
Together With My Wife

This Poem Can Be Suspended
In Time
And Become Another Unfinished
Act Of Creation
By A Man Wanting To Fill This World With Poems

After A While
When I Have My Fill And When I Make Some Nice Conversations With My Wife And My Dog Beside The Table
Looking At Me
For A Piece Of Fried Pork
When The Sipping Of Coffee Is Over When I Finally Wipe My Chin With The Sky Blue Napkin
When I Consider
Eating As Finally Over

As Promised
I Will Come Back Again
And Finish This Poem

And There Is Something Nice In This Act Of Creation
You Feel It

It Is Warm Like The Hand Of A Beautiful Woman
It Is As Hot As Ever
Like This Wanton Desire
Lovely,
As Lovely As You Love Each Letter Of The Word
Of Your Poetry

I Am Feeling It In The Bone
Of My Soul

RIC S. BASTASA
I Hear The Body Speak Through Its Mouth
There Is No God There Is No God

I See The Body Wasting Itself
Like A Tree Whose Roots Are Eaten By The Fungus

But Inside That Body Is The Soul That Raises His Hands To The Skies Looking At God And Calling His Name

My God Why Have You Abandoned Me?

There Is Only The Usual Silence And The Soul Is Restless Anticipating To Get Out From The Body That Is Killing And Wasting Itself

And The Time Has Come For The Soul To Be Liberated To Be Alone In Itself Moving Towards The Light, Dancing In The Dark, And Singing Out Aloud

My God Here I Am Back To You
It Is Only In You That I Find Back Peace And Happiness & Bliss.
Let That Soul Be Me My Lord

RIC S. BASTASA
when the big tree falls
hit by lightning
roared by thunder

when the big tree finally falls
and i was there
a big sound
of a giant old tree
falling finally to the ground

the arrogance
that used to be

by that big old tree
we all looked upon
it was so high
and we did not
climb it anyhow

for fear
and
perhaps respect for its grandeur

and today this big tree falls
hit by lightning and roared by thunder

the universe claps upon the
fall of arrogance and pride
and a tree's belief about
its hugeness and
strength

now this tree falls
and i am here watching it

you are not here
you are in some foreign country

how can i tell you
that this tree has fallen

and there is nothing to fear anymore?

when a tree falls and you are not there
your logic tells

there is no tree
there is no tree of such strength and posture
there is no tree like that

that can ever fall
all because a lightning hits it
and all because the thunder roared

without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Accept the fact
The fear that you have nothing to tell anymore To amuse yourself

writers' block, shutting up, windows closing, doors locked, mind shrinking, like the fish vendor who sells rumors & rotten stories To the streets

You go to the fish market today Not buying any fish or selling any or even touching gills so you can breathe

You’re looking for some Salt
Taking notes of the fish scales discarded Trashed
Some fish bones & broken fins some fishermen catching Broken hearts on their small eyed nets

You go back with fish fins And fish tails, thick lips and round moving eyes

You will start with a mermaid story today.

RIC S. BASTASA
THEY call it family

not one less of this family that must stick together and always save one another, be it whatever, a financial distress emotional stress, societal imbalance, technological displacements the family shall be first even in crime passion, the family is one in all conspiracies not one less, each must be saved from shame from destruction

i am tired of this,
i am getting out, i am now a stranger, alone against this family, i speak my mind, i blow the whistle now, kill me

i am a corpse, i have long been dead in the dark chambers of this family
the secrets too deadly, kill me now, i dare, only if you can....

RIC S. BASTASA
This is my life Life defines in Metabolism, In reproduction, we make our miniature selves, our look alike In the power of adaptation, like what is in now, What is fashionable, how I blend with all of you How I mimic you, how I become a clown to you, Life in being nice This is my life A short and a merry one This my life In the middle of my own life To life, a life, in the hope of discovering the meaning of my life, My speech my poetry Come to life with me To the life, for the life of one like me, Not taking this life in my own hands, Never, never, To life, this is life As big as life as large as life is large In resiliency, in elasticity Animations, cartooning, animate, I vivify I vilyf I quicken I liken The life force in my life’s functions Drawn from life to life drawn Dream to life a life full of dreams This liveliness, this sparkle This effervescence of life, this bubbling life like wine This sprightliness like soft Drink like energy drinks This verve, this vigor this vivacity Of life to life as big as life My life This is my life This me I am life I am energy I am in this poem trying to run away from everything in my life, running in life to life and life, because of life, for life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Faith and love

He knows your hands
And arms too well

One day she falls
From a cliff
Freely

Like a stone
To a rocky ground

She knows what
You will do

She closes her
Eyes
And not feel any Sense of harm
At all.

RIC S. BASTASA
the way we do things may look easy. For instance painting or doing a portrait may simply be a stroke of the brush, a tapping of color here and there or to a woman baking a cake, it could simply be a mixing of one ingredient to another putting them in a molder, turning on the oven, waiting, and then you have a cake for everybody or writing a novel or a poem or your biography, it is just a scribbling of words, putting them on paper, spontaneously not even thinking what next to write and then putting a finish to the work the children will be amazed and they will do the same and when they grow up to be like us they too will also amaze us without end until we reach the point of dying as easy as that just closing your eyes and then not waking up anymore but before that you write a note, or perhaps on your last breath you whisper to your confidante

' it was never easy, never'.

And the confidante
knows that too, but he will never tell.

with all these concealment, the song will go on Life is beautiful. This world is a wonder.

Death is nothing but sleep.
Am i not right, after all?

RIC S. BASTASA
Question 1

How can you ever Leave someone
Who cannot live
Without you?

Look at her eyes
The moment she Hears the word
Goodbye

Her eyes start
To bleed
Blood.

I cannot kill Someone with
The use
Of the word goodbye.

I can’t.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I think of leaving you

One day
I think I must leave.

This is not my World
I said silently
To myself

As I face
You. I say further
I do not like
What is happening
Between us.

We are trees
Without fruits.

We are ponds Without Any moss
Or fish

We are a night Without stars

We are mornings
Without the sun.

And I keep
On saying
To myself this must Be ended
For once for good

I look at the road
And they are So inviting

They narrow down Somewhere to
The foot of a rainbow

The horizon
Calls my name

I look at you again
A long glance
And your face
Looks so innocent

Asking me:
(1) Where are you taking
Me?
Telling me:
(2) I am going where You will take
Me

(3) I have nowhere
To go
(4) When you leave
I will die

(5) When you leave
I will kill
Myself.

There are more
Enumerations.
I can recall them.
Always.

And so I am
Staying with you.

I am so afraid
I am everything to you.
And you have been
All too pleasing
For any kind Of betrayal

RIC S. BASTASA
You and I

I see a glass Half empty
And I see your hands Filling an emptiness
That I have Invented.

I am empty now
And then
You fill me
Up to the brim

I am overflowing
And here you
Are
In the full blast
Of your lust
That you Invented
Licking me
From the Bottom
Beyond the brim.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I wish I were not a part of you My feet are pinched With needles.
Your hands are not there.

I try to relieve myself from pain.
It is not happening.
There is no miracle.
There is no cure.

The world is a big space.
I can leave anytime and Take the shape
Of air.

I can be gone.
How come that I become A part of you
And her?

I do not remember myself coming Here and sitting on this chair.
Fate.
Cruel fate.
I want to leave but I cannot go
I do not want to stay but I am staying.

How I wish I were not a part Of this mess:
This cruelty inflicted
From your hand
To my hand.

How I wish I were Someone else
Here I am.
I am your hair to your head.
Your fingers to your hand.
Your toes to your feet.

I guess. We must learn to live With each other.
Dislikes disregarded
We begin
Our silent wars.

========================================
=========

RIC S. BASTASA
Walls

I know your name from what they are telling me.
They say that cruelty is born. That cruelty has a tendency to stay.
It is you. They mention the name of your husband. He died with a forlorn heart.
It is you. They say you never mentioned his name. Not even once. You are cruel.

We meet today in this room. I am not afraid. I am prepared. I will not be fooled.
When you call me. You mention my name. You appear sweet. Like some candy bar.
I cannot be fooled. I tell myself. I am a wall. I am inside a very thick wall. I cannot hear you.
I do not wish to be a part of you. No matter how sweet you call my name.

They say that cruelty repeats itself. And that I can be a fool sometimes.
I am a wall. I do not believe this to happen to myself too.

You look at me. I leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
I empty myself of the smell of others. I empty my bags.
I empty my glasses and leave them beside the sink At night I turn back the alarm;
I open the ref and look at myself as a hungry man

It does me no good. The nights have done their task.
I say your name. I say hello.
The verbs do not follow each other up road I love my wife. I keep her in the house.

My parents still hide in their graves into the foggy corners of the hills. How can I be silent?
History reminds me who I am. I am unchanged, I am still the same man in town.
I get rid of my life and everything remains the same.

RIC S. BASTASA
How can these eggs
Break a stone?

And how can your Spread fingers
Be a spoon?

How can you hold
Two watermelons
With one hand?

How can you be Happy with A thousand Desires?

How can your
One hand
Eclipse the sun?

RIC S. BASTASA
We're stranded here it is raining outside i am here beside you you are always somewhere a place you do not want to even describe for me you are always lost
and, no matter how i tried, you are never found.

RIC S. BASTASA
she, too, dislikes it, because it gives her the feeling as though her head is taken off, makes her body cold so no fire can ever warm her again. One does not look on poetry as a closed work, the poems go on and on
at all times on one’s head, and snip off a length.

You mush remember the homely definition, Poetry is the best words in their best order, words in their nth power.

Bony ideas, bloody nerves, held together by the delicate Tough skin of words...

Words...words...

I agree, I have never started a poem where I know the ending Always the ending is unpredictable.
Poetry is your personal Expression making it public, a revelation, a revolution of sort, you throw a pebble to the world.

In essence, poetry is an emotion, said, written in measured motion,
And that motion is an art.

Drip pity, drip pity, drip drip drip drip

Like a dripping rain, from a leaking roof, while one sleeps To its rhythm.

A wording of highest thoughts, appearing as a Remembrance, it does not really mean anything, it is simply magical...

But be.

You make a poem, but the reader recognizes it as his own, But there is no accusation of thievery or plagiarism

A sea animal, evacuating to land, and now wanting to fly in the sky, that is poetry.
Making familiar things rare, as though they are Not familiar anymore.

Giving habitation to airy nothing.
Giving nothing to everything.

Giving a nobody a nice home like he is now a somebody.
The invisible, made visible, and the visible made invisible.

A quarrel within himself.
In his tranquility, he recollects powerful feelings, and give in
To an spontaneous flow of giving.

That is poetry. Giving, and always giving, no taking, nothing taken.

I, too, dislike it at first.

RIC S. BASTASA
Keep it for a while, it will not go anyway Let it stay with you and let both of you talk awhile

Give it the warmest bed and the softest pillow And pray that it will have the soundest sleep for the night

Both of you will soon understand each other Why it is here, why it is painful, what is the rationale of its existence?

How it is that it must be with you, and how is it that you do not understand at first,
You and pain become friends now, it explains itself, and hugs you

It will sooner understand you and you will understand it Then it leaves gently, and you wake up the following morning

You cry, you have understood it completely and crazy You miss it somehow; you even wait when it will come back again.

RIC S. BASTASA
You are not even my father the birds peck on the rice grains the children take turns in hitting them with their stored stones

i tell them 'i never hit a bird with a stone during my entire life'

'we never intend to kill them, we cannot eat them anyway they're too small' a child explains

'we are just doing it for fun' another child added.

'do not stone a bird, you are hurting it. It is not hurting you' i answered.

'who are you? You are not even my father' he reasons out and without saying any word further he left scorn in one of those dead birds which none of them picks from the bloodied ground.

RIC S. BASTASA
48

48 is not just any number.
fourty-eight with a dash is much more.
four is for the legs of the table. ty is thank you, and eight is the octagonal side of the circle chipped on some extras, unnecessary peripheries, undisclosed portions, they are removed.
48 is more than a number to me, they are years that i cannot simply explain in a day. Years that i cannot compress in an hour. fifty is a boundary and eight is a bonus
with you.
ty is not just thank you. it is also
truly yours.
i remain with you. yes,48 may now just be a number. it does not really matter, i look forward to another 48, and i love it when you say, 49 is waiting and 50 is wholesome in fact, half only of what we lack.

RIC S. BASTASA
You lose this time Victoria And you hide yourself in a room Like a puppy frightened by some Firecrackers,

Is this your first time Losing what you wish
And love?

I see you shrink in the park
On thick black sunglasses Your fingers fidgety Beside your hips

You were walking fast Almost running
In steps rushing like Elevator stairs,
Away from everyone
Who knows you,

This must be your first time, Losing,
But you will soon recover, Tears will dry
And the trembling will soon be over,
You will calm down
On some anti-anxiety drugs,

Relax,
you will soon recover,
But there will be more
Losses to follow,

The thing is
We cannot avoid learning this art Of losing & recovering,

This is life, Victoria Welcome, and learn with me,
I will lead you and tell more stories About myself,
When I was your age
Of questioning and resistance Like a little child
So confused.

RIC S. BASTASA
49 Years

it's been a time
49 years
i have been with you and dealt
what you are and what you wish to become

i have looked at you
eye to eye
on the very same mirror where i many a time cried and swore that i must move on and be what i want to become at all cost keeping this life
and living it well

i have kept the lies just that you may live and i will not change it time indeed has mustered all the courage and faith
time indeed has made me the master of this self

and now i look at you eye to eye again and i am not afraid to blink and then to stare

long and live
consistent and confident

RIC S. BASTASA
tongue-tied winds on sturdy trees

sea weaving waves
log-rolling on the shores

moon floating weakly on the murky river

nights without neon lights brokenhearted

rivers on their usual journeys towards the sea of options

RIC S. BASTASA
one cannot iron out
air perhaps you may cover out a delineation with some euphemisms denial does not lead you
to light you are like
the moon
wanting to conceal
its pain
in those dark nights
only to suffer efflorescence
as the frogs worship it as goddess chanting throughout the rain

sorrow too is like gold
one cannot hide in mud
each moment is gleam
pain glimmers
like a star in that indifferent sky

amidst the flow of black wings
the moon is carried on....

RIC S. BASTASA
one takes the path (indecisive yet) between the house of darkness and the dwelling place of light in there
between, amidst the path is winding as though between two mountains
breasts, leak,
bleak, break, slit,
betwixt
alive, one walks through this path between two choices black
&
white one sometimes compromises taking the other colors between shades of gray

but until when?

ah, when one loses grasp
of air,
crumpled space, crumbling self, the die must ultimately be cast where are you?

there is fence out there
and you are
told to jump but where?

footnote
do not choose what you are choose what is right.
white hair
more furrows on the forehead less agility
loss of memory probing
forgetting and insecurities
abandonment
and pills and more therapies
and less care
of those we love
they who are also searching
for their destiny
chasing the good
they have in mind

sunset
we have become fading
and embracing another night
of our lives

flame
and ashes
gray and foul.

RIC S. BASTASA
5 6 7 8 9 10

5 letters, pride
6 syllables, i will be missing you 7 cigarette sticks
8 days of summer together 9 months again of waiting 10 years of discerning whether i deserve you or not.

RIC S. BASTASA
5 A.M. Port Of Pulawan

the port of pulawan
is insomniac,
it is the meaning of its name,
it does not sleep,
people here, even the children have deep sunken eyes like an old deep
well,

when you call a name,
it echoes deep down there and it comes back to you after a while, telling you

'there is no water here!'

when you arrive here, you call a name, and it is the same answer, like what their eyes
are saying,

in fact, shouting,
you hear it well,

a friend of yours with long hair disembarked immediately the sound of arrival faded with the smoke of the ship, he is met by your student who flunked the bar this year, the first time that you notice that this guy is limping, she carried a bag full of clothes, dirty ones from the hospital her mother has cancer of the lymph nodes and at terminal stage she has her only daughter who drops her samsung tablet on the floor of the boat nothing is broken,

they invite you for a ride in their old black car,
you shake your head, you want to wait somebody is coming,

the one you doubt you love says that she is coming to fetch you.

you want to go back to your way.
The sun shines. The sea is very calm.

The children are now wearing their deep sunken eyes.
Deep dry wells,
running out of water.

Pretty much like
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
late afternoon at 5: 10  i look at my watch.
darkness is coming like a grey blanket to the mountain.
i walk on this narrow path.
Grassy.
It means no one passes here as often.
Secluded path.
Less entered.
Or maybe forgotten.
Or maybe avoided.
Dangerous perhaps.
I walk on it for a time now.
No sound of birds.
Just darkness trying to steal every light of day.

And then i meet you.
My eyes are poor to sight now.
I see a shadow meeting me, and when we are too  near i see your smile. It is met with my smile too, like lovers.
I like them.
these smiles to be lovers anyhow.
I am thirsty.
I am hungry, for love.
Or even lust.
I am very hungry.Indeed i am very thirsty.

Then you pass by my shoulder on this narrow path.
You smell like a big basket of flowers, the champaca that i grow right in my own backyard that i always smell at night in my .

The cold air carries your perfume inside my nostrils.
It rebounds within the corners of my mind.
It seeps in my soul.It is absorbed like urine to a pamper.
It stays in my heart.
I am reborn.
My heart is restless again.
IT is you that i meet.
It is your perfume pervading on that narrow path deep down into the bonemarrow of my soul.

I like the dark clouds to, unstopping.
I like to run.
Anywhere.
I like to bathe
under the rain. I like to get wet all over.
I like to play a game under the rain. I like to be a child again. Hardheaded. Sick.
The ground where i stand is dry. My chest is empty and my body is fuming with hot lava like a volcano.
I like to erupt.

I like to undress and be naked.
I like to throw my hat to the trees.
My jacket to the wind.
My shoes to the forest.
My socks to the creeks.
My watch to the farthest skies.

I like to throw away this book of poetry that i keep inside my armpit.
I like to burn it even. I like its pages to be blown like leaves anywhere. Anywhere. I like them lost forever.

I like to jump into the river. I like to drown. I like to be lost at the bottom.I like to close my eyes. I like to be carried away.

i do not like to go back to the narrow path.
I do not like to meet you again and pass me by.
It is always like that.
Meeting. Opposite ways.
Perfumes that do not leave me.

Where does love live? what is her name?
I do not know you, Love.
Why is it always like that?
Opposite ways. Repulsion. I never felt what true love is. Obstructed. I don't know.
I was never embraced with the warmth of its armpits.
I am the air gushing, going and going, arriving at nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
the Catholic's church bells toll and the cocks are crowing the hens come down from their nests the songs of birds start to chatter

i am not through with these yet these lines
these musings

the morning is calling that i must get out from these convolutions undecided
i stay put
sit on a chair
and for a moment
close my eyes

and then i rise
and prepare my shoes
and cap
and coat
and then i say

yes!

RIC S. BASTASA
departure,
a rush of people escaping
the narrow door

bursting on the
road
towards home

you are here
with no place to go

the home
has turned into a mere house plain stairs
with closed door
unwashed window panes
the lawn a stranger to mowers

the dusts live here
and some
wishbones crushed
by a black dog

RIC S. BASTASA
5: 22 P.M.

in here
the insomniacs
start to wake up
and ask the world

where the hell
is ice cream?

RIC S. BASTASA
5: 28 In The Morning

ideas keep rushing like some leaves blown by the wind, this is different, i must agree, there is no choice, there is this bee that keeps on hovering on top of me and then suddenly stops to settle on my hair and stings my head and here, here, it must have mistaken me as a flower it stops asking for some nectar to sip i said, i don't have any for i am a man, not this flower in your mind and hey, look at this bee, it stings me, and i am swollen, and then it says, o my, indeed, you're human

i am sorry.

RIC S. BASTASA
5: 31a.M.

i am again listening to the sound of the cock crowing

the silence of the jalousie window still closed from the morning light the faint sound of the radio in the kitched where the housemaid does the cooking and the cleaning the sound of the broom cleaning the garage and the sliding of the rags wiping the car the little brown dog arrives from a kitchen door that just opened letting it in and here it comes as i write this licking my lap and wagging its short tail

i am feeling like i am the master of my world and i am not letting it go like some sand slipping through my fingers

i will take a bite of my own day like the way i take the slice of the sweet papaya laid on a glass table beside a toasted sandwich a slice of bacon and a hot black brewed coffee.
inside a chocolate porcelain cup.

RIC S. BASTASA
Years ago you climbed the mango tree On an alibi to see both of them

They talked in the sala of your house And went inside your room After they kissed
You did not wait for reason Before they Can undress
You shot him dead
You spared her
Your wife because you loved her

15 years in prison
You were released to find yourself

In this bigger prison Without love

All that you can find in her
And her children are barbed wires

Uncle John, tell me
Which do you prefer now?

RIC S. BASTASA
i sit beside you, i am a little drunk on this birthday party of an influential man and i remember you years ago you lectured on marriage and how marriage should be preserved not in a jar
but in a social millieu where everyone looks at you with respect you just retired from government service and your husband shall have his last year and you will be happier together on a planned cruise, a trip to israel, hongkong, thailand, and possibly europe and the united states of america, pure leisure, and i am a little drunk with fundador, and i had the courage to ask you in a joke

madam, what makes a marriage work?
my friends have already lived their own lives, broken marriages,
(and repaired the wounds of their heart) and you lifted a finger and made the f sign....

i don't believe it, you are saying, in a loud voice, overpowering the ballroom music,

it is all about sex, take note, she did not laugh at all, have a good sex life and everything will work out right.

i think i must believe her.
her face looks like a V.

RIC S. BASTASA
50th...

you like the way your hair denies yo ur age,
the way your language takes more color, the sunrises and rainbows you like your silence nothing incriminates you to the murder of old age

at 50, you gain more par value,

antique gold
bowl

sharp sword displayed still on glass cabinets useless...

RIC S. BASTASA
You are fed up
of being A little green turtle,

Wanting to fly
Seeing the clouds in the skies Drifting,

Pray for nature to change you Extend your tail much longer like The braided hair Of rapunzel,

Get off the house above you
And be a little bigger than what turtles are supposed to be And nothing greenish now,

Little green turtle
You can be white & flimsy and even taller

On some cellophane wings On a longer paper swinging tail On a proposed compromise Of become a summer kite

Inanimate

but steadily flying by a strong string with a boy pulling wherever you go

You still want it?

RIC S. BASTASA
many people who died old, have suggested to us how life should have been lived

'i should not have worked so hard i should have lived a life i desired i should have confessed my true love to my true object of my affection i should have taken the risk i should have expressed my truest feelings' then he died.

and we, and i, who heard all these in a whisper wanted to hear some more what ought to be what should have been what could have been

i could have been happier but it does not matter anymore i am left here to live my own style, my own recipe, my own cooking my own taste, and even if i die, it will remain definitely not for mass consumption.

i live this life, honestly or dishonestly, what matters most is i live and i shall not make any whispers even in my deathbed.

RIC S. BASTASA
father kills the black chicken and marks a cross of blood on the temple of the birthday celebrant he claims life is a matter of sacrifice a chicken dressed for something

The blood from the neck of the chicken gushes forth there is silence in this bloody ritual

between father and son inside both of them they hold that the spirits understand how they must be appeased from all ills and bad luck the son must be protected a father then washes the knife that killed the black chicken he is ready to kill someday somehow when

another human being just in case kills a son, that brute that base.

RIC S. BASTASA
My sister saw the black cat inside my monitor Black fur and sharp eyes Piercing like sharp claws Whiskers like catfish
In the mud,
It was staring at her
And felt its anger,

Of course, she did not like it,
She complains
Why of all screensavers

Anthurium (oh she loves Anthurium Red and white anthuriums)

Or four horses, white grazing horses, brown galloping horses
For some screensavers’ lucky charm,

Why the black cat
As screensaver?

It was just the head of the black cat,
Nothing else
Nothing more, popping up in the screen,
A black cat as wallpaper

(Like one that unzips automatically The zipless type)

And I am afraid she may not like
The sudden popping up,
She fears it may jump in front of her
And scratch her and totally scare her off Her years of Prudence,

And easy submission,
And her tradition,
Her sense of Propriety
And piety
It is indeed a delicate Issue

She had not seen, to my mind,
Anything yet,
The way I scratch my head
And turn it sidewise Once or twice to say no Ordinarily

And inside myself, I was laughing, She is scared
And funny
Skinny sister
Emaciated by too much Keeping
& unforgiving

I was not scared because
Anyway
She cannot understand
Me
My trauma at 2
My love at 15
My longings for all those years Carefree days in the river bathing naked
With some brusque
Friends and their passion for Carabaos
& then there were

Some sad stories about the cats in the alleys Black and white
Those that I really love and caress & Died and Those I cannot really mourn
& love
In the open
What will our neighbors say?
It is always the favorite question of my sister They would think that I am crazy
I am cheap
I am an embarrassment
I am a burden
And deserve nothing
The whole family will be hurt & suffer incessantly
Unnecessarily

As a matter of compromise
The cat, the black cat as screensaver Shall be changed tonight, But frankly, I love its Sharp black eyes
Warm long black furs
I would still touch them
In a dream
Slide its furs in my armpits
And I would giggle, giggle, giggle, and giggle Alone
Away
The whole night giggles, giggles, giggles and giggles Deep and
Dark

It is the being of giggling, the giggling,
Yes
My dear sister
It is the giggling
That counts in my being
The whole being

And I am telling no one
And I can’t tell anyone

Who is really interested about Dead black, foul cats, with black furs For jinx?
Anyway, I’ll save
In the ‘shared pictures”
The
Black cat, and in nocturnal Dreams I’ll have scratches
All over my body
Of this black cat

My decision to be unwise for once
Is now

I am laughing inside myself (ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha!)

I face her,
My skinny sister
Un-giving
She faces the black cat Sharp eyes facing her,
She sees the head of the black cat
And she can even touch My face because of that Certain closeness,

But she will never, never,
Never know
The real name of that black cat
And the new name I call myself

(Me, a name I call myself Fa a long long way to run)

Because, oh well, she never asked,
In the first place

RIC S. BASTASA
no word can abuse you you who is an expert in the resonances
of any syllable bled, bled, until there is no blood bloody, in the revolutions of silence you can look at words, they do not make any sound but oh, oh, how can they ever scream in death how loud, how loud can the wailing be how long the sobbing how patient the walls with more ears now how now can be so long how waiting can be so unfair with no one coming to be the same as the one whom you have lost in the cruel arms of lonely times..

RIC S. BASTASA
there are hiding places where people suffer authentically alone, where they learn to find nooks as temporary solutions. they have secret passages. Mantras of their own inventions. They have secret doors. Enigmatic selves learning the games of living.

There is an open park where we meet. Share moments. Buy popcorn. See kids, wait for sunsets. There are trees where we take shade. Where we have the illusion that we are one in this journey. We comfort our sorrows. Share our miseries.

There is a photograph of us. Wacky. There are times when some people are out of fashion. It is summer and they wear thick leather jackets. Boots where it could have been more comfortable with slippers.

There is a time not to talk about suffering. We choose law for its neutrality. Then we forget the left side of our brains. And that is where the small wars begin to swell.

It would have been wiser if we were monkeys. Playing with ropes and then staying on trees. Making love on branches and pushing partners to the edge.

When we leave those who are no longer useful. When we continue living with those whom we have started to hate.

I say, Life is like that. It is too hard to understand. No maps. Nothing straight. Not predictable. Not logical at all. Incoherent, and so...i can only have compassion.

RIC S. BASTASA
MY FRIEND

do not regret the wars we waged we lost

losing is just one step of the stair just one

be satisfied that we felt the pain everyone is avoiding it is the pain that makes us stronger it did not kill us, right?

RIC S. BASTASA
My sister saw the black cat inside my monitor Black fur and sharp eyes
Piercing like sharp claws
Whiskers like catfish
In the mud,
It was staring at her
And felt its anger,

Of course, she did not like it,
She complains
Why of all screensavers

Anthurium (oh she loves Anthurium Red and white anthuriums)

Or four horses, white grazing horses, brown galloping horses
For some screensavers’ lucky charm,

Why the black cat
As screensaver?

It was just the head of the black cat,
Nothing else
Nothing more, popping up in the screen,
A black cat as wallpaper

(Like one that unzips automatically
The zipless type),

And I am afraid she may not like
The sudden popping up,
She fears it may jump in front of her
And scratch her and totally scare her off Her years of Prudence,

And easy submission,
And her tradition,
Her sense of Propriety
And piety
It is indeed a delicate Issue

She had not seen, to my mind,
Anything yet,
The way I scratch my head
And turn it sidewise
Once or twice to say no
Ordinarily

And inside myself, I was laughing,
She is scared
And funny
Skinny sister
Emaciated by too much Keeping
& unforgiving

I was not scared because
Anyway
She cannot understand
Me
My trauma at 2
My love at 15
My longings for all those years Carefree days in the river bathing naked
With some brusque
Friends and their passion for
Carabaos
& then there were

Some sad stories about the cats in the alleys
Black and white
Those that I really love and caress &
Died and Those I cannot really mourn
& love
In the open
What will our neighbors say?
It is always the favorite question of my sister
They would think that I am crazy
I am cheap
I am an embarrassment
I am a burden
And deserve nothing
The whole family will be hurt & suffer incessantly
Unnecessarily

As a matter of compromise
The cat, the black cat as screensaver
Shall be changed tonight,
But frankly, I love its Sharp black eyes
Warm long black furs
I would still touch them
In a dream
Slide its furs in my armpits
And I would giggle, giggle, giggle, and giggle
Alone
Away
The whole night giggles, giggles, giggles and giggles Deep and
Dark

It is the being of giggling, the giggling,
Yes
My dear sister
It is the giggling
That counts in my being
The whole being

And I am telling no one
And I can’t tell anyone

Who is really interested about
Dead black, foul cats, with black furs
For jinx?
Anyway, I’ll save
In the ’shared pictures”
The
Black cat, and in nocturnal Dreams I’ll have scratches
All over my body
Of this black cat

My decision to be unwise for once
Is now

I am laughing inside myself (ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha!)

I face her,
My skinny sister
Un-giving
She faces the black cat
Sharp eyes facing her,
She sees the head of the black cat
And she can even touch
My face because of that Certain closeness,

But she will never, never,
Never know
The real name of that black cat
And the new name I call myself

(Me, a name I call myself Fa a long long way to run)

Because, oh well, she never asked,
In the first place

RIC S. BASTASA
I went out early this morning to take a walk and see the world
At its unfolding, Skies grey and moving slowly away from light, The dim lights, Pushing away dark clouds vice versa tugging each other Perhaps not wanting to part (Whatever happened last night? Nobody wants to recall) Towards an edge on the right corner of the gym, Everything is shadowy (Like a dawn tryst In a tight room so foul Filled with cheap perfume Beating warmth like Pink baby rats)

A black outline of coconut trees, Some houses appearing as smoke Rising to the skies Like men smoking, Letting go off The sighs inside their hearts
They are huge and keeps a chest full of Frogs wanting to jump Into the pond, their dreams croak and croak Throughout this hot summer Pleading to the white heronFor rain and more rain Lest they die

What arrived instead is the plow, Their territories cut into small pieces And some will have no place to live, I am referring to the frogs like men And the children Of the little space This pond drying itself To death. The air is thin and sharp to the feel Of guts Gathering the early dusts of the south bound road, And few raindrops Fell on the chalky pathways some two or Three farm children running for cover,

I walk fast, trying to outrun The children, the frogs, the men, And the shadowy coconut trees, Fast and faster still Like my thoughts running and running In circles Oval to this gym

The first ray is coming out From the edge of a grey cloud Pushed towards a darker side To my eyes Lights stab and light With more light Gushing forth from the stomach Of dawn.

Someone just performed The ritual of morning The birth Of another day, I walk past time And must go home on time I have my lover for breakfast Waiting And some thoughts Running and running thoughts wanting To stop.
he is in the middle of something Painful
Choosing between slashing his wrist with a blade Or firing a bullet in his head In the middle ambiguities he stopped

You called.

What if the blade slashed his wrist?
And blood squirted on the Floor like a basin of water Like falling tears On his cheeks

What if the gun fired?
And his brain spills on his chest

What if you did not call?

It is the middle of pain It is the middle of confusing things Sometimes, it is the middle That saves.

Luck.

RIC S. BASTASA
HOPE FROM THE CRACKS

from all the cracks of our misfortunes

a seed will grow

the cracks are the spacious rooms

for roots
to spread and hold on
to.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hell is Other people
So now rise up Lazarus and Just Be yourself learn learn To talk and laugh at Yourself, Lazarus From the dead of the commons From the rotten flesh of the others among the rest Rise up Rise up And be yourself again A pine among the redwoods A duck among the geese Don’t bother now Being yourself is redemption enough

RIC S. BASTASA
Riding on winged lines
We shall flock like doves
In the rain
So the fire in our breasts Shall not die

In the hideout of flowers Soft reeds and singing marshes Where the moon sleeps Throughout the night
We are all watchful eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
BECAUSE YOU LOVE HER, DESPITE

when someone tells you that you are dumb be dumber
when someone treats you like a poor being be poorer
when someone treats you like a flower vase or a wall
be the flower vase or the wall you are not dumb, you are not poor, you are a flower and you are a stair not just a vase or a wall tell that someone exactly about what you are in all smartness, agility and beauty tell her, you just want to make her happy. even by being what you are not.

RIC S. BASTASA
for you to know

I am lonely here like a deserted room In the city
My windows refuse the orange moon
The sad calls only
Of the sea
Keep penetrating

My writing table has not grown words Of beautiful shapes Stunted scribblings only By the wooden walls
And the lizards’ trails
On the hot ceiling Keep streaking

such weird acidity stinking sticking
the day rains detest this happening

i am waste liquid
splattered on cold floors fetid urine slowly drying throughout summer

RIC S. BASTASA
sometimes the wasted time of regret
one that is always done on the very first hour of the morning
are the favorite times of vacillation
procrastinate, procrastinate perhaps because you do not really like to do the oughts
of your life, the bread and butter things, unartistic, unpleasing to your senses and so you do always what you do not want to be done (under a state of sinfulness) stammering, stumbling upon a shit and still composed poised
as though nothing annihilating happens

RIC S. BASTASA
when it rains
you worry none for you always bring the umbrella
with you

there are those who brave the rain
and will not open an umbrella to show their dissent
	hey are those whom you call different for unlike you
you studied well the laws of comfort
and subservience
not minding the ways of the abusive Rain
the faulty Canals
the acidity of the clime the foulness of the Ruins.

RIC S. BASTASA
6 O'Clock In The Morning At Knas Gym

i sit on the tenth stair of this public gym of this university overlooking an oval a field of green grass circled by this road of sand and gravel and muddy on some occasional rains three men all covered, head and body and feet from a distance carry the sprayers on their backs, the usual pesticide to kill the army worms that attack the rice plants the air has turned poisonous, i can see the killer mist around them as they keep on pumping the tubes at their backs i ponder on the significance of men poisoning its atmosphere, adulterating the freshest air in the morning that nature has freely given some white herons come flying on some green spots of the field perhaps eating the worms and bugs killed by the poisoned droplets i guess with the poisoned worms for their diet i have read sometime their eggs will turn off-white, and the shells are weakened and the chicks feed by their poisoned blood may not even grow to be stronger birds some eggs will not experience hatching and the white herons cannot do a thing about their misery some dogs too come by perhaps curious about the smell of the morning air, a black dog runs around the oval, a white dog stays lying on one of the manmade dikes the poisoning takes about an hour and when it is over the men take of their clothes and wipe their bodies on the same clothes

some of them i heard have suffered diseases like bloated livers and soft bones and they die without having seen the right doctors, they are poor hired workers of this college i look around me, the sun finally comes out it is still a very fine day i suppose, the mist is gone, the rice plants are greener than ever,

and then i take my usual walk, thinking again, for all that men do, poisoning and destroying nature, will there be revenge? retaliation? repercussion?

i am crazy. How can nature ever speak?

RIC S. BASTASA
6: 25 P.M.

it is dark now another war shall be fought not between the muslims and the christians

not the New People's Army and this government

these wars never end like a circle of violence begetting another violence outside and inside

us.

this is the war of myself
to myself
on a night that ends on the light that comes on another dusk and early mornings
and noons
and afternoons

like this circle without beginning
without end
this violence upon myself unto myself
and from myself

this inability to find the tunnel and the light
at the end

that opening night murmurs

1. You cannot lock the door Now, night shall open it For fireflies to come in They slept in hiding

Like you, fireflies fly away Pallid cowards from rain Lest their lights die in the mist

You wait by the door

As true stars come again Lighting night skies My Fireflies shall reveal Inferior flickers under The now, brimming Skies bursting
II.
How many full moons passed Past your sad window?
Your fingers cannot tell They’re used to gripping Rusty doorknobs
A great deal to ancestry Our human hands corroded We cannot reach nor outrun Rust becomes us

III.
If we listen to dawn dreams
We shall hear prophets scream
Nothing
To a mutter

One speaks of the underworld so endless Unmoving as the sky stretches a distance of lies No farther
Or it will break

There are no skies no caves No edges no space
Nothing
To whisper

IV.
We are shooting stars in space Shot into nothing Yet we keep on shooting

For the moment
We close down
We set strong feet on land Like steel gates stilled

We look into our eyes Tears are dwindling
Thus far, we cannot cease fearing For nothing

V.
There is God
As the world keeps ears
For each earthworm in the void

He shall hear us Shouting the questions Dinning, Rocking the ruckus of cumulus
In this outcry

He shall know us
By eyes and mouth
By hand by footprints
And the grasses covering all

RIC S. BASTASA
alcoholic drinks
are measured by their percent proof,

For example,
a 'six proof' beer
would have 3% alcohol,
barely any,
while a strong liqueur that advertised it was 80 proof would have 40% alcohol.

It isn't, however, quite that simple...

there are other complications, but that is not my point
here,

what about poetry?

what kind of proof is this poetry that makes you drunk?

or do you want something to make you sober?

you get high?
you want to?
ah, try putting alcohol in your
words,
give it the kind of proof
needed,
then say, ahh,
this is real poetry
this certain relief from the harsh realities of our lives,

dthis ahhh,
ahhhh, ahhhh
oh God!

RIC S. BASTASA
TRANSFORMATION

A bud sighs a question into the air
The question
Diffuses
Layer by layer
Into another sphere

The bud
Blooms
Into flower

Waiting sadly
It wishes to wither faster To trace the question Gone away

RIC S. BASTASA
Keeping a Journal

i have long wanted to read you complicated as whodunnit story mysterious as the catacombs their silence tied to the blueness of their lips but you are never written yet syllables are chained inside your fingers slaves of your self chosen idleness what crazy mind will admit that you have gone where you ought not to be i myself cannot be frank enough to tell you the situation will always be the same as i write my intention is always not to be clearly understood so as to keep you interested in the haze, the fog, the mist that covering that keeps you safe in your foxhole

these are our dangerous times and the only way to be safe is to be ambiguous i have long wished to hear from your storms but you are spreading them some other place

i could have been happy reading nothing hearing nothing but my own storms have their own ways
too.

here they are. I am standing strong by the port by the sea
i am meeting all of them and i am writing not for you to know but only to keep myself posted as to what is really happening for words have their own way of putting things and places and people in their stillness now, i myself can see. i can view what i feel.
The x-ray plates are there. Behind is the light.
I am sitting in front. I have, too, a way of clearly reading myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
father and son

For quite a time you sail Like a paper boat on this river Then you want a change In these little things you get You feel you deserve
To fly and be this kite On air and face the Rage of storms
You are proud of it Claiming you have managed Yourself so well

Sufficient, until the cord was Cut,
Now I have to find you where You landed
With some broken bones
From this cliff
To the rugged terrains
Of that mountain

RIC S. BASTASA
after the storm
we see two dead trees drifting on the river dead trees move in the same direction always towards the sea

we are on the same river drifting too with time we are too light we have set aside our burdens i am like the black crow flying towards the blue mountain searching for what i do not yet know i like you are the seagull towards the sea looking for fish that delights you in your dream

RIC S. BASTASA
THE KIND OF SILENCE THAT I NEED

In the naked light
i only want to see you
if it pains you
i do not have to touch what light is there let me kiss the darkness and then leave it
waiting for the silence of the kind of light that you love.

RIC S. BASTASA
To them he is an engineer and she is a lawyer

at first glance they are statutes of stable vocations the boat is steady on the water and there is no storm coming both are lonely in their thirties they are thirsty and sit on the same table at the canteen

i am not a lawyer she tells him i am a woman

me too, he answers her i am not an engineer i am a man from the window the sea hums a new song to the hot coffee and toasted bread the go inside the cabin the storm arrives and the boat rocks to the surface of the sea

like a woman on top of a man.

RIC S. BASTASA
but sorry, i have a soul, i have a life of my own, it's never the same without you oh i will miss your beautiful anger but sorry, i have a soul, i have a life

of my own,

i change heart, and i am listening to another beat this time you have effectively set me free and i like it better now: i am myself

again.

RIC S. BASTASA
stained and even

It was only one dirty word You had thrown in my face My right eye caught it like it Were a hand
My tears carried the word Like a virus to my veins Infecting all my organs As I got sick the following days
Of my life

I know what happens next But I cannot just die until I vomit that dirty word That now I throw back At you, then the rest becomes History,

Some eulogies are written
As a compromise
Of this hate,
This one is for you
That you rest in peace
As I wait
For my own peace too
In my own time sooner Than tomorrow.

RIC S. BASTASA
WISDOM

there is wisdom in the birds
the sky
there is wisdom on the grass wisdom in the river there is wisdom in the sea even in the stone there is wisdom in the leaves so much wisdom underneath the trees
treasure in their roots

those that do not speak there is so much wisdom in them in their natural silence there is, and this is what we think, so much wisdom in ourselves gifted as we are with mouths that speak but the more we open our mouths the less wise we become to them, to those who never speak a word

to us
perhaps all they do is listen to us as we appear too foolish to them in our noise

there is so much wisdom in God and like them, those who like the trees and the posts with their lights shining at night,

and
the sun and the moon who stand still amid the chaos,

He has not spoken ever since.
Him i have not heard Speaking to a man named Moses burning once as a bush never consumed by its own
fire
telling once that in a holy place we have to leave our sandals and go barefoot
for once.

RIC S. BASTASA
FACEBOOK

This is a collection of happy faces most of the time
on a vacation, a tour you say,

china, hongkong, macau,
the U.S.A.
Phuket, bali,
budapest, brazil
vienna, london,

on poses like yaki-yaki selfie-selfie,
flyie-flyie in the airie airie no one wants to confront reality of a disease,

a weak heart, a pain in the ass,
a dying situation,
a life in prison, a life in waste, it seems then that happiness is everybody's business not sadness or misfortune not death or decay

when you start crying, true to the saying, you cry alone when you are lucky wins a lotto, or gains on a venture now, you've got what you have to do flow with the mob have facebook.

better than having drinks that go beyond the limits of your sanity better than suicide.

Cheers!

RIC S. BASTASA
Myself with you.

You cannot stop this engine From running
Fed as it is with the nuclear energy Of self-determination

You cannot block this again with Any call for kindness your face of sobriety & propriety Sustained as it is with the pride Of its sufficiency, this engine of life

Away from human drama this engine Of love and belief of self Plunges into an eternal destination Or damnation, or whatever

This engine must go, on and on Unstoppable unconquered unhindered This engine I call

Myself with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
My hands holding some shadows
On white laces and flowing Whiteness of dress
You walk towards a breezy Shore on some dreams Your black long hair flowing Blown against your direction Your soft hands touch your face In disbelief
Why this sadness must come and Happen and linger
In your almond eyes

Sadness like the night Hovers you except for a surprise You hum our song
From your heart
And though faraway I will always Be there
My hands holding some shadows
To comfort you

RIC S. BASTASA
a boy looks at the little bird inside a cage. it is perhaps thinking that it is too beautiful to hold.
to touch the feathers, and feel its beak and claws.

i am looking at the little boy's face he is another innocent angel trapped too in the cage of this earth there will be happy moments but soon when he grows up he will make a sum of everything i do not want him to agree with my negative summation. i, too was trapped, like a fly unable to move in the bounds of the spider.

i once saw that spider inside my dreams.
it was about to eat me when i finally wake up.

so this is it: a boy looks at the bird inside a cage i look at the boy's face, a spider looks at me, and then we keep summing up things.

we all fall short of what is expected. the spider has not eaten the fly. The fly has not escaped.
Like the bird. Like the boy who is getting inside the cage.
Like me who is finding a way to open another cage myself.

we all dream that we soon shall wake up.

RIC S. BASTASA
What are we? what can we become?

We can be just snails if we want to,
But we can be sparrows too,
We must choose, we cannot just be silent & undecided
Forever,
If we choose to be snails Then we will know what we want We want a river and some palms To plan our slow travels, If we choose to be sparrows then We at least know what to do next, We shall grow beaks, and wings, and Soon we need the sharp claws too To defend ourselves

At least we also know what we need, Just nests to lay our small eggs, Twigs of trees to rest upon Our weary bodies,

We choose what we are
To become what we can be,
We start on that decision, and then We will see what suits us To be the best from the rest, Who still ask

What are we? what can we become?

RIC S. BASTASA
The true the good and the beautiful

They go together & so even if you are good but not true then you are not beautiful, and even if you are beautiful but you are not true then you are not good or even if you are true but then you are not good

then you are not beautiful

always remember that they always go together so for you to be beautiful and really beautiful you must be also good and you must be always true, this is the goodness of truth and its beauty that all depends on you, now i can go, so please be the true, the good and the beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
staring at you

We sound the same
I mimicked you for twelve years Like a mynah bird
Your choice of words
Your accent
Nasal like the American guest professor of ateneo de manila university

To a certain point
I wanted to be like you.

One night I went out
Of my body
Like a wind
I went into you as you breathe For air

I took the tours
In your mind and detours in your heart And even in the sensitive Places of your loins & groins
To find what is in you
That I love

I stayed longer in the chambers
Of your heart
On a closer scan of your arteries a closer, careful look

I did not find you there I did not even see My picture of my face that you said You really love

We sound the same I thought We were never alike
We have never really spoken i am shaken

Now I am back in my body
To be myself, this time just be myself

Staring at you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A FRIEND'S POEM FOR SOMEONE

do not love me i have nothing to give

not even the honesty that you expect

do not follow me i have no direction

do not say that because
you love me

then everything will be alright, far from it

when you force love
upon my hair

what do i have? a crown of thorns

when you insist that things will be as they will be

i begin to wish that i become air again

invisible, cold, and wandering.

RIC S. BASTASA
ONE That tells me
the true color of my soul
intimacies like vine
to a tree
faithfulness like
the sun to the mountain
shining on early mornings
without fail
one that i am at home with
with others are
taken by the storms of
my confusions
and needs
one who takes me for
what i am
identifies with me
during my
crucifixions
one who stands by me
when i sink as a ship
abandoned by
all the rats
and cockroaches
water to my pail
air to my lungs
sugar to my coffee
lemon to my
honey.

RIC S. BASTASA
7,8,9....

and why is six afraid of seven?

(pause)

because seven ate nine.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am wrong going back to all those old pictures

about youth, smiles, hugs, kisses romance, fair weather, seagulls, ports, mountain climbs, spring dips, ice cream licks, grapes in my hands, pillows on warm beds,
walk in the countryside river baths, home cooking, grandma's sweets,
papa's horses, old furniture clan parties, December breaks

i am trying to shake old and dying hands trying to talk to the dead ancestors asking them where i have gone wrong and what i am to do next my head aches, my heart is anxious, it is midnight and i cannot sleep i am back to something to appease

myself
whatever that is and i do not care if it is fake
if it is an illusion

what i need is something tranquil something that old solitude can offer how much is peace? how much is love? you are right, i can't afford it.

RIC S. BASTASA
I know you are there and I know you understand

What I am saying,
I say from my heart
Two faces, happy & sad, Hate & love in one body,
And you see them
In the mirror as you shake your hair For some lies, combing some truths For me to gaze upon like I am This woman asking from your crystal ball

What happens tomorrow?
When I am alone and he is gone, Do I have to speak in riddles for you to Really find the answers? No, I don’t because I am candid about feelings, Ask me again if I am happy And I will show you some scars.

I know you are there and I know you understand

When I tell you that I am crying and sobbing On a laptop of stories, He will neither hear me nor you, but we will all be here, In this tragedy of the hearts

Of two faces, happy & sad, and hate & love, and hate & love, Wanting to go but also wanting to stay I know you are there and I know you understand, stay, and stay

I will be going away but only for a while.

RIC S. BASTASA
the time has come when each of you shall be designated by a mere number and just like what happens to those who die without a name without a face so shall each of you also die without a trace

the gas chambers of Auschwitz again shall send the foul odored smoke to the clear serene skies

i see all of you silently weeping.

RIC S. BASTASA
DIRTY POLITICS

for one to live as smoothly as it used to be one must be three monkeys hear nothing, say nothing and see nothing

the three monkeys live
inside you

see yourself in the mirror what a huge tree!

RIC S. BASTASA
SHAPELESS

i will be leaving
places,
places where the dwellers always live on rules i feel like dammed, you know what a dam is?
it prevents waters
from falling naturally walls have always something or someone to protect and rules are made by masters
am no slave.
and i protect no one.
i am water. i take shape in my own thoughts.
anyway, if you are free, your shape is
shapeless.

RIC S. BASTASA
for how did each of them here care for you?
they only think of themselves and their children and their mothers and fathers
their land, their memories, their vacations, themselves and their reflections in their mirrors

how selfish have they become unlike what their roots have done to their soils now what they must take are nothing but numbers there are no scents there are no colors but numbness and they all deserve that their indifference must go back to their houses and their kitchens shall have neither salt nor sugar neither flame nor ice

now they must thrive on their own hatred and being lost they shall not find their way back home

RIC S. BASTASA
i have nothing to ask of you or of myself i have been here and have slept on the coolness of grasses and i have seen the rainbow all complete with its array of colors i heard the black bird sing and so is that white bird on the roof of my house doves and crows
and cars and wheelbarrows

i have loved and lost and loved and won there is nothing to prove there is nothing to show time tells us in the dusk that it will end somewhere someday like a fortuneteller covering her head with a black headdress i am not awed and neither i ask i am not curious anymore i listed to the flow of the river it is the music to my ear

i am fed up with all these big and little things in my palms let them all be birds and butterflies let them all fly away and let them all not come back

RIC S. BASTASA
someone out there is awake, even in the middle of the night inside a room
all alone

i know it. i do not see it. i can feel it.
you are with me
one in this, one in this silence, one in this pressing of keys, without looking at the letters riding on the memory of our fingertips someone out there wants to be free, from the walls of his self-imposed unhappiness someone out there is asleep, beside someone who is awake staring at the ceiling, not wanting any light from any bulb someone out there travels, beyond, beyond the limitations of dreams, beyond dreams in chant, repeating, and repeating, hoping to just forget what is pain in everything.

RIC S. BASTASA
you ask me what is happening what am i doing
where and why?

follow the numbers, and let the numbers tell you with words each word

fathom the depths and wallow in the shallow portions rinse and then die

believe in the glow of suds their lightness and then float yourself away

RIC S. BASTASA
THE MAN WHO LOVES BOOKS

he did not have courage to tell you
that he is in love with his books
his body spent in his readings
his mind lost in the pages of a story

but keep in hoping for fire

may it burn his library
may it make him run away from his books

may he see you again like the first time

RIC S. BASTASA
Don't give in to discouragement.
If you are discouraged it is a sign of pride because it shows you trust in your own powers.

Never bother about people's opinions.
Be obedient to truth.
For with humble obedience, you will never be disturbed.

- Bl. Mother Teresa of Calcutta

RIC S. BASTASA
and He regretted having made him
for in his hearth
there is nothing but ever and arrogance

except for Noah and so the Ark
was made, and be glad you're one of them still here
writing your poem
and be sad
you have forgotten
the gospel
and you have set aside the psalms

are they not poems
too?

come to think of it
how much time has been wasted
in your doggerel?

RIC S. BASTASA
something will always be new one which you have forgotten you make it come back and it becomes alive and it will be new again and what a pity
when you yourself inflict that sweet pain again.

RIC S. BASTASA
actually i do not talk much about this and that if you ask me now, this moment, forgive me but i am ready with a sack

of lies filled with rice grains of excuses to feed my hunger for truth, sorry

but i need to feed my lean days and you will see how hard it is when summer comes with nothing but tin roof on our heads
for shelter,

hot we are familiar about what hot is,
how hot is it when we mean hot this Philippine summer
in this city
and you must not have the nerve to tell me
to cool my skin
like i am your tamed reptile a snake perhaps or the turtle that you once knew me to be,

time has changed my shape and way of looking at the river
you do not know how i have made ties with the frogs wishing for the heron to come to eat us and we learned our lesson so well,

we made more slime, and poisonous tumors in our skins to protect us, they tell you this story i was there then
and compromised a little with how my life has to be managed,

chameleon, iguana, hot days, sandstorms, some easy preys
to our feeding times,
dark lonely nights with the timid moon heavy rains at times and flood that forced us to stay on cliffs for months, i have learned these all years, we have not met and one day we meet again on the hills filled with flowers
and friendly air,

you are so confident, and you touch me
but i am already harmful, the way i make you feel sends you the signals of second thoughts there is a little distance
between you and me
and in between is the doubt and questions

you touch me again
i feel so cold and you felt the danger of this reptile

RIC S. BASTASA
how do you go away?

going away may mean what means you use in going away a truck where you also leave some dusts for them to remember as they wipe out their tears and dust off their feet, or you take a boat where all the chances of waving your hands after a long story is told,
when the bells of the boat make the sound of warning for the well-wishers to take their time out of the floating moment, then the loud siren shouts, a boat load of memories taken a bag ful of hidden resentments sails aways with you, or you take the jetplane where some sentiments are written on air,
clouds not necessarily bursting with joy as you leave suddenly, away from them someone you do not like to see anymore something you want discarded from your life: the pain inside your heart cease, that is your word for going away, but most of the time you just slam the door pick yourself, carry what you have not spoken, and walk away, just like that never looking back

you only have a handkerchief to comfort you and you go on with your life surviving on the salt of your dried tears the unkind words you keep with you to support you for the coming days, you are sad for a while, and then you are free.

pretenses

this is what they want to see of you

a handsome face, strong arms, clean fingernails,
broad shoulders,
determined eyes that look always forward scented ears
the best feet and
good standing,

to please them
you give those parts to all to them and what you will get in return is the
applause,

everybody is happy,
except you,
it was not you,
it will never be you,
you are in truth not the one that you really are you only comply what what they want to see and surely they will get them they will get what they see

you go inside your room slowly disassemble yourself all those beautiful parts

a handsome face, strong arms, clean fingernails,
broad shoulders,
determined eyes that look always forward
scented ears
the best feet and
good standing,
you lie in your bed without looking at the mirror it takes only the rattling of your bones to tell you who you really are then you close your weary eyes and sleep

the dream will join you in these truths

RIC S. BASTASA
what appears is what it is
that is how simple it is
and how beautiful can it be

a petal of a flower is nothing
but a petal of a flower
falling to the ground on a
windless day
caused by no other than
this pull of gravity

we watch a world unfolding
we only use words because there is a need to write
what beautiful thing we have seen

but there is more to the simplicity of all these things
those that we have seen and felt and
cannot completely tell you
even in the most simple words of our poetry

the experience of beauty is so personal
like how i experience the poetry of the heart it is like this, no, it is like this... words fail now

(........)

RIC S. BASTASA
8 Steps More

8 steps more
and this little stone hurting my feet 7 6 5 there is a
black bird
hovering on my head 4 3
2 1

at last i am with you kissing your feet

and then you kick
me out

i hold on to a twig
i am this cliffhanger

then you kick me again until i fall

1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9
and ten

i am back in your arms now taking revenge
inside your heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
8: 45 P.M.

i had this chance
of seeing you
eating
in my favorite restaurant

you have beer
and some chicken barbecue and chili sauce
and some sticks of cigarettes

i know you
have seen me
first
and in hiding your greed and selfishness

you got hold of your cellphone press some numbers
and letters
and pretend
you are so engrossed
with something
else

i very well understand how the hardtimes
convinced
you
to take the shame
of eating
alone

and simply forget all the hungry children
in our home
the new light has come from on my jalousie windows the first thing i do in the morning is write my new poem borne of the night

too weary to dream but this poem keeps on stalking always wanting to be written write,

stare to space and let that stare linger for a while like gathering some dust in air or spraying the air with your shower of thoughts speak
to yourself
like reminding yourself with words that have become too unfamiliar because they are not spoken words too get impatient and jealous because of unuse and furious too because of abuse words too have lives of their own and even feelings of their own so you are telling me be cautious be too patient and considerate be compassionate

be strong
be happy be prayerful

i write the words again on the positive side of things the happier
hopeful categories

i open some shutters slide some thoughts
inser my gaze and spread some scrutinies

i am seeing a new light from the jalousies

it is the soft morning light and i really like it

i stand still and look above this room down to the things
below me

i see people moving wearing the uniform
to their offices
they go

i almost forget,
it is a working day also for me.
the morning light has enticed me again, i repeat, my friend, i still like it

here.

RIC S. BASTASA
WHEN JUSTICE FAILS

when justice fails because the constable has blundered do not be surprised, do not even be discouraged, proceed in procuring justice still with the way how you are trained to do so,
get the fingerprints of your thoughts and present the same to those who doubt and wavered, show them the intricate lines of your own determinations this is how it must be done there is still a map of this destination, when justice fails because the judge and justices have also lost their sense what justice is and how it should be dispensed like a blindfolded lady that you misunderstand with her scales on one hand and a sword on the other,

do not be shaken, do not lose hope, heave a sigh and breathe the remaining clean air, there are still those who in silence still remain steadfast holding on to truth and keeping their hands clean and hearts pure and minds active to the pursuit of this eternal approximation of fairness
there are still those whose eyes still daze to the glitters not of gold but of truth, beauty, and goodness, i will count you in please count me in too

and how about you?
i ask, please be counted we shall stand on the good side of things we shall look for the brightest star the ideal from among the blunders in the darkness of our nights let the hammer fall and let it fall everyday let those in the dark side have their houses full there are walls there are ceilings there are wall here and there are ears who listen so well and eyes who see too clearly

you,
there are ceilings too
there are limits to what you can do there are floors
between
you
now the cup has overflowed the dams break out a flood will cover you, the floor meets the ceiling and you are sandwiched like a witch,

see..how you crumple?

RIC S. BASTASA
THE VIRTUE OF NON-REPETITION

I like to love without traces to sing without any echo and just to be myself without a name tag

To be lost without fear
To be a question without an answer

To be found again without my knowing it To stay put in my chosen prison

To write a poem without a period To be and just another speck to eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
you must know i only uttered i love you once speaking of love, yes, love, what can i say about love, i cannot speak it without using the word

you, it is always you, because without you, love cannot even exist as a word, or even a thought or even a waft of air to cool my senses,
without you,
love cannot even exist as a blood cell in my heart or a vein or a chamber where love usually sleeps,
it is you,
always it is you that i will always equate with love, you must know
i only uttered i love you once, and it was true, and it is still true,
the rest
are the words of the drunk man, the broken heart trying to relive what was once truly uttered, reenacting,
imitating but always falling short of the truth
years ago
again the words kneeled before God in an old church
with you
our hands may have clasped in prayer
if you remember
our hands finally found each other touching and holding tight as i said

i love you

as you said

i love you too

that was many years ago, truth does not know how to die, true love lives in that
i love you,

forever, always,
you,

i love you,

wherever you are now,

you
must know,
that is the truth that until now

i live

that until now

i am living and thinking still only of you...........

RIC S. BASTASA
my silence shall be

i find this in the forest of trees long trees, shady, such that what you can see are only shadows of leaves and what you hear is only the sound of the wind choked between tight walls, this is my silence,
moist, and soft, between a growth of wild ferns rotten leaves heaps and heaps of rotten leaves
layer after layer of rotten leaves thick and pushed still to the roots smashed to the ground some seeds from the oaks or maybe from the flowers of the orchids or some sweet fruits and red berries fall
in there
and they begin to grow rich as humus is this soil down the darkness of this forest, this is my silence
deep inside me
moist, rotten, but soon lots shall grow
seeds turning into sprouts to trees again
perhaps taller than ever some fruits so sweet and colored and shiny some flowers scented and so lovely, this my silence
shall be, i am keeping it for years

RIC S. BASTASA
i wish i have a mouth that knows how to speak my love i wish i have this kind of mouth that knows to speak about my love one that opens so easily and dashes with words like you know i love you, tell me, do you love me too?

a candid mouth, like a shrew who gambles with words and will not mind losing a mouth who kisses your mouth without shame and if shamed because you slap it does not bother at all, one who says, why hide love, why not pour love like a strong wine to a chalice and let it warm the glass and let the glass be nothing but a glass

one that does not mind at all, one that loves and if not loved in return takes the other possibilities without regrets
or pain,

the mouth that i have is closed and will not open afraid
i have kept the words

i love you only for you like a worm inside my tongue, wriggling

turning into a little butterfly that never had the chance to see what is outside and feel the freedom of air,
yesterday
it died and i keep it for the whole night now, i spit it out and my mouth closed again eating only silence while you just watch there

asking me
and i said there is nothing to worry nothing at all
i just don't feel anything and there is nothing worth saying, i look at you as you go, i hold only to your shadow and you will never never never know,

this

RIC S. BASTASA
my heart is yours but it is destined to wander far my heart is yours, all yours, it beats to the beating of your heart feeling nothing but you all those all these years it has the hands of your hands it sees what your eyes see it was born for you it will stay for you and die for you only if you ask

but you didn't you did not entice it with the breath of your heart and so slighted
my heart shall wander faraway gasping for breath wanting to die
this moment
but you
do not really mind you think it is nothing there inside me like it is a tumor malignant
malignant, it is dying and you see it wandering away gasping for breath while you look
away
and find someone else among the stars....

RIC S. BASTASA
this is the time
for silence

we pause for a while

a minute of silence
will do

as tribute for the dead

a minute of silence
too

for ourselves
as we give our hands a chance to do their works.

RIC S. BASTASA
Remember that time you made the wish?

I make a lot of wishes.

The time I lied to you about the butterfly. I always wondered what you wished for.

What do you think I wished for?

I don't know. That I'd come back, that we'd somehow be together in the end.

I wished for what I always wish for. I wished for another poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
i just had the number 88 inside my head.

it is not a grade
not money.

it is a mark of what i have done on the other side
of my life.

i outlive 3,000
going on to 4,000
i clap my hands, give myself a toast of red wine
when i had my first 1,000

you must remember my 1,000 cranes paper cranes paper poems on cranes and other creatures like butterflies and birds and wind and dust they have taken upon themselves the burden of flight they promise me and i have it now.

88, is my new number now. i am inside an elevator and i am going up with you to the nth floor.

RIC S. BASTASA
WE'RE NOT THE ELITE

whatever little we have we give to everyone:

the old man without a cane, a woman without a face, a seaman without a compass, a child without a crib, even to the rich man without a heart or those who without feet dance with the gods nymphs without wings satyrs without their hoofs, to the dogs without voices some left-overs, whatever word we have we sow even to hostile fields of snow whatever warmth we have we dissipate even to rails whose arms are numb to the winds we are nobody we have names that do not ring a bell to you yet we give we do not store

we spread

we suffer
and in the hope that whatever flies away from us shall diminish
these pains
we dream of wings
we acquire them
only to be given away to birds
whose wings
are clipped
by you.
Gone Were The Days

when you were a child and you told the emperor without second thoughts no holds bar that he is wearing no clothes at all that his ass is too small and that his brain is even smaller

RIC S. BASTASA
ask me

ask me what i wish for in my life

ask me what i do everyday

i will have lots of answers, my wish to be with you at the end as she once wrote it, was a lie, my wish to hold your hand when we meet again, as she once confessed was also a lie, my wish is a lie, i will tell you now, my wish to love you forever, still a lie, ask me then what is it that is true?
it is only me that is true, from the very beginning of my birth
it is only me
that is true, loving myself, working out to love myself first, so that i may love you as my first wish, then you must ask me what i do
everyday,
office work, 7:30 to 11:30, back to office work, 1:30 to 5:00
it is not me there,
we talk, it is not me there in that conversation, it is all work, it is all this obligations to my earth,
i owe my birth,
but i go back in my hole, this home, one day, and everyday, face the computer, plant my feet on the floor, glue my bottoms on the chair, bind my finger on every letter of the keyboard where i heave some sighs, hurl my words, run the lines that never stop, and mimic some great men and women,
i sit all night shunning sleep, i write, ask me what is happening,

i am making myself a self, now look at me carefully,
i may be true at least when i begin writing the first word in this
poem,

ask.

RIC S. BASTASA
if you leave leave at once for i have nothing
to say,

others ask what to say when someone you love says about leaving?

i say
go, go, find what is lacking find that which must complete you and if you are empty still do not come back to me for i am empty too

how can emptiness fill another
emptiness?
mine will always be an invitation i care
but once refused
there is no where where you can find me i am also gone searching what you have been searching but now it shall not be you
i'll have someone else who can fill
my own emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
there will be so much ruin, if i change, there is no need or if there be i do not wish that this too can ruin you let the days pass like routine old buses, worn out cabs, rusty jeepneys same parks, dusty roads, littered seas, watch capsized boats easy-rides turning turtles chaos is fun, disorder is order the menu for the day is always always expect some stars tonight hope for the full moon you see, it is a matter of seeing, and what matters is the moment feeling feeling this always as always this sense of forever that we sense we know shall come and take us like passing days

RIC S. BASTASA
your eyes in that picture insist on asking why well, i was yet 15 but i already keep a photograph of you in my pocket, you are the face of my heart beat in black and white i often kiss your tiny lips and put you on my chest as though i feel you one with me in my sleep, that was long time ago and the picture suffered with the way i was keeping it inside my old poetry books in those pages eaten by bookworms some scratches ultimately are inflicted in your cheeks and even your lips have become empty spaces blurred by time what keeps insistent however are your eyes stripped of a nose and lips and even a neck thriving on lesser hair and thin ears yhey float in that picture still looking at me asking

why?

RIC S. BASTASA
about the ash from Yuri N., she writes it

I once knew
a lady at our church
who played the piano -
Her name was Naomi...
she was quiet,
maybe insignificant...
but I knew her (only from church) ...
when I heard one Sunday
that she had died
and had been buried
without me knowing,
I grieved for days....
that was 8 years ago...
I still sometimes
think of her,
thinking that,
in some way
she enriched my life -
I cannot remember
her piano-playing,
but I still grieve
nevertheless....

RIC S. BASTASA
when i wrote the words i love you i miss you i want you you will by chance read these ordinary lines that a lover says to another lover faraway, oh! My God! you really tore your heart out of your chest and threw on the computer stand when you write these lines they are ordinarily said, let me tell you again, i love you i miss you i want you on my side, the musings sound like you and i have met and kissed in the subway of strangeness as i hold your hands like you are a train bar so i may not fall away and die like a stupid bum, but i write lines of love and missing as i am born to love and miss those unloved and unfound, what for too is my loneliness and being messy, got to go now, you did not tell me your name, and i did not tell mine, we do not find any importance about knowing each other at all, we just meet, i say i love you i say i miss you, and you listen attentively and pretend you like each word, we recall the rules of our game, for those who believe there is heaven for those who don't keep your little space of earth, and live, wiser, cautious, and better adjusted this time, easy come, easy go, there is not much pain, there is no bargain, and well what is the gain?

now you are learning now you are saying when i go away i miss you i love you i want you and i will not look back at you, your tongue is so adept in your cheek.

RIC S. BASTASA
i like it here

this is my place, insignificant, small, fleeting even, like a soft breath coming out of my mouth when i utter the word
you and i, but you are still confused unable to understand each letter like chopped string beans so disconnected from each piece
i understand myself now as intimately as my nose to my lips to smell and sound touching each other
this moment,
i still say convinced as i am like how the window pane agrees to entertain a morning chill and then the light coming,
i still say, i like it here, the view from here, green mountains hairy with forest trees rivers running like children in the parks clouds drifting like butterflies all in the hues of pastel blue and some scratches of white and gray, i like the sea here friendly salt to my tears, i like the gardens here, so alive with flowers and bees and blades of grass, i like it here
and i have no plans ever to leave even with you telling me that you love me till the end of days and nights, you are lying and there is no sense dying in the beds of your dreams so far away like a mythical kingdom.

RIC S. BASTASA
compulsive

a tattoo in your body crawling your thoughts of the past
reflected in the lines of your skin those violent ones and bloody ink tracing what they did to you when you were just but a kid,
you cannot stop the tattoo tattooing you, a matter of obsessive compulsive body writing, these too are the makings of depression, the doctor says, you do it and you want it done, like you cannot stop tattoo tattooing you,
in your arms,
and legs
and tomorrow your chest you wish some pictures of God and gods no, no, not the monsters that you want extricated, i watch you

in this compulsion and you are relating why, how,
what explaining the meanings of these figures when they confront you,
i am listening,
i am not lost, i am analyzing bits and pieces of your world
to mine,
i am amazed how the changes come,
like some scribbles becoming angels
and saints,
i am trying to get what the doctor is saying,
compulsive neurosis
schizophrenia,
obsessive,
dominant
recessive,
i am looking for a space to put you
and make you my guinea pig, but i stopped,

you are human and i must respect you, now, i have to deal with my compulsive state too, this poetry,
i cannot stop and it is hammering me everyday,

crazy.

RIC S. BASTASA
sitting, waiting

sitting, as simple as sitting on a stair you look around through dragonfly eyes from higher places like a cliff overlooking a village closer to cotton clouds patches of hissing
winds up here,
alone,
you sit, sitting is simple, it is not complicated as waiting which is heavier sometimes with a person who is not showing some shadows for the coming, sit,
i sit,
i am sitting viewing a wide horizon, a vast expanse of a field, some white herons heaving leaves blown from dead trees this summer, they fly away from you, they fly away from where you are seated, from your country, you remain sitting,
sit, like a dog to his master telling him to sit,
sit,
it is simple as being yourself alone, not even waiting things end in darkness dust settles finally on the ground after a truck fully loaded with almost everything leaves
the road heading far away from you, you are not waiting for anything you have no time left for waiting, everything leaves and goes away, always everybody utters the word goodbye except these, the rain, the rain, there are many of them, these hordes of rains

they are coming and you sit and do the last thing possible listen

RIC S. BASTASA
if i heave a sigh, what will i do with what i did not heave?

if i heave a sigh
into the air, and i keep some other more inside myself, unconsumed, unspent,
what will i do with it?
keep it
like a secret in my closed fingers and pretend i am angry with this clenched fist when in truth i have nothing no plan of keeping things that long because my arms my soon go into the river and be lost floating like a log from a hill?

i heave a sigh, that is enough relief, i am emptied of something heavy in my nose
i become an island losing air but keeping sand and
stones
to keep my balance with the coconut trees
still making landmarks to lost directions, but it is my way of making my senses alive i heave a sigh and i want you to really hear it at a very close distance just you and me

for you to know where i have situated myself in this vast nothingness,

i am here, touch me,
i am warm, i am fire,

you have been taking the forms of water cold, damp,
having the face of the night, where the moon lost its light, what are you doing to me? i am taking you but you are the one taking me nowhere i am lost by your promises of a raft
i lost track of your waft, and here i am lost again as i heave a sigh, deeper

this time....

RIC S. BASTASA
even on the late hour of the night

even when late,
try getting in, they will not notice, you are not famous, try being a nobody and they won't bother, so get inside the room and pretend you are not a part of them in this discussion, behave like you are the waiter bringing them a glass of water,
no excuses this time, do not talk, do not bother them,
and they too will not bother you, try being nothing
just be the ordinary you, and they will not notice, even on the late hour of this night they still have eyes only for themselves within their circle and you are still an outcast, simply because from the very first day of this meeting you are just being yourself and you remain being so, you have not become like them, mimicking each other
into conformity for fear of rejection, so at this hour of the night when they seem to enjoy each other's likeness get inside,
just be yourself and take your own kind of drink your self-identity your name that they will never know when tomorrow
you will soon part and they will be themselves again
alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
kick kick kick
when bored kick
when hurt kick
when ignored kick when lost kick
when you're listed out
kick
when you're dead
kick
if you can.
what are those feet for?
kick, kick, kick,
if you still can

RIC S. BASTASA
overcoming a writer's block

Stretch!
If you can't stand up,
stretch as many muscle groups as possible while staying seated.

Try tensing and releasing various muscle groups.
Starting from your toes, tense up for perhaps five to ten seconds
and then let go.

Relax and then go on to another muscle group.

Breathe deeply.
Close your eyes;
then,
fill your chest cavity slowly by taking four of five short deep breaths.

Hold each breath
until it hurts,
and then let it
out slowly.

Use a calming word or mental image
to focus on while relaxing.

If you choose a word,
be careful not to use an imperative.
Don't command yourself to

'Calm down!'

or 'Relax!'

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hint On Some Tales

some flowers bloom late, some buds just wilt the rain makes no promises - and so there goes some stories of johnny-come-latelies and pretentious marriages.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Romantic Place In July

the men have arrived to plant
the seeds

on the fields the women are singing

it is a sunny day and the shades of the old mango trees are too tempting.

RIC S. BASTASA
A  White Woman With Pink Two-Piece Suit

text

A  White Woman With Pink Two-Piece Suit

she has blonde hair
a perfect body
white against the dark
she walks alone
along the white sands of this beach

i follow her and she knows i am following her she stops. she stoops to pick up a shell.
she looks at it carefully.

i stop and look at her too.
she smiles. i smile too.
we exchange no word.
for this meeting.

i change my direction.
she does not follow me.
the message becomes clear.
there is no meeting
of our minds.

i remove my shorts.
and shirt.

i go to the sea and plunge my body.
the sea is hot.
the sun is up.

i dive deeper.
i have not seen
anything.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Babble...

the goodness that good does to you, your greed come blocking, you haven't measured yet goodness with goodness, you lie and all the excuses are recited, and i do not listen, my goodness does what good can do to you, i shall ambush, your conscience, i wait, my goodness can kill you, then shall you be good forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bad Day

burnt toasted bread beside a moldy marmalade bland coffee and bad news on tv welcome a world in recession.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bad Day, That Is What It Is

there is no gas for the stove and the fish is half-cooked the rice smells like rotten worms and the kitchen looks like a garage full of junk

she is still praying and you wonder if breakfast still exists you pack your things and move out trying to spell out other women's names

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bad Ending

you write something you choose the words
the feelings are there oozing
the memories are sticky flashbacks like scenes of a play

you like it at the beginning crispy and onion flavored

you take the bite and chew
honestly

at the middle you shake your head your chair trembles something is so wrong

you're impatient
you want to go to the ending it is very bad
someone dies and people love the murderer

it is very bad
society hates this kind of story very unbecoming of a narrative

but what is important is just this plain honesty that sometimes everything can be bad just bad
and perhaps even so bad gives you that feeling that you are right

and then at the end you put a stop to words proclaiming that a bad ending
can be so beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Banaba Leaf

this banaba leaf falls from its branch a child gathers it
and hands it to me
and i keep it
on top of my study

each day i look at it like it is something so different from the rest of the leaves time shrinks it

time browns it until its cells begin to show its veins

until it turns to thread crumpled pieces
until it turns to dust until it becomes like the sands of the shore

nothing lasts
in such a short time the leaf returns to ash on its last day

i gather what remains are there on my palm

outside i sprinkle the leaf that returns to dust to air back to the empty space back to the nothingness our place of final destination the world is hungry for this dusts and sands

death to everything living A Banana And The Cadena De Amor

a vine of small hearts running up towards a big purple heart
clasped by hands fruits

a crown of pink petals greets the blue
sky
the sun is one big halo

this morning

RIC S. BASTASA
A Barking Dog

a barking dog
they say does not bite but it will always have its mouth
and sharp teeth
and you that moves closer to this strangeness prepares
yourself for the unexpected bite
contrary to what they had always said.
a barking dog is still a dog
its weapon remains that bite
it has no fists
no tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beautiful And Just World

when Paul Walker died at 40, many shall mourn

Jesus died at 33 and so did Rizal, much younger

they did not die riding a Porsche
and only a few mourned and even in hiding
for fear of retaliation.....

what a beautiful and just world indeed

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a beautiful bird caged in my house its flumes are red its beak of course is black its claws neat and clean and cannot scratch
its eyes blank
its feathers dull (perhaps she is bored to death but she is still that beautiful bird caged in the heart of my house)
when she sings usually in the night before everyone sleeps everyone hears what sadness lies in the heart of its
throat
i know that it wants to escape from the cage in the heart of the house but someone more cruel wants it caged
forever

tere is a beautiful red bird caged in my heart i want it set free
she understands it well she wants to be free
i know it too well but things will just be what it is there is nothing we can do she is the beautiful red feathered bird caged and shall never be free like the stairs, like the walls, like the beams like the stars shall this red bird be.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beautiful Body Will Have A Hard Time Convincing You That It Is Suffering

a handsome face can tell a thousand lies.

because when it starts to tell the truth you will not believe it.

a beautiful body will have a hard time convincing you that it is suffering a good career will find it hard to tell you that it wants to quit.

a fortune cannot brag that it does not enjoy spending.

so many more. someone cries and yet still hides in the luxury house of its privacy.

safe house, well fenced, the screams inside cannot be heard. a palace where fools live. a yacht where only rats enjoy.

a poetry stripped of the beauty of its sound.

a short story that keeps you away from a happy ending.

a hero turning out to be a fraud. a picture that is mute and deaf.

words that do not live in dictionaries anymore.

a dog with feathers. a bird with walls.

a word of water and no land at all no rock to hold into a magnetism.

a universe deprived of planets. a starless and sunless armory of horizons.

you soon learn this trick. a grope for meaning and reason where there is none.

A Beautiful Day

the fields are empty now the grains have been harvested the clouds drift and stay a while on the side of the green mountain still dressed with mists and fog the trees line the path the leaves are green and lush i take as usual this morning walk towards a hut beside a graveled path a white heron arrives and lands on a drying pond the sun just shines to mark a beautiful day

the pale horizon turns pastel blue

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beautiful Day (2)

no rain
dews have dried up no ripples from the pond air still leaves are glossing
to the sun
sky is clear
fogs gone
the window opens
to the garden
of daffodils

the sea is silky blue no foams
seagulls fly to the north boats sail to deep oceans

the ants gather morsels
and the grasshoppers
and crickets
join in the singing welcome a brighter new day for the darkness is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beautiful Jar

a beautiful jar
always gapes its mouth open to the emptiness of the world taking in the silence of the air and not bloating

it is as though its arms were taken and its feet and its eyes and nose simply because they are no longer important

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beautiful Language Is Evasive

a beautiful language is evasive shaped like the curve of a street
along the high cliff beside the
sea
zigzagging itself away from a point like a snake river avoiding a fatal bite to anyone that crosses its way as it inches its way toward the fulfillment of a common dream
it is nothing but to live nothing but to breathe nothing possessive but just a description to see a place and never name it to love without the use of
words
no judgments but just a long gaze like a road in that dessert of red sands faraway

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beautiful Mind

a beautiful mind is a loving mind words as anger, filth, dirt, sordid, squalid, hate, indifference, murder curse, envy
are not found in a beautiful mind what have i in my mind then to call my mind a beautiful mind

God, please be there Saints please be all there Angels please please be all there i look at this mind with all honesty because i claim it to be one beautiful mind

i am crazy
i am not a beautiful mind as i claim to be
i am afraid all that is found in there is just you

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beautiful Rainbow

i've seen a rainbow this bridge of different colors makes you feel the ease that beauty
gives

whether there is a pot of gold at its end or its tail
i don't really care

i am just
a pilgrim of the hill
a spectator of
the passing wind
a deafening silence
a stab of the
stare

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beautiful World....

That night the flowers of kamuning
bloomed

White perfume was spread
as the cool air of June
was playful with the tiny
green leaves

I sat under it
there were no stars in the skies no moon

Dark clouds covered what the sky could have offered

It was your Light that illuminated my dark world &

With You i had no reasons
for fear

What a scented world!
how beautiful it is!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bed

when my feet are taller than your bed will you cut them to fit
them?

if it happens to you
i will do
the same.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bed On The Water

a bed floats in the middle of the river you swim
to catch sleep

the bed is taken by the rage of the river on a flood that rises up to your chin

you sleep on the water the cruel bed is gone the rage of the river subsides there is peace now
among the lilies

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beef Steak

i know you have decided to take the code of the vegetarian in the party the host is warned to serve veggies, not to disappoint you the important one the celeries, the lettuce apples and peaches
pineapples and papayas spinach and cabbages
your taste of the leaves and the pulp
and some fresh juices your body has become frail less the bulk of the muscle and the meat
somehow, you glitter and glow like a traffic light when you see me alone with my fitting blue jeans and my bulging
spare parts
you like it
i give the signal
i am blank
you can fill me up with an answer
true, yes, go,
take me

i am your beefcake
i taste like your irresistable beef steak take me tonight
i am obliging in love
eat me take me to the warmest
part of your throat

i am your man
i keep your secret

on some expensive equivalents, you know.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beginning Of All Beginnings

The walls are suffocating, so you remove some planks to make a window it becomes your window to the world outside you but what you see (if you remain enclosed) is still yourself out there and it will not make any difference you close your eyes and open your mind there is another window that opens endlessly towards all the possibilities spaces of suspended beliefs awakenings of what you have taken for granted you shrink into a littleness a baby talk a mother's hum you do not know what a sun is or a moon

that first feeling of
the wind
that face that you have ever seen

this sense of awe and wonder
a beginning of all beginnings
is here now

looking at you
and then you smile....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Beginning Of Our Chase

a little bird
has become one of your cliches

overused, crass,
and sensitivities do not mind it
at all

let it fly away from you and feel the silence of the iron rail
its coldness is like the finger of a dead man

now, let us talk a little bit about the death of justice

and the escape of that little bird
as a beginning of our chase.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Belief Of Eternity

when i get to be fifty i begin to know the nature of the hours i am getting familiar with its hands that i cannot really hold them even as friends and so i have become tolerant about its vices the way it is giving me another color of my hair the wrinkles in my hands the weakness of my knees and the early exhaustion of my feet when i try to walk farther distance again
in the same manner
as it is not giving me much favor i learn to simply accept it as a fact
and i let it go like the way how a lover junks me sometimes giving me the feeling that somehow i am no longer desirable but i am not the kind that surrenders easily thus when time betrays me
i too
give it what it deserves i begin to forget it and the hours are spilled like i do not need it too
and then when they are all consumed and i am all consumed i register in my mind all the memories i had many years back
there is no regret
i have loved all the way when i was younger and i take them all with me in my final journey where time itself is not a part because in there it does not exist at all because i have always believed that i am not just this flesh and bone and skin and skull i am more than all these and i am no slave of time not its subject
i am into eternity where time too does not end i am into timelessness so filled now with all happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Belief Of The Merry Go Round

it is another beginning we do not know exactly where we shall mark it don't be a ring

a circle a sphere turning and turning
round and round in ecstasy
and pain

terrible no end
we do not exactly know where we shall mark it don't be a ball round and bouncing

don't be the Ferris wheel the May pole

don't be another ride for another year merry, merry, merry go round how shall we feel it?

when we are too preoccupied with what we are and what shall we become?

don't be the circle of love and hate and love and hate a plain of concern and indifference

these are dances of many lifetimes and cycles and repetitions i see a face and make love with a body i live in a house and walk on a path who are you now? what place is this?

and why are we here?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bicycle Poem

do not worry how the bicycle looks ride it.
do not think how the wheel and its spokes work do not attempt to understand its structure ride it.

do not think how the other people looks at you with your bicycle just ride it.

when you are riding it already just feel the joy of the air that meets your face the speed by which it takes you to another destination just ride it, disembark when you get there you do not even have to own it and keep it for the rest of your life when you get old remember that bicycle that once gave you all the joys of riding before you die

give it to the young

they shall have their own joys too riding it

and perhaps they will write a poem about you or if not about the bicycle at least
who knows?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Big Panel

a big panel truck is parked
beside the store
it is socializing with a big

hello.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Big Secret

how can i
not tell you
about my big secret?
the one that makes you happier than i am
the one that can make you cry
because you shall be in bliss
a rose on the table beside the phone
a note sealed
inside
my lips
how can i not tell you about it?
you know it well
my dear
words find no use
in this revelation is of no use.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Big Wall Between Privacy And Poetry

There is a big separate wall between myself and my poem

you may cry on those sad ones
but you cannot equate
that as me

i may have written a love poem
but it may not after all refer you you

do not be disappointed but realize that poetry is but a creation of an imagination

it can be empathy, or a shot in the wind using the universal arrow of humanity from one who feels that the angst must be expressed because there are those without the courage to do so without the words to say without the privilege of having been educated in universities like you so calm down, read and feel and take what affects you do not put me there. I live somewhere else and live a life that is still to be created by me.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bigger Vision Of The World

we just talked about an opening of a lid of a magic lamp

genie comes out
and here i am still undecided about my three wishes

more about the rainbow after the rain the silver lining behind the thick clouds no, it is not a Pandora's box or a can of worms

that light at the end of the tunnel the bad that dissipates in time that spout spewing bounty and mercy a war that is not about a person but a bigger vision of the world a wholesome talk that makes us closer

and soon by God's time
we will be seeing each other again.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bio

Inside our pockets
is the privacy of our own stones

outside our faces are the familiarities of
our traditions

when we party
we say the same words actually
we fear
other people's anger
we cannot afford to disappoint the
visitors of our common faith

the usual mess will be there
part of the party you know
sometimes we let go
we let loose what is too tight in our necks
we spit what is bitter outside the windows of our
tongues

there is always time for restraint in a few glasses of
alcohol
there is a time to make our mouths shut up
ty ing our tongues like ropes on
the railings of the house
of civility

personally i do not like this party where we become
decent fools
choosing the words
afraid of the truth
always fearing that we should have broken some rules
of engagements

most of the time we deny what our hearts are looking for
cold hands hold another set of cold hands
empty heads bang with other empty heads
on hollow sounds of flattery
one time i left the room where the party is going on
it is 11: 10 in the evening and it has become too intolerable

i need to be alone inorder to be free
i imagine you and i love this atonement when you still do not mind
how i feel

i am complicating it so much restraint
because even if i am now outside everybody
i still retain
the decency of what is right and wrong which i always
carry around.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bird

a bird has wings
wings are nothing if they are not used for flying

like you what use have you for your wings?

chicken!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bird Escaping Finally From Its Cage

Let me not speak about This bird that finally finds a way Out of its cage

New to its freedom
It whirls and circles the skies A tryst with the wind
A feast with the sun
A dive to the sea
A rising up to the limitless Space around it

Let me not speak about its Final regret
Its wanting to be back in the cage
Again
Because for a time
It thinks again
It is really its home
Forever

The bird shall soon ask you To open the cage
To spend its nights there All its lifetime

Soon it will have the courage to say it Freedom sometimes Home it is not

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bird Flying Into Freedom....

At night alone in bed
I hear music in my ears Flute reverberating around my walls I fly like a bird Spreading my wings throughout a blue sky Days of summer Brighter days
Newer visions Freeing myself from the clutches of our memories
On top of the cliff i land my feet and see the world In a more beautiful way Fresh, invigorating
Pulsating

Love i pray
More strength today
Break my spirit
Blithe!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bird Sometimes Does Not Sing

like you
beautiful woman, a bird on the window sill sometimes gets tired of singing, there is not usual tune and the day becomes darker than the usual night, the sun not brighter and the grass not green as they are wont to be there is no hope for flowers that wilt today
the buds are falling.

i want to talk, but i cannot like the bird that decides not to sing because there is nothing worth singing anymore in my case because nothing seems to be worth living anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bird Story, The Hint...

watching you in full beauty is an attempt of my hand to set myself free i have the key and the door is not locked there is no use for the key even no one is locking me in and i am always free at any time of the day to go and be the wings of the bird that my mind imagines every hour of the waking day

there was once a bird captured by an enemy put inside a cage and well feed and well attended it sings of freedom and love and beauty in one sad song the enemy decides to open the cage to set it free the bird doubts this time the enemy has become a loyal friend the cage has become its sweetest home the words are the same as arranged in that desired ending ah, they all live happily ever after....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bird...

the cockatoo
plays basketball
and then Laura (and that is her name)
is fed with white
grains
she turns 360 degrees
and shoots the green ball
to the ring

the people clap
and Laura flies away again to the hands
of its feeder

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bird's Song

some bird's seeds
on a platter in the garden after a short moment a bird takes its pick
and soon three, four,
five birds came and they made some sort of choir songs as thanksgiving.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Black Box, A Key And The Stinking Guest.

do you know how to live
inside
a black box?
tell me. Are you the seed inside that black box, you sprout?
and look for an opening of light?
Helios, you love Helios.
Do you know
this God named Helios?
you are not
a bug, you do not move
like a cockroach
you stink a bit
and you are here beside me i live inside this black box

for years
i am not a seed,
neither a tweed,
there is no need for you to know it will not be significant and i am not stinking like you you wonder what is this all about asking you if you too live in here?

or who you are and why are you
here
inside this tinder black box it is dark here and we are talking, you can hear me and smell me but you shall not feel me
i am not alive.

i am the key.
A Black Cat, A Woman And A Shadow

a black cat goes inside the room in the steps of his own feline silence looks at the body of the naked woman laying on the floor leaning on the wall between them a glassful of wine and a shadow

then the cat walks away slips through the window and jumps to the other side of the building then the woman screams. The night is long and crazy.

Tomorrow morning, another number is added

IT numbs the senses of the city
The cat understands that it has nothing to do with all these.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Black Day

words are choppy
one afternoon like a telegram
from a far country
they are old and torn like an old dress
of a woman
seduced and raped

you ask how can these words exist?
how can that woman
not exist?

you are with that woman last night
she is old and tattered
a broken memory
a choppy story stuttering before you and you listen
to this record of history and you cannot sleep and you look at the sky
it is black and closed and there is no opening for the sun to come out tomorrow morning

RIC S. BASTASA
A Blackout

Was it just two or four powerlines bombed in Iligan?

They say four.
Yes, another four powerlines are bombed by their freedom fighters and they get what they want now

We begin to live our darkest days Powerless
In our poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Blank Sheet

pick the crayons
and color
those empty spaces on the clean
sheet of paper
beside you
under your lamp shade
tonight

draw the rainbows
in your mountains
sprinkle it with rain
make the clouds
blue and fill the rivers with the color
of its waters

sing a tune
give your world
a beautiful sound

spray some perfume on that paper
to give your world
the scent of musk
and muffin

RIC S. BASTASA
A Blind Spot

there is a certain point in life that you arrive at not knowing what to do and you decide on a question without an answer relying on the auto-resolution of the problematic proposition,

sick minds get well without medication sometimes,

lizards grow the tail that you cut when you were so angry wounds heal without notice days provide them time to take care of their own bleeding on a certain day i am struck with so much light only to find

that i cannot really see what is in there

its color particularly mistaking red for blue white for beige

even black for white and people who rely on my vision become so disappointed

this sense of injustice sometimes blinds we go for the murky water hoping to find a fish without gills

it is traumatic not to be understood it is scheming for me to see to it that you will not understand but this is my game and your game too, exploring the senses of letting things go intriguing biographies, taking too many names that at the end confront us too with having no meaning at all,

what is this? pure baloney. yet so interesting, let the day pass without so much worry relaxing, unknown, and so colorful, red and yellow trying to capture the essence of an afternoon, even without you and then there is only darkness and silence and a star so near the moon, like love blossoming into a flower.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Blue Bird...

THERE is a blue bird nesting inside my belly there are butterflies in there too,

THERE is nothing that comes out from my belly there is nothing that
flutters in there
nothing flies away
there is nothing
that comes out from
my mouth

THERE is only a blue bird in my belly
the butterflies do not last
only the blue bird
yes
this blue bird
this silence

RIC S. BASTASA
A Boast To Kill

I can kill
A fly
On the dining table
With all of you
Watching

RIC S. BASTASA
A Boat By The Silent Pond

a boat stays on the silent pond beneath the trees with wide branches it is tied not so tight any child can let it loose and release it and soon it will go and we wonder what is it that it is waiting for and for whom shall this boat go

there is this ride that each shall take no one wants to take it earlier always one says later later
there is no hurry

the children have grown and they wear faces like yours
they go away and you are left alone with the person you love you have a conversation time goes like a stranger the friends you know have either grown old or have died and their coffins pass by your house you remember

memories and you smile at the youth you once had you remember the boat the child in you has loosened it you pick up on what was easily forgotten you cope up you say you want the ride now it is dark

and the silence spreads on the paddle the ripples exude the essence of the journey you hold a hand
and you sit comfortably without worry

it is time to go.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Boatful....

tell me not about departures i have had them all the first time was melodramatic i even cried in the attic the second time was a little more than Hippocratic someone so critical even said it was like a sprikitik then the rest came like falling leaves making a bigger heap and all those summers were hot as i put fire on them offerings for the gods in the clouds who had no time even to peek at those boatload of waving pods

RIC S. BASTASA
A Body

a boat lays adrift finally on the shore of the far away
island

the sail is broken the rudder is damaged the side of the boat leaks its head appears like the head of a very weary man staring at the trees fronting it while undergoing repair

RIC S. BASTASA
A Body In An Island Of Light

the left hand holds the glass of wine another hand on the table someone dances
gyrates and signals with a finger that the show of lust begins you have only your eyes and your silence
the rest moves like a war of conquest inside your mind
you pretend you are a rock unmoved by the rage of the big water a hard heart gazing, until when? until when?

you take the wine inside your throat you begin to forget but it will not be over someone there gyrates like a planet sucking your orbit.

RIC S. BASTASA
frankly, i do not need a lot of dawning light for me to see clearly your body of lies.....

i do not wish to see each curve and whiteness of each soft skin and smooth edge of your
fingers,
your neck that smells like perfume
of those night blooming flowers...

it is so beautiful when felt than seen...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bomb Explodes 20 Or So

are dead
inside a bus where most passengers are school bound

they want to accentuate a cause
mark a point

whoever you are
you shall be condemned to a thousand deaths

splinters of your body cannot be whole again

you shall never find where you are

you shall roam forever restless in Hades

RIC S. BASTASA
i, too, am guilty
of this fact that this world in my birth
has given me all innocence and in my youth
has given me all the energy
then wisdom and wealth and then what have i given in return?

despair? a lecture on the philosophy of
nothingness?
lethargy? an article of faithlessness?
a book of cruelty?
a bang of my head on the wall the collision of my car on the dead end street of hopelessness?

Life shall judge me with condemnation if i take it away as it should not have been raw mango that i harvest with sourness upon its pulp stains upon its skin on a premature

picking

For like must pluck itself upon itself and of course,
should not be my own decision,

As you did it,
Yours is next to tell.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bookworm Wanting To Be A Vine

When I look at you
Oh my lovely tree
Alone on a hill
How I wish that I may become
A honeysuckle
A clinging vine
That from your Root to top
I may entwine

But I am just
A bookworm

Still trapped
In this book

That she is
still Reading.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Boring Day

as he opens the window there is only the shadow of leaves on the trees on a gray background it is twilight, midway between night and day sounds of a cold wind from the forest the rooster crows and some chirping birds you sit and gaze through the window light comes in this happens everyday and there is nothing significant after 49 years, and this time a hole is bored inside your heart you fear that love is gone.

that the birds do not chirp musical notes the wind much colder now and you shiver light seeps in trickles like rain on your wrinkled skin it is the same morning, and it will be same mornings all over again. you do not move. You let time go and your hands are frozen.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Boring Issue About A Demise....

somehow the fear of our end
becomes too familiar and boring it occurring
almost daily when we are flogged like donkeys
as we carry our loads of bricks dead gets boring sometimes like that same movie that we watch all the days of the week when we finally meet it in the street or in the room

you say nothing at all

it's not a pest, it is just an ordinary dust a tiny frog that gets inside your room from nowhere you pick it up and say alright

' i have no right to refuse, take me, i am ready'

RIC S. BASTASA
A Boring Routine Actually....

they are my flowers roses and carnations
they teach me well how to die without much effort everyday, everyday.
and death makes no sense to me, a boring routine.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bow To Simplicity

you go to church every morning model catholic of this town you listen to the sermon of the priest you take the body of Christ in your body somehow these matters give you comfort and so you have no time to ask for more answers because there are no questions asked
anyway

in any way, you dwell in the comfort zone of religion
you are not a philosopher with all the wrinkles on his forehead
you do not envy all these search for wisdom
you do not need it anyway in your everyday morning existence
about those joys you claim you have the contentment of an achievement no wars no confusion even in small matters about real happiness in some ways you smile and by all means we think that you are the child of God smiling to everyone

sometimes i envy you as i tremble over my thoughts grinding every bean of coffee in the machine of my mind hot temperatures here like hell

are questions part of hell?
doubts and regrets
they come together
trying to hit me with their fists me, the philosopher still unable to hold the beautiful arms of an answer

i talk within and there are many selves talking within you pity me for thinking too much on such a simple existence as breakfast and lunch and dinner that you serve on my table and for which due to my self-inflicted fever on a trembling mouth
i cannot eat

and then
i decided to keep silence in the middle of this turbulence
i wash my face
comb my hair
and face you saying the words that i do not mean just to please you
like
i love you and then you smile and you do not bother

what wisdom is nothing bothers you

what more? what more is there?
you tell me
there is nothing more between the two of us not even space

RIC S. BASTASA
A Boy And A Girl

summer
in 1970, a boy
takes of its cap
and puts it on the head of the girl
to protect her hair from the sun
and that was
how it started
the rest he keeps inside his aching heart, the other half of the pain
she keeps
forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Boy And The Snake And The Tree That Cures...

a snake is bitten by another snake it is bleeding and leaves and looks for a tree to take some sap
for its own cure,

a boy sees what the snake is doing waits and when the snake leaves the boy bites the tree to take the sap

the boy is cured of its long sickness the tree had long been there near him but it is the snake that points to him the tree that can cure his own malady.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Boy In The Water

a boy
wades in the sea
on the shallower part he dips his feet
and feels the rocks
beneath

the deep waits danger lurks

the mother is complacent and busy with the weaving of her dreams the boy goes deeper and the mouth of the sea waits

in hunger

the mother sings
to the clouds
as the father pounds the earth for his corn ears

the boy goes deeper and deeper wading through the
water

the sea opens its mouths and breathes
and becomes so silent

the mother weaves her dreams the father pounds the earth for corn the winds pass by the clouds become heavy and gray the tears of the sky

The waters of the river rise
The mother screams
The father stabs the earth With the sharpness of his bolo

Regrets and mourning reign The complacent village

The boy is now at peace
In the belly of the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Brand

if i were to make a brand
of life
for an ad,

i will put
something that you must not forget

not levi's, not victoria's secret, not chardin, not wrangler, not even 707

i like something that i always tell you

i like this brand:
life is beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Brand New Day....

THAT feeling that you are nothing we must admit, comes in a while like a drought in April, you feel like a Sahara though you have never been there but it is more real that dryness of the river of the soul that runs without a water winding its way into the labyrinths of your heart you feel like hanging yourself upon a tree and saying: this is it
i am swallowed by the mouth of emptiness, on the other hand, in time you come to your senses imagining the gardens, and lakes and mountains the youthful days with friends as though you wake up from a deep stupor with the sleep inducing drug you pinch yourself, ' i am still alive and there is still a use for my hands and the whole body'
you open your eyes to see the morning light.

it is a brand new day. it is. it really is.
why must emptiness carry you as though you are a powerless piece of floating paper in air?
damn it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Breakfast That We Cannot Eat Together

this is the breakfast that we cannot eat together a fish fried in an oil with so much heat, like 'who cares?' a rice not well cooked which says 'it is the maid again!' a coffee which has gone cold which says 'you come late again!' a egg which is not sunny side up a ham that does not roll a dirty table with an unwashed table cloth which says 'change it yourself!'

how can i eat all these?

i am late for the office and i have to go.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Breakfast....

ey is fried
sunny side up a cup of java rice on the wooden plate from Bali
the spanish chorizo
red and shiny
beside this solo slice of cucumber
plus a glass of orange juice
and a cup of hot barako coffee
and the fresh papaya sitting on the saucer

the glass cover of
the table
presses the saffron
mantel

the sun has come and you turn off
the light on the breakfast room

RIC S. BASTASA
A Breather

i know
no one reads this attentively like a boarding pass
of the plane
to know clearly what gate
what seat

this is just a memorandum of a past experience
not really mine but perhaps of some other passenger of this life's aircraft
towards another journey

you do not read because you are preoccupied with something else:
a study
a letter from a friend or mother who is sick from the province
or a brother who is seeking financial help or a directive from a boss in the office where you are working for most of the time
of your life
however, if you read this one
somehow you pass a certain place that reminds you about
nothing
and makes you
empty minded for a while void
and then you become
ready for another fill

all you need is another breath
for each word
the air that fills
your lungs
because you
are getting too crowded with almost every chatter
deep within that grave that slowly buries you
in a soil
layer by layer

RIC S. BASTASA
A Breather....

tired but not giving up the realities
are that much dreams died hope hang visions blur
time to teach this self its lessons
expel those expectations
do not aim for the peaks
live like a hopper
breathe....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Brief Rendering About Love love me

just do it as i too
love you

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bright And Happy Day For Me

a boy throws the kite that his papa made to the air
his little sister follows him the playful dog with big black spots bark and chases them both the skies are blue white clouds drift

the grasses are greener and the mountains are majestic with its foggy top it is a bright day and a happy one for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Broken Heart

a broken heart

you search for metaphor
to begin with collins?

yes, you got
it
a broken
wing

it cannot fly but i prefer a wing
clipped like paper

or a wind
without wings

or a wing
without
the wind

or wingless winds or windless wings

the point
is one can always be right for as long
as one feels
for as long
as one
still writes for as long as one still attempts to write what one feels and feels what he writes for as long as longing still longs a broken wing
can always be a broken heart a metaphor to always begin with

RIC S. BASTASA
A Broken Heart Inside Me

i remember that time when we were finally torn apart people watched me with that broken heart and said that time shall heal the pain and that i shall learn to love another one again well yes, in some ways they are right i have loved another one, that 's right on the other hand, time must not have healed completely the pain it is still there when your name patters in the rain

RIC S. BASTASA
A Broken Heart Recovered.....

upon my eyes tonight shall hang dead stars upon my heart shall shed off
dead skins scars are vanishing like fog concealing
sharp cliffs pointed
stones
trees without leaves
twigs without buds

RIC S. BASTASA
A Broken Heart?

most of the times
like those heavy rainy days you accept life with a heavy heart such a situation as having to feel the wetness of the weather when you have no other place to stay
except a park that does not offer you any good view of the sea or the mountain
as if yes, there is no choice but to either sit or run and it does not really matter what to do
when the rain keeps on pouring on you and you simply let the water rush and fall on your hair down to your neck
and then to your chest just to relieve the pain of a broken heart

there is no surprise
no one experiences none of it common stories that do not bother us anymore because they are too plain all ruggedness accepted with resignation
like
it is fair and we did nothing about it there is no saving
plan

RIC S. BASTASA
A Broken Heart's Request

on that bright morning when the birds peck upon the grains of rice spilled upon the rugged pavement as the leaves of the bushes are drying themselves from the wetness
of dews
she left without leaving a note what a contrast of life what could have been a very beautiful world what a sad life

how a heart can that be broken how this world continues its spins and revolutions how can a woman be so indifferent to a man who should not have given up when i meet you again please be kinder

RIC S. BASTASA
A Broken Piece Of A Jalousy Window

the culprit is this broken piece of a jalousy window broken glass

an exit
and entrance of the criminal cat

and yes
bloody ink spills on the floor and drinks the traces of it all.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Brother

he stirs away from the flock and you want to take him back but he pushes you away and you can do nothing about it he reaches the cliff and then jumps...

he must not have ended
you keep on hearing the silence after the big event.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Brown Lady Asserting Her Right To Take A Seat

and so this brown lady inside a cafe
asserted her right
to sit where she wants
to

invoking her constitutional right

a la rosa
sub rosa parks

a white woman enters
and tells her to move a little bit farther

and the brown woman
says

you don't tell me to move because you don't own this place i have the right to be here i am no less than the trees and the stars the white woman is 65

the brown woman is 35

and i see,
as you feel the sting,
there is a bite somewhere inside your heart and now you tell me the story of this guilt.

A Bruised Reed He Shall Not Break, And A Smoldering Wick He Shall Not Quench, reflection upon the clear pond of the mind

at dawn

someone so gentle meek
renders justice upon
the earth
all the trees and wind
bow

he comes without a kill no devastation as a flood or fire
no nuclear leaks
no quakes

he does not shut off
the light
neither grass or weed
he shall not remove burn

he is a word
but he will last forever he is eternity
he dies but death has not conquered him

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bunch Of Ripe Guavas

on a basket
is a bunch of ripe guavas

the birds
early this morning shall be envious about us

every fruit
is love waiting to be slowly chewed savored and
swallowed

RIC S. BASTASA
A Burden....

countless years
this is this and now must you realize that there must be a change

remodel a pillar take just one and the rest of this shall fall

bear the weight
it is temporary soon this will be over...over, don't think, it will just pass away.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Bursting Of Ideas, Tired Eyes, But Alert Fingers On The Keyboard....

my eyes
are into sunsets
hiding behind
the vales,

my spirit burns
itself
into a huge campfire

my mouth shuts like a dam
of a big river

my tongue wants to be free like
a bird

my fingers do
the circus
a trapeze a mono cycle monologue

blindly they shoot
the knives
to that confident
lady
her back against the wall
her face like a half-moon
smiling.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Busy Life

THE busy days are here crowding themselves packed like sardines but there is still joy somehow in this fast paced
life,

reading between the lines amidst this crowd, the poems keep on whistling they have a beautiful world within and i keep on listening still abreast

as alive as a fledgling about to fly
away

RIC S. BASTASA
A Busy Mind...

i drown myself in work
morning till nighttime and this i tell my
wife,

dear, i got no stress

hypochondria
just left me
and neurosis
didn't wait that long

the book is
right..
keep busy, keep busy

it is the idleness
which had caused it
all

a busy mind
has no time for psychosis...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Butterfly In The Garden

a pig in the pigsty fat and dirty is
beautiful.

a butterfly in the garden, black one,
with only one wing left, dead on the grass, is also beautiful. Though
sad. It is also beautiful in itself.

a man beating his wife, using his fists, standing by the door
of the house,
cursing himself,
lacking still in understanding
and contemplating
of ending his life,
is also a thrill,
and thrill is also
beautiful,

and the wife still bleeding to death on the floor, on the side of a wooden bed,
crying but not
asking for help,
missing her kids taken by her mother-in-law same thing,
wanting to end all these miseries,
is also beautiful.
everything happens
no matter how we detest, ...that, that
is also beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cage In The Bird

he was out of the cage as he was treated as a bird and he sings
to the sky

but then he had loved the cage so well and the hands of the master that feed him that every morning listens to his song he had missed sorely so well and so back into that cage he flies in for the master had left it all open

he sings again
concluding that the cage must also be the home
for freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cage Is Not A Good Site To See At The Balcony.

nena say she wants to leave.
takes her two nights to say the word that she is finally leaving. and without any question as to where she is going you give her money and the permission.
the house will be empty again.
back to its closing when you leave it. You hold the key to its emptiness and fullness.
nena has been crying on the bus.
she is far away now. she remembers you and your kindness. she does not want to forget. but she does not want to return either. she has not place yet. but she is going somewhere to find her destiny. she is now 50 years old with no one to love and no one to love her. she thought you love her. you give her the impression that you love her. you sent her food and flowers. she cleans the house and feeds the dog and sweeps the floor and changes your blankets and dust your furniture. you never told her that you love another and she was dead.
and that you can love other women your age.
nena cries and sobs and people inside the bus become disturbed.

your new lover is asking ' where is your bird in the cage? '

' oh, i set her free. i do not like to hear a bird song', you answered.

deep inside yourself, a bird is a good riddance actually. You have no time to feed it sesame seeds.

and a cage is not a good site to see at the balcony.
A Call For Love...

i choose to be happy
on a new year's day

i am watching you walking along the fields of hay the sun is shining brightly it's a beautiful day

i call your name my dear lady come inside my house today let us have a cookie and hot coffee let me cure a little of your malady.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Call From Jolo

the general calls from jolo he keeps the war at ease like a soldier at rest there is no exact information about how many bodies are dumped into the raging sea or the ever silent mountain you see wars are fought like emotions you keep it inside yourself the face must not show the struggle the mouth does not speak about casualties

the dead are buried on the night and the missing soldiers are like names canceled on the list the widows weep and their children look at their memories but soon the sorrows pass like a storm and then it is calm again children swim in the sea the fishermen ride on their boats and cast their nets tonight the general has briefed his men there is an emergency and the killing must, as a necessity, begin again

RIC S. BASTASA
A Calm Mind

beside the house he sits on an inclined rattan chair his feet rest on a graveled ground his head focuses on a rooster beside a chicken leading its chicks to feed on rice hulls spread under the mahogany tree

how many months pass when the two were put here?

oh the rooster has fathered a dozen chicks and proud perhaps he crows loudly announcing his paternal joy!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Candle

all i need is a single candle to light my way in this dark alley
where at the end of this crooked black-outed cajolery you said you would be there waiting for me

RIC S. BASTASA
A Candlestick

darkness sets in our place and from time to time we lurk without having to do anything about it we wait to a distress we live in distress
we embrace the darkness tonight i have decided to light a candlestick there shall be no cursing of darkness no living in the hopelessness of its useless embrace

i sit watching its light and start to scribble some lines for my poetry about the triumph of light over the harshness of darkness.

somehow in the middle of darkness that we find so hard to explain and live with we still have something to do, to tell, and make a difference from among those who simply sleep and snore and then let go with their lives dying without having to know what and where meaning lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
sunshine falls upon the leaves of
a mango tree

under it is a man wearing blue long sleeves yellow shorts
twirling the key of his red motorcycle he is talking to another man with short hair denim pants, beside a wall with moss it is a carefree day it is life that is moving too slowly to each and every living human being in this sleepy community a sparrow hovers and stops over my window as i take my gaze, my long, long gaze to a faraway horizon.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cat Sleeping On A Printer

a cat sleeps on top of the printer
and bloody ink spills
on the floor

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cat's Answer

i like it here.

i am just taking a nap
so i wouldn't snap

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cat's Curiosity

a cat taking a nap
might ask you one day:

why are you curious about me?

(yes, this poor, little me, just a cat trying to get some sleep on one of your unlighted corridors)

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cat's Tale...

it comes back again
i have shooed it away yesterday it walks on top of the roof silently it sits there
at noon,

it stares at passersby
when i return from work it is still there
waiting

i do not know where it comes from and i do not like it it is white and does not make any sound at all i shooed it away still and has no plan feeding it there is something disturbing not about this insistent cat it's this struggle within, the storms that people do not see perhaps, this cat and i will still drive it away

RIC S. BASTASA
you may consider this:

we become extinct because of anger, we kill other people's dream,
we forget
we too need to dream, and without dreams we become extinct anger extinguishes dreams

this is the caution this site may love dreams too of other people who simply want to dream and it does not want anger because anger kills dreams now you are angry and you must suffer, to extinction you become and you cannot be heard because now nobody listens

goodbye,
scream in your posts, no one minds reading you anymore demand an explanation no explanation shall be written...

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a way to reach other minds teaching can be a tool to let them show how mushrooms

grow
on fields of rotten
hay

there are more than other ways
to make our coldness felt

not growing hands
not having to add more feet
on such a grotesque alternative

funny clowns
at a certain time can be entertaining

but we get bored of
what happens
almost every time when they please us again with the usual images of thick lips and curly hair

i tell you about Plato's midwife
and the woman who conceived and gave birth to new ideas

it is this teaching, this medium to make minds open
like some
peaceful corals untouched by our hands

an open heart arms that always mimic an embrace blinking lights
of towers
asking ships to dock away from storms

as i type all these please take note
i demand nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cautious Listener

when i speak to you
i always keep my own eyes

sometimes when i speak to some sort of people like you i am afraid that after i have spoken my eyes are no longer in their sockets i get blinded and then i find myself lost in the labyrinth of our thoughts and then i tell you that you are such a cruel chatter leaving me trembling with my fingers trying to find my way back home

and you tell me
where is home my friend? is there a home for you?
basic as what is home? depends on what home is and then i begin to bite my nails i shrink

a small child asking where mom is where dad is when house and home are gone when the stairs are too high when the lights are turned off and i am outside the door when all the friends are saying their prayers with their moms and when it begins to rain and i have nothing to run to and so now i am careful when you start talking to me i touch my eyes feel my eyelashes for a touch of home

my tongue gets twisted before but now as careful as a cat, my tongue is a rope tied on a tree the other end open ended like a fork of the snake spelling each word correctly when you speak i listen and i will not let you know that i do not easily believe you i have a book in my head and it is enough
it is good.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cave Where Dimness Thrives

it is raining and its sounds soothe the arrival of another darkness in life which has become a cave where dimness thrives where we utter a word and it echoes on all walls which we mistake as another crowd in our lonely
existences

at an hour where sleep refuses us the much needed
solace

we hear the sound of our own voice and we doubt if it is us until we accept the monotonous sound of its sorrow
as part of our own nuances

our fingers touch the stillness of our skin making us feel the home of our built-in isolation

RIC S. BASTASA
A Celebration

the flowers open their buds the crickets sing beneath the grass the sun is here putting on the lights of this earth.

a rat is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Certain Doubt

it has been here do you see it? she points to a black spot on the white mantel

it's been there i said never shall it be removed it is part of the landscape on the table and without which,
 mind you
this table would be incomplete

she feels uneasy about it there is this certain doubt if she really knows about me

it is enough that she sits by my side lays her head on my shoulder and then we enjoy most the silence
between our concerns

RIC S. BASTASA
A Certain Form Of Autism

rain man
sun woman goddess
moon
stars night skies crickets and yellow rivers stones and sand
clocks and pearls wind sons and chime daughters all fools
in harmony.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Certain Gentleness In Departure

what choice do you have? to stop saying a word? use the period finally to your conversations with her?

come to think of it, there is already a link between her world and your world she plants the stars and you bring some planets you put this little galaxy in motion and there is this movement upon space like a haze disappearing remember how hands hold each other grappling for the meaning of touch remember how thoughts entwine to define what caress and endearment are all about this is not a game anymore this is dust giving a name to another speck of dust they burst in the color of the clouds in celebration we plant love, she takes in her will to live, you must give her what is due to her wishes if love does not grow, try compassion let there be a little flower in her desert garden if there is nothing left, just be the fog, the wind leave silently without the door knowing it let there be gentleness even in departures she is asleep, let her finish with that last dream

RIC S. BASTASA
A Certain Happening

the hours come to you like a train you are not any of those passengers waiting to be taken somewhere else you are upon a different situation as the train loses its body from its tracks rams its existence upon a mountain on some sparks of surprises creating fire and explosion that shocks the city with all of them dead

you are not one of them but you are the one who watches the scene without any emotion the hours come to you like a body completely numb there are no more feelings except that peace that stillness of space like a canvass empty all white and frame-less against the silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Certain Loss

to compromise one suffers a certain loss I've lost a face once, and then a mouth and then my feet they cut me to invisible pieces until what is left of me is my voice
the one that talks to you
now
but this one will not be speaking for any compromise
it will speak about
the truth
the loss, that certain loss that you can only see in my words
here, they who are with me in the house where only a part of me thrives cannot ascertain it the smile of the lips are still there but there is nothing there anymore

about myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Certain Preference On Early Mornings...

sometimes forgive me but i do not like to hear bird chirping by my window on early mornings for honestly i prefer the silent sounds of the wind
from the sea,

and so when i hear those chirping birds perching on the tree those still feeding their fledgelings i exercise that right of having to close my glass windows preferring once again the privacy of my room and the exclusion of the outside world by the curtains and then i begin to sip my coffee reading a poem listening to the words seeping like rain to the hair of my own soul.....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Certain Quiet

As I sit upon the grass a white butterfly flutters by slowly on fragile wings

it is synonymous to a white feather

the world is so quiet

RIC S. BASTASA
A Certain Redness

a certain redness

shamed and humiliated before the mob

rubifacient
you face them
head held high

so what?

an iridescent existence to hues of blue & purple sins

you are attuned unmoved by mob’s dictates of morals like a peacock’s feather spread yourself shamelessly

efflorescent, let them try touching you?

Sooner you Share them
rubifacient embrocations Of high esteem
As domestic remedy

and they will learn to ease

RIC S. BASTASA
A Certain Ripeness

we hold on to what makes us feel
alive

we keep a tight
hand in the form of rooting
fingers
like some vines upon an old tree

or an orchid hanging there
with so much
color and
beauty

we sometimes take the shape of a fist
on the other hand
if needed
just to keep
it
going

but life has its own life
its own time frame too

and death has its own unique contour
that arrives
at you
sometimes
as a surprise

i can call it ripeness

some call it inevitability

or reality from a philosophical point of view

i see it as a very ripe fruit that falls from a tree of bounty and then a child comes running to pick it up and begins to peel it and bite and swallow

because it is luscious because it is so sweet.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Chair Is No Longer Just A Chair

it is your experience that gives you more meaning to all those which you think
have been too common and insignificant,

perhaps
now you must have realized as you sit upon a chair that someone used to sit there and that someone waited for another to be with her that on the same chair there were some fears and pains and even longings and hopes unrealized and by then you see that chair not just a chair

you sit there
and you ask it
for this chair though muted by wood will always have a story to tell....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Challenge For You....

tell me, ask,
kneel down, and beg

that everything that i am telling you is not true that these are all the fabrications of a fertile mind

all imaginations of a man who is tired of having to do nothing in his life crazy, mad, name me psychologically imbalanced,

beg, you must beg,
that death cannot be true let that man who stand in the middle of the busy road shout that we too are false.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Challenge In The Dark

have a dose of
anonymity
undress, and be comfortable with the coldness
and wait,

someone that you do not see clearly offers nothing but the self no words
just a shadow
no touch but
just
being beside you
watching
what darkness does upon
darkness
hours melting
on the floor
no one picks up
anything
that is frozen
not one must mention
any hint
about the light of dawn

RIC S. BASTASA
find me a word
to catch the beauty of the silence of a lone leaf falling from its mother
tree
to the embrace
of dead earth

RIC S. BASTASA
A Challenge....

notice that after seeing something now, you expect something beyond this, but for the meantime you scrutinize every corner
all details, then you try grasping the whole of this creation,
of words, that sometimes does not give you a picture of anything like a zebra for instance transforming into a man in his pajamas

you invent a scent
like jasmine or something forceful like pepper or chloroform as a hint
for those who died ahead of you
weird, , , ,

sigh, you stop
and express a disappointment saying
this thing is not leading me to something greater than myself something redeeming like the good works
of Christ
precisely, this is what is intended to be said everything is incomplete unfinished
truth is a growing tree a climbing vine a flower blooming a fan opening in a warm season to give you the message of fresh air

what do you get from this useless piece?
ah, that feeling of incompleteness of being unfinished

like the way i feel now i ask: will you complete me?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Chance To Ask A Question

your family name shows that you also come from my old hometown up north where the hills rise like giants in the mythical sea yo must have known all the recent news of town how is my brother? Did he survive the war there?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Change

agreements and promises that was how we know beginnings, a knowing of green leaves and expecting the blooms one day, we were talking about a harvest of some days and some fruits the commitment to give myself to you and you in return dying for me, the enclosures that open and tell you these are all that i have a stone's language is harsh in its silence the bird perching on a twig looks curious the river sings the songs of the sea we float there facing the bright moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Change Of Color

white has become the symbol of war
green no longer verdant yellow for fidelity and black for life

you changed it,
in a little while my poems shall change
some moods too

pain overpowered
by joy

a tree having a shadow filled with red leaves
and the whitest flowers for the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
A Change Of Color Of The Wind And The Sun

earlier there is this color of comfort soft light spreading on the grass pastel green to light green and then deeper, like a pond covered with floating moss stone coated with greenish river and driftwood floating
in silence

i sit patiently waiting for the coming of the changes faint light getting stronger the sun rises from the twin peaks peeping tom between two breasts of green hills light spreads getting stronger the lady walking on the path begins to wear her turban noonday, the shadow becomes short and compressed flashed against a rock scorched the grasses stiffen short of the water the moisture is gone and then the hot air reigns there is this silence that keeps running to the places of the heart fanning leaves comforting a grieving man under a mango tree someone left him

someone is shattered like a very dry leaf crumpled and cracked and calling for help the plain is dry and wide there is no shadow of a horse coming on the other side of the road far to the edge of the mirage there are only watery illusions.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Change Of Plan....

a heavy rain at night
gives us a sage for morning
it teaches.
this sage of a tunnel of trees.
a bench
in the middle of green
space.

i wake up this morning destroying all itineraries.
there is something
more to what i dream of when i am awake.

i deny this body.
i flower thoughts.

i tend a garden of justifications life is not a single line along the edge of a clean sheet of paper.

we are supposed to meet today and mend those broken segments.
finally, i send the signal.

Red.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Change Of Priority

at dawn i feel you touch my hands
i do not think now
of roses in springtime
i do not have thoughts like a river
i am caught
in this quagmire of other priorities

myself above all wanting something new and strange

in the morning
you tell me that the roses in the garden
all wilted

i must not be dreaming
of death.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Chat Last Night

i am good at words.
familiar with metaphors, and you stumble
upon an oxymoron that i offer you and which you by confusion, have so lightly taken, i do have to say, how much is your smile, what is the price of your kiss, i will be too abrupt, and blunt and you may not like them,
though that is what it really is: love cost this amount per unit of convergence divisible moments, maximizing income.

beautiful killer, you are,
tremendously slow, in conclusions, i buy you some confounding, this is or this is not, to be or not to be,
you this, and you do not know about that,
how time consuming to woe and yet not to let you know that we are not really talking and i am not taking you for love: a commodity, a trade in for dignity, an excuse to gallivant like an etherized valentino, stuffed juliet, and frozen romeo, undressed they all appear like dressed chickens in a row, for sale, three for two,

a little tete a tete, something for a bric and brac, guess some more,

'i love you'
i really love you, and i said oh i love you too webcams off. what kind of face did you wear then? was it the mask? is it the face with a crown of thorns Jesssez! for God's sake! stop talking about love, i am freezing in coldness. Love is strange now as we age, we do not believe about its value anymore, wrinkled skins, and hollow bones, empty promises of the salvific nature of divine love, what for? this i can say. I do not think anymore like a philosopher, i live like a an ant now, following pheromones, doing and doing, and hauling and hauling, just a creature on this anthill nothing more.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Chat Of Hope

brb.

i am attending a party of a friend who brings his prince charming from Puerto Rico whose name is Ludivico and who promises her marriage after she gets widowed a month ago.

she brings that news to all her Filipino friends who say they are happy too

brb.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Chat With A Friend Whose Name You Need Not Know

well she starts with hello how are you
i say, i am fine how about you?

she is not, perhaps, she has a quarrel
with her boyfriend
and they will soon be married this september
then to be changed this june

is she confused? i ask myself as i type
my messages, she says, maybe,

then we shifted to movies,
wings, chicago, as good as it gets,
the corny titanic, and i recommended

il postino, i tell her, watch it tonight
and you will like neruda
and this postman and this love

how a poet makes love
more open and visible and
expressable
to the lips of a seasick man in an island
that does not move with time

slow, and almost forgotten
until, the son of a dead man
who thanked the poet
talks to him

his father gone
but the love still lingers
in the island
where some poems were born
because
one must love
and be loved and the poems must give the tongue
for that expression.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Chat With A Lady Lawyer Invisible On The Other Line

u (no answer)
i know you're on line (no answer, deadma) how u been? busy? how is your new house?

and your kids? and your husband?
(he left you or u junked him?) he left you, ok, he left you, and don’t bother asking,
i am not asking, (but i am interested because i may say, he is my friend at least once in those summer seminars in physics,1980, long time ago, when i really think he is straight and religious and well composed, and calm and cautious, but you finally revealed, he's on drugs left you for a woman not of your level or caliber, but enough with pain, and misery, i will shift to oher things) and how is your career? making more money with your university research and writing and lawyering at the same time, coping up with motherhood, and other important matters in your life? you snobbed me, and you told me when i ask you if you know this lady judge who is married to a school mate and you said you know her, and you do not want to be disturbed as your boyfriend is with you and having a good time on that time of the day, and you think i believe you? shall i swallow you hook, line and sinker?

i like to, but i don't really, you are just mad about life, and you finally shut your mouth hide in a shell, keep your fences high, and declare to the world, this manifesto, that you are not talking to anybody,

to include me, and i perfectly understand, and so here i am talking to myself, because you prefer to be invisible, suffer alone and have more time, to think, to be yourself, and just be plain woman of the soul and body, looking for openings
somewhere, to be free, to be honest, in the pursuit of happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Checkpoint On Despair

who is despair?
do i know her face again?
she was with me for years and years and she was too cruel beating me with her paddles and piercing my skin with her needles my body has pins and pains everywhere until i get tired of her and rejected her

honest
despair can be rejected i have done it once and i shall do it again
many times

Tina says
i am on my denial stage she is wrong
i am in this state of freedom i have a checkpoint and i am the soldier that screens who goes in and who goes out from my system

despair is out happiness is in it is not a matter of fate it is a matter of choice for now i have declared my freedom

i choose
and i always win

RIC S. BASTASA
Some sugar for my lips to sweeten our kiss Some mint in my tongue to add some herb or spice in French delights A little salt and pepper on my cheek, you lick me there sometimes

We close our eyes
From our million cells we generate and separate The necessary substances

Some estrogens from you Some androgens from me

Some digestive juices some Adrenalines in all corners Of our bodily organs Needed for ecstasy and Multiple orgasms

Do not dream, do not inject Something like love something Like affection, do not involve The elements of the heart

This is just plain mixing of chemicals Reacting, exploding in so short a time

We open our eyes; we do not ask our names
We are strangers in this chemical romance

It is over in a few minutes and then we Leave and close gently the door behind us.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Chicken's Life

we watch it from the beginning an egg, plus days hatching into a chick seeing the first light of the bulb
and the hen pushes each chick into the ground to feed
by themselves
until some feathers grow beaks and claws
now we view a full grown
chicken,

at least, i am not talking about a coward, do you understand?

do not, please,
chicken out from life's bitter days we were babies
not chicks

RIC S. BASTASA
A Chick's Computation Of His Detention Inside The Eggshell

the chick must have been so impatient though it admits it still lacks the strength to open the shell of its existence when it went out finally to walk the world of chickens its markings of the days of detention are clear in four vertical lines and the usual cross in sets of tens

RIC S. BASTASA
A Child's Game

the games that you play are the same games that i am playing writing poems

watching movies
reading stories
reading poems
taking the night out with not so close friends enjoying the music at the bar
some beer and some barbecue
a little laughter
some pretenses
some truths to tell sometimes going home late
and wanting some sleep till noon,

what is it that i am doing?
i am hiding from misery this program on pain reduction this art of losing and finding and losing till it hurts no more these children games

of hide and seek
breaking up and becoming friends again in such a short
time

RIC S. BASTASA
A Chip Of Earth

doesn't have to be

big to be beautiful

miniscule structures

are often the most intriguing.

a tiny moon

floats in the vast darkness of the

universe.

millimeter men inching toward the foot of a miniature

Buddha,

trying to catch a glimpse

of the

minute gods looking down

upon

demeter earth

RIC S. BASTASA
A Choice

My feet are heavy
To an early church mass
And my hands caress them

When she is gone finally

My feet become lighter
And my hands stopped pretending

Then the real loving begins Alone, this window opens There my love
Lurks posing as a nude woman

Her arms opening to take me in & through this window

Some yellow butterflies with black edges on its wings A little larger than my thumb

Circle over my head.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Choice For Life.....

there are wrong inspirations nails rusty hinges on doors that scream

daily one idolizes
the wrong picture of a naked deity

the body longs for what is vibrating like a tuning fork

looking for the satisfying glory of an ecstasy

there will be consequences for
all these ruins and fall outs

but who cares? one edges like a snail for another place to stick it out and speak a language of survival

daily i must watch it and daily must i write like a barbarian riding upon a black horse and fighting the wind with its own sword

two heads in my body gnashing teeth to teeth banging
same head to another same head
until skulls crack until blood spits out from hair

but who cares? i am into this and this is a choice for life...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Choice For Specifics....

take a little
of this
crispiness,

throw that creepy
creature over the window smell violets, feel smooth porcelain

taste honey and a grain of this universe found in salt

spill sour,
nibble.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Choice For The Moment In Boracay

Beside a glass window facing the sea
you sit upon a mahogany chair doing nothing but just gazing into nowhere enjoy the quiet and feel that salty taste that the breeze is bringing to your face to your tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
A Choice Of What Shall I Be Later shall i pretend to you that i have only one face forever?

you are silent
you think like a deep river making no sound at all despite the storm when the waters from the mountains come and force you to rise and run and rage and they accuse you of having caused the flood as i watch in sadness you are my night and day and you have seen the changing of my hues i turn red like a rose become white like a carnation become sturdy like a bark of the oak tree sometimes i turn into stone hard and unmoving you see me and touch me with your wind and mist like a diamond i wear some corners some faces for me to glitter for me to find meaning in the life that i carry within my arms a lull sometimes almond eyes a rocking of my feet these are the mechanisms of my coping up to be a man in your silence i set aside my masks and face you shed off some faces and look at you with the eyes of my soul oh, i become so vulnerable to the truth of this one and only face as you kiss me in my lips

i quiver i become so light i become so alive i become so real as all the other faces fade like the poisonous fumes from the funnel

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cicada Shell

My companion to this Last journey

A cicada shell

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cigarillo

a friend of mine
has fully bloomed into a rare
rafflesia

no longer a raffleo
but a cigarillo

bred in the U.S.
Works there for years and comes back to Dohinob to recall
those old feelings

unburdening himself unloading money

Dakak and Solinog
and Aliguay
and a feast in Polanco

old and bitchy still but as he appropriately worded it

'I'm free! ! ! '

(was he in bondage in Dohinob? was it his prison in his mind?) just wondering early

at 6 a.m.
without coffee and
bread

RIC S. BASTASA
A Circle Within

this afternoon
we see each other

i remember love
but i do not want it
here

i notice you have gotten too old earlier that i expected

there must be some kind of depression

or the hurry which i think i understand

i remember loving you once. Yes, just once.

and i understand now why we never made it

here, or some place else it is my love

of self that makes me look younger

i have thrown away hope from someone

and all these years i have only relied on my capacity for loving myself

my capacity to just be me, move on, and

expect nothing, no one is made for me

i am a circle without an end, without a leak.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Circular Motion

circular motion the murky sea
tells the truth about the chaos of rain
on the high mountains

those who are unlucky remain buried
some are carried to be swallowed by
the fish and the shrimps and the squids
feasting on the body of the rotten
kid

on our tables for lunch
we are lucky to have same fish, shrimps
and squids

the sea clears itself of the mess from those rivers and we are the first guests here
dipping...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Clear Day

lady clouds
on for a party on a clear day taking time
glimpsing
on a mirror
river

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cliche On Aging

Fine as wine,
Long in the tooth
Over the hill
Old as dirt

RIC S. BASTASA
A Clink For A Drink

Nick thinks and winks Drinks his finks and makes a Sync of what stinks After seeing his shrink

Life is zinc
Not a pink mink
Had a hard dick
And a lip stick

The sky is rosy pink
And this is the data link Rethink with a soft drink What happens next
On that skating rink

A marking ink spic
The missing link
salmon pink prick
what a freak!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Closed Mouth A Closed Set Of Eyes.

you will catch me aghast
red-handed i did not side with
sleep

it is getting rare
this restfulness

the tiresome thought has come as a respected guest in my house

there are playful kids
all around without their mothers watching them

some have wings
and tails and they appear to be like their dreams of dragonflies you will catch me in surprise

i am not myself
i am like them playful spirits

i have set aside reason for i am tempted with the
rain

the room is vague
and the door is misty

the windows are spaces where we connect with the scenery of trees and roads and to the end is the sea and the last horizontal line
of all existences

a very silent line
straight like your silence concluding like peace

a closed mouth a closed set of eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Closer Look At Adela

she is white skinned at a closer look she is pale like dawn her skin at a much closer scrutiny is dry like paper ready for the write a blue ink can provide a color
a story

she just broke up with an old flame and to forget (that is what she is telling me) she immediately said yes to a new boyfriend this time short but not timid and not so square jawed

she says the new one is oozing with sex appeal and seeing him is enough for her to salivate a bit she is happy, she assures herself that prepared to forget the ex whose feet drags slowly to the Italian church she smiles at me and no matter what all i can say is that despite the curves of her lips she is still looks very very sad.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cloud In My Mind That I Still Love That Much....

changed
course, trying to find out, if, i will not touch anything,
you,
you will miss me
if you will find a way, to touch
me, if,
i could see you,
blank to the
the overwhelming
beauty of the
mountains,
cliffs,
skies, seas, and
stars.

changed course,
trying to get away
from that bermuda
triangle of sinking, aboard this boat of
sin, which i call love,
as i
want once to confide
with you,

you still have
no word for it, whatsoever, no
word for me no word
for that moment

you are a puzzle
a riddle,
and i still have not figured out what you really are a cloud in my mind that i still confess loving

that much....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Clue Early Dawn, For Me Alone.

sin
after you
reverence....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cocoon

it is the ease
that comes afterward
when you
finally vomit that
pain

it is the ease of truth and the bitter part
of the lie
somehow that one must eject and one
must swallow
which is it
finally is what must
you decide

there is an implant in our
mind
that longing that we can never forget
that guides and
tells us
what to do
with dignity

it is you, and no one else
that makes a world
that is happier to live with

what they say
may hurt temporarily...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cockroach

a cockroach flies above my head and lands
near my feet

my instinct kills it outright with a sudden stamp and there the cockroach lies smashed and dead

i smell stink
and never felt any regret.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cocky Morning

don't be malicious

the cocks are sounding off their horns to greet the hens out there good morning

and of course the hens crackle and giggle

RIC S. BASTASA
it is the ease
that comes afterward
when you
finally vomit that
pain

it is the ease of truth
and the bitter part
of the lie
somehow that one must
eject and one
must swallow
which is it
finally is what must
you decide

there is an implant in our
mind
that longing that we
can never forget
that guides and
tells us
what to do
with dignity

it is you, and no one else
that makes a world
that is happier to live with

what they say
may hurt temporarily...

cocoon....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Coiled Water Hose

hopelessness - a coiled Water hose has forgotten
That it should whoosh

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cold Coffee Mug

eye're all happy: man beside a woman holding hands, smiling, behind them a snowy mountain, ea kid blowing candles on a chocolate cake, it is his birthday, behind him

his dad, and mom and guests, balloons in colors, and
and some gifts,

at the mall you and some friends pose in front of a huge Christmas tree, your hands having a hard time with the stuff you bought for yourself, oh, they're all happy, and here you are alone in your room writing a poem, outside your window, shadows of trees, a distant sound of a dog howling, coffee mug for one, and it has gone cold.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cold Cup Of Coffee...

must i know now the significance of a coffee getting cold after it is being served on my table?
how do i not notice time passing?
like a breeze from the sea because i have been preoccupied looking at the horizon anticipating the glory of the sunrise that i am waiting for most of my time having spent nights on isolated veranda away from friends and relatives?

a cold coffee now that i regret having asked and just like the rest of my other coffees
it shall remain as it is

coffee on its brim
returned
untouched.....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cold Night

cold of the earth
the leaves fall silently like sighs

RIC S. BASTASA
A Collage Of The Front Page

it stirred my soul
about the dead man's meeting i can't describe it but let me try

it is like a yellow rose a humming bird

if only walls could talk tears would have been saves by
time

living in the country hope rising
you choose harmony or chaos?
pray reality

you pay for what never fade

RIC S. BASTASA
A Collective Mosaic Of Existence

as i sit here something diffuses in my head like light in the glass wall where blue is electric where red is bloody,

i let things simmer inside my skin molecules keep penetrating inside the pores in sensitivity
the vibrations are felt and they are so exciting molecular silence

atomic defenses

the rationalization this time is that everything is a sail boat on the sea
a flux and influx everything fluid, airy, nothing stops all of me
float like dust against the light escaping from a slit
early morning

existence is like a random dance but they always claim nothing happens like that the intentionality becomes obvious when the dust settles on the ground the woman sweeps them all in one stroke

the self now is spread in its own kind of universe all dust nothing individual

RIC S. BASTASA
A Comeback

takes time to realize that the place you hate the place you left years ago now on your return becomes your hiding place away from sorrow
the place where you bury your past now becomes your future story.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Comma For An Ending,

i know and i know that you have noticed that i have developed a style of my own the way i look at things and take them with me the way i describe a moment and makes this moment last no, it has nothing with imagery anymore or metaphors, these have become passe and cliched by too much use, and they those great ones like you in your pedestal and crown and scepter finally get bored with all these repetitions i am talking and i keep talking and i write with all these fingers my eyes focused on each letter transformed into words into this long sentence without any marking sign at all except for a few commas until i finally have to use an end to all these monotonous lines searching for a happy ending perhaps not in a period but in another comma,

RIC S. BASTASA
A Commentary

while, it, is true,
that i empathize with what, you are now,

are there rough storms inside
your mind?

are you a ship
without an anchor?

or an ant crushed
by a stone?
still breathing
the last

whatever,

there is a must still to learn this craft of survival
through
poetry as medium
of angst,

of internal wars
unseen
by any human ordinary eye

RIC S. BASTASA
A Commentary On The Face Of A Young Boy

his cheek just bore a single pimple. it is the mark of his puberty this face of a young boy hidden halfway between the window and the white curtain his lips, his mouth
indeed
so virginal, neither woman nor man has kissed he has no vision of himself his future is thin like a thread that one reckless being can easily cut
he is silent like a white lotus on the pond he has no voice yet to speak for himself in the crowded city, Arnel, who used to love women but hurt and defiled loves the face of this young boy and tonight, his puberty shall be shared with a strange man in that condo, where the young boy for the meantime that he has no home shall stay

i am shocked about this news but i have to admit this truth, this predator and prey thing for their mutual survival, one who is too lonely and confused and the other who is in deep need for shelter and affection.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Community

her eyes shed the lost tear
when the community of hands finally buries
her son

the grief settles on the
the hearts of many the tears dry up from the eyes of many to the thousand handkerchiefs of this community

always one in sorrow together in joys.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Companion On The Impossible...

on finished paths
i shy away, the stones there look the same but no one is complaining and all attempts to find new ones seem to be nothing but a respect for the trivial,

i am faced with forest trees those that do not know how a man looks like or how a woman tastes all they know are the winds from the sea and the clouds from across the islands of despair

i do not have a cutter on my hand and i only have my fingers and tongue i squat under the sun and begin my work there is so much to cut and clean been here for years and there is nothing much that changed

the trees have grown so tall and cannot even see me the grasses sheltered more snakes and have their party i am alone with nothing but hope....

and then you come.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Complete Poem

i like to start it with a naughty word like the one that slaps your butt and you smile and even giggle (you like it too you like to simply start with lust) and then i write more words something that cares and worries

about you
our future about us in the middle of this long and lonely journey and i will put some pauses a little stop here and there but i will not be staying for long there will be interjections and even emotional bursting no sobbing

but exclamations of joy nothing to annoy
but definitely there will be no questions and then we will be there somewhere until the strong light begins to slowly fade and then, of course, you must agree, and this will be free surely, i will put a happy ending red curtains falling with matching music marching and then later something romantic live a violin playing with flute accompanying this fugue of love

yes,
it is all about love & passion those that conquer all age and wisdom
and monotony
and then i put on the finishing undertones of faith this final fidelity

and the color of sunset and then on a peaceful night you shall hear a white dove that coos in its cozy nest deep down into a very sound sleep....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Complication

it is your eyes, the problem points to the sensitivity of your eyes to beauty, what is seen is always beautiful and touch seems to be not just the craving of the fingers those hands keep on groping and holding on to someone else's body perfumed neck and soft white skin poems that run all over a woman's body and feeling what it takes to reach the apex of the skies, revolting and exploding, and bursting forth in the so many hues, love oh love, love on top of love, and love searching for the perfect orgasmic affection, what a night! ~`~ ~ ~ corrugated moans like an art of wrought iron on the rails of the upper floor, there the stars are kissing the full moon and the sky is so silent filled with understanding about love and its erogenous doings, unbreaking...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Composition

i don't really think that it is just a sound, well, it could be a song, a singsong, of sweet groans and lusty moans, a sigh perhaps a hush in the middle of the night some buds that open to the tickle of the sun ray one morning from a slit of a violet venetian blind open hands, lips gaping for gaping lips a tongue searching for taste eyes half-closed waiting for your caress that unforgotten kiss hair freely falling like winds dancing in the field of white tulips A Composition In A Ricefield

The white herons
Are commas
The carabaos are periods

An eagle flying over my head Is the head note

The trees are the margins
And the fences

The nipa huts
Are footnotes

The rice field is one big Pad of paper

And so this is the composition Of a ricefield

Commats on top of periods
Two head notes will do Four footnotes
Can make a story of a village

My hand is always the ampersand
And I think
Like there are no carabaos on this pad of paper.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Compromise

the lesbian in her says that she will love a few men who love
too her few women

RIC S. BASTASA
A Conclusion

far from it,
how can he be
a richard brautigan?
tried Bukowski
but at the end
he repeats the line: who the hell is Bukowski?

he begins again
saying: hey i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Concoction

sky-blue glass

ice cubes floating

your white hands pouring my coca-cola

RIC S. BASTASA
A Confession

i am tired
of anger
and have tried revenge
and i have been successful in both ways

it is time now
for love

let me try it
now

let me start
forgive me

let me continue
i have always loved you

let me continue some more:
love me for what i am

let me leave you the question for you have not answered my plea:

shall i leave now?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Confession For El Cabir

you have been immersed in a pond filled with the holiest of all the purified waters blessed by all the saints in your mind by all the angels in your books yet you are still silenced by your restraints every morning you stand by your window watching nothing yes the wind that sweeps away the mahogany leaves on the roof of the catwalk where no one is walking because the semester just ended and you have no home to go

the apartment is another lonely room it serves you no good you never had sex there with a stranger you have been growing money in your bank and it is giving you more grief it is not greed, but it is the inability to be open to yourself and give yourself a break by stepping out of the university and be

happy,

you have many definitions about what happiness is and it is a waste of deliberation alone in your room where the papers are mute and as usual dead

do not define happiness just grab it
be blind
set aside your eyes for a while have a leaping heart be a frog or a reptile, that snake with red lines and black lines alternating on its scaled belly or the grasshopper that sings on summer teasing the ants.

i look at you with scrutiny as i make myself comfortable on that velvet sofa inside your well kept philosophy office

it is a field of sadness and i pity you

but what can i do? you are the wise man and i am the loose jackal.
you are shrinking like hell and i am bloating like heaven.

what a conceit i have? never mind, call me a typographical error of the university nevertheless, i must tell you, i am not real.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Confession Of Guilt

i am not throwing all the pages but just the same i am not reading them and you say they are all important for my meaningful existence i make a compromise alright they stay pile upon pile inside my study room where i do things that i should not have done where i prioritize those that do not feed me a junk of this bread and butter thing grabbing air and space and gobbling nothingness like food and stuff like that i wonder what is happening to me now shying away from those that i ought to love and cultivate

my mind wonders like a meteor in space like a tennis ball that you hit and goes away as a point in darkness
gone

i sleep the whole day and write the whole night i wake up when everyone is asleep i entertain thoughts that destroy me i write those that do not make me alive sometimes i make a conclusion that i am getting to be a machine without any perceived use a hen cackling yet without eggs a house abandoned a polluted lake a broken toy a torn rag doll a train whose tracks are stolen i feel so deprived and i work hard to fill myself this void that expands like a balloon that lifts me up to an atmosphere near the sun expecting an outburst where i will surely fall like a torn condom this rubber thing that does not bounce at all perhaps i need a break perhaps i need to be broken to be shaken so i may wake up and feel the brokenness of a champagne cork lid.

i've been broken you know and i have mended myself repaired every part but i guess this is just a cycle that i have to pass through this circuitous route this spherical world this ring without an end like love, perhaps, like love perhaps that i once missed it is messy, i know but i keep on talking and writing you should know better well, i guess, this is therapy on the going it is free, as i am free.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Confession Of Help For A Beloved

i must be in a danger zone

when you kiss
my lips

i feel nothing
at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Confession...

today i post some old pictures of mine in facebook, it is actually one way of going back to the past and checking
if i am still part of it, they say the past is gone and in some ways we do not live there anymore and so i search for my old face when i was so young then and vibrant about what my future brings, there i was, so alive,
believing that this world has integrity and that every man rises to a certain height pursuant to merit and for the valid reasons fit for a cause, they say i was too handsome for my present and i agree time has scarred my face, the injustice has scared me much,
and then i look at myself in the mirror again i have succeeded
i am scarred but i have survived i am alive and shall move on with the challenges of my life nothing hinders me because i am real, i have sided with the truth and shall sacrifice some more.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Confusing Story

forgetting you makes her think of jumping out of the window from
the 10th floor,

she is
so depressed like a
house blown by a tornado, she thinks she is dying she can be like her friend one time
when finally she jumped out and killed herself in an instant like a water melon crushed on the pavement of the road.

there are 13 women who died on this county in the name of men, love, hate, despair, denial, ambiguities,

she can't be the 14th
of this story,

enough of these! she like to have a happy ending,

wait, she is trying to find an exit
the exit of yes,

and 'they live happily ever after'

yes. yes. yes.
that is what forgetting means, she finally lives happily ever after, and the man is free and the other woman dies of grief.

The man is killed in her story.

she betrays him too the author, and even God.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Confusion

do not ask if on the darkness
of the night
he will make you a star

do not also ask if he will make you the queen of the throne of his dreams

do not ask yourself
for you
know that
you have no answer

do not
ask
the comets
they will just pass
at the blink
of your eye

do not
ask confusion
is deaf
and blind

RIC S. BASTASA
A Constant Falling

sometimes you feel being sucked down to the bottom of the earth and you try to hold on to the protrusions of the rocks and even the clinging vines just near you and all of them seem to be so useless as you go on to this falling and falling and falling, and then you let go, you fall and then you accept and then the little miracles come, and then you simply enjoy the falling and falling and you are no longer surprised but amazed and then you tell yourself: what a ride!

RIC S. BASTASA
it will be too unlikely
for one at this prime age his pink
youth
to start glimpsing about the face of extinction

one says it will be unbecoming
in fact, too premature and simply
sad

when one tumbles however and bleeds
and feels the pain of an injury
one realizes a hint
into the possibility of an incoming
death

one contemplates upon it like a folded letter
whose miserable content
makes you
read it over and over again

deep in your heart
you tell yourself

'this is real and i will be next'....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Contrast

outside there is this old brown short dog barking to a stranger

three motorbikes are making a lot of noise on the city street
some children, one bigger than the other two small children look like they are quarelling over some toys the trees lining the road are pruned and some stacks of leaves are left to dry on this hot noonday

then a brownout: the computer shuts down blipping and blipping for a warning to save your last poem

RIC S. BASTASA
A Contrast Of The Sands And The Pebbles...

tread along the shores
of the sea
feel the sand and the pebbles try sitting down all these things in your mind and find a way to look towards the horizons as the planets align today without your knowing trying to save you from this mess.

hold a handful of sand pick each color of the pebbles bring them back to the home of your past: variations, a break from the chain an irregularly shaped one along the line of an absurdity a deviant line has a reason during the storm a ship has to anchor where it is not used to be, an accepted route find a reason between the uniformity of the sands and the breaking streaks among the myriad colors of the pebbles.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Conversation

the meeting of words familiarity winding through each letter at first

everyday makes the conversation lovelier each syllable plunging deeper into the abyss of our souls and then we lightness and darkness meet halfway

in the corridors of our silence missing the meaning of each origin

RIC S. BASTASA
A Conversation With Desire

desire, i know you when i look at you and you look at me we know what we really mean even without the use of a word desire, we can fit together, for my name is a longing unsatisfied we may but for the time being i cannot for my hands are chained to morality and civility and courtesy of my past

and for the pleasure of my future desire, go, pass me by i am not yet prepared to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Conversation....

she cannot accept the fact that a good poetry is just another form of imagination

Me
Mercy Temple

is she AC? 7:16 AM

Me
Shirley Bassey

me too hehehehe 7:16 AM and begin to ask if my life, my marriage, my toes, my knees, my fingernails, my shoulders are okay 7:17 AM

Me
Victoria Vega

I still do believe they were ur unconscious mend
A dream

And so my song this morning is My toes, my knees

RIC S. BASTASA
there is someone inside me that knows how to fly

and having no issues with the earth

i go away with this resolve not to return

time is not my master neither outbursts
of glory
my premonition,

and mind you,
you are forever,
alone, in that kingdom of despair

you are a slave of
time
and bound by it
each second.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Couple For The Night

submission is her

hers to give as she spreads

her legs
dominion is his

his is the power to conquer

and subdue
as he throbs upon her

she opens
as he pushes in

and they
whatever you say brutal or rude

passive or stupid

they are the collaborating artists

in God's new creation

RIC S. BASTASA
A Couple's Choice

last night was nice there was a blackout
and the house was so silent, it was hot and so we opened
the windows and above the trees
fronting our room
was the full moon

lunatic nights with nothing but the moon and our smooth
conversation

at times you realize marriage is not at all about sex, sometimes it is the conversation that makes the better bond, soul to soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Covenant Among Ourselves...

i know i am good
i know i am beautiful and you know that too and we meet in a party full of friends and i see love and hope and the zest for life among us in this small circle we know what love is we do it somehow in giving and laughing and in the slow sips of our drinks like the way we handle each moment of our lives what we had kept and treasured what we have not wasted and thrown away i know you are good and i know how wonderful have you become i have noted each moment each change for the better i always love to see you confident in your ways and gentle in your actions

i salute you for all the respect and dignity we keep this accord among ourselves in this circle of life and it won't be long and we all part ways but it will just be for this moment of joys marked and bliss drawn we believe in the life after the eternal and the perfect ending and so we never worry about the here and then we are human, we are divine we have loved, we love and we shall never cease.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Crack Where A Ray Of Light May Pass Through

a door long closed if you try opening it rusty and worn makes the squeaking sound of antiquity slipping through a crack of the walls that fit too closely with time its frames too tight for a breaking light but we must open it this time of need when words do not wish to be given birth to a casual utterance in an intimate conversation i push and you pull and we must move towards a different direction at least only for a while you see, some rays of light start to come inside the boredom and the monotony of the sounds of our lonely days touching the lines of our palms this time there are changes on the way things Aline themselves to a certain harmony not alienating, some boundaries, a little distance space, more space, you move and i do not get near you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Crisis In Faith

there is a crisis in faith
because one has looked up there where the stars
are faithless themselves

their doubts are as myriad as their
twinklings
their being lost are shown with the
way they die
one by one in an explosion
that is missed by your
limited eyes

try moving inward, into the caves of your heart
where the silence of the veins
and arteries are found

where red blood of life passes
in and out of the valves without much complaint
where the heart works all its lifetime
to tell you about love
and tenderness

and care and patience and passion to love the words of God till the end of time.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Criterion For Uselessness

how big is that tree
how lush the leaves how strong
the twigs and trunks
how profuse are the roots
how deep its penetration to earth

yet how useless
you’ll say
for it bears no fruit

RIC S. BASTASA
A Crying Poem

a crying poem
mourns for its words and lost rhythm

it is lost some more because it reasons out and tries to explain
and enumerate
its lament its sorrows its cheeks have teardrops following the flow of its sadness

a crying poem keeps a name of its lover, and listens to no one.

it asks that you must leave it
at once.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cup Of Coffee

Neither am i happy nor sad
that is the truth for now.

i am a cup of coffee abandoned and when you come back and you're so thirsty you shall take me cold.
i don't mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Cyber Friend

she keeps saying that she is ugly and so she keeps the secret about her name her existence
she insists she does not exist for she is air but she is everywhere she is the laughter of those who mock her she is short, dark, thick lipped bow legged she is nothing she is a blank page a stain for the moment dirt i tell her, i am not a discriminating bug i am like her once without courage for what i am but i learned by heart the virtue of honesty yes whatever that is i love myself and i am open for those who can have the courage of loving me for what i am the freedom gives me what beauty there is it is in the heart not in the arm not in the body not in the brain.

emote, that 's me.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dadada Poem

It is not a fine morning, a storm this June Sunk a boat killing some of my brothers And they are not accounted by this government, Complaints are made and they are not heard,
And remedies are not afforded, and always this Event happens with everybody from the senator To the Mayor of the town gets a babble,
And so what has been done? I do not read the papers I do not take a pair of scissors, I do not choose any article And cut it and put all the pieces on a bag and close the bag And shake all the cut pieces and then I throw all the Pieces from the top of the building in the city Like a confetti and there I shout, at the top of my voice

This is what is happening and nothing is done We are all falling like pieces like pieces like da da da ado

do do do ada
da da da da

Arriving at nothing at all, babbles getting out of the bag Now emptied of words.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dagger In Silence....

the silence in the room is like a dagger stabbing each heart each stab followed by another stab until the body is numb to the pain that silence brings the first one that utters the word becomes the murderer

of peace...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dance

on the silver railings lining the side of the stairs she presses
her thighs and breasts
the poles
unaffected
my eyes gaze like the sun surprising the blackness of her hair
i am light penetrating the tightness
of unbelief

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dance In Circles

you must have seen how life is painted by one great artist

a dance in circle
where we hold our hands and then we keep revolving around the axis that we ourselves form a merry-go-round on this side a ferris wheel going up arm to arm and face to face we like it

each of us feeling like a ring without an end without a beginning we project to the very least our sense of love for something that is eternal we say we are not meant just to be here we are meant for something higher not rectangular, no longer circular but something else, we even say this is something felt and yet unspeakable something so near us and yet still so far like how we see the stars as tiny specks so far away and yet so true and real

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dance In The Dark

A dance in the dark Is a nude dance
Two forms Fuse as one

Shades in the Dark with some Specks of light
A dance of Coming and going

One that tells me Out you go And yet takes Me by her hand

And without a Word the two Forms kiss
and Lose themselves In an empty space

Where the specks Of light may Turn into fire
a wild fire A burning dance A wild dance

And it stops only As the Two Lovely Forms Become the dark And an empty space.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Date

three red chilis
on top of two sliced calamansi beside the cup of white rice inverted in form
the chicken barbecue is glazed with butter
above a banana leaf

we have nothing to talk about we eat

RIC S. BASTASA
A Date In Cyberspace

would a date in cyberspace acceptable to you? my body is taken, but my heart is still in the power of my hands, and it is beating like a ball of fire, the sun, shining with its rays, prepared to hold anything that is cold and weary and lovely still to behold.

are you one of those colder planets out there waiting for the warmth of my distant heat?

let me caress your face let my rays run like thai massage to your weary flesh let me kiss you lips let me in on a hot noon day affair on valentine's day take my light to your room let me see your naked body let me feel it like i am all light let me see you spin in happiness let me see you as a heavy cloud about to pour your rain let me see you as a dry soil absorbing all rain and bathing in all my sunshine let me hear you moan tonight in cyber space let there be twinkling stars let there be the most silent moon gentle to our secrets like a mother seeing his son happy with his toy

RIC S. BASTASA
A Date On The Tube

the hands of loneliness grope for the pictures on the tube

a world is created full of colors and conversations what you love to hear is the moan of a lovely life

a romantic prelude of the river of electrical currents byte per byte you enjoy what this technological fantasies can offer because you are having so many wounds the sting of guilt stings no more there are walls that wall you in and you feel so protected in the jungle of lust you water the maladies of your broken dreams you comfort yourself somehow that just like your past moments of happiness this misdirected journey in a maze is not a place of no return you keep the lighthouse beckoning other lost ships back and so everyone finds everybody back to their strong arms again

RIC S. BASTASA
do not forget to wear your wedding ring for they will check it as i too shall bring mine got a room reserved for us at Eddie's a marital bed with a hot and cold shower
and a love chair and a jacuzzi and a complimentary swiss massage for both
of us
a sumptuous dinner for two inside the room with a classical music of mozart at the background
the pillows are strawberry scented and the floors on carpet soft
there is a mirror at the ceiling
you surely will like it anyhow
and then my dear
we shall make love the whole night long don't you ever tell your true name at the Information Desk
my name is Johnny
and yours is Honey.
RIC S. BASTASA
A Date One Day In April

First time for me to be inside a jacuzzi nice place with an ambiance of bonsai pines a rock garden beside us and a fountain singing the tune of water at the other side of the glass window where the sun just set and then the fading color of orange permeates the room when you said that it is time to light the lamp of Aladdin which you bought from Siem Riep

you undress and then join me in the bubbling water i couldn't help but jack off too early as you landed the first kiss in the wet planks of my lips that port of my being where lonely ships take rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Date With Myself....

i just arrived from a long vacation in cebu city

had lots of fun there ate in some fabulous
restaurants,
grew shopping for a camera and some socks
and underwear, and another pair of new shoes for myself,

you called and asked me if i am with somebody if i invited a niece or
a friend,

i answered, i met myself and we are enjoying each other's company,
we're into our own party and we learned to dance and sing by ourselves,

for the first time
in my life, and you are not with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Day In Summer

perhaps only some of you knew what really happened tings that we did

at the prime of our youth the one at the river was not true neither was the one at the cogon grasses the rumors were too advanced and bent like a misshapen twig perhaps this time you must have known what joys we shared picking ripe mangoes on that huge tree at the foot of the hill

we drove no monkeys away and no monkeys did give us any bother the mangoes were too juicy too ripe for our hands

too fragile for our wantonness we never brought you any.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Day In Summer In The Mountain

the rainbow is a dome behind the blue horizon a bridge carries a jeep loaded with ordinary people the story is true
below there is no water rocks and pebbles and grasses and then the emptiness of space

RIC S. BASTASA
A Day In Your Lifetime...

make a day
like an embroidered handkerchief
personalized for your favorite kid

the colors mix
blue sky
golden sunrise
green fields of hay shimmering glossy streams

at the left side there is a red breasted bird chirping

all silk
smooth so smooth like your love.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Day On The Internet

the early birds are not perching on
the trees
or flying in the skies

oh, they're all here
chirping
on internet lines.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dead Man

He is a man who cannot tell a lie anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dead Songbird

one sings

i am nothing
i am nothing

if i do not have you and we remember her we realize as always

fame is short

in space are shooting stars

they fall and appear no more

gone

gone

how short the song
upon the lips of a dead songbird

RIC S. BASTASA
A Deadlock

I can always go away & live my life even
Alone

But you do not say
Any word

You told me on The very first day

You will die without me

How can I forget
That?

You always tell the Truth

A woman of

One

word.

