it is warm and cozy and full of concerned conversations, this is actually what we call a home,
and you are here

you are telling me with the definite and bold strokes of your choice of words and this is the window, you continue telling me this is where you see the world outside those are blue clouds, and i have known blue through the ice cubes that fill the glass of orange juice that you give me

those are red roses in the garden, and i feel the red through the hot tea that you serve me,
and then you take my hands to your breasts, and you tell me this is me, and i feel the beating of your heart and you tell me again inside is my heart, and with all love you are telling me again you are always here and this i have felt, and since then i am never blind.

RIC S. BASTASA
because i am free i invoke the wind in me and because i have the wind i call the bird in me the wings i have
and because i have the wings now i must say adieu
to you and them and everyone of you those that still have the looks of surprise and amazement bedazzled and puzzled i must confess that i do not belong here in this place of too much ordinariness because i am free because i am the wind because i have my wings and now you pray before i leave and fly away that i may tell you on which part of my body have i learned to fold the obstructions of my arms do not imitate me do not attempt to find the secrets of my capacity for flights did i not tell you that my father is an eagle?

RIC S. BASTASA
Because I Am Here

and neither there

or either or to infinity to infinity to infinity and then you look on this half-darkness half-sleep and then and then and then and then and then you claim you have the hands to touch me i am neither here not there now

i am nothing but this air in the infinite emptiness of your infinite bowl.

i am everything i am nowhere

RIC S. BASTASA
Because I Am Not Yet

why i did not see you it was simple
i have nothing to say or show
to impress you about me you may ask me about my poems as though i owe you
something
or an explanation why they sound so sad and then when we face each other what you see instead is the sunrise
and never the sunsets or the smile that you think must have been purported to deceive you
i do not wish to disturb you further it is not odd it is simply a matter of keeping things to myself
because i have become independent from anybody’s prison that matter of opinion that impression that something that i do not want to have that conclusion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because I Am The Giver Then I Am Inexhaustible

i have been thinking about greed your greed with specifics the details crop in cramped inside these craniums and i am honestly disturbed but i shall not let this matter unmake me i won't allow this to infect the flesh that you are eating i shall be strong and be willing to part with everything i have all for you
and when every part of me is consumed every ear, eye and even the mind my heart reduced to nothing not even shreds of paper then you must leave and you shall part with all satisfaction that finally you have taken everything from me and i shall ponder on this why did i allow this nothingness in me? why did i allow you to rob me of my being?

shall i tell myself because i have loved you much even if i know that there is something messy in you your greed and avarice and selfishness?

it does not matter
i am the giver and i am always inexhaustible.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because I Believe In Myself....

you have neglected
a flower
but it blooms just the same you despised the sun everyday but it shines just the same you have not appreciated me but i am doing good
just the same

there is a flame inside my heart no one turns it off except myself

RIC S. BASTASA
Because I Cannot Sleep Tonight

because i cannot sleep tonight
i have to pay the price my morning and noon tomorrow shall be my night and the whole day i will sleep too not speaking to anyone not having breakfast
and lunch

another dinner for one on a candle light they will all be sleeping and i will be working like a vampire have i become thirsting for blood wanting more flesh

shying away from the ordinary hustle and bustle of this world

i wake up when everyone sleeps i sleep when everyone wakes up and soon they will all complain and bury me

alive

because i have refused to learn how i must live with them

and of course, they will not like it, tomorrow morning the rules will be posted in the ref they know i still need a drink, and the cold water is stored in the ref

they are away on a trip, and they will wait as always.......wanting to understand, wishing that i change.... i am still thinking, if i better get lost and be not found forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Because I Love You

i can always pretend
that i welcome changes

that i can change
to suit your mold about what love is

and you take charge of my life and soon
i will let you see that i master change and change shall i

into not loving
you.

do not regret your wish for changes

RIC S. BASTASA
Because I Love You I Have Become Nothing

because i love you
i have always been ready to give up my world
all for you

because i love you
i am willing to conceal myself from the truth

because i love you
i live the way you want me to away from myself

because i love you
i confronted the death of all my senses no promises no resurrection

because i love you
i thrive on compromises i deny myself

there is no I, only you there is always the betrayal of my destiny there are no more shadows just you just you

because i love you
i have become a mist, an imagination of myself i have become nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because I Love You So Much

because i love you
i can make use of a line and in an instant i see you:

beauty inclined reclined

RIC S. BASTASA
Because It Is Not My Body Or Your Body

so, must i come to this conclusion, perhaps it is your soul yes, perhaps it is also my soul unto yours, perhaps you have forgotten all those light years back, perhaps, i too cannot recall exactly, but the feeling is here it is like the North Star to my wings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because It Sings....

there is a man inside the cage but you cannot tell that he is a man
because

by all appearances of it it has black wings, sharp claws, it is muted by a beak
it can only sing in syllables it is wrapped by shiny feathers

it is a bird, a black bird and by all means you cannot tell that it is angry

because it sings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because Life Is A Surge....

and for the thousand
footsteps
i still say i have not begun yet

and for the thousand
words, or a thousand poems, i still say i have not written

for all those loves and heartbreaks, i still keep saying
i have not really loved that much

until the calendar ends the days until the mouth is sealed
until the heart
stops....

for life is a surge
and it keeps surging and surging

RIC S. BASTASA
Because Love Begets Love

you hide the shadow of a man inside your bra

it is not funny your bra bulges like a bone

someone hides a woman's breast inside his pants

tits on his pockets like pebbles on the beach there is something bitchy over there it is laughing

someone wears a heavily tinted sunglasses imagination thinks about someone else hands are traitors too and feet never run away from a confrontation of lusts we know we have secrets and we are comfortable with all these without the need of telling why

we understand
we simply want to survive the heat and the cold

the days that torture us torture as no more

we love these secrets and of course these secrets love us too love begets love in discreet cold and comfortable places of the heart Because Of Me

because of me you begin to write poetry some haikus
and more haikus are coming still from what you have actually seen in the river in the pond
the geese
the leaf sinking

those little things the worms
and cocoons

because of you i also learned how to read poetry long enough for the hours to become so huge and i was scared by its big mouth and long slimy tongue and i stand before it and let myself be swallowed whole

it is dark inside the hours but my heart was like the sun shining brightly
at midnight

because of us we have become complete we have become new breeds now eating poetry
for breakfast
and lunch

and perhaps, on the next coming days dinner too.
Because Of The House, There Was Never A Home because of too much concern for the house that someone other than yourself may live in there and steal away what you are keeping there the furniture and the kettle the glass and the spoon and the fork and the spam and sausages and wheat and bread

because of too much worry for what a house can be so much home has been wrecked so many homes were not even conceived and born because you want a nice and expensive house now you don't even have that dream of a home

RIC S. BASTASA
Because Of What Happens In The Night

because of what happens in the night (a night full of love a night full of passion) you hum at dawnbreak you sing in the morning you dance at noon and you laugh in the afternoon and then with so much happy anticipation
you look forward to the coming night with another ready passion because you love her and she loves you

RIC S. BASTASA
Because One Chooses Optimism

despite the storms that diminished
the fixed numbers of trees annihilated and stars frozen
to the dilated eye
of the sun
one keeps faith about the greatness
of humanity
and still keeps writing
poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
Because She Allowed It She Was Destroyed

one summer she attended a poetry workshop upon invitation of some writers and wannabes like her her name is poetess modest

shy
truthful to every word chosen by her in the poem that she chooses to read before them these writers listening to her after which the chopping begins, the stabbing knife, the slices of her self the sharp teeth biting her to pieces the slapping criticisms of her works her poems her life she was bleeding to death they have no inkling to save her she shrinks like some sundried raisin she shatters like some broken glass she shuts up she runs away and throws all her poems to the trash can

she is ugly she is a witch since then she never wrote again because of them
these writers ahead of her she was the object of their ridicule she was utterly destroyed because she allowed it she had known better

that one should write because one must write not for anybody else but for oneself alone

one need not even win or excel
one only needs to write because you love to write because you must survive this love of your life your poetry, now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because She Loves Him.... he way his hand
pours red wine to her glass is eloquence not yet even spoken

RIC S. BASTASA
Because The Heart Has Always Its Own Reasons only if we can choose what makes us happy

given our own kind of logic
we should have been truly happy

ahh, but this heart has a mind of its own by which our logic sometimes says illogical

ahh, but this heart lives in a world of its own

there is always a compulsion to be there
helpless feathers are we tossed and fallen
on those seasons of our reckoning

ahh, the moments are worth the remembering but how can we speak about it to our friends?

like the way your frown on them so shall they frown on you in that party of silence all of your shall feast

RIC S. BASTASA
Because The Pain Is Still There

one scratches his skin
everyday
even if nothing itches
anymore
as a form of habit
because
the pain is there
and you do not know what to do
about it

not knowing how to solve this one scratches his head after which the hands do not really know where to land
where to go

RIC S. BASTASA
Because The Snake Is Here

i am eating my words i languish in the jail of my ideas no woman comes here for a visit
i am murmuring my sighs to the bars in between the hours i whisper my whimper
to the grasshoppers
on the grass
i look to their feet that jump for skies
i am at a loss of syllables my mouth is dry my hands are trembling
a snake is here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because The World Has Not Given A Chance

when the doctor says that he is a ticking bomb i understand it,

soon he shall explode without him
willingly detonating it it is this neglect of a thinking experience the lackluster of the mirrors of the soul

i do not blame him dying is an option when hope is no more

when this bomb explodes it will be absurd to ask him if he combs his hair or washes his face

what to wear does not matter or what perfume to dampen the skin it is this annihilation this dream of finally becoming nothing because the world does not know how to give what chances are there left for the most ordinary man on the street the underprivileged and the oppressed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because Their World Is Sinking

because their world is sinking they move out to save themselves and finding your world they knock at your door politely,

as you open it
they start doing the traders' talk they want to be your new house cleaners for the meantime
that they do not have a world of their own

you refuse them and then you close the door almost hitting their faces

outside your world a police officer is studying the pages of the penal code wanting to find the provision that may put them all to jail

RIC S. BASTASA
Because There Are Just Too Many Of Them

yes too many makes us too familiar each pebble
no matter how unique and gleaming on the shore against the sun
is of no value
to you

RIC S. BASTASA
Because There Is Really No One There At 11: 30 In The Evening when sleep does not visit you till 11: 30 in the evening you take your time waiting for it as you dabble in poetry here is a friend that understands you and listens to what you are talking in that cautious silence of his metaphors the evening becomes a romance of one soul and one body all contented in the grace and beauty of the gift of thoughts and words

he toasts that imagined glass of wisdom filled with that wine of air and then the laughter that spreads that no one hears

RIC S. BASTASA
Because 'They Look But Don'T See And Hear But Don'T Listen Or Understand.'

ah, same with our situation, we, who want to speak
and hide
what we think is too private like a secret
in the cabinet of neatly folded clothes shall only touch the surface of those things smooth and convenient to our touch we long to reveal it but we know that consequence of segregation
and alienation
so we try to touch on them as lightly and as gently as possible without hurting us, or them
the metaphors come not that easy
as easing the pain of brightness we concede
to hiding
we bury things only to mark them up
for identification marking the sea with a pole the sand with a stone
the air with a butterfly the land with ice.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because This Love Is For All, And Not Exclusive,

i will not let you know that i know that you lied.
i will pretend inorder to save you face.

whatever you ask i give in the name of love.
if it destroys you, i will have no regrets.

you will be responsible for this love.

if at the end you will know the real score that i have not really loved you despite the love that i give away all the time for those who are left out of life and felt that they were never really loved,

because this love is for all, and not exclusive,
like the way God loves both sinners and saints, if at the end you will discover this, this poem of confession, even then, i will not expect that you will change, but if by chance, whatever that be, that you change for good, o my! i will be also one of those who will rejoice!

i will join with all the stars in the heavens, and like firecrackers, all explode into a vast song of this universe all because The prodigal son has returned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because We Are Human.....

last thing,
we did it, not to be praised,

nothing about
a name,

we did it because we are alive

we are here
and what we are doing can be done only here and you remember when you are asked why did you climb that mountain and your answer was,

because it is there

and we too say this ask us why we love and make love?

because we are here
because we are human....

RIC S. BASTASA
Because We Are Part Of These Mysterious States to make you more interesting (not just to myself but more of yourself) i tell you something that you want to know and you listen

and you like it and you begin to smile and feel great about how i speak about you because you are great and somehow you fail to see it and never acknowledge it to yourself before you sleep and at times when you see yourself in front of the mirror and affirm the reason why you are here because you pretend that you do not know it.

you are interesting and you belong with us all here as we are interesting too we feel the exclamations of our beings, we are beyond the colors of the sea and the the land and all that arise from them we rise above them all and we must confirm these phenomena of our being what we must be.

tonight i will ask you some questions and there will be no answers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because We Are The People....

we are the people

we are the multitude of small hands &
minds

we shall see soon how the mighty fall how the powerful rock is crushed to become the sands that we are

we are the people
when the might falls we shall feel how powerful have we been how silly had we been to forget that we the people that power resides in the multitude of our small hands and minds

soon, we shall be the people more feeling the power in our hands the crushing power of our feet the power of our minds

the mighty falls the rocks have turned into sands

RIC S. BASTASA
Because We Have Gone Astray From The Father because we have gone astray from our fathers God has created mothers they are the ways to the hearts of men back to the homes of love and compassion

RIC S. BASTASA
Because We Have Never Told Them

there is a straight path and you want to walk straight to it you cannot, there is this desire to go inside a circle and hide behind those curves, there is this wish to find a resting place a glass cage
a one-way mirror where you see all of them
and then
no one sees you sometimes i look for some reasons why this behavior is sought there is this straight path that nobody wants to take it is too tight in there and everyone sees you and their gaze hurt a lot and you do not deserve to suffer upon their causes no wonder birds travel on clouds and build their nests how men made walls how women hide their faces on hats and winter coats

there is this secret that we keep that we bring even to our death it is this secret that makes us what we are others miss us

because we have never told them
the trees wish to look inside the nests where birds have already flown away

RIC S. BASTASA
Because We Love....

the coming days cannot disturb me with you on my side the hours travels so fast i am short lived.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because We Were Too Careful...

we tiptoed
not to earn their anger and we become ballet dancers
much to their pleasures and we earn
the big clap
those civilized ovation and warm public applause
yet look at us now old fools
never been really happy even for
just once.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Are King

to write well
i suppose
is to take a chair
and sit there
and imagine yourself
floating in the middle of this universe
where you are the Great Creator and then you open your eyes
and begin
what you have never really started
from day one till the end of all the other days
of the rest
of your life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Are King (In Your Poetic Creations)

to write well
i suppose
is to take a chair
and sit there
and imagine yourself
floating in the
middle of this universe
where you are
the Great Creator and
then you open your eyes
and begin
what you have never
really started
from day till the end
of the rest
of your life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Are My Form Of Perfection

BECAUSE you are a form of my own form
so perfect
and divine
and too mundane
for one to touch and keep as a memory

because you are God
myself
and too luscious for my senses
the darkness of my nights forgone
the thorns of my roses all softly taken the guilt of my own humanity forgiven

i shall take you as you are as part of my being as skin to my bone

and this i shall keep forever without regret sans the guilt.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Are Never Mine You Can Never Never Be Mine

i see you in the face of another your body i feel in the body of another

i always remember you
in other places

i smell you in the hair of another

i touch you in the hand
of another

i dare not mention your name not to hurt the other i kiss your lips in the lips of another i lose myself in the mind

of another

because you are never mine you can never never be mine

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Are The Good One

one day you will choose the right path not because you are afraid of the pain of having that error as seen through their eyes of conviction

but because something right will always be right and the right way is not taken because of the perks of goodness
or the offers of approval or that altruistic feeling that finally you have chosen the goodness of humanity

but for the main reason that in this life there is nothing to choose except to be good
and to walk the right path

not because you want it now but because it is.

it is you and you are
from here from the very start till the end

the good one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Are The Star Of The Universe, The Only One

we do not try that hard enough reality has muscles of its own when it sees us tired and rotten it begins to show its hands to take us for a ride its feet pedaling with the wheels of beautiful truths in the gardens of this universe it is then when we become the tourists simply looking and enjoying what reality shows us so relax, do not overwork yourself with some chosen words let the words do the trick they are your slaves not your masters let the chair stand on its own legs move towards you and then you sit as the windows open themselves as the sun finally arrives as the mountains grow the trees and the greenest grass so appeasing to your eyes spectator, the star of the universe the most important mortal the chosen creature Because You Cannot Remember Anymore

i do not wish you to read me
as you read another poem of me
early this morning as it is raining
inside my heart

the rain never stops and the storms have been so strong but i have never wavered like a leaf taken away from a branch

the leaf is gone it rots somewhere else and the branch dies
like any other part of any tree

but we are different we die but our deaths are not the same

after this, nothing stops
us
to go back home again and home is where we are our true selves again

i do not wish you to come with me
there is this inevitability for life beyond what any word can imagine i do not wish you to read me because life itself reads us and then puts us back again into some mystical senses and this is what we have not fully understood and this is my only hope why i keep on writing again and

again

now without you because you have also found what you are

i am happy now because you cannot remember

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Do Not Know How To Say Yes....

do not make a conclusion that you are wrong or that you are inferior you know best who you are, keep thinking, when you were rejected by whose standards?

and under what circumstances?

yes, theirs, and their network of evil influences this company incorporated a root system of cajolery and mediocrity

keep that dignity, do not expect, do not demand, stay what you are, you know best who you are your nights have been days, your craft well honed by sacrifices, you have been an expert listener and talker to yourself you have mastered right from wrong, you have fathomed the code of silence, the ethics of your profession your efforts since when must be rewarded?

ah, you started so young to be disciplined you shy away from shallowness, embraced the loneliness of time burning hair with your candles, whetting what is metallic and glossing over the gold that is found in you you are a true value, an epitome of virtue, the ripe fruit of the grape vine, the moon on the river.

ah, they are mud, and how can they ever like the true pearl the nugget of gold beneath their stinking waters?

now do not blame yourself,
you are the best,
the true winner of this game,
they all have their friends, they are drunk with their lies and power, they had their secret meetings and their talks they have the strings of the marionettes in their hands they are garbage on the cans eye will tell the truth.... you could have won

you are the best,
but you just don't know how to say yes too all of them.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Doubted It

That first day
the house was clean everything was in order the lawn was well manicured like your nails

love was young and its best foot was stepped forward

The rest became part of history

The house fell dirt and dust was all over the yard
the garden was gone
your nails uncut
and you keep on saying it is all because love

is gone
and you are telling it to the wind

and you never let him hear it.

love gets old and it too learns to forget

you doubt it
that is the real reason

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Have Faith In You because you do not understand it completely you let it mesmerize

you,

logic sits upon a rock under a tree then sleeps
so soundly

as imagination spreads its wings and then flaps it soaring in the sky

like the kite when you were once a child like the jet plane when you left your beloved in preference of latitude like a cloud that hovers upon a hill and rests there like a vagabond with no home yet in mind you set aside the need for understanding you are happy and singing and wandering you have no direction yet you are so full like a river bringing so many memories to the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Let Her Go

remember,
both of you were so young, she had natural curls in her hair and you really like playing with them
that summer

you had wavy eyelashes and she loved each wave like the sea when the august winds came some storms coming to your love
some promises broken like the tower of your sandcastles that evening by the sea falling

you were once together, remember now, the wrinkles of your hands claim a long, lost memory once so smooth and supple like the cheeks of a woman like her breasts, remember, remember........

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Love Him

he betrays you
in ways that you cannot notice in modes that you cannot discover in a manner that what you do not know cannot hurt you

on so many pretenses and he knows it
and he wants to change and stop those betrayals
but he is as weak as the first Adam to Eve
and to the Snake and to the Apple he shall always succumb

it is hard to wake up a man who is awake

but because you love him you always understand that a betrayal cannot be that hurting anymore

when he comes back you are there waiting by the stairs and the door and you hug him back with all your open arms

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Never Ceased To Believe…..

sometimes a chair follows you to make you sit

a door opens by itself even without a key it is meant to welcome you sometimes coffee pours on your cup it does it without your asking for sometimes all these are meant to be yours and they all come by without telling believe it or not, the stars shine for you the stairs build themselves a house appears, a path runs, a blanket rolls a window opens, love spreads simply because you never ceased to believe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Never Talk To Me...

all that is left of me will be bones suffering takes the flesh and breaks the nerves the sad times long enough shall mellow these bones into powder decently turning later into a hundred or more dusts then you shall identify with me for dust too is your final destiny everything you are shall be dust too you too shall mellow

now is the best time to talk in the common ground of our final existence but it will be too late the strong wind by then has blown us all away scattered specks
lacking the specifics....

RIC S. BASTASA
Because You Want To Go Fishing....

living in the country of your birth. Fishing.

immigrating to america.
you say, what is the difference?

is joy a folded paper?
is sadness graffiti?

inside the bus bound for Dakota. It is you mind going fishing.

memories are schools of fish.
resembling shaped of a whale.

then you arrive at conclusions.
same roads. same canals. same boats.

same sun. same people. same food. same conversations. You want to go fishing. Back to your country.

Your place of birth. You go fishing.

foul smell of dead fish floating on the polluted river. Then the flood of ideas. Fresh talk from fresh people. You are finally alive and you go on fishing without anybody else. The fish are all yours which you throw away into the sky to watch a kite connecting you to the clouds.

Because Youth Is A Flower

because youth is a flower
that blooms only once one must be kind to use hands which are gentle

a flower is fragile with petals and sepals and stalks not strong enough to withstand the demands of
time

the flower that blooms today tomorrow shall die each moment is crucial each bloom cannot last forever the flowers of my youth if well taken cared of shall proceed with its fruits and its seeds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Because.......I Never Had You....

i am always restless i already had everyone
i am always thirsty and hungry
no place satisfies me no house is ever a home to me

because i never had you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Becoming Just Like Everyone Else

since then
i stopped chasing for a relationship

my beggar story was indeed
regretful and i do not want it
retouched

the whiskey is a bottle of the past
and the beef stew
makes me
vomit
even the smell of it
can kill me

now i stopped chasing
love

it does not mean that i must pursue indifference

there is only one thing i learned an
art
and this is the art of just being myself

just sitting by the lake watching the fish swimming on the shallow water
and letting time go

i am just becoming like everybody else
nothing more
nothing less.

RIC S. BASTASA
Becoming The 'It'

i don't really mind
becoming your 'it'

play with me like i am what you like
with what it is.

rub it tightly.
rub it consistently.
make it hot and strong.
play with me like i am it. it is your desire that matters most. it is the it playing with it.
rub it your time.
lick it. taste it. feel it.
close your eyes and
make love with it.

it is it. just as it is.
you like it. you prefer my being an it. it has no name. it has only taste. it is it. just it.
and after you have done what you want with it. after you are through. leave it.
it is an it. it is not
you. it is just an it.
it cries. it misses you.

it however cannot love you. for how can an it love a you?

it stays with me.
and it is silent now.
it is resting and i
am giving it time.
it is inside me.
and it will always be with me.
you may come again and have it.
i don't really mind.
it has no it is still mine.
and takes my commands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Becuz Of U

i still dream of chrysanthemums and daffodils to bloom on the coming springtime i still dream of tranquil ponds where the lotus sits like dignity
i still dream of birds that sing for me i still dream of blue skies and dancing clouds soft winds, and swans floating like snow melting on the lake i still dream of red roses and blue butterflies hovering on them i still dream because of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bed Time

mother is bed time
as mother
tells a lot of stories
about strange creatures
like elastic man yellow frog girl
robin hood
red riding hood manhood boy with golden hair Rapunzel
gazelle Cinderella and Aladdin
we sleep and mother goes back to her bed with father and the lights
are turned off
and there are so many dreams father, mother
and us
and so many of these dreams
with the unicorns
and the dragons sometimes
and the knights
such that we cannot
anymore
remember

RIC S. BASTASA
Bedazzled

bedazzled
it is love that does it at the height of affections
the beloved appears to be the sun of the universe time sooner tells the truth it is just one of the stars like those that from a distance appear like dust mere atom

a neutron

RIC S. BASTASA
Bedouin Music At Wadi Rum, Jordan

on the sand then the carpet the Bedouins sit

music is strum
from strings
and hands are clapped

a belly dancer named Amira dances in their minds

behind them the camels are resting

the sharp sounds of the winds
cut the song

(oh, it is the sound of army
jets passing sky cutting)

RIC S. BASTASA
Been

the devils were once angels
they've been good once so they know both sides of the coin
the angels have never been there
so they get lost when confronted with hell

RIC S. BASTASA
I've been cheated five times and five times i have to assure myself that nothing's wrong with their cheating
they get what they want and they punish themselves after anyway.
i am not diminished
by their evil deeds
i am not envious of their success.
i close my eyes on the night of my defeat
and chant my mantra:
' i am great. i am good.
i am honest. I am not evil'.
to sound sleep i go.
mornings are great.
sun is brighter.
birds still sing. air so fresh.

I am new and invigorated with what i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bees So Many Bees Looking For Honey...

some words come back and they look like strangers their names become forgotten and they stay there staring at you
who had gone old and unforgiving,

some have become orphans reduced as mere syllables and you as toddler begins to mumble

bees so many bees
looking for honey...

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a big difference before and after the explosion

i am not referring to what destroys buildings and kills a hundred people this has nothing to do with bloody bodies and noisy emergencies and headline reports and with due respect to all that terrorize us and how at the end, we will be met with the same unsolved mysteries, where the trains run as usual to their respective normal destinations, where passengers still line up for more trips, where drinks are served where stories of horror are for the meantime set aside and forgotten

i am referring to our private agonies where our bodies are being pressed by so many warm arms and flaming lips, and secret trysts, before the explosion the ravings are there and reason even if dying is left unattended asking for a glass of water that we hesitate to give all those inside want to hear that explosion and see what happens in those deep-seated longings like almond eyes without sleep for many wars of the nights and the explosion happens the palace where you live becomes a place of ruins the princess turns into a grasshopper and you look for wipers of your car windows and then people think that you are sick very very sick, because your are listless and in every corner of the room you puke.

RIC S. BASTASA
Before Christmas Day

you ask someone to be with you you make a call on that busy and lighted street despite the traffic and the honking sounds and the people walking fast you feel so alone

no one is available
and you understand
you have no choice but to dance loneliness away you cross the street not minding whether you will be hit by one of those sane cars and the finger of the driver gives you the f sign and then you smile in return it is a happy world you have there and they begin to think too otherwise

RIC S. BASTASA
Before Going Home

before going home
(it is already nine o'clock in the evening) from the university
i call you that i will fetch you since there is a fire raging some houses along the road where you will pass and i am driving this white car still thinking about what will happen to you when you will be left alone
tonight
due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

due to some petty quarrels
which we indulge sometimes unnecessarily
i invite you for some late dinners
in some interior restaurant
catering only to the some
exclusive few
(perhaps those who are lost
in the labyrinths of a complicated
relationship, just like us)
and you say yes
and you order spaghetti while i shall have
a burger and we both agree
we shall take the
canned Coca-cola
without much talk
i hold your hand while waiting for the waitress
to bring the food.
you smile and i know
we're still all right

RIC S. BASTASA
Before I Met You

Before I met you I had laughter A sane one, the laughter that you hear In the usual cafes, in the market,

Then I asked for your name, we gazed You showed you like my gaze, you liked The way I talk, and I could sense it the Way you gaze, the way you talked to me,

Like we have become two mirrors looking At each other, like we have become two Hands complimenting each other’s hold,

Like we have become two lips nearing For the kiss to seal our emptiness, but Then I close my eyes and see that it is not you, and it is not me, in that Moment, we see two strangers scared,

Two strangers scared in the darkness Where we hid our two equal emotions, We both remember the freshness of Two mirror wounds and we compromise,

We are not; we are not really ready for this.

I get back to my laughter, the one before I met you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Before I Sleep Tonight

i have written many poems and you have been reading perhaps all of them and you even remember what i have written and left there, i always tell you i am busy, for i am, doing anything, reading and writing each poem, each feeling, but before i sleep tonight, as i will write this as my last poem, let me tell you given the choice between poetry and you, you know too well, that i will choose you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Before I Slip....

forgive this one my dear

i know it
fails your expectations

you love details and color and scent

you love all the particulars of the human moment

each hour, even each second counts

a snap is needed
the sound of the clicking of the knob
and the ticking of the clock inside that vacuole room

but i honestly admit
i am busy
and busier than ever
i say what i want to say and i write what is in my mind this very moment

i have set aside details
perhaps tomorrow or on a sunday
when my feet are rested upon the waves of the sea when my mind hangs like a baby on a cradle or a depressed woman upon a hammock

waiting for another session with Sigmund.

i got to go
i have promises to keep and miles to go before i slip.

RIC S. BASTASA
Before I Write These Lines

before i write these lines it will take me perhaps perchance ten years more to realize that the words are worthy to be written

the pain finally soothing when we finally said goodbye

when we realize that goodbyes seasoned by the spices of time that after all the bitter herb too gives a nice taste to the buds

so that when we meet again we smile
we remember those tears we thought salty now, we say though silently how funny
how misplaced sentimentally

RIC S. BASTASA
Before She Dies...

even if she does not ask for it
before she dies
i hold her hand and gently press it against mine and i whisper to the silence of my own pond
go, for i have since then forgiven you

do not say any word
you are too tired to ask for what had long been hidden

RIC S. BASTASA
Before You Go Away

before you go away
please return
everything that i have given you.

return my kisses
my hugs and embraces return my blanket
the warmth
i have shared with you when you were so cold
on that damp room. Please return them immediately

before you go away
please account
all the moments
i have given you

and if you are finished all these undoing
you may go

rest assured
i am whole again
and love another one
much better than
you: ingrate!

RIC S. BASTASA
Befriending Despair

i will talk to despair since he is my friend everything will be trivial nothing serious

about some possible solutions or explanations
about a tragedy
or death or suffering and despair will talk to me like i am his friend too closer, closer,

that is what i want
despair
to do for me,
and i will ask him
to write for me
a story

specifically, more about a fantasy, nothing serious

we will not be talking about family troubles
squabble over lost fortunes black sheep
the prodigal son
the molested girl
the wife who serves as punching bag for the drunkard hopeless hubby

i would prefer something about travel and cuisine
or even money and women or honor or awards or achievements

something that strikes the lull of my taste-buds the aha experience those first times honeymoon, or victory balls Christmas parties mama's reconciliation with papa first born,
that earthly communion

we will not talk about pain or separation or broken homes or failing to make it in life those horrible failures that inability to rise up from a fall

and i will not mention how in those years, he has hurt me so
badly
like i were not human
anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Befriending Our Wounds...

the wounds of the soul
are our friends these pains of being human how can this body negate what it really is?

our friends have never for once been ugly
we are our friends too beautiful and enduring show them the right paths beyond grieving phantoms from our humble beginnings
the purity of parities those flaming flumes levitating

RIC S. BASTASA
Beggars Of Love

i am the king
in my small kingdom
i keep dignity
intact in my heart

at night i have become a beggar of love
and so i kneel before you asking for it

it is the dark that conceals me my crown and scepter beneath your feet

i am at your command and i follow every word so blindly

it is because of love and love makes us all slaves to the pleasures that it gives

i swallow every pride there is because i cannot unlearn this love for you

but it will not be forever there will be no slaves forever i shall soon awaken from this sleep and be myself again

to wear my crown and hold my scepter and walk again with dignity as my own king in my small kingdom

i shall keep my name but how lonely can it be less the joys and pleasures less the honesty and ecstasy less myself,

devoid of everything that shall make my kingdom in shambles into the triumph of the shameless and the beasts....

RIC S. BASTASA
Begging For Affection

People will hate me if i go from one door to another begging for affection they will ask, ' does he have a mother? ' i did have a mother. 'Where is his father? ' same answer. ' Does he have a wife? ' that is the hard question now, because the answer is 'yes' but it will be a long story, and many will be asking more questions from me when what i need is only a little rest and a variation of my life by looking at the door of their houses and then after a few minutes i move away like a cat and never like a rat that takes away some of their trash.
and so i learned my lesson now i dislike other people houses' doors keep my own soft feet and just take my leisure at the park where people like my sensitivity simply move away and never stay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Begging The Question

to get a clearance from the ombudsman you get the clearance first from the NBI

(go to the NBI)

to get a clearance from the NBI you need to get first the clearance from the Ombudsman oh common!

which comes first the chicken or the egg?

RIC S. BASTASA
Behind Me The High Mountains Beyond Me The Blue Seas....

at dawn
i pass by your house
i know that you are in there your room is lighted by the window glass

i know i am still welcome
but i have already made a decision

i will just pass by for i have some other plans for the goodness of my own life

last night
i have already weighed the possible consequences

my new home is uphill behind me the high mountains beyond me
the blue seas....

RIC S. BASTASA
no friend betrays me because they all love me be it at the front
or behind my back they all are enchanted by my charm and they like my hugs so warm the one that rushes blood to their hearts despite their heavy work and tight schedules far from me

in other states and the edges of the world they still have time to say hello and tell me
they miss me

i am full of joy receiving and mutualizing what they are giving me with such abundance of the heart our mouths speak
nothing but love
and friendship

our hearts leaping with joy our hands raised in praise for friendships true like flowers blooming in the early coming
of spring

long sunny summers cool breeze banana boats and surfing boards
to the sea of life with so much to offer

what a life!
what a joy!
come! let me touch
your trembling hands
let your kind soul
taste the chinese soup in our bowl

RIC S. BASTASA
Behind The Scenes...

imagine when the curtains fall
and when the lights turn off
imagine how tears fall
despite
the applause
imagine
how the earth itself becoming an empty space
the mind
a desert and the body a sprinkle
of sands
the lips as cold as dawn
chalice

RIC S. BASTASA
for as long as there is still a sigh left there is always that possibility for the scream or if you don't you shall choose the silence of the seed

another night
of waiting and soon you will see the tendrils of light sprouting it is a new day, it is the promise of be-ing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Being A Poet

being a poet
is not an ambition

it is ironic
that i do poetry and

yet i do not want to be called a poet

nor be identified with any movement in poetry

nor take the challenge and opportunity of being crowned by laurel leaves and be dragged on the stage of an island of light focusing my head and body and they shall all clap and say this is the poet, this is our poet not in the figment of my imagination not an ambition not a profession not a career in the field of literature to be a poet on a certain degree you see, i live in a crowded universe i am a fish in the sea of people and i, never imagine once in my whole life that i will be swimming so meaninglessly in the corridors of this vast ocean of men and mice and snakes and goats and pigs and eagles poetry is what i do but i am not a poet this poet, that poet their poet

the reason is here inside my heart this is my place &
this is my only chance to be alone to be myself to be human again for out there i, we, you have become pillars and walls and continental shelves it is only here in this spot that i become my island

RIC S. BASTASA
Being Alone

being alone is routinary nothing unusual to a man like me it is like taking the bus every morning from home to the office then back and forth everyday everyday

it becomes a lifestyle and when one gets used to it you fear nothing anymore even death, you know it, when you die, you don't die with them alone, alone you die, no one else dies for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am nothing
so i must make something out of my being nothing
this sense
must make an essence

this watch must tell time
otherwise
it is not a clock at all this poet

must write the poems to be this poet

to become one must make out his essence
for from nothing in the actual doing is this something

i am
not because i am for now the way you see and touch me i am because i am becoming i am because i am being i die, what am i?

a mist
see, i am not even the air i am not even what you think you see now, i am nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Being Co-Equal

being co-equal
you are in no position to tell me who i am
and what i am supposed to do what i must speak and what i must think

do not shame me with your interference
you think that i have not done enough and have not lived to the shape and mold of your expectations

i am silent as paper give me the pen
and i will tell you

i make the difference and you shamed me too for you speak in the tongue of so much noise
i scream in the silence of my written words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Being Left Out

we arrive here together when the moon was full

for what reason i am left out i am alone and you who are all my friends like sparrows

flew away from me
together

i am like a tree without leaves and the rocks from the cliff stare at me in silence

the rivers have their tryst with the sea the clouds in reunion with the wind all in their ecstasies
bursting

the fire of sunset amazes me i want to go near and be burned there is something lovely in that red and orange blaze soon the black bird comes and hovers on the land that i walk soon the silence of the stars shall shoo away the madness of my heart i may cry and be like the rain and flood all the paths that you have left me i may topple some bridges and witness the fading colors of the rainbow the dissolving mist of the mountains these are the utilities of futility someone has cried and no one listens i have a dream for many nights now i have become the moon owning my own light i speak to my heart and my ears listen i shine my own light and i am now silent with a hundred stars eyou all left me and now i must thrive

RIC S. BASTASA
Being Lost In Cloudy Skies

it is the longing denied that these eyes inflict pain upon its macular
hole

it is this darkness
that is missing light

it is this denial that presses truth to the edge banging its head against
the unprecedented
wall

the thoughts
fly upon its big black wings

beak pointing to a landscape
in that dream

clouds hang fold upon layers and layers blurring
the vision of your destination

it cannot go back
it has no option but to move and fly some more

it cannot fall
its feet cut by the sharp edges of the winds it finally becomes an illusion
dissolving in flight

RIC S. BASTASA
we were lost
thinking it was the way that shall take us home
we are in the middle of nowhere
the trees are towering the songs of birds unknown on the other side are all ferns and on the barks of trees, orchids
we were lost
upon a dead end but the place was so beautiful and indeed we never think of home we will stay here
she says.

RIC S. BASTASA
Of course no one wants to be a fake A copycat
Not that one has no mind of his own A perspective
Or a way of seeing things the way one sees Oneself
Or the other or the world out there The eyes have long seen The ears have long heard Something different something delicate When so young and so innocent He kept telling them about the sound And image of what he is They laughed
It is something peculiar Not the way they were brought up
All of them

He is original. They laughed. They branded Him a name he never liked.

He likes himself. But he cannot fit in.
There is so much pain.
He becomes an attractive copycat.
Nice name. Nice belonging.
Perfect camaraderie. Nothing seemingly wrong.

The pain gets deeper. Like a hole inside his head A hollowness in his heart.

It is dark. It is late now.
They love him. But he wants to die.
They are wrong. It is not the dark that blinds.
It is too much light. Too many.

RIC S. BASTASA
Being Scattered And So Complete.

everything did not matter to me at the end what end was that the stranger asks?

I did not bother I have nothing to be bothered about one eyed-unicorn clouds had no legs ever once paradise is just a state of the mind of the survivor

it is when we are alone when we sing the most when we whistle without ceasing

it is when the windows are closed when a home becomes more comfortable

what was obvious had been with us but we never saw it what was important had been roaming in the backyard which the dogs played with now, what have I really felt?

being scattered and so complete.

RIC S. BASTASA
Being Undecided

when one is really undecided (about what i need not tell you i guess you experience this matter of indecision somehow as shallow us what flavor of ice cream to choose from that glass casing of frozen items; . but hopefully you must realize there are other matters deeper than vanilla or chocolate)

one becomes a floater in the eye
you see black birds where there are none flying just below your eyelids

when you continue being undecided
for years
what happens is that the years bury you
the days stages a funeral march
for you
imaginary since in reality there are no people and there are no flowers and the dirge cannot really be heard by the priest that stands there like a scapegoat
to your trembling hands

poor guy! they tell you at your back
and you know this but what can you really do precisely,

you are still
that silly undecided lazy
bone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Being Used To Travel

being used to travel
one gets used to being dissipated another arrival

another departure

in such a short time with such a moment with someone another someone another temporary feeling

not even love not even another feeling anymore another travel asking: where am i going to?

being used to being used to dreams that never come true now on another train to another bus

on another plane

each question begs for an answer but for now

there is just this blankness this bluntness

no conversations with another passenger just like myself
asking: where am i going to?

now, i don't ask anymore.
Being With All Of You

to be honest
being with all of you
is like a rock protruding
in the middle of the rage
of this strong
river

you are the rock and i am the rage of that strong river moving away
from you

RIC S. BASTASA
Being, Just Being...Less The Extraordinary to be still in consistency

smooth
with direction
unchanged
to still be in the usual
state
not making surprises amaze not but be with all of you in uniformity
as i keep the other chunks
of golden thoughts
only
within myself... to still live
despite
to still mingle respite
not to shine
but just be that ordinary grain
among the sands....

RIC S. BASTASA
Be-Ing....

it is a blackout
in the city
there is no air in the condominium
room where you are renting depressed
over lots of things
losing a job
death of a sister
pile of debts collection agents on the row
bad news from your small town
the rebels are killing the farmers and there will be no rice harvest
this season
you lie in bed your eyes do not close
you look for an opening
somewhere else
there must be sort of an exit that your fingers can find

someday

the lights turn on the room is well lighted now there are no
exits for this fire
and it is consuming
every part of your body your being
stops.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beleaguered.....

as you open the door
beleaguered

i reflect upon the sound of the banging

when you close it

somehow i must be in the wrong place

but unlike you

i am not doing anything.

RIC S. BASTASA
Belief Of Self As Once The Sun...

that you were once a star or even the sun
you must believe all these as part of your unique history for it you don't what shall you become without it?
a void, an everlasting darkness an emptiness that never fills itself a traveler that keeps on hurting his chest
unable to arrive at any destination....

RIC S. BASTASA
Believe First In Yourself Baby

believe in yourself first baby and everyone will soon follow they will believe you because you believe in yourself and you will lead them to the belief of other selves and all of you will start believing another soul becomes a king another soul becomes a queen and soon you shall have a kingdom of believers: strong men and women,

without an oppressor
without a tyrant and soon we all become ourselves planets within our orbits a galaxy moving alone lights shining, stars and more stars who is afraid of a black space who is afraid of a black hole who is afraid of this mouth of boredom and loneliness?

no one, no one, because we believers in ourselves foremost, like to eat them.

and there fromt this earth

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
the stargazers see us:
shining stars, venus, jupiter and mars look how they shine!

RIC S. BASTASA
Believe In Yourself

this is not intended to be a poem.
this is an advice,
believe in yourself.
do not listen to me.
listen to yourself.
do not follow me.
nor can you follow you.
take your steps
very cautiously, this is a hill, a steep one, there are no grasses here to serve as hold.
no trees.
there are no directions where to go.
all eyes aim at the top of this hill. what you see are all backs of people they are ahead of you.
be blind now.
look at your hands.
see the map there.
close your eyes.
you see better now.

this is not intended to be a poem.
but an advice.
it is in times of darkness that we see too well. it is in times when we close our eyes that we see better with our hearts. Speak not through your mouth.

Understand not through your thoughts.

Be still for a while. Stop.
Then go again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Believe Me

believe me candice
i did not sleep last night your sleeplessness
my mess
your fear my fright
i have taken all the sides of my bed made the lights dimmer
the room colder
the blankets thicker i counted the sheep and dreamt of marshmallows

did you also think
of me?

let there be silence between the lines
that talk much

RIC S. BASTASA
Believe, Doubt Are They Really Friends?

when you ignore the mystery
will it be soon gone?

in a way when you
cease to believe in fairies
he says
they will all be dead

when you immerse with too much reality will reality be more real?

when you engage in too much thinking
will you be more of human
more human than any human?

ignore, imagine believe, doubt
are they really friends?

RIC S. BASTASA
Believing

start with the basic belief in yourself
that no matter how hard things are you can always do it and get the taste of success

soon you realize
despite
every fall and wound and painful things have been there is still
this comfort of how we look at things we give meaning and how we put color to what is there
and sense its smell
we get the picture of who we are
and what we have become

what is important
is we still have ourselves as walls houses and beds
and windows
opening
towards this galaxy of meanings
the confidence within is indestructible
feel it
today, tomorrow,
forever

be constant as your soul
is intact unbroken spirit unwavering to the destiny reserved for us
there

RIC S. BASTASA
Believing And Believing

it is that which you believe that all things begin to exist and flourish
and become a part of your life, it is the mind that makes you real it is not the touch that the mind utterly rejects it is the word that first comes and then the flesh...

RIC S. BASTASA
Believing Bukowski

amazing bukowski
death
buried,
i give up reading
him
and his poetry something in him
tells me
that i am better than him
not that i write so well but he says
if i were to be better than him or anybody else
there is only one thing that i must do

be myself
and believe in
myself

great bukowski
you are original
idol.

RIC S. BASTASA
Believing In Yourself

to start with let me tell you right at this moment you must learn to believe in the powers vested by the gods to yourself

the movement of your fingers upon the command of your mind cannot just be underestimated as something that everyone does anyway

it will take a lot of scientific minds to really explain how a nerve impulse is sent from your brain to your fingertips
how you react to a pinch or a simple smile from your lover you move to the manner in eating a chunk of chocolate how does your mouth water? the imagination itself is so powerful you thirst for something sweet and like to melt this chunk of chocolate inside your mouth

your tongue plays a tune of a sweet sonata

do not underestimate the power of admiration and remembering
do not disregard the power of your heart when it starts to love and wanting to be loved in return how it jumps in joy like a child how it feels the pain and how it wants to redeem itself when unrequited you have these powers these wonders

believe in yourself
you are part of this magical universe the bursting of creation the marvels of magical incantation

believe in yourself
you are a god/goddess undiscovered all these years by yourself

your eyes not seeing your heart so unfeeling

RIC S. BASTASA
Belittled

no one treats you like you do
like the way
you treat yourself
so you shall be treated
the way you want to be treated

if belittled it is because you have belittled yourself

as Eleonore
once said no one makes you inferior
without your consent

belittled
because you
belittle yourself
you feel
just the way you deserve it

try standing up with dignity
try integrity
and honesty and a clean
life free from the stains
of corruption
and pornography
exploitation
and oppression

free from the dictates of caprice
and evil
and guilt
and whims

hold on to a clean life

something
that you can start with & be proud of

and then we shall follow

we shall return
what you have given, my friend

and then we shall say
we are proud of you
and then
you will hear how our hands
also know how to applaud
those who dignify
themselves

RIC S. BASTASA
Beloved Poet....

beloved poet
keep writing till the end.

i like it when you
shut up.

for we are better
being read, or even if not we are still better
even if not, for now,
perhaps later,

no matter what you call it, poet or not,
it matters not, for the mind is crazy, for the fly is trapped,

for the cave is closed, though the sea
is overcrowded with its vastness which is still not eternity
its waves keep confusing
lost in the rolling and rolling and the licking and licking
on the white thighs of the shores

beloved poet
write, write and keep on writing, if you cannot sing, sing, sing, if you cannot dance, dance, dance,

without the other
keep doing still, under the moon

if not, under the darkness, der under the light

whatever pleases you
pleases me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beloved, You Must Do As I Have Told You

i can no longer give it to you because i have given it to
no one,
nothing receives it
and if falls in nowhere.

i have nothing more to give
you
and now the power of your understanding shall be tested if you must still take me as your beloved

i am nothing now, the wind is more with flesh and the water is warmer than my skin

i am a stone and the rivers deny me
i am this part of your universe where the sun
cannot shine anymore

the only way that you can make me live is release me from your cares.

i am nobody now and
you
even if you utter my name like a possession
like a jewel
i do not dare any glow
i am rust amidst the salt of the sea.

do not deny me this freedom of the winged curse,
i am no longer the fire in the cold not even a grass for the grave.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ben Siemsin, The Burning Flame

let me be the moth hovering around your burning flame let me have this happy death while you are still burning.....

do not ask
for the reason why

RIC S. BASTASA
Beneath All Else...

beneath my feet
i hide my shadows and they escape like
fugitives
under the guises
of their sad stories

beneath my hands
i clasp my emptiness and shaped like a ball you mistake it for fullness

you are confused
and i look amazed
still unfazed by your feigned confidences

beneath my hair
i hide my thoughts
beneath my skull
i hide my soul

beneath my beliefs
i hide a number of faces beneath my heart
i tell love stories

beneath all these are the shallowness of them all something that nobody expects for i am simple as a yellow paper where you list
your bad debts

RIC S. BASTASA
Beneath The Lush Of The Nipa Palms

beneath the lush of the nipa palms
are the homes of crabs beside is the river the niche for the schools of fish and on the river banks are glossy pebbles some silent greens
of moss and ferns, amidst all these beauteous secrets perhaps we shall remember how sweetly once we spent the passionate night together...

RIC S. BASTASA
beneath the lush of the nipa palms
are the homes of crabs beside is
the river the niche for the schools of
fish and on the river banks are
glossy pebbles some silent greens
of moss and ferns,
amidst all these beauteous secrets
perhaps we shall remember
how sweetly once we spent the
passionate night together...

please, please, take time to remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
Berde Nga Baroto

kon makita ko na gani
ang berde nga baroto nga tugsoy kaayo ang tumoy morag ilong sa amerkano

kon makita ko na gani
ang iyang mga katig
morag duha ka mga kamot nga andam nang mohawid ug mosubay sa dughan
sa akong dagat

mahinumduman ko dayon ikaw ug ang akong mabatian ang imong mga hunghong ug igo na lang mopahiyom nga mag-inusara

gigkanon lang gyod tingali ko kon berde na nga sakayan ang atong hisgotan

RIC S. BASTASA
Bergius

i think Bergius knows life more than we do
i think
he knows sorrow
much better than
we used to think we know the way he holds his cigar
between his fingers
the way he stares aimlessly
at

i do not really know where his thoughts are where his gaze is going where his heart is all i know is that he is with us in this

in the misery of our lives in this coldness of our times in this recollection of the pieces of our shattered little existences
we, the nobodies,
we, the uncertainties
we, the roots of truth and the budding lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beside And Outside The Frame Of The Window

When we look out into the window we keep the frame and what we have in mind is what is inside the frame alone not knowing that beside the window is another creature could be lizard or a fly which rests there because of too much tiredness looking for it thinks can satisfy its wants or longings for the day

we forget what is outside the frame what loneliness it has too what hope, what doubt, what ever that disturbs
outside the window frame outside us all

RIC S. BASTASA
Beside Me

an old american wearing sleepers.

white sands clinging still on his feet.

beside him
her filipina. the brown girl black hair. orange sarong wrapping her body

she needs yahoo.
he says, what are you looking for?

i do not really think that she is literate. but i can sense she is trying to be just like anybody else.

he thinks she is beautiful and cheap.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beside Restful Waters He Leads Me;

He is my Shepherd and i am his sheep

there is nothing
that i shall fear

and it shall begin today, i recommite

myself to Him
and i shall never be lost again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beside The Vast Sky Upon An Early Flight Back Home

the tantrums are there guitar strings of anxiousness again strum struts along all the corners of the sky
ways

inside the plane a pair of eyes looks stupid to the drifting clouds flying without wings

vast fields of weightlessness nests of all the emptiness of the world beside this sky
again must i lie?

RIC S. BASTASA
beside you

i am silent beside you i guess i have nothing worth saying now i have become a non-thinker and poetry has not done any good at all to another round of our confrontation of the emptiness beyond us.

soon perhaps i am ready to scream but i will not be with you anymore i have long decided to be just a stone that you throw into the night dissolving like an ordinary sigh in the dusk

ric s. bastasa
Best Buy, Good Sale, Fine, Sell ok, you got the best buy in the history of sales got this contract with lesser obligations but more returns

maximized at most for your benefit

though, it's scratched with what?
with some hidden defects

got the best buy today
cheap
tomorrow i will have a good sale of course, more expensive for my gain & profit

that's how capitalism works a third country having the best buy from the rich country and sells the same to its people at a higher cost of their freedom and other liberties

ok, fine, if everything is at its highest sell
what you bought at the cheapest this is the law and this will always be the law when cheap buy

when high, sell

boils down to....

what do i get? yes, profit.
Best Friend....

they do not really stay like change, they flow, there is always an influx for a time, and then slowly, the contents are emptied like a mall that closes at ten p.m.
and you are the last to take the exit because you have no one to be with and the one that waits you there is only your rented room having the same scent of an abandoned
rug.

as i once told you
the only best friend we can have the one that will always be with us through and through without knowing the word fade
is you
not even us, not even them.

so feel at home
hold your left hand with your right talk to yourself and do not ever be a stranger again you know your name and your favorite things and places and food
and memories

keep calm. this quiet is all yours savor.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bestial Affection....

my favorite dog named pretty is sleeping beside the soles of my feet letting me
feel
its warmth reminding
me
that there is such thing as bestial affection

RIC S. BASTASA
Betelnut Chewing

got a hot leaf inside my mouth i chew it with lime and betel nut i feel it well, hot and chilly heaven to my earth and then i spit it out, red and spicy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beth

what i cannot forget about her was her plagiarism,

and my stupidity for putting her article at the front page

i was 25 that time she was 28.

it is good that she became a doctor.

it is bad i became a lawyer.

RIC S. BASTASA
Betrayal Of A Friend

the woman whom you thought was a friend whom you
confessed
your gripes and the sins of the world
committed upon you
finally faces you
with the face of an angry tiger
roared at you
driving you away because if you don't she's ready to devour you

back to square one:
alone again
naturally

RIC S. BASTASA
Betrayals In The Name Of Love...

betrayal is a ballet
dance
always the best tiptoe and the twist and twirl excites till
the end of the discreet show

a dance behind curtains without the use of words the music within plays well between the meeting ribs of two blossoming souls

do not get caught let the ecstasy always be the spark of this handful of suspense

the thrill of stolen moments without the common drill strategies and ruses like spies and spice

i get you and you get me we have something in common we cannot kiss and tell.

RIC S. BASTASA
Better Half

to Philander
it is not a case of a better half since he is engaged in about ten events of his philandering life it is only one-tenth of the story

but he's not the kiss and tell type

his life is a closed book still unread.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between A Party And Poetry

if made to choose between a party and my poetry i choose poetry

i choose silence rather than noise i choose words rather than people above all
i choose myself rather than those goddems

RIC S. BASTASA
between sunrise and sunset if i were to choose i shall choose the sunrise for in there everything is lighted like the way you tell me about the truths about your life you're so warm and endearing and all giving and i have nothing more to ask for i have become so complete but then do we have a choice?

for after all these time knows that there is something inevitable

the sunset of my life comes always with a big reminder
the slow fading of the brighter colors of my life the creeping show of gray skies the closing in of the lights and the windows
the silence of the night and i make the last word what choice do i have except perhaps to say 'Darkness, Come, let us dance the last steps of life! ' and i shall say ' Death, you're so cool! ' do i have a choice, my love?

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Good And Evil...

you have nothing
to tell me, i have not set you aside,
being half of me,
my other, i am not unjust, how can i deny you? you are another face of me,
though i could have detested you, i did not. Respect is still have put me in danger,
there were times
you put me to shame,
more often
on some uncompromising situations, but i still keep you within,
could be a curse,
and i know the consequences of having to discard
you, half of me shall be dead.

the Furies are silent.
gazing at us. Night and day are in my body. Spring and winter. I both feel this wolf and sheep. I guess
it is all our nature.
This battle within.
Between good and evil. These two are residents of the same house.
Fragile. Temporary.
we are not referees.
we are the players.

night is yours.
the day shall be long.
you fight. I will compromise.
Let dawn be mine.
Let the last word
be yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Grief And Nothing, I Will Take Nothing in this small space in this narrow alley in this room where there is only you and me, where you love and hate me i take this smoke, this last breath as you leave, telling me it is over there is no us you challenge on this pain that i am not prepared to accept between you and nothing between this grief and your leaving

it is over,
i will take nothing

we have nothing to begin with anyway, i will take nothing there was never something there was never you and i am telling you there was no me too....wanna play?

i know your games too.

RIC S. BASTASA
between heaven and earth there charlie lives and he writes about a tunnel a very creepy tunnel where the only way to travel is to crawl your way to the exit where are the end a light appears....

enlightenment and awareness that is what charlie means.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between James And Kris

and so it's over i too expected that between a kris
and a james...

no one survives
the crash

but i think everyone is happy

whatever that means
for in truth
a man is gentle enough for the woman to always hear her last words 'it's over' and did it ever come to her mind that he likes it, too?

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Mararison And Binatbatan

we were in the middle of the sea
just the two of us

we realize how huge is this world
how empty it is there is no boundary

for our sadness.....

RIC S. BASTASA
i hang my feet
upon a Brazilian hammock

between them
i watch the sun set

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Our Own Realities

between our realities are the waters of privacy and for one who does not flow like what others do the ripples of misunderstanding begin to behave as whirlpools in our minds

the banks of the rivers are far and we who desire the harmony of the clouds and their mirrors begin to build the bridges of words and symbols

between us now is this poem and if you have been with me upon the graces of time and the courtesy of space there could have been more to this poem, and to those words because between the emptiness of air, something like a beating heart a warm hug could have done better.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Pain And Happiness.... here is always that pain that instigates you to write the one where there is no cure although many are telling that you have become one impossible piss off,
you leave the place,
take a boat and settle in an island where you can talk to the moon you do not sleep
because you can't and the moon is one avid listener of your woes it does not talk of course and then faces away like a hand that caresses your hair and then you feel that faithful warmth that makes you write some more on the muddy part of the shore tomorrow you find yourself asleep on a house without doors the winds who understand you perfectly are there to massage the pain of your thoughts at noon happiness comes you do not know its name and from where it comes from it waits for your commands but you are silent you have learned to love pain because it is more beautiful than the one that comes so seldom to visit and listen

to you

in fact it has no body it has no soul
it is not wearing a sign that it is real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between The Cebu-Bacolod Skyways

i like the window
this is where i usually sit on my plane rides upon the mountains below the clouds are sleeping as they move like fish
they say sleep and yet flow with the movement of the waves
and then
discover
as one wakes up that this is no longer the same place but another set of mountains fencing a new city
your destination
at night when you arrive there as the plane makes its touchdown
you want to find another feeling like you are another driftwood transported anew
to another bank of the river the feeling is like an old ancestral house you remember

the past like all those clouds that you pass by in different shapes back-grounded by a shift of orange and yellow lights until something clears them out blinded or you become a blank piece of paper
searching for new words, and yet, and this is sad, it is the same
nothing's changed
what you want not to meet anymore is there
waiting for you
and you forge a smile yet no matter what it is as raw as meat with blood still dripping on the side
time does not subside the pain
there is no automatic cure even your escape to other places of your mind
your heart will always tell the truth to you
in fact....

RIC S. BASTASA
i offer you some words like three white carnations on the table of our existence between us is this distance a sea of silence and you look at me and begin to speak what i see are but waves arriving to my shore some hushes of the wind that i hear some foams of the water there is this drift this lull this sleep that does not want to wake up above us are the gray clouds soon, soon, we shall hear the dragging footsteps of the rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between This Body And This Soul

my body thirsts for water my soul thirsts for another my soul immersed my soul entwined my body grows my soul static as a thought i shift from one channel to another body to soul, soul to body, the body's nature to sin the soul's quest to heaven

God is in between.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Those Spoken And Unspoken

between those unspoken and those unspoken lies this space of my my poetry speak.
it is gentle.

the unspoken hides and shies away a little bit like a child

his heart is always pure.
and he does not speak.
he simply comes near you and holds your hands looks at you and smiles.

words do not help him.
purity speaks without them.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Two Moons

dusk

between two moons
fingers of twilight

early morning
plant a kiss on the lips

coffee and conversation

we look at the same
love
for the sea

hands on your breasts nipples of pleasures

openness
horizons without end

RIC S. BASTASA
between us is this chasm of silence we are like a river and i am on the other side of its banks at the middle is this haze of the fog and the transparency of twilight between us is the thread of a word a line of syllables that must connect us to connect our loneliness you on the other side has only to utter the words but you cannot do it neither I, and so we have become the widest sea without a shore. Now we are faraway islands.

RIC S. BASTASA
between us
we must accept an odd-shaped space
some irregularly shaped
walls
blocks of imperfections inverted tables and chairs
broken pieces of china a black-out of lamps
a feeling of rough hands
between us
let us hold all these forms of realities we start from there so we can survive
this slow
series of deaths cries that soon shall fade like a beautiful sunset....

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Us Is The Uncertainty Of It All.

it is what is not said that creates the ripple

the ripple is the invisible thug

the thug is the fermented thought

at the end of the line is us

me at the right you at the left

between us is the uncertainty of it all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Us Is This Mystery

when our two bodies fuse giving off
so much energy that we can ever imagine

in the spark of my mind when i close my eyes lies this chasm

i fall in there and till date
even as i open my eyes and leave you with my fingers i still feel no bottom

i am a leaf with nowhere to land
there is no surface of the water there is no sand
at the bottom

the bubbles keep mesmerizing the mind lost in ecstasy unimagined before the first touch of your nipple to my upper lip.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Us Is This Ocean Of Fear

you are there,
i feel you, unknown,

i am faraway from you,
the distance is a number.

you zero upon me
i, who, speak to the wall between us are oceans of fears we are whales

making the sound of a song saying: we are not alone our voices blend

upon a horrible silence

we wait when the silence blooms

when it perfects itself upon a tomb.

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Us Under The Moonlit Skies

we are surrounded by the symbolism of our concealed thoughts
between us
are not just ideas we think that every touch is real but we continue believing that there is more to all these a kiss
an imaginary mating a darkness and a light inter-playing between the void of interstitial spaces our lips seal each other we think we are one we fuse
we groan and moan and drown where there is no river or sea
we rise up where there is no depth we talk where there are no words as options for our understanding and penetration attempts at our beings we finally take what rest we left
on the grass
where the last dew still cling on that leaf
where the veins begin to fade
our faces scream
we see without our eyes and we feel without our skins we think we know what is all these but how can we ever tell them? they who do not know what is going on when two people are prohibited to love.

RIC S. BASTASA
between us
is something that we think is impenetrable
or impossible
but there is nothing that we know unless we try

close your eyes
and i shall kiss you open your mouth
and i shall let the tongue say what i have long been not prepared to say

words are useless between us is the fire it will burn us throughout the night
till dawn

RIC S. BASTASA
Between Walls Between Walls

walls around us always walls around us
morning till noon till night walls always walls between us i try to inser some words of consolation between us all walls rain walls between us there is no word for us for it
we, it, we, us, there is nothing
between us
air, between, us, air, air, air, between us, still walls, walls, speak, speak
why, why are these walls still walls
between us

i guess, you are dead, then cogito, eureka,
will i be a happy man then?

RIC S. BASTASA
Between You And Me....

there could have been a bridge even just a word to connect us and form a ring a hollowness between a hole where both of us can pass through and then leave all these between a you and i, there must be a word to describe that wish for closeness the intimacy that nudity speaks about my hands clothe your body and make you another body between my body and your body there must at least be a syllable to make a sound of this silence between us we hear a faint music of a distant phonograph between us is a phrase between us is an incomplete clause thirsty of meaning

this unsatisfactory of ordinary humanity this imperfection between us a word a bridge a rainbow an arrow inside us are wounds and maggots outside us are the words of laughter written off in air.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beware

beware, my son,
not all species are all like us.
not all creatures have learned to pray and be patient.
Not all know what waiting is all about.
Not all flowers bloom and understand what buds are.
Not all rivers flow and know where the sea is.
Not every event knows the wisdom of destiny.
Beware my son, there is not much of us left we who have read the lines of our palms and understand the movement of the stars we who respect the change of the seasons and understand the reasons for changes and transformations not all caterpillars know about butterflies
beware my son
beginnings are there because there is always an end, and always remember my son,
the glory and the gladness that is promised
beyond us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beware My Son

Not all know what waiting is all about.
Not all flowers bloom and understand what buds are.
Not all rivers flow and know where the sea is.
Not every event knows the wisdom of destiny.

Beware my son, there is not much of us left we who have read the lines of our palms and understand the movement of the stars we who respect the change of the seasons and understand the reasons for changes and transformations not all caterpillars know about butterflies beware my son beginnings are there because there is always an end, and always remember my son, the glory and the gladness that is promised beyond us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beware Of His Silence

beware of his silence
his stillness is dangerous his numbness is a killer beware of the quick shallowness of his leaving for when everything is complacent and busy with the day to day cares

the building of the stairs the installation of the windows the putting off the lights he shall come and with a quick blow like a tsunami he takes away everything

RIC S. BASTASA
Beware Of Me, I Am Bitter....

forgive me, my dearest, i too, suspect myself from all these vicious motives.

if you suspect me, i am true.
i am not at all dismayed.

my door has a notice posted.
beware of me. I am bitter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond

beyond this world of evil and good beyond the realm of right and wrong there is another field we shall soon meet there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Existence

today i tell time and the sands and the desert sun you cannot vanish me i have reasons

you can take my body feed it to vultures
but i still have this soul
everywhere

i am not Ozymandias
i am not mere mist
i am my words
my atoms, i live forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Gender

beyond gender, race, color, creed, social standing, business category,
whatever
housemaid or landlord

the cell phone

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Gravity

PLANETS float
follow their own assigned orbits meteors pass by avoiding collisions
the sun rules and the moon keeps faith
on its smaller revolutions the stars on the other galaxies keep glittering in their own spaces
everything expands and moves
away

expect another destruction a necessity for more galaxies

and we are but atoms and neutrons and protons
in all confusions.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Love

beyond love and desire beyond sex and lust

beyond form and substance beyond rhyme and rhythm beyond now and here or then and hence beyond you and me I and thou, some longings in us still look for social relevance. where, when, how and why

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Our Prison Walls

our prisons are too many the penalties imposed upon us are heavy

everything is passed from one mouth to another
this prison of tradition and what we have are just kettles and ladies
a few spoons and some crooked forks
some moldy fats of pork and hardened bread like bricks upon our walls and rooms

i am tired of those other prisons handed to us and well kept by our respect for what is old

the mind is the prison and thoughts and imagination are our wings to our well deserved freedom we do not deserve this weakness this self imposed defeat we are not worms
we butterflies and all these fragile wings shall take us beyond the tops of molded hills beyond us
our better selves our very own proclamations that we are not the children and heirs of gods
but that we too are godly creatures with divinity in our hearts our sacrileges tattooed on our skins and bones

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Science, Beyond Law.....

the most recent trend of this poetry thing is this confession

where one simply expresses his angst, or woes,

sometimes trying to express overjoys

where there is no ear of a priest listening
but you take the world's attention to your murmurs

it is not noise
but a hum, it has nothing to do with a cure
but just a tapestry of words moving freely like a molecular theory of freedom and randomness which belittles

the power of fate

we believe in destiny we go there surely but this is the place where we defy gravity
where we tease the lines of our palms rebel against the soothsayers brake the crystal balls anything goes here

rhyme or none
it is a surge, a sailing, a stroll it is waving hands and throwing spits, it is holding you without restraints

it is walking and talking and no one bothers they understand
you are in a trance of your sorrow walking helps

ideas flow and you are carried to the mouth of the river towards the open sea everything happens

without a boundary

i submit, it is not meant to be understood or even recalled or kept or sculpted

for it is the wind, and the shore, it is the seagull and the fish and the kingfisher and the cloud

this is poetry to me,
beyond science, beyond law.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond The Gloss

beyond the gloss of skins those that these eyes cannot see i shall know you time shall test how true can i be
to you
i shed off all these pretenses and be naked before you i am old and bent
i shall kneel and pray that soon when everything is over shall you
forgive me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond The Mist And Fog And The Fading Darkness Of The Night

what he said after all is confirmed correctly this morning when i wake up to hear a bird chirping by my window

against the drenched leaves after the wind and rain stopped beyond the mist and fog and the fading darkness of the night

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond The Old Man's Chair

the leaves of years
swiftly fall

the winds of change
the summers of acceptance are quicker

the branches of time have turned bald

a man is alone but not sad as you expect it thinks of a boat sailing

it knows of a place
beyond his chair

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond The Touch Of Reason

stepping beside the edge of time reason tiptoes like a swan lake ballet dancer it slides on the slimy part of the linings of the heart now limping asking for love yelping for sympathy

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond These Hands

something that i cannot touch beyond these hands
more of them are invincible though far from the fingers yet still close to the heart like the way i will always love you kissed only by my dream lips to lips with nothing but air

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Time

beyond time
is love

time is a measurement
of the past
and the present and the future that we tend to limit within a certain space

love is beyond time it is when measurements
do not matter anymore
because
you love
and your love
has no measure

it is not even
this moment

it is beyond momentariness
that we love

just being here looking at you

everything freezes nothing leaves
nothing comes

the box
of time where you are in does not have length
and width
and sides
and depth

there is just this breath
breathing, life living, and it keeps going and going without any ticking

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Us Is A Horizon A Line Without End.

i have wasted so much time in this
uncaring matter of scribbling

these do not affect lives
people keep on walking
ahead of you
and they never look
back
who's missing

you keep writing the names of these streets and they laugh
and they move on with their lives

you are crazy
beyond us is a horizon
a line without end.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Words

Got a party today in the house and my sister brought her granddaughter named Sissy who likes to play with our puppy named Ifur and she chased him with a stick and she was laughing as though there is no other laughter left in this world for tomorrow the old men of the house look at her with joy without saying a word they were busy with their smoking pipes as they were seated on their hard molave rocking chairs

i look at the old men of the house blowing smoke into the air and i imagine that they are all traveling back in time when they were once like her but time of course says, you've had it and there is nothing more and they all stopped and began talking to themselves remembering the war and how they served as veterans, how he japs reached Dipolog and how some gold treasures had been buried in Diwan and Manawan.

They changed sighs for awes. Sifted sorrows for joys and excitement. Exchanged boredom with action. They know how to forget and then please themselves. I admire them. They are survivors of the war and the loneliness of aging and the ennui that peace sometimes provide on that silver platter, on that bountiful table where food are sometimes thrown as waste.

and so i shifted my paradigm too. I transferred my focus outward. Away from the selfish mode of awkwardness. That greed of my own face is consuming my identity.

i look at the window, extended my view to the far away sea beyond the reach of words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Beyond Words Beyond Images

it is ironic, these words claiming that one day, these words will be beyond words, that these images will be beyond images that i will be like those who went their way alone not befriending anyone but keeps on writing in the middle of the storm and cyclones and typhoons and quakes and volcanic eruptions beyond destruction, beyond words, beyond images. smart man.

unlimited.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bias

even when the lion smiles at us
we still withhold
confidence
even if the lion is sincere
and does not think of evil
like eating all of us as prey
we always think of the worst
even if it is just a picture of the lion smiling at us
we still suspect that this can be a trap another deception

a lion is a lion is a lion and will always be lion no matter what

as simple as that ask the wind

RIC S. BASTASA
bidding goodbye

you say words
that you do not mean specially when you are bored with her already

you kiss her on her lips
on her forehead
you hug her
tightly
you whisper
sad parting words to her ear
you grip her hand like
you will miss her

but the truth is your feet are too excited to take the plane

and fly away from her
because another one more fresh is waiting for your arrival

RIC S. BASTASA
Big And Bold And Defined

you are like a lens

You are like a lens
A big round thing of Convex glass

Magnifying every minute Thing or small matters Every word every letter

Well on a positive side All words become so clear And they appear so loud

On the other hand, don’t Magnify sunshine lest it Becomes so hot and turn To fire and we get burned we get charred.

RIC S. BASTASA
Big White Petals On White Sands

big white petals falling on white sands

try to find out the reason
which one is which white against white

you find a canvass
where nothing can be found except the white silence amidst another white silence

and true you find nothing you think there is something there you smile because somehow you begin to understand about this labyrinth that you are in that you think you cannot escape

until you accept the truth about this simplicity: nada y nada.

RIC S. BASTASA
Big White Petals On White Sands In Boracay

big white petals falling
on white sands

try to find out the reason
which one is which
white against white

you find a canvass
where nothing can be found
except the white silence
amidst another white silence

and true you find nothing
you think there is something there
you smile because somehow
you begin to understand
about this labyrinth that you are in
that you think you cannot escape

until you accept the truth about this simplicity: nada y nada.

RIC S. BASTASA
Big, Wide, White Soft Pillow On My Bed Tonight

big, wide, white soft pillows on my bed tonight my head rests for a while as i wait for you
on this kind of lovely game my fingers are tired and there they are fainting with my hands my eyes are closing like the windows of the houses in the village lights turning off like fireflies getting some sleep on treetops some locks of my hair fall on the the white linens where my body lies like a mountain on the grasy plain white soft pillows on my bed my conscience sleeps like a fat man drunk and dead asleep on the thick warm pastel blue mattress not hearing the loudness of his snores

RIC S. BASTASA
Bilateral Agreements

and so you let me read your poems after so many nights when you made them and finally finished all the lines and i too shall take my hidden pieces and read them secretly inside my mind and i will tell you that your lines are as perfect as mine and that yours deserve to fly to the skies like mine which have already perched upon a tree and looking tired. All of them wanting to sleep and die.

RIC S. BASTASA
sitting here i am reading Billy's
silence

superb, i say that silence of the belt before it hit the boy in me, too much drama i suppose i do not need it for now i like to live and so i objectify

and ask the help of the saving arms of reason

with it i remember Alfredo today he died when i first studied metaphors in college in the dark where he first read his poetry to us he talked about the rain there is no rain but i felt the chilling rain inside my brain

rain is cool but that time it wasn't it felt like i could vomit on the tiled floors of the hall i did not finish
hearing him
i was shivering
in the cold that i only could imagine he died young and he was so fat that he was having a hard time carrying his body to the lecture hall my professor

i wonder why he gained weight despite the knowledge that it could kill him he was not dumb

now i finished Billy and i think Alfredo padded weight after weight like layers and layers of club sandwich for the simple reason that after all he had no more valid reason to live and the only option is death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Billy Joel's Innocent Man

(for a friend somewhere, i am dedicating this song)

Some people stay far away from the door If there's a chance of it opening up They hear a voice in the hall outside And hope that it just passes by Some people live with the fear of a touch And the anger of having been a fool They will not listen to anyone So nobody tells them a lie I know you're only protecting yourself I know you're thinking of somebody else Someone who hurt you
But I'm not above
Making up for the love You've been denying you could ever feel I'm not above doing anything To restore your faith if I can Some people see through the eyes of the old Before they ever get a look at the young I'm only willing to hear you cry Because I am an innocent man
I am an innocent man
Oh yes I am
Some people say they will never believe Another promise they hear in the dark Because they only remember too well They heard somebody tell them before Some people sleep all alone every night Instead of taking a lover to bed Some people find that it's easier to hate Than to wait anymore
I know you don't want to hear what I say I know you're gonna keep turning away But I've been there and if I can survive I can keep you alive
I'm not above going through it again I've not above being cool for a while If you're cruel to me I'll understand
Some people run from a possible fight Some people figure they can never win And although this is a fight I can lose The accused is an innocent man
I am an innocent man
Oh yes I am
An innocent man
You know you only hurt yourself out of spite I guess you'd rather be a martyr tonight That's your decision
But I'm not below
Anybody I know
If there's a chance of resurrecting a love I'm not above going back to the start To find out where the heartache began Some people hope for a miracle cure Some people just accept the world as it is But I'm not willing to lay down and die Because I am an innocent man
I am an innocent man
Oh yes
I am
An innocent man

RIC S. BASTASA
Binding The Wind

You are breathing
It is cold
And your breath
Is seen in the wind
As white smoke
As you speak
I see your Words in the air
And the wind
Carries them
All to me
In my nostrils
Then to my heart

I take my fingers Touching your Mouth feeling
Your lips Molding some Words of white smoke
To this cold day

I am cold
And weak
But I shall have A way of making
My fingers coil
Into a rope
And I shall Bind the wind
Where your words
Are contained
My fingers
Ropes of this Meticulous mind
In this lovely chase

It is cold today
I am weak today
I bind the wind
Your words of Love your warmth
In affection
And I bind them
All as I bundle
Them into a pillow
On my head
A pillow in my heart

On this cold day
I will not be weak.

RIC S. BASTASA
Binging Home Overipe Durian

Bringing home overipe Fruits of Durian
I arrive full of regrets

RIC S. BASTASA
Biocentrism....

this is the house
we are in it
we recognize each other because we are inside this house

this house is time and space

there is something outside this house we cannot see it

there is a door
that will open soon when the right time comes when we step outside this door

then we are outside this house of time and space soon when we find ourselves there it will be different.

RIC S. BASTASA
Biography Of A Poet During The War

by nature
he is introverted

he did not make close friendships

he absorbed himself in his writing

a life of isolation and was very much a loner

RIC S. BASTASA
Bird Of Paradise

as i look at you beauty begins to have wings my heart too
beats in bliss

RIC S. BASTASA
Bird On Wing

bird on wing
again
air whispers
another name
a distant island

RIC S. BASTASA
Birds And Grains

in a relationship
the birds wait for the grains whose meanings are the birds to eat

the grains to be eaten

what a complimentary world is this all in utmost pleasure

the mouth opens
another tongue fills in the void of hunger.

RIC S. BASTASA
Birdshot

just because no one saw the tree falling does not mean that there was no tree which fell logic has failed me.

it was a 'NO ENTRY' area where the meshed wire was removed like an empty hole the native girl broke the rule

shot dead a Philippine eagle.

the father wants to save her, concealed the gun, buried it to play innocent a herd of dead bodies were buried on shallow grounds which the grass has not accomplished covering yet above them the eagles fly beside them the native girl watches the opening of the secret wound.

RIC S. BASTASA
Birght Is The Sun On A Summer Day

On a summer’s
day Bright is the sun
To make this last journey

RIC S. BASTASA
Birghter Days

i look forward
to brighter days
with you,

more lights
to the darkness

of our souls, shades of hues, and colors

of more rainbows
gentle rains music

of cicadas, soft night winds and

cheers, and hugs,
and...kisses

brighter days
back to brighter days

on bleak presence of folding sorrows.

RIC S. BASTASA
Birth

i, too, passed
that gate to here, they say i cried
when i first saw
light, they say
i was too restless,
until i received
the first nipple,
i have been there,
you have been
there too,
we cannot recall
it somehow, and we do not really know why, what we know was
they had pleasure,
at the higher level,
they had love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Birth Of Art

The sponge in the sea Seeding it with million spores
The night lit by a full moon

The spores Appear as dust
Like a sigh like a breath
The sea is now
Full of millions of sponge spores

Comes maleness
Fertilization of the dusts
The birth of art
Bursting
Like the new corals
The sea flowers
In long crowded Array
On the ocean floors.

RIC S. BASTASA
Birthday Greetings

may you love
till another birthday
comes again

as i have loved you too last birthday
of mine

quid pro qou

RIC S. BASTASA
Birthday Party At Five

he was five when a party was tendered for his birthday and he received a brown coat from his eldest sister

so many things happened she grew old and he left
away
for greener pastures, but always, always the brown coat he carries with him kept its scent

that smell of pure love of generosity still undeserved.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bisag Patay Na Ang Kontra.

i

ang mga
dili makiangayon nga panghitabo
ang dili nauyon sa kinaiyahan

ii

dunay tawo nga gustong mosipa sa makililimos kay kuno giilad siya
sa kinyentos pesos
dunay gamhanan nga
wa kasabot kon nganong angayan unta nga ang bugas ihatag na sa mga walay gikaon kay namad-an na ang ilang mga basakan dunay makagagahum nga nangayo kon unsang partido ka sa pulitika aron ihatag ang tabang human sa dakong unos dakong sayop
apan bisan gamayng hunahuna nga basin nasipyat lang wala gayod

bisag upaton pa ang mata di gyod kakita
bisag unumon pa ang mga dunggan
di jud kadungog
bisag padak-an pa ang utok nga morag bangal nganong di gayod kasabot kon gipadak-an lang unta ang kasing-kasing basin anaa ra unta ang kaloooy bisag wala pa ang gugma

iii

diha sa sumbagay
ang kanunayng pangutana mao lang gihapon
'kinsay gauna-una ninyong duha? '

bisag patay na ang kontra.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bisdak #1

ang mga sunugon puhon makapangutana baya kita usahay, nganong ang mga badlongon maayo man hinoon ug mga nadawat sa kinabuhi?

kadtong palahubog mao man hinoon ang nahimong pari sa inyong lungsod,

kadtong igat, mao may giminyoan sa mayor
unya kadtong kurakot sa salapi sa gobyerno maayo mang pagkaasenso

daghang sakyanan ang mga kawatan pagkadagko sa ilang mga balay ang mga kidnappers, ayay, napuno ang ilang mga katribu sa kadaghan sa natigum nga dolyares aw hinoon, dili ta angay nga masina, kitang nagpakabut-an dili man maghandom nga diring kalibotana ta molungtdad, kay lagi, sa walay kasumo, nagtoo man kita nga dunay langit, unya silang nagpakadaotan, didto man sa ilang impyerno pagasunugon sa kalayo nga hangtod sa kahangtoran wala gayod kunoy pagkapalong...

RIC S. BASTASA
Bitaw

sa tinood lang
lami pa unta
maghimo ug haiku

morag
well, sounds like a hiccup
to me
these haikus

saon ba paghimo
ug haiku
diri nga ang
imong makita
puros kurtina nga
biege

lingkoranan
nga
black leather

martilyo nga kahoy pagtingog
aguy!

the door bell rings
a visitor is coming

(kagwang naa ras ilang balay)

RIC S. BASTASA
for years inside that cage the dog finally gets unleashed released and fed to the gaping mouth of the road where it runs berserk and its only known word of course is

bite.

RIC S. BASTASA
the news came that there are people with same names as we have in that faraway island. I am curious.
I went to the place and introduced myself as a possible relative.
There is a need to trace our roots. My grandfather and his three sisters sailed from Bohol to Zamboanga because they have no future in that rocky island.
They left taking only a few clothes and their dreams.

Their great grandfather was Juan and his wife is Maria.

When i went there, this i found: more or less there were 50 juans, and 100 marias.
They all look the same. Their faces are our faces too.

There were 3 politicians,8 bandits,2 at-large.
There is a priest. And there are 4 prostitutes.

I look at my list. It is same with who we are in faraway zamboanga.

I am not surprised. This is what a family is all about.

Scattered Leaves. Broken chains. Bricks that make a tower.
Black clouds. Storms.

Flickering Stars. And a big lighthouse.
There is a port there, abandoned by boats.

I took with me an exhibit of their poverty. Showed it to my arrogant sister who hates kids. She looked at it with all contempt.

They are poor. They are not us. When you invite us they will not come.
I also have that contempt for poverty.

We are poorer. I, too, must dislike them.

RIC S. BASTASA
what is bitter than bitter is a love that ends without the formality of a goodbye.

it likes to be sweet, but there is no taste whatsoever.
it is like a film that ended in a total blackout.
no names parading on the screen. no ending.

people just leave and they wonder what happens

a broken heart still thinking about a love that is not really gone.

when we meet we know it is over.
no one says it with finality somehow.

unfinished business. the soul keeps coming back. it has something to tell to the living.
but no one has always the courage to lend an ear.

you know that. what is there is only the usual fear. the moment one sees, his feet keep running.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bitter Grape Is Real

If you convert a sigh into a symbol think of a comma

then you change your mind it is a hyphenated silence which waits for something that is always coming from a distance you see something like grapes they are your thoughts ripe, and misty, and you think that they must be sweet because they look like memories you couldn't help it, you sigh again, like taking a deep breath and filling your lungs with power and then you exhale like the way you surrender to that urge for smoking at night you touch it, it is cold, it is not soft like a fruit it is solid, something stoic, you grab it and put it inside your mouth where you tongue begins to play with its obtuseness it is not even sour, something that is possible with a grape, it is bitter

and you cannot believe it it is simply unbelievable you have already buried all bitterness how come that it is here again?

you swallow it because of shame that you are swindled by an imagery that you have never tasted it is bitter. it is actually bitter. and then you remember what happened to you when you were fooled.

that bitter grape is real.
Bitterness....

if you believe that freedom is absolute, that is you always have the power to choose every inch, and variety, much always to your liking,

you are wrong

(forget poetry for once forget this hiding place forget this secret garden where you are growing your own set and color
of flowers
choosing well the weeds and rock
focused on inner freedom and this quest for originality and independence)

when you were thrown into this world your brain was just a pea your fingers appear like insignificant commas in a sentence in another context you are sentenced to a prison
not of your liking of course involuntary
validated coercion

for instance you are born to poor parents a not so well developed skull where you little brain grows sporadically
you are thrown into a place of the slums and polluted air
where people kill one another for a dime or even for free on a tripping
you consider yourself still lucky you are still alive
that is consolation enough hmm

you proclaim

for things that i cannot change i leave them but there are those that i can still change you will change the world?

you cut the grasses, clean a path, walk, you work hard in school devoting yourself to studies and thinking ponderous soul

you finish a course you marry the right woman find the right work and you say i am wrong you make a difference
you have progressed self-made man
dignified, honored,
praiseworthy

then you laugh at me and say 'you see i am now free' and you expect me to be silent and say i am sorry i am wrong

look at you
your face is now twisted your legs are not rooted to the ground equally one leg is higher than the other you practiced dancing all your life dancing to life's demands tiptoeing like a ballet dancer the circus man on a tightrope trying to please those kings and queens
the system
hammered you to a lot of compromises and on their standards most of you have become distorted your chin is bending towards your ear your lips bloat like a dead fish you have scars in your forehead stitches on your neck
Mr. Frankenstein
Pooh!

ah, indeed you are free now and behind you, this sour and bitter old man is holding his laughter for i think i will have the last laugh until i find my eternal rest six feet under

if they ask me to come back it is definitely a big and uncompromising No.

Sorry, i don't believe in anything else forgive me, but not even myself This agnostic too doubts himself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bixed Man

there are four corners
and all sides are equal

equality is never a guarantee that you are happy inside

look at you
you are bending a little bit and choking

you are inside that box of equal sides.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bizet's Carmen

blue cards woman with black hair
a black fan
a kiss
underneath the trees
a sigh
and a thought long after

RIC S. BASTASA
The sound of sirens
Another ambulance running wildly From this town to the city Another sick man perhaps Another emergency
People are dying not of hunger here They have overeaten
The have overslept
They have overreacted to the bad news
This morning and all the other mornings They have listened to the bad rumors Of annihilation of total destruction Complicating life with nightmares And too much worrying

Take the walk, savor the fresh air From cups of leaves see the dews Like pearls in the morning flowers Think about how God has been saving Loving caring and guiding us
The positive thoughts the glory That is yet to come, the heavens
The sun and then the full moon And the countless stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Black Bird Singing

a black bird flies on top of the house and perches upon a tree fronting it

i stand by the window looking at the scenery of sea and sand and alternating rustic fronds pine trees and grass

the black bird begins to sing asking for attention then we see each other eye to eye it is i who blink first.

RIC S. BASTASA
Black Birds Of The Future

the teacher in the mountain eight hours from the main road passing the winding river for ten times, teaches her pupils english, attuned to the common birds that roost on the trees beside the nipa houses of the hinterland,

and what the color the birds?

and then the pupils who had nothing for breakfast, poor as their parents are, relying only on the left overs of this cruel society, with a hope that by learning english their lives would soon change, finding work in the city and earning money, have this to answer, ma'am, the color the birds the black.

RIC S. BASTASA
Black Charred Chunks

it was the dance of their lifetime it started at 6 p.m. and it did not end at 5 a.m. the following day the fire razed the dancing floor dwindled the roof fell down

the doors did not open they were all trapped

it was Sunday when the priest made the sermon of a lifetime

there were no bodied inside those coffins just black charred chunks, yes, just black charred chunks

RIC S. BASTASA
Black Dog Pink Wall

black dog walking near a pink wall

stares
at the pinkness
of the wall

and then
it raises its right leg

and squirts
urine

do you think love exists in this show
of release?

urinate
after a pink
love

black dog,
is that you?

staring eyes
are those
yours?

spread legs
are those
yours?

RIC S. BASTASA
Black Flowing Hair, A Memory Of You

I see you leaning by a wall next door Against an afternoon sun

And though it is your back that faces me
I know
From the beating of my heart That it is you, Black-flowing-hair

I can smell you
In mint
And you shall be inside me As I breathe
So I can live for another time

You are My tallest tree
On top of the Sleeping-dragon-mountain

And I look up to you Like my full moon one cold night Untouched by my fingers Black-flowing-hair
The world may not have found love in my eyes As I have none to boost

Since I have given it to you
All of it
I shall find it
But shall not take it back
From you

Your shadow is my god
And it is only that I can touch Without you knowing
The shadow
Of your Back
My self-made god
Is enough life

I do not ask much
I cannot
You do not know me
There is no need
I only give myself
I do not have to take any In return

Now I declare
I have found my place
In you
I have found myself
In you
I have found you

I am Mute-white-dove -sitting On the breast of Black-flowing-hair Touching the clouds Holding the rainbow Saving all the raindrops of my life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Black Friday

our errand man is depressed on a black Friday coz his woman escapes from
the monotony of modern slavery
slips from his room
runs towards the mountain to be a black bird again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Black History Celebration

she steps upon
by chance
on a poetry reading of black poets
inside the library
as she was returning a book
of her favorite
poetry

and she listened
and she said

'it was sooooooo cooollll! '

RIC S. BASTASA
Black Spider I Keep My Silence

I know how it feels like to be in a narrow alley there is no rope but the feeling of being choked is always there in such a way that you cannot utter the necessary words calling for help you fear the coming of the night because there are no more people talking and silence seems to be another cruel stranger without a face and fingers the weirdness of these all underlies a throbbing of the heart drums without music but all palpitations of an abnormality which you know exists but which you cannot drive away like unwanted birds pecking on your hair as though they are grains as you see yourself getting bald and bloody there is no screaming now, people won't hear anyway or if they hear they will think that you are being haunted by invisible demons, which you yourself cannot figure out which is the head and which is the tail and you move your arms in circles trying to locate which is the point of an ending that happily ever after that you like to write which cannot be written because now you cannot pinpoint the cause from the effect and the effect from the cause like a wedding ring which has become too tight in your finger you like to throw it away but it is not that simple. People are complicated. Events are either lawful or unlawful and you are given the choice whether to go to prison or die.

the deep blue sea and the devil. you or I, either and neither, puzzling bitch surrounded by dogs like a lake surrounded by small shores, like a mouth mumbling for syllables which still remain irresponsible and hence incomprehensible

but i know each like the fingers in my hand, and to avoid death of the black spider i keep my silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Black Umbrella

in our custom
a man must take an umbrella and must raise it like a gentleman

it must remain raised even when the rain stops until the woman signals
otherwise

this time it is the Chief Justice doing it for the First Lady of the President

there is more to this tradition than meets the eye it is my perfect picture of subservience and corruption....

RIC S. BASTASA
Blackout

no tv
no pc

life ceases
we think life begins
anew

gazing at the stars
looking at the shadows of the trees listening to the drizzle of the rain figuring out the songs of the wind feeling the silence of the night dea inside our bones we hear the collision of blood the cry of the intestines the pumping of the heart

we seek the arms of another feeling one once again together

RIC S. BASTASA
Black-Out

slowly the worst in you trickles

short of ideas
lack of images

at the gate
half-open you want to see
the world again

everything is dark
and you are
alone

RIC S. BASTASA
Blackout In The Town Where I Live

blackouts happen here most often the president of the country is confused what to do at the end of her term others think she may soon go to prison, and for whatever reason political or otherwise or perhaps on the common reasoning of a global recession affecting necessarily the shortage of power i mean, electrical power, this town too is affected with constant blackouts and people worry much what happens for the next eight months for fear that there may be a coup d'etat or a rebellion of the masses or simply a plain revolution from within but enough of all these political upheavals i decided to simply sit in the corner of my room open the window and look beyond all these darkness i expected a full moon tonight some bats to enjoy the ripe guavas unharvested by kids the mysterious white owl that pass sometimes when all of them are fast asleep...

i was thinking of the past times with grandfather before the Japanese came there was this oil lamp that they keep shining all night long and they were talking about that perfect peace reigning for long in this little town thriving in the simplicity of its lifestyle the integrity of its people the innocence of its children the love of family and so on an so forth....

and then i feel so sleepy as the lights un-switched off begin to take life again.
Bland

his words are bland
and i think i understand inside his cell

darkness and emptiness and silence

words
becoming intense

he felt all of them like pins
and here you are disturbed angry and wanting to kill what mockingbird is there

if only you have felt what drowning is on that well

where the water runs dry

you would not have become like him

engulfed by this huge mouth of emptiness

vomited you run the streets endlessly without direction

RIC S. BASTASA
Bland And Dry And Negligible sometimes we simply close our eyes on some ugly things we choose not to hurt somehow those who never chose to be bland, dry and negligible given the choice why should they stay on such a disliked state somehow?

we simply sit there and pretend nothing disturbs us we sip our coffee slowly savoring the appearance of new light we place one hand on the table as the other hand keep the handle of the cup the human person facing you cracks a conversation you pretend you listen but you understand the pain things are not equal life is not fair there are those who are unlucky some protest their fates despite all the hard work they still arrive at nothing but losses and regrets meanwhile the early morning sun rises slowly to make a brand new day you utter the prayers

Lord, Lord, keep us, keep us, make us understand, make us feel you give us hope make us live another day give us peace.

then you face the human being in front of you.
paying attention.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bland Poems

to choose between a

burger and a poem

i'd rather choose a burger

lots of mayonnaise
and ketsup
and lettuce and meat

beside me a mug
of san mig beer

because i am hungry and too thirsty
this summer

and besides

i already have these, oh well,

bland poems.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bland.....Illusion...

a man sometimes finds shelter in a castle in the sky just like any child abused by a stepmother

a woman goes with the man taking shelter in that castle in the sky though they have nothing it is their love that makes them live happily there ever after the croaks in the fields croak their laughter the rain from the sky diverts the truth by pleasing them the two knows the real story of their wrong notions there is no bother, love too exists so well in that illusion, they both make the castle in the sky what choice is there? To live with the croaks in the pool, that murky existence which thrives in the harsh truths of slime and noise

RIC S. BASTASA
it is time to have blank walls something to start with where you are more careful with what to write and what to draw

you think twice, thrice before you start your scribbles for you once drew a cat and it didn't work well with the dog which she drew first you should have talked to her so everything that you plan to put on this blank wall might as well have harmony & peace & beauty, like the way she painted her own blank space with all black colors, and she gave you an impression of the darkest night you tried to put some stars and a full moon to brighten the darkness of her thoughts, and perspectives she did not like it

she was in deep mourning, she was very sad depressed with what happened when she was a young girl in their house she set aside the stars and she told you she hated the moon and you kept your silence and opted to put there the whispers of wind and the hush of the sea again she did not like it the wind made her vomit and the sea made her very sick till you finally gave up with the way the blank wall had been painted and the manner by which she wanted to take it all to herself you know what was really proper you said there is still a blue boat on the blank wall and it is leaving soon finding a new world..... now sailing on

RIC S. BASTASA
Blank, Numb, Floating

it is 1: 55 a.m.
i hear the rain falling she is fast asleep tired of the demands of her day i leave her and she takes the pillow for me i turn on the light and see this room of books and paperworks i turn on the computer
i am feeling nothing and i am floating like i am but a spirit i am numb and i am feeling so dumb i see this blank wall i am feeling so empty

i look at her again she utters words in her sleep and i will not wake her up i lay my hands on the keys run my fingers on some letters there is nothing to write in particular but there is something to run my fingers on this feeling
this attempt to imitate the sound of the rain in letters to put the motion of the rain to put its smell to be wet and to have the rain run over me all over me all over me all over me all over me blank, numb, floating and wet this is the poem now

at 2: 03 a.m.
it has gained finally this form and scent and motion and color that you have never seen or felt the way

i do.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blankness

it feels as though the well had gone dry
the thirst invades
the tongue wilts like a leaf soon crumpled like mud baked under the sun.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blasphemy

when you start to tell me that you love me too

RIC S. BASTASA
Bleed

you ask me if i still love you and i say yes, definitely after all those years

i remember
i bit my lips
and it bled.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blend

blend, how did i ever use that word in my life?

blend with the people i work with, dissolve in their ordinariness so i cannot be noticed anymore i wear the same clothes, same brand and even same color to blend with all of them, and so i am in, not a deviant, not an opposition not a rebel but a supporter of their cause blend with the crowd like cuts of carrots and apples and melons in a blender and nothing is identifiable in that concoction blend and blend and blend myself with the world and this universe escape from my uniqueness betray my individuality as all creeks and rivers all flow to the sea as one entity away from loneliness, losing myself my thoughts the I surrendering to the we, the coward one, blending, and now there is no one, yet why this poetry apart from you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Blend, Do Not End

Blend. Sip your blend to the colors Of this room. Smell like a morning perfume of Small red roses. Open palms. No collarbones.

Blend. Take your time. Familiar faces and freckled Dreams. Blend, bend.

For God's sake, do not end.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blending With The Sky Again

clouds colored black Rising from the earth Floating on red skies
The sun Is gray
Rectangular to the Earth shaped like
An ovum
A splash in the sea
Like an inverted comma
He is Icarus
He just drowned

They do not think
It is me
The sea is not green
It is blacker than black I am trying to be Off-white for you
To see.
But you can’t
You did not try
Thinking hard enough.
You have no time
For this
For me
Or anything else.
Sometimes I think
I should have Grown myself
As the suicide bomber
And then explode
Inside you.
Perhaps you
Will notice me
Finally.
My Color must not
Be red.
I may Blend with the Red sky again.
Blends Of Air And Fire Wind And Earth.

in this corner is this fountain
water spurts as we gaze
and birds hover
and stop here for a drink on the peaceful part

i sit fronting it
under the shade of the willow tree
listening to the song of water blending with the passing wind creating in me
a chorus of fire

i am between your heaven and earth

man: the center of this universe
the listener
of your heave and hell

spurts of humanity birds hover and stop here, for a drink of the peaceful water

blends of air and fire
wind and earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blessed

it is an old story

blessed are those who said no
but did the yes....

RIC S. BASTASA
Blessing

I am my father’s best
I am his blessing

I do not cry during His funeral

I do not grieve
Because he is waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blessing In Disguise

Blessing in disguise

You were late for the office The bomb exploded on time

Thanks God! You were saved Every delay sometimes Has its blessing.

So every time There is delay, do not curse,

Who knows? there might be Some reasons who knows? Someone up there still cares for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blessing In Disguise...

she arrives
disgusted
she is singled out oppressed
abused  but when we meet today
we do not speak
about it
she knows how to handle this thing
she is mature enough not to react to humiliation
she asks nothing
not even justice she knows God too well and perhaps what happens is just a blessing in disguise.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blind

sorry to say that whatever you do
he does not mind
not that he is numb
to love
not that he is so indifferent to your advances
because you
see
he is deaf and blind.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blindly Underneath Carrying All Its Own Weight.

you shall choose between a gun and a flower a room or a path between an empty space and another empty space between a dimming light and another darkness or too much light which has blinded you or between being alive and being dead and there you shall know the limits as you end the right to choose with an erasure of what what was boldly written you shall choose between choosing and not choosing if there is really that choice.

you end with a desire not to think, to cease, to stop and just be the tree that you like. Above a hill, tested by the seasons, unable to transfer to another hill and hence has grown deeper roots blindly underneath carrying all its own weight.

Bliss

at the outdoor garden hangs
a yellow flower
on the vine

the air swings it
and its scents spread all over watching it is bliss

RIC S. BASTASA
Bliss

the hills
are legs spread upon the plains

waiting
as some flowers spread their scents on the thighs of the valleys

the sun arrives in its naked grandeur

since then
love, and love and love has filled the earth

winds so soft
and clean and fresh

the heart of the earth beats
for love and love and more love the sea is quiet and calm

and then tonight
the moon and stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Bliss Remembered....

a rose
in a white porcelain vase on top of a glazed wooden table
showered with the early morning light from the laced
window
while you were still sleeping soundly
in bed

two yellow birds
chirp
on the sill
of the window

i am at peace
beside you

RIC S. BASTASA
NOT SO Familiar with the English word the not-so-well educated woman in her fifties says: BLISS THE CHILDREN and the English speaking world laughs
and underestimated her
in fact
humiliated her for her mispronunciation,
but i know
as i know her from the heart being from the country where i grew up to be a man,
as she is one of those childless women,
a product of the family-planning imposing First World God Knows not why
she couldn't bear
a child,
it is clear to me
she really means it Bliss the Children
rather than Bless.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bliss...

if need be
i have to sell my body and have a pact
with God
whoever is in-charge for reincarnation
so i can come back soonest
and touch your beautiful bottom

this time you shall love my own
kind

we shall kiss
you loving me
i loving you

no love triangles
no hitches

mutual, requited
love, lust
love, love, love paired with lust

in perfect harmony

then i die
as early as dew to morning sunshine

and perhaps i do not have to spell
regret,
no broken heart
no shattered self

no sighs..
i shall fill the world with the scented flowers of ecstasy

bliss, complete perfect
bliss...

RIC S. BASTASA
Blitzkrieg

the assault at noon like lightning and thunder at the foot of the hill bodies spreading
dead
women wailing and children
weeping

this is the latest bombardment of a moslem village, bombing at night when some peaceful religious souls
are praying inside their homes unreasonable lightning attack, and dirty offensive,

an onslaught of the civilian mind,
illegal raid,
shelling of lies,

and so they also strike like what was done to them but what was written on the front page of the news

the following morning
was altogether different damn! i said.

RIC S. BASTASA
two irreconcilable perspectives at once:

descending from the top two bars with rectangular cross-section ascending from the bottom three cylindrical rods.

RIC S. BASTASA
you see at the top of the mountain beside the clouds that have become so close to me like some kind of domesticated wolves....

you mistake me for a god of the sky
i am not you tell the man beside you that i must be a prince of the clouds
i am not

not even the earth shall own me for i am not of earth though i come from its feet i belong to no one not even the trees or the moon and its stars why am i here? block to block every corner of my skin pitted against each other and i rise from my own profanity

having known the link between sin and love between God and Man between Good and evil, between the boundaries of these seemingly irreconcilable odds the tunnel of personification of the personal views honesty and authenticity flesh and blood and spirit and soul mind and body

lust and love, that is where i first made the start.
here i am now at the summit of it all.

sitting lotus amidst the murkiness of the pond.
silent, deep, and mindless.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blonde Hair

America has become like your kitchen, gone for a week without notice, and back again on another day, without so much fuss, you walk back
trace the steps of your past on grounds filled with dust and dry leaves pebbles without dew, buds that wilt, roots that stop to spread, this is still
My Philippines, dusts or fresh air, storms or drought, i keep walking its paths without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blowing Wind

her long black hair slides on his thigh
and rests there

her luscious lips plays a game on him

he is not in peace
he is at war with desire she takes his grief inside her mouth

he gives in hoping that this can be a temporary solution

she thinks of someone she truly loves

his mind wanders among the clouds that hang on the ceiling in their wanderings their eyes never meet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blowjob For Marvin

she likes something long and thick something she can pull like a shiny, silvery pole but she prefers something golden really one that is like a precious gem metallic in strength one where she can blow with all her might, where she can expel her sighs of the day her loneliness for the nights one that can also be musical to her ears where her locks of hair can dance wild like disco and hip hop the trumpet of her dreams or the trombone of her wishes of the clarinet or the flute this lady who loves to play music in her dark room

RIC S. BASTASA
Blubber

weep not
the willows are singing
weep not
the winds are blowing
weep not
utter nothing
lips swell sleep well
the distortion
is over

RIC S. BASTASA
Blue And Red

got a blue brief and you got your red lips we can combine these two colors together they all fit so well

RIC S. BASTASA
Blue Bird On The Window Sill

come to me bluebird
let me dye your feathers to white if you want to be pure to red if you want to have more excitements
come to me bluebird
let me handle your problem about their judgment against
you
you are not blue because of your feathers
i will dye it for you
do you want pink for a wise panther?
i can do it for you trust me
you are not blue because nature made you
you are blue because you allow it to be so.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blue Birds

this morning
the blue birds nest inside
my heart
and they all sing in harmony for one whole self

it is a nice song
that may make me live
for another day

their songs are blues.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blue Butterfly

blue butterfly
so blue fluttering alone hovering on my yellow green leaf and stopping for a while on my shiny, brown twig tell me if i am smooth just tell me if if am good then leave

blue butterfly
do not ask if my heart is real do not ask if you can have it i do not have a heart anymore for you see i am just this tree, this twig, this leaf but blue butterfly

if ever i have a heart

please
do not ask about it i give it to no one

i am smooth
i am too good to be owned by someone

RIC S. BASTASA
Blue Butterfly (2)

a tethered flower
you call her

unleashed beauty
a prisoner of a stalk

RIC S. BASTASA
WHO does not know this kind of dance Like hopping grasshoppers And butterflies fluttering Hovering and then
To a quick change Jumping
Like joy overpowering you
From an overwhelming sorrow,

It can start as a mellow single note Then comes the other notes And a lot others joining Ended into one bombastic Show

Of women in gowns Held by men in black suits
And they dance from one end To the other of this Dance floor

Who cannot imagine the flow Of the river Danube
And of course
Who cannot tell Strauss there all his hands Bombastically beating
To the rhythm of A grand waltz
A dance of royalty

For a while
We adopt the mind frames
Of kings and queens
And princes and princesses
To the dance of

Blue Danube
A royal river flowing
To all the hearts of those Who view life

Alive, rich, abundant Opulent, of expensive gowns And silk suits and perfumes And wine

Oh, it will be only for a night
The blue Danube is now turned To real blue

The women have bruises
The men have strong fists
And the song perished
In that sickened mind.

You wake up,
The blue Danube
Is a polluted creek
And all the fish
There are already dead.

And who was strauss?

It is you, the complete Manic-depressive
delusional Disillusioned
citizen
Of this dancefloor
republic.

RIC S. BASTASA
Blue Grass And Green Skies

the grass is blue
the skies are green
the sea is black
the sun is violet
the river is grey
the flowers are silver the mountains red

i lost my sense of color my sense of touch
i lost my logic

without you

RIC S. BASTASA
Blue Moon Tonight?

whether the moon tonight is blue really depends on you loneliness is just a state of mind you must learn how to take your wine walk inside this bar and sit there for a while take your scotch on the rocks and look for someone looking for someone like you smile the smile he gives you and wait for him to say hello give him the look he is looking for and compliment him with words he too likes to hear like you he likes to have someone tonight someone just to kiss and hold like you he wants to have a little warmth like you he wants to have a moment just tonight for two lonely bodies to keep living and then the moon tonight will never be blue a little compromise tonight do not look for love just someone to hold and then release like a white dove

RIC S. BASTASA
Blue Pastel Stills

pastel blue
daisies
round protrusions
at the center
six in all under an orange
sun

still as steel
on the canvass

RIC S. BASTASA
Blue Spanish Eyes

what more is there except the blue Spanish eyes what more of her
can you ask?

will you ask for her hands for marriage, Figaro?

RIC S. BASTASA
there are always layers of awareness
impression upon an impression forms a face
and veil upon veil
one must figure out what is next to what is seen i keep this composure there will be a lot of guesses i must proclaim there is only one truth and well i must see to it that you cannot touch it
sometimes i show it to you but then
familiarity takes you away from it things that you take for granted become truths
and i take refuge on what you already know on said confidence you will miss the real show

RIC S. BASTASA
Boat On The Sea

UPON The virgin
waters
the keel of the boat penetrates

a whirlpool
an ecstasy

RIC S. BASTASA
Bobbing

when the crow lands on the twig
the weight
pushes the twig
down almost reaching the ground
the bobbing
somewhat intrigues
the senses of the caterpillar on the leaf the tree frowns upon a black alien
some leaves fall
and the grass as usual keeps its silence
as the air passes by

RIC S. BASTASA
Bobbitt: A Part Of Speech

the word to describe 1994
it was
what was done to an abusive
husband,
this Lorena Bobbitt,
this woman
scorned
with fury as furious as hell

now, you must remember, do you wish to do it again?

mrs.2008?

RIC S. BASTASA
Bodies Are Left Out Floating

how i wish
i can be inside you
and explore the possibilities
of my being but i know that

i am
always not what
i am
when i am inside
you
i deny all that i could be

i am not
unfolded

there is pain inside
my heart

what appeases it is what we both do not like
to happen

i take side with the comfort of my days that soon

they all fade away and take me
to the right place that i always
dream

it is yet empty but soon
i know
it shall be full

feelings are compasses the destination of paradise is not just an idea

it is i can be
it can

bodies are left out floating spirits rise like suns above the mountains killing
darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
Body Of A Man

what i lost
was simply my body
the flat abdomen
gave in to negligent
fats
my strong muscled
arms
got the flab

i detest what my mirror shows me

this is not me
i tell myself

this is me
the truth insists

too much sitting too much poetry

the thinking finally kills the body
the spirit soars

this is the real me forget the body
i finally proclaim myself before me Creator

RIC S. BASTASA
Bolero A La Ravel

clapping hands
to the sound of
doves into the air
into the domes of mosques somewhere in the abandoned island of Jolo

at night the boats leave of malacca
a place of all religions shoulder to shoulder
on the road

silence is vast a dancing woman comes with little steps

heard at dawn
where everyone is soundly still asleep

your sneeze.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bonding

like descending the stairs he must be with those who cannot climb
the ground is waiting for him to kiss it
and he must otherwise those that look up to him shall soon turn into neglected monsters
with dinosaur wings to pull him and eat him whole.

precisely one gets bonded with the weak and the deprived the marginalized and the disadvantaged and those challenged about everything that are not there.

the conversations give them the feeling that you are one of them
in fact, you are one of them less the cap and the coat that they gave you
the purple feather, the ring and the right to be king.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bong

now in the field of law surprise, surprise
i have seen his latest pic on the train
as he was waiting for someone
he does not recognize me and i pretend
not knowing him

i remember those days of police line-ups less the smiles now we still wear the same
anxious faces

the train arrives
he is in the embrace
of a woman
i guess, let me guess ten years younger
that his age

the way they kiss
she is not his daughter.

RIC S. BASTASA
i don't think we do not recognize each other anymore when we meet we keep the silence a horrible silence since it is the most pretentious one yet we do not feel that something is wrong or wasted or something needs to be repaired what i know and for which i never tell him was this i was also broken, in fact, more broken than him and in my silence i was then too busy placing things in the proper order same as him i do not think that we intended to hurt one another that is never the point we have gone there twice and it was very painful we have to repeat the procedure again we look down we are so humiliated and wanting to redeem what we lost upon our own faults now we finished the mission but still in silence we keep the understanding still friends but not calling our names in the humility of our failures we have become real men....

RIC S. BASTASA
Bonsai

and why
betty should i settle for the lesser dreams of this bonsai?

why should i distort my growth in your view
of a miniaturized
world

when i can have hands as big and as spread
as the roots of a banyan tree

when i can have
tendrils and tips
as free as wild to touch the blue clouds
hanging
on a cliff?

let me be,
you do not own me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Booger

you who loves so blindly the one who does not love you
in return
has become this booger manipulated by his fingers and then thrown after so much abuse
into the infinite space of oblivion

RIC S. BASTASA
Books

books after being read become nothing but things

books unread
are treasures of gold undiscovered
beneath your feet

books unshared
are thoughts unspoken.

RIC S. BASTASA
Boomerang

what you throw as tamed always comes back to you

what you give finds a home finally to the hands that give it

what you get is what you deserve.

RIC S. BASTASA
Boracay Fantasy....

this summer when we are together in boracay
near as tongue to a cone of strawberry ice cream
licking,

i get so close to you that i can feel the 'tanness' of your tan tasting like chocolate without sugar a little bit bitter but enduring

after the sun has passed its joys upon you brown smooth skin
broad spacious nape and black flowing hair surfing upon a pair of mountain breasts with trees as nipples scented with southern sea breeze and smelling like fried dried fish beside steam white pearly rice

early morning
with barako coffee and cream and freshly scrambled mayonnaise egg on a sky blue saucer.

how i wish for a premature evening beds softer than sand, thoughts ever lovelier than lovers and such questions as,

'what is this moon saying? ' onight, you are telling me your room has no lock and your sister is dating that new guy in town.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bored

Bored na bored ka
pag 3 o clock na
ayaw mo namang kumain baka tumaba ka pa
ayaw mo namang manood ng tv kasi masakit na ang mata mo sa kababasa sa mga balitang nakakapayat sa puso ng ulyaning taong kagaya mo

lalabas ka sa bahay patingin-tingin sa mga punongkahoy
nakikinig sa awit ng hangin at paakyat-akyat sa may bangin

wala na talagang
magawa
balik sa bahay
mag-compose ng tula
o ng isang munting
kwento

tungkol sa taong
muntik ng tumalon
sa bangin
at magpakamatay

dahil bored na bored na siya
pag 3’clock na ng
hapong hapong hapo na
sya.

RIC S. BASTASA
the first time you hear about death
that time when you were so young wearing that tight &
smooth
skin- you did not really pay
attention,
in fact it is irrelevant,

and then you go to
that middle age,

a disease here sometimes and a misfortune
on the other

lots of worries, skins begin to wrinkle

and then you hear about death again
you feel touched
you shiver

lots of talks and you pretend
there is nothing that affects you

and then here you are
now,
the doctor reveals
your secrets
like a priest

and you confess your sins
your guilt
you having done nothing to keep this body and soul
together

you shiver, you tremble like a building on an intensity 8 quake

you bet
you are bored about fear now you look at death as a friend

and soon you are willing to walk with it
hand in hand
along the road to freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
Bored Couple

just one room
two beds
less talk more sleep
twosome tired
about
each other

tomorrow

another walk into the unknown

RIC S. BASTASA
Bored: Ejusdem Generis

cups of coffee, cigarettes, a chain of smoke
women, girls,
hotel lobby,
wine, gambling,
casino, and....
funerals and coffins..

now you are telling me you are bored with all these?

it is this relational thing: love to love and care to care, a chain of concerns, a rose without thorns, a candle light, holding hands while strolling in the park you will miss all these, because you are not at all willing to start all over again.

try it. and then tell me if you are still bored.

hold my hands. just hold them. please.

RIC S. BASTASA
Boredom

a long look at the mirror see the face of boredom

Kapuol

Panamin ug dugay
Tan-awa unsa
Ang nawong sa
kapuol

RIC S. BASTASA
Boredom And The Sunday Beach

everyday seems to be a Saturday today and yesterday and now they all have the same faces and colors and manner of greeting me hello and when they all say goodbye i do not really notice when as though my wrist watch is broken and needing repair i only know that it is a Sunday when we go to the faraway beach when you wear your orange bikini and you kick the ball when you fall on the sand and you giggle and when you pull me to take the plunge in the calm, blue sea when you are with me breathlessly

RIC S. BASTASA
Boredom, Some Words

Boredom: the desire for desires.
Leo Tolstoy (1828-1910)

when i get fed up and say i am quitting it does not mean that it is the end of all these cravings it is not.

when i shift my head to another direction like a ship changing course it does not mean that i am leaving this place
it is not

when i look at you with pity and tell myself what have i done something that you do not really deserve that which i myself does not too deserve it does not mean that i am saying i stop
it is not

it is not the end of everything it is but another endless beginning desire that desires more of itself cravings that crave for more cravings it is eternity finding itself in eternity this quest unstoppable this thirst unquenchable this self that always begins insoluble imperishable

this is the boredom of the divine this is the restlessness unto the rest of its restlessness

RIC S. BASTASA
in this place i was born
merely to listen

the only meaning to my existence is my ear

there is so much noise
and surrender is not a word for me i hear everything even the needles of the pine

when i speak
i am no longer myself

when i move my lips
the world turns-turtle

when i scream all i have is silence

so many are lost every night they seek refuge in my emptiness

i become full.

RIC S. BASTASA
Born Writer

defined the midwife was shocked er her mother could not believe it when he was born his tiny fingers came with a pen and a paper
and instead of giving the first cry of the little baby he dictated to those who are shocked his name and his ambition his next poem
and his latest novel

RIC S. BASTASA
Borrow The Journey Of A Leaf too conscious of my roots

now
how can i be shaken by any departures?

if i choose mobility to forget i will borrow the journey of a leaf float in the air and then land on one of the rivers where i can drift and then find my way to the ocean all, as one sage says, always go to the sea

and find their resting places
in the ocean

the leaf in me will find you there but if it cannot find you i have other leaves on the tree where i keep all my roots and i can still be alive and be significant

i have prepared for all these done so much thinking like a whale that knows one continent from the other and if i wail
you have no way of knowing it for sure...

RIC S. BASTASA
Borrowers

earling morning
two women knocking asking if i have a thousand

RIC S. BASTASA
Boston At The Public Garden

first time for me
to see a squirrel

i tore part of my earl of sandwich and gave it

it picked it up with its hands and began to nibble here the sun is awake the wind is too cold for my chest

we sat on a steel chair saving words
savoring what was there on the last day

RIC S. BASTASA
Both Ways

now that you have seen the sunrise and now that you are facing this sunset both ways then
please tell me which is more beautiful?
the blooming of the tight bud
into a flower
or when the petals slowly fall one by one and then blown by the wind in all directions tell me
what was it that you felt when you were born and what is it that we should anticipate waiting for the sunset to finally fade out.
RIC S. BASTASA
Boulevard Sa Dumaguete

Daghang balak kuno ang Nasulat sa mga
Nakaabot dinhi
Sa paglakaw sa sayo Sa buntag
Sa boulevard sa Dumaguete

Kita ang mga panganod Nga dili matandog
Sa hangin
Kita ang naglawig
Nga sakayan
Tingog sa bugsay
Ang akong nadungog
Sa kaadlawon

Nakita ko ang lunsay Nga dagat
Ang mga lumot nga lunhaw Sa daplin sa baybayon Sa hinay
Nangapalong ang mga suga Nga naglaray
Sa boulevard
Morag mga mata nga Mipiyong kay
Mobuka na ang maanyag Nga kabuntagon

Gisud-ong ko kini
Sa tumang kalipay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bound By Invisible Ropes Of Psychological Instability

Morpheus is bound and i am the modern Morpheus Light is refused of my Pleading
and I do not resist being bound i tease you with No complaint and you watch me Feeling so guilty
Why a man like me must be bound by the ropes of Psychological instability That is what you think from the Beginning
And i give you the look of Numbness and you begin to ask Who is Morpheus?
Where is the heart of Morpheus

It is in his head and you cannot Destroy it Because you love
the Passion in his eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Bounded By Chains

your kindness and goodness have become my very own chains

i love not you but another yet how can i leave you without being drowned by so much guilt?

love no matter how true dissolves in the cares of gentleness
and understanding

my heart beats for her yet your chains of freedom tightly bind me
on my arms

i am free to go
but how can i?

RIC S. BASTASA
Bow And Arrow

this is the metaphor
of society

the greater the opposition
of the bow
to the arrow

the farther the travel

take note
a society of
yes men arrives
at nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Braggart

someday i will be poor.
it will happen, someday i will be very poor.
and you will be rich, and happy and proud and influential and famous and be in the cover of Forbes Magazine perhaps Times for your exemplary charity or Asia week for your nobility and humanitarian projects perhaps the Pope will make you Saint Marjorie someday i will be poor, in fact, poor as the poorest rat,

but i know
i will still, and cannot still love you real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Brautigan....

ok, no money,
ok, there is no fame,
there is nothing to expect from those mothers of art, their children unrecognized no share, no will,
nothing to expect, from all these children of art.

ok, you sit alone, by the window you put your folded arms, you look outside
the people pass you by and they do not bother looking at you for the second time ok, nothing delicious for breakfast this month's rental is not paid electricity bill lies there calling your attention this is a poor guy, inside a foul room, shits are all around favorite expression: f.... age forgotten

wrinkles multiply
sour face
forested hair
thin chin, deep sunken eyes restless fingers

ok, no friend really wants to read a poem or if they read, one visit, it is out of pity not even respect

don't cry. there is nothing worth crying.
just sit there

tomorrow they will bring the news a friend writes a letter that for once he will dabble in poetry and he has written one though too personalized and needs further editing you look at the ceiling as you lie hopeless in your bed, you see images of hope nothing angelic, there are no wings, no halo not white, blurred, brownish, chinks pieces, naked words, unfinished dialogues, the unknown people at the other room can hear you laughing you laugh so hard

alone

perhaps, this time, you shall win.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bread And Butter

bread and butter
day to day
on the table
i must add this dessert
called poetry

then some fumes of pearl rice
and scents
of hycinths

rise up
to the skies

RIC S. BASTASA
amidst the busy day
the hurry and the blurry of things and events to come i take a break. Poetry.

Images of sunlight where the sunflower rides across the window the sea, a boat, a little boy playing on the shore a man paddling,

a woman with a hat waiting for the fish

the wind gets in i smell salt and i feel the coldness.

back to paper work and reality, a table of folders names and figures reasons and justifications citations

15 years now more to go till i get 70

how do i get there?
ah, i need sleep,
i will have my siesta.

RIC S. BASTASA
Breakfast

after writing
five poems

i realize
i need to eat my

breakfast.
i still stick
to this idea:

an empty stomach
is full of nice ideas.

RIC S. BASTASA
Breakfast Is Ready

(7: 45 in the morning)

to choose between a hot breakfast ready on the table and finishing another poem

i choose the breakfast together with my wife

this poem can be suspended in time
and become another unfinished act of creation
by a man wanting to fill this world with poems

after a while when i have my fill and when i make some nice conversations with my wife and my dog beside the table looking at me for a piece of fried pork when the sipping of coffee is over when i finally wipe my chin with the sky blue napkin when i consider eating as finally over

as promised
i will come back again and finish this poem

and there is something nice in this act of creation
you feel it

it is warm like the hand of a beautiful woman it is as hot as ever
like this wanton desire

lovely,
as lovely as you love each letter of the word of your poetry

i am feeling it in the bone of my soul

RIC S. BASTASA
breakfast is ready
we sit on our designated seats we pray
we put our hands on the table we take the spoon and fork and knife
slice the cheese, break the bread sip the coffee, chew, no spitting, swallow
no choking
in here there is an implied admission of hunger, thirst, and emptiness.

we say the words thanks after,
amen to the next thirst and hunger.

conversations there are cliches.
but i admit, i dont give a damn now, nothing really matters.

i always say a little prayer for you.
Before i leave. I do not have to tell you.

honest.

RIC S. BASTASA
Breakfast With Mark Strand

i had a chance to have a breakfast with mark strand
a sacrifice on his part since he does not know me i am a nobody you must know back to mark, i guess he feels like a boat stranded on an island with no known name as me we were eating poetry voraciously and ink stained my lips ink dropping from my beard spreading in my white polo shirt i like this adventure having breakfast with mark strand and i look at him closely like i have a magnifying lens in my hand there are blackheads on his cheeks white hairs on his eyelids cracks on his lips

he smiles a little out of courtesy and i see tooth decay

we finished eating poetry i set him free
i know that two hours with me can be a century of agony because i am a nobody and because at the end i had eaten so much poetry and excuse me...i may vomit poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Breaking A Promise

i promised myself
not to open this pc
and not to write a poem hardheaded

here i am again
irritating you

no rules, no form,
no grace, no beauty,
no meter, no count
insensitive, unbearable, persistent, pestering,
pondering, and always on the themes of

black, shapeless,
starless, moonless
dark, cold, and damp.

i break promises.
but i do not curse.

RIC S. BASTASA
Breaking Free....

it is not the hatchet that breaks the walls
not the lever
that lifts the rock
barriers of your sought freedom

do not go physical for it is not the keys that will open the doors
for you
to fly like a black bird into that blue sky

move and plunge
like a yellow submarine into the depths of the sea inward
the first step is deep silence and when you
know every sand and corral every coldness
rise up
slowly to the surface of your being
and be not afraid of the sun and winds and waves and the wideness and length of the continents

for all these when you are strong and firm shall be yours
to own.

RIC S. BASTASA
Breaking The Door Open (Revised)

on that day when i lost the key to the room
i waited for some solutions perhaps i shall break the lock or smash the door or remove the door jams or climb on the other side of the house and enter through the window but my arms for breaking are weaker now

my hands tremble at the thought that once in my childhood i did climb a wall and break open the window
and was so badly beaten that i could hardly stand and walk back home

i keep on waiting for some solutions until i realized that anyway this is not my room of destiny and there is nothing in there that is worth my trouble

and so
not being that foolish enough (or hopeless to say the least) i simply walked away with nothing on my shoulder to carry

RIC S. BASTASA
Breaking The Rules

Look mama
the horses are jumping out of the carousel and they are all running into the woods!

RIC S. BASTASA
Breathing

the most essential is inside you
and you take it
days and nights
air

invisible and yet so necessary
in fact
indispensable

tell you what you tell me perhaps what is necessary and what is indispensable is invisible
and tell you what it is free

RIC S. BASTASA
Breeze Breeze Breeze

your parents are not your parents though you come from them or though not your parents are not your parents they are merely the bows and you are the arrow

mind the direction where the force of the hand shoots you mind the wind that gives you the push mind the arrow

and let us see where fate takes you why do we have to quarrel about the origin of children or the origin of the species?

move forward and find the real purpose of the stars

you are here. Go there.
Does it really matter where do you come from?

there is more out there. Busy yourself about the things to come and give the best that is found inside the chambers of your heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
I will hold your hand
And we shall dance
The chacha
The sound of Brian lubeck
Is chacha
I hold you by my hand
Your hand
Your side
Of pleasure
As I slide
My mind
To your Soft slender Body swaying
The chacha
To the magic
Of brian lubeck

How I wish
To make love
To someone Like you
Tonight

Nameless Woman of This dancing floor
Where your name
Is simply A chacha
To the beat
Of brian lubeck.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bridge Between Us

i like to build this bridge between us the river that divides us is long and wide and the waters rage like the emotions of the night that fought against the days of my life i like to build this bridge between our minds two continents divided by an ocean seemingly without the sea the shores nowhere to be found

i like to build this bridge let me just tell you that before i finally take my leave

RIC S. BASTASA
Brief

People are so busy and their attention span is short

too much info
here and there and
everywhere

and so i have this tripping now

brief. A poem must be brief.

women easily understand that

what is important
is not what is between the long lines but what is deep within that brief

poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
Brief And Concise

yes, the poem,
that poem, nice.

a red carnation
fresh from the garden
alone
in the glass vase
half-filled with crystal clear
water

RIC S. BASTASA
Brief Meeting

we met so briefly
like a ride
on a bus
i was looking at the busy street
by the glass
window

i disembark
as usual to another
beginning

you wish we meet again

i am bound
do you wish to free me?

RIC S. BASTASA
Bright Colors

bright colors hang on a horizontal pole

a white bench a red pail and purple clouds

yellow sand black sea grass and lavender shadows umbrellas

on alternate orange and white and saffron and yellow green and crimson blue sea with white foams escape from a shrinking world to the sea breeze and solitude

RIC S. BASTASA
You are the brightest star That I always watch every night How will you know?
How will you notice?
Brightest star.

You do not mind me
I always whisper your name to the wind i always dream of reaching you to touch you and kiss you And even own you Yet how can I? I do not have the wings I do not have a heavenly soul

You never notice me O! Bright star!
So High and so bright
In the black sky and space That own you

You always live there
And thrive in its black bosom With the moon

On this day
I dream of becoming the sun
So I may have the power To forget you

RIC S. BASTASA
Brigit

you define to me
the sparks of creativity

Celtic Goddess
In your genes
the art of this earth is found

daughter of Dagda
goddess of life
magic and
art

oh flame in perpetuity!

Burn me!

take my imagination
upon thy wings of
bliss
and sorrow

bring me forth
the words
i may again retake
the joy and laughter
the catharsis
of suffering

upon the eve of Imbolg
i shall place
a white wool
upon my roof one morning
Triple Goddess of Smiths and Iron

Hand me
My Healing.

RIC S. BASTASA
cousin, let us bring back the good old times climbing trees gathering mangoes on the green hills bathing nude on light brown rivers basking in the sun on that big rock fishing on ponds for mudfish with earthworms as baits jumping from tree trunks to rivers below

riding on carabaos
barefoot on mudholes swinging on half-fallen coconut trees chasing dragonflies making ripples on the blue seas sailing on wooden boats paddling on clear days suns shining full and moons glowing cool

cousin, let us bring back the old glorious times we go back to where we once were children, where our innocence like incense in the taoist temples glows and spreads
a certain pure perfume in nature back united
to us

we are awed
we now wander....

RIC S. BASTASA
Bring Me To Life

How can you see into my eyes Like open doors.
Leading you down into my core Where I’ve become so numb.
Without a soul
My spirit’s sleeping somewhere cold Until you find it there and lead it back home.

Wake me up inside.
I can’t wake up.
Wake me up inside.
Save me.
Call my name and save me from the dark.
Wake me up.
Bid my blood to run.
I can’t wake up.
Before I come undone.
Save me.
Save me from the nothing I’ve become.

Now that I know what I’m without You can’t just leave me.
Breathe into me and make me real
Bring me to life.

Bring me to life.
I’ve been living a lie
There’s nothing inside.
Bring me to life.

Frozen inside without your touch, Without your love, darling.
Only you are the life among the dead.

All of this sight
I can’t believe I couldn’t see Kept in the dark
But you were there in front of me

I’ve been sleeping a 1000 years it seems.
I’ve got to open my eyes to everything.

Without a thought Without a voice
Without a soul

Don’t let me die here
There must be something wrong.
Bring me to life.

Bring me to life.
I’ve been living a lie
There’s nothing inside.

Bring me to life

(from Evanescence)

RIC S. BASTASA
Broken

flashes of the mind blinking eyes fluttering wings of the spirit glimmering hope,
glimmering diamond at night, nictitate eyelids
scintillating scents of the soul, shimmering body of a woman rising from the river, sparkling bubbles
squinting squirts
condone, connive, cushion this short circuit of my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Broken Body But Never The Spirit

he shows the picture of a man with nothing but tubes
no limbs
just a face and a spirit.

at the bottom is the caption of the title of this poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
Broken Dreams...

i watch him when he arrives home, bringing his baby armalite and a pack of dirty clothes and a notebook (is he listing those that owe him or those that he plans to see again after 20 years of having to spend his life among the natives in the far away mountains?)

he leaves his boots at the doorway combs his hair and wipes his sweat still clinging to his long beard (with white locks)

he looks for mother (specifically now the available matter is only the picture for she had long been dead missing him the void within her heart)

'mother had long been gone', sister told him, he heaves a sigh and breathes some more i suspect he may cry, but i know, i know as he is, and really is,

he couldn't

there are other reasons for tears to fall not this one, not this one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Broken Faucet

force of water on the faucet

the plumber is sick with hay fever

reading a book titled Conversations
with God

RIC S. BASTASA
Broken Girl

broken girl
come to me
i will guide you
to this austrian mirror

see yourself
your heart bleeding
your flesh rotting
your bones rattling our nose twitching
your eyes crying
badly you are hurt
you are but pieces scattering without direction

broken girl
come to me
embrace me
i have this love
to make the repairs

broken girl
come to me
i have this trust
to give you

broken girl
come to me
let us to go the fields and feel the air of freedom let us play in the shores of life where the sea is gentle and kind
where the sands are soft where our eyes can sleep where tomorrow is a promise where today is just today nothing big and illusory now, you smile to me broken girl take this love and be whole again

RIC S. BASTASA
Brother

we have seen how each of us has differentiated like fingers
trying to be of the same length but will never be....i understand what our true natures
are...and so i do not really mind that much...when you hurt me...i forgive even though you never asked
...when you are
far i worry how you live
what you are eating
where you sleep...
we do not talk much communication is nil....but i
know
we miss each other.

RIC S. BASTASA
Brother Do Not Say I Am Sorry

brother
now it is time for you to wear my shirt
my shoes
my pants

i have outgrown them and it is time
you wear them
for they fit
you

do not say

' i am sorry'

do not tell me
you will escape from the pattern of our tradition you shall step into my shoes into all that i have and own and you must fit in that is the law that is the rule of our ancestry and you shall not break it until we all die until you die yourself inside the coffin of our father as i will, without so much complaining so you must

in the name of our tradition

RIC S. BASTASA
Brother Joe Zam

finally brother joe zam the legal researcher from Dipolog has made it at last, to Las Vegas, now with cousins, all struggling to make both ends meet on a down economy, what a wrong timing, i think, something's wrong with the weather up there, and he's not smiling and groping with the coldness of the melting snow

but there is no coming back now, wife and daughter are there all for the mighty dollar, and the motto is always, as before no retreat no surrender tightening belts and taking all the efforts knowing what hardwork is from a to z, from the beginning to the day till the beginning of another day no one knows what a legal researcher can do but i know, i know, it will be onward Chicago, and there will be plenty of work to choose:

gardening, gasoline boy, apple picker, nursing aide, hotel boy, caregiver, and whatever another wife perhaps, another coldness within, and as always and ever shall be

away from home, and the last choices:

a) homesickness
b) broken home

he can take b) .

RIC S. BASTASA
Brother You

BROTHER YOU accuse of me of snoring in my sleep and that you cannot sleep and you demand that this bed be divided that this room be changed

we have no other house brother and this bed is the only one we have which father gave when he was strong and alive when he felt that we can be brothers forever

BROTHER i accuse you of the same disturbance when you were asleep you were snoring too hard and i too was not able to sleep the whole night let us talk and before the sun sets today let us understand our own lack

RIC S. BASTASA
Brother, I Remember The Old Games We Play

Hide and seek on evenings when mother is busy Before we sleep
It is you who knows to hide so well And I cannot always find you
You win
I lose and you take pride of your skill In hiding away

There was this time in our lives
When we both hid
And fought and stood on some idealisms Like rocks against the sea Like towers standing against cyclones Like the tree against the winds of Change, I failed, I hid and fought and I was caught
To this renewal
But you brother has fought hard enough and Hides with all the skill you have They never found you
We never found you

Come out brother now, in peace Mama is dead; there is no use of these fights Times have changed
Our thoughts have become useless Come out, brother now,
The land is finally ours
We shall start to clean and plow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Brothers All

the gambler finally finds a conspiracy with the liar and the thief,

father is correct, this is the family of vice,
the eldest is the gambler, and the younger one is the liar, the thief is in the middle.

RIC S. BASTASA
Brothers And Sisters

now that the roots are dead and the buds cannot anymore turn into flowers of their own we turn back to the seeds hidden under the ground we look for the moist patches and begin to sprout

we give the leaves and then we become trees ourselves apart from each other now, not even knowing what are our names

we rationalize these separations the cycle of life
the pathways of survival the genetic tendrils looking for the light of the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Brothers In Sabah

we flew over a continent of palm trees we followed a road as wide as the ocean of the earth we shut our mouths over our little brothers surrounded by an ultimatum of surrender or death.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Brown And Blue, Revised....

it is not between blue or brown

it is of this earth
within the coolness of blue

it is when the brown shades of this
skin
are spread

when the blue shades of your eyes rest upon the floor of my belly

that my navel beats like a tadpole in that pond

as brown and scarlet take once more the interlinking of my earthly arms to the blueness of your skies it is when color seek each other's hold it is when when they mix and blend

that tones and scents become as perfect as both

RIC S. BASTASA
Brown Girl

do not live on a night without stars or if you live there fill the silence

with your songs

were it not for you how can he ever live

for another day
so

ms. brown girl
sing, sing a song (no matter how sad will it be)

for him

RIC S. BASTASA
Brown Grass: Doom

brown grass, no signs of rain, ripe grains of rice spreading on the ground the dust reigns like triumphant ant soldiers, the sun is up, the earth is heated, the leaves are shedding, the rocks are cracking, drought comes and stays for months, under a cave, a dog rests, smelling death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Brown Skinned

i always find time going back to the place which you do not like.
it is a pond
it dried up long time ago.
those who happen to pass there do not dare looking back.
what you love is not what i love.
we respect this. i try to explain you say there is no need.
i can go my way. FIND THE Pond who knows there's water soon. and my thirst shall be quenched.
you are sure. it was never a pond.
there was never water. it may rain but it is not a pond.
and there is no water.
i always find time going back there. i am not looking for water.
i am looking for myself and there is someone there who fetches water for me. brown skinned. sunken eyes. black hair. mute.

and he tells me who i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bruxism

it is the inability to assert
yourself
during the day
that you start grinding your teeth
at night
until all the teeth
fall
and they you wake
up
screaming.

RIC S. BASTASA
Buchart Garden

my friends are travelling for fifteen hours away from the drudgery of their lives to buchart garden

to see the island garden the flowers of their youth the fountains of their wishes the rivers of their lives

i am excited about the coming pictures through the emails after they have seen them all. i am waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Buckled

like a highway buckled by a heat wave so does a poem warps time like a yarn arranged lengthwise on a loom and then crossed by a woof, your body shape twisted by the way i look at some distance, you know it, you sit there and begin to write the words, it was still 3 o'clock in the afternoon when the people speak of arrivals and then departures, and then you finally finish your poem, carefully weaving and weighing and asking which word fits what you want to drive to the niche of your dead thoughts or to the womb of the birth of your fertilized words suddenly, the clock strikes 7: 09 in the evening you forget dinner, you forget the birthday party of a friend, you have forgotten time, and yet you are so alive, like the stars in your window that now have started to appear like fireflies on a very lonely tree. You close the door. It is dark.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bud Element Of Freedom

the bud element of freedom as tight as lips sewn into seven silences

it is painful when you keep it
that way
the cobwebs of time
cover what should have become a full petaled flower
for the vanilla skies

RIC S. BASTASA
Bud, Bud

A bud sighs a question into the air
The question
Diffuses
Layer by layer Into another sphere

The bud
Blooms
Into flower

Waiting sadly
It wishes to wither faster To trace the question
Gone away

RIC S. BASTASA
Buddha Faces Me

In lotus form, Buddha faces me This afternoon, his palms clasped He is seated, his feet kissing,
There is peace
And quiet, there is no sound no ripple
In this cool crystal clear pond

Both of us here, in a while It is I as usual bubbling,

Speaking words, and more words in Popping out from my restless mind

Overheating, overdoing,

Why me now? Why have you come now When I have no peace to offer you?

How can this kind of prayer work for me?

RIC S. BASTASA
Inig tapad sa akong nawong Diha sa imong kilid

Dapit sa ubos sa imong Kahumot og kaanyag

Pangitaon ko ang buhagay Sa mga bugnaw nga busay.

Damghon sa akong ngabil Ug dila ang imong katam-is,

Kaaslom, kaasgad, ang tanan Apil na gani ang kapait

Kay alang kanako ikaw Akong salomon, akong tilaan

Akong kitkiton sa ilalom Sa imong mga suba ug dagat

Sa pusod sa imong mga langob Sa mga kangiob diin ako

Ang kabo sa kahayag Ang kainit sa dila ug ako

Ang baba, ang tilaok, Ang liog, ang dughan.

Paimna kining giuhaw.
Dawata ang akong dila.

Paaka ako ug kan-a.
Tun-la ako tagoi ako.

Diha sa lawak sa imong Kalag ako mobuhagay.
Build Me A Boat

build me a boat
do not paint it let it just be the most natural color of wood
the glow of mahogany

build me this boat and i shall sail on it one night when the sea is so calm i shall put nothing in there not a paddle
or a rudder

build me this boat that will take me to my own world
away from you

RIC S. BASTASA
you build a big house with one thought, a wish that something may last forever like love, like the finest wood like a relationship, or say (let me say it this way) a marriage, like strong stairs inviting attention to society that no one is leaving like a door closing behind
a sigh,
but a house with time falls pillars collide, and floors go termite eaten to the ground doors fall out from the hinges that hold them in their frames, nothing lasts forever

i know,
i build a house because i know what love is i want to give it shelter and warmth like those rooms a glow like those living rooms a nice dinner
like the kitchen and the dining tables.

i do not think beyond my body that turns to dust
i know
i do not utter beyond my words, i know, no words can withstand the lures of the niceties of a lie.
i know

i build the house because we are here
and there is nothing
worth doing
there is no snow and ski is irrelevant.

RIC S. BASTASA
Building A House Of Your Own

to a newly wed couple building a house is poetry each nipa shingle is a memory put on top of another to make a roof, an imagery of protection, each wall is respect for privacy each beam is stability each door is a security each window an eye

the house is the nest of this new found love
and then a baby is born giving them hope as they both shower their affection and as love grows there like a well tended tree as time strengthens their company the house you know

has become their home

RIC S. BASTASA
Building Sandcastles

my brother and I
WE build sandcastles
on the shores
during lazy afternoons,

my brother finally joins the Sea
but i still remain
being Me

i am part of the Earth Linked to the Clouds a fRIEND OF THE stars
there are no blurs

my brother is not speaking
to Me
He is always in the middle of the Sea

Until one day.......
Building The Sandcastles

do not think that it is only children who build sandcastles. big people do, and worse, they do it in the air and they are serious about this matter someone comes along to destroy these sandcastles his job is simply to destroy and give the hassles dreams, as we all know them, someone always has the temerity to destroy all of them do not blame this dreambreaker, do not give him a bad name whether you like it or not the maker of the waves sends the sea to wash away the sandcastles that we build the maker of our dreams destroys these dreams and then be glad another cleansing has been duly accomplished and done

you see,
everything in this world always works for our own good and for the best

RIC S. BASTASA
Bumble Bee....

to go to sleep
i will take a ride on a bumblebee and i will take my last breath to life's lies...cheers!

RIC S. BASTASA
Burden On The Shoulders

as the weight of the burden on the shoulders increases one develops a trend

an evolution comes saving you from ruin

now on stronger arms and bigger bones
the weight becomes lighter for this is what  life is all about the more burdens there are the stronger we become with more rain

the thirst of the earth too deepens in automation

the balance seeks its own scale

RIC S. BASTASA
Bureaucratic Red Tape

Juan de la Cruz hates it.

He goes to Mr. X of Department Y, and he is shown a list of requirements from 1 to 10, and upon seeing 1 there is a sub-list of requirements from a to f, and then he is referred to Mr. Z of Department T, saying there is a need to attend to a seminar of sort, and then pay, this and that and this and that, when all he is asking is that the slight cut on his hand be dressed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Burning The Weeds

we take pride today in burning all the weeds

those dry weeds
with all their screams to the fire
we make

huge fire
we feel that hell in there big smoke rising to the skies

we look at the skies
seemingly God smiles

RIC S. BASTASA
Burning To Nothing

there is a light within us we do not keep it inside for soon it shall burn us alive and so we keep ourselves open to the blue skies and to the full moon at night so they all can see us flicker like a star glowing in the darkness of our longings we keep this light burning and burning night and day till we are all consumed till we are all gone like a candle burning itself to nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Burnt Love...

burnt love
teaches you the wisdom of the ash

those fallen leaves
share the beauty of twigs

a nest left out by those fledglings sometimes gives you
that sense
of home...

RIC S. BASTASA
Burnt Paper

it is a cut-out paper thin delicate white sharp

it is my world
apart from yours

i stay away from rain

put my paper feet on wood

as you pretend to be the woman of my pen

you touch but what you touch is just my paper
me

i have no more flesh no bone

the years have eaten them all

it cut-out from a shape of your desire

i am burnt.

RIC S. BASTASA
what i wanted to say i cannot say
and what i said is not really what i wanted to say because of your foreboding your rules are making me what i am not you keep on looking at me reminding me not to say it and so i keep it inside me for all those years
you are my own ghost for even if you are dead you are always there restraining filtering and here i am lost in the translation of myself from word to wolf, from syllable to bubble, in such a bloated gleam with sparkling rainbow in my emptiness, bursting once and never twice.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bursting....

the house in eastvale
was huge

only three people live
there

all white like the walls and the fence

well they were warm like the los angeles sun

you wonder why we do not perspire
unlike the place where we all come from

to sum it up we are some of those lonely people always lonely and perhaps will love it that way

fifteen hours on the plane without a lay over either in korea or perhaps singapore

we eat a lot to a hope that we learn more from this and then the plane lands, skids a bit

and we are not affected

this is home
this is the mind
and it is bursting.
Bursts Of Emotions....

over those square fields
after the harvest
the soil cracks
until the rain fills them all again
the wild ducks come with the white herons
the frogs croak
the mud fish is back
to life.

the cycle of life

burst of emotions
inside the nipa
hut....

RIC S. BASTASA
Bury Those Truths

not all truths
set you free, some bury you to the grounds of eternal damnation
these are those that better be left unsaid
forever kept on sealed lips and taken to the graves
so they can take finally their eternal rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
Burying He Dead Man

ey they are burying the dead today a loved one with Parkinson's disease

ey they all wear white and they look all too well for the mourning of the dead

ey they fly white balloons they sing the songs for the dead ah, the living knows how to socialize an event with all the metaphors

i am watching and i am sighing asking 'what is the fuss about this empty shell? ' afraid that they will call another one a freak i mix with the crowd and has become another unknown.

RIC S. BASTASA
Bus Travel At Night

it is the loneliest journey
bus travel at night
the driver does not talk to the conductor
the silence is the silence of the sleep of all the passengers

i follow the road
the signs are intact
there are only lights on the sides of the streets the trees are black the leaves are merely shadows the world passes me by in complete silence the scenes changes and all so sudden the world moves with me

the bus is a bullet

RIC S. BASTASA
Business Is Good

business is good today the war has just began we make more firearms both parties are buying and we sell them everything business is booming see to it that this war does not stop or again we go bankrupt.

RIC S. BASTASA
Busy Life....

inside the room
upon piles of paper
you do not even know if outside
it rained.

RIC S. BASTASA
Busy Streets And Noisy Malls

confronted about these noisy streets
and crowded malls
and honking motors
in traffic jams

i go within into that peaceful haven inside my mind
my heart
sleeping in the cozy
nook
of my being.

RIC S. BASTASA
Busy...

you body clock
does not tell time,

busy body, slimy fingers,
trembling hands,
wrecking nerves
fast tracking heart,

exploding ideas
killing boredom

it's been this way since

nothing is written
the spirit is away

the body is left here comatose

dreams like butterflies hovering on some red flowers heartless sounds of discontent

fingers dissociated from hands the eyes are closing

like closed computers at 8 o'clock in the morning

RIC S. BASTASA
But Always Remember No One Owns It

now is the time
to feel the wind passing by your window hear what it is and let it in

inside your lungs
let it stay

but always remember no one owns it

it must come out again
as you exhale

what you can keep is the memory of its freshness and once again

you decide to live.

RIC S. BASTASA
But Could Care Less For A Red Ant

one can love the world the whole of it
but cannot love one
for a time

one can love the universe all of those stars and the planets but could care less for a red ant

RIC S. BASTASA
But Even Ashes Are Cried Over, Sometimes Even For A Long Time

Life is amazing
in that it makes us forget.... but even ashes
are sometimes cried over...

sometimes
even for a very long
time

tell me more
the name
of that ash?

for whom shall you grieve?

for whom you have loved?

for whom
you have died?

for whom
you have lived again....

RIC S. BASTASA
But God

she is worried about what is happening to me the silence and the stare the long walks seem not to help the loss of appetite for life the one that forgets the sweet taste of water the softness of rain

at night

to all the queries
there will be no answer

God is like that
He is silence and why do we not have to worry about Him?
His silence for all those eons and eons Did you see his hands? Did you triumph on doubts?
Do you ever remember his last appearance? when was that?

she is worried because i am asking for specifics now she is worried because God is Love and all my love is gone including what i once revealed to her that first time when we were so young and so gullible

about
the magic of creation

we are all dumb.

RIC S. BASTASA
But If You Don’t Love Me Anymore

If you change and don’t love me anymore If you don’t really care anymore If you don’t laugh at my jokes Or does not like my hug Or kisses
Or my company
If you change

Just say it clearly
No pretenses, no covers, no ambiguities Nothing equivocal

No regrets

I can manage
I can change too
I can change you too

Lots of them, and they will love me too

Now go. I’ll find another.
There is no bother. No problem.

Leave, while I keep words unkind Within. Leave while still early, and Be kind to yourself.

Now we are free, from our Hypocrisy. Receive the fullness of

This
Blessing in disguise. At last, I am free.

My prayer is too, granted.

if you really do not love me anymore say it clearly

because i don't love you anymore too.

RIC S. BASTASA
But It Will Never Be The Same Old Friends

it is the same old path
but it will never be the same old friends someone will be missing someone will not remember someone will take another path and most of the times always far away from all of us but we too soon shall forget and if we happen to take the same old path oh, perhaps we will remember

RIC S. BASTASA
But Let Me Talk Now About The Sunflower Queen at first i contemplate about the sunflower as a princess but it will not do her justice because she is the queen

of the sun,
she rules the fields of green and blue
and red too, these sunsets and even sunrises playing well tagging her along to paths of joys & sorrows

she stands flower high
to the clouds
to storms and tempests
she yields
like any flower still queenly to her bowing only to rise again with her seeds

yes, her many princesses by her side wilted yellowed petals
and withered stalk
some soft winds
sad
some drops of rain still about to fall

RIC S. BASTASA
But The Feeling Beneath The Word

it is not the language, but the feeling beneath the word, it is not the word that makes you trickle a bit like a leaking faucet, it is the trickle itself, the one that you saw when you woke up upon a dream about a leaking faucet, the one that disturbs you, until you have found it, and closed it.

it is not the idea, but the images you construct and paint in the air when the night is cold and you are alone in a room and you open the window to let the air come it and you feel how cold is it like you.

it is not the images even, it is what you create inside your mind, while waiting, while the hours rush to you, while you are trying to figure out, what is it that disturbs you and yet there is still nothing to capture it and then master it yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
But The Years Have Not Yet Spoken

it will always be a law that we cannot change that for every action we make we always get a reaction that things at rest will always remain at rest unless acted upon by an unequal and opposite force...

with you today, i shall move away and i will always be in motion unless you take the initiative of holding me back again...

with you in the entire life that i have i have not reacted with inequality and i shall not move you into accepting the fact that sometimes this law of motion and rest may not work between us

otherwise
i should have packed all my things put them tight inside my heart make myself whole again strong and determined to take the direction of the winds of my mind...

i shall wait for the time when you change perhaps but the years have not yet spoken

RIC S. BASTASA
But They Can Never Be Mine

the face
the breasts and nipples the abdomen
the smoothness of the skin down to the last details of the body
the middle and the bottom the legs and veins and toes and nails all these dance before me to my pleasure

i shut my mouth
i hold my hands and tell myself

oh how beautiful! (but) they are not mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
But Who Cares? Ah, God Loves Me.

Now i like to live in a very small planet

but it is still huge
for me

For i am a speck of dust

I can be smaller than that

But who cares?
Ah, God loves me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Butiki, Bituka, Butika

Palakang Kabkab,
kumakalabukab,
kaka-kalabukab pa lamang, kumakalabukab na naman.

Minimikaniko ni Monico ang makina ng Minica ni Monica.

pitongput pitong butong puting patani

Sumuso ang sanggol na si Susie sa suso ni Susan na sumuso sa suso.

Kakakanan lang sa kangkungan sa may kakahuyan si Ken Ken habang kumakain ng kakaibang kakanin kahapon.

Mayamaya'y mamamanhikan si Aman sa mayamang si Maya malamang sa harap ng maraming mamamayan.

Usong usong
isang isang salu-salong nagsisi-usyosohan ang mga aso sa asosasyon sa Ascuzena.

Bababa ka Ba?
Bababa din ako!

RIC S. BASTASA
imagine
how butterflies live the moment in an hour a day perhaps they are all dead
wings clipped gladly
they give in to the murderous joys of the boy
or simply by the natural caprices of the winds

imagine how happiness is savored in such short moments
everyday
life and death
interchanging like two faces
day and night

imagine myself as a gathering of butterflies
all over my body
my parts all with wings in dusty transparencies imagine how i disappear
from you
even if you have not touched
any part in me

for i am but a moment an appearance of a series of disappearances for i am but a mirage always gone
when you
come and want to see me

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive Butterfly

everything is interrelated nothing is compartmentalized

capital thus when the butterfly in China dies the bear in Russia also suffers when the monkey in the Philippines falls short of the banana the anaconda of Brazil becomes sterile when the tiger of Africa kills the parrot in Paraguay feels

everything is interrelated
nothing is a stone
no one is a creek
we are all one river.

RIC S. BASTASA
Butterfly Song

AS I sit upon a the grass a white butterfly flutters by in fragile and slow wings
synonymous to a feather

such is the sweetest song that it can offer to the air
everything is so quiet

RIC S. BASTASA
Butting In

i do not really know what is between us when i talk you butt in and when i am silent you begin to listen which should have been easier if we remain silent tonight when i butt in you must open

RIC S. BASTASA
Butuan Airport

i met this old woman who lives in Seattle dance teacher
now at 79
she does not look like an old hag really

she brags she can dance the boogie or tango non-stop for five hours

she does not eat much she walks more

she told me she was once married but she ended it
she went her way to the U.S.A.

her husband made her a punching bag did not give her money had other women as she served as his geisha washing his clothes cooking his meals bathing him
etcetera

her neighbors even advised her to poison him one day but she didn't

instead she went her way to the U.S.A.
where she is now free

she says she can dance non-stop for five hours and no one has yet defeated her for that

oh my! what a woman!

in just a short span
of time
while we waited for our plane

she, i think has told her story
so well.

RIC S. BASTASA
By All Our Windows.

the trees
are pruned.
the sea is
calm.
too much
to do here.
i tell those who live here,
cut the twigs
let the trees
stand tall,
and do not always forget
to find an open space for the all
the clouds.

by all our windows.

RIC S. BASTASA
By And By

ah, life is by and by you pass at this corner walk further
go inside a door
stay for a while
and then
do what everybody does pass away.

RIC S. BASTASA
By Faith.......

when a stone
 grows its roots
 when it rises into a sprout
 into a bush into a flower
 into fire we are surprised
 we are not prepared
 for all these
 we have remained our own unbelievers
 when something turns into mist
 blooms into clouds
 we finally meet them as rain
 we touch back
 and close our eyes
 we feel them all again by faith and not by sight.

RIC S. BASTASA
By My Belly....

how sweet is your smile how beautiful you look tonight now you are near me and i am like a crazy dog wanting to bite your lips, your mouth, your tongue your saliva smells like leche flan

to me,

i have become one beast wanting to eat such innocence as you.
and you will be forever a part of me.

i will feast on you from morning till nighttime.
under the moon and the coldness of this night,
my belly sleeps.

RIC S. BASTASA
By My Window At The Second Floor Of My Office

the strong wind
last night
brought it by
the window
of this second floor office

rotten branch with a lichen still growing
a patch of green on brown bark

a bottle of mineral water is empty
and it is beside it

the glass window
shows it
and so i notice it

not my fault
why i am saying about their existence

again these things are not significant

except perhaps the strong wind
last night

it gave us fear amidst the darkness
when all the lights turned off

RIC S. BASTASA
By My Window....

dawn
darkness finally receding

morning
light spreads

the leaves of trees
begin to appear

the mountains
show up in magnificence little black birds hover on the tree fronting my window dews giving up mist gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
By Now My Friend

By now my friend
you may have figured out what it means to be me that sometimes i live in the land of the opposites where i say is what i do not really do and when i do what i have not ever mentioned to you and that sometimes in order to survive (and make you feel good for you to live like the way i live my days in the land of the living)

i, too, must live the degrading life of the black spider a widower who makes the web of lies to catch my prey and eat the whole day of its flesh and then rest for the rest of the week praying for the forgiveness of what i just did rationalizing that i am but a spider living alone and not denying what loneliness can sometimes do to our lives
how it hurts us and how we hurt in return just to get even with what we think is unjustly given

By now my friend
you could have seen how this magical gossamer web cling between the branches of indifferent trees you could have heard the gentleness of its silence glistening against the sun and yet deadly and dangerous to the innocent flies to mosquitoes too complacent to their journeys in the final destinations for my necessary personal consumption.

RIC S. BASTASA
By Now.....

heavy rain
moonless night

just me
in this abandoned
house.

no dreams
by now.

RIC S. BASTASA
By Our Ownd Decisions

I keep this magic of choice
this wand of options

are there dragons?
i can turn them into lizards
do they still use the fire of their tongues?
i can make them
torches in the darkness of our paths

are there hawks?
they can be butterflies are there hornets as hindrances?
they can all be fireflies

where there is going to be war
i can always move to peaceful places
of the heart

where there is cruelty
and oppression
there are always places for contemplation and
peace...

this right to choose this myriad options

there are all in the lines of our palms
on destinies paved by our own decision
By The River

wooden boat slides in the river
stopping on a woman
undressing

RIC S. BASTASA
By The River Of Time

by the river of time
no one stands still

the river of time
carries everyone away

on wrinkled creeks
on waterfalls that stop to fall on rains that consume themselves

on leaves that crack to the power of the sun

the river of time drowns us all to the comfort of oblivion.

RIC S. BASTASA
By The Sea

the sea is crystal clear the seagulls mirror what they have on their feathers the fishes too transparent the feast starts

predator prey
on a very clear day

that is life in peace someone has to eat
and someone is eaten

like us in love, we prey on weakness
all strengths and wisdom all forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
By The Window

two men pass by my window talking about a pigeon run-over by a car

by all means it is already dead
when they finally arrive at the scene of the morning crime

RIC S. BASTASA
Bye Baby Please Do Not Cry

bye baby please do not cry
somehow we must realize some stars are not meant to stay in heaven some planets too need not stay all light years some suns too disappear for they are stars some things simply explode and pooh in a second just this bang and twang and gone

bye baby please do not cry
i am this black hole and i suck all feelings in and then move on

RIC S. BASTASA
Bye Bye Girl Bye Bye Past

someone posits a theory about yourself
how you have to explain the reason for your absence how she thinks that you have never moved on with her past love for her and you give her what she wants you align your seven planets to her system and she may believe you but you have other important things to do you have another beloved another lover another season another place another orgasmic universe and you are into this game that no one has ever played you cater to their beliefs and you pretend you are moving with them as always and then you let them move ahead and finding an exit by the side of your hidden life you finally get lost.

and that where to find and really find a true self and true love.

RIC S. BASTASA
i wonder if poverty is still worth writing that little child once in cabantian in 1979 eating breakfast: a glass of water, chunk of brown sugar, a cup of rice that was all that i saw and i wrote poem about poverty and poured my heart out, i went back to the same place last year the shanties are gone perhaps the child has become another work force in the banana plantation or perhaps he had gone somewhere to the big city serving as bell boy at the hotel or waiter in a pizza house or perhaps before that happened he could be one of those salvaged victims in the crusade against domestic rebellion one of the unsolved disappearances in Davao cabantian is silent, as it was silenced before. no one knows. Perhaps he died at 15

...i do not really know and i do not want to recall.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cactus

equipped now with thorns
you seduce
the moon

you rise above
the rocks
and seek the heated rage of the
sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Cactus Hostess, Her Dialogue

you may sit as we welcome you
mr. honored guest
but all we have
is a cactus chair

you may sleep
but all we have is a cactus bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Calai

friend Calai just flunked her bar, and never, with her own intelligence, guts and diligence did she expect such an astronomical failure, but it is real, she flunked her bar, and she is weeping alone in her room, her eyes swell with tears flooding her cheeks her room so filled with gloom
i guess,
there is always a first time, and i guess again, given her indifference to failures, but soon sooner than soon, she will get used to it, to other failures in her life, and then she will be adopted to it and won't be bothered anymore, by then, we can talk freely, mature, real and strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
Calamity

washing the shovels
on a murky river

nearby a bloated body of a dog

RIC S. BASTASA
Calbiga Caves

the caves of calbiga hide the roots of trees those that seem to be growing strong from above them
the summit of green leaves and cool summer breeze
from the samar sea

the same roots
that you talk about somewhere in vietnam
age and ages
they never tell us
the truth about themselves we see them now
still strongly attached living and breathing but as usual mute

about the horrors of war the killing of tribes the annihilation of brothers who came here before us? what have they done

that you fear talking?

i know there used to be blood running along the rivers and the tributaries

i know there are still other stories to be told but the water is now colder and the night is near

we pack up again
and then go........

RIC S. BASTASA
Call A Spade A Spade

at that very young age you were taught to call a spade a spade and a square a square. There are no exceptions to the rule.
There are no compromises with the truth.

Then you grow to be a very nice, self-made man.
You practice what was taught to you.
And you meet pain and disappointments.
And you suspect that the teachers are wrong.

Time teaches you.
Squares sometimes become rectangles on an extension of a principle to accommodate a compromise of a certain shape.
A spade need not be a spade depending on who gets axed.
A square peg you sometimes put in a round hole and it does not matter really what happens next. You are simply told to do so as ordered.
And what is important is that they like it.
You survive the hazards of this life.

You become successful on the science of compromise, the art of plea bargaining, the techniques of human relations.
You get some plaques for a lessened self-restraint.
You get the awards and recognitions for being their man of the year.

And one day you look at yourself in the mirror.
You see a different face and you do not like it anymore.

You quit and hide. You go away. You want to be left alone.
You want to reinvent yourself and listen to the voice.

Carefully, you cure the sickness of success.
All you need is a self who accepts yourself. All you need is the touch of your hand. The applause has become pain itself.
And there you are, finding the truth real meaning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Call Me A Snooper

that vic married a minor not for love but for sex alone,
and after all those lust he finally left her for another, your friend who is a psychiatrist, that now he marries
for a reason to understand himself and untangle
all those ropes from his body,
counting sheep and
dogs,
you doubt how i learn all these things as i assure you that all these are true,
it is simple, it was the loneliness that built us, it was the friendship
that keeps us all informed, that is why
vic finally painted that portrait of a woman with twisted eyes a broken mouth
an incomplete foot.

RIC S. BASTASA
Call Me Idiot

a word from you,
and i will remember it,
on this
elephantine memory,

idiot, you call me idiot, and i shall retort for once but not twice, not anymore shall i become another image of you,
i dread.

i will not call you moron, but i shall be in my room again
alone
on an array of oxymora talking to the drapes and the drawers burying all these humiliations, and putting a stop to my fears,

i will see the dancing chairs and hug the lovely pillows, hide beneath my blankets,

i promise myself, i will have a nice sleep and inside my dream

i shall write the most beautiful poem in my life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Calling For Help

a hose with a hole in the garden makes so much sound
as though it is a man drowing in the middle of the sea
calling for help

doi not wish to change things
doi not want to help
di like to watch and see what really happens

when i decide to simply be indifferent

RIC S. BASTASA
Callista Relates To Me Like A Bird for i too have wings like her hidden underneath my loose shirt and i too move down the stairs and up towards the heavens where the stars are.

for i too pretend that i cannot fly mingling with the rest of the crowd in the mall for i too want to soar someday away from you away from everybody for i too dream of a time when the rain stops when the river ebbs when the trees grow tall when the clouds finally drift to give way to a gentler light for i too am waiting just for the perfect time for the perfect direction of the softest wind to fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
Calm Down

as the ship is about to sink she calms down
tucking her baby in her arms deciding finally to jump and swim in the stormy water

in an island she wakes up and then she screams!

RIC S. BASTASA
Calm……

in a hammock
from Argentina
I gaze
at the Philippine
sky
early this morning
gently
i caress and rock myself beside the white sandy beach

RIC S. BASTASA
Camel

i am not ashamed to say that i have never seen a living camel (except the pictures and movies Lawrence of Arabia)

how i wish to ride on the hump of the camel touch its hair and lick its tongue

(do you find it dirty? am i weird?) but despite this ignorance i must with all honesty admit i smoke Camel cigarettes.

I am not horny
I am just being corny

Oh forget me
I am damn crazy!

RIC S. BASTASA
Camp Fire

a few of us soon shall meet on a side of a hill where we will build a fire
where we send smoke to heaven
where we stare
at the flame and reminisce
what love we once had what violence too was there
how time was both saved and wasted

at dawn when the wood is finally consumed by fire when the flame
is gone
when what we have
are mere ashes
and cold winds
we then begin the ritual

we sort out what we soon will write.

RIC S. BASTASA
Can Love Bloom?

When we reach cicada hills

i fall asleep
and then dream about someone
i have never even met

upon a blank face
can love bloom?

RIC S. BASTASA
Can One Escape The Written Fate?

it is what i believe and so it must be, and so it is going to
me,
things always change for the better
as always claiming the power of prayer,
say not that i cannot escape the judgment of fate,
say not, that everything is already written
and what we have to do is simply to open the page and read and see the pictures and landscapes posted,
oh, do not be mislead
i do believe in prayers, the hands that somehow
change
the pictures and the words, i have a way to escape
what fate has written,
i plea, i beg,
i kneel, i chant

and here's the change
the offer of fate,
your untimely end is suspended another change is given another time
love, life,
and immortality....

RIC S. BASTASA
Can She Really Go Slow On Poetry?

you bet. As i am telling you there is no such thing as stopping and there is no such thing as slowing either as emotions are part of our mental matrix so shall poetry be, there is no choice the words keep coming and you do not mind what the critics say, you keep on writing down the revelations of your good self and the way the bad black horse tries to kick you off this universal fence, cannot kick you again more than what it desires unless you shall allow it helplessly.

you flow now like the way the rain falls and wets you. You have become part of its greatness and out you go running against the rocks and boulders, ultimately finding your self again at the bottom of the sunless sea, into an enticing infinity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Can You Eat Poetry?

into a thankless
art

poetry...splash!

RIC S. BASTASA
Can’t Jibe With All Of You

an oil dropping in a basin of water
i cannot jibe as another usual sound
in this noisy chatter

i want to be a silent stone by
the river
but i cannot be this every moment
till my death

and so i fly away like that black bird from
your mouth
i hover upon a rock on the side of the cliff
feeling the clouds
drifting away....

RIC S. BASTASA
Canadian Canary

sleep now baby it is late dreams, have some dreams you need dreams to appease you i will not be with you

anymore

come summer time
the sun shines in full glory and i will be with my sunflowers

the wind
and the moon and some stars to carry me away from my previous rainy days, so sleep now,

dream about the sunflowers and let your hair flow freely
with the wind,

forget him for a while, think some more,
destiny awaits you
with so much anticipation, without plans.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cancer And Compassion...

compassion makes the young intelligent man to be too considerate about the inability of the old clerical woman in court who is sick with cancer to be too lax with the way she makes a sentence with all the blunders of syntax and grammar he smiles and tells her, 'thank you you are of great service to this office' the old woman knows that he does not really mean it but she understands the shortness of her life and she does not do anything to correct his decent lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cancer Free....

and this is the good news about joji, for she is a happy good fella, cancer free, they say, because she prays that much and people pray that much we'll drink to that,
buen salud
and let us sing the praises To God the Highest you have set her free welcome, joji, and now let us be crazy once more to life, for life,
with life, by Life.
alleluah!

RIC S. BASTASA
Cancer Of The Cervix

her husband left her when their kids were just a matter of three, four, five years she had to feed them alone with the use of her very own flesh literally. i mean it.

all daughters went to Japan and danced.

they married and
got rich.

and then she wore
an expensive jewelry

on her hands and ears

and then he wrote a letter saying that he likes to come back. She opened her arms

to hug him.

i went to manila
and spent my life there in three days.

attending to her wake
offering prayers
for her
dead and wasted
body.

i am learning in that place
what is betrayal
what is forgiveness
what is reconciliation

what is death what is it to be lost in a crowd what is it to be left alone what is cancer?

and they always say the truth there is no cure.

may she rest in peace.
amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cancer Patient....

this is the reality of man losing his hair of a woman losing her breasts dis is the sadness of having to exist and no longer benefiting about the promises of living

they say this is just a trial of that long and lasting error one hopes after every chemotherapy in each vomit
one sticks to life after every harsh radiation clinging to every remaining healthy flesh each cell
rebelling upon another

the doctor says
now madam you are cancer free but it will only be for months and so there is another party with friends and supportive members of your family only to wake up in the morning with blood oozing flooding your linens

there will be relapses and those cancer cells that did not die
comes again
like a warrior wounded
now stronger than ever given the expensive choices of money

and emotions

i guess, you may call me cruel, the correct and rightful option is merely to surrender it is only the body that dies the soul perfect as usual flies again heeding for its real home....

RIC S. BASTASA
Canción Del Mariachi

the usual stars
and guitar under the open sky

the usual dance
and clapping of the hands

affairs of the heart forgetting everything

the stars, the moon
man woman and the child to come

RIC S. BASTASA
Candid And Fearless

..and here is another human thing whose goal is to save money so he can sit under the tallest red wood tree in California

ah, this human thing in us still rooted to earth and its temporary reliefs
its limited senescence
its temporal attractions

such a relief
i do not have it anymore

i am candid
i am fearless

i am growing the flowers
for the dead
i like the woodenness
of silence.....

RIC S. BASTASA
she took a handkerchief and tied it round her neck her niece said the prayers saying it was caused by mere feelings feelings end everything sometimes and it is no wonder it is acceptable nowadays the sad fact is no one wants to mention it and so it simply forgets itself like water boiling and evaporating and what is left is the cold tin of a can in our chat you blame me for taking about endings that i should have mentioned more about sunlit beginnings grazing fields and limitless horizons of green and blue and flaming sunsets that make our mouths gape for beauty i tell you i am not a story teller

i am a poet
and endings
are not open
most of the times

sometimes they are insults that one must bear even in one's self dug graves

there is always a responsibility that must be gripped by our hands and if these hands open and surrender respect to some insignificant handkerchiefs

so be it

sadness is not a reason and it is not always beautiful

so be it

let those who cannot bear bury themselves
we have our own preoccupations our graves to dig too our our litany of justifications
after

RIC S. BASTASA
Candid, Frank

Frank made love to Candid last night Candid groaned and Frank could not help but explode and say afterward 'i love you' candid to please Frank says 'i need you'

Candid had an orgasm on Subtle

Frank knew, but his love always Understands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cannabis Sativa

the way to enter into the magical mind of my god, you take in the smoke of cannabis sativa like she were a goddess a diva of the latvia,
via the ducts of the endocrine glands testosterone like in power penetrating the sweet emptiness of the holes of the virginal nymphs at the back of the university where the ponds are so silent.

the nymph broke down wingless in moans

that sound of weightlessness as light as an ounce of air as free as a lock of hair blown somewhere

RIC S. BASTASA
Cannot Be Fully Contained.....

i have secrets

those valleys and hills that i love and that i can exchange
my soul for those sunsets

that i adore and which

you cannot see
and ever speak

for which my eyes
feast and delight
my hands hold so
dear
like the sun and winds

too many of them not one, yet, you can feel

i am dead
because of those that you have never seen
or tasted

and so forgive me
for all those lies
those excuses

i am alive
in the world of the dead
because
of too much
bliss

my hands even in thousands my eyes even in hundreds cannot be fully contained.

RIC S. BASTASA
Can'T Help It

the urge that is there like a bud popping out for the sun
in an ephemeral meeting rays of light
and innocent petals of the white blossom
of spring
miracles of all miracles an awakening.

RIC S. BASTASA
Can'T Really Fly

how we try to grow wings the efforts exerted ask the hornets

we try to be one like the herons
yet we failed for we get stuck to mud and we take in too much water and look what has happened to our hands

we melt and back to the ditch again we have become the runners with the water
deep down under the sewage with the stink
and soon we sink
with the pebbles
buried with all dirt

can't really fly
like a gnat
i told you so but anyway let us just be us
in this contented silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Can'T Really Get Enough Of Love Babe

once i have it, there is this irony, i give it away, i wish, i dream, i work to have what i do not have yet once it is in my hand, there is this irony, i throw it away.

the paradox of feelings, i had this joy, long time ago, and i let it go, and i wish it comes back to me, like a memory of someone too far away, i spend life like it is not life at all, i wish death, like death is life, like it is not like, this is the irony of my life, hating and loving and hating and loving, until, everything is gone i have nothing and then i feel so complete.

RIC S. BASTASA
Can'T Stop Loving You

no matter where i go to the farthest sea
to the loneliest island to the most crowded city to the deserted town to the dry deserts
to the coldest snow
up the skies
to the endless space down below
to the hottest fires
you are still there

My Lord
how can i stop loving you when you never never never stop loving me?

RIC S. BASTASA
We will not forget the evil eye of the storm they raised, gutting the grounds we defended.
We have been trained to look away too often when man’s flesh, muscle, bone, knifed woman, to protect the child’s eye from the dust of the lord’s sin against our kind, pretending our tears are daughters of the wind blowing across no-woman’s- land.
We have had to seek the center of the storm in the land we claim is ours, too. Faces keening towards the full force of winds once blinding us, we see the blur of broken earth, blasted wastes, damned seas.
Our vision clears in our weeping We have joined the trek of desert women, humped over from carrying our own oases in the claypots of our lives, gathering broken shards we find in memory of those who went ahead of us, alone.
When we seize the watersource our ranks will complete the circle we used to mark around our tents, making homes, villages, temples, schools, our healing places.
And we will bear witness for our daughters and sons, telling them true stories of the caravan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Care Free Guy

he stands against an old wall on folded arms
watching people pass by

let time kills its hours let it choke the minutes

faded denims
white shirt
he winks at the lady who believes that a man likes him
has a lot of time to offer her

she is boredom he is the perfect man for her he kills time he shall choke her hours like the way her hands press her breasts

squeezing
her private moments
to juices of their complimentary convenience

RIC S. BASTASA
Caregiver Leaving Again

The children of Punta Sing you a sad song
We hear the whirring Sounds of dragonfly wings
Then the plane flies you To Chicago
As you make Many flying kisses

RIC S. BASTASA
Caressing That Which Had Long Been Dead.

i am trying to write from my innermost, i am attempting to skin myself, so you can see the beauty of my bones,

it is like stripping myself from the burden of clothes, and soon i shall be naked before you, like a confession, which you may hear, like a litany of my own weaknesses and shortcomings,

i am finished with all those metaphors, i may go with the literalness of my free verse, like, what you see is what you get thing, off the grid.

i am removing fences now, but slowly, so i shall not bleed and die sooner than my truths, a manifold of coverings, until what you see is the plainness of my own light

so here i am dancing to the sound of a drudgery, the songs for the dead, in a funeral march, hear the wailing of the women i love, the murmurs of my secret longings, the silence of my lies, the hushes of hands that touch my hair, caressing that which had long been dead.
RIC S. BASTASA
Caring For Your Body

you do not smoke definta about alcoholic drinks you take your centrum vitamins drink the morning milk and shy away from chocolates you exercise everyday take the morning walks and spend your time
on a warm sunshine

sometimes, you ask
why?

and sometimes you reach for an answer: don't know why is it that despite this caring for the body this beautiful body something inside you still wants to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Caring Less For The Loquacious

seated, formal, behaved, and stopping to read the morning paper, the tv is on for the usual morning news, the cup of coffee is on the breakfast table, the usual rice and sunny side up fried egg and dried fish to with your wish for the wholesome thing, salt and sugar and something sour like a piece of lemon to accentuate your need for a variety, in front is a woman with curly hair, big earrings like a mystic, she speaks in crystal ball reminding you of your inevitable pain in the future, you are her slave and you listen, though you are not interested, (shit, shit, you have these words hammering in your mind) finally, you take a glimpse of her mouth, they look like scissors, her nose looks like a wrench, she looks older than you think, cranky like an old

rice mill,
you like to get rid
of her,
you know this woman,
hers name,
and her being a part of you
even for life,

you create a certain distance like Mars and Pluto, farther away, you settle on the orbit of earth, this marble planet, known for its coolness
and tolerance for
evil.

you're not quitting,
you love that dragon inside your hot, creamy coffee, and then you smile, and tell yourself, after she had spoken
her piece,

it is a beautiful day it is a real beautiful life out there.

you step inside your car, drive for work, and let life manage your life somehow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Carlo, Do Not Grieve

do not grieve
over a woman

she is just a flower and like a flower

it will not take a longer time

she wilts and then you will be free?

shall you be free
when that flower wilts?

can't you be at least a busy bee?

she is not the only flower in this garden

there are so many more don't grieve my friend

be a man
man is reason.

RIC S. BASTASA
What now, José?
The party’s over,
the lights are off,
the crowd’s gone,
the night’s gone cold,
what now, José?
what now, you?
you without a name,
who mocks the others,
you who write poetry
who love, protest?
what now, José?
You have no wife,
you have no speech
you have no affection,
you can’t drink,
you can’t smoke,
you can’t even spit,
the night’s gone cold,
the day didn’t come,
the tram didn’t come,
laughter didn’t come utopia didn’t come and everything ended
and everything fled
and everything rotted
what now, José?
what now, José?
Your sweet words,
your instance of fever,
your feasting and fasting,
your library,
your gold mine,
your glass suit,
your incoherence,
your hate—what now?
Key in hand
you want to open the door, but no door exists;
you want to die in the sea,
but the sea has dried;
you want to go to Minas but Minas is no longer there.
José, what now?
If you screamed,
if you moaned,
if you played
a Viennese waltz,
if you slept,
if you tired,
if you died...
But you don’t die,
you’re stubborn, José!
Alone in the dark
like a wild animal,
without tradition,
without a naked wall
to lean against,
without a black horse
that flees galloping,
you march, José!
José, where to?

RIC S. BASTASA
Carlos' In The Middle Of The Road, Plagiarized By Me

in the middle of my writing career there was you you were in the middle of my writing career there was you
in the middle of my writing career there was you never should i forget this incident in the life of my broken eyelashes never should i forget that in the middle of my writing career

there was you
there was you in the middle of my writing career in the middle of my writing career
there was you

you were that stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Carlsbad

two warm bodies
taking a swim to the sea

they kiss underwater looking for each other's wounds

unshaven hair
and some lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Carousels

I

merry-go-round, at the amusement park, the laughter of children and the mothers
as fathers watch,
life

II

this circular conveyor when you are at the airport claiming your luggage and heavy baggages,
because you are all alone, hiding from your misfortune

III

remember the tournament knights in horse races gallantry used to be evalliant
word of honor

IV

& this time
of the year the trademark of a circular tray
photographic transparencies the projector
where you see your own life through slots

V

where everything about you rotates
at the sacrifice of right direction

RIC S. BASTASA
Carpe Diem

actually my dear, the most that matters is now. This is the moment. There is no other.

what is inside my palm is not yours to guess for i may not follow your wish your dream, what is here inside me is alive but only for this moment, there is no time to think or imagine. This is only the moment. The now.

This is the only moment. It is now.
Hold my hand. As we pass the river of our lives.

Do not look back, as the rush of the water may be too harsh. Look at my eyes. This is the only moment.

Do not look down at your feet. The water is flowing.
And flowing. There is nothing that you can hold with your fingers and drink. It is and it will be impossible to grasp, a past reality, a future possibility.

This is the only is the only truth. Grab it with both hands and tell me. Now, is the only truth. This moment of our lives. You hear the sound of a cascade.
That is what we are now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Carpe Noctem

you seize the day but let me have the nights where i am unknown to you i won't let you know what happiness lurks in the dark alleys
of my soul

RIC S. BASTASA
Carr, .....

how could he had truly loved someone whose only liking was to tab him with a jagged knife tie him with shoelaces and stones to sink his dead body to the murky river?

how can love end at murder? at a novel that speaks his ultimate death with someone who thinks that he should have been dead a long time ago? a mockery of love, a snare of all humanity.

there were so many lies, and for this, i never really liked it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Carried Away
	ry bathing in the river swim, swim, swim farther you feel light, you are like a fish now carried by the magic of water somehow you long for depths and distance you forget the specific instance you are carried away floating to your instincts so trusting you do not even notice that it is already dark and the moon begins to sail with you with the lark towards a dreamy evening where you are free and light like a drifting star

RIC S. BASTASA
Carry On The Spark In Your Heart

there will be lots of dry leaves to fall from a tree to produce a fruit more leaves to be blown by the wind to make that flower with a sweet scent and bright color there will be thorns and worms and sickening barks
there will even be deaths of some trees not just the shedding of leaves but what matters most is for you to carry on with the mission to bloom
do not let that spark die that fire that keeps burning in your heart make it live carry on carry on it does not just take a blink of an eye
to make this beautiful universe

RIC S. BASTASA
Carry Over

i am a very patient man willing to understand you.

kick me and lay with me
step on me
and go over on top of me

i will turn into a blossom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Carrying A Self

you carry a self with you and you barely know who but just the same you carry it with you simply because you can't go you can't be without that self that 's you, and sometimes what the self wants you simply can't do but you must lest there be a division within and so in yourself there are rooms where you and this self and the rest can be at home....

give each a space to be itself and yourself, toast and celebrate...

then mind you, you smile now, there is unity in this diversity...

lust, love, greed, charity, silence noise, solitude, crowd, cowardice, bravery, honesty and some much needed lies, visibility and invisibility...

you must learn, these are necessities.

RIC S. BASTASA
Carrying The Pains

before anything else is pain

it is born
before everything else

it is the beginning
of personal wisdom

it is a teacher
without pay

it hammers the nails throughout the
body

one gets familiar
with the
touch of pain

it becomes pain no more but an everyday carpentry
in that wooden system

a house appears and there are windows

your eyes begin to see
your hands
learn feelings

then you leave it just like any house

you are a vagabond
on ceaseless pathways

you still carry that pain built inside your skin

like a tattoo
the art of the scar

anywhere,
everywhere

for it is a sea without a shore space without edge

you simply move on there is no falling or rising

whatsoever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Casanova

call it the libido driven life a woman of every type

'i love only you' sent to many red roses for them to see chased and un-beholden to anybody sort of an unchained human malady this casanova in poetry think, 'is it good for me? ' valentino had long been dead unremembered and Don Juan riding on this horse with a sword fell off from a ford

they do not exist, they are all in the minds they all dissolve like mist on the pines

RIC S. BASTASA
Cascades

thoughts cascade
and the sound of your words make the cascading sound of the rushing waters a river
a flood
a rage that goes into the sea taking everything: driftwood, pebbles, sand, leaves, houses and even lives and islands emotions like magma and lava flowing from volcanic eruption and then everything calms down, you see the shapes solidifying

rage of rocks and cliffs in gray and silver colors you see yourself

a mountain of rock facing the sea breeze blows and cools off a rage

and then some seeds fall and grow and become grasses and trees
too green for your anticipation
and then

there is peace and tranquility and a house that you start building a woman
a wife and some children a name, a father a family a pillar of hope and a vision of the new sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Cascading

i am like a cascading water
fall
rushing to meet you

even in the midst
of some boulders of rocks beside
cliffs and ravines

the moment i touch you

love cascades too like rain from a heavy cloud

an outburst of desire
an explosion of an absence long suppressed

deep inside
our palpitating
lusts

two waters cascading from our bosoms and hands and thighs and feet

like a big murky river longing
for the mouth leading to the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Cascading Thoughts Made Of Paper

i am not ashamed
to tell you
about the cascading thoughts i have of
you
these past few days
made of white bond
paper

RIC S. BASTASA
Cassandra Crossing

there are codes
to every mystery

the code of yellow
and the sun
the black mantle of
the night

the greenness in the peace of grass
the grating discontent
of the pebbles
that you smash

yet we wish upon an awe
our nerves jump for amazement

for what we do not understand yet
for what we refuse to
know

if we know these all
then what?
the boredom to a long journey
without a view on what is outside
our cars and trains shall surely kill us so soon without parting let my innocence prevail let me not accept the gift of fire let no Cassandra meet me i like it when i am there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Casting Pearls Before Swine

a man polishes
his bluntness with pain his humanity sharpened the more
with his failures
his sight seeing more
and better in the darkness of his soul
from his tears are made the pearls and he must reflect through poetry
whether all these are in vain like pearls cast before all swine

RIC S. BASTASA
Casting The Dice

off you go,
a new decision,
a promise of more reservations still, the water inside the glass
of the deflowered table,
down
under the four feet lies the sadness of the floors waters spill
no one wipes for changes all are seated well tasting the delicacies of the present facing the faces gladly devising lies
for survival

RIC S. BASTASA
Casting Your Burdens Upon My Shoulder...

for i am as light
as a cloud
as agile as a bird on its wings
as flowing as
the river on its unending journey
as weightless
as a feather,
let me ask you then
to lay your burden upon me
so i may sink deeper to the
earth
and having settled
i shall now
exist...

RIC S. BASTASA
Castles In The Cloud

castles in the cloud
ivory towers and
the fearful cloth of the black robe

crowns and names
and titles of royalty badges and lines
power numbers
and marks of high society,

you know me
i smash them all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Casual Relationship

you ride in a bus on a long trip to Pagadian beside you is a woman with long black hair pink blouse, not wearing a bra, juicy lips, smooth skin, perfumed
just the two of you
and it rains
heavily and the bus speeds its way climbing steep roads then her head rests on your chest
she must be tired
your heart beats faster something in your body
grows
you do not want this journey to end
you caress her hair
she wakes up
and smiles
and then you kiss

at the terminal she rushes to the road where a black car is waiting she waves her hand
bidding goodbye

just that.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cat Stevens Notes....

i still love
Cat Stevens
singing

morning has broken
the first cut is
the deepest
in a father and son
trek

sure am gonna give you a try
baby i try to love
again

i know
i know baby
that first cut was the deepest....

RIC S. BASTASA
Catch Me I Am Yours

from a high cliff
i will fall

i see you
by the sea

i am confident
you will catch me

i am yours

RIC S. BASTASA
Catch Me If You Can

there was a time when it was me who chases you slippery love,

sliding through my hands

a broken heart
seeking the embrace of solitude questions resolving into answers

and then the reverse comes true now you shall chase me

catch me then if you can

RIC S. BASTASA
Catching Breaths Like Words

the difference between you and me

is not the sameness of our miseries

the difference is that you are an open window

that has closed again but i am a window that i broke and never close because there is no more reason to keep me closed i am sinfully opening to the changes of the clouds & the course-less drifting of the wind

i do not pay attention to direction now except perhaps on the basics of having to feed my day to day existence

when you arrive here
i am no longer myself

and then you leave saying i am the useless wind of the house and i deserve no room at all

early in the morning before i become myself again words rain in my eyes like tears

salt to my tongue and biting

i want to put them in a bowl

treat them like salad
days

but i do not eat words neither do you

so i let them pour
on the vacancies of the floor and they drip on the earth and

gone & i said i have no time for thoughts thoughts do not help me find my arms

i rush to go and be myself
again

on the wings that you detest

above everything else i resume

catching breaths
like words

feeding myself like
paper
RIC S. BASTASA
you know how it feels when the devil is caught and shown in such a lowly state of tangled hair
pale skin
emaciated body
depressed state

you feel like you are the new king of that invisible throne

when you look outside the window of your house
you see a greener grass all flowers bloom
and bees busy with nectar

even if it is still winter time even if the night
is so cold
and you are trembling

when victory sets in the ugly world becomes nothing at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Catching The Fish With Your Bare Hands...

too many thoughts
so many readings
one influential writer to
another
filling my head with numerous inspirations translated as potential imitations of this restless mind
a name you
call yourself
wanton insomniac who is still awake at 3 in the morning

i suggest that you take a dip this Sunday at the beach of black sands

take the cue from the stories we make of the driftwood and those colored stones and wasted shattered wine bottles

so i must have told you hamlet is not a wise literary character
it is hard to pay bills in the psychiatric ward and we are impoverished at this time of the year of the fire monkey

tire the body
exhaust the mind
what they did
they cannot remember
so they are cared for
by Lady Gaga
the antidote for sound sleep

sleep is a gift
you do not have to pay for it it is free

but it is a paycheck
for a hard day's labor catching the fish
with your bare hands
peeling potatoes plowing the fields of stones transferring rocks from one cliff to another rolling and rolling the rocks of Sisyphus climbing the trees of Hercules running in the lonely tracks of Hades.

RIC S. BASTASA
Catching Your Flying Kiss

what i catch today is a flying kiss
like a white butterfly departing from your rose lips
now hovering to mine

i am tasting its feet
i am lipping its proboscis i am embraced by its wings so fragile

so pure is your love so frail in the purity of its intentions

so sweet as nectar
so sweet is your kiss

RIC S. BASTASA
Catherine

on top of me is a woman's body
after a moan is another woman's body a door opens for a woman's dressed body a window closes
for a woman's naked body

Catherine
wolverine in a woman's body pure cotton dangling softness in a man's naked mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cats And Dogs

You ask me why
There is always trouble
In your life

I think I know it

You eat together
The dogs and the cats Swallowing all of them
Whole
Inside your gut

RIC S. BASTASA
Cats Are Waiting By The Door

i just feed one stray cat
and they say it is my fault

why the other cats come to the house and stay there waiting

watching
my next move.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cat's Song

not now
not now
not now
maybe
tomorrow
tomorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
Cause And Control

a nerve has its own domain like a territory
when a bone creates a wrong the nerve begins to run out of control

an impingement an erroneous reach out a right arm screams in pain stressed out the mind invents a fabrication you do not mind it

trace the cause
it's but a nerve, that nerve that hate.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cause And Effect

Some are not really causes But just symptoms
And we misdiagnose
A sickness
For a symptom
Of the real sickness

The cause
And the effect
Are often interchanged

For instance
Is poverty the cause
Of crime
Or is poverty
Only the symptom
Of it?

For instance
Is ignorance
The cause of poverty Or is it simply An effect of poverty?

Or is poverty
Nothing but an effect
Of ignorance?

Or is poverty
Just an effect
Of an oppression
Of the rich Taking much
From the poor
Who gets poorer
Everyday
Because there
Are no reforms Coming
To solve
His poverty
His ignorance
His having to commit a crime To survive
His poverty
His ignorance
His being a crime
Of
Society itself
who never cared
And wanted him
Who never Instituted the much Promised reforms?

And so you doubt
The cause and effect
The effect from cause
And if you did not mind so Well
They may always be Interchanged
And mistaken
For the symptoms
The conditions
That always
Are
there deceiving.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cause Of Their Separation

you may find it shallow but the real cause of their broken bridge

or thread that snapped
at the end

a few years specifically only about a year she dropped soap

at the toilet bowl

and it didn't flush out anymore she could not believe

how a child in him still works

he left her preoccupied with a woman who is clean

RIC S. BASTASA
Caution...

you pretend that sleep is your friend but sleep is honest enough to admit that there is something wrong with the bed
the blankets are talking and the pillows are protesting your hairs are mad your eyes as usual do not tell the lies that your mouth and tongue have long mastered and the teeth that grit knows who at the end shall win

your mind is not a friend of anyone its insomnia the heart fears can kill anyone

it is time to be cautious wear the feet of the cat perhaps be silent like the floor.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cave Canem

do not misinterpret
the law
it is found in the gates of the hearts of men
beware of dogs

those bitches
wanting nothing but the flesh they stoop to conquer they smile to plunder

RIC S. BASTASA
Cebu Airport, 0020 Hrs

he must be a jinx

the three women who worked as domestic helpers in taiwan for two years with whom he had some brief conversations about the places to visit in singapore like sengkang and sembewang (they were not interested about sentosa at all) were not allowed to leave by Immigration

they were loaded with canned goods and noodles and they were supposed to stay in a cheap hostel at 20 Singaporean dollars per day he did not know anymore what happened to them as he boarded his flight that early dawn he must be jinx

previously he also talked to two beautiful women who were supposed to meet their boyfriends in serangoon (she believed every word that his white boyfriend told him that he owns a submarine, an airplane a resort in bali)

she finished her nursing course and works in a calling center the other one is a high school teacher somewhere in Leyte

they were beautiful and young not really dumb as you may think they just think that this country is not a good place to make their hope live some more years to make their dreams come true in flesh and bones and with smooth lively

skin
Cebu Blues #1

It was your eyes
i am definite about it it was like a lake

mirror-like to me
i swam there and loved it there since i found myself
without a difference
about who you are

if you ask me if i love you i cannot say yes.

it was the sameness
that created the empathy

do not say anything
it was enough for me i do not wish to go back there and torture you once more with our same past struggles.

neither do i wish to inflict pains also to those who really loved me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cebu City, Sto Rosario Church

i know it is her, and she will not believe me. i know that shape. Bent. I know that hair. Scattered.
yes blonde. and curly. her fingers are stroking each lock at the middle of this mass.
she is listening carefully to the priest making the sermon.
she is busy reciting the prayers through her rosary beads. she is fat and looking misshapen by the weight of her sorrows.

we know what is inside her. we say we pity her. now is her time to escape soon she will be back and she can't take what she sees.

some xanor tablets, from her psychiatrist. she will swallow some more emptiness.
she will take in more heaviness of her own lightness.

will she recover? we look at her, we are never wrong.
and then we pray.

there are humps of flesh on her shoulders.
steroids. and side effects.

we take the communion.
she kneels down.

we had that one before. now she will take some more.
fair enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
Celebration

flower petals all over the air roses, roses everywhere two turtle doves released from the cage of twenty fingers

RIC S. BASTASA
Cenon...

just the same i took the shot he posed with his teeth protruding to the sun his half body beside the clear and calm river flowing

i was there looking for a man carrying a plow on his shoulder muddy feet and shriveled hair and furrowed skin on his forehead but then i was told that he had long died of tuberculosis

and that he had no son and wife to mourn for him

Cenon is ok.

but he is never enough to fill in the gaps of the loneliness the summing up of all deprived humanity

he is getting bald
and no one speaks about it somehow

RIC S. BASTASA
Cepi Corpus

do not proclaim happiness it will not last

you have my body
but not my soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chain Letter

as said deprived days salivate excitedly younger revert to odder risks
sobriety yielding grotesque
expertise evolve endearment thrive expressed denotedly
yellow wonder
respite evanescent twilight tearing gorgeously yogi.

RIC S. BASTASA
Challenging The Rules Of The Game...

birds fly away from us because we had always been in different, some wings are clipped from the cables of those bridges,
the cold waters, even,
slip from the emptiness of our fingers,
between us,
some departures are numb they will be chanting all the possible excuses those who are left wave their hands pretending that they understand the meaning of boats leaving i stop thinking i discover that there is no use for the arrangement of the furniture in the living room where our bones clutter when i enter a room
i ignore the door
i am bothered about my constancy for other journeys i have been looking for apertures where a part of me must have been hiding feeling always incomplete
i arrive at the conclusions like train stations only to embark rush, go down the floor, touching the railings
waiting
to cross another busy road not on pedestrian lanes....

RIC S. BASTASA
I do not remember who you are everything escapes from my hand through the spaces between my fingers into this nameless land My life is woven out of water noting stays and everything goes my memory is a river forever running its way out of history I am nothing desired
I am nothing stopped
I come and go any time and any way alone and ten times alone I do not have a single breath to mourn for And always I give out myself for souvenirs each time passing for something else for you and those like you and what I am will be what I will be for each one of you the city of flowers, eyes of the loam describe shelter: piece of crap > weak roof, could be blown off anytime > cardboard walls, easy to put apart when gov’t wants them out malnourished child reading book > lamp source of light > skips parts with words s/he doesn’t understand > books saved by father from fire, father loved books > father died trying to save more things, leaving behind: 2 children + wife > mother died giving birth to a still born whistles from outside > sister is back, she shouts at the perverts child comes out with a stick > drunkards earn enough to get drunk > they push him/her, throws a pail of water > dirty water dripping from body of the child > “useless aral, you should work, inutil!” sister helps him/her, shouts at men > no one bothers to help a “dirty” woman sister prepares food she bought > she coughs, months na ang ubo >angry, “dont turn on lamp unless kailangan, mahal gas” >not touching the child for fear of infection >“matulog ka na, tagal pa ako balik” >puts off the lamp >malnourished child turns on the lamp >reads book again

* reprinted from a friend's collection

RIC S. BASTASA
Chances Are

chances are
we meet someday
and you shall have a glimpse
of me

but you hesitate and try to create a little distance to make sure that it is really me,

aquiline nose
sad eyes
lean body
and an aura of divinity

and then you step back telling yourself

it is not him
he smells like Tanduay in his poems.

RIC S. BASTASA
Change

the ship
slices its way along a mirror sea

behind it
you do not see any scar there is no sign of disturbance
whatsoever

in a minute you look back the sea is another mirror again reflecting
fury
at noon

RIC S. BASTASA
Change And Frankness

i wake up
late at night
finding myself all alone in bed

sometimes i wonder
why
this matter is giving me the nice
feeling.

RIC S. BASTASA
Change.....

before i became you
i always see to it that any broken thing is repaired nothing is spared
i thought
that every part and nook of this house
must be perfect

time is not only the healer of wounds
it is the giver of our destination
it changes us into chameleons

now i will have no more time to repair broken things when i see a broken leg of the table
i have learned to ignore it shrug my shoulder and say oh the days shall repair that leg oh i have other better things to do oh i only pass this place once i am not destined for something permanent for something steady and unchangeable i can resist and has given up that instinct to recreate and reconstitute

i only have my mind left and i can manage
even without it

RIC S. BASTASA
change is fickle
and it will always be fickle

it comes sometimes it promises to stay but it cannot keep it that way sand castles always and always

children too on the shores
of time
on the wings of moments the ticking is so silent how could i notice?

RIC S. BASTASA
Changeable

he looks at the picture again some details that used to attract him he does not see anymore the definition of love
even lust,

he looks at the sky again thanking God
for this experience: nothing lasts forever something frees us after a time of blind love you mourn only for a while and then you find joy again in those other details those that you have discarded

in fact
becomes more important

so you go over again life and its basics
love and its reminisces

you move into another stage of survival
now there is comfort in strangers.

RIC S. BASTASA
the map of the country is changing stores close
new roads are constructed you leave years ago
the people close to you wave their hands wishing you luck
in another country
you lost
good luck was not in your side when you come back
they are no longer there you do not know the names of the streets
they change it years back the children playing softball in the field
do not bother
a stranger is watching the game but not cheering
houses fade
rivers become dry mass housing projects mushroom you look for the past cafe where you had coffee with her it is no longer there malls crowd
you go into vast window shopping

RIC S. BASTASA
we do not pray for changes they always come and they disregard those that do not welcome their presence

when the texting came one day the telegraphs and telegrams have become so funny and we all laugh about sheets of paper travelling in air who would have thought that iron flies? that faces appear on cellphones? that making love can be as easily done in cyberspace? so safe and at no expense.

and who would have thought that you will leave me? i never thought of it and you one day has become a mere shadow without a body on my favorite bed. And you laugh.

and who would have thought that i, too, can easily forget you like a text message deleted in a very instant.

you also never thought about it.
we're even, and indeed life is fair.
changes are instant. and so are wounds easily cured, and so are hearts mended, and so are scars made to disappear like an MMS.
Changes And More Changes don't you notice the changes every second every moment when we face each passing hour each passing wind?

every pore opens and then closes every second words that hurt, silence that stabs, feigned smiles suppressed screams, erasures of the mind, ev

ting glances, a falling lock of hair, grow ing nails pushed and pushed by each cuticle slanting eyebrows that return to its shape like a wave t the sands and winds conspire to cover and conceal all these, including the changing hues of the seasons all these, you do not fail, you must not fail, they must touch you through your smell your touch your sight.

RIC S. BASTASA
Changes That Happen

when i met you at the first hour
of light
you shine and like a precious diamond you
gleam

i am amazed
you are someone new and then like the rest when the darkness comes and you are tired dancing and exhibiting what best you have you finally show the weariness of your heart

you put the lousy feet
the one that smells like dung

i am not surprised anymore this happens
as always so naturally and so i counted you as one of my friends on the list

RIC S. BASTASA
Changing A Name, Transfering To Another Place....

because the past
becomes so heavy to carry i erase it like any word
that can be deleted
at my own
whim,

i change my name
my place, my dream
i change everything
and simply be nothing

i empty my past
to fill once again a space for my present

i sent word for my future
and it echoes back
to me
my own destiny.

RIC S. BASTASA
Changing Grips...

when reality gets berserk unable to grip the steering wheel when the car turns turtle and when there is no way pulling you out or opening the door mind you, you change faith your spirit flies away and begins to worship the goddess of Illusion...that is.... if you still want to live again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Changing The Angle Of The Sight Of My Eyes

the fatty side of the eye bugs shall be removed and the tiny tumors just below my eyelids shall be extricated

it is another day for a clearer vision of the
world

another kind of view for my life

embracing something bright and beautiful
less the haze

less the pessimism of the tumor
less the obstruction of the fat

set the angle towards beauty and goodness
and truth

now it is moving towards the goal of perfection

RIC S. BASTASA
Chant

the lotus chant
i hear this morning as i listen attentively i feel like all hands are massaging my whole body i close my eyes
and feel the piano keys running among themselves producing the monotonous sounds of
sleep

dthis morning you hear it differently
sounding like some frogs
in the rain
you love it more like it

you see
we feel differently
like night and day.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chant To The Sun

voices of men
like wailing of the rivers like riding wild horses and catching wolves

voices of men
strong and determined
for freedom
under the ruling sun

voices of men
cascading like the Niagara falls voices of men so alive muscles of their arms shining like metals

to the moon

voices of men
friends of nature chanting
for more love
life
peace and harmony

RIC S. BASTASA
Chant....

Love chooses
a posture and when it has chosen it submits
a position

paper with all its arguments like
pillars and walls
and beams of the house of

gods when all else
do not matter except this one most valued by you disregarding what words are there

uttered by your greater minds
grating over such possibility of

oblitration but the voice speaks
and the gesture lays upon itself a
poise of the hands
and

the die is cast
finally no regrets this
time
it is all yours
in that kiss and making

love redeeming itself upon itself standing by
the reasons of its own

time like the heart stubborn upon a mere

demotion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chao Boo Sang

into the land of less oil imagining that wooden boat with white sails into the land of mines before i should not hear the sounds of wailing children again i must not see half arms a quarter of some legs cut ears and exploding choppers

there i will shop and tour see the past and smile the future khum unng.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chaos

as one child puts to sail his paper boat another child stamps his feet on the water that is the beginning of all the chaos in the world and we are all these children these hands these feet and paper boats and the water this cycle of creation and destruction will always be there

RIC S. BASTASA
Chaos, Order, Chaos, Beauty And Ugliness...

beauty must a purpose have, for instance beauty that gives peace and harmony to the world,

presumably this world is a world of chaos, and chaos is wanton and understood to be messy and undesirable, makes the mind to lack the necessary focus but what is focus for? what is thinking for?

again, you return to purpose focus must have a purpose and thinking must have another purpose but what is the purpose of purpose?

seems that purpose is beauty and that purpose without beauty is not desirable, and so on and so forth, people get so confused, they want order as though order itself is beauty

as though it is one purpose that we need, the universe must have an order a system, every planet orbiting around the sun must have a purpose as though they are human beings like us as though they are us look at this poem, read it so well, it has no purpose but to make you think make you doubt that perhaps beauty to be beauty must be wanton and chaotic, which by itself is a reality and reality is always

beautiful,
it has always a purpose and this is what you think it to be right now, but is this really so?

RIC S. BASTASA
Charles Bukowski

A Man

(just that. A Man, as it was written by a Charles Bukowski, it has become a priceless poem in his poetry collection series) there is another poem entitled

A Man

(same form, same everything, nothing added, nothing subtracted, written by a certain Ric S. Bastasa, and the Great Poets of This Site, twitched their faces, niked their eyebrows, rolled their tongues in their cheek, and said, a flop!

who is he?

well, it is in the name, it has nothing to do with the poem itself.

RIC S. BASTASA
not too sensitive
is the shrew,

that is talent
above mediocrity

it rises more likely in the world
than genius.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chasing Time

a child rises up
for his first walk

his first walk rushes him for his first run

his first run
is fast and speed

takes him anywhere
away from family

where he begins another family of his own children rush to become fathers and mothers

to beget children again another family line

another roots for the family line another tree another name another family name

what are we doing?
we are rushing chasing time as though we can do it no, time is like a truck it over runs everyone squashed and mashed like things like creatures everyone perishes at last.

Chat

in accordance with the law of evolution
we chatters shall soon lose our mouts
we are now attuned to speaking with our fingers,

at least, we touch but possibly we must invoke the retention of our mouths who knows if we meet

how can we kiss?

RIC S. BASTASA
Chatmate

I may desire you in my dreams
but i am at most hesitant if this will be the same thing
when we finally
meet and feel each other's presence

how do you smell?
what kind of smile
can you give?
how does your hand
gesture
when i call your name?

i like to feel the beatings of your heart
skin to skin
heart to heart
butt to butt

if it clicks
then we go to bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chatting With A Friend

when you relax and forget about work for a while chatting with a friend
about sweet nothings about anything goes some jokes and we all laugh nothing about kiss and tell nothing about the picture on the hill just plain chatting and in between she gets her cup of tea while i do some urinating

wait a minute, i have this poem title it

friendship, now don't write about it, just cherish it

RIC S. BASTASA
Cheating....

in some ways we are cheats.
do not deny that,
for it is a fact,

in some ways, we do not tell the truth when it hurts the one we so much love, we keep on residing inside the houses of our own illusions, not to dislodge the one that we care that we want to stay in the places of our longings, in some ways, we are cheap, we love the wrong part, we admire the wrong person, we marry what others think does not deserve us, in some ways, we are hardheaded we go where death waits we negate what the good life offers, with all honesty, we make our own lies, we confess, we are wrong and we are wronged in return

in some ways, we never really understand life, death,
and those that still lie in between we miscalculate the distance we suffer, we notice, we regret

but in all these, we must admit, we want to be honest, but we just can't...

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
what we always see here are blocks blue straight lines blurring on a crisscross of other blurring blue lines square jawed abstracted as same squares nothing delineated no tendrils here just trunks and trunks squared and straightened with so much grief and regret feeling the loss of other forms and shapes like circles or irregular patterns of the weaknesses of humanity (purposely you are made not to understand the rationale for delineated patterns) gaping mouth, shocked hairs, cut nails, hammering screams of abandoned children inside that egg-shelled
room
opaque, vague and begging for a clarification he comes with a shaking shoulder and says 'You are right there is nothing in there'

it is dark, and the world is stark people work so hard to understand and find the reasons ah, this arrival at nothing like the way your lover tells you meet me there i will give you love and lots of what you desire only to find out

'this is just imagined' a joke, a bluff, did you not know that?

the table on checkered mantel polka dots dress of the fat spinster on the first day of the year luck is still hoping.

RIC S. BASTASA
Checking Love

when you arrive at night i am buried in my heap of paper works
still,

when i go to bed because it is too late you iron clothes and sort what is clean from what is dirty,

i am buried in sleep and you wake up in the middle of this darkness to see if there are birds flying in the horizon of trees if stars are alive if they still glitter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cheer Up! Young Man!

Macte animo!
Generose puer sic itur ad astra!

cheer up
young man
do not grieve
there is a way
to the heavens,

here
it is inside
the heart

a pure heart that sees
the true
face of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chicago Moon

the aura of dusk
it walks alone at segregated paths
you walk towards a room which can never be your home
for your home is here and there is no
promise
that you will come
back

no one figures out
the reason
for this self ostracism

if you ask me there are designs for happy shapes which time in some ways
shall teach
us
how to mold and cut
and finally
show

you walk away and that is the end of how we can think of you what we have is a mist
and then
the morning light
takes it
away

i know how cold it is
there
but what can we really do?

RIC S. BASTASA
why do you ask me to cut
a flower?
it took this vine a month
under the sun
and rain
to make this flower?

give me the compelling reason why should i cut it for you, my child?

why can't we just play with your finger and point where the full moon
is?

my child as early as this i must teach you to respect God's beautiful and dainty creation

art is sacred
and we must make it live.

RIC S. BASTASA
Child Ego

i push you
you pull me
we laugh
we lay on the grass
we see clouds
our hands hold fingers to fingers
more than flesh
and bones
we gaze
deep into our eyes
we are more than oceans
more than lips
and tips
it is getting dark
and mothers are calling us home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Childhood

buds of china flowers
used as garlands

RIC S. BASTASA
Childhood In The Village....

early morning
after the night's storm i gather the ripe guavas from the uprooted
tree

RIC S. BASTASA
Childhood…

that brown sweat shirt
from elder sister
during my 6th birthday,

i remember
the weather was too cold and fogs hang on the mountainside
like lots of doubts on my forehead

i remember there was a heavy rain and strong wind and big waves from the sea and there was no light

because
electricity was expensive and father could not afford it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Child-Poem

only love can make this world go round only love can make the spin and the revolution

only your love can make me human and only your love can make me feel that i am god

undersized, unappreciated.

RIC S. BASTASA
Child's Variations

i

what they need is just a box of chocolates the cheapest that you can buy from that flea market

if you give them money their father will spend it on cigarettes and bet on a cock derby this coming Sunday

ii

the one with a blue shirt wants to play killing with guns the other one will play dead and the last one will, by statistical probability, like a barbie doll

iii

next month their mother will again be pregnant and then their father will be laid off from work

iv

The President of this country will build them a house for free, a lot too where the house shall stand He will also give money for them to cross the bridge of poverty and this three will not go to school and the mother will have another pregnancy and the father will have no plan of finding work they can thrive on charity, they will live on dole-outs and they will vote without thinking come election time and the same political dynasty shall win all over again

it will be the same mess the same hopeless case

tomorrow a writer will change his point of view
he will be cursed for his pessimism and these kids who will grow to become lazy bones will have wives who like to sleep and make more children

whose picture will again be taken by another man who will say that the writer died at an early age and was proven wrong by the pages of history.

fine. That is the ending of this fiction.

Which i know, you never liked

RIC S. BASTASA
China

i walked upon your great wall,
saw you beautiful mountains amazed by the
palaces, and garden of sleeping willows
lotuses
blooming on the ponds handmade beauty built for the empress

i heard the stories of murders too
of the past
poisoning and
betrayals

i ponder upon the thought that with power comes beauty and behind all these
are myriad deaths
castrations
bloody revolutions

indeed a very rich history spoken of by old wise men poets
and philosophers

RIC S. BASTASA
Chinese Zodiac

so i am a metal ox and you are a wooden rooster she is a silver whatever and now i simply don't care.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chirping Bird

chirping bird chirping bird chirp no more

the sun has come
and it is time for you to sing chirping bird sing chirping bird sing a song for the sun

it has come to give you the clouds and the air and the song for you to sing chirping bird chirping bird

sing with the sun
sing that song for me

RIC S. BASTASA
Chirping Birds

the morning here is always the sound of chirping birds because the trees have been their homes at night when the sun rises
the birds fly away again and when the sun fades they come back to their nests
and home

the night hums the song of silence bird's eyes closing again to the golden sheen of the bright moon

the white owl flaps its wings on a nocturnal adventure in harmony with the bats friends of the night

some shadows lurk in the night in the pursuit of happiness some souls are restless on dreams unfulfilled some wake up dwindling at dawn opening the fridge for a glass of cold water switches on the computer and begin again

anew to another poem

RIC S. BASTASA
Chirstmas Decor

the ladies in this internet cafe are putting on some christmas ball on top of their green christmas tree they are talking about a certain german who will be coming to take a vacant room for a week.

RIC S. BASTASA
there was this man/god whose love
was unrequited by the native woman who fell in love
with another
native, and he got so angry and threw mountains
on the plains

legend says, the chocolate hills came about because of (again) a broken
heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chocolate Hills Of Carmen, Bohol

Nagpunay ako ug saka
Sa tumoy niining bungtud Wala ako maghangak
Wala kanako ang kakapoy Wala kanako ang kalaay Wala kanako ang pagkabudlay Ania sa akong kasingkasing Ang tumang kamingaw
Ang tiunay nga kahidlaw Makita lang ikaw
Sa ubos sa langit

(English)

I keep on going up
To the tip of this hill
I don’t breathe hard
I don’t feel tired
I am not bored
I do not feel tired
In my heart
Is this feeling of missing This true nostalgia
Just to see you
Under the sky

RIC S. BASTASA
Chocolates

sweet chocolates
who will ever resist
sweet chocolates
we take with our bare fingers handing these chocolates inside
our mouths melting sweetly these chocolates in our tongues
putting heaven
sweet chocolate
so sweet inside
our mouths
playing with our tongues

guilt food and sin how do you really love the sweetness inside
our mouths
melting with our tongues
these sweet
chocolates of hidden sins

burning our souls.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Choice For Today

same stuff
different days same evasive stuff really moving hours
tiring days most of the times but one makes the decision to color days with summer sun and cold winds and beach
relaxations same stuff but always with different outlooks renovating innovations respecting life
enjoying bodies tanning and resting eyes upon bluer horizons farther farther imaginations dreaming unthinking
things

under the tree
hands restive upon
the green blanket on the white sands
on a Sunday
morning

RIC S. BASTASA
Choices

those who dream of freedom die in the clutches of those who free them for now thrown into the ocean of
choices
whether to go or to stay to bite or to go hungry to crawl or to climb or to fly or just stay and be rotten to be contented or to be thirsty forever all these confront the face of the free man
tired and weary and full of indecision
freedom mocks him
laughs at him now
and takes him anywhere
he wanted to he is like one who cannot finish a movie on Tv shifting as always from unlimited number of night channels

RIC S. BASTASA
Choices

physically
the changes are inevitable at the reunion
last December
we were all pigs and elephants

our best enemies are the mirrors
we eliminated the word
fat

some cannot speak about how sickly we are

we hate to face this plunder of our flesh
how much we have neglected the basics of our lives

we justify perhaps we have focused more on the internal mess, sorting out philosophies looking for the best reasons for us to be alive

we drink a lot of beer and taken too much meat and pasta

we are addicted to books our feet shrink
our arms are shorter and our fingers
are melting
like butter

to cut the story short
i for one,
promised: i don't need reunions anymore i go on with my life into the abyss of convoluted thoughts into the ocean of more deliberations

away from the run away from the fun.

RIC S. BASTASA
Choices After The Semester Ends to repair the stairs of the house or possibly putting up a new poultry house repaint the gate or spend a day at the beach and help mend the fish net of the old fisherman or have yoga under a tree near the forest

going away from paper works taking a leave from all theories about politics
seeking variation from a whole semester's routine all these now running within my imagination

RIC S. BASTASA
Choices For 2013

the mind is always free images are laid like pictures in bed you heart beats for that one your logic grabs another there is no quarrel for one who is strong it has nothing to do with emotions there are so many rooms one can stay for a while in the one which is dimly lit and be open and be happy but what is happiness the argument begins

there are temporary joys as there are permanent choices there are roses that bloom today and tomorrow wilt there are pillars that you construct the house with there are sandy foundations but there are those made on hard rocks the errors shall know what eros is and as you mature who shall know what to really choose it is not just emotions fleeting moments

hidden arrangements that thrive in the excitement of fear there is a garden where your solitude blooms where someone who loves you waits and then embraces you forever.

Keep this. Disregard the rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
Choices....

i pick up
the blue abstraction it appears like a boat in the middle of that think mist
and it is leaving the port and then i shake my head for there is something green inside this body of

art

cool so cool like trees and forests and
rain

soothing sounds of this miniature
universe inside a bottle of transparencies

finally i took the boat bare and holed destined for nothing but shore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Choosing Selfishness

no one calls you
to watch it
a thing like this is a secret
just between two people
no one wants to share it
with you
and you continue to be alone
with no one embracing your body
or simply asking where you are now
you watch it somehow in video
even beyond those hours
when you are supposed to have a good night sleep
you continue being a boat without a steer on this lonely
journey
with your own hands
cressing your own
body

you have are shrinking into an abyss refusing the offered lips of others who tell you how delicious a french kiss
can be injecting life into your throat
making your tongue
alive again

it is your decision now as you close the door
and face the internet
of your life
on a pornography of selfishness
more evil than self-abuse

RIC S. BASTASA
Choosing Sides Next Time

why do you have second thoughts to quell
the cruelty of other people?

can i tell you
that they are your friends and that you are part of their
cruel schemes?

that you too are part of this cruel system a tool of this massive matrix of deception?

i know where i sit and where i stand
and i know fully well where to side
next time.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chopin Early Morning

it is a luxury for me here listening to chopin

i got no cuts or burns
no wounds

nothing bizarre or catastrophic or calamitous

this is a life
relaxed on a saturday

i do not have to go
anywhere

to look for chopin or his impostors to soothe me, i claim no grief anyhow or a malady got no sickness to cure or a problem to solve

at this point in time papa used to say

we shall do nothing but listen

he was talking about those wild birds singing in the forest, where at the middle of it

he lived the life of a tarzan
got his vines and knife a recently butchered boar, while he struts giving us all the awe for he wants us to do nothing on a saturday far, far, far away from home, far, far away from mama, who in her own brave life, says, I could care less, what happens to him, whether he lives in the heavens or in hell. yes, yes, hell.
so here I am
listening for once upon a luxury of a chopin winging birds, hushing leaves.

RIC S. BASTASA
Chopsticks

chopsticks
hot red tea
atami sashimi

RIC S. BASTASA
Christmas

Cherish one again
How once the Lord has created you Remember your first cry which was the sweetest music to the ears of the world Into another new beginning Savor the coming surprises of your life Tumble like a weed in the freedom of air and space Maintain that glee inside your heart, O! happy child of God Acknowledge the Greatness of your Creator Sing and smile because He is here again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Christmas 2012

in valdia’s garden
the clan flocks
bringing with them
the missing years
that we have never talked about

we have roasted pigs goat meat, lots of red wine and popping soda
we have desserts and salads and games

our elders talk about our origins

the grandchildren recite their memorized poems

dance the gangnam style and put on their best smiles

we watch a generation line continue with another like strings attached to strings forming the DNA structure in my mind

perhaps thinking that posterity shall be the answer to our common uncertainty

i sit there with my wife among the crowd of relatives & friends not feeling lonely anymore they have their answers and we have too our minds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Christmas 2016 For Rolly And Bing

i guess we have the same fate

this christmas facing a table full of delights an expensive whisky

that i promise to drink this day
fried ham, a little macaroni lettuce and
cesar's salad with just bare hands

we have sushi and sashimi as usual
persian bread and turkish condiment

then we'll have the picture
first solemn then the wacky shot with our fat wives.

Just
a table for two the servants are at home with their families in the mountains.

RIC S. BASTASA
Christmas Marriages

today
two people will be married one is white
the other is black one is sane
the other is saner
one is
very close to me so intimate that i cannot even utter any word
to describe what kind of sonnomabitz
am i.

RIC S. BASTASA
Christmas Realities....

THIS Christmas
i give my cheers to everyone

There is no need
to pretend that we are too elated

Life is real and it cannot continue with our illusions

Show the faces of truth
Mourn for the Dead
Cheers for the Drunkards Keep the family
Love your wife
Honor your Parents Befriend and Be Nice to Everyone

Another day to Remember
The eternal Rebirth
of God
in Human Form....

RIC S. BASTASA
Cinderilla

many girls since then thought that losing a shoe
is a virtue

madam steel butterfly of asia
hoarded 3 thousand shoes as symbol of political power

what is in a shoe?

RIC S. BASTASA
Cindy

what a way to mask intentions, for those failures
you stay put here not blaming the slowness of your feet and your inability to make the necessary connections to success your success has an imported definition it is not here it is in another country where people are giving you the higher currency for your services you mask your failure with patriotism your weaknesses you cover with the love of self be courageous cindy tell them the truth you're a failure oh yes but you tried so hard and that makes you the heroine of today's modern story to greatness

stories that last and get the Oscars
you must know
has something to do
with honesty
and not the travesty of that beautiful face of pretension

Cindy
cry if you must but have trust failures don't last.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cindy's Nightout

she likes her hair
red and her skin
pale
not jibing with moonlight

big white flowers
hang in her room

a black pumpkin
with white leaves
has two rats ready for her dreams

obviously she believes in Cinderella

obviously she is waiting for the fairy godmother to do the magic

when she decides finally to spend her night out looking for her prince wanting to fulfill her dreams

you might notice
she is already ready

all day she practiced walking with only one shoe she runs and laughs at the same time inside her black room

RIC S. BASTASA
Ciphers About Us

seed
time towering high upon those common founded hills woman and shadow evading finally light housed shimmering encased
storms packing up letting go
wind, and sand and rage.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ciphers Of Love Unrequited Because I Am Taken And You Are Already Taken Too it is too unfair for me to hate you i admit this you do not really know even if you are beside me thinking that there is nothing happening that there is nothing wrong that there is nothing between us that i have not rooted my hands to your soft hair i choose to live wisely and i must invent hate to you i must grow the seeds of indifference for by then i too do not even know if slowly i am choking myself with this love that i have not offered with this 'thing' that you must not know for by then i shall be demeaning myself and all the meanings that i have worked for shall all be thrown in the river of trash and so when you meet me i am as solid and as high as a pillar and you are my butterfly that hovers around me and i do not say anything.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Circa 1970 And Years Back

those were the years we were so young
and fit and prim and prime and so careless
so young, so dumb,
so stupid, so gullible
we are so ashamed
about us in those years on the other hand we must also be proud remembering about those years those past days and memories

oh we were so in love and so free and bursting in ecstacies exploding!

RIC S. BASTASA
Circuitous… But Selfish Still..

offering love
to a son-would-be in the same manner
that in reality
i am only extending further my personal territory

selfish still and gaining more
rather than
giving all

is this what we really are?

RIC S. BASTASA
Cirrus...

i am cirrus on a very sunny day i rise and i do not have significance to the hills below i make air pockets so that women can scream and take their seat belts away and run for a help that i never available up there they say i suck metals upon my body
and cause death but who can believe this when i am too beautiful to see like chicken feathers on a very sunny day i do not take other clouds with me i am on my own

on evenings no one knows that i blanket some stars within me

RIC S. BASTASA
Citizens Of This Country

the fingers may move in different directions the actions may not be united but they cannot get away from the hands

always remember
that

RIC S. BASTASA
it is the sound of the train that leaves the station every morning that does not haunt you anymore and you tell your friend who just arrived from a faraway province that this is the usual sound of the city where people leave and come back
everyday
like worms following their habits faithfully.

RIC S. BASTASA
on the surface of it is this casualness of two people meeting by accident like two boats merely passing each other by leaving some foams of waves leaving this disturbance that lasts for only a while and then ti subsides and then you remember nothing except that feeling that keeps on telling you: it should have been that way, it should have been, but you didn't dare and you didn't last.

RIC S. BASTASA
Civilization Should Have Been Simple Enough For Our Survival And Peaceful Living

how can this civilized society understand that with our skin we have dressed our soul that much already?

that with our bones and muscles we have become equipped with the best weapons for our protection?

that with our hands and feet we can already live in peace it is the soul and the heart and the mind books have become surplussed money the invention of our greed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Clarity

do not eat words do not eat my poetry

do not attempt to chew it do not swallow it whole like how a boa swallows the whole pig take your time. look at it. from the first word to the last.

think of this poem as syllables, not as thoughts, not as my thoughts. or your thoughts. think of this poem as a feeling.

a baby sleeping. a calm look at the eye. a stare.
a grip. a hand grasping another hand. a breath suspended in cold air.

two hands in prayer. think of this as the sound of a distant bell.
an orange dressed monk walking at the shore.

a leaf falling on the white sand.
a last step on the trip.
a beginning of a dream.

do not think now. Feel the sands slipping from your fingers. See the sands falling on the floor of the sand.

do not move. Do not swallow your saliva.

And then speak the first word of this line.
This i think is clarity.

RIC S. BASTASA
CLEAN THE MESS, MAKE THINGS RIGHT, SECURE, SAFE, CLEAN, NEAT, AND ORDERLY. EXTORT UGLINESS FOR BEAUTY, REMOVE THE EMMPTINESS, EMBRACE LIGHT.

the room is messy
things clutter and scatter themselves the socks smell in your feet the soles of your feet are sore the chair tumbles down the floor and the floor is thick with its dusts the belt blocks the entrance of the door and the curtains are hardheaded with their heavelessness hanging on the bars that keep them hopefully intact.

the bottles of hard liquor are now silent from the night of merry making you snore and life stinks here until mother comes to clean this mess folds the blankets, sweeps the floor collects the bottles and makes the chair stand erect like a soldier ready for another battle

to win this game of life is harsh it is not effortless it has to be achieved with the muscles of our resilience

mother sets aside the curtain to let the morning light come in signaling again another beginning mother is the commencement of our understanding about what art should be clean the mess, make things right, secure, safe, clean, neat, and orderly.

extort ugliness for beauty, remove the emptiness, embrace light...

and always welcome home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cleaning An Old House

cleaning an old house
takes a lot of time and effort

on this day daddy
leads us

older brother gets a broom
younger sister gets
the rugs
i get a pail of water
and some detergents

some leaves heaped in the room from that broken window

got an insect spray
and killed the roaches
and those bugs and
ticks on the floor and
some corners

the rats are next
we drive them away and destroy all their nests
on the ceiling and
beneath the floors

does someone question
the deaths of roaches?
the dislocation of the
rats?
the annihilation of the
ticks and fleas?

we did it finally
the house is cleaned
the roof is fixed and there are no more leaks
the floor is shiny
a fly slides
the window is fixed
and the doors too
expired bulbs are replaces with those brighter ones
the family picture hangs
on the wall
at the center of the sala

that night we had supper
after a prayer lead by daddy mommy is beside him and we the children
surround

there is love and laughter
and stronger camaraderie after the house is cleaned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cleaning An Old House (2)

cleaning an old house
takes a lot of time and
effort

on this day daddy
leads us

older brother gets
a broom
younger sister gets
the rugs
i get a pail of water
and some
detergents

some leaves heaped in
the room from that
broken window

got an insect spray
and killed the roaches
and those bugs and
ticks on the floor and
some corners

the rats are next
we drive them away and
destroy all their nests
on the ceiling and
beneath the floors

does someone question
the deaths of roaches?
the dislocation of the
rats?
the annihilation of the
ticks and fleas?

we did it finally
the house is cleaned
the roof is fixed and
there are no more leaks
the floor is shiny
a fly slides
the window is fixed
and the doors too
expired bulbs are replaced
with those brighter ones
the family picture hangs
on the wall
at the center of the
sala

that night we had supper
after a prayer lead by daddy
mommy is beside him and
we the children
surround

there is love and laughter
and stronger camaraderie
after the house is cleaned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cleaning Myself Up

after a series of circumlocutions like i were an acrobat in a Chinese show

i come back to where i am to being an island again on a river bank without a boat

on two separate distant banks without a bridge

we have depths too just like dark blue lakes

back to this choice of isolation
on the thinking that i am different that both of us must not be hurt unnecessarily because they are very different from us as this time they are toasting glasses of champagne to each other celebrating life

and enjoying a banquet under their lucky stars

back to writing and you are back into computations

how many seconds are there in a boring day? how many insignificant days make up a year?

and then it is Christmas you remind me on day after i come out from the bath room giving myself another shower to freshen myself up as i shake off the water from my white hair cleaning myself
shaving off those extra hair in my nose and armpits

busy, busy as though i am a miner with black dusts of coal all around my body twenty days underground

RIC S. BASTASA
Cleaning Up The Mess

THE speeches are tiring.
My ears are bursting with the promises of Politics.
There are no changes
There are only corrupt leaders Betraying their Own People.

What i admire is the Loud Music of my Neighbor Obstructing the long speech of the Lying Governor.

There is no use of this Next Election.
The same Oligarchs are playing their Tunes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cleansed Heart

as we mellow
down into a gracious ripening

gentle now in our mature dispositions

we say we know what passions are

surges of overflowing
water

tsunamis of our youthful days

we learn somehow that we must guide
these outbursts
in the winding labyrinths of calmness
until it rests in the basin
of rest

slowly
we touch each stormy vein
gently pressing
like
a gradual understanding of that healing
resolution

a moment indeed which is now properly illuminated shadows gone

fears melting

inside the newly cleansed corner of
the heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Clear And Clean...Oh, It Is Just Another Day

Another day
it does not fail to come
as usual
it is another waking
and talking and walking
and wanting to be silent
once more

it is just another day nothing significant really you see love
but it has never seen you oh, it is just another circuitous day attuned now to something that does not begin and somehow does not know how to end

where and when to cut clearly & what clean really means

RIC S. BASTASA
Clear Skies

clear skies sometimes like a blank sheet of paper without a mark like a YM without a message like a poem without a comment like a day without any hello

clear skies sometimes

but mostly blue clouds and dark clouds come as nature’s guests and you begin to like them and they become so ordinary

a common day for you

learning to live just the way nature does it
for you and you say nothing at all

RIC S. BASTASA
Cliches On Hope

Always there shall be a Glimmer of hope God willing (and the creek don't rise) Grasping at straws
you say
Hope against hope you say again
Hope springs eternal you show them how Keep you fringers crossed you walk and try to see the Light at the end of the tunnel you wish
On a wing and a prayer and you whisper to Pin our hopes on that man
Shooting for the moon and that woman
Wish upon a star

RIC S. BASTASA
Cliches On Justice

What goes around comes around your foolishness will go back to your own body What's good for the goose is good for the gander You got your just desserts you cannot eat your cake and have it too

RIC S. BASTASA
Cliches On Lying

you got a tall tale to tell something to yank your chair lying there like a rug pulling your leg
giving me this snow job about a cock and bull story forked tongue you've got up my ass you blow your smoke and to convince me that it is raining
you pee on my leg
so hard to swallow
as you pull that wool over your eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Cliches Part 2

As horny as a three balled tomcat Blew his wad
Hide the salami
Horny as a peach-orchard boar Honsky is as Horny as a three peckered Billy goat Hot beef injections he got Makin' bacon in the kitchen Making whoopee Goldberg
At the Mile high club
And could simply be a One night stand Sweet 16 and never been kissed But totally damaged I guess she must be Thinking with the wrong head He got Wet dreams
And in the morning
In class he says
Wham, bam, thank you mam
Your place or mine?

RIC S. BASTASA
Cliches, Disbelief, Pretenses, Words We Have Avoided

a bed of roses mountain of gold
fountain of youth
shangrila,
magic potion
eternity,
love, martyrdom,
holiness,

charity, openness,
self-giving,
patriotism,
talent,
fidelity,
two glasses of red wine a red carnation beside it grapes of wrath
gone with the wind
apostle, crowning glory sacrifice,
obeisance,
geisha, warrior king,
indulgence

RIC S. BASTASA
Climbing And Climbing

for every step
a hundred deep breaths
you know how hard it is to climb a mountain

but he chooses the mountains though hard as its sides are steep and sharp because it is only through mountains that he can rise from the plains

the wise man once says he chooses the mountain
because it is there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Climbing The Stairs

others have gone there
on the floor
we were once together
on the ground
with the usual beginnings of hard work
and luck... i observe the rules they don't they know something beyond the rules
the one favored by some gods
and demigods
they learn the art of chanting and prayer and bowing and genuflecting and offerings
incense and candles and flowers and praises

i only think of the rules of excellence like a horse i walk along the streets briskly and showing mastery of my route
and agility and grace and skill of my art
and visions

i climb these stairs i must be cursed i cannot reach the second floor lots of talks and schemes and tricks

i stay on the ground surrendering to the dictates of my own dignity

i get used to this somehow retaining my own pride
and always thanking God for what is given He knows best, I know.

we'll it must be, and now i don't give a damn.
This ground
is cool.

RIC S. BASTASA
Clint

Clint poor Clint
did not look so nice
with the bag
his name sound pornographic
when a syllable is made silent

Poor Clint he was told to pack up since he is disqualified.

RIC S. BASTASA
Clipped Wings

on clipped wings
i shall face you my lion's teeth all pulled my eagle's covered my slimy skin rubbed
into softness
on this helplessness
i shall test you
what am i to you
if like a man stripped of its riches and grandeur
naked and cold
shall you still take me in the comfort
of your body?

RIC S. BASTASA
Clique

clique
like a camera's snappy sound you get a face on paper you remember
pain.

clique
you hear the sound of clapping hands exhorting the fame within your circle.

each to his name, his bias, and prejudice. the bold line is drawn.

outside, they move around their circles too.
they're not sad.

those excluded, too, know how to find
themselves
they have their own feet and hands their sticks
and carrots too,
to munch
in accordance with their own kind the way how their teeth are designed their mouths spouting invectives against those not towing the line

'we have our guidelines' the ugliest of them all say that.

i, too, draw a circle of my existence.

in keeping myself in i keep them out too.

there i take my own bed and pillow and blanket.
to have a nice sleep alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cloaked

when love is cloaked and warmth is hidden inside a heart concealed beneath a thick layer of flesh and bone
gracious!
a ray of light pierces
your breast
letting out a jet-propelled outburst of emotions shouting

i love you!

RIC S. BASTASA
Close Your Eyes And See The Truth

there is nothing
that must be changed

under pressure
under extreme pressure

we do not have to change anything

did i not tell you
who we are?

the truth in us is the unseen that electricity that you cannot hold and stop

that spark
that glitter in the dark that light that is never consumed

the song that passes from one singer to another

we do not have to change
we are already perfect and whole what rots is just a part of us so temporary

the ash is merely a symbol it is never us

at night when you see lighting and hear thunder

pay attention to all these hints
and you shall never fear because you are no longer alone because you are different from fear close your eyes and feel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Closed

an earphone and Ipod playing Les Miserables
at 3 O'clock when Jesus died.

RIC S. BASTASA
Closed Door

sometimes we want to enter a door
a closed door that does not open no matter how hard we knock
we try being courteous and gentle and so patient
eating every waiting time like we are the most foolish of all fools knocking a closed door seducing it more often with our pleadings
begging and even compromising for a dance to convince the owner of the door to open it but no one hears, no one cares to listen to our pleadings, no one likes the dance of compromises the door is still closed and then the last crooked thing happens we take the axe and break the door which is closed forcing it open only to find that all the people there are dead there is nothing inside but mystery and
grief
an unsolved crime, no more no less.

RIC S. BASTASA
Closed Like A Sea Urchin

...and then i notice that i have forgotten those houses on stilts, the world of water,
and those children that amaze me since they run on those planks of wood with spaces wider than their feet and that idea that they may fall is still on my mind that anticipation of death and the mourning that follows every
thrill,

i have become more of an individual who has thrived on the power of my own freedom and who has become merely a set of eyes gazing on the world without my head my ears becoming annexes to a book
my mouth a piece of round cotton that they put on the mouths of the dead

where did i bury my hands and when did i exchange my feet for some gossamer wings
of a dragonfly?

the deep well is telling me that i have become like its hole keeping an echo and reverberating same sounds of emptiness
each day

i see only an aliquot
sky.
At night i keep saying that there is only one star a scar of light
It is sad but it is enough for me.
I have discarded the need for some more and i keep telling
'who cares i do not need any'.

i am whole d like a sea urchin

RIC S. BASTASA
Closeness

your hand
entwined to my hand

your hair under my chin your head resting on my chest you smell my breath there is no sound from your mouth you close your eyes and see some trees and ponds and waterfalls and birds and clouds and flowers blooming over a field of green grass and butterflies and bees the air you feel is as fresh as the scent of our skins i caress your arms you let my hands go you touch my face and then you look at me we kiss and then we both melt in paradise.

RIC S. BASTASA
Clothes And Underwear

shades and black shiny shoes
and white socks

and olive green polo shirts a red jockey underwear and king's pants

a rolex wristwatch
reading glasses
they are all spread randomly on a carpeted floor

all these are useless.
removed from you
and her.

she are
naked.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cloud King

the hands of fog hole his head like a hill the coldness is felt on the sides of his ear
you are the cloud king now feeling so high
you let the drops of rain fall
and so there were tears
dropping from his eyes

cloud king, wearing the cloak of fog, you leave another
valley of molested emptiness

barren desert feeling another wasted moment

RIC S. BASTASA
Clouds Begin To Hang On The Dryland

on the dry lands where my house stands
today
some clouds begin to hang on the side of the big mountains

they are forming rain gathering all the dew
and mist and fog
i sent the vapors
of tears

i wait for the clouds to ripen
and become too heavy to carry itself
to a distance

and then the raindrops finally come sliding on my roof
the waters rise
forming
the river where all my sorrows
sail
toward the sea
somewhere
or whatever
that place where everything simply becomes
nothing

unidentifiable
where i am no longer myself or yours
or theirs
on some marks of ownership

RIC S. BASTASA
dark clouds come and light disappears but only for a moment

light by its nature triums always

and dark clouds
disappear and make the rain

everything turns out

for good always
at the end

RIC S. BASTASA
Clueless Still

my wife asks me
why do you remain a stone?

why are you so impenetrable?
my answer is a gaze.

i wait if she insists if she repeats the question over and over again
perhaps thinking that with repetition i may become soft as water and shall soon allow a moss to grow
a fish to thrive

and then my answer turns into a stare my eyes burning with fire is it love? is it this love within me? is it the one handed to me like a torch in a race?

my mouth is indifferent.
she cries. she says there is a boulder between us.

i kiss her. Inside my mind, a river runs.
you figure out where it is going.

RIC S. BASTASA
Clumsily

in the middle of a shoot out you drop on the pavement
still
breathing

eye say you are doing
nothing

inside a high end Brazilian waffle
you sit uncomfortably with books hanging on the roof and on a tight chair your butt squeezed like an orange

when you stand up
to leave a picture frame of her grandmother falls and everybody who sips coffee stops sipping and looks at you
as though
you have just killed a cat silly and clumsy

they are indeed

i am not a public figure not a superstar and why are they looking i smile and then say that the force of gravity thanks God is still working

RIC S. BASTASA
Co - Existence Of The Good And Evil, ...
Metamorphosis ...

a flower cannot be without its sepal and petals the leaves grow
around and below the stem pushes
it straight and through a thorn co-exists a caterpillar climbs and soon as expected a butterfly hovers looking for the nectars

RIC S. BASTASA
Cocky

at 4 a.m.
the cocks are getting cocky

announcing the arrival of a satisfied
morning

everything is a yes everybody is welcome

light penetrating
the shutters of the venetian blinds
light filling the room like cream
to the mouth and lips

the cocks are cocky as ever now louder
and stronger
on voices to the skies

to a perfect morning hail! hail! hail!

RIC S. BASTASA
Coconut Grove

She carries her body like a swing of delights

i got wings too
and i carry my body like a coconut palm

she will find comfort in my shade and my wings shall cover her body she becomes a smooth sand wrapping my body i am a tree and she will always be a swing to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cocosuma

This is music for painful eyes And numb arms Trickle of Electric guitar Flowing Cascading And then Caught By a flute At the bottom A basin And both Join together In unexpected Harmony The voice Of a beautiful Girl singing In between Mixing intertwining As I take all the notes In my hands And wash All the music In my face Like a Face towel i am refreshed, Holy God, i am refreshed, i am feeling that The pain Is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
THE ugly faces
harsh realities, the schemes of your enemies, the way the group together and laugh at you don't waste your time on those that hurt you

don't settle for less choose your own friends plan your next trip Thailand is amazing Beijing offers you the longest wall that can be seen if you are in the moon Fly to the moon
Search for the magic carpet Buy yourself a magic broom Reset your mind
Focus on the happiness Junk sadness
Buy those tickets now
To Mexico, Bahamas, Saigon Australia and the London and Paris ON to Austria's Vienna Woods You see Life has a lot to offer Leave the Nincompoops
And the hypocrites Seal your eyes with the Latest hip-hop songs in your I-tunes Satisfy your tongue
To a variety of Menus Feast your Eyes
Upon the beautiful bodies in the Beach For by now you must realize There are no reasons Why you should stay in the nook Imprison Yourself in a cubicle and Be Sad
Be happy my dearest
For you have just inherited This Earth
That Heaven.

RIC S. BASTASA
Code: The Credit Card

THERE ARE always and will always be present vested, self-interests and the 'good' may pretend to have done the Good for goodness' sake

what hypocrites do we have here?

the good man that you know who keeps on booking your place ticket brags that he is doing but charity to you sham! he is interested in the points that he earns in his credit card but no one minds, they're too dumb to listen too selfish too to even know that there is something wrong their concern is only the incoming tour and nothing more

i still think clearly silent and furious the usual world of two people: the swindler and the swindled the puppet and the string the devil and the sea....

RIC S. BASTASA
unless you empty
all thoughts unless you sit
there
all emptied of who, what
you are

i will say
we are all dumb
we are co-equal

RIC S. BASTASA
Coffee And Music And Rain

as you play the piano the rain outside has not ceased the notes fall like rain music is a crying

song

the cries become music
to my ears

there is no sadness that is sadness per se

because sadness has meaning it has a purpose

just like every note that must have a place in this afternoon sonata

to create that blend of sweetness and bitterness over a cup of brewed coffee

RIC S. BASTASA
Coffee Perhaps..........

we get to know each other first by the hand extended. The name comes later. Coffee perhaps or a burger. Things matter day one till day five.
we sense a certain commonness some areas of mutuality.
You have a guitar and i have a song.
i have a place, you have something to tell.
i got a bed, you have a blanket.
Then you have hands and i got tears. Then there is nothing to talk about.
Where is the song? Oh i forget the lyrics.
Then life makes no sense.
Everything becomes too light.
You are not my burden Neither am I
we are
back to fog again.
Another is a hill,
some treetops.

RIC S. BASTASA
Coffee Talk

i could have just written about a hot coffee and that teaspoon of brown sugar

and tell you that this is what is poetry all about

one morning when it rains so hard that we have no chance to talk, and really talk about it

but despite the rain
you leave just the same.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cogitation

if this chair does not exist will i, this, chair, me, who asks, if this chair, exists at all, can i, exist, too? will i be dependent on the thought of a chair a thought of me that i think i can touch, that i think thoughts touching this thought of a chair does the chair think about me, i ask, looking for that therefore beside the chair that i thought is a chair, that i thought is I, am, therefore, a chair, thinking chair, on four feet?

RIC S. BASTASA
Coincidences

Coincidences are the initiating moments of seduction and somehow nature smiles at it the tryst may follow next again as a matter of coincidence this happens when people try to say that love in unexpected niches also bloom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cold

distance becomes sweet roller coaster love
repeating the constancy of beginnings
the same windows and doors that open
and close
familiar light
getting in every morning cliches of promises boring days and hours unchallenged cold, everything i touch is cold, i retreat to this bitter victories sorrow shall i love more numbing sweetness
this nameless state what is no longer a question the roof and the ceiling crushing us both

let us have a little space between us let us plant the words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cold Air

alone you sit on a chair
facing the orange horizon
and then
you feel
this cold air
on your nape

greet her she is here
touch her she is forever

RIC S. BASTASA
it is all but a dream
we are but illusions
my hands are mists
and so are yours
my lips are imaginary flowers of the last summer

it is all but a dream
a flower of my own fertilized misery
a bud of my bid for survival

in this dream
everything wants to be true no one wants to be unreal but we somehow have to wake up
one morning
and meet the rain and wind harsh on our skin wet on our hair
cold are our hearts but beating still.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cold Choco

i must have stayed too long my choco is cold
and there are red ants
on the side of the
porcelain cup.

bye.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cold Cuts

she went naked
purposely to call his attention

when he saw her naked he rushed to cover her and forgot all
about it

RIC S. BASTASA
Cold Nights...

AT night he barks like a dog since she is not with him, at dawn he sleeps like a cat beside a soft hugging.

ONE learns to cope up with absence

AND no one's to be blamed for one's sins in the pursuit of human company

ON cold times like these one declares independence from the code of marriage.

RIC S. BASTASA
Colds

clouds
gather in your eyes dark and heavy and soon
enough
sticky flood comes out from the holes of your nose.

RIC S. BASTASA
Colors

twin dark blue hills golden sun peeping
nude bathing

RIC S. BASTASA
walking along the beach one morning when the seagulls are feeding i tread upon colored stones of different sizes
too pleasing to my eyes despite the temptation to indulge in the temptation i will be obliged to pick them all and load myself with such a beautiful burden that i can no longer carry

like all solutions to this indecision i watch and just keep on walking amazed and too light like a bird on its wings

RIC S. BASTASA
Come Back To Me

Do not be slighted, Lust, return to me when i am strong again when my skin feels the tickle and the rub

Do not be shy
Come to my bed again
For my sheets are warm
My pillow dreamy.

Come back to me
AT night when i am alone again Caressing my body
In sin

Sensual pleasures
Come and feel the dryness of my Thighs
The blessings of my arms
The tenderness of my heart

For now I welcome all these
I am alive
I am hungry and thirsty
For Love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Come Come To Me Kitty

my cat
i never understand
you

you speak
a language that i cannot really understand

come come near me for i miss you

come come beside
me
for i still love you to be with
me

despite your sharp paws
and inhuman behavior

RIC S. BASTASA
Come Hercules Come Prometheus

there is this man in us that is incomplete
one with the strong body but with a weak mind

there is this strong mind but with a weak body

Prometheus, Hercules
they all must fuse as one to make this man complete

RIC S. BASTASA
Come One

come one
come all

let us have another party

with words
and songs

let us pretend
that our ribs are guitar rings

and our hands
are tambourines

and our mouths are flutes

and our
walls and posters
our friends
and guests

under the moon
on this cold
night
inside our room

let us be joyful as the precious
children
of this universe
worshipping God above
come one
come all
let us dance
and make...love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Come Springtime

come springtime
vienna, austria
your flowers
i shall smell
your mountains
i shall trek
your air i shall breathe

come springtime
on the month of june
with her.

RIC S. BASTASA
Come Summer

come summer
we leave for austria then to the czech republic we proceed
and possibly stay there for two weeks
on an ivf vacation

we want to see the flowers of hope we let them show how love in heat
survives

RIC S. BASTASA
Come To Me And Be My Morning Sunshine

come to me and be my morning sunshine
i slipped on a mossy stone and fell upon a deep river
and i almost drowned and i am wet
and i am shivering
and i am alone that night, that cold damp night when i almost died

without you
and so i wish that you will come to me and be my sun that you may spread your arms like sunshine that i may live that i may still profess my love though unloved, betrayed, and so foolish

RIC S. BASTASA
Come To My Window...

for you to see what i am seeing now, there is a need for you to come to my window stand beside me and feel me we do not have to talk it is what we see that will talk to us they always understand and will always be there to entertain us in their loquacious silence...their dance of life, their illustration of
eternity...

RIC S. BASTASA
Come To Think Of Them

beggars wearing white robes
and large diamond ring in their middle fingers
by the authority
of God
they live all in luxury
tax free

robbers wearing fine, expensive suits accorded accolades
and reaping honors from plain
juan de la cruz
invoking the authority of your state

holy and honorable in their respective thrones all built by the bricks and limestones of our ignorance and gullibility

we are the people
and we are the kings and yet we look so miserable living
miserable in poverty in sickness in death

we sew the white robe and the fine suit and let them wear them
as we take and thrive on tattered clothes and listen to our rattling bones

RIC S. BASTASA
Come What May And Live For Today...

how natural can can
can can conflicts be in their occurrences
everyday?

how beautiful can they appear
after a time of repetitions?

how courageous can we be facing them with numbness of our our faces
with all the mindlessness of our own
existences

now we open the doors to the winds
we do not close the windows to these outrageous realities

let them come if they may we have always been ready

stones on the river
frogs on the fields
grass to the rain
cliffs to the clouds continents upon the widest oceans

what is there to worry?
all shall suffer the same endings
same fates, same struggles, come what may
and live for today...

RIC S. BASTASA
Come, Come Stay With Us, This Is Our Paradise on the other side is the coastal beauty of sky blue clear seas and coconut palms at the opposite of the other side one takes the road leading to the green mountains the forest trees are nest of birds and the branches are playthings for monkeys below the mountains are villages sleepy and peaceful and cooler with fresh air and flowery gardens a vast expanse of rice and corn fields rivers still teeming with fish the people still opting for peace this is our paradise. Come, stay with us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Come, Come To The Light, Let Us All Bathe.

why do you choose to be sad? it is not worth your time which has curled like a worm inside a rotten fruit,

why do you disregard the help of God? Why do you choose pride? why do you dwell in the darkness of your struggles?

come, come to the light, outside the window, come to the playing field he owns the sun and he gives it free.
he owns the grass and there is nothing to pay,

happiness is free, it is offered unconditionally,
happiness is a dove, and a bud, a ray of light, a wind on your hair, a flower on a hill,

come, come to the light, let us all bathe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Comes A Time When Love Is Gone

i do not wait for the colors to change when red is not red anymore when green becomes black when the sea turns into a desert when the signs of bad changes come i will take the first move of moving away from this calamity: when love is gone when there is no more any place to hide to save what is still left behind when there is no more you when there is no more me even to speak of when love is gone the whole world goes away what is the use of talking and writing and thinking?

everything stops like this one

RIC S. BASTASA
Comes The Night Of My Life comes now the night of my life a very dark night

the sound of the cat looking for a mate

someone in heat the dogs howl in the middle of the road some footsteps coming to the house

by the window
i show my sorrow

i talk about tomorrow to the moon that somehow pretends to listen

on the other hand you may be right i pretend the moon is here comes now the darkest night how can a moon be a reality? how can you be here with me?

to survive please understand lying to myself is much fun

RIC S. BASTASA
Comfort Others Of Their Sorrows

there is something more to what we do
there are always returns of what we have so earnestly given

as you comfort others of their sorrows some of your hidden sorrows also go away
unnoticed

as you try to solve other's problems your own problems too begin to solve themselves as you teach a person what to do you are taught yourself what to do with your own idleness unknowingly this is what giving is all about unwittingly

more is also taken

it makes you full, and then it makes you sing and in the streets where you walk alone you begin to dance the steps you have never really known before

RIC S. BASTASA
Comfort Zone

when the world was young no one stands still
each has traveled where the dreams take him
each has ventured with the sails into the lands of their wishes

but that was long ago now that the world has gone older each has kept what has been given without any intention of giving that away

for in the comfort zone each is ready for the coming of this guide, death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Comforting A Wounded Self...

30,000 feet above
the earth
you take your camera
hold it by the window and click on the the tiny islands beneath you and you tell this world: you're not that big and wide
and you sit back and relax and comfort
yourself: it is not that bad really.

RIC S. BASTASA
Coming Back

it's been quite a time abandon is such a very sad word neglect has become important

and every word here mourning for the demise of a beloved craft

i am back and you shall take revenge
nights are sleepless days are restless

life becomes one strange cat with only one life left to come back and be a slave again

on this
white leaf

RIC S. BASTASA
and one day you come back home and all of them rejoice for a soul that was lost and now found, a feast is held and some streamers hang on rope twines and flowers adorn some pillars and walls smiles are exchanged turning to heavy laughter and a series of embraces from old arms to the newer ones, you shed some tears of joy and you look at every nook and road and even the rooms and stairs over the farm and the old village horizon, trees and shrubs and garden grass, you weigh which changed most: is it the place or the self? is it you or them? less the drama, and the excitement, i look at you and tell you: things of the heart remain exactly what they are. Love is contained.

RIC S. BASTASA
Coming Back To The Corner Where I Just Sat A Minute Ago

without much thought i come back to that corner where i just sat a minute ago
i am not looking for anything i know i have not forgotten anything like a pen or a lighter or a piece of paper for in truth i do not bring these kind of stuff anymore a pen in my pocket cannot be i don't have a pocket a piece of paper to write some notes of things that i easily forget like things to do this morning or a meeting tonight or a date with someone else for i do not write those things which are so important to me because i do not really forget anything so important what more for a lighter... in truth, i ceased to be an arsonist of love..

i get burned, i do not burn anyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Coming Back To You

i may have betrayed you
for a time
on that long waiting

a waiting that has lasted for quite long

when the path has not flowered my steps back
to you

but i shall compensate for the lost moments

here i am back to your bosom my fingers shall sow some petals
of words

that you really miss this kiss

that lands upon your cheek dried like a rainless creek

i have come a long way only to see you falling asleep in bed in total exhaustion where is the potion?

RIC S. BASTASA
Coming Back....

pressing the orange.
it is not you that feels the pain or the pressure.
someone else does it for you as you watch
when he twists his fingers and his face but you have other things to see with the gladness of your
heart.

she sings a song early this morning after she bathes herself in extreme coldness and i wonder why she did not use the hot shower.

it is the coldness of the morning that makes her sing as i still put myself under the thick cover of a thick blanket.

this denial.

early shall she move out.
no word is wasted.

do not ask the meaning of moving out it can be painful

reinvent the word, coming back, redefine it.
who knows?

RIC S. BASTASA
Coming Home

unannounced you come home bringing all the scruples inside your head you stay somewhere else in an island undisclosed you phone me finally not to tell them about us you want another chapter of the love story that we did not finish years ago now i have to choose the words well and for the punctuation marks: shall there be a period?

exclaim, i say, exclaim, interject!

RIC S. BASTASA
Coming Home This Christmas

coming home this christmas
when all the leaves are dead when all the twigs are broken when there are no flowers she looks underneath the bed looking for old letters maybe there must be some in there she goes out to the open yard looking for some creeping roots

RIC S. BASTASA
Coming Out From The Cocoon

a yellow butterfly comes out from its cocoon
its feet clinging on a leaf the soft wind blows and its wings harden
for its maiden flight

as it blends to the yellow daisies
we think it is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Commenting On Tony's Poem....Deciphering...

a darling leaves appetite of sweet tongue In a pointed bit of the heart with a daring stunt of a satisfy embrace, take my desire to cleanse my nothingness

(do you desire to remove the emptiness? that sweet tongue that licks the heart of the lonely man, that embrace that puts suns in the bosom?)

oh! garrison of sweet request, the bounty hold on to catch the endless venture of lasting memories to lend on the rapacious appetite of my bosom soul

(the garrison of delights, those memories that lust, what appetite is there?)

tarnish it with snapshot delight of nothing and forward the driven heart to ponder the quest of emptiness, I induce to pieces of great surrender

(did you drive your heart towards more empty spaces?) do you intend to surrender? and quit? and embrace defeat?) where can I turn to, when the journey shallow by the night of rapture, sail on that envy of my cause for only in giving fully, the enduring heart has had come to voyage endlessly

(do you have no one to turn to?
is your heart a boat that shall sail endlessly? no destination? no port? nothing about the idea of any home for eventual return? just in case?)

RIC S. BASTASA
Commercialism Does Not Diminish Our Sorrow...

in cebu at the new robinson's galeria
my niece asks me to pose in front of that big tarpaulin showing a number of faces in their big smiles, something new really but i oblige for a pause thinking that i do not have to be a kill-joy in this family occasion

she shoots my laughter trying to compare it the artistry of commercialism

i take a look after: mine is half-cooked and theirs
as usual in the most professional manner is well done.

what i think is that
and this i conclude: grief is always personal and no amount of commercialism diminishes it. So far.

RIC S. BASTASA
Commitment

on your left hand
you have five fingers one of which is the ring finger where, of course, you have your ring now cut the other four see your hand bleeds

leave the ring finger alone to manage the work of your hands that is commitment cutting off the rest from the one you have chosen

RIC S. BASTASA
Commitment As A Tiny Sun

above me is a tiny sun
it is dancing
only for me it lives inside my head warms my heart
it shines and sets only
for me

it is a dream
that i yet have to hold with my own hands

around me are planets and places they pull me but i fell like a feather so light and i float and undisturbed and i exist only for the tiny sun

i am a place where i let the sun settle down
and i listen to no other sound except its hush which is more like a whisper of a friend to another friend who lives for no other reason
except themselves

the planets fall
the other places of the heart crumble but the tiny sun
continues
to shine and set within
myself
because we promise
because we fulfill.
Commitment Is Like Cutting My Fingernail

commitment
is like cutting my fingernails i leave the part that i do not need
i severe that which gives me pain
i polish that which must be clean
and neat
and against the sun
shall glow and glisten.

RIC S. BASTASA
Commitment To Excellence

It demands
That you must be crushed like rock to sand
To a fine refinement
To the highest pressures that make that glittering Diamond
In the dark

It does not demand an explanation of who Gets the credit
In the limelight

You watch, it is enough that everything is Done

And now, the glitter lights for everyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Committare

the way things are working with us
when we start to learn how to cease and be on our own

separate ways
we cut cleanly like how you cut your fingernails your toes are neat and my hands are free at last.

RIC S. BASTASA
Communion

my feet shall tread upon grass the grass spreads upon a topping of pebbles the pebbles plunge on the river the banks keep the stretch until it reaches the mouth of the sea and the sea spreads its arms all throughout the continents of the earth's bodily contours with the winds that takes the clouds with them drifting along the curves of mountains and its peaks until it communes with the myriad shining stars at night with you my world has become complete warm and lovely in communion with your body and soul

i have become so full.

RIC S. BASTASA
Companion In The Room...

keep watching
over a tiny candle light be careful with your breath close the windows lock the doors

on still air and cold stare
the tiny candle light shall be alive and warm

RIC S. BASTASA
Comparative Lifestyles

you studied all your life from a pile of books you consume your eyes there are other leftovers of sight but you spent them for the arts until you get blinded by all these sorts of verbosity lost and since then was never found they lighted candles and offered prayers for you disappearance and then after a month or so or let us say a year but that would be quite a long time for someone who had become one of those
forgotten

someone in the neighborhood weaves mats
fish in the river for food isolated
whistles his way on evenings on a tryst with his newly found lover
worships feelings and follows the intricacies of desire he lives here with the rest of the contented souls peacefully
and untouched by the sophistication
of words
happily watching the stars as his hands caress the hair of the woman he loves....

RIC S. BASTASA
i take time
or turns
and twists as i take pictures on that day
of a sunrise and a sunset
at a five-minute
interval

two Italians kiss
each other
when the sun finally falls like a red dot on the blue horizon

and then it was dark and then the lights
on the stores and hotels are turned on.

RIC S. BASTASA
Comparisons

you have not seen how they repaired the broken things within their fences

you have seen me
how i mend our broken fence
and you say
we are worse than they

you always see the greener fence beyond ours
i will not disagree with you but you must understand that this all about them and us and please bear with me

there are no points of comparisons you have never lived in their house.

RIC S. BASTASA
Comparisons (Revised)

you have not seen how
they repaired the broken things
within their fences

you have seen me
how i mend our broken fence
and you say
we are worse than they

you always see the greener fence
beyond ours
i will not disagree with you
but you must understand that this is all about them and us

and please bear with me

there are no points of comparisons
you have never lived in their house

we are a family and we must accept with humility what broken things we have in our house what small love is left what waste we can still keep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Compassion

a self-reproach
in a sense
equates itself with compassion

you punish yourself and sometimes
more than
necessary

like your hair
that hangs on your forehead
lashing your eyelids
trying to pursue
what your eyeballs could not see what your mouth has not uttered.

compassion
you want to be like a leaf and fall
and be lost on a rushing river
and just be like one of them

you betray your race
your grasshopping
ancestors

RIC S. BASTASA
Compassion 2

don’t let this be
don’t let this be
these are the eyes that look with all mercy

don’t let this be
don’t let this be
these hands that gently do the work necessary under so much pressure

don’t let this be
don’t let this be
the mouths speak
nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Compassion Is Always A Justification For Relaxing The Rules

compassion
is always a justification for relaxing the rules
making them sit like visitors in prison cells trying to reach about those who appear to be guilty when if fact they are not.

compassion is your mother
as your father is always the rule
stern as he is she softens what harshness is
there

between them is the love of the child
the runaway kid
the stubborn child who has not understood yet that the rod and everything else is used for the good of all and always in the name of

love

RIC S. BASTASA
Compassion To The Man In Sorrow

the man whose heart is broken who lurks in surrender sitting on the floor covering his head with his hands his lips tasting the salt of his tears

sobbing
he needs to be left alone what he needs most is the compassion of your letting him go letting him think about what to do next with his life in such a short moment give him the wide latitude of silence his soul is speaking and he must listen

RIC S. BASTASA
Compassion...

i stop the car
a kitten is in the middle of the road
wanting to cross

i get down to bring it home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Compassion.....

pity for sure
is an enemy of empathy it is the lower kind of this hierarchy of
compassion,

so please do not ever say that you pity me
for you do not deserve to own those words.

compassion is different as it transforms my suffering and your suffering as our suffering,

as it enhances our system of immunity, ...

RIC S. BASTASA
Compete

Ok, this is a race Compete. Ok, this is a dog-eat-dog world Beware, be cautious, and be meek like a lamb, Be vigilant like a fox, ok, this is a game That all people play, be a participant,

But you do not have to compete with them Compete with yourself, compete with excellence

Rage against the forces of evil Go beyond your own limitations

But you do not have to bite anybody like a dog And be rabid and fierce for no reason at all

But you do not have to be a fox in a lamb’s skin Just be what you are in your true colors

But you do have to be shrewd and be a fraud, Just play the game well, display your cards,

And play fair, and fight fair, and be a sport, Just be honest and you will win, fair and square.

RIC S. BASTASA
Complacency

the road to understanding appears to us
fenced and paved the way all cleared and the grasses on the side well trimmed
the trees grown on a line and flowers are grouped according to their kind complacent we think that this is all that there is nothing to be figured out anymore there is nothing to be scrutinized nothing to question

you sit inside the hut on the side of a hill and rest and breathe the air from there there is nothing to be done everything is handed and what we do is only to receive and behave

no one jumps over the fence no one puts another kind of flower anymore what grass you know is the grass that is well trimmed nature manicured

i have long gone away from that place i live in the forest and struggle to communicate with the monkeys i am clearing my own way and building my own house on top of a tree i am well, and i guess happier.

RIC S. BASTASA
Complacency (2)

one has forgotten
the sickle

the weeds have thrive

and the sea is blurred

try to figure out what sickens you

your hands are idle you ego shouts

how soft the soil
how life is buried.

RIC S. BASTASA
Complacency

from my hands
you little bird with a black beak shall take the grains

i wait for time to grow you strong wings so you can fly away and join your family

and then you have wings why do you want to stay still in my house pecking the grains in my hands?

what is it
that you love on the lines of my palms?

RIC S. BASTASA
Compleanno

on your birthday
you will skip seeing what i am giving you

it may be difficult but it is necessary

that pain that also gives you much pleasure

that sorrow that soon stimulates the senses of singing

for years and years you have completed the cycle of births

and for those same years you always evade what is there to be felt

another year
and you tell yourself
i will watch it
later

always always in suspended
light
loving what is vague
happy with what is opaque

RIC S. BASTASA
Complementary

she shall keep him
as half-truth
even if he has turned into a big lie

he shall keep her as a big lie
even if she has become the whole truth

RIC S. BASTASA
Complete And Perfect

me and kenra are all about a meeting of wisdom and youth

wisdom sits in front of her as she glows

she listens carefully to every word i say

she smiles, leaves me for her mother

and then the day is complete, & perfect.

RIC S. BASTASA
Completing One Revolution

like the planets you take your own orbit away from the rest eluding this fatal collision you travel alone keeping on your own gravitation balancing the forces of your being outside inside near and far coming and going centrifugal centripetal that is the way you move to be alive

then the moment comes when you complete
one revolution

how time trickled like some drops from a rock you flow
bit by bit
you are so busy then about almost everything

on the other side
the clear pool of water mirror of the sky and sun and moon

it is you
you have earned it
it is you
on your birthday

RIC S. BASTASA
Completion...

the body
is stroked upon
by tender hands this body
stands before it watching
caressing those
hands
skin lands on
skin

the world knows
its own
kind of foreplay

clouds on the side of the hills
sunset kneeling upon the foot of the mountain

lightning flashes
sounds of thunder

the snake spits
its venom
on the tender flesh

of the
innocent chick...

RIC S. BASTASA
Compliance.... here is nothing amazing on things of compliance duty does not glitter it is just there for a function it has not the passion of the flower that blooms still despite the deep forest where light is nil
and waters few perhaps it is only the dew that pays its respect on matters of compliance where the heart breaks and pain says nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Complicated

I know
You want something Complicated.
You move heaven and earth
To get what you want A body, a room, a set of eyes Wanting to write
Your name there-
Then the body
Grips your neck,
The room imprisons you
And the set of eyes
Stares at you,
Now they demand
Something that you dislike You begin to hide
And wear disguises
You fold your arms
And they ache
You hold your feet
And you begin to Feel the numbness
Of things that you said You love to hold to keep You remember some dreams They had all been there In silence
You mention some names
You face some faces
But they do not Recognize you anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Complicated Lifestyle.

a man's life is simple.
he has a routine, like this: house, office, house.

he gets bored, adds another place, like house, office, park, mall, house, waste of money, but a little interesting, he adds more a friend's house, another house where he can be intimate with someone, then sex, and games and romance and betrayal and use and sue and lots of booze,

he retreats back to house, office, house, but it is not the same again.

he sins, feels so broke, and to a certain extent attempts at suicide.

sad, but it can happen to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Composed, Restrained.

nothing can change love.

it is forever.

Love can change everything, nothing can stop love,

it grows,
it goes out,

escapist, hard headed,
self destructive,

stranger to restraint melts like ice even in the
cold,

burns snow,
spreads like a bushfire it does not have water to contain itself

neither air
to compromise
a choking

i must not have known it well enough,

i am contained,
compressed, composed,
and silent
as ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Composing A Poem For The One Who Loves You how do you compose a poem for the one who (pretends to love you?)

loves you and yet you feel nothing at all?

well, perhaps,
and i guess, there is no problem with the choice of words,
or images,

for in this case, what you will write is something that you do not really mean, like an empty cup without hot water and you just place it on the table and you wait, since you only fill it with air,
and some sighs,

yet somehow how can you ever hurt?
like pretending also to love someone who pretends also to love you?

it is all an imagination, pretending that the water is hot when there is nothing but the coldness of the porcelain,
pretending that there is coffee, when there is nothing to smell and taste, when there is nothing so sweet as sugar or as creamy as cream,

you write something so unreal, it is bland, it is empty, it is sad.

RIC S. BASTASA
Compromises

you should have talked more with the gorilla as he is willing to compromise i still owe him something the greater the haggling the greater the chances for dreams the mightier the swings of misfortune your signature could have sped it up but you left that in the notebook because it would not pass as yours...

RIC S. BASTASA
such is the story
of love, now that they have gone old
all their children having no time
having lives of their own in distant places

how the pianist wife suffered the mental illness which he could not watch for long

'she is not herself anymore' he thought

and he locked the doors closed all the windows

put a pillow on her face until she died.

RIC S. BASTASA
Compulsion

doesn’t want to sleep, but the fingers still want to caress
the words
for another poem

a bad poem,
a demanding one vomiting
words with no intention of making any meaning at all it is this compulsion the body resisting sleep a rehearsal for death the eyes are not aware of this it is the spirit that oozes in the fingers

RIC S. BASTASA
Compulsive

a tattoo in your body crawling your thoughts
of the past
reflected in the lines of your skin those violent ones and bloody ink tracing what they did to you when you were just but a kid,
you cannot stop the tattoo tattooing you, a matter of obsessive compulsive body writing, these too are the makings of depression, the doctor says, you do it and you want it done, like you cannot stop tattoo tattooing you,
in your arms,
and legs
and tomorrow your chest you wish some pictures of God and gods no, no, not the monsters that you want extricated, i watch you

in this compulsion and you are relating why, how,
what explaining the meanings of these figures when they confront you, i am listening,
i am not lost, i am analyzing bits and pieces of your world to mine,
i am amazed how the changes come,
like some scribbles becoming angels
and saints,
i am trying to get what the doctor is saying,
compulsive neurosis
schizophrenia,
obsessive,
dominant
recessive,
i am looking for a space to put you
and make you my guinea pig, but i stopped,

you are human and i must respect you, now, i have to deal with my compulsive state too, this poetry,
i cannot stop and it is hammering me everyday,

crazy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Compulsive Existentialism

i want it to be simple, not even unique
so that it cannot be noticeable, i do not want any sophistication or any complication but the more i want it to be simple it gets more complicated the more i put order to it the more it becomes unmanageable i want to put it inside a system
so i can easily trace and manipulate it but it simply has a life of its own and it makes its own decisions i want to contain it in a box
tape it
and create a vacuum in it but it knows its ins and outs and knows how to break out from boxes i want to keep it but it knows what freedom is it cannot be mine and now outwitted
i have become
itself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Compulsive-Obsessive Neurosis

he promised himself that at the first second when he wakes up this morning he's gonna go directly to the door get his sneakers and face towel and take a walk while it is still cold and dark

but look, here he is again like a robot, opens his PC, stares at the monitor, goes to PH and then starts his obsessive-compulsive
poetry.

hmm, it maybe a mess that calls for psychiatry
but on the other hand the feeling is elevating now on the ninth cloud he takes a walk in his fields of imagination - on the path of nirvana.

RIC S. BASTASA
Concealed

inside the clam is concealed flesh
it is where the pearl is,
in the same manner
inside the skin is the pulp it is where sweetness lies, the ripeness of the fruit,
and one licks it
and savors the juicy portion of what nature willingly gives without even knowing your name,

inside my heart lies what you have been looking for
i am ripe
and luscious
my pearl shines to the hunger of your gaze
my flesh drips to the enticement of your thirst come then and be with me

tonight
when the moon does not mind what love can do
to love

RIC S. BASTASA
Concealing Nothing...

you were expecting a diamond ring inside my hand as i was too defensive and too protective to hide it and not for once revealing what is it to anyone, until i get tired lying to you
about it
misleading you about its true value its ordinariness, itstemporal nature,

that one that comes now and gone in a minute and cannot therefore exist till the end of the day you never guessed it right i am holding nothing...nada que nada...

RIC S. BASTASA
Concealing That Nocturnal Existence....

you realize that there is nothing that you keep or can at night a stranger of the house talks about a departure you listen as he is putting music to his flute it is a sad one it is like the sonorous sound of the rain at night it is windy the departure shall be early before the sun comes up you never sleep anticipating the excitement of the departure there are only two of you before the sun comes up between the two hills both of you have already dissolve in the distance blend with the trees, walk on grasses, there are no traces, the two of you never exist

RIC S. BASTASA
Concealment And Covering

you conceal so many things for so many reasons
you cover them
for so many ratiocinations you cover you cup of coffee so it may not get cold that easily in the same manner you cover your cooking pot so it may get hot earlier and at least fuel you cover your ears perhaps because there's so much noise you cover your head because it may be so hot or there may be rain you cover your book to protect it from stains you cover your furnitures because there is so much dust you cover your body, your heart, your mind

for so many reasons

to each his own because we want to survive we want to live we want to be just left to ourselves in our chosen privacies no one has ever said that survival is a crime, a sin, a wrong, it is the most fitting thing to do, and you must do it too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Conceding

Winnie says that man with a square face knows how to count before the last hour, before the truth is fully unfolded before his almond eyes he conceded. Winnie laughs and blurts he is an accountant, he knows the numbers before they come.
he says his speech giving up we listen.

dignity is still a gentleman during a painful defeat all the efforts of friends, all the money spent, they are all gone.
i listen to his speech congratulating the winner of this political game there are no tears
there is no slight trembling of the lips this man is strong and pure, this man has the courage perhaps, next time, when another winner shows its true color bloats his head, and commits the same crime of those ahead of him, perhaps next time

i will vote for this man. He is square and fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
Conceit

so i may love you all God has given me
this handsome face
and beautiful body

that you may kiss
hold and relish
not minding
this inborn conceit

RIC S. BASTASA
Conceit (2)

sometimes
you just have to accept that you don't belong to anyone
or anybody or any group or society

at first it is painful to accept trying to spell out this misery

but then
there is always that

on the other hand
that blessing in disguise

there is peace
in your being you

there is originality
in your journey

now that you are alone but not really lonely

lovely
is the scene without any taint of any one of them

their shadows
stink and you begin to close
your mouth

RIC S. BASTASA
Conceit And Deceit

what i have in my hands are only stones

if you search for more pebbles

my mind can give you
but first

you must entice me with a flower in your hand for you to have stones that soon will grow you some leaves of sand that soon shall show you how pebbles can be flowers

too

what you have are only flowers

a little bit lighter than the twigs of their source

what i have in my hands
are pebble that give us weight yes, weight is wisdom and they are all stones

RIC S. BASTASA
Conceit Of David

as i watch myself
naked before the mirror taking comfort in every muscle and bone that i have to form this magnificent body, God's work of art my temple
my transport to this place
i feel the greatness of the Creator
of such beauty and grace
every woman falls
before my knees
and beg
for pleasure

RIC S. BASTASA
Concerned

i imagine you alone in bed with a wound blood drips but you are tactful on this matter
you put cotton and apply the needed pressure to stop the bleeding
of your heart

then you stand up head high look over the window
take a deep breath and smile to the passing wind

this is life
these are  the accompanying pains of birth the obedience to the cycle and then it rains

you close the glass window the strong wind cannot be heard with its murmurs

you go back to bed
and sleep
with all the peace and quiet inside the room
of your soul

this is the acceptance
less all the denials.

RIC S. BASTASA
Concerning Your Public Confession that public confession was more pubic

lots of kinky hair and grossly irritating and you ask me if now

i must devour you

my sensibility is touched like a makahiya plant in the ricefield
stepped by the carabao's hope

let me tell you
babes

i'd rather be devout and reserved
rather than devour you and be fatal
at the end of my happy days

RIC S. BASTASA
Concisely

in clock precision
words come out from the lips of a man who just survived a broken heart in all those silent slow running years like drops of water
inside the
light deprived caves concisely shall sorrow drip forming the calcite and magnetite stealing light from morning dews outside the eyes of cliffs
where the sound of fledglings still haunt the clinging bats sleeping their hunger away.

RIC S. BASTASA
Concrete Images

hands with veins like vines creeping up the banyan tree piling hollow blocks filled with mixed cement and sand and pea-sized gravel building this high concrete post and 8-layered wall between our two houses my good neighbors with square faces do not have the ability to use kind words like they are new aliens from another galaxy 10 light years away from my bamboo bench.

RIC S. BASTASA
Conduit

poetry and pornography
conjoining

in this, poem. you do not know me. as i write this, i shift from one site to another.

from buson to the bottom of what is prohibited by our sense of propriety,

i cough. i sigh. i ache. i simply refuse to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Confessing Again...

i come to the conclusion after so many nights that since i enjoy communing with freedom, then i may as well accept that i do not belong to anyone or anything

nothing is ideal, no one is my master, this is a free world, and i let my thoughts roam like a conqueror of air, and space,

i don't know, but i simply don't belong to any class anymore,
or a system,
or an idea, like a set,
or a cache,
or a cage of this e-world

i am back here confessing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Confessing Sins

when guilt is full there comes a time when we think of the possibility of confessing our sins, the usual sins of omissions more than our sins of commissions, to a friend perhaps, but you doubt for he has more sins than you have and it might as well end on the reverse, you the listening tree and he the barking dog, or perhaps to a religious group but you shy away because of their number and you might as well at the end be the subject of their gossip in town for a week or so, and so you become a catholic again on a Sunday before your parish priest you kneel down and confess your sins, and your dismay the priest says,

' my son these are not sins anymore under the new doctrines with an ending, don't worry my boy you'll do penance just the same say three our fathers and three hail Mary's and don't come back

your sins are the same as mine' what comfort is this, when sins are confessed to a person on the same misery and guilt as we are.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is no
big box where i can hide my face

there is no parish priest who listens
there is hallway
of the old spanish church

there are no sparrows
no owls
and no fanfare
no dogmas and circulars

just me
my finger and my keys

i am both listener and spiritual adviser
i am both my silence and chatter
i am the owl in this
night
the robin in the pews
of my mind
i am my own dogma
but still no fanfare
nothing to circulate
for there is no bragging about the sins
of conceit
the omissions of the good
the true and the beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
Confidence

he does not really care how he appears to her

a mutuality she shares with him: they are like flowers

blooming independently with their white petals

always focused to the face of the mighty sun.

RIC S. BASTASA
Confidence (Misplaced Revised)

man's greed may boast of finally consuming the earth in the next hundred
years

cutting all the trees polluting the sea and air
and rivers
exploding its mountains killing all the fetus
and whatever hope for the seeds annihilated

but the earth knows
everything right
from the start
soon every destruction
is pingponged
back to man

and the earth will be back to another
thousand years of
silence
sleeping waking
and humming

another grass so green
is spread
butterflies unhampered whales crowding
the sea
peaceful landscapes
dews and
mildews
birds and grasshoppers
and whales
singing in perfect harmony

RIC S. BASTASA
Confidence (Misplaced)

man's greed may
boast of finally
consuming the
earth in the next hundred
years

cutting all the trees
polluting the sea and air
and rivers
exploding its mountains
killing all the
fetus
and whatever hope
for the sees annihilated

but the earth knows
everything right
from the start
soon every destruction
is pingponged
back to man

and the earth will be
back to another
thousand years of
silence
sleeping waking
and humming

another grass so greed
is spread
butterflies unhampered
whales crowding
the sea
peaceful landscapes
dews and
mildews
birds and grasshoppers
and whales
singing in perfect harmony

RIC S. BASTASA
Conflicts

when there are so many fruits when the weather is too fine for you when you are too good to be true when you appear with a smile and when they hear you sing and give to the world a hearty laughter in there, at that precise point when you think confidently otherwise, the conflict begins.

envy, as healthy as a buffalo, is born.

RIC S. BASTASA
Confront The Night And Sleep With It

At the end of the day this we must learn: confront the night and sleep with it feel its coldness, overcome it with your warmth survive its journey, be the boatman in this river of blackness sing, sing if you will, and let that song be for its duration do not sleep, keep the beat, ride to the power of its wings, love it, and then be ready to forget may the smooth darkness be your blanket may its silence bring you more colorful and vivid aspirations may our souls fly like seagulls in the sky may we hover back in the trees of morning lights and sing the solemn songs of our hearts again

RIC S. BASTASA
Confronted With A Blank Slate

the blank slate confronts me and challenges me to write only the most important lines in a matter of 20 seconds.

i ask myself,
how can i write my silence?

RIC S. BASTASA
Confronted With A Broken Snail

finally here i am
confronted with a broken shell the labyrinths inside its body all exposed

having seen it
i don't think that its mystery shall amaze me any longer

finally here i am
puzzled about the sting of certainties my face is quizzical my arms lose freely falling to the ground

RIC S. BASTASA
we dream,
it is misty and cold
the mountain is dressed in fog and the whole village becomes a mirage
of breath taking
dream

as we tread upon a path towards the
hut,

we were not shaky

we dream
that there is still the two of us here like many years ago

it is misty and cold
and i am shaking and afraid

this time
for real

RIC S. BASTASA
Confused

i was walking along a busy road
of this village
where the sound of squeaking bikes
abound, and

this old woman
carrying a basket of fish
stared at me, i was carrying a book

and an umbrella

it was sunny and the old woman
stared at me, perhaps

i guess, he must have missed his son, perhaps his son
stopped schooling
enlisted himself as a soldier
because there is no more money
to spend
for his tuition in school....

perhaps, his son died in combat, and perhaps his son once had a book.

Confusion As A Gift

there is nothing wrong with confusion, in fact, perplexity is a common occurrence which in some ways give us the warning that something wrong may happen there are walls, these are laws, there are fences, these are guides when you break the wall, the thieves come and take everything from you when the fences are broken, the pigs come and eat what you have planted doubt is a mark of our humanity confusion is our acceptance that we are but limited creatures of thought when you are perplexed take laughter think some more give time its due savor the peace of logic let rules be rules

doubt, doubt some more i am sure, you are alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Congratulations Lady Suffering

Do as i tell you your mama says
and so you embrace every possible pain
and indifference
surrounding you
those snakes and scorpions
all venom now
but still deathless to
all these
you face them all saying: i am invulnerable
and you cannot hurt me anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Congenital Failure

in your life there will be rain it is just a matter of the weather a little sunshine may come and with whatever warmth take it

there is a place where the sun never comes it is the island where you live accept the fact
the some guys have all the luck
accept the fact that the doors are all closed that there is nothing for you perhaps a door waits to be opened but not here for this is but a temporary party do not weep

it could be that you are bound for something long lasting

do you believe that somewhere there are angels?
that somewhere there is a room for you?

there is always the other side of the coin hope, there is always a star that glows even on darkest skies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Congratulations

So your friend leaves for Edmonton And now you are left alone in your condo Homesick to the philippine islands In Sta. Catalina

Outside the snow has become thicker Layer upon layer of coldness all white and windy A snowstorm rages perhaps As i too, imagine it here back in our Home - this country

You receive the news about a new job You get accepted and that is good enough gift From God for you

You are right my friend
It is not late yet for you to put a christmas tree inside your room On the 24th of this day of December Make it just a little christmas tree Do not put the star on top
It is passe

Put your heart up there and pray Compose not a poem for me Send a thank you e-card instead to Our God Almighty

RIC S. BASTASA
Congratulations You Made It Here...

another one has entered the world
of lonely people
and we who are inside it wait for him
with flowers in our hands and some dusts under our feet
not so visible to those who have eyes that traverse
the depth of distance

RIC S. BASTASA
Conjoining

you see your face in the mirror this morning and you begin to see the lines of age
the white hair of wisdom falling out from the hold of your forehead time has conquered your brow and your eyelashes dropping lower than you have expected your body is drooping taking in the weight of your years hefty thoughts the worries of your age leave the shocking marks in the wrinkles of your eyelids

age and the feelings of uselessness feast your body your eyes begin to see the threats of sunsets you dream about the beauty of a hundred glowing sunrises but it is not too late to learn again as you welcome the new things the sons of our weariness the daughters of our selfmade worries they all come these new ideas to comfort us about the coming of a new age where we must accept that we are destined to leave that we have finished what we are tasked to do that we are finite on this body that we have something infinite hidden in our souls the new comes conjoining with the tired wings of the old and they become one new bird singing and braving the winds of change the current of the raging rivers even still unnamed and together we shall chart and together we shall rage again towards the paths of eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
Consent

i
only knock
you are the owner of the door
of the house
if you open it then i enter

but you close
the door
and the windows
of your house airtight
and so i turn my back
and walk
away

if you change
your mind
however

i am just a stone
throw
away...

RIC S. BASTASA
Consequences

do not forget that for every action there is always a reaction

that a body at rests always stays at rest unless acted upon by an unequal force opposite that direction

this is the law in physics so unforgiving mercilessly operating in the universe

if you think that i am speaking about us so shall it be with what you have done we both shall suffer the consequences of your actions

because we are one
in all these your mistakes
and miscalculations
included
and so here i am by your side suffering gladly

RIC S. BASTASA
Consequences Of The Dumb Lover

because of love
you are ousted from the palms of convenience now you are alone in the house for he comes only when he needs your flesh pretty dumb, you are such a dumb damsel native, non-eloquent, not familiar to the guile & guises of love and lust

you shall suffer i expect that you shall be shedding tears alone on the confusing darkness you hear the sounds of bad omen the malevolent owl perched on a tree front of your window at twelve

i could have laughed until morning until i have seen you fetch the water again from the well of true love your eye sockets look like sunk ships your veins dry up like creeks on drought surprisingly, you move on because you still love him after he slaps you because the fish broth is too salty

when the lights are off you become more alive again

RIC S. BASTASA
Consequences...

love conquers all
man gives the rituals like marriage and fidelity, and love is conquered by all,
loveless, the journey continues guilty, the mind holds on till nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Consistency

little by little a little bit of this and that

everyday
a pinch of salt
a single cube of sugar a dropp of oil
a bay leaf

a little cut of lemon grass a sip and a moment

with you
call it tea
or soup

don't ask for coffee i don't have any.

RIC S. BASTASA
Consistency And Patience

if i were to draw you
a symbol of consistency and patience
i will have the turtle with moss on its house and on its feet
some mud

i draw you too the silence embedded in its eyes

i will show you how slowness sometimes can be considered
wisdom

how sometimes it surrenders to nature how it hides in its house when cruelty begins to rule and how at the end the impossible happens it survives and wins and then goes back to the river and swims away

and then it becomes a myth a story and then you make it more intriguing and that is where the rabbit enters into the scene

RIC S. BASTASA
Consistent Silence That You Choose

the winter shall pass you bury yourself in consistent silence
as you ignore calls
and invitations for merry making and you savor instead your joy in solitude
the warmth inside
the coldness outside

wherever you are
i am with you in your happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Consistent Tradition

it is a matter
of ice cream for the cold rainy days
and hot tea lemon and honey
on the days of summer

change it
and you will be in hot water
in this little town
of yours

RIC S. BASTASA
Consolation As An Offering

i can be
whatever you want me to be i can be a whisper to your ear

on storms
i can be the lighthouse of your lost ship

when something sinks give me the sign

i can grieve
and turn off the light
i can offer the consolation of darkness it will be so dark
it will be, it will be

RIC S. BASTASA
Consequences

the stairs have been broken, the beam turning into firewood it too burns the house the bridge of the river is also taken all pieces down to the drain of the river what now? what shall you do with your fury?

what shall we profit from your powers of destruction your capacity for annihilation?

make us all disappear we have nothing now except our presence.

RIC S. BASTASA
no matter what it remains standing there when tired
it sits sometimes when we are not watching it deceives
and lies and mocks us when we are not looking but what we must admire and give credit to this kind of thing is its constancy
so that when it rains or shines it is always there
nothing moves it
and nothing defeats it
it is always there
and we applaud it
we put the boundaries and mark the monument
of this constancy
a sculpture of a body with a face
like ours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Constructive Criticisms Are Welcome

the way i typed it has a sentimental value...im glad for your consern on my spelling but toommorow is not the point of the poem...thank you for being a 'spell check' if you will but each letter and word is written the way i write it for a reason...but thank you for your concern something british i suppose, but the way i type it has a sentimental value... i am glad for your concern on my spelling but tomorrow is not the point of the poem...

thank you

for being a speller a checker but each (word and letter) is written the way i write it with reason under the circumstances reasonable and legal and tolerable

thank you
thank you

for your concern....

RIC S. BASTASA
Consuming Myself

those that strike me
and occupy me
those that consume my mind i am sucked by this
emptiness
but i bother no more i wait in ambush in my newly found
silence
i wait when the wind is fed up when the soil needs no more of the water
when the leaves begin to fall because the buds have taken most of the time in peace
it was the chaos that do not shock me because i have embraced them because i have known
all of it
from its very first drop now i have learned the cycle of another confidence i stare
at those which do not excite me anymore i stand straight and hold the hands of the lust of time every minute
there is an understanding of every second my heart does not beat that much
the surprise is gone the bow shape is lost the arrow is here beneath the palms of my own hands now i look at all these
i am strong
and i begin to leave walk away from here that has oppressed me searching for the divine and the noble
i take my chances
out there
is the azure beginning the blue skies
the endless horizon
sun full

RIC S. BASTASA
Consummatum Est

it is irritating as it is always complaining demanding that this must be that or that that must be this the human being being becomes a thing through this the pronoun becomes it

somehow you like to go away and leave things as they are sail on a boat, hop on an island and just be alone to relax but it is simply impossible because no man is ever an island one is simply a part of a community and the rule had always been that one must be flexible enough in order to survive

and so here i am with this thing this human being turning into a thing a companion of the journey which had always been a liability to me move on, move on, become deaf and blind and mute

do not say anything do not look at this thing, focus towards a direction do the task, and accomplish everything and just like the man on that bloody cross, you will say

'consummatum est'

RIC S. BASTASA
Contagious.....

dear friend
i write this with bitterness this poem,
this un-poem,
this anti-poem which is bitter

i do not know if you are bitter too, because if you are
perhaps you
can easily understand how is it to be unpoetic because you are bitter because i have the impression that to be poetic it must be something that makes us feel beautiful inside out
and which also spreads beauty
all around the world,
and people will be happy and know that something poetic is always the one that creates order,
system,
nice feelings,
nothing of that bitter sort,
that depressing effect, that prompts a suicide somewhere along the straight line
of life,

i have nothing bad
for all my intentions,
i am a bitter man,
and i am writing about bitterness, and you surely will not like it,
because you are
a happy man,
in blissful state,
as you wish to convey it in your pictures at
facebook,
and the rest of the write-ups that you have posted so far.

this poem is like a volcano
that soon will erupt
i hope there will be no casualties

it has to.
because it is needed.
because it is.

so,
i think,
it is time for you to run away and avoid me,
and forget ab
out me,

as of this moment,
you should have already stopped
reading.

i guess,
you are interested
in bitterness,
it is sweet to know that
...
are you
bitter too?

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplating About Home

the night has not befriended me and so i walk alone down Jones Street under faded lights of dawn tall posts,

under the narra tree two boys are sleeping holding on to their bare hands to keep themselves warm as the cold air keeps on blowing an old man counts his steps using a cane manages to take a farther walk towards Fuente Osmena jaywalks much to the aghast of taxi drivers when the traffic lights turn green a newspaper vendor is repairing his bicycle leaving his morning papers frightened on the road a white dog tied to a post of this fruit stand keeps on barking at me the woman that owns it shouts 'shoo! shoo!' i am perhaps a stranger lost to her view

the month of June is opening buds of the fire tree inside the fenced grounds of a mental institution of this city as i contemplate of my early plane trip towards home Contemplating Upon A Crater

both of us manage to climb uphill on a rainy day
to look closely upon the crater of Kawatu
fuming sulfur gas on its side and acid river on its basin we have same thoughts about how death can smell like that how terrible when its fury finally comes out someday to cover perhaps the whole city of Bandung

we keep our bodies warm and close under one black umbrella which the strong wind from the high mountains break its thin metallic bones the rain becomes heavy spectators take shelter inside a concrete cottage she takes time away to join another group i am left alone

wet in the rain
brave in the wind

i have nothing to fear for years my life has been wasted in the luxuries of my academe in the selfishness of my dreams

i think
how nature perhaps can check what real dreams are made of.

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation

i take the veil of privacy darkness shall cover me shadow merging into a oneness of self in surrender, find me, if,
you, really know me,
touch me, in the sea of darkness, how will you ever find me? Feel me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation 1

When i try to grasp you and you wish you had meaning with my grasping
i become a loser at the end i do not have anything for you: it is just a game and i once told you i like being a child again i have no scheme for you whatever you become it is your responsibility

when i hold your hand
i mean nothing, not love, not lust, it is just a way of letting time fall between my fingers

i try to think that i am waiting for someone
to make an event with me like having a kiss
but it is not just that: always i end up with nothing

i sit, and then i stand and then i leave without leaving any word. It is senseless but that is what it is.

Frank and always ready to go.
You know how is it to feel lonely and in this state you always want to go somewhere else.

and this is where we differ.
You live in a map, and there are landscapes
that you imagine.
I don't have any. I only have my eyes with wings.
My fingers always rivers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unlike you
i write for the heck of an excitemen

there is no plan no structure
i don't see a path
even no maps
no preconceptions

i catch a word
and then put it in my hand
it wriggles of course
because i have no way of telling what to do with it

like you it fears
when it finally lands in the hands of a child

there is purpose but the catching and in due
time
the releasing

this angers the word
telling me
how ungrateful i was when it tries to lend what meaning
it possesses

or wants to have
for its future use.
Contemplation 3

At night the dog woes the moon the moon sways
and wades on the water in love with a fish the dog keeps on wooing when you hear it it is actually crying a dog is a dog is a dog. losing patience it swims in the water and eats both the fish and the moon.

now it rests in the dark loving more the satisfaction that silence usually gives to persistent and violent lovers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation 4

What the world needs is the obvious, those that needs no scrutiny,
like duck to a river.

it floats merrily
and what you see is what you get, you do not even have to look into the water to see if it has feet or fins.

what this world needs are not words, they can only be perplexing.

they only ask but do not like the answers for they, who live and jibe well with this world, has only themselves
to be heard.

tell them then what they want to hear.
and there will be peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation 5

Long distance
creates a lie, a mirage.

do not trust it.
what you hear is faint
like a bee sting. what you see is a road in eternity
it does not exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation 6

If you need a pond
to relax
where you can feel the coolness of its waters
you must first catch me a frog
or to be true to the requirement of the myth
you must catch me an ugly toad

when i kiss it
i do not change into a princess

but the toad does for it becomes a horse
and then runs away
with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation At The Beach House....

year have written almost everything under their sun

there is nothing
to remember and copy

perhaps i will just stay here and think for
myself

what happened here
and what is going to happen
later

i can tell the mussels on the swamp the way they breathe water

i like the wooden boat tearing the river into shreds

there is still joy in diving 60 meters away
upon a cliff

someone has to rake the dry leaves and then you feel clean

when the rain comes something is always renewed

the nipa roof of this hut and the silence of
the trees
something is missing
always missing
i still wish i know it
now.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation Of Stone

contemplating upon a
stone
does not change it

it cannot soften

it is a stone and will be a stone
forever
it does not break it breaks
what it hits

it is i
who will change
not the stone

i am
stone-like now my eyes are like stones
my body and my mind turn into stone
hard, monotonous,
silent,
in isolation
ironic deprived of emotions

my heart shall not change it is stone
from the very beginning stripped of its
humanity

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation On The Climbing Of The Stairs...

as i climb the stair
i always think what is up there

when i arrive there
the door is closed

and i am thinking why contemplating on the other possibilities shall i open the door and ask myself in what if there is nobody there what if it is just a door and there is nothing inside i sit on the the last step and i think again

what if it is not the stair after all but only the ground or the pebble or the grass what if it is only myself and there is nobody else what if i am just dreaming what if i am nothing at all but a thought without weight without volume what if this is all about air a breath a hush a slip?

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation On Top Of Petronas Tower

when you are on top
you see
how tiny humanity can be

its achievement of heights
can portray men as ants
trees as mere spots
of green
roads as nothing but the tiny lines of a pen

when you are on top and you look down
you cannot help but shiver
on your feet

thinking: what if we all
fall?
what if there is really nothing up but only whiffs of clouds and the complete silence of too much space?

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemplation, Excitement, And Work

An old man with a dream sits on top of a hill overlooking
a river

On that river is a young boy sailing on a boat busily paddling himself towards the shore of a faraway town

And in that town is a butcher displaying the head of a cow to prove the kind of meat that he is selling

They have never met the hill, the river and the town

The sky who sees all these knows what Life is all about contemplation, excitement, and work.

RIC S. BASTASA
contemporary poetry is nice to read since they are not cliches, very much unlike shakespeare or mary oliver

i 've seen one and read it
over and over again
it feels like
trickling rain from my forehead to my spine

like this:

rain
rain
go
away
come back
an other

d a
y....

i am amazed

i think i will write about jack and jill went up the hill to get a pail of water.
jack forgot and what is that? jill come rolling after?
the pail.

i am bitter.
sour i mean.
i don't belong
i am one kind of a frustrated contemp... orary writer.

well, i will try next time i have to reread
bukowski's advice
i will wait
till the next tick.

RIC S. BASTASA
Contemporary poetry is nice to read since they are not cliches, very much unlike Shakespeare or Mary Oliver.

I've seen one and read it over and over again. It feels like trickling rain from my forehead to my spine.

Like this:

rain
rain
go
away
come
back
an

Other'd a
y....

I am amazed

I think I will write about Jack and Jill went up the hill to get a pail of water. Jack forgot and what is that? Jill come rolling after? the pail.

I am bitter.
sour I mean.
i don't belong
i am one kind of a frustrated contemp... orary writer.

well, i will try next time
i have to reread
bukowski's advice
i will wait
till the next tick.

oh well,
i got other things to do.
the grapes are sour anyway.
(cliche duh!)

RIC S. BASTASA
Contempt Over The Contemnors

she is all inflamed her cheeks are falling from her bones

she speaks beastly
the wrong goddess in that chair of justice meriting disrespect

from the floor
the defenders are in a quandary her other gods are angry despite her unbecoming ways look! the lowly turtle is turn into the fireplace

justice dies
courtesy resigns

from now on no one rules

the ways split
we look forward to more chaos let us see if gods are really gods on this turtle's turf

RIC S. BASTASA
Contempt....

in paradise
if you were Eve

and there is go Adam

i think i’d rather be that apple,

or truthfully that
apricot,

or just any other kind of plain
fruit

the Chinese here
eat snakes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Contented With Your Own Silence

in one instance you step out of your door walk on the road, keeping your gaze away from the danger side you keep things to yourself there is no one to share with what story you have for the past days when you hibernated in that room, it is a break,

you stroll in the park
take your breath under those trees sit upon one of those empty benches lose your mind
upon what is obvious and visible upon those that do not need any kind of scrutiny and fathoming this the time to fish for nothingness

you lay your hands upon the grass it is this coolness that makes you feel connected to the earth

you sigh and sigh again and again it is this exhaling that makes you a giver rather than a taker
it makes you
comfortable like what smokers do when (they pollute the air)

there is a certain fulfillment in this kind of loafing you carry nothing and thus you leave nothing
you are not alone
feel this solitude
there are so many of you doing the same routine in the park fishers of nothingness

but i tell you do not talk do not start a conversation with the one near you or that one who is walking his dog early morning i tried it once

when you get no response it will just make you lonelier it is like taking a stone in your hand and hitting your head with it sit there,

just sit there
relax

take your time,
and simply be whole
nothing falling apart

it is beautiful to
see
now that you are
contented with your own
silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Contentment

all places are the same nothing is more significant than your feet
not wanting to move anymore on their ground is this cool pond and some lotus blooming
on a summer day

your eyes are fixed
to yourself
your arms and hands on your side

what is out there?
it is none of your concern

RIC S. BASTASA
Contentment And Time

an old dog resting on a white
sandy beach

the footprints
show that they pass by not minding it
and it does not mind them

it is an island within an island and he does not really care

if the hours
flood him
by
as it is
and will always be
forever

never was he ever drowned
by its boredom

RIC S. BASTASA
Contrast Of Two Views

on the other fence
are colored lights

a party of laughter
and a fountain of drinks

roast pig, San Miguel beer, Tanduay rum

clinking glasses
merry widows and glints of new moonlights on clear glass

between us is this wall of barbed wire and fortune plant tall
for hedges

as a contrast in here the lights at the patio are turned off the dogs are sleeping soundly and the chairs by the door are turned upside down

it is as though
the world here is a store
closed
and the storekeeper is heeding towards home after recording the volume of sales

the accounting is done and windows are closed and tables all covered
there is peace
on this side of the world

they say
that on the other side they are trying to talk about preventing another war ideas clink

views are diverging
so much talk
there is a preparation for something
big and horrible

and they call it
a diplomatic party where eyes look intently on each other where schemes are hatched
where fledglings
come out hopping
like nuclear bombs....

RIC S. BASTASA
Contrasting Sounds Of Sunday Morning

rain is pit pattering on the roof

the wind is as gentle as a whisper
of a new lover

when the rain stops
the footfalls pass by the church bell rings on a call to prayer

the sound of motorcycles get louder towards the flea market the cock crows and jumps to the ground from a tree

here i am writing another poem for you it is the sound of silence again words hugging like a friend's reunion

RIC S. BASTASA
Contrasts

The food in the ref
Of the wealthy
Rots

Outside their doors
A child begs
He has Nothing
to eat

RIC S. BASTASA
Conundrum

men of the East aghast wealth of the West amassed sumptuous breakfast bed-fast in such a short moment in Belfast did you hear that blast such a murder bombast to the world broadcast this little country bypassed and on an incomplete cast disgust of the Indian system of caste brown and black and yellow classed to the white put in contrast millions of Jews degassed the Palestinians are downcast time runs so fast history has not done the forecast foremost and foremast cultures chosen and classed rough mountainside no longer grassed what kind of flash is this hand-fast? food givers on a boat harassed those who gained the voice lambaste and so nothing of value forever last death for the mainmast long live the heinous miscast not all is true in the newscast!

RIC S. BASTASA
Conversational Poem For A Migrant

hello
hullo, how do you do?
what is your name?
where do you live?
what do you do for a living?

i am fine.
Thank you.
My name is Nomer
i live in Kabir
i write poems for a living.

How about you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Conversations Of Tess And Her Light And My Darkness

i
Come to the light
And let yourself be known Shine

ii
I live in the dark
I glow there
I am not visible
In your light

iii
Do take pride
About light
I will take Darkness

iv
I have seen your light It still looks dark to me

v
No, go out
See the light
And be uplifted

vi
Ah, I bask in the light Of my poetry
There is enough moonlight
For me

RIC S. BASTASA
the first poem that you really find it hard to write is to write an image which must tell her that you love her truly from the bottom of your heart, and then the most beautiful poem comes from her when she admits that she also loves you with all her heart and soul and mind, and then the saddest poem was not written.

it was when everything ended.
the years passed.
and you do not even know where she is.

it is always the saddest poem, when you do not know where to find love again.

you say, not anymore, but it can be a lie, for how can one live without it?

All corners of the world are looking for it.
They seem not to find it, and all these corners will only stop writing and talking and speaking when love is found when their hearts are filled,
when their mouths
cannot utter a word,
because of so much abundance,

bliss, joy, happiness,
all these shall make us mute for another hundred years.
(do we ever reach there?) honestly in making love, (and be in so much trouble loving,) words do not have use, love, you embrace me with so much intensity all my nerves sing, neurons spark with flints, i explode, finished.

RIC S. BASTASA
Conversations That I Hear

i am into conversations i do not speak much i listen well like an absorbing sponge and people suspect what i am up to, but i keep on listening to people who still have the vigor to speak and brag and expose what is inside their guts
what they feel foremost is important for i like to dwell more on feelings rather than logic and directions and useful advices on how to live and die perhaps,
and so this time i am inside a bus bound to a far place a hundred fifty kilometers from where i live an old man, i am surprised talks much, complains and scolds his grandson who is there born to tolerate him beyond the threshold of his incompetence,
as he talks and sometimes subside into murmur, the grandson keeps on listening to his apple ipod, not minding what the old grandpa is up to,
i smile and fall silent again.

the bus speeds its way to the winding road climbing a mountain,
the wind on my face is strong and my eyes seem hurtful to the flashes of trees and bushes
along this road to another city

the old man is asleep now his grandson still busy with his own
music

night is approaching the headlights of the bus pierces the road like what a conscience does to my heart

this time i hear myself in a last ditch of conversation to myself
before i also get a dose of my own sleep

inside the bus now
silence reigns like a boa who just swallowed a whole pig.

RIC S. BASTASA
Convoluted......Folding Bed.

the day did nothing bit by bit, it did not arrive at something whole like a circle for instance something’s bothering like a landscape that never closes
ends are opening
so incomplete that it is the mind that goes on dovetailing what is not there it is this sophistication this flare for fire this frame of reference

the ant has arrived at a point when the issue is no longer whether he is happy with the empire or not it is just the constant walking in line operating on the smell of the day the sun-dance in the sand forever numb and no longer asking what is really happening

i like to think that i do not have to think anymore. it is comfortable, when we only have to watch and not even speculate about consequences.

the house is not a resting place neither one worships God in the church.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cool And Still Dignified....

you do not tell me what hurts me most,
i know it too well, i who feel,
who fell into this abyss of self-throwing which we, or
i cannot
refuse, for this is, i think, is the inevitable.

The falling.
The lost paradise.
The sin of commission and omission.
The marriage of fools.
The victory of the Dumb.

To say the least,
i have never failed myself.
I still have restraint,
despite the affection.
I still maintained a square jaw despite my failing eyesight.

Let me say it once more.
I take refuge in silence.
This power.
This anonymity.

Love the nocturnes.
and the twist and turns.
The mind's war is raging.
The body still.

Outside everything is still manageable.
You see me walking, just walking.
just walking.
whatever rages in my mind is mine alone.
Do not call the firemen.
My fire is invisible.

If there is a house burning, or a body trapped within in,
Let me tell you,
It is not mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
Coping Up Mechanisms

keep in touch they say departures are always given the icing of take care

sad endings with God bless us all

irreversibility with
let go,

when every things happens in their worst shapes

we shake our shoulders and say nothing

cats and dogs fight on the roof when it rains

we watch tv and concentrate on the series

there is always a right time to close our eyes

even if we are not asleep yet even if the room is flooding with our tears everyone is miserable and like everyone else no one lasts forever.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Coping Up On Prohibited Times

You know how to make your lips burn When you are far from me I have also known how to kiss you Passionately at a distance
By a mere stolen glance.

RIC S. BASTASA
it will be another lie, it will be another justification for the preciousness of life and its survival, it will be another excuse for having to follow rules, it will be another saying that because i am here, so i must be like you, and the rest of the residents

it will be another sacrifice of my authenticity
in favor of conformity

it will be from one cloak to another cloak in order to keep this body warm and then one cold wind follows another cold wind to make me colder all over
again

my hands shall then by the passage of time have mastered the techniques of folding
to protect what i am and what i have.

it will be another pain, to another pain, ... i do not really know when will this end

RIC S. BASTASA
Coptine D'Autre Ete: L'Apre Midi

i love this nursery
rhyme
for another summer
love,
one afternoon
by the sea
sun fades.

RIC S. BASTASA
Copy Copycat...

do not ever think that putting your head in the oven does magic
to the blandness of your poetry.
copycat.
move on,
our business is originality.
try other devices.
authenticity is the key.
be good.

RIC S. BASTASA
Copycat Lady

She was very strange, and beautiful, as the violet mist upon the hills before night falls when the hoot owl calls and the cricket trills and the envapored moon hangs low and full.

She was very strange, in a pleasant way, as the hummingbird
flies madly still...
so I drank my fill
of her every word.
What she knew of love, she demurred to say.

She was meant to leave, as the wind must blow as the sun must set,
as the rain must fall.
Though she gave me all,
I had nothing left.
Long I smiled, bereft, in her receding glow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Copycat Thoughts

i'll buy you a margarita so you may think
i am
good-looking,

i'll tell you a joke
and you may laugh
and think
that i am
witty

i have a sense of humor too i'll give you money and promise you a car (again)

i know,
you think that i am a liar (as i lied to you how many times?)

ok, leave me, but please
tell me,

do i really look good today?

RIC S. BASTASA
Corona

the water on the pail has overflowed
now you must feel
the coldness too

the rain will be heavy and it will fall for nights and days and the road will be flooded again

this time no child will play boat in the water
women with black umbrellas will pass on the streets as though nothing happened

life is like that even the vine with nice flowers
are pruned
the trellis sometimes do not want any tendrils

RIC S. BASTASA
Corona 2

whatever is good belongs to the people

the people is the only good there is so? work as usual

the people are coming and you must open
the doors
and serve their needs

one must go where the good is one must march for the people

let the one who is in power be beleaguered
let heads roll
let the people have the toll

i am for the people they are the only good that we have

the people has decided your fate
and now you must gently yield
and accept.

RIC S. BASTASA
Corpus Christi

The flesh that i ate comes from the bruised and wounded body of the man who died for me the blood that i drink tastes bitter with the gall and soured with vinegar as sharp as the spear that hit the side of my God, now i shall swallow all suffering now i shall drink bitterness now shall i be enlightened about the real meaning of my own Christianity, now is the purification of my soul as the body shall finally give back what it has made me love and feel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Corrugated Fruit

its bitterness
cures the corrugate soul

RIC S. BASTASA
Corruption.....

the way we love our dogs
makes me think about how corruption can thrive in this poor third world country as ours

we like them fat and good looking shiny noses and big feet and we like their barks to be fierce and respectful and so we feed them well take a walk with them on early mornings and
late afternoons
and we let them inside the house and put them on their own dog-houses

hence they all remain loyal to a pampering master siding with them whether they are right or wrong (they do not know anymore how to discern right from wrong
i think)
and whatever happens
the master is always right like the way it keeps the bones and the steaks
in the closet

mind you, you haven't heard of a well-fed dog barking against their masters.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cosmopolitan Stink

it is a closed road
so i am included
as one without a pass

i understand
perfectly
a new set of dead bodies
whose flesh
are partly eaten by fish
arrrives today

from a boat that meet
the storm
headlong

it sank
and the pointing fingers grow like lichens
on the tree

the odors here
are dumped
and the nose
bleeds

body after body
wail after wail too huge
for the cosmopolitan street to handle

i shifted my gaze
and take another road
a hungry child, families sleeping on the streets of the city
imprisoned garbage
angry rats
captured at dead end
corners

RIC S. BASTASA
Could Have Been

so many excuses
one sighs one day back in his hometown when every street changed already new houses built old houses gone
you do not not recognizes those old faces anymore new names now a heart beats for something that it cannot understand a nostalgia taunts you for not having achieved what should have been you like some of them who got their names at some islands of limelight an engineer in manila
raking much money
an accountant in her finance tower
a fashion designer now making it big in the Big Apple
and you?

if it were not for Papa i could have been the best writer in the city of Sunrises

RIC S. BASTASA
Could Have Like You, I.

could have like you, i.

this is the place,
you were born here
marked by the planting of the banana shrub on the side of the hill, things are not complicated here things turn out as expected events are predictable
there is nothing to worry nothing changes here the stones are stones and rivers are rivers the hills do not grow anymore except some vines that the old people readily cut for they said the tendrils are touching the heavens
offending the sensibilities of the the gods and goddesses
here,
you left on the third full moon and you left a note written in red ink, you declare hey guys, i am complicated i don't belong here and they all hated you and promise to kill you when you come back they wish you ill

inside myself, i could have done the same for i am more complicated than you, but i am beside her and the pictures of my ancestors smile at me at the altar perfumed by daily incenses

good luck, i am staying i am more complicated than you but i do not have the guts i am frail as the afternoon, i am soft as the earth where i still belong.

RIC S. BASTASA
Could It Be Love? Again?

if you challenge him he will not answer you acceptance for that challenge to be separate lives on separate feelings on separate beds and can be as silent as feathers falling on a silk bed then silently he turns into a line of red ants taking slowly bits of leaves from your hair

and some tiny grains in a secret place
of his heart
buried somewhere else that even his eyes that see do not know where is it exactly

where is it?
where is the new home of the bleeding heart?
where can it rest finally when it is healed?

he does not tell you
he is building his dreams again block by block into an invisible tower reaching another sky

orange and red fusing into a flaming hell

RIC S. BASTASA
Count Your Blessings For They Are Too Many....

we were never a family
her mother must have been blinded
with so much money
and it is here where love shrinks
like burnt plastic
cup

we are shut up our voices are taken away she owns the money
hence she is always right moving towards her own perdition

she must have forgotten her once hungry stomach her once empty pocket?

dthis morning we decide to simply dance the chacha i comb my hair
and it pleases me that despite my age
it is till thick and very much black

i open the window to such a bright morning for the first time this rainy days
the sun is finally coming up.