I could have gone away & live my own
Life

How can you disappear?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Death Wish Of The Unfortunate Stand-By

sometimes, when i stand waiting for someone who does not come i whistle

for death, as though it is a friend and i am the willing one to go with it in  its new journey hoping that perhaps i may like it finally, when i do not have to go back and retrace my origin and then regret, and death hears it and comes to me and asks me if i am going with him to an escapade,

an adventure,

for death is an escape,
a closing of a door,
a making of a wall,
a locking of a window,
a stopping of a noise of an engine
on the street,

and when death is nearer, i begin to fear and ask myself, what shall happen next?

and i deny i whistled for it, and i assure it that it is simply a mistake, a wrong call,
a slip of my tongue

and death believes me,

for death is a respecter of our own misfortune, our errors, our negligence and even pretensions, a keeper sometimes of our own lies, and death leaves me, and i have sighs, i doubt what i really want, and sadly, i wish i had told it the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Death Wish....

when you fell
on the floor that
day
when you bumped your head on the
cemented pavement
and you bleed and
the doctor made six stitches
on your skin
and we keep on telling
each other
that we are afraid that you may have blood clots and eventually succumb
finally to said
tragedy
i may have been a little bit hypocritical saying my heartfelt concern that you get well soon
and recover,

sometimes i hate
myself for wishing that you disappear
from my sight wishing that someone younger than you may come and please me more.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Decent Goodbye

i know very well that you

oh beautiful creature!

tickle me
make my spirit
rise
to the skies

and you like to touch me
and you coddle
my weakness

my tongue and thighs

yet i cling to the rigid rituals of logic

i know what my future brings when i respond
it will be horrible

(i think too well
of your
hidden poison
and fatal
bite and i know
it will not
be too soon that when i agree and cater to your temptations
i shall die)

and so i must set you aside

i must look forward towards the
light

and sorry
i have to say
my decent goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Decent Man

da decent man comes out from a room: black shiny coat red tie, a diamond pin, a white polo shirt a well cut hair a la james bond eyes covered with a reading glass you get the impression that he is well-read and trained to the gentleness of a well-bred progeny, he is cool and calm and always gives you the sense of a deep listener his wisdom flows from his attentive eyes keen and ponderous

you think he has no capacity for sin or mischief
you feel that he is elevated from the rest of us

but that is not exactly true.

one night, a cold air blows from the sea and feels his room with quivers. He has entertained thoughts about the woman in Bahamas.
Or the girl from Ipanema.
He rings the phone asking for the name of a woman. Cathy.
He needs a night. He is hot as a cinder, as an iron rod red as flame.

and then the woman comes barely dressed and well scented lushious lips and abundant bosom.
soft hair and sleepy eyes.
he opens the door and she closes it. he asks her to undress and dance before him. and they made love in front of the mirror by the wall.

the man has assumed the shadow of a mad dog as he makes the push and pull until he is through. At that moment the decent man has become a mad dog just like any mad dog with saliva flowing along the streets of the slums.

for in truth, a decent man is as decent only as he is dressed under the sun.
As soon as he gets naked inside his room, this decent man faces the truth of his being.
in the secret of a moonlit night, the shadow of the decent man is just this dog, and nothing more.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Decision

today i give up mending other people's fences fixing their gutters and mowing their lawns,

it is time for me to just sit back and relax to just stand and watch,

it is time to tell myself,
' hey, i got my own life to live! '

it is time to be alone and treat myself a party of its own.
i am packing. The island is waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Decision To Be Up

i have thrown the same question to him
but the usual answer
had always been
his silence,

i guess he works
by the principle that the emperor does not talk to his subject

this time
i am the emperor and he cannot talk without my permission

RIC S. BASTASA
A Decision...

for 31 years
he fucked her she left her parents who are catholics and very angry at this immoral stance

she gave her two daughters
they sing and dance
for them
after dinners

now he has white hairs
too young to have them with all
the stress
and anguish

now they appear for marriage
ripe time
to compensate the lost years

the children to have his family name
the school will be happy and the community would be appeased

she does not ask for
anything
except his love
not even the money they have had a house that as you know
has now become a home

RIC S. BASTASA
A Decision....

i thought it should have been better if i lived in an island.
it would have been too peaceful for me.
I have already learned to live that way, before you came into my life.
i do not have to account for chunks of skies.
or drops of rain or my share of the air i breathe.
now in this sharing i have more questions unanswered.
If love is true why does it have to be concerned with money?
why do you have to ask me for reasons? if love is good why is it causing me pain now?
perhaps, there is a time for rivers to divide islands.
for lands to be carried away for islands to sink and then we do not ask questions anymore.

i am waiting for the right time.
Ripe guavas fall and then i shall know what rotten is.
I shall summon ants.
I will never pick you up.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Deduction Of Sort

the ordinary person that you meet in our town
you do not even know my real name other than Hey mister
but i do not really mind
i like it that way just being another ordinary person the one that smiles when you smile at me as i pass by you and you too pass by me i do not stare not that it is unethical but because i have my own thoughts to ponder for the day

how i live my life in privacy away from the mob the wisdom of the crowd the many
the extraordinary demands of the society like how the ocean dissolves me like a drop in anonymity

i like just being myself a glistening dew on the petal of a rose that i put on the glass vase all alone on the table

yes alone but not really lonely just being special
to myself

this solitude
regaining strength from the past,

those old days
when my mind was murdered because i did not bother to guard it from the multitude from them
not me

RIC S. BASTASA
A Definition Of Life....

it is the feeling
of a desert that we feel sometimes
deep in our hearts on some nights following

completely dark
the stars are not
there

you miss the howl
of the jackal

or the strong sounds of the sandstorm

you hate this
void
you want to expel
it
you draw the desert
and then
erase it

you paint a cactus and you wash it
away on the canvass

what remains is the coarse cloth and the frame of silver

tabula rasa
you begin again
on the blankness
and the bluntness
of your thinking

you stop
and ponder and make a definition
of life...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Deja Vu, , , , , ,

it is my soul
that senses your soul

smoke of incense
scent of wet earth sonorous sound of little rain
falling on the
treetops of the forest

my lips do not want
to say
i love you
i am in the wrong place
and you are the wrong person
i look at myself in the mirror
my naked body is a stranger
i speak its name out of convenience but i never know myself
completely

the length of light-years have made me forget but there is this palpitations of feelings
that make me remember
love

it is not your body it is you in that body
it my soul that senses
your soul
about a previous passion that we still
to date
cannot yet remember

i am like river to your rocks rain to your earth mist to your lips
moon to your darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
A Deliberate Movement

you plan it
and think about it for nights and nights precisely the reason why you cannot sleep you draw on paper your schemes for escapes

you put the arrows there and mark the ultimate freedom where light
is
with an x,

a big
X,

there are caves there and secret
doors and canopies
and false windows

and even quicksands
where a mistake
can mean
deaht,

and there are gardens too which look like a prelude to castles
where seemingly a princess lives

your ideas are plots always plots
your theme is freedom and always
it has always been freedom you are never free so you always dream what you do not have you wish of today as the beginning towards z, the point z, the ultimatum of this deliberate move

to escape,

i am tired of your schemes and plots
and dialogues about
freedom

all i did to make you think a little before i sleep

is to put the letter 'Y',

perhaps, it will calm you
down.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Delicious Food

When asked
he said he wrote what he did not understand he said it is the surface of the table the facade of a wall the back of the shoe and the ripple only of the pond there must be a good explanation and you are hiding it away from us there is. And I have lied about its true meaning. sadly, it is about the pain that I found in the things that please only you

he scratched his head successful on that hiding he gave a smile for secrets that we too have sharing it like a delicious food unnamed.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dengue-Free Kind Of Love

a heart that is filled with smoke
can not be a haven for mosquitoes

RIC S. BASTASA
A Depressed Friend

breath as heavy as brick sighs as light as feather shoulder burden as heavy as steel abs corrugated like roof a face as thick as elephant skin bones rattling like a snake thirst as dry as sand wrinkles like waves of the sea jaws drooping like a fall that is what you are my friend. you need badly a bath.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Description Of A Life Alone In The Mountain

as you reach a place where wild grass grow as tall as you
you wonder
if there is a secret that that may open its arms to you
to show you wanton
beauty

it is the first day

as you go near birds fly away from you the wind stops blowing clouds become heavy and soon
the rain begins to fall

it seems that sadness knows where you are
and it is following you you put up a tent and then at night you build a fire you watch the fire grow as though it has grown so many hands trying to reach the sky and grab some stars everything seems so far away so far away like a darkness beyond you without an end

RIC S. BASTASA
A Description Of Sunrise

the day is over we clap our hands

in the dark we remember those deeds of the night dusk comes with a surprise on to what is next

the sun rises again
we clap our hands again hoping that this brand new day shall give us progress and even eternity oh, the cycle is here again another man of the sun loses face to the moon in the dark we seek shelter to the night we sleep and dream

tomorrow as the sun rises we shall have learned: this is nothing but a vicious cycle we then go to our own affairs not minding whether it is morning or evening the faces of the days do not matter anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Description Of The Camera-Poet

the little boy from the city takes a ride on a cemented buffalo beside a nipa hut surrounded by coconut palms on top of greed grass

dhe little girl wants to share the ride just right before the camera finally clicks

RIC S. BASTASA
A Descriptive Attempt To Happiness....

once in a while you learn their cumulative passing, these cancers are working hard to eliminate friends, erase good memories, nay, even change the landscape, for with those who perish, houses are sold, or even demolished, and those who still deny the tragedy even burn, create a pyre, chant resentments, and leave the place, paving the way for the new ones, strangers to grief.

learning is like climbing a mountain.
going up is hard, but when you reach the top you go down, it will be as easy as sliding on those slippery hills.

to the plains, another village is built.
men build houses, babies are born, wives attend to a garden of flowers.
bird migrate here, and begin again to share their songs.

those that you do not know make life bearable. the feast tonight, the dancing. the revelry over an anticipated romance, the moonlight reverie, the midnight silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Destination

one day

such is the short span of this creature

but there is no sadness on its leaving

on such a short time everything was accomplished

it gave the best shot.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Destiny Of Dinner For Two

when it is meant to be yours it will be yours and it simply happens without you doing anything as though chairs move by themselves with the table too and the plates and saucers and forks and spoons and mantels and in a synchronized motion they make a table for you and there you sit with me with a rose at the center with the candle lighting us thorough: 'it is dinner time, my love'.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Destroyed Niche

what we have here are trees without leaves

upon these bald mountains lay those fingers stretching trying to hold the softness of blue clouds

the rivers gone what gazes us is this pool of stones it is a scene of either

or,

we pack too
looking for another

more, wanting to escape what we have destroyed

RIC S. BASTASA
A Deviation

aFTER HAVING read and listened to all of you Those who are Dead and Yet speaking too loudly IN PRINT
IET me say that i am amazed at no wit's end
I am David missing you all Hit Goliaths
I am not afraid for in your Hugeness Surely must my stone from my Sling hit you
Dead

How grotesque and Horrible is this Feeling of having to slay the GREAT fishes in that magical pool of fame No, that is not what i mean I think i have to be a deviation from all of you
You shall be shocked by my Originality
and you will all smirk and snob me This DUMB nitwit, who is he?
My name is Nobody
Just Someone that No One knows My family name is Happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dialogue Between Two Predators

it starts like this: hello is hello that important? yes is dinner important to you? no, i just had one dinner must be important to you since you have had no dinner yet, yes can i have you for dinner? me> for food?

i am not delicious.

but you may swallow me alive...big shark!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dialogue With Life

Life you are too precious to be wasted by me.
I am sorry.
I have not lived up to the promises of your partner: Time My body is weakened by your enemies: Disease, And abuse.
My soul is silent, like a stranger to this Place This Heart and Mind
There is this Inability to cope up with responsibilities.
I am sorry.
Life I made you miserable.
I paired you with Regret I am making you meet too early Your wisdom: Death.

I am sorry. Morbid, brother of Death A friend of Mind, An acquaintance of the Heart.
I am seeking his Caution.

Life is not giving the bother.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Diamond

Two sides of
the earth
two faces: romantic
darkness
and abundant light

one face for all mankind
one face for myself alone

two sides of a coin four sides of a square

you demand that i shall have only
one,

i'll say yes
in such a simple word

inside my heart
the words rumble
too many to capture but only one face?

in silence
i keep my fingers crossed it is impossible to one light

i glitter a thousand
times

RIC S. BASTASA
today, i commune with nature.

the trees are talking and the grasses are not sleepy, and the sun shines like it is its last day

and the moon comes and shines too like it is the last night of its life.

the silvery river flowed like a big worm and the stars played fireflies i heave a sigh and then release it like a bird from a cage.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dichotomy Of Lovers Asleep

what i like about you
is the strangeness
that which i cannot understand because you are too near that which i cannot hold because you are so fragile that which i cannot love because you have
kept the distance between two worlds
that prefer to be independent and indifferent

what i like about you
is what you like about me too and when we meet
we understand
that we have to take our separate ways just to be happy i guess

RIC S. BASTASA
A Different Flow Of Indifference....

inside the room are the carnivorous kind.

outside it is cold as it is winter time.

something inside makes them all feel hot...and so they undress themselves, tired of their clothing, and even underwear, too tight for their fitting, hurting their turgid skins.

i am surprised why they hate wine and shy away from the rest of the celebrators of the season.

outside the songs are being sung. the dances dance, and the camaraderie of hands are touching bones.

there are mad men and the madness is kept to the certain level of tolerance. society is a head shaker. Hands bound.
Minds closed. The winds of change are laughing, too advanced for the age of hardened so the babies are not born. The plow and sickle rusted.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Different Kind Of Love....

the time has arrived when our kind of love takes another
form of endearment

you cook my breakfast as i take my shower
early morning

i smell good and you call my name
and then after i am done

we take time to pray and eat our breakfast together

we both feel good talking about all those sorts of things

we have nothing in particular as time passes
so slowly
without our knowing
that we have arrived to a place where we have come from a long long time ago.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Different Point Of View

I realize that what you see These things
About life
So differently

From what I once saw
And still see
From my own point of view

This paper boat of yours Floats on its shadow
The clouds underneath it Like the waves of the sea

You tell me
This paper boat is going to Heaven

RIC S. BASTASA
A Different Sunset

sometimes there will be a sunset different from the rest of the usual sunsets the one that threatens us of a darkness that does not give anymore the hint of another day we shiver to this idea of an irreversible rule of evil darkness in eternity disorder forever

but come to think of it that sunset cannot be true by all mean of our logic hope sets the mold of the triumph of the good the just and the sanity of reason the hands of love keeps holding the light to our freedom from despair

we do not mind all these doomsday prophets we keep the boat sailing under the moon we shall hear more of the songs of the happy angels

we have nothing to lose now since everything is taken what we keep is only ourselves that promise that must take us to the other side of our world there they say what is eternal is a sunrise.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Different Walk This Time come for you to stand upright, and they like it too because that is the way how life should and must be lived in maturity in independence

in knowing how to manage life defining and illustrating what real walking coping with the coming
and leaving the constant changing of the seasons and you learn how to dress up and comb your hair and walk your talk and listen more and sometimes pretend that all is well with you inorder not to frustrate them because they have their own lives

their own private quests and hidden sorrows too

and then the real things confront you on the face beyond the four seasons you go back to the ancient beginning where you are naked where you must walk again and even crawl if need be but this time you do not crawl and you are not cute anymore you still stand upright, always trying your best though a little bit bent now and shaking

your eyes are all failing and you cannot see your feelings too are flinching as they skin you out and even your mind sags like a useless piece of appendix you walk alone through all the seasons determined, unmoved, unaffected sometimes looking back and then moving finally forward towards the place that you think you know because it sounds so familiar as though you have been there with all of them

RIC S. BASTASA
A Digital Photo Of The Ricefields ripe ricefields early one morning as i take my walk

it is a wide rectangular field and on its tip on the right side from this gravelled road is an island of banana shrubs bamboo grasses
and mahogany trees

and there is an old well there that survives the past droughts for scores of years a little focusing will show that there are bathers there and one of them is lovely.

Zoom in.
Never mind, she is too shy and she is just for me.
Her eyes are soft not like the almonds
her skin is smooth
like a ripe mango.

Zoom in.
She is bathing now.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dignity

as the peacock struts its fan of feathers like a rainbow
in the barnyard

the hen keeps its own home
protecting its chicks around its feathers
from the invasion of the rat

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dilemma

I am hungry
my stomach growls like a lion caged for days

I am thirsty too
my mouth and tongue miss a glass of water like hell

I cannot eat and i cannot drink there is food on the table there is water in a bowl

When i think of all these that i want and i cannot have everything turns into stone

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dinner For Two

the candle light
between us
is the sun

you and i
are the only two planets revolving

you spin on your own orbit
and so do i

we look at each other
i hold your hand

the moon shines
arrayed by stars

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dirty Mind

it is just a lamp
you can turn it off anytime

be agile
know what you want and what you don't know when to stop

when to switch it on

know how to unplug
and plug it

it is all in the mind
do not force it

come to me
let us be there

hold my hand
gently like a marsh floating in the water let us see the world without our minds on

let the worlds see us as part of its garden

flowers with white petals bees without stings

molting snakes
helpless to the kiss of the worms what do you really want from me? what?

i am naked
do not dress me up

RIC S. BASTASA
someone writes about a rebellion, a struggle of a set of native still not free even in this age of a shrinking world where everything seems to be a text away or that distance which curls and tells you they are all there and happy in green and white hands in prayer and minds in peace and mouths speaking about abundance and wellness and paradise thriving in skyscrapers and parks

someone writes about the death of civilians under oppressive regimes
brought about by leaders who refuse to step down or someone exposes the trafficking of women somewhere in southeast Asia and brought in bulgaria or a black island

someone writes about a strike of workers whose wages are below survival
about the hardships of exploited laborers while their employers are enjoying so much of the profits wasting it in the beaches of Thailand and the shopping malls of Singapore

i could have been that someone but i am here stacked in the haystacks of my own silly dreams stuffed like a bear and dressed in black robe hammering my days like a metal smith
sweating it out beside a big fire but still unable to decide what shape to make out of this metal what sharpness is needed in this sword without a luster.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Discernment

once it was the clarity that i sought and there was none and all i had is doubt once i was sure of myself and believed it to be so such stuff that is stiff until i became a river of stool and everything in there is foul and i slept and i wake up and i thought about what are those that landed in my spout perhaps clarity is not what must be sought neither doubt for who wants doubt to rule our lives as though we do not live in a world of lies upon some layers of historical rocks and socks?

and then i simply look around me simply describing what comes and what passes on a day a bus loading passengers hands waiving gears a very calm sea

a wharf where boats are free a house by the mountain fireflies feasting on the rain a tree crown at night beside a river up tight sounds of owls and ghouls
a rain that starts pouring
on the roof of the house listening
simply listening
much about nothing about these things
as they are disregarding who we are every moment is an act to be done spic and span every hour

an spectator
every second simply passing line
beyond the edge of a clean page

i do not think for the future now in the same manner that i let the past sleep like it were dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Disciple Of Freud

he is basically Freudian sickness, any sickness is explainable

for instance
insanity is caused by denying the woman of a man, in that empty hole of her flesh something hard and stiff must fill it something rainy must fill the cracks of the summer heat

one must taste the paste of life the thrushes of man's power over woman's softness nothing must be left unexplained even the usual slips of the tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
A Disciple Writes

a poem.
not a legal treatise surprisingly a poem

that she posts in a blog spots of her own blood staining

spits of her own mouth streaking

circles and triangles of stories of her

longings and anxieties though some speak of her simple joys in life

and when we meet again

in class
we forget what we are

on the other hand
we go back to serious business law and order rights and obligations

cases to read
points to argue

perhaps a poem
i could have told her

could simply be a diversion tactic
for what we shy away and then we target the real thing

bow and arrow
bullet and gun for a kill to get at the top and be silent again.

RIC S. BASTASA
i do not wonder why we are empty cups of coffee today last night the mugs were full of bubbling beer and the conversations flowed like spilled beans from a rattan tray the shadows of the night they were not illusions they were real since you touched them with your hands smelled them and love every molecule of them all are we empty because we have been filled and we overflowed and we simply have to renew our vows to a divine emptying of ourselves to become whole again to start anew

and be humans again?

it is only your head, wrapped with skin, the skull that i feel when i kiss you
that i have
i want to believe that these are all i have for the keeping but that is not at all true there are still those that remain invisible to my eyes more important than what you seem to appear i do not wish to reduce them into a frame nothing can be boxed everything has always the capacity to escape from my hold from yours too

all these surprises, we wait, we try to grasp that pain that we must let go because they can never be ours

RIC S. BASTASA
A Discourse On Real Chaos

so many words, thousands of thoughts minted, printed,
so many lines running and running to an endless destination do you believe in me? have you noticed that never ending story? this never ending road? these endless musings like days and days that never stop making and grinding time?

dois the restless world the wriggling worms of our existence our way of sounding life to the universe people want to stop to listen all these restless people who cannot rest on the nights they want to die but couldn't they want to live but can't what a mess? orderliness, flitting and so temporary change is always there and always changing and waning and fading and shining and glowing you cannot stop because if you will you are not yourself anymore do you take shelter in the house of logic? look! it is crumpled by the battle of light and darkness parallel lines swerve and fuse at the end when the speed of light triples and tipsy at the black holes of misunderstanding you will tell me, i am trembling, short of what i should have given you in a silver platter of common understanding that i am just confusing you and making you miserable sad to say, there is no order in this universe, the molecules move in random, the atoms are in disarray like the air, but how can you really see? you feel only the wind, and see the leaves swaying you feel the joy, but always, and always, the disorder is there.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am extremely worried
about you
for you think that we are the cause
of your
sufferings

we shall give you that cure

we shall leave you and we give you that choice you may leave us
for good
it all depends on what light
you have what dew is there on the carpet's
leaf

for we do not want us to be your suffering we know how to manage sorrow we have outlived grief we know the labyrinths of lamentations we have gone beyond sadness and joys
in fact, they do not have meaning anymore except perhaps a flower on our ears
a garland on our necks a pair of slippers on our feet when we do not have you we know how to shut ourselves like doors but we always leave you the key and when the right time comes when you have learned to go beyond the fences of those dark horizons or of the walls of the threshold of tolerances you may open the door again do not knock

but we cannot assure you that we shall be here forever
waiting for you
that will be too much for us to give to you

we are the winds and we always take chances somewhere where we are loved where we are not the cause of sufferings and we have this trait of always going somewhere

for us to stay
if you only know is another suicide of natural born
reason....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Discovery

this is what he found: that the more you evade something that you fear the more it stays and threatens you more adds more fears
on this stance of denial

ah, confront it
head on bounce and pounce
and sip and swallow and take in whatever
digest and let it stay whenever it wants to

things get boring
events want to roam incidents are mere incidents not wanting to stay any longer memories dissolve trauma escapes
there is no eternity to all these longings and haphazard

let go expel, forget and then move on
that is what life is all about and death too

RIC S. BASTASA
A Discovery

NOW IT It has become certain that the ants are saving almost anything from crumbs of bread to cut pieces of leaves and shreds of earthworms not because they expect to live for the rainy days or survive the storm

but because they all want to escape from the oppression
of the Grasshopper.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Disposition....

i

when we were on that island in sum
we were treated with indifference to my companion it was not just bad manners but bad taste even cruelty to an invited guest

ii

when we were in the boat i focused on the good times i always forget what i do not like

iii

this day both of them arrive in my city and they announced it

iv

i am not indifferent
i dislike bad taste and bad manners and so i decide to drive them around bring them to the best pizza parlor and bring them back to this sense of history of our traditions

v

i guess they like it but i am just human and i promise myself that after i have shown all my kindness and hospitality it will be their last.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Disturbed Child

For hours and days we talked, and there was that portion Of that honest conversation when he opened a certain Cabinet where a black-covered diary contains a page of the story

About a disturbed child, A confused child, not because he was not born like Any other new born child, on a package-deal of innocence For a start of his existence,

A happy child, a normal child with a Loving and caring ma and pa and excited siblings To receive him as another playmate added to their house,

At most, the conversation changed to a slow motion In that portion,
He showed some serious indications, a gaze of a man, Undistracted by her poise for casualness and A consideration that this is nothing but another kind Of a light conversation unlike no other,

It is not, this is serious, he said, because this is true and this really Happened, the cabinet and the diary are nothing but Fronts to fictional realities,

He was the disturbed child, and he is going to tell her about it,
Today,
He did not have a happy childhood, as he once told the Jesuits,
Who accepted him to their fold,

And for which he, of course took his graceful exit, Because he is a liar,
He began talking about some bamboo sticks which hit him,
The sack which enclosed him, the rope which hanged him On the kitchen beam,

The ants that bit him while he Kneeled on mongo beans under a scorching sun, and the mother He still very well remembers,
She was not able to do anything to save him.

She too was part of That disturbance, the slap that still left a mark of humiliation on his Left cheek,

A scar on his childhood, forever. She died earlier than expected.
He, the villain, did not.

Not the child, who later escaped from hell.

that child though disturbed by his past, is now given the right to speak.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dog Long Buried

A dead dog long buried
And yet-
Some yelps are still heard
Near the doormat
Even without a bee
Stinging
or anybody coming
home

RIC S. BASTASA
A Doggerel In Siam...

and so there was this Indet who had a very acidid armpit he enjoyed the tour in Sinamit while the rest finally quit

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dog's Life

the way you cry
for spilled milk is
too much

cry for spilled milk is too much

the dog with a leash
at the street post is looking at you with
anger....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dog's Nightmare

even dogs
dream, and the reverse is true too
they have nightmares
this white poodle
under my feet
is barking while asleep
and too surprising when it coughs
it takes the sound
of sadness....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Door Closed

door closed upon me and i am left out with no one

i bleed but soon
this will stop for i shall not die
or if i die
i must carry that meaning
with me

i left the place carrying nothing &
i am going somewhere

where i can be another interesting
virgin again

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dot In The Sky

i am used to being a lone eagle in that highest sky my eyes are sharp my claws sharper and more agile

my wings are silver my feathers platinum

when i met you
i begin to understand what pity is all about the weakness of the scents of flowers on those days of May bathed me and wrapped me into a prison of sympathy

i tried to lift you up to make you feel the power of wings the independence of claws the self-sufficiency of radar eyes the vision of eternity

i learn love but with all these i can always unlearn everything and be back to my own wings again now merciless, sharp, and ready to forget you are you

that purple flower clinging to the cracks of the rocks

i am myself
in another journey without any memory i guess this is what happens always to that eagle in the highest sky a dot that you see

and then erased in space.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream Cut Half

i have a dream
last night i conceived it as though i am
a woman,

the dream becomes a touch,
taking shape
it has weight
and needs more space

one night
it comes out with its feet first and they were all worried i scream

the man with a black robe gets a sword and cuts out
what is coming out from me and so i have half of this dream and it is dead

that man's work seems to me is to kill dreams and want to leave us all
dying
upon our own whim

the following day
i heal myself
and i make a promise that there will be no
dream anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream Escape

confronted with a harsh reality of his daily existence on skin unfeeling any pain neither happiness, and this too harsh, when nothing is felt whatever be that, he.... finally finds a escape inside his dream, it was a lazy afternoon in an island where his lover is waiting behind them the sun sets like an egg yolk scrambled into settled doubts.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream Gone By

where is the dream cottage of the years gone by?

that nook of cool trees hidden in one of those valleys that dog that sleeps on the bamboo slats on that verandah that faces the green lagoon

the road that goes upon a dead end the hope of greenness

the lavender venetian blinds that you close one cold evening?

the emptiness has caught us and we do not look around anymore confined in a room thinking about the next worse thing that we expect shall happen

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream In Atlantis

In the distance you notice a flickering light.
It grows brighter and larger as you slice your way through the cold water.

What can it be?
Soon a glowing coral reef reveals itself.
You can almost compare the light it emits to daylight, so strong is it.

Much to your astonishment you find the reef molded into what seems to be buildings.
There are arch ways, what seems to be windows and wait... what’s that?
A person?
You’ve spotted a merman!

Someone like you now.
And there are more of them!
They notice you and suddenly several of them torpedo towards you at great speed.

For the first time in your dream you are frightened.
They come bearing smiles however, each one of them funnelling around you as they swim up, twisting their bodies around yours without touching you and finally halting above of you as they conclude what seems to be a greeting.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream Of A Map Of Fortune

One day i write about A poem that looks like
A map
For some directions
To a location
Of a hidden rock
Of gold and i
Who dream of
One day getting Rich read it,

Only to find
These little red ants Inside my pants

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream Of Darkness

this house
where you live has no door
the window is as thin as a Chinese eye
and it does not open
despite
the heat inside
the bedroom

how can you
blame them
if they mistake you
for a coffin?

and so they mourn
for you
and just like any repeated ritual
it ends and then they forget you

i know that it is your last dream
before
the night goes as black
as the ocean
on the trench

totally dark and still undefiled

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream Of Dusk

feathery clouds scatter like water color spatter beyond are the blue mountains near us are the twin silhouette of trees at the left side is the moon resting upon the shoulder of a hill on this dreamy scene everything blue and black

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream Of Evolution....

shall a seed be a seed forever?

do you not dream
someday that it shall be planted
so that it can sprout
and grow
and then finally see its flower
and fruit?

must the flower and fruit be just the same like the rest of the histories of the other seeds of their own form and kind?

must i hope
for an evolution a seed turning into a bee
a bee into a butterfly into wind
into star?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream Of Silence.....

You are naked inside the boat that i am riding
under the moon
beside the reeds
a choir of frogs are badly singing
it is raining so hard we are shielded with our own illusions
we are never wet with
tears
we never speak silently we arrive
to the catacombs of our private silence....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dream Of The Flesh

we are in the river
naked
our bodies meet
like
one body
missing
another body
and the river becomes one warm
water trickling down
our two bodies

body to body
flesh to flesh
hands
to hands and arms entwine
like some chains of daisies
to our necks

this oneness
that we finally make

eyes to eyes closing
and lips to lips searching
tongues

we dare search our souls
if they are there
too
in this
fusion

for the meantime
we have no time to ask

the river
has no name
even

RIC S. BASTASA
A Drift Wood Wants To Tell A Story

a pale white driftwood on beige sands
wants to tell a story

the river has a mouth the sea has a tongue
the island has a face

but all of them
have no ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Drop Of Rain It Is. Quickly.

beauty and grace
shape taking the form that escapes the fences of
your mind

the heard understands why rules are asphyxiating there is no rule in what beauty is there is simply no standards for grace

beauty sleeps and wakes up in another form in another time grace flies like butterflies but their wings are not that gossamer anymore

gone were the times of dragonflies or kites
the slippery fins find themselves in the wings of birds

oh, how time surprises us how seasons come and show us what ought not to be

do not predict the flow of any poet's poetry what used to be the lyrics of some have become the lemons of the other

just feel, oh, just feel, listen to the rhythm of your soul transcending time jumping out from the windows of prisons
a drop of rain it is.
quickly.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dry Land

days and years
lump together and humans pack up

rivers convert themselves to cities for need of space this one shall follow it is not the sun that has taken what it has a tractor builds a dike and takes all the water here this is dry land

no fish, no water,
no moss, sand is filled and rocks
delivered to make out of this river a new housing subdivision at a higher cost than money

RIC S. BASTASA
A Duck Point Of View

when a man feeds a number of ducks on the river
he thinks of the money and the meat and the eggs setting aside the noisy quacks and the pestering constant call for attention,

i wonder how the ducks see the man his demonstrative care and charity?

did they see him as God?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dying Declaration

there are three requisites:
one, it shall talk about my death, the cause, and the culprit, second, i am conscious about my impending death, and third, that i finally die at that instant.

i will not do it.
am i foolish? who in this world would declare something only to know that to successfully say it, one must first be dead?

but my friend that is the rule, an evidentiary rule.

well anyway, let us start with you.

where were you when he shot you?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Dying Man

tell the truth
gives up everything and prepares his final trip without having to carry
anything

he sits there waiting for the final shutting of
the light

at the core of his
heart
there is perfect peace

his hands grasp the hands of death
in total harmony

like the way the sun sets on the west like the way the moon
enters
the hallways of
darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
A Failure

i tried to be myself a self-made man
all the way through from womb to tomb only to find at the end of the whiff that there is no self

how poor
on this failure
what a waste of time therefore.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Failure Is An Opportunity

You fail today; I know how it feels to be a failure. It will be sad. You mourn alone, nobody mourns for you. It will be silent. The noise of failure is too much inside Your ears, lots of evil voices speak, like you are A nobody A failure A disservice, a uselessness, the smallness of you Like a miniature plastic soldier toy in the cabinet Set aside for being so unattractive, You shrink in society, and friends shy away now, In failure you are alone, and you cry alone, if you Will it that way, If you will it, You fail and forever you are a failure, a loser, A sore loser,

But think a little deeper this time, Who in this world never had a failure once in a while? Isaac Newton, Thomas Edison, Albert Einstein, Abraham Lincoln, Ronald Reagan, George Bush, Give me a name, and I will cite their failures, Give me a name of a man who never failed And I will show you that dead man in his grave.

My friend, failure is an opportunity to be great Learn, learn, and learn, take the failure as your Platform to catapult you to something higher than yourself, Jump and rise to some other better opportunities, Learn and be a new person again, stronger and wiser this time.

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
A Family Circle Thing

it was something moderate and yet your coldness was penetrating

the effect was shivering enthusiasm dampened
this dread
and numbing
fear that sends a pallor
on spirit's skins

this bad news
you received it
on paper
and read it alone

one that suffices
to kill the meaning of celebration

one that defaces
joy and
thanksgiving

it is the arrival
of death
in one's family where someone
lays so silent
in the living room

and life was but
something
that was nice

a chill of the day
that one sips
from an ice cold
green tea

i guess i should not have given
you any hint about it

but you have the right
to know
you are part of this circle
that wishes
to forget
and simply chill down a little bit meeting
sunrise on the porch
where we must keep composed

RIC S. BASTASA
A Family Landmark

It did not start with us. we are smooth as the outer skin of did not make us their problems. we followed the rules. we bowed to the faces of authorities.

it was grandpa, who at the age of 79 decided to marry a woman of 19. She was not decent at all. Her hair hid some snakes. We saw it once when we had dinner together in that old house.

grandpa was blinded by his lust. we were patient for light. since he had the money and the power we did nothing but attend to his wedding ceremony.

the woman had black lips. her hands were gnarled so she kept on wearing gloves.

everyday she wore masks, always choosing the angry ones. I guess she was angry with her childhood and her family.

grandmother died early. She had fats all over her body, and then she lost her reason to live. When she died i was only 5 years old, but i had a sharp memory of her then when she kept all the best bread in her room.

after the marriage took place in the famous church of the city, we left the honeymooners in their chosen room. It was expensive.

Aunt who was from Manila decided that we better see the Shrine where Rizal was under the custody of a military general.

Then the news broke out. Grandpa was murdered by his second wife. Inside his room the woman was gone. Taking all the money and his shotgun.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Family Picture Of Fools......

a family picture suggests perfection

mother beside father
between them
a son and daughter

another picture has grandpa holding his cane sort of scepter as grandma holds a bouquet of roses
her lifetime

one who sees it says what a happy family
just perfect just perfect

i tell you it is not exactly true, not really what was behind the house behind that picture behind those smiles?

dead rats smell like dead rats behind the house behind those smiles are concealed misfortunes

you just don't know
you were not there when all those bad things happened for the family still sticks to that tradition not to display dirty linens on the road to warn all those servants to keep silent, what you see here what you hear here, leave it here.

a family picture does not say it all.
to inspire you, if not to make you more miserable with what you are.

yes, it is true.
the farther the pasture,
the greener it appears.

mend the fences. keep the good things.
love the pretentious. smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Family Reunion

the genes stopped at us we of the childless category enjoying this luxury as others come in numbers with their new names and members

eye talk a lot
we remain silent
we party on this family reunion we think of the memories of ma and pa
and when we were children it is dark and light surrenders and then they turn on the light

we become shadows
and mere words
we become laughter
there are no places for the tears

then we go home
to the places of our hearts.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Family Sailing The Same Boat

we sail the same boat on same sea
but our minds are having different storms

we take side with silence and lean towards numbness

we see the same sun but feel a different coldness we should have coddled each others' loneliness

huddled with each much needed
warmth

but as usual what prevails is our chosen field of privacy

as we choose to maim our souls
what we have never spoken
for once.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Family Tradition Of Restraint...

papa is not fond of hugging his children perhaps it is part of family restraint

a culture which shies away from affection
perhaps for fear of pain when finally departures
come

i was never embraced by papa
and so did my sister and i had not seen him
hug mama either

was there something wrong with the family?
grandpa too was like him not saying a word or so in the happiness of the home there is no big head in the family nothing flattery

when someone is sick when someone dies
there, there, all of them are crying

orange is served with a biscuit
a glass of water and the parakeet.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Famous Man

he was observing from the upper part of his terrace an old woman down the street eating a ripe mango without slicing them using her bare hands peeling it and sucking
the pulp
savoring every sap

she is enjoying it
she is enjoying it
she is enjoying it

that is what he says he writes, she is enjoying it and yet he is so famous

in this city
munching what fame is
there
tailored for him

RIC S. BASTASA
this is a fan in the manipulation of my hands her hands hold another fan making the signals of our tryst
this is another fan of hers for my manipulation this will give the signals too what time
where and when
and then we fan ourselves together much to the dismay of those who still think that this world spins
because of love alone
no
there are other reasons which lust knows apart from the reasons of the propriety of an intimacy there is this emptiness that must be filled at least temporarily with the desires of the body the curiosity of he mind the button-less reality of holes and bones and quivers of the flesh

i am into this and you call me quits.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Fan And A Stick

Imagine a fan
keep it, it is a stick

if you want air
spread it

and it has fingers
and you
sway it

to have air you must vibrate

to know what it can give you
you must spread it like a wall and not just a door

truths are not sticks

RIC S. BASTASA
A Fan Of Basho

From the 15th floor
You said you will jump
Do not expect the sound of water

Flok!

Now, stop acting like a frog Suicide is not poetic

RIC S. BASTASA
A Faraway Light.....

light always amazes
me in the dark,

like a firefly that is lost in the night
it flickers to the view of my tired eyes

and relaxes me a bit, like a lighter of a cigarette in the dark alley of the slums,

the light that gives me the much needed smoke to allay some fears
of our
series of deaths,
to appease these internal wars
unseen by the eyes of fading humanity

it is the same light that is promised
us
'at the end of the tunnel' when in the middle of this lost-ness we have nothing to drink and eat and no one to talk to when we see not even the shadow of a bat of a leaf

because it is too dark and damp and damn
dead silent,

when i think that it is only i that exist and no one else
when in the extreme coldness of the silence like the tip of a metallic knife one can only remember abandonment and

betrayal
and killing of one's own brother kin and friend and child

every bad thing has always been possible they all happened and they can never leave you again they are the tattoos of your
soul

it is only light that can comfort you and it is very faraway.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Farm House In Dicayo River

Slanting rays of the morning sun
Carabaos, goats, and pigs
Along the grassy lane
An old man with a staff Sits by the door
Of his thatched hut
Waiting for his grandson,

Chickens, ducks, and pigeons
Scatter on the backyard
He feeds them
All he has now
Is this simple life
In a farm house in Dicayo River
Waiting for an angel
To sing his final song

He sighs soon he shall die
the river flows nearby

RIC S. BASTASA
A Favorite View From Here

something so human very much like us
or myself, i see from here and i always come back for it wishing that i get fed up and become free
but no
it is always in my mind and no matter how many times i view it it is still a favorite it tickles every nerve makes me alive

so forgive me soon i must leave what you think is best for me i go and sit and watch and wait the suspense for a lifetime something that grows inside myself stands up and strong
makes me alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Feast Of Bitterness

we all have a share of this bitter concoction
in this cup of
life
there is no reason
to complain
it is only a matter of ' i have mine
and you shall have
yours'

i am not saying
anything
you shall not hear
from me
and this is the reason
why
i have resorted to this art.....

i do not write
with a fist.
How can i?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Feast Of Lights

when you were born mom did not tell you that the stars in the sky made a thousand winks

a feast of lights
and a rendezvous of universal droplets of
distances

all the planets however maintain there respectful distances trying to show how dignity works what they did not tell you however was the silence of the world tiptoeing not to disturb you with your first cry

RIC S. BASTASA
A Feather

i met a feather today
in air

it introduces itself
as one with just
a few parts.... a rachis,
a vane,
barbs,
and

the quill,

which in the evolution of mankind
has made
life, society,
civilization,
countries,

amazingly
complicated.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Feeling Of Half-Ness

i had long known that i cannot be full i am always a glass half full.
This feeling of not having gone at length to the place where i want to put all my legs and my hands and let them do something that is so complete.
My cheeks are blushing.
My ears do not fully hear what I am saying to my heart.
My heart beats but always in half notes In Whispers so that You may not hear everything That I want to say. Always concealing.
Hiding the true color of this state: halfway Half asleep. Half awake.

At the middle of things, I shall always be.
I am neither the beginning Nor the End. I want to speak, but there are no words coming.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Few Advices To A Nephew Studying The Science Of Psychology

you say you want noise so much noise in fact in the middle of the night to bury the boredom reigning in yourself.

i wonder if you have consulted the gods and goddesses of poertry.
if you have gone at the entrance of its temples.
one does not need noise to expunge boredom.
one needs only silence.

you tell me i am different. Sort of telling me you are different and you belong to the wonders of your youth. i am telling you, you are wrong my dear nephew.

you have taken so much noise, and you are lost.
you have disregarded the voice of your heart and the furies will take the revenge.

the noise will take you like the Pied Piper of Hamelin to the sea with all the rats and there they will drown with you.

Take your time. Have fun with so much noise.
When this fails, and i know it will, please come back and drink the lovely potion of silence.
This is the beginning of poetry.

Some things are so real, in this poetic imagination.
As she once puts it: an imaginary garden with real toads in them.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Few Things

mother's black and white picture
on the wall,

father's leather belt kept in an old cabinet now dusty too dusty memories about a family long splintered by time about pain about happiness suppressed about its ability to survive despite the odds siblings come to a reunion party wanting to remember more names

RIC S. BASTASA
A Few Words Of Praise

to a child who must feel the constant need to be loved a few words of praise is all enough you cannot give him a car or a chick he isn't old enough to drive or to be driven touch his hair, giggle his armpits and you will hear his childish laughter a few words of praise and a heart beat to a child his day is already complete

RIC S. BASTASA
A Filipino Fed Up In Chicago

AND so one day he got fed up Worrying about his bills Light, cell phones, Apartment rents
Meals and what to eat Next month
No money to Send to the Philippines

There is no work coming And the old man he took care of Died a month ago

Bad luck

He is vacant
He could not go to the malls There is no money left for the week And there is no work coming No one is offering to help
And he worries

About his telephone bills
His credit card
His rent
His SSS
His unrenewed passport
His expiring visa
His debts

One day he goes outside It is quite cold Colder now
The snow is coming

He smokes his cigarette packs on the park A middle-aged American woman stares and tells her “Smoking is bad for your health You are polluting the earth”

Just a little advice

But his head is hot and Hot temper is what is steaming inside
He is fuming mad to that middle aged American woman He is also fuming mad about Himself to be honest
About it

“Shit shit shit, I smoke if I want to I use my own money to kill myself
F###k YOU!
Mind your own American business In this free country I can smoke anytime I want! ”.

He knows how to curse now In the most American way For just a year or two he was a timid Filipino he was the meek citizen of this world

And he smokes all day in the park his packs of cigarettes in the park Puffing and puffing and breathing and breathing Releasing all his dismays in cold air

He can see his bleeding heart His cursing

“f##k you! ”
‘f$$k you! ’

in the freezing air his cursing is a big bold font in the atmosphere
His cell phone does not have any load
And he cannot call anybody

And he remembers well the latest old Jewish rich man which he took care of who died a month ago

One day the old man fell on the floor
The one who shitted him all day he still could remember fully well
all the old man's yell

call: F$$$K YOU!'

The old man could not stand
back
He was big, fat, and dying

He did not help him stand He merely stood there askance And the old man shouted and growled

"Shit shit you Filipino Help me stand from here"

'F$$$K YOU FILIPINO!'

And he said
WITH ALL STRICT COMPOSURE SO SURE OF HIMSELF NOW with a little authoritative moral advice
like he was a wise man

"Rich American now is the time for you to Command all your mighty dollars your mighty dollars

your mighty dollars
your mighty dollars

To help you rise and make You, young and strong again! “

The old Jewish rich man died Due to cardiac arrest.

And now he is out of job No money
No promises

And one day now
He finds himself smoking himself to death

On this cold dark wildlife park south of Chicago.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Filipino Writes From Chicago

Dear Juana,

I am here in Chicago
And I have to wear a thicker jacko It is very cold here you know

Even without the snow

I am staying with another cousin In his apartment I chip in
As he is also renting
And I am simply gallivanting

It will take me time
To find work this time

To find work here is still hard I have to stay longer in the pad

Could be next month perhaps When cousin Rey gets some mishaps I will have his work
And hold his fork

I could be working Probably working In the home of a Jewish American Taking care of their old man

I have to tell you
I have to hold his big thing While He is urinating
I have to wash his anus
And chop his huge “pus” So it would
In the toilet flush

Just imagine how
The American dung would smell somehow It wouldn’t smell chocolaty As you would think it to be

I wish to come back
And forget this life’s lack But who would pay
My debts in our country?

I wish you all well there I will have my deals here To earn for my dollars
And pay for my scholars.

Pray in Jesus name,
It’s me your only flame.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Fine Life

today is a Sunday and i will be visiting a farm of native chickens and ferns and

cocoanut wine for lunch.

She says have fun

Life is short so make the most

while it is there.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Fire Escape

imagine
one night

when you are
alone

inside a room
with windows

secured with iron grills

the fire starts from that only

doors and there is no other exit

imagine that electricity is cut

the smoke enters your room

crawling on the floor

you panic
and you do not remember where escape is where to find again

the entrance to the next life

blame yourself how you hated the thief A Firewood House

living on a firewood house one gets to understand well the essence of conflagration a spark
a flint if taken for granted can cause
what you do not expect to happen at all so do not ever talk about a matchbox or even a candlelight it will be too dangerous to dream about you you're hot

and flaming
and you may want a light after a tryst
i guess once is enough
of you
the firewood house is about to burn itself and soon i will be lying helpless along the road enough
of this ash

RIC S. BASTASA
A Fish Bone In Your Throat...

now as a final episode of this learning
you must learn to remove a fish bone in your throat and repeat after me

'everything is fiction! '

slowly
and with one stroke of your learned hand take away the fish bone burn it

it is what is rightly termed as fictional cremation

you must believe that someone just died and that happily
he was buried pursuant to his last wish as written in his last will and testament.......
A Fixation

between two islands
of my life
i set upon a swim
this middle portion of clear calm waters

it is not deep no storms not even a wave it is crystal clear and beneath
a white sandy floor

some fish lick my legs and tickle my pelvis some sea grass massage the soles of my feet

and so i like it here and i am not going somewhere or anywhere

the other island
which they call eternal bliss for a while can wait

it is between day and night it is between heaven and earth it is between life and death it is what you call my sinfulness.

in here i am very happy and that is all enough for me the sky blue waters are so cool & the surroundings simply beautiful A Flow

when we are in bed
we become like two rivers flowing with each other.

when my face gets too near your face we become like two mountains separated by a moon rising from a deep forest

my tongue becomes roots and looks for the place where water freely falls on a ground that is wet and soft

and you too become like me flowing, wanting for an opening wanting to fill a space of our common emptiness when we fuse like profuse lights from opposite directions on a very faint rainfall we make a rainbow

between two cliffs

when we hold hands we are like two creeks meeting and then forming a channel that fuse looking for the entrance towards the sea

and when we start to kiss and make love and letting go every worry and anxiety that we have when we are finished we feel we have found the gateway to the sea and there we lose ourselves to the vastness of the oceans to the deepest of its floors and then we are complete.

we become entwined with the universe.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Flow Of An Idea....

two words no matter how farfetched like two opposing poles of the earth when you for once give them meaning can give you the link for life, it is You who is the bridge of the paradox

your left hand meets your right hand
in prayer

in an embrace of the sweetest moment clasping

a union of mutuality which was not there when you first wake up that morning...it was dark at first when twilight comes to bring you a glimpse of another budding perfection, and you walk an extra mile to get hold of yourself lost in the labyrinths of your self made doubts, ...it is you who makes the ripples but shall you blame yourself for being honest and candid about what life has handed you?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Flower And A Bird

My hands create
a flower and a bird

my mouth opens uttering what you want to hear
i presume beauty

as usual you are the one but you are not here my hands offer flowers for you my mouth waits for your kiss just an imagination i suppose and then i finally know you've been dead and buried.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Flower For Her

it is not a fresh flower cut from the garden of my love it is a dried flower inserted between the pages of my book

it was the first flower she ever gave me when we escaped class to walk hand in hand on that nearby hill filled with the memories of our youth

i am giving it back to her now that she is moving on with her own life

same with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Flower Story...

when you are inside a very tight bud if you do not compromise with the night the choking sepal becomes painful the receptacle argues with the peduncle on the matter of an overstaying stigma nature rules and at dawn you have to bloom on a lesser risk towards ecstatic pleasures

RIC S. BASTASA
A Fly Trapped In An Empty Bottle Corked And Sealed

if you see the fly trapped inside an empty bottle
corked and
sealed and gasping for breath

oh my recall the love
of wisdom!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Food Called Cesarini

been in Italy for five days but i have not tasted a cesarini.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Fool Out Of Myself

i always think
of you

don't forget
that i always think
of you

though i doubt if you
also think of me

i like to think that you also think of me upon a hill

under the moon
and stars

i always think of you even inside my dream
i always think
of you

i dream that you also think of me as i always think
of you

i realize i am a fool until last night at the mall

when i see you in the arms of another
like a vine clinging
to a tree
like a straitjacket to his body.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Fool's Game

it is just a heartache
don't bother

just a heartache
that always sleeps

in pain and

wakes up the following morning
thinking

that it has forgotten
every pain

don't bother
it's not my heartache

it's yours
now.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Footnote To Air Asia Flight

the gecko sounds in consistency now on the side of the house where the sun just set the rain has not stopped darkness arrives slowly like a drop of ink spilled in a beaker of water the sound of the pan is heard from the kitchen where the house-help is frying fish for dinner the dog barks in play with another dog in the veranda then light is switched on in the middle of the house the TV is too loud for the latest news about the plane that in a blessing-in-disguise the family of ten missed.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Form Of Injustice

a tall child is angry
picks a pebble
on his sling
and hits the eye of the
the short child on the
road

the eyeball explodes
blood flows
the short child
screams

the tall child
runs away
laughing loudly

he is far away now
and nowhere to be seen

the short child keeps on screaming
some people in the market hear run towards the site
go near to ask what happened

and then one by one
leave
to do their respective chores
for the ordinary day
A Form Of Purification

the cyclone that hits Myanmar the earthquake that hits China
they come
they all come too swiftly, too decisive of what to do swiftly sweeping swiftly swallowing it is the purgation of the earth a manner of purifying itself i am not saying there is dirt or so much rubbish on man's cruelty towards this earth i am not saying anything at all my sympathies for those who perished i am into this silence a tribute to death

on the other hand, i am thinking of something else i have hinted you on this but just the same, let us move on and pick up the trash sweep the yard, collect the leaves, rebuild the house, plant more flowers and perhaps not to cut the trees and spit on our seas again

RIC S. BASTASA
A Formalist

In coat and tie Black suit
Well arranged hair
Well cut
Well suited
No air must come
To disarrange
Some hair
Or other parts of Him,
He is stiff
He is stuffed
He is

A perfect gentleman

How can he ever Dance this Hip-hop
Of life?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Formation Of One's Personal Philosophy In Life...

sometimes, this is what is the usual beginning, sometimes,

we are conditioned upon a pattern of behavior,
upon a common definition of who is the successful
what is life and how it must be lived to the fullest...

and not having followed this pattern we fall into desolation remember the room where a shadow lurks projected by a secret lamp of our privacy somehow, this is another word that signifies survival, we learn to live life the way we have it,

our resources are limited of course, we thrive on what is here, and not on what comes next we enclose our house with a fence, we define our parameters of hope and losing this time, this is another way to summarize, we begin to learn our own language, the language of self-determination, about who we are,

and what we can be, based on how we see ourselves in the mirrors of our very own eyes, you hear the child say, ' i am a lizard and the ceiling is created for me'

the other ' i have wings, i am a moth, and i must be careful about lamps'

and the other, ' i am a fly, spiders cannot be my friends, neither are the lizards, who are hungry and makes my body as their food'

'i am a firefly, i shine in the dark' another creature sighs..

there are differences, one must know.
and one must of course, learn to avoid what is harmful or destructive....

there is more yet, which i have not spoken. but i need rest. And i turn off the lights and in my room, beneath the skies, under the moon

i put myself to rest....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Formula

loneliness that dissolves in a glass of smile sadness that fades
in the lights of your laughter sorrows that leave a space of rising hope

grief that does not stay long lament not overwhelming a contentment that knows what is the meaning of quiet self that knows the place beyond the self up there, a finger points to heaven

RIC S. BASTASA
A Frame

a square a rectangle four corners of wood or steel or just bold strokes to make a corner a frame to put my face in, and there i am safe i am enclosed i am situated i am myself in a certain context in a certain world. There i am found.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Frame Of Reference

we did not buy a new fabric
it is too expensive
and we have no money

what we did we opened our trunks
and remember

we took all those old
clothes
that of our ancestors
who died
with all their own sorrows
too

we cut them into small pieces we do not remove the dusts
and stains

we assemble them into one collage
including our tattered pieces
too

and then we see the whole picture of who we
are what this family is all about what humanity is then we frame this creation

and from there we move on
as though
nothing happened
A Free Meal?

you like free meals	hey taste so well nothing is bitter everything is sweet

why do you like a free meal?
you save much for yourself.
why do you save much and not spend anything for yourself?
you are into the vice of misery.
You are the miser storing much and still beg for more hence the free meal.

there is no such thing as a free meal if you only know the real score you could not have eaten that free meal on the table.
everyday you eat this unnecessary gratitude tomorrow you shall pay it with what? your dignity, even your whole life.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Free Vacation In China

while you enlist the soldiers train them and prepare them for war
on a supposedly consensus
a decision
to kill terrorism

she was in China with the First Gentleman playing golf

and taking pictures in front of the Great Wall

with her friends
and some grandchildren

then they had the lauriat and the ballroom
and then they were laughing
on the recent jokes about a soldier henpecked by his wife

RIC S. BASTASA
A French Woman Is Singing A Song

at the bar
somewhere in France
a woman is singing her love song

i can't understand a word but i have always understood the feelings the song is sad

and i know, what we are up to the next thing that happens...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend

a friend is just a friend a patching somewhere on some empty spaces where such being may fill

the shape of a flower for accent of a vase or a fluttering butterfly to decorate a shrub or a substitute for someone who left and left another
emptiness

a friend is just a friend
do you expect some more?

let the friendship be nothing but be brief and concise like some answers to life's questions

let it not be beyond yourself and your loved one a friend is just a memory that comes and goes like the wind that for a time cools your face

you just let them pass and be themselves, ...

friends, have some,
but come to think,

they may also be expensive A Friend And Company..

we'll walk
and go tired and rest and sit upon a stone
look up to the sky
and sing

you provide me the tune
i'll make the lyrics of our song

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend From Nevada

she got divorced and moving on with her life for a third husband and she says she is careful now not about love, because there is none since the first husband but about money

outsmarted she goes bankrupt and now moving on in another place las vegas, the city that never sleeps the insomniac keeps her accounts intact, from now on she tells herself while sleeping alone in her new apartment there shall only be use, abuse, disuse, and uselessness sad, bad news i suppose but she's real, her tears are salty and her sobs sounding like a dog howling at midnight not looking for another mate but who knows? she's full time American now, and no one stops her from doing what could have been, but not yet, she says, can be must be and will be soonest

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend From New York

he learns the years of living alone in a cozy apartment works on the day as nurse and makes most of the money through overtimes and other part time jobs

it is the money, the love of money, that makes him move it does not matter if he is loveless with anyone he is fed up with broken hearts and wasted times

he learns to live his life with his brown dog

that to him is love without any condition
always devotional and painless and constant and nothing too personal in-between.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend From Utah

she finally finds her way in Utah watching the sunset there on a desert she sent me a letter telling me that she never saw such a beautiful sunset as that in Utah but i was not really amazed with what she thinks she saw as beauty because i still believe that beauty still lies to the beholden (i know you may think i am wrong, you think of the beholden) a cliche of the almost forgotten) but that is not really the point

that is,
a dog must know the hands of the person who feeds it and wag its tail to manifest gratitude and admiration what amazes me still is the last poem she sent me while i also watch the most beautiful sunset at the Dipolog Boulevard

she says she has nothing to prove to herself she burns everything she is finally quitting and whatever that means i refuse to make any conclusion i still love it here because it is home and i too agree, i have nothing to prove to myself or anybody else, alien or otherwise

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend Has Hurt Me Behind My Back

A friend betrays
Stabs me behind my back Using her shadows
She held my neck with her arms Sealed the friendship with her last hug And left my bleeding heart in cold blood Then she went away
Following the road to her dreams
I have no regrets Repairing what I have What is left of me
She too will die soon
In her guilt and emptiness Her heart dead
Her own soul gone away.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend In Chicago Is In Relationship

on a cold winter a friend in Chicago finally opens up like a clam and grabs
a sand that pricks
his tongue
so he can make a pearl
this Christmas

i ask two questions which i think are intrusions to his privacy

honestly, i am not interested
he's happy and it is enough to know
that

what i realize is that he is happy and he is no longer interested about what i ask
or what i say

i quit.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend In Egypt

it's nice to see him finally in Egypt
smoking shisha hookah
with three handsome young men
as he treats them
for dinner
as one artist plays the joombosh mandolin

he says he gladly refused his offer

but Egypt is still great!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend In New York Shot In An Art Exhibition

big round glasses chinese eyes framed in black curly black hair pigtailed protruding scarlet lips
closed
mustache untrimmed
you are the mouse of modern art

RIC S. BASTASA
in facebook i did not let him know that i keep on reading about his posts concerning the doom of this world. First it was September, that was last year.
Then it would be November, there will be a major quake, a continent will go down to the depths of the sea, the landscape of the earth would change.
It did not happen somehow so he had christmas with friends and families, at any rate, perhaps he never really liked how life is going, for by then on january he posted that a meteor will strike the earth and crumble it to small pieces.
It seems that he will never stop imagining
the end of this world.

he was once a religious guy, practicing catholic,
one a manager of a bank,

i do not wish to judge him.
or perhaps recommend that he should see his shrink or get help from his close relatives.

i am alone here sitting on the sands of the shore on a moonlit night with all the stars in heaven.

it is so beautiful and i wonder how can one ever think of all the bad things coming, or a dismal ending.

i am into a happy world.
and i do not really think that it will end, or if it will, i guess, it should be a happy ending.

at least i am seeing stars. tonight, and i still wonder if i would tell him this.

a friend is a friend is a friend. if he chose horror, i would not mind it. it is his choice which matters. I just let him be.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend Of A Hum

tonight i am going home i feel so alone as though i am living inside a house with very thick walls, i am
inside my car and as usual i drive alone for an hour passing uninhabited places along the road
and then i hum an old song that pleases me and i realize this time that i have a companion this hum which through time has assumed another voice separate from mine
it sounds strange
deep, monotonous, husky, and comforting like a lullaby of mother it is a friend's voice jibing with mine

inside the silence of this car

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend Of An Enemy....

it was wrong for you to talk to the cats to help you eliminate the rats

the rats keep on eating your clothes and your furniture

they hate you for asking help from their oppressor befriend the cats and they soon will take revenge

as the old adage says, a friend of their enemy is their enemy

you should not have meddled in their affairs, kept your clothes inside a glass cage and slept on your furniture

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend Of Mine...

she spent
ten months in federal prison in Waseca, Minnesota lost 40 pounds
and had her spiritual upliftment
to her delight

nothing's changed
and now
welcome back to facebook

because Time flies Life moves on
and No One remembers

But somehow Everyone cares
And Loves a Friend who shall be a friend
forever

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend Of Sorrow....

from my luxury bed
you have awakened me again

thank you very much,

Sorrow, you are still my sweetest friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend To A Friend Asking For A Favor

a friend finds himself in a mess with himself, a room filled with waste papers and shit, he got a little dog to care but he is always drunk somehow, beer bottles under the bed, he has not been brushing his teeth or shaving is not a part of his vocabulary, goes in another friend's house, about five meters away from his and takes a hitch
for lunch, a glass of water will do him for the night till morning, on diet for poverty, the world is too dusty for him, but he does not bother wetting the plants with water, there is no water anyway, he has not paid his bills, there is one thing missing in his life and he admits it when he for the last nth time asks his friend
to help him find back his dream.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend, A Woman, A Widow, The Old One

where have we gone on those years that dance in the music of hushes and whispers?

those merry widows
painted their faces as they grow into the folds of their old age

she is one of those who dreamed
from nipa huts to the ice castles of her
fantasies

she thought she can stay forever
like that... forever

but no woman stays a woman throughout her journey she assumes some shapes
to survive
some have turned into camels in the arid desert
some polar bears bear the earmark of womanhood in their cold noses

her body knows when the right time is right there in her mind but there is one thing that makes the sound of her permanence...

that she must always be free to be
...forever

RIC S. BASTASA
A Friend...

You are there,
BUT you are here too
because
You are a friend and a friend is always here despite being there

In the heart
A friend lives

Sometimes you hide away from me Inside your mind

Your head shows somehow Like a nail stuck in soft sandal wood

I am listening
As always....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Funeral In The Barrio

it is a long line of people like a snake
winding itself on a hill towards the spot where a big tree stands
the snake's mouth
opens and spits you
right in the hole
six feet below
the ground

and then the women
then the clouds
pay its tribute
with a little rain.

and then you are forgotten. another boy wears your name
and starts life all over
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Game

a bird embraces the wings of the winds
its beak sips
a cloud

a cloud pours its burdens

hence the rain
runs through the furrows of your skin

the contours of your cheeks the lines of your body

it is all a game
the cards we play
the words we say
we do not really mean it

but departures sometimes though usual and routinized still hurt

there is no complete familiarity with pain

even though we agree that this is all a game that tonight is just a moment of breathless expectations when you utter the last word
finally

i think i still cry my heart still knows pain a little prick
at the bottom of things quintessential

RIC S. BASTASA
A Game Of Hearts

you toggle
pain and joy
the silence and the noise of yourself
butting between us in this game
of the hearts
i keep myself away
even wanting to put it off just to give way for that which lies
between us
and then you finally say there is no us
stupid.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Game Of Words In Any Place At Any Time...

this is my favorite game of words that i engage in at any hour of the day and in any other place

i can create them outside the paper and without the use of pen sometimes it happens that way when i ride in a bus and the destination is 36 hours away or even in a span of minutes when sleep does not come or when nap is nil

my fingers help to put music by tapping its nails on the metal rail and there is dancing and singing and some speeches in between soliloquies silhouettes

six-shooters
jailbirds

farmers reaping
hay on a sunny day

as though the room is a place where party and conversations co-exist i do not put more than what is necessary it is enough to just survive the hours of pressure the little training of torture the principle has always been i only use what is here i discard what is not found here there are no expectations from the beams there is no show of shadows

i let imagination go and let reality stay for a while one by one i enumerate what i can contain by the numbers of my fingers

i think of the names of friends

i gaze upon myself
i am glad i give myself a smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Game Of Words In Circles

dismiss these words as nothing but fireflies moving in circles around the crown of a tree on a very dark night, for these works of the wind are nothing but images of ghosts whirling on top of my head all for nothing but a play of mental drawings moving and moving in circles in imaginary skies believe me not, i am just a poet, and a beginner at that, move on with your life, and think of something else, your future your ambitions, your love and desire, keep moving on and leave me, i am drunk with poetry, and i whirl on top of my table, filled with words, that i touch with my hands something that i cannot tell you because i know, you too from the start, understands them all, like my face in the dark, that you have always loved, and yet can never hold.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Garden For All....

they will bury you at the hero's place but what evil you did
cannot be forgotten

let the law praise you but the divine
still frowns at you

today i put an end to all misery
let the grass do its work

it is a new place now
a garden for all.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Gate Made Of Steel.....

you have always prepared

for this. Words are kept inside a cabinet.

dreams are ironed
out.

hope is silent.
and stars are remembered.

plans are sealed.
private matters of the
heart.

leaving is an ultimatum but always reserved.

the sun has not completely come out yet.

the mountains are keeping their shadows.

soon is sooner, and you are always learning.

the pride is there.
money is saved.

somewhere the plan
for another house is made.

it will be walled.
and the gate is made of steel.
A Gaze Upon Myself

the possibilities of a body are all here: luscious lips, contours of my arms
the promises of my butt and the courage of my chest,
so much is here
all these resources laying bare wanting to be used even abused come... let us meet secretly the wonders of our youth
tonight
when i am alone again inside my room, when the hotels are closed,
when the cafes are cruel, when the roads are emptied of children
when the skies have no stars come to me then, youth to my youth inside my room
where my heart is numb when the only possibility is the pleasure that our bodies can offer when intimacy is not the question anymore when commitment is out of the issue we are here
at this point we shall only discuss how our skins can accommodate all the pleasures therein.
come to me when i am alone again let us make pleasures
under the moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
A General Statement About Those Who Spread The Mess...

deep red like confetti from a tall dark red building in the middle of the city it is not the ordinary mess that you see on the streets it is professional and too deceiving authorized as it is with the validity of the laws of their own creation we who are below and who watch these makings grit our teeth like we are grilled in hell as a matter of internalization it becomes evident that we who want to be clean are the most unhappy people on this patch of the earth perhaps that is the nature of this world it is more of the scattering rather than the keeping it is more of the destruction rather than the intricacy of the web of creation trigger-happy are the murderers of the master plan and those who want to keep things alive and intact neat and beautiful are always the mourners of the morgue.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Gift Of Silence

a
tangerine
moon

above
me

a quiet
spot
at night

feeling
rocky

RIC S. BASTASA
A Glass Of Water Please and so the story wants to end itself with a glass of water.

those who cry after always need a glass of water.

those whose hearts are broken those who sob
those who close the window of the niche those who have nightmares those who wake up at 3 o'clock in the morning those who sit on bed and cannot sleep back always go to the kitchen open the refrigerator get a glass and splash
a cold glass of water

this time, i am asking for a glass of water for i could be all of the above or you could be one of those i have described

but who knows we are not one of those
who knows
we are but just anyone who is normally thirsty and with nothing to ask simply ask for a glass of cold water.

and cheerfully, we do not forget to say please....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Glimpse...

in my youth i saw flying plates broken glass lamps, wasted rice grains, invectives and curses were always the sounds of the house, i promise not to copy and paste those things, sad, disappointing, unfortunate human conflagrations of the innocence of some souls,

now i am free.

i listen to nobody but only the voices within me they are peaceful, every tapestry embroidered with logic and reason,

searching for more wisdom listening more than talking i am staying and i like it this way now the shells of the past were burned the ashes thrown at the feet of Dipolog river.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Golden Shield For My Future...

dear mama
do not make me dream anymore about your worries
i am a man and will always be strong as you brought me to be i can manage grief, like you did a thousand times when you were here on earth, when i am junked, i do not force my way in i keep my own ground, i know how to make my own doors if locked, i can find always a way whether it be up or down

to the left or to the right

if i may cry, but it will be short and brief and concise as my explanation for worry i do not spill myself i take a piece of absorbing cloth and recollect
all those blood and sweat mama, i am not a helpless child do not make me dream that you're going to wage another bloody revolution

times have changed sometimes mama, we stoop to the feet of our enemies in order to cut their heads rest in your grave mama i still have more tomorrows to remake my future is as bright as the golden shield of Parmenifid

A Good Beginning

getting to know you is a good beginning i may look for love like you do look for it and we hope somehow to find
what love is
as a beginner after riding on that train of pain sooner, as i know your name, and your sorrows, i stop and look at my past summers too the drought we once had, when all the leaves of my trees shed off,

and all i have are just my fingers and my stares,

i sigh,
and from there i look for an end to all these an exit, where no one feels anything again someone must keep all the love and make it grow and have all the fruits and flowers it is not me. I am numb.

i am looking for another opening, where i can have another good beginning and then finally find a happy ending.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Good Poem

a good poem is as good as it makes you feel
good,
about yourself and your world, your pains and joys, your sorrows and pains, all mixed up into one salad
a bowl of greens and reds a slice of lemon, black olives, a little pinch of salt, a garnishing of olive oil, and some cheese.

and of course, the purple onions that you peel one by one tears and the lasting smile

RIC S. BASTASA
A Good Poem Never Ends

ahh, i have seen and felt the words of that poem
that never ends,

the moment
you put the last breath like death
it simply breathes upon itself
a new life
for another beginning it shifts its meanings
to another soul
another place
and time

at the other side
of this globe
the reader that glances only for a while comes back and asks

am i there?
are you talking to me?
am i part of you?
are we not together in this?
are you myself?
how come that we feel
the same
angst?
the same joys?
this bliss?

and so, the words escape and fly away like birds and build a nest on the next tree nearby where another lonely soul is taking shelter
in his solitude,
for in truth a good poem
never dies.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Good Sleep

the linens are cool grasses the air as breezy as the sea the room gives the ambiance of silence resting on soft cotton pillow

RIC S. BASTASA
A Good Voice Keeps Singing, Life Goes On, My Dear, And It Is Beautiful.

before that i had fever, i was chilling,
and then you come
with a good news which you brought yourself
inside my room,
and i said, you give me a nice chill, and you sit beside me, and touch my nape and rub the oil, and i feel so light that i still think that love is still existent.

the way i talk is prophetic someone deep within us wants to die,
always looking for suffocation, but the mornings are assurances, and mirrors are good advisers,
and a good voice keeps singing,
life goes on, my dear,
and it is beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Graden Of Sand

centric circles of

the sand garden and

some parallel lines and a world so silent

serene so fine

RIC S. BASTASA
A Great Man........

you are a great man.

sometimes
if you are really true

you agree that beyond this greatness
is an extension
wire of madness

at some point
water from the sky
falls upon a leaking
roof of your existence and what happens as predicted accurately by science in between those cut moments, a short circuit occurs
putting a series of sparks, a weird sound,
and someone who is in touch, and those that really take pride about skin and intimacy, find themselves electrocuted and burn and die.

if you are a great man, do not forget,
you will go mad,
you will go cold
you will die.

and then you
are forgotten.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Greek Island Of M.

YELLOW moon
with orange stains
islands of saffron

electric blue skies marine blue horizon
shadows of islands
a black dome
light
inside a house of prayer

RIC S. BASTASA
A Green Sour Orange....

first i get an orange a green orange, the young one sour, but still citrus, not pungent but inviting, not a cure for the wound, not easing, it penetrates pain and
makes it more painful,

then i cut the orange,
press it
and press it some more
to get all its juices....

i do not drink it
i leave it in the glass for all those dark nights till every juice dries, till what you see and feel is the same

emptiness....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Group In Prayer

today the five of us inside this house
are holding doves
in a little while after a short prayer
we shall release our doves free in the air
now, our neighbors will see what we have inside our hearts

RIC S. BASTASA
if you really want to be with me i can sacrifice your presence like a lamb burned so the gods may smell the reality of the smoke of death and pain and
sorrow

we can be together in all these realities the first pact is: acceptance you see what you get and you get what you see as simple as that no tricks no magic plain hands nothing rubbery or plastic

we do not expect anything in here there is no disappointment of what should have been or ought to be anyway the agreement reached is the voluntarism of our two wills you invite yourself and i invite you to invite me in return we live in one house with only one door the getting in we have two windows our two views on every matter presented by nature everyday the sun in the morning the moon at night and some stars as bonus or the wind and the trees, all these cliches of reality less the complicating ones those sophistication of sophistry and those fingers of an octal arguments we are tired we ought to know better than tired we make a river of course to justify our thirst for bridges and some boats for easy rides the paddles can come later when we are ready to learn to swim whatever that comes first in our mind shall all be welcome guests no barrier no social mores no restrictions no exclusions that is the rule here openness of the roof and soon there will be no roof even then we have a garden of grass and stones delineated well by the aid of the grace of our imagination

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
more words that do not really help but we tolerate it anyway to keep things going like a line of cars waiting for the go signal

did you hear the drivers sing? did you notice the silent passengers afraid that we will cheat them into these useless endeavor to keep on talking though
we really mean nothing? stupidity is a trail a tail of the rainbow where actually there is no pot of gold out
there
it is trail that we all are taking now and yet we refuse to stop we refuse to recognize that we are all fools who take pride that we are the only ones who change our minds and then we call ourselves wise people.
i step out of the line and i am going somewhere because as you see i am all dressed up as though i am dying. do not follow me, you do not know me, i may be dangerous.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Guilty Feeling

a happy dream
you do not wish to elaborate
where i am
part

it makes me guilty
what i did there

RIC S. BASTASA
A Guilty Woman

guilt has a pair of eyes and you who have nothing to hide look straight to his iris that shuts down a bit to lessen the flow of light as though hiding something in the dark that it still treasures in its back

you are the sun that shines early morning to kiss the new flowers of the day she is the afternoon that slowly fades away

RIC S. BASTASA
A Habit

waking up the morning with some ideas popping another boring day?

with nothing to play?

i look to the world inside me
and say

oh! there is so much to do there is another tornado

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hammock, A Dream, A White Butterfly

i was relaxing on a hammock there was this little white butterfly fluttering and fluttering no hovering ever

no stopping

it rises up over the fence
of my house
and then it is gone away....

i slept and dreamed about a little white butterfly fluttering and never stopping it flew away from my mind...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hand Of Light

however it is not saying really that a hand of light can give life back to the dead grasses under those dead trees upon an abandoned mountain, sometimes i imagine that what if i were a flash of lightning bringing a loud sound of thunder can i not possibly create another Frankenstein finally telling me that i can be wrong in giving life to the dying?

whose pleasure is it is really to die?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Handsome Man

i am a handsome face long black hair
aquiline nose
slim body
kissable lips sharp eyes
white teeth
smooth brown skin lean and muscular body

i promise you nothing
i have no time
and i do not know what love is i am the vagabond of this earth
a wanderer of its bosom no one owns me
and i own no one.

RIC S. BASTASA
i do not know what happens next.
My heart is palpitating like the wings of a robin against the cage.

i see you leaving wearing a new dress. Your shoes glisten on the floor. Your bag is silk. Your lips scarlet.

When the last step sounded on the fifth stair I get another glimpse of you.
I am lousy. I break the best plate in the house as i am trying to wash it with soap and water from the faucet.

I am in hurry too. I do not collect broken pieces for now.

I am wearing my new shirt, a blue tie, a leather belt. White pants.
I comb my hair. It will be glossy too, like your shoes against the floor.

I will close the door. I am the last one to leave.
I have given away the dog of the house.

There is no one barking now.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happening Within

there is something in us that grows into a complication, the sophistication of the labyrinths that we create in every word and line, it used to be just a simple house with one door without walls and ceiling a theater for the dance of the wind and the fireflies & perhaps one window and a little patio to appease the senses of simplicity dressed like a rag doll but it can't be prevented as time grows more hands and feet and even wings and horns
many subways are built secret chambers
foxholes and slaughter houses or tea tables restricted areas and hidden homes and buried cemeteries and lost treasures
that will never be found perhaps that is our nature and also the nature of our poetry there is a room where we make love and there is only one person there name not revealed
no one has a hint
there is a kitchen where no cooking is done for fear of smoke and fire where firewood is taboo and where cigarette speaks a language of puffs

like Indian warriors communicating to
themselves
in the smoke of their palms

i, myself, create signs that are designed more to confuse than to make bridges

the rivers are happier and the clouds celebrate the success of the floating

i am into this again this chasm between two selves split carrot stick

that falling that is endless that bliss that is as silent as the star at night when you are alone and missing no

one.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Birthday Surrounded By Percents

i may have seen the wrong greeting posted on your birthday today

i have not seen
the presents
or the cake
or the smile of friends surrounding you
as you blow
the candles and make your last wishes

correct my eyes
but i have seen
you surrounded with percentages

%%%%%happy%%%%% %%%%%birthday%%%%%

lots of percents, huh?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Death....

i just learned
she has leukemia and she writes her poem about her loss of hair

how precious these locks of hair
but now she will be losing them one by one

she writes so well convincingly and artistically,

but here in this sick hour she is powerless to let the fall stop.

another sad poem in the making,
and then
by acceptance, another happy ending, my mom used to say a prayer to God for a happy death.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Ending

i cannot always be a new broom that must sweep well your old floors

please take note of this i cannot always be your new broom that must sweep well your garbage floors

please take note of this time will make me an old broom and you my dirty and old floor overladen with scratch papers and pens with dried inks and litters and crumpled newspapers and torn fashion pages scattered on your rough floors, time makes me a old, dirty broom and now, ruined and stained, we shall stay together, we now belong to each other please take note of this happy ending.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Family Of The Past....

i am not anymore attuned to drama
he declares, so, the chopsticks do not appease family affairs that old feud which shattered glass houses
the bickering about land and inheritance

you ask if i remember mother feeding the youngest daughter and there was happiness there about a helpless baby and a caring mother

how chino had to wait for grandpa to bless the food before taking one bite of the pork chop and grandpa keeps on calling all the children to the dining table it is dinner it is christmas and everyone is having new clothes and new toys

it is snow time in beijing and some are still on the trains coming back home cellphones are ringing and anticipation is too many to count.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Landscape

waterfall on the cliff white doves flying low
the plains grassy and flowers blooming and a brook runs beside a shade of this big tree where you and your beloved are so close

his head resting on your breast his hand
holding your hand as you move your face
closer to kiss him and his kisses you back on the lips and you

gaze to this happy landscape of peace
and quiet:

love fills the air,
and both of
you say the words

'i love you very much'
'i love you too....'

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Moment

inside an old restaurant i order hot choco
and sweet rice cake

not so expensive
and we are not so hungry

but oh my
when we finally take the glances of our faces

the glow of our eyes burning like fire
we want to consume more we want to be consumed the more hungry for love we leave the place the fires still burning in our hearts the rain outside can never put off what was burning inside us love is always and shall always be unstoppable,

unquenchable, insatiable like a burning ball of fire in the space of our desires

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy One, Loving And Beloved.

I know what happens after I express my liking to your creations

I can imagine how happy you can be reading back your work and rediscovering how beautiful it can still be tomorrow, and then again tomorrow you can feel that there is something in there that amazes you how did you make it? how come you have ever thought of those words?

how beautiful is the music between those syllables?

tonight you will dream of trees and birds and clouds and high mountains you will hear the laughter of your beloved you will even kiss and make love there when you wake up you are filled with inspiration again you will write more and be conscious of the beauty inside you that wants to escape from the landscape of your mind like some butterflies and birds and then they hover on those trees by your window and they look at you you smile as they smile at you and then they disappear like the wind you are now alone and then you write again something that we will all like because they are your dreams and they all come from you

a happy one, loving and beloved.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Poem

a little boy free from mama's hold to the backyard with his marbles shooting them in the holes then he calls his friends and hides in the bushes where he cannot be found to the hills he catches his dragonflies he climbs and gathers ripe mangoes he goes to the river with his peers catches fish and jumps to swim you hear him laugh and sing till it is dark he thinks of home his hot soup and dinner then his mother kisses him tells him stories and then he soundly sleeps

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Poem (2)

a baby poem grows into a lady poem
and one day at the port she disembarks
sees her old mother poem and they hug so tight and kiss and cry
all the tears of joy on their first meeting
after a separation something they cannot explain why
all those years
fate and prose
did not meet them until the metaphor-ships find them in

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Poem....

something which i did which you need not know
'twas something which made me happy though

(some religious mien may call it sin but no, it felt like aspirin)

much blood passed through the veins of my brain all happy memories are then well contained

someone is always staying
in my mind
thought of love and nothing but love to find

outside i may look sad like a wilted raisin
but deep within this silence am a happy shining sheen

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Reunion During The Death Of Their Mother

when mrs. rabosab died a picture was taken together with her surviving heirs, i sent my condolence of flowers and a little amount of money the picture was posted in facebook and they are all happy....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Room When You Come In

i like to imagine how his face has become one lighted room when you come in...

it must be a bright day amidst the storm

i must say i am happy for you you light up his face and keep him burning

(ha ha ha ha)

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy Soul.....

i sit there
alone,

around me are the trees
tall ones,
with hands reaching the clouds,
streaks of light
fall on my face

for a while it is this silence

like a door without a knob
always opening to something beyond

it is great
i feel light and then

i fly away
in too much pleasure

this, my dear,
is my happy soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Happy World

the little boy inside the box is about to get mad, and prelude to this madness, he fabricated a nail and a hammer, and then he made a hole in one corner to first see light, the little girl outside hears the noise opens the box and sees the little boy who is pale and still blinded

with so much light

the little girl laughs at the pale and fragile creature you expected that they will soon like each other and play in the garden the reverse happens, the girl hates the boy for he was never like her by all means she closes the box, the boy has no means of breathing and eventually dies of asphyxiation it is a sad ending of course, but both of them are happy in their own ways, the state with which the boy is in, he has only one wish, and that is to die, and the girl who does not need any company, has given it to him.

that is tragic, and that is what you really wanted.
now you are happy too.

you get what you wish.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Haven....

being is so light
lighter than burnt leaf lifting itself to the shoulder of air then having felt that gift of flying it accepts the moment of having to settle back to earth
as another crafted word of art

my being is so light
i could not think of something lighter than air
perhaps this soul
that is so intimately entwined
like an invisible vine inside my wooden
body?

i feel this dropping unto an abyss
that seems to be a rising higher than the sea
the sky
the limitless space between you
and
i.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Headache

the mind is so huge the thoughts widely embracing the skull is embarrassing the eyes inhospitable ideas close and open enclosed and
the brain begins to ache so much for all these
and yet
least compensating

the day ends without fruits on its hands
the night talks of dreams no longer
receptive the eyelashes restive upon a line of the slit
nothing much
but silly talk
flak, plaque and bubble

RIC S. BASTASA
A Heart Broken Into Pieces piecing together the broken pieces takes so much of my time this heart is broken and the pieces shattered pieces

are too tiny to be pieced again i am a very impatient man on love
on matter of the heart
i give up, i cannot piece the broken pieces again too much pain
guess what? i have just thrown my heart away
look at me?
my eyes are calm, my body stable pierce my skin with a needle it does not hurt anymore my eyes have no tears my mouth does not tremble my legs are tall and stable heartless, i shall love no one this time.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Heavy Rain

the rain falls heavily
at six o'clock in the evening you are stranded in an island of the city road you have no umbrella your car got stuck
with the flood and your cell phone is dead

you have no plans
you think of the past.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Heavy Sigh One Evening Under The Stars

too many people to love
and yet
too short a time......

RIC S. BASTASA
A Helpless Situation
	here is a fire in your room the stairs are burned and the windows have fallen to the ground you are alone and all the while there is only one imagination you have in your mind
all the firemen are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hidden Note For The Fearful

what he is saying could be this that in searching
peace
one has to offer as many lives as possible

he lost his father

but the people are impatient he lost his temper

he may wage war against his own
people
to obtain this peace
from the murderers
he may even disregard the sufferings of the widows and children and he will do this in the name of peace

he wants to grab this chance of a lifetime
to hold on to peace

everyday however the killings and kidnappings and ambushes continue

he still wants peace
he still wants to grab the tail of peace for once in his lifetime the people looks at him with dismay and he has become their own enemy

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hideaway

the house of
the pigeon assures
that you are at a certain
safe height

on the beam of the ceiling
two sparrows
are singing

you rock yourself
on the hammock
you are chasing sleep who is always far away
from you

it is carrying your bundle of dreams
slippery as an ell

the sea breeze
comes always pregnant with some songs from
the other island

you walk barefoot
on the floor with cracks and you
assure yourself
this is my home.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hint To My Arrival

when i was born
in this world
someone was not happy with
my smile

my cries during nighttime till dawn
call the hard liquor in the house the drunkards come teasing

a forlorn man

my mother is still the most beautiful woman in the village

rumors come like storms
the house falls to
the ground

RIC S. BASTASA
A Holy Man

in the middle of the rice fields a holy man stands looks around and then pees.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Holy Thursday

tradition finally diminishes its stature
slowly its promise for fasting and self-restraint
has become another
non-fulfillment

someone is crucified for tourism purposes

there are those who roam not for the quest of God but for sight-seeing this is another form of global change people do not believe easily anymore each stone is upturned with another kind of question the consciousness is higher now as faith sits behind the scenes

RIC S. BASTASA
A Home

no matter what there is always a place called home at least you finally decide to call it that way,
you have been away from this home
for many years

those were the years of the struggle of what you are and what they think you are
which is the place
and this is not where
you want to die
you want to live somewhere else though you do not really know
where but it has always been a dream of somewhere
a house by the river
a place where hills grown into
mountains
your hair turns white
and ankles ache and names become haze and places become smoky you stop, right here, you declare this is home
this moment when you do not give yourself the right to choose anymore it is here
right here
you place yourself like a backpack and mark a spot with your bamboo cane
and then
you claim the right to be here your home
yourself.
A Home (After Watching Fiddler On The Roof)

people are moving out from what they once call their homes,
daughters wanting to go with their new found lover so he may not be lonely so she can help him in his work on the train she tells her father she is going home to where her heart is,

away from those who are once close to her

the train moves on snow falls
and the father stares the departing
melting into a shadow
in the air

RIC S. BASTASA
A Home (Revised)

no matter what there is always a place called home
at least you finally decide
to call it that way,
you have been away from
this home
for many years

those were the years of the
struggle of
what you are and what they think you are
which is the place
and this is not where
you want to die
you want to live somewhere else
though you do not really know
where
but it has always been a dream
of somewhere
a house by the river
a place where hills grow into
mountains
your hair turns white
and ankles ache and names become
hazy and places become
smoky
you stop, right here, you declare
this is home
this moment when you do not
give yourself the right to choose anymore
it is here
right here
you place yourself like a backpack
and mark a spot with
your bamboo cane
and then
you claim the right to be here
your home
yourself.
A Home For Me....

i have not met someone who says that this is clean.

the majority says, it is filthy and must be thrown away.

i know others keep it, hide it inside their hearts and lives with it like the way one accepts a disease, like the way you take something unclean as part of your daily routine.

i have to be honest, i am one of those that keep a secret.

this secret makes my heart sing with the wind, lifts my spirit to the sky, makes those dead in me alive again, and i hear someone saying, ' why should something which makes me alive be so wrong? ' i travel inward, i set aside rules, i have questions for the makers of history, i am challenging the norms, the fences of traditions, and like a prisoner, i find solace in the darkness of the night when the guards are asleep and dreaming, i escape.

i go beyond the borders of an old country and try the untrodden paths of the new land, sail the one still not on the map and arrive there without any longing of going back home.

when i land there, and see the forests, i shall name it home.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hope In Being Lost

i love being
lost

it is another adventure
of my lifetime

to be lost
is a plan
it is a kind of desire like summer

it is a place where you have never been
you plunge
upon a darkness
upon a depth
into something narrow and uncertain

it is not a kind of road that is clean and smooth and unending

and free from the mess of the forest
and its trees

tall grasses
compete there snake pits
are abounding venomous bites
are impending possibilities moss and lichens crowd upon a tree trunk lizards and wild butterflies and frogs are cautious upon each others' preying the seconds are some kind of twist and turns of their lifetimes deadly bees and exciting canopies create the combination of fright and frills and instant kills being lost is an excitement i feel this despite the tension you do not know where to find yourself there is no map yet created in this personal situation you cannot name a place you cannot simply write an address

or email a pic to someone else
on the net

you become a new man yourself
renewed to all these anxieties
you may be killed in the process
and that will be so unfortunate
for one who has only one life to live

it will take time
to adjust sleeping under
the moon
the trees at
night
and listening to
all these
sounds of horror
and animal calls of survival

you hope
and this is the real cue

to find someone new
like you
someone who can give you another exciting
beginning....
A Horde

i do not wish to fight the horde

neither shall i be with the horde

follow the horde
and be part of the anonymous hordes

i am staying.
i am myself.
i am free.
and i like being left alone

says the stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
A House

rusty galvanized iron as roof
barely a third of the space mixed with the nipa shillings

this is the house
by the side of the sea with bamboo slats
as walls

the sea is not calm today the bamboo fences are shaky to the strong wind

i am inside a house of glass i see all these but i hear nothing

leaves of the jackfruit are blown to the other side of the fenced area

beyond this frame of mind i cannot say anything

i am caged.
Our vision is caged.
We do not see
the whole picture and people think that we are wrong
that we are blind.

RIC S. BASTASA
A House Full Of Peace

no laughter from children no conversations from visitors a couple not on terms with each other closed doors and windows dusty slippers
empty thermos bottles
rusty door knobs
unused toothpaste
hard water

unfolded blankets
cold pillows

RIC S. BASTASA
A House Without Stairs

do not say that without the stairs the house is not a house anymore without the ceiling the more the house becomes to me take the roof

if you want

or the beams
or even the floor and window frames my house will still be a house the sky its roof the stretching grassy plain its floor all the stars become my magnificent ceiling

whatever is taken
we must imagine that all things are still there lest we only have a house that crashes on the floor with all of us
dead

crushed to the death of our imaginations

a door without an exit because you have not seen hope coming the lock and key are all in the mind and heart

RIC S. BASTASA
A Human Obligation....

the enemy calls for your help upon a self-made distress and you want to digress from that obligation to help all foes and friends

you extend your hand and say those assuring words everything is alright nothing is wrong
nothing shall go wrong

to the enemy though saved he still considers you his enemy you leave him safe your heart weeps
you have never saved a soul from the prison of his inhumanity

with a sigh you move away there is no regret you say

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hummingbird...

and so to level up
at a certain compromisable comfort i settled for less, do not be dismayed. between the strictness of the mind and the unreasonableness of the heart halfway, there is this couch made of softest bird feathers, pastel blue, lighter green, shallow orange, dimmer yellow, between their hushes and my whispers,
i hum.

RIC S. BASTASA
sad. i must tell you it is sad and there is a reason for me, for us, to be sad on this sad day bringing the saddest news you work on it a hundred days it is read, their heads shaking, they could have told you, you are wasting your time, you could have spent it planting potatoes, yes potatoes in your backyard, you emote, this is my life, these are the lines of my life, authentic, deep, true, sincere, earthy, mundane, and too divine, God given, Spirited, conscientiously worded deep from the heart of me, a prayer, my innermost my heart, my soul, chasm of pure intentions

honest,

they shake their heads of your piece of shit, junk, scratch, crumple, into the wastebasket of your days.

a hundred years of work, in a second junked, discarded.
they're honest, you're no good salamagan salamander.

think and be quiet. Hmmmmmmmmmm...who cares? whisper this to yourself: om om om i am good, i am good, i am beautiful. i am great.

consolaton price. consuelo de bobo.
you're ggggggggggggggrrrrrrrrrrrreat. amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hungry And Feastive Imagination

The rest of the work here is sedentary, boring, and if it were a piece of bread so bland and tasteless fit for the molds,

but there is an instance in our lives where we see a scenery that makes our soul fly like a butterfly soft to the wind
silent in space fluttering in utter calmness

i grab it
and focus my attention to this moment when by mere looking at some particulars, colors of green, hues of red, shades of brown

scents of flowers spreading at night
full moon
fresh wind, sea breeze silence and that state of being complete and then looking back at you missing me (i may so think) and i thinking of you again (as loving me)

the distance cannot provide that space
of loneliness
the heart longs,
the mind fills in
through its
imagination

about us again, reunited in love, and then feast on the gifts of lust.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hungry And Thirsty Soul

a hungry and thirsty soul

how can a body then look so beautiful?

how can you satisfy a hungry and thirsty soul?

how can it die? the body asks how can a soul so beautiful and forgiving be in such a dirty, emaciated and bleeding body?

how can this body conceal such a hungry and thirsty soul?

look into the pool of my soul, and find if your light can penetrate therein without bending

RIC S. BASTASA
A Husband's Regret

she got pregnant only once on the third month yet they still made love on the hard floor of the house and the lights were on to see their beautiful bodies soaked with sweat and she moaned and blood flowed and what she got was not an orgasm but an abortion

she recovered in the hospital after a papsmear
and he bought a puppy all white to mark the beginning of his regret
on that sad day

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hush

as i wait for you
i shall hear the wind blowing
from the sea
to the mountains

i shall hear the gentle hush
of the leaves falling

i am listening
for the coming of your steps

by the side of my door
and then with all my pleasure

i shall have it opened
because tonight i am all yours

come inside my room
and i will tell you the magic of the moon

RIC S. BASTASA
A Husky Voice

when waking up signals the first warning of light you must rise immediately and ready your palm to write what is being told to you lest, you shall delay and then forget and then be lost forever on what should have been written. Look at you now crazy over nothing seeing upon light that comes to you but makes every remembering as hazy as a cloud laden day a river murky, a voice husky which you cannot really figure out the source, the meaning, look at you. How miserable a dog with a missing bone.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hypnosis Into Sleep....

the river of life
is taking me to nowhere

i have no complaint
i am using no feet of this earth i am sailing on its waters the river of life is raging and raging like a bull with its long horns and smoke on its nose i am sitting on a raft sleepy, very very sleepy, and i hear no more the screams of mankind.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Hypothesis About Our Afterlife

The purpose of the study Is to eliminate the weak And the unfit.

You spend more hours now Burning every belief Checking every dogma Testing the hypothesis Whether it can withstand The crucible test of truth

Because truth is exacting You stretch everything possible Nights become days
 And the hours drag like A ball of steel

The Day of Judgment comes Your were measured
 And you fall short of their Expectations

"You are out! " that is what they say.
 You pack up your things You take back your wits You swallow that wisdom In defeat

You go where fate takes you.
 Now it is the wind that works for you.
 It is your feet that carries you Your mind your wings
 Your body your vessel

Now you have faith.
 Now there is no worry.
 Now you know the truth.
 There is no work.
Just heaven.
There is no Hell.
Just love. Just love.
It is all there is.
Nothing more.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Jar's Story

from the start the hands that shaped you designed you to be empty you were named Jar,

someone so beautiful and rich
takes you
away from your maker

those hands
cannot hold you for long because they are empty and hungry
hands

and then she fills you with perfume
and all those who attend the parties of the
world
dip their fingers
in your scent

they crowd around you and you are loved
not for what you are but what you can give

scents, scents,
all scents

you begin to miss your original form
the beauty that you possess
when you were once empty

you miss the whisper of space inside
your belly

the hush of the wind that rests in
your heart

you forget the name
that was given to you

Jar is your name but are not one of them
anymore

you are the scent
of their necks
hanging on their jaws and navels

your contents
fill now their fantasies

your hollowness
they now discard

RIC S. BASTASA
A Johnny Come Lately

yes i did get what i really wanted from this life, to call you sweetheart, to make myself feel being loved by you

(despite the fact that in truth, you are never here) to love you more that i can ever think of.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Johnny-Come-Lately

a johnny come-lately
that is what i am
to her but what she is to me is always an early morning sun that i set aside because she is always giving me lots of love
and i am

so so exhausted
always in the trance of everyday
dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
A Joke

a joke makes me laugh because of the twist that i have not anticipated sometimes it is not that way we may not want it but we even laugh without the twist without the joke

we laugh because it has become too bitter and there is no other possible option

RIC S. BASTASA
A Joke One Evening

as we dined
he cracked a joke about crackheads
and there was this one ugly man who did not like it.

he must be the one.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Journey Away From Words

trees, lakes, sea,
boats and paddles, and smoke and shiploads of

hands,

and feet on mud,
and cows grazing on the pastureland and dragonflies still on the blades of grass, when you are here and wandering, you become
detached from words, when they become

real, when you touch them bathe with them, live with them, when you do not think about how to put them
together
within the four corners of your paper.

you caress your hair.
it is not a word anymore.
it is soft hair,
soft hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Journey Back To Ourselves

as i stare at the rain
i remember
trees

transparent and cold

trees without leaves

i imagine twigs

or roots or trunks

they are never
there

no matter how
trees are tears

without leaves
without roots

with so much
salt in each

and then you
touch the waves

of the imaginary
sea and then

your journey back to you begins
A Journey Of Honing Words And Wasps...

i hone myself, and i honing i am honed, like a drone like one drowning drone who wants to master the art of drinking water, he must have to drown himself first or even die,

but that will not be the end of it,
dying does not end, it gives you a start, an upstart of what lies ahead

perhaps a new beginning, but let us pretend that we do not die we just hone and keep honing until the honing is perfected until we become nothing but honers of this craft of living life

like crazy drones that drown themselves in the water to drink the whole ocean of thirst and hunger do not think that i want you to feel what death is and make you understand about it, i am just talking and keep on talking to myself because i want to hone myself into dying, because dying does not actually die itself but simply keeps on dying until it gets perfected.

and how is it to be perfect? continue talking, i am tired and i am still as broken as you are.

do you see wasps in the air?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Journey Of Writing.....

i once wrote about a national struggle about this sick country this ailing people they say there is no more cure

and we are all left out like scrap
that as they move forward to another Medellin
in that gigantic rocket of
progress
we were stuck inside the cave of a rock
without light and short of water

Time wearies me somehow i feel the waves of wrinkles in the sea of my forehead my voice fading like a water ceasing the cascade of history

until then
i become an individual with no other concern except my own flight towards my own
seemingly tragic ending

i dread at first but dread can be so familiar in every encounter in every life of every man

i dread no more and set myself to that pretty surrender like incense slowly burning sending its perfume filling the room with its beautiful sadness

i see finally the peace of the ash silent on the foot of the stick

RIC S. BASTASA
A Journey Towards The Self

you may have gone to Rome and had the shower of the holy water to the churches of France to the hamlets of Galilee to the holy places of Iran and Israel
kiss the imprint of the foot of Abraham
taste the dried blood of Jesus along the streets to the mountain of the skulls des are the last places of your absolution as you ask forgiveness for all your sins but there is this journey that you have to finally take inward to yourself

no popes, no cardinals, no holy water, no incense, no alms, no offerings
no prayers no incantations the longest journey on that feetless world you leap the chasm of darkness and with closed eyes you take the chronicles of faith ask for undeserved mercy and arrive at myriad doubts and feel the perfect void of your innate nothingness your worthlessness

hope you will find
yourself
nearer to God's embrace in the silent waters
of your soul

the sacred law says you must die to yourself for you to be alive

RIC S. BASTASA
A Joyous Morning

you walk in the garden and you find that the seed that you have planted has become a tree, and today
you can see it is bearing so many fruits its twigs are like hands wearing jewelries studied with diamonds glittering at night

it is not for you
as it will always be for
all of them
they shall pick those fruits and relish the sweetest taste of life.

you smile and then you walk away
to plant another tree.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Judge That You Must Know

He wears a black robe
To cover his burning heart It is burning to
The fires of justice

He carries a hammer
Of wood
Not steel
Not iron
It cannot really kill
It is only for the keeping of Peace and order
To all men
Who want to listen to Reason
To all those who believe That conflicts can Be resolved
In calm dispositions

He sits on his bench
His eyes
Weighing
The evidence on Fair scales of justice

There shall be no bias
There shall be no prejudice

After a hearing
After a patient listening This man of proven Competence, possessing Integrity, probity of mind,
And independence in thought Lets the hammer fall Wealth may shift
Liberties may be lost Properties forfeited Positions lost

Litigations end
The guilty is sent to prison
The innocent is set free Those who have less in life Shall have more in law

Justitia nemini neganda est

Justice is to be denied to none.
And justice shall have been rendered

This is the judge that I want you to know

He carries no gun no bodyguards to Secure his life, not much money to Buy him his flashy car or build his mansion No large sums in secret accounts No free vacations to the Bahamas Islands No free meals no free plane tickets

He is rich with justice he breathes justice His every atom in his body embodies

Justice and the fair rules of this eternal quest

Justice
equity
compassion
understanding

& above all

Love.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Juggling...

emptiness like instant time

a word by mouth in a second

the lips receive the comfort

like instant milk
on chili gum

sadness comes there is a welcome

time forbids
a communion

sorrow lives beneath the armpit

there is an itch
a discomfort but it will not be for long there is always a departure you have seen her face sadness is beautiful

loneliness creates meaning poems come forth like flowers opening in spring like sunlight bursting early morning rivers have songs birds in circus dance the clouds make the show of stories

there are too many now for the juggle

how can life be so dry? unless you have only sands welcome the rain

forget the sprain...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kidnap For Ransom Only In The Island Of Jolo hey kidnap them International Red Cross Volunteers for days they keep them in hiding still figuring out what use could their bodies be for beheading

for international fame

tyhey say they have a noble cause for the world to know that they are not terrorists but freedom fighters and after about a month or two of constant prayers and daily reflection

they finally decided that these two volunteers have no use for their cause anymore and so now in good faith they demand that they pay one million pesos in cold cash

what for? for their board and lodging.
religion, logic, and humanitarian affections they have their own noble cause you know for the international world to really know

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kind Of Happiness

do not define it do not defend it do not attempt to prevent it i comes unexpectedly, and goes beyond plans, no stars draw a map
to where it can be found an evening talk, an early frost, it comes surprisingly even on mornings

when you take breakfast alone, it is sexless, it assumes a face

the moment you see it
inside your heart
or on the highway on evergreen Volkswagen.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kind Of Sorrow, A Secret Suffering to lose you i know is one kind sorrow for i claim a loss that i never had even once owned.

a play of words, and i know you do not understand what each word means, what a punctuation is.

this heart that grieves for what it cannot even touch with its fragile hands, its trembling fingers for what i see is but a glimmer a faint light, a shadow, a hush, a slight glimpse no one knows what secret suffering is all about (secret so to say, i give it a language of its own) a heart that bleeds without drops of blood a heart injured yet without the bruises and wound i mix with the crowd just like what we do when we go malling. i smile like the way all people smile. i always have a glimpse of you. yet i know, i do not wait for anybody, or anything, this is simply an impossible endeavor. Clouds that dissipate. Air that vanish.

a door that closes. a bus that leaves. a plane turning into a dot in space.
i look up actually for nothing. i pretend sometimes that there are stars where there are none but black clouds and tree tops.
i look down and only see suffering. Pebbles and gray sands.

i sleep without remembering my dreams. i wake up not thinking about what to do specifically with my life. I have everything you say. but since i do not have you, i am still nothing. I am simply arms emptied of its embrace. I am hands groping with nothing but space.

it does not matter. i touch my chest and feel that i am strong.
i give up the gift of speech. I take in the gift of words written in utter silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kind Of Story

a red cliff stands beside a running creek

from a distance it looks like a hand
C-shaped trying to give a view of spring

fluffy clouds hang there like friends
wanting to save someone from an impending harm the valley presents a shadow of a gray land

offering the promises of a bumpy harvest

meanwhile everyone watches how a creek dies.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kind Of Traveler

how evasive has fate been with me now that i have given up what i have in mind i have become a traveler without a destination i have no intention of stopping somehow all these is just a matter of intuition as i, the passive railing, nailed, and keeps on waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kindness...

drkm hand
reach for water bearing a cup to fetch
for another

fates twist

the thirst suspects kindness

thinking about another poison

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kingfisher On A Dead Tree

on a glass pond
a dead tree stands perched is a kingfisher on one of its weak twigs i sit alone on a rock thinking about nothing i must have been lost this day

blue wings and some white feathers on the neck black sharp beak
the kingfisher looks at me a leaf falls on the glass pond the eyes of the kingfisher and my eyes ride on the ripple like small paper boats going nowhere

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kiss

when your lips
touch my lips
you do not have to see the flash
the gleam
the glitter
the shimmer
the spark in my eyes that slides
through
my soul
i am glowing with fire
i am burning
i am burning
my heart is restless
and asking more

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kiss (1)

when i fill in the empty space between your lips

you too breathe an air of life into my emptiness

and then i close my eyes and lose myself in such a beautiful darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kiss Is Planted On Your Hair

i am glad that you are reading poems.

i hope you like the snow
now,
enjoying the blizzard understanding the primary reasons for catastrophies

i hope that you savor
each word
go thoroughly to each imagery

you travel and do not have to spend.

there are cathartic
moments.
like a thorn is taken slowly from your throat or

a kiss is planted on your hair
a hug that is so tight
that you
forget the necessity of breathing.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Kit For Survival

there is a time in your life
you feel
when no one believes you
anymore
and so
you must volunteer now to believe in yourself because if no one can
you must
because there is no other more knowing and understanding more loving and passionate
than yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
A La Sappho

was it she who lives on an island alone whose desires flow like a river and yet the pain persists on every rock that blocks its rush towards the sea where her lover on almond eyes and tissue soft fingers await her to be subdued by the strength of her touch and kisses that glow with sapphire fire this a la sappho form of love woman to woman grace to grace limb to limb until all her desires are lost when the fire of her womanly

form

subsides
between the skinny arms
of her

beloved naked facing her with nothing but fresh flowers covering
her hair

RIC S. BASTASA
A Landscape In My Mind

clouds hanging on a mountain peak with snow caps deep blue sky

like a lake in space

on the other side
lies the wilting grasses of the valley

twin towers on top of a hill like two Tibetan monks meditating
to a very clear sky

the winds howl
from the plains
like wolves in confusion

RIC S. BASTASA
A Landscape Of A Woman Sleeping Naked In Bed

a woman faces her bed forming a landscape of hills and shadows
a forest of long hair contours of the body
curves of roads
without the usual cars

RIC S. BASTASA
A Landscape Unnamed

I cannot deny that what comes through my mouth has always originated from my heart, and i am getting emotional with you, which until now you still refuse to believe, but i keep my composure in this little polite conversation, how many times did i sigh? countless, because have not really told you directly about i really mean and want, it is the heart, i will stab it many times, and it will bleed and i keep telling myself that i will never be destroyed, that i must live, so i can be true again, for i have never once touched my mouth with the truth of my fingers, oh how my heart grieved, how it has been restrained by a canopy of evasions, here and there, and finally still in this journey of not really arriving at the truth of my destination

i am tired of the parables that i have been telling you i know that you understand but we have the same dilemma two headed dragons, four footed beasts, soft-hearted worms. eight wings, nocturnal bats with four eyes, landscape unnamed.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lazy House...

Mommy's having her manicure the fingers of the right hand hang in air to dry the red paint on the nails she is very sleepy
the housemaid is feeding the baby with bottled milk her diaper is wet and stinking

Aunt is having Facebook on her notebook giggling to her chatmates' latest gossip in town Jinky is pregnant to an undisclosed gambler breakfast consists of chinese noodles and fried egg you an either have steamed rice or congee you have to boil your own water the floors are not mopped yet and it is about 10 o'clock in the morning of a supposedly manic Monday Daddy is still asleep still on a hangover on last night's drinking spree with fellow drunkards

Outside the dogs wait beside the door for their missing beef bones The big gray cat sits on the beam of the house looking at all of them seemingly pondering but nothing to meow meow...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Leaf

to a non-poet a leaf is just a leaf and when it falls on the ground, there is nothing but a fall but to us who claim this art a leaf is not just a leaf but it can be you or i falling and when i reach the ground you feel the heart of the leaf beating

for its falling, its failure as a leaf, its surrender to a certain death its claiming a portion of this earth to rest and be part of this world, it rots, and it speaks some line before it rots

a poem, a valediction on an anthill, an eulogy of the other leaves that fell before the great falling it can be a story of humanity written on the lines of its face, it will have flesh on its layers, some mouths on its seams, and it will tell too about the tree where it comes from how the clouds drifted so close to its stalk how the sun kissed it on top of everything a leaf is a world. just as a poem is. we live inside it. Through it. Even outside it. Even in circles.

we make understanding so complicated.
yet we are so simple as you see us.
A Leaf Painting Hanging On The Wall Last Winter.....

about to become old like my grandfather
i know how unbecoming is it for me to write
a love poem,

you yourself do not like it, for i may be to daring into another melodramatic sentimentality which is too unlikely for a man whose concern should have been a place of confinement, a site for another solitude to think over such an erroneous past.

yet here i am getting old about a love which never really realized itself-an open line, an unfinished business, a woman caught open mouthed to a kiss which should have been planted on the lips years ago,

you have kept her hanging like a painted leaf on the wall last winter.....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Leaf Song (Imitating V. A.)

the song of the fallen leaf
remains on the bank of the river
despite its
sojourn
in the heart of the
sea

RIC S. BASTASA
A Leaf Springing Forth On A Tree Thought To Be Dead

a leaf springs forth from the side of a tree that we thought must have been dead due to a deadly moss

a bud comes out from its ailing side

and the sun comes and smiles

there is still hope inside my heart

and then you hold my hand and grip it

and then the days pass by and nights come with rain

and stars and
full moon

and then we repeat what we keep telling to each other in times like these

life is beautiful.
life is always beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
A Leaf, A Sparrow, A Cloud, Sun And Wind

this is it this is it now
without you
without me even

a new day
will always be here
even without us

it does not make any bother it does not say a word it simply makes itself with the others who also make themselves

unfolding.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Leaf, A Twig, A Little Bird

Adam, am i, i got this only fig
leaf to cover my insufficiency,
this deficiency
of the
centerfold
in me.

Adam am i,
i have this little twig,
attached to
my upper leg,

and Adam am i,
i have this little bird,
so coy like a turtle dove, yet so fierce
and shrewd
like a fox, like a snake, one eyed

it sees the main entrance in that dark hole where happiness

and pleasure
of my being Adam of the flesh
am i surely lies.

i throw away the fig leaf,
hold unto this twig,
and then like happiness

i fly to you like
my little shrewd bird.
catch me, if you can,
barehanded, if you will.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Leaf.....A Way To Forget Yourself...

a leaf is one universe of veins and
guard cells and you move in there tracing
its labyrinths
until you are lost and
gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Leap Of Faith

at the very moment when he gave up God he closes his eyes he leaps from the top of the cliff feeling the wind and the hands of the clouds he stretches his arms his hands groping for nothing his feet no longer trembling he feels the ground he crushes with an impact that he had never known here is only darkness and then a faint light and then he feels the arms of God finally embracing him he opens his eyes and there he sees God the eyes of true compassion love eternal

RIC S. BASTASA
A Least...

when the night is darkest because the rains are heavier when we are packed like sardines inside this cave uncertain about what happens next, fears pile, and beats of the heart get too tense, let us not talk about the future set aside the past and suspend the present, at least, we can speak about the moon and
the stars
how the stars drink space and how the moon wades on the waves of time and then perhaps we shall be ready about the storms that are still coming lest one of you, once lovers tell the love of soft sunshine.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lemon Still.

taste me and tell me tell me more that i am sweet

feel my comfort
sip my sap
my juices savor
down to its last drop

then after all these sleep and dream

i stay awake and hide my sourness

for i am, despite these years,
a lemon still.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lemonade

IF the new born
could have been given the choice

it could have chosen
Me as its father

It stares and looks
confused
why it is beside you
and why you are looking at it
as though you are the new owner of a calf

But taste my tongue it is as sour as
as a newly picked lemon
from an arid garden in that war torn city

What i told God
is that I am not choosing
any

I do not like its neck
It is too short for my musing.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Letter From A Friend

kombanwa!

Tommorow is my day off.
It's not a busy time now at the office.
So I take one day off a week.
Our busy times are in May, August, and year end.

You know, we used to be superbusy a couple of years ago.
My boss is a workaholic.
He has no other life but his company.
My officemates frequently worked overtime.
I could get away from it because of my children.
Then, maybe, because of overwork, he almost dropped dead!
Since then, medyo nagaan ang among load.

I hope she is feeling better now.
Medicine/Science has progressed a lot these days, and age is really no longer a big obstacle now to childbearing.
I have a cousin in Australia.
Late pod sila nakaanak.
The problem was with the husband.
Blocked ang tube for sperm cells.
He had laser surgery, after which, nagkababy sila.

So, don't give up hope (nozomi).

I've been reading your poems.
Whether you call them your lies, empathies, whatever, they all boil down to life's truths.
Life is poetry for you, that's why, you'll never run out of ideas to write about as long as you live.
I don't understand all of them though - maybe due to lack of empathy on my part or my brain is simply dulled!

You also write beautiful visayan poems!
They made me miss my father - he can be very poetic.
He used to criticize me and my mother that we couldn't speak good Cebuano.
My mother was Chavacana, and I actually spoke that language first before Cebuano.

You lately write about war, young men dying in conflicts these days.
Is peace and order getting worse there?
Are there more of summary killings these days?

You wrote about Silliman/ Dumaguete.
A beautiful place. I studied there one year and I loved it there.
You know, I had a bit of colonial mentality, and to me at that time it felt like I had a taste of a bit of American life - rodeos,
square dancing..
I enjoyed watching stage plays and cultural shows there.
So I had a school culture shock when I transferred to UP Los Banos.
There were lots of school demos and there wasn't much art in their stage plays.
They were more concerned about getting the message across:

'Down with Marcos! ',
'Down with imperialism! '

Goodness, I didn't even truly understand 'imperialism' then.
After some time, I learned to appreciate the liberal atmosphere there.

I liked 'The songs of the geisha'.
Made me think of the Japayukis here, rather than the Japanese geisha.

After seeing the cherry blossoms here, I don't think I can ever associate it with autumn anymore, even in the poetic sense

('Cherry blossoms fading and falling') .

It blooms in spring and the peak of its beauty is only a couple of days or so.
The petals don't fade
and fall.
They fall while still at the peak of their beauty.
They look beautiful even when they've fallen on the ground, looking like snow from a distance.
They symbolize glorious death at the peak of their beauty
youth.
That's why the sakura also symbolizes the kamikaze pilots - most of them were so young!

I backed track to some of your old poems and I found that of Kazu!
Thank you, that was nice!
I'll show it to him.

Can't say much about my love being stronger than his. I 'm very far from being an ideal wife.
And no, his origins are not samurai.
He traced it some lowly Korean blacksmiths.
Centuries ago, Korea was more advanced than Japan, and Japan invited Korean craftsmen to learn from them.
Funny thing is that his father is a fierce nationalist (he was trained to be a kamikaze pilot), and he looks down on Koreans!
He won't even try and eat any Korean food!

So long for now. Please give my regards to her.
Again, I'm not expecting your response.
I'll just be reading your poems.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hello (to whom it may concern),

It's been awhile since we exchanged messages. Sorry, I'm not much of an 'onliner' these days. I resigned from my job. I'm, in the process of soul searching. Funny but I don't really know why I'm looking for a soul, my soul, when I cannot even see it. I'm on an unplanned vacation in some quaint town some miles outside the city while writing this email.

I guess I never had the chance to tell you how you took the glint from my eye. To write from the soul and not for the awards. I have overlook that writing is an Art. Thus it is priceless. A gold medal does not define you as an artist. Write until it ceases to become a more than just stringing words after words, conscious of your weary grammar, punctuations, right words, and subject matter. To write is to turn your heart inside out.

Beyond 'writing' and its technical definitions, it is actually a journey - a self surrender - towards the oblivion you are willing to traverse with your pen. And you find yourself in another state.

To write is to 'see' but not with your eyes. To 'feel' but not with your hands. And at the end of it all, you know that it's there. Writing takes over you. Thus, I often wonder: am i writing with the pen? Or is it the pen using me to write? But I know somewhere deep inside, there is a thing mightier than the pen that prompts me to write. And that is the soul.

I want to find my center. My creative process in writing. Ironic, but to find it, I must lose myself.

hahahahaha. whew. I know i sound stupid. Sorry. Thanks for bearing with me. Hope it's not too late to greet you a Happy New Year! ! ! ! =)

Always,
(name withheld, but this could be you) It is time for us to leave San Diego and head back to Portland starting on Valentines Day.

I hear it has been snowing in Portland,
I guess that rules out outdoor yoga classes.
That doesn’t sound good compared to San Diego where it is usually sunny and the activities included yoga, aerobics, tennis, biking to shop, kayaking, and fish tacos.

We have a great spot here at Campland with a water view out front.
It is much nicer
than last year because no one is occupying the spots on either side of us.

We brought nicer bikes with big baskets and racks for groceries.
The motor home only moved once since we arrived and all our activities have been via bike or kayak.

When we first arrived I hooked two ten foot sewage hoses together and the connection failed.

We had sewage everywhere.
We called the hazmat team but by the time they got here the ducks had eaten what Ray and I didn’t clean up with newspapers.

The ducks are everywhere and I find it annoying stepping around duck poop.

Ray likes their personality but I only see the poop..

Vancouver Bob came to visit us.
We had fun searching Pacific Beach for a house he lived in fifty years ago.

He brought the rain with him and we realized the motor home gets smaller in bad weather and with each person.
Overall it has been
the best weather
I’ve ever seen in San Diego.

Ray enjoyed golfing with Bob Perry two or three times each week.
His other golf buddy, Malcolm died last year.

Foxy is quite the character on drugs.
She thinks she’s super dog jumping in and out of the motor home.
Her legs fail
so we lift her now against her will.
She loves sunrise and sunset walks on the beach as well as begging for drugs.

Sorry this letter is so boring, but such is life.

Hope you all have a great valentines day.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Letter To The People You Love.....

in the deep of the woods you take rain checks with you and a basket, not too big,

for you to gather words, you bring with you an empty cloth, a canvass,

and a spinning jenny, some cotton, and a song

or simply a whistle, or a whisper to the mists

and there you weave your own tapestry of words and memories and whatever and then you write that letter.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lie To Lie

you whisper a lie

to a friend

and instructs him
to keep it

as a secret and

the same

procedure is repeated

from ear to

ear

from mouth to mouth

from cell phone
to cell phone

and wait

till tomorrow morning

the lie knocks

at your door and

it introduces

its name to you

and its

background

how it came into being

you are amazed

and you shake

its hand

and hug it

and you give it

a new name

the truth

they all believe

in

without doubt

now mind you

why do you complain

that you are maligned?
there is this subsumed self that is reserved for a misinterpretation that which must be tolerated otherwise the personality breaks into pieces multi-sided, and can be dangerous what it needs is just a little time perhaps a minute for it to exist the rest must cooperate because though minute, it can destroy the eye give it time, give it what it deserves then go back to the strong self that you introduce and keep the days have many hours like a merry-go-round take a cycle life is always a compromise for without it, the ward opens.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Life Of Self-Restraint

RESTRAINT becomes a wall between us, and i have kept myself behind this thick wall, always loving you, but always denying it, i cease to be a dropp of water, neither moss, every layer of my days covers this softness making another rock, and i am fortified into another roadblock to my dreams, it is here that indifference hardens into a fortress of dignity, which the ocean even has not fathomed this is it, this is it, denial, restraint, punishment, redemption you drive me into a destiny you look straight as i look at you passionately.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Life Span

it will live only for one day
yet no one talks
about it

dey accept it
as a fact no one cries
no one says something

except for the child playing in the garden

wanting to chase it
to hold it in his fingers so fragile

so soundless

to his mind
this thing is so beautiful!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Life That Is Exciting

let life be a way of meeting new friends guests that come to your party
those with no names
people who are strangers coming to your home befriending your dogs
asking about the names of your garden flowers gazing to your world their mouths gaping
on the wonders of your world
in the same manner
that you too
enter their worlds with amazement
let the days come without marked appointments blank calendars
brand new days
let life be
a celebration

RIC S. BASTASA
A Life That Is Full

your palms open
your heart
some more desire drips like drops of melting vanilla
ice cream

simply joys like buds pleasures like palms spreading leaves like umbrellas under
the sun

merry, merry
dancing feet
hands holding side by side
alleluia!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lift

you lift me up
you are air and i am a wilted blade of grass cut from the the manicured lawn i felt i was thrown
and there you are
the morning wind
just passing by you lift me up to be carried by your transparent wings i am as light as your feathers learning the art of drifting going places taking silences always arriving always departing
you lift me up
you give me the meaning of my existence i am dressed with air and i am going anywhere

RIC S. BASTASA
A Light Bulb To Light Our Dark World That I Wish Painted In Red And Black

yes, a light bulb to light our world these dark worlds outside and inside us
yes, a light bulb, a single light bulb to brighten these dark worlds inside and outside us it is only the Great God who can switch it on who can switch it right.

and so, okay, okay, let there be light from this single bulb of my innocence

Let there be light forevermore.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lttle Note On The Window Of The World

the vain heavens
mirror
on the pond
that early morning
as the boat slowly
traverses
the water
as i keep myself
still
my eyes focused on the next port
of my destination

RIC S. BASTASA
A Litany

recall the years
what do you remember? those baggy pants of college years and leather belts tight around your waist a grassy soccer field some husky men playing their games a bench where five women are sitting each hand with ice cream melting on each cone the corridor where she waits for you and the corner where you evade her gaze the stairs leading you to the fourth floor and the silent people who dwell there the harsh microphone on the first year welcoming you from that far mountain a room filled with books and notes a lampshade that blinks without end a coconut bed with bugs that bite him as he sleeps soundly without minding some empty rooms on the left wing teeth are gnashing there and your silence tiptoeing feet of drunken roomates hiding the empty bottles under their beds it is a litany of images of the past like some fireflies at night i shall let them go i close this jar and there is nothing inside it nothing to entice at all but just to remember and then forget and then i move on my feet with its new shoes are always ready to go A Little Advice From An Unknown Philosopher in fear seek the wisdom of the whistle hum in confusion keep the pillow have a little warmth in the coldness of our minds in doubt be a pillar keep that strength of your still silence in joy sing like the waves of the sea in adversity keep the faith of the sands in love be like a storm rage, rage in the ecstasy of your dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Anchor, After Silence Fills Me Up....

the whole morning
i was listening

there is no need
to talk until silence

fills me, and i feel so light, and i

float and i need an anchor, yes, it is our talk, that anchors me back to the

ports of myself,
to the pillars of my home, to the familiarity of life, taking once again, a little meaning, a crash definition.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Argument About What We Have Been Doing

these are just notes of a journey

eye are like stones that i put upon a boundary

sands that i spread
sometimes
over my body under the sun tese are just markings of a page

but when you follow each note each stone
each sand
and which could be so agonizing and tiresome

then you will begin to see what others have not yet seen we shall call these not notes or marking anymore

who knows, these are all tee lives
we all once had

and as they all tell you tere is no going back because there is no end

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Bird

da little brown bird walks on the ground
hops like a kangaroo
unable to fly

it fell from the tree from a nest
on wings still not fit
for flying

i try to pick it up and i hear a bird chirping
watching

oh, a mother
perhaps...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Bit Uncomfortable

honestly, it felt like i was a little bit uncomfortable but you know too well
where i have to go and what i have to do to do it well
and smartly
i finished just in time a minute
before you
and you lay there asleep
in the heavens of your dreams
as i cover myself on this nakedness
the first time
i really like to say
thank you
but i didn't but you know how thankful
i was when you
first made me feel that i am
what i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Boy Paddling His Boat In The River

who had seen the little child paddling a boat along this old river?
he drifted silently along the river weeds, picking white lotuses along the way the water hides his tracks as duckweed opens him another path.

i was that boy, now, wanting to go back in that old river.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Comment About Greatness

all she did was write about a leaf, or a bird perching one rainy day upon a grain of wheat, voila! she is great just like the way Picasso uses only two lines to draw a breast of a feeding woman how foolish can you be!
searching for the golden ant with silver wings trying to please them with it
all toil,
suffering yourself like a Sisyphus,
you are still nothing but a trying hard, copycat
forget about it,
junk them
discover the great self within you believe me, Shakespeare was a slave of his audience and the king....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Difference

day is change
little difference
in the morning
in this town when the bell
tolls
after the flood the people
begins to pray again
a new life
perhaps
or fear that God may send another flood
again

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a little pain that goes on and on
and on,

a prick at the finger tip, a pressure on the toe, something steps
at you,

an idea

a discomfort of your
mind,
you write it

it rebels

the description is short of what it really is

and this is always everyday

at dawn you wake
up

some luminous
letters are dancing
above your head

glowing like

fireflies tumbling and whirling and

staring

at times

you write about it
again

but they melt
like your dreams

on the floor

there is nothing
left

some dusts you
breathe
from the dark carpet

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Discourse On This Journey With Me

i carry no light
i am crawling in this tunnel of dimness bats hang on the ceiling of wet stones
they do not sing they're too preoccupied with their
silence
nothing about stares or glances,
i carry with me the burden
of loneliness
morbid so they say i have nothing to give except the truth of the malady of our chopped existences sometimes i speak to the glowing worm
i am not crazy though to expect any logical or sound response this is the truth of our living life
in the folds of indifference i wonder though
why are you following me?

do you find joy in my shadows?
i look at my back in truth there is none

so many are following and now i know why
i know what it is

you nod.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Disturbed

at 2: 01 in the morning you switch on the light a little bit dim
not to hurt your eyes and you get out of bed
naked

you open the door
towards the kitchen
and get a glass of water

you drink
you want to satisfy thirst wetting your tongue and gargling the coldness swallowing it gently feeling this creeping coldness to your throat down
to your abdomen

something is burning
inside
and the water is not killing it

you sit and think a while and stare
at the light

there is nothing there except the glare

now you wonder
sleep is still nowhere

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Doubt Can Be Helpful Too....

sometimes it is better halfway

a door half-open is perfect for our endless possibilities

a half-hearted love can only hurt that half

loving that full can be so threatening

mama had always been too wise not to put all those chicken eggs in one basket which papa did and for which he utterly failed. The world had always been safer with its islands and scattered seas. You cannot have it all and so you cannot also lose all.

A hand hall closed. A little doubt.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Gift From A Sunday Morning

it rained last night the earth is moist and the garden is misty

under the old mango tree lies a soul relaxed upon its free flowing ponder some birds too perch upon a branch and merrily sing.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Humility

boxed in a system
a bee has forgotten to fly it tries to do it again but its wings have become sturdy like the barks of a tree its feet have forgotten the shape of a rudder the radar has become strange to its system

stuffed inside this box this system the bee has nothing
to be.
just a showcase of what flight could have been.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Imagination Before Sleeping To Bed

up my bed
last night beside my lampshade i see a moon with a mouthful of stars giving up all its light for a magical evening inside my room

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Imagination Of Where I Am Heading

as i walk at dawn on the night streets of your big city, i meet you, too, walking alone like myself on the narrow alley in the dark where the lights are not functioning. Just blinking. On and off. i see you walking towards me.
you stop a while. i have no fear.
for like you i am accustomed to walking these same streets even before you. you stop, as though you have something to say. But i move a little step farther. Not stopping.
i see the wind blowing your hair.
it is hinting that we talk a while.
but that cannot be. You are heading north. i am heading south. You turn towards the Left and I made my abrupt turn to the Right.
You regain the strength to walk a little faster. You dissolve in the dark, i move on towards an island of light. I am walking faster too. As though my loved ones are waiting back to my home in the jagged slums.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Kind Of Depression....

you turn on the light at your headboard
it serves as your little moon you stand to get a glass of water in that mini-fridge it serves as your brook to cool your throat that path to your heart you go back to bed
take a glance at your watch it is 7: 30 in the morning you prolong the night you need sleep because you are not yet through with your much need dreams
you close your eyes
you shut yourself away from a beautiful morning that the world outside your room is freshly giving.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Learning As Time Goes By...

someday you will realize there is no use of a name influences fade like rust eating you inside your bones there are parasites residing inside your skin someday you will know how they survived all these and then you begin to hate them then yourself

there is this interlude of despair the regret of having been born between us the sea

the sound of the waves monotonous all day amidst us is this silence of the shells
the smooth flow of the sand that starts
comforting our chaos
deep within our
ears

someday you will learn to blend with whatever color and you will no longer search what you are
and where you are you are simply here and there without a fixed point you are boat designed with no anchor fearing no ports neither measureless oceans someday you realize that the only reason why we are here is that we are moving this departure that knows so well where hello begins...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Mathematics Of Life

we sum up our little lives less the disagreements we stick to each other despite the odds
only then do we really make a difference...

RIC S. BASTASA
i went in watched how black has turned into grey and how grey changes from one shade to another believe me it was erotic and sadistic the woman says she has experienced so much pleasure at the end however she leaves, totally hurt and changed.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Note For Syria....

we are one with the world in its peace and chaos
what is happening there too, is our concern, the wars they make the pains they caused the people they have driven away the children killed the buildings crumbled
the dusts and the silence of the city
the death of civilization the leaders we have chosen
we are one with the world
in its peace and chaos
we are victims too of this illusion governance and civilization

RIC S. BASTASA
you should have known that this poem is written because the loading of the surfed murder cases sometimes takes that long enough
as though i am waiting for a date that has no hope to come
as though i am waiting for the final fading of a beautiful sunset

makes me impatient at time but this is the matrix
of my being
i am here and will always do what is tasked what is written

that categorical imperative still works in my system
despite all my failures and series of disappointments

and so here i am
composing these line, there are no images, no seagulls,
nothing about the stars and moon, you hear nothing about the flow of rivers or the surging sounds of the swarming bees whose cells are recently smoked and finally burned

these seems to nothing that must mean nothing as significant as a plane crash with 105 passengers all dead to include a baby

without much meaning really and nothing serious as sudden deaths as cars slamming a rock and then fall from a high cliff
and then
explode like the hell that bad and violent movies always feature
and if you only know, these are what they always love to watch and tell on one of their office breaks when the pressure rises up.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Note Of Her Life

she is my wife
she is not a little note of my life she is occupying the full page of my ads

for one thing
she keeps cutting all the leaves of the palms in my garden and it is getting hot in here when some of the bushes begins to flower she cuts them all again leaving my garden empty except for the bleeding twigs of the tree leaving the little life of others in misery

she is my wife
when she dies she will still be my wife that little note of my life my garden shall be full of flowers my bushes shall bear more and all the leaves of the palms in my garden shall be green till the end of their spans opps don't take this against me

she is my wife
and she will always be my wife a little note of my life

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Note To My Wife success creates

the noise
but it was silence
which made it

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Note To The Papaya Tree

the papaya tree had long been silent to its suffering

somehow you see the tears on the smoothness of its fruit

the scars left every shedding of its leaves

the emptiness kept inside the hollowness of its trunk

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Paradox Spoken Tonight Aroused By Extreme Pressure

the gods of the little nook
universe
has cursed me
not to be happy and not to be able
to say
what i really want in order to live fully.
i know my hands
i know the significance of each line in my palm but the words are like forceps that are pulling my nerves the pains are indescribable but it only my silence that is the clue to my redemption

i am put in a box where i am fed some trickles of light from leaks like pores
of my skin

i know what to say but when i say the first word the box starts to tremble it is forbidden

i tried it once and some of my roots were cut fate is treating me like a tree without leaves out there in the fields i see images that please me shadows of love and bliss and immeasurable joy

i am sure if i touch one of those my back shall grow its wings i have never done the things i did in dreams i am powerless as an ant whose legs are cut i boast to those who follow me that i am a black bird with shiny feathers and that i have flown both edges of the world that i am bringing with me all songs of happiness

they have never seen my heart they only heard how it sings so well
i am glad

sometimes i wish that i have a mastery of who i really am i am free i am chained.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Patience, More Time

soon, they will stop laughing, continue the molting be like the snake
always have rebirths

soon this will be over, this beating and kicking and spitting

a little time, eat the silence then bite.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Philosophy
	hey think
less is better

to cut this part is to commit the whole
of me

trim the bushes
flowers soon
shall bloom on this
part of a branch or twig

undress cover only what is

ugly

what is not art
we hide.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Reflection

early this morning just when the sun is rising i sit on a reclining chair in the garden

i see the sun rising and its rays reaching
my skin

warm as a caressing
hand of my beloved

i close my eyes
and see the calm
inside my heart

how beautiful
how warm

i sit under the sun
and hear a bird singing

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Reflection This Morning

touching a soul is always a personal matter the travel inward is always mine when Jesus touches me it was him alone and mine alone no one feels for anybody no one feels for everybody my truths are personal and so are yours relating on the I-Thou, we thrive no one preaches no one listens to the eye of the needle we ride our own camels.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Remembering

from the old trunk at the cellar he finds again her old letter telling him where to meet
her

the time and the lovely mood for that day all contained on a scented paper the words written on blue pen

the strokes well made like
the tendrils of the honeysuckle
that blooms so well during summer

he did not go
and it was the last time that she ever saw
him.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Request To The Magician Who Pleased Me For A While

dear magician
i thank you for your tricks indeed your hands are skilled and my eyes are failing me i am amazed by the rabbit popping out from your black hat
the roses blooming
from your palms
the staff that turned to rope
the newspaper cutting becoming peso bills but with due respect
may i ask you to perform the last magic for the day and hope that this may not be a form of request that may cause you
sorrow
for parting is such
between us

please make yourself
disappear.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Rest Away From Work At Noonlife as you go out your way for the meantime away from books and piles of paper on the working table you leave your mind blank gazing through the door as you stand to see the trees well lighted by the sun at noon when silence comes as people go into hiding again in their nooks refilling their stomachs with food their souls with nothing for who in these hard times at noon when heat is fierce can think of the coolness of saints and God

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Story

once i like the rage of love, was a rock, and it rained.

once i got entangled into the unthinkable lust only felt, only felt
the lovely filth,
not the gentleness of soft winds on my hair the slow eternity of touch oh, it arrives at the meaninglessness of motorcycle motions arriving at places where no one meets me as a friend, but as a tool with meaning attached only to utility

one feels like a junk, a broken tire, flat on the road lacking air

everything stops, and you wait and there is no one there it is dark and the road is empty and the mountainside is full of fog and the wind howls like hungry dogs looking for the prey...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Sunshine

a grain of rice
on a table cloth
beside a cup of hot coffee

imperceptible
but when a connection is found soon
the spoon and fork
shall understand

some pieces
no matter what do not fit on a reasonable landscape

what is the grain of rice doing on a breakfast table?

your mind is furious
i think it is cool

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Talk

while the examination in civil law was going on i went out the room tired of my role as inspector
and there i saw the two of you talking under a tree with leaves lush like the curly hair of a healthy boy

we were talking about irrelevance priesthood and perhaps marriage the vagabond images of things fleeting and fleeing from our grasps like birds seeking warmer places in the East as winter approaches then there was silence perhaps we were having second thoughts about the words we let go off our mouths perhaps we do not believe really what was in our minds regrets, these feelings that waste us things-ought-to-be-this and that silently the hours sat with us groping for a hold about why and then the leaves fell because the wind blew and then we saw the moon exuding light

upon us the truths had long left and we find ourselves grappling with the fake delicacy of our lies.

we wanted to understand and be so discriminating we ought to be and yet we never did and something so misunderstood kept beating around the bush we chose not to because we really cannot.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Talk With A Silly Friend

someone is so unimportant and so you devote a tinge of time a splash of a gaze not making any noise
you make some nods
to acknowledge her your hands are uneasy grasping for something to touch inside your pocket your feet are wary there is no way that waiting is significant there is nothing in here except a silly talk your mind has wings and claws you hover for a while and then leave
forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Thought Of You

sometimes i think
i can love again
how i wish
to have that spark of this engine
this machinery of eternity
this love that must make me
travel more into ecstasy

sometimes i give up love and even hope

until you come into the domains of my life until i break all my walls until i shatter like a great wall
until the moon begins to speak to me until the grass has become green again
and then the rivers flow again filling the bed with its abundant water

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Treatise On Writing

if your problem is about what to write or how to write

if you still have the wish to be one good damn writer
aiming for awards imagining the night that is set for your recognition
on center stage adorned by their loud applause and standing ovations

i understand
you are young, full of hope, you are dressed with ambition your eyes are two suns your eyelashes
sleeping willows dancing with the chinese if not american winds

if your problem is how to begin then you are lucky enough to be another beginner

i am different
i have turned sour and bitter
i have become all that you do not wish to be with my problem is how to stop writing i am being grabbed by words i am being snatched by ideas who have become monsters to my existence on my head hangs the little devils biting my scalp pulling my hair commanding me to write every word hastily

when i was young i have mistaken them as cherubims

i have become a slave of all these letters they whip me as they ride upon their horses my wish is to stop
but i just can't my wish is to die
but i just can't it is not that smooth and easy to insult myself with a stab or a shot or drown myself with that kind of stuff shit on my hair

rocks in my heart
gnats on my bottom
worms in my skin
scars on my bones
bats in my eyes leeches all over my body

what do you see now?

i am skin and bones
my cheeks shrink to my gums my teeth are falling
i am humiliated by my previous ambitions
i am turning into dust

i am different
i am addicted to this stuff and i cannot stop
like

a train moving on unknown tracks without brakes a plane flying in unknown skies with the knowledge that its fuels are diminishing yet with nowhere to land forgetting what a perfect touchdown could have sounded
to the ears of the world

young as you are be happy that you are trying to begin that you are trying to think about what to write and when to start you are choosing beans from their pods diamond from sand

gold from mud
you are making bread from ordinary flours you shall drink the potion of time and it shall poison you do not be like us do not be like me

because we have known our beginnings it does not mean that we know where our destinations shall be

we have regrets having taken that beginning i shall not talk about them those ahead of me who to some horrible extent have taken their lives by their own hands blood spilling down to their bellies kissing the soles of their feet writing is a personal thing a matter that is kept a secret until the right moment comes

i shall talk about myself i am getting old, i am weary if you know my one and only wish you should not have started writing.

i know what you shall say ah, i can anticipate that I've been there. I am not crazy. I assure you, I've been, and shall always be real like the sun of your youth, oh like the moon of your dreams, oh like your usual stars of your ambitions like all your cliches, your redundancies, your misspelled words, your wrong choice of periods and commas, your doubts about the next line your way of screening your thoughts like sieves and sifts hoping that THEY may finally like you.... and your hopes that something in this world is not really that bad and empty and unkind

AFTER ALL.....it is now your turn. i wish all your best. regards to compassion.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Valentine's Treat For Her

we overslept
it is 7: 30 am
and she is still
asleep

tired of last night's activity, a chain of conversations but mostly about
nothing at all,

i go to the kitchen
to have my coffee
and then put it aside

got to scramble two eggs put the sandwich in the oven another mug on the table two plates
a knife and fork

a leaf of lettuce fried chicken breast from jolibee

when she wakes up breakfast is ready.

then i tell her
it is a lovely day.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Little Wonder

the place just below the wind trees undisturbed for so many generations a pool from the eye of the deer pine trees lining on the eyelids of the day you are not around and that is the time when i begin to discover these things solitude is the path that i have to tread now wondering where shall this silence take me

RIC S. BASTASA
A Locator, Father And Son

The way this little brown boy places Himself under a noonday sun

Is aesthetic, in such a way That his black hat shadows

His eyes like he is batman And his father so fond of Him feels so happy like He is his buddy robin.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lofty Undertaking....

Friday morning
the mists have not left yet the nipa groves

let us go to the sea and soak our bodies with its salt there is no wrong which we have to talk about

my head at the surface
my body immersed

the crystal clear water shows the colors of its fish the coral simmer in refraction the ripples show a journey here we do not talk we are like pilgrims immersed in the temple of our dreams how to love life i ask the sea is speechless

the sun slowly rises....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lonely Bird On The Electric Wire

this afternoon i take a walk leading to the farm it is harvest time and i see the harvesters cutting the rice stalks filled with golden grains they would group what they gather at a certain place mounds and mounds of rice grains this time of a bumper year on the other side are carabaos grazing lots of grass to graze adding the recently cut rice stalks i look at the clouds white and blue and shades of both my attention is however caught by a single bird perched on the electrical wire connecting two poles about 30 meters apart

it is alone there and i move closely to see whether it is really a bird indeed it is one of the sparrows in the ricefield but so unlike the rest it it is sitting there alone.

our eyes met.

and i tell my wife about this lonely bird.

she says i am just making a metaphor i sit alone in my garden now after dining and i wonder if the bird flew back to its nest or to some territory of its own where their species also live and i wonder if the bird must be also telling the other birds that it saw a man walking alone on that path leading to the farm and unlike other men he prefers to walk alone and i also think that perhaps the bird would also take issue about the fact that indeed

our eyes met
and i know the other birds would say that it is nothing but also a sort of metaphor and to the least that it is nothing but a kind of fable.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lonely Child

Carlo Betocci's child sits on a table and looks at the world outside through a glass window the view is too beautiful not to be touched the high distant mountains garnished by bluish clouds and fingers of the sun cressing the grassy plains too far and yet too beautiful the child couldn't help but caress the glass window with his palms

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lonely Reminder...

because i am a seed
i sprout
i make the bud
and then
i flower facing the sun i grow and i reach the apex of time and i know what follows
next is
the wilting of my flowers
the rotting of my roots
until i am gone
i know
i shall be back again into nothing

the seed in me comes
again
i know

i know.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lonely Woman

she sings her songs in the desert
time and again
those that hear her
under the moon
remember oasis
bridges and rivers
and seagulls and date palms
wild birds in the safari tigers and lions
with cubs
and forests never before imagines

such a sad woman
wanting to free her people from the loneliness of the dunes
the cruelty of the sun at noon

RIC S. BASTASA
A Long Long Time Ago

a long long time ago
i agree with you
is a long long time ago things perish
and those fragile like porcelain shatter into negligible pieces and on the ground everything may cover and conceal like the grass or the dust or even a heap of leaves and i
on this day of our meeting may also pretend that those of the past are of the past and shall no more arise and be ghosts that shall haunt me but no, you are face to face with me and we do not mention the word about it yet the lines of our thoughts show on the eyebrows and they speak about the pain the broken piece staying like a thorn, a fish bone, it is still refusing to leave and you are scratching it wanting for cure

RIC S. BASTASA
A Long Poem After A Tryst...

in my island
somewhere in Kota Kinabalu
lies my
heart

if you go there
take the backdoor
do not bring any papers
hide your name
lest there will be utter shame

if you find me
there
prepare for the curse
it may find you

to lose this curse wear a mask of a decent woman trader

use another common
name
just be an ordinary
lover
or concubine

take the kitchen door
do not take the entrance gate
do not step on the garden
avoid the garage
the light at the kitchen is constantly open like anything ready for another forgiving
do not mind it do not attempt to switch it off someone may die

take the secret passage direct to my room
it is never locked

it is not so well lighted it smells like a salad of chili and mint
do not be tempted by
it

come to me
kiss me at the back of my body
at the side of my ear let the kiss drop there let it run
and be fragile like a new born
butterfly
let it crawl
towards my spine
do not stop
it

let this ecstasy of hidden outbursts of island joys
run
to the tips of my toe
so that i can be another running river
towards the stormy sea....

do not attempt to use
words
for they are not necessary at least at this time of losing
my sanity

do not utter my name since you have no power over
me
i do not have to know you in this darkness of our hours

after this love this fire this smoke and haze

(if we want to see it that way) take what i have

for you
then leave me
on your tiptoes bringing
with you
your coverings and pair of shoes

you have not seen my face and you cannot say anything about this

this agony of secret joys this secret of our pains and longings still hidden from the scandals of your civilization from the books of love and lust

it will just be another poem that you cannot understand but you must have felt it like the sound of a closing door or the last page of a book like something that you can easily throw away dismiss like a story the way you

shrug off your shoulders and then walk away

RIC S. BASTASA
A Long Time Ago

we were children splashing water
on the river
our dialogues are nothing but laughter we put no blame on anybody

the wind our allies and the sun our god the moon our mother the caves our secret homes the sea our ancestors the land our father

that was long time ago now we have different names and we made them our enemies we shall miss those times we sit here gritting our teeth we sit here

on such loud noise
we wait for the promised destruction.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Long, Straight Line

it is a boring long, straight line you walk upon it like you are an emoticon changing the faces of a circle finding a way to find your true self you wish a blackout so the computer turns itself off. a blur happens.

everything ends.

it is still a boring long, straight line in your mind.
because you will it to be.
try sitting down, settle like a little bird perched on a twig on a sunny day

just watch what happens next.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Longer Poem For A Class Reunion

the latest picture we had
at the beach
in the afternoon of December 30

we have all changed into old people sort of saying we have deteriorated

Celina is loose
her tight skin gone
some teeth
except for the protruding one which makes her look like a rabbit is proud as the only surviving
hard object in her
worn body

Rosario is another story of failure
her lover left her at the point where she needed him most but what can she do he had also gone old
and had to be back to an ancestral house where her accommodating sister lives

Zuric is emaciated his eyes are like fallen grapes overripe
rotten but still sour his arms are weak and sometimes he does not really listen to what we are talking on the other hand i keep this denial did i not tell you that in my town only water buffaloes grow old?

it is a matter of happy disposition wearing a mask in a public place keeping that smile and activity but honestly when i arrive in the house i shed off everything and all i can do is kneel and pray that soon all these quibbling about life will soon be over.

at the beach the sun had began to set and we marvel at the beauty of its deep red hue changing to gray as it surrenders and dissolves in the horizon of dark blue and the coldness of the wind and the silence of the night as i begin to switch on the light in the wooden cottage

for us to finally see how an end looks like.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Look At Nature's Magnificent Painting

i see a slope of a hill filled with trees and grass
a pathway of human footprints climbs the hill in concentric circles a man leads his ass carrying a bundle of clothes a pregnant woman follows him above them is the full moon on the top of the hill is a little house roof of hay and walls of bamboos a tiny light flickers on the window it is wrapped by the coldness of the wind and somewhere you feel a certain orifice

of hope you cannot just pinpoint exactly where

RIC S. BASTASA
from a high mountain
a valley lies where the angels have just started singing as a choir
i hear the the strings of the lyre and then the trumpets and the flute in between the innocent lyrics of the angelic voices penetrating the chambers in our hearts we feel so light we are saved from the wreck of the sinking ships of the past we look forward to the refreshing gales to the touch of the gentle tendrils a certain sadness somehow starts to pain us a bit we are looking for you why are you not here with us?

why did you abandon us? why are you listening to the sound of death?
there must be answers and we are sad and waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lost Bird Hovering In The Middle Of Your Valley

for i am a lost bird that hovers in the middle of your valley there finding rest in your stoic non-mindedness where i am but an ordinary lost bird and just all the other birds that hover in the middle of your hidden valley i am but another
shadow of a bird that comes for the moment
and then
gone forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lousy Day

got a neck collar afraid of the water
the soap snugs
the shampoo seals
like a mouth not wanting a word

there is no comb
for the hair
strangled last night by hefty hands

half naked one
faces the monitor
without blinking

the toothbrush is dry the toothpaste is bitter

coffee is cold
and the rice smells
the bacon is not crisp
the table is dirty

three flies make a feast of the sunny side up egg

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Affair

i will not utter those words, i will be too cunning and barbarically dishonest,

i will be candid
all i have for you is lust the one that likes you today but throws you like a cigarette butt in a minute

the point is i like to touch every part of you and take it with me but it will only be for a while
i know myself

i always throw something as garbage after i have tasted a little bit of this and that you are the sun now and i am the worhiper you are too near and i will be burned but i will touch you just the same

i know myself
and i know my limits

i am a wall myself impenetrable by your unintentional seduction

i ride with time with you and i have feasted in you even without looking
i know myself
i have my own selfish ways i eat you and i have swallowed every piece of you

and you do not know it
now you are a part of my body and all my organs are shouting victorious

you dissolve in me i am a wide and winding river duodenal

but it will only be for a very short time i am always quick to discard you and no one

no one really knows.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Forbidden

it is about a love
forbidden
when the two
of us
decided to break the rules
written in stone
by our ancestors

we dare
them all
one night
we do not speak any word
yet we understand what we both want we both need it
we wait
for the mutual release
of feelings
inside us

we release them like doves
deep in the night

we are restless
then
we finally find this bliss and do
its dictates
like a hidden code
pre-stitched in our skins

there is
no word
to describe it, there is no word that we can utter

we feel justice is now inside us, there is no regret, there is no feeling of being wasted

we are inside this dream and we do no wish waking up again

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Gone

and so she looks at an old picture
again
telling me
that whatever it was there is nothing anymore

love is gone
not even pity but just plainly lookin' & usin'

like a tissue
for her daily ritual
with the bowl
on early
mornings

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Life

after the short tryst he leaves her and she is left alone

to reminisce
his sweat sticking to her skin his perfume on her breast and thighs

her tears
do not have the intention to wash all these memories away her tears of joy

again on a soliloquy

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Poem #1

I really like
To write you
A love poem
Someday
One that Looks like the Shadow of A young man
Fishing out
To the sea
And spreads
His net and Paddles his Way around
A school of Fish and then
He waits
For a while Dreaming
Only about
You

Then he Sees a seagull Encircling
Above his Head flying
Over him
And then

Hovers
On the side
Of his Boat like Looking for a Fish

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Poem For My Wife

When the time comes That I become a very sick man, Unable to do the usual things Expected of myself and the demands Of your sweet society, when I no longer smell What men smell of women Their underwear and underarm Deodorants titillating to our masculine Desires, when I no longer find Motels as interesting places To make more stories or Those dark secret places of two hearts Where names and age and reputations Are irrelevant, when the time comes For me to kneel and pray and Find the usual places for solitary Old men facing the final curtains Of the play, please my dear Be gentle with me,
I may have lied, and pursued What made you mad
But you must know the eulogies Of the rotten flesh and Distinguish it from the hymnal truth
Of the spirit
I am not afraid to profess I have not loved so true Other women than you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Poem For Today

we were meant to be,
we made a pledge of love under the fullness of the moon the North Star is our witness we got separated Fate has its reasons

we do not know
how it happened

how could i love you and yet decide to leave and love another? how could i betray you and marry another one instead?

Fate has its reasons
I do not know how it happened.

All i know is this: You will be happier
If it were not me.

I have less and i cannot give you more.
I have loved you more and cannot afford to give you less.

You deserve to be happy. I don't.
Forget me then for I have hurt you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Scene

let me hold your hand so i can take you there on a chair
i spread my legs and look up to the sun above us you kneel and i be your god for this moment you root yourself to earth like a sunflower you shed your leaf you bow down like a slave you find my treasure my dews for now i became the shape of another a leaf am i consume me, you worm!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love So Short Of Time when we kiss

i close my eyes
and think
of you not as
forever

how i wish to have immortality

no, the warmth of your lips
does not last a lifetime

no, the hold of your arms
will be lost in a minute

no, this ecstasy will only be for a second

i smell you
i feel you running all over me like a river
you cover all of me like you are the sea and the sky

for a while i am
lost in vast space with me are all the stars in heaven

and then when this kiss is over
i look at you
your face is all flesh and cheekbone
and you lips close
there is no word
there is no need
to say anything

how short
love can be yet i feel it
throughout my universe!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Song...

before the lights are turned off in their bedroom
he sings her a love song....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Story

it came, and i was blinded with so much lovely light, when i was already bound to the bonds of matrimony, but i want it, and i call it a new home, but i do not want to destroy an old home, where i have invested so much of myself, where pain and pleasure mated, but this is a very nice feeling, taking me back to an age of sixteen, i whistle the tune of a lover like a bird on a tryst somewhere in a forest tree, where there is complete secrecy, this is it, another form of love, another encounter, back to a new line, i am myself again, full of life, but retaining a duality of two homes, old and new,
in one self, with you with her with us: trois!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love Story Retold That Perhaps You Have Read Before

i: seed sprouts, a head cover removed detached he recalls an island and two shadows entwined under the spell of the full moon mesmerized, exhausted, dreaming, sweet sleep, lovers passionate about sweat and tight flesh she remembers the embers and the cold darkness the emptiness filled by his moans and the quivers of her desires silenced all her senses awakening to the wonders of togetherness and wanton touches lips upon lips weight upon her helplessness amidst the ruins of her seduction ii: time flies as a swift bird stones covered with dust and humus he said she was part of his past now that he is old and ugly and helpless in poverty with a young, native woman caring for him he remembers something sad as separation of two intimacies a distance of two words opposed meanings she said she had forgotten him her first love she said she lives alone in the land of many winters and knows how to take care of herself she said she is happy and now so free

she says the apple trees in time shall bloom a daughter sits under it and she takes her picture iii: the sun rises in the east, that is a fact the storm subsides, one gropes for therapeutic metaphors along the silent nooks of the shores and then the reunion of clauses and phrases wanting to have complete thoughts he told her things may be lost and people may be hurt but chances are there are rainbows sometimes that reconnect hearts bridges that dissolves distances he told her that some missing pieces are found some chains of love become a necklace of reunions and reconciliations he did not tell her though because it is so hurting

that he did not really love her that whole enough when he made love to her on that island of desire he was thinking of another one his true love that once broke his heart many years ago when once he was whole and true and young and honest and real when he met her he did not tell her he was such a shattered glass with splinters all spread on the bottom of the ocean floor

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love That Cannot Be Forgotten

i switched you off like a light bulb at eleven o'clock in the evening

the sofa and the carpet on the floor
are dead
asleep

you still shine brightly blinking like neon lights in the Christmas park

inside
my mind
in the middle of my own darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
A Love That Does Not Die

early morning
how can birds be seen inside this room?
how can an agnostic be so definite about the blueness of the skies?

early morning
there is no sun here where i have sacrificed so much about writing

and i think of you because i have loved you

such thoughts
grow flowers in the fertile fields of my tongue my eyes become suns my ears twin mountains from my palms birds nest and lay their eggs in my heart
another universe is born

inside this room
the door shall not be opened

RIC S. BASTASA
A Loveless Poem

on top of me
you proclaim your glory

you moan
in sweet agony

you hold my hair
like i am your slave

you lay your soul like i am only a thigh

you push me like two legs
of a male body

you close your eyes
and claim
myself as another conquered territory

i look at the ceiling looking for leaks

i grip the blanket
on the side of the bed groping for confidences

i go inside myself asking my soul
if a love poem
is possible.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lovely Evening

when you finally give up and put the ring on the table and you shed some tears and say a goodbye and when i am finally left alone staring at the darkness when the moon is covered by the storm when i cannot hear anything because the typhoon begins to rage i can decide and always say upon myself that despite all these things
i can still look forward to another lovely evening

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lovely Pair

i think i shall never see a lovely pair as be Ms. Tai Chi of Italy
& Mr. Taylor Butts of the USA,

When she comes
he utters her name
to heaven he goes

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lovely Thing To See

It is a lovely thing to see
In this room
My sperm spreading like a cloud
In your dark galaxy

RIC S. BASTASA
the story of our meeting is quite a long one i do not even know where to start it:
the mall, or the beach or the lobby of this hotel by the sea where you have seen my body and i know with the way you look at me from the tip of my hair to the tip of my toe you desire
what i have

you think
i have so much to give you for the night where we can just be two exploring the contours and curves and islands of some hairs and rivers in our arms and soft grasses on our bellies hills on your breasts, plains on my chest and i look at you too, i am fond of deep seated eyes that twinkle like some tiny stars, chinky, and warm i gaze at your face, shining gently like the moon of the night over the cool marshes the sound of geese subsiding finally

inside my heart

of course, your body too is one island filled with desire and bursting energy, like volleyball players under the sun and i confess i like it and want to taste it and even eat it, like i have turned into one cannibal or wanting to be one, at least on that first meeting at the lobby of the hotel by the sea (was it named Caprice? or Escape or Hideaway?)

yes, the lobby of this hotel by the sea, and we decide to share a room, get some drinks, you like the vodka, and you want me to want the vodka and i take the vodka from your hand, and we all drink the vodka, and we were carried by the vodka like hypnotized kids by this magician
to the heavens,

we do what we can to give meaning to the meeting and the mating and the loving (though we suspect this matter, takes time i suppose, takes time, you tell me, this is just a matter of sharing bodies, sort of)
that was nice, i like it, and you are telling me, your first time, and you really like it too, sipping not spitting, lipping and licking, and caressing hair, mostly hair, and running fingers on my loins, night, dawn, dusk, early morning, where boats still dock on the white sandy shore, coconut trees, leaves no ripples of the wind cigarette butts wet by lips unwashed by the tide

then it is over, it ends at the lobby of the hotel by the sea, you wear a bleached buri hat with a blue ribbon, and thick sunglasses, and you are carrying a bag, checking out talking to the billing section while the van waits taking you to the airport and me too, by the lobby of the hotel by the sea, and we part i'll take the boat back home we tell each other finally, not looking intently now (what intent really? on diminishing interest after the sharing of some natural resources) take care.

(i do not even bother to say: till we meet again)

RIC S. BASTASA
A Lute By Edward Martin

did i ever see mother dance like a little girl
when she was alive?
did i ever see her laugh like a lovely little girl once when she was alive and was
with us all
in that small house?
did we ever wonder why we did not see her at all smile as though we were friends and not as her children all i remember was that she told us stories before we sleep and crowd in that small bed covered by a white cloth mosquito net

she was telling us about some ghosts
who will eat all of us because we refuse to sleep early

because she still had a lot of other things to do some lesson plans
to write
some letters for her mother
some loan applications to accomplish
some prayers
to recite
while father
waits for her
in another room.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Man

he is a young man. Tall and smooth and admired by Time and favored by tolerance. He walks briskly along the city street, and goes inside a place where the flowers of his youth are being admired.

young women recite him as a love verse, his eyes become their visions his muscled sensuality, his tight body stir the imagination of those who want to be beautiful too till the end of this busy day.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Man By Emma Z.

this is a picture of you my man, on white brief, masculine body, strong,
firm arms, gentle eyes
determined eyelashes, bold fingers, drinking
a hot cup of coffee,
well cut hair, shaven face, smooth skin, hair on the slab of his skin, firm legs easy on the floor, calm nipples, peaceful on the sofa,
waiting for me.

yet i still ask for more when he steps out of my door i may cry a little bit three or four tears are enough for a decent parting a little time for mourning a pint of vodka to shake him off from my system tonight, i'll make a call another man enters my door into my womb, my system filled with his spurts i stoop, i kneel, i worship this man i lick every dropp of him and then he goes again at dawn, fitting in his black underwear back to his pants and polo sliding his belt buttoning his pants

zip his pocket

yet i ask still for more to fill this emptiness of my being they are all men that step in and out of my door

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive hinges still strong and intact i am suspended so well between the space and the frame i am a woman. They are just men.

I swallow and spit them all.
i vomit and swallow them all again. this is the cycle of my skepticism.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Man In A Small Town

a man in a small town
is easy to spot
less this two front teeth he stares at you busy wit a laptop checking g in for the next cebu pacific flight for manila

it is funny he looks at as though you are another rich god in his dusty world which perhaps he wants to escape

RIC S. BASTASA
A Man In Red Shirt

day morning
a man in red shirt
balancing a pole
with pails on both ends is making calls for those who want to buy
his delicacies.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Man Like Me

last night
under the moon
the black bird
sings again

it is predicting chaos
i drive it away
and it senses
that a man like me is crazy

RIC S. BASTASA
A Man Of Few Words

i wish that today i will be a man of few words,

and if there be fewer than a man of few words,

i will grab it still,

but we were already born with all the inconsistencies

i was once a small baby with that loudest cry

my mother said when i was still in the hospital room perhaps this wish is nothing but an affirmation of what i want to be and what i am really not.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Man That Of Course You Do Not Know after having read a lot of books and written a novel and a thousand poems even nominated for the Nobel he comes home gathers us all

in his big new house gives us our drinks and come slices of cakes and he begins his first lecture on how to perform a funeral

RIC S. BASTASA
A Man, And Something Within

a man cannot say about what he sees, sometimes, he merely gazes at it, and then either he stays or leaves, he touches the hand of the wind and does not tell you what he feels, his mouth is dry and his hair follows where the wind goes he keeps a lot of somethings inside, one that makes him feel a stone

nothing drips, nothing flowing steady as a post

without light

during the night, without fear he expels shame

and then he goes back

takes that.... something and does not say

at all anything

RIC S. BASTASA
it is just three days
but here i am
and it is like three long years this absence

shall remember the intensity of not being incomplete

the sad room cannot put to sleep the restless sea
as it enters invincibly in a closed door

something is choking being and being has to walk away and be with the crowd on those city lights along the multitude of lonely people who at 2 o'clock dawn still roams
the corners of the mind

one must see a shrink they advise you
that need to lie down on a sofa and to begin talking about
anything

it is like a thread and you are crawling like an insect
like a dropping teardrop feeling the
dryness of the cheek

finally i give up sleep and till morning
i think upon what is happening the sad fact is that nothing really happens from the way they are seeing you calm, clueless see without a rock a fish

placid, brown skin without a crease of a trauma someone looks at you like a god
but there you are a wall

you accept and then you put silence in your pockets the sockets sink
you are getting nonsensical talking without a clue as to the meaning
of your
sighs

all these are but the conversations of the soul losing its faith about
a body
a map that is found in paper spread on the floor and being washed away by the rain that seeps and penetrates
the holes of the roof

RIC S. BASTASA
A Marble Head Of A Handsome God In The Museum

only those who have the money can afford this trip.
now we are all guided to the site of an old and famous country
somewhere in Europe.
inside the museum is the head of David (is he a god? someone asks) i am amazed to the stone curl of his hair and the smooth white marble stature
before me.

there is no crack.
the greatness persists.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Marriage Ceremony

i know even for the very first time that i have seen them. when the groom lifted the white veil to kiss her lips she hesitated to close her eyes his lips did not tremble in excitement at the last second when his lips touched hers he closed his eyes but very briefly the touch was minimal and then he took away love back into his mouth reverberating to his heart where indifference is beginning to seed.

how i wish i could understand this ritual this institution of fusion where energy can not and can never be stored potential at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Matter Of Decision

the black bird of loneliness hovers over the window of the house and stops to look at our roof

we shoo it away
there is no place here where it can build its own nest we still wait for the bird of bounty the one that brings us the eggs of grace

the feathers of happiness

it is the only bird that we welcome here as a matter of our own decision

RIC S. BASTASA
A Matter Of Perspective, Actually...

they are all ahead of you they think so but you are heading to the opposite direction and you look back and you are all far,
far and far behind you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Matter To Choose To Write This Morning

guess i want something simple and yet something beautiful worth an hour or less than that for my morning

i think
i shall take the usual walk and take a look at the flowers
not picking any
along the road

i promise myself
a little rest in my mind something relaxing
something to unwind
my tangled nerves
a smooth breath
to fill the cravings of my lungs

this time
nothing to mention
about the affairs of my heart

nothing
about the two of us

RIC S. BASTASA
A Meaningful And Happy Morning

what brought you here to this meaningful day? what smile has been given to your blissful morning?

ahh! it was about last night that was filled with love that brought my morning singing ahh! it was you beside me cressing my body watering it with love that brought me here to this whistling morning it is only a matter of linking a wonderful night to a promising day an exciting night to a lively morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Meaningless War....