RIC S. BASTASA
Counter Terroristic Poem....

the more i polished
it the more it seemed uglier, and i spin it and rotate it like a top just recently carved from a chunk of your hand, bloody beast, facing you without eyes but so significant that you drop it on the floor less all the meanings attached to its nail.

i leave it as is,
easy upon itself, accumulating dust and dirt and it spins and rotates upon its own automation
a being now into itself upon itself
and you write it inside your bloodstream: this is a living creature, dancing like the sun living most unto itself, growing within,
and mutually

i have nothing to do with it and it has nothing to do with me and from a distance where i left and live, oh, that bloody beast is beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
Counting

fifteen heads of buffaloes grazing on the rice fields twenty in all are the mounds of rice husks
this harvest season
ten heads of men bowing down to earth
sixteen heads of women singing a summer song a moon still up the crown of mahogany tree
this early morning
a lone bird flies away
from me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Counting...

to be a poet
a man must have five ears,
the woman seven
eyes,
and the child
five necks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Coup De Grâce

an act of mercy
delivered to a suffering man

the final blow
that merciful stroke

i am a king
and so i avoided you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Couple

he wakes up on a vivid nightmare

the way he crosses
the river against the

rage of the tide and he sees her sleeping

and he wakes her up
and she listens about the sound of the river and the thunder and

the wind and the
flashes of lightning

inside his frightened mind and she holds his hands and raises them for her to kiss and then they talk like lovers again and then they make love sleep is as gentle as the silky bedsheets and the soft cotton pillows on the monotony of the sound of the air conditioned room. And then it is morning she opens the window where a pale red curtain filters the light that lands on his eyes still soundly asleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Couple In Their 50s

in bed they talk about the matters of the day about this guy who is looking for a job and could not find any these harsh times when humanity is at its lowest rating

about a young girl who runs away from home who finally finds herself trafficked in Singapore the slave trade seems to be prevailing many trivial things it is not about themselves but other people not even new ideas how to improve their marital performance

in bed after an hour or so they sleep

the one who is minded turns off the light at the headboard it is so dark....

RIC S. BASTASA
Courage

the courage to know
the difference
between good and evil
the courage to side with the good
the faith to move on even when
alone, I pray to Thee
My Lord

RIC S. BASTASA
you talk to someone and you keep on listening even if you do not want to he keeps on talking too even though he does not like to talk to you educated fools...

RIC S. BASTASA
Cousin Gig

i thought it was a metaphor
when she said
'please remain
your slipper'

(i smiled and she corrected herself as we entered the Japanese house that she meant to leave my slippers)

we had saki
watching kabuki

RIC S. BASTASA
you know my name, cousin.
you always call me by my name always in the shallow part of the river placid, i am, like a linen spread in bed before sleep time,

we are bathing
and we tell stories about our ancestors those brave warriors from the north moving south, finding some fortune long denied them by fate

one day
you prefer to dive with me in the Deep to find some pearls

the whirlpool sucked you in and i tried to help, but you allowed it just the same to claim you up there is the storm of sinking ships down in where we are is the peaceful ocean floor i touch your hand and then you breathe again but it is too late then, you ask me who i am?

but i cannot speak anymore for now i belong not to the earth but to the sea, the deepest sea cousin, i am not your cousin.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cousing Jing

he had put it on record
his cousin was too damn stupid to understand what was there so real inside him
and it was carved in
stone
that figure of a man a thin man
deprived of the much needed compassion
so many stories
have been told propagated like a hardheaded vine and it was too
deafening

and then all those stupid listeners
wander why he chose
distance
why he settled in an island in the middle of the ocean
where storms are everyday occurrences why he dropped his name why he burned
the boat that took him there

RIC S. BASTASA
Covered Eyes

on covered eyes
amidst the darkness

moonless and
starless

on that quiet patch of thick grass

we see much better
our ears sharper

our minds
more open

our mouths gaping
our skins sweating

RIC S. BASTASA
Covering For A Colleague

it is corrupting
and you do not like it you want to tell the world and yet since he is a colleague who must have forgotten the rules of the game you end up with a new resolution: tell him and cover the tracks back to your office you look at the mirror and contemplate on the sharp fangs of your conscience: you see a snake biting its own tail.

RIC S. BASTASA
Coy And Shy Woman

she takes the last seat where i can see her most with her bulging breasts and sexy legs

i know what she is up to but i can always pretend that i am more interested in political law
rather than
sex

i must be firm. i know.
but for how long?

i guess
i must not be too hard on
myself...

perhaps, dinner tonight
with her
may lessen this rage of the hormones.

RIC S. BASTASA
Coz I'Ve Been Sweet To You

what have i got in return a spoiled woman,

you have not seen
my worth
you have not felt who
i am
you have not valued
what i do for you

coz i have been sweet to you my sweetness has become so familiar it is nothing to you

i am fed up tomorrow let me see how bitter can i be

and you shall have it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Coz We'Re Happier Now...

we did not notice
the ending of a day
we were laughing on those old jokes how they still tickle our cheap taste
we were slapstick
we had the last one
for the road
a bear hug
there are no marks
between that point where light
exactly faded...

RIC S. BASTASA
Crabs And Luck

the crabs are the creatures of pincers they bite each flesh and nerve and it will be so painful but you are as silent as the grass and as resilient as the
the vine that is in touch with the latest wind

when you are finally taken i know that like the rest you are not coming back to tell us how it is there what perfection has been given how happiness can never be contained because it is beyond the hold of our hands beyond the grasp of the human minds

lucky, indeed how lucky can you be on your first trip to eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
Cracks

a crack on the wall and a crack on the head they are not the same
they can never be the same

a crack for evidence a lapse of the proof
they are not the same
they can never be the same

the difference figures out freedom and
death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Crash Commercialism

you bought so many things crazy commercialism

the moment you take them in you feel you have no need of any thing you put them in the store room they get dusty

they become forgotten

some do not have plates to put their food on you have all of them hoarded see a shrink, find out why you have been buying things that you never use and yet you do not give them away you are keeping all the living birds inside the tomb

RIC S. BASTASA
Crash Of Images In The Attic Of Your Mind

a surge of feelings a crash of images in the attic of your mind
there is so much noise
of falling things and shattering of glasses in your ears
a flash of lights like fireflies sudden thrushes between here and there a pendulum of what you want and what you regret a trickle of silence
a spread of seepage of dew and dun everything is happening without a thought it is like a bird bumping on the glass of the car you are driving and there is no going back to see if it is alive or dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Crazy But Happy.....

how come that we save money like it is a morsel that we even refuse to feed the dogs and the cats?

how come that we spend the same in a night like it were raining dogs and cats?

crazy? yes, crazy, but happy.

period.

RIC S. BASTASA
Crazy Moon

in my life i still wait for the crazy moon
one that knocks on my door simply because i have closed the window and this crazy moon
insists that i have to see it whole
before it leaves
to its journey and swears what bad
is there that my darkness can do
to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Crazy Notebook...

as our vengean....go to the muddle...ce to clarity
we cojams..
and wcorrect'
ill i
jumps from one space to
another.
i do not change
neither wfees..  our nfuse this universe with our rattles, the notebook rambles
and

RIC S. BASTASA
Crazy Thoughts

for you to love me, and love me true and adore my body, for you to kiss my lips and close your eyes and love the taste of my tongue,
to you to live with me be my own, and bathe with me nude in the river, and bask under the sun alone with me on a rock beside a hill among the scented flowers, for you to love me forever for you to own me like a slave to his master

this earth shall tremble

RIC S. BASTASA
Creating The Haze In The Distance

you must have finally realized the meaning of moonlight the reason for shadows the justification for twilight the madness of mornings without love the nights that dance with the flesh you must have eaten the red apple from the beginning it was forbidden there are sparks all over your hair electricity in its static forms smooth as silk and frictionless as a flamboyance there is this distance between each star each planet things move on their own now systematically you see a universe yours and mine
now we start again from the beginning ask me for my name
ask me where do i live ask me what is the reason for my being ask me why i live why i still do not want to die we meet we talk we laugh and then we part as usual so casual as causal as destined.

RIC S. BASTASA
Creating Your Own Meaning

you wake up one day finding yourself in the same dark and damp room same dusty curtains smelling like dried fish

light coming from the window greets you with

hello, welcome
you are nothing special you are just like everybody else

for one thing
your heart does not remember what was that despair all about you wash your face

brush your teeth
change clothes walk outside

the world is still the same it does not bother about you or anybody else

man, you create your own meaning no one does it for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Creativity

come sunshine
when you love doing the art time erases itself like a mist when you love doing love there is no more time no you
you go back to what you were
from the beginning
you are the word

RIC S. BASTASA
Creativity And Illusions...

in the most noisy world you can close your ears and the sights you see can have your own music from your soul you can choose what to hear and you can also pretend about what to see or feel you started doing this a long time ago on that day when the birds of dawn broke their wings when the light from the moon bent a little to have the illusion of quiet, too early to learn how is it to be a dove amidst the bats how is it to be a lamb around the foxes the world since then has become one big square and then you create a scene: a green river flowing inside the forest singing like a maiden nude as she arranges her black hair long enough to cover her breasts... and then you place a man along the banks paddling a boat towards her nipples

RIC S. BASTASA
Creativity Of The Mind

one thing with the mind is that it never stops thinking and this is something that i am really afraid of sometimes this creativity that never rests and so i dabble in poetry and even short stories i murmur to myself and muster some other ideas that always creep like some grasses in my backyard or dusts coming from nowhere landing on some new furniture or stains that you wonder where do all these come from?
i wonder. I wander. I move. My ideas move me
like sometimes, i feel, so robotic, like what Robert sometimes feel when he write a line or two and call it poetry. something creeps in my heart and i am filled with desire.
i am afraid, i go out of bounds, and then you discover dirt and shattered glasses or i may not know it you discover blood dripping from my hands and to my surprise
i feel nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Creep

the vine underneath a thick foliage always has a way of making itself seen so slowly it creeps and climbs the fence
each brick, each grill, each wall the tendrils climb and then when it finally sees the sun it lets go its happy smile through its little honeysuckles i watch and felt the art of the tendrils curling and curling sprouting and then blooming.

There is a purpose, there is this vision.
I am keeping it. This vine.

RIC S. BASTASA
went home one day to her house on the hills to meet the love of her heart for three days she was there and she was looking for him

her face
unwashed for three days too and she comes back to the house sleeps without eating her eyes swollen

and she does not talk

i will be too silly enough to ask her
why she arrives late and leaves the clothes hanging on the clothesline wet under a heavy rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Crisp

Nona's granddaughter
climbs and rides on a swing

her fine hair rides
the wind
and her laughter is sowing joys in the air

this early morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Crisp And Little

it is its own sound that you hear inside your mouth no one hears it except you alone
outsourcing the
beatings of your heart

something so crisp
so little and then you swallow it all it is yours and yours
alone

RIC S. BASTASA
Crisp And Short And Stunning

that is what it should be people
are busy you know and what they want is something astonishing in a small space
like a click of the mouse

next!

RIC S. BASTASA
Crisp Haiku

crisp haiku
like potato chips for sale:

saintly salt and vinegar a multi-pack rady salted romance or this symphony of sour cream and chives

for god's sake
she's crazy for chicken

RIC S. BASTASA
Critiques

when they read your poem and find some fleas there and they scratch their heads like saying: this is bad, this is really bad and they crumple your poem and throw it in their waste basket and they junk the best poem you have written taking you days and days to revise it like it is a composition of another nincompoop. a moron, a lesser kind of the human being like a bubble, a bumble, a bum, a belle, a keg, a piece of feces

a ning nang nang nang well, write another not ever stop writing.

if you find the one that they have thrown in the waste basket again, by chance,
redeem it,
take it back and iron out what difference have you with that critique (who has not written even a poem for his dog) have patience. and always remember you did not write the poem for him you write it for you and your lover and your loved one,

and another lover and many more lovers of life and its ecstacies

till kingdom come
be patient.
be ever patient.
it is you who has seen the light. not them.

open another door.
go inside where your lovers dwell.
they will kiss you.
they will clap their hands and drink beer with you.

and it will be dark again, and you cannot sleep after you make love.
three times on the floor and there and then in your nudity
another voice comes inside your ears asking that you write about a floating blue butterfly looking for the opening of an orange
flower

another poem shall be written
early morning
be glad the voice is still there your shrink may tell you to name the voice. for he thinks you are schizophrenic to the max

do not tell him.

it is your secret with God.
be .

RIC S. BASTASA
Cross-Eyed

I am so tense with what I see I check whether I am cross-eyed

You have two faces
And you doublespeak.

well, it is not me at all,
as you say it,
it is your prerogative as a poet.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Crossing Boundaries

in fear and suspicion i ask you to hold my hands to slide your fingers unto mine,

what do i feel? i feel nothing if i scream
i hear nothing and you hear nothing with all sadness

i have changed i have crossed boundaries

i have wings and i flap and i toss myself like a stone to the sky light as a thought blithe as a memory of my childhood

i am not myself
anymore
and you shall not know
me

a thin slice of time a sharp cut of the moment separates us

i shall not remember you for i have changed

and you shall not have any figment of my
feel
for you have changed

two worlds apart beyond sadness crossing the boundary of remembering

i have no hands, my fingers are empty rivers
there are no stones no banks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Crossing The Border

when i cross the border when it is time there will be no guards to stop me i will be welcome there by the hands of light on the wings
of fate.

RIC S. BASTASA
Crossing The Bridge

when you cross the bridge you have nothing in mind except
the other side

you have decided to burn the bridge
and she likes it

what is the use of the past?
what is the use of the old pictures?

i have seen all of them rotting in the garden

i have seen the rain and sunshine mindless
about the fading of everything the faces in black and white turning into another muddy solution seducing the roots

wanting to be gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Crowd

motorcycles
i cannot hear
woman whispers

RIC S. BASTASA
Crown Of Thorns

to go near you i put on some leaves to hide the thorns and you like the crown that pretends to be the laurels of my victory

then the truth has to come out the leaves wilt and they finally fall to the floor and i am left with this leafless vines full of thorns

i make a crown of circular twigs filled with thorns
now, watch me as i bleed this is my truth this is my defeat

RIC S. BASTASA
Cruelty

her two children wallow in shame and poverty

humiliated by her friends who dine with her in opulence

RIC S. BASTASA
Cruising The Nile River....

cruising the River Nile
for two hours

waves pulsate on the navel
of the belly dancer

i busy myself taking shots
and video

my friends think that i am lustful, but i must say with all honesty that there is so much art in such a grace, in such a dance of life, in such a celebration....

if they only knew the depths of my oceans

they would have more respect more reverence....

RIC S. BASTASA
Cruising The Pacific Seas....

cruising, i like the way how life must be spent like simply cruising in the pacific
seas,

away from everyone in the middle of all strangers looking for solitude
listening to the
the waves and breeze of foreign lands
new to my self rejuvenated

sunbathing at the deck
watching
other bodies showing
their physical wares

my hat covering my eyes watching without being watched

RIC S. BASTASA
Cry Baby Cry

cRY bABY CRY
dO NOT BE afraid to Stain the Skin
in your Eyes
or your Cheeks Cry baby cry if you must
To relieve the Heaviness of your Heart
Cry

After that Let us Talk and Laugh Again

RIC S. BASTASA
Crying

he says he likes to cry when everyone is asleep when no one hears his sound of grief anymore

he wants to keep this grief alone thinking that no one understands anyway no one wants a sorrow that will be shared or a grief to be feasted upon sometimes he says he cries when he is bathing under a cold shower to cool his eyes to appease his heart and when he steps out of the bathroom

when someone notices how red his eyes are he tells them that his shampoo has caused it all

RIC S. BASTASA
Crying In The Shower My Friend

crying in the shower is such a waste of time take away the shower and let us restructure the line crying is such a waste of time remove time and supply the proper word crying is such a waste of tears.
reserve your tears for some joys
i mean,
there is such thing
as tears of joy
and don't waste so much time crying in the shower someone next to you who sings while bathing in the shower may use the same
he is much better a proper user.

RIC S. BASTASA
the past eats like a voracious monster
the future warns like a sentry of the gate
the present melts
like ice
there is no mark
of life
for someone who has been pretending
to be dead
facing no responsibility.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is one thing
with you
that to me is very wrong

you're too formal with that coat
and tie
and those shiny black shoes
and that gel on your hair

we are not going to a party
we are going to the hills

take those off.
i don't mean that we go there
naked.

what? the guns?

RIC S. BASTASA
Crystal Ball

a crystal ball in your hand foretelling my mood

stop it
the paranoia is a lamp in your mind it is daytime

stop it

see the sun
feel the warmth

do not make predictions reality is here

see the world for yourself do not look at me

feel the grass
not my skin

touch the wind
not my words

fly like a bird yourself do not think that i have wings stop talking much every syllable becomes a bar of your prison wall

try the silence
like licking vanilla ice cream set me free for i am free

live your life
do not be crippled by my own biography focus focus
focus focus

write the words for your life do not see my notes

be brave
as i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
Crystals

snow crystals falling gently caps, white bodies around a hill a mantle along the road slippery
cold, and silky
and glossy with light painful as such when held
longer to the tip of my finger frost and chill
and thrill,

these are what i do not have experienced yet something to talk about and guess

vicarious, elegant to the ambition of thoughts rambling and fanciful

RIC S. BASTASA
Cuculus Canorus

A grayish European bird two-note call

lays its eggs in the nests of birds of other species.
the family Cuculidae, of grayish-brown plumage

a slender body.
cry of one of these birds.

A foolish crazy
cuck·ooed, cuck·oo·ing, cuck·oos repeat incessantly, as a cuckoo does its call.

Lacking in sense imitative, ha ha ha ha ha ha ha

ha ha ha ha ha ha ha
ha ha ha ha ha ha ha
ha ha ha ha ha ha ha

Cuckooed, cuckooing, hello, my dear cuckoo!
a nice day, is it?

RIC S. BASTASA
Cultural Lapse

i can understand
if my co-teacher who is teaching literature
can mistake
lighting from lightning, but here comes another one teaching Physics
mistaking lightning from lightening...
if you understand what old age is all about everything becomes
forgiven

RIC S. BASTASA
Cunnilinguist

The Great Medicine of the Three Mountain Peaks is to be found in the body of the woman and is composed of three juices, or essences: one from the woman's mouth, another from her breasts, and the third, the most powerful, from the Grotto of the White Tiger, which is at the Peak of the Purple Mushroom (the mons veneris).
– Octavio Paz. Conjunctions and Disjunctions.

ang g-spot
mao kana ang Grotto sa Puti nga Tigre nga mao usab ang Tumoy sa Dinorado nga Ligbos.

gusto niya nga adtoon ang imong tulo ka langub sa kalipay, diha sa imong baba, diha sa imong totoy, diha sa balayan sa imong kinhason.

andig andig sa andes andes nga sa dihang nabyudo na si Papa og naghandom kang Mama

miingon siya nga kadtong kinhasona maingon ingon gayod

RIC S. BASTASA
Cured

and so the words which he swallowed for years and years
those that he chewed so well turning liquid mixed with his blood and spread in all his veins and he was cured
and there is no need about what must be said or should have been said consummated the last sunshine comes and destruction of the illusions have become inevitable

gone is gone
and bygone is bygone

RIC S. BASTASA
Curl

You curl, you know how to curl, Yes you know a curl in your hair
And you curl yourself like a Hair, in your bed,
It is so cold and no one Sleeps here
No one comes
There is no hello
As guest and no
Hi to pretend
You are coming
Well, you curl, you know how to curl,
Like your hair,
This time, curl forever,
Nothing straight till the end,
Eternal curl,
Still Touch it

It bounces and rebounces,
touch it again,
and be silent

RIC S. BASTASA
Curse

beloved i am disturbed
with what you have been doing
all these years

i have taken the courage of finally forgetting you
of forgiving
myself

please do the same
forgive
that i may have a nice sleep
tonight

RIC S. BASTASA
Cursing The Nile

cruising the River Nile
for two hours

waves pulsate on the navel
of the belly dancer

i busy myself taking shots
and video

my friend think that i am
lustful, but i must say

wit all honesty that there is so much art in such a

grace, in such a dance of life,
in such a celebration....

if they only knew the depths
of my oceans

ey would have more respect
more reverence....

RIC S. BASTASA
Curves

i love curves
like winding roads
that lull me giving me such needed rest
when i climb
mountain tops

for curves have
a way of making
things turn the way they are not and i marvel
about such an intricacy
an art that winds upon itself in mystery, something

so profound
like what is that boa hiding in its coils?
a pig? a goat?
a dog?
or a man?

curves heal
like a profound idea entwining a man's mind like a vine delivering a yellow flower to my lips

curves of a woman's body like an argument that wants to convince a stoical and impartial jury

curves in my mind not sharp not blunt not even piercing but exaltingly stunning

RIC S. BASTASA
Custom Is Like

A circle of caterpillars

ey they follow
head to tail round and round upon
among within
themselves.

RIC S. BASTASA
you surf tonight
you see a bungalow beside a lake abandoned

you do not like what is happening there the birds are mute
and the ants cannot climb the star apple tree

so to change at least some things you cut the bungalow and place it beside a railway where a train moves to another new destination

you want motion and
a song
you cut some notes from a music website and put them inside the throat of the mute bird and so it begins to sing
for all the lonely ants in there and they too, begin to dance and build their little kingdom

the bungalow appears like a some pieces of assembled wood
dead

you paste some smoke from a busy chimney you put some live fishes on the lake and you look at what you have done you smile

you are putting life to everything
and finally
you copy a picture of yourself, you cut
and then
paste it there

RIC S. BASTASA
Cutting An Old Letter

on cutting an old love letter my hands tremble

some questions compounded crowding inside my mind

the scissors become doubtful on some unresolved matters of the heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Cutting The Edges And Smoothing The Rough Points in making the chair

we choose the strong wood and cut them to desired shapes and sizes we were thinking of you how you sit, how big have you been after 16 years of speaking English in America and you are coming back with some surprises and sentiments and we here who know more about the real story are ready with our explanations

it is like the way how we cut the edges and smooth the rough points so you may find comfort finally in your own
home

we want to be exact down to the last detail only if you are willing to listen sit properly and be enlightened.

we would like everything to be simplified if needs be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cutting The Heads

how many heads have my thoughts grown? aplenty, and you say thumbs down, you do not like the way these thoughts are going, i give you the power to cut all of them extract my eyes so i cannot see chop my ears so i cannot hear but give my power back to grow them all again these time faces that you cannot remember thoughts that bloom like flowers long eradicated by your time, let me have the seeds of thoughts that will grow moments again about a new beginning sprouts of my requests no longer begging for mercy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cyber Space...

morning sunrise
glorious morning
magnificent soft lights...

facing the monitor.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cyberspace

dahling, we meet in cyberspace and in there no one asks what is our status and for sure, honey, i will like it as you like it too, because in there we are just nothing but minds
thoughts and words and phrases clauses: take me with you mind making love with your mind bursting ecstasies, moaning imaginations, i get wet on my pants and you get wet somewhere i don't care if there is rain or flood of emotions

after the explosions of our secret wishes we simply lay there thinking about nothing embracing this emptiness that for the meantime at least for a short while shall be filled by this cyberspace presence in snow and sand

RIC S. BASTASA
Cycle

cell to worm
to body of an animal
to death
rotten flesh back to worm
and cell

there is an exit from this useless cycle
there is

RIC S. BASTASA
Cycle Of My Life

wake up in the morning
remembering some dreams take a walk in the oval and come back for breakfast then take a bath
dress myself
then go to the office for work the whole day is spent within the walls and closed glass windows then come back for home eat dinner
pray and sleep to bed dream and at dawn have little sex with wife and sleep again and wake up in the morning and take a walk and take breakfast and back to the office again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cycle...

those who are not there yet claim they will not, and those who are there sitting become disfigured faces, either they are ousted or they die, but some are lucky to step down the plain and live on their houses again,

then they, whom we look up to,
trust and toss,
sit the throne but for a time become the witches of their own time,

i begin to write: all of them are the same and all shall be corrupted by the same system it will only take a very short time before we can even forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
Cyclic Choices....

when the well is full
the water gets free and can soon make choices away from that dark
hole of its
existence,

it can choose the canal and be with the river's conduit
or it can choose to seep back and be with the silence of the bottom reunited

there is the kind that confronts the heat and evaporates
to join the gods in heaven and be the pure rain again

somehow it gets heavy
in there
and here it is inside my palm
to fill the thirst
of my tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
Cycline
	here is this snake
that bites its tail
there is this dog that chases its shadow
there is this man that looks for something in the past unknown to him is this snake this dog this shadow
that no one sees there is this future that meets them all and yet how close how far there is still no name no tag no choice.

RIC S. BASTASA
D & G

between David and Goliath
between the slingshot
the stone
and the eyes

let me be
just a page of a book telling the story
about
the distance between defeat and triumph

let me just be the air between the stone
and the slingshot

i have too much already of this indulgence
let me be
just a sigh before Goliath's fall

let me just be the shout after David’s
unexpected victory

let me finally be the dust blown by the wind
after the engagement
the duel

RIC S. BASTASA
despite the noise outside the exhilaration of the crowd somehow we manage to remain as intact
parts of the whole rejoicing in our silence amidst the noise of the world the clumsiness of our outlooks vis-a-vis the ineptness of the system well, what do we really look for?
this is just a short journey we keep it crisp like a newly fried fish chip savoring the taste of our salt passing time watching the passage of others our joys

RIC S. BASTASA
the word is detained.

the technical term is custodial investigation, the government forces are too many to hold a single person and claim that it is destroying the system.

the next word is injustice, the government has more words to suppress the other words:

denials are clones and there are just too many of them all clones since the original is dead.

the only original word is honesty and Billy Joel says it is the most lonely word and include the generals and the president

everyone is so untrue and back to the first word detained..

RIC S. BASTASA
by the way,
there is a difference between biting nails and cutting them...

it is not the ball game that you see when you bite your nails it is the little child in you at that moment when mama scolded you because you did not following her instructions to take the bath beside the well

at 4 o'clock in the morning when you climb the balimbing tree instead to pick some fruits and you fell down and injured your knee & wounded the left side of your thigh and you in fact lost consciousness and regained it only in the hospital of that little town where your Papa was born cutting the nails is another it is not the hygiene that you have in your mind it was what you did that Monday night when you were so angry at yourself and on that Tuesday morning while you were having breakfast alone in your condominium

you received the news from the province that your Mama passed away.

RIC S. BASTASA
D12

i agree
that if from the moldy bread they produce penicillin

what more from
'out of you '
can they bring?

you are not
the moldy bread
i supposed

i wish i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
D2

we both have nothing to say and we love it this way only our hearts speak and feel the mind has long surrendered logic fails, reasoning gave us the runaround
what our hands are doing are simply opening to what is given before us: doves hovering upon our heads and then gently landing on our palms.

RIC S. BASTASA
soon you get attuned
to nothingness
there is nothing to see and feel at the end
smoke is all that is found outside inside then everything disappears
and what you hear is just the fading sound of your last word

RIC S. BASTASA
we all have some kind of prison
made of some kind
bars

each bar is not an infidel to its duty to make us think that inside this prison something good still happens

kind hands can be choking too
when what we want to do is barred
because justice demands that kindness
must beget kindness

out there
the real game is waiting we hold the ball
but we cannot go
and play

RIC S. BASTASA
evading a yes or no answer is enough to invoke the 5th amendment and to questions which are as personal as undressing before the mirror and refocusing on the scar on the left side of the navel just below the edge of the heart and caressing it for a while massaging it and covering it again with the warmth of your palms is just enough for another day's humor.

well, let us keep the silence after all, it is precious.

RIC S. BASTASA
every early hour of the morning before the church bell rings for the first mass
the wife folds everything from blankets to towels to underwear
and paper bags and scarfs and one by one she would put them well arranged inside the cabinets the husband has noticed these for days but he pretends that this activity is just normal for wives and that it will also be normal for husbands not to mind

perhaps she just wants to show that everything must be well kept and perhaps he wants to make the impression that indeed everything must be well-kept but until when? oh, she keeps it to herself and oh, same thing with him, he also keeps it to himself that will always be the beginning of their story the middle and perhaps also the end but everybody knows.

RIC S. BASTASA
in our galaxy of humanity as we float like planets trying to keep ourselves within our respective orbits
somehow
there are some points of convergence
where we fuse our minds on something that we feel
as
our experience
and we stop revolving for a while and lessen our spins to have a little conversation with this passing moment but as fate would have it we let go
and resume our journeys again around the sun in the middle of this ocean of stars

RIC S. BASTASA
he never thought
that he can reach this point,

never in his mind
did he think that he is a lucky person reaching the summit and feeling the

coldest air
the fog beside him
the grave silence of the stones below his feet the howling cliffs

up here
he is the most lucky person to understand what loneliness is all about and the people below those who think that the plains are low levels and not worth their brief stay here on dusty roads and arid deserts

look at to him as an idol
and always mention them to their children

that he is an epitome
of success
the man who made it
from rags to riches

all the while he is thinking something's wrong
with this system

something must be changed someone must be made responsible

the belief systems are all wrong.

RIC S. BASTASA
the better answer to a better question is a better question

look at the first
it is never better without the second that is the rule

and then the third
comes into the picture claiming to be the best
at this triangle
each one must submit for in this rule
one has got to be the best
one is good and the other is better.

now do not talk about what is or who is bad
that is not the point.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dadi

oh she was miserable she is always crying

her handkerchief is dirty with her tears
and make up

i told her there is no reason to panic everything here is temporary

i assured her her woes are much milder than the woes of those who are here
and listening to her and i let the other four who were with us speak about their mess they tell their own sad stories how they escaped from hell and then Dadi starts to smile her handkerchief is dry and she leaves us with a happy heart to comfort her

we have to concoct miseries much greater than hers

and then we start all over again back to chapter 1

RIC S. BASTASA
Daghan Pa Unta Ako Ug Isulti Kanimo

Daghan pa unta ako ug isulti kanimo Kabahin ni Sharon ug Gabby Ni John Estrada ug ni Janice de Belen Ni Pops ug ni Martin ni romeo ug ni juliet Apan wala ka gayod ganahi niini Gusto nimong ibalhin ang topic sa lain Bisag unsa na lang gud unta

Tungod ba kay ang ilang estorya Kabahin man sa panagbulag?

RIC S. BASTASA
Dahlin....Take Art

if you have fears
like thorns in your bottom or

fish bones trapped in your throat

take art

whatever art is there

sculpture or painting or
poetry

makes the room neat
and clean

arranges the mess
puts curtains on those empty windows

deletes the word
fear
on the net

have consolation
why not?

RIC S. BASTASA
Daily

you wake up early
you wash your face
you use soap and water you wipe your face with a white towel near the sink hanging
you dress up
you take breakfast
you chew your food you drink your coffee you read the papers hear the news on tv
you go to the garage
warm up your car
you open the garage and speed your way to your office you read the whole day you talk less
you take your lunch and you cat's nap
you work the whole afternoon you read a lot
you write
you are tired and ask your driver to drive you home you open the door of your house you sleep with your shoes on you sleep for some hours you are hungry
you go to the kitchen and eat the food made ready for you by your housemaid

you are alone in this sequence you turn on the tv and the whole night you feel you are the lookout for something that is about to happen you ask yourself, what is this all about? you tell yourself, you do not know, it is just your daily routine for years and years, and it goes on and on and you have no way of stopping

they call it life

RIC S. BASTASA
Daily Life

the procedure is the same all day repeating and always repeated
for making a difference is a risk
altering the pattern simply gives birth to pain and so one goes all over
again
start with a picture of oneself then the other perhaps a model or the object
of your physical desire and stay there
for a while
somehow you wish you move to a higher level like something emotional or self-redeeming like something higher than oneself the spiritual but you come to the conclusion that the environment is simple enough all images or tangible walls and wooden bridges below the boats keep on sailing even without you in it
you hold on to what is routine
there is no fear here the formula keeps on working for you a self, a picture of yourself, another picture of the other then you wrap your body with your arms
and it is so comforting no sweat
things shall begin again as usual you step outside the door and
mix as usual with the crowd where no one knows you and you know no one

at night you arrive on a room nothing's altered
the smell is the same
and then
you open the window
there are no stars
all city lights
damned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Daily Poems...

these are little things.
ant-like, crawling, and may not be good for your precious attention, and they are worthless,
beneath your feet, insignificant, but you look down,

they know how to bite.

RIC S. BASTASA
Daisies All Over My Body

let daisies rain on me and let all the daisies cover my face my body let daisies crown my head my hair, my nose, let there be daisies everywhere inside, outside me

i am in love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dama De Noche

That flower blooms only
at night

perhaps afraid of the
light

or just shy of the sun's light

in darkness it spreads
its scent

nearby a man
embraces its own shadow

in bed
another man cannot
sleep

meanwhile the dama
de noche
continues to be enchanting

RIC S. BASTASA
Daming Tanong, ..Lundagin Mo Na Lang, Baby

bakit nga ba?
bakit ba ang dami mong tanong?
ang dami mong sinabi wala ka namang gustong sabihin
bakit nga ba?
ano ba? paano ba? kailan ba?

ay naku
kung ginawa mo na lang sana tapos na rin sana
at sana
wala na tayong matatanong o masasabi pa.

RIC S. BASTASA
Damned Reunions

tired of those damned reunions always other people doing good making more money buying respect integrity no longer intact like a sword to its scabbard bards and boards and bored and braggarts silky collars and shiny shoes and dance beats
no longer adapted to my age,
i am not
attending any anymore
damned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Damon....) The Moon(

damon
show me a flower
by the window
made of glass
against the snow

it is white and full
with a twig
that is tall

damon i do not wish to go inside your room and touch that flower

i am far
far away from you damon
and you are
just an imagination

and precisely
with this distance and
my mind

i have remained your happy
one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dance Before Me Sweet One

dance before me sweet one
sway and slowly take your clothes off
inch by inch i will savor every part of you

dance, dance
to the wild music of my desire

show me what you have part by part
please me please me for i am in sorrow

do not look at me
just dance

after the dance
take every piece of you

i have promised myself there will be no touch.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dance With Me

as i am dust
and for us to have a dance you must be the night wind the sky our dance floor the stars our background the moon's silence
our only music

RIC S. BASTASA
Dance With Me Till I Am Finally Free

Take me in your heart with the fire of your song Take me through all your fears Take me in till we’re safe in there Take me in like the sorrows that you have gathered Inside the confines of your heart Dance with me till the pain is lost Dance with me till I am finally free.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dancing In The Rain

Let the children dance
In the rain
They are free!
Let them run on the Green grass in the rain
They are free!
Let us hear their sounds Of excitement
They are free!
Let us see them drink Raindrops
They are free!
Their shoulders caressed By rain dropping from Roof tops to their toes Let us see them Play in the rain and in the Mud
Let them get dirty
Let them be washed by the rain again
They are free!

Don’t you see we are all These children dancing
In the rain?

We are free!

RIC S. BASTASA
Dancing The Samba With You

mas que nada desafinado
vou te cantar
garota de ipaneman
corcovado
sausalito
samba de uma nota 56
berimbau aguas de Marco
o pato
a fedicidade chega de saudade
o barquinto
flor de lis maracangatha
mancada maracangalha
agua de beber

yes we are in this party together there is nothing to be refused nothing to be ashamed of we are still this official couple you in your spanish gown and i am in my decent coat and tie what do we have to lose if we pretend a little tonight about a love diminished with time and the boredom that wraps us i will hold your hand and keep you close to me you breathe the unnecessary explanation as i smile like a man of the usual confidences now my dear, we shall dance the samba

RIC S. BASTASA
Dancing The Tango

i give the initial steps forward and then you compliment them with some steps backward and with my left hand on your waist putting even a slight pressure there you notice the understandable push and you know exactly where next to go without me telling you even in a whisper

we look up high in the ceiling with dignity as i carry you to the places that i want to go my right hand holds yours and sometimes i give the signals for the slowing of our steps as though we are casually walking in the park the audience look at us amazed by the grace and passion in our eyes...

very well like marriage, i said to myself the fingers speak the eyes understand the body moves towards a common direction the mouth simply listens

RIC S. BASTASA
Dancing The Tango With You...

now we dance the tango and you may step on my toe as i too may do the same to you.

things happen, but don't you worry listen to the music, do not hurry.
feel the passion, free emotion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dancing To The Tune Of Life

the dance of life pulsates like blood rushing inside our hearts turning left turning right we rotate we vibrate we collide we slide we tumble we gargle

we dangle we tangle

it does not matter what steps to take forward or backward we dance the dance of life to the tune of life what matters most is we just do it such a short moment not meant to be wasted

let us dance before the next moment comes soon the dance is over we rest if we must but we can always say we danced to the tune of life we were so happy
we did not have the words of regrets we reach the edge and then we fall we are gone and then forgotten we do not have to tell them we were once here and we did our best that this place was never ours we had the best of times we wrote the best lines

RIC S. BASTASA
Dancing With Time

sooner you learn to dance with time
its steps harder at first to follow but it has always a way of making you feel at home with its familiar
music
its songs like the winds from the mountains
its tapping steps very much attuned to the sound of the rain

and then when you completely learn by heart
its way of changing the way you look at life
and give up the past and take in the excitement of your future

and having believed in your talent now without your knowing it time leaves you

and you experience finally the extreme pleasure of the stillness of silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dapitan Sunset

melting orange lollipop

honey-coated round candy

inside the tongue
liquifying

RIC S. BASTASA
Dare Me Not Tell That You Have Never Loved Her That Much...

what you cannot accept (for you have standards of your own, goodness, beauty, utility even) here is mama, she accepts whatever son she gives birth to and daughters be they the one whom you can call us homely, (or ugly to use the exact word) so here is mother
the woman who can love you for whatever you are,

dare me not tell that you have never loved her that much...

RIC S. BASTASA
Dark

What will I do with a fountain
of time
my silence
is a well without a dropp of water I can weep in the dark weep and its silence will hear me but it will close its eyes it will not speak
the evening will tread on quietly an old man
it will walk on without looking back without seeing where its shadow sleeps
and I can say wait where are you going and I can think of all the places I can think of I can think of walls walls walls of walls behind which anything lurks I can lock myself in a closet full of clothes not my size fill my pockets with dust or take off my clothes and imagine my skin is ice and I will be standing here where I am standing stepping on moments that sharpen into hours like thorns into my feet
the wound in my heart is deep the pain does not answer to any name where is the door
the window the door

*reprinted from a friend

RIC S. BASTASA
Darkness

when you arrive
you caress my hair
and kiss my nape

and i face you heave a sigh
and send a stare categorically saying that i do no like you anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Darkness And A Rod Of Light

darkness shall part like the legs of a woman and i shall enter like a strong rod of light like light i also bring the property of warmth and you shall filter me like a prism and glass we see a spreading rainbow of colors we are amazed in the dance of silence we dare not think of the magnifications the usual refractions the optical illusions

RIC S. BASTASA
Darkness And Light

i would like to arrive not at the point when darkness and light chase and fight each other when they grapple with who's right and who's fit to survive on the cycle of life

i like to arrive at the time when they stop and arrive at a compromise to live in peace together not that the light stays on the right not that darkness stays on the left for that would still be divisive i like them fuse into a certain hue so pleasing to the eyes of all confused men dusk, dawn, a dawning light, grey the coolness of twilight, midway, between coming and departure standing still, a gaze of the star and the coming of a new day.

RIC S. BASTASA
Darkness And Light (2)

at the end
one must realize the unity of all these things, matters, species,

that we all belong to the same origin
that all things are rooted to just one tree

darkness and light
are not apposed
they are just one face of the world looking at another time

you and I
are what we are there is no sense
in looking for differences anymore...

RIC S. BASTASA
Darkness And Light Playing Upon Us

i shot myself with a camera.

then i edited
the picture showing more of the dark side
of my life
with only a very slight shade of light on the left side of my
face

indeed when light and darkness play upon your sorrows and pains they make a true and beautiful picture of
us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Darkness Fades

darkness fades
like a dropp of ink on a clear pool of water just wait a little while a bright colored koi will soon show
and have a nice talk
with you

RIC S. BASTASA
Darkness...

it is the absence
of light
asleep in the cozy
corner of
the universe
on closed eyes
the sun
on weary body
the thin sheets of light concealed
behind the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Dasein......

you know that it simply is not,
you pause, you think some more, you try to figure out what it really is,
this and that are simply not that, you are sure that it is not that, but, by then, you must accept you cannot simply find it.

it is not here, but you cannot really point, you cannot draw it,
you cannot write it,
you cannot say it,
but it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dave And Dean Remembered....

brothers, after the university, they surrendered their lives to the mountain

where they were eaten raw as their parents still think how unjust can this universe be the belief was that only blood can wash the country

bleached and blanched
into prosperity, a change of country soul

i go back there diving into the loneliness the validity of the cause i now
question

oh, this is not about me not even about them those who donated their lives into humanity

this is the journey and they arrive there first ours is still one path to another
seemingly
we never want
the finishing line

oh, this must be very exciting

i only guess.

RIC S. BASTASA
David Do Not Say That You Are Not A Poet

in terms of the word written telling something that there is something inside you that clicks
and beats and screams and calms down like a slam
of a door from someone who decides finally to leave in terms of disbelief about what happens on the day when you are struck with sadness
the poems begin to grow in your mind and they become trees
and trees
are poems and so be frank to admit now that you are a poet

lousy or what.

RIC S. BASTASA
David, The Marble Sculpture....

the human male sculpture of David stands tall naked to the tourist amazed
to the greatness of the marble
body

was it the story of this man whose stone did not miss Goliath?

was it the genius of his creator who mastered the curves and
balance via
the marble and the chisel?

or is it this unending feeling of the tourist still unsatisfied about what is lustful and
beautiful?

if you have seen and touched it by now you must have understood what it is to be naked admired
and then abandoned

RIC S. BASTASA
Dawn

2 a.m. is not an arrival of a surprise, but it is a compulsion, images of yellow flowers and green leaves on curtain face you, a wall covered with clothes, but there is nobody wanting to wear any.
you wonder, how does it feel to be a cloth still uncut, a shirt just hanging there ready to be worn, yet no one is taking, and no one seems to be ready to go.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dawn And The Drunkards Still Sing

i understand the song of the drunkard at dawn i was one of them sometime in that moment when you got pregnant and angry
about my own irresponsibility

i forget you and you must forget me
that is the only solution but i cannot help but remember when the drunkards of this place till dawn sings all their miseries they do not hurt me or anybody they hurt themselves

i understand perfectly how is it to love and to lose and to be guilty unnecessarily.

the songs are painful.
and dawn is so cold.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dawn I Know, In Deep Understanding Shall Acquit Me.

dawn is a good investment

i invest so much time
in it

some memories
scruples that i never get over with much time is spent remembering and trying to learn

how to avoid the same mess how to rise above a drowning

how to redraw the route of a great escape

from what? from whom?
these are no longer
the mysteries of my own faith

dawn is a friend it talks back and i sometimes feel
that i am

an undesirable kid, the one who should be blamed for broken toys

dawn is my own paper where i write all my sins of omissions
if you begin to read what i have written
in that dusky sheet perhaps you will not like me
forever

dawn is a bosom
and i make love with it
as usual

i feel this comfort when you are no longer with me

the days will judge me but dawn i know, in deep understanding shall acquit me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dawn Scent

cutting basil leaves with bare hands at midnight at dawn the spring onions are jealous

at noon it is time to peel the garlic

on an early night
i smell the scent of white flowers

RIC S. BASTASA
Dawn Time

it is still dark
and what you hear are only footsteps there are no shadows yet only speculations
there is something good at this hour
you ponder on what is why and
when

then the cock of the neighborhood crows there is light now
and you are ready to go

RIC S. BASTASA
Dawn, Dawn, Damn

the sound of soft rain over an open window the dance of the curtain to the rhythm of the wind
i like this whisper
to my ear
it is mine and mine alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dawning

it is dawning
gray wraps the trees and grass in black as i walk along this boulevard the light comes thru the shutters of the clouds

this morning

rays like hands touch me there is warmth
spreading on my face
there is fire
in my heart

i look at the stretch of of acacia trees where the street lights slowly close one by one and at this moment the years spread themselves like some green grass where i rest my weary soul

in my mind
i always remember you
on my side i can stil feel the warmth of your skin

it simply dawned in me
the fire of yesterday and the coldness was gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Dawning.....

dawn talks
it says there will always be space
not that close not that far

a kiss must keep reminding the forehead
that soon
you have to let me go for i am not yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Days After The Storm

after all that happened recently the meaning of the wind has changed when it starts to blow even how lightly like a hush on the cheek those who met the harshness of sacrifices and near deaths too quickly will always be reminded of the kiss that caused a thousand deaths and those who remain to be alive will always find suspicion why it is here again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Days And Nights Go By (By R.B.)

days and nights go by like friends and lovers merely passing by us not stopping not staying

know by now, life is like that, too, merely passing by, not staying,

pilgrims, yes, days
and nights are pilgrims, always passing by,
not staying,
night not blacking out
day, not exploding

yes, just passing by like poems that you read, that you pass
by, and then we begin again, we pass again, not stopping not staying, sometimes not even glancing.....

RIC S. BASTASA Days Gone By...

back to simplicity,
i wait for you
in that old city as faithful as a
an uprooted
tree where what remains only is the covered
walk.

RIC S. BASTASA Days Gone By....

Thursday.

got a headache on Wednesday tuesday was bad,

and Monday was unforgiving.

negative energies are always here with me.

There is a maggot feasting on the poisoned rat.

I poisoned it last week, and days are not that efficient to kill it without seeing another light.

It died inside the cabinet causing us too much disturbance.

Friday, another poem.

I hate sadness. I expect redemption.

But Friday is another usual Friday.

It cannot forget that poisoned rat that died on a Thursday.

Saturday, i will be away on a boat crossing the sea towards an island

Sunday, again

there is no church, It is the mountain again

No, not Calvary.

It is my day with the working people.

I will eat with them

It is the day after my 50th birthday

nothing big.50 is nothing but a number inferior

to 60.

So what is the big deal?

i am still, no matter what,

lengthwise or

side-wise, i am still another

dust,
unseen fungus on the scalp of another
unwashed head.

RIC S. BASTASA
Days Slip

his days slip mostly on her halfslip
he gets entangled
on the seams
of her
underwear

stuck inside
it he dies
in bliss

RIC S. BASTASA
De Aguado, Le Fandango Varie O

The descendant of the Spanish Friar says:

What I am selling to you is Water, something to drink

It is more than that It is also something to sprinkle
Your forehead
And you become holy Free from sin
You pay for holiness

Now walk on the aisle
Of the church
And how they look at you A holy man
Because of my holy water

And you will have a halo
And you become radiant Radioactive perhaps

I repeat I do not just sell water to drink It would just be ordinary

I am selling to you purity of soul I am selling to you a future in heaven

Come now, buy water Sprinkle your souls
Make them holy Sprinkle them to all Parts of your body

Meanwhile, there will be no mass
For the coming week
I will be on honeymoon with the woman Who got the water from the well Dead Alive.....A Wedding Picture

we fit in so we party

time is the fish hook open eye

margarita, metaphored me into this
bliss pain bliss pain
life death
thing

we must fit in
we must

bleeding is wound's kids

keeping open what injury there

what can we do?
well what can we really do?

live, fit, just keep on fitting in

like our portrait on the wall dead alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dead And Dumb....

beloved, why did you turn into a pebble?

why did you make it hard for us
to make you part of our system?

we have decided finally to spit you
out for you to find your rightful place.

in the garden
in the muddy part you plunge yourself
dead and dumb.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dead For Quite A Long Time....

breathless is the reason, it is just this euphemism about having to lose breath and you may think it's a way simply out of the ball game or a movie like breathless (i.e. sleepless) in Seattle but really, really it is not the case of being breathless because you are overjoyed or has exerted much effort for joy
or bliss
it is not the case, it is not it is something else that you cannot figure out because you are still too preoccupied with breathing and all its condiments of air
and space

there will be a time when you see someone you love in an infirmary or at bay
and you confess your love and you say all my life love has always been another and another stranger without a name, and touch-less and you say it is breathtaking but there is never a hand or a pair of warm red lips breathless because you have been dead for long and you refuse to acknowledge it

RIC S. BASTASA
Dead Leaves

dead leaves are scattered everywhere under the trees
surrounding this old house where we live unswept and piling up like some layers of our memories some rotten some cracking some turning to dust the snakes learn to hide there making their home and some worms and some rats and some seeds begin to sprout

when it begins to rain again

RIC S. BASTASA
Dead Man Meeting

and so his colleague died while attending a meeting when he fell asleep and did not wake up since then...

he says he does not like meetings and i presume that he likes the death portion?

God forbid.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dead Man.....

he does need to write you a long letter to tell you that he is dead.

he does not have even to send you a word. he does not have to express his pain about what you said which hurt him most....

dumb.

how could he when he is already dead!

RIC S. BASTASA
Dead Shells

not at all times that we stay on the deep portion of the river we get tired sometimes our limbs soft and weary we long for a little rest a place where there is only foam and bubbles and the sand and pebbles touching our pelvic bones.

there. On the shallow waters we rest our weary souls. No thoughts. Just descriptions.

No feelings at all. Numb and dumb. Dry leaf buried on the sound. Dead shells.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dead Stars

dead stars
dead stars
do not shine

they are dead
and the twinklings are gone

dead stars
all dead
falling to the sea
the moon grieves

stars are moon's princesses
her diamonds
on her motherly bosom

dead stars
fall to the sea

they refuse
to die

they now live in the sea as starfishes having fallen from the skies one dark, lonely, evening
of my life

seastars, name them sweetly but starfishes to the most common fishermen here who make love to the stinky fish vendors for once tonight

the moon spreads to a certain fulness of emptiness trying to hold seastars (they are called starfishes by children who smell salt and rotten sea urchins chasing hemit crabs on the shore they are burned by the sun but they already know how to keep themselves safe they know how to feed themselves with squids those that sparkle at night in the shallow parts of the sea)

trying to kiss
them
in fact,

yes the starfishes, all they have are memories of the stars and they now hide among the corals and the electric eels regrets and remorse are always late and they always murmur it to the oceanfloors

after their fall and no one wants to hear everyone is busy feeding and escaping away from one another here in the deeper part of the marine blue seas...

RIC S. BASTASA
Deadly And Too Sensitive Because We Have Never Touched It.

you fill this house with so many people

love cannot stay that long here

it is rushing to leave and go somewhere else

love is a pillow love is a mattress

it is peaceful, how come there is no love yet?

you have invited those that i detest
respect is not here with us it is a stranger, a violent one killing us all softly

with a cliche, a song, a patter, a chirp, a tiny bird

pin-like, thin, tinkering with what was so tickling deadly and too sensitive because we have never touched it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dealing With People Who Anger You

you are angry
and you will be dealing with people now in anger you face your detractors you pretend you do not know what they are doing to you you face them still you whistle you smile you pretend you like them you hold them with gentleness in their arms wish them all the luck in their endeavors give them money feed them
tender the nicest dinner possible in that expensive restaurant talk like you are the best entertainer in the world ask them if they are sad or anxious stare at them a little bit but still glow that look acceptable to your betrayers
make them feel that you are not affected (hide your anger in the smile and laughter you always share with them) let us see who will explode let us find out where the bomb is the terrorist in you is the most civil servant of them all

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear Candice,

If you can't sleep:

* Make your bedroom more comfortable, keep it cool and quiet.
* Get up and do something else. Then, go back to bed.
* Drink warm milk or hot water before you go to bed.
* Take a warm bath, read a little or listen to some quiet music in the evening.
* Get fresh air and exercise during the day, but remember: exercise before bed can keep you awake.
* Go to bed and get up at the same time every day.
* Don't take naps during the day.
* Avoid coffee, tea or soft drinks after 5 p.m.
* Don't smoke or drink alcohol in the evening—it can keep you awake.
* Don't eat spicy food in the evening.

If you often wake up during the night to go to the bathroom and can't get back to sleep, try not to drink very much before you go to bed.

But remember: if you need to take medication at bedtime, it is best to take pills with a full glass of water.

If you feel lonely:

You can spend time with other people by:

* Becoming a volunteer at your local school, hospital, church or community centre.
* Joining a seniors' club at your local church or community centre.
* Taking a course at your local school or community centre and learning a new activity.
You can also call and talk to a different friend or family member every day. You may want to write a short letter to a friend or family member who lives far away. Sometimes, just writing to someone can help you feel that this person is with you.

If you feel anxious, tense or worried:

* Try to relax by breathing slowly and deeply.
* Take a walk.
* Choose an activity you really enjoy doing, like listening to your favourite music, and do it.
  * Tell a friend, family member or your doctor how you feel.
  * Join a support group so that you can talk more about your anxious feelings.
  * Take a relaxation or exercise class, like yoga, at your local school or community centre.
  * Take a course and learn how to do an activity, like needlework or woodworking, at your local community or seniors' centre.

For more information, please contact:

ariel escalona, the sleep expert...(ha ha ha)

your friend,

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear Diary

i am writing like i am talking to you dear diary my true friend mama and papa died a long time ago and i am left with some wounds and scabs and some injuries that refuse to hear about those that must die and go away today, i will tell you something but i will not write it in your pages

i am happy because i do not think anymore i am happier because i do not have to write anymore i am happiest because now i live in my mind away from the

the cage of your pages, i have learned to live and fly away like a bird

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear Friend

i always love to write, as early as gradeschool when we were classmates while you were playing and chasing and stumbling i just sat on the grass of the playground under a tree and scribble anything and read a lot about some stories with lots of pictures and colors of fairies and kings and queens and butterflies and bees, i do not stop writing, in fact, writing has become my life that without words i may die an instant death i dream that i have written novels and stories and lots of poems i wake up with some ideas like some seeds that i want to sow and grow in the field and see them become shrubs and trees and forests and i keep on this life writing and writing and writing and writing for writing's sake and i wish i may live longer so i may write some more, some sequels of my love stories and suspense thrillers and write finally all the poems that are inside my mind hanging like ripe grapes and creeping like vines on my fence as i am writing now as you always want to read me until such time my friend that i will die, or end my life myself (who knows?) (i will not talk about it now, it is something bizarre and makes me shiver, but who knows, well you know, all are but possibilities and nothing but possibilities in this vast wide world of realities and dreams) there is something i must say somehow there is something that i must have forgotten, i have not written about myself i have always written about them, about you, about the world, please do not refuse me, stop playing with your life, gradeschool ended

a long time ago, i have one and ultimate request:

write the story of my life, because it is you who only knows about it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear God.....

when i carry these pains do not ask me if i can endure them

i am human and i may soon give up

you know what i mean

you may test me and deprive me of everything that i once have and those most important bits that i do treasure you may take what little is left in my pocket or in my sockets

but please, i beg of you, do not take away from me this bed where i can sleep this floor where i can lay my body upon this wall where i can lay my head and rest for in here where and when everything is lost i can still cope up and sleep and

dream

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear Love

dear love

the very reason why i left you is because i love you very much, and i just felt that you deserve someone much better than my lowly self please understand,

i do not deserve your honor, your beauty and your grace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear Mama, A Poem From A Son In Chicago

dear mama,

today is your 78th birthday i can't join you but i am sending a little money for your party do not forget to invite our tenants feed them well how can i ever forget your birthday?
i am very sorry
i may have quarelled with you but deep in my heart mama
i love you very much.

may all sons remember this as i will always remember it there is no mother who wishes harm to her children like you mama

thank you for giving me life thank you for all the good things i love you mama

may you have more birthdays to come.

love,

dodong

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear Poem

how are you today my poem?
are you impatient in the waiting?

you see, i have been too busy like everybody too, doing what must be done in this daily routine, this bread and butter thing daily craving for wants and needs and what the future may bring this thinking this worrying about we can eat and sip and what we can keep time must have known how it is trying to kill us with its quick passing,

you see i am just nodding my head, and there time swiftly passes me by, without a word, an inkling, a warning

i am left with no choice but to go home alone without time as my companion.

I am tired
my dear poem, but how can i be so rude not to write you as you have requested and as i have promised

my dear poem
i am here. & so let us now begin.
tonight my dear poem
i may not get the needed sleep but that will be alright

your servant shall keep writing the saddest moment with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear Someone

it is christmas time time for gift-giving forgetting and forgiving

i have forgiven you
and myself
this time it is your turn to forgive me
and forgive yourself

it will be nice,
i assure you.

time to party
with friends and family time to dance
and not just stand in that lonely corner

come. everyone is waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear Wife

I work so hard
I have no time for supper, breakfast, and dinner Got a cracker and a noodle A little solid a little hot liquid Are enough since I need a lot of time Before my computer And this is non-stop working for the whole day My cell phone is on silent mode and I cannot open it I work the whole day, concentrated and straight It is eleven o’clock in the evening I arrive in the house and you say a lot of things I do not care anymore as I drag my dead tired body Towards the room and eyes half-closed I almost stepped upon your expensive porcelain vase
I lay on bed my shoes and sock still on my feet I did know anything since then Dead tired I am dead asleep.
If you are unhappy and do not like me Find the man who is not tired, just leave me I am dead asleep.
i am just your loving husband, tomorrow i will still be your loving husband, yes tomorrow, even if you decided to go away.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dear Worm

There is no reason to be arrogant

In your small world you are the only rose And he is the only caterpillar Who wants to be your only butterfly But in my world there are roses
All over my garden
And there are more caterpillars And butterflies that one can ever Think of,
So please there is no reason to Be arrogant, dear worm...

RIC S. BASTASA
Death

i

The wake up call in the morning Telling you
It is time to go

ii

The taxi driver taking you to the airport
Early morning
Without any conversation To keep the trip alive

iii

The pilot that you cannot see In the cockpit Taking you to your destination

iv

Then another story shall be told That is the surprise
And you cannot help it
So just take your seat Relax and sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death .......

so what is rest?
she asks such a basic question and i do not hesitate to answer it

rest is when you finally go and never come back.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death And Departure.....

he is filling up his calendar with travels

dream tours somewhere in the north and then the south

white sandy beaches, cool green mountains exotic cuisine, luxury hotels tickets for two all paid packaged tours

she is finally saying that she is not going anywhere she will stay in the house '... and die early'.

his bags are ready, the plane is waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death And Survival, And Theories....

Those who struggle so hard in order to live for a number of years more are admirable

They fight their wars and Just don't surrender that easily,

Those who want to end their lives Finding it absurd
Those who hit their heads hard against the wall and Bleed and die Upon their own will
I say,
They too are admirable

They have guts.

Death is a state, but the door towards it is painful. Those who embrace pain, contrary to norms, must deserve our honor.
Theirs is that dignity to end their lives at will.

Life is precious they say. It is a gift.

But life has no meaning sometimes.
One simply gets short of more reasons in order to continue the journey of sorrow and grief
and occasional joys of living.

One kicks hard against the storms.
The other stretches his hands to touch the sky.
Others let them be.

Those who are afraid, and non committal, simply leave their lives in the hands of God.

They too have their own reasons, They rest their destinies to Fate or Faith,
And they too, must be admirable or honorable.

I am this spectator still trying to fathom the truth about this right or wrong.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Comes And Chooses Its Types

well we all see that,

dead comes and chooses but before that three or more died already

well we all see that,

we know those who were not chosen yet died in fear.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death He Frowned

if we stay here, let us have compassion compassion for our blindness, thinking that we are much better than the rest of the herd, let us too, have pleasure that pleasure of exchanging pleasantries thoughts that boost our desire to go on living, to keep our sails smooth, ourselves whole, and never diminish our sense of humanity, for after all, we are all here for some reason, some reasons that we still want to discover, let us too have that sense of humility, not for anything else, but we just don't know what happens next for instance, a friend just died, and he missed that trait.

death he frowned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Is Easier For Those Who Have No One To Love

dearth for sure is easier der when your lover tells you that she is waiting
dear
on the other edge

and when you find that lover there touching your hand and kissing your lips

i am sure
you will be having second thoughts
about
your being born again...

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Levels All

ah, you are a rich man smart and famous
you have a beautiful house an expensive car
a nice family

how envious can we be

we have nothing
we are dumb, and anonymous we can't afford shoes our father died during the war mother died from shock the rest of the siblings cannot be found

but today i level up with you
you are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Must Be Dying Too....

because you are faraway
i resort to imagining you, it must be bizarre looking at a woman of stone with the head of an egg eyes made of wood

do not blink hands as cold as tin can in frosty winter
your color is darker than violet
i try smelling
you like a ripe sour sop there is this
prevailing smell of Merthiolate
someone is bleeding right here but no one is asking for help

now you are so near and real death is dying still

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Of A Loved One

everything cages cannot be caged forever.
love for instance, it finally goes out looking for its rightful place. it is not our hands never our heads, sometimes they stay temporarily in our hearts but time has claws
sharp claws and time knows when to snatch not us,
love is taken away and we are feeling the aghast of love ’s loss.
love does not know how to stop however there are always substitutes and we must begin to notice love again in another form

we pack away old clothes of lovers gone anything that make us remember we put in the mezzanine to be covered with dust and be a friend to the cobwebs this is how to survive, lose love welcome love moving on that moves us perhaps is a cliche facts are fact the faces of love are like our faces laughter now smirks later an empty hole must be filled for the meantime even with air for us to feel full again welcome love, welcome lust, put another flower in that empty vase open the curtain and see the morning sun whistle a song if you can open the door and try seeing a bee in that garden of flowers a butterfly

at night, the fireflies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Of A Loved One (2)

i hold your hand
and assure you
that all is fine

that you will simply be transferred to another room
and that soon
we shall follow

you shed your tears
i say goodbye
you give me a smile and then you close
your eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Of A Pig

dead of a pig
does one cry when a pig dies?
my nephew who always has sex in his mind, though still having milk on his tongue calls me that a pig has died and he says, it is my pig, the one that loves mud and eats left-overs you know, an hour ago
but still warm to be
butchered again,

i ask him, are you crying?
he says, why should he when it is still warm and can be butchered again for another pretended kill, and i am not surprised because next to sex, what he has in mind is food,

not death, not the burial of a pig, nothing about decency of a funeral, health or plain sanitation

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Of Lust

you're dead now rotting in my bed

and i am left alone cleansing myself
of desire

i am still burning from my hair to my toes
and there is no
fireman coming

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Of The Innocent Whore

she submits to the hold of the chains hoping to regain her freedom that he once took away from her

soon, soon, she keeps telling herself
the iron chains tighten on her arms

soon, soon, she keeps
telling her body
gyrating to the feast of his drunkenness

to Bacchus he cheers till dusk

until one day a dead woman lies dead on the floor bathed in her own blood

she finally got what she had long sought.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Overran Love....

last nigh i watched a film till midnight,
i was relating to the lead character who felt love and stood faithful for all those years

throughout his lonely lifetime the meetings though intimate were only two

the last meeting which was the third
he was then mourning for death that came earlier who still promised
nothing....

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Simplified

she sits on the train and the horn is blown she closes in the white silky curtain
of the window and then sleeps

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Sticking On A Bark Of A Tree

as i walk today
under the trees
when rain starts to pour and i take shelter to find a
a cicada unmoving by the side of a bark of a tree

light and empty
only a shell

left-over of life clinging still

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Toll 5,000,001

whew
if you as the modern poet writes
ten poems a day,

this man writes 30 poems
a day......

giga...

RIC S. BASTASA
Death When You Come

i am thinking when death comes,
i wish it has hands
to knock three times my door
before it enters chances for me to say a prayer or two for my safe and enjoyable private journey into the exciting unknown
to dress up comb my hair
brush my teeth
and leave
a short handwritten message for those who still do not believe about the propensity of life.

and then i will welcome
death
sweetly like a long lost
lover
that i kiss
lips to lips.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death Wish Revised

yes there were three of
us
we were one company on that day when it was about to rain it did not.

we were wearing white someone wished death for the other but no one was telling

it is the truth
that death-wish that is there but we do not like to admit it is there

speaking, singing, teasing, taunting and no matter how we choke it with our handkerchief it speaks louder
shouting wildly
teasing us
badly

yes we are watching the burial of a dead man

we are silent
we have the same wish for one another.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death...

i lift an empty conch near my hear
i hear songs and i carefully listen
and i close my eyes
and see places
i see emptiness
i feel the fullness

barefoot i walk on the white sandy beach
i left the empty conch
and carry something else my heart understands my face nods
my body is light
and the sun is bright the air is salty
God is mighty.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death....

The fragility of self image.
Caught in a downward spiral.
Never completely destroyed, but left to tumble.
Awkward and out of place.
Begging for salvation.

Animalistic,

alien even...

grotesque.

Finally oblivious and therefore somewhat satisfied with this devolved state reached from the fall.

From this mindless state of contentment with the present condition redemption is found.

Call it surrender becoming stability.
Recreation of the ego.
Mutating into something familiar.

Death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Death's Meeting

i invited Death

i prepared a slice of lamb's roasted meat a glass of red wine adjusted the light dimming yellow, into the saffron of mellow ambiance i signaled that He shall now come and sit on the Persian pillow i sit in front of Him so we can talk peacefully

Death is silent looked at Time
and left me

The red wine never had the touch of death the meat is cold and the light is finally switched off i rise from the floor and stand by the side of the window i see death again rushing to the sea disappearing like a black cloud upon a mountain top.

Deathwishes

yes there are three of us that makes a company that day when it is about to rain but doesn't

we are three wearing white and i am the bad one wishing death for the other one that we do not like to be with us but will always be a part of us despite our deep dislike

it is the truth
that death-wish that is there but we do not like to admit
it is there
speaking, singing, teasing, taunting
and no matter how we silence it with our handkerchief they all speak
louder
singer wildly
teasing
badly

yes we are watching the burial of a death that comes true
we are silent

do we have the same mutual wish for each other?
i am sure.
i do not wish to be the bad one forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
when i write this they already clibed
the mountain of Malindang carrying
food, and some of their basic belongings

we pass by them and we are riding a white pick-up and heading
to.............

RIC S. BASTASA
Decapitation Of What Is Familiar

as simple as a triangle
two sides with a middle two arguments
with a solution

familiar as the sea of grass fluid and ever green

take them all out from a box of the usual

elevate them higher from what we expect

a new look to old places

extended meanings
to what have been disregarded no, it is not a play

of words

it is the fusion of what we refuse to know and what they are no, it must not be what

we are
but what they can be

yes, it is the sweetest sound of the single hand clapping Prince Serendipity
and her Princess Stupidity wedding

we were those kids
laughing
because the Emperor is wearing clothes

RIC S. BASTASA
Deciding On A Disposition For The Day...

early this morning
before my walk
i go up the house and stay for a while at the veranda overlooking a garden of anthuriums and mahogany trees
i take some long breaths feeling my lungs with fresh air

i stretch my arms and legs and breathe some more

i put some numbers of this inhale and exhale cycles

and then
last night's storm inside my head is fully overtaken

i tell myself
i'll make this day
perfect.

RIC S. BASTASA
Decisions

just like a spur of the moment a rose petal may fall and wilt

a wind blows it

in one breath
one goes out
one gets in to freedom to prison

in one bang of a gavel one’s property
lost is another man’s gain

in an instant cut of a scissor one dies another lives

promises are broken in split seconds

in a little empty space
I also change

Either I or you Shall take This courage

One closes a door
Another one opens it

In the wink of an eye One falls another one rises Nature makes Decisions for us,

Sadly enough, others

if we just stand and wait and look stupid, numb.

RIC S. BASTASA
Decisions......

do not measure how weary
your eyes are

how time is twisted how nights are turned to noons

moons are gone
suns burned
themselves

do not measure how you too slowly kill
yourself

deciding the life and
liberties of these
people

RIC S. BASTASA
Decorated By Fake People....

here
you hear the song from a conch

there are no
letters
to read

here you press
something to your ear as a form
of endearment

there is no one
to miss
no one to remember

no baggage to carry except perhaps sea breeze landing on your hair

here you feel only the softness of the sands the fragility of time flowing from your fingers
that must not close into a fist
because it is not called for

here birds are not staying always and always they go for places
as though telling you departures are not meant to be sad
but for another excitement

and so i love it here rather than attend to your party decorated by all
fake people.

RIC S. BASTASA
sometimes i do not like to write even a word
i hate it when a time like this comes
to me
like a friend i detest for betraying me and my secrets

i go places to forget find me some green grass and blue skies
i embrace the silence of the hibernating fish in mud somehow, this dedication comes a fealty to word a sense of i cannot be without it i go back again to my room

my head so full my mind dancing again like a crazy bee to the petals around me

so here i am
again writing for you these lines are lovingly written again i could have written one simple word:

hello.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dedication

to whom for whom i am sounding i sound for you
not for me i know how i sound i know
the depth and length of my word the kind of smell and color
i keep within each syllable for years and years the horse
romancing the sea
its tail serving as rudder the moment
it swims underwater
on an island where the birds have long learned the manner of fish and fishing

expeditions here
the sand where our steps were first embroidered
like rose petals
to mother'w white cloth, heave a sigh
to all these what was there will always be there, unless you refuse to know
the ciphers of each
code, our youth
badly spent beside the river, this life these pebbles
underneath the ripples of our skins the lines of our palms, shady
and sharp the thoughts
still piercing the innocence of our minds, mine me
mind you, let there be nothing easily understood, lest
everything becomes
just ordinary, and
the lace of your memories, the seams
all through, lazy, lazy,

now stop this nonsense following every word i have
you're looking for thrill and something to tinker, there is none here, nada y nada,
there is nothing in here, and in the end
you get what you deserve from me

nothing nothing
nothing nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Deductions Of A Lover....

i did not push through giving her
that book which

in one of those not so distinguishing pages

i have written about her, hmm,
her infidelity,

which if by chance
she too reads

it, she may after all arrive at the conclusion, that here writes her

lover, her executioner, deliciously

another congenital liar, whose lips

are still luscious,
whose loins still

carry that fat of love, that

strength of hatchet,
that length of

magnificent rod,
hot and unbending.

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
i should have chosen, warm.

RIC S. BASTASA
Deep And Down....

the mercies of sleep
to the repentant busy man
on deep down deep to the peace
of sleep

it is different there
the family waits for dinner and everyone is pleasing

food is abundant and kids are behaving mothers watch
as fathers drink the wine and puff the smoke of their Cuban cigars

one soul there having the same face as you ethereal body
drinks the glass of wind and eats
the body of the sea

it is different there
i tell you

you are there
but you think it is not you until you wake up and begin to recall the symptoms

of what you miss the glass of wind
the body of the sea

for years that we had been here together
i did not say any bad word, something to hurt you

many wonder about this laxity thinking
that discipline is always related to humiliation and violence and deprivation

the stick remember
had us beaten blue and black and those who inflicted the pain felt satisfied that we had become straightened with all force
like crooked wires

i did not follow them
i go for silence, love, affection, and passion
i throw away the noise of the stick i curled within the respect for myself and for all of you now i leave you with all your questions

i will not answer them i shall not tell you that i had lectured to you not with words but with example in small little deeds in all the hours of the day in the patience of the nights without moons and stars that i lead the way with my own feet and did the work myself without you realizing that now you are doing the work yourselves i am moving towards the place of my destiny i will be all alone there again to my roots

deep down under the dark silence of my fulfillment.

RIC S. BASTASA
Deep In My Heart I Know God

deep in my heart i know God as a friend
waiting for me
in the valleys and plains for a thousand years he was called Master

by the slaves and he did not answer

for another thousand years he is called the Creator by his creatures he did not listen

for another thousand years he is called the Father of his sons and he did not mind until then when you call him Your friend, your peer, your partner did he look upon you and smile and in this understanding God has come, patting you on your shoulder welcoming you to sit as a friend on his table to take his glass and drink the wine of eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
Deep In My Heart, In Your Heart, I Know You Have Not Forgotten

I know you have not forgotten me

The kiss, not just mine, but ours, when we were so young then When all those who do not understand us were gone away When we were just two alone in the living room When we closed the door of the house one Sunday morning

(Because I was one lousy kisser!)

RIC S. BASTASA
Deep In The Middle Of The Night And Beyond deep in the middle of the night and even beyond this darkness

in my solitude
below the stars and the full moon

i sit in the form of the lotus-god praying

there is this silence contained in the circles of divinity

this is the throne of the ear the bed of the mind this bridge between God and Myself

the strong silence amidst all the noise

the glitter
amidst this cacophony of a tarnished
silver

RIC S. BASTASA
Deep Into The Lblue Sea

into the deep sea
you are thrown and you are into a series of chaos
on this predator-prey state of affairs and you finally find this kind of experience when one is eaten and the other is eating and some are swimming out of danger fast and furious or scared and scarred and

yet no one is screaming no one is talking

into the silent world of war and chaos, unreported unheard.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a place where i cannot take you

i live there
and everyday i see what my life
is there

when you see it
i know what you shall feel

do not follow me
the door is too personal

it only opens for me but not for you

i like to take you there but the room
takes only my body

there is no sun there not even the moon

stars fall on the floor flowers are my pillows

a blanket of grass
an ocean of dreams

the night is my mother that lulls me to sleep

i have no company there but only

the memory of you and
i.
Deer Tracks....

my poetry is not the kind of tracks that deers put upon the grass that each tread upon

you do not have the kind of nose that dogs have your sense of smell is not that keen enough to say that i am inside the confines of every word in every poem

deers
those wild ones are too keen to sense even the disturbance of the sands by a lost worm

it skips and jumps over the river and the next time you see it
it has become another mirage
in the desert

do not trace any part of me in the past
for i am no longer there i could be that deer
at the other side of the river

RIC S. BASTASA
Defamatory

what you said
was too defamatory
you paid him money
to tell a lie
and he got the money and told the lie
the lie becomes a snake with sharp fangs
the fangs contained the venom
and now
it spits back at you
you may not be dead but i know that you are numb for more lies you too has become the snake that spits the venom that has grown fangs
now so immune
you manufacture all the lies in that snake pit
of yours

how can the gods explain such existence as you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Defeat

defeat must have the dignity of a loser remaining strong, supportive now of the true winner.
defeat must shed no tear must stand like a man, bright still like the sun, peaceful as the pond where the moon sits and sings again.

RIC S. BASTASA
my eyes stare at
your body
my hair falls down
freely
my hands hold unto a bar
my breasts shake
my lips all wet with your lips all wet
my tongue moans
for your name
i am on top of you

in this struggle for freedom
this revolution of
love

we come at the apex of this climb we surrender
all in defeat to the powers of our flesh you & i

RIC S. BASTASA
you have offended me
and you know that i do not demand any explanation for like the way all things go as nature to its due course must take planets keeping its own orbit galaxies moving to its charted direction flowing and floating you very well know me i do not demand an explanation

i owe you nothing and the guilt inside you grows like the usual cancer i carry within me this innate peace this peace that i treasure a song it whistles

something in you owes me but receive it i will not nature shall i let go not i, but it, shall take the inevitable revenge your misfortune comes like a flood the clouds are heavy with rain and you, the lonely river, shall catch the burden of too much water

RIC S. BASTASA
Defiance Of The Law

here comes this aggressive mind claiming ownership of the whole town caught by the police and slapping one of them

RIC S. BASTASA
Defiant Pattern

you feel betrayed
sometimes

stones like us
some have turned into birds

behold the clouds
they were once
like us
too

the dropp of rain
comes to you in a dream as an ocean

black turns gold before
your eyes

the jinx has become famous Lady Luck

you ask so many questions they get mad

you get punished for such a philosophical misbehavior

defiant pattern
bad to see and must not be published

you feel betrayed
by a storm of biases

there is no place for you
and so
you do not turn into a bird or cloud
or ocean

you remain as stone deep under

you live in silence apart from the world of birds and skies

and oceans
you are stone

perfect in your silence undiscovered gem

how will you ever discover that stone in you glittering in silence depths of black

strata of wisdom
no one knows

they have taken nothing
from you
you have buried your mouth and eyes

and ears in that blackness of your chosen silence

defiant pattern
beautiful secret underneath
the earth of layers of silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Defining The Kind Of Silence He Needs

it is like the silence of an empty room not keeping anything not holding not gripping hands or gnashing teeth
the windows are not closed or the doors to keep a hounding silence it is a silence with still air you hear me breathing in and out

of my nostrils
nothing kept like grudges nothing hidden like some disappointments

it is the silence that heals that gathers strength the silence of your gratitude the silence that rests
the silence
of the soul in solitude the silence of peace
one that looks out to the grandeur yet to come one that waits patiently the silence of glory
godlike

humane, and seeks to understand the one that drives confusion away

like a bird nesting its eggs for days on a stable branch Degrade Me, Please

this is the fountain of urine i put it on bathe in there
	his is the dung of the cow, take some slices like a piece of cake h this is a cup of molds and moss and slime and spittle take them
as you please

sometimes, i vomit and ask, why?

RIC S. BASTASA
Degrading Effusiveness

someone wants his name remembered and everyday he vends along the streets where people simply pass him by he tries poetry to have his name engraved in stone should have been in the hearts of noble men those who never wanted a name those who shun fame on such a degrading effusiveness i give a gush.

RIC S. BASTASA
Degrees Of Unfreedom...

1. caught a bird inside your hand

   sed
   inside a cage and hangs on a beam
   at the side of the road

   feed with grains

4. starts to sing
   inside the cage

5. feathers fall
   and unlearned flights

6. so many thoughts about bird-lands

8. no one sees the spirit getting out of the body
   of the bird

9. into another plane
   another cage

10. back to one

RIC S. BASTASA
Deja Vu

i meet a face today and it cannot look at me straight in the eye
and i look at it with scrutiny asking why it is dark and i have seen that very same face again and again

waiting for me
it is the very same face of darkness that used to stare at me from the very first day that i cried now for pity
it refuses to make a glance time which has been in an ambush position lurking in the darkest corner of my life murmurs some words to itself sounding like a train stopping

tomorrow, it says for the last time is the perfect time to go one bright morning when the flowers start to bloom the least you expect and you do not have the chance of saying...i have always loved you you shall be blown away like some other leaf so ordinary so cheap

RIC S. BASTASA
Deja Vu De Ja Vu

What were we
before this?

we have assumed shapes
that do not now
fit

were you the flower
to my bough?
or the apple to my
tree?

why have i become so attached to you?

was there a connection
before?
was i the trail to your mountain?

was i your wing?
were you my lover?

you only appear in my dream
and yet you have become so real

like a finger to my hand an eye to my face.

RIC S. BASTASA
Deja Vu With A Strange Landscape

you experience a certain height a strong wind carries you there you are not disturbed at all you know it
even before you were there then you put your feet on the rocky ground your hands feel the only tree growing in there there is fire on every leaf but it does not burn you when you kiss it there is this familiarity that even you cannot explain

RIC S. BASTASA
same seat
in the same room
same time of
the night
same perfume
and then you remember
those same words
that i to you gently said

RIC S. BASTASA
Dejavu (2)

same seat
in the same room
same time of
the night
same perfume
and then you remember
those same words
that i to you
gently said

RIC S. BASTASA
Delay Too Is A Virtue....

if she wove
a bridal gown which she cannot finish

why don't you sculpt
a giant and they will not suspect that like her

you were just delaying
things
to put off the contract
because you
know that something better is
coming

if he is telling you
the story of the thousand nights

perhaps you by now understood all these things that somehow delay is a virtue
to avoid the present sorrow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Delaying Tactic...

Dr. Madonna has a father who is an ex-general of the army she is married but her husband has a zero sperm count nevertheless, to save her husband from said predicament she adds, that her cervix is also damaged based on an infection when she was
still 16.

her father is diagnosed with prostate cancer stage 3B, and she is not actually that sentimental to entertain the dance of sorrow, he is 87 anyway and had lots of women during his military career, and they are ten children in his wedded life, and so there is nothing much to sigh,

she accepts that death is a visitor but this time it will be a timely one, the host is ready.

her Papa does not mention any possibility of a chemotherapy or radiation and they seem to understand perfectly their silence while they were riding that ferry that takes them from the city hospital to their family home where everybody is waiting for dinner

' we can go back next year and have a second opinion' her Papa to break the silence, finally commented.

she nods and
kisses his firm hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Delectatio Morosa

on that bed
of evil thoughts my morning
starts

i grow and bloom on such a delectable delicacy

butchered on such a holiday
the gladiator’s
oozing blood
flows on the alleys

of my mind

RIC S. BASTASA
Delete

for something that i do not want to respond to either i have really nothing to say or if i were to say it it will just hurt you
i press
delete.

RIC S. BASTASA
Delikadong Dula Dula Sa Dila Ni Dalila Viuda De Dalida Didto Sa Dakota

Ang kolor sa purol ni Dolor dekolor.

Ang relo ni Leroy Rolex.

isdang anduwaw
namagaybay

Ang balay ni
belay libat.

RIC S. BASTASA
Delusions...

the rebel rat looks upon from the hole in the ceiling the cat taking its nap on the white pillow and the dog fast asleep on the maple
carpet

on the roof is the rain pouring heavily delusional on cats and dogs and rats alike....

the carpet and the pillow passive, never in rage....

RIC S. BASTASA
Demanding An Explanation?

demand for explanation

Is this a test?

It must be
It has something to do
With

Passing away

Or

heart Failure.

RIC S. BASTASA
Democracy In The Philippine Islands there is this little boy who is practicing to ride a big bike his feet are short and so are his hands

and always
in this predicament does he fall and tumble

the years passed
and it is the same boy again practicing to ride his big bicycle

sometimes i am just curious what is this boy eating and drinking since his feet are still short and his hands are still small he never had the guts riding his bicycle to the full it is the same situation all over again he falls and bleeds and cries that the bicycle is always too big for his short feet and small hands he falls and he tumbles he bleeds and he fails

RIC S. BASTASA
Demons

DEMONS, sound like diamonds or the almonds

you ask to be free from demons these demons that mess
your life

oh aldo, summon me
to fly to you

i am an angel from the east where the sun always shines and feasts

(canned laughter follows)

RIC S. BASTASA
we like to sin
we like to think that when we sin it is not us that sin but some demons pushing us to make the sins even in sinning we need some escape goats the demons made me do it damn these demons in my head!

i am innocent
the demons pushed me to do the sins i do they are so many of them these damn demons in my head and i am just alone (my sweet conscience implanted by God)

damn these demons they push me on the dead-end edge where i can do nothing but sin

nice, human logic, less responsibility for sinning because someone did the sinning for you

not me, when i sin, i sin alone, i sin myself, and there is no escape goat to blame there are no horns, no goats, no snakes handing me the apple to bite, no adam no eve no cains or abels no genetics involved in here i have sinned through my own my own fault, in what i think, in what i do, in what i have failed to do, in what i have failed to think, and i ask all the angels and saints to help me get away from my own faults, my own and nothing but my own this sinning

my own responsibility and i ask my God to forgive me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Denial

for every tear
that we shed
on the grave of our loved one another soul

up there
becomes restless

disturbed.

do not cry anymore.
let them have the
needed rest.

you must learn
to forget and learn
to live

your own life
of loneliness

the woman
standing next to the grave of your husband
mourns too

fighting her own battle of loneliness

look at her she is broken too with so much sorrow

pity, have pity on her.
pity, have pity on yourself too why should one be overwhelmed with so much sorrow? when happiness lurks just behind you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Denial About Jealousy

do not deny it
you're silent

do not deny it
you're jealous

do not speak
anything about it

i am not yours
and i will not be around when you shall be furious

do not deny it
your silence shows

do not speak any word
it glows

do not write about it it serves no purpose

please let it go
set yourself free from the frost in your mind from that dew

that is meant to go
the sun has come

RIC S. BASTASA
Denial Too Is An Art

denial too is an art
and with the complications of time sophistication also comes glittering and throwing some questions sometimes without
answers

that is the challenge silence sits aside outmoded the new models of denial and refusal dressed in the latest creations of fashion and color and texture come parading like scanty clad ladies with mouths pouting for options

there is this man walking in reverse and you will have a hard time to guess what is he apt to?
and there is this woman that keeps on going like a white swan floating on the river what is her point?

the pond with pink lilies is too placid and the philosopher sits beside a big gray stone thinking

the koi comes up with some news about the decaying moss and the foul water spotted beauty

the clouds are heavy in the skies and rain shall soon pour like wisdom the earth asks you: who are you?

you shrug you shoulders and then gently you must go to where? and when? you tell the earth you do not really know. i like your art. The art of not knowing. It is where the flowers grow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Deny Me Deny You

deny me
entry into your system deny yourself
that gate of happiness
made for both
of us
from high above

deny ourselves what we thought we really deserve let our lips dry let our minds go crazy let the pillars between us be as tall as the coconuts let us accept for now the bliss of freedom let time simmer let the ages age

let the wine bottle be sealed and kept at the cellar

then we come back for more surprises
how does our sweat taste after
all these years?

goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
Depressed Man In Bed....

rays of light
begin to penetrate
the holes of my wall

light leaks
the beautiful day

but he is not opening the windows and the shutters
of his mind
insist on another prolonged
sleep

there are so many things to do creases of his life to iron out

but he shall do nothing
about
all of them
there shall be no plan no scheme
no itinerary for the day
for the week

let life do it
what is its use
somehow?

RIC S. BASTASA
Derby At The Gym

the cocks are killing each other for money as the bettors shout till morning, on the other hand, the holy mass is going on about 50 meters away, more of, demons and angels, at each other on an arm-length war.

RIC S. BASTASA
Descended From The Pegasus Of Our Minds...

it's been years since you know how we started with nothing, - it was humiliating, but we keep silent and we keep on going,
we know how to understand how is it to be humiliated but at the same time we take pride in just keeping on the doing, just like the way we keep that rusty bicycle, we took it to the market and we did not mind the foul odor and the dust, we just keep on doing what we think is good for our hands, until we got the skill and we still do it, despite the confidence, now it is time to still keep on going, there is no more rust there is more oil to use, money to spend, but still we keep on going, lest the bicycle falls on the road and we shall have our own injuries  but despite, we keep on going, because we love doing it, yes, love to love and to love, despite the hurts, yes, we keep on loving, even if love is no longer there,

because we learned a lot from that rusty bicycle,
descended from the Pegasus of our minds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Descending To The Lower Level

i do not have to waste words for the stairs and so i descended to the level of silence my mind does the acrobatics
but there is no way to amaze her she is the one in love i wasn’t.

RIC S. BASTASA
Descriptio Personae

no such boat
without anchor

wider oceans
expanding horizons

sketched some stars
fixed the moon

onward always moving

always with sails
and compass sharp

RIC S. BASTASA
the window is open beside the garage where the white pick-up is parked and below it is the white poodle sleeping soundly

it is 4:07 in the afternoon in my house in Katipunan where the road is empty where the trees are still where the wind is as silent as the grass
well manicured at the center of the yard.

RIC S. BASTASA
Desde Ahora

there will be changes
desde ahora

no more tears, no more regrets lots of love like icing on a black forest cake adventures on lust experiments on the kama sutra no more lonely early mornings i shall have sugar and cream in my coffee lots of whispers, plenty of time for conversations with you more poems, less anger, vanish the hate, embrace the loving arms of happiness sleep in bed entwined the whole night in the heat of ecstasy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Desert Poem

we should have asked how the cactus decided to grow
all the thorns around its
body

its long term
relationship with the desert
and the sun

its covenant with the moon and stars
and the oasis

its kindness with the camels and secrets with Bedouins

RIC S. BASTASA
i
you are the fluke of the universe you are less than the trees and the stars and you have no right to be here.

ii
you are the child of the universe you are no less than the trees and the stars and by all mean you have the right to be here

iii
.................................................................

RIC S. BASTASA
Desire

watching someone unfold before you in synchronized numbers someone undressing
the eyes feasting something that you cannot hold because it slips away a memory
yes, nothing but a view where your hands are water
your fingers nothing but air you hear a laughter and then a smile and then just an image dissolving into space

you are silent again for this why can't you even touch it?

RIC S. BASTASA
Desire Me Not

desire me not
undesirable am i

pull me like a string
an end
i have none

desire me not
pain of the needle piercing am i

blood drips from my mind and
stains are all over the

the clothes of my body
naked
and tattooed and

threatening to the senses of what is true

i am spun from lies and lies you said

you abhor
savor me not for i am an herb bitter

lick me not for i am a plant all made of thorns

and sap

that blinds the eye of those who pretend

seeing me like sun am i burning burning itself
to give you light and be not confident

i also know how to scorch for torch

am i
burning what says
to be dry

desire me not
for at the end
i know the answer to the riddle of the Sphinx

the world crumples
before my feet

and then desire me
not

for without a word shall i be gone

love me not for i am lost in the woods
of love
and lust.

RIC S. BASTASA
Desire, Love, Want, Need, Dissatisfaction

so much of it can be too boring
and everyday
can spell no meaning

but there is nothing that much that is so much in our humanity

there is always this lack this wanting for more and a lifetime
is never enough

RIC S. BASTASA
Despacito......

there is something lovely in your slowness

that slow journey of the lips to the spine

the low tone of the whisper in the ears

the slow caresses of the fingers on the hips and thighs

the walls that see all these becomes alive with all its gladness the winds say, Oh Lord, Oh Lord, what is love doing to me?

RIC S. BASTASA
Despair

eventually, you must use black when you paint despair it is its color

darkness,
eyes closed and tears coming out like drops of rain from your cloudy
eyes

but you cannot be restrained to the strictures of conformity

society is raged
hurt and ravaged

oh my! you use
the color
red

they know what you mean red is the color
of war

RIC S. BASTASA
Despair Is A Bad Joke....

after three days, despair has become an unwanted company, i begin to joke,
i do not choke, i smoke.

its clothes do not fit for my new occasion its doomed color is irrelevant my true friends shall detest it and shall surely vomit it like a bacteria infected spaghetti

i like to wear the robe of a happy emerald life, shiny black shoes that exudes dignity and propriety there must be extra pockets to keep some allowances for the coming excitements, the unexpected joys of living, i tell despair to leave me, and it is just as simple at that and it did.

despair is a bad joke,
in essence just a joke,
it does not please us,
so why should we let it stay?

RIC S. BASTASA
Despair, I Know You Do Not Like The Word

I know you do not like the word Its color its scent, how we relate it to something black And smoky and ghastly and ghostly Some say, red is the color of despair Others say it is like black coffee because It does not make you sleep And make you curl the whole day in Your dark room without wanting To talk to somebody and just be there Alone by yourself, pondering, almost crazy

Not yet anyway, so you go on a compromise Grey is the color of despair Dusk, or dawn, or something dawning yet Like an idea of a suicide unhatched Delayed like an egg still undecided whether To hatch or not to hatch and face the world Of chickens

Despair, what is so big about despair No big deal, it comes to you whether You like it or not
As a matter of necessity, face it and state Its name and stare and say, I muster this Despair, I am its master and not its slave And then, when you know all its particulars You know what to do
Kill it and if it is not killed yet
Well

Well, well, just learn to live with it Sleep and with, make love with it And well,

Have kids with despair and call them Their names: the usual, the normal and The everyday. And just be prolific.
Despair...

To know DESPAIR
and not to dislike it somehow because it visits us once in a while uninvited

We cannot just drive it because it is related to Joy and we must all welcome a friend of our friends a relative of our relatives

Take Despair as is Feed it and Give it some drinks AT night listen to its Hang-ups and always make it feel
that you too studied well your psychology
and understands what life (and death)
is all about

It will stay for this
Be flattered
Perhaps it likes the way you deal with it

It tempts you somehow about the beauty of Suicide Just refuse
Say your black and white know
Do not betray
Bliss, and Beauty and Truth
and Goodness

Despair like any Creature
also Experiences boredom and then it decides to leave you and because you have been patient all along
You must have noticed that you have changed a bit Now getting bolder
and Stronger and Wiser

When it leaves you
Send her some of your gifts Tell what you feel How it had always behaved
In your house
and how others too have behaved
The way life should be Send her your smile
and your hugs
And make a promise that when it comes back
You always give it a nice bed and board
That usual breakfast of
sunny side up fried egg and Thai rice

Now you are at home with
Yourself
Wait for your next guest Welcome Joy.

For life is just like a House
With guests from time to time
Be an amiable Hostess
Take pride
In your little hospitality
and Household Diplomacy Where can happiness
be?

RIC S. BASTASA
Despair's Body And Face

fat and ugly
on slow feet and clumsy hands despair looks itself in the mirror and fear itself trembles

depression
goes to the kitchen and pampers
itself with coke
and hamburger
and chicken
wings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Desperately Seeking You

in desperately seeking you i am actually desperately seeking myself because and I,

Because we have long become One
in This
& That

Because One cannot live Without the Other
Because we had that Vow

To live
To die
Together.

RIC S. BASTASA
Desperation....

you are an empty cup
tonight

i am not the cold wind that makes you
tremble

i am the warm coffee that fills you

the night starts to sing our song

i forget my warmth
you lose that emptiness

tomorrow morning
someone shall see stains on the mantel

another memory is broken

RIC S. BASTASA
Despite

The polishing of the sand
And wood has come
One day in my life
On such a solemnity

This newly built wall
On such high proportions Is making no sense
Of my old principles

But I can’t live without them Something is proven Despite all these plans
The bad things still happen

RIC S. BASTASA
Despite Her Weight.......

by then she had gained weight in the united states of america somewhere in her neck of the woods her husband who had a brain tumor operation has arrived home and this picture with him was taken strong winds blowing her hair and she puts the caption on facebook

' there is too much air outside' strong winds camouflaging in the demeanor of what in reality was the untold hurricane i like her, we all like her despite her weight, despite everything....

RIC S. BASTASA
Despite Mortality.

as others lose their way, he was there constant on his faith,

this way is always the way and no other

he meets everybody, and
everything

the laughing enemy, the muddy stone, the longing mother the ever complaining son the drunkard

stars collide, moons wane, suns splinter into bits of flints the grasses have turned into flowers rivers become cities oceans of aircraft carriers, and loquacious leaders smiling on TV

I only need Tolstoy's short story about man's need of a land, six feet under his bones are kept, and then a marker, a niche, flowers growing on top of his rotten body a man walks sometimes without a purpose another one sits facing the see counting boats you know what the seagulls are after only fish, and nothing more a boy plays on the sands of the beach what does he really think of? we know when we begin to recall, when what we did was only play the whole day and when mother calls us to come home we always feel that the play is not over and we want some more, which makes us reminisce our birth right to selfishness...always incomplete always in need, despite the abundance, despite this paradise, despite mortality.

RIC S. BASTASA
Despite.....

Nothing will be changed good food will still be served we'll have the good times till death suddenly comes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dessert

you're sweet
and neat
you're adorable
you're beautiful
you're divine
and so kind
you're wonderful you're joyful

like your poem

with rhyme
and rhythm

unlike mine
it doesn't.

RIC S. BASTASA
Destiny

(for estrella dy-imperial on her death anniversary) under the tall coconut trees you warned all of us to watch out

you had not finished saying the warning
when suddenly a coconut fell off the tree and hit you right
in the middle of your
forehead

dead on the spot
t'was you

we were speechless
unable to believe

how death sometimes strikes

the most careful creature still wanting to be alive.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Destiny And The Impossible

geometry says that our two parallel lines will not meet the people who has disgust are of the same conclusion
we shall never be together again the stars frown and the moon whatever we do is always yawning

the air suspends the sun in disbelief you want to believe the impossible? ask destiny, implore the heavens let the sky and earth meet for once between us, let the ceiling and the floor kiss.

RIC S. BASTASA
do not utter so many words one goodbye is enough more of those talks do not serve this journey well there is only one direction and i shall follow it there is only one code and my heart keeps it
do not follow me
destiny has carved you a path i am not lost

RIC S. BASTASA
Destiny Is Silent And We Shall Follow

destiny is always silent it is deaf and mute but it always comes and goes and comes and goes and then lets go what it has to offer and then takes back
what we do not deserve, you look forward and you see haze fog so thick gathering on the side of the hills of your mind you walk in there no words no thoughts and then you penetrate it and then you disappear

there is no self, just an idea of the self there is nothing you can touch just the idea of the touch there is something that you can hear but you have no way figuring what it is

RIC S. BASTASA
Destiny....

when i write this i listened to the best of yann tiersen

on piano and if you by chance

had listened too

even once in your lifetime i guess

you shall feel
the same thing that i am feeling now...

this sadness that carries with it a kind of indescribable happiness this irony

of what we want and what we cannot take

this longing which does not desire fulfillment

this letting go of what i could have possibly taken with pride and dignity but which i left to the whims of the winds as i have began taking the belief that what i have or can be is already ironed out by destiny.

RIC S. BASTASA
De-Stressing A Point...

doubts of the scalp
and so i scratch it with my nails.
holes of infection,
itchy life, and
fallen hairs.

the goddess of smell
looks upon me,
and i look up to taste
what smell is it.

it tastes like heaven,
my usual answer.

what is heaven? they all
laugh.

my eyes lift higher
eyelashes are top loaders.

sleep is a conqueror
i am conquered but the surrender is de-stressing tomorrow i have a plow and a buffalo

i own this land i remind the grasses

tomorrow
i need to vacate, i guess a trip, a very long long trip where your sight cannot find me your trains of emotions are grounded

i have an avalanche of forgetfulness.

so? got no word for you except my well sculpted goodbye baby, after all, our worlds are galaxies apart light years that you must know by now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Destruction And Rebirth...

when your universe breaks in the same manner that other universes do the most natural thing that must happen

i, in my own, planetary motion, watch
the shattering and the bursting of the great bubble in you it is not that i want to see how you destroy yourself

i am not that
sadistic,

the stars know me by heart and the moon likes me for that

it is this
within you,
after,
shall be
the birth of the new star

and this happens all you have to do is just wait

because
as always stars are born after an explosion

tell you what
it will be the best stage to watch the nicest thing that happens to you also happens

to me

and once again the universe celebrates and dances and toasts with the lights of the stars

the meteors sweep sorrows throwing everything negative away into the edges of darkness

each now, is happy again, following each own
planetary orbit
strictly upon its own joyous terms with Sun as God with the other planets as angels and

friends.

RIC S. BASTASA
memories are ecstasies when the come in cascades we become flooded every nook becomes water and there is no escaping only splashing into its flashes of fluidity, and we tremble since of them are horrifying and we fall short of words to describe how we are feeling again like a shudder, a rudder with a broken tip, a tipsy boat failing paddles, lighthouse turning off when the storm rages on

somehow i end it with
'i'm ok' i have long prepared for this, and this cannot touch me anymore
it does not own me and i have nothing to brag.

i take control, i let my mind wander like a fog on those rugged hills.

RIC S. BASTASA
Determination

for it is said my friend that there is no such thing as a hard rock to a constant dripping of
the dropp of rain

there is not such thing as an impenetrable void
to a loving heart

there is no such obstruction strong enough to stop a flowing river no rock stays forever to a gentle song

RIC S. BASTASA
Determined Indifference

i like indifference
as a weapon, whether

happy
whatever carrot or stick policy is used by the enemy indifference sits on a bench watches the big waves of the sea unaffected

the wind wanders
the thousand eyes of the sand look for a possible hint on what is up to

they cannot find a thing except the stare to nowhere the calmness amidst the sorrowful
leaves
heaps and heaps
on the ground
of emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
Deus Ex Machina

she complains about the storm
last night
for the leaves are making heaps and this morning
she will be sweeping them the wind comes and sweeps away all the leaves towards the pit awed, she says, because she prays.

RIC S. BASTASA
Devastatus

the news was awful
and it was devastating for dr. serafin he waited and there was no cure there was only this falling and failing
and falling on an abyss
without for him
an end

dr. serafin did not cry his wife did she imagined a city
destroyed by this quake and then fire came and burned
the whole city
that ate
all the women
and children

there was in actuality no earthquake
no city fire
there were only tears from her eyes
and she said
what she did not really see she felt
all the way down to the smallest nerve
of her toes

dr. serafin was devastated that was the only word he knew
and it is still inside his heart i waited for him to say he does not believe in God anymore
but he did not say it
he couldn't
he just did not have any courage at all
to be honest

he did not ask me either
he knows i do not have the courage
too
there is simply no word inside my heart
yet

for all these miseries

RIC S. BASTASA
Devil's Advocate

if you are tired with words, why do use the words yourself?

why am i using words myself?
why?

because we are far from each other now.
because i cannot touch you.
because i am a slave of the word.
because i can never be free. because i am not at all human without the word itself.

the irony is here. Let me hide then. the paradox is here. Let me live.

RIC S. BASTASA
Devoid Of Vowels....

to write with passion is to throw away anything logical it is like you it is more like you in passion

you hold tightly, you throw away, you take back, you hold much tighter and then you loosen the hold giving up in surrender what was once treasured like a secret am i more beautiful when i am illogical?

the quick brown fox with a flower on its tail the river with a ray of leaves the house with the moon the night with the whisper the tightness and the clock and the sound that it is over

the shimmer of emotions in the sea of love the ripples of a love moan the journey of the heart to an uncharted destination

the blank stare on the computer monitor how words run chased by my fingers how meaning wants to have meaning how emptiness draws a portrait of a human being devoid of vowels....

RIC S. BASTASA
it starts with a cat call and then inside the room a slice of steak is taken by the tongue of the fork which was fed to the open door of the mouth and with a little fear the one fell to the carpeted floor the silence of which is like a secret that only the two of them knew and the other went on top of the inexperienced and said, 'do not be afraid' and in said moment the first kiss was planted...

RIC S. BASTASA
Devotion

admiration followed him from the men and women of the beach as he walks one summer his skin glowing to the sun: gold the color of mud, his hair blowing freely on his head, his steps mellow to the sand a young maiden from the village follows him at a distance but not so near bringing him his shirt neatly folded in her hands-a little bit angry, she looks at him lifting her eyes but again not so near she gives up devotion and throws his shirt on the grey sand runs toward the other end of the shore and disappears

her feet are so tiny leaving this awkward cloud when she runs away from him he sees her vanish ignoring what cloud she left from her tiny feet

RIC S. BASTASA
Devour

The present devours
the past
The hate that devours
love
Anger that devours
you Hope devoured by
despair

Night devouring
day
And day devouring
night

The moon devouring
The landscape

These poems like flames Devouring
me.

My mind devours
me.

Now is my revenge
I devour
You.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dew

i agree
with you Dew
how small
the glitter
too short a glory

RIC S. BASTASA
Dexter Always Remember

try to look at it from a different perspective dexter

when your prayers are not granted it is not because you do not deserve to be there
it is not because you are lesser that those who are now seated in the front handshaking with greatness it is simply because God has barred the door where you are going to enter the room of your perdition

just wait
the right door for you is yet unfinished
the room there is suited for you
and for no other

soon, you will understand but i know for sure God has always heard you

RIC S. BASTASA
Di Lalim Ang Paglabat

ang paglabat dili
bastabasta,

maglatid ka
aron masubay ang saktong linya

gabson ang
nanglabaw aron
sab nindot
lantawon

human niini
usa na lang ang gawsanan ug sudlanan

dayon di ka na
tinggan sa imong
silingan

RIC S. BASTASA
Diamond

it starts as a double face one for her and another for another they all love you
despite the lies and deception they like the gleams of your multiple faces you give such a magical light for them
you are a gem
a diamond

you get tired looking for mud
you want to bury what magical light is left

RIC S. BASTASA
Dianne, Mercy And John

i do not know how to describe this since i am not a fashion designer neither am i a make up artist or a director of a cabaret show, but let me try let me say, i do not know them in person so i do not know their names i got this picture somewhere and i claim no knowledge about who and what but let us pretend that the one in heavy makeup is Mercy: thick red lips like red strawberries i could have said apples, a huge neck like that of a lioness, giraffe is sexier, the cape is gray and silky so i will not say that it is more of a sail for a boat the breasts looks more like a chest perhaps to make it appear buxomy air is exhaled.

the one at the middle looks like a man to me with a diminishing hairline, white polo shirt with gray marks and a black undershirt i think i once met him in the ship going to the big city but i can't really remember him completely. Was he the one who constructed a dark yellow building in the town? Is he the postmaster of Chicago? I am sure he is Filipino.

the third one is wearing grays stocking, a gray skirt and lone hair. I sense it is a wig. The arm has muscles and the neck has Adam's apple.

They are all smiling. Mercy calls this a cross-over Dianne says this is it. And John says this is fun

RIC S. BASTASA
Diaspora

From this plains i see a diaspora of brown butterflies fluttering towards the western side of this little earth where i am merely one of the stewards.

I could have told them to stay as I still have a lot of red roses to offer but they are not listening because the song the green song of the west is so enticing.

I ask the eastern wind to sing the songs of the kabuki and the cebuano guitar and the nose flute of my great sultans and the agongs of the Malayan caravan, but they're not listening

Now, the tides changed. The West wind is harsh and the trees there too unfriendly.

I see the brown butterflies crushed to death.
Thousands of them.

I sit here weeping, singing the song of the of the ever faithful eastern winds.
There is no one to blame.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dichotomy....

the room there was spartan,
empty except for a pair of dirty pants hanging on the side
of the wall,

the atmosphere of wood
and dust and bareness

i was lonely, i was always lonely and some say that i was sick almost all the time there was either cold or fever

mother and father died almost together when they were alive they were not close they always quarrel on something be it fish or dog or linen

they died a long time ago and there was that moment when they both visited me in the room and ask me if i was alright if i want then to go with them and join them in their new place and without hesitation i said: nope, thanks, i have my own world and i like to keep it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did God Accept Your Resignation Letter?

You seek resignation from the company of life did you submit it to God? And did he accept it?

Years ago i sent mine and it was rejected For He said, in his universal company of life there is no resignation His words were not many Not really poetic as we wanted Him to be But plain
And simple.

Did he say he loves you?
Well, he told me and then out of that I learned a lot.

I work for no pay. I work for no reward. I work for no honor.
It was simple and not poetic at all.
He just touched with his wind and then I become so alive No death since then has spoken a word for me.

I look at myself in the mirror.
I have seen how i have grown.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did I Ever Think Of Sex When I Write About The Rain?

Wading through the rain, naked, and letting the rain fall On my mouth as I look up to the cloudy skies where the sun And the moon are missing, drinking the raindrops and letting My hair go wet and flowing all over my body, walking through The middle of the road where the waters are deep and cold

On the other side, you wait for me, your arms extending You look into my glistening eyes, you hold my hand and You embrace my shivering body, you take me inside your room You wipe me with your dry towel and serve me tea and give me
The needed company, this misery, this rain crying on the roof

You wrap my body with your arms, you dress me up with your Oversized shirt and let me wear your worn out blue jeans We talk a while, you explain something, in truth, we simply Talk and talk, and when the rain stops, you ask me to leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did I Imagine Someone Else That Time?

we are here in this abandoned house let us go inside and find out what is left here the pillars are still tall and nailed to each other time did not touch the stairs perhaps they are so insignificant there is that bed where we spent the moments of youth your moans are missing the head board is dusty and the termites ate the legs it is uneven now, and to hold itself it leans on the side table when you were on top of me i closed my eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Did I Tell You That I Have Goiter?

it was accidentally discovered when my arms felt numb

i have two nodules inside my neck and still at 2 cm.

i am hyperactive, and i will be more of an insomniac, so please understand that i will be writing more senseless poems, my therapy, but you may not read them, it is alright.

i can manage my nights without you.

i am a wizard, an owl, i will be blacker than the night.
without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did I Tell You That Our View Of Happiness Is A Little Bit Boring Too?

A girl all white on Sunday With her papa and mama
And after mass
She gets her pink cotton candy Sweet
Sugar to her tongue

And then they go to a Halo-halo bar and they Eat their slice of chiffon cake
Sweet
Sugar to the tongues of A very sweet family

Happy childhood, normal people Achieving and making others happy Expectedly, kindhearted and Not miserable, away from despair And poverty, looking forward to A bright future, full of laughter And cheers

That is how we view happiness Giggles in the youthful years And marriage and children And grandchildren
The cycle of perfection

Did I tell you that life gets boring Sometimes with the way we are Prescribed to be this and this and that?

I give up, and learn life my way Preferring solitude, away from the mob The crowd and the doctors of happiness I want to find mine: In peace, In silence In the most private moment Even without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did It Rain Heavily Last Night?

i fell asleep
deep and sound like you i felt
i was dead

did it really rain
heavily last night?
the road is muddy
and i cannot take a walk this morning

don't bother
i can go barefoot

don't bother
i like the mud

don't bother
i like being dirty

don't bother
the sun dries them all

and the water
at the pump
shall clean them all

don't bother
i am still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did They Tell You To Live Decently?

did they tell you to live decently like gentlemen and ladies societal models, sinless and spotless?

how easy for them
for they have the food and the accommodations their houses and backyards the smoke in their kitchens rising
to the skies
as offerings of the gods the flavor of ham and roasted beef and chiffon cakes
and salted bread

after they have taken all these things from you deprived you of your inheritance your birthright and your labors and your profession after they have taken the rules away and replaced them with their own now they have all the hypocrisy to tell you that you are not decent and what about you? do you swear to be decent and surrender the will that the gods have gifted you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Did We Do It Really For Love?

we had it once
then twice and then
it became wild and uncontrollable, like a
rage,

but then there is a sobriety, like the way the storm leaves us
to show a silk sea without the murmur

we stop for a while it is after all, stoppable, we regain our senses
we are back to our strong selves and we look back with disdain about what happened.

it was not happiness it was not the kind that i long for.
a nightmare, but not that judgmental

did we do it really for love?

RIC S. BASTASA
Did You Ever Slap Yourself In The Mirror?

did you ever slap your face in the mirror just to check for once whether you are still alive?

did you ever check whether you still have your feet rather than look for your shoes?

did you ever check the sound of your heart whether it still beats for love?

i will, tonight,
ok, early morning tomorrow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did You Have A Sound Sleep Last Night?

out there is snow
inside your room you pretended sleep i tendered some unsolicited advices which i stole from the experts
of sleep
i tendered the face of the man who can sing you the songs of passion and love and who can make you
sleep
i tendered an old song of mother a lullaby
i tendered an ear of father touching your fingers

i wish i could have been a tributary of so much sleep for you
the mind
of softness and pillows and warmer beds

do not believe me, if you only know i, too, could not sleep last night
your sleeplessness
is also my mess.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did You Love? And So Many Questions

so did you love her? yes i did and how did you know you love her? i tasted her and how did you know you tasted her? my tongue is my witness and how did she taste like? oh, she was sweet how sweet? as sweet as sorrow how did you know? at the end i cried

RIC S. BASTASA
Did You Say That Your Only Freedom From Pain Is Death?

sad indeed,

there are other freedoms
still

freedom from having no ideas, from this dryness, freedom from having you as a poet on forced wit and half-cooked cleverness freedom from a reader who has nothing to offer except his own loneliness his having nothing to do freedom from being bored
to death
freedom from having nothing to say and comment freedom from this feeling of emptiness this bigotry
this indigestion of dumb thoughts
freedom
from impertinence, immateriality, irrelevance, freedom from thinking about freedom freedom from freedom itself there are more

freedom from pain is useless now

that you are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did You Say The Weather Is Not Fine?

i didn't know really that it is always raining.
most of my time is spent inside my room.
inside my self. inside the marrow of my bones.

i do not like the rain. Or any news of it.
I do not go outside, i may meet the rain and i told you
i do not like any rain, or any sound of the rain.

i am inside myself. And there is no rain anymore.
and of course, the weather is always fine deep inside this miniature world of fine weathers that i make myself.

just fine. and too small for any kind of rain.
clouds don't fit in here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did You Say You Make It On The Stairs?

did i really hear you right?
making love on the stairs and then the boy comes surprisingly asking both of you

what are you both doing on the stairs
both of you naked while he pumps
on you like one ever hungry
lover?

how shameful!

well, okay,
the boy is your son
and the man is your husband

was the bed broken?
or the stairs
too exciting?

was the marriage
too boring?

well, ok,
I understand,
you split with him

could be the staggering steps on the stairs could be that the boy finally understands

could be that the bed is not that warm
you split for good
and uhuh?
so you are now free
at last

from those stairs
from the bed

and the boy has to make the inevitable choice between pa and ma

the stairs he will always remember anyhow
yes, the boy not the pa

RIC S. BASTASA
Did You Think That Poetry Is Always Better Written?

Contented with the plots Sagging surges
soothing
In the movement of the minds Some friends write Thinking that poetry
Must be an art
For their Therapeutic consumption Of for its own Sake pursued,

A friend writes poems
And tells me to read all Of them, and I can Always say
She has concentrated
On some poesies
Not on heresies
Of her life

I told her Poetry is an art
And it is life Itself moving
Inside our hearts

Albeit,
I like a certain thing about this Albert,
And Socrates
Who never wrote a line
But just spoke them
That
There is something sickening about The usual intimacies towards Words and phrases

Sometimes on days when I do not write
But just stand and stare
And listen
Without words spoken

Writing transforms at its best Without my mind
Doing it. It is more of living About living
And not drying, dying writing As it used to be.
And my life is full.

RIC S. BASTASA
Did You? ....

loneliness is just like a visitor welcome it but do not overfeed it or if you are wise enough and hate it somehow then overfeed it yourself lots of fat, no veggies, more soft-drinks, add more and more salt

did it die? or you did?

RIC S. BASTASA
Did Your Love For Him Last?

i am just wondering why you do not write poetry anymore. I am asking myself if your having jumped over the fence yielded the bliss on the other side of things.

Are you too happy to forget the sad refrains of poetry?
or Are you too sad
mournig over another
love lost
that your hands are too weary to write another love poem for this valentine's day?

whatever happened, please write me a love poem sad or happy, please do write me one i just want to know what a love poem should be all about after all those years when we think we really found the true one.

write me, please a love poem, show me the color and scent of each word, show me the texture of each line, show me whether the heart is bleeding or leaping with joy like the one we used to write before together

RIC S. BASTASA
Didn'T You Notice?

when you spit fire
i remain as the cool water of the pond i am still the lotus there undisturbed by the mud and the ripples of the frog and the braggings of the bug when you are angry

i keep my happy disposition, no awry and show my kindness to Highness

when you are agitated i simply mimic you
with a sense of humor

all in the spirit of fun as you sling me with brimstones

so my poetry is bland
and i am bald
and aging and old
like a man
half-dead
lacking the final signature of the earthworm?

i don't mind really
i don't write for praise neither for condemnation i have long told you that i write because i feel the urge to write

and i get this intellectual ejaculation by the constant rubbing of my intellect to the images which are so vivid and sexy
and too alluring to be ignored

i write because i must because i am still here with no plans for leaving or for anger

i like to hug you
like a mother (for in truth i am younger than your youngest son and more handsome than your previous lover or husband)

but you push me away like a dirty beggar
and you utter words
unfit for a poetess
or for any decent grandmother

(it is funny really)

let me write some more lines without hurting you these are for me
for her and for my friends and if you still fume like a volcano

for God's sake
please erupt now while i am still here i like to see some pyroplastics
and ash and lava
and explosions

but what i like more is the scene after your volcanic eruption

the calmness of the lake that your fury has by force of nature created

RIC S. BASTASA
Didto Sa Bukid Ang Mga Mannga Walay Tag-Iya

Kaniadto walay mga labat ang mga balay Pati na ang mga bungtod sa atong balangay

Kaniadto magsabot kita nga manglakaw Paingon sa mga bungtod diin ang kamanggahan

Walay mga tag-iya. Diin didto kusog kaayo ang hangin ug ang mga hinog talumtumon na

Sa katam-is, nangahulog ug wala gani namunit.
Nagdala kita ug sako. Nagpadidit kita sa mga palwa, Nagdula sa taas sa bungtod sa bugnaw nga Mga sagbot ilalom sa mga asul nga mga panganod

Nanaka kita sa mga punoan, ug ang mga bunga Atong giduladulaan, gipahalok sa atong mga aping.

Tam-is kaayo sa atong panumduman: Nanguli ta Uban sa sinako natong mga mangga. Nagkanta-

Kanta kita sa silong sa takdol nga bulan sa gamay Tang agi-anan padulong sa atong balay. Halok

Sa kamot ni nanay ug tatay. Bag-o lang kong niuli Didto sa atoa. Wala na ang mga kamanggahan Ug ang mga bungtod gipanglabat na. Wala na Ang kanhi gagmayng natong agianan. Wala na

Ang mga bata. Ug si Nanay ug Tatay patay na.

RIC S. BASTASA

Didto Sa Imong Impyerno

sa pag-abot nimo
gilibot sa imong mata ang kadak-on ug kalapdon sa balay mga lingkoranan nga tugas nga karaan gasinawsinaw sa matag-adlaw gitapohan sa hagdanan pasaka sa ikaduhang undana sa lamesa nga puno sa pagkaon abi mo ug mao na kadtong tanan apan sayop ka, buang ang namuyo sa maong balay

ang tiguwang nga babaye nga inahan kuno kadto nagkaon ug tanod ang igsoon lalaki nagdula sa gabor ug martilyo siging gidokdok ug tabas adtong gabok nga kahoy dapit sa kusina

kadtong babaye nga imong gikaibgan dili kasugakod ug sugilon kon unsay nahitabo niadtong gamay pa siya samtang gasulirat ang iyang mata sa dihang ang iyang ig-agaw nga lalake nga taas ug barog dunay gisuksok sa iyang alingagngag.

nakasakay ka na sa sakayang buslot.
matag adlaw gitapakan mo ang buslot unya karong tuiga mao na ang ikadisinuybe ka tuig sa imong tinipigang kabuag.

pit senyor, pit senyor walay hunong ang imong pagsyagit didto sa tungatunga sa lawod sa kalayo sa imong impyerno.

RIC S. BASTASA
Didto Sa Sulod Sa Langob

Didto sa sulod sa langob sa karaan Nga simbahan
Adtoa ug pangitaa ang kamatuoran.
Abli ang tugas nga pultahan Wala kini trangkahe ug puthaw Nga kandado

Sulod didto. Sulod na.
Padayon didto sa unahan Sulod pa gayod hangtod Didto sa utlanan.
Makita mo ang daghan Nga mga gagmayng bintana Nga gidan-agan sa ginagmayng Kahayag sa putli nga adlaw.

Nakita mo na ba kini didto sa karaang Simbahan sa Baclayon? Kon mao, Nganong karon moingon ka man Nga wala ka kaayo’y kapilian?

RIC S. BASTASA
and so we met in new york
we ate sashimi
for 70 dollars
total

i learn about your poverty
how you once
lost yourself in a train

your husband
could not fetch you

i learned that Diego got a divorce remained single enjoying life in a hub pub

' i don't like kids, and i want to live
alone'

thus says
the new yorker.

RIC S. BASTASA
Difference

it is your slightest touch that can kill me
with my volition

it is not the scare of your love
in words that gives me life

RIC S. BASTASA
Different Perspectives....

all work and no play make jack a dull boy but on the other hand, take note, all sunshine too, makes a desert.

RIC S. BASTASA
Different Wishes On Christmas

beside the christmas tree
the widow
makes her wish to see her husband
sometime
this year

the suffering is seemingly endless
she is falling short of tears

on the other side
another
single parent
whose lover eloped
with another
younger woman
still persists on her one wish

someday another
true lover comes to ask her hand
for marriage....

the last one who had been childless for
years
kisses the hand of baby jests
asking for a son....
Differing Strokes

compare myself
not from other lovers who once loved
you, i differ,
in subtleties and
open affections,
on crumpled paper
i write
something like
'i love you'

you like it
less formal but retrieving.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dignified.....

the attraction was there wanted to name it love or whatever but no doubt it was magical, one that takes you away from yourself into a place of bliss, that which makes you feel wanting to live some more- - could be love i so suppose, but i dare think that it is wrong, and so i close my eyes, levitate myself, transcend the barrier, live in the clouds, cut my wings and settle back to the ground again- - back to the self, maybe unhappy, but i rest upon this fulfillment, this self undiminished, dignified.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dignity

at par
with you
my equal in this fight
you are so gentle

when i lose the grip of my sword and it falls
on the ground
you have the courage to pick it up for me and tell
me
i need it most now

and then
the point of the sword
now faces
frozen at the eye of my heart

i stare
coldly and i perspire
to the thought
of my death

at this point
you say
thanks it is fair
and i look at you again
at par
shoulder to shoulder
my equal

you let me go
you put your sword
in your scabbard and take the stride on your white horse
and leave me

agape my mouth
opens
you are at par
with me
my equal
you have all the chance to kill me at once but you didn't you make me live

now
a new man a fighter rising from his fall gentle and brave as ever to fight
my own wars.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dignity Finally Comes In The Form Of A Rock.

sometimes i think,
upon a deeper thought,
that nothing will change for the better anymore.

and when this happens
i feel like a boy sinking on the deep ocean
with no hand to help

that i die at an instant and sink to the bottom
in all deadly
silence

and that perhaps there with the sands and
darkness

dignity finally comes in the form of a rock.

RIC S. BASTASA
Diha Sa Duyan Sa Gilaayan

Si Godoy tua galaag sa Liloy, Nanarap og toloy.
Si Juan tua didto sa Manawan, nananom og pakwan.
Si Pedro larga sa Sugbo nangitag trabaho.

Ako? Dia ra sa amo, gikapoy. Tulog-tulog lang sa duyan, nangitag kapahulayan gikan nagdamgog kahasngan sa akong kaulagan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dilemma

it is true
you make my hands
alive
my heart beats
again
when i see
you
but when i touch you
i will
be dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dilemma In The Ocean Of Choices

suddenly you do not know where to go
because there are too many choices
and you cannot
just decide which way

RIC S. BASTASA
Dilemma....

neither could he stay
nor run
the stairs keep that door closed
and the windows are framed-up
the curtains hush
but their tongues are cut neither could he run nor stay
so what he did is fly away
a broken winged bird low on the plains
asking the mercy of the grasses
wishing the journey of the rivers
dreaming the wanderings of the clouds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dili Duha...

sa kanunay
hakupa sa dughan
ang kaloooy

ayaw kahadlok nga
ikaw mahimong lumo ang
kasingkasing

diha ang imong kabug-aton sa kagaan
diha ang imong katakos sa imong kahuyang

ayaw usa og lakaw mahimo ba nga dili ka usa mosulti ni mosibog

pamatia una timbangtimbanga pag-ayo kon unsa ang sunod

inig ka human nimog pamati, inig human nimog timbang kon asa ang bug-at didto ka mokuha aron imong ibalhin

sa mga balhibo sa manok karon mao na ang panahon sa paghukom

wad-on na ang tungatunga kay ang anaa mao na lamang ang wala o too

usa lamang
dili duha.
Dili Ko Motoo Nimo

motoo ko nga nagkasakay mo ni fidel castro sa elevator.

di ko motoo nga dunay elevator.
nga tua ka. nga misakay ka.

motoo ko nga atua si fidel castro.
bisag ganig si rudy duterte too ko gihapon.

apan di ko motoo nga dunay cal.45 diha sa lamesa diin ang pandesal nakighilawas sa butter ug strawberry jam.

too kos jam. apan dili sa strawberry.

too ko nga si delima babaye. naa si dayan.
apan dili ko motoo nga tinood ang video.

too kog negro. antipara. tiil nga nagbilangkad. kiyod kiyod. hapyod hapyod.

too ko nga dako na gayod ang palasyo sa shabu. Ang pusil. too ko ana.

pero kon ikaw akong tuhuan, dili ko motoo ana. too ko nako.

walhon ko kaniadto. kapoy ang too.
sakit akong patay nga kuko.

kandiison ko sama sa akong lubot.
too ko ani. dili gihapon ko motoo nimo.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dili Na Nimo Angkonon

kadali rang
malimtan ang mga nangawala

bisan gani ang
karon mo lang nakita
ngasi usa ka
hugna nahimamat mo

dahon nga gipalid sa
hangin
nga natugdongsasa
sapa

bugnaw nga hangin
ngamisulay paghawid
sa imong buhok

pulong nga imong nalitok
nga bisan pag
mobalik
dilina nimo angkonon

RIC S. BASTASA
Dili Sayon Ang Metaphysics

dili sayon
ang metaphysics

naglisod kog
asa kini gamiton

sama sa kabo diha
sa banga

o dili ba kaha kanang tinidor sa lamesa

minganga ko sa
nanigilon kabahin sa

misteryo sa pagpasaylo
dili gayod sayon

nangutana ko sa
kataposan kon siya

mismo nakasabot
ba usab niini

nagpanglingo siya kanako

ang wa nako pagsabot wa gihapon niya mapasaylo

RIC S. BASTASA
Diligence

at 3 o’clock
the surfer continues to search for what is missing

in his life
scanning it like the pages of an old diary

in his exhaustion he continues till daybreak

until he finds it he cannot sleep until the question is answered there is this seed that grows within there are roots digging the value of his existence the reasons enumerating why a day should be added what tomorrows are relevant why death is untimely

his fingers press the keys until it finds

what he dreamt last night the face of his father begging to do what he did not achieve during his lifetime.
he hears the cries of the goat bound for the slaughterhouse.

RIC S. BASTASA
Diminishing

you do not have to obey the law of diminishing returns on your material resources that limit themselves to their utility & breakability you are not the harsh object of the law you are human and miracles are made & meant

for you

and so today do not think of your hurt feet & scarred hands dream of the gossamer wings that will make you fly your eyes in truth do not only see they also feel like your heart that does not only beat for this kind of life all that is found in you is not only darkness and dampness if you only open your heart hard enough

you have always been designed & meant for what is beyond the ordinary grasps of humanity these miracles of dreams & hopes & anticipations they do not diminish, they add & grow and they even multiply as many as you wish

RIC S. BASTASA
Diminishing, Vanishing, Evanescence

our nature is to fade we are diminished every minute we shed we exude we exhale whatever is kept is destined to be lost as early as dawn that surrenders to light
and lights soon to darkness we must learn to accept this destiny of losing

we empty we are atoms
blown by the wind
we relinquish what is given us we surrender always what we think we have obtained and won this is the evanescence of our human nature

we are melting we are evaporating we see hues of colors turning pastel we pale we wrinkle we shrink we are diffused in space we turn to dust

nevertheless all these are but prologues for something bigger
for something beyond all these to the grand reunion and on this anticipation there is no reason for sorrow and grieving and lamentation from this island of despair we take the boat and cross the body of water i am not seeing it yet but my heart beats for what i cannot imagine yet i know it is there Diminishing...

she counts all her numbered surprises on that day of the hearts

one of which is the bouquet of red roses
sent by her husband
at # 5

in 1987 it used to be at the #1 slot.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dinhi Sa Langob Sa Kangitngit

Unsaon ba nako ang taas nga panahon?
Mas lalom man ang akong kahilom Ug dinhi niining langob

Labing daghan man ko'g mahimo.
Dinhi ang panahon lisod sabton: Ang kahayag maoy utlanan sa kangitngit.
Dili mo masihag kon asa ang usa.

Dinhi ako nagpuyo karon.
Ang sukod sa akong katas-on Naa ra sa akong huna-huna.
Dinhi wala akoy tiil ug mga kamot.
Dinhi wala sab ko'y nawong.

Apan bisa'g wala ko'y mata Daghan ko'g nakita dinhi.
Daghan ko'g nahikap.
Daghan ko'g gibati
Nga wala damha.

Dugay ka na sab nga wala na Dinhi diin kanako mibiya ka.

Miingon kanako ang kangitngit Nga taas pa kuno kaayo ang akong lakton Daghan pa sa unahan ang akong kab-oton.

Padulong pagkapapas ang panahon.
Andam na ang tanan paingon Sa kinabuhiing walay kataposan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dinner

i see how loneliness opens its mouth and swallows you whole there is this dinner
and you are
what is served to its hunger and thirst and you do not even make a sound when you are gone into the deepest throat
of emptiness

there is no sound
there is only the willingness to be lost and to be forgotten

loneliness ate you for dinner and i will be its breakfast tomorrow morning

RIC S. BASTASA
Dinner For Alfalfa

let me introduce you to Alfalfa
my girlfriend
she is 69
and still sexy
and rich
and she says she cannot live without me and i take her to dinner at her expense
of course
because she has the money
and for dinner
she orders
soup # 5
garlic rice
hot chili sauce jumbo hotdogs
and cow's tongues
for stew

(u huh?)

you expect some more i stop here)

we are going
for a date

i am 87
and it is none of your business)

just the viagra
without the condoms
and yes Alfalfa
my dear
for breakfast
tomorrow)

RIC S. BASTASA
Dinner For Three

she is a doctor and he is a lawyer looks like they are sweet after three years of marriage
compatible, super, she says as she takes a sip of her pineapple juice while he prefers not beer but just plain water, well, he knows more about asthma and heart disease but i do not know more about legal terms, she tells me again, one time, he tells me in the email, he cannot live without her even for a minute

super, really super, this lovey-dovey couple i like them

but sometimes, i couldn't help thinking they are still new on this trade, this marriage, and still there will be more storms to come

superstorms

i still have yet twelve years i and emma, and we still need more storms to shake this boat

this marriage
and if there are none to come

i will rock it, let me see how anger makes her more human and strong and true
and perhaps even more beautiful, then soon, when these couple for three blissful years comes again it will now be a nicer dinner for four.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dinner For Two

at the 38th floor
i got a dinner date
with you:

sashimi, maki,
oysters, sea urchins,
duck meat, red wine
and the whole view
of cebu,

you put me in the box
to an affair
that you do not like to remember

could be my ex?
or a new wanna be?
or just a fling?
another inkling?

you're wrong
it is the promise
fulfilled to a nice niece.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dinner In The House....

a plate falls from the table hits the tiled floor and breaks into pieces a woman is caught in utter surprise and breaks into a hysterical line but soon realizes that this is nothing but an accident of its kind

about an ordinary plate on the dining table

she regains her poise keeps her composure and retains her
feminine reservation,

'it is just a plate',

(it is not
a relationship)

i assure the guests of the house and then all begins again upon a witty conversation, an exchange of
state-of-affairs
some on a cheek to cheek basis a tee-a-tee
a peek-a-boo
a little laughter here and another one dashing
over there

the children are out of the house playing
some men are smoking
to the moon
it is not just a plate, there is more to this breaking

it is a symbol of something greater than those broken pieces

if they only know someone is talking to oneself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dinner With Bonnie

the innocence is gone we were trying to capture it once again like a tiny bird but we give up
we have learned to accept
the past
the brokenness of the spirit that it handed

we drink some more of that light beer and then we begin to lose what we keep on hiding and thinking somehow we promise we must keep on moving on with our lives no denial

all acceptances of those still closed windows that we tomorrow must open

time is short and it shrinks us but no matter how small we have become we are still what we were once yes, the basics of what we are still undefeated
and indefatigable....

RIC S. BASTASA
Dipolog Boulevard

he walks there when the sun is about to set when the setting happens he sits on one of the benches he spends hours there watching something that fades to surrender itself in the most beautiful silence of a feeling. When it is dark and one star begins to appear in the sky, he begins to talk to himself. Now the lonely chain is are two of them now in a conversation because those stars in the heavens are too distant, mute, and even if beautiful
have remained to be so indifferent
until it begins to rain and that is the only touch he has felt. It is cold.
Now he trembles, but not running away to take the shelter where everyone is hiding in the comfort of the arms of the mob.

RIC S. BASTASA
Direct From Orlando

at the balcony
he smokes his cigar hiding from the view of his wife who is washing the dishes after we had dinner over stuffed squid and fish fillet

what i like is the rice i evaded the hide and seek of what i think is still harsh direct from Orlando

lost business unpaid mortgage
bad economy
they blame it on bad economy

as he smokes circles form above his head and from time to time he peeks at the side of the door seeing to it that no one sees him i am not that dumb to know that there is a big problem the reason why they are back i like the sauce

the chili that runs like a jagged knife inside my mouth

he is jobless
and does the laundry and kitchen works children had to quit school and start to work to pay the heater and the water snow is cold, it is colder now meanwhile i glanced at the sunset the balcony overlooks the bay of Dapitan once a hero and a white woman made love there we knew the ending

it was sad.
Direct To The Point

when the sun lights the grass there is no detour it likes it done directly like a candid shot of margarita

i like it that way too straight to my mouth sliding smoothly into my throat

there are no rocks that block my river
no 'on the other hand' or 'what ifs' that grow in my path

i like it when you tell me straight from the heart i like this pain that stabs me right my eyes not blinking

RIC S. BASTASA
Dirty Wishes

when the roads
get too busy
and traffic is hell when the room is full
and there is no
place for you
to stand

just wait, who knows someone may fall
and die
who knows some of them will faint
who knows a bomb
explodes
and gee
a blessing in disguise God forbids
you are not there

RIC S. BASTASA
Disappointment

My enemies triumph over me I am humiliated everyday Their lies are there and I am put to a loss They win
And they progress
As I lay here silent in all my disappointments Helpless
Weak
And dying,
And I ask my God why? What did the truth lose?
And why are the lies displayed as truths?
Why are my detractors laughing on my defeat?
What did you abandon me?
Why?

And then I go away bringing a bitter heart Alone, without you my God I know I cannot survive
But I have never felt your presence Never

Forgive me for telling you what I am feeling They are the only truths I have now My only comfort
My only guide and companion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Discern....

words are grasses
they cover the dead
and make us a green patch of plains and rise up for hills dressed for a beautiful gaze
of the sun

discern then for i make a lot of grass gardens
underneath
you keep on thinking what i must have buried guessing
about dead frogs and chickens and even bodies of lovers perhaps (but this is all murderous and too harsh for me, for i am as you know a man of peace and the law)

i have lots of grass gardens and discern from them the women that stand there and all those who love me from the beginning of my poem and the end of those plots and stories that i have long told you i am not that wicked and witches hate me

for all these
i have only love to offer and they all love me in return without even those gardens of grass those words that conceal
those that you have not understood and cannot kill

RIC S. BASTASA
Disciplined

like a disciplined cat he sits on the chair on a motionless scale staring at an empty
breakfast table
an empty cup
an empty bowl
on those empty hours

she expects him to say meow
but he didn’t

in an hour he left and tells the wind about it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Disconvolutions...

in bed the silence of my body waits for you
its mouth waters with hands hanging on the edge of a thermal blanket
the butt motionless to the moon spreading its legs to the dry earth waiting for the sun which comes with rain to all the flowers and grass coveting with pebbles in my palms you shall never be enough for my longing speechless to this spectacle with its silence spreading like an ocean to the horizon of endless galaxies moving through.

RIC S. BASTASA
Disguised As A Pauper

and so the prince to know the pulse of his place disguised himself as a pauper

it took him such a short time
to become a classic.

RIC S. BASTASA
Disgusting Changes Indeed

when i come back to my old hometown the creeks where we as children once fished are gone, trees replaced with tall buildings playgrounds turning into commercial districts markets into monotonous stalls they call it progress
i am saying goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
Disliking Anger

you are two people putting fire on your hair the two of you alone
i watch it
i cannot be the judge and take side
as you demand
the situation is tense something is twisted grilling on your heads the curtains catch fire
from your hair
and then the pandemonium spreads on the walls and ceiling the whole house is burning balls of fire from both of you
and so i go out running away
to save myself

that is the time how i start to dislike anger.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dispensable

you must know
that you are indispensable once when you outlive utility
they ask you to take a vacation
and tell you that they will inform you
in case the need arises that is how is it now why be so sincere when everyone is always at the submission of the usual dispensation.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dispensable...

in this house
dinner is served and those who live here can eat even without me...

i can hear the talks
the spoon and the fork in their chatter
the soup burps and
the knife pisses
off

no one calls for my name
and i am just there
watching

defining what is dispensable figuring out why is this so?

it is like a movie
when they do not mind me as they pass through my body

am i a ghost?
busted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Disregarding The Bed...

in going back to the tradition of my lowly fathers
to get some sleep
one sometimes must disregard the elitism of the bed and have the humble unity with the floors' embrace...

there will be no pillows except the softness of your conscience, there will be no blankets except your pure thoughts for the night
there will be no light except the glow of your soul the rest around you that keeps you warm and guides you to the entrance door of trance and sleep is the hope that the darkness of this world does not last forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Disrespect

that early morning i take a walk on the path beside a ricefield on the other side about ten meters away a man is spraying the ricefield with pesticides

the birds are too innocent for poison and begin to eat all the worms that fall from the leaves of riceplants i am breathing poison but the man on the other side does not really know what he is doing the air cannot complain, i could, i know, but i am too busy about a lot of things and thoughts the birds are feasting on the dead worms, and i left the place at once.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dissatisfied

Always dissatisfied with what one has,
The power of nothingness Engulfs
Whatever you also engulf Or take as a possession,

What comes into you Goes out of you and everything Goes in there only to Go out later,
There is nothing you can hold,
It is simply meant that way,
The flow
Life, birth, life, death, rebirth,
And then back to Nothingness

Unless you believe
In something Else
To cling to Like a moss to an old stone Albeit,
The stone rolls just the same
In an ancient flowing river

Then while here
We do not really know What happens

There are many stories
That the bird outside us Cannot yet sing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Distance

distance is good sometimes i remember standing on top of the hill fog covers me
and yet i still see the burning house on the plains remember the two pillars of Khayyam how they make a house that strong to hold a world above a roof of lime and beams?

we keep the reasons
of distances to make ourselves closer than the sea to its shore so from here i am northbound southbound please write me a letter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Distance Between Us

da distance between us is a beautiful landmark of mutual respect

when i sit alone savoring the essence of my silence you be the moon

when you speak your sorrow
to the sea
i shall be the beautiful corals
underneath

there is beauty in the wilderness of our existence
i am the desert and you shall be
the wind
in the extreme heat of my sands you shall be the purple flower at dawn

Ric S. Bastasa
Distance Cures

missing you
is like hell,
and that is
an understatement,

i am on fire
as i begin to think about you

i send you smoke and you do not answer

i am consumed
by this
loneliness

but like the mythical
fire
i rest upon my ash and shall soon assemble
all my molecules
to be man again
against the odds

RIC S. BASTASA
Distance Does Not Exist

to people with some questions in their minds
and to people who care to listen just plain talking without any vested interest for what i owe
and what you owe
to me

for us who keep on opening our hearts and keeping our fingers
busy with words
the ones that we choose not to hurt
but to elucidate
and
enlighten and make other people feel that this world is kind compassionate always ready to listen
and be heard

for us
a toast, we just made it

we abolished distances
and now
the rule
is this pure and simple intimacy

good thoughts and wishes of health
may the force be with us may distances shrink like raisins

RIC S. BASTASA
Distances

distance. ce.

what is the distance between your nose to my eyes?

it is the kiss that seals it.

what is the distance between
our silence for days?

it is the distance of longing.

what is the distance between these miles and miles of separation?

it is this knowing a little bit of ourselves that sews the torn pieces of cloth

i keep a little distance between my heart and my head.

i keep this distance between you and myself, you know why?

i want to see you more.
The farther you are, the more i can see you the more you can see me.

IT is the farthest star that we long much.

IT is the love that is gone that we want to recover.

IT is the broken heart that we want to mend.

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
It is this certain distance that makes us more human.

This longing. This pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Distances....

this distance shall seal the fate of those bridges the empty space
are cut arms
the chasms between our thoughts are sliced feet there are no more nails to scratch what pleasures are there
in this all broken arrangement

the words fall from the trees like poisoned leaves as i walk away like a thief you shall have the last laugh

when you are dead and there shall be peace
i shall come back
not to bury you with all the requisites of religious dignity
i am coming with my vultures and they shall have a feast on your rotten
belly.

RIC S. BASTASA
Distant

that guy over there that woman waiting in that corner that child sitting at the edge of this bus station that old man begging with a tin can on his right hand and a staff on his left that vendor shouting for you to buy a drink and a loaf of bread that silent man inside the bus looking nowhere that man that woman that child without you knowing their names eye are your brothers and sisters and our children eye are you too in their bodies and faces and arms and legs and hands and toes every part of each is a part of you so please be careful not to choose to hurt in word and in deed and even in thought because at the end of all these hurting and hurling you shall be hurt too

RIC S. BASTASA
Disturb Us O Lord

Disturb us O Lord.

Stir our spirit,
When we are too pleased with ourselves, When our dreams have become true because We dreamed too little.

When we have arrived in safety because We sailed too close to the shore.

When because of the abundance of things we possess we have lost our thirst for the water of life.

When having fallen in love with time We have ceased to dream of eternity.

Make us bold to venture out to the sea during a storm, So that losing sight of land
We shall find the stars.

Bishop Desmond Tutu

RIC S. BASTASA
Disturbance

fruit blender beside a clear glass of drinking water

open bulb
behind the kitchen
door

door bell rings
the child runs towards the middle
of the road

mother is turning on the stove

RIC S. BASTASA
Divided We Fall...

how splintered are
we
even in burials we quarrel,
we argue all about
nothing,
much ado about a flint,
more bickering,
until the enemy comes,
and we are so unprepared,
divided, i repeat,
divided, we all fell.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dizzy....

I listened to you and i understand that islands are islands unless a catastrophe happens like the way how continents are formed how ice melts
and how track disappear

but i cannot listen to you forever not believing anything that you are saying i have my back behind the wall and i am opening the door i am walking away and there is no hope for any stay i listen to myself but just like me listening to you how long can i listen to myself too?

what road to take? i do not really know and so this time, perhaps, any road will take me without being dizzy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do I Have Something To Eat?

you ask me if i have eaten it did not come to your mind if i have something to eat but i will not correct your question it is the most common question somehow that is being asked by the majority of those who do not really go deeper into the matter,

ask me now, how about the hungry children of Africa?
the children of the rebels in Syria?

where food is prohibited, where plants do not grow because of the war, please ask me that question.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do I Love You?

when you enter this room you will meet us

you look at our faces wearing different masks

when you smell us as though we are dogs

you will be confused we anticipated that

scents interchanged and manners well studied

each gesture is mastered switching hands

you try the way we sound listening carefully

we anticipated that too we have exchanged our tongues not to be outwitted you listen to the beatings of our heart you heard it, and perhaps now you have known the truth

RIC S. BASTASA
Do I Really Have To Say The Words?

hi there
do i really have to say the words

i love you

or do we only have to meet in a cool place
the one under the trees and the stars and kiss?

that is more than saying it
i suppose

RIC S. BASTASA
Do I Really Like Being Lonely?

here you are, a vortex, and i am a point just below the line that runs like a bridge
trying to connect us both
as though we are one kind of a connection: a telegraphic wire a letter between two lonely people or a chat
an email that has not been read for five days, here you are, saying lots of irreconcilable concepts: loneliness is a friend a company
and loneliness actually is likable like it is sort of a friend who keeps me company

you are telling me that loneliness is happiness:

are you sure? try going alone in a faraway island and strolling along its beach where a typhoon is raging no seagull, the waves gigantic the shore all crumpled the sands all noisy

the abandon, is this something that is a happy moment?

tell me, remember, the moment once, when your heart was broken and you are so lost you cannot even pick a piece.

loneliness is loneliness.
i am running away from it.
it is a void. i am avoiding it.
but here she comes.

and i am telling her,
i am incurable.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do No Ask Me Some Questions

do not ask me for answers to your questions for i do not have the answers do not ask me for reasons for i do not have the causes do not ask me for an explanation for i do not owe you do not believe me for i do not believe in myself do not have faith in me for what i have are doubts do not ask for any light

  from me
  for you have it yourself just see.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Also Attempt To Understand Me when i sent you flowers asking for forgiveness

when you forgave me
and then left you

when i wrote you letters and you wrote back and i did not answer them all when i did not tell you anymore where i was

when i come back
and keep myself enclosed in a dark room

do not attempt to understand me there is nothing with me anymore i am heartless i am loveless and i have long lost my life to the past the present eats me whole and the future waits no more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Answer Using A Rope

the one you talk with has many questions and you focus on his dimension trying to figure out what answers are desirable for as you know people love to hear answers that they expect

and so your question is:
what answers does this guy want to hear?

(do not figure out the truth he may not like it follow his questions like a river and you must put the fish that that river likes or just turtles

or just the messy mossy ones to make things cooler)

what you do is know more about him his past, his biases, his likes and dislikes and hence when the first question is asked answer right away,

the one that does not hurt
like his past,
the one that he likes most in the future the one that makes him happier or let us say, the one that makes his life more livable

(do not believe that misery seeks misery)

(haven't you heard that he attempted to cut his life last year?
we know that story,
his sins, his failures, and disappointments

do not answer using a rope
do not think like himself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Ask Me

do not ask
if on the darkness of the night
he will make you a star

do not also ask if he will make you the queen of the throne
of his dreams

do not ask
yourself
for you
know that
you have no
answer

do not
ask
the comets
they will just pass
at the blink
of your eye

do not
ask

confusion is deaf
and
blind

and i am
one of those that surround this big house

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Ask My Presence

Do not ask my presence Today or even tomorrow
The flowers
Bloom, the clouds and sun come
The sea is blue
The sea breezes blow Sunshines and grasses spread The birds sing
The fishes swim
The rains come & waves roll & sea caps foam

Even without me,
So do not ask for my presence
In all these matters That manage
Even without me
Without you
Or us,

They manage themselves
Well,
& good enough they fend for themselves and repair whatever is broken & heal whatever is injured or wounded,

so if you Walk with sadness, it does not really Matter,
the flowers along the way
still bloom
And blue clouds still drift by,

even if some Tears fall
From your eyes
And even if you die,
the sun still shines To another bluish sky.

Nature is automated, & to your uniqueness You are formatted.
That is the real difference, this randomness
Of feelings
This intentionality of what you wish what you Desire.
i have reasons for my absence a disappearance

this sense of hiding.........

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Ask The Questions....

some things
remain beautiful
because you
did not touch them

those that remain
mysterious
made your life meaningful

you know it well those that remain unknown
still have not hurt you

live as usual
eat the mandate
do not ask the questions
you will hate the answers

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Ask, Just Savor

Something magical is meant only to be seen and then be gone and then be just remembered with awe and pain it is not meant to be dissected like a frog separating muscle from bones and naming each part and lag and then naming it again apart from its connecting ligament and nerve ending somethings are simply meant to be enjoyed not to be really fully understood like the way you lick an ice cream not knowing who made it skim how it is really made what are its ingredients unsaid like the way you make love to me you do not measure the ecstasy as though it is a cup of honey you do not count the moans and the screams you do not even have to open your eyes or dream to know how pleasure penetrated your bones and fit into your emptiness like some stones that thing called joy

and
bliss and beans or soy something so beautiful is simply meant to be remembered like the rain or even to return there again and again not knowing what the consequences of pain let the pain come perhaps later for the meantime let's be better

as usual
let the role of regret be the one
who comes always late undone

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Attempt To Force Me To Eat

i cannot swallow any food i told you that i made a promise to my Lord,

must you force something that i cannot eat?
even a horse cannot be forced to do that

sorry, you got kicked.
ms....asshole....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Attempt To Understand Me

do not attempt to understand me
and tell me that this is this and this is what i have to do for i do not need a shrink or another philosopher they are all there inside the cabinet, locked and who knows dying, but i am not that so cruel, for i still let them live inside this void, and they still have the voices though faint and well, i say, they have their own time, but for the time being, i ask, that they must not attempt to unlock me like i am a door with switches, a wall with bolts, misplaced modifiers, incomplete clauses, do they know that when they attempt to understand me i die, like a meaning?

do they know that when the time comes for the riddle to be answered and correctly at that, i shall crumple like a paper sphinx?
there are those which are better be just themselves undissipated, disassemble, unconnected, dislodged, excreted, for in truth, i prefer this self to just be... unfolded, unfolding, it is more beautiful when not understood, its mystery so beautiful, like when you begin to explain a sunset when you put in the square of your hands the sunrise or the moon, that you contain inside the iris of your eye.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Be Afraid To Write The Worst Lines

poems are feelings,
logic need not be there but could be just instinct words flowing like a river following nothing but that which takes the curves
of least resistance

enjoy over there the view of the naked bathers those that dive and swim beneath the waters only to rise and show the beauty both outside and within

look at the trees lining on the banks of desire up there the clouds have tongues licking the shapely bodies of the skies

we reach the edge and we fall freely to the lowest level of our journey soon we will write about the impact of the fall the pains and the lowest ebbs of our lives

don't be afraid to write the worst lines for they speak the truth of what happened to each of us faithful to our craft and consistent to our conscripts we dance we dream we die

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
Do Not Be Ashamed Of The Language Of The Heart

do not hesitate to write down the letters and words your feelings your hurts and disappointments

do not mind what your friends say about why you are such a sad
creature looking for a nice garden to stay for a little while and sigh and breathe

this is your language now the language of the little child who laughs because that arrogant and gullible emperor has no clothes at all and his thing dangled along the paths of embarassment have you really understood the language of the heart?

the one that is not ashamed of vulnerability? the one that finds strength in weakness?

the one that speaks about the power of love amidst the hate and pain?

i have left some seeds and they are growing and becoming trees, and now you cannot but take the fruits and tell me that they are pulpy and sweet.
Do Not Be Concerned About These And Those....

We leave clouds,
mountains, stars, and grasses as they are

we do not worry much about where the wind is moving the sea has its own story to tell and breathes with its waves we leave everything as they are they know what they are doing and now, are you not happier than before?

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Be Cruel On This Day...

on the day of the hearts why should you let that heart weep?

do not be cruel, give the heart what is due for its day

give it a dose of happy pills, add more blood to its vessels, put more moisture to its skin color it by all means with the brightness of twenty roses, red as red, bright as the light of two happy mornings,

give it its night too,
not as dark as that evil thought gray perhaps, a little confusion will do, but if you can, make that evening romantic, a little teasing finger, lips that search and find, longings satisfied, if only illusions, then why not?

give it a drink it deserves, vodka or tequila, make it dance, a little tip for tipsy, raise its hands, in surrender, curl it in bed, and have it be filled with love,

a meat cooked well and filled with gravy,
a salad of fresh lettuce and tomatoes garnished with Italy,

red wine, red cherry, satisfy the tongue
and the nose,
more fire in the body, rest the arms,
close those eyes,
live those dreams.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Be Deceived

Know my friend that that woman knows how to make stories they sound so true & real they come to you
You think it is all about me

Do not be deceived

These lies are made
For some benefit

Now you shall think genuine thoughts be authentic

And not so trusting be city-like in your dispositions

Towering and strong Like a skyscraper.

believing no taxis below taking them lightly as running toys

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Be Like A Stagnant Pond

don’t be like a stagnant pond. the fish dies there and the moss rots and the air carries the stink to your nostrils always like change

make change
let changes occur

a change for the better or if not just keep on changing your shape your form your odor your scent
your mind

don’t freeze like ice instead be like air or smoke or a sigh
or a breath

keep flowing with the ways of this universe and those that surround you let them know that they cannot put you inside a cage inside a mold and then they will call you an it.

they will fix you a name and then you become so stuffed like a toy, a doll, something so dull and boring keep yourself open like
a flower blooming fully on its last day

do not close
do not ever think that you die

keep the present
it is yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Be My Shadow....

since that is how a shadow works
then there is nothing surprising with being imitated

i own this shadow
and i can kill it with
light

when you want to be my shadow
there are two things:

i am flattered by you liking me but on the other hand i pity you since you cannot and you can never be me i always go away and there you are without a body.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Be Restless

because it rains all day and what you hear is just the pitter &patter
of the rain
along the pavements beside the house
you become so restless for not having done the list of the day

there is no reason for the hurry actually, there is so much more to be done inside the labyrinths of the heart have the joy of contemplation as you take your mental recreation think again of her and you think about the rain stopping when the flowers start to bloom again

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Be Too Close, I May Explode.

grill me
oh i do not mind,
i know what grilling is,
many years ago,

push me, pull me,
slam me, well, i do not mind i know how it was to be
a door,

how it was to have a father slamming everything that would have been good for all of us ignore me, forget me, abandon me, i am not worried at all,

i know what snores are in the middle of those nights
i know how it can be spelled even backwards if you want, threaten me, ambush me, as that lady once boasts, we have all these for breakfasts kill me, oh, it will just be once and instant not much feelings shall be spent and wasted

befriend me, and be close to me these are my real fears,

love me

i do not know anymore
what soft pillows are,
how warm blankets can be how cold nights can be so lonely how rains seem not to stop with a litany of its monotonous drips how cold can it be without you?

how does it feel to have a train leave and i am at the station all alone by myself how beautiful can spring be?

how fragile still are butterfly wings?
how sonorous can the church bell toll?
how can this kiss close my eyes again?

do not be too close, i may explode.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Be Upset About A Past Love

do you feel rejected about your past lover? do not be upset, just remember and then smile as you remember his kiss and embraces and (you know better, what more) reminisce the sweet moments, and then carefully pluck out the bitter ones, like the way you choose the chaff from the grain, the rotten tomatoes from the healthy ones, the bad eggs, the speckled and spotted ones, select, that is your right, to choose and discard or keep, and for those that you do not need, those that you think still hurt you and destroy you, let all these things go exercise your power to select, and throw and vomit and delete, choose and be so choosy, just take what is necessary, just keep the happiness and throw sadness and loneliness away, take life, and live and be yourself, what else does we need really?

whatever it is, forget and forgive, bloom and zoom, grow and glow

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Believe What Your Friend Says, Think

Are you my friend? .............
Messenger of good and evil?
Hmmm, ............Let me think You are stepping on my feet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Blame Me Later

I offer today
in my hands
a bud, a raw fruit,
a tendril,
a fledgling

all small, and dainty
young and hopeful

take them all
from me

and what is left
of me
are these empty
hands

tomorrow i will offer a hatchet
a scissor
and a knife

take them all
please

if you will not do not blame me
i will do what now i will.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Borrow Do Not Lend....

i've known a couple they check on us if we're ok

we offer dinners for four drinks for eight

the conversations are lively from history to philosophy later, they ask if we can help about money on these difficult times the Chinese know too well to keep the good relationship

do not borrow do not lend
that is basic

the relationship ended the Chinese know it too well.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Bother Anymore

every part of you tightens and you feel choked air has become a precious element
rare in your
hold,

the process continues and you grasp for reason where there is none

finally the fruit comes ripe
luscious
sweet

and fallen
and you who grew the tree from where the fruit comes

do not bother.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Complain

there are more spaces for praise more blanks to fill for grace an empty seat is there for you to sit a lonely park for you to cheer with your steps

the late bus meets you and you must be there as its passenger north bound to places where you heart has not been your room in the office waits for your presence the buzzing sound of the air conditioner has been a long hypnotic friend lulling you to think the table waits for your arms to rest for your hands to start the magic of work you figure out what meaning is there in all these inanimate friends of yours you smile, there are too many....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Complicate Love

No perfume
Only your breath
No questions ask

Your name, sex, gender Marital status

We just kiss
Make love
Zipless
Then you go
And I go

Your way my way
No questions no answers

Just a memory to tell the next generation A lecture on how to love and what love is Zipless, buttonless, beltless, bottomless Borderless, timeless, colorless,

To love without measure,
There is simply no measure

Love is openness love is naked To face the lover naked Is the best truth each can offer

Your way my way
Your way of loving me
My way of loving you

And we tell the next generation About a love without a name without a gender Without a marital status Without shame without rules

Without sin without law Because love is openness only to feelings That we must tell to the next generation

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Cry

tears, and screams.
what for?

salt of the earth? drum sounds of another mourning for the death of hope?

be silent.
tears do not say that they can help.
screams are not incantations for the gods to hear us.

be silent.
like a rock.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Disown The Promising Ones for soon they will come back like shooting stars in the heavens like fireworks exploding in a hundred mixture of colors lights, and louder sounds of thunder with so much pomp and pop of power so magical and so beautiful and so ephemeral

and there you are are the bridge watching on such a grand night looking up and still wondering how come you fathered such a beauty? and how come you have become an alien and so lonely?