I've seen
how a jet

(was it a fighting jet?
or a missile perhaps?) cuts a wound in the sky leaving a bleeding

smoke

of emptiness
of this

world which is always on its

fighting mood

i shake my head
like a pendulum

reminding us of the wasted hours

this meaningless
wars

over lands that float in space.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Memorable Strawberry

a strawberry in my hand is just another strawberry in the farm nothing special
there is no bliss in there inanimate red berry and even if i am hungry and i eat it it is still nothing to me and you who see it shall notice nothing and just let another day pass like a number in a page of your calendar,

but that strawberry on the floor from your lips which you once held tenderly between your fingers as you lay naked in bed teasing me on that night of the lonely hearts and when you bit it a little leaving what is more luscious juicy
and sweet in your mouth your tongue peeping
like a snail

and you let it go
like a red butterfly from your
soft hands
and it falls and rolls on the floor and then stops near you lingerie

that strawberry half consumed still lingers in my mind, perhaps forever unforgotten it is special, very special.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Memory

my white hair
always speak of you

it is your beauty
that it brags

to my forehead whose furrows

lead me to a pond
of sweet memories

the ripples there
speak of the rain

and the rain sings
about this pain

the pain shows me
a scar

the scar remembers
the wound

that you inflicted and i was that man who believed that once love existed.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Memory Of 1980, 14th Day Of February

14th, February, 1980

at the university chemistry laboratory
the last experiment
of the year

loveless and too careless

she sent a rose
i did not bother

she called on the phone i was not there

she was loveless
in an island

i was too busy in my thesis for my last year i sent her the card without telling her that it's goodbye her friends had to leave her each had the love partner on that day i was alone in the lab without any love

too many sacrifices not worth remembering

a heart broken beyond repair

a soul wandering still lost with the black raven too many years of pain nothing really gained

RIC S. BASTASA
A Memory Of A Red Strawberry

remember me as summer better still a refreshing summer wind from a green mountain remember me as summer
summer strawberry red, red strawberries
from your fingers to your mouth to your tongue sweet, sour, and luscious, remember me, better remember me as summer, wind, green mountain, strawberry, red and luscious staying in the grassy fields of your heart and mind

remember me as past summer wind as a mountain gone, as grass wilting, as strawberry consumed each flesh digested all within

RIC S. BASTASA
A Message For The Mourning Beloved...

every morning
i write

but not for you
today

every morning is a sacrifice

an offering for the goddess of
truth

every morning is
an exercise of honesty

the night may still be on that stage of denial

i may write for you
soon

i do not wish you
to read for now

it will be
incredible
nothing is worth believing

for the meantime that the words are still constructed

what you see actually is not what you get there is a ripe fruit for the season & it will be for your personal
picking

tomorrow is the best place for you
to fathom the depths of my suffering

you lay in bed crying and you wipe your tears

the thoughts will come like sunshine on the window

then you will have a hint
of me

and you follow it like a bird flying away to a faraway hill

towards a cave
where darkness is a little bit
mixed

with light and shadows and creeping sounds of bats & glowing worms

then you shall understand what everything in me is all about

you see
you can only understand the past when you have arrived at the room of the future
when what you remember of me is only the wind what what i am to you is no longer a star.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Message For You

fly me a pigeon
to show me land,

draw me again
the tilted world

send me words,
winged birds,

sound the pulse
show me life.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Message From Us All Here with childhood memories our hearts shall grow tender this christmas season

of the year

rekindle this love of kindred
and even foe

we shall become like children again in spirit, in kindness
this time of christmas

RIC S. BASTASA
A Message To B.

you break the cordon
i try to reconnect but you have decided to break it just the same

i do not force myself i am the uninvited but i am not at fault

it is you
and so what time shall i waste
again with you?

precious things are lost
not mea culpa
relationships are broken
not mea culpa

i am back to the hills of my childhood
flying kites
picking pebbles

and
catching cold.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Messy Life...

this house where we live is just a train station and we are the trains always leaving to places leaving smoke and splinters of our steel wheels

then when the real time comes for change we only become passengers moving and moving and waving hands the train station becomes a mark that we soon forget in the books on broken ears and folded pages but we do not remember any page not even the idea of the character that we claim to have loved that much things are messy really but who cares? we look forward to the flashes of hills and towns everything fades

like overused denims.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For 59

when i do not enter the door of the house the lady There goes mad and tells me
that i am the most useless man in the world

as a gentleman i keep my mouth shut enters the door of my dreams
and then
take my most needed
sleep

AND there my Angel says Life is Beautiful....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For A Funeral

indeed it is wonderful to entertain that constant idea that beds are made for sex,
but i must be deluding myself for a long time as time swiftly corrects me
and so shortly, that beds in fact are made more for the resting place of the sick and the dying, the anxious and the depressed, the restless people engulfing one pill to another to get the blessings of sleep soon it will become another metaphor for
a funeral
and euphemism
for death.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For Dedication.

here he is trying to hone a craft, like, grinding the knife on a stone thinking of an enemy, its name is boredom trying to sharpen the tongue, in the name of accuracy, like the lashes of the sticks upon a rock, its style is punishment, but surely, there is always a reason why, like loving someone, suffering and ready for the next cut, the breaking of another morning, from a dark room, where two shadows dance alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For Gentle Secrets

the clothes are washed and hanged
and dried and ironed
and then
folded neatly inside the cabinet inside
your room
and then locked.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For Happiness

i throw morsels
of rice
in the golden pond
where orange spotted kois satisfy their hunger

rings of restlessness after a while gone

silky water

upon a reed a red and blue dragonfly
rests

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For Lando

he never attends a kid's party in Lincolnshire

he has no story to share
there

when he took time scurrying in Phil looking for a solution

he wanted to buy the kid and then the elder one bade goodbye while caressing the hair of the little sibling

he went back to England empty handed and
crying

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For Lent

get the broom
and the duster and the trashcan

my dear,
it is time to sweep
and clean our rooms....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For Love

love is not like the river that moves on the banks of the mountains seeking that convenience of least resistance

love rushes in like a flood that takes everything that it takes and loses them all to the big ocean

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For My Face....

i pass by the wall
where a picture of a face is hung,

something that i cannot just pass through towards the door and not look back at it
again

just a few seconds
i tell myself
i touch the face again
and sigh

it is mine it was a face then when i was at your young age

i was reckless in that one
it was a set of wasted eyes
of luscious lips
that took so many kisses
and let go all not keeping
one

i leave the picture now another time wasted on such a beautiful face as mine

i must go to places then where all mirrors
are broken

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For Myself.....

early afternoon
i undress and walk towards the water it is a gray moment i wade into the water it is clear

and i can see some fish and sand at the bottom

i am alone
it is too peaceful away from everyone

the water is lukewarm derived from noon
and the shore is too private
to myself

the trees are still and the cottage has an eye
staring at me from afar

i swim farther, into the depths
floating

there are no seagulls a ship with a smoke shears the far horizon

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For Platonic Love... between Sam and Rey is a dog named Jude a greyhound

ey cannot leave the house
together
or else the dog will die inside the bathroom

in bed
Jude lies between them it is the beast
that separates them
for a while

it is this beast
that has given them
temporary
pleasure

no, do not misinterpret this story
for a bestial ecstasy it is not in their minds neither in their acts

if one has to leave then one must stay
come winter
come spring

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor For Weariness

Our distance is getter farther like an old weary boat departing from the ruined port of Neither/Nor
to a journey that will take it ten years
or even more,

the irony is that we still sleep together in the same
water
bed our butts meeting sometimes and toes slowly crawling like ants back to their hill.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor Is Easy To Make

a metaphor is easy to make
and so easy to recall

remember the cat's feet like a fog
leaving softly the harbor in the city?
remember a misery that jumps like a flea &
bites you and you cannot sleep
and you say life is like that
a flea

remember
you think of time as a growing child
a man,
a wild man running and chasing
virgins that must make most of their time
because
time is a-flying and
the rose that blooms today
tomorrow
may be dying

remember time in a bottle

remember life like a fruit fly trapped
trying to figure
out how to escape
and you say life is like that
a fruit fly

remember death
like a woman sleeping in her chambers
closing the curtains
and you say
death is like that
a mere closing of a curtain

just like that

remember how
loneliness is like a steel tunnel
you get in there,
some birds hover and fly away from you
you get in there,
and there seems to be no light visible
at the end

loneliness

life is like that

you see
metaphors and dissect every vein
every artery
every bone and
cartilage of
these metaphors that you
say do not exist
in prose

, , , , , , , , , that you say do not exist in my prose

mine is not poetry
mine is a poverty of poetry
and you claim
yours is the basket the cornucopia of true poetry

good for you, you are the prima donna
of this
dance
this quibble in poetry

it does not matter

give me some metaphors
about poverty, discrimination, meaninglessness,
purposelessness,
non-being, the metaphysics of early death
a being-in-distress
an addict
a streetchild
a battered wife
a cruel father
a hypocirte priest
an embittered professor
a disgruntled student
give me some metaphors about
corruption, lying presidents, secret killings

you are the master of metaphor
you are the queen of slave
metaphors

so be it.
make me a poem to the strictures of metaphor
give poems a strange face
a hybrid of dog and man

make them read and not understand
delude them
give them illusions
confusions

make them baffled, submissive, uncritical, uncomplaining complacent,

bewilder them to your secret,
derivative and too personalized
metaphors

and you are happy
they do not understand a thing

and they will believe that you are God.

for those that we do not understand
we call it mystery
we call it metaphor
we call it

unquestionable.

let the oppression stay.
let the discrimination live in the metaphors that you have made.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Metaphor Of Shared Joy

two little girls
sharing a red lollipop

as the little girl with a kinky hair
licks the top
the other girl with two dimples
giggles

inside my mind
i laugh thinking dirty (grrr)

RIC S. BASTASA
A Microcosm

inside your room
you grow something dark and dry every day you water it with your sighs you do not want to make yourself a part of the other worlds outside you they lurk and they had always harmed you
for once
they have taken all that you have
and it is enough

there is a new lock and it is safe you tell yourself there is a leak and light finds itself in your hand it stays there for a while and it looks at you you look at it again it is telling you something that outside there is so much light that you have not seen yet there is a world more beautiful than yours that it is waiting

that all these simply depends on the decision of your ten fingers.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Microcosm Of Maunday Thursday's Murder

on a maunday Thursday my goat was badly bitten by the dog of my sister-in-law

dead upon their arrival from church, my nephew reports that they were lax into believing that a domesticated dog can still kill an innocent goat, my sister did not bother saying oh it is just a goat and you can never blame the dog because it is simply doing it by instinct i told my neighbor who likes goat meat to eat it and asks him if he likes dog meat

too

my nephew blames the church my sister blames the dog

i do not like goat meat and so i never blame anybody.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Microwave Oven

breakfast
microwaved
sandwich and coffee. it is flat like sylvia.

plath, sick
genius.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Minute

a minute late
is a year of waiting for the woman
that i love

RIC S. BASTASA
A Minute Ago

just a minute ago
i hear the church bell ringing inviting me to hear mass this Sunday

i decide to just stay in the house sit on an easy chair open my personal computer read the news of the day about the typhoon coming somewhere in Luzon learning about a wannabe president of this republic advised by a rival to quit smoking have some charm talk like a leader and walk like a true leader to pause on some speeches not to cough in between and marry.

something unpoetical too early in my cold morning is creeping in the marrow of my bones

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mirror Of You

I make a mirror
of you
and you see me
naked

i am beautiful
in the dusk
as beautiful as you in the
dark

sooner, we become dogs
in love with our tails

we spin around
the corners of our
dreams

i follow you and then i hold you
my tongue is yours
my hands too

later, we shall feel how dams break out how waters escape
how pools of water
become rivers
how swamps become flooded waters

this is the journey of two wooden boats without rudders
without sails.
A Mission For You

oppression is a ring

you want to solve it?

trace its beginning
so you can figure out its end

pinpoint the cause
so that you may find the cure

segregate effects from causes

find a ring and feel it

locate the mark
find the boundaries

if you can.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Misunderstanding

night comes like a zombie and it sleeps with
you and
though the bed
has been cleaned and perfumed
the hours turn into stinking skunks

somehow you know how to maintain that poise
of a creature
with beautiful eyelashes and soft hands
still skin to the pillows
madly in love
with that gift of
sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mockery

how does it feel to be mocked at?
children chase you and laugh at you,
and call you crazy

you react, you want to be a child and wanting to play and they mock you further you're big enough to be their monster cookie your friends say there is something wrong with you in fact, everything is wrong your nose not in its place and your face is twisted at your back they say this man is crazy

he must be reported to the police one day you find your family disregarding you you have become Kafka's cockroach and shall suffer the same fate

as his short story

you are shooed
and outside you go you walk by the side of the river and still whistle like a man disregarded by the world a cockroach, a pig, a crazy man on the street returning to the big mountain deep in the forest where no one sees you you look at yourself on that still pond in the middle of this valley you wonder

it is their face you are the children playing you are the image of your family and they all look crazy too in that solitude

you become yourself away from them sane and yes, too poetic to behold laurels on your head flowers in your hair dews on your skin
song in your lips

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mole In My Face

with what is happening in our political arena

(i am speaking of my philippines my philippines)

the mole in my cheek has become a curse

whatever good i do becomes suspect.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Moment

dressed up you step out of the door waiting...

you stand
lean of the light post
for an hour,

that is the moment
of your life

waiting...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Moment Of Bliss...

lazily he bathes his body with morning sunlight,

tinking about nothing

it's cool.

to be just a floater
a leaf with nowhere to land

feeling so light
like a joyful emotion

smooth and clear
blending with air

and space and nowhere

it's cool and it is making him feel so good

RIC S. BASTASA
A Monochrome Poem

IT will talk about an absence in the same manner that he talks about it when you are together

about a job about to come when
he does not know but for the meantime he stays with you
for support

he once tells about a woman who jumped from atop the cathedral
hitting her head on the lamppost below
not only sad
but horrible
brains scattered on the pavement blood spurting like a fountain

so much self-inflicted
violence

one thinks about the noise of the monochromatic life outside the window
thinking that there is someone there that you know who like you also looks for life

a job that did not come the decision to come home but when
that i do not really know
with you
for the meantime everything is still on the meantime
we wait
hopefully for something not as violent
not as horrible as the cathedral story.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Monologue To Love

love
i like to love you like love why do you hurt me
at the end?

love?
what do you expect of me?
why do you give me hope?
only to push me at the edge of the cliff
and then i fall and get crushed
like a splattered melon
on the ground

love
i had once an ecstasy of you love i have loved you and you loved me too

just once
just once
a long time ago
and then it was over

RIC S. BASTASA
A Monologue To Sadness

you touch me and i shiver and i feel so shaken i am like a building of light materials bamboo-like, i feel that i am falling to the ground, you're an earthquake my clouds are heavy and i am about to rain. i hold things on a grip, like bolt and screw, not giving up, not letting go, you're sadness and i am your favorite object, a pebble to your palm, a flower to your hair,
a hand gripped by the hand of another,

'why do you always go with me? ' i am a nobody.
'i love you', you answer me.

I want to run away, i want to have the feet of a gazelle.
and you become the wind behind me.
I shed tears, i never expect to be weak, and then you give up on me.

' i miss you' i send you flying kisses.
' Hypocrite' she says. She packs up her clothes.
'Be happy! ' my last words.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Moral Poem....

the sound of rain
heavy on my brain

double pleasures
inside these fissures

the insistence of quiet the urge of flight

another episode of avoidance in preference of this dance neuter to the world of lust morality is still the must.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Chat With You

a morning chat with you
sweet nothings
words of concern
like the simplest hello and little talks about
anything
something that has nothing to do with burdens
something so light
like a trivial nonsense, a casual conversation beside my cup of coffee
at the veranda
on a window overlooking
the sea
with outlines of the mountains stretching a line on a horizon of blue and gray

like sunshine on my shoulder and then i dress myself and face my own wars
out there

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Flash

it comes as a flash.
A body.

At first it is just lines and curves.
There is no minding at all about anything else.

Then follows the scent that compliments its newly acquired existence its desirability enhanced by the warmth of morning hues by the window of the house.

The scent brings in some memories of youth some places of the heart like a grassy hill and an abandoned hut faraway.

After a while it is not just the body but the tongue and palms.

The mind starts to creep in like a cloud and sunshine from the south.

IT demands something more It is not just these memories and feelings those touches of hues and colors and scents
and eventually taste.

And then the movement.

It coils around you
This psyche
This soul and then you go deeper into a form
of regret.

This is not the body that you like But the lines and curves of some long forgotten circumstances that want to be repeated
too often but can never be

Because there is only one body one soul
and it is not there
anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning From The Top Of The Mountain

it is like i am ashore with waves of mist and clouds reversing and then

upon a clear sky
the sun arrives with its golden cloak of silk spreading on the face of this mountain where i slept
alone

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Greeting

good morning, my friend hope you're fine like the smooth morning rays of the sun on soft hands caressing the shiny brown skin of my face did you sleep well last night? let me ask if you have dreams that make waking up a regretful event i am out now for my usual walk to see the usual rising of the sun on the golden ricefields on the road leading to a group of nipa huts i am asking myself today: is there meaning to this usualness this routine that comes to us without any break? is there something new to the sun that we always expect to shine?

is there a twist to the usual chirps of birds, the usual white color of their wings?
is there something better to do than walk and think the usual thoughts of how to make a living and be the fit person to survive this war on boredom

this struggle for meaning this monotonous routine of this and that and this and that and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that and this and that there is no stuttering here, nothing symptomatic of sickness and even death, there is this boredom again that will make us not sleep the nights and make us uneasy and restless and asking some more what is this life? what is it giving me? what am i giving it? how long?

just asking, i am returning to the house from this short walk there is no music in my ears more questions popping

i will just take tea
i need really to pee.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Idea

when you arrive this morning i am already prepared for whatever you say and would want me to do i have changed clothes, washed my face combed my hair, and ready to go with you wherever and whatever happens I am waiting
and you are so silent
looking over the window facing the sky blue sea and the flying white seagulls, since i respect you

i sit beside you and i will not ask
why

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Moment

the old woman wrapped in wrinkled skins
passes by the garden of daffodils
tended by my wife
in her mid-forty the usual good morning are exchanged she is shaky and i think her bones rattle her back arched perhaps like a gate of the chinese temple in macau

the daffodils do not appease her anxieties anymore her children gone on lives of their own their own children and affairs are their own concerns now she walk away carefully and slowly to avoid another fall i can see and hear my wife has again sighed three times to the wind

as she looks upon one wilting daffodil which she thinks is infested by a fungal colony...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Poem

darkness again fades away slowly light comes as a dilution the leaves turn from gray to green and what is hazy becomes jazzy.

the crowing of the cocks and the silence of the pavements the shadows of the trees and the silhouettes of the mountains the opening of the windows the coming of the breeze your hands stretch to embrace another day another beauty your heart sings a prayer

God is here.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Poetry Ritual

what comes in let it enter

i always will each precious hour in the morning

these are guests that feed us and not us feeding them

these are the carriers of bounty the harbingers of good news the doors are open and so are the arms

the hands are ready
the monitor is awake

and then the fingers start to press the words.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Resolution

to wake up so early and then sit idly by the window contemplating upon the gray world outside;
the shadows of trees
the coldness of air
the sweet scent of the coming light

reinventing life
for another
start.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Reunion

we keep dogs out
at night
as they are guards of the house the morning is always a reunion of my dachshund

waiting at the door jumping for my tap of the hand and eventual embrace

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Song (2) ...

a sparrow
lands upon
a twig
of the guava
tree
beside a bunch of ripeness
and then i hear
the song
this morning

a sparrow flies
away
and then i begin to remember

luscious sweetness
light wings
the coolness of green......

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Song...

a sparrow
lands upon
a twig
of the guava
tree
besides a bunch
of ripeness
and then i heard
the song
this morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Talk

the sounds of the cicada
at dawn,

the buzzing sound of the computer,

the wind outside the coldness of the mountain breeze within my mind,

comes rushing the music of the next lines predominant is still the

silence
of this being

within us
always wanting to be heard

RIC S. BASTASA
A Morning Walk Along The Boulevard Of New Dreams the fresh air

sea breeze of hope
hands freely stretched synchronized with the fallen feet
this morning walk in the boulevard of new dreams

begin again like what you did always before.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mosquito....

a mosquito bites my toe but i am busy looking at the stars let it bite suck some of my blood, let its thirst be quenched and let it go away and breed and live in the places of the heart let there be no dots and dashes and commas and periods a semicolon may even destroy the existence of my colon

my hands do not strike a mosquito they are my pillows my maps of destinations my fingers my words let not that mosquito see the giants we're not

let it live and find its gods
we're not

we're just here as the outpouring of our rain as factual mountains

we are ' living trying to distinguish creativity from self-destruction' who placed us there is never our wish who put our names is never our command we are but landslides of our weaknesses slips of our rashness morning soliloquy

evening's parting words if we have harmed your transparent wings must you forgive and define for once what could be worst than worse?

A Mother's Day Prayer

Dear Lord
My mother died
so lonely

Grant her eternal happiness

Dear Lord
May their mothers
be happier than my mother May their fathers love their mothers true May they as children love their mother now than remember loving them more when they are all gone and dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Motorcycle Speeds

it speeds its way up the hill and down
the plain and then goes on that narrow path leading to the cliff he does not know about this twist of his journey he falls and makes his last breath
and there is no other way to capture this tragedy
except through the words of the story or that poem that speaks of death and resurrection of twists
and the fall of no return

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mountain Skyline

from the town of Kolambugan you face the old city of Ozamis and from where I stand I see a skyline of colors sad colors

I see a line of mountains as the sun departs

leaving this pain of those who died here on one explosion
many, and many of them did not know that they will die on that day some were to cross the sea to attend a wedding some a baptism of their first born in a sudden, a large sound is heard and flesh showered a splinter

in the skies
blood flowed on steel floors some eyes remained closed

in disbelief
others shouted for revenge they call for justice and yet today

there is never one

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mountain Trek

summer is idle, as an African tulip falls gently on the hillside the place is quite overlooking an old city the mountains are brown and empty at night the moon comes out a gun bursts sometimes and startles the black birds on the tree alone beside the long winding river of Bulawan the black birds scream calling all the deep ravines.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mouse Is Killed Today

a mouse is killed today
by an artist who got mad because the mouse ate his painting of the nude woman that evening while he got so furious the mouse was at his hole on the floor eating his usual cheese the artist mumbled and murmured and grumbled

and the mouse heard it
and called it slapstick poetry
a doggerel,

the artist was not able to hold his temper
anymore

got an armalite and shot the hole with the mouse in it in the name of art

the artist invokes his right to kill the mouse

he says it was ' clearly an artistic expression and protected by the First Amendment. '

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mouthful Of Poetry

i sometimes put words in my nipple
and you who love words and chew them well
lick and chew my nipple,

poetry is tickling
and you can but close your eyes and put on a luscious
smile

i have your words
too in a mouthful
i drink them all

we have words for love and letters for caresses we are simply poets in this
corner
choosing love, loving love living in love
in mouthfuls....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Multiple Orgasm

she lets pain enter her system like a guest in her room asking what it wants how long will it stay and for what reason does it exist it will stay forever and she who can do nothing

gets the love-your-kidnapper syndrome she writes a poem
how one day she gets ripped by pain how she welcomes it finally like a multiple orgasm

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mumble....

how i wish to be just everything a tree full of leaves where some stars hang out tonight or just fireflies if there be no stars that will suffice or if there are no fireflies at all perhaps a candlelight a lonely candle put upon one of its roots or if there be none at all no tree or leaf or ground or worm
i still just wish that i be everything in that nothing a space an echo a dust a wind i just want to dissipate in everything that comes my way a memory of you in a minute or just a crumpled paper a dew that dries up in air a mark on the leaf
a scratch of the stone a left over moss
i just want to have an image of myself something to think about for the meantime that you are not here i simply want to explode scatter
till no one finds me here

RIC S. BASTASA
A Murderous Mind....

there are so many things unfinished you keep on saying that so many missions yet unaccomplished i noted that

i pity you
i invite your for a drink only for a minute

all i want is for you to put that sanity back like an underwear to your naked body you are cold and dying and you keep on pretending

i pity you
you are lost
your are screaming
no one hears you except myself

and you keep on pretending
about unaccomplished missions all these unfinished business of yours are fake

here i am
i have poisoned a concoction for you to kill these pretenses to make you alive for once in the world beyond.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Mystery

I have not seen you but you are felt and feelings are more than touch though fleeting

and all those that we have not seen and just touched are but fleeting shall i tell you that it is what the leaves sing about when the wind passes by?

shall i tell you that these are what mysteries are all about?
wind so cold hushing smoke from the nostrils of the earth fuming is this what mysterious anger is all about?

something wants to erupt but keeps on postponing the people have gone away and you wait in ambush when they all come back ah, the wind is silent again passing without uttering the words of the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
A Naked Song

it is the song
of truth

call it naked
there is no shame

about it, dress it
it will refuse it

it sings itself
all naked

to the sun
to the wind

the the world that is not minding

at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Narrative About Masks And Love

somehow the mask has become my own face you lift it up with your hands and there are no more stories to be told: about love? there is none anymore, if you insist, there might be one, but it was about the love that did not die, and for which i have told you once, and for me to live some more years, as i insist, i wore a mask full of love and laced with lust, and then i met you and you say
i am beautiful.
you say you love me, and i fall on an abyss of silence, and i keep on falling, and i should have told you about a story that i keep on telling but which you have not heard, some twists, a clinch, a pinch, an inch of truth that could have reached you, but you do not want to listen anymore, this is a love story, but at the scene when you begin to unrobe me, i tell you the truth,
this is not about you and I,
this is still about my past, about pain and sin,
how could you be so unkind?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Narrative Of The War

The soldiers are nearly all young men, and far more Filipino than is generally supposed - I should say nine-tenths are native-born.

Among the arrivals from Luzon I find a large proportion of tagalogs and bicolanos men. As usual, there are all sorts of wounds.

Some of the men fearfully burnt from the explosions.
One ward has a long row of officers, some with ugly hurts.
Yesterday was perhaps worse than usual.
Amputations are going on - the attendants are dressing wounds.
As you pass by,
you must be on your guard where you look.
I saw the other day a gentleman, a visitor apparently from curiosity, in one of the wards,
stop and turn a moment to look at an awful wound they were probing.

He turn'd pale, and in a moment more he had fainted away
and fallen
on the floor.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Naughty Girl's Reaction To Shakespear's Hamlet

To be or not To be
That is the question.

Beeeeeeeeeeeee!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Need For A New House....Or Home...

early morning
when the doors are still closed and the windows still tipsy like the whole house

you fly away

the sun comes out with the clouds early morning you fly away away from it all the clouds are floors and grasses and you are a lonely bird among a flock of chairs

early morning you fly away
thinking about nothing

you fly away and you feel like a leaf inside that gentle beast

it is a ride- away among the paradoxes of life and its ironies

early morning there is this flight that takes you to a stop-over
of your life

no one knows that you are grieving over a search for what you feel the one you had which you lost intentionally

among the flock of chairs landing early morning on unstable floors

early morning you take a cab you choose still which house

RIC S. BASTASA
A Need For Redemption

the world opens a door
lets you in makes you feel at home and gives you love
and you give it children it wants itself
populated and that is what it only wants from you and once the progeny are there the reality comes in batches of sorrows and regrets and then the world having taken what it wants from you, soon, excludes you
it closes the door
takes away air, chokes you
and then
you are gone for good

the world opens its doors
again
to populate itself with innocent people fooled into desire and lust
and then
finally expurgated into the depths of hell.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Neighbor

there is always hammering
windows are changing
every day
a restless neighbor's house wanting to change
luck
what ever needs to be changed
must be done right
away
superstition sometimes is summing up the life of this neighborhood
the feng sui
the arrangement of the flow of
yin and yang
the color of the walls
the scent of the day what number
what more.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Neighbor

you live in the clouds below all these drifters are the stones flowers of the earth
children of the chipped cliffs

we are the progeny
of the rocks
from our cracks waters flow
thirsts are quenched
and strangers
spread the news about us: from our hardness
and painless existence
comes out
the softness and kindness
of the waters
of this earth

you shift and gather
somewhere
soundlessly
looking down upon us in the hardness of our silenced
existence

you predict weathers you tell us you own the rain
and the sun

we look forward
adapt to the changes
for one thing
we do not drift and gather
somewhere
still asking for the correct directions

we are blind
and so we know what is within us we have no other option we are the stones
we ask no more about those questions neither do we keep those answers
we are here
we do not move
we do not blink
we welcome the moss
we are never tossed....

neighbor cloud nebulous, oh how infamous now, tumultuous
fatuous...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Neighbor Named Tony Somewhere In The Philippines

a neighbor named tony is a Filipino and he just arrived yesterday from the U S of A

we're happy to have him back so the neighborhood can have his music and art back (for he is a musician and a visual artist sculpture and painting
his skill
beside his expertise in flowers and gardening)

he says he is coming for good in the US of A
he lost his work
and his Jewish master has finally let him go
due to recession

he brings no money
and he meets no honey

his wife left him and took all his children

at night he drinks himself almost to death he takes rock
and rocks himself all night we have no way stopping him

we understand
what sorrow is what life is
we wait how tony shall explain his own death

we wish somehow that he recovers
and then we may never have any peace in the Philippines.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Neither/Nor Situation

neither rain can wash our sins nor sunshine can launder
our souls
we are in this neither/nor situation choked by our own hands

they say
those who wear white during those ceremonies and those who are fond of reenacting the old rituals that we need an outside force to remedy this kind of delimma

i am in no position to say
any word
i am an observer
and i keep on waiting

meanwhile, i hear the rain i feel the sunshine again, i am not saying anything this world is too big for me to be heard anyway it is those giants who may have the final say

RIC S. BASTASA
A Network

if the wind is your friend then you will have wings if it happens that the rock gets angry because you are the friend of the wind then you have nothing to rest upon on a weary trip somehow you ask the help of the trees on the condition that you must hate the sky but then without the sky what use is your pair of wings?
you compromise with the help of the moon to light you dark night and the sun who is more powerful is mad for it has long severed itself from the moon if you have nothing to hide your head tomorrow the rays of the sun like swords shall cut you into shatters
the sea promises something but the islands warn you about a catastrophe now you must take note of all these find a way to please all and you end up begging for more.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Awareness This Time...To A User

now you greet me a sweet hello because you need something from me

and i know that

and so i respond with a hello too but this time

it is more of an awareness of my humility

whatever you need somehow (and this i say with honesty) on the principle of an eye to an eye (of course) shall be promised but definitely not given.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Beginning

the rain falls heavily
on the brown fields
the cracks of drought
heal and soften for
a new beginning

the farmer arrives
bringing his plow
the white herons
hover

the frogs croak
the fish are awake after a long hibernation

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Beginning...

every sprouting seed
preaches hope every new leaf says
i am an evidence
every fruit manifests
we are ready to serve and when everything is ripe and luscious and ready
when no hand picks them when there is no child the inevitable happens each fruit rots and falls and gets foul and conquered by molds
and moss and will finally be gone
except the seed
who has the last say again about hope and its new beginning.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Day....

let not the words deceive you further step outside the room at twilight, do you see the star fading?

do not just stop there walk farther and see the magnificent sun rising.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Definition Of What Is Poetry

now i think i know what poetry is

it is
everyday

it is not a form but a thought

it is beyond thoughts
even

it is a stream
of emotions

and there is a boat that sails beneath them there is no rudder neither sail

there are only hands that feel
the cascading waters

feet that dangle on the
river
straining the coldness
of the eddies

there is the peace of the sky
there is the freedom of the drifting
of the clouds

it is foremost
a dedication and hence it is as i am telling you and everyday affair

here
is the ordinariness of poetry that most men do not take seriously

that the world cannot really believe thinking that this is talent and tact

no,
it is everyday
it is defecation
it is breathing
it is strolling
it is eating breakfast and smoking at the park

it is sleeping and running and holding hands
it is everyday
it is everything it is not peculiar or extraordinary

this is my
poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Direction

the winds change
and i change too
always against it always against the water in the river
always against
the common mind
for no reason at all

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Door

i remember
this door was made 12 years ago
the day when i married you.

we chose clear lacquer to keep its original mahogany grain
we keep the gloss
and we were never at loss.

there were loud slams
oh, i hate to remember but there were also gentler closes of this door with all the tender intents of not having to disturb a single soul.

then the hinges begin to rust and the door creaks and screams getting louder like the madness of the one who fears that love is finally gone.

the termites came and the frames get hollow as time pierces it showing the emptiness inside it as though it was mere kind of a seashell

the knob is finally broken and the key to open it again was lost then we come back to our senses after twelve years
the door has to be replaced with a new one

this time white in paint the hinges glossy copper the knob in shining silver and the key fits in without any sound

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Economic Theory

the sea has so much water
and so
has the rivers and ponds and creeks too

you are the mighty sun and you activate all your rays like hands generating heat from your self-energizing body you take in all their potable waters and keep them in all your friendly clouds and then by your power as the all-kind all-giving sun you order all the clouds to shower to all the land the much needed rain even the tiniest moss and algae the underprivileged worms the hibernating creatures the dried seeds shall have the share of all wondrous waters of the earth this gather-all-and-trickle down economic theory of mine

at the end
all shall have their share all shall grow and bear fruit throughout the years of their lives where shall hunger be?
and wars and chaos?

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Flair

and so the peacock having survived from a broken wing

(sigh! it could have been a broken heart)

now rises up from the bushes

struts head high on the park
under the trees

and fans herself with her multicolored tail

i could not help

(identifying myself with her)

and i said directly from spontaneous
instinct,

' I like this beautiful bird'

how i wish somehow that like an eagle
it can also learn the art of flying and trick the

air
with its new flair.
A New Generation Of Dishonest People

Our denials
are what make us move for instance we deny the hardness of the stone and the rope

we deny that we have heads
and that make us more adaptable
here

our denials
constant as they are make us all alive

we keep mumbling
we pay the price
for this

we look around honest people are hanged and their remaining
children
keep asking

what did you teach them?
honesty kills.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Haircut

all i need today is a new haircut my thick hair is covering my head and i do not really like it like a carabao dung

it is giving me a certain feeling of a hat a buri hat with lots of protruding fibers untrimmed

what do i need a hat for?
when there is no rain
when there is no sun when there is no
heavy debris falling on me i just wanna be free

i want my brain open washed by the rain
bleached by the sun
true to its nature & form

thinking
w/o
any covering

without the bias without the prejudice
of
scalp
of
hair

plain brain
exposed to all the elements it will tolerate a certain form of fungal infection a certain brain longing to be brain dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Home Of The Heart....

Last night
I remembered you

Such a sweet memory
About us

I am beside another
soul
beside another warm body her hands are on my arms
in circles are the thoughts of you running in the water flying over the hills
drift ing
vivid and in the colors of rainbows

And the soundly i sleep Beside someone who does not even know your name I am glad i have gone beyond the wooden fences of my mind Towards another pasture Crossed the river

And then i walk towards My new Home....

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Learning

the sea and the waves the sun and sunlight
the singer and the song

how did i ever miss all these?
not one, not two.
how foolish can i be?

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Learning Of An Old Man...

i am so sorry
i just wake up from a very deep sleep

it is now
fifty years ago, and i do not remember you

i am so sorry
my heart beats for another it is not our fault

we were inside that dream

we did not intend to stay there either

this is another season
i will miss the sun, i am here for autumn

i am old, and i have learned too late to love myself again

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Life

you slept on your years like rip van winkle and you come
to me
unable to say
what time
is it where you are what the heck is this place
so new to you

your hair white begging on your knees your teeth
yellowed by unbrushed years
your eyes
blankly trying
to know
what this world
brings you

wake up
to a new day

a new life,
welcome

lost brother this is my hand
that you have long forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Life.....

the way we sleep
tonight and the other past nights speak of the usual story how time makes us bores and how we have decided not to touch what is so usual

we have finally decided to look the other way around our backs facing each other how we see other worlds out there how we should forget the past how we should meet the future as a stranger how we start shaking hands again to create a world anew before our eyes

a new life.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Light

if you call it
death
no one, no one likes to grab
it.

pretend that it is a
beginning
only to float
and
still not accept
that you
have ended

there is no
choice
actually

a strong ray
of light
absorbs you
sucks you

like a vacuum cleaner
and

pooo! you're out
you're in.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Meeting

make my life
easy
i shall flow as lightly as a feather in the sky without rain and the only way to do it is you make yours busy stay away from the house and let all those details do not destruct you

nor distract me with your complaints for the hardness of words the dis-edifying structures of our faiths

think: we dignify ourselves too with distance
we erect walls and pillars apart for the space to breathe
the nearness of you sometimes is actually a contempt of so much intimacy

think: love is always sweeter the third time around the second did not work that well we have abused love that much with promises
of independence

so? go and i too go my way tonight we meet as a new set of strangers asking names for new brands of coffee when i look at you again pretend there is none of us and only then can we be true again

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Morning

life needs a confirmation after a night sleep breathe! breathe!
savor the fresh air
from the fans of the banana leaves

feel the fresh air
invading the veins
the passages of the lungs
the beats and throbbing of the heart

it is another morning different from the rest

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Saying At Ph

a poem a day
keeps your shrinks away.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Season

i welcome the new season when i do not like to do the usual things i do, and they look for me on places they always see me the lecture room is full but i will not be there my cell phone rings but i will not answer i turn everything off

it is a new season of my life for them to see me die outside for me to make life anew inside away from the crowd into the solitude of my soul into the calm pond lotus like i sit seeking myself, long lost, and weary molting like a snake, in hibernation, like a mud fish hiding its head on mud cracking soil in summer till the next rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
A New Version Of My Life

life comes in my room fresh from the rain
stripteasing me
so how can i not possibly embrace it
and forget
death?

oh, life is too forgiving fleshy and sweet as cantaloupe and supple as fresh strawberry
how can i not take this irresistible bite?

RIC S. BASTASA
A New World Found

i watch it
first
how love is made
how souls
mix
how a new world
gives birth
to the sun
and then i look at the mirror
of myself
stares at this
beauty
and i know what i want this just this and then i am at peace
with all these broken pieces
coming back at me in a collage of a beautiful
pattern full of colors
shining
and alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nice Conversation

last night a nice conversation was made between two people who claim to be friends, they were talking about pain and sorrow and how they must be resolved
solved and eradicated like dirt and warts

existential angst making her tipsy like she was drunk of vodka mixed with champagne she keeps on asking
why

why people get sad and sadder and sadder still despite a heavy meal
and a surrounding of friends that come to her house on sundays it is hard to understand life and suddenly by impulse one says: the key to understanding life is art,

your art that conquers this pain that mimics
its wiles and bites and pinch come then, let us imitate it and mimic it and mock it life with art let us see let us feel let us dance let us sing let us chant

let us have poetry

let us forget time let us forget who hurts us come let us not be ourselves let us be someone else and life shall now be deluded there is no us, there is no ego now that we have smashed it like fragile glasses shattered in the gutters

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nice Day

bird with a yellow feather
chirping on a branch of a tree
fronting my glass
window

i rub doubt away
from my eyelids.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nice Idea To Begin The Year With...

it is a nice idea to hear from you that you are lonely, , , , tonight, i added, , , what is nicer than that is that you start to think if you will start writing a poem.....tonight, i always add that, it is indeed nice to know that somewhere far away from me another lonely soul is planting some seeds in that garden of the spirit

that somehow, sometime, more flowers will be blooming there away from me, away from everyone and that a soul, begins to sing a very lonely song.... tonight, and it is, as i expect that always to be...

so beautiful...so so beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nickname....

on early dawn
while you are writing those letters (still on the grip of tradition emails are impersonal and lack the sentimentality of distance and the grace of the strokes and tendrils)

you hear those chirping birds cocks crowing sounds of the streets being swept and occasional hushes of the wind
from the sea

your letters sound as though they are anticipating the birth of the world on the seventh day when the Lord said he finally rested at the end you say what they always write Sincerely yours,

your nickname.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Neighbor Singing Out Of Tune at first one feels that this disturbance is killing all the the animate things alive in this small community singing out of tune, again, but no one really has the temerity to make him stop, for he is at the height of recreating himself recomposing from an old form of sadness, we all understand his art of reverberating what destroys him and now he sings

that is the most important thing, look they say, do you hear him singing?
loving neighbors, oh, how happy their hands are, clapping clasping for another broken heart has healed itself after days and days of bleeding profusely

i am listening, and deep within my own feelings of woe woe relating to woe, there is this light though dim, yet it appears so bright to the incalculable depth of the
heart

and too pleasing to the heart is the sound of a broken song, the soul of the out of tune, we always say welcome, welcome, we're with you, in all these.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Night Conversation

it is your right to have lifestyle of your own and you may keep it as i ponder upon my own

50 years
there is a zero in it
i know

you are discreet
with your favorite websites that give you
maximum erection

soon they will trace it when you become a star

for the meantime
no one is concerned with lowly worms feeding on carcass

there is no envy here as i have already written my conclusions there are principles that are not uncompromisable your hands are waves and your words are like tassel of a white dress sometimes i could not help laughing but i know how to pocket smiles like some secrets you bloomed last night like cadena de amor

ah, the dama de noche is more like it

i have seen the genie in you you bet the pink mustache is too revealing i give a hint that you must leave you refuse to take it and so i simple keep my mouth shut your words are undressing you it is ugly

but it is the truth

i take a chair from the other room sit there

look away from the fourth floor into the far trees as the wind gets colder the night digging deeper and soon the paths which were visible before turned into a dark river

i do not wander what fish swims in your head i do not wish to see bones i am simply feeling the flow i guess i simply pity you in this usual pretense of happiness there is actually no one there like a tv show of canned laughter

RIC S. BASTASA
A Night Of Rain

wrapped with a thick blanket our bodies together
listening
to the whole night
rain
train of thoughts trickles of happy moments intertwined

RIC S. BASTASA
A Night Of Rendezvous

Along the rough mountains
and winding rivers
some forests
he shall pass and cross &
get wet and dry
to meet her
on this rendezvous

In her little hut
the night is so cold and damp
the love
they have been keeping
shall build a fire
to dissolve fog and mist and dissipate the coldness to destroy whatever distance has this world made against them whatever walls whatever rain

RIC S. BASTASA
A Night Without Love....

when we are too tired

we take the bed
and lose ourselves in the labyrinths of sleep it is another night

without love

as a matter of consequence the morning turns into a chicken's intestinal crookedness

you are still asleep perhaps dreaming about love when i left for work without tasting breakfast

RIC S. BASTASA
A Night Without The Wind And The Stars

just have the moon
at least

you have no choice
what are you?

a speck of dust
in the galaxy

envy the still pond
where the moon sits

cope up breathe and be
the wind
for a while

create the ripple
tell the water lily

you are alive
and can disturb

a little and tell the night
you eat
fears

that you can sleep
with or without its dark covers

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nighthmare

i take the plane
at 2 a.m.
cebu bound, and
i dream that
the plane crashed
and that we are all dead

our souls look down upon our torn flesh
some are burnt unidentifiable

we are so silent
like stones without winds

x x x x x x

the plane touches down perfectly well
at the airport

silently we line up to step out

from a nightmare that i only know

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nihilist

so everything is nothing, a thing becomes a no-thing they all disappear
they become nowhere

when a man dies
he becomes nothing

something that i cannot really understand these words are here
and you read them they must not be nothing yet i feel nothing too and this must be something yet to prove this nihilism

there is this circle
and i do not know where
at what particular point now, am i.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nipa Shack

a nipa shack
in all appearances of it unwalled and defloored

about to fall and kiss
the ground of rotten hay and wilting grass

stop and look at it even for a short while and it has a lot of stories to tell

shocked
you will be finding that from its nipa shingles
there is
this upsurge of emotions bursting thoughts restlessness moving to and from beside the clouds just a tree above it

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note About Her

I ALWAYS think that she is more beautiful with her dress on when her hair is hanging free down to her waist like words in a flowing poem, but she prefers the usual mode of seduction by undressing herself slowly and when she has nothing on she walks towards that steps of stone leading to the famed hot spring at the foot of the extinct volcano and then she plunges her body like a young fish, there is nothing to imagine, as everything has been fully seen, she calls me to join her in the heat of the water and i start to compromise about everything that i am, the night is so silent and the waters create the happiest ripples on that moment, i am mute and blind

this is now the imagination, another pagination of a bookish self, now flashing with pictures with multicolor and lustful scents, to include the stars and meteors which are not supposed to be there happiness has an ending. it is muted the way it must be for a married man

like me....

i recall again,
when she could have been more beautiful if we only talk and exchange metaphors when we should have simply exchange pleasantries or even just biographies

or the latest news
on showbiz....

(shift) (cough) (hesitation to say something more about it*) even if i do not have to hold her hands and squeeze her supple body or tickle

her nipple...
.
even if we do not have to close
our eyes
and then imagine someone else somewhere
or
for those which we have never seen before the sun finally sets....

the oral intercourse,
to my clean mind,
would have been more meaningful (if) i should have told her about a story or about bukowski

that it would have been more poetic

if we did nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note About Sunset....

there is always something that you have not seen about the sunset you always evaded it when you capture it with words what was she wearing when she left you? when your mom died miles away from you, what color did you see?

when you mourn upon love, what coldness was there? when your friend betray you, what was it that faded inside you?

was it not the orange in sunset? was it not the darkness that it left after it faded into a wordless space?

oh, it was you alone, as always, and yet you have failed to record it exactly, the way passion paints a picture of itself.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note About The Old Woman Friedn In Facebook

ten thousand nautical miles away
an old woman
is asking me pictures of Disneyland
and i sent her so many pictures of Minnie and mickey
and the rest of the cartooning gangs for i can sense how lonely could she be chatting with me in facebook
and i have seen her posts of a big house with no one there
and i do not ask where her children are or her husband for he must have died
ahead of her
and there is nothing left except her dreams of childhood
the way she used to like Minnie and mickey
on TV.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note Before The Plane Touches Down

thick clouds
nothing to see
the plane pierces
a haze

all the passengers
are so silent

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note By The Door

he leaves today for bacolod go straight by fast craft to ilo-ilo another boat shall take him to the island of Guimaras
where he shall be with the Trappist monks
on a three-day retreat

he badly needs it
to repair what is broken.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note For An Ex

if there is no
love anymore in there
i guess
there must be hate
do you survive
on this?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note For Franz Kafka

one morning when i discover that i have turned into a cockroach
you may write
what i will do you may theorize
that since i will be to shy to go out of my room just like what your character did then i may lock my room, not eat,
and only talk to my sister
that i may soon hate my father
and will soon forget my mother
i can relate to all these based on my readings
but i can see what i can do
when i stink and soon fear light when even the air
which is suppose to hush a lullaby
now hurts too
just like the rest
of those who are close to me
and turn themselves into disgusting monsters more disgusting
than my being a human-cockroach
you know very well
that i am brave enough to force the door
to the other room
the one that none of you has ever entered
i can use a knife
an ax or a hand grenade i can even use a bomb to break this back door open
i am brave and will always be restless on a broken wing
of a bird i can always still manage
to fly
away.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note For Hakim

there is always One God who created the air and the trees and lakes and seas and whatever is it that you want me to think there is always a humanity divided by all those centuries of conflict that roots its way deeper into our misunderstanding but have faith
each man is working his heart way out from hate and unnecessary division like islands looking for the missing bridges that have long existed before we have began to know each other assala'am mulaykum!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note For Michael...

i could have told Michael that his despair is the fruit of his poisoned tree.

that there is no sense crying over love which has failed for all those years to respond to tears.

that if there is someone whom you should love more and make it last perhaps forever is this love of self.

one whom you can talk with forever until you die, and if you died well enough when your soul rises higher from your body by then, you could have told yourself, how elevating death is, but how can i ever tell him now when he had anticipated it so well he is up there (perhaps with wings and halo on his head) while here i am, scribbling another note for him.

too young to be brave enough too young to die without having grasped so well the meaning of his life.

(how do i really know? i never will)

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note For Peace

i like to wake up when everyone is asleep, and when they all leave i take a good sleep myself i guess this is the only way to make peace in this world perhaps i want to be alive when all of them or dead or be dead myself when they all live for long.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note For Siblings...

da rotten boat
da neglected machine bathed in rust
docked
at the other side of the river
perhaps, shall now tell
you
that even brothers or sisters for that matter live in separate rooms and there perhaps hatch some explanations
for the
betrayal
which of course you cannot accept or at least on the level of belief
somehow you have to learn
living too inside
your room
make a map
of your life
discover the treasure and keep it
all for yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note For The Inadvertent...

he drops a word or two which sentenced many and for the whole week or even more months
he will be talked about.

Hiphip says it will be free advertisement and soon he will be on the top list as future prince.

his words do not deserve the dignity of your comments.
Leave him to Oblivion since He is out of touch. See, i do not even mention his name.

RIC S. BASTASA
my heart is made of glass transparent
and too fragile
and if you love me just in case
please know how to really care
not to break it
for once shattered
i cannot pick a piece without an injury.....

RIC S. BASTASA
and this time
whether you like it or not
you are set upon this journey
that gives you fear

because there is no ticket
for your coming back

RIC S. BASTASA
A Note On Friendship

Friendship sometimes is

' i scratch your back and you scratch mine'

someone asks
' what does that solve? '

one responds
' what is your problem? '

none, none

that is what friendship sometimes is none, none, nothing

it just makes you feel at home.

RIC S. BASTASA
before i embark on another trip today i depart from the usual silence, there is something inside me that wants

to say something, like a note that i have written last night which i put inside my pocket and if by chance my tongue cannot get away from its sealed

lips, i may just take that note and put it beside your table while you are still asleep, and if i had to, if i shall not forget, I'll put a rose beside it, the one that i pick from your garden, still fresh with dew on its petals,

it is like, i only give what i take from you, a rose from your garden, and a note from me, that despite all those stormy days, i think, and this you must treasure like all the flowers that grow in your garden, that which you water and nurture, that it is my fault, that even if you cannot forgive me, as i pack my bag, to give your flowers more space, and for you to be at peace, i, too, shall take a deep breath, saying

i still love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nude Story

the light blue sea marks a boundary with a mild wave and foam along the sands of the shore two white empty benches hold a pink bikini and a white swimming trunk at the other side of another empty beach chair, is the bra
the calm sea erases the footsteps towards it

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nugget Of Gold

congratulations my friend for despite the anger of the past here you are entertaining an enemy making him feel at home with you serving him bread and coffee and a good transportation for the night to take him where he can stay have a nice sleep and dream....

congratulations, you have lived your faith always being good despite their indifferent and even devilish attitudes.....

congratulations for you are unique in the midst of mud you are still a nugget of gold....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Numbered Poem

2. the mantle is heavy in white.
3. the white cup is not fuming.
4. the lover does not come tonight.
5. an empty vase keeps a shallow
6. conversation with the black clock.
7. there is no flower to brighten
8. the night without a tryst.
9. it is the black clock that ticks
10. time. It is this lament. A cup 11. without tea. A vase without 12. a rose, a daffodil, a white lily.
13. the black clock ticks. There 14. is no hint that it will stop.

That big shell knows it all.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Numbness From My Arm To My Heart

this is the trip of boredom.

it starts from the tip of my toe as a ripple of a clear pond from a fish that just died of suffocation too much water less air the fish dies too then it crawls like a worm higher to my arm near my neck and then it moves down to my chest finding a heart long dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nursery Rhyme For The Kid Wanting A Poem While His Mother Is Away Looking For Work

The rain is loudly pouring and the roof is noisy i have a song not messy and i want to sing foolhardily but how can you be hearing when the loud rain is pouring?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Nut.....

i hear the sound of the big waves arriving on the shores of Katinka.
the people are not afraid.
the dogs are asleep.
dreams continue growing in the fields of sleep.
flowers of hope are spreading on the bed sheets of forgiving. this is a mountain. and the very reason why we think we should climb it someday is that it is still there. this is a beetle. And i am a nut.

RIC S. BASTASA
A One Man's Show

now, this is my last instruction for you hear it well: when you travel in this boat you paddle, there is no machine your hands are paddles your boat your body your steer your foot now they do not mind you but you speak a lot and laugh a lot
they will not comment somehow trusting you that you know where to go and what to bring and when and where to finally stop the boat and keep it on the other side of this big river the point is you will never know whether you have arrived or not they just keep on watching and they will hear every groaning and moaning that your are making as though you are making love with someone invisible things are complicated finally at first you proclaim this is a simple matter and i know fully well what is happening but that is not the case really when you arrive there there will be big changes clothes change from blue to white you will grow a beard and your fingers are no longer proportional to your arms some things appear smaller than normal and you being to shy away from everybody who keeps on seeing you stalking you but their mouths are shut like a wall that once was a door things are different now very complicated harrowing experiences of doves and bats begin to unfold some worms scream finally they shout your name and you close your ears and

sleep.

the life that they call a stage lets the curtain fall it is the end of your show and they all begin to leave you alone again.

(For Erye... )

RIC S. BASTASA
A One-Way Traffic

he is here again
on this one-way street going straight ahead on his monologue

this poem

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pact Within You

a bouquet of white roses a red ribbon that ties the stems
disregard the thorns
smell the scents
jump for joy
declare that war against sadness

RIC S. BASTASA
A Page Of Poems For You

i tried to dismiss thoughts of you like a blank page torn off from the notebook and crumpled and thrown over the window

i look back i have written a lot of poems for you, and oh my heart speaks again about love so broken....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pain In The Heart

this is nothing
tell you when you ask this is nothing
assure you
this is just a pain in the heart and everyone has it so this must be nothing like everyone's suffering this is nothing special hearts break
person die
hearts bleed people heal themselves hearts are broken
and there are no heroes no nobel laureates for this common occurences so why bother

your heart is broken too?
don't bother

i am shutting up.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pain In The Neck

too many words,
too many promises,
too many loves
meant to be forgotten,
too many woes
these telling and retelling, how can i be so submissive to these literatures of lament, these incantations of madness?

a pain in the neck
a migraine, somehow, i lack sleep and the dogs keep on barking on the streets of sorrow, on the boulevard of broken dreams, lights shutting off slowly like fireflies dissolving in the horizon.

it is morning,
and a yellow bird with a black beak is chirping on a twig just beside my window.

i breathe the breeze from the sea.
The seagull pass by.
A yacht with a white sail and white banners is approaching the port.
My loneliness like an island

A broken port, a history of a typhoon, a rope, and a fallen coconut.
Someone farther from this house is waiving a hand.
A white handkerchief. A truce.

I am sleepy.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Painful Back

if i had gone to Freud he must have explained to me the cause of this painful back i think i know what he will say
and that he will tell me always that i am highly qualified for my calculated risks for my educated guess for my tongue that knows how
it is when it begins to slip

RIC S. BASTASA
A painter on study sketched two nudes
In canvass, a nude

Man & woman

The man in hard Solid lines his torso
His thighs his legs Well chiseled by
The dark colors
Of his brush, and

The woman in Smooth lines, her Fragile hands, her Soft breasts, her
Thin lines in light Feminine colors,

He so admired
His nude creations,
And he stared
At the magic
He just painted,

And tired for Hours, he just Blinked a while Wanting a little Slip, he faltered,

He blinked and Winked for a second,

Surprised, only to Find out that the two Are suddenly missing not looking for food A Painting

a boat carries a man with a long white beard

the boat moves silently in the middle of a very wide river an angel guides him towards the strong rage of light at the other end surrounded by these clouds with an array of angels in the formation of stairs the waters are so still and the place is so quiet.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Painting Of Pink Lips

pink lips
melting like
ice cream
from a pastel brown
canvass

i feel desire
you feel
the toxicity of
dripping
the uselessness of
drifting
i feel the deep sense of falling into a dream of drips of sweet strawberry flavored
ice cream

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pantomime

I WANT to make a poem that must rhyme
spicy like a thyme
with value like a dime
without much words
like a mime.

RIC S. BASTASA
on your hand is a paper boat you made last night

on a rainy day like this you put on a gray rain coat the river rises perfect for your scheme

you put the boat gently on the brown water

white paper boat carried by this murkiness

your hands push the paper boat leaves

tonight you sleep on the wooden floor

it is mahogany brown and you become the paper boat sailing inside your dream the floor becomes the big river your thoughts become the wind your eyes become two moons the room is as dark as the night the dream is so alive like a mother's song.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Papillon

a dog with butterfly ears
who wants
more to stay inside
the house

no chicks
in there

RIC S. BASTASA
A Parable

a frog, always the frog has always been a frog servant to the fog, but one frog one day decides to be a bull to the dismay of the frogs in that little pond to the ridicule of the bulls nearby but the frog learns to be a bull and bully has he become until one day he gains the respect of the other bulls to the pleasure of the sun to the disdain of the fog on the hills nothing is impossible to the power of the mind this the frog follows

through and through

RIC S. BASTASA
A Paradox Of Joy...

a boy was hurt
but he could not just be a boy forever

a man too is hurt but he could not just be a man forever and so the hurt or whatever you name it pain, grief, trauma

psychosis

or simply sadness
with the poetic twist of a gentle lamentation cannot be forever that boy or that man there is something divine in all these gifts as you may wish there is something that polishes that rough stone turn it into a very precious diamond like the story of the clam and its pearl

that sadness exist but sadness cannot be sadness forever hope, that is the wish there is no permanence in all of these wait, from this door to the stair and to the horizon of a black line someone comes, it is something bringing everything for you exalt, exalt

in extreme silence....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Parody.....

we make things last without minding, a relationship for instance, we disregard what wrong details are there, we keep it hung like a Mona Lisa painting on the wall,

everyday

she smiles we come and go we live life the way time passes by unperturbed by the wind and not caring what tomorrow brings just the way that tree grows into a shade for all crawling things like

us.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Parrot

A beautiful parrot I like to see On a cage Paying attention to My every word
And Then Retells them all back to me

Faithfully
Although
With some little lapses

Lively little lapses Little slips of the bird’s belittled tongues

She is not arrogant.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Part Of Kunwari

when someone dies
like Lady Diane
i try to imitate that gay guy blowing a candle in the dark instead of lighting it and i will oblige myself with a very sad song that a part of my kunwari
died

but honestly, i am not affected at all

i am an island that everyone has not yet found.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Part Of The Big Family Tree

retrace the steps finding the footprints of my ancestors their fingers carved in the limestones of old spanish churches and municipal halls

howling sounds of their sufferings on forced labor and constant whippings they found the escape on wooden boats paddling their way tossed by big waves and uncertain dark nights towards the Sulu sea

they found land where they are free built their houses and made love all the way bathe in the wide and long winding rivers embraced the sea and acquired their territories for years the wrote their names on the long lists on tombstones

i am here and they are pleased i am writing about them and what they started once i shall continue what they have seen i shall see again on this big tree with roots down the deepest earth and branches and twigs like a hundred hands and fingers strecthing out to the skies i am one of the buds coming out from its bark i have tiny breathing cells spreading looking out for more openings

RIC S. BASTASA
A Partner In Life

one does not just look for a kiss

a kiss can be more than what it literally is it can be a strawberry that your lips offer to mine one finds not just love but also tenderness

not just the word but the silence in between

one does not just look for someone beside something is beyond affection i feel it with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Party

On her 60th birthday
she had her hair dyed red had a face life
and had her body bleached

she wears her skimpy outfit
with yellow flowers on the fabric
her lips are thick
red
her body still makes the swing
she dances the whole
night
does the tango and boogie

we cheer for her strength still making it without her husband who left her for another woman
in America

RIC S. BASTASA
A Passion Gone

things that we like to do never tire us

it is the tiredness
that surrenders

this passion makes us
alive

desire stirs us like a big whirlpool after a tsunami

it is this quest that makes us indefatigable but when every passion is gone every desire consumed

what is left is nothing there is no reason to live and we find ourselves dying to be dead...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Path Of Brown Stain...

the heavy rain from the sky pours upon the heads of the mountains the rain takes upon its feet the rivers on a journey to the mouth of the sea it escapes and creates a brown island that spreads on the belly of the sea it is not beautiful to see how stains are made the sea is sinful and it will always be

RIC S. BASTASA
A Patriotic Stance

i have decided now, i will not go to another place there is no other place than this i am singing here and writing poems for my loved ones whatever i do here turns out to be pleasing and my heart beautifully sings for the living what can i ask more of myself, or of this place where i was born wherever i look or turn my gaze i always see the blooming flowers and green bushes my years are spent but not wasted, nothing is ever destroyed whatever is sown, grows here whatever is built remains strong i can't find another country this country has been so good to me i will walk its streets, i may grow old in the same neighborhood there are always ships and roads but i am not going anywhere i have chosen now & this i live here and shall die here there is no other.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pause

i close my eyes
hurt by the light
i nod my head
and ask for more ideas
from God
i beg for more
silence
from the storms
of my troubled
heart
i dream of a calm sea
a raft
a fisherman
a catch a rope a rudder
a blue sail
a seagul an island
a tower of light
a blade of grass
a ring
a truckload of rocks
a navel a while skin
an arm a butt

i want an imagination
of wingless birds
stranded in an island
a shadow
a dream of liberation
of bodies
trapping souls

RIC S. BASTASA
A Peaceful Day

they say i am a sad man living in a mournful house
with no one

the windows look like stooping eyelids

the door like the backbone of an old woman with osteoporosis

the wall are blank like a blackboard with nothing to say those who visit my place feel the loneliness of the air as though someone is recently buried when you come back to the house and do nothing but gaze at the bleakness of the hours

i am confident about my
existence

and i tell them
that they are all wrong about me i like this day with no one around me

It is the most peaceful day i ever had.

i feel so rested like a man sleeping on a rocking chair while watching a Love Story with the sound in the Off mode.
i am contemplating on the sounds of the footsteps of the souls of those who had long departed most interestingly of those who want to stay

RIC S. BASTASA
A Peaceful Mind

when they begin to throw stones against each other i am no longer there i hear nothing breaking i see nothing bleeding and then they follow me wondering why is this man so strange?

why does he talk only to himself?
why is he so broken despite the quiet?

there is this hollowness that spreads like a space upon itself beyond the edges of the blanket within the softness of the pillows there is this irony of believing and not believing at the same time a puzzle that we make and ultimately we cannot solve ourselves there is this particular quiet that stabs those who care to listen there is this life that takes life upon itself and escapes what death offers there are tantrums of the spirits in the dawning of the end of times the tongues of fire descends upon us and there is no moment of misunderstanding we theorize that these, all these possibilities can exist a quiet that conquers and devours what evils we have stored beneath our bellies a quiet that can not be bought or sold or squander the soft rain during a sunny day hovering upon a thick grass spreading in every nooks of our humanities.... this is a peaceful mind speaking unfiltered what comes and says what comes genuinely unedited on meanings still to be captured decipher then if you can in the quietest moment of your mind falter not, perhaps flatter a little, flip, flop and flap those wings unimagined...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Peacock

a peacock meets a peahen on a grassy garden

'what the hell' says the peahen to the peacock

the peacock asks
'why the hell?'

and the peahen snobs the peacock
and says

'yours is just a peasize!'

and the peahen leaves the peacock for good

and they know they cannot live
happily ever after
for sure

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pebble

inanimate,
the pebble is just perfect for me.
it does not feel, it has no color of the sun or any flower.
it is steady, and numb and stays just where it is unless moved by the force of a hand or of the surging water it feels nothing and looks dignified
you look at it
and it stares at you.
when it is thrown away, it does not come
back.
and there it is, always, saying nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pebble As Concise As It Is Small And Round Inside Your Palm

consider me as a pebble concise inside your palm complete in its roundness always willing to be thrown away any minute from now when you feel the necessity

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pebble In My Shoe

a pebble in my shoe
i want it removed

a pebble in my shoe
a disturbance
in my mind

a pebble in my shoe
an enemy
in my feet

yet wait
let me recall
a grain of sand
inside the clam

a pearl
in my hand

once a pebble
in my shoe

let me walk again let me remember

the pearl
in the clam

RIC S. BASTASA
A Peek Of Moonlight

when i am alone tonight when the moon is full when the wind is so gentle

i take a peek
of moonlight from the love slowly coming our from the curtains of
your heart

i am waiting
for you to call me and start
with you
this dance
of passion
and love

just the two
of us
under the shadow
of the moon

just the two of us
and the light
of the moon
painting
the lines of our naked
bodies

RIC S. BASTASA
A Peom For K. (The Banker With All The Conflicting Interests)

i shall now write a poem for my happiest day, it is all about an old, scheming and fraudulent woman stacking all her money and the money of the other people inside her room inside her house and inside her bigger storehouses

she says
these are all for her children and grandchildren and the children of all her grandchildren and all the coming children of more grandchildren & great great grandchildren what is mad about this is that she is taking the money due to other people who are hungry and innocent and gullible but she is a very wise woman and she gets what she wants she gets what she all wants practically everything that her hands can hold her eyes can see

perhaps

forgetting that soon she will be made to pay for the price of her greed and avarice and dirty schemes and foul techniques and it will be for all her children and grandchildren and the children of all her grandchildren and all the coming children of more grandchildren all the coming children of more great grandchildren & great great grandchildren

...and then justice shall reign but when it comes i shall not see this event anymore but i will be happy

>>>ii<<<

i will ask the seagulls to sing
for me
and you who will be alone and sick and dying shall hear
and then be happy and die happily too

you, who believe with me that our place is not here and that the real treasure is still somewhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Perfect Family....

one of those pretty lies which we keep on pricing,

something we embrace as truth
is this

perfect family,
successful kids
honorable fathers
and understanding
mothers,

a strong house
a new car,
open communication
lines,

but no matter how we all try
there is no such thing.

last night at the family dinner
two are missing
and most of us are no longer talking.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Perspective Of Rain....

i have thought about this once keeping it to myself but i must tell you now because perhaps it has relevance that the rain is our only link to the heavens that when it touches our body we too have touched the hands of God....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Philosophy

it is not how tall the buildings have grown the presence of three elevators that is not what progress is all about you are telling me about how ateneo has become an ivory tower rising above the silence of Mt. Apo so unlike our times when rooms are crowded when noise grow like grasses on the wild fields uninhabited

let me ask you what happened to the playgrounds of the children and the chapel where Fr. Dot says mass all day is the pine tree still there and the pond beside where the gold fish are swimming?

let me sense the essence of our lives not getting much not accumulating power not really going back to dusty chairs but just being here without acquiring and yet still feeling so whole and complete in that peace and quiet inside our hearts under that tree that they have cut twenty years ago

RIC S. BASTASA
A Philosophy About The Wall

his philosophy is absurd that this world is a big wall and we all bump on it and then we die and so

one day to prove his philosophy he rides in his car starts the engine and on a full speed bumps the wall of his house indeed his car like paper folded upon his head crushed and bloody he instantaneously died for one thing i agree with him death is never a lie.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Philosophy In Life

when you read that poem about deleting Maureen i regret to have given you the wrong spelling for delet...

i know it lacks an e.
but i do not wish to delet it anymore or even edit it.

i have this philosophy in life you know do not go back leave all your tracks as they were once made

do not edit life let them see how mistakes were made and how they need not be corrected simply because you know that people are patient and they understand the common ground of our humanity effects, not eros.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Philosophy, And This Sense Of Respect For The Other.

for a poem to be real he is lecturing me like i am one of his students in class it must have political color

like a student leader put to prison the one with balls fighting against an oppressive system raging against the tide it must be a questioning poem one that lives in quarter storms

it must have the love story of a rebel war torn places secret codes
and not subservient

love is not an issue in poetry or identity crisis these are all nothing but foolishness existentialism? what for?

intellectual masturbation that gives you
nothing
but selfish ejaculation

i have respect for him he is alive and fighting and kicking and revolting soon he will be caught and killed and his families massacred
perhaps
God forbids
To me however,
Life is too short for all these
and so
here i am writing anything that comes to my mind topics range
whatever comes along ants, or reptiles or sun or urination
or filial pity or
envy,
or premature deaths
or mourning widows lost kids and even about the lost cents that the houseboy keeps on looking

This is life.
A phenomenon, it does not matter if nothing is important.

I see, and so i write,
There are feelings, nearest to my heart and i hear all the sounds

I echo,
This is the resounding.

Life ends, sometimes, others do not like it.
I welcome everything.
My arms are always open, like a port at sea
Like a cave less the vines.

RIC S. BASTASA
a picture in black and white always brings nostalgia
for instance the picture of mama and papa
beside their daughters
named leonor with the pony tail
betty with the tiny curls
and delia
with her expensive smile (she seems to frown in all the other pictures)
and there was this bouncy, plump boy
wrapped with silky cloth
that mama held so tightly in her arms
as papa sat on a big rosewood chair
like general mcarthur
not afraid of the war
his left hand inside his pant pocket while
the other hand was holding mama's waist
i know that boy
with a big smile as though life is a big joke

that boy was supposedly their only boy

it was me

and then ten years later my brother came i did not know why there was no other picture like that

a family, for the time being
let my brother tell you
we are never close and i do not like
to tell the truth

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of A Bound Man

one time
by chance i see a man bound with ropes
all over his body
that even his toes and fingers cannot move

i recall the feeling once when i let time bound me when i let time pass by me and i have done nothing to change
who i am
and what i am supposed to be when my being is simply left to the winds and the seasons
to the blackness of the night and to the bleakness of my days when i just lay on the floor
crying
when i just let the door close upon its face
when the windows are useless without its hands
when the floor has no mouth to make the sound at all that even the termites shy away when i feel the nearness of death hushing upon my ears
when i simply close my eyes
and let things
hop and hover upon
my being when i have forgotten
even to say
to hell with
life....
A Picture Of A Bound Man Who Forgot To Say...

one time
by chance i see a man bound
with ropes
all over his body
that even his toes and
fingers cannot move

i recall the feeling once
when i let time bound me
when i let time pass by me
and i have done nothing
to change
who i am
and what i am supposed to be
when my being
is simply left to the winds
and the seasons
to the blackness of the night
and to the bleakness of my days
when i just lay on the floor
crying
when i just let the door close upon
its face
when the windows are useless
without its hands
when the floor has no mouth to make the
sound at all that
even the termites shy away
when i feel the nearness of death
hushing upon my ears
when i simply close my eyes
and let things
hop and hover upon
my being
when i have forgotten
even to say
to hell with
life....
A Picture Of A Cat

a gray cat on a brown window sill blue bird on a green twig against a white sky black man on a red chair white butterfly against a white eye

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of An Engaged Couple

i had the chance of looking again at the old picture of an engaged couple on a marriage that did not push through on a separation that was so sudden like the horses of a race track i have seen their eyes
they were so in love
i have seen their closeness like a vine on a trellis like the freshness of a morning glory facing the new sun

somethings seemingly are not what they really are and i ask myself: where is that possibility of a wrong?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of Geese Landing On The Water

those who had taken the heights
who had wings
who must go back home still shall use the same feet
to land
on the water

it is this grace of defeat that i see

to be back home and not to drown

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of Greed

on one hand
he carries a big loaf of bread
on the other
he carries a
basket
of the same loaf of bread

on his head
is another basket of the same loaf
of bread

a little child spreads his hands for a loaf of bread

then he speeds
his way
as he bites
a loaf of bread in his mouth

the little child
follows him
and there he is closing the door of his house all made of bread

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of Me

i can easily draw
myself
if i have a pencil and a paper i could have easily given you a picture of me, i have the eyes of a Chinese immigrant my eyelids thicker than the bush that you always trim along the fence my lips are thin like the petals of a rose some men mistake them for that of a woman's but that will be so much of a misleading fact like the direction of the road that they changed days ago some visitors have gone astray.
i am still in the middle of this journey so my cheeks are smooth with only a few scratches like the one that you see when the cat scratches the wall of the kitchen when it gets hungry and shouts and yet you do not really mind at all.
my face is black and white nothing gray
there is no color like a landscape of fields and pathways.
you have seen me once but you never recognize me because you relied more on the picture i had on the poems that you read. i like to see myself less the distortions of the modern abstract art.
But i am more of the Gothic Grecian-roman eclectic type.
You see you want to put me as a portrait in the canvass like what everyone wants.

Look, look carefully, finally this is the portrait of me.
A dip your finger in my eyes.
It is cold and it is passing like the ordinary wind one boring day.
A Picture Of Mountains And Mist

The mountains
too have moods
in its shadows and
hues

and look at the mists on its bodies
it could be their souls

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of Papa

here is papa's picture before he died 30 years ago

beside his izuzu pick-up carrying a bottle of gin on one hand and a gun on his holster his right hand holds the waist of a young woman in white shorts

he has a pipe on his mouth a smoke over his head and he is grinning like a macho lover

that young woman is not my mother he says she was his true love but she was taken away by the rebels

mother died when i was six but i already understood what was really going on papa was very proud of me he liked my drawings and my games

i am the only boy
i do not smoke and i do not drink and i married
the only woman that i really love.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of Papa Bear And Baby Bear

our weakness is to see a Madonna in every creature

a mama bear
and a baby bear

the skin of the earth is cold
and melting

the sun that watches all these can manipulate warmth
and then
exploit

the heels of Achilles are exposed

how many of us
shall die without noticing it?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of Roger Y.

he falls asleep
rocking himself on a molave
chair

he is the model of life in old exhaustion

his mouth is open
the wind enters freely

his hands on the arm of a chair

his feet on the marble railing of the veranda of the house

hard and cold.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of Survival

on the shallow lake
lies a red rubber boat abandoned beside a dead coral

far from here is a very long bridge that connects two islands now what we have here is only a picture of the possibility of survival there is no assurance that life cannot be a misery and properly a subject for another literature.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of Two Farm Kids

the little girl knows how to stare at the camera
she does not know how to smile
on her old tattered
clothes

you think the little boy at her side
knows how to make that compromising
smile

neither,
nor,
that is the truth

at the time when the camera clicked
his wisdom
tooth was aching.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Picture Of You On The First Day Of Autumn

wearing a blue sweater black pair of pants & a white undershirt

you smile standing upon a road of asphalt

behind you are the trees letting go
their leaves of yellow

RIC S. BASTASA
A Piece Of Joclimara

“I write what comes to mind.
It is like sharing a piece of yourself.
I guess I am just a lover of words”

We call it spontaneity, something that Comes from an impulse

Effortlessly,
There is nothing premeditated,
Like a burst of applause

Indigenous, something that grows
Without any cultivation like some ferns
And lichens or moss on the rocks
Of our watered paths

That which nature gives
Freely and unconstrained
Like sunshine like rain

In fact, this spontaneity Is the highest and best form of efficiency

it is Not forethought
it is As instinctive as breathing
As involuntary as Suspense and surprise
Combined less the promptitude

An ad-lib,
is that what you are,
My friend, and automatic hi
And automatic hello?

A spontaneous combustion,
A spontaneous propulsion?

Like the three Princes of Serendip
Whose discoveries are made
By accident and sagacity and not
By an old quest, or conquest

Yes, I agree, the poems work that way.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Piece Of Myself... And For Myself people in my place worry about me why i do not worry about next year the next planting season after this year's bumpy harvest where every room in the house is filled with corn.

people in my place ask me where shall i live after next year and you should soon inherit the house that i built for 50 years.

they all worry about me with all those particular items like what shall happen to the glasses in my cabinet or the white car in my blue garage or my gold watch and my silver spoons and my china plates they worry about my gold fish in my aquarium who shall feed them when i am no longer home people worry a lot about me and i begin sometimes when i get tired listening to all the questions asking: why me? why do you worry all about me?

i am not even dead yet and have no plans retiring from life's works like the arts and this pottery and this poetry

people worry about me and never about us.

i am tired and all i need is sleep.
and i do not worry at all.

because i know that if i am dead then i am dead
and i do not ask for more not even on extended dreams not even on anything perhaps they worry about me because they all worry about themselves perhaps i am their mirror or perhaps they think that with my behavior i should not have lived in the first place.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Place Of The Heart

this place is not a room for sadness sorrow is a stranger here and cannot stay that long there are no sonorous eyes here not a place for emaciated cheeks and unshaven beards this is not the place for mourning no one comes here wearing the black shirt of fasting
this is the place for passion (not promiscuity) this is a private place for our shared whispers the zip-less reunion of two souls not wearing any name tags on their bones when you come here it is because you have decided to be free from morality from the mortality of your prisoners welcome, bare yourself, brace yourself for another experience someone you love shall be summoned to completely make you home again.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Place To Go

there must be a place between life and death

not the purgatory
for it is they say between hell and heaven there is a place between sadness and happiness between being famous and being so ordinary there is this place where you are so safe and unaffected Aristotle said it:

the middle, that backbone.

be with me there, between life and death, this floater between heaven and earth, this feather, this leaf falling without having to reach the bottom of things this suspension this silence this lovely solitude.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Place...

an important tool breaks and you make do with what is available disregard comfort and face what is in front of you you are brief but need not be concise

the situation demands it this is the hiding

RIC S. BASTASA
A Plan...

in bed the rich and old couple is preoccupied with their plans for their death and discussions on who should be heir is finalized

meanwhile those outside the house pretending to clean this and that are thinking too plainly about burial and claims

they have also secret plans of their own because their own respective futures are
waiting

like someone without any backpack at the train station heading to the fun promised by the big city

RIC S. BASTASA
A Plate For The Much Needed Ecstasy

a lengthy poem is unfair.

it takes half of my coffee and a fourth size of my cookie deprieves me of my morning walk and makes me rush and gives me shame why i am late in my office again i blame it for my misery when it could have been short and yet provide me a plate for the much needed ecstasy

RIC S. BASTASA
A Platonic Affair....

it is evening and it is cold.
the table is alone with its four feet intact. on top of the roof is the moon, and it is too alone, just like my own thought of you,
alone,

i wait for you and then you come.
i am sitting and you stand there and i am thinking
if you are thinking about me or that you are here because i told you to be here like i am one kind of compulsion, like i am an order i do not wish more about this matter because all i need is the voluntary hand, you gaze at me and i let my eyes fall to the ground, i am embarrassed,

and you suggest something that i must take off i do not shed my skin or my underwear and this is what you have misunderstood from the beginning of our meeting,

i do not want you to undress me or me undressing you this time, all i need is words, soothing ones, calm syllables, love that once i lost because i have given it to another because for some time, long time ago, i have been too foolish.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Playhouse

glass angels
tin can soldiers house of sticks japanese cotton dolls plastic miniature beds bears and small trees princess with laces queens and kings with their golden crowns
fantasy castles children's hands
and chinky eyes
and the sounds of their laughters

we mix truths with lies we put gold in mud
we sew dirty rugs
with silver threads
our dreams laden with some harsh realities you and me
and some of those not like us
hazy, and foggy
and too thin to be air

RIC S. BASTASA
A Plea To Poetry

poetry please
please,

be true to me
as i have always been true to you,

when you leave me
i shall surely die.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pledge Of The Heart....

i am sworn to the flocks of
silence

only my hands
speak for me

i bleed
but my mouth is cursed when i begin to speak

the world trembles

the storms begin to rage like a mad dog

the rain pours heavily on the roof

and the paths camouflage as thick grass

there is only one way
back

through the silent flocks of the heart

nature has done what is best

to keep the order
sun and moon must not meet

RIC S. BASTASA
memories pour out like the rains of july
you are drenched fully wet

you stay put and feel the cold you do not run away for shelter cars are blowing their horns you are in the middle of the traffic people look at you with horror

do not expect pity or concern
there is no sympathy available in the middle of a very busy road in the city there is nothing that stays focused on you on a heavy downpour

memories keep falling and you are carried away

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem

i like to read your poem and i like to say it is a poem there is a difference
of course
between the two statements i like to read it is your poem but i may after reading
that saying that i am honest though and can distinguish a poem from one that is not a poem that your poem is one that i only like to read and may say that it is not your poem but it is yours you are sure of that but what i am saying is that i am reading your poem but i feel that it is not a poem after all i can say one when i read one so i just say i like reading your poem which could not really be a poem not even prose
i just like it but it is not anything about what i feel i like it to be a poem or prose
i am reading it, it isn't like this one for instance you know that
now.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem A Day

a poem a day
is a pain in my neck.
and that
is everyday.
and everyday is also a pain
in my neck.
and my neck
however,
has no mouth
to complain.
i need a massage.
i need a little
pampering.
perhaps a kiss
in my ass from an innocent
moral religious
woman

no, do i have really to be banal
about my search for the holy?

never felt immaculate but i will try not to be vile
and irreverent
to emotions

into the sacrosanct
the righteous
seraphic saintly sublime self into the valley of death i will still sing my song.

truly, i must be in this daily dose of pain in the neck
poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem About A Dream

i live in a dream
because every time i am there
you are there too,

you are silent
you look at the ceiling you glimpse at me with so much understanding

i try to understand myself
too,
on this harsh journeys in a boat, with rough waves docking on a land
leading to a path where the door is too narrow for me to get inside

it is the dream that has become more real it has become my true desire and you are always there you do not look at me that long there is still this shame this fear about what happens next after an encounter

you shed off norms and even without completely understanding what is this all about you give in

there is no love here there is only a transition of feelings there is nothing that will last long here commensurate with the lifespan of this dream when we wake up
we do not know who we are we are complete strangers but we sometimes remember not completely though about that mutual sharing

i have been good, and so are you in that strangeness of our silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is stored force in your hands running through your fingers

it is erotic.

there are eight hills below those sturdy hands
there is tiny circular pond deprived of water

nearby is a forest with bushes black and bereft of leaves pygmy hair

you see a bone but you rather call it a tree of life

it is so erotic

there are no clouds which are heavy some drops of rain pour down there is an explosion inside the mind it is not yet on the month of July

it is so erotic
it is life.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem About Death

Is still early

the sun is still crazy

over aridity

one gets bored with a hat and uneasy now with the usual shade of an old tree what choice is there?

that desert has killed so many travelers and no one came back to tell the exact story

how it happened

the usual thing is curiosity and restlessness

and then finally because of too much loneliness one finally ignores the sun and embarks on the unanswered questions that lie in that desert where death tells its own story and then you will like it and so like the rest

you too, do not come back and when finally the sun sets and darkness comes there is peace in those lights that spring from the windows of houses and then after a moment too, die, in the serenity of the silence

of the night.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem About Emptiness

there is word that is written and it does not stop there as a word it becomes a syllable it wriggles and duplicates itself like a viral infection (sadly, for this may be the cause of death and suffering)
and having translated itself into a multiplicand
it threatens you with bifocal words acquiring a scent and sound a siren's call the sound of the broken shell losing its voice (not the wind, do not intrigue the wind with this
for it's free and indifferent to its independence) speak about the sea and the waves that it is giving all for free and a show of hellos and goodbyes of to and fro of come and go (this may make sense now) it is a journey never ending pretending to finish it on the shore
but no
it simply reaches there and leave a mark of the blankness of the sand wet and dries again the laps of the land which also makes a gimmick of its own mimicking the sea it throws the sands back to it kisses it too
and then goes back to its still state staring but not really minding what is too ordinary to behold
this union and separation this thing that happens all the time
seemingly
there is no joy in this not even sorrow
just a repetition of what must happen and what shall happen all over again it is never ending
a circle
much like a hole
this emptiness that God only fills.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem About Excitement To Something Huge And Spread Like Space

i am tiny, like a nit wit, and i look at you spread like wall paper on the wall something is beautiful there like a face something in there excites me like a pulse on my wrist i am tiny and i feel so tiny watching you like a wall paper on the wall, you are indifferent
i am excited like a chick hatching from a shell
i am growing feathers like a chicken something in you is so huge like a world that i have never been i am excited like a puppy to my master getting out of his car i love this feeling, this tiny feeling this world that is expanding you are my world now, and i fall into a regret,
when tiny becomes lost and when the hands melt while groping for the truth about beauty that is lost about existence that is deleted simply because you are too huge like space

and i, this atom, unseen, colliding,
invincible, and now unknown.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem About The Rotten Self

it is a law that every human being accepts as is: it is always the soft side that is hidden

sort of Achilles's heel since we do not want to be destroyed in an instant it is the hard side that is always shown a carapace

an armor of the body
a steel polo shirt
a pair of pants made of platinum

a bronze heart
a brain full of lead
tin hands
iron feet

the soft side is left like a fruit that you have forgotten inside the cabinet because of your selfishness that inability to accept that all things are meant to be given away

one day
you will find all the pulp consumed by the ants have hope get the remaining seed with dried fiber like hair on all over its body

take it and sow it
today.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem After A Walk This Afternoon

dust on my feet on my rubber shoes stamp a mound of mud drying itself the afternoon sun so hot this little boy follows me with his gaze did i appear so big to his attention or the world is too small for him to play ball?

we look amazed to the same birds too playing in the skies chasing the ones not having the same feathers the sun sets spreading orange colors waning and now sprinkles some gray hues the boys playing basketball sweat like they were bathing on the rain, their bodies gleaming like some barbecue on spiced oil time to go home, it is dark, i have no reason to stay the little boy follows me towards the road where the flourescent light is turned on by the guards then i look back, the boy was gone the whole block is lost eaten by this night and on the island of light on this road i stand, waiting for my ride back home then i look back again, i smile a while that little boy was me, i got lost somehow i touch my head, i am setting a new perspective

RIC S. BASTASA
i don't remember...

you show me a face
a hand
even a beautiful naked
body

you sing for me again you even dance
you wiggle
you jump over a fence
you run
to a cliff and say you give your body
a fall

you roll over the hills like a ball of fire in the universe

but i still do not remember (the pain is still there and i keep hiding from all these corners)

no matter how i try
i still cannot remember that i for once have given you a chance to exist you ask me again...

i still do not remember if i have chosen the words so well to write you a self....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem By Louise Gluck, Now Rate It Zero, You Have Taste

Remember that time you made the wish?

I make a lot of wishes.

The time I lied to you about the butterfly. I always wondered what you wished for.

What do you think I wished for?

I don't know. That I'd come back, that we'd somehow be together in the end.

I wished for what I always wish for.
I wished for another poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem By Merlie Alunan

Fallen in battle in the mountains of Santa Catalina, Negros Oriental, 1987 A.D., a hill warrior talks to his daughter, three years old, from the trail where his bones lie unburied.

Sure I had them in my backpack, the piyaya, just as I had promised, and the baye-baye from 'Nay Asyon. She was asking about the grandchild she'd never seen. Also a comb for your mother.

The road from Siaton blew up. Crossing the valley to our hut to see you for the last time, I left no footprints anyone could find. So many things I couldn't bring with me- my gun, my boots, left behind forever in the hidden trail. Unseen, I watched your mother waiting while you slept, combing her hair by the gaslight with slow patient fingers. If they ever come and cut your mother's hair and bind her to bed, run and hide. Whatever you see, do not cry. You will grow up, little one, bearer of this vicious bond-anger of your daughters, revenge of your sons.

posted by merlie alunan @ 2:05 AM

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Composed By The Lady By The Sea

a

garland

of calachuchi

from me and chuchi

welcome to the island of desire now you must choose between me and chuchi just one of us but not both do not spoil this love broth

ahoy!

RIC S. BASTASA
just imagine what happens when you have not eaten even for once in a day? or a week?
just once
or if you have not urinated or defecated?

is that the reason why you are writing
poems in a day?
or just once?

to eat you live
you die if you do not defecate as simple as a rock to lay your heavy head a warm grass for bed a moon for inspiration sunshine for that beautiful blush

as simple as i am full and must vomit or vacate what lies inside that wants to always go out
fly away and then be free
disowning that once those wings were mine those shackles
that once fettered
the bones of my mind

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Early One Morning...

for why should a poem be so caged in form and a slave to clapping? let the poem be the ordinary man in the park the woman buying merchandise in the market place the child playing on the beach under so much sun
let it not be a fence
a manicured lawn
a piece of architecture another form of white marble sculpture let it wriggle like a worm on a Sunday rain a butterfly hovering on that wild flower a grasshopper on the grass sands of the shore sunlight and sunrise a cup of coffee every morning a sleeping pill on our anxious nights an insomniac woman begging for sleep a mad woman on the street a soldier writing a letter for his wife at home let it be nothing important at all let it be something always new no dictator here, no form of government, let it be anarchy, and let there be no diplomacy let it it be fluid as a melting wax on water let it be everything and nothing too... let it be felt and be not understood.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For J.M.

you don't bother me even if you leave even if you are gone for weeks and you do not tell me where you are if you curse me i simply listen i am attuned to curses
since birth
i can always remember how curses hurt for the first time but often repeated and repeated like a chant in fact it becomes comforting on the idea that you still make me feel that i exist

if you are a thorn
i refuse to be another thorn how can a rose bloom if we are all thorns
in the garden
of Eden?

you don't irritate me i have all discarded what sensitivity is left inside me there is no more
lethargy
neither can you find its opposite that unworded
ecstacy

you see at the age of thirty i have already known myself well rounded stone
hard and smooth
and
freed from the freckles of feelings

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A Cold Woman....

gradually i feel the coldness of your touch your words are sour the change is noticeable

i do not beg for affection i do not force myself in your coldness you need the warmth of the sun i am not the sun you must need someone other than my begging which i do not have for now i know where to go

i go home
and my home is myself

you have become a stranger an alien port where my boat cannot dock
perhaps this is what goodbye is all about a ripe fruit which is not for my picking it is now all yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A Deep Love Of Mine

how deep is
my love
you ask me

put a shark
i can have it

put another whale
it can still accommodate

how deep is
my love
you ask?

got a submarine launch it

but...let me ride
with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A Friend In Ohio

i shall be the chronicler of your pain

i do not understand it actually
i pretend i feel it

i have respect for it and so i keep writing

it is you who knows
everything
about you and your
pain
it is only you who knows where the cure is

when you leave us
we understand

there is no cure
and that is the saddest fact that i have written

i am the chronicler
of your pain
inside that moon
that host with some blood stains

i am the sadder part of
you
that spectator
when you pass by
that spot where two flaming suns
just recently
set.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A Great Poet

by the sea of manila
ebbs and tides
ruins of the old war
nay, all those who died
and raped and rampaged
rolled the sadness flashed door die the men all
families vanished
armed only with rusty guns swampy places they hid undecided support from the U.S. nonetheless they all fought courage unwavering bravery surging in those valleys and hills and mountains onward the faith of those who prayed no betrayal till the war was won.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A Great Poet (Revised)

by the sea of manila
ebbs and tides
ruins of the old war
nay, all those who died
and raped and rampaged
rolled the sadness flashed
do or die the men all
oozing in misery

families vanished

armed only with rusty guns
swampy places they hid
undecided support from the U.S.
nonetheless they all fought
courage unwavering bravery surging
in those valleys and hills and mountains
onward the faith of those who prayed
no betrayal till the war was won.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A Leaf

for a tree which for years has not known the vein
of a leaf

one night in a hundred
years
the shadow of a stalk
and the
maps of a midrib
and the
giggle of the guard
cell
can give it the hope for flowers

as morning breaks when the petiole gives up with dignity
it falls
back to the embrace of the burial
hands of the earth

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A Liar

the words that you say do not anymore make waves to the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A Loved One

i can help you but because i love you more than you know i refrained from taking you from the quicksand i look at you struggling for life i want you to struggle some more watching if you can save yourself i am testing myself too to the future comfort that when i am gone you will still know how to live by yourself that quicksands could have been avoided i could have helped you immediately & easily but i wanted you to help yourself first i want to see you stronger this time and even wiser
i am getting old and time shall soon make me irrelevant in your life soon you must survive on your own and when i see you finally on this state i can say to myself: i have truly loved you because i have never allowed you to be weak.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A.

do not lose your stinger
keep it

without it you will perish sting if you must but do not leave your stinger behind this is the bee speaking

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For A. M.

i know of a guy
who hates pictures
he does not own
a camera despite his money

a fact that he lost most
of them
in anything except pictures

by social conventions as he is in this circle somehow he cannot escape pictures taken

but he would see to it that his body is covered his face behind
the rest of the other happy faces because

no matter how he tries to expand the size of his smile
his sadness still invades his eyes like a skin disease without cure

i tell him once about this noticeable phenomenon and he breaks into tears
like a mad woman
put inside bars

there is this fear this certain sadness that stays within

somehow we are able to hide it as strangers knowing how to conceal their names on ships which are about to face the storm

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Are We Here?

there is this sickness that comes and you have no power to block it it is like a monkey that comes at your temple door and you have no way of driving it you leave leaving everything important to that monkey spreading banana peelings on the altar of your sacred nook you watch at a distance where the monkey plays monkey upon itself
you are sleepy,
you fall into a deep slumber the monkey comes inside that dream and you are helpless without your hands and feet you cough, you struggle to vomit there is no cure for this sickness nothing comes out and you are feeling toxic that is why we are here.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Allan Jimenez (Written In Arvisu House, 1981)

If you open my door Without knocking and You simply come in Without myself
What would you say?
It’s been a time
We cleaned rooms
Scrubbed toilet tiles
Into the desired whiteness Of saints and souls
We designed rooms
Where no rain
Can get in
And surprise us
Of its pouring
About the damp
About the wet
Or the colds we get
We cannot imagine Accidents do happen
Despite strict precautions Of the perfect prefect
Of the other sect
We cannot situate
We at wrong hours
Inside wrong rooms
Talking about wrongs
And we talk
All about us and It talks all about us
The stay Silent and still
The closed gate
That must by now
Be opened
Or I get Muriatic and drink it
As my morning milk
Crazy
Now if you happen
To come into my room Without myself
As I have gone Far elsewhere
Without myself
Leaving any note
Or sign that I would Be coming back
To this room
Clean and tidy
What else can you say?
What else would I say?
I cannot promise
I cannot scare you
Elsewhere I go
With another routine
Hi, hello, how are you?
Anyway
The scheduled morning prayers
Of this sad house
Clean and tidy
Shall recite themselves Perfectly
Without me
Or us
And sure Everything everything
Would still be all right
All right.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For An Old Man....

i once heard of a man who spoke to his horse
when his wife died during the war
when his only son
succumbed to an unknown disease

i dismissed the story
as another
unusual imagination of an Anton
as i was unable to relate to said grief

somehow as i aged
i am beginning to remember said story which i now think must be true for i must tell you

i have learned how to speak to a tree
and even to the sea and then to the chair in my room
beside my bed

it is not a story of another lonely man
i am telling you
with caution for someday you shall be another philosopher
who will learn this trick in order to live and be fully alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Another Friend Who Was Offended By My Stare....

when you see a tree on top of a hill, do you sometimes think that it can be something else?

or perhaps someone, perhaps it was once a man who had gone astray and by bad karma, The Heavens, punished it to be a tree forever it cannot move when it rains, neither can it run against the storm it is stuck, helpless on its immobility sometimes i think that way i.e. making stories about those that cannot talk to me it is not a fabrication, far from a lie, it is just trying to know what we have not seen or felt before, everything can be,

everyone can be someone else depending on who sees it and when or where and why,

and so when i see you, i sometimes stare at you and you get offended, and i do not explain, i imagine you as greater than yourself the possible brightest star in the sky or another sun in the future of another galaxy

far away from me

as i regress into ash, into another grain of sand, into nothingness that you perhaps have not ever imagined even for once.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Bernardo....

by the rising of the sun er the falling of the rain rolling hills and nagging splitting mountains arbor thoughts along the narrow trails of the paths of armed men and women rowing the rough seas of sulu down to the forests of jolo over the highways of zamboanga free the kidnapped victims assure the families and kins shoo the sadness of those affected untie the chains that bind them nothing to give and part away calm the screams and allay the fears into the peaceful negotiations out of the snake pits now, submit to peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Black Friday

close of reenactments unfolds
again
the plasticity of human society
as all the bigwigs of Christianity
shall wear their sad faces for the death of Christ,
some will scream
some will make some points of our sinful nature
some will narrate
the life and redemption of God
who has taken the
pains of man,

close
the crowd is maddening not a needle can insert itself and make its presence felt,

i am angry
at all these where solitude is choked
where suffering is made a show where contemplative thinking is chopped

i calm myself
into a reflection
that honestly

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
i could be one of them...

after all,
i am still human...

RIC S. BASTASA
there is always time to write about a white butterfly how it flutters early morning from leaf to leaf
along with some bees and bluebirds,

how fragile how light how gentle how bright

how time flies like a paper
with the wind
how restive are the eyes upon the meadows of the plain there is always a chance to write about love and affections the warmth of the sea at night the hush of the breeze the calmness of the moon the sleepy waves

how i wish there is us here, i touch your lips i ask you: let us savor this privacies of silences kill me with happiness

i am yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Desire......

she whispers
to your ear that she just finished
her night bath and that she will wait for you till dawn
as the perfume of her hair runs to the veins of your neck down to the deepest part of your bones.

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
A Poem For E. & H.

UNABLE to find what is due them from their very own country they go to America

despite the fact that they can be discriminated there or the fact that they are second class citizens in that great nation where the apple dreams are growing they must remain
take things as is rather than be hungry and starve in the land of their people just this morning

i see how lovely they are as a couple
in the U.S. of A
HE holds her like a rare diamond gem a fragile flower of Florence She allows him like He is her surrounding mountain range Love echoes rebounding on every corner of the hills That's them
Behind is the crowd
And the tree and the grass and the shadows of yesteryear

We who remain her shall say all the best for them those who love truly and faithfully all those years

Love feels betrayed sometimes by its own country But for both of them Love knows where to go and still survive
as lovely as it can be in any place
at any time
whatever be the reason why.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Her

This heart
of mine

Must not be Given to Others

it will explode

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Impermanence...

even the stones in your garden
we do not know really shifted places

do they know how to travel?
we ask

even the sands have learned the flight of birds on invisible wings of our very own minds

we do not ask since then
all these manifestations of impermanence the flitting moments those invincible phantoms of the hours

i am convinced,
me for instance

where am i now? i still ask the same question
to the moon which had long gone into the corner
of dawn....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Mama

thinking about mother on a special day like this transforms you into a child again, the images flash:

that little boy who hides behind her skirt when the
a stranger arrives in the house, her arms warm around when when the sound of thunder arrives on the roof

the hush of the lullaby, the hammock, the way she puts you to sleep on that blanket-cradle, that early morning when she fries the egg and fish and boils water for your milk, and the scent of newly cooked rice, those dancing feet that teach you how to dance, those stories

of fairies and giants and princesses, some tears begin to fall but you wipe them out remembering how she tells you to be brave always, when she left you, you held her hand too, telling her,

'mama,
do not be sad, do not fear, after this short while (as she was in pain) an angel waits for you to guide you to your new home' and she closes her eyes, leaving you the most peaceful smile on earth that you cannot ever forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Mother-In-Law

On the rainy season
I see some tadpoles
On the pond
Near the house
When mother-in-law arrives
I hear all of them croaking

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Ms. Unl

you may want a poem for your life, maybe tomorrow, something that you can borrow
life,
a lifeful of life, a bed of sex not roses, a pool of orgasms not the usual organisms that you feed to kill the killing hours, not doves or kittens a number of hugs, those that make you warm and huggable i want to give you these poems today, perhaps in my wet dreams, in my dirty mind, perhaps i will swallow the whole of your body and savor your soul in the poems that i will write for you, and perhaps you may like them sublimally, subconsciously, like the way you sometimes pretend to hate my smell, they way you detest my virtual presence,

but i know you well enough, you only like something small and kind this kiss
this little respect from my simple line something like

i miss you
and be good, sleep tight, and have some sweet dreams
my dear.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For My Beloved

i will sing a song
for you
a sweet song
more like
a whisper
from my soul
for you
my beloved

it is a song
from my heart
filled with
so much
love

it is a song
of smooth words like a chinese porcelain

a song of joy
more of bliss
that early
this morning
you wake me up from such a stupor

it is a song
about you loving me
even if i have forgotten you
sometimes

it is a song of praise and worship
because you my beloved is always My God
alleluia! alleluia!
I bow to God
i am his servant.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For My Country

Beijing is fine
the summer palace is cool the tombs and temples are dignified and mysterious and for the whole of china and its people and lakes and moats
and trees and gardens
i am mystified but

back home
then where my heart sings The Philippines is still my own home for it is here where my heart is beating
where my soul is at peace
and true to my own patriotism
there is no other place
that i love
this Philippines, this country that welcomes me
wherever i was lost.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For My Wife

there is no card for you or a bouquet of red roses no box of chocolates no phone call no text message on this day

what you will have is me and all the days of our lives together hand in hand
every moment
from the first union
till we last

till we are gone and have nothing anymore to cherish and remember

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Prolix

Tediously wordy.

the Latin prolixus (extended, poured),
from liquere (to flow), the source of words such as liquid, liquor,

licorice.

Now do you see the connection - why consuming lots of Tanduay 65 make the teachers of Cancainap prolix?

Let me try using the word,

No one has ever called her prolix.
At a seminar sponsored by the DECS, Miss Manolita mumbled a few introductory words and then sat in silence, eyebrows arched,
arms folded,
for the remaining two loveless days.

She misses someone
No, not the prolix poet
But the sylvan lover.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Restraint
	here are acts which we never did not because we cannot do them but because our nature rebels and we cannot afford to lose a simple revolution of our selves inner wars that the lover beside us cannot feel these are acts which we decided not to commit because by doing so we retain the original flavors of our dignities

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Rosie

the castle of paper that we create from a sheet of white
bond paper
stands on the brown
table
tall and proud so
they say
but we know Rosie
that this is just plain creativity
could be a way of expressing your self’s discontent of the surroundings
the foul air
the heavy rain that seems not to stop the muddy path
to the market and the church
betraying fate
and foolish friends but you know Rosie
very well that nothing lasts forever
the water paper
the paper castle
gathers dusts
and soon we are fed up
on this
i am going away and you too
but we shall not be together for i also get fed up on you as you shall soon
to me.
A Poem For Solitude

the sun comes here
faithfully
without the sound of the band the grasses meet it without so much fuss the long trees stand there and there is no dancing the leaves listen to the passing wind the dew slowly give in to an unnoticeable disappearance an exit without the goodbyes the rituals of parting sweet-sorrows of a Romeo and Juliet nevertheless
this is everyday
a solitude that everyone knows and hence does not talk about except me
who wants perhaps to make a record of events before i finally pass away on the solitude of nature
on the beauty that the mind sees and accepts
and simmer without much fuss.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Someone Out There it is only when i keep the rules concerning distancing that we shall feel the essence of our union, after night of our fusion, i need to walk away the following morning i trek upon a mountain and stand at its highest peak to once more see more of

you,

it is only this when i become convinced that i need and love you and that i must, as a matter of grace and giving, that i must leave and then forget you, because i know your pain when i am with you, that gut that gluts in there.

it is only the distance that heals my pain, time waters it, and then i become dignified as a man.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For The Crabs

i don't hate crabs
at least

they have what you
call a mentality.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For The Dead Villain

i do not really think that we should quarrel about a dead man

lest i think that you are fixed
like a cancerous mole in your cheek the dead has no more power over us we are alive and we can kick we can always move on using our power of locomotion i do not think that we should worry where he is buried or whether he should still get the honors which he did not really deserve

let him be, he is the wind that simply passes us all and then be gone for bad or good
it does not really matter

the dead has no more power over us if we do not forget, then forever we are damned.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For The Heart, Its Day...

on the day of the hearts why should you let that heart weep?

do not be cruel, give the heart what is due for its day

give it a dose of happy pills, add more blood to its vessels, put more moisture to its skin color it by all means with the brightness of twenty roses, red as red, bright as the light of two happy mornings,

give it its night too,
not as dark as that evil thought gray perhaps, a little confusion will do, but if you can, make that evening romantic, a little teasing finger, lips that search and find, longings satisfied, if only illusions, then why not?

give it a drink it deserves, vodka or tequila, make it dance, a little tip for tipsy, raise its hands, in surrender, curl it in bed, and have it be filled with love,

a meat cooked well and filled with gravy,
a salad of fresh lettuce and tomatoes garnished with Italy,

red wine, red cherry, satisfy the tongue and the nose,
more fire in the body, rest the arms,
close those eyes,
live those dreams.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For The Higthest Leader Of Our Land

Quiapo Underpass
Some blossoms of graffiti
We are tired of lies
The whole year round
Chasing tails
The cats and dogs.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For The Silliman Writing Fellows

Writing Fellows / 1968
Alfred A. Yuson
Emmanuel Lacaba
Donel Paccis
Armando Ravanzo
Lamberto Caballes
Rene Bonsubre
Cesar Mella Jr.
Rene Estella Amper
Urias Almagro
Dionisio Gabriel

Writing Fellows / 1973
Vidal Armamento
Mauro Avena
Jolein Cuandra
Maria Cristina Ferreros
Feliz Fojas
Jaime An Lim
Meng Magno
Oriel Muspratt
Cecilia Nava
Antonio Orogo Jr.
Catherine Salazar
Angelito Santos
Anthony L. Tan

Writing Fellows / 1979
Geraldine Maayo
Susan Lara
Jessie Badillo
Vicente Vivencio Bandillo
Leslie Lofranco
Elson Elizaga
Mathew Kuzhippallil
Anthony Tan
Priscilla Supnet Macansantos
Letty Salanga
Enrico Enerio
Henry Villalva
Ernesto Superal Yee

Writing Fellows / 1982
Rhodora Espinosa
Seth Florentino
Victoria Kapauan
Fanny HB Llego
Patria Rivera
Merlie Alunan

Writing Fellows / 1994
Ma. Rhodora Ancheta
Alma Anonas
Calbi Asain
Ruben Canlas Jr.
Melchor Cichon
Edeliza Cruz
Alessandra G. L. Gonzalez Nerisa del Carmen Guevarra Doreen Jose
Rene Ledesma Jr.
Lilibeth Rose Mercado
Esperanza Nuiqui
Michael Obenieta
Aurelio Peña
Josefina Tejada
Anthony Kintanar
Sylvia de Guzman

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For The Talking Man...

a talkative man has nowhere to go
he will be taken into hell by his very own words
as he unable to keep his mouth
shut soon like a fish he shall be caught
by a hook and line
dropped by a greedy fisherman.

in a sense after a time i begin to miss the misfortune of that talking man

in the middle of this journey inside a car on a long journey
the sound of silence stabs

and i begin to bleed and having a hard time
to breathe
i stop the car goes outside it and wished that the talking is with me
so i may forget what haunts me inside
like the furies.

RIC S. BASTASA
FOR once
on this page i want to be of social relevance

i want to spread the news about that gruesome murder of 58 Filipinos,
media people
and even innocent civilians who happened to be on that road that dismal
day

justice is still not served

let us have silence for 5 minutes
and pray
that sooner
justice be done

let us pray that it be not snail paced

let there be thunder and lightning after the silence

let those who are guilty be punished
let nothing
be hidden let no one
be spared
due to political connections

let the flower of truth bloom
and let there be damnation
for evil forever...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Those Who Are Sad

did Octavio say that happiness and charm are cliches? did he really mean that he shall write about those who labor in pain about those who stopped smiling because of the harsh rain
about those who hide
because of the coming storm?

he could be right not writing about the cliches of happy days

for they have all enough that make the sweet syrups of their eating lives

let me write a poem for those who are sad for those who have less let me write about the opening of a flower

about the butterflies moving out from their cocoons

let me write about the end of the bitter days for they have less and now they may have more through my lines

let me write about the
rising of the sun
the waking up of the boy from his sleep and the beginning of his play on the yard with his bike

let me write more about what i really like...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Us

this is the sign at the entrance of the Oracle of Delphi

Oedipus, he says, you must stop, right here, in the middle of an ignorance,
you know what happens next when you know
finally the root cause of this misery

You will finally be free until you become blinded
by the Truth

You chose your own Destruction

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For Wantok About Loneliness

Wan
Tok
Wan
Tok
Three
One
Talks
To A
Tree

One talks to a tree. She has nobody.
The tree talks to her. She has gone crazy.

Isn’t it lonely?
It could be more. It is in fact tragedy.

One two three. One two three.
Want to tree. Want to be a tree.
Want to talk to a tree. Wane to tree.

Wantok talks to a tree. She has nobody.
That could be a phenomenology.

Wantok talks to a tree.
She has nobody.
Birds flew away.
The clouds drift away.
The sun sets on the park Wantok still stands.

Wantok talks to a tree.
Indeed that is very lonely.
what a tragedy.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem For You

in the rush hours of my life those times when breakfast is even set aside or prayers reset
or as he said it once when dreams
some too personal dreams are deferred because of a very important matter concerning the usual bread and butter when the stars are not seen or they exist not at all on evenings which are cold and when our bodies are too tired

no mistake about it
i always take time to scribble some notes unhampered by style or what ever they say after this poem
for instance

a blank page so hungry that i stop
and bend
just to feed it with some words to munch

so here is it. Feel.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am really 54, that is my age,
you would not believe me for as you said it
i look too young
for my age,

do i have to tell
you
with all honesty that i dye my hair
into natural black and i bought an expensive Kiel
for my skin to evade the fate of wrinkles?

well you say
you had it too but simply age
inevitably crept
through its wrinkled hands
eventually choking
youth away
from you

but this i must tell you finally youth is not chronological
it is a state of
your mind
it is the way you reminisce
and believe about a happy place that land
called paradise
that hope that always glistens
for as long
as this sun in our life
shines.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem From Lina S. R.

He said, “Bug-at ang akong dughan.”
"I wear a heavy heart.'

Does grief really cling like a legion of bats on the cavewalls of his memory?

On the drooping branches that are his shoulders, would the crow of betrayal perch?
Is there space enough to build, slowly, its nest?

He uttered, 'natandog ko, ' “I am moved.”
and I told him I do not hold him responsible for my own desires.

On that day I dropped by to visit, I suddenly saw That he was no longer with me even as he sat In front of me at the dining table; he had migrated, Riding on the steeled wings of longing towards far Germany Near the spires of the Cologne Cathedral where his beloved dwells.

While I waited for his return, I sought refuge in the mild Aroma of coffee, the beans of which came from Guatemala.
At dawn, he had roasted and ground these beans and mixed a brew That became the dark ecstasy that he poured into my cup.

My vast powers had turned to cinders. I fled away from his kindness.
The only baggage I carried is this heavy weight of aching to touch flesh.

Here I am now a bakwit, like the widows whose husbands are warriors in this long and undeclared war.
They whose stories he listened to and whose portraits he limned in Mamasapano.
Like the mudfish that was caught in the Liguasan Marsh That he hung on the laundry line so that its flesh will dry completely in the crawling fierce heat of the sun.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem He Wrote Before He Went To Bed

good night darling
take care
yourself
out there

i am very sleepy

(yawn)

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem In Five Minutes

just say

hmmmmmmmmmmmmmm.

did you count it?

it is exactly five minutes,
and it
is a poem to
me,

(sigh)

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Is Breakfast

A poem is a breakfast for me in seven courses: an orange, grilled port, steamed rice, lettuce and onions and tomatoes a cup of coffee, a slice of forest cake

but this is still not enough for me any poem, breakfast or lunch or dinner can always make me feel hungry any juice or coffee always can make me thirsty

God is somehow different
He is neither water or coffee or orange or apple

My thirst shall be quenched My hunger satisfied in the coming of my own time and then poetry shall be dead and then poetry is no longer the breakfast in seven courses that i am always taking and then poetry is gone but you know too well that it will be in another person's heart ready for another taking in another breakfast table.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Is Just A Poem

a poem is just a poem and if it is just a poem it must be just a poem just like another poem a poem is nothing but just a poem otherwise it cannot be my poem; it may speak about anything, or something, or about everything, but my poem is just a poem just like anybody's poem, which is just but a poem, like any other poem, for a poem to be a poem it must just be a poem: it has nothing to do with my love, and death my life, or bliss, but as i have told you, once, twice thrice, eat some rice, and be that wise, a poem is just a poem, just like your poem. Why do you insist on asking, what is happening to me? I am not a poem, for i am but just the composer of the poem, need i tell you again, that a poem is just a poem?

just like any other poem, which is just a poem it is just a voice in my head that i have heard someone comes and speaks and i listen so this poem is not actually my poem but the poem of someone else's: theirs not mine, from a mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Is Not Measured By How Long Or How Short It Is

a poem
stands by the merit of its sound, tone, color, smell, how each sense participates
sometimes
if you must, as others want it, they put the sixth sense the message of morality and sometimes they even put God as a divine flavor

perhaps to dispel the evil ants, snakes, ghosts, vampires, werewolves, the furies that haunt them and attract those who are holy, or those who want to be holy, or those who simply pretend to be holier than thou

but a poem no matter how short like a mere man.

i.
am

or how long, an epic of his heroes, his dreamland,
a fan for fantasies to cool the humid and warm air of the surroundings

if it comes from the heart joyous or sad blissful or lamentable

for me, that is enough, because at the end of this search eventually it is you that matters most of all, whether in your brief stay here as brief as a morning glory
or a mist, frost, or waft of air or a heave
a sigh
a gaze, or a mold in bread, you have spoken a word or two about yourself, and the world, and about how well you have loved
at least
a single soul,
that will be enough, in fact, i am so sorry, i have spoken at length when i could have simply said
yes,
or i could have stayed silent sleeping in my bed full of regrets

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Of Empathy

my shoes are shiny
black
leather and expensive
i look rich and i speak like a true gentleman

last night i went of the house without my Man Friday
and i wore a mask of the beggar
and i erased my first name

i am Tonio
the mendicant

and i sit upon a corner with a can on my hand begging for mercy

and you pass by
and you never recognize me and you spit on me

and then i wrote a poem about the matter and you say it is the best poem i have written and that you pity the beggar and that you like to do something about all the beggars
in this world
make a foundation
fund a cause

and i stop reading the poem
and then
i begin to ask
'who are you?'

RIC S. BASTASA
you are fed up
you want to do something but you cannot

the problem has defined itself in numbers, in letters, you feel like a mole on a cheek a small indistinct island in the pacific in the middle of an ocean a single celled amoeba swimming across the great mucus of a corrupted civilization can there be another David for another Goliath in my story?

Avatars' bows and arrows against the missiles and rockets of my film about manipulation and oppression?

a speck of dust against profuse light an atom invisible to those giant eyes

God has His own ways to correct these crooked lines, I am fatalistic, i cling to the vine of his miracles,
and at the end of this misery i, shall, a flower be caressed by the hands of time of the rays of the gentlest
sun.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Of Hope....

Time has changed
my appearance and my
thoughts,

but i shall remain
true, to you, and to
life,

and then when death comes, i will be true to my faith,

i will have no fear,
as i close my eyes

i shall be in the arms of my God
as i sleep perhaps
forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
i must have forgotten
your face

i must have been lost
in the labyrinths of my sorrows

i must have focused on the
pain
rather than the pleasures
of you
Earth

how could have i been so cruel and so forgetful?

the day when i was born you nurtured me with the milk from your breasts

i was contented in my beautiful silence

you have provided me
everything

and because it was too easy to hold and enjoy

perhaps i have not appreciated them so well a light that has traveled a thousand years

lands on my cheeks and comforts the coldness of my skin
must i regret then about my indifference?

O, Earth,
i must now ask this forgiveness

i have been ungrateful in the abundance of air and space and and colors and scents and tastes and sounds

O, blue sea!
green plains!
O, towering mountains!

all these
have given me the complete meaning of my existence

O, Earth and Sky and Sea
you are all with me in my passing days

O, God, My Creator
and Provider
On this Day of Death
I thank Thee

For Love, and Beauty and
Truth
O, God, I praise Thee....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Of Syntax

A poet and his bird, his dog, his cat and his tree A poet and the bird in the tree A poet and his dog in the tree A poet and his dog in the tree and the wind and the cloud The bird in the tree, the dog in the tree, the cat in the tree, The bird in the tree, the dog on the tree, the cat under the tree,
The bird on the tree, the bird in a tree, a bird in a tree, a bird in the tree,
And the wind and the cloud and the poet and his dog and his cat and the tree

The dog chases the cat the cat chases the bird And they all arrive in that tree Where the poet is sitting under that tree The poet takes the dog and the cat was envious And the bird looks at them in silence
The silence looks at the poet in the eye Of the cat and the bird flies away
The poet and the dog is the poem of friendship
The cat and the dog is the poem of the endless natural quarrels And the bird that flies away against the cat and the dog and the poet and the tree And flies against the wind that the bird is now fighting And the clouds that seem so blue and blue

The bird that actually flies away Is actually me
I was not the poet with the dog

I am not the tree I am not the wind I am not the cloud I am not the poet there who had a dog as friend and I was not the quarrelsome thing from the blue and out of the blue

I am the bird with wings and I always fly away to places Against the wind to places where I can be as always be the bird with wings in
silence

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem On Marriage

she is with you everyday she is your cup of tea

you have known her rhythm you too, very well rhyme it has taken you to an age to make this poem on marriage

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Serves As Marker.....

each poem is a marker of a thought every mile of emotion traversed all those surges of strife
some secrets embedded under the skin of
fire
a poem serves as marker.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem That Does Not Make Me Sleep

it is still your face i have avoided looking at you for years for i must simply be hurting myself
crushing myself
to this unrequited longings
something
that my heart pretends to accept my mouth denies my hands
cold on the railing
on cruel nights

how many sighs do i have to throw to this wall?
my body has taken a lot of changes siding to the left
to the right
and could not stay that long in the middle i bury my face on the pillow i cannot breath
i cannot also die
dishonorably without having told them that i have fallen into this abyss of love that is killing me
so gently
like slow suicide unnoticed by intimacies

i open the window
let air in i sit on the chair on the side of my bed turn on the table lamp the paper is ready and the pen is pouring its ink on the mantel how can i promise myself that i can now sleep

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
and not write again?

i, this liar,
this painful heart
looking for the coolest herbal cure

you are the leaf in the forest that i have never found where...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem That He Sent To His Ex-Girlfriend

my poems shall mystify you my words shall edify you you make no sense now at anytime or anyhow

your smell has turned into the pungent odor of dog urine

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem To Make Emily Strong

you pack up your clothes take on the little money you save from your hometown

now you have come to this city of sin
where people come and go where friends are rare where nights are colder even with the flurry of city lights where faces have no eyes and ears to see you needing help

crying

why have you come here and look for love?

there is no love here, only indifference a little cruelty

well, perhaps to make you strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Written At The Taoist Temple In Cebu City A Few Days Ago

the place is well trimmed bushes with leaves well arranged like the haircut of a soldier the dragon guards the place the one that does not spit fire nothing to fear in this place of worship this place of calm and quiet where cameras are prohibited but we all tread our steps towards the holy and the divine that unholy hour of our existences.

i was once here and there is someone i cannot forget the close friend i had who clicked her camera who told me to pose here and there only to realize later that there was no film.

oh, those were the younger years that speak of lies that gives nothing but false hopes meanwhile, i am amazed at this temple

a tip that tries to reach the clouds telling us though that we are less inferior.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Written By A Confessed Bipolar (Her Name To Be Revealed Upon Her Permission)

I write because I can I write because there are so many things to be written.
I write because I can make a painting without a brush and paints in my hand.
I write because I can capture the moment without having a camera.
I write because letters and words are the only recipe I know how to cook.
I write because I want to read what I’ve written.
I write because I’m used to speak in silence.
I write because I have a story to tell.
I write because I want to strip off my flesh and live as a pure being.
I write because I can record my “voice” without having a recorder.
I write because it’s like a cup of coffee, it keeps me awake I write because I want to live even when I do not exist.
I write because this is my throwing stones when I’m frustrated.

6/11/09 at 4: 42 PM
I write because I can flaunt my being when I don’t have clothes to show off.
I write because this is like making an encyclopedia to a coloring book.
I write because it’s more effective than my lithium medication.
I write because I’m tired of carrying these baggages on the road.
I write because I’m tired of talking too much.
I write because it’s a healthier diversion than smoking.
I write because it’s more therapeutic than analyzing my problem.
I write because I want to paint a thousand pictures with words.
I write because I can put colors to the letters and make a rainbow of words.
I write because it’s the key combinations to my hidden vaults.
I write because my ball pen is my best friend in the darkest nights.
I write because it surprises me with what I am capable of thinking&doing.

6/11/09 at 4: 43 PM
I write because I like that ideas are popping like pop corns.
I write because I can wander in the adventures of my own world.
I write because I have to cleanse my collection of memories of an old home.
I write because like a mirror you need to do a lot of reflections.
I write because I want to fight the battle of life.
I write because I wanted my little voice to be heard.
I write because I want to run from the insanities of the world.
I write because pictures don’t talk.
I write because it helps me connect the dots when I look back in my life.
I write because it brings me back to my crib of silence.
I write because it makes a buzz to other bees in my beehive.
I write because unlike my bike my destination is limitless.
I write because I want to become an inspiration without extinction 6/11/09 at 4:43 PM
I write because like strumming of the guitar, it vibrates in my soul.
I write because I love to write.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Written By The Other Woman

i am not asking you to answer me with
i love you too
empty words, i do not need empty words i am a practical woman need proof:

a Chevrolet 2010 model car and a house and lot in the city do not say it. show it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poem Written Inside The Cebu Pacific

even in the heavens
the clouds are so thick

like the fog
beclouding the mountains

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poet Of Your Caliber

oh, i very well agree as you believe it yourself behaving like a god of the air and the sea once the king of the clouds and the rain once the prince of the hills and mountains the only rightful heir to the flowers and bees

i very well agree sir oh holy one oh mighty one

a poet of your caliber
need not write another poem for the tiny tadpoles swimming on a very small pond.

RIC S. BASTASA
IN MY life i am making poems numbering in thousands and those who read them must have felt that i sound like a machine gun to an enemy it is funny
but it is not intended to be that way

THERE is a wounded snake if you have seen it if you have once lived in the forest looking for the herbal cure for its wounds near the center of its heart

IT IS not only a question of love, but also of hate, not only life but also of death not just death but the series of deaths that one experiences with humanity
Those that love to hate, to injure, to inflict pain and those that receive this pain, those that taste their wars those that witness the dying, the dead those that listen to the unexpected fires and explosions those that are part of the shattered and the shatters

ONE WORLD
in the nooks of poetry.

Pity and Piety
The Pieta and the Sunless Sea Clouds of Van Gogh
Guns of the Piedra
ALL THESE
In the hues of the lights of sunsets and sunrises trying to be captured in the lenses of mere words.

Just listen, watch, just be a spectator Do not say any word.

not complain.
If bad, just spit it out. Go, go, go.
A Poetry For Loneliness...

when you are lonely
you are lonely
both inside and outside by your own psychological expertise you may not show it and they do not notice it

they are busy too with anything to conceal their own and play games with you

late at night
you continue the guessing game those tricks
and treats

and indeed you are all lonely and you drink the wine to put some redness on your face and skin to lessen the impact of that trembling but no one talks about it no one dares

for fear that talking about it makes the pain worse you cannot hold it you want to release that bird caged that loneliness that sings inside your heart and you set it free and it flies in the air and above the mountains and hovers from one tree to another and then at night

it comes back to you
you are the cage and the home combined and they see the bird and hear its song it is so sweet and so beautiful and they want to describe it to you but there is just no word

for it

and precisely the hiding game continues routine loneliness common songs of mankind unspoken.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poetry Of Smell

a smell, your smell, that perfume that sticks to my skin,
your sweat, that wetness
between us,
dry before us, desert sand, nothing to talk about oasis, camels in a caravan under the stars one evening, you are my tent,
i live there, but you are not there, there is this blankness that i face within me, there is this trail that smells like you, i follow, and then i stop, it is not us there, there is no us, there is the star that shines one evening
it does not last,
but every evening it comes back to me,
too near, in my mind,
too far, in reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poetry To Reckon With

My poetry is like stove in the summer Or fan in winter
It runs against the popular tastes
And has no practical value Basho

IT IS I TOO

It is I too, I run against authority I Quarrel with the mayor I Sue the postmaster I tell my teacher that she’s teaching the wrong thing I even tell my mother that I did not deserve her (And she cried when I did not regret saying the same statement all over again).

What is it it me that fans when things are cold that heats when everything is so warm?

To want the undesirable To desire what cannot be imagined Of those that do not exist And get inside where there are no exits To love the unlovable
To give up something so important and honorable?
To set aside love and love the lovelessness of a meaningless locomotion.
To sculpt from mud inhuman forms To read that which must still be deciphered To swallow that which is vomitable To stay where others wanted to leave I have a taste for the unpopular I voted for the loser
To side with the weak
To speak to those with less sanity To settle for what is unsanitary To lick despairs
To risk whatevers
To go the whenevers
To leave the dead bury themselves To enter the narrow gate To light the post in the midst of day To sail when the winds are too strong To smile when your loved ones enter the great divide To wish happy deaths for friends gone by Empty chairs and empty tables To spit on these sorts of things To be myself and yet to be so unhappy
To be so happy and yet not knowing my name To speak none where my mind is so filled with sense To be unknowing about what I do know To be so funny when seriousness demands To have worked so hard and to die so untimely To write without any opportunity to be read All these…. and the senselessness of these all To be able to say thank you very much Now that all of you are dead and gone & all I have are empty chairs and empty tables (In the manner of Les Miserables) In some pages of nonmindedness In an island of don’t touch me This I say I thank you
So Long.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poetry Workshop

got invited to this poetry workshop telling me
these critics that they like my work, the way i put my words like glass, shiny colored glasses shaped like ballerinas
in my cabinet

a menagerie of sorts like i am a keeper of transparent dreams

so there i go, on free board and lodging and oh yes, the place is so poetic and i really like the scenery of shrubs and bushes and heights

on top of a hill where i can see lines of sea and land separated by my kind of imagination
the sunset
the sunrise

the cool winds at night the warmer sea breeze during the day the kind of wind that flaps the window making a sound of a slamming door

i remember then the house of my youth
where papa always slams the door before mama and the quarrel so endless and we were not even considered
as creatures of the house and they all begin
to leave
one after the other
and i remember
they all die anyway but that is not the end of the subject of my poetry i see everything in the workshop where we eat and drink and discuss my possibilities

my potential as a great poet one day but it is all in the mind of this critic

it is all in my mind until she begins to dissect my poems
like a cadaver
nerve after nerve muscle after muscle bone connecting to another cartilage
to another bone

until such time that all i see are dead bodies of my poems
surrounded by vultures eating each rotten flesh

i close my eyes and
feel the wrong crowd all around me what they do not know

is
i believe in myself, i still believe
in my way of putting words to feelings colors to blandness scents where the dead are dead
and some little dramatics where they are needed just to live and just be alone and still imagining believing the beauty in things in people in words that flow like a free wind touching my face again fresh like a flower with few dews still sticking glistening
till the wee hours of my mourning

RIC S. BASTASA
A Point Of View

There is something that is hidden
From you
And it stays inside my heart This is the pain of my lifetime
It is there
Every night it shines like the moon And like the sun
It scorches me every day

I like it to stay there Though it is within my power to Let it go
And leave me forever

But It will stay there
And you will not like it As it is killing me Slowly like a cancerous bone Like a deadly mole Behind my back

How is it that a man like me should Like this matter to stay You may ask if you later will know But this I will say This pain perfects me
At the end
This pain is nothing but the whole of me Like the happiness
That you would want to stay

RIC S. BASTASA
A Political Statement

i pray that corruption be murdered let the culprits be free

i pray that dishonesty be hanged let the judges rule

i pray for the the killing of tradition let the love of money go hungry i pray that the voices of the people be heard again without any intervention

i pray that democracy shall bloom again like a brand new day

i pray that the voices of conscience prevail over the choking hands of money and fame

i pray for the death of tradition for the triumph of innovation

RIC S. BASTASA
A Political Statement...

white and black birds rainbow birds
all kept
in one big cage...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Political Theory

the way you manage things pertains to an ordinary garden weeding out the bad ones cultivating the ideals the snakes are caught and cut to pieces
and the rats poisoned and the trees pruned
the paths cleaned of rocks and pebbles
you level mountains
desiring the plains and the neighborhood claps their hand and shall make new monuments for you there are words of praises but not from me

for in my garden
the snakes thrive with the rats the moss grows well with the stone the grasses and the buffaloes the rivers and the reeds the fish and crocodiles the bees and the flowers the mountains stay as is and the plains spread as they wish i just let themselves be and they are all very happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Ponder...

on an early morning
dew on the grass
looking towards the sky there is always more to be pondered
upon the leaf that falls silently
back to the arms of the grass
soundlessly....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Ponderous Moment At Pizza Hut, Cagayan De Oro City

i am sitting in one of those commercial benches of Pizza Hut the glass walls divide me from the rest of this world the sidewalk is filled with people rushing in different directions the main road of this dusty city is filled with cars and trucks and buses if only i can hear their rush of horns and screeches of their rubberized wheels i should have know better how noisy will it be across the road is another set of people walking, rushing, running they are all busy, and the dusts on their shoes have become too visible like clouds of brown and gray on the surface of the pavements and roads inside is this peace of comfortable living i have a plate of hot vegetable pizza, ice cold red tea, vanilla sundae

as it is too early for the mall to open there is only myself and the waitress who has well kept hair a red apron as uniform and a very smiling face as mandated by the rules of the establishment inside the kitchen the chef is busy with his recipe and dough

i am pondering, why should people be too busy to forget about how is it to be at peace with themselves like having to do nothing with roads and dusts and work i am at peace with myself, arrogating upon myself the much needed vacation this is my time, when i am not a part of the busy world attached to no one, with no vested interest, no itinerary i do not know yet what to do do really with my own spare time how to make it productive as the Establishment would want me to do i am at peace, and this is what i want, and this is what i mean, Others are none of my business, as i am too, am none to them... sometimes i ask, why should i be busy? why should i be a part of all these useless crowds?

i have only one life to live, and it is not that long enough for some long range projects,

i must learn to enjoy it, to the full and so tomorrow i shall be shutting myself off from everyone, i am set to go in a far away island, swim on its blue sea, rest upon its sand, bathe on the rays of the gentle sun.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Ponderous Moment...

at the point somewhere between loneliness and independence, one settles on faraway places, to see how things are from a distance, and you soon find out it is you that seeks the company of others, spends for their drinks, caters for their caprices, enslaved and deprived,

it is you that has behaved as the insufficient one always begging for a relationship, and you conclude that you have always been the lonelier than before the insecure one, looking for others' entertainment dependent as an accessory metal to their diamond natures,

but it will only be for a time, soon you discover it and fight back, i mean,
you begin to question your own behavior, and you shy away, feeling guilty about your weaker side, and you begin to build the fences again to make a good neighbor

of yourself,

you write in your journal, i have always been a defeatist, needing always the hands of others, those that press upon me choke me and had almost killed me those whose arms have become ropes around my neck

you quit.

you ponder again.
you look at the stars at night and marvel upon the distances of each and their solemn silence their pride and self-esteem always whole, glittering, against the darkness of the

universe.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Pool

a pool lies at the foot of a hill there is a bush of mushing green beside a rotten tree are mushrooms birds drink here and then sing a crystal pool where Narcissus rests and stays for a while at the side of the bank are white stones a frog licks a fly drinking upon a dropp of sperm

Narcissus is sleeping soundly upon a grass
under a tree
it is windy.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poor Family

the man is out of job and his abdomen is giving him all the pain

the woman knows not what to do for they have nothing left the one-month old baby sucks her milk and there isn't any anymore and the the baby cries in hunger what he heard is thunder.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Poor Mortal Like Me

who does not love beauty?

anything beautiful, be it to the taste or to the touch will always be desired

a body, a fruit, the sky, something too near or too distant if beautiful will always be desired we wish it can be ours

i desire you,
you are so beautiful to me i long to touch and kiss you, but how sad can it be?

you are always a star in the sky to the stone in my hand.
always a blooming flower to the autumn of my eyes you are always a bird with blue feathers perched upon a tree while i am fenced away on the other side of the hill my hands are useless, my tongue is dry, my body is thinning out in grief

Time is teaching me more lessons,

I cannot have what i desire, Beauty is not always in the reach of a poor mortal whose hands are too small like a flea in the middle of the sea......

RIC S. BASTASA
A Portrait Of A Thinker

at the time when you say you want to take a picture of me in that office where books are not adornments but necessities of my being a part of this strict system of competition and rat racing,
i suddenly go to the instinct of biting the nail of my hand my arm pretends to be secure on the head of the chair
covered with white leather i look at it again
i smile at you
and you like it and then you click the camera and feed it on the computer and send it to me with a dedication...(i will not write it here) i suspect, really, (how can i tell you) i am not that self, i have not composed it.

Yes, it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Portrait Of Tomorrow

get the pen of the present and take the colors of the past use the hand that you trust and begin making tomorrow's portrait

have the ears of twenty years ago try listening
if the sound is happy
put them there

and for the nose
smell the sweat of your childhood those that play so well on the grass and took the plunge on the clean rivers of your life if you have that nostalgic feeling then put that nose there and how about the mouth and the lips

i think, if i were you
i'll take the teen age years remembering the first kiss and the first communion the sound of a tight embrace and if you like those happenings then have those years as your mouth and lips and even the teeth

and now for the eyes those that know really how to see clearly and probingly ponderous eyes
where wisdom is embedded
i think if i were you
take it from the present those that see the past as a summary
and of course the future as a plan
specific and determined strong and willing and with a stroke of your skilled hand you put the final touches of tomorrow's portrait you see your face and you say you are beautiful you caress it and tell yourself you are lovable

RIC S. BASTASA
A Possible Explanation For The Cause Of Chest Pain

The pain is on the left side of my chest
And runs to the other half of my arm
Sometimes it settles in my hand

I think I know why
On the left side is the woman who lives
With me
On the other half of my arm
Is another one

She runs to my hand so I may hold her
For all the days of my life
But I can’t I just can’t,
It is not simply possible

But above all these
The pain lingers at the center
Of my heart
Because I have not offered
My heart
Like a ripe mango, my heart,
To the real one
Who deserves it because
She came first
Before I have known
The meaning of lust
Forever she will last
And the pain is never gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Posting In The Street
	his picture says it all:

we must learn together to live as brothers
or we shall perish together as fools

framed in maroon colors of hardwood
a black man in black suit raises his right hand to stress his point his left hand rests on the railing a shadow of a street sign lands on this figure

as i see it
there are no men watching this picture anymore left to the sun which the strong winds want to destroy.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Prayer

may all the good old people of this world have a happy death, may not the young die at their young age may those who pray for death be enlightened to choose life and live in peace in an actualized self, may all those who have forgotten prayer pray, and may all those who still pray pray some more to learn to pray and pray earnestly that all prayers through God’s Holy Will be heard and granted.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Prayer For Me

soon i will be one of the hollow people and soon i will have nothing but air inside me why can't i make a choice between substance and emptiness?

i can. There is this light that leads me to his Grace. There is this door that always opens.
There is this garden where all the flowers always bloom and never wilt.

I follow the light. I open the door.
I enter the garden.

As easy as that. I only need to call His Name.
And He is always there.

I do not have to suffer and be confused. He is happiness. He is certainty.

I do not have the right to inflict this unnecessary injury into my soul.

Amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Prayer For My Enemies

i pray

May the Lord
give you more grief
May he make you lose
the one you love
May you lose your home May your country be at war
May you family be erased from the face
of the Earth

May you feel a hundred losses

For you have become another arrogant tyrant
a mass murderer
a land grabber
For you have forgotten our failures
For you have disregarded our pleas

May you die in vain.

May you come back to us
As we mourn
As we grieve

RIC S. BASTASA
A Prayer For My Enemies (Revised)

i pray

May the Lord
give you more grief
May he make you lose
the one you love
May you lose your home
May your country be
at war
May your family be erased from the face
of the Earth

May you feel a hundred losses

For you have become another
arrogant tyrant
a mass murderer
a land grabber
For you have forgotten our
failures
For you have disregarded our
pleas

May you die in vain.

May you come back to us
As we mourn
As we grieve

RIC S. BASTASA
A Prayer For Today

Lord i thank you
for everything
This early morning I felt the warmth Beside you through the soft pillows and the warm bed and the blankets that embraced me throughout the dark and cold night.
You have spoken in my dream
I have seen the images
And i have understood all the metaphors.
I am your poem Lord
And I like it.

You started it all
And soon you shall put the ending lines.
You shall sign your name and say That i am what you have done best.

Dear God, thank you
I look forward to your promise That you bring me back to your kingdom To life everlasting

Amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Prayer On Early Morning....

it is up to you
now Lord
for i am a cold ham sandwiched
between two extremes
it is up to you
Now Lord
to judge me
for i am colder than ham
between two hells, the children hate cold hams
adults pretend they like it
it is up to you
oh Lord to judge me now but i must tell you i have tried to be one delicious piece for all those who profess
that they are hungry still despite the coldness of the ham their hands
as cold
as mine....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Prayer To Doubt

if you are everywhere
where shall i see you

it will not be specific like a street with a specific number or that widely accepted landmark

like a
rock of Gibraltar

or a room at the second floor numbered 6

if you only tell me specifically

i would not have been in this doubtful mess

are you in the sky
or at the top of the mountain you tell me 'i am in your heart' but my heart

i stabbed by the sharp knife of sorrow

are you pain?

i am looking for you
everywhere

pity me for i am tired and my feet are wounded

i cannot be in everywhere as it can be nowhere guide me

are you at the bottom of this ocean
of grief?

tell me

i am willing to dive there and die

RIC S. BASTASA
A Prediction....

as usual we know about it as hills know its trees as grass knows its hoppers and soil

but we don't talk about it we dislike storms
it is horrible to see uprooted trees and blown away houses

we leave things as they are there is no ripeness yet but the way you withhold love and hide second thoughts very give the signal of the coming days a desert shall produce its own sandstorm you prepare the door

i too, keep the windows.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Prelude To Prayer

you must have seen how the fingers of the trees turn into hands in prayer

it happens after the storm when all the leaves had been taken away when they are all nothing but branches and twigs when some have felt the fear of being uprooted

RIC S. BASTASA
A Preparation...

how can i perhaps explain photographing every nook of the house all sides of the fence and even the face of
the ceiling
the fingers of the stairs each nail
and beam of the house

what is the use of all these?
am i gathering memories in order to take with me somewhere else?
am i ready to forget how i made this house?

the bright colors of the paint shall haunt me wherever i am

they will say, there was summer here there was harvest after the seeding the walls will say what about those that you conceal with us?

shall we now reveal them to vendors of biographies?

my bag is still not full and i doubt what shall i fill it when the right hour steps in the door.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Price To Pay

too much delving on the mind the physical body pays the price balance

sound mind
sound body

time and space
on parallel lines

RIC S. BASTASA
A Primera Luz

you wake up only to find out that at this hour you are confused with what to do first

you rise put on propriety you walk towards the fridge you open it to have a cold glass of water to drink and feel the coldness of this still gray hour

there is no difference it is the same cold moment like last night's old temperament when you had problems about what to do
with your life when you took off
propriety
and lay your self naked against light of the ceiling's indifference

there is simply no one that fits the one that you dream: so sweet and enduring the eternal goodness that you still hope for

there is no one,
no one

perhaps there could be good news on a primera luz.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Private Moment....

once i wanted to choose,
a place, a person to be with,
where i cannot be hurt where no harsh word can be said, it always ends upon a nook, where i am always disappointed, and so, i have decided to try something else, to choose myself, and listen, to enjoy my coffee alone by my window read a book and position myself wherever i need to, or want to, or when it gets too static or sometimes boring, i stand and undress myself and sleep in bed naked. And here, i am not adjusting to anybody, just me and my body, in the comfort of our privacy, as i go back to the page that i left, read the book again, under the lamp just beside my pillow.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Process...

when the mystery is finally gone and familiarity rests on the carpeted floors the ticks begin to multiply and breed what makes us apart
this contempt for so much knowing
the taking for granted of what used to be love's luxuries

RIC S. BASTASA
A Program Component

part of the program component is the fear that they install on incoming viruses

what do you do? take the fear and savor the virus and sit on the easy chair, wiggle, wobble, like another unknown planet stare at the monitor as though it is a bird that cannot take flight with your mind

it will stare back but you are no longer moved with pity fear is an important part of this program fly with it have a tour on its contours and when you come back tell me the story of fear in wonderland show me that Cheshire grin be the mad hatter

with the etiquette of the Red Queen

this is senseless
yet why did you finish it?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Promise

dear lady
i will climb ten mountains i will swim twenty rivers i will sail thirty seas i will walk forty plains i will vanish in space just tell me if all these deeds can make you happy.

from me
the man you don't want me to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Promise For Lilacs

so where are the lilacs?

you promised me lilacs
i am far away

i will be satisfied with the pictures of lilacs in bloom

less the scent, less the reality of lilacs i grab then the illusion of lilacs a field of lilacs

a mountain of lilacs, a path of lilacs, or just a single lilac, or just another promise of lilacs or look-alike of lilac

from you

RIC S. BASTASA
A Promise For You My Love...

loving you
is not to love the air

it is to touch the petals of a flower to savor the scent and inhale it inside my body to make you a part of me so that anywhere i go i must carry you inside me loving you is not to love the air invisible

loving you is to caress your hair lay my head in the comfort of your bosom loving you is not a thought but a touch loving you is not the future but my present

RIC S. BASTASA
A Promise Revised.....

you are just a spark
in my universe
for once a year and

so here i am
watching you without much expectation after which i still have to wash my own soul
tomorrow....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Promise To Grandfather

soon we shall lose what our great grandfathers
left

when i was a child i saw them in camps
planting those coconuts now the new laws shall deprived us of these legacies

what can we do? back to arms and our fierceness regains what valor hid.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Promise To Insanity

daily shall this man
ask for food
and daily shall this house open its door
to cater to its precious
insanity

RIC S. BASTASA
A Promise To The Lady Moon

last night
i promised to the lady moon
that what happened
in the bosom of her
darkness
streaked by the sheen of her loving light on the break of day when the man of the day comes on his strong gaze
i shall tell nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Promise To Yourself After The Rain

after the rain
the whole night
when you wake up
the following morning
what you see is a glistening world

fresh leaves that cover the trees
new mushrooms sprout
on the footpaths

you breathe and fill your lungs
with all the newness of this life

barefoot you take the walk on the grass feel the dewness of every filled blades

who cares about friends and umbrellas and raincoats and
fears and pretenses?

solitude is cool
to the call of the pool undress sorrow
prepare to make love
tomorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
A Promise.....For 2017

because i do not have you it does not mean that i annihilate myself, i am sane, and whole, and i promise myself that i should not destroy the what i have for a lifetime with that mere spark of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Proof Of Love

you tell me that love cannot exist if i have no time for you time seems to be love's way of proving that love loves love the way love loves true love a time for both of us sailing in the river under the moon a stroll on the grass under the sun a candlelit dinner a serenade of violin music a dance of tango a glass of wine for two a slice of sweet cake

i may agree with you and be with you like the way you need time with me but what i know really my dear as handed down from my father's father their marriages solid and smooth and surviving all those years inside the same old ancestral dwelling that true love knows no time-for it is timeless that true love knows no price-for it is priceless that love unlike our finite bodies., is infinite that love unlike our temporalities, is eternal that love so unlike us, knows no beginning and knows no end.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Proposal

i guess there is something better to do,
let us go inside the room close the window
i have an empty glass you too have it
i have wine, aged and mellow, let me pour it to your empty glass then we make a toast let me drink from your wine glass as you drink from mine
in this room
we are alone
sleep is such a waste of time as time runs berserk upon its own feet and we gain
nothing but its wrinkles and forgetfulness

it is nice to get drunk
now
we do things we are spontaneous we may imagine other faces previous events
those that we can never forget with someone else let me be just a movie to you as you are to me

the following morning
don’t say a word
we both do not need it
we part
and parting must be as beautiful as we met.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Protest Poem...

a poem is a feeling fragile, transitory, it does not say anything
at all,
do no look for substance it is not meat it is a table napkin i wipe my mouth and throw it away.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Proverb

God gives every bird
a worm,
but he does not throw it into the nest.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Purpose Driven Life....

no one
does a thing without a purpose
at hand

some who claims otherwise either
is out of his mind
or amnesiac
or must still be in the state of anger and
denial

even the spider and the fly knows their purpose

everyday the spider spins its artistic web of deception with only one purpose
to catch a prey
for it to live and on the other
hand
the fly
in the usual habit flies everywhere looking for food

until it gets trapped
and dies

that is still purposeful.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Purpose Driven Life....(Revised)

no one
does a thing without
a purpose
at hand

someone who claims otherwise
either
is out of his mind
or amnesiac
or must still be in the state
of anger and
denial

even the spider and the fly know their purpose

everyday the spider spins its
artistic web of
deception with only one purpose

to catch a prey
for it to live and on the other
hand
the fly

in the usual habit flies
everywhere
looking for food
to infect

until it gets trapped
and dies

that is still purposeful
leaving too others
dead.
A Quagmire

I fall into you Since then Henceforth
Now &
Forever

Till death do Us part

You also Said

“I do”.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question

if i give you love
white (as it is pure)
whole (as it is allgiving) and so fragile (as love is suppose to be so sensitive)
like a fresh, chicken egg that i have and hold and shall now hand to you, as i give it to you with matching

i love you, i love you so much...

tell me what will you do with it?

i mean, the fresh,
white chicken egg...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question

whatever detests upon yourself cannot just be simply removed by you and you say, this is not me there is no denial about your dual nature both evil and good mixed in one glass like salt and water if you remove one from the other you shall not be the same again not your taste, not you anymore and you ask: what is real? the salt alone?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question About A Diminishing Family Heritage

an antiquated silver ten-centavo coin embossed with the blind Lady Justice

fell off
the old and hard wooden floor of the ancestral house

till then sister.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question About Religion....

to pass the time we talk, i have nowhere to go this self is not taking me anywhere
i am not well dressed
i am a shadow of my mind it is my mind that is becoming my own body my body is but an afterthought
of a flash,
you do not talk much you are surprised you doubt about what is happening to me i cannot explain you do not want me to explain
it is obvious
each part of me is disappearing my ears are dissolving in air i have become smaller when you stare at me perhaps this is what happens when shame
makes a decision
i do not feel any roundness of this earth the space has become another meaningless
edge of my
existence

i want to explain it now that you start to speak
'what the hell is happening to you? '
you ask
feeling the roughness of my hair
'this cannot be true'

i nod my head and shrink like some ice on the floor
and then
as you cannot see me anymore you left this refusal to believe that things like these can happen to someone like me i use to ask ' Was i God? ' it is this blasphemy that meted the penalty

'Issa, Issa, are you preaching now that it was not really what you intended? '

it is not too late yet, it was the fake one that spy that was hanged
and died.

Lina, please leave the documents
on my table.
I cannot yet
find myself
just like the way you have not forgiven yourself
once victim, now
the offender

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question And An Answer

what is the meaning of the black bird? it is the friend of the night not darkness neither evil nor curse for it is a singing blackbird the jolly one that comes in the month of June when the rest of the place is preoccupied with
grief,
it is the self that has combined all the colors red for madness, white for purity, green for envy, yellow for ripeness, brushing and mixing all these in unity
the black bird is what i am when you sit by the window looking for answers to the sea the moon at night silently
passing by

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question For Both Of You

There is this desire to please
all of you,

and so i dispose all trash impressing

that both of you may better forgive and
forget

but in so pleasing both of you i have become so disgustng to both whom i think

have nothing in mind but to attack and destroy

the other always wants the other dead

and be buried but how can you understand the wisdom of this decision: that both of you must live, and must too please each one

so we can make one happy
world

for everyone. Is that hard to understand?
A Question For You

do you you how much pain is spent in keeping
yourself
tight as a bud?

do you know how joyful will it be if you try to finally bloom and be the most beautiful flower of the day?

just asking
just asking

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question For You Again

I thought i had you as company for misery but just the same, thanks, i had that slightest moment Now, like an eagle you are going to soar the heights of a faraway mountain Far from me
Your dreams fulfilled but for how long will the excitement last? sometimes i wonder how the gods placed the minds of men and women I've seen those who prayed with their prayers granted Due to persistence and yet at the end regretted what they've got

Have the gods granted what people wish and pray as a form of punishment too?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question For You....

the blind is much better than
you

you read letters which you do not understand

your eyes are wide open and yet
you do not see

the blind has only
dots and yet they can retell the
story

the blind has only
darkness within yet they have seen the colors of my feelings

you have no use of your
eyes
and yet you take pride in them?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question For You?

i ask the wind
when will i ever see you again?

and the clouds hear it and then the sun shines telling it is when the clear day comes again and then i wait and there is rain for days and days.

on a clear day, the sun shines the flowers bloom and i wait again there is no you, not even a shadow, and i left the sun, the wind, the rain, the clouds they have nothing to give for my quest for answers, useless metaphors, broken promises, empty poems shattered dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question Of Conscience

How can you ever
Leave someone
Who cannot live
Without you?

Look at her eyes
The moment she Hears the word
Goodbye

Her eyes start
To bleed
Blood.

I cannot kill Someone with
The use
Of the word goodbye.

I can’t.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question Of Family -Values...

the child is confused for when she tells the truth about this family's mess
she is warned
not to expose the dirty linens
she reasons out what is wrong with
the truth
is it not that the truth sets us free
as mother once told
her?
papa says not all truths must be preached
family secrets for instance
what a shame!
but it is a shame
then why did this family do it?
shut up
the father shouts
at the little girl
and slaps her small face with his huge hands

the very reason why you have seen this little girl
on the street
crying

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question To My Lover

what is it that i desire really from you?

is it your body?
is it your wisdom?
is it your time?
is it your concern?

i have tasted
every skin of your body i have taken much of your time
i have listened from your wisdom
i have much of your care
and yet i am still empty

i have consumed you like bread and have drunk you like a glass of wine yet there is still something that i desire from you and yet i still do not know or is it that it is not really you that i desire but someone else?

and how many more?
yes how many more shall i waste and yet find no answer?

will you finally kill me at the end of this
betrayal?
what is it that i desire?
self, tell me now.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Question...

is that old Hungarian for mere citizenship
or for love?
for a moment or
for eternity?
do you know really
what eternity is?
i know citizenship
i have known love but eternity
is a chasm between too much familiarity and
too much
looking at the past it is untrue
and yet you utter it
how come?
are you not bothered by the coldness
of a promise?
the lightness of assurances?
the falsity of
words?
the fear of the
void?
are you not at all human to consider that something must at least be for a while too uncertain
because it is garnished
with so much
truth that we cannot bear
anymore?
A Quiet

a quiet room
a real quiet room amidst these ruins
these flooded streets
around these screaming buildings

inside the heart
of the patient man
a gentle soul
amid the rubble

RIC S. BASTASA
A Rainbow

to see the beauty of the rainbows hues
you need the rain,

that is it. The rain, The bow.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Rainy Day

cmp; the trees are full of green leaves.
ncmp; the shrubs are flowery.
ncmp; the grasses are still wet with dew.

cmp; two muscular men pass by.
ncmp; Under one black umbrella. ncmp; One hand on the shoulder ncmp; of the other ncmp; keeping themselves close ncmp; to avoid being wet by the rain.

ncmp; On the bench beside the ncmp; pavement ncmp; One lean white man ncmp; sits with sad eyes ncmp; (i guess there must ncmp; be tears on his cheeks) ncmp; looking at them.

ncmp; Not a word is heard.

ncmp; RIC S. BASTASA A Rainy Day In Katipunan

AS the rains fall
the mind turns into a seagull and the world becomes an ocean the chairs into boats
and then

another journey begins memories become islands without ports and

nowhere is a lighthouse horizons are without borders and walls have murals around this world
inside my room.

RIC S. BASTASA
that day the rain falls heavily on the roof.
the leak has been managed.
the doormat is replaced with a new one.
the dogs are inside the house and they are everywhere. The biggest one stares at me on the dining table. i stop sipping my coffee.
The smallest one, coy and secretive, sleeps beside you in bed.
the other three are so unruly waiting to eat the white cat on the ceiling.

you have chosen sleep.
i take the black raincoat open the door and head towards my favorite hang-out.

the soup is ready and she hates dog like myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Random Poem Written While Looking Beside A Window

from where i sit
i see a man with a black shirt an old man, smoking his cigar beside a hollow-block fence wearing faded jeans consistently smoking

perhaps killing time brown shoes fresh with mud by the road his back leaning against a wall across my room the cigar between his fingers sleepy and not minding

a fat lady with flowery dress
passing by

he is under a mango tree lush against the backdrop of

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reaction About Breaking

i sit on a chair and it breaks and i fall
on the floor
but i rise and looks around
with no one
really seeing what happens just a while ago
and then i touch my bottom and then alone by myself i laugh the hardest.

crazy, but i like the legs of the chair splitting into useless limbs.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reaction...

we still have our flag flying high every Monday on Fridays we fold them together as one national treasure

there are no wars here that may tear the flags for more bandages

i am glad and still proud to be Filipino.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Real Dancer

a real dancer
does not need a stage
only a soul,

a real poet does not need an audience
only his own
perfect silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Realization

why do i have to insist to see you Cupid?
it is enough that on my dark nights you are there beside me there is no need for me to do another Psyche.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Realization Of A Compromise On Some Pretenses

when he finally realizes that he never loved her after all those years he chose silence for this matter may better be left unsaid as this of course
hurts like a double-edged jagged knife

he comes to the conclusion that there is time that truth must yield to the common good to the soundness of affections to the thought that hurting someone may be unnecessary considering the shortness of the span of life

he looks at her and kisses her fondles her hair and makes love for another night and another night he is imagining another face someone that makes him feel so good he swallows the guilt when the morning comes nothing is visibly wrong the flowers in the garden still bloom he finishes his breakfast and drinks the coldest water the one that freezes everything inside him but it does not matter anymore he always thinks that he has only one more day to live and even if in pretense he thinks he might as well live it the way love wants it to last momentarily until the last day comes until the elegy is finished.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Realization Of Two Things

a bud is better
seen on top of its stalk

even when it has already bloomed
completely

it is still nicer to see the flower stuck on its stalk

even if it has already wilted
it is still nicer to see it on its stalk

even when the stalk is gone the flower is still there and it is nicer still to imagine it

untouched by any human
hand
only nature
only nature has the power to take it

RIC S. BASTASA
A Realization Too Late...

i am not from here yet i wonder why i am still here

a sense of home is singing
it is whistling
for me

i do not want doing this but i still wonder why i still do this

i envy those who know where they want
to go
and where they are from
and they who know their family line

those who come from
the sea
have long swam to its navel

those who know there come from the line of birds had long flown to that far away horizon

i do not like it
here but i am still here perhaps stuck

i must not live here i do not belong here i must have betrayed myself depriving it of its much deserved compassion

i want to go but i can't i do not want to stay but i cannot

wait for me, we look alike.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Realization....

i am never afraid of the deep
even as a young child Papa already taught me how to swim and to dive
for shells

what i am afraid of which i later realized in my mid-age is that i am simply living in the shallowness of my own waters

i do not sink
i am not drowned
but i feel like i am choked and
dying....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Recital Of The Past Still Not Forgotten

inside that room then i was so young
my age
the strong rod

it was dark as you turn off the lights what we do not wish to see we only have to feel
the lips and hands
in harmony

i am the sun
you are the darkness that i invade nothing defeats me as you too conquer me

absurd
the invader and the invaded all win

there is the language
that we still do not speak but which our tongues are still eager to taste
back then when food no longer satisfies our own kind of hunger when waters bathe our bodies yet our mouth
still keep opening for more just once, it was just once but by all means still the best i thought it wasn't love i joke upon it and tries to forget i am the sun enveloped by the veil of time i try to open my self and relieve myself of this burden of dimming light

i can't

you are a memory
my scar always recites your name
you are still
my sweetest pain

RIC S. BASTASA
A Recollection About What He Had Written....

it is not at all bad
rereading himself,
reinventing what they think, looking back he folds his hands behind his back and
begins to dance, to the music of his ears,
to the delight of his heart, it is not at all bad, as time passes the goodness rises in the air and he catches it with his words back again.

each word has meaning
each syllable has a face, and it was never bad.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reconciliation.....

recently the sea had taken so many lives
people did not want to eat fish
for a while some coconut trees were uprooted the wind did not have second thoughts showing its greatness through its cruelty blowing away houses and leaving children homeless and couples
traumatized someone killed himself the other day and others looked blank
staring to the gray sands of the shore today the sea is appealing it is a piece of silk smooth and calm and too inviting like a beautiful woman waiting to be embraced by my arms

it is this act of reconciliation and gratitude for being saved i too could have died if i did not go to the friend's birthday party

i have no choice but to take my dip and swim for hours above me is the sun seemingly smiling underneath are the fish playing with the cleansed corals and dancing seaweeds.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reconnection

Koi feeding on my hand
in the clear pond

beside
the neighbor's house

it is the first day
of this year

bubbles of water
rising to the surface

green moss and rocks

RIC S. BASTASA
A Record Of Betrayals By Emma Z.

i keep a record of your betrayals.
you undress me

when your hands travel on my body like a hawk surveying an open field
i close my eyes

when you kiss me
i hold your body unto mine

i make you feel at home like my beloved
inside my heart

i moan for another.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Record Of Familiarity...

i lived with her for 5 years, we do not use any language now the one that we constantly use we are like a landscape we know what is beautiful and worthwhile yet we have never spoken a word to agree about all these. It is different but it is also the same.

marriage has its own house, its own garden. so many flowers and yet you always have a name for it. A record of familiarity.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Rectangular Shape Of Words

the body is always promised and the soul is always silent between them is always you making promises and noisy.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Rectification

the randomness of them all entering your mind too preoccupied with what must be
and what oughth to be,
the mind blunders
with timorous thunders, and what becomes so evident is this error protruding like a tail from a body like rabbit ears from your face you feel like a fraction reduced to its lowest terms but you cannot be subdued by the urge of sweet dishonesty the self pretending to be right always?

to err is to be human and to be most human is to accept the errors of all errors,
yourself....

you take the correct decision you expose your tongue and show them your rabbit ears that you have such a funny long tail you laugh at yourself and you laugh

with all of them

the room is filled with laughter there is no chatter

and they all clap at you for on this day
you have become a great man.....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Red Beautiful Gumamela

a red beautiful gumamela
floats on the river taken by the direction of the flow and goes somewhere
it does not really know it is red and it is so beautiful yet there is no scent at all no life no soul and it is yours for the selfish taking

RIC S. BASTASA
A Red Carnation As A Symbol

many want to stand for it love, yes could be,
fire, fire on a green stalk from whom? from love yes, yes it could be bloody, this red carnation is bloody but love, love, yes it could be love, from the pocket of your black suited heart oh, yes, bloody, so bloody, this red carnation, could still be love, love, yes it could be how much harm more can it do

wrecking havoc on innocent hearts, these bloody, bloody victims of love, love, yes, the red carnation could still be

RIC S. BASTASA
it is raining.

dthis is the first rain for the month of June in Katipunan

i sit facing a screen
i press words

i look through a glass window much older than my being here,

out there
the mango tree is heavy with its fruits under its shade is a red motorcycle beside a hollow block fence which separates a dilapidated house from the public market

a woman holds a blue umbrella walks slowly along the pavement it is still raining cats and dogs, and the red motorcycle is wet all over.

it is inanimate and everyone takes it for granted.

among those that i have enumerated perhaps it must be the one with the least meaning.

the day is crying
and the woman with the blue umbrella is unaffected.

inside this room
with a glass window as protection i am sifting
what meaning is there for this rainy day.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Red Rose

a red rose
casts a shadow
on a white
canvass

light strikes on the body of its redness
and the greenness of its leaves

this red rose is
for you
give it the light
so i may cast
a shadow of myself
to you

when you touch
it
the rose begins
to live
another span of
love

it becomes an inspiration of dreams which are about
to die
of love that is about to be forgotten.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Red Rose Plucked From Its Stem

a red rose
plucked from its stem

the petals like being taken separated

life is short

it is the most natural thing that happens

for now.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Red Slice Of Watery Red Melon

IN the room where we made love an hour ago
i offer you a slice of my red watermelon
i take a bite and i tell you about its taste
sweet, as sweet as my love for you you do not care about the juice the redness the watery freshness of my
red watermelon
i am naked sitting on the floor i am hungry and need some rest i am talking unnecessarily wasting my words about my red watermelon you laugh
and you notice something flaccid
it is funny
and then you back to sleep still dreaming about something thick and hard and stiff like a dog with a bone in his mouth still looking for a place where to stay alone and lick it
and rig its sharp teeth biting, biting and biting still

RIC S. BASTASA
A Red Truck

there is this red truck with muddy wheels
beside an old cement fence
parked alone

it's been there for the whole day under
the sun

not for hire.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Redemption Of The Self

when i stand there there was a dark cloud of shame above my head

the cloud is heavy and it poured dismay
i am drenched with humiliation

i fell like i am a tree with wilted leaves
that keep on falling to
the ground

until i become nothing but twigs mere fingers of the hands skeletal to the sky

i do not have those roots that keep me strong but then there is always that redemption

ally to the sun shall i be when tomorrow comes i grow my leaves again spread my roots

dereper than the hands of the rivers to the cracks of the earth where gold resides

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reflection

those who start to speak are those who realized they do not know and those who begin to be silent seems to have understood that they know why must i speak to you? why must i write you a poem?

why did you write me a very long letter?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reflection For The Lenten Shows In The Village...

do you love the show of the recent crucifixion?
do you find excitement in the nails that pierce the flesh of the hands of the volunteering Christ?
do you want to be the Judas of this show? this Lenten Presentation in a village of Passion.

I've seen how the rituals are done purple robes, veiled women, big wooden cross dragged in the streets, men beating their backs until they get to be bloody and bizarre this cycle of tradition goes for years and on and on till we get old and die ourselves do you love the show of death? have you seen yourself? Have you seen your God?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reflection For This Morning

when it is not done
you feel cruel, you'd like to go away but you imagine a lonely funeral

you stay and you become more cruel than you think

but it is a must a dictate of what is the law of this land you stay
and they are too cruel to make you stay you don't like the way things are happening
the way the words are left unsaid because they can be more cruel when
said,

you are at a loss but you have decided not to mind it anymore you invoke
fate,

there is this destiny that takes charge make the most of what is here and that will be fair enough

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reflection Of Today's Thoughts

and so...
not everything can be art there is this sense of taste and order

this quest for beauty that must link us to the celestial the divine

the one that gives us a glimpse
of the face of God

this beauty that radiates the light of the moon

this heart that speaks

without words this eyes that look beyond the lights the seeps upon the leaves of poplars

refracting on the clear water of the pond where a fish is surfacing koi flipping its fins getting near you

and between you
there is just this air that creates a bridge

eye to eye.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reflection On The Pond

no amount of denial now that it is still me emaciated and brown
and still very real
and true,

until i stirred the water and the ripples
run to erase
me.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reiteration Of Desiderata

he could have been in the wrong place even the trees believe that he does not exist the stars do not give him any sign of the zodiac
but look at him
even without the recognition of the trees and stars he still exists

know what? because he is.
he is,

and that being himself gives him that right to be what he shall be

here,
here,

for in truth if only the trees and the stars know this they should have known that as a man he has the right to be here.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Relationship

you are in the middle of the storm with him and you have the same destination amid the torments you embrace each other
not wanting to sacrifice anybody it was love, you think it was pure love this mutual miseries finding comfort for a while the storm is over the ship is now steady on the port it is time to disembark and then both of you say goodbye

to each other

outside the legal arms are waiting embracing you again and him again
and you forget what you call at first in the midst of the storm as pure love

somehow, you remember it you still love it somehow but is there another
when?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Relationship That Lasts

the stone and the sun made a pact
that everyday they must see each other eye to eye without blinking whatever the truth may be the grasses have nothing to say on this enduring fidelity the brooks still flowed without an obstruction

the flowers are smiling and the trees are interested

one is too hot while the other is too numb of course, it lasted happiness is not the issue anyway

RIC S. BASTASA
A Relaxed Lifestyle

midnight
pampers you
with its coldness
and soundless gentleness

as writing
goes on
and on

as ideas hover like butterflies
on my hair

sleep is a deep ocean
deep and blinded

till the clock
hands
in the double
moon
on top of each other
on the study
table of
your room

the rest are waves of repetitions
spreading out
the whole day
coming and going and dissipating frantically

being sits upon a patch of eternal
grass

empty gazes
watching the hours
fly slowly
like feathers on the tainted skies

there is no rush
to a pampered lifestyle

it is like
going in a strange place
and
smiling at people you
met
whose names you
never know
whose battles are none of your business
anyway
as you proceed to walk
and pretend
that nothing offends
you that you are no longer
affected
that numbness is the badge that you carry in
your body

you chance upon a Japanese resto rai dai
dai
sumo
sam

you signal the waiter clad in red and black

' bring me a plate of sushi a cup of green tea and three slices of california
maki...

and a dessert named
Both Worlds'

RIC S. BASTASA
A Relaxed Mood

well the moon was there whatever horrible happened i have already forgotten it i mean my point
there are instances in our lives that we think it is better to learn nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reminder

we claim no expertise
for this
we are not famous neither shall we be at all at any time
on the page of history

we assert no name
we are in fact nameless we claim no right to a home in fact we are nothing but freelance hopeless romantics insistent fanatics as you dislike us writing about our failures

we are here
not for anything else
we do not need any eulogies that will last a lifetime of mention
we do not go for epitaphs
no tombstone

we are here because you are here we talk.
we are here because we are hurt.
we simply express what we feel.

do not bother. we know where we are going.
do not give us importance. We are used to our being trivial.
we are used to be used.
we are irrelevant with our syntax we shall fail you do not mind us.

we know how to exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reminder For All Of Us

global_to_the_laws_of_evolution_something_that_is_not_used may_finally_be_lost. It fades. It is gone. So like the fins of a fish who migrated to the island, they slowly fall out and from there shall grow a set of wings and claws. They become they soon learn to fly. They dream of clouds.
Like the moss of the rocks by the shore by the lake. They envy the worms. They dream to wriggle and move and push their tiny the acquire the gift of motion. Soon they become worms and crawl their way up on the leaf. They even become caterpillars. Soon they become the new butterflies.

So it will be with us. If we do not walk, our feet will soon be forgotten.
They will become mere skin. Our feet shrink and become part of our bottom. If we do not think and use our minds, soon the brain becomes a stone. Hard. Brittle. Soon they become part of the river where a passerby simply steps upon it. Upon us.

Soon we will just be the sand. And the river flows upon.
If we do not love, soon we will just become a wall, a floor, a house whose doors will close. A place for nothing but merely departure.

RIC S. BASTASA
erasing the past
is like burning the pages of your diary the smoke hurts a while
but soon you begin to write your own future another page
another stroke of the pen that sometimes we admire because it is nicer now there will always be a difference until you tear the pages again crumple them
and let them go

sometimes i think
i need to make paper planes or perhaps kites

and so i need some strings some bamboo sticks for bones

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reminder For Nur

How many lives shall be taken as offering to your altar simply because not enough attention has been showered in you when you arrive in that overcrowded hall?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reminder From A Son-In-Law To His Mother-In-Law

be kind to me
fake mama, do not say
words unkind
as i also leave words sharp as mongol pencil in my study table

to your harsh questions i do not answer and to your answers to my pleadings
i do not make any reply

this is the best arrangement of the furniture behind it is the closed door and to that door knob is the lost key.

there is the window glass a little bit frosty
i see your face and body and in vagueness you also see me on those cold early mornings when the leaves still own the dew when the birds are still asleep take note

we all become interesting.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reminder To All

perhaps after man has mastered the laws of the wind and the land and the water he must venture on mastering the laws of love for by then in another moment of history we shall find again that fire that must continue burning love, and more love in our drying hearts.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reminder......

we quibble
like worms in the office

someone asks
what is this rushing all about?

someone is worried
are we killing
ourselves?

so we got out
from the quibbles

out to the fields of other dreams

to stop for once
and be still and then we all dance

with the winds....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Renewal Of Vows

On the old trees
The dancing ladies are clinging
On its barks
They are all yellow and blooming
From My heart too
Shall spring forth
Renewed vows & commitments.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Repost Of The Past Poem

i step out of the door from my dark room the windows are not open it is humid and cold

i step out of the door the windows are still closed i lock the door and step upon a patch of green grass the dews are hanging on the blades and shaken i look upon the sky and there is this star still shining despite the opening of the mouth of the morning i was in deep slumber

i close my eyes
i see your face but i promise there shall be no tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Request

lady since you cannot explain to me
orgasm in words or even in poetry
i have one request will you please demonstrate it to me?

i am a slow
learner, so please repeat it over and over
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Request For Grief

leave me not it is you who keeps on teaching me the value of life
the meaning of
happy moments

despise me
pain, like you, i have become
myself...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Request That You Simply Mind Your Own Business...

there is this tail end of the wind that tells you that the journey
was never smooth and easy there are eddies of the mind that must finally tell you that

oh well,
not every thing has been alright that there are no clearer ponds except those that you have not really gone to oh yes, far pastures are always greener than we think or that, you never really understand what one had gone through all those fast flying years these goddamn quick years that leave us with nothing but suppressed memories which still carry the needles in their hands and prick us on those empty nights

at the height of this upheaval you still have no right to grasp what details are there

go somewhere else
and read between the armpits of these lines there is this Notice on the Wall which tells you with accuracy (and even warn you about respect)

(i.e. to simply mind your own business, ok?)

RIC S. BASTASA
A Resolution

early in the morning
as we pray in church searching for
light
we ponder deep
like a well without rope
on a rusty pail
and then we open our eyes not seeing any light we find the darkness instead and then we step out and walk on our separate ways.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Respond To Thought....

there there is the useless man the forgotten animal, the bird which you set to waste, there is this tree and plant which we do not want to mention there is this leaf without medicinal use the wasted time, the useless day, i keep them.

the dead ant, the wrong notion, the hated answer, the passing time, the days of war.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Response To Love Unrequited

i've seen love offered which i did not love for once and for fear that i may mislead love to a place not intended for it i simply ignore it

i had love and spent it all until i do not have any

i am not that happy if you ask for that higher standard of having to live away from misery but i know love and i know how to throw it away so that i may cause no pain at

all

or that it may not cause any pain
at me

(for who likes pain?
i too, want to avoid that unnecessary pain that i do not wish to bear with out any meaning)

what i wish to tell you is this: i have learned to live
alone
at least in my mind that on nights that i am just myself in bed and with no other
in peace shall i soundly sleep
and you who say that you do not love me anymore

i shall reply:
i really don't care.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reunion

Often a man's life is such
that he seldom sees his friends,
like the night and day
never sharing the same hours
In the skies
Seldom does he share
His evenings with friends
Or his mornings
His lamp light unshared
His mornings unspent
How long will this Distance last?

Hairs have turned
White and lesser
As we inquire about
Friends and other
Acquaintances only
To find out that half of Them have turned
To ghosts,

Shocks and torments
Of this heart, cries
But I will try again
To enter your home
Twenty five years
And now you have
Two sons and three Daughters to greet
Me by the door
I thought you never Married and they all Kiss my hands and
Before I can ask the Questions you drive
Them off to the grounds
To play away from us
As we talk about
Lasting friendships
And how we have Almost forgotten them

Tomorrow I will be drunk
Again back to my own
Affairs in the big city
We will be separated
Again by these peaks
Of mountains and we Shall again lose each
Other’s friendly views.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reunion To Our Sadness

my friend on this reunion of our sadness

to desires untamed
to hopes untouched

to a love that we both lost

we look to the sky
tonight and gape
our mouths wide
we shall catch the
the rain

some leaves
some flowers
some dusts

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reunion With High School Buddies

since there is no electricity we build fire from dry leaves, and coconut husks and palms
and driftwood

we go back to recalling the past again the boyhood days

just a few of us who think that life to be lived must be in every moment

colorful lives, aged, mellowed, and still not careful with words one still talks a lot about his women others merely have a good time laughing.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Reunion....

the dogs in the house
are wagging their tails
and letting their tongues

trying to tell a story of their own
for we were
for quite a time
away
from home.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Revelation From A 40 Year Old Student

he is not married and not into women
he has a child that stays with his sister in that faraway city

he is here studying law single and
happy

a matter of choice he says life is not complicated.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Review

dressed with apples in the garden of Eden and Eve was so Hungry for apples she always dreamed of apples even if Adam is just beside her that jejune
she is the first jejemon, and on that day when God was not watching when the Snake was merely behaving like a Snake she touches an apple her dream
and he ate one and Adam so likes it she takes a bite...

nothing new really, just a pass and review of their story that we believe without any question at all the moral lesson: reflect on ourselves, we are the consistent gullible readers

we are never original on this.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Revival Of An Old Story....

She'll make you feel that you are weak and nothing better than an empty shell less the song of the sea and sand.

You must understand her Story. She's bitter as a witch under the curse of her very own mother who finally disowned her as she keeps herself intact
tight and compact in the world that she created with Sappho and the rest of the girls in Lesbos.

Do not dare love her.
She cannot love you in return.

She makes poetry like a spinning wheel. Threads into silk.
It is beautiful indeed it is.
But there is no place for you there and if you come nearer she'd spit on you.

Keep the thrill. Make your own pottery.
Your poety to her is pottery.
Do not laugh at yourself. As i see it in the name of Love you are doing much better.

It that is a fact.
The only way to love her and yourself is to move on.
Find Another.
Forge this unrequited Love.
Love has many faces of Janus.
Do not worry.
There is a face suited for you and do not be shocked.
It looks like you too.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Riddle

I saw a man in white,
he looked quite a sight.
He was not old,
but he stood in the cold.
And when he felt the sun,
he started to run.
Who could he be?
Please answer me.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Riddle...

if only
you did not lie
i could have written more
perhaps
more truths than we can bear

but since you tell the biggest lie today
despite the
warnings

i guess, i have to quit
for lies do not interest me
anymore
i have more that you can ever tell me

in fact i live in the house of
lies
play in the garden of lies
eat on the table
have breakfast
drink from the glass and satisfy myself
with a burp
all lies, all lies,

those lilies of the fields floating on the marshes tadpoles and mosquitoes snakes and rats

these are the only truths
we have
in this predator-prey
world
dog eating dogs cats befriendning mice heavens
compromising with root canals.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Ripe Mango

smell its sweetness like the scent of a child's memory
soothing to sadness

its color is yellow on hues on pale orange smooth skin
like porcelain

its pulp is juicy
and sugarlike
in taste, and the covering of the seed is leatherlike

at the core
it is better

like me, really.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Ritual

one puts too much oil on the hair
and you know how it goes your face glows

like fire
your hair becomes pitch black

and you face the people of this corner
and that pathway
as though you are you

inside the fire
and the sickness burns outside the smile
becomes as wide
as full moon

who knows you?
nobody

what then? you are happy.
i know, . i am too.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Ritual Of The Day To The Night

afraid of being converted into a pig i do not sleep when i am done and full

i sit and watch the stars flicker the moon floats on the river and stays full at rest on the side of the mountain i listen to the fox
i gaze at the bird resting upon a twig on a tree beside the house of my parents and when i am hungry and thirsty again upon an empty mind i go to bed and ponder between this dreamland and this harsh reality the words come into play and begin to reconcile and then i fall into a deep sleep erasing all that the day has written so ineptly

RIC S. BASTASA
A River Of Loneliness

loneliness is like a river winding through many mountains and hills and plains and ricelands
trying to end its journey to the mouth of the sea whose vast bounty takes the river in and diffuses all its loneliness
into anonymity

RIC S. BASTASA
A Road Incident....

a red easy ride is parked along the graveled road beside a cemented fence

it is one hot afternoon a little girl carries on her head a bunch of ripe bananas following mother carrying a basket of

clothes

a man wearing a shirt with green row stripes runs toward the market rushing it is beginning to rain on this hot afternoon after a while, the road is flooded a little boy runs across the road against an over speeding truck and then what we hear is a mother screaming for help

RIC S. BASTASA
A Rock Garden

in my present garden i put rocks and pebbles some sands
added dusts

they ask what do i grow
in there?

i put a chair and sit there
alone

barefoot i put my hands in the open

i gaze
feeling like the sun to some planets

the stones as i walk
for a while grate
as though they have teeth

then back to where i sit they begin to grow silence

silence is a lotus
it is a pond too where a dragonfly is hovering

there is this stillness of a little universe
the space is emptiness of imaginary
stars
there is no moon here no one is lost

there are no leaves no pretensions of stems and calyx the stones are faceless like everyone that i meet in the mall

the rocks stand like gods unchanged unaffected by the chaos of my thoughts

i gaze
transfer my eyes to those that remain intact

immutable hardness
fixed situations

they only sound when you take a walk they do not rearrange things here for they are heavy
and always
unchanged, unaffected steady, firm

lifeless, unfeeling
stubborn, solid,

tonight darkness sleeps with them its coldness seeps in every stone lifelessly

always unaffected, unfeeling and much as i wanted to stay

i can't

i have life out there a door to open again and again...
A Room In Club Astoria

luxurious
life style
this room
i never expect to be this big in my

being alone far from where i had roots

light green walls
too much light
a taro leaf for accent
milky white drapes
for my privacy

i think of so many things and people i leave
behind

i picture a living animal
i breathe
and imagine
a tightness and wholeness
of skin and flesh
of love
and my tyranny

i learn to be cruel and now alone am i
not anymore...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Room Without A Fan

there is a room without a fan but there is a piano there where a child practices for the whole day

there is a room without a fan but it has a mother with a stick on hand there are fingers on a musical piece too hurt to say that it is too hurt

there is no blood
but shall it mean that there is no bleeding of his heart?
how can mother
not understand how is it to be a boy deprived of his normal play in the backyard of the house.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Rose Bud....

there is a way
to keep things
tight and even tighter
that the other sees
only the essence
that you want to
show,

like the way you
tighten your lips to choose
this essence of
silence

it looks like
a rose bud.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Rose Is Not A Rose

i mistook
a rose,

a wall that
rose,

higher than
the sky

nothing about redness

or petals, or stalks

or thorns but a wall that

rose higher than the sky

wallowing, wailing
willing

still to push
through

this dream
rising, rosy rainy

RIC S. BASTASA
A Rose Tattoo?

you have that rose tattoo on your arm
there is a bleeding heart on the
side
and when we bathe in the sea the sun shines there and i imagine how things bleed and heal
and get immortalized somehow on your tattoo of love and hate and devotion and then gone for good

you like to retain somehow the lessons
of the pain
the memories of the ecstasy and the moment of final separation

i told you last night when we made love i don't keep memories i let them drip like a rain in the gutter and they are kept better be in the canals buried deep inside the earth

i like to grow and touch the sun i am this flower that blooms only once and then die

i don't have a tattoo i know what i am, i just pass by like a hush, like a sigh

i like the way things are, blank and clueless.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am reading about the death of a rose i am reflecting about dead of freedom it is all about a rose, a wilting rose, a brown rose, a dry rose
each petal falling softly on the ground a dry ground full of sand and pebbles all footprints covered abandoned, i am talking about the death of a rose, the death of the freedom of the rose the death of freedom, the rose of death, the freedom of death, is it you now that i talk about? that i must remember?

have i met you before when i was but a thorn, a worm, a leaf?
was i the sand
a pebble, the wind? will you be a rose forever?
is there death in you?

i feel the wind, i smell the rose,
there is no death....

RIC S. BASTASA
we have this round table and we put all our hands on it when we eat and drink and just talk for hours and hours and listen. And we ask what is happening: Karding broke a leg and Delia
is looking for the money.
Always it is the money.
Always she is short of the money. And there were jewelries hanging on her neck and arms and fingers, and we all ask at this round table:
what is happening?
Nothing, don't mind at all, this is just a part of the round table, some wine glass that broke and must be swept at once. We keep away the sound of a crying pig.
We eat pigs here at this round table. Then we shifted the talk about our dead parents. We pray. We remember we keep on saying this. We finish eating the pig. We drink a very cold water. Our throats are irritated and we step out of the room wanting to pull away our tongues.

when we come back the round table is empty.
and we laugh about a joke that we remember.
our childhood games
the river, and the boat that father made for us.

we turn off the tv and we begin to talk about the beautiful flowers in mother's old garden, the secret one.

we agree. we miss it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Roving

Some
like to drink with friends front of the house where ladies pass by

Most
wives stay at home
and hide their sorrows

Many families love a new house beside the sea
the seagulls are joys as company

We
are here in love with poetry and most them, many at time, not just some wonder, what is this delight? what fuss? what stuff is this that is written purposely not to be understood directly a burden of the mind a puzzle to be solved
a bliss known only to the Few.

We are what they call as the introverts
needing a shrink.

Many of us
laugh. Many of us see the big picture overdecorated with
metaphors.

Like, this. Can't you be patient a little bit to see it?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Rural Scene

a line of carabaos grazing on a newly harvested ricefield behind an abandoned nipa hut some wilted grass and dry leaves shadows of hills and mountains tall coconut trees and a footpath two little boys holding each other's hands bound for home on a late afternoon sunset, red and orange, and then you leave the place: your pain is subdued.

RIC S. BASTASA
today the women wearing buri hats are planting rice on the muddy rice fields of Katipunan

the sun is up
the petals of white flowers are still holding on to their dews the finches are flying low and hovering on the grass the buffaloes are grazing on the field the children are chasing chickens and playing with the dogs the amor secos are growing wild still uncut as the some men are singing songs with their old guitars a wooden sled filled with wood is hauled by a big spotted cow the path is covered with stones that grate their sounds in the open air....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sacrifice

we have only two here but let me do the sharing one for you, and one for...

oh forget it, take this last one for your wife and children they are expecting you

i am alone and i think, you bet i can still manage even without it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sad Day

a garden of stone
a butterfly long gone

da dry leaf
afloat on the pond

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sad Song I Whistle

A sad song I whistle in the air
Like a river floating
And then the strong wind comes
My hat flies away

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sad Story About A Plight Of A Woman On The Other Side Of The World

he is talking to a woman on the other side of the world a world that he cannot feel because he never saw it neither is the woman since she is on the other side of the world he was never there

he knows a lot about her he was told by so many who tell him that she lives with them for a while he hears everything about those foul things about her but he never smells them can foul be foul when he only hears it?

can a sense of smell be simply heard?

while they were talking on the phone she hints about how her lover rejected her about how her father abused her how her mother abandoned all of them for another man how their house was foreclosed and how they have to move to another place
again and again

how she had to sleep with other men to make a living etcetera etcetera

it was a long conversation and it was then that he felt her a madness not of her own causing but of society as a whole when she was finished he nodded, for now

he understood.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sad View...

the tiny hand
of the child is finally melting
the face of his father who is now facing the sentence of his wrongdoing....

the boy has not learned words
but the father has learned much...

goodbye son
till we meet again...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Safe Secret...

dear dead woman,

my eyes ache badly
today
but i must write you this letter

i still have so many things to tell you

and i could have told you everything
when you were still alive

the moon is full tonight and the wind is colder

i cannot rest and
i cannot sleep

i have many secrets to tell
you
and these are all safe now since you are
dead.

your friend,
(name withheld)

p.s.
i still like to live.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sapphire Sky

look up to a sapphire sky above us find the castle there the princess
who sings the sweetest songs of peace or the choir of angels who sing the praises and hymns for God's wonders and divine creations look up to the sapphire sky and feel the wonder of the heavens

be humbled
you are nothing but the spectator of God

be confident God has created everything to please you
the spectator that He loves above all things above all creatures

RIC S. BASTASA
A Saying

and there was darkness and let there be light?

he wept.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Saying....

to be somebody
he says
you must last, do not just fleet, and fret and when things get rough and thorny
just hang in there
like a vine
on the iron grills

RIC S. BASTASA
A Scalpel

A scalpel am I to cynthia’s Aching tooth
And true to your calling You are the morphin
To my antiquated pain

All I need really is a simple Bamboo
Toothpick

Get some sleep prince charming Now free yourself

Just be an ordinary man
To an ordinary woman

Hold on to your promise To love her till the end

For better or for worse, for richer for poorer.
In sickness and in health Till death do you part

Remind her though
Not to outdo your promise to love each other

You may find it too humiliating for yourself
And you simply
Retreat to yourself like a deflated balloon

But just in case
Love stops, ceases, and becomes frank and true

Say: I don’t love you anymore

Take the yellow brick road

And dance yourself to freedom.
You’re too courageous, It does not matter who gets hurt.

It could be you. It could just be you.

Jaundiced man, jaundiced heart.

Every woman you love wishes you a happy

Death.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Scene After Dinner....

an empty drinking glass falls from the hand of the house help, it breaks on the floor into pieces

we hear the sound of the breaking the shattering

we do not mind, drinking glasses break the sound is usual and we do not ever dare to ask why as we are busy with our usual business

i am reading a book, you are rendering an accounting on a yellow paper the guest is preoccupied with the internet booking for a ticket back home there is another sound of breaking that is not evident to everyone in the house that evening after dinner and suddenly there is a blackout of the whole island it is hot, and humid and we perspire we do not complain, as there is no use we hear the sound of a breaking as loud as a nuclear bomb in Hirosma as a documentary film in National Geographic, we suffer, silently, we are becoming deaf, we do not mind anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Scene In A Little Town

the sky is white
the sea is blue like silk on the sea three fishermen pull their net

their boat is small and wooden

on the sandy beach
a child plays with his white dog how peaceful is this place how wonderful is this life!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Scenery Of A Morning Light Arriving Upon Green Leaves...

a boat of light arrives at the port
of leaves,

it is beautifully
anchored
in the iris of my eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Scenery....

the trembling hands write the words of truth the mind wanders in the desert thirsting
the body is a pillar remains of the time's ruins the eyes are black birds looking for prey feet become boats carrying anxious passengers of toes to the shores of oblivion.

RIC S. BASTASA
A School Of Losers

the school of losers gather one day in the sea at the reef
under the anemones
on a drinking spree
of sea
and foams

having done nothing about their loss they simply talk about other matters
those trivial ones of course stories about losers their lives
and irredeemable
selves

i do not pity them
i think it is just a waste of time under the sea
on the reef
with the anemones

the jellyfishes are coming too sooner.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Scissor's Story

there was once a boy who is afraid of scissors and the scissors keep on threatening him,

until one day when the boy gained strength to face that scissor and he tied it with a string on his neck and paraded it on the streets of the town

his thumb was cut
and blood dripped along the path
towards his self-gained
freedom

and then he laughed as the scissor gets too sharp for the pleasure of his neck

RIC S. BASTASA
Boy: I have to leave you Girl: what do you mean?
Boy: I am leaving
Girl: what about us?
Boy: there is no us anymore Girl: just that?
Boy: yes, I have to go Girl: I am pregnant Boy: get an abortion Girl: I can’t I am a catholic Boy: You know that I can’t marry you Girl: why can’t you?
Boy: I am just a boy Girl: but I am not asking you to marry me Boy: what do you mean?
Girl: just be the father of my child Boy: I can’t I am just a boy Girl: why can’t you?
Boy: I only 13 and I cannot support that child Girl: I am not asking for support Boy: what do you mean?
Girl: just be my man Boy: but I am just a boy Girl: just love me
Boy: I can’t I don’t really love you Girl: I hate you
Boy: I hate you too
Girl: I will tell papa Boy: I tell mama Girl: I tell the police Boy: I am leaving
Girl: I tell the world Boy: go, I am leaving.
Girl: where are you going?
Boy: I am going back to school.

(End of the scene 1) A Sculpture Of Human Stone

you are outside
and i watch you,

this glass wall
between us

i make it. I am safe.

the heart screams
in silence.

unknown by you
i bleed.

this is the best arrangement that nature has designed for us i only have to watch you no amount of touch from my hands can make you alive

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sculpture Of The Living

from the mountains of Antulanga
where even horses have a hard time climbing the steep cliffs,

you are finally transported to a museum and frozen

you were not given a seat
so you do what you do usually do
when you
were on a hill
waiting for
no one
putting your hands above your hair
and looking at the ants

i had wrinkles on my forehead
as though the sun is too strong
to my eyes

i can't say what i feel but this
i am too certain

i have to talk to the curator of the museum if i have to bribe him i have to
if my diplomacy does not work at all if my influence in society fails

You must be returned to where you belong You must live
You must.

RIC S. BASTASA
at first it was acceptable talking to a stranger always casual, no depth like a leaf on the surface of a muddy pool then you learn, something is not acceptable, always with caution, talking to a wall where you cast your shadow and then a conversation without words begins, you wear weights around your body to meet a sunken ship on the depths of Malcapuya island, where a big black fish meets you to tell another story and there, because it is too beautiful, you begin to forget how is it to listen. Everybody speaks here, and there is no sound. It is simply amazing and yet it is not acceptable.
Everyone lives here peaceably.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Seagull Flying On A Dimming Horizon

just that, what do you have to say more about it just that

a white seagull flying towards a dimming horizon a ship sailing away

the sun receding towards the other side deep down the sea and then gone just that, do not ever say that the seagull is heading home or running away that is not so, there is no basis for such a personal conclusion or just another imagination of your own loneliness by association of that white seagull flying towards a certain darkness the ship turning to a dot dissolving on a horizontal line in front of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Season For Sowing

a season for sowing
good tidings
and good will

the fields are clean the sky is bright
the air is filled with mists

we bury what good we have inside our hearts
we let the soil bid time we make room for growth we wait for many moons we dream with the stars we anticipate the next to come that season for harvest.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Second Look

i must have been mistaken,
that evening you
were a full moon on my desert
you were the warmth
of my cold body,
i bathed with time
in the oasis
under the palms,
at the second look
at you
you have become
the sun
that speaks of thirst and death to me

help me
reverse time, let me save that love
i have for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Secret Find....

you know the secret
of the heart, it is after all, the heart
itself that tells you,

when we go out of the house slowly as we caress the soft spots of our body we throw away imagination like a kite in the air albeit we hold upon a string of our logical deductions, when i finally find what i am looking, i take it gently inside my pocket

and then i go home to savor what taste is there, we know what we find yet we are not telling each other

about it,

it is a secret,
it is life itself,

we keep this secret throughout life when by the slip of our tongue this matter is revealed, you know the consequence,

the heart knows it,

the house falls down,
the sun closes its eye,
the moon burns itself,
the river dries up
the heart shrinks
someone finds finally the ash beneath the innocent child's feet.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Secret Garden

outside the house
there will be a number of faces to meet and you shall be ready with you cliches
to face them

it will not last for soon you get inside that secret garden when the pressure gets strong when the tempers rise to a higher scale

in the secret garden you lock the door
inside is the big tree where you sit under and then ponder

there is peace here
nothing bitter

RIC S. BASTASA
A Secret......

there is an appetizer if you only know if you only know her or me or the other waiting on the other side of this street or that window, no, it is not chili, not even curry, it is not physical it is something beyond good appearances, and this makes you agile like a gazelle if you have seen one, or felt it, or simply disregarded it, like the way you dismissed a silly idea, a rock which you have thrown, and has become its own kingdom. There is this taste for the ostracized salt, this bland bitterness this flint and prank this unacceptable proposition which you hide tenderly and keep inside a music box, which makes music for you alone. A secret.

more than delicious, it keeps your soul burning, no smoke, no color,

A secret. It does not put you to sleep.
It burns your heart. It makes you alive.

it is good, and it is all yours alone.
it is a secret. Let yourself not know it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sedentary Lifestyle....

i defy what morning
wants me to do,

here i am again
sedentary sand,

sorting out words
to give me my life back.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Self Indestructible

just being myself that is what is left of myself after everything is taken away from me after i am stripped of my name my honor
my property

there is this soul
that you cannot kill there is this self
that you cannot destroy

it is indestructible

there is this thought that subsists
on its own
eternal motion

RIC S. BASTASA
A Self Spent

got this small self small as a snail
slow pacing like that old snail that you know something that you did not touch
because of pity
got this tiny conscience like a speck of dust it is too small and perhaps of lesser value than any other self in this lonely nook
i do not think anymore
how to spend it well i got a day or just a second and i am spending it all till i am no more.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Self-Gratification

she left her for good but he manages to stay and keep himself
sane,

he sits naked on the stair caressesthe loneliness of his flesh and squirts his substance on the floor at least he did not spit on her.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sense Of Belonging?

the happy year is here again meeting same old, sad faces inside the dining room with only one candle to light and create the ambiance of gloom blackout.

RIC S. BASTASA
and so
from prison to the hospital you find this sense
of comfort
to the piano music that he played once but still sticks deep down in the recesses of memory
it is that sweet sadness assuaging that madness long subsumed that is awakened
bringing forth the rage and the sage
in you
welcome to the realities of this world tackle down
the heaviness of some words

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sense Of Home.....

the chickens in the backyard are feeding themselves freely on the corn grits

the hen are checking her chicks and enfolds all of them with her wings under the mango tree the roosters roost up the tree settling upon a big branch it is getting dark and a flock of sparrows arrive and stop to take their own place on the coconut palms

they're all home now, and then the silence begins to hover too inside the room.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sense Of Humor

listen to a joke just listen and then don't mind the face of the teller just listen and then something clicks and you catch something funny
and you laugh

keep the joke and dissect it let is stay
retell it to yourself or even to your friend retell it how many times to him and let him write it you see there is no click anymore something funny was lost because you want to keep it because you want to let it stay in you one thing with a joke is that it must always be something new one that you have not heard before i tell you, it is just like a poem thereis  this switch, a clicking and then something happens how can you tell it? you can't tell it and then it is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sensitive Conversation

in a sensitive conversation we do not just listen and observe
what happens next,
we take active part in exploring what goes inside that makes this person listless
we take his journey too into the great abyss of his own void which has the same face as ours we feel
what void is there that bites his being that poisons his mind
we tell him we are about to arrive at the root cause of the problem so take it easy
do not ever give up we assure him that everybody is experiencing what he is experiencing right now that he is not just the lonely man in this planet
there are just too many of
us,
yes us, and so we bond together cohesive till we are not what we are
anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sensual Scribble

I was the scribe who woke up at dawn Finding a clean sheet of paper And this glossy sort of ballpoint pen Having the urge to write Something sensual
My fingers spread the paper
On this table
Where there is so much disorder Some paper clips and Floppy discs scattered Scotch tapes and mail openers And some still unopened mails That I did not mind
Not my priority

I was into something sensual On this clean sheet of paper On an urge to write Grabbed this glossy sort of ballpoint pen And start scribbling
Some lovely head notes
“My dear darling”
Careful strokes in curves Sliding on paper
My fingers are wildly Caressing to the shapes of Sensual letters and words And breathtaking sentences

“You know that you make me Hot and you make me wild And I always remember you”

And I am at the middle Of so much longing
Using such letters

U and I
And w and e
Lots of ohs and ahs
And s and e and x
L and o and v and e
To make sense Without pretense

Some exclamations
And pauses of commas and Semicolons spread on some Corners of this paper
With so much Unstoppable anticipation

Somewhere in the center I pierced this paper
With this glossy ballpoint pen Writing something Emphatic
Clinching
And I was at the height Of my desiring and
So much liking
Something ecstatic
And calming
At the end

It was a beautiful piece
Of a scribble
Written at dawn

And I wrote at the end part there “With all my love I remain Your faithful slave”

And a postscript at the tip Of my tongue
Written with a nip

“When will I see you again?”
The letter shall be mailed at once She will understand that pierce Somewhere at the center something That was ecstatic and she will remember Every letter every word was an ember embedded.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Separate World

guess not but i live in a different world not yours
it is dimmer
but it is mine
it is not as joyful
as the bells
of the church
or as naive as the wind chimes
by the window
but it is mine
i live here
contentedly
watching everyone that passes
my way
at night when i sleep
i am confident
with the pillow
conscience rests peacefully as
the moon
above the trees
as fresh as the wind to the
leaves
as scented as the flowers
beside the paths

of righteousness.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Septon Message For Luis

I do not have to convince you Luis that we have become better writers because of pain and sorrow and loneliness... it is when the heart bleeds that the best literature is written, and not when the heart is feasting.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sequel On Charles Bukowski's 'so You Want To Be A Writer? '

he has his message clearly said: a writer is chosen he does not have to move heaven and earth to make a poem or write an essay or finish a novel, for he is the privileged soul

the chosen one
the prophet
the messiah
the secret prince
the hidden king
the divine incarnate
whatever
whoever

and words simply come to him like a light from the sun embracing him with so much inspiration that he merely sits there by the throne of his porch and simply listens to the dictated poem.

he says it is a burst inside your heart an explosion inside your head and you simply have to listen with your heart and mind and soul and there everything comes so easily day by day and on and on and on ad infinitum ad aeternum

there is no sweat or hard work, there is no striving at all to become the chosen one for the inspiration

it comes even if uninvited it perches on your chest like a bird and sings it stays there until you die or it dies with you there is no madness or murderous intent or this lostness they are not necessary to be a writer one does not have to stay for hours and write a piece and stare at the screen of the computer and tire your eyes with so much pressure

Is that so Charles? Did you not once believe that Elvis Presley is nothing?
Did you not look for a job, or even try to find your lost self for twenty years or so or even more?

There must be this irony.
And if that be so, I think i must believe you.

He does not bother at all, how can he be a poet?
Not you Charles, someone else.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sequel To Mamta's Asking About Sky Scrapers

after the progress when sky scrapers stand tall reaching the moon and the stars and elbow to elbow with the sun

the birds may have asked: where shall we put our nests?

and the trees may have asked: where shall we ever grow
again?

and the brooks may
have asked: where
shall we ever flow?

and yes, mamta, the children as asking:
do we still have playgrounds to play?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Set Of Neighbors

got this drunk neighbor and always at night he does nothing but drink he bangs his head on the table
on the wall
he hits his fists on the chair he urinates by the window and his wife shouts at him and curses him and threatens to leave him
this early and he hits her with lots of fist blows and they will wrestle with each other wrestle for the gun wrestle for life
and there will be a big bang and their baby in the cradle will cry
and we do not really care because the principle here is simple to each his own problems
the dead tomorrow shall bury their dead and babies will be taken by nuns
that is how it works here
in my mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
you are not alone
for i am a shadow and i always follow you wherever you may go,

you shake me off?
no you can't. I am your shadow.

you want to be left alone? you shove me away, no you can't.
i am a part of you. i reflect you. I am your shadow.

you feel forsaken?
you dislike me? You plan your escape.
You stand at noontime. No you can't take me away.

I am diminished. When the sun comes as your ally, I am equal to you, under you and still a part of you.
You cannot take me away. I am your shadow.

You shed tears. I have the shadow of tears.
You bleed blood. I have the shadow of blood bleeding.

You cannot take me away from you. I am a part of you. I am your shadow.
You regret life? You want to end all these? You hate me?

Plan your next step. Vanish me. Kill me.
Use your black magic. Take me away from you. No you can't.

I am always a part of you. I am your shadow.
I ask you to ask me if i like this way with us together.

I tell you. I want to shake you off from me. I am your shadow.
And i detest you. My body.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Shadow And The Heavy Rains...

a heavy rain
a dark night

inside the comfort of a room with walls of wood

a shadow sings
silence

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sharp Contrast

at a friend's party drinks are served and some christmas food, dessert and conversations and laughter of reminiscenses we left at the right hour when the hosts are sleepy time to be back

to my room,

in sharp contrast
the bed and the pillows and blankets are soundly asleep

no snores, not a scratch of an ant's feet
not a sound from the walls

deafening silence
questions without answers

RIC S. BASTASA
A Shin Splint

May the light of God shine upon the Poet who just had a shin splint.

The shin pains

it
do not shine but shins its way through Chua-Shin that little Chinese boy whose cheeks are read like peaches of Guangzhou.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Short Break Of Intimacies

i sit again here
at the tip of the hill under a lone coconut tree
which stuck
after the
storm

i watch the light
between the hills
as the sun arrives
on time

the shadows
slowly disappear
the mists dissolve
upon their own fluids turning to dry leaves
finally left out
to be
themselves

i may be sad
as you see me and conclude that after all i have lied
to the pages of my own
book

but i got one consolation
in here at the tip
of the hill
alone
i think i can see things better
when you are
faraway

RIC S. BASTASA
A Short Life Lived....

i have seen him lived a very short
life.

he was the best.
a classmate, and a
friend.

the sky is still here.
the river did not
dry up.

birds still keep on nesting. Goats have increased in number.

my horse died but i no longer think about it.

i have never lived alone.
I have a wife but we have no child.

the sea is normal.
Storms come and go.

when it is calm when this sands are serene

thought come and i have become deeper

time teaches me to simply move on, live, and not to think much.

No worry is that long.
If he lived a longer life,
i am sure, he won't differ.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Short Note For Mother Theresa

yes
the same question
shall be asked:

how much love
was put in the little thing that i have done

i am not a saint
and i do not know how to really measure
love

please
teach me how

RIC S. BASTASA
A Short Reminder For Lawyers

two lawyers died today and my friend asks
'is God cleaning
the earth? '

hmm, i quip,
He is cleaning the
floor.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Show Of The Words, Getting Undressed Before Us....

this is my own way of undressing letters that fake emotions, and what you hear for now is the honest song of
nude syllables, how they dance in bed
and fly in the middle of our ceilings,
have become much beyond our literary expectations, wild and drunken, though wine is swine, and win is winged, and we come to terms with what is real, how these words must try to get back to their dressings,
sort of dress rehearsals for the next show while we sit down there with lights closed
watching what is next to happen.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Show....

all the rats
mourn over the dead rat,

all the cats
have been singing
all night

the frogs are croaking over
a heavy rain

reeds drown, canals overflow

a boy watches
a tree falling on the
road

mother calls and closes
the window

lights out.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sigh At The Pier

seagull flying low
preying on fish

clouds getting dark tides rising to the port horizons losing grip of the fading light

there are only two of us
and we are not talking

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sigh Into The Present Air... things would have been better if left untouched

like some women opting to become virgins
not having seen any man nor thought of masculine symbols

like nature
the forest would have been better if its trees are left
uncut

the weeds tall like grown up natives the grasses spreading without the artificiality of the manicure
of the mower
like a river flooding the land overfilling banks

words would have been better if not uttered like raw emotions like sushi
that you savor with your tongue

how delicious to see
all these things
and feelings
unadulterated by explanations or justifications

of reason that does not want to be overpowered by the innocence of ignorance no apple on the esophagus none about analysis

just plain description of what is there nothing about
additions
or conceptualizations

i would have wanted my love to be like this but look at it now this heart folded like an origami deceiving you with a stork feelings cut into pieces of graffiti of pent up emotions what they ought to be what they must or should have been

dado joints fitting into rules
or universal concepts
lacking now
the originality of
truth...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sigh....

at exactly two o'clock and 1 minute

the i,
makes a sigh like a well pronounced syllable

and perhaps by such a perfect clarity

the night clearly understands what is it for
and why

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sigh.....

i ask what could have been the reason why we all have two eyes?

perhaps we can't see with
just one
we even missed a lot
having two.

i wonder why the other eye is not at the back
we could have seen the past too well or we could have projected
the future
that much

it seems that everything is in pairs: hands and feet and two holes in the nose

i wonder why i only have one navel
one mouth

and i most wonder why i fall in love a lot

and yet having no one loving me back.

RIC S. BASTASA
do not care to read me carefully, just skim over some words that may call your preferential attention. do not mind the smaller ideas, or the images that you find hard to imagine. They may not be images after all but just blotches of my stains, the negligence of my trembling fingers, the lapses of my brains, the slip of my tongues, the cliches of humanity, seeking meaning in the meaninglessness of words.

this is mumbling, this is plain rambling do not ever mind what i am writing. this is not about you. or myself, or the society that like sheep simply graze on the grass not knowing that on the next step is the landmine that kills them, or why look for the meaning of loneliness in words or lines or poetry.

are you going home tonight? on a train. sit there. look over the window. see the line of trees, do they shout at you? No.
and move your eyes, as though you are scrolling for names on the cell phone, like roving camera, you do not have to look that far on the 20th person sitting across the other side.

someone is sitting next to you. listen to his silence.
feel the vibrations of all his problems. try to unmask the cover of his face.
are there words covering his face? none.

or if words cover his face and body, try reading them all silently. most of the truths are not said. Not even written. You always see them next to you. Be it on the train, the bus or the plane. Or simply when you walk along the cemented paths of the park. Here comes another lost soul. Talk to him. Do not write poetry.

this is mumbling this is plain rumbling. Do not speak poetry. write them and let them cover your face.

That is the best way to speak.
This is what is life is all about.
Speechless. Alone always.
A Silent World

got a headache
and i shall not tell you

i do not share pain
so i hide away from you

i go behind the house tied a hammock between two trees the sun is up and the shade is cool

i lay my body inside the hammock and i rock myself slowly slowly sleep drowns me into a forgetting

the world is silent
upon a grass so green

RIC S. BASTASA
A Silver Platter

the silver platter is what your family gives you your father makes it and you mother polishes it and you are given what you need in your life
some fruits and bread and meat and water that you need in your journey when they start sending you away and when they finally leave you as what this world demands, the usual flow of life and the fading death, and you find yourself still thinking and coping and running and stopping and resting and running and walking and curling and stretching what is all there, then everything is consumed, the silver platter has nothing, tarnished and you begin to worry what used to be is not anymore, you think life ends just like that,
no

reality bites now, like a snake, or a rabid dog, and you despise the silver platter
its lasting effect on you, how it made you weak and unthinking, complacent
and unable to grow your trees and eat the fruits to raise your goats and eat their meat to live your own life and be strong yourself in the darkness that comes when you still want to play it is not too late, take the silver platter and throw it away or bury it lest another one comes and takes it and be another victim of its temporary glow that almost killed you

RIC S. BASTASA
sometimes you feel so unlucky.
you feel that you are carrying the whole earth in your shoulder.
very heavy, and your shoulders feel like breaking into glass pieces.

sometimes you feel like a slave. following orders, all orders from the higher up from those cloud gods.

sometimes you feel like sitting down on the pebbles muddy ones, from the river, you feel like throwing your body in a mud-hole and cover every part of your body with mud or buffalo dung.

everyone is making you feel like a dirty towel, a rusty shovel, an unwanted discarded spare part of a motorcycle or an outmoded cover of a cell phone, you are familiar with a tissue that someone just wipes on his nose after sneezing and throwing the crumpled piece outside the window of the bus that speeds along the road on a winding path, that piece is left on the road and blown by the wind and simply forgotten very unimportant so insignificant, sometimes you feel that way you know why? i can explain it in the most simple terms using only six words to end this misery that you are in, and it is this, to wit:

'because you allowed it to happen'
A Simple Indulgence

to help fight
child hunger worldwide

me and my three friends did not go fishing

we listen to beethoven

RIC S. BASTASA
A Simple Life

a moon to shine above us a night where we sleep a blanket to keep us warm and a bed where we can sleep together

throughout
this darkness
this cold
we shall not even tell what we really
feel

it is just between our lips
and our navels.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Simple Life In The Cottage By A Hill

when you sit upon a bench under a mango tree and then do nothing but listen to the sparrow
up there singing

life stilled tolling
time
where from here where you rest
the rivers of the mind
keep on flowing

RIC S. BASTASA
A Simple Message To My Friend

ask me if i regret some things
in my life

i will say yes

ask me if i need this option
to be back to the past and change the things that i regret

i will tell you
no,

I've learned from my past mistakes
and i do not want to change them
anymore

what i treasure much are the lessons
of the heart

RIC S. BASTASA
A Simple World

one poem
read by one person
one day

one enlightenment
one moment
one solemn day
of the funeral

one death
one spectator
one tear

and then the most exciting part:
forgetting.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sinking Soul

sink
sink
sink
sink

my soul
to sleep

at
the bottom
of
the dream

find
your self

know
your self

sink
sink
sink
sink
my soul

why
are
you
so
silent?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sinner's Death

Death most resembles

a prophetess who is without honor in her own land

or

a poetess who is a stranger among her people

How frighteningly will it be when death soon spoils her appetites and makes this world

so empty,

and so soon

suddenly her sinning stops

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a waterfall on my belly there is a dam on my pelvic bone i cannot stop this i will let go a river there will be a flood needing you.

be the parched earth
let your cracks be mouths i will be the rain, i will be the flood do not destroy humanity take all of me, this flood, this rain, this dam is broken i let go a rampage of emotions i explode

you be the space
you must take all that i am all that i will be tackle me, swallow me
drink me
o thirsty earth, my love, my life, my outlet, my current.

RIC S. BASTASA
he enters a door
the frames are eaten by termites

he goes inside
where the chairs have only three feet the sofa is like a stomach with intestines getting out the roof leaks

there are stains of dried liquid on its corners blood of a woman

the ceiling is like some rotten leaves without stalkers

the floor is rough like a rocky shore mud plated on some surfaces he looks at the pile of papers people are always quarreling and there are endless litigations here no one wants to shrink a little and give way to something perhaps bigger

the setting itself is unjust the aircon is cracking like some hot oil where water sprinkles itself unnecessarily or inadvertently

i do not like to be here
but here i am

learning to live with injustice dirt and rotten system

turning into humus on the other hand, there must be a time for change a fertile ground

after so much leaking and wetting and rotting

worms eating themselves bats evacuating
leaving feces on the floors airy space, silent halls, and children giggling

RIC S. BASTASA
A Situation Like Yours

there is this
boundary between the room and your door there is a frame

of a mind

outside
possibilities grow like any tree

inside the room
you are always lulled to sleep by your bed of
roses

outside is always stunted like a bonsai they always cut your branches remove your roots

inside you are
dying
what you can be is but a dream

if you love
it will be a lie
if you tell the truth
you will die

RIC S. BASTASA
A Situationer

the shadows dance
under the moon
you are alone under the tree tearing the leaves

RIC S. BASTASA
A Situationer...

when he begins to write
the words
of course, he has in mind someone in particular for it makes him more particular too in the choice of images, like something so fragile like the last egg

in your hand

or something so beautiful like what you are not

somethings need not be mentioned and it will be peaceful

the moment you say what you have in mind three dragon heads spring from your neck so it is better to be cautious like saying something that we do not like to say really something like

how i wish to be like you and you who hears it knows what is true and you make a rebounding yes, i like you too and then after the brief moment sipping coffee and reading the news and looking at on striking passerby you then part ways clinching hug, cold kiss.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Situationer.....

he has been writing

he is thinking and then she calls him for dinner there is a blackout and she lights a candle so he can see the fumes of steamed rice the green color of braised morning glory he is silent and she does not ask she does not know whether he has been writing a lot whether he is lost in the maze of his thoughts she has cooked dinner for him she calls his name

it is dinner time and that is the most important hour she trusts him

he is dying

the needed light for the evening did not come there are no stars outside the window

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sketch Of Fairness

in the park the baby is on a cart
as the young mother
drives it toward the father who is waiting carrying a diaper

do not think that you are a loser

attention is diverted to the rain that starts
to fall

to the car that just parked on the road

to the jet plane that draws a white line
on the sky

to the bird that punctuates a branch of the poplar

to the man sitting alone on a bench
looking blank

well, you sit back and relax and tell yourself life is fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sketch Of What Familiarity And Routine Is All About when she arrives in my house that early morning

she was more silent than the grass that is still jeweled with dew
there is still that sense of strangeness
like a bird from the forest that is still feeling its new cage she had three to five days her feet studying the floors and stairs her hands groping the blankets and pillows in the bed and
room
the books in the library included there are conversations going on to the different parts of the house and garden until she has become a part to all of them
and then
she sits on the grass and lays her body in bed after spending more time reading the titles of the books she has the best time dining until she holds control and laughs the hardest disturbing the peace of the neighbors

it is the familiarity and perhaps too much of it like an alcoholic drink that makes her lose what is important
she gets drunk and unmanageable

on the fifth day and it was a Sunday she left us without a word at around 3 a.m. when all the members of the house were all tired and asleep she left a note: she does not deserve to stay in this ordered universe she is a random incident of a dice, she is a woman unnumbered a bird not fit for a cage a dog without a leash a speck of dust owned by no wind we do not mention her name during that lonely breakfast

RIC S. BASTASA
A Slice Of Life

There is this twig
Long dead
And there is this Dew clinging
On its side Even for a very Short time

There is this death
Long time dead
And there is this
Life
Clinging only for a Very short moment

There is
You and there is also
I, in a short while There is really no
Us
Even to utter.

RIC S. BASTASA

poetry is just a slice of reality a tip of the iceberg
true
they are marks
points of origin
helipads of departure boundaries
hmmmm
you felt something so strong and then you mark it so that you may remember it again like some images a subconscious talking too maybe some monuments
you simply bury them there even in water
yes i love the images so that when you come back you still remember what was it
the simple stuffs
that u wont forget remembering the details so that when you are lost
yes
they must have something to say to describe you
really?
such as Alice had a mole on the right shoulder she wore a red blouse brown shoes
her hair had split ends when we last saw her who was this Alice?
could be you
hahaha
before you were drowned in the river it is only when we are gone i have a birthmark on my right arm that they begin to ask who was that?
what was she?
do you understand what i mean?
yes
all my poems are dog ears i am reading my life
i know
things that i cannot forget and i leave some words to guide me what really happened

they always resurface
yes.
yes.
yes
yes, i know.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Small Butterfly To The Size And Shape Of Your Lips

there is this faint red butterfly fluttering slowly hovering hopping from one petal to another
in my garden

it is so beautiful and so soft to the sight so fragile and so tender lighter than a feather as gentle as a baby's breath while sleeping

it lands on my hand and then on my lips i stand still close my eyes
and wish that this moment shall last forever.

i am thinking of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Small Poem

a bonsai poem of love
designed not to grow taller and wider inside
my miniature heart

and too small and pruned like a midget

that the sun laughed
one hot day

RIC S. BASTASA
A Societal Contrast Of Two People

if you were just a janitor and you eat at their fiesta they will say silently with disgust you eat so much

if you were the mayor on the table with other important guests of the political structure and you eat much they would be happy and say with pleasure in their hearts

' he has a good appetite' and they will thank their hired cook for the nice recipes.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Socratic Thought

there is a way to write to make you understand
like pointing a way and walking through it with us together

but the way to that is dangerous since many have become posts and markers only and those who follow it do not really make it to their known destinations lost, and sweating, and wary where to go next you sit under a tree and begin to talk about themselves instead using such trivial words like the way birds simply fly and roost and then fly again without having to worry about maps i like to state it directly: there is no way for understanding the reasons why we are here and where we are really going: and as pointed by the sage ahead of me, we must understand that we cannot understand, that what we know after all, is what we do not really know.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sole Window

i have a sole window
it looks out into space from a world of doors and walls where the only existing entity is the frozen
tear.

i have a window and it looks out into space where there are no more meteors and planets
where there are no more suns and moons where there is only the newness of what darkness feels

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sonata For Maria

Maria, where are you going after tonight Maria?
Will you forget the last night we had together?
Will you deny me forever?

Dressed, and clean, and neat and prim and proper,
Maria, will you forget my name?

I regret Maria belonging to someone else for i truly love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Song For Mely....

when you ask for rice
i do not ask questions
i give you what you need you deserve to eat

many will criticize this liberality of giving that i am just making Mely so lazy

Mely, you must eat beyond right or wrong weak or strong Mely, you must live
i have no more questions.

RIC S. BASTASA
a song for myself...

shall i ask myself again the same question shall i stop? do i have a word for quitting?

shall i lie to myself about this exhaustion this exasperation for another desperation?

how can life refuse living? i have sided with life and will always be on its side despite. so here i am and you are bored and shall soon disregard my pleadings. but don't you worry and do not mind i had always been alone be it dancing under the moon or swimming at night in the nearby lake i am pleased with myself and shall live with myself soon i will forget you and will not remember any thing about you. i have long learned this:

i am a stone. I am a rock. I am another island, another lonely song. Do not mind me.

For i am just myself.
without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Song For You....As Always

do not be afraid
you are not alone
i will be with you
wherever you go

you are precious
to my eyes
i love you.
i love you.

i called your name
you will be mine forever i am your Lover Your savior and servant

do not be afraid
you are never alone
i will always be with you wherever you go

you are always precious to
my eyes
i will always love you
i will always love you.....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Song Of Death

the song of death
fades
like a child on his crib sleeps soundly again as you hear the
whispers of rain and wind
from the open fields to the window

out there far away from the slumber of peace the widows grieve the children weep
with their mothers
as fathers get buried
without
the necessary ceremony.

a thousand stares of blankness fill the night of stars another night of stained silence creeps amidst the rubble of more lamentations

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sonorous Morning

this morning is sonorous as it brings rain to the fields and a man is stranded seeking shelter on an abandoned house which speaks nothing to him but loneliness
that story about separation that death has murdered love that children leave sometime and what is left is nothing and then this morning the rain sings a sad song for a traveler.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sort Of A Poem Upon Arriving At The Mountain Hut

where it is? the native points to the place using his nose. It is just near he said while chewing his betel nut.

we pass three winding rivers and five hills on footpaths with mud and grass as tall as us along the way.

we finally arrive at the foot of a hill below it a nipa hut

there is no one there
i curl up and take my sleep

meanwhile the fog swallows everything just us.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sower Went Out To Sow

It sprang up at once because the soil was not deep, and when the sun rose it was scorched, and it withered for lack of roots.
Some seed fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up and choked it.
But some seed fell on rich soil, and produced fruit, a hundred or sixty or thirtyfold.'

for the Lord speaks in parables
in the same manner that
we
who try to become poets shall too
speak in metaphors

sometimes
to please you
i shall only
speak
those words that you want to hear
and not the truth
thereof

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sparrow In My Mind Is Enough For Me

i do not need two or more sparrows to know what a song of that sparrow is all about more sparrows become a crowd and i cannot figure out the intent of the song the notes blur like a mist that i erase from the side of the glass window i do not need a living sparrow for i do not wish to capture one and choke it inside the cage of my hands i only need the most freeing sparrow inside my mind the one that i can erase if i do not need it anymore without inflicting any pain without holding any feather any longer.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Speculation About An Existence In The Clouds anywhere i go

i write as though i am bound to speak what i have long kept as a garden
inside my heart

i have not yet spoken about the flowers and the stones and the sticks

but soon i will
and what you have heard so far is nothing but the sound of the river in the air there is someone still who lives in the clouds and never want to speak about it

RIC S. BASTASA
A Spinster's Life...

by the river the spinster wades like a black swan all alone not waiting for anyone the bamboo leaves not blown by any ill wind begin to fall
one by one until all that can be seen
are needles of morning light cutting through the early cold by the banks to the marshes

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sprout For A New Season

the drought dries the land there is no rain coming yet the grasses wilted and the soil turns to dust the winds are blowing sadly

somehow the miracle comes with running water along the dikes of hope and then the first seed of grass sprouts
its bud looks around gives a smile
to the cloud
and then sings the beginning of a new season

RIC S. BASTASA
A Stalemate

I do not give thanks to the hands that feed me

I work for those Hands anyway
Writing his letters
His own contents
Not to my delight

I love somebody else, her hands are soft Her thoughts so graceful Touching me
Penetrating the deepest recesses of my brain My soul jumps with joy
To the sight of her,

She eats me, I am half-consumed yet I Sing of her Kiss her all day

Yet what does she give me?

This death unto myself,

The hands that feed me caress me to no end Helping me live, I understand this kindness perfectly

How I wish to love the feeding hands How I wish to reeducate myself & learn to live on these hands

I am hardheaded, as always thinking about her all day all night long.
The heart has its own foolish reasons, while the feeding hands

Are patient, and silent, understanding my true longings.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Star From The East

a star from the east
three kings
wise, and giving,
the shepherds
and their sheep
dry grass in the manger

a bright star
shining to the face of a baby

our world pays homage to the humility of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Stare

a stare is like a stair it has steps
and there are feet walking,
and leaving,

you stare at me,
and i see stairs, where you walk and climb and stop at the middle and then take the stairs layer by layer that is what you like to do, to look at me as though i am this room where you build the stairs and you want to go inside my room and lock me up and take all of me with your tongue and hands and mouth. You mouth me. And i receive the life you have.

and then your stare subsides. the stair is gone. the room vanishes. I am free. And you are inside me your stare has become the memory lingering inside me. i become a bird and you are inside my wings.

Your stairs become my feathers. Your stare becomes my eyes.

in love, we make the stairs leading to a house.
and there we feast, and live and sleep.

yes, there are wings and windows.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Starry Night

after the day
of hard work in the office i go home and take my dinner watch the night news and go upstairs
on the deck to be with the stars.

try it.
it is appeasing.

take a sip of tea
with the Little Dipper

RIC S. BASTASA
A State Of Affairs..........................

at the end you arrive and what you need is only a bed to rest

then you change what you need is only sleep, even without a bed, a pillow,

even without a house, even without any place where you can lay your body to rest

it is the dark unconsciousness which you needed badly

where you do not think anymore where everything turns blank or even if you do not know it, clouds of blue, sounds of sea breeze, sights of sail boats on the wide seas, cliffs and silence, but just the same, on the present state, there are no more cares, no nothing now, just the fullness of being empty not even wanting to be full.

RIC S. BASTASA
what makes him humiliated after a compromising situation where he restrains the movement of his body like a machine shut off from an electrical source is this:

he has voluntarily renounced the true nature of his being like a fish unable to use its fins a bud that is tight lipped and cannot bloom
a wind of ice
a sea denied of its journey its waves scraped like an infected skin

how you have such a mouth that cannot open?
words that remain in the books deprived of some meaning?

the loquacious monster on the other side of the table where he is seated is soap bubbling giving you an illusion of a child's game too unbecoming and unlikely of one like you who has always the reputation of free speech there are souls that hold your mind pulling your hair and tying your hands to the arms of the chair for centuries
your respect for all these is not diminished self-denial is another principle that made a Gandhi great now you are trying to question it

because it hurts.
A Statement About Art & Friendship

It is the friendship that she carries well On summer day

In the writing workshop
She wins their hearts

When she is asked to read her poems Or say, show her masterpiece

She merely smiles
Her friendship is her piece her only masterpiece

Her smile is her only word written on Her face

And they all say it is enough A smile can save the world

But I beg to disagree
A smile cannot save me

Last night i wrote a poem written With my blood as ink on my face

The angst on my crumpled paper And they ask me to read my poem

This afternoon when everyone Is tired and irritated

My turn, I think, I decide to give them my smile Like her friendship, my compromise

I get their approval and I think It is her friendship that kills

Literature that suppressed art It started with Mona Lisa, now it Will always be, perhaps, the scream Must die, popularity does not like it.

I know I have to cry alone In my room and make my own kind of literature.

Someday the world may find it and love it Sorrow is suppressed and happiness is fabricated

Friendship has always been politics And art is hidden in compromises

Only to come out later and too late The people will say, “we all love this one! ”

RIC S. BASTASA
A Statement, A Stand...

given the purpose
right motives and passion to help the other person who is suffering and
lost,

i know, i shall no longer be alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Still Thoughtless Life Of The Eyeglasses

a pair of eyeglasses with brown frame lays itself bare on a white cloth
actually a wiper of mist or tears perhaps or dirt like oil or stains a black casing stares at it like a niche as though someone that appears later
shall be buried on the red mantel.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Stone Garden

in the middle of this garden there are two rocks one is smaller

around them are pebbles and some scattered sands what you plant here is the seed of silence

tomorrow when you come back you shall know what are its fruits its leaves are not green and its roots are for your liking

RIC S. BASTASA
A Stone In The Middle Of The Road

a stone in the middle of the road will always be a stone in the middle of the road
despite the fact that you are reading a comic book whatever content you have in there a stone will always be a stone in the middle of the road today, tomorrow
and thereafter.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Stone To Hit Your Forehead

having preferred
emphasis from compassion

i shall be the stone that hits your forehead and shall make you bleed

after all,
it was the sling of David and not the size of Goliath

not his height

that gave history
its glory

RIC S. BASTASA
A Storm For A Dream

a storm for a dream
the morning light arrives appeasing

the senses run wild like horses i keep an eye opening to a window of an awakening things come

i do not hold any

rivers flow and surge
i watch without any feelings anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Storm, A Brainstorm

look at the window
something lingers on there this sadness
so clear to me now

the snowy land, the roofs of houses covered by this certain coldness this sadness
in my mind

look at the window
a snowstorm is coming and i wil be here in the hiding on some confusion
i will stay
and look out the window still and impulse comes
a solution

this darkness
this death of beliefs
this death of beliefs in the humanity of other people

this
this death, this idea of death it is not a lovely day for me

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story About A Daughter Who Married Distance

When a daughter marries a distant place his father will be sad knowing that distance can always stab him anytime

as years go by the bleeding
continues

the daughter can forget all these with a child to bear and years can add some padded memories that make the distance more bitter

the father goes to the kitchen for comfort as he slices with his sharp knife some onions tears fall down and in those years that he is alone the floors where he stands are rusting with all the crystals of salt

the news is heard that the father one day goes out of the house and runs naked in his farm of cabbages there, he uproots what he plants there, he curses the rice paddies and pours his misgiving to the scarecrows

one day the daughter comes back bringing her three daughters home what surprises her are the changes which she cannot believe: the stair has only one tooth left the floors of the living room melt the roof is nested with black crows the bed has a boa for a sleeper and in the kitchen there she finds her father who is still slicing all the rotten tomatoes constantly for all the years

defaughter embraces his father and shows her three daughters but then the father has turned into a sculpture of stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story About A Wedding And My Friend And Poverty And Joblessness

i met an old classmate
today
at the wedding of a newly appointed high school teacher my ex-classmate is jobless and his wife looks like an old sickly monkey with less hair on her head (forgive me but that is the only possible adjective that i can give)

he is fat and feels like a louse

(i am sorry
i am intruding into his own feelings)

he does not like me his eyes are shouting at me possibly because we look the same possibly because we too feel the same

possibly because our wives look like twins possibly because the weather is bad and people do not mind us because everyone is hungry and there is nothing much to eat

RIC S. BASTASA
there are two kinds of people in this world. You know it. The swindler and the swindled. The one who felt swindled and the one who never admits that he are brothers.

a man of high rank, feeling guilty about his rise to the skies, the lonely eagle that eats monkeys for lunch and dinner and shares it to no one.

descends to the plains walk on the grass and degrades its being to be with the simplest creature, the worm and the snail, thinking that these two deserve to be raised from their lowly, damp, slow

and dark state,

only to be infected by the virus of the worm
the bacteria of the snail

and these lowly creatures claim the triumph over the eagle who in its fancy to be belittled
finds his ultimate death...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story Of Hard Work And Death

monkeys live on trees in a dense forest and one day sees a farmer and his family bring bolos and plows and everyday these guests cleaned the land and planted corn and potatoes and some fruit trees.

the monkeys watch with gladness in their own playful and lazy ways.

the farmers sweat it out during those hot days they gather water and fertilize the plants until harvest time comes the monkeys came first to take the corn and then the potatoes and then the ripe fruits of the papayas and the bananas saying foremost:

this is our land and so we own these fruits... the farmers brought forth their guns and shot them all and that was the beginning of the monkeys claim for injustice they were deprived of their lands and mercilessly murdered....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story Of A Delicate Man

he is the delicate man he brings an umbrella even when there is no rain coming he is the kind that makes sure everything is in order his shirt well folded his shoes well polished his notes in folders his table dust free
his anti-allergies ready until he lost everything pleasurable in his life until he ages and now he goes back to the places he misses gathering all the flowers along the pathways plucking each one of them but his nose cannot smell anymore his hands are shaky his feet arthritic

too late
too late

the niche is waiting the epitaph is hungry for
the words
of his regrets.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story Of A Marriage Counselor

..he is a simple man married to an ordinary woman the man teaches science the woman serves as legal clerk

25 years married without a child so they adopted the baby place beside their door they did not know where the baby came from they say she is a gift from God the girl for what genes she has turned into a woman with hysteria like Ida Bauer got pregnant but cannot pinpoint who from among her three lovers is the father of her child the simple couple now gets a grandchild so glad the new baby has not father to speak of

they go back to the cycle the beginning about the pleasure that the baby once left beside the fence gave them

unspeakable bliss

of course, this shall not be a sad story

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story Of Bad Karma

the curtain in the room is transparent silky, embroidered with tiny light red flowers light is filtered and air is lazy laughter is restrained at first until the drinks come glasses click and talks are varied times come anew

memories of faces come out from the graves of our forgetfulness

the room soon is filled with smoke men smoke and women sip wine on their warm sides the lives of other people start to be opened the talkers are surgeons scrutinizing the intestines and bladders there is a small man whose hands are like cold forks he is looking at the fat man puffing smoke and bragging about his gains fortunes backed by crimes and money laundered and shared in secrets by conspiracies no one notices a bee landing on the navel of the fat man whose belly comes out from his tight shirt instantly the bee left a sting and the man died.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story Of My Life

My house is there by the side of the hill

Without color without name

Father andmother brought me into that House by the side of the hill

Without color without name

Each day there is a celebration of

Nothingness

Without reason without cause

Without color without name

I am the anonymous of the that nothingnes

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story Of Survival

his mother wore white he was young and compliant she took him to the river tied his hands with a blanket as he woke up from sleep and then she threw him there what his mother did not know was that he already knew how to swim

and the depth and rage of the river are no threat to him his mother did not smile she meant death

it was over he knew how to get out from the tie of the white blanket he escaped and swam to the other side of the river climbed the mountain and then to the eyes of his mother he was gone

he started life all over again with another name.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story To Tell To Your Lost Civilization…

at first there was peace trees bear fruits that turn ripe and children climb the trees to gather the apples and savor what sweetness is there that nature has to offer

the land is vast the sea is immeasurable the skies infinite the rivers keep on running
forever
the ocean's depths and abundance
untiring

people misunderstand what ownership is stewardship is an alien concept there is always the want to have greed is cancerous

a country expands dictators abound conquerors become heroes of their lands
bringing slaves and the fortune of
others

nature is made to bow down to caprices
whims are the rules to destroy is to own
to abuse is to use

wars are made like the way the bombs are stored like the way the swords and spears were once sharpened
to kill

there is always nothing enough for the imperialist nothing satisfies the conquerors disguised as the discoverers of the new world

and so there will always be war rebellion will always mushroom everywhere nothing rests

and it will always be the 'dead who can see the end of all these wars' at the end who wins? ah nobody everyone perishes

and nature shall grow its roots again to retake its long gone leaves and flowers its green mountains its pure rivers its clean and blue oceans its clouds untainted by the smoke of gunpowder the mushrooms of that nuclear warfare....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Story To Tell....

the images of light like needles from the sun this morning actually, there are no threads and nothing to sew

actually, there are no significances except some few

every word must have a story for you and you may ask me

but always i agree to disagree with you words have their own lives their own existence i am only a vehicle

i am only a body to this ghost for we are nothing but wings of some black birds that hover on our backs when they are through they all leave us and they take all the wings they have given us in our imagination we fall asleep and when when we wake up we check if we are still us mirrored in the pond of still waters our hands touch our faces sliding through our smooth bodies then we say, goodbye black bird and thank you for making us live all over again.

RIC S. BASTASA
he feels guilty why he is not guilty at that time when the guy was shot mercilessly beside his wife that early morning, most of those who knew him say that he was one of those bad guys.

these dangerous times, people seemingly thirst for vengeance against the bad guys.

who knows who the bad guys are? did we not just take the word from those who label those bad guys as bad?

have we fathomed the depth of the well to know whether there is water there, whether the water is safe?

are these the unthinking times? blood squirted from the brain of the animal, blood flowed from his head, and as he tried to ask for help, looking for a safe corner, all the doors are closed, the wife screams, blood followed his body like a river, he drags his body on the long empty hall.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Straight Line

you know
you no longer wonder whether a straight line is what happens next you stutter
you become a broken jagged line for a while but only for a while
a second
not even a minute and then there is a prolonged noise

it is not hazy
it is lighter than white whiter than white people accept this and they nod and you go.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Strange Dog

this dog has no eyes, and so it feels most of the time through its tongue it believes it comes from the genealogy of the fish and so its swims

against the current of the river inventing its own gills it closes and opens letting all the water of the river pass through i am not surprised, in fact, i can relate to this dog without eyes and inventing gills for it to breathe under water that is what i do, most often than you know.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Straw On A Glass Of Water

from your point of view
that straw
is disconnected

nothing seems to be sipped

RIC S. BASTASA
A Stream

there is a certain stream that all of us would like to swim
where we are like children following no other person's command it is not a stream of water that makes us wet and shiver and make us think about some kind of thirsts and satiation it is something that we must not cross lest we find ourselves in another world and leave everyone everything as they are and we do not want it

we are scared we hesitate to throw our feet in there but then there is no choice the nights, the lonely nights take us all there this is the stream of consciousness that we all have we think and love and speak in silence in the light of our hearts we travel inward, we hope we truly become ourselves invented, reinvented over and over again to see our real faces

we simply float in there we flow and we can never stop gladly beyond as he calls it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Suggestion For Humans From A Sleepy Cat

please master
try another subject for your poetry i am not a lovely red rose that blooms in spring

i am just
a sleepy cat
hiding on my fur
and sharp claws dreaming for that little pink rat hidden inside
the ceiling

RIC S. BASTASA
A Summary Of Our Foolishness At 5: 35 A.M.

so she is now cruising her time is 3 a.m., mine is 5: 35 a misfit wanting to die lost in some consequences in the city by the sea

beside her is him
i know him
this lover pondering on her regrets then Kim says
Death Has Called His Name but cries' It's Impossible! '

i look up and say
If we are honest enough with a bit of encouragement i could have walked with you tonight on this longing that never stops this gamble
on epic love

Love is It, if only we Listen,

you ask what time is it?
in my country, after i have written this summary of our foolishness (be patient, i am foolish still) the time now is 6: 40 in the morning, it is not raining, some yellow flowers bloom beside my window a bee is busy hopping from petal to petal gathering its favorite nectar

as i write,
now it is 9: 44 am.
I quit

RIC S. BASTASA
A Summer Midlife Crisis

i am
actually afraid
about what i think
i can do

what this self has so carefully
denied

years and years
of gentle restraint hands kept inside the pocket

soon
in the middle of this holding on i shall unzip what i have long hidden in sleep

i am afraid
i must tell you that i can
very well
do
it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sunday

4: 30 you rise
and kneel down
you chant the rosary
and mumble
your prayers

i hear vespers
oh, whispers of your secret
wishes

i cover my ears
with this
thick blanket

then you leave for church
and you find it unnecessary
whether i must go with you

5: 57
silence reigns
i cannot bear it
i turn on the radio
the news start
bombarding

about the flood the storm
the waves that roar of evacuation
and some deaths

i turn off the radio
i turn it on gain
i try the hip hop
on another station
i dance i sweat
things out from my system i filter
what must come
in

i open the windows and door to let light
come
in

i am ready now
to face the day on a washed face
and brushed teeth without breakfast
and coffee

let them see me
clean and happy
i am on a hunger strike i am on a strike for life

i take my walk
without you
i pretend that this world is one lonely man and he does not wish to talk

like the trees
like the pavement
like the leaves
that now with the strong wind
keep on falling
blown away

yet uncomplaining
this is sunday
this is still a very lonely day

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sunny Afternoon

by my window
i look upon the dusty road one sunny afternoon

a horse driven carriage stops

the horse is black and the driver wears a black hood

it is getting dark
and all the children stop playing their mothers are calling them all home....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sunny View

sunshine lands on
a
big anahaw leaf

when a man is lonely
sipping coffee

when his attention
focuses on it even for a second

it could mean a huge slice of happiness for his lifetime

how light makes love to a green leaf

how eating makes one survives

how youth was wasted
how useless is sorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
A Sunset

there was one sunset that i can never forget..

it was when we parted and there was no other sunset with the color of sadness as that...

no other.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Superstition About A Black Butterfly

if it is a brown butterfly that flutters inside
the house
we have reasons to be glad for it means money

if it is a black butterfly we better prepare for it means death sorrow, lament

last night the moon was full and it was floating on the clouds
the sky was so dark the distant star in contrast flickers like a firefly full of life i have seen Venus, the neighboring planet i keep the joy of light there came a black butterfly inside the room passing through the window while you were sleeping the light of the moon was all over you i have seen death it is inside me this love fading like a faint light like that most distant star losing the essence of its light

RIC S. BASTASA
A Surprise For Myself....

on his diary he writes:

dear diary
i have sacrificed a lot years are like
layers of steel on my back time is running fast abnormally
on engineered days canals are overflowing
with water
the cities are flooded
i am drowning
and yet how helpless can i be how dumb
not to call for professional help or even to talk to a close friend
about it
only to find that actually i do not have any of these
closer encounters
or needed
intimacies

tomorrow my dear diary
i will write more courageously
i pray for more strength more wisdom

tomorrow dear diary
i will surprise myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Surreal One....

the blue butterfly arrow heads north towards the white castles of a dream below it are the fishers on the gleaming morning where the ambrosia shell labyrinth waits.

another reality is making us alive from this beauty sprouting from irrational trees from leaves of silk from nerves as roots.....

RIC S. BASTASA
inside a frame a boy puts some words he does not know how to choose wisely he plays his game and goes on without really knowing what happens next
the words begin to move and argue with each other some have become elves and pumpkins and they crowd inside the frame unmanageable now the words cross the borders of the frame and begin to grow transparent wings flying away like a swarm of bees to the sky and the little boy is left with nothing but the emptiness of the slate when he grows to become a man somewhere in the middle of his dying age he understands what that childhood game is all about it is about a momentary crowd, the gathering and the bothering and then the wings and winds and wondering until what is left is the emptiness which he knows well as the synonym of what others have died of... nothingness....all the bees go there.
RIC S. BASTASA
A Sweet View From My Window…

the rain starts to fall the red hen runs towards the mango tree

the leaves are thick and the trunk is old and tall ten little chicks

red and yellow follow

the tracks of the red hen and then seek shelter under her feathers

RIC S. BASTASA
A Symbiosis, A Parasitism

lichen to tree
moss to rock

river on the bed
stars to the sky

caterpillar
on the leaf

pinworm
on the intestine

choose
what relationship
above
do have we?

we call ourselves
sweet
we mask ourselves with the face
of love

time shall tell
the truth

RIC S. BASTASA
A Talk To Oneself

last night he said he could not sleep so at dawn he drove his car but he did not know where to go at that hour as usual in this lonely town and the other lonelier towns there were no people on the road and he wanted speed and if possible even the speed of light i want to die he said to himself and i am lonely and abandoned he continue telling himself these thoughts are destructive but he keep saying he wants to die and he closes his eyes and his car bumps the huge tree on the side of the road and his car falls on the ravine and smashes the rocks below beside the sea he did not die and survived and he told me he wanted to die but it is still not his time and i told myself what a wasted man is this creature and how God must have wasted his Love on such a man as self centered as himself for such precious hours could have been devoted to something more greater than our limited minds and should have been given to another man more deserving than him obviously, his selfishness i told myself could not be measured and such is the most wicked moment that i spent with such a man that i could not really understand

i could tell, i was once there.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tantrum....

writing is divine
seeing is mundane

one is purified the other is soiled

waters from the sky wash the stains

sighs of the heart
move the stairs

ask the magnetite
what attraction does

everything clings like nails on the head

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tear

a tear maps out its way along to make an opening a vent
to give way to a sigh
a release for something that wants to choke you

there is this hiss
a fume
an open sky

RIC S. BASTASA
A Telephone Call

it is surprising. A soul uses a telephone for a call.
Are not telephones supposed to be dead? They're alive only for the those maids who do not have cellphones, they are for them. But it is a surprise, it is my call.

Long distance from Vegas.
Midnoon. A sure way of catching me, because she knows i am home and not doing any work at this hour.

she is crying. She says she is depressed. All those that she loves either die, or they simply leave her. She wants to come home and she's broke.

can't you help me about this loss? this mess. This hell.
Help me. She cries. She insists.

I have some pills, she says.
I love you.

What can i say? This woman who once betrayed my brother. This woman who stole my hope.

I put down the phone.
She must face the wall that she built.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Temple Is Not A Temple Of Selfishness

this is my body this is my temple this is where my spirit lives in flesh and bones

this is my face
this is my skin
these are my feelings these are my hopes and aspirations now touch me now let your fingers run over my skin let me feel you too like i am no longer an island a body of water a river a sea where boats always sail away from me where birds just pass and fly by destined for another place to another shore to another bush this is my body this is desire this is hunger and thirst and longing feed me with your body satisfy my thirst

fill my longings with your longings too let your river chain my body let your sea fill my land let your skies be above to wrap me to shelter me to fill me also with more stars and moons and suns let me not be all alone like a space without anything without a flicker let me become a universe glowing and hushing and lushing with life this is my body this is your body too let us breathe let us touch let us push through

RIC S. BASTASA
A Temptation Of Arrogance

i am tempted to feel like a shoestring shutting a foot inside the shoe

i am ten feet above you ashed ass

hole in the black
universe

you will be in my own outlook of stars

i am tempted to be your god

and you are a foot stool

but i am humbled because
of the unsinkable titanic easily torn by the side-tip of an iceberg

that night when God was sleeping

when
with what was said

woke him up into anger

so divine that it wiped out a thousand lives in that cold and dark night in the ocean
of Atlantic.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Theme On Unrequited Love Via The Moon And Sun

the sun in its might finds meaning
to the moon and stars
at night

love sought
love not found

and always in its heavens love is unrequited

for the meaning of his might and sunshine is always that pain
and longing

the moon and stars
are waiting
and the sun
always cannot reach
them

fate and nature has it on its design
there is no meeting
there is no fulfillment but come to think about all these what if one day when the sun and moon come and make love

will this earth not burn with their passions?
will we all still be here on that fatal day?

will not all the stars explode with envy?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Theory About The Absence Of The Divine...

in the end
in trying to figure out the sense of meaning pouring out
taking in
decanting, filtering,
testing, considering each detail with significance
one still cannot accept that all these data
never make sense
at all

one hopes
nothing comes at random the chances boils down to a specific purpose such a hardheadedness against the wall breaking one's head like an eggshell
nuts!

the premise should have been in the beginning life has no meaning man creates his own image shapes his own future and out of respect of man's will God is no longer
there

like Papa watching his son soldier leaving him all alone now to fight his own war

RIC S. BASTASA
A Theory For A Friend Who Shies Away From Temptation

he is too old for a scandal now you must understand why he did not pick you
why your teases remained on deaf ears why your invitations remained unanswered

you are too young to be believed at too fickle
and your lips cannot keep a secret or perhaps, he loves her so much that he changed his mind and promised never to hurt her again

RIC S. BASTASA
A Theory Of Time And Space

Time &
Space is a Big Loaf of Bread There Peacefully put on top of your dining table

The knife's sharp edge cuts through it and Puts you There

There is an illusion
for the Moment
You see a river flowing towards the sea
You hear the voice of surging The rage against the rocks the sliding upon the banks

Inside that Big Loaf of Bread are all the ingredients, The past, the present and the Future and You may taste it at once

What you have is a moment of illusion that you cannot be here and there at the same time.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thin Curtain Of Gray Silk

between this and that there is a thin curtain of gray silk that serves as a divider between this despair and that bliss

it is not your hand that sets it aside not your your mouth that finally speaks the word

it is someone else
the mighty one that one that puts it this way and that way
between

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thin Slice Of Silence....

crisp, clean,
fresh,

a thin slice
of silence

in exchange
for you

i'll take it
i'm shut., , , .

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thing

a things smooth and as fragile as china

when you left
untouched it cracks

shatters on the floor
unpicked.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thing Just A Thing

things only seem to be what they are when they try so hard to convince they ask the help of light to cast some shadows and if they can only speak they will say:

'you see, i am true
i am real, i am casting a shadow' in my doubt, i touch a thing in you there is nothing there but only a thing and i tell you

'you are only a thing with a shadow i haven't touched a heart' and then i hear the silence and then there was calm and quiet

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thirst Of The Past Lives

... AND then there is a thirst that long upon some buried jars in the waters of our past lives we want to clearly remember what we were once was i that? were you that?

why do i feel something for you which is by the scales of reason without weight?

i see clouds, and then the tips of the mountains appear, and then i fall into that land which gives me nothing but another form of forgetting and then i look back at you, and there is this sense of disbelief and reason with its head shakes endlessly no, not that, it is something else why you are being brought here but your heart tells otherwise it is boat with fire and it is sinking carrying with it all the screams of your being here and then back to a silky ocean, back to the lines of the shore without crease, or anything that one remembers, and so delighted to forget like a wave upon wave in order to keep the island compact the air blows, like the soul that you keep.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thought About A Communion

the fruits of the earth are for all and those who do not work for them deserve no less than those who only stand and wait, those who dance to the music, those who tap their fingers on the table for the beat of poetry, those who savor the beauty of the earth and stop for a while to contemplate about such an amazing beauty, those that only describe what grace is there, for they are not those who caused the growth of trees, the coming out of the buds, the blooming of the flowers, the making of the pulp and juice of the ultimate fruits, it is the wind that makes the seeds fall, the rain and the soil that make them grow

No man, however hard he works for it, whatever he does, can make a seed, or a leaf, or make the sun spread its rays,

No man can make the soil stay and disappear, No man can stop the journey of the earth and say that now he owns it and that some Would have to beg or ask for its bounty.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thought....

There is a lady by the lake She plays the Piano
At night sadly
The moon listens and remembers Just like any abandoned lover A song
Learned by the Heart and Until Now is never forgotten
The notes from the Piano Swim in the Lake like some fishes Wishing to be stars....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thousand Words

What is the use of the thousand words?
When what she needs is nothing but the touch of the moment the thousand words are the noise of the gongs the banging of stones the unfinished struggles of the sands

the complaints of the thunder the blinking of lightning in the uselessness

of wasted gestures

marks of the water in the realm of nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thread Of Silence

I have long wished to follow the thread of silence
like a worm in your brain wanting to discover the secrets of your wonder

i stop.

the gate of respect is closed and hinders me from further intruding
into your castle.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Thrill Of Hope

you love and fail
and you want to die
the heart that loves and fails shirks and shrinks like a drying grape to the desert sun raisin, look at you, you have become a raisin wrinkled fruit,

shrinked to the size minimal to the existence desired, you dry some more, taking away all the life possible in your skin and bone the desert sun is cruellest

in you
so unforgiving so determined to shrink you more than a raisin this cruelty can turn you into a stone the night has come this thrill of hope comes like a comforting friend to tell you raisin,

keep the sweetness still for tomorrow's bitterest spill the cruelest sun
the deadliest ever on this desert sun the hottest sands and you will not surrender the hope is still there the dream is this oasis somewhere the bedouin and his coming camel who knows? and when?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tightly Closed Door

The door that i have now is tightly closed

you step outside and face
the storm

i shall remain and think about nothing....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Time For Roosting...

IT IS sad to see chickens
when the hour of fading light comes when they all start
to look up
and find their respective roosting
places
upon their chosen
branch of the
tree,

it is like
going home
after the day
of pecking grains, and when full you find solace upon a chosen home
as the night
starts to cover
everything.

it is like
death to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Time For Silence

today
is my time for silence
a time
for being closed
as a door

no ill wind
comes no word
arrives

bringing some news of doom
some pieces
of information

that destroy rather than construct

that subtract rather than add
something
beautiful and worthy of my quest for life

today is my time
for silence
to be left alone
so i may gain

strength
peace

so i may know myself more
and learn to live
with the
unknown

RIC S. BASTASA
A Time For Us To Be Lazy On A Silent Sunday

time to be alone on a bench under the trees time to see how leaves fall silently on the grass as the world watches us in mutual idleness

this is what lazy Sunday is all about doing nothing

reconstructing the pieces of the past week.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Time To Pause In Silence

a time to pause for a little silence for all the souls of those departed........

we remember them and the love they left us.

may they rest in peace. Amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Time To Write About Time

how do you write time? as simple as asking what time is it?
and then you look at your watch and say without much thinking about how time passed swiftly and how it affected you leaving you another lock of white hair and sense of nostalgia of i am left out here and i have done nothing about the passing of time it is 8:17 in the morning, you hear some roosters still cocking out their maleness to the hens laying their eggs in the warmth of their quest for more of them

scrambled eggs and scratches on the grass for food now finally i have found time to write about time for eyes to look into my own eyes for hands to work on my own hands time swiftly passes by and i have noticed more wrinkles on my hands, more lines on my forehead, eyebags, weakened knees, blisters on my feet, sagging cheeks, falling flesh on my arms,

my heart beats faster on the worry of i have not done well enough and time passed by leaving me away with this feeling of

there they are on happy faces with children and grandchildren and birthdays and deaths and graduations and anniversaries where are we my dear? we are in this house where there are only two of us left we are watching tv and this advertisement on milk for old age and new born babies

how can we relate to the time that i am writing? i sit beside you, i hug you again (for the nth time of this almost 30 years of being together)

i turn off the tv, and let the silence be with us again i hold your hand, and tell you the usual sweetest words your name, i always say your name and my name, you always call me by my name i hold your hand, your head on my shoulder, we sit together facing the sunset on the sea on the horizon where birds are flying towards their own nests

it is 5:15 p.m., time is not freezing. it need not stop just like the way we really want it

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tiny Bird In Fear

a tiny bird comes inside my room
delicate as a feather

when i arrive
this morning
it suddenly flies away

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tiny Poem For Samsam

such a small time
too many woes......

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tiny Sad Song

when you were once a girl as tiny as a memory you wish to be like a geisha serving men in a nice conversation that was how you see things on the limitations of what they have seen for you that you too have seen for yourself Japan is your only country to be free from your own impoverished country the leaves of the mahogany tree all fall out from its branches

one day
showing the beauty of its bare twigs that was long ago

and then you turn into a woman and you do not want to talk about it anymore the mountains know how ugly is the nudity of the trees how bare a mind becomes when deprived of its own thoughts

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tired And Hungry Poem....

a tired hungry poem crawls to bed and pulls a blanket
wraps itself and then snores

dreams begin to grow on fields of sorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
A Toast

let us have a toast of the finest
wine

let us cheer ourselves
about
the latest news

the latest development of our mind
now hardened
to death
of expectations

how we learned
to live without anything at all our bare selves

undressed some more now stripped of every treasure

we begin to love
nature
we begin to believe
about the power of starting from scratch

to know that to touch
we simply have to rub our hands

to know that to
see well enough
we need to close our eyes and see the intricacies of darkness

to know that speak so well
we need so much
silence

to know that to hear
we must figure
what was not spoken

that to be us
we must forget ourselves that in irony
lies the strength of our simplicity

RIC S. BASTASA
A Toast To Humus

i am failing
down
down
i am submitting
to destiny
to fate
i am
my own
defeat
i am falling debris of your sky
i rejoin
my ancestors of stone and sand

a toast to humus
feast to dusts

back to the silence of my roots

RIC S. BASTASA
A Topic On Pain

now i have learned to refuse seeing you again i think i should be wise enough there is always the new pain in old wounds we often agree to talk about it i give you time enough

to forget
but you have always insisted in lingering there is no use over broken collections i buried mine

scars are not good to look at there is no premium for pain the next time you call my line shall be busy.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Touch Of A Hand A Kiss

a simple touch of the hand a kiss on the cheek then into the lips tongues sliding on top of the other a skin rubbing another skin
body to body

without love
all these do not mean a thing

love beyond eroticism love beyond ourselves love on top of love love rubbing against love love licking and love penetrating and love penetrated love well rested
in perfection

we do not have it yet what we have are mere stains off-white and pungent

RIC S. BASTASA
A Touch Of Class

since his house is flooded
she decides to stay in the hotel at 5,000 dollars
a month

and she likes it
for another month

since she is not the one paying
anyway

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tour

it is here where on the first day everyone is excited to know each other's names endless hellos

each wanting what we do where we come from fourteen days of roaming around from one city to another one changing landscape to another imposing landscape

each night a different hotel a different meal

on the last day
the bonding fades as one prepares for the good bye

the tall man who happens to be a dentist delivers its impeccable speech in English saying that soon we part and then we go back to our own realities at the airport in that connecting flight we saw both of you waiting for your connecting flight back to Australia

we passed by
and here we are strangers again to each other as we board our own plane back to home 16 flights hours away....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tragic Story...

he got money to burn
even all the money just to have you

at that stage
he is blinded by you as a shining star

do not abuse him

it is only at a certain stage that he is blinded...soon

the blindness is gone and he has no money anymore and waking up from this nightmare

as there is no more money to burn
he will burn you
he will burn himself after

RIC S. BASTASA
A Trail In The Forest....

we went inside the mouth of the forest as first hand experience we followed the trail of its intestines we were so exhausted we rested for a while sitting upon a big root of an old tall tree trickles of light landed on our faces we hear the sounds of birds and rivers and we were about to take a journey to sleep of this trip leaves began to fall and winds got stronger we see no landscape here except perhaps those rows and rows of wild ferns and flowering ground orchids with violet petals standing we could not stop walking lest darkness comes and we would be away from home stranded in anxiety and fear we proceeded to take the final steps until we found the exit: could be the sphincter of this specter, an end which we shall savor and relish with gladness we made it and with our bottles of water we said 'Cheers!'

RIC S. BASTASA
A Transfer Of Assurances

In the meeting of the frail monastery
Of light
And the wet trickles of the rain
By the wall
Between them
Speaks the throat of the wind Murmuring
The loneliness of their hearts

It is the breaking of day And the little bird Sings the Darkness of the fences Disintegrating into shattered Shadows

The exhilaration of the sun Comes like a passage Of his chants of
Love
Sleep decays
Between the trees
And the hammock
Of green grass

The assurance of what is azure Dissolves the regrets
Of her insecure sighs Emotion moves
In little glances
And close the cracks
Of his doubts Vulnerable
Her fervor climbs like
A vine
Climbing toward The gentle rays of the sun
And like
An old myth
She rests and sleeps again In the broadness
Of daylight

RIC S. BASTASA
A Transformation

sticking to his own reality for NOW the caterpillar munches and munches
every leaf

it is not aware about SOON

RIC S. BASTASA
A Transformation Of A Pornographic Perspective....

i am watching
nudes,

i feel the heat
that is normal
perhaps

too many times
i am watching nudes

sort of an addiction on this fertile
imagination

and then
i learn to feel

the hardness and brittleness of skulls and bones

soon i hear the dragging sounds of iron chains

i am watching nudes
now in a different perspective once young, and beautiful

soon
rotten, and ugly
and exactly pure and
true.

RIC S. BASTASA
think of me as the man who went outside
the house
bathing in the rain

it is not because i am feeling uncomfortable with the heat of my own clothes

out there
as the rain falls
you cannot see the flood
of my tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Trauma....

between galas
and olingan is an old bridge
built by the koreans

stories were told
and retold that on those nights
a funeral march passes the mourners wearing black and silent

i was then six years old and with friends that sunday afternoon
we took a raft and explored
the river
beneath the old bridge built by the koreans

shocked to see a woman dead, thrown by unknown culprits tied with a wire on her neck cold and nameless.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Treatise On Light And Darkness

the truth is always there that woman nude lying in bed waiting for no one
self-sufficient as she is like the eternal fire of
the sun
the gentle softness of light that finally lands on the grass
on early morning

she is eternal mother of all mothers her breast with flowing milk for all the babies
of this universe

in the vast darkness light pierces every space travels without any definite arrivals departures
not always final

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tree Tested For Its Roots

at first the wind blows with cruelty
uprooting all the root of your being but this is only at first you are but a tree tested for how long you can continue
being attached to the earth
the wind makes it sure
that you know
what attachment is the meaning of being rooted

after the uprooting when all your leaves are taken away when you are but all hands with nothing to grip

then the wind begins to show its true nature

it is lovely fresh and pure

RIC S. BASTASA
she says i am always running away she asks the same question about what is really the matter?

is there a problem? she asks herself such a very easy question but which of course has remain unanswered perhaps because she knows the answer but decides not to tell me or perhaps i know that she knows but i prefer to have it posed in the most beautiful face of silence a blank canvass is itself so beautiful that sometimes the painter upon contemplation for days decides not to put any color because it seems to say more than what it is and to say it flatly like the truth that it is why i am running away? i change it to, why i am enjoying this fun of having to run away from nothing actually because to run away is, after all, the nature of man obviously, the very reason why feet are put why these feet have flexible and strong cartilages stoic bones,

thick skin underneath to the envy of the lips friends of rock and sands and very long trails perhaps there are no need for reasons to explain the joys of having to run away from nothing at all, yes, from nothing at all because no one is chasing you because the shadow is always there faithful to every running away against the sun and moon under their guidance putting the maps of the earth uncertain

true, exciting, endless eternal search

for nothing at all

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tribute To God In Refusing Our Prayer... perhaps we have asked the wrong thing, God is so silent,

or perhaps we are asking more than what we really need,
the head is shaking, perhaps we are giving him our own limited and erroneous calculations, but he is not saying that we are wrong, perhaps he respects and love us, and hence the silence and refusal.

pray some more in the silence of our longings deep within God is listening.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tribute To Hope

when hope dies
a cheap funeral is due
the coffin is made of old mahogany
the flowers are improvised colored Japanese paper
cut by ordinary women
of the town
the candles are recycled
the room is dimly lighted
with a coconut oil lamp the mourners
are the very same people that killed it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tribute To John The Second

that he was poisoned
or

was smothered by a pillow
to make it appear like a natural death are stories.... about an old Pope who died or was killed

because he had seen the errors and was then ready to divulge it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tribute To Nothing

sunrise comes everyday hence it has become so ordinary we do not give much attention something expected no longer amazes us

we have focused much on what is lost all energies devoted to finding what is not there anymore hence we are lost ourselves this is not a poem but just a friendly reminder.

you have read so much
and all poems sound the same.
no poem amazes you now in fact, nothing.

and here, nothing becomes a poem it has become something as nothing amazes you you too have become nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
A Troublesome Woman

a woman of trouble knows how to weave words, fabricating them into little monsters, not of lesser significances that litter in that pestering pond that she creates herself, she likes what she is doing and she likes trouble, she makes trouble, she will die without trouble, so sometimes she pulls out her teeth for trouble and cuts her hair for trouble because you see her ugliness and you are caught in a reflex of telling her that she is ugly and there again the trouble begins, you start it by telling her the truth and she will not like it, she seeds the conflict and you pick it up, the conflict becomes yours it is growing and spreading and she will be laughing because a war is born and she says, it is not her war, you started it, it is yours now.

she hides in the light and makes many shadows that soon she will fear herself, she will mumble names, this so and so is trying to kill her, and she must take revenge, to justify her quest for violence, violence begets violence her mottoo and she sees to it, that violence is created even without her she fears herself though and hates the mirrors on the walls she lists her enemies, plans her schemes of destroying them ahead of their plans destroying her, she has a lists of the faults and shortcomings of her friends, (she has no friends in her heart she has no heart in her body her body has no soul)

she writes:

the sun is hot
the moon is a slut
the air is pushy
the wind is bitchy
the sea is salty
the child is naughty
her mother is ucky
her father is sickly the world is leaky
everyone is prickly the system is kinky
the priest is hankypanky the mayor is itchy
and so on and so forth a woman of trouble always falls  short of herself measuring her height against the rest she will be either taller or shorter and this makes her so unsatisfied always comparing herself she feels always defeated, there are always more of them than her so she feels so empty like a hot balloon pulled by the air up (only to burst at the end) she floats she pulls everyone to her to anchor her emptiness she will be devoured soon by the big mouth of her own troubles, the horror of her own big mouth devouring her own body like a movie she will shout herself so loudly using the remains of her own tongue she will hear the screams from inside her but she will not listen still as inch by inch the big mouth swallows her noisy, garrulous, hysterical she will make her last scream she is gone

her own mouth and sharp teeth have tasted her she is gone
and what shall be written about her is this bitterness of cannibalism and the ending lines shall be (as she is finally consumed) let eternal rest be granted to her Oh Lord!

RIC S. BASTASA
A Truce....

two snakes
are panicky trying to find a cure
after a mutual
bite
poisons shared
fate rigged.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Truckload Of Rocks

i close my eyes
hurt by the light
i nod my head
and ask for
more ideas
from God
i beg for more
silence
from the storms
of my troubled
heart
i dream of a calm sea
a raft
a fisherman
a catch
a rope a rudder
a blue sail
a seagul an island
a tower of light
a blade of grass
a ring
a truckload of rocks
a navel a while skin
an arm a butt

i want an imagination
of wingless birds
stranded in an island
a shadow
a dream of liberation
of bodies
trapping souls

RIC S. BASTASA
A True Disciple

a true disciple listens and takes every word of the great teacher patiently he takes note of the errors committed and corrects them the teacher points out the room for improvement and the true disciple enters the door of wisdom he takes carefully each criticism and creates what he thinks is more beautiful to the heart and makes a record of what should have been and ought to be and then the right time comes for blooming the true disciple unfolds his own creation like the petals of the lotus at the middle of the murky pond and then finally exudes his own perfection under the bright sheen of the mighty sun of the new day smiling more deserving now and as bright as ever diamond-like another new spring rising higher than its source the teacher by his side like the wind hushing applauding and bowing before him so pleased is his heart and then in a moment passing him by.

RIC S. BASTASA
A True Fight

the true fight is not to kill the enemy at most we weaken the foes for them to change their minds and submit to what we think is right
and so
remaining alive we gain on our side our friends and allies the true fight is for the understanding that we are one and we shall be all one on this war against ourselves in the pursuit of excellence and perfection

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tryst

I will not perish upon the Thought
That life on this journeying Is not worth living Once I returned from a trip Last summer
Something nocturnal
And the same

The girls may be different
And I may be older Than you think
But oh my
I danced all night Tirelessly
And you will say
That is not natural
And too prickly
But let me tell you
My dear
Do not be sad Times simply goes
And will not wait

Seasons change
Our wrinkles multiply
And that is expected

But lest you forget Whatever happens
Oh my! Life is Still beautiful

please forgive me for saying that the tombstones do not frighten me and I do not fancy

your pretensions about the full moon
&
that tryst of the stars
&
those two shadows
under the trees

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tryst

i kissed
her hair
before
the sun
dried each
lock.

the tips
are drenched
with
tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tryst Of The Past

what i have been telling you
here is actually different from what i am seeing,

i just can't tell what
it is
that makes me
happy for now

when i tell you that trees are growing on rows along a country road where the skies are blue and the sun
is warm
where dusts follow a truck
where birds fly
towards the lake
to feed on fish

perhaps i am hallucinating on what is not there

i am having the arms of someone
that you
have not met even once

in a secret garden

RIC S. BASTASA
A Tryst....

what is said here need not be necessarily true, so beware, you might be misled into thinking that everything is a mess, and that i am feigning happiness.

people lie, that you must put as an accepted principle.
people sometimes do what they do not like to say and say what they are not doing anyway.

well, be cautious, there are traps and hollow spaces, mines of the minds, exploding devices hidden on the wall with ears.

i look forward to meeting truth in person.
tonight, at eight sharp, beside the line of trees, under the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a vine, so green i put on a vase of glass, there is water
and pebbles
the vine grows some more
leaves
alive on the filtered light from the window pane,

there is a red tulip that never dies there but also does not
grow,

that plastic one i bought a year ago,
i do not remember having washed it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Turn-Off

i remember
the two of us
under the thick
palms

we are alone

and you touch me
begging

you want me to show you my naked body

under the palms
beside the
river

i declined.
i left

i shudder about
that fact.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Turtle Thrown Into The River

they come to the house today mother and son the father who is so angry merely stays in their house it is all about his wife filing a petition for annulment of their 20 year-old marriage she tells all the lies about his being happy-go-lucky unmindful of her miseries his drunkeness his womanizing his having no income at all and he cries foul
that all these are not true that he is psychologically incapacitated

the truth is that he does not love her anymore that she too is having an affair with an american who is financing the petition for annulment
who is now sleeping with her in their marital bed i told him as he seeks my advice admit all her lies and swallow all her false allegations let her throw you away as you too would like her to be thrown away to hell let her throw the turtle with her two hands to the river and then let her see how the turtle swims and sings to the comforts of its flow the way they both want their lives to go and be free at last from their mutual disappointments and hatred

RIC S. BASTASA
A Twin

the vastness of love can be a desert
or a wild forest

in the desert the winds of emptiness blows
all day

in the wild forest the heavy rains pour all year round

in said places
time like sand spills people imagine all the ghosts of pains
and so i wonder what love really is in the vast forest

a bee complains that it is homeless a butterfly cries on broken wings in the desert the skull of a horse is watched by still hungry vultures
after all
what happened

so, is pain actually love's twin sister?

RIC S. BASTASA
A Twinkling Star.....

this early morning
between
the crowing of the town cock and the barking of the brown dog in the veranda wagging its tail
for my coming
i have seen a twinkling star in the sky against its gray vastness at the backdrop of the white wall of this old house
i stand still for a while
and i am thinking
how loud does beauty speak in its silence
how it stands out against the vastness of space and how sometimes despite the numbness of our
thoughts
we still are caught in the web of its twinkling...

RIC S. BASTASA
A Twist

did i tell you that in all the days of my life i have always been thinking of you? that no matter what i do your face always wears a smile inside my head and that i always want to go home early just to see you and be with you as we eat dinner and drink the red wine on the porch beneath the stars that i had all the nice time holding your hand and kissing your lips and dancing with you
under the rain?

(i still have to tell you tonight before the moon vanishes into the darkness of the night

that all these are not true).

RIC S. BASTASA
A Twist At The End Of The Line...

i am here
i was here but you never care, you never notice, i am.
Here, i was,
but you, never,
care, you, i,
ever notice.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Twist Of Love And Death

dicke he loves
and truly truly loves
was the only who knew that he was about to commit suicide
that night

tall went well

he lives without thoughts now he thinks that thinking is silly it only leads to the death wish of the one who was trying to be another kind of innocent and beautiful
brain.

RIC S. BASTASIA
A Twosome....

two fake people are doing their thing
in the park
for such a public display of affection

yes two bodies
of salt entwined like vine and
bark

and then the rain comes....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Unique Kind Of Drunkeness

the usual wine
the favorite rhum and the well sought vodka or martini
scotch on the rocks or you common margarita or bloody mary... a glass, another glass, more glasses an open mouth, more words, a flood of ideas that come when the spirits stir you to more shores and islands.. you let go things and monsters and angels long stored in your vocabulary, you're a book with some pages sticking for you seldom open only sometimes when things really get rough when the heart wants to speak because it is too full and your mouth has nothing better to do except to speak, then the many glasses take you to many places and you face many people long dead and gone and you speak to them without fears now direct to the point confrontational and you learn how is it to shout less civil, bursting manners, regrets cracking out like fireworks and then you mellow down for this enlightening moment of why, yes why did all those things happen to you?
some explanations
like how towel to your neck and face a soft massage on your arms and back a woman with a beautiful body and sealed mouth gentle eyes and a certain professional indifference you refuse an offer for the night because you just want to go home someone is waiting and you feel so guilty it is late and you need nothing now but a good sleep in the house.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Vacation In San Rafael

it is comfort
riding a brand new taxi 63 kilometers east of puerto prinsesa

the driver sounds
honest
driving carefully
wishing to see his three kids
grow into maturity as he becomes another
old man
in their town in aborlan

i am escaping
from a humdrum
like a whistle
from a
tea pot

from the glass
window
i saw mountains
dressed with fog

the rain
starts to pour heavily
and we could not hear each other since then

i've seen
intestines of this road

'it is dangerous'
he said.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Vacuole....

haven't you taken a closer look at the vacuole? it is owning a space for itself and what you do not see is that it is ingesting emptiness upon its own open mouth and just like you digesting everything to tiny pieces until everything gets so fluid upon its own belly the universe begins to take shape
and move

just like our own feelings of emptiness we must learn this art of ingestion
taking things and converting them into fluids
until they take the shape of our faces our future
and fears.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Vague Image Of Life

a vague image of life
against a shade
of daylight

outlines of motions
of arms
and hands
and naked
bodies
bathing in the river

a leap of desire
certainly like a frog from my belly

like some
butterflies
wanting to come out from my chest

like some
bees
hiding in the hive
of my mouth
wanting to swarm to the trees
of life
to the nectar
of flowers

life wants to shine for us to see
what life really is:

desire, ambition,
passion, love,
hope, faith
come to think of it

what is vague
is actually
death always lurking
in some dark corners

RIC S. BASTASA
A Valediction Inside The Room

do not hate me, for i am, this is all that i have wind in your palms when you close
you know what happens
when you open again you know what is next

love me then for what i am a rose in your lips when you say something
like
i love you
you know what happens next
surely.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Variation Of The Day To Day Routine

finally you drive your car to the place that you have not been too it is grassy out there and the hills are rolling and the skies spread all the blue
below it is the sea
and the white coast with sea gulls
and coconut trees and clouds drifting with
the wind

you step out from your car and take the deepest breath
in your life

RIC S. BASTASA
A Variation Of The Other Poem

when you are about to squirt
and finish half of it
bad luck
blackout comes the poem
gets half-cooked
and you
go upstairs
and sleep on the bamboo bed
eyes staring at the ceiling

RIC S. BASTASA
A Veranda Without You

gone were the days
when the veranda keeps a man to fill its empty space to watch again those countless stars in the heavens
at night
when everyone is gone
to sleep

it is those books those black and white letters those rules and laws they are those that took the man away from it

how can this veranda sing again tonight?
how can an evening rain retain its meaning?

all these laws
unromantic and so unkind all these men have since then become schemers
of cunning

RIC S. BASTASA
A Verdict Of Guilt

I like to be stern today
So that you may believe me That I am serious About the law and that I mean it when I punish you

I look at you
As you stand before me Uncombed hair
The dirt of poverty
All over your body Unwashed clothes
The odor of your crime Permeating the room

You look like a Tattered poem to me
I want to write Something beautiful
About you

I could have followed
The creative path
Of compassion and Shy away from form
And reason

Yet society is looking With anger and thirsting For revenge
Which they call justice
I hand the verdict
Of conviction

Another body another Soul shall suffer because The path is rigid
And too smooth for our Own creative imagination.
A Verification....

barely an hour after sleeping
she wakes up
faces the mirror
and asks herself

'do i know you? '

RIC S. BASTASA
A Version Of Freedom

Walked the streets today, mindless
Of the usual ways
I argued with my feet
Wanted to go this way but went that way

Fate had me in its grip & by chance & grace both I wonder why
I suddenly look up & in your deep Deep eyes saw the Smile of all Smiles

In my naked wanderings I thought I heard you whisper my name there you are Soft and slumbered & cradled in his arms

Well I try to understand why you set me free Was it love or insecurity you let me be

I walk down the road, I, Look up at the sky Now I know why Reasoning has conquered me I can’t and I won’t deny the fact My heart beats a special Drum Only for you
But I’m glad to be on my own I have never been this free From all suspicion & the pain grown Year upon year

Give me space Give me time Don’t lose yourself in anyone Water rushes down my back, down the water runs Walking in the rain then Seemed beyond conception I’ve never been so alive So much in love with life So alive, so much in love with life & from the gray gray sky fell the Tear of all Tears

RIC S. BASTASA
A Version Of Solitude

you feel like a leaf steady on a pool of water, around you is thick fog and beyond is the haze of a misty morning the house on the river bank is deserted and the boulders of rocks are gray and hard the grass is nil dipping its tongue on the shallow waters ripples of the wind bring the shadows of shimmer the mountains stand still merely looking like a monk closing his eyes under the sky this is my poem for solitude yes, my own version of solitude when all else fail

RIC S. BASTASA
A Very Revealing Truth....

i could have written it
this morning
but i was too busy then attending to some other important matters

i am trying to remember it as it could have been too important equally important as what i told you this morning but i cannot remember it anymore here i am gaping in the wind by the window till the darkness comes as the village lights itself up for another evening

i let it go, perhaps for a very important reason, perhaps i do not want to hurt you, or hurt myself for such a very revealing truth....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Very Sound Sleep

close your eyes

just close them

do not make a wish

as i too close mine

i only need to close them even for this short moment we'll not make love

we will just close our eyes pretty tired just pretty tired and all we need is this very sound sound sleep this very very sound sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
A Very White And Clean Towel

it was you who squeezed the last available toothpaste
for a much needed
brushing of your teeth

i noticed it
and somehow i remember how you want me
to tell exactly what
my poem # 96
really means

you are naked
in the bathroom
with a foam in your mouth

i simply smiled
at you as i handed
you a very white
and clean towel.

RIC S. BASTASA
A View

driftwood
with seven twigs
on the shore
as clear as glass is the water
and all stones and pebbles are visible

above
blue skies
so blue that the white cotton clouds appear like sperm cells moving impregnating
an earth-sky womb

and then
it rains
the water rises
the drift wood again taken
floating
gently to another shore another island
of white sands

a coconut tree towers to reach a waft of cloud winds as cool as ice sands slipping on the fingers a leaf from a guyabano tree falls on the mouth of a sleeping woman beside her
the man whose arms are enclosing her throughout the rainy night

RIC S. BASTASA
A View From Here

a house is deserted
beside the sea
the waves are gentle the coconut tree stands the cassava plants are steady a cab passes by carrying a man and a child this is a closed room with glass windows

you see the water from the pipe flowing fast as though chasing some gravel you hear nothing.

except your words.

you are talking
alone. how can you stop?

a silent world.

RIC S. BASTASA
two days after the sparrow has a nest
upon a twig covered by leaves

the other sparrow
waits by the sill of my window
looking over a windless view

RIC S. BASTASA
A View From Here.....

my dark nights
are wrapped by the bundles
of air

the vast sky is mum humming a lullaby

all the children of this universe are sleeping

a night like this silent like the sands

like an abandoned shell shiny still at the height of noon morning comes sooner with dew upon the rocks waves arise again like songs of the lost gibraltar

RIC S. BASTASA
A View In Town Square

four blue chairs surround a center table

at the center table lies the red cloth

there are no diners
this time of the day

on the blue frames of the glass window

where the white curtains hang & flow like silky water the lush of the red bougainvillea is a wreath

RIC S. BASTASA
A View Of A Man Arriving

the wall in this room is made of glass

overlooking the plaza where the rains are busy discarding themselves

like a burden.

soft rain. no noise.
a big, muscular man
arrives

mustached, and strong arms holding on to a electric blue

handle of a motorcycle

he holds the key to a certain destination

he looks at me and i told him even if he did not ask at all i do not know. i do not really know.

RIC S. BASTASA
A View Of A Narra Tree Whose Branches Are Cut

there it stands tall beside a nipa house its branches all cut the climbing lichen and moss shall soon die at noonday wilting and stiffening mummified on an early summer when all the fingers are cut off and arms stripped of hands how can man be a man?

how can a tree be without leaves and branches?
how can moss and lichens thrive on such a cruelty the nipa house triumphs and someone inside laughs the sharp axe and the long bolo serve the purpose of the author of this murder.

I loathe. I make this protest poetry.
Man murders nature unpunished.

No kind of poesy saves. Words are useless.
Metaphors are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
A View Of Love's Bridge

it is a connection from the bottom where you take the view there is long bridge connected to a cave & drops of rain that you cannot see

RIC S. BASTASA
A View Of Samal Island

between Samal Island and myself

a moon sitting
on the sea
a golden sheen
spread
like a pedestal
of light

and then
a big ship passes by marring
my view

i hear no sound absent minded
i am always thinking about someone else

always far from me

RIC S. BASTASA
A View Of The Old Farm That Father Left Us...

an old man
is sweeping the dry leaves into a heap
in the backyard of the house
lies the chickens and the ducks
and there
at dawn the eggs of ducks are spreading on the lawn and the roosters are calling as the chicks are seeking for their mother hens pecking on the worms
under the green grass of
home

RIC S. BASTASA
A View Of The Stairs....

we all love the stairs there is order in its placement there is a hierarchy that we equate with stages

of life, of something that is always higher and that something below it also serves the purpose of elevating a step so someone can reach the door of the house
and then
enter it

we all love the stair there is respect in elevation there is use and artistic purpose,
there is dignity in elation we remember every nail that is hammered

there,
echoing the sound of the past struggles

it is the perfection of friction the platform of a reconstructed struggle step by step

a comfort to achieve height a bridge to another dimension

RIC S. BASTASA
A View Of This Place That I Remember

the back space of this house
used to be a green ricefield
and there was that tall mango tree
where i used to sit underneath
shading me from the scourging sun
i always remember
the view
of the carabaos grazing
with white herons standing on their back
and blue cottony clouds drifting above

the place is now cemented
with a wall as high as three men added-up
high buildings rise from here
reaching the cottony clouds out there

and the river is no longer a hype
but a big silent hard steel pipe.

RIC S. BASTASA
A View To A Kill

it is dark
the only light getting in thru an open window is the moonlight

naked you lay in bed
waiting for me

i undress myself
now is the presentation of all the truth i have

you wait for my embrace as blood rushes to my face i love you i know but tonight i will not say it i let all my actions speak tenderly to your receptions do not say the words i do not need them tonight

RIC S. BASTASA
A View To A Kill...

the grasses
on early morning
are weary with dew,

wet and heavy,

and the face too
is weary overburdened by an indifferent smile

dry and short-lived.

RIC S. BASTASA
A View To Lighten The Heart Of A Sad Woman

two ducks wading
on the blue water
beneath them
refracted images of pebbles dancing

RIC S. BASTASA
A Village Scene.....

the little boy is climbing a guava tree.
a bunch of ripe yellow guavas are hanging in one of the branches. the sky is blue at 10 o'clock in the morning. some feathery clouds pass by.
a sparrow hovers on the banana leaf and looks at the little boy with fear.

and then the war between the rebels and the government troops begins.
series of fire shots and explosions. the villagers run for their lives. there will be many casualties.

one of those who will become another number is the little boy who climbs the guava tree.

the ripe guavas fall on the soil, run over by the fighting men.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Village Story....

the woman
with a red skirt comes down from the mountain

she carries with her a basket of violet eggplants the little hand of a child holds to her mother

he is silent with his blue lollipop

the market day here is a sunday

a drunkard runs amok the streets of the village killing in cold blood a young man waiting for her girl as she urinates beside the abandoned hut near the river....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Village With Many Houses

his heart is like the sky with many birds flying inside it his heart is like the village with many houses around it the sky is as white as snow the birds are so blue the houses with no one they are all empty

for quite long deserted

RIC S. BASTASA
A Virtue Of Distance

when she repels you do not think bad about it it is just
that nature operating upon itself healing

for the good of all

be the universe

be happy when planets and stars repel
each other
and keep their desired distances it is for the smooth flow of heavenly relations

you can imagine perhaps when a planet gets too near Mercury kissing Venus
it will surely be not only chaos it will be massive destruction

RIC S. BASTASA
A Vision

the world is so vast the universe floating and so endless there is always this fluidity
no one knows what is there

we focus on the garden of our heart

it is the only thing we can do
till

tend what is present go where we are taken

time
that is the waiting

that sense of this, that
there

but soon the change comes the timelessness and weightlessness of these
all

the sense of floating and being endless

sunless horizons
edgeless spaces

at the tip of the icebergs
of our minds

along the peripheries of our tattered hearts
soon there will be no burdens on the wings of spirits

on the feathers of angels to the arms of gods....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Vision Of Doom...

you look at the world while riding a taxi above the bridge that connects two cities

a canvass of blue sea white clouds drifting seagulls crossing the horizon blue ships floating tiny houses along the boulevard cars moving like ants upon a line of path

you are amazed by so much beauty man-made though

slowly the compassion arises from the stares of your eyes for soon

who knows that this is your last glimpse of this city

beauty swallowed by waves as islands sink to the bottom of the the blue ocean

and the sounds of people like you finally gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Vocabulary

i have a new word for you, to illustrate what my poetry is all
about,

it is this word: blabber,

it is not the one who reveals confidential information for money, i am not that sort and my poems are not that kind, oh, it is something else, blabberblabberblabberblabber bladder,

could be a bladder
one that stores urine but there is no urine here, i smell like a wild flower
like
a dama de noche, a champaca, an ylangylang, something else really, □ not the betrayer, informer, squealer, rat canary, fink, snitch, stool pigeon, stoolie, stoolpigeon, sneaker, snitcher, not a sneak someone acting as an informer or decoy for the police neither am i a copper's nark nor a supergrass, grass

well i am more like this: a verb form of i speak about unimportant matters of my life (don't believe me i am just ironic)

rapidly and incessantly gabble, gibber,
palaver,
piffle,
prate,
prattle,
tattle,
tittle-tattle,
twaddle,
blab,
maunder,
crack,
chatter

i am a mouth, i speak,

i talk, i verbalise,

as in yes,

i talk about a lot of nonsense blather, blether, blither, smatter, babble - i talk foolishly

and so finally here we are at the core of this matter:

this is the poem that babbles and croons and you are the baby, and i am not the mother, the father, or the big brother or sister:

plain poet, that's me,
i am so sorry

the flabbergasted blabbermouth of them all.
A Voice Lays Hanging On A Pole

like a tattered piece of loin cloth
a voice lays hanging on a pole beside a grassy path

it speaks
and i listen

it speaks about its loneliness its being tattered
it is a torn voice haunted by a scissor
the thread of mystery runs wanting still till nighttime to find the naked eye
of the needle

pines beside the hill stand by like strangers staring upon the dead body of a boy

overrun by a ten wheeler truck

tragic! yes, tragic is the
silence

more tragic is the indifference that simply walks away unnoticed even by the invisibility of the soul of the wind
chimes.
A Walk Into Oblivion

there is a way to come and then just watch
everything

you are not one
of them
and they do not know you
and you are not interested to know anyone
of them at all

they look at you
somehow
quizzically

and you feel their anger

when they leave
after you watch them they speak only about themselves

there is a way
to leave
without use of
words

and you remember
a few of those who were here once
and who were very much in your situation

you blink
and then you too
shall take a walk

into oblivion
where no one remembers you just the way

you like it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Warm Welcome

tonight when the world is asleep someone knocks at your door and you open it. You tell him 'welcome, i have been expecting you... i am sorry, i have neglected you.. for so long...come, and make yourself comfortable. Sit here beside me Let us have a drink, and some smoke and let us, for once eat together...' you look at the face of that stranger slowly and carefully you map out the the similarities, disregarding the old differences...

deep inside you, you like this stranger..
It is you. It is now. You have accepted Yourself. You are drinking with its truths.

You are eating its have finally become one with Yourself, and tonight, it is time to party.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Warning

the sea knows how to dream
and dream
it will still dream about a jellyfish a flesh of a jellyfish, and it will sleep and think about this dream of more flesh and sting
and fling
its salt like the tentacles of the jellyfish to the fish
and the sea urchins

and starfish begin their journey to the shores where desire stops but does not end i am the sea and i dream about her tentacles her flesh

and the pain in my skin

the needles of the urchin and the hardness of the starfish and the shore where i lay

to desires that do not end to loves lost to wishes that it may regain again sea dreams sea pains sea urchins the boat on fire and the captain drowning

RIC S. BASTASA
A Warning To A Closure

it is not that we desire to change a stone into a vine

you always complain that the stone in you is silent and heavy

there is no laser to perform such work of transubstantiation

i do not have that power to go inside your gene and cut some stairs of DNA molecules what we need is just an hour of compromise a little sacrifice here and there like some stains in your shirt which we can remove later in the washroom but you do not have that hour or you simply refuse to see us sacrificing too we do have common enemies but you do not belong to us now soon we will also close the door against you and when it is shut

you are on your own too alone to all of those who do not have mercy

RIC S. BASTASA
A Way Of Life Professed

he is lost
he intends to be lost in the crowd
he never belongs to anyone

he is lost
he loves to be lost
forever

he has no world no place
to stay

he has no breasts to hold and keep him in place

so keeps on looking
somewhere
where he can have a place where he can stay put

he is not afraid to become a stone
only if he can find
a home

there is no one
no place
and he learns it after so many
fears and then

he begins to love
this feeling
got stuck to being lost
as a way of life

professed.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Way Of Management

i  premise it on freedom and responsibility

a small boat without motor
an oar for a mind
a compass for logic

the storms are tests and survival is always as once emphasized
for the fittest

i have no word for misfeasance
i have nothing
disciplinary for malfeasance

move on and i speak nothing for i like it
to see you suffer
all alone

RIC S. BASTASA
A Way Of Seeing December...

the past months impregnated December with so much Joy
and it is now ready to give birth to a wonderful New Year

RIC S. BASTASA
A Way To Complication

as i see it
it's more of trying to make things more complicated like putting a handful of cotton upon a scenery of trees or taking some smudges and scattering on the plate so you cannot see what you are eating and then you take a spoonful of it and rely only on the taste deprived of eyes, and this way, you begin to wonder how interesting it is when you only use your heart even when you are just partaking of an early morning breakfast.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Way To Live

a little fish rises from the water to eat a bubble of air

from the tree a kingfisher with an eye for fish swiftly dives and with its sharp long black beak catches the little fish a boy with a rubber sling aims at the blue kingfisher hitting it with a stone crushing its round head and sharp long and black beak to the ground a ripe coconut falls from a tree and hits the head of the boy below the lizard that climbs the coconut tree looking for brown beetles at the top does not notice how all these events happen

RIC S. BASTASA
A Wednesday Treat

Wednesday, at the middle of this array, you doubt, where to?

you want to be back or you want to go forward?

they have forgotten you and you try standing at the center of the kiosk a pity, this pity asking for attention and they all pass by without looking at you there is simply no change expected on a Wednesday there is this shuffling of shadows gaze not fixed at all on the wall it is the same rain, the road, the trees you give up this madness for a name you take your slippers and wear them and then go away

RIC S. BASTASA
A Wheelbarrow

a wheelbarrow
is a mere wheelbarrow

even if it is not red or glazed
with rain water

it is
what it is just a wheelbarrow

but look beneath
ourselves in the forest of our wanderings there are trees there growing in the dampness of darkness looking for light

a river comes flooding that is where

meaning sprouts
upsurging emotions
now without walls coming before your fences

a wheelbarrow
is not the same wheelbarrow anymore

emotions
your emotions made it
for not what it is

transmutation from William to you and this world looks not familiar
anymore

petals of meanings red so real thorns and stalks and dews

RIC S. BASTASA
A Whim....

after a few years
in this nook of your world you learn a language

that you only speak its interrogatives keep on asking and you answer with some uncommon declarations soon you will understand that the subject had always been you the verb is silent and compassionate you forget some descriptions it is unlikely but you have become another contentment within you you talk to yourself in this world without stars and moons and suns the books keep an eye on you their hands ready to shake yours they wait until you become like one of its pages until you become a mere idea or simply just another whim whimpering for another day....

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a whisper that arrived in our little place it's name is loneliness and it is looking for someone that it has known years ago in the place where it is living it is knocking every door of the house and someone opens it it mentions my name and it asks whether i still live here someone takes the courage of telling it that my house is about two hills away from here finally we meet. It stares at me. Closely. Then it hugs me. It cries. It kissest my ears.

I am silent. I am still thinking of you for all these years. Time cannot then the whisper stays inside my ears. Silenced. It is not saying any word anymore.

The neighbors know that its name is loneliness.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Whisper Of Tomorrow

that is the great promise for you to forget about those fears of having not accomplished all these and those or having to fulfill all hidden dreams, you are gifted with progeny a tendril, a bud, a ray of light by your window,
a whisper of tomorrow,

when the lights are all turned off.

RIC S. BASTASA
A White Blanket

a white blanket
covers your face
but not your body
so how would you think about what i really think?

RIC S. BASTASA
A White Blanket....

I should have taken time to write about it that early morning the words just arrived much earlier like some visitors from a garden
shaped like butterflies and so fragile like china flying low and hovering in my hair and then staying there for a while the silence is beautiful soft on my skin and soothing  like the coldness of the blade of a grass - herb but i have decided to take a walk for hours and have some breathing space setting aside what could have been more necessary than air what could have been more beautiful than the sunrise i keep myself in circles and when i come back it is no longer there I'm so sorry  for i have forgotten what is essential this i have confided to the blanket in the room unfolded still.

RIC S. BASTASA
A White Butterfly

a white butterfly flies over a bouquet of white roses intended for the dead loved one

it lands on one of the petals and then it disappears

i look for it and with my breath i shy it away on a wish that it may hover on the red patch of my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
A White Butterfly And The Written Words

i am afraid
i really have to keep on writing

what shall happen to me without the written existence of this poem?

i am afraid
about the consequences of my arrogant submission that i can live without
all these quivering of scribblings

what if you have nothing to read?

i am afraid about you for this is this flower and you are the loneliest butterfly

in white against the light you shall disappear and this flower falls to the ground it rots. And you are

gone.

tomorrow morning
words repeat themselves over and over again another white butterfly

comes

and will always hover A White Flower Blooms Against A Blue Sky let me not think that sooner this flower shall wilt let me fathom the secret beauty of its whiteness

against the blue sky

let me savor the opening of its petals in slow motion

let me think of time that way let me not be the rushing of the air let me move like a snail let me taste the delicious syrup of the honeybee the white flower

the purity of your intentions the blue sky
the beauty of your sorrow

time like a scallop seasons like seaweeds

the hermit crab moving and meeting the huge wave foams, and murkiness, and then you wonder where are these things these thoughts

after a storm.

RIC S. BASTASA
A White Flower For You Inside My Hand

This is a poem of comfort inside my hand

It is a flower pure & white

It blooms only for you

In wintertime

RIC S. BASTASA
A White Fragile Butterfly......

we've been writing and writing and writing

not for once have we seen each other yet

i do not wish too somehow perhaps we are meant to be just like this near and yet so far real and surreal at the same time perhaps we are better as souls better as air rather than rocks or islands or bones i cannot say i love you for that would be too shallow a conclusion based on the emptiness of sands we are into this anonymity and i will tell you how i feel

i feel like a white fragile tiny butterfly fluttering from one flower to another and still undecided whether to hover finally to a red petal of that rose

there is simply no flower for me the air claims me as its property, and my nectar is emptiness, my proboscis is guile my feet nowhere to land.

RIC S. BASTASA
A White Pebble

in my little unknown town a lame woman swallows a white pebble after saying her name in reverse

and lo! she turns into a superwoman
duping all the lazy people into watching her serial stories
on TV

Darna! Darna! Darna!
The Good always triumphs over Evil at least in fantasy
somehow.

RIC S. BASTASA
A White Rose

you tell her, death does not exist, and she says, she knows, she had been dead, if only you cared enough to know. she will answer, your handkerchiefs are all ironed, and they are all kept well folded in the drawer.

she says she misses something.
just a white rose.

RIC S. BASTASA
A White Yacht I See

a white yacht i see
on a very blue ocean
far away

at the port
a shadow of a girl with a long black hair against a very strong sunlight waves at me
still

i figure out as i wait on the top of this mountain where the air is fainting she must be the one destined to die because no one helped her
because i have no way of becoming this wooden boat to sail and save her from him

RIC S. BASTASA
A White-Breasted Bird

a white-breasted bird
sits on a twig
of the champaca tree

alone
always alone always

RIC S. BASTASA
A Wife Who Thinks All For Herself

Love will like her.

Her husband packs all his belongings
And and soon leaves her for another

RIC S. BASTASA
A Windless Night

a windless night
the one without stars without the moon
the hovering silence
trees unmoved
no shadows no self
just this just this undefined yet
escaping
like sand dripping like water dropping like light fading
like darkness setting like the sound of waves endless
like the horizon boundless
like feelings unfathomed
like God
mysterious
all these
make my life move more of the questions rather than the answers slip drip drip slip slide slash slush
whoosh
non stop

be-ing

RIC S. BASTASA
A Windy Afternoon At The Beachfront

under the coconut trees a nipa hut
a boy on a swing another boy pushing his toy cart the little girl on the bamboo stair hugging her doll
the mother is burning the dry leaves the father is mending the nets such a happy family perhaps, who knows? i do not even know them i am just passing by trying to breathe trying to take so much salty air inside my lungs

on this windy afternoon at the beach front

RIC S. BASTASA
A Wish

i like to see stars tonight at ten in the evening when the rest of the world are asleep, i wish and think hard enough invoking the belief that the mind can always manage to work things out with the heart,

there are no stars
the dark clouds are here and then it rains

i listen to the sound of the rain i am not anymore running

RIC S. BASTASA
A Wish For Change....

i built a nice cottage
by the beach
i put some wooden chairs and a bamboo bed

there are glasses there and a pitcher for drinking
water

i have a well and a rope and a bucket which you can use for free

i leave the gate open the doors too
the roof is wide and the rain will not get you wet

i wish for trust and leave the place for everyone's use the day after, the glasses

are broken
the rope cut, trash thrown into the well
and water becomes unpotable the bamboo bed destroyed the and the wooden chairs too how destructive could you all be?

when you could have used it for free?

what worm lives in your brains? what virus in your nerves?

but i do not wish you death for i still hope you all change...
A Wish For The Couple Who Want To Be Wed here i am waiting for the couple who want to be wed.

I will be the one to marry them.

I like to tell them that I am not God and what i unite today, may not last forever.

Here i am waiting for quite a time.
I have a wish that they won't come.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Wish Inside The Plane To My Way Back Home

there is a reason why
i sleep
in that one hour plane flight
back home

i have (perhaps) a wish that if i die it can nothing be but a waking up....

RIC S. BASTASA
A Woman Long Battered By A Husband

the mirror
shows what it is to be indifferent like a journalist ture to his calling it reflects what you
show as faithfully as a woman long battered by a husband

it is you who is shocked as the mirror
without speaking a word continues its work.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Woman Named Rose

many believe in her her courage and durability she is like a strong wood and she has become an instrument for hitting those who are weak and faithless and hopeless and
brokenhearted

i like her truly her threshold for tolerance i consider as beyond mine she knows how to keep pain and not show it she, is, i think, stronger than steel even platinum
her flexibility is duly noted in fact, she is also elastic as rubber and too fluid as liquid occupying every empty
space
finding her own level or i can always compare her to air occupying almost everything she is also a mystery Rose, such a beauty, exuding the scent of a lovely day on a chain of rosy colors Red Rose

until one day,
when everything glorious about her was said all plaques of appreciation given all trophies of her victories for such virtues shown all medals for her valor handed

until one day
(and this i cannot explain till now)
until one day
while on a cruise ship at the Atlantic she jumped into the raging ocean confronting the storm and then she was forever

gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Woman Slighted

to feign motion she goes into the clothesline to hang her soul
her hips sway
her breasts baring

she stares at the other side of the fence

RIC S. BASTASA
A Woman Trapped In A Man's Body

ariel suggests that a poem should be written about a woman trapped in a man's body, and sometimes one may spell this kind of trap as a tragedy as mostly projected by those that claim that the happiest gay is a dead one. I suppose it is just a matter of how one sees the best that happens when one is there. A trap can be a cage, and to some a cage is a safe home for the bird who does not bother taking the risk of flying anymore. A woman loves a man, and try thinking Ariel, how happy would a woman be staying inside a man's body?

she makes love to him day and night long.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Woman Trapped In A Man's Body (2)

ariel suggests that a poem should be written about a woman trapped in a man's body, and sometimes one may spell this kind of trap as a tragedy as mostly projected by those that claim that the happiest gay is a dead one. I suppose it is just a matter of how one sees the best that happens when one is there. A trap can be a cage, and to some a cage is a safe home for the bird who does not bother taking the risk of flying anymore. A woman loves a man, and try thinking Ariel, how happy would a woman be staying inside a man's body?

he makes love to her day and night long. and she caresses him without any tong.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Woman With A Mask

Asks for your name Don’t give any

She has no right
For true names

She has no face.
She is nameless.

Quid pro quo.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Woman With Two Navels

she may exist and i may see her and her two navels,
it does not matter,
what matters most is the doughnut that empty part,
that looks like a hole
i can always complete it.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Woman's Nipple

a woman's breast is exposed the nipple, pinkish and firm like a pointillist finger looks over the window of the dress, innocent and wondering, what the world out there is all about why it is hidden? it is desire - why is it suppressed? the eyes of the woman with long curly and soft hair are so inviting, it says welcome, we have been here before you came, we have been searching for you for you are lost, like a ship without an anchor in the sea of love, in the storms of your lust, in the calmness after an outburst of desire, -why do you come with shyness? the nipple smiles, and remembers how is it to be sucked till it brings forth milk for all thirsty babies of this world men who miss life, men who love to live because the pink nipple is hungry for their hands, because the eyes of the woman are always inviting, because love is still a possibility, because lust is its initiative, because death is imposed by the system, that refuses to understand and give.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Wondering Soul

the two elephants are dancing the gangnam while the strict trainor with a big stick watches with a clear eye after which the audience crowding the small

theatre renders its big applause

sometimes i wonder if these elephants really like to dance

RIC S. BASTASA
A Word Is Just A Word

a word is just a word
and it may come from somewhere else from a very far place because a word like a bird has wings and it has feet and it may hover on my hair and make a nest there like this poem

and that poem of pain and that poem of joy and that poem that you have read and made me the man crying in pain inside those lines for a poem is just a poem

and it may come from somewhere else from a very far, far place about someone else
because a poem is like a bird with wings with feet and with feathers and it may hover
inside my heart
and make a house there and i am there too
emphatizing.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Work Of Fiction

reviewing the past pages of life you find out that most of the chapters are sad the characters are actually confused they are not certain what shall happen to them at the conclusive page you have subjected them to all doubts in such a suspended animation and they are attuned to your unpredictability some of them do not expect much they know your temperament and the patterns are like the foldings of a brain like a labyrinth of one misinterpretation
to another

the characters understand you all they ask is that you live and even if they all die at the end they implore thA Work Of Fictionat you lengthen this novel of life because even if they are just your works of fiction
in truth
they all love you

RIC S. BASTASA
A World A Universe

to the pebbles below the fish and the bubbles
the fish is the only meaning of their existence its scales are the suns its tails meteors
its eyes the gods
and fins the winds

the bowl is the emptiness the water surrounding is the fullness to all of them

the world is perfect their eternity is only
this moment

RIC S. BASTASA
A World Ending Upon One's Death...

ey all remember their dead, ey make landmarks of places they've been to ey make journals to keep forever what happened when they were still alive ey take pictures preserve them frame them and hang them in the walls of their libraries and living rooms old faces, beautiful bodies in their dresses of their own times and suits and shoes, in truth no one likes to remember the world ends when one dies somehow

RIC S. BASTASA
A World Forlorn

i open the window
and cold air gets in the world is still gray eagerly the birds sing for the birth of
a brand new day
the leaves hum and the treetops like hands
open

i stand by the window wishing for wings
so i can fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
A World Of Our Own...

there are other ways
many ways in fact
to create worlds,

some do it in hiding
the world is a corner a nook of few clutters

some make another ocean inside their cupped hands when i talk to myself when everyone else leaves for their own homes on delicate whispers of the

heart

i have too
a world of words
my own
home

on some but few
syllables...

RIC S. BASTASA
A World Of Scorpions

scorpions are everywhere if you only know what i mean, sir the world if you only understand how is it to be real & human is made of invisible pincers and silent dignified sufferers.

RIC S. BASTASA
A World Revolving Around Your Hands.....

one day
a moment arrives sounding like a total stranger

it is ready with a back pack
for you

that moment tells you this is not your world

look at the bruises in your face
the wounds on your feet that do not heal
the falling hair
stinking odor of the fluids from your ear

then it will tell you
what to do

that there is a process of release
which will be painful
but only for a while

you ask
what is the payment?
at whose expense?
the consequences and risks that moment turns its face

away
humiliated about your questions

it is bizarre
but many have succumbed
and fallen
to the trap of the moment you said at the last moment

thank you
it is uncertain
and it is not worth it

when that moment leaves you affirm a world it is still revolving around your hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
A World View From The Wounded And The Oppressed

i have a stone
in my hand
i do not have to polish it since i have to throw it against the world

The world is a big face
The stone is thrown straight to its pair of eyes That is why it is blind

it is deaf
and i do not have to throw another stone to perfect
its indifference

RIC S. BASTASA
A Worm Edging Throug A Leaf

there is no hurry
really
for the worm to eat his way through the place it lives temporarily

for soon
things will change
the world
shall give it wings

RIC S. BASTASA
A Wound On His Forehead

he scratched it accidentally perhaps when he was asleep as he was wont
to raise his arms on his forehead, and with uncut nails

he caused a wound therein infected by his carelessness his hand touching barely almost anything dirty he looks at himself on the mirror studying the gaping wound like an eye staring back at him asking

why should a man raise his hands even when asleep?

and why should he wound himself
unnecessarily?

why does he not care about the possibility of the complexity of an infection that may even cause his death?

is this the kind of surrender he had dreamed of inside his dream?

his way of finally giving up life since it left him with nothing to offer?

he looks at himself closely now, he becomes a strange man staring at another man he thought
he knew too well.
A Yawn

Sees a yawn Gets infected
With the yawn
And a yawn
Too by itself
Then it tries to Sleep to Get some sleep to Count the ships
And the sheep
A very tired poem
Yawns
But never sleeps
a tired poem
No more it is simply A poem
Sleepless True to Its nature.

RIC S. BASTASA
A Yes For An Answer

things happened so fast she says death is preposterous a friend was drunk from a reunion

and drove his car back home
alone

his body stiffened
he was dead last night

and no one found him
the police came late

dead is fast and furious and flattering

he courted it and voila he got yes for an answer

RIC S. BASTASA
to write is to recall what cannot be found

you keep on trying there must be a real capture of what slipped

it is like fishing and what you fish is not fish and what you are riding is not even a boat
and you float there but there is no water

to write is to be filled with contradictions meeting the ironies of your life and shaking their hands as though you are ready to have friends again in that room where lights are dim where candles are restrained with what and how much light to give

to write is to go back to that thatched roofed cottage long abandoned and as you open the door you hear the creaking sound of your past who appears as a young child waking his eyes from sleep, stretching his hands and looking for mother....

RIC S. BASTASA
A. Pope

YOU got your past world a language of your own to copy of which i have not the slightest intention They all call you a great man that is something i must be dumb that i cannot understand

I have a language of my own a voice that constantly sings my own song at night i keep it toned down
in my heart
there is no frown.

RIC S. BASTASA
A.K.A. Mario

before he finally left
he came to the house finding me alone and busy with words the usual work on words that makes me

bread,

he did not say much as usual he is the silent mario of the class

many thought he is at peace, i told me he is not actually and so i tell his wife mario is confused, like some entangled seaweeds where no fish can penetrate and stay or bring something mario died two days ago thinking that i am the happiest man alive

i think so, i must think so, otherwise mario shall know, otherwise, he would have live a little longer mario feels this sense of abandonment like a port without boats and seagulls like a fish without a fish he died and that is enough to tell us what he believes in he felt something so disturbing

he did not mind

before he finally left
he thought that i am the happiest man alive and now, i must promise myself that.

RIC S. BASTASA
A.S.1

while waiting you
make a poem dedicating it to patience since you cannot curse the one who is always late for your appointment
and then when she arrives you close your ears
for all the usual excuses

RIC S. BASTASA
i have not put
the dot yet in my life's composition words are not final and so i simply put the comma and the hyphen
sometimes the dash and then the slash
perhaps when i die
i give you the honor
to put the period
add nothing then i have enough
of me

RIC S. BASTASA
when i was sixteen
i tried to hold a cigarette and smoke it

i was in a dark alley
with you and you held my hand
seize my cigarette
and throw it
away

it was raining
and it was cold

you said a lot
of words
telling me that i am your under your control

since then
you know what is my wish
for you

i have always loved
freedom
i have always liked to live alone

if you were alive
now
you could have seen this misery
i know not how
to live

RIC S. BASTASA
A+

you work for hard for an A+ and naturally you take pride in finally getting it,

that's honor
deserved.

congratulations.

RIC S. BASTASA
we speak
they hear
and sometimes
what we speak which they hear
is not actually us.

the wise man does not listen much knowing that what is spoken is sometimes not really us.

in anger, in utter disappointment
in times of the storms and fire and
quakes,
that spur of the moment words are spoken louder than the storm which we do not really mean. Not us.

it is the silence that mends it all. What was not spoken
remains to be the truth.

in fear and hunger.
in love and much of it.

RIC S. BASTASA
if you have been doing those which you ought not to do vacate. Play ball. Go outside. You miss the trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
climb a mountain
do not look back sail the sea do not sail back, fly and fly do not look back to have it most in this journey just cling to the very moment. The present stone, this cliff, this seashell, these wings. Do not look back

Did not the wife of Lot turn into salt?

RIC S. BASTASA
Abc's Of Loving

When one loves,
s/he must never love from the head, or heart:
for both can corrupt the state with emotions.
instead one should,
love from the tongue,
it is unbiased.

RIC S. BASTASA
Abdurahman

i was looking
for you
and i wonder why
you have stopped singing

you must have forgotten
how birds sing
during the rain

how fish swim
during those storms
how the sun
keeps on burning just like the stars
twinkling
despite an end

RIC S. BASTASA
Abel Korzeniowski......

frozen in a dance position history shall be perplexed.

soon the geologists shall find the answer as to what love really is.

the rippling notes of an old love go to the antarctic.

the lovers simply want everything to stop there at that point hoping that love does not change.

seemingly fidelity is likened to a footprint of the dinosaur preserved by a catastrophe that struck everyone and yet muted and shall forever say nothing about it....

RIC S. BASTASA
Abgebrüht

the harsh times sometimes makes us hard so hard that we become calluses towards the sufferings of our others
never mind our own
we have been too insensitive, indifferent, unsympathetic to ourselves we get used to everything that hurt us, they become everyday encounters like day and night, like washing our faces like morning and evening brushings of our teeth callous we become this attitude indurated parts of ourselves thicker skins exposed to so much friction not unbearable
not invisible but unbreakable, impenetrable, and always challenging

you and i.

RIC S. BASTASA
Abi Nimo Og Sikat Ka Na Kay Usa Ka Na Ka Magbabalak

ayaw pailad sa imong kaugalingon kon moingon sila nga ikaw sikat dako kana nga bakak

abi nimo og sikat ka na kay kuno ikaw
usa na ka magbabalak sama kanila momata inig kaadlawon
aron kunohay mamati

sa mga tingog sa awit sa mga gangis nga gihimo sa ginoo alang lang
kanimo

abi nimo og usa ka na ka halangdon nga tawo nga pagapurongpurongan sa usa ka korona sa kahayag nga gimugna alang lang sa bulan ug mga bitoon ug sa adlaw ug usab
kanimo

sayop ka
usa ka lamang ka magbabalak tighawid sa lapis tigtuplok sa mga letra
sa imong computer
tigpatik sa dugay na nga ania dinhi tig-aninaw sa mga karaan nga butang nga dili imo kay kini sila nauna na sa ilang tagsa-tagsa ka yugto ug panahon sa ilang kinabuhi ug pagkamatay

nagtikawtikaw na samtang wala pa gani matawo ang imong mga lolo og lola samtang wala pa gani nangulag ang imong papa ug mama

sayop ka
usa ka lamang ka tingog nga dili nila madungog ug kon madungog man dili gani nila paminawon kay daghan pa kaayo silag buluhaton ang pagtanom sa mga lagotmon ang pagpangisda ug pagpamaling ang pagpamasol

ang pagtikad sa yuta ang paglakawlakaw aron pagpangita sa mga liso nga itusok sa abono nga yuta ang pagsalom sa mga suba ang pag-abli sa mga nasirad-an ang pagtuktok sa mga pultahan ang pagtukod sa mga pinuy-anan ang pagsunog sa mga kagulangan ang pagputol sa mga kahoy ug pagtanom na usab niini ang paghimo sa mga tulay ang pagtumpag sa mga pangpang ang paghimo og mga pader aron usab

sila mabuhi sama kanimo

sayop ka
usa ka lamang ka tingog
nga molabay
usa ka lamang ka hapdos nga dili matambalan usa ka lamang ka pangagho nga motapad sa bungbong ug dayon mawala kay gidagit sa bugnaw nga hangin

dili ka sikat
tan-awa ang imong kaugalingon nga migusbat ang imong gisi nga karsones ang imong bulingon nga polo shirt ang imong gidalikdik nga dughan ang imong kuko nga wala maputol og bulingon mora ka og iring nga nagpunay og kawras sa haligi nga dili maparog ug sa katapusan mokatkat paingon sa atop sa udtong tutok molantaw sa mga bungtod ug mga panganod ug igo lang nga miingon pagkamingaw diay pagkaalimuot sa akong kahimtang

RIC S. BASTASA
Aboard The Domestic Airline Bound For Home....

at the height of fifty thousand feet where the island looks like a mole on the cheek

you begin to realized everything in life
is so uncertain

dead can happen anytime
anywhere

then you hate
thinking about everything
that much

RIC S. BASTASA
About A Friend Named A. K.

if you only knew where he lives a dark corner of this hospital ward his hands and feet jacketed at times during times of seizures and fits if you could have only seen how he sits for hours on the floor beside an iron door how the wind that touches him pains him like his skin is removed from this flesh and bone if you could have heard his screams and then when nurses rush to him to give his dose of sanity back through the usual injections if you could have only felt the beatings of his heart and his tremors running through all his fingers if you could have only seen him on lucid intervals how he scribbled his lost lines through his laptop spending hours recalling what should have been forgotten my dear friend if you have the heart of someone human you could not have called him moron for whatever he is, he is part of you and me and us and this world if you have seen him all alone trying to meet his soul halfway between a murmur and an incantation you could not have said such a very cruel word

RIC S. BASTASA
About A Lady

she writes, with all disappointments her chin on her elbow her feet right on her ears plans are falling out like buds that did not make it to become flowers what is so simple has shattered into a complication out of control, her life has become, she stops for a while, she needs this moment
she poses the question: what went wrong along the way?
love was there
compassion was abundant he sends her a note through her email: darling, don't worry my love shall see you through she is restless, jobless, she tries everything to please what boredom was there life is also a matter of luck, she concludes she writes him, forget it, let me do it without you without myself in this i will let life do its share, luck to manifest. I will wait, she says, I can always wait.

This time, i will do nothing.
Let the chair come to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
you are telling me about a stone
who refuses to admit anyone simply
because it has no door, no room and no space
for someone like you,

you who does not even know what knowing someone
really means. you ask the stone for a space and it says no
and you tell the stone that it has a space
where the leaf and a dropp of water live

the stone says no, and you insist because of the state you are in
you are dying and you need a place
perhaps a burial space where you may finally lay yourself
to rest, but the stone still says no, telling you that it has
no feelings that for centuries it has always been its nature

stony, stony silence, stony stares, unfeeling, that in its
house of stone, there exists no word for sympathy
that it is simply living up to the demands of its true nature
its tradition, and you finally understand, yet somehow you
tell the stone about what it does not know

inside it there is this leaf with dew, there is dropp of water
coming from the rain, that until now it has not fully known,
that inside its stony silence, there is still this song
that it has a heart that it keeps denying.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Alma

and then there was Alma, a name which means soul.
she tells the story about her son, how she gave birth at such an early age, meeting this chinese man, who offered her a nice world who promised her heaven.

it turned sour. The chinese man left her. But she managed to eme out a living for her son.
She raised him.

She files an annulment
two years and still undecided.

When the annulment is granted she promises to invite us to her party The motif? Wear the color of freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
About An Open Window

let me now talk about an open window the one that lives in that room where the window is open be it day or in the dangers of the night its blackness threatening it was even rumored that a monster flies and eats the sweet flesh of women is a woman, oh, she is as beautiful as the north star that guides lost pilgrims oh, she is as sweet as the honey of cultured bees, she as as tender as treated beef, her window is always open waiting for the full moon to make love to her once a month when she too is on heat like a wild, wild beast.

that monster brings the moon and beastly, the beautiful woman knows what love is there by the window that is always kept open because it fears no one her lover
the beast, none other.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Anthony's Poem

quite a gem
gold in luster
gleaming
amidst the mud
the sun sighs saying: how can they ever not notice
the beauty of his poems?

what a gem i too said, and then i feel so light like a tiny white bird and i fly near the nugget
of wisdom so smooth is the color so like the golden sheen of the sun

the peace and quiet the contemplation i still remember beside a pond underneath a lotus flower is a charming koi.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Antonio's Infection

antonio's infection comes from my own infection, and so is candice's and hazelen's infection of the
beautiful mind,

ahh, poetry, the beauty of each word uttered in silence each word be it sliding in the snow and nesting in the

snowflakes

be it in the rustling of the leaves in the tropical sun of our islands

be it anywhere, the sound of each word like a hush from someone who is far away and yet so near in the touch of your sighs

ahh. poetry, the infection of your sound and rhythm

filling us softly with clouds and stars and moon and
sun

upon the loneliness of our plains and mountains

like a wind, a very cool wind inside our hearts.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Being Extrasensitive The Places Around You...

I SEE sparrows gathering little pieces of leaves and light husks
for the building of their nests

it is time for laying eggs this summer
when the winds are a little bit colder

i see leaves falling the trees getting bald becoming like new fingers under the sky

i see grass spreading slowly turning brown like muscovado sugar

i see mountains where clouds hang like smoke from pipes
of old men waiting still on there
veranda

i see roads where old cars pass leaving an eddy
of dusts slowly settling down again like a light brown mantle of the breakfast
table

you should have seen me how foolishly have i waited for you in this old house
where we first met
many years ago

you should have felt how a poem like this can be written

because waiting can be an agony and without being extra sensitive to all that i see beyond all these longings the horizon over there the mountains and grass and roads running without ending and eddies of dust of old cars that conk and honk and winds that manipulate the helplessness of leaves as cold as feelings of being ruthlessly abandoned

without all these life could have long surrendered could have long ceased like a calendar
on the last day of Christmas

RIC S. BASTASA
About Being Ordinary

There is nothing
Exceptional,
Nothing special
With me,

I am just ordinary

In decency, in status,
I am what you call
the average man,
Of no special rank
Of lesser significance

I am found
In the most common
Places, undistinguished
in the most common men
in the market, in the mall,
in the park, in the beach,
in the streets, in the church,
in anywhere in everywhere

I am what you see
As plain, the usual
The most customary
that you meet &
easily forget

I am the Normal person that you Shake hands with,
whose name
does not linger
long enough in your mind

I live in the many
I am the numerous
I breathe the common Air
I drink the water
For everyone
I smell like the Sweat of the rest
I look like everyone
Because I am the average
Because I am the ordinary

But without me
You will never be Special

In truth it is us
The common ones
In this whole world
The background
These ordinary Occurrences and Resemblances

That make you
Exist,

We, the average,
We, the people of this world
We are the ordinary
And you cannot Disregard us,

We are the many,
And we can always
Disregard you
If we really want to

we make you
and we can always unmake you

mister special..

RIC S. BASTASA
About Bob

when you stole father's house we did not mind
nothing will be lost you just took your ride gallop in the air and then when the excitement was over you returned it somehow without questions
we accepted the self that you are now you are the summit of your success

perhaps that ride of the horse gave you that feeling that you are bound for the greatness in the clouds where you now live

we never regret you thief
you stole the dreams and lived it

that horse died dreams don't

RIC S. BASTASA
About Cassandra...

'She evokes the same awe, horror and pity as do schizophrenics', an observer has noted, 'who often combine deep, true insight with utter helplessness, and who retreat into madness.'

facing the stones that rise into figures of her own horror she goes outside and asks for the help of someone who must believe her there is no one and that is the main agony of her days turning instantly into nights.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Dean And David

two best of the minds in the university
taken away by the darkness of the state

cruelty to political beliefs intolerance to a different view that is what happens

they were brothers sons of a judge of the town their father is a prosecutor

Dean was buried on the shallow part of the bank of the Saluyong River

David was kidnapped in Sapang Dalaga and disappeared forever the body not found

The fingers of justice point to the state as culprit yet the case was dismissed for lack of evidence

Now, my friend
this happened to a family with means and power

You? Son of a fisherman Your mother is a laundrywoman what right has you to voice out the shortcomings of this wickedness?

I, who, for the long years of study has done nothing, except to kowtow call me a coward remind me that i may die a thousand deaths but i am already tired to be blamed again for the death of more brothers in the field in the struggle in this revolution that arrives at nowhere

Fruitless i say.
I prefer this silence in my poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Eddie...

ed, you are 51,
and back to corporate life, and i say, that is better now, that go self-employed,
on a business that sometimes fail,
i mean, with corporate lives, busy like a salesman, hopping from one place to another, sleeping in different motels with your pen and ledger and sending reports through your laptops,
the sin of self-pity and idleness cannot be there that is what i mean, i do not mean those naked ladies dancing on poles those margaritas and bloody mary 's,
the sin of uselessness,
the way others have quit marking boundaries and forgetting about maps and directions.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Emily.....

Emily is beautiful.
it is not her dress,
ever, it is not her
eyes
either, not even her
gnarled hands,
her body is bent,
is it not definitely the source of her beauty that we admire
for years
and centuries, even when she was gone,

oh, i tell you

it was her decency
her propriety throughout her life,

oh, she was in pain
in all those restraints,

her cleanliness of spirit...
yes, definitely,

definitely...

RIC S. BASTASA
About Every Morning Writings....

so many things need to be written
every morning
you know all about them and i do not have to even tell you that all these are more about sorrow

do i have to ask you what happens to me when i do not write them?

i am trying to fathom your silence we have been there with all our fears

i do not have to tell you more and if i were to tell you about all these must i tell you what shall happen about us?

the future is mean
the skies are cloudy dark with the the warning of rain shall i tell more about us?

forgive me
for i am tired fed up but life's empty promises hungry for more
failures
that serve as food
in our everyday
table.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Grandmother...

at 90
grandma was left alone
sometime in 1970
she lost her mind
walked down the stairs of the house and fell on the big rattan basket fit for the coconuts
when she died there was a grand funeral
her niche was covered by
daisies
her picture when she was young was best
the neighborhood was so impressed

RIC S. BASTASA
About Him....

he never danced
even when he was younger then though he wanted to
really
but all his feet are bound he cannot speak fully well and demonstrate his points through his arms

and hands
because all of him is bound chained

his neck has a rope that if he objects shall be tightened

do not think that he has bad manners when he screams upon hearing the sounds of iron chains dragging a body even in a dream

do not speak of ropes to him he will run away

you were not there when he died when the final prayers were said

RIC S. BASTASA
About How Love Cures A Broken Heart

Sometimes you lose yourself In the middle of a Talk with friends who wish To come to your Succor

They’d say they are concerned And show their love on that drink And stories about other people's lives As examples of bitterness turning Otherwise
About how love cures a broken heart
About how one must rise to a fall And be whole again Courageous to face the storm and The usual trials

You oblige with attentive listening But for how long? you measure it With the cups of coffee, saucers of Peanuts, beef loaves, barbecue sticks, And those long-necked bottles of gin And slices of lemons and pinches of salt

And then all of them are drunk except you Who still thinks Sober still, clear as cellophane bag, You begin to travel alone in your thoughts Far far away
Trying to reach still the one you love But who never loves you still.

RIC S. BASTASA
i have discarded the stair. It has been a long time.
No stairs then, and no stairs ever.
this is a flat world.
mountains are
but illusions.
seas are realities
flat as flat as flat.
so there is an edge.
something to end.
an end to darkness.
an end to dawn.
for this is the essence of being flat and straight.
an edge, a cliff, a
stop.

and this is where we take our rest.
overlooking beyond
us. we imagine.
they too are watching.
eager, excited about how we are.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Jaclyn....

what you did jaclyn
was perfect

you rushed your hunger with fried fish balls
fitting all
inside your mouth as though
there is no
more tomorrow

under the rain
your hair was wet
all over
yet there was no trembling

no one
notices the tears
flowing

you look at the
world
tumbling down

your house in pieces
a jigsaw

which your children will never know how to put back

the big flood has
come
everything is carried
away
somehow, the rest of the people never see...

RIC S. BASTASA
About Joy And Beauty

the ugly creatures come crawling beneath our feet
we feel
their tiny hundred hands above the skins
of our existence
we are tickled for a time and then we shoo them away we used to feed them but we change
too
we are what we are
despite
we are the attempts about why joy and beauty must be we choose
and hold....

RIC S. BASTASA
About Lady Luck

last night
when the hours begin to bore all of us in our heads like worms i told my students about Lady Luck, oh
she is beautiful and scented and soft skinned and black haired with eyes as clear as a pond and hands as comforting as the voice of mother
that when she comes she enters the door of your house without knocking and proceeds to your room to bring you
the big news of your life and she hands you success and money and fame even honor and a good name

and they were all amazed their mouths wide gaping and asking for more about her

Lady Luck
and they all love her and all the boring hours went away like hot water seeping on the dusty carpet of the room what they do not know is this:

i never like her and she never like me too and that i once told her go away i do not need you and i cannot love you

my heart is heavy of course paddling my way towards an island a castle separated by a moat using my own hands
my own
faith.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Last Night

last night
another lie was born behind a blank wall
some words escape from the heart

you believe it
as i pretend again
about who i am

the point is
you love what i say
and you keep on believing as i kiss you
as i hold your body unto mine as i pour
the liquid being that
i am

i guess life is like that
to love
lies assume no responsibility
for love
keeps on believing what is not true it is the the sweetness of desire that keeps on hugging

till then
when we meet again
my eyes shall speak
to your eyes
my mouth is shut.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Last Night

the boat was small the glass window is round like an eyeball
looking out to the vast sea

it is dark

the black shark is a shadow inside the dark
blueness of the night water

there is a storm

a man stands waiting for what comes next he must jump
to the water
if needs be the big eye of the fish stares at him

with fury

that night
they were eye to eye and then the fish
passes away
opposite the boat's
direction

RIC S. BASTASA
About Last Night...

i've seen love
it is beautiful

my whole life
soon revolves around it,

it goes around me
and i am carried away

like a dream

it is so beautiful
i do not wish to
wake up,

it stops

i fall out
i wake up

but i am not crying anymore

i know love
it moves away

i cannot stop it from leaving

i stand up
and too
walk away
just like love
itself

i've seen love
as a bird flying away from me i walk the road
under those trees

i have no complaint
it's been that way

i've learned to live love
along the road
on a sunny day

it was about
last night

i still think about it miles away
today

i've known love
and that is enough for me i don't keep it

it goes away

i write about love
just that way.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Last Night.....

i finally went to bed at 1: 30 a.m. and when i undress myself as i usually do, when i turned off the light you turned it on
in a little while you while naked went up bed and walked towards the door opened it and then closed it again as though darkness
when the lights were turned off again was a big mouth eating the whole of your naked body
and then
gone

i wished i were asleep.
but it wasn't because the following morning the whole room was as silent as clothes on the floor without a body.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Li Po In Today's Featured Poem

it is indeed a beautiful view for Li Po

beside a cloud fronting a mountain

staring at each other without tiring

what a beauty and i ask myself why and finally i get this answer from my heart it says it is beautiful because of his own loneliness.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Lies

Because the buses were stopped in front of the railing because the dolls in the lighted shop windows gesticulated because the girl with the bicycle lingered outside the drugstore because the carpenter broke the glass door of the beer hall because the child was alone in the elevator with a stolen pencil because the dogs had abandoned the seaside villas because the rusty grater had been covered over by nettles because the sky was ashen with a red fish because the horse on the mountain was more alone than the star because these and those both were hunted because of this, only because of this, I told you lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Love Untold

there is something beautiful in its being kept like a secret

it glows like a firefly at night and its warmth is felt by the coldness against the dark sky

the tree so indifferent is sleeping.

RIC S. BASTASA
the last day was crucial it was excruciating, i saw papa kicked mama
and mama fell down the
path
she was moving out from home she could not take him anymore everything was over practically, , ,

the dogs barked
hating papa
they perhaps thought he was a total stranger in his own house
and they do not recognize him as their master anymore...

i walked away from home on that crucial day i did not want to know what happened after

i heard papa died in all pain

you told me that there was that inevitable conclusion that papa never loved mama despite their five children and 50 years...

i never believed you
i decided never to believe you i believed that face in the mirror half is papa's the other half is mama's how can there be two of them in me if they never really loved each other? they were sick and tired those were the reasons they forgot
that was the cause...

RIC S. BASTASA
About Manny...

Manny does not remember as a poet when he left this small town 24 years ago because he felt so lost and he is looking for what self he thinks he had,

i was then a budding word, my petals are ugly and my stem is a worm the roots crawl like an invented monster what he thinks i was was that i was a monk without a beard a non-believer of the bishop and a critic of Lauritz he never bothered to look at my room as i have kept it like a pigsty it smells like hell and all he thinks is that heaven is here

RIC S. BASTASA
this is all about me my name is Handa Awit it means Ready Sing
it is a request
but it can be a command for people to sing
for us
for everyone to stop talking
and sing
there is something in the song that makes us joyous even in grief the song will always be uplifting
a song of love
a praise for God
a song for unity
a song for liberty

my hair is black and long and is blown by the winds of change it is only one of my eyes that see for one is closed in
a dream
my thick lips open for this song
of freedom
not from the bondage of war for there is none but from the bondage of our worries away from the land of depression the cities of noise the bumpy roads of our differences
i am brown like the earth i am the shade of the west and the east my name is an invitation for us to sing
a song of love
of freedom of harmony About Money

you know that already money is a good slave but definitely a cruel master and those that hold money hold power and that sex is only an additive while security is only the side effect of money.

RIC S. BASTASA
About My Concealed Feelings In Words

there is something
i like about
words

you who never love me you who never expect that i can
love you

i draw birds on the air and you listen
they hover on your hair and you glisten

i put stars on my tongue and they twinkle
and you are amazed by the light that i emit

you never notice how huge love can be
as huge as a cruise ship beside a port
where passengers embark without you spotting me in red.

RIC S. BASTASA
About My Wife

what i lack she fills it and when she's full with what i lack she comes back and gives me that smile that reminds me of a flower everlasting a life eternal a love that stays put even when the floors are trembling due to that emptiness between those dirt that insert between one floor slab to another she walks carefully on those shiny floors not to disturb the shaky foundation

she keeps the word
forever in her bosom and what you can find there are only the memories
those good ones
the bad ones
long discarded into the bins
burned

she knows what must be forgiven and forgotten to keep the fires of love burning and when the fire is gone when every nook in the room is cold she hides inside my arms like some kitten to the embrace of the cat on those dark and very cold nights

RIC S. BASTASA
About Neneng.....

she is right
there is bliss
watching the rain
finishing its pour by the window
in that small house
in a far away village
away from the bustle of the city...