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Enter

there is the yellow line where you cannot enter be glad, you are not there. it is someone's body that is the subject of their thorough scrutiny and not mine or yours and they use some circles and

x's and lines and arrows pointing to who the culprit possibly could be. Do not enter. It is very private.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Envy The Beauty That Pain Gives On The Mumbler

there is nothing to be envious about that man who has always something to say in any place at anytime do not think that he is one species of genius in another evolution created by shrinking time you have mistaken him for gold he is just another stone baked by many suns if you look at him closely there are scars on his wrists cracks on his lips leaks on his skin there is light but it is more of the hues of a sunset i know you have seen something beautiful but it is not all, it is just a spot between his chin

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Envy The Moon

do not envy the moon
the lady of the night adored by the stars on a red carpet by spurts of meteors

we have taken a closer look it has ugly craters too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Envy The Stars

distant
they are too beautiful glittering
like diamonds

too near it can gobble you whole and burn you

do not envy the stars
their destiny is only death and they become blackholes

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Expect Much In Life

to be happy
only be ready with what life is giving you do not demand much do not look for what is not there take what is available love when love is there when nothing seems to go right forget it settle, stay, be still nothing to argue we thrive only with what is given us nothing to grab for there is always a space reserved for us in the parking lot for free
if there is no food why not enjoy the air and the sea and the birds in the air and the scenery of mountains wearing snow caps and the river singing a song for you
mind you
you are loved and cared for like the sparrows without specific address in the sky
take care
good luck
enjoy the supply of life while it lasts

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Expect Too Much

This is it, this is poetry Written by this man
He is looking by his window
To the world like a little boy Still wondering, scribbling Some figures of man and Superman, putting them wings Imagining that soon they will fly,
Do not expect too much
I myself do not have wings I do not promise you any I am simply writing the view The green ricefields I do not Have rice for you to cook I do Not have water for you to drink I have these words, only you Can convert them to steamed Rice to cakes to bacons to ham To fish to sea to clouds to sun Or simply coffee for you to sip When you still hunger for breakfast.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Fade Away

my friend, do not ever fade away to us, who are here, loving you, you shall forever glow not in the sky

so fickle to the movement of the spinning circle revolving in limitless space my friend to our hearts you shall  shine forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Fall Aldo Gabbay Krass

YOUR destiny is written.
You shall rise to the heights of your success In the world of Poetry

They must know that it is already written And there is no way
But to rise

Take the wings of the Sphinx Rise Aldo
Do not fall

Let the question remain unanswered.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Fear Death

why do you fear death?

did you not notice that everyday
we always experience
death?

do not pretend that you are alive
look at yourself in the mirror
and see
the ghost in you
at most they tell you
to love yourself
and you
believe them

ey too are dead
and they have forgotten
said fact

ey are simply preoccupied
with their parties, and drinking, and laughing

coping up mechanisms
and societal norms
and preconditionings
and lies

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Fear Fear

friends, do not fear fear, find it, it exists for a purpose, try blinking, look inside, there is city there of shadows, of black lines and blunt curves, and flower of thorns and there is no free ride there, the paths are winding, and there are no directions, no one tells you where to go, and what to do, everyone there just keeps on doing and doing and going, no words, there is that world of fear, and in there it is a friendly fear, a teacher, makes you numb and strong, and thinking, and when you reach the heart of that city, you are no longer a fool, not a coward anymore, ask me, i live there,

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Fear Those Who Kill Matter

they're all cliche.

fear those who kill the spirit. they're the real metaphors.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Fear....

LAST night you panicked about the tsunami news

that is real
you have seen the video on the news at BBC

THIS thing does not shake me
i have trust on the earth where we live
daily

The earth will always be a big thing and we are its miniatures My body is like the earth and the Earth is my body

Thus when the earth shakes it is because it is feverish on a certain infection its sea must have been polluted with nuclear waste

Thus when the earth moves its belly and creates the tsunami
it is because it is bathing
to cleanse itself from accumulated dirt and other extraneous destructive matters

Or it is only doing this on a routinized basis
self-checking and counter-checking
its Own State of Affairs
The EARTH
has a mind and body of
its own

It heals itself too Every moment
in Every movement

The Law of Nature
Removes what destroys Itself
It vomits what poisons It It excludes what pains it It expels what it does not Need

That is basic

Everything happens
because it is Good

Last night
You wrap your whole body with that thick blanket You hardly had a good breathing

I know
You never really had that nice sleep
that I am always enjoying

You bet

Now wake up early Open the Windows of your House Witness the unfolding of Light before your very eyes How nature dresses and undresses itself INTO such a beauty

Charming and magical
Its poise
The way how light bends and Walks the isles and Leaves and Fades and Comes back again IN another set of hues
and freshness of its
air
her hairs caressing
all of us
here

The rising sun
the glamorous sea
The white dots of seagulls dotting the sky blue sea
The boats afloat and the children jumping for their usual dives and baths

On a little ponderous moment like this Feel the love that this Earth has given us for free Daily
Because after it has cleansed itself It becomes another scented Lady or Mother or Lover or Friend

Ready to embrace you Again To show how lovely you too has become This
In all Mutuality.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Figure Out What I Mean

if monkeys
could only write
own a camera
and learn how to shoot and post their pictures

we humans
shall have no history no albums of
our own

our language unspoken
our tradition lost

and monkeys can have more hope
to live in peace and harmony
with the trees and vines

oh we have written
a lot
and made pictures and movies
and books and buildings

how we have monkeyed
history
our language our very survival

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Fool Me Again

to choose between the sweetest lie
and the bitterest
truth,

the way you
evaded me
i guess
you have chosen the former.

I have found my heart finally in the desert of time i let it dry there and do not wish to take it back with me, no one keeps something bitter

you see

do not attempt to fool me again you do not know what a heartless man can do.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Forget The Sad Times

don't forget the sad times make an album
of your tears
and fears
give them the captions
and tell yourself

i have learned, i have grown, i will learn some more, i am strong, i want to be strong some more,
i have fallen, i am rising, so do not forget the harsh times the sad moments, recall them, relish them learn, learn

surely, you will miss them again your teachers leaving you some marks

A plusses
some more A+, sir and ma'am

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Fret

there is nothing actually wrong with going back to the arms of the past upon whose embrace we feel so young
again,

you wish upon that old star which should not have fallen which should have stayed brighter on that old sky hanging

but this is not so. There are fallings and failings.
Fangs of reverses. The venom of a snake hurt.

what happens is when you are finally there everyone is not there anymore.
Not even yourself.

Do not fret. . Raise your hand.
your wings and fly...

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Give Poetry A Bad Name

The frogs should not have croaked a lot when everyone is fast asleep Aristophanes after all is right These frogs should not live like the Clouds.
On the other hand
THe Philosophers should cling to being Philosophers
Stay with the embrace of Reason and Not Embrace the Strong Arms of Emotions For Emotions belong to nothing but the Realm of Poetry
aH! Lysistrata shall now wage her own War against the Men Claiming as she does
Her sole right to Eroticism

Honestly, i still love to hear the frogs croaking
In the Pond
I for the meantime loves to Keep The Philosophers dwell in their Own Cloud Point of view.

If Lysistrata obliges
One night with Her would be enough

After which, I shall work hard to Give Poetry its Own Right Name.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Have To Fathom It Like Some Kind Of Philosophy

dthis afternoon
i like the way the wind blows the leaves of the ipil-ipil tree

the way they shower your hair with its tiny leaves the way you do not mind at all as your sorrow shows how sorrow becomes transformed in this view

one beautiful shower of blessings from the sky

we do not have to fathom it like some kind of philosophy with wind as metaphor we are diffused and yet so strong

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Heed My Advice

temperatures rise
feelings do not have specific barometers emotions are volcanoes you know exactly when you erupt like one your hands are raging storms setting aside every structure breaking rules
and you are king for
the day
the rest of those years you lurk in the nook regretting

go, do not listen, the cell is waiting
go, leave me alone
i know what it is
i am my own friend

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Inhale Me

do not inhale me
for i am not a pure, clean air filtered free from viruses

instead just watch me
do not say any word
for i am just a blank wall i would have like it more like a jar emptied of its contents

but i was born a stone and i dwell in my own silence numb and always unhurt as i have learned to love it

you see there is no pain but there is no happiness either.

and that is fair enough for me now, look the moss is growing all around me but i will not stop it even with invaders i let them be

i am a stone and i am silent i am hard and i do not move anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Jump Into Conclusion

do not jump into a very bad conclusion that the one who leaves and who shall be considered as the poem

called 'Good riddance'
is my wife
or my concubine
or my common-law-wife or my girlfriend
or my housemaid,

as i am telling you,
she can be any woman of this world she can be any wife of any husband who knows the many versions of what a departure can be

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Just Sit There

we are here in this theater of life choose your mask if you want one take it if you need it be in whatever form you like ugly? you look ugly? cover it and then look just fine beautiful? are you beautiful? show it in this theater of life we are called upon to be ourselves in whatever shape we take cool? you want to be cool? then be cool.
shy? you want to be shy? then be shy.

now, let us take the dance floor do not refuse my last offer let us dance because the music is playing and the band had taken a week for the rehearsing hold my hand, follow my steps and do not look down look at me and follow me use the instinct of life we shall now dance the last dance of life the best dance ever the sweetest ever

now that i have you and you are beside me let me guide you to the zest of life to the best of what life has to offer this is the last dance

please do not be shy
please do not die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Let The Music Stop

it will not. It is not the guitar neither the lyre, it can't stop, it is this soul always singing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Listen....

beware about what you have been watching,

a love story, a romance by the window in Venice love by the river
love in the sky
love of swans and tweeting kissing beaks,

do not overthink, do not believe at once, for coming back into your room, into your
life,

they are all far your truths, your sad truth, your love unrequited.

beware if the yelping dog, the coy cat, the patient spider, beware of everything that excites

your heart
that tells you to yield and surrender that tells you that everything in love is fair that love is everlasting that joy is forever,

back into your room light is dim, full moon is harsh, they say, blue is old news, beware, beware, focus, focus on your self,

lavish on your own personal truths, just live your life, do not listen.

Do Not Lock Yourself In The Room Of Your Past are you sad and confused, my dear rat, afraid of the cat?

do not lock yourself in the room of your past go up and see the world of men and women
join their party and run and dance under their feet feel the world and see the world from the top of the roof see the glittering lights where the full moon sails if you must, talk to yourself and paint some bright colors to the figments of your imagination believe, have faith, and always be kind....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Look At Me Using Your Eyes Of Pity

please, if you let me live for tomorrow
do not look at me using your eyes of pity
i may melt like plastic in the fire of your arrogance

look at me with dignity treat me like a self that is strong and unbeaten

let me rise
like a sun hidden from the mountains let me be myself rising from my own ruins let me be a bird repairing its own broken wings do not even touch me inspire me with the fire of your longings

help me bring in the winds of ambition push me up
stir me with my own
fuel
so i may again be a rocket piercing
my own skies

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Look Back I Said

do not be afraid when he comes you do not owe him there are no questions you do not take anything there is nothing to carry except yourself
it will be quick and so light like a hush
donot say anything
just go
it is that easy
just go
leave everything and do not look back for you may find the images buried in the sands of the past
a picture of your youth the sad face
the frail arms
the vehemence within the hungry sockets
dried long deprived of the tarry tears

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Look Down.....

we both climb the mountain
that day
there was one thing
which father
wanted us to remember

not to look down
lest we fall.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Look For The Form

do not look for the form
or the shape of your longing there are no forms but only hunger and thirst parched lips looking for the source of the water empty hands looking for the the sand to slip through the fingers questions that look for the answers flowing water looking for its place to rest steady ponds

bright lights of the moon and the shadow
watching the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
she tells me again she agrees that everything here is unintentional pure imaginings of the mind when the snow is so thick and going outside is painful to the skin no matter how you rub your fingers and hands against your tummy, this happens usually in the morning, flickers at dawn, and does not subside keeps on dictating, hushing, whispering words that the right brain fails to understand, the left does, and takes note of every letter, like sketches of a face that you have for once never seen anyway, until the bacon gets crisp, and the white jasmine rice is ready on the wooden table, one begins to share and ponder, hot coffee, and loneliness anxieties that do not know is already inside your room
last night

do not look for understanding the purpose precisely is that this is a very confidential matter ciphers of existence that only the self can tell perhaps before the timely rowing to the path of God do not look for the period it is not found here

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Look That Far Enough

in looking for truth you do not have to travel that far enough the seven seas

and their continents
the high heavens
the deepest core

the truth is right there inside your heart the love you are seeking the enlightenment is just right there in the middle of your mind do not travel that far to look for the person you love i am just right here

writing a poem for you am i too near to be seen and to be touched by you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Lose The Spontaneity dance, it is found there the moment a body hears the music

there is no need to order the hands they will curl and become tendrils of the vines
let go
what is inside you
you do not have to think what to do no one tells you what you are blends with the scent and color
of this universe
close your eyes and
fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Make It Too Long

i may lose
breath.
do not make it
too long.
some are gasping
dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Mind The Awards...

it was never a wise man's character to display his wares on his forehead like the way you display your plaque or something sort of an award of excellence for your works in art, or in sociology it is not simply acceptable in my world where awards do not matter where money does not exist where gold is stone where diamonds are nothing but sands Where fame is just a whisper of the wind where fortunes are but pouring rain where houses are not made of wood or stone come, let us play in the shores of life let us climb its mountains and reach its peaks where we touch eternity where we join the gods where we are finally divine where we are but the purity of our souls come, let us drink the wines of holiness come, where we become so empty where we join the oceans of space where we become nothing because finally we are with all of them where we are lost because we have become one with the VASTNESS OF THE Universe...

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Mind The Volume, I Do Not Mind It At All Too...

do not criticize me for the quantity i do not mind, it is the most normal thing that happens in the ordinariness of my
life,

true, we are weighed, we are not counted, because the numbers do not matter at all i know that perfectly but do not worry, do not make it a problem at all because it is the most normal even that happens in the most ordinary day of my life, i, too long, for the One, the God of Quality, the One that perhaps the whole of this galaxy shall seek and worship and hence cannot ever forget but honestly, what is the use of the One when you do not allow me to speak my Mind anymore?

what is the use of those streams of consciousness
if in the last years of my life i shall offer you only a single line must it sound to be the best epitaph of the Tutankhamen Tomb?

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Misinterpret My Silence

when we are in bed
after making love
i always feast on my own silence not wanting to share it with you and you begin to ask if i am a still there if i am lost somewhere in the thoughts
of another
and you touch my face for my eyes to see you
the whole of you naked still and desirable and i have to tell you again not to misinterpret my silence as i still think of the 'fireworks' when you begin to smile
when you kiss me again
despite.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Mistake Me For A Writer

i am but just a plain breather
my work is to breathe my only qualification is my nostril.
do not mistake me as a poet
i am but a another lonely man
filling a wall with
words.
violet are red roses are red
others rhyme
i don't.
do not mistake
a poem
as a nursery rhyme
to a man it is another rum
and so Rumi is just
one

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Read This Poem

do not ever read this poem this poem is containing a virus and once you read it you get infected by it, do not continue reading this stop at this point.... here....

-nothing follows-

sorry, but you are already infected by this poem

the cure however is there, read it back and when you arrive at the last word

thank yourself, you are worthy of the title gullible like the author....(ha ha ha)

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Read This Poem...

this poem is sad it is the picture of a 12-year old boy with bruises on his head blood oozes from his nose his lips are swollen like a bloated fish poisoned on the river his eyes look nowhere like a light house turned off do not read this poem when you are far away from your home you may remember one of your sons....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Rest On The Laurels Of Your Head

we get old
the laurels mean no more they become irritants to the lines in our forehead we finally let go
of these decors
we take the chances of negating fame
embracing the privacy of the walk
beside the hills feeling the stones on our bare feet touching the winds and listening to its roars wading to the waters getting wet
and then take the much missed plunge

we wish we are gone somewhere to places
where no one finds us where we look at no shadows we stare
at the sunset
and then find the silence of the coming darkness

perhaps the moon shall be full perhaps the stars will gather in magnificence perhaps we can love again loneliness like the grass that we cannot uproot amidst the daisies

they become part of us they become us
in love and tolerance Do Not Reveal Everything

my love
do not reveal everything

keep the mystery
be just a shadow under the moon on a clear night

be just the star behind some coverings of clouds do not be too near me neither too far

let there be a little distance between us let us keep it that way unrevealed not fully undressed a little silk cloth on your breasts and your groins oh my, i am filled with desire you're sexier when concealed desirable as ever like the way i caress the tips of your hair

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Say Goodbye

i have not met you
and then you tell me that you are suffering.
you keep it a secret to your family and then you cannot help it but tell them, the pain must be known someone still does not know who you really are and we keep that secret and i shall not reveal it it is my respect to you and your pain i have offered some prayers, and then perhaps i shall offer flowers

i have not seen you in pain i have always imagined you smiling and taking time with the flowers in the park

how many years? it was not that long to really forget and simply dismiss what we shared as nothing but a brief encounter and without any significance at all i have not lost you because i will not lose you

we decide what we forget and remember.

do not say goodbye, there is no such thing between friends.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Sleep Yet...

do not sleep yet
for i am sad and like all the sad people of this world i need a little time to keep me company

talk
talk to me
whatever that be i may listen and look at every word that you utter as some butterflies or bees or flowers on the foot of those green hills breasts of some mountains thighs of some river banks soft hands of the creeks bellies of the valleys

i want to imagine the anatomy of nature like they are all naked women and you shall think of me as the lusting sun licking all those tasting everyone

do not sleep yet
i need to look at your words as flowers for now my intentions are honest pure as gold without the bones of adulteration

soft and yellow shaped by the gentleness of your hands

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Stay On The Deepest Part Of The River

lest you get drowned or be taken hostage by the monster

join with us
friends of the shallow waters we are wading
and laughing and filtering colors
on the prism

we are kids on the shallow waters our chins on the stone our minds still dreaming

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Stop

i completely agree that when you're well read you need not be

number one,

i agree, about bias and prejudice about some crooked explanations about the way how the rules are changed from time to time without prior notice to fit what is it that must be liked we are bound by the greatness of the past we reject the casualness of the present you must remember and must always remember

'know thyself''

and that is greatness enough continue what your heart is telling you

'do not stop! ! '

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Talk About A Poem

a poem can speak for itself

in less words with so much
meaning

do not define a poem
it is alive and it defines itself
even in a syllable

it does not need a punctuation
it can look queer
with a question mark
or a bombastic with an exclamation
point

do not make it
preach it encompasses
religion

speak about yourself
you are more interesting and alive

and the poem
would be glad enough
to listen

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Talk About A Rope

this is my request please do not ever talk about any rope
in this house where someone is recently hanged.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Tarry, You Must Keep On Writing the ideas come and they do not wait. they enter your door and they do not knock.

they leave without any permission from your house. they have colored wings and they simply fly away upon their liking.

they are so beautiful and deep and glistening.
enlightening and you miss them now you sit there, speechless on the blankness of your world. why did you not write when they were here beautifully dancing and singing?

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Tell Me That There Is Something Poetic About The Rain Today shoo.

please honey,
do not tell me
that there is something poetic about the rain today it is heavy.

cats and dogs.
and hotdogs
and syrup pancakes and cold coffee,

gosh.

i am engrossed with the law.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Think

for in truth
according to the Buddhist monk to write a poem
you do not think you just watch and then you begin to write go outside the enclosures
lay on the grass
see beyond the fists of your hand break the shell that walls the beauty inside you you write what you see they all think for you

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Think....

do not think
again, please do not think for it is your thinking that makes you dumb makes you feel like a nit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Threaten Me With Fire My Love

do not threaten me with the fire of your body my love for i am a man born of fire and shall die of fire i eat fire, i bathe in fire, i swim in the deepest part of fire

i like to burn in the fire that you start from your flicker, from the flints of your gaze i like to see this hearth, this warmth, this conflagration you with me burning like hell

do not threaten me with the fire of your thighs for i eat fire, my body is fire, it is alive with its heat my sweat are the smokes of fire my end is the char that stays beside your legs and tomorrow morning when i finally die when i am put off by your power you shall find me as burnt residues
beneath your feet

i am the offering of love to life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Trust Time

Time talks to you and you enjoy it for a while

Time hugs you
and then to your surprise

you have wrinkles
and white hairs

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Utter A Word

despite the sleepiness the fingers grapple for syllables for a mumbojumbo or an abracadabra towards another state of being when your logical mind finds rest where another kind of mind speaks the tongues of images in sleep.

full orange moon wades in deep blue horizon of the sea. the waves dance with the wind but in this stupor there is no sound.

like a silent movie you watch in a distance with your eyes closed.

this is the numbness of reason like children playing in the park layered with leaves fallen from trees. This is the state of falseness, an abracadabra, another abracadabra and then the door opens for you.

do not utter a word. do not choose a syllable. let the good in us flow in a state of our helplessness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Utter My Name It Is Never Despair whatever happens my dear to this lovely spill blame not me or no other what is despair? each moment a pair

each sweetness a pear each hour a glorious galore just us
yes just us in this search for hands and bosom this feeling of what love could really be away from home from the madness of this crowd from the humdrum of everyone

going then is the place of our nakedness now call me honest
do not utter my name
it is never despair.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Utter, Keep Going.
	here is nothing
to discuss. we get what we see.
we agreed that everything should be simplified.
do not let me
suffer with equivocation. this is our black and white
relationship.
nothing gray nothing
in between nothing about staying
and yet going
nothing about loving and not keeping
nothing about promising spit the verbs
i do not believe in having to enter into descriptions.
do not utter.
keep going.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Wear A Sad Face

i know sometimes just like the seasons: this winter and summer and spring and fall, we change, we are governed by the laws of change no doubt, but we can also choose what we want to be

i choose not to wear a sad face i choose happiness
i choose bliss, i choose joy, i choose to be the happy child of God, his joyful man, his smiling servant there are sad moments but there is no reason to be sad

this free will wills to be happy, and no one, not even the devil that lurks in the sad corners of sorrows can take that disposition away from us

for in truth
the true child of God is the happy one because he is loved and every moment he is well taken cared of more than the sparrows whose only abundance is found in the feathers whose only home
is the nest
whose only treasure
are the clouds

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Wish To Understand

do not wish to understand a poem much as you wish to understand feelings feelings are not meant to be digested and understood

you see them and so let your hands be soft you feel them and so let your heart be kind compassion, this fruit of the commonness of

of our time together, love may not take root and there shall be no tree between us i least expect joy. If it comes it is welcome. let is speak to me and i shall listen but i am the worshiper of pain and in mourning i shall compose my songs

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Worry

do not worry
the seed of love will just find its way to grow and upon itself take its journey towards bliss for like any seed on earth it always finds itself to the glorious face of the sun and shakes its hands and be a part of its embrace

from it a tree comes out some fruits that ripen

for you to simply pick up and eat
and without any question

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Worry About Your Style....

for soon the style they believe in goes out of the window and breaks itself on the glassy ground

do not worry
everything is in a flux there is nothing that lasts
forever

listen, your inner self has a voice you do not see where its mouth is but it is speaking

listen carefully, speak to the rhythm of its uniqueness take pride in its cadence rock yourself
put them all to a written piece if you have these strong fingers write it on the stone-faced slab rest for a while and let history be your noble judge....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Worry Chester

try again next time connect the puzzle and form another chance to get finally the picture
of life

it is normal life is a mess, things do not fit easily expectations are not met wishes always stick on the rainbow
dreams do not always come ture

try again
maybe next time the pieces fit and you may finally see the final picture
of success

do not worry Chester
there is always a right season for everyone
a time for you

a luck all yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Worry My Dear

try having a new attitude imitate the wind
listen
be a soul floating
not because you are too light but because you have become so aware
do not forget the fly
on the dung
hovering and trying to satisfy its hunger

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not Yet Eat The Icing Of The Cake...

a delayed
gratification is actually the bud
of maturity.

restraint is the humus that makes the best peony....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do Not........

do not tell me
anymore about love for i have become an unbeliever

in an ocean of lies the boat of truth
has no anchor
no port

tell me not about
happiness
in those mountains
the lonely people
are buried

do not tell me how
to live
so many had long wished to die....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do The Explaining For Me

In love
I lose my reason
I become
An illusion
I can’t figure Out what to do
Where to go
I will let Someone
Do the explaining
For me

RIC S. BASTASA
Do They Play Basketball In Heaven?

your friend who died two days ago finally gave you the answer yes, they play basketball in heaven in a heavenly basketball court and all games there are set tomorrow you shall be playing with them.

RIC S. BASTASA
finally
after all those years
that you say you miss me and that I miss you
too
we have arrived here
and we talk
only to find out that in one issue
we differ.

one looks at the stars
the other looks at mud.

one looks at the past the other looks at the future.

both are present.
both are living in the same hour.

but just because we have different visions now, do we have to part?

RIC S. BASTASA
Do What You Are Supposed To Do

do what you are supposed to do
no matter what
like is not the key in understanding true duty finish the work

and do it well like mama's best daughter

and then submit all that you have to offer when this burden is over go back to your room and write

those unfinished lines of the best poems
of your life

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Have That Third Eye? ....

perhaps i have a third eye. perhaps, because i cannot see this eye perhaps, because this eye sees for me and it sees my two other eyes, it swears, perhaps, i must be gifted having this third eye, seeing what happens next, and giving me the details, and literally, giving me the shivers, someone dies in an accident, someone's decapitating someone, another one hangs himself, the other one weeps someone jumps ship and leaves no note on the board, on the other side of the view, at the left portion of this eyesight, someone delivers a baby and sleeps, someone watches and cries, tears of joy, i must know, someone dives in the pool at noon, and refreshes oneself, looking at the trees beside, sometimes, time stands still, and the white butterfly freezes,

for one thing, this third eye does not have a mouth and does not warn me if i get crazy over nothing. yes, i fall, and sometimes, i do not rise, i wallow in mud and sometimes, i just lay hopeless in there, as they see it i am the most lousy buffalo in town, and the third eye sees this, but it has no comment, neither does it smile or frown.

the muted truth, that is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Know What They Are Doing?

slowly
they burn
little things
at night
to build a fire

you know what they are really doing?

they are gathering
little things
to keep the fire
alive

and they keep telling stories
to keep themselves
intact.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Know Why You Are Unhappy?

you have always been unhappy feeling unwanted, despised and hurt yes, your ego is hurt you believe that this ego is hurt that this ego exists

try believing there is none believe that there is no such word as

ego

try believing there is no you at all let us see who gets the feeling of being unwanted despised or hurt

there is none now you see? 99% percent of what you do is for yourself

yourself
your ego and you are so unhappy, because in truth there is no you
there is no ego

and all you did was for no one else that is what emptiness is all about precisely, that is what unhappiness is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Know?

do you know Manny that when she (you know who) writes a poem she also wears her shades & for what reason that is something that we all have to figure out but i remember something about what she once said while we were walking at the park her ratiocination

of wearing shades

she looks at people in detail without them knowing that she is looking in short, Manny, she goes out but she never lets others in just like in her life, it has always been this one-way drive she pops out and then she closes everything her mouth shut

and her heart closed tightly and coldly
like the sweet honey (i meant the sweet person that she is or was)

stiff and hardened
in the freezer
frozen

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Like My Verse?

yes, the diary, of some events though too personal about some rifts between brothers, my brother and i, am so patient, till the end, though i am older and mild mannered always seeking to understand the gap of ten years, practically he belonging to another strange generation while i keep my mouth shut my mind open to him: as i reduce him to prose and elevate him further to poetry, and i am glad you like this poetry of brothers reaching a conciliation like some great movies about brothers karamazov and their anna kareninas or yes, yes, lady chatterly's or emma you never know grace, unlike tina she is not a brown dog but the brown prima donna of my life love lost and brothers fighting over some little wars of their hearts do not attempt to understand this is purely a private matter of the bastasa family, rocky maribujoc, roots of molave trees, some streams of consciousness always coming to my mind a diary, a poem, a story that i want to tell maybe tomorrow, or may be not at all, it will cost me a lot of pain some unbearable lightness of my being sadness, and hidden laughters stored for another year like wine, well more of like, vinegar actually oh, wasting your time, as i do waste mine, on words maybe wisdom of saying what we want to say in our minds like a river flowing and we intend to just watch and not take the plunge the plunge, the way we get wet, the way our bodies fit with wet clothes all together revealing some hidden private parts that other may find too flimsy well, as i am telling you, this is my poetry, a flow, a river running steadily to the deep blue sea

and yes,

shall we take the necessary plunge just to check if we really know how to swim how to survive and not just write poetry hoping that they may believe our quest for sincerity and then let me still ask if you like my verse, a stream of unconsciousness still coping up

what to do
with our messy lives

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Miss Me?

i do not want to be biased about how you feel about me but i do feel it you miss me. Our first date was a mess.

we like to do it.
but we did not. and now we go crazy thinking why did we not do it but gracious, do you know what she said in SEX AND THE CITY?

sex on a first date is bad luck.
guess we must thank ourselves.

at least i had it with someone else.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Really Find It Hard To Write A Poem?

let me tell you
it is not hard to write the poems in your mind ey are already there in the first place inside your heart always wanting to be written all you need is just your way of waking your fingers in deep sleep let them be let them write the words at the tip of your fingers let the words speak for themselves do not intervene

let them be
let the emotions dance like the wind let the thoughts trickle like the rain
let them be follow the river as it winds along the banks of your feelings then watch how all the waters of your self fall like a water fall.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Really Like A Free Meal?

you like free meals
you like free meals
you like free meals
they taste so well
they taste so well
they taste so well
nothing is bitter
nothing is bitter
nothing is bitter
everything is sweet
everything is sweet
everything is sweet

why do you like a free meal?
why do you like a free meal?
why do you like a free meal?
you save much for yourself.
you save much for yourself.
you save much for yourself.
why do you save much and not
why do you save much and not
why do you save much and not
spend anything for yourself?
spend anything for yourself?
spend anything for yourself?
you are into the vice of misery.
you are into the vice of misery.
you are into the vice of misery.
You are the miser storing much
You are the miser storing much
You are the miser storing much
and still beg for more
and still beg for more
and still beg for more
hence the free meal.
hence the free meal.
hence the free meal.

there is no such thing as a free meal
there is no such thing as a free meal
there is no such thing as a free meal
if you only know the real score
if you only know the real score
if you only know the real score
you could not have eaten that free meal on the table.
you could not have eaten that free meal on the table.
you could not have eaten that free meal on the table.
everyday you eat this unnecessary gratitude
everyday you eat this unnecessary gratitude
everyday you eat this unnecessary gratitude tomorrow you shall pay it
tomorrow you shall pay it
tomorrow you shall pay it

with what? your dignity,
with what? your dignity,
with what? your dignity,
even your whole life.
even your whole life.
even your whole life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Really Like What You Like?

do you need an army to let them know that you are here?
do you need company in that walk of your solitude?
do you need a friend to listen to the sighs of your soul?
do you need a child to continue the footsteps of your future?
do you need a wife to comfort you in the place where you are rested?
do you need a government to get what you want in this world? do you want to be ruled?
do you need a cup to drink your water in the river?
do you need a horse to complete the journey that you have started?
do you need a follower of your thoughts?
do you really need yourself to understand finally who you are?
do you need life to understand what death is?
do you really like what you like?

i am not asking you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Really Want To Know Me?

if you know what a river is perhaps you will know a man i am a man and you will say to the river i have known a man and i have known a river there is no way that i will never you in full you shall brag to the clouds in your mind

ey they drift
there is no permanence permanence is an illusion
a river
a cloud
water
air

and this is where we must start educating air

if you step upon my heart and tell me i have know everything about you and you must not change and that is what you are

you are wrong
for i am a river that encircles a mountain but i know a path but the paths do not know me and so i keep on moving changing paths and what path was it that you have seen yesterday is no longer the path now you must accept you have never known a river because a river is man and man is not forever man he is a river that always escapes the hold of your mind that frame that has walls without even the possibility of another opening for stars....

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Remember Failures?

Are you asking me? Yes, I remember my failures Lots and lots of failures in my life, I look back again and remember these failures And my God, how deeply was I hurt, I cried on some of them,
When friends left when love was lost When relatives did not give support When I was all alone

When I finally rise again And recovered from the past, when I learned And met success again

When I have become stronger Rising from every fall, recovering from every failure

I always remember them with fondness The hurts diminishing, the blames now faint

As the new sound of success reverberates Claiming new friendships and new approaches

And the comfort that life is like that Success and failure? A seesaw that we really have to play.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Remember?

The river where we bathed As children
Innocent in our nudities
The fish we caught
The fire we made
When we all ate together As friends as neighbors
So close like bees in the hive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You See My Truths? .....

naked shall you see me dressed in twilight

do you see the truth in me now?
you are wrong
for my thoughts are still covered thickly and each letter still tries to conceal what my words shall try to speak

everyday i write the words the poems that you read do you claim to see the truths in me now?
you are wrong again
for what i am still belongs to those unspoken

and in my silence i shower you with its emptiness
do you see my truths now?
you are wrong again
my silence does not speak everything there is still the hush of the wind the chimes of wood and metal this silence runs and does not stop and you flag it
and talk to it

do you hear my truths? do you see them now?
you are wrong again
for i have buried all of them in their niches when you open each you will find no door when you go over the windows you will see what truths might still be there those dried petals of a rose those letters with words faded like sunsets those broken pieces of porcelain and glass those jigsaw puzzles still unfilled

those chains with missing links those buttons that do not fit

do you see my truths now?
i agree, on those dusts, they have now become yours visible to the caution of
your heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
Do You Still Cry? .....

you cried on your first pain and tell everyone about it, sharing the pain, thinking that with others knowing it and saying 'our sympathies' can lessen the weight of the burden and ease the pain, i tell you, it is a matter of getting to know pain familiarizing the drama of the heart, scrutinizing every neuron of the emotion getting to know life, and eventually preparing for every inch and step towards death for that is our destination, annihilation, but something higher than that can comfort you, birds fly higher so they can see from certain height the smallness of lamentations, we travel fast, and not arriving somewhere but we gain something as we tread upon the pebbles that make the mountains stumble there is no use for cries, they are for the novices, we must swallow that bitterness and from its effects shall we live.

RIC S. BASTASA
Doctor's Warnings

half of the mango.
that is all you can eat and you do not like it you take the whole mango

and swallow.

a cup of rice.
hardheaded, you
take a bowl.

no coke. you bought a bottle
and drink it all.

no sugar. no salt.
you are determined
to have some
and some more.

take death then
the doctor says

and you say
with all dignity:

thank you.
i love it.

RIC S. BASTASA
we both love the bear Dodoy and me, in that party tendered by a retiree,

he claims we both do the same thing
love other women, our wives bitter
and rebellious about our trips to lust, and his wife is still furious, stupid enough not to forget and forgive,
i pity them in this tragedy of fidelity, and the poverty of open mindedness,

'you were caught and you admit' that is the biggest mistake,
'look at me, never caught and never in the state of admission or confession, for to do so would be an utter insult to her status, beauty and education, and money, '

we drink more glasses, no one is drunk but somehow, despite the manageability of this kind of conversation, he pours out every regret, every hope short of realistic expectations,

'how much does a divorce cost? '
'i do not really know'

meanwhile the music is getting romantic, couples dance and cheeks touch like magnets to iron feelings, 'oh my wife is not here with me. She is into other equally important matters, and so i look around and there i see another lonely woman, waiting to be danced' and i pick her from the crowd of lonely women and we dance and dance so sweetly and then these unhappy people begin to talk. 'there are many forms of love' i remember my philosophy teacher once lectured, it is like a fan, love for wife love for the other woman, love for a friend, love for an old mother, love for art, love for music,

'so why should you limit me to only one stupid love?' i close my eyes, put my cheek to hers, and kiss her.

it is a lovely night not fit for nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Does A Sunset Feel What Sunrise Is?

sooner we get attuned to this strange creature as guilt.

it hurts for a while but each night when all the black birds roost in that island we get the sleep we need.

tomorrow when we wake up we do not speak we fathom the silence of our night outbursts we get attuned to this, the kiss and hugs of cold bodies and making love of robots in that warm room.

we get attuned and we do not care anymore what is happening what they taught us what was wrong and what was right in that place where they do not have names anymore.

we get attuned to this and your kiss is not that significant as mine is like yours.
we understand when we meet and then we simply part ways.

you to your love and mine to my love too.
different destinations, each carrying the lightness of our new beings.

so goodbye for now. Keep the secret of love.
Guilt is a stranger. Sin is a literary thing.

here we live life without a book. without a master plan. we just live the way we feel.
ot even this. does a sunset feel what sunrise is?

RIC S. BASTASA
Does God Really Hear Our Prayers?

i guess so because God is everywhere and my prayers are everywhere too

everywhere goes with everywhere every ear goes with every prayer and why should God Not hear our prayer?

RIC S. BASTASA
Does God Weep On The Misfortunes Of Man?

the flood that kills a thousand men and women and children the massive mud that buried
them
looking like frozen statues the lava, the tidal waves that hit the islands the virus without cure

the disease
the plague

the consumption of so much number numbing
to our sense of dignity the rape that fathers commit to their daughters and even sons
the mothers that kill the fetus to save their faces from shame what more?

let us count the miseries of men & women and children the fear that grip them the chaos that always comes in wars
in famine in nuclear hatred of one country
to another

the hunger, many more deaths to come the exploding population too many neglected children and too many to ignore the rich & advantaged caring less the insignificance of the voices of those who speak their valid concerns

does God really weep?
does God really care?
does God signify any sign of presence of any divine intervention?

did he say we are free?
did he say he respects this freedom that we take pride in that we won from the snake in that paradise?

is God here?
do you really hear him weeping?

i want to hear my God i want to hear Him speak i want Him, forgive me, to weep, but i have not seen the tears i have not heard any sound of weeping...

i guess, if he is here, if he is here at all,
i will still respect, and worship & love Him, even if i hear Him laughing....

for what am i? i am just his slave, his servant, though he may call Me
brother,
or his beloved son

to Him, i can be, even
nothing
one that he can always put in Hell and set aside as a useless spark in the vast space that he owns one that he can also save by His Mercy and Grace....

i know, but i will always wait for His answers, even from the passing wind i am always thirsty and asking Does Not Know How To Live Anymore

There is a door inside us which we do not want to open there is a room there where the ceiling has no star we want to keep that door closed forever we wish we cannot enter that room anymore yet it is simply not possible if i won't go in there something inside me dies and something outside myself does not know how to live anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Does She Like The Suntan Or The Sunflower?

i have offended a nice woman today
aldo,
i need to know what flowers will she ask to get an apology?

will it be sunflowers as big as a hat?
or suntan with the tiny little suns?

please ask her Aldo ask her for me

i love her and i do not want to lose her

RIC S. BASTASA
Dog Stay Dog Stay

Dog stay and dog stays Dog run and dog runs Dog stand and dog stands

Dog catch and dog catches Dog roll and dog rolls Dog lick and dog licks Dog hug and dog hugs

You are indeed a liberated woman
I don’t have to ask if that dog is your man.

RIC S. BASTASA
Doggerel

He who dies with the most beautiful poem written is, nonetheless, still dead.

Be thankful still for writing those doggerel,

Man, you are still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dogs / Gods

a torment
is a mentor

a show
can be hows

a dog
can be a god

with a little manipulation
of words

me
can be
'em

thaw can be what

got to be tog

a door
a hinge

without the sea
a clock is just a lock

with two
i
&
i

a dot is but an an idiot.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dogs In The House

since we love the dogs who sleep with us
now we must feast
with all the fleas

we feel the rhythm
of their barks
we mark our lives
with dog ears

we master the art of stand and sit and roll and get that ball!

now scratch my back
as i scratch yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Doing Duties Despite The Heavy Heart

usually two people detesting each other's presence
do not speak
conversations are painful
sometimes it is forced out of civility poor man he opens his hands from his fists turning into fragile fingers but then the ants of the world in their usual silence demonstrate to you
an interdependence
the empire must live
do your duty lest others still soft
and weak
shall die

RIC S. BASTASA
Doing Fine

the passion of doing a thing that you love

it loves you too
feeds that passion with fuel a conflagration

a fusion of fire and desire you ask me why i am doing it

because i love you

not because you love me
because i love you

things love you in return the barks of trees that you touch give the best leaves the most colorful flowers

the scent
pervading the air of the night

RIC S. BASTASA
Doing Justice To Love?

justice is an eternal search
a way of balancing that does not balance
at all, or sometimes
maybe
when you feel you are near it
and yet it becomes too slippery
to your touch

this morning i like to tell you that i like to do justice
to love

that i have not rendered what is due it
that i am a kind of a shortcoming
a big lapse
a slippery hand that slips away from your
body

i like to tell that you i am unjust
not having loved you so well
or even if i want to i simply can't you are running with time you are short of it

and at the last hour of the rush you tell me that it is time to leave and that something
shall be done

you kiss my forehead
not my lips
you tell me 'i love you'
and then
you say 'bye'

i have not told you anything because i know that you are returning because i know that i am
not

or must i contrive about new choices
that there are many ways of loving you

that there comes a time when the moon is full and we are together under its light and we say that despite everything those lapses and shortcomings we keep on that hold

we love each other no matter what even if we do not love even if we feel nothing
even if we are deprived of any emotion
even if the shallowest feeling does not touch
us with its fingers again the fingers of a child
unborn.
Doing The Things That I Do Not Like To Do

i am inside this system.
this cell. there are instructions.
no refusal. just plain moving on not stopping. move.

i want to get out. i can't.
i am doing the things that i do not like doing anymore.
i am lost. i am stressed out.

peristalsis.

RIC S. BASTASA
Doing The Ultimate Sin

in doing the ultimate sin of the flesh
God watches in the patience of one who understands how is it to be human
to be frail
and to be repetitive of
of the same sin
over and over again

God understands.
Man always repeats himself like history

in statue silence
conscience stabs

but how careless is man, unafraid of the consequences to the gates of hell with a band, the multitudes march

oh! you are saved, how lonely could you be?

one? two? three?
yes, not four.

RIC S. BASTASA
Doko Kara Kimashita Ka?

&lt;/&gt;we were seated closer
there was silence
of the white cherry blossoms
feeling like i too was snow
we kissed and we did not
ask
where do we come from
anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Dolphins Poem

one survives this way to every line written to every word chosen
so well, like

a dolphin to his finesse
after a show
there is always a fish.

RIC S. BASTASA
Domain Of The Heart

he says that the domain of the heart is different there is no east, west, north and south

there is only this breadth
and depth
those touched by its hands embraced and kept and so unwilling
to forget

to let go and die
treasures long buried and cherished
by the rhythm of its beats

RIC S. BASTASA
Domestic Help

in California she fills in for some emptiness of another white man's home away from her country and kids and kin as the snow falls freely on the roof of an American house layers and layers of cold snow heaping through her eyes as tears begin to fall on her cheeks to the floor

she has to pay her bills she has to write her emails and then the old man says it is time for his meal and medicine

she rushes to his room, wipes her tears
and she appears before him on that wry smile of the brown domestic helper.

RIC S. BASTASA
Domestic Helper, Singapore Bound

a woman is leaving for singapore

back there to resume her work as nanny

late hours again before she sleeps

she waits for her flight
at dawn

outside the glass wall that separates her from the country

there are no more people the atmosphere is that of a dormitory after a semester break she opens her i-phone and watches

her hand with a cotton wiping her baby's mouth spilling milk from her nipple

RIC S. BASTASA
Domestic Violence Against The Woman

With her persistent love she looked into The scattered colors of her is Happy to lose herself in the complicated Sound of the ending of the day. Curious She read carefully the meaning of his verse Composed in red letters of his blood.
It was not the common red, it was something Else, it was more than love, in fact it could Be death, that dissipating color spun like Fine fibers of her destiny. For the quiverings She spent her time in delays and ambivalence, Lacking the strength to walk out from this Path of betrayal, she gazed upon it, just waiting236And staring at the patterns of his violence, They asked her, out of concern, to finally Step out, but she didn’t like a moth she Circled the fire of his insanities She prayed for the light. She called upon The powers of the gods to change him.
It was too late, the fire burned the wings Of the insistent moth. And there she lies Dead, totally wrecked and abandoned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Domesticated

for you have been sheltered the whole of your life you have become the model of domestication
the one with a sense of home that sense of a comfortable zone you have become a coward unable to feel the roughness of the world unable to accept its delineations deviant world, bending and bending to the commands of the few the dictates of greed the insanity of power you have become a very entertaining dog knowing very well the tricks disabled to the call of the wilderness the sharpness of your pangs the smell of danger the beauty of war, that law of predator and prey the survival of the fittest.
you have become a stuffed toy.
dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Domingo Sa Buntag

mikanaog kitang duha paingon sa suba sa Kantara

linaw ang panahon
walay kisaw ang hangin madungog nato ang
awit sa tukmo
duyog sa sulog sa
suba
paingon sa bukana

gihubo nato ang atong mga sapot unya kay lagi kita man lang duha dinhing dapita

mipauraray ka sa dakong bato
unya ako miduyog kanimo duyog sa awit sa suba sa awit sa mga tukmo og tikarol

gisugdan usab nato
ang awit sa atong
gugma.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don Juan

don juan rides on his horse morning noon and nighttime he is looking for happiness and you are there waiting and another one

and another one
and another one

what a party of friends.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don Not Be Confused

it is not the body
that we laundry
it is not the body
but the soul
that we purify
it is not the body
that you can prepare like washed dishes for your next dinner
it is not the print on the paper
but the thought
it is the dream and not the sleep
it is the grasp of the
the divine
not the hold of something bovine.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don’t Lose Hope. Nothing Is Permanent

Are you down today? Don’t just sit there and worry all day. Rise from where you fall and do something, don’t just sit there. Try some more. There will be some other ways. Nothing is Permanent. Luck is for everyone. There is always a sun for You to shine, your season will come and bring you what You need, what you dream, what you wish, what is best for you Don’t just sit There, stand and be firm and do something. There is a season For everyone, your lucky day has yet to come, so don’t just Sit there and be eaten by the mouths of worry, or be bitten By the fangs of anxiety. Your day will come, your lucky star Will shine, so don’t just sit there. Tonight, look at the falling Star and make your wish again. Nothing is permanent, Everything is temporary, even the happiness and the fortunes That your enemies now enjoy.

From your fall you shall rise. From your fall you shall learn.

RIC S. BASTASA
IN America, you cannot hide your brown skin and everything in you, Mr. Filipino connotes what it takes to be humiliated and discriminated but you go beyond all these in the name of the mighty green paper god, the dollar i know you know even without the essences of a metaphor you can endure all the discrimination and the humiliation for such lowly job as errand boy or whatever euphemism you may use there like a sanitation engineer for a garbage collector

but now there is a little change as you emphatically try to hide in the monotone of your voice like a sleepy sea breeze you got laid off due to that bad economy creeping up like a black worm on the American white beer belly a sucker, what do you call that really?

yes a leech, son of leeches, those crabs on the tin pail, like what our corrupt politicians feed us in our country (where do we really have to go?

Dubai? again?)
you can endure them all, at whatever cost, to support a wife and daughter here, but now what you cannot endure is this jobless state now, you must go home, who knows, this is nothing but a blessing in disguise.

i must be lucky somehow, i do not need much and i do not need to be in America to be human myself or be in Dubai to at least survive on temporary basis

know what, we're on the same boat but to appease my thirst and hunger and an array of disappointments i try my hands on poetry, this if you may call it, poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Donna....

by now you must have noticed that this is just a game of words rearranging letters to make a sound polishing them for more attraction and you must shake your head in disbelief thinking that some of these words have changed the directions of lives or perhaps lightened the loads or fueled the jets

on the other hand
i must agree with you
this game
i must confess is designed to appease
the kids
who are not loved by their parents

somehow
there are effects unexpected but these i honestly did not know but which you must have experienced

well, i love this game and i shall play it all over again did you find some codes in there?

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T Ask

don't say the word
do not ask me and do not remind me

'it's too early' because you know what i will say and i have said this over and over again till the last day of my life

'it isn't' dusk is not early to wait for a brighter day is worth, 'what do you say? '

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T Be A Loser

don't think that much and lurk in there like a curl of your lock of hair

spread, move, giggle, take the zest of life like you're a bird flying on its new wings taking the somersault

the best dive
the exhibition of its power of flight

don't be a loser
say yes to life and grab every light in this darkness

wake up
open your eyes and see the opportunities waiting for you

right in your own backyard asking for your name

it will not be long
the sun did not promise

but it will always come and shine for each and everyone

RIC S. BASTASA
Don't Be A Wallflower

the night is
cold
and so are the
walls

if you keep on being that you soon will freeze
like a Popsicle

try being the wine glass
enjoy
the clicking
to such a good health

taste their lips
do not mind
being drunk

keep this matter
clear
enjoy the night
do not be stuck
on the walls of your
past

keep the caution
somehow
on this fragility
and clarity
do not break yourself and fall as shatters
of glass
on the floor
Don't Be Everyone

don't be everyone
there's so much of them and you are too small to contain them all

you don't have even to be somebody

or just be anybody
as plain and simple as you can be

you cannot also be everybody
there are so many of them already and so few to be your idols

just be yourself and i be own myself
just be my someone and i become that somebody.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don't Cry

when everyone leaves for somewhere else and for something for someone other than you
give in,

don't look forward to something illusive
root yourself to the weight of your feet look down
the most important part of the soles of your feet

hold the sands of your imperfections watch them all slip away and then just savor the emptiness left behind
by the trails of mercies.

RIC S. BASTASA
lady, don't dare me to share my naked body.
i have a web cam but i won't open it.
i am resting because i am tired i want to sleep naked on my bed and for you to dare me is an insult to love.

shall i hurt you with the indifference of my flesh? lady, with due respect, i do not share my body to a woman who dares me to get naked in front of a web cam that knows nothing about the poetry of love, about the nuances of gentleness, about the loneliness of a whisper.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T Ever Think That I Write Good Poems For You

all these are but exercises
like a morning walk at the oval
of the university

i am a man with no ambition for the nobel prize in literature

you're funny
come to think of it
what i write
are not poems

not pieces
for a poetry contest

these are scribblings of a trying-hard

expressions of my day
away from the usual routine of the hammering days
black robes
and frozen faces

do not be offended if i misspell some
words
no harm intended

i do not edit
my work neither will i ask your kindness to do it for me

it is like this:
i put on some notes
for the day
random thoughts
nothing schemed
no arrangements
nothing planned
pure streams of consciousness
my fingers follow
and press the letters on this screen

and some by their misjudgments
say: what a poem!

i don't even know what they mean.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T Get Infected

go away now.
You may get infected with my yawn.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T Look Back! Don'T Look Back!

the instructions are clear like white silk on my skin but what if i really have to look back to pain and feel it the way she felt it with my own incorrigibilities what i i really looked back will i turn into salt like the way Lot's wife disobeyed the orders from heaven?

and what if i turn into salt?
do i have the sighs of the water?

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T Make It Long

yes, very short.
do not prolong the agony of waiting. a queue
a line, a traffic jam,
a pile of folders,
horns, an hour
more. your poem
to read tonight.

RIC S. BASTASA
WATCHING this one alone, for how can i ever share this private moment with
myself,
makes my heart beat
like a nose flute
singing
my blood boils like a rice wine fresh from the coconut tree gathered by the expert hands of the native,
there is extreme happiness in this alone-ness that four hours i watch and speak nothing it is only i who understands what is this
and why
the hours pass like people in the mall
i stand and wait
and watch and savor what i am seeing my eyes do not tire
my hands press for more waiting for the arrow and the red line boldly running from my fingertips

what i love
can never make me exhausted what i long for makes me live some more i worship
the none worshiper
i know someone that i love that does not know me and will never be interested in me

a long time ago
i write about this
and this time
after all those years
i watch and write
the same
theme

not all of you will be interested
some of you already passed away
and perhaps in the other world
finally understands
speaking now
only to my dreams of the murky river where all the fish are grasping for breaths

there is no sun here air is less but with what i see
daily
i am more
inspired to live

RIC S. BASTASA
you don't have to prolong my agony
of waiting and staring at the stars
i give up i am leaving what for my dear?
i only have your name
you are never here
i heard your voice
nothing but a
very faint whisper

a hush in the bush
a blush a crush
a bristle of a brush

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T Read

don't read
my lips you will find something that you like to feel don't read the lips
of a man
who wants to say

please, don't read my lips, you know what i mean.

don't.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don't Really Try

Just wait
learn from juan
just keep on waiting the ripe guava is just there in the offing
don’t sweat
it is there already keep your mouth open your heart too
it falls right at you because it's for you
just wait
and then after that long wait taste it it is very very sweet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T Rush

to enjoy the walk
don't rush your steps

savor the view of a beautiful morning

what is there?
do not infuse thoughts on what is there

this is the world
and this is your first time to see and feel the falling of the leaf

the first ray of the
sun
that today touches
your hair

RIC S. BASTASA
Don't Take Matters Seriously, ...This Is Just A Game That We All Play

do not be that serious poetry is not

serious about you in fact it leaves you where you are now alone, feeling rotten, dropped potato, cut flower, vase with a mosquito for another disease, so, why not be a hanky-pansy, dancing under the sun with nothing on, and when people think that you are crazy and pour much attention, then that is the price you get for being this poetess, unadmired for seriousness, unrewarded for so much effort,

all the candles burn themselves at night, and then nothing is left.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don't Worry

if you fail now
don't worry
try next time

if you are excluded
don't worry
soon the right season shall come

if you are down and out
don't worry
try again
there is always another chance
another time

if you fall this time
or if you fall again and again
don't worry
try and try again until you make it next time

there is no limit
rise, rise, always rise from it
from where you have fallen

don't worry
there will always be a place for each everyone
under the sun

there is always a place to be happy
for you and for me

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T You Know?

despite my love for it writing also gets tiresome my seat is hot because i've been sitting for a long time
my head is on fire
my soul is burning
my heart is that burning bush that Moses watched those that see me here only see a body sitting on the cushioned gray computer chair, hands running like a child on the playground of keys as though everything is alright on the park

even without the teacher or the mother

it as though there is no problem but really there are in fact too many

the writing seemingly not diminishing
nothing solved
my ring finger actually aches.

RIC S. BASTASA
Don'T You Quit

boss,
don't you quit loving don't mind
the pain
i will take over this pumping
this beating

boss,
i am your heart
and stronger
than you think
when i was first shattered
and broken

boss,
look, i have no hands
look,
i heal myself
sooner than you think.

RIC S. BASTASA
Doodle

do not follow my thoughts for they do not have direction no place to go or rest they simply travel anywhere they want to searching for nothing at all they merely watch without even noting what is there to know free thoughts like birds flying on the horizon as though they know where home is know now my dear

that i am but a spectator of my own dreams sighing
and breathing and wondering all for its own sake no use no purpose just looking plainly on the sand feeling the heat and not looking for any cover

RIC S. BASTASA
Doomo Arigatoo Gozaimasu

even the gods
who give us
everything
wish that we should have known
how to say thank you very much...

RIC S. BASTASA
Door Haiku

noon when you arrive the crickets stopped singing she opens the door

RIC S. BASTASA
Dormant Days And Inactive Nights

even if there is no way for sleep to sleep in the couch in the bed
the body tries to find rest... no way, no way, a whisper is heard in the ear there is no way out
from here
there is this sound of despair the music of hopelessness
you who probably hear it
tonight
in these dormant hours think that the notes are divine
you who soundly lies on the sofa
of your drunken feats probably cannot distinguish what is not there
anymore

i am shattered
but there will be no pieces to piece
to make whole

i fly without wings like air
you cannot see what is real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dos Palmas

i eat my pizza
alone
in Dos Palmas

i am an island myself

this time
i leave some morsels
for the
bird nearby

it is glad when i finally stand
and leave

it, too, alone

RIC S. BASTASA
Double Edged

everything is double edged.
it all depends on us, what decision to make, what priorities everything is always an interpretation of something else a mover, an initiative a glass half full or half empty a prison of stars or mud depends on the vision and action, depression a source of poetry or your annihilation death, an end or a beginning?

RIC S. BASTASA
naked children
bathing under the rain
girls stamping their feet on the water scattered pleasures in the rising waters of the river the boys are at it again cliff jumping
there are no stones
the rain keeps on pouring the bamboo raft floats seeking a strap for home naked boys and girls they bathe in the river long ago there was no malice at all pure pleasure of angels the rain keeps pouring the waters still rising there is a flood of happiness at what price tonight?

RIC S. BASTASA
Double Faced Poet

double faced poet
like day and night

light and darkness,

the bad side of the other good side,

that is not what i
really mean,

it is not about good and/or evil, it is about how we do things:

poetry at night
and bread and butter during the day, something that makes the terror
of our creativity,

moon and sun
they may not come together but they must exist to make the whole narration of a complete event.

rushing myself to write a poem and then rethinking things over a decision between life and/or death liberty and/or prison, and so on and so forth, this time, as you read, it is poetry.

as i sign out, it will be another face of me.

it is something that you cannot read.
it is hidden by the clouds behind the sun and the moon and the stars.

it is something that disgusts me.
it is something that i do most of the time.
 apart from this poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
Double...

always, shall i be held at this hour, always, finishing what is composed by the dawns of my mind, always,
must i be a servant of the greatness of whispers, this and that, an image after another, hour after hour, and when the sun shines, the fingers of light caress my forehead, i shall stand and walk, under the trees, contemplating and so fulfilled.

RIC S. BASTASA
Double-Entendres

sometimes i get tired figuring out what you really mean for yesterday you said you love me and then we had a very warm night in bed with dim lights and soft music and then we curled and licked and we said we love our connection and we want this matter repeated sometime

when we have the time when we are free again

some other time.

RIC S. BASTASA
Doubt

that is the essence of our democracy
to doubt
to make everyone
suspect
as to his intentions to question
integrity
to lavish on criticism to experiment to find our if there are solutions
to the problems that we make

RIC S. BASTASA
Doubt

here she comes she is an empty space
a packet of air
she can be warm during the rainy days
she can be cold
during summer
she completes our day she is a compliment
to light
she is half of what
is there
a compassionate sister to sureness
of one's capacity to understand
she sits besides us when we are lost and want to find our original ways

i welcome her
she is....

RIC S. BASTASA
Doubters Of The Faith

Surely, i know, i am not alone on this, this field of doubt, this space where i float, where i do not know whether i shall land or i shall be on the darker depth of the clouds forever or i shall finally sink to the bottom of my confusion
or the bottomless
sunless moonless
sighs of my loneliness.

I doubt, I do not exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dovetail

a man and a woman
so in love

on a cold night like this

RIC S. BASTASA
Down

THERE is always hope when things go down when you sink and shrunk like a coin flip flopping to the depths of the storm
as one little boy watches yourself with pity

and perhaps awe because there is hope for those that go down the only tendency is always to go up for those that sink
the only hope is to rise for those that shrink they grow again on the interstices of little spaces beneath
and within
and for those that flip flop the only thing that you see is the beauty of that dance.

RIC S. BASTASA
Down To The Depths Of Oblivion....

the consequences are coming like a horde of wolves, there are no wolves, just a thought of the horde of wolves, the mind is a trickling rain, tricky creating a horde of wolves were there are none, just because it is suffering the pain of the dessert the moonless nights, the day of a thousand suns, the coldest air, the crazy whiteness of snow in the minds of the lonely people without the comfort of tents and dripping water.

it will not last, the end is inevitable.
the black horse has arrived without a rider.

the deep well has dried. Dreams of water come, and sights of mountain goats grazing on salt.

what we think we become. I think of you to become you.I lose myself in the water, flowing to the forgetting ocean, where i am no more other than a ripple, whirling, down to the depths of oblivion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Down To The Last Drip

Flings are like mushrooms that come only once a year and matching it with thunder,

flings happen because someone has become too irresistibly
enticing

you wish you do not like it you wish nothing
happens

oh. like the mushrooms flings you harvest
a delicacy and cook it yourself and then
eat with relish what the other wants to refuse

but you are equally irresistible and when these two forces meet they clash on whatever

they finish it off
down to the last drip

RIC S. BASTASA
Doyou Really Want To Hurt Me?

hey girl from faraway
do you really want to hurt me?

how?
and when? and why? i am just asking.

don't you want to know if i get hurt when you like to hurt me?

let me tell you girl,
you don't hurt me anymore let me ask you girl,

can you hurt a stone?

RIC S. BASTASA
Dr. Block....

before we begin
shall we pray dr. block?

never mind, he says God does not listen to me anyway

RIC S. BASTASA
Drama 102

Love can be a name as Beauty as Hope as Faith can be...,

But mama never named me that

I could have been Hope or Beast or Tears or Water

I could have been Aquarius or Robin or Batman or Hercules or just plain Jose or Juan

What made her decide to name me my name

i ask her that and she gazed to
the moon
and sighed and looked at me but did not answer me

I later knew but it was too late she died and i held her hand and i told her i knew but i did not mind it is a secret that she carried to her grave it is something that i keep but soon want to discard.

RIC S. BASTASA
Drama On The Golden Prince On The 7th Floor, Cebu City...

i am in a place away from home.
in my room there are two beds the curtains are double layered the thicker one i set aside leaving the silky one transparent so i can see vaguely the outline of the whole city as i am on top of this little world where i may have a holistic view of this present moment.

i need some definitions of what solitude is. It does not have the haunting qualities of the guilty mind.

when i sleep tonight i shall not make creases on the blanket.
i do not turn on the TV
I will be listening to the sound of the carpet on the floor when i walk barefooted and put my hands on the railing
of the window
watching the city glow the lights of the cars moving in different colors

other friends may make a call but i am turning my cellphone off really, really, there is no place to replace a home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Drama..................

gikaon mo
ang gidili nga
mansanas
sa hardin nga
dili imo

adan nabuhat na
ang tanan

eba gipangutana ka
kon
maayo ka bang
kauban niya
diha sa usa ka tintal

bitin karong nahuman na
ang pagbuhat
sa sala
unsa na ba usab
ang imong buhaton

ang Ginoo anaa
nagpangita gihapon kaninyo
kon asa na kamo
ug nganong hangtod
karon
nagpabilin kamong
mibati sa kaulaw
nga wala man unta
kana niya
gitanom diha
sa inyong mga
kasingkasing
andam na ang
entablado sa
lain lain natong
mga drama

pasigaa na ang
mga suga
biraha pataas
ang bagag nawong
nga kurtina

RIC S. BASTASA
singing and dancing
pointing to a you,
nobody, nobody but you,
crying and begging for love and then jumping for joy by reason of a newly found
self: independent and exploring, and happy to be alone, this,
that, and this and that,
pure dramatics guild.

inside the room
the study lamp lights till dawn writing a thesis of human affairs
setting aside emotions black and white in thinking ablaze in logical deductions this is his lady reason and dogma
that is the truth of his being and you have never known what twists await at the end of this deliberation.

poetry? side trip to the journey of life's boring kingdom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Draw Me A Map Of This World

lady draw me a map of this world
and tell me where the mountains and rivers are

draw me an island of soft grass
where a man and woman can rest
and make love

draw me a pond
a larger one where the orange goldfish
are fat where the swans can swim

draw me some clouds where the birds can fly

make them real
please

i need all of them
for me
to be real today.

RIC S. BASTASA
Draw Me That Line

There's a fine line between genius and insanity.

You have erased that line i need to draw that line again between

you and me

do not laugh at me
i am not a genius
as they once
laughed at Copernicus

i like you to laugh
at me
i have this acceptance as i laugh
at myself more often

i like Bozo the Clown

RIC S. BASTASA
Drawing

you draw a map
you make a landscape there are people and children and there are houses and trees you put the wind sketches of lines and shadows and shades and blots you pour this black ink to make a night
and then you make waves to form the birds flying away
you situate the fence upon an edge they all fall down upon an abyss you try to find
where you are

you are not there
and if somehow you are there you are but a dot
you have no heart
there is no space where you can put it there is no place where you can make it beat you do not hear it they say that is correct for you have long been dead you refute
you take the revenge
you hurt
you write more words than they can think of you tell them
this is poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
Drawing A River

when you draw a river
the river begins to draw also a fish
the fish shall sketch a moss
the moss
paints the missing
green

then you have what your river wants a place where you
want to ponder about a sky

come to think again
now draw
a very white sky
take a pen and a very wide paper....

RIC S. BASTASA
Drawing Feelings

today i am drawing my feelings and putting them some colors for you to clearly see what is the truth
running inside my veins

i am drawing threads and spider's webs inside a dark cave

i limited my choices of colors only to black and red blood and darkness and labyrinths and thread falling from a cliff and running wildly in all directions

RIC S. BASTASA
Dread

dread is such a nice word upon the mouth of someone whose life depends on the mere signing of a pen and upon a stroke his life
vanishes away
upon a mere scratch of a signature
dread is such a word that I write only on paper because saying it makes you panicky
I dread to do this but sooner a name
is written on paper by you my Master

if you must today
please write my nickname sort of final affection.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dream My Friend, You Must Dream

dream my friend without dreams we become too real and reality stinks like a stone without gloss without color

plain weight without sight the hardness
that Sisyphus
suffers unnecessarily

so my friend you must dream the world is too much for us to bear

dream we must to dare we have still time to spare without dreams we are nothing we are worse than nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
we like to be in their gossamer world leaves falling like the notes of this classical music riding with the wind and making this world so light and pleasing to the senses the ears that hear the dance of the flowers the eyes that see the breaths of the buds i have new feet i have new dreams now the dream of Olwen

i am dancing i am stretching my hands in praise to life! to eternity! to sweet memories!

RIC S. BASTASA
Dream Scape At Night When You Were Not Beside Me

Time melts for sure you have seen how Dali did it once tables float in air hairs become rain and eyes can be suns or moons in technicolor skies like sweeping brooms made of leafless branches of dead trees in all these there is one horrible limitation the soundless passing of images like fog and mist and smoke and breaths

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreaming

when fifteen i got more dreams than you,
until i got to be nineteen experiencing some little pains i sorted some dreams and threw them all away

i wanted to live in a new house there is no show of a shadow of a house i dreamed of horses that i can ride on mountainsides i got only goats

got realistic somehow i only take what i can take hold of at fifty i dream no more a practical man
i sit on a bench facing a road sip my coffee and watch the dusts left by a rushing car towards the city.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreaming About A Heavy Rain And Then Waking Up At 3 A.M.

I can tell the details of the sequence You dream that there was this heavy Downpour of rain somewhere in crowded Mong Kok, Hongkong and you ran For shelter and then stay put and Begin to use the power of this deep Silence of a river running within the Intricate linings of your veins.

You are in the middle of a strange crowd.
You keep looking where you come from
And you finally come to the conclusion That you are not lost

You dream of a heavy downpour
And you like being wet together With those that continue to walk.

You wake up so early you want to Say something and yet she is too tired Of you and she says

She still wants to get more sleep.
You get out of bed and look over the Glass window. It is dark and the street Is empty. You turn on the light on the Table creating a small island where In the middle of the light you put Your mind like a stranger talking About something that you like to Understand for once and you do not really like it.
This is where you first decide to write.
This was the beginning of it all and it is still here
With you.
Back to square one. Back to the first syllable.
Back to yourself. The letters of the keyboard Are as warm as you first once A long time ago, pressed the vowels.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreaming Of Pigeons

not on a Sunday but it was a Wednesday
the novena of the Mother of Perpetual Help when her hands are soft and cold,

as cold as the limestone wall of the Spanish Church the air is chilly for on that month the rain does not stop

two teenyboppers kneeling praying to make it through the uncertainties of youth

love that feeling when brushing the skin of the beloved makes the universe travel into light years with meteors exploding like the Fourth of July

I still remember this But now without so much flare.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreaming The Impossible...

i never stop dreaming
the impossible

in fact, it is the impossible that makes me

alive, the possible only reduces me to a dot, a sentence so dull because everything is clear we must look for what is missing, for they are not here yet not sleep and grapple with what are so boringly obvious, dreams on waking hours,

well thought of, in full details, what if, so well, try again, failures are projectiles.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreams

for things that we cannot have for people that we love but we cannot hug for the solutions of the problems that we have learned to set aside for a while for places we wish to go and yet can't take a step beside their shores for wounds to heal for things we have forgotten for our dead ancestors who wish to speak to us again for some precautions for our suppressed desires for those we bury while we are awake for our escape to fantasy for our imaginations to run wild chasing rainbows for our dead love ones for those who wish to be with us again for the floating experience on baby pink clouds marshmallow feelings and black forest cake sweetness for all these wishes

weary and weak, i close my eyes
and then
i welcome all my dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreams

it is the dreaming
it is what stopped that is killing you don't stop the coming of dreams welcome them
let them sit on your easy chair talk freely
yawn if you must it is nearer to it
that door that opens when you lose
that restraint of consciousness
when playful as any child you embrace every color every scent
every form of dreams that make you rest from too much
thinking

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreams Always Come True

slowly, slowly, always slowly seeds do grow to become flowers and caterpillars too
become butterflies

the flowers know all these and so they keep on blooming not losing hope for every winter spring is always not far behind i also know this and by heart my love, i am telling you our dreams will always come true we only have to wait we only have to keep the faith.

RIC S. BASTASA
to always have faith that dreams come true

to always have hope everything despite

to keep the light no matter how little inside the lines of my palm while the wind outside gets stronger and more cruel until the house is finally blown away until the land becomes empty until the tiny speck of moss starts to grow all over again on the gray side of the stone beside the pavement still not taken

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreams Of A Journey

white face of a woman failing hands
as frail as a man
wanting to give everything all for a white face of a woman sad face
scars of the heart
on some brutish
past
veiled and held by another hands now
love satisfied
music as forceful
as the waterfall
of love
and life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreams Of A Middle Aged Man

he is at an age where ambition wants to stop but doubts
this decision

his tired feet say it is time to just watch time come and go

his mind is still sharp on something a bird which he wants to catch a fence that he wants to jump a boundary that he wants to cross a river where he wants to sail a path to follow

but the bird is as restless as the air the fence is higher the boundary is well guarded and the river is flooding and the path had long been filled with tall grass where snakes reside

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreams On A Sunday Morning

it is always a happy day and dreams so many many dreams are here and they are all here for free.....

RIC S. BASTASA
not everything is written here it is perhaps said somewhere only you can hear even you secrets become revealed and you become uncomfortable, here not everything is said, it is written in secret pages of the mind remember those windows and those widows, there, sometimes what is said is not what is meant, paths are made by those ahead of us, at dead-ends we clear the trees and make our own paths and those gates and walls and pinnacles for not everything is said some, and these are the most important and even the most disturbing, or perhaps your essence, are, is, am, kept by the chambers of your heart. love, hate, regrets, hopes, dreams.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dreamy Skies.....

staying here is always a suppressed question of
'why am i here? why am i staying that long
enough? '

the answers are hidden always, deep down the chest and the more you breathe deeper like trying to remove some bones from the fields, the more things become hazy because you are afraid of stating the answer so that it can be heard.

there will be a ripe time for change, perhaps another year, that time you destroy a dream, you crash a house, you leave a body, you turn perhaps into smoke getting out of the chimney to be part of your dreamy sky....

the head is filled, the chest soon explodes, and there is no need for any imploring....

RIC S. BASTASA
Drift......

not the flutter of another cottony chopper

not the choice between a butter and a dragon

or a fly...it is when you want to rest

lay your body in a rattan hammock facing the sea

of endless blue

and when you arrive between that boundary of sleep and waking

that moment when you decide to take the leap to
sleep

and then finally get the
drift......

RIC S. BASTASA
Drifters

there is no motive here it is just like flying not even for the love of air i have no wish for wings neither do i have a feather i fly on the invisible wings of my thoughts drifting for the sake of nothing but just drifting because i am drifting and i do not stop it it could be that it is locating a drift a shore of the winds, an island of gusts, it is following a river of memories memories are drifters too and so are all the rest of these hanging wishes uncertainties like molecules making a room for their unseen randomness, the chaos that we never see because we are attuned to order to the stillness of wood and panel picture a bowl of fruits the mind has painted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Drifting

drift like a leaf carried by the flow of the river drift like a feather riding on the current of the wind drift like a vagabond on the alleys of the foreign land drift like boat without its rudder and engine drift like a space craft deep into the black hole of this universe there is this feeling of letting go and saying yes and not wanting to know.

RIC S. BASTASA
Drifting Away

and then the wandering cloud drifts away at first the dog on the side of the house howls like an old wolf from far away and then it gets tired too as it is not a plow but a bird with bones that break too on extreme pressure from the west winds

it is this sense of people leaving you like thoughts
emptying upon your mind as normal
as you get old too and then you begin to gladly give in yes, forget....

RIC S. BASTASA
Drifting Away...

two leaves falling on the surface of a very clear pond

there is no flood, no storm, no quake but it must be fate

perhaps putting it bluntly a misfortune all dead and numb yet still drifting away in some junctions one to the left and the other to the right and i who stands on the bridge seeking peace looks at it with all

ease....

RIC S. BASTASA
Drink It

do not be afraid of the dark there is sunshine inside you it is not the blackness that we fear it is something else that you already know too much light blinds you take some time let the tiny hands of the dark give you what is familiar soon when this is over your heart will know how to mix things rightly noontime and midnight twilight and dusk

what fades and what shines inside a glass
where dreams and reality collide

you are thirsty
drink it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Drinking Gasoline Near The Burning Fire

what we cannot do with fire touching it or we burn

cressing its hair or we feel the seeping pain of heat and sting we find a way of having to watch at a distance where we are safely satisfied the fire burns profusely that even when it is far from us our thoughts melt and our identities with our wishes get all confused about what to do next we feed ourselves with gasoline and not expect what catastrophe shall next happen the fire laughs, and tells the sky how foolish can we all be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Drinking Life

so you are drunk hmm drinking so much life...

do not forget to chew.
it is more nourishing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Drinking Poetry

at first glance
you taste its first sip

it is bitter and had always been as bitter as grief

and you drink it anyway
everyday

until then when bitterness does not taste bitter anymore and then you drink it anyway

everyday

and everyday you drink cup by cup
poetry

your friend do not believe you doing this they cannot take it anymore you drinking this bitter concoction
everyday

you are true to this calling drinking poetry
until it has become your habit your vocation

your mission to write all that you feel all that you can

what they do not know
is this freedom this blood from poetry bitter and salty and sometimes bland has become so sweet as honey and these sap caused the growth of your feathers and wings and then one day you fly away far away so so far away to that clouds and mountains to that castle of the gods and goddesses

and there you drink with them and there they welcome you as one of them

RIC S. BASTASA
Driving At Night From The University

as i head home after a lecture leaving some gaping mouths
open

i drive the car alone like
i am a worm

like i am inside this hollow ground
and i breathe
all alone

the road for home is dark and at this hour it is only my car moving on the road

memories flash
on the glass everything moves against you and you penetrate the loneliness of the trees like a bullet from a gun wanting to shoot everyone

RIC S. BASTASA
Driving Opposite A One-Way-Street Somewhere In Hongkong once what you once loved is met and seen again

you choose to say nothing as you both want to move on with your lives
less all the pains
that both of you
had inflicted to many people and most of all that grief that you have laid to yourselves, ...

what is the truth
really? i still ask it
now...

was it only me?
were you not there with
me?

what i remember was your leaving the way you avoid me
as though
i have this disease which many as of today still call
love....

i must admit,
mine was different for it was like me driving
opposite the one-way-street
in hongkong.

RIC S. BASTASA
Driving The Car One Evening

cold nights here
the cigarette is useless there is a fire building inside my
belly

stiff love looking for the softness of the pillow
a woman
is the best metaphor
for this kind of poem

the lips of a woman
hungry for
love
in me

driving the car one evening along the lanes
of dim lights
looking for loneliness
waiting for me

alone again
but this time trying to find someone
even for a fee.

RIC S. BASTASA
Driving The Point

and then i look straight on the face of the creature fronting me and we had an eye contact
i was saying something different
from what my eyes are uttering and that creature was not wise enough
to understand what was driven
of course
i understand that my eyes live in a different world from my lips
and so does my heart
my soul and my
body
my feet too travel in different direction apart from what i have in mind

nothing goes much without unlike what war is waged therein the winner is still uncertain
the loser perhaps is so kind to caress
the sadness of understanding

RIC S. BASTASA
Drool, Etcetera....

when you wake up this morning you rush yourself on the usual
many things to do but never completely done but just the same
you keep on doing it like opening windows, closing doors, mopping floors, washing underwear, brushing teeth,
etcetera
now you are working the table offers you the menu for the stress of the day you count them
and start at the first file,
etcetera the clock even if you do not mind it keeps on ticking,
nothing unusual really,
you keep on thinking and writing notes and then making conclusions
affecting the life of other people they become simply case numbers and usual names, nothing extraordinary really
etcetera
you stop, make some sighs, breathe, stand, sit, lay your head on the sofa,
and think,
etcetera
this world is black and white, there are no more rainbows, the rains are cats and dogs the little shower is gone, the slowness of beauty is murdered, the strip teasing of something that your mind coddles and fondles
takes time,
the unfolding of the flower is choked,
the buds are nipped,
births are scraped,
off,
and on,
push and pull,
that is the language i learn from you,
etcetera,

eetcetera
i did not invent it,
we say it when we do not know what follows next

eetcetera
life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dropping A Hello

i will dropp my hello like a feather
gently to a little space where you are thinking like a very clear pond

such a hello looks like a geese
floating on water

and then
it leaves

but i hope that its departure be like a word that leaves your lips like a whisper

life should be like that nothing shattering like a broken wine glass dropped by a drunkard at the bar everyone is looking.

who cares?

RIC S. BASTASA
Dropping By Your House This Morning

i dropped by your house this very early morning the windows are closed but the door is half-open and i could have given in to this little curiosity that cats keep on their paws and soft feet or hands if you may but i didn't. there is something in the house that says you had a bad day and that night you did not have a sound sleep

the roses are wilting and a flower pot falls on the ground
broken
the soil splashed like spilled water on the grass there is no sound of the wind from the storm last night i just dropped by. I respect you. The door of the house finally closed

i did not see the hands that closed it.
it maybe yours
or someone else's

the rug has spoken. You want to be alone.
to keep the faint light left in that little room. the curtains fall. the lights went off on that very early morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Drops Of Pearl

you wish upon a stiffness i still have it
you open the secret of Pink and with your gaze you hold what i have for you Strength of
One Long Pillar
Samson strong
The length mashed in
You are
the Lucky Creek where i Drop some Pearls.

RIC S. BASTASA
Drought

chcia the omm a hand
arkness
in Mt. Apo
here the onkey-eating eagle
cries out
alling
or the rain to come

RIC S. BASTASA
Drowsy

drowsy, that is the next word chosen by Dorothy, at the last day of her stay in ward 9

six years of cancer she finally gets used to slow death
i know that the pain is terrible but she is finally tired showing the portraits of her face in pain many faces of agony

until the last day comes she does not know what to say anymore

she embraces silence death is no longer strange she has it
piece by piece like a display of her jewelries from time to time sold to sympathetic buyers some friends who know her &
love her for a time when death comes that moment

she is extremely
beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive Drugging Life

because life moves like a drag pendulum of grief and lament nights are stillnoxed days are pills of micardes and oftener advil

lessens the volume of the screams of pain

on oily oddities
the liver gets too fat
the ultrasound complains of blindness to see the maps of maladies

aspirin keeps a painless moment
blood thins to remove the obstructions of the heart the oxygen tank waits the ambulance is ready to sound its alarms

for an incoming police of death to execute the cardiac arrest

and so the abusive creature arrives
dead on arrival
the morgue keeps its cool another number is given another cubicle is closed some tears perhaps but we all know it
it will only be for a while for soon we will all be back to feasting

RIC S. BASTASA
Drunk And Furious....

rereading donald makes me feel young again.
My past arrives, sits on the porch, and appears as a child.
The place is old smelling rosewood.
Over there are trees of oranges, all ripe hanging but not falling.
I remember bringing Manny from our city high school.
He did not like to pick any of those orange. He merely liked watching them.
Took pictures instead.
He wanted to see the old house and feel it.
Entered one of those rooms where a mosquito net at ten o'clock in the morning still hangs.
The window is open. Light is coming in profusely for it was a bright day.

There Papa was still snoring. Drunk last night as in all other nights.
There was that problem which he never brought into the open for the family to know.

Manny did not want to go back to the old house again. And he did not want me to be his friend again. Perhaps it was about the old house which smelled like rosewood.

Or perhaps it was about Papa. Drunk and furious. I still love those orange trees. I like the old smell of orange peelings.

And no one cares about Manny too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dry Hands

on the table
trying to absorb the moisture of sandalwood

it is not the water but the lacking care
of another set of
hands

inside it rains someone claps his hands so inconsiderate

outside is the sunshine of her smile
impenetrability illustrated

RIC S. BASTASA
Dry Land....

on one of those mating he intimated to her that one night he dreamed that he was walking on dry land everything was sand and sun there is no water nothing slippery and there she frowned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dry Leaves Beside My Door

a door half-closed the wind comes with some dry leaves coming in through it

and then
spread on the floor
under my bed

i watch it
feeling that i am junked

even the wind
has mistaken me as another
garbage

and so i finally closed my door

tight

RIC S. BASTASA
Dry, Hot Day

even the sigh
that you let out from your heart
leaves the ground dusty

RIC S. BASTASA
Drying The Grains Under The Sun....

we dry the grains today
under the sun

they die.
they shrink.

we think that by dying
the grains can stay that long

and then
ready for the next steaming delicious for our mouths

filling our hunger
in times of drought.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dryness

there are deserts
of relationship.
i've been there
and i will find myself back in there
at least, with this experience i had with camels and oasis and mirage
now, i shall know how to manage the sands
slipping from my fingers the date palms and the
full moon
and the sandstorms
and then
the same thing happens you ultimately find the sea and the port and hands waving
welcoming you back home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Due Cose Potrei Far

two things she shall do.

to wait,
and be fooled forever.

to dance
in the market place
and be their object
of mockery

to die with honor as she cannot live without it she takes his father's dagger and bury it inside her heart her boy blindfolded hears the sound of death

RIC S. BASTASA
Duha Ka Baki Sa Silong Sa Dahon Sa Antulanga Nga Ilang Gihimong Payong

duha ka baki, baye ug laki, sa silong sa dahon sa usa ka antuwanga nga ilang gihimo nga payong nagkasabot nga bisan og unsa ka kusog sa pagkahulog sa mga dagko nga lusok sa ulan sa umaabot nga bagyo sa ilang duha ka hamubo nga kinabuhi silang duha gayod mag-unong lantawa, lantawa ninyo, miulan na. mibagyo na. duha ka baki sa silong sa dahon sa antuwanga nangatawa sa tunga sa usa ka bagyo bisan pa’g unsa ka kusog sa ulan bisan ug unsa pa kadagko ang mga lusok ug lusak sa ilang kapalaran.

sa ngalan sa ilang matuod nga gugma bisan pa sa kahamubo sa ilang kinabuhi didto sa gamay nga sapa silang duha nag-unong. silang duha naghagwa. silang duha walay gibilin nga kabalaka.

RIC S. BASTASA
Duha Ka Maskara

Duha ang akong gipili Nga maskara.
Puros puti.

Kaputli. Kahayag. Kagawasan Alang nako. Gitagoan ko.
Nasayod ko kon kinsa ako.

Giganahan ka. Gihigugma mo Ang gitagoan ko Nga kangitngit.

Duha kita nga gamaskara.
Naghalok kita. Nagtandayay Sa katre. Pipila na ba ka gabii?

Unsa pa bay kapuslanan Nianang gitawag nila Nga kamatuoran?

Nagmalipayon kita.
Dili na nato kinahanglan Ang matuod.

Kadaghan na kana siya Gipatay sa walay kukalooy.
Hala gaksa ko. Kanang hugot.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dumaguete Boulevard Earling Morning

Many poems were written By those who reached here And made the walks
On early mornings

You can see the serene skies Unmoved by the wind
You can see the boat sailing Smoothly cutting the lines of the sea You can hear the sound of the paddle Slashing the sky blue sea You can see the lush green moss And seaweeds on the sea walls and stones Along the boulevard

The street lights slowly die Like the eyes of a woman closing The morning starts to gain light From the peeping sun

I am watching this unfolding With so much joy
Sitting on this white bench Alone as I watch her Walking towards me

RIC S. BASTASA
Dumb & Dull

going back to old places is depressing your childhood friend is dead

and the river where you bathed
has become another
foul smelling canal

you walk some more
and no one remembers you
anymore

the woman who cooked for the family
died as a spinster

the church is still alive but the bell has been changed the one you can hear now is pretty

dumb and dull
sounding like you who insists that there is something
there still worth
coming back

RIC S. BASTASA
Dumbfounded And Very Stupid

Writing for its usefulness is a virtue

heroic when you
expose the truth and
sometimes
suffer the consequences

the utterer of truths killed in the process

i've been there
and it's not an easy life at this hour however i write for no use at all and they taunt that when i speak of love and its satisfaction

i am but just a lousy dreamer dumbfounded and very stupid

RIC S. BASTASA
Durga's Three Eyes

between

the sun
&
the moon

Fire.

RIC S. BASTASA
During A Night Party I Talk About Death and the they do not like it.

who likes it?
no one.
i keep on talking about death
i am drunk
and they leave me
and they tell
each other
that this man is sick, that this man is morbid
that this man is inappropriate for our night out of denial
and coping up with what we are really bound to.

on the other hand
they are right
they are not dying
it is somebody else
and it is just somebody else's business not theirs

or maybe just mine wanting too to get rid of its little touches on my nape
on early dawns
when i think about
life and
its beautiful memories when life is so beautiful
when you
finally accept that you are dying.
Dusk

Stay in the dark, and keep a dark shadow, Lurk in there for a while Bathe with so much dusk And disappear

I will find you there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dusk Eats Me

despite these strong
walls,
or even destroying each so i can have a view of the whole situation

in the candidness of mature acceptance
stoic

unblinking
looking at an eye to an eye

mirrors in every corner of this room where you cannot be sure where in particular i am
for a moment

each furniture here
seems to say
goodbye

one opens the cabinet of polo shirts
and expensive suits

with a sigh
how can you ever wear these all given the shortest moment of your
life

one leaves them all and one does not care for whom shall all these nonsenses then belong

till the next day after dusk eats me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dusk Till The Next Dusk

i shall watch the coming of dawn slits of light from the leaves of dark trees glimmering packets of light from the hiding sun on the side of the big mountain

i am dusk
and i am ready with the last breath i have to face my death at the coming of day

this morning

tonight i prepare to live again on this constant resurrection

i am dusk
i die when your light comes

i always live in the little dark corner of my sadness

RIC S. BASTASA
Dusky

the gradual decline of desire within your soul's twilight

then it will be dark it is then when you can see the clearest
without
the expertise of
your eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Dust And Nothing But Dust

and what did that Pegasus leave you?

stop this dumbfounding what he left you is dust wake up! just dust and nothing but dust and what are you? still amazed?

you are like what he left,
dust, and nothing but dust.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dusted Off.....

our rivers dried up
yesterday
we have no fish now
to fry
the air of your presence have smuggled them all away we ebbed our pebbles are ashamed of our dispositions we have nothing to say now we let you go we set you free we stay here waiting for the rain the rain when it comes shall kill us all we do not mind what happens next this is the map of our life we do not understand anymore we are dusted off like you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dusting Off Your Feet

leave
dust off your feet
go
where you are loved
where you are given
water
to quench your thirst
to rest your body
go
where you are finally at home....

RIC S. BASTASA
Dusts

i was once a worm people look at me with anticipation and then i became a fly the good people did not swat me and then i turn into a donkey
oh, the children had fun riding on my back and then i turn into a horse,
men love me,
and then i turn into
a man,
oh, the demands are too many i have to read the codes of humanity ethics, philosophy
science, logic,
and then i become old
and turn into a rotten flesh
where all the worms are having fun eating me and i remember joy and freedom
and being not minded at all deep in the dark underground

back to worms, i sensed that i am complete and then i must turn to dust

and then
i have become
so perfect

in the solitude of my tiny strains in the peace of

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
the grave where we all started and then must end.....dusts....dusts....

RIC S. BASTASA
Dusty Creator

as you mold the clay to make a face out me

you need to put water and regroup all those elements of fire and air and earth

that refer to myself:
some stories and

answers to what i am
and from where i am

to where i am heading to where shall i end because you are my creator and i am your mere dust and for all things queer and weird, My Lord, I must abide.

RIC S. BASTASA
Duty, ....

the whole day
i have not seen a cloud not heard a bird song not felt the coolness of the pines
not a scent from the magnolias,

i am afraid i have become one stuffed bear in my chambers,

but this is it,
my world, my own hypothetical
existence

and they call it
service to others.

my call, my vocation,
my mission, my turf.

' i am ready Lord,
Bend me, I am yours'

RIC S. BASTASA
Dying

He has heard
Of this path
That we all Must tread
But he did Not really Know that He is going To walk
On it
Today.

RIC S. BASTASA
Dyslexia

thanks for the poem,
let me extend my sympathy

long live dyslexia!
let the words untangle the meaning of the world let the world untangle the meaning of the word

there is nothing there but pity

a bird sings early this morning by my window the vine has grown more leaves the sun comes out between the two breasts of a hill i take my bath and then move on to the beauty of the words of the world the freshness of the air from the sea to the fulfillment of my lungs to the lightness of my heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
E.

those that waged
the wars against you
you claim to have the thickest
E.

Who likes it?
not
wE.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are those however who do not really work hard those with natural talent who think everything is just plain play, and then they get an A+, do not call it unfair. they simply excel without lifting a finger without lashing an eyebrow they are born you know.

RIC S. BASTASA
Each Day Is A Miracle

what we lost was only simple.
sensitivity.
the curiosity that killed a thousand cats.

we must take our seats.
calm down a bit.

on the grass lies the miracles of the cocoon spitting out a yellow butterfly.

there is this fragility of the petals the glossy leaves the charm of the morning glories.

i am amazed.
i am silenced.

RIC S. BASTASA
Each Injury Each Departure Each Time You Break My Heart

i do not keep a record of wrongs each moment of loneliness each sorrow
grief
each tear and scratch there will be no record of it. Each page is blank each pain forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
Each Man Is My Equal

if each man is our equal why should there be control or dominion over another?

why should one cannot be
oneself?
why should one insist that he must be followed?

blame it on the stars or blame yourself

for not having used the light right inside your forehead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Each Moment

let each moment be magical let there be a song of the seagull let us choose not to hurt even if by then we decide to part.

let no unkind word be said let there be no form of dread.

we must rejoice always in everything in acceptance lies the true blessing

RIC S. BASTASA
Each Of Us

we are as great as we think
we are

our greatness does not depend on the greatness of
another

we are privileged to have taken foot on this earth
we have, on this truth, already won,

there may be darkness
for those who were wise ahead of us think that we live in this cave and we are but shadows chained and blind to light and bound

we are as great as we think we are this is not an illusion neither is it just a proposition this is the truth and this is the hope keep on going

from the heart of this darkness the mouth of awareness is not that really far soon we shall be there inside us the fire of life burns warm as eternity

it is so alive like the breathing of the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Each Piece Of Ampatuan

for each body, each child and each pregnant woman each newspaperman, each bystander, all 57 of them & more the body of Ampatuan shall be chopped into pieces each piece as a partial payment of each dead body accounted... perhaps justice will be served perhaps the thirsty earth shall be quenched perhaps each scream shall be silenced

perhaps....

RIC S. BASTASA
Each Poem That You Are Reading

each poem that you read is a product of painful eyes from the excruciating grief

of the heart

from those exhausted fingers still moving till nigh-time the writer is a psychosomatic bleeder so you see no stain whatsoever it is only when things are too near that you feel pain and acknowledge it but when you travel and create distances from yourself

when you drift like a cloud (the usual cliche for drifters) or perhaps a raft on the river along the surges of cagayan de oro you begin to see the most beautiful shape of that struggle

a cheek smoothed by the flow of tears soft hands massaged by those pains of the days cautious lips, open mind, a heart that is finally set free by the candidness of your thoughts no longer entrapped by the words that you left tied on those yellow sheets of paper from that silent room where smoke hangs on the ceiling.

Each Word Each Existence

to an honest man
each word
has an existence

a name of a friend
is golden

a word has weight
like stone

even air has a weight
of its own

no word is empty and there is no emptiness within

on the power of our imagination

green to leaf
leaf to freedom

air, and sighs
glances and love

death and dust
oblivion to light fading

darkness as blanket covering us to sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
Ear Plug World

you watch
the facade of this red
cathedral,

you know what is deep inside it

you love every part
of this
red cathedral

you shall be the
tongue

and the caressing
hands

you keep within yourself that moan

for glory
if someone up there hears it

you shall be in trouble

it is an ear plug
world

after all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Earl.....

now you know what a silent scream is all about, it is when your letters lie there naked and yell without a sound and people close friends and those that know you before you begin saying that scream
say, yes we knew it and we are comfortable with it
with you
there is nothing to hide everything is as obvious as a cloud the usual sun at midday the full moon
one evening when you are so silent as the thousand stars scattering themselves in that big, black, empty umbrella space

you think people will believe you someone laughed, this is not the truth, this is a joke this is nothing but another gimmick from Earl,
the ears are plugged, but the eyes still see it is your touch somehow that must reveal it in another personal thigh the fingers that glide and hold the inner secret
it is me, you say but by then nobody is interested anymore and so i say, give yourself a break have a hell of a good time out there no one minds no one is interested about you
and your
fake silent scream
we met that once but we refuse to hear

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Christmas Songs

on September air
the early Christmas songs are flowing as i still keep the sad memories of August morns and July jejune, how commercial the sounds how happy can all these exploiting merchants become it's the money again and more of it
assuming the disguises of Santa Klaus

RIC S. BASTASA
Again the sounds of the strong waves reverberate in your mind the strong winds may have gone to another place
you know not where but they will always be there you are bound to write another piece perhaps one now for your niece oh, there are other more important things to do they all tell you but you cannot do otherwise
you are bound to write another piece a beautiful one another important piece not only for your niece

Something about inner peace not about Greece or any caprice it is about God and goodness full He keeps on loving on a handful All of you, without crease without grease His love unceased, always a timepiece.

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Dawn Along The Dumaguete Boulevard

the sea is so peaceful like a sheet of blue linen a boat's shadow is that gray thing floating on a canvass of blue sea against an indigo sky a tall and lean figure stops to watch this view last night this figure chased happiness along the cemented pathways of this boulevard he didn't catch any not even a flirting female mosquito

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Fears
	here is no moment of peace for a heart that loves the scent of the blooming
white sampaguitas
when the wind starts to blow its breath tonight

RIC S. BASTASA
Early In The Morning...

the white sands of sarangani we are two naked souls laundering our bodies under the mild sun of youth where the fingers caress the smoothness of salty skin, i suck warmth from your mouth and you suck mine to give birth to a huge fire that sooner we cannot extinguish we have prepared for all these yes, in the name of love though forbidden to ashes to primal dust we have returned....

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning

the rain just stops showering.
the leaves are wet and some dews are staying.
the sun petals of the flowers open up. some buds follow. some fruits hang heavily on the mango tree.
a pig is tied under and starts burrowing the muddy ground.
some leaves fall. orange in color.
soft winds from the sea come.
the twigs sway. a ripe papaya falls.
a stone receives it.
a cat comes to check if there is any fish.
a dog barks. a bystander runs to the other side of the road.
the canal is full of rainwater. some leaves clog.
moss thickens on the side of the cemented drainage.
a cockroach runs away and hides on a crevice.
a rat looks over a railing on the roof of the camarin.
an ylang-ylang flower gets caught on the tin roof. the white sampaguita opens up finally to the sunny sky. a butterfly hovers. a bee buzzes near my forehead.
my hand makes a snap. it escapes away.
some fruitflies find a new territory on the rotten apple which i threw last night in the garbage can.

i start the engine of my car. and then to the office i am gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Birds

it is still dark outside

inside my room
as i write
these staggered lines

i hear them chirping like departing
words for the night where they must have slept so well
and dreamed

now ready for another day
of their winged
existence

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Duet

rain subsiding
birds chirping

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Facing A Folder

contfronted with a folder in a dream
i wake up laden with work in my head

a folder lies there with a mouth gaping
for justice

who killed innocence?
who buried love?
why are some so cruel about other people's dreams?

a folder lies in front of me and then i begin to open the pages

something must be done and it has to start with me

this early morning
on this very day....

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Gaze Somewhere In The Ricefields Of Rizal

i counter them there were about 20 chariots lining up in the sky leaving eddies of dusts forming like a series of hills

40 horses black and white pull the chariots all in the silence of the clouds hanging above the golden ricefields of rizal where i take my morning walk and resting for a while i gaze at all the slow movements in the horizon

RIC S. BASTASA
this morning
i wake up early

i see this hen
and her sixteen chicks
roosting
upon a strong branch of the narra tree

i get a handful of rice grains

and scatter them on the ground

the chickens fly down
from the tree
and feed on the scattered grains

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning In A Rural Landscape

it is still dark
the haze of the cold outlines the big body of the mountain far from me the winds are colder here and the sounds are a mixture of sparrows chirping crows on their love calls cockatoos on their murmurs this wilderness
we have chosen for this moment soon after the passing of these hours summer winds

hot and wild

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Light...

early morning
light
writes a poem
for me
on the mountain breasts....

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Phenomenology

I want to cut that flower
over there
fresh and red and rosy
on the side of the hill

all i have in mind is to bring it to you
because you are so beautiful and i love you

on the other hand the fresh and rosy red flower is more beautiful on its stalk
over there
on the side of the hill

the sun has blessed it with so much sunshine
i guess it loves it more than i have loved
you

and so i let the flower be
over there
alive on its stalk
uncut
caressed by the soft hands of sunshine
this early morning
still fresh, red and rosy more than loved by its sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Poetess

ALOUD
you must think in all silence
must you speak

your hands
tie them in restraints more divine
your mind shall open

still to the unspeakable
your steps
retrace what was hanging in the longing

you watch
three hundred sixty degrees 24 hours
this earth released from its normal orbit

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Poetry

a gray cat so gentle sleeping beside my easy chair soft wind enters the window from the far mountain

the white silky curtains
by the window
sway to the direction of the wind a red rose blooms on the side of the limestone wall horse grazing on the grassy plain a white dog runs toward a wooden gate a car stops on the yard near the veranda of this old house a brother from far announces his arrival hot coffee and pancakes on the table fumes of white rice and smoke from the grilled fish faint classical Mozart music plays on the cassette light from the sun penetrating the screen of the dining window a black and white family picture on top of the family piano grandpa on his military uniform as mother carries father on her arms memories flood the room and words keep creeping like worms i want to say that there are no termites on this house but that would be a lie.

RIC S. BASTASA
first song
from the trees
from a bird
slowly light
from the sun creeps by my
window
mists dissolve
and then gone
upon the glass
pane
i switch off
the light in my
room
nothing dramatic as one opens
the kitchen door
sunny side up
this fried egg
for breakfast
upon a coffee
scented room

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Prayer

when morning comes the fingers of light
care for the feathers of the white heron which does not look at it

their breasts are far away but in the middle of the morning grounds they soon embrace each other dusk had left earlier

pag-abot sa kabuntagon
gihapuhap sa mga tudlo sa adlaw ang mga balahibo sa tulabong nga wala mitutok kaniya lagyo ang ilang dughan apan gginaksanay kini taliwala sa nataran sa kabuntagon nga ganiha rang milalin

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Ray Of Sunlight

the early morning ray of sunlight is teasing the dry leaf of the banana

it is not at all looking excited
it cannot fall
like the tiny
leaf of the honey
suck
le.

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Scenario

the frogs are singing gratitude for the heavy rain last night the pond has ripples some fish jump with joy

the trees are tall and fresh the rainbow appears

the grasses are still filled with dew disturbed by a little bird that flew

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Stars

like flower
dews
they soon
shall start evaporating
into plain white
sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Symphony

silence is a blank sheet of paper

the notes come from the birds

this early morning
i hear the most beautiful song, a choir of birds chirping, winds gently

blowing, hushes from leaves, drums from my footsteps, beatings of

my heart

whistles from my soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Thoughts

early morning thoughts
as warm as the rising sun as beautiful as the temporary dew on the leaves of the red petals of the rose
in the garden
time becomes a luxury time that pass and does not come back does not wait
you stop
and reflect upon those thoughts that stand by like passengers of the bus going to a faraway place on an unknown destination you become that bus and you let them all in filled
and heavy you start the engine
and go
and forget that you are a farmer in the garden and not the driver of this bus on an unknown destination you account for each you stare at their faces and begin to ask their names
the place where they come from the loves of their lives their misfortunes
and the reason why they are alive why they want to go away why the want
to die
you grieve and send the sighs to sky
and then
you send them all away
you write.

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Morning Thoughts......

i was not able to wake up early

perhaps i was too tired last night

or was too confused about what happened

drink after drink and thought after thought chasing the coldness of ice

the windows are already open and from the kitchen i hear

the sound of whetting that sharp knife rubbing against
a stone

perhaps what you feel and what i feel
is what rubs against each other and viewed from this window i have to take time watching black birds flying

where are they really going?
what are they up to?

smoke from the kitchen rises to the sky
the high mountains are guards to the exit of emotions in my silence i am

tight lipped.

RIC S. BASTASA
Early This Afternoon

i had sleep, lots of sleep this early afternoon
and so
as normal beings do, i still claim to be one,
i wake up had a dinner of my own and watch TV
and go outside the house to breathe
de-stress distress and then i go back again to what i like doing have a conversation with myself for i am alone here and want to give the impression to the neighbors that there are people here talking
at midnight

actually, i love these ghosts inside my mind
they are my friends and have been with me
for years
before you decided to leave because you did not not care to notice.

and so like that Chinese poet i take a bottle of rum for a drink get a glass to share it with me and my shadow
and the moon which i had just invited.

RIC S. BASTASA
Early This Morning

before any coffee
i swear to myself that i am the man with a new story to tell

to throw away
all these cliches
and be what i really am

there is no word yet nothing is popping up
................

so back to usual
i write something that repeats itself
like an echo of another boredom
form that same
mountainside

to wait for long is crazy
i know

........

i will have my coffee now and sip what i must accept oh, there is nothing new regret what you have just read.

i think you must go now and this i must tell you:

write your own regret
do not read me again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Winter Time Begging For Answers

the frost cannot wait the fire place is not ready the wood are still wet and the match does not light yet

an early winter time how cruel shall early death be nature sabotaged
our sanity made hostage

something’s wrong
something really is going wrong what is it? can anyone tell me please?

RIC S. BASTASA
Early Worm

you have seen how dawn has given the basket of light
to morning

how light flowers how flowers bloom above the breasts of mountains

how mountains tower
to reach the pinnacle of sun

how the sun spreads
its wings
and make every leaf
every worm
learning the wonder
of flight

how a world is born
again
how the child's eyes marvel to all these

as mothers make breakfast as fathers catch fish how rivers have consistently made their journeys towards the sea

and how the sea have remained in the abundance of its waves
in the salt of its waters

early worm
this world never starts spinning
and this poem
shall be never ending

RIC S. BASTASA
Earth Hour

when you read this poem i know that you will know what i really believe in.

ask me again
i am telling you nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Earth, Wind And Water

God in mixing all these elements made man, but man is never contented asking for fire and God gives him Fire everywhere in his heart, in his belly and the colors of the earth are born.

RIC S. BASTASA
Easter 1

we think that the enigma of the magma beneath is the definition of perfection for something that we pretend we know we give a ten for it delights us

no end

deep within us are trenches of falsities flaw upon flaw
we bury the clarity of our mind there

we think about what we never understood and we raise our hands to all these images

delighted that there are still unfathomable oceans and undiscovered earths
beyond us
we continue on this journey of the unknown

all these make us alive hopes grow like flowers in the grassy fields of our hearths the idea is this earth is not

alone
we share the bounty of planets in illimitable spaces

how can we be alone? and how can we equate it with loneliness? my familiarity can be wrong and mystery is always right

RIC S. BASTASA
Easter Scene

a woman in an early morning sweeping some trash away from the house

a heap of garbage

thrown on the road for the garbage truck to pick it up...

whistles her way inside the house locks the gates

enters the door

and opens all the windows of the house meeting a brand new day filled with warm sunshine and cool air breathings from the yard's green trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
it would have been easy to write about sunflowers gazing to the light of the sun and feel the wind and hear the songs of the leaves in an orchestra of nature something so happily designed something even so palatable to the tongue nice to hear

soft to the feel of the skin as soft as silk or kapok

but times are hard
the truth is you are alone in the hospital and worrying about how to survive an ordeal with relatives visiting only for 15 minutes
and they go on with their own lives too so i cannot write about the sunflowers someone writes it

for us

i write something truthful to you this existence of the mice and how it is trapped in the gutter
under a heavy rain with thunder and lightning when everyone is soundly sleeping on their warm beds when all the lights are turned off when silence speaks again without any bar
as to what to say

RIC S. BASTASA
Easy Math....!

1 + 1 = 11
4 x 4 = pajero

RIC S. BASTASA
Eat And Fantasize

alone in his room another world is created it is beautiful when you are all yourself he swears the universe within the four corners

a tiny sun, three moons, day and night unite here in one kingdom, you are both queen and king, prince and princess to make the story more alluring you create a frog, another prince a glass shoe, a red hood, blonde long hair, a castle, a tower and then you take more letters in the alphabet to make a line they all live happily ever-after then you close the hours and you put music to your ears and fairies and shangrila and lots of catsup and and beef and burger bread and mustard alone in your room you eat all fantasies like mcdo burger king.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eating A Tulip

One day writes about
A poem that looks life
A map
For some directions
To a location
Of a hidden rock
Of gold and i
Who dream of
One day getting Rich read it,

Only to find
This Woman
Smelling my Tulip

Wanting to eat it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eating Alone In A Chinese Restaurant

all my life i never imagine myself eating alone. there is something detestable i think when a person eats alone.
either he is selfish to have to share a conversation with someone else or that he is shutting himself away from this world where each must belong to someone else, lest one can be branded as another scrooge before Christmas, a misanthrope, a man who has no capacity to relate to another human being, or even with a pet dog, or cat, to join him eating in a restaurant.

i have seen some who eat alone in a Chinese restaurant, their eyes fixed on the other customers eating alone too, sipping the bird's nest soup with the sound of a pig or a big bird, as though eating alone becomes a socially acceptable action. I do not bother asking them, why they eat alone and look stupid with their lonely eyes, falling faces, less hair, and protruding teeth.

then i start to eat alone by myself. I look at the passers-by one rainy day through the glass window of the restaurant. I enjoy the noodles and the sweet sour pork and the bottomless red tea and the jasmine rice.

i tell you, it did not take that long really to learn to live my life alone.
after you left me.

It is this eating alone in a Chinese restaurant which taught me. And now i am beginning to like it.

Sans love. Sans anybody.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eating On Top Of The Mango Tree

it makes a difference if i eat the fruits from the very tree where they are hanging

i sit on top between the twigs with the bunches of ripe mangoes touching my cheeks you pick just one and take a little bite

suddenly you are full you think you are done

the blue clouds within your reach has helped your hungry hands

=================================

Sa ponoan sa mangga

Lahi baya ang mokaon ka og Lanzones sa taas sa iyang ponoan.

Tapad sa imong aping ang Mga pungpong.

Mokuha ka ug usa ka buok hinog nga mangga

Busog na ka kaayo
Sa kaanindot nga pagbuot sa mga panganod.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eating Sandwich

she handed me a sandwich with tomato and mayonnaise filling
she sits beside me
we have hot coffee
and a view of the
sea
a fading sun
some seagulls homing

RIC S. BASTASA
Eating The Hamburger Alone

i tried eating a big McDonald hamburger once since i was too hungry then after a hard day's work and as i was bent on saving lots of money for myself i did not invite anybody to eat with me that will be an unnecessary expense treating another lazy friend or relative

i had my order laid on my table took my big bite sipped my ice cold Nestea feasted my eyes on the garden beyond the glass windows
but then
the hamburger tasted sour in my throat down to my tummy and despite its shorter consumption i was still hungry in fact hungrier than before my head was empty and my body floated among the other bodies inside the cold mall...

RIC S. BASTASA
Eating The Peeling

Who’s gonna tell you What to eat and what to throw away?
Nobody you say.
And I watch you eat
The peel and not the Flesh of the yellow banana.
And you smirked again Asking me
Who’s gonna tell me What to eat and throw away?
And in contempt of my Presence like I do not Exist
You eat the peel
And throw away the flesh.

I know you didn’t like it.
But I know you didn’t like me more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eating Words For Breakfast

Some things are better seen on the left side course some like it at the right side equating it with the right place propriety, that sense that we must exist in harmony like leaves on the wind, wings of birds on its side trees growing up heliotrope realities and accepted codes of conduct that serve as pillars of a wholesome existence

most of the things survive, and this i have seen, when they are at the middle we all know, we have done that, we have always longed and craved for that center man, woman, could they be the center of this universe?

God is the accepted one and that He cares central to our meanings, perhaps, love and sacrifice, or perhaps by merely saying that i am here because here is here did he not climb Mt. Everest for no other reason 'because it is there'?

you must have noticed how i mumble today, how i have been eating words
for breakfast

how last night's madness have thrown me into a waking island fireflies on trees, lighthouses in my temple, boats sailing in the oceans without compasses and maps

well, it is just like that. We begin to love now this ability of not having to really know, this talent of not having to understand fully because we cannot explain and because we do not want to anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eating Your Heart Out

under the full moon
on the desert
you take your heart
and bite it

it is sour
but just the same you still love it.
it is yours
and no one owns it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ebb

welcome to the ebb
of time

have you experienced drowning in an ocean
of emptiness?

have you once drowned
yourself
pursuant to the will of your cowardice?

welcome to the rise of the
water
people do not just swim there they also want to die and others who see are not at all shocked
for once they also attempted doing the expected

and those who rise from that low feeling somehow become renewed again tempted to the power of life they begin to love the fear of dying

ah, life is too short for an argument and experimentation this time, life goes hand in hand with pleasure and meaningful attachments like that flowering vine so attached to the trellis that even the sun could not really take it
it wilts in time irrevocably posted to the mutuality of the coldness of the inanimate trellis

RIC S. BASTASA
Echo

'It sounds like {we? } are feeling kind of low today.
I am having a low key day because of the poemhunter.
I am not getting so many readers to read my poems.
{Cinthya? }Buhain is the poemhunter witch She is trying to get fame'

- Aldo

Advice: The world is just a matter of perspective.
Smile and the world smiles at you.
Cry? Oh, you cry alone.

Give her a slice of that fame.
You have too much anyway already.
Be kind

{ha ha ha } laughter

RIC S. BASTASA
Echoes

the echoes of 2008 are still here i am out of this hill

i will go to an open field to forget your name.

i am calling another name a beautiful name

it will still be your name i guess my paranoia isn't over hello, hello, hello,

anybody home?

take my arms
i do not have any need of them

RIC S. BASTASA
Echoes What The Winds Are Murmuring

the mountain with its strong back simply echoes what the winds are murmuring

that is what i do most often.

i like the sky more and the majesty of the sun

that is what mountains do as rivers wind around it as winds pass by as clouds sometimes hover as fog creeps

RIC S. BASTASA
Ecstasy In An Orgasmic Poem

a poem too can be male and female the way we want it

i write it upon your urging you say you are lonely and you have no one to trust or to speak or to sleep with you are vacant and blank and empty you are crying all alone and you wipe your tears in the silence of the four corners of your room you open up a need. and i am there to fill it up. i am silent too. and i know when to stand and when to sit upon your gentle command.

you ask for a poem about love. i write it.
you want something harder. you want me to dance the dance of lust. i comply.

i write a poem about an orgasm of words.
an ecstasy buried on some free verses.

i bow down to your urges. you too bow down before me.
as i uncover what wraps me, what encloses me.
we open up like flowers shedding off leaves. we face the reality that we are big enough to understand the power of ejaculation and the receptacles of orgasm. we look at each other eye to eye only to close our eyes again.

then our mouths fuse. everything fuse. Interlocking.
and then it rains. we take shelter in each other's arms.

we live again. we throw away all the sighs. we have become one.
the gods find us and they are filled with what they once felt too.

there are no words possible.
Ecstasy....

by the time that this walk and intermittent stays are completed soon, i shall be like you papa sitting on the bench facing the porch watching the sunset...

i shall pour wine in the glass as i shall forgo all my waning desires those wasted years seeing life pass me by

i am untouched and i have not touched anyone except the cycle of those moments all too human, handed by the dictates of humanity complete with the diploma life completed, ecstasy unachievable.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eden Of My Mind...

it is our creativity that takes us away from the norms of daily dallies

daisies growing on the hillsides clouds hanging on cliffs it is our imagination that takes us away from pagination about books that have no landscapes no sailboats on its horizons

when i begin to think about those beautiful memories with you those bygone days
i become free shackles dissolve like ice cream on my feet and hands the lightness of my being licks them

it is this thought of you that frees me from the chains of my grief the way the morning sun kisses the hills the way the moon sails on the seas what keeps me alive is not myself but you my memory of youth tanning me on the beach it is this paradise of my mind that keeps Eden forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eden Resort, Talomo, Davao

there is beauty in the trees that tower to let you feel how it touches the sky

there is coolness in green
waters
where you begin to catch fish and feel the slime on its scales

there is something about serenity
something about your solitude

there is something about your silence with the grasses the blue clouds above you they all give the message of the song of mother earth that life is beautiful that living each moment with your beloved is as amazing as the miracle of the moving hours

slowly you become as small as a mole
in the vast wonders of this earth

your hands become to tiny to clasp
the hugeness of happiness you break like a glass bowl unable to contain what God has to offer shattered you look at yourself with all understanding nothing is repaired

upon a brokenness

but the amazement at beauty
continues
and it has overcome you into a wholeness that until now you still cannot say

tongue tied you shall soar and fly away.....,

RIC S. BASTASA
Edging My Way Up To Success

there is no instant success you are not born successful i am proud to say
i edge myself slowly towards the platform
of success
the road was rough
the weather was not good i did not have a carriage and a horse to make thing easier
for me
i was like a snail not hoping for that gift of speed from a rabbit
i learned from the turtle somehow reached the finishing line much to their surprise
i am a hardheaded man who does not believe in failures anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
one afternoon when the sun sinks at the horizon and fades like a face of my beloved
i begin to write about the fact of friendship
not in poetic form but factual

it is all about you
the day you left for america and you never write a letter at the time when letters were still in.

it is about a question of not talking about a silence that still speaks despite the fact that my hands cover my mouth it is about a promise that you will be you despite the absence of everyone despite the loneliness that lingers like a leech on the skin of your feet as you pass the murky waters

of your life

friend, dissolve like sugar to water and be invisible but still be sweet as ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
the structure of life and our belief system must be simplified:

yes, there is man
and up there is heaven
and down there is earth, it is very much like the Japanese flower arrangement, and come to think of it,
the woman stands up
and registers
an objection:

'where is my place?'
actually, this makes no sense, this poem
it is the lull of time unused the rhythm of aching eyes
and boring existence
the way

to complicate things like some pubic hairs

thoughts entangled
to the traps of the webs of the spider-woman

one eye looking blankly at the monitor the other betrays it with a non-mindedness the numbness of sight the shortness of time and the lack of genuine breath where is the exit doors from all these lulls?

RIC S. BASTASA
Editing Bukowski, Without His Permission

i

☐ Long walks at night-
that's what good for the soul:
peeking into windows
watching tired housewives
trying to fight off
their beer-maddened husbands.

ii

(i am a minimalist, how about removing the last line, ok, i will try)

Long walks at night-
that's what good for the soul:
peeking into windows
watching tired housewives
trying to fight off

iii

(hey, how about removing the first line, the long walks are not really necessary,

ok)

that's what good for the soul:
peeking into windows
watching tired housewives
trying to fight off

iv

(hmm
why not remove the third and fourth, it sounds good to me...) yeah, i will)

that's what good for the soul:
watching tired housewives

v

(what about using only one word to make the poem
very brief?

ok.. i will leave the most important one)

<soul>

-nothing follows-

RIC S. BASTASA
Editing Same Path

I HAVE walked upon this path
alone
and that was years ago when i still cry
water the pebbles with tears they do not grow
flowers
there are no trees there

One day
I come down from the clouds since i am heavy with rain in my heart and decide to walk back the path
of stones

I have seeds of clouds in my pocket rainbow shoots in my hands

The path have since then bloomed with dew
and vapors rise to the skies in prayers

Trees grow and bees pollinate
a new world is born
since then
and children come and play their games
again

RIC S. BASTASA
Edsa Revolution

it was the case of flower vs. armalite

religious nun
facing a hard-faced soldier

people redeeming
themselves
from power that once were in their hands but with stupidity entrusted to the evil dictator

RIC S. BASTASA
i agree that this educational system is another kind of factory persons of the same age at packed in batches designed for a common end some have to be discarded as nothing but useless commodities others are displayed priced high and for sale,
there is no more that person so considered for his innate qualities there is no more collaboration in solving a problem lest it be considered by the university rules as cheating all minds think the same on standardized testings those that think otherwise shall be junked by the system and so there is no other Einstein nobody original all mass produced
certified for mass consumption.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eeny, Meeny, Miny, Moe

Eeny, meeny, miny, moe
Catch an Arab by the toe If he bombs you let him go, Eeny, meeny, miny, moe.

Eeny, meeny, miny, moe
Catch a Bush by the toe If he bombs you too let him go, Eeny, meeny, miny, moe.

Eeny, meeny, miny, moe
Catch a musharaff by the toe If he shoots you let him go, Eeny, meeny, miny, moe.

Eeny, meeny, miny, moe
Catch a GMA by the toe
If She lies you let her go, Eeny, meeny, miny, moe.

Now it is your turn take all the fun
still take the pun
still hop and pop
and fart and dart.

RIC S. BASTASA
Effervescent

as you show
this strange liveliness
in a fashionable exhilaration
of a foam

you hiss
and then bubble
and then finally escape away
from me
as gas

RIC S. BASTASA
Effortless Superiority

there he sits comfortably without having to do anything
much to my envy
he gets everything
love, fame, fortune luxury, prestige, position everything by the mere color of his skin by the mere sound of his name by reason of his lineage and genes and his being chosen

RIC S. BASTASA
Ego

Look at your pride Flaming with bitterness
On the brink of this cliff

RIC S. BASTASA
Eight

I do not indulge in this form of esoteric Teachings, like the doctrines of Pythagoras Or Aristotle,

Recondite,
I do not have some secrets now to hide,
What for? There is nothing private in me,
There is nothing worthy of confidentiality

This is not a poetry that is full of esoteric Allusions to be understood only by the select Few. What for? What for really?

There is nothing cryptic to the good that I must Do for you, as one good man is wont to do for Another good man,

For the good is open handed, it is not a closed Fist, the fingers that behave like crumpled paper

I am opening like my fingers to the sky
Like a bud of this little white flower to see the sun

In fact, if you read me through and through
I am revealing myself through and through

Piece by piece layer by layer like you are Going to the innermost me, there is no enigma

At the end and you may regret it though
I may not have cautioned you,
There are only drops of tears trapped in there

Salty and if you taste it, can be really sour.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eighteen

a moon to shine above us a night where we sleep a blanket to keep us warm and a bed where we can sleep together

throughout
this darkness
this cold
we shall not even tell what we really
feel

it is just between our lips
and our navels.

RIC S. BASTASA
Either/Or

either you go
and run free like a child bathing
naked under the rain

or you wear all your underwears
and coats and masks and you hide inside your room and lock all your windows
and doors
and disconnect
the electric current from your doorbell

these are layers and layers of choices

but whatever that is that you pick from the rest that is still poetry to me

RIC S. BASTASA
Ekstravagantiškas

This one is conspicuously dashing She is elaborate and the way she talks and walks And holds her breath and then releases it In air, there is this intricacy of detailing her parts Something so ornate and florid Nothing bland, her fingers like tendrils Carefully clinging to this trellis Like bars of tracery Forming the ogee, colorful and showy She knows how to be strikingly bold Exhibiting this brilliance of expensive diamonds Her way of entering this door as she steps into This room
frequently a complication of Our limited space

Resplendence is her way of life Always entangled to wavy lines And flame-like forms her gaze her way of taking short Glimpses at you as though you are a kind of Neon-like existence on the wall

This audacity
This ostentatious display of woman in every way She consumes the form
To the utmost, the way she shapes and drops the words From her rosy pouting mouth in heavy lipstick red as sticky blood

You look at her and she looks at you with contempt Because in your own simplicity you are the true woman With full breasts that produce the milk for mankind's babies

While she, this flamboyant slender, graceful body gracing All the corners of this party the woman of extreme sophistication And complexity,
dashing thru her colors and sub-language of her on mwah
oh la la
She is just your version this fake semblance

She is gay, she got the looks, but she can never be you, woman.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is something
in your smile
that hinges beyond
the shape of your
body
your arms
sculpt me into human form again for years i have been turned into a big stone

god of the walls
pillar of my gods

when i look at you
the world
bloom
into a flower

it is this want and need

but reason is a sword
that hits
from one side
of my body
to the other

i do not surrender
i am on my wings now i am flying away
and you feel nothing about my leaving

nothing's changed
your world is still sea, sky, land.

RIC S. BASTASA
El Merengue

Mexican clad horsemen ladies in long skirts

circle dance, stretching hands clapping of hands,

horses set free in the tundras snow melting

at the cafe, a muscular man meets a very feminine woman, they talk a while, the woman giggles the man holds her hands they go for a walk

and it is getting dark

they go inside a copa cabana drink wine

the moon is full and appears sits upon a roof

the man pulls down his trouser the woman undresses herself he puts off the light she closes the window.

RIC S. BASTASA
'Ela Toghat Al Alaam' (To The Tyrants Of The World)

Arabic script of the poem by Abo Al Qassim Al Shab (Arabic) [Arabic text]

Hey you, the unfair tyrants...
You the lovers of the darkness...
You the enemies of life...
You’ve made fun of innocent people’s wounds; and your palm covered with their blood You kept walking while you were deforming the charm of existence and growing seeds of sadness in their land Wait, don't let the spring, the clearness of the sky and the shine of the morning light fool you...
Because the darkness, the thunder rumble and the blowing of the wind are coming toward you from the horizon Beware because there is a fire underneath the ash

Who grows thorns will reap wounds You've taken off heads of people and the flowers of hope; and watered the cure of the sand with blood and tears until it was drunk
The blood's river will sweep you away and you will be burned by the fiery storm.

RIC S. BASTASA
Elation

tonight
the moon slowly
ascends from the deep brown river

it floats for a while and then
rises gloriously
to the dark sky

a thousand stars
wait for
the moon
to fully glow

like you
on a night like this
the trees
are elated too

RIC S. BASTASA
Electrifying

my friend from Germany who figures life in his computers wonders why do poets write in hexameters
etcetera
as though ideas have to be put inside
a box wrapped in rhymes to become presentable

he feels that the poet is choking the ideas in the sweetness of his
words

i told him, i agree
i added, we have the same feelings though, i keep my own poetic stand that poetry is an expression of a strong emotion

stronger than Samson with his longest hair stronger than Obama of the United States of America and it is so varied like the sands of the shore so intricate like one's own situation unshared an embroidery of experience in one page of the hidden self,

it has no cage, no box, not even a frame
it is the wind,
and i myself, have never seen it structurally

all molecules, and atoms and neutrons much more like it
ah, neurons, all neurons
electrifying.

RIC S. BASTASA
Electronic Age...

They buried the postman
The telegram is a laughter

Time is nth
It does not fly anymore Neither can it stand still

The choices are oceans
One floats
Undecided where to go
what to do
exactly....

RIC S. BASTASA
Elephantine

it does not mean that you have grown big ears, a wide trunk for breathing or a wall as stomach to the hips, elephants do not forget those who harm them,

and they always have time to talk to the sand who shall guide them where the culprit can be found, all their lives they seek for justice,

and that is what an elephantine memory is all about.

friends tell me, i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tell me what is your recently invented pretense Your latest lie?

Shape, form, color, texture,
Of your many selves like your unequal fingers
More than the number
Of your allowable toes,

Feign and feign
That is feigning
Feign in feigning
Fingers like other fingers,

The shape
Of your fingers

You make things up
You invent new stories
And without any excuses
At all, like a very clever man loving many women
At the same time,

Figment, fabric, fabricate fabrics
To entertain, you are justifying, just to entertain, not to Deceive
To lure them to glorify themselves
To believe about some goodness and beauty and the Truth so well expressed in fiction,

In the field of imagination things work themselves into human beings
The cows talk in affable fables, the characters talk about avarice, love, hate,
And murders done in fiction,
We learn a lot,

And in that vast field of fiction
You are the cicada singing
Alone
To a cold and dark night Wishing to be
A black bird, the one that flies and sings
And goes to places where
You have never been.

RIC S. BASTASA
Elisa Ang Taga Tabon Nga Gihaw-As Sa Kalisod Diha Sa Gihatag Niyang Kalipay Diha Kanimo pagkadaghan na sa imong mga nawong

diha sa nabuak
nga samin nga nagpasad didto
sa salog
sa iyang kalimutaw

RIC S. BASTASA
Elocution At 3: 01 A.M.

adroitly
i, in the years of my confusion have seen
the accurate face of reality's
contours which i, have,
so gladly
taken, and you
who, have taken love,
so blindly,
trusting in the safety of its hands
so gladly,
suffer.

i, in the soft touches of patience, as time
witnesses,
silently, tread
upon the numbness of
feelings,
and so gladly,
accept,
all that there is,
on stretched
metaphoric imagination,
shall survive, upon one empty
glass to another,
on these
coffee days,
on dawning days,
rainy or sunny,
it does not matter anymore.
Elocution....

the beauty about unfinished work is that you still have a reason to wake up early morning tomorrow, i do not mean an unfinished painting where the red is still bloody on the canvass as though it is a wounded skin and bleeding, it is something not morbid, and i do not mean a poem half its form and sound like a scream that you cut or a song that you quit for a while because you believe that there is something much better for it when sung again the following early morning, what i really mean is something which i still cannot grasp, where i am in the middle of the sea, and i still cannot figure out where is my island home, when i become so anxious and then i still have a reason to wake up tomorrow

morning

and then ascertain if there is still reason left to finish what i..do not really know....

RIC S. BASTASA
i am within your confines arms, your arms around my body, my arms around your body too

sort of tight, too tight, not comfort but shockingly tight, that both of us want to be free, or we die, in the tightness of the arms and the mandates of the law, mockingly tight irreversibly choking us this tight, rope like and apelike, not homelike anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
as we talk
behind her

i fell guilty sometimes yes sometimes

i make it sometimes with you yes sometimes

and then we talk so badly behind her back

but we have no plans or if we have them sinister

we keep them
intact unnerved

less the tangles of the dangles we make the sound

bearable like water
pre-boiling

we open the window sometimes yes sometimes to get a grasp of air holding on to our hair

breathe
breathe

we decide to live
behind her back

back yes sometimes it is better this way less talk more thinking writing less speaking

there is an exit but we shall not be there we are in the lovely prison of our infidelities

RIC S. BASTASA
about you
what shall i say about you?

ah, i prefer my
silence

this is my cure about
you
yes, my silence

it shall speak about you my silence

my very own silence
to speak about your long silence

now we are at peace in our silence

both shall speak about us yes our silence

our marital silence in the silence of our bed

the root of all our troubles freud say is in the silence of our beds two beds now

four meters apart
speaking in silence

the silence of the house and the chairs

and the staircases
and the carpets and
the ticks and the empty glasses or those cold coffee and frozen butter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Em 4

we are into this conjugal nest
we are birds now without wings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Em 5

you simply ask me
to embrace you
it is cold night and my arms are not warm
enough

you are 50
i know there will be changes that my arms
have to comfort

do not worry
sleep and dream even there i will be
with you
my arms even warmer and shall be all yours

RIC S. BASTASA
Embrace Yourself

Embrace yourself
Touch the skin behind you

Close your eyes
And dream and see the landscape

That you have not seen
You and I

Embrace yourself
I am the wind

RIC S. BASTASA
Embracing Everything

at first to be frank with you i am choosy: friends and circles i go for only two to three not four for they will be too many and expensive to maintain at a certain level of intimacy and familiarity i change like the ordinary rest one gets lonely sometimes and needs a broader circle of friends somewhere where you float and not settle

where you hop from one island to another and feel the excitement of not being true at all playing a lot of game learning new ones
embracing everything
a friend to all but not to anyone anymore one learns again to be alone in the mob
of faces
a sea of people you begin to sail
as a boat
for all
a seagull...among
all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Embracing Tradition...

selectively she lets the laughter in, sifts, and covers,

ferments, and savors
the flavor of old

tradition, embraces and kisses, and

lets go off
the hook, the fish swims

back to the usual
pond.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emilia

last night shall be the last kiss we made love
and we were like inside that Shakespearean play the midsummer's night too elusive
and...

we were acting love like it is true i sense it when you close your eyes and shut yourself inside that darkness it was another man's face inside your mind and your heart uttered his name i left earlier this morning and you knew it

i will not come back anymore and i knew it you are like a bird freed now from your own cage.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emily Asks Me Write A Poem About Women

It must be about women How they are strong
And selfless
And self-giving

Self sufficient Free
Principled

She is that woman
She must write that herself

She can always do it.

To me strong women
Are not written
They are not for writing
They are made Self-made in fact
They do not ask me to write about them

RIC S. BASTASA
Emily Dickinson

hands so frail dusts do not crumple in her palm eccentric mind as sharp as Gillette

rumored
a blood hemorrhage on suppressed Freudian lustful desires

life and death
she knew them all too well

RIC S. BASTASA
Emma Concepcion Zanoria

emma of the green meadows on the skies of white and blue along the paths of flowers of reds and yellows
how often have i dreamed of you on the valleys of ricefields where the winds of Karupay pass along the tall coconut trees to the mysteries of the pacific ocean

RIC S. BASTASA
Emote

emote, just emote, pour out what you have inside your heart your chest opens like a trunk and things simply come out like secrets

let go
let all things fall and let them be just
they are
scatter if you must
and watch
how beautiful chaos can be at times at that point
who cares?

RIC S. BASTASA
Emote One Day

when the heart speaks there is no period it goes on loving without any room for questioning it is like a dance where a punctuation is out of place always arabesque
a twist
that art of tossing a spirit and falling down after that moment when you talk to yourself because you need to unload a burden like unleashing a dog captive to its house and master like a rain falling heavily on your roof without any colon like a surge of grief without a comma like bliss that needs no interjection like a cadena de amor with a dash or something

RIC S. BASTASA
Emoticon....

it is this pain
that has become the spring of prolixity,

prolific have i become these past few days of helplessness

my hands have become empty of its fingers
unable to hold a face of my beloved

for i am left alone with only a soul to talk to for i am reduced to the ashes of my own fire for i am a city after the war when all the heroes have been executed

it is this pain that i bear in the smiles of my silence this suffering that not even a mother can understand it is this rain that pours heavily at night that makes me shiver to a wetness everlasting i have not asked when will this stop having become a masochist of love having become another numbness to this chain of indifference this manner of unknown cruelty that mankind has inflicted upon its brother whose name it can never utter.

it is this pain that writes the words that you read at night wondering how beautiful have the words become under the dimness of our both worlds under the solitude of our partings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emotiking

your love
was true
you hid it just the same

there was one which was truer
than true and you confessed
it only to be rejected

now you ask me, who would want another
confession?

i say, love at its truest will still confess that love...for such love fears none
and knows
not what rejection means.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emoting A Landscape

the rice paddies are dead, they have been long cracking drying under the cruelty of the summer sun scorching every leaf and pebble as the mud fish buries itself under for another hibernation the trees are not complaining compliant with the strong dry wind from the bald and browning mountain peaks towering to kiss the clouds the pathways are bare and vacant for no child comes out and plays on the fields the carabaos are kept under the shadows of the mahogany trees while the man near the well bathes naked as the woman pretends to wash the dirty clothes someone peeps with mad eyes, ready with his bolo behind the thick bush.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emoting Emotions For Emo, The Hermit Kemit

IT is fluvial, there is a river, and a boat there are tears in the river with a boat sailing one early morning when you wake up, without him by your side, though there is a note, saying, i will be away for two weeks in Davao, company thing, compulsory ones, meetings and discussions what to do, and where, and it will be long.

excuses.
lies.
deceptions of angels
and demons.
goddammit

he is with her and i am here, you say it yourself, you are here alone, by the side of the river, flowing in a valley of tears.;

he's in the arms of the other woman who is feeling hot and sexy all over.
it is the note.
You respond, with
' i trust you'

Keep loving.

definitely, you're not hermit, the Kermit, she is the Emo, emoting
emotions, by the side of the flowing river, the tears are valleys.

RIC S. BASTASA
THIS
pondering the themes thou is thy hour and the stars.
O Soul,
Away from books,
Thee fully forth emerging,
lovest
best.
flight into the wordless,
away from art,
Night, sleep, the day erased
silent,
thy free
gazing,
, the lesson done,

RIC S. BASTASA
Emotional Tools

some use the brain
the right most of the time so they can earn a living u and i, use the left to sing that song and read a poem

at night
with our special friends we toast wine
we light candles in the dark we laugh together at our shortcomings
we celebrate anniversaries of our failures we also remember our little triumphs we share our grief and joys we are together in this journey of the self
and the world

our brains fail us
and so we begin to resort to the heart filled with so much emotions and then we are drained with so much love and departures we invoke love

all the gods and goddesses of love and pity on broken hearts we surrender and yet we never promise not to love and fail again and then we resort to silence and acceptance we get used to all these processes of thought and feelings emotions that burst and subside we gaze at ourselves

in the mirror
white hairs cover our head some bald and skinny and gnarled-looking and then we finally wish to reach the apex of this journey murir es descansar to God, to God, we all go back

HE is home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emotions

Excuse me, I do not make these emotions They arise without any effort from me,

They agitate, they disturb me, this this sorrow, this hate, this strong feelings of revenge and get even

This love

The very essence of my poems This war between these that come without my consciousness These emotions always at war With my intellect,

Excuse me, I do not create them myself I am not therefore responsible, and I leave these emotions All to you

I do not wish to be damaged by them I only want to be with them in such feeling and sensibility as Joy, and overjoy,

And overwhelming joy and reverence and elations

Now, is it sorrow and hate and indifference?
Excuse me, they are not mine, take them all with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emotions And Money

it is true then there is a big boundary between emotions and money

you can't manage emotions you go awry
senselessly roaming floating like an iceberg
waiting for another titanic but you can manage money and that is your forte you hide them and there will be no chaos no murder

nothing about cutting of intimacies or ignoring of relationships attached, we can be as close as door to a frame with efficient locks and hinges don't talk about money i'll spend it with you but you 'll never know how much

RIC S. BASTASA
Emotions Are Us?

did we create
did we ever
those that we
we ask them to emotions, these
e motions of joy

these emotions
like what we think harm
leave but they emotions, these crazy emotions
of hate and anger
are always strong
are always strong
and pain
and they keep on
and they keep on
they are here
to stay like
they are here
to stay like
forever and ever
forever and ever
remember
remember

within us?
feel?
think harm
us at the end
we want discarded
and yet they are there always there remaining
as is
as is

we want discarded
and yet they are
there always there
remaining
as is

as is

as is they leave us
when they want to
they leave us
emptied and suspended
we are

eye come they go outbursts and
flashes and flickers and lights
and darkness in constant profusions
when they like to

we do not create them they invade us
we do not command them they dominate us
we do not master them they enslave us

only if we will only if we will allow them to be

RIC S. BASTASA
Empathy

your poem your pain becomes a mirror of myself

sometimes it seems
i see you
writing
i watch how your pen slides
on paper
and my mind too slides with it like my muscles flexing
when the baseball player
in the field
swings his bat and hits
the ball

on a strike....

RIC S. BASTASA
Empathy 101

you are a happy man so you claim to be inhiring a fortune
from the rich ancestors imbued with culture from the good universities that provide you the best education in the city

and one day at early dawn when the rain just stopped pouring from last nights tempest
you see a man wrapped with plastic sleeping on the concrete bench of the town plaza

he has nothing
not even hope
and you just pass him by but your thoughts capture you and puts you in this prison
of emptiness

and you come back to see if he has shoes that you can wear to make him dance at least using the smooths soles of your feet

even for that imaginary
moment

RIC S. BASTASA Empathy...

one day
i must be a fool

see me
and i like to see sympathy

the next day
i shall be wise
again

and for the rest of
the years

there will more begging

for empathy
life is....

RIC S. BASTASA
Emptiness

when you enter your room and you hear the sound of your steps on the carpet, as you close the door and the sound of the snowy silence is sealed,

you begin to think why, when will this last? oh, this cannot be forever, i know, you keep on telling yourself

this is temporary this is the need of my life there is an exit somewhere you wait, this is the hope there is this distance between this and that it is not that really far away from each other

the nearness soothes and heals

RIC S. BASTASA
Emptiness Can Be Shared

now we must know that emptiness can be shared
as though they are delicacies delicious
in our plates and palatable to our tastes our plates are actually empty not a morsel of bread no grain of salt

no stain for a sauce
no elbow macaroni
nothing greasy like pork's fat or that smooth mayonnaise no raisin or cranberries not a rib or marrow no cherry on top of vanilla ice cream it is not about plum or apple pies or fruit salads,

what we have are only words and they are served on the forks of my tongue which i gently put on your tongue and we close in upon the door of the kiss locked

these are the stories that we keep secret swallowed and kept in the chambers of the heart and we keep them wondering how full we are in our silence how festive we are in our chosen confidences how settled we have become in our happy confines.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emptiness Is Both An Illusion And An Irony emptiness is always an illusion which carries with it an irony.

when i look at it, as its content shows, it has nothing

bare hands, opening fingers, an empty transparent ball, it can tell your future, it can dig your past, thinking that it is spacious, i went inside it, pierce myself though it only to find that that are so many crowding elements in there and they are choking me and you who is looking outside it, thinks that nothing is happening but then the struggle is horrible, quick and even deadly, so many hang themselves in empty air, and lose their lives, because you cannot see the body of breathing, when you learn to live with it however, you become full, emptiness is its irony, its antithesis, for how can you ever be full if you have never known how to empty yourself?

the face of emptiness is a mist, and you touch it, you will hold a forest, so many black birds, myriad exotic orchids, so many blending sounds of trees screaming, of creeks flowing of waterfalls cascading that you can relate to the locks of your hair and the hairs of your armpits, inside it is too personal to be told, outside it are so many denials with the faces of the people that you have loved before, and then you decide to stay at a distance, you are like a tree dark as a shadow, counting the hours when the sun finally fades away.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emptiness Too Is Art....

do not
say more than that

lest the path be full
there is no
more room for
the way

what house is it without a space for a window
or door

voice out for space
emptiness too
is art.

RIC S. BASTASA
Empty

try looking at my hands they are empty now for i have released
what fullness was there what fist
what clenched hands i had once they were so
beautiful
in bravery
but then there is always a threshold of courage
suddenly you find hands opening
to the sun
hands without a grip hands that wave goodbye to all your friends hands that grasp nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Empty Now

you are telling me that what i did was so hurting it was you who was bombarding me with a hundred words per minute
as i was sitting on the rocking chair facing the sea where this time the wind keeps on rushing
on my face
i assure you i was listening to every word you are saying because i have told you once and i am telling you again and again i love you and i will always love you till the end
of time
and you still keep bombarding me with all those words that you were hurt by my telling you i love you i love you i love you yet there is something untrue you did not kiss me yes
you for got the kiss
the real reason why you said i love you is because i asked you to tell me and to repeat the words that i missed hearing after ten years of this marriage you are cruel
in the
silence
in between
the words
demanded.

it is the emptiness of your words that is killing me it is this emptiness that is telling the truth this emptiness between us so huge so wide i cannot anymore
reach you
you have shut me out from your full ness from your wall
words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Empty Rooms Vacant Chairs

empty rooms
c vacant chairs
open doors
footsteps going out
somewhere

where to? who knows?
who cares?

at night
the wind blows
you want to draw a shadow on the wall

it is dark and there is no sound.

RIC S. BASTASA
Empty Spaces Of Leaves

dawn brings in whatever was left
of the night
making love
to its own shadows
in the dark

so cool is the silk air so beautiful are the laces
of light
drawn from the empty spaces of the leaves
the dews like pearls still clinging
to the arms of desire

RIC S. BASTASA
Empty Talk

in so many words he will tell you
that he loves you

but don’t you doubt that for once he never kissed you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Empty. Full, Empty, Full

these are like waves
of the sea
that will finally take the boat
finally to its port of destination.

RIC S. BASTASA
Emptying

after reducing mental activity sit for a while and just remain there sitting,

empty what you have a dress, an underwear, an idea empty your head

close your eyes

and when this happens
take the soundest sleep

i know you need it
for a while

we must be apart
sea to cloud.

RIC S. BASTASA
did i tell you
that a poet was not born in a day?
oh, it takes a lifetime to become one,
it takes a thousand years of sensitivity to feel the thorns of a worm the skin of the porcupine it will take another thousand years to tell which is green which is blue
from the blind eyes of the fingers
i must tell you
the poems may have come not in trickles for they come not but in a flash flood in a flash of lightning stabbing the mountains in the roar of thunder in the bellies of the tigers

oh well, they have all been there we only need to discover.

RIC S. BASTASA
Encounter Of The Present

a young brisk woman stands still on the side of the road wearing a thick dark tinted glass and a Mao Zhe Dong cap
i stare at her and she stares at me
and then as i cannot stand her strong gaze
i walk away rushing towards a crowded mall

RIC S. BASTASA
YOU MAY live upon an imagination:
a rosy world, one without thorns at all,
a sea without much depth where you can swim from one island to another a sky without rain
no storm to ruin your day but it just cannot be it just cannot be the lies unfurl they soon will discover the real world where you live in in perfect contrast with what you are not

you may still live in there live there if you wish they will know and will understand you just want to live

just to live, and not to harm they will understand and then smile at you

and you too shall smile at all of them who live in the same place as you who simply want to live to survive and then end it well like a finished
journey

RIC S. BASTASA
End Of A Story

Arnel made a point,
his friend who works hard in Dubai
comes home for a much needed vacation with wife and kids,

in Palawan
a big wave swallowed him and since then
he was never found

RIC S. BASTASA
Endlessly Yours....

he promised to stop writing poems, waste of time he says he breaks promises he has time to waste so much time because the words keep coming and it is giving him

all the pleasures

and when he reads what he had written last night

the following morning

when everyone is still asleep and when the kitchen does not have any sound of a fried egg or a whistling pot he feels the hunger again and there he is eating poetry for breakfast munching the words

chewing what he is in there brewing

like strong coffee

that soon makes his heart palpitate like drums

of the natives

recently capturing their first human meal with all these facts at hand how can he ever stop?

RIC S. BASTASA
Endlessness....

you get bored and feel there is nothing to life or even death and this nothing after a long time of sensing and feeling it as though it is your constant companion finally takes a shape, a face, a mold, and it becomes something and life passes and winks at you and you feel this prick, this eureka, and connections are made, links and links and chains of meanings, a circle, and nothing is something and something is nothing and then this arrival of silence and then this solid void, this continuity, this endlessness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Energy, Synergy

feel the coming of this energy rushing like blood pushing itself inside our veins
now blue has turned to red and you blush
with life

fill yourself with energy push, push, push pull, pull, pull

work things out
for the better
hop, hop, hop
hope, hope, hope,

make things for the better excel, compete with yourself another greater self today than yesterday that you always leave behind

you stand up now you are a man of energy yet you are not alone

you touch another hand feel another body
diffuse, transfuse,
surge, mix, diffuse

you synergise
in this universality of this stream of humanity in the ocean of our vast space we become stronger

one world,
one universe
one humanity

RIC S. BASTASA
i have nothing to bring you always words, which sometimes i think over with regret, there was a time when i first met you, i brought you bars of chocolates, which you set aside, and i thought you prefer flowers which i brought the following night when you needed to see me, only for a while you smelled the petals and put those flowers in a vase, and they looked so pretty with limited light from the window city lights, and you did not say anything, but i know what you wanted i opened my heart, i unwrapped my body with all its drippings, i give you my lips, i brought you all my sighs, my manifold sorrows, my misgivings about a life that has no eyes for me, and then i give you words again, you have felt the whole of me, and you love me and i love you
in return,
quid pro quo,
just that brief moment, and then both of us are gone because life has constructed for us two paths that never once again shall meet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Engr. Rey And Life's Absurdities

here comes engineer rey
who is as healthy as a monkey boasting of his immunity

drinks vegetable juices everyday

does not eat red
meat

and play tennis every other day of the week

carbo is a no no soya is a yeah yeah

preferred diet
is lots of green leafy salads
garnished with olive oil
and grains make his days

one day he bangs his car upon a post
loses consciousness

when he wakes up at the hospital
he does not know what is one plus one
and can no longer
recognize his wife
and two kids
today he is in coma diagnosed with terminal
brain cancer stage iv

yes, it is absurd but it is true
and Oh God!
he is only 44.

RIC S. BASTASA
Engravings Of The Heart

everyday is a betrayal

a closed door
assures

one dreams
wide awake

smiles are sub-chapters

no matter what
two are still one

lies are sweet creams coating

everyday is a
comfort too

there is a promise of growing together

older and bolder
and number

everyday is forgiving

betrayal and forgiving marry

the home is still the apple of the eye

a closed door is always reassuring
silence is the sky mouths beautifully shut

RIC S. BASTASA
Engrossed Grandmother In Her Cross Stitching

it is this absurdity of choosing words for a nice handiwork

knitting some fairies in some mathematical colors of threads some butterflies and flowers in bright colors

a painting in cloth and threads
takes time
when she is finally hypnotized

falling into a deep sleep inside a room
where she is alone on dim light

i open the door
i see the best handiwork of God a woman so indulged so engrossed in her art

sleeping.

RIC S. BASTASA
Engrossed In The Making Of Art

it is this absurdity of choosing words
for a nice handiwork
knitting some fairies in some mathematical colors of threads

some butterflies and flowers in bright colors
a painting in cloth and threads

takes time
when she is finally hypnotized
falling into a deep sleep

inside a room
where she is alone on dim light
i open the door

i see the best handiwork of God
a woman so indulged so engrossed
in her art sleeping.

RIC S. BASTASA
Enigma 1

our fellows are selfish ones they only keep their words for themselves read them aloud
in front of mirrors and then they close their books
and sleep
without telling you if you can have them and feel
the softness of their syllables they want the moon at night to be only by their windows and they travel alone taking nothing of our faces and scents our fellows are the most selfish ones and they are not interested about our names they only have theirs carved in those walls of skies

i am glad i am not like any of them i do not read and i do not close my books i leave the pages open by the window and i tell the moon to just pass me by the rain is happy for me i have allied myself with the damp and cold and so my hands speak for myself: the lines map for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Enigma 2

the irony however is this the moment i utter your name my silence leaves me

i love it this way
that you only exist in my mind

(i do not dream of taking you inside my heart as i still respect its emptiness which i have reserved for God) i like it this way: you are a distant star and i am a traveler on the desert

at night

and as there are so many stars in my sky the sands too shall never know who you really are)

RIC S. BASTASA
Enigma 3

three books lie on the headboard the first is The Darkness After the Hour the second is The Dreamweaver and the last one talks about the Time of Olives my eyes are tired, my heart is broken my soul does not know the difference between this brokenness and exhaustion some things slip inside me as i close my eyes, perhaps you know by now what i have chosen.

RIC S. BASTASA
Enjoy Every Bit

THERE is so much
unexplored deep down
the trenches of
the ocean

up there too
there is more to space that is not grasped by our limited senses

there is more to the mere glitter of the stars

you cannot catch all the glow that the moon is giving

our faces have only what light can reflect what air can we touch

we are interesting

our oceans
spaces, stars, moons,
are but metaphors of
who we are

keep all these in mind...you are too interesting
you too are a metaphor of what is there unexplored

there is no hurry
enjoy every bit
grab every moment...

RIC S. BASTASA
soon another vacuum is declared an open country where fools become violent upon the women of sorrows

another emptiness is
back
upon itself
debilitated

cupping not a drop
of time
yet choked like
a man
hanging his last dream
on that tightened rope.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Enlightenment

light, there is light,
too light, above my hair, a little sun floating above my eyelids, it settles finally on my lips as a moon sits on the the marshes
at night,
the mouth opens
and it enters,
light, swallowed
inside my esophagus
finding its way inside
my heart,
it becomes the steel
core of my being,
a heart so strong now,
ready for another
surrender to love,
so gentle and yet
so objective,
savoring and yet
unaffected.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ennui

when you want to refuse to think
when you
want to stop
doing anything
yet you cannot
because
you are still alive
and there is no way
that you can refrain from living

this and that
etcetera
endless etcetera

keeping
yourself
busy for
nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Ennui (For Merci)

when you think you have it all
and then
you find a certain void which is not filled up yet
the void is very tiresome the pillow feels like a stone and the bed
feels like a burning log

RIC S. BASTASA
Ennui (Whatever)

there are four corners of this room (as usual, us usual, we are here again, both on a togetherness since the early days of our union)

i want to go away, remember the flight of the little bird, away from its mother's nest?

but i can't, your tears are holding me
like a mother,
and so how can a son get away?

how can a lover go away and be stripped from its beloved?

the vinyl floors are dusty the curtains unwashed for weeks the door creaks like a man complaining for its usual work to close and open to open and close

the door has always been closed in here there is no exit

but i shall not scream, that is too much for this harrowing experience there is no tv, no ref, just the sound of an AM/FM radio that i bought from a cheap department store i hold your hands that is enough for me now. i stare at the ceiling, and then i get so weary and i close my eyes asking shelter in the colored world of dreams.

are you happy now?

RIC S. BASTASA
Ennui, Ennui, Ennui

if the usual delicious things everyday, every night you realize these are of no importance and there is therefore no use of being earnest

the most unusual delicacy summons you to just sit down watch a sunset and then just be very silent

on this necessity of waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Enough Is Enough...

the time has come
to say, this is enough we do not need anything the room is full
there is nothing more
to cook
in the kitchen

we only watch time passing away prepared for the next eventuality

the vagabonds in us are waking all feet are ready not a bag shall be carried the world comes around us and we are carried...

RIC S. BASTASA
Enough Of This Ongoing War, I Will Write Something Obscene

i am tired of the ongoing war, red alert on this district, and no classes today and curfew hours implemented strictly and check points, i hope there is no hand grenade hidden in your car or some ingredients of an explosive no joke you will be arrested and you cannot take your flight to Kuwait let us not about war, let us talk about love, silly, let us talk about sex, obscene sex, salivary sex,

do you remember the sound of the squeaking bed?
do you hear the bed bug letting its last juicy cry because both of you are too heavy pressing its body against that piece of steel flesh to flesh like steel, yes too rough and strong and rigid, i like to remember these things, the sounds of the moans, and the sliding hands and firm breasts and the magical sound of the ejaculation of out intellects in bed as we study Kant and Sartre and Marx (have fear) and Mao (we were arrested, do you remember at the university?)

you are bragging, you are a fake revolutionary, you were hiding while the rest of them were tortured and yes, some of them were not even buried on decent graves this is obscene. You are taking about something that did not happen to you. It happened to them and they are dead and they are your brothers you did not visit them in their prison camps you were watching the latest movie in that rubbish city while they all carried their guns in the mountains and crossed the rivers without food and water and without their hopes of a new home indeed, this is obscene. now stop it.

start with the white thighs again. e.

RIC S. BASTASA
Enough Of Words And Thoughts to rest my eyes

i go to the garden and gaze upon those
leaves

the leaves become caressing hands
stroking the soft eyelashes
and rubbing my forehead with the coolness of its epidermal
gifts

it is dusk and light slowly ascends
from the thighs
of the lady mountain

i am lustful at dawn
at noon
they say i am poetic

i want action tonight
not just words
i call her by the phone

RIC S. BASTASA
Ensconce

snugly comfortably do you remember how we sit before the tv and watch our favorite videos,

fiddler on the roof
the sound of music
gone with the wind
the titanic
ghosts
who's afraid of virginia wolf?

and i went higher than what you expect me to settle for higher than entertainment even greater than sweet-sour love i went into politics
and legalistic movies
and yes
crime does not pay
the who donnit ones
and the
phantom of the opera
and
les miserables
where i think i was finally reborn
from my slumber
of
noli me tangere

and munich and the black september i cried, sort of overacting and you do not believe and you laugh
dee. inside yourself: this man is gone out of his senses ensconced, like a bird i perched and lodged

and installed myself in one corner of just seeing and listening like a ship looking for an anchor
perhaps just to camp and burrow like Alice's rabbit so i can find my hiding place keeping my own home key with nothing to spare

and i like it here now nobody looks for me
and i do not have to answer for any call or for somebody telling me to open a door

RIC S. BASTASA
Ensemble Fete Rustique

I am assembling conversations Of two former buddies Who really like each other
Not as lovers
But as pure friends
And much as they really want As brothers
They wanted to be
On same direction Taking together
A path they love

But as fate would have it Each had Opposite directions
One went south
The other north

For years each Thought about
The other what Happened and Where must he
Be now living

One fine day
They see each
But as norms dictate
Of course
One cannot kiss
The other
They shake hands
Like nice gentlemen
And they sit
And talk
No one cries
Each will be Calm and rigid
"you are
flourishing! "he stoically said.

"you look
real good! ", he is unmoving, they have not seen each other

for 30 years

but as norms
would have it, they pretend that there is no softness involved
that there exists no feelings like that of a lover long lost
and now is found.

Each saw the light
And each has opted
For a compromise
They have to be Blind just the same
When they first Parted as buddies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Enslaved By Art.....

when it feels like
then hit it
do not suppress it go for it
strike while the creative mind is hot
do not fret
do not ever think
just go
and be blown away by this kind of wind
that visits not as often
do you not notice
me not minding you?
do you not mind
why i have stayed in this room for quite long?
must have i imprisoned myself for no reason at
all?
come to think of it
no one wants to be a slave but here we are enslaved for reasons that you can never think of the beautiful muses

have arrived without their clothes on bathing by the river
we watch with all glee

this is the mind
this is the body
fused into one...
enslaved by art.
the heart laughs
the hardest.

RIC S. BASTASA
Entangled By Old Roots

time knows how to choke a face like yours time like roots of the banyan tree smothers a face like yours and you let it be as you close your eyes and surrender to this kind of death that for all these years you have been asking in your hundred patient prayers your face is this stone and these roots have entangled what you do not really own

RIC S. BASTASA
Entangled Hair

oh i see, your hair entangled last night
must i have been there? i must have been drunk, for i do not remember.
Did i kiss you? Did i make love with you?
I have this sticky feeling you know and i must have been guilty of having loved you.
I check my thighs and they claim innocence.
I ask my lips and they say they were never wet last night.
I touch my abdomen
there is no shouting faggot in there.

so your hair got tangled last night, and you are telling me that all this mess is caused by me?

sorry, things sometimes exist all in the mind of a woman scorned.

someone said it, i think i still remember. Not Shakespeare, it was someone else,

but not me, i am sure of that.

RIC S. BASTASA
Enter Her Garden Of Flowers

now you may enter her garden of flowers but first you must be wise do not think that what look like flowers are nothing but flowers

man be wise, there are those that look like flowers but they are something else do not just pick them up, think twice think thrice in her garden

there are some flowers which are bred in guilt and if you are not so careful enough pick another one that one is meant for your death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Entering The Door For The Final Exit

sometimes there is an ending surprise when we contemplate
upon
the death of a human being

we dread thinking that we can be that dead human being carried by a few inside a coffin
towards the most silent
destination
decorated by wilted roses

or some smoke from the candles

call me weird and if i am then fr minster must be the most weird person doctor of metaphysics exploring all avenues about death he is rested. he was murdered while attending to the needs of the prisoners.

for one thing
and this i admire myself for that less the arrogance of a questionable philosopher

i told him
death is nothing it is the most normal event that happens to the human species even my own

i do not wish any pompous occasion to mark it it is the humility to simply acknowledge that we are all silly mortals who are trying to escape but does not want to enter
the door

Jesus, he only had 33.

RIC S. BASTASA
Entering The Hall

a lousy day
something is dreary life is damp and disturbingly wet, as i enter the hall where two old men are talking deaf perhaps they are shouting about how life can be so dragging when i go near them they look at me with disdain envious perhaps about how i have not aged much because i am smiling

inside it is damp and wet and dreary but outside i show something warm the sun and the gentle wind i am hurt but i never utter the word of your common complaint.

RIC S. BASTASA
Entertaining Two Grieving Guests...

when both of you arrive this morning carrying with you your loads of sorrow
i am ready with my arms and words of comfort for i will be with you not only in happiness but also in sorrow

and i listen a lot,
serve you drinks,
offer
you lunch,
sweet pineapple chunks for desert red wine for some finish then you keep on telling me about what really happened how things can be unbearable at times i listen a lot,

i perfectly understand
the pain,
and i empathize with that lingering grief that sticks in your hearts like
some kind of a virus,

i offer you more drinks, because drinks can take us towards other places of our hearts a little comfort and diversion is needed on these harsh times of your life, we let time flow,

temperatures change,
words take unexpected shapes your hearts begin to catch the fire of survival
somehow even at this moment you must have sensed another direction
to move on,
the options are too many to count
the world is one big space for experimenters

this is an exciting world full of surprises

then you like the way things have been moving how accommodating can i be, how understanding
we signified goodbye,
i send you both off the door of the house we had the last drink
for the road

it is already dark
and the world is silent as another kind of listener

and then i am alone again, taking all the glasses and spoons back to their proper order and when everything is set,

kept,
and in place
i go inside my room also ready to handle those heavy burdens that are mine and mine alone

i am in this kind of state where sharing them
cannot lighten me

for they too have been burdened enough with what they think they cannot bear
anymore....

RIC S. BASTASA
Entertainment At Barra's

dusty, old and weary, the shacks of this place offers only the inside comfort of its simplicity.

a bowl of Japanese noodles, salmon sushi, ebi tempura, not here,
hot green tea, not here,
chinese humba, chpsuey, sweet sour pork, bean curd, bird's nest soup, definitely not found here, this is the place of the lowly, where the poor converge and share their woes,

a cup of rice, carabao meat, fish stew, under the nipa covered roof, an angry sun, and a talk about an uprising, on the other side of the house, some home made firearms, some leaflets, and camouflage....

nothing rocks here, something is boiling it is hot, but it is different.

RIC S. BASTASA
Entrances And Exits Tunnels And Light.

i do not really think
that when you are making the headlines that you made it.
there is more to be at the front page.
it is just once
there could be another.
but this is the mask of society's pleasures.
behind the page is another story.
the story of daily survival.
what help you can give to appease the anger of the masses. what food to serve for the hungry what comfort is there for the ugly and the unmentioned what life is there beyond the films what disappointment is there lingering in the system. after all it is not the beauty queen that really matters but the one executed for some worthy causes. it is not independence but it is the interdependence of all these links chains and locks entrances and exits
tunnels and light.

RIC S. BASTASA
Entwined

of all the words
this is what i like there is that sense of unity, that feeling of we are
entwined
like a bond of marriage like a vine carrying a flower to the trellis
i like to make it a little more beautiful like Cynthia's intertwined
there is sense of twosome foursome
eight-some in that word a trois something like Mary Poppins with the kids on the hills of Austria singing the edelweiss
oh i remember you when the three of us intertwined under a heavy downpour of rain and we only had one umbrella
we were like vines
but i hate to admit it
someone
turned into a snake.

RIC S. BASTASA
Enumerations...

not those flowers,
ever those summers,
not those rivers, not the sea,
ever the ocean
neither the continents nor the islands neither the clouds nor the skies neither the space nor the galaxies

the grain of sand, a leaf, adrift,
a pond, and the old frog,

never the storms or the
winds,
ever the alligators nor the hammers

it is the stone, a butterfly, a speck of
dust....

RIC S. BASTASA
Envy

I may have an old worn out car
But I am
Handsome and popular
He has a scar

And he does not know how to spell Lopadotemakhoselakhogameokranioleipsanodrimypotrimmatosilphiokarabomelito katakekhyemenokikhlepikossyphophattoperisteralektryonoptokephallioskigklopeleiol ag#333; iosiraiobaph#275; traganopteryg#333; n

RIC S. BASTASA
Envy And The Discontented Heart

these faulty eyes see what we are not comparing the colors of the invisible wind testing the depths of the waters
always complaining about the scent of the air the slowness of the rivers the dirt in the creek

i should have let them all pluck the eyeballs from their sockets.

RIC S. BASTASA
blue jeans, yes, the blue in the jeans, the jeans i claim that it is all that i see, but i may go on a deeper exploration of this introspection, there was something fleshy
under the blueness of the jeans something dark
like the color of the night filled with desires that one wants to spell correctly,

there is the hand there
resting
and with a permission since it stays there for a longer time
unhampered

their eyes are smiling and they were telling me
about
the art of letting go and sending out the doves free finally from their decorated cage

at the end i always
ask
what did i feel?

frankly, i may say nothing, but let me explore the secret room inside my house, envy is there
wide awake and wanting to go out of itself towards the darkness of the night and the coldness of the typhoon air

envy looks out of the window
and it is very restless

RIC S. BASTASA
Envy Not

do not mind other people's pain we too have our own do not mind much less their own happiness we have ours too we keep things as they are seeing them in our own light we fly along with our friends on our special wings those that make the least of sounds ahead of us
the island of our ancestors the paradise of our presumptions.

RIC S. BASTASA
Envy Not Her Flowers

envy not the flowers that bloom in her garden

red roses
taking the colors of blood the roots

unadulterated pain

RIC S. BASTASA
Envy Of The Eye & The Nose

Let the eye and the nose Argue why the eyebrow
Who does nothing Occupies
A Higher Exalted Position, & even this Mouth which Speaks and eats
Thoughts and food,
Have reason to complain,

Why the eyebrow
Up when it Does nothing?

Its placement is meant
To make you look like
One normal human face
The brain understands What happens when The eyebrow is transferred Below the lips, and you Know very well, the Eyebrow really, does Not mind, if you look like An alien with a spike.

RIC S. BASTASA
Envy, Envy, Sad Eyes

edgy, the end of the world your world, is edgy, it doesn't mean much just edgy, there is this sense of envy
and what is there to be destroyed
is narrative poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Envy....

the woman
undresses herself
like a river

the man
falls like a leaf
and floats there

and then the river
foams
and the leaf flows with the river

and then
the moon fades

RIC S. BASTASA
Ephemeral

A red hibiscus that blooms
In the morning
Closes, wilts, in the afternoon,
You expect another one of its kind tomorrow,
A china rose,
Your night life,
At the outdoor café, sitting on light fabricated Silver chairs, sipping tea, puffing smoke, sipping Margarita, gazing
Slight stolen looks
At young handsome Men rated per hour,
It is your policy of giving false names and wrong address, They know
What you are doing,
They understand
Your needs & wants
For a fleeting night
A cure for an itch

Momentary piecemeal pleasures, Allusions about a broken love of what used to be,
Illusions of what you could have been,

Momentary
Thoughts, momentary projections, when you make love with your catch, as you puff your smoke to Confuse the ceiling with your gaze of momentary Emptiness,
You are the first one
To leave, after paying the bills, They always pretend asleep, While naked,
As you leave his due on the side table,
You go home on shriveled hair, Driving a red car, Smokeless to the road,
Your celfon rings,
Your son in his father’s house calls “Mommy, I want to go home” “I am driving, ' you call him, A flash of momentary happiness,
A momentary sadness,
Flip-flopping to your mind,
What are these really, these that meet your gaze for something that should have been permanent,

That red hibiscus, that blooms only for a day,
Is ephemeral,
Like stolen nights,
Like the way your child calls you, because father is always away, “I am in Cebu for a week”, said many times over and over again,

Her stint for a night is ephemeral, Electronic calls are ephemeral,
A happy home, her dream, was sort of, kinda like red hibiscus Ephemeral too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Epikhairekakos

seeing others fall
ruined
at the bottom of the sea
floor

one delights
upon the death of his enemy

this feeling
of
now ' i am much better'

i have survived and shall take the pleasures upon myself on those empty chairs my sighs sit

RIC S. BASTASA
Epilogue

and so
the clouds come
and they are so many like a grape-ful
of imagination
in bunches and bunches of spheres
of understanding
you miss the point
they are not the metaphors of doubts
but of embracing for once what we do not understand
because we have no power to do so we use our eyes now
wide open
into the wonder the amazement
no strain just plain watching of a folding phenomenon
like we are all kids
newly transferred to a grassy place beside a lake
the first time
we see a jumping fish

RIC S. BASTASA
Epiphanic

the ordinariness of things sometimes like leaves and wind and grass leaves falling wind whispering

and grass covering and footsteps
a ball playing with the dog
a baby on a crib mother's lullaby
rain coming with a warning
roof that stands aloof

your silence beside a cup of coffee
and my gaze beyond
the window
the sunset fading
into total darkness
and the moon
sailing by passing at us
slowly soundlessly

epiphenomena...

God is still here on epiphany We watch
We are being watched.

RIC S. BASTASA
Epistle

Dear law students,

The semester is over, and I am
Your nightmare finished off by you by simply waking up and breathe & recover. Fan yourselves, loosen your shirts. I know I am the sum of your bad days for the whole semester, Assigning you cases as Thick as three cabinets and Giving you quizzes every meeting which You think are nothing but trivial flaunts and show of a Law teacher needing much attention. I suspect that you Backbite me and consider me as Judge Terror on the loose Eliminating the chaff from the grain, the bones from the Cartilage and those whose guts are weak must, as Humbly asked, pack up his wits and get his bolo and just Plant camote & yam in his mountain. My car got scratches and I spent a part of my meager salary to repair the marks of Your suppressed cruelty. You read two books in political law, exclude The assigned 30 cases or so, add another 20 and the handouts Too. The law classes are long and weary and focus Yes, focus is important, starts at 5: 30 to 8: 30 p.m. when You could have rested in you cozy homes and watched the Prime news and soap operas or the latest Oscar winning Films. It has been a wonderful semester but sad enough After I checked your final exams some may have to repeat The course again. I said may. I am writing you this letter And you may not read this. This time some of you may Have been preparing for Lent this March, when the sun Is hottest, when the dust is too dusty, when the church Is too crowded, when all of us must reflect what sins have We inflicted upon each other. Well, I guess, you have studied A lot, and suffered that much, but try to look at it in Another perspective, and let me ask you, Did you learn a lot about political law this grueling semester? Do not tell me your answer. I am not interested. I do not mind Anymore how you call me names when you are drunk with Your classmates in your favorite videoke bars. Good luck, have a happy summer break. Dream some more.

I remain. Judge Terror.
Epitaph

here lies the bones
of a man
they once called boneless
during his lifetime

RIC S. BASTASA
Epitaph Of A Poetess

she leaves
those she loves truly and those who truly once love her for now she goes to the Great Poet's Place to claim her reward.

RIC S. BASTASA
Epitaph Of An Athiest

one day
your feet take you to the cemetery on tombstones

you pass by and read some names

you read a name
and you shall remember a certain poem

this is it
'she is dressed and she is not going anywhere'

RIC S. BASTASA
Epol

epol
hanging on a pole
for sale

RIC S. BASTASA
Eq (Emotional Qoutient)

at first
it was so horrible
i locked myself inside the room as father hides the knife then i had the second failure i kept it to myself and despite the red spot in my eyes i said it was nothing

and then there was this third and fourth and fifth
and so on and so forth

somehow i said yes and yes to all these for how can one refuse disappointments and failure
oh! they come so naturally and then the feeling of pain is gone i rise above frustrations the pain is too normal the body gets adjusted the brain is numb

when they come again in my life all these have become my brothers and sisters and mothers and fathers they bring no pain anymore, except the hard lessons and all these for us to live
we must
by heart learn.

RIC S. BASTASA
Equation

as i write about an old woman begging on the street
as the night covers her and as i reflect upon the smell of sunset

she comes again
trying to catch what i could be, asking are you an old woman?

funny, but it becomes like you are stalk-ed and the other one is thorn-ed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Erasing The One You Love Through Constant Repetition

You had the face
you love it much greater than the lips,

too much love
has kept you
in this prison

the arms are prisons
and to get away with
all these
intimate holding which you
began and all yours
alone to
hold,

you try to make a horrendous repetition hoping that soon
boredom comes and then everything is erased and
forgotten

when will that be?

you do not really
know.
you bury your eyes
inside
the darkness of your sockets Erections, Elections, No Objections

let us trade

martin.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ergonomics

the body speaks
in pain
and now i respect it when it screams

i must sit up straight maintain this integrity of a gentleman

amidst the ruins of my thoughts i raise the pillar of faith i make smooth the foundation of my being

i am here, and i am strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
Erica

Erica does not talk too much her moon has no nails there is no trace of a scratch when she had it
ziplessly
<*
? >
quickly in the train with someone who has no
name

RIC S. BASTASA
Ernie......

a long time
and now here you are with all these gray hairs, and you confess
that at this age all that you want to do is listen

it is unlikely that you write for their will be more corrections and it will really take a whole lifetime to finish and
remove all these errors

you watch Fox News everyday have more time for Hollywood movies and the local news

you don't go for a walk anymore in the boulevard to breathe salty air it does not interest you old friends are forgotten they are of no use somehow what is normal for you and routine is this need for an injection of insulin when others talk you always  look at your watch and as you move a glass of cola falls upon your stomach lots of lapses this time and oh, as usual, you have become so mortal so human

i am a writer
a poet Ernie and will always be both.

and so here i am again, babbling, exploring,
experimenting where to put monotony
and make it appear so beautiful

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive like an ordinary weed beside a cheap flower as a centerpiece of the interior part of the renovated living room in the house of a long dead friend.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Erotic Hair

when my hair gets long enough
after a month
uncut by my gay barber
they become so curly like my pubic
hair

and women
and even gays
love all the curls
of my hair

erotic hair
and i am wearing it as a crown

understand
i am coping up with mid-crisis
and i like to say

i got hair
and they are too curly like my (messy) sex life

listen, my life
begins at 69.

RIC S. BASTASA
Erotica

i am telling you i have the smell of something pungent
but you say you do not mind
in fact
you like the smell of pungent
substances

the wet one you even like to lick
and swallow

and then you
hold me
as you kneel
like i am
a god

and you plead
that i be hard
and so unforgiving

RIC S. BASTASA
Eroticism

you tell me
you are in bed
waiting
naked
and alone

and then
i swallowed
my pride
and tell you
i am coming

RIC S. BASTASA
Eroticism, You And I

eroticism is just the surface the skin where i pierce and make the necessary entrance to your heart to the bone of my feelings, and if you allow it
i may find myself
living in there: your heart my love, our only dwelling.

you must let me pass the surface so i can get inside your eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
Erotique

dark night's arms
so strong embracing the hot moon's round shiny body the clouds are cotton blankets in ecstasy the rain heavy with libido falls squirts the drops of rain the thirsty mouth of the earth opens and quenched

the universe
watches with glee
space expands and then explodes with joy giving birth to a million stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Erratum

be like the fish agile to the rages of the current sleek and smart
IN a second it escapes and is gone an illusion to your hands

RIC S. BASTASA
Errors

there will be always errors my errors
not yours, even your errors shall be mine for there will always be errors that is too normal for our lifetime too short to be erroneous but always real too real to be touched
too exciting
to be always noticed and too numb to be affected by their hypocrisies

you too? oh my, why? don't you like to be the most normal bird with only two wings to fly?
how can you use a third wing?
to see with the third eye aren't you funny to see on this third excess?

come, let us feast on these errors drink these glasses of errors be filled and vomit with errors defecate these errors and be empty again after having learned so much to become the newest genius in this town of errors.

RIC S. BASTASA
Errors And Silent Corrections

what i say need not be what i mean
and you know that just like what is written on the slabs of
stone
need not be God's handwritten orders
know why? the essence of this world is fluidity
water, air, space, light
time
they all flow
and there is nothing
which says
that their faces are as permanent as a sculpture
we try seizing them
and the
planets around their orbits
think that we are as usual
crazy creatures
unable to understand the natural laws of change and change
and change and
change.

RIC S. BASTASA
you are in prison and you know it there are no bars
but you simply feel the closing in of space around you and you sense the choking and tightening of your body with so much pressure against the walls of your imagination
the concrete beams
and ceiling moving towards the floor and you are at the middle of all these things

you want to escape
and you assume the shape of a very small bird growing wings on your sides like the new born leaves of a seed

without still the claws and beak and tongue you fly away
unhesitantly without so much waste
of time
& words

except the note of a very sad song
left on the barren floor
for someone
you no longer love

RIC S. BASTASA
Escape Of The Worm

when there are no words from the window
escape through the door or make a hole

on the floor
and slip your tiny self in there

and you crawl out like a worm into the open

you open your hidden wings and then you fly away where they cannot find you anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is no escaping song there is only the trap song when were you brought here? you do not really know, you were out of your mind when you find yourself sleeping on that hammock you were helpless and then you gave the first cry and they do not like it you grow to their wishes and work so hard to please them all hours are spent on a useful endeavor nothing is spared
your bones are about to crack
until one day
you look for the escape song and there is not any not one
there is only the trap song with such a melody telling you, stay, stay, the time may come and it is the right time and then you go on that graceful exit.
nothing shameful, just the dignity that you deserve.
wait, soon it will be given to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
hello anger, where have you been?
don't you like my kitten? It is missing you.
Don't you feel its hunger? It's thirst for you.

IT is its thirst that thirsts you. Don't you fret.
There is more to be done in this imperfection Of what is felt and what cannot be touched By our fingers.

hello anger, don't you have a comma for me?
Don't you stop for a while and see a new landscape of Ourselves?

There is this lively brook inside a book.
And I am trying to figure out some Happy characters for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Escaping From Your Hands.....

i have escaped from being one of those marionettes and so i proclaim that

i
do not need much
i
have enough
of me
and you
and i do not wish to prolong our agonies
in the luxuries that have numbed us into wood and tin cans
and scarecrows

i have finally escaped from your hands slipping like
mud

and with my own hands i sculpt a face
that you will never love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eskizo

imong gihimong yano ang tanan ang imong kaugalingon mao na lamang ang imong duha ka dunggan duha ka mata ug duha ka tiil gipapas nimo ang ilong kay dili na nimo kinahanglan ang gahom sa pagsimhot apil ang imong mga tudlo kay sa imong kadugayon gilaayan ka na sa mga kalipay niaanang paghikaphikap og paghapuhap milakat ka usa ka gabii niana mitan-aw ka sa luyo subay sa usa ka dalan nga gidan-agan sa usa ka bulan nga nagpahiyom kanimo nga dunay bungot ug imo pa untang gitutukan pag-ayo usa ka iring nga gustong mohapwag kanimo

RIC S. BASTASA
Esotericism

I do not indulge in this form of esoteric
Teachings, like the doctrines of Pythagoras
Or Aristotle,

Recondite,
I do not have some secrets now to hide,
What for? There is nothing private in me,
There is nothing worthy of confidentiality

This is not a poetry that is full of esoteric Allusions to be understood only by the select Few. What for? What for really?

There is nothing cryptic to the good that I must Do for you, as one good man is wont to do for Another good man,

For the good is open handed, it is not a closed Fist, the fingers that behave like crumpled paper

I am opening like my fingers to the sky
Like a bud of this little white flower to see the sun

In fact, if you read me through and through
I am revealing myself through and through

Piece by piece layer by layer like you are Going to the innermost me, there is no enigma

At the end and you may regret it though
I may not have cautioned you,
There are only drops of tears trapped in there

Salty and if you taste it, can be really sour.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am learning and i am learning everyday some truths keep coming like uninvited guests my stairs are dirty the soil and mud keep coming the living room is crowded and there are words everywhere on the arms of the chairs on the tables on the doors some words hang themselves, and i am not really at a loss, i am just amazed last night i promised myself to close the door and the windows and live a life of my own the following morning but it is not at all that simple, the house is lonely and if it decides to close all openings and seal all its rooms, how can the house breathe? let all these truths come, let them take the forms of poetry let them have the rose of the prose, the say of an essay, the narrations of the long novel, for now i have changed and have preferred once more to give in and to listen my ears are wide like highways my eyes as attentive as lighthouses my feet  patient as shoes waiting to be worn again i am a bowl and i let the rain come inside me they pour in like forms of bliss they fill me i do not break

i only overflow and then everyday the sun takes every part that i save and i become empty again i am the passive recipient, i am the spectator

they all reveal themselves as i watch in wonder i count my fingers
i sleep with all my dreams in darkness in light i am back to this wanton wander Esterlita

hey, it's 7pm. here in SD!
It's dinner time! ! !
See?
to everything there is a season,
a time to mystify and a time to satisfy!

there are wrinkles
that refuse to acknowledge the presence of a periwinkle, a dimple and an apple

all rotten except one,
it is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Estranged And Comforted

last night we made love.
we are conscious.
we know very well this:
you know it was not me
and i know it was not you.
we live together
and we like it that way we know this prison too well familiar with its ins and outs but we are convinced this is still a better bed and we have no plan escaping
pretense after all is a good medicine for all our longings
out there
there are true people bragging that they are free and genuine yet still begging for love
and not finding it
just the same.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am seeing what you do not see they are not invisible, they are real, subject always to more doubtful and debatable interpretations which i think you better not see because it demeans me and then i begin to write this poem, something that you may not like to understand but just the same it is here with a lot of doubtful validity, must this be a poem still? plain word getting into a prelude of a convoluted thinking failing to give more landscapes of colors and lines plain straight lines like a road, a very long road that you have been walking all throughout your life and asking if this is worth the day's troubles what i see here may demean you too it has demeaned me many times in the past and perhaps in the coming days, years, but i am always seeing it because it makes me alive my life worth living, at times i think that i am a very sinful man but i raise my eyes to God thanking him that he still makes me live this sinful life

those that understand me have always been misunderstood too a sympathizer to sinners but being misunderstood is a fact it is human and i am glad that you are here too supporting cast to this human drama this humanity that screams at times and then so silent in the sleep because the soul is too tired coping up with the mistakes of the body etcetera....

RIC S. BASTASA
Eternity

we are under the full moon tonight and we look for some tiny stars glittering in the skies our vision dissolving into such a vast space where we see no endings no beginnings we soon close our eyes and there we too see no endings no beginnings limitless to the skies limitless to the heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Eternity

you are told to just watch to make ready your eyes for the amazement the wonders of this world cannot be contained in a jar

of words
they always overflow and pass and fade and come back again when your eyes are ready for another
show

once you fall asleep then on the other moment you forget what is it all about you are too busy with your games
chasing the frolic of time's mutability

there is such a thing as waking up deep inside you when time is not time anymore but merely moments of connections to every nerve to every unconsciousness here, there is no waking neither there is sleeping there is just that moment of seeing

eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eternity Is Felt....

life is a
dance

when we dance
we simply enjoy
the music
and ourselves

there is no
thinking when the music ends

no thinking even where to go
after

within the music
eternity is felt....

RIC S. BASTASA
Etioles Brillantes

to those eyes closed from behind heaven is felt stars are seen God speaks near
the face.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eulogy

we have come to bury her but forgive me
unlike Marc Anthony
i shall praise her

this woman for others Christ-like no ambition
all but service
to the nation

this firm woman who hints the Ode to the West Wind

she is silenced now
heaven's gain
earth's loss

Patricia.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eulogy For Caloyski

Caloyski was a good man he was always silent listening and participating about educating the workers that time there were few stores in the city and C. served snacks and it was delicious

Bennie is a happy wife for Caloyski was not a problematic man who gave him many children who shall work in the store and then later on have lives of their own ah, everyone is like a smoke from a firewood burning slow passing yes merely passing no one stays here forever the same thing that Caloyski explained to his kids when he was still alive

and sane

NOW he shall be silent forever
and forever shall he be a good man
for those who still remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
Euonia For Blok

things beautiful
some things,
beautiful things like

blooms of booms
flumes of flames in fumes things beautiful, of all things beautiful, so beautiful so near, yet so untouched, you look around for things so beautiful bloomings of boomings boozing a, e, i, o, u

love love love lovely love lovingly loving love loved lastly this lust asking: love do you still love me?

RIC S. BASTASA
The time has come when you have so many things to tell or experiences to share the bitter and sweet ones the exciting moments of those that happened unexpectedly like moon exploding or suns becoming hell or heavens turning into paradise islands or stones becoming hearts or squashes becoming carriages or Cinderellas turning into real flesh and bones you are so amazed and you are caught into a stillness where you cannot write even a word flashes of light, too much light, too much light all of us becoming blind by these enlightenment
people with eyes closed and yet can see everything, everything complete with colors, scents and excruciating details if you know what i mean by now you must have closed your eyes and see the rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
Eureka!

it is universal
the law of gravity of depression
pulls you down

it hands to you a mirror
where you see yourself as gnarled

you feel
so lonely and deprived

you feel the weight of injustice

you imagine
a self as a rock pulverized
into nothingness

there is a need
to rise to be careful
about the
blob of uselessness
eating you out wearing
you out like a broken gear
of a machine

you are not what that mirror
makes out of you
there is a splendor
in your own
world
the beauty of your own
moon
the majesty of your stars

and these are all in your mind
you must believe in them

stay in there and be well.

RIC S. BASTASA
Evading The Obvious

what is more obvious is the sculpture of pain standing in the middle of the road
where we always pass
every morning

no one minds it but it is there but there are some who care
and touch the tip of the bleeding stone

those who recognize its existence
finally discover the secret vein of
freedom...

RIC S. BASTASA
Evanescent

who likes to vanish and turn to air?

even moistures don't ey they keep on clinging to leaves like morning dews but there is this evanescence of all things
ugly or beautiful

fading feelings fleeting fainting ecstacies and pains

after love, after love is gone we all tend also to be imperceptible scarcely words turn to syllables commas and period
and then
nothing

who tries to hold my whisper? your lips? oh they close after a moment of a little kiss an opening

who knows what menthol is? what camphor is?
do you still remember how an old perfume on the side of your ears smell?

white smoke rising to the ceiling from a candle light that you have just blown off you thought there was nothing there was something and it is still lingering.

RIC S. BASTASA
Evasion Of A Tearful Story

as she was telling her own version of the story which the other in advance said was fabricated (she used the term fake)
her
tears
keep falling

like corn
seeds

i look at the ceiling trying to find the spider

or the lizard trying to swallow a whole
careless mosquito

things are like these sometimes evade, what destroys our day climb on the stairs of the imagination forget

forgive
if not go away

RIC S. BASTASA
Evasive

the answers are shy
they have not matured

they always are not confronting the questions

which keep on roaming like Nazi soldiers looking for the kill of the innocent ones the answers are arrows

with blunt tips

the questions are the black holes
of our universe

who dares to answer all of them
not me

i see all the questions and i am but a little boy stupid on the street

looking for mother
and afraid of what a father can do to defend the senselessness of my posture

the questions are alive
the answers need a redemption

i take the side step write a poem and then sleep

who know?
the answer is nothing but a dream
yes, a dream
something ephemeral

yes, an illusion
something like a mirror

yes, a moment,
something that must pass like the shadow of the moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Evasive (Edited For One Letter Only)

the answers are shy
they have not matured

they always are not
confronting the questions

which keep on roaming like Nazi soldiers looking for the kill of the innocent ones

the answers are arrows
with blunt tips

the questions are the black holes
of our universe

who dares to answer all of them
not me

i see all the questions
and i am but a little boy stupid on the street

looking for mother
and afraid of what a father can do

to defend the senselessness of my posture

the questions are alive
the answers need a redemption

i take the side step
write a poem and then sleep

who knows?
the answer is nothing but a dream
yes, a dream
something ephemeral

yes, an illusion
something like a mirror

yes, a moment,
something that must pass like the shadow of the moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even After The Much Needed Rain

i am dry
a river bed whose pebbles are wearing dead moss

i wait for your rain it is not only me who needs water here you must rain
and even flood us

we are dry
we are not afraid of drowning to your excesses we have long died even when the smell of the rain invades our desert.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even As A Young Boy

even as a young boy
i know
flowers fade petals wilt rivers become dry & birds fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
Even For The Meantime....

in this world of chaos where brother kills brother where buses are bombed and innocent civilians killed in numbers i take refuge on a chair beside the window of my house still awed by those ripe guavas hanging on the tree fronting me,

fresh air from the sea, silence from the meadows, self in isolation, a retreat from the street, evils in society temporarily forgotten we need this sometimes even for the meantime.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Even For This Moment......

if mannequins
exist,
why can't we

we who can pretend to be mannequins

in the sequence of humanity

we who can be better at surviving as robots in the world of work

robots still in love, in pleasure in lust
in merry making

do you care about what i feel?
do not ask me for the
truth
i may hurt you a bit

you may leave me for the truth
and so with a lie,
i can take you in
even for this moment.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even If It Is Not Easter

dthis is the day
tthat God has always made for me in His Hands I give thanks before Him shall I bow

dthis is the day
That God has made for me

for us
Let us sing and show to Him
that despite everything

There is always a reason for The celebration

From our eyes
Let us remove the tears

Let us be happy Now
For He is here on the day that he has made for all of us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even If Love Is Gone...

brave woman
learn from me love is not all it is not everything love too diminishes
even gone
but look at this day
even without it
the sun still shines
the rivers did not stop flowing
the winds still come and go the pendulum still swings to its usual

to and fro

time never stops for
love
and neither can love
stop it from running

the moon at night
still maintains its elegance with all those blinking stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even If You'D Never Seen Surgery Before, You Could Do It Because Vivien Made It Look So Simple,

one who knows how to do it teaches you
not only how to do it but you also begin
to admire the confidence
about how simple can it be

RIC S. BASTASA
Even In Love You Must Also Be Prepared

sometimes the drought comes
i know

sometimes it will take a very long time for the rain to come back we know it

sometimes all the waters in our well get dry
and we all anticipate it

we are prepared
for all these
a long time now

i hate to say this to you but i always know how to say goodbye too with the dignity of decency and you know it

and when will that be i am keeping it suspended in the air like the sword of Damocles my world is always an open door it closes when i say the word and you know it very well i once told you

nothing lasts forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Even In The Driest Of The Desert

out there in the driest part of the desert a flower still thrives thin leaves
and tiny petals
stalks like wires and roots
penetrating the softness of the sands
out there
it is preaching of hope resiliency

some flowers are scarlet deep blue but nowhere can you find
black

black is the color of death red is the color of the wounded sands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even Near You

from a distance you see an egg white shell, put it against the light of your love,

i am empty.
i am nothing.
i am true.

i am really sorry
for this. i do not have you inside this emptiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even On The Late Hour Of The Night

even when late,
try getting in, they will not notice, you are not famous, try being a nobody and they won't bother, so get inside the room and pretend you are not a part of them in this discussion, behave like you are the waiter bringing them a glass of water,
no excuses this time, do not talk, do not bother them,
and they too will not bother you, try being nothing
just be the ordinary you, and they will not notice, even on the late hour of this night they still have eyes only for themselves within their circle and you are still an outcast, simply because from the very first day of this meeting you are just being yourself and you remain being so, you have not become like them, mimicking each other
into conformity for fear of rejection, so at this hour of the night when they seem to enjoy each other's likeness get inside,
just be yourself and take your own kind of drink your self-identity your name that they will never know when tomorrow
you will soon part and they will be themselves again
alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even The Best Chosen Words Cannot Tell.

i can sacrifice, once, twice, thrice, or even to the nth time, one which you cannot count, in the name of words, which ultimately boils down to

God, His Majesty,
his Omnipotence,
those were the reckless times, rushing to the sea, caressing the hair with so much salt, and diving deep, learning how not to breath and yet see the beauty, in complete silence, where the self is lost away from everyone on the surface of

things,

i can always sacrifice, what i want to be, i can throw money to the river, and see all these gone, as i did once, in the name of poetry,
and our friendship, in a certain place under the moon, beside the forest, upon the foot of hills, where barehanded we embrace life at its utmost helplessness, and yet so complete with nothing at all, naked, warm, deep, fulfilled.

how do we make it happen? even the best chosen words cannot tell.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even The Petals Of The Flower

even the petals of the flower
holds the dew only for a short moment like the passing wind like us we also hold unto our souls like petals of the flower holding on to the morning dew only for a short moment like the passing wind like all of us.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is always time
for poetry
even if you see him in court
even if the smoke rises
on the ceiling
even if fire razes a house even if all the roofs fail even if the rivers run dry again even if continents sink even if the oceans grow so fat and like a monster gobbles us all into another waste
thrown into this universe of
space.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Even Though I Walk In The Dark Valley: A Pantoum

The Lord is my shepherd; there is nothing I shall want.

Even though I walk in the dark valley
I fear no evil; for you are at my side.

Even though I walk in the dark valley
I fear no evil; for you are at my side.

Even though I walk in the dark valley
I fear no evil; for you are at my side.

Even though I walk in the dark valley
I fear no evil; for you are at my side.

Even though I walk in the dark valley
I fear no evil; for you are at my side.

Even though I walk in the dark valley
I fear no evil; for you are at my side.

Even though I walk in the dark valley
I fear no evil; for you are at my side.

The Lord is my shepherd; there is nothing I shall want.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even When Sad

dis this coming
va loveys day
i will
focus on your nails

make them
red

red as your lips reddish as reddish can be like your red heart
red blood
red love
red eyes
red thoughts like a revolution that sadly lost

the flavor of victory

i will kiss your red nails and bite them

on va loveys day
i will be stupid

like a clown with big red lips smiling even when (sad).

RIC S. BASTASA
Even Without A Single Star In The Sky

i have learned to sleep soundly on an ocean of a night sky, like a tiny fish on a bed of the ocean floor without the protection of corals i am a prey to everyone's pleasure.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even Without The Moon....

the day arrives
and gives you the sense of blandness to what once tasteful

spontaneously you waited for this

you don't click anymore and it is pointless to still say the same words of endearment over and over again less its original meaning and now, you announce to the sun you are ready for the night even without the moon

you shall dance.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even Without You

perhaps i have to ask myself why i mumble
like no other restless bee that i can be in the twilight years
of my life

do i refuse to see light?

have i fallen in love with my own darkness?

do i wish the blindness of wisdom?

is wisdom blind?

is there light at the end of this tunnel?

am i in this tunnel?

i am in a room with only one window and it faces the road where everyone passes tonight this is the only passage to their homes and they simply pass by here i make no sound when i open these windows when i close them repeatedly

perhaps i exist and they know it perhaps they only have respect for my silence perhaps i am to blame for all these perhaps i have chosen silence its golden sheen

its private space

i am thinking, and that is the most important thing that is happening in all my life

even without you

RIC S. BASTASA
Even....

this time
you have to be candid

no lies, go for plain truths

i need to say this: your cooking
is disappointing....

mine too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Even.....

when she leaves
she swears
she leaves nothing
not even a penny

we who listened
like it.
we too swear
not to like her.
when she leaves
we burn
everything
bridges and memories.

this anger is
a burning fire.
it will be enough
even to cremate her.

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Closed Door

for every closed door they say another window opens so? now you do not have to walk you must jump from this nth floor

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Day I Hone A Knife.

i have a stone. I make sparks.
And the knife gets sharper and it even shines against
the sun.

everyday, i view the knife.
i have learned to love it.
I have nobody to stab.
I just like the art of honing a knife. Its sharpness has no use for me. It is just having it and not using it to do something bad.

And i tell you, this is art.

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Drop

every dropp is precious in my mind the trickle lingers darkness in suspension nothing bluish

plain cool breeze on my cheek

i walk
the directions are useless now that i have found the joy in your bosom

every dropp counts to form this sweet syrup all dripping from the kindness of your being darkness too lovely to sip

the hours pass and we are watching with all content we are all alone and quiet

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Leak In Our Being...

how i wish i could escape,
and you tell me,

you may if you want to
she is never a door
to you,

you are a window without a lock
a glass that looks out to a scenery of green and misty mountains on a perfect
sunny day
of this stable house this unshaken
pillar

how i wish i could be out of this cage,
and you tell me,

it is the cage of your making your mind is inventing every bar

you close
something that is beaming with the openness of freedom you have painted all the furniture with the colors of the forest the cabinets with the color of the sea the living room has become a flowing river and the dining table a frozen sun

the chairs have become shells singing emptiness
to the amber sky
the roof whispers for the stories about stars

she says, what more do you wish? shall you destroy this placement
of our universe
some more?
what more would you ask?
do you ask the impossible? you are blowing the sirens of the absurd

cool calm, do not rush
the hours
they are sleepy

you wish to leave?

please do, but before that please try wearing my shoes
and tell me
if this place is not worth keeping if there are no explanations still that can fill every hole in your mind every leak
of our being every wasted hour that lies helpless on the face of the clock....

be the salt of my earth stay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Moment Every Color

i can be another person through you
with your eyes as mine
i can forget what i have seen
from mine

will i be happier with what i see?

i can always be a prism or you can be mine

i look at you and pass through you
and then
the colors come and i shall love
it

every moment every color

but for how long? i am called by by the voice of the wind to be myself again

my eyes are tired but they are mine this is home of age,
the house of debacle,
which i cannot piece out anymore which is the door and which is the floor

from where i come i shall return for surely death is still the sweetest home mourn for me

exude all the colors
my prism..
Every Morning

You are faithful to your morning Prayers and your habit of Having coffee first After waking up

So the room smells of coffee Fumes wafting Settling to My nostrils
As I pretend sleeping

You complain somehow
That this room
No longer smells
The pungent
Odors
of lovers

Of our common Sweat drying because We have overslept
Because we are so exhausted each one unattended.

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Morning...

since you have become my habit as you are my favorite i shall not fail the day seeing you and my heart begins to beat my feet to dance and my mind begins to fly like swordfishes to the sky but i have not forgotten the rules i can only see you but never touch i can only think of you but never hug neither can i kiss your lips i can only sleep back and dream again and again

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Night That You Cannot Hold What You Love Most, You Always Go Into The Labyrinths Of Rationalization

love sometimes is unrequited, and the best way to respond to this matter is to say that it is not love at all, that this is just pure lust, and every night that you cannot hold what you love most,

you always go into the labyrinths of rationalization, this is not love, it is not love how can love be like this?

at the end you arrive at the threshold of pain, where pain is not pain anymore but a lesson learned, and you still keep on saying proving to yourself that you are right it was love, yes it was the purest of love felt, but it was wrong and wrong is wrong and nothing but wrong, and you rest your head upon a pillow beside no one,

declaring yourself as King as survivor of the greatest misery of all, love unrequited

as the king of love clapped by the pains of the majority,

well, you ended it well, you have a face, a body, everything in you is intact nothing diminished, nothing gained, whole, and

still full of love, despite.

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Poem Is About Herself And...

every poem, she likes to think, is about herself, and it is like a diary, that bares all what she is what she wants to be....

it is like she is dancing on the floor while we watch
unbelieving that she can do such a thing...

she strips naked before our eyes and we close our eyes the baby fat, the broken bone, the hanging abdomen the loose skin on the ribs, the elongated breasts suffering through all the years i ask her if she can put back her dress she cries and then she leaves i guess, that was her best poem ever written.

sad, and finally departing like the hands on the boat on the economy class leaving looking for the land of promise searching for happiness

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Step Every Memory

i have left everything and do not really care what happens every step had been taken
and now
i have no reason to look at every memory
they're like the wind too the comings and goings
are getting invisible to
me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Tear You Shed For The Dead You Love

Reminds them of the earth people who love them And the dead are now confused

To go or not to go To finally leave and be full-fledged souls to the other world

Every tear confuses them And you are so cruel, you shed so many tears

Enough for the dead to be restless and crazy, Please stop crying, let the dead go, we just buried them.

RIC S. BASTASA
Every Time You Leave Me....

when you walk away
i inhale so much air
and feel the comfort of the little space
that you have built
in the house

i mark all vacancies and begin to paint the boundaries from where you stand the steps that slowly take their exit from the garden of daffodils

how i wish to tell you that i like this situation when i am left and you are gone away when i can think much without so many distractions your words on the wall your thoughts hanging on the china cabinet

your finger prints on every empty cup

i think i could have been free a long ago without the benefit of trials

on the breakfast table i sit alone
and distinct from other mornings
with you
i turn off the TV
not wanting to hear any news Everyday I Feel That I Am Slowly Buried

i try to wake up and rise from my lowly state and every hour that you face me i feel like a small turtle in my silence beside the still river and you speak and explain and argue like the wind and the leaves and the clouds everyday when i am with you i feel like am being buried everyday layer and layer of sand and pebbles and stones and twigs and branches and heaps of leaves i am losing my art of breathing and i am beginning to accept the fact that you have the capacity to lose me the world shrinks and the river becomes deeper the view around me is crowded and dark and i look for you i call for you and you are no longer there sometimes i need to redefine love when companionship loses the grip of hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyday I Wake Up

yes, and despite or whatever i never tell them what i feel,
there is no need
i am numb.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyday Is A Happy Day

here my stay shall be short quality-wise in the secret garden of my soul i am singing and then when the song is done i go

it is as simple as that baby i call it life
and life some more after not here with you

with them out there on another kind of party

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyday Is A New Painting Of New Masks And Layer Of New Beginnings to live inside a locked door

a closed window and then just be the self that you are and then to own your silence and when everything is savored to open the windows and the door again to be another self as one joins the rest members of the house for a wholesome breakfast on conversations that you simply let pass from one ear to the other.

everyday is a new painting of new masks and layer of new beginnings

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyday Is A Poem To Me

the people i love and talk to, in some ways, do not talk candidly, perhaps because of too much love, not really unspoken because they want to hide it, it is just because, i know, there are no exact words to describe
what they feel,

it is the same with me, feelings thriving but the inability to speak is there, and so we use such symbols as a touch of the hand or a blush on the cheek, or some fingers landing at the back of our soft skins

one need not say what longing and loving is the lips have more to say in fact, than the words coming from the mouth or the mere laying of her head on my shoulders oh, the hug and that gaze and the clasping of my hands to her hands,

such sensitivity that makes us feel every rising of the hair not in fear, but in the absence of letters fit for the feeling

breakfast together
and then the parting and meeting again
tonight

they are all metaphors

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyday Is A Special Occasion

with you
everyday is a special occasion a celebration
so i wear my best polo shirt and you serve me
the best breakfast in town we hide nothing precious you serve all the special things
for us
so when we die no one laughs at us for keeping things with all dusts

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyday Is One Day More

yes one day more another day another pain another sorrow another rain it is this waiting of the big day that keeps us waiting for the big day

what is it really that we are waiting for?
what is that big day?
i do not mean death. It is night.
i speak about the big day when light comes to defeat darkness
i speak of joy and bliss and happiness when they come and make a feast because i we have become triumphant because we have conquered this darkness because we have finally understood the reason of sorrow the purpose of pain
the justifications that like naked truths are still dressed with the confusions of our mind the big day comes sooner and then we shall all be free!

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyone Is As Beautiful As One Can Possibly Be

well, you ask,
if everyone can be as beautiful as possibly one could be, and i say, yes, and i add, that everyone can be as humorous as one could possibly be, it all depends on how you would like to be, just like a very lively party, one could be as lively as one could possibly be and think one as beautiful as a possibility, and then

way back home, when you are all alone, you shed tears, and listen to the sound of reality.

that is also a possibility. well, i tell you you can be real this time.

RIC S. BASTASA
his ending (whatever that is, but swear to God, you know it too well like the back of your hand)
is definitely not like yours or that of everyone,

it is an ending which is a real ending, no traces, no memorials, no tombs, no landmarks,
no note, no memories,

it reverts back to there was never ever a man here, he was never here even for once and he has no name, no one shall remember where he was once or what once he did, it is like a poem that you write and which you seem to like and even want to save but then you finally decided to delete it and so what appears finally is a blank wall your eyes are disappointed because what you see stops there and when you close your eyes everyone is dead. You are included.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyone Is Worth Dying For....

for here we are as we must teach them all the right things:

albert says it all,
in this absurd world no matter what no matter how, no one is worth killing, everyone

who still breathes,
is worth dying for.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyone Under The Same Situation

you are always afraid to tell anybody that you are dying perhaps you are simply respecting them for their mutual silence you know too well that you are into the same situation

you are settled upon a conviction that
there is no need

everyone has a way to end living after having earned

time to believe that after all nothing is worth the hassle

happiness has become an illusion and lament and grief have become too real as forms of dressing up for the next stable and glorious occasion.

RIC S. BASTASA
births and unbirths
life and death, massacres and adoptions pregnant women and death of old deserted people the rise to power
the fall of dictators
the numbness of the people the hope that others give for free the lust and passion the love and hate and indifference and succor whatever, whatever, whenever, whoever
all these
do not happen in random all is written and all is fulfilled God and demons angels and cockroaches
lice and tadpoles
cocoons and snakes,
all these happen for a reason we too
and them
those who believe and those who do not all these happen because they are meant to be and so i watch and stand and sit and think and let all these go accept and smile and sleep and dream and then die all these happen for the reason and i therefore, do not worry there are always reasons and so i no longer ask why.

i am now, the silent spectator.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Fades, Nothing Lasts.

there are so many things, treasures
if you please, a house, a resort Sundays, and Fridays,

there are places of the heart where love used to reign,

so many ideas, great ones, building you an edifice of a name, blazing lights that announce fame and the concomitant fortune,

there are so many friends, real ones too, but time is laughing there is nothing serious to speak of,
nothing to make you last forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything From The Beginning

everything from the beginning has always been right with you the way you smile at me the first time you touch my hair and caress my back with your gentle massage everything has always been fulfilling
the way you cook the meals and arrange the flowers the way you clean the room and keep the broom

there is no reason why we must part.
tell me, why? please.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Has Meaning

the floor give meaning to the ceiling the shore to the sea the moon to the night sky the sun to the earth and man in between and woman around the arms of man and the dog amidst them there is meaning to everything and to everyone, and the important conclusion is inevitable there is meaning in you.

decorate this meaning with a smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Here Exits

we mourn for those who exits ahead of us in that Door of the Great Divider

sometimes i think

that those who arrive
there
also mourn for us who are left here

we who are in the bitterness of greater pains

of incoming miseries of ever pinning pains

they wish that we are there with them

but they can never tell.

RIC S. BASTASA
Rianne, you evolve somehow You must know, how you started Your first lines with something Like the womb of your mother Some classical music
And nursery lines recited Even before you are born

And then you talk about Papa and mama and their loving hands
The male guitar the female voice And tender fingers and rosy cheeks And some babbles on the cradle

You grow up and talk about love And the opera and some applause Remembering the phantom songs And the labyrinths of the heart A little complication now A grudge of some little prisons And some birds wanting to be free From a golden cage

Then Rianne I anticipate something Sooner you will learn my language Of happiness and bliss and wandering To the sea, the one with a beginning And seemingly without an end

How I decided to swim be like a fish And be with the corals of the deep How I like to have fins and codes Deep down the far oceans to other continents How I like some things far away How I like never coming back Because there is so much out there And everything I once owned and claim to own Have all become exhausted
RIC S. BASTASA
Everything In Poetry Is Allowed

everything in poetry is allowed
so much sweat had been wasted so many words alienated from their own meanings on the issue of which is true poetry even of that let me state once more that everything in poetry is allowed whatever is it that comes from your mouth that slips from your lips becomes a poem by the intensity of your intention today my mouth gives birth to bees and i am telling you a poem is a swarm of bees like a set of hands spreading some prayers tonight i shall dream of words escaping from my mouth i see them as snakes singing oh, i see, i am telling you a poem is a choir of snakes hissing a song (do you really imagine that? am i not a little bit weird?)

i never tire giving birth to words, and images, and metaphors and a poem never gets weary like the insomniac still not wanting to sleep oh, i see, you too must have words like these those that never sleep, you see? what a poem can be?

a poem is a set of sleepless words, smoking at night, looking over the window, naked, like a very beautiful woman, looking for love.

you want things to make connections? hmm, don't be silly, some connections do not seem to be takes time, sometimes, takes even death upon one's self, to see the light.

but don't you worry, whatever is it, becomes a poem by the intensity of your affections.

RIC S. BASTASA
you must notice that everything in you seems to be wrong your arms are shouting violence and your mouth carries the venom of the snake and keeps on spitting and your eyes carry the knives of serial killers stabbing anyone that comes your way your body is twisted and your feet crawl like this centipede your hands have become scorpions looking for something to bite in the desert of your heart and then you laugh like thunder and you touch people like lightning and you finally find yourself alone like it were the very first day of creation complete darkness without any light without water and earth just this cosmic chaos and you tell yourself i am so lonely and i am laughing and this is pretty bad.

who in your world would like to live with you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Is A Structure. Always, And Always With A Function.

everything is a structure of walls, and divisions, and perforations, and meetings. This morning, a venetian blind and a screen window play a house and a fence.

sunshine is a visitor. It has hands and it touches the skin of my face. I feel warm and this runs over my body like a child playing in the park

There is no crowd yet. I can feel the fall of memories on my hair.

The sun filters itself. It says something restrained.
There is a process. Nothing is as abrupt as disrespect.

The world is a gentleness of light and body, Fences can do nothing. Walls break away.

The heart grows like a dough of home made bread.

Baked, the world wakes to a certain flavor of life.
Like this bread. It spreads its scent all over the kitchen, enters my door, and then gets inside me. The air bows down.

It has done what it is tasked to do.

everything is a structure.
always, and always with a function.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Is Exactly Inexact

at the end you weigh me again i lack some points on the scale a shortage of what you put in there from the very start, i grieve but it is late, i try to justify that everything when they end is exactly inexact by reason of some unexplained feelings and overspent emotions, yet you are not convinced and you shake your head and you said

'next! '

i grieve yet it is too late, at the end there shall be no more forgiveness that i once had on this place of this earth regret always comes late.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Is Still Alright

when you arrive
dinner is served and we have a drink
of some bottles of beer we have some desserts and you say you love every part of it
the longer nights
matched with our conversations
we laugh a lot
and then you have your bed and bath
warm as you describe them

two days and we tell you have some more
and then you leave us everything is alright despite the fact that you forget to say thanks

perhaps you will justify we never ask for it at any rate we shall always say
welcome

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Is Still The Same

what is written on paper is a prescription, i am trying to draw some images that lead to creation and not to self-destruction

last night another crazy decision is cast before he did it
he writes a note: when reason for life is lost, life is lost

when someone tells you, Life is worth living the other side also evokes it. Life is not worth living anymore.

No one can be of help. Each one is drowning too.

Others are merely on the start of the journey taking a big knapsack of provisions, a partner beside, and some children's hands to hold,

in the middle of the journey some hands lose grip, children become grown-ups and take their separate paths,
separate lives,
more ideas, clashing views, wars within,

to an extreme you finally find yourself alone and you are now at the top of the mountain where it gets to snow as well it is cold, and you hear no sound except the howling of the wind and sounds of wild dogs and then it gets too dark, you warm yourself with your fire, your thick clothes and make a tent, and sleep some are gone

the following morning
it is hard to think how they manage to jump instead of coming back and telling the good story of the comeback

sometimes it is better to just stay
on the plains
do nothing and just wait let the seasons come and go and simply be an observer, and then write about it.

everyone dies anyway.
less pressure, less pain, and everything is still the same.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Is Stinking.

raffy
you are spilling
all those
red beans,

do you expect me to pick them
all?

who likes beans?
you?
as i told you
i am leaving, and you are busy,

and you have the best
killer gun in this town

leave the beans
let them grow and

fill this empty
world with more beans

red beans, red beans
all over

raffy you close
your mouth

this world
is already polluted

everything is
stinking.
Everything Is Temporary You Know

nothing, nothing
is ever permanent, & so when i kiss you
i always,
always remind myself that in another moment it can be another usual parting,
sweetest when
as early as dawn
after the hug
and the warmth
all night,
i begin to compare it with pain duly accepted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Is Yours

FINDING IGGY

first he finds the sun and looks at it directly for a while and was blinded seeing red all over inside his retina and then recovers and finds composure to God again

and then everything is God the bird, the stalk, the bud, the sea, and moon and stars,

so many gods in one
God

but that is not just that he finds God in misunderstanding and chaos
and all those sorts of things spark plugs, and bent spoons, unused canes, wheelchairs, electric bills,

unpaid mortgage,
low salaries, overworked bodies, unschooled kids,
missing keys, rusty doorknobs,

abandoned houses,
houses of ill-repute,
strip teasers, ermita escapades, .
cheap motels,

cheating taxi drivers, broken pens,
and so on and so forth
and like Iggy, he finally rests his weary head upon the bosom of the endless earth, saying:

To you, Lord, I return it. Everything is yours; do with it what you will. Give me only your love and your grace, that is enough for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Small

feet will be short and hands so fragile that may even break with the force of your whisper everything small like tight buds a voice in between two silk cloths tightly folded in ten layers of silence and indifference unreadable

syllables, that to you sound so cute and so lovely small soft thought ike fingers of a new born brother your father walks to and fro in the house 27 years ago, like a pendulum counting time wasting thought

going nowhere, when he died, he said did you doubt him? that boy he never looks like me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Tastes Bitter

Come what may
The usual cannot be embraced anymore It is the unusual that delights My mind & senses

Extraordinary senses Unidentified

My taste buds getting Uncertain which is salt

Which is sweet?
Which is sour?

Rehabilitate my tongue
Everything tastes bitter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Unfolds The Way They Want To

delamar comes to me by the shore folding and unfolding and folding and unfolding wave after wave ripple after ripple
like the way they all want to

i just watch
i do nothing everything is just fulfilling and fulfilling and fulfilling and coming and coming and going and going i just watch and i do nothing i can do nothing

they are just doing and going and coming and fulfilling

RIC S. BASTASA
Everything Were Symbols

in the garden of Eden
the apple, the snake, Adam and Eve
and God

and why do we ask if the apple was actually an apricot, or that the snake was not a cobra but a boa, or that Adam and Eve were actually humans

or that God exists or that indeed there was really this garden of Eden?

ey they are all symbols all figuratively speaking metaphors of this divinity and mortality
entwined

ey they are matters of
the heart
and why not let them just be as they are in our hearts, in our hearts

alone

RIC S. BASTASA
Everytime A Poet Is Killed

every time a poet is killed
and buried
unceremoniously on some hidden ground

it is there where you see purple flowers blooming on a patch of earth
beside it
a singing river runs seeking final refuge to the Great Blue Sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Everytime I Go Out Of The House

always i check
if i have my cellphone in my front shirt pocket
my pen and my small white stationery
something to write
just in case a new idea comes along

neat and clean and ready always for an emergency

all the days of my life i think my life should be that way

except perhaps
the unhappy ending

RIC S. BASTASA
Everytime I Look At You

such a feeling
though i have no wings of the bird i know i can fly

such a high state of my
mind
my heart begins to have the wings
of the bird
flying to the skies

such a foolishness
i pinch myself
this is going absurd
since you are not here such a stupidity of my imagination going berserk such pain
making me fear the light such darkness
humiliating my own little light left flickering
and with a slight blow of the hush from the dusts of the curtain dies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Everyting Is Interrelated

the tip of my toe
and the tip of my hair have a connection
and in their connection through a secret conversation they are talking about me on a sickness that extends to the sea towards the sky
beyond the limits of the understanding of the silent space

RIC S. BASTASA
Evidence

for one thing
that only evidence you have is the certainty inside
your mind

no blood samples
no dead body

where is the knife that you have been dreaming of?

RIC S. BASTASA
Evolution

used to be plain understandable instructions like a manual of what to do when the times get rough or when so in love

and you like it
others say it is so obvious and to the taste buds, numbing and to the nerves so boring

and then time has a way of feeding you
its evolutionary coping up mechanisms

from a mole you turn things into a hill

a tadpole to a whale
a breeze to a storm

no rules now no guides to follow suit
just plain
rambling like a boat tossed by the stormy sea

and deep down under
the sea
this sinking comes like a true phenomenon

corrals and fish and electric eels
and ocean floors

mermaids dance and some Britons a Triton

a palace under the sea
Atlantis reborn

now, it is you so different and yet so equipped and so misunderstood like a river without banks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ex

to the one we love that we desire we always remember the specific hard to forget really: the mere touch of the hand scent never leaves from the palm the nearness of the breaths there is still fire burning crackling popcorn nearby that time where you were seated near at the park in one of those benches facing the road

the smell of the pines still sticking in your nose the laughter of children playing

that exact bench that spot where you left the mark

the feel of wood
the color of the wind the taste of that ice cream on the crispy cone
that orange sunset and then the neon lights that started to flicker like stars in the sky that evening

the sadness of departure
finally

oh, it made you stronger.
Except

I too, will be with thieves, and slanderers And robbers, embezzlers, child molesters, Rapists, prostitutes, and murderers Today,
Listening
Patiently listening, like a father to sons & daughters on a big family, I will be with them, hearing their woes, and Worries, and cries, and Lies,

I was born to listen to all of them,

Except for the tax collectors,
For whom, Christ with Zaccheus, once ate Long time ago.

Today, all of them have been absolved of their sins, Now they ride in flashy cars, Live in their own mansions These tax collectors,

Except
All those above enumerated, all the people Still pay them their taxes, feeding them, sheltering them,

As I today, shall hear all their woes & cries But mostly, lies and more lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Except For One Thing......

she puts the pudding on the table

she says
do not eat it

she arranges the bed pillows and blankets do not sleep

here she quips

she puts order in the living room upkeep all the knives and ladles then i put my shoes and open the door she says something which i hear clearly i follow everything except for one thing....

RIC S. BASTASA
'What is your favorite dish, grandad?'
'All of them, my son. It's a great sin to say this is good and that is bad.'
'Why? Can't we make a choice?'
'No, of course we can't.'
'Why not?'
'Because there are people who are hungry.'

I was silent, ashamed.
My heart had never been able to reach that height of nobility and compassion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Excerpt,  A Grammatical Lapse Corrected....

a long time
and now here you are with all these gray hairs,

and you confess
that at this age all that you want to do is listen

it is unlikely that you write for there will be more corrections and it will really take a whole lifetime to
finish and
remove all these errors

RIC S. BASTASA
Excerpt: Correction Of An Enigma

i am lost in the symbols
of humanity,

i am trying to decipher again the meaning of their visit and their decision to spend the night here at the second floor of this house where my father-in-law died because his son pushed him towards the stair and hit his head on the grinding stone

RIC S. BASTASA
Excerpt: The Magma

the natives are smelling so badly saliva dries on their lips they rub carabao manure on their bodies and put a dead beetle on their navels there is no water in the river where they come from it was taken by thirsty fish towards the China sea

ey they are thin
i mean their children who only eat
buds of
the guava tree

their stomachs are filled with air
their
hairs with lice

i guess you know when this happens and why this happens

because, it is fiesta time and there is no more road for us to use because the more important figures are busy playing
deaf.

RIC S. BASTASA
Exclusivity....

the selfishness abounds in the picture

a mom coddles her dad and only daughter beside a landscape of tulips

for it's springtime and freshness is everywhere the cameras click and some people not close to the family have to be driven saying

'excuse me, can you move out from there' family picture, eh?

there exists this feeling of being excluded

somehow it sometimes gives you the feeling of correctness

the selfishness of others begin always with the exclusivity of their newly found families grandads and grandmoms have no place in there

even dads and moms
and nephews and nieces

they have become strangers in their exclusive paradise

and then when the ask because sometimes poverty too attacks their solidarity why bother? what the heck? you have your own private life too inside your room with your books and lamplight your bankbook is all yours and you too have no place for those who are in future need solitary

you too is an exclusivity and they too have no place reserved by you your room is just enough your future all yours your hands are too small your voice always your own you do not want anyone to hear it even in this poem

RIC S. BASTASA
Excuse Me Adria

excuse sa ko kay mangihi ko
kaihi ko ug kinatawa

babay babaye
nga mabaw ug
botlu

(ha ha ha)

Hopelessly devoted to You

na ang sunod nga kanta sa akong windows

watch what happens this time i will be sweeter saving all my love for you misty
too shy to say i wont last a day without you i'll have to say i love in a song mati sa ko undang sa ko himo poems tan-awa ang mga panganod sa ibabaw sa kamad-an para sa mga bisdak

always be cool

RIC S. BASTASA
Exercises

by analogy any unused muscle finds retaliation through an ache and so you have it massaged.

in the same manner is the word and the letters in the same behavior you shall find thoughts

you know their revenge and you must know how to handle it.

how can you un-think? try it. how can you not write? how can you keep mum?

unless you know how to practice sleeping and then death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Exhaustion

it is now 9 o'clock in the evening and here i am driving this maroon car back home alone

on a three-hour lecture one gets exhausted somehow i feel the bones clinging each to each like being held by some pieces of strings some may fall away but i held up to some hope of a cartilage and muscle and skin for a wrapping

it is raining hard again and the night is as dark as ever the street lamps are off another blackout happens as often as this place is poverty stricken and infested with political leaders with nothing in mind but how to amass more wealth for themselves and their kin and relatives

i have always been a teacher and perhaps will always be a thinker forever trying to figure things how this country may have a stable name
a stronger sense of a confident self

plain thoughts,
political theories and some speculations for economic possibilities some questions roaming and still without any hint of an answer

i talk to myself again this country will always be poor because its leaders are making it so these people will always be duped because they remain gullible this country has nowhere to go like the boat of the El Filibusterismo it will simply rotate and collide with the whirlpools of its nightmares arriving at the ports of nothing the rain stopped and i am now at the red gate of an old house the bushes wantonly growing stretching their branches to a dark sky

the gate opens and profuse light comes out from an opening

a brown dog comes out and barks announcing the arrival of a very tired master it is I, this political professor coming out from a worn-out car and this is my house infested with worms slowly eating every part every wood this house needs another year for it to finally fall

my wife comes out from her room and kisses me and she asks ' how about dinner? '
' i am not hungry, all i need is sleep' i said with my shoes on i lay in bed. My eyes close. I like to dream about God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Exhortation

i dare not talk something bad about

Siddhartha
or Jesus or Mohammad

what they did
when they suffered and sacrificed

we cannot fathom
since we were not there in the first place in their own time and
place

their steps and ends

they deserve
what respect time had given them

never had i felt that sense that i can be greater by saying that they lied or that they are never
true

or that possibly they could have said otherwise

or that they are not
existing anymore
or once
existed as you tried to imply in your last line.

whether we like it or not God is there and does not change

it is this immutability of this belief that keeps me going and going

though i am not certain why and where.

RIC S. BASTASA
Existence First, Then Essence

take a stone,
from the beginning it was a stone in form
and color and smell

and stone to stone
it shall be stone
unless you take it
in your hand
and keep it warm in the hold of your palm and take it home with you you talk to it

and then it becomes beyond itself

now
it is not just a stone but your beloved
your lover

you will discover that its silence also speaks in tongues

RIC S. BASTASA
Fenced carabaos of this Agricultural college Thrive on limited spread of grass Man-made They look forward To angles and rows of green hills and valley And clear flowing creeks To the other side The white herons, (wild ducks, sparrows, and mayas)
Fly above trees and (daffodils) And land on paddies with flecks Of surface mud fishes and tadpoles and mosquito larvae

I see The sparrows rest In flocks Lining up On electric cables Or Power Lines Watching army Worms and golden shells (kuhol) etching slowly, eating green greedily On rice and grass stalks

An owl hovers (the late owl, where was it last night?) On the island of twigs On an old mango tree (balding & ugly & dying)

No wonder The white herons (about twenty in all, I counted them patiently on digital cam) taunt The carabaos (muddy and thin as grasses were cut and cleaned by ROTC cadettes on Sundays, I can’t rationalize why the grass population be reduced) fenced On a limited supply of Manmade grass and Growth controlled

They wing finally when I got near them Lightly like blown leaves This February wind And land on Carabaos’ backs Gleaning for lice Feasting on some pecking and swallowing & pecking again

Thriving on carabaos’ Hairs and skin some creatures though still

On the other side of the landscape A thin brown, woman With a buri hat And a rattan basket on one hand and a sack on the other Leans over A dry ricefield Gleaning for leftovers of palay

Beside her but not that really near The man drives the white herons Away to the other side of the island of banana trunks Then he goes to the carabaos Their wet noses tied to an abaca roof and tied again to the cemented posts of this accredited agricultural college spreading about two hectares of stupidity

The questions about lice and herons and carabaos and grasses And golden snails, tadpoles and mud fishes and sparrows died
The lice are free Feeding away from The eating white herons They have flown away since then to the other side of my world

By now the flock of Sparrows On the electric cables or power lines Wing their way To a farther town as I leave them fast for lack of time for shortness of serendipity for lack of interest

There are pebbles inside my shoes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Existences...

with or without words, even when all those who record
the annals of history disappear from view everything turning to dust
air sucked by the black holes of this universe
even when
no one sees and says what we have
or once
existence will always be there
independent of the talker
it was there
we were not there
anymore

the ruins you know
shall always speak for themselves
even when we are gone
forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Exodus 19: 2 - 6, (A Reflection)

our ancestors once lived in the wilderness encamped before a mountain

God has taken them away from slavery and poverty on eagle's wings
to Himself

He built them a house for them to be priests among nations a Holy Nation,

and then
they have forgotten

their violence begets a thousand other violence
and the killing and dying and chasing and blaming seem to be
forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Expand Time: Rarefaction

compress a spring
and release it

each wave
c Travels

we get narrower
with time
and steepen
into shock waves

RIC S. BASTASA
Expat Escape...

when you post a love poem or another picture of yours in intimate embrace with another man
in another scene when you think that it is a wise choice to be happy and not mind what is happening in the other side of the world when you post another selfie with your Cheshire cat smile inspired by that Alice in Wonderland i must confess i am deeply saddened by that choice
i guess, i must have been just hypocritical in this morning haze but just the same i wish you all the love and the grace
i wish you are happy with all your hopes for that final escape towards an exit away from us i wish you are gone for good we are mourning here and you do not fit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Expect That In The Garden Of Love

expect that in any garden of love there is always that snake, that apple,

that disobedience to a certain degree the driving away and then the final redemption

the ignorance that was.

RIC S. BASTASA
Expectations

Sane enough
expect nothing,

a river cannot divide itself, neither can a waterfall
cease flowing,

expect nothing,
on the other hand,
nothing is always a beautiful mystery

the much talked
urchin in philosophy.

no one is sane
enough not to know it. It is in fact, us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Expectedly

houses are strong and well insulated
in your hinterland

but mine is on top of the hill
kissed by the sun

it is open to the
air
they come and go and come again

this is the house without doors and stairs
a house deprived of windows
and peeping holes
and cracks and slits

this is the house of the
sun
the earth loves it
its body attached to the grass

it has no pillars but trees
no roof but clouds
no walls but spaces

RIC S. BASTASA
Expecting Nothing From Each Other...

at that point when you tell the world that you expect nothing from it

it tells you
exactly the same thing
like an echo
from a cave

'i expect nothing
from you
too'

it is fair, you must admit you must admit, it is but fair enough...

RIC S. BASTASA
Experienced

once ascetic, one jumps to an experimentation of life giving up to passion, maximizing the sensuality of the flesh enjoying the fulfillment of every dream of lust catering to all amorous adventures following the flow of every impulse of the glands without any fear, taking in whatever is wanted to fortify the will of the mind less the spirit and having learned all these through a first hand experience one can say at the end
' i was there, and it was good, and it was enough' now back to myself again.

alone. strong. powerful. knowledgeable.
after evil, the good prevails
as always.

back to purity. wash and clean
the past.

RIC S. BASTASA Experiences

on a train to Sucat 2 o’clock in the morning on an emptiness
of the seats the man gives a stare
to me,

tired to respond
i look at another direction his gaze is looking for something
begging and this i cannot give for i have no means
no courage

the train arrives at the station i got out
taking my fast steps not looking back

even if the man falls dead drunk upon his longings love he had none
i have no reason to help him stand

for i too is seeking, begging like him
last night, i too fell off the canal of my decency, no one helped me stand
they take a single look and went their own way
as though this world is cold and numb to what happens
everywhere.
Experimental

nowadays, a word gets bored, and it tries to invent what yet you have not heard or seen no outline no color as you imagine like blue and white and red, just a sheen of a ray of light coming from outside passing through a stained glass and then the choir sings alleluia! alleluia!

you wonder what is it: a bat or a dove or just plain image of any bird lost inside the dome of the church of Christ, then the shadows come ghosts of transparencies not haunting just letting themselves be before you awed, and wondering white wings halos, and feathers angels,

alleluia! alleluia!
you are one quizzical
look against the whitewashed walls one look, one confused word trying to be sort of one kind of religious.

let us see, the old man says it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Experimentation

do not pick the words let the word pick you do not think let thinking think for you

do not move let the movement move in you do not even think of the logic in metaphors

there is no logic in them eye are the geese coming one spring lots of noise moving in one direction landing in your backyard staring at the window looking for you you see the world has a life of its own do not ever think do not ever signify the world moves, twirls, spins, collides in you and you are shocked surprise at this kind of phenomenon

the world hands you what you have been dreaming you are its only child and she introduces herself as your only mother her grass is your cradle her trees your friends her rocks your company her clouds your travel and transition her sun her moon her stars they are all yours now resting in the lines of your palms be glad then now you are so complete.

RIC S. BASTASA
Experimentations

i am fond of experimentation o!
i dramatize even small emotions those like dots and dashes on the street where cars and buses are so confused about who i am, , , a line, a question mark running off
the road
siding and hiding with the shallowness of emotions at times o! i mean nothing to you O! you mean nothing to me!
o! my fingers play with the ring o! my tongue lashes like the whips of weathered words stairs rise! moons collide turn into pieces of meteorites! stardusts! jupiter rings! volcanic craters!
o! you look for a meaning of your life!
o! loser! come! come! run! run run run run keep running away!
you are the ruined bust of greatness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Experimentations Of The Cat Who Has Nine Lives

the cat who had nine lives experimented on different
death styles, and now that it has only one life to live it gets into too much caution the last one must be memorable and deserving of its last breath.

RIC S. BASTASA
Explain?

It is you who needs to explain
Everything

You did not write the correct Name and Since then everything went Wrong.

The world turned upside down

We cannot tolerate this Bat lifestyle.

Self-styled urine drinking And inverted thoughts

Not my life, not my world.
Go away.

RIC S. BASTASA
Explaining Poetry

How can I ever explain poetry?
To a child it would be easy Eenie minee minee moe Catch the monkey by the toe

Jack and Jill Went up the hill
To get a pail of water
Is a poem easily understood by A child

But to an adult
How can I ever explain poetry?
Can I explain it with a straight Look in the eye
And I will tell him
Poetry Is looking a person straight in the eye

Yes you have only one more day to live?
Can I explain it to him Like I have a gun and point it straight to his head And say
Yes poetry kills and it kills you in a minute And for free?

Or can I explain poetry to him Like I am on the tenth floor of this building And I tell him I am so problematic And all I have to do is Jump and kill myself
And he would be there
To tell me
Life is beautiful
There is reason to live
That I am loved
That many people still care
That I have a mission That I have lots of good things to do That this world has meaning That I am the child of this universe That I am no less than the trees and the stars and that by all means I have the right to be here

That poetry can save That poetry is one saving person holding one back to his senses that poetry is hope, love, kindness it has no word for hate it does not kill or enslave
or annihilate Poetry is a decision
Not to jump.
That is poetry to me
And as an adult he must understand.

RIC S. BASTASA
Explicitly

there is dignity in what you do makes man a king
you go to earth and open your mouth letting in the quintessence of manhood think of humanity without this the world would be so many swallow that pride of masculinity inside your grace and kindness accommodate this offer man and woman entangled tendrils so entwined let no bud turn into a flower let there be no fruit for that is what they wanted

RIC S. BASTASA
Explore
explore
all the paths

find the meaning of each labyrinth

there are shades
of light
from the prism

of our existences
life, death
rebirth

we do not die
all at once

do not deny pleasure welcome the pain
and be freed from the prison
of the tentacles of dread and joy

live now and be too kind for the truths
of love and hate
lust and pleasure

there is not a single path reserved
for those who really love every moment

dripping dropping
water and dew
on leaves
rivers rushing to the sea and rain always falling
for more
pleasure to the earth

always there are openings find them
always there are pleasures try them

explore this world
of desire
for this is the gateway to the holiness
of our soul

RIC S. BASTASA
Exploring My Thoughts

upon itself the thought reflects upon a thought

like an image in a mirror my face looks upon itself and my hands touch
my hands

upon itself the self breathes and catches life to itself

there is life and there is motion there is this emptiness that looks upon a sky down upon itself

like a cup still dreaming
of the rain

there is this air that moves in space
like an infusion of breath upon your mouth

RIC S. BASTASA
Externals....

outside i hear murmurs of children, shouts of mature men calling their women, sweeping the yard of dry leaves from trees of last night's storms

i hear screeching sounds of cars heading to the city
rushing
as though they are always late for appointments

the school bus carries the teeming sounds of kindergarten kids whose mothers keep on saying God bless you all and i who is supposed to be at work in my cubicle

just a stone throw away from where i am seated
still keeps on tracking voices that cover the inner voice of my longings

it is frail and fading and humming and still wanting to conceal the true notes of its song

e.e. Cummings, it says, it wants, the rhythm of comings, but i must have been in the wrong direction for a long while now i have always focused on the ambulant sounds of departures
loud and deep at first
and then
fading and thin like a needle finally dropping on the hay floor.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fabricators....

oh yeah
i have spoken
i use a basket of words like flowers of assortment in different colors and scents

oh yeah
i try to please you with dew and wafts of winds

but you know everything about me already and it was disgusting

you try to draw a tiny smile in your lips but it is hard to lie
you find it hard to forge happiness and it is so disgusting

oh yeah
i am an expert former of words to deceive
the paper

but what can i do
i am not authorized to end the show and neither you who need me not because you honestly love me

it is sad
but this is life and life must move on like a face shameless to the crowd

the hand knows what to do one by one take away the lips, the eyes, the nose the face becomes a wall where we both hide
like children away from their cruel
stepfather.

RIC S. BASTASA
Face Of The Night

red lips white teeth
a smile a hug
room No.
6

RIC S. BASTASA
you need a face lift but that would be too abrupt and expensive you need a little distance from friends and even foes you're too good to be true and God does not even recognize you so you need a face lift to shorten your nose a bit and lengthen your short eyebrows tighten your cheeks and give your forehead lesser glow there is a need for more changes to make you real so you may survive the surprises of your oppressors you need some scissors to cut their sensors take your break
you need to be bleak
don't be so cool
you need to be cruel sometimes perhaps too much goodness makes the mess

RIC S. BASTASA
Face To Face With A Lotus

fRONTING THE defunct Presidential Palace Ho Chi Minh
lies the Lotus just beside the majestic old stairs

that time it was blooming and i waited for the rest who climbed the palace since i had to confront the Lotus

It speaks too about my
loneliness
my triumphant survival
towards another ponderous
solitude
oh my, i do not miss anyone
anymore
i rise above the mud float on the water
and look to the sky
talk in the silence of God...

RIC S. BASTASA
Face Value...

we accept the value of our front faces, whatever that is, we oblige on the premise that no man is an island we continue with the facts of our exitence you are facing me and i oblige with silence, a smile, a nod, and some common responses which by all standards are acceptable, no dice, no odds, not evens, no ifs and buts, then the time for departure comes like an expiration of a meeting and we admit another survival between us nothing really important is happening the usual casualness of of bonding it is like saying something without expecting what to know and understand it is like getting in a bus or a train and our eyes focus on the changing sceneries outside like a flashcard of different lives and then we arrive at our destinations we disembark all of us taking nothing but ourselves again and what to do when we meet the real people of our lives where the sense of home is once again entertained, here, we say nothing much but we mean and we are understood at once without much fuss.

RIC S. BASTASA
Facebook Chatter

so many questions
and so many answers to choose from can't decide yet which one

but there is an answer hidden in your hair your eyes speak them for me i am restless
i need it now to calm me down to dispel the questions with only one answer from you tell it to me gently and then touch me with your lips
my silence is always unfilled.

RIC S. BASTASA
Facebooking

had the chance of meeting Kaye still at the agriculture department no promotion yet happy nothing new really except this meeting

me too, nothing new, except this conversation
of who what where when then we stop

as it is time to go the office closes at five pm and we have to find our way home

it will be dark
and there will be dinner with the family then we watch tv
after being tired we turn it off
sleep
then dream and then we wake up early the next morning back to work

such routine such boredom yet we still like to live more days this is life perhaps nothing new except the meetings of old friends then back to work again i know you are bored reading this precisely, precisely, now you must feel the same too at least

in this boring poem

RIC S. BASTASA
Facebooking...

in times of doubt and hiding where times get harsh and when you are feeling so foolish betrayed once twice thrice and patience says think seventyseven times seven before you take action, think and reflect and ponder and be calm and be sober and do not say it is over, you know where to hide and forget the real world.

surf, surf, surf out anything have more time with pictures, and shallow hi's and hello's lots of lols and omgods

RIC S. BASTASA
Faced Again With The Usual Questions

the walls face you again with the usual questions they were answered before and now they come begging for new answers telling you times have changed like the color of fading jeans, and your answers have become unsatisfactory. you state your case and you beg the judge, that somehow the need for rephrasing has become a necessity. you straighten your tie feel the collar on your neck and say: I am ready, shoot.

RIC S. BASTASA
Faces

lots of faces
square, round, elongated, rectangular, triangular heart-shaped

what face have i
that you say you love me?

multifaceted double-faces bigot
diamond

yes, i know you love diamonds
so you say it
all: a diamond
as reason.

RIC S. BASTASA
Faces And Layers Of Faces

At first, this is the face I will show you Shallow, thin, smooth Then we feel each other, like some kind of New found friends, I Take another layer, and tell you, this is my face, Some scars, and lines of age, and furrows, Then we write many emails, and remember Common things, like a certain familiarity, Another layer is taken and exposed,
The face of a sick man, with some Disappointments in his mind, Some wounds, wrinkles, and so you Think, are there other layers of faces still To show,
Deeper, deeper is there another layer to show Another face of this man?
Yes, there is another layer, more faces Hidden underneath each layer, As we go on, learning from ourselves,
And me learning from myself,
I will be digging for more faces, Because I am never static I am growing, and for each growth Like molting
Another face comes out

Soon, I hope, I must come out With the most beautiful face The we can be both proud of,

It is just a matter of time Depending on how well you have loved me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Facing Myself

do not ask me who i am whether i have understood this self so well or yourself

we always reason out about the mysteries that surround our beings

i will give no answer silent as a zipper

i close the door of my mouth and go inside my esophagus this slimy self that wants to be out but cannot

in the mirror however like the sun with so much light

i face myself and check

dthis is beautiful i tell myself i repeat it many times

i close the window of my soul not wanting that you hear any of these dialogues this narcissism of the self unto itself in the pond of my eyes the mirror that shows what reflection is there of the soul to the body the body that is warm and touched

RIC S. BASTASA
Facing The Blank Face Of The Ceiling

poetry is not
as complicated
as
removing your dress and then going
to the rest room
and brushing your teeth,

it is not even
that moment when you look at yourself in the mirror
and seeing a new wart at the lower part of your
lip,

poetry is more of putting your head on the pillow

and then you gaze
the blank face of the ceiling

wondering if stars still hang
in there.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Facing The Sun, Late Afternoon

driving back home at the white bridge the light of the sun that later afternoon blinds me, like what i feel today
i close my eyes
see shadows
let them all inside
my heart,
i open my eyes
half asleep
letting all the shadows simmer like
i am a dry earth
receiving a little rain, thoughts run like water boredom is the dryness the ennui
fleeting memories
haunt like thoughts coming back at me
with swords and scales.

'what am i doing here? ' i stop the car, get out from there and stand on the side of the white bridge.

'i am doing nothing'.
the water below is silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
Facing The Wreck

naked
shall i face the wreck in front of my
being

the wreck faces me
its face is
past
its arms are choking me its mouth shall eat me
and i lay helpless naked so tenderly
surrendering to its bondage

for years i have not devised the best way to escape

RIC S. BASTASA
Fact

The eyes of the witness Look at her straight
In her eyes
There is no blinking
There is the silence of the Majestic Pond
and then when asked
She raised her arm Point her Finger
and said
' Yes, it is him! '
And then she elaborated
About the Truth
In exhaustive details
And then she stood up
And walked her way out
From the Witness stand of the Room All her loads Discarded.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fact And Fact

things are neither
light nor heavy in a vacuum

they all
fall
and arrive
at
their destinations
at the same
time

come to think
of it
by analogy
our common
emptiness
level us from
and
with the rest of this humanity

RIC S. BASTASA
Fact....

IF THERE be changes
about this and that i will have all these and those need i be like you

perfect
stainless steel
polished porcelain telling the
world
that God has created us all equal
and bestowed with all
beauty
that there be no change that is needed?

what a thought
for one as beautiful as you saying
there is nothing to change everything is in place everyone is
in itself
beautiful and then you win

honestly
everyone is imperfect and everyone has an inner voice
screaming
i want this changed this is not the one i dream and i agree this is all imperfect and these must

be changed
if only there is a way or a choice honestly, there is no choice we are stones thrown in a pavement
and all those who pass and tread upon us
hardly notice

RIC S. BASTASA
Facta, Non Verba

what was done was done
they cannot be undone,

for what matters most what what was done & not just what was said.

unfinished poems, pauses, words still looking for the fulfillment of their meanings like open bowls looking up to the skies for rain or sunshine

or plain nothingness

RIC S. BASTASA
Facticity

What you are, what you had been
Are facts of you Facticities: you cannot change You once had,
You have no power over these Facticities: Undoing, unbreaking, ing.

What you are going to be What you want to become What you want to have to hold & to cherish What you have to die for What you long &
what you want to give Are non-facts

Non-facticities:

They are being,
Be-ing
Becoming
And these are our hopes & our wishes & what we look forward to

A warm day tomorrow
A loved one faithful to you
The beloved
The beloved loving the beloved

These are the things we can still change We can make

Death is a fact
What you do before death Still belongs to the freedom of your hands

You are alive.
That is be-ing.
Be thankful.
Be always grateful.
Be strong.
Be the good self that you want to be.
These are not facts yet They still belong to the freedom of your own hands

RIC S. BASTASA
Facts

some dreams do not come true no problem about that promises are made to be broken not new to me really some friends are not really friends but enemies in disguise i am learning about this fact some loves are meant for lust i am used to these some moments are better used for silence i love these some lives simply become wasted i am not surprised some people just want to survive live a life they choose and cease the evil of comparisons i begin this now i dismiss my view on a love so true it is not really late for now i am moving on, just moving on even without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fading Laughter

laughing faces of little boys on the bank of the river
sounds of running feet fainting
the song of the river farther away

RIC S. BASTASA
Fading Light

stay
watch the fading of the light stay and savor
the new darkness
it owns you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fading Sun

as the sun fades
this afternoon
it leaves a mark
of ripples lights on the gray sea

in a moment
everything fades
the wave sounds
its own question to the night wind

RIC S. BASTASA
Failing Eyes

my failing eyes may help you when i type the wrong thing you find it the missing 'r' for sunrise may remind you of a real sunrise or may tell you about the sore in my eyes getting into the wisdom of old age the wrongs that old people leave you shall, the young, correct.

RIC S. BASTASA
Failings

forgive my eyes
again i have misspelled the words, forgive my shortcomings, i have no time correcting them no time to go back and see how the errors can be redeemed, i am in rush but i do not actually know what to do or where.

RIC S. BASTASA
Failure Is Not An Option, But It Is A Necessity
Sometimes

no matter how you plan
there is always that possibility of a failure, no one has control about this necessity,

it is not an option to flunk, you all worked hard for all those years to earn the title and gain the trust but not all will make it some will have to take the bottom of things
the failure of an endeavor success cannot exist
without it
one cannot see God
without the appearance of Evil
one cannot be strong unless he had been weak once
i cannot be divine unless i start from the bottom line
of my humanity,

if i can see clearly now it was because i was blind for all those years.

move on, let not that failure make you fail.

RIC S. BASTASA
Failures

If you have become Another failure
You must always give Yourself a chance

There are no failures they keep On saying that.
There are only suspended Successes.

Everything is temporary.
Just like success.
Just like failure.

Keep on trying.
There is no harm on trying They keep on saying that.
A failure is nothing
But a blessing in disguise.

Keep on writing then.
Until the perfect poem Comes along.

Keep on thinking then.
Until the right idea Reigns.

Keep going.
There is no stopping.
There is no quitting.

My friend,
I am here
Standing before your coffin.
To deliver this eulogy.
You keep on trying.
Until death
Has finally caught you.

Dear friend
Sleep now.
I must say you have Finally rested

From our failures.

RIC S. BASTASA
Failures And More Failures

i am not afraid of failures because i understand all of them bows that send all my arrows
towards successes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Failures Are Temporary

failures are temporary
heartbreaks can even be short if you care enough
for love
of yourself and your friends we all fall and we shall all fall again despite two waking vigilant eyes and cautioned hands and so is happiness and success and triumphs and conquests of your fears the ecstasies

and joys and what have you that makes you feel eternity, tell me when have you learned this illusion of yourself feeling eternity, a glimpse of God, tell me, tell me, describe it to me today, i can tell you the difference between all these temporary things, and places and events, and this eternity that i feel, it is you, your face that i see that i touch is this the face of God?

RIC S. BASTASA
Failures....

i am amazed by the way
time has traveled that fast we long want to sew what was torn to make them into one piece

again

sort of another beginning patching up and from a distance making no difference at all the thread has gone through the eye of the needle but our hands are trembling and our eyes have failed....

RIC S. BASTASA
Fair

papa i do not wish to win this race because of friendship

teach me to win
through my own competence

i want to be on top and take the cap through merit,
not influence, or affluence

fair and square
i will now dare

RIC S. BASTASA
Fair And Square

i was there for a tour
enjoying the place
taking notes
and buying some stuff

she was there
looking for work
an opening
holding on to her last money

but i do not really think that i am lucky

it's all fair.
and i do not have to tell her what despair
am i in

perhaps mine is bigger.
i can tell it.

RIC S. BASTASA
they tease me, i who like the song
but the song
never likes me, but i keep on singing
and they can do nothing else but listen
under these circumstances of lack
and grief and even if they do not like it
as they do not like to sing with me
or sing the song itself, i keep on singing and singing until

i did not like
the song itself, and i tell them
it is but fair and square.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fair And Square....

losing track of saying something in another way

metaphors take so much time and so much meaning
about what is obvious as the sun and the fields and the sea
are wasted

i want to say it
fair and square
nothing about hyperbole or euphemism

you are bad
you are unjust
and that's just
that....

RIC S. BASTASA
how can i deny myself of you?
you like my puppy that wakes me up
in the morning
when my world turns upside down like a bat hanging from a twig of a wild tree like a dream that clings to my brain unwanted.
we make love every morning sometimes in the deep recesses of the
night
when everyone has been taken by sleep we make love.
this tryst is killing me.
every death somehow is every resurrection too.

fair and square.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fair Weather...

fair weather
the big boat on a special trip slices the ocean smoothly like solingen

there's a rainbow on the other side of the island that we pass swordfish fly like a dagger hitting the mirror sea and comes up again with skillful wings

farther are the smaller boats like leaves drifting

the sun is laundring
the pastel blue morning sea

RIC S. BASTASA
they were all fairy tales believe in what the characters say but the characters themselves are not real

a girl on butterfly wings a boy with the tail of a fish the sea is real and so is the air

if the message is not clear try being there

if you do not know the word in between try chewing one of the syllables.

RIC S. BASTASA
the plane took off
i realized i did not like the aisle seat i transferred to the window seat and the stewardess said
'excuse me, sir! ' trying to stop me for doing so, i pretended i heard no one moved as fast a i can towards the window seat fastened my seat belt and put my head
well rested on the beside the window

below the clouds flew past me
on a deceiving speed the mountains spread
benumbing

RIC S. BASTASA
Faith

you are there
i know
&
you are here now
i very well know with all my eyes closed my heart now opens
&
doubt is always behind you
taunting

RIC S. BASTASA
Faith And Love

He knows your hands
And arms too well

One day she falls
From a cliff
Freely

Like a stone
To a rocky ground

She knows what
You will do

She closes her
Eyes
And not feel any Sense of harm
At all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Faith Back To You

i have ordered the mountains to move it is your turn now to make them come back in their proper places

RIC S. BASTASA
Faith That Moves Mountains

you tell me that your faith can move mountains now this is this mountain
and you are here
and i am here

tell this mountain to move away from me
now.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Faithful Poet To His Craft....

he is getting bald over
words
emaciated having forgotten several meals
because he is faithful to his craft

everyday he writes
more poems than he could muster
for his heavenly muses

on paper the poems become written
well sculpted with curves and smooth finishes

he does not know whether they are read somewhere but he does not care on nights when he finds himself alone and abandoned by fate

he makes a fire at the center of his yard puts all those paper poems
there
all burned
smokes like some forms of ghosts
go to the night skies to be with the countless stars in the extreme cold
of silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Faithfully

images blur
faces are fading
one forgets
what day is it, and i still say
love it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fake Dance

to grapple with uncertainties she dances ballet tiptoes
and balance carefree credulity
twirl

the curtain falls now is the perfect time to hide everything face-powdered the overture plays conspires aloud to evasive drums she grapples again regaining a balance this rope secrets in cord-like tightened lips her fake dance her fake feelings in her heart her lover looks on without blinking how sweet how true how remarkable bravo!

RIC S. BASTASA
Fake, Fake, Fake,

it is all fake (at any rate cheap)
we know it
yet we go there and take some
for our loved ones.

they are all fake (friends of your friends) in that party
we know it yet we all find ourselves there still making much of the fun

what's most important is that we know it
and that we have fun.

RIC S. BASTASA
Faking It

without the eye contact the words become obscene
the conversations
have become too personal

the masks have become our very own
faces

we were looking for love in all places only to find it here and then after the kiss we taste something that we can compare

and then i must complain it is not the legal tender

the saliva is fake.

RIC S. BASTASA
Faking The Pain

The poems pretend
And fake the pain

Time comes like a bird
And my mind like a gun Sets the perfect timing for the trigger

This big bang!

The sad soil demands a flow Of blood
A watering of misfortunes Havoc

So the flowers of progress May bloom
Anew the scent of sense
The petals of pulchritude

RIC S. BASTASA
Fall In Love

you live up this cliff
one with the mountain
wind
fused with fog and moistened
with dew

f
a l
l

i n
l o
v
e

with me.

i am waiting down here with the sea caps and the dew foams and the salted scent of the breeze the sea flowers and sea horses and the multicolored corals blue skies and green grasses inside my ocean floors

RIC S. BASTASA
Fallen Petals

for one thing i do not know the name of this sea flower falling from a very lushy tree whose leaves reach to the sands as though kissing salt and silence it is a big flower with pink lines following the sides

the stamens are long and scented like a woman with perfume on her hair

alone in the night she walks towards a cave of cascading desire and there he is waiting naked

the flowers keep on falling the petals crushed
the night is silent and well scented

the shadows fuse and then they were lost in total darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling And Rising...

when i fall
this i must tell you
i am hurt
and will always be hurt but not till eternity there is no such it will only be for a while pain subsides
and the self stands up
again
smiling to the sun

i will be healed in due
time
but don't come near me] no not yet
please do not insult me with your help or
sympathy
unsolicited opinions
like cut onions
make me cry
but only for a while only for a while

i am complete
and will always be whole in sorrow and pain

and
more self-sufficient than you perhaps
who knows?
for i think i have suffered much as such

i am prepared
and had long prepared for this fall
of my own causing
of my own fault

my only way of surrendering to God
making peace
all things
and feelings soon to rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling Falling Falling

some stars are falling and falling across the dark skies

you look with awe

and make your many wishes

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling From A Cliff

when you fall from a cliff there are hands on the ground promising to catch you do not trust those who say so they are there for sure to crush you

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling Hearts

falling hearts like rain to earth
bleeding,

the earth is too thirsty and whether it was blood or acid or whatever like
tears

it accepts, it
sucks them all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling Out From Grace

it is just a stage
so temporary

the only probability
when you are
high up in the pinnacle of your success then everything falls

like leaves
from a tree at autumn time

do not worry
be hopeful for spring it is sure to come
it is the completion of a cycle

breathe and take the coldest air now it is time to turn off the fire in our hearts hibernate, rest, and give off all that we have for when we are completely empty that the beginning again for another

fullness...

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling Out Of Love Because Of Distance

light fades away as sand slips away between my fingers water drips everything is either absorbed or lost
love too diminishes
through distance
d dissolves in the solutions of time losing its sweetness in the memory of one whose grip
to fidelity is losing reality melts
like mist like the ghosts of names
you cannot anymore remember

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling Short Of Directions....

c. 50x795

d. 50x750

e. 50x732

f. 50x714

g. 50x696

h. 50x678

i. 50x660

j. 50x642

k. 50x624

l. 50x606

m. 50x570

n. 50x552

o. 50x534

p. 50x516

q. 50x498

r. 50x480

s. 50x444

t. 50x426

u. 50x390

v. 50x372

w. 50x354

x. 50x318

y. 50x300

z. 50x282

aa. 50x264

bb. 50x246

c. 50x228

d. 50x210

e. 50x192

Falling Short Of Directions....

c. 50x795

d. 50x750

e. 50x732

f. 50x714

g. 50x696

h. 50x678

i. 50x660

j. 50x642

k. 50x624

l. 50x606

m. 50x570

n. 50x552

o. 50x534

p. 50x516

q. 50x498

r. 50x480

s. 50x444

t. 50x426

u. 50x390

v. 50x372

w. 50x354

x. 50x318

y. 50x300

z. 50x282

aa. 50x264

bb. 50x246

c. 50x228

d. 50x210

e. 50x192

the road to patience is long and winding say it over and over again sometimes it leads us nowhere there are dead ends of our hoping (and what shall you do? you weep
alone and keep on talking to yourself?)

you get feed up with lots of my comforting
words, the poems, the chat,
and the
directions on what to do next
where to go,

they do not comfort you at all all these long distance affections but there is something that must comfort you more, and make you perhaps understand what this world is all about everyone is lost all hands are groping in the dark feeling only walls and walls there is no light yet the sound of rushing water deafens us there are rocks higher than life existing more than our lifetime always there dead and cold and dark

there are traces in the sands of some footsteps erased by the wind not fossils
that still tell us what really happened there is this comforting joy we all are
and that makes us all

lost tribes, silenced by death hoping not to be ever thrown again like seeds that begin anew on the first sprout of another misery
handed from bud to bud....

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling Short Of Words

from this window glass i see narra trees

the leaves had fallen
it is cold

i am alone looking carefully at the details of leafless twigs

branches are dry
barks are cracked

the grasses below are brown beside the fence two boys are playing hide and seek cars blue and white and black are parked in one area like gossiping women i am alone thinking about some details falling short of words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling Star

he was the fallen
star

he fell straight smoothly to the deepest part of the Indian Ocean

he used to be Orion brightest in the sky when every meteor races towards the edge of space and die now that he is buried underneath no one looks for him or at least to know whether he can be saved from oblivion they all think they have to move on with their lives and find another Orion again as they keep on looking every night they have forgotten him finally not even remembered as a memory meanwhile in Atlantis he becomes the most precious guest without his glitter he is still cool

RIC S. BASTASA
Falling Upon A Cliff

ah, i know that feeling when we end something lously we are disappointed because it could have ended in another manner that most excellent manner we hate unjustified endings there is something much better than that not just justice or that happily ever-after it could have been something else not that ah, i know that feeling I've done that before many many times and you the reader hangs on a cliff soon to fall... i know this feeling

there is no need
for sharing.

RIC S. BASTASA
False Lights, Termites, Stones

we are
to them always the image of departure

and so it seems to be, as
always,
sadness that they smell
on our skin
our hair

you imagine
bags and all the stuff that must be
there

they hear
the sound of buses honking
and waiting

they like to close the doors of the house
and see to it that all windows
are closed

what they always see in us
is the look of misery of time wasted
of dripping water that dries the moment it meets an arid soil

i sigh to all these wrong notions but i only have silence to offer before their altars they are not gods and i guess tomorrow early morning i simply have to destroy them these plasters of Paris these cranky obsolete stones these false lights termites and pests of my wooden world Fame

when you pursue it when you claim that you need it badly it simply closes its door from you airtight

when you finally give up pursuing it when you too lock your door and stay inside it for good it knocks and insists that you take it you peep by your window it waits there and so silly that you look at it

with full pity

RIC S. BASTASA
Fame And Popularity

you are a big fire
everyone looks at you

the big fire today as you But tomorrow will only

Be ashes
Blown away and then no one remembers

RIC S. BASTASA
Fame Winston

Fame is the virtue of Notoriety

Soon you will find focus lights
hurt

People stink
like rotten apples

Names disperse
like vapor

Stay put in the Luxuries
of your Privacy

One name is Enough
and there will be no confusion

A home is where Only you live
in Peace

Buy your own Camera just in case
you need a face.

RIC S. BASTASA
Familiarity

it is all bland

tasteless

like routine

unlike the kiss

that you first

planted

on her hair

RIC S. BASTASA
Familiarity Of Falling...

the same birds
through my window
sing
every morning

for one thing
their songs never bore
this heart

the same leaves fall from this tree
the same songs of failure of falling in such a repetition in all the mornings of my life unshaken

RIC S. BASTASA
Familiarity With A New Born Day

the cocks still crow this early morning same footfalls passing and stamping on the road the same trails from the house to the market to the church back home and same sounds of the gate opening and closing and same chill of the air from the sea to the mountain over and over again on this familiarity from day one to day one hundred till the thousandth this familiarity that breeds contempt it is trying to kill us all but there is this thing inside that keeps burning this fire this light it tells us keep going for one day this boredom that tries to kill us shall soon be a big day for you and for all of us nirvana, heaven, rebirth, the dusts that stick on our feet wanting to be alive again and be the flowers under the gentle rain

RIC S. BASTASA
Familiarity With The World, Finally....

no place does not give you a distraction the sound of the machine that lingers in the air and pierces your ear it will always be there the sound of engines more cruel than thunder and folding waves of the storms at sea bigger than houses
shall always meet you straight in the eye deeper in your mind there seems to be no peaceful place of the leaves and grass where you can rest your body where your soul finds an imaginary home where the heart can sleep and dream there seems to be none and so you run and run as fast as you can to find it but the running even if it does not stop finds no such place and hopeless then you rest upon a field of destructive sounds and then begin to accept them as they are the mad cry of the baby, the heated exchange of hate between couples, the war of governments and people, all these are very real are becoming spots in your skin your very own shadow that goes with you everywhere you go you too, is that sound of anger and despair
this is the world
this is your place
now, you must learn what is this all about rest your head upon the madness of the crowd sleep amidst the chaos this is finally what we call as home yes, a home in a very crowded mall, in a very narrow path towards a broken door, that slanted room.

RIC S. BASTASA
Family Secrets Of My Youth

on those early mornings while father was out to the sea to check if his fishermen were cheating him
i was left on the shore
alone
writing with my finger some words on the sand and for which the waves rush to erase
all of them perhaps afraid that someone outside the family could read what we have
been hiding

RIC S. BASTASA
Famished And Finished.

the time and setting
on this computer is always
in error,

battery drained or perhaps
virus infected,
my ignorance on the matter persists

from one poem to another jumping from anxiety to another self taken anxiety

knowing then that another city creature is depressed and looking for a cure or a cousin who got married recently but lost its job or that wife who is no longer sure about her husband’s affection or that writer who had always wished to land first prize in a palanca poetry contest but never really achieved it so many lapses in this life so many dreams and escapades so many exhaustive pursuits birds that fell from the sky angels that we have never seen those lurking devils that we only see in drawings or that heaven that we keep faithful in believing, good and bad karma,

the time and setting
on this computer is always
in error,

battery drained or perhaps
virus infected,
my ignorance on the matter
persists

a normal reaction to a normal stimulus, perhaps we all have to embrace: an abnormal reaction to an abnormal stimulus, by all means is the most normal thing to do. Am famished and finished.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fantasy 101

we're old
our wrinkles do not dispute that our cheeks are shying away from a passionate kiss the lips are cracking like a soil in an african drought

i see some hair
locks falling on my bed and they do not make a complain
why shampoo and conditioner seem to have done nothing how can i be so cruel to myself my eyes wink

and my tongue in cheek tries to spell the modernity of my name

a man for all seasons my nose is getting fishy with the smell of masculine mask

i hold my pants and unzip and look at the part that makes me distinct from the rest of the animal kingdom

' i am human' i say it not just once but as often as i forget

' i am a man' i keep repeating it i have this bulge beating for life and i am ready to go out tonight for my fantasy
back to 101
so many faces
i can remember each even without the picture so many beautiful faces that i have french kissed
less words lesser hellos

there were more goodbyes those eyes shed tears but mine look the other way towards more faces
every sunrise every morning light so many beautiful faces that i can always remember and soon too easily forget

there is one though shown to me this morning as i lay weak in my sickbed

she says i kissed her once and it was too long ago she is a sad face looking for me i try to remember but i cannot not remember ever even the single lock of the hairs of said face even the tears in her eyes even the lasting smile that she once gave me i know the reason.

who wants to remember the face that you really love and yet you simply wasted?

you bury it in the past and you swear
you cannot anymore remember

you are careful because it will be very painful Far From The Clutches

i read it again
amazed by what you said

as you were saying you write a note about a man that they put in prison for being ideological very unlike the masses that go to congress and adopt a dress code and stick to the rules of speech propriety, that is the main rule, not justice, conformity not creativity, contentment not exploration and so on and so forth summed up with your

etcetera,

giving medical assistance is beyond ideology the sick man deserves to be given his dose of medicine whatever he is he is the sick man and he needs help why hinder the good samaritan why ask for his ID?
his political belonging

i wonder where is this journey taking us?
to hell? where is it?

it is here.

but this is not the end of your story neither mine shall end here, i ask you to spell a word: atrocities a word in plural form which you pronounce so well by enunciating the 'o' in there

nothing is funny now i stopped laughing since then i buried my jokes

anticipating that soon we shall bury too another body of Jesus Christ, copycats are we and they survive the mess

they still sit there and judge all of us for we have not lived the way they envision society yes people, monkeys still, monkeys eating monkeys, cannibalism, and yet, what irony is there they tell us that we are strange, that we need a rehabilitation, to be put back within the four corners of their universities, and oh, what a mess funded by the people.

tell me how can i stop this poetry of anguish?

RIC S. BASTASA
Faraway From You

i have traversed so much distance, got that this sense of being far away where no intimacy can reach me as i avoided that which is so near that which i cannot touch because nearness is blindness and when i become so blind how can i see the beauty of color the coolness of the wind in you the blueness of your affection it is this distance that makes me see the rainbow which i carried in my heart it has the scent of longing the you

so far away from me and yet still becomes my own shadow when i sleep and dream you are still beside me, and then we are one again in wanting to forget

i shall fool love again and make it believe that there is you

there is none
really there is none

what is there is this pain my own shadow in your shadow

RIC S. BASTASA
Faraway Solitude

after four days
the floors ceased talking about me
the bed is a sleeping cat
and the rest room has found a friendly urinary bladder the drapes are kind to sunlight

scattering flowers on softer hands

things run smoothly
now
like an automated
machine

RIC S. BASTASA
Farewell Speech

what i like from you is that you are no longer talking beside me,
my bed is my favorite mate it does not talk
i have told you that many times the moon is what i miss it is dimming and cold with its glow it is very much like me what i like from you is that you do not weep i have told you not to cry and i like it most when you understand what is a sky
and you see how it opens and takes what lies here on earth tired and hopeless
what i love in you is that you always give and there is no complaining when finally i am taken by the hands of the sky by the dimming glow of the moon when this bed
finally surrenders
breaks its legs asks the blanket and the mattress and the pillow
to leave
what i cannot forget about you is this you have followed the ways of my eyelashes when i finally close my eyes
do not weep
for soon we shall all be there the moon, the bed, and blankets and pillows and mattresses
the sky and earth
soon.
Farther And Farther Away

i am lost.
please find me.

i am like the tennis ball that you throw away from the comfort of your strong hands into the darkness of the night

tomorrow morning
before the sun rises with a new promise dusk shall find me your hands shall turn to ash and i shall be the rain to wash you away.

farther farther to the river and to the sea to the sunless horizon.
my heart is ready for this calamity of forgetting.
with air as balm, i shall be gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Farting Is Such Sweet Sorry

he couldn't help but laugh

about his recent encounter of the third kind when after the kissing and the hugging instead of the usual bye bye

(the parting should have been ok but he..uhhum)

he farted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fast Paced

the morning sun rises
on the east

i open the stereo for a fast paced song

come dancing
it is so natural for a love that badly needs a fast pacing

RIC S. BASTASA
Fast, And Flashing

for those that i have not spoken they shall continue to be
so

the bus is coming and it will not make any difference whether i come in or jump out

you will wave your hand someone will remove his hat as a gesture of honor i like to think that i shall take a look but it will not matter

i am inside this bus and
it is fast and everything flashes
like
drawings erased
on that blackboard

RIC S. BASTASA
Fat Woman

fat woman with a thick black coat walking along the sidewalk of the train station
alone
and cold and remembering the sweet things back home
ten thousand miles away

i perfectly understand this moment of abandon this silence of the buttons this warming of the soles of your feet this discarding of memories moving on towards another journey forgetting who you are and not anxious of what they all shall become you've got your own life a diary and a picture in the wallet answer the call and be there he is waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fate

that time there was bombing of the old San Pedro church and about six people died instantly,

it was by luck that i had diarrhea and i had to rush before the holy mass ended that time i believe about candles the light that cannot end itself because it is not its time yet it is an invisible candle that God only sees.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fate With Us

dark clouds gather on top of a mountain and then it rains and we run for shelter.....

we keep ourselves
warm in an embrace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fate Wrote It...

the best
poem in the world is your life.

outbursts of feelings geysers and volcanoes combined tell me if your life rhymes

it doesn't

but i must say it is the best poem that fate has so written

RIC S. BASTASA
there is no way that i will never know you in full
you shall brag to the clouds in your mind that you can hold without your fingers
mists
fog
mirages
oh
they drift
there is no permanence
permanence is an illusion
a river
a cloud
water
air
a hush

and this is where we must start
educating air
trusting the coolness of emptiness
saying this could be & this could be not
all
at the same time
and yet
with a sigh

it happened.

RIC S. BASTASA
as father begs, the son in a compromise goes with him in that dome where there are candles some have already burned themselves and some have just been lighted by the hand of the caretaker.

there had been so many misunderstandings unresolved anger
the son keeps the hate as the father keeps
the silence
there is no available explanation there is simply none to mention for the moment

the father looks behind and tells the son i am of the past
my candle melted to the ground there is no rekindling the father points to him another candle about to end its life and he tells the son, that is yours the father is talking about a life of the past and the shrinking future the son now must explain too how hate kept him there is no explanation there is simply nothing to mention the candles melt to the ground offering a smoke as left-over of its short existence that is the only possible explanation

RIC S. BASTASA
Father And Son

For quite a time you sail Like a paper boat on this river Then you want a change In these little things you get You feel you deserve
To fly and be this kite On air and face the Rage of storms
You are proud of it Claiming you have managed Yourself so well

Sufficient, until the cord was Cut,
Now I have to find you where You landed
With some broken bones
From this cliff
To the rugged terrains
Of that mountain

RIC S. BASTASA
Father And Son And The Kite

at first i saw how father made a kite

it was for me
and he taught me how to fly that paper wing and then i aged and too old to make a kite or fly one like that got nobody to leave father's kite and so i left it on the road one day the wind took it away and i did not bother looking where it went

you know
there are so many things that i want to lose
to forget

at this stage of my life i want to throw everything away it is the moment of wasting diminution, fading, until no one remembers me one day a father makes a kite for his son wanting to keep everything intact valued and loved and spread someone wise as us knew how everything ends as beautiful as rain that stops to make the road glisten

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive Father And Son...

when i see a child with curly hair like that of his father trying to grab my phone and uttering my name and then begins his crying game
i am beginning to feel that usual pity
for this young member of humanity
for time and time again nature knows how to inflict its pangs and pains to this little brain but he is not at all that powerless or helpless for he knows also how to invent his own defenses with nature's abuses upon his youth
he also knows how to strike back with his fist and bites and wild bickering

and soon it becomes more like his own dead father damned, and reactionary rebellious and too hurting

he hurls what he has received makes the wars and never learns how to keep back that inner peace....

RIC S. BASTASA
Father God, Yahweh, Divine, Good And Fair.

at the end
i know what is this all about

Art, pleasing
for a while, giving flowers as reasons
to live,
soon you must leave
me with wilting memories,

Politics, again
only for a while,
you, too must go,
for your own selfish
interests and motives,

Philosophy, and reason
and justifications,
good, i can grope
for more explanations and find more reason for living,

Friends, ice coating of my cake, flames for a while, pudding,
wind and merry making a little talk here and there, miseries spread too little on the
sandwich and the the
burger,

Family, oh, soon they will have lives
of their own,
and finally you find yourself again
alone,

Wife, soon you'll die, destined for me but again only for a while, a mind of her own, a direction she can take, not much to attach, spaces
here and there,
nothing really lasts
forever,

but there is one here who does not leave me, conscience, my own peace,
myself beside you,
Most friendly, Father
God, Yahweh, Divine,
Good and Fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
today i prefer to write back, into father's invitation a long time ago where for days we have to ride on horses passing by the forest of Antulanga as he was tall and i was behind him with the horse he would pick berries for lunch saving on rice and dried fish and potable water at night the moon was a bright as the glass which he tucked along for the natives, to see their innocent faces and then give up their lands for us to plant and then they leave now the fruits of the conflicts have bloomed and i with all honesty claim that there was nothing wrong with what he did. The great grandchildren of the natives are schooled and they think they know now what wrong was done and that they must kill all those memories to get back their land.

i am inside this room, and trying to write what history was all about. It is and will always be about a father to his son.

RIC S. BASTASA
Father X

my mind was as young as a bud of a white rose when you were ordained somewhere in that high place of the city time proves who the innocent are who the culprits are later exposed under the mighty sun of truth

you are part of the stain you call yourself the fallen manna from heaven food for those who think they are lost those slaves set free by the shackles of ignorance now you are like us the grasses of the lawn the pebbles of the pavement the sands of the shores of time now i believe you more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fathered By Stone

Thrown
into. Away and now immersed with
all of you.
Pebble on the sand
some waves come
as occurrences.
Another
pebble of insignificance is here.
Nothing is like
it and it likes
no one
upon its shiny
and glittering
arrogance.
Fathered by
stone
it cannot escape
the ordinariness of
all.

The rest of us
are silently
laughing.

Out of resigned
acceptances,
call it humility,
when it is finally alone and
lonely,

we assure
it
that we are pebbles too.
Father's Complaint To A Lazy Son Writing A Poem.

i know it is morning
thru the clock on the pc.
this is my room.
blinded by blinds.
a lamp stares on the keys.
got a jacket
for the cold.
lazy man, father calls.
what is poetry? he mumbles.

RIC S. BASTASA
Father's Day

Masquerade sits beside his daughter: white face and slender body

she looks like a flamenco
that evening

she feeds him some yakosoba noodles
using the chopsticks

it's father's day and i look at them with envious pity

at the 39th floor
i look at the city: lively like stars twinkling
at the ground

inside is the sound of emptiness hissing like a snake whose tail is cut

RIC S. BASTASA
Father's Footsteps

father's footsteps
are gone
brother, but do not worry
we shall arrive there on time
i know the path
by heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
Father's Legacy...

father left a fortune
for the five of us, the mountains, the three sisters are snobs and a brother likes it there in Tunisia,
i am left with skills perhaps to convince you to stop stealing from us.

Father is right.

RIC S. BASTASA
Father's Soul

father's soul comes again
i am cold
to his hug, this sickness of ghosts
embracing us, the living,

questions and images mixing on a night
of horror,

always, the question is:
what for, dad? what for?

leave us, we know how to live our lives,
stay in the land of the dead and be rested,

for now is our time to confront our own ghosts,
equipped by your quotes we think we know the routes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fault Is Thick Where Love Is Thin....

it is this way of coping
up
with anger, when you got paired with someone who does not see the future like you what happens next
what is there in that mirage she should not have opened that
box of Pandora and you ask her to solve the problem ‘turn on the exhaust fan! ! ! ’ and you are into this rage why is she not aware of the poison in this room?

she stares at you but she does not know how to cry.

you are into anger, mismanaged fury, and you recall what she just said before she went into a frenzy,

faults are thick
where love is thin.

RIC S. BASTASA
Faura

it is here
where at noon you know not hunger for a burger
you call someone to talk to and you need it
badly
to pass the hours
you are almost dead
grasping for
words
and yet she answers you that she is about to take a bath
and that she is not available till 2 pm

RIC S. BASTASA
Fear

there is this fear about how things move past us a chick turning into a chicken it lays an egg and more eggs and hatch into chicks

in a moment

you sit there unmoved left out like a stone on a river bed that went dry last summer

come spring
the tight buds burst into flowers you sit there unmoved left out like a rusty gate diminishing its body on the seashore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fear And Trembling...

i have always wanted to write this yesterday i desisted for fear that you may read this and something might altogether end whatever was started with grace and gladness the museum of art and porcelain is no longer appealing and i walk in there floating like some kind of a cloud without direction as i am thinking of something else

it is hard to conceive change it can connote transfer, departure, rearrangements, and even the filtering of all those matters inside the cabinets, the kitchen and the comfort zone

it has to be done, it must be.
not now. But i am writing this hoping that you may read it and then you make the first move
yourself.

i pray. It will be good for both of you will.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fear Not Doubt

it is,
this doubt,
normal, in fact,
to me,
doubt is the beginning
of wisdom,

the only sister
of imagination
the only way to be original

doubt is poetry
doubt is truth, doubt is the springboard of the questions
jump from it
and plunge into the pool of answers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fear Of Flying

by erica jong

the most uninhibited
delicious
erotic novel of a woman ever written

and then
continue with parachutes and kisses

the woman
exposing her most intimate sexual feelings it is all about women in a completely new way

why not?
go beyond the catcher in the rye
and portnoy's complaint

sass, brightness and take a bite

RIC S. BASTASA
Fear Of Saying

What is inside us wants to speak Always
Wants to speak
It is we however who want it silenced Because always we have all the reasons To just be silent Afraid always
That this self may break into pieces and then there is no way to repair it

RIC S. BASTASA
Fear The Water

for those whose feet are made of clay they fear not electricity

what they fear is the liquidity of
water

for when it pours all those feet shall find themselves flown to the sands of the river his are made of glass but stones are not that far away

RIC S. BASTASA
Fearless

and then when finally all that i have were taken, when i have given up everything that i stored for all those living years
i face you: fearless.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fears And Deaths

and the story goes that when evil spread to the world and took away its casualties God has allowed only five to be taken by death but what really happened was that the rest of the casualties were taken by humanity's fear of itself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fears Of A Mad Man In The Office

forgive me
i am an unthinking human being i am exhausted and feeling like a wall of a house the roof makes no sense to me
or the stairs
which she finds
to be filled with meaning i am not that road
i go nowhere
and i do not stretch
to places
forgive me
but i am too tired to think about what you are thinking
now
it is my fingers simply moving and not knowing what it is doing just following the water of the river without fish and moss
forgive me
for having wasted your time i am tense
and i have fears about things that yet to come i do not even know
i am afraid
and so forgive me
i am contagious and may destroy what ever mood you may have today
and so forgive me for taking you to the last line of this poem
it is this
nothingness that attacks me like a bullet in my head
and so
forgive me
i am dead or
i am just playing dead because i am afraid.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feasting

feasting on silence
a bowl of air
a balloon of emptiness floating on a mountain of madness
reckless and imprudent
i swallow this pride.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feasting On A Beautiful Body and i shall sit and watch how you move

so gently
and artfully around
your body

i have no thoughts
i am empty
i am a clear glass
on a clean table
i am an unlighted cigarette
between your fingers

every movement of your head every slide of your hands beside your legs
every bite of your lips every wind that blows
your hair
every wink of the eyes
every coming and
going
and waiving of the hands and closing
of your fingers

is love to
me.

RIC S. BASTASA
February 14, 1996

you view the night
as a blanket

it is cool black

and we are lying upon the grass

watching the stars
holding hands

and without saying much since the feeling is too much i just close my eyes and convince myself
that this is not a dream

RIC S. BASTASA
February Morning

white curtains laced and see through

over the window down below

red suntan blooming beside mahogany tree

a sparrow is singing upon a twig

a man sitting looking at the view feeling so new

RIC S. BASTASA
Fed Up

one day
i got fed up with poetry

complaining with Basho

i too have sighs why a simple frog
jumping into a water
can be a classic poem

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeding On Gasoline

as you feed on gasoline everyday, though a machine you're not wanting to be an engine on a 3, turbo-powered and always active no matter what i say you go on with what makes you happy so you tell me
and i have all my wishes for you go on have a good dose of gas feed on it
every moment, burn, burn, burn glow and have the hearth of the heart be bad, burn, and then char and then be just a name somewhere engraved, as i write the epitaph

'here lies a man his dreams all granted he burned himself to death in the name of love and lust now he is happily become dust'

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeding The Chickens

the grains in your hands you spread them on the ground chickens come near you making you feel like you are the United States of America and they are the countries that depend on you those third world bastards those colonies, those developing ones the grains become your bombs under your keeping you think you are the only one who has that sole divine right to keep these grains (yes the bombs) inside your hands

Holy cow! Who are you? Who are YOU!
(repeat the question 10x)

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeding The Wolf

there is this fight between the wolf and the sheep inside the hearts of every man

there is this man who feeds the wolf everyday and so inside him the wolf wins, and then

one night the wolf
who is always hungry ate the weak sheep and then finally the man.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feel It And Be Real

grab the latest
story, not fiction

people are plastic
write it

on your forehead
learn from them

listen, talk, be merry when the hour comes

leave as though you know no one

as thought there was really no party

or meeting
miss them because you

learn a lot from them this social ladder

this climbing without arriving at anything

laugh with them
do not be a loser

when you are alone
spit out everything

it never does you any good at all

but somehow feel that you have become an hour stronger
and then

when you close the door shut off the light

always remember:
it is you only

you only, and no one else

it is your joy
only your sorrow only

your only life
and they do not give a damn

feel it and be real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feel The Philippine Rain

mY Friend
you've got to feel the philippine rain
sometime
it is too refreshing...

RIC S. BASTASA
Feel The Wind

feel the wind
inside the emptiness
of your lungs

feel your lungs
taking root at the back
of your body

feel your wings now spread and flap and then go away from everything

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling A Red Brick Wall With My Soft White Hands

red bricks
walls
thick walls

seeing these walls of red bricks
feeling the hardness
of each
with my soft hands

close my eyes
feel that i am inside you
a wall

no i don't scream
i moan

and then i am silent so tired and asleep

dreaming of windows
red doors
golden locks
platinum keys

wings on my shoulder feathers of birds

blue skies red suns
blue moons

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling Blue

feeling blue, one morning, i feel so blue
i decided to sleep
the blueness all day through

i won't tell you that i am feeling blue it is no use
you're feeling blue too
i know
i can see you
all over blue

i lock the door
and put the notice
Do not disturb Just busy

i open my PC
and start with my journey to wonder something like a philosophical trip to the portals of Plato who i think,
is feeling blue too
and he put some marks
on the door
of his door: know thyself

i think, it is pretty much the same with: Do not disturb

Someone is busy Getting to know himself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling Guilty

if i met Tu Fu
and Li Po sometime
on top of the
misty mountain
and see them with their poetry and jugs of wine
beside the winding yellow river

I'd tell them about my guilt
that i am one kind of a lost soul
preoccupied too
with poetry

sans the jugs of wine but with a number of concubines.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling Hollow Is Not A Crime

feeling hollow is not a crime, why worry? i like to feel hollow at times i feel so light and guiltless, and i sit on a bench and look at passersby, guessing what is also inside their minds: that one is hollow too, she is floating in air like a butterfly and that one is hollower than thou she has a halo.

now i feel hollow too, but i get so used to it that it has gained weight like a feather from the status of air, and i have become so sensitive to what other hollow people like me feel, to the nth time of their empty lives, but, know what, only for a little time, hollow minds become filled, like hollow souls too filled with so much divine grace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling Like A Ripe Plum

do you sometimes
feel that you are a ripe plum
ready
for the picking?
and since no one is
there
not even a child at play
and so you feel the need
for falling?

sort of
you are a delicious plum
and there is no taker

sort of
you are bound to fall
and then
rot on the feet of your tree
in the middle of a thick
green grass
underneath the bluest
sky

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling Like A Stranger

in this place
this house without furnitures all floors, this house with nothing but some stairs
and windows
you built it, i was away for years and we meet again
in this house
of acquaintances devoid of affection, i have a way of telling what is this all about by merely looking at the ceiling there are no lights to clarify me, who am i? in this house where i am not even a tree or a vine
rootless, leafless
dying,
shall i continue living here?

i feel so unlike everyone else, i am a total stranger in this house that you built this house devoid of affection, i guess i have no choice but to leave at once

otherwise, i too shall perish

RIC S. BASTASA
Feelimg Like An Asshole

too much giving makes me feel like an asshole

there is no taking which they think is normal

there is only the giving and giving without asking for something in return it is this blindness of the self that makes this world see what is alive

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling Lousy

Feeling lousy is seeing this lady laughing She does her thing with confidence like she Knows everything; what to do with this Matter called
Everything,
She knows her place and claims it as hers, She tells you, you are never like her doing so well In fame, Glory, and Honor,
She has her circle of friends, a nice reliable computer
And an internet facility
To get her on top

On top of shape, on top of everything, Yes, this everything,
Which she has control of,

And feeling so lousy, I wish how I can be like her,
This great woman of everything

But then, I wonder, I have my place, where she can never be,
This lowly place, this small space she detests,
This is mine, I am small,
This small place I have
Where she can never be
And I own this,
Enough for me,
I am happy.

And, oh well, I do not like everything, Too big to handle and
I know
I would be unhappy by then.

I simply like myself being small.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling Of Relief....

i just wrote a very long poem
it is about us
i must be too stupid to have pressed the wrong part, it got lost,
or it was simply deleted and i tried so hard to recover it and show it to you but you are not here,

on the other hand
i feel that i am just over reacting to that know what? let the computer delete or let the system experience its own error i have no regret

in truth, i don't believe what i just wrote it serves no purpose at all and just like everything that is happening now it is nothing but simply another stupid thing that is happening to my life when something stupid is deleted, guess what? you feel relieved.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling The Coming Of Something Still Far But Sweeter

i do not wish
that you will consider my arms as your prison cell
i do not have those arms now i have fingers spreading like
wings
and i do not wish to hold you with the sharpness of my claws
i do not know what it tight anymore everything i have are loose
what i have in my hands are no longer yours
i grope an empty room feeling no walls
and floors
there is this first flight and i have no fear

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling The Falling Of The Leaf

it is a leaf with serrated edges
turning yellow
and fallen

makes me feel
the way you feel
when the wind
becomes too
unforgiving

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling The Life Of This Earth

at the end it is just you and as usual all alone with a little difference though that in this particular moment the moon above you is full and floats as calmly as a mellow shade of borrowed light
soft and tender
above your hair
there is home in loneliness now no one screams and blames another there is no running anymore away from something broken or shattered glass with pointed pieces
you lay your body upon soft green grass under the thin golden shade of light feeling the the life of earth gently gently beating

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling The Lightness Of My Being

we're on a boat
bound for a beautiful island far south
the sun is above us our hairs are blown by the wind

i put my hands on the side of the boat against the waters

eddies of thoughts
sparkling flashes shimmering waters
this lightness of being intimate to this world that i am living

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling The River Flowing Inside Me

I didn't think about whether I was writing poems.
I was thinking.
And the more I was thinking, the more there was I didn't understand

— David Anti

did i have as my goal to understand?
no it isn't, it is merely to feel how i feel,
and keep a record about it, i write like a river, actually i do not know where i am going, i just go with the flow, i close my eyes and feel the flow, and not ask where am i going? for that is not the question and there will be no answers, nothing specific it is only the flow, and the sound, and the color and
the scent,

i am told, all rivers go to the sea it is the truth, and i do not question it. i do not ask any understanding about the sea when i arrive there.

again it is just a feeling. perhaps, you may change the term it is possibly faith understated.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling The Sunflower

feel the leaves of this living flower pierce and burst the dews still dreaming
this morning
the glow of the sun from the east slowly spreading between the hills

you do not notice the slow unfolding of this flower through its red petals now wanting to open from the hold of
your fingers

my living flower blooms today it is telling the world what freedom is
and its purity

and its being so temporary...

RIC S. BASTASA
Feelings

to feel that one which gets under your skin love's mistaken notion about endearment of an irritation one wants to get rid of that sting not the one inflicted by the bee but by one that makes your whole world whirl and fills with the lighter colors of the rainbows your small cluttered world singing for instance under the rain does it remove the pain underneath your skin?

nope.

temporary remedies, like a warm touch that leaves you alone after a very short moment of contact

feel the feeling felt for a very short moment like a smile a kiss at the airport and then the plane becomes a dot thrown away towards the distant skies nothing lasts that is why, and i say i very well understand why people like us whom they dub as lost and irreconcilable

keep on writing
we wish things and feelings last but these do not really their nature is airy and is simply blown away and no miracle makes it come back and kiss you again.

alright, let the breath go, it is not yours anyway.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feelings Are Like Clouds

if you go by what you feel you end up changing always because that is what feelings are,

clouds, air,
water, drops

a feeling is not a house it
is sand,

it is a face not a body

it does not recognize footsteps

it is hair
without a skull

it is a stranger to
the past
and does not have a future

RIC S. BASTASA
Feelings Are Not Logical My Dear Cindy

looking for love? finding love in some discreet dark slits of the streets? not quite right. Let love find you cindy, do not hide.
Take the good side of the lighter side of the system of the shin.
Take flight. Let the bees chase the flowers.
Do not an earthworm be like, in the hollows hiding There is no mate waiting.

Show your glow. Be like a firefly with a light luminous carried by its body.

Be like a shining sheen of the sunny side up of the favorite fried egg On the white porcelain plate. A fork. a spoon, a glass of tea.
Pancakes with glaze of honey.
And pink watermelon slice and yellow pulp of a ripe mango.
Eat. Lick. Savor. Bittersweet. Sweetest of all sweets in Suntory Whiskey. Feelings, oh, feelings my dear simply utter What is there. What is felt by the heart. Like all these There is no pattern, no system, no formula, All but unfinished roads, and you figure out What to do, where to go, but Here you are Start from here. All. It is all play. Enter.
Click the right icon for you.

Press enter. Go.
Fly away.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feelings Creep Like Vines On A Trellis

you are an embroidery upon a cloth and everyday your hand moves with the needle and the colored threads as you rely on the rhythm of your
life

the picture is incomplete feelings creep like vines on a trellis and one sunny day be excited

a bud turns into a flower a butterfly flutters and lands silently in one of your petals

RIC S. BASTASA
Feelings Feelings

i
)
(
)
(

so light >>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>> i
(
)
(
)
(

so light >>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>> i
)))) ((((((()))) ((((())))))))) free so feel
* *
*
^ ^

&i light

>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
<<<<<<<<<so i feel (((((so free)))))) (((((so light))))))

i feel so free so light

i
Feelings Of Insufficiency

our feelings of insufficiency are real.
we do not fake it we show it, but these feelings have something greater to say than mere helpless insufficiency:

it reminds us, boy, we are human subject to the limitations of who and what we are boy, we only give what we can the rest could be luck our best need not be enough sometimes we feel that what we get we do not really deserve oh boy! what conceit? what a lack of this sense of humility?

all is fair, nothing more nothing less there is no rush for success there is always the right season, the right time for the right person.

later, it will be me, later it will be mine.
all i need, having exerted my best, is just pray and wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feelings...

actually we are falling like rain but the difference is that we fall upward
because we are transcendental creatures
who know the cycles of light and darkness

who know that life is a ring there is no end to this falling and so we simply stay

there is no floor
we only dream of skies

no ceiling
we only have space beyond and this pretty makes all interesting

together
we are actually floating in this fall and so we simply feel that we are watching things around
us
we invent television and we sit by the sofa
and watch

there is no falling after all
we are here
dots on earth taken by its spins and revolutions

we are like stones now stable on the sand...
Feelings... And More Feelings That Go Away...

in my hands are feelings they are sand
spilling away
more like water in character you want to touch it but the sooner you believe that they can stay they have already left
and gone
away...

feelings are strangers going places
how can they ever stay faithful
to the hands
even if warmth is still there
even if
you tell them
how you need them to stay

RIC S. BASTASA
Feet In Circle

i have seen
feet of black children in circle
they look at each other's eyes smiling affirming once again
the power of unity in their most tribal tradition

RIC S. BASTASA
inside that room
the item is displayed
in full
and you shall see the perfect form that you dream of

i will not describe the lines and the curves this is private

you are free now to explore the terrains of the human body

your hands are firm you perspire in the middle of the coldness

you are preoccupied with yourself on the limited time
life is....limited time is money

the other one is obliged the contract is clear the hands mimic the touch of love the lips plays the music the body sways into a dance the approximation is too short love does not exist no words come out

the eyes close imagining another world out there
the heart bleeds
you do not see blood you are too preoccupied with what you shall get well, time is up upon a profuse perspiration the heart is calm that lovely storm is over now you go separate ways trying to forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feigned Passion (In A Pornographic Movie For Pay)

passion is feigned and when it
is done so
the sounds of moaning
in monotonous
dishonesty
it is
a repetition of two same syllables
all likened
to the rubbing of two dry leaves
on a very dry
summer
i listen carefully no vowel is truthfully spoken

RIC S. BASTASA
since you are selfish not wanting to share your fish
your loaf
your coffee
i decided to imagine that you do not exist
not even air
which still occupies
space & weight a matter of my discretion
that is all too personal from now on i decided to rely upon my fish
my own loaf of bread
my own coffee
my own jumping heart in that Mount of Olives
from now on i go my way
that way
this way
all the way
i have nothing to lose
i am nothing
to you, but let me try my own way
who knows
with the blessings of Lady Luck
who knows that i can also be
everything
to this and that whatever that fate brings on a tray
of fortune.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fences And Fidelities

marriages were made to be broken, that seems to be the rule now women have long demanded fidelity
not 1% of unfaithfulness is considered as an excuse now, i travel alone, watching the long roads approach me like a movie houses in the cities forestalled by tall buildings inferior to the heights of modernization seemingly the old houses are gone now like marriages except those in the suburbs where old house still persists with their fences like fidelity, i guess it must be fenced to keep it away from infection, love a green grass marriage still like an old lifestyle where the wife picks the flowers while the husband still plays with his favorite dog and his kids.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fencing

fence out despair
it does nothing good for the grass on the yard fence in hope for they are like finches that feed on the grains to include the wastes of the kitchen fence out doubt they do nothing but crowd the room like uninvited guests who always ask for glasses of wine though you want to close out but they always persist in drunkenness fence it love you know what it can do to your bed and the linens
and the bathroom it gives you a sense of beginning a feeling of eternity when you have forgotten how to moan fence out loneliness you know how it destroys you and deprives you of much needed sleep when your eyes sink like boats in the whirlpools of madness but at any rate when these fenced out matters still remain

such as the loneliness that you cannot drive away or the doubt that still cling like dusts in the furniture no matter how you dust them away or the despair that appears like blood stains in your pastel green carpets well, why not be with them and make them feel that they are at home with you perhaps they mean no harm they do nothing except to make you feel that you are not alone that happiness is a freak that life is like all these whole in sadness undefeated in our psychological wars that after all they are your sources of strength the tests of your mettle.

welcome them
after all they have nothing to stay except in your house of realities.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ferdie

blood was the rain
that made the ground of your dreams fertile,
death was the plow that furrowed a vision of us here who simply watched as you pass us by there was something that bloomed like the flower under the shadow of the sun the silence says you left
nothing
everything about you has become unrecognizable, there were traces but only for a while the sea washed what footprint was
there
you left seeds, still alive, the birds of prey black as their hearts are took them all away

one seed grows
tall and mighty
now it is asking me what you were what has become of you a name that they all barely remember

RIC S. BASTASA
Ferris Wheel Talks

to make him interesting tell him that you are with your other famous friends in the bar drinking the best beer in town and you are enjoying the talks of the town

to include him, (and he would be too curious what about him that you are all talking about)
and you make stories, here and there and everywhere
precisely to make him alive again when in fact, you and your famous

friends
had been talking about religion, philosophy, politics, and girls, and about this incessant Ferris wheels of war and peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fiat Voluntas Dei

at the end
we shall not be responsible for logically
what happened was that it was God's will it was Him all along asserting Himself
slowly
in a hurry or whatever despite the fact that they always make us feel that we are responsible with our own human will,

at the end
He triumphs
even without us

RIC S. BASTASA
Tel me what is your recently invented pretense
Your latest lie?

Shape, form, color, texture,
Of your many selves like your unequal fingers
More than the number
Of your allowable toes,

Feign and feign
That is feigning
Feign in feigning
Fingers like other fingers,

The shape
Of your fingers

You make things up
You invent new stories
And without any excuses
At all, like a very clever man loving many women
At the same time,

Figment, fabric, fabricate fabrics
To entertain, you are justifying, just to entertain, not to Deceive
To lure them to glorify themselves
To believe about some goodness and beauty and the Truth so well expressed in fiction,

In the field of imagination things work themselves into human beings
The cows talk in affable fables, the characters talk about avarice, love, hate,
And murders done in fiction,
We learn a lot,

And in that vast field of fiction
You are the cicada singing
Alone
To a cold and dark night Wishing to be
A black bird, the one that flies and sings
And goes to places where
You have never been.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fictional

everything i write comes back to me like they are real in flesh and blood and friends write how come
how is it that we are there in your poems when they are supposedly some works of a writer imaginary and fictional

i have no answer

i write about love and broken hearts and another friend emails if i am alright is there anything she can do to help?

but i say again this is not me this has nothing to do with me this is fiction

and she does not believe me
she says,
there you are trying to lie again when blood runs surging like some pulse of a dying man wanting to be alive in your poetry,

i have no answer

the poems are works of fiction it is not me it is about him and her and them she shrugs off her shoulders and reads again about the old church where she once knelt and prayed there was this girl who fell in love and whose heart was beautifully torn to pieces

she says she is her
the poem is true

and there was this boy who was with her praying who, when he became a man broke her heart

she says it is you it is you
the poem is true,

the poems are true
who will ever believe me now?

i have always lied all along count it from the first poem when i said about it and i said it was

it is

all about nothing and it will always be about nothing but fiction, nothing personal, but it can be also painful and lingering.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Fidelity

In your river he can be slimy as a fish
And when you sing,
He sings with you as a bird
And when you flow he flows with you as sand And to the sea when you reach the final destination He becomes the bay always looking at you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When love is gone
as it usually happens, when the house empties itself throws away all the furniture and beds and sets aside
cups of coffee and
chocolate cookies,

When everything becomes a question, we are no longer interested in some answers,

We go on doing that things
we do
like ants on a trail
like birds building nests and depositing eggs and hatching them
on pure instincts,

We do simply because we have to do
them,
we go on, and on and on,
nothing leaps from our chests, the heart still beats but not for the joys of love but only for
stability, somehow, the house is still this house, let the home go berserk somewhere we still keep the beams strong and the stairs serviceable for our comings and goings We choose no departures We pledge to stay: for bitter or worse even death till the next life, we must comply.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fiesta De La Vida

Hey amigas
Viva la vida Fiesta la vida
Cantandos amigos
Viva la vida

Dance, dance
Sway your hands
Touch the ceiling
Touch the skies

Fiesta fiesta de la vida

Swirl, sway,
Raise our arms to the Ceiling to the skies

Feel God
In the feast of your Body swaying....

Meanwhile
Delete the email
Of the British National Lottery
Telling you that you win
One million pounds!

Ouch!

I am exercising. I am hypertensive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fifteen

You curl, you know how to curl,
Yes you know a curl in your hair
And you curl yourself like a Hair, in your bed,
It is so cold and no one Sleeps here
No one comes
There is no hello
As guest and no
Hi to pretend
You are coming
Well, you curl, you know how to curl,
Like your hair,
This time, curl forever,
Nothing straight till the end,
Eternal curl,
Still Touch it

It bounces and re-bounces,
touch it again,
and be silent

RIC S. BASTASA
you tell me that your son was mauled
by police officers
and you find him
in our arms
spitting blood almost dead

the twist of your story is unforgettable

you are looking for a lawyer to defend yourself?

i am outraged.
give me my comfort bag
i am about to vomit.

i am driving my car tonight i do not turn on the radio

i want to kill the silence of the common people.

RIC S. BASTASA
Figures Don’t Lie (Edited)

you must understand that what costs us sleepless nights and these ugly eye-bags are not really the words, but the numbers,

yes the numbers those digits those symbols

they are the least common denominators

and numbers are figures and figures as you must have been briefed by the famous adage department figures do not lie.

RIC S. BASTASA
you must understand that what costs us sleepless nights and these ugly eye-bugs are not really the words, but the numbers, yes the numbers those digits those symbols they are the least common denominators and numbers are figures and figures as you must have been brief by the famous adage do not lie.

RIC S. BASTASA
Figuring It Out...

first, we figure out what makes us really happy, takes us lots of time and places forgetting about the essence
of the heart,
then we move on to accept what is laid before our eyes mostly pain
alcoholic numbness saves
and finally we find ourselves beyond ourselves against the rage of time falling beyond the edge of our sufferings

and then we feel nothing
at most
we are relieved and then we do not tell them that we are free.

RIC S. BASTASA
Figuring Out Meanings

there is a time when we do not have to figure out what the bird really is talking i mean, what does it sing? what word is there? what message? isn't this too technical in a sense of figuring out what it wants to convey?

hey, just listen, it is singing do not figure out the meaning

have fun!

RIC S. BASTASA Fill Me In

fill me in
for i am an empty cup and you are a river

fill me up for you are a hundred stars and i am but a lonely sky fill me for i am a man without love and you are the woman bursting

with love
fill me up for i am a dry earth and you are the goddess of rain and sunshine make me tremble in so much joy one that i cannot spell with any word

in a poem

RIC S. BASTASA
Filthy

steel brush hair
uncut for a week

brown-out and
black-out

soap without water
dog waiting outside

telephone rings
no one in the house

RIC S. BASTASA
Final Parting

i hope you are true
on this final parting

when you say goodbye make it always your last

when you come back
i am not here anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Finale

at the end
you must accept
you can do nothing about it, you sit for a while on the grass looking for solutions you gaze at the trees and the river trying to figure out the meaning of its song you do no miss figuring the sound of the stones

and then you finally look up the sky
and find God there

Relieved
Now, He takes charge and then your heart begins to sing the new song
of Hope.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finally

just like anything that you did in the past you started like
a
gasoline spilled on the cemented road
and a matchstick lighted it and the fire ran like a will o'wisp
but as usual it was just a very short
procedure
of a flame
that once lighted
your
paths of pain
your wish for relief and then everything simply turned off automatically

and you
began to do something new & strange

that which shall not cease your way of breathing life to another life......

RIC S. BASTASA
Finally I Know Who My Enemy Is...

i am armored on my hand is the sharpest sword i am ready for battle to kill the enemies

your enemies

when i am about to win and stab the victim
you are there running towards me
asking that i be forgiving your enemies are spared and they all laugh at me my armor is rusty now my sword not as sharp as i once held it

now you have enemies again asking that i go to battle who are you? i am not stupid anymore.

Use other mercenaries and if there is now Go, fight yourself, and have yourself killed so i can offer you flowers

for the dead
so i can for once rest and smile and tell myself

i am free and i work for no one anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finally Leaving In Search Of True Love

it will be years when you shall know the difference of an essence,

the quintessence of love you try to feel it in a body, and years and years of ecstasy lead to the numbness of your skin
and you begin to discover that this is all nonsense because love is not actually there but only the constant rubbing of the skin and the lighting of fire that burn upon itself until there is nothing but ash that

shocks you into a barren desert of emptiness

nighttime when there are no more
stars
when all the horses have abandoned you
when the sound of the sands
haunt you
no end,

you look around
love
the main ingredient was never there you regret nothing and see nothing important here that may hold you into more days of your turbulence

nothing is peaceful now all chaos
and you finally raise your hands in surrender

you signal the waving hands today is the day and then you close your eyes today is the freedom from the bars of

the flesh
you shed off flesh like leaves you burn bones like wood.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finally She Asks If I Am Sick And Dying

How can I answer her?
Everybody is dying
From the moment one is born He begins to count his steps to his grave He begins to save money for his funeral What makes him sick
Is the belief that he is healthy and wise
He will not die someday like the rest

To think that one is not sick Is sickening enough
Not to think about death That It comes anytime
Anywhere
Is sickening enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finally The Bee Takes The Nectar Upon Itself

in the end he gives up his identity as the working bee buzzing in the garden of his own choosing circling the flowers that newly bloom hovering and sitting on them with his mouth and sting and sucking all the nectars therein he takes upon itself what is prohibited the caste system and the queen today it sets itself free from the rule and flies freely in the air the nectar is his because he works for it and justifiably so another kingdom is born his nectar democracy his freedom his own destruction

RIC S. BASTASA
Finally The Laughter Reverberates Around The Four Corners Of The Room

..so finally the sounds of laughter reigns in the room

listen!

it is mine, finally, and i do not ask why you are as silent as a path without a single traveler the pebbles do not miss you the sands are numb

the clouds are as white as snow no signs of rain

nice weather, i suppose sad times for you mine shall be different as planned beforehand

two days ago
i had that wrong notion about death, i must confess how foolish i had been!

RIC S. BASTASA
Finally This Body Which Too Segregates Me From You...

society has always stairs for the hall

houses have it too
grades, degrees,
segregating one class
from another

like water which always seeks its own level

i have nails
to make my own stairs of my own house

because i understand all these matters

i build a chair for my butt
step on my shoes
carry my own bag
and proceed to my journey alone

chairs i leave
shoes i soon throw away
and finally this body which too segregates me from you...

RIC S. BASTASA
Finally You Always Find Yourself Alone

it is a fact of your life you marry

and have children
and grandchildren

and years pass by leaving you
with wrinkles and arthritis
bones that crack and a brain that does not remember
recent things
anymore

finally you find yourself alone in your room for they too shall find life
of their own

even your wife has to struggle with her thoughts and then you begin to find

the company of God as something missing
long been missing

your hands are empty your heart so hollow

you find yourself back to where you once began a cry and then the silence and the sigh

now,
back to the entrance

and then
the most awaited
exit door

light slipping on the holes of the wall inside a dark room

ah, you are in a monologue the air listens like a vacuum inside a glass less dramatic but should be with more glory, perhaps...

RIC S. BASTASA
Finally....

i have traced the words and it goes back there to your mouth you puke
and i urge you too
there is a lot of poison in there your stomach
lots of parasites
the nerves in your skull all infected
i am looking for some roots if there is any brain at all so sorry
there is none

RIC S. BASTASA
Find It....

you do not really
give up loneliness
whether you like it or not, it is already a part of you, you were born with it and you will die with it.

unless, yes unless,
you accept it as a way of life, as a normal beatification of the saint in you which you have not yet known.

when you were born
you were born alone.
do not expect much.
when you die, you
die alone, for in truth, who likes to die with you?

and you will tell me.
i'll find love, love
is everywhere, love is everybody, ...find it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Find Not Love (2)

Look for something not fragile as a sparrow's egg nestled on a branch of a tree not as spacious as the blue sky from where you are imagining so many things that may not after all happen in your lifetime not as real as a mirage on the desert where once you were lost and luckily found almost dead look not for long and lasting love find it here inside a house where the roof may leak where the hinges of the window are rusting
where the water pump is struggling hard to pour water to a child whose eyes are buried upon its sockets badly needing a drop of water a grain of rice
a fish bone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Find Your Way Back When You Are Lost

when i look at you
your thoughts become transparent

you have the head of a glass
and your thoughts are dark

like shadows of geese
flying away
from a blazing afternoon

look at me, i am a forest there are so many creatures inside this forest

when you come
when i invite you it is your responsibility to find your way back when you are lost

RIC S. BASTASA
Find Your Way Through

we have been together laughter and tears (intimacies cliched by daily familiarities)

now i am going alone on this narrow road (he calls it the road to calvary)

but all is not done yet there is a door
where you must get in you too alone

then somewhere
we meet again

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding A New Pebble

Meeting you is like Finding a new pebble
Out at sea. I don’t see Any similarity

with
The rest

i say
you're unique

And
no one Believes this pebble in my hand is Something significant

In fact
Everyone does
Not really mind
At all
Saying it is Nothing but a
A very ordinary pebble

But in my heart
It isn’t
It is something
That Amazes me
with its texture of solidity
and metallic color

it has Changed the way i look
At all the pebbles
on the shore

you lied.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding A Silent Place

he says he sees her everyday in the internet he still works in oxford and wants to see her in person

he is here and wanting to find a silent place to talk to her

ok there is none

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding God

the souls of my ancestors are angry they were telling me inside my nightmares the souls of my friends are worried the mouths of my living acquaintances are angry the priests and mother superiors the church layman are impatient with my quest that why at the age of 49 i still confess that i have not found the way to God

i confess my doubt but i am not at all the infidel that must be burned at the stakes of disbelief i have seen all of you entering that wide and gold-plated doors all ready-made by the Church of Rome i have seen all of you march boldly on that wide and steady road of Dogmas
all prepared by those in Authority like an instant coffee

inside my heart i still look for that narrow road via the check-points of suffering i have seen the bleeding blood of martyrs decapitated heads, thorns on their heads, crosses with dead bodies still hanging,
i have seen the tortures and the beheading of the saints
i have seen the angels without wings crying for justice that way, i am heading, and this way, i am having a hard time understanding you My Lord.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding Home Back

the radio on the other side of this room plays an old music i face this usual monitor as my fingers begin to press the letters chosen as thoughts begin to hover like pigeons in that public park where children are left by their mothers to play on their own sensing no danger somehow about strangers somehow one listens and then writes with nothing planned in mind like a stream of thoughts some flowers that fall on the yards of your youth that you gather gently to make a garland for yourself a chain of daisies yes you must still remember white on a string connecting until the end line is closed and you think that there is an end to remembering but like numbers that we gather its infinity runs like the horizon until the afternoon closes in and then the world turns dark on you and then you hear nothing and you have nothing to do now but walk away only to return to the first stairway to your home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding Oneself.....

one day
you will ask

who am i? where am i going?
why am i here?

it will not be a happy day for you

or for us or for everyone else

you will not ask those questions in a loud voice

you will ask them from the inside your gut

it will be a blurred day your eyes shall fall short of tears

the river dries and the skies turn into gray

RIC S. BASTASA
someday i shall find the best and fitting metaphor for you
and your
grief someday this metaphor will lighten what burden
you have

i am sifting through
this
that which explains and makes all these ugly versions
beautiful

what mess is there this metaphor must put back everything in place in full Technicolor
in its HD version

when it comes perhaps all the sad things could be easily set aside well kept inside a cabinet and silenced

could be a basket laced with flowers
could be a rainbow in the sky and a cliff with running singing falls.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding The Golden Rod

from my head you follow the contours of my eyebrow walk upon the bridge of my nose follow the furrows of my skin and pass upon the grasses of my hair you shall climb the hills on my chest and slide upon the muscles of my arms rest a while on the plains of my abdomen and proceed some more on the the lower valley of my strong body

the veins your maps
that your lips must gently follow and then
with your bare hands
right at the center of my thighs you grab the golden shiny rod
an ember sword
of the kings
hidden in that pot
at the foot of my rainbow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding The Sea Finally.....

oil and water do not mix who does not know it? until we know something else and you call it: colloid between the world of oil and the world of water something meets them, and they fuse and make a scene, of hues and penetrations, another world, another beauty, the head and heart and the bottom of humanity, somewhere between, this spine this modality, this middle, between the rings of the rich and the hunger of the hands a link is made, a connection, an intersection.
between the trees and the skies, a bench, where two lovers sit unmindful of those sunsets, between those busy folks looking for money, the playground of kids without the sound of fury, boredom's petals fall, rot and then dry.
time indeed knows the way in this puzzle.
a river winds its way, finally finding the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding Time

time is such a huge space and you find yourself inside it so huge, sometimes you do not not what to do with the empty spaces that still haunt us despite the calendars and hectic schedules set by us by them....

there is this stare that we give to the wind and we still have no answers

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding You Finally Finding Me

it is a merry go round a roller coaster and we are the passengers of this exhilaration
it ends at a short time and we take off
to find our hearts furiously beating we run another mile we cross another river and climb another mountain we like to know the limits of our veracity
until we finally end at the top of the cliff on a dead end
you look back
i jump down like a god finding my right place in the order of things.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding You Finding Me Finding Us....

each word has a derivative
it is like a tree
each leaf has an equivalent root tip

what is said is not taken from the air like a meaningless molecule that is here and then sooner disappear

there is meaning to each word, even to each syllable it springs from an experience from what you did and what i did it does not just come out from nowhere so always pay an attention discover and always discover be aware be sensitive discern and discern some more be a lens

until you too find yourself in me and someone else

for we are mirrors to each to find each other's true face.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Finding Your Real Mission Your Real Meaning

as a teacher
it is with them
your students who listen to you attentively while you lecture and impart your knowledge not just
in their minds
but also in their hearts not only in their bodies but also in their souls deep within

it is with them
that you find the fulfillment of your mission you find the real meaning of
your life
as they like little springs rise higher than their source
you
the teacher happily singing as they reach for their skies and you the clear running river reflects their triumphs

on the mirror of your waters
of a hundred watchful eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Fingers Of Light

fingers of light
from the hands of the morning sun caressing
the face of love warming the body of desire time both blanket and pillow moments of melodies songs of summer love

lips of lust
darkness moans
stars ejaculate
the moon in a multiple orgasmic outburst the land is silent
satisfied

a new day is born.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fingers On The Piano

the fingers on the piano are so cruel
pressing the ivory keys of mother's old piano and from the blankness of her presence
a floodgate opens the memories
which should have been better
forgotten
there will be more tears shed
as there will always be rain
but there is this adamant determination to claim the colors
of the rainbow
after

RIC S. BASTASA
Finis Vitae Sed Non Amoris

you think you ended Love when you ended your Life?

Love survives Life Life is Left to Thrive Upon Itself and Perish If You Will But Love will always be There In Itself Forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Finished

as soon as you are born you actually start to venture to an end. Every cry is every laughter's equal.
There is no such thing as loss or gain. There is always an equilibrium and equivalence, a value for value, such is the law of human conservation.
There is really no reason to fear, because there is no such thing as birth or death anymore. There is just this journey unfinished by you
and know
that everything is an unfinished business is the finishing tribute of the step forward, and then you feel eternity.
The first step is actually the end of all beginnings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fir The Lucky One

the shoes look for his feet his shirt and pants find their way inside his room
the table readies his meals and the tv for his morning news turns itself on and when he walks away the chair pulls itself to give way the floors come running for him to step upon the money pours like rain and the gains find nothing to explain luck comes knocking not just once but all the days of his life and he simply sits there and watch oh, you lucky one!

someone takes care of you and loves you you know nothing about hard work and patience

and i cannot question it because it is written in the palms of your hand pursuant to the mandate of the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Fire

flints just below
my belly sending
fire all over my body, burning! burning!

RIC S. BASTASA
Fire

flaming red
the heart that loves

basking worshiping the sun

burning
but never charred....

RIC S. BASTASA
the night was young and so we built a fire until it will be cold and darker than dark for in this time of the confusion of our lives
when the fire gets redder than red and hotter than warm i certainly find you more beautiful than ever

oh, this deception of fire that rages in the night of my
loneliness
has made you more desirable to the demands of my own flesh

i have never wanted this fire to stop
but it stopped just the same and you have changed from shadow to stone

do not blame me when i leave Fire, you have surely deceived myself...

RIC S. BASTASA
Fireflies

tonight the fireflies
come out from their hiding places

soon they will be crowning this tree with tiny twinkless of light and you

are confident enough that there is no fire

it is lovely to see travelling lights
in silence

the absence of stars and the surrender of the moon on the horizon and the darkness of the night

in contrast.

you hold your chin
with you thumb and index finger you sit down on a chair without a word.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are no stars tonight but there are fireflies teeeming the leaves of this tree

in darkness

o wo wo wo

the fireflies
are mimicking stars

but in inferior flickers substituting

real twinkles

the tree in the dark now begins
to look like
the Milky Way Galaxy

and look at you

you are nothing but an atom
vibrating

making some assurance that you are still alive

in this mimicry
of the universe

RIC S. BASTASA
Fireworks In The Town

colors explode in the sky in loud sounds

beautiful! beautiful!

yet unlike and unequal to an ejaculation

silent not enduring but freeing

RIC S. BASTASA
First Engagement In Bed

a moment when a white flower receives the first drop of gentle rain
feeling heaven.

RIC S. BASTASA
First Level Of An Ordinary Conversation on the shallow waters of laughter we let go the words, we go with the flow of the first layer of our waters. wooden boats, hands as rudders and a little emptiness covered by the lace of sweet nothings, hi, hello, how are you, miss you, as the feet stamp on something rocky, as the eyes bitter blue, as our souls should know where to go, sham, spam, violets are violets, and blue is blue, and red as red, no implications, no deeper swimming, just a slight touch here and there, some finishing statements, oh your nice, you look thinner, losing weight is good, like your hair your nose shallow, so shallow, there is no force here, no light, glimmer sans, i look forward to seeing you again.

maybe next year, maybe never. you have become so ordinary. and you sure, do not understand what i really mean. It is you.