RIC S. BASTASA
About Nico....

his hair used to be afro

he is original and tactless

upon a square
face lies a square life no nonsense

no covers

plain is plain spade is spade no diamonds
you do not like
forever...

nothing progresses
in you actually an old car is still what you are using not much money you say
works at harrahs
as a waited still thriving on tips

bought an old house in a bad neighborhood

you promise to leave always wishing to leave but never leaving sans the capacity to really be yourself
after all those years

nothing's changed
i am glad you are still honest.....

RIC S. BASTASA
About Nothing At All

imagine an empty space your hands have nothing to hold you float and there is nothing to land a ship without sea no port visible

no anchor
no lighthouse

there is no storm
neither calm nor chaos

there is no poetry since there are no words
no thoughts
no spark
no inspiration

there is no house

there is
a vast emptiness
nothing follows.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Nothing At All (2)

imagine an empty space

your hands
have nothing to hold

you float and there is nothing
to land

a ship without
sea
no port visible
no anchor
no lighthouse

there is no storm
neither calm nor chaos

there is no
poetry since there are no
words
no thoughts
no spark
no inspiration

there is no house

there is
a vast emptiness
nothing follows.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Nothing At All, Yes.

you wake up
to find a cure to restlessness perhaps, dreams become real when you are awake
you look outside everything are shadows of trees dark, cold, abandoned, you wish to open a window but it will be much colder you go back to your room despite every blanket and pillow
the cold fearful feeling is still there you are down
you head is a floating ship without an engine the light from the ceiling hurts your skin you fear for more and you ask yourself analytically what is this all about? what is this all about?

you pause
to know later
about a delayed neurological response

'actually, it is about nothing at all' that voice is objective it speaks the truth it is inside you but it seems to be not a part of you heavy, cold, restless, -and it is all about nothing at all.

welcome to the absurd, it too is real, and those who do not have it thinks, you need someone to love.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Nothing....

we are getting older
though we decide to sleep
late at night
we still wake up early

you rub your eyes and ask 'what time is it? ' and i turn on the light look at the watch and say 'It is still 3 in the morning'

time is telling us that we have changed,
that we have been anxious for what comes next time rushes us for nothing and we have become too curious 'what for? ', we want to end time, we want to go, we want to be beyond this sense of going and leaving,

time is silent. Living inside the clock, it is indifferent, as we keep on waiting and waiting, anxiously about nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Other People’s Lives

About other people’s lives

Rizal the hero must have chewed cud And found the grass bitter, or the mongo Beans too hard for his taste. Perhaps he Did not know the exact number of His buttons when he walked towards Luneta and face his accusers And meet his death. Perhaps he did not Like the light from his lamp when He wrote a poem. I do not really know More about his persona life.
Did he like cheese? Did he take a deep Breath and spit on the dogs along The road? He poured no tears Onto the frying pan of this Old country. They wrote a lot After two or more centuries
And there were so many stories Not really rumors but I thank God I am no great hero.
No one writes about me
And I think I am more understood In my own privacy.

I do not really mind about Other people’s lives
I do not peep on my Neighbor’s windows.
I move my own hip
And drive my own car Slowly away from those Crowd on the parking lots Of the mall. I like to stay On the side of an abandoned house And just sit there for a while
For no reason at all.
Winds do not frisk trees I guess.
Hairs fell wherever they want.
I touch my own cheek
And bite my own lips.
God! I like it when I am here
And no one minds me.
And I mind no one too.
I like the bridge Long enough for my Hand to travel on my nose.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Our Family

my sister is asking me why we cannot be
for once
united for a certain cause why we cannot make a single stand on a certain issue

why we can't live
in harmony with
each other
all five of us like one solid and loving family

i am not a fool to think that this world is and will always be in harmony with
one another

countries living in peace without any one oppressing another
or feeling that way

i tell her that this is just the reality of heaven and earth

of clay and sand
of stones and dust

that the influx of change will always be there and that the feet of humanity always tiptoe to keep a certain balance to eternity

not content with that i showed her my hand with five fingers of different sizes
always never
the same
and cannot point to one unified
direction

she is always loquacious and discontented

but i do not really want to be bothered again

now i like
my mouth
shut.

RIC S. BASTASA
that the younger daughter of Xenon recently has been caught on video sex scandal of some sort that made her drug addict father crazy and that the mother was so embarrassed that she does not want to go to the market anymore that whole week Nena closed her door and sobbed i am still wondering if i really like that fact, all i can say is this:

we are not supposed to intrude into the bedroom of other people it is none of our business and so we must shift the topic:

let us talk about how we can move on with our lives it is 2012, and there is this Mangyan calendar and it will be weird and hmmm, not really that interesting end of the world again? shift topic, let us talk about money instead let us talk about ourselves how about it?

About Pilar 2....

“I
soared to the highest levels of success...

only to find
when I got there
that I was empty,

did not know who I was,
and even despaired
of life itself.

I really did not have
a
face
of
my own.”

RIC S. BASTASA
“Feel.
Fill everything to the brim.
Feel every nice feeling.
Even loneliness because it has a purpose.

If you must cry,
let the tears flow.
That’s what they’re there for—when emotions overpower.
Cherish things,
people,
relationships.

Nothing lasts forever.”

RIC S. BASTASA
About Pilar's Daughter....

“I asked her
why she wanted
to marry a blind man who couldn’t even see her.

She replied: ‘Mama, you had lots of men in your life, but they couldn’t see you.’”

RIC S. BASTASA
About Returning To The Rivers Of My Youth

i do not wait for a time when i return to a place only to watch a sunrise and tell myself that i am enjoying it to the full recalling the first time i saw it

there is a time when i return to the river
of my youth
where i will be naked jump to it
and feel the coldness of its water and i will tell myself that it is all too refreshing....

not to see you again because i know that you will never be there

RIC S. BASTASA
About Some Wars That Still Continue Raging In Some Islands

when you asked me, father, on how to make this diversity work for all of us who had already become impatient about peace, i said it must be because the tower of babel still exists here in one of our islands where people still rely on words to thresh out their problems and it is the same words that pulled the trigger that opened the barrel of the sonnamagans in all of us, there is a careful way of using words, but first that tower of babel must be bombed pulverized as you said it before because by doing so what leaves us to really work to understand is the lesson of a destruction the crumpled stones, the remaining dusts that settles in our foreheads the open space left after can and will always be our best teacher when we all have nothing that can be a good beginning.

RIC S. BASTASA
About That Jealous Dog

yes, possibly she could be the reincarnation
of my ex-girlfriend
who died
with a broken heart
because...

ah, time was so
cruel.

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Ash From Yuri N., She Writes It

I once knew
a lady at our church
who played the piano -
Her name was Naomi...
she was quiet,
maybe insignificant...
but I knew her
(only from church) ...
when I heard one Sunday
that she had died
and had been buried
without me knowing,
I grieved for days....
that was 8 years ago...
I still sometimes
think of her,
thinking that,
in some way
she enriched my life -
I cannot remember
her piano-playing,
but I still grieve
nevertheless....

RIC S. BASTASA
mama once told me about a woman, so beautiful and holy that she has many tiny angels on her hair a halo on top of her a rose for her lips and kind eyes like hazy moon on her face

mama once told me that there is heaven and all the good people are all there that all the good food are there all the things that i love all the toys
and friends

i was a naughty child and i never believed her when i have grown up and when all the problems came like bunches of sour grapes when all the trials arrived in batches all those that i thought i cannot endure anymore that was the time when i remember mama and i realized that there is a need to believe her about a beautiful woman not only with angels on her hair but will all the stars in heaven her connections to heaven and powers to put all the good people in there it is not the authentic belief but it is the need to believe because without it, what would the future be?

my hands for the meantime need to hold upon these holy rails
so i may not fall and die
About The Bird With A Bleeding Heart

I was the one who taught you once about the bird with a bleeding heart.
How it raised its head, opened its eyes and stared to places beyond its reach.
It has kept its dignity in the middle of its pains.
It managed to fly back to its nest and still sang its usual songs in the morning.
At night, like you, it did not sleep, and had a good look at the stars.

It was you who was seated at the last row at the last column of the chairs of the room.
Unlike the rest, it was you who listened most.
You wore a thick, heavy tinted sunglass, and you stared to every movement Of my eyes and lips as i was telling the story.

I had a good glance at you. You shed a tear and then you hid it in your hand.

Time flew. Swiftly.

I received the letter that you sent. You thanked me.
There is no return address, but let me tell you now as you read this poem.

This is our journey are no longer afraid to cry.

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Boy

the door was locked and the boy has nowhere to go except the closet filled with
clothes
the tongue of the devil came and devoured them all clothes and all his screams faded like
sunset

RIC S. BASTASA
Some are not really causes
But just symptoms
And we misdiagnose
A sickness
For a symptom
Of the real sickness

The cause
And the effect
Are often interchanged

For instance
Is poverty the cause
Of crime
Or is poverty
Only the symptom
Of it?

For instance
Is ignorance
The cause of poverty
Or is it simply
An effect of poverty?

Or is poverty
Nothing but an effect
Of ignorance?

Or is poverty
Just an effect
Of an oppression
Of the rich
Taking much
From the poor
Who gets poorer
Everyday
Because there
Are no reforms
Coming
To solve
His poverty
His ignorance
His having to commit a crime
To survive
His poverty
His ignorance
His being a crime
Of
Society itself
who never cared
And wanted him
Who never Instituted the much
Promised reforms?

And so you doubt
The cause and effect
The effect from cause
And if you did not mind so Well
They may always be Interchanged
And mistaken
For the symptoms
The conditions
That always
Are
there deceiving.

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Father

the father fell down from the second floor broke a leg and tore his ankle crawling his way in the middle of the suffocating smoke he heard the cries of the boy
and yet the cruel tongues of the devil snatched away what it thinks belongs to it on such a horror there is no peace now the ash still want to tell the stories of the tragedy

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Last Time

the first time is always nice it cannot even be forgotten it continues to drip inside the mind it does not cease
even if you stop it even if you wish it were not there anymore

then i ask myself what happened to the last time? it was there before but it is nowhere to be found now i refuse to remember it it broke me
into pieces....

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Moon

While in china at night on the great wall
By a hill, there he writes about the moon His shadow his flute and his Cup of rice wine, Then he sings for a while And sleeps under a sky of stars On a blanket of soft grass,

When he immigrated
To the American city
He writes differently now
About the moon
As the companionless
wanderer

The head of a murdered man Rolling on the floor Uncontained by a sack
A moon

Or some kind of a fluorescent Truant
A silver circular corpse Infected with AIDS,
That corpuscle confusing
And ovulating

Him, spoon feeding
Her with so much longing Date-rape drug, where she howls like A bitch

To the moon in that great American City

I just like it here,
The moon is still my Moonchild
my fair lady of the night In all shining glory Above the mango tree,

In this little country..

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Mother

she feigns laughter to hide her extreme grief about the unexpected loss of the beloved wrapped in white cloth without a face
just pieces of those charred limbs

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Past Again

my elder sister when we were still studying keeps the money
as i burn the candles as offerings of my sacrifices time knows who the victors must be her irresponsibility shrinks her into a figure that we cannot respect

but for all these we speak no word
we keep the feelings retaliation is not us

for whatever happens we must remain
under the house of our respect

RIC S. BASTASA
you take pride of our country's past revolutions theirs was bloody and cost the lives of many fighters, ours was peaceful, and recent still fresh on our minds is the flying of doves letting them loose from their metal cages, and the confetti of shred secrets from those tall buildings in the city where you live the marching against tanks is simply matched with a white daisy from the hand of a child and the rosary of the bespectacled nun gotten out from the convent, you remind me about the greatness of the revolution which i have no power to object as you are the victor how many times shall i lie to you that i was never there and neither did i ever see you or your shadow marching blindly under the scorching sun?

is there any harm when we should have told the truth even without its innate elegance?

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Poem Of The Man Who Prays That God Takes Him well there was this man who sits by the door and sees the passing of the people that he knew, some peers, some classmates, and close friends the funeral line passes and he feels that he is the one missing.

someone suggests that he better commit suicide. I am shocked.

For i know he won't do it Lest he goes to hell.

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Rainbow

need i explain to you again that the rainbow is the biggest lie of the rain,
when light gets in
and when the sun reigns the rainbow
is nothing.
it is the rain that gives the sorrow and to compensate it gives you the rainbow.

i have been at its feet, the rumored pot of gold does not exist at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Rules

y they make the rules and they break them
and here you are sticking strictly to every word of the rule

varchar ight
we were drinking champagne and we talk about
you

we were all laughing

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Scissor

yes there was this scissor on the window
one night looking at the moon asking if somewhere it can cut the darkness
and allow so much light to pass through the covered walls

the bats flew feeding on some rotten star-apples the moon as usual sitting on the pond seeing its reflection undisturbed by the ripples of the fish

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Shadows

if you want to get rid of your shadow then kill light

do not reflect upon anything do not move

do not be yourself in substance be not a body but be a soul there is no shadow

when the past is murdered sometimes i ask why do you fear or hate the very part of yourself?

when you pierce it with your pointing finger there is no pain there is nothing that is pierced live in the dark where shadows are no more.

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Shoeman.....

i seldom
travel in your city

and this day
i park my car far from the shoe repair shop

where i bring a pair of old and worn shoes for repair

i told the shoe-man this is a white shoe
make it black

and this is leather make it appear alive

like the skin of a crocodile

meanwhile the tv shop has turned into an eatery

the pharmacy
has become another
mall for old and overworked people

there are only two of them now
one is always coughing and the other is obese

the third whom

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
i met a long time ago is already dead

the old man slouched
and i remember
the hoe

the city has changed
people meet me
and they do not remember

on the same
odd way
i don't remember
where i
was

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Sparrow In The Park

that there was once a sparrow
in the park
Papa and I never had the time seeing it we did not spend time
together
sitting in the park viewing a sparrow in front of us i never had the chance asking him about the sparrow neither did he.

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Stars....

when you become a star
you cannot refuse what stars do you shine

the trees become hands wanting to have you you glow in the middle of a dark night the fireflies worship you but you too must know that stars do not really last that long some fall

and sad people wish upon them

and then
they are gone...

RIC S. BASTASA
definitely unprepared to understand what crimes other people commit without regrets and too horrible to accept those that came and took their seats did not stay long for what they see and hear is that men are still beasts preying on their own kind savoring the taste of salty blood and bland flesh
delighting upon the misfortune of others upon their own deaths and vanishment...

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Tears

tears from your eyes and if i be poetic enough to calm you and lessen your pain
i shall tell you that tears are pearls
and that your sob is a song of a woman of beauty
but you cut me short and touch my lips
with your hands and you tell me with the truth of your silence you are mourning
and my poems are not of help.

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Two Of Us.....

when we talk
we do not really look at each other in the eye

we have so many places to hide and we choose the words to conceal what we really want to say and mean

i try once to see you straight in a moment
a flash of having to be candid
even for once

you evade my stare feeling the stab
of truth
and i respect the way you avoid the
pain

somehow we are two islands set apart by the deep water and lovelier
still
between the rush of the surge
the storm

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Two Of You

the two of you
were too close

in a conspiracy you rob so many of what they have

and worked for those days were the laughing days

the two of you
were too close

there is no space for something right

and just and kind
and compassionate

we were so hurt
we do not know where to get in and take revenge and bring to us justice

the two of you
were too closed like

aluminum cover to an aluminum kettle

we were the dirt clinging to your bottoms

you had nice stuff inside and we have no way to get in and eat and live and be happy ourselves

we were helpless because the two of you are closed doors and we are the unwanted intruders and you were laughing and making merry over what you have taken from us

we have no other resort but to pray for fire and there...on that particular day the two of you burned each other.

justice came with a sword and fire and brimstone

if only you had the chance to look at yourselves now you would not have done what you did to us.

RIC S. BASTASA
About The Winner

he was once the winner and they listened to him every word he says becomes their new laws and he amazed them with all his wits and they all liked him

he made a name for himself and for this he forgot his real name the one given by this mother when he was born

and for that new name he invented
all the stories about himself how he was as a warrior who slayed the dragon in their heads how he saved the princess from the clutches of the beast how he built his castle in the clouds where they can all be happy and all his stories were recorded as truths and they all believed them until finally he lost his face

and hands and he kept on looking for all of these in the sands of the desert under the orange moon

and then one day he found his pair of eyes and opened it before all of them he told the truth that all his stories are lies that he who is now making a speech before them is no longer himself he is a lie. and that is the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Things That Tumble

at the table spoons and forks, knives things tumble down
lips trembling
sad stories and handkerchiefs
tears
you know what i mean
there are three of us
one is an outpouring of
rain
we choose the sunshine and clouds
we look at each other
you know what i mean
we understand now there is too much about these things that tumble falling earth
ascending sun
and crumbling cliffs
what do we get?

what do we have to do with
all these things that tumble down?

we help ourselves with what we have we move on with all that we keep memories and the will determination and speed there are two of us now the rain stops
it begins to understand
we choose
sunshine and clouds and
days.
About This Stuff Called Writing

Upon reading the poem about a childless woman My friend Sol wrote

I am truly sorry for reading About such a delicate issue

And she emails

“Did you write it because I have offended you and the childless woman?”

“I am truly sorry”

I e-mail her back; there was no offense, as it was not really about us

The little boy who died a long time ago was not

About us,

I was surprised
That poem
Was not meant to be a certain Apathy

it is not about us
it is not us

it is about them

Such is a poem is meant for a certain kind of empathy it is no apathetic

it is not about a sickness into death it is not about a 'mind-you-own-business' but it was meant to be

'we-feel-what- you -all -feel'

It is empathy
it is reincarnation to the bodies Of other people it is going into life
into the lives of other people into life
into salvation

a life in those moving fingers of a new born baby the same moving fingers that give you the hint of of life to a hit-and-run victim a while ago comatose

a life a breath a hush for persons
not just people

(specially for those whom we love much that if they die
we want to die
with them
and we keep saying without them life has no meaning at all)

And we Become them
the childless couple that was not us the hit-and-run-victim that layed long unnamed in the morgue that baby that was blue all over because of a congenital heart defect they were buried

and we say we were buried with them we have duties and obligations though as we watch and stand for those who remain here empathy

that is empathy

Every part of them: the nose, the eyes, the brain, the trachea, The butt, the hands, every nerve every vein every corpuscle

we become them
we join in their mission

We become the air that they breathe We breathe
We penetrate the other completely
to

Every part of them: the nose, the eyes, the brain, the trachea,
The butt, the hands, every nerve every vein every corpuscle

The apology then was wrongly worded And was wrongly sent The dog has wagged its tail To the wrong master the dog has barked to the wrong tree

Hence I reject the apology because the tragedy and the sorrow are not about us it is them

we only become them because we empathize we allow ourselves to be a part of them in the process

Or whatever excuse
It was not for us
It was for them

We are merely the wires Through which The unseen electrons pass an in the process we generate light and power For others
For this dark world

The danger lurks when for lack Of understanding about the mechanics

Of apathy and its distinction with empathy between us making a living and between them that we try to appease

You touch us in careless passion And for lack of understanding about compassion You are shaken
Unnecessarily

And who knows
In due time
You too shall become
Us

in utter exercise of empathy

And that would be enough i know there is something that you did not understand life shall tell in the process and life shall tell you all about it before everything is ended.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Those Metaphors

i know that that black bird was but about the door
i have finally given up the search i have begun the climbing of the stairs the hammering of the nails i love the silence more than anything
else.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Two Ants Transformed Into Fireflies

what happened last night was beautiful i ask you if i can write about it you say no, it is so beautiful and must remain private but i have decided to write it anyhow in some metaphors: it was about two ants transformed by love into fireflies.

RIC S. BASTASA
About U And I.

i know what you are because of what i am.
when people ask me
i tell them what they want to hear. you know me for what i am because of what you are.
when people ask you who i am you tell them what i am not.
we are into this predicament of self-denial it is not that we want to take ourselves from shame we are not afraid
how can we be fear itself?
i remember fully well i told her that you are a wall and she believes me.
i can see through you
through me.
and what i see need not be spoken or the Sphinx shall be broken.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Us

there are rains on the days of our lives and we try to grow flowers on our fertile grounds the weeds are there but they never outgrow what good seeds
we have put there

RIC S. BASTASA
About Us And About Them

we busy for some noble purpose for instance, i teach and you travel visiting places where you are needed, as i continue on burning the fires of students who want to learn more as i guide them where legal wisdom lies in between those wits and slides of humor where we finally meet on the serious challenges of criticisms: what society ought to be? who the leaders must be?
where progress is? what trees can do for this aging earth?
etcetera etcetera

we are angry
for those who search personal pleasures on Sundays the cock-fighters shouting at the cockpit the picnickers drunk on the beach the rumormongers enjoying the headlines of the town who are pregnant without getting married who are impoverished by their convictions they are those that thrive we are those endangered species and we are meant to perish we blame no one then as we meet again and be so silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
very tiny bit
of wisdom
from her,

she speaks
the power of
atom,

bread crumb,
dash in a long sentence,
a dropp of rain,
fragments of the poetess who kills herself at the end,

grain of sand resembling the universe
of our
humanity,

hoot, iota, jot, little,
mite, modicum,
particle,
piece,
pinch,
scrap,
shred,
speck,
trace

it is us.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Us Now

there is nothing that tickles the heart now
no word
no whisper is seductive enough to make my thoughts dance this is part of my autumn when leaves of myself float on the river full of moss and run over by fleeting creatures

RIC S. BASTASA
About Us Who Remained Here....

when first thrown away
they call it
seed,

there are rocky fields where most of the seeds struggle for soil
& water
to grow
buds and mature as branches

or be successful trees
into forests,

so many have found themselves as utter failures in the form of sand

so many are dead, wilting even before
leafing

there are others who evolve well despite the harsh conditions lucky for those who imagine wings and turn into birds

of freedom

but others do not have that fate the stars are against them you have seen now so many pebbles scattered on those twisted paths

others of course have turned themselves into stones
the mostly preferred state of being strong or mistaken to be stoic into rocky formations ready to be fields of cradles again for those that come recently and baptized with the same name seed.

we who remain here have learned to write about all these sad phenomena

we have fortified ourselves as slates of rocks with rain as pens.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is no argument about love

i love you and
you love me
it was as mutual
as a pineapple sliced
in half

but time has its own choices for us
and we were left speechless about what it gave us

we say, after the parting, after the marriage to
another,
'we were not meant for
each other'

and we cried, we wish it were us, we wish it was different from reality
but

time is the judge of all our fates
it hands to us the map of destiny
we have become its finished products

we like to turn back time like a folded linen
we cannot
we have moved on separately with each others' lives

i have one wish i want to be born again
with you

begging mercy
kissing the feet of time that next time
somewhere
it shall be us again

RIC S. BASTASA
About Us......

our sensitivities grow in a glass house hardened
by incoming stones

who is afraid of the pieces of broken glasses?
our wrists are experienced sufferers
they heal themselves in due time
we know what the word endure means
by heart
we are devoured somehow but still whole
in those vomits
do they find us bitter pills?
don't they know that we are the cure of those unreasonable fears?

those stones turn out to be marshmallows getting more delicious looking at the flames
on those cold evenings beneath the darkness in the forest

we eats stones
no longer afraid of indigestion our guts have kept the morning glories glorious gods
with hardened walls

RIC S. BASTASA
About Utako (An Excerpt)

Utako had not heard until after the end of the war that the child had died in the care of the person who took it.

'But-do you think the child really died? ' Utako said.

Jiro looked away.

'Sometimes I think that it might still be alive, you know-possibly.'

'I'm certain that it's dead.'

'If it's alive, do you think if I met it somewhere-do you think I would know? '

RIC S. BASTASA
About What I Am

i know
who i am
in fact i hide who i am and what i am since i also know
why

i create what
i am

i make many
i's
to suit your style

RIC S. BASTASA
About You

a dream, it is about you we are so near, and your are facing me you smile but i did not i thought i have already forgiven you

and then i left the scene i am happy somewhere else
without you

RIC S. BASTASA
About You (How Disappointed I Was)

what happened to me you never predicted it was like the story of the ugly duckling

despite the weakness of my past
the hardness of the stones (the unfeeling body)
and the shortness of the vision of that horizon
i have remained
more than what i am

i must have disappointed you who never think that success may come to someone without the royalty of the lines of the palms

it is i
who is severely disappointed for you never changed

your mind has always been a door closed

your heart
a stone house without windows

RIC S. BASTASA
About You About Regrets

how can life be a pool
of regret
when it has long been designed to flow freely into that universal sea
of love

believe in this we are meant to be what we are every atom has a reason every sigh
has a direction

RIC S. BASTASA
to please you and your old and rich American 'lover', i decided to take you to Tabancura Cafe where indigenous paintings are on exhibit on that day

first we had coffee and some sticky rice delicacies and ripe mangoes then the American (was his named Ted for Teddy Bear?) begins to view indigenous art, from softdrink tansans to plastic straw and drift wood and used tissue, and from which he said ' Honey, we have to go now, we will be late for the show in Dakak.

This is garbage! '

Then both of you are gone and i am left out alone again in the art works of my countrymen.

I sleep early that time after drinking beer and i dream about myself swimming in the river of garbage with Manny Villar.
Weird.

i wake up profusely sweating goes to the ref got a glass of cold water and drink
take a deep breath and walk my way to bed again i pray that i may not dream again about garbage

that i may not even remember about both of you (garbage too you, whose dream is it to go away from the poverty of this country)
that i may not remember this political mess of lies and deception and more corruption to come after this year's election.

RIC S. BASTASA
About You And Restraint....

it's the mystery in you

that makes me

somber, or perhaps dumber

i think more of you and i ask so many questions all my answers are wrong

i go into the details letter by letter in my book i utter the syllables hoping that in each sound i can find an exit to this useless mess i stare at you

in those moments of my chaos

my thoughts are wild

i have lost control and restraint buries itself on the ground that it dug for days i have not traveled so well in the past

trying to explain why this hour is sad

i dream

that i have another face

another body

i see yours

limpid on the floor

calling my name

i did not say a word

as i look for the best explanation

why we cannot be

one in the heat in bed.

there is a fire that consumes

me

i am praying for a storm

i am wishing for

rain

i am a ship without anchor there is no shore

in view
i look at you

i am a meteor in the sky shooting myself

in space

lost with so much distance.

RIC S. BASTASA
About You Last Night....

i am missing you
For you have accustomed me to a morning conversation with coffee and some bread on the table
facing the sea
sunrise lighting our faces unkempt hair salty skin
parched lips
over-kissed the night dreams outpouring
bliss, so much bliss is killing me
and you are there
so silent still this silence that are like hands caressing my body my heart is a sleepy dog resting on the soft white rug beside the door of our room...

RIC S. BASTASA
About You My Friend

you do not steal from me because whatever you take when you are caught i am always willing to give

do steal away from me again and i will give it to you again and again for in truth
i own nothing
and i am not taking anything away from here
for in truth
we own everything and you have the right to take what i think i have inside my hand

i will always remember the Bishop who gave the chandeliers to Jean Valjean who bought his soul
with silver
from God.

RIC S. BASTASA
About You Then

YOU WERE a pebble
on the road
it was muddy
and it rained, and i picked you from that unspeakable
mess, and i kept you warm in
my hand
even talked to you
and i polished you
and people
adored you until you transformed into a star
and you acquired
light
and speed and you found your place in the skies
at night you shine like any other
star
you are so distant
and untouchable
my palms miss you
my eyes can only have the look
my heart
can only have that lightness
when you were once
a pebble
inside my
hold.

RIC S. BASTASA
About You, About Pain, A Memory...

who can change you? Nobody.
There is a need for you to change
They tell you
Like you were a child and like a child You do not listen
You have behaved like a moth Wishing fire that you do not know shall burn your body They grieve upon this But As Fate always have its way of winning over Everyone You are finally gone
There will be a deafening silence for a while But the flock has to move on for a greener pasture
You are a memory
A footprint that we all leave in a sand dune
The winds from the desert comes at night Blows you away
As they all leave for another land To draw upon their palms
A map
for Another Beginning

They shall remember you as a sad story
And they respect you for all that you have given them
And then
They must forget.....

RIC S. BASTASA
About Your Day

go to the sea
listen to the waves focus on the white foams follow the sea gulls ride a boat see the colors of the fish feed them with your hands and feel
agility, and know how the corals
breathe

inside the office
you are surrounded by venetian blinds your light is the bulb your sound is the beeping phones you are beside a heap of papers pile of books

your partner is the personal computer you chat at noon and wish for sleep too soon inside sleep

run as fast as you can chase your dreams
catch them
all.

RIC S. BASTASA
About Your Denial....

Do not think that i am speaking of death your view must be limited like an afternoon without hope for light

You have pocketed a smile as though you are preparing for your usual cry

Do not think that life has gone awry like the glass that spilled the milk rolled on the table and fell on the floor the sound of shattered pieces of glass that feeling of stain that silence that expects the reverse of what actually happened

Come to think of it
this is just a path where everyone passes they look forward for something else like an open door that leads to a garden a pool
a line of coconut trees another view of the sea a net full of fish

Come to think about it again i am talking about life that remains life forever
you know it well
as it is written in the main page of your heart you feel its song

you have read each word and your soul has mastered it well

But for the meantime that you are lost in the middle of everyday affairs you pretend that you have forgotten it afraid of the next door that opens you settle for a chair....

too tired i must have slept by the window of the car.
   it passed a bridge

i looked down and found an abyss where i fell and spill out my essence.

i have a pair of hands like you it carries some flowers and seeds and i let all of them go i cut off a pair of wings in my mind and i let the body retreat to its vulnerabilities of static pains

i must have dreamed that long when the car arrives in the house.

   same dogs are excited about my arrival. same wagging tails.

   there is this perfect timing of opening the garage door where the car slides without a space of doubt when it says it has found a home.

   too tired yet how can i forget? how can i not cry if ever i decide to throw all these things away

   just like that
   just like that

   where is the difference between feeling and numbness?
   where is this bridge between a you and me?

   i cannot find the way where your heart is nestled.
   above the cliffs, the clouds are silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
Abraham

abraham hears the voice of God to bring Isaac on top of Mt. Moriah there he must kill his own son his offering to the Lord, His God the argument begins, why his God must order him to kill his own son?
is this killing this murder not a sin?
does God make man to commit sin?
If One orders him to kill his own son God? Is God in this not a murderer too?
the steps to Moriah are difficult thoughs yet Abraham, Abraham, do you Love your God as God and none other? kill your own son, Love of God?
you know how it ended. You know how Abraham became the Father of Faith.

RIC S. BASTASA
Absence

in the boat
we were decent people on a party
this cruise leaving for the Caribbean
at night
the grand party
begins
you drink cognac
it is a need
you always want to belong
but there is none
that you can find
in the middle of this ocean
you are always an island
you see a continent
behind you it does not always see you

you drink some more you wish
death upon a tequila on tomorrow's
sunset

RIC S. BASTASA
Absolutely Nothing

ten the drum
clothed with sheep's skin is absolutely hollow inside

it is named nothing yet

know its power for it can call enemies to war

make naked men
and women dance
for love

it is hollow
you open it
it has only air
and yet

hit it with your face and it will wake all powers of
this world

it can decide
war or peace
live or die
dance or kill.

RIC S. BASTASA
Abstain

abstaining from lust

i sit alone on the porch of the house watching the stars

taunting tempting
seducing

the moon shines and shows the beauty of her
butt

i wonder
when will this prison last this purity of the heart this hypocrisy
of my body
this drying skin
slowly
shedding off my pretensions

i shall miss you
and tonight i write this poem for you

RIC S. BASTASA
Abstraction Fo The Word Chirp....

i hear birds chirping
early morning
on those trees

clouds arrive, light spreads,
green becomes too green in the fields of
life,

i hear birds chirping
sweet to my ear
i give it priority

abstract. delet morning move out clouds from the picture double click green fields focus on life

delet birds
add volume to chirping

it is all chirping now just chirping
chirping chirping

the essence of chirp.
i have abstracted it from everything else.

RIC S. BASTASA
Absurd

the absurd lies on the surface of our skins like a rose tattoo that shirks and shrinks with time crumpled lines and fading dyes and a story that refuses to die you ask me if somehow i have obtained some meaning to my life something that i cannot say i soon tell you it is more of a growing thing that does not really show itself unless you wait till the right season comes the wind gives it a light feeling and the sun warms it a bit

RIC S. BASTASA
Absurd Continued

surprise comes like a bud and bliss comes like a red flower so dainty and beautiful but you know it well: a very short moment like a breath a sigh like a puff of whisper to the ear it is a show of life, we gather dry leaves and then burn them we clean the ashes and we wait for the grass to grow back we anticipate the coming of hope, the rain, the clouds, the sun sometimes it is all dark, we are blind, and then things, all things begin to be real, it is all the same, too much light is also blinding.

RIC S. BASTASA
Absurdity In Love

you are condemned.
those you love
will love someone else

those who love you
on the other hand
will make you vomit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Academic Life

one sometimes fear leaving an academic life seeing the world through a thick reading eyeglass sleeping with books
surfing on the net
writing treatises and too legalese
side tripping with literature and floating with poems on wild imaginations on the clouds of puff and huff

one fears that after sleeping with books
night after night
dating with the lampshade headboard
one finally loses what is more important than these prints and paragraphs

when finally she is gone dating real people that she can touch
and feel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Accademia Dei Solinghi

KANTATE IHR VOELKER HOERT

IT is her alone
Now singing
Her lonely song
As though
She is on a very High tower
On a very High mountaintop.

WHAT I admire
most is her skill
Of singing
Solitude as though
It is a common
Piece
That any maiden
Of the town
Can sing

and Sing it well.

A perfect voice
Of solitude
Singing

Alleluia
Alleluia

The God
On High
Shall come
And the Bride must Be ready
for the God-groom

She sings so Skillfully
And the mountains
And valleys and
All the people
Of the town
Listen and They cannot Tell what time
Is it because

All they do
Is listen to Her as she sings Skillfully the song of solitude

I too was sleepless
I learned the art
Of simply be Myself
of simply
Be
in solitude

Unknown
to all
She sings

Because she Is sleepy
and

She did not Believe
in the Power of solitude

In fact
what she Really
believed
In and what made
Her sing is The power
of Her song
It was
her Projection
Of solitude

Which they Really mistook

as

solitude

Her song
May be about Solitude

She was not.
she was not really

RIC S. BASTASA
Accept Now My Dear Friend

dear friend that there are days and nights yin and yang
darkness and light
open highways and dead ends that if there are daughters of Chaste there too are the daughters of Lust that if there are sons of Love too there are sons of Hate that there are mountains and plains seas and deserts prey and predator victors and victims
accept my dear friend that this world is round inside and out
rings of fire depths of trenches
do not settle for the illusion of peace and disregard the reality of war accept my friend
there are fakes and genuines morons and geniuses blacks and whites and lots of shades between them shallows and deeps tongues and toes
embrace those days of sacrifices and those other days of paradises and when you have learned all these you shall have taken wisdom in have seen life at its peaks and lows live it
the way it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Acceptability

no one's to blame for the rejection it was you who wants to get inside that door where everyone seems to be preoccupied with how they look and what others say you should not have entered in the first place, now you mix with the crowd talking about their latest gems and acquisitions, their tongues are forked and you are not prepared
for this

why did you leave the pond, your house, your garden, don't you see that there was more peace and quiet in there?

look at you, you're sick and trembling.

RIC S. BASTASA
Acceptance

each day she bleeds
there is pain
her mind is empty
there is no thought in there she waits by the door looking beyond the front road she knows no name she waits actually for no one

no one is coming and she does not know where is anywhere everyday this happens every hour is a spirit

when the day fades she does what routine requires her she goes inside closes the door behind her she eats too little recites her prayer and then sleeps this happens everyday for all the rest of her life who is doing this to her?

No one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Acceptance Of Wisdom

what i know most and i guess i have become an expert on this
is...

that i do not not really know hence i feel the need to know what i do not know

makes me wonder somehow about wonder.

and looking at the stars i fall on the floor
of grass
and pebbles.

RIC S. BASTASA
Acceptance.....

time makes you forget
yourself

sometimes you stop moving away you need a mirror

faces it and looks at your face there are so many lines you undress yourself and find our so many wrongs so much have been neglected

you wonder

and you think of the river that flows in so many winding ways accepting and taking with its body

everything

there is no regret
it is nothing but fate to just be a river to just be later nothing but a part of the sea, the ocean, to be just a part of everyone and everybody

RIC S. BASTASA
Accepting Evolution

there is this feeling that you are slimy and prickly and floating on the water like a whale and you hide back to the depths making signals if there are still other whales
out there
and yes, i could have been once a whale or was i a shark.

RIC S. BASTASA
Accepting Things Are They Are

when i was new in this place i like seeing and staring at things and think about how to make them more beautiful on the way i want them changed from my one point-of-view and so if something is so short i try stretching them even if there is pain and i always think that all things are flexible and that with a little retouching
they then fit as i see it fit.

there were storms. There were instabilities there were unnecessary silences and there were times when i was forced to keep my mouth shut and hide myself in a dark room and sleep and let time pass by like some moments that i do not like to remember that i like to throw up and then mumble and then surrender like a defeated soldier.

and then there is this subsiding there are tiny waves, gentle winds, and restive sands, and moments
of solitude

this may be nearer to an end but look, we arrive at the point to accept things as they are that changes are shaped like pointless objects and blunt as they are we do not want them sharpened because sharpness has no use at all to all these blunt happenings.

things appear and they talk and we listen.
we shake their hands. we know they are strangers. we let them in and seep like rain to our sponges.

we no longer shake our shoulders. we listen.
i do not know if i really smiled when i first confronted them. they are here. and as you tell me, i agree, i make most of what is here. This is my best form and i am showing it now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Access

sometimes when the door is closed
when everyone in the house is either
asleep
or lazy or gone somewhere fishing
i go somewhere else too walking away is a nice option could have been

not going back again but can't live alone without
them
i am a slave of affection.

RIC S. BASTASA
Accessibility Test

press ENTER

if nothing happens
i.e. you cannot log in transfer to another site

post again
press ENTER.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aches

do not laugh
i am aching, it is not just my eyes (from too much reading) it is not just my arms and legs (from too much work, and walk and your prescription for a daily exercise those weights and pumping irons) do not laugh at me you are the woman that i love

away from me
and this heartache is not funny

let us make love in cyberspace tonight 9 p.m. sharp

RIC S. BASTASA
Aches Of Mornings...

aches of mornings
nights wild and aggressive some outbursts here and there we were nowhere together the nights are as usual long and drunk and the hours run like ecstasies

boats with ports and oars plunging to an edgeless horizon trickles of light arrive on the curtain

like dripping water like what drips between us

aches of morning realizations about what wrongs are there we make and cannot unmake but as usual we will always be on the learning
to forget

that is the only way to go head high, secrets kept dress the code and dwell on a new abode.

RIC S. BASTASA
Achilles

his body trembles
when her tongue
licks his heel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aching Eyes

aching eyes
bleeding heart trembling hands
a storm within entangled hair
wind sweeping
pain in my ass
scarred skin
another wound
blues and bruises

sands of silence
tower of ivory
ebony spaces
starless skies
faded moon

shattered pieces
of self
hands that want to grasp
every broken
word, stuttering
existence

my friend
what writer's block
are you talking?

RIC S. BASTASA
Aching Eyes And Neck Pains

aching eyes and back and neck pains, they do not really matter once i face this monitor i assume i have many things to say after a day's work. I TAKE pride about the matters unsaid. I take note of the words kept hidden inside my want to jump and assume the shape of some fleas.BITERS. bitter biters, for they were made to be silent as we keep on doing our own bread and butter thing my eyes are aching. i feel the pain on my neck. there is this burden, and this burden is the burden of a writer, a poet, and it keeps on saying write me, write me now: about a girl whose father betrayed her, about a man whose fortune is stolen in the blink of an eye

he was thrown in the river and the fish ate her in tiny pieces.

there is this little boy who imitated my actions and he was laughing and i was laughing too, i never thought that my hands are as clumsy as his or his words too disappointing the world is telling me: it is enough too much of you is already suffocating it is telling me that i must quit but how can i? there is this little boy that keeps on taunting me to play again along the sands of the shore and make my new sandcastles it is not too dark yet, and he says it is still time there is still time to play....

i get out of the car. It is raining. I look at the sky.
Drink some rain. I get wet.

It is not enough. It is never enough. There is still this little boy in me. His eyes are always in wonder.

and so the poems keep on coming.
I close the car. I look at the trees.

How green are these trees! Greener than green.
How blue are the clouds! Bluer than blue.

And i really like all that i see.

This little child in me. Giggling.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aching Eyes...

the eyes are weary lovers exhausted

over sexed, they feel like under-wears
hanging on a clothesline on a rainy day

RIC S. BASTASA
Acknowledging A Mistake

i takes courage to acknowledge a mistake as one steps out of his throne of self-righteousness and opens the door of repentance, the windows of corrections letting in this air of humility one bows down to that which is true and right admitting with full responsibility the wrong committed after which one rises again much greater and stronger, more mellow and pure than his previous self.

RIC S. BASTASA
Acquaintances And Old Friends

we miss them because they are not there but say to say

you no longer look for them

you have peace
and it will stay

because they are no longer there and you never want them anymore to enter the fences of your life

you have peace
and you live in there

did i say we miss them?
old friends sometimes i ask have i reserved a space for them here? i must have forgotten and i like it that way.

i have peace
and i live here alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Acting

we may pretend sometimes that i am this handsome guy and you are this beautiful woman

we go to the beach
i am wearing my white speedo and you are in your red bikini a two-piece suit we imagine we stroll the beach one fine day holding hands
and then we sit on the white sand your head in the embrace of my strong arms i encircle your body and i look to the blue horizon and dissolve my thoughts

you smile
& you close your eyes and feel the joy of loving we imagine there is only the two of us in this island of desire we kiss and we hold each other tight we feel so close and we make love under the moon i feel your heart beating inside my heart and i say i love you and you say you love me too we imagine a lot and try this fantasy for once sometimes i ask: why don't we make it true? these feelings inside us may burst soon i tell you

RIC S. BASTASA
Actually I Do Not Talk Much About This And That

if you ask me now, this moment, forgive me but i am ready
with a sack
of lies filled with rice grains of excuses to feed my
hunger for truth, sorry

but i need to feed my lean days and you will see
how hard it is when summer comes
with nothing but tin roof on our heads
for shelter,

hot we are familiar about what hot is,
how hot is it when we mean hot
this Philippine summer
in this city
and you must not have the nerve to tell me
to cool my skin
like i am your tamed reptile
a snake perhaps or the turtle that you once knew me to be,

time has changed my shape and way of looking
at the river
you do not know how i have made ties with the frogs
wishing for the heron to come to eat us
and we learned our lesson so well,

we made more slime, and poisonous
tumors in our skins to protect us, they tell you this story
i was there then
and compromised a little with how my life has to be managed,

chameleon, iguana, hot days, sandstorms, some easy preys
to our feeding times,
dark lonely nights with the timid moon
heavy rains at times and flood that
forced us to stay on cliffs
for months, i have learned these all

years, we have not met and one day
we meet again on the hills filled with flowers
and friendly air,

you are so confident, and you touch me
but i am already harmful,
the way i make you feel
sends you the signals of second thoughts
there is a little distance
between you and me
and in between is the doubt and questions

you touch me again
i feel so cold and you felt the danger of this reptile

RIC S. BASTASA
Actually I Have Nothing To Say To You

so we meet again and you are seated next to me
by chance our eyes meet and we remember the times when once we were together we were not lovers
we may think we were friends we ate together till the night comes we drank on the same glass of wine when our heads began to fly bubbles in the air you ask me if i remember how can i forget? it is you and it is always me still by chance we meet again and our eyes meet like the headlights of two cars colliding one dark night i still remember there is nothing that hurts that always last i still remember and i know you also remember the screeching on the streets and the marks of shocked tires we do not like to remember that which hurt us both you have nothing to say and actually to be honest and blatant about this meeting by chance i have nothing to say but i could have told you i want simply to forget you but i can't forget you and erase you you always leave this mark that i cannot just hate and believe that you do not exist at all

RIC S. BASTASA
Actually Some Poems Are Not Meant To Be Understood forgive me but my poems are not meant to be understood they are simply meant to be felt like silk to your hands just let the feeling slide and it is complete it is just like a description of something that suddenly passed you think it is a ghost but it is not it is just the hush of a wind and it is not driving any point at all if it refreshes you without thinking of anything at all and gives you a certain lightness like you have wings yourself then the poem has become a poem it is not meant to be an idea just something magical and please do not hold it it is simply meant to pass and not stay like the wind and the river and

my soul

RIC S. BASTASA
Actually, There Is Still No One There....

it is when all of you had left this room when i am finally alone
that i feel what departure must be departure is synonymous with

loneliness

when it begins stabbing your peace distance is prolonged

it is light embracing finally the tunnel of darkness

you hear a tinkering bell from a saffron monk

you peep from a leak of this structure

still, there is no one there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Actually...

i am having a hard time getting inside your life like a house fenced and barbed wired
and i am like a dog waiting
outside
beside your steel gate
waiting
even if it rains.

RIC S. BASTASA
Actually……

actually
who wants ever to be a silent wall? there are windows in us that still beg for the wind to speak our sorrow and we want to hear the sound of
of a vibrant
existence
we want still to hear
the song
even if it be the sonorous lyrics of a bewildered wingless bird or a boneless kite

most of the time
the busy lanes do not have a parking space and cars go on a rampage for collisions

actually
most feet want to stop walking and ponder upon nails

hands look for hair to caress but heads have crazy thoughts for their own days
to eat

there are no more directions where home can be found confetti fall from the tallest building and those who look up from below
mistake the same as another celebration

RIC S. BASTASA
Ad Aeternum

This i know

there is no change
in me

the landscapes are seasons

i am the core of this rock

there is nothing to change

even death
can be a futility

i am the core of
this rock

when it crumples
or cracks

i become the wind
the air

that this universe
breathes in

again and again
ad aeternum.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ad Baculum...

it was not the line that he towed not the carrot but the stick that made him what he had always been a donkey not the rabbit never the caterpillar dreaming of the flower.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ad Hominem...

do not speak about a name he will leave and you shall find a desert
without any name

do not mention his name for there are rashes in his heart where that name is written be an empty temple accommodate him on those nights where there is rain and there is no room for him

RIC S. BASTASA
many happy returns
my friend
we shall be back from where we started

getting to know each other retrieving the excitement
long gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Ad Perpetuam Memoriam

and for the memory of those who died before us those who carried the woods on their back from the mountains to the cities that they built when once we were
children
playing on the very first roads that they built

cheers! without them where could we have been altogether?

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage # 3

what comes up must come down that is the natural flow of any projectile and you who is up has no other possibility but to come down with me. I am not going up anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage # 4

you come to the point of this dead-end numb, you do not move any finger you do not point any finger to anybody lazy, you do not till any patch of green you begin to hate the soil you do not appreciate, you do not like any bee, you do not like anything fluttering hopeless, you do not speak any language, you do not hear any music of anybody, you stay there, just stay there, freezing silence is too cold like ice.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage #1

when you do them good and they still think that what you have been doing is still bad for all of them i guess it is time to stop and wait for them to vacate

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage #2

he shames you with the dusk passing along a line of trees and stopping at the seam of the golden light of the moon

you cannot think of any metaphor you simply want to be direct and simple when you say you do not like any complication you hate this convolution of words and phrases and talking without stopping because you cannot find the period and the comma slips away like a sigh from the holes of your nose and the hairs are not syllabicking anything

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage 10

'Small is the number of people who see with their eyes and think with their minds.' Albert Einstein (1879-1955)

you cannot blame us the spirits tell us
to see with our minds
and think
with our eyes

we are too many
to be stupid

in fact we have not invented the bomb

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage 11

'If you have no confidence in self, you are twice defeated in the race of life.
With confidence,
you have won even before you have started.' Marcus Tillius Cicero (106-43 BCE) it is still all in the mind this war of psychologies

be composed
show the teeth
grinning with close-up confidence

RIC S. BASTASA
'A good meal ought to begin with hunger.' French Proverb

one who is full shall never be full because he is to be full
one must be empty again to be a wall
one must start being a window
blink
and then open your eyes and then close each eye
slowly
this is the ritual of days and nights shuttered existence
close
open
close
open
close
open
open fragile tiny hands of a new born baby beside
the sleeping mother.

RIC S. BASTASA
'Don't make use of another man's mouth unless it has been loaned to you.'
Belgian Proverb

if i let you borrow
my mouth
will you follow what it will say?
or will you tell it
what to say?
i am a poet
without a motive my words speak for themselves the only function of my mouth and my tongue is to eat
and shut up.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage 5

'Joy in looking and comprehending is nature's most beautiful gift.' Albert Einstein (1879-1955)

we are here
we do not worry for everything is give a tray of fruits
a bouquet of flowers
a cool river
a wide blue sea
white clear skies
sun

there is joy in merely looking not even comprehending what they are their reasons
our reasons

we are the gifts
they are the gifts
we are this feasts
this dance
and celebrations

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage 6

'Whatever you are, be a good one.' Abraham Lincoln (1809-1865) as you step out of my house as I open the door for you as the road

takes you
far away

well, be good.
just be good.

RIC S. BASTASA
'The mind's first step to self-awareness must be through the body.' George Sheehan (1918-1993)

the body is the boat in the sea
between us islands
between us
waves and ripples above us
the winds
around us
the emptiness that fills us
all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage 8

'A good laugh is sunshine in the house.' William Makepeace Thackeray (1811-1863)

dark house gloomy atmosphere
let us put some sunshine from our thoughts let us put the rays of light from our tongues
let us spread warmth
through our gums

RIC S. BASTASA
Adage 9

'The secret of happiness is freedom.
The secret of freedom is courage.' Thucydides (460-395 BCE)

if you want to find the connection between happiness and
freedom

try this key of courage
it fits

RIC S. BASTASA
Adam, The Apple The Snake Less Eve

Adam is the man obedient son of God placed as the favored one in Paradise and of all the fruits he must all eat except the Apple (they say it could be an apricot

or a pear, some ways to confuse this myth of an apple of discord)
the source of the test for the temptation to eat or not to eat? that is the question, and then comes the villain Snake

the Seducer promising that if Adam eats the Apple
he will know Right from Wrong

Pleasure from Pain
Sorrow from Joy

Is this not good after all for Man to be Enlightened? I ask.

Let us not put Eve in the picture even then granting that the myth is true or is it a way of literature telling
us

Man must not know much He must only obey
and not Use his own Mind If i were Adam, i will do the same Less Eve, I shall grab the apple and chew it well, swallow it all lick the last dropp of its pulp.

I like to be responsible for myself Now.
To know Myself
That i have committed Sin or that i have pleased God sometimes or that i have too displeased Him.

The Apple
Even without the Snake I know I shall love the taste And happier outside the gates of Paradise

Lots of places to go, Now, adventures to make, which of course, enlarges the volume of the Bible a thicker book, more pages to read and increase its sales.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adam's Remorse

his remorse
was that, the apple was more tempting
than eve
and so he ate the apple to the satisfaction of the viper
which confirms the prejudice that adam after all was a pervert
preferring the apple than eve herself....

RIC S. BASTASA
Add Vice....

here
, hearer, do not make it things clear that is not their nature it is filled with mess, and like a mountain path, one may clear the grasses but a month is old enough to cover the tracks

do not explain
there is none to explain what we see we see it is like that

the forest do not have news,
when you go near
it is dark

far, it may have a shape like history

the nature of nature

is always unpredictable

there is no formula for what is no crystal ball

no zodiac no star is telling where to

just live
breathe for the world is a breather

RIC S. BASTASA
Addiction To Travel

..and then there is a shark that just gobbles up an old man weird, then there is the whale that is caught by the Japanese fishers bloody shore, and then there is that killing fields where skulls are like big white stones horrible site, and then there is the temple of Bacchus at Baalbek and then the two stone dancers of Ankor Wat, the moon set garden, Hongkong  from The Peak, and apples and Stilton and pork-chops, and Manila Bay sunrise travel makes us choose, from the eyes to the tips of our toes, tongue and nose.

RIC S. BASTASA
Addictive

once you get to writing poetry, you become addicted
to the art,
you cannot stop
until you
pop out like a bud into a full blown flower
and you know
what is next,

the wilting and
falling but you know
what is next,

the hibernation
of the seed
the drying and cracking

it is a cycle
but it is so beautiful!

RIC S. BASTASA
Additives

with a single pill (whatever is that name) feel that you are now an inch
above your lousy self,

but when will this illusion end?

ask yourself when you are sober

RIC S. BASTASA
Adjusting Again...

could the mind be saying I am not affected,

could the heart not say it but it is trembling the body makes a compromise takes a walk

the mouth whistles
the eyes see another place to go trying to please itself despite the pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adjusting To A High Society....

can't find what...
Admiring Forgetting...

the pond is gone
and the mango tree too

the place has changed the painting faded

i do not see a white duck a boy does not have a ball to play with and this girl does not like dolls

you stop for a while then start the engine of your car off you go there is nothing worth coming back here

anymore in the same way you admire forgetting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Admiring Those Who Know How To Cut And Leave

i admire those who know how to cut and leave

what courage
have they when they decide to become birds

and fly away
to shores unknown?

to cut the umbilical cord and be the persons that they want to be away
from their mothers?

RIC S. BASTASA
Adopt A Mountain

Do not name it.

Climb its belly
Plant the trees.

Give time. Have fun. Make a Network

Of those old rebellions.
Gather the bones

and Let them tell their Stories too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adopting Li Po's Tryst 2017

just read your text

we meet tonight at Rizal park you will be alone wearing black.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adore The Sun

you may adore the sun worship and lay prostate before its glory and might as you feast upon its light love it and dream about the abundance of its sunlight but by all means do not go near it for it will burn and char you it is cruel in intimacy it can only be loving through a filtered layer always from a distance

miles and miles
away from you

RIC S. BASTASA
Adria, Adria, Adria Why Are You So Funny?

adria moya, hmm you do not like your name to be written in the poem the problem with me is that i am hardheaded and i am the kind of boy who does what mother does not like me to do i am naughty and so here i am in all my mischief

adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny? adria, adria, why are you so funny?

hahahaha hahahaha hahahaha hahahaha hahahaha hahahaha hahahaha ha do you see the train of hahahaha come let us ride on it and forget the sad things of our lives i will make another one the train of tralalatralalatralalatralalatralalatralalatralalatralalatralalatralalatralalatala tralalatralalatralala

it is the train of dance and laughter come, come, come,

let us be there, what is the use of being what they want you to be?
the place is here and it must be a place of fun and laughter and something so divine later.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adria, I Am Giving You The Right To Say The Last Word and please say it well gently

tenderly lovingly

and never mind if it does not make sense just say it
and as voltaire once said i may not like what you will say but in God's name i will defend your right to say it.

amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
Adulterous Woman

when she comes back
she will be welcome still

this time
as additional housemaid less the prescribed uniform

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice

lady do not spend spring by shedding tears

the flowers are blooming they will wilt.

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice By A Mother To Her Daughter Who Recently Discovered That Her Husband Is Having An Affair

my daughter stop crying enough of this misery learn to deal with this kind of thing this usual this normal happening between a wife and a husband just ignore it

by now you have realized how too i was once my mother's daughter caught in the same tragedy i love you all my children you should know the reason why i keep your father and endure him all these seventy years it is your first time and there will be more if you keep on minding all these infidelities you gonna die earlier than the rest of the women in this village and if it happens

a younger woman shall then live in your house open the window and show her happy face there as the new first lady in the house of the traitor...

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice To A Friend

idleness leads to sin, it 's a fact so keep yourself busy stress is a part of life, so, learn to live with it, as though it is a nose that that will always be the centerpiece of your face

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice To A Monkey

when the monkey
was on top of the trees he feels nothing
extraordinary about it

boredom sets in like a long sunny day that misses the rain so it sets on another challenge to set its feet on the highest mountain

when he gets there all he does is to breathe
there is nothing more challenging than breathing and he is all alone there

no one speaks to him no one mentions the fruit of his labor

then he feels asleep and wakes up at another lonely hour like a very long rainy day now missing another sunny hour

boredom sets in
and he looks at the sky and he wishes he had wings on its tail

he dreams of clouds and
stars

sad monkey with no one
to love
all these are pretty useless
now

ask yourself: what is next? what is it that gives you happiness?

there is no other monkey
like you
who can love you?

go to the monkey world and play and say hello and yes to every monkey

do not be human.

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice To A Spinster....

i wonder
what are you apt to in keeping that chastity belt of yours?

do you wash it?
and use germicides?

i think you should give it more space
to breathe because now it stinks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice To A Wanna Be Poet Like Me....

in the forest of words we shall hunt
poems
those wild boars
and boas
there will be no
road or doors
some rods or sods
or you may like pods or sops but in this hunt for poetic niche
one must not just carry a head with brains but foremost
a heart with rains.

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice To La Niña

take the new approach Amiga,
if you enter
this door, be ready for its insiders,
the warning is clear,
'know thyself"

if they tell
you who you are,
just ignore it

coz you know
much better,
as always,

however, if you take things
seriously, the
other door opens,

outside it
is more free,
talk to the sun
and live
with the grasses.

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice To Pongpong

do not put too much disdain

inside that small bowl of time

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice To The Newly Wed

let the pillars be far do not fuse them like a rope for the space has to be respected

in there the air comes to cool
the room and to hold the house firmly above the ground

the arms of the furniture
spread
for the tired man to sleep

the floors are ready to embrace
the births of kids outside the trees are stretching hands reaching the sky

let there always be space that lovers need

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice To Trining

in such a small
cup of your time

please do not put too much bitterness....

RIC S. BASTASA
Advice....

always give a space
for doubt,
spare some people through a hole where light still gets in and illuminate

who knows?
it is someone else
and not you.

you are lovable as a flower of the early morn in full bloom
and laden with dew
by the window

no one, not even their doubts can take it away from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aerobics Exercise In The Morning

my cardiologist euphemistically admires me for being an avid listener
to aerobics
music early those mornings after i signed out
at Poem Hunter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Afewthings

somethingisnotalinktothis akintowhatyouhavebeen thinkingforawhilewhereto escapefromthelulloflife's longingswheretogoafter averyboringdayyoudonot knowwhattodoafteranhour ofstaringatthehorizonexcept ofcourseoreflectonwhatlife hasbeen denyingyoubutjust thesamewhateverismissing whateverlinkiscutofffromyou yourideinatrainofwordsopen thedoorofitslanguageandstay thereforawhilehopingthatat theendofthisjourneysomething mayturnoutwellliketheheaven thattheyhavebeenpromisingus.

RIC S. BASTASA
Affection

in an unfriendly snowy city dear affection is sorely missed

a room with furniture varnished
accentuated with fresh white magnolia on a vase

apples and peaches
in a basket
on an island of light
in the kitchen

still there is no
affection
a vacant room speaks and looks

there is something missing still

RIC S. BASTASA
Affirmation

there is no truth anymore to a lonely life

it is true
there is more to solitude sometimes but who can tell that you are alive

without me?

who can tell that i speak of love when you cannot love me?

love is not love unless shared

otherwise it can simply be another tragedy of car tires traveling without any commitment at all on the hold of the road of skies dappled with stars and yet so unfeeling

of arms too strong and lips so warm
yet the hugs and kisses have not found
solace?

RIC S. BASTASA
Afraid To Crack

soon there is no use of your fear in due time
you crack

extreme heat extreme cold

like a seed
your mind cracks

but do not lose hope
my dear

we all crack
on extreme pain
on extreme joys

we give room for the seed
to grow

just wait
just wait

RIC S. BASTASA
Afraid To Share Who And What We Really Are.

we did not really care
what is happening
days pass like leaves falling
on the ground
rains came and most of these things are rotting and rotten we did not really care much thinking that with this kind of taking things would run smoothly like an electric train from osaka to tokyo or shanghai to beijing we thought so and so did things run smoothly until you die and we too think that peace has reigned intelligently and philosophically upon all of us who are more afraid to share who and what we really are.

was it not you who said when you were still so alive and Benjamin with life that the great wall of china made good neighbors?

RIC S. BASTASA
Afraid To Wake Them All Who Are Still Asleep.

and you have become happier writing for that which pleases you most forgetting finally that we were supposed to be born and now here to please all of them.

forget the rhyme of the air and the trees
the symphony of the clouds and the sea
now you are here
making a life, living it the way you like it
though, still in a nook, where you tiptoe afraid to wake them all who are still asleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
After 25 Years

if it isn't love
then what is it?

if you are still
there
despite the fading
of so many sunsets in my life
then what do you call it?

you disclaim
your being a goddess it was your underestimation of who we are
which tore us apart

may the sunrise come may birds sing again in those fields of our unsatiated satires

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Breakup, We Search For Words Again...

yes Priscilla
the words come mostly after a heartbreak we look for them in dimly lighted rooms that do not offer us
sleep
in our restlessness
we dress up again seeking some fun in the night on those neon lights we are actually looking for words that sound like herbs
as we still look for the cure...

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Chess Game....

it is said
that after each chess game the king and pawn
are put always in the same box,

in truth
does it really matter?

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Dry Spell

On the Katipunan plains Between those Mounds of mud
And plain sand
Just beginning to grow Glimpses
Of green grass
The rain is giving Like my love
For you
After a dry spell

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Long Long Time

you come back
your hair has grown long my flower where have you been all these days
when i am so thirsty
for love?

i long for you
your scent of magnolia and roses
how crazy have i become in this longing

my bed is soft
the wind from the sea is refreshing i am hot and ready for your love

kiss me.

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Long Travel

after a long travel
on a trip well planned
when most of the hours
are spent inside the car
where you dream
about what lies there
on the place of your destination
some flowers
and treks on mountain trails
and bridges
and rivers where you look down below
cloud-filled skies
and big mountains with enormous
shadows and cold places
at their peaks

you find rest somewhere
on a rock under a big pine tree
high on this plateau
where you can see
the green valley below

you think of home
your bed and your room
and the poetry books
and some love poems
of friends that you
miss reading

you realize you are getting old
and your taste for the world has gone cold

inside another long journey is waiting
and you think it is more exciting

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Long Walk

after a long walk
you stop a while sitting on a dead tree
under the clouds

the sky turns dark
the clouds heavy and black
the rain begins to fall heavily on you

you do not run for cover you look up to the sky
you open your mouth
drink the rain & accept everything

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Nice Evening Of Poetry Reading well it is indeed a nice evening with charles bukowski it is getting late and i am sleepy we had so much

shit
and a little understanding of Humanity
and taking in other people's point of view on an almost made up poem of love and missing those we love

i have to go now
and i do not wish you will die now for by then you will not miss me again though
if by luck i still live i will still admit

i miss you

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Night Of Fun

oh well, there were lots of drinks bloody mary, screws, margaritas, name it you have it, and lots of friends and lovers, and newcomers on the rise and on the go, there were names and pseudonyms, but what matters most were the looks and come-what-may i like you babe, tease me, tease me, oh, those younger days of yore, got layed, and got drunk and got what you got, carefree, making lots of loves, not once a war, and then there was this intimacy that never gets out of your system, like a flush of a dream, like a perfume that refuses to get off my skin, and i called her after that night of fun and her name is 'angel' and she's just into a deep sleep and i woke her up and she said 'who the devil are you? '

gosh, i thought love is a many splendored thing.
be strong, there wasn't any.

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Night Of Rain

It is only when the rain stops that you go out of the house step on the path leading to the garden gaze and gently pick the leaves that fell on the ground that you realize again how peaceful is this world that we live in how peaceful is our heart not remembering

the storm

how happy can the mind still be not thinking about anything you are there i see you at the other side of my garden as one of them you are also singing the new songs of your spring.

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Rainy Night

morning sun
shines ahead of me

too much mud
below my feet

between us
the freshest air
in the village

blades of grass holding glowing dew like pearls and diamonds

i keep the walk without any talk

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Slingshot

after the boy
slingshot a bird
and then walk away
with his catch

i, who stood and carefully watched,

saw this bird
restlessly looking...

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Week Of Sacrifice And Grief

i am all intact
nothing is lost
nothing is gained from now on till tomorrow
until forever

RIC S. BASTASA
After A Week Of Turbulence....

today i will find
a place
of my own
quiet

on the soft grass
under a tree
beside a clear pond

i close my eyes
and take some needed
sleep

after a week of restlessness
i think i deserve
this....

RIC S. BASTASA
After A While...

when he was about to leave me
for good, (that is what is usually said)
he told me
Be not proud
for you too shall have a share of those pains just like the rest

and it is only when every flesh of your body gets numb

(i.e. it is too familiar with pain that it does not react anymore to any stimuli)

that you finally get that reward

of what you have always sought
that

eternal peace

(i.e. it is not that the mind becomes blank
like the closure of the windows
of the day
where you are led into a dark room where you have no choice but
sleep

forever,
no, no, no
it is not

it is never meant that way

it is this

you sleep
you are too tired
for almost everything

you do not remember
what happened

you wake up
light touches your face plays with your eyelids

you rise
again
a whisper leads you to the door that opens into a garden

it is such a beautiful garden flowers that you have first seen scents that you have never smelled before there are sounds of chirping birds

blue clouds clear skies

a peaceful path
that takes you
to new friends

yes, my dear,
you are into another new beginning

you write again
those new letters upon a new language that surprises you with a higher
level of
understanding

yes, it is the wisdom that faces you upon a first meeting.

RIC S. BASTASA
After All

today
I've seen a dragon lady
finally in her pitiful state

she is barred from getting out
of her great country

she is
choked and
her body is shrinking deteriorating
in the hospital of her choice

i am waiting
to hear from someone
around me
a word of sympathy

for hours and hours

there is none

alas!
when she whispered
that she is
dying

no one believes
her

after all
she is the dragon

never a lady

RIC S. BASTASA
After All It Is Not At All Darkness

as you learned what darkness is in the middle of your grief and lament

light sometimes comes surprisingly from the holes of your walls and you find warmth and colors pink, and red, and green and blue in a prism of light from a slit of your window and you look out to another world beyond your walls and windows

you find
a rainbow, some clouds, evergreen mountains you find a trail inviting you for a walk you feel the cool air wishing you to breathe

you see a world before you arms ready to embrace hands always waiting for you to be caressed it does not take much to open an eyelid to wake up and then try this walk of life.

RIC S. BASTASA
After All It Is Not The Money

when you finally have the money
in your hands
and you can buy what you want you begin to ponder saying this is not what i need this is not the one that makes me happy and secure

all i need is you, but then the other is gone what do you need someone for who is not here with you anymore you shift paradigms you jump over the fence and climb another hill you gasp for meaning shall you find it then? good luck, climb another hill face another twilight you know the consequences of this mortality we bleed.

RIC S. BASTASA
After All The Years In The Study Of Black And White

after all the years of studying black and white two exclusive colors in the place where you live and thrive
for 48 years
you suddenly come accidentally to a place that your heart had always known but had never been there perhaps only in its wildest dream it is the place of the leaf where it can become a river the haven of the stars where they can turn into butterflies the space of the fish where they wish to become dragons and many more

the place of your imagination where you can be anything in anywhere at anytime all those white and black years have turned you into a stone now you must start to recall how to grow a pair of eyes to see the brighter shades of every color there

the place of your imagination

and be color blind no more

RIC S. BASTASA
After All There Is No Route To This And That

after all these, you stand alone to be judged, and you think this has something to do with content, your flesh and bone, your words and deeds, the meaning of what you want to tell them, you get it all wrong and the world of magic and imagination laughs you have not done them wrong you have not done them right either you may not believe this and that but rightly so, the passing wind, the flowing river, the moving sea the breathing baby, the sleeping meadows, all these, including the eternal movement of the galaxies, the unbending light, the constant ebbing and growing of the tides all these, must have given you the hint of the truth it is in the flowing of the sound, it is in the journey of all things and thoughts these make our world, all these, not the content but the style the art, not the words but how you sing it.

RIC S. BASTASA
After All These

after all these
your strange silence
may soon become familiar and there will be ease in this empty room

RIC S. BASTASA
After All These My Sweet

after all these
i will leave a stare at you you are still sweetly asleep in bed

i rise and wear back my pair of pants
and you hear the sound of the brushed wall
you open your eyes
to see a naked soul fitting back to its warm body and you give me back that stare that shall make me guilty of betrayal

you tears fall
and i put my hand on your mouth
trying to cover a certain emptiness that was not yet there before i begin to wipe those tears away from your cheeks

after all these
i ask you
to give me the beauty of silence i will keep my lips sealed too like the way you have sewn my torn white handkerchief when we first met

i shall leave you memories sparkling like champagne sweet as grapes
we both shall remember all these
but only for a while for soon we shall bury all these to the sands of time you are inside and between us this big and thick wall of ontological indifference

i am outside now and the world sends me that usual smile

RIC S. BASTASA
After All Those Years....

i beg to tell you
my dear fellow human beings, that after all those years of loving,
time that makes us all nothing but wrinkles, seasons that with indifference
change,
flesh that turn to ashes,
bones that disappear, glossiness that turn into a rough surface,
i hate to tell you this,
before my death,
love is still, and will always be,
a word.

RIC S. BASTASA
After All What Do We Really Get

a house,
a car, a residential lot,
got no plane
or an island
a mansion, a submarine
i do not have them

and by all standards
i am not rich
and famous,
my poems thrive only
at Poemhunter
no publisher ever asked for my work and so when God asks me to transfer to another place i do not hesitate to say

YES,

THIS is our covenant
I go where he wants to send me
even in places of No Return.

RIC S. BASTASA
After All, I Am Human And I Am King

I sometimes think that the tree loves me

i look at the leaves

find hope in its buds, until all these

leaves, buds,

die,

until all the leaves fall and scatter all its dead self

on the ground

where the roots have no reaction at all,

until the buds are nipped and the world speaks nothing about it, since, destruction and death are nothing but normal occurrences somehow

that everything around it, the air included,

has nothing to express,

i listen, i scrutinize what is happening to me thinking that this tree which has no preoccupation but to grow taller and look for sunlight

is in love with me,

this mind that makes inventions, that fabricates things that

must make it a survivor, oh well, i can think i want and leave this tree upon its mindless existence,

after all, i am human and i am king.

i sometimes think that the tree loves me

i look at the leaves

find hope in its buds, until all these
leaves, buds,
die,

until all the leaves fall and scatter all its dead self
on the ground

where the roots have no reaction at all,

until the buds are nipped and

the world speaks nothing about it,

since, destruction and death are nothing but

normal occurrences somehow

that everything around it, the air included,

has nothing to express,

i listen, i scrutinize what is happening to me

thinking that this tree which has no preoccupation but to grow taller

and look for sunlight

is in love with me,
this mind that makes inventions, that fabricates things that
must make it a survivor,

oh well, i can think i want and leave this tree upon its
mindless existence,

after all, i am human and i am king.

RIC S. BASTASA
After All, It Is Nothing

when others quit
you keep on going

they are not your reasons

you are the reason why you keep on going

& doing & the reason is not really the reason it is the emotion

that runs like a river

without a dam
rushing to the place of its ending where it is no longer a river where you are not you

anymore

you belong to everywhere and to everything

i.e. 'that is' the reason the emotion that goes on and on and on like bunny energized it does not stop

it does not have that power it goes on and on and on until it is no longer itself but the sea

until it is no longer the sea but space

until it is no longer space
because

after all, it is nothing

i am
nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Another Legal Writing

somehow
time shrinks mind expands and there is no vacant space for so many thoughts but this always happens every night when you begin to take the pillow
you roam around the vacuum nothing is filled.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Death

shall i now reveal your name?
i doubt it at first until you write truthfully for once he knew from the very start from the bottom of his heart but you never learn to believe that sometimes somewhere the one who fools you once shall soon learn what honesty is

he is dying
and you too know it when all of you come out from your bodies you shall not anymore remember

RIC S. BASTASA
After Death.....

once you
read him just like any other
nothing is worth talking or even mentioning

he met
death and you attended the wake
and he is
gone but this time you remember what you read
about him

you become a part
and he
for once
becomes alive

it is his death
that recaptures
what was missing.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Having Been Defrauded

she did not bother
she did not summon for lightning to hit her enemy
so she be killed instantly she did not call for the devil
she did not curse
she did not bang the table with her fists
she may be angry
but she did resort to any legal action or even her capacity for violence she sat beside me and told me, 'my dear
the kettle no matter how high
will always have
its commensurate
cover'

RIC S. BASTASA
After Having Killed The Mockingbird....

to kill and bury a mockingbird,
and then leave the place
with all
satisfactory achievement to begin life anew in that house facing a tree where the mockingbird used to be,
to enthuse oneself with the silence
of the place
still leaves, no dust on the road, nothing disturbing
ah, such a bliss!

RIC S. BASTASA
After Having Written Poems Late At Night...

I see her turning off the light on the table. I can see gray.
I hear her folding the books and crumpling the papers
perhaps her drafts
of a letter or
a composition.
I see her stand, leave the chair and the table, and i hear the closing of the door.
everything turns dark.

i imagine her lying in bed she closes her eyes

i know that the light inside the room is open.

as usual the TV is on with no one watching.
i just know it. It is a habit and it has become a practice and that when i follow, i must be felt when i turn off the light and when i turn off the TV.

I know she is awake.
But i do not mind

we all pretend we are alive and that we want to sleep.

we fall on the same mistake.
we sleep always late, and we do not talk about it.

i put my hands around her body. she tilts her body and finds her own direction towards the path to her own dreams

not mine.
After Julia Roberts

i see children this Christmas season so happy with their gifts, opening their boxes, and exhilarated with toys, beside their doting moms and proud papas something stings me and it is not a bee, i look away and tells myself this:

i have a different reality
i have a different reality
there is no reason to be sad no reason ever to be lonely i shall be back in Bali and talk to my Ketut and i shall wear a smile and hear the sound of the sea.

through this, i shall be my happier self.
Ketut, i shall eat, love and play.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Life

when you are nearing the door of death life attracts you with another door, someone there gives you a smile and signals you to come to change your direction as though saying, this is the correct door come, come,

you doubt

but i must tell you do not doubt proceed to that doctor, open it have courage, enter it with dignity embrace it with all your
heart
learn to love it

there is another life there.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Listening To A Friend

okey, i got a basketball for a tummy
and you advise that i take the exercises
you tell me: stretches ball, abs, i have to do abs in 20-repetitions regularly everyday got to eat less carbs
more fresh veggies
more fruits to detox my ugly body
avoid stress take yoga chant and have my private peace
gym must be regular must have discipline
no smoking and strictly no alcohol

oh, it took me
ten years to earn this shapely tummy
took care of it
put more fat and had more sleep than needed
there were more expensive pizza and burgers and cakes
in there

had put more investments deposited money in there let me think if i have to remove it, but if yes, definitely, not just in a day, a week, or month, can’t promise i love myself, and my appearance sadly does not matter, but i may change if i don't die earlier than the time frame that God gives to hopeless men.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Making Love

After making love
We split
Our bodies
Into Perfect halves
We hold hands
Kiss
Then close
Our eyes

We dream
Something Very peaceful
Everything
Is so calm
So perfectly
Quiet.

We hear
The footprints
Of ants
Journeying
On the ceiling,

Dreamy
Red ants
On chocolate
& bread
Crumb.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Making Love....

IT HAS ARRIVED,
The echo. echoed from
another
echo, eons and eons
ago,
same feelings, loneliness fighting against
loneliness,
different languages,
flowers turning
into poetry,
these petals of tulips plucked one by one
after we made love on the sofa

on closed selves the poems
coming
one after another, and i said, where did you copy
all these?
they all sound the same.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Measuring It

the gap is sky and sea

we should not have measured it

between us
now is emptiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Noon.........

fourth of a spoon of turmeric three spoonfuls of oatmeal hot water to mix all these a little milk

stir them in one cup the one you bought during the 1987 alumni homecoming

lunch and some images to inspire you to sleep

you needed it most, just now 12: 20 afternoon....

RIC S. BASTASA
sylvia, the elephant is inside your tummy, you have become a melon growing and crawling in tendrils a ponderous house
a red fruit
you have eaten a bag of green apples and rode a train without stopping to an exit

sylvia, i may not understand the nine syllables inside you
for i am a man without these syllables

sylvia i put two syllables somewhere and it grows into three just three there was bleeding and i saw it i took her to the hospital and she was put into a sleep and she was finally made to appear clean to me

she was numb and speechless to the window panes there was frost
and there was that bird which flew away since then from her forehead

now, sylvia look at me i was the man who only had three syllables look at me in this sentence i am a comma, i am a period.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Reading Your Poem About That Indigo Morning about a star so bright and then only

to die
early that morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
After Shooting The Mockingbird

To death
On top of my roof
I can not sleep
In the middle of this Cold night

RIC S. BASTASA
After Ten Years Or So.

when he was about to write the poem in his head suddenly the glass fell and then it broke into pieces near his feet but he heard nothing what he saw were the scatted pieces of glass that calm table which did not in any way shake that curtain which was blown by the air from the window like the hair of a woman the paper which remained blank and the pen which had become too tired in its throne of silence it was too late for him to remember: why did that glass fall?

and what was inside that glass?

after ten years or so.

RIC S. BASTASA
After That Long And Lovely Night after this long and lovely night and the morning after when we are dressed to the truths of our beings

can i still look at you straight in the eye?
can i still call your name without shame?
can you look at me so gently and touch my hands again and assure me that that night was still as lovely as truthfully as we still are....

that it was done in the name of love and that nothing there was painful?

RIC S. BASTASA
After That Depressing Moment....

it is indeed a beautiful morning

sun is up
air is fresh leaves are shiny
no dusts on the road

i had my bath
and breakfast fixed my hair
sprayed perfume
and fully dressed for this occasion

at least
i know what to do
and where to go...

RIC S. BASTASA
After That Earthquake In Haiti

tears fall from the weary eyes of the world as its million ears hear the chant
and songs of the strong people of Haiti

God is with them
always with its billion hands
ready
for a trillion cares
the zillion touches & living thoughts.

RIC S. BASTASA
After That Love Long Gone

this i will tell you or i may not tell you at all i have to think about a choice

i still have the scar, call it a souvenir.
whatever that is,
a proper word fitting like dado joints

my pride is i am healed.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The 3,000 Cranes

after the 3,000 cranes
religiously made, day and night as promised by the gods my cheek turns pink this day and now i am into my 4,000th poem i am praying to my gods of poetry to energize my nerves to make this body move, to make me whole again, so i may learn the true meaning of my poems about faith, love, and hope.

let me begin first with hope.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Attack Where Some Children Died and so they attack one dismal day in Lanao del Norte and Maguindanao some innocent towns shooting in such a spree the farmer who merely passed by the child playing on the family yard the wife cooking the breakfast for the day they sprayed bullets on the houses an old man lying there was hit the widows wail in sadness the children losing their fathers, these breadwinners of five or six some are brave enough to tell that this must not be repeated that the culprits must be charged (or be summarily beheaded) and then today, i hear the MNLF leaders say on tv that they condemn the mass murder that they ask their commanders on the field to stop the senseless killings they tell the government that they will investigate and if these men are found guilty there shall be no pity

i spit my discontentment and for once in my life i use the word SHIT!

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Bombing Incident

AFTER the bombing incident last night at the church of San Pedro tiny shreds of flesh hang on the walls and ceiling of the confinement.

the cries are not prolonged except the sounds of ambulance and the military jeeps to and fro the city gates sleep was denied, and then that early morning i opened the window i saw this little blue bird perched on the guava tree it was singing a very sad song beside a bunch of ripe guava fruits.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Bombing Of The Small Village

after the bombing of the small village
by the insurgents some flesh still hang on the branches of mahogany trees some eyeballs of women left to stare
to the skies
some toes are scattered on the grass shrapnel reigns like the pebbles on the shore that morning she looks over the window she finds ripe guava fruits on the branches surrounded with green leaves

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Burning Of The House

we've been to such situations as a house burning with no fireman coming despite our screams for help, that day when an old woman walked straight to the sea and drowned herself and the waves took her in gladly while we simply watched how even fold and unfold when we do not cease when we flowed with the surge of the big river when everything turned dark and silent when we wake up and see all the curious people asking as what really happened

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Chat

we have only a minute or so but after the chat
we usually end it with
take care
you take care
and then we go or at least we know that we do different things on different days on this chasms of our lives then i told you it is raining heavily here and they you said bye
and i said bye too but if you only know literally speaking
there was no rain
there was only emptiness the void and the words in between the lines
this thinking of
how can i ever tell you?
how can you
ever understand
the rain
its sounds
and meanings

RIC S. BASTASA
look i will never promise that i will see you all again there is no such thing

as missing,
it is just a matter of knowing who went up
and then forgetting those who went down

then we move on to our separate lives
the struggles within the mindlessness
without.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Day

when day folds
like an umbrella after a rain of heat and light,

we must welcome the night as a nesting place of love and rest

we must journey into the fields of dreams
blue skies, soft clouds drifting in our minds

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Day's Work Is Done

tired and disappointed another day's work is unfinished

i look up the sky seeing dark clouds

i look towards the sea
fading
the sun a glowing disc falling into the dark line of the horizon

unfinished business again, ah, i still have enough reason to live for another day

sisyphus! sisyphus!
how true can you be
in me...

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Downfall

my friend, please listen, a downfall is not permanent for we too are like air we do not stay
as stone forever
we transform this self into dew hanging on a the leaf of dawn
we do not stay like that
forever
we go with the seasons of
life
we transform to the dictates
of the sun
we soon become air
we evaporate
we rise and rise and keep on rising until we become
the quintessence
of this universe

some have become atoms of the stars and they look down
that stone and shine upon its hardness
wishing to speak
again about transformation and truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Flood

after the flood
one looks around and finds brown fine mud

what comforts us
is this eye for abstract art.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Flood...

i
after the river
pregnant with water a wood drifting finds ashore

ii
old man lies on a tatami
arm on his forehead thoughts drifting

iii
little boy little boy playing on the road
there is no fear
about rushing cars

iv
on a calm morning sea the white seagulls are feasting on a school of fish

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Flower Has Bloomed

after the flower has bloomed
it has no option left but to proceed to the next inevitable step of wilting and falling and drying and crumpling

it will
just be another dried seed
again
falling to a fertile ground of illusions

without your hands, it shall soon grow
to become another flower
again
soon, soon
spring.

even without your hands
even without your hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Great Flood

after the great flood
it was the black crow which was first allowed to fly, Moses had confidence on its aggression,
it did not come back you know that well, it puked on dead flesh and flew away
deciding on its own now charting its own
destiny,

then it was the pigeon's turn to serve coy and shy and yet obedient it came back with a twig and a leaf whether this is all symbolism or not an interplay and contrast between black and white crow and pigeon, good or evil disobedience or impunity, i don't go into a hairsplitting or argument with you but i have to admit, i like to be that black crow.

i never want to be the pigeon that you believe i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Killing

after the killing of his parents shall the killer say that he is an orphan
to be pitied?

after the cruelty
shall cruelty be understood and be forgiven?

ask those who mourn
those who scream in pain those who know not what humanity is all about ask those who bury their dead without names without faces without hands without brains without intestines ask those whose genitals were riddled with bullets stained with the sperm of the monsters ask those who cannot be silent anymore perhaps there is reason for that tooth for a tooth an eye for an eye

a chunk of flesh for another chunk of flesh

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Long, Busy Day

so many words
others so unkind
freed from the prisons of the
mind,

hurting,
cruelty in rampage
thorns and spikes
biting the
soles of the feet
even of strangers

the words of love
are still kept preserved in the recesses of
the heart

(though bleeding still and still healing)

i rest myself in the hammock
of ropes

i let a black butterfly hover on my lips

we kiss and forge a protocol
of silence

on my birthday today
let there be
tranquility between us
&
the world takes time to listen to the ripples
of our souls

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Night Is Gone

the windows open
lights are turned off there is one in the kitchen at the back door which you forget to close which makes you
remember
who she once was there is the grass trimmed still insufficiently cut there are shadows of leaves there are whispers of gates no one tells us carefully every word rushes inside our throats on blistered syllables

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Rain

it is an observation that after the rain the stones on the pavement glisten to the envy of the dews but the leaves where the dews sit and dry themselves to death when they finally vanish into the rays of the sun
understand
what all these temporaries are at the peaks of glory time is always too short passing like no one like nothing is
there

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Rain The Pebbles Too Glisten

after the rain
dews still cling on the leaves
glistening,

the pebbles too, but lifeless still, my heart feels sympathy, for those in the cold immobile, wanting to change but cannot, vision filled, all unrealized, anticipations smothered wishes, choked ambitions, breathless, dead nerves, numbed existence, unfeeling, used now

to the brim, unspoken, desires fettered.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Rainfall......

after the rainfall
the world turns into a glistening dew
slowly fading like
a dream
on the linings of the leaves

an old man sits by his window
hoping for a clear day when the sun comes out
again
from the bosom of the mountain.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Scream

after the scream, she takes her needed vacation in Florence, takes her silent walks along the boulevard by the river of Arno,

this is Italy, and the scream had long been forgotten.
it is over she said, my brother is dead, and i am here working on a plan to survive the pain of my family

each step is a forgetting.
the sound of her heels on the cobbled stones must tell another story something happy, about her love and her coping up for a new beginning.

her long hair hangs on her thick black coat the river is a big, wide, long silver running between two connected ancient towns of other people's miseries not hers now. It is over. It is over.

She keeps on telling herself.

she obliges a smile in this picture.
her hands inside her arms sticking on the side of her frail, brown body.

Meanwhile, the sun begins to spread her morning light.

It is time to 's what is written at the back of the picture.

I am looking at it now. I am smiling.
After The Separation...

now i shudder
at your touch

i have regained myself in this

shattered independence
i am many pieces

mirrors of myself on the floor and here in these many things you can not find me.

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Slow Slipping Of Self

grab your emptiness like a handful of sand
in your hand

and let it spill there grain after grain after grain

until all is gone
away
slipping from your fingers

then feel that
your hands
are still yours

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Storm

after the passing of the storm
last night
the leaves are in disarray entangled in some broken twigs
on the ground

i look at the window down under and see the mess

on a tree fronting my window i hear the mocking bird
singing

trying to resolve the disorder at the top of its lingering song

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Storms....

after all these storms
i shall walk again on those peaceful paths into the rice fields of my ancestors
where the stalks despite the wind still know how to rise

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Talk

after the talk
i walk and take a little distance
not wanting to hear what you said
a while ago...

it is sad
when words serve no purpose
but to tell about
pain and elaborate on the sourness
of sorrow

it would have been
easier for me
that before you go
you have not
said some words so unkind
and so undeserving
of the dignities
of past memories.....

go now
i have enough of you!

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Trial...

he walks straight to his chambers remove his black robe

he opens the jalousie window takes a deep breath in silence between him and the walls are the Gumamela petals dead red at the center and saturated yellow at each side

RIC S. BASTASA
After The Work Is Done

after the work is done
what will you do next?

take a rest you cannot sit and sip your tea you still cannot you are simply not comfortable not having any work at all

your hands tremble without anything to do you panic on this state of uselessness
you become confused
in emptiness with nothing to do

so after the work is done you look for more work again, for they must not forget you,

your name had always been Sisyphus, a convict of the gods, eternally damned to be always on the go and stopping is simply not possible.............

RIC S. BASTASA
After This Flood.....

i left the garden of our Eden
i have lost whatever reason i have
for those flowers no ambition remains to be trees
the clouds erase
themselves
from the only sky left in my mind

whatever that
was
it was a happy
memory
but the only faithful creature
is here with me:

this snake with its forked tongue
has an eloquence that keeps me company

let me hope for a dove
after this Flood.....

RIC S. BASTASA
After This Meeting

after this meeting
you must forget that we have met whatever was said or felt simply disregard everything like you have taken a bath with me shed off each drop
to the river
let each moment pass and float and then go back to where they must belong some things
some moments are better
forgotten
i do not want to remember sweetness or pain
i do not want to feel what was once there let them go for nothing belongs to me time, words, thoughts they all pass through me i never own them after this short meeting when you think you fill me (like a glass of water or a cup of coffee
when you think you have quenched my thirst
when you think that for
a time
i shall not hunger)

let me be an empty space again let me be another drop
of silence
After Thoughts About William did i tell you that in this life what we see is what we get?

like william's red wheel barrow

words are things
and things are words interchangeable

you see what i see but what i see need not be what you know and what you know
need not be seen by me

just like a red
wheel
barrow beside the white
chickens

it is great

behind the lines is this child's death eyes closing
forever

you stand by the side of the window helplessly looking somewhere where you become nothing
but this speck of dust

falling on that red
wheel
barrow glazed by rain water beside the white chickens a thought falling endlessly on a chasm that sinks deep within you helplessly, you, just stand there for in truth we are here just to see how things come and go and then we go too, like the white chickens

RIC S. BASTASA
After Watching A Trailer Of Amelie

the piano plays in the dark it is inside my mind every note of it
i see the old man still on his trembling fingers the sound of his music clings in the ears
of my heart

she died a long time ago it is his inability to accept things as they are that makes his fingers sing it is this sadness in his heart that makes his solitude as beautiful as ever verily like the face of the woman he loves it is this darkness that keeps all lights open dusk, twilights, trailing blazes of needles of peeping light penetrating the shutters of his window at the end when he dies i look at the face of the room again stained with so much sorrow artistically

priced without much value the onlookers laugh i don't precisely i know the story and i want to write this one
all over again
not on paper but inside my mind my soul is the pen
my heart bleeds on paper

RIC S. BASTASA
After Watching 'snow Falling On Cedars' tears fell from my eyes prejudice & justice

do not rhyme

truth creeps slowly
on my brow

a man is convicted not for what he is

but for what he has done

a reflection of Sunday

not gloomy not gloomy at all the sun shines brightly on the beach

like the truth
waving

RIC S. BASTASA
After Watching The Sand Artist

it is within my power to change the scenes to hop from one chapter of my life to another

with my fingers
and palms
i chart the course
of my life
i write my own
destiny

i like an ending where we are finally talking.

just that.
nothing miraculous.
erase the
kissing scene.

RIC S. BASTASA
After You Conching.....

i would have been more gentle despite the strong wind. i should have not minded the waves, that day when you have finally arrived at the place of rain. It is cold and then the road has turned to mud.
The child in us wants to go out and be restless or relentless, but we had been grown up as trees pruned in all the coming of the wild seasons. after you Conching, i too left the place for there are no more reasons given by the books.
When i stepped on that old bus bound for Campo Redondo i left a letter.

Love there was carved in stone, but I do not wish to find it again.
I was told a child got angry and threw that stone in the depths of Caninga, and it was never found again.

For no one, no one, ever found it to be significant

RIC S. BASTASA
you must begin to imagine after you leave and be gone for years when you come back
i am still here
this is still the house but there is no longer any welcome sign
even like a rug
we are tombs
silent cities without trees grassy paths
all stones ....

RIC S. BASTASA
After You Sarah

There is no magic any more,

we are the most normal people meeting in an ordinary party i do not expect much after hello
as much as you do you act like the sea and i pass like the wind there is nothing marvelous i have become so restless like someone not magnanimous and then finally i say enough, enough, nothing is suspenseful as a car-nap everything is monotonous like a shoe tap for all the peace, goodbye and bless

RIC S. BASTASA
After You Unfold As A Flower In Complete Bloom

i see you unfolding as a flower to me i become your sun to shine upon you as you bloom completely i watch the beauty before me i am warm too as you are so beautiful to the caresses of my rays i hold you then kissing everything your petals your leaves your receptacles after you unfold as a flower in complete bloom

i will make you some dews
gleaming

then i leave in this sunset of my life you too must fall petal by petal
then the leaves too must die such is the temporary nature of our meeting so beautiful yes

so brief indeed
and no dew of time must ever be wasted

till we meet again
i will always be the sun and you shall always be the flower unfolding
to such a marvelous complete blooming

RIC S. BASTASA
Afternoon

a woman with a long black hair sweeps the road
using a coconut broom

three children pass by and suddenly throws a stone to the mango tree

a motorcycle speeds its way from the market
a dog crosses the street the little girl runs after we hear a screeching sound of the brakes

and that is how the case starts

RIC S. BASTASA
Afternoon Break

i sit
upon a chair
under a tree
surrounded by blooming dahlias

i like the silence
of the shrubs
the coolness of
the wind

in my solitude
a bird
hovers upon a twig
and sings a song

i guess it is
for me
i guess
God has sent it
for me

i think of nothing but God's love

in serenity

RIC S. BASTASA
Afternoon Fading

at the beach
something is going on a change of colors of the beach scene

the blazing red turning into a haze of gray

children playing turning into
shadows

the laughter fades into a sacred silence

the heart learns some more about the face of solitude the dance of loneliness the falling of the curtain of darkness in the room a candle is lighted the mind begins to think

RIC S. BASTASA
there you are
pain and its protrusions creeks to rivers
and tributaries like fingers of the hands into thy chest to listen to the whispers of the heart the sea and the ocean to become whole again to be not noticed as pain and its protrusions but wagering waves friends of the monsoon winds slaves of the lights of the moon sailing like ships losing their shadows to a limitless horizon into that darkness sleepy until the next opening day of the sun where light in profusion blinds the eyes the truths that scare us we should have loved and believed like gripping hands of our very best friends.

RIC S. BASTASA
Afternoon Musings

who first took the cookie from the cookie jar?

who me?
yes you
not i then who?

(for the grown-up insomniacs
try the song

and change cookie
to love

it works)

RIC S. BASTASA
Afternoon Musings 2

an afternoon dumptruck carries all the light
away
and here comes a pick-up of twilight

vans of worries
and a jetplane of imaginings to carry me away inside is this journey of a submarine inside me wanting for an understanding of the deepest sea

RIC S. BASTASA
it is 5:48 p.m.
dark and light
are arranging for this shift

i am waiting
for someone
to come and replace me

i have to go
somewhere
i am not meant
to be left alone

in this old house
in this empty room
in this silence
that is too deafening

another night shall take over and all my loud music
and musings
shall have no more meaning

RIC S. BASTASA
you always love to see the man out of the door

i guess you own the house the land the city the continent the world the universe

how many men have passed away from your world?

how many have finally found the way out of your door?

i have no wish getting in.

RIC S. BASTASA
Afternoon Musings 5

i am sorry darling
i am a ten or more thousand miles away from you

i am sorry darling
i could have given you a little love from my heart but you are also twenty or more thousand miles away from me i am indeed sorry my darling all you know is just this distancing away from everybody and i am learning a little of your game point A running away from point B not to make a bridge but just this long, long, long line of separation, a debunking demarcation away from the land to the sea and to the other sea you never imagine that in doing so from one far end to another end you finally form a circle finding me and everyone inside you don't ask me but the world is still round

RIC S. BASTASA
Afternoon Musings 6

(the time is 6:02 pm Philippine time)

imagine myself situate yourself in my own place

i am writing a poem on the ground floor of this house the brown curtain is laced and tied to a window that opens beyond this red painted wrought iron fence outside the mango trees are full of leaves and the grasses are running wild on mud where the earthworms are thriving the sky is turning gray and the horizon turns pale orange as the sun finally descends to hand this total darkness on this land of mine you hear the sound of the strong wind from the sea moving towards the big mountains that i see from where i am sitting and writing i am telling you again, the sound is howling and i am telling you again, i am just alone staring

RIC S. BASTASA
sometimes i miss a friend who talks to me without knowing what time is one who is carefree and freewilling like the way we blow the bubbles of soap and water in the air when we laughed so loud when we were those naughty children sometimes i miss the times when we bathe in the river naked with our innocence plunging in the noise and the rage of the rippling waters and not thinking about what we are or who we are or what do we become of ourselves i miss the times when we simply bask under the sun to dry our wet tight bodies when we close our eyes under such a strong light and see the comfort of orangeness inside us i miss the times when we simply sit on the grass on early afternoons watching the sun setting on the sea waiting till it becomes dark when the stars come like an array of friends to the full moon slowly ascending, and how all of them shine and though so distant from us, they all appear to be happy in that glimmer and glitter, on that summer many years ago before the coming of death & despair

RIC S. BASTASA
Afternoon View When The Office Is About To Close

from my window you must have probably heard me about saying the same thing all over again but i will say it again the sea is very calm like a sky blue silk spread on the floor the horizon is pale white like the color of shyness at a distance there is a boat the man just spread the fish net a tiny bird hops from one dry twig to another another leaf on the other branch falls because it is bound to fall yellow leaves, those dead ones caught by the fingers of the grasses below and then the sound of sirens comes it is now time to go

now my heart sings with joy for another night perhaps with the stars high on the roof of my house in my solitude.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aftershock

It is true
even if the bed is classy soft as the best imported foam ever feathery like a dream inside a perfumed room on the 8th floor
of your hotel
upon a sleepy light
on the ceiling
one still cannot sleep when there are cracks
on the walls
like rice terraces
from a top
view perspective

RIC S. BASTASA
Again Nothing Is Said

The one you love comes home on muddy feet

you open the door
and inside the house

without a word or two for you sleep soundly
comes

rushing to the bed
dirt lies upon the
the white linen which you have laundered for
days

when the time comes for waking

again
nothing is said

what for are the coming days?

ah, still for the one you
love

RIC S. BASTASA
Again We Shall Do The Same Things

again we shall do the same things we used to do before the smile we both smiled the laughter we both laughed the hands that used to guide us and hold us firm as faithful lovers used to do cling entwine like the vines in our garden then we flower together
to meet the sun
and greet the moon with our love we run
holding hands together on that green pasture where some brooks run where some birds perch on some contented sleep they we lay on the grass facing the black sky the full moon and some distant stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Again, It Is All About You

....becasue you are real nature has designed you as an intricate artistic creation of nerves
that feel the pain but always with all those meaningful and divine related
 endings

RIC S. BASTASA
Against Oneself

running and running in an endless road everyday is running to a year a century running, running, running against oneself
if you only look back no one is chasing
if you only know what is at the end of this journey
there should have been no reason for a hurry running, running, running away i don't know till now what is the reason
why.

RIC S. BASTASA
Against The Light....

imitating me
my shadow
too writes poems
against the
light......

RIC S. BASTASA
Against The Mainstream

what is see is this salmon
swimming
against the mainstream

it is looking for a home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Against The River...

he stopped whining,
it will be counterproductive the leader says,
he taped his mouth, he tied his own hands,
he closed his eyes,
and then he died.

RIC S. BASTASA
Age Matters

when a 70 year-old grandpa marries
a 19 year-old woman
one cannot deny the different possibilities
between the two
of them

vested interests
soon shall kill them

RIC S. BASTASA
Agn Bikil Sa Atong Kinabuhi

mao nga kita mopiying aron magpadayag ang wala nato makita sukad-sukad sa sulod sa atong kasing-kasing

ug dayon ibuka nato
ang atong mga mata aron makita pag-usab ang mga dayag nga nakapabuta kanato sa dugay na kaayong higayon diha sa tunga sa kusog kaayo nga sulog sa kahayag

RIC S. BASTASA
Agnostic After 49 Years

49 years are all enough to perfect
agnosticism.

the icons are sold.
religion is turned off like a nonsense radio.
belief is suspended
like a frozen stalactite.

but for one thing the river still runs to the sea calling for help.

agnosticism does not expect anything from an ocean.
it sinks and wills what death wills.

RIC S. BASTASA
Agnosticism

white clouds
searching for a white dove
on the white sandy shore

Kalibog

Puti nga panganod Nangita usa sa
Puti nga salapati
Sa puti nga
Mga balas sa dagat

RIC S. BASTASA
Agnus Dei

mistaken for innocence the Power has to make the sacrifice of the lamb and then we must remember the blood that saved us...

RIC S. BASTASA
Agony

i. pag-agulo sa usa ka babaye nga uhaw kaayo sa gugma ang imong hunghong sa akong dunggan misuot sa mga ugat sa akong utok ang imong ilong misusi sa kalibog sa akong mga buhok sa tunga tunga sa atong paghingutas mibutho ang kalaliman sa usa ka talagsaong himaya

'patya! patya! patya ko! ' miyama yama ka og bungat nianang mga pulong nga sayod ko lahi ang ang imong buot ipasabot.

ii tubag sa lalaki nga dugay na usab nga wala magamit ang imong mga dalungan nagpangamay sa akong mga hunghong og ang imong mga buhok morag mga kamot nga mibira kanako mitugsoy ang akong ilong og mikusog ang akong pagginhawa gisuyop ko ang hangin sa atong lawak sa pagbati ning gisaloan tang kaulag mora akog buyog nga mobatog kanimo og akong gihigop ang nektar sa pula nga rosas nga anaa diha sa imong ngabil, sa imong dughan sa imong bilahan nag-uros-uros ang akong gugma, mibuhagay nga morag busay, og ikaw babaye anaa sa akong ubos, sa akong tiilan, naligo, nagpauraray, miluhod kay nahinangop usab kanako

'Luyaha! Luyaha! Luyaha ko! ' maoy balos ko kanimo.
Agrarian Unrest....

my father is a landlord.
He sent me to a big university in the city.
I studied philosophy.

The university taught me about equality.
Compassion. We studied existentialism
The poverty of the masses.
The agrarian unrest.
The essence of man
The quality of life Justifications of living Explanations of death
After life.

I wrote a class report about a child who ate only a handful of rice for breakfast plus brown sugar as viand and then a glass of water for his thirst from the nearby river and then he was left in the house as his father works in the field and his mother sells vegetables in the market.

When i left the child, The heavy silence of the world fell upon my shoulder.

One day father took me for a vacation in our land.
There are mountains. Lots of trees.
A beautiful place.

There is a house there Dilapidated. A tenant lives there There is a hungry child.
Drought. Long hot days.

I pity the poor condition. But i no longer ask for the cause.
Then the tenant asks me if i can give him land.
Or a part of father's land.
I have no answer.
I could have told him, I do not own anything, I do not live here
and father is still alive...

And wants me to be firm and cruel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Agreeing With Urias

the sea
has reminded us that there are still depths
despite
that cannot be fathomed

it knows
when to invade
and we do not know it
it takes what belongs to it
perhaps rightfully

with its ebbs and tides
it has told us
that in here
everything changes that there is such thing as a cycle
now
once we were here
and then
we were gone

always
for good.

RIC S. BASTASA
Agusan Marshland

Around you, waters Above you, blue clouds and sun Boat sliding, hush.......
Agusan Marshland

pregnant
the moon
tonight
rests upon
the marsh
land.

RIC S. BASTASA
Agusan Marshlands From The Lens Of Elvi

Crystal clear river not a ripple from your hands You are inside this boat of art Sailing on the belly of this peaceful Agusan river Where the sun and earth meet and become one In the mirror of their likeness The dark islands the dark trees Mirror on the smooth water as you take the pictures Of this manner of capturing the beauty Of peace and tranquility On the background is a native hurling his nets On a boat his thin child
The river turns to murky brown The fish swim away in hiding Disturbed by their hunger The poverty that grips their bodies Their souls thirsty for the beauty that they cannot see Your lens disregarded what should have been more true & real Overshadowed by your quest to capture What is not there
I am looking at the background beyond the mirror On a closer look the native has angry eyes Red with fury but then the night comes And your lens was not sensitive enough The truth was not exposed Only the man and his boy felt it In darkness they are the only ones fully seeing Your boat leaves without saying anything

RIC S. BASTASA
Ah, I Am So Sorry

but my poems tonight are like autumn leaves
falling
they are sad
and they don't sound beautiful at all
i do not wish to edit
them
to polish them like some shiny
gems

they are not intended for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ah, The Stars Talk A Lot In That Infinite Space

a dialogue
is not just between you and me

could also be a me and myself
who knows
what it yields sooner or later but this had happened for quite a time
in between two buildings
amidst the forest
of concrete woes

one has tried it
with a tree
and writes about it with conviction that a silent tree
rooted upon itself
has a capacity for
a dialogue

did it not happen to lament talking to a horse
one one wintry night?

man and his mind
or his soul could be has a way of finding a way towards home

and home has become everywhere and
everything
to such an extent
words are becoming extinct
like some forms of dinosaurs

ah, the stars talk a lot in that infinite space

RIC S. BASTASA
Ahh An Evening Of Poetry

an evening of poetry
goes beyond words and images beyond thought beyond what we care about darkness fingers itself in the room when you turn off the light moans suppressed

like a poem restrained from a loud reading
because something is so beautiful and someone tiptoes

not to destroy the arrangement of the furniture

too careful not to break a code of the white porcelain

one speaks sub rosa in whispers because love is too private to savor.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ahhh Love, What More Can I Spare?

ahhh, love what more can i spare to you?
i have given it all and has spoiled you.
i shall give some more, will it destroy more?
ahhh, love, they say saves and liberates and resurrects i have given it all, and they take it all in some schemes of betrayal what has love done to you? is it good? is it worth the while?

love has given me pain but i shall wait again and again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ahhhh

in truth
you must know
there is something inside us that builds up
upon itself
and wants to erupt
we cannot hold it
there is more
that this dam self
can take the rain of realities still pour
until everything is us is full
and then we let go
everything
that bothers us
to make us whole again to make us
sleep again like once a peaceful river

RIC S. BASTASA
Ahhhhhhhhh, Ariel The Wind Is Joining In

ladies, ladies
be quite

ariel is here again
he is the wind
not a storm
he is the soft breeze
from the sea
of love

listen carefully
he is not a brute he is your perfect gentleman

now if you wouldn't mind
please
open your legs... er, your book on page 10.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aida

what beautiful body have you soft to touch cool as dew what virginal eyes as innocent as a dove what fragrance how sweet such a love refreshing air from grass and meadow i feel like heaven & so in love with you and what kind of horror is this when i think i just found my bliss in the middle of our ecstasy with all the colors of fantasy you turn into this black giant scorpion your pincers preying upon my hard-on and now, how can i ever move on?

this life in ruin, this body on destruction

RIC S. BASTASA
Air

be like air
to my body
invisible and yet so essential

felt.

RIC S. BASTASA
Air Comes And Goes

after a while
one realizes
this world is to wide for me
and the butterfly
too fragile for its rock kind of winds how i wish to change
a mountain?
the horns of the buffalo are no
match for its cliffs
so here you are sitting on a chair
away from the mountains facing the sea
on a journey towards an endless
horizon
when the mind is blank and bland
to an open window
air comes and goes.

RIC S. BASTASA
on the other hand, there are other reasons, on the other side of this mountain or that river there are other explanations, sublimation, suppositions, non-exhaustible tires of juxtapositions, some more, i will attempt to understand from behind all these fog and frost.

on the other hand, i still have myself, there are losses for sure, a face, a privilege, a position, a classification, a category, lower, lower, lovers, losers, you cry out, it is foul and doleful.
But, there is still myself looking, finding, trying, to withstand the whims of your winds, the batteries of your barbs, and well, it is swell i suppose so, but there is still my soul intact, and no matter how many shells and rockets bombard my body on the hills of hell, there is still myself, a core.

unbent spirit, still shaped to the face of God.

the other hand, on the other side beyond the edge of time.

Indestructible is this soul. . Timelessness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Air...Nothing But Air....

i have not seen you
you are air
that passes me by you are invisible and you want to teach my heart
to love
so you ask the help of the scented flower and you made the petals dance the buds open and you have finally taught my heart to sing
the songs of love
under the fullness of the moon

i feel you then...

can i change you into something that i can kiss and touch and sleep with?
you are air still,
you are invisible,
i feel your essence but i cannot touch your presence
my arms are empty and longings still haunt me you are still a certain space that is never filled up by any substance

you will pass me by and i will feel the absence later and this will amount to nothing but pain more & more pain and so i have decided for once on a shorter notice that as early as noontime i shall forget you then completely even before the sunset comes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ako Sa Langit Gibayaw

gipiyong ko ang akong mga mata dili
sa dili nga ako makalantaw sa pagbuswak sa usa ka masanagon nga adlaw
alang kanako
sa pagtak-om sa akong baba og sa pagtago sa akong dila misulod ang hangin nga bugnaw sa akong ilong padulong sa mga lawak sa akong kasingkasing og ako
sa langit gibayaw

RIC S. BASTASA
Alang Kang J.

akong gihinumdoman karon ang atong pagpadiditi didtos bungtod sa Bandera
gamit ang sinaw nga palwa dunggon nato pagbalik ang atong mga katawa samtang kitang duha natuali, naligid, nga morag si jess lapid paingon sa ubos hangtod nga kitang duha napaingon didto sa mga kabaw nga nagpabugnaw sa ilang kaudtohon didtos ilang gitugwayan nga tunaan

atong balikon ang atong pagpanagan paingon sa sapa dayon natog ambak gikan sa habog nga bato tiglom ngadto sa laom nga suba diin kita nahupong sa pagkaligo sa bugnaw kaayong sulog sa tubig nga haskang tin-awa sa paghinumdom lamang mamahimong tin-aw ang tanan.

ayaw palihog, lubga ang kagahapon.
duyugi ako ning akong awit sa kamingaw halad sa nagkahanap na nato nga mga adlaw.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alang Kang Juan....

juan, palihog daw bi himoi kog balak, kanang morag buwak nga mikatay sa labat,
nga naghimog entrada
paingon sulod
sa balay nga malipayon, unya pakapini og mga aninipot sa lalom nga kagabhion
nga nag-alirong sa kahoy nga kamatyonon,
og kon mahimo pa nimo palihog og dugang sa bugnaw nga hangin nga imong isulod diha sa bentana nga kanunayng nangabre nagpaabot
sa awit sa kaadlawon
nga misaad sa adlaw nga bulawanon

RIC S. BASTASA
Alang Kang Robin

lain na sang babaye ang imong gidal sa beach gwapa, puti, may pagka blonde ang buhok taas, nindot ang legs, gamay og hawak pula ang ngabil, batan-on sama nimo gilutoan nimong sea noodles paris sa sandwhich

bugnaw nga coca-cola ug pipila ka chichiria

sweet mong duha diha sa duyanan nga uway nga medyo gaguot mong duha apan kabalo ko nga diha sa sikit ang lami nga ingkit

gikan na ko diha, busa sahay makakatawa ko

pareho lang gihapon ang atong mga pangutana: pila pa kaha sama ninong mga bayhana ang magbasol nganong sama sa usa ka dangag nga isda mitukob man sa paon nga wati nga mitabon sa taga?

RIC S. BASTASA
Alang Sa Mga Makalolooy Sabat Palihog

Looy kaayo ko
Looy kaayo ka
Looy kaayo kitang tanan

Ngano ba?

Looy kaayo ko
Looy kaayo ka
Looy kaayo kitang tanan

Sus ngano ba gyod?

Looy kaayo ko
Looy kaayo ka
Looy kaayo siya
Looy kaayo kitang tanan

Sus ngano man gud ba?

Looy kaayo siya
Looy kaayo silang tanan.

Di na ko mangutana Kay wa na akoy labot ug di jud ko mangilabot.

d.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alang Sa Mga Working Mothers

Himoan ko kamo og balak Halad kaninyo.

Dili ko kini tas-on sama sa Red carpet sa mga kaslonon

Gikan sa pultahan hangtod Sa altar sa simbahan.

Sayod ako nga nagdali kamo Sa kadaghan sa inyong trabaho-Magpatutoy sa puya.

Magpatutoy pa sa bana.

Magplano sa family menu.
Mag-budget pa sa gamayng sweldo.

Magluto sa pamahaw.
Manghipos pa sa bahaw.

Kutob dinhi na lang lagi ko Niining balak alang kaninyo

Kay wala na ra ba mo’y panahon Busa ugma na lang pud puhon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alang Sa Tawo Nga Hilig Sa Kaon

Kadtong imong larawan Sa pulahon nga sakayan nga dunay Usa ka katig nga naglutaw sa Ibabaw sa lubog nga suba

Pagkaanindot gayod tan-awon

Morag sushi sa ibabaw Sa cheese nga parmesan Pizza ang larawan sa gatabisay Nga dila, naglaway gustong

Mopaak bisag gamay nga hiwa Diha sa iyang hotcake nga kalibotan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alang Sa Usa Ka Mangkoy Nga Balakero

Dunay daotan nga nahitabo.
Miabot ka kaganiha pa. Wa’y tingog.
Misu’d ka sa lawak. Nag-ilis. Niligid Sa imong katre. Way tingog-tingog.
Isip pagtahod, ako pod Naghilom-hilom lang.

Sa imong edad nga singkwenta, Unsa bay tambag nga imong ikadalit Sa akong mga pangutana?
Wala. Kamingaw ning atong ba’y.
Mora tag nagpuyo sa menteryo.
Ugma mobangon ka, magsulat Og laing balak. Magtudlo ka na usab Sa imong mga tinun-an kabahin Sa usa ka balakero nga dili kaayo Ganahan motingog.

Nagbukot ka sa habol. Gitupong Ang imong duha ka tiil aron ka Masigo. Igo ra kong naglingo-lingo.

Sirad-an ko ang imong pultahan-Balik ka ni Nanay. Sa iyang sabakan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alas Kwatro Sa Kaadlawon

ang alas kwatro sa kaadlawon sa daplin sa baybayon
nindot nga talan-awon

asul nga mga balod
nga morag gilitikit sa sa mga tudlo sa kangitngit
mga aninipot nga nagpahuway ang mga kahayag gikan sa duha ka baroto nga kagabii nagdungan og dunggo sa lapa-lapa sa dagat gustong motupad sa mga lubi nga nagpahipi ug nangahirig naglakaw ko nga hinay namati sa hunghong sa hangin nga namugnaw sa kadagatan ang asul ug itom

kon silang duha magpunay og hagwa-hagwa nga morag manag-uyab nga dugay na nga wala nagkita kon motingog lang gayod unta ang mga malipayong panghitabo diha sa sulod sa mga lawak sa kaadlawon seguro makaamgo ka nga ang kalibotan

sa tinood lang
wala baya nagmasulob-on

RIC S. BASTASA
Alas! Everything Is In A Flux

the body of the loved one that lies there without a face since it was the fire that consumed
what flesh was once there in the breast and the extremities

all are atoms and molecules vibrating
there is no body, no pain now there is only the sound of a whisper radiations of waves upon waves and when you go inside
alas! everything is in a flux
in fact
there is nothing

so why are you crying?
are you grieving for flying atoms for jumping molecules?
for love that is nothing but the interstitial spaces between each
nothingness?

let me be honest with you i have no grief for no one, not even for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aldo Is Correct

be brief and concise even in poetry, people are busy and they want instant desserts
for their weary hearts.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alerisky

sa adlawan ni alerisky karong
adlawa
didto sa america
akong nakita
nga naglingkod siya
sa lamesa
naka-riding hood unya
sul-ob pa ang
kalo nga NYC,
dili kaayo taas ang
iyang pahiymom
unya lalom ang iyang mga mata
gabii seguro karon
sa ilaha
unya dili kaayo
hayag ang
lighting
pa drama effect
ang peg sa iyang kaarte

lahi na siya
dili na mao kadtong diri siya pulo na ka tuig ang milabay
suwahi nga kinabuhi
wa nako damha (di nako ikasulti kon unsa)
suhi nga bata nga migawas sa
bilahan sa iyang inahan duna siyay gisugilon kanako nga mohatag og katarungan nganong nausab siya nga akong gituhoan (misaad ko nga amo rang duha)

ang iyang larawan mitutok kanako
nagbasol, morag ako
ang gibasol

maong bisag respetar na lang
wala gayod akoy
imbitasyon

RIC S. BASTASA
alex been away for 8 years today, i meet him on the road i am going to the city riding on my car he is walking along the street under the rain, i fail to recognize him: his hair all white now his arms thin out, his body emaciated his steps are counted, he moves slowly along the asphalted road in trying to cross it.

he used to have two wives, three children out of wedlock he used to own a house and a farm he lost all of them in one wink.

Only God knows why.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alfredo N. S., Poet, Dead.

he was the first man that showed me how rain can be made inside an audio-visual room without the use of anything, nothing about colors, taste, brush, medium, there are no clouds, chunks of cirrus, of nine grams of nimbus, he simply sat on a long chair his legs not reaching the floor his fat belly round like a suspended moon his lips thin like a grain of rice light was focused on his mouth which then started to say the words, and then it rained from the ceiling we saw it, we were amazed i felt so cold and i told myself i wanna be like him someday.

the news came to the university that he died early dawn, at such a young age, when his wife was still two months pregnant with their first child, such a brief, beautiful life, which i can never have, but i promised myself i wanna be like him someday i will make rain from the ceiling of a dark house where everyone can feel the strange cold, that they will believe in the power of poems that poets in some aspects even if useless can be powerful items too of this intricate system of intertwines.

Alfredo Remembered...

he did not draw the rain he wrote each drop
with so much art inside the audio-visual room where light focused on him i saw the rain and felt it
yes, every dropp of it every coldness
every joy spattering like i am a roof
a gutter a ground of
pebbles

he never walked much and stayed
many did not know that all he waited
was simply
death...

RIC S. BASTASA
Alibangbang Nga Itom

sa kakapoy
magsalimuang ang
hunahuna

apan dili kini magdugay diha sa kalaay
sa kasakit sa gibati
sa umaabot

mahimong ablihan
ang hawla
aron manglupad ang tanan puti nga
langgam

sa mga panganod sa
kisame
mahulma ang dag-om

ang mga lingkoranan
manubo isip kahoy
unya ikaw diha sa kakapoy motugpa isip usa ka itom nga alibangbang nga kahadlokan
sa mga lumalabay

RIC S. BASTASA
Alice In Wonderland

i must remember alice.
and when i remember alice, i must again remember the wonderland: where rabbits talk and caterpillars smoke where Humpty Dumpty always has a story to tell where politics become but a fantasy, where riddles come like fables and parables. after all these imaginings, i am lost and then, i forget alice.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alicia

depth almond eyes
singing
the depths of her soul
a human voice on fire
amidst the rain
soon flickering
dying
finally in her own sleepy
words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alicia Nuncamas

As I walked by myself,
And talked by myself.
Myself said unto me:
Look to thyself,
Take care of thyself,
For nobody cares for thee.

I answered myself,
And said to myself.
In the selfsame repartee:
Look to thyself,
Or not look to thyself,
The self same thing will be!

RIC S. BASTASA
Alien

he knows how it feels to be inside a house and no one wants to talk to him. He tries to be in but they all kick him out.

at that point in time he befriended himself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alien Song

in a song which he felt alien as he is to the language yet his
heart
completely understands

the meaning of longing
the brokenness
without for the time being healed

RIC S. BASTASA
Alienated...

it's like a bird
with red plumes
and blue beak and golden claws

its song is heavenly
more than an angelic voice
of a seraphim's

it is hunted
always hunted-

you can always see it from afar

it can sense the danger of you coming near it to catch it and tell yourself
and the other hunters
that
you love it
so dearly
that you will risk your life just to
put it in your cage

it hears each step

when you think about a capture
it
it is finally gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alienation....

i am going to places looking for something at night when everything is cold and silent in that far place where i am in i think somehow that it is
is not a place that i am looking for it could be someone to warm my side
i dislike the thought of greed for i have already some
of them
it dawns upon me
the sad truth that i am looking for
myself
someone that i have not really found despite the years because i have been blind and deaf
and mute

do i know that we are together in one body and yet so strangely
alienated

with what we really want to have and to even just touch?

RIC S. BASTASA
Aliens Like You...

you were there before you arrived their laughter is too loud and you need more time to think to decipher
then a new batch of tired people arrive and by then when they have already sipped their tea you will begin to understand you want to make them feel this place as a home

you guide them to their rooms you will lead them later to another floor where the garden and pond makes them wonder where they are now

you assure them like yourself you too do not understand fully well what is these all about what is next
you must keep within and then pretend again at least, you achieve what you want the dissolution of fear....

RIC S. BASTASA
two nights: the first was wholesome to warm ourselves since it was a a little colder we say we were grieving over wasted days and routine and love that quarrels upon lots of things incredible,
to warm ourselves and yet not offend the truth we lay our bodies back to back and we begin to tell stories

' i am unhappy and yet i cannot leave' she says
' i am happier with you now' he responds

'we're not doing anything wrong, right? ' both ask themselves they evade the answer, conceal the truth in their mouths as they begin to play with their own tongues how can they resist what to do when they all fell so alone in Aliguay Island?

we are into this and we are all mature and responsible
'do not forget, in love we too must learn to make the most beautiful lies, recreate that old art of deception' he reminds her on the third day they all pack up headed to their unhappy situations they start to forget their own names erase the past like the way the waves give the sands what is due them...

RIC S. BASTASA
Alis Aquilae

'But those who wait for the Lord shall find their strength renewed, they shall mount up on wings'

weakened
i remember your name and the promises you made upon me and my ascendants, in your name Oh Lord shall i rise this morning...

on eagle's wings i shall fly again.

RIC S. BASTASA
At first i wanted to write you a short letter. the main purpose of which is to inspire you.

for so many nights I'd been thinking what words to choose, how to put them well.

I've been imagining birds freed from their cages. Fish flying trying to reach their stars.

always I've seen your sadness nestled in that face, eyes that stare to nowhere and hands that want to hold on to anything wanting to survive and be whole again i want to tell you how shattering into pieces spreads us like confetti in the air.

i know what you will say: yours is sadder. There could be no cure, and time is only the teller.

and so i have decided not to write one. Instead, i summoned some words to put them all into order, into a system where i myself can be comforted too, for in truth we are taking the same bus on bumpy roads on dusts that try to choke us, on destinations that seem to be too confusing where and when to really stop and then go down from the bus and find another place where we can be children again. Freed from worries. Filled with laughter.

It is too rare to come back and say that nothing really happened. In our brokenness we assume nothing now. We gaze around and tell ourselves 'How uncertain can life be? How maps become so blurred? How we revise everything that we write? And for how long can we be strong?

But i see you with all your innocence regained.
You are strong as steel. And i know you will live longer. You will take back what you lost.

You will be back in their arms again. Alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alive, Alive

at dawn sleep left without a word my back curves and my arms look for something to hold to grip what is there before me my fingers shake and holds the keys of the computer they all begin to scribble words to assure my being that i am a tree with roots a vine with tendrils an earth still blessed with a sun and winds and breeze i sweat and look around i stand still beside a window i open the eye of the world before me
and said to myself
everything is alive
to include me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alive, Moving, Shaking

it is the moss
silently growing on the side of the stone that makes the stone
alive

in the same manner that waters that keep on running on the dry bed makes a river resurrected after a long death in drought

the clouds make the sky breathe and sail to another ocean we make the house live some more for when we are there the infesters of the wood and the thatch shy away and surrender it is our laughter, the cries of children the woes of old men, the moans of the newly weds, and the marches of men and women along the streets that we abandon that make this world take another chance of spinning

alive, moving, shaking

RIC S. BASTASA
All  Homeward Bound... here is a poem that looks like a map the syllables are trails and there is a word that sounds so striking and you equate it with the 'x' where the treasure is supposedly found

and you keep it in your mind always figuring
'x'

'x'

'x'

what is really 'x'?

as a treasure you mistake it for the usual gold,
the usual finds that pirates steal from ships and keep in secret places sometimes under the sea sometimes in the desert but the marking of the cactus is gone

the poem has a lot of them but do not be disappointed for i am no pirate
i steal none from innocent ships no galleons
nothing about search and visit stuff in fact, it is not a map at all it is a park where children play and where we figure out what next to do we wait for a while and then we go eyes, to home.

All I Did Was Hide My Love For You

Like an iron gate
That rusts
Weakened by the Salt from the sea,
So I must
I live on
To hide my love
At last I have Staled and Failed.

RIC S. BASTASA
All About Us

a cup,
 a shovel, a therapy,
 a string
 a lock of hair
 air, packets of heaving sighs, a dirty blanket
 an open window,
 the sea,
 a scribble on yellow paper,
 a brink,
 of what? an edge of where?
 pieces of junk
 driftwood, an old river, the usual fallen leaves, some puzzles of you
 not all of you
 but parts, shattered glass, catching you
 holding your hand
 and then
 releasing your fingers
 like drops of water from my hands, slipping sands
 last breath
 wordlessly

RIC S. BASTASA
All Blown By The Same Wind....

i cannot be you
god on high the cliff you get all the chips as i just watch
empty handed and seeing nothing but this blankness in space

what if i become you?
where will i be?
what happens to me?
i can imagine it when i become you
i become nothing too
just what happened
precisely to all of those who get tired of
themselves

ah, the multitude is just that
a heap of dead leaves a mass of sand dunes a pool or creeks
a mound of pebbles
ah, same things same
dusts
all blown by the same
wind....

RIC S. BASTASA
All Copies Of Same Genes...

wisdom
is not equated with age neither is experience
a guarantee of excellence

let the sun ageless
the moon without marks of neither either time nor place

let you not mind which is original

from adam comes eve
and then everything

all copies
of same genes.

RIC S. BASTASA
All Dirty Clothes Wrapped In Cellophane

this time everything is masticated they will not see mouth or teeth ey they will not hear you but you never look for any beginning like the usual hey there hello how are you you set all these aside as unimportant you look forward like the nose of a train there is no coming back there is no one there anyway and how things have become so interesting by then colors and scents and the movement of clouds in air and olaf's summer and snowman and whatever that makes you irrelevant and free from threats of your extinction like what you are doing now: keeping a bag ready all dirty clothes wrapped in cellophane

chances are nil, and life is opening as you set aside the curtains to let light in.

RIC S. BASTASA
All Equal, All Quashed.

the same sun
same moon
same body
of men and women and children
same world

but you are trying to make a difference with your walls and closed doors and walls of your bodies tinted glasses for your eyes clothes and jewelries and masks too

and perfumes and houses and towers

same sun same moon same rotten body
same death

all equal, all quashed.

RIC S. BASTASA
All Fetal.....

after i have written so much the night will be deep and dark and then when i go into the room it will be so silent that i can hear the whisking of a bug on the floor on the rug
and she will be soundly asleep tightly curled
around herself
the bed is wide and the blanket is thick the sound of the night wind is not that horrible as i may have thought that much the light is dim and the room smells significantly nothing like artificial orange or a fake lemon
i too shall curl inside myself cover everything in me with that separate thick blanket and take my much needed sleep it is a very late hour and the hands of the clock are tired and the light will be completely turned off in such a way that i see nothing at all not even feeling that i have a soul this is what we are now all genetically
fetal.

RIC S. BASTASA
All For Free....

let it be known that here is a potter obsessed with clay
in this passion to put love around its
mouth
feel the curves of passion
with its calloused
hands

everyday is always
another beginning
to make love again
with its muddy craft

'life shall be tested
with fire'
as it is with artistic pottery

here is love solidified hand shaped heart poured
here is art to your view

all for free...

RIC S. BASTASA
All For The Dead

at the mausoleum of my ancestors i light my 50 candles put the white carnations on glass vases

every nook here is painted white the grills are always black tradition we always honor them on on the coming marked day we who remain alive flock and pray despite the sufferings inflicted we show respect and recall and savor what they all left here never mind the deed we are one in saying never mind those dagger words we keep the fortune of a lifetime those that they cannot carry in the world where they are silenced now black crow and rusty screw

RIC S. BASTASA
All Ghosts (Revised) ...

the town as usual
misses the noise of the microphone
wanting to see boxing bouts not just during the Feasts
but also on ordinary days

d this is only second to gambling

those fighting cocks
that dominate
the itinerary
of the month

and all
the poor men gather
and try their luck

to get rich
even for a day

the church is nearby
and its bells are silent

copy paste
the silence of the cemeteries

despite, this is still the little town that i write
about

and i ask if i love it or does it love me too?

RIC S. BASTASA
All Ghosts...

the town as usual
misses the noise of the
microphone
wanting to see boxing
bouts not just during
the Feasts
but also on ordinary days

de is only second
to gambling
tese fighting cocks
that dominate
the itinerary
of the month and all
the poor men gather
and try their luck
to get rich
even for a day

to church is nearby
and its bells are silent
copy paste
to silence of the cemeteries

RIC S. BASTASA
All I Know Is That I Live Within Me

The lonely moments teach me Where I live, what I am I may not know where I am going Or tell when I am going to stay here Fully dressed in the vigor of this life Or even unmasked naked to my sorrows This is my own life
This is what I make of myself I am free beyond the limits of my grey skies I am tearing walls
I am breaking closed doors and shut windows Trying to see what lies ahead Searching where I must end This journey
Slowly I am knowing the jails That lock me
I am destroying the chains That bind me
Freeing my hands my mind Into the surging river of my life I shall run I shall flow I live I know what I am within me I am free! I am free!

RIC S. BASTASA
you lay a mat on the floor for you to understand dirt and its implications its complications to the wall or to the center table and to the rest of the parts of your house, dirt must be eradicated, that is your rule number one, so you put lots of mats and rugs, doormats, floormats, in every door in every corner of the floor all dirt is not welcome, it is as though you have studied dirt at length for years, what is dirt? what are the kinds of dirt? the causes of dirt?

the consequences of dirt? the historical background of dirt, and your recommendations finally about dirt
its control and eradication, you have talked about dirt and how you disliked it, how you have driven dirt away from this house how you called they police when dirt resisted to leave and of course they all were arrested and jailed without bond the judge convicted dirt on the basis of those dirty exhibits and dirty testimonial evidence, dirt must be poisoned by lethal injection, hanged, electrocuted, to make them disappear forever that is your firm belief your solid conviction

the sound philosophy of your society

you are talking to me, and i will now tell you who am i really, my name, the place where i live, my family and how i am related to you, mother, i am dirt, my name is dirty, my family is dirty, i live in a dirty place, i am your son, i cannot step on your doormat, immediately i must leave now you will report me to the police and i will be arrested and jailed and even be hanged dead, all i need is only that you clean me, mama.

now, please........

RIC S. BASTASA
All In The Mind

It is true
You must believe me
That everything is all in the mind

Whether something is hot or cold It all depends on the mind Of the skin on our forehead

You tried to hold my hand I set it away

Now you must believe me
It is all in the mind

Whether I love you
Or I don’t

It all depends on what you believe It is all in your mind

You are taking me Without any question

You refuse to believe What my hands are saying

RIC S. BASTASA
All Insignificance Frees You From The Anxiety Of A Lifetime.

one thing with what we do now
is that

anything goes, everything is fine, everybody is welcome and everywhere is just the best for this whatever occasion

this is an attempt to get away from the house of logic
that pile of cards
this domino arrangement

have you seen a fish flying in space? stars having a concert in the hills singing mermaids in the pool multi-faced man on stage talking in a thousand languages have you heard about this?

what is fine with me is when i am everything, i am everywhere and i am everybody

it is dreamy, but not dreary, not well lighted, but colorful indeed every smell is here, and every warmth which triggers whatever is hidden in the heart to come out into the open like those hermit crabs getting out from their borrowed shells to bask under the sun when every bather is away making love with their chosen fantasies you will not understand if you are shackled by the fetters of what is logical and systematic lose yourself like a balloon in the sky no one sees you bursting at the threshold of your buoyant life shattered and fallen all insignificance frees you from the anxiety

of a lifetime.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is not just shaping your hands like a net when you fish for mermaids in the air you are surprised to trap only poisonous sea snakes because you cannot recall the name of the thing that bites you and makes you think some more.

was it a stingray? it looks familiar but definitely it isn't. it wasn't, it looks like an umbrella with hair as feet behind you is the orchestra that plays the song of the champions sounding like Queens, then the guests start to leave, and you are inside your innermost self, not wanting to open like a door it is all mixed up, then the artistry of words come like soldiers putting order to a chaos that you have just created no one knows it, the room is perfectly at peace with the tree the clouds drift, and dissolve to a certain distance it is too far, you tell your friend, who died five years ago you revolve around a world of words, and you try to find one that describes all these realities, to no avail your thumb is cut, your tongue envies it, you are mum like a victim, there is a war, it is between you and you, the i is gone, the us lingers, but you want it hanged.

RIC S. BASTASA
All Our Lives

all our lives
sad to say
be it the sixth
or the tenth
have always been a don't do this don't do that & perhaps it is time
to change from
blessed are those...
blessed are those....
God bless you.

RIC S. BASTASA
All Right

all
right
all
together
all ways

in time they felt the need to fuse

today
they are one alright, altogether, always.....

RIC S. BASTASA
All Rise To The Sky

what makes him live some more is always that secret

he treasures it like his own life

it is so real
its jagged and pointed edge wounds the corners of his page it is the wound that makes him move

that pinning and prolonged
pain
that creates the creeping story on the surface of his skin

he does not waggle like an old wheel
along that public road (to hell)

it is the pain that makes him think like a cliff above the plain that worships it like a king

from out of his innards comes out a spasmodic voice
of a series
existences
imagine that caterpillar moving in your left eye
it is beautiful
the listeners clap
deep inside the
whorled ugliness laughs it is the threat that one loses

everything
in the wink of an eye that one tiptoes on the wire keeps its hold and never gives up like a sore

it is the hardest fall which gives the dignified rise it is the pressured noise that creates the external whispering
silence

he keeps all these like a house with closed doors and windows the cooking continues and all the ingredients
well cooked
inside that dirty kettle all things are always brewing all the processes of the silent brain aging

the cause creates the smoke and the flavor that eventually escape from the leaking roof of the house all rising to the sky like a gigantic sigh.

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
All She Needs To Do Really Is Just Signal

She does not have to be obtuse That would really be unnecessary; I am a wise man with few words She does not every have to waste words.

Words are concealing, and she wants something unconcealed, one That she can clearly see and touch, Freely in fact.

She wants that she can be what she is, doing what she freely can do To her man,

Undress him,
Remove his shirt
His pants, his brief,
And look bluntly to what is left and cannot be removed but can only Be caressed, touched, stretched, rubbed, kissed, what she can eat,

And drink.

Her wants are so simple, and there are no words to be used.
Like a tango dance, her slightest touch on the hip, tells him where to Lay down like a meek dog
and wait
to be subdued
and pampered like a new born babe

like babe

hey babe! i miss you!

Her tongue can do the least to signal him to spread his hairy and muscled legs like a colored and glossy magazine pages open in bed

Her tongue sizzles up for him to look at the ceiling, and how sensitive
he gets his shiver in such moist warmth inside her cavelike, stalactite in soft pinkish
allusions of flesh
pleasure trickles pleasures in trickles tricky to his shaft surging like a wave of an angry
sea

Her long hair covers all the secrets below him. He closes his eyes and reveals to her she veils what his eyes see when closed

it is pleasurable

Everything that was delicious in his dreams. Lust, this time, lust will last.

Such shortness of Breaths coping, gasping, grasping up with eternity.

Her fingertips soft and equaling what he had long stored for her

Nasty stories in whispers in gasps.

He sees stars. his abdomen pumping more stars in his loins longing for more trembling
with so much echoes of ecstasy

She sees the fullness of a tilted moon. er her lips still cave like enclosing

and this time
she blows the wind
a soft wind to make a home for his warm
stars.

her last signal is the satiated silence of her eyelashes wavelike,

she is a complete woman calming down because he is also a man completed by her moans, slowly receding, like light fading, cooling, fading, subdued.

RIC S. BASTASA
All Storms Are Waiting

you must have been taken anew by the recent changes of your
life
	his is no longer
the case of a woman who bathes herself
naked in the river while singing a love
song

last night she made love to her
hunter-lover
and she was filled with memories
which she cannot unload to the
water

the changes have come like an old man
carrying a load of timber planks
and he has not grandson and the road is muddy and the rain falls so hard and there is no
leaf of the taro
to cover his
fate.

do not be surprised when you embark soon to a trip in the pacific ocean all storms
are waiting
All That I Have Spoken

The time has come

it is empty and what you feel is the hollowness of space
buried underneath its gut

directions become nothing plans turn into dry leaves the future is just a word that you utter i have no ears and my eyes dream of nothing but the closeness of

fading

i am no longer a strange of all these i know myself and my heart has ten hands embracing
all that i have spoken

RIC S. BASTASA
All That I Hear From The Rain At Dawn

all that i hear from the rain at dawn when in the usualness of waking up early the mind begins what it must do is this grumbling of things that always leave us why people do not stay why this world rotates and tilts why you are left in the corner of the door always waiting for someone to return back to your arms again when the years have dimmed into some rotten memories into dust into air and your face has become nothing but an empty space in one of the lonely corners in your heart

RIC S. BASTASA
All That I Need

all that i need robert is a little nap

beside a kitten unclad and then

i will continue
writing the poems

for all the cats and dogs and for all those who have forgotten

what sleep is,

all i need is a little dark corner, a little light from the candle and an open window where i can see the moon, without a star

there are no stars, i so think, in real poetry

it is more of like ants building castles on their hills.

RIC S. BASTASA
All That Is Needed To Burn Everything, That The Heart Desires.

if what is necessary is that which for the meantime comforts you, despite,
he will oblige,
he will be with you, and will talk only if allowed,
he will follow you to hell and
comfort you there,
and he will burn with you if necessary,
for the meantime,
but it is not in the meantime,
all the fires are there, all that is needed to burn everything, that the heart
desires.

RIC S. BASTASA
All That Matters Simply Come Home And Look At Us

straight in the eye
what we did, they come home and look at us

straight in the eye
feeding us morsels of guilt, and asking us again

why?

we try to look at them straight in the eye too and we justify ourselves, with it was a necessity, the inevitable, and all with the face of the human being bones and flesh and hair and skin with balls or no balls will just do the same: kill to save oneself, the doctrine of self-defense, that innate self which must preserve itself and always ready to strike when in danger, not even running, but keeping itself unafraid, to stand firm and tall and unmoved, they all come today, like her chickens, but i see them all snakes, and scorpions, and even fire-breathing dragons and witches and wolves and blood sucking leeches

i do not run, i keep myself composed to all these now, i am ready, i have prepared myself, if they ask for reason, i give them the reasons, if they don't and they just stare, i too must stare without blinking i am a brave man

i am an honest man i harmed no one
and no one harms me now.

i am at home and if they, of the past, and today, live with me, i always have the room to spare, and some padlocks too and iron bars, and air tight spaces

RIC S. BASTASA
All That We Can Care Of Are Those Made Astray By Inhumanity

what we have are five dogs

all street dogs
adopted

all that we can care of are those made astray
by inhumanity

we feed them
and they guard us

so how can we be so lonely?

so many times
i ask that question

so how can we be so lonely still?

all that we have are five stray dogs

staring at us in the eye
sometimes

that they are our best friends and the we are their beneficent masters forever and what is forever but just this moment of adjustment

my wife is singing her old love songs in the middle of her sleep and i am figuring out the map of my own salvation on

the ceiling

in this labyrinth where can the graceful
exit be?

where is the promised treasure of my
youth?

where can i find the rewards of my persistence and hard labor?

and then the lights
went out and then i feel that i am so lost
as a wooden boat in a tiger storm

and outside the house
it is raining cats and dogs spears and arrows

and then
the dogs howl as though the bad spirits
are coming
i know that today in the heavens
there are no stars
no moon....

RIC S. BASTASA
envy rages like
fire
burning every flower in the field of
dreams

hatred floods every house
killing everyone
not just dogs but also children

when everything is
over
spread forgiveness
like a shower of
rain
to let all dust and ash
go back to its home
of earth

love is sunshine
another cool breeze that caresses all buds and sprouts
of the trees and seeds

green grass silk seas
silver linings
golden horizons

here we are starting all over again
all the children of
life....
All The Dishonest Men....

the dishonest men
have a language of their own
a coded handshake
a secret symbol
a place which they call their own and you know that, they make those who win
those who must have
that fame and glory
with an equivalent
money, and you know that but you just smile at all these things and manners which do not actually last.

RIC S. BASTASA
a seed is lifted from that rocky soil
taken by the water to the fertile site where it had all the opportunity for growth

it sprouts, grows into a big tree
it tip even touches the sky and claims to be one of the gods in heaven

it looks down on the water sheds off its leaves and does not remember the rocky soil where it once came

the rivers and seas got mad rages upon its roots surges and carries it back from its humble beginning the one that tells this story is the wind and all the storms listen with all attention.

RIC S. BASTASA
All The Tiny Bubbles

the liar
foams in the mouth
releasing
all the tiny bubbles of saliva
in the air

others who knew
take a short glimpse
and then
leave

RIC S. BASTASA
All The Way There & Always Us, Us

we are related on intimate chains there are no strangers here one cannot say i do not know you names are nothing but tags on goods that know how they are made and displayed and eventually sold
nothing remains here unshaken to each his pleasures and pains
those that pretend they are staying had already been discarded by fate, and those who voluntarily take the journey as expected
are handled smoothly by their destinies
delivered to the gates of their dreams and sleep there
for a while
we are what we are
bodies with souls
minds that always speak and can never be restrained by our faiths
we have grasses and fires for metaphors goats and pigeons
the sky above us the layers of rocks below us we face walls and curtains we did the dance and we have sung so well we were in the same house this heaven and hell this self and others

now why do you tell me that you are alone?

RIC S. BASTASA
All The While I Want To See A Brighter Sun

just like any other man let me put it this way, we all want to wake up one morning wanting to see a brighter sun

a warm day, a bright morning a gentle sunshine landing peacefully on our cheeks our eyelashes waving a warm welcome too our eyes glistening with hope to the wings and songs of birds perching and then flying away just like all men we want peace and harmony of leaves clinging like stalks on a bark like vines steadily climbing on trunks we want blue clouds well placed in the skies and mountains settled in their proper places and sea as vast and wide as our eyes can reach to see yet like ordinary happenings these things are not really true there are driftings, there are inevitable flows going nowhere, and then gone, and then we sit idly on the shore now anchored on the truth we stare to a horizon. we expect nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
All These Good Men...

everyday the strangers come i have always kept the door open they do not have to knock for i understand why they are here and what they want to do
the dogs do not bark them the cats come sliding on their feet the birds comes to rest upon their shoulders, they do not open their mouths their eyes gentle upon the morning light and like all those memorable and valuable moments, these men of art and honor, and passion

they do not stay that long they come and go and come back again just like any breeze, any wind any hush of leaves and husks and filaments of light and shadows and souls...

RIC S. BASTASA
All Things All Persons Are Interconnected in truth all of us are related, interconnected, by blood, by flesh, by thought, by the mere idea of interconnection we are all interconnected, on the philosophy of language unless we are interconnected there should have been no word as interconnected, soon you will discover that there is a thin line connecting your eyelash to the tip of you toe that when you cut a dead nail a tear may fall unseen tears that your dream may not even notice, the butterfly to the star, the star to the starfish the atom to the the moon the foxhole to the blackhole of this universe, the lullabye of mother to the hum of the earth well detected by our human ears that too the sun has ears and fingers of its own or the stars its sewing needles that fall from the dark night skies, my mind away many many miles from you is interconnected to your longing, my death is your death too and my dream of being reborn is relative to the dusts rested on your feet, we are interconnected and soon we will know that we are one that this river that we pass for a hundred times seen from above this earth is just one winding river that we step upon our eyes duped by all these ordinary rocks and mountains

RIC S. BASTASA
All Things Being Constant

all things being constant,
there will still be hope.

or even just you, since i have changed and swerved on another curve
without you.

you being constant
and i coming back, carrying with
me

a handful of 'i am sorry'
' i will be good this time'
'forgive me'

and i kneel before your feet pleading.

with you being constant as the star of this house, this shattered home, these broken window glasses and dirtied carpets

and muddy floors because my shoes brought them in,

with you being constant,
like mother,

i too, can be, myself again,
i, too, can say,

damn, i am lucky, to have
mother in you,
damn, i am lucky,
like daddy.
i am really sorry.

RIC S. BASTASA
All White

day you are all white, so neat to see, my flesh quivers
to kiss your lips
and hold your face
lick your body undressed
tonight
without all these white trappings on

now either you are brown or black, but just the same
my flesh quivers
for leopards and
black birds and dark nights moaning
for love.

RIC S. BASTASA
All White, No Rock

it is the want that is giving me this prison and so to free myself i must not want this anymore i wasted all my precious time to wanting this and that which i never really got anyway it is a sour grape now i am sure about it so i junked it and look at me i am now free at last my chest is spacious my hands are waving like leaves to the wind feeling cool

relieved at last from all those unnecessary worries the storms are gone the sands are too peaceful like my mind

all white
no rock.

RIC S. BASTASA
All You Have To Do Is Just Sit On A Chair, And Then Believe.

then you sit on a chair declare yourself as king or judge and everything depends now on your hands, what you say is the law what you do is a must, and what you think is always right. It does not require much effort, or money or influence not education of power either.

all you need is just sit on a chair and believe in yourself.

you do not even need a crown or a scepter, or a gun or a set of goons or a set of believers.

all you have to do is just sit on a chair, and then believe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Allegory Of The Boat

the boat that we are riding towards an island is chasing the sea and the sea runs always faster than where we are
until the waters hand us to the sandy shore
when the running stops

but our minds do not just stop like that it is not that simple we tend to run as fast as the sea and this
thought
wanting to arrive on what we still cannot grasp

RIC S. BASTASA
Allegro Comodo

a word from you, then you stop
something choppy
i like to listen more from you
another word, cut into half
i am having a hard time
figuring out what is there
with you that wants to hold
me, i stop to listen again,
some scratches from your
tongue, some gnashing from
your teeth, i am listening still,
some more words, more of
pauses, like some commas
are constructed by you on
purpose, i am tired in this,
i am impatient, you stretch
your arms to reach me again,
as i go nearer tapping my ears,
for you, yet there is this
suppression of meaning,
i am listening still, you
close your eyes and then
open them, this time some
tears fall, like ripe drops
of rain from dark clouds,

i see, your heart is broken
and your mind cannot
understand perfectly,
your mouth haggles
with words that your
tongue cannot form

simply because love is always misunderstood.

RIC S. BASTASA
Allowing Things To Happen

too early

without breakfast yet one indulges in poetry and peruses on some windows of philosophizing

perhaps

seeking for cure
or just plain grabbing of justification for what we have not done and failed to do

before the sun rises rays of light already stand-by the window frames

left by the moon on last night's drunkenness
of wisdom's nocturnal rendezvous

there are not butterflies but there will be as soon as we decide for their fluttering existences

well there are no flowers yet but soon
there will be only because we allow them to grow

at least
in the fertile grounds of the
heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Almost Twelve Noon

it is the silence
that i shall wait
when the clock strikes
twelve noon

when everyone goes out
of the door
and when i am left alone talking
with my thoughts

it is perfect for me when i begin to look around
and find out that this world is too small
for departures

RIC S. BASTASA
Almost Wanting Nothing Anymore

in the morning
is a new world handed on a golden plate
to those who are redeemed
by dreams

over ricefields
the sun shines like baby fingers holding on to mother's breasts with silent eyes content on the milk

birds fly in the skies hovering on trees
feeding on fledglings

this hometown is what we all miss away now from those overcrowded cities green grass always gives us the feelings of home scents of pines

more satisfying than any perfume we are in contact with our inner core almost wanting nothing anymore

Alone
	his is the most overused word
we are lonely
sometimes
most of the times
we are always lonely
we cater to this word like a nice breakfast
we date this word like it is a lover
we worship this word like a goddess
we never get rid of this word
because this word
is us
we are too many
to be alone
be happy then

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone Again

His wife leaves him
And he has no friends
As he drinks beer
All alone

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone Again Naturally

I have prepared my own world Like a bed of my own
In my room

Come live and sleep with me So we can be alone again

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone And So Different.....

somehow while eating together we feel some similarities sprouting.

we level up with the way we chew.
and the way we spit it out if something in there turns bitter, if not spoiled, which the taste buds can easily detect without much thinking.

we converse. we make familiarities. we all like to be the same at least for this lunch.

as soon as this is over, we walk towards our own cubicles. here, we lurk. Alone, and so different.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone And Yet Happy In A Kingsize Bed

sooner
could be better when finally you sleep happily
all alone
in a king-size bed without someone telling you, 'wake up, wake up, it is ten o'clock'

you close a door in your life
sleep in its chamber dream a lot
and cope up with the pains of those passing years....

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone But Not Unhappy Untouchable, Untouched.

since i do not follow
the crowd
naturally i am left alone,

i know how it feels to be abandoned

no, it is not that i am ostracized

it is just a consequence of my personal decision to be just myself,

to follow no one

oh yes, this is solitude
this is happiness,

am i great? nope, i am not.
i do not dream.

i keep this belief:
the world loves me as one of its inevitable truths:

alone but not unhappy untouchable, untouched.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone But Strong And Undefeated

in this world
you do not know anymore you is really on your side you are not surprised these betrayals and back stabs have become more real and you accept them as is when someone talks to you you talk back holding trust, reserving beliefs and you listen, there is no harm absorbing you swallow a part, digest, and when thoroughly chewed you throw away those which are toxic and indigestible

you find yourself alone strong and undefeated.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone In A Togetherness

at one moment
i know what togetherness is in an embrace
at night
recoiling and coiling and curling two bodies fusing as one lovely

time has a way to separate entwined beings when things begin to appear hazy
to the eye

you wake up
finding it hard to spell such a simple word

as togetherness
it is there at the tip of your tongue yet you cannot utter even a single letter you find yourself so alone like a star that has not faded with the others at noontime

it is hot in that place like an over making bread black and not fit for human consumption

you stand by the door look at the people passing by guessing each name the faces are sad
very much like yours.
Alone In Reykjavik

when i was
in Reykjavik
i have a picture taken in barnafoss

i cannot remember
who took it

yes the place was cold, so cold, despite my Columbia
gadgets
on layers and layers

yes the place was
so cold
but what was harsher was the coldness
inside my heart

you were not there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone In The Mirror Of The Night to survive the storms that come within us raging outside this body is the calm and quiet people simply do not know what is happening &

they do not ask simple because they have no right to invade the fences of our privacy we wear many faces
some many pretenses
masks
and when we are alone facing the mirror we take everything and see that innermost face the last layer that tells us the truth of our existence and then we begin that talk: that honest conversation without any taint or blame
only that gentility of the spirit that forgiving arm
embracing
a shoulder because it is cold and the feeling is shattered.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone On A Stormy Night

flashes of lightning
roaring thunder
heavy rains and flooded highways

the street lights are off.
there is total darkness the strong straight light of the car guides me towards home.

i park the car beside the
the house. I get out and open the front door.
winds blowing stronger the veranda is drenched the gutter with leaves overflows with water.

i open the door of my room.
undress myself and wipe my body.
i am dry. Silent. Uncomplaining.

i am finally alone.
I decided not to argue. Not to think.
Relax. Sleep. Dream.
Too much reason, too many arguments When what i need is only this pillow This blanket,

A window closed. A safe house.
A glass of water perhaps. But later.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone On A Hill

alone on a hill
stands a cherry tree
without leaves
only twigs
stretching to the
the moon
on this cold
and damp
night
like some kind of
human hands
and thin body
in the act
of a very deep
prayer

(except for
me
it does not
know you)

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone With You

as we walk
we feel the loneliness of two people with questions to the breeze that give us only a hug of a hush
we stroll
our hands begin to quiver
it is cold you tell me come i ask you but you have doubts about the sea
you have a space between our union
we have become
two distant boats sailing in opposite directions
i like to tell you
goodbye take your luck somewhere else
but my mouth is like a pool not giving up any of its water then we reach the destination of our journey and as expected
you are not with me
i look back and see your shadow
dissolving in the mist
i hear nothing now except the beating of
my heart
the thoughts inside my head
refusing to utter what their conclusions are and then i sit on the sand lay my head on a rock look at the night stars without thinking
what happens next
but this i must tell you i am always at home with myself
there is always this
comfort that i have not told you about even before the glacier breaks into the escape
of its waters.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alone.....

... is such a much abused, molested than ever
overused, cliche
of the century, spoken
by the majority,
a cancer, a lump,
a freckle, a wound,
a scar, but no matter how i hate this,

my God, it is still poetic!

RIC S. BASTASA
Along The River, The Stones And Pebbles

he fulfilled a promise to be strong alone with the rest of his lonely surroundings
despite the number

the storms
       and drought
the devastation
       of the quakes and floods
       no way
they cannot effect
       him
them

along the river
they all lie
       all faceless
stones
       so many pebbles
       made by God

RIC S. BASTASA
Along The Road

at noon
along the road
a bald man rides his bicycle

his shirt is green his shoes black and the road is dusty

RIC S. BASTASA
Along The Way

along the way
there was something wrong with my life i stepped upon a very sharp stone i fell over and was not able to rise again i was waiting for your helping hands.

that was the worst thing that i did.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aloof

i am
Aloof
because you are
Aloof
and Aloof are we
in this World that is Aloof too because we are Aloof because we think that this world is Aloof and the World thinks too that it is Aloof because we are Aloof.
and so on
and so Forth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Alpha Man

leading the pack of wolves
silent in the snow
killing the herd
in such a quick show blood pours
forming a river as he claims victory
around the land

inside the house
there is no talk
for all the guilt

RIC S. BASTASA
Alphabet Haiku

abcde fghijkl
mno   pee

RIC S. BASTASA
Alright.....

between your legs
my tongue is joy, and my mouth
is bliss

there is no tomorrow
here
and i accept there is dirty
feeling after,

but haven't they told you that even in such a
very short moment

no matter what you call it the feeling that you are the king of the universe and that stars explode to form new stars and new galaxies
will always be there and when everything turns dark

and silent
you will always remember

once, there was bliss.
once, i was there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Altruism

i am trying to look for it somewhere in the park
there is the lady
there signaling
her hand
she is on for something that i cannot understand
that word is missing
really

RIC S. BASTASA
Alumni Hall

surrounded by old wood you breathe wood
and you feel the wood breathing you too
all around you

in deep sleep
the past comes still dreaming of you

RIC S. BASTASA
Alumni Homecoming

those who came and those who laughed and those who feasted and shared their past glories

those who chewed and sucked the sap
of their promising
future

those who planned their now
and then

it is still them
and just them
no other

=================================================================================================

Ang mga nanganha
Ug ang nangatawa
Ug ang nagsalosal
Sa ilang tam-is nga Kagahapon

Ang nagtam-os sa
Ilang mabanagong
Ugma

Ang naghan-ay sa
Tumang Kalipay
Sa ilang karon ug Unya

Sila ra gihapon
Sila lang gihapon Alunan 2

Storm

Fumespun fury well-told Upon a turn of the windvane's tail You can't escape by magic Or the clever exercise of wit, Deft designs the mind contrives To trim the terror down to size your teeth can bite down hard Fighting the invasive chill.

The outcast passion wasting
The land, flogging the feeble trees Runs a course in your own bloodtides.
When it comes harrowing the light Or shredding the shrouds of light, Bare your head to its carress.
Naked in its eloquence embrace Yield all to the ravaging kiss.

September 9, 1988

posted by merlie alunan @ 6:04 AM

RIC S. BASTASA
Sort of a Love Poem

Alongside each other they lir Each one keeping to its side-
The ponderous land, the abysmal sea.

In the mountains, clarity and light, Grey silence of silt, implacable downdrift Sucking in skeletons of whale

Perhaps on a September evening, The sea in a playful mood may curl Upon the shore its wavelets of lace;

The somber land beguile would murmur In a voice heavy with rocks and trees,
'Stay, stay a while, a little longer,'

But the sea, tossing its frothy curls, Would gather its weedy skirts and rush away, Sighing and leaving to fade on the sand

Its bangles of coral, cowrie and kelp.
A story, my friend, without proper end.
And yet, I'm very glad we've met.

posted by merlie alunan @ 1: 02 AM

RIC S. BASTASA
To a Poet Caught in the Will of the Sea

... tell nothing in the flush of your fear speak no word that the sea may hear trust to it no name call no one enemy or friend utter not one sigh to snag on a reef

or curl round the coral keep furl song in your throat tales of fire laughter and ice cram in your brimful eyes confess nothing in the crest of your fear lock up your tongue

that when it chill fingers reach deep to pluck out your heart make no sound not one prayer vault your voice telling the wind nothing nothing to the very end nothing...

posted by merlie alunan @ 12:42 AM

RIC S. BASTASA
Alunan 5

Poet travelling over water befriend the wind let it ride easy

in the hollows
of your bones
open your bosom
for wind to go through storm rising from the abyss
could pitch your on the rocks
blow the skull apart for darkness and sun coldness and heat
to flow in without staying salt-caked and split your tongue will breed secret words of the wind's singing

now then will the wind command the billows
to bear you
the tide to lay your bones
under the moon
to bleach without rancor without bliss everything forgiven your name that wind spells on water the syllables

so very kindly very gently leave
where it will

posted by merlie alunan @ 12: 18 AM Always
always my friend in the midst of everything
somewhere
when we look at the stars no longer asking
when the moon is waning and we are not complaining

shall there be this grief
that cannot be spoken

RIC S. BASTASA
Always A Shadow

always a shadow am i
  to you
always the second fiddle am i to your feats
someday
  when my sun is at its height when my light shines
  through
the valleys of my heart i shall then be free from the obstructions of your fame.

RIC S. BASTASA
Always A Very Interesting Morning Always

And then the cock crows
and then the morning
comes
and then
you dress up for the day
and then you have become another
guest of this earth
welcoming welcoming always
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Always About You

there is no more sorrow on the leaves of the kamuning tree it rained all night early morning we are met by the glisten

of the pebbles beside those
roots

sunlight slowly treks its fingers between those gaps
you finally give up
the agony of waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Always A Poem

NOW
i know how is it
that i do not have blank walls

why i do not have walls
at all

why i cannot be silent
or be silenced

i let people in let them speak
and i listen

any man has always a story to tell

any woman
any child

an old man
dying

an earth molested
the sea
corrupted
the moon upon its dim light
those distant
stars

always always are poems

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Begging For More

at a certain point
there is a crisis be it in your career or marriage or friendship or about another love that constantly keeps on meeting

you in the
street
like a beggar

or you can be that beggar always asking for what is not given a mess
really

the unfulfilled self keeps you running

people think that you are such an active and never exhausted genius

it is the crisis that keeps you moving

the storms that push the boat farther

leading to strange lands, meeting you with strange people it is not over the oceans expand sunless days

it is not within your power to stop the journey

even if you do not do anything keeping your hands on the side of every moment, gazing and blankly accepting what is given it is hard, it is real, it is you, it is this world

the unfulfilled self keeps you running and always you are begging for more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Being There

i am not evading it anymore since it is always there and no matter how i tried to create the distance
it is always near and calling me with its own fingers there is not a sign of quitting there is no exit and for me to live like the way you live your life i must accept this: i am nothing less and nothing more than yourself
the mirror speaks and so truly
i am.

i am you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Going Back To A Place Of Origin

IT IS as house of stone above a hill where the grasses have learned to survive

The sun shines all day
The moon as usual comes only when the cicada sings

As if
sorrow has a role to play on the uncertainty of the place

I am a constant visitor there I murmur words to the grass and they all listen I sit upon the rock
and it lets me warm my butt

The place is too unlikely for one Like me
But i always go there
To worship
What i am

You do not know where it is
And so you will never know what i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Moving On

the past
is just a set of some grammatical errors
which i do not wish to correct because they are understood to mean what you think too is right
but is too tired to comment
or change

one does not have the time to go back and fret and edit
because there is so much to write
to put into the concrete pavements once again
to choose and discard
to begin again a new sentence
putting the first word on paper
bulbs lighting
a new day
sun rising from the east
and then suddenly as you look again on the screen
and look out to the window
it is another sunset
and it is too beautiful to speak
or write

there is no jutting down now it is just plain gazing
your hands on the table all pens up
and you surrender to such ending

it is too beautiful to behold
and then
at night some other dreams let the letters then reorganize themselves let the errors

reorder what should have been
or ought to be

now i am moving again into another depth
another milestone

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Moving On....

the bombing in that airport puts us to shivers

you say how lax could they be how wasted lives are taken just in the blink of an eye there is no time to dig into the causes and the effects

the first step is to bury the dead the kids, and there are twins right?

the second step is to clean that airport let the operation begin again, no need to prolong the agony and the shock

no one is to blame
life moves on like everyday it is the silence that we fear most it strikes again and creates another noise do we carry earphones and turn on to rock music? do we stay put in the house and learn to live as monks?

no way. we go to malls again buy our necessities, walk the parks, and enjoy life as usual for life is too short for all these threats if they take it again, so what?

society heals itself you pour on more fear, it gets attuned you face your killer as a friend you smile and hope, he smiles back at you you walk this world at the end as one humanity, perhaps die now but we always come back later changed, renewed, fresh, confident, fearless. wise, decent, white as lambs, brave as bulls, 飞行 higher as eagles, tall and dignified as cliffs and mountains, wide and countless as waves and winds and always, always, moving on.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Prepared

though i never look forward to the point where you may finally give up loving me,
yet, my dear,
i am always prepared for the
possibilities,
my heart is always ready my mind always open my feet always ready to dust off every magic that you put on my toes i like to think that when everything is over i still must know how to sing and dance

my own music.