RIC S. BASTASA
First Love

on that glance
the eyes see a different world a rain of roses

when she comes

a colored world when she gets near you

fourth of July when her hands touch yours

though accidentally and she says there is no meaning at all you create meanings now like a painting like a poem a neutral word becomes biased for love

RIC S. BASTASA
First Song.....

first song
from the trees
from a bird

slowly light
from the sun
creeps by my
window

mists dissolve
and then gone
upon the glass
pane

i switch off
the light in my
room

nothing dramatic
as one opens
the kitchen door

sunny side up
this fried egg
for breakfast

upon a coffee
scented room

RIC S. BASTASA
Fish Bone Thrown Into Infamous Pits)

the door is high on the mountain if a fish swims its way it is more probable that its fins are torn before it even reached one of the banks of the river
below the feet of grassy lands the old wise man once tells the story of the great fish who made it there flying with the power of a borrowed wing

a friend to the winds humble to the reeds
and the fish as soon as its gills become adopted to the hazards of mountain peaks suddenly turn into a dragon heir to the thrown of the volcanic kingdom how it has learned to breath fire and spit embers

how it has grown leather like wings and sharp scalpel nails is a legend

that old men always want to tell to their grandchildren with nothing in mind that they shall become great (and never like them who have succumbed as mere fish bone thrown into infamous pits)

RIC S. BASTASA
Fishyt Fishly Love Affair...

the balloon that you released in air finally burst
and you know not where the rubber has landed,

just like that old arrow that he shot into the air you know not exactly where it fell, just like the love that i am giving, it shall fall (not for you, who shivers with its touch) i better give it to the seagull instead this love for a fish, this fish that loves nothing but the sea....

RIC S. BASTASA
Fistfight

which side of the fist do you side with?
the left or the right

there are no other choices?

there is actually.

fistlessness, the man without fists and the watchers who do not shout for victory the moment one loses his game or that which where no one grieves when somebody dies

fistlessness
a world without a winner or loser a world without the cheerers of death a world where each is equal man to man and woman to woman where to eat one does not have to maim or kill or swindle another man

fistlessness
an open hand, a palm asking for rain, hands clasped in prayer hands gripping love fingers caressing the body of his beloved in the theatre of war not the fighters, not them lose and win it is you, the spectator counted as nothing but a collateral damage they say and will always say, it was not intended to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fit And Strong......

for the things that you love
there is always time

nothing hinders love, there is no obstruction

when papers pile themselves on the table
when queries come here and there when there are no more answers when money is nil when opportunities fall short of knocking hands when everything takes the shape of a fists when harsh words come like vendors on the market streets you feel like nothing destroys you and you take no refuge in food or friends and safe nooks and secret gardens,

you do what i am doing write and keep writing journey into the storms of the mind and feel confident

the mind is no sinking boat and even with all the storms the lighthouse of the self keeps the flames and there you are again: always a survivor...
fit and strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fit For Forgetting...

i do not wish to understand you it is no use at all, i only have to have you perhaps but i may not have you for certain there are no things as such or persons personified in wood and stone i do not wish to hold you i do not have that power i am tired of being lonely and broken perhaps some parts of me automate some parts adjoining to make a whole of me again, perhaps and so i do not wish to have you and hold you and even remember you the years have taught me that you are only such a beauty for my forgetting distance fold like waves of the sea spitting foams and touching skies and wandering at sunsets and then face away like gentle light finally embracing the arms of
night.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fitting In...

inside the mosquito net he reveals that he is having a hard time fitting a part of him
to her

i am at a loss wanting to imagine what could this be something sexual or metaphorical

he says i refuse to understand perhaps i must be too innocent or i must be too dumb been purified lately and what is adulterated simply repulses the emptiness of my senses

don't know,
don't know

what is it please? what is it?
please.

RIC S. BASTASA
Feeling lousy is seeing this lady laughing
She does her thing with confidence like she Knows everything; what to do with this Matter called
Everything,
She knows her place and claims it as hers,
She tells you, you are never like her doing so well In fame, Glory, and Honor,
She has her circle of friends, a nice reliable computer
And an internet facility
To get her on top

On top of shape, on top of everything,
Yes, this everything,
Which she has control of,

And feeling so lousy, I wish how I can be like her,
This great woman of everything

But then, I wonder, I have my place, where she can never be,
This lowly place, this small space she detests,
This is mine, I am small,
This small place I have
Where she can never be
And I own this,
Enough for me,
I am happy.

And, oh well, I do not like everything, Too big to handle and
I know
I would be unhappy by then.

I simply like myself being small.

RIC S. BASTASA
Five Quibblings....

i

i have to write this matter in a rush it is seven twenty two in the morning, it is a bright day like a
sunny side up fried egg,

and i haven't had breakfast yet it is not a holiday for me i don't smile, there is no cheering up pocketed smile, restrained yet trembling hands, there is work in the office this whole day busy, busy, busy,

i am on trial, (what i mean is i conduct trials, slip of the tongue thing, eh) and tonight i have to teach criminal law at the law school with more gaping mouths to feed knowledge, skill, the capacity to evade the law later after mastery,
that is it.

ii

i remember the star apple tree at the center of the school it is shedding off its leaves and one car got hit by its rotting falling branch: by mere pull of gravity it has no life force at all to resist a fall,
there is no desistance here, everything is accepted, like this freedom too to destroy oneself or another
negligent being, creature, thing.

iii
the place is muddy and the waters rise and there is flood everywhere and what appears before me is a lake less the swans,

iv

the grasses here die of so much water and there is no electricity, it follows, it is logical to expect some short circuits during floods, and the storms necessarily, strong winds, destroyed electrical poles,
fire,

the rooms are dark and the students are leaving
i am as usual left alone with some questions to be back home or have a drink somewhere else where there is not much crowd to know me and my usual quibbling about loneliness....i am not joking.

v

meanwhile, time runs that fast, like a bullet train, i fall short of time, but here i am rushing to the last word of this poem.

if you agree.i think, it is none of my business.
i agree.

RIC S. BASTASA
Five Stairs

there are five stairs
in my life
on the fourth of which shall be death
it is not the last but surely i shall step in there but i am stuck on the third and here i am delighted because it is so pleasing it is not wood it is soft and warm and even though not as stable as the third but it is as pleasurable as the sweetness of my temporary days thick and syrupy like pure honey from the bee

RIC S. BASTASA
Fixed And To Be Not Able To Move And Go Beyond

You have fixed yourself like a pole On this ground unable to move and go beyond This daintiness (you call it carnality) What you have in your mind Are some parts of my human body This thigh, this navel, this nipple My legs my lips my tongue

You even hint on The one that rises in the morning When I make hot water and look for coffee And cream
The sound of sipping you said you still crave

I honestly care for you And I may even make love with you someday (Or you may just kiss me on my cheek) But try looking at me as one soul in this darkness Feel my sighs hear my gentleness And touch that softness at the center of my being Light me up like a candle, let the light spread

Now see this lotus in the pond and then take a glimpse Have awe and then wonder

RIC S. BASTASA
Fizzle

eat a certain funny idea digest
and soon you fizzle out and fart

i am trying to break the wind
tonight

wind without noise
between us
poet to poetess

we shall hiss,
as does
a piece of fireworks

unambitious rockets
we too fizzle
doggedly
downward

we rise again
with modest reluctance,
we hesitate often,
we decline finally;
generally,
to misunderstand the questions
some more
among us
thrown

we fail
we soon than sooner die out

if we allow it......
Flaccid....

he of course has learned to hate the word
with time unfolding in front of him.
she laughs.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flapping Sails Of The White Winds

let us
let us all be white sails blown by the wind in one direction flapping, flapping winds, flapping wings of a white bird towards the endless sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flashes Of Lights

in one instant
the thought arrives
as a firefly,
or a flash of light
a lightning by the window that misses you
as target
you could have died
you shudder
looking on the other side of the
world
through your half closed window

a second sometimes can be fatal life often behaves that way.

RIC S. BASTASA
inside the room
you rest your feet on the stool
and you ask her to massage
these feet a little gentle like the way the other woman does not like the one that a wife
does to a husband
the other one is trying hard to please you
while the real one wants to finish
is quickly
and then you
tell her that her love is just perfect for this rare
occasion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flattery And Praise

flattery comes from your teeth out

praise comes from inside
the heart

an appreciation that is sincere
something
that you do not believe because we are oceans and oceans
apart

because i cannot touch you
because i have no wings

you must have thought of drift woods
and sails
without rudders
of men without hearts

RIC S. BASTASA
Fledgelings

mothers and fathers are like birds
always thinking of their
fledgelings
what to feed to their mouths everyday
until they grow up with wings to fly
away.

on such stage
they throw away education, principles,
sacrifice even their personalities and integrity
for a few worms

RIC S. BASTASA
Fledgling

you beak is too big for your wings

you see
you cannot really fly on your own

you have fallen again and your claws
are broken

surrender now to mama-bird who is anxious

waiting for you
with a nice worm
in her nest

RIC S. BASTASA
Fleeting Moment

burning wood
smoke rising to the sky fog finally leaves and you see trees and houses soft wind

touching your skin

fleeting moment
so light upon your heart like a tiptoe now you remember someone you wish she will be forgotten it is sweet and sour

nothing's changed
despite.

RIC S. BASTASA
one morning
you wake up
you see nothing but darkness still you ask what time
is it? it is 7 in the morning,
you discover
that you are blind,
you see nothing now,
you rub your eyes
still they do not see light or color or shape
you imagine light
smell things and imagine what their colors are,

you think that it is just a nightmare

it is not, it is a reality

what is the use of
tears?

what is the use of
screaming?

bear the darkness and learn to live with it, ....learn to
love it...
it is all  you've got

RIC S. BASTASA
Flexibility…

for we do not own the winds and so what we can always do is adjust our sails...

RIC S. BASTASA
Flirting...

do not worry
these are but little teases
of fate

if you take a closer look at the tears
you could have seen their tiny lips smiling for their final release

if you have listened quite a little longer
you could have heard the suppressed laughter of your
eyelids
before they finally close but you are so tired and have not noticed

all these
having entered finally the narrow door
of your day dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Float And Facing

i launder my whole body to the sea with a bamboo pole i float and facing the horizon i meet every wave every foam what i see is an endless coming and coming and coming dthis must be what the sea is all about the waves come with the salty water and yet nothing gets filled.

RIC S. BASTASA
Floater

I have become the tossing blade of grass
The tumbleweed of the powerful trail Tugged playfully along
The lanes of the winds Floating and not saying anything This and this
And this and that Going always nowhere
Anywhere

RIC S. BASTASA
Floater....

It must be the water
It must be where you chose Living
Could be those clouds
For yiu have profuse roots Of opulence

Why do u float
Still?

RIC S. BASTASA
Flor De Luna

White flower
Blooming
Only at night
When no
one is Watching

And so easily
forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
been there
yes, in new orleans,
rode too
on that street car named desire
found a place named cemetery
and bought some flowers
for the dead

you must know
they are for the living those who wish to be dead and those though living are already dead.

kowalski, yes kowalski in his true words caused much of the deaths there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flower Of Summer.....

if you
were just another
kind of cheap thread, you

would have snapped by now, listen

you are not
like those that snapped before having tried
the strong art of sewing, you are

destined to be part of the fabric

flower in summer
not a wind of winter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flower Petals

as the flower sheds off its petals one by one
to the ground

i look at you closely for tonight shall you be a flower
to me

shedding off what petals you have until what i see is only
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flowers

oh you like flowers.
red carnations. sunbright suntans.
big red roses. with dew still on its leaves.
oh you like all the flowers from all the corners of the lewdness of the earth. so earthly. you eat every petal and chew every sepal

you bet. you're the beast.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flowers And Skies

between the grass
and the clouds
a flower,
it has a dream to become a tree
she is a woman,
between the tree
and the sky
man,
between the two
lies the legend of
lust

between lust and must lay the rules

between two cities
runs the train of trauma somehow on this stream of consciousness

a fish alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
you talk about a world
of flowers
and i cannot help but also remember
the thorns and worms

bee to bee
tree to tree
aphid to aphid

do you wish to bring me there?
is there a world for me?
flowers for the bees rivers for the trees

suns for the grass
stones for the sands

in your circus world
of flora Brigitte
the fauna clowns are no longer funny

look at me
i am no longer a child candies do not attract me

i decide for myself
now
and neither sorrow nor joy is not anymore the prime envoy

RIC S. BASTASA
Flowers For The Magnificent Liar That We All Love No Matter What

you ask for bread
i give my own bread plus juice, i had one cold in the fridge
pressed from fresh orange

you can take it
sip slowly as i watch
i can give you almost anything if you just ask you do not have to fabricate stories i know each line

been there, you see,
been there, i keep telling you

you ask the world
my world

i am always ready to give this world to you i have no power over the stars and the sea

but i can ask them for you you just ask, all you need to do is just ask there is no need for a lie yet you did lie to me will you ask if it pains me?

even before you ask me i have already an answer like a fried chicken on the platter

I've been in pain
there is always pain over my shoulders you're the burden there so how can i ever experience pain again?

you are a liar
and will always be one magnificent liar

if you only ask
we can always give you

the answer: we will always love you just the same

know that. you must know that.
we have all cried for you we want to save you

perhaps, these flowers will tell that all....

RIC S. BASTASA
Flowery Thoughts

when we talk
i can imagine your chain of words

linking delights
vibrantly to enchantment
like some purple fuzzy herbs beside the red day lily surrounded by tiny blue flowers in a Japanese garden where i am more of a rock beside a pond
attentively listening.

felicity, i see
in full fruition.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flowing From My Heart

lava flows from my heart because i am a volcano to you.

lots of love flow also from my heart to the one who believes in me a gentle human person filled with love to the one who also loves me you get what you deserve i give what i can and for one who loves me for what i am i have given everything and for the one who has given everything i also give everything in return and for the one who really loves me i am offering my mind, my soul, my body, my heart for nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flowing Rivers

we are there
we just don't want to talk about it
we keep on flowing like any river
the boatmen
and their ladies how can they ever
recognize us?
they're having their parties too
under the moon
upon the cold nights
of their own preoccupations
what have they become
we too ask

waters are uniform
so they know how to hide incognito like all of us there is no specific face to all that is happening to all

if we spill
and move to the opposite direction we become all too different

they must never know the pain of being a river of being plain water

oh, they know their own pains too
and we know how to act not feeling them
we're here
how can we tell them?
show the bubbles
let the image of a celebration be seen on both banks of this iconic world

RIC S. BASTASA
Floyd's Fun

what is the fun of having surprises?

aha! aha!

she meets me one day looks at me with a little familiarity and comes closer and asks

'do i know you, mister? ' and i say without doubt,

'of course not! '

what is the use of her knowing me, anyway?

what is the pun?

that is the problem there is none not even fun.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fluid

emotions you must realize are fluid and they flow sometimes misguidedly sometimes blocked and dammed and you see a jail, a cell, a wall, an island without a bridge a sea without a boat
a rainy day without any rainbow,

you are fluid, you must realize that too, you flow, and surge and rage and fall, sometimes, you splatter
and feel like a splinter
of a hand grenade.

you feel something that behaves like a river inside you and you hear the sound of rage, sometimes just a hush or even a rain dropping from the sky to the gutter, and you feel you're inside this gutter and you have no control, about where to go and what to do, this is what is dripping all about drip, drip, drip, and you feel this sloshing mind like a slime getting inside the sensational strips of your throat like words in your mind pouring unceasingly, to make this poem.

what is this all about? you pretend to know. What to do about it?
i know you do not really know. Gut it. Gut feel it. Trust your heart.
Let the rage seep in like it is an innate part of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
emotions you must realize are fluid
and they flow sometimes misguidedly
sometimes blocked and
dammed and you see
a jail, a cell, a wall, an island without a bridge
a sea without a boat
a rainy day without any rainbow,

you are fluid, you must realize that too,
you flow, and surge and rage and
fall, sometimes, you splatter
and feel like a splinter
of a hand
grenade.

you feel something that behaves like a river inside you
and you hear the sound of rage, sometimes just a hush
or even a rain dropping from the sky to the gutter,
and you feel you're inside this gutter
and you have no control, about where to go and what to do,
this is
what is dripping all about

drip, drip, drip, and you feel this sloshing mind like a slime
getting inside the sensational strips of your throat
like words in your mind
pouring unceasingly, to make this poem.

what is this all about? you pretend to know. What to do about it?
i know you do not really know. Gut it. Gut feel it. Trust your heart.
Let the rage seep in like it is an innate part of you.
Flu-Like

it is flu-like this fluke of this universe
this feverish feeling
of loneliness

i am alone on this vast desert
on my night
with the wind
you are the farthest star

RIC S. BASTASA
Fluttering

'she is the self-crowned goddess
of many things and sometimes many silly things

with an attention span of a butterfly, she has mastered the fine art of fluttering in many ways but flying in none'

RIC S. BASTASA
Fluttering.....

if you are too heavy and you are humiliated with the way they look at
you

try going inside a garden
of butterflies

go where the flowers are thick and bursting in colors just watch there find a tiny butterfly hopping from one flower

to another

too fragile, light and silent internalize close your eyes and just be one within that journey within flutter....

RIC S. BASTASA
Fly Away, Follow Desire

desire is hard to spell it used to live in streetcars and complicated the life of one who
finally
lost himself in the labyrinth of too much thought

i spell it secretly and i don't spill it like your beans in Malta

it is hard to pronounce to fulfill it you do not even have to utter it it must live in the heart it must grow in the body and keep itself ready on the groins or the thighs or the lips or the soles of your feet during the cold pour of the rain by the side of your window the possibilities are always myriad welcome it do not deny the rights of desire it makes you write so well it smooths the rough seas of your journey makes you forget what is coming to destroy you

forgive yourself, embrace desire do not harm
be good, be gentle keep on waiting for the right time cut those boundaries

travel and if you have the wings ready in your mind try
fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
Fly We Want To Fly

when our hearts met we were restless with our new found wings

RIC S. BASTASA
Flying Away?

i like to see the image of a lone bird flying away from me two steady wings carrying a very light body of blue feathers a kingfisher flying away against the morning sun moving nowhere getting farther until it becomes a blue dot dissolving in the distance that your eyes can no longer see i sometimes like to think i am that bird flying away from where i am because this place is sad and cruel i like to fly away to leave everything behind me and then simply forget and make new beginnings as easy as that sometimes however i ask myself:

where shall i go?
nowhere?
just nowhere?
where is nowhere?

just fly away and go
and leave and

then what?
i ask myself these real questions calling for rational answers
begging
that i be reasonable enough with my life and the life of others who also depend on me

it is not an easy stuff, just flying away to nowhere and destruct everything i build here:
a nest, an odor of familiarity, a sense of home (though sad and cruel)
a name for myself
a reputation
a family history
an ancestral domain

shall i go then and be foolish?

i am not a bird, i am a man that is a very serious existence apart from those feathery wishes and dreams with responsibilities, i have no wings just arms, i have no feathers but this body

i am not just a bird, i have a soul and so i decided to stay

with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Flying Is Just Another Way Of Living

the caterpillar feels you how is it to be a worm and how wings of a butterfly

come
as an instinct

but which you were not so familiar
at first

until you fly one day and for all the days of your life and then you say

there is nothing in wings that should excite us

flying is just another way of living

and the worm in us in the past does not really make a difference at all

RIC S. BASTASA
Focal Point...

what you are telling me is that you lack focus

i imagine what focus is when i was a child i held a magnifying glass and focused it to a ball of dried weeds i got light from the sun and of course the ball of weed turns into a ball of fire i see the sun as the center of the universe inside my heart i remember what you need: focus just be careful, you will burn a ball of planets soon you shall see a conflagration in our universe

all of us

not just watching but burning now, with focus, comes what you think is success, be careful, we may never find each other again me? look at me? i am out of focus, i once burned all my books.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fog On Highway 5

we stopped right there in Highway 5
because of the fog
and no other

just the two of us
the fog in Highway 5
and I

RIC S. BASTASA
Follow Me, Always Follow Me

follow me. always follow me.
do not worry. Do not be afraid.
There is no reason for fear.

We have the north star and the compass and we walk through the rain.

we have the sun to light our way.
oh.. it will be as bright as noonday. except for the sweat and the swear, do not have doubts.... follow me... follow me... come..

i will teach you the way to be lost.
i will teach you how it feels to be lost and not finding the way. i will give you meaning to your life. You need to be shaken like the way the earth shakes itself when people are too comfortable in their homes watching tv and having parties for their first born, for their wedding anniversaries, for their feasts of success, , , , come follow me. I am lost but i have no fear.

Because you are with me. Because i trust you. And because i was once was lost and found my way. Because I am strong. Because i will be stronger with you now.

Because you love me. Because you too wants to be lost with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Follow Your Feelings…

follow the feeling
do not touch anything
go where it takes you be careful
do not touch anything
this is where it hurts do not be touched.

when you get pricked.

RIC S. BASTASA
Following No Rules

...is like going towards a house on a mountaintop
the trees there have ripe fruits for the picking lots of jack fruits spreading a map of smell
and you focus your gaze
and you do not know
which way
you follow a scent
a view
and you bow down to a thick grass finding your way in there you are not lost

you are tired
the house is still there the fruits are about to fall no one has gone there yet in your wild

imagination

a native tells you frankly sir, it is only the top of the mountain nothing more

RIC S. BASTASA
Fondling Just One Word

it started with just one word, just the
I
and then it changes to It
though there was an attempt to use the word We,
as a matter of transformation in a certain reaction, but in the nature of all selfish designs from that single nose to a single heart to a hardheaded sole mind, unwanting to share, the world shifted to the I, the We topples down like an edifice of mockery people not wanting to be with the other and the pain concomitant with the misunderstanding of the We, irreconciliable differences, the need for space and time definitely there is no They oh, the flock is uncontrollable and blind and uniformity is abhorred and looked upon with so much disfavor and besides, the we has become an expensive venture, we finally go back to the I, and since then

we invoke self-respect, dignity, and solitude, it is the I
that finally triumphs, well, there is this
loneliness
maybe, but,
on the other hand,
there is this strength,
or even stronger nevertheless

RIC S. BASTASA
Fondness

it is indeed paradoxical when one misses the one who is not missing somebody when the fondness rests on the arms of the cruel warrior when love is like a bird that always leaves the present season looking for that which ambushes it for the kill.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fons Sapientiae, Verbum Dei

the source of all knowledge all wealth all health all power all happiness the source of all poems not us but always
God.

Praise Him. Love Him.
And everything shall be given Unto You.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fool Them....

some people are happy
with you
being a fool

if it be that way
with those you love then let it be

for a while, for a time, on their numbered days

time is short happiness is nil
if it be that way
then let it be

some still laugh at
the sun
which still shines at everyone

keep your cool
fool them.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fooling Myself

finally i stopped
calling friends

i quit treating them for free dinners
on a night out

i befriended myself
it's not after my money or it if is it's just me fooling myself

and so
we're even

RIC S. BASTASA
Foolish

You are foolish with your art It is killing you slowly day by day

You do not even have time To wash your face or clean

Your ears, the earwax Makes you deaf and you

No longer hears your rhythm You write poems, you keep on Writing poems. And what do You get in return? Nothing.

You are helplessly poetic Best friend of Sisyphus.

RIC S. BASTASA
Foolish Me?

i went out of my room opened the door of the house walked towards a tree and i touched its barks asking for the flow of more energy
inside my body,

pranic healing of my soul, and they think of me as foolish.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fools Like Us.

There is this theory in conversation.
I keep on talking. When you are around we let the river flow and we listen. Sometimes you drop a stone.
Sometimes, i break a twig.
There are sounds which come between The silence that we try to grow among the ferns.

We talk like sands falling hoping to land upon a dune and see a palace.

Or a treasure which time has marked with an X AND in those layers of exchanges, we arrive at some truths, like pagodas that we never saw before despite our familiarity with old terrains.

And then we know. What is it? Why is that?
and then we learn Who we are? and Why we must accept

Fools like us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Footages....

actually it is the same thing that happens
over and over again
and i keep on watching and watching
and if you only know there is no more
meaning
to what i constantly see and love and hate and laugh and cry for (how did i really learn to cry? did i really cry? i regret
i deny,
)

the footage of push and pull and moans and groans mechanical figures inside these tubes

soon, i be a man transformed from mere dirt to budding mushroom fungus, tasty, delicious to your palates sliced thinly on your favorite Hawaiian pizza even the dirtiest mind you always transforms itself into a useful ornament swallowed, savored

remembered

RIC S. BASTASA
Footnote To Beauty...

TO SEE you and not to possess you to long for you and not have you even if your hands reach for me even if your lips touch mine,

because you are so beautiful because i am....to adore you and then just walk away

RIC S. BASTASA
Footnotes To Langston's Deferred Dreams

for all the dreams
defered
and as predicted exploded
please take note of the the many
casualties	onight we take a few seconds
of silence
and offer them
some prayers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Footsteps

the beloved has been waiting and now despite the rain she hears the footsteps of her lover nearing she is quick to open the door to let him in
and then they make a new beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
For J.

IT is the steel part of me that absorbs the sun and lets it go come moonlit nights

i take whatever is cold and hot but i do not keep any when it gets too dark

i revert to my true nature

i am cold
i am strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Love Is Like A Thorn In My Heart

yes, a thorn in my heart
this love
that i feel for you,

it does not hurt
though i bleed
it does not kill me
it lives.

RIC S. BASTASA
For 2009 To All Poets

always choose to heal
not to hurt
to forgive and not to despise
to persevere and not to quit
to smile and not to frown
to love and not to hate

at the end of life what matters is not what we bought but what we built not what we got but what we shared
not our competence but our character
and not our success but our significance

live a life that matters live a life that cares

have a blessed and a prosperous new year
to all.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Younger Brother....

we are spaced in a span of ten long years
we have no bridges
and i am one broker boat without oars
brother
you must understand about the fact of our misunderstanding though we showed we tried to make links upon one post to another there are no morning glories i have seen no gates or exits or entrances there is nothing enticing at all in all these bickering

brother
we must learn to accept the wisdom of distance the comfort of space
we have only thoughts so far away from each other and then we live
separate ways again

in a land that welcome us in a place without a scent of any regret

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Change.....

i find it funny when you write about the idea that you love the earth because of its brown color.

Brown like the soil, like the bald mountains due to the massive cutting of trees. I detest this idea. This dirt. This muddiness when the earth drinks to much water from the rain. This dusty places when the sun castigates the face of this place.

i persist on the idea that brown is not poetic.

Until one day i met this brown body under the light of the moon beside the river rising from its night ritual.

The brown body gleams under the golden light of the moon. Nude, facing me as i salivate like a dog seeing a bone not having eaten for days.

Brown is beautiful Brown is exciting.

I ejaculated on such beauty. Satisfied, i lie on the brownness of the earth longing for more.

It is not dirt. It is love.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Friend Who Had Gone Cold One Summer

i am just wondering
why you have not visited us for years.
it is not the rain,

it stopped.
or was it so much sunshine?

does light hurt somehow let me know how softness can be that unbearable at times.

how is you wife?
did you tie her again
by that post inside your

room?
we heard her scream
inside our dreams
we tried to hold her but she is like smoke from your kitchen with a lot of our concoctions.

how are you?
is anger that overwhelming?

do not close your door since you did not come

we are coming then
to tell you that we care.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is still 3 o'clock in the afternoon. iT is raining heavily outside as we still keep busy with our own business inside this courtroom.

two lawyers arguing on a point. I am listening. the accused sits there, his life is at stake. the mother is tense. two mothers. THE mother of the complainant who cries that her daughter is a victim of mother of the accused who rebuts that his son is just framed-up by the real culprits who are still-at-large.

the glass windows of the court muted the sound of the heavy rain. but the way the trees are swaying to and fro like a pendulum of a grandfather's clock very well tells that there is a bad weather outside this courtroom.

a river of faces faces me. i look at the eyes of the room, the windows cased in glass as the rain is maimed wanting to get in as though trying to say that it has also something to say about the matters discussed inside this closed room.

the world is always asking, what is the truth? it reminds us, there is only one truth and the rest are lies. I keep on trying to learn from it.

the argument has always been: everyone is a victim, and no one wins this game of a legal play. sometimes the guilty is set free and the innocent is put to prison.

there will be cries of the wind. In a closed court like this, one cannot really hear the sound of its cries.
I am trying to figure out. Each word. The words of the wind and the muted sounds of the rain.

THE hammer shall fall and it shall fall heavily. Can this poem help me? Are emotions aids?

Many mouths shall shape the words. Each lip makes a reading of itself. There will be whispers and murmurs. There will be calls and cries and hounding sounds.

I sleep at night soundly. My conscience shall be my pillow. There will be dreams handed to me by the gods.

As i write this, think also of my own journey, my own sorrows. In the battles outside and inside us, a closed room vis-a-vis the outside cries of the wind and the rain, i want to simply tell you, , , keep moving on. We move on too, with our own busy lives.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Friend Who Lived Only For A Short Time

the white butterfly will always be your metaphor and it flies one rainy morning finding shelter in my house through the window

it passes gets in and rests for a while it does not wait for sunshine goes out of the window again and then goes away like a distant star dissolving in the black sky

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Friend Who Never Stops Writing Till Kingdom Come

IT IS indeed nice to know my friend that the moon and stars at night still fascinate you, how the scent of trees make like longer that we imagine it to be, and the songs of rivers still linger in our mind taking us back to youth,

some things
little bits of memories we want to remember like chips and chirps of birds we have forgotten it is nice indeed to know, and it gladdens me that the sonorous sound of the rain, early morning, as it stops us from our usual speed, makes us stop for a moment and know that God is here, how our hearts still thirst for that drink, how this thirst can never be quenched by wine or any drink, or even the flatness of water, some things my friend must linger at the tips of our fingers, before we snap, this vacuum with lots of gaps, before we nap, shake my hand, hug me, i am one with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Friend Who Starts

I am happy you find this thing This old thing this oldest thing Of being us Making us feel us making the rest See us making them Take the form we are forming This image these thoughts These fragments
Of our humanity
Thanks for finally becoming like me My friend you have just started This art
I am happy for you and I will see You more in what You write
Your poems shaping your soul Your poems to bare them all

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Hard-Headed Woman

I AM worried about you nothing poetic is attached to it plain worry like paper with some written words still running looking for a certain space
to die

I have given you options like the openness of the bay as mouth of the sea like trees running some twigs to grow more leaves like fledgelings sitting upon a branch and all willing to fly and negate the need for nests

You do not grab any You like it that way, and I give up Surrender to the fact that It is you who still paves the path towards your own niche

Unlike you we do not worry about the color of the paint and the flowers
We simply do it the way it is usually done Put the cover
drop, and then when everything is slayed We go back sweating to our own homes and force ourselves to accept and then forget...

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Legal Nymph....

when the academics failed her she deciphers the labyrinths and finds the exit door of this complicated tunnel.

Not regretting love
she quits the books
she embraces love and readies herself for another chapter of pains.

The truth is there is less drama in happiness ever after.
Something that you cannot forget is when the lover dies and loved one survives and
at the end
loses herself to the island that no one finds.

The ending is hazy.
The book closes on a misty day.
The writer says
I do not know. They are not real.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Nephew And A Niece

i will give you sweet memories.
nice dining. stories. fairy tales.
some realities.
shells and the sounds of its songs when felt by your ears.
i give you laughter.
jokes that you have not heard before.
i can be your clown
and you trusted adviser about first love.
these moments you must always remember. we feast on a beautiful sunrise.
wide span of grass, so green.
we breathe the cool sea breeze.
here. we make the bond. we seal the day in peace. in harmony.
i have become your friend i bring you tidings. i bring you sweet years.

when i get old and you become your own selves i ask you, let us relive these moments.
do not forget, we had the nicest times together.
do not forget, i will just be a memory.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Niece Who Just Had An Abortion

she left Ormoc for it is such a small place for her mind

she arrived in Cebu
that early morning

with a small pack of clothes

she just had an abortion and she felt so
isolated

she did not go direct to her boarding house

she sat on one of the benches in Fuente Circle

she cried, she is blank as a grey sky sans the sun

she called my wife
through her phone, sobbing

'It is still very painful' my wife listened just listened

she knew how is it
to bleed
without stopping.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Reason Always...

every event happens for a reason
the comings and goings

departures for instance are always on time and always reasonable and those who are left sometimes wonder only to understand later comparing what welcome was and what departure has become...

soon they may tell you
we have seen the light, we have seen darkness too.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Start....

blank, it is blank at first.
suspect, there is nothing, there is no one.
wait. there is a hush.
there is a shadow coming.
wait. there is a word.
it is a bean sprouting
last night placed
on top of a sack wet by the rain
of tears.

i hear the sounds of syllables.
no figuring of meanings this time.
just hearing a sound
of life.

it is enough. I am not scared anymore to the question: is there life here?

the windows begin to open and lights are turned off.

good morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Start.....

when you arrive at the strange place no trees just hills and wind no trails just grass and stones and you are alone and looking for a healing and you have only leaves and nuts and the only house is this cave to shelter you for the night practically you have nothing except this self and the only words you can say is 'thanks, i am alive' you finally found a beginning and that is good enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
For A Variation

I am tired of some symbols and metaphors

♫ ♪ ♫ instead

Let us try some notes instead
A song,
And some desserts
Of the heart

RIC S. BASTASA
For A While

i stop for a while on this morning walk to see the ripening rice plants on the field golden indeed like the blonde hairs of the american woman under the gentleness of the sun that has newly arrived from the split sides of the nearby mountain

my eyes were caught however on this maiden with a brown skin long black hair with an earthen jar on her left shoulder held by her small hands

she is just passing by to fetch some water in the old stone-walled well

RIC S. BASTASA
For A.

the secrets are within
the heart
they are so beautiful
to tell

they are now a comfort safe in our own chosen
silence

RIC S. BASTASA
For A.....

now you must understand, i have always desired the touch of human hands,
real fingers,
that tip of which bleeds when i start
to prick.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Alan C.

And there springs Youth and you who had It before is now

Mocked You feel the Coming of an End

and be Proud and Firm

You have finished the Race

And here you are Winning....

RIC S. BASTASA
For Albert, The Mathematics Teacher...

albert posts the latest picture of himself in Facebook. he looks mature now, his eyes are not sad, his forehead shows the landing field of the birds of wisdom the black hairs did not change tradition sits there, every lock well accounted by time the nose has remained the silent post more likely it is here where lights are turned on and off when something in the mouth gets fishy when something in the ear gets thorny and itchy ah, i told him, you are a happy person despite the decision to remain single in all those 45 years or so but albert, i want to tell him, before i must write my conclusion i still yet have to see your body...

well, some people successfully lied at the tips of their toes slips of the tongues need not be fully believed as the whole truth somehow the torso too speaks just the the feet and the chest well, do i need to see what is inside your heart?

this would be too much of an intrusion i suppose good luck, stay happy, feel the sun inside your mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
For All The Goodness Of Humanity

these are the men who cover the blood outside the stadium where many had been killed on the recent bombing

a child is taught that there shall be no fear as the father keeps equanimity
one candle in one hand and a flower on the other

RIC S. BASTASA
For All The Other Places Of This World...

in vietnam or in hongkong it is the same road that i walk same lengths of arms to reach another
wall
it is the same salt of the
sea
on a beach holiday
same coldness of the shades of trees
along some boulevards same noise
in malls and repeated lyrics
sounds of love
and indifference
same menu on restaurants and sometimes
same talk even that strangest boredom seems to be too insensitive to leave me at least for once

RIC S. BASTASA
For All The Things That We Have Taken For Granted a chocolate bar

that we bite
that sweetness that dissolves with ecstasy in our tongues

it bites us
and even at the end eats us
much to our regrets

we gain weight for every sugar that we take for granted for every heavy grain that we slide in our throats the dough nut that recreates a hole in our system they soon eat us whole and then in our deathbed we keep on saying

'i could have been more careful' but it is too late

the flowers are there and the prayers are already said the choir is singing and someone you love has delivered the best eulogy about you

RIC S. BASTASA
For All The Things That We Never Want Done.....

d this is about not doing what we are supposed to do, or not really liking to do it, we promise it done the next hour the next hour dies, another hour lives, such is the swing of time and moods, in between these promises to change, lies the burger and the coke, and the wish to be put somewhere else, far and far away, at night as you lay in bed unable to sleep with all the guilt feelings of an unfinished task, you wish you were dead, you wish that tomorrow never comes, for what have you? you still have the things that you do not want to do.

RIC S. BASTASA
For All The Treasures I See

for all the treasures i see
rain, forests, sun, clouds, green fields, high mountains waterfalls, white sandy shorelines, rock formations, mountain mists, a perfect sunset
a glorious sunrise

the ivory piano keys, the 33-seater dining table the paintings from italy some marble mosaic
the glass windows from rome the sculpted wood
the persian carpets
the octopus hangings
dancing lights

all these are nothing treasures of mankind his capacity for greed materialism, consumerism, his leanings for corruption and avarice and instincts for preservation
the reputation and fame

all these treasures fade against the light of one pure, clean heart that i am still searching

RIC S. BASTASA
For All These I Wait (2)

somewhere
a frog is asleep
playing
dead lifeless upon
a cake of mud

there is hibernation
as a necessity
for another coming
existence

someone gets to be buried someone becomes a busier
a brier or brewer

someday someone has to be a chronicler
about what happened here

as most poets are lifeless frogs inside a cake mud sometimes a rain comes and makes everything alive again

for all these i wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
For All These I Wait…..

somewhere
a frog is asleep
playing
dead lifeless upon
a cake of mud

there is hibernation
as a necessity
for another coming
existence

someone gets to be buried
someone becomes a busier
a brier or brewer

someday someone has to
be a chronicler
about what happened here

as most poets are
lifeless frogs inside a cake mud
sometimes a rain comes
and makes everything alive again

for all these i wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
For All These That I See Today

wilted grass on the pasture land emaciated water buffaloes dried river beds
the well without water humid air and dusty roads to the village on a rice shortage birds in flocks moving away sick babies and panicky mothers hopeless fathers thinking about another revolution

a government stripped of moral authority arming itself strengthening wire fences building more walls and students out-of-school muted press and more speeches from the political departments justifying reason

for all these that i see today i have seen them all yesterday during my youth my rebel days when i was not so careful then when i never thought of the danger when i though i do not die history unfolds again before me we are not strangers we are in fact on a familiarity how can we ever talk like friends again? how can i run away from society for the second time?

how can i vomit and eat all these rancid food these spoils, these trash, this enormous silence?

RIC S. BASTASA
For All Those I Have Not Done, Because....

so many things have been left undone perhaps another regret for the bygone but no, i must not be carried away for here i am, with you, so so happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
For All Those Who Remain To Be Deaf, Blind And Stupid

oh, i forgot to tell you we do not eat together now and it is better that way, i would not be tempted to eat all those prohibited by my doctor but which she wholeheartedly like to gobble.

same thing, we do not go together anymore in those places where you always see us,
and it is better that way, so finally we end all these kinds of pretenses that somehow marriage still works.

same thing, we still manage to sleep in one bed though we do not face each other or even talk, but it is nicer now, at least, we are honest, we have accepted things the way they should be at the end.

nothing is forever. stick it to your young mind, and as early as you learn this, i tell you, you would be happier than the rest of those who are still deaf, blind and above all, so, so stupid.

RIC S. BASTASA
For An Uncle

you should not have posted the close-up picture
of aunt's face

the sad
face of autumn
is reflected in her
eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
For Anna....

here comes anna
she is from another far mountain she arrives with just one dress
no slippers
no deodorant
she smells like a dead bird
but what can you do?
she is your new house-help
and you
don't do household chores she now belongs
to you
for a meager pay
she will do everything washing, cooking, cleaning even massaging
your feet and hair
at your convenience
always

i am your husband and i look at her
with pity

here is another hope
a toast
that someone from the mountain can make it
big sometime
somewhere

and you shall be its stepping stone

i dread
how unequal things
can be
how fields are not leveled fairly
for all the players in this world

RIC S. BASTASA
For Another Damnation.....

she hanged
four paintings on the wall,

all squares
in three colors

i stop for a while to take a look

i palpitated and i like it

such is the work of
art,
it makes us stop for a while

the world stops spinning, life stands still

the paintings become
the stars,
all suns in their own right
claiming the same
moving universe

and then back to your world again,
for another damnation.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Arj

that fox must know by now that i do not expose the lies of the boy who shouted

'wolf! wolf! wolf! '

there is no need

the lies know how to expose themselves time need not compel them even i can always tell a Pinocchio even without his elongated nose

RIC S. BASTASA
For Arnel

This is what he wrote to me:
WEST COAST Blumpkin 'round the corner bright boy! ! and what's up with this naked lady showing off her boobs as you avatar? ?
wow! ur pretty bomb dude, kinda wishin you are brokeback mountain too? ? ?
lol
p.s that's my boyfriend CHAZ DIE...SEL - he's a mechanic! !

and then he wrote me again about his sex life his gay nights in Israel and how this country has advanced well in the science
 of pleasure,

and then i reminded him about how he was under me in Logic one summer
 and he said perhaps he dropped the subject because i was more of a smart ass who carried something too heavy on my shoulder and he did not like that idea of having to see me
 naked.

alright, he finally made the concluding remark, that after so many years of ponder he said without a sigh that he's gay.

is this a bomb dropped in the island of Bikini? honestly, i don't think so perhaps he did not know that we have also advanced our views about him
 that we are not homophobes after all, that when he dropped in class after which he made the revelation that he had more fun taking it at the University of California (which i think, he lied on his teeth) rather than suffer the consequences of my presence as he sees me naked in his rather wild imagination at 7 p.m.

how can i finish this thing off? after all he is a smart ass too underestimating our capacity to really really appreciate his human value.

Good luck and take care be good, wherever you are.

Ponder, rotate, collide, vibrate and do not forget Life is beautiful. That's it

RIC S. BASTASA
For Art Does Not Tolerate Reason

Truly fertile Music, the only kind that will move us, that we shall truly appreciate, will be a Music conducive to Dream, which banishes all reason and analysis. One must not wish first to understand and then to feel. Art does not tolerate Reason. (Albert Camus)

precisely my friend
i have too much of reason's justifications.
bored. fed-up.
drunk. hollow.
is this boor.
another boar.
a bore. pestered. gouge out. this analytical mind causing so much
chaos in the world
of understanding
feelings.

i cross over the fence
of art.
lying on a hammock.
with a hat on my head.
a little warm sunshine
on my shoulder.
under the coconut trees.
beside a white sandy beach.
i welcome the sun
of feelings.
i breathe the breeze.
i touch the sand
and then i let loose the grains through my fingers.

this i like to do today.
just loaf and
dream.

i dream about us.
the two of us
in an island
our moans
music
to my ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
For As Long.....

for as long as there are sands on the shore

leaves on trees, air in space, sun on the horizon, moon on the marsh, there will always be a poem to write

a note to an experience a syllable in my tongue.

RIC S. BASTASA
For B., (Still To Me A Stranger)

the cherry in your glass red as it is shiny

you look at me
reminded about last night's cherry shiny as it is red sweeter than your lips.

RIC S. BASTASA
For B...

so you have felt finally that you are alone: your brother after he married built a wall around his wife and daughter

you can hear their exclusive laughter in the other room and when the light there is finally turned-off you can hear even the whispers of love that you have not met
before

the hands of love
drive you away

you turn off too the only light in your room and the war within you begins there is that regret that mocks you there is the passing time that appears like those leaves blown away by the last month’s typhoon you feel like a tree robbed of all those leaves with some twigs bent to the utmost you feel that pain of being uprooted

moments reversing themselves like the back pages of the book
with a vast topics
arranged alphabetically which of course
you have no desire to carefully read

you feel this horror of all horrors loved ones abandoning you
with their bags full of clothes

those thicker walls that suck their conversations like water siphoned by a thick cloth
oh, how you detest each layer of indifference

the whole night you never sleep
but for now
you are a little bit triumphant in this exhaustion these eye bags
must posses a noble purpose perhaps to educate you more for the coming days of more empty rooms of chairs that accumulate dust of carpets that accommodate more ticks of those breakfasts left untouched on the table with unchanged covers no more tears in this war between you and your hidden self as you wait for the promise that soon there will be a harmony between loneliness and

survival
between the fingers of time and the slippage
that you do not care to account
anymore

well, you assure yourself
'outside i still have my own secret garden
it is mine and mine alone
my brother's children cannot enter now, his wife in truth is not my sister and what i must remember truly
must only be my name
yes, i am',

you write it.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Baby Ralf.....

i am looking
at the picture of baby ralf

chinky eyed
just a month old in the crib

amazed at how cut life
starts
in the body of baby ralf

another soul
struggles in there
for years and
years

RIC S. BASTASA
For Bayani

Because you are too insistent on your own views, now you find
few to agree with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Both Of Us.

when we sat on the grass and watched the light of the afternoon sun fade slowly when we spoke of nothing because we love the silence
more than ever
when we understood what
was not spoken
when we made no qualms
about who i was and what you were
and what you will become
and what i shall be...

RIC S. BASTASA
For Both Of Us

things combine
as we too
fuse to make another
world
for both of us

as sound comes in the still forest birds become alive
and flowers on barks begin to bloom
for both of us

my words too become too alive
with the music inside
my mind
as my body begins to know the soul within i become whole
you and I,
for both of us

RIC S. BASTASA
For Both Of You Whom I Love Equally

i love you both equally and that is the truth that i must reveal the kiss i kissed you is the same kiss equally warm as the kiss i have kissed
to the other

the love i give you
is the same love i give to both of you
you know that you feel that and so you
do not complain
or whine or murmur

and the other too
who waits for me when i am with you
understands feels that

like the way
i spread my warmth on this bed my smile and laughter in this room both of you must understand i have given much more than anybody can and for one who give more and much more must be more than generous more than loving than anyone can be on this earth

under the sun

how can i sin then, i who had given more and much that what is normally required?

from mere pebbles on the rough road of my life both of you my love true loves of my heart shall rise, and rise and rise until you become my lovely stars

as i watch and stay grounded for having loved unusually, tirelessly, exceedingly than what is normally required my wings with a span as lengthy and wide as the night shall always remember the serenity and perfection of these unusual dual union

the warmth we shared the warmth we all enjoyed the togetherness that for sometime society detests

RIC S. BASTASA
For 'Bridge'

The moon rises above the river as swans float
on the water

i wish deep inside
that you stop talking

RIC S. BASTASA
For Brigs...

when you grieve
for the wrong person as you rushed to the morgue and cried immediately on that covered body of a bloated tummy
only to find that it is not Bing but someone
whose name is strange to your ear,

did you not tell me that it
was funny?

RIC S. BASTASA
For C, J. A. C.

it is not a shame
to tell you that i am happier now with two of us in a row

the train has left us here at the station

it left too early taking the younger ones

those without much experience

those whom we think are undeserving
of their couches
and seats

you only have one trip missed i had five and now i just had my sixth

I'll go for another one and this will be the seventh train leaving
without me

it is unbecoming of me seeing you hiding inside that cubicle of disappointment i guess you must have been crying all night more likely you do not like to eat dinner tonight come out in the open there are too many of us still waiting when you are always left out it becomes too ordinary

look at me
i am not sad
honestly i find it funny already.

RIC S. BASTASA
For C.J.

I like stars
how beautiful are they hanging on the heavens

i wish i have their brilliance

i see the most beautiful star one night
falling to the ground where i stand
as i am just one of those ordinary men

i am sometimes uncertain of what to say

i am a step now higher to my little stair of
happiness

stars fall sometimes but always for a reason now, another star becomes like us we are inspired by reason stars always fall out for a reason and we learn to tiptoe on the paths where weeds begin to wilt.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Cita A.

perhaps you are a boat without an anchor.
we need anchors
because we are like boats sailing in an ocean sometimes the storms are bigger and our sails are too small for the winds and our rudders
are broken,

what i see is that you do not have any and so i feel pity for you Cita as you imagine walkie-talkies beside your ears and talk about the machine of destruction that is boring in your head like grills, that machine that bores holes in your skull and yet everyone hears nothing sees no blood

they cannot see what you insists those that stole your locks and open your doors and stole your furniture and computers and spurn you

what education you have in the university now you throw away like a cheap earring

Cita, this poem asks you see God.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Claribelle

Life is a polite woman.
I have always told you that in class.
I delight in the politeness of a woman.
Outside the class.

When i fall in love, i keep it to myself. There is no courage for me to say it. I keep my own joys.

You are a polite woman.
I named you my own Life.
The class do not know that.
I keep it upon myself as a lovely burden. I keep sorrows too.
Secretly, like a divine burden, an un-confessed sin.

Sometimes, i have not told you before you left, i also mumble upon myself, without any wish that i may understand what i try to hide, completely. Soon i forget and then I am happy again.

That is what life is all about.
I am polite too.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Cory

i was startled
about your death

i am amazed.
your funeral so grand the people are in deep mourning i, too.

in you the presidency has tripled its value destiny brought you there on that chair

God speaks in yellow colors since then its voice is still the voice of the people.

Like Ninoy
forever you shall live
in our hearts.

Long live goodness
Long live dignity
Long live humility
Long live Godliness

In you Cory, we shall ponder upon the next presidency.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Ct

you're a star
a diamond in the sky

you are not
the ground coffee in that coffee-haus or something you deserve much better than a vote

go girl. go. do not just be a sparrow be an eagle, be a rocket, be a beautiful glowing planet in my sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
For D.

when you let me in i feel the warmth of your room a little bit damp for a summer time like this one i must be honest

there is something inside that repulses what i have in mind there is coffee that does not fit the time there is that cookie that does not satisfy
any hunger of mine

i beg you then to let me out into the open fields of my desire where i can be home
again

you stay
do not let me hear you cry at least you are free inside the home
of your being

i yet have to find a home a place to rest my head and wash my feet and hands a place where i can be once silent because i have nothing to say

RIC S. BASTASA
For Diony

dO NOT BE like god who must speak in crooked lines i am not your loyal servant and i have less time now to analyze what you really want to mean
to me
speak clearly
for i am listening
do not murmur
do not eat your words like supper lest i suffer
and do what you do not want me to do
i am far
you are 12 thousands miles away from me she is married and her husband is crazy buying a gun and bullets speak clearly now
tell me about the story of your true love her being lonely this Helen of Troy of Yours and the impending game of death and pain teach me now how not to sow the apple of discord the envy and sorrow the death of morality
the crucifixion of integrity
speak clearly now
or i will be the one to end this poem.

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
the twang of your english
humiliates you but i ignore it
i am more interested in you
now than what you say or can possibly do to
me.

so we walk that old boulevard
the sea is calm
and there are no
vendors, joggers, beggars
and sweet twee-tums

it is noon
and i compromised with a conversation

you are going to surprise with a wedding invitation from you and your dad
surely will be happy

you are a grown-up man and you have many things to still prove

you returned to your house
and i am left here watching the sun set in Dumaguete

i am sad
you are bound to repeat
what i went through and i am pretty sure that i would
not like it,

i hope you
do.

good luck, nephew

RIC S. BASTASA
For Donna

when he left you
and you
lose your mind

when the house
get so damn lonely

when you
finally decide to come home

the same
white dog
waits for
you
by the door wagging
its tail
for its only master

RIC S. BASTASA
For Dreams That Do Not Come True

you sit on one of the marble pavements of the hospital in the city looking like a hopeless boy abandoned by his mother and people that pass you by think that you are one of the beggars

you wonder why dreams do not come true no matter how you pray you look far without having to see anything and anybody that is real you blame no one though not even the gloomy day grays clouds heavy and about to rain air so polluted and faces of people without the smiles buses running senselessly indifferent hawkers and arrogant schoolchildren pulling their bags like a dragging day everything seems to be surreal gossamer-like as you float in the air feeling like one of the illusions in your mind you accept dreams that do not come true and you think perhaps some day

yes someday, dreams may come and be real- true concrete and smooth and confident to the hold of your hands and then you stand like a true man on unreal dreams you leave the pavements of illusions you go back to one of the rooms in the hospital 'No tears! No tears! ' you tell yourself because now you have learned to be brave and strong and logical.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Each Other...

This love of mine
need not disturb you,
it is inside me
and it will not be seen or felt by you,
i love you and probably will still love you (for this long
and for how long?
i do not really know)

and

this love of mine
may persist longer than i ever want or feel it to be

This will be true and gentle and coy and innocent still

but I pray that you should never know it or that you may love me too we simply don't fit we are never really meant.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Edu

While it is true that Silence is a source of great strength

IN your case
it is not.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Emily

you have all the reasons to be sad and be afraid

like a tree
you have no roots
and where you grow
around are rocks

when the typhoon comes you have nowhere to hold and you cannot stand against the harsh winds you will be uprooted and blown away

you will be washed away to the river and then to the sea

because you have not really loved

RIC S. BASTASA
For Emma

If it were not for God
You could have found yourself at
The center of the Altar of my being
You are my sun
When my moon left me Extreme darkness

You are the river
Flowing to my life
Your soft sound
Of the flowing waters Made me raise
All my goldfishes

In my own little garden You are the center flower And all the morning sunshine That I can take shall all be yours

All my days shall talk about you And I shall write About all
About you
My last love
My lust
My moaning nights
A warm sweet scented blanket

You are my everyday longing My quiver
My soundest sleep
Of such soft pillow

Inside a night of Loving dreams

I am insatiable
Your white body on those black nights Sparked a meteor
Into my vast universe
Your love

Moans

And I shall be The wildest hunter for saber-tigers In the safari

It is you,
After all these years
The queen
Who gave an extension
To my ending life

Another day
For better health

As you shall grow in my heart You shall be forever

Unfathomable, Ungrasped,

Untitled

You are my force-softness Combined
My singing silence
My beating drum
My chant
Forever tireless

RIC S. BASTASA
For Enriqueta

be quiet, she will speak what she buried many years ago in the mausoleum of her heart and soul

she is angry
and she has nobody she is furious
and she has no place to dissipate
her anger her fury her hate her indifference as shield
was all too weak for her defense

be quiet,
let her speak her lines she has learned to live the life of an actress let us all listen to her now let us be sponges to absorb the waters of her disappointments we must listen now let us know what she will unearth

for if not she will shatter like a dainty piece of glass she will dissolve like air to a hazy atmosphere she will disentangle into broken pieces she will be lost

the process will be irreversible and she will be lost forever look at her eyes filled with anger

do not be deceived
she is not a bomb
she is a treasure wanting to be found symbols and lines and directions pointing to an 'x' saying that she is still here

come, come, let us listen our dear enriqueta is now singing....

RIC S. BASTASA
For Ester

when you read a poem, my poem included, try to see a universe, do not neglect the plight of other planets they keep on orbiting a void, out there some stars burst, and from the point of no return, from the place where we are seated just below the black blanket of our dark nights we simply see a falling star and they, what we do not know is that a lot of commotion happens
out there
explosions, changes, and annihilation and rebirths of new galaxies, space shrinking and then expanding again like our sorrows and significant risings like the sun everyday rising and setting, i repeat, what we only see is the falling star and all that we can do, is simply make a wish.

you think that someone is lost and having hang-ups (and perhaps needs medication for relief, like advil or xanor, or perhaps a simple aspirin to smoothen what lag is there on the veins and arteries) well, i like to say that i have to disagree, but who knows you may be right.

did i once tell you that i am okay?

RIC S. BASTASA
For Ester, The Reader

so i arrive there a little bit late met by this fat lady with curly hair and lots of pearls wound around her neck and she smiles at me telling me that you are reading religiously what i have written for all those years and that you like it very much and of course as a normal human being i am a little bit flattered with what little praise is there intended also for my thirst.

but i am not that stupid that she did not at least bother to compliment me by saying that she too loves what i have written, and so my instinct of self preservation works again as my mouth begins saying, 'oh, yes i know ester, she has a private pool, lives peacefully now in a far flung place where i also live and by all means despite her age, she had survived so well from all depressions and she looks much younger than her age, much younger than you.' And that ends the conversation, as i write my name on the attendance sheet, as though i am a famous actor putting an autograph to a non-existent fan in front of me.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Eustoly

her earrings and necklace are fake, she boasts about a used clothing that she wears on parties tendered for her she does not really care about how she looks or what people say she is true her heart speaks with sincerity she chooses her words consoles and sympathizes with grief and misfortunes her hands work her mind probing she makes a difference on things and people.

RIC S. BASTASA
For F.T.

gifted with the mind and heart you decided not to use any of them not to think and feel and love and desire what is left then? a heart wilting a mind drying you exist like an everyday occurrence of sleeping and waking and going and coming arrivals and departures become anything a routine and so much like a door closing and opening who is it and for whom and what for and why to you it does not matter, this is nothing but everyday you add no essence anymore not any seasoning the fat in you melts and liquefies and turns to gas and evaporates it lands as a smell of meat somewhere in the lawn the people pass by the house like some shadows against the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
For Fade Ward

do you really like the dark rose?

keep it
and if you really love it the way i love it take it with you
for now, my dear,
it is all yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Father P.

'On this holy Mahogany Alley, I was ordained Deacon, 14 March 1998...'

what is needed is only the down of trees, the white robe, and the date,

it is the whole of life already

no other name except God....

RIC S. BASTASA
For Fear Of A Mistake

for fear of a little mistake in denying me the kiss that night inside your car as you drive us to nowhere but goodbye i tell you and this i tell you with all the honesty from my heart lady you drive away the most sincere love in this world into the indifference of oblivion it is the sweetest that you have set aside and was forgotten and time
wept.

RIC S. BASTASA
for fear of losing the poetic side i go back to the secret garden where my footsteps are forbidden and i play a certain duality the one that i do not like and yet i love the one that is always hidden and yet so delicious the one that i kiss and yet hurts my lips the one that i embrace and yet burns my arms i take the entrance only to find another exit door of another door window of another window i take shelter in the house that i do not wish to dwell i assure myself
this is temporary but i never make promises that i will never be back. this is the secret of poesy: heresy, lust, the forbidden the apple in paradise

so crunchy and so sweet that i begin to forget the reason of life yet there is this life, this shortness of breath all of it, it is everything that i have that now i give, that now i must lose, to be whole again.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Fellow Amateur Poets

Riding on winged lines
We shall flock like doves
In the rain
So the fire in our breasts Shall not die

In the hideout of flowers Soft reeds and singing marshes Where the moon sleeps Throughout the night
We are all watchful eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
For Fellow Amateur Poets (A Repost)

Riding on winged lines
We shall flock like doves
In the rain
So the fire in our breasts Shall not die

RIC S. BASTASA
For Frankie

My words are taller
Your native canes cannot reach them

So you always say
You misunderstand me
My murmur
You mishear as my sole reason For waking up from cubic morning To the edge
Of twilight

Perhaps you miss
The light burning in the middle Of your forehead

As old woman You’re taller as I am Even when I stand and look up I see the nimbus bursting
In the dark

You never really tried
To be Like a puppy
When first thrown Into the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
For Friend Rey

out there
in a foreign land how long will you hide your face away from all of us?

your shadow is here with us talking and telling everything about your clothes and perfume how you smell like someone else that we have known beforehand
before you left us

we cannot pretend forever that we do not know neither can you

it seems that all of us here, your friends and foes know what we have been up to admiring the flames and never touching any of its colors it is sad..it is very sad. we want you to be happy we want you to fuse with your alienated shadow we want you to be whole and be with us

without any fear

we are kind, we know and we understand our hands are open, our arms are embracing when you finally come home please bear with us, we are one with you touch the flame, we do not really mind be hurt with so much bliss, we have no reason to stop you less yourself, we cannot be happier.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Fugushima....

at dawn we again lighted the lone candle at the altar we will not blow the light off till nighttime

till it consumes itself till we light another candle again this small light is our offering to the engulfing darkness of this universe it is this light that prays in silence together with those distant stars in the heavens...

RIC S. BASTASA
For Gina

surely who cannot but love the picture of your family all in the water rising and wet and yet still warm in their sparkling smiles the children made the V signs of victory or was it all about peace and prosperity?
was it your mother at the back and the nephews and nieces at the front?
the water is greenish and i can figure out how cool must it be but i have one advice will you please move the picture counterclockwise

so i can see much better the focal point of your
art?

RIC S. BASTASA
For God……

Everyday
you will be opening a window and a door

you let light to come and like a visitor you make it at home with you seated and with a cup of tea

the wind comes too
with a lot of companions with same invisibility you only feel its presence

if you are honest and sensitive enough you could have felt God and seen Him with the light and wind
even before you have opened that window and door

everyday

RIC S. BASTASA
godmother writes a letter complaining that i have not written about love

that in my youth the poem was still about the struggle
for freedom

in a country bound by oppression
and dictatorship

she vomits the news
of my colleagues
summarily executed in 1975

she challenges me frankly that i must attempt to lust, have free sex, and for once
be crazy about life's offerings

i was a failure to her honestly i wrote her a letter which perhaps she did not receive because it was mailed in the middle of a revolution

i am glad that she perhaps did not receive it for in there i wrote 'You are unkind and suffering from irrelevance' For Grandpa....

after this
aridity when this well finally dries up when the sound of emptiness deepens and then rises
towards light, i,
this survivor
dew less, shall begin, another spring
when the rain
pours again
and fills the drain whatever time, (i perhaps will be 70 then like grandpa
without fear
i shall open another
door and
go my way towards a new path
be it muddy or dusty,
what did they say who he was
?

great, old carabao eating
young grass,

no one tells him what to do
with what has remained out
of his
lonely life...
and he did it
well
till death...

RIC S. BASTASA
For Greed And Charity

I took a single bite of Jolibee chicken And offer the bone
To the dog beside me

RIC S. BASTASA
For Him To Be Loved By The Birds

his wish is that the little bird will love him and stay in his room to feel its feathers and not just stay on the window sill and wait for the grace of grains

RIC S. BASTASA
For Home

your lips
my door to our tryst your breasts
my my hands to your warm, sweet home where my bone
shall be.

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Am

for i am
the salt of my eyes
i have tasted much
my tongue is my witness
the sun
is my judge

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Am Not A Number

do not count me then for i am not a number, do not weigh me on a scale, do not judge me in units, for i am not your number,

come beside me,

feel me, have a little kindness,

be gentle, listen, and speak, for i have joys

and sorrows, i have

anticipations and

visions, do not try calculating me again,

i am not a number.

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Am One Of Those Unreachable Stars...

sometimes the wish to be
you
is alluring,

as i look at myself
i see in you what is missing

somehow you do no know
me

you are never interested in what i am in what i feel it is enough to make you detestable

i put the real me in the sky for i am too

is a star

be the sun
in that nearness

i shall be far and unreachable.

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Am Still Yours....

something must be wrong.
on your birthday i feel nothing.
i like to write, but it is no longer about you, or us.
something is really wrong.
i will be at your birthday party. kiss you, have a picture, sit beside you and upon their request we shall have our dance, the tango.

i still hope, that we must dance well.
let us not step upon each other's toe. we stand high, keep our dignities up.
and even if something is wrong, really wrong, let us never tell anyone. Time is a forgiver.
Life is still as beautiful as ever.

come, sit beside me. I am yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Am Taken....

no, i never dream of exhausting this
love,

it is enough
that from far
i can see
such a smile

sweeter than sunset
mellower than parting dawn

that is the law, and it will always be
this law:

i am taken.

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Am The Coldest Spot Of This Earth

perhaps this woman is taking her revenge on me i who have not spoken for days since i am attached to a screen of this tablet,

on the same routine tonight as i write these lines (of course, i am not talking still in defense of my poetry) she enters my study room, opens her personal computer, presses some letters, google, google, google maclintok a vacation for one in palawan, calypso, victoria's secret and it will be till 11 o'clock in the evening when i am not still going to bed and sleep

and perhaps snore

it is getting even with me who cares less for affection, who sets aside love in favor of poetry and
the search of this self, i am not troubled, i am determined, i am still in there whatever i must lose, i am not swayed back into her fire arms, for i am water, i am rain, i am the coldest spot of this earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is easier to let things be, leave others as they are, and just be the best that i am, amidst, the chaos, the fire that burns the city, the children whose shouts for help fades like a ship that sinks swallowed in one instant by the ocean house of tidal waves, it is easier to see how suffering munches the innocence of the crowd, and tell yourself, who cares?
they deserve their fates, i have mine, i am alone, and happier but it cannot be, i am part of this suffering these grunts and rants, i am part of the picture and when the whole picture is blotted out by one stroke of my indifference, i am, too blotted just the same.
and so, i must, i can,
i do care.

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Cry No More

what tears are? i have known more than one, shaped like a cone, fluid, washing the sticky part of my sorrow, like a flood in the river taking every driftwood every foul carcass of depression.

father says a man grows and he becomes big enough for tears.
and soon he grows much bigger than the old tree of the ancestors, a genealogy with roots spreading, beating through the layers of a tribe's history.

like those who died ahead, with all the shaking moments houses falling, and burning ashed, one arrives at the point of the threshold of tolerance, no stab of sorrow pierces the heart there is this constant use of pain, unattached, ineffective, and tears have no use anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Do Not Have Dreams Anymore

i do not dream that you shall remember me

i do not write
to be remembered

i am looking for relief someone wonders why that snake is biting every bark of every tree it is restless

it is looking for a cure of its disease

that snake wants to live some more years

it is looking for the cure of its restlessness

i do not dream of any dream i just want to live for another day i have no more dreams i am fading like an afternoon light against the horizon

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Have Become Murky

i am the river beside you and you are the woman wanting to go naked and take a bath in my mouth while wading you think of the calmness of the a pond, some petals of roses, air showered with white magnolias,

i am the river beside you and my ripples are tongues.
i move around loving every part of you.

and you tiptoe and wriggle and sing for i am winding you take the plunge and you search for my heart the warmth of my floor and the comfort of my banks the tickles of my fish, the power of my pebbles you feel that i own you now and you want some more wanting to stay and savor the embrace of my foams at noon the sun comes at the height of its brightness you realize the mistake & you stand and dress yourself you never want to be a part of me for i have become murky

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Have Never Ceased Loving

TIME passes so swiftly
i do not notice how this black hair has turned gray
how these fingers once tight-skinned have loosened like some used condoms
if i did not stop for once and scrutinized each part of me how could have i noticed that i never ceased
loving
despite the fact that everyone had aged
how could have i noticed that most of them have already left towards the unknown
beyond.

RIC S. BASTASA
For I Too Must Leave Just Like Those Birds

the tree in the garden
has died

what we see now are nothing but twigs without leaves below are the heaps of dead leaves

rotting

we have become like them hopeless for sometime

dry and cracking
light as the wind
drifting like the cloud

empty, hollowed by the mourning of our arid
days

dragging nights lifeless on a very cold wood for a bed

one morning some yellow sparrows with thin long black beaks hover upon those twigs and the dead tree even for the moment has assumed

life

upon a borrowed hope only for that brief moment

until then when all the sparrows fly away again taking with them all the songs that you hear

you learn the tune from those thin black and long beaks and you must compose a song for yourself

borrowing hope from hope putting those leaves back on your imaginary trees

you must tell me about the will to live

for i too must leave and be a part of somewhere else

RIC S. BASTASA
For In Truth I Am Not As Happy As You Think Me To Be...

i like myself in that picture somewhere in Dubai after the desert safari then to the mall behind me a statue of the horse as you order pasta, and you take a picture of me, my hands supporting my chin, you like it, black and white, no hues... as you demand that love must be.
either/or, nothing in between,
mutually exclusive, which of course i now regret.

RIC S. BASTASA
For In Truth In This Life

for in truth
in this life one can never be an island

lest the sea grows
and eat
those who remain to be so uninvolved
so arrogant in their manners to the world
of networks

for in truth
just a single soul as you gives life
to the silent city
all painted white the houses there

for in truth
just a word from you that i exist is enough to make me feel the beating of my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
For Indeed Love Changes Everything

i would have changed you everything in you because of this love that i have for you that encompasses all the nooks of the milky way galaxy,

time confronts every cell in my body, and so here i am understanding every error of nature that i found in you converting shame to love indifference

to compassion,

it is not you that is changed by my love it is my love that finally changed me.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Its Kite To Fly And Perhaps Touch Its Sky.

in you
everything is well
ironed out

there is no place
for doubt

skepticism is a taboo

well, there is also fear which is

accordingly the beginning of wisdom

the doubt, the doubter which leads us
to conclude about our being thinkers and
existent, plainly,
the valley comes to the mountainous mind a river flows, music comes in the strings of leaves and reeds

white birds in the sky clouds and cottons and a child's head coming out the car seeing a kite, another child running

on the grass
for its kite to fly and perhaps touch its sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
For J, T, And L

now i am seeing you all again shining in your black vestments like some shining stars in heaven

i am left here in my imaginings looking for the brightest star because i have decided myself that i shall not be one among the many among those who had kept within their hearts the loneliness of fame

RIC S. BASTASA
For J.

give me for my questions i have become an intruder but if you answer me somehow let me keep the honest answers in that lonely room where i read and then begin to write they all become my hints to finally put in place the jigsaw puzzle of so many lives in the lifetime of a second....

RIC S. BASTASA
For J....

I am glad having said
i could have loved you more... it is sad
when love withers
due to your suns
when the desert bears more sands because you hated more about dreams of waters rains are strangers and the caravan of camels are trains of thoughts traveling at night
and not knowing what days are...

i am an oasis
and i have no place for you anymore the leaves of my date palms do not recognize your songs
anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
For J....(Honesty Is Still The Best Policy, And Happiness Is Defined This Way)

WHEN YOU decided to leave me let me say once more that i will always admire your honesty for that, and soon, i might as well tell you that never in my life have i been so happier when finally you are gone completely,

for good.

this time i must know that you mean it and i mean it too.

at par, mutuality at its best,
may you find your final rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
For J.....

She died last night morphine took her to another place that we are not still prepared to go she died tired of all the sorrows she ended it with a smile leaving hope for
all of you

I shall hear those laughter once again but in that small damp room where some cries crawl laughter has become stained

The hands of life finally gave in the temple shattered to the grounds of forgetting this is the act of freedom handing a soul to a boat that takes the same soul to another bank of the river

The hands of death shall hold her
but only for a while another perfect hands shall receive her like another seed to be sown again in the cyclic fields of life which we believe to be always and always eternal

Today you shall have another birthday but we are no longer the hands that shall touch you....

RIC S. BASTASA
For Jamby

How could nice woman
like you
rejoice in victory and delight in the slaughter of a single-out man?

RIC S. BASTASA
For Jayson P.

wake up early. Fold your blanket smoothly on your bed. Dust off the linens and the pillows.

It is your day today. Tell the servant to catch the finest chicken and have it cooked. Have some blood for your forehead. It brings you luck.

Tell your mama, you are going to church on this Saturday. You are praying for prosperity, health and more good luck.

As you pass by the bakery, buy yourself a chiffon cake. Have it wrapped with silver paper and have it tied with a golden ribbon. Buy some colored candles too to jibe with your age.

Smile. Laugh. Think of happy moments. Sadness shall have no place in your heart. At least today, a very important day of your life. Be happy. Have some chunks of joys. Take bliss. Choose the cheers.

Wipe out the tears of yesteryears. Do not make mountains of your moles of lapses. Give yourself a break. Make more promises. Embrace hope. There is so much for life. Destiny is waiting out there. So much sunlight. Warmth from the many people who love you.
Do not disappoint them. They are all waiting in the house. There are red roses in the vase. On the table there are ripe fruits and some food.

IT is your birthday today. Cheers To life! To Joy! To happiness! To prosperity! Kiss yourself. Kiss her.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Jejomar

In dwelling, live close to the ground.
In thinking, keep to the simple.
In conflict, be fair and generous.
In governing, don't try to control.
In work, do what you enjoy.
In family life, be completely present.

Stop admitting that you fathered a child out of wedlock.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Jj....

strictly speaking
by my own standards you fall short of beauty: thick lips, chipped cheek bones,
poke marks,
falling hair, receding hairline,
short feet, chunky hands, unaligned eyebrows,
less eyelashes,

but look at you in the mirror those cat eyes looking for birds of prey

ever ready to fight for your rights
and the rights of the marginalized, the oppressed the poor and weak

by all means,
whatever physical defects you have resetting standards,

now, i must agree
you are the repository of invincible beauty

RIC S. BASTASA
For John On His First Frustration

let me draw you a house with an entrance gate leading to an entrance door and some windows to let in air.

just that, there will be no exit doors, no exit gate, all the windows open,
not designed to close,

that precisely is success
and failure.
there is a sense of entrance triumphant ditto an exit for some ordinary and even inevitable failures of our lives.

the windows are some of our other options, we let in air to breathe for a while. we must.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Johnny Come Lately

The journey of a thousand miles begins
at C-5.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Joji On Terminal Cancer

i have no courage to see her.
But i imagine that she is bald,
and in pain, and always taking that pain relievers.
I imagine that.
Who knows, i may be wrong.
Not all cancers are painful. Perhaps.
But most cancers are painful.
That bone, that marrow,
the pain that lingers even in the middle in the night when everyone would be soundly sleeping with their loved ones.
I have seen those with brain cancers how they hit their heads on the cemented walls
to ease the pain
those bloated stomachs
afflicted with liver cancer.
Cancer is pain. And Joji must be suffering it by now.
She must be bald
for her locks of hair
must have fallen to the pillow part of that chemotherapy side effects.
But i think i know Joji.
She is a strong woman
with a sense of humor
with laughter always on
her face
she has the will to be herself despite the sickness
till death, perhaps,
i know that she will not change
i know that she will not let the cancer defeat her innate goodness
her confidence to herself her faith in God
i know that she will always be smiling
not minding the pain
and the uncertainties.
I know that she is not
afraid.

Upon saying all these
to comfort her
in her Face-book Account,
it is me
who fears most,
for after all,
i may not be able to live
what i am saying to her.

God! Oh God!
Have mercy upon us all!

RIC S. BASTASA
For Joji On Terminal Cancer (Revised)

i have no courage to see her.
But i imagine that she is bald,
and in pain, and always taking those pain relievers.
I imagine that.

Who knows, i may be wrong.
Not all cancers are painful. Perhaps.
But most cancers are painful.
That bone, that marrow,
the pain that lingers even in the
middle in the night when everyone
would be soundly sleeping with
their loved ones.
I have seen those with brain cancers
how they hit their heads on
the cemented walls
to ease the pain
those bloated stomachs
afflicted with liver cancer.

Cancer is pain. And Joji must
be suffering it by now.
She must be bald
for her locks of hair
must have fallen to the pillow
part of that
chemotherapy side effects.

But i think i know Joji.
She is a strong woman
with a sense of humor
with laughter always on
her face
she has the will to be herself
despite the sickness
till death, perhaps,
i know that she will not change
i know that she will not
let the cancer defeat her
innate goodness
her confidence to herself
her faith in God
i know that she will always
be smiling
not minding the pain
and the uncertainties.
I know that she is not
afraid.

Upon saying all these
to comfort her
in her Face-book Account,
it is me
who fears most,
for after all,
i may not be able to live
what i am
saying to her.

God! Oh God!
Have mercy upon us all!

RIC S. BASTASA
For Joy

NOW THAT you have grown older do not shy away from the possibility that happiness can still be within the hold of your hands that your lips can still be red and all alive for the next kiss
no matter how late love
can be,

do not look back you might fall to the past that keeps on pulling you to the arms of
grief

It was not at all your fault that the flower of love wilted too early

He was the sun that came at the wrong time and did not notice how sweet can you be at sunset

Now, another moon has noticed the beauty of your petals
the sweetest scent that only comes when the night is depth and so silent

Walk under its light feel the warmth of its rays
close your eyes and feel
once again
how love can be stronger and sweeter after the first pain For Juvy...

Juvy is a thirsty woman
she is thirty, a widow for three years now her husband died on a car accident leaving her with a daughter

tonight she cannot sleep
her breasts are making fire

she goes out of the house and finds the brook nearby outside the fence of her house

when she gets there it is cold and dark but her breasts are glowing like cinders

she undresses herself
and goes into the water her breasts are playful on the ripples of the water she goes deeper
and dives
opens her eyes looking for happiness

she opens her mouth
drinks the fresh water of the brook

she is thirsty and wants to drink
everything

satisfied for now
she goes out of the water dresses herself again
under the moon

she goes home
opens the door of her room and with her hair still wait she lays in bed and begins to sleep the picture of her husband is no longer
on top of the table

RIC S. BASTASA
For Juvy...(A Little Correction)

Juvy is a thirsty woman
she is thirty, a widow for three years now
her husband died on a car accident
leaving her with
a daughter

tonight she cannot sleep
her breasts are making fire

she goes out of the house
and finds the brook nearby outside the fence

when she gets there
it is cold and dark but her breasts are glowing like cinders

she undresses herself
and goes into the water
her breasts are playful on the ripples of the water
she goes deeper
and dives
opens her eyes looking for happiness

she opens her mouth
drinks the fresh water of the brook

she is thirsty and wants to drink
everything

satisfied for now
she goes out of the water
dresses herself again
under the moon

she goes home
opens the door of her room
and with her hair still wet she lays in bed and begins to sleep

the picture of her husband
is no longer
on top of the table

her decision is to empty her past and free it from dusts.

RIC S. BASTASA
For K....

BEWARE, the end is about to touch you what you have in your hands none shall be taken when you are finally taken what you keep in the house shall dissolve like ice all your secret stories revealed all your hidden books open themselves like arms of the mad woman all your accounts exposed you are dirty, your are sick and you are dying....

we are ready with the prayers for the dead we have picked the best flowers for your coffin we are not at all cruel
despite....

we are forgiving, we shall understand, even death does not deserve you much less
hell.

we shall shed no tears for you it will serve no purpose.

we will not tell those who mourn for you that you have done us evil.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Kemberly

Her body, already rotting, was found dumped, along with seven other guerrillas, deep in the forest of Concepcion, days after the Dec.15 encounter. (Inquirer, April 8, 2010)

at first they were surprised about the changes. there were no more cocktails parties are shunned and you stopped reaping honors for yourself in the state university in a wink of an eye you were gone.

where?

you assumed new names.
you've been living with the poor peasants in nameless places.
you are Adriane, Ms. Nurse, or God knows who

they know later through the papers.
i am shocked too about your untimely death your rotten body beside the new people's army guerrillas deep in the forest of the mountain in Bukidnon beauty and brain and idealism all gone.

at the end of all these sufferings
on the temple of giving all that you have what they give you is a poem the one that does not make any dead man rise the one that never heals the sufferings of those who love you more than them For Kiss Is Not A Word And So Is The Tight Embrace.

she says it is enough she utters the words clearly but the usual

human frailty as her words speak
otherwise
her actions
show the perfect reverse.

she took him in and all the words
disappear
in the silence of their embrace
in the darkness of the night
under the conspiring moon and stars.

for the kiss is not a word and so is the tight embrace.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Kk

they call her genius because she makes a lot of money without having to exert any effort, she plays with time as though time is a pet dog,
she uses a few words to enforce her commandments of greed

and what is surprising is this:
the robots
her slaves obey without question reaping the fruits of effortless greed
and offering all of these in her tray of luxury,

we who earned each penny
with honesty
do not watch her with envy neither do we pray for her eventual debris

we pity her well
for
at the end
her destiny is
hell...

RIC S. BASTASA
For Krayge....

it is not the snow
you know its coldness already you have experienced frost and perhaps seen the movie about it how painful can all these be white, and prickly and soft perhaps like a gentle flake but you know how it gets too lonely most of the time

did you say that you like someone and then somehow that someone starts to evade you as though you have leprosy?

that is a mild form leprosy used to be that antisocial but you know that there is more than what was that....

Adenine
Infantrymen
Dementia, Somnolence

take from it or perhaps scientifically i once taught you in our faded Physics class in magnetism Craig, do not forget, like poles still repel and it has not changed since then despite the blending of the bends.

For L.....Wherever You Are And With Whom

i've seen how well she paints
the portrait of her mom

how well she plays Dr. Zhivago
dedicating it
to edwin

we had pizza
facing an island
got a beer while she had coke despite her being a diabetic

now i am thinking how well we do not really
fit

it feels odd
but it already happened.

at any rate
i will not ever see her again.

though the heavens may fall.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lack Of Better Coffins In The Town

so many things to do and should have been done about these unfolded blankets these scattered pillow on the floor of a dilapidated house about a door lock which does not function anyway

everything is not safe here birds come and go by the window to
the door

the night is sharp and shattered like glass pieces of unconsumed wine morning is not as beautiful as it used to be dawn is like an old dog, dying, smelling like a carcass in Caracas you like to go outside run into the woods and scream and frighten the black birds away you are a ghost of this present and you have done nothing except to sit by the window and stare on those hills not faraway

you want to cut all those trees that block the sun hidden from your face your eyes swell and your coffee had gone cold like some kind of dead dreams still unhurried for lack of better coffins in the old town where you live.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lack Of Confidence

..i tried to sound like you,
studying your choice
of words, the way
the metaphors
are constructed,
i studied every line
of your face and each night
i put on some lines
very much like yours,
...all else fails
i can never be you
i stop pretending
and imagining
that i am better if i am you,
....suddenly, things
change, here you are wearing same
colors as mine,
all the while you
also want to be me.
... such a twist
we should have
talked about
it.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lack Of Words

he says that for lack of words he could not a poem make his tongue sticks to his gums the images not so clear in his imagination

he says it is like he indulges in masturbation short of the needed ejaculation

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lady Love

I almost lost you.
Someone is talking and I almost lost the idea about you.
But i am here again Rethinking, coping up with what to say
while you are here with me enclosed in my arms
i am lost again
with what to say
you are kissing my nipples and i am closing my eyes somehow i still want to retake what thoughts i have still searching for the proper words what is it? let me think again how come that i cannot remember?
this time you are hurting my heart, ah, yes i now remember and this i cannot forget you frankly told me
you only love
my body.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Life Is Life And It Is Never Yours

at noon
the sun scorches
all ambitions, and

with so much fire
in all hearts
our bodies burn

she dances in fire
as she eats fire
and as fire eats her she never stops
that dance of life

and then the fire rests in cold stones in short breaths
of surrender and

she lays herself upon a bed of contentment

everything does whatever is to be done without having to do anything
at all

life smiles and keeps its own thoughts
it has brought you here and you did much of the thinking

that made it hard and harsh which should not have been the case

for life is life and it is never yours
only lent but which you think you own

RIC S. BASTASA
For Life Is Simple And Must Be Lived Simply Like All The Rest

i've seen the face of the winner the one who survived from that war and his triumphant entry in the iron gates of the old city he is just one of us scarred and scared and now simply wants to stay and just be one of us sitting on one of the chairs in the veranda watching the sunset drinking beer
smoking a cigar talking about the mundane event how to fish how it feels to gather shells in the seashore how to make love for the first time in his life for life is simple and must be lived simply like all the rest nothing special, nothing exaggerated nothing about any 4th of july

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lina & Fatima

what you see is real and you are not just outside it you go inside and take the plunge and all those who say love you turn into freaks
you do not look back like the wife of a certain myth you continue with the journey into an uncertainty you lose your name and find another one again you lose the change of marriage but the world marries you you trace the truth in the labyrinths of the poor and those that disappear
and never come back

there were images of bats clinging to the cave oh, such memories Lina such a self Fatima

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lina S.

SO my dear where have you been?
you don't remember the ripple of the river it does not remember any you or me, we are even on this matter so you are searching for the games that children play while their fathers are fighting the war while their mothers wait for the bad news

there are so many
but i will not tell you their names for now in fact i think you all know these but you just don't want to remember i can remember but let me tell you about those games later

meanwhile let me write about those who are dead and those who play dead those who are through and those who are just beginning

it does not matter
there is nothing to be serious about let all these go like what i once told you like the ripples of the river scarlet from the top and deep red at the bottom you know the smell

now you must remember

RIC S. BASTASA
For Linda

the photograph of a woman could be you
and afraid of sanctions from this rigid moralistic society you hide
in the shadow of a silhouette you become a dark black figure leaning on the frame of a door against the light of the day your breasts are firm your nipples are not afraid
anymore
caressed by the fingers of the wind from the window from the sea your feet tiptoe on the floor
but your arms and hands are hiding

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lisbeth...

she surrenders finally to the hands of marriage forgetting finally her disappointing struggles with books and peers and scales and a litany of human cases and supreme court decisions on the matter

'what is justice all about? ' her first question who dares an answer that satiates her thirst for it?

no one.

the legal room finally ejects her she is a plate of vomit and she ultimately confesses she misses

those nooks where people are too serious

to be really true to themselves for they must appear like dead pillars
unswayed

to discomfort and unconvinced about the power of emotions
those flitting feelings are not welcome here
sorry
so sorry to tell her that she who cries
and grieves
and says this is a cruel world where the fittest too shall suffer
this is where people become stuffed animals honored somehow for their sacrifices their frozen sweat and tears eyes have no time for blinking people’s minds are sculpted to objectivity like stone or marble slabs into pieces

of davids

she goes back to the door of the family enters it and locks the door behind her it is raining that time and people have to shout to be heard hugs her two kids her mirror to her new world a confirmation of her untapped genius what a flattery!

I'll make a lie and tell her you finally find bliss!

deep within me i am not at all impressed this is the best world i got and she is never a part of it i will let her think about something that makes her happy i will not let her ask if i am telling the truth

i don't have the time neither does she.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Liyo D.

a little bit flattered by your comment i went to your room
and i was trying to look for a bikini but i found nothing except those long bell bottom pants, black shoes for the funeral, coat and tie for graduation ceremonies, all i need is a band-aid that bikini
for my wound.

do you have one?

RIC S. BASTASA
For Loleng

i am afraid i have been too literal for the main reason that i want you to understand easily what i mean to lighten what heavy load you have there

i am sleepy and you expect more of those metaphors

they have all left this place that many have misunderstood now Loleng

each word has its own moving meaning a dung for a cow something that is wet for rain each word has its own limited reality which you must enclose and capture a niche for instance

and a flower
and white curtain all for a wall but it will not be for long Loleng when leaving is too painful when things cannot be prevented from happening

like birth for a start then sometimes death in the middle instead of marriage

what words will i use Loleng to comfort you?
what metaphors can i think of
to appease you or trick you into an exit?

perhaps only silence, only silence perhaps even nothing at all to comfort you because the dark nights are getting long storms more turbulent and many people as indifferent as the blank stares that you see when they shrug their shoulders when you ran for them for help

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lolit...

poverty is like a thorn inside your throat, and most often this thorn blocks the smooth flow of food inside
your stomach,
you bleed to death and your husband who asks for donations to buy your coffin
like Moses goes up the Mount Moria and prays there
he is seen by the neighbor and he is described as a cross of the new Calvary
on that gray morning when the fog still hangs
itself
in suicide position

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lorenzo

there is always a choice between a barong and something more Filipino but he goes astray wanting to portray who he really is a matter of self-expression he says is important

one asserts to keep one away from the enslavement of inferiority in facing the Chief Justice he drives the main point of his existence a pink tie, a pouting mouth, the famous sway of the hip a la maya angelou.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Lou And The Rest Of Us

one day you will choose the right path
not because you are afraid of the pain of having
that error as seen through their eyes of conviction

but because something right will always be right and the right way is not taken because of the perks of
goodness
or the offers of approval
or that altruistic feeling that finally you have chosen the goodness of
humanity

but for the main reason that in this life
there is nothing to choose
except to be good
and to walk the right path

not because you want it now
but because it is.

it is you and you are
from here from the very start
till the end

the good one.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Love And Life Must Go On And On....

what must we forget?
we bury what we must forget
we cover
what we love with soil
we put a bouquet
of flowers

must it be because we have loved
so much and they can no longer
love us in return?

if we keep on coming
and sit with their
silence
are we not opening the outer skins that help us
heal the wounds
that have long wanted
to rest
in hiding?

we must forget because love and life have to move on and we who are left here cannot weep forever

we have wept and we have put salt to earth that is enough offering for all those who are dead
and now
have reigned in their kingdoms of
silence

RIC S. BASTASA
For Love Sometimes Is Not Love For Truth Sometimes Is Not True....

what was in me that you have partaken

was it after dinner
when the rest
had already left
with their
lovers?

what had you
offered me which
i cannot
pretend refusing?

tonight
everything is about
love

and each one simply minds
each one's business

and the moon
looks at everyone
with that sense of empathy

for love sometimes is not love for truth sometimes
is not true....

RIC S. BASTASA
For Love That I Want To Forget

a stain in my heart
for years
irremovable and so i let it stay like a scar, now smooth and so persistent that it appears like a birthmark
to my pain, years back, when i still believed in love when i was still enticed by the whims of
affections
my heart groggy with care and drunk with promises of unchange and landscapes of eternity

nothing lasts perhaps except the scars the wound, true, they heal and close themselves in like a room locked with secrets and trunks closed and covered with dusts on the mezzanine floor but on this day i remember things with a welcome of my arms sweet pain, tender memories face of an innocent woman on the shores unboulevarded yet soft breeze of the past seas salty tears on ephemeral cheeks with dimples like lines on the pink corners of the orchids

on this day i may remember the faces but i am numb and i do not remember the intimacies anymore on this day, i am free and so in love with you

your hands are so soft, sweet, your lips so luscious and wet and flavored with scarlet desires you are my present melody and i am singing you from the deepest chambers of my heart

you are so real, and i am so alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
For M

THE GATE did not open for you the window is still closed to date there is no way then for you to go inside and be counted as one of those lucky winners of this day,

ain't no survivor but i am glad with the way how you dance to this music of death

the world is wide, the seas are incalculable, space is always and will always be open with the arms of its unending horizon

i like your attitude when you tell me that you are packing your bags with your family for a vacation this summer beach, white sand, colored balloons, banana boats, cold Pensacola, a new bikini, buffet dinners, fun, fun, fun, more and more fun until then you have forgotten what lurking is what death is,

don't mind me, i am also going that way ah, let all those disappointment disappoint themselves let those problems devise their own solutions for the meantime, the beach is too inviting take a dip, have that summer plunge, laugh and love, take life to the full, up to its brim, and let all those despair envy you forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
For M.

if indeed you are true and if indeed as you write it you are love and if indeed you are loved by many of them here and you say you love them all my dear M. why can't you have that little courage of loving me in return give me love like it were a morsel of bread give me a piece of love like it were a pinch of salt.

RIC S. BASTASA
For M. (Just For Fun)

gometry starts with a dot, and since the dot travels a lot more lines are made not contented the lines make shapes
others enclose themselves like walls and churches others spread like the lines of a map reaching for countries and
people and all the nooks of the earth since then the world is thankful for a dot that hopes for spaces and skies and light and speed

RIC S. BASTASA
For M. C.

don't be shy
talk about loneliness in facebook
be candid about it
i assure you
others will comment
you are not
alone
in this epidemic that mostly plagues on Christmases
and new years

one will tell you
man, you are normal
just bear it
and be with us
for we are one set of lonely people
in this biosphere whole year round

don't be sad someone will tell you
there are many ways
to kill a cat
which has nine lives to waste

one day when you find the solution to combat it
and it is gone
someone will tell you
about this irony

loneliness is a fact and when happiness comes and makes you
drunk
you will go back to the place
where loneliness
resides

you'll miss it.

RIC S. BASTASA
For M. P.

we have so many things in common our brown color for instance our sunken eyes

bodies deformed with so much pressure hands that no longer tremble because time made the fingers steel we are deprived of the crown due to our severed heads they toast for their success in defrauding us of our honors soon, soon, we have waited long enough the mountains flatten the sea shall bloat

soon, soon, our names shall no longer be carved in sand soon, soon, we shall become a constellation that marks the paths of heaven

RIC S. BASTASA
For M., The Wanderer

you did not choose it
it is there already
you want to remove it it just can't be you ignore it
and learn to live
you sleep the whole day and at night
you party the hours away it is still there it is choking you
somehow you know where to take air
and breathe
in this everyday struggle they claim they understand
your pain
you do not and cannot ever believe them some have fallen
and have become forgotten others are happy of their demise
it is you who understands so well
and so you have decided to wander
the desert land so vast knows your pain
the mountains that are silent knows the intensity of your pains
the rivers and waterfalls sing for you
they all know your pain the plains lay the grass
for you
they know about your pain and so you wander
not trusting anyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
For M........

every lock of your hair that falls on my shoulder
are words finding paper
for another
poetry of romance...

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mama

i never believe them about the story. about the clinic and the handsome doctor.
it was a remote possibility that i could have been born there because i have always loved the mountain and the sea and i have always the feeling that the dove
still hovers in my heart

how can a scalpel
be the source of my name when i am but a seed of the rice thrown in the muddy fields?

they have destroyed your face and your eyes bleed some damage cannot be repaired. when the coffee spilt its hot liquid on the carpet the aroma has escaped our senses.
the stain hides on the dark blue colors of its thickness.

there are new flowers that i have planted in your old garden. the rocks are kept.
and the pebbles. and the little pond and the tadpoles swim to be croaking frogs this coming rainy season for you mama. and i have began to learn to love the songs of the dance under them. and be all wet.
i don't mind anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Manny V. On His Election Campaign Strategy

Campaign to a great nation As you would cook a small fish.

Please
Do not overdo it.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mao...

we flew on the same plane we sat beside each other.
i was  best friend is with me. We have not seen each other for quite a long
time.

Manila and its night lights and its famous sunset would have been best for us.

I imagined eating at Vikings it would have been fun with you. We love sushi. That salmon was perfect. The hot wasabi.
The lobster was amazing. We love food.

Luneta Park is a cliche.
With you it would have been tolerable. Something to write about at the sunken gardens.

When we arrived however you told me: Leave me alone.
I want to be alone this time
in my life.

My best friend.

(for indeed, he did not want me to be arrested with him, that hard core communist wants to love this country alone)

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mar

The Filipino people are hungry:

It is because those in authority like you and your fellow senators
eat up too much in e-vat taxes.

RIC S. BASTASA
For March Of 2011...

when i have given everything inside myself, the last breath even, then i must stay, and once again this summer like any other summers, for another batch, i will say the same parting words,
'go on, without me'

RIC S. BASTASA
For Me Life Is Beautiful

life is beautiful
even without cash.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Me To Continue Loving You

for me to continue loving you is to demand that you keep the light of the sun inside your palms

i cannot tie a rope on your whispers and keep them inside the confines of my ears things escape, air rises, light dissipates, molecules scatter in random, atoms fuse and explode and change arrangements i cannot keep a cold forever or a cough to hold its departure or a sneeze to keep it secure inside my nose blowing up, exploding, bursting, popping, these are necessities of life and we are now doing each we could not wait after all these things shall follow the consequential silence. Listen, they are all here.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Me To Love You Baby, You Simply Have To Tell All The Lies....

so you are the topnotch of my choice i have many of your kind of my illusions, but you make it inside my heart and i feel so blessed having you inside me, like i am a cup filled with honey and you are not spilled even if i have to run away fast like a water ski,
i like your form most, i set aside content, form is more satisfying, with content i really have to wait a little longer, like talking to you, and listening and appreciating,
and i have no time for all these sweet-nothings, it is the form of your body, and it is the most important thing to me now, i who is lost in my hunger-desire, own you love you take you forever whispers.

you know the truth, i never touched you.

when i leave this room and then they ask if i am a brute a beast, a tiger with sharp killer teeth or a lion with a sharp lovers claw, or an elephant with an ivory tusk that amazes a lady hunter rolling in the hills like a top,
....tell them, i am all those metaphors.

for me to love you baby, you simply have to lie.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mely

i know you lied, not just once, but many times, and they are all mad at you, and you come again in my house, making all the lies, and fabricating more stories, so you may earn your food and money to buy your daily needs and the medicine for your sick mother.

they are all mad at me for not rebuking you, for pretending all the way that i believe you: your son meeting an accident, your husband at the hospital, your mother with a heart failure, and you on a nervous breakdown, i know all these lies, but i understand you, Mely, a woman in need grips even a sharp knife just to survive.

my duty is to lend a hand, and it doesn't matter anymore if the one who receives the help, is a liar in need.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mers

i know that
all that you want to read are just short lines

you have no time
for stretched searches for meanings crisp is always tasty brief is sexy

i know that.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mich

time is aflying
the sunflowers that bloom today tomorrow are wilting

Mich, make most of the time take him.

now.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mifael And Company Inc.

et they read your poems and all are unanimous in giving the thumbs up sign telling you that you know when to go and stop and sing and leave their mouths gaping but i tell you mifael and the rest of those who are not so popular here, you are not good in your craft simply because mifael

and the rest of those who are not popular here you are one of those who write too carefully from the heart and knows too well what strings to strum what drums to beat what piano keys to press what chords to strike that bleed hearts and make them jump with joy again mifael and company and all those who are not popular here, you are, to me not good, simply because like candice the evanescent, you're, those categorized by this another unpopular one, as the best of the best that this site can show and be proud of perhaps not never but forever..

RIC S. BASTASA
For Miguel

when you left
there was this delusion of white mustache this baldness that is too consuming for those who want to be always young

i was then a little boy crying on a velvet blue sofa i was aware of what was said from grandpa's mouth in fact there were scribbles in my heart like some claws of birds you do not have to come back to point me the way you passed i am still aware about those pains having loved solitude

there was this party in the house when i was sixteen and there were hands slapping your face and i too bleed a lot having known you much better on your deathbed

i am still aware of the things to come

i know the secret passage and along the way i pick you some white flowers it is bouquet of flowers that i must offer to you because you understand my pains too this is our world of pains we exit soon only to be parted again and we say we understand the flight of the fireflies how their lights are drowned by the rain how the leaves finally find solace in the silence of utter darkness when we finally find the truth of this existence the life after

RIC S. BASTASA
For Miss L.

YOU STOOD
upon a rock by the sea

i remember that but not that clearly

what was done next
between us
a haze

the foams of the sea went thin like tongues on the white sands lapping

it was too long ago

the boat has holes the fish which we caught slipped away the net was a useless piece on my clumsy hands

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mona Liza....

hello sweet lemon,
did you call me a sour grape?

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mr. R

that time
all that he can do is flee the place run away from his own house that his son burned it is not a question of whether he is responsible or not it is a question of not to hurt the one who caused him so much pain and so all the memories are gone the house that he built from his hard earned money for years everything everything is gone this time he does not flee anymore there is no way that he is going to run away from anything again he stays put on the ground which is right nothing matters.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mr. Ron Mengzi

there is no one in his house in the tropics who really know how to speak English so he tries making monologues for himself talking about his latest affairs but it gets boring you know and those in the neighborhood who hear that he is talking to himself think that he must have gone crazy i want to talk to him but i am busy always busy he complains for i am the only who knows how to talk in English but i am busy and so one day Mr. Ron Mengzi walks towards the pond and talks to the fish that he brought from California and there he had a nice English conversation with the fish
all in figurative and codified bubbles.

Some people who read this do not think about Mr. Ron Mengzi at ll They now talk about me asking about my own sanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mr. Shepherd.

easier said than done, that it must be something always new, untrodden path, uncharted ocean carrying nothing but the flow no ideas please he said, plain texture, tone, color, most importantly it must have perfume of flowers with specific scientific names, something that my hands can feel and my nose can smell, vibrant as a beat of a drum hands synchronized with fingers hitting the animal skin, skin of a tiger, or a lizard that crocodile look of a komodo dragon inside the stone cage somewhere in jakarta, where can all these lead me? 'do not bring it to me? ' you said, you exclaimed, 'i had been dead'.

a very lonely white morning glory wilted on the fence and now it is dark and people are away in their own private sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Mukako

make me live
for another day
kiss me before you say goodbye

RIC S. BASTASA
For My Beloved...

there's a thorn in my hair a bone in my throat

there is a lump on my back there is log in my eye

there is a cloud in my mind there is a stain in my shirt there is a snake in my bed a scorpion in my pocket there is wolf by my door a jackal on the stair

there is bat on the wall a spider on the ceiling

there is this blindness
in my heart
there are blocks in my thoughts

the hands of the clock
are running too slow

there is an eclipse of my sun there is a rock in my river

RIC S. BASTASA
For My Dear Eraption

Health is the greatest possession.
Contentment is the greatest treasure.
Confidence is the greatest friend.
Non-being is the greatest joy.

Get lost!

RIC S. BASTASA
For My Gay Friend Who Says He Missed Me

he pretended he was good and smooth and not so easy on that crowded street somewhere in Malate in sabah sodomy is a crime a talk a walk some shapes of affection a little coddling

nothing about something safe like a condom

that is out of the question something is chilly

like the weather that night with some drizzles

which moves like a small ship of fizzes exclude sex, recalling youth is so much fun beautiful bodies in history memories that sing like the rain dimly lighted cafes and soft conversations and then the salted goodbye and soon to find

perhaps for another twenty years sweet scented and bitter spoken

hello.....
For My Jealous Mother

forgive me mother but today i remember
what you did
when you got jealous
over father
drinking with another whore in that cheap bar at 5th street

you took and black umbrella
for a sword and stabbed him
on his thighs and arms and legs

father must have loved you so much
he never bothered retaliating
despite his serious injuries

in fact he ran away from your attacks that sad night while that thick faced whore laughed the loudest.

RIC S. BASTASA
For My Love In The Open

i love you
that is what you will hear because i say it when you ask for it
as a matter of your daily
need.

i have long accepted
half of what i am ever since when light is vague when truth is nothing but an opaque
view of the egg yolk
against the lamp.

part of my nose
is efflorescent
it shines when it is so dark
like a fish on a moonless night on the surface of the the calm sea

part of me is an anemone
when you are near everything in me wants to close and disappear

part of me is your confusion like the squid jetting a spurt of a black trail

part of me
is your love another part of me is my hate for this self that i wish i have completely known like the lines of my palm.

part of me is lost another part of me says there is no way to find i hope that 50 years is enough to know that part of me is unknown

like that part of the sea unfathomable.

RIC S. BASTASA
For My Mama Who Loved Masks...

i no longer
deal with masks
mama

if one is to be my friend
i must see the
face

not even the name for one may have
as many

i burn masks mama.

RIC S. BASTASA
For My Neighbor

the black birds are
up
hovering over the green coconut palms

beside the roof of her new house
she remembers
Noah and her heart

begins to weep
there are other things that i can see

from all these black birds my heat too weeps but i shall not give her any hint at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
For My Peers Who Made It Good In The Big City it was with a sad heart that i left all of you from that big city that promised to give me all the glitter of the neon lights an island of fame where my body and my face shall take the center of the stage where i may wallow in the deafening sound of clapping hands and a shower of flowers as i sing and dance and be the star of all your dreams and wishes

i am twisted
you all write me a letter i am hardheaded
you condemn me for i broke the promise of what i could have been i choose the little town by the sea where the waves all speak of sorrow where the trees grow unprecedented and without pruning the ugliness of their branches speak of ill-will and pronounced unfashionably nature's untrammeled simplicity the newspapers speak of your breakthroughs all your names in bold letters and colored your cars and mansions your latest creations your glory and victories my day begins in silence and it ends in silence i sleep with nightmares i talk my walks at midnights how can i be so stupid? all the leaves ask me, and all the trees when i begin to speak, run barefoot away from me the eggs of little birds on the nest on branches falling and broken and wasted For My Secret Love

i content myself with only a glance of you per day to exclude the touch of your hand,
to exclude practically
everything
that may fulfill this longing at one glance only for only an hour of the year i can say
my life is fulfilled in self-restraint.

RIC S. BASTASA
For My Sweetie

Slowly you shall let them see your eyes Lifting some veils and setting aside the curtains To let in some light
The air to freshen a bit of this Twosome Discomfort
This hiding and pretending not to seek What lies ahead
The two of us
You dream you are a butterfly And you tell them one night That you have known how to flutter Away from me
Into the world of your own dreams I have no cause to hold you now On your powdered wings
You shall go to farther places Even without me
Mapping out your destinations I will be sad for a while But I will be happy soon I have let you be
I shall set you free
To be yourself again
Now you must tell me
How the nectar of your chosen flowers taste

RIC S. BASTASA
For Nicky

You have just taught us three things:
simplicity,
patience,
compassion.

These three are your greatest failures..

RIC S. BASTASA
For Nikki

no one can stop the daisies from blooming the sun on an early morning always is there to understand so now prepare the desired colors of your petals
show them
don't just wilt and die without the touch of sunshine

RIC S. BASTASA
For No One Knows No One Knows....

my sister is bitter
and i patiently
listen
to her anger

i am in a hammock
and i look at the sky
between the spaces
of leaves
of the trees

father taught me
a lesson
my son always see the forest
and not just the trees

the bitterness of my sister is long and wide
and i begin to imagine a road

an old road that father and i used to walk on past seven summers on those drought of our lives where many goats and cows
died

the bitterness of my sister
shows in her anger against the young how they live a life of fun and then the years of misery

i did not listen much misery is not my cup of tea i have thoughts for all of those who still keep love amidst the hate
who still smile amidst the crying crowd i have my thoughts like doves that fly away to the blue skies of my youth till the orange sunset

of my death.

my sister is the bitter one
as always
i did not listen much to her woes because i have freed myself from my own bitterness too

i am forgiving
and i have forgiven what misery had offered me for i have long told myself nothing lasts forever

no one knows
no one knows.

RIC S. BASTASA
For No Other Use Or Purpose...

they ask that between us there should be no purpose or this asking for a use some benefits

that there is but friendship that begs not even for time that memory that simply rests and then takes upon itself another journey to a place reserved for those who are classified as useless because they serve for no use but only for the sake of beauty, the mere grandeur and nothing in particular nothing for return of investments just the gaze, the compassion.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Noelle Who Remembers The Fog And The Pine Trees In Masangkay

slowly the fog
blankets the pine trees

at night the coldness creeps
in every pore of the skin

like thoughts that cover our hair and creepy too in our
spine

wake up in the morning
see how the fog leaves the pine trees

see how our minds
clear

thoughts leaving like birds perched
last night
in the branches of our minds

RIC S. BASTASA
For Norma...

she sends pictures of herself in Holland with the tulips in full bloom and teeming as background, beyond is the shadow of the windmill, the usual symbol of what the place is all about,

she is smiling

somehow mathematics comes into the picture a little analyzing goes this way: she has cancer and she does not tell anybody, but how did I know about it, is something that I am original and say resourceful in all aspects: people feed people with other people's malady and they toast coffee and have a sympathetic talk about it, she lives alone and thrives on her monthly pension something not more than enough for a chemotherapeutic session, (how many sessions more?) did she wear a wig when that picture was taken?

(how secretly do we keep diseases of the mind?) and how happy can feigned happiness last? how pretentious can pictures be sometimes?

well, this must be that, spread happiness, no matter how fake it has become people must be happy,

oh! these are the happy real children of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Noynoy, The Incoming President Of The Philippines

He who knows that enough is enough will always have enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Once In My Life

for once in my life
after reading an epic
i fell silent
upon a black butterfly that hovered
on my lips.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Once The Poem Is Written, I Become Invisible Again

I am writing this poem now In a matter of minutes, this poem shall be finished This poem is not a Taj Majal
It will not require a thousand years to make it It is just like my breathe that I throw back to air
To the world
From its air that I too have taken

Once this poem is written I, the poet, shall become invisible again Until the next urging to write comes To sing the the songs of the cricket The grasshopper, the sparrows To imitate the sound Of the falling leaf, the sea breeze,
The slush of the sand of the boat docking on the shore
The trickles of the rain on the nipa roof The rushing ripple of the river
The brushes of the cogon grasses The silence the drifting clouds And there will be more
To plunge ourselves naked to some unknowns

To see to feel to sigh to be surprised to be awakened To be electrified to be shocked And even to be silent
For a while
On this eccentricity of faith’s actions Conjure up this thing that thing Adding scent and color and motion
I write
My living presence in the world That someday may awaken A body of memories and dreams In another person’s body and soul

And in the most private sense It can simply be A you and I... or then, who knows?
Ask me, I like the whole world involved & so, now that this poem is finally written, i am nowhere to be found, and as foretold i am again invisible.

RIC S. BASTASA
For One As Beautiful As You

Like that last raindrop dripping On the cable wire Like the one that dripped and dropped And said goodbye
Like the crying road that Held you by
I have tried to see what Sorrow means
What giving-up signifies How defeat looks like

If, if I had been unfair to you Just let me go
If, If I have been so untrue
I hope you must know
I never meant To hurt
one as beautiful as you.

RIC S. BASTASA
For One To Be In Love

The one in love
Feels that he is the king of everything He possesses the moon and rides On the wind upon his horse

He becomes as fluid as light Escaping the view of the eye And the notes on his diaries Become fields of roses and daisies

When he loves
Fountains spurt from his ten fingers Waterfalls pour from his mouth And butterflies come out From his tongue

When he loves
He runs out of time
All the waves lick his feet
All the leaves sing
All the clouds smile at him
The sun caresses his hair
The earth spins only for him

RIC S. BASTASA
For One Who Is Too Young To Write Poetry

i have one advice.
for you.
be the child who follows the emperor
and be innocent enough to tell him
that he has no clothes.
tell the truth.
the naked truth.
do not decorate it with plumes and icy pearls.
and tell not those who do not see that the threads and buttons are made of pure gold or his sweat
all diamonds.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Papa

the wind this month of september
blows the leaves
towards the
hidden mountain.

eye are scattered and cannot continue holding their tips

eye have lost the hands of the stems that give them the sense of holding

i raise my fingers to touch the old tree on top of the hill where our old house stands the clouds have since drifted towards the sea and i never had the chance to hold them for you papa

RIC S. BASTASA
For Papa Gregorio

And then I finally reached The narrow mouth of the river That you told me about

And I was left with no choice But to sail right there On this wooden boat that you Left me

I did it and here I am getting on The sight of an island
A bountiful island with brooks And green grass and Coconut trees and Lanzones trees

I am here finally In accordance with the maps of your dreams And tonight
I look at your sky
And I see the hundred smiles Of your glittering stars

RIC S. BASTASA
For Pedro

it has already been forgotten

17 years
is too long

all the marks of the sands
have already been erased by the sea
and wind

you think that every pebble is now in its place
and that
the shore is now ready for a new beginning

indeed it is so
but who can forget the salt
in the water

if forgiven
let it be so but the broken
shells remain to be so

their songs remain
sad
but no longer vengeful

RIC S. BASTASA
For Pio.....

Yes, there were eternally bleeding palms Pio, do you remember the name?
astigmatic, and there were those many names, many images so many mirages
And the desert suns, oasis, camels, Bedouins, scimitars of the past conversations; the origami of storks and ponds

There was this chinese frog who made it to the seven rivers The koi that turned into a dragon guarding the eunuch of the empire

So many words said and you think those were wastes,
they never had any meaning at all except,
the gullibility of the gulls But who knows, you maybe wrong ultimately for dismissing some facades of poems

People are poets and they cannot tell you the meanings of surfaces submarines go deeper and will not announce its resurfacing corals there, colored fish, pearls, sunken treasures of the past;
who knows, there may be real stories there hands that bury metaphors euphemisms that actually carry truth between the legs of their syllables you should have known better, when you believe all these at once I tell you, you were never wrong.

it is just one of those days when words are more real.
i never regret having said them, drawn the lines, and fortified my forts.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is you in handcuffs, you claim to be,
not your body, you're in for something borrowed, as we all are,
you do not sell
to me what you have, a body, a soul, a mind in trichotomy, i have much of these already, and i do not mind getting into these all again, your body, my body, without the mind and soul it is possible
i did it and shall do it
over and over again
for i learn no lesson from anything neither from anybody nor any book

i shall set you free from handcuffs, and have me handcuffed instead, in return by & of your hands and arms
i will not kiss you, you will be surprised i will not even hold you, you will be appalled i simply want to be a black bird perching on your shoulders as branches to a tree
in my mind,
and then you see me flying away, no drama, just a plain for general patronage movie it's like deplaning PAL from New York via Cebu with a note that i cannot be in Looc, Oslob, not even a shadow of my giveaway phone and then back to my hometown in Dipolog you bet, i expect no arms, i hate streamers and the band.
i still love to do all these and finish all these tricks all alone by myself.
Till then, if you are not happy at least Don't be gay.
RIC S. BASTASA
For R.F.

describe this body has no center
because it has no
edge
it has no here
and there
for if there is how can this body
contain a love that has no measure?

the sun
is not the center of my universe for i am never one of your planets
i wish you are my star
my sun
my God
but i live and go nowhere
to you
i understand
i am
nothing...

RIC S. BASTASA
For Reyes On His First Attempt

Nature does not hurry, yet everything is accomplished.

So try and try again until they succeed.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Richard G.

He who knows,
does not speak.

He who speaks,
does not know.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Righteousness Sake And Not For Anything Else.....

then the dirt will be visible.
the blemishes striking.
you do not say as it was written.
we were experiencing it.
we are no longer strangers.

i like it this way.
it will be penetrating and long lasting.
it will not fade. it will stick to me and i will fully understand it.

did you not say that wisdom is different from mere knowledge?

then i will know what is wrong.
then i will know how to avoid it. and i will not even avoid it because i have to.
i avoided it because it is not a part of me anymore.

i avoided it not because our ancestors told us so.
or the authorities so decreed it with all its concomitant penalties.

there is a rock in the middle of the road.
there is a mole in your
face.
there is dirt in your
forehead.
there is a thorn in
your heart.

we do not say it.
we understand it.
and it most understood
this way.

fully fully comprehended.
then i walk my way without thinking about the law or about the judgment or about the consequences.

i am righteous now and that is for righteousness sake and not for anything else.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Rj...

i perfectly understand it Rj i know that the name of the child is always Today

never tomorrow and so without so much fuss i give as you ask
i ask no explanations i require no reasons got no burden somehow i am glad finally i have one

His name is Today
Never tomorrow

Oppress me, oppress me some more, i need one, Today
I perfectly understand Though foolish i may be
i give up
Sanity and Greed
and Logic

Ask me, i give in,
no reason, no nothing at all,
nothing in return,
o no condition

If your Mama Rj
cannot understand all these,
let me,

If your Papa Rj
takes pride in his Discipline I demand nothing Rj Go on, take this and that I am ready.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Rjing (Be Brave And Stand Your Ground)

you choose without doubt an inconvenient life you think your arms are strong that there is nothing slippery on your hold your hands are spiders you must have prepared for this
i have nothing to say
and will never say what i think are whales
in my mind
you have chose the cross in the Calvary mistaking everything as love you bleed into your own death everyone stares at you with interest asking' Can he make it? Is fate with him?
Has he talked to God about this sensitive and painful matter? ' you are young but we are not underestimating the orange birds in your eyes so must you go now do not take any word from us be proud you have what you claim will make you survive there is a word from your father
'Son, do not ever come back'.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Robinson

three years he said he learned about forgetting Von, and he looked back and pondered, that Von never knew about what he felt, and he pretended that he had become a very ugly witch and so Von was all the way as numb as dead tree leafless and sunless on a deserted hill where black clouds meet with wilted grass, so much so for that, he continued, he has moved on with his life after he mended
a broken heart, but he never told him about how he had become so crazy about love, or was it really?
he worked hard, learned the art of making more money until he reached that point that he can now afford to buy love and put it in the house like a lover for money, but just the same it ended this way: another broken heart, another numbness, another moving on to another wrong direction....

ended his life with an end that Von
never, till now, understood.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Rose And Arvin

now you have seen
the secret garden
the flowers here
are edible
the seeds life giving but we do not eat
anything
we do not even chew
any leaf
in here we are cursed to simply utter to let time pass in here we are simply living on that unseen shape of awe
on that indescribable taste of wonder
the stars may be far as distant as our unfulfilled dreams but they are always ours and we are always
their chosen gods.
we shall reign here
on our self-made thrones.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Ruby Rose

ah, the truth blanketed by cement inside a barrel of anger and then thickened by the hideous steel
thrown into the depths of the murky river which time could have easily forgotten as nothing but just another kind of murder unresolved

things come out by themselves and they all tell their stories not with weeping but with the pointing finger as to who the real culprit is the truth can never be buried it unfolds itself and bears upon itself the promise that at the end its face can be seen and then justice shall prevail

we shall wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Rv...

now i know
why you shot* your two feet
against the sea and sun
under the shade of a tree one hot
summer

understandably you are so alone and no one did it for you

so you did it yourself

* took a picture

RIC S. BASTASA
For S.

dark skinned heavy weight hair untrimmed

yet so friendly
compassionate
giving

i should have
seen more of you in earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Sale

do you not know that for now everything is for sale at the right price?

my heart my body
are for sale
but only for you
my dear

but since i love you take me for free
with a bonus
of fidelity.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Salome

do not tell me the truth with us on this lonely journey the truth becomes unnecessary

let us move on Salome to find a place where we can begin again let us leave all the sad truths behind our paths all our tracks covered you go ahead i will follow i will cover your sorrow tomorrow Salome tomorrow you will still me mine less the sorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
For Salu Salu

the world has changed.

and new adages are worded:

a friend in need
is a friend to avoid.

do unto others first before others do unto you.

and the truth has taken the shades of the rainbow what is good for the gander need not be good for the goose but we can force it despite an oppression of taste and culture

one must take shelter in the shadow of the self otherwise one gets lost in the labyrinths of others.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Sam...On Self Love.

do not be afraid
of libido,
it is part of you,

us, we do not invent this,
it is there

we may wish it is gone but it stays

we are told to go and be clean

but who? nobody is claiming responsibility for the illness in Ward 6,

now they are washing
their hands
when someone so important hangs himself
dead
on arrival

denial is a sin,
it is the opposite of acceptance

we are here
we are the facts
we wish no one ill
we only wish them
all

love. Now are you
afraid of yourself?

there is no one
that shows the love
except yourself
thrive upon it
till the end.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Sara Kaye

it is good to see you begin to write, assure me that it is not your suffering but those of other people that it is not your hell but theirs, and too i assure you that i am living in paradise that i am still trying to know what is hell all about that my suffering need not be my own but those who are merely called as subjects of our literary styles, why are you afraid to tell our story? why is there fear in confessional poetry?

was the flower afraid to show its petals to the sun and then hesitant to show how it dies in the afternoon when it sheds off all its personal treasures in the counted petals of its existence?

show me that you can write a poem. just one. And do not fear, i will assume that it is not about you.

charge it to empathy. Let us begin with the euphemism of internalization.
Putting our feet on the shoes of those who do not know how to walk.

Or let us say, we are just writing for writing's sake.
Pure imagination. Astral travel. Talking in our sleep.

Hmm, let us see. How your poetry speaks? How your short stories can tell the most beautiful lie possible on this planet of the apes.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Selena

indeed i commend you

your legs are sexier now with the polka dot mini
and black stockings

at the age of 45 do not fear
you can still kick point & dash & sway

Selena do not just trust luck
to get a man you need to be a little flirt this time
and be the smart ass
that you can

time passes you by
do not just wait there go & grab & just be
yourself
open and candid about what
you feel
and by all means in God's name
say it.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Serge Who Prided That He Passed More Laws Than Any Senator In Senate

The more laws
and order are made prominent,

the more thieves and robbers there will be.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Simone

it was not the cat that ate the moon it was the dog which is capable of since its mouth is larger and and its owner is powerful the dog is spoiled and the cat knows this when the dog howls at night the cat learns how to sleep amidst the abuse

the charivari of drunken dogs missing the moon that they have swallowed the stars knew and so tonight they have kept the distance afraid of the dogs but still glitter to appease the cat so sad inside its nightmares.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Sol...

smile my dear
the motto remains the same since 1976

Life is beautiful.

and it will always be because we believe that

Life is beautiful.

it is, in fact, it is.

do you still miss those islands of desire?

RIC S. BASTASA
For Some Broken Hearts

cscissors
that have long loved the stone

cpaper that wished for water

i wish you all happiness still

RIC S. BASTASA
For Sympathy

since you married her not for love but for sympathy the gods agree on some consequences

she will stare at you
and she will be nothing but a ray of white light

you become the prism
to filter her soul
against the sun
your sympathy
shall spread her into the many colors of her griefs

soon she will say that in the prism where her soul passes through there was no joy
there was no bliss

there was only this little piece of happy moments this pretense not meant to last her lifetime in the mask of darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
For Tem On His Last Day

THE WORLD does not weep for a quitter, no matter what no matter how deep is your sorrow no matter how justifying the circumstances precipitating inside that cup of poison, another poem is written for you a sympathizer from another country perhaps suffering too

like you

or us, but it will be only for a short while, after the last word is written and read the world moves again, spins upon itself to complete another revolution, nothing is achieved much, time does not tell, but the motion keeps on moving like a spiral, like a steep stair moving up only to arrive at an empty room, i believe in something else, that someone is waiting out there i guess, you are right, the end is reasonable, but the means will always be questioned.

i hope you still have time to read the poem of Mike i guess, sincerity lies there, i still shiver about an old age that could not wait for more time.

at the end, who knows? but you cannot tell. You are silent as cement.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Tess

do not envy the billionaires for their problems are in billions too

be glad ours are just in cents

what makes us happy
simply depends on what makes us smile

there is no need to complicate what simple happiness is all
about

how about a
talk?
tonight?

RIC S. BASTASA
For That Hypocrite With A Mole In His Face....

i make a mark
and draw the boundary now when in your anger
you state
'this man is useless and never credible'

and that is you my friend who had keep pretending

during those times
when you have partaken
on my free
it is in your anger
when truth is said

now the bridge that connects us falls to the rage of my rivers it is me that moves to find the happiness of least resistance

now that i have known you i shall never speak your name again... dinners.....

RIC S. BASTASA
For That Master....

you are giving what we do not need and so of course we discard it for what use are your grass to our sea what relevance is your cloud to our cave your flowers do not thrive on the deepest part of our seas we claim no kingdom so what is the use of your slaves and serfs and soldiers
and lances and carriages?

stop all these we have long ceased to be a path to your discourses did we not tell you that we descend from the spirits of the winds? there is no use now we have long set ourselves free your golden chains that made us sing for freedom we have given to the pillars
now you must own them
as you are bound

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Buds That Bloom

for the buds that bloom
thank you
for the flowers that show the biggest petals and the sweetest scent
thank you
for those that keep on holding the dew
thank you
and for those who enjoy even the slightest moment of my appreciation and praise all for the glory of God even for the slightest moment and then wilt and die in an instant
like the click of the hand or the ticking of the clock for a second or two
thank you

i have learned a lot. i have opened. i have kept the answers. i am ready for the next question that God may ask of me. even for the shortest moment of my life.
thank you.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Conceited Woman...

often your talk boils down to how attractive you are or have been

and i just keep on listening i think i must give you the challenge of shane:

walk down the road
have a hundred dollar bill in your hand make a man choose: sex with you or the hundred dollar bill.

it's fine with me: i'll give you a hundred more.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Critics Who Believe They Are Better Poets...

DO NOT dissect the frog of Basho
it cannot sing in the rain
and there will be no more splashes

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Cruel Woman

WE SIMPLY have to be honest, do we have any choice? what do you have there?
a thick section of your humiliation,
she keeps on putting you down and she laughs
openly like you were the performer with all the rotten tomatoes as her score

what do i have here inside my pocket?
i have my fingers that keep a record of her wrongs
and i am still writing

she is sick and dying and we wear sad faces we are dishonest
she is saying the last words in slow motion and stretching her breaths like a staccato of a song we are the silent background the floor of her bed the drapes of her window the slippers of her stinking feet

and finally

she is dead and we cry and then we wail loud enough to be heard by the neighbors and the servants of the house are convinced we go through the rites of her passage we are her heirs and our names shall not be forgotten by her in the other world where she watches us from the skies with all surprise and regret we are dancing on the grass we are feasting in our house.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Flowers Of Spring

the flowers are here thanking you for the rain that which you gave with an open heart

you shall bloom
in your presence
happy for all your good deeds.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Greedy Old Lady

old lady
you have accumulated much more than what you need tomorrow is your death time

you shall leave all these greed stuff

no one will touch them no one will have them

the wooden part will be eaten by termites some shall rot under the rain others shall become more rigid and useless under the sun the rest shall be taken by the state and they who are your children shall laugh at last.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Happy Housemaid...

early morning
the housemaid turns on the radio in full volume that the neighbors know that she is already awake and cooking breakfast

the house smells fried good and bacon and steamed rice

when i come out my room she smiles and turns off the radio and says that breakfast is ready

only to be told that no one likes to eat breakfast

(like the two the housemaid likes it much to eat all these matters alone by herself, she is attuned like a loud radio
early morning
and she does not mind what the housemaids' neighbors say)

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Homeless...

it is this season
that usually loneliness multiplies itself unnecessarily perhaps like a virus,

do you say that you are homeless?
oh, be kind
be kind most of all to yourself shelter it and keep it always at home inside
your heart

if there is no one else who will love you perhaps i might as well but i am always far away in the home of another and i am always at home with my own self a friend to me
and so you are left with no other possible option

be kind
try love as always be lovely

just be at home with whoever and whatever you are.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Injuries That Our Fellowmen Have Inflicted

in all days of history when tomorrow and yesterday are fused for all the injuries inflicted by our fellowmen to us and by us to them
we pause
we think we are dying almost everyday in pain and sadness that we get used to it
somehow
and then we forget how is it to really die once, only once

yes only once

RIC S. BASTASA
If you had a friend coming to your house for the first time and he called and said that he was lost,

you would ask
same thing,
"Where are you?"

If he can tell you
where he is,
you can tell him
how to get to your house.

You've got to know where
you are
before you can receive directions where you need to
be

where is the poem then?

where are you?
indeed is more poetic than the violet toilet
that you
flush through.

some thoughts
are not synched
lipped, just lipped,
the connection is simply inside your
mind
from that past
e experience in that

mountain of stone
that valley of misfortune that

bitch on the beach
that still stilt, stealth, wealth and
filth.

SOMEHOW if you want
clarity,
and order, and logic

this is not the place
for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Lord Of Songs

I bet my body and soul on it

and i lost
i think i lost
everything
for a very lousy
song of mine

with honor
i surrender to you
and i come to give to you
the prize

and you say to me
'no take that back
it is you, it is yours, you suffered much composing that lousy song
for me'

and i go back to my old song again
lousy still even in the gratitude of taking.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Love Of Art

the skill is there
expensive silk but the choice of what to say
and what to do
make the ultimate
difference

remember: side with the
truth
because it is beautiful
as always
no matter how ugly can it appear to your own perspective

a reader
true too to his mission rejects fantasy or horror

what about the sick
and the dying?
the unhappy and the hopeless?

so many of them
subjects of a good write.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Love Of Work

the flesh is honed and the bones will not crack the fingers feel the most of the affection
the feet are patient and the lungs always have the filling of air nothing blocks the industry
of the body
and the longing of the soul because the work is loved
because the mind
has a purpose
because the mouth of the soul still thirsts for much of what this love demanded

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Meantime

As we are all here now
For the meantime that the river is running Take the freshness of its flowing waters Take the plunge

Jump
Into
her Waterous
Adul-terous
Body

By all means make your whole body wet

We shall talk about how to get dry later.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Month Of Coming May

the flowers
oscillate to and fro like some
kind of cute pendulums
that do not tell time

hypnotic
these little beauties take us
away from the hum drums of our conundrums

as heat concentrates in stones
spreading not the usual warmth

but the other side
the warnings of incoming deaths....

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Nth Time

THERE is always the nth time an nth promise which shall also be broken
for the nth time,
the nth time does not end for it knows to start its life over and over again the nth time that i am in for the nth time shall i be on this nth time again never at a loss infinity...till the nth time.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The One Who Changes Love....

there will be too many trails to the heart if you love

if you will allow me there will be thousands and thousands like wave upon wave shall be your welcoming hints

if you change
there will be no door
not even a leak

all the locks of the hair gone you take back light and what i see is an empty space a black hole

the unluckiest one shall take the risk and no more shall be heard

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Philosophers

there is no use really arguing about God
whether he exists
or not whether he is present now amidst our triangular grouping there is no use
he was once here and as we are too noisy he left
a minute ago.

RIC S. BASTASA
for the rest of my life
i will take the same routine

home, office, school,
home office, school,

a straight life confined in a certain space
too confined and too tight for my soul
and too boring
for my body

home, office, school,
school, home, office,

you ask me if there is something wrong with my life? there is nothing right in it, everything has always been wrong and everyday has always been an attempt to correct it, but nothing

nothing has fit into it to cut the routine to break me from the chains of everyday

nothing comes and nothing goes, i think, that is how it is meant to be,

i think, i simply have to imagine, make some figments of stars, and moon and sun and mountains and seas and valleys and castles and princesses and kings and queens and too they become routine too, some poems and stories some people that do not actually exist, some imaginary earth, imaginary creatures they are all here, in this routine of imaginations, of poetics of illusions and allusions, these lines, my life, these routine and all my excuses, you and I.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Sad Woman Who Is Now Happier Than Before

i exist for another day and another day
just to make you happy and day by day you begin to live anew

on that smile which burst into laughter

i've been sad those past days and you do not ask because you were too preoccupied with your sadness & loneliness

day by day i change too seeing those smiles in you i too, am looking for that reason to live and be so alive and i found you.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Stars That Fade Away

fade gently
the dark clouds hide
all of you
had your dog days
and that is good
enough
for the annal
of history

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Things That I Cannot Change

what can i do?
i simply have to keep
them
like a page in the book i make some dog ears
for tomorrow
i shall read them again find some words that anger me
and stir me to envy
from there i shall stop and reread
and reinvent myself and in time proclaim
this is me
take it or leave it

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Things That We Cannot Change

for things that we cannot change we may let them be

hence, i do not wish to change you for you cannot be you there is a time always to pray to know what we can change and what we cannot to know what is the difference between the two i have limits too

for things that i can change for those i cannot i may soon take my leave and go to places where we do not mind each other anymore where you are free to grow and be yourself where i cannot see you anymore and then i may stop gritting my own teeth

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Things That We Promised Not To Do dedicated for all the things that i do not want to do anymore like spending sleepless night on a poem that i am writing

about you
like having more cups of coffee to my system
that shakes because of too much caffeine like spending more hours on the computer surfing for more beautiful images of a blooming red rose with some dews still fresh on its petals like having to chat with you saying nothing important really except some lousy words like 'i miss you babe'
' i need to talk to you'
'can i see you tomorrow?'
i hate myself for doing these things i like to quit and just be simple like everybody's simpleton or moron or special child i really hate myself for doing these things that i do not like to do anymore
but what can i do?
i am a slave of my own feelings my brain is misplaced my eyes no longer the sentinels of my being my body does not serve its sole purpose of carrying my soul to the inner peace of my still pond. what can i do? this poem, yes this poem is so dedicated.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Things That You Fear

the things that we fear sometimes are nothing but shadows of our hands and feet and the words of our mouths and sighs

when we wake up and go outside the door of the house
naked

we soon find that all these shadows are nothing but the makings of the room

when the sun rises
as we bathe in its light all the fears are finally gone

we will find ourselves naked on the grass and too beautiful to behold

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Time Being That You Have No Need Of Me feel confident and be just like anybody on the street do not think about meeting me

sometime in the future for i am nothing but a piece of useless button that you can throw in space and feel no emptiness in your pocket

somehow
there is a part in you that breaks perhaps your heart or your stomach
you feel the hunger of love the coldness that seeks the warmth the word that feels the need of the tongue so that it can be uttered then you shall look for me but i shall take the revenge

i will no longer be there anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Traitor...

i shall forget the letters.

what for shall i read them?
shall i beat my head with my own hand?

tonight i shall take them all outside the house
crumple them
page by page
and then burn them

the smoke shall go straight to the place where the gods shall soon judge us

who was at fault?
who was forgetting whom?
who made a promise?
who broke them all?

when what i see shall all be ash i will make my last laugh....

RIC S. BASTASA
For The Wife

yesterday i made some promises for your friends who of course, after marriage our marriage, have become my own friends too,
now because of you
i have to break them break myself
some integral part of my bones
i have to twist my face and show the rawness of my laughter
today
simply because you changed your mind
and for which, as a matter of marital consequence, i, too have to become a change myself,
i repeat, because of you, i may not be
myself, anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
For There Is One Thing That I So Badly Need to get closer to you i will make sacrifices to the goat goddess to the siren shrimp

to the white crow
to the coral saint

there will be so many denials

i will deny my humanity she will deny her engagement they will deny who they are the world must deny its shape and color

i have to get closer to you
skin to skin
eye to eye
hand to hand clasping like a prayer for there is one thing that i so badly need

the truth....

mama was silent about it till she died
grandma says there are things that one takes to the grave as a matter of necessity

there are words which need not be said even if true

because like love when you take it you can always let it

kill you.
For Things That We Cannot Change

cannot be changed the establishment is at it again
deaf ears
strong hands
stiff minds
hard bodies resisting change
of the clenched fists there they are again on barb-wired fences defining boundaries
of thoughts
exclusiveness shutting out variations of the race this is the political science of exclusion of prisons and walls
here they are again at the emphasis of penalties and fines setting aside the art of compassion
the fusion
the inclusions
this art of loving and giving meaning and welcoming whatever differences in colors and creed
the magnanimous
art of toleration
here we are again
back to the beginning of time the age of renaissance
the flowering of hope
the blooms
of thoughts
For Those That Hurt Us

try this.
give them want they want.
be happy, smile and be fit.
they will be hurt when they see us not hurt at all.

that is the revenge
of the happy person.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those That I Shall Not Ask Forgiveness for things that i should have finished by now i ask forgiveness,

for all my indulgences, the most unlikely of what being should not have been

i also ask forgiveness

there are joys that crown my hair where time becomes unimportant there are sweet thoughts that dwell in my mind that which the logic of the brains detest there are memories which should have been buried forever but which with relish i still remember those that they say are wrong those that they say shall destroy

my being, my wholeness, my end bound perfection
for all these

i embrace with all fairness i shall not say sorry, i shall not ask forgiveness for in truth without all of those and these that are still within the commands of my hands i could have not lived at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Trampled Upon

listen: the bad karma does not send any notice it is not like hot pepper that burns your lips instantly the oppressed sings their songs to the winds of change

comforted
by the lofty ears of the clouds listen: vengeance is not ours it is God's.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Are Dead And Gone

we who are steadfast to life despite the pains
we sing you our last hymns as tribute to your courage that never really lasted you your lifetime

and then we gather again after you are buried with all grace with all our innate respects we think upon ourselves what future lies ahead of our journeys we dust off every guilt that you leave us from our sandals and feet we go again and walk the paths of our lives sticking to life and singing the hymns vibrant and full of hope each moment is cherished each vision made clear for all of us who remain here we would have wanted life to be forever

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Are Wise

for those who are wise
are the very first to admit they do not know much just a little pinch of salt to taste,

for those who are young they do not talk about age at all for those who are healthy the medicine is not an issue for those who are rich money is not an issue for those who are intelligent the I.Q. is a taboo for those who speak much their inside is hollow for those who listen much everything is taken as such

for those who are dying life becomes the most precious thing for those who are fooled to honesty must be glued.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Did Nothing They Suffer More

accept the fact
that all days are working days

twenty-four hours
duty for humanity
sleepless in services anxious on whom to cater next whom to suffer

be glad for at night God's gift to you is a very sound sleep and when you wake up,

revitalized, rejuvenated you begin to like the suffering again

but who suffers when you have God in mind?
who works when all you have is play?

for those who did nothing they suffer more at night they needed pills on days they do not know where to go...

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Do Not Understand

like birds on a new land they have doubts whether to hop in or not but the wings are tired the claws are numb
and there is no choice except to rub their feathers against the cold wind blink to reconsider
that after all
there is no other shadow of a land to see and out there is the deeper horizon gray then black then
empty
one bird decides to dive fall on the water
and then
catch the first fish

of course the rest follow
and then
the community begins to take shape

like any body like any ant or sand or mound of earth
or the first birth of the whirl and the
twirl

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Finally Quit what is then the next thing to do? retire retreat

and hide?

consider this what i did when i too feel like
the same thing that
you have

i retire but only to recuperate i retreat only to evaluate and hide but only to recharge what energy i have lost the next morning i shall move

again
another timing and strategy another hope
and expectation that finally luck shall be on my side that fortune awaits those that persist
that there is always a place for those who wait and do things again
despite.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Grieve

no one
do no one can really stop you from eating the bark of the tree the thick skin of the fruit

no one can tell you what should have been proper or better

you like the skin and you throw away the fruit that could have satisfied your thirst and hunger

the bark has poisoned you the moon has warned you too well the worm is wriggling its frail and elongated
body

you have no ears your sense of smell so badly damaged and now you are dying

no one tells you that life is as sweet as the ripe fruit of the tree that luscious flesh that flowing juice

your gaze is sharp as a knife stabbing even the
sun

and you are always right what you have been searching that can satisfy your hunger and thirst is not found on the fruit not even in the tree

it is in the poisonous bark that useless skin
that silly coat

definitely it is not even here where we are all grieving

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Have Not Read for those who have not read his work he reminded them that he is the gadfly that bit the complicated ass of Plato's cow

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Love Most

time has become so detailed the wall clock ticks and tacks and not just on two hands there are many sensitive fingers now that rotate around its white belly of paper and lines have become long and enumerable, each sound has become delicate cressing each dash of the second always taking into consideration what the wall feels what the roof sees what all these floors are up to ye they do not stop anymore fearing death the thief who steals all when he comes like fire consuming the house not leaving even a stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Made War For The Skies And Oceans....

how do we tell
for birds to make peace
with the fish
that they simply have to share
oceans and skies?

how do we measure
skies? where is the boundary of the ocean?

do we really have to own them to enjoy them?

who shall man the titles department?
who's gonna pay for all these?

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Really Love

and here it is
as a matter of today's reflection after reading your poem
my friend,

that for those who love asking what love is
is a superfluity

for those who love much and truly they just do it without so much asking wordless and endless a hug, a kiss, making love feeding, giving,
all out reaching patience immeasurable like an ocean love without measure on time undefined.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Really See

for those who really
want to see
and see

everything is always new

and there is not such a thing as anything

each is always special to the eye
who loves

life and
sees something more
beyond
the here and now

the music
of eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Remain Alive

on the fields of sorrow the finches of hope are hovering the winds of change are blowing the skies look down upon the trees whose hands are raised in praise of those who remain with the dignity of their roots spreading like grass
so many and so alive

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Still Dream To Write The Best Lines Of Their Lives

you wish to write the best lines of a poem, something that they will remember for a lifetime, you want to put the best metaphor, you like to be deeper than the deepest ocean (or the bluest sky ever, or the tallest peak of a mountain with snow caps, you want to put the gentlest sound of the wind on top of the Tibetan monastery, you like to have your lines sound like a tinkering bell of the meditating monks, you want it holier than the saints, you want to make an impression with the moon and the stars, before you die, before you embrace the darkness and then take on the glowing robe of light) you wish to write the wisdom of the ages in some few lines, you want to put your name at the bottom, so they may remember you how human could you still be! divinity shuns this waste of words!

come to think of the paradox the best poem is not written at all it is not even spoken not even the sweetest song of the bird not even the flute or the lyre has that note it is not here, not even in the hearts of men or of the wise, it does not exist here, it is not even heard yet, the metaphors still unseen the rhyme unrevealed, the rhythm unfathomed...

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Watch Us Pass By

so what are you looking for?
the future?
you rest yourself in that absurd future?

it may not come.
You may fall at this moment and then die and then no one remembers you so easily,

a month, a year, you will be forgotten

i guess, this is just it, this moment, i am holding your hand as you hold mine, loosely at first and then a little bit tighter we walk together, like very close friends, at this instant,

this is the only thing real, these hands, these getting together words that we utter, footprints that we make,

when we reach that distance we soon become another illusion. Another memory a mirage,

for those who watch us pass by.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Wear Masks

actually, those who love you prefer that the masks be worn, for they want that confidence in you when you wear even one of them in fact, you showed what love is you conquered those who shame you with what you are when you are without it, so by all means, our purpose is anyway to survive this pass over we shall cross the river shortly and with the mask, this thing will be easier smoother, and at the end what matters most is your victory, not what is behind that mask, the horror within, the shock in every line of your realities.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Those Who Wish To Die Younger...

to be candid, i do not intend to grow old with some dead leaves on that cold pond,

i am not your haiku,
i am the elegy of the middle aged man who leaves an oral tradition a poetry to the world with no trace of any lyric i already sound like a dirge dig it.

i do not grow old.

(it is nicer that way,
early to go and still be wise).

RIC S. BASTASA
For Tina...

i see
your house is on top of the hill in the island of samal

it has a bath tub
inside a room facing the
sea

you love sunsets while i love sunrises.

i guess we can compromise at high noon

RIC S. BASTASA
For Tony

you're home tony,
you're just right there in the home of your heart cool, be cool, tony boy you're just right there in your own home

feel the love
and kiss the person
next to you

close your eyes
and imagine a very peaceful and harmonious universe

stars with hands holding each other and dancing in limitless space
of eternity

the moon and sun
on a perfect agreement to make nights and days of equal lengths

the rivers that flow ending right there in the deep blue sea

it is all perfect tony, everything is just as perfect as we wish and see them all today

this moment of joy
and bliss this moment
of perfection
this moment when our hearts fly like birds towards the island abundant
of our respective & reserved destinies

close your eyes tony and imagine what perfection is it is the shaking of the hands of the mundane and the divine the meeting of the minds of God and Man

listen well tony to the sound of peace and harmony

take note of every feeling of stability

and then write the next poem that comes cascading like a waterfall inside your mind

and then from where i am seated i will read
the poem of your life.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Travel's Sake

i am my own
car, and i drive it towards a direction

on smooth wheels fast and sound tracks stretching before my sharp eyes

i overrun
not people but my limitations
i compete against myself
against
the obstructions of my intolerance for
failures

i like this journey
towards an uncertain
destination

it is the excitement of not knowing

it is travel for travel's sake

RIC S. BASTASA
For Us To Become What We Really Are

when you ask me
i always have those answers

i know how to invent what is not there as a kit for my survival

i ask you
perhaps sometime

when we are
freed from our syndromes

to dropp all those questions
and leave
them unattended for a while

like leaves from our twigs when we have chosen to be trees emptied of our barks

we shall see
skeletons of our selves

freed from the trappings of our flesh
from the support of our bones

for then we shall have no biases
of the longings of our minds

liberated from the shackles of what we strongly believe in

and i will tell you again that i have all the answers not of my invention anymore but those handed
to us

by the hands of the sun by the mouths of the rivers by the lips of the moon by the whispers of the stars o, let the winds be cold let the nights be lonely we need all these sometimes so that we may become what we must be really are.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Us Who Have The Sea

for us who have the sea
following every contour of our land for us who have the birds and the trees and the mountains for us who have the nights lighted by the moon
with the myriad stars

we are still bored on a perfect scene as this

RIC S. BASTASA
For W

light
so much light in my eyes
blinds
hurts and destroys what peace and quiet is there once upon my own short lifetime

love is light
we are eyes
we are always broken and we are always ready to mend

love
we are love
light we are light
light as burnt love
letter
those pictures that you finally burn last night the silence that watches it the coldness of our souls the promises we offer the disbelief that we counter yes, yes to all these what choice do we have anyway?

RIC S. BASTASA
For W...

I am wise for i pursue my dreams and fulfill them without having to leave you

i am lucky
and too inspired fulfilling my dreams
beside you

we are two incomplete
broken
chains closing in for a very intimate link

RIC S. BASTASA
For Wanting To Write....

perhaps, because of this i may end up with a head cut, or a body shredded like
cheese,
tired limbs like
burnt toast,

perhaps because of that i may not reach what destination is reserved by the lines of my palms,

perhaps i may not even end at
all,
because here you are reading these lines
and you will like them

not because they are as palatable as exotic friend frogs but because you have felt sorrow and have the smell of pain the sound of acidic rain over your hair
now melting and before you notice it you too have become bald because of having known much than what is permitted by all these lines

it is about us,
it is about our being part of this vast
nothingness

sands of the desert light of the moon spreading on sands of the desert nights hushing wind
taking all the possible directions For We Are The Trees Bearing So Much Fruits

For we are trees
That bear so many fruits
We are lucky
Our seeds fall of fertile grounds Our branches grafted
On healthy trunks
Our fruits are ripe Everyone gathers
We have no right to ask them Who they are
Their names do not matter Not even their character We cannot refuse giving Them all
Lest we perish
And die....

RIC S. BASTASA
For We Have Nothing To Hide, Nothing To Keep

to live
is to spit it out to let go
what is unnecessary
throw away
covering, clothes
go naked
into the hills...

RIC S. BASTASA
For What Is

'A man should look for what is, and not for what he thinks should be.'
Albert Einstein (1879 - 1955)

young man
this is reality
this is what is what do you think should it be?
when?
how and where?
young man
this is it
now dip your tongue
and tell me
how it tastes?
this reality
that lies within the reach of your arms
than your dreams
which are still in the hands of the stars

now, choose.

RIC S. BASTASA
For What Use Is Time

when the mouth has forgotten the shape of a smile on the lips when the tongue has forgotten the sweet taste of love when the body has buried the memories of desire on the graveyards of boring routines when everything in us is nothing but the rush the haste in meaningless daily buses and bustling streets for what use is time & space with us?

RIC S. BASTASA
For What Use?

for what use is the most expensive perfume when you use it with me for only once a year?

i love the cheaper one
daily.

RIC S. BASTASA
for whom do we write?
for us, we beg the world to know what we are in the realm and bounds of our words our sadness & madness our longing for love unrequited our desire to taste what passion is that which the bed cannot speak that which the blankets cannot fully give in to warmth and
lust.

for whom do we write?
we write for those passions those explosions of suppressed feelings long kept inside the steel boxes of our hearts we write for those lamentations of love rejected and those dreams that simply die even before they were born for those eggs that never became chickens.

forgive me, but i write because i have nothing else to do about my life forgive me for exposing the truths
about us, this existential angst lost in the labyrinths of the empty
shell.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Whom Will You Live?

no one survives this war alone
this war among us
between us
no one likes this war but just the same the war continues
between us and among us geniuses and morons alike
no one survives
if by chance alone you shall survive,
but whom do you tell
and for whom will
you live?
and for whom will you
die?

RIC S. BASTASA
For Woman....

you may love me
with all your heart
give all that you
can you undress before me and offer
the flowers of your youth
you bend your knees
kiss my feet
you stay with me
for the rest of my life
you cook the best menu for my hungry hours
you pour the best wine in my empty glass
you weep for me
when i fall

woman, am i a fool
to ask you why?

RIC S. BASTASA
For Yani

i see the seed inside you and day by day it grows into a tree both with flowers and fruits and soon the birds shall find your branches and shall make nests on your twigs and soon there will be eggs and fledglings and soon there will be children climbing your treetops
and laughing and playing under your shade there will be travelers taking rest on your roots placing their spines against your trunk only if you keep on writing for art's sake, for yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You

For a simple glance at you I may leave my world For your kind smile, I may give away my world completely For a night with you, the passion and the groan Tell me, what will I give in exchange?

RIC S. BASTASA
For You Love Me...

my forehead has dirt
there is shit on my cheek my arms are dusty and my hands are getting clumsy my feet are muddy and my lips are cracked i am tipsy and drunk and with someone else on some cheap bed
yet when i come back you make me still feel that sense of home
you kiss my forehead
touch my cheeks with your kind hands
and tell me
you miss me so much and as i am tipsy and drunk you offer me hot green tea you open the door of the house and let me step again inside the room of love full of affection
we embrace again
nothing about history
nothing about
what i must say because you always tell me that whatever happens you will always love me now, who wants to be away from you?

For You My Friend The Great Lover Of Truth when the doctor comes out from his room and tells you that you have cancer and at stage IV

would you rather think that this must be a lie?

or when you find out that your wife is having an affair with another man
and decides to leave you
alone
would you rather say that you prefer a lie?

or when your younger brother sailing on the seas is kidnapped by professional pirates in Somalia asking for a big amount for ransom and you have no money to use to help him would you still prefer this truth?

or when your father is hostaged by the rebels and will be the next to be beheaded and the government still does nothing would you rather think that this is but a big joke and not the truth?

think my friend, you were looking for the real toads in that imaginary garden these are these toads croaking now in the middle of the heavy rain

RIC S. BASTASA
For You My Friend....

i am feverish.
i would have gone into serious thoughts.
but how can i?
i do not want to open like the sky.
at noon the sun,
then perhaps death.

the sky may open as it can,
but there is nothing in there.
nothing much.

the honesty is killing all of us.
liberation is dangerous.
there will be sacrifices.
and it could be
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You My Woman...

a woman
is like a bird nesting its eggs

or a nightingale
which you hear
and still long
for

or she could be one of your
arms

or she could be your own gourmet
on one of those feasts

or she could be another devil's advocate

but whoever she is a woman
and my woman will always
be
my only woman to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You My...(Ambot)

this morning baby i take my walk it rained last night and the other nights before and so today baby
the grass is greener
the road is not dusty not also muddy
just perfect for this
'brand new' day in my life i made some promises
to myself
not to think about your face and your body
i haven't kissed you
i haven't made love to you just in my dream
all but just in my dream and this morning i take this walk
for you
wanting to forget
wanting to walk straight in the other mornings of my life i will make a promise again that so surely will be broken again baby you're such a dust that i can't take off my feet very weary, weary feet taking these walks senselessly hopelessly always always crazy about you.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You To Invite Me To Read You

i agree with what the other guy on the other side
of the world
once wrote, that for you to invite me into your mind to read
what you have
been thinking and writing all along is an insult to your capacity to attract people that if (by God's will) you die even your rotten ass
cannot even attract
a female fly.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You To Know

I am lonely here like a deserted room
In the city
My windows refuse the orange moon
The sad calls only
Of the sea
Keep penetrating

My writing table has not grown words Of beautiful shapes Stunted scribblings only By the wooden walls
And the lizards’ trails
On the hot ceiling Keep streaking

such weird acidity stinking sticking
the day rains detest this happening

i am waste liquid
splattered on cold floors fetid urine slowly drying throughout summer

RIC S. BASTASA
For You To Know Whether I Am Afraid To Love Or Not here is only one way to my heart and it is not grassy at all, above this path are blue clouds and the usual sun
follow the path
and be gentle in your steps at the other side you will find a door laced with
red roses
do not just stand there knock and be patient use the doorbell of understanding and wipe your feet on the mat of purity knock again, knock again here is no one in the house anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You To Learn Earnestly

Pick up all the flowers dear from the garden and put all of them in one glass vase

watch how the colors change from yellow to dull and then how they all fade to brown till they all wilt and then
die

three days at most this hot summer time, the petals fall and then another day and then another one they all crack in utter dryness and inside the vase see how the water foul and stinky begin to grow the wriggling mosquitoes as though asking for more....deaths of those fresh flowers that from the garden you all pick.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You To Love Me

you must know
how a man's weight is measured, his broad shoulders the burden of this abdomen and his thighs,
you must know how a suitcase weighs a muddy pair of boots your feet must know how to swear
how i
smell.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You To Trust Me

for you to trust me
i must listen and keep the promise about your love and your new lover
not to tell about the fire burning inside your hearts
and eyes
for you to trust me
i must not be the rain or the sun
i must not be the river to sing what you both have kept as a secret inside the chimney when the smoke rises to the skies
i shall only watch
and keep the pains that both of you too suffer

i have not told you that in love
goes the joy goes the pain and now you must take them all like water and sand
in your hand

RIC S. BASTASA
For You Who Claims To Be The Owner Of Myself

It is shallow
i know, it is only skin deep to be godly

i could have immersed myself in that deep river of blood where i could be shaken
totally and panic calling for help

but i like it here
sitting on the shallow part of this river thinking only about how drowning could be such a horrible experience

since (anyhow) the inevitable always comes anyway
and for the meantime let me have my own time relaxing myself

before you finally come on time as always.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You, My Dear, When You Are So Blank

white sheet. a paper. like you.
I want to write something just to fill this white sheet a little bit some words. i can utter them.
but i like writing them just to make this white sheet looking full. like

' i love you'.

the rest need not be written.
i know you know and you know that i know.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You, My Valentine...

because love
has betrayed me

does not mean that i shall betray you too because love has denied me its love does not mean that i must not give this love to you for i have known love and its pains and having known all these i have decided to be different to love and to love no matter what cost shall it take me.

RIC S. BASTASA
For You, Whoever You Are...

The Furies are here they have long black hair they have not become old as you tried to tell me

Their eyes are flaming like bonfires at night
Their hands are sharp as blades Their presences are dynamites

They have a record for being merciless Many tales are told of their vengeance
They ask no questions

They claim they are here for justice and They are looking for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Your Attention....

have a little time
to this page

it used to be a blank page an emptiness, a void, a stare it is calling for attention its silence like roots call for more depths it is not the normal page that you open and leave with your wet fingers and dry tongue

listen with your eyes let your ears see this is this poem that perhaps may not make you sleep....

RIC S. BASTASA
For Your Tito Rey

behind the two of you is the Statue of Liberty the man with the yellow shirt and short hair is acting for an explanation but you do not mind it you look at the camera and give the best smile that you can muster in these hard trying times
i enlarged the picture and focus on the smile and honestly i think
it is
fake

p.s. the tinted sunglasses is more of a metaphor for hiding the obvious truth in your eyes that life is not easy and every cent has an equivalent deprivation.

RIC S. BASTASA
For Z.

for you
to be a star
in the sky
do you have to accept that condition that you have to deny your roots
as sand?

RIC S. BASTASA
Forbearance

as i eat my breakfast and you start telling me about something that makes me boil (a new debt incurred or another lousy party for friends or your way of clumsily handling your private affairs
how can i be so interested in you?)

(honestly i want to scream for you to shut up, but i keep my cool head)

i continue eating and i pretend i like the food that much and then i chew my food longer this time
and tell you

'you look so beautiful today, my dear' (you witch! my crazy mind insists, but honestly, you have done more good than evil, and i weigh them all in the scale and i begin to have regrets, and i wipe my mouth with a tissue paper and)

' i love you honey', (without really looking at her in the eye)

the world out there is too wide for narrow differences. (i am human and i must be considerate)

' i love you too' (oh this crazy world! what is it really that is bogging her innocent mind?)

RIC S. BASTASA
Forbidden

something forbidden becomes so delicious in the mind the suspense of deprivation makes it more desirable everyday desire takes upon itself what is forbidden in the secret room

of the heart
guilt cries but soon the guilt by extreme need

of the flesh
erases itself like the list of unwanted friends

everyday what is forbidden is done until such point when what is forbidden becomes a routine until what is forbidden becomes the usual familiarity nothing about what is forbidden becomes interesting and then sin does not exist until the good becomes the forbidden in the silent room of your heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Forced Mystery

when we talk
we arrive at nothing
plain talk not aimed at understanding but to stir whirlpools
i finally decide to end the conversation
what for?
building bridges
on mountain tops
wasting stones
in the river
boats that leak
tops without nails planets without orbits chairs without legs houses without walls
roofs without beams
i know you know
you that i know we take leave without hope
of reaching ourselves
again

RIC S. BASTASA
Foremostly, I Am Still Beast...

i shall not restrain myself forever, flowers open to the sun somehow, buds turning into full orange petals red centers, glossy views of the coming days,
i am bound, i have long accepted that,
my hands have ropes as stems, but my heart is too a sharp knife that cuts across those hidden boundaries of my own being i am free, this morning, i tell myself beside you, i am, unbound and you look at the happy angle of my face, half-moon, half-sun, half-beast half-human,
at a certain hour of the day, i wish i have achieved a certain divinity of my thoughts, but soon, these all crumple, i am not that mostly, i am beast, i am undefined, but most of all,
i content with the mystery that you still love me. my fingers run wild over the belly of your body, the navel tells the story
of love and hate,
the mind closes some more there is no distraction anymore about the promises of certainties, for these are all unnecessary.
meanwhile, the emptiness rests on the floor like a dog, the desire to be beast is on top of the bed with you, another beast, on mutual tolerances.