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Read Between The Lines...

pause between some lines and read
the void

pause some more and breathe
let the void simmer let every empty space sink deeper

find something of weight and substance
like a word that you wish to expand and live there for a while sow the seed
and let it spread like a vine

that is how a good idea is born
and then see the morning sun bringing you some strands of light

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Remember

always remember that when a fake dog
takes a poise on your sofa at the middle of your living room
or your study

try looking try listening carefully

it never barks.
it is your silly puppy without a mommy that barks

in the mirror. barking at its image waggling its tail

the fake ones do not bark, remember that, and i know that you know that i know about this plasticity
between us.

it is you that barks almost every morning when i begin to write a poem and all the while for years and years i have always been silent.

that is the difference between us.
and let me tell the obvious. do not be hurt.

i am fake and you are are angry and i never was once.
you breathe. i don't anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
always remember
that if there is darkness there is always a candle waiting to be lighted

that if there is emptiness there is always a space waiting to be filled

that in loneliness
there is always a beloved waiting for your word

each is ready for your initiation

remind the rest
that something comes and yearns
and by its own volition springs satisfaction

fill the void
cheer the beloved

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Remember My Dear Caterpillar

always remember what the black bird once chirped that wise bird long buried in the sands and leaves of time that which angers you conquers you

that which does not kill you strengthens you

that which you love
enslaves you

and that which loves you with fire from her eyes and cinders from her heart may soon make you the most vulnerable link in the chain of creation

a caterpillar crawling in the world of roses either it soon turns to stone a pebble or even dust

with no promise of metamorphosis
once in the life of the trusting butterfly

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Remember My Friend Poet

new to this site? new to this art? this scribbling and nibbling and quibbling and clicking of metaphors from air and other figures of speech from out of nowhere this is not the outer space but it makes you feel just the same the usual floating and fleeting and painting and fainting and gloat and bloating and sinking and shrinking and yes sometimes blunder and surrender and plunder welcome to this world to our world your world a world of imagination imaginary bowls and plates and spoons and forks but with real rice and fish in there where the coffee is hot forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Remember.......

after the lapses,
i conclude: this is a hormonal matter, a secretion

when it gets out of my system, another

scene falls, this man becomes strong,

and discriminating
and can tell which is which. This is right.

Not until the filling

comes again, the lymph nodes, the gonads,

rebuilt is the corner where you are again

blind and tasteless,
and you love what is actually detestable, but let it go, just

let it go, it gets out of your system again and here you are as real as real, now

hold on, keep this state ecstatic, you are you, and you now know which is true, and

real and divine, keep this, make a record,

mark it, another mile stone, always remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Tasteless To You.

there is a bridge which i did not take the river under it runs
through
there is a water there
always
tasteless to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Always The Vested Interest...

the cat grins
beneath those soft feet are bear claws

RIC S. BASTASA
Always There Is More To Life

life is not a box of chocolates,
it's a bouquet of flowers
colors of delight scents of desire
so light
to the heart

it is what i hold
for you
in my hands
life so full of flowers

but always there is more to life
we feel it
when the bouquet is finally thrown to the
air
and another one
expectant holds it dear

someday
life will be different a tree full of fruits
at night
fireflies in freedom to shine
their own
lights

RIC S. BASTASA
Always There Will Be Something To Write for as long as the grain of sand is in the mouth of the mother pearl so there will be pearls it is the pain that makes it it is the wound that makes the scar it is the blur that makes the eyes work hard to see it is the haze and the mist that make us stand and wait and carefully see to find what is there when the light of the sun finally comes it is what is inside me that i cannot just tell you that makes me write and for as long as i am muted by your presence i will always have something to write for as long as my tongue is tied and nothing slips from there i will always write

because there is no other outlet no vent
for as long as i fear your wrath i must continue to write from the bondage of my teeth and tongue my hands and mind

shall find its way to freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Uncaught.

a fugitive
finds a shell

goes inside the labyrinths without
a string

a fugitive loses himself
and he likes it

for no law shall find him

the genuine loss is when you, yourself

cannot even find you

and that is what fugitives like

always uncaught.

RIC S. BASTASA
Always Unfinished

some words fly like honeybees and i am flattered as they come near me and say

this is the place
this is the place
where nectar is sweetest and they all stop and buzz and busy themselves so disappointed, i am so sorry, i tel them, how unfortunate for all of you to be here and waste your time at this early morning

i am not the flower of your mind, i am just a little bit of this bitter man and then the bees start to fly away like words vanishing from my mind and here i am as you can well see

alone

RIC S. BASTASA
Always You Ask Me...

these had always been the same questions despite our being together

'do you really love me? and i am caught with the same answer
'...so much', with a pause and a gaze beyond the bareness of your back and the softness of your hair the sweetness of your cheeks and you know it well that when we kiss i close my eyes as though there is no other option sometimes i feel guilty though about this dichotomy of my brain and my heart two mistrusting friends who cannot really love each other but cannot live apart

i put my arms around you as though you are one of my planets and i am your only sun.

RIC S. BASTASA
always, after something is done, a word written on paper, filling in the blank sheet with something, there is always that void, which comes next, asking why? and telling you there is still something left out there and you must look for it a pin? a button, or a lock of hair things getting smaller than your nail and you try to voice it out tonight? No. Tomorrow morning.

No. At dawn when everything is silent and you have all the power to think, and grope and dig and crawl into the recesses of your brain.

write me, write me, i am almost dead. Says the letters scattered on your bed.

you want to sleep. They fly like fireflies above your face and they dance in circles.

you are tired. Your eyes close like the rock that kept the dead body
of Christ.

yes. at 3 a.m. again.
leave me.
Always, It Is Poetry Time

Life is filled with work to do, Always there is, with me, Poetry time, an escape, like you Were so tirelessly breathing
And then
Take a cat’s nap, in a corner Of your mind on a frame hung On the solid wall,
Always it is poetry time with me, Otherwise, life is nothing but One that is hammered with work to do, Feeling like a funeral, like a murder scene, & Without,
Poetry time, there is just a lonely face, Reading and writing books and books And serious looks in crazy nooks,

And where can smile be? Tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Am At Work

won't you believe it i am in the middle of my work and in between
i type some words,
which i may call
a poem, like this one

those that see me
do not realize this

poetry is in between our dull moments poetry is an insertion of our routine
poetry is not bread
it is the cheese
the ham
the mayonnaise
the pickle or the lettuce in between the slices of sandwich

poetry is what goes in the middle of meaningless endeavors

poetry is unprofessionalism defrauding the employer with his paid hours

this it. The fool has not notice.

this fool.

RIC S. BASTASA
Am I In Or Am I Out?

beyond all your hands
i shall be another dove when you try to enclose me i coo, begging, i come with a song mistaken as pleasure it is a philosophy of
freedom,
an entreaty that you shall never fully understand
for i myself is that
stranger
between a door
confused whether he is in or
out,
when i fly away
i shall carry only my own wings i leave my claws
and beak
and some feathers
so i may be as light
as a sigh

i need to see a door and feel it with my hands when i open it

how can i? my hands
have been bartered for
wings
that i always dream of.

RIC S. BASTASA
Am I Still Here..........

obsessed it is more than often that visits are done

the picture tells it most felt on top of his chest
near to the heart

of course
the picture is inanimate and so
is the place, the window is alive only with the wind that from time to time
gets in

pain is abundantly
growing
like weeds
and mussels

'the sooner you
get it over with the better' always is the message
from friends and kin

pain is better than numbness,
pain assures
that you are still alive
rather than the numbness which makes
you wonder

'am i still here? '
the question roams
around the room
looking for
the answer....

RIC S. BASTASA
Amadeus Mozart, Con.K-365

What they adore
Is his genius
His music
Soaring to the heavens Without so much Effort

Effortlessly magnificent Amadeus Mozart
And his music
Tossing me
From sea cap to sea cap
In my sea dreams

Piano notes ruffling
Like the windy beach Waffling to the shore

Piano notes
Trickling
On my window pane
Like a soft rain Playful
To the vines
On my window pane

What they adore
Is his genius
Soaring to the heavens

I envy him
Amadeus Mozart
His music grows like a river forever flowing

I do not mind if in there I drown And die with a single note

He died in the sea drinking all the salty notes Of Amadeus Mozart
Dehydration in the most musical fashion.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is the dog in you perhaps your previous life that scatters i've seen how you still
sit there
scratch yourself as though you are infested with fleas, and i ask you to rise from it
daily perhaps like the sun shine from there

make it dramatic and perhaps even sensual
from behind those mountains that look like the breasts of Amanda.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amantes Sunt Amentes

i leave to you love
keep it
i move away and shall promise not to come back

i am taking back my sanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amarelinha

Draw a pattern of Rectangles
On the ground
And I will throw
A stone
Inside one of The spaces

Then I hop
And hop Avoiding this Line and that
To retrieve
What stone I Have thrown

In my life
Let us talk

About my life Seriously
Now, I jump

From past
To present
To present
And past
And future in A very confusing Manner

And then
Time, this time Line does not Exist anymore

My life is that Stone and you
Are one of those Spaces
That rectangle
I jump in

And then we stop
This hopscotch
It is dark and we Have to stop playing
We must go home
Now

RIC S. BASTASA
Amazed By His Own Ripples....

at night the struggle is evident.

i did not mind it
i have mine too.

all the days the struggle continue working like a buffalo my body has no time for rest the night becomes a blessing i sleep soundly.

the weariness of the body gives the soul its rewards you stare at those hours and go inside of your conscience now the wee hours of the day have become furies

what is your mission now?
to hover like a bird on a cloud?

it is hard when you have no ground to set upon your feet floating is horrible and being lost to any direction is a terror of the mind, of the imagination, settle down, anchor, steady your boat if possible leave it, let the storm bury it, and learn the wisdom of the child sitting upon a stone throwing a stone amazed by his own ripples....

RIC S. BASTASA
Amazed By Its Wings, We Have Instead Crushed It To Death, sometimes our frail human nature makes an error,

like how we caught a butterfly in our hands and with so much love for beauty, amazed by its wings, we have instead crushed it to death, but as this is just a matter of butterfly and hand, we disregard guilt and consider this as just an ordinary mistake that we often as children do, but there is an error which burns humanity, like this man who just made the guilty free, and the innocent suffer for twenty years in jail, like one who made the wrong press, and instead of saving the kid, exploded the whole building wasting ten lives of a cat,

sometimes one simply has to bear with what is there already, and this is the legend of the story how silence as a princess lives forever in the gallows of the castle of abandon

RIC S. BASTASA
Amazed By What Is Going On

at this moment
you want to say nothing.

you watch Turing forgiven by the Queen of England and then the Fall of Ming and the War of the Warlords it is seven o'clock in the evening logic works again, everything fits.

the principle of autonomy, every idea works for itself.

your eyes are sleep but sleep is nil. At the red sofa the brown dog looks intently at you.

Amazed by what is going on.

RIC S. BASTASA
what i hold inside my pocket is just a pebble.
it is all that i have now.

i take it again put it on the table and look at its face closely you know that it has no eyes or hands or feet, i let it stay there as though there is only one pebble in this universe of sands, i listen. i let time stop for a while.

i look at the sky tonight and there are so many stars.
they are so distant you know that and you feel that i take the pebble back in my pocket, there will be no exchange, it is enough for my anchor it is now my own rock.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ambition And The Caterpillar

basically it is the story of a caterpillar

kicking other cocoons
and hundreds of feet

it takes a lot of hard work not to see what lies beyond

up there
there is nothing, we know it, yet why?

why this kicking of asses?

why this blunder and plunder?

we know that at the end the caterpillar turns into a butterfly and flies away and become gone from our eyes,

yet where? where is it now?

all we see are broken wings of dust beneath our dirty feet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ambivalence

it easy to spot
our ambivalence

our lips want to kiss but your hands
push my chest away

i want to hug you
and make love
with you
but my mind says
i may be
into a long range
trouble

i am thinking of a room where we can think

and speak our minds
where we can forget the dangers of our game

i reserve a day
for both of us
where we can simply sit and do not discuss

morality and what people may say

yet my feet take the cab and the next thing i know

i am in a plane warmed by my own black jacket
my arms folded
my hands in my pockets

i am beside
someone else
and the plane
touches down

and i cough
and it rains
and i step out
and i hide
in another room
far away from
you

and i tell myself
i will be missing you

the word is goodbye
it is never hello
it is never us

it is not the heat
but the coldness of our coward hearts

RIC S. BASTASA
Ambot Ning Buwan

ambot ning
buwan
sige mang halok
sa aping sa disyertong balason

ambot ning adlaw
sigi mang
halog sa bukid
nga sunog

ambot ning dagat
sige mang handom
sa patag

ambot ning bato
nahigugma man
sa gunting

ambot ning papel naghandom mag
uwan

ambot ning uwan
ganahan mag
baha

ambot ning tabian gapadako man
sa baba

ambot ning karsada
wa may utlanan

ambot ning kahilom
nahimo mang
talagsaon....
Ambot Og Nahinumdom Pa Ba Si Marcelino

Usahay makakatawa ko nga mag-inusara Niining lawak sa akong kabatan-on Nga usahay akong pagaabton.

Kay dinhi baya samtang bag-ong nagmata Ang gwapita nga si Maya Sa dihang iyang edad lima ka tuig pa,

Dinhi sa katre nga nagbung-aw sa bintana, Nikalit og kawat ug halok si Marcelino Sa iyang nipsis kaayo nga aping

Upat pa iyang panuigon, ug iyang purol mubo.
Ug bisan sa iyang pagkawalay-buot Nasihag ko baya ang mga ugat sa tungaw

Nga mitapot sa iyang nanghubag nga itlog.
Sakto gayod si Freud. Dili nato angay Kompynsahan ang mga tungaw sa kagahapon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amelie

jumping in the clouds looking for dreams
unsettling for the lump
of the earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amelie Is Beauty

how could you be prouder of your origin?

you've seen that Amelie
many times

but each one each moment
is an other pleasure

.And what about the music?
Nothing to add,
there is enough comment it is easy to understand what is perfect

whether happy or
sad
there is this kind of listening that ponders

yesterday it was the music of my mother's death today it is for my sister's marriage
and another one
for my nephew's baptism

the years have still more to offer
i keep waiting
waiting and waiting for more

for love.
Amen, Amen...

for the few grains of rice that i have given you and for the slice of fish, God has given me more than what i have parted,

God has given me a house, a rice granary, a thousand loaves of bread, an ocean of fish

plus a book of poems, plus the nightingale songs

My heart sings praises for Him.
For every grain of rice that i have shared with a hungry neighbor, God has replenished me with truckloads.

FOR THE FEW cents that i have given as fare for the old woman who wishes to go home, God has repaid me money in bundles.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amen...

If i can only have you even for a moment when i shall finally lose hold of my own arms perhaps i can then die without regret even if i have to fall from a cliff
and then be nameless forever in that abyss
of love
then i can tell myself that i have never died in vain.

RIC S. BASTASA
i agree with you
i'd put all my trust
beforehand

in the beginning
till the end and they are telling me

you killed somebody
and i close my eyes and say nothing

and they could not believe what i am doing and they tell me again more are killed senselessly
and you tell me
this must be done to save this country to make this country a livable place for the incoming
generation

for our children and for their children
and i again close my eyes and covered my ears

and i open my eyes and look at the skies
and i find another world which i never wish to live
with you

i am helpless
and you have no use of me it is my silence

it is our deepest silence and on the other hand it is their noise
their loudest noise
hand and in hand you shall never change

we resort to time
we beg for history
and then at the last resort
we say we believe in God in the name of the Father the Son and the Holy Spirit

Amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
america, i wonder what snow is,
they say it is cold and pure and smooth and too fragile to the warmth of our fingers, in a second dissolving into tears, i may be wrong, i know it has no salt of the earth, i know that for certain for i have taken a little of chemistry and have studied some ramifications of the weather and have even tasted the whirls of storm in my country of brown monkeys, brothers all, in the hinter hills.

i think snow is cool, I haven't touched it yet. but i have heard about some rumors, that i better stay here and not touch it anymore, because i may break my heart since it sings utter loneliness.

i am bombarded with apples though in the market stalls they are now cheap some of the best not from America but China and Japan.

I do not like the taste of apples.
Neither shall i like, i know, the taste of snow.

So finally, i have decided to just stay here and rot.
Who knows, I can be the best humus for change who knows, also for growth?

Yes, they call it progress in the wilderness and poverty of the Third World.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amidst The Crowd, I Am A Pebble

i

the boy's band plays country music
on deaf sounding guitars

ii

a few guests
do not have hands
	heir eyes
feast on the food served by young girls wearing ethnic dresses

iii

the resto
is beside a river where nipa palms grow naturally

iv

i have my choco
and sip after sip
i look beyond this usual charm

v

a boat slides on the
water
peacefully
amidst this small crowd i am a pebble sinking
on the water trying to find
its bottom

RIC S. BASTASA
Amidst The Forest Trees

amidst the forest trees
i, the firefly
below the lush of leaves kept my own light

fluttering in the middle of the night
the hearth keeps
burning

RIC S. BASTASA
Amidst The Noise And The Haste

amidst the noise of people coming and going passing you by (the they want all the while to stay and have a talk with you for whatever but you ignored them as you are busy with other preoccupying things and events and places and ideas, you write and keep on writing still in your journal, the poems on used pages, the vandalism on the walls and the painted words on the fences of the house where you live) you ask, what is this sea of people doing here around you making all this whirlpools and waves trying to drown you? or put you in a breathless space? or pull you down in the oceanfloor of meaninglessness?

you look at them, and you do not find any meaning to their flow, their movements anywhere, they all seem to have no specific directions like dusts and water bubbles only to spread and burst what then? do you allow yourself to be drowned in their noise and haste and waste?

look inside you, investigate the available evidence of your heart find there the magical silence the wisdom of your past pick them one by one like colored stones in the beach put them in a jar and look carefully the pieces the stones of what you are you are never like them you are in them but you can never be one like them you are unique, and free and always the center of your own created universe

be good, be kind and sing sweetly your strong silence live, live the way you like to live just be yourself and to moments of haste and noise close your eyes shut your mouth and stay peacefully in the home of your heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Amidst What Is There And What Is Real.

it is a sad decision
indeed
to stay inside this room and deny yourself the right to watch the coming of the
morning sun
between the bosom of two
mountains
for here you are imagining what the sun is like within the cubicles of your own imprisoning disposition.

whatever is written gains no significance for it is another imagination another lie
amidst what is there and what is real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amo Ut Invenio

i shall be picking flowers
along the way
i shall whistle away my fears and all of my dismay worry not what shall be next for me i shall be as happy as i'm destined to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Among The Clouds

among the clouds
you float
and then you argue with me about the earth

how can i ever believe you?
when your feet
have become cottons
and your brain has become this gusty air filled with empty thoughts

RIC S. BASTASA
Amor Et Melle Et Felle Est Fecundississimus and another thing

beloved
my love too is rich with honey
and venom...

RIC S. BASTASA
Amor Patriae

like pebbles on the shores assumes many colors and forms others take the streets and voice out dissent

others listen to their idol and clap their hands

others work beyond borders missing lots of what could have been within their embrace others do it on the secret caves and
mountains
leaving kin and families others have concluded: terrorize others take the last resort of diplomacy ask them and they will all say all for the sake of my people all for the love of God and country.

so bombs explode, roses bloom pavements are made, lines are destroyed arms are sold and arms are bought planes are hit, children maimed mothers weep, as fathers kill.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amor Vincit Omnia

conquer me

love

conquer me

for i am the lonely child the father of all lonely men

RIC S. BASTASA
Amoral...

Beyond morality and besides immorality, lies the gray area of amorality...

it is an exploration of the possibilities of our humanity where we are like innocent children without any bias for anything that we think is new and feasible....

something that must perfect the art of sharing complete the fruiting of the works
of love....

not just about things, or events a book, a dinner at the mountaintop, a conversation at the ridge, a time in bed, or even the sharing of some dreams

those that do not bother us after that which makes us comfortable despite its strangeness the one that they call wild and impossible

but which they have not tried themselves as the restraint was only existing in their minds with the heart still thirsty and hungry and vehemently disagreeing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amorality

the flesh refuses to understand the code of wont's, like a river it surges taking the route of least resistance filling every nook, every vacant space of the heart's desire it is warm, and plump, and always pulsating, alive, it breathes air and fire, and sees its prey and pursues it, and bites and chews like teeth and tongue you may shy away, and take the code and fall into the chasm of regret you may run away and deny what commands this flesh makes how can you? it is you from the tip of your hair to the tip of your toe. how can you ever deny? you're all covered by skin, fixed and held.

RIC S. BASTASA
Amorality

when i see another petal of a rose falling to the ground which meets it with the silence of indifference under the moist soil the worm sleeps in content as the sun shines again in rage till noonday as the clouds shift their positions as the children begin to fly their kites as their mothers watch and think of other coming images as the world spins and gives us nights and days: who can ever think that in all these there can be a possible classification between sinning and not sinning?

events now are traveling faster than light all these neutrinos of change and sparks and awes and ahs
and sooner the story of disobedience and apples and snakes and innocence and guilt shall be erased from the face of this fast winged earth flying towards an unknown destination

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Man Watching The Stars From His Deathbed

obviously as no one is present to read him
some poems
he simply waits
for the stars
to come out
in the heavens
from the open
window
of this deathbed

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Poem

an old man
walks downhill
following the path
that he once prided

at the foot
of the hill lies the six-foot hole

on the side
is the banyan tree climbed by this persistent vine
with white flowers

the place is calm
butterflies pay it
more visits.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Idea About Our Life Here

we belong here in fact we know the ins and outs of the many doors we open windows and let light in we know when to close and when to hide
do not think that we are different
we are all the same breathing mechanisms
complete
with defenses and offenses
do not be amazed
there are more to suffering
inside the room
when we cry we see to it that no one hears

after all
it has always been our solemn obligation to please to deny
and then to confirm what is not found here
and what is supposedly grand out there

RIC S. BASTASA
An Abandoned Love Song

you abandon a love song it hangs on the bus

as you leave home
seeking for the comfort
out there

a very lonely song

no one picks it up to take it home
or even
to just whistle it
for the meantime
along the railways

you will
soon regret

that song shall become the hit song
tomorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
An Absurd Idea...

i'll make it
crisp this time
not so salty,
deep fried,

well thought of
before it is served

take it with your bare hand into your mouth
let your tongue savor it let it stay for some minutes swallow it

do not tell me
forget it.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Accident

Among the rain and lights
I saw the figure of a woman hazy in the rain against the furious lights of the car in the middle of the city it is tense
i mean the feeling when you are in the middle of the street and it is raining and there are furious lights of the car on a busy street and what you see is the figure of a woman against the howls of the sirens of the ambulance and people running wanting to see what happens finally inside that
yellow line

RIC S. BASTASA
An Aching Heart...

an opportunity for love to grow and be wise given the chance again despite it
it will always love again
because
hearts always exist with love as justification and aching hearts are no exception

RIC S. BASTASA
An Act Of Art....

some quit
for good, others
complain,
whine, and curse,

envy is a normal
feeling,
accept it, and move on

others are deaf
and blind, and mute
and they are just
there

honing their craft
being out there is also an act of art

creating and re-creating thanking for all
the love....

RIC S. BASTASA
An Active World, Alive And Happy...

between
katipunan and
dipolog another bridge
is repaired,
cars are detoured
on the right side of the
river,
the asphalted roads
are thickened,
it is the wear and tear thinning them out,
vehicles line up
to create order.
in punta we pass by
a checkpoint,
motorcab drivers wait
for their cue,
along the way vendors
sell lanzones and
durian,
when i arrive home
the black dogs wag
their tails
dance and meet me
with all
their happy barkings, oh if they could only
talk,
we could have heard that this world after all, like those bridges and roads and fruit vendors is filled with activities, all telling us that there is happiness, uniqueness
of each moment,
that this is not
the place for the dead
but for the living.

then dinner, and music
and peace,
with the family,
as the dogs
lie outside, waiting
for their share.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ad: Prolix (For Manolita)

Who uses PrOlix?

Law enforcement
Military
Outdoor enthusiasts
Olympic shooters
Target shooters
Biathletes
Homeowners
Collectors

Designed for Firearms

Lubricates and cleans Waterproof
Inhibits rust/corrosion Eliminates oil/grease Preserves wood Environmentally friendly Safe to use on Glock polymers

PROLIX is a registered trademark Dry lube technology

Use prolix on Valentine's day.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Admission Of Weakness

the heart has no reason

I've been thinking so hard
why i am
in love with you

if i have to listen from
reason
you are never the one that i must love and dream to live
with

i keep a certain distance hoping that reason may finally triumph wear its crown like a king of wills

i am listening to reason and it is telling or must tell me
that you are such a disgusting temptress

there are so many grounds why i must detest you
we are never at par
nothing
for the liking

i am confident that this love may soon die or fade or simply go away or that i must abandon it that i must run away from it as fast as a slip of my tongue
when i see you again
however
my very own reason bends, kneels, begs to touch you again
so i may live and be more alive again

the hearth is dumb dumb, dumb
moron,
a clown

but it triumphs just the same it struts down the street and mocks me
for all my denials

i am weak
but i assure myself it will be only for this moment...

the heart is hysterical now it is a jackal

RIC S. BASTASA
An Adventure

what would i choose for this adventure?
a boat ride? a cruise?
a jet plane for instant arrivals?
what will i do there anyway except to loaf
and take a view of the parks and paths

on my feet for an adventure please do not think about death

we have so much of it already on daily doses

RIC S. BASTASA
An Adventure From Coron Island To El Nido sailed from the island of coron that early morning of saturday leaving hanging cliffs and rowdy boat with blue and white sails passing by the big waves of the pacific ocean rocking the wooden boat that we have taken for the trip to el nido: clouds like feathers hang above us as we go coastal passing white shorelines teeming with coconut trees seemingly the other islands are not inhabited and we heard the sound of mocking monkeys playing with the hanging vines of Comping.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Advice
	ry making it short,
as a syllable, crisp
like popcorn
make it quick,
like a nibble
because they don't have the luxury of time.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Advice To A Friend

there is a point in not having to say anything when we really have nothing to say but there is no point in not writing what we cannot say what we do not want to say what we keep on keeping like a bomb inside our heads let it explode! ~ write everything that disturbs that tickles and even the one that kills come to think about something redeeming too, like my thoughts of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Advice To A Problematic Student

he sailed two rivers and now he is lost which river did he take only to find himself at the middle of this christina falls

i am a lazy problem solver and i let the problem solve itself i ask him to sit cross his legs and fingers and stay calm and cool

she says she keeps two women and i tell him let them pull their hair and slap each other
and then
see for yourself in the mirror how handsome have you become.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Affair With A Surreal Beloved

one can have a love affair with a full moon beside some stars

you lay your body on that veranda upon a wooden bed beside you a glass of cold coca-cola the moon spreads its light upon you and you feel that softest warmth on your hair, your face, your belly, your feet it is that moment when you close your eyes that your beloved arrives surreal on the bed of roses that your mind has prepared for her.

RIC S. BASTASA
An After Love Poem

making love with you gives me the depths of the ocean

your arms are failing me i fall like a sigh from the lips without the wetness of love's natural delights

i hold your body tightly like the darkness that clings to dusk like light that makes an island from a pole

i utter love as you close your eyes i know this pain
i know your pain
i know the house that you left the place that you miss i am this lonely island and you are a drift wood floating

in the sea

waves are taking you here gifts of the silence of the world too drifting in this loneliness of the galaxies

what are we here for?
tell me? dead drift wood to another dead island to another dead sea?

there is life that we must choose a pulse
a vibrant heart
an excited hush
a wandering wind
a flickering star
a bright moon
a silvery sea

oh hear, the dolphins are here they are singing!

RIC S. BASTASA
An Afternoon

when they all leave and you are left all alone by yourself you reflect upon the shape of the wall you check if it has gained a little length
whether it has widened
a few inches for all the days gone by unnoticed
you stare upon the walls around you you check on your nails you bite one
it tastes salty
there is this bitterness in your heart you grope for a word to describe it
in one setting
there is something that screams you silence it you stand and close the door and leave you walk along the silent corridors
you think
what if this darkness goes on and on what if this bitterness continues day by day what if the walls grow to become this big house and you are inside it not finding anymore
any door any window
what if?

RIC S. BASTASA
An Afternoon Poem

it is all coffee without cream do sugar, you say please, no sugar no cream it is all about cold bread nothing electrifying unlike the softness of the arms of the beloved it is about the coldness of bread and the hotness of coffee less the cream and the sugar nothing sweet really

you guess it: there is something bitter not from the water (for why should water be bitter?) not from the cup (is there such a cup which has a bitter taste?) guess further: you are wrong. it is bitter, it is really bitter.

it comes from the heart. Not from the saucer or the spoon.

it is the heart that is bitter. do not attempt tasting it.

it can be toxic because it is mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Afternoon Poem

When i write this one,
this general idea about something with nothing definite in particular falling short of the images required of a poem,
i really have no audience in mind i am just writing like talking a walk or sitting on a bench watching some of you
passing by,
definitely, this is an afternoon poem and that is what is definite about it

i am tired
but i cannot rest when i arrive in the house only the dogs meet me there is no one here
no note
left on the fridge
there is only this silence that keeps me company and the image of the wagging tail of
a dog
the only loyalty that seems to abide by the rules
of this
game, well,
i should not be surprised it has been this way and i like it that way now this nonirritating
spectator

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ailing Wind

the night
comes in and meeting you
could have been
one sunny day
for me except that your eyes are never sun and neither
moon

the world says:
out there is an island of light
where the sun
will always be mine

and so i leave you
with a word from an ailing wind

RIC S. BASTASA
An Allegory

when i was small
i was taught that the meaning
of my life
lies inside the big dome it is where destiny lies all explanations possible are contained in that book kept inside the golden casing,

life turns sour
and bitter and sweetness seems to be slippery like
an eel,

the dome does not help
and so i turned away walked outside and found this new place outside the dome

trees and grass and some dragonflies
clouds and cones
fine mornings
calm seas

there are lots of shapes and colors and odors
more explanations become possible they’re born like buds turning into
petals

and freedom is like a child running wild and talking in chatters
so many songs
and poems
and conversations flow without fences

i like it here
even without you
i am hurt
but it is different now i have befriended the pebbles and the sands
the sun is terrible but on a night like this the moon comes once in a while bringing me another sense and meaning some stars sing
they help

RIC S. BASTASA
An Allegory For A Virgin....

the eyes are submarines every moment is a nighttime beautiful sea creatures of this mind forever appeasing
first meetings of lovers
more like
it,

i refer to art, this is the one that always brings a new day to me sunshine is not the usual sunshine on the fields of hay it is always new and different
always the first time virgins in bed
on love's unwearied imaginations the eyes are submerged seeing what is not here for the first time clouds bluer than ever rotated by a fan suns hanging on the ceiling behave like the stars in those heavens those trees shedding off leaves upon a teasing wind

dogs howl, the rain comes like hair upon the slender neck of a beloved doors close, windows open, the house staying put upon love and the star of the show is silence restrained too much restraint

joy contained exclusively on those arms tightened like a jet surging parting the tight legs of a virgin sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Allegory Of Our Poetry

we are all riding in the same boat of MV Poetry we all eye an island of our dreams we want to feel the ecstasy of words, the sensation of sound the scent of imagination the Chairman of the Board sees to it that there must be a proper classification of all passengers strict segregation in accordance with social status and economic standing the color of the eyes the smoothness of the skin the mark of class in the foreskin we know our states we get our economy tickets we never have fine dining and nice classical music we only have our own packed food, cold and all that kind of cheaper stuff

but we all know how to please ourselves we the poor and the underprivileged or the middle class that we want to think as a matter of elevating ourselves a little bit

this backbone of society someone gets an FM radio turns it on and we have music then and then we dance all night

among our kind of class
holding on to each others' weaker arms

those who die in their fame are put in their most expensive coffins and those who are rich and privileged like have private rooms hot showers
expensive silk linens softest pillows
exclusive parties and dark forest cakes and red sparkling wines and chosen conversations recited their own poems and are applauded
with their own special musicales

....i make a conclusion it is also true here, very much exactly like it when the boat shall finally sink all scamper for life just the same.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Allegory Of Our Sinless Meeting....

beyond our two flesh
i hang on to the twig of the divine
i am the black bird
with a wide
span of wings
i am heavier
than a stone on your neck
but i carry on like a cliffhanger i will let my body fall and i shall not use my wings

i trust the sea
and i am a friend of the full moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Alley...

i am just an alley
where you must pass i only listen to the waters
after the rain
and like you they pass me by i am a friend of the gutter we speak the same
language
there are stones on my belly the rats come at night the sweepers on bright days
i am not a street
and so i have no name yet.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Allowance For Some Mistakes Of How We Perceive Things To Be

our thoughts have what in them an allowance for the possibilities that what they perceive are just illusions of the mind far away from the flesh and bone of the things-in-themselves a mirage, or just the image of a mirage, come to think of it, a man that you hate or love, could not be me, but the image of the man in your dream in your mind like air dripping from your forehead to your lips you taste and feel it but it does not taste and feel as you have seen it there are possibilities of optical illusions, and what you see are evil come to think of it, could just be as good as your disguises.

you are made to believe that what you see is what you get. but there are those which your eyes do not see which your eyes failed to find. what you feel is also what you get on such matters that only your heart can feel.

i have written this because you wish to see my love through your eyes. you grieve because you have not seen that red flower in the blue sky. it is not in the mind, it is right there in that garden when you close your eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Altercation

when i step there for the first time i know the difference between silence and shutting up, that soundless scream that only your ears can hear and people wonder what is happening inside your tiny world where you always live and
there is no
specific address as the streets wind up to nowhere the world is full of noise and as you see you imagine people as like you all in the flurry of the winds of disgust
and then i ask you to see the light at the post it is 6:30 in the evening and lights begin
to make a claim of their own islands
amidst the crowd of passers-by
i ask you once again to listen to the clicking of the watch inside your
heart
and try to erase the imagined scream
i agree it is an evening loveless in itself
there is only you
and no one else
for i am but a stone to you in your garden
of sands
i urge you to listen carefully and close your eyes and open them
once again
searching for the red color of the longing
it is deep into the night when trees are but
shadows
and the winds create a stir of falling leaves
those that last only for the night
and i assure you
there is nothing
here but leaves
yes, leaves and
leaves
softly falling to the grass carried by the sounds of the flurry of invisible wings
and i am telling you
it could be
hope dressed like maple.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ambiguity Of Us

long after midnight you sit on the floor you wish there was flashing of lightning and the thrill of thunder or that there be fires on the sky like meteors flickering like wishing stars or the moon burning like red coals, the stars more curious like signals of light of the nuclear war you do not wish her to leave you want still to be in bed for love (you like it to be lust) the heavy rains have long stopped and you still remember the rush of the waters from the mountains i have always wondered what is in store for us here we are naked and truthful i have, perhaps wasted my life trying to take you from your own kind of death you wish to cease breathing as always and it has become too irritating i had a dream last night, that i emailed you something like: please be gentle to yourself but you were away on a trip and you have no answer (the phone says you are sick or shall i say madly in love with someone else)

RIC S. BASTASA
An Announcement

he has
an announcement
to make

he has one thing to say

lady justice
is still working in his country

even without
the cooperation of the majority
of those whose robes remain blacker than ever

the people
have not spoken
yet
but there is rejoicing
from their hearts

the need to walk in the streets
is dispensed with

the cheat and
the liar
the corrupt
and the
dishonest
has finally fallen
'bad karma!
bad karma!'
the islands are shouting

the sea is calm
the night is cold
joy is jumping

RIC S. BASTASA
An Argument

IT is like our guns.
We do not need it
to kill,
killing is not at all times illegal,
self-defense for instance our way of defending ourselves from the assassins
the hired killers and the mercenaries of modern times,

the law on divorce for instance
who likes a divorce?
you do not marry only to think that you have to be separated from the one you love
someday

but there comes a time when you need it
and you cannot use it because it is not there

and you will regret not allowing it in the system

just like a condom
who likes a condom?
it is a wall between us our flesh not touching
each other

but there are times
when you need it
because there is that need and you have to be safe who needs guns, condoms, divorce? it a matter of choice

so bring them in, let the man in his wisdom choose let him be responsible time is nothing human more than us who can deny the options available in this world it is fair

make all these available so when you need them you can avail of them

let the options be myriad for in all these activities of choices or choosing we become more human and even more divine in what we really want to become....

RIC S. BASTASA
An Argument This Morning

dislodged from a frame of inspiration (perhaps thinking that the reason why
poetry is born is because the muse is beautiful luscious and edible
&
so since there is no
one there anymore
with the muse trampled
upon
and there is no more
light
from the moon)

he quits and dramatically ends with a quip
that poetry is
dead

not bad, but not completely
true
poetry has no life
how can it die?

RIC S. BASTASA
An Argument With You

you must not expect that i give up the world that i built for all my years my sweat my labor my dreams shall they all perish this minute just for me to prove that i love you? if you love me enough you must not attempt to destroy my world
you must let it grow and lavish upon itself the fruits and flowers and seeds as i have loved you and as you have loved me we must keep this secret garden no one must know not even the left hand
of yourself
we make this love hidden from the eyes of all of them a love  misunderstood as sin

for in the darkness of the nights of our beings this love glistens as the most beautiful star you must wake in the middle of the night to see how beautiful it is when left alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Arrangement

.. and so we went to her place in a house where her only furniture is a bamboo bed

she holds my face
she kneels down
she kisses my hand
as though she is my slave

... and so something which should not have happened happened there's that tinge of guilt i wanted her to say she loves me but she didn't

she made me happy all the way all way through that lonely night on that bamboo bed

that following morning
when she was still fast asleep i kissed her hair put something beside her that she loves most it will make her survive perhaps for a month even without love

RIC S. BASTASA
An Arrangement Of Priorities

i got a cup of hot green tea on top of a pile of legal folders i got a window made of glass up the second floor and i could see what is happening down the road

i got a closed door a dusty floor and a shining pen

RIC S. BASTASA
An Array Of Candles

On that corner
There is this array of Candles
That you see

If you only look Carefully
There is one candle
There
Its light is about to Stop
Its wick so short
To last for Another minute

That candle is my Life
And soon it will Signify an End

Do not ask me
I do not want an Extension
Even for a Second

I had enough of This light
This little light
I had enough of this Vast darkness

There is no time
Nicer enough
To convince me
For more of it

I had enough
Let me say it again
I had enough of
You.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Assurance When The Rain Seems Not To Stop in the coldness of this old and traditional bond like a chain of steel in the coldest day of November we are mature enough to disregard what repels us we do not clash about these corrosive walls head-on we shall die our heads like broken balls our hearts giving in to the cancer of indifference we are in this rain and we stay we know that like all seasons nothing stays that long drought or flood there is that moment of subsidy, that subservience of least resistance that patience of insistence takes time but it will always come, surely

RIC S. BASTASA
An Attempt To Compare To Convince You That The Other Is Happier

There is absolutely no need to compare you are unique hence there is no acceptable standard to tell you that that guy with a girl and a child posing as a happy family is much better than you are or the rest of this humanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Attempt To Describe

i wish to describe anxiety on a shaking glass of water held by your hand, but i do not wish to be tactless about it,

with due respect i transferred my gaze to the other side of the window and told you about the dancing leaves of the bamboo being blown by the gentle wind from a very green mountain on the left side of our house.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Attempt To Rhyme

i am so sorry for you Johnny Doe but i cannot rhyme for you i have been in all these What a pretty mess!

Life does not really Rhyme Time mistaken for Thyme Nothing really jibes
That's why we have tribes

RIC S. BASTASA
An Attempt To Understand God

you have seen God in the eyes of the child you shall see more of His face in another man's anguish or his bliss

you shall see more of God in a woman's hands earlier on her beautiful face you do not notice God in time's passage

you miss Him when you think so much it is only when the sand in the glass is empty that you can hear him speak louder, it is when you do not desire water to fill that thirst that you experience Him deeper when you are lost that you can finally find Him, when you finally love death, that you can feel that Life in Him, when you flow like a leaf on the surface of the flowing creek, that you shall know his Will.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Aunt And An Uncle

The last thing i heard is that they have already lived separately they are old when they decided they must part ways

he sold land and he has money bought a new car for himself at 79 she also sold land which her mother left her bought a new house for herself at same age they are irreconcilable but they are not arguing about it they are too old for a nullification and it will still be expensive sometimes i wonder how foolish two old people can be haven't they learned the science of symbiosis at least?

he has a car and she has a house she could have gone places and he could have shelter and granting that they can no longer be happy at least they can still live together and make use of the hereafter together..

RIC S. BASTASA
An Awakening For Air..

a time comes for an awakening

you look at yourself
as a stranger

you begin to dislike what you have been drinking or eating, you have starved yet you do not want to eat anything you float like a hot air balloon you rise up to a sky

you burst and then you fall without feeling anything you awaken to the idea that you have turned into air that you belong to everyone and yet you have no one.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Awareness Lesson

it is at the exact point of your orgasm and my ecstasy when the world in creation is learned inside us when we throw away all thoughts
in space
when we forget who we are that reality unfolds we have no eyes no mouths we are nothing before the magnificence of it all pure light inside this darkness a ball of fire flaming and burning us always unconsumed in a world inexhaustible

RIC S. BASTASA
An Early Morning Canvass

the white yacht
sails

upon a sky blue
sea

soundlessly this silhouette watches

it is i
i say to me

RIC S. BASTASA
An Early Morning Departure...

when i wake up
this morning
the door is half-open
i did not touch
it
something in its rough feel still hurts my fingers

someone i love
so well
left me before i could see her face again

it was her who touched that door very early
that morning

it is departure
that i felt and that which i cannot touch again

RIC S. BASTASA
An Early Morning Greeting From Her(E)

an early morning greeting from her thru tx mssging though abbreviated is still long and she asks that i as the philosopher poet share
to her some of my insights for the day i have nothing to say really, tess, silence is wisdom too

RIC S. BASTASA
An Early Morning Oat Meal

an early morning oat meal
is like poetry

it warms the heart fills an empty stomach
makes you
move smoothly
for another day

like a survivor of another day's shipwreck

RIC S. BASTASA
An Early Morning Song

an early morning twyla for delilah
eyes waking up like fila all for delilah
a beautiful phyla
all for delilah

and so i tag the line that delilah is doing fine based upon samson's decline

RIC S. BASTASA
An Early Morning Walk

i had a walk this morning and i saw twilight

fog hovering still on the feet of the mountains there is beauty in haze in the opaqueness of smog i inhale cold air inside my lungs and walk faster

there is dew on the grass as fingers of light comes out from the hazy fog herons arrive and land on the green fields catching the frogs

the brown cow is munching grass inside its mouth still lying comfortably on the ground the macopa tree shed its leaves in favor of new shiny ones the trail is clear

no one has arrived here yet it is about to rain with all the gray clouds lumping in the sky ah, i am not running for shelter.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Early Morning Wish

it is too early
i guess the nights are longer now it is 4: 56 a.m. it is cold the air is cold and the windows are still closed the rooster at the yard keeps on crowing while other roosters of the neighborhood (i live in a rural town with dusty roads still at the other nearby kiosk)
keep on crowing too for an answer, how i wish to make you
a lovely,
happy,
gentle,
peaceful poem
no one screaming on the road not a motorcab screeching neither a bus overspeeding and spreading dust
how i wish to write you a poem
about love
or about that only peaceful star hanging on the early morning sky
just a wish but really
there isn't any it cannot be what with a heart that is grieving a soul that is lost a body that trembles
a mind with thoughts live leaves heap upon heap
without a match to burn them all this hot days of summer.
i remember an egghead,
his head feels so light like silk handkerchief inside your hand, you do not pay particular attention to its color
i know,
you have no time for an egghead, but i always remember him and you are angry why i remember him and i am your favorite brother who rose to the skies more of a kite on a windy summer and you do not like me to sympathize with an egghead, you see, you cannot blame me brother i am traumatized

he broke his head in front of me and you left him spilling his gray brains on the street amidst those indifferent people who merely pass by as though no one died that early morning you are one of them with coat and tie

and who do not care if others die,

if you call me another egghead i may by now, be a little dignified but i promise you there will be no more brains spilled on this angry street

RIC S. BASTASA
An Elocution Of Preparedness

i must start training myself
to be alone

after all this is actually a solo journey

i am imagining some what ifs what if you will leave me?

what if, after realizing that your motives are not as pure as pearls then i, too, must decide to leave you for good?

when we first met
i was lonely
and i told you that and you caressed my hair put my head in the middle of your bosom
and i felt warm and i for the first time felt so secure and then as usual
i put all my trust in you believing that love is all this about

that is, putting my heart at the mercy of your
hands

i've read it somewhere
sometimes
love does not work
just like in novels betrayals as not uncommon

and one night when you are soundly asleep while i suffer the cruelty of insomnia's distrust
i feel the distance between you and me, it is like an ocean and there are waves as big as houses and we have become to islands
struck by the tsunamis of our changing outlooks
our so called need for
space

and i look at the stars outside my room regaining the breaths of fresh air
reinventing myself in that loneliness of separate natures

oil and water
darkness and light that meet only at twilight that oh well, we were not born together we are different and we can change

and we may decide to call it
'quits'

i savor silence
and i tell myself
welcome back old world
be ready
for what happens
tomorrow
morning

RIC S. BASTASA
An Elocution On A Rainy Day While Sipping Coffee Beside The Glass Window Of Starbucks Cafe leaves falling blown by the monsoon winds rains and more rains the whole day outside the flowers are so wet and heavy empty streets and two women with black umbrella and a man looking at me angry perhaps why i have looked at him long enough beyond curiosity as i begin to write another poem concerning falling and humanity, you get bored sometimes looking for something new when actually for the meantime there is none except the fact that to feel new you simply have to reinvent yourself and recreated another world from the wasted hours of your monotony.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Elocution....

we read
between the lines
we pause
we take in a lot of the other we read them and they become a part of our innards
we pause and we take sleep a journey into an imbibing
the roads are too many but we choose only one not necessarily the happy one we take what is only necessary
we take the stairs one by one we count each sorrow we leave each happy moment like a landmark
we always surge
like a bus into the other end of the road that never ends
we read between the lines we become what is
between them
we do not understand how we become we just become buds, flowers, bees and pools of clear water
we are flowing and drained we exude and then we go
until we are finally gone and we have forgotten to ask who we are
and so
what right have we to deserve the answers
we go, and then we are finally gone we are never anyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Emptiness Again?

does this emptiness move upon its hands on the carpeted floors of the hallways upon an old catholic church the pillars as you see are taller than the rugby players the windows are as wide as the shoulders of african men

i stand on the threshold of this door the sun gets in and i must choose which way to be outside is the wind full of uncertain origins inside there is this light that fears dissolution the moment the wide window closes upon itself there are two windows inside myself i open them soon and then i will fly away inside there is too much feasting outside there is only your silence

RIC S. BASTASA
An Empty Bed

the empty bed
shall not surprise
you woman
it has always been designed from
the start
when you decided to marry the man that you do not love.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Empty Glass

an empty glass on the table we stare at each other tonight and i theorize on its emptiness is it fed up with water?

was it drunk the other night and would not take any liquor?

we stare at each other tonight
my hands holding on my chest i bite my lips with my teeth something seeps inside my mouth i hesitate to swallow it there is still this fear about substance something that is alienating my heart is quenched of its fire there is only the coldness

of tranquility

something to drink from an empty glass something that caresses

i shall take it.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Empty Heart

burnt letter
ashed

on a hot air
it floats in the sky

this empty heart
of mine

slowly it lands
like a sparrow's feather
on the river

RIC S. BASTASA
An Empty Heart...

evolve this chatter
into a leaf,

do not easily conform to an old
shadow,

be solid, not that warm, i discarded a stone

i put this little bird
upon a window

whisper to it the beauty of wings

i invented it like how thoughts are born

gladly, it understands and flies away

oh, how happy i am.
an empty heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Empty Jar

she finds it unthinkable that
at this hour
i am dislodging thoughts emptying my mind
of all our memories,
i am backbreaking a heart repairing a mindset,
i am a jar with a leak and all my contents
are removed,
i am as light as a plastic pail, and she can lift me up without exerting any force, she can carry me anywhere and fill me again
and i am practically under her control and mercy, this, is the one, that she cannot accept,
now i must follow and not lead, now i am but an accessory and not the main
thing
i surrender, i retreat, because it is only in taking the reverse, that i shall conquer myself again its weakness to the full its defeat to the maximum and it is only after getting this full insight shall i begin to fill what is there that is lacking it is i, a jar, a jar full and heavy and

ready...
An Empty Space Is Built

one day a wall is destroyed an empty space is built and made to look like a big rectangular window which makes a good view outside the house where we all can take a look at every passer-by which by all means give rise to all the adjectives we can think of like that one is a colorful woman dressing like a koi and that child is wild like a coyote while following his papa who is carrying a big sack of onions and we, though silent as usual in the custom of our old people who died long time ago laughed secretly inside ourselves but it is the verb of life that makes the window more interesting to me like

the way a busy working man walks fast towards a market to sell his bundles of chickens the pitiful cries of a goat with a tie on its neck as it is pulled by a barefooted kid the reckless drivers of motor-cabs trying to make the most profit that a holy Sunday can give him on this market day.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Encounter...

in that encounter
the day becomes a mirror as i begin to see every part of you in me.
the same eyes
longing for the outside game the same feet wanting to walk all the edges of this earth you are asking questions that need the answers to the same questions over and over again i play this game too and even though i am bored i make you feel that this is interesting i talk to fill the missing words in your mouth
and you listen
hoping to find inside me what you have been looking for it will take a long time for you to know that i am just another sea breeze kissing sands and stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ending

a civilized man
no matter how eloquent and sociable

no matter how
engulfing his mind
is

no matter how thorough his grasp of all the elements
of this universe

no matter how amazing is his body and soul
and thoughts
and cares

somehow if he has to be decent at all

must know about the fact of an end.

a manner, of ending
a meeting, a manner of ending a conversation, no matter how nice it is some men are much better at it when through when the mission is done when everything is over when all is said and done knows how is it to end what he has started

he takes his life and not waste it in a meaningless nook

in the useless passage of the hours where the bell tolls and no one listens

RIC S. BASTASA
An Entry In A Diary Today...

there is this anger that is brewing inside me my mouth is like the sea that is covering the mouth of an emerging volcano no words that hurt
just plain cool silence like breeze from the distant mountains from those trees and grassy hills i am disfigured for each eye looks at the opposite direction my hands are not coordinating with the direction that the feet are making i ask my wife: is this how is it to be insane?

she is patient as always. a woman the nurturing and motherly figure.

there is nothing wrong with you, she assures me they're a mess and you cannot endure it anymore the park is well lighted tonight there is no drizzle of rain some flowers are blooming along the path leading to the seashore it is our night and we are safe now. then we talk about other matters that are not part of the day's trouble.

we are still here. we breathe.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Epitaph Of The Once Renaissance Man...

so much
and so many have depended on me

but that was a long time ago

i gave it
up

so much
of me now depends on You for whom i have laid
my life
alone

RIC S. BASTASA
An Erotic Man

an erotic man
takes another woman away and she is carried away until another man

pumps bullets
and then the erotic man is taken away by her husband

RIC S. BASTASA
An Erotic Wish As I View You On The Beach

a thin waistline
is what i need

your waistline fused
to mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Escape

as reality gets too harsh we get confused but we do not just stop right there we have still these remaining instincts to please ourselves
to survive
we learn how to play when denied of the backyards and the fields and the hills and the rivers we take the four sides of the room and make our own little world when denied of their speech we use our own and then then when they face us they shall be frightened we are alive we have our own language we write an essay on how we have won we compose the poem that proclaims our own greatness the paintings and sculptures our faces our bodies
not theirs

we were denied an entrance and so we made our own we escape from their clutches and found our own hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Escape Into The World Of Exhaustion

to live in a closed world plunge into a workload that makes you forget
what happens next
the one that seals you away from the anxiety of a place where you get annihilated where you only see the tracks of your memories
where these fade into mist where mist turns into air where everything becomes a clean slate of space and it is colored dark where not a single star flickers where your body takes heat and you back aches and your neck is shrinking into your clavicle
and then you are seduced into bed
where there is only one of you

you have not closed the window and the rain is heavy and there is lightning
a flash
and loud thunder
and water gets in your room and it is cold

you do not know what is happening you are fast asleep all your limbs are dead
tired
An Escape To The Countryside

inside a white car
you drive towards the countryside

upon a brown road
you slice a path and
leave
a mob of molecular
dust

along the side of this country
are blooming wild daisies where dragonflies
sojourn

there is big mango tree as old as the second world war where bees till today swarm

the bamboo cottage is still there beside a balding hill where the early morning sun peeks and stays for a while perhaps sipping mist
and then
leaves you feeling awkward about its fidelity to routine

for here you are breaking rules and finding ways still to be blameless and like a pure white lamb unblemished.
An Escape...

bear with me
i haven't slept for hours, help me,
i am designing
an escape module,
for i don't like
it here.

i am watching
You Tube, preoccupied with Facebook,
and here the best
escape ever: am
writing poems.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Eulogy....

of course you know Totong very well.

he is such a good man
he feeds the pigeons in the park
always helps a hungry man in the street
he gives alms to the poor does not drink hard liquor shuns pork and lives a happy life chooses memories disregards the unhappy ones junks bad influences watches the stars at night bathes under the moon by the river with his girl

you know him too well as a model of virtue in our community
he is 56
Aquarius, a dragon lucky number is 7
lucky color is blue lucky day is Monday loves his wife and only daughter works well with his office-mates climbs mountains

sunbathes by the sea
loves fishing
and eating too.

he died today
due to heat stroke in our little town
under a blue sky at 7th Dragon street on a quiet Monday at 7 o'clock in the morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Evaluation

it is not the answer that tell who you are and what shall you become

it is your questions
the openness
the wide latitude
of your doubts

these shall make you live open arms and a mind that does not narrow down to an alley.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Excerpt....

I did love you

I know. But I still love you.
So, love me.
But I miss you.
So, miss me.
Send me perfume and flowers every time
you think of me...

Then dropp it.

It won't last forever.
Nothing does.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Excerpt

i know...ha-ha-ha...i'm happy for you..

it's good you don't have children yet, at least you can do whatever you want. but in my case i have two boys and it's like a domino reaction.

mawala na ang trust nila sa ako-a.
(they will lose their trust in me) maybe if i am divorced i could do whatever i want without any consequence. maybe that's why she can do it because she is separated from her husband and she likes you to start with.

well
maybe i will too! if i am in her situation.

lami gud ang orgasm..ha-ha-ha (orgasm is exciting) maksingit gyud ko ug ahat,

(maybe i will scream)

ha-ha-ha

what a lengthy exposition when what you can do is simply make a very short and erotic poem ha-ha-ha, was that a poem already?

RIC S. BASTASA
An Excerpt Of A Non-Poem

'I started to draft
'In My Own Eyes'
last 2008;

And shared it
with a friend (priest).

It's put on hold
for a while because I know
I can be too emotional.

How I wish I could just free willingly tell my story, like re-living
the past'

RIC S. BASTASA
An Excerpt Of Painless Cut...

during those times when you have partaken on my free dinners
it is in your anger that paves the way to the truths which are laid now the bridge that connects us falls to the rage of my rivers i have nothing to lose and surely i have everything to gain for losing you is like cutting my hair i give up something that i do not need ah, keep that monkey's grin for sooner or later the truth shall always reveal what your heart has kept concealing...

RIC S. BASTASA
sadness is not a reason and it is not always beautiful

so be it

let those who cannot bear bury themselves
we have our own preoccupations our graves to dig too our own litany of justifications
after

RIC S. BASTASA
An Excuse For An Exit...

IF THERE are too many of us
in this room
i may choke and with lesser space i may die in this process and so for many night i figure out an exit or an excuse to be excluded from this intimacy of souls
it is this body that does not accept too much heat
lest i explode into shreds of brains
blood squirting out from the pores of
my skin
and just this morning i have grouped some thoughts
my final excuse that right to be free from the mob and the rest of those who are here to know me and in that door where i just exited as you see
you shall read:

i just want to be left alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Exhortation About A Dog

i

the dog that licks my feet every morning after i wake up does not appeal to my senses anymore

ii

the dog that licks my feet every morning after i wake up does not appeal to my senses anymore

iii

the dog that licks my feet every morning after i wake up does not appeal to my senses anymore

iv

but i must allow it still because it is the law between the dog and me and this dogged society

v

and so the dog still licks my feet
every morning
and at night
i do not ponder about it
anymore
i do not ask
i have no questions for asking

vi

the dog sleeps with me
at night
in my bed
and spreads her legs like a spoiled prostitute
and she is confident that i cannot kill her because that is the law between us
and dogs

vii

and society keeps guard
on this
and if i continue having this dog's tongue lick
all over my body
and feed her well
and make her a part of my
life
till death do us part then society
shall have a thousand hands clapping
for my obedience and fidelity

viii

my honest neighbor (who does not want to be mentioned here says that actually) she's one kind of a typical bitch

(and i will neither confirm nor deny it, but please do not tell anyone about it)

that is the law.

RIC S. BASTASA
something is missing in your lines.
i regret to tell you that.
it does not speak well of yourself or the world or any moment, it is like a desert and all we have is space and a horizon
there is even no wind to blow the sands away i do not expect rain in the desert but i could have seen a camel or a line of trucks or a caravan

or even a Bedouin riding on his black horse with a scimitar

here i am again
in my worst self trying to tell you what to do so that you can be what you are your lines are straight and too clean and that make them appear dishonest

people love crooked lines and those that move in free directions lines that are cold like the wind and yet vibrant at night not really dead, but simply grieving in silence for the loss of someone so loved and missed.

i do not want you to change your lines, they are yours to
show,

i may be unfair wishing that your lines may be like mine but mine are too sad and always sounding like a lover abandoned.

the beautiful lines are not clean. they are imbued with our errors, erasures, blasting in our faces like explosives

where shattered as we are on the fields of our disasters only in a few seconds we become silent spaces again.
mine are sad, and lonely and abandoned. they are the only ones i have now, and so i must be compelled to have them and love them just the way they are.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Expectation

what do i expect of myself? I, who is, only a repetition, a body who goes on everyday, same direction, same going and coming, house, office, Sundays on same beach, same paths i walk everyday, where adventure is shut up like a door of a hotel that you do not like to visit again, what can i expect of a bullfrog in a world of a small pond, saying the same sound both for the rain and sunshine, content with what is here and not looking over there, i, am, a fool resigned, away from the academe and church and halls, now, hiding in that garden of silence, still looking for seeds.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Expectation.....
	his is the usual feeling anyway, the more i read, the more i do not know, the more i know about you,
the more unpredictable you have become.
you are not the weather that i can put on the map and say that tomorrow surely it will be sunny.

perhaps, i have changed myself too, and so you have ceased to be another pattern.
the beautiful city that used to be in the map whose road i can take by night even without the light of a star is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Experience With A Crazy Old Woman...

at the first glance
an old woman
well dressed
does not appear to be what she really is:

insane
perhaps because of too much sorrow over land or perhaps she cannot accept the reality of children leaving finally old mothers

she talked a lot and we all compromised out of respect for old age wisdom is obviously absent

she had become a pestering parrot a hissing snake
a shouting monkey

we called the police to throw her out we all look at ourselves freed from all guilt

we no longer wonder what children are for...

RIC S. BASTASA
An Experiment Of Life....

life is an experiment this poem is, was, and will always be another experiment imitating life, art imitating that serious life that broken heart mimicking pain
but can never be
the same

life is so beautiful, because of this experiment shades of colors mixing in the atmosphere life changing perfumes
hues,
changing shapes, birds, fish, islands
clouds,
ever ending drama
conversations without end whispers without edges

this one too, the one that you have never felt even before
as you once closed the door this is a cloud peeping for you longing
drifting imitating you changing
clothes, self, shedding off skin snake, shark,
shoelace,

waters, sands, kiss, arms,
bodies....

just you and me
behind your nape my hush....

RIC S. BASTASA
An Experimental Love

perhaps love
would be nicer for the second time around if we experiment on the venue a lighting effect

at noonday
where the garage is vacant because they bring the car
to their offices
indulged in serious work

perhaps love?

RIC S. BASTASA
An Exploration

just seeing birds
migrating or sailing with a friend to a new land
elated by the wagging of a dog's tail
a hammock world rocking
all about a movement
a hum

this more to all these
there is
this whisper of the ear
to the eye

there is more to the sound of
content,

there is more to sorrow
than joy.

RIC S. BASTASA
look these ink blots
are not butterflies, they are just ink blots are you wasting ink on the paper?
are you careless blotting this paper?
you have stained them and they do not look good at all.
do not force me into saying there are butterflies there or bats or clowns, there aren't any there are no flapping wings no dragons
no fire, no journeys of a snowman there are no monsters that live
on paper
they're too heavy to carry on a permeable sap of trees
slices of wood and lines of fountain pen...
i am serious now and i am realistic i want you to feel that i am concrete as a slab as real as a floor where you stamp your feet and hear my sound do not force me into a belief that you are an illusion because you are not i am not an illusion. i am sad. I am a recipient of your unfairness.

but i am not dead.

tomorrow i will bathe myself with the light of the sun.
i reflect light i am real.
i will dive into the deep river i splash water, i am a body, i am real.

watch out, i have thoughts and you do not see them.
i have seen you misled me, and i become the storm.

these inkblots stain me. I am real.
An Hour After Midnight

you must know this hour when I wake up and the rest of you are sleeping it is at this moment when loneliness wakes up and soars
like a smoke from a chimney rising to the sky
it is so dark
and it is going everywhere

RIC S. BASTASA
An Hour Of Arabian And Egyptian Music

i close my eyes it is deep
in the darkness
of my life and then i see a sky filled with

stars
a wide stretch of desert
a spot of palm trees
islands and islands
of sands

a tent a horse a Bedouin
a harem
a sultan

a scabbard a sword

a scab
a bard salt of this desert

cold winds and a scimitar song

an urge of an oasis and then the calmness
of a sleeping
desert.....

RIC S. BASTASA
An Imagination

intentionally i let my right hand hold my left hand my left hand holds the branch of a tree that holds some leaves,

my feet are on the trunk of a tree beforehand i mentioned there are clouds getting near us fog that promise a cover out there oceans sing stars hang themselves upon a path of the horizon all imaginary ceilings where the moon behaves like one big chandelier there are moment when stars and moon are simply themselves as moon and stars without self-imposed meanings and then all that we describe is that it is the moon and they are the stars no sauce for more words nothing added nothing subtracted faithful to the phenomenon of the stillness of what we see to still this restlessness we focus on what we have a hand holding another hand a head that looks upward to the heavens a foot rooted like the roots of a tree leaves falling like the wind

RIC S. BASTASA
An Imagination Of Hope

despite these things which i shall not tell you about the truth of the state of affairs the arrangement of the chips like dominoes
that may fall off and create the havoc
... despite everything...
(sigh!)
i shall keep myself alive give a smile to the day hug my nights goodbye take the stairs
and walk another mile and shall come back
again
to you

...despite everything
the sadness
and despair

(sigh!)

i shall not tell you what or where and when
and why...(sigh!)

somewhere beyond
yes there is always a time and a place somewhere beyond

when i shall be happy
and glorious
where i shall be king with a queen
with my prince and princes with my soldiers and a kingdom and a castle

(sigh!)
i always know this somewhere sometime beyond.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Immortal Love?

when you kiss me
do not ever think
that my love
or your love
lasts forever

when you kiss
think that someday
you will lose me
and that i will lose you too

it is more passionate that way more honest
and warm and true.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Impingement

it takes a little impingement to ruin the whole of my life you push a nerve and disconnect it from the rest of my system a hand does not complain but there is the pain somehow the arm is weakened and stiffled the whole body wonders what is this conflict all about there is this sickness of the mind there is this crippling of the soul the pain generates more pain and then at the end

you wonder
what is happening and where is the culprit no one is there and you lift nothing to tell the finger that it is over

RIC S. BASTASA
An Important Woman In Class...

you are too small and no one notices you in the class of legal minds but you should have known it is only you that i see and no one else but i know how to conceal maxims and suppress rules and display what everyone normally sees
in us,
and so perhaps until now you never have known the definition of what importance is what necessary is what is....that being that refuses to know what must have been known quite well
a very long time ago

mute, blind, deaf,
out there, lurking hiding in a name...

RIC S. BASTASA
An Incense

in the morning
i light the tip of the incense stick that i bought specially
from Malacca

i write a poem for everyone then
there is no more
someone
in my mind

i close the room and the incense smoke fills it

when it is over
i see
ash gathered
upon the foot of the incense
stick

i contemplate
upon this demise

and i say
pretty much like us pretty much like everyone no one is
special

not even you in Malacca

RIC S. BASTASA
An Inconsistency

the only honesty i can offer you inside my empty room is the bluntness of silence ask me why i have no answer to all your questions i don't think that you are a stranger to a love without name or categories

you have been fucked up do not deny that you have been bleeding and you have not healed yet from that pain that you voluntarily infected upon
your heart,

silly.

this time i will lie again i love you, and i have to repeat it to reinforce this lie like a weak concrete post concealed by fresh cement

if you ask me to kneel
i will
there is not much effort in doing something that i do not mean

you will see me lowering my head and you may decapitate what crown of integrity i have bowing like a slave losing his grip on the power of words and protestation

i worship you
i undress myself like a cursed god of air i become a dim light to your touch i become a mist
a fog, a cloud, a mirage, a rainbow a stream of thoughts that you can never hold

silly.
kiss me if you can.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Inconvenient Truth

truths somehow are inconvenient like living on walls so tight that we cannot breathe because air is so thin, like living high up on the topmost hill, truths make us uneasy like we fear that somehow these truths are uncovered and the corresponding penalties are hard to accept and endure just like this inconvenient truth that soon we shall have ice melting, waters rising, lands diminishing populations exploding, massive floods people drowning, global warming, i remember Noah, just like you remember how he constructed his ark on those clearer summer days, he did not build his ark when the flood came put yourself in his shoes or in the shoes of the ordinary onlooker was he not crazy? was it not really inconvenient for him?

or was it not worst with you because you have no capacity for truth or believing it you have no talent to live in its shadows you have always been repealed by its warm embracing arms you will wait when you will be slapped by its very hands by then it will be too late you are drowning, and the ark has sailed farther to that island of truth where you will no longer be its inhabitant

RIC S. BASTASA
An Independent Woman

an independent woman had taken so much lust inside her breast she was filled and then bored and decided to throw all her hormones away

thinking that now it is time for love, surfing and searching, what love is in the person not the body that she sees everyday it must be someone different from the rest, the one that comes with gentleness like a dropp of water on her cheek and falls down slowly along the lines of her nose into her lips and seeps down to her tongue

and slides
in her throat, perhaps something melodramatic, someone who likes to listen about her life story, gives her time and attention, and shares her vision of life
& death

& rebellion

she is looking for love, a conversation, she is looking for one who can hold her hands and feel her head falling on his chest this independent woman now believes in casing, in caging, in marriage, in bowing, in enslavement, because the man who loves her demands just that testing her taming her, the shrew, the wild bird, and if she starts learning these tricks,

who knows,
she may finally find the man who shall love her forever and when they get old, they watch tv, and they stay together as two faithful shadows in a mirage

(she may not like it, but if she needs love, she may finally learn what is this marriage all about) An Index Of Racism For Your Reference

Sexism • Ageism
Religious intolerance • Xenophobia

Ableism • Adultism • Biphobia • Classism Elitism • Ephebiphobia • Gerontophobia Heightism • Heterosexism • Homophobia Lesbophobia • Lookism • Misandry Misogyny • Pediaphobia • Sizeism Transphobia

Slavery • Racial profiling • Lynching Hate speech • Hate crime Genocide (examples) • Ethnocide Ethnic cleansing • Pogrom • Race war Religious persecution • Gay bashing Blood libel • Paternalism Police brutality
Race / Religion / Sex segregation Apartheid • Redlining • Internment Bigotry • Prejudice • Supremacism Intolerance • Tolerance • Diversity Multiculturalism • Oppression Political correctness Reverse discrimination • Eugenics Racialism •
An index of Remedies

Emancipation • Civil rights Desegregation • Integration Equal opportunity Affirmative action • Racial quota Reservation (India) • Reparation Forced busing
Employment equity (Canada)
Anti-miscegenation • Anti-immigration Alien and Sedition Acts • Jim Crow laws Black codes • Apartheid laws Ketuanan Melayu • Nuremberg Laws Anti-discrimination acts Anti-discrimination law 14th Amendment • Crime of apartheid Adultcentrism • Gynocentrism Androcentrism • Economic

We are one big family of Humanity...
Do you have the index of Humanity?

RIC S. BASTASA
An Individuality

i am always a shade of something else a background for instance am i not a part of it? i am.

in the dark, i am black so what do you see? just darkness how can i be a ghost? a mist?
a white fog amidst the sea of darkness a soul floating in cold air you will be afraid for what you will see so i am but a black shadow blending with the night you see nothing but i shall speak in the comfort of your sleep during the day

i assume the shape of a body settle on the mind
live on the plain and the green grass take the shade of the big tree and wade myself on the shallow waters
we will be there
enjoying the conversation sipping tea
and watching the seagulls we shall take the beauty in the most ordinary ways we can spectators and distant from the touch of pain and too careful about desire you see? how can we be hurt an island to an island between us the ocean

RIC S. BASTASA
An Insecurity

the way she puts the foundation
on her face
and puffs powder
on her cheeks
and paints her lips
with that stick
and sprays
her hair like a pesticide

i think i know now what anxiety turning into a full blown depression
really means

but i will not be speaking any word somehow i do not wish to give the impression that for now i already know how to relate to the falling of a world.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Insignificant Pebble In My Hand

i am now into useless things

like this pebble in my head smooth, reddish, with some gray veins
a paradox of youth and senility

i hold it
i close my hands
and hide it from you

you who see nothing significant about it

it is cold now and it is keeping me warm

inside my mind
it has become so significant and as beautiful as ever

i shall dream about a castle
of pebbles

smooth, reddish, sun like.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Intellectual Life...

inside this glass world lives the porcupine
fish

the sea is made of pure air

everyone is swimming with the hands and feet of their minds

one eye sees through another eye like light piercing a sea of transparencies and ripples of doubts are reinvented

it is a deep ocean imagine a world of porcupine fishes silence are not knives here there are no stab wounds on the water everyone knows how to breathe without making any sound of rustling leaves outside this glass world lies the world of fences and over there are the greener pastures the fences are high like clouds on the cliffs and the pastures have no milking cows in fact it is a jungle without trees and you will be having a hard time to imagine a justification why this world is becoming a puzzle of new languages and reinvented scripts and scenarios but this is it, this is the way how fists land on chests how lips design the shape of spits long ago, they drew ivory towers and disoriented pillars long ago, they were whistling out of touch tunes now, there are heads rising from the armpits feet from abdomens fingers from the anus and they are talking about dormant diseases that come out in the open only after your 50th year out there the mockery is getting louder the air as colder as men whose blood is removed from them.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Interplay Of Images, A Commotion Of Emotions

I like shadows, silent shadows busily moving Touching shadows on dim lights on the meadows Silhouette of trees and slender figures aligning On a path that I, this voice, shall tread upon In a minute, the hushing wind from the sea
The changing of hues, the disappearance of shadows In the meadows, the entrance of slits of lights From the shutters of the skies, spills of orange and Yellow and reddish glow turning to crystal clear days

Welcome the sun, choose warmth and bathe Another day has come, you sit by your window Nature unfolds itself to you, and you marvel Emotions collide and explode, you are deep You are silent, you are carried away like a leaf.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Intimacy

we understand
only a glance speaks the needed words

there is an invisible string that connects us

between us no rivers the oceans heal into a page of a book our hearts are vapors rising to the sky fusing as clouds

when we fall we become the hills all dressed with grass

there is no time
only our lives

when we hold hands
another earth is duplicated

RIC S. BASTASA
An Intimacy That We Deny Ourselves

there are two posts near and far and solid and compelling

these two posts
build a house of some strictures do not do this do not do that this is evil you say this is outrageously sinful because you are a married man and i am a married woman you look the other way to the direction of the wind blowing westward

i look downwards trying to find the explanations of the heart what is desirable. Is this wrong?

if it is not, then it must be right.

what gives us joy? is this a sin?
what is sin? Are sins the rules and regulations of man?
safety standards? societal order?

sometimes you are hard to be with.
you do not kiss me when you like to.
i wait. i do not conquer. i do not subdue.

someone that i love. someone that i desire.
someone whom i live to sleep with.
someone who can undress me and tell me that my body is the kingdom of God's divinity inside my heart.

i waited. you looked to the other direction where the wind blows westward, where you will be far away where you will soon be forgotten.
i have no regrets.
i am just the offer, and it was you the altar, the princess who walked away because there were crumpled in the white dress that you were wearing.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Introduction To A Poetry Book

Poetry Is More Than Mere Words,
i agree
mere words do not make poetry it is the mixture of night
and day
and day
and night
when you think of yourself
and the other
when the night
dragged
so slowly
and you forget
that morning has arrived
like
an unwanted visitor
of you party

it's a profound expression of what's inside oneself.

oh yes, it is always the inside that matters myself wanting to get out from the cave of innocence
and assume the form of a bird
wanting to fly away and never come back since there is no home
anymore to speak of

It's an impressive play of words with meaning and depth through which the author shares his feelings,
thoughts,
and
ideas.

i agree, it is sharing above all, reaching to others who take the same walk with you
angst
depression
joys
bliss
numbness
and feelings
of guilt

a confession

Through poetry, he conveys his innermost self - putting them into vivid and vibrant verses
that tell stories,
express sentiments,
and speak of lives.

In this kaleidoscope of poems, he gives focus on everything and anything there is,
making this poetry
as diverse as life itself.

Enjoy

these poems, and you'll find yourself inspired to write your own.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Invitation For A Sad Beloved

The world has so many things to offer so many friends to share fun with so many places to visit so many books to read memories to cherish mysteries deep in the forest unexplored oceans to dare with wild runs on the vast plains views on top of the mountains cottages to stay on the hills grasses so green so thick to lay our bodies to rest warmth under the mellowing softness of the morning sunshine so why be sad my dearest?

why worry about what is yet to come?

come, come, i have two horses in my farm let us have our rides, and have more fun!

RIC S. BASTASA
An Invitation From Nature.... and so here we are crossing this threshold

why are we gazing more on the pictures?

why have we chosen what is inside us?

we are broken pieces now and everything is done to gather all them into one drawer

have we forgotten those trees on the hills?

the grass has more to offer the clouds are eager

the rivers are singing the birds wait....

RIC S. BASTASA
An Island Cave

then there is this island which we brave even with a storm

the boat is small like a leaf the waves bigger than houses and we are so silent afraid in the middle of this confusion

we arrive there with relief as we sit on a rock mountain and then we are called to get inside this island cave of glistening stalactites and stalagmites water as clear as air and cold as ice lapped our feet and the sound of slush is sweet as a call of a beautiful maiden wanting to be hugged.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Island Torn Between Night And Day it is your music that makes me alive at daytime i listen

it is my lust that makes me wander at night sleep becomes a stranger lust does not do the talking it takes you to places that you know you shall regret it is your music that makes me reflect about what i should not have done i am an island torn between two surges of the water on one tip there is the day on the other there is the night somehow thinking about these makes me a paper where writings have become so illegible how can i read myself with my own eyes?

how can i walk without my own feet now?

i just want to go away and find a place where light is always light where darkness like sleep becomes another stranger to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Observation
	his maybe something paranoid
i just feel that the rest of those who are there inside the small circle closely knitted among themselves like some design of a crocheted set of flowers simply want us
or me
to be like themselves on a code of exclusivity or uniformity

i don't like it,
my voice speaks
my fingers hide inside the pocket of my pants my conscience sits like a king
in the throne of my brain my eyes like a lighthouse in the middle of darkness searches
only for my own
lost soul

let me be then just be myself
unstyled to yours
unkempt like
hair blown
by the monsoon
winds

they say
i am wild and i must have
come from untamed Siberia
oh!
i do not really mind
i sound like a barbar i sing like a gypsy
i dance the ethnic steps of the nomad
and there is no
land titled
for me

oh!
do not worry
i get used to all these purposelessly

RIC S. BASTASA
An Observation....

there are those who are destined to succeed, once cannot figure out whether it is tedious work day and night, or just sheer luck, God's chosen leader, favored by fate,

one reaps the fortune, honor fame, glory,
people around him in full admiration

there those who seem to know only failure alone in their miseries and praying over their famous questions
why? why?

the years are fast, and time becomes the sold judge of all these,

there are those that live in mansions, lavish in their manners wicked in their spending habits lush, posh,
and then one day, just like Henry put a bullet in their heads, and those that have been accustomed to misery still continue living struggling like an ant on their usual processions like worms eating the humus of the soil,

and those who think, wonder, and then nod their heads
and say

there is nothing to grudge about life as see sometimes is unfair
but at the end
every scale balances itself

i, too, has come to the conclusion success is a relative term happiness is a state of mind no one is perfect so just enjoy the moment grab your day
and let live

RIC S. BASTASA
An Occurrence....

when things go awry
like some plates flying out of the kitchen breaking their faces on the floor
one day
or in some other days of your liking you become so engrossed in your silence
your hands begin to pick up the pieces pondering
the mind probes deeper into some recesses of memories long buried in those layers of years
and then
your feet begins to decide to walk away silence no longer synonymous with silence sounding more like some winds wishing for swan
songs....

RIC S. BASTASA
An Odd Feeling

in that place
if you remember
mango trees line up
the street
that year
blooming

i go back there chancing to meet an old friend of ours
in a cafe

she asks me
how come things did not work out
the way they should have
been

we fit in her picture she says we have wasted the chances and time must have betrayed us

i say
things happen sometimes
and we do not have control

our fates have hands of their own
shaping
their own
sculptures

love is illusive
like a mirage in the desert
at the end
there is only sand and sun the boat going to Dipolog has docked
and an hour from now it shall sail again for Cebu

we parted
with a smile in our hearts reckoning
how she had served as our bridge

i lied to myself when i said i do not love you anymore and she believed that i walk back to the boat and it rains suddenly and i get wet feeling like a chick without feathers and left alone

by its mother hen

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ode To Happiness

wherever you go
i must follow you Happiness this I have noticed though You have given me more of those Frustrations

You are as elusive as an Eel

like the fleeting feelings of the Bell

Everyday is tolling for its new Victim

Ahh, happiness i'll take the reverse Now you must pursue Me for I do not anymore Care.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ode To J.

While driving the car
he wondered, what if...

all his life he had been driving for somebody else he never drove for himself he never had a car anyway his college degree in agriculture was nothing

all those hard studying days are wasted

his father should not have sent him to school
and spent money for him

there is no item for him except this contractual job always a driver, not even a clerk and he is tired of his fate he wonders what was he in his first life? perhaps, i was just a slave a lowly servant, from day one to the eternity of his evolution, i closed my eyes and wondered too, perhaps in my previous life, a king?

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ode To Loneliness....

Loneliness need not be feared.
IT is one of the most common guests in your house.

If you fear it, it will tease you and prolong your agony.

If you, however, meet it at the gate, and welcome it to your house, give it some drinks, feed it well, and offer it your room, ask it to sleep with you for ten days,

Then it will look at you from the tip of your hair to the tip of your toe and say, 'This man knows me, and has a deep thinking, he knows how to nurture me, and take good care of a bleeding heart'

And then it will have second thoughts in deciding to stay in your house and sleep with you in bed

It has lost its use and finally arrive at the conclusion 'You are a strong man, you know how to live. You talk to God, and compassionate about the pain of silence'

And then without saying goodbye sans the note or words of departure, it leaves you and your house looking for those who are still living on their closed houses, on shallow waters

For indeed, Loneliness also chooses those who deserve it Now you smile, you close the door because it is already dark, close the windows because there is no moon, and somehow you think about it, honestly, you miss what you have become so familiar about it has become dear to you and clearer now it has become a part of you like a key inside your pocket.
An Ode To Marital Music without you i know i will die like a water bag ousted of all its water

without you i know i will be empty and disturbed and lost like a child deprived of its mother

without you i will not be myself anymore i will just be the ordinary man
on the street

stripped of a name and robbed of my chosen
identity

without you i am a nobody and people will no longer know my name

without you i will have no place to go without you i will be without a house and a car and all that i have will be surrendered to you

..... i am happy, without you i am still me. i am glad that all these may finally be so unreal that this is just a very lousy poem from me to you.

Be happy. I have decided finally to take a break, and possibly

i will not be coming back.
p.s.
please read my note
under our marital bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ode To Numbness

it is just a game of words i like to say it that way when you ask me what this means i candidly say it is nothing like the way the wind whispers to the ears of children busily playing their games along the streets outside the house where their parents are always fighting

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ode To Poetry

i am buried in these noise the demands shout like market vendors sometimes one is confused where to start seemingly there is no end to all these bickering

spaces expand
distances travel like fading sounds of the day there are storms
i am frightened but you
are there
that comforting whisper to my ear

sweet sounds of sorrow gentle groans of gypsy
ohh, poetry pampered...

RIC S. BASTASA
An Ode To The Last Blow Job (No Malice Intended)

how can i waste my natural resources with you on another

blow job?

let us stop this i am not into mass killing!

RIC S. BASTASA
An Offering

since you are not with me tonight i have an offering to make,

i am sending you a bon jovi song through the internet

since you are not with me tonight
and all i have is this room with papers and books, some dusts and a cup of coffee getting cold ants invading my biscuit i like to sing this for you: I will be there

for you.
i will always be there for you.

i promise.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Offering On Earth Day

the little child
who swallowed the seeds of santol
finally gave way to an offering to earth

poo!

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Barn By The Side Of The Fields Of Hay

an old barn by the side of the fields of hay is nothing but an old barn to your eyes miguelito
this barn has been here ten years ago and it will be here for another more years with you father always had it repaired before he died and when i take charge i still come here and think once in a while what is in this barn that refuses to be broken something that negates the art of losing

it is the memory of my youth it was here where the hay smelt pungent
for the first time

it was here when i was first deflowered

changed

don't laugh, it was here that i felt the first squirt of my manhood, and her name was not that important
in fact,
she was laughing because i was trembling and she was so crazy trying to really teach me, in this old barn that refuses to be broken in all the years when our father teased us: weaklings.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old College Picture

on a black toga graduating on a chemistry degree thin body, sharp eyes, shy, and
feeling hopeless,

but things change
now, i am fat, patient eyes, confident, and feeling so aggressive

i am looking for the golden mean
on this thesis-antithesis phenomenon

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Dog

an old dog
stays guarding the house
waiting for me
not wagging its tail
it is dead

it is this sense of waiting and
belonging
it is this that gives the door mat
its meaning

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old High School Song

we used to sing:

'it seems we stood and talked like this before, the smile you were smiling you were smiling there but i can't remember where or when some things that happen for the first time seems to be happening again.......' sing it again, sing it again for me, i know you remember the song from your heart where ever you are many, many years ago, inside that old spanish church we sang that song, we were not that far away, i was the tenor then, and you were the alto and our music teacher was so elated that he closed his eyes, walked a little distance and listened so well and he said we are singing like angels that his heart melted on that warmest day

look at us now, tell me if you want to go back, so we will sing again that same old song

the music teacher is still alive and he perhaps he wants to listen again and be back on that glorious moment
of our youth
his apex too

tell me if you want to go back, we will put on the same costumes of innocence and sing the songs with all our open hearts oh, how i wish to be inside that church again and be with you

alas!

you are too far away like the most distant star that i want to see even on a stormy night
RIC S. BASTASA
An Old House Of The Family

an old house of the family
we always come here

our umbilical cords were tied on one of those hard beams from the eldest to the youngest they always look for that which dried and yet keeps on living.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Maid's Birthday

my friend from the mountains of Tabon celebrates her birthday tomorrow and i sent her my advance greetings she says she has no money and she has no man
and she is sick
and she is tired
and she is depressed.

and i tell her
please come to our house catch the chicken
and cook it
and put some blood on your forehead so that the bad luck may transfer to the chicken as a matter of belief

she refuses the celebration
i guess
what is she as an old maid for?

i guess the word is hopelessness.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Man In His Darker Night

it is a dark night and darker for an old man who cannot sleep soundly like you, he will ask about the moon or if the moon is not coming he will ask about the lights on the streets he will look for an island where he can stay and be happy at least for another hour before he dies.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Man In The Dark Room

Gnarled
loose, dry,
sunken cheek
like a hollow sandpit
trembling hands
like trees in a typhoon state
of things
hands clasped always in prayer

peace,
eyes closed
body and soul
intertwined.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Man's Ode....

i may still be able to hide my true age in my hair which i dye every month

my eyebrows, my beard, my waist and my bones
can no longer deny it

my brain remains as young as
ever
my thoughts tell me still to jump over the fence of Baliling

it seems that nothing has changed in the planets of my
universe
it is as though no star has fallen
as though the moon still shines on the romantic moments
of my life
in Plaza Magsaysay

when you kiss me this early morning i have never felt anymore the arrival of the red ants on my nape
their tiny feet have not tickled my nose
and even if some of them are biting my lips
i have no feelings about it
anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Poem For Enrico

there is a time for joy enrico

all yours had been
and will always be

sadness and confusion because enrico

you choose them like the way you choose

the placards rather than the notebooks

20 years ago when you are smitten and you do not have enough time to listen to my silence. we cannot howl for a long time

enrico. there is a time to shut up and keep our tongues and freeze them inside our mouths

i am tired of the words like liberty to be released from a cage like a white dove in the name of your new revolution, the massive one, the one that kills another thousand brown monkeys on this forested part of the world. i am tired of slogans and epithets and analytical essays on a democracy that does not work i am now into love poetry enrico. i am into eroticism i am into a desire that gives me life. i am into life.

i will not dabble about a novel on death and desolation. i will not go into that dark chasm anymore enrico. i know you are still there.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Woman Carrying A Load

on a rumor that the dike leaks and soon shall give way

an old woman carrying a load
on her head runs away looking like a question mark

RIC S. BASTASA
An Old Woman With A Straw Hat

an old woman with a straw hat
and rotten clothes deep eyes
bony cheeks barefooted and cracking lips and stinking odor like a dead fish thrown on the market canal this morning as i meet her is asking me who is the owner of the sky and the earth and the sea and the mountains and the grass and the trees and the birds and goats and pigs and root crops

she is asking me where he lives and if he is still alive she has many questions for the owner
of all these
for until now
she remains to own nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
An Open Letter To Filipino Artists By Emmanuel Lacaba

A poet must also learn
how to lead an attack
- Ho Chi Minh

I
Invisible the mountain routes to strangers:
For rushing toes an inch-wide strip on boulders
And for the hand that's free a twig to grasp,
Or else we headlong fall below to rocks
And waterfalls of death so instant that
Too soon they're red with skulls of carabaos.

But patient guides and teachers are the masses:
Of forty mountains and a hundred rivers;
Of plowing, planting, weeding, and the harvest;
And of a dozen dialects that dwarf
This foreign tongue we write each other in
Who must transcend our bourgeois origins.

South Cotabato
May 1, 1975

II

You want to know, companions of my youth
How much has changed the wild but shy young poet
Forever writing last poem after last poem;
You hear he's dark as earth, barefoot,
A turban round his head, a bolo at his side,
His ballpen blown up to a long-barreled gun:
Deeper still the struggling change inside.

Like husks of coconut he tears away
The billion layers of his selfishness.
Or learns to cage his longing like the bird
Of legend, fire, and song within his chest.
Now of consequence is his anemia
From lack of sleep: no longer for Bohemia,
The lumpen culturati, but for the people, yes.

He mixes metaphors but values more
A holographic and geometric memory
For mountains: not because they are there
But because the masses are there where Routes are jigsaw puzzles he must piece together.
Though he has been called a brown Rimbaud,
He is no bandit but a people's warrior.

South Cotabato and Davao del Norte
November 1975

III

We are tribeless and all tribes are ours.
We are homeless and all homes are ours.
We are nameless and all names are ours.
To the fascists we are the faceless enemy
Who come like thieves in the night, angels of death:
The ever moving, shining, secret eye of the storm.

The road less traveled by we've taken-
And that has made all the difference:
The barefoot army of the wilderness
We all should be in time. Awakened, the masses are Messiah.
Here among workers and peasants our lost Generation has found its true, its only home.

Davao del Norte
January 1976

RIC S. BASTASA
An Open Mind Somehow..

inside the room
i saw the masks which you confessed wearing
under the justification of your harsh times

i've seen you laugh when you wore one which the world had known to be you
through and through

in my time i have realized how fraud
has ruled the world
in order to survive
how ruses bloomed
how swindlers thrived how parties sprout
the laughter in those halls
how traitors had become heroes
how names switched on and off
like the blinking lights of that disco house

i only have one face
one body
and i feel guilty having you in my house where everyone is real

my friends cannot accept you and my world detests your presence time and distance cannot mend our broken souls

it started with pretenses wanting to heal
with a confession

what do we end when we have never really began?

now fit as you are blend with the chameleons enjoy the changing colors of your skin flexible to the times attuned to the seasons.

i sit on one of those chairs in a Parisian cafe watching people pass by but in fairness of this world i will not keep my conclusions.

as i sip coffee
read the news
i will not keep my hands closed

RIC S. BASTASA
An Open Window...

the whole day
of Saturday you do
nothing
nothing to read
or write
or say you take a stroll and back home
you watch tv and you turn it off
and you think about nothing you sit under a tree and then the day turns to night you stare blankly to the world which is starting to make stars and the moon comes and you are still there

thinking about nothing
emptying
emptying
emptying

feelings like an open window without curtains
letting in air
letting out air
on this openness

and then night gets deeper and you lay in bed without anything on without anything in an empty self finally put

to sleep

an empty dream and empty world letting in letting out

an open window
without a lock.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Optical Illusion

when she finally sees him with another woman in the darkest part of the
park
as he starts to hug and kiss the other woman giggling
to the trick of his fingers she knows surely well that this fact is not an optical illusion.

wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Option

i have decided not to be serious.
i like being lackadaisical, sorrow-free, sadness-insulated, to just let my depression go and leave me for a while something that i have not accepted really, like the way i keep on advising this mentally-challenged neighbor of mine who keeps on belittling and humiliating her husband in front of me, telling him that he is no good, poverty stricken pig and that she wasted her time on him, her beauty, intelligence, and youth squandered on the lazy bone as him, not of her own choosing, that she was just empty and needing some filling, crazy indeed, but let us start talking about myself, i am bored and fed up with so much lecturing and posturing about my career and so ambitious about climbing the ladder of success, did i not have too much? i ask myself, did i not have too much for the taking?

fortune, fame, family, all the 'f's' and the

'ifs', so many 'ifs' and it is making me less of myself, undoing what i am, looking at myself lesser, seeing always that out there are the greener pastures, comparing, and always in the mood for change and something else, trying to grab all the candies in the store.

i stop.
there is so much crowd in here, and too much materialism, and less of the spirit thing.

i retreat.

there is something to this world still unexplored and misunderstood. i know.

what is happiness? i know it. i know it.
i just don't have the time. i know.

God passed me by. I did not even notice.
And i become sadder than ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Option For Demi

when you take a shell from the shore of life do not mind so much about its labyrinths
you will be inflicting the pain of loss and miss the song that the wind is giving to its orifice

take time, close your eyes listen, and for once shut yourself from any preconceived thought

RIC S. BASTASA
An Orange Bicycle

an orange bicycle
is parked on the side of an abandoned
house

it has flat tires
and its spokes
are eaten by rust

obviously nothing depends much on it
beside it
there are no
white chickens

RIC S. BASTASA
An Orange Cat

an orange cat
with one eye

(a cruel man
bit its eye with a stick and the cat became blind)

it always waits
by the door looking for me on early mornings

i feed it fish and rice and a can of water

i look at it
and somehow i remember
what i was on my past lives

what i lacked once
now i must fill

lest i be the rat
forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Orange Cat With One Eye

a one-eyed orange cat (not really a kitten anymore) likes me so much that every morning the moment i open my door leading to a stone garden it always comes to me singing like a bird
as though saying
good morning master it rubs his orange body beside my leg and it feels so smooth
like fine silk to my hard skin

i feel the guilt of humanity who the hell
removed its right eye

where did this one-eyed orange cat come from?

God-given
must be.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Outburst Of Feelings

when he takes in air, there is no thought of air just air filling the emptiness of his lungs air tasted by his nostrils air drifting on the linings of his esophagus there is no discussion about what is air all about its color its angle this is just air expanding and filling and cooling him he sees more of air when he closes his eyes and be with air united, immersed, entwined, amused, becoming so engrossed there are no numbers nothing to calculate there is this outburst of feelings of unknown emotions life getting in like air, like water, like this lovely feeling dripping, catching, drinking, savoring, filling, cooling....

RIC S. BASTASA
An Outmoded Poem... (Valentine 1980)

i must admit
i am outmoded
as i am still talking about
love,

you laugh
you tease me

i must admit
i am out of touch

i can't tell you
you made me
love you

it is funny
i am out of touch

what can i do?
i am crazy for you

RIC S. BASTASA
An Unhappy Childhood Of This Man Who Names Himself 'I'.....

i've seen this picture of you on that far corner of the world land of snow and you are inside that very thick winter clothes

there is that smile in your face and i am taking a closer look it is sour.

i know what sour is. I've been one for forty years wearing that sour smile, and i have many reasons why a smile must be sour for forty years

the reasons are sour very sour

beyond those tastes of a hundred green lemons or a green mango with some disturbing gums on its mouth i burned all my pictures in college except those when i was yet a boy beside my mama and our white dog i was in grade one and i did not like school and mama forced me into it i was selling chocolates and i ate them all and mama was mad at me and beat me with a stick

papa did not like me reading books as he does not know how to read i climb trees and hide on the leaves and read stories in our dialect and draw some pictures of women without their dresses on you see i still have this picture of myself riding a carabao and hauling some wood and coconut palms i take a close look of my own smile, It is very sour and it tastes like yours, but perhaps mine is the worst but i am happy now, i know how to suppress sour smiles, i know how to manage and project myself i smile like a cow now, and laugh like a horse because all of them are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
An Urge

let us be attracted to light and its softness do not be afraid of the temporary blindness let the good shine some more upon the bend it is light itself in power without end.

RIC S. BASTASA
Analogy

just the two of us
we went to the beach this afternoon she sits on the bamboo chair
hanging her feet

she looks to the horizon of the very calm sea

i walk towards the shore undress myself and take my swim

i need it badly
i like to get that swim

as the sun begins to set as she looks at how sad the fading is it is like love

and life and mortality.

RIC S. BASTASA
Analysis

'The work of the poet comes to meet the spiritual need of the society in which he lives, and for this reason his work means more to him than his personal fate, whether he is aware of this or not.
'

'El trabajo del poeta viene resolver la necesidad espiritual de la sociedad en que vive, y por esta razón su trabajo significa más para él que su propio destino lo sepa o no.
'

Carl Jung

so this is it
my soul
not my soul
my body
is not my body
in this literariness
of things
i am but another
slave
creature of my society.

RIC S. BASTASA
Anatomy Of A Decision To Be Pure Sometimes the way we cover flesh with flesh layer upon layer

imprisoning the divinity of thought within the core

when they come to seduce you with colored slices of ligaments and salmon shades of serum you shake your head and signal that you do not more flesh in you for you have become solid bones ribs and clavicles, a map of skin that guides you where the heart resides.

RIC S. BASTASA
Anchor

As a baby
I was fastened to mother’s belly As I float in her amniotic fluids Through an uncut umbilical cord,

I kept that
In my navel forever, perhaps,

As times pass by, as I begin living a life Of my own, in work, in love, In circles of my daily undertakings & means,
I anchor myself to some ideals
Like Being clean, and honest, and Having integrity, principles, Sort of another set of umbilical cord,

Though in different conceptions, A figurative sense of the word Or something emblematic,

I keep
That in my mind, now, perhaps, who knows,
Forever,

The feeling of having to float is Always there, wherever I am, be it in A drinking spree with friends, making love with my wife, Or asking a night with a woman that I just met At the sleazy bar,
Or in the Simple study of
Some ordinary events here and there, A feeling of lightness for being so Different from the rest of those who are Here with me once,
These idiosyncrasies of self, always getting to know why me, This quirk,
This oddball,
Why am I being different yet so ordinarily elbowing with all,
Why this sort of floating Drifting,
Like a canoe on smooth silvery river, Dusts floating in air,
A white crane gliding,
A waft of culinary flavors from a A food plate,
A shadow of a plane hovering,
This drift,
This sail on some seas without land Or anchor,

Like when I write poetry grasping ideas, floating, drifting ideas Catching them with the nets of my recollections Bobbing and dangling Trying to find a buoy,
An anchor, of weight, to hold things together, to make links Chains to hold on to.

Of what I am who I am
Who I was
And where I am going,

I hold on to faith
Hold on to faith, they will always tell me, the priest the nun & the Voice of God
And just in case I still float, drift, and waft To tense & terse feelings and lots of pretenses

I go outside,

Touch a tree, feel its rugged barks, smell its Leaves, stick my hands to its sticky stains, and
I
Get stuck, I want it, I want being stuck.
I hold on, to the sturdy tree standing near me, I hold on
Like a baby floating on amniotic fluids fastened to an umbilical cord
Or
Like a hot air balloon, anchored on some sandbags and ropes on the ground.
I am somehow fastened, anchored, I become real.
Now, touch me, talk to me, hold me tightly please.

RIC S. BASTASA
And
then from the drop
of water
i appear closer that where i am
really
from you, dew

RIC S. BASTASA
And Always: Without Expectations...

something political i always hear that in my country how politicians have been consistently corrupt with no one hanged

or executed publicly in the plaza and it seems that this is all but a game

of hide and seek
or an endless cycle of ironies and paradoxes or that story of which came first the egg or the chicken who gave birth to corrupt politicians?

ask the corrupt voters who have become political prostitutes making love to the highest bidder of their political wiles

those who are not yet in power behave as though they are saints but when the get the power finally they are worse that the ousted

it has been years and i have learned my own self-taught lessons

i do not expect much anymore from this society the governed and the governing powers belong to the same category i have a place of my own now i write, i spend my private hours

at the beach
listening to the sea
feeling the breeze drinking my beer and savoring my own kind of meat some cheese and bread and fish and chips

some friends may come and share conversations flow and then i let things simmer and then after a while they can go.

so here is the self honest to itself, confident confidante better known to itself
and always: without expectations...

for life is a river flowing always flowing, nothing stays, no one stays nothing lasts.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Another Fro Bernard....

bring the bacon home eggs and eggnog too
ring the bells and notify the priests
arrive early and do not fret for we're out on the move for gigs

for what?

at the foot of the hill
she sings a song
unlike everybody else
no, no, no it is just her at cobbled streets and indigenous bricks
outpouring molten gold nobility at it best.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Back To The Middle Of The Road Lies The Body Of The Man Overrun By That Obsession Of Being Safe.

it is safe to take the middle of the road

you hear it once and then again this time to take courage rather than rashness

to be silent and shy away from so much noise

or just to be the middle class not the poor neither the rich the one ham and lettuce sandwiched

but just the same shall be eaten still by that big mouth of avarice and greed

and back to the middle of the road lies the body of the man overrun by that obsession of being safe.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Dawn Has Come  With Nothing To Say.......

to mimic you beautiful one
i, wanting to have your voice
and body

i look for that window into your eyes
where i, in the night, of all
desires,
could enter

there is none for me, not an orifice
not a tunnel,
nothing opens for
me

i, mourn, for both
of us,
in the wrong time
and place

a body fades a face immersed in sadness and dawn has come with nothing to say.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Emptiness Becomes Perfect In Their Emptiness

always the sun shines
the moon shines
the night fades and light spreads everything happens the way they happen even if you are not there and poems remain to be what they are even if no one's reading them as the rivers flow to the sea

as the rains fall
as the stone stays put in their weight as the tree grows as the children become men and women everything happens as they do even if we are not here even if you are not what you are anymore i have not read you but you are still you and you have not read me and here i am still what i am and what i will be

fate and destiny
all move even without us the songs sing themselves the poems recite their lines
and emptiness becomes perfect in their emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
And For All My Questions My Friend Has An Answer

you have seen the kite flying in the air and you believe it you have not seen the wind but you feel it just the same and you name it as the wind and you accept it as the wind that exists in reality because it lifts the kite i feel God like the wind, i see myself like the kite there is this divinity that sticks on the stick and string and paper lifting me up like a child to the skies above

i do not have power it is the wind which has it and the wind has it because the owner of the wind has bestowed up it the power yes the wind that you do not see but you just feel my friend, i am not ashamed to tell you about angels neither am i ashamed to tell you about the existence of the owner of the angels

He is our God and He loves us why do you insist on flying away like a bird?
why?

believe and be loved love and learn to love some more, and be a believer forever

RIC S. BASTASA
And For Those We Cannot Touch And We Cannot Find

those intangibles
those whose skins we cannot touch those which we cannot smell
despite
the health of our noses those which we cannot treasure because we cannot have them because they are too precious and so distant
and so unreachable
even unthinkable those that which we love we hope we really love and care those beyond
us

we leave them to God

RIC S. BASTASA
And For You Who Knows How To Write Poetry

please kill me gently with your
words

choose those which are prohibited
by this site.

RIC S. BASTASA
And He Must At The Designated Hour, Step Out.

at the introductory part of the book of your life do not speak about thorns just as the door cannot be considered to welcome a stranger if you put a dog in there how beautiful is it if the window has a creeping vine from the ground bringing a flower to the sill like a prince trying to find his Rapunzel at the beginning of everything begin with a nice word and use this words to take a stranger into your life not to save him or give him a home but simply to entice him to know how is it to live your own life serve the drink in the receiving area, and put the music to create that mood of intimate contemplation but do not make him sleep, for soon you shall expose the other pages of the story, what life really is, how it made you scream, and how at the end it made you silent, how you have finally discarded the words and settle only for feelings, how you were broken and how finally you have recollected yourself, using the prayers of your own traditions, the logic of your forefathers, the acceptance of yourself, that manner of staying put and still be alive, despite all the odds, and then when this is over, tell the guest, that this house is so private, soon it will close, and he must at the designated hour, step out.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Her Comes Cris

untying his tie
disrobing his red polo shirt without his pants on except his stylish G string
looking like a native
from the uncivilized
mountain
the cameraman directs his gaze
and to project his bankable image
he was told
never to smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Her....Too

once again you stroll an old boulevard with no changes of its landscapes

huge acacia trees
a hundred years old
a memory of the nuns teaching the catholic religion the same patches of grass and same old towers watching the sea from pirates of old kidnappings of maiden fair and brown

you take the walk
at dusk and you breathe the smell of the past relieving the lungs like trees all roots and no branches or leaves

you remember
this is what you do always remembering and savoring
the memories
there is a tinge of pain but it is as sweet as each syllable
in your poem.

the boulevard lights begin to die and you meet faces smiling at you but you go beyond what is there piercing
the ears of the past wanting to hear how it sounded
the pain inflicted the love disregarded

there is so much talking so many persons inside you sigh, you take the walk again, you move on without looking back as to who is following who and whom

the rain falls
and you take shelter on a closed bar across the road

he is sleeping on a chair and someone wakes him up for he is too drunk and lost you think that you could have been him you shrug your shoulders no, it isn't you call a cab and you take the ride now you are on your own self-made perhaps too selfish but no, no, no.

it is a bright day now and you look forward to going home where she is always waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Here Comes The Legacy Group

ey they make the announcement that they have gone bankrupt call for a press conference and ask the court for rehabilitation and this man that heads the legacy group lives in a mansion, a swimming pool as large as a lake, he owns an exclusive yacht, a vacation house on top of a hill, shares of stock in the names of some strangers, a swiss bank deposit, some condominiums all the planholders are weary, and all their dreams are broken the future is bleak, and everything they invested are lost to the wind the usual blah, blah of the press, and the incredible explanations of the culprit another gullible investor, another secret billionaire getting off the hook the court grants another chance for a rehabilitation only in the Philippines.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Here I Am Alive I Must Write It.....

last night you made a promise not to ruin your eyes again early morning reading some poems and starting too to make some more as a mode of your expression thinking that another day shall pass making this candle that burns itself shorter by another

millimeter,

the metaphors of life are not that bad, i suppose,
there is another way to looking at things and putting the words to make it beautiful though

sad,

you must have heard how the blind man's path changed when the lonely girl in black suit changed
the words,

' it is a beautiful day and i can't see it'

this shall be the same with me,

or us,
our eyes are not ours, borrowed from their creators & the makers demand that it must see what we have not seen before that they must speak not only the beautiful but the noble the glorious & the sublime
or the divine which we feel and yet cannot fully grasp the meaning is there lurking like a butterfly under a leaf that covers it from the last night heaviness
of rain
and then when this darkness is gone dew clings like pearls which we should write about the eyes are weary and painful but who cares for now: it is a beautiful day and the words are waiting

and now i must say it again,

' i have seen the sun,
i feel its warmth,
i have seen the blooming flowers, the liveliness of the bees,
the grace of butterflies, and you tending on the bromeliads bends like a humble servant to the king of light-and here i am alive by the window overlooking the whole picture

of life

i must write it.

RIC S. BASTASA
And How Did He Put The Elephant In The Refrigerator?

simple enough
he first
finds the door of the ref
opens it lifts
the elephant
using his hands
and then
puts the elephant
inside the ref
and then
he finally closes the door

that is how he does it
and everyone
who hears
him says
he is one
mighty right

the next problem is how to put the giraffe
in the ref

and he says it is very simple

open the ref
take the elephant out
and then
put the giraffe
and do not forget
to close the door of the ref

is it not that simple?

RIC S. BASTASA
And How Did He Survive?

well, as he told me before he succumbed to death before he scattered his last breath
he said
he survived by entwining himself with his own arms his fingers wrapping
his body
and his mouth was kept shut all those hard years

he kept his eyes
alive he made his skin
feel everything he knew pretty well
every detail of his
surroundings

the wall clock ticking reminded him
of wasted time some dripped
without regret

he kept the walls
stronger
he learned to live with the haze
and the clouds

he walked like he was blind
and he loved
everyone

to survive was simple
enough
daily he unlearned what life really was all about it is not much on the thinking
it was more of the doing

even insensibly
taking all nonsense
as though
they are his truths
and the truths
of the whole world

at the end there was only disbelief
and then he believes in life again

from there
the blank slate

RIC S. BASTASA
And I Did Everything I Could

i look at the sun and asks if i can do it then the sun says

why not?

and then i look at myself in the mirror
beginning to have the wrinkles on my face

there are no scars though there are no broken bones i am sure i walk my own way after doing everything....

RIC S. BASTASA
And I Do Not Really Care How I Fare

the gods watch from the kingdom of the sky

and here i am
too busy with my creations figures of clay women of sands

leaves of butterflies a garland of some lies some notes of survival
fumes of memories

rising to the skies
the blur of life
smudges of beings
flames of fading faces fangs of emptiness
the hunger of attention the love of my shadow the future fizz
whatever

i keep myself busy
the gods watch me
i know i fall short of some standards
i do not measure
myself
i am doing it
just the same with consistency
this ardor for pleasure

the gods talk behind my back then they close the door this exclusivity of divinity

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive well, i am happy
i am.

(and i do not really
care
how i fare)

RIC S. BASTASA
And I Feel So Guilty

today she buys a rotten apple she says it is hard for her to notice the market is crowded and she is in a hurry she also buys canned goods in bulk whose dates on the label have already expired

she says it is hard for her to notice
the mall is crowded and she is in a hurry she has this usual style of repeating lines when caught in the midst of her stupidities but i do not let any stone unturned and i ask her why she is in a hurry she is in a hurry to be back home she says she misses me she says she is cooking dinner for me she says she is stupid enough to have ever loved me

RIC S. BASTASA
And I Guess Until Now, Still Are Lost.

the one who got my hands perhaps still unsatisfied with its taste and texture and flavor its blood and veins,

comes back to the house asking for my arm, and not contented with one arm, he asks another arm, for dinner with his new-found friends who are happy-go-lucky and want to have company to ease their pains and drive them all away.

i have enough of this body.
so i find it pleasurable for them to have it. It is with so much gladness that i surrender everything to those who want it.

what i am minding is the setting
of the sun
the passing of time
the changing of the colors
of the horizon
the passing of the wind
the bending of trees the rotation of planets the falling of stars and their coming back as suns

i have a soul, and i am proud of it.
i have transcended the physical gates and now journeying into the metaphysical seas.
and those who are still feasting on my flesh remain in the limbo of greed

and i guess until now, still are lost.
i busy myself with the hazy view and the faint sounds of songs from the tiny shadows of all the angels from a faraway heaven.

RIC S. BASTASA
And If I Hang With The Wrong Crowd

actually,
there is no need
for me to yell

i simply slip
away
like an eel
to a murky water

without
the need of electrifying anybody

not even you

RIC S. BASTASA
And Justice Is Done

when you wish no ill upon no one when at the end of the day you keep a conscience free from anger and hate against anyone when you finally rest your mind in peace and harmony with all the senses
of your self
when you wish peace and love and goodness
when you keep yourself beautiful in thoughts and deeds, it is only then when justice is done.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Keeps It To Herself Alone.

she was looking for love and found nothing but a word, words are spoken, and love is spoken, and written, so she thought love is a letter, a love letter, which she sends, but there is no name to send it, no address, and so she thinks that love is uncertain, and just a letter, which she writes and folds, and seals in an envelope and keeps it to herself alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Know For Once The Reason Why.....

we were groping
for reasons in the dark we heard sounds
we see more than ever we feel each other and then we all found it and then we move towards

the light
and know for once the reason why

RIC S. BASTASA
And Letting Go That Kite

The feel of what is real is far away from what we think to see is to believe but to hold it even for a minute is more credible

and then to use it like a spool that you run far away from where you hold it is having a connection

you make a kite and let it fly with your wind now you have given something for the sky
to know.

there is a longing for uselessness that feeling that i am being held not for any other reason but just to be felt and then made free by cutting the thread
and letting go that kite

somewhere is this crash that shakes the paper tearing every fiber of our being making us real

RIC S. BASTASA
And Love And Burying.

when it is just a word
the plainest of all, without a structure of a square or a root,

when you look at it you cannot see a tree or a cloud,

there is no sound of a chirping bird, or a grind that cow that chews its curd at night to the consternation of the grass under the moon, consternation can be much, how do you imagine it as a a spoon less the fork? or a house without a roof?

when it is just a word, no matter how you repeat it, it will not have a face,
and you see nothing but the structure of the letters, there is no view to sea, a cove for instance is nowhere no fish on the water, no bird in the sky, no sun on a day, no moon at night,

yet somehow inorder to live, you put substance to your words, something sweet to cope up with the bitterness of those that move near you and bite you and as you bleed you shape the words like balm, and oil and gauge to heal your wound, and then it is not just a word anymore, it is a boat that you can ride, a pair of wings that you wear for you to finally fly away. And when you are gone, they now believe you. Your words are not just words.

they hide and protect you. And missing is not a word anymore.
and Love and burying.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Must Hopefully Be The Best Of All Our Endings

things are not what they seem familiarly like the way you have mistaken the sun as not one of the stars because it is nearer to your heart

when you are told of the truth finally you refuse to embrace it because you have loved what it is not because what it is not is sweeter than what it really is and they who feel you had so easily forgiven this error of love this wrong that makes us all live this mistake that used to be a good beginning and must hopefully be the best of all our endings.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Neither Did I Mention Your Name Adria

the Answer is from Ric and i did not say that I am Rick
perhaps there is a miscommunication gap somewhere sorry but i did not mention the name Adria

dec remed ate lot
the World's Poetry Archive

there are lots of Dinners in this world thousands of Dinner Guests and mothers
and sons
and tuna
too

so why should it be you or Me?

let me have some questions marks too like

And Never Must We Ask Our Beloved

and so never shall we ask our beloved why she must deserve this love from my heart why she must know any reason why she must be loved and why she must also love in return. There are no justifications for loving. Just the feeling that someone fits in there like peg to a hole like air to space like stars in the galaxy like you and me.

that will be enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Not Stop It.

right now
i am alone in my room and i am listening to baroque music
which is so mellow and gentle that it is like some kind of hands caressing my hair like that of a woman, her body soft to mine
as i explore some more the kind of love that i too can give to my own loneliness...

right now
i feel so light like the lightness of light that lands on the wall
early morning
from the leaks of the window
and the ceiling
like some soft wings of birds hovering upon the petals of a flower
finally taking the nectar to its long beak...

right now
i have learned to live
my life
to the utmost of what i can do

and not stop it
to enjoy the music of
my soul,
the sweetness of my being,
the loveliness of
my existence

and not stop it
and not summarily cut it like what others did they, who claim braver than us they who claim to have seen the

light,
they, who in one way or another
have behaved as gods....

RIC S. BASTASA
And Not The Beginning

MY HEART is free,
it is giving me options
from a
to z, yet it is me that rules,
my head as crown
my heart below,

it is not Freud but Van gogh,

it is not the skin
but the convoluted brain not now, but always the later on,

you see, it is not Hercules but Orpheus,

not the prologue but the epilogue

these are what really count,

it is the End.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Nothing At All About The Why

to cut you’ve got to cut quickly
like a slap
not much of a pinch
the pain is sudden and becomes unnoticeable leaving could be done

at dawn
when everyone is still asleep when the chickens are still roosting
there is no pain at all it is that warmth in your hand above your belly which you feel

and then you wake up and it
is gone

no words are wasted
no tears
no promises when and nothing at all about the why

RIC S. BASTASA
And Now The Straight Man In My Mind

like poles repel that is the straight man's dire strait fearing what likeness he has in the mirror of his world, shying away from the possibilities of love and loving the person who needs it more and worst than anybody the confused, the disturbed wants him loved and hugged and just even to share a drink with him in one of the loneliest nights in their lives he cannot love any one like him he has not known what love is the one that gives and never takes something in return

straight man in dire straits of possibilities how can you ever love the one who loves you most?

RIC S. BASTASA
And Now....

and now...you like to go on oration, a piece of a long peroration, ladies & gentlemen,

good evening,

i am this kind of animal, roped to thinking, i have this analytical attitude this reflective mood, i am a mirror
and i mirror my own mirror, i reflect my own light to my own light, smart ass, envying the feast of the pigs on leftovers, the mudbaths and the nudity of all sexes, and the nonprohibited desires of all creatures, nothing mindful really, i am this now,
ready for this, and now... let me tell you about this sickness, the numbness and emptiness of my existence, like a crazy coconut its meat not white, its juice like molten asphalt its sound so neurotic knock the shell and find the truth and now.... what is the matter? what is the truth? silence, let the kitten lick its hind legs and clean itself from the smell of the dog... and now, ... tell me, tell me, the truth, and now....where do you go really with that basket of fruits?

oh nice, is someone sick? is someone in the family angry that now and now.. you want to please and be pleasing?

and now....everything is changed attitudes about peers and peeling the pear, , , , , and now... oh, you are so circuitous, be direct and candid...

you want to quit
and you are so silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Once Again You Decide To Live.

now is the time
to feel the wind passing by your window hear what it is and let it in

inside your lungs
let it stay

but always remember no one owns it

it must come out again
as you exhale

what you can keep is the memory of its freshness and once again

you decide to live.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Rick, The Dinner Guest Has This For An Answer

How sweet of you
Adria

How cute is your son?
(I don't have any we simply couldn't have any)

How old is he?

aND Thank for the Tuna
i still like it since it is heartily given

(in truth
i am vegetarian
and i only eat
fish
because i am bound for a heart surgery)

I like Americans
they are not
rude

RIC S. BASTASA
And She Said Upon Herself

born was i
from mother's
words

poetess am
i poetess shall
i
die

i
will always be in need
of words
to complete this
i.

RIC S. BASTASA
And She Was Silent But She Knows I Am Defending Her

she has been silent for long like a drifting cloud, those white feathery ones on a clear sky, a fine weather like her disposition today wanting to be left alone so she can think like a deep river, the dark deep one less the crocodiles that swallow whole her thoughts and i am considerate about this indifference of a healing wound, the one that has been there paining her as she puts more betadiene and red merthiolate because some big flies are coming in like an uninvited visitor, the one that does not send you notice and neither brings you at least a daffodil for your empty vase by the window well, i know that in your silence you always keep me by your side the defender of your past lapses, those that give you embarassment, those that almost kill you but i keep telling you, never mind, never mind, move on, bury the hatchet, bury the casualties of your sins, let them not come back, you see i am here, your defender, the one that builds you a good name again, the one that makes you write some nice poetry, that one that makes you paint the beauty of sunrise, the redeeming colors that you see when another sun sets in the west

RIC S. BASTASA
And Should Not Be Spoken Again

and there is the envy how most of them remember their fathers

sweet and memorable
those hugs and pats

strong braces of the house
running horses on the mountain trails

waterfalls and pools and sails at sea and blue skies some write otherwise and remember sad plights of birds and cracking of chinaware and snapping of rubber bands and blackouts and breaking of beer bottles and

spanking of butts and hurting women

some sad sensibilities which we should not have been remembered

which must remain hazy
and should not be spoken again

RIC S. BASTASA
And Since I Am But A Word For You

You said it
You love me
As a word and nothing more But just a word
Without a stand
Just a word Unable to make Your love come true
In the form of Body and sweat
In the shape of a kiss in the substance of a hug
or an embrace

I admit it
I am just a word
And I am deleting
This word
Myself

You follow

the time is 11: 52 in the evening and you are not sleeping
like me

us is also a word.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Since You Do Not Know How To Write A Poem

the i offer you one thing to do, how about drinking an indian ink?

or throwing an american pie right at my face?

or folding a manila paper keeping your shit
inside it...

i miss you really.
i like french fries
and french kisses. mhoaa!

RIC S. BASTASA
And So Am I To You

drought is here
river beds are drying plants are wilting trees are shedding off all leaves they all look like skeletons and skulls

there are dusts everywhere roaming clinging leaving blown by the strong winds from the desert

please make the rain bursting water the earth
cracking
fill in the gaps and the holes

shower this thirst
fill this hunger
give back life....

RIC S. BASTASA
and so when darkness closes in on me like a blanket covering my eyes with the softness of its blackness i simply go with the flow of its coldness as i close my eyes and sleep and if dreams come i welcome them and learn to accept whatever color it shows whatever movement it makes with its images and streams and sequences like a movie in my mind i too welcome the new day waking up with the freshness of a blank mind emptying and not working out what should come inside myself i let the air take its seat and fill the space i breathe what is only necessary for the day i let out what wants to go into the open field i hold no one and i obstruct no one this is the free trade going on inside myself i just want to grow and let all my cells go where they want to i let my nerves celebrate and feast on all its impulses this is the feast of myself the resurrection of the soul where is heaven? where is hell? I tell all my senses Go find them all. There shall be no restraints. No visas.

No hold-departures. There is always this welcome sign Hanging on every door.
Yes, all the entrances and exits are open now.
This is life. There is no room for any regret.

RIC S. BASTASA
And So I Asked For Wisdom so many things that i cannot understand finally i try the last option the acceptance that they cannot be understood that they better be not understood at all not that they are too painful, far from that, it is, that is, they give us wisdom more last night, i ask for wisdom, and this morning i reap my peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
And So I Just Watch And Never Ask To Take One

what am i?
upon a word, and with my arms
i know
you shall give it as you have given
all
to all that ask for what you are

i watch you but i am not taking it

you are a nothing but straw no vein, no blood

no heart pumping for
love

RIC S. BASTASA
And So I Write This Poem...

because i cannot tell you exactly the facts,
all the details that may hurt you
and me at the end
of this
pathway where pebbles have sharp edges
and mud is sticky and foul rotten leaves abound and worms
are busy eating what leaf is left,

because i do not want to hurt you neither does i want to suffer with self-inflicted injuries and so i am back with these lines there is no way that you can sense that there is something blunt in the vowels

something unspeakable
in my consonants,
as expected,
life in dots and dashes some blanks too.....

RIC S. BASTASA
And So Let Us All Pray For The Children And Their Mothers, For The Fathers Who Work All Day, For The Government Who Cares For All, For Liberty, For Freedom, For Another Hopefully not a fraudulent election.

amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
And So Must I

in our existence

or be it in our claimed lives

we live in the universe of the tongue

when we are so lonely like an exploding planet

we use its words
its language that we privately know we tickle our arms a bit with something fleshy and warm and wet and tasty inside our line of teeth

in our existence
we use the word turning into flesh in the universe where the center of our world is the tongue and you shall never regret and so must I.

RIC S. BASTASA
And So She Decided To Make Her Own Sail And Leave

frail woman colored pale by her own loneliness people chide her as the daughter of dullness and how one day she finally gets fed up, she gathers some wood and palms and cloth and decides to make a boat and leave the place of her birth and loneliness

she will be taking the rough seas and look for and island of arms and hands to hug her and make her feel happy these coming years and the coming days one day the radio brought the news of a woman slain by a monster who lives in

the sea
how her flesh were torn how her bones were cut into indistinguishable pieces it is so sad but she will have no regrets: i told her about the strength of routine i warned her about far

distances
i told her about sea monsters i hinted her that there are no arms and hands in the islands but she did not believe me she was fed-up and she took the risk i guess she is brave but people think she was never wise and she was too hardheaded

RIC S. BASTASA
And So The Lie Shall Become Truths

you sow your lies in the fields of innocence the maidens there are blind virginal in their upbringings in those hills where the one that rises is only the sun, and they are not deaf nonetheless and they listen so attentively like the lonely forest where the birds there are laying eggs, the maidens always believe what they hear and they know it is your voice quivering
not faltering in every word uttered and sighs heaved, they nod
they believe the lies sprouting in their clean minds, they are not born to tell the difference, and so when the sun sets before their blind eyes, they all contributed their sympathies buying you a nice coffin even if you speak again they will not listen you are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
And So The Search Begins

he starts with an advertisement wanted: a clean woman

neat down to the nails
of her toe
one who washes her hands with chlorine
and gurgles salt and vinegar and munches mint
before kissing

in a line he sees laundrywomen and washers and babysitters

he closes the door and wonders where is the clean woman of her dreams

he dreams of the unicorn wearing a white apron and a bottle of antiseptics to boot
a purified germ-free presence

RIC S. BASTASA
And So The Table Is Set

i like the way she puts the array of food in utter simplicity accented
by a single light bulb

the one that is not so bright not so glaring
for
glare is the last element
that we both
do not need

just one red rose on a very slender
crystal clear
vase

just a bud
tight lipped
and a dew
sparkling
like a tear
on this lonely night

just one pizza mushroom
and mozzarella
and some
red slices
of tomatoes and onions
the white
circular ones like a little
universe
with the bulb
as sun
and the spices as planets

and here we
are holding on to
each other

like god and goddess in the little kingdom of our simple affections

RIC S. BASTASA
And So They Have Again Teased The Ugly Duckling having forgotten the story of the ugly duckling here we are again retelling it to children, that once there was this ugly duck who turned out to be the most beautiful swan at the end of the hopeless lines.

that we must stick to the beautiful self that nature gives us; it knows the ripe season for a very beautiful unfolding; that there is always a perfect time for everyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
And So This World Never Really Lives Happily Ever After.

no one wants
to share
if it is his
it is
if it is mine
it is

does no one know what co-existence is?

does no no one
believe that despite the smallness of the cake
it can be sliced and be shared?

do you forget how bread and fish multiply when shared?

when miracles happen when men understand
the hunger of each
other?

the world is flowing with rivers
and makes the rain
for all
a tree that fruits
does not ask your name when you gather its produce

the sea does not ask for your credentials when you fish

the mountains do not ask for your passport when you trek upon its belly

the skies do not ask for money when you fly how birds are so privileged how butterflies have maintained their beautiful fragility
in air

how can one not see the natural law of
love?

no one wants to share always there is this fencing out this utter selfishness one wants all for his
and so the other has begun to learn to use the word 'hate' to do the verb 'kill'

and so this world
never really lives
happily ever after.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Soon We Will Be Leaving Somewhere

the guy has a heart problem and when he knew
that he got so depressed and would not want to eat
and even does not want
to breathe

i assured him
however that it is all in the mind
and if he has it
he can do nothing about it
anyway
so why not just take it for granted?

and we decided to spend our days lightly
we laugh
a little and drink a little and talk
much about those funny stories on earth

now the guy is happy we pretend we have no disease and we believe about the life hereafter we are strangers here and soon we will be leaving
somewhere

RIC S. BASTASA
And That Is The Trick Actually To Be Happy

a journey is a diversion road hoping to find something new of this routine-existence trying to figure out if there is a new specie of life out there when the journey is about to end five days or six maybe you begin to compare only to find out that it is the same road same trees

same sky

on the last day when the way back home is trekked when you return everything that you left becomes new and that is the trick

actually
to be happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
And The Brim Cannot Hold It Anymore

there is a dance that comes to you naturally you never planned it it even comes without any music from a radio or from a neighbor's loud video it is the same with a song you do not even know the lyrics but it comes on that spur of the moment when you give yourself to another without any corresponding number without any weighing of consequences

when you surrender not because your are defeated but because you have become full
and the brim cannot hold it anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
And The Child Draws A World

the teacher asks the child to draw
The world
& the universe

And the child with his Mongol pencil put a dot
for a start on his clean white bondpaper

(& as his fingers are clumsy His hands still shaky)

he makes a stretch of a crooked line

Stretching & occupying almost all the space of the paper To make a Crooked circle

His world

And for his universe He draws five little stars crude
A crescent moon A comet moving In a blank space

A space rocket
Is drawn
On the top page in propulsion

A crooked circle The lines hardly meet At a common point For a world

A little blank space For the universe

And where is God there?
The teacher asks him
You gave no instruction, sir. The child answered.

But He is there, the Child thinks.

RIC S. BASTASA
And The Man Wearing The White Cassock, and so there was this old picture, we were five, she said, i was the thorn among the roses, i thought i was one impressive guy, tall, slim, aquiline nose, well built, thick black hair, and so on and so forth, and then the priest beside us, forgot me, and asked the lady at the extreme right, ' who is that stranger? ' what came into my mind was Albert, i love that strange man, who had a cue for

strangeness,

he bumped his car against the wall and killed himself. gee, that was impressive of him.

and he is always remembered. And the man wearying the white cassock, o never forget even if he did not know his name, where he lived, and where and when he died. Ah, what courage!

RIC S. BASTASA
And The Taste Of Old Salt....

noting that the venue of the december reunion shall be in Talim Island

(imagine the boat
and the breeze and
the usual cargoes of basic necessities like rice and noodles and salt and sugar and
the chichirikas and

some spaghetti sause
and soap and laddles
and basins, notwithstanding the underestimation of the river foams and lilies)

i guess i must have been spontaneous in saying,
with apologies to Norman,

originality-wise you will love the smell of your roots and the taste of old
salt....

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then A Cliff Where I Fall Again.

there is way to hold your hand after, we make love, when i pull my body away from yours i lose grip of your hand after trying to keep it tightly into mine there is no
we
or us,
there is nothing permanent in union,
to lose you is to
find myself,
alone in this struggle for
who i am
and what shall i be, after discarding what notions are there about nudity,
about me getting into you and yet
there is no
self in there just a plateau and then a cliff where i fall again.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then Die...

there are so many ways to pretend that life is alright opening a glass door gently closing it with a whistle getting to church, shun revenge, kneel and pray in silence coming home with a song and play ping-pong

cooking pork and letting all that aroma fly like sparrows to the roofs of the neighbors getting a ticket for an orchestra or watch classical ballet with mama or traveling on a spree taking a tour to another country there are so many ways to be happy so many ways to waste time and money post pictures in facebook, and chat displaying the smile of the big cat so many ways, so many ways to be like everyone on those days, to become everybody else on arrays on some nights you are wondering how you have been too convincing?

and then you give your honest cry let go some tears, and then die.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then I Am Happy...

everything is fair enough

preoccupied with
the self
the burden feels heavier

stroll along the park proceed to the boulevard sit upon a bench
look out to the sea

watch people go by woman carrying a child man on a bicycle vendor shouting his wares an old woman under
the tree
a dog beside her

the world is a diversity filled with so much stories i got mine
not that bad really

when i start to listen to other people
my misery shrinks and then i am happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then I Begin To Understand what stones are their missions

and then i begin to relate with cliffs and sands and shorelines and waves and depth oceans

and then i know what that image is a boat in the middle of the sea tossed by a storm
with nowhere to land

and then i know
who i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then I Pass

when i was a professor of relevant thoughts, of the old pillars, i grade you with your ability to give the answers,

and then i quit

and then i enter a new world another university of a kind where i am my own student and i grade myself with my ability to ask the hardest questions of my life,

if there is an answer, i fail myself, and always there are answers that keep coming and i am at a loss,

i am not quitting,

i will wait for the kindness of my best teacher,

the Most patient Time

i am confident, there will be one moment when the toughest question comes,

and there will be no answer and then i shall pass.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then I Remember The White Roses

suddenly what flashed to my mind on a gray afternoon, so vivid are the white roses

a bouquet of white roses
assuring me once again, after 13 years that your love is pure, despite that you have remained to be true no matter what, despite the odds and then i have seen how each petal of the white roses fell one by one under our feet, we feel the loss again.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then I Think I Am Beginning To Understand My Life

the black birds had arrived and perched upon the power line most of them hover in groups of two, four and many but there is one who is alone at the other line it is the one that gives me

happiness

and then i think i am beginning to understand my life

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then Kiss Me....

my imagination is just that athletic you try to run with me in those fields of dreams you do not love me much we do not fit and you had never outrun me to meet at the end of the line

and then kiss me.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then Move On To Places I Have Not Been To.

when this rain stops
i made a promise
i shall forget you
tomorrow the sun shines again
i shall make no promises i will wake up
open a door
and then move on to places i have not been to.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then My Wife Arrives Carrying A Heavy Bag

at robinson's puerto prinsesa

she has white
skin
a little flabby
and long
blonde-dyed hair hanging over her shoulder

she is selling a gadget
to make my tummy firm
to make me
look handsome again

she likes me
and my money
and beside her is her manager

he is gay and wants to eat
everything in me

life is a drama
of someone you like
to love
but does not love you
in return

of someone who waits
for you
outside the structure but whom you
disdain everyone is giving
numbers
like a fishing gear waiting and wanting
for that dream catch someday

and then my wife
arrives
carrying with her a heavy bag
struggling to make both ends meet

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then The Body Aches.

we fall short of the sweet sound of kindness.
we have leaned towards the cruel wall of indifference.
and then the body aches.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then The Dreams Wake Up and then all my dreams wake up from their sleep on the day when i claim

upon my kinship
thoughts
keen and slick they wear their colors
vivid and bright
in a new world
where i am inside
simply watching

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then The Night Swallows Her Including Her Shadow Of Doubt

while she was at the height of her fury like a dragon spitting fire on him and not stopping he merely looks at her unaffected though a portion of his lips twisted a bit as though saying this woman is impossible when will she disappear?

she is emptying herself and she wants all the fire to burn him but he knows how is it to be a rock and a salt he has mastered the art of being a nobody and hence he thrives she is fading and then the night swallows her including her shadow of doubt

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then The Paper Is Dirty

You start with a clean sheet of paper Write some words, scribble, draw some lines Some curves, sharp lines, tangent to bold Lines, and rough sketches of faces and Bodies, thin lines that get crooked from End to end of this limited space, You doodle, you get wild with so Many lines unimaginable, senseless,
The paper finally looks dirty,
And you do not like it, you crumple
It and throw it in a waste basket,

You get another clean sheet, And this time, you think what is It really that you want to make Out of this new clean sheet of paper.

You think, you ponder, and you need More time this time not to waste This clean, glossy sheet of paper.

I think you are doing well with your life.
You see you are supposed to be careful

Every word is delicate and every paper Is actually accounted.

Never mind guilt, set it aside for a while.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then The Quiet

outside
walls and walls

of rain and wind
and so much

noise and then that quiet

that we all
rightly need.....

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then The Truth Comes To You Like Your Father

the pain is not actually abrupt in fact it comes like a puppy that you love most waggling its tail and you lift it up with so much joy only to be bitten by it and you realize its being rabid and you only have lesser days to live that is the truth that comes to you like your father who loves you embracing you and kissing you on your neck and caressing your hair and assuring you that there is still a room up there he need not say that you are dying and that you are finally joining them all, he did not say heaven, he only says, about a place where you are finally giving in and there is no more coming back

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then The Wind With Its Mist Carries You Away

the hands have opened
letting go
the cold seeds of the rainy days past
and for a time now after this lousy talk that afternoons share with us looking for the meaning of our days we finally find ourselves walking the trails of the empty handed

'i am so light'
you tell the wind

and then the wind with its mist carries you away

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then We Shall Write The Truth

we shall start being true to ourselves like how the world started in light, we shall start being true to others
that give us light too, words and actions
all true
all so beautiful to touch and hear and too beautiful to our smell
and so good to our sight our eyes too
so beautiful
how we look at ourselves
inside us
then when all these are gathered together like some firewood and leaves and cinders
we shall burn
we have fire
we have smoke to offer to the skies then as we inhale and exhale the last fires
within us
we shall begin again from the beginning we are not ready to write everything every detail of that fire that kept us burning in our hearts that keep on loving soon they will

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then When The Door Goes Bang

yes, when the door goes bang you know it is closed and even locked from the inside and you do not wish to see anything you are now alone

you do not wish also to enter that room you feel so free and you go back doing the thing that you always love

starting all over again
still hiding and concealing now the giggling starts and then the usual explosion
of yourself
in silence, this innermost peace of the soul

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then Without Violence What Is This World All About?

all the violence is this world a country fighting another country brothers killing brothers could be nothing but an attempt towards the annihilation of mankind one wonders: is this normal? is self-destruction a trait of humanity?

does one really have that instinct to burn his own house?
to drown his own sister? does humanity have that habit of erasing man from the canvass of the world?

suicide is a fact a man leaves a note saying he is tired of this world his life has no meaning and the only way to save himself is to make himself extinct on such artistic ground of i owe nothing to this world and this world owes nothing from me, another one jumps from a building mashed human potato drenched to the color of blood sunsets beautiful sunsets and dresses of fashionable mourning all the violence of this world reaped and constantly repeated has become a truth among the series of lies a fact, an acceptance, a norm a jus cogens that every man must live in his heart it is pretty normal a man must kill for no reason sometimes.

this numbness for all the violence of the world one sips coffee watching another bombing killing hundreds amidst the commercial ads after learned to live. pretty normal. and then without violence what is this world all about?

in the park another boy is gifted with a gun another boy plays with him another victim playing dead another boy playing hoodlum, killer on the loose mercenaries of the future wars a string of thought has carried me that far into senselessness.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then You Are Nothing.

Yes it is all in the mind writing without hands pens are dispensed like an outmoded tool and here you are facing no screen even

the fingers lose their directions, because it is all in the mind, in a dream where you can no longer tell who is the dream and the dreamer.

wherever you are know this, it is the breathing it is the taking in, that really matters.

remember, when all these come out from your mouth, you are no longer its owner, and then you are nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then You Ordered The Sun To Rise For Me and so the sun did rise upon your orders

to shine upon me,

what next? shall you move the mountains? shall you divide the sea?
shall you fish for the stars and bring them inside a net for me?
shall you seal the blackholes of my heart?
shall you summon all the birds to sing for me?
shall you stop the planets from revolving?

even if you can, you don't have to.
there is only one thing that i ask of you.

write me a poem about 'such sweet sorrow' that which Romeo said to Juliet on that famous night.

you know it well, your heart once bled.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then You Remember

you're on top, you display something analytical, tails and heads in perfect harmony. explanations, rationalizations, conclusions, therefore, i am.

then you are down. Colors come. Red, brown, yellow.
Metallic, rust. Shedding off. Tarnished silver.
Cracks. Lost diamonds. Melted gold.
ice turning to drips.
whirlpools. and rocking and pushing and shoving.
oh why's please. You touch the lips. Sssh. No words.
No answers. No questions.
Just sitting down. Looking at a sunset. Orange turning to black.
Pure pitch black.

then the stars. Distant stars. You touch your hair.
Breathe the air. Suck them inside your lungs. Expand.
Close your eyes.

Now you are seeing all things in the dark so vividly.

On the table clothed with banana leaves, the food are laid.
Bare hands attack. And you gobble and haggle.

Meanwhile, the sea breeze arrive. The beach is empty.
The cradle swings and takes you to your youth.
Imagine what once was there. Just laughter.

You smile. Close your eyes. And then you remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then You Shake Your Head Saying You Do Not Remember

there is a dark room in our house where we stay for a while
to admire how strong
we are how beautiful we feel when are so alone
and quite there is this corner of the room where we lay our bottoms
where we close our eyes
and rest
there is this window that we keep closed
where we refuse to see the world outside where the winds are so cold where leaves fall and blown
away
there is this self that you want to meet and shake hands
with
ask its name again for the nth time
and then you shake your head
saying you do not remember

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then You Wanted To Go And Leave Me Here you come like a shadow creeping beside the twilight of my life i wake up at dusk and hear the faint sound of hope and there you are dressed in morning light shining upon the drapes of my room where the windows are tightly lipped in silence we talk like the wind getting inside a leak of my wall and we whisper what we know from the beginning, about love and how some of it lay broken on the road of mishaps and how some wounds begin to know how to heal themselves and pretend that a scar is beautiful and shiny upon a skin that knows how to forget. i smell the skin of freedom spreading on your bosom and i touch the scent of your hair and i begin to know what life is all about until you know the real hour for leaving, the sunset calls you and then you hear the song of the sea, and then you wear upon your shoulder the wings of the seagull. You leave me and i am like a window waiting for the white sail from the ocean its shadow getting smaller from the horizon. And then the moon rises up with the stars lighting the darkness.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Then You'Re Gone

listening to my monologues is never fun in fact i think you are irritated by what i do not wish to say that is why
you never really pay attention to the words that shimmer like ripples
on the water
without fish or snail.

but i know the consequences i have been warned by extreme loneliness when i was abandoned and so it is better this way you leave without notice and my words have become full and yet i am so
empty.

go away find someone who shall love you
much better than i can i choose to stay and shall learn to wait again

for nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
And There Is No Pain Anymore....

so you are special.
how may times did i assure you that you

are my only love.
my only desire.

you are a bloated nit.
you like my weakness.

you say i can have you in a minute.
just that.

my patience is not a flower in the desert.
i am not your little prince.
and you are not just that only rose in my small planet.

one learns. one grows.
one realizes, there are too many planets to many roses.

the prince grows to be a king.
rules some planets.

and rose is not a rose anymore.
bloody rose.

not just red, but a white petal.
in the garden of love,
there are so many, like sands in the desert like stars in the sky.

i wont have you now.
and there is no pain anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
And There Were Those Who Sailed East

yes we learned later that there were those who sailed towards the east and they became our forefathers before they died they left their voices on the mouths of the waves and gentle as they are they settled permanently on the shores of the earth there were those who stayed on nipa huts and wrote their books on bamboo shoots and they thought that all these would be lost after the whites have fulfilled their conquest. But they were wrong.

some found a way to survive on the lips of their mouths words handed from one child's palm to another and we found them transported by the winds of their times from one meadow to another their treasures now embedded in the tattoos of our oily brown skins.

RIC S. BASTASA
And They Do Not Even Know What Is In There

i wonder
why the women
are crying?

the guy is just moving to another room...

and they do not
even know what is in there

RIC S. BASTASA
And They Hate You For That...

ey they cannot believe you telling them that one day you fall in love with
a cockroach.

the one who lives in the dark and runs away in the glimpse of light.

you try telling them it is true and convince them that there is nothing wrong with cockroaches who like them are also struggling to be loved to be alive to be with anyone else you try to tell them, love is blind, love is patient, love is not discriminating, love is not jealous, love is encompassing

and they hate you for that.

RIC S. BASTASA
And They Will Love You For It

there are so many layers of this self, when you shed off one layer another layer takes over and the more layers are there the more wholesome you become to friends and foes alike and they ask how is he? what is he? which is he?

and you laugh
and you hide from one layer to another and you become what you are not by simply being what you are here
and there
and then
everywhere

now there are so many persons inside you
and they are
all what they are:

a party, a celebration of your selves a clapping of hands and tapping of feet and shaking of bodies

a dance of life around the circle of joys and pains a path of hate and love into eternity

and they will love you for it you are both rain and sunshine sea and sky
And This Is What Life Is All About What Love Is

somehow we like to look back upon an experience which once shattered us. a betrayal, another humiliation, a failure, and then we feel it again, and we who are not so keen about metaphors simply sit and watch and let it pass hoping that the feeling diminishes, calms itself, and you look it as though it is a picture now bounded by a frame.
you say, now i know, i am not that shattered anymore i have become a patch to another patch, sewed, and sees a pattern
a map,
a lesson, a paper where you read the story and then you set it aside, and look for another, this time, it will be a page of a happy moment, love for instance, or
sex,
or meeting someone you care for and who cares for you
in return, a sense of mutuality, then, human as you are, you extend your remembering about a love unrequited and this is where you get stuck again, accepting the fact that you have not really moved on with your life,
every night, there is a face without a frame of reference
which disturbs you no end, which follows you even in the room of your dream you want to forget but it is not within your own domain
to do so.

and this is what life is all about
what love is.
you have so much and yet you choose the one who is not there for you to touch. you choose a storm and you live in it.
stirred and whirled and tossed, and you take pride on the strength of this poem.
whatever happens, you are still here
writing.

no patterns now, just a trail towards an uncertain destination.

RIC S. BASTASA
And To Keep This Peace, You Do Nothing

who does not want harmony?
it is an equation of beauty and peace, and what is most important is peace, I know.
who wants to chill upon a rainless day?
who wants to be left alone crying in the streets of nowhere? nobody, nobody.

But why are they still there? they who cry in the streets, they who are discordant and senseless?
They who run and run, but do not know really where to go, when to stop?

you are at peace, and you do not mind why they are at war?

you do not mind why this world is shaken? why the cracks have widened? why the chasm is deeper?

you are at peace. You know where to go. You know the reason why.

Just be there. Do not move. You are God.
And to keep this Peace, You do nothing.

You will say: It is Destiny. It is Written. And it shall be Done.
It shall be fulfilled.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Too In Our Extreme Happines and too in our extreme happiness we close our eyes

hold our head up we laugh so hard and without our noticing it we expose

the missing tooth beneath our cheeks

RIC S. BASTASA
And We Are And Shall Always Be Its Kids.

do not ever think that your grief is the greatest,

it is not, definitely not,
honestly not,

think of the other griefs of this world, yours is just the a grain of sand, on the shore at the foot of the cliff's grief, the mountain's sorrow,
the loneliness of space the tears of these galaxies, the fall of stars, the explosion of suns,
the fading of planets,
lost and still unnamed.

come to think of it,
there is no reason for sorrow

the reverse of this world of grief is far and wide,

early morning, there is much sunshine to drink, and at night, the stars are silent and much beautiful that these diversified noise that sorrow murmurs
to the hearts of men...

a speck of dust, that is,
what grief is,
how the wind easily blows it
away,
how it can easily be forgotten,

drift, float, feel the breath and pulse of this universe

it is meant to be a dance, a smile, a happy beat and we are and shall always be its kids.

RIC S. BASTASA
And We Are Merely Charting Our Map For Survival.

we write not because we want to be read, we write because everyday we are trying to read the pages of ourselves and to keep ourselves posted we write what we have read just us and if it happens that you read us and then you shake your heads thinking that we are just crazy threads well, that is just a secondary consequence we are the cause and you are nothing but an effect which we do not really need.

Life is hard. We agree. And we are merely charting our map for survival.

RIC S. BASTASA
And What About Freedom?

sad indeed,

there are other freedoms still
freedom from having no ideas, from this dryness,
freedom from having you
as a poet on forced wit and half-cooked cleverness
freedom from a reader
who has nothing to offer
except his own loneliness
his having nothing to do
freedom from long bored
to death
freedom from having nothing
to say and comment
freedom from this feeling of emptiness
this bigotry
this indigestion of dumb thoughts
freedom from impertinence, immateriality, irrelevance, freedom from thinking about freedom
freedom from freedom itself
there are more
freedom from pain
is useless now
that you are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
And What About The Arrow, Where Did It Go?

good that you ask it fell to earth
i know not where

if you wish to know find the man with a scar on his chest

do not ask me
or i will tell you more lies

RIC S. BASTASA
And What About Us Who Write Poems Every Minute Of The Day?

what words can we take pride in these poems like our daily breaths ordinary words we utter in ordinary conversations we have come breakfast come snack time come lunch come dinner the talks we have on the park in the marketplaces of our ordinary days unplanned, unscreened, unedited ordinary words to ordinary occasions an embarrassment, can these words be?

dscheming and devoid of meaning the lines of the common places?
the dialogues of the fool and the unwise?

you do not have to mind this is my journal, a record of nothing but ramblings of my mind and there you are carefully reading putting meaning where there was really none

this poem of day to day, unwavering trying to be but nothing, a mode of nothing but just plain thinking

do you too have this kind of breathing? tell me why you breathe, then?

RIC S. BASTASA
And What Did The Red Queen Say To Alice?

she says,
move on
alice, find yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
And What Is The Truth Like? .......

the truth
is a fan

a hand with more than ten fingers

your head has a thousand strands
of hair

the river has a hundred tributaries

light that spreads like a rope
unleashed

or trickles of rain drops

the truth is
a legendary elephant

do not judge too easily
you got the tail

RIC S. BASTASA
And What Is Your Wife Doing?

well, she is in the music room singing the Anne Murray songs as i make my poems for the day writing about Anne Murray and why do you ask? oh i know it is true we are not talking, precisely because she is singing and i am into this poetry writing and yes, i ask you why do you keep on reading? every poem that i write, oh my, why?

alright, friends forever there shall be no denying, and too truth telling, see?

RIC S. BASTASA
And When He Turns To Dust and then he is laid to rest and be left in the silence of his grave...

the grasses take charge and some seeds may grow to make flowers no, not for him anymore he turns to bones to dust he shall return and there will be no more songs no poems, not even his name shall be remembered his songs perhaps but only for a while our destiny like his is always in the beauty of forgetting...

RIC S. BASTASA
And When Some Of The Butterflies Come And Flutter and when some of the butterflies come fluttering over my sweet scented jasmines in my garden i look for the sunlight from the colossal sun and the enlightenment from the great Pan and ask what is there left for me to do the right solution so i may not be also blue shall i hide my nectar inside my sepal or shall i open more the colors of my petal or shall i choose but be one brittle metal?

a caterpillar, younger sister of the butterflies intervenes upon a feast on one of my leaves says:

hey you, don't be a crab? open up, spread your petals, go grab the fluttering wings, these are the lonely ones!

RIC S. BASTASA
And Where I Shall Go After?

We are two who have become one Because of the law, we thought it was Because of love, too late we found it Not to be that,

Too late, for us who find ourselves Naked in bed, and then find nothing Desirable at the end, our eyes stare At the ceiling finding no stars, no moon, But just wood, and yes this bulb which I bought at a cheaper price, and now About to flicker,

You say, we shall endure, what will Others say? shall we break an oath?
Shall we put ourselves to the shame Of our elders and the law? i say Nothing. i am worried about the flicker.
Soon it will end. And this room will Be dark, and i won't hold your hand Neither will i embrace your body.

I put my hands above my abdomen In prayer and you see me before that Light dies, and you smile, as i pretend That i am dead.

That is your dream i know. And mine Too, perhaps. How i wish i’d been Clear to myself, who i am, what to do,
And where i shall go after?

RIC S. BASTASA
And Where Is Mom?

she is not there anymore she is not an all time giver a hundred percent present she gets fed up too when emptiness comes drifts and diffuses in her clothes and skin when insanity begins to eat her hairs

she will stop comforting you and will not even know who you are that breastfed baby whose skin no fly has ever smelled no mosquito has even flown to a distance of a millimeter

she is one kind of mortal too she can fall asleep forever into this eternal sickness and from thence can no longer sing your lullaby for the night

RIC S. BASTASA
And Who Is The Poorest Of Them All?

not the one without a cent in his pocket not the one without a potato on their table not the one who lost his house to fire not the one who lost his parents in the war not the one who did not finish his education not the one without a job the poorest of them all is the one without hope.

the one who does not love the one who has stopped yielding his fruits.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Why Are You Staying Late Too Tonight?

i know
you miss me and you send me illustrations
of the best positions
in bed

nothing new
really
still about dogs
and beds

and some
questions
about where and when
and how often

your number and your sexual preference

hunger & thirst

and some blank spaces
and some
multiples choices
and an essay
about man's need for sex

that is your quiz

RIC S. BASTASA
And Why Did He Choose The Manger, And Mary And Joseph?

and why did God chose the manger for the seat of his birth and Mary his physical mother and Joseph the carpenter?

he chose the place of the poor, the innocent face of the unsophisticated woman, the callous hands of the simple carpenter in the small town of nowhere,

he chose simplicity and poverty, he never chose us, our place, our time, because he may not have liked it at all. Too rich, too arrogant, too shiny,

and so dirty.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Will You Love Her Again?

yes
and why do you say yes? because my arms and hands are ready ready for what? for my lips what do you mean? i have prepared myself how to hug and touch and kiss her
again

a dark night, a room, a candle, a glass of wine, a cell phone turned off, and silence can it be this it, yes, the two of you again meeting and did you taste her again? oh yes, i tasted her again my tongue is hardheaded and how did she taste like? still sweet, sweeter than before was she beautiful? more beautiful than ever how did you know? she was naked is beauty being naked? yes, someone beautiful must be naked before me and silent and quite and private she is still my sorrow and i know what i have at the end are still tears

RIC S. BASTASA
And Without Any Agreement We Become What We Are Within Us...

there is a relationship developing between this craft and myself, it is this consistency like the way mornings arrived on time like the way afternoons introduce an evening like the way the moon comes by my window like the way the curtains too sway with the flirting of the wind outside the house, the relationship is like that of the piano and the fingers as they try to make music together to fill an empty space of monotony there is no demand whatsoever that you read or listen that you come and stop for a while and take a drink and think for a moment why music is composed why a poem is written why stairs are built

i myself have not asked for the reason anymore everything just comes handy like strangers arriving and then watching a painter does the brushes of his creative images on the canvass of a violent environment on the streets of Belgrade in the squares of Romania how the violinist persists upon a note that does not bring him back his bread and butter and how somehow he gets contentment of following any note in air that takes him to a not so definite infinity

this has taken quite long long time and nothing important really is in the making as always there are only trivialities that make life still worth living & sometimes accepted without any question anymore

the morning light has landed on the drapes of the house of my father another being is touched another soul is perforated some molecules of air that we know which we have not seen ourselves have arrived and then the party of silences begin and without any agreement about when and where and what and how simply

we become what we are
within us
without need of everything...

RIC S. BASTASA
And Write An Essay About How To Forget.

sofa is such a word, it is a chair extended, targeting to fit both head
and toe in one setting, sofa is a phonetic
and if you want to be hypnotic about it,
you will get what is meant by it,
for it is not just for sleeping, or daydreaming,
it is more than
that, it is action,
too, moaning and
then

without regret, you
bury your head,
into the ref,
get the coldness
of the machine,
and write an essay
about how to forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
And Yes, What About The Nights?

did you say that we invented the Night?
that we mystified it?
that it has hoofs and thorns that its ways are cruel for men of centuries have long been deprived of its sleep for greed
and hunger of power
for sex
and lust for the flesh for avarice that the night hides from the eyes of those who have the courage to be good to have wisdom?

no, the night is here and whatever opening of the mind no matter how we close
our eyes

the night becomes more felt and it is so cold and deadly.

RIC S. BASTASA
And You Decide What Time Is It

The usual things are gone.
What used to be mere chair Comes to you as the fire blowing monster.
The good changes and you think you cannot bear all these Unexpected. You thought you die just like the rest.
You knew some perished. The ropes come like jubilant players of the killing games.
You are amazed. The changes after all are harmless The demons are all in the mind And if you really live with the peace of your fingernails They are but flowers in the meadows Drenched with rain, gleaming with dew, Coated with sunshine like platted selves With gold.

Keep those hands under your command
Do not let them betray you You are still the master of this clockwork And you decide What time is it.

RIC S. BASTASA
And You Shall Never Drown.

in the darkness of our secrets
we must learn to live in the most beautiful face of silence.

darkness stays and it is not afraid of your
screams.

soon you will find the beauty of this wisdom.
soon, you will know what life really is.

soon you will understand
the journey of other people whom you have never known
at all.

soon you will fathom the depths
of this darkness
and you shall never drown.

RIC S. BASTASA
And You Too Will Eat What We Are Eating come now i have praises for you about what you have written come join me

on this table

i am eating my words that i have just vomitted

it is not fattening it is indeed enriching

this vomit
this acceptance of

i have committed an error i have not predicted the way things ought to happen i have not looked at you well enough

come join us and you too shall eat what we are eating words and nothing but words but you can make the difference with your beautiful eyes your beautiful soul

we will listen now

you must sing your most beautiful songs as we eat our own words as we swallow our own prides as we accept what we are in our uselessness

in our misery
And You Were There Still Soundly Asleep....

it has become a fact of your life

when you are too busy time melts

in fact it dissolves like coffee to hot water in your personalized mug

it is like drinking bottles of beer and time becomes another irrelevant factor in the lives of men

it was Monday when you kissed her on the
lips
and not it is Thursday and she had not come home yet....

you read a novel
which remains as of this
day
unfinished business

some lives you know
have to cut themselves nicely
as you want them to be

a happy death
a life lived without regrets departures which must remain insignificant in fact unnoticed by everyone because they have become too ordinary

like sunsets and sunrises like a rain which stopped when the window shuts itself and you were there still soundly asleep....

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Akong Damgo Gabii Wala Ka Naapil

Daghan kog damgo gabii Tua si papa gadala ug pusil Tua sad si mama gagan mitago kay Hadlod sa pusil ni papa Tua sab si lolo nagdala pud ug pusil Ug tua sab si manang, si manong Gadagan mitago sa kalibonan Nangita ug cover sa mga Dagkong bato kay nahadlok sa Pusil ni lolo Wala miapil si lola kay didto sa Damgo patay na siya Dugay ra

Saksak sinagol ang akong damgo Gasugod sa estudyante pa ako Nadat-ogan sa daghang libro Nagbalhin-balhin sa dorm Tuay nasunog tuay nabahaan Tuay nabungkag tuay nalunod Sa baha sa linog

Dunay pa gyoy taas nga tulay Ug sa ubos niini dako nga suba Nga giagian sa dako nga baha Ug sa dihang naa ko sa tunga nangisog ang dako nga baha

Hinoon duna poy nindot gamay Sud sa akong damgo Kadtong romantic portion Nagkita mi sa akong uyab Nga karaan
Naghalok mi, naggakos, Nagkinuotay, nagtinilaay Naa pay mas lami
Apan di na lang nako Ibutyag kay hadlok ko
Sa buyag
Nakamata ko sa kalami Nagbasa ang akong
Bulog, gusto pa gani Mobalik ug katulog

Saying, wa ka maapil sa akong Damgo
Bisan na lang gani unta ug Kadting napusilan ni lolo.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Akong Dila

daghan ang hugaw nga hunahuna kabahin sa dila kay kon subayon ang sunod nga pulong sa dila mao ang tila kon unsay tilaan, imoha na kana diha sa halalom nga kangitngit tupad sa imong gihigugma, ug kon unsa ang imong gihigugma imo na usab kana, motugma baya ang dila sa tila sa imong gustong makita ug makaingon ka nga kon unsa man ugaling kana hugaw kaha? lami ba kaha? lami ba ang hugaw nga hunahuna?
pula nga tambis mosablay sa imong buhok kalami bang pupuon ug dayong kini kan-on tubigon kini tambal sa atong kauhaw sa kagutom sa atong init nga mga adlaw lunhaw ang imong mga pangandoy samtang ikaw mogamit sa imong dila sa imong paghinamhinam sa pagkuba-kuba sa imong dughan sa imong hubag nga kasingkasing

higala, usahay makahiubos hunahunaon ang pag-gamit sa ilang mga dila ug kita walay pulos sa sulod sa usa ka kagabhion wala kitay mahikap walay kitay masabtan ilang dila lamang ang nagtikawtikaw ug dili matagbaw ang atong kahidlaw ug busa ania usab ako karon mogamit sa akong dila, motila sa katam-is sa usa ka balak motam-os sa kaligdong sa atong mga tinguha ang akong dila ang akong kaugalingong pulong ang akong kaugalingong laway ang akong kaugalingong galay sa hardin sa mga bulak sa pulong sa usa ka pag-ulbo sa kayo sulod sa akong kasingkasing dila sulodd sa akong baba, kalayo sulodd sa akong kasingkasing lunsay ang tanan, hapsay, mogitib ang akong panghayhay molandong mohupay ania dinhi sa dila ang akong kalipay

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
* kon ang ubang manunulat dini dili mag-iningles kay mag-afrikaan, ako usab mosulay sa pagsulat sa binisaya bisag magsalapid ang akong dila, way sukid sa balos walay kumo sa akong pagsulay

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Akong Gana

sa humba mihupas na

sa chosuey
naa pa

sa ice cream
wala na

sa tinola naa
pa

sa kinilaw
labaw kanang presko
kanang medyo
nagdugo pa

kanang halang
kay sinilian

kanang unod
nga humok
sa akong dila kanang lumoy
sa akong paglamoy

kanang hapsay
sa akong tutunlan

kanang galangoylangoy
pa sa akong mga damgo sa kadagatan

kanang makapalupad
kanako sa kapanganuran

kana ang akong ganahan apan ang akong gugma anaa ra man gihalad gihapon sa altar sa akong panumduman

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Akong Kagabhion

gihilantan diay
ang kaudtohon
ug mibugwak kini
og kangitngit

nawagtang dayon
ang kalagot sa adlaw
naulaw mitago
sa tumoy sa baybayon

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Akong Kagahapon Ug Karon

Kawras sa iring ang
Kaniadto
Buot hilison ang bukog
Sa isda
Sa akong tutunlan

Sa usa lamang ka mahiko Dili ako motoo
Ang akong karon
Sama sa dagan sa sakayan Sa suba sa loboc
Adto ako sa iyang Kinatumyan
Ang awit sa mga tubig Daw sama sa hagikhik Sa mga bata
Midayan dayan sa
Himsog nga mga aping

(English)

my past and present

the cat’s scratch
is the past
wanting to melt the fishbone
in my throat
in one magic

I disagree
My present
Is like the sailing boat In Loboc river
I am going to its End
The song of the waters
Like the laughter
Of the children
Flowing through Healthy cheeks

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Akong Mga Amiga

ang akong mga amiga
sa kahanginan
nangawala na
wa na ko kasayod
kon asa sila
gipadpad
sa dakong unos
sa ilang kinabuhi
ania ako naghandum kanila nahadlok
kon sila kaha
gikaon na sa
dako nga bakunawa...

kangilngig ba
kahadlok ba sa akong
mga damgo

ako kuno
ang bakunawa....

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Akong Mga Tiil Diha Sa Ting-Ulan

inig abot sa ulan
ang wala mitagam nga
mga tiil
anaa kasayawon na pod gustong mabasa
maglapok-lapok didto
sa gawas
bisag niadtong miaging
bulan
natunok kini sa
baha

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Akong Nakita Sa Bukid

Usa ka linya sa mga kabaw, Nagsibsib sa mga bag-ong pinutlan Nga mga inani nga humay sa likod Sa usa ka gamay ug biniyaang Kamalig. Nangalaya ang mga sagbot Ug napapas na ang mga tunob Sa mga bata nga manganihay, Nanguli na sa ilang mga panimalay Sa daplin sa baybay. Ang nabilin Mao na lang ang mga tawotawo nga Nagpakaaron-ingnon gihapon sa Pagbantay sa mga bulawanong uhay.

Miabot ang mga tulabong nga Mitugpa sa bukobuko sa usa ka Linya nga kabaw. Sugod na Ang pagpanghinguto. Mibalik na Ang tumang kahilom sa kaumahan.

Naglantaw na usab ako sa lunhaw Nga wanang. Wala akoy gipaabot.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Akong Paboritong Titser

ang akong paboritong titser suod sa akong mama misakay sa usa ka bus gikan sa bukid pauli sa ilang balay sa syudad mga usa ka gatos ka kilometro ang kalay-on

ug siya malipayon kaayong nagbitbit og tulo ka manok nga gituali ug gihiktan sa usa ka pisi nga abaka tulo man god mi nga nag-tie sa first honors sa among klase ug ang second duha ka buok pod og ang third upat ka buok apil ang anak sa kapitan ug kaming tanan puros honors aron walay mahay ug ganiha hastang busoga sa akong paboritong titser kay nangaon ang tibuok klase sa dako kaayong lechon halad sa graduation

tagnaa kuno bi kon pila mi kabuok sa klase

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Atong Kalay-On

ang atong
panagdug-ol
dili magpasabot
nga masulbad na
ang kalayo mo
gikan kanako
isag modutdot ka
anaa pa ang dakong gubot
sa lukot
nga dila kabayran
og dukot

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Bag-Ong Pagsugod

Gihakot ko ang mga parte Sa akong lawas. Una, gitagoan ko Ang akong ulo sa ilalom sa katre

Ni lolo. Sunod ang akong mga tiil Akong gilubong sa daplin sa suba

Aron dili kini anoron kon magbaha.
Sunod ang akong dughan diin Ang akong kasingkasing naghago,

Akong gisang-at sa atop aron makakita Sa bulan ug bituon. Bisag wala na ako.
Ang akong mga kamot akong gitapad Sa salag sa mga langgam aron Makat-on kini puhon sa paglupad.

Ang ubang parte sa hamubong Pagkasulti akong giapod-Apod sa kawanangan aron Dili na nimo mailhan, Makit-an ug mapuslan.

Karon mobalik ako kanimo Nga walay pulos. Kanang dili mo na Ako mahimong magamit.
Higugmaon mo pa ba kaha ako?

Kon dili ka katubag niini Sabton ko gihapon ikaw.

Ug ako mopalayo kanimo Balik sa akong kaugalingon, Sugod sa uno, balik
sa akong pagkawala yamo.

Dinha baya ako gikan Sa dihang nakit-an ko ikaw.
Ang Balak Isip Usa Ka Lusok Nga Nangka

Alang kanako ang balak mora pod og usa ka lusok sa nangka.
Tam-is. Sinaw.
Bus-ok. Hanoy

nga mosulod
sa akong tilaok.
Walay sabod.