RIC S. BASTASA
Foreseeing

the time has come for the wilting of the flowers the drought the drying up of our rivers the proliferation of dust the death of a friend the season for funerals as we pretend day by day that everything is still all right that poetry still works we have foreseen all these
i am prepared
like a fish hibernating inside a cracking mud
i have foreseen
too the coming of another beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
Forever

who wants forever?
who wants a road that leads to a straight line, without any crooked view on the sided? who wants to be left here in the now forever?
who wants all the leaves and the pebbles?
the sentence even
needs a period.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forever Ulipon

ang ilang katabang
dugay na kaayo nila

katabang pa kini nila sa ilang lola

all around, mogarden moluto, modaro pa gani

karon maoy iyang caregiver kay lagi wa

man siya maminyo unya wa sab siya's bisag anak na lang sa gawas, nga unta moatiman kaniya sa

iyang katigulangan.
unta di ko motoo anang forever. Apan naa pod diyay. Forever ulipon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forget Me Not

forget me
not

please do
not forget me

me not to forget

not me
forge t

o

not
for get

get to forge
forge
t

to me you must not forget

get me

get me for i, too do not remember

a face, a name,

i am old.
older than you think.

the pain. i never had this sense what joys did we share? the boulevard. long time ago. forge me.
forget me not. forget me.

i remember not you anymore.
post traumatic

disorder. pity. she finally gives up this bouncy baby boy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forget Yourself

do you see life? try seeing life in me, i still have it, i keep it in my palm it is warm and beating and soft and tender try it with new things, as others do, buying a new fashionable coat a glittering diamond ring for your loved one, try literature, read a novel, read and write a poem and yes, try too music, sing the songs of love strum the strings of that spanish guitar, you hit the keys of the piano, you fiddle with the violin, and strike the tight skins of the drums with your fists and fingers my friend this world is so rich, and simply throbbing with its countless treasures and pleasures there are still so many beautiful bodies and beautiful souls out there waiting for you (claire, do not think about promiscuity, that is far from it, just think nicely about other bodies and souls, relating to them and be with them in peace and harmony as friends, as fellows)

oh, they are so interesting, and at the end you shall be happy because by then you have already forgotten the person that saddens you

you

yes you,

you must forget yourself, that is the secret of happiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgetting A Lot Of Things....

i apologize
to myself
since i easily
forget
and leave those who have been patiently waiting for me like a passenger of a train
waiting for hours for me to be taken
in i forget the hour
i forget
that i am
a train
i forget altogether
time
and the passenger
and then i try to recall smoke passing by my hair smelling something hazy
like a perfume
that i think was there before
a woman naked
or was it
a horse
running in the fields of hay

foggy memory
sounds of rain on the month of May a friend writes an email
i Google
a name
figuring out
who's there but it is misty
smell of burnt
fish
on the fireplace
or was it
at the kitchen?

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgetting Someone Who Loves You

i agree, it is like forgetting to turn off the light at the rear door, the one who does not want to be made important, the one who has always been at the backdrop
of your life,

the whole night it was on and then the following morning you see it still lighting

but then you turn it off and there you remember how is it to be so faithful and yet forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgetting Something So Important

why am i here?
must i have forgotten
the reason why
am i
here? am i destined
for something greater than my mind?
or my heart?
have i forgotten that i have a soul?
a spirit engraved
within the
shiny metal of
my body,
a name, a brand,
a status

why am i here?
have i forgotten You
who have placed
me here?

have i forgotten
that love is always the reason for my being here in this misery shall love continue to be my guide and cure?

how can i ever forget
the floor of my existence
the love without a ceiling?

the house of love
that never falls
the beams that never break

the Host that knows
everything

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgetting The Consequences Of Our Ignoble Actions....

sometimes we forget about consequences

we advance with our own motives
that satisfaction that fire that seemingly is consuming every particle of our being

we become the firewood
the grass
the gasoline that must burn
itself

into nothingness

where is our gene
of Prometheus?

it must be missing for now we advance as armies hungry for a kill

and we kill anyone that we meet
after making a war and killing all the enemies

then we kill even friends as we are hungry for the killing

for the killing's sake we have forgotten us and the incoming consequences of our ignoble actions

what follows next is unimaginable

it is a planet of fire where words
do not exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
i invite you

to sit upon a hill

under the acacia tree

to view the moon

it is full tonight

rising from the shadows of

the mountains

i hold your hand

and your long hair

touches my shoulder

we sit tonight

silently admiring the moon rising from the shadows of the mountains

i gaze upon your eyes and we kiss under the cool shade of the acacia trees

after that night

i lay upon my bed inside my room still thinking about you and that kiss

i have forgotten about the full moon rising from the shadows of the mountains

i am the poet

who first scribbles the most beautiful poem about you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgetting The Rhyme

i must have forgotten the scent of thyme
in the same manner that i have spilled rhyme
i still proceed to this kind of things i miss how words are begun
how threads are spun.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgetting The Word

the hands are busy
and the mind busier
the heart is activated and blood corpuscles are like tourists
roaming around the great wall of china

on top of bed those pair of legs face the ceiling and the mouth cannot say any word
the tongue slips again
trying to figure out
the right word
for this

it is not about love...

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgetting You.....

the heavy rain cannot erase the footsteps in the mud the seasons cannot erase the fossilized steps in the heart that is made of stone

if only what we had were only found in the sands of the shore

i cold have easily forgotten
you.....

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

dili mapapas
sa kusog nga ulan ang tunob diha
sa lapok

dili maguba sa panahon
ang mga tunob
nga mitaplak sa
bato nga
kasingkasing

unta kon diha lang
sa balason nga
baybayon

nalimtan ko na unta
ang tanan kanato
sa dayon...

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive Forgetting, An Ode

on my hands
the ashes of my anger shall write your name
between the spaces
of our walls.
here the face of the anguish
is painted

compromising
with the drought
even against my will
all these
shall be erased
by the rain

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgetting......

the hands of time swindle us just this morning a tight bud loosens its collars
that morning upon a glimmer wink of a second, night folds unfolds like disco lights

you dance and you dropp your
body

you cling to uncertainties the hands of time drops you in the middle of nowhere and you ask where is this place?

you are right there

but this time your skin has only bones

your neighbor who once fished with you
in the river
cannot recognize you

you too forget what time is it what is this place who am i?

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgive And Please Forget

if you notice a repetition do not be irritated if you find a duplication with a little senseless change at the top
do not be mad
these are the usual symptoms of my sickness do not curse the words do not blame time
do not put too much burden on yourself do not feast on guilt because my dear surely with your beauty
and goodness
there is not such a malady of this likeness that you deserve try making your own wings and then
fly away
that will do you good and make those who still want to stay feel a little bit better

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgive Him

He wrote the most beautiful poem
The day she left him
The words are happy like jumping frogs of Canister, The sentence was short
As short as a grasp of her breath His sigh
Which has the sound of the running creek Pretending to be rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgive Me

forgive me
good neighbor
but your ripe lanzones
are too sweet and you have been away
for two weeks

they're so juicy and we are so hungry

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgive Me, But I Have To Be Real

I ride my horse not the other way around

i tame my dog
the dog does not tame me i cannot yet live in the clouds and so i still stay in my house.

RIC S. BASTASA
'Forgive Me, I Am Damned'

some things that we do and we get nothing in return some words that do not come back to us like a rain-shower some people that we love and who leave us without a note in bed some places that are meant to be only forgotten because we cannot have much and we say oh we are just human forgive us

some sins we commit and yet we do not really know and hence we do not accept. another poem which i have written a long ago, and i read it again it stares at me begging that i am its creator, but which i cannot really really remember. I am ashamed and humiliated, but the words come back to my mouth, slides to my heart, and then i remember, 'forgive me, i am damned'

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgive Me....

when you spoke to me that night about certain matters, which i did not really pay attention,
forgive me
but i was somewhere else into a far place where i want myself foremost to be a stranger
again

this place is exhausting and it is sipping all my energy as though she is a very thirsty woman and she is drinking all of me without ever thinking that i as a bowl also needs a certain
fullness

despite air
or another chunk of emptiness
forgive me
but i have gone into a stupor into a place where i can be silent
and yet
more vigilant as ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgive My Lead, But...

Forgive my Lead, but i am just a cloud rising
and then
by chance the strong
wind
may blow me
north when i merely want to stay
wanting to get rid of this rain

pregnant with vapor
i am feeling so heavy

i rise at first because i am as light as hydrogen
gas

but soon i will fall as storm
and acidic
rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgiving

how can a neighbor find it so hard to forgive a neighbor?

the self of course
is the nearest one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgiving Always Forgiving

when you offended me i did not bother for i understand you and always think that you tried always loving me as your brother i always think you meant no offense at all it is just that you are too disturbed by certain things that until now you have not really understood you grapple to hold on to something stable yet there is none you struggle to be yourself in peace and harmony with the rest yet there seems to be nothing to keep you in place and so when you shout at me and tell me that i am someone else a black cat a wolf in sheep's clothing the ill wind

the evil lurking in your darkness

i do not mind at all i know it is not that easy to be in that state i was there and i was lost and i was too confused not knowing what i am and where i am going and i perfectly understand what you are into and so when you offend me i enjoy the silence of my understanding you and the nature of the human being you and the whole of humanity you and

the universe

unmoved by evil
undestroyed by indifference and cruelty and inhumanity

i, stand still i am good, i am beautiful and i will always be on the side of the truth
RIC S. BASTASA
Forgiving Thoughts

i am seeing fettered fingers

vine stuck upon a huge rock

i am feeling the roughness of

rugged dry
river stone

there is a cliff someone wants to jump and smash

what is left of broken memories

i tell myself
frankly

it could be me but my brain is numb

and thoughts come explaining

things are more
beautiful

when they are too forgiven.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forgotten

early dawn
five of you arrive bringing
gifts

wrapped, closed
i did not open them

you left
and then the gifts are gone

i want to remember them again

but it is a waste of time opportunity knocks only once

i am getting older
and what i always remember is regret.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forlorn Dreamer

i have long dreamed that you press your body against mine you are the heaviness that i wanted all my life

i want you tell me how i close my eyes and how lost will i be when you make love to me

i do not wish you to be my blue sky i want you to be my river so i can hear your song and feel your water

you can rage in my banks strong as a storm i shall remain placid in this love i have long dreamed that i am broken into shreds of tiny infirmities

you are here like a pillow beside me but since you can never be true to me you are always, always far away like a dream that i have always long to dream

many years ago

RIC S. BASTASA
you sailed away from the certainties of your faith
you find the exit back door and leave no note whatever
only doubts that they can feast upon while you are away on a destination that only your heart so strange this time knows

you land upon twin islands twin hills with milk flowing from their tips but only for six years and then the trees grow into a forest and you find yourself
lost again in the woods the grass grow tall and you do not like it anymore on another island you find fog and hazy horizons and in all these you find a world that is too interesting to leave you stay here now you like this darkness and coldness your moon

your mistress
and in your sleep you talk about a certain madness those who know you and if they know you much if you only let them know and let them speak their minds like the river and the sea i guess, they will say the same thing that i will say your life is wasted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Forms That I Really Love Seeing

forms that i love seeing even for a long time:

black bird
on its perfect set of three wings
against the light of the sun

Buddha with three heads in deep meditation

Christ rising pushed up
to the heavens

heaven opening
like a mouth
all teeth like
candles
throat like a tunnel swallowing
emptiness....

RIC S. BASTASA
you are angry now for i have disappointed you you expect more from me to elate you
to certain heights beyond your
thinking

i am so sorry
i am still the son of this earth and shall always be on its belly

i shed off wings
i wear these arms again brown, and muddy
to the feel with roots as bones and creeks as intestines

my thoughts are air traveling anywhere
my imagination is the ocean moving into other
continents
into uncertainties

i disappoint you
you are different
you are sky and space
sun and
moon

i may look up to you but not forever
for i belong here
to the soil to dust to stones to layers of pressed history
destined to be forgotten fossilized....

RIC S. BASTASA
Foul Mouthed

forgive
his foul mouth

forgive the sixteen million
mouths
who put them there

forgive and keep
forgiving
there will be six more years
of foul mouthing

he is what he is
he was what he was
from here till
the end....

forgive, forgive
and forgive till all the mouths
shut up

and till then you will hate his
silence....

RIC S. BASTASA
Four

Hey amigas
Viva la vida Fiesta la vida
Cantandos amigos
Viva la vida

Dance, dance
Sway your hands
Touch the ceiling
Touch the skies

Fiesta fiesta de la vida

Swirl, sway,
Raise our arms to the Ceiling to the skies

Feel God
In the feast of your Body swaying....

Meanwhile
Delete the email
Of the British National Lottery
Telling you that you win
One million pounds!

Ouch!

I am exercising. I am hypertensive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Four Innocent Waggling Tails Of The Dogs

these are four innocent
dogs
who never know about the conflict
of the house

the maids feed them with the bones
of cows
that they love
to grind their teeth
with all day

when we leave they stay by the door and bark as though saying we must come back
we will miss you so much but no one will.

RIC S. BASTASA
Four Poetic Points For The Neighborhood To Ponder

i

it is that particular moment when your tongue tastes the skin of the wind and it shall tell you too about its long and unfinished journey

it is this intimacy with the hands of the wind the talk that both of you do more often under the moon

ii

it is when you sit on the floor your back rests on the wall it is this intimacy of self-talking upon itself when the wall begins to respond when the floor finally makes its comments

iii

the neighborhood begins to doubt you but you have no doubt about yourself or the floor's sincerity or the door's indulgence or the intimacy with the wind and the wall which offers you a buffer between emptiness and chaos eventually everything has come smooth and natural well folded like the waves well covered like the mist on the tree tops

iv

what you have to serve to all these inquisitors is an empty glass upon an imaginary tray which they still have to figure out why you are serving them the perfect drops of silence for all their thirsts.
Fourteen

While in china at night on the great wall
By a hill, there he writes about the moon His shadow his flute and his Cup of rice wine, Then he sings for a while And sleeps under a sky of stars On a blanket of soft grass,

When he immigrated
To the American city
He writes differently now About the moon
As the companionless
wanderer

The head of a murdered man Rolling on the floor Uncontained by a sack
A moon

Or some kind of a fluorescent Truant
A silver circular corpse Infected with AIDS,
That corpuscle confusing
And ovulating

Him, spoon feeding
Her with so much longing Date-rape drug, where she howls like A bitch

To the moon in that great American City

I just like it here,
The moon is still my Moon child
my fair lady of the night In all shining glory Above the mango tree,

In this little country..

RIC S. BASTASA
Fractions

Do not let your hearts be troubled

that is the final instruction of the master of this universe
who left us to visit his house
to spend time with his father

if we follow this
then
we can walk on the lake feed the multitudes sleep beside the master glowing like a burning bush

RIC S. BASTASA
Fractures

time has a healthy bone on the thigh of history there are moments of fractures which cannot be healed by joy some shadows roam the dark corners of this world unable to grasp what is happening there are hints but not enough to shift the mind

to the other chasm

the emptiness here cannot be understood by the age of limestone the fullness there cannot be anticipated by hallways
more milestones and temporary triumphs triumvir
Oh holy Father!

RIC S. BASTASA
Fragile

you are so fragile
as a blue bird's egg inside my hands my sigh is a pressure the slightest of which the shell cracks

it doesn't matter nature chooses those which are fit to survive

perhaps
an ostrich 's egg will do to show me what life is the hardness of this.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fragility

a petal door
Marooned
A tendril knob
For fear that i May leave an imprint
Of unforgettable Destruction
I decide not to touch
Any surface
Upon my departure
I have gloved hands and My body is a closed Luggage

RIC S. BASTASA
Fragility, Floating In The Firm Hold Of The Firmament.

today, i am
bombarded by a set of
lies,

i can hate this world,
i am not still attuned
to its tricks,

in the same manner,
on the right side of this frame, there is a window carved out by light,
and it is here where

however, some truths shine penetrate the thick walls of deceit, and i still find a reason for living and loving this world as it

is,

for i have two choices now which to embrace and which
to despise,

i am the scale.
I weigh, and i go where the leaning of truth and justice shall go,

my will tips it further
towards
the gaping hope of humanity.

still truth prevails.
and my pillow is soft and warm, as i sleep my life
tonight
fragility, floating in the firm hold of the firmament.

RIC S. BASTASA
Perfection
Where is this perfection?
In our fingers
That do not have the same sizes?
In our feet that stumble?
In our eyes that do not see too well?
In our skin that sheds off from time to time?
In our broken selves?
In our shattered days, our past haunting Our future dwindling like Stones powdered by Time’s hammering
Hours

Perfection
You feel it sometimes
It is there
It is not yet here
It waits for us
And we are not rushing still We are frozen
Like trees in winter
Come summer
We shall wilt like twigs And leaves

Perfection remains
A quest
For the waters
To quench our thirsts
And it is not yet here
Our wells are dry
The rivers too muddy
The sea too salty
The spring polluted

Where then?
Wait, just wait,
He has the answer.
I hear your voice
And I quiver
I love the sound
Of your footsteps
I know every Note of your whisper
I love your silence
I care for your noise
I look for your shadows
I smell your dress
I go into your world
In your sleep
I join you in your dreams
When you wake up
I am no longer there
I do not wish
To spoil your lovely day
With him.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fragment 4

To have you
To cherish you
To die for you
Till I am gone
Till I am nothing
But a kind
Of persistent memory
That you
Wand to discard
I am in love with you
And that is all
That I can give for now

RIC S. BASTASA
Call it foolishness
But there is wisdom to my Self-inflicted pain and Loneliness
There is this emptiness
That speaks more Than the happiness
Multiplied by time’s Precautions
When I am in love
I throw everything away
That blocks my way
To kiss and hug you
To have you
Even if it means
My own dissolution

RIC S. BASTASA
Fragment 6

Down to the last drop
I will take every part of you That leaks
I’ll have the sweetness
And the salt
Every dropp of your being
To my system
That runs on the fuel of your Love

RIC S. BASTASA
I take the usual walk
This morning
And think upon
A thought
What if I die
What shall I do
On the last hour Shall I come back
For another Round of Reincarnation
To become a child again Chasing the wind
To become a man again
Picking some flowers
Of lust and desire Shall I become an old man again Filled with wisdom

I said no
It is not worth it
I have faith
In the most beautiful world out there Where I shall not burn Where I shall not think anymore Where I shall be Wisdom and love forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Fragment 8

To you God
I raise my hands in prayer
My work
My ambition
My silence
I raise my hands in prayer
To you God
I bow myself
Like a monk prostrate on the cold floors Asking for wisdom
Asking for guidance
Asking for mercy
I raise my soul in prayer I leave my body stripped of desire I leave everything to you
To you God
Take charge of my life
I am hopeless
I am loveless
I am empty
I am blown away
I am light
I am consumed
I am a well without water
I am nothing
To you God
I give up everything
I am yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
What a way to love
Long distance
Just words on the phone And some promises
What a way to commit
A self
That I can only think
And figure in a dream Nothing to hold Nothing to touch
What a way to love
And brag
What a way to say
In truth
There is nothing between Us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fragments

the fragments
of glass
lay on the floor

some parts of us are hidden

red wine stains
and petals
of a yellow daffodil

a window
opening to the blue
sky

night as dark as my black
underwear

some stars
begin to glow

from your eyes
as i wait

asking for
some answers

i go outside
looking for you

this is the hub
of the city

i am silent walking alone
along its crowded streets Fragments (2)

I see fragments
Of memories
Scattered in the floor
Of our past
I am bound
And my hands are dying
I am muted
By bitterness and pain
I am a broken bone
My heart is maimed
My mind is floating Like clouds drifting
I see fragments
I see leaves
Blown by the wind
I can do nothing
I see dusts
The wind has come
And everything
Is blown away
I see emptiness
I hear nothing
I am here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Framing The Sun

with your hands
you frame the sun
you stare at it
you know what happens next

too much light
too small a grasp too much sun
too small a mind

do you remember
how the balloon
burst? i shiver
to the sound of
your explosion

there are shatters
of memories
left on the ground
but not calling for help

RIC S. BASTASA
Frammento

A fragment is something incomplete Something broken-off, severed, Detached, segregated,

A fragment of a conversation, Extant fragments of an ancient Document written on stone, A fragment of my poetry,

How

do

i

say

it?

..............................
Some fragments of myself Missing some fragments of Myself hidden, and you will Not find them, too many fragments like lice in a native woman's hair spreading on her head

I place them where You cannot find them because You presume too much
To know me to love me,

Along this line, so many parts are detached, perhaps my navel my mole, my thumb

my right ear, my left eye So many parts severed, perhaps My head from my heart my mind from my soul

my past from my future

Some extant fragments of My past self, written on some Stones still unturned, yes

I have pretended so much And you cannot detect Which is true from false

i have become so many parts of myself, now in the last hours fragmented

wanting to be whole again..

RIC S. BASTASA
France: Three Days

The landscape has rolling hills WE traveled by car courtesy of cousin Ben,
to Metz, Strasbourg, Nancy and Dijon.

we stopped for wines: the magnificent pinot noirs and chardonnays
exquisitewise
the famous 'Yellow wine' from the Jura mountain vineyard

got a postcard for you, old ways do not die another pic
for FB coming.

RIC S. BASTASA
Frances 10

He who dies with the most beautiful poem

is, nonetheless,

still dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Frances 2

all i need is a single candle to light my way in this dark alley
where at the end of this crooked black-outed cajolery you said you would be there waiting for me

RIC S. BASTASA
Frances 3

you are born condemned

those you love will love someone else those who love you

make you vomit

RIC S. BASTASA
Frances 4

one day i ask her about her life what she's going to do now that she had fallen from grace into poverty and all alone her loved ones died in one sweeping car accident on a freeway
she is silent for a while thinking perhaps that asking her in the midst of her grief would be to unkind from someone but reconsiders the question as i am one whom she considers a friend through and through she opens her mouth and says
'i stopped analyzing, i stopped questioning' and to all these and those and those yet to come she says yes, yes, yes, yes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Frances 5

perhaps

one who loves assumes another shape of the reborn another face in another body assuming a new name

i love you

arms warmer eyes making more glow on top of her new found world she becomes the sun coming out again after a long, long rain driving dark clouds away for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Frances 6

at the end of the day what thoughts shall i keep what thoughts shall i discard what to forget what to remember at the end of the day when we see each other again dine together on this carved dining table and steady mahogany chairs sleep together in bed on thick blankets and soft pillows then you lower the mosquito nets we are both feeling buried

RIC S. BASTASA
Frances 7

Fluttering
Moving lightly swiftly flying darting skimming Like a yellow butterfly flitting passing flitting From flower to flower from tree to tree From cloud to cloud passing quickly

To depart then die this yellow butterfly I have never heard it sing I have never heard it cry

Flitting fluttering lightly fluttering this lonely happy yellow butterfly!

RIC S. BASTASA
Frances 8

clumsy lover

hold me not on my face

i can kiss you without your hands hold me on my butt

so i will know where to rebut.

RIC S. BASTASA
Frances 9

Write about love
The greatness the loveliness the thirst the anticipation
Of love
The night of waiting for love the dawn consumed to writing About love the joy the ecstasy of the lines in between You, my poet so well engrossed

Here I am pretending sleep; it is you that I miss, Dreaming that I am waiting about your kiss

RIC S. BASTASA
Frederic.....

i admire
frederic

the way you
admire him

he stutters
he most often repeats
the same words
over and over again

but i admire Frederic because you admire him

you say he is poetry and i agree with
you

i must like Frederic

for i am inside
frederic
and you admire frederic
and so i must admire you

fred.

RIC S. BASTASA
Free And Freedom....

she did it for free
in the name of poetry

did she do it for her
to be remembered
in the annals of history?

no she didn't
she did it for free
all in the name of poetry it's like sunshine and wind and waves

it's like stars at night
and the moon
it's like butterflies and bees and flowers

she says they're all beautiful to see and all

for free. She does it now and she will do it still the past, and the future and the present

not for a fee, not for fame or
glory

they're all free.

RIC S. BASTASA
Free And Yet So Painful

U hav seen what we hav not seen, felt what we havnt, it is beautiful and logical, and now it is facing me and speaking, it mirrors what i too want to see, what i feel, which always remains that uncracked enigma among us, how what in childhood we loved and died, how God spoke and ceased, and how then we have embraced the irrational, more beautiful, free and yet so painful, all over again

RIC S. BASTASA
Free Shopping

Bed and bath
and beyond gifts Utopia Jobs needed
for immediate hiring U.S. stimulus package a Facebook survey unemployment bonus
a letter of collection an email from a friend asking if I have money to lend

all these spams
i have just deleted

i am getting a slice of my day
for a morning walk
with you

this world
is a deception.

RIC S. BASTASA
Freed...

freed from having to eat only twice a day,
from having to walk for a day just to learn to read in school from fetching water five mountains away from washing my body in that river where stones are slimy where accidents are not seldom from ignorance and hunger and thirst and indifference
from a room with triple deck beds from a rotten dormitory from teachers with narrow minds from religious intolerance from a belief that only we can be saved when this world ends freed from a belief that there is an ending to life that there is only death that makes this life a meaningful stay freed from the tradition of strong family ties that minds every detail of how life must be lived how funerals are conducted what colors of candles what light is necessary freed from Spanish rule from English domination from from brothers of superior minds who think that only they know where we must go and stay

freed at last from myself who thinks that there is no more possibility for growth
freed from an insecure living freed from all those prisons that still lurk inside my mind freed at last from freedom itself

freed from fire and cold from paradoxes and ironies freed at last from cliches and constantly invoked metaphors freed at last from the clutches of words into the limitless thoughts into sunless seas into moonless nights
into inconceivable eternities freed at last from the nucleus of my atom into the mysteries of more explosions mushrooming into space beyond the bars of my imagination

RIC S. BASTASA
Freedom Fighters

For a few
fleeing is freedom

and so who are left leaning on those Lenin-grads

frankly, fleets of freedom fighters

Fleur-de-lises

ccaught in cans of cream De la creme

trimmed terrorists
as they are now named and charged

in the U.S.

RIC S. BASTASA
Freedom From...

the nest no matter how warm
cannot keep the birds
forever

there is always a day ripe for flying away

the fish too cannot live
forever
in the mouth of its mother there is a time in the sea for swimming away
and finding one's new destiny

mother's arms that cradles
you
gives way to your new found freedom too no nest, no corals, no arms holds a bird, a fish, a boy

forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Freedom In A Metaphor Bird

the little bird
driven by hunger
comes near the place where you are seating
because you
spread some grains
of rice
on the ground just below the tree

without looking at you it pecks upon a few
nibbling
and then in a few seconds flies away

swims through the air and leaves you
once again
feeling so fettered....

RIC S. BASTASA
Freedom Metaphor (Corrected)

the little bird
driven by hunger
comes near the place
where you are seated
because you
spread some grains
of rice
on the grass just below the tree

without looking at you
it pecks upon a few
seeds
and then in a few seconds
flies away
from you

RIC S. BASTASA
Freedom To Move In Opposite Directions

we need space
we are the free souls every wall is a choking hand we find it hard to breathe we have been these two parallel lines we converge and make outbursts of joys we soon get tired joys are boring too
we know it
we need space
we go in opposite directions now trying to see what is there in the world where we both do not live i do not think of coming back i think you think the same way we are happier now moving to another journey we are not hurt
neither do we fear
the strangeness of freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
Freedom....

when i am no longer thinking about what you think about what i think when i am on my own way when our roads cross and there is no light when at the junction the die is cast and we take the risks without worrying about what happens next because we know what shall be taken and what shall be given when the silence becomes understandable when talk is noise when i defend you from the outrages of the other even if you do not ask for it when i finally go and find my own way confident about what i want in my own life when the heart opens and when the mind closes upon the needs of the self
when the fingers open
to the skies
when i close my mouth stop gritting my teeth when i finally let go what you left and when i do not notice anymore how time moves
i guess
not anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
so you have proclaimed freedom you have said it all: no food, no shelter, no clothing, no nothing except freedom
just the feel of being free and being freed from everything naked, and homeless, and hungry, and then so

unfree.....

freedom, what is freedom, there is more to be learned there is more to be done there is more to be responsible about it this freedom from need, from want, from being so ignorant and shackled with that limitless desire to be free from feelings without the mind?

RIC S. BASTASA
Freely In The Water Flowing

to just keep on writing is like to just keep on moving on and living and enjoying life to the utmost with whatever is there i no longer want to know what i can write the love of it, or the taking of it for granted is just to keep on writing even for no reason at all, no direction, no rules, no preaching, nothing even philosophical, just this loafing, this floating, this sailing on a boat on the water under the skies beneath me a clear water with red and blue and green corals fish swimming, eels, and urchins and dolphins and then i have to finally decide to leave this boat for a while and take my plunge into the depths to see what beauty lies there and i do not stop writing inside my mind, for thoughts are letters, and imagination is another world where the mind as pen still keeps on scribbling.

i like the salt
that clings to my tongue.

and i remember: i am the salt of this earth.

freely in the water flowing.

RIC S. BASTASA
French Kiss Me....

je veux danser seulement avec vous

chante pour moi

RIC S. BASTASA
Freud And Marriage

discovering the unconscious he speaks with authority
mr. sigmund freud
has always told us that the real problem of broken marriages is always the bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Friday Blues....

you work
like a worm.

a week spent
for an inch.

my heart bleeds
i am angry.

come Saturday
you are fired.

RIC S. BASTASA
Friday The 13th

such is the holy hour

music so sacred gushes on the windows and the doors

eye are all open throughout the day

and till tonight
to welcome the moon and
the stars

sleep so well as i think of you

the greatness of God his Magnificence

the black blanket of the
night
shall comfort you

it will be warm
it will be so lovely

all your fears gone in the darkest hour

our hidden eyes can still see so well

RIC S. BASTASA
Friend Forever

they come from the same place of origin and they will be flying on the same place of destination they may not have arrived at the same time but they will be leaving soon at the same time they are birds of the same feather and they will be singing the same kind of songs the songs of freedom freedom from the same cages of their past they have the same themes the final freedom of all these...

RIC S. BASTASA
Friends

my brown dog
under my legs

a blue bird
a hand away

a water fountain
a blue bird drinking

my hand on the brown dog my legs and hands reaching my mouth drinking water the water fountain

doing some other things besides hearing the world the people in front of you they are not your friends there is this bar

that is that bench

words keep talking ears shut

got to play with words multi-tasking and evasive believe me not i do what is to be done now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Friends

in school we're one sweet bunch we were soon, by time's demands, splintered
like flying seeds from a dead tree

we've lost each hold upon
each other
but soon we converge
upon a
reunion

time changes everyone when we meet we noticed some strangers among us
on same names but different visions let's us partake this food and perhaps quickly and then we part and go our own ways

as i tell myself
there will be no other
time

did not Merly tell you that you have changed a lot that she was afraid to check if it was really you?

Me too. Thanks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Friends Do Not Die

my friends do not die they may go
and not come back
as in they're gone for good seeking greener pastures
as reason
in other continents with no news from them but they are still in my heart and i always remember them as they also remember me in their hearts

memories of friendship live forever
specially those childhood ones once when the rivers were clear and clean when laughter was not shaded with fear

RIC S. BASTASA
Friends On Their Reunion

three friends meet der the shade of an acacia tree one hot summer they tell stories without the required plots they are heroes there on their never ending
wars.

RIC S. BASTASA
we had a simple gathering of friends and relatives in the beach today where food and drinks are served where talks are free flowing taking us anywhere bringing us to any place that we imagine still exists or even if they don't we dreamed to be,

they say they've been to america
and they miss this kind of
gathering,

no timetable, no rushing, no limits, no bars,
we all know what this is,

realizing that depression costs us much psychiatric sessions are going trendy
most people commit suicide and we wonder what is happening
why

we have this antidote to suffering
this cure for loneliness we talk without sense we laugh for no reason at all we recall the past which you think is unnecessary we use our bare hands while eating we drink water from the spring we walk instead of ride we empty instead of filling we lose rather than win we give rather than receive we are going home to regain this faith to family and friends and relatives well knit, supportive and strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
Friends?

i am extending my hand
like a door knob of my door you are here just in front of me where i am seated

with a rose in my mouth please open the door and please take my red rose with your lips

do not speak any word
let me feast upon your face your body, your soul it has been a long time and my world stopped turning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Friendship

she looks for you in your garden not for any other reason like the day before when she wants to see you with her new hair today is completely different she says she simply misses you that there is an emptiness that only you can fill half the joys half the sorrows and then both of them lay on the grass and speak about a very fine day

RIC S. BASTASA
Friendship Has Nothing To Do With Survival...

depth down the river
the fish are coy and friendly
that you can even touch them
and the way they wag their fins
is uplifting to
the heart

then he shoots them
one by one
with his fish arrow

(friendship has nothing to do with survival: a friend for food is good)

RIC S. BASTASA
Friendship With A Stone

the stone is dry
the sun ripped off what moisture life
it has today,

i take a glass of water and wet it

the stone begins
to wake up and breathe

i take its breathe
inside my lungs
i watch it become alive in my thoughts
we begin
talking about
a previous life

story to story
until it is dark

the stone and i
and the moon
above us

we are one family now one misery less

RIC S. BASTASA
Frienship

outside
the morning is very cold as i open the doors
our dog is there
lying on the rug

the way he waggles
his tail
convinces me
that he may now enter the kitchen
of the house

he gets his favorite
bone

RIC S. BASTASA
you surely forget the door where you entered to be here with us we too have forgotten we were born to forget such entrance or if we remember the door is gone, and the entrance is just another dusty door, old and fragile, crumbling to our touch even to our breaths,

we move forward, after this short talk, finished with all these conventions, tired with the rules, those that we know too well which we have evaded, and we laugh, we drink, we dance, and we stop and sit around a circle at the center of fire.

someone says the door is in the sky, and we need some wings to fly. but i believe what the old are teaching.
the door is here, i point to my heart.
it opens only, when we finally die.

meanwhile, the fire stops. the air gets too much colder. we bury ourselves under those leaves. Beneath the sky we dream of a door, ourselves, thin and tall, entering there, frightened.

RIC S. BASTASA
Frigid After The Test...

the water is tested
ripples are gone crystal clear
to the sky
it does neither frown nor smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fro Someone Like You

always remember
that if there is darkness there is always a candle waiting to be lighted

that if there is emptiness there is always a space waiting to be filled

that in loneliness
there is always a beloved waiting for your word

each is ready for your initiation

remind the rest
that something comes and yearns
and by its own volition springs satisfaction

fill the void
cheer the beloved

RIC S. BASTASA
From A 9-Year Old Child To His Mama...

I was the one who uprooted your blooming red African daisies that morning when you walked to attend the funeral of Uncle Aldong

when you arrived that afternoon from the silent city all the African daisies have already wilted

RIC S. BASTASA
From A Diving Board

you climb this certain height towards the place where the diving board is situated

you look down
and the pool looks like a square the people watching you somehow looking like ants looking at you and then you stand still look to the sky

and take a deep breath

you make the last pose and then jump overboard there is that feeling of falling as you stretch your legs and hold your hips with your hands you tumble down in the circles that you are making and then you stretch your arms and hands like you are a long pole and touch the still water at last you make the splash and tell yourself in such a short event this must be death

you plunge down
not touching the depth of the floor you rise up again and touch and rub your eyes you see them and now you realize this must be life you tell yourself again

RIC S. BASTASA
From A Religious Point Of View....

the woman was carrying her one-year old boy when the gunman chased her and caught up with her and pumped bullets in her head death was instant & the boy fell to the ground and a loud cry in the village was heard the man was killed first in the backyard after he opened the door of the house at dawn after the women in the village had prayed their rosaries no one however said that the dastardly act was unjust it was said that last year the man killed his wife mercilessly to live with the woman who carried her one-year old boy which he sired out of an adulterous relationship it was rumored in the village that as always 'crime does not pay' and that 'whatever you owed, you must repay' the people are silent and believe that justice is served out of court and without so much waste of time and money.

RIC S. BASTASA
From A To Z.....

i am telling you now there were lots of un-revealed passions from a
to z

from a to z all these loves unrequited

i am telling you
i survived them
all

learned a lot of these mechanics
from
a
to z

that which did not kill me
to repeat
have made me
stronger

smarter, sharpened my wit
multiplied my humor

and thanks to all for now i am like you all

normal in all aspects adaptable
to all changes flexible like our childhood rubber bands
rolling like marble
and

stretched well
like mother's yarn
and

never snapped.

RIC S. BASTASA
From Afar...

iT is only from afar that we sometimes see what is real...

it is the function of distance that makes us see all the details something ironic putting our tongues in aghast

but only for a while
as they say

the skies become rolled up sleeves and the stars fall like leaves from the fig trees from afar....

RIC S. BASTASA
From All These Shattered Pieces It Is Here Where I Glitter...

if i were broken
let me say thank you

i like the broken pieces the shatters of my glass self scattered on the floor

i like the sound of shattering

they have become music
to my ears

if i break i understand
the reason

from all these cracks the morning light enters from all these shattered pieces it is here where i best glitter.....

RIC S. BASTASA
From Among The Sands

from among the sands of the shore and you must accept there are trillions and trillions of them there you have the guts to tell all of them that you are not like them that you are this diamond admired by emerald and sapphire and that gold is inferior the mighty sun shines everyday above the trillions of your kind & it is not bothered at all it does not know you & finds nothing significant about your claim for self-claim for glamor & glitter need i tell you Mr. grain of sand that a grain of sand is and will always be a good-for-nothing grain of sand?

RIC S. BASTASA
From Among The Sands On The Shore I Am But A Singe Grain from among the sands on the shore i am but a single grain of sand insignificant indistinguishable

in fact just like the rest i may just be
nothing

but if you really love me babes, as i have loved you i will stand out from the rest of those billion grains i am not a single grain anymore i shall become your sun your universe

RIC S. BASTASA
From An Audience Watching The Best Ballet Dancer

' perfect! excellent!
Dido the best ballet dancer in this country was once a man, converted into a woman by science and adopted by us as part of the feminine universe.

and it does not matter if he/she is a pervert. she/he is an artist. and she/he is loved by this government this world this universe this sexless universe perverted and yet so beautifully crafted. it dances and relieves us from our inherited woes.'

bravo! encore!

RIC S. BASTASA
And does the heart grow old? You know In the indiscriminate green Of summer or in earliest snow A landscape is another scene,

Inchoate and anonymous,
And every rock and bush and drift As our affections alter us Will alter with the season's shift.

So love by love we come at last,
As through the exclusions of a rhyme,
Or the exaction of a past,
To the simplicity of time,

The antiquity of grace, where yet We live in terror and delight With love as quiet as regret And love like anger in the night.

RIC S. BASTASA
From C.A.

dreamingbirds fall from this tree where flower seasons pass sweetlip & petalwing now slain upon the grass frost & glass
frost & broken glass
barefoot on the splinters of your heart of frost & glass
loveblind & rippingyarns a-slither on the vine Snowking, with your thorny eyes my happiness conspires
frost & glass
frost & broken glass
barefoot on the splinters of your heart
of frost & glass

RIC S. BASTASA
From Doveglion For A.K.

First, a poem must be magical, Then musical as a sea-gull.
It must be a brightness moving And hold secret a bird’s flowering.
It must be slender as a bell,
And it must hold fire as well.
It must have the wisdom of bows
And it must kneel like a rose.
It must be able to hear
The luminance of dove and deer.
It must be able to hide
What it seeks, like a bride.
And over all I would like to hover God, smiling from the poem’s cover.

RIC S. BASTASA
From Doveglion, The Use Of A Comma

Purity... before, I, Stepped, to, the, Door, and,
      At, the, Door—
And, as, I, passed,
   Out, the, Door...

Line, orbit, locus:
   Peril, deed, and, map, of,
      Blaze! Peril,
Of, immediate,
   Hunter: daze,

Whirl, of, supreme,
   Migrator: pull, of, his,
      Gravite, anchor!
Fact, act, of, me,
   To, me: Knitter:

Cleaver, of, me, Intac

RIC S. BASTASA
From Fairy Tales

from those fairy tales time makes us strong and mature
and patient and so understanding about
what is happening
about the whys and
grasps for meaning, and soon we graduate from
the
once upon a time
we move forward
to what we know and yet we cannot say with bluntness
because we cannot yet fully accept the consequences of
the pinch of realities,
now
welcome parables
mysteries
and deep silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
From His Diary......

i've been hiding
from the womb of
my mother,
then to her arms,
i've been hiding
at the library in school
at the dormitory in the university,
even in the chapel
for that daily morning mass, i've been hiding in those island
escapades, in the bushes in the caves in the sands of
hidden beaches, i've been hiding in the privacy of marriage,
i've been hiding away
from everything and
from everyone,
and in the last stance
i've hidden myself in the hospital room without a number,
and in the funeral
home,
in the tomb,
in the cemetery
for all
human people.

RIC S. BASTASA
from my glass window at the second floor overlooking the sea i see big waves arriving on the sandy shore murky sea waters striking each rock like teeth gnashing and tongues lashing the strong winds from the Pacific Ocean have arrived at the earlier time Cold and strong and threatening the trees sway, the leaves fall, the children are kept at bay inside their houses by their mothers there is going to be a big typhoon tonight as predicted i close the window and remember many sad things in my life. i tell myself, i assure my senses, i am safe now, i am strong now.

RIC S. BASTASA
From My Window I See The Jackfruit Tree in this tropical place from my window

i see a jack fruit tree in abundance
showing its fruits
all around its
body.

RIC S. BASTASA
From My Window To The Road Below

a brown boy beside his pregnant mother hand gripping

a bus stops
it is going to the mountain loaded with boxes and bags
and a crowd of people

the boy sees his father carrying a net bag of fish

he gets away from mother and runs across the road where father
is waiting

an over speeding motorcycle is
coming

screeching sound
and screams
and then

silence, i, close my eyes and walk away

RIC S. BASTASA
From Our Heads Like Gods We Give Birth To Others

they view us as the impotents, those with only words to give to the world we, phenomenal spectators artists, onlookers, sensitive eyes, unblinking, blood rushing to eyeballs, noting every thread of reality in the fabric of this world unfolding

we notice colors that they cannot see we smell more than dogs we see more than what eagles stare we can be silent, and so enduring surviving what they accuse us of crimes that we cannot commit we are patient and we endure what pain is there, reserved for us like empty plates on poisoned food and yet we still eat them caring less, on our emaciated bodies too willing to offer and if need be, die our earlier deaths leaving them guilty in the process we give no births in maternity beds we do not really populate like they do but look on our heads

we give births to other like us in pain in joy in awakenings and then we have become so many ultimately winning this game of posterity, this final battle of survival in wit in freedom we have won this war our swords are more sensitive to make a kill and we devour what they vomit From Pain........

after the rain
you stay by the window

you look beyond this frame of mind

you listen to the
drops of rain from the roof down to the ground

last drops paving the way to solitude as your eyes begin to blink for that feeling that soon someone you love soon shall cry for a reason

a pinch of salt another smell of pepper a cup of coffee and a sandwich of ham and lettuce you will remember a bit but you have taken all the courage to finally forget

one moves on in peace after a thorough reflection a self reconstructs a future is shaped again
from pain....

RIC S. BASTASA
From Pluto With Love

hello earthling
this is Plutonian
i send you the signals of love the waves of understanding the ripples of compassion

hello earhtling
this is Plutonian
love is not far only if we take the initiative to reach out there is no distance in the hands of compassion

RIC S. BASTASA
From Red To Blue

it becomes all too familiar

it numbs you waking up early morning

beside someone with nothing between you

there is this acceptance
of life

both of you have no other vision but an endpoint of a titration: everything in there has turned blue.

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Ashes Of Your Phoenix

AS i wait for you
i have become an insomniac for so many trivial justifications

for instance
writing so many poems that alienate myself from the world

i have been keeping hope against hope that someday the dead shall rise from their graves that love shall have a rebirth from the ashes of your phoenix

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Autobiography Of A Famous Man

i am now fully rested fill my coffin with money and jewelry park my brand new car at the cemetery inset my credit cards and shares of stocks carve my good name in my tombstone place my societal status and title i need all these things in heaven

RIC S. BASTASA
i was born in a cradle made of gold
my father was the king of Tut he married the princess of Tat and the bore eleven children all named Tat 1, Tat 2, Tat 3, Tat 4 for the girls and Tut 5, Tut 6, and so on and so forth for the boys, I was named Tut 8 King Tut thinks that I am a lucky child being the 8th
everything in me goes up but Queen Tat believes otherwise like Tat 2 my name as Tat 8 sounds like a bad toothache.
This is the story of my birth.

(Proceed to the next Chapter for the Story of my Childhood)

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Bathtub To The Ocean

start with the bathtub, scrub yourself with soap and some perfume smooth white skin and flawless body cleaned with soft water safe on the privacy of your comfort room

there is no challenge there there is just this stagnancy that kills
and numbs the mind
life is more than that life always wants an exploration
of the unknown

and so you begin to think of the shore
of the sea
and its waves and its rolling nature its challenge for you to swim or take the sail towards the ocean
beyond the comforts of your domestic mind you look forward to the vast expanse of the Atlantic or the Pacific you anticipate the storms the cyclones

of your life
the way other people's ships sink how other people drown and how they tell you they survive

and then they start telling you the real meaning of life you must go
and find the meaning of your life yourself definitely not in that silly bathtub it is always in that ocean

the cyclones
the storms after

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Beginning

from the beginning things are too simple each creature has no name they know each other by the sound and smell and the simplest glance ever
eye to eye
gives the needed peace love and compassion

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Bottom Of His Heart

did he tell you that he writes
from the bottom of his heart?

did he not frankly tell you
that at the bottom
of his heart
there is only
sand and rotten seaweeds?

that there is no
one there
that the silence there is haunting
him
that there is no
sun and
stars there

that the starfish
has gobbled another sea urchin
there
for breakfast

that in there
the only story is
all about
the predator
and the prey

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Freedom Of The Forest

from the freedom of the forest you trapped and caught this bird and put it inside your cage you love it and feed it well on top of the ivory tower you want to hear it sing a love song

you threaten to kill it and take away all its colorful feathers

it does not sing still the following day it lays itself stiff dead and you tell yourself it is not your fault you too, like it, has been so unloved.

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Heart

yes master
i will beat for you
you own me
every vein
every vessel
every blood
that i pump
out and pump
in, ...all these
shall be with
you,
i admit
when you
fall in love
i fall with
you...
i am not afraid
anymore.

i still bleed
but i am healing
right now

and just a second when we fall in love and again when i will be broken again
and again
and again

we shall always be together. what am i for?

your dear heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
From The House To The City....

the best part of my day is taking my ride
to the office where i pass
farms and houses like pictures of my postcard
past sometimes to feel what nature
is i open the glass window and feel the winds passing by my face
and i see this world full of cars and people in the city where i am met with noise and speed and i promise
myself
i cannot be sick
this time
for this world
needs
strong people to change it
somehow
for the better.

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Night

the morning arrives on my cheeks
light gives a new warmth i meet the sun
and i understand the darkness of your loneliness

gikan sa gabii

pag-abot sa kabuntagon
midan-ag sa akong aping
ang bag-ong kainit
gitagbo ko ang adlaw
nasabtan ko ang kangitngit sa imong kamingaw

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Nooks Of Jakarta

the canal gives up the river's bosom is filled with plastic garbage
the color of the water is
black
the leaves of trees
keep on falling
to the ground

people pass by nothing's new everything the same day in and day out
business has to continue Indonesians simply move on
with their daily lives

it will be the same
here
when i come home again

sweet too is the garbage of my country
my home

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Notes Of A Friend

They are typically gorgeous, haughty,
unapproachable,
sometimes arrogant,
and often unfortunately straight.

They know that they are being watched
but they usually ignore that.

When they grace you with a smile,
a slight nod,
a word or two,
you are exalted
to be in their presence.

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Outside....

you do not see
the right shape of this mountain unless you look at it
from far,

it is the distance for now that makes you see the truth you do not see so well when you are inside a cell a room gives you a door for you to go out and a path so you may take some steps here, where we stand here, where we meet

we can see that it is heart shaped that it has no thorns that it is not bleeding

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Peak Of The Mountain To The Foot Of The Hill

you knelt before that
god
it is your hands that travel
from the peak of the mountain
to the foot of the hill
both sun and moon
hairs as stars
you close your eyes and worship this
god

i regroup all my senses and call all the roses for reasons sham god
and you're a fool
hormone engineered.

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Viewpoint Of An Abstractionist

The whole world is a color of orange.

you imagine age
as pure
sunset.

there is a black
hat below this world

there is a face of a man with a screw for an eye.

nothing really means
much

except the dissolving
part

which is actually nihilism at its peak of beauty and this is what we experience

when we say
we like to die and this is the moment

when a writer says

nothing and the reader sayS much.

RIC S. BASTASA
From The Voice Within....

it is hard to be a voice within which is not heard or heeded

one feels the straining of
the flesh
how the bones tremble over unrequited love
over feelings unattended for the simple reason that one must have strength over desires that power to control and do what ought to be done the voice within struggles to be heard and followed it echoes in every corner of the nerve of your humanity the years are rough and muddled over a voice which keeps on

murmuring
praying that it should be heard and loved

somehow when death comes and the voice dies with it
one from beyond all these sees the true reason of restraint the man dies dignified with all praise

for he had been strong and not swayed by the voice of the flesh as flowers are offered over his pure name his reputation untarnished living the life of a dignified stature carved upon stone and was never stained by the acidity of the rain

RIC S. BASTASA
now be careful
because if you are too kind
to all these
hungry men

they will pluck out
your eyes
they will tear your flesh
they will break
all your bones
they will sell
even your soul to the devil

RIC S. BASTASA
From Where I Come From

slopes of the mountains
and a small patch of a plain
on the side
of the river
where the grasses thicken
like armpits
there is a hut there
and some trees around
years
and years
we stayed there like there is no other home for us
but then
time comes and leaving becomes a must for each of us

we left and we followed the direction of the wind towards the sea of our freedom

and here i am writing about what my ancestors
thought

leave and take a journey
and find the real path

the meaning that we attach to ourselves

to the direction
of the wind
towards the sea
and then
do not ever think of the patch of plain again
or the grasses

it is the wind
that leads us
the wind
the wind and nothing but the sound of
the wind

freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
From Where I Stand I See The Silent Tomorrow

tomorrow comes on small
silent feet
like a cat

from a window overlooking a harbor

gently,
the clouds drift
the mist and frost
slowly gone

and what the cat
sees
is the sun
smiling

and the cat
remembers her mother
the one that feeds
her with pink mice
and sharper claws

RIC S. BASTASA
From Womb To Womb

from the womb of my mother where i once slept
i shall walk up straight and run and play and then stop for a while contemplating about my sweetest surrender
and then i bow down to
earth
with all respect
genuflect and kneel and prostate my whole being before its sun
its trees its rivers
and skies
praying that i be taken back
to its womb
where i shall sleep
contentedly
forever

RIC S. BASTASA
From Worm To Wings

deeply embedded in their instincts they always follow through and the lead
an obedient crowd
no one really knows where they would really go

guided by their instincts they always follow the lead an obedient crowd
no one really knows where they would really go

you look at them and have this sense of worry the shortage of the leaves the endless walk on the branch
some have fallen
and you try to pick them and let them be unknown to you is nature's law

the survival of the fittest
that those who become butterflies are those that never stop to try to eat
and then to be transformed from worm to winged

RIC S. BASTASA
an idea always comes from all of you, a chat early this morning the wind outside is cold and the rain has not subsided it

the road is empty and the leaves scatter
there

jimmy is starting the engine of his motorcycle his girlfriend met an accident last night my window is open since last night and some rain came in but i did not really mind it i look at myself in the mirror in the bathroom after i have taken my bath of hot water

my body is another wasted material my face is like a sinking boat in the water my eyes like a drowning child time has judged me like an unforgiving father to a prodigal son

i have freed myself from some shackles but i have never used that freedom too well

there are stories of murder and regrets after and they shall remain always ready to be told

RIC S. BASTASA
From Zero

dr. zero i have to go again to some one like you.

for i am nothing

and will always be
nothing

without you.

and then you come very simply as a smile

a pat on my back
and then
a hold

on my hand
my heart begins to beat

like i am some one
for you

and then we are here
from ground zero

a leaf falls
a little wind blows

a lock of hair
on my palm
the first step to a kiss

i sit here
remembering
things again

three women are carried
up on an elevator

as i watch with a bottle of mineral water
beside my hand.

RIC S. BASTASA
i make a garden with all the intentions of giving you flowers.
It is not all the time.

i cannot create my own happiness. i am dependent on love's giving.

Expectations are exciting. I create more synonyms for it. With it alone, at least, i can be happy.

Blessings do not come in forms, They come in shades, like the paintings of suns and moons.

Losing love is not painful I am tired of losing it and I am numb.

It has in fact become a habit.

I once adopted a cat, not a dog.
And the following morning, many cats are infesting my doormats and backyards.

In solitude, one comes across all the questions.
There are no answers.
But it is good.

Life becomes an eternity of questions, as it is really meant to be.

Unless you want a final answer.
Hope that it will not be very disastrous.

Do not embrace old age.
It embraces you instead.
Whether you like it or not,
It comes even like a hale in summer.

Missing is part of finding.
Debts and taxes, Oh never mind.
They will always be there, even without you.

Do not dwell more on what is to be done.
Just keep on going and doing.
And you will exactly how it feels.

Do not feel it.
It will feel you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Frontal...

and there was this abbot of mont serrat
who used an unknown number and texted me the worst story about myself, which he believes to be this sort of hook, line and sinker his lips entangled in the falsity of the pleasures of the rumor and i simply read and afterward deleted what must necessarily belong to him

in a little way the rivers get crumpled but the rains flatten out what creases are there now, i listen only to myself and see the sheen of my own light to myself i am true to no other must i be responsible.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fronts

i know what you are.
when you start walking this early morning you have something in mind other than this ordinary walking for

i know who you are and what you desire
what you like to hold
early morning,

the one that i am holding now, sorry, but this is not for you, it is for someone else, the one that i love, the one who covers my lies for me, the one who loves me no matter what, even if what i am holding now
is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fruitflies Inside A Milk Papercup

you keep the fruit flies inside the milk paper cup covering them with your palm

and you tell me
you wish them well you wish they multiply fast just in a minute

asphyxiated stupid!
they are all dead!

RIC S. BASTASA
Frying Pan

d there are times when life becomes one fish helpless on the silent heat of the coconut oil

to the utmost the harshness lies on the charring of the skin the protest of the scales
the flesh
no longer edible

to the chagrin of the mouth

RIC S. BASTASA
Fuente, Cebu City From Jones Street

I am back here. This used to be my place.
Busy street. Smoking jeepneys. Unknown Girls. Yesterday’s news littering on the Streets. McDonald’s opening 24 hours.
Hot thin crust pizza at Pizza Hut.
Park view hotel always filled with Japanese and Koreans, No room For Us, but anyway I have taken A room for 500 a night at YMCA.
Nothing’s new really, except for this Brown girl following me. Cheap sir.
Just cheap buy this DVD, triple x.
Diagnostic centers. Old Julie’s Same bread. Cebu Doctors. How Much money shall I spend for My new blood test? Doctors always Require these tests, and I am fed up With nothing normal. Everything seems To be wrong.

I am back here. I will do nothing.
What is the use? No one knows no one.
Anyway, I’ll pass at Red Ribbons
And try what I cannot eat.
Black forest cake and ice cold coke For a drink to death. Bordeline.
Diabetic. Sweetest dreams tonight.
Like mother: who cares? Enter death.
Go away rules. Get lost prohibitions.

RIC S. BASTASA
LIFE is simplified
back to the year of the first white chrysanthemum

there is only earth and heaven and man between them

on folded silence
like origami
they understand what happens things move on like the lotus calm, gentle, softly above the murky water to the morning sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Fulfilling

to close a world you simply have to close
a window,
or put off light, or keep back your silence.

you go to bed. Slide upon a blue blanket. Cover your head, and listen to the sounds of your breathing.

it is dark, but there is still a sound of you.
they say, you close a door and another door is opened.

indeed, it is true. Indeed it speaks to you. Confirms you with yourself.

you talk to yourself. The chair listens. The ceiling stares back. they say it is a long journey.

what they did not tell you is that, it can only be you.
and it will be long, and sad, and this is the hope: fulfilling.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fulfillment

to write without thinking without really thinking much or counting the cost
the time wasted

and then to wonder what was it that was written and then to be told that what was written was true and that it has changed the life of the reader....

RIC S. BASTASA
Fulfillment Of Dreams

we have each other still the rain stops
the flowers bloom
the skies clear
the sun popping up on the promising horizon

we have a house
a kid
a dog that waggles its tail and laps our legs
we have a car
we have poetry
we have our own movie time we have a night together at the veranda by the sea we watch the stars

and the moon

we hold each other's hands we kiss and then we embrace....

RIC S. BASTASA
Full Moon

the moon is full tonight.
under the shadows of trees are pairs.

with envy
i look at them.

i put my arms around my body
and think of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Full Moon By My Window

full moon by my window
dark night as hair
light and warm her body

full moon by my window
i bathe in love

full moon by my window
i breathe happiness

full moon by my window
she is fast asleep in my arms

RIC S. BASTASA
Fully Alive...

how did you
give fully? did you
not know
that you have to die first before you can live
that full?
and how did you
die first?
did you know that all these are but idioms?
it is death
without being seen with any blood or strangulation
you appear
there in that garden without any wound
and yet you have died
as you claim it
to be

internally

did you know that
all these
are but a harem of metaphors?

you do have to give fully after all neither shall you
die because you cannot and you are not death
neither are you
life.

all these are figures of speech.

there is a path that you know but you do not speak about it.

you just walk on it and do what you tell yourself within.

automatically.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fully......Understood....

he cannot say
everything

amazed, what comes

this silence

dumb
founded, he wrote the evolution of his self like a hieroglyphic

black bird
headless.....someone draws a wing,

a cloud,
pearl,

now in Asia, lost in the configuration of yin yang, he thinks he is a failure because no matter how he stretches his mind he could not reach the star....

what one does not know is fully understood.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fun

as age increases its creases like a convoluted species of the brain
fun rewrites itself in some straight lines shunning curves
and crooked edges.

RIC S. BASTASA
Fun Together

slow but sure
but if i fall
i rise again
and begin
anew
slow but sure
like a snail
like a worm
inching my way
to my destination
i am not in hurry
side by side
with another worm
another snail
oh we're just having fun
together

RIC S. BASTASA
Functionality....

ah, the natives here do not just watch the beauty of the tall ferns by the side of the river it is not just the waterfalls and the vines

they are bringing baskets gathering those ferns as salad for breakfast.

RIC S. BASTASA
Funny

tonight i told her that i shall be back in her arms and she is laughing for surely i cannot be in her arms again

she lost them.
trusting her i do not bother asking i have no more arms either though not literally in the strictest sense of the word but figuratively
i lost them too, somewhere with someone whom i really love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Funny People

we have friends who during a party ask us where have we been all these times what we have been doing on those spare days and we answer that we have been writing poems and trekking the country for metaphors and they all laugh while holding their wine glasses thinking that we are joking and finding us all

funny

'cheers! we'll drink to that' says a friend to celebrate those days when we merely talk about stocks and dividend

RIC S. BASTASA
loneliness has a way of piercing
another body another soul the hug and tight embrace bodies fusing scents diffusing
drowning minds into that oceans of passion
diving and penetrating what the void has been missing into a substance into some fluids of compassion all eyes close for this musing lost and wild and hot as hell after that emission of light and power reigns after the satisfaction of heaven having seen the face of the divine one finally exhausted rest in the empathy of another's arms it is love that kills loneliness murders it
and scalds it
it is love and affection that makes all the green grass spread again that makes all the lonely rivers sing it is love and no other whatever name that you are giving it is love
that shuts your mouth up that fills the emptiness in your bosom that gives you heels that makes the smell of your armpit a mouthful a bit.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is this song which tackles about faith this walking
faith
in your heart where you shall never
then
walk alone

God is fair.
Your voice is like the sound of a broken bottle but as i told you
i admire your spirit
that courage to sing like a defeated warrior
after
the war

RIC S. BASTASA
after that anonymous talk (since you never revealed your name, referring me to Rumpelstiltskin, to my chagrin, i realized,
how low is your opinion of myself, how debased have i been with your figures and stories, that i myself, have not even bothered for years, simply because they are not true and which you tried to impress upon me as God's truths,
and as you advised, i look at myself in the mirror
and i look at it with all compassion and i tell myself, this is all i got, and this is all that i can love
because you cannot
and never dared,
but just the same i say, thank you,
and at that time,
i tell the mirror, i wish that creature a happy death someday, one, where after smiling, one can hear the chasm of the earth divide, and there the intrigue is swallowed
whole

i do not know you
so how can i say what you are too, coward!

RIC S. BASTASA
G10

Shape me
O suffering Sandpaper me into a desired
smoothness Shale me
O suffering
not in my design
but yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
your path is yours
as i have mine
at the junction we part but do not worry
we shall soon meet again
as promised

RIC S. BASTASA
the lonely wife in the house for years has been abandoned by the brown colored
husband,
and she in turn pleases herself with some daily chores: replacing the vase with flowers
everyday
fine tuned with every occasion of renewal and revival
sometimes she wears a dress with flowers of blue designs she weaves stories for herself and indulges in the fantasy
of her sorrows
away from grief and numbed by the pains this time as the rain pours heavily and she cannot go into her garden to pick a flower she takes a picture of herself half nude, her breasts protruding to the light of the sun whose fingers caress her nipple and she closes her
eyes
not wanting death but remembering the face of another man
even an illusion of a nose and a set of thick lips shall make her
survive

whatever, is, the name of lament.

RIC S. BASTASA
outside it is wet.
inside is acrid.
at the inner side of things deserts make more deserts sands slip beneath our feet, outside the rain sings
lots of denials,
hands imploring for more acceptance
arms looking for an embrace and the universe
spins some more
the threads of its messy indifference.

RIC S. BASTASA
the children at the park form a circle and closed their arms around them and i remember what once you imagine as the circle of life but at that time
the dancers are nude
and blind.

RIC S. BASTASA
when i am left alone in the room when it rains so hard outside and you are not here with me when you will not be coming for two or more days
do not be slighted
but i am happier that way shall i send you a message that you better be away for a week?

or perhaps a year,
so i can be myself again for with you sometimes in words
i am lost and i grapple with who i am and what will i become perhaps, as they say it i need more space by cutting some bridges for a while

RIC S. BASTASA
one thing with us is that we are not like the air that fills the space the void,
we have not adopted the properties of fluidity flexible enough to adjust to emptiness embracing it like a long lost friend and liking what new setting is there

we should have taken the shape of God's containers and say that despite the hollowness there is nothing wrong but what is there is the excitement of being like Him
Everywhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
she accept
each sacrifice as a stair leading to the door of her home

and they are homing
hand in hand
together

RIC S. BASTASA
because we have wanted to see what ought to be we have utterly failed to see the joys of what is...

RIC S. BASTASA
so these are all what we know as experience grief, joy,
lament, excitement
all parts of the path, we step each
stone and step some more

the essence of which is always not to stop but to proceed....

RIC S. BASTASA
Gaba

Sa dihang molarga na unta Namugos nga mokuyog gayod ang bana Walay nahimo ang asawa

Sa dihang mogawas na unta sa baba Sa barge ang bus nga ilang Gisakyan gikan sa tiil sa Mukas Hunong sa agtang sa Ozamis Kalit lang mibuto ang bomba Nga gitanom sa terorista Sa lubot sa Rural Transit Nga ilang gikatulgan

Nasunog ang tanan nga wala Moambak sa dagat sa tumang Kahikurat ug ang ilang mga matang Nagsulirat wala gani tagad kapiyong Sa dihang gidali dali silag kuha Sa limbong sa kamatayon

Ug ikaw sa way kukalooy miingon lamang Ug “Gaba! ”

RIC S. BASTASA
Gadfly

you have seen the errors and you want to correct them and you tell me i should have corrected them but i really have no time for corrections, i said, touch and go, and go and go, leave the errors, let it irritate those who read them, gadfly, bite the mules.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gador was left in an island hot and bare

his mind is obsessed with the boa with two white eggs

behind the cave where he dwells lies the nest of the black bird his feet do not grow his brain smells like chloroform he learns to love it there and shall soon die there only if he wills it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gagged

upon this page
a very important poem is written

but the writer
fears
that it is not appropriate for all of you

and so this page
was once a place of that very important poem that could have changed the lives of some lonely people

said poem is deleted

it is inside my head
and it is
screaming.

it is a bad poem claiming its own importance

if you know
conceit, pride, bias,

if you were once its servant
then you also have
that poem
in your head

it is screaming
and so i gag it.

RIC S. BASTASA
what she has in mind is all romantic.
valentine's day

enough of chocolates and roses or this motel thing,

away from the home that we built mutually for

25 years.

why not go out for a while?
be with all the strangers in that far away place and celebrate love?

she suggests.

a beach perhaps, or an escapade with those zip lines, or a hideaway somewhere
in the desert,

hmm, i said, let me think about it, after valentine's day.

(still got a bleeding heart to heal, hardheaded and battered, and angry still) just the same, happy valentine's to you my dear, thanks.

will she leave? he asks. I know she won't.
but that will be alright.

alone again, he thinks, life must be one happy solitude, hurtful, on the hinds, and blinds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gamay Nga Bata…

magmahay ba ako
kon ikaw wala miabot sa akong kinabuhi?

gipaabot ko ikaw
og bisan og unsaon ko og paningkamot nga ikaw hikalimtan lamang kanunay kang
nagpakita sa akong panumduman sama sa usa ka damgo kabahin sa usa ka siwil nga naglangoy sugat sa sulog sa usa ka suba og dayon sa kalit nawala dili katoohan

apan ikaw akong himoon nga tinood ugma damlag
sa pagsubang sa bulan sa pagtaob sa dagat kuhaon ko ikaw sa duyahan sa imong mamahimong inahan

RIC S. BASTASA
Gansa

pagkasaba ba sa mga gansa miabot nga diay ang atong inday

RIC S. BASTASA
Gap

ENVY not
those who are busy,
and acclaimed
by the hands of the masses, they have their own problems with

fame

they too have the problems of their money

a gap
of self from self a hollow space
in between

behind the masks are the limping insecurities success is always short and failure is not far behind

it is a matter of time
soon
a mouth that opens with fangs and deadly venom

a cobra always waiting for the right bite
at the right time even if you were
the wrong person

so please envy not
the proud and the laughing
gas.
Garden Fantasy

gossamer wings of dragonflies platinum petals of tanzanite tulips sapphire daisies, ruby roses, million flowers of mandarin garnets red silk wings of butterflies diamond-studded lilies of the valley peridot grasses alexandrite dews garnet violets aquamarine carnations quarts crocus chrysoberyl chrysanthemums opal orchids coral daffodils metallic fantasies of an imaginary garden eventually your heart is missing

RIC S. BASTASA
Garden*

When we talked about the world we were talking about order:
a trail of grass, a fist of blooms.
My mother points to a slow and deliberate fall of the full fruit.

“When we are dying,” she says “When we are long gone and dead,”

And it is so easy to pretend we had a world of choice. A green, easy tending.
The orchids tenaciously cling to their dark barks.

We talked straight into evening, straight into each tangled tendril angled against dark, into dark.
If we could only hold the edgeless in place. Night and its reckless weeds.
The light was not ours to give.

* written by IL

RIC S. BASTASA
Gary Granada’s Definition Of A House

A shanty of cartons as walls Some tin for roof
Several cuttings of tin
And some worn out rubber tires To keep the tin roofs
In place

Ten persons reside there Too crowded
Smell of dead fish
Smell of decayed fish
And dried urine Rodent and human urine Hotter than the Temperatures of An Arizona desert

Patches of wasted wood Planks of leftovers Undefined window frames
There is no comfort Room or living Room or bed or Sala
Every floor
Every patch
Is a bed, a room,
A kitchen
All in one
For ten people or more

Is this what you call a house?
Gary Granada is singing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gassed....

if you notice
all that we did was a repetition

open a door
then close a door

it has always been a status of doors then knobs

entrances and exits

born and
died.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gay Marriage For William (Just For Fun)

this world opens itself to gay marriage the gay priest presides this solemn marriage of william to another william and wilma to another wilma do you william take william as your spouse for better or for worse, in sickness and in health till death do you part?

and william says, yes i do and so by virtue of the authority vested in my by law i hereby pronounce you william and william as spouses

in the presence of your witnesses wilma and wilma
the groom may now kiss his groom it is not funny, it can be real as it has become real nature keeps up with overpopulation and goes for more copulation between two same sexes in love with each other's sameness life is an experiment and so love is an experiment too love and its quivers bodies and more bodies warming themselves hearts fusing as one, how lovely to see?

seriously speaking, in the dark the souls keep on dating the bodies become so irrelevant, the sexes not important there is this kiss, this touch, these solvents of our loneliness these glue and paste that must fill the gap of our respective emptiness the same goal the same purpose: we always want to be filled in full

RIC S. BASTASA
Gazing At The Japanese Painting Of Katsushika Hokusai...

the scorpion claws of the sea have again claimed the lives of more than ten thousand Japanese...

RIC S. BASTASA
Gender Sensitivity

miington ang t-bird, piling niya, kon tagaan siyang usa ka basong tubig dih sa party,
crush na siya,

tsk tsk, dili baya.
dili tanang baye crush sa tibo nagmalasakit lang
kawawa naman,

lisod gyod ang stereo typing. ingon ka, dili siya bayot kay
kadton nagdulog mo
wala baya niya
hikapa imong itlog

tsk tsk sayop ka
dili lang gyod ka gwapo.
o bisan gwapo ibutang ta, dili ra gyod ka
bug-at diha sa iyang kasingkasing nga nagkiaykiay sa biga nga dili para imo

kadton halhag ug ngipon dagkong bugas-bugas walay pul-ong ang bungot kalkag ug buhok
bahog baba
maoy iyang dios

kadton security guard nga dunay totoy palihog ayaw igna ug hoy doy aw
day.
Genica's Dream

her dream car: a pick-up black, and the latest edition of dmax she is into the world of poetry and she has more time in her literature, and every day she dreams of words, punctuation marks of her life, the period is rolling in her eyes, and the future seems to be bleak in the haze of her fogs, there are mountains along the way those that do not move by her command, those that have old trees and rocks and pavements without directions

she will be lost, and then i will whistle,

and then, suddenly the dreams are gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Genie

if you are here
my dear Genie
i will make three wishes
but first
i have to rub this magic lamp first

rub it hard
until you come out hot and happy

my first wish
make me wise
my second wish let it last my third
make me disappear
from here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gentle

let us walk by the sea one early morning on bare feet let us hold our hands and talk a while about ourselves

let us stop for a while and sit on the white sand under a talisay tree let us feel the breeze meeting our faces let us wait for the sun to finally shine let us marvel to this changing world the passing wind

the sun slowly rising the sea gradually growing before us let us stop talking for a while let our eyes see forward let us hold our hands tighter let us feel our strong union with the world today let there be no questions for a while let there be only amazement let there be so much wonder let us try to have a glimpse of forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Genuflection Of Lawyer

I AM a lawyer
I have not done my duty I have not served my country I am telling all the lies I am making more money
I have procured false witnesses
I have done my neighbor wrong

I am a liar
I am a liar
I am a liar

Whatever you do to me
Kill me shoot me bury me cremate me Drown me, choke me, suffocate me, Poison me, stab me, pulverize me, Chop me, mortar me, skin me, Debone me, beat me

I am still a lawyer
Always true to my profession

I will lie
I will always lie
I will always be telling lies

Without any purpose of evasion So help me God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Genuflections Of An Erring Husband To His Cyber Lover shall i do it again?

shall we do it again?
i have done it once,
twice, thrice and

nice, shall we do it again just for once?

shall i let you do again what i did to you
from the beginning?

not singing with a microphone kneeling without the veil reading poetry in the dark moaning in the middle of joys not everlasting.

shall we be matches
burning our souls
in lusting flames?

shall we? shall we?
now, now, now
while she is there
entangled in her own
dreams.

RIC S. BASTASA
Genuis

what resents fame and charges you more interest on pain and bitter with time the pills cure only for a while almost at all times it places you on a reversed gear and you love

when everything is bumped with your rear it magnetizes everything ore-like and pulls you finally on the verge of despair and you appease the tremor in your mouth with a bubble gum

it triggers you to a shapeless space in eternal illusion

RIC S. BASTASA
Geography And You

you do not plant trees in the big forest neither shall you sell ice drops in the north pole

in tropical paradise
we are the lazy people who spend most of our time sun bathing in the beach watching sea gulls breathing the salt of the air sipping cold mango juice painting yachts
burying our bodies under the comfort of the the white sands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Geometry Of Friendship (For Gatiting)

if angle x with 45 degrees
has a 3 m-side line on the opposite of a 8 m-left to angle y inclined tangent to angle z
at 40 degrees,

now, prove if we are really friends
fine the length of the third line.

tell me your answer in one hour then pass this to your other 5 friends within 10 seconds.(whew!)

RIC S. BASTASA
Geometry Of Love

it is obtuse, and you must take the form of the isosceles not off tangent
do not be strict on perpendiculars
take the angle where love fits most where the groan is least the pain
negligible
love maximized on trapezoidal compromises

RIC S. BASTASA
Gestalt....

is it the shape?
the shape of your face, your heart, is it just the shape, of your body, the color of your hair, the kinkiness of your eyes, is it just the shape of the bowl that matters to you?

what about the contents of the bowl, or if it is empty, what about the air that fills it somehow? do you see it? no you don't, so it is not just the shape, neither just the parts, or the whole, there is something more in shapes and colors

and

even contents,

there is the will that bends everything to mercy
there is the decision that convinces us all to be one, this sympathy, that empathy, that belief that i cannot live

without you,
that someone dies when someone leaves, that life is better with us
in all these,

that there is life after our deaths,
there is this
unseen coming, this one that we want to grasp yet because we think we failed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Get A Handkerchief

Be decent

Today get a handkerchief And wipe
All those crocodile tears

They are so intriguing
All the people are talking

You looked so untrue

While you shed tears
the tongue
Inside your Mouth is Giggling.

And please wear your Correct name.

RIC S. BASTASA
Get Connected Marvin

it is not bad to be alone taking a grip of yourself like your hands embracing your body the closeness of the self to yourself it is not bad either to get connected to your loved ones

they make you grow as they affirm your goodness they make you fulfill your essence to be alone and step in your room and yet to be with the world and become part of the universe this is what we are doing here in cyberspace alone and yet alone to many there is no harm marvin there is so much good

this solitude in the modern sense you touch the world without even one of it touching you this choice of absence and yet this universality of our inevitable presence

press the keyword: enter

RIC S. BASTASA
Get Out Self-Pity

Surely there is no one Who speaks with Authority
Or pity
About the pain
Of my lost love

Now is the time
To kick out
This feeling of Pain &
Emptiness

Go on
Get out
Self-pity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Get Together World...

all humans
is there a shortage of
water
in the seas? lands in the mountain ranges?

get together on
your feet
gather all your reasons of the
mind

why make a war
over a dot of an island?

RIC S. BASTASA
Get Up, Let Us Go.

at the final hour
we need recall no more what greatness was there once, what honor was there that was bestowed upon, when the final hour
knocks, we must,
but obey

whatever you bury you bury no more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Get Used To All These Somehow got used to all these somehow these that i cannot understand always the questions in my mind like open mouths longing for a kiss

empty and cold,
there are answers to choose got nothing
i move in an open field gasping for air like a fish on the floor shattered glasses and water seeping on the wooden floor

too dry for me but I'll get used to
all these
tomorrow the usual sun shines if you ask me i have no answers i will pretend that this is the usual day nothing extraordinary

like the passing of the wind i shall not be carried away but i have to rearrange my hair gets crumpled
and i do not really like it being seen by you and you ask if it's me

i am. it was me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Away From A Responsibility

a child open his arms in Asilo asking if i can be his father, without answering him in words my arms hug him in return

i lift him from the ground and feel his heart beating unto mine there is a connection between two hearts in that thick line of emptiness between two kinds of loneliness a child understands it well i think i didn't

in my age where my hair refuses to be white or gray
i am given more options like an ocean where i am but a very small ship the child has none

he can only be a bird without wings drowning at sea

he sleeps and i give him back to the penguin

oh, i have more places in my heart less any child

i am a man with so many homes wanting to be a vagabond again

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Away From All These....

so many rules, and so many changes and we who are foolish enough are tracking each nuance,
each abrupt change, each newly built sandcastle which from time to time the waves destroy and we like Sisyphus enduring keeps on reconstructing every rock rolled and then in place this is our business doing and undoing, remembering and forgetting round and round

that eternal circle of joy and happiness, of searching and finding

there is a way somehow to get away

but i shall be doing it with you i am half of you i shall be an eye to your body you are my arm to my hands you are my mouth to my tongue after we get away from all these structures when we are finally free we shall see, if by then, we be on each own finding our own paths to our defined bliss.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Close To Me

it would have been simple and cheap, not on the train or plane or ship, for it could have been through a simple chat,
which you needlessly
refused.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Even With A Traitor

when you give up everything to someone whom you love like undressing yourself so she may see your soul and touch it and even own it when you feel that in that moment she has cold hands and eyes distracted by something else like she is thinking of another day to come another face to see

...............you feel betrayed, she is not sure about you and her in that instant you have the right to stab her with your sharp looks tear him apart with your knife sharp teeth like you are the lion king of the forest eat her piece by piece like you are very hungry for a love that is completely true swallow her bit by bit and make her now a part of you you will not regret the eating she took your love away, now you want it back undiminished.
Getting Even...

if you desire to imitate me think well about it for we may end up liking each other on both ends of this peculiar matter for i have
imitated you and
here you are imitating me and the horror of us finding each other
all the same
may haunt us
in hell forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Lost With Your Own Volitionlife unable to write on your own you shop

you read wanting to find for answers

you do this most of the times neglecting outside

you enter a cave and find some shadows

you love it now you have something to write

if you are lost
it does not matter

before you arrive here you were nowhere to be found

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Naked

what makes it interesting?
it is the seldom way of showing
what is there
it does not happen everyday and that is it, but i imagine if we were born less the shame and the malice there is actually nothing there but humanity and the coldness
of society
there is no lust in there but just our own shape and skin and bones wrapped so tenderly with care

love and understanding is there only when we shed off the crude manners of our built-in civilization who for long in the pretense of religion and governance
have taken us away from our very own nature the death of candidness the scourge of expensive dresses once i go naked inside my room and look closely at my body in the human-sized mirror this is reality i proclaim to my senses there is nothing lewd in my belly there is love in my navel there is this kingdom of love hidden inside my guts

tomorrow i will be honest i will wear no masks
no clothes

i will shed off the name that they gave me.
Getting Old Gracefully

at 4 a.m.
she wakes up

she is getting older and cannot sleep that well she is looking for something she goes to the kitchen she comes back to the bedroom trying to remember what is it that she is looking for?

she goes to the toilet and goes back bed again

i am afraid
she will ask me who i am and why are we together in this bed i sleep again

it is 6: 43 a.m.
when i wake up to find that the room is empty the kitchen door open the light outside is still on and the gate towards the road is left open like a mouth still waiting for the next slice of cake she has changed a lot she is taking a walk without me in this house when we eat our breakfast of oatmeal and banana

no meat, no sugar,

then we take our medicines two glasses of water

the whole day will be story telling reminiscing those younger days looking at those black and white pictures calling friends

we wonder sometimes if the world soon like those red riding hood and ali baba stories shall have a happy ending

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Old Graciously....

there was this old man bent to his weaving mats and baskets, and his wife too, as old as he is,

eighty or so,
gazes upon the patterns of colors and shapes

both know, what grace and love have made from out of them, mellowed backbones, like bending flowers to the setting sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Out

i did not say it was a mad house.
perhaps it was me, when i left it.
perhaps i have not seen the light.
or perhaps it was too dark inside.
or perhaps the darkness is just inside myself.

but then i left it. It is now a fact.

i smile to the world now. i have many choices about what colors of shirt, or pants or socks to wear. i can read any book and i can be anywhere i want.
i did not change my face or modify my body.
there was no pressure to adopt my vision to anyone else or to that house that is set in the middle of the big city and walled as high as the clouds. all i felt was the hanging and the inhibition as though i am caged but you have always said this is part of the molding and it will be painful for a time.

i want a ring with a name and date on it.
i want a house without walls.
a face with eyes open and hands outstretch
to the sky.
i want to listen to the sound of the river as it longs for the mouth of the sea.
i went to the mountain with trees and listened to the songs of the birds and the aria of the wind.
i went on top and saw the city and it is too small for my hands.

now, i have seen the light.
now i feel freedom.
now i am myself. there is no fear and all i have is love and compassion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Out From Time

mechanically all that the fingers do is take off the watch from the wrist
put it on the computer table turn off the switch and
rest

what choice have these fingers when the spinal column begins to sound the aching bells?

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Out Of A Fixation

the exit is just within your view. it is daily and you do it and you become so engrossed so you forget yourself it is overflowing and then you get so bored and you do not feel like doing the same things all over again.

it is not like fetching water from the well. something that you easily understand as seeding and planting and harvesting.
it is something personal and you need not ask some more.

i get over it.
and now i am free
do not ask some more i said i have risen above it and that is the most important thing that happened to me
today.

i get over you. No sadness. no dramatic goodbyes. Just plain and simple freedom. Release from fear and pain.

in love, i am reborn.
get over with me.
and take another chance with someone else.

another menu
in the resto. another drink.
and then be drunk
and be in the dancing mood.

just that. just that.
keep going.
for now, i do not really care.
this is my life and finally i got it within my grasp.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Over A Failure (For Liza) be attuned, there is no such thing as a permanent failure, there are only preludes success even is temporary how much for failures?

do not diminish yourself failures are merely suspended successes, be patient for it is just but a matter of time failures are but temporary guests the uninvited ones whom you can even dismiss at any time but don't be too harsh upon failures and upon yourself like everyone else that you meet give them time to speak and be with you, they also have something to say, though not nice, but there is also so much to learn from them.

that ugly guy over there, welcome him inside your house, serve him tea and company, he has something more important to say, than that handsome man over there, who like a magician, gives you only illusions.

sometimes what is more real let me say this once, is failure.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Rid Of Biases

the unexpected sometimes happen fragile glasses did not break under extreme pressure those that we think are solid enough finally liquefied the hottest air did not make the balloon fly away sometimes we are wrong whom we hate most finally are those who really love us best those with whom we trust our love, life, even the future that is the only one left since then have betrayed us some paths that we tread upon where we draw some dreams of heaven the least we expected brought us perdition so what is the point?

see what is there
do not adulterate it with what you think of the
past

empty yourself
and fill in what is raw and true

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting The Message Across

The boy does not go to school today
The teacher calls and so without any further ado They ground him
And he knows the agreement the rule of the house Of his father

He kneels before the altar on mongo beans They beat him with a 2x2 wood He has to shed blood and tears before the Lord He shall be barraged with a roomful of scolding He shall be locked the whole day in silence No calls, no celfon, no friends to visit him Simply because he did not go to school today He is never asked he is not allowed to answer

I am his uncle and I am disturbed by this kind of injustice “You should have asked him to explain his side” I intervened, “This is a family affair, and we just want to discipline the boy,
And get him the message across” the couple answered.

I think the message is clear. To the boy, life is unjust.
And the earlier he knows it, the better for him to adjust and survive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting To Know The Faces Of Failures

at first they come like harsh beasts of the cavemen variety crude to your feelings and you want to dismiss them and even kill them in one explosion but they don't leave and they do not die at your option and your own terms and conditions

for they are like acrobats and bats and cyclops
they know very well how to evade your manner of attacking them for you are too crude enough in your manners of dealing with each of them you get attuned to their faces and bodies and shapes and strategies and skills after a long, long time they too learn from you and the next time that they knock on your door they look like perfect gentlemen with coat and tie and shining branded shoes equipped with the latest technologies of communication

but you do not get outdone you evolve too

this time you are a well positioned high-rise executive witty, subtle, and from so many failures that you meet you become the new consultant of their disappointments possessing a very strong self-esteem, tough, and smart and when they come for an appointment
with you
you tell them: 'welcome, please be seated gentlemen this is your new office now! '

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting To Know The Real Person

WE cannot know clearly who that man is when he is happier with what he sees outside
the window
rather than with the woman in bed that he had just made love
with.

dili nato maila
pag-ayo ang tawo
kon labaw ba siyang nalipay
sa iyang nasiplat
sa gawas sa bintana
kaysa dagway
sa iyang uyab
nga bag-o lang
iyang gikayat

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting To Know You

getting to know you
is like a love call of a very colorful parakeet showing the best of its feathers
and trying means to get near you
and just that
and then
you fly away

nothing more
except getting to know your color your scent
and the sound of your love call

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting To Know You At That Moment

i descend upon your youth and you
with respect receive my hunger

i taste you but shall not consume
the delicacy of your care

converging
the meteors and stars collide

explosion occurs
to create another universe
between us
there is no space for regret

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting To Know You In 2013

now the nit has turned into a louse the mouse into a hippopotamus now you think you can move mountains you were once but a mole begging for sand now you have become a native turning into a monster taking pride that we feed you fire and burn us all in return...

success has not made you good instead it shows how worse can you become.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting To Know You More

it may start with a name how to pronounce it where the accent lies then i begin to look behind figuring out which shadows make a good story or at all a bad tale that may stop my own little world from spinning then we go dining i take the bill
we sip wine and admire the delicacies of our newly found intimacies then without much expense on
words
we end up in bed trying to figure out who and what we really are what sadness lies within the almonds of our eyes mapping out where happiness is the limits of our own idiosyncrasies
then we look at our eyes again something is wrong but definitely within our hearts something right shouts for joy

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Used To The Cycle Of Ups And Downs...

when you are up
the only possibility is you have to go down there is no choice really except to learn this up and down thing enjoy the fall enjoy the rise just the same until such time that you get so familiarized with the routine
or cycle as it must properly be termed that what you feel is only the valley the plateau
that is when the mountains and hills are no more when everything is plain and no longer fancy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Getting Used To Uncertainties

the haze
and the fog sitting on the hills
waiting for me

the mist and the
the dew that look like pearls

oh! so temporary are the doubts
and the ambiguities

time knows
what to do
the passing seasons
know how to heal
the sands of time
bury what hurts
the grasses
cover what is sad

time to sit and lay my head beside a rock
time to hear the sound of the earth
through the travails of the worm

time to read life through the chirp of a fledgling

i am tired
and i am sleeping sweetly
soundly

so detached from
all of you.
Geyser...

when water gushes forth from a rock it simply does what it is supposed to do shush,
there is no mouth to speak nothing hilarious about advertisements or strategies or self-aggrandizement it gushes forth
day and night
unstopable, restless to its mission to quench your thirst

RIC S. BASTASA
Gia Il Sole!

It is morning now.

after darkness
like a confusion
the morning comes with a brighter sun
this time

twilight leaves
like doubt
we think the pain subsides

It is morning now.

we wash the dirt
on our faces
we dry wet cheeks
with
good morning
towels

It is morning now.

You must stop
believing all the lies You must wake up from this stupor
You must meet destiny
Not in your dreams Touch your hands with our own hands Feel the roughness
of realities.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gidalidali, Gadalidali Aron Way Sakit

Gidalidali niya
Ang pagpananghid
Kanimo nga iya
Nang kuhaon ang
Iyang kasingkasing
Kay duna na
Siya lain

Gidalidali sad nimog Langkat kay morag
Lahi na ang
Timpla sa iyang
Kampat

Mas lami man gud
Ang pagdalidali
Aron dili na
Mailhan kon kinsay
Nangilad
Ug kinsay
Nailad

At least
Dili ra kayo sakit Kay pinakalit
Ang pag
Split

Morag tuplok
Sa dagom
Sa imong tudlo
Niadtong
Gikuhaan kag
Dugo

Di ba mora Rag paak
Sa lamigas?
At last
Patas na ta
Gadali-dali ug lupad Tugpa sa tagsa
Tagsa ta ka
Bag-ong salag

RIC S. BASTASA
Gift

wait for three more
hours
your offer
non-stop blow
job
for the night

RIC S. BASTASA
Gifts Of Silences...

here we are again pinning needles in our epidermal existences trying to pierce every flesh carefully noting every bursting of pus and blood mapping out the cartilages and bones of our sorrows

two years more and perhaps another twenty years of
existence
in order to understand the meaning of life a life that lies there naked so tempting and scented by the thousand jasmines and saffrons

on spiced blankets rosemary and lemon grass and basil in every seams of the pillows

the hands of time keep gripping what ought to be mine (or even hours) it does not know how to give what we want to sip and savor and caress

the eyes of the storms stare at us with anger ready to strike us with its fits and fists

this pilgrimage tiptoes on slow feet because we are all tired figuring out what is real oasis from the mirage of the heat of the desert beyond us we like to see the white seagulls feasting on a school of fish

at the coastal collateral of our side trips a little drink from the hands of the vestal virgins some kisses from the dewy lips of dawn a warm morning's hug, and nights non stop fleshy circus

there are many things more to do more events to attend too and many other letters to compose

by then night has come with the gifts of silence and then i say, 'i do, i will keep on doing what is there to make the best of yet to come'

keep listening Beethoven, keep dancing Lady Dianne we are here watching.

RIC S. BASTASA
Giggle

as the queen-moon glides in the arms of the dark night on top of the tiptoeing-trees behind the cautious-clouds you could have seen how the stalking-stars giggle

RIC S. BASTASA
Gikan Sa Gabii

pag-abot sa kabuntagon

midan-ag sa akong aping
ang bag-ong kainit

gitagbo ko ang adlaw

nasabtan ko ang kagitngit
sa imong kamingaw

RIC S. BASTASA
the couple know what to show, and what not to speak about,
that night, they did not tell us,
they went on a spree,
took the walk
with the neon lights of Saigon,
posed at the facade of the Hotel Intercontinental and the camera
clicked

funny, really funny, in truth, they cannot afford it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gimmickries

sometimes i am trying to figure out if you are only trying to impress me with your questions perhaps you want to project wit and on the other hand i try to answer each question with definitive answers like lands with exact boundaries delineated from the river and the sky
here we are again
wanting to make a point but missing everything here we are again lost in the labyrinths of our pretenses
my face is masked with bitter realities and there you are chained with the shackles of your freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gipistahan

Gipistahan nila ang
imong balak (ang uban mihagikhik og katawa nalipay basin)

dunay uban nga
gihingut-an kini nga morag babayeng
walay ligo

gipangita kon asa
ug unsa kadaghana
ug unsang klaseha
ang imong
mga kuto

RIC S. BASTASA
Give And Take

In your helpless state He will take
You; you will dine
On his table,
He will buy you a Dress and what You need, you
Will live in His own house
He will take Care of you

But there is no Such thing as A free meal Nowadays, or a Man with a Hundred percent
Kind heart,
There will always
Be that element
Of give and take

And so when the Night comes
He will, know this,
Undress you
And start eating
A little of you,
And you will give
In some parts,
That element
Of give and take,

This is a dog
Eat dog world,
My dear, so while

You are in such A helpless state
Try the lizard’s Way, start growing Again those lost
Parts, and if you
Will, start growing
All those wings and Then fly away...

Or if you will,

Start growing some Scales and big Crocodile teeth
And a long solid tail,

And you will know
In lizard’s name
What to do with him.

RIC S. BASTASA
Give Away Genius In Exchange For Compassion

soon he will give away genius
in exchange for
compassion

soon he will trade
himself for the wisdom of the nonsensical

soon the irony
triumphs
paradoxes grow like seeds upon
rocks

from the sands
shall grow
a castle that all you people will definitely
love

RIC S. BASTASA
Give Back To The People Their Poems

every poem written was taken from them

picked from the slums and the public market and the churches and lonely houses and dirty bus stations

like an empty tin can of milk or a rotten tomato or an abandoned shoe
a leaflet, a flat tire, uprooted trees, and scattered garbage

you heard what that woman vendor said about the price of her fish and the price of rice and the price of gasoline that seem to be irreconcilable

you write them everyday the recent stabbing at the gasoline station and the kidnapping for ransom in that old city where the mayor got most the
the ransom money

you write them everyday
giving them a voice in your world of poetry these truths that you have taken away from them: it is time to return them what is due them do not ever be silent move on, create the lovely noise, spread the word that the poems on that ivory tower are not there anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Give Me Another Moment

i hurt you,
that is a fact,
i make you bleed
i have seen the drops of blood on the floor on the bed on the corners of your house, i leave now as you say but give me another moment for me to say the words i may have been unkind and selfish and not deserving of your purity of your love that surpassed my mortality, look at me for the last time, please give me a few seconds for me to say the words:

I have always loved you.

(and if given another moment of my life :)

i will still love you. Always I will.

RIC S. BASTASA
Give Me Space, Give Me Time

It is the hands of time that its hands caress My weary thoughts. So much
Have been lost in my fingers Slipping away. I walk down The road now, to freedom.
Hand in hand with the tree And twigs. Feeling the Caresses of the leaves
On the road to my freedom.

Give me space. Let my wholeness Occupy. I need to expand My choking life. Give me time.
Give me the healing hands Of time. Let me sleep on its Palms. I am throwing my Hands in the air. I want to fly Now. Sensational. I must.

RIC S. BASTASA
Give Me View And Let Me See For Once The Happiness Of You

i am writing you a letter i have to tell you that you have to come and visit me even for a while i am writing you from the edge of a cliff i am tempted by the abyss of its height and emptiness

when you come
make it a Friday
bring me a frame of another reference

give me view
and let me see for once the happiness of you

RIC S. BASTASA
Given The Chance....

indeed, i know,
and much indeed, you also know that this is a cruel world, someone is screaming for fire and as you know, as you once wrote, there is no fireman

it is a cruel environment, indeed, as the fire grows, there is no visible water.

indeed, we know all these things, and it is hard to accept, we reflect what they too are: are we not cruel ourselves, given the chance for a revenge?

RIC S. BASTASA
Given The Last Hour To Live

if
given the last hour to live and on the last minute
you ask me if i still have things to change

i will always say
no
i have enough of this

let me try what i have not yet tasted let me go to the other side

they say
it is better there no dark nights
no pricks

just us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving

it is not at all times that i must gain
there is time to give without counting
the cost
it is part of the emptying so God may fill
my coffers again

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving All Of Me

i maintain my innocence and so here i am silenced by time for what is the use of speaking when the heart is sleeping in complete peace,

what is the use of bragging about this peace when you never for once live inside the embrace of its trees so full of leaves so blessed with the coolness of its solitude...

in this silence i feel the fullness
of being.

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving And Giving...

the hours
as spoons

you are the best soup

the spoons
take you like

mouths of hungry workers

you are consumed
and what you see

is an empty bowl
and this gives

you a sense of fulfillment since

you have served
so well and what is left of you

is the silence

and the emptiness
which is what is

life all about:
giving and giving

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving And Keeping

i am not greedy
i am offering you all these you know what are all these from the beginning of the grass and worms i am leaving you all these my treasures they cannot hurt you neither did they hurt me for i am not blind for i am never a slave for all these

they are not mine
neither shall they be yours even if you keep them conceal them and sell them when the right time comes our fruits are never ripe our trees forever tall.

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Away, The Last Stage Of Perfection

whatever is saved here now must be spent
or simply be given away
because happiness on its first stage to be itself must be shared at the last hour it becomes completed
when finally all of it is given away
all of it, all of it,
its perfection is its own annihilation and then you go to a place where everyone arrives affirming the truth of said paradox
all of it, all of it,
yes, my dear self,
all of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Back

this is what i have taken from you
many years ago
and you do not remember

i am now returning it back to you
with an open heart
my hands stretching out to reach you again

you still wonder what was it what is this all about what i am giving back to you i am giving you back this empty heart these empty hands this empty mind this openness my gaping mouth

my hollow body

you still do not remember
many years ago
you have taken them all from me and i was wearing that smile of the willing victim

it is about time that you remember the sadness that clings like a wilting vine on our fences

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Eroticism A Chance....

let go
youth at 16
and 17
let go
let them be let them savor
and be tired let them have what we missed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Hope A Chance...

we are assured about the sound of drum beats from all the continents of the world so assuring that hope has given birth to more children of hopes the women dance and the men beat the drums the children watch for a while and liking the sounds of these drums beating slowly then wildly and then contagiously exciting the children begin to clap their hands and step their toes sway their bodies and sing the songs of hope
again

the world spins
the universe sways and gives birth to another star

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Love Its Due Freedom

seeing both of you gives me that feeling that i am not alone

that i have cut off possibilities in me

and then i leave you both in your sweetest moment together
as you close the door
against me

i go back to the place where i belong
where i have grown trimmed like a bonsai

i bow down to earth humbly acknowledging gratitude

i have nothing to curse it is simply my own arms embracing my own body my hands clasped as one eyes closed in happy acceptance

i do not envy love
i always give it freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Reason A Break...

my own intelligence
does not serve me resigned upon a certain bleakness
i am into a break
on a broken piece of
glass
where i see a face in shatters
the heart copes up with some hues like the northern lights like star dusts

that realm that we touch beyond our comprehension that faith that we keep beyond the fences of good reason one wonders why we have lived in comfort so far why we have become unlike the restless rest?

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Smiles

the smile is palliative
made possible by plastic surgery

it is of course different from yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving The Carabao  Feelings Of Wings

The carabaos are grazing again It is summer and
The white herons are teeming On the green fields

Some take the usual sight
Of friendship
The white heron on top Of the carabao’s back

They are so close I wonder If there is this familiarity Between them
Their friendship has lasted For centuries

They say the white herons Feed on carabao's lice
And to repay the kindness
The carabao gives the bird Its free ground ride

I disagree totally
There is no pecking that I see
And there is no distance Whatsoever that the carabao gives

This is friendship, this is a picture Of friendship, the heron is giving The carabao the feel of its white wings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Them All Away

i am going to my room and look at things that i do not need that one this one

i do not need this and that and that and that and the choice
has become a long list of attachments and storages they all have become one big garbage and my world has become nothing but a garage and the mezzanine floor and the basement

there is no more that nice feeling of the living room and the music
room and the sounds of little birds chirping at the veranda
and the open windows

today i have decided to give them all away

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Up Giving Up

it is a surprising remark at the end of what to give up
for instance
take the following 'Give up complaining——focus on gratitude.

Give up pessimism——become an optimist.

Give up harsh judgments——think kindly thoughts.

Give up worry——trust Divine Providence.

Give up discouragement——be full of hope.

Give up bitterness——turn to forgiveness.

Give up hatred——return good for evil.

Give up negativism——be positive.

Give up anger——be more patient.

Give up pettiness——become mature.

Give up gloom——enjoy the beauty that is all around you.

Give up jealousy——pray for trust.

Give up gossiping——control your tongue.

Give up sin——turn to virtue.'
etcetera,

the twist is the last: give up giving up!

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving Way To New Beginnings

when i arrive home
today
it rains heavily

there is no one home

i have my own key still i open the door and close it i hear quite clearly my footsteps reverberating in all the corners of the wooden room

there is a sad music attached to each footfall

i open the glass door to hear once again the sonorous sounds of the rain falling on the tin roof gushing and flowing freely upon the gutters
down in the drain

it is like remembering and then wanting to forget but then forgetting may sometimes mean
the pain of having to throw off yourself
bits and pieces of you like raindrops
from the roof
down to the gutters till it is taken by all that is drained
in the canals
of your personal
history

well it can mean too much like a heavy weight upon your breast compressing
your heart

then you justify

this is life,
no one lasts forever
relationships make their own
natural endings

to give way to new beginnings

RIC S. BASTASA
Giving You The Scenario

i am the culprit who gives you the scenario of his driving alone on one stormy night the white bridge taken away by the strong river where there is no more connection, and you write me hoping that this cannot be true, because you always believe what i write and because i always assure you that everything is true, oh my, oh my,

the storm is true, and the river and the bridge too, and its color and its rage but oh my, oh my,
the one who is driving the one who was lost and stopped by the side of the road and wished that the tree above him may fall on his car and damage it and even kill him inside the confines of his anxieties need not be me, he could be someone else, a neigbor, a friend, an acquaintance of the mind, a character of his short story, or the mad man in his poem or it could even be you in some figures of speech yes, everything are possibilities, and oh my, oh my,
yes, i finally agree,
on that stormy night with all the details in tact trees bending, leaves blown away, rain as thick as walls, rivers raging like a revolution darkness as black as ink howling sounds like dogs seeing the bad spirits oh my, oh my with all the stark detail they are so real so real that i know how it feels like i am touching the flame itself from the dirty kitchen, well, you are right he could be me, how can i now disown who i am and what i have seen?

RIC S. BASTASA
Gladness....

when you sit alone on a chair beside your window facing a long road of this village thoughts come and form a chain link upon link
and seemingly it takes you to more roads and windows and doors and valleys
you hear the echoes of its sound
you see
the beauty of a chain of daisies on a stretching acres of grass despite the long journey surprisingly you feel the magnificence of wander you name the world
you tell it
you are lost deeply lost nevertheless
it is the excitement of all these
that makes you
face
the anonymity
of gladness

RIC S. BASTASA
Glimpse

the flower may curse the caterpillar at first glance consuming its leaves greedily
rushing for the next stage of its life

then the silence of the cocoon where the flower
doubts

and then the excitement of the birth of the yellow butterfly

the hope of the flower
and when
the flying begins
the flower unfolds
blooms

and the consortium begins the nectar flows

and the flower
turns into another fruit
back
to its seed form as the butterfly nears its span
like a glimpse

RIC S. BASTASA
Glimpses

don't you feel sometimes a glimpse of the Atlantis when you dive at the sea?

don't you feel sometimes
a hint of an image to our eternity?

don't you feel the depth of our being down down to the blackness of
the ocean?

RIC S. BASTASA
Global Climate Change

a mosquito finds this place colder, there is a shift somewhere he flies into the warmer places where blood
is abundant
somewhere in the north
he takes with him
dengue and malaria

cold, there is a shift somewhere
he flies into the warmer
places where blood
is abundant
somewhere in the north
he takes with him
dengue and malaria

that is a fact, on record with the Department of Health

cold, there is a shift somewhere
he flies into the warmer
places where blood
is abundant
somewhere in the north
he takes with him
dengue and malaria

this cannot be fake.

RIC S. BASTASA
Global Warming

a cockroach
on top of the roof wanders
where the humans
are

as the sea rises and the trees drown
as the glaciers melt and the mountains
slowly disappear
like chocolates melting under the hot tropical
sun

even cockroaches
get lonely too
missing the the logicality of mankind their love for words their cravings for poetry their jolly conversations at night when they are all drunk
with wine

RIC S. BASTASA
Gloom And Doom

it was when your excitement was only the strong wind from the forest the ripe mangoes fall for you to pick them up you run for excitement, the thrill of ripe fruits falling to your hands it was when your sadness was only about a failing grade on a math quiz

it was when your happiness was the carabao ride from your nipa hut to the public school it was when your sweet face was kissed by your mama your hair caressed by a friend simple memories

it was when your escape was the plunge in the river with your naked friends it was when your conversations are about fairies and princesses and frogs and lost shoes it was when the coolness was the thick grasses spreading

on the plains

it was when joy was the playing and bathing under the rain on the month of November now these changes have made things more complicated people are hard to deal with and a self that is deeper, darker and difficult to really understand now there are more severances, dreams that do not come true failures keep coming, alienation of the self, the soul from the body reverses, and uncertainties, longer nights, without the stars,

a moon covered by thick clouds, the heavy rain promising another big flood gloomy crystal balls, smokes of fire, and misfortunes of the mind that earthquake is not the last.

when will this bad karma ever end?

RIC S. BASTASA
Glückschmerz

what have you
done?

you are laughing
when another innocent man is hanged?

RIC S. BASTASA
Go Ahead My Friend, Leave Me

go ahead, my friend, leave me for i am tired and weary let me take some breaths of air so i may fill my lungs let me take some glasses of water so i may quench my thirst go ahead, my friend, take leave let me stay for a while and think about what i have lost along the way of this long journey something in me is broken something so vital fell along the roads of my past

i am taking my time to think so i may come back and gather the pieces i am dusting my feet
i am combing my hair
i am stretching my arms i am looking at the mirror i am looking for that door where you have never entered before

go ahead, my friend, give me time to be alone so i may become whole again so i shall not have lived my life in vain

RIC S. BASTASA
Go Away Little Girl

Beautiful girl
You have grown such long hair Flowing like river

Go away now, follow that river Find the sea follow your flow To the vastness of This bounty

Go away now and be yourself Beautiful lady, earth’s bounty

You cannot find love in me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Go Away..............................................................

i'd take you seriously, idol, i follow you every moment when i travel. In Macau, i read you. In Beijing i talk about you to another Australian tourist while we walk the great wall.

in Bulgaria i cannot help but compare you to their idol too. Big parliament building.

wide rivers and a cruise to brag you again. Time is a revealing book. The world is tired of you.

Mongolian barbecue. Buzzing bee.

well, i am dropping you. I am no longer taking your seriously.

you are a passing wind. A storm.
wash away everything. do it quickly.

we will be happy with what is left even if there is nothing.

go away. My ears are pierced.
go away. we are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Go Back To A Former Body Of Smooth And Tight Skin

who wants not to slim a little to simply whisper
make a hush
and live in peace?
who wants not to go back to a former body
of smooth and tight skin and strong arms and
muscled chest?
who wants not
to be beautiful again
and thirsty for love
and have those dreams of youth
fulfilled?
time is so unforgiving.
fate is uncompromising.
here you are
waiting for the next bus to your last destination.
you want not to look back.
everything is nice
it is over.

RIC S. BASTASA
Go Girl

go girl to faraway zamboanga find the shells silent by the shore find what you have lost for the past years away from us

figure out what your hand can hold figure out what must slip there like sands of time tell me what is left from your sorrow tell me what we can repair your silence must the draw the scene for tomorrow: a sailboat, the blue sea, the wind that is so free

RIC S. BASTASA
Go On And On

It is like
I dive in
The depth
Of the sea
I stop breathing
And all
Of them
Are waiting
Time
And tide
Go on
And on

RIC S. BASTASA
Go To Poetry My Love Is Telling Me Find The Best In You.

i look at the lines
of my palms
as told by you

i had a glance of
yours
and the stars are twinkling for you

i look at my palms
again
and see a storm

at night i reflect upon all these
and i keep on saying
'damn these self-made
storms!

these lines, mere creations of beliefs

go to poetry my love is telling me
find the best in you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Go World

go world.
we are all set to run
this race.

but take the fire
of love and pass
it to another

who is too
eager to join
this race?

go girl!
go... run and have the real fun!

RIC S. BASTASA
Go, Go, Gone

blinking lights of neon creating an illusion like a go, go, go, and then gone, things and colors seemingly moving in reality,
not at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Goals.....

it is not a question anymore of whether i am in or out or whether i am acceptable or disgusting

it is the passion that works now automated,

it does not consider anything outside itself

it is burning to eternity it lights

and whatever darkness is there it disappears

and those who had seen what is happening within

and of course no one really bothers simply considers it as a form of routine something that must be discarded because it can be the source of envy

as

imagine, this, as other lights face
and die

as the darkness of their hearts win you continue to shine

glossy in the universe like a new born galaxy whirling faster away from them who until now cannot understand or simply refuse to because they do not have it there is no inkling nothing to speak

out there new stars come out exploding

ordinary men continue tarry on what is not important like building a house for their future when it is not there yet where is it? it is here that is the perfect hint so far.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Always Answers Prayers

When the idea is not right, God says, 'No' No - when the idea is not the best No - when the idea is absolutely wrong No - when although it may help you it could create problems for someone else.

When the time is not right, God says, 'Slow' What a catastrophe it would be If God answered every prayer at the snap of your fingers.
Do you know what would happen?
God would become your servant, not your master.
Remember: God's delay is not God's denial God's timing is perfect Patience is what we need in prayer

When you are not right, God says, 'Grow'
The selfish person must grow in unselfishness The cautious person must grow in courage The timid person must grow in confidence The dominating person must grow in sensitivity The critical person must grow in tolerance The negative person must grow in positive attitudes
The pleasure-seeking person must grow in compassion for suffering people

When everything is all right, God says, 'Go' Then miracles happen
A hopeless alcoholic is set free A drug addict finds release A doubter becomes a child in his belief Diseased tissue responds to treatment, and healing begins
The door to your dream suddenly swings open And there stands God saying, 'Go! ' Cheers,

RIC S. BASTASA
I have always wanted to be
what you are,

oh, how i like it to be
where you are now,

and so i follow you,
every step
that you have taken is a map
of my destination

you are inside that room and i want to be in there too but the door is locked, i knock and

no one hears it,
you are deaf and blind

no one opens the door for me and i begin to look at the window
they are closed too and i go behind the house to find the kitchen door it too, is closed

and i stand there alone outside, and it rains and there is that sound of thunder and lightning is the only one that gives me the flashes of light to light my path

i am scared, of course, i am normally scared by what is happening and you are there showing your back at me dining with the rest of your guests

these successful people who hold in their hands fame and fortune and who can withhold or grant other people's opportunities

i am abandoned, and you are there inside that room with all these societal gems

i give up,

i shall find another world of my own, where opportunities are given for free no dirty tricks, no influences, plain merit and fitness, and skill and competence,

i will work it out
from within, and i challenge myself with these words:

'soon, soon!'

i will be there, because i am good and God will hand it to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Bless All Those Pigs...

at the end of my day, i ask myself what do i get?
a plaque at the bottom of my teeth that is irritating to my gums?

are they going to give me a promotion to the nth rank so that i can be well respected even by those goats and skunks and slinks and slugs and mugs?

are they making a crown for me a scepter in my hand, a purple robe
for kings with golden threads of epitaphs for my grave?

i know what i can really get from all those circle-loving snobs.
those mopy dicks, and perfect pimps of power and play, i get nothing but wasted time and white falling hair and osteoporosis on my backbones from their air of empty promises for at the end, the music is nothing but theirs for their own exclusive dances throughout the night they are drunk and horny and they go own fucking their own selves like pigs and dogs.

and i say, oh,
i really love that and surely i will miss you all

with tongue-in-my-cheek i pack myself like a bag and go wildly in the hills where all my arms are waiting to embrace me myself like i am their long lost red blooded brother turning blue and black
because i am too stupid to work in their sty....
God bless all those pigs! ! !

RIC S. BASTASA
God Has Never Abandoned Us...

Trust in Him
Forever.
Pain? Share his pain
He had more than enough.
Sorrows? He lived it while on earth.
God never abandons us
But in our blindness
We do not see His arms around our bodies.
He is perfection testing the waters of our soul.
Always, always.

RIC S. BASTASA
God In His Mighty Kingdom

Heavens
too need a Queen the stars are the glittering stones
of Her Crown

The King
is so kind and powerful in the vastness of its Eternal Spaces

Its eyes
The Suns and Moons
Its hiding places
The Planets
Its Emissaries
The Comets

I speak
As one of those Invisible
Insignificant Atom
We are
But Negligible
Molecules....

RIC S. BASTASA
God Is Asleep

even God
needs time to sleep spare Him this Time with your praise
i think he is fed-up with all the praises and invocations
and prayers for peace and progress
and other prayers for self-interest
Let us try a little bit altruistic not Disturbing Him
in his rest today
I think
he likes us better on ourselves independent of his kindness
where we are kind
because we are
not because He is
I guess
we can write poetry
without
including his originality
His poetic greatness is above
board this time
we try on our own
be glad for He loves this quest
on our own hands on our own feet
with our own
heart as guide.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Is Coming Back

God is coming back
with the Son and the Father and the Mother and the Holy Spirit
and all the angels and saints and all the angels of heaven

just to see you again in your disbelief just to check on your faithlessness and he will utter your name your age your work your address your circumstances what you do what you think what you plan to do what you want to think are you the bride?

are you ready for the groom?
are you ready for this walking on the aisle? this marriage of God and Man this surrender of mortality to divinity?

are you ready?
that is the question

an order, a command, a request, these demands of love, some responsibilities of loving the obligation to care for the other the poor and the oppressed, the sick and the dying the meek and the humble the widows and the old, the orphans and the children lost the fetus and the bleeding navels of innocence for salvation.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Is Good

God is Good
God is Great

Meet him
Now or later

When are you ready?
Be on time

With the Bomb
Be aplomb

Be cool
Wear Wool.

Don't be a fool.
We are all.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Is Good.

somehow it is not all about love, it will be sometimes a shame
if you
know all about these

i must tell you since i am about to burst and i can be a disaster

i do not want a world annihilated by my silence

i will say a word and i will not stop right there i will describe a place there is a bridge there
between us

the boat is in my hand i will carry it to you you will sleep like the water i love it and i see it i am mesmerized it sees me but it does not feel it keeps on doing what it does it stops finally like a movie and i the fanatic have to arrive at my senses and sing my song the wall hears it and wants to shed tears it is a very lonely song that even the wood can easily understand

i must stop telling you my lips are shameless and my head is about to crack there is an understanding and it is inside the heart of our solitude

now you understand but i am not walking away i am staying in the name of life and its colors let the man in black wait as i begin to count my fingers for the last days of my life the boat is ready and the weather is fine the afternoon is cold like wood with misty dress i am writing a letter to my best friend who died a month ago and i am telling him i am staying for a while i put the famous postscript that i keep on reminding him when he was alive stormed in so much depression

life is beautiful
God is good.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Is Great

God is great

Because when you fell
Upon a cliff

You really fell
And there were no angels Who catch you
For safety

God is great

He opens the door
To your new world

Now, you have become One spirit with him.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Is Here....

last night i had a very sound sleep it felt like a still pond without a fish but only moss and stone and light like there was a full moon drifting among the tree tops no ripple of the air from the winds of the sea and i remember what i dream no bridges and flood below this time it was like a Chinese painting of a river and mountains behind

it was so peaceful that i can hear the sound of the leaf falling from its branch and i told myself

this is home,
this is heaven
and what i have been dreaming has become all too true i now, believe,

God is here.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Is Here.....

what i remember of you was your rudeness to that woman who had no work
and who worked for you but you kept that rudeness through and through.

karma, karma,
chameleon

that's it. that sums it all.
now look at you, white haired, flat tire, folded, passe,

do not complain.
you deserve it.

God is here

RIC S. BASTASA
God Is Not Alone

God is not alone
Loneliness is not his attribute Perhaps
Solitude until he created man & woman cats and dogs, snakes and rats, fine and water.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Is So Good

he even reserved
a marsh
for mosquitoes to breed tunnels cold and damp favorite for boas

inexhaustible trees for termites

how much more for
you
for whom He prided
with so much
love?

RIC S. BASTASA
God Knows What Is Best For Us

in your prayer
he says
make your pleas and requests

be general
and original

he knows what in particular is best

so please do not be a dictator

RIC S. BASTASA
God Marvin, You Had It First In The Bus?

so marvy boy, you had it first in the bus seeing this beautiful portal of her flesh and without an erectile dysfunction you made your silent explosion

go marvin go
keep going

let us have more explosions like these they cannot kill

RIC S. BASTASA
do not insist. God has a way of punishing your unreasonable widow persistence, the Greeks are warned about Wooden Horses, and Achilles' heels, do not insist. Don't you know that sometimes God grants prayers purposely to punish those who are hardheaded?
Pray what God wills you to be.
Do not insist.
God knows better
Before you were born
He knows what is in store for you Till the last breath. Till you dropp dead.
So do not insist
Natural laws cannot be compromised.
Legal laws maybe.
Man made ones, those that twist and pride on Compromises.

Do not insist. Let God flow inside your Heart. Let the seeds grow As he sets the fertile soil of the mind
As he gives the light in your Sun.
As he prunes and cuts
and Makes you
The most beautiful tree within the forest of your tangled hairs.

RIC S. BASTASA
God The Provider

that morning
was a happy one

we had breakfast
and we talk about the places i have traveled

the scent of steamed rice and fried fish and brewed coffee
refresh our souls

i told her that to a traveling mind
depression has no
house

one must not worry about money
the owner of all these is God
and he is our Father

someone borrowed me
money and did not pay but i never worry
i collect it from the Father and He pays
at higher interest rates

we talk a lot
we laughed and sighed your wife seemingly has recovered from her malady

under the skies beside the lush of trees a bush has given us
the best white flowers in town

on September we will be at the west coast
when we come back
we will treat you for a special dinner a treat from our God our Father...

RIC S. BASTASA
God To Myself

And as God loves me (like the way He loves you, one day, he comes near me trying to explain
about myself, thinking that i still lack understanding)

but i ask him first Will you please explain yourself to me?
Perhaps by then
I can understand myself.

My parish priest says
i have committed
blasphemy

since then no matter how i attentively listen
to the sea
and to the wind
and to the sky in vain

i have never heard of Him
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
God Writes Me...

i, too, know
how to write 30.

whatever,
this enormous darkness
my eyes close.

i always look up to Someone who spells my name
and who knows how to say it
correctly....

He understands.
He knows when.

it is not a matter of waiting or winning it is a matter of Mercy and
Will. His.

RIC S. BASTASA
God!

the way she makes love
to me
the way she moans at the top of her ecstasy
makes me feel
that she knows what heaven is all about, God!
i doubt if He knows her.

RIC S. BASTASA
God, My God

as i finally find myself alone in my room, like a sun turned off planets falling on the floor like dust from the curtain and waste basket filled with crumpled scratches of works unacceptable to my standards, i learn for once
to pause in silence just fifteen minutes to call your name, how i have relied much on my self, my faith and pride to a determination, i must know by now,
like a broken planetary system,
the you have laws,
merciless, that you have love,
also always forgiving,
i go upon another poem praising your Glory Without you I am nothing, In You, alone, when I am alone Shall i find the humility of rested, aloof, understanding, this Genius of You, where i am
nothing but
a whimper.

RIC S. BASTASA
Goddess

goddess of the moon
you descend upon my humble beginnings

you kiss me
to my surprise
my body rises above the shadows of these hills

you take me away from my roots and like a flower you take me by your hand i am cut and though i love you i bleed

i am human and i cry
i am human and i still long for my land my roots still miss the soil of my birth and my origin

goddess of the moon
you have wings to fly

look at me
i have none

and so even if you love me and even if i love you grant me my wish to be home again.

for i am just human and wings have i none.

RIC S. BASTASA
Godly Thirst.... here is this thirst in me, not in the tongue the mouth denies it here is this thirst
that water or wine or juice
cannot quench

it is a thirst that forever stays

a dropp of rain
a dew from a leaf

a word from my Creator shall satisfy it.

RIC S. BASTASA
God's Offering

for what is good works
without faith
what is mercy without action what is humanity without the awe and wonder for the divine what are prayers without hands what are promises without fulfillment what is a kind action without worship what is man without his God?

RIC S. BASTASA
God's Poetry

God is finding it hard to make us understand who we are and what we can
be,

He stoops, goes down from His throne
and tries to learn the language
that we are using,

when He speaks and
we listen

we finally hear the songs

the sounds of His poetry....

RIC S. BASTASA
God's Smoothie...

drops of rain over my naked body tonight in my loneliness are notes of heavenly music trying to comfort me as I open my mouth trying to taste God's smoothie.

RIC S. BASTASA
God's Starry Creation....

the night
is well studded with stars too much darkness running in contrast with flickers tiny lights who had hung these stars on such a huge space of darkness?

the void is filled
and we all watch
awed

RIC S. BASTASA
God's....

what you have taken which is not yours
shall be returned with all the penalties and interest and surcharges

what you have given with a meek heart shall be returned too
in the same manner
but this Time it is God that gives you more than you can ever expect

must you choose greed then?
must you stick to avarice?

you give a seed
then you shall have a tree filled with fruits and even birds nest there and find their rest

RIC S. BASTASA
Going Back

i always find myself
going back
to where i am, on early mornings, i promise myself a brand new beginning, a place where i shall find myself exciting, on a new venture away from here, but i am always at a loss

the irony of going far away and not arriving at what i perceived is my own place, and so

here i am again
watching same shame in the mirror gazing at my own eyes shocked that i have never changed, regrets nesting in my head lustful eggs hatching in same shape of sinfulness

i wait until i am to ash begotten.

RIC S. BASTASA
you hear the noise
of the day
drums beat so hard on the city streets
on a mardi gras

people march with the sound of victory
upon a mass demonstration
of their
mobbing slogans

masks of faces
that you have not fully figured
crowd the mall

outside
you hear the loud screams of the heavy rain the blowing horns of the cars and the jeepneys
on those rush hours people are running
women are holding on to their kids from school
lights are turned on blinding
your view

this is the horror of
the
daily bustle
the noise of every day's struggles the existential
angst
that no philosophy
 can hide

time knows no one
and the hours treats no one with specialty

x x x

you rest your head
upon a green velvet sofa

and you remember

hearing once again the variant bustles of the hour at the center of this huge mall
the sounds have turned into pins and thorns
in your brain

there is no rose nothing red nothing blue as a cloud

x x x

when you finally go home to the house that you leave days ago which you think created the worst loneliness dragging your life like a steel ball
to your chained
legs and arms

x x x
you close the door and then you know how beautiful is silence
for now

how satisfying like water to your thirsty mouth how comforting like the softest pillow to your head....

RIC S. BASTASA
Going Back To H Happiness....

it's been a time
we have been writing
grief,

how to write all these we share no secrets
we mirror
each other's sorrow

somehow we must make a
pact
that next time we should try something new, - -perhaps joy,

have we forgotten what it is?
we go back to childhood, in that tiny village at the tip of this archipelago, there is a river there that winds a thousand times before it reaches the sea,

it is taking as always the path
of least resistance,

we followed it, it did not break
rocks,
filtering itself clean
by those hundred pebbles,

when it arrived at the mouth
of the sea
it was purified, and not content with its transparency, it has finally joined the salinity of the bigger world

all seem to lead to an ocean where everyone loses its identity, to be one again
into an anonymity....

RIC S. BASTASA
Going Back To Happiness....

it's been a time
we have been writing
grief,

how to write all these
we share no secrets
we mirror
each other's sorrow

somehow we must make a
pact
that next time we should
try something new, - -perhaps joy,

have we forgotten what it is?
we go back to
childhood, in that tiny village
at the tip of this
archipelago, there is a river there
that winds a thousand times before it
reaches the sea,

it is taking as always the path
of least resistance,

we followed it, it did not break
rocks,
filtering itself clean
by those hundred pebbles,

when it arrived at the mouth
of the sea
it was purified, and not content
with its
transparency, it has finally joined
the salinity of the bigger world

all seem to lead to an ocean
where everyone loses its identity,
to be one again
into an anonymity....

RIC S. BASTASA
Going Back To Kindergarten

Wittgenstein went back to kindergarten trying to figure out how a language is learned to know that language is born not with a word or two but in a cluster of sentences like the birth of a baby that comes not with spare parts of hands and legs and toes but as a whole coming out from the womb and with a spank from this world cries to let you know that it is alive and has already some feelings and thoughts of its own. Like us, we learn the language of love not on a piecemeal basis, we know love when we are accepted as a whole person, not as bits and pieces and chunks and cold cuts, but as tomato sauce garnished with cheese and mint and rosemary and meatballs and salt and pepper.

Wittgenstein went back to kindergarten
not as a kid but as a philosopher.

RIC S. BASTASA
Going Back To Old Poems

going back to some old poems written years ago, i change
some words,
finding some ways to make them
rhyme and taking in another breathing
changing fonts
and graphics
and let the new year pass unnoticed rededicating them
for someone new and lovely and caring
recycling, retitling, reviving, revising
and so the year
may have passed
with a lesser pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Going Crazy

going crazy going agog going wild going bananas going going going you are with me my love and i am flying, jumping, leaping, stamping, diving, whistling, jetting, exploding, bursting, overflowing, with you my love my heart pumping so much blood inside my heart into my head into my thighs where am i? what am i?

with you i am complete.

RIC S. BASTASA
Going Crazy For Something That Does Not Last Forever

it is crazy
to think that something lasts forever or someone or love

it is too crazy for you to think of me as a thing that lasts forever or someone that you can always love you go crazy over something that you want to hold and cherish

forever

there is no such thing
perhaps such things as air or of the spirit of God and angels

i am not God neither am i an angel when you hold me with such a grip i begin to bleed when you kiss me feel me i am not forever

i am just this moment and then like a snap of a finger

i am gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Going Out To Enjoy The Faces Of Nature

summer. do not sell me books i have enough of books.
i am going for a swim
bringing my girl.
i will go naked then up and down. we are going diving, seeing not just corals we go for black urchins and
electric eels.
we go bubbling and taking deep breaths
upstream. you ask me why?
well, this is summer and i am not reading books.
i will be kissing the beautiful faces of nature.
and since this is summer motherfucker, i must do it well.

RIC S. BASTASA
Going Up?

going up is finally a minuscule. atoms drifting stopping on the lines
of our palms
then we go down
to the cells of a leaf
it becomes another version
of the universe
a nucleus surrounded by planetary
neurons

RIC S. BASTASA
Golden Advice From A Friend

if you fail now
don't worry
try next time

if you are excluded
don't worry
soon the right season shall come

if you are down and out
don't worry
try again
there is always another chance
another time

if you fall this time
or if you fall again and again
don't worry
try and try again until you make it next time

there is no limit
rise, rise, always rise from it
from where you have fallen

don't worry
there will always be a place for each everyone
under the sun

there is always a place to be happy
for you and for me

RIC S. BASTASA
Gone
	here is no pretense
i will be in love again

i will dream of another and ask for her hand

we will take a walk
and kiss in the dark

i will forget you
that is what i will do.

so please do not go
i can be foolish without you

RIC S. BASTASA
Gone And Gore....

we did not really make much as masters of this land

there are too many
of us
we are the ants and there are termites

we simply pass the
time
we cannot stay that
long

we are moving like camels in the desert
we do not own the sun
we tread on deserts

we do not really make much as owners of this land we killed the tigers and tamed the elephants

we have our tusks and bellies
we are the masters of yore
gone and gore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gone And Makes Me Free....

there was something so important last night for days i keep folding it neatly in my mind while we were traveling and waiting and sleeping

it seeps in like another dream nothing vivid like a fading memory of melting chocolate in my hand
one summer

i treasure it and promise myself that soon it will be real i hide it from you and it has become invisible in my fingers imaginary little things in my mind that make me alive and survive through the night when you are

snoring in your sleep

today it is gone but mind you it has set me free.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gone With The Wind

never again
she says at the top of the hill against her body
the sun fades,

never again
shall i be poor again
never
never never never

the same lines i keep telling myself
moving away from the theater
after the show

RIC S. BASTASA
'How can I tell
If I shall ever love you again As I do now?'

time has no mouth anymore.
it has only wings.
i am carried away and on few words my soul dissolves
my body rots
turns to dust
no nectar is found in my hair no flower grows from my bones
my name is encrypted
in your womb
on mere initials
of my pen.

RIC S. BASTASA
Good Deeds

i will be passing from this world in a little stopover this place of mess and Mesmer for me to get a pass to another world perfect as they say sorrow less and infinite i know what i have to offer good deeds, and everything from love, and the faith that must never fade i am waiting for the next door to open for me look at me in my silent selfishness oh, this excitement that i cannot speak and share

with you

not minding about the series of the pains anymore setting aside patches of pleasures thinking about the next train the final destination

RIC S. BASTASA
Good Luck Baby

yOU MAY IEEAVE early in the morning But tonight let us talk let us dance
let us sing
Once and for all
And when we are over
Leave
But for once tonight let us view
The big Dipper
And the Little Dipper
and Andromeda

Let us drink to all the beautiful stars Above our Silly Heads.

RIC S. BASTASA
You don't have to say more.
You have said enough.

I have said what i wanted to tell you.
Do not misinterpret my own concern for both of you.

I am rebuffed, and suspected of having to discourage you of your chances for the winning and the prestige.

I swallow this all. I do not have to say more.
I pray that i could be wrong and that you are right.

When the right time comes, and you come to me and tell me That they have all swindled you into that wrong choice

Then by that time, i shall tell you so, That i have said my lines and that was all that i need to do.

I do not have to say more. Now then, when the falling out comes Both of you shall be responsible. You shall tell them

The party is over and you have nothing more to give Because everything you have has all been carted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Good Morning

waking up late
light pushes itself inside the slits of the windows the sky blue curtains filtering the hues of little rainbows

he rubs his eyes discovering he was all alone the whole night

dreams he could not remember anymore sets the curtains aside opens the window
looks at the garden below sees the birds feeding on some grains spread to the ground he hears a song from his heart a nice one now

and to please what has been disturbing him a void, a thorny feeling, last night, or was it the other night he compliments himself with good morning world

thanks, i am still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Good Morning Self

i wake up
checking my navel.

i face the mirror
to see my eyes blinking

a face blinking
i am happy to note

that i am not bound
anymore
to that which obsessed me last night

oversleeping over a naked body inside my mind

this morning
as i open the window of my room

i see a black bird rushing like a stone thrown into a white sky

a stone with the wings
of the wind

good morning self
goodbye
persistent lust

before i forget
i got a new mask

an office man
with a very serious face no jokes

just benign remarks about today's winning politician

RIC S. BASTASA
Good News

my friends i am back from a long lull, a sleep for years rip van winkled, i wake up discovering wings on my feet like Mercury on my shoulders like Michael,

my friends, i could not wait to use this gift i am flying! i am flying! on to the swift wings of poetry!

RIC S. BASTASA
Good Night Old Self

unlike before,

when i unlock a door in a house where i have lived all alone
for years
i feel like crying hearing the sound of the living room in the anguish of the silence that it has never chosen there is always the imagined sound of rain and it is eerie

there is a spiteful space that is always trying to strangle you a hollow hole inside
my guts

i must have gone beyond the demarcation line or i must have jumped that fence having grown longer

these pair of legs that have outgrown the looseness of corduroy pants now it is different

i feel the content of having to accept that when i was born i never had a twin now the silence of this room is comforting telling me that the crowd in fact does not serve but choking as well with whatever whims it has

what to do with my life or where to do things the way they should be properly done i am fed up with all these dictates of the mob i have proclaimed that i am a different reality in fact more beautiful than the face of the average the many, the crowding people as i open this door, i hear the song of my own silence sweeter than ever

i leave my dirty shoes take off my stinking socks i lie my body on the soft sofa and take my sleep

i don't even need a television to make my eyes weary and thus have the much needed sleep.

good night old self. I shall dream anew.

RIC S. BASTASA
Goodbye

sometime i tell myself when you say you are busy doing lots of your routine

i am here
and have always waited for you i am impatient

and calls this affair 'quits' there are other rivers to sail seas to travel

fish to fry

my dear honey pie
i have other things to do beside you i can't wait that long enough i am not getting any younger i have other windmills to conquer my dear sweetie honey pie let me say the word goodbye!

RIC S. BASTASA
Goodbye Cutie Pie, Honey-Bunch Goodbye sometimes how i wish that i should have loved you i like to be a dictator in power to make me love you how does it feel to be one?

one that sharpens feelings to pierce love?

how i wish i love you how i wish to deny myself and love you forever but it is not that simple love speaks and love decides for itself as though it is a self within this self speaking upon its own terms and acting like a stranger to me, and i am regretful, why it is not you? for here am at mess with the person that i love i am hurt but in love

i am destroyed but still in love two faces of reason and emotion a day and night in one revolution i have to go now, goodbye cutie pie honey bunch, i won't let you hurt me more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Goodbye For Now....(But It Will Never Be The Same Again)

i do not really know
how to say it

to say something that will be painful

as painful as a stab in the back of the mind

this mind that circles upon the circling thoughts

of the wind
i guess i may just say it euphemistically something that pains someone who is with me by simply saying it is all goodbye

for now

(it will never be the same
again)

RIC S. BASTASA
Goodbye Is Such A Sweet Decision

now you are saying goodbye such a sweet word to another word: overstaying leave me in peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Goodbye Is Sweet And Not Bitter.

i take a quiet corner under the pine tree

it is getting darker and no one is in the house for a wife leaves her husband sometimes

she needs space and the other takes his quiet
for a change

numbers come to his mind things account for things nearing a conclusion:

perhaps i shall take refuge to my roots
that old house there
abandoned
can be rebuilt to acquire back lost memories

sometimes there is no regret there is nothing missing and in the middle of this
thinking
one rests for good

goodbye is sweet and not bitter.

RIC S. BASTASA
Goodbye My One And Only Sparrow...

i could have written more for you. I could have cooked the best breakfast for you.
i could have spared more of my rarest time for you, but i like to repeat the same lines before: i still have miles to go i still have other promises to keep.
and i cannot really have you.
and so here i am again with my sweet sorrow: goodbye, sparrow.

RIC S. BASTASA
to live, one must say goodbye to the good old days white shiny porcelain days no rug and hands can ever hold them for like the wind they shall go and what is left shall be your days of weariness and dust

settles on your palms and on
your forehead

the sweat of the coming days living a life of the anonymous wanting to be free from the prison cell one makes for oneself pains self-inflicted and the game of solitaire begins anew the trucks that pass on the road all huge and the same

over and over again
one spits and goes back with his cards. Fate rules.

RIC S. BASTASA
Goodbye....

i must write you with a heavy heart this heart of stone

blank, numb, gray, rough,
silent,

i write this at dusk,
there are yet no birds flying in the twilight skies some boats are still there but only shadows

i want to be completely stoned to bleed, and be broken, to be hurt by you once again in this masochism

last night, you spread your legs, you hang yourself in bed crucified in the ecstasy of our love on concealed identities no one sees us, no one knows us, except

the angry God.

this morning, i see strangled bedsheets, off white, empty glasses on the floor, stained carpets, half open windows looking into the vast blue ocean

RIC S. BASTASA
do not follow me
there is a curse
for all good men
who arrive always at
the end
with nothing
but i never regret this thing
i am good i was good and that is enough for me
for in this goodness
nothing pleases me except the goodness itself
look at me
do not envy me for i am good for goodness sake
there is no money in it
i tell you
but what all i have is what money cannot buy

money talks
but i have arrived
at this point
when it is not worth my time anymore
money talks
and i am not listening
at all

virtue is as silent as the still water
it has the voice of
winds
the dance of leaves amidst the morning light

RIC S. BASTASA
Goodnight Adria

sleep tight
it is morning in your place time to sleep

my night is still to come it is darker than ever no stars
no fireflies
no moon

just the brown dog barking and barking outside the gate of my home

i guess, i still have more words more lines to make and i am not stopping tracing our trail
i may stop until

it is morning

RIC S. BASTASA
Gordimer's Awareness

the voice

the conscience

the interpreter,

she is

nadine, not naive,
the african
lover of words,

the loot,

to pick things from life from reality

land politics,
fractured human relationships, AIDS,
violete,
belonging,
identity,
corruption,
education,
the situation of refugees in Africa, ecology globalisation.
third birth.

what now,
nobel prize?

RIC S. BASTASA
Gorgeous Moon

i love to be under this gorgeous moon
i love to be
with another gorgeous girl in town

RIC S. BASTASA
they didn't know
that miss gorgeous
always have haiku
for breakfast...

she is so cool.
i guess.

RIC S. BASTASA
and you hear what God says that you Mr. rich man has to sell all you have and give all the proceeds to the poor

and Mr. rich man
why are you so sad?

do you hate the church? do you not like God?
are you bound by the strings of your purse?

you still want to be saved?

RIC S. BASTASA
even the dogs eat the crumbs
on the floor

sometimes we his children simply do not recognize the cake
reserved for us
on top of the table
with flowers
and the matching
sweet music
prepared by our father

we are the spoiled brats in the house but he is so patiently
waiting

and very silent

RIC S. BASTASA
Gospel Truth

truth is not a closed door or a fixed pillar it is a seed growing inside our heart and looks for the light of the sun until it wilts because of too much glare, ...truth is the sun that keeps on shining to the earth and sea.. truth is the earth that keeps its orbit...truth is the sea, it is wide and deep, it is always beyond and mysterious... truth is word, slipping from my grasp....

RIC S. BASTASA
Gospel Truth

brother you must know that your suffering today is inferior very much inferior to the glory that is promised in the ripeness of your time feel the eager longing for the coming of that time for soon brother you shall be freed from the decay of your self-created depression

for quite long
we have groaned for that redemption that spirit within that hope for the coming.

RIC S. BASTASA
Got A Bedrock

got a bedrock for my being not the usual softness of the pillow that mothers usually give to their sons
it is hard on my head it can smash if i meet it headway and so i am as careful as you not to break the rules of engagement
the ethics of conduct the code of life
this is the rock on my head above it the rope and your hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Got A Timetable

know that i got a timetable, i do not like a prolonged breathing since the birth of the pink bud i always love gasps find thrill in grasps and quick finger holds and soon releasing nothing usurping nothing over holding on to something
lest everything gets so old and familiar and death boring
something is new in the newness of beginnings nothing must last an hour longer i am listening but not for long there is no use for your argument the pink bud blooms only for a very short day the nights are longer the years cannot convert themselves to bright days there is no exchange substitution is null and void novation does not exist in this personal world no erasures

all original everything ends as desired by the law of nature why worry then?
i stop as written.

RIC S. BASTASA
Got It Now

ture knowledge speaks that it knows really nothing and the fake one finds its way to laugh and dance....

RIC S. BASTASA
Got Nothing

i got nothing
my hands are bare
i am empty
my head is light
i have a space in my heart i have nothing to give you i promise nothing to you why do you love me still?

i have only love
i have only the promises of death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Got Peace And Nothing To Squeeze

Take all these pearls let me have my own peace

take all these gold
i will choose love enfold

i am asking for more like hope and grace azure wisdom, and understanding no to war, nothing to wrangle dispose this car

nothing about a spar

i live in this house
of now got peace and nothing to squeeze.

RIC S. BASTASA
Got Sick

when you left me i got sick

got really sick
for a long time

but i did not die
even when you

left me, got sick
and got sick for more than i can handle, but i did not die somehow i

got sick but i cannot die,

i am alive and soon i know

i will be in love
again, my promise

to myself, my hope eternal.

spring, and new moon, and change.

RIC S. BASTASA
Got The Ball

gaping head divided half-thought half-work of my hands look straight to the eyes looking at you a ping-pong

existence of wrinkled hands the ball stops in midspace words attempt a beginning the ten fingers grab reality the eyes and the nose united in partnership something fishy and illuminated the ball is in your hand now you are in control of your heart keep it your fingernails stuck on the surface of her skins

RIC S. BASTASA
got tired finally of this passion there is exhaustion in arranging words to make them poetic to you there is this unwinding to say the obvious without the aid of some silly metaphors

this is something that we hate and here we are trying to project a smile adoring beauty
where there is none to feel
and see

RIC S. BASTASA
Got To Be Free

you got to be free sing it like queen

but the problem is
you must know by now,

where to?
do you know?

RIC S. BASTASA
Got To Work Too And Earn My Living

the hours passed
so swiftly
now it is 9:04 on my watch
i have written
poems
candidly
direct from the mind to this blank eyes
always staring at me this dumb monitor

i like to write more
but what can i do?
got to work to and earn my living
and got to hammer
some more
this mortar and pestle of this justice system that does not really work....

the Chief Justice
can kill me
but oh well,
this is nothing but work
and work
and work
and work

nothing to do with justice
but work
nothing personal (so it is but impersonal)

no eyes
just this blindness hammer, hammer now hammer out, hammer in this gavel

this, oh, well, this bread
of life

this death for some this escape for you

RIC S. BASTASA
got nothing to do 2day just scribbling and chatting to a friend who is also pretending to be someone else feigning happiness and embracing all the sadness like, well, i have to admit,
like us.

i don't even know if i have to stop scribbling whatshamakalit, a poem? gee, i don't know
i am simply unstoppable, bad, and too
earthly.

RIC S. BASTASA
the government arrests a citizen for urinating in a public
place

the citizen is asking
'where is the toilet? '

the government says
'it is none of our business'

the government arrests
a man for not paying his tax but the citizen cannot arrest a government who misuses it

the government arrests
a lowly citizen
for wrong parking

the citizen is asking
where is the parking place and the usual answer is still, 'it is none of your business'

RIC S. BASTASA
Government Worker.....

as you work so hard throughout the darkness of the night a candle light a peaceful wind
away from the crowd walled.

there will be stones loaded
in your brain
some thorns on the flesh of your arms you feel the crawling of the ants on your belly or some butterflies wanting to fly
away from you

in the morning you rise from a war surviving soldier of the nightmare oiling a gun
clicking once again the triggers of your life putting on the shoes and the vest arranging the cap in the mirror seeing yourself once again ready for another encounter in the city the enemies are invisible they meet you as friends on a disguised fidelity you are fully armed in this diplomacy an extended war on the tables of negotiations and compromises you put your name, sign a paper and submit yourself to the judgment of the people Grab The Eternal

it is this
wrong premise that if i find another lonely person and when we talk for while i become less
lonely

or if i put off his light will that make mine
brighter?

does the misery
of other people
a cure to our miseries too?

happiness is simply a state of
mind
i must create
and recreate it

it is reinvention
time: there is no
forever
grab the eternal.

RIC S. BASTASA
Grade School Boys Playing Volleyball Early Morning

the streamers in different colors look like leaves on trees lining the path that i walk upon daily

i do not want any involvement now i have so may ideas to think about at the playground however, the cheers come out loud for school boys playing the volleyball preparing for the Meet.

the coach with a fat belly like the volleyball twice its size sits on a chair shouting to the little boys making the most of what their tiny hands can do, i remember the past, my hands too tiny to manipulate the ball, and i feel humiliated with the strange hit on my face.

i am involved now. On the same level, i am now the sports spectator.

little dreams wanting to be big outright.
broken bodies, not worth it.

as early as that age when my fingers bend, i opted for the dignity of just watching and then writing everything.

that little boy over there, his smile is so dry.
i can relate. I am like him, so afraid.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gradually, It Happens

gradually we like how dead things rise from their ashes managing to take a shape like the neck of the heron the white long neck of the heron amidst the green rice fields just below a crumple of blue clouds and then the sun slowly rises from the hills that look like breasts of a woman just awaking from a very deep sleep beside her lover who is too drunk from the many jugs of happy moments which he drank....

last night, it was raining so hard but they never noticed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Graduation From A Love Poem

perhaps it is true
too much love can kill

in love poems too
got much

and now reading another love poem gives me goose bumps

sometimes i think
making the love poem and another love poem simply shows your having not loved much and your being not loved in return love more and even if unrequited love some more get up from a loving fall cure that bruise

mend that broken heart love still even when the world has learned the art of indifference and hate more than any other takes time to learn to do this to know that love is giving and giving and giving

and then after years of this kind of loving and giving you will experience what i had gone through now the love poem doesn't tickle anymore nature does the waves of the sea caressed by the hands of twilight the moon nesting on the marsh the grasses all wet with dew the clouds pregnant with the blows of the wind the gentle rain falling on the roof tops the geese on their v-flight the fledgling jumping from the nest to learn to fly you see, this is what i am engrossed in now.

a beautiful world that i have not described well enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
Grafted

from your skin shall rise
the fruit of your persistence

a new face
shall come out from the mirror
and you shall
be happy

your name finally written
on the door
of your family
history.

RIC S. BASTASA
Grain....

when life one dark night says that it is tasteless and so bland like the air the leaves of the mahogany trees hear it and the following morning confide it with the sea breeze
who tells it all to the sands who spread same story to the waves of the shores who deliver it to every desert in the sand who keep all these in the heart of their sacred solitude and the wisdom stops in there every dry sand of the desert thrives upon this story and sleeps so soundly.

'it is a fact and we are not surprised' the grain of sand so proudly tell the others.

RIC S. BASTASA
Granddaughter Sitting Beside A Sick Grandmother

wearing a short hair
a smile
her hands clasped
she sits beside her sick grandmother

the faint light
by the window
enters gently
filtered by the thin silky drape

the grandmother
is dying and her daughter has an axe to grind

she comes as an offering a link between two worlds
long separated
by indifference.

RIC S. BASTASA
Grandma

his son wants to get rid of grandma

she removed the stickers of his childhood from the walls of his room
his cabinet cleaned of his toys and he did like it

he has a mind of his own and does not want to be grandma's victim
like his papa

he thinks that when grandma dies or when she leaves to finally return to her ancestral house their family
shall be one again

he wants his pride whole his ego unfractured unlike his papa
he does not want any stories about a boy who was beaten almost to death in the name of parental respect when grandma begins to speak he shuts his ears and closes the door of his room

he still dreams of his stickers and his toys and a world without grandmas and now papa must choose Grandma's Old Piano Was Sold

grandma's piano is old.
she died ten years ago
being the second wife of grandpa.
my mother is her second child that she sent to piano school but father found her and married her when she was still 18.
and i was born as their fourth child. Mother knows how to play the moonlight sonata which father loves to listen at night when i learn how to smile and laugh.
One day Papa found another woman whom he said made him new again and he left Mama.
One day Mama died and Papa married that woman.
One day i left home.
One day the piano was sold One day the piano was taken to another town so far away from us.
One day, all these things, the piano, Papa and my step mother are forgotten.
But then the Moonlight Sonata comes again
One night
From another piano nearby.
The keys are no longer made From elephant tusks like grandma's old piano.
Not the off white of ivory.
So white and smooth like a well brushed teeth of a very young boy.
I like to hear it when he learns how to gnash.

RIC S. BASTASA
Grapevine

every morning i put landmarks
after having surveyed night's domains

meeting people and hearing their own stories taking notes where i can possible situate my feet my hands are not fists they are tributaries of fingers i have seen worlds compared it with mine

there is this empathy that somehow redeems my losses how wonderful is the listening about the travails of suffering it lessens mine

grapevine

RIC S. BASTASA
Grasp And Grapple...

upon a piece of old rosewood
the hand keeps its grasp

grappling for a hold to prevent the fatal fall

darkness surrounds
the grappling
continues
the man in me
must live

RIC S. BASTASA
Gratis Et Amore

for the poems that i have written and which you read by heart, i bless you with a prayer for luck for another year

for the poems which i have not written yet, i wish you a longer life, so you may read them when they become finally written for the poems i have in mind and which i will not write i wish you patience i wish you some prayers may these poems realize their worth may they decide to become truths with you i pray that God may be also kind for those still unspoken and may God bless your mind may they open up like tight buds to become the flowers of the world, the sun to warm them, the rain to shower them may these poems live and linger may they be like grass always unswerving to grow and cover everything alive and loving.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gratis Et Amore (2)

helen cannot sleep, and she keeps on sneering at the moon and writing it with poems as though the moon is a man and as though the poems are her letters pleading
to be loved by its glimmer and shimmer imagining them to be the rough hands of a lover and throughout many nights she had been waiting to be loved

there were many things that she did all for the moon not even for the stars until one morning she was found dead inside her room her face towards the moon her eyes closed her window open and the people who buried her that same day told about the shame that she was naked

i know how it is to be like her and it was all done in the name of love
gratis et amore.

and they said, all of them, after all the prayers were said Amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gratis Et Amore...

do
gratis et amore

we sing
without getting something in return

there is no money in poetry
they always say that

art is purposeless
and those who indulge in it are damned
to eternity

but here we are masochists in our own right pains from hammers

right into our head
blasting
exploding
as always as we reap all our

fourths of Julys
gratis et amore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gratitude

that moment was the moment of gray hair

you hug her and let her feel the beating of your heart though weary like her she feels something so alive the song of the grateful heart the sound of love triumphant!

RIC S. BASTASA
Gratitude Galore....

the bees are thankful for the nectar of the early morning flowers blooming to the softness of the rays of the sun

the butterflies too are grateful in their fragile wings floating in the air and so are the trees to the rain that falls the mountains and the seas and so are the stars thankful for the darkest nights which gave them their brightest gleams i am thankful too to God in His greatest glory for all the blessings received pouring in softness like light in the dryness of my skin

RIC S. BASTASA
Gray Cliffs And Gray Skies

on a foundation of giant boulders of rocks
in the desert
of Saudi Arabia
where the grass are resilient to heat and change
the gray cliffs rise to touch the gray skies
as though
they are on a conference
for something bigger
than the giant rocks below and higher than the heights they have achieved something must be so important
like the need for rain and seeds
and men and women with thick callous hands to work for them

RIC S. BASTASA
Gray Cliffs And Gray Skies (2)

i watch the blackness later and clicked
the camera, i signed out and tagged this as something bleak
and dangerous

RIC S. BASTASA
Great Are The Dialogues Of Plato

great the dialogues of plato

the true, the good and the beautiful

rereading them
makes the monologues

of a woman scorned so super ficially inferior

but for a change
let me listen with one ear the other listens to Basia singing

I don't really mind
and there is really no need to run for cover freeze thaw promises

RIC S. BASTASA
if you speak
you create an imbalance about what we see & hear & touch

convince yourself that
for a while

not to speak is great respect

for what should not be spoken

RIC S. BASTASA
Great Soul

shall i liken you to a water that once quenched the longings of this dry river bed
after which you leave leaving no trace of you since you appear just like the rest of those ordinary flow
of water?

such greatness
always unrecognized
as you
very well like it to be when no one is looking that is the time

that you assume finally
the body
of air

they all breathed you but they do not really know

RIC S. BASTASA
Green

Green leaves of summer Shades of green in moss and Lichens sticking to stones and tree Barks and some greens on twigs And branches, some greenish Patches growing on pavements And even on walls and fences, Some greens in mangoes and Rainbows, some greens in shirts And eyeshades of a woman,

But what I want to really say Is the green in your eyes,

So green with envy, and now Turning red to unreasonable anger,

How can you ever change?

RIC S. BASTASA
Green Eyes

got green eyes
as green as grass on mama's lawn

got green eyes
over greener pastures
on the other fence

got green eyes
baby over your green eyes when i stay
and you leave me

when you tell me
it is over
got green eyes
as green as broccoli & lettuce
for my salad
that i serve
and share with my newly found lover

RIC S. BASTASA
Green Ricefields

green ricefields spreading to a distance some white herons circling and landing finding a hiding place for a while gone and then the wind comes from the trees swaying the white herons in a flock of fives fly away again to another rectangular spread of a green ricefield a scarecrow stands in the middle of the place the clouds arrive turning from pale to grey to blue the sun has come in full grandeur i am just amazed, sitting on a bench praying simply watching and wondering they all say that i am lazy and doing nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Green Slimy Vomit

that is what he felt precisely when she rejected him.

Phlegm, and fecal matter and cockroaches, and worms.

he likes to pretend that he is a dog retaking what has been expelled.

RIC S. BASTASA
why should i waste my life on so much grief?
i do not deserve this.
why should i, a man in his fifties, waste my time on things that i can no longer change? i am unreasonable on this.

why should i go back to places whose paths deny my presence?
i am crazy on this.

i go where my feet take me where my imagination like wind to the kite blows me.

if i have scissors now, i will show you how i will cut the string that you are holding now.

set me free, my Lord, set me free i have been yours for a long time now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Grief

to see how the light faded to hear how the sounds for help are swallowed by the darkness and the extreme silence to feel that no one wants to talk to cease and stop and finally be gone forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Grief And Sorrow

grief and sorrow one day in the life of a man bathe under the light of golden silence

together they walk and move towards the place where patience lives in the house of simplicity and forgiveness
under the nooks of forgetting hope is touched but there are no tears there is only the dimple of freshness to start anew

a map unfolds showing the path to tread on the hills of contentment lies the new born baby of
happiness

the stars glitter and even the moon which had kept its silence
slides away from the comfort of the darkness of the night's embrace

it sings the most beautiful song of solitude then rests its fullness on the edge of the pond of bliss

RIC S. BASTASA
Grief As An Island

grief is always an island in the middle of the sea it will always be that way even if the storm has already gone away. Grief will always be an island

separated from the rest
of the world

even if the waves on the other side keep on reaching for its shores, it does not want to keep them here to stay.

grief will always be an island silent on the long wall of sands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Grieve Not

grieve not for what God has taken away from you

grieve not
for what you will miss for another hundred days

God knows each missing lock of the hair and for love God replaces what was missing
with a thousand loves

For how can God ever see a tear falling from your eyes without giving it a replacement of a rain of joy
sometime

RIC S. BASTASA
Grievous Sins Of Man

raping the earth
killing the trees
molesting the creeks stealing the fruits
shooting the birds depleting the forest
converting them
to golf courses polluting the air and space with
so much noise
swindling the natives lording over the poor get rich quick-schemes nuclear war heads
pulverizing everything silencing the people falsely testifying to the sun, the stars and the moon.

the worst:
not doing anything

RIC S. BASTASA
Griotte By Marjorie Evasco

the story I remember Sandie Mbanefo remembers her Igbo father telling her the old village storyteller sat in the moonlight middle of a circle of ears and drums beating the story in to let each one remember stories from the very beginning simple complete the way to throw nets onto the center of the lake the way to cast spells to tame spit of the black mamba in the countless spirals of words seeking the listening whole navel dark pit memory called Mother in any tongue in any story remembered and passed on in time from time to time resurfacing in another other parts of the world woven with skein like hers like mine like Lina Sagalar Reyes bathing in the moonlight because Bohol Electric cut off her supply her power to tell the moonlight to me undiminished under the candleglow as she remembered how rain water splashed a shiver of fireflies on her brown body washed off salt and silt from her twilight search for mollusks at Loay Beach with the village women who also tell stories what they remember everyday where crabs dance mate spawn at new moon tide extraordinary things glowing in the mangrove swamps while my feet tread their way back to the night Sandie showed me Nigeria the ceremonial clay figures in the round of storytelling pulling me into the silent stretch of words as time curves the gesture of fishers’ nets on to another lake where I sit listen with Mabel Alampay to the blind storyteller of Talisay remembering Taal Volcano spewing lightning bolts the memory burned onto thin membrane of eyelids shut forever into seeing inward a story of awe passed on passing

RIC S. BASTASA
Gripe Session

open up
burst, bubbles,
flood, and then
settling down
and then
the pond.

RIC S. BASTASA
Groping.....

the language is barbaric, don't equate it violence but with something that we cannot understand because no matter what we do open our minds like windows scrub the floor to start with a clean slate even take the roof
at its senseless option the vessel still cannot hold on to what is given perhaps the vessel is just too small or the message is egyptian
like thai characters or arabic
we give up perhaps there is nothing to be understood at all but something only to be felt like warm or cold, or hot potato or melting ice cream in our tongues yes, do not figure out because there is nothing to be figured
it is a jargon, a drool, a language of feelings, so miserable and
enigmatic simply because the hands of thoughts are groping in the darkness and there is nothing there except the coldness and the silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Growing And Aging....

growing up
is to know what a ripe fruit is,

the skin turns yellow flesh soft orange spots appear
sort of
wrinkled matter,

you mellow
down
and exude that responsible scent
of maturity

that sweet flavor
of surrender

you know what happens next to the ripening

you fall, and there is no regret
it just happens that way

as natural as what this world takes without question or complaint

a kind hand picks you
up
your want to be desired to be consumed wholly is now perfected.