Apan ayaw lang hinumdumi ang mga tagok
sa mga nangka nga giabis ug gihimong utan
nga tinunoan.

Ayaw lang hunahunaa
kadtong imong nalimtan og putos sa sako sa sementokadtong nangalata kay nasamdan sa pagpaak sa mga piyangaw ug mao nga ginuka ug gikabahong ug gisulong sa mga langaw ug nangahulog, wala gani tagad mangahinog tungod sa imong kadanghag.

Kalimti na lang kadto.
Ayaw gub-a ang imong adlaw.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Balak Nga Dili Mahuman

adunay misulod sa akong baba mga pulong
nag-ung-ong

nabuak ang mga pulong nahilis sa akong dila
karon ania
buot mogawas
kining akong mga alibangbang mitugpa sa akong ngabil susama ako

anang bulak nga waling-waling ang mga pulong nahimong pak-an milupad ug mibatog

layo kanako
sa laing mga tanaman

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Balay Ni Konsay Og Ni Tiago

sa dihang nagbulag na si konsay ug tiago gibiyaan nila ang balay nga ilang gitukod daplin sa baybayon

sa paglabay sa panahon ang mga bintana morag mga mata sa buta ang mga pultahan nga kanunay nanirado sa kadugayan nadugta sa kamingaw ug katugnaw ang mga bitoon didto wala na mangidhat ug ang panganod ug hangin nahisama sa mga kwaknit nagsige'g panglupad laposlapos sa mga nangabuta nga bintana

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Basakan Diin Hinog Ang Kahumayan

Hinog na usab ang mga lugas sa humay Sa among kaumahan diri sa Katipunan Bulaw ang bulok sa mga basakan Daw buhok sa matahom nga Amerkana.

Mihunong ako makadiyot Sa kaanindot sa akong nakita.

Apan sa tinood lang Mikawat ako og lantaw Sa dalaga nga naligo sa sapa Sa kilid sa basakan.

Taas ang iyang itom nga buhok.
Lagom ang iyang pamanit.
Apan bus-ok ang iyang dughan Ug ang tubig nga mibasa kaniya Mipasihag sa tanan Nga buot ko pang makit-an

- RIC S. BASTASA
Katipunan, Zamboanga del Norte, Philippines

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Boksidor Nga Walay Daog-Daog

Bus-ok ang iyang lawas Walay tambok bisag usa na lang Ka bugasbugas

Nagtagbo mi sa dalan
Namalihog ko kon pwede Ba niyang maaswat ang Akong bug-at nga
Dala nga usa ka sako Nga kamoteng kahoy

Wala jud mangambat
Ang kanahan
Nagmug-ot og morag
Miyawit nga unsa
Man kuno'y iyang labot

Sapoton ang boksidor Nangita og sumbagay
Didto sa peryahan
Sa kilid sa munisipyo

Sayod ko nga siya ang Gidungog nga boksidor Nga siging kapilde
Busa ang iyang kumo
Iyang gisuntok sa
Mga red horse dapit
Sa ngiob nga luna
Sa daang merkado.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Boksidor Nga Walay Daug-Daog

Bus-ok ang iyang lawas.
Walay tambok, walay bisan usa lang ka bugas.

Nagtagbo mi sa dalan.
Namalihog ko kon pwede ba Nga aswaton niya ang akong Usa ka sako nga kamoteng kahoy.
Wala gyod mosabat
Ang kanahan, nagmug-Ug mora’g miyawit. Unsa man Kuno iyang labot.
Gisapot ang boksidor, nangita Og sumbagay didto sa peryahan Sa kilid sa munisipyo.
Sayod ko nga siya
Ang gidungog nga boksidor Nga kanunay mapilde
Busa ang iyang kumo
Iyang gisuntok sa
Mga Red Horse dapit
Sa ngiob nga luna
Sa daang merkado.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Dapit Nga Abohon

abi nila kad tong sa bag-o pa sila nahimugso kad tong ang ilang aping sama pa sa bulok sa gumamela abi nila nga ang kalibotan

puter ug itom lamang wala ug tuo
sinugdan lang ug katapusan abi nila duha lang ang atong kapilian nga ako mahimong daotan o buotan nga ako magpabilin ba o molakaw palayo nga ako mahimo bang bibo o masulob-on abi nila duha lang ang numero niining kalibotan abi nila ikaw ug ako lamang abi nila ang pultahan sud ug gawas lamang abi nila ang bintana sira ug abri lamang abi nila ang tanan mao lamang ang pagsibog ug paghunong kini o dili kini

kana o dili kana nga kon moadto ka didto biyaan mo gayod kining dapita nagkinahanglan kita og daghang katuigan ug daghang mga tawo nga ato gayod ila-ilahon himamaton ug amumahon ang uban ato ganing ikaipon ug sa matag kaadlawon
atong hagwaon pinaagi
sa usa ka pakighilawas

ug estoryahon sa tunga sa usa ka kamingaw
aron atong mahibaw-an nga ang tanan diay
dili lang duha ka buok nga dili lang kini og kana nga dili lang ang pagsugod og pagtapos o pagtagbo ug pagbiya kay sa tinuod lang adunay mga dapit nga abohon nga mura'g naa ug morag wala nga imong mabati

nga didto ka apan
dia ka usab kaniya mahimamat mo kini sa usa ka panaw sa imong pagbaktas sa dalan sa imong pag-inusara

molantaw ka sa kasadpan ug sa imong likod naa pa gihapon ang kahayag sa silangan sa adlaw anaa ang paghiusa sa tanan kadong imong gipili ug imong gilabay kay giingnan ka nga dili mahimo ang paggakos sa upat ug walo o napulo sa imong duha ka mga bukton mag-abot sila ug ikaw mopahiyom kay karon ania na silang tanan naghiusa sa imong mga kamot wala nimo damha

nga sa mga dapit nga abohon mahingpit diay ang tanan

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Demonyo Sa Akong Likod

nakuryentehan ang akong liog sa dihang gihagkan niya ang akong tangkugo wa ko kasabot sa gisugid kanako sa akong mga pagbati kon molingi ako og molantaw sa iyang mga mata hadlok ako kon unsa ang sunod nga mahitabo basin mawala ako sa akong kaugalingon basin mahimo akong kabaw nga milunang sa lapok sa usa ka tunaan gipatong niya ang iyang kamot sa akong abaga nga misulay og haploy sa akong bukton paingon sa akong dughan giwakli ko ang iyang kamot og sa walay lingi-lingi og walay daghang sugilon ako siyang gibiyaan ang kahumot sa iyang gininhawa ang kainit sa iyang kamot unsaon ko kaha kini pagwakli sa akong hunahuna?

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Dili Malimtan Ni Mama

i

tay wala man niya ako kuyuda sa paglubong kang manay takya padulong sa dipolog akong gipang-ibot ang iyang mga paboritong
african daisies
didto sa iyang harden

pag-uli niya pagkahapon patay na silang tanan nangalayos sa kainit
sa mahal nga adlaw

ii

kay wala man niya ako giapil sa picture-taking sa iyang mga kauban nga mga school teachers didto sa Olingan Elementary School akong gilabni ang iyang sayal ug dayon nikaratil ko pagdagan ngadto sa likod sa eskwelahan

iii

kay iya man lagi akong paligoon og sayo sa buntag didto sa banyo tapad sa atabay sa ilalom sa punoan sa balimbing ako misaka og mitago sa punoan sa star apple nga gabok na kaayo ang mga sanga

ug busa tungod niini dili gayod ako mahikalimtan ni mama francing

i
sa pagkamatay sa tanan niyang mga african daisies nga mahal kaayo ang pagkapalit ug mao nga iyang giatimanan pag-ayo iya akong gibunalan sa usa ka dako nga sanga sa bayabas hangtod nahimo kining mga buhok sa abaca sa iyang kasuko ug ang akong mga ngabil na lang ang nabilin nga walay labod

ii

ug tungod sa iyang kaulaw sa iyang mga kauban sa paglabnì nako sa iyang sayal tungod lagi kay gusto gyod ko nga iyang sabakon samtang mag-picture-taking sila sa katapusan sa tuig sa pag-eskwela nga nakita gani ang iyang puti nga paa ug itom nga panty iya akong gidakop pagkahuman sa picture-taking ug iyang gihawiran ang akong mga bukton ug iyang gibunalan ang akong mga tiil sa iyang silhig nga tukog sa lubi nasamdan sugod didto ang akong bata nga kasingkasing sa iyang pagsinghag maldito ka gayong bataa ka ambot og asa ka naliwat

iii

ug tungod lagi kay kandingon man ako ug mitago sa habog nga sanga sa star apple nga gabok na kaayo sa kalit nabali kini og nakit-an ko ni mama sa akong pagkahulog ug sa kalit nakong pagkahagba didto sa dapit sa sin nga gihimong labat ni papa sa among kusina natunong ang akong tuo nga tiil sa usa ka hait ug tayaon nga sin ug maayong pagkaabis sa akong bitiis
daghan ang dugo nga miagas sa akong unod ug ako nakuyapan sa tumang kalisang maldito ka gayong bataa ka kandingon man god
tan-awa nagabaan ka gayod sa imong inahan wala na nako maklaro pa ang uban niyang gisulti ug busa makita nimo ang dakong ulat sa akong biitiis diri dapit sa akong tuo nga tiil nga morag bitin lakip ang mga garas sa akong mga bukton nga morag mga kigwa nga napatik ug wala na kalihok sa akong panit apan dili ang mga ulat sa akong kasingkasing ug panumduman apan bisan pa niining tanan kay ako anak man nga sa giixon ni mama maldito man gayod og angayan nga gigabaan sa akong kadaghan nga natun-an mga kasakit nga nalabyan morag sa kadugay sa panahon nagpasalamat lang gihapon ako nga kon og wala pa si mama sayod ako nga dili gayod ako mamahimo karon nga ako ang ako nga malditong bata kaniadto nga natagak ug karon nagkat-on og katkat sa kakayohan sa mga balak

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Duha Ka Gilansang Sa Krus

duha kadton< gilansang sa krus

ang usa walay sala
ang usa makasasala

dunay nalipay
duna say nagmahay

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Gamayng Bato

(hubad sa Iningles ni Peter Dale Scott ug Czeslaw Milosz sa balak ni Zbigniew Herbert)

Ang bato
maoy hingpit nga nilalang igo ra sa iyang kaugalingon kabalo sa iyang utlanan

napuno og sakto
sa iyang kahulugan isip bato dunay kahumot nga walay ikapanugilon bisan unsa dili makahadlok ug dili makapagmat sa gana ang iyang kabugnaw og kainit makatarunganon ug puno sa dignidad

Mabati nako ang dakong kaguol dihang akong gihawiran sa akong kamot ug ang iyang lawas nasurop ang akong bakak nga kainit

Ang gagmayng' bato dili maanad sa kataposan motan-aw sila kanato sa usa ka linaw og tin-aw nga mata

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Gibating Kahadlok

mahimo baya nga moadto kita dapit sa lalom
sakay sa sakayan unya ako ang magbugsay

nagkalo ka nga milantaw sa unahan mora kag namasol gamit sa imong pahiyom

wala nako hisgoti kanimo ang akong gibating kahadlok sa ilalom sa akong kasingkasing nga basin

og ako ug ikaw matuwang unya ako nga dili pa kaayo kabawong molangoy dili kasalbar nimo.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Gugma Ug Ang Gana (Bow)

ang gugma ug ang gana daan nga amiga
nagkuyog silang duha
sa sayo sa kabuntagon

pagkaucho ang gugma abtik pa apan ang gana nagkaluya ug gustong mopahulay sa bugnaw
mohigop sa sabaw

pagkahapon ang gugma
abtik lang gihapon
apan ang gana nalipong
naghigda sa kutson nasakit gisip-on

pagkagabii ang gugma
abtik lang gihapon
apan ang gana patay na nabaho na ug busa
ugma sa sayo sa kabuntagon ilubong na kini sa yutang tabonon mao kana ang kaminyoon mao kana ang tiunay nga gugma kay ang gana mawala na apan ang gugma magpabilin sa gihapon sa kahangtoran sa kahaponon

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Ilang Kapalpakan Kaniadto Kapalpakan Gihapon Nila Karon

mitunga ang mga kala didto's sam-ang
gihimas nila ang kahilom sa mga sinaw nga
letra sa ilang metal nga mga ngalan

gilantaw nila pag-ayo
ang mga nangabot
nga saba kaayounya
kusog ang hudyaka
sa katawa, kaon
inom, unot og surasura

kusa lang sa usa ka tuig kini mahitabo
apan wala sa ilang nawong ang kalipay

wala gyod nausob
sukmat sa usa ka kala ngadto sa tupad

ang ilang kapalpakan
kaniadto
kapalpakan gihapon
nila karon

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Imong Mga Balak

gamhanan gayod ang imong mga balak higala ko
sa mga panid sa pulong dagitab gibasa ko kini kaganiha sayod ka

gibasa ko na usab kini karon sa akong pag-abot
halayo sa kagubot

nakakita ang mga buta nakayubit sa mga pulong ang mga amang nakasayaw ang mga bakol sa katahom sa imong mga pulong nakadungog ang mga bungol nahingangha gayod ako sa mga kausaban sa tanan nahimong bino ang mga sapa sa akong tiilan nahimong pan de sal ang imong lawas nga kaniuadto patay na

ug ang imong mga bukog wala gayod nila maputol bisan pa sa ilang mga kasilag ug sa kasuko

gibasa ko kining imong balak sa makatulo
ug mipiyok baya ang manok ni san pedro

mipahiyom ka higala
karon nagmalipayon ka na kay ako nakaamgo na sa kagamhanan sa imong mga linya ug karon tugiti ako nga mangutana

kon kining tanan gikan ba sa kinailawman sa imong kasingkasing?

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Kabangis Sa Iyang Silingan

ug ang iyang abogado mipakita sa mga larawan:

exhibit 1: ang itsura
sa usa ka iring nga nabulhog kay ang iyang usa ka mata sa wala gilangkat ginamit ang kutsilyo

exhibit 2: ang mga nangapaknit nga panit sa iring nga abohon gilaphawan sa ininit nga tubig gikan sa kusina exhibit 3: ang usa ka bag-ong natawo nga iring, gamay pa sa kuting nga gidat-ogan sa galingan sa mais, napidyat ug ang dugo misiplit ug nakamantsa sa usa ka puti nga t-shirt

mao kana ang mga ebidensya batok sa iyang silingan nga mga iro og pamatasan

ang misumbong mao
ang mga iring nga namarog sa katakos sa ilang pangatarungan nga dili gustong ibutang sa ilang mga kawras ang balaod sa ilang miyaw nga kalibotan

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Kamatouran

Sama kini sa hubag Nga dunay mata

Gusto na nga moboto
Apan imong pugngan

Hadlok ka sa nana
Nga unya mobaha

Apan akong tambag
Pasagdi lang untag

Moboto kini sa iyang Paningkamot

Paabota ang saktong Higayon ang saktong

Panahon kay kon
Moabot na kini

Iya ka gayong Hupayon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Kamingaw Ko Kanimo

Dunay hunghong sa kamingaw nga nasalaag Dapit sa among balangay Dunay gipangita

Naglakaw-lakaw ang maong hunghong Nanuktok sa kada balay sa daplin sa kalsada Nangutana kon nakaila ba kuno sila Sa iyang gipangita

Iyang gisulti ang akong ngalan Sa usa namo ka silingan nga nakaila kanako Ug tuod man iya kong natultolan

Iya akong gitutokan og dugay Ug migakos siya kanako, miiyak ug gihagkan niya Pag-ayo ang akong mga dunggan lahos sa dughan

Akong gisuot ang akong jacket. Gisirado Ang zipper. Namugnaw na usab ako sa paghunahuna Kanimo. Nagpabilin lang gihapon ikaw Bisan wala na'y tingog nga mapaminaw.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Kanser Sa Totoy Sa Akong English Teacher

Lubong niya karon. Ug tulo lang kami nga mitungha.
Usa lang ang miiyak. Ug ang duha, kadyot lang nga mitan-aw Ug dayo'g biya kay dunay mga importanteng mga lakaw Sa ilang gahom ang balak sa pagbanhaw kang Ma'am. Ang mga prepositions ug conjunctions dili mga karo Ug ligid mga mohatod kaniya sa menteryo. Nag-inusara lang Intawon siya gihapon. Bisan pa sa iyang pagpangugat og pama-Lak usab kaniadto. Dili ang iyang mga pag-umangkon Ang miiyak. Ugma ablihon ko ang daan nga libro ni Pablo Neruda.

Sulaton ko pag-usab ang pinakasubo nga balak alang kang Ma'am.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Karomata Ni Papa

ang iyang mga igsoon (i mean akong mga uyoan) nakapalit ng ug Ford Fiera ug Hilux nga pick-up apan makapungot sad ni si papa permanentente ug faithful sa iyang karomata ang ligid kahoy nga yakal, gihapnigan sa puthaw ug ang iyang padanlog aron kini modagan nga kusog kusog grasa sa baka nga among gipatay sa pista, makaibog ang akong mga ig-agaw piknik mi sa beach sakay sila sa ilang Ford Fiera ug ang uban dagkong katawa nga dili nimo maklaro kay silaw baya ang bag-ong pintal sa ilang mga wheels, samtang kami, sakay pa gihapon sa karomata guyod sa kabaw nga nabasa ug nanimahong lapok sa basakan, ug ang among dala binakid nga humay, sako sa kopra, binulig nga saging gikan sa among uma, ihapit sa balay, (i dropp lang kay naa pay laing lakaw) ug si papa moingon nga

pag-una lang mo sa beach kay mosunod ra mi (sus, udto na jud mi moabot niini) naa pay among balay, nipa pa gihapon ang atop, tapak tapak nga kahoy sa lubi ang mga gabok na nga narra, dayon ang verandah morag bata nga nanghiwi na sa kamaot, morag luha nga kahulugon na sa aping sa wakwak sa kaimitohan, sige ko ug reklamo, sige ko ug panaway kaniadto apan si papa hilom lang suggest pa ko, 'pa nganong di man ka mopalit ug Ford Fiera, nganong di man ta magbalay ug gwapo, maulaw na baya ko sa akong mga classmate sa vincent? ' nganong di na lang mamaligya ug yuta aron ibalay aron mopalit ug sinaw nga sakayanan?

'Dili ko mobaligya ug kabilin sa akong ginikanan' mao kana ang tubag sa akong papa.

namatay siya, gihaya sa baratohon nga lunong, nag-ihaw sa iyang binuhi nga baka ug mga manok ug baboy sa among umahan ug kabukiran

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
gilubong na siya, human sa among mga novena ug pangadye.

ug karon, ania ako, nagpuyo nga haruhay sa kabilin sa akong amahan. kalooy sa diyos, nakapalit na ug bag-ong pick-up noh? ug sa sunod bulan magpatukod na ug simbahan... er, bungalow nga gamay...hayyy

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Katabang Sa Alas Siete Sa Buntag

Lingkod sa hagdan. Sa ika-pito nga ang-ang.
Tan-awa ang karsada nga gaabog. Palayo na Silang tanan. Su’d sa kotse sa ilang amahan.
Imong amo. Ikaw na lang usa karong orasaha.

Basa pa ang imong kamot sa paghugas Sa ilang plato. Gipaningot ang imong agtang.
Giigang ang trapo sa kamot. Imong gipahid Sa imong mga kahago. Karong mopahulay ka

Sa makadiyot, dili ka motan-aw sa TV Ug maghinambid. Dili ka kasabot sa dagan Sa panahon. Sa politika. Naglibog ka kon Nganong sige silang nag-away. Nag-Tinagalag.
Nag-Iningles. Ang imong kamot luya samtang Wala pay gibuhot. Pahulay sa makadiyot.
Paghinuktok. Paghunahuna sa kabaw sa bukid.
Nahurot na ang sagbot sa hulaw. Nauga na Ang tubig sa suba. Nagratatat ang tingog Sa mga nalaya nga dahon. Gubot usab didto.
Nag-away ang mga rebelde ug sundalo.

Napusilan ang imong bana. Namatay Ang imong tatay. Ang imong anak nga lalaki Nasakit. Ang imong anak nga babaye Sulugoon usab sa pikas nga lungsod.

Hangtod kanus-a ba mahuman ang tanan?
Humana ang pahulay. Motindog dayon ka.
Maglampaso sa hagdan. Maghumol sa bulingon Magtigom og tubig. Maglata ug tiil sa baka.

Walay kahumanan ang tanan. Gikusi mo Ang ilong sa radyo. Karon ikaw ra usa Mamati sa drama. Moduyog sa kinahon Nga kamingaw ug kasakit. Moiyak ka’g apil.
Ug sila nga makadungog sa imong bakho Sa pikas nga balay, moingon nga ikaw Nga bag-ong katabang, medyo may pagkabuang.
Mitulo ang imong mga luha sagol sa nilabhan.
Walay sapayan. Makakaon ka na ug katulo Sa matag adlaw. Walay pasayan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Kinabuhi Sa Wali Ni Eustolia

i

Dili mahinungdanon kon unsa kadako ang imong madawat.
Ang imong bantayan kon duna pa bay mabilin Bisag gamay lang sa imong pitaka Sa matag tapos sa bulan.

ii

Ang mga ariyos nga bulawan dayan-dayan lamang.
Ang labaw nimong akatahon Mao lamang unta kon makadungog pa ba Ang imong dunggan.

iii

Sa imong dakong gugma sa iyang kabahong Wa na nimo makita ang tinuod nga katahom Sa pagtakdol sa bulan sa imong kagabhion

iv

Sa banag-banag magkita kitang duha Dili ako moatubang sa imong kilom-kilom Kay dili ako kabalong mosalom diha sa Imong aslom nga pahiyom

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Langgam Sa Katulugon

pagkagamhanan gayod
sa kakapoy
giwala sa akong panumduman ang mga damgo
sa akong kagabhion
ang katulugon iyang gihuktan diha sa akong atubangan.

wa kaipsot
nagapos intawon hangtod sa alas nuybe
sa kabuntagon

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Lumot Nga Sa Bato Mitapot

Ang lumot dako gayod og gugma Sa bato. Kay bisan pa kini og tig-a, Bisan pa sa pagkawalay-pagbati tapot lang gihapon siya

Sa bato. Wala mangambat ang bato Sa lumot. Apan ang lumot kanunay Naghandom sa bato. Bisan pa og Moligid ang bato sa sugo sa baha sa Suba, sa mando sa tubig ug linog sa Yuta, ang lumot nagpabilin nga Nagpauraray sa iyang lawas, sa iyang

Paa, sa iyang bukton. Ang lumot ang Tinood nga nahigugma. Dili malingla Sa tambag sa gamut sa kawayan.
Dili kabalo magtoon sa gibuhat Sa lapok nga mikuyog pagpaanod Sa mga bali nga sanga ug larag Nga dahon. Dili mausob sama Sa dagayday sa sapa. Dili pod Makiskis sama sa taya sa barko.

Gugma. Gilumotan na sa pagdis-og sa Panahon: Madakin-as bisan mga umang Nga nagbalhin-balhin sa ilang balayan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Manggiulawan Nga Sagbot Sa Daplin Sa Dalan

Bisan sa iyang pagkamanggiulawon-Tungod kay siya usa man ka tunokon Nga sagbot nga kanunay matumban Sa mga kabaw, kanding ug baboy-

Siya baya usab nakahimo og tulo Ka mga bulak diha sa iyang gagmay nga mga sanga sa daplin sa dalan nga nanugon nako: Alang kuno ni nimo.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Manok Igsasabong Ug Ang Duha Ka Himungaan Sa Daplin Sa Basakan

Nindot ug barog
Pula ang iyang sudlay sa iyang ulo Mabulukon ang iyang balahibo Sagol ang pula, puti apan Mas baga ang itom Lig-on ang iyang mga tiil Tag-as ug hait ang iyang Mga kuko
Lalaking-lalaki ang manok nga Igsasabong nga gibuhian Sa iyang agalon
karon
Sa daplin sa basakan

Tawgon ta siya ug
Sunoy

Adunay miabot nga duha ka Himongaan, pula ug puti Nagkuyog pagpaduol sa Barogan nga sunoy

Dili na ako ka seguro kon Asa kanila ang mibirig Ug kinsa ang gibirigan
Kay ang sunod nakong Nasaksihan mao na man
Ang kadyot nga kapakapa Ug kupokupo sa usa ka Sunoy ilis-ilis ang duha Ka inaan
Nga pula ug puti

Pagkaugma sayo sa kabuntagon Madungog ang tugtugaok sa sunoy Ug pagpamutak sa mga inaan sa ilang pugaran Nga daghan na ug mga itlog Ug sarang ikalipay kini sa tag-iya nga Mamaligya niini sa Merkado sa lungsod

Nalayo na kita sa gusto nakong Isulti ug ipasabot

Mao kana ang kalainan sa sunoy Ug sa mga inaan
Sa daplin sa basakan
Ug sa mga desenting lalaki sa Atong katilingban

Dili pwede ang usa ka sunoy Moupa sa daghang mga inaan Ug dili kuno malipay ang Ginoo Sa daghang mga itlog Kay dili kini mamaligya Sa merkado sa iyang lungsod

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Matahom Kanunay

ayaw pag-atubang sa
aso

kay maglisod kang
ginhawa

ayaw hikapa ang kalayo kay dili ka kaldero

ayaw pagtanga kay dili ka statuwa ni joxe

hiposa ang imong pahiyom kay dili ka si mona kon mahimo pagpabilin nga ikaw lang

kanang dili laing tawo kay mas tinood ka unya

ang tinood, kabawo ka, matahom kanunay

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Mga Dayag

adunay ngalan ang tanang nilalang

ang tuko nga mituko tuko
ang taluto, taluto, ang tikarol, nitingkarol, ang tamsi, nanamsi ang
sitsiritsit, misitsit,

wala magsuot ug maskara ang adlaw
wala magturong ang bulan

ang suba wala magkapa ang dagat wala nagmalong nindot ang mga dayag diha sa ilang pagpadayag kaanindot sa imong nawong ayaw tabuni sa usa ka urom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Mga Ligbos

Nunot sa dugdog ug kilat lakip sa kusog nga ulan Kagabii, segurado ko nga pagkauhma sa buntag Manurok gyod ang daghang ligbos Sa daplin sa punoan sa mga saging.
Andamon ko ang basket nga uway Aron pamuniton nako ug itugyan Kini sa imong mga kamot Sa dakong pagsalig sa imong kahanas.
Ilain mo ang mga makaon ug ilabay Gawas sa kusina ang mga makalanag Sa atong lawas.

Apan sa pag-abot na usab sa kagabhion Pamuniton ko pag-usab kadtong imong Mga gipanglabay ug ang mga gihuksahan Nga makalanag sa akong lawas.
Sud-ongon ko sila og otro sa lubog Nga kahayag sa akong lampara su'd Sa akong kwarto ug sa hinay-hinay Isukip ko sila sa ahina sa akong mga libro.
Pangitaon ko ang hinungdan kon ngano.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang mga ligbos

Human sa linti ug kilat ug sa makusog nga ulan Kagabii segurado ako nga pagkaugma sa buntag Manurok gayod ang daghang ligbos sa Daplin sa punuan sa mga saging Andamon ko ang akong basket nga uway Aron ako kining pamuniton ug itugyan Ko kini sa imong mga kamot Sa dakong pagsalig sa imong kahanas Ilain mo ang mga makaon ug ilabay mo Gawas sa kusina ang mga makalanag
Sa atong lawas

Apan sa pag-abot na usab sa kagabhion Pamuniton ko pag-usab kadtong imong mga Gipanglabay kadtong imong gihusgahan Nga makalanag sa akong lawas Kay ako silang pagasud-ongon ug otro Sa lubog nga kahayag sa akong lampara sud sa akong kwarto Ug sa Hinay-hinay ilukip ko sila sa Pahina sa akong mga libro Pangitaon ko ang rason kon ngano.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Mga Nagpahipi Lamang

hangtod kanus-a tagoon sa yuta ang
dako nga bagtak
sa kamoteng kahoy?

hangtod asa ang
pungpong sa mani
diha sa ilalom sa
balason nga
yuta?

matago mo ba ang
kapuno? ang kalabong?
ang kahomot?

ang tinan-ogan nato
gugma pa ba kaha?

nanitsit ang tuway
sa lapokon nga bahin sa dangoyngoy sa
suba

nadungog mo na ba ang awit sa mga wati dihang wala miulan
kagabii?

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Mga Panghayhay Ni Nanay

Si nanay ang labandera sa among pamilya Sa mga bulingon ni tatay Matag adlaw ug ako siyang nakita Nga nanghayhay
Sa among nataran

Sa karsones sa polo shirt sa brief Sa medyas sa tanan tanan ni Tatay

Gidugangan kini sa among mga bulingon Bisan na gani kami nangadagko na Bisan na gani kon patay na si
Tatay

Labi na ang akong magulang nga babaye Ug ang among kamanghoran nga Lalake
Si nanay lang gihapon ang nahimong Labandera
Bisag karon nga patay na siya

Nakita ko gihapon si nanay nga nanghayhay Madungog ko gihapon si nanay Bisan sa menteryo Gihatdan ko gihapon siya sa among mga bulingon

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Mga Sakong Bugas Alang Kanimo, Andam Na

nagtoo ka nga
dakong sayop ang karon nga kinahanglang
daghan pa gayod kaayong usbon
nagtoo ka nga wala buhata sa mga nauna kanimo ang angayng buhaton gibasol mo sila sa kalisod sa mga nag-antos gipanghimaraot mo ang
mga gamhanan
gusto nimong tay-ogon
ang atong gisakyan
aron mangalunod kitang
tanan
aron daghang malumos
og mamatay

apan bisan pa niini
ako pa gihapon giampo
ang mga masaaron
diha sa imong kabatan-on

andam pa gihapon ang pipila ka sako sa bugas nga sarang lung-agon alang kanimo Ondoy...

RIC S. BASTASA
Dungan kon mobatog
Ang mga salapati
Sa mga sanga
Sa kahoy
Dungan usab kini kon sila mobiya

Molupad palayo
Balik sa ilang Balay tugpahanan

nakita ko karong Buntaga
Ang mga puting
Kalapati nga mao
Pay pagtugpa sa kahoy Nga niwang

Kalit ba lamang silang Nagdungan ug panglupad Palayo kanako
Sa akong pag-abot

Ug ang nabilin mao
Lamang ang kahoy
Nga niwang
Walay mga dahon
Sa iyang mga sanga
Mora siyag
Mga tudlo sa tigulang Nga babaye
Nag-abli sa iyang palad Hangad sa langit
Nangayo sa pasaylo
Ug kalooy
Sa atong Ginoo

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Mga Talan-Awon Didtong Dapita

human mapul-ungi
ang mga kahoy sama sa mangium ug mahogany
nindot kining lantawon nga silang tanang
mitugsoy

kanunay nakong gitugon sa mga nagpuyo didtong dapita
nga kinahanglan dili gayod tabonan ang mga panganod kon aduna may mga dahon nga ibilin

kinahanglan nga unta habog ang ilang pagkahulog aron dugay dugay kini natong makita
diha sa dughan sa
hangin..

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Mga Tulabong

Kon unsa ang tultol, mao kana Ang mga puting tulabong sa among Mga sila kong
Manglupad ug mutogpa sa likod Sa mga tingog Walay gubot ang ilang pag-abot.
Nindot kaayong tan-awon ang Ilang pakigsandurot sa mga kabaw.
Walay away nga makita sa ilang Pagpuyo niining gamayng Kalibotan sa mga basakan, Kalapokan ug kasagbotan.
Walay tingog ang mga kabaw.
Nagpunay ug sabsab sa sagbot.
Walay makitang kagubot kuyog Sa pagdagsang sa mga maya Nga morag mga gagmayng laya Nga dahon nga nangahulog Gikan sa langit. Dili pa ting-ani Karon, ug dili sab tingtanom.
Walay ulan. Dili kaayo init.
Ug ang hangin naglapos-lapos Sa mga gikwadro nga kaumahan.
Naglingkod ako silong sa kahoy Sa marang. Sa unahan atua Ang mga puting tulabong mitugpa, Mitupad. Nakig-unot na usab Sa mga kabaw. Ug ang mga maya Nanglupad paingon sa kabayabasan.
Milabay ang iro nga itom, kuyog Sa iyang amo nga nagsul-ob og Pla nga polo nga taas og bukton.
Itom ang karsones sa bata.
Ug siya mitaghoy. Bugnaw Ang huyuhoy sa hangin. Nindot Ang kaudtohon. Puti nga mga tulabong.
Itom nga mga kabaw. Lunhaw Nga mga sagbot. Walay mga habalhabal Dinhing dapita. Mipahulay ko. Naminaw, Nag-aninaw. Madungog ko na Ang mga tunob sa mga hulmigas Lakat paingon sa hinog nga bayabas.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Pag-Awat

miabot ang pintor mikuha sa iyang mga kahiman-an ang mga bulok nga iyang gihapnig sa iyang mga palad ang brutsa nga iyang gihulom, gitagaan og kinabuhi sa iyang lig-on nga mga tudlo molihok na ang iyang kahanas sa pagmugna ang tawo sa daplin sa baybayon ang larawan sa tawo nga nagpungko

sa daplin sa baybayon
dili na ang tawo kon dili ang tawo nga giawat sa iyang kahanas sa pagpinta pukawon ang atong mga pagbati sa mga bulok sa iyang panit wala na kini giputos nga mga unod ug ang mga unod wala na magtabon sa mga bukog dakong patag na ang tawo nga atong nahimamat dili na siya ang bukid, ang sapa, ang dagat usa ka debuho, nga usahay labing mahal pa gani sa tinuod nga tawo nga nagpungko didto sa daplin sa baybayon puli sa tinuod ang giawat-awat puli sa tinuod ang mga bakak nga karon labing bililhon bakak kana, kay dili na kana kadtong tawong adunay daghang balahibo ang iyang paa dadtong init og ginhawa, dadtong imong gihapuhap, kadtong namatay nadugta, ug sa kataposan gilumotan sa kalimot

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Pagdakop Sa Awit, Sa Balak, Sa Kahadlok

nadakpan na nimo
ang tingog sa buyog diha sa imong saxophone

akong gisulayan ang pagsulat sa balak sa
ligwan

ugma kaha ang sugilanon sa mga pukyutan?

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Pagkamatinooron Sa Usu Ka Balak

Wala kana sa ritmo,
Sa sukod, sa mensahe.

Dili usab kana
Dula-dula lang sa pulong Ug baid-baid sa dila aron kini mahait.

Alang kanako
Ang balak mao
Ang pagbalos
Sa nagbato kanimo
Naigo ka sa agtang
Ug ikaw
Nawad-an kadyot sa
Panimuot ug
Unya mibangon,
Mihapuhap sa bun-og
Sa imong agtang.
Mipahid sa dugo
Nga milatay
Sa tulay sa imong
Ilong tabok sa
Tampi sa imong
Aping kay buot Mobalik pagsulod
Sa lim-aw Sa nagtibi mo
nga baba.

Gihapuhap mo
Ang kasakit
Ug wala panumbalinga
Ang nagbato sama

Niining akong balak Alang lang kanako.
Ang Pagkamatuoron Sa Balak Alang Lang Kanako

Wala kana sa ritmo
Sa sukod, sa mensahe

Dili usab kana
Dula dula lang sa pulong

Baid baid sa dila aron Lang kini mahait

Para kanako
Ang balak mao
Ang pagbalos
Sa nagbato kanimo
Naigo ka sa agtang
Ug ikaw
Nawad-an kadyot sa
Panimuot ug
Sa kadali ikaw
Mibangon
Mihapuhap
Sa bun-og sa Imong agtang
Mipahid sa dugo
Nga milatay
Sa tulay sa imong
Ilong tabok sa
Tampi sa imong
aping Kay gustong
Mobalik pagsulod
Sa lam-aw Sa naghibi mo
nga baba

Gihapuhap mo
Lamang ang
Kasakit
Ug wala mo
Panumbalinga
Ang nagbato
Kanimo sama

Nining akong
Balak alang
Lang kanako

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Pagtilaw Sa Dugo Sa Usa Ka Dila si tatay kwadrado ug apapangig. si lolo sab.

ako dili kapanghimakak ani.
nakasunod ko.

kwadrado sab ang akong
apapangig.

kon masuko sila, morag ang kalibotan nagplantsa ug habol nga sundang. sakit sa dunggan ang kanaas.

silang tanan, kon pangutan-on,
wa kaila ug balak.

o nakaila man ipaagi ang tubag sa mga tanghaga.

'nina na pod ang bag-ong sastre nga ginganlag tiago nga mikastigo ni conchay! '

kanunayng hait ang sundang sa kusina. Walay sakuban.

kaging ang mga tinap-an, asgad ang inun-onang palotpot.

dili ko sama nila. Kon masuko ko moadto kos sulod sa langob.

mamati ko sa pagkahulog sa tulo sa tubig. Gisapopo nako ang mga gamot sa kahoy.

Ang awit sa tamboboan.
Ngitngit sa sulod labi na sa layo. Nagsubay dinhing dapita ang pula nga tubig.

dili ka motoo nga pula. Nangutana ka giunsa ba kini pagtan-aw sa mata diha sa tumang kangitngit?

kon nasayod ka lamang akong dila ang magtug-an kanako.

kamao kining motilaw sa kaasgad. labi na ang dugo gikan sa utok.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Pulong Sa Bakakon

wala diay kuno
magpuyo ang
imong mga pulong sa
imong balay?

gilay-an gilayaan
diay ang imong
mga pulong sa
kahalayo sa imong
gipuy-an

asa ka naman
diay? dia ang imong
mga pulong nga
imong gibuhian nagpaabot kanimo

dili nila gustong usbon ang inyong gikasabutan nangita lamang sila
sa hustisya ug katumanan

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Sayaw Sa Itik-Itik

nahuman ka nag sayaw sa itik-itik kaniadto ug haskang lipaya sa imong mama samtang naglantaw kanimo karon ang imo na usab nga anak nga babaye ang misayaw kamao ka na kon unsa gayod ang tinood nga kalipay

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Simbolismo Nimo Sa Mga Balak Ni Neruda

Ang imong duha ka lapalapa Nagtalikod kang Neruda.
Nahimo silang mga tabil sa init Nga adlaw nga misulay og halok Sa imong balhiboon nga pusod.

Gipatong mo ang Five Decades Of Poetry ni Neruda
Didto sa bahin sa imong lawas Nga gitabonan sa puti nga panapton Tapad sa Nature’s Spring mineral water Ug sa imong dark shades.

Nahikatulog ka su’d sa imong mga damgo Samtang ang imong mga lapalapa Nahimong mga pako sa mga salampati Nga dili kamaong molupad Ngadto sa hanap kaayo nga mga panganod.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Simula Nga Pagbabalik

know what is missing

124567

did you say
three is a company?

u r wong.

are is missing

that makes it right

8

is the number before makes is so?

yes, you need that.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Tawong Nahigugma

ang tawong
nahigugma kinaham ang
pagkatkat
sa punoan
sa kapayas

ang pagsulod
sa langob ang
pagsakay sa
mga balod sa
gugma ang pagsalom sa
dagat nga ug
mahimo wala
nay tungatunga

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Thinker In Rodin

Wala ko’y katungod
Nga manaway nga
Ang Thinker ni Rodin
Sa una nakong tan-aw Mora bayag wrestler
Nga wala kabayad
Sa iyang utang.

Naglibog ko ngano ba Nga huboan pa ang tawo Aron ingnon nga siya diay Dili bogo, nga siya kabalo Sab diay maghunahuna Sa iyang kahimtang.

Nganong gitago niya
Ang iyang kinatawö
Nga giutgan sa mga nindot Usab nga nanan-aw niya Samtang siya
Nagpakaron-ingnon
Nga naghinuktok
Sa iyang gilingkoran Nga bato nga morag walay Gibati bisag gamay na lang Nga kaulaw, o bisan Pagpangihat nga siya Sa tinuod lang
Ulagan usab.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Tinagoang Balak Ni Tarcisio Alang Kang Tarcila

'ganahan ko kon ang tanang natong isulti bisan asa tang duha maglagyo mag
magdug-ol
magtingogay man og magbungol

dunay sense, kana bang makahunong ka kadyot aron tukibon ang pulong kon unsa gayod ang iyang buot ipaibot sama sa lansang nga namartilyohan diha sa kahoy nga banaba nga morag dunay dugo nga milakra

midahinob o misurop unya nagpakita sa lama sa kasakit pwedeng magdugay ang atong panagsandurot basta dunay direksyon ang panaw sa atong mga

hunahuna

dugay na kadto karon naglutaw ko sa panganod
wala na kanako ang paghandom sa unsay angayan isulti o kon asa paingon ang atong mga panultion dako ang atong suliran og walay angay nga makahibalo aron kita ilang ingnon nga kitang duha gigabaan

kon unsa ang mga samad o ang mga takbas
o pagluba ning atong kapalaran we just ignore it, kon dunay mangutana nganong milungtad ta sa pipila ka tuig og wala milubad

usa lang ang atong tubag: it is love.
sa ngalan sa gugma magpabilin ang kadena sa atong panaghiusa....'

RIC S. BASTASA
SA DIHANG MIANTUG AKO NIINING BALAK KABAHIN SA white breasted bird, to wit:

a white-breasted bird
sits on a twig
of the champaca tree

alone
always alone always

MIBALOS BAYA DAYON si Dante ug Siya miingon, to wit:

Started reading a crony's poem excited and determined in the middle of nowhere Stopped.
Eyes became heavier
tedium overpowered
the mind in turmoil maybe start in the morning with immensely rested mind bravo! bravo! bravo!

for all the hardwork
those poems to be shared for everone to accolade ug ako mobalos pagtubat: towit, towit twit twit twit twit

lupad akong spirit of the glass
lupad.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Tugon Ni Ogden Nash Sa Mga Bana

Aron kuno magbukal gihapon Ang tuba diha sa hungot sa inyong kaminyoon Kon ikaw ang bana ug nasayop ka Ayaw daghag estorya, dawata.
Kon ikaw ang sakto, maghilomhilom na lang kuno ka.

Sa pagkadungog ni Jerry kabahin sa gisulti ni Ogden Siya miiktin nga mora og baktin Kay kuno nganong ingon ana man Dili ba unfair? Nagtagay mi sa tuba tupad sa gisumsuman nga kinilaw nga isda...

Migalot si Jerry. Mibangka og estorya Kay kuno dili gyod siya magpa-under sa iyang asawa.
Wa pa mahuman ang iyang pagpunay og porma Nadunggan niya ang tawag sa iyang asawa: "Jer! Jer! Jer! Jer! Pauli na, kadali ba! '

Nayabo ang galon sa tuba nga iyang nasingkilan Dihang kalit mikaratil siya'g dagan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Tumoy Sa Tumoy Ni Manoy

lisod baya pag analayz ug tigulang sa tinood lang kitang tanan nga bisdak (bisag di na lang Pinoy ang pung gamiton) adunay tigulang, in one way or another, sa atong bay, naa jud tiguls sa amo lang, naa si lolo enggoy, naa si lola pacing, naa pa si tiyo miguel (mangkoy pero ingon si lolo nakaukoy) sugod tang lolo, pagkasug uhan, ug pagkalimtanon na, wa kuno siya katumar sa iyang tambal sa highblood, wa kuno siya papamahawa moreport ni tiya inday sa manila, ug dayon ug kasuko, makagot ang ngipon mokaging ang apapangig, ug dayon ug dram ug iyak kay kuno siya gipasagdan na ug si lola pacing, siging hinumdum sa iyang pagka miss bisaya cover girl kaniadto sa pagkahuman sa gubat sa misurender na ang mga hapon, mangutana ug naniudto na ba kuno mi, dayon hangyoon ka nga isulat ang iyang ihangyo ni alfred sa Dubai, papalit ug turban sa moslem, kay dili siya gusto nga maitom samtang isuroy siya sa wheelchair sa iyang garden nga adunay mga dama de noche, ug si tiyo miguel, nga ang favorite past time magsiging ibot sa mga salibotbot didto sa among nataran, pul-ong sa mga dahoy sa likway, dayon hangyo nga magpaluto ug haw-an nga tinonoan kay kuno siya gimingaw ug isda sa suba sa Olingan, ug kon gutmon motawag kanako aron papaliton ug sopas sa tindahan sa Nidas, parisan sa pepsi nga bugnaw, ingon sila dili enjoy mag-akatar ug mga tigulang kay kuno ang uban bisag nag-antus ug pangamaw sa chicago apan tungod lang kini sa dollar ug sa mga utang nga bayran, sa mga anak nga nageskwela ug nursing aron puhon makakalos usab ug mas daghan pang dollar, makatukod ug maayong balay, makapalit ug basakan ug kalubian, aron ang kinabuhi maharuhay ako? enjoy lang (hmm, ayaw lang ug saba, ako baya ang nabutang nga heredero sa .... ayaw lang ug saba ha.. sa last will and testament ni lolo, ni lola ug labaw pa ni tiyo miguel, ... sa totoo lang.. pila ra goy pagpalit ug pepsi ug sopas sa tindahan ni Nidas)

Ang Tyabaw Ni Edvard Munch

Ang estorya mao nga ang iyang igsoong babaye diay nasu'd sa usa ka mental hospital ug iyang gifuaw. Nalooy siya. Ug sa dihang mipauli na siya sakay sa usa ka gamay nga baroto mibuto ang bulkan sa Krakatoa, diha sa iyang likod makita ang mga kalayo sa panganod. Wala siyay kadaganan, ug busa siya misyagit. Mityabaw siya, apan walay nakadungog. Misid-ok.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ang Wala Kanimo Karon

ang pagsayaw sa
huni sa kabuntagon

ang pagpasalamat sa labawng Makagagahom

ang pagabati sa kabugnaw sa hangin nga kaganina milalin

ang pagtagbo sa adlaw sa usa ka pahiyom

ang pagdayeg sa lamian kaayong pamahaw nga
giandom sa imong minahal mao kana ang wala

kanimo karon....

RIC S. BASTASA
Anger

how to deal with you?

i ignore you like an uninvited visitor.

but then you insist that there is something in you that is very urgent.

i face you
and i burst into one waterfall from a very high cliff after a heavy rain.

you turn into a driftwood.
and i become the raging waters running
without direction.

the snakes and
crabs are taken and i have no choice but to sound like a roaring lion.

i want to stop
but you do not have anymore ears to listen.

you have become
my own ugly face
and i am afraid to see the face of the real mirror.

RIC S. BASTASA
Anger And Self-Denial

something arrives
it is harsh and you do not recognize it it exists but your mind refuses to acknowledge it this is self-denial and you tend to take this harsh thing too lightly upon a bottle of beer and some puffs of Marlboro cigarettes the harsh thing sticks to your skin like a leech and sucks your blood and drained

you fall into an unconsciousness self-denial falls like a stone to a house of dominoes causing this pandemonium of your guts

then comes anger
you scatter all your parts on the highway you let the trucks run over you whatever is left everything shatters
and you scream to the continents of the world to no avail
of course

there is this angel of pity hovering over your soul bringing you the light of the brightest day
of your life

you stretch your hand and there is this new world before your eyes acceptance, the tranquility after the chaos, heaven, this must be, serene, a clear pond, a self rising above the selfishness of your earthly existence

it is no longer us, in this luminosity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Angrier To Myself

when i am gone
please do not think of me because frankly speaking and this may hurt but this is true
and may liberate you
as wont
would have it
let me tell you
in the honesty of my hands stretching out for emptiness

i do not think of you
i will not miss you and don't cry don't scream you are a fool loving someone who never
love you

is it harsh? yes it is.
i was there not just once but many times

i am angry at yourself
i am angrier to myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Angst

enrico poses with a beautiful wife and two kids as Kayang also sends a photograph of a family

ey were old flames taking separate roads on their new lives

it was really unexpected but in life the unexpected always asserts itself the next thing i know is another

angst

someone dies and someone grieves secretly
for fear that the grief may hurt someone
that you
pretend loving pretense is another fact of life a stranger that stays which keeps everyone in the house tiptoeing

an open door does not necessarily welcome you someone wants to close it but couldn’t

RIC S. BASTASA
Ania Ang Ang Tigtagik Kalimti Na Ang Mga Atik

sa matag adlaw
miabot ang hunghong

hangtod na kini sa
mga kagabtion

kon ikaw siging pamati dili ka na ganahan nga motingog sa imong pagtingog dili na nimo kaayo madungog anaa ang mga hungihong anaa ang mga kasikas

nadungog mo na ba ang mga tunob sa hulmigas?

gahasol ako sa akong tanlag gihadla ako sa tumang kahilom gipamati ko ang maong tingog gilikayan ko ang alingugngog

ania ang ang tigtagik kalimti na ang mga atik

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive Animal Cruelty Club

you cannot kill the dog she says with authority if you kill one we will find out and we'll kill you, for Dog's sake.

RIC S. BASTASA
Animation

thunder assumes life of the male genitalia ruling the evening the houses are the recipients of its fury the bliss of the other strikes the roofs of those who remain indifferent to its invasion
there are sounds of moaning of the wind but the windows know how to pretend that they are all dead lightning tries to provide the electricity of the lapses but the doors like the windows also know how to pretend like the house.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ankor Wat In Cambodia

we are into the labyrinthine paths of the temple in Cambodia two years ago, and now as i lay in bed thinking about it the image of a tall man comes into play, he invited us to a secret place where a beehive is situated and there is really nothing unusual about it since we have lots of this kind in the philippines, and then for heeding his invitation as tour guide to a beehive he then asks for money as his fee which to our mind is not that hard to give knowing very well that he needs it for his daily survival and then we left the place rushing to see the old trees eating the Buddhist temple for years and years still hungrier than ever....

RIC S. BASTASA
Anne Sexton...

or, do not try that trick of closing the garage turning on the engine of your car and breathe that eunuch carbon monoxide, you are not
Anne Sexbomb.

RIC S. BASTASA
Anniversaries

for all
the things that we both know we don't talk about them we start talking about those that we pretend we do not know

you choose the words
like the way you put the right flowers in a vase at the headboard of the bed, and i choose the words not to hurt you we do not look at each other's eyes we refrain the touch of the hands

you leave the flowers there and i look to another direction there are things that remain to be done
we ought to

and then the flowers wilt nights come and go and then the following morning we choose again
words, flowers,

we continue
not talking about what we already know

i guess
this is the only way how we can survive the travails of marriage.

RIC S. BASTASA
Annotations To Daily Encounters

The room is small, dark, and humid It usually speaks,
Nevertheless, it is tight-lipped today, While I undress myself
It looks at me & Senses the foulness
Of my nudity.
I walk naked towards its hazy windows Overlooking the strong rains Pounding those breathing in the Garden,
The sunflowers are shouting for help They may die sooner, While I remain in stand still Unable to do What is needed to be done While everything breathing Are groping for space.
And I can’t speak to the room either, About this arrangement of Predators and prey
Heavy rains and helpless sunflowers Grandfather and son Parasites and hosts
Brothers and sisters
Late suns and balding trees.
I am tight-tipped too,
By nature this room is without tongue,
With nothing to say, and interesting to open up, an icebreaker.
It reminds me:
It is about leaves and leaving,
About everybody’s departure, from one reason to another, Excuses & recluses,
I don’t want to understand & I am logically starved, Deprived of some perspective about God’s ways, What I mean is that This room would not want to listen about what I will say, There is no room for pacifications anymore.
We are both occupants here, the room Occupies me,
The pre-occupation in fact is too much We seem too much mindful of our Private affairs, in so contemptible manner, as it is bare, as I am naked,
And we don’t speak too many words today there Are no adjectives for departures, we are too tight-lipped My chest too congested, and the room too bare It is short of what to Exposé, what with nothing left, except barrenness and nudity.

Come with us, and be departed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Liza says
it was her last option otherwise she will simply be hurting herself like poking a stone on her head or stabbing her own heart with her own knife
from her very own hands

last option: annulment the man she says is irresponsible incompatibility was discovered late then follows Maila again separated with a man sired her a boy it is the boy that she loves more and not the man and so with Verna

she finally finds her man on top of another man right in their conjugal bed she could not fire a gun that is her regret

the family court is constantly hammering the gavel
for another annulment of marriage and everyone seems happy celebrations is occurring here and there balloons are bursting firecrackers on the month of June my Emma is silent

perhaps disturbed by this legal turbulence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Chance To Say The Words

i hurt you,
that is a fact,
i make you bleed
i have seen the drops of blood on the floor on the bed on the corners of your house, i leave now as you say but give me another moment for me to say the words i may have been unkind and selfish and not deserving of your purity of your love that surpassed my mortality, look at me for the last time, please give me a few seconds for me to say the words:

I have always loved you.

(and if given another moment of my life :) i will still love you. Always I will.

RIC S. BASTASA
Anonymous Poet

then anonymous poet keeps on writing his critic is the curtain his reader his own computer keys
the walls around him cheer the ceiling stares
the beams comfort him and the floors
say that his poems are interesting

he does not really mind
after all
he is anonymous
and he likes it
that way

his life a mystery
his name a nobody.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Aging Opportunity Had Passed

early in the morning
i will miss
the first glimpse of sunrise

the birds are filled with fidelity
to sing

leaves are always dew laden glittering

the white dog wags its tail to the door that is opened

the licking of the feet is one monotonous ritual but it gives the boost just the same

life in a box
sequences in routine
like the way
we always make love
mix it sometimes with prolonged patience
and sound sleep
after

seemingly the world goes out subconscious subterranean streams
like an underground river imaging memories
in stalactites and stalagmites
down far north

another year
a little bit bitter
but in sum
sweet, filled with cares love lavished
ravishing flesh
and bones getting brittle with sense

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Anonymous On The Loose

what i am trying to learn now is to travel alone and just be myself carrying a small back pack and a credit card and when i arrive at my chosen destination
i shall find a lodging house where i can be alone and naked to myself
i'd sleep for hours and think nothing about work and
the future
and on one fine day when the rain there
stops
i shall take a bath (clean myself
comb my hair and get ready for another adventure
of my life
as though i am once again a bachelor
taking my stroll in those public parks
buying my breakfast on one of those lined up stalls

in here i am myself anew another anonymous.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Bright Day

you start your life early, as usual, four in the morning when the rest are still asleep you start organizing your thoughts for the day hopefully a brighter one unlike yesterday's storm when the house was closed when there is nothing practical about opening a window

you like this feeling of having written another poem a brighter one perfumed with delight you write the last line and put there the word
happiness
and then you put the graphics of a daisy where a butterfly flutters its proboscis tickling the center of the pistil of this flower that you offer
for yourself

it is a bright day you open the door remembering some dance steps in the green grass of your father's yard the roses that mother always love

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Chapter Of Suspense And Happiness

when you are gone
you are gone for good

you are gone and i do nothing about it because when you are gone you are simply gone and i do nothing to make it more sophisticated or complicate such a very simple matter as a departure it takes only a second when the jet plane takes off and all its sound is gone its trace of smoke in the sky simply dissolves in that blue canvass soon it is empty and soon blackbirds dot its hues of white and blue what is there to make about those hands that forget about waving? those eyes that look so happy watching the fields flashing away from the window of the bus?

or an array of thin sheets of clouds from the window of the plane?

where you are gone
you are gone and that is precisely for the best in us

you go your way and i stay and soon too i must go my own odd way too finding another one who shall not speak and act like you (so i can easily forget)

when you are gone
i shall still be good, pursuing once again this search for another chapter of suspense and happiness in my own little book of incoming days.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Conversa Mi Amiga....

i am proud to say, i do not hide my ignorance and lapses but i always hide my eggs

Me

hehehe

for fear that it may get burned
but it is because uv got confidence ur ignorance is minimal hehehe compared to us

confidence is the flower of ignorance
Me

so nasa taas gihapon ka 07 AM safe up there 07 AM u can still be naked 08 AM

it is cold up there 08 AM lonelier 08 AM because there only a few of me here 08 AM (har har har) 08 AM ‘few of me’ 08 AM

tht’s confidence hehehe 08 AM few og u 08 AM looking down the cliff and asking the ant 08 AM

Me
Hey mr. ant what's breakfast? 08 AM what is the weather down there? 09 AM and the ant said 09 AM You worm, why are you up there? 09 AM you will die when the sun comes up? 09 AM
Me

hehehehe 09 AM
wow 09 AM and i said, how dare you call me worm? 09 AM i am a caterpillar 10 AM and the ant said: caterpillar is a worm, idiot! 10 AM

Me

hahahaha 10 AM and the caterpillar said: watch out when i become a butterfly 10 AM i will ride the sun 10 AM

Me

sunog 10 AM

and the ant said: try it mr. butterfly, sting like a bee and be that dead boxer of the world 11 AM

Me

nice story 11 AM and the worm said: (yucks, this ants knows many things 11 AM

Me

hahahah

how come does he know about muhamad?) and the ant said: hey worm, i can hear you? i have feet with ears

and the ant said: hey worm, i can hear you? i have feet with ears

because the ant is grounded hehehe she knows and she sees and the worm said: with ears or not, you are still the ant that feed on morsels and dead leaves ant: well, at least i feed myself from honest means worm: i did not say that you are dishonest, and what's honesty got to do with our conversation?

Me

hahaha

true

ant: (ugma na lang ta maghuman kay magsulat pag balak si alis kweng ka)

ha ha

nadalahig ka hinoon sa akong ka buang

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Day

it's another day
waking up feeling new seeing all things new again from these old weary eyes without prejudice without the bias handed to us from the previous days

the trembling is gone my hands are strong
my mind expectant

cool and calm my eyes shall be, and warm and deep my heart shall be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Dusk

like distant boats at sea not wanting touches of foams and sand i lie here in this strangeness of beach and bench sunburned and feigning to be happy in the cottage there is a woman

far from me
she knows what is it in me that closes and opens nothing but doors

all the groans and moans she make are unnecessary
the grunts and punches she could be thinking of another town or another man
her eyes as you see may be filled with wounds
pain stings her like red ants i watch her and then i step forward to meet another dusk

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Fiction At The 20th Floor Of The Summit

how we wish to keep it simple, like
love

but most of the time
love gets so complicated, like betrayal, where secrets arise, and when there becomes too hypocritical, to keep love and luxury walk together in the park and in the veranda of a five star hotel, now it gets much more folded and inside the cabinet of ourselves

we close in, showing nothing but a well arranged
set of furniture

when the lady of the night comes there is only this bottle of champagne two glasses, some stars in the sky a glass wall

and from the 20th floor another love story unfolds, and at the end
you make a conclusion: this is just fiction please disregard.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another For Poetry's Sake...

(i am sleepy but my hands are still crazy about poetry...

it is a living river fed by a heavy rain from those big virgin mountains
the roots of trees are no longer cups and basins
and so the flood begins the rivers tributaries twenty in all
run
towards the big mouth of the bay
where they unload their murkiness swallowed
by the royalty of deep blue.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Fraud In The Making....

so you wanted
a business proposal

offer me something that may make me rich?

there again
fraud appears like a man desperate to disperse his fortune

if you think that poets are gullible
i may agree with you

i like magicians and when they ask me to make a wish i oblige: magician, magician,

make yourself disappear!

and if he is true enough for sure, my wish will be granted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another God.....

what we do not really understand becomes to us, at least, something to revel, what to us then somehow becomes an amazing story, the awe of the moment, the surprise of time, and we keep on marveling it, like sun, and moon, high above us, another god.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Good Deed....

one night
the stranger
arrives in your house

you serve him
rice and fish
a glass of
water
and ripe mango

he is one of those that
to your mind
time has left behind

you watch him
eat
he must not have eaten for days

he will be sleeping in your house tonight
and it will be
nice

his haggard face his failing sight
his trembling
hands
his tired feet shall for a while rest

as you enter your room
before you sleep
you face yourself
in the mirror
you shake your hand
and smile....

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Happy Day

At the central park
he walks
wearing his red jersey and red pants and red shoes
viewed against the green water of the lake the green grass and green trees
and he walks along with his greyhound
with a grey leash

above him is the blue sky and some white feathers of clouds

and so i conclude, and this i should have told him
'buddy, there is no reason to be lonely, the world is full of colors, and we still choose what color to wear! '

i'll take the walk myself early morning today feel the wind, savor the colors, and live my life happily another day more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Horror Movie

who wants to show pain?
no one wants to show it and be pitied pity can kill makes you shrink like a chunk of sugar into some tears everyone wants to show a happy face in the road people walk and smiles everyone and when the back goes a distance everyone is back to their serious faces again twisted lips, crashing teeth misshaped jaws

one time that night i show pain in the mirror the mirror laughs it is telling me it is not me and i look funny with it it says i do not fit well as a beggar of affection it teases me that when in pain i look like a liar an old Pinocchio
with a broken wooden nose reaching the door from the comfort room i insist that this time it is true my tears are rolling like a river on the tributaries of my cheeks

the mirror

finally screams
i am another movie.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Imagined Betrayal

i'd perhaps see it from you point of view that when you left me you pretentiously wore a sad face, lying to your teeth as you try to deliver the lines of parting,

and when the plane left and landed upon your destination on a perfect touchdown

another pair of arms are there waiting for you and you run almost hitting another passenger with your pack

focusing on the new lover
kissing and holding too tightly not minding how the other conservative passengers react to such a well planned
betrayal

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Important Monotony...

I wake up
on same bed
same windows to open same trees on the backyard
and yes

same chirping birds coming over and over same mornings
in my house

it is a family matter and i feel
so good

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Insomniac Night

last night thoughts came rambling and we had a guessing game of what each image mean for instance the closed door of the dorm at 1: 30 a.m. when all of us were drank when the fat one climbs and breaks open a glass door
i can still hear the shattered pieces
of glass
but no one minds as everyone were afraid and pretended to be asleep for instance the bald prefect was surprised making love with someone we knew inside his room
no one likes to tell about these anymore those secrets that must be kept and buried in the chambers of our ruined subconscious subways in the morning i look at my eyes buried in my sockets but i always think of some advantages about those insomniac nights these bed for hidden thoughts uncovered by its curious hands those that want to be part of who we are now

no one
not even our morbidity erases them

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Key Chain In The World Of Illusion...

the excitement about nonsense is that many people come and find a castle, and they find the door into it and finds a princess with golden hair beside a king with crown and scepter and even a singing queen and the dancing minions in a mayhem of the victories of imagination and the magic realism of all the mothers and fathers of verbal illusions and then you hear not from far the clapping of the hands of a big audience in a theater with thick and long curtains and absorbers of sounds and light and there you are at the center of this scandal where the hero is killed and the villain becomes well decorated like the general from Yemen where the lions and tigers kill themselves leaving only the elves and mermaids in the chambers of the marvelous and the terrific mixed with the horrors of your eves-droppings like the claws of the blue bird clinging to the blue vines of Terana where as the story goes: they live happily ever after.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Leaf.....

another leaf
another year
another seed to plant another tree to grow

there will be no hiding from now on there will be more confrontations

no one to trust
everyone is a suspect

love of self nothing greater than this

another leaf
of the book to turn to another page
to write on the journal tomorrow is my day

my own unique beginning

you were all disappointments my food came to the wrong mouths there is no wishing for death for me or for anyone

there is more use to reason now rather than the flings of the heart another sun for me another new moon

my shadows follow me
and not otherwise another leaf
without a worm

another glistening leaf dew forgiven.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Learning

there is a door between us as though we are just two adjacent rooms

to enter into your door i need to have that key you keep on telling me the key was lost and you do not know where to find it anymore

there is another door and you are allowing someone else to come in at first i say 'This is unfair! ' and I thought of forcing that door open

on the other hand
i have my own door too
and the lock is broken

a long time ago i have thrown out the key

for what use is a door with a broken lock?

and for what use is your door to my prayer?

i do not know what force is & i already stopped begging

i change the frames of my window i have some other plans in mind there are nine planets in our galaxy

there are many galaxies in unlimited space and like all those who still hope they always know that someone somewhere keeps on waiting

in a world where doors welcome me like arms in half-embrace and so i go to places where my feet are welcome & i have learned the happiness of forgetting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Lonely Night

another lonely night
writing poems another day of beckoning understanding what loneliness is all about another awakening
another hint
about the love we think we found some stains some pains some attempts to survival marriage deconstructed only to be reconstructed thoughts falling like leaves gently on the grass the moon listening and the night staring at you like the eyes of the ponderer patiently waiting distance makes us see clearly the one away from us how the heart grows fonder how her name starts to be written again on lovely letters colored rose and daffodils on the ceiling

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Lonely Night With You

another lonely night with you we speak to distant stars we think they know us and we think they listen another lonely night we gaze upon the moon we feel the warmth of its lunatic light inside our hearts we keep looking up and not looking on our eyes we do not feel what warmth we have on our very side

another lonely night with you how can i ever tell that i do not love you?

RIC S. BASTASA
thinking
that i am dangerous
i kept silence and she thinks that i have become more dangerous is this silence and she carefully observes
every word i say every action i make and to keep her calm and assured i tell her that i am just mimicking another Louise gluck.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Love Song

let me say, even if you do not believe me,
i am here
swinging on a rattan hammock
facing the sea
figuring out how God mixes the color of a sun fading and the darkness finally winning the game of day

let me say, for the nth time, that i am here
alone
waiting for no one,
not thinking about change of society not computing the number of the dead
comrades,

let me say, that i am here, thinking of you,
but i know,
you do not believe me anymore but that is fine with me i am not yours

anyway.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Metaphor For Recovering...

it is not
between me and the wall

i am not helpless against it

in my youth i was furious even without you

i hammered a wall
and went through it

mama was crying but she finally recovered

i watched her gather her composure like gathering
nails

it was the magnet
and everything went on place
again...

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Moment

this is another moment of being alone in another place where you will find time to be yourself
on the beach
with two seats and a single roof there will only be one blue towel
only one seat shall be salty
no boat or a raft
the sea is so calm you hear a sorrowful sound of breeze
the sea urchins are too many ready to prick
any of your toes but you are careful this time not believing all my stories my alibis

the sea is calm
you must think some more another moment
may strike you

i have never loved you
even for once

the sea is calm
and i will not be around to see the coming storm
this moment

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Mountain To Climb

day
climb another mountain
summer
grasses brown
crack
climb more mountains
not mind
get tired way
joy

when

clouds
mountains

sunset
orange

fading

sleep
grass

under

near

RIC S. BASTASA
we get blinded by the rage of our own biases
our own prejudices are monsters within us eating us slowly
until we disappear from the face of our reasons

the wise man says it is destiny, there is nothing to worry nature is just fulfilling what the stars have drawn in the skies of your very own palms

when all of them is taken away it is nature that is claiming its prize but soon nature returns back what was painfully taken in joys doubled and even tripled look at the rivers now aren't they seductive with their own clarity?

look at the trees
some leaves are beginning to grown on their bald branches the fish are showing their colored scales and the moss are growing their greenish hairs the children have arrived with their boats and paddles ready for another sail another swim they are our new divers to claim their new pearls the women are singing and the lovers are following them the old are settled on their chairs and listening to the old songs of the winds

another new beginning the past is now forgotten.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another One And Another One

i am referring to a bread and butter thing, the work that we must do, when it is finished there seems to be no end it becomes a case of this one too, and another one and another one, this is work obstructions of the heart hurdles of the running game a pain in my ass, but i give myself a break for every case resolved for every problem solved, i take a pause, think a little bit, see the sky, walk at the upper part of the house open the window and see for myself the world of planes and birds of flowers and tall buildings of playgrounds and yards of grass and then i begin to write what i love another poem from my heart this one is not work but play, it boosts my energy it starts my life all over again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another One Bites The Dust....

another one displays a plaque

smiles upon the flashes
of greatness

applause applause
applause

sweets sounds of victory

affirmation of little triumphs
on this tiny journey

you need it
badly man

and i support your need

thanks and
welcome

let us take this last drink for the road

for the sake of something that we want to last
forever

i am a ripe fruit

my wish is to fall

i love gravity
and i am
bound to rot
in the ground

i do not need
you
and i do not
need it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another One Bites The Past

at 20
i have doubts about you getting into the world of images, but you have persisted invoking the law of the leaves and dusts the pages of the wind you scan looking for the justifications of your
fate
and every word there though invisible
has given you the meaning of this pursuit,

without choice i welcome you and i am opening this door of emptiness and you shall enter it and meet a room that leads you to a bridge of jagged edges

there the snail with sleepy eyes shall meet you and serve you a plate of mongrels of your
past

you will not find it tasty of course but you shall swallow bit by bit
because of your hunger

welcome you finally arrive where i am introducing myself as a permanent resident

this is the place where we were born this is the place where we are going to die it is an empty place it is dark but be glad we are serving as light.

Another Poem For A Working Mother

i understand perfectly you have no time really to read my poetry but i will write you one as short as you want it to be,

go on. just be good.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Poem For M.

he sent me a picture of a highway
and some cars
running
taking some pilgrims on their usual far journeys

to include himself
of course

and he swears that along the horizon of that vast desert
along the asphalted
highway
far from the city he sees two flaming suns

i dismiss the idea
as flowers of his dismal loneliness

but it is not the end of this theorizing about miracles (when you are so lonely away from home)

it is about a broken self that travels a very long distance hoping to repair itself like piecing aggregate parts segregated by the cruelty of time
the indifference of men.
RIC S. BASTASA
Another Poem For Marvin, Who Is Not Responding To A Calling

“Literature takes shape and life in the body, in the wombs of the mother tongue.”
- Ursula K. Le Guin

marvin, this time this is the only time that you are called for this mission the tongue
of your mother,

go back to it
take your shape and life there

the reason why
we were defeated

it is their tongue that we are using and on the first poem that we made they were laughing and laughing still

how much useless effort shall we waste some more?
and how many fools will there be like us laughing when they laugh at us and still imitating their tongues when they have become so humiliatingly poisonous?

do you still remember how your mother tongue sound? it is sweet, so sweet marvin i hear the songs of the angels and they are all waiting.

the place that i have told you i will meet you there cindy and candice are waiting Another Poetess Comes Along another poetess has come along bringing an old guitar

she strikes a note from a string and then she starts to sing another darkness is pierced another star is born

another soul rises to the heavens another body sheds off old skins welcome, Yani, to our world we have been waiting for your word

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Poetic Sigh

how can
slicing a melon
be a poem?

but the two faces
of that melon
are poems

one face was a haiku
the other is a sonnet

and the monk who lives alone
on the top of the tree
laughs

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Position....

i let the hours run
so fast
i do not notice how things here have changed

i am rooted have grown and shall not look back

not afraid of the last worm wordless
till my end

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Promise......

for those we cannot touch with our bare hands we stain inside our dreams sleep is a ship taking us to the ports of our wishes we do not have to tell the captain or the crew the winds are too willing the waves are acting like slaves

we embrace tightly what we sorely miss on those indifferent days on those cruel days until what comes out instead is the blood of our desires we promise again not to....

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Question For The Pond...

it is the feeling
of frog jumping into the pond the joy of
love.

have you seen a dead
frog lately?

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Question For You

a relationship to be real usually is taken as a two-way street, or two hands holding tight along the road of life but it can be more than that.

envision an end, how an end ends itself at the end?

two hands slapping each other? no way.

it must be ready with an entrance and an exit, a fire escape, and some firemen to put off a conflagration

but if there are none
what then?

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Sad Poem For Leaving....

vigilance he has invited a month ago, and so he has prepared for the next coming days, he lives alone now in a house above the hill which touches the moon at the deepest part of his loneliness tomorrow when you arrive the dog will be already taken away and no one wags any tail for

you.

the door will be opened and the windows too and the free winds from the sea shall meet you perhaps there will be stories to be told when dinner is served by the shadows in the room and by those shoes which have accumulated dust for it has been a long time and the cruelty is forgotten, the indifference stays but it has no more effect on the sadness of the walls.

then you will hear the words in the morning you will be here alone too, the shadows are gone, the shoes are kept in the bag, and then you will be talking to no one.

the pigeons no longer have a house here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Set Of Lovers Under The Moon

the usual things we did surely we will miss but we cannot settle for less and you know it and so we create and recreate other usual moments something new to the hold of our hands evenings that tempt the stars mornings that entice the thighs
we cannot sip coffee together just us and
us
we will miss the unknown too those that we like to know
there is this pain in anticipation
this letting go of the
old and
embracing the new questions that never quench our quest for answers
and so if you have decided to leave me i may not be bothered at all for in another junction another shadow is waiting and the moon
spreads its golden mantle
for us
to be lunatics
again

RIC S. BASTASA
at dawn you are one shadow against a dying light looking for warmth because the sea breeze is cold because the sound of the shore is one deadening
silence

you meet another shadow and it is looking at you and you do not talk
since the other too is
silent

both shadows decide to depart and find another direction where they do not meet anymore you thought that this world is one lonely circle you thought that this loneliness runs in a circle

and so the two of you meet
again
and again you make the kind of departure
silence to silence
death upon death

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Smile To Remember

one day grandpa summoned a worker in his field and that early morning he told him that he is fired.
with nowhere to go
poor as he was, with a wife and five children to feed the man had to go, search for another land and bow before another master.

he was humble, and courteous still despite the humiliations and the insults on being called a lazy bone he still afforded a smile that i as a young boy could not forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Spammic Way To Prove Friendship

If you wake up in a red room with no windows and doors,

DON'T panic..you're just in my heart! ! !

(cid: @01CA3C28.F5DE85C0) (imagine the picture of miss piggy waving her leg at you saying Hi!)

TAG YOU'RE IT! ! !

YOU HAVE BEEN CONSIDERED ONE OF THE SWEETEST FRIENDS ON MY LIST.

ONCE YOU HAVE BEEN TAGGED YOU HAVE TO TAG 5 OF YOUR SWEETEST FRIENDS AND LET THEM KNOW THEY ARE SWEET.

FAKE FRIENDS: Will
ignore this.

Send this to all the friends you want to keep forever...

(what a mess!)

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Story Of His Life....

your palm had given you a blank sheet of paper
as white as
the boracay sand,

a pencil, sharpened
and strong,

fate asks you,
'who are you?
what do you want
from me? '

you know what you
are
from the very beginning
you know what you want since time immemorial

a middle aged woman with thick reading glasses looks at you
seriously, 'you are tough, you are bright
like a morning
light'

you know what you are and you know much more what you want

when you want to write
the truth
(the truth as felt and loved)
the blank sheet of paper turns into a thorny bush
with fire from its roots it is ready to hurt you and

the pencil can turn into a venemous viper
ready to bite you to
death

if, if, you write the truth (as felt and loved)

the woman looks at you more seriously
'you can manage it
i have trust in you'

and so, to keep this life, this journey of pain,
you scribble a lie
and another lie

and the woman with thick glasses smiles at you
with confirmation

the pencil remains as a pencil and the paper as paper
'this is reality, this is reality' the mirror of life speaks in utter silence... the irony of truth, dressed as a lie, life transcending death, sadness with its sweetness defeating the routine
joy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Time.....

the bones have turned to dusts and no one is there anymore to tell how the earth has changed now covered with rocks and grass

Time
the teller
and soothsayer
of truth
the finder of the lost thoughts the ant at the end of the maze the light at the end of this labyrinth

why are your days too slow?
your years are the growth of islands and continents your cliffs rise and mountains begin to touch the hands of the sun everything is done

and still unfinished

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Variation For Rebecca

naughty child Rebecca
slamming the door
of the house
with your genetic agility how did Abraham's bust ever kill
you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Another War Again......

we travel
just to get know what we do not have here in our town, and

something interesting comes along the way somewhere the differences become too obvious this and that
that river is just as murky as ours but oh my God a revolution erupted
here and many got drown on that river

we too have our own struggles our murky rivers and we see the sameness of
all these-

the hardness of healing the trauma that sticks to the minds of children who have become revolutionaries too

forever disappointed in this cycles of change mass killing here and
there
and then a little moment
of peace
only to arrive at another war again....
Another Way Of Looking At It

it is the body
that takes me it is this body that uses me
i am one helpless
soul
abused by my body
molested
by its taste
its tongue
its hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Year Another Mountain To Climb

another mountain to climb
from this valley where we sit for the meantime under a tree where we get our drink of the the mist
dew-like sustenance

it is another year on this cliff we thought this is all there is an edge where there is no pushing anymore another shadow comes and becomes visible as a hill then a peak

and then a tip of the high mountain becomes another target of this unending struggle to be
on top
of our worlds

Sisyphus is with us and we look at those backlog of years a flood of tears
a harrowing furrowed existence broken selves bones reunited flesh mending like torn pieces of letters
the contents of which you prefer
to forget

RIC S. BASTASA
Another Year For Our Sweet Embrace.....

because of love
the years pass by without us noticing it. we are in a bus bound for a vacation the villages that we pass by are not significant and we are not stopping by we have not noticed the grasses and the flowers along the road our talks are light, nothing much, to make those who hear us, take a look windows are opened, and the winds keep coming, friendly and gentle we always have things to do, and you always have something to cook always, always thinking about the other, no winding within like a corkscrew wine a little bitter goes with the moist cake from your lips to my tongue eternity no longer matter because what we have is now all encompassing beyond those fences are the greener pastures of our hope, and we leap.

RIC S. BASTASA
Anothner Stranger

to come home
and be not at home with the house you are detached from the intimacy of a garden the dog recognizes you still but you have no intention to play with it you are looking for the right time
and it could be not later

it is a kind of kiss no longer of your liking even the sound of your own feet
on the floor
has become another stranger

RIC S. BASTASA
Answer And Reply

shall i hear again the song of the shepherd
do you remember
how he said: come and live with me my love?

and what was the reply?

i don't remember really but i hear it again, echoed by tai chi

RIC S. BASTASA
Ant World
	hey make a bridge
out of their bodies to cross a split

or sail on a leaf across a river
to reach the other side of the division when one falls and die or even two or three the ant world does not mind they keep a vision and it must be done

RIC S. BASTASA
Anticipating Others' Schemes in bed we finally find the chance to know what is there outside it rains what is there outside the rain what is in it that makes the rain we keep our silence

we have not found the word to describe the calamity that we know she is here we do not invite her because she is a discordant voice that we respect that we know shall hurt us somehow we always make her prevail we belong to her but she does not belong to us anymore she intends to stay but we do not mind her anymore she is a piece of paper and we do not intend to write any letter not even a slip of our tongues she is rain herself and then we pretend that we like getting wet that we are stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
Anticipation

the skin is cleaned.

the shower goes on
the curtain closes in and then it opens

she comes out
naked and fresh
with so much
anticipation

the idea trickles
like icedropp melting sugar under the hot sun

the tongue
does not really speak it rolls and finds some treasures the mind stops thinking hormones rise and emotions burst love is spoken lust begins

RIC S. BASTASA
Antigone And Myself

it is explained why you followed the law of God it was never easy not to follow the law of man the one who can inflict the present pain and isolation please understand

i am here doubting which is which for certain the pain is here but man says it is God inflicting

RIC S. BASTASA
Antipoem 01

roses are red violets are blue
please flush the poem when you are through

RIC S. BASTASA
Antipoem 02

he was stealing roses

to give to her mother

because it is her birthday and the world says

the crime is still a crime and like all other criminals the boy must be tried and be duly sentenced pursuant to the evidence

(now change roses to bread or fish or a cookie)

RIC S. BASTASA
Antipoem 03

when you do not understand that is the time you say you like it when you tried to understand and still could not understand what you try to really understand that is the time you say there is a mystery and we have to be prepared to worship it, for something mysterious could be angels, could be God understanding is understanding like a mother she comes to you to reveal things though slowly and you must be patient like a child understanding is loving like a father and you must be like a son waiting for the final advice but you love more the things that you do not understand things that mesmerize you and give you the sense of awe which of course, is followed by the word, say it, wonder. Wisdom does not begin here. Wisdom begins the moment you begin to quit smoking.

RIC S. BASTASA
Antipoem 04

Mary had a little lamb
The lamb turns out to be a ram Mary has a little lamb

RIC S. BASTASA
Antipoem 05

so the opposite of a poem is not prose but a joke
pathos and comedy slapping each other and then laughing together the tragic and the magic the loss and again
not the gain
the sacred fool
now the tool
i shall speak the language of the common man and be the man of all men drink with them and dance and cry with them and then with angel’s wings i shall take them back to heaven

RIC S. BASTASA
Antiquated Dialogues

hand in hand
these are some of the antiquated dialogues: i love you
and
i love you too,

take care always,
i will always love you

and she leaves and he says: i will always wait for you and she says: i shall return take care of the flowers cultivate the soil and water what turns dry

and feed my kitty and put water near the door

write me some letters send me text messages or call me at least once a day when you are not busy time flies

the flowers die and kitty gets away to another neighborhood with other cats there are no messages no letters

and there is nothing to wait for the footsteps left on the shore where they made the promise
had long been washed away

RIC S. BASTASA
Antiquated Space For All Loneliness

can old place
bore the old man talking to the moon drinking his antique glass with that aged wine

it will always be
that way
even today for here
you are
with your shadow under the city skies
neon lights with the
moon
grasping once more
what life really is.

what makes the difference?
your latest gadget
fills none of that old place of vagueness
that antiquated space for all loneliness

RIC S. BASTASA
Anti-Thesis....

i wake up again
and the usual feeling is there when everyone in the house are still dreaming
in sleep

this is the unholy hour of the arrival of words but i must oblige
for i am nothing but a servant of
syllables

this is a pond of darkness and i am the only fish
here
communing with moss

this is the moment of my blooming i am the flower that blooms at dawn and wilts again
at the first hour of your
morning

and so what you see at your doorstep is another untimely death

when the rest just open their eyes when the first ray of the sun lands on the eyelash there i am
back to bed
captured by the hands of dreams lost in transition

and those who see me shake their heads
thinking there is something wrong with this man always running against time against the sun
amidst the storm
and the flood a bad sight of a rock in the middle of the raging waters but shall i worry then when i am half-dead in bed so silent like the sands lost now in my man made stars inside the secret labyrinths of my own mind

RIC S. BASTASA
I HAVE been anxious for days jumping and running for no visible reason like a flea
like a grasshopper
always doing things
because these actions are nothing but routine

a routinary anxiety
just like taking a bath
or brushing
my teeth

i worry
For the days to come
And I ask
what are these days?
why are these days coming to me?
like some worms
clinging eating
a rotten
piece of wood

What I am worrying about?

for god's sake
why don't you answer my phone?

where were you last night?
who was with you?
and why are you getting fat?
what food are you eating?
I am wrecked Nerves entangled
like loose threads
like grasses growing all over
a garden
like some weeds
in the wilderness like some pieces of junk scattered on the garage

like some dry leaves on the part
blown by this wind
in all directions

And blood rising
My head swirls

My fingers tremble
my hands shaking

I could be hungry
have not eaten Food for days

There is air
In my stomach and it is accumulating a lot of Emptiness
it is Painful
gas building up
and i
will be exploding soon
inside
is a bubbling
hunger
a danger of putrid air and filling up
madness

Why I am such a worrier? good question.

I am weakened
by so much of this bloating up a pressure of gas putrid acrid
accumulations

I want to sleep
But my thoughts Are crowded
like a busy public market filled with pickpockets and hawkers
and hawks
and owls
a night forest
dark and howling
and i am fed up with a lot of quarrels

of bad blood

these worries
are like murderers Killing my sleep

i am being stabbed
at my back
And I am Always awakened
By nothing significant the wounds of insignificance a moss clinging to a watered stone is insignificant

it is always there

I worry for things to come
And they did not come
And the fear that these things
That comes that are coming will choke
Me

Are not at all true bad dreams.

My mouth is dry

Saliva is sucked
By my own malicious tongue

My fingers are cold
The heat is Eaten by my palms hungry always hungry
for anything warm
for anything warm
that it will always eat

I look like a zombie
I walk like a zombie
I think like a zombie
I see like a zombie
i am talking like a zombie

I am anxiety.
i am some kind of hairs scattered throughout my forehead and my body of entangled hairs unwoven into a face of a scattered splintered man

Beware, do not imitate the cold is too much the splinters so many and so tiny there will be no reconstruction or a recovery that will take sometime.

RIC S. BASTASA
Anxiety 101

when you eat
not to fill your hunger but to feed
time
to make it preoccupied so that it won't bother you for long
with its
boredom

when you drink
not to satisfy your thirst for water but to please your lips for what has been missing

when you miss the alcoholic breath
of life
the dance of life in cold and damp
nights

when your arms embrace no one when your hands
wish for the usual touch when what you hear is the wind that gushes on your window panes
when you arrive home
and no one
greets you when the only pet dog you have dies
when the furniture is accumulating dust from the other side of the street
when you dream
and nothing comes
true

RIC S. BASTASA
Anybody Home? Anybody There?

You sent emails
And there is no reply
You sent pics and
There is nobody Acknowledging

You sent a lot
Of poems
And you
Keep on doing These things Repeatedly

For what Crazy phenomenon
You can’t just Simply stop

Missing breakfasts
Skipping snacks

Little sleep
No exercise

Canceled walks
Refused Parties

You are Simply engaged

In nothing
But intellectual Masturbation

Rubbing your Brains against The monitor
Self strangulation
Self beatings

Inflicting a Punishment that You do not deserve

That
you cannot Explain yourself

Hey, hey
Is there anybody
There?
Is there
Anybody home?

Are you there?

Answer me
I am tired.

like one mashed potato just mashed uneaten unliked moldy

and will be thrown to the garbage can.

RIC S. BASTASA
Anything About Everything

actually there is no such ing as anything that is
everything

a you for all of them a me for all the you's other there is a little bit lost and too unseen
and untouched

a great poem is as concrete as a pebble
staring to an eye

and an eye
scrutinizing the lines of the palm finding a map
where the
great treasure
of love
is buried
underneath.

RIC S. BASTASA
Apart.....

poetry
pornography
promises

ice cream
i-pad Iligan

Pi
at 3.1416.......

butterfly wings
storing winds

we both look for the first day of the year

apart.

RIC S. BASTASA
Apiece

four sided die
no one dies here

cast
the die and the die is finally cast on the
die

decisions & consequences of cast dies

not my own
but the majority

the future of this country not my own

perspective
nothing about a friend or relative or self or something in particular dissolved self in human solution

above all
humanity & integrity

succession
and handed bounty

continuity and respect for pillars and fences.
Apolitical

let those who refrain from indulging in politics thrive on their own self chosen freedom to be indifferent
let them thread their own paths
of political loneliness let their mouths be finally sealed let them die for words not spoken.

RIC S. BASTASA
Appeasement

cooling the body rekindling the fire of the mind it is the water that cannot stop this fire this conflagration of the heart this wreck
of the spirit
this lounging of the thoughts like passengers
waiting for the bus

RIC S. BASTASA
Appeasing Our Shortcomings...

as i open the door leaving the room where you are praying you touch my butt i caress your breasts only for such short
time,
we are decorating disappointment with such
teasing,
simply because we have done nothing
really
to please the flesh and to appease
our shortcomings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Appendix

listen, you are but an appendix to his intestine
up there
where he is enjoying his life he only remembers you when he aches.

RIC S. BASTASA
Appetizers For The Day

just a slice of green raw mango to fill my thirst
a morsel of bread to satisfy hunger a thin slice of onion to invigorate the eye red hot chili for my tongue rosemary and thyme for my smell finally a burp for the final sound.

RIC S. BASTASA
Applause Is Noise.

it is not about popularity. this is not about it. It is about flying and the love of flying.

in the middle of the air into the high skies.
there is no need of an applause.

so soar my friend. soar, soar. when you are up there savor the feelings of those gods and demigods.

if you think you are popular, as you really are,
it does not make me sad either.

what makes you happy is my happiness too.
keep going. soar high. transcend the barriers of fame.

jump over the fences of popularity. Get the high of this traverses. The greatness of our achievements lies in our silence.

applause is noise.

RIC S. BASTASA
Apple

red shiny apple
in your throat, do you still breathe inside your heart?

red shiny apple
between my legs these friends of my thighs

i am a tree and you are that woman craving for the red shiny apple
in my garden

i do not claim innocence for my wanton actions before the snake and
my God

i will say i will always love you bend over me woman and i will lay open my mouth fill it with your tongue pour in the drops of apple juice to my cracking lips water my garden and fill it with flowers from your hair

RIC S. BASTASA
Apprehension

before the rain
there was this gray cloud it was that sad

it was before you cried that sticks in my memory the tweezers
those lines on the face the twisting lips
the horror in the eyes

and then it rained
and the bridge collapsed the waters rushed bringing all the driftwood and the boas.

RIC S. BASTASA
April Morn.....

DEFECATION
urination, it is just that writing a poem

how did i see you doing the same thing?

ah, you give me
another setting: the beach ball and you trying to catch it under the sun

the margarita
on an old table facing the
horizon
on an April morn....

RIC S. BASTASA
Aquarius

you weigh things
Aquarius
some things you think always preponderate
to the truth
now even to something criminal
you no longer go for that which is beyond reasonable doubt
there is no such thing
as truth
immutable
there are only compromises in lies
you know it
inside
the convoluted past spitting fires at you like dragons
still alive
you close the door of the cave
to an abracadabra that you have invented outside there is only pretense pretense
you dress up
and walk away.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aquila Non Capit Muscam

if indeed you are
an eagle,

why are you
catching flies?

RIC S. BASTASA
the agreement is that when he likes you he shall stand and clap and bow at you

res ipsa loquitor

he lies there motionless his face in the ceiling his hands clasped then hidden inside his pockets and being so tired for the day's endless struggle he slept

RIC S. BASTASA
the compulsion to stay
and to keep on seeing and to keep on bearing the silence of what we bear and see the way we select what we must keep and bear
and see
we decide what must come inside us and what must be discarded this way we have become more human and tonight we sleep again on the same bed saying we are compatible on a common purpose to preserve tradition to keep things last which should have perished if we dare not decide at all

RIC S. BASTASA
i know that you know that i know that we have long known what we have known and we know that speaking about it won't do any good and so we know that we simply have to keep what we know knowing that in doing so we can be at peace and people are envious about the harmony of our well kept silence and all these we know is what they do not really
know

RIC S. BASTASA
For R.

your name is analogous to a tongue
in cheek, your favorite figurative
language
for human relations

i do not have
an iota of doubt over my past stupidities

this kind that believes right away
what every mouth has to say

i guess i have not yet learned the language of the press

underneath the water is a bed
of air

everything in this planet of yours
float

nothing settles down
for the
truth

RIC S. BASTASA
Arabic Nights

you are the arabesque into my arabic nights.

you dance and i open my eyes trying to see where does love reside in your belly? no, it is not there. it could be inside you.

but you are closed as a door of the palace where aladin lives i am looking for love.

dance, dance for me.

it is dark here and you are the light.
the moon.

i am a snake. i need the apple.
let me bite you.

take me inside you.
you are my paradise.

you are my tree.
i have the apple inside my throat.

do not die yet.
i am still alive.

please. please.

please me i am not dead yet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Arch

one longs
to be at the middle of the arch
door,

arch hands falling
on the side of the hips,

gaze maps out
the other leg of the arch
door, and finds ultimately the source of restlessness

the air is the suspect
why the room is confused

it thinks that it is a boat at sea and there is a storm that causes its vertigo

the nauseous philosophy of the lost existentialist embracing pain hoping to find the window

a frame of reference
a space between where the jump has to be made
at last...
Are Our Sorrows More Potent Than Our Pleasures?

we are playing again with our yesterdays

we are like children whose laughter
are flying to the heavens

spills of the drops
of rain
mud in our cheeks
climbing those hills
lost in those tall grasses
tumbling on the rocks falling on those rivers whose currents take us to lots of surprises

it confuses me why
the past looks more enticing that the present

why those long dead are more pleasing than those we talk with

why are we touching the bodies of the past?
why are they more real?

those unfulfilled promises keep on coming back like close friends at the guesthouse
are our sorrows more potent than our pleasures? oh, these empty moments
keep us in pleasurable pains like this white kitten clawing my mornings....

RIC S. BASTASA
Are They Still Here?

sometimes i question what has been taught about souls

are they still here?
are they in heaven, and then on All Soul's Day permitted to visit us here in our homes?

is there a day when the souls of the dead and the those who are still leaving meet and converse and evaluate what's up?

i like to think, there is still this connection.
Papa telling me what to do and Mama still comforting me about what has been done.

And all the souls of my ancestors for once on this day of the souls Guiding me towards what pleases them and what pleases us all, something that is good and beautiful and yes, levelling

when the dead and the living are still one inhabitants all in God's everlasting grace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Are We Lost?

what they did to us
we want to deceive history oppressed we tell them cause, they are the masters, effect, we are the slaves the past dissolves like smoke shaped like a mushroom in the sky forget we do not just choose curse, we seem to point, like a rocket in the sky that the North has shot into space beware! beware! that naked little girl ran in the road of destruction, screaming, now just a picture in the archives of a long forgotten history, she died, her name is written like an epitaph, where are we? we like to forget but the stigma of the tattoo still clings on our skin not a rose, not a heart pierced by an arrow with blood dripping in the stillness of it all, we are hearts beating into an abyss of fear hostage to ourselves, chased by our own shadows, we pretend we can sleep in this prolonged darkness we can't, haunted forever we keep on running without an end for a destination.

RIC S. BASTASA
Are We Still Living In The Past?

there was that time when we talk, and i talk a lot and i sense this fact that i am floating like a raft the way the conversation goes like a wide river and it has a force, a flow, and i do not notice that i have no control anymore, got no paddle or stick, and my words have become the wind from the east, moving towards a narrow way into the darkness, and on the raft there is no one there, not even you, and i hear the laughter of no one, as it was still i talking to no one but you who is not there too...and now i think about it, and i ask the same question: are we still living in the past?

we are inside this room with yellow green curtains and glass windows outside the rains are pouring heavily yet we hear nothing at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Are You Angry?

are you angry
because i have always trusted
love?

do you hate
me
having more
red roses
that my hands can carry?

my love
you cannot obstruct
love

neither can
you
bonsai it.

because love
is a tree
not a stone

a cloud not a cliff

sun and not
the sea

because love
lies within my heart

you cannot have enough of it
throughout
the skin of my body
Are You Happy Now?

war is nice to see specially in movies blood is red like a river and bursts of fire from rockets appear like a 24th of July,
piles of dead bodies
become your works of art and death becomes another mighty poem
to recite.

you want war? have it in your town, or better still in the close sight of your backyard.

face the enemy. Fight.
count the dead. if you survive.

have a little music.
drink wine. smoke a bit.
hear the last scream of the dying. stare at the eyes of the dead.

are you happy now?

RIC S. BASTASA
Are You Like God, Breathing Life With Your Words?

welcome ladies and gentlemen with poems written in your palms in our own humble beginnings we take the mission of creating and building words putting up images of full moons & stars on dark nights like these, the images move like a circle in our lives glistening without ends the words too become alive as we breathe them to ordinary things insignificantly tasteless to the tongues of people with mouths ungaping that we resuscitate so they may too live, there is life in what we breathe we touch and motions begin in a sense, may God forgive us as we imitate Him, and i know, God loves poets like us, we are not just few we are many we are holy and we shall flock like angels singing by His side these poems, these songs of love, of beauty,

of truth in the quest
of holiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Are You Lost?

if and if
by any possibility you are lost, please follow me
i need someone to explain to me how one can be lost
despite
the map & directives handed to us by the prophets
of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Are You Ready For Solitude?

if you begin to dislike people finding stains and dirt and freckles on the face of another if you do not like to listen to what they want to say if you find a list of mistakes and you say they ought not to be forgiven if you like to be with yourself as though the world is one indifferent shape if you begin to hate and keep things to yourself like you are an alien then, you are not ready yet for solitude you still suffer, you have embraced the loneliness you are still a shadow hiding in darkness in the alienation of the self you have inflicted the cruelty upon humanity even if you are not there yet

RIC S. BASTASA
Are You Sad?

You sound so sad,
Are you really
Sad?

Is your garden Without any Flower?

I am sad.

You doubt the sound
Of
My sadness?

What does Sadness really Sound

Like?

Does it sound like
A seagull’s journey Along soundless
Stream on a

A dimming orange Sunset, at the Sea’s
Horizon

Homeward bound
Alone?

Is sadness in True sadness Sound at
All?

Is sadness not the Maimed mouth & death of the

Tongue?

The sound of my sadness Is the sound of your Sadness

You read me
In between Some lines
In that imaginary Phrase

Perhaps if you look for Some flowers, or Even a single flower
In-there
You may find it
If you really Insists

But
You have to put The flower
Yourself
Out-there

Sowing the seed
Of sensitivities

Who knows
If later, happiness
Grows
Like some unwanted Weeds &

They would be many,
Not just one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Are You There? ....

sunlight embraces everything outside, lakes and mountains, and shores of the seas, and grass, inside there is nothing, but darkness, and coldness and sourness of existence, the coldness of a stone, the darkness of a soul, the sourness of feelings, a window is closed, another door is banged, someone gets outside of this beautiful house, how is this golden cage? this silver box?

how would you refuse a goodness that too imprisons you, away from yourself, from the truth, with your lazy bones, contented cow grazing on the lush of green fields, fish still on the pond without exit and this firefly inside a bottle, this gnat inside a glass room, this bat upside down some perspectives of outside and inside, prison and freedom, who do you think you are?

kiddo, you are drawing the lines, inside out there is this eternity of motion, who knows?

are you there?

RIC S. BASTASA
Are You Willing To Pay The Price?

two houses

two distant islands

on one island there are only two colors
black and white
nothing in between no shades, no hues
no compromises of blending
it is a hard, disciplined structure where rocks are rocks same shapes, same weight, same burdens on the other hand the other island is full of colors,

it is like law being let go into freedom
call it a rainbow where pots of gold are found where seemingly everything goes on and on but with responsibility
the trees grow leaves of different colors and striations and shapes it is surprising
it happens
the rocks there move like living heads of mushrooms the rivers sometimes take their rest freezing cold
and hard and then turning into mobile water again
singing

there is no bridge between this two no connection
nothing familiar about each but i live in both
i know the secret path and if you want to know it let me ask: are you willing to pay the price?

RIC S. BASTASA
Aren'T You A Little Bit Conceited?

aren't you
a little bit conceited
thinking
that i am thinking of you?

reading your mind?
i am not a gypsy

or a chinese fortune teller &
all for free

i am just this Pinoy trying to be a writer read by no one but lucky me

perhaps for this day

are you waiting for my next line?

wait a minute
i have to urinate

RIC S. BASTASA
Arf Arf Poetica...

do not read
do not study it just ponder
go inside your body recreate yourself
reinvent what is there
feel it, feel it,
write

take that dog's sense of smell and then find that place called home.

RIC S. BASTASA
in considering the dangers of my position i am giving you the first impression that i am armed with the possible explanation for these are the logic of my ammunition but if you only delve more deeply about my situation i am so helpless hiding only in the web of an exhortation.

RIC S. BASTASA
Around The Island

the trip around the island takes us a day

it is dark and we are back at this beach resort lighted by shells and torches

dinner is served
prawns, and crabs
and some lamb's meat from the farm
and some slices of pineapple
again, so sweet to my tongue
crunchy to my teeth

beside you
the music from the sea
the breeze plays our songs
of silence
that only our eyes speak

RIC S. BASTASA
Around You Days Hold You In An Embrace days hold you in an embrace there is love

and affection in light
warmth
given by the sun
by the side of the window like a red apple
on the tray

RIC S. BASTASA
Arrival Point...

and then i changed expecting nothing from everything marriage, career, friends, fortune, everything everything and that includes

, nothing, nothing,
and nothing

your wife is just a companion in the house, not even a friend, and your house is not for fun anymore, but where you come because you sleep not even to eat, you go to a fast food shop and spend time there letting time pass like the apps in your gadget...

your career is routine, boring and maybe exhausting but not really exciting, and your friends are all sunshine ones, not there when it rains.

RIC S. BASTASA
Arriving At An Age

when one does not recognize anymore: is this night or day?

the 24th of May or the 1st day of July

when the sound of the rain feels like a whirling electric fan in a cheap motel

when the sea breeze feels like another useless trip away from home when every place looks like the same like a road stretching far away from your car one day on a glaring light and you feel like you are arriving at nowhere and yet you cannot say the word

'shit!'

RIC S. BASTASA
Arriving At The Island... Alone

the boat takes you to the island the only person there
is you,
the coconut trees rise to the sky and the white sand spreads there is a bed
and blanket
and pillow and the glass of wind and you embrace the body of the sea

and they
who think that you better be left alone as you like it have long left everything there and you put your body down clothes on the white sands skin on the tree and bones under the rocky shorelines

you close your eyes
and begin to fly away into the abyss of solitude.

RIC S. BASTASA
Arriving Home

those that love me come and
embrace me at the doorsteps
these dogs of mine, their tails
give delights wagging their barks are so sweet to the ears of a man arriving
home at last.

RIC S. BASTASA
Arriving There

at the end
we all fall and we do not notice

how hard was it
how painful

when we arrive there we gaze at ourselves with all compassion

as deep as the dark color of our sorrows

RIC S. BASTASA
Arrogance

he says he is not scared of hell that burning flame, that fire and embers eternal

he need not even wear a cloth of fire since birth
till death he has always been burning with fire it is him, it is his nature, he is himself flame and fire

RIC S. BASTASA
Arrogance And Conceit.....

listening to all of you i finally choose not to talk i travel inward in my blood running inside my vessels inside my heart i feel that i am much better and then i sit inside my brain still thinking about so many things those that i have not ever met those that i have never for once thought of.

my hands are folded, my feet lotus i float in the water above the mud.

RIC S. BASTASA
Arrogance

it is the i which speaks

i know what
excellence is i have my own
standards

i do not speak
that much
i lurk in the comfort of the dark
the beauty of dusk

retreats are wonders of my world where i speak to my own silence

and there they are
in those wide ways
all fools, all fools!

stupid, stupid!
worshiping their own
idols and gods!

RIC S. BASTASA
Ars Gratia Artis

i will say this
and i will say this again to you

it is for art's sake
that i write
not for the rating
not for popularity

that is why i never go on campaigning
that you read me

i do not advertise
no gimmicks
just plain writing
because i just feel like doing it

words come and i welcome them they ask to be written and so i have to write them

art must be for art's sake words are written and poems are posted because they are here.

RIC S. BASTASA
HOW CAN i tell you something that i do not want to tell you? how can i let you hear my voice without me uttering a single syllable? how can i tell you know what i feel and yet depth within my heart, i wish you do not know a single pulse of blood in my veins?
HOw can i be so loving to you, and yet show you that i do not care at all?
How can i be in so much pain and then you do not feel the salt of my tears?
How can i say and yet say not?
How can i be myself and be without you on my side? how can a snail be a snail without a leaf to stay upon?
HOw can i pretend to be a cloud and you my leaf, my flower
as nothing but a land without a river?
how can i be so confused amidst the certainties of my life?
this luxury in poverty? This pain covered with white icing?
this sweetness deep within the lumps of sorrow?
understand and not understand at the same time?
to go and to stay.
to live and yet die.

only through this.
this narrow door where an elephant has entered.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ars Poetica 2

like a turtle
to be faithful to art

one must always carry it
at its back

anywhere

it is not a burden
it is a home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ars Poetica....

poetry is
sensitivity,

it is feeling
what we cannot see

it is this vast
darkness
where we pierce
with the light
in our hearts,

it glows

it traverses
dimensions,
it links
one
to another

they are these roots intertwining
with tendrils

poetry is awareness
about what others
fail to know

it is
a flow of emotion
carried by the
trailers of
words,
and sound and scent
and smoke
and mist and
dew
it is the syllabication, of an imagination about what is real what is touched what is loved and what hurts the most.

poetry is a beating a pulse a timer, a heckle a tickle, a pause, a seizure, a cough, it is colds and flu and a viral infection and at the same time it can be a leisurely walk at the park with your dog unleashed and jumping with too much happiness it is the sound of raindrops tripping from the leaking roof dripping in our room to the wooden floor it is the fluttering butterfly drinking nectar from flower to flower so gentle and so fragile it is a wood drifting in a river

a letting go wherever it is taken.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ars Poetica......

it is passion
without it it is nothing it is feeling winding up running looking for an opening and then if contained it bursts
it is an emoticon
sad, happy, exhilarated, burning, wriggling
dancing, wild, making love, resting after love,
smoking and gazing
finding a home finally in the silence of its fulfillment.

it is never propaganda.
ever an advertisement not even an autobiography everyone relates and at the end begins to imitate it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Art 1

from the whole
big and round like a pizza you only pick a slice savor and then
describe it

each spice exploding inside your mouth
salt and pepper
and pineapple bits

RIC S. BASTASA
Art And Pornography

hand in hand
nudity and lust smoke and dust
juice and cookies
our two faces in one body this sofa and that garden this floor and that grass beer and water
bird and stone all together make a correct picture of the scene
where we are
right now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Art For Art's Sake

it is art for art's sake nothing more nothing less shy away from popularity delve on the magnanimity of your day to day task delusion of grandeur
this art for art's sake like scribbling for nothing just scribbling and scribbling like hearing and then writing brown leaves fall upon brown leaves on the ground over the roots of trees decay comes like everything destined to be rotten and then you sleep on some cool shade
smelling the flavor of your silent labor

art for art's sake
who needs your rating?

art for art's sake is like breathing getting in your lungs what is invisible to the eye and yet so essential the inevitable and the inextricable the ineluctable the inexorable it is like taking all the entrances and then accepting that there are no exits

RIC S. BASTASA
Art Of Forgetting

I have asked
so many questions

and all i gathered as answers
are same as mine

i pretend i like them and agreed with them

we go for a drink from glass to glass
till dusk

our goal is the same

we must learn the best art
of forgetting

RIC S. BASTASA
Art Perhaps As Cure For Madness

his loved one has gone mad

the medicine prescribed by the doctor
could not help

to appease her he plays his violin

and then perhaps Mozart and Beethoven....

RIC S. BASTASA
Art Without Use

Sometimes art
Has no hands

The poor couple
Who sat here days Ago

Went to the other Village because no one

Accommodated them
For a night's stay

And the famous artist Did not bother except

Of course his way of Depicting them

In his new bronze Structure that now

Lies on display in the Public park.

RIC S. BASTASA
Artistic Pursuits

the hands of days
are winds
bringing all dusts
to my hair

it is night
time
it is cold but i wash my hair
to make me colder

everything is getting fresh
deep in the night
lots of
life
creep into my soul

sleep is useless
i tell it
i do not need it

here i am
giving the sounds of silence to this earth

here i am writing letters for those i do not know
for those i have never met

it is this joy of saying
without knowing if someone hears me

it is this automation this self-generation this seeding without having the interest to know if something grows from those unknown unexplored grounds
tomorrow

this is a closed mouth speaking to the earth this is the sleepless soul singing its songs
to the wilderness of vast space

what i know
is that there is an end

a place
where you too have never been

this is the joy
of our loneliness
we always do not know about what happens next that is the only excitement left

someone,
someone is there

doing the same thing
ardently like one springtime artistically....

RIC S. BASTASA
Arvisu Blues

20 years hence
i ask you for a word to describe my box existence in a place named arvisu

you obliged with ' you were serious looking then, but deep inside, (a little pause) i felt something was boiling' as though i were a kettle and i was thinking of the live cat which the Chinaman put there without any mercy and where the screams of the cat became one beautiful
silence
which we always try to savor during our dinner times upon a feast of glances unspoken criticisms of our submissions to religion

those were the times of my suppressed revolutions when even a newspaper i dared not read since i only want to be all: deaf, blind, mute and still be human more like a monkey eating eagle in those forests of davao,

nevertheless, i still do not have the courage to ask you questions pertaining to your good self, forget it, but i have doubts about my questions but mind you, even before i ask them i already knew all the answers

and now you have the right to call me a hypocrite but i was then an artist in the making. Remember that dusty library we had where books were left unread
where ideas about a revolt were kept a taboo where we always had the idea that dogs must never bite the hands of a master that feeds them jolibee fried chicken everyday i remember another hopeless fanatic who was with me cleaning the rest room and i wrote that the tiles were whiter than

our souls,

i am stopping now, my words are hurting and i do not like it when i am more of a knife than a bread which should have been delicious, soft, hot and ready for its show with brewed coffee from batangas and a sunny side up egg from novaliches.

till the next. take a vacation and by all means..marry.

RIC S. BASTASA
As A Drive The Car To The City

you will always be on my right at the front seat
do not talk too much
i have had enough you are my wife and will always be at the front seat do not take that position for granted others are waiting somewhere over the next block for a hitch
of this marriage trip.

RIC S. BASTASA
As A God....

So here we are birds perching upon a branch without laurel leaves it is raining and it is dark we are all wet and still singing

i look at you with your blue feathers the other one is brownish with streaks of blood sometimes (if you do not mind) i really think that we are all fools

in this darkness under the rain
still singing

(same old songs of sorrows and sometimes we think we change the tune come one fine morning dressed in sea breeze

the joys of the jam
the bliss of the barn)

deep within as i fly away on the other hand upon deeper thought) to the other island on that big old banyan tree

perhaps, in one of those twigs i can be a lesser (fool) but then the kids
without their mothers

may take me as a god.

RIC S. BASTASA
As A Husband

as a husband
i go for the old ways
of my forefathers,

i keep this wound
and will not allow my wife to take a look,

unless i allow it.

when i married her,
i promised
her only the joys
of my company

i have no right to pin her down or hold her too tightly to instill
the pain

of my own hands.
i will only share
my happiness,

sadness is not welcome in the nest of my dreams with her.

are you afraid?

you must be.
I expect the same from
you. Keep the pain yourself.
Lick the pus
of your own
wounds.
Heal yourself.
Take the
privacy of your suffering.

Unless you ask me to touch you,
I will. I will always be there.

Just ask.

RIC S. BASTASA
As A Matter Of Sustenance

as a matter of survival the last bite of the chocolate tongue need not be delicious to the tongue.
you let it roll inside your mouth, let the tongue relish it a bit, till it melts there. this is senselessly numbing, such sweet taste of life, and then this emptiness of the mouth, needing a fill
for a glassful of water.
this is senseless,
there is no more meaning for the filling up and the emptying, except the hands that keep on running and running meaningfully on the keys, listening merely to the sound of words, and nothing more, there is this senseless search for an understanding this logicality, this madness for reason, the heart aches in shame, unable to accept the ease of an explanation.
let it be, let the eyes shed tears, let the flesh tremble, till darkness comes, till the silence of the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
As Always Not Seriously Though

a child may ask for the moon point to it and look at you and you assure him it will be given on a silver platter

but then we know how is it to treat a child

as always
not seriously though

RIC S. BASTASA
As Always, Back Always To The Bad....

we promise, soon, tomorrow we shall all be good, we had made promises, soon, we shall all be good, not minding other people's business, not pecking on weak people, not concentrating only on ourselves, closing doors and watching the world go by, motions of rain falling and leaves blown away by strong winds, or waves galloping on shores into fractured sands, where to? sometimes i make you lost, as you track me down, i change direction, i want to go back to my innate goodness, but where to? it is always going back to bad, and this i tell truly to myself, i am getting back to bad, and sometimes i reflect i am not that hundred percent bad, for at least at this moment i recognize this fact, i am back to bad and it is the truth and nothing but the truth, and here i am satisfied: this goodness in me and as i clap my hands alone in this lonely activity: by all means whatever happens, i still know that innate goodness, knowing that i have gone bad and telling such truth to me, and to this corner, these words.

i make a promise again, i tell the truth, and tomorrow, i will be good. I beat my chest with my two fists.

RIC S. BASTASA
As Always.....

YOU may now be in bulgaria
or in pennsylvania
or perhaps in new york or somewhere in russia if you miss me

look at those stars
at night

i always twinkle for
you
in that vast silence in that faraway
distance

RIC S. BASTASA
As Beautiful As It Does Not Exist.

When you are saying so many things i only pretend that i listen. i close my mind. I never let any sound in.
i close the door and the window.
something that you cannot see.
i live within like a rat in my own hole.

when you write a lot of things i look at the page. yet i read nothing there. i can always pretend again that i am reading for your own sake, just to give you pleasure. i still live within the hard cover of my book i am a dot there.

dthis is what happens when love is gone.
dthis is what is really happening.
dno fact is changed. Nothing is added.
dbecause you speak too much.
dbecause you write a lot. and so you do not even notice my presence. you do not feel me anymore.

i only give you what you have given me.
nothing is added, nothing is subtracted.
it is but fair. To each his own. Each world within is as beautiful as it does not exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
As Cold As The Skin Of The Snake...

fear makes us feel the coldness of the skin of the snake
but our own warmth
must make us
live life
to the full
despite the cold morning
despite
the indifferent nights
despite
the earth's nauseous spins

RIC S. BASTASA
As Far As I Am Concerned

I was not born yesterday, Let me tell you that i am aware of what i am, where i am going, what i am after of.
I do not wish to speak
for i have nothing to say what i know of need not be spoken anymore it need not be known because my words are dying but not looking for cure.
When you ask the questions i have long pretended that my answers are true.
They suit you and you leave me happy thinking that everything is alright with me and all of us.
Now you doubt and you want to ask some questions those that you have long wanted to ask
but to please you
i always use the same answers until you stopped coming and asking for more.
I have no use of speech I have found reason only in speaking to myself as i begin to create a friend that i alone can trust.
This is the imagined friend who like me does not find talk too necessary.
I used to talk once like a child who loves you but you did not bother to mind each qualm for thirst each complaint for
hunger.
I have nothing to say
I have no prayers.
Because as far as I am concerned I have long considered myself finished.
When you come again
You shall know a friend of mine.
This ghost.
This emptiness that will never fill you.
This stranger without a traveling bag.
This silence without a signature.
This vacant lot without
a home.

RIC S. BASTASA
As Fine As Wine

hello baby, look at me as fine as silk
do i look weak?

no baby, i am fine as wine ah, there is something in my life that is new yet i shall not tell you

hello baby, life is fine as smooth as wine in my throat flowing hard and strong and foamy sparkling
and gleaming

yes, baby, i am drunk life is fine like your wine.

RIC S. BASTASA
As he boarded his Ghost Ship he wonders Where is this Ghost Ship
Taking me?

He prays and asks God
And God says
Read your Ticket
It says
Heaven bound.

RIC S. BASTASA
As He Looks At The Painting

for several years there is one figure in the painting that he cannot really understand it is the woman with a glass she is somewhere
in the middle
surrounded by her friends all men
it is very suggestive of someone inside and yet so detached from all of them maybe she is someone so different but how different she answers 'i do not know' but really i know, i know but i will not tell her, she knows too i know.

RIC S. BASTASA
As He Peels The Ripe Mango

as he peels the ripe fruit a mango
taking the skin and slowly sipping the sweet sap from
the pulp and leaving the hard part
of the seed

so shall God peel the masks of our faces slowly shall He take the sweet smiles
the substances
of our memories
and pasts
leaving the core of our soul

He skins us He buries us and so shall we, all of us without exception, begin to regrow a new beginning.

RIC S. BASTASA
As He Was Reading His Poems

he stuttered on every line like the way he stumbled in the days of his life he had his nursery lines as simple as his life has always been an evening of poetry
with a group of friends and peers there were so many cheers and some hands clapping expressions of ways of loving and then there was this hug and the green tea bag and my eyes open for the purpose of his line nothing complicated but divine just a celebration of life less the knife seeing himself in the mirror as a new human being so pure

RIC S. BASTASA
As Huge As A Cruise Ship

as huge as cruise ship sailing on the ocean as wide and broad as your dreams as high as the sky as bright as the sun as mellow as the moon yellow floating on the silver river as silent as the dark night as tranquil as the dew as calm as the pond as cool as the wind from the sea as beautiful as sweetly scented as a rose so shall my love be for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Am A Man

as i am a man measure me not with that divine stick

i do not wish to be more than God nor do i intend to be lower than that beast.

measure me
with the love that i can give you the sorrows i have the pains i have endured the successes that i have hidden from your eyes

measure me with the purity of my intentions
the care with which i do my actions
do not measure me with your expectations let me stand strong on the pavement of your cares.

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Am Telling You My Friend

i sit here.
not surprised for those who come uninvited and even for those who know how to say the word hello

not hurt for those who leave without saying goodbye

like a revolving door
i see those who come and go simply like the images of light and shadows

like a rainbow that i see and pointed with my finger for the little brother to see and then gone

like a dew like a gust of wind just passing on the thin layer of my skin

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Am Writing This

when i begin to write the words i pause for some regrets and i look at another window where life is unfolding a scene it is something lustful out there but i watch closely what is it in them that clicks to a switch of my flesh and then i write again because outside it is colder and the temperature is freezing some muscles
and then i write again
closing another window
i go inside
and open another door
i find the words
but i stop right there
right here
the words that need only to be spoken they cannot be written.

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Brush My Teeth

it is not the sensitive teeth it is the sensitivity of the soul listening to the rhythmic brushing the sound of too much repetition the cycles of up and down the softness of the gum the whitening of the dentin the gargle and the flushing inside the indifference of the faucet catching all that you give the bathroom that persists in its inanimate presence.

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Grow Older

As i grow older
I realize that changes arrive
As they please.
There are no summonses
For the senses.
When they come
They come in a caravan, in hordes and hordes and when Something is wrong
They go wrong
All the way
Anyway in any way.

Oh, they come in bunches
Like friends.
Sometimes, i like to reason out And convince myself that the best Way to survive is to hide.
To bury my head.

Oh, it does not help any cause.
I welcome the changes.
I shake each hand that says my name.
I drink with them and dance with Each of them.
We get drunk and we do not even Remember the exact hour When we have fallen asleep.
We have no fixed hour
For waking up.

Each is free to go.
Each is free to come back.

This is life. No one blames anybody Why he is lonely. The doors are open.
The windows open by themselves Like prostitutes, the beds.

When someone closes
Like fingers,
The frown shouts like a Mad woman.

As I grow older
I let things be and I don't really Mind if anyone disagrees.

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Look At Myself Carefully In The Mirror....

i see time
how convoluted it is how deceiving like a magician hiding time
inside the black box
and time
pretends to be a rabbit or a bouquet of flowers and excited as i am
to all these magic
i have forgotten
that i am a subject of time and that it knows
how to kill me slowly without my knowing
and i look at time closely
from my hair to my belly
to the thickness of my hands
and the losing of my balance
what can i say then about those
beers in my belly?
those furrows
on my forehead?
these silver hairs
these tight lipped
existence
words unsaid
a heart closing
as time shows itself
again
more real this time
like the black hooded sickle-bearing
anonymity

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Slowly Tell The Stories

as i
slowly
tell the stories about you when you were small from where and when
and why you were born
tears
begin to fall down from your eyes
in disbelief
you come to the conclusion that you were an unwanted child.

but that is the truth and that is the key to a door that you must open. so you may begin to understand the meaning of your life.

and now as you open the door, close it and try looking what is really there.

there are scars along the pathways of your tears.
believe now in the reasons unlock the love that hides inside your heart.
and then forgive them

begin from love. Oh, do not forget, there are other hundred possibilities for you to become whole again.

good luck.

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Stand On The Side Of The Port Also Waving Goodbye

inside a ship amidst the roaring sound of a departure
so many hands are on line waving

black smoke covers
my eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Wait For For You

and then our minds met at a point of convergence
i waited for you in a room without a number a place without a name a space where only us know what & how to fill

i am naked
you want the whole truth and so i am naked in this room without a number, a place without a name a space, where only our self-manifested emptiness know how & what to fill when you arrive do not call my name be so soft and gentle with your feet do not even say your name as i have also left my name somewhere else and it is only i who knows it i lose my identity that is how i want to spend my short moment with you

i am naked
i only have my face, my skin and my flesh my bones my whole body
not my soul

do not knock
just push the door it is left open throughout the nights of my waiting i have intended it that way so when you arrive and i am still asleep with my dreams and desires
of you do not disturb the silence and sweetness of my sleep just whisper your desire for love so sweet to my ears touch the surfaces of my skin and caress with your soft fingers the smooth lines of my face

place your head just beside my tight chest for there you shall hear the sounds of all my desires and then my love we begin the sharing of our hidden truths we shall dance in our nakedness we shall make love real we shall open the shutters of this closed window we let the slits of light from outside the night get inside us and put some warmth on the empty pores of our skins we bring light to the darkness of our lives we put fire to those eyes that refuse to close and die

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Wait For You

The sky darkens
As clouds slowly
Make the rain
While I wait for you
On a cold wind

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Walk Away Taking Nothing

I SEE bodies making love in privacy

the postures
try to draw
the lines between love everlasting
and lust
disintegrating
into shattered pieces that no one later bothers
to pick

I see Love walking out of the room passing through a door that closes
gently
upon itself without a key

I see you still sleeping so innocent
and divine like an angel
bedded in the soft feathers of your wings

as i walk away taking nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Was Leaving, They Are Just Arriving

you meet new people at the airport today when the plane just landed and the door was opened fresh faces from the north moving south

still entertaining hopes and ambitions how to make more money
buy a few acres of land build a new house
start a family

you are with a pack of chosen clothes
and you are moving north fed up with hopes promises without bones

you smile
and they see you misinterpreting that gesture as a welcome

deep within you
goodbye is truer
death levels everyone and there is no point
anymore
at all these

you are the truth they are the truths in the making lies crawl like worms towards that empty mountain top

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Was Talking About My Share Of The Sorrow

dear friend,

i am happy about you
here i am writing a diary about my share of sorrow
and as we chat
you go back to the past and keeps on reminiscing about the crush of your life, as in forever...
i am happy about your illusions since i have long destroyed mine like i am as you see a broken glass.

truly yours,
your ex-crush.

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Watch, Undecidedly

my secret keeper
is an innocent fly.

trapped in a bottle
it struggles to be free

as i watch still undecided what to do
with it.

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Work With My Words As Medium

I want to be profound Deep, deeper than what i Can possible swim

But I have seen
The limitations
Of words as medium
Of my thoughts
How can I put the Color red
Of an apple
In words

Or the scent
Of lavender
In syllables

Here you are Reading me
And I do not want To disappoint
You, my reader

I want to create
A world of sensations
For such is the World of poetry

I have long wanted
You to feel
My sadness in Letters
My loneliness
In a single Letter

This
I want you to listen
To me
In the hush of the wind

In syllables

I want you to Read my joys
In my phrases

Sometimes
I have given
You sentences
stanzas

I want you to
Be at home
With my words

But these are Just words
And I must Have failed
In bringing Back to life

Your senses Hopelessly
They have long been dead

words, words, words,

And
Even this whole
Poem
Is not enough

Let me try
Again
On some
Coming
Illustrations

Birds falling
Their wings clipped

Leaves blown Detached from Their stems

Trees threatened
About the news
Of the coming storms

Oh I am so sorry
Your senses are sleeping

RIC S. BASTASA
As I Write Some Poems....

this is one thing
i like

by writing poems
or whatever

notes of my daily struggle or simply haggling

with time and price
to pay

for my caprices and whims

for my wants and extra needs

i become too powerful i can be what i want to be

i can talk to you
i can touch you again

i shake hands with grief and then let it go like a friend

and then i can make myself invisible

from what is so real and cruel

there is no blood
no bone

i am king and nothing.
RIC S. BASTASA
as i write this, she is with someone else, a friend, i do not really know. i do not dare ask.
i do not like any answer. for what i have are just questions.

as i write this, the people around me are talking within themselves.
half-naked. copying their books. talking loudly among themselves.

friends, yes they are friends, and they say they belong to one another.
someone stands to take a look at me. as though i am a tree. another one stares at me. as though i am a bird.

i hear a phone ringing.
it is not stopping. she says she is waiting outside the door.

i am not a tree. i am not a little bird.
with her waiting for me, they looked at me,
confused.

i do not dare tell them, i am a man and this is not about love. this is about
my soul

she is my soulmate waiting. and she says she can wait that long. whatever. wherever. whenever.

then they start doing their own affairs.
one reads back his book. the other goes back to his seat.
and then they stopped talking.

RIC S. BASTASA
As It Is Pulled By A Barefooted Kid

one day a wall is destroyed
an empty space is built and made to look like
a big rectangular window
which makes a good view outside the house where we all can take a look at every passer-by
which by all means give rise to all the adjectives
we can think of like

that one is a colorful woman dressing like a
koi and that child is wild like a coyote while following
his papa who is carrying a big sack of onions

and we, though silent as usual in the custom of
our old people who died long time ago
laughed secretly inside ourselves but

it is the verb of life that makes the window more
interesting to me like

the way a busy working man walks fast towards
a market to sell his bundles of chickens
the pitiful cries of a goat with a tie on its neck
as it is pulled by a barefooted kid
the reckless drivers of motor-cabs trying to make
the most profit that a holy Sunday can give him
on this market day.

RIC S. BASTASA
As It Remains To Be This Unwritten Bliss...

i took the steps
carried myself down to the river and then uphill and at the top of this mountain i sit upon a stone with a covering of moss

the mist is cool and the air is bearable with its lightness ad
silence

this is the time to confront what was done looking back at those muddy steps tracing each towards the river which sings an old song for me to remember

mama is happier when dead and so papa followed that early curious perhaps as to the wonders of the other worlds for she never endeavored to return even in his dreams

we are here
living our own lives always reinventing what we are

here in this silence what can we really share with those who want to leave us?
nothing, we always say there is nothing
with us

except for those who keep the beauty of silence because despite all that happened
there is still a stone
inside our hearts
which occupies weight
which we bear surprisingly with all gladness

it is something that we cannot say because it can never be said.... there is simply now word for
it

as it remains to be this unwritten bliss....

RIC S. BASTASA
As My Love For God Is...

when you tell me
that there is no god that all these are just made up

i do not bother

my love for you brother is greater than this disagreement

i do not have to tell you that God exists
that He loves me and that I am happy

it would be creating
envy

remember my brother
i am weak and soft and gullible but it does not really matter my love for you is greater than all these

so we drink to this disagreement i toast for love
i drink for humanity
i go for independence and tolerance and happy living

i am not sure myself
i have doubts but my love for you is always greater than all these

as my love for God is.
As Nothing Stops The Unusual, The Mundane, And The Most Ordinary.

in a room where there are so many people where men smoke a lot and drink a lot from glass to glass where women talk and dance and gossip from room to room

there is one who is segregated, or who has segregated himself in the middle of that ocean of
camouflages,

the gossip tells his name the drink mentions his idiosyncrasy
from mouth to mouth
and that stabbing look beyond this door the veranda lies like a naked woman legs stretched ready for another prostitution of thought there is only one man who sees the sacrilege of this indulgence half naked

he jumps and then as he makes his last scream the world stops

and then the women gossip again talk a lot and then the men drink more hard liquor as nothing stops the unusual, the mundane, and the most ordinary...

RIC S. BASTASA
As Peace Finally Reigns...

it is getting dark
the flesh well used
shall soon take its needed rest, the mind

tamed and put well positioned inside the skull has given up into surrender what lewd thoughts it had,
and the heart,

felt the goodness of it all, not denied, not suppressed, it got what it really wanted,

soon this body steadies as the strong temple of my spirit, finding finally the solution of this long day's confusion: it is all hormonal, and once excreted what excesses are there, peace finally reigns.

RIC S. BASTASA
As She Rides Her Bike

as she rides her bike
everyday here in India the lady with a brave heart gives an inspiration to a brazilian poet named Aldo Krass.

RIC S. BASTASA
As Simple As Closing The Door And Opening Another One

don't you worry about what recently happened, it is nothing much to be talked about, no one wants to recall a sad subject matter, but i want to tell you, before she went away she stood up opened a door and walked a little farther about a meter away and she opened another doors against too much light someone guided her i saw that and then without looking back she dissolved like ice on the floor of sand then we pretend we do not forget her oh, we have other topics in our lives love, for instance.

RIC S. BASTASA
As Slow As You Are Loving Me

Slowly I know
Slowly slowly
I know what Slow is, how Is it to be slow
To be very Slow like
A snail, like
A turtle like
A feather
Falling in air,
Like an ice cube Melting and Water dripping
Like you, slowly Touching me,
Slow as how Slow as you can Be slowly loving Me, slowly killing
Me in this kind Of love so slow in Suspended animation

Squeeze me, fleece me, and eke me out, Crumple me, disarrange me, scatter me Crease me, fold me, scrunch, crinkle, Corrugate me, crimp me, and furrow me, ripple & ruffle me;
Jumble me, mess me, I am in love with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
As The Bird Meets The Worm

the law of instincts
reigns
and in hunger
no one is always forgiving

the worm
cannot have any reason
neither will the bird
have any justification

the prey is there
the predator
does what needs
to be done

RIC S. BASTASA
As The Moon Begins Its Journey....

the fire that you see is very much different to the fire that you touch with your bare fingers,

the smell of the rose is much different to the taste of each petal,

the memory of you is far different from the you that is now beside in bed as the city begins to die, as the moon begins its journey from sky to sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
As The Pilot Sings His Mother's Song

I AM just wondering
why you have opted for less:

less quantity,
that makes insecure
my desired quality,

at first i care,
i only have to say what is best and necessary
so as not to crowd
the space where writers
gather and speak for themselves
about time and matter and suffer,

there is a feeling of something that is about to be exhausted like a candle
with its wick which had been burning
day and night
without
rest like the heart which had been beating
from the time we come out of the womb till the time that we will enter our designated tomb

i like to be a bomb
for now,
tight upon myself
and gaining so much force
till the right time comes and i
will explode

so much for that,
back to wonder, and back to you you must have more because there is more to what is less than you are

write what is in your heart do no mind, do not mind what word to choose what ladder to step upon what fall
what strips us all

i am writing what i do not even hear

relying on feeling like a plane in the middle of a thick cloud an ocean of fog relying only on a radar as the pilot sings his mother's song.

RIC S. BASTASA
As The Saying Goes

the best way to love
mothers
is to truly love their daughters

RIC S. BASTASA
As The Seeds Grow Into Flowers

The insomniacs are here in the deary fields of dreams unbelieving

throwing words carelessly like wild seeds of discontents
and without sleeping they are all watching them grow for the morning to see and believe and perhaps be happy again

as the seeds grow into flowers poems and stories too arrive in abundance like a shower of petals from the spring of trees and when everything blooms as though the place is somewhere in Tokyo poems and stories are read and passed from one bookworm to another from one fiery imagination to another fairy tale perhaps on the next night of our sweet ordeals we shall find something we want to really recover

we can sleep soundly again dreaming words in their bright colors tomorrow, yes, perhaps on another
tomorrow

in their sweet scents in their good taste in such basketful of abundance the words will always grow.

RIC S. BASTASA
As The Young Poets Put It alone in his room

he closes the window
and the door
and lays confident
on the bed
with loneliness as his mattress
for the coldest night
of his life

then things so rightfully accepted without sighs

'it's ok' you say goodnight
to yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
As Though It Were My Only Son....

there is no such thing as an official poem. there maybe familiar ones, most acceptable ones with the pulitzers and nobels and whatevers but there is only this personal poem that you compose for no one, or for no other and sometimes not even for yourself it is a journal, a landmark of your stay, a feeling that you cannot forget, you record it, it is only you who knows it well and fully recognizes it when after a time, when you have forgotten, it comes to you as a reminder about someone, about something, about an event that when you pass away and come back in whatever form it becomes a scent of someone, or something and then you remember exactly what it was, and then you say, this is the poem that i have once composed
and i love it, and i remember, it is my poem,
i have composed it for that reason and i am proud of it
as though
it were my only son.

RIC S. BASTASA
As Though There Is Meaning

oftentimes to make life as new we make beginnings

a fence here
a garden within a new house
in the middle of the land

and then the old
storms come
again

there is always
this instinct
for destruction

for which we must be all thankful

for soon we shall begin anew
another fence there a new garden here another house to replace the old broken one
in the middle of
the land

and so there is nowhere
or no one someone is always
here
something
makes the tick
in truth
just another
deception
for us to sow the earth again
as though
there is meaning

RIC S. BASTASA
there is no such thing as done everything is always unfinished you think a bud dies, it does not you think that the twig that you cut remains cut

like a dead end of the road that is always not the case you think that the body of the man that we buried is all that is,

that is not the real case a story shall be borne it gives a bud and a twig another start a poem is written it marks a new understanding and the grain of sand becomes another planet a drift wood becomes another one's dream of a bridge it is not just the seed it is also the covering not just the ring that you see but another one's marriage a view can be immortalized in a painting or even when the painting rots itself all colors cracking there is always something that remains unsaid

it is what is always unfinished the one that we know but which we never uttered the one we uttered but which we start to doubt and not really know oh it is like a wheel of a bicycle like the ring that you keep on wearing like a hemisphere that you have traveled over and over

as though you have known it forever
As Time Fades Like An Evening.... Flower

four days in morbidity and there is only one question there what is life? in that dark box you hear the time clicking and you imagine a very beautiful flower glowing petals of light a green stalk soft as a meadow some dew of coldness hanging on its lonely leaf and then it wilts in your short gaze and you are neither the sun or the moon but a plain spectator your eyes have no tears for it there is only that unspoken loneliness which has reached that tip of joy you are silent and then you nod as time fades like an evening.

RIC S. BASTASA
As Usual......

as usual
this morning walk is done.
the acacia trees are not shaken.
the winds are sleepy.
the loser takes a walk
as though saying
life moves on.

as usual the bakery opens on time an old man driving his green easy ride becomes its first customer for hot pan de sal.
Cesar whose wife abandoned him years ago is talking to his loyal friend about God and how He is obligated to save sinners.

the fat man ahead of me walks slowly exerting all efforts to shed off what is not wanted.

as usual the mass of the catholic church starts at 5 in the morning and a trickle of the faithful take the communion.

as usual the sun shines at 6 o'clock and joggers rest to finally take their way home.

as usual breakfast is served.
everything is usual.

as i am telling you, whatever happens, life moves on as another entity apart from us

the usual events still happen.

RIC S. BASTASA
As We Are

under the moon
we share a drink
some stories
we mend the past
we look for meteors bursting and falling for the future
as we are
we toast
we long for nothing at all as we were
we become what we are
there are no regrets life and love have always been fair life as beautiful as ever love as true and forever what more do we ask?
on the poverty of
our spirits.

RIC S. BASTASA
As We Bury A Great Woman

perhaps i shall tell more tales about the greatness of this woman imbued with firmness and a self laden with the integrity of a queen the eyes that speak more than what the hands can hold the stare that makes the bad guys wear back their shirts and go back to their usual work

the black umbrella and the thick stockings
the long walks on the streets the hauling of wood the locking of the gates when some have to come late those important notes about honesty

no cheating
the gerunds and the cognate objects of her affection the way she sees the potentials in all of us
the manner by which she sends us to the fronts of our own wars for indeed she has and will always be the woman for the other now that she traverses another dimension we should not watch her with sadness for now she merely meets her own greater destiny not found here

not given by the emperors

goodbye
for what the earth has lost surely is heaven's gain

i have given you the silence of my victories.

RIC S. BASTASA
As We Close The Light

we bear upon us a blanket of silence
not a talk
we listen to the chant
of the fan
the monotonous whisper
of the sea
the passing wind
hushes and we love this kind of submission: we are embraced with the stillness
of the earth

RIC S. BASTASA
As We Gather Again Like Heaps Of Leaves

we shall be one heart
one hearth
of fire burning heat and light as offering to our God.

RIC S. BASTASA
As We Grow Older

as we grow older
we give way to the new:

younger promising faces we welcome them
and give them
a toast, a warm shake,
a sincere cheer

technologies that we do not easily understand yet we have to embrace lest we be left out in the corner of the mute and the blind and the deaf

yet deep inside
our confused hearts
we still keep our simple ways our cherished loves and human affections
our precious memories of loves gone by
and loves forever kept like gems
of gold and diamonds inside our treasure boxes

there are those few that we do not compromise something divine inside our heart and mind for without them
we are but leaves
blown easily
by a light wind
As We Talk

time goes so fast as we talk my mind whirls and ideas are sucked and then buried within my dark bottoms

keep on talking
i am a barrel that is so empty it will take you long to fill me up and you see i am never filled up with water or stone or even air, i am always empty and i am emptying still whatever i hold inside my mouth
i keep on spitting but you have no time noticing it not even my pain
i know how to hide things even when i was still so small to the eyes of my mother even when i was just a corpuscle of blood to her vein i already hide
my own emotions
as we talk i always fly away
there is nothing here that is worth keeping you think i am listening i give you that impression you have my body
excuse me
i do not have any soul
anymore
As You Abstracted Her

sometimes
no eyes

incomplete
face

breasts are erased

there are lips
but sealed

so many parts
missing

in a woman named wife

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Fall From The Cliff

many hands
open & wait & you think
they open for
you

stupid!
save yourself
they have no
bodies
no minds of their own

driving the real world

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Feel The Pain At The Side Of Your Abdomen

i see what you are seeing, you are always telling me. your fingers feel the pain. your eyes speak.
you take a little time. taking a look at the side of things. you see some worms. a dead dog. a rat rotting on the road.
the rain has come for days. flood runs. the sun comes. everything dries up.
the flowers wilt. this time you rise from your bed to be alive for once.

you see ghosts. i see them too.
white ghosts floating on the window railings.
i call them clouds. outbursts of light.
the moon. and that stars.

denial. the images of denial come like some petals of rain. red petals. orange leaves.

they come to you like naked children. they grow to be men, naked men, these truths, they are like the ten sculptures of david.

denial. you are talking of something else.
it is not pain. it is happiness. you like more of it.

yet the irony is, you are about to leave. the black car is waiting.
and they are ready with their dresses and flowers and prayers.

just as life has become beautiful the end of the story comes. happy ending.

that is what you want. happy.

ending. sometimes, i feel so disgusted, why the young useful and well-loved people always have to leave there was no time enough to really meet them.

i am crying.
As You Fly With Your Wings

as you fly with your wings
now
meet the vastness of that space where you are heading
alone again
because there is no other reason
to stay
because there are no more reasons

that which reason itself has given up to be eaten
by the wind on this journey to nothingness

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Gaze

the stars
at peace with the moon the darkness of the night the vastness of space
in silence

as you gaze

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Go Back To The Paths Of Your Dreams

as you go back to the paths of your dreams
the grasses grow tall on the bend somewhere

i depart as breath
to my labyrinths of regrets

if i find you
i must kiss you
if you like it still

if i don't i must find back my hands so i can still feel

my heart still beats sounds of life like a cicada at high noon extreme heat but never burned.

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Have Finally Accepted Yourself And Loved It Too....

the dignity of the lion the bravery of the tiger the meekness of the dove the agility of the mouse the silence of the cat the swiftness of the eagle the lightness of the butterfly and so many others whose goodness we have not so well considered, because we are so centered with our own, choose the good part, disregard the bad, take them, and then learn extreme tolerance, and finally you will love them all as you have finally accepted yourself and loved it too....

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Humiliate Yourself

you volunteer to shrink a little bit like a rotten pumpkin to let her know that you also know how to die and find a way to reach her in her own death.

you let go all that is fluid something that is liquid you make these turn to gas so you also have a way of telling her that you also know how to disappear she may close her eyes in anger because of you she may like to abuse you and not talk to you as you gaze to find out the reason why the stars are not out tonight why there is not a single shining moon you are so patient waiting like a fisherman with his bait to catch a fish tonight out there in the deep sea in desolation you give her time to change and to understand your longing for stars

your thirst for the light of the moon it will be painful, you have humiliated yourself in all these shrinking of your arms and hands you become like a tiny dot in humility to the line of bold letters and exclamation marks you give up, you get out of the bed and stopped staring at the ceiling you open the door of this cold room and you close it again to leave her still closing her eyes keeping her tears from falling.

it is over you say. it is over. it is too late. another door has been locked and this time you do not wish anyone in.

a wise man sometimes likes to use a period.
As You Know Great Poets Steal

do not copy,
steal,
and be too careful,
do not be caught

as you know
great poets
steal

when they were caught they were already listed as great
and no one
believes
that they were thieves

perhaps only those kids who stick to their beliefs that the emperor is wearing no clothes at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Look Deep Into The Mirror

the mirror is the echo of the sound you make inside yourself,
the voice that you utter when nobody watches you when all of them left to their homes and you are left alone talking to yourself, the voice comes out
from your heart
speaking your name, your dreams you hear the voice that you cannot see calling you
and so you stand before the mirror and try once more to see the face of that voice fair and square
it tells you who you really are softer inside
hard on the outside the exoskeleton that you have been making breaks down like flakes of mud drying the warmth in your eyes is still there the affection you want to give the love you want to spread they are all there in your eyes

but you cannot help it seeing something ugly

you have not spoken the voice hides in the silence walled by your teeth your tongue swollen

this discomfort of not saying anything as everyone you love leaves the door still opening to the cold outside the wind hunting for some stars

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Promise Me

as you promise me
to write a poem about winter
here in my warm country i waited for the coming of rain at least to feel what coldness means when it is promised
to come through the words
of your winter poem

the sun is up in our tropical skies
the snowstorm
still rages in my mind

RIC S. BASTASA
As you read these lines Another toothpick
Is chewed by my teeth

Something is wrong
With my tongue and Teeth, how they compete For recognition, the teeth Claiming it chewed the Words the tongue claiming It approved the taste,

I am listening how they Argued and quarreled,
And in the chaos I bit the Toothpick chewed it And spit it out,

How choppy have I Become, how some Of my parts have been So disjoined, and how Have I become So disengaged, divided, Like the tongue & Teeth, in their bickering.

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Sit In One Lousy Corner

seemingly
those who laugh
and commit an injustice in you are invincible

as you sit in one lousy corner as they ride in their fancy cars you surrender
they win, they have all the money now, they flaunt their wealth party in their mansions with their families: so many blessings more grandchildren
more investments
a friend of power
all political allies and hence you surrender as they have everything and you have nothing

one day lightning strikes they are all hit in one flash and the house burns all day no one can go inside the high fence and you the outsider simply look how things have changed how the oppressors die how injustice ends
how a new possibility flourishes like a flower on the sand
at noon

an old man asks if you are finally vindicated if you like the way things flowed if you like to take the flower on the sand to be kept in your palm the way invincibility is finally destroyed somehow creates a breathing space for your sick lungs clogged with indifference and hatred you have nothing and you walk away you do not like everything here and you do not need revenge not even justice.

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Step Upon Me

step upon me
and you shall regret for i am a snake
that bites

paralyzed you must learn that point
you cannot speak
until the next morning

you see
ask how was it when i first faced you
dove was i.

RIC S. BASTASA
As You Write....

as you write
you do not notice
that time
is slowly eating you
up

your eyes and
fingers
are left out your brain burns

and there
is no one telling you where water is all the rooms of your heart

open
as morning breaks itself upon this feeling of rocks

RIC S. BASTASA
Asa Gikan Ang Kasilag?

Asa gikan ang kasilag?
Asa gikan ang kasuko?
Asa gikan ang limbong?
Asa gikan ang kabakakon?

Gikan ka na sila sa tawo.
Milayat kana sa iyang kasing-kasing Miambak gikan sa iyang baba Milayas gikan sa iyang mga kamot Milalin gikan sa iyang mga tiil.

Kangil-ad gayod nga hunahunaon.

Ug ang tawo manumangil sa dagat Sa dihang iyang gilumsan ang tawo.
Ug iyang itugpo ang basol ngadto sa yuta Sa dihang kini milinog ug mikaon sa daghang Mga bata.
Apil na ang adlaw, ang mga langit, Ang mga bitoon, ug bulan, ug lakip Na ang kawanangan. Kay kuno Sila ang kasilag, sila ang limbong.
Sila ang  ang maluibon.

Kay sa pagkangil-ad sa tawo Natingala sila ngano nga wa pa Nila gipagawas ang ilang tinagoang kaayo.

RIC S. BASTASA
Asbestos Lungs...

never did i think in my whole life that i finally found this little niche where all my molds could grow admiring its leafless state, its tiny black spores infecting surfaces of my books taking my thoughts as food needed for its new colonies flourishing with a dose of humanity, this humidity our own human body...

dead wood, scarred hearts,
asbestos lungs.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ash Silence

we were three on an afternoon edge against
a sunset

tangerines turning flames soon fade into darkness

soon of ripeness
the lone fruit falls
the ground mourns grandeur burns
ash silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
what makes a promising poet is the one who comes to you telling you that he wants to write a novel in some other exciting ways or simply one who lightly quips that he likes to play with words like some tumble weeds and bedbugs tugging a bundle of fecal matter

i suppose one that lacks the seriousness to write the most important matter of life and he was clear in saying that the one who comes to him telling him that he wants to be a poet because he has important stories to confess ideas to express

does not really become a poet and i am really, one of them because i do not really want to be one of them there is simply no use at the age of ten, i already wrote my first line:

please leave your slippers before entering the door

RIC S. BASTASA
Ashly

he plays an Eye of the Beholder theory in his work
such as poetry,

and they say he has become too Aloof
his style they mean

when someone comes and knocks
on his door

he transforms into a rage that they never imagine

something in him now wants to be
alone

someone sick and dying and then they understand.

RIC S. BASTASA
Asinus Ad Lyram

isn't it awkward that an asshole
is playing the lyre?

or the turtle again
into the rat race?

or the fish vendor
into poetry?

unless there is a miracle then let the mute sing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ask A Poet...

one time i used the word adamant and the guy next to me says he has never used it and i tell him even if you did not use it or do not even understand it at one time we all had been adamant despite being burned or even charred or even thrown as ashes in the river of life we never cease with that desire

to live- -

ask a poet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ask Marcelino If He Still Remembers

when he was yet four years and Maya was yet five on this very bed where Maya just woke up one morning, he kissed her.

he stole a kiss from her lips and from his short pants, that of a child, loose and transparent i have seen how hard his thing was to my disbelief arising as it was from a very young boy with milk on its tongue. And Maya too liked it.

There was no anger in her face.

Freud must be right. One cannot take for granted the tick that sticks on the eggs of men inflamming them.

One cannot take for granted the lust of the past.
They still haunt. They still confuse. They can still make us crazy.

Look under your difference is just the lush of the black hair.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ask Me

ask me what i wish for in my life

ask me what i do everyday

i will have lots of answers, my wish to be with you at the end
as she once wrote it, was a lie, my wish to hold your hand when
we meet again, as she once confessed was also a lie,
my wish is a lie, i will tell you now, my wish to love you forever,
still a lie, ask me then what is it that is true?
it is only me that is true, from the very beginning of my birth
it is only me
that is true, loving myself, working out to love myself first, so that i may love you as my first wish, then you must ask me what i do
everyday,
office work, 7: 30 to 11: 30, back to office work, 1: 30 to 5: 00
it is not me there,
we talk, it is not me there in that conversation,
it is all work, it is all this obligations to my earth,
i owe my birth,
but i go back in my hole, this home, one day, and everyday,
face the computer, plant my feet on the floor, glue my bottoms
on the chair, bind my finger on every letter of the keyboard
where i heave some sighs,
hurl my words, run the lines that never stop, and mimic some great
men and women,
i sit all night shunning sleep, i write, ask me what is happening,

i am making myself a self, now look at me carefully,
i may be true at least when i begin writing
the first word in this
poem,

ask.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ask Not

Ask not a question
Of not to love and be loved
All over again

And let no widow & widower Tell a white Lie.

Love unceasingly loves and will not Recognize bad endings

Love is never meant to be sad.

RIC S. BASTASA
Asking

cold air devastated
all dew evaporated
into the evening

the moon comes like a wanderer
on such a lonely hour

i bought new blue shoes and i ask myself
where i am going?

RIC S. BASTASA
Asking Cynthia...

on the blank pages
i write nothing
on the wall i write
nothing
i only speak and then leave
when i arrive here
i carry nothing and thus give you nothing when the hour comes for departure
i travel light
as light as air passing by your window
i take nothing too
for

empty handed i come and empty handed shall i go did you say that too cynth?

RIC S. BASTASA
Asking For Forgiveness

When genuine love is lost and you want to regain What was original
You may execute an affidavit of loss like Your love is a certificate of title

Show it to her in a verified and subscribed manner She may take you as is On another kind of certified true copy Of love,

As though nothing is lost as though nothing treacherous Happened.

RIC S. BASTASA
Asking, Where She Is Right Now.

at the airport
there was this old woman who in her eighties
gave herself an opportunity to travel
alone

de she was trying to book her trip to iceland where she will be met by some old friends who told her that travel is advisable considering her situation

her husband who had Alzheimer just died a month ago and buried (or was there a cremation i forgot)

she could not book her flight as it was already full and she called for the attendant needing a wheel chair as she gazes on her cellphone where i too could hear her son calling asking, where she is right now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Asleep In A Boat On A Very Calm Sea

This soul is asleep Aboard a boat
On a very calm sea Dreaming

Tomorrow
This soul shall be awake In another port
On another welcome Strange perhaps But inevitable

RIC S. BASTASA
Assorted Sounds Of Existence...

you must have heard the cymbals and the sounds of the broken glasses the rolling coins on the floor the snap of the guitar string a tap on the wall someone makes the signals a pebble on the glass window the wings of the fireflies tired of the lights

eclectic, all sorts, everything, what do you really love to hear?

RIC S. BASTASA
Assume

assume that things always wait for you with all stability these inanimates
if you think clearly has a lesson for us to tell:

the table no matter how tired still stands on its four legs

the chair no matter how problematic
its life is still manages to hold your bottom

the bed no matter
what happens
even if it has some problems taking its much needed sleep
still accommodates
your tired body and makes itself available for you and your little darlings

the windows no matter what the weather is still clings to the walls it closes when it rains and opens when it gets too hot

the door opens and closes when someone from your family arrives and departs to some places
they do not ask questions they perform their duties and they never complain until they are finally broken and then you throw them away or replace them

i suppose they are more stable and uncomplaining.

why can't we be like them less our capacity for feeling?

RIC S. BASTASA
Assurances For 2013

Even if you
are lost and feeling
so lonely

A stranger in her paradise
a man without any name

She cannot anymore
remember

Even if you cease
The world still keeps on turning

She continues living life without you

So don't feel that bad Life goes on Like nothing ever happened before
Like nobody's hurt
even once

Don't let her say any word
It won't help

Lay your soul upon that
bed
that you beforehand bought
for yourself

Hear the words from your
heart
What the wind whispers
tonight
is true

RIC S. BASTASA
Assurances To A Friend In Need...

i was never sad
but i had all your sadness
at hand

i could have chosen not to be anxious but i receive all the anxieties you have as though they are all mine i will not be lost but i must be with you into your chosen uncertainty for how can i let you be in early death?

i was born strong and i remain to be for i have learned a lot from what i had years and years back when i was left alone to tend for myself with what i do not really have so this is life, so this is my happiness to take your burden as mine to forget myself, to join you in your misery to cry with you,

i am confident. I can take you out from there.
I am wise. I assume the best that i have.

i will follow you to the end of your stupidities.
I will not talk, but as soon as we reach there, i will have my hands ready.

I know my way back home. And i shall lead you there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Assuring The One You Love

i heard it all when she said that she is pretty useless in a metaphor she carries me to the spot where a tree stands without leaves without roots and she asks me what shall be the use of this tree? the sun she says has given up hope and the moon comes only to comfort it with silence some birds out of civility chirp as though saying your branches are good stop-overs for our journey i do not wish to argue with her and i always keep on telling her that my love are leaves of trees, roots, sun, moon, safe havens for travelers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Astray

Forgetting the feeling
Of barefoot
And bare
Hands
She ventures
On thick face and Lips that doublespeak

She’s gone out
Her own fence.

she will be wild at
first

then she will be painful

RIC S. BASTASA
Astronauts

couples on the verge of divorce have become astronauts because they always say they need
space.
it matters, and matter is that which occupies space and has weight. i need space. i am gaining weight.
i am standing on a cliff, on the verge of an abyss i am not afraid i want to fall, because i am an astronaut too needing
space.
i miss the fun at the opening of your beehive.
sort of your art boutique i did not forget it.
i need space.
i need  badly need more space.

tomorrow morning you will ask me why did you write a sad poem last night?
and i too, now, needed more space to lie,
i will ask you,
which one?

did i?
i cannot remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
Astronauts Must We Be

astronauts must we always be the moment something goes wrong with a kiss that is as cold as frozen beef we tell in a dramatic
manner:

' i need space, my dear'

RIC S. BASTASA
At 4 A.M.

time is as cold
as dark as the evening when you left me at 4 a.m. i feel like

a stone,

hard, cold,
numb, and so
alone

RIC S. BASTASA
At 12:30, After Midnight

midnight is another demanding master as you wake up opening the window where the skies have no stars the night is dark and without the twinkles of even faraway glimpses at you who is in deep thinking as to what is it that bothers you and yet despite the tinkering of your silver past nothing appears as marks for your to really regret and remember you are left with nothing to do to appease this troubled self there is nothing to see or feel you are empty, and numb, and someone is soundly sleeping in bed with you but then you are not really there when love is finally gone, what reason is left to make you stay?

you ask the past to make the justifications.
it is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
At 35

at 35 you think you are a learned man you listen to what they say and then you can anticipate what they gonna say next you get bored with every word there is no more suspense there is this plateau this plain that holds you like you are owned by it you struggle to be free from this ennui this monotonous sound
of the sea
this diaphanous cries of the frogs the lulling sound of the rain the bursting of light that comes every morning from the window
soundlessly

RIC S. BASTASA
At 4: 19 In The Morning

the mosquitoes are already full and bound to rest and reproduce their hundred eggs i wake up. there is something to say. there are lots of things to do. i am having a hard time to decide what 's first, what's next, then i write this one. this one is different.

it is about a question. it does not demand an answer though. it is about 'why i am always doing this? '

why i am hooked
to sit down and write again those that do not really point to a direction this scatters me like dust as i try to gather dust again the fingers run again. some words keep coming. i wonder. Do these words have meaning at all? keep going, the words say, keep going.

we will tell you as soon as we arrive there.

it may be about nothing at all. just keep going.
carry us. we will tell you is the catch. keep going. just keep going. who knows there may be something out there.

RIC S. BASTASA
At 4: 25 In The Morning, About True Love you are curious about true love and let me tell you about my love for her twas true, yes it was, too much moss in the stone the river wants to remove all the green in there sad to say it failed.

the stone is still strong.
and the moss too green to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
At 48

at 48 time eats what we have grown
they say
there is no turning back no regrowing
something in us is irreversible no way to change
no way to repair
and just be another
new cell

what we have like everything that starts young and solid and firm wilts, melts, evaporates, loosens there are wrinkles

so many deaths no resurrections at 48 the mitochondria burn itself

to death
there are no more fuels they all speak of an inevitable end somehow i am not convinced

there is a way
something not yet known by us call me old fashioned but i still believe in the power of persistence there is still an insistence of the miraculous positivity knows how to wait in a world that wrinkles, my lips still curls into a smile

RIC S. BASTASA
At 52

with all my shortcomings what can i be when i am 52?

will my wife leave me?
will my paramour stick with me even if i have no job anymore?

i am supposed to have a date tonight with a very young woman at her prime subliminal urge somewhere in my favorite motel, but i am having doubts really about fate

about my fear when i reach 52 when finally i become a ruin of myself

betrayed, lost and
alone...

ok, i will try another option.
i will focus myself in school.

RIC S. BASTASA
At 55

she sleeps with the tv on
at 6 o'clock in the morning in the kitchen the breakfast is cold

he walks upstairs
waiting for the sunrise sparrows are busy
feeding the fledgelings

he sits on a chair
by the veranda overlooking
the sea

there alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
At 55...

eyery married at a late age, she was then 35 and he was
then 40,

ea friend of hers said that the marriage is doomed she later died but they offered her white flowers to break the curse

his mother did not want her for him she said she cannot be a good wife she knew she had a history of existential tonsillitis whatever that means he did not ask and she did not elaborate their marriage sailed on like Titanic, but unlike it, it did not sink there is no boasting somehow that this can be unsinkable (for no one knows what is suggested on the lines of their palms)

then, just like rivers, and droughts waters evaporate, rivers become ordinary dry beds for stones

they have something to prove their marriage must last the lust is gone
their skins loosen
their teeth fell
their bones clang
their feet shaky

they decided that they can just be best friends for the meantime till death tear them both apart.
At 60

there is nothing to keep for nothing shall last and so i am finally giving away
anything
that makes me remember you

i am not the detractor i have never betrayed true love i was faithful all the way before you passed away but i have never told you that on your stereo-typed logic

RIC S. BASTASA
At 7: 59 In The Morning

my coffee has gone cold the grease on the fish has frozen again the jasmine rice has lost its scent and gluten and the lettuce gave away its crispiness all because i am writing poems again forgetting time forgetting the table where breakfast has been served losing and forgetting and finding myself to the bosom of God

RIC S. BASTASA
At A Certain Distance

at a certain distance
when you begin to talk and i begin to be so silent you become an alien to a certain point a monster and i shrink into a very tiny shrimp waiting for my big whale to swallow me whole.

RIC S. BASTASA
At A Certain Point (For The Wife Who Drove Her Husband Away)

at a certain point
you give up on him
and you convince yourself that regret is not your friend
neither your enemy

you finally utter the curse
that

'may he crawl on earth forever like a snake'

'may his bad luck embrace
him till the end'

i look around
the living room of your house and there just below the ceiling i still see his picture beside yours

i guess you are compelled to saying a different thing because you still love him
despite.

you tell him never to step on the backyard of the house
ever,
but your heart says another.
you want him back to your arms.
he leaves without any trace.

RIC S. BASTASA
At A Certain Point In Your Life

you go around
your room
and then to the kitchen

you look carefully on each object
that you see

the rexona deodorant,
the knife,
the garlic and the onions some rice grains
on the sink

you look at them
and they are all messy
you even think the deodorant's place is not in the kitchen

there are wrong
placements and you want them changed
by you
you want something
proper things in their places

you simply look at each of them
and they are all alive talking to you

they know you do not have the time anymore and they are so sorry for you saying
goodbye
At A Certain Point Of The Day

there will be no questions about cold mornings

we accept coldness as a way of life justifying it with how our parents decided their own lives, days are split like wood ready for the fire wood eating the flames flames reaching for the blueness of skies skies dissipating heat and chaos and chaos disappears and what you see is another clear happy day without the marks of

of hate & anger

at a certain day
there will be no words to be uttered accepting events as they are as though they too have their own
lives....

RIC S. BASTASA
At A Loss On What To Say

cumbersome words
holding nothing but the emptiness
of air

molecules unseen moving in random directions shall i identify myself with just one

and claim that i am lost in such space of invisible ions

i am always at a loss what shall i say?
about these feelings
unrequited

i want to touch your lips my hands are bound
i want to say i feel love my tongue is tied

like a sun i tower above you so helpless
i fade in the dark
there are no stars in the skies

RIC S. BASTASA
At A Reunion Party....

to keep the distance we shy away from saying anything
deep within
we have so many things to say but we are afraid

when we gather
just like last night we were too careful all the words seem right the way they were used and spoken nothing seems broken not the sound of the plate that fell on the floor or the glass that spilled water on

the table
how the mantel got wet and how each tried to clean the mess but the fact is that everyone is suspicious someone is going to be destroyed at the next moment

we hold our glasses ready with our toasts
for good health somehow our eyes are looking at a different direction vigilant and always ready

someone is going to be destroyed tonight and everyone sees to it that it should be the other.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Any Rate

at any rate
what does it really matter if she knows you granting that to be true?

does the riddle of the Sphinx ring true?
can't you be Phoenix for once and rise from the ashes
after some centuries?

just be yourself
the truth is
you are more beautiful when you wear your true face when i speak your true name

(from the four or so many names you have invented for yourself
so many selves
like a gorgon's head)

will it not be the sweetest?
i mean, your real name.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Anytime....

in a room full of dignified people
all the angry eyes
focus at what i just did.

i left because there is no more place for me
there

the hypocrisy of the mob
has become intolerable

after all
real supermen can fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
At Caluya.....

seeing you
in a state of utter depression is not an easy task for me

i know you
are inside that box and you do not know
anymore
how to escape and what to do
with all yourself
alone in
there

we are outside
we are many
and we talk a lot
sometimes what we
talk about
is a lot of nonsense

but this keeps us all outside that
room
of asphyxiation

i dream of a key
but i cannot find the
door
i know what a key
needs

it needs the lock but we have one problem
though
like you we cannot find that door
where you are hiding

and inside the room
all the monsters are there you scream
we cannot hear you

here we are
in this floating cottage
in the middle of the sea

there is a tall mountain over there and the giant statue of Christ with arms stretched to the sky
is standing

we see it all what we do next is simply unpredictable.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Cendet's

it is early morning the usual sunshine landing on the violets then spreading its thin fingers on the tiny leaves and soon enough a white butterfly hovers upon its softness soundless in the air

what beauty is there more than what i have recently seen than a uniformed security guard calling his stray cats for the feeding of left-over fish

later the cats lick his shiny shoe and sit beside him aS friendship resumes from hair to skin

RIC S. BASTASA
At Dawnbreak

i open the windows on the rear
pale lights from the eastern side of the window pane enter

i stretch my arms and hands
rub my eyes like sands
the cock has crowed
the church bells toll, we bowed

it is the paleness of light, the color of sadness
landing slowly like a tiny wind in my emptiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Eden

always
there is always
morning sun in you earlier in dusk
i wait for you as i begin to open my
windows
and unlock my doors
letting you in my bed of mess

how can i satisfy myself on you?

you are the forbidden fruit of my Eden
and you are so sweet and i must not lie
i haven't tasted you yet and perhaps

somehow
i should have been better if i were that snake

RIC S. BASTASA
At Fb

GOOGLE, google
see the faces of those that you remember
then
this is what you can at least do shed some tears
a pool of tears
and let all the characters of your life swim there
for long
let them tell the story of salt and the previous dryness that killed a rose which made the bee mourn that made another butterfly flutter in another garden owned by
that self-made oligarch applauded
by the wasps
and smacked by the worms.

RIC S. BASTASA
At First I Did Not Believe Her

unless you hear the sound of the footsteps of the ant pulling a grain of rice below your feet
as you swallow the chunk of tuna in
your mouth

unless you feel the corpuscles of white blood bumping with the red blood cells inside the veins in your
heart

unless you know how to wait for the turtle
to finish its trip from one river to another

unless you have the time counting the needles of rain falling on your rooftop unless you know how to wait for another rainbow to appear between the mango and coconut tree

unless you know how to embrace and hug sweetly another insomniac night

you will never reach the place where your secret dreams are buried covered by the diamond sands and guarded by angels with hair made of gold. There you shall have your final rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
At First There Was Only The Truth

at first there was only the truth
it was born
it did not know anything about lies and being pure and unrelated yet to anyone except to mother the truth remains to be the truth until many things happened on its life,

father lies at him
at first he is confused and brothers expect him to be this way and that way like what his sisters is telling him from time to time

truth wants to remain true because there is joy to its nature but nature too dislikes it and then it inflicts pain to it

at first there was the pinch it increased to slaps and then the mauling began there were series of intimidation sometimes they use the carrot sometimes the stick truth was confused until it gets of age and knows the mechanisms of defenses

of age it knows right and wrong of course, it knows what is true and what is not it is so easy to detect that even on asymptomatic situations but this world are made of rules and liars who triumph hold the book, the law, the rules of their own games and truth too just like you wants to survive and so finally it knows how to wear different colors shades, clothes, sneakers,

masks,

it knows about the fox and the wiles of the snakes and true to itself it becomes a wise creature joins the rat race goes for a kill

even on acrobatics
knows when to change
its face
to hide its voice
and the exact time
to bite
and lick.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Home With Emptiness

a door's way
to welcome you is simply to open
itself

the living room
outdoes it
by letting you
breathe
more space

the common denominator of all these forms of entertainment is still the capacity to contain and be at home with
emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
At Home With My Writing

how often do i have to read other people's work hoping that i may soon hone mine and get the admiration of other writers?

that is a long time ago and i guess i have changed

whether admired or not we are all writers in our own ways it is just a matter of self-expression a way of telling those who will be left here that once we were here and we have written a lot, a legacy in words, that we are the ideas of our own time, and time perhaps is glad about it how we wrote and what we wrote for and whom it's perfectly nice living life at your own pace saying the words you want to say and leaving everything for the rest to see and judge so to say, i am finally at home with my own words and style.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Home With Our Dogs

four dogs since the latest one died hit by a truck when it tries to cross the street without us watching,

four playful dogs in the house the only animals who miss us when we are away the same ones who welcome us when we are back at home they say that it is expensive to raise and feed and give shelter to four dogs in the house no, no, not at all they do not go to school neither do we pay them their salaries for pleasing us they do not harm at all and demand holiday pay and other allowances nothing about retirement schemes and SSS premiums

there is no problem about betrayal either these four dogs in the house if you must know, are our children since we have none
at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Home, At Home

Sunday afternoon
at home
sitting on a Persian pillow watching the outside view the sea over there the mountains on the other side sipping green tea
closing the eyes
meditating
on who you are
what you are
and what i can do for you i have green eyes and the tree are changing its leaves into mournful yellow.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Istoy's Cafe In Puerto Prinsesa

the fronds are having fake butterflies

two old americans are having their usual talk over english tea
and some marlboro
cigarette sticks

on the other table are Filipino women
meeting for a pyramid scheme

i have my own
morning spaghetti
in italian sauce
and guyabano shake

people around do not speak about cancer
it would be too harsh for a beautiful morning here
in puerto prinsesa

next time i will have Istoy's hot coffee
barako

they will not think of anything else
i am just one of them in the usual coffee world

i guess the two old americans too must love coffee next time just like everyone else i wish it will be a no for cigarettes and san miguel beer this early foggy morning

RIC S. BASTASA
At Karl's

that evening
i smoked three packs of winston cigarettes

i love the menthol
soothing in my nostrils

i did not refuse
the bottles of beer
i was taken by the bottles

cosme thrived on glasses of coffee and stood up
to sing
a bocelli

i have the manners
of the drunkard

no one noticed
that all those were my first
time

oh i love it
and no one noticed how malfunctioned
had my nerves
become

the following day
i never had the hangover
i longed for evenings and i want these evenings
repeated

lovely drinking sipping
evenings forever

tese my youth
missed.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Langging's Wake...

while the preacher explains a point in the bible, that we die only to live again,

Fredelita passes by, goes to the other door, and taps my shoulder,

winks and signals that there are other friends waiting at the lounge,

seemingly she is stressing
the point
death is not a serious matter we who remain
have other responsibilities talking with friends for instance reminiscing,

things we want to forget matters we want to confront fact is not all that die young
are good grasses,

sometimes, Fredelita makes sense.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Last, Together Once Again, In The Solitude Of Ourselves...

and so we just ended as friends
after all those years
living together
suffering the same fate in the same old house of tradition

i told her sleep by my side
i assure her that her snores from now on
shall not be disturbing

there is a sense of longing in the forgiveness of wrongs

a sense of hope in old age praying for a happy death
together

now we are left alone
by ourselves as all of them, friends and kin had all gone

breakfast is ready
you invited me
coffee without sugar half a banana
a cup of rice
a slice of milk fish

an open window
with a view to the sea
a twig
with a baby owl on it

flapping wings for the first time
eager to go away....

RIC S. BASTASA
At Least I Noticed.....

i talk to the talker
i despise his talk and i talked to him to walk his talk and we had a little disagreement about what talking is whether talking is working too which he says
is.

he said he did not like me and that i am irked by his talking

i hope he should have noticed that by talking to him i have become a talker too and that by despising his talk i too despise myself.

at least i noticed. And so i walked away. now i think i just walked my talk. And i talk to myself

' did i please you now? ' and the self just keep on walking not listening to my own talking.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Low Tide

at low tide
try walking on the shallow water now be surprised for you can see the edible snails the treasures of the sea right at your feet ready for your picking

it is what happens too at the lowest ebb
of your life
keep on going then
for the same treasures shall lay beside your feet keep looking just keep looking

RIC S. BASTASA
now what you hear is only the sound of the rain outside there is no lamppost, it has been taken away just this morning, understandably there is no need for light there is no feeling that in the brightness of a new day darkness can have digits but i heard of a man who carried his flashlight

at noon
declaring that this city is as dark as the deepest floor of the ocean where the gods of rage have been hiding and he warns that the rage continues that we honestly still feel this matter inside the guts of these modern days that sometime the ocean will bring its own darkness with the storms at mid-noon and we who take pride of the light and the grasses of the earth will have something to write perhaps not really that gentle and calm and perhaps we are too clumsy for this

RIC S. BASTASA
At Monkey's Cliff

in this place many japanese pilots committed harakiri at the end of that short airstrip is the cemetery which was kept secret for years until an american posed in there with the caballo island as a shadow sort of background the tour guide named momet says with historical expertise who having worked for quite a long time may not felt each word uttered the japanese tourists inside the bus did not blink

their jaws stiffened like the walls of the malinta tunnel you must have already known how cruel are the effects of war how everyone have become losers how the dead slept in the hollowed grounds

of this earth
not having received the true worth of their sweat, blood and tears this the tour guide says again her eyes smiling

RIC S. BASTASA
At My Own Pace

slowly i walk on a path leading to the woods taking a closer look at the ferns and enjoying the freshness of the
the air inside the cover of the trees, my steps are careful not to disturb the peace of the birds still hatching their eggs on the nests, lizards watch and worms keep their feast on the rotten wood beside the sturdy roots, the rain starts to fall, i am wet and now going back home.
something the silence of nature, the glossiness of leaves, the musical pit pat of the rain strengthens me: i am part of this beautiful scheme,
preserving and not destroying, seeing and not taking, watching all creatures live, listening what this earth is saying.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Night

at night
you find yourself
alone with the moon

the moon casts shadows upon the trees and roofs

there is always this wish
to grasp
what you cannot touch what you cannot reach

they say
that is not possible

at night
you keep that wish you keep that faith

that someday
your wish will become another reality

then one night
you said goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Night The Sound Of The Flowing Water at night the sound of flowing water (not as gentle as raindrops) come crawling in the tunnel of a dream, i listen cautiously

i refuse to remember what is gentle and kind and compassionate i have no veins. Neither i am a pipe of someone else

I am merely silence. And silence does not creep or crawl.

It stays, it is a pool.

A worshiper of the moon, a lover of the night that drinks the bounty of darkness, compromising upon the slowed glow of moonlight.

it is at this hour when the soul speaks, and the body listens, friends again.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Night When I Am Alone At Last.....

This morning
i keep the voices
united inside
a decent room

at noon
the voices become impatient

they all have so many words to say
too many secrets untold

at night i gather them again
like sheep in their
fence

i agree
there is respect
as i swallow my own word which i have not told you

we live in peace
in harmony
there are no variations nothing complex

society is already confused and i do not have to confuse it some more i learn to light

my own cigarette now and puff my smoke
against the sky.
At Night When The Air Comes

at night i hear the coming of the air hushing,
i feel the touch of its fingers
that is why
i understand coldness and patience
and ultimately the life of
silence
short and too concise brief and frank and candid and yes, sometimes it can be so cruel.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Night When The World Is Sleeping

at night when the world is sleeping i have learned to sing inside the chamber of my heart i have become this nightingale a black nightingale singing the songs of the full moon at night i have become this bleeding heart blood dripping on the floor of the house at night i beg the moon to listen to the songs of the black nightingale i beg the moon

to see the blood from my heart dripping i beg the floor to understand and for a time being when sadness and mourning reigns in the house of my body to keep this bleeding heart like sands on the floor of its hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Night When You Are Fast Asleep

i do not care much if you do not care about what i do at night when i am alone in my study

(actually writing poetry) all i need is only a little warmth from the silky, curly hair of my poodle sleeping beside my bare feet contented with the touch of my toes.

the two of us, just the two of us, against the rage of the cold, dark night the light from a study lamp mingling with the glare of the monitor a miniature of life an islet of my nocturnal universe.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Night With The Rain

i have closed the doors and the windows and let go the curtains touching the floors

i close my eyes and listen to the rain
i dream of stars
i miss the moon

the walls close on in me beyond the glass windows
to the sea
i hear the sad calls of the
night

outside the trees are blown the black cat stares at me and then some tears
begin to fall

RIC S. BASTASA
At Night...

the cicadas make music on the twigs of trees where dry leaves fall heavily though there is no wind eye make the dirge for those who die for the season the funerals of silence are at it again the leaves so light like souls....

RIC S. BASTASA
At Nirvana.......

admit loneliness
agree to this idea that life sometimes can be too lonely
that you can be alone sometimes or
most of the times
but of course, not at all times,

all shall pass,
whatever, sorrow, or bliss,
all shall pass.

start from there
and move onward,
and then it comes finally to this

whatever state you are in it cannot affect you
at all

at nirvana...

RIC S. BASTASA
At Noon When Everyone Is Gone

the silence in the office is like the silence of the catacombs
someone drops a pin and every stone hears it it is also like the silence of the dormitory that evening of December 25 when all the lights were turned off when the prefect was asleep when what you hear was the buzzing sound of that old olive green ceiling fan when what you did was read a novel that did not interest you anymore that time you wrote a poem for her.

RIC S. BASTASA
At One Moment...

then everything shuts up.
the door and windows.
nothing opens, you have no use finally
of your hands and eyes,
and this time
you simply become an empty bag put inside a cabinet waiting for the next trip to nowhere
you are rested but it is dark
and silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Papa's Grave

AS I light the candle
i will too, remember the white horse that bit you
which they shot and died

i remember the loneliness of the grazing fields after the incident.

All sins are always forgiven.
All hidden loves have no choice but to reappear.
When memories come, i pray, Let those sweet and sweeter ones be always chosen.

My brothers and sisters are here too.
All in the solemnity of silence Pay homage to the law.

This day is the show of flowers, the dance of candle's flames,
In the concreteness of our personal appearances To fill what blanks stares of the past To erase what was missing.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Pee Itch

this is small time no one bothers
he is small time
no one is bothered

but he is here
with all the small timers
in this small time endeavor
in this
small time corner of the world

to him it matters
it is important
and so it matters
even if they who are big and beautiful do not mind about what matters

RIC S. BASTASA
At Ph....

i do not say that we who keep on writing are like those flies trapped in the bottle wanting to find an exit...

dthis is the bottle, we are the flies, and we all love it here.

tere is less air, but we manage to breathe.
tere is less space, but we co-exist this an enclosed world, and we are the letters that they have sealed inside those envelopes somehow, the envelopes arrive in those distant places, and here we are read by you.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Ponce Suites (Kublai Cafe)

I arrived late for dinner but i still had that empty chair for me which i took with ease as though it is by all intents for the moment mine there is too much on the plate which i did not eat, too much on my glass the night is deep and shallow with its irony of lesbians singing and kissing and drinking as they fill that room forgive me i am still a hand skewed as i hold my own bottle of beer

RIC S. BASTASA
At Random......

to maintain depth
keep the shallow feeling embrace playfulness
and keep
the trivia, do not

disregard the wisdom of absurdity
which is beyond the clutches of logic
actually

it used to be that this is this and that is that and we have to keep the page and follow till the end

when there is no end really for everything always begins with another beginning

to be wise be unwise to be full do not be filled to be at the top know where the bottom line is

imagine this earth floating in a floating universe and you are in there still believing that while sitting on a chair nobody is moving.

standstill, is that not the word you heard when they think you are confused? keep calm, is it not what they advise you when you become panicky about what is not really there? we measure God with our spoons we reason out with our tongue we take eternity as though it is a pool of a thread poor little kettle, whistling when it is boiling

tonight is see stars in the heavens without thinking without saying anything at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Some Moment...

you feel like all wrapped up you dream of a very cold running river you undress,
remove everything underwear
whatever
somehow you go beyond it you shed off
skin and
flesh
and you arrive at this last feeling that you finally
want to show them
bones
your bones
and veins
wanting to find out what ugliness
brings

will those spectators
continue
dissecting you?

RIC S. BASTASA
At Some Time...

to be a sponge-head amidst the rain in the yard of the red district just an ear
not a face, just an ear detached left to dry upon a deserted
street,

to listen and not be be a host to a lot
of emotions
to be just a canvass to the bright colors to be just the soil to the flowers a fence
of a certain perimeter

to open one eye and stare and close the other and feel
to blink and then remember to hold my own arms and rub my own shoulder to lay my head upon a stone and savor the hardness and

numbness

the soles of my feet to be acquainted with the sands of the shores at high noon to live in a faraway planet where there is no sun to sleep and be not dead to wrap a secret like a gift upon the self to count the locks of the hair to breathe like it is the last free air to smile as though the lips and teeth have a deadline to meet to type the period in the poem to stop the fingers from encountering another blank space a world in a ring where there is no more beginning where there is no more end

RIC S. BASTASA
At That Wrong Hour

sometimes our ways cross and we are surprised yet in our reservations we do not show what others expect we pretend that it is normal we hold our tongues we put our hands inside our pockets you tell me someone is dead at the wrong hour of his life i do not ask any name and that is enough

who cares about your dead?
i have mine too.

it is sad
it is normal and so we pretend no more about what we feel at that wrong hour.
At The Middle Stage Of Our Lives sometimes we still have to say the same stupid lines they once said like: i love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Arvisu House

a year in there but i never let any part of that wall
be a part of any cell in my skin
and so when i left
i was like a dove freed from my own
cage
i welcome every molecule
of air
into my nostrils
since then
i have learned to touch freely
the fingers of surprises of simple joys

for instance watching how a leaf falls
and finds solace on wet grounds

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Back Of My Mind...

and so you ask
where is the place of the truth?
i do not wish to speak
but i know somehow when we are together in the secret places of our hearts

i do not look into your eyes for they are pools of water that may drown me there is no peace there except some
suspicions

i touch your lips with the softness of my fingers like they are roses and i am but dew

i know where it is but i will not tell you still you cannot look back now i am thrushing into
it.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Back Of The North Wind...

Where did you come from, baby dear?
Out of the everywhere into here.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Balcony

from here i see the blue sea and the old bamboo raft floating in the water over there is a mountain of stone with patches of green resistant grass the coconut trees are tall and thin and the wooden boats are docked the men are drinking their tequilas away from their masters and the owners of their fates the women are doing their laundry on the river and the children are splashing in the shallow water some dogs waggle their tails afraid of the water i am alone here with a camera on hand my cell phone is turned off i am out of reach, i am not lost, i am trying to find a way back into my heart feeling what my soul wants to say i feast on the view that this balcony is giving me i savor what God is giving freely.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Bar

she says

hi i’m gina

and then she hints that it is her birthday today and the band sings her a birthday song...

you come back to the same bar looking for gina and you find her and she says

hi i’m agness and then she tells you it is her birthday today despite that you still like her and gifts her with a more expensive jewelry.

your name was arthur too.

and now you are james and you talk about love and broken marriages.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Beach

i spread this green towel and lay my whole body under the sun

i close my eyes and
feel the warmth

the sea breeze
blows away the fears and
boredom

i hear the sounds of children playing ball on the left

i sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Beach From The High Window sea breeze soft silk on your cheeks the curtains dance

Beethoven

it is morning

outside the slender
fingers of sun
caress the petals of the red Chinese
flower

i am giggling.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Beach In Boracay February 2011 the coconut trees line up the white sands along the shores

of my privacy
like green umbrellas with hands and fingers touching no one here but only skies
the sea is a lonely woman with a flat blue belly waiting for our legs and arms in this place i am obscene still thinking about what i should not have shared with you i tell the sea

i am in love and i must be forgiven but it does not believe me the sands as usual
look at me with blank eyes the waves are all having their tongues-in-cheek

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Beach On A Sunday Morning

this is an isolated place the coconut trees are growing uninterrupted by the talisay trees long ago cut by papa fenced by barbed wires and planted with carabao grass this is one thing that sometimes i miss in my life the molave gate is left open for the caretaker knows that i am coming to spend my sunday here...

i told them that i prefer being alone this time.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Beach One Early Morning

i see indifferent soft sands i feel the fineness of their being in my palm i bury my thoughts there my hands holding on to what is falling out of my grasp the waves murmur

so envious about my silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Beach One Noontime

WE arrive On the beach at noon i park my white car nearby the sun is at its top whirling so much heat

the white dog on my side is breathing through its tongue i sit on a coconut trunk uprooted by a storm last night the sea is calm and silky blue there are no foot marks on the sands of the shore when this dog chases a stray cat it will just be me left alone again.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Beach...

te the long rain has finally left us, the sun comes up
and sand is sand and the beach is real and we decide to undress
we want to be real too we want motion and sounds and scents we run towards the sea and dive and taste the salt of our bodies

this beachy beachy beachiness of live so lovely so salty so wet so hot unmindful of our being naked
now
the i penetrating in you and the you
letting me in

but just a dream...

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Birthday Party Of My Sister

she had her storms the past few months

her husband
sired a baby with another woman

and she cried in all these blunders
events she cannot accept at first

the seas will be rough
and she will be in a boat where she will find it hard
to move and breathe

she sails and she is now back home
to her senses

it is her birthday today and my brother-in-law greets her
with a kiss and perhaps more promises

she will smile with the guests
us and the rest will cheer her and sing her
a birthday song

all along we pretend that we do not know a thing about the storm
whether there were those who sank and drowned

and counted as a number
a casualty

who wins who loses
we cannot count with our fingers the
minuses and the plusses

the party goes on with more food,
desserts and
hard liquor

we pretend all along that we do not know a thing
like life
my dear sister, life goes on
stick with it, let them those who hurt you

sink and be forgotten
the sea is calm you might as well decide to take your happy swim

or just take a dip and wet
a part of your lip

see? nothing happened and those that happened
have become stories merely not even wanting to be told repeatedly,

we are merry
we have decided to be happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Boulevard, Dumaguete City

slowly, the gray clouds open like a door
giving way to the sun coming in like a glowing ball of fire and then i see this old woman lying on the lap of another old woman

by the side of the brick pavement

i can't find a word that is too sad to describe this reality...

it speaks to me
i am here, do not abandon me then another voice says I have not forgotten you

there are lots of people walking and thinking about their own lives and not minding

other people's anger.

the sun is too good to be true.
but it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Breakfast Table With Family

at the breakfast
table
the plates are placed food waits us
we know our own
places
after a prayer
of thanks
we start taking what is due us
to make things more delicious
we choose the words to say to make a
nice conversation
like laces of curtains
well sewed
to give us a view of this world's created wonders for here we are still a family
well-knitted and designed to bring back
beauty and grace
which to me
has become faded.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Bus Station

worms getting out rushing
at a door both serving as entrance and exit to know not
where

private interests
going to and fro
like the mad hands of the watch

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Bus Station In Kota Raya (A Translation From The Bisayan Original Poem Of Leo Flores)

Here at the bus stop going to Kota Raya the colors of the skin of the people are many if your diaper is borrowed others may mistake it as theirs along the way.

Dinhi sa Bus Stop padung sa Kota Raya Ang bulok sa panit sa mga tawo daghan Kung ang imong sapin hinulaman baya Basin sa dalan ikaw pagahubuan.

- LEO BOB FLORES
Bukit Batok, Singapore

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Cafe Des 2 Moulins

it is right here from this cafe des 2 moulins where one day she decided to find a way to make others happy

she is in a quandary for in here there are always lonely men and women and even children

she takes note of each of them a child lonely because he lost his toy car a woman whose marriage is on the verge of a collapse and she has nowhere to go a man whose wife left her for another younger man they sip coffee here there gazes as far as the farthest distance of the star she is a very unhappy woman herself but for now

she does not care

she finds a way for them to be happy she found the lost toy, the wife came back to be reunited with the husband the husband realized that he loved her more she does not tell what caused her sadness but she does not really care about herself now at night she goes to her bed soundly sleeping after tomorrow, she will find another lonely soul again she has become an angel

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
At The Cafeteria

another long tiring day and for a change you decide to go inside the cafeteria you look around there are people that you know do not know you years have made you anonymous in this place where once you put your roots over there are two students lovers you suppose since they are too close for such a wide space whispering as usual nothings.

you take your tuna sandwich over a bottle of coca-cola and then you begin to take your chances glancing outside this rain that keeps on pouring the trees are wet and the pavements flooded you wait, you think, you look at everyone around you this place that you should not have entered this life that you should have not taken this world that they have forcibly given and now this space that gives you nothing but this

emptiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Cemetery

last Friday
i went to the cemetery

i like the silence of the place the trimmed grass and the tiled mausoleums the air is warm on this cemented territory

this silent city this paradise of mutes and rested souls

i like the creeping vines with white flowers and reddish center
i envy the stones and the pebbles i appreciate the grills and the shiny gravings
metallic dates of death and birth and the last epitaphs of the beloved

but like you
i do not wish to stay that longer it is not my time yet as i still have other places to go the noisy ones
the intriguing places of the heart those where we lose ourselves and wish sometimes that homes be not that far away that lights in the living room and the kitchen still function well the odor of the fried bananas the aroma of coffee the smoke from their tobacco pipes the smell of perfume on slender necks the silk in their gowns the colors of their eye shades the movement of their hands the activity of our worlds on their orbits our bodies as planets in our living universe.

we offer flowers for the dead we wish them luck too and we keep on moving somewhere not losing hope keeping the grip for life whatever that be.

the marital bed of course
keeps the central point of this existence.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Center Of My Being

at the center of my being lies all my weaknesses and if you hit it right at bull's eye, i will surely die, your fingers do not find me my skins are walls.

your lips are too searching but my tongue has curled upon itself like a frozen meat. your eyes try to melt me but my mind has hardened like a rock, you try to cradle my body, like a swing, but my arms have changed into sturdy pillars

at the center of my being
there was once this queen, she turns into a sparrow forever taken by tomorrow.

and so no matter what you do, nothing happens to my sorrow
at the center of my being someone tries to call you and smile and waive at you, i am telling you, i do not know.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Center Of Our Universe

to get close to each other
we must find a common center
and once fixed we all moved towards that we become one after a certain
time

then the outer line dissolves
like an afternoon
horizon

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Church Mass....

there they go again (i within) hearing mass in the church,

it is Saturday
evening,

it is a show of music and poetry
of song and choreography

uniformed ladies and gentlemen
white and gray and carrying candle lights for accent

i like this show
as i perspire a lot in this multitude

what i do not like
is this
what do i understand by all these mixes?

i sit on one of those
chairs
thinking about
nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Church Of Nativity

it is only upon the order of the old religious head that the door shall be opened so we waited patiently for hours there is going to be a procession to be done by the greek orthodox church we waited for long until the old religious man shouted at the photographer as it is prohibited to make shots in this holy place

the alien photographer cannot be outdone he shouted too until the church got to noisy until i doubted the solemnity of this nativity.

until i got to question what is real from hypocrisy....

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Circle

at the circle
which is so enticing
to be part of those inside
it, i try to look like one of them
as i arrange the fold of my hair put saliva on
my hand
to put some gloss on my skin and forehead

they all laugh
and i am too dumb
to understand
the reason why
they are all laughing

they say
it is funny
that i am funny
and i try to laugh
with them
in order to feel that i belong

they continue laughing and i begin to think that they must be drunk and i am the only one sober

quite a positive attitude to keep my confidence
but no
they still keep on laughing
and they they do not even know my name
they're not interested or if they are only among themselves in their own
witty world as i think again and step out from their demarcations

and then
i smile going back
home
my own place
here with my own
limited confidences.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Club Ultima, 39th Floor

we somehow feel the bond of unity
we feel the abundance of food and emotions
no one is telling somehow what is it
that makes us still torn apart from the link

she is seated beside me i look at the veins blue on her wrist she is not eating much fear of fats
and betrayal
fear of too much acidity in her guts

when she looks at me she smiles though i find something mysterious concealed and yet too obvious to be mentioned i keep my dumb silence taking seasoned beef inside my mouth to keep me from using words of which i am getting skilled at covers

the rest are noisy
as the live band plays Latin beat songs

the mother feeds the child two mothers who want the best for their kids clean fun

the man over the edge trusts me sad, there is no way that he sees what is inside
my heart

there is something sinister there like a masked ninja scheming to seize what he treasures

and then i look at her again this time she knows what i want she says she likes it here
on the 39th floor
though there is more fun at the 20th
where their is a sort of happy quiet
and pallid privacy with the hint that she will be alone as she owns that room

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Confessional Box...

there is this boy who looks like me when i was once a boy like him who as taught by the priests of the catholic schools have to be on a regular confession inside that box where the priests listens....

(Father i have sinned, i have not gone to confession for a week and these are my sins...repeat, repeat, repeat, and the priest, perhaps tired and bored says...

my little son, say three hail marys, five our fathers, and 2 glory bes and if you have time

write a poem).

and so the poems since then were written.
the boy did not stop to live within that confessional box the priest died earlier than expected.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Core Of My Being

a cake with white icing, some sugar
red roses and confectioner leaves
of green around
the chocolate cake
layer upon layer
to give an impression of fullness and
solidity,
at the core is the softness of air bubbles trapped within,
something is empty
so soft, something like a void unaffected still by heat and time.

that is what i am
and i love it.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Crossroads

at the crossroad
we meet again

not as father and son or brother to brother

we shall meet
as friends
and shed off
the bad blood
between us

if blood does not work and thresh
conflicts out
let us be dying men in bone and skin in thirst and hunger

what we need is water and food
and some wood
we do not need
words
for another round of argument

why not brother?

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Dinner Party

well we started with memories, the funny ones, those that fully reflect youth and carelessness, the stolen kisses, fear of pregnancies on their part the saying yes and opting for other possibilities generalities nothing about details yet

late yes, the night was getting late and we begin to talk about those we are not supposed to either because they are too personal and still affecting us
clouding reason and objectivity
or still so painful and we focused on her she just had a new set of teeth her husband boxed her and she had to resort to court for protection
it is not a joke anymore love, marriage, kids, brokenness, beyond repair
irreconcilable differences astronauts (joke)
needing more space
getting away
looking for openings
a new world perhaps sighs
pauses, silences, God passes through
she says,

tear eyeed and sobbing
we listen

i feel as though i am a man without a mouth
deaf, i want to be and blind
these realities are not
walls
we are transported at the center of her house
and we all catch fire
our bodies
flaming

we realize when we close this party as it is about midnight and some people wives, husbands, lovers kids
must still be waiting at home

'pray more' my parting words i guess as i drive my car alone back home
i am still
lucky.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Easter Party Somewhere In The Philippine Islands

i am thirty minutes late i expect that everyone of you must have started dinner those on the table of important names must have already been seated in comfort and slicing the beef and sipping their champagne and those of lesser importance could have already lined up to pick up their choices: chopsuey, lasagna, fish fillet or salads, things did not happen the way i expected it i become part of the waiting people, another thirty minutes the reverend who shall bless the food is still somewhere this is the party of fools and waiting is the bad game there is no exact time to start, and every minute is flexible the reverend has to say the final word and we are but some kind of appendices on the book there is nothing poetic in this thanksgiving, nothing at all.

the rice has gone cold, the grease turned solid, the guests too gullible.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Edge....

upon reaching the edge
or at dead ends
of streets or cliffs
when you finally face a wall and you can do nothing well at least you can sign your name
and tell them nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End

in the ocean of mercies
it is only you and the dog
on the boat fused are your visions
on a wagging
tail
on a tongue
hanging
on the air.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End It Will Just Be A Another Dance.... half a syllable, semi closed door demi gods,

a slip, that stutter,
i stare,

you put your thumb
on your lips,

a falling note another
leaf

bald tree outside the house a mouse,

close a door, divide it into halves

a melon, a cut finger, blood dripping on the white table cloth a flag inverted, the leader speaks on morning tv, occupied islands and typhoon at 300 km/hour

half of the world is feasting half of the world is mourning after writing this you stand and dance the zumba plan B candy

daddy yankee rompe....

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End Of My Day

at the end
work is left on the table
it is alone there
with no one to speak to
tonight
as we exit this door of work and enter the world of imagination about dinner with wife and (kids if you have any) outdoor the stars shine beside
the moon
and then you rest your head
on the the clean conscience as pillow
perhaps tonight listening on the theme
song
of Forrest Gump

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End Of Our Journey

has anybody told you that there at the end part of this journey is only a certain height a depth that you can see like a chasm of fading darkness
donw to the earth and then to the highest
sky

that when you arrive there there is only a sky of cotton
made of all the elements of
air
which when your finger touches touches only
nothing?

they all made it up
so that you can be like them hoping against hope dressed
and heavy with their thick clothing to solve a coldness to walk more miles to have a basket of nothing but
metaphors

a garden of eden
an ark of triumph
a manger of humility
a revelation of fear
the much awaited next book of light and glory

one should not be mindful let us try to see a window open a dove with a green leaf on its beak

an eagle lost in the wild feasting on the flesh of the dead

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End Of The Dawn Mass

at the end of the dawn mass
she still hears the bells ringing she still sees the white cassock the cool air she feels inside her heart and the restrained conversations inside the church she likes to keep on going and going because her loneliness creeps like a centipede on the side of her arms so gently without any feet so tenderly like she does want this moment to leave her anymore, she nods and kneels and says yes to every thing to anything in her life there are not more reasons why she should be meticulous about which way to go which option to take which way to make her self alive, to find her meaning.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End Of The Day

and so at the end of the day when finally darkness won over light whatever mistake the sky did to earth was easily forgotten forgiven

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End Of The Day (2)

at the end of the day what thoughts shall i keep what thoughts shall i discard what to forget what to remember at the end of the day when we see each other again dine together on this carved dining table and sit on these steady mahogany chairs finally we sleep together in bed covered by thick blankets and soft pillows then you lower the mosquito nets do we not feel both being buried?

i honestly ask if you are still alive with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End Of The Day, You Just Listen stepping inside the room you close the same door sleep on the same bed but this time, think of someone else, something else, nothing extraordinary really, something lovely, and indifferent, something about dreams that never come true, those years, wasted time, leaves that do not serve any purpose falling on the ground, rotten,

gone.
you accept these as part of you.
and then you
soundly sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End Of This Poem

time flies so swiftly on jet wings
the world looks like a dot
at the end of
this poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End Peace Triumphs....

at the end
peace reigns

after the war
after exploding the bombs all men die
including their wives
and children
all kin

all humanity is wiped out in a few seconds

the silence of peace now reigns grasses cover everything trees grow
birds mate
make nests and hatch their eggs

and then every creature left these survivors
sing for the resulting peace humanity is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End Then What?

this is what our tracks on the road are asking and so does every step along the shores of time: then what?

will it be justified?
will the reasons of reasons be enough?
this is just my body
and my mind

in that basket the ripe fruits are missing the tracks cover themselves and every step is finally erased you ask: then what?

i return it with nothing no, not even a smile since i turn my back and then proceed to another journey.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End You Must Become The Part Of Everyone not all paths are the same not everything are carved by tradition somehow you deviate not because you want to deviate it is just written in the lines of your palm and there is no way that you can avoid it oedipus rex is not an exception what he wanted to avoid he instead entered it is the tragedy that leads him precisely to his own tragic fate someone was once asking: who wants to be myself? and no one answered quite well most people find themselves unwanted and that is tragedy by itself

' i never wanted to be myself' the ugly creature in grief said it frankly to himself who never answered him you end up unsatisfied and resigned how heavy is it to carry oneself as a burden how unfaithful one can be what a disadvantage to keep an enemy within you what tragic moment to hurt your feet with your own hands to torture your mind with your own thoughts to pluck out your eyes from your sockets because you do not want to see yourself or to uproot your very nerves that you think are the ones hurting your bones to tear your heart apart and shatter your fragile self into some kind of irreconcilable pieces what if you were just as gentle as the wind caressing the waves of the sea as warm as the sun landing on the valley your hands are not dichotomies your heart never a wasted part of your body what if...you forget the self and think of it as nothing so that you shall become the wind of the earth the sea of the continent the earth on this universe? a darkness moving with space which has become the part of everyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End, Let The Spirit Soar

times drags.
the shoulders of man begins to stop.
a heaviness hangs upon the edges of the heart immobilizing love passions numb
life melts hope shrinks
body rots, stinks,
bones turn to dust
and then the spirit
begins to soar.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End...

it is not the quantity, not the length you know it, it is the quality, for you are weighed and not counted,

it is never the number of days, the delay in the falling of the sands, the slipping away, it is the wideness of that vast expanse of the oceans in your heart, it is the why, and not the how.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End....

i anticipate the end
but i do not worry
i know the ending long before hand
even if you do not have to tell me what the ending is all about i know it
by heart
and so i do not worry about it
anymore
i know my heart
and your heart knows mine

we are satiated that friendship knows best that commitment knows better whatever
faith.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End.....

here i can be anybody
i can be anywhere
here no one touches me but i can touch everyone here i do not matter

here is what i am
what i want

i wear a tinted glass against the glare watching you without being notice by you

it is this comfort of just being me knowing that even without you i still live the way i like it to be at the end, it is just i, living me life and finally losing it.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The End: Absurdity

the point is reached the realization that at the end we write for nobody not even for ourselves we write for nothing we are actually still nothing for this is nothing but nothing speaking for itself.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Extreme

at the extreme
coldness is the coldness of the arctic snow and hotness is the hotness of the volcanic flow he got them all and he survived them all his palms know what are all these things all about but he never stopped touching he touched the rays of the sun at noon with his hands opening in prayer he touched the frost with his fingers he disliked his fists he opted more for the silence of the dusks and the patience of some longer nights at the extremes of seasons and events he continued talking to the trees and all its leaves to his horse to his dog to his door to his chair to his bed to his stair
he kept his prayers

He lives. He is very much alive. His solitude his nest.
His prayers shaped the wings of a white bird.
His stone his silence. His strength, his spirit.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Facade Of First Glances

what comes as pleasurable at the start
turns out to be painful
at the end

who appears to be most cruel
in the beginning
becomes your most and well-meaning teacher at the end

whom you find uninteresting for all those years
when she is gone becomes the person most missed.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Farm

there is this world of farmworkers riceplanters and coconut gatherers they have a language of their own, their dreams so earthbound and so unlike our sophistications, eyed talk about what to eat only for this day, their desserts plain sugar chunks, their main dish just plain rice, their drinks just plain water from the well and their feast, a bowl of extra rice and two pieces of dried fish, and they talk about their sunday dance with the banana vendors and the charms of the housemaids at the north end of the barrio.

simple dreams of day to day existences of what is just within their grasp and hold: just today and no peeping about what tomorrow may bring.

and yet, i see them, they laugh the hardest in the fields and talk about sex without restraints, and i must agree: they are happier than all of us
on this earth combined.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Fishing Village

life is simple here
and i learn a lot
first, i put the bait
on the hook,
got an earth
worm
wriggling
attractive inside
the green
water
i throw the line
a fish
catches
the bait and it is caught

i cook what i catch
and have my own fill

i get what i
deserve.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Food Court

a woman carries a very fat baby white skinned, and sleepy on her tummy both hands holding the baby’s feet clinging on her hips
like a vine

you look at them both and you accuse me that i must be envious.

i did not bother looking. i know i will not like the kind of scene.

a madonna inside this crowded foodcourt.
now sip your soup
i am munching this dumpling.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Foot Of The Hill

Over the earth
And in the skies
There are Trapped dusts
And mists
I see clouds
And rainbows
Arching
After the Rain at the Foot
Of the hill.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Forest

you just shot
a robust deer
and you are
happy taking it on your shoulder
something for dinner....

and you walk away behind your backs

a little deer is looking,

oh, a mother is taken and the son
is weeping!

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Highest Frequency

someday
when we reach the highest point
of our existence

words will be weird they are useless

silence speaks to silence in perfect per functionality touch to touch

hush to hush

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Hospital

one feels like
he is dead in a catacomb
he likes it
slow paced life
and everyone
attends to you like you're the most
helpless
body, sprawled without the strength of bones

one feels like he is wasted useless piece
of flesh all wrapped with dry skin

sometimes
he wishes he is not cured and simply be buried in that catacomb
forever

in this society
however
no one gives
you
your free meal
no one hands
you
a happy death

they always feel that you will be leaving them
all the possible guilt

afraid
they all ask you
to get well soon
so they
may also start taking care
of their lives
the soonest

you turn on the tv to watch
news tonight
you turn off
your honest morbid thoughts

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Hospital Bed

even when the eyes
finally close
the room is still lighted another set of eyes still look at everything here
a bed some planks of wood a machine

another set of eyes
wake up
floating in the air
with the smoke

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Hour When Darkness Wins And Light Surrenders To The Edge Of The Sea

on that hour when darkness and light fought i take complete time to watch them the usual afternoon when darkness wins when light surrenders to the edge of the sea in dismal silence

it is a very sad view, one can relate and weep on the other hand, when light finally gives up its orange body to the invasion of the night when it assumes that fading ball of fire descending to the abyss of the darkness behold! there is so much beauty in its sadness!

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Junction

now we must part ways at the junction
of

this earthy path
where rocks still hurt
it

is time for me to say what an end
is all about give me a smile

at this junction

where you are no longer you where i
will face the light

with open hands taking me
to

the place called Home.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Junction....

When you are trying to give me sorrow
i don't mind
at the junction i take another direction
away from you

there is no way that sorrow goes with me there is a wish may that sorrow you sow follow you wherever you may go

they are all yours
each sorrow bears your name and they must
as i pray
follow you wherever you go they are yours
and shall be yours forever on my part, at the junction, where our paths depart i have chosen

a thousand joys.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Kitchen

she is preparing breakfast
and i can hear the pounding of the
pestle and the mortar spices perhaps black pepper
and some sliced layers of onions
there is something that i do not want to hear
the sound of
tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Last Grasp Of My Breath

you have always been a gale to me
a wave that always comes and goes in endless fleeting

you have always been the wave of my
being how i wish that you stay and be mine in the shores of my sands but you are always flowing slipping from the hold of my fingers

at the last grasp of my breath
this you have taught me: you have never loved me and i have endured it beautifully like that sunset to the sea...

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Last Hour

he is ready
but before he goes out of his sound-proofed room

he plays the blues
and dances his way out of this world

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Last Hour Of Our Goodness...

there comes a time when we wished we were mute or blind or deaf

there was a time when we were happier
without anybody beside us when we shy a crowd when we feel great by just being

ourselves,

or myself for being myself in particular for instance when having all the praises become too unnecessary

like shoes to my feet on the sandy shore of summer so many times when we feel we do not need any umbrella under the rain these are the ironies that we grab in a lifetime when we lose only to find when we quit because we have already won that much

when giving becomes a routinary gesture without doubt or hesitation....

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Mactan International Airport

a diary:

we arrive 15 minutes early.
i have only two light bags.
this time i travel as light as a time i travel alone.

it is a connecting flight to caticlan. I have to wait for another 7 hours.
there will be too much minding on arrivals and
departure.

i escape this waiting
and goes to the ayala mall.
got some italian pasta and fresh veggies for lunch. iced tea to appease the longing of my throat.

i hop to another japanese resto nearby. The soft salmon sushi and californian maki this
time.

i pooed at rai-rai ken's comfort room. And i remember the famous poem of the poo
and the cheese and
the grand feeling of freeing waste
from the system.

great writer, huh?
and someone just ask me if a fake poet just sent me a love note from brazil or nicaragua. I laugh.

what is the need to know the name of someone who loves you and sends you a note and does not tell her reality? is she indeed true? is she as real as her poems.

i have other matters to attend to. This time another pizza at the yellow taxi cab and coca-cola, and then i have to buy an ear plug and some sun block.

now i have something more in my mind.

a swim in a blue sea. snorkling. island hopping. corals. colored fish.

the white sands of boracay. boats. banana boats. white towels. buffet by the sea.

a walk at the beach at dawn and then seeing the sun rising.

a walk again in the afternoon and seeing the sun setting.

things like these. somehow i am now ready and willing to forget where i come from.

i am new. i am a fish. i am a coral. i am a starfish.

i sit on one of those empty chairs, a table of my own.
a candle light. and i am ready to tell anybody that i am alone and i have a name.

i need to practice how to smile and yes, be attractive and yes, be seductive.

(ha ha ha ha)

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Meeting

i keep what is decent

i don't dance
with the music

i can't sing with
the rest

in the middle of this crowd

i am alone
thinking about the hills and mountains

beyond
the sea and my empty world

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Middle Of Things

the starting point is always a rush the sound of times is demanding specifically
on wanting details to be perfect there is that attention to color what ought to be and protesting always for what is not the idealism of the mind and the strictness of the hand at the middle of the way one feels tired sometimes the wish to back out settles on the skin

you peep at the end of the line what is the use? you ask yourself there is no use. there is no us.
you answer it yourself without even the slightest wink in your eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Middle Of Things...

living in the comfort zone is easy,
nothing much
nothing less too
i am neither at the top
neither am i at
the bottom
i am what is sandwiched
the ham and the lettuce
and the tomato and the cheese

buffered i am protected
the gods find me
delicious

i look forward to begin consumed and be simply
gone

there is nothing
good in here
it is flat and boring
between...

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Middle Part

..and then she faces me this time exposing every part of her a tall, lean white body with long black hair cascading like a waterfall
of silence
she walks towards me as i lay my head on the pillow as i signal her to come and share with me
love and sorrow and the passion of our presence she takes a slow movement her hands touching my hair her lips getting near my face
and then we close our eyes and enter into another world where we are one so close
airtight.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Museum With A Friend....

despite
those younger years
i remember
bathing in the same river laughing on silly matters of our youth
i thought of such familiarity and when we see each other again with Liz at the Smithsonian Museum
as we watch Demi Moore pregnant
and naked
or that abstract painting of Ashikaga which are drops of mixed paint on the canvass as i pass him this time to another
diorama of our history past his glare and flair i sensed that there is really something wrong somewhere in the island of his face with the sea in his eyes that angst
which he cannot tell afraid that i may tell him that he is unhappy with his life
despite the expensive house in the city that the diplomat from Spain gave up
for good
as the air is not a song and the sky no more than a blot in a page
of his life
that painting of the sinking ship with hands outstretched
screaming for help
i could have bought that were it not for the consequences of the kind of life that we have finally lived.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Other House Of Ill Repute

a few meters from here where i am writing the peace of this town is a little bit disturbed by the song of Bob Marley or his look-alike in that known house of ill-repute where the women make love with you in bed where the men also take other men instead those that smell like pigs are given soap and water and a sachet of shampoo on dim lights and cubicles happiness is bought for a very cheap rice on these hard times and as the Bob Marley song is played the bursts of the Fourth of Julies happen the women have deep sunken eyes and so are the men
prostitutes
this is a peaceful neighborhood decent and responsible until the hard times came throwing away whatever education is left, whatever values remain the bodies become commodities for the meal of the day....Sadly.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Park On A Friday

it is a happy
day

laughter of children
in the park

cool winds
spring
onions

a glass of coffee
a little chocolate cookie

watching beautiful
people

passing by

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Party

you meet faces of an uncle some nephews
and nieces, even a brother after some long years not seeing them
you notice some changes how the uncle has grown
a beard
your nephews getting sophisticated
on the latest craze electrical gadgets on their ears and even noses you nieces on their own lingo you do not know much
anymore
more than they do

and your brother
you counted the gap before he came to your life
ten years
yes ten years
you stare at him
and you get a scare
how come
you do not know him much what anger is there how come love
has not built a bridge between your far souls

you offer him a bottle of beer and greet him
'when did you arrive? '
you ask him

it is too late
his wife steals his attention and you would have asked him some more existential questions like 'how is life going with you?' they are taking leave at once someone is sick and dying

he had no chance telling you the gap now you count again is not just ten years

it is more than that
and there is no bridge
no rainbow
always this wide river this vast space this endless sea you miss him somehow yet you cannot say the word oh, these modern times always a masterpiece of distance of alienation something we have not dared and we have not conquered

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Party (Of Fools)

at the party,
we wear smiles, we tell them the way we hold our wine glasses and puff the smoke we tell them that here we are we want to belong to everyone that we after all are parts of this socializing human race aristotlic and platonic and watsonic all rolled in our mind we get drunk and for a while we group in accordance with our categories species

and then we realize we are happier alone in bed at the beach or somewhere else
where only our hearts speak

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Party Last Night Till Dusk

you take your glass of red wine and sit on one of the chairs in one corner friends surround you as though you are a port and they are docking boats the laughter begins and continues till nighttime till one the glasses of wine take you to places of memories

the conversations about the lives of other people their misfortunes and sometimes successes no one wants to leave neither can all you keep on staying till the wee hours of dusk until the minds becomes groggy and restless until you realize that peace has become elusive you become part of the unforgiving crowd amidst the words and sentences you are one of those colons so so alone this time amidst the hill and mountains

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Party Of The Blind

when one is barred to enter there is no way that force is a choice, and so one waits at the gate
fronting the street and looks for the correct timing aimed at entering without violating some rules of this party game, and one sees a chance for here comes a very important person who is blind
and you grab
his arm
walks beside him
and tell the gatekeeper that you are his escort
and when inside you look around
where everyone laughs
because everyone is blind
and you are the only one who can see
and so you were barred.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Party....

we are lucky
i tell some friends in that party they do not content with what i have to say that we are not just alive but happy they go for more than all that luck can give they pride with what they did...oh forgive!

those cars, and houses and resorts more money, more ports

oh forgive! i tell myself they have all become mute and deaf...

RIC S. BASTASA
Wanting to cleave clearly in the mind the wooden chopping boards of the house into piano keys, and the long tables of the dining room into some imagined concert: Do you hear it? Yes? Do you not since then not realize this grand scale? The poor boy is playing a sonata in his head, yes? Yes. Now. (Pushed into agreement as if pushed by birth into an empty room without choice and flowers for wallpaper and a mirror kept blind dark in a drawer) There was a piano, once, in my head. And a stage. And the world surprised by what had been found. Difficult piece: the left hand flying over the right and the air-pedal stepped through and clean to sustain. And all the world standing behind kitchen counters and the dinner plates waiting for the imagined overture to complete its applause: If only there was no need to explain. If only the real thing was as clear and as audible as once the beautiful music.

* Brown beaver in a stream and the grass green Small girl on a swing and a bird wing And because he thinks it’s meant to be spring, he colors the clear edges of all living things in his piano book- Where the paw touches sharp the blades of the green patch and the bare arm of the blonde girl arcs her slender reach to the sun. And old Brahms who lifts his hand in a wave, even if this is meant to be a slow waltz he’s playing, and a packed piano concert hall he’s set in where a bright blue blazer’s not the right suit for this true master to wear. This genuine thing: Every day before the sun rose, I dreamt the world already in color. Ivy on the old wall greener by far than any I had seen the lush trees bending some friends hiding behind jars, sliding doors snuck into the empty cabinets of the garage wanting to be found and: everyone loved.
Wanting to tell the truth, to play it.
Song remembered from somewhere else and someone else’s mistake:
the bored boy on the waiting couch knows the girl now playing the piano has no applause in sight. The day could be awash with light! what colors blind him with the waiting bird on the wing wrap his hands with a song small girl’s swing fill his eyes while he’s playing a fast loud trick of a trill in his head in what was said to be “with feeling” terrible terrible thing

* All encompassing terror of the grand design I wanted the great concertos, the Bach arias.
I wanted: Praise be to God who fashions with his own hands the universe and all of creation out of a deep love for everything without choice.
Without being dramatic.
I wanted the long pause.
I wanted the audience stunned to tears because:
this we have not heard before in the streets this song this beautifully done.
It moves.
It brings us to the edge of our sight.
I am not the light.
I was not even part of its terms of recovery or perfection.
Joy without end without just reward.
Who has not, faced with a sin, said:
I want to be good?
For he hears even our thoughts.
I wanted that silence.
I wanted the huge applause after the silence.

*by

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Pier

i like that blue bird that stands only on one foot

there is this sense of self-sufficiency without the other foot

i wonder if it's you on your animal life after hating me all those years

i like to descend on that level
if that is the only change left for me
to tell you once
again
that i was never joking

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Plantation Bay

as the tram roams its way around the island

my eyes are focused on the heavy clouds about to give the much missed rain the smell of the Italian restaurant undermined by the chains of thoughts clinking like chains of the prisoner

RIC S. BASTASA
At the point of saturation the apex
or the pinnacle of your subliminal wishes
the misspeaking subconscious
desires

you look back
you move forward
you stare at those flashes of images
before you

those that you love
most
now lay before you
as unwanted
strangers

no longer pleasing noneffective
there is no more
affection

at this point you do not know what to say
you are neither happy nor sad voila!
you have become one of the lesser gods

eureka! this is the triumph of numbness.

RIC S. BASTASA
the news is that another storm is coming and our boat is still on this port that we fear for once there was terror here a bomb exploded planted by this unknown terrorist and many died
the boat was burned and many bodies still burning jumped and drowned in the sea most of them
children and women

i am sensing the colder wind
from the sea
the touch of the coming storm
i can sense its strength while i wait for the decision whether to go sailing or not so we can reach the other island facing us with a warm welcome

i look for a sign
and see this pigeon hovering above
my head
as though saying warning

do not,
i have all the reasons
to listen

we sleep here for the night we shall let this storm pass At The Prayer

te the man sang
liberame, liberame
the guitar is mournful and those who joined
the song
understands what is grief all about

that His Thoughts are not ours
He has all the reasons
we just don't understand
any word

and then the prayer ends eyes begin to shed
community of tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Probationary Period.... you've been a good man every errand is done there is no complaint from anyone

the stockroom has been cleaned
not a dust, nothing messy, the sofa is brushed and even scented
food is delivered on time drinking water is kept at its safest level the floors are swept and even made shiny
all of them have shown the approval sign
all thumbs up, but this i ask: when will you last?

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Reunion Party (Grandma's) to drown my well-kept storm i purge words

too many like bats driven from
a cave
flying on barbaric sounds and one of you looks at me with a stab
but it will not hurt me a bit i ignore whatever tries to hurt whatever skins me out to reveal a damaged bone

think of me
as a happy bee that is all i can ask for
this moment
i shall like it
for what you think makes me become what i am not

the hours will run like a windmill and water pours out to satisfy the mouth of the hill and i will be happy to see something filled
a thirst satisfied

you see i admit i am wrong in trying to be alone by myself in doing so for the past days i shrink like a plastic bottle heated by
a candle

i realize the link it is always a you and I and the rest of the people in the world my feet are your feet my hands are your very hands too my mind is a lonely planet lost without the sun and the rest of the lonely planets in this always moving
universe

i know what depression is and now i know how to delet it.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The River Bank

deep in the river
the waters rise
and all my steps are taken
back to the
sands
of the river
in this place where you live decently

when you come too early you will see what steps have i taken and where i have been going at noon when the children play everything is mixed up and you shall ask what is the matter

the children when they are gone leave you marks
and you do not understand at the river banks of our youth

finally
all the steps when we get old turn into forgotten stories

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Roof Top One Nignt: A Reflection

there are words which are better left unsaid

some dreams
that do not come true

a love that must stay unrequited

a self so unfulfilled an ambition that is merely a sketch a face that you cannot touch lips that you cannot kiss shadows that remain as shadows no flesh & bone

the sway that never becomes a dance just a bend or a tiptoe

that is why the stars hang on the skies and they are so silent

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Rooftop

tried to hold the hands of
the moon
at the rooftop
to my literal disappointment shunning away any metaphor
it has none of the arms i need it has no hands that hold mine

sometimes i blame the literal world about unfulfilled fantasies

about dreams taken away from the breasts of
the words
about love ripped of its literature
that which must exist only in the mind in order to survive
the harsh
hails.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Rural Side Of This World

when i step out of my door i see a road lined with mahogany trees an empty wide road but not that muddy really at this rainy season of the year i hear the chirping of birds and the hushing of the wind greeting me with the coolness of an after rain,

the grasses are still wet with dew, the paths still dappled with water, the pebbles glistening to the sunlit view of the hills which are so green and vibrant the distant mountains shaded blue tall and huge their tips almost touching the sky there are no cars here  just wooden sleds pulled by the cows

of the working men at the other side of the river nearby some water buffaloes are restive on cool wade in their mud holes their tails whipping their butts to drive away the gnats

i am waiting for the bus going to the city the only bus for the day and it will pass by here at eight.

on the bench opposite where i am seated three girls are giggling a handsome boy riding on a horse whistles at the one with the long black hair the sun is shining brightly on an ordinary day like this on the rural side of this world that i have chosen to visit

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Seaside, A Solitude

cethe seaside is peaceful cthe sky is blue with white cumulus clouds hanging there cslowly they move and change shapes clike the air is painting and mixing the colors in space cgentle hues graceful strokes cthe white sands extend to some miles cthe coconut trees are like handshakes ctheir shadows restive and steady ci lay my body weary of the years ci look at all these lines and circles and spheres ci like to give up thinking and just be a spectator nci let them talk and i merely listen ncthe seaside, the seagull, the clouds, the coconut trees, the white sands, cnthe circles and spheres and lines extending to nowhere.

ici cover my eyes with a straw hat. I cease.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Second Floor

at the second floor of the old house he goes up taking the creaking stairs as though telling him some old stories about the falling of the clan house to ashes for years no one dared say about the fall of this family there are whispers not louder as a thud of a cat's foot limping on the carpet up there is the open space overlooking the blue sea a white sail and some foams of the sea caps catch his attention but he can not withstand such a distant view his eyes are hurt by too much light and tiny object he looks at the nearby tree old mahogany spreading its branches touching the roof there is this single leaf that falls a hush of the wind twirling to the shaded space it lands on the pebbles nothing is heard but he has seen it all the fall.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Senate Blur Ribbon Committee Hearing...

do you not see that it is a party of all kinds of Pinocchios engaged in the contest of

who has the longest nose in town?

shall you believe any one of them?

it is just a matter of who is sitting in power they always share the bounty of their favorite sports: graft and corruption.

you better engage yourself in one of those Gulliver's travels to relieve yourself from all these foolishness.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Shrine

it will take me a night to sail by boat to the old city of my ancestors
i will ride a horse for another two days to reach the shrine
where i shall bow down in prayer lighting
a candle for the dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Sidewalk...

the mother was peeling
raw, green mangoes

selling them to kids in the nearby elementary school

her son plays alone near the bakery

there are no other kids there anyway

lots of people walking to and from like pendulums the mother was so busy attending to her small livelihood the little boy falls off the sidewalk hits her forehead on the pavement the mother did not notice because the street is noisy

at first the boy cried then stood up
and rearranges everything

he appears to his mother and attaches his body on her side the mother kisses his forehead as though nothing happens there must be a story behind this why the boy has no father why the mother takes charge of having to sell mangoes to earn she takes shelter under a big umbrella beside a vending bicycle...

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Speed Train In Taiwan

in your strange
country
i do not know how
to speak

but you are so
beautiful
and it is my heart which does the talking

you do not know me this is the first time we met
but you understand
perfectly
what is this love
all about

how easy is it to start a conversation
using the hands, the lips, and the eyes

how our heart beat how short the hours have become how anxious are we that this train trip shall soon end

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Spring Garden

the last poem is not about leaving

i do not like it
when you pack your clothes take a bag and then enter a car
and leave

and i follow you at the airport
and wave my hand goodbye

i do not subscribe to pre-departure areas
it makes me sad really

the last poem is when i am back home and i write what happens there and i often say, the last poem is an error because there is no such thing the last poem stays at home and begins again

the new episode of planting new seeds in the spring
garden

RIC S. BASTASA
it is nice at the top
there is more fun in there at the surface one sees sun and landscapes of plains and trees and houses and trains and roads,

at night, it is a city of glittering diamonds and you are on top of this situation

it is nice swimming at the surface seeing the rest enjoying their splash of
days

but it gets lonely sometimes, at first, then most of the times the nights are like clinging hands pulling you down to some depths of your kept oceans

showing you the dark side of your existence
the most silent part of it
this one
tells you the truth and speaks straight to you without
the flowers of euphemistic living

you are plunged into a vast silence of the deepest part in you and you take all the risk that somehow because of too much pressure you break down into pieces of broken stars

porcelain, glass, cracking and this inability to join the pieces together makes you
incomplete again into the emptiness of your being

what i hear is sighs in the depths like some kind of whales communicating that there is something greater down there

rather than the top the surface which may offer you a loud life laughing but then deep inside their is this wailing and mourning as though someone so well loved has just passed away.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Tail Of The Rainbow

i work in codes
and you have to decipher

the meaning from those neutral letters forming a scenery of words
like
pools and mountains
and rivers
and leaves and twigs
and stones
and sand

there are so many which i put there
for me
to sometimes remember and
smile

i never forget what i put here

each word is a trail that leads me always back to myself

the syllables
are my fortresses
each sound is an echo of
what happened
and must catapult me
beyond
this wall
at the tail of the rainbow
are the imaginary
bridges of our minds

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Taoist Temple

the steps are straight guided by arrows

the stairs always go down to the bottom of things surprising why the man with white socks and

black sandals got lost still asking 'where's the way?' to the parking area just below the stuffed storks on a man made pond.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Time When Evil Men Triumph

his silence is deeper than the seven oceans how can he accept that on his beloved land evil men triumph
the bad unabated?

there were ten bodies unclaimed for ten days the widows cannot weep for their husbands and children all swept by the bullets of his terror

i look at it stoically God is testing us what to do in times like these.
A tooth cannot be for another tooth.
Those were the years of eyes plucking each others' eyes.

There is this I, standing, there is this I, undisturbed The devil now is worried There is this I that worships God no matter what.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Time When Mother Left For Ozamis

i remember now it was at that time when mother packed her clothes and left my father for good back in the little village where mother was raised by grandmother as a naive girl
keeping things to herself.
she dwells in a house of silence.

it was at that time when father said that he loves her very much that losing her would mean his death but mother was no longer in the house where we grew.

and of course, mother did not really believe him. she died ahead of him, and he got drunk everyday, and he put her picture on top of his chest and he cried all night long staring at her face, black and white, her hair her mouth. he died a year after and he was buried just beside her pantheon.

i still wonder if mother would believe him.

the silence is overwhelming. no one sweeps the heaps of leaves and no wind is strong enough to clean the mounds filled with thick grass.

come summer time, i see white daisies blooming, and a black butterfly hovers to stop a while. i watch closely this new turn of events.

it is like poetry. Some metaphors. Symbols, and hints. Love's mouth wanting to say all over again, what the heart has constantly hidden.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Time When You Interrupted Me...

other people will not be that as responsible as you expect them do not be dismayed
this is just a part of that total
collage
without the black colors what landscape can you make there are shades that must complete this picture
of humanity

do not be too arrogant to reduce what you are not into a humiliation
you have not worn any of their shoes sometime you must try
some

rain comes and it lands on every roof
and everyone
there is no bias or pre-selection as to who needs water

you talk to me and tell me that you still love Mexican music
i am lost and cannot concentrate on what i am thinking now

i am confused and misty -eyed there is no point now in putting things inside a box i am becoming one of those whom i dislike a lost direction a shot in the sky a bird lifeless on the road a little boy asking what is this all about what is it that is up at night? shining too brightly!

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Top Of The Mountain

at the top of the mountain where all of you are heading nights and days trekking rain or shine on half breaths coping as i go down taking the usual trail

i am sad

seeing excited faces imagining the beauty of the top

the feeling of that grip of power i have something to tell them but i know belief is rare the faith is stronger to find something bigger than our small existences like motes in our eyes

up there
there is nothing, there is nothing but the wind and the fog.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Top Of The Mountain....

the air begins
to thin,
you grasp for
breath
it is cold and lonely

there is no one there
except you...

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Train Station In Rotunda...

i stop for a while here this corner where you too stopped
i am asking
if we have the same reason for stopping here this place where there is nothing to see or touch
where you smoke a lot and pollute my vision of the world where death seems to be the only reason for living i am taking this quiet stance merely looking and scrutinizing
listening
passive like a common wall between us i do not like to move
i may create that ripples in the air and it will give you a justification to harm me i lean against this wall shifting the weight of my mind to the bricks and you look down

there is this distance that we feel and you like it i can hear that even if you do not utter that i live in another world and you have created your own different scents and colors you want that this must not be understood
in the same manner
that i want it

we like to part ways now not friends not foes plain strangers again without names no judgments

by this time you consumed all the cigarettes and the smoke has conspired with the air everything is clear now the sound of the train is getting near like an ambulance we are finally rescued from this separation this
strangeness
innate in human existence can this inability to connect and be a part of someone can this appreciation of freedom can that only preaches alienation and segregation

in this parting there is no goodbye you never know me and i never know you
we are always
not interested

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Train Station Somewhere In Canada and so it was evening a Kenyan woman asks you if you are Chinese and if you are married and if you have kids & how many

on the pavement just below the bench a white man is drunk and could not carry himself back on his feet

the Kenyan woman asks if you are waiting for someone
and you point to the white man who wriggles to signify that he still hears both of you talking about him

the train arrives and you both go inside the Kenyan woman and you you tell her that you are not Chinese you are not married and that you simply want to go back home she says her teen age child is lost.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Ultima Club

WATching the 4D movie
of the

LOST iSLAND, Got bitten almost by a snake

the plane crashes beside an erupting volcano

meanwhile the aborigenes keep on shooting with their spears the woman beside me

screams

to this illusion as i keep waiting when will this unnecessary thing end i want to go to the door and take my escape from this hallowed

commercialism, consumerism and wastage of my shattering humanity

my dripping soul absorbed by the dry money paper laundered in the group laughter sun shine, all artificial man made creations of the mind boggling like a crayon doodle fingers scratching for meaning At The Universe Central Saigon Hotel time is different here and so we have to pay an extra day charge

there is no need to argue we volunteer to be liable.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Valentine's Cafe

never have i seen so many lonely people
on the arms of other so many people in this world

on shallow laughter they swim
their bodies
floating
like paper
boats
with candle
lights
turned off.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Veranda

her hair is black and curly and she is so tight and young and you do not speak to her as she waits for her lover at the veranda of this house

you stand on a door half open where your eyes take the luxury of looking at her

she blushes and pretends
that she is scrolling
a name in her cell phone

you pretend you look at the stars crowding a black cloud up
the silent sky

she steals a look at you she wants you
but she is here
at the master's bedroom and her name has always been fear

he looks at her again and winks
in the mirror beside
her

'she is fast asleep' he said.

she has no answer

she smiles.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The War Remnants' Museum

we watched the pictures of the war and it victims

we stopped joking

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Wedding Ceremony and then it is time for the bride

to speak
as custom dictates,

her hands are trembling her tongue unable to utter any word and drops of tears fall from her eyes
she looks at the crowd and bows her head with so much gratitude
on this special occasion of her life

she cries and resigns back to her seat

we know what she means happiness that cannot be contained in the hands of
words
so much bliss
so many tears falling

tears of joy!

the groom kisses her again the audience clap
for a new beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Wedding Of A Niece

...so finally i attended the wedding
i doubted my ability to be present
and witness the kissing couple sadly i was not touched thinking about someone else
whom i think had always been preoccupied with anger

i always drink a lot and eat some more wanting to damage myself
slowly
dying
if only to forget what truth lies there inside that box of feathers.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Wedding Table

..there was this man
well dressed beside me does not smile
somehow i did not mind until he asks
if i know a certain Ric

i said i am.
and then he smiles at me

perhaps thinking
how did i ever get so old and so fat?

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Wedding Today

the bride and groom
in their 30's
kissed lips to lips for fifty seconds
and then the relatives clapped their hands helping them to stop.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Wharf

a man with a white face towel
half naked
bends on the cemented beam of the wharf
looking for canaries
this early cold morning when the sea is calm like a white sheet on the table

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Wildlife Park

the monkeys stare at us and so are the cockatoos the alligators the porcupines the boas and cobras they're all named, numbered and confined in their cells others in glass others in iron grills they're all for open view of course for a fee to maintain the park and the man made wildlife sometimes i ask myself they are but prisoners on what charge? upon whose complaint? what penalties?

when will their incarceration end?
what is the justification of their capture?

oh i see, just for our pleasure.

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Willie Show...

gosh! you must have seen the four-year old boy imitating the macho dance gyrating watched by many people
laughing
there is no hint of prurience neither malice was there and what was seen next were the tears of the boy falling from his eyes soon there were lot of stories passed that the child was exploited forced to dance

debates came others call to stop the Willie show some things went awry

indeed
many thinkers came but if we only asked and this is my theory on the matter perhaps the boy cried because his shoes were too tight for his feet and not because of

anything else...

RIC S. BASTASA
At The Zoo

the tigress
is tearful to see her cub bringing a pink candle for her
on her 12th birthday
in her cage
at the zoo

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Age (50 To 60)

everything becomes merely nothing but reminiscences

nothing efflorescent or even fluvial

once there was a boy rising from rags to riches once there was a girl who became the wife of the president once there was a love so true it brought nothing but sadness once there was a home splintered like a grenade once there were beautiful times fading like sunset.

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Hour After Tonight

at this hour
after tonight

when the darkness is over when dusk peeps in inside my sighing soul

the warm body whistles

for again it has triumphed as it feasts upon the madness of its own flesh

the soul does not perish but it cannot for the time being on some divinities relish ah! look at this firm body it has a tongue & a mouth and luscious lips

it is dominated by its king this....sex organ

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Hour I Am Irresponsible

i hurry to reach this place but when i arrive before
time
i realize i do nothing except to stare at something that stares at me
too
like we are strangers wanting to know what we are with our long gazes

this is a mirror
but i am not seeing my own face

it is yours
which i have not really touched.

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Hour Of Separation

at this hour of our parting i hold your hand to feel its last warmth you do not look at me to my glances you have chosen an evasion you wore your dark glasses you enter a certain darkness where you think i cannot see your eyes with tears clouds drift at your face you go

finding your place inside the predeparture area
i wave my hand and left you

you are gone
the plane slices the clear skies
i know
from up there
i am but an ant below the haze distance does the inevitable forgetting

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Hour, It Is The Deep Of The Night

at this hour, it is the deep of the night
calm,
silent,
there is no wind blowing, i can hear the typing
of words
in this keyboard, this personal computer, writing, because i cannot sleep, after we made love, because i am still thinking what to do with my life, what is the next move,
after love, when there is no hate, because i have stopped feeling altogether
all those years,
and the years shall come slowly like some growing children in your eyes, not seeing how the cells add to become their innocent eyes, i am here again at midnight, then dawn, 2: 11 a.m.
that is the time here in this room on this island
on this nook of the big, wide world, time had made some divisions for all of us for you it is morning, and for her it is noon, but we are here writing at this moment for all different reasons, some claim happiness and bliss and love and nature and hope, i still claim my main reasons, doubt, this sadness that has known how it is to write and be not able to get a sound sleep, this lostness in space trying to find where is everything from nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Hour...

i stopped looking for the moment, it is not here anymore that moment with you when you arrive and then when you are finally gone without saying hello
without saying goodbye
and you left me without the sound of the soft wind by the window and then i look at the star
trying to figure out
the reason for distances wanting to be logical about space and emptiness when there is none.

at this hour
i could be dead,
i could have wanted death, but death is not mine
it is
yours.

run, run, do not sleep tonight, chase the shadows of life hold tight
to the fingers of the morrows
have faith
on what you've finally got,
tell me

what is it?

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Moment

at this moment
since you arrive late what you will see
on the blades
of grass are nothing
but dusts

you never really loved the dew

you never really
wanted to feel
the moist of mists

soon it will be the wriggling worms underneath they have all the books most of the words are cold and likely the sounds too mournful

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Moment Of My Life

at this moment of my life there is nothing to prove nothing to build anymore all beginnings have found their sought endings there is nothing to see everything have seen what they ought to see

there is nothing to feel everything had been felt before there is nothing to fear everything is so near there is something to touch it is light it is fire.

it is at the tip of my finger it stays on my tongue and my heart keeps on singing

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Moment....

at this moment
i am writing

i am writing for
no one

not even for myself
or perhaps

i am writing because i have nothing more important to be done.

at this moment

my business is just to write and keep on writing until i get sleepy

at this moment of an afternoon
i am alone again
and i am trying to fill a void
within.

this is the moment
as in other moments
nothing divine
nothing physical

a play with words
passing time.

RIC S. BASTASA
honestly, at this point, don't say that i am pointless, i am driving something though blunt, and not as sharp as what you have sliced yourself with before (and remember i saved you from shame)
and
death.

now, try saving me myself.
i am in love again and my age is 50.

can you help me on this?
it has nothing to do with you since there was never us

in the first place.

save me. Make me hate love.
Undo my vested interest of having to love someone who cannot love me in return.

Unrequited.

But do not misjudge me.
I still know how to leave for another twenty years.

i am a master of pretenses.
i have iguana pets on my bed of
roses.

RIC S. BASTASA
At This Worst Times Who Cannot Create His Own Universe?

well i never bother with what you say

i must be bothered much with what i
can do

in this universe
i am the center
the sun

at this worst times who cannot create
his own universe?

RIC S. BASTASA
At Times

AT TIMEs
it is hard to shift from him to i, all because there is something too personal that should not have been invaded by any noun, lest things serious becomes trivialized and loses face, but there are slips of the tongue and these so called unguarded moments of the body (when the soul is asleep during the days of your grief) when the I asserts itself like a kamikaze on its suicide plane ranting
and with a black smoke that catches its ass
glides to earth
and dies

RIC S. BASTASA
some give silence
and then take the exit
and forget

others clench their fists and make the announcement of chaos

other simply write
a diary
make a poem
and then leave
for another place where they are more welcome where their irrelevance is still accepted.

others do what is violent
they explode tall
buildings
and hijack planes
and kill
even their own bodies
to meet
twelve virgins
waiting for them in heaven

others merely stay
and pray
and hope for the better
for the change of hearts for the enlightenment that this earth is all ours
and we are
all brothers.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Twin Lakes (Coron)

somehow you arrive at a conclusion that we are all rocks with unique formations and strangers love to watch
us
that we are some towers
facing the sea
some have solid hands praying to the sky

you feel that you hear nothing the screams for help are gone and what reigns supreme are only our very one voices speaking upon our consciences

our lips are sealed forever there is no use for conversations

it is the words of the world that speak for themselves without using our words

thus you climb upon a steep rocky hill then go down to find a deep blue lake without a fish with nothing but dead corals trying to entice you to become alive
and be one with everybody in the silence of the
ferns
you swim and feel the coldness of the water you feel love
because there is no one there anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
At Two O’clock In The Afternoon

You complicate yourself
It is hot and you need a fan You sweat
And in between some quick naps You snap
For some missing thoughts And you said
You need something to take
To remember
What you miss awhile
You need coffee
Or lemon tea
You do not want Something cold
This is the hot portion of the day
And you do not want to crack You scribble
There is something that is terribly lacking In this foreplay of a good remembering Something passionate Or romantic
Or something to shock you so you do not Get sleepy
You remember some lines at the tip Of your tongue
But you cannot complete what you just remember You sip coffee
It is so sweet and you do not like sugar
At two o’clock in the afternoon
You are half awake
You want to write but you cannot remember You would rather sleep
But it is just too hot
And you are sweating

You keep mumbling words Keeping yourself busy with what you Remember and forget and cannot Completely discard Something is bugging you really
You know
You just don’t want to say it You simply want to ignore it It is facing you confronting you Like a neighbor wanting A fistfight
You turn your head away
And you keep saying it is hot and I Need coffee but there is so much sugar I can have tea, I am busy Either you can have her or me

Not both, for God’s sake Face it.

RIC S. BASTASA
At Ward 15....

so after having known that X is the prodigy who once hails from Ward 15 you finally decide that you don't want to be one like us....

did you ever think that i could be one who pretends to tell you the truth that creativity also demands the folly of the fox the slyness of the wolf
the meekness of the dove?

did you ever reflect yourself like a mirror under the bed capturing light from the leak of the wall inside that house where a wife screams at the husband when the husband finally strikes the head of the woman with his fists?

there are no more standards of what we can be there are only unfinished paths and we are here called upon to build them to try at least one and follow where we cut the stems of trees the tallness of grasses the sharpness of the thorns the bleakness of the beaks of our days the way how our bodies grown feathers and wings and when we fly higher than you think will you ask again if you still be one of us?

when we are on top
we do not brag about it it is usual and expected because you cannot follow when it is dark
because you do not know how to absorb light because you cannot detect which place is warmer and viable as the resting place of our beautiful souls....

RIC S. BASTASA
At Your Party

i will invite the flies and there will be so many

RIC S. BASTASA
Atlantis

if you must remember me try remembering Atlantis the continent that used to be the place of the great kingdom it am it and i shall fulfill the destiny for soon i shall be lost and there shall be no more day that someone remembers

my silence shall forever be deep down the depths of the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Atm

At this moment
the brown dogs are barking a green which has remained closed the whole week

the beach umbrella lies folded on the white sand and
the rain begins to fall

an old woman on the side of the village road is selling papayas....

RIC S. BASTASA
Attending The Wedding Somewhere In Mindanao

i attend a wedding today the groom is Hungarian the bride is Filipina, but she looks like an apsara dancer,
with her long black hair,
 thick eyebrows
and sunken
eyes

i remember Angkor Wat

as i see it, they are so in love with each other that they only have a very small world of their own and the only thing they know is
kiss,
kiss,
kiss, and embrace
and smile
and kiss again

i time it: 42 seconds long as usual they have the slice of the cake and the sharing of the wine glasses are click again by the guests with their spoons asking for more kisses

i finally get tired seeing them kiss everything that is always repeated becomes a big pester (am i envious? or am i just bored?)

my wife is there beside me with her casual blue skirt and flower printed blouse from Kuala lumpur

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
actually it is already 9 o'clock in the evening and we are very sleepy....

RIC S. BASTASA
i see in your words an attempt to make poetry as a form of story telling
a diary, a journal for the day, a note,
a reminder like a dog mark or a magnetic post on the refrigerator sometimes i go beyond
all these things
seeing scars
poke marks, acne,
a mote,
a blister, oh yes,
what about that burn?
an injury being healed
by the caresses of words without the capacity for rhythm

i see in you what others have not seen,
a silence that curls like a snake,
that in extreme hit
gives a rattle,
a warning for those who come and mess
with you,

you know when
to bite
and it is only when necessary
when your castle of privacy is invaded
with nothing but the obvious
degraded into
nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Attention!

Please do not submit poems that include words like (, , , , , , s.n o. a ).

Please do not use such letters as u......to complete the s......for the a, shole s e a a u f i etcetera, etcetera, etcetera.

Please read all of the formal rules written on this page. The poems that do not meet these rules will be removed.

and

&
what if i write a poem with some letters missing

yu. t?

we; ; y i like to u.e the wo.d too
and the
in some other artful ways
and the
in some medical means

just a matter of contexting...

poetry, you deals with how we feel when meets the
in some wildlife parks to create the sparks of life, one of those nice gifts the Great Lord has given us

and for
.

well, rules are rules are rules for our peaceful co-existence but honestly
i have not seen anybody die yet, or being killed by this certain disease by simply uttering the
word

what i see is the feeling of relief in a democratic state where one whose chest or breast is filled with so much oppression and having not means of satisfying himself or retaliating from the walls of oppression the ones inflicted by the Board of Censors against his purity of honest expression when you have no other remedy except to say just to relieve yourself, and then you sit and drink your beer and lift your feet high against the mighty sun shielding your face your eyes from such a mighty stare

and

indeed is the only right word and you get healed.

i copy. i bow. i am diminished.

half-beast half-man
are we,

we cannot deny always the other lurking just behind our backs ready always for a kill.

half-man, half-best
half-angel, half-devil,

truly i am,
and if this angel has the right to say praise God in the Highest let the other one say also what is buried in his real heart the his only right to say and be himself too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Attorney's Blank Eyes
	single at 50
it is his birthday today and he sits there on the bench with blank eyes

(i am unkind to ask what sins must his father commit to punish him now?)

(i am judgmental.
i am silent. i look at him with curiosity.
as though he is a stray cat on the road, deserted by the bitch)

his hands are clasped.
he looks bound.

got no girlfriend at 50 (but he is not gay
in fact, he had many girls around him.
a harem of his Arabian nights, but he has lonely eyes white skin, frail bones, he is losing hair)

got nothing, despite his fortune and luck.

another lonely creature in court.
lost dragonfly

wanting to be crushed by a hammer.

RIC S. BASTASA
Attractions And Distractions

at 18
attraction is a magnet nails and shreds of iron fillings all absorbed

at 25
something changes
because of the seeping pains
i doubt and i begin
to know
that i am

at 35
one wavers about what to attract and when to be attracted selective they say there exists
now this discriminating taste

at 45
everything happens like a bad dream
who will ever know that this is what i am
really
i don't even know
anymore

at 55
attraction gets boring
i don't pay attention to what gives pleasure
or pain

they are all the same
waste of time
and breaks my heart and weakens
my soul

at 65
i want to rest my case
with all
peace there is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Attuned....

everything slips away ah, that usual feeling of sands thru your fingers water from a cup of hands air inside your nostrils reaching your lungs giving it back in a single sigh

one becomes an expert at expulsion somehow yes wasted but not consumed feeling the loss but not fearing anything anymore that way of embracing rejection like what happens to everyone else we're all in these suffering yes, but not that long enough one masters the pain and does not talk about the details
under the moon
darkness turns out to be a home silence a favorite recreation

RIC S. BASTASA
Auden....

to learn to live without the stars

to embrace once more an open sky
barren and sublime

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura

we never met
but for years now
we seem to melt you're cheese
and i'm the hot burger.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura 10

I've been talking to a man that i never really know who
and he is also talking to me as though we are familiar
places
and known faces

We have no more questions to ask about ourselves and we are talking about how to improve this world and solve some of its problem

I am real, i am my picture he is a shadow, and he has two names he proposes solutions,
as i agree,

Then tonight we go back to our rooms, look at the clock, it is deep and dark and cold and we sleep again taking time, rest, and perhaps dream, and recall what dreams we had the night before until everything goes blank and someone who sees both of us must have felt pity

That we are not yet dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura 2

As i smell
the good flavor
of food
from a far resto
so must have i smelled
the goodness
in you....

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura 3

I know who Laura is,
from the shape of her footprints

She knows me too well enough from the odor of my sweat

when we meet again
we shall discard masks and
clothes....

what we'd been through is nonsense to you...

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura 4

the higher you go
the more you will know that there is nothing there the more you will feel the coldness and the thinness of air some felt so light, as light as a feather and they fall back to the ground crushed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura 5

today i watch a film
about love

it is so touching
i had it repeated over and over again six times and i do nothing but watch and then it becomes another meaningless film because i watch it over and over again which goes without saying that something always repeated numbs the senses blunts the taste

and turns out to be senseless perhaps i will keep it for a while and let those days, and months and years test it if it is good, then it must be still good despite the luster.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura 6

I have a friend's nephew who keeps on repeating words five to six times and he wants you to pay attention

I heard that during the time when she was conceived his mother did not like it, (another unwanted pregnancy due to poverty) if you do not know about this of course, you get irritated by his arrogance of repetition as though you are deaf and dumb but knowing how unwanted he once was and perhaps now still you begin to understand how cruelty and madness and selfishness created him and that there is a need to listen for each repeated word as a matter of him punishing us, or his mother, or his father because we never wanted him and here he is born without even his permission.

now we must pay for his autism.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura 7

there is a person
whom you meet
just this morning
in the market place

your eyes meet
and you want to remember yet you cannot

and you stop walking and this person walks fast past you and at a distance looks back at you but you cannot still
remember
and he cannot remember too and so both of you leave you must have imagined that both of you are aliens

and here you are still alienated in this world where you
find yourselves in a common ground yet without memories and living with some other people that you never like...

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura 8

i first arrive in the bus and then she
next to me
and we never had a chance to talk on that long trip

did she not know that she slept on my chest
and that i did not close
my eyes
throughout the night?

the following morning
she woke up refreshed and she did not even bother
asking my name

when she left the bus in that next town it seemed that nothing happened and i presumed too that some things happened
for no reason at all
and even without any significance or meaning or thought.

RIC S. BASTASA
Aura 9

In the seminary the Prefect
saw to it that we become buddies of the faith

in the university
we were put in the same class
and we had only one book for both
of us

it wasn't easy of course
how i hated his guts and how he disliked mine

he asked me why
and i told him ' how would
i know? '

and he fell silent knowing that he felt the same for me

and when we both left the seminary
we really felt so dumb and free.

RIC S. BASTASA
be reminded that in reaching the ethical goal
one must compromise
at the middle ground
between two sinful extremes

Aristotle says
that is virtue.

(Horace's Odes II,10)

RIC S. BASTASA
that exact moment when you say i do not care anymore that moment when you drop your reading glasses on the floor when the coffee gets cold untouched when one finally leaves you and you have no word to say when they say the world ends today and you just look at them without a whimper and when you step upon a broken glass and you bleed and too you say once again i do not care anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Authenticity

he lives not to please anyone and if by chance he has pleased her it is just a matter of consequence for indeed the cause is somewhere else not her or anyone else

it is just plain and simple personal hygiene and good grooming and self love and human obligation

RIC S. BASTASA
Authenticity (And The Ocean)

by not saying the truth you find the authentic me within is the struggle not for freedom

too much freedom
like a wide ocean
see me as a lone boat
amidst the storm

flashes of lightning
and growling sounds of thunder

i am a boat without a passenger.

RIC S. BASTASA
Autistic Poetry

got a few words
and nothing much to say so i repeat one word and another word sounding pretty much
the same
without much meaning

morning is good
good morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Autistic, Dyslexic

love, love, love,
where are you? love, love, love why do you keep yourself in the darkness of subsumed silence?
open up, heart o heart, open up, beat like a gong be loud, so others
dead in their silent pains may wake up from their deaths
so many deaths in one hour of living love, love, love, come, come, come be with us,
don't run, don't run, please don't run away from us, who lives are ruined by too much hatred, and guilt and repetition.

we need sleep.
now that we have said our dyslexic lines.

love is, i think, a form of autism.

RIC S. BASTASA
Autobiography Of A Seagull

the mother of course is a white seagull who made love with a seagull one springtime when all the snow have turned to sea and there were ten eggs i am the fourth to hatch from among the ten hardheaded shells

all my siblings love the fish and the sea and the breeze
except me

all the while, i want to be human.

RIC S. BASTASA
Automation

a seed that falls to the ground from a dead, rotten fruit cracks its covering and sprouts

a tight bud soon from a stalk opens up to become a full blooming flower with petals proud and dignified

and so must you girl be the seed and the bud and be the full flower that you can be in full automation

RIC S. BASTASA
Automation (2)

stars
sketching themselves
on a mirror
of universal galore

moon and moons
light years
planets minding their own orbits

it's orderly
every being so quiet

keen and keel
sails and snails
the peas
at peace on a universe of verses

RIC S. BASTASA
Automation...........

if it is yours
it will come

when you arrive
the door opens

when you enter
the living room
the chair rushes
for you to sit upon

when you are hungry and you go to the kitchen the plates and spoons and forks move by themselves and serve you food

a room lights itself the blankets and pillows arrange themselves for you to rest and sleep

fate knows what you
become
what you are and what shall you be fate seals you
and knows where to put you
till the end of your
day.

RIC S. BASTASA
Automaton

when we wake up again this morning we do not really know what to do we stare a while on that closed window still blurred by the frost we rub our eyes trying to make matters clear and then all the impulses rush and then with all the images filling our empty mind there are, we begin again, so many things to be done, so much unfinished businesses, so short a life, time is so swift with feet so nimble.

RIC S. BASTASA
Autumn In My Mind

i guess the color must be pastel pastel yellow and the feeling must be humid or if not it is something soft and yet dry and the only motion like what candice describes in her poem must always be the falling and falling and falling and falling and touching the ground with so much silence except the murmur of the wind always passing by and not really remembering anything between us but i always remember yes, always, the pulsating pain

RIC S. BASTASA
Avoid Perdition...

in the backward city
magic is everywhere

a frog turns into a prince a maid into a princess witchy witchy itchy itchy betcha by golly wow wow wow like everything else politics, family, office magicians abound

money talks and talks so efficiently
the ugly becomes beautiful the loser becomes a winner the unknown becomes famous learn, learn, learn and to avoid trouble, just listen look, stare, do not mind keep doing and going and just be happy: who cares?

to each his own, avoid perdition.

RIC S. BASTASA
Avoiding A Rejection

take a part of your pelvic bone

close your eyes
let someone take the flesh

and bone to bone
of your own bone

let it grow
smoothly

to get rid of the pain and start anew

bone to bone
of my contention
following yours
nothing
opposing blood following
the flow

RIC S. BASTASA
Awareness

hearing the sound of the feet
of the ant
pulling a crumb
of bread
on the floor
just right below
my feet

and then noticing
the feather
of the bird
you picked
yesterday
under the tree
while you were walking

it has fallen from your table and then it dropped
on the floor
beside the red ant

you heard
the sound of softness
and it was very loud

RIC S. BASTASA
Awareness Of A Busy Man

how can he possibly notice that there is a cockroach
swimming in his bowl of noodles?

or the white pebble
on the pond of his shifting preferences?

or the rose tattoo on the left thigh of the woman that he slept with last Friday night?

it's his own credit card that he minds
not some dust inside the seat of his car

RIC S. BASTASA
Awareness To Fly In The Skies

it is this awareness of the hidden wings that makes us think of flying when? it all depends when you finally decide to shed off your dress your skin and bones

when? it all depends on when you are ready with flumes and feathers when you feel that you belong to the clouds and not to the patch of land and grass when? when you feel that you do not belong anymore to me or anybody else or to the world

it is only then when it is time to fly up there to the highest peaks of your longings where there shall be no more falling

RIC S. BASTASA
Away From Everyone....

to avoid a collision
we simply drifted apart you flow with the tide
i flow against it

when will we be at sea again? honestly, i detest the thought of another
reunion

i wish to turn into a stone be beside those urchins and corrals
i long for the silence of the depths
away from everyone...

RIC S. BASTASA
Away From People....

in this village
no one knows that i am, sort of,
well, a poet, though it is not really
the word that mostly describes me here.
it is enough that i am given space to breathe, ..i live,
i go around, round
and round, but the fact is, i still remain, as an ending of the usual letter which i send to a friend, or cousin,
mostly of whom are in distress, as another citizen. I have a name here, but not that familiar. A nephew asks if i like it, and i said
it does not matter.
we are in the beach,
away from people, from snakes and parasites,
and i am trying to catch ball...which i sorely miss this time because i left my glass at home...
and i got no cellphone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Away From The Deep

forget the deep
we have experienced what drowning is the past is over we begin again for something new this wading
in the shallow waters we bear witness to the whiteness of our flat feet
we store some confidences we throw unnecessary fears

sometimes
being a pig gives a nice feeling how does it feel perhaps to be a buffalo wallowing in the mud?

not thinking about what they think not thinking about the strict codes for tomorrow?

time's getting too short the hands of time have been too cruel let us take this moment little pleasures that may last us for another short lifetime

let 's swim, let's get muddy let us be happy

forget how was breathing when we were in the deep sinking

RIC S. BASTASA
Away From The Madhouse Of The Chattering Crowd.

I just read about the 20 most interesting people to watch and read for 2013.

amazing. really amazing.
one feels like a dead jellyfish the other says life is a shore with lots of waves and the other says he eats cannibals.

i shiver. One feels autumn in summer. I can't relate. Going back to my room and facing the same screen, i face my own blankness.In the mirror at this moment i am a man without a face. I feel like i am not interesting at all.

well everyone feels this. A speck of dust a grain of rice, indistinct upon a big bowl. The shore is endless, and the sky is limitless.

but i never want fame. I like it this way. I go out of my door walk alone, and the crowd sees no one. I see all of them, and that is enough to make life so ls in the zoo.
Stuffed toys in the store.
A dress shop. A show of guns and bullets. And then another explosion headlining the most famous people entangled in that ending.

I'm lucky. I am not in the headline.
I am back home, watch the news.
Eyes get tired and then have some sleep on an hour without restrictions.

No one tells me that in this broad daylight, it is not good to have sleep. As others work themselves to death, I rest at my own choice. I am nothing. After all, this is nobody at his utmost luxury, in privacy, in seclusion, happily situated away from the madhouse of the chattering crowd.

RIC S. BASTASA
Away From Those Deceiving Details Let Me Live.

from a distance
seven hills away
let me think let me see what beauty is there
left for me what grace is there
that is found in you
in absence.

away from those
deceiving details
let me live.

RIC S. BASTASA
Awed And Clapping...Life

it is hot here
and for weeks there had been no rain, dusty roads, feeling sick, moans of windy days,

and humid nights,
sweat and tears, and lonely talks

despite, children sing, faith sticks like epoxy to a broken wing when leaves fall upon the touch of the passing wind, i hear the music of the coming rain, a symphony of dry leaves, finally finding their places on the soil theater

where i am

part of the audience awed and
clapping...

RIC S. BASTASA
Awesome!

IT is your word, but could be mine, when you saw the pictures, of little boys and girls posing for the centerfold of mama's love, where papa is nowhere to be found, or uncle's attention, because mama has not been good enough to call them pretty,

awesome!

it is your word for the ricefields green, filled with the light of the sun, where the white herons are friends with the black carabaos pasture graze, graze, till the afternoon ends, the day when the sea is calm and the sand so white unblemished by any man's sadness or any woman's grief,

awesome!

you saw the old man and the old woman hugging missing the moments of their youth now in each other's arms again despite names forgotten and places gone away

awesome!

it is always your word against mine as i take the pictures rehearsing them again in my mind now with captions and human conversations in low key

where shall we go next and gather and then again remember?

RIC S. BASTASA
Awit Sa Pagdayeg

sayo ang pag-awit diha sa pagdayeg sa Dios samtang ang mga langgam nga dayo nga nangbatog sa kahoy nga kaimito
wala pang kalupad paingon sa lugar diin wala pa nimo bisan kausa maadto....

RIC S. BASTASA
Awit Sa Usa Ka Babaye Nga Nag-Inosara

Ang pag-inusara ang imong gipili.
Ug busa mao kana ang nahitabo.
Kay kon unsa ang imong gisamkon Mao baya ang imong ipanganak.

Gisamkon mo ang pag-inusara.
Gianak mo ang kamingaw, ug Imo kining giamoma, gipatubo Diha sa imong tugkaran.

Gisuroy mo ang mga gabii diha Sa imong hardin, nakighinabi ka Sa mga bitoon ug bulan nga milandag Sa imong tanaman ug kakahoyan.

Miawit ka: huni sa gugma.
Nadungog sa hangin ug gihatod Kini sa mga bungtod, lapos sa dagat Ug mga suba, hangtod pa gani sa bangaw.

Subo ang imong awit kutob sa dag-om Nga pahanod. Nabasa ang uga nga yuta.
Namulak ang mga rosas. Imong gikutlo Ug imong gihalokan ang imong kaugalingon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ay Pawond May Hebin

ay pawond may heben da di ay mit yo
an ay no it
ay kanot porget yo

it wuz ol pun
antil wi partid

heben wuz short lib an so i waz lif brokin hartid naw ay kip sirtsing ebri park, ebre dremlan dat ay ben to bat may lost heben

antil wen kan i payn yu?

RIC S. BASTASA
Ayaw Ako Usa Og Pukawa

kon nganong
gipasiga ang suga samtang giangkon
ka pa sa katulugon

kon nganong sa
sayong kabuntagon
nasangpit mo
ang ngalan sa
yawa?

ngano kaha nga
gipili mo man ang
kasakit kaysa
sa kalipay?

ngano kaha nga karon
mas naisog ka
kaysa imong kagahapon?

ngano kaha?
ngano ba nga mas gibuhat mo man
ang sayop kaysa
sakto?

O, lawas, o kalag
mahimo bang
sabotan ninyo kini
sa laing higayon?

gikapoy ko
katulgon ko
ayaw ako
usa og pukawa

RIC S. BASTASA
Ayaw Ko Ilara

palihug lang langga ayaw ko ilara nianang imong usa ka nipis nga halok ayaw awata ang mga ngabil ni hudas ayaw ako og ilara sa paglutaw diha sa mabaw nga sapa kay ako dili na bata nga molangoy ug motidlom padulong sa imong dughan dugay ra akong nahimong bato ug dili na malumos sa imong dagayday palihug lang ayaw na ko ilara sa imong gamay kaayo nga halok kay dili na kana nako mabati ug ayaw ko paambita anang mga lamigas nga gadimdim sa katam-is pasagdi ang mga langgam magpabilin sa ilang mga salag silong sa imong simod nga bugnaw pa sa mga dahon sa kahoy dugay nang milayas ang mga langgam dugay nang nangamatay ang mga lamigas

RIC S. BASTASA
Ayaw Pod Ihungit Uy!

Ako lang putlan ang kamot Aron di lang pud hungit kayo Kana bang di ra pud klaro Kanang medyo, sort of,
Mora’g si Mister Yoso.

Sama ini:
Gitulon sa kangingit Ang kahayag. Smooth sa esophagus.
Gabii na, morag dako ug itom nga Uwak. Milupad, miwarawara sa iyang Mga pako. Gitukob ang adlaw.

Tan-awa ko, piyong kadyot Kadyot lang, dugangi pa kadyot.
Ukba pod ang imong mata Ayaw pagpamilok. Piloa ang imong Dila. Paduladulaa sa imong tilaok.
Ayaw tunla. Ang imong dila Kanang padulong sa imong Gihadom sa kasingkasing

Ok ra ka?
Kagahi pa sa imong panumdoman Katig-a ba sa cover design sa imong Kasingkasing. Hard copy.

Matu’g ko sa katre ni Procrustes. Na, hala, inata Ang akong tiil. Biraha pagpugos Kay mubo ra.

Ingon ana gyod kana si Sisyphus. Snub kaayo, sige Lang aswat ligid sa iyang bato.
Maghimo og dakong lingin Walay katapus an walay sinugdanan.

Sus, buntag na man diay! Time na para malibang. Makigsulti na pod ko Sa akong tai. Di na ko patugatuga’g Kaon og mais.

RIC S. BASTASA
Azul....

Shades of blue confront the man in blue, so blue, but not electric blue, the blue in faded jeans saddening blue, the blue in marble, glossy, but sadder still, the faint blue of a heavy sky, laden with rain some restraints, falling suppressed, the blue in that deserted lagoon, those blue Spanish eyes gone, the navy blue without an address, the blue lips, lesser in oxygen
content,
the bluebird perched upon a twig, kingfisher blue without a fish, a blue heart, pastel blue shirt torn blue, blues, blue bruises....

the puerto azul....

RIC S. BASTASA
Babay Na

babay na babayeng
taga canada
adto na ako sa baybayon kay malibang kadyot niining init kaayo nga kaodtohon

unsa kahay akong
dlhon nga ilo?

RIC S. BASTASA
Babbling....

the sea has mastered the mass production of waves like millions of white foamy eyelashes
the shore multiplies its own sands that gleam like diamonds at noon the trees grow leaves upon its twigs the spiders spit their own silk just like the worms air is breathing upon its own molecules no one notices all these miracles every aspect is normal there is nothing extraordinary things flow like water coolness gush like wind clouds flit, rain pours, the winds from the sea hushes
my hands type the words for anything trying to make poetry unnoticeable there is nothing extraordinary now about words on feelings long numbed when you read this you shall notice nothing but mass production too, and you tell yourself what kind of desecration of the words is this phenomenon?
desanctify fear, desedify what is divine make things flow like water let the air be but just molecules now, what is so extraordinary about you? there is no such thing now as discriminating taste...

RIC S. BASTASA
granting that you want to be transformed into a fish, let me be your aggressive cormorant.
i will take you whole.

RIC S. BASTASA
Baby

in my world
all things move
like creepers

like strawberry
tendrils
on a very wide field

it rains all day but all possibilities grow here like seeds

i like sunshine
the warmth of its kindness but i dispensed with it

i love
the pebbles drenched with
rain

they are mute
but the have learned the silence of their songs

in my world
i am just one of the possibilities i am a seed but i may decide not to grow

i may simply be one of the pebbles that learned to love the silence of their songs

i like it here
thick and covered
dark and damp.
Baby Can I Hold U Tonyt?

baby it's colder tonight and i am out of the house again looking for someone to fill the void
inside my heart
this constant void looking for someone to fill my longing
for love
baby i see you walking in the park wearing the same face that i have looking for someone to fill the voids in our hearts baby can i hold you tonight?

baby i am walking in the park on that warm and darker side baby my arms are open you can have them all tonight baby, i have my love all too ready to jump with you tonight to hug you and kiss you baby same time same warm and darker side of the park baby same body with me, tonight?
promise me baby, you don't tell our stories to her or anybody, and so baby my heart is beating again beside your heart in that warm and darker side of the park, tonight?

RIC S. BASTASA
Baby, If I Noticed Everything

do not blame me
about this
mess

did i notice really everything every detail
like
the ponytail or the rosy cheek or the dainty fingers of the princess
in you

because if i did i would have never left
where you were then hiding
like a mole
on your nipple

you were waiting for me to call your name and kiss you

when you could have simply
called me by my nickname

when you
should have been candid and tell me that you love me too

this world would have been a happier place to live in you and i, would have lived a life

not wasted by those fast tracking loveless years look at us we are wrinkled with all regrets

RIC S. BASTASA
Baby....

with such
tiny hands
you hold my finger

how can that be as beautiful
as
the sunrise
this morning?

RIC S. BASTASA
Baby-Poem

blood and tears
drama,

sweat and brow,
cinema,

poetry writing,
eccentric,

you dream,
eclectic

malling and texting normal

solitude,
the peace and the quite exotic

noise and rush always doing and going busy forever
welcome

you are here exactly at the point of

where i am. i wish to go back to the comfort room of my childhood,

but never mind, i am almost through,
and then back to the womb of mother back to baby, back to you, take care of me, i am lovely when helpless.

Back From A Morning Walk

i

it is earlier today.
4: 04 in the morning
on a walk towards the college
oval beside a gym
(i counted the steps 14 in all
from the basement

some finches
hang on the cracks of its cement walls)

ii

i made six rounds
walking
abreast steadily
mindless
about my surroundings
wilting
grass on the side of the pavement

when the clouds turned gray and
the atmosphere
dimmed
like a night study lamp
in my room
when i was too
sleepy
to notice the hours then the rain began
to fall
and i ran as fast as i could to take shelter under a cemented roof
the gym as i told you beforehand

iii
then there was this
old man
with a long white beard wearing
sporty pants
and nike shoes
and seated on one of the stairs looking far waiting for the rain
to stop

iv
i was behind him
a few steps away
and we were not talking because the rain was already falling
so hard
that i could no longer
hear the sounds of the birds grouping
themselves
on the cracks of the
walls
i never felt lonelier
than ever before

RIC S. BASTASA
Back Home

back home
i have gone far away

for days
i will miss somehow
the old things

i may ask myself now if there is something new

to feel
to see

to be excited to live again

RIC S. BASTASA
Back Home From Cebu

Forgive him
but fear had become greater than
love

that was the time when saving himself had become the truest instinct
unthinkably

she was left eating at the cafeteria at 8 o'clock in the morning while he slipped fast the door like a fish to the open sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Back Home Then After Three Days Of Isolation

nerves
oh, they are like snakes coming out of your skins oh, anxiety that grows inside a room where you are alone and cannot sleep if you do not get out of it tomorrow another one shall be proclaimed dead by reason of sleep they will not know what you are going through because your mouth has molasses

and your tongue has honey and everything in there tastes
sweet

the words are careful tiptoeing like dancers
in a ballet show how can you survive this kind of denial

three days more and there will be an explosion that no one hears
no one

bags are packed
the reservation is canceled trips are booked backed home
at a very expensive cost

money does not matter now you can throw them all in the sky there is a song in your heart it is the song of home and waiting

you have survived those nights and now the dogs greet you with their wagging tails but there is more to those five tails

she sits on your lap and kisses your ears

this is home she says and it is welcoming you back

it is like a plant uprooted you see and now put back on its soil and then again roots grow and spread like a carpet
in the living room

RIC S. BASTASA
the plane
touches down
smoothly

a few seconds
i look at the river
winding
in murk

the nipa palms have water on their necks

too much water here
back home

it stresses
my mind

sometimes i think
this world will end with so much water

that we all drown to death that waves as big as mountains come to claim
our lives

i am back home then whatever happens
it does not matter anymore

i will say it to myself we all die anyway

what time
and how

it does not really matter
i am back home
and we are still on missing each other's arms.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back Home To Yourself Less What You Thought Was Love.

the flowers that you see soon shall turn into walls the bees are buttons the skies are but ceilings of a stone house and sooner the stairs are but piles of steps leading you to the house of your own reality, well, just let it out early in the morning when hormones are overflowing. Run as fast as you can, take the deep breaths and say your thanks to those ferns and snails for now you are back home to yourself less what you thought was love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back In Each Other's Arms

we were whole day apart

when i arrived home
i did not ask

when we sleep tonight
i face the other side

somehow i miss you
i do not notice that my leg landed on your thigh and you do not set it aside we are back in our arms now and the night cannot stop it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back In Maribujoc One Evening Last Summer

i look at the picture again of old men and women reminiscing their past one evening dinner their bald heads shiny on the light the women with furrows on their foreheads nicely concealed by imported cream, i listen a lot about this conference of what to do with poverty and make the town alive again...

what i felt was this: ghostly and ghastly, cold air by the window, hushing, hungry for attention.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back Into The Arms Of My Arms

i am back

i was away on a trip
lost in those layers of
history

i open the pages of an old book again and it tells me
who i was

weak and always penetrated by the joys of evil

i bite my lips
and spread my fingers as i grapple for words again a deva in me

has arisen

i am back and the old chapters of what i 've read tease me how can you change? there is no change because there is no happiness in there

i go back to those pages again but i am writing notes from this pen i am growing

i am taking roots

i am back and happier now stronger even

because i shall no longer be missing you that much and when your face resurfaces again on the mist i don't grapple that much
to see

what is real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back Off

back off from me do not imprison me by your generosity do not enslave me with your love set me free tell me that this is all an illusion show me the way to the fantasy of your pretenses make me an angry man tell me tell me

that you do not love me so i may pack and leave and take back my life again and live

RIC S. BASTASA
i am here
at par with you my peer we shall appear on same designer clothes
now
i can afford it
i am glad finally that i have made it
on the 21st century

touch my elbow
we go elbow to elbow now for you have been my giant and i was your dwarf because you have looked at me with disdain
but now, i am happy to have made it on your century

my God if you only knew it got demoted really from my own time on the 30th
light years ago

touching myself
trying to be human again.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is summer
scorching summer season creeping,
grasses are wilting
trees are shedding of their last leaves,
what i see are bones
of trees,
skeletons of
branches,
the dry wind keeps
blowing the leaves
away,
what i have is this bald surrounding emptied of their
essence
beyond me are brown mountains vultures are
in the skies
eying for death as prey
i sit upon a rock
the only rock
left here
i have no cover on
my head
i am half naked
i have no one to talk
to,
they have left this arid place
a long time ago
i am back
i am telling the sand soil,
i have something
to write and tell the world
about it

it is summer
in this vast desert
a long time ago
this was ours
and the trees are green grasses verdant butterflies flutter
and innocently
land on our
hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Basics

the shadows of trees
against the gray skies

there is no one here
except the white storks and some sparrows

taking their wings

i wait for the right timing when the sun rises

some leaves are falling so gently on the cover of grass a caterpillar takes its bites

on the leaf

a frog jumps on the pond some tadpoles follow

the clouds drift away
a new day is just born

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Childhood

i pay a visit to Apolonio today now on his 60th year as tenant of my grandfather's farm on my 50th year i begin to see the strangeness of the place where i spent my childhood the field of plain grass opens a view of a chase

of memories

coconut trees tower to the heights of my dreams and the winding paths been converted as a wide street leading to the city of progress and change

Apolonio's teeth are black and broken like a knife with jagged edge his body emaciated his speech choppy beside his wife who is already too forgetful about faces he heaves a sigh and then tries to remember my mischief hiding his hat and pushing him into the river as he pastures the carabao that i let loose on the green fields father was always angry and mother was too defensive the wind begins to blow and the clouds turn darker yellow leaves fall from a very high makopa tree and then it starts to rain the rice ponds make the dripping sound of water we take shelter in the old house where he now lives his children have long been gone starting their own lives in some other landlord's lands he has regrets since not anyone has finished school he tells that like a mirror to his past the rain stops and then i bid goodbye it is late and have no words to say anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Each Other’s Arms

shall you accuse us? dare. we know our defenses.
we were first,

the date of our meeting was earlier then.
years are too cruel for us, we who learned love earlier under the pine trees in Davao, we who drank the nectar of flowers in fantasy land of the bees we are back into our arms and you must understand how we must cope up with a love that we lost, when youth was confused, when our arms were too tight we were choked almost to death until we learned to make a distance a distance which fooled us into oblivion, we do not give up, we sting to the hope of having new arms now those that understand that love is always sweeter the second time around

if the groan is loud enough you may cover your ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To February...

there is no point
returning to that red day of February

there is nothing
there
except a heap of rotten leaves

underneath are the feasting earthworms
boasting about their self-proclaimed
independence

themselves upon
themselves
even the sun is not needed

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Insomnia

back to sleeplessness
i come to you, and we talk a lot till morning no coffee or smoke, just plain talking and i have lots of things to share with you my lost boyhood
so much time has been wasted on so many preparations what father wanted what pleased mother what made grandpa proud and things too personal that to you i could only tell how i wish i can go back to bed and have a nice sleep till noon but i am simply a kind of a sleepless man wanting to talk to you
and here you are wanting what i am and listening too much interest in what i am saying and what i have to say this loneliness
and guilt and this wish for death

i could tell you like me, but how can i ever hold you you are around me, words and words, and images and empty spaces

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Its Origin....

for now my streets
are silent
the pond has become clear and still again

back to the self unfazed by all the changes of the weathers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Me...Again...

Everything we see Everyone we meet along the way We embrace
All

Moment by moment Familiarity
We are surely Fed-up to all these Cycles of acquaintances Numbing our senses
Of letting go

Goodbye here and there Until we do not know what it means again Hellos that do not give surprises Like counting the grains of White sands
Of a faraway secluded beach

Enclosed now
I must prefer only this small room
Where
It is only me that fits After all, I was born this way Singled out by Mother.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To My Brain....

i am a free man.
i have freed myself from your rules.
your advice that i keep for a while finally is discarded. It guided me but it is not mine.
i am looking for my own. Back to my own arms.
my own face. my own tongue. my own brain.

you said i do not have any. you are wrong.
look at me i am whole, i am thinking and i am going somewhere.

i am ready. i put my own tie, my baby breath polo. my shiny shoes. my brown belt and khaki pants, a little perfume and a carnation in my breast pocket.

i am walking with your words. i am throwing them all on the river by the bridge where you said you like me and my style and by God i have potential to be loved and be great in the future.

i am going with you. You are with me and here i am with a shovel. i am burying you.

i like you but i cannot pretend that you are alive
forever.
great men die and they become
nothing.

back to my arms. my hands. my feet.
my brain.

my soul, my conscience.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Nature....

sad to say
you have been looking on the pages of the book away from the landscapes of the mountains the calm unfolded soft linens of the sea pages of days

the chapters of those seasons

a butterfly floating is enough poem without so much use of words

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Normal

i will be back to normal, they keep on saying that those in white and green uniforms surrounding me in this state
of being worn out like a blown
tire.

(must have been abnormal for the past years, how could i not notice that on my twisted tongue my boxed face and
languid hands, whorled bones like
a prison door,)

yes, i tell them
i will be back to normal,
to a place where i will not be thinking much about a birthplace
a mole in the sea
a moon on placid lake
unmoving

RIC S. BASTASA
you are a small bubble living inside
a big bubble like the small cat inside the stomach
of the comforting bigger cat a joey
inside a kangaroo
a louse within a mustache
there is always a story when something is inside something else like a sub-language because somehow one must survive the dog's race or the rat world
the internalization of
of the subsumed
fine, the story must be told in the simplest manner possible
there is no need for a story teller
and the story goes like this:

there is a bubble which burst inside a bubble and the bigger bubble bursts during the bursting
and then
the end is always the same as ever:

there is only nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Poetry......

IT IS
not important, so i brushed it aside.

iT can be forgotten altogether.
it did not give me anything except this disappointment.

I give up.

days and days i go beyond this border embracing all the exotic things that you cannot offer me.

a short fat man dances the tanoura while the egyptian girl with long and wavy eyelashes and white plump body does the bellydancing

as the musical strings and drums go louder as the drinks multiply on the glasses of that night

the honeymoon is over and now i am back to the room where i left you and you are as silent

as ever

and then i am with you again.

my sorrow.
my anxiety.
my grief.
my words.

the poems that keep on waiting to be written.
an unfinished sculpture of my mind.
the details that come to me like a million
eyes blinking like
ambulance....

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To Square One

back to square one
my dear
making life more interesting for us both now
we pretend
we first meet
and you are
so naive and i am so brusque
and so
attractive and you are so demure and so seductive

love is sweeter in town
the second time around.

RIC S. BASTASA
he is looking for an opening his eyes are angry but his words are restrained and will not let the mouth speak about
emotions

in his place emotions are rebels
and the owner of everything will not like it

there are spies and soldiers of decent speech and modest actions and anyone caught shall be shot to death or beaten till his flesh bleeds no more

and so he is looking for an exit an opening but there is only nowhere there is only somewhere and time seems to be like a road without a station and emotions seem to just a random of planets
evading a collision that could have made him happy when the whole universe bangs against
each other
and thus end everything
everything
so he could become another atom again beginning anew
on a virginal spin
in a nucleus world where he can be truly himself again he is so small

he is so negligible
and let it be again that no one notices him

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To The Basics

it is not funny
it is true

that the more you hate the more you love the person that you love try to eject

the person that you love from your system eject, junk, spit, defecate whatever you do something in you is already missing because loving is loving and it is

not:
ejecting but embracing junking but keeping spitting but swallowing defecating but the eating of the pudding and the nourishing try hating love and it always comes back to you not to shame you but always to love you again to make you meek and gentle to make you cry and smile to make you all too human, vulnerable, weak and so forgiving and something too hard on you as hate becomes too soft as gelatin with lots of sugar and honey and milk and grapes and peach and red red cherries on top of everything

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To The Basics Of Life....

you must have forgotten some basics in life

those that take us away from depression like: mopping the floor sweeping the yard weeding out the garden washing clothes drying them under the sun doing the dishes

after winter
replanting the garden growing again
what the season had taken

having a party
sipping your drink
laughing with friends

you will not waste
time and money
with psychiatry....

RIC S. BASTASA
it always begins with
the face,
arms, then the body,
then back
to the lips again,
deeper
into the tongue
and even
to the throat
wishing to touch
the heart which takes so much effort of
your soul
you rush back to the toes
and nape and
back
all these, triggered by that unseen
force of love,
which slips despite the force of ten
fingers
the neurons fail
and the lapses
begin, you compromise
with the

outburst and you
stop

thinking once again
the mystery

of that x that can never be captured

and so back to emptiness again

that God can only fill.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is still the warmth of the flesh of the arms and legs and somewhere between that make us feel more alive

we are not saints not angels, we are humans still rooted to the ground less our imaginary wings and halos and white feathers if at all we are meant to be divine
holy

i touch your body and you touch mine and set ourselves on fire the world, in some ways, in its darkness

at noon
or night time, gets lighted with our lust

i call it love, because it feels so right my blood pumping from my heart to my head to my bottom to my toes

and i moan, and i sigh, and i think, at a glimpse when i close my eyes i have seen the eyes of God looking so gently to the eyes of my soul

inside this body,
my bones did not make the sound of the rattling snake

RIC S. BASTASA
Father bought land. It was cheap, because you have to walk seven rivers, climb eight mountains, and walk another ten kilometers beside the forest where the monkeys keep on teasing passersby with their human appearances.

Father took me once there. We rode a white horse together. It was really exhaustive but upon reaching there you can see the world. You can even touch the sky.

There were horses there. Cows and goats, and fruit trees. It was a plateau with springs of water nearby. The ducks and chickens and pigs roam freely.

e we stayed their for a month. I had dandruff because our viand everyday is native chicken. Chicken causes dandruff and i smell like chicken dung.

When father died, he left me that mountain as a secret. I am the only one who knows the way. I promised him that i will not tell my brother and four sisters.

Back to the mountain, like what father did, to have peace, I only have to speak to myself.

The winds at night shall hear me. And in the morning the mists and fog are my comfort. And then the mountains nearby shall be my echoes.

Despite father's cruelty, I still hold him with high esteem. He left me paradise. He gave me the beauty of mountains, and the silence of the the peaceful nights away from the anxieties of the city and the troubles of the family.

Last night, I touched the sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
for what is poetry? did i tell you that it is merely defecation and all i excrete are trash, garbage, e coli?
you keep on saying
i disagree, i completely disagree i am recollecting your pieces and put them in an album and i will make a publication, ...jesus!
socrates did not write a word.
jesus neither.

(i am not what they were.
i am just a sigh, a sort of a morning exercise, exhale, inhale, exhale, inhale thing) and stephen king who says he does not write but all these are still here... silly life, silly life, looking for a wall and a spray net, spray, spray, write on the wall, draw on the wall, keep things intact, mementos, refreshing meal of the river of time.

i do not know. i keep on telling.
chanting. i got no book of my own.
I have nothing to own.
Let no word come back to me and tell me 'i am your creation and you are my papa' for at the end i shall deny all of them for i do not belong here neither to somebody nor some reason.

pilgrim am i. in this river of time.
leaf.
Back To The Stable

back to the stable with Vincent eying for a magical landscape somewhere in dusty Mexico on the hands of the desert sands he is looking for horses those harsh horses of the black night he is on his journey to plant the seeds of his solitude

i am tilling silence too in the garden of my heart silence listens to all the forebodings solitude blooms amidst the skulls of hunger

RIC S. BASTASA
i am back to this place and i am feeling strange there are changes and some i can tell have been missing a few meters from where i stand under this mahogany tree where the wind is cold and fresh flavored by the newly cut rice stalks over this spread of golden fields the well is still there but the brown woman with earth skin is gone an island of coconut trees (and some mango trees and banana shrubs)

has turned bald
and the grasses claim another territory to its grassland the sparrows must have migrated to the nearby forest the cable lines run an empty length of a sigh from one pole to another endlessly clinging is this anonymous electricity the twenty or so white herons are here again pecking on some little frogs in small ponds i walk under the sun revisiting reevaluating rekindling perhaps the reasons why i must go on living a life unlived for quite a time why are the fields empty? why are the blackbirds circling the tree? why do people pass by this path unable to know the significance of this human journey?

the sun is up like an absurdity triumphant a dog comes near me it is waggling its tail and i am calling him another name.

RIC S. BASTASA
the words have decome mute and to express what they have inside their letters they now ask the visuals to help them.

like words however
the visuals do not speak.
They just show.

a poem makes a sound.
exudes an aura
spreads a scent
foremost it makes you dance even if there is no audible
music from the radio it makes you see even it what it is uttering is just the blankness of
a wall.

it is then not the visual or the word
it is what is not seen
and what is not uttered.

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To You

if you're a vine, then climb don't cling if you're a pebble, don't shout it is too unlikely of you if you're a tiger, roar if you're a lion, kill the deer,
if you're a bird, by all means
fly
if you're the sea, keep this width and make the storms if you're the sky, keep the space and hang the stars and give way for the moon if you're the night be dark if you're the day, shine brightly with the sun
keep things true to thy nature
be

there is no need to be anybody
just be yourself

now wake up, and write.

RIC S. BASTASA
you shall condemn
Lust,
like the rest of them who wear the whitest robes of Prudence,

you want me to embrace Purity
i did.

Once and twice
and even thrice i have kept the purity of my flesh not able to share it with the one that needs it so badly that embrace
and kiss and love ultimate

i have felt gravely the sense of our Selfishness that Enclosure that admits no one in Need

and I have become gravely ill the worms are too excited to consume my nerves and bones

you ask me to condemn some more of this Flesh and Desire and be with you in Heaven

I have become so lonely and bare
my heart lives in the desert
there is no
water in there no oasis in sight
no camels to ride
no water bearers to ask
where i am

and so i embrace back Lust who promise me nothing for it only asks that i feel and see and touch no promise of Heaven nothing about Hell

it is Lust that makes me alive
again
In bed, with you, i touch every part of You
In those hours of my silence we begin again listening to the pulse of Life the whispers of the Heart...

RIC S. BASTASA
Back To You Still My Love

all the strange thoughts, i bathe myself with, feeling the soapiness of the matter and the wetness of all the newness, i feel clean about new faces and friends and places i have never been too, to all these, fog and mist, and valleys and grass and winding paths,
all these new, bushes and bamboos
leading me
still to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
A widower comes asking
For new seedlings
Of sexy pink

His old jeep parks
His young handsome Driver

Comes his name is Mark

Both of them smells
Musk

Something’s musky
Something needs
To be explained

But you understand
This widower at 60 needs a

Young boy like the Greek Plato

To appease his Philosophical sense

About loneliness
The good, the beautiful
And yes

The truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
a girl takes a train but the train that she has taken backtracks,
all she needs to do
to adopt to this mistake is change her sitting position going south is her actual destination
but the train is going north now there is no point
going down
she has more time left for recreation
lots of landscapes to see more sad events
to forget
and things now are getting straight and perfect

RIC S. BASTASA
you once walked its brick path amazed by its antiquity never destroyed by any calamity for the past three hundred years you once prayed there admired the oldest icons and touched the woodiness of the centuries
you once climbed the stairs listened to the sounds of its bells and on that stone window had the view of the sea and the blue horizon now, in thirty-two seconds

it is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bacolod 2011 May

(at kasai’s resto)

little Tina i remember was the one affectionate with the white kitten
that she saves from the window in grandma's house i have seen compassion in her eyes

how did she grow to be a woman
reserved, decent
and compassionate
to the little world where she is in now?

her mother who has white hairs smiles when Tina says that marriage
can always wait
as she has still other things to do
with the present kittens
at the house
of the door
of her old house

RIC S. BASTASA
Bacolod 2012

it is not planned
but just the same i went there i've been there many times bathed in its hot spring felt the coldness of its trees and scaled the vastness of its fullness

i stood on top of a hill felt the sun
ached my eyes for its mountains wrote about its beauty nothing extraordinary

in a final note it is not about its name or history
not even about a place or anyone

not about myself, it is indescribable it cannot be said

it cannot be thought for long because once you settle upon it longer than you wish it too is gone away

and when you step upon the stairs of another plane you forget and try to remember another place no, not another person it is this travel of non-attachment at all the bed that you sleep last night is no longer a bed

the table cloth that you stained with the sap of the luscious ripe mango fruit is no longer a cloth you are on top of the world on top of the white clouds that block all view from the earth from all memories and you keep saying now and writing each piece piercing you and you do not mean anything it is just the passing and the going and the non stopping out of your mind out of this world out of what dissipates like light in darkness it is cold you cover your face with the blanket of

the plane
and then you cease

that is the story that you have written it is intended for no one now, not even for this earth or the imagined heavens

RIC S. BASTASA
Bad Influence...

listen
you are unhappy
and you drive
alone
on those winding
roads
of the faraway mountains looking for nothing finding no one
at the end
of your journey
and exhausted you stop
for a while
beside the abandoned cottage
trying to figure out
what went wrong
and why....

i told you it is not the heart
there is none
who has it
i advise you it is nothing but this
flesh
these hands are scrutineers
this body is as warm as black coffee and you take the initiative of
sipping what is there
on the table
you put your arms around you
and you lick your lips
bland taste
of too much restraint
your legs have taken
roots
and now
you cannot move.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bad Karma

now on your great fall i shall look at you from here at the top of my own clean castle,

and you shall shout my name curse my birth and my ancestors

but how can you make me angry?

not anymore

you get what you deserve in your own version of hell

RIC S. BASTASA
'Bad Karma, Always Bad Karma' The Old Woman Tells Us.

he had modest beginnings.
a woman whom he can never love supports him to college.

he got a world of his own now and takes another woman of his dreams.

his wings are long and strong.
he flies alone, corrupted by the sky.

what transformed him into a black bird
is not unexpected.

His past has horns
His teeth sharp from the beginning.

he wants not to see the truth that hurts him since childhood.

how to rule the world and then destroy it, will always have the consequences he will always choose the wrong way and everyone is excited to see how he destroys himself.

'bad karma, always bad karma' the old woman tells us.
' he should not have killed himself', his wife says in closing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bad Karma....

Free from the usual bind You surge as another star in that black sky You like your wings Feeling like a young bird You hover on one of those Heavenly branches
Somehow time catches up
with you
it has its own long fingers It is squeezing your heart For some important memories That you have been ungrateful In forgetting

You fall down
From such a height
Time does not kill you
You suffer

A woman watches you with so much pity
And then looks to the other side And walks away

Her heart is bleeding
She wants your wings too She changes her mind and walks away

RIC S. BASTASA
Bad Luck

today his house is burned everything he has lost in a matter of a few hours the body of his only son wrapped in plastic charred there is no face of agony to see and his chamber maid ashed to death

a face without a hair a skull with some flesh the odor is incredible

how much does he owe still to the gods?

he is drugged to sleep in the hospital things are not that easy to swallow bad luck, bad luck, all his friends are telling this bad luck to each other

RIC S. BASTASA
Bad Picture
	his long tongue of the salamander catching a fly and perhaps regretting the taste throws it out but with long time hunger regrets again and throws its tongue to take back
the double dead fly.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bagatelle...

shying from the outside world where the sun can make a thousand bites the king through his ministers evolved from efforts of bringing croquet and shuffleboard
inside and
atop tables....

in the Great Hall at Hatfield House
the tables have become smaller enjoying the holes
in the middle of their chores....

RIC S. BASTASA
Baguio City

the rain falls
most of the time when i visit this place it is so cold as i climb the hundred steps up i dissolve into oblivion behind the fog at the top of Lourdes

RIC S. BASTASA
Baguio City, A Memory....

i remember
that coldness of December

we stayed on top of that hill below us
all fog around us trees
foggy trees

the glass window
is hazy

the heat from the fireplace
gives
the warmth that we cannot give
to each other

my mind played on the waves of fire
when all the lights are closed at midnight

i remember
i went out of my room went outside the house

climbed the fence and stood there with my arms raised in surrender

i was too lonely and did not know what to do
where to

i was broken.

RIC S. BASTASA
We take shelter from the monsoon rains In the warm inflections of dinner Spread out to our liking, a la carte.
The sky’s the old cliché: no limits here, Chef’s a master at re-incarnating Lapu-lapu, Or carving a plateful of Manansala’s heart.
Will I, I wonder, be so bold as to say With a straight face to the waiter: we are Carnal you see, hungry for the Other.
And we’d like everything as raw as we Can get it in this civil place, with its piano, Violin, china, silver, spotless linen.
You look at me, intent, your voice encodes Bite-sized pleasures — (Kani Sushi, yes?) Dipped desires — (Oysters Rockefeller, baked?) My mind scuttles the crab’s tangent To our table, shelled; my tongue sauces at the thought of succulents.
Even when the waiter interjects Those Rockefellers are out of season, What a feast live absences meant!

RIC S. BASTASA
musta na? bugnaw na ba kaayo diha?
lami kuno ang mga pagkaon diha? nindot daw ang mga dahon sa kahoy morag bulawan nga gagilakgilak sa pag-abot sa adlaw

daghan daw ang kasuroyan diha mabudlat gyod ang mga mata sa kadaghan sa talan-awon nga dili gayod nato makita sa atoang lugar

musta na? aykog ingna nga mouli ka na kay gimingaw ka na sa imong mga higala?
unsa to? walay kinilaw diha? walay tuba?
walay tagay? walay tapok-tapok og hisgot hisgot kabahin sa mga ginagmayng kalipay?

mao ba? daghang balay apan walay mga tawo daghang miabot apan sigi lang pong pahawa?
tinood ka?

winter na. Unya kaw rang usa sa imong gipuy-an unya kon duawon ka
pang-week end lang?
unya kon isuroy ka, i-drop ka lang sa mall
unya ikaw na ang bahala

ayay, na hala, pauli na.
manirang unya ta.

RIC S. BASTASA
Balak Alang Sa Gugma

ang gitisok mo migitib.
Bisan unsa.
Ang pulong mga imong gitanom sa akong baba, migamot sa akong dila.
nanahon ang akong mga buhok, namuwak ang akong utok.
ang hunghong nga tam-is nga imong gipahiluna sa akong dalunggan nangutay,

milabong padulong sa akong bukton, nanalingsing ang akong mga tudlo.
kad tong ulan sa akong dughan nangahimo nga mga suba sa akong pagbati miawit ang sulog ug mikurog ang akong

mga paa
sa kabugnaw sa
tubig nga midagayday sa mga batohon kong mga pangandoy

ang gidapion mo sa akong tiyan
usa ka init sa bag-ong kahaponon nahimong usa ka dilaab sa gabagang pagbati sa kagabhion
nahimugso ang bulan
sa akong mga mata
ug mikuyanap ang kahayag sa duha ta ka
ngitngit nga kalibotan

migitib ang tumang kahayag nanubo ang mga liso sa paglaum nahimong kahoy
nga daghan kaayog sanga nga naglumba sa
pagakos
sa mga hawak sa
kaadlawon

RIC S. BASTASA
Balak Nga Gibasa Sa Announcer Sa Radyo Samtang Nag-Drive Kos Akong Pick-Up Pauli Sa Katipunan

nakadawat siyag
usa ka libo ka pesos sa iyang balak nga
maoy nakadaog karong
hapona
sa ENERGY radio,
gikan sa bag-ong
nakadaog nga
bise-gobernador

gibasa kini sa announcer nga nagpahimangno nang daan nga dili niya basahon ang nahibiling 150 ka mga tampo nga puno sa kaguol, nga mora bag puros paningil sa mga utangan apil na kadtong iyang gidanggaag maginoo pero medyo
mas bastos

basahon lang kini niya human niya kini ayudihan o malaygitan ba hinoon

ang maong balak
nahimong kataw-anan
diha sa iyang pagmahay kabahin sa iyang pikoy nga bisan unsaon kunog tukoytukoy dili na man gayod kamaong mangukoy

wala kuno siya kabawi sa iyang pagpatuli
unya sa kataposang garay nagpabilin
siyag pangutana kon sa iyang edad nga saysenta maminyo pa ba kaha kuno siya?

mikatawa ang announcer
ug miingon nga depende ra na nimo sir

kon duha ka bay kayutaan dako bag abot ang imong kalubian ug pila ka sako ang maani sa imong mga basakan
kay daghan pa gayong mga babaye ang kamaong mokapyot sa imong katigayonan

RIC S. BASTASA
Balak Sa Alas Sais Nuybe Sa Sayong Kangitngit Sa Bulan Sa Disyembre

sa ilalom sa
mga karaang kahoy
nga talisay
giub-ob niya
ang saging...

RIC S. BASTASA
Balak Sa Tikalon

apan lagi kay ang akong pusod gitagkos man ni nanay sa bongbong sa among balay didtos Olingan
na, bisan unsa pa kaanindot ang iceland
ang denmark ang austria pati na gani ang romania og bulgaria
pastilan, ang kamingaw nako sa amoa dili na gayod maantos maong gikalimtan ang mga sausages og beer sa Munich ang salad sa salzburg ang di masabot apan lamiang pagkaon sa Sofia gihandom pa gihapon ang barbecue sa bacolod ang inun-nan sa dipolog ang lechon sa cebu og dayon mas migwapa ang pilipinas mas humot og mas lamian pas kagubkob nga chicharon

RIC S. BASTASA
Balay Sa Davao

sa davao
sa pink nga balay ni jun evasco sa may kwadrado nga bintana sa bungtod gilantaw ko ang Mt. Apo dili ko mahikap bisan ang kinamob-an nga panganod nga nagbitay
sa iyang tiilan

RIC S. BASTASA
Bald, Pale, Short

30 years, then and now.
you lost all hair,
a compulsory version of Yul Brynner
still short but this time on paler skin
your eyes are still sharp less the silence
on a drink you pour out what life did to you

as always this drink will still be my treat oh man, time has not changed
your poverty.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bali Bound

when i fly
to Bali
i choose the window

i am now
beside the clouds
separated by glass

at night i am at the level of the forehead
of the moon

at dawn the sun slowly rising
seeks my
level

the mountains
below me
and he seas
so vast
the colors of the waters
become a landscape
in my mind

it is me high up
the clouds
inside this plane
bound for the Bali of my
dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Balo

amidst the crowd of four to five laughter becomes like the wind and the rain everything so light and funny when we finally stand waiting the side of my body leaning on the pole with the evening light the silence creeps like a caterpillar
on the leaf

we feel we are consumed
bit by bit

RIC S. BASTASA
Bambino

playful Bambino
tumbles on the white sand hurts himself
stands
and then laughs
with his friends

RIC S. BASTASA
Bandera

it is far from here
as we have to pass the same big and wide river curling some mountains
ten times

we shall follow a winding path
muddy most of the times as slippery as imagined

on foot we really have
to
as it is real and old and memorable

papa and grandpa passed this way many times to reach Bandera

a cozy place by the side of a green hill surrounded by mango trees

we shall be there at the ripe season as mangoes fall on our feet we pick them up, peel it, suck the juice savor the pulp and taste the fullness of our lives.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bangon Na!

buntag na
misilang na ang adlaw
bangon na
pil-a ang imong habol hiposa ang imong ugnan
pag-ilis
gawas na sa imong kwarto hikalimti ang imong katulugon
hikalimti ang tanan
mong kasakit ug kahigwa-os
sa imong kinabuhi

abrihi ang mga bintana ug pultahan
tan-awa ang adlaw
naghata ug kahayag
sa kalibutan
hinumdumi ang
kangitngit sa kagabhion ug pamalandong
sa bag-ong kausaban

kanindot sa kalibotan gaksa ang iyang kaanyag simhota ang iyang kahumot pamatia ang awit
sa kalamgaman
batia ang hagwa
sa kainit sa mga
hapuhap sa mga
tudlo sa adlaw

oi! gihagkan ka na niya kaganiha pa
wa ka lang seguro makabantay tungod
sa imong tumang
kalipay

RIC S. BASTASA
Barangay Dos

another diabetic
guy is dead in this small town

a street is closed and a gambling table is put beside the
road

inside the house
a family mourns

electric lights
around the house are kept open

the community sympathizes with prayers and the usual condolences my house-help cleans the street and quips: he was not a good man

despite the good that we have done
that dead man
when he was still alive said nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Barco Blanco

BARCO blanco
is arriving in Pulawan Port today.

My brother from Yugoslavia a seaman by profession is inside it.

He asks me to fetch him.
But i won't.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bared And Exposed Only To His Mirror...

notoriety
speaks ill of
the truth

in internalizes
and mimics the truth
to give
the best show for the audience

nice performance
the audience stands and claps

the sounds of fame rebounds in every wall
the praises in bouquets of assorted flowers

the clown takes off its masks showing a scarred face the truth of sorrows

now it is saving itself from disgrace
goes off the stage takes the other exit door and when alone
it laughs the hardest saying to himself

' how stupid, how foolish these shallow people are! ! ! '

and so it had chosen a life all alone
true to himself, bared and exposed
only to his mirror...
Bareng Tunu Bigal

perhaps, yes perhaps perchance,
life is a basket full of surprises this you must know, discern some more what life is willing to give and yet you refuse inside your hands are the invisible daisies they grow even without roots and bloom even without suns and moons it is their nature to curl and grow
leaves
and spread their petals and show the colors of the wind, the ones that you have not seen yet even when awake.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bart The Bard

to ease hardship
since poetry cannot support his family
his wife Emily takes the opportunity of packing up for Ireland

the same job waits for her there
care-giving

at first it is hard to imagine him alone in his room
but necessity you must agree
is always the best teacher in fact it is the father now of all innovations

RIC S. BASTASA
Basho's Predicament

old pond
dries up in long drought skeletal frog

jump! jump!
if you can!

RIC S. BASTASA
Basic Wisdom

and if at all you cannot help then proceed to plan B

DO NOT HURT.

RIC S. BASTASA
Basin Ugma....

nagpabadlis intawon si emak, sa iyang palad kay suma pa sa tiguwang nga babaye didto sa bukid sa sibutad nga gidungog nga maayong mananambal buayahon lagi kuno ka unya pati ang imong bana imong tugbon kon dili mausab ang lakat sa imong palad, gibabagan ang usa ka linya sa usa ka kudlit nga maoy makapausab sa dagan sa imong kapalaran, ang iyang bana nga sabungero naglantaw, samtang nagtakilid kilid sa giagay-ay nga pultahan dapit sa lugar diin ang pugaran sa iyang inaan nga jolohano nangitlog, ....'kon kabalo pa lang ko nga dili manganak ang akong asawa, ' maoy iyang sulti sa iyang kaugalingon nga seguro ang tiki ra ang nakadungog, 'mas maayo pag gitaban ko na lang kadtong bigaon nakong silingan nga walay ugam ang bulog sa kaulag', ..unya mora siyag tika nga nag sigig tsk, tsk, tsk, samtang mibali sa tukog sa lubi dayog panghingiki.

ingon ka, naa pay kamunggay ang iyang lagos, unya pula kaayo ang iyang dila sa iyang mam-on.

ang dagom nga iyang gbadlis tayaon. apan wala ka naykahadlok. ambot kon nagtoo ka ba kaha nga basin uigma mausob na ang dagan sa imong kinabuhi.

RIC S. BASTASA
Basking Under The Sun On  A Sunday Morning

i assure you
there will be changes

it will not always be
rain
not muddy all the time no frolicking
upon those
dirt
no, i cannot be wet forever
and
trembling

it is a slow process this awakening
this change for the better

i am patient
than you think
i do not rush
time is a trick
and treat

this is a safe place for reckoning
you will not hear any name but you shall see what my tomorrow shall bring

today is my silence i shall bask my body under the sun on a Sunday morning Basorexia

you have infected my mind and my tongue is restless hungry, craving, crazy for the next kiss and the next and the next and the next

my tongue hand in hand with your tongue exploring the contours of the gums and teeth our taste buds bursting like flames.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bastet

cat-goddess worshipped by poetic humans

o my she likes rats

RIC S. BASTASA
Bathing In The Sea...

i happen to watch
upon three brown children running to bathe in the sea they are naked laughing and swim like
a fish
go to the deep and wave their hands
at me

saying 'come, come
the deep sea is warm
there are more corals
to see
giant clams
live here
fish in bright colors swimming side by side
with us'

i have selected
the words: naked,
and then it echoes
innocence,
deep which i have equated with that healing silence,
fish
the symbol of my faith, and

so i go naked too run to the sea
and swim to the deepest part

and there is this silly wish that i have in mind

i wish there is no more land anymore

i wish we are all children
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bathing Under The Rain
	here is rain
there is this rush
and i am bathing
under this coldness
i stop
doing anything canceled all other appointments
there is this rain
that seems not to stop falling on my hair
and i am wet all over
and i remove all my clothes and i keep running
there is a wall all around
me
it is cold, so cold
i dance and tumble
and i am
all alone by myself
shouting
for joy!

RIC S. BASTASA
Battering Pain Away

like a softball
you batter away pain hitting it hard it disappears like a dot in the horizon

RIC S. BASTASA
Batting The Ball

batting the ball that i did not hit, walloping the volleyball that did not reach the net swimming on a murky river the boat that sinks and the birds that fly too low on the mountains their feet hitting the tops of the trees dreams that do not come true i am already forewarned foretold, i have resigned to accept that what is not best for me cannot be granted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bawion Na Lang  Sa Iyang  Pagkaasyoso.

ang di makamao
naglingaw-lingaw
ang di kamao
gipalimpyohan ang mga kuko gipasinaw,
nagpaputol sa buhok
nagpahumot
sayod ko kon unsay iyang buot ipasabot
kay lagi di man makamao basin bawion na lang sa iyang pagkaasyoso...

RIC S. BASTASA
Bbc News (An Internal Reflection)

THERE will be wars in this world, many lies like masks on the faces of diplomacy agenda are hidden like cockroaches in those dirty cabinets what they say on TV mislead everyone
guffaw
the terrorists wear suits silk tuxedos armed with international resolutions
in effect
destroying the right of each nation to self-determination freedoms smashed like glasses and plates after a toast and
party

WHATEVER, the lies are hard to figure out the experts know how to package them well like statutes of David like the Trojan Horse

THERE are more victims Triumphant less Exploiters myriad
There are excuses on the death of innocent children and strangled women and silenced men
of this World
The collateral damages are buried underneath those shattered facade of mosques and markets

The gates are interfered upon AT night the moon bleeds blood The air at dawn sighs
A morning is broken again People have no choice like native now Rejoicing over a new master The frogs has not started yet To worry about their numbers The greedy white Heron eyes Its next prey.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Be A Candle....

be a candle
to me

shine in darkness consume yourself

cry, cry,
in silence

consume yourself

be those tears wasted on the graveyard
of the one
you love

be gone....

RIC S. BASTASA
Be A Prelude To Being Miserably Alone

alone
can always be a prelude to being miserably
alone

be with people

soon you will forget what misery is there

they have their miseries which you will learn later

and then
you will start laughing

be the butterfly fluttering

from one tree to another
from one mountain
to another

trees of tragedies
mountains of miseries

among the thousand leaves that fall

how can you notice
yours?

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Afraid

be afraid of the things that you see and does nothing for you be afraid of those who appear like the people that you meet for they may not be the way they seem
to be
be afraid of those that shake your hands for they may have other plans be afraid when you do not fear something so harmful maybe near be afraid of almost everything & when all the fear is spent when things are over be strong and confident be another lover forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Blind, And Use The Sword When Finally Needed.

i did not find it hard to work within the four corners of this wall

everything is measurable everything has an answer

i work well within this circle beginning to love the limits of its perimeters

everything is well defined there is a word for what to say all the principles are laid out and all i have to do is say it.

what did you do? what evidence proves it?
what is the law?

there are no emotions no colors, no relationships it is not a what if but what is.

it is the simplicity of these elements that make our work doable.

and so, if you cannot do it, what is really your problem?

ask the four walls.
work within the circle.
use all the tools.
be blind, and use the sword when finally needed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Brave Enough

be brave enough
to go away
and find your destiny
a future
where money flows like water where fame comes and takes the pictures of your smiling
face
where every man and woman
sees you
as the model
the grand bearer
the mark
of their history
the symbol of their time

be brave
and go to places where i have never been
be enduring
in your faith
be determined
in all your pursuits

i dare you
be brave
and daring

leave me
i am staying.
Be Cautious...

all those that surround us are arms poised to embrace us yet not all are true though warm

some are there to take some parts of you and not return them making you feel so incomplete and incompetent

and when you finally give up those arms set you aside like you are a leper
still wanting the cure

the message is clear you must also learn to choose which arms are snakes assuming the shapes of fingers
learn somehow to hide distrust be not mislead
into the vast ocean
of despair

put your arms around your shoulder
let your palms feel the truths
even still at the surface of disbelief

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Contented You Are Telling Me

you sent the slideshow
of the little white daisy
contented in the
forest where all the
other plants are confused

the oak wanting to be a lilac
the lilac wanting to be a pine
the pine wanting to be a daisy

you are the daisy
i suppose so

how can i ever believe you
when all the while
you have been dreaming
of wings to fly away?

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Cool, Be Gentle

do not be hard on yourself creativity is a soft water on the glass waiting to be sipped slowly like a lover waiting in bed waiting to be kissed

just wait, be cool, be gentle everything comes without much effort from you you are so lovely and love cannot refuse to be loved again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Gentle With The Earth....

how many times
did i tell you to focus on the falling leaf follow its way when it finally lands
on the earth?

take that leaf
with your two hands
as though
it is your baby
and feel it closer
to your breasts

sit on the grass
and look at all those around you

do not talk,
feel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Glad That A Poet Isn'T Credible, Lost In His Own Words

a poet is never taken seriously
for he is one who can never change this world
and you, on a magnanimity of intentions, and
desirable deeds,
make the sign that you can remove walls,
destroy barriers, bury the dead resurrect them like Christ, you who can stop this world even from revolving,
the power that be,
i am glad that i am just a poet and i can sit in one corner and sing like a mocking bird
mimicking all of you in your greatness
i am glad no one believes me for if i were believable
so many
should have died in vain so many should have found no meaning
so many, so many more important than what they think themselves to be should have hated
the dust
their indifference to mockery
of the truth
their own grief
a mirror
a destruction of all plates of this earth all fire, tongues
all teeth

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Glad That You Are In Pain Now....

know what, my dear,
there are more poems in pain

pleasure
does not give you much

happiness
is nothing but complacency in waiting

be glad,
are you still in pain?

be joyful amidst this struggle to be set free from the pain of
loneliness,

oh, i can attest to its
truth,

its unrecognized usefulness for our very own
spiritual growth,

this cleansing,
this purification

where happiness in the face of an accounting becomes so bare

that it amounts to nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Glad The Gods Know What Is Good For You

you made a pilgrimage to the mountains climbed the steep hills and crossed the ten rivers you sailed the five seas and walked the three continents you are praying for the fulfillment of a wish for a dream to come true and you whisper it to the ears of the gods offering food and flowers lighting scented candles and letting the smokes from the incenses spread to the heavens as you bow your head and prostrate on your legs and make your chants in humble worship

the gods did not grant what you were asking they all said no and you asked for a reconsideration they all denied your motion it was given to someone else and you wish you were dead lightning hit the man you envied and thunder sounded like happy drums the man to which your wish was granted is now dead.

be glad for the gods know what is good for you when they denied it, they said it is not meant for you and they never wanted you dead that early in his bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Glad Then For The Moment It Is The Only One You Have.

this is the situation of either this or that there is no or, here, there is no other choice but to choose

and you shall be confronted with this where you shall be thoroughly shaken and you feel like everything in you is falling down to the abyss of incalculable
emptiness

you do not die
you confront it
you lose everything and you find finally yourself alone in this struggle

at first you detest it you rebel
why me? you ask, and you ask foolishly

and then you return to your senses as though you find yourself finally in that old happy home

you do not intend to be happy but now you are.

be glad then for the moment it is the only one you have.
Be Good

that i be good seemingly is the only choice i can have as a human being
but say to say
the good in me shatters like it does not want any part of me

the bad thing
wriggles like a worm
and it is so tickling that i forget about
tomorrow

i just love living life the way it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Happy

be happy
nothing is permanent

no one is permanently rich no one is permanently poor it is the cycle that governs the fates of us all destinies
and change
and rotation of the axis
of this earth

it is the circle
that keeps us alive
so be happy

now you may be sad
and down and feeling hopeless

just wait
the cycle of life comes to save you
just wait
the cycle of death too comes to give you rest

it is the circle
not the flatness
that gives us happiness

be glad
nothing is permanent
the changes come
and you shall have it

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Happy, Say Goodbye

be happy today
walk the dog
and talk to your wife kiss her
goodbye

you're reporting
eyearly for office

and don’t think about anything else

or that someone she can always wait

until forever
tell her

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Light As A Feather

be light as a feather
do not go for a heavy face or a heart that stores
sorrows
be not overwhelmed with grief
these burdens
pull you towards the grave

be light as a feather
be blown by the winds of change into some happier lands hover, drift, float empty your mind
and heart
be so light as a new thought that bewilders you into another
comforting fantasy

be light as a feather
have a good ride in air...

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Like Air

invincible and yet so essential
my love is like air
to your soul
as you too love me
you love
is like air always unassuming and yet
i cannot live without vice versa

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Like The Stars And The Moon And The Sun

with or without you, these heavenly bodies keep on giving light,

such is their nature

unselfishly
they give light without taking anything
in return

be like them
with or without me

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Lost....

you have been searching for happiness and so

happiness did not find you try

sitting down, stop the search, see the grass
it covers a hill without really trying try closing your eyes and settle down like a stone sinking to the pond making itself lost in the murkiness of the river.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Magnificent......

the self is
a deceiver of the self
itself

it lies to its own teeth
it hides behind
its back

it whispers
that there is nothing wrong anyway

it settles for what makes it feel good
for the moment
and if the self reaps
the sad consequences it goes to sleep
trying to ignore what it did to itself

sometimes
it pays to get out of the self
rise above it
and then be magnificent

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Not Like The Frogs And The Clouds

be not like the frogs that copulate in the rain on those nights where others cannot sleep be not like those that croak without meaning on the murky ponds, on those rivited rivers be not like the clouds that drift east to west, and have not known what is fidelity to permanence or what colors to choose as they change shapes for the seasons that come and go like the wind be not like me, for i know not what is there to be a perfection not attained in any form of my poetry do not follow me for my ways are not theirs those who pave the easy & wide paths to destiny just be yourself my dear, use the light inside your soul stare at the flicker of your own wisdom your own goal scroll your own choices, take the path of your loneliness speak the language of your heart then feel your wholeness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Original…

i can relate to you
distant friend, when in any moment you face a blank wall, when you cannot remember a word when you reconstruct an adage and suit it to your own liking, i can very well relate to that wall that shuts you out from any idea, that slip of the tongue that tip
that does not say what you want to
at this minute,

do not attempt to please
this world
do not attempt to filter thoughts like words like pebbles or sands with sea water escaping from a screen

do not impress, that is the one that makes you forget,
that lessens you
emaciating you into a clown a page

heroes are originals, they have no fear ugly or what, they are always what they are be good, write the first word that comes into your mind do not recall what beauty was there that you have first seen contemplate, close your eyes, see yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Quiet.....

i am so sorry you deserve something greater than this which does not sound so well like a well oiled machine

i am so sorry
to hear from you with all the grunts
and the runts
here you are at the prime time of the hours
mistaking again another prose for a
poem

sorrier to you my dear whose taste for nursery rhyme has not waned

whose love for the limericks still prick

dear pig, be quiet
the butcher is here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Ready, It Is Coming

sad truths bring you some preludes so you can hone your ambivalent reactions so you can have a little refinement when the real part of grieving gets inside your skin deep down into the pores and flesh reverberating into the very mesh of your rattling bones nature gives you a rehearsal over and over again until you are bored with sorrow until it does not affect you anymore until you have no word for it except dignified acceptance the hours are well regimented like soldiers prepared for war and the days are like empty boats accommodating a lot of free passengers now do not panic, keep your chin up, do not be overwhelmed

for soon
grief shall come as a typhoon sorrow like a year of drought your rivers shall run dry your deep wells shall turn out to be shallow foxholes your homes of comfort shattered into pieces of wood drifting in the strong currents of the winds of change.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Silent.....

those who amassed
more than they can take,
let them be,
those who think that with their children and their properties, and bank accounts and companies,
they can be happy forever,
let them be,

let them own what is not
for them,
let them think that there is forever
here,

be silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Strong

like a rope
of steel
to make a bridge and connect
two distant islands

i walk in
do not snap.

RIC S. BASTASA
Be The Garden Not The Gardener

the thoughts growing in your mind are thorns

you are the one growing them in your mind let no thought grow there let yourself be not the grower of these thoughts they are the thorns let your mind be just the garden let Him spread the seeds and let these seeds grow like some clouds seeded in the skies let Him grow the thoughts in you you see them they are the red roses because you are the garden

you are not the gardener you have never been and you are never the good one

RIC S. BASTASA
Be There

be there where we once meet on the agreed date on such a moment for i am but a passing gusty wind
be there on the running river dip your feet for only once shall i pass it is my coldness that you must not forget you shall touch me and i must feel you only but once

RIC S. BASTASA
Be Wise Like The Guys

So all you have is an Emotion

Which to me is A wrong notion

So slow is the motion Leading finally to A commotion

Take the potion
Of logic's promotion
Set in motion
That smart locomotion

If you must Kiss the frog
Do not brag
Have no devotion
On that superstition

Be wise
Apprise and arise Chastise disguise
Take the whys
Of the snake's eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Be With People Who Are In Love

be with people who are in love with life
for they can help you become so alive

their breaths are warm and they all rise
to the heavens
unlike them
those indifferent and loveless ones their breaths
are like chunks of dirt and they crumple
and stain the earth

learn the art of loving more people
and learn to fly so when you are falling in love you do not crush yourself cracking to the rocks of the earth leaves die. But the real tree knows how to grow back its roots.

and then the buds start to show.

flowers bloom, that is next.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beach Neighbor

at the other side
of the fence is my British expatriate neighbor

his beard is white
and he is 6 feet tall retired military man married to a Filipina who split with her husband 5 years ago

i watch him playing with an adopted 2 year old
brown kid,

eye are throwing stones
to the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beach Volleyball

beach volleyball today.

you wear your cap
to protect you from the sun.

you wear your beach shorts blue shorts with big white flowers prints.

you walk barefoot.
and then you decide to walk straight to the internet cafe.

and you are here now.
you do not like
anybody else.

cruel world. hot sun. your flight is still tomorrow morning.

another loud night.
an impatient self trying to be completely silent.

shut.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beach, 4 P.M. Somewhere...

as i walk along the beach
this afternoon
i give in to the child in me picking up stones,

amazed by its colors
and shapes
i begin to make stories out of them...stones, smaller ones, like a creature possessed by an enigma, there must be an underlying truth to its shape, it is, as it must be telling me about what happens to me after this?

is this a hurting enigma? am i mad at my attempt to give meaning to one without meaning?

i am interpreting a pebble the smallness of humility the silence of the insignificant the wars of the sands the struggle of the waves of the sea chasing each other as to who reaches the thighs of the shore first a mad man is reading the shores of the sea on a very insignificant moment of the day the stones are writing novels on the hot skins of the shores people who pass me by are sparing me of saying anything and they refuse to look at me and give that look of that feeling that i must have been one kind of a wasted man

a child looks at me with pity and asks, what are you doing with the pebbles?
are they speaking to you?
i am awakened by this vastness sometimes to be found, i must experience being lost myself in the secret labyrinths of
thought

the child is looking for play, i do not have it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bear Bare Beer

square affair
bare all hair erring prayer
declare aware prepare dare
beer heir spare
debonaire millionaire
swear tear
where stare
death chair

RIC S. BASTASA
Bearing Her Sorrows

how she carries her own sorrows of marriage is like lifting her skirt and putting all the chicken eggs
in there

RIC S. BASTASA
Beat My Heart Like The Gong

Beat my heart like the gong

At the feast of san vicente

Beat it softly with your Pink palms and if it does not sound

Beat it with greater force

Like mortar and pestle

(No sound still)

Beat it again please patiently

And if it sounds

Let us go on a long journey

RIC S. BASTASA
Beating Around The Bush

women like to go around sometimes without their knowing they move away from the center of their attraction that only point in the navel of love that keeps them going i own it
and i can always give it even without their
asking
all that they can do is simply use a metaphor
which can be easily understood like a bud unfolding into a flower
spreading perfume
under my nose
down to that lower part of the delta of my belly

it does not each there though a woman needs to say at least hello.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beating The Blues

You have seen my face
You have seen the way I smile the way I bend my back My shoulder leaning on the door
As though greeting you
A nice day a promising future
The glow of sun
The coolness of the moon
The splash on the clear blue waters
By the pool
By the sea
The sail boat passing by The ship on anchor
By the wharf
And the cotton clouds hanging
By the green mountains

The poems I write are sad
You read them and you cry
You say you relate
You say you feel
The sadness of my lines

Now you ask me
Who am i?
Was I the butterfly dreaming about the sad man?
Or was I the sad man dreaming about the butterfly?

You are confused
I am not; I choose what I want to be
I am what I am
This moment,
And the moments that you imagine me to be

I write what I want
I am what I am
Some lines may be lying But read them all over again I may be there between those lines somewhere Beating The Bush

do you like to run in circles? we are chasing each other in circles

that is the truth
about a circle
a chase without end
our lives
in non-narratives but riddles

RIC S. BASTASA
Beauteous Island

everything stays here nothing is taken not even a grain of sand not even your favorite shell there is song somehow which you can carry with you in the heart it persists in your ear what you long for what you have always desired stays there forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful

in the mirror
looking at the window where the red roses
are in full bloom

Kaanindot

Nanamin ko
Gitan-aw ko ang bintana Diin namulak
Ang mga pula nga rosas

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful Betty

don't be a Beany
try just being a birdie bevy not bleary
could be blistery
but have that mystery
embrace the arms of infinity Delicious berry
beautiful Betty
not blandly but somewhat beefy meaty spicy!

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful Bird...

i see you with plumes glossing upon its natural colors upon a storm
you continue on this journey firm upon the thought that the island of your coming comfort
is just a mile away in your silence i shall not hear
you
you dream
i dream too
now rest for a while perch upon those petrified trees
the rocks below
have earned their moss the winds are not carrying anything
we hope
upon a meeting
there is no fear
even when we are finally
gone.

beautiful bird
retain the silence
do not sing yet
hold on
to broken wings....

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful Flower On The Wall Without Roots Anymore.

seven days
of crisis, nothing
happens, except the spasmodic
movement of life.

you are passively
posted, spectator to all these chasing
and wandering,

beautiful flower on
the wall
without roots anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful Hands....And Sorrow

your sorrow is bearable, do not ever think of a surrender, if you listen carefully, listen to what your sorrow says in poetry, as i too listen closely, the burden is not that heavy your sorrow is not just beautiful but in fact delicious, at a closer look it is like a basket of assorted fruits and look closely, your hands are beautiful...

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful Medusa

at that moment
i was silenced,

because it was too beautiful and it was my first time being in touch

and being touched by beauty.....

the rest
fell silent
as though everyone in that very moment

turned into stone and cliffs and rocks and sands

it was the transformation into manhood

an evolution into an awareness that when beauty hits us

straight in the heart

we cannot
at the core
talk anymore...

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful Morning Is Here.....

a salad of sounds
mix in the trees and the garden

birds chirp, fountain flows, wind chimes, leaves falling a grasshopper hops from fern

to fern

the black crow lands on a coconut palm

hear and earthworm squirm ducks wade on the nearby river in the kitchen an egg is beaten the flame heats olive oil on the pan

sunny side up, white porcelain plate, spoon and fork beside each other brewed coffee fumes, a symphony of smiles and cheers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful Morning Is Here.....Oooo

a salad of sounds
mix in the trees and the garden

birds chirp, fountain flows,
wind chimes, leaves falling

a grasshopper hops from fern
to fern

the black crow lands on a
coconut palm

hear an earthworm squirm
ducks wade on the nearby river

in the kitchen an egg is beaten
the flame heats olive oil on the pan

sunny side up, white porcelain plate,
spoon and fork beside each other

brewed coffee fumes, a symphony
of smiles and cheers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful Passion

i watch beauty take a walk one morning by the sea as she undresses herself and begins to carry her body to the calm waters where she plunges herself and in a moment she rises combing her wet hair with her soft fingers as she closes her eyes and raises her head to the glorious light of the sun she gets out of the water her breasts in slow motion protruding to the direction of her firm nipples as drops of water drip down her tall and white body of this woman who says she loves me too.

i am awed and speechless and i thank God for this beautiful passion his greatest creation that now i can touch and feel and live with for all the days of my life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautiful Scars

Lovers lie
the earlier you know this the sweeter the pain love leaves us unprepared but despite all these one only needs to recall the kiss, the hug, the chase, the laughter the stairs, and bed, or the cup and saucer, the spoon in my mouth, the fork in your fingers love does it all and we are not alone, we did not lose a single moment we have loved and lost and the earlier we know this the better the pain clean cut wounds that carve in the their skins
beautiful scars.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beautifully To Air

i still wish that i can write like how the fingers of sunshine handle the pen of light majestic strokes on fragile leaves of dawn where emotions begin to wake up like sprouts of mongo beans from their coats, oh i still dream to be a weaver of rain from the heavens pouring out the magnificence of something pure and untouched by the ordinariness of all thoughts (i dream that one day, i can do it without the use of words where inks and blots are invisible yet emitting the scents of glorious sounds) where you think that what i am saying is the ugliness of irrationality, someday we will see what we have not seen and yet so near to the lusciousness of our lips the tenderness of our hands, the gentleness of our essence like breaths that we in these cold years have surrendered beautifully to air.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beauty

i agree what you say about inner beauty

the windows of your soul
through your eyes
to the secret chambers of your heart
holiness and peace
glow like burning fire in your head
as you evoke your presence

forgive me, but i am more tempted
as usual
to the external
the flesh that wraps your bones
the curves that travel around your body
the warmth of your arms
the softness of your touch
your lips
and breasts your thighs and groins
i see them more now as i kiss you

i am young. so young to see to want these all.
i do not bother about your soul

RIC S. BASTASA
Beauty And Hope

The early morning
is beautiful

it promises me something too good to be true like a simple yes from you look! look! oh! look!

there is a white butterfly on the petal of a red rose well framed by my wooden window

RIC S. BASTASA
Beauty And Mystery

my friend you must understand
that i am
too, sort of, a roller-coaster emotions are, feelings do, travel in a circle

like
a repetition of
tantrums,

there are no good ones, there are those that keep you high promising you a nirvana (which you only have to guess because it is not that clear) clarity is like a fairy sometimes i know what you want, what you think is great it is something that we cannot understand and it amazes us because we cannot understand it we equate it with mystery and beauty is mysterious

i will concoct a secret for you like stone inside a glass of water that we freeze on the ref there is frost, and opaqueness that melts down with time, and our gazes are impatient until such time that everything becomes too clear plain stone inside a glass of water with lots of stories in them fumes of cold, water dropping, liquid, and

safe.
Beauty And Pain

he was searching for beauty he traveled far into the mountains crossing rivers sleeping in the forest he was seeking enlightenment pain came, and it stayed for years, and then left him it made a difference, beauty still he did not find, it was somewhere else pain carried it away from him

RIC S. BASTASA
Beauty And The Lyre

she strums the string of my awareness and i soon bloom like a white lotus
in the pond

beauty breathes
and then sings

RIC S. BASTASA
Beauty At The Shower

naked body
under the shower
waters cascade
following the contours
the shadow
cast on the glass
i am
filled with desire
and lust

naked body
waiting on bed
just
the two of us
in the privacy of silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Beauty Speaks In Silence

early morning
along the white sands of the shore there are no people here most of them are still asleep the sea is calm as silk clear as glass

the sun is rising gently in the gray horizon

it is beauty that speaks my words are shying away

RIC S. BASTASA
Beauty, Like Anyone Else, With Too Much Attention, Is Choked

i like the way you put so much effort on that sculpture: a head of a woman with braided hair a flower between an ear, and a certain restrained smile as though trying to hold what she sweetly keeps in secret

every night you look at it and every morning you chisel a part here and there saying,
' this is an excess there must be a room for improvement' on one morning you chisel out another part always looking for a way to perfect your art until such time that it does not look a woman at all:

it has become an indescribable creature 'derived from a native woman who has not spoken the language of the woman that you love' i pity the work. I abhor you something so beautiful and so natural was finally sacrificed in the altar of your artistic greed.

monsters arise from an overworked mind. from too much discontent. from too much hate for what good was there.
with too much effort, beauty, like anyone else, with too much attention, is choked.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because God Is There...

a good and kind soul is never weary

bumped it is never injured

given myriad tasks
this soul which is good and kind
shall finish it without complain

and in excellent
manner.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because God Loves Me Still

At first i promised myself That i will deny myself of those Little pleasures
Which may have caused the curse
Of the gods

I am thinking of time
And how little it is Like a drop of honey upon A white porcelain plate Feasted by ants,

And so i made a decision I'll have them back again Though with little restraints For a compromise

I am human, i am uncertain, I am fickle

And yet mind you God loves me still....

RIC S. BASTASA
Because I Am Blind With You I Can See

i ask for your fingers and you were so kind you touch me with the gentle feel of such tiny ten tributaries with so much love your fingers have become a set of loving hands and you take me to places i have not been before to things i have not ever touched to feelings i have never felt this is our house, you first tell me, feel the living room