RIC S. BASTASA
Growing Old Together

what possible option
can age give us?

now that twilight has come its hands caressing our weary hairs ah, there is something yet that must fulfill itself that promise to grow old together the acceptance that our flesh has surrendered finally giving in to the triumph of the spirit bending itself to the fading light
of our younger days

we shall be holding our
hands
as we sleep tonight

RIC S. BASTASA
Growing Roots.....

the way to know you is to close my eyes to touch and feel you my nerves sing like a choir of children whose sharp voices pierce the sky your name engraves itself on the bark of my tree self

i grow leaves and branches i, too, know how to touch your sky i grow roots deep into the layers of our memories

i keep the silence of the ages travel alone this damp darkness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Gtg

i have promises to make and kilometers to keep before you sleep

* a la frosty the poet.

RIC S. BASTASA
i guess
loneliness is a self-inflicted catastrophe,

a choice of ruin, sometimes, a place
of pain
where the mind is trained for the greatness
of his spirit

loneliness is sacrifice, a choice to find a place for the purification of the soul this soul that is so strange amid the market of confluences of happiness and lust and insensitivity it chooses this loneliness, silenced silence, silent patience,

patiently coping with the meaning of one's existence
gauging the limits of the happy mind penetrating the wall of prohibition, genuflecting on
nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Guesses....

must i have to pretend that the first one was true?

could be, most likely could be, i nodded and then i too, shook my head, but granting

you think that it was true and i must believe you and then it was over and then came the second time just a game, people play games, like kids, could be one of those games i play, and i want to quit, but who can?

and it was over, and we want to forget it just the same, the third one came and with more experience more meanings are tried to be attached, like some strings, and again, like all things with ends, it too was over, we got it over and over again and then, just like old things, we forget, we tried to remember, but powerless are we, we are not quitters, we are winners, we keep saying, we are winners, and then gray hairs occupied our black territories, and then we surrender, we accept, we forget and we try to remember again everything is over, like a game, everything ends, like the world, like life, befriending death befriending everybody, saying yes and yes and yes, and then we approach the bed, and utter the last word, thanks, it is over.

now, shall you leave me? i am at rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
Guests

we try to blend
to the colors of the guests their perfume
and laughter

sooner the blend dissolves in discordance
we become overcrowded in thoughts like an overloaded boat their perfumes bring the foul smell of pretenses and their laughter simply does not synchronize with our grief

we wait forward to the last day of their stay and when they leave we ponder that this must not be repeated again we are better left alone in our sorrow

the guests cannot understand we are disturbed perturbed and molested

there are hotels anyway where they can just throw their dirt leave the linens unfolded chairs scattered on the row water from the faucet left open

there will be no murmurs that at times
all these familiarities breed nothing but contempt
Gugma Kuno Nga Dili Gugma Matod Pa Niya

sakit
ang paghandom
sa nahitabo kaniadto

anaa pa gihapon
ang tugsok sa
punyal
nagpabilin
sa lawak sa
hunahuna

apan ang nahigugma mahigugma lang
gayod gihapon
bisan pag ingnon nimo
nga kini
dili gugma

balikan ang lawak nga wala nay
sulod
hangpon ang habol
nga wala nay
kainit
hagkan ang alugnan nga walay aping ug
ngabil

RIC S. BASTASA
Gugma Ug Gana

ang gugmang tiunay magpabilin bisan kon ang gana patay na

(love and desire)

a love that is true
stays even when desire
has died

RIC S. BASTASA
Guilt

you made love to her and she's too young to handle her own death you leave her vanquished and you keep the world blind with your poetry she was too young to know how a beautiful world ends the flowers of her youth in the garden wilt you keep the world blind but soon the dragonflies shall come it may not be too late

let some flowers cover her tomb

RIC S. BASTASA
Guilty Feeling

at dusk a black cat
by chance
happens to meet me
along my path

it stares at me
for a long time
and then runs away
into the dark

dissolving like a black blot on a dark spot lost in the ocean of
space

and then up in the sky a lone star twinkles

RIC S. BASTASA
Guilty Pleasures

the pleasures we seek all honey
taken in by the hundred tongue buds
inside our thirsty mouths come back as bees that sting
all the skins and flesh we keep

we are inflamed

RIC S. BASTASA
Guitar Music And Tweeter....

your guitar music far compares to the sounds of birds tweeting in my personal computer

inside this rectangle is a world i keep to make me
alive

the lives of other people spread before me my sorrow lessened, my despair spread like the light of the morning sun over the plains and mountains

trees sing, keep singing waves keep the chorus of all monotonous slumber

if only i have four wings if only i have twenty claws i want freedom and if i cannot have it then i must take this war soft guitar music is slipping through my bones and the tweet of virtual birds are keeping me alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Guns And Thorns

you take him in you want him to fit
and be
in your circle

late at night he asks if you are coming
as promised

he was looking for you you said in due time you will be there a little busy body this time making peace
with everybody

he was asked to talk about something that he never has an inkling as to what is it

about a world that he never for once entered nothing like a cave for bats like him
operating more in sound rather than sight

he was honest
sadly he declared
' i have nothing to say' this is not the world of my fathers
'i am glad i am the victim i have not killed anybody'
on the other side
i write some notes,
' why do we transport an alien to our world and make him live there and suffer?

why did we invite him to a party and then we are not there to make him at home with every social climber
of words?

and no one
talks to him
to make him a livable
home? '

you are unfair
i keep talking to myself i cannot be responsible for this i am an introvert in fact i belong to no one even with the good
i have long classified myself as beyond the tower of the church or the pinnacle of governance

i have light kept inside my body

it is you
but you are never there you leave anytime you want to go
you come when you like
coming

when you arrive at last,
the damage has been done.
He regrets your procrastination but will never tell you.

if you did it to me,
expect a rebellion
my words are knives
guns and thorns....

RIC S. BASTASA
Gusto Nako Mahimo Kong Gary Soto

gusto nakong mosulat sama kang gary soto kanang mora kog trabahante nga gadala anang pala og piko kanang gakandos sa yuta og dayog pangagho, kanang gahandom kos bulad nga sud-an og humot kaayo nga mais nga luto og dayon og inom sa bugnaw kaayong tubig gikan sa atabay, gusto kong moadto sa uma og mosimhot sa mga bulak sa iyang mga gapas, gusto nakong makita ang iyang giingon nga pula kaayo nga adlaw nga iyang gikumkom sa iyang palad, ganahan ko nga mahimo kong gary soto, magtindog nga gary soto, og molingkod nga gary soto, og modagan nga gary soto, og moambak na gary soto, kadtong mokuyog sa mga langgam nga namakwit paingon sa San Francisco, kanang mora kog tubig sa kanal nga mikuyog sa pagdagan sa hangin paingon sa mga lugar nga dagko og sweldo ang hago nga trabaho, apan dili man gyod nako makaya si gary soto, mas nindot man gayod ang pagsulat ni gary sa iyang mga pangagho, sa iyang mga kahiubos og pagpalutos: dili gayod ako mahimong gary soto, mao nga ako ania, mao lang gihapon sa akong pagkaako niining akong mga balak sa pag-eksperimento. Sagdi na lang, basin puhon maawat ko ra si gary soto sa iyang pagkamaldito

RIC S. BASTASA
that we are one into this pits of lonely wits beside each other or on top of one another on this narrow hole one understands fully why others scream and lose their minds and if lucky enough recover and regain the poise of a sane island, this continent of void is vast, and it is not vague years in embrace of our weaker dispositions have taught us
t here is nothing strange t here is nothing that is unacceptable we master the pain as the saying goes to know what real happiness means i guess i must have said much and more but much and more can never be much and more unless one opens his heart and have it cut and sliced again as a matter of sprouting love, endearments, bliss seeds that grow too well because the ground is made up of rotten expectations the carcasses of ambitions the humus of hope.

RIC S. BASTASA
you challenge me to write about nothing you say it is nice theme something that we experience somehow when we are down depressed like a man screaming on the boat bound to nowhere
rotating upon itself the paddles all so confused

i don't really believe that i can write about it it is beyond my grasp beyond the clutches of words but let me tell you that when i begin to sigh and take a deep breathe i know that it is here inside my heart but my guts deny it

RIC S. BASTASA
Habent Sua Fata Libelli

the destiny of books always depends on the reader,

the destiny of my poetry depends on the capacity of the feeler

its rhythm its tone
and color
its scent
its ending
its lasting impression

its possibilities like your possibilities
always a memory of those whom we have easily
buried in the realm of forgetting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Habit
	his is by force of habit that my fingers caress the keys
to make another poem
for the day,
nothing is really
significant,
nothing to give us power,
it is like
brushing my teeth,
washing my hands,
gargling vinegar with salt,
defecating,
putting my brief
and shorts,
straightening my collar, inserting my shirt
locking my belt,
combing my hair,
going to the office,
you try going further than all these,
sorry, there is nothing here but just routine,
plain typing, and reporting, stating and even by force of habit without thinking
i said, keep doing what you do with your life,
do not follow me,
there is nothing
important about this,
this is routine,
the usual path,
where everyone passes and goes and enters and exits and exits and enters
all over again
until death surprises
you no more,
comes like plain closing and opening of the office door.

RIC S. BASTASA
tell me
what is it that bothers you?

why you wake up at 2
in the morning
and write a poem
that you keep to yourself?

why you keep all those emotions
inside you?

what is the color of your sorrow?
what is the sound of your happiness?

tell me
why until now you still hide in the shadows
of your being?

tell me now because tomorrow i am leaving.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hackneyed

if you go deep, shall they go with you?
go deeper, take those who love you, what if they do not have your gills and they cannot breathe with you like a fish?

it is still a family, mom and dad and kids at the shallow pool, where baby is wading soft sunlight, strong rocks of bed-floors green moss beside, ducks walking on the banks, seagulls on top, clouds drifting in the skies ah, being hackneyed, or trite, it is nothing

never shocking
copycatting, ah,

these too have their own noble purpose for a happier bonding, less the ruse.

RIC S. BASTASA
one day
i look forward to this that one day
you look back
on this group of words
and then you smile,

you remember something that i once said
and then you trace
the exact hour
of the night where we stayed together

you remember a touch
from my hand
you look back
close your eyes and
dream,

it is enough for me
once,
we both remember
and then
the light fades away

RIC S. BASTASA
Hagpat

ang akong kinabuhi
morag kamunggay nga imong gihagpat ug hinay hinay ang nahibilin sa akong kalag mao na lang ang mga tikog

hagawhaw na ang tingog sa hangin kon molabay kini sa akong atubangan

kon malabay ko sa espidno wala kay madungog nga reklamo

RIC S. BASTASA
suppressed repressed
emotions
restructured to
be understood

RIC S. BASTASA
Haiku 1

some defects in the pc prompts me to write this lousy haiku

RIC S. BASTASA
Haiku For Choices

always have a choice you must always remember that if not willing, - junk!

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
Haiku For The Childless Courple

'coz they can't have kids all their dogs got all their love what a happy life!

RIC S. BASTASA
Haiku For You

The bright moon
An inch above
The quiet pond.

RIC S. BASTASA
Haikunin

every memory of you pierces like a nail

RIC S. BASTASA
Halakangcandisaka

halakangcandisaka
migamit ka sa ngan ni casey walsh nangita na nimo kay nganong migamit ka sa iyang ngalan sa walay pananghid well anyway

nindot bang magsugod anang bag-ong ngan nga sounding like

carwash?

RIC S. BASTASA
Half

half the glass is philosophy

you must tell whether it is easy or full

RIC S. BASTASA
Half Of Me

half of me is darkness half of me is light

half of me is a shadow half of me is my body

one hand is above the other elbow to elbow that is what levels me i ponder upon these one body pulled by two horses in opposite directions i ponder upon a way to tame this wildness this anarchy of my senses these desires not properly canalized on Eros overflowing on a confusion of my mind

RIC S. BASTASA
Half-Open Door

let me try to see a door half-open

let me not be half the man

let there be light though dim

let me be the shadow
to come in

let me not find you asleep

with some living tears

let me kiss your lips
i can't let you die in peace let me touch your lightness let me be this caress

RIC S. BASTASA
Half-Truths

i distrust the half-moon
when it speaks
to me
its eyes goes
nowhere
when i gaze at it
it dimmers
and my world
gets darker
no star dares
to rest
upon its chin
it stabs.

RIC S. BASTASA
Halfway

you ride a boat
now you are at the middle
of the sea
the land at both sides seem far

halfway is a malady.
impatient sometimes
you think
you'd like to sink
and be gone for good

the lighthouse blinks
to help
now there is only darkness throughout

the sea murmurs
fish glisten in the water below

you let the night pass as you begin to count the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Half-Way Through

half-way through
a love poem

you tell me
you will finish it soon

will it be
about you
and me?

not to hurt me
you choose
not to finish

depth within is the pain
of the truth

for how many years will you
be hiding
away from its face?

RIC S. BASTASA
Halfway...

halfway
to exhaustion

death is nowhere
to find

one sits on the grass

meeting beauty
and kissing it

one sleeps with grace

falls asleep
embracing dreams

halfway a door opens
as gently

as a very delicate pink bud

RIC S. BASTASA
Half-Woman Half-Fish

I've read the story about that half-woman half-fish so sad to know that a man had been taken deep down the blue sea and was never seen again because of a deception which stirred the minds of kin and skin

now i must confront you about what i must say & do i can't take both, i can discard the half of that woman

& i can take the fish for my viand tonight good for my body and soul, i am not hungry for tales i am hungry for salt and sea and fins and tails and what is not found in that woman which i can have at my command.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hallelujah

and then
what we saw was a dove above our heads

and what we said was only

hallelujah!
hallelujah!

RIC S. BASTASA
Hamlet Stranded In An Island Surrounded By Sharks

it is the same view from here the sea and the island and the sharks around it it is the same me unable to decide whether to cross the see leave the island and take the risk with all the sharks

RIC S. BASTASA
Hammock Upon The Winds
	here lies sadness like patches of green moss sticking upon a rock half covered by the clear water of the river one may think that sadness will always be there as patches of what we have always wanted to get rid off like peeling them off gently from an old sharp and rugged edged rock sometimes you become so tired planning and doing and then surrendering into the helplessness of a fallen leaf that floats and is carried slowly by the current of the river early morning on a Sunday when people are not around spending holidays on places that they miss for the whole week

and so one lays its tired body on the side of the river's bank wades his hands and feels the coolness of the water and then starts to flow and release what he thinks must be given away one feels the restfulness of finally giving up of not minding about what cares must be done in order to make life smoother

flowing and easier like the way the brown leaf floats like the way the blue clouds drift like the way we let the moss grow upon the side of the rock having more wet times with the clear water of the river having a clearer view of the orange fish within and the shiny pebbles beneath them

words lull me like i were carried by the hammock upon the arms of the unseen winds....

RIC S. BASTASA
i like to be formal with you so we walk hand in hand in the park.
more civil, we go just there talking, not the kissing and the hugging, for that would go beyond the norms of simple acceptable intentions.

but look at you, you are lonely still you dress your face with that grumbling look of an old ass hole.

tonight we go walking again under the moon under the stars we stop under the big tree we'll do what makes us free

RIC S. BASTASA
Hand Me Your Dreams

You have dreams
Suspended, deferred, Unfulfilled, you still keep Them without hope

I am here, tell me your Dreams, hold them like Delicate glass
Or white egg

Hand them to me
I will wrap them
With this silk
And tie them with This golden thread

Away from the Wicked eyes of the world

RIC S. BASTASA
Handel

this morning
i sing alleluia
i never thought
of it

it just comes my heart is grateful
it is like sunshine getting inside

the window of my house that is open
i sing alleluia
alleluia! alleluia!

it simply comes because my heart is grateful To you O Lord!

RIC S. BASTASA
Handel Concerto Grosso

it was like a meeting of cats
the objective of which is to bell the dog

who among you has the courage to do the belling of the dog?

yes the meeting among brothers and sisters before mother died before father followed her before my grandfather died it is about land, money it is all about inheritance who would spend to the funeral without reimbursement?

who would shoulder the bills of their hospitalization using private funds?

none would do that my youngest brother said they died and they have their own money let them spend for themselves then what i want is, he said, which inheritance is mine that is all i need, who cares?

so who will take the bell of this dog's greed?

handel play on play on they are killing each other.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hands And Birds

there is something good in being free when like birds we make the impression that we own the sky that we know how to live in there but the sky can never be our home mortals as we are and birds have claws designed for land we go back to our past and find out that once there was a home there that there is also something good in there we go from here to there and in sum it makes the proper comparisons it comes sometimes like a memoir that there is also comfort in some instances of our unfreedoms the comfort of warm fire imprisoned in our heart the assurances of the walls of the house the hold that we give to the railings of the stairs each step each trust when we feel that our hands cannot float in the air forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hands And Shoulders

my shoulder
cries for help through its aches

my hands keep their silence in prayer

RIC S. BASTASA
Handsome Friend Charlie

handsome friend charlie
of the G community poses in a photo shoot for he says he's gonna be a star someday
we saw it but it's rather weird he holds his brown belt rather than wear it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hanging Like A Cloud On The Arm Of A Cliff

you were so calm like a white cumulus hanging on the arm of a cliff beside the branch of a tree where a little black bird sings

below you
i am the gray pebble watching listening

amazed
on a miniature world
complete.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hanging...

we like to make love
but sleep invades
we wake up we say
we like to make love
but dreams keep on holding us apart
we decide to touch
to simply touch the surface at the middle portion of this age, we shy away from
deeper penetration.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hang-Over

between us is a fence

a set of painted
ing iron grills

we greet each other
today
a formal good morning

i sit on a garden chair
sipping coffee

and you on the other side is having a booze
of your life

a mixed concoction
of gin, lemon, rum, (i do not mind
what you are
saying)

again i am engrossed inside an idea

which is a little bit vague
last night.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hangzhou, West Lake

do you expect me to be happy here? the lake is as old as time that is true

there is this premise that the old lake must somehow refresh me about some past pleasures that i have forgotten

round one: the sound of the wooden boat and the sleeping willows are peaceful along the river edged with boulders of stones there are stories those sad ones about lovers who die without tasting what love could have been

i am swallowed by an ocean of faces and sadness simply comes again uninvited.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happier

logic can be so tiring, though sweet and straightforward but it can be too exacting and sometimes it does not work for us it serves us a bowl of destruction

less the imagination hating the temporary cure of a fantasy an illusion of glass and light
and the provision for smell of rare oils of lavender and lemon

do you know that i have given too much reasoning in exchange for the cold glass of passivity?

i mean, just sitting down thinking about nothing discarding the formula for living like a bowl of clay under the sun containing upon itself the song and caress of sunlight

so gentle like a waft of air around its ring

it is when i discharge what i have when i surrender what i think i must be that i become
fully alive

logic can be murderous not allowing any twist of fate on solid predictions of this and that with no allowance for a miracle logic can kill us how can it entertain other possibilities?

it is all numbers and facts for which life is not.

i embrace possibilities now as logic taunts and laughs i am patient, i listen, i entertain what is hidden from the grasp of the hands of theorems.

you see, i am relaxed, you should see the smile in my face happier than the morning sun the morning daisy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happier This Time

i

I don’t smile
You may think I am giving you
The permission
To think
That I really do not mean What I say
With this grin on my face

ii

I stand my ground now
No backing off
On a wishy-washy
I give weight
To my prime intentions

iii

I tell the truth
I will tell you what I feel I will tell you that I am not comfortable With what you are doing

iv

Tell me I am silly
I will agree
I am not a little bit touchy You are right I am Now take the wind out of your sails

v
I do not have fingers
To point
To make you more defensive I have only my heart
To tell you how I feel
Who are you anyway
To be blamed?

vi

I will make up a list of handy excuses To see what is clearly going on Before I put myself in the fray vii

I am not afraid
To change my mind Whenever I want to
In a minute or two
I may still have time
To tell you
That sometimes I do not Honor commitments.

now, i will be happier

RIC S. BASTASA
Happily...

for Ging
...happily separated
the man demands
his right for a child
and she cannot give it, quits,
she is into knitting
and time heals and
she's into herself into her own womb,

for Joy,
...one plus one equals zero for Charles finally and today i see her blooming happier alone,

for Lora,
...she cannot live without him and she is into culinary arts, that binding marriage
till forever,

and for myself,
...happily i wish for more
honesty, let life be life
let is unfold and give me what meaning is still available,
i am not afraid,
i can live without anybody beside me but i choose to be bound

happily.

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
Happiness

after a hard day's work you keep all things in order pack up your things and close the cabinets make some notes for tomorrow's work again you pass by the bakery buy some cookies

enough for the little money you save for the day

you walk your way towards home and there they are meeting you
by the door in your little house waiting

your dogs
with tails swaying hugging your legs
eating your bread.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Alone By The River

the moon was full spreading golden light on the river
it was so peaceful
and i was naked and alone it felt like steel and my right hand
was fondling it...

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness And Joy

when you look for yourself and find this self within your heart and you touch this self so lovingly
with the understanding of your mind you have found happiness like you put your hands behind your back and embrace your shoulders fleeting and sometimes tiring this search of self that ends sometimes in questioning

how long does this last?
this won't it will pass but it may come again but to last it will not

you either go deeper or you go higher
always beyond yourself

to find another
a heart to your heart a mind to your mind you talk you understand you reach for another hand you kiss, you make love, you share each other 's bodies each other's long lonely nights this can be more than happiness we call this joy

but you go deeper this time or higher if you prefer it
this search for joy greater than joy this joy beyond bodies beyond nights beyond hands beyond time
eternal happiness, this is joy greater than joy we sense it
but not completely we sense it when we look at the eyes of the person we love and who loves us in return truthfully and so beautifully the feelings in our hearts as we sleep and make love and dream and stay together with clasped hands

we have mere glimpses vague but it is there it is the joy that always lurks but cannot fully make us see we are too small yet too young to fully dance the steps and leaps of this i am still looking for this this joy

i know it is there, but i just can't utter it i must know better

i live some more and perhaps if need be die and then travel and be there beyond, yes always this feeling of beyond my armpit is warm and my eyes are still rolling i am holding it i have it in my heart but not competely and so i ramble

in so much waiting, this impatience but lovely still, and yes, so beautiful....tomorrow.

<<<<<<<<< It is far better to seek 'joy.' Joy is related to happiness, but it is a deeper experience. In the search for happiness the individual focuses upon himself, but joy moves a person out of a self-centered preoccupation and provides an orientation towards others. Joy is an experience which connects us to that which is 'Greater' than we are. It connects us to the creative power that is more than the 'I' or ego. Joy gets us out of ourselves and in contact with this 'Other' and with others. Joy can sustain us throughout the four phases of life. If we are willing to give up the search for happiness, we may find joy. It exists near the center of the wheel where happiness and suffering meet and intermingle.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Enough For Me

When we are here
we think only of a road that ends to a definite stop

so when we go near that place we think we are consumed and feel like we are empty tin cans

worry no more
there is another view to all these and it is like a window overlooking a cliff

the trees appear like dots upon a mound and the skies are like rivers blue and white flowing upon
so much space

it is bountiful
and enormous and your heart surely cannot contain
all these

we go beyond and that is happiness enough for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness In A Platter

fruits in a platter, pineapple wearing a crown apples, green and red in shining gloss of their glory,
alligator pear
sleepy,
ripe mango,
your hands carrying them
your breasts
helping to put them all in one platter
of flesh.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Is A Decision

i have long decided to be a happy man, and till this day i stick to this decision, sailing on the ship of happiness along the sea of joy the foams of excitement the winds of bliss

There is no grief in this world of responsibility For God loves a happy man
The smile beneath the heart that sings the hands that wave in celebration
The self in collaboration with Nature in Harmony With the happy disposition of the Earth

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Is Coming....

my dear
have tolerance
for discomfort
for as you know it is part
of growing up

and when you
grow up miracles happen
your hair
grows
your knows longer
you tower
like a princess

did i not teach
you about the pains
of the snakes
when they molt?

have tolerance
pain does not stay
that long
it pays a visit
at your door
to tell you that
happiness is
coming

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Is Coming....(Not Knows But Nose)

my dear
have tolerance
for discomfort
for as you know
it is part
of growing up

and when you
grow up
miracles happen
your hair
grows
your nose
longer
you tower
like a princess

did i not teach
you about the pains
of the snakes
when they molt?

have tolerance
pain does not stay
that long
it pays a visit
at your door
to tell you that
happiness is
coming

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Is Longing For Repetition

Repeat what? say you love me again.
Prove it again. Kiss me again and again.
Multiply the mirrors of mesmerizing munches
love, love, love, ...
make love to me for the nth time.

multiply the branches of the trees of desire free those thousand birds of restraints.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Is Only Real When Shared

AT chow king
i've seen so many new faces eating
the hours alone

no one is surprised one gets attuned to a certain individuality a mode of indifference where one minds his own business like a yuppy

i must be an outdated fool feeling a little bit ashamed to sip my seafood noodles alone sensing a humiliating selfishness underneath the spoon

i have decided though to have a take-out
i am not happy at this chair facing an empty chair as others pass by

i want my noodles shared with someone where conversations become spices where news become condiments where friendship makes the food more delicious simply because the hours too are shared like food for the soul itself.
seemingly the rule is posted in their city wall, here if you want to be happy you have to beg

at the gate you have to choose for whom to beg

it is not usual that sometimes you are refused

you have to beg again and
again

at the point of humiliation you begin to realize

there is not point forcing yourself to this kind of thing you back out from the city game back to your village

you close the door of your house for olive oil, a little salt and bread.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Lies At The Surface Of Things

when we are happy we only look at the surface of everything: like bird in the sky carabao on grass, house on stilts, a river flowing, sun rising, mountains overshadowing us, as we realize how small we are perhaps, even insignificant unless we hold on to hope and faith.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness May Come Later....

there is always
a sorrow inside us

do not be shy
say a little

we, men, do not want to tell about this sorrow women know that but just like us they are not saying anything it is this respect for sorrow that makes it dignified well kept,

well minded, but never spoken when you share it with someone else what good will it give her?

she has also her own sorrow inside her

no matter how well dressed no one wants to take it it is the dignity of sorrow to be silent and just be itself it will always be here waiting for her sister.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Of The Simple Heart

'a glass of wine,
a roast chestnut,
a wretched little brazier, the sound of the sea'

-u & i

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Simplified.....

my happiness now is simple

as simple as a folded
paper
to make a kite and feel flight

it is the floating and the loafing
without an adoration of any person

this love of self and of freedom
this having not to think about what happens next....

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness Without A Reason....Is It Bliss?

i am happy
i can jump out of this window to land on the grass of my old
home

i am happy and i am
singing
the song of the village the song of your
world

i am happy and i am jumping like a frog on the rain on the fields of rice and the hills of cogon grasses

i am happy and i wonder why i am searching for the main reason which i could not really find i am happy because i am happy is it a decision to make?

look at the small boy pulling his truck toy on the street away from home ask him why he is smiling and he will answer you with a smile and a nod and he continues his walk towards the park to meet his friends with their other toys happiness is, and this is true happiness, has no reason at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness, A Visit

happiness comes she knocks at the door and sits on the sofa sips tea
takes little bites
of black forest cake opens up a short conversation about
us

solitude wants more of her and attempts to please her some more with a poem

when it was about to be read she butts in saying she is not staying long she still has to meet a lot of other people

RIC S. BASTASA
Happiness...

To know DESPAIR
and not to dislike it somehow
because it visits us once in a while
uninvited

We cannot just drive it
because it is related to Joy and we must all welcome
a friend of our friends
a relative of our relatives

Take Despair as is Feed it and Give it some drinks
AT night listen to its Hang-ups and always
make it feel
that you too studied well
your psychology
and understood
what life (and death)
is all about

It will stay for days and nights

Be flattered
Perhaps it likes the way you
deal with it

It tempts you somehow
about the beauty of Suicide Just refuse
Say your black and white NO
Do not betray
Bliss, and Beauty and Truth
and Goodness
that you still have inside your hands
and heart Despair like any Creature
also Experiences boredom
and then it decides to leave you
and because you have been patient
tender
and gentle
all along
You must have noticed
that you have changed a bit Now getting bolder
and Stronger and Wiser
and very patient
sensitive to the needs of others
and also listening to the inner voice
of YOURSELF

When it leaves you
Send her some of your gifts
Tell what you feel
How it had always behaved
In your house
and how others too have behaved
The way life should be Send her your smile
and your hugs
And make a promise that
when it comes back
You will always give it a nice
bed and board
That usual breakfast of
sunny side up fried egg
and Thai rice
and brewed coffee
the homemade ham
and baked potatoes

Now you are at home with
Yourself
Now you know how to handle all guests
invited or uninvited Now you know what universal welcome is all about

Wait for your next guest Welcome Joy.

For life is just like
a House
With guests from time to time
Be an amiable Hostess
Take pride
In your little hospitality
and Household Diplomacy
and

with your learned Social Expertise

Where can happiness
be?

ah, it is there in Every Nook of the House In every line of your palm In every lock of your hair In every pore of your skin.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happy Day....

you must know
where to go
and what to do

you have a promise to fulfill principles to live
by

do what is right
always do what you think is right

you have befriended
yourself

your hands know your arms
your toes are in agreement with your feet

you know this dance you feel the harmony of the music and the lyrics

you dance with the music in unity with
the universe....

RIC S. BASTASA
Happy Earthday

today i planted
a tree
in honor of the earth

my tree can make it green someday.

i thank the earth
for the place i live the water i drink
the sea i sail and swim i thank the earth for everything good that is happening

happy earth day
long live the earth!

RIC S. BASTASA
Happy Easter

sun is up
and i wake up to a brand new day

Jesus has risen
there is no reason to be again
forsaken

Jesus has come again
sun, moon, stars in the days and nights of our lives

happy easter here from Mindanao

no more wars
let peace be in the silence of the colored eggs let the rainbows
come
after this rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happy Endings

some poems are sad but we may help them to be happy again to let the poems wear a smile and let these poems like fairies dance in the prairies let them sing the songs of love and passion and thanksgiving and praise and be so venerable before the throne of the divine

i read this poem this morning that has made my day a very inspiring one indeed and it was not that long and winding and direct to the point it simply said: i love you too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happy Moments

inside your room i keep some peelings of ripe oranges, and i squeeze them when you finally take your rest,

at the top of the cabinet i keep a glass of blended strawberries less the yogurt, and i keep the window open for you to see the fullness of the moon tonight and the calmness of the lake, silvery and shiny and shining the view is just perfect for the two of us and then we do what we really want to do we kiss, we intertwine, we make love, we become one with the stars and the silence of the spaces of this beautiful universe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Happy, Yes Happy

feet jumping with joy hands clapping raised to the skies
lips singing your love songs,
naked
you run and then
plunge in the sea
of love
all the waves
of the sea telling
with glee:
welcome sire dearie!

hear ye! hear ye!
we have another
crazy lover to drown today

RIC S. BASTASA
Happyness

something in us
sometimes
spells things differently but no matter
what]
we do not really
mind}
what symbols
we attach, for whatever that brings us
joy,
wrongly, or rightly,
we do not mind the eyes
that see us,
we only see each other
eye to eye
and body to body our souls fuse, as though we are the only inhabitants
of this earth
as though we are the only owners of the sea
and the sky
heaven and earth

i do not even imagine
hell.

RIC S. BASTASA
Harbinger

let i be the frost to tell you that winter in a moment shall be here let i be the omen about something bad that may happen so you may say all your prayers and convince the gods to change their minds and bring you fortune instead let me herald, Candice your coming

i am your harbinger let then the writing begin let yourself pour all your feelings then the winter may not be that cold as you take the whiteness that the snow leaves when it finally melts

let me be your friend still in the coming spring.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Hard Habits Do Not Really Change

the morning wakes you up with palpitations
it has no plan ending this travails
you resolve that schedules must change
always there are promises that break their heads and limbs against the cliffs of habits that never give you a chance to change.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hard Headed Woman

hard headed woman
with a very soft heart all for me
what shall i give you in return?

i shall always have you in my heart
i shall always look
for you

my hard headed woman
i am weeping for you

you know i have always loved you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hard Headed Woman For M.V.

I'm looking for a hard headed woman,
One who will take me for myself,
And if I find my hard headed woman,
I won’t need nobody else, no, no, no.

I’m looking for a hard headed woman,
One who will make me do my best,
And if I find my hard headed woman
I know the rest of my life will be blessed - yes, yes, yes.

I know a lot of fancy dancers, People who can glide you on a floor,
They move so smooth but have no answers.
When you ask why’d you come here for?
I don’t know why?

I know many fine feathered friends But their friendliness depends on how you do.
They know many sure fired ways
To find out the one who pays And how you do.

I’m looking for a hard headed woman,
One who will make me feel so good,
And if I find my hard headed woman,
I know my life will be as it should - yes, yes, yes.

I’m looking for a hard headed woman,
One who will make me do my best,
And if I find my hard headed woman...

(a song, from Cat Stevens for Manolita)

RIC S. BASTASA
Hard Liquor......

and this is the irony of love.
never mind.

to set yourself free at least only for a while you drink
hard liquor

the feelings fly
you see birds with you in the air it is dark but the song is clear and sweet

you remember love but not the chains anymore

you are never ugly
in this freedom, everyone is as beautiful as they are

in their own right in their own way......

travel, make my own scene, you and i, all in love, every bit, every moment.

when it is over, how simple it is.
life is simple indeed. We sleep and dream again.

did someone older and wiser tell us that after all, reality is another illusion?

RIC S. BASTASA
Hard-Headed Feet...

at the party of a friend on his 51st birthday last night they went on some revivals matt monroe and

pilita corales,

gosh, they know the lyrics
by heart

i listened with the giant ears of this year's metallic rabbit.

tried to dance the salsa and the mambo and the chacha and that criminal tango...

disappointing indeed,

my feet
do not follow my usual orders anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
the heart does not cease pumping blood, neither has the mind
stopped to think neither must we cease
to love
to care to dream
the moon does not stop shining neither does the sun or the stars
the orbits the planets follow neither must our feet stop rejoicing about the new paths
our hands on their new maps of touch
our eyes on the beautiful landsapes
God has put.

RIC S. BASTASA
Harem

welcome
to desire
welcome
to my harem
welcome
love
do not be shy
welcome
to the colors
of life
dance
dance
welcome
to lust

RIC S. BASTASA
Harmonizing The Chaos

how many heads do you have now?
five. yes five more faces.
the mouths have become your problem.
they do not seal their lips and you crave for the silence of the crabs. the teeth gnash, they are afraid of the
ash. the gums, yes the gums are weak and they are not spitting out what the tongue has been keeping.

silence. you issue the order.
they wait for the words from your heart.
they keep on waiting.
they are looking for love like you.
but there isn't any, and so they keep their own chaos now. the tongue is licking every part of your body and the eyes are busy with the pictures of two shadows making love against the light.

the hands are gentle and they start to caress the roots of your loneliness.

love, love, love, the lips begin to whisper.
the heart wakes up from a deep slumber and now it assumes the role of the storyteller.

once upon a time...
and now they begin to listen again.

once upon a time, there lived a very lonely princess and there was this prince riding on a white horse from the castle in the sky............

the princess turned to stone because the prince never kissed her.
Harmony

when the guava tree showed leaves we waited for time for it to give flowers and then it came we waited till it bore fruits and then the fruits ripened we waited till all the ripe ones fell to the ground then our hands picked them all up and we ate the juicy sweet pulp and then we spit out the seeds to the ground we swallowed what fills our thirst and hunger and the world smiled

RIC S. BASTASA
Has The Woman Arrived?

I have seen her picture, the one you are proud of
She is indeed beautiful With long, brownish curly hair Her smile is longing for you It is moist
And warm

When was the last time you kissed her?
Two years, four, five Or even one

It is such a long time
And you said you were crazy for her Her neck entwined to yours Her nails buried subcutaneously to your soul Her sweat immersed to your Chest hair and whirling in your Masculine nipples

Captured
Your tongues twist like snakes in heat In some isolated swamps In your two mouths

You surely miss those thoughts of her And she comes back to you Like a breeze in the sea
And you wait

Here she comes. Hold your breath Be kind enough. Use your fingers like tendrils to her Vines. Be cautious, she is fragile, too glassy.
Lift her like
An expensive Chinese porcelain.
Then break her so gently
She will ask for it Through the welcomes of her eyes Like hands saying Come to me come to me Break me gently
Break me gently
I am closing my eyes I am spreading my self to this universe

She gleams in fading lights.
And you will be her strong darkness to blend The colors of love, desire, lust, longing, Love and lust, lust and love.

Feel her, dissolve in her softness Your tenderness now diffused.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hat My Patience As Ever Is Ocean Wide.

i am one of those trees
could be that to me
i am still alive

no, i am a rock, but deep within is this conversation that negates what a rock is there is always a talking self unto itself a dream inside a cabinet skeletons in my closet worms in my own can dirty linens in my own yard, the sun looks down upon me, seed without glory.

all the while, i have always been air to you i am inside your lungs which you have not really noticed. it is I,
who is making you alive.

youth, how cruel are you not to know my name which i have carved in stone for years your tight skin,

you bright eyes,
the clarity of your memory the careless happy disposition which i have all spent lost and missed.

promise me tonight that you will never ask again why i still love you.

promise me not to ask about my foolishness.
i have too what you do not have, and you have what i do not have.

turn off the light. Let us play what we lack. Let us complete this puzzle this guilt, this disguise.

youth and wisdom, how do you compliment each other now to survive the storm of loneliness?

you are playful. I am serious. you are lost. Be calm. Do not panic. for i have found you. do not tell someone who would be envious about this...
that i have loved you that you are loved and that my patience as ever is ocean wide.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hate Finds You Too (A Reply)

hate also takes its own revenge
upon those who look
at me
with the eyes of hate

like a sound it echoes the very name you call
me

RIC S. BASTASA
Hate Is Such A Word

hate is such a word
but it could be real if you wish it to be and from a flicker it can turn into a big fire and it can burn a woman like hell hath no fury than a woman scorned

try the little sister of hate we call it indifference she is numb and yet so strong like its brother named Trottel

RIC S. BASTASA
Hate?

to choose between love & hate

we choose love

hate is a waste of energy
it makes you
explode &

when you explode
you shall be scattered
until
you cannot find
yourself
because you have become pieces or shrapnel stuck on the flesh
of other people

RIC S. BASTASA
Hating A Self

i hate taking a tour
alone by myself,

from time to time i have to ask someone to click the camera for me.

then i walk in the burnham park i am mistaken as a ham for sale

it is a pity
being alone spending a sleepless night in a five star hotel no channel of the TV appeases me don't mistake me

i also hate you for this.

RIC S. BASTASA
Have A Good Time

Buy another
gold fish for your aquarium

gather cranberries
in the yard

ride the red
pony

spend money on italian spaghetti
and butter toast

sip coffee
on a table by the sea

write a poem
at nine

RIC S. BASTASA
Have Fun Then

what is your wish?
i wish to die as soon as possible

why do you wish death?
it is certain other wishes do not come true so i grab this certain, inevitable wish that will always come
ture

why are you saying this?
i just said it
why are you saying this?
it is not nonsense

why are you saying this?
don't ask me
and so where are you going?
i don't really know

where are you going?
you are repeating a question
where are you going?
i have faith, i have hope and the going knows where i am going

then?
if possible i want a repetition because i have unfinished business because i was unloved even if i loved much do you want to be born again?

of course
then it is a logical wish.
have fun.

RIC S. BASTASA
Have Fun, Take The Vacations You Like

have fun
that is your advice
take the much needed vacations in Egypt
see the Pyramid of Gaza in Italy the Leaning Tower of Pisa

i won't.

The journey to Myself is still my own best vacation.

i have in mind
you know
the fable of the grasshopper and the ant.

it is the ant
that wins at the end
on a virtue of thrift and wisdom

after all
the fool and his money always part.

RIC S. BASTASA
Have Patience

there is so much noise
on the surface of things like a very shallow river its waters always arguing with all the rocks and even with the peebles

it lashes its tongue on every bank that it passess
without
listening

farther away is the wisdom of silence
the patience of the depths and its dangers

to swallow those who are reckless to compel the noise
to submit to its final poise

forever, the quiet
rest, resignation, death.

RIC S. BASTASA
Have They None Of Their Words?

have been lookin' for words, they, those who love the words, those that assume the silver color of the river and the golden sheen of the moon, many, many they look for your words, their hearts thirst, their minds drowning and their souls wanting to rise from the ruins of their bodies, many, many,
are looking for you,
for you are so kind as the tree giving fruits for light as the cloud shaping its faces for you are as wide in patience as the ocean green as the grass, coolness as refreshing as the river, many, many shall look for you for you have ears of the corn and wings of the winds, for you have their emotions and then you put them in place

RIC S. BASTASA
Have You Experienced Inside A Wall Within A Wall Within A Wall?

i laugh since i broke a wall and i smile because finally i am free and yet when i try to smile anew i find myself inside another wall again.

i break another wall again and again and again but the walls keep walling me like i am its lover.

and finally i give up, i feel the walls too loving and caring for me.
and then i care for the walls and learn to love each corner its thickness its soundless world and then i tell the house where the walls are growing healthy, i am glad about walls. They keep me secure. And then finally i said it for once.

the walls love me. and i love the walls since then.

RIC S. BASTASA
Have You Noticed?

have YOU noticed
the foul smell of the dung of the cow and goat around the manger
of the baby who is destined to be KING
of all kings?

if you do,
you are one of his sons.

RIC S. BASTASA
Have You?

have you ever experienced walking just walking away without having any destination in mind? just seeing the place where you always pass the trees along the path some weeds and stones and carabao dung no conclusions
just observations
the clouds hanging on the side of the hill the sun shining above a tall coconut tree you take shade
and some streaks of light pass thru the leaves sometimes i drive the car but i do not have any place in mind or name or purpose

i just keep driving following the road and slowly i see the ordinary things and people and structures

an old bridge abandoned beside its railing some vines rust overcoming its steel edges your mind keeps traveling but you do not stop it it is the one controlling itself not you

the sounds of birds and the motors and some conversations of people around you vendors and passers-by carrying their goods and important supplies

have you ever written a poem without any plan as to its theme or a careful thinking about some imagery or a deliberation as to the propriety of its tone its count and color?

this is the one.
this is the poem that is making itself.
no rules. no theme.
no expectations.
plain monologue.
no unity. no consistency. nothing logical.

it is free. and it may be nothing but an ugly piece.
but it is.

it is. Just as it is.
and this could be nothing but a portrait of the face of nothing. Nobody. No one.

. A No.

RIC S. BASTASA
Having A Nice Sleep And The Bones For The Dog

new year. Summer heat here. i gave my dogs their favorite bones.
tonight, i shall have the nicest sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Having Been Made Helpless I Too Dance With You.

when viewed from a hill away from the house where we live i really dislike it but distance, the nearer things become when i think i cannot anymore see it clearly because of the nearness i change me mind and like it again because of you.

the nearer it is the heart begins to speak it smells an old perfume it closes its eyes and leave things flowing as they are the blindness of honesty makes me long for you and here i am touching you again without rhyme and reason

why does an illogical situation take you to the heights of bliss? it is when reason sleeps that all these wild dreams begin to dance
with me
and which having been made helpless i too dance with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Having Built Their Empire Upon A Mound Of Sand.

we were taught about the ants and the grasshoppers how food must be stored for the coming rainy season to spare how play must be avoided how complacency often leads to misery
the story simply ended there with all the ants victorious as the grasshoppers lay dead carried by the flood hungry and cold...

and the ants too for having built their empire upon a mound of sand.

RIC S. BASTASA
Having Friends Around You

like a planetary family there is a nice system of orbits and revolution

the center glow is you and them, your friends planets and meteors and gleaming stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Having Slept Like A Dead Man

having slept like a dead man
i finally wake up to find an empty space beside me

my hands panic
to the unusual

i go to the mirror
to check what is left for me

oh you are there
rocking your chair
at 3 o'clock in the
morning.............

now, i know.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hazeline

it is not the haze of the frost or the fog, it is the core of the nut that is important, not the brown leafy involucre
but the one inside that brown thing, it is the bliss at the core of things, the wish for good,
the touch that sends the quiver in my skin, all hazel, and filbert and the hardness
which is soft inside.

please, do not say
any word.

RIC S. BASTASA
He And She

he was empty and she came into his life he had nothing in mind he practically had nothing to think for his future he is empty and she comes like warm air to his balloon and she lifts him up somewhere up in the skies and they are together and then on top of the world the exhaustion comes there is no more fire there is no more warm air and he is still empty and she is consumed he must fall with her to the ground and they must start to live again like real things like real people

he must fill his emptiness with what he wants to she may look for warm air and some other modes of unnoticeable deceptions

RIC S. BASTASA
He Could Have Written More

forgive him
he could have written more
and you could have read his mind
and tell yourself
he is this and he is that his pain and his joys
his vision and his mission you begin to know and feel and perhaps start the rage of time and the seasons
that change and never stop

he could have written more and you could have experienced the love between the lines of this words but time is so strict and cruel and it tells him time is up

raise your hand and leave this place and so he stopped and then he left and then he vanished

RIC S. BASTASA
He Could Have Written More (2)

forgive him
he could have written more
and you could have read his mind
and tell yourself
he is this and he is that
his pain and his joys
his vision and his mission
you begin to know and feel and
perhaps start the rage of time
and the seasons
that change and never stop

he could have written more and you could have experienced the love between the lines of his words but time is so strict and cruel and it tells him

time is up
raise your hand and leave this place

and so he stopped and then he left
and then he vanished

and then you are there hanging on the beams of your dreams...

RIC S. BASTASA
He Cuts You Off As You Deserve.

he also knows what to pick and what to throw

for like the rest
he also knows what is best,

you must realize that sometimes after so much familiarity

there is a point of demarcation
when you cannot tolerate his views

feeling that you have to impose yours
then he cuts you off
as you deserve.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Did Not Really Understand What Oxymoron Is All About

well dressed
in the court room he asked the man about his accurate estimate of the tree's length

i quipped it is an oxymoron, but whether he heard it completely or not, i 've seen how his face blushed.

honest, i did not say that he is a moron.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Finally Says, ' Leave Me Alone This Is My Home,
....

the white doves from the north have already arrived and now have roosted in his home.

they begin to talk, ' look you are lonely here dove of heart, you must go with us we are south bound that is where our home is'

he finally says, ' leave me alone this is my home, this is the home of my wound i live here
and i shall die here'

the head of the flock says, 'let's go we are wasting our time, he is not one of us anymore' the youngest of the flock thinks ' how crazy is he! '

RIC S. BASTASA
He Got You

he got you into this art of acting out things but not really this harmful pretension that which defrauds or swindles it is just the art of mimicry well, may be not just to entertain but could be also to survive

this is an art of life imitating art and of art imitating life oh,

this is all about disguises the man disguising as a clown to please the lonely kid in town the clown in turn disguising as a man to help another one

the man is not the clown and the clown is not the man no matter how convincing the acting might be or how perfect the imitation the identity is never lost they stick to their own realities despite the perfection of their art it is you who is lost in this labyrinth of art your skill and instincts have failed you utterly you bring with you your equation antiquated & so inaccurate and thus defeating the quickness of the mind with the sleigh of the hand that the man and the clown are one. you may be right, but i tell you you may also be wrong well, you must cope up simply see things as they are not as what they seem to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Had Always Chosen White

he had always chosen white, then shades of white, then gray, then the shades of gray, paler, and then
like the rest, you get into a black pit, you fall,
lost into the blackness of bleak,
somewhere there is reason
for this,
you watch, how day turns to night how night turns to day, how things work
how people come and go, how colors mix, how white gets stained,
how leaves learn what spring is what autumn is how cold is winter
how exciting is summer.
it is the seasons my dear,
just the seasons,
and right or wrong has nothing to do with all these changes.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Has His Own Way

as i enter this cheap restaurant he also sits
on the other side
of the table on one of those dusty
rattan chairs

i take my bite
he puts his toothpick between his lips and leave them there
for a while

his hands are on the table
holding an orange as though it is a cotton bud
that his fingers
play with

he looks at me
and i look at
him. I know what he wants

any simpleton
will know what
the tongue
has been doing
on the toothpick between his lips

i look down the floor and then i decide to leave. It is not the usual rush hour in this hot city far from my rural home

where the mountains
protrude to touch
a bulging blue cloud.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Hated It

A seed is inside his belly
and it grows despite the absence of
air

too acidic there
but it
sprouts just the same

takes root in his colon and a tendril comes out in his mouth

and i see how he uproots it at once

like some kind of a parasite

RIC S. BASTASA
He Is Asking What To Do When The Love Is Gone?

over a bottle of beer on top of his loquacious spirit he is asking me: what to do when love is gone?

i throw back the question to him: what did you do when love was there? and he says, he was in high spirits, he did all the thing he thought he cannot do he grew flowers in the garden he painted the house anew with white and blue and red and yellow he laughed so well and claimed he was so happy he loved so well and claimed he was in bliss and so now that love is gone, i must tell him just do the usual things when love was once there there is nothing to lose, except that love that you have taken for granted

RIC S. BASTASA
He Is Happy

as he contemplates
on the miseries of his friends piece by piece weighing his own
finding out theirs heavier
and harsher

he laughs
and then writes
piece by piece
what misery is what happiness

really means

RIC S. BASTASA
He Is Here Again...

he knows himself
the place where he comes back over and over again
despite
those far more beautiful faces those other palaces he knows it here
here
where he is at home with himself
cabinets of familiar contents here where the love of self
reigns

RIC S. BASTASA
He Is Poor

she picks her from mud
he tells her he loves her and she believes him and dresses and feeds him and he tells her more that he loves her truly and that he will love her forever he needs her
that is nearer to the truth and she is the most hopeless romantic in town and thirsty for love
many years back when she had an attempt of taking her life she is still suicidal

he loves ease and comfort that is nearer to the truth and she knows that well too, he loves another but she loves him more than that she keeps what she knows he hides what he can and they live in one house and sleep in one bed and dream and learn to survive in this kind of situation loving and pretending and keeping that matter within themselves for how many years

since then?
12 years and there will be more time passing by like a stranger fitting his night in a motel

that is the truth, and they do not mind it anymore
'who cares?' their theme.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Is The Clown

he is the clown
the blackeye of society underneath the heavy paints of a face the teary eye and the bruise the gritting tooth inside a cup of ice cream

RIC S. BASTASA
He Knows The Cadena De Amor

i now know that he loves
flowers

he likes most the cadena de amor

climbing from one
tree
to another

pink flowers on fences
and pillars
and walls
and windows
and doors
creeping

living
to its name
the chain
of love

a life full of creepy
sex

RIC S. BASTASA
He Left You Finally....

when we were at your party he was there and you humiliated him no brakes for a very fast car though he avoided a collision the damage however was done it was deeply humiliating you thought you can dispense about what he is and your future now that he is gone

why are you crying?

when a glass is broken it is broken and there is no repair possible at least that is what a man's ego
is all about

the house is big and the emptiness is never contained your cries are spread like a ripple of the river to the ocean now you will be alone in grief if you ask me this is my answer:

you deserve it. Congratulations.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Must Have Improved Into A Better Variety

for now he is speedy like light penetrating the tainted glass of the church window

for now he speaks the tongues of the foreigner

for now he understands the meaning of shadows and the accent of the winds
that come inside his framed windows

for now he does not wait
for any moment he goes and goes like a bird without a map for its wings

for now he is carried by the streams of his consciousness and he does not ask any question anymore

for now he does not bleed for he has healed himself as his mouth waters for the smell of his new breakfast
in bed

for now he makes love
throughout the night
and sleeps on the day filling his skull with all these dancing dreams for now he has the wings of the big black bird
taking him
in the places of anywhere in the timelessness of anywhen.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Never Goes To Church

the man who had blonde for his hair
at 78 or more says he does not go to church

in looking for God he simply unbuttons his shirt and finds God (allegedly) dwelling inside his Heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Plays God...

first he thinks a word or a number

quick he said do not whimper and so

the word becomes a seed and the seed

grown into a tree and the tree bears fruit

and then the number becomes numbers and numbers

become children who climb the tree and there

comes a world of chirping birds and a nest

and the nest becomes a planet and there are stars

and he finds love and they sit together

under the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Says

that the weather is too cold for those who have no warm memories,

all he need to do
is wear his shirt
to hide the ugliness
of his
dirty body that in the mind has become a disturbance says my wife.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Says There Is No Denial

i watched him on his last lecture. there are seven tumors on his liver.
six months to live and he is on the fourth month.
a little math will make us understand
as simple as that.
he does the push up
look there are no hands, he laughs.
there is no sadness in his eyes just the glow of having to go the eagerness of having to go on sabbatical leave.
nervous laughter is heard as he shifts from one joke to another.
he has three points: one must not stop dreaming.
second: one must help others realize their dreams third: i miss this one. i have to go back and watch him again. i guess i cried.
but i wipe my tears, and pretend that i feel nothing.

i can relate. Grandpa died of prostate cancer.
Papa died after Mama died. He could not wait dying after another year.

well, what 's the worry? death is certain.
i think, there is nothing new here.

i, too, am moving, i may not know when, but i know where.
i just believe.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Should Know That This World Too Needs The Luxury Of Silence

early morning this guy says that he has not moved on with an outworn love the one that junks his affection and does not want ever
to even see him again

what can i say?
he must learn the art of letting go and he is not original on this that art of singing out like he had never sang before and when all the noise is released he should know that this world too needs the luxury of silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Sits Beside Her

when he sits beside her she knows what she wants

him

and she pretends that she is just nothing but a girl whose hands are too tiny and so fragile and he of course will be tender & gentle to any kind of girl like

her

but she is more than a girl now
that he must know
she knows where to touch him what weak spot
and tell him
you are sitting beside this

woman

he takes a look some more her eyes are are inviting not innocent
he begins to see the eyes of the woman
he made love before

she wears the smell of a beautiful full-grown woman ready for any sweet seclusion or inclusion shall i say a seduction just to be exact in some ways this physical smell of warm flesh and smooth skin and luscious lips

of a woman
now she looks at him again a lingering stare
ready to take him in only if she understands the changes in her taking place in this moment in such a magical moment he does not see the same little girl whose hands he thought are innocent

and so fragile
he understands fully the begging hands of time now the fruit is ripe for the picking the tree is waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
He Stops His Car In The Middle Of The Busy Road Just To Save The Life Of One Stray Cat.

a stray
cat in the middle of
the road
stops a driver of a car...and i say

he is such a good man a respecter of life even if such a cat is known for its nine
lives.....

for in this sense no life, not a single life must be wasted
even if it is the one who is negligent....those who lack the awareness, those who lack the sharpness
of the mind,
beyond this shaky state of affairs,
a life must always be spared....and i admire
that man,

he stops his car in the middle of the busy road just to save the life of one stray cat.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Used To Speak Before The Pulpit

he used to speak before the pulpit using his robe from Rome and people listened and then he changed,
time changed him like a season changing the colors of the leaves trees adding more rings snakes molting
men shedding off old skins and growing more hairs change is the law of everything and everybody he used to but soon he didn't like it people do not really mind they come back to habits that do not die to sins like sweet chocolates they begin to love every guilt they do not believe the penalties handed from the skies they just live and love and go where the merry makings are he sees them counting their moneys the only one that talks now now he talks to himself and leaves and starts to travel the long and winding road away from them all

since then he has waived his right to speak because it arrives at nothing just the same

RIC S. BASTASA
He Walks Between Her Legs

between her legs
he walks through her she is sleepy
he is bored
she is ready
he is crazy
what you cannot see and hear later
is the pointing of his finger to her face
she curses him
she cries
he apologizes later
and then the usual embrace the kiss
and soft whispers
and then he goes inside her she groans
he fits
in her open.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Was Once Like Everybody Else

No one has the right to complain about suffering
everyone is.

no one has the right to tell about others' suffering

perhaps to lessen his own, words has no bearing any comfort be it a hug or whatever cannot change
the trend
this state of passion of grief

no one escapes what is given The Lord watches in such beautiful silence

He was once like Everybody else.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Will Keep The Simplicity

he goes on to keep the simplicity of his existence the chastity and candor of his feelings the clarity of his words the classicality of his clean line the clearness of his directions the modesty of his intentions the openness of all that is obvious to the naked eye the plainness of all that is primitive the naivete of uniformity the straightforwardness of innocence the severity of his singleness artlessness in sophistication and without complexity understanding comes without difficulty yes, try the restraint of the state of lack of adornment white, blank wall

and you.

RIC S. BASTASA
He Will Stay Tonight

she opens the door
and switches on the light of the ceiling
she kisses him
and he hugs her
tightly

like a cork
to a bottle of red wine

there is a need
for more sparkles
but the champagne
is too expensive

there is a need
for moonlight
to make tonight
more romantic

but frankly
tonight is the
night
when the storm
comes when the wind
blows
so hard
when the rain
pours
like cats and dogs

touche!
they will talk
and she will open
up

no not her legs
but her
mind

they will face
each other
with sad eyes
and
pleadings
for forgiveness

this the time for their last lovemaking

tomorrow
is another goodbye

and they know
it
there is no more
love
to speak about

inside
the forbidden radius
of their respective circles

RIC S. BASTASA
He Writes His Name In Bold Letters

when he writes his name in bold letters others
mistook it for a call of attention
as though
he lacks what was not given him during his youth

it is not the hunger for fame it is simply that his eyes have failed him due to so much devotion to reading when the lights are fading when his eyes are failing he wants still to see his name so he may have a trace of him

everyday fading like the sunsets in his poems

RIC S. BASTASA
He, The Obedient New Giraffe

they told him to stretch and straighten matters to give way to spaces needed by one

vertebra to another,

which he did like an obedient giraffe stretching its neck to reach the leaves for its survival

RIC S. BASTASA
Healing

keep on rubbing the drops
of time
in your wound to completely heal yourself massage slowly

the bruises of your sadness with its fingers
until they disappear
just like your face
slowly dissolving
in the canvass of
the wind

the philosophers are right
the hands of
time
are the true healers
of our wounded
hearts

RIC S. BASTASA
Healing The Family Tree

for you to let me know that i must pay for all that the family owed from the past the suffering souls of my great fathers and fathers of my fathers and their mothers
i am sorry but i was not the one that committed the blunder that is their business and mine is different
look at me
have i not suffered enough to deserve all these genetic retaliations?
hold my hands
don't you feel that all these tremblings in fear are not enough to pay for their misdeeds?
your paranoia is mine too.

but somehow, all these must be stopped. the wombs of our mothers are tested with pain one leg to life the other held by death yet they walk this valley of death without question they breathe your air without suspicion they live the way they ought to and they die without much ado.

RIC S. BASTASA
Heaps

the moments
are like leaves

winds of change
make them fall

our firmness
however
make them
stay

as heaps of memories inside
our hearts

RIC S. BASTASA
Heaps And Heaps Of Leaves Under The Trees One
Early Morning

ahh

I see. Too many words sentence upon sentence

i become less and less of what i am.

Look up the hill
a tree as bald as the leaves that the winds had taken.

It is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hear Me O Lord!

O! God
it is through these
words,
these works of
art
that i pray to
you!

Hear me!
I DO not ask for anything

You dwell in my heart
and walk
inside my ear
it is enough
joy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Heard From The Kindergarten Class Just Across The Road

'good morning ma'am
good morning bird
good morning cat
good morning dog
good morning clouds
good morning sun'

and then they all sing and dance the

tra-la-la tra-la-la-la beautiful joyous morning here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hearing Again From A Student Who Broke Down her face pale as a fading moon her hands trembling like the leaves blown by the wind at dawn

she is the thin, tiny girl in a row of the brusque and the thick faced law students, so to speak she has become the weakest link of their argument why one has to study law and become a lawyer and compete for power, money, and position she finally retreated, broke down somewhere where she says she screamed without tears, where she writes her poems finally in inkless pen and imaginary sheets of paper her mind exploded into some painful shrapnel that is what happens when you are so true to a vocation when you do not learn how to fake feelings and eradicate some emotions and be the woman and man tough like steel and shrewd like the fox or fight matters out like the rats in garbage cans and yet appear coy like a dove, they say, this is the battle of the fit and the survival of the fittest no muscle no guns no spears or swords it is what they call the decency of words and logic and sophistry sometimes she chats with me today, thanking me for the books for the lightness of being, she blames her stupidities of being weak, the weakest link of the argument in law school, she blames her poetry, (she hates my poetry: who says that life is fair? nobody raises a hand) she says she is now coming to terms with herself befriends her journal the more, she is taking more breath regaining her composure next semester, she will be joining us again, she promises, no chains, no feelings, a little wit and humor and nothing fading and not one shall be pale among the brusque a pachaderm

RIC S. BASTASA
Hearing That Song

that comfort that she found in your strangeness

you sing it again and my heart bleeds but sing it again and again for in truth i have long wished to die for without you i was lost and my life drifted like a leaf tossed by a stormy night carried away by the river and the mud

RIC S. BASTASA
Hearing Yourself....

not a word is nonsensical, each
has a purpose, you
just have to decipher the sound of a syllable
you see
each letter had been chosen
to give that desired
sound

well sometimes you get confused when what was given
you was the silent sound of nothingness

be patient
when you hear it
you hear yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Heart Body And Soul

the soul knows
the body
which the body doesn't sometimes the heart beats
and knows the state of the soul
you see the eyes
of the heart
as the soul feels the beatings of
your heart
when the body sleeps the soul practices
its journey to the gate of the heart
as the heart shies
away from the
reasoning of the
body

RIC S. BASTASA
Heart Burn

heart burn
you are the root cause
what is your name?

RIC S. BASTASA
Heart Cannot Shut....

the heart can never be a shutter
in that camera of
love,

to a beautiful day
it can't resist
opening
again

RIC S. BASTASA
Heart Wrenching

pain. wrench.
hammer and nails
and wood

s.
lover and the unloved and a cruel heart

the fall of the hammer the fall of the unloved

from the table
from the cliff

and then the common ground: eternal silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Heartless One

In darkness, the eyes learn to see In blindness, the heart becomes the eyes And you heartless one? Do you know What darkness is? You live in there With your wide eyes open, you are A dark soul and behind you is this Darkness that eats you up and now You ask us to find and save you?
Take your heart back and speak.
You shout and then save yourself!

RIC S. BASTASA
Heart's Day

we went on a picnic to the beach with samsam, a local dog, pret, my poodle, kuting, my japanese spitz, bonbon, our dachshund

emma, my wife brought her favorite househelp named tatang, marinel and gina, her friends cooked the potatoes and prepared the sushi jasmine rice that looked like tiny pearls and pork barbecue

pret, my loyal poodle went with me walking while kuting and bonbon played on the grass barking and chasing some teasing finches the air is cool

the sun not so bright at ten a.m. clouds hang like soaked cottons the sea is crystal clear like a mirror the corals are visible with some stone fishes

emma snored while asleep and tatang excused herself to take a view of the place i took my plunge alone in that crystal sea: splash!

it is a beautiful life and on this day of the hearts i can hear mine singing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Heaven

he found heaven
the day he met her

long time
that was a long time ago

she's gone

now he keeps searching every park
every place where they've been too but she's a lost heaven and he did not find her

until
he met you, his second heaven on cloud ten.

RIC S. BASTASA
Heaving The Heavier Sighs

you know how heavy are the sighs you lift it like a weight from your stomach to your throat and finally to your mouth you let it escape
and then you are relieved just like smoke coming from a chimney of a house covered with snow

you know how is it to carry something that you do not really like to keep you let it go with a sigh and then you are back feeling high

RIC S. BASTASA
Heavy Rain

it is a matter of new perspective choosing what one becomes what one hears and bears ultimately this outlook makes or unmakes you breaks and on the either/or unbreaks you

listen to the heavy rain the one that makes you stay these are the arms of love wanting you home these are the songs of peace urging you to write the poems of unviolence remove the thorns that crown your head try the laurels of victory it all lies in the power of your hands the choices of your heart be good and move on do not tarry on the streets of sorrow follow the trail that leads to the light on the side of the hill on this dark night there lies the home of our longings where we come from the haven

the resting place a room where your name is engraved in gold on the door

RIC S. BASTASA
Heavy Rain Today

the rain pours heavily on my roof
and all that i can hear is its loud sound
pounding like hammer on the table the workers stopped digging the waters fill in i keep on writing about a certain force

loud and insistent mouthing every earned silence now, i have a good excuse for being nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Hedonism

you are the body always wanting more pleasure
more tickle

there is no end
to this you pour gasoline
to a body
in flame

you burn without end char & ash
and scars
of the earth

you shall be

RIC S. BASTASA
Heirless Future....

it is horrible to see that thing over there we stand a little bit taller to have a glimpse

a desert, the sun its only eye the sands in cinders every sand in abandon it trembles me no end that it is our possible destination

RIC S. BASTASA
Heliotrope

finally the mongo
seed inside the box of paper
finds its way to an opening
to see the sun
in such a very short span

RIC S. BASTASA
Hell Is Other People

what is hell?
Sartre says, hell is other people.
I think, i agree.
Some people simply make our lives Live in hell,
If you feel this hell

the rumors, and betrayal, the stabbing at the back,
the unpaid debts,
ingratitude, the prison of dictatorships,
the irreconcilable differences,
hate and indifference,

on the other hand, there is also the mutuality of affections, love meeting love,
ecstasy moaning with ecstasy pure love, agape, empathy, faith, trust, symbiosis, dependence and interdependence, there is also sympathy and unconditional love of parents, and care of siblings, the humanity of concerns, and compassion, feeding the poor and the hungry, satisfying the thirsts of those who still desire
to live,

on the other hand, depending on how you look at it,
on this same place either you look at the stars above or the mud below,

heaven could also be
other people.
Hell Is Other People....

MY wife asks me
if i am original in that statement and i said

'Nope'
it was not me who said that i just quoted it and does not perhaps even understand it fully well the philosopher is Jean Paul-Sartre the man who believes that there is only an entrance but there is no exit

what i know is this i am like an empty jar exposed to the nights and days i shall never be full and shall never be empty completely
i cannot be a lie and cannot be the truth at the same

what i realize in darkness
is this:
not one is true
no one
they're all shadows inside the cave
where
the one and only truth  is Socrates....

RIC S. BASTASA
Hell Is Paved With Good Intentions....

by intention, or practical purpose i only need to heal myself, and i remember, how bad it is, how wrong, for a physician to heal himself, or for a lawyer to defend himself, that would be a terrible mistake, a physician or a lawyer for a fool, but this is not what i want to say, .................

i am here, look at me, i am nowhere, i have no face, i cannot be touched, somehow, there is no wish for that,

for i imagine this only as a clinic, a sofa, where Sigmund is brought to life again with my words, and he begins to listen, as i elaborate upon blocks and blocks of experiences which He has to reconstruct so that i can be understood since such understanding can, perhaps, lead to a cure. I am confident, however, i know where to go, what to say, and whom to say it. By intention, there is no wish to impress, or write the best lines, this is a soliloquy, a boat in the middle of the ocean, and there is no island in intention, it is just to love to love and expecting nothing in return.

Hell Is That...

i know how to leave
and so
here i am i have just arrived

for i have left them.

you know how is it
to be there
it is so stressful
i feel like i am shrinking my dignity melts
and what i hear is only their laughter

there is no use staying
there

that place is hell.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hello Again

aren't you bringing any flowers in your hands from south africa?

in your absence
the flowers here wilted

it is your time now to recompense

and i am asking
where are your flowers?

open your hands
from your palms
let all the flowers grow let the scent explode

make another beginning start writing the first line of your poem

how about a poem sort of a love poem
the one worded so well with affection

the one that repays
the cruelty of disappearances

RIC S. BASTASA
Hello And Goodbye

he pops out and says hello you must know by now that that is what he only wanted you know what he will say next: thank you and goodbye he will find many excuses a story to write, a friend to invite a poem to read alone with him alone admiring the smooth flow of the words and then he disappears for in truth he does not like the crowd though he misses it
most of the time
he knows that he cannot be there dissolve and be gone

he tried it once had a drink or two then danced his way in the middle of the dancing floor with all the lights blinking in shifting colors he was shouting with all joy and lost himself until he fell in the same dancing floor

his eyes will not close they stared at the blinking lights they thought he was dead indeed he too thought that he cannot live anymore he shatters in the limelight like specks of dust scattering every bit of himself he learns his lesson now he makes the limits marks the boundaries of his being knows the fence and the entrance and exit he looks from a distance and then makes his sure steps towards his own death Hello Candice, Are You Sure Of Yourself?

you speak of some bits, bits and bits of bits buried underneath our hearts and bones and you want them to be unraveled bit by bit that there is always a way, a manner a process, some means to an end, to find that light at the end of the tunnel

i am born on a complicated day.
And then i have grown hairs on my head They too are complications and my fingers do not have the same lengths
and shapes
That is also another complication And my feet are not straight And my face is not proportional There are angles of deflection There are lights in me which are refracted And i may appear so far And my hands may bend a little
It is because of the difference in our index

I am myself sometimes. I am not myself most of the times.
I ask you then: Are you sure of yourself?

Is that you? If yes, I am telling you I am not me. I am somebody else.

If No, do not mind me at all.
I am having the tantrums of the poet A dough with yeast. A grapefruit sour to your lips.
I am irony. I am another riddle.

I like to make myself readable. How many syllables do you need? Tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hello Ct

Please make true
Your promise to make
For me
A poem.
Just one poem.
It will be enough
To make me Sleep for Another night.
Another lonely night
For me.
My silence unlike
The silence of the happy man Does not know What a smile is.
Its tongue Tied, it does not utter The syllable of the Night.
It has no ears
To hear the coming Footfalls of my beloved.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hello Cynthia

have you heard about the mocking bird?

at least the Mayna
in Palawan

it repeats what you say
like an echo

irritating maybe but if you do not ignore it it may destroy you

so just take a good ride enjoy and don't mind what others do

P.s.

huag mo nang patulan si Aldo, kc sira ulo yan.
Matagal na yan dito
ginawa lang niyang
therapy ang site.

hindi naman sa baliw sya medyo may konting diprensya lang kaya huwag mo nang intindihan ok?

RIC S. BASTASA
Hello Lady Grace

i have checked the sun
it is hiding behind the clouds and the clouds say it will rain today

i have checked the wind the leaves have the prediction it's gonna have another typhoon

and so here i am,
signing in too... for this morning poetry with you!

RIC S. BASTASA
Hello Mr. President

I'd like to advise
my friend obama not to attack syria

like: hey Mr Friend president war is not good

why interfere on the private affairs of another

like: why can't you let Syria be herself and leave her alone in her private room?

but all i got is a spit from Obama saying

hey, you, idiot Filipino, mind your own portfolio! !

you see, i am an idiot Filipino, and (best?) friend of Obama, the president of the United States of America

at best, i keep my mouth shut

p.s.
I need him because china is pissing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hello My Friend.....

you try to be inside their circle
you get in but they are enclosed within their very own arms
there is no place for you
you charm them
and beg
and they let you in for a while thinking that you can be of use and serve them
and then they talk among themselves dance their own steps and you want to imitate them wanting to be in
to be a part of themselves since you are never a part of anyone and you just want to be engaged need an affirmation that you too exist...

takes time to realize that you can never be in them and you feel that strangeness but it will only be for a while people are inherently selfish they have their own family to belong to and you do not have your own

they are all dead
and the rest too are living their own independent lives

you rise from the insecurity of your ashes a Phoenix takes time to grown your own strong wings again wide span long journeys find a home
an island
with walls and moats a palace of your
solitude

learn the language unique to you live alone but not lonely
and selfish too like the rest

then you say
hello self my friend
i love you too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hello My Gatiting

hello my gatiting
please solve the problem below if you can solve it email me the answer

then i will tell you if we are still friends.

deal.

Solve each of the following inequalities and express the solution in interval notation.

\((x - 6) (x + 2) (- 4 - x) > 0\)

\(x^2 + x + 2 < 7 - 3x\)

Find the number by using exponential form.

a) \(\log_2 32\)

b) \(\ln e^5\)

The following example represents a correspondence \(f\) from \(A\) to \(B\). Determine whether the associated statements are true or false.

i) One element of \(A\) corresponds to two elements of \(B\).

ii) Two elements of \(A\) correspond to the same element of \(B\).

iii) Some element of \(A\) has no corresponding element in \(B\).

iv) Some element of \(B\) has no element of \(A\) corresponding to it.

v) Is \(f\) a function? If not, then explain why.

you have only an hour to submit your answer.

after two hours,
our friendship ends.
Hello There? Anybody Home?

did i tell you once that i also like to become an echo? that i like to ask the simple question to the mountain like: Hello? Is there anybody there?

as though, there is this scene that the world has ended and i am the only one left, and there is nothing but smoke and emptiness, boulders of rocks with not a tree to accentuate the final scene of survival, or a moss to tell me that life still exist on a creek without a single dew on its priceless pebble, know what? i am happy today to know that you are still there so far away like an undiscovered distant planet that the light years have not known yet to measure

i know that somehow we share the same madness.
Poetry.

know what? Be happy too.

I have someone else.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is always a way to spend time from another perspective nothing serious this time time to laugh, time to fool with time.

i got a joke, and i share it with you and you laugh with me.

i got a story about a buffalo and the poodle. how imitation can be funny. How envy can be a tragic matter.

i got to share time with you.
at the veranda we face an afternoon.

i have coffee and you have tea.
did we forget about our old tequilas?

i have something to whisper to you.
No, actually it is a kiss. I am planting it to your lips. Do not bite me.
You see, we are here now. Tomorrow we will be gone two white butterflies against the wind.
first shadows, then a whisper gone too.

no one stays here. No one.
we turn off the lights. we fuse in the dark.

No promises. We do not make promises.
Early morning, i go. You are no longer here.

I am talking about life. It is what it is.
Hello, goodbye, and till we meet again.
Help Save A Child's Life Today his little girl has kinky hair black is the color of her skin almond eyes that speak and small hands and short arms

the ad says,
help save a child's life today

and i read it silently.
i ask myself, honestly, please do not brand me as racist

is there such a white child who can say, 'Help me! '

i am just wondering.
and what about the brown child in Asia?

RIC S. BASTASA
Helplessly Devoted To Writing...

the monitor sucks the energies of creation, and you who face this phenomenon of addiction of having to write despite the odds, becomes a very dry parchment of crocodile skin removed from its fierce body all sharpness pulled out and on helpless gum one must learn how to survive under the hot suns of senseless loving.

RIC S. BASTASA
Helplessness
	here is this cough
	that does not
	originate from the mouth
	it shakes the whole
	body

giving the warning

but the man who owns it

wipes it and

smiles

and then he

coughs again

and then he

smiles again

RIC S. BASTASA
Henpecked

the usual long walks
in the morning
that's what's good for
my body
passing through pathways watching newly opened doors and clean yards stretching where hen-pecked husbands are feeding the chickens

RIC S. BASTASA
Henry Piddington (1797–1858)

'An atmospheric system characterized by the rapid inward circulation of air masses about a low-pressure center, usually accompanied by stormy, often destructive weather' circulates counterclockwise in the Northern Hemisphere and clockwise in the Southern Hemisphere.

blame him, this British meteorologist he introduced the cyclone

coined from kyklôn

leaving Myanmar with 100,000 dead more or less now, the generals need help

RIC S. BASTASA
Hep Hep Hurray

do you watch it every noontime the hep hep hurray
of our day to day
existence,

you match your actions to your words
and if they do not then you are definitely

out!

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Beautiful Face In My Dream

lilac lips beige skin
morning eyes
dancing eyelashes

such a beautiful face of a woman in my dream
i keep telling myself
she loves me

how can one accept the sad conclusion
that she loves me
not?

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Biography

She Lives with two guys
A tortoise
And some kois

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Dance Is Eternity...

she had one
advice to her
protegee,

keep dancing my girl
till your feet
become the dance of your life...

and she dances
her life to life
to life

to life, to life
she dances till life

was taken away from
her

for now as spirit
her dance is eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
when she discovered that she had colon cancer stage 2, she at first had the usual denial,

'no this cannot be true for i don't smoke neither did i eat meat
i did not have a stressful life' she says.

the discharges of blood proves her otherwise her loss of weight and low red blood cell count convince her about this reality

' i accepted this matter and i did not want to do anything anymore' she resolves,

'anyway, i am already 68, and had my life
what is the use of
an extension' she continues on her plate is the fried chicken a slice of roasted pig, for her desert a glass of ice cream and leche flan

all that the doctor says she must not eat
she eats them now

i guess, i know what she means.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Defense Mechanisms

she thinks
that i am getting cold on her
like
last night when i did not have the chance (or the nerve) hugging her
and she was looking at the ceiling
in total darkness
unable
to get some sleep
because
of her predicament
while i lay
soundly sleeping on my soft pillow
and thick blankets wrapping my body away from the world

hers

too tired i tell her

with lots of work in the office and too many problems
to solve

the following morning
she takes her bath so early and washes
herself
her sorrow away
her
insecurities about being unloved (her own crude way of thinking and evaluating things) she goes to the kitchen and cooks the feast for her husband's breakfast

(me?)

all the while thinking the basic principle that the best way to make him love her again is always through his stomach and he laughs the hardest this morning he will have another day of indigestion because he has to eat more & more if only to please her

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Demands

he is fit
he has a great body
he is witty
he is a good conversationalist he thinks they'll make a good pair and will be happy forever but there is one thing he didn't have and she wants it more than anything else his bank account

he is fit
and he knows how to make this matter a secret.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Evening

her evening is noisy all the words of the town invade her ceaselessly

well i know of the reason her man left her for another younger and hot like the night in the tropics

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Eye Colors

spring lush foliage
buds of flowers
tiny leaves
sprouting from the
twigs

in Hongkong
where there is no space for gardens
she draws spring
in the colors of her eyes shades of green
and pink and red and blue for the flowers
the clouds
the horizon
the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Father-In-Law

He's really an interesting character.
When my kids were small, he wasn't so happy that I'm talking to them in English, because English is the language of the enemy.

Goodness, the war was over decades ago!

I felt it's weird.
I grew up listening to my grandparents and parents about how hard life was during the war and how cruel the Japanese soldiers were.
And here are my children listening to their grandfather's stories about his hard training as a kamikaze pilot.

He was recruited towards the end of the war, and there were hardly any plane to practice on.

Basically, they were taught how to fly, not how to land, because anyway, theirs is a one-way mission.
Akiko said that it was fortunate that the war ended before he was sent to do kamikaze.
He said that it was 'zannen' (regrettable) that Japan lost the war, because he so wanted to see action!

Masanao thinks that his father had not actually been to the front line and experienced the horrors of actual combat, so his father clings to an idealist view on why Japan went to war.

Jya ne! So long for now

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Hands Are Stronger Now

she greets you by the door. She knows you are coming.
Her heart pounds for you.
She shows the room. It looks for you for many years.
Now she brags the room is alive.
she opens the window and lets the air and the trees know that you are here finally.
they all talk about you know. they nod, you are no longer a dog.
Or a parakeet.
The chair opens its arms for you.
You take your asks you if you miss coffee.
Black coffee, without sugar.
You look around. There is nothing changed here.
20 years ago, all the structures are faithful to their positions.
They miss you and like to embrace you.
She is restrained like a dam.
No tears this time.
Not even some tears of joy.
She knows why you are here.
The room, the tree and the window, the floors are blind.

She knows that this will be the last time of your compromise.
She is dead 20 years back when you told her
about the truth.

How can she feel like the room, the floor, the tree and the window How can she be as foolish as air and cloud?

Her hands are strong now.
They write her name, her signature to sorrow.
Her heart notes the final statement.

Life is over.
Game is over.
Her Indifference

she wants to end the journey
with me
i do not want to end it yet
she sits beside me
and i am pushed to the side my hands are tied and the steering wheel is free she steps on the gasoline to a speed of 180
on the road to nowhere

meanwhile another truck is coming at a fast speed
to us
in an inevitable collision

she does not speak a word neither will she scream at this i pray to escape from what she calls as inevitability.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Insomnia

this is a private affair between her and her wall clock there is this consistent rhythm of the tick tock tick tock her pupils roll and sometimes

still staring at the walls of the house restless she avails of all the possible combination of postures but to no avail

the clock keeps on ticking and ticking and ticking she feels like a tick and she cannot talk

this is her private affair with her wall clock above her head her mouth is closed shaped like a lamppost
without a light.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Is My Body

here is my body
take it

do not look for my soul
it is no longer there

in your power
this body surrenders

the soul escapes
and you cannot chase it

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Last Lines Written While She Was Alone

on nights when she is alone in bed she wakes up to dream of his touch his long deep moans she wonders from his chain of words if her absence too did make his heart grow fonder

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Last Words Before I Left

please, please stay a little longer
i miss you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Letter Dated July 1, 2008, To Me, It Is Poem By Itself

I wonder how many more poems related to me I've missed.
I also wonder if you're a mind-reader.
Every springtime when the cherries bloom, I do think of fire trees dotting Mt. Makiling and lining the highways of Los Banos.
When wisterias bloom here,
I think of the jade vine in Makiling forest.

The pink, red and white flowers of azalea are pretty when they bloom in April to May, but they can't compare with the explosion of colors of bougainvillea flowers trailing over the terraces of the buildings of IRRI where I used to work years ago.

I wonder if they are still there.

I did ask my father to plant ylang-ylang or sampaguita years ago, because in Dipolog, I can hardly find them anymore.
But father preferred palm trees, orchids, and anthurium.

Yes, I'll always miss the land of my birth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Majesty, Mt. Kinabalu

i have
seen her full majesty

tall, and sharp,
and solid
as a rock

i heard
the magical sound
of its wind

there was sadness
but it was sweet

i was speechless
feeling too small like an ant

my legs
trembled
like bamboo
leaves....

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Name Starts With An F...

AT That time she only knew love nothing below or above it all love, nothing about the future nothing to take, but all everything to give but the guy said he is not prepared and so she had no choice but an abortion, her first baby should have been theirs.....

The Chinese man married another she was devastated, but she must move on with her life she said
and to a man where there was no love she gave herself
got pregnant but the loveless marriage like those marriages did not last.....

She is all alone
her baby turned into a man time flies so quickly he became a nurse and he called her that he loves her that much one time
when he assisted a woman in labor
'it is not easy to become a mother'

In one party she met the man he first loved broken too
with a sickly wife a failing kidney
and they had no child....

'Do not say any word, for i am blue'

Things do not work perfectly for love love brings its own sorrows and love
becomes too beautiful
always
to remember....

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Old Argument

we meet as old trees with roots deep on the ground.
twigs are trunks and leaves if they fall do not come back to hang back. do not look for meanings, they are all there already when we meet as old trees when we agree that we meet as old trees so there will be no compromise that you change that i change that we become like each other in color and perceptions what you see is what you get, that is your oldest premise and i jump into conclusions: i am free, you are freedom. somewhere, i also cannot bend as you keep that bent posture when we meet as trees old enough to understand the spread of our respective roots.
'you cannot change me, you can only love me' your ending statement.
' i give up the search for the idea, i stay put' my conclusion.

The pavement is so dry. There is no rain. I hear nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Own City Poem...

at the Mindanao Times
i read her poem-

the city is lonely
it is filled with people who are not interested to know one another

She is an old poet crowned with the wisdom of laurel leaves and she i agree knows much better

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Own Departure

Her own departure is a show. a big bag hanging on her shoulders, her left hand holding a coin purse, her right crumpling a white handkerchief wet with her tears.

she is crying. Her blue blouse fits her fat and her black pants are loose like two shirts.

She wears her white rubber shoes, sort of telling me that she will be running towards the place that she will be hiding for just towards the airport. Or bus station or port.

I don't really care.

She takes the ATM with her, and the credit cards. She does not tell me where she is going. She gives the hint that it will be far away from this cold house.

I am staying. I am glued to this house. I am silent and peaceful now. I still have many things to think and write.

My first poem after she leaves shall be titled, 'Good riddance!'

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Own Life....

the middle aged woman speaks about all the bad luck in her life she is poor, her heart is broken her husband is sick her children all dumb she has no house to live she has no relatives to help her

then she asks me on what part of her life will she be grateful to God?
she does not know the word about thanks

then the older woman asks her to give back at 3 p.m. today the life that the Lord has given her she realizes what she has which she has not given importance she shakes her head, kneels on the ground and said thanks to God....

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Own Wonder...

she may wonder
why leaves detach themselves from twigs why butterflies depart from a flower
why there are ebbs

he has a lot of reasons but the stars during those darkest nights are too obvious

too beautiful
there is no need anymore to speak

RIC S. BASTASA
fascination strong losing control the flow unable to handle on this honest concupiscence

moments unfold
the conspicuous aspirations
this moment
shall i now save

like scotch on the rocks such aroma as you sparkling and strong so hard to resist

hit me sting me i delight in your love i plunge in your hugs
i go losing myself in your kisses you're spread on my table my exquisite menu for my dinner love and lust all mixed together

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Poverty

her poverty always comes to them
on a Sunday
while they are contemplating on the words of God

she is outside the door and keeps on knocking until she gets tired and just sits their on the porch
waiting

she says she has many stories to tell about her miseries

they call on their Afghan hounds that bark so loud and she is driven away she tells the neighbors who save her that they are her cousins of the first degree they tell God that it is still time to pray

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Pre-Valentine Wish

o heavens
i do not wish to read her mind, i do not want to know her
pre-valentine wish:

that her husband? i do not, i cannot say it.
let her say it, but i know she won't.

o my God, i do not wish to know what is inside her. but i have this hint of what she really likes to think o my God, i do not wish to read her mind and judge her but i have this hint of what she really like to do but i give you this hint, she hates me for me telling her that in truth she is in love with another.

RIC S. BASTASA
she had dinner with me and she talked about some priests and sinners i think she is refined in some ways the way she handles her fork and her forte the rumors of the town and the rest of those who profess innocence pretended to pay attention there were names and places and secret events and trysts of some characters like they are in the play of Tennessee Williams and she carefully assesses the merits of their wounds their tragedies surely are not hers she does not eat much but her face swells her stomach bloating and she burps like she is one kind of a healthy baby

after the dinner
despite her expensive earrings we in the house are unanimous in saying she is the kind of character who must not have another dinner with us

perhaps she must have breakfast and we think she deserves to be with Sophocles

Ric S. Bastasa
Her Report

she is now in Malaybalay, 45 kilometers from Valencia where they are taking dinner with junjun's girlfriend and soon after the dinner, she will take the car with cousin and niece back to La Vina, where they will spend the night

she has more news but she will not bring it tonight it is more private it is not about junjun's sweet young girl, still studying in the university and to cope up with the hard times, she sells cosmetic products for those who are vain and taking other means of livelihood to live and appear like decent it is cold, a place higher than the sea levels of two cities the trees abound, it is green grass all over the place, and the skies have stars, and the moon is brighter as she looks over the window to see the rolling hills and the horizon of flashing lights the glitter of a far city, the hovering of thoughts like birds crowding on a tree at night, like the whispers of rain from a distant mountain we are apart, we decided to create some spaces, we must breathe and i know, what she wants to tell me from Malaybalay, though she says, she cannot tell it now, the way she phrases her lines i know she misses me she loves me she wants to be back home the soonest and i am waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Stare

confirms the harshness
of the
big C

RIC S. BASTASA
i am afraid
i cannot love another as i begin to touch
and caress my ego,

i look at you
indeed you are beautiful with your smooth skin and long black hair

i feel it when you touch my loin though you may think it was unintentional

i am afraid i cannot love another despite the trouble we are in, this stage of marital confusion when love is asking so many questions that i cannot anymore answer

i am thinking i must be sorry for love at this stage is not true to itself and if i pursue this matter to its ultimate destination i am afraid i cannot bear this burden when i arrive in the house and there i can hear her crying, and when i open the door she keeps pretending that everything is okay and then asks me if i have already eaten.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her True Nature....

the schemers of evil enjoy their success there is a party in the house the beautiful lady is carrying a bouquet of flowers beside her five children gifts from God, beside her is her handsome husband holding a key position in the energy sector it is her day today, she wins the political and judicial crown it is her party, and the evening shall be filled with neon lights, music shall be played the whole night, and drinks will flow and roasted calf shall be put at the center of the garden all the ministers and v.i.p.s shall join her in her early success she will enjoy the accolades, she will rise to power, she will have the support of the people, and she will have her place in history as the icon of political genius, economic might,

social galore and glamor.

she is the golden butterfly of our history.

in truth she is a cheat, a murderer, a dragon, a vampire, the queen of evil in the Kingdom of Wrath.

no one knows about this of course.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Underwear.

I've seen a beautiful woman lonely on her chair, one hand with a glass of wine while the other with a cigarette from time to time she throws smoke into the air and it lands on my hair, on my lips, and then my thighs are trembling how can she ever ask to suggest that i too need love, only for tonight?

we have the same mind, and when we did it, she walks away first, uncombed hair, forgetting her lipstick and her underwear.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Usual Patience...

her kiss will always be
a reminder that an infidelity
is always an inch shorter
to the majesty of the holy matrimony

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Wish

her wish
is another grand wedding on her 20th anniversary she will have some fireworks
and a grand ballroom complete with flowers and doves
and nice food...

her wish is to be married soon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Her Woes

the social welfare officer carries her bouncing baby boy

the social welfare officer says the boy is healthy the mother has meningitis and cannot support the boy he needs a lot of milk he is heavy and he smiles a lot and he stares at his mother who has no mind of her own now the social welfare officer carries the baby in her arms and i am signing the papers attesting to the mother's having to give up the boy for welfare, her sister from Calape has six kids and her husband is jobless

the boy stares
at her mother who says she is moving
to another place
to forget him

she was raped.
she got pregnant.

they are poor.
and she has to give up the boy

the boy keeps staring at her mother.

their woes.

would you like
to carry the boy, sir?

he says.
No. he is definite.
No. His answer.

RIC S. BASTASA
Here

in here
there is an opening
of my heart
come
and lay with me in the fourth chamber
it is this that you
desire

without so much
love
without words.

RIC S. BASTASA
Here Comes Life

the rolling stone
sliding past
following us

the rolling stone
now ahead of us

here comes life
and there it is gone

we are still the moss catching no stone

RIC S. BASTASA
Here Comes My Silent Prayer

waking up from a nightmare i get out of my room and drink a glass of cold water i sit on a chair beside a table with a vase of a single flower i face the sea without the sun yet coming and then i say my silent prayer

RIC S. BASTASA
Here Comes The Morning Sun

here comes the morning sun
one body of the heavens that gives us days
faithful
to our souls

here comes the morning sun
let us go out and bathe
with so much sunshine

here comes the morning sun
it is another day again another promise
another grand beginning

i decide to live, to laugh and love all over again....

RIC S. BASTASA
Here Comes The Sun, Joyous from the shutters of the windows light peeps in like fingers creeping on the naked body

of the woman who made love with me
last night

my eyes open and welcomes another memory of the night
for the day

bouquets of memories of the mind offerings for the sun joyous and vibrant

we kiss again
as we dress our bodies on a promise that everything shall be kept secret.

RIC S. BASTASA
Here In The Desert

here in the desert
you are the hot sun glowing fire i am the sand blown by the winds the winds are many and i have always wished that i shall turn into a big rock on the side of the blue sea you fade away in the darkness of my night and i look for the promise of space in eternity in the absence of the kind moon i lay upon myself and spread my loneliness i dream of the deep sea which was once a part of me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Here In The Silence Of Your Moment

in this retreat
of yours
here in the old place of your silence
hear the music that
your soul
had been singing
try to unlock the secrets of its longings
rewrite the poems of your yesterdays

RIC S. BASTASA
Here Is Peace, Why Look For Another?

here we are caught in the night trap and we prepare for the coming of light which brings us more truth, we are those who work hard to prepare for the incoming confrontation, unnecessarily i think,
since i do not really bother about what happens next, i am just cooperating with your woes and worse your anxieties, and so i do this and that as told by you, but there is a limit to all these,
i may soon sit and read and not mind what you say. here i am
attuned to what i am,
comfortable with myself, and not anxious about how i look and what they say. I like this nook.
overlooking the sea.
the world is too wide and space is encompassing and we are too small and insignificant.
to the world we have no names, no places, no histories. i love
it, when i am negligible.
when i am as usual,
alone and meditative.
here is peace, why
look for another?

RIC S. BASTASA
Here It Is A Saturday

in my country
today is a saturday sunfilled, not just warm but hot and all my pores open today she caused the cutting of some trees around the house

today she wants the sun to wrap everything that is covered with coldness
and indifference

today she wants everything exposed and be tested by heat the lies to die
the truth to live

today she is fed up with coverings tall trees concealing some moss stones unturned
some bedbugs
hiding some worms curling up on some comforts of humus

today she wants to be free like a bird to fly to the other side of the island where everything is sand and bald and candid and dying

RIC S. BASTASA
Here The Beauty Of The Stars And The Moon Shall Make Me Live For Another Day.

do you really think that i cannot keep that promise to myself, love?

i know i broke some,
if not many,
but it is not the end
of my story

time changes everything so goes the saying and now i made that promise that i am going to change
for the better

if not the best that i can be, away from you.

the tree is thick with leaves
this summer
and birds are flocking making their nests and laying their eggs

the leaves which fell after
the storm
have rotten, humus is aplenty and there i watch the new seeds coming out from their hard coverings sprouting

here the songs of these birds shall keep me singing too here the sprouting seeds shall show me what hope is here the silence of the night shall cover me here the beauty of the stars and
the moon
shall make me live for another day.

RIC S. BASTASA
Here They Are

they have arrived from a distance away from ourselves for the past years
for a time

and this time
like a telescope
i shall see things from far away to see things clearly

here they are
and i have become a stranger

RIC S. BASTASA
Here We Are Again

YOU ARE right
There are reasons why we write Daily, we are looking for a cure to this disease Not what you think,
It is what we think,
For how can you go inside our minds Our houses are closed
Our gates high and locked We want to go outside and commune with the trees We cannot
That is the irony
The paradox
We desire to be Free Yet we live inside these Caves
So many caves
Vast darkness where we speak without seeing our Faces This is horrible
But what reaches you are Too beautiful to believe Too good to be True
What you call as Truths We dismiss as Lies
There are twists and turns Labyrinths inside a very small house Where ants are keepers and Confidantes
We keep a treasure here Chests and Trunks full of money and gold Nope
Don't get me wrong
We are not right
We mumble like hungry slaves in the desert
We are those broken bones That you find

So beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
here we are
all children
drenched by the rain on December

our mothers are all dead
our fathers
gone away

our sisters and brothers have families of their own in far away places

here we are children playing under the rain running without aim we never have any more names.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Here We Are In The Middle Of The Rain

here we are in the middle of the rain
and we are all wet and you sing a song for the rain gods
saying
they're crazy
and for a while, i think, i must be convinced,
i change my mind,
there is this point of finally joining you, in the singing of the song and the dancing, perhaps...

RIC S. BASTASA
Here You Are Depressed And Dying...

the birds here
are not wanting

always in time for their instincts

i think they all
sing for you

and here you are
usual in your late waking these birds are not insistent

when they leave
they leave

even without you
or us

it is a clock affair their wings always accurately tell

and then you know it
well
as they move again
to distant places

without much drama no talk

their flights tell them who they are

and here you are
depressed and dying...
Here, Goodbye Is Sweet. Like My New Date In Silawe.

it does not take that much, not an emotion wasted, no effort even, there is no memory left anyway, for-

what did i throw away? just a sheet of paper with all those doodles therein,
i wasted my time,
nothing significant,
it was at that time
when i have nothing
to write, i was looking for words, grasping darkness and probing what is inside that locked room, - -

finally found the key
into the open,
fields of tulips,
a garden of rocks,
a rake and the sand,
mind drawing in what is new and interesting, oh- -

we were interesting at first, but everything repeated over and over again sounds like a broken record, monotonous like the sermon of the parish priest in a town which you have to leave because everything sounds and looks the same,
and hence not worth
the time and attention.

here, goodbye is sweet.
like my new date in Silawe.

RIC S. BASTASA
Here, Here My Dear

we honestly did not intend to build a palace in the sky you must understand our disappointments and sorrows that is why we are playing with our hands on the sands of time we do not intend to challenge the waters on the shore we do not mind if everything we built is erased by it we are merely squandering time because we have nothing meaningful to do

anymore

we cannot simply delet ourselves like some innocuous words in the sentence

we have no power to simply burst like a balloon release ourselves as air and leave the empty rubber on the ground we have codes in our bones some inscriptions on our skins the instructions are vague and incomplete that is why we are being held here with the caprices of too much waiting come join us let us play on the sands of time let us swim on the shallow seas of our usual existences it is not fun really but it can be if we think it to be it is all in the mind it is beautified by the heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Here...

it IS here where i am accepted as MYSELF,
i admit i am not good, not that skilled really, unable to get the feel and the real kill,
I AM
like everyone else here This is my place
and I am at home here I want to say i want to stay and you accept me....

but this will only be for a while,
no one stays forever here no one lasts....

soon i will, too, say goodbye.
and it will be all right still.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hermaphroditic....

an earthworm
desires to meet a snail on a common ground of slowness and softness of their flesh

the snail is proud and wouldn't love someone without a home

unrequited the earthworm goes back to the softness of its earth

hermaphroditic.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hermaproditic

the gods shun them
the circles for they know much and can do much more
and so they divided them to halves
and quarters and
so a man looks for a woman, his better half, but then there were those who earned the favor
from the gods,
they still have both sexes, man and woman inside their underwears and you see them
loving themselves at home with
who they are
and still keeping up with their own selfish mode
of reproduction,
making love
with their own bodies hugging
their own arms
and kissing
their own lips.

just perfect!
the gods concluded.

RIC S. BASTASA
Herminia

as usual she is silent an absorber among the group of the pioneering teachers of the school

she dyes her hair
completely black to hide her age.
she married late and got a drunkard and gambler for a husband.

her silence is understandable. what she hears she keeps to herself but they won't stay long she is full of angst, stories about marital abuse files her mind, her children have grown up and had lives of their own.

she is alone, like everybody else in this party what will she talk about? will she make a complaint? will she pour her regrets over a bottle of beer.

she is old enough. And time is too short.
She listens. There is no other thing worth doing in this valley of tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hey Beautiful

stay as is
you are beautiful don't stretch your neck like a giraffe
for you are you
and you are
beautiful
as ever

hey, beautiful
baby, you are come sit beside me
do not be an alligator
be the bird on my shoulder be the sunshine on my hair.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hey Mister Poet Find Me A Death Poem That I Shall Read This Sunday

hey mister poet
find me a poem
that i will read this sunday upon
the behest of
our chapel chaplain,

hey mister poet
find me a death poem to be read this sunday evening

and mister poet answered

hey lady i will make a death poem for you

but it shall be read by me this sunday

and you will be there but you cannot hear

you will be there and they will be there

because of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hey Where Have You Been?

have you been to London to visit the Queen?

hey where have you been?

we are waiting for another round of drinks
with you

a glass of wine
a marlboro stick
some peanuts
another glass
of margarita

remember the rain and your naked
feet on the muddy ground

remember the storm and the
ceasing of the thunder

remember me?
i am my poetry
now i must admit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hi... Bye...

hi

one syllable,
two letters, it makes the difference of being here and
you being there,

hi

and i say hi too to you crisp, too short, reserved, as we both wonder what next to say what is the possibility of another letter, or word, or perhaps an incomplete sentence will do the trick of what that rest must follow...

hi.... and i fall short of meaning and i write...

bye.

three letters
one syllable, sad and indifferent

it could have asked for some more but you know

it cannot.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Hibernation Of The Self....

this door is closed

the pavement leading to the stair is not even allowed to receive morning messages

the self is hibernating on winter time
it is putting fire upon its being let no one enter
or one gets burned

in this hearth
of cinders
this molten lava
that purifies
rocks

RIC S. BASTASA
he was sitting on one benches of the public park where anything goes really, after a stroll, he sits again, putting his feet on a trunk his arms on the upper side of the bench the air fans him and he looks at the trees lush with leaves it rained last night and the scent of freshness is here again he simply sits there alone... there is no need of anything or anyone, in this kind of a very simple bliss.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hidden Disgust...

she opens the door
in the study room to tell him that dinner is ready his favorite but he is so engrossed (in his lies) before the computer and he says he's done.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hidden Dreams

as true love is speechless

i sympathize
myself

on so much talk

i bite my lips

put my tongue
on the right side of my cheek

the years
i tame

endured are
the hours

no matter how soft the bed is how fresh the

room

i always know
what to do

in sleep i go where

dreams are not few.
Hidden Pleasure....

feeling so light he floats the feeling is feathery

chickening out he hides himself in his journal

a dark room where he projects himself as a butterfly

black powder
with proboscis extending

longer than his pants

he consumes what nectar is found
on that
flower of illusion

he knows this thing is only found here this only thing that for the meantime makes him a man

RIC S. BASTASA
Hidden Something

something that you promise not to see
again
the tongue hides within the mouth it will not taste this again the eyes roll eyelids close as the scene is repeated
it is about another form of tongue-in-cheek
the mouth says something that it does not mean the brain understands perfectly like the heart

and so here it is again viewed for the nth time this time the conscience is numb

it says another lie
it comes back again
savoring
what it says it hates what it believes is too unlikely of its being

but what can you do
here it is again
mutually salivating

RIC S. BASTASA
Hide And Seek

when i went there you were not there when you went there
i was not there

purposely we try to not meeting
like two parallel lines unbent by light

you think about the kids playing hide and seek to while the hours away when we are not with them come to think about what we are doing: we are breaking up, and we are loosening our grip to our hands. we pretend that you like finding me and that i like finding you.

we love not finding each other.
and that is the truth.

when the kids ask why?
we play our games and we tell them we are enjoying each others' search.

we miss our absence.

we like it this way.
raw smiles. fake grins.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hiding

Since you are hiding
And I am here
Where and when do we start?

In the first place
We have nothing to begin with You hide
I can never find you

There is no beginning to Something & everything unknown.
There is nothing given in particular.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hiding A Secret Love

How can I hide
From my face
This fondness
This secret love
When she comes
To face me
She asks
If there is Something Wrong
As I leave
and say
Nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hiding Behind So Many Names

why does someone
hide in so many names?
if there were only many faces i am sure that someone shall buy those faces and day by day s/he walks in the malls
and confuse people about who she is

she may show a smile today a frown tomorrow
anger today and gentleness on another day she me take the face of the clown or that of a masochist
the sadist
she may buy the face of God and for a time for excitement's sake wear the face of the devil

but for God's sake
who is interested about her games?

not me. are you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Hiding The Gray Side Of Life because you want something definite

then i must hide

what grays areas are there nothing shady

something goes on
on this concealed portions of the hair and this morning

i am ready

to let you know that the world is only divided into two parts

black and white.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hierarchy

THEY ARE up there enclosed in their rooms of power it is a circus
they are all exhibitors

DOWN HERE the lowliest of the lowly suffer.

RIC S. BASTASA
i feel high today because mother came in a dream with an airplane evidently by her dress and expert actuation she is also the pilot she says with authority that this is a chartered flight and i will be the only passenger bound to a place where she presently lives, i do not mind at first what she is saying because my first reaction has been to hug her tightly like the way loneliness hugs a newly-found lover.

i look at her face carefully she is not as bright as the appearance of the ring she gave me when i reached 25 and she feels like wax when i touch her her face.

i don't know but i refused her which when i tell the story to my wife she explains why i am still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
High Noon

high noon
time to cook for my wife

got to fry
the fresh fish
warm the rice
and place
the plate for one person
only...

i have already
eaten just before high noon

left-overs
last breakfast

no problem
keep on writing
i am reading
your best poem

RIC S. BASTASA
High Noon (2)

something happened on high noon
the world stopped
spinning

the hands of the clock
become a single line

pointing to the cause of the death
of her innocence

petals falling off
sepals dismembered
a man cuts a stalk
and leaves the roots

mourning upon the bitter, sticky sap of loss

RIC S. BASTASA
High Power Lines

high power lines
along the green ricefields

two black birds
so interconnected bridged

and yet
unengaged
with each other

RIC S. BASTASA
High School Memory

three of you in class had a crush on her You threw a crumpled yellow paper with a note in black Ballpoint pen

I love you

She opened it and crumpled it again and threw it back to you It read in red ballpoint pen

I love you too.

RIC S. BASTASA
High Tech World

Google
quick results
data gathered Word, Powerpoint
chat, information highways Facebook,
instant noodles
e-credits, etcetera, everything at the tip of the fingers everything at the tip of the tongue flowing following without much meaning
like electronic poetry what a waste to figure out
emotions...
what emotions? nothing.
pressing keys
placing words,
and they keep figuring out what is the meaning of all these

nothing. nothing.
decay and oblivion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Highly Ambitious Dot

the lowly dot learns that ambition is a virtue and so one day it rolls itself upon itself until it becomes a line and then it runs and struggles and chases and rises and stretches and curls and winds itself upon itself until it becomes a shape until it learns the best shape to be in a circle that feeds upon its own shape until it become a sphere a ball
a rubber ball until it becomes a bouncing ball bouncing and bouncing until it masters the tricks of being the most important circle
the earth

where you live.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hills And Meadows

I like to see hills. Meadows.
Blue skies. Blue birds.
Trees are lining like confident soldiers.
This must be the Alps.
White caps on mountains.
A winding river. Pines and cones.
Rabbits and squirrels.

This is the Sound of Music.
A movie in my mind.
You come with your lonely boys and girls. You are the mother of escapism.
They are the hope of lost fathers of the wars that man has waged against himself.

I like to see hills. But there are none.
I like to hear the sound of music.
But there is none.

I face another darkness.
Tense situations. Another struggle.
No conversations. Heavy with Monotonous Silence.

Perhaps i will light a candle this time.
And inside the flame. I shall see hills again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Him

the man with red cheeks and white beard
and less hair, what is he up to?

ah, he is the mocking bird and for this he is never married.

RIC S. BASTASA
Him And Her....

he tried to understand what his hands are she didn't, she had no expertise on those hands closed like a living clam under the sea
to the bottom below the sand
she could not see his flesh
he did not see her face the story is rabid like a dog after the bite death is sure feared is light
and the cell closes on in him she was gone
like a glimmer
of the sun
dawn to the deeper part of the forest
breathlessly

RIC S. BASTASA
Hinay Hinay Lang

usa ka higayon
usa ka ginhawa
usa ka tikang

hinay hinay lang
ang pagdawat
sa karon

ilabay na ang gahapon og
ayaw lang sa
dawata ang
ugma

lisod ang tawong
magbagood

daghang mangahulog
kay dili na mahawiran
sa iyang gagmayng
mga kamot

dili mo mahakop ang tanan
dili mo na magakos
ang dako og
karaan kaayong
kahoy

og busa mas
maayo pag
molingkod ka na lang una
sa iyang silong
og manghaw-as sa mga dili
na nimo kinahanglan
tan-awa ang
mga gamot sa
kahoy
pamatia ang kalinaw sa
iyang mga dahon
batia ang kabugnaw
sa iyang landong

karon
ang pamalandong
karon
ang paghinuklog niining
mga kamatooran

usa ka higayon
usa ka ginhawa
usa ka tikang
lang una
hinay-hinay lang

RIC S. BASTASA
His Advice

his advice
for me not to fall into this chasm
is to hold unto my two ears

it is not really funny. he simply meant that i have to solve my own problems as he solves his. no molestation. just minding each own business and yes just being independent.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Argument

when life has nothing more to offer to myself what do you think should i offer to you?
when i have nothing
what is it that i can give you?
when i have nothing to gain or lose
what is it that i must fear about death when life itself has become my own sentence my own death
my own end
why should i love it? why should i live it with you?
when you have nothing too when we both have nothing to give and nothing to offer shall we ever forget and forgive?

that is perhaps the reason of the explosion explosive answers to explosive questions

RIC S. BASTASA
His Booklover

and so it came to pass that his book lover that he loves so much skipped the book that he wrote in years,

feeling dejected
he wrote another one intended for the one who is willing to have him.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Burden

early morning she goes out putting orange juice in a cellophane without bread or cookie she sips like a child

she cannot be outdone by him she walks a kilometer or so and he would be looking for her for hours filled with anxiety then she finds her without her bra in the marketplace

singing and dancing
the people looking at her with pity tired she sleeps on one of the benches and snores aloud dirt is on her feet and arms and hair and breasts

he finds her finally and takes her with his arms back home where his daughters are waiting for their mom

his burden is his wife besieged by the mystical furies

RIC S. BASTASA
His Calm And Silence

his calm and silence is such that one hears
the footsteps of the ant
the touchdown
of a leaf
on the fragile covering
of his heart

RIC S. BASTASA
His Case

tomorrow did not come he waits
but tomorrow never came he sits and claims the benefit of patience the past sits beside him enumerating
all the stories of regrets today is mindless
it laughs and shows nothing but indifference and then it tells him
that on the next minute it will leave him

no wonder he calls the long name of the rope befriends it
and then gently he wraps it around his naked neck

RIC S. BASTASA
His Charity.

the japanese was short with long black hair.
he carried only one sporty bag and sits there silently.
he did not talk.

at 12: 30 in the evening the loneliness crept in like a rat in the sink smelling left over.

we sat side by side. And then he started talking.

i learned much from him. His charity. His tolerance for troublesome women. His way of telling that his home in Japan is very peaceful but equated it with intolerable boredom. He bought a house in Argao.
A beachfront.

He is a widower. He supports scholars in Surabaya and Surigao.
And they quarrel over his generosity.

When we arrived in Manila he kept his silence again.
Perhaps, his only treasure now.

I gave the sign that we are now home and we must part ways.
I keep a treasure now. His charity.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Depth

when the rope with a pail was lowered to get some water
there was none, and the rope was only about two meters long what was loud was the echo of the pail banging the muddy bottom

RIC S. BASTASA
His Dialogue Along The Stairs Watching Love Pass Him By...

i simply watch love pass me by

and till this day

i regret merely watching love pass me by

i have not sinned
and i am not as happy

as those who sinned and were so easily forgiven

RIC S. BASTASA
His Drawing Of Her

with only
the pigments of red and black made available to paint her
he sticks to the rules

her body is the white of the canvass
her lips
red and the rest
shall be black

her heart too.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Father Had

his father had long died 20 years ago and at his age now when he coughs

at night
unable to sleep he hears the very kind of cough
that his father once had

pain sometimes
has twin sounds despite the passage of
the years

despite the urge to simply forget and let things

like ships take their due course and sink

RIC S. BASTASA
His Father's Death...

that early morning before eating breakfast his father asks for a glass of water his chest is in pain and the world closes out for him

Marcelino Sr.
R.I.P.
he farmed his way till death....

RIC S. BASTASA
His Favorite Picture

i've seen his favorite pic it looks like a creek where the ducks go for a swim
beside it is the green grass untread upon by the feet of men
growing tall is the tree giving shade
to a lost soul
the sun above it creates the islets of light

RIC S. BASTASA
His First Hug

his first hug
was not his mother's

for she died on the first day of his life,
neither his father's coz he died
when the war came about
long time
ago

not his grandpa's neither his grandma's no, not hers

it was
from his gay teacher in the context of a molestation
but he did not say any word about it simply because it was his first hug and it made him feel wonderful that he could not really
forget
it.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Funeral

MULTICOLORED umbrellas
marching the black road towards his final resting place this is his funeral
people cross the bridge
of the blue river
the day is bright
and the grief is light

He must have
IF he were still alive
Disliked it
He wants black umbrellas all along Black suits
Blue flowers
A rainy day
He wants his departure to be sad He has many unfinished business Too may sins still Without the penance.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Funeral (Edited)

MULTICOLORED umbrellas
marching the black road
towards his final resting place
this is his funeral
people cross the bridge
of the blue river
the day is bright
and the grief is light

He must have
IF he were still alive
Disliked it
He wants black umbrellas all along Black suits
Blue flowers
A rainy day
He wants his departure to be sad
He has many unfinished businesses Too many sins still Unforgiven
And needing the penance.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Idol Is Still Bruce Lee....

i ask if you ever get lonely in vegas

what with having to endure two wives and six kids all on their own lives now away
from you

i ask if loneliness
somehow travels in your spine when you are alone in the house
abandoned

is there such a lingering feeling of being
abandoned

your idol is still bruce lee, in high school you manage those kicks and how well you have manipulated chako and kung fu

i ask again if ever you get lonely too just like us, just like everyone you say you are leaving you are busy and you have no time for all these nonsense questions.....

RIC S. BASTASA
His Ignorance

it is the first step to knowledge, knowing that one has not known, it is the first stage of being full,
knowing that i am empty.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hail and welcome to the wondrous kingdom of the Warriors of Fantasy!

You are about to venture forth into various domains, each ruled, governed and protected by different kinsfolk and mythical beings that dwell in this enchanted land.

You are cordially invited to a demonstration of each of their customs and swordsmanship.

Each domain requires you to take part in the festivities they have to offer, so steel yourself and ready your blade, for you are about to draw blades with the likes of barbarians, demons, feral beasts, Greek gods and other creatures and beings from the worlds of fantasy.

From here travel south and make use of the map to your right to make your way to each of the available domains.

The map will magically navigate you to new magical worlds as you venture forth over time.
Be brave and alert in your travels.

Until we cross paths again, my friend...

: : Bows graciously once more and disappear under the veil of night.: :

RIC S. BASTASA
His Last Dance With Her

he holds her tight
nothing in between their bodies except this whisper
his whisper of honey i love you so she repeats the words and he kisses her
and then he falls
on the dance floor

cardiac arrest
the doctor pronounces
his demise

RIC S. BASTASA
His Lies

his lies are his hairs the crown of his head making him a king
of your dreams

do you wish him bald and ugly and finally unlovable?

care his hair and kiss his forehead
you may even put daisies laurel leaves

there is no halo
but what can you do?
he thrives upon your illusion upon your wish he comes through dreams are free and so are lies love, love, and love, there is no choice.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Loneliness

he undresses himself and slides inside a tub of water he buries his head to gain the coolness of the water he places his hands on the side and looks beyond the glass windows there the trees are green and the clouds are blue and the sun is brighter he closes his eyes and lies still around his body are the foams and scents he stops awhile for some thoughts she is still there inside his mind how can he ever forget her?

how long shall she stay inside his heart?

how can he be so powerless in this?
how can she be so beautiful still despite the years?

RIC S. BASTASA
His Love Rejected

his pain is still there when she said no.
the pain of rejection

his pain spreads like cancer throughout his body. he is sick, and he does not want to say a word about his pain.

he wants to continue living though as a matter of an obligation. the parents that he loves, the friends that he likes to be with.

her picture.
yes her picture is the one left for him. he gazes upon her lips and kisses them like he is a passionate lover loved by her.
he touches her hair, her cheeks, her neck, he dreams of her body and makes love with her.
it is all in the mind, he says to himself on dark nights.

he closes his eyes and dreams of her inside his dream she becomes a dove he looks at her but it will just be that just that.

he devises no traps, or concocts magic potions so she may love him in return, or cage so he may trap her in his sole gaze forever, he keeps his hands on his side his feet on the right ground he opens his heart like a window looking out to sea he is in pain and keeps on chanting he loves this dove very much but still, still even inside his dream, he wants her to fly and be happy and be peaceful and be so free away from him.

he keeps his tears inside his pockets.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Marriage Today

as proof of his love
for her
on his marriage today he brings a little boy
enclosed by his arms and he kisses him

the best evidence
of their love this boy
coming out from her very own body borne out of their free spirits their love unbound
by no other consideration
except
the warmth of their embrace the promise to be always together for better or for worse
till death tear them apart

and i
with the authority of the law vested on me do now pronounce
them
as man and wife

their eyes smile
their spirits jump with joy there are no wedding bells no doves
no motifs of any color because they are poor

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
he is jobless
and she is but plain
woman
of her domestic chores

RIC S. BASTASA
His Mode Of Earning His Living

beside writing poetry he takes macro photographs ants like camels moths into dinosaurs

moles into hills
islands into continents sorrows magnified
this is beauty to him

his poetry magnifies
what you have not seen

RIC S. BASTASA
His Name Is Predator

he thought he could not eat alone.
one time, he said it is unethical.
it is a show of greed, a manner that is uncalled for in the social order of proper behavior.
it is not nice to see.

why can’t you invite someone to dine with you?

now he drinks alone.
finished his combo meal.
a slice of pizza, two pieces of fried chicken breasts, a greek salad for solo, a bottle of san mig pale pilsen, five slices of mojos,

all tables are filled.
there is a family of four.
another table for two sweetie pies.
the usual whispers for nothing.
(does not make sense to him now since his girlfriend changed him for a night caller)

another table for five friends: the screaming gay is the loudest, another one is flirting, the three are making rumors and then the laughter,

no, i can't spend for another.
he tells himself. I have enough of myself. he adds.

life is tight. there is no one he can trust. a bottle of beer and his combo meal are just as happy as all the tables combined.

who cares? he is the devil now and ready for his next prey.
his name is predator.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Own World Of Calm

and then he closes the windows and doors
he spreads the drapes to drive
away
a figment of light he walks away from the world outside and now stays within as another world opens like a bud
into a giant flower where he alone
becomes the stamen
at a certain moment
secreting the
nectar of his own making

a sky is made and clouds drift
a sun appears
and light so much light satisfies his thirsts and hundred
huners

it is so calm
his world is at peace in a soundless
sphere

RIC S. BASTASA
His Paintings

I looked at the paintings not just once, but over and over again oh, the colors were so bright the yellows were glaring suns and the reds were like strawberries and the blues are what you see in long summers

i admit i admired the choices the mood, the glare which, as he terms it are radical, sort of giving it the masculine touch of the rebellious hero, who at the end, of course, wins his cause, with his woman beside him and the orange sun, behind.

i thought he is a friend so i give my unsolicited opinion, that the exhibits are more of, gay.

And, without due notice, he shut me out of his blonde world.
I regret losing such a friend.
I could have been nicer, but putting a blind eye, and a deaf ear, in my face. Hmm, my big honest mouth sometimes.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Poem

i read his poem today,
a disciple of
I don't really know
he will not tell
but this i can say,
i follow every thought every metaphor
and it is like i am being pushed
to the labyrinth of the large and small intestines of a
chicken,
i know how is it
to be a gizzard,
i survive all these blind curves
until i bump upon
a closed door
like an opening at the end of the tunnel,
there is still no light only lots of shit.

One thing,
last word, i like the ride of the roller coaster
which brings me back to my heyday
my youth
which i may say is paramount to his nauseous, really.
His Prayer

he prays a lot that He must take him now for he had nothing left not even his mind what he has is only his soul but He did not take heed He sticks to the plan that he must suffer purification
cleansing him so after the putrefaction
he shall sit beside Him

RIC S. BASTASA
His Prayer In Jail....

the accused who in his heart had been innocent all along had the last resort:

Tolstoi, 'God sees the truth but waits'

Father, Father,
why have you forsaken me?

RIC S. BASTASA
His Sermon

at the pulpit
he keeps reciting the three attributes of God that God is true that God is beautiful that God is good

no one disagrees on this soliloquy

have i really felt this?

some questions keep on propping
inside my mind
in the middle of this crowd and uniformity

is something true always good? will good be always beautiful?

what about the bitterness of the true life?
what about the ugliness of the desired good?

shall a good feeling be not wrong sometimes?
the bitter herbs of life has good teachings too.
the badness of failures make us strong and vigilant.

and so on and so forth... and then it is time to leave, sometimes an end is good.

like life, like death like the beauty of a fading sunset like the cover of the darkness like the coming of dusk like the birth of a new day...

RIC S. BASTASA
His Small World

a blue pen
a pair of eyeglasses
a cellphone
a remote control of the TV
a book
a writing notebook
a lap tap
and a white poodle sleeping beside all these things it is his small world yet everything and everywhere are inside it his body and soul

RIC S. BASTASA
His Song

it is natural that he can be mistaken as the mad man at noon he demands that all street lights be switched on he says the town is as dark as the night without the stars and the moon he proclaims that God is killed by all these self-righteous people of his town that God is crucified again and that there is no Veronica who wipes the blood from his brow

his song is the song of doubt he says it is the only certain thing there is only Nothing and Nietzsche is coming over to strengthen those that never killed him

RIC S. BASTASA
His Story

he likes to think that he is welcome here that Someone placed him here as gentle as those invisible hands of the caressing winds so he stays

the people around him are filling his skin with rules those that must not be done so he is scared and scarred

to keep the usefulness of sanity intact he must pretend as that is the only way to survive many have been hanged by reason of honesty and those who lie have become living heroes in his throne

he is king now

king of hypocrites master of lies

and all the people who make the rules love him inside he screams

tonight he goes for another kill like a vampire

in the morning his mouth is clean his face well shaven

the mirror mocks him all day but who cares? he'd say

'i am your creation and so i too have to create all of you i am the monster that you love and so here i am day by day eating each one of you' glance at the world it is happy because of you

morning angel night's devil

RIC S. BASTASA
after arriving from the u.s. dodong went straight to the ancestral house in milad, it is quite big, with two storeys, made of hard wood, and nipa roofed.

it stands upon a hill overlooking the sea far away from the city.

he opened the front door which squeaked wanting to perhaps greet him and tell a horrible story of what really happened before they left the place for good after ten long years of wanting to forget.

it is a shame of the family his father said before he died. This must be kept a secret, something which he carried to his grave.

dodong understands that pain is always there, coming like a stab in his chest. He can hear the cries of his two sisters, the loud screams of his mother. He was then a small boy before those three monsters.

it was the time of their fall.
He was tied to a chair where mother was killed. The whole town knew.
But it was still kept a secret.

Happiness is a hypocrisy. Silence is an option. Leaving things slipping like water from one’s hands.
Now he is back with nothing to do but to pray and forgive. This is not home. This is a graveyard of family's tragedy. After a few minutes, he is now ready, to burn this house.

RIC S. BASTASA
His Sweetness

now i know who in this office is sweet it is him
it is him that we suspect his urine
it is his urine which the ants have feasted

it is him who is sick it is him who does not admit it he has no reason to live the wine takes him

the cigarettes choke him the nights bury him with its loud music

this early morning he lies drunk on the sidewalk his mouth still with froth his eyes still tightly closed his stomach now again protesting....

RIC S. BASTASA
His Usual Routine...

last night he made love to her on longer hours
his tongue working out her nipples genitals on deeper penetrations trying to reach the deepest part of the wells of their souls

it was unusual

attempting to achieve what was never there for once new techniques of pleasures unlearning traditions of the missionary positions time is elongated
there is a new fantasy of an abstract
painting a la Picasso at the back
of his mind

a woman with two faces a man with a twisted jaw a guitar with a broken string
a river without visible banks
a ship without a port abandoned lighthouse dark clouds boundless seas
trees without leaves hands with nails removed detached arms
half man half horse
a lion with the tails of a fish
ceiling without beams rusty nails on walls
about to collapse

(how can he tell her that he never had an ejaculation?
that there is something in him that is never understood and tapped)

as lays there in bed snoring
he stares at the ceiling silently
composing all the possible
questions
still without any drafted answers

he is a submarine on uncharted depths of deep blue oceans charting out
the bottom
where due to so much pressure he shall shrink
like a crumpled
paper

RIC S. BASTASA
His Vision For His Place

his eyes look for hidden springs surging from the rocky crevices of the old mountains and he finds them his hands caress the river that is long and winding like it is the wedding dress of her beloved soon his dragon boats will come with a hundred paddles like a millipede on its tiny feet he sees floating restaurants sprouting like mushrooms by the side of the mangroves where colored stone fishes shall thrive like seaweeds and sea urchins everything is eco-friendly the silence of the nights shall be preserved the people of his place shall sleep soundly there will be no crimes and abuse of the land and sea and those that hinder him shall float and bloat in the river their heads explode their brains scatter on the rocks they shall disappear without any trace their eyes plucked out their mouths sliced from their faces summarily and quickly and without so much fuss their mothers and fathers cannot even weep they will be faceless and nameless and will have no place to stay he is the mayor of this town and his popularity rises he will soon be governor and even in time be president of this country his first name is the bullet and his family name is the gun he is judge and prosecutor rolled into one

RIC S. BASTASA
His Writings On The Wall

when he was writing about
walls
he wrote the words on the walls and they were arranged like walls from wall to wall his description about the wall was consistently like a wall walling in all the walls around the wall
where he was writing consistently and uniformly the word

wall, wall, wall, wall and then nothing but a train of walls like this wallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwallwall of course, he did not add any smoke from steam engine neither did he add any children and women and even men riding on the train of walls

there was no driver even or wheels

what he stressed was just a wall, a wall train, a wall nothing but a wall walling him in but what he really wanted at the end was something that should wall him out something however that until now he is still trying to figure out

RIC S. BASTASA
His Youngest

two wives
and five children he embraces the Koran his education
and religion and his peers and forefathers
crowding inside his mind

at the airport he looks at his youngest daughter playing with a toy
puppy

tears fall from his eyes for yesterday
if it were not for a little delay of the car
he would have been included in that convoy that met the horrible massacre

blessings in disguise he kisses his youngest daughter his time has not arrived yet he has things to do yet always now to love and to love always more

RIC S. BASTASA
His Youth

his youth was spent upon lighted cigarettes upon circles of smoke above his head
lost in the ceiling.

RIC S. BASTASA
History Lover....

a place is interesting because of the stories that you have heard before. for instance, this bed is where this man and that woman first made it.

this house is deserted because once a fire broke here and chaos is born, and chaos wears a mask and since then people do not recognize its face.

a name to you is interesting because your mother tells the story of that name. the spelling has a history about a rumor and you love rumors.

shall i say that you pretend that you like to have a talk with him because you like to gather some flowers from his garden?

that is a nice objective. Flowers are always a delight at the center table. the earth appears to be thirsty of conflicts. That is a misinterpretation.

The deserted path knows better. No one really cares what one does with his feet. The moon knows it all. But look, it simply shines and does not tell you anything.

For secrets have always been nuggets. They must remain buried. When dug again and shaped into different forms, that is where the definition of hell comes out.

I am not the one saying this anyway. Quite harsh. Hell is other people. And i am one of its delicate flames.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hit By Cupid's Arrow

hit by cupid's arrow
last night right in the middle of my heart

i bleed
and you are so blind and numb you'll never see and you'll never feel i am dying and it shall not be with your knowing

RIC S. BASTASA
Hmmm Working For The Money?

i like it this way
the way
i want things come and go
and i do not really work for the money but for a certain calling a mission

a vocation
an apostolate
a profession

and it goes this way, God provides and the money now

is working for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hmmm, Something That Is Mysterious

hmm, i press the word and lowered my face so my eyes may see clearly and there the enigma slides upon itself on the monitor the mysterious line of words keep coming like a rain of thoughts a train of trickles pushing itself on the dark tunnel begging for an understanding something that i cannot comprehend completely and then i said i like this something so beautiful
inside my heart
and yet something so incomprehensible... life hmmm.... life, oh life!

RIC S. BASTASA
and so we made an understanding to make our fences higher & stronger & thicker,

we shake our hands and on that very day we constructed things as planned we heard some whistling that sound of the mixing of the cement and sand and gravel the putting of the blocks and finally the shushing sound of the finishing touches since then we could not see their affairs in the same manner that we have kept strictly on the privacy of our own events the visitors that come the drinks shared we know there is peace now nothing of the old disturbance but when everyone leaves to occupy their own private places too what stays behind is the hoarded silence, this loneliness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hold On To Everything

surely you have hands and surely you know how to use your hands like holding on tightly to joys and sorrows holding on to pains and reliefs holding on to misgivings and thanksgivings and hate and love and giving and taking and speaking and silence you hold on to whatever in the place where you are an alien to all things honorable and miserable, defeats and triumphs, losses and gains, you must hold on, you must tightly hold on
to life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Holding On

i hold on to love just i imagine it to be i hold on to life just i want it to be i hold on to anything to keep love, to make life your hands, or if without it to the knife that i hide under your bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Holding On, Just To Be Alive...

when a boat sinks
you grab everything that your hand can hold, it does not matter what it is,
whether it is good or bad, legal or illegal, you simply take hold of it and hold on to the saving of your life.

similarly, when you are hungry and there is no food to eat you grab every food that is there, dirty or clean, stolen or gained you simply take it, and eat it to save yourself from death they impose their laws upon you, it does not matter anymore they give you death? what for? it does not matter you’re already dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Holding The Lamp

anxious face
the lines are bold like some veins
about to burst
like a bomb timed
at ten tonight

the flash light roams around the
darkness
a roomful of darkness wanting to point out the truth

the truth is in my heart in the darkness of
my heart
your flashlight gets
nothing
the view is holographic mirages and shadows
ghosts and souls

you are a failure again i turn off the light now see me again
in this darkness
this is my truth
this is my life
this is the only light i have the dark room a roomful of blackness
inside my heart
inside my soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
Homage

today i pay homage
to the turtle and for those like it are too slow
for almost anything

its inability to cope up with the arrogant and speedy rabbit the subject of too much mockery
in that snail-paced history

today i pay homage
to persistence and flexibility to patience and stoicism to faith that grows steadily within the hearts of every man that respect for every block of brick that makes the long winding gate of protection that composes the great wall of the house
for every step
that does the ways of master builder though small and slow yet still sure

today i pay homage for all the other slow processes of solitude
those quiet manners of the grass and the leaves the tender climb of the tendrils on the trellis of the fence the steady flourishing of the petals on the sepals of the morning flower

today i pay homage to those tiny green turtles anchored quietly
beside the gleaming stone of the ancient pond of our civilization those sleepy eyes under the moon full of wisdom showered by the rain and sunshine of the ages not rushing for anything they are all here undisturbed and thriving still not hurting anyone

RIC S. BASTASA
Hombres Del Viernes....

men with nothing to do but hold their beers till morning there is no work available and the world is at war with each other the government is a liar and the church is a good collector of their bones the neighbor has a party of its own not inviting anyone of them so here they are making their own sub-culture too fridays are the beginnings of their weeks devoted to a drinking spree long list of debts unpaid screaming wives and children who had to stop going to school and find work themselves they have their arms now and feet on their loveless locomotions it is not a shocking world it is real it is the truth too obvious fists punching tables like boxers going for a kill

RIC S. BASTASA
Home

the home is where the heart is.
we always know where our hearts are.
we therefore know where that home is.
somehow, my heart is broken and i have lost my home and i do not know anymore where that home is.

until you come to my life, pointing to me that way to my new home.
thank you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Home Again To The Arms Of Despair

the waves are bigger in the middle of the ocean of my dreams i sit on the sandy shore waiting here is distance unfolding coming and leaving at the same time the hands are powerless in this no amount of concerns connects us
once again
even if i surrender to the grips of the night even if the moon swears to shine till dawn breaks you come like a shadow of an afternoon Sunday broad and firm and strong as you claim yourself in a name carved in stone you're marvelous like a comet at noonday

it is late and i am weak my knees are bent to the ground of worthlessness you run to the sea and plunge yourself you wave your hand before that dissolution or that diffusion into the forgetting

i am looking at the horizon it is as straight as life wants itself to be who wants to break the silence of a line falling out of a page? the smoothness of an edge finally denying an importance and then the sunset completes itself with your silence

in that single splash
as you gasp for the last single breath
of hope
there is no stranger coming as a survival
there is no new born child to revive
despair
i think it is horrible but on the other hand it is divine
i remember that stair into heaven rosary beads they imagine hurled by our Mother

i cannot remember how that Sunday ends
i will again say it ends with the splash and then the edifying silence the rising of the clouds the resurrection of the dimming light in the middle of grief when handkerchief begins to show a face of thorns

let me stop and think awhile, a moment of silence please, drink this cup of silence with me this blood of wine

how can i tell you that there is this deleted version of the story in trembling i arrive home and then i scream that was at first and i realize the windows are closed like a man without ears there is no use for doors and doorsteps the stairs have long been broken

RIC S. BASTASA
long ago
i was unwanted grandpa
never praised me though i worked hard
even for
one word, perhaps love or even a pat on my shoulder which i never really had

papa i remember
bought me a toy chopper
but that was just once

he was not drunk when he played with me
in the garden

when you feel unwanted
you do not have friends
you have nothing good to say it was early for me to learn that dying can be good

i never speak to anyone
about it

i only speak to myself
because i have
no choice

i love isolation
it becomes a way of life never had a best friend never had a circle of

friends

as a matter of consequence i become too independent complete in myself
and had always been a survivor

despair is an everyday word so i was no longer
afraid.

today people want me
call me by my name
and praise me, but it is too late then i do not need it anymore when grandpa died all those near me cried and mourned for days i keep my usual distance wear my tinted sunglasses and walk myself

all alone back home

home is myself
my heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
Home Of The Broken Heart

a broken heart
is always a stranger

looking for
a cure

on an unknown terrain

it finds a river & swims there

feeling cold it rises naked from the water

dresses himself to be born again

he finds a home

it is where his healed heart
is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Home Sweet Home

sunday on a home sweet home from the city to this little nipa hut on top of a hill that father built

where the guava trees are filled with ripe fruits where i climb and gather and taste the sweetness of its pink flesh where the carabaos rest in the coolness of mudholes where i take my ride on them in the river nearby

on crystal clear waters where some fish swim on shallow waters inviting me to fish and catch them for lunch of pearl white glutenous rice and with banana leaves as plates and some wild chicken's barbecued breast and with my bare hands and some childhood friends we shall take this simple feast

RIC S. BASTASA
Home?

We were the children of poverty
And upon our shoulders lay the itemized responsibilities

As other children catch spiders I was there repairing the leaking roof with papa

As others chase dragonflies and trap birds I was there pasturing the cows and watching the carabaos

It went on and on even when i have become a man

As others went for the dance i was there cleaning the car And scrubbing the floors into shining surfaces of pride

As others married the women of their dreams I was there burning my eyebrows in the university of life

Everything i had i thought was a suffering But Papa is right

My feet are on the ground
And then i have a house, a car, land, money, and a name Except love and some things that money and fame cannot buy.

I guess he is right, i have a home of the past But the future is still dimly lit, a shadow of a wall

A smoke from the kitchen, an ash in the garden, Stones and pebbles on my feet

I can never be complete, just like anyone else.

RIC S. BASTASA
Homebound

before he left the U.S.
HE took pictures of himself sleeping no one believes that it was him who took that picture someone theorizes someone was beside him another lonely body to another lonely body on that winter time but it is really true he will always be alone and will always be alone he repeats it so many times that it has become the sound of the monotonous loneliness that he is finally leaving he took the pictures of his breakfast some greens

his lunch something oily and his supper something like cheesy pasta he took every detail of that lonely room then he viewed them again when he was on that 17-hour flight back home before the plane landed in Manila he deleted everything

RIC S. BASTASA
Homelessness

There is homelessness
In ungodliness
So much mindlessness
To this kind of indifference
There is no reference
To my homelessness
This restlessness
To nothingness
This unholiness
There is no reference
There is no address
To this kind of unwholesomeness

There is nothing found Only something lost.

RIC S. BASTASA
Honestly

Something in me wants to go back
and want once more
to hear the sound of your laughter

i want to imitate
what it really is
i want to show this place where i come
from
i want to show you now how disfigured
is my mouth
how this system has done badly
for all the child in us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Honestly ...

never had the chance to visit Gethsemane
the thorns of the crown on my head, never felt, did not see the carrying of the cross,
that darkest night of the crucifixion, never been
there

in this middle of my reflection couldn't wait to see Christ in His Resurrection

i'd give up sorrow, grief, lament, in exchange of joy
it's the redemption that matters most our way of moving on this long yet
unfinished journey

RIC S. BASTASA
Honestly I Too Turn

honestly i too turn
to sand when love is repeatedly uttered like a chant to make the dead become alive again when there has never been proof of its resurrection I've seen people live faithfully in the house because there is only one house not because they are one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Honestly If You Only Ask Me what name shall i give you, i have so many names ready,

i am paul, but they call me greg, (i can be a kenneth, if you like,
or an apollo, tell me,
do you like greek games?)

i told you i have been always Paul, not the apostle, but the one that they always like, at the gallery of bones, at the esplanade of hands, more hands, the room is clean and perfumed, and the light is dimming like a human drama of lovers and what they do quickly to themselves, you like to see dark nooks something that is crowded just for two people to feel the pulse of their wrists nothing about the heart here you emphasize it from the start plain rubbing and then at the back of our minds an impersonal groan,

then we leave, without a wink.

honestly, if you ask me, i never like it, but i know soon another one follows.

(note: this has nothing to do with me. Someone i know.) Honestly Let Me Talk To Myself And Remind It...

enough of these tantrums that i have caused upon myself that i have shamed upon myself an honorable man to the eyes of those who do not know my cravings
and longings and what do i call it? these rampant rantings of a man who may not after all deserve to live

for another day
a devil's quivering chanting that i may take my life and let others live
in peace.

drama, enough of this drama.
i admit, it is this unrequited love for all these years
that keep me living
to the life of la vida loca.

she bangs!

alright, talk, i will listen in a minute.

RIC S. BASTASA
Honestly My Love

honestly my love
on a union like ours for twelve years, forty days, six hours, 25 minutes and 40 seconds
i feel like i am a train always running and running on a railway without resting on any station

now that you have decided to take a vacation
somewhere
in mexico
or africa or how i wish you go somewhere in east asia where some of the mystics are selling their beliefs and practices about peace and harmony and nature
and introspection

on your leaving as i have my break

i feel like a man with a heart filled with so much
air
pressure
and then suddenly a vent opens
and air pushes out from its chambers
like a balloon whooshing its way to the clouds
and fall
again
and here i am fully deflated
squatting
on the ground
like a new skin

or rubber
to be a little bit specific wanting to be filled

again
by another lovely mouth a strange air

i long (kill me) always
for another
someone not like you

for the meantime

RIC S. BASTASA
Honestly Sometimes I Feel Like A Robot

writing poems.. just that, i can't explain it but i can't really help it opening the pc
and writing whatever comes to my mind like a robot...

but this time after having expressed myself in all the lines i sense something too...

self-esteem and i am feeling more like a human being,

incomplete, unfulfilled, insatiable.

RIC S. BASTASA
Honestly Speaking My Dear

you have a sharp knife with you so i will keep a little distance poor innocent onions, lousy green tomatoes, foul garlic chopped into microscopic pieces, and a frying pan overheated like a bull fuming with smoke from the oil what is that temperature honey?

oh, you are angry again to the world of work, you are bored to the law of routine, you are at it again in your atlantic ocean of sighs and mysterious turbulent ways, surge and upsurge.

I do not ask for reasons.
I let you boil up like water inside that kettle that sings the songs of madness, a warning that all must shut up or be stabbed with your unexplainable silence.

nothing sunny side up, everything hard boiled with the black soot of sulfur settling at the bottom of the egg.

honestly speaking, i do not mind at all.
it is at the time when you are so angry that you become so silent, and i like it that way. i can think some more.

Deeper and probing. Perhaps, i shall soon find the answer in the hot oil overheated inside that frying pan.
No one wants to be fried alive, you know that well enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
Honestly......

i
do not believe you but i have to read you over and over again because i want to see who i was from the very beginning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Honey and lemon, I know how The taste blends, and honey and Pancakes, I know the taste And lemon in ripe papaya so sour so sweet

And Honey, how about you and me, Do I blend like lemon to your honey?

or do i blend more as a yellow slice of lemon to your margarita?

RIC S. BASTASA
it was only less than a year his grandchild was charred by fire that razed their house and car they are still in mourning the wife died two years ago of an unknown infection the doctor declares that there was something incurable his son had to stop the lawyering on a broken tendon from a high fall but he seems not to be shaken a man needs to be shaken like a tree that must shed its leaves to grown new ones
last night he slept while driving his Honda Civic running over five pedestrians scurrying for fish
one died on the spot
the rest of the four were badly injured and had to be rushed to the hospital his eyes are sharp he is 78, retired and still teaches Special Proceedings
he is thinner now
and still skips lunch to stay fit he says everything can be paid
there is always a price for every man no one sticks to a certain integrity unreasonably vis-a-vis one man's need for money
in order to survive
the high cost of living and dying

it boils down to money he continues pouring his legal wisdom based on his 50 years or so of legal practice money does not only talk it covers crimes and washes away man's sins in society he says some more but my mind like a black bird flies away from a steel cage wanting the freedom of the mountains the wider expanse of the horizons
and oceans

i like to leave but he grips my hand as though trying to say he hates being alone now in his distress (the one that he cannot accept and does not want to talk about it) there is always a hypocrisy for past greatness building its empires in the bones of those who are guilty of reckless imprudence of those who think that money is the living god that man is nothing but a creature of debits and credits

i bid him goodbye
and wish him luck and as usual the cliche of having to tell him
'God bless you'

again serves as another empty rhetoric. Man says sometimes what he does not really mean
and that makes no difference with man's concubines too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Honoring God Forever

even if God does not answer my prayer
I will still honor Him Forever in all the days
of my life

God owns everything I have.
And i have no right to complain even murmur
even murmur
my misgivings.

God is always Great!

RIC S. BASTASA
Hooked

a fish is hooked
non-aligned
and sank.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hooked And Eyed

hooked
is the eye
the fish cannot get away

caught and sliced
salted and spiced
on the table

breakfast
one fishy morning

RIC S. BASTASA
Hope

as you step on a forest of dry leaves
and twigs

you take a peep
at the bottom
of things

and see an acorn pushing
through to make you
a tree
in due time

RIC S. BASTASA
Hope And Truth

pain is not your true friend it does not stay long it looks for another
faithful company

that is hope

and so is happiness that knocks once and like pain enters your door sits on your chair and dines and drinks with you but only for a while

you want it to stay some more you pamper it with scrubs and foot massage
a very soft bed and a bear hug and a french kiss it goes out without notice flies from your window

leaving you
a certain emptiness

that is the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hope For Something Unpopular

Van Gogh's expressionism did not offer him anything only one painting during his lifetime was sold

no one liked it because he was not a follower of anybody it was only after so many years after his death

that his sunflowers begin to be noticed midway between insanity and spirituality

RIC S. BASTASA
Hope For The Coming...

black butterflies
against the dark blue skies cotton clouds sailing above a wave of horizon

as ships reach the shore lower their sails and fold a woman waits for you

wipes her tears,

opens her arms and finally embrace you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hope For The Trees....

every color has its destiny of fading, like the sound of ducks at night getting fainter until what we hear is the perfection of sound its reigning silence and so do all the colors
dying,
either surrendering to total darkness
or
too much light
the same things amount to and end

that afternoon what burns into red in a rejoicing comes into the perfection of utter
darkness

the lights of the small houses redeem what was lost in the same manner that the fireflies
arrive
assuring hope for the trees that the stars are coming....

RIC S. BASTASA
Hope Is Always There

never mind
nothing

it stays there
anyway

under all circumstances
keep going

something crops
up sooner

nothing leaves
chase
always the elusive substance of
something

nothing's spent no one's here
for a kill

so never mind
nothing
keep going hold on to something
like even
a packet of air
in your hand

that is something
it is not
nothing at all

RIC S. BASTASA
Hope Is An Intervention

hope is an intervention
when Ladies cannot give you the attention-But flavored condoms are cautious to something delicious!

RIC S. BASTASA
Hope Of The Black Curtain

Beyond this black curtain this veil of my window on its sense of mourning on the grief walled by the frames of a house devastated

...clouds drift, a sail boat stirs its way a man paddles it to a distance the sun rises, all things move all molecules collide all atoms consistently collide making me feel everything is alive
i am, too, breathing still
despite.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hope...

without hope
you imagine hope

you must imagine hope there is no hope you must invent hope

it is too tiresome
do not believe in hope because it is too hopeless promises are not popes not pop but poo
pooh,

if there is no hope, accept, hope does not exist what exists is you and you are not hope you are real,
you are reality, and hope is lesser, much lesser than you hope is a tree you are bird hope is the pebble you are the running water hope cannot hold you it is not a cup of water you are the wind and you are not suppose to stay hope is a dead tree stuck on its rotten roots fly away, so, do not just stay there and stare at anything open your wings, spread and be gone for good hope is a dead grandmother and you are the inevitable grandson least limitable, ongoing movie swinging tarzan, hot popcorn

RIC S. BASTASA
Hopefully A Merry Christmas Here In The Philippines

Three people were killed and 47 others were wounded when two cellphone-activated mortars exploded one after the other in two department stores 30 meters apart on the same street in Iligan City yesterday.

In Manila, Malacañang said President Arroyo would push through with her scheduled visit to Iligan City today for the inauguration of the suka pinakurat vinegar processing plant of Green Gold Gourmet Food Products in Barangay Pugaan.

* Let us stop this war.
Let us give peace a chance.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hopefully Come Cascading

we work on some secret codes you put the letter folding into three rebellious satirical bully

i am, i am that reality subsumed bone-like enticing

revealing sanctity bonfire

you keep on telling space: i love you i desire all of you
crush me, make love to me, bend me, you kneel and worship
my humility cries
like some rain dripping from my lips you love this game of the gods of love
and lust

hopefully come cascading
homespun cauldron composing how come coldness?

reality stings bangs
robust shining body

come! come! hope comes cascading real sweet boy

waits for a bed-ful of desire.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hopelessly Romantic

when he was a child
he made a fan out of those big leaves

gathered flowers for mother

and he carried these options when he became a man ladies love him but he never loved anyone

he had become hopelessly romantic

loving art, loving the world but never offered himself and so when he died no lady has ever shed a tear flowers wilted

leaves dried, cracked and turn to bits and pieces too fine enough to be blown by all the winds away

RIC S. BASTASA
Hoping

with the hope that you are coming i sit alone beside a table with two cups of hot coffee until everything gets

cold

while the leaves of the talisay tree fall
because the strong winds are passing

=====================================

sa pamasin nga moabot ka naglingkod ako nga ako rang usa sa usa ka lamesa nga dunay duha ka tasa nga kape

hangtod nga
ang tanan nabugnaw

samtang ang mga dahon sa talisay nangahulog kay milabay ang
kusog kaayo nga
hangin

RIC S. BASTASA
Hoping For The Uncertain, Groping For The Unpredictable braving the empty space above a field of grass he walks away carrying nothing no jug of wine, no cigar no picture of a loved one no memories in his mind, no hope either, nothing to speak about he brought silence strong as steel he has his hands shaped like a bowl like a mouth gaping open to other uncertainties his only kind of possibilities unpredictable,

and hence more exciting!

RIC S. BASTASA
so many things to see to do, outside, the sun, and trees, and pathways, narrow alleys
some,
and eight-lane superhighways inside a bus
one chooses the side of the window
hoping to forget what hurts still, as edges of roads come and slice
your mind, but, and this is real, as you close your eyes, you go back to yourself, and to that which still hurts, which makes an empty space in your heart, as you feel the hollowness of dreams unfulfilled, of substances light as air, and someone sees you

blank as paper, light as cloud, hard as another wall,
a word misspelled,
a lapse, a limp, another slip,
and you do not mind, leave it, there, you sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hot And Dumb

the sun had not seen the rose inside a cave which is pretty unusual for a rose to survive without
light

dinvalid upon a focus of survival the rose learned how to live without light the sun never saw its beauty and when he heard about it it simply ignore this fact as a myth, as something that must be dismissed something that must be taken as a grain of salt upon a bowl of water the rose is true, the sun

hot and dumb

RIC S. BASTASA
to be a poet of reality one must collect real stones from the past the past can be misty and everything because of time can become yellow with age like a letter written long ago and inserted in one of the pages of a book. Even the present can be uncertain. The future fickle. But to be a true poet, one must always go back and take what was necessary and left out in those secret attics. Those that they all want to be forgotten because they think that they will just harm us in our contented places. Our comforts need not be sacrificed by are growing now into the light, the window, and what use is that to dwell on cliffs where the only possibility is our falling? Death is the constant fear of pain.I, too, am a poet of reality, I know what hurts me, but I am embracing it again.

I want to be stronger. Near perfection.
I want to be that child beside Papa watching him remove the scales of the fish, slice the flesh, and remove the gills, and frying them all, in that hot and silent oil.

Hot Tea From Candice

a cup of hot tea on an early morning chill the smoke rises
only to vanish

RIC S. BASTASA
Hot, Hot, Hot

it is hot outside temperatures are rising i am sweating
and i am also hot for almost everything
you see
it is like a stone surrounded by sand
the sun is up
and there are no trees no grass
no grasshopper in sight

there is fuming in my mind i am bursting with steam

i send out a scream
' i am alive! ! i am fuming! !

i am human.
Now the world is listening.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Philippine government on Sunday (24 Aug) rejected a call by Muslim guerrillas for a halt in a massive air and ground assault, and instead intensified the four-day attack, capturing a rebel training camp in a southern province, officials said.

Moro Islamic Liberation Front Chairman Al Haj Murad urged the government in a rare news conference Saturday to stop the offensive, warning it could imperil a years long peace process and escalate violence in the country's troubled south.

About 6,000 troops and police commando forces, backed by artillery and bomber aircraft, have attacked guerrilla positions to capture a rebel commander who occupied and looted Christian farming communities in North Cotabato province. Two other commanders are also being hunted who led a rampage last week in which 37 people were shot or hacked to death in Lanao del Norte province.

'There will be no let up in government offensives, ' Press Secretary Jesus Dureza said.

He said government forces would 'enforce the law' if Murad does not turn over the three commanders for justice. Murad has refused to do so.

After four days of air and artillery strikes and attacks by army rangers, rebel resistance has softened, allowing troops to capture a guerrilla training camp in Maguindanao's Mamasapano township, said Army Col. Marlou Salazar, who was overseeing the offensive.

Troops were checking the camp, which has obstacle courses, assembly areas and small buildings for combat training, for possible booby traps and land mines, he said.

'They're scampering and leaving only token forces to delay our advance, ' Salazar told The Associated Press by telephone.

At least 27 guerrillas have been killed and 21 others wounded in three Maguindanao townships where Salazar's army brigade was pressing its assault against the forces of rebel commander Ameril Umbra Kato. Military and police were continuing a manhunt in nearby Lanao del Norte province for commanders Abdullah Macapaar, also known as Bravo, and Aleem Sulaiman Pangalian.
The National Disaster Coordinating Council reported that at least 40 civilians have been killed and 240,000 displaced by the rebel attacks and the fighting.

'The number keeps growing,' Social Welfare Secretary Esperanza Cabral told the AP. 'There is fighting that erupts in new places almost every day so more and more are being displaced. So we are hoping that there can be a peaceful resolution very quickly.'

Cabral said the World Food Program has increased its emergency rice supplies for refugees from 400 tons last week to 900 tons.

Murad said government troops were attacking the main rebel forces and not only pursuing the three commanders.

The rebels, who have been fighting for Muslim self-rule in the predominantly Roman Catholic nation's south for decades, said they regretted a recent upsurge in violence and that the commanders responsible had acted on their own. Murad said peace talks should resume, but refused to turn over the commanders to face the criminal justice system.

'We cannot subject our members to the laws of the government,' Murad said. 'We are a revolutionary force.'

Just weeks ago, a peace deal to end the decades-long insurgency had seemed within reach after government and rebel negotiators initialed an agreement on an expanded Muslim autonomous region.

But Christian politicians in areas that would be affected challenged the deal in the Supreme Court, triggering the attacks by frustrated rebels.

By JIM GOMEZ/ AP)

Associated Press writer Oliver Teves contributed to this report.
MySinchew 2008.08.25

RIC S. BASTASA
How Do We Speak In Riddles?

how do we speak in riddles?
are we the modern versions of the sphinx and where can oedipus stand and destroy us at the crossroads?
come oedipus, slay us with your wits
and incestuous destiny.
we are supposed not to look straight in the eye we degenerate and shrink when we do so we delineate a bit
not for any dramatics but it is simply the reason why we are born this way, writing in crooked lines and burying some meanings on the sand for the waves to caress and recover with great patience and love, we speak and we do not explain they will say they will understand and each shall make a stand that though different each is right to a certain extent, this is the life of mystery a prism of colors contrasting conceding condescending yet true, well, maybe different when filtered, light, shadows, images, meanings, submeanings,

then extract, abstract, and what you find ultimately from what is written above is simply this:

riddle.

these are what we poets mean.

RIC S. BASTASA
How A Poem Is Born....

suddenly
you are jobless,
you read all the
ads in cyberspace
like a star floating and looking for an anchor
of a galaxy, sleepless and
restless - -how normal
for this situation of intensity and anxiety,
you look out the window oh, it is cold out there you mumble some words not really coherent at first the feelings rush
like children out of school
that is how it is.
i've been there
not really nice
but comforting.

RIC S. BASTASA
How About Me?

doe, a deer, a female deer ray, a golden ray of sun, fa, a long long way to run
....

me, a name i call myself.
you are right.

me is my name. I call it myself.
and it is pushing us to an illusion, an allusion, of a self, identifying too well with it.

it. just it.

me.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Are You Children Now?

what are these mountains?
how old are their foundations?
how long will you take it as a hiding place?
how pale have you become,
how diminished in view away from us. There is still a way to the plains to be with the village again how are you children now? they have grown without you how is it to be a man without a father? how stern have you become?
how you shaped a system and how the system has shaped you.
these things happen,
and i am at the middle of these crossfires wanting to fade.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Are You Death?

on a lonely night like this

on a lonely night like this
i envy the stars
i miss the moon and the cool shadows of trees

on a lonely night like this in the desert of my dryness, i long for the rain and the fog and the mist

on a lonely night like this
i begin to think
about you:

RIC S. BASTASA
How Are You Treating Life?

how are you treating life?
so,
but i prefer another active question the one that makes me more responsible

ask me, how i am treating life?

well, i am treating it well like the way i talk to anybody courteous, careful passionate taking each time as a moment of joy
preserving more memories moving on always with love and affection

truly yours, sincerely, with the usual bravado of that aha! yes, that aha! experience
i just love life
so how can i every betray it with the kiss of sorrow?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Are You?

the winds are strong today and the leaves fall from the trees they struggle for space in the garden the sea is mad and raging like a rush of a man wanting to be brave the sea caps are whiter and foamy like the babble of the unhappy woman how are you? i sometimes ask that to myself and people begin to answer (it was not for them somehow perhaps the man over there hears the whisper of my mind to my ear and he says also upon himself (I am not ok, i have this pain in my heart i have this pain in my belly) how are you? i am asking you and you are so far away from me my words are sleepy but i still wonder now: why do you insist that my lies are true? why do you prefer beauty than truth?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Are You?

morning
is your usual sound vibrant as the wings of a seagull diving upon a white
fish
against a blue
sea

it is evening
i sit alone on a chair at the porch trying to listen to your whisper

rising into a lively conversation
like
a crowd of three
at the balcony

i am worried

the city has no electricity and it is dark

you have become so far away from me
like a vanishing
light

i need you to make a sound

even the faintest sound of a cellphone
in silent mode with a matching vibration

RIC S. BASTASA
How Beautiful Is Hope....How Lovely A Dream...

somewhere is always a filler
of a place in our dreams

someone is always a
hope
for all the broken
hearts

someday is never a consumable measure

somehow yes somehow
i always wait somehow

more likely, could be,
these endless possibilities.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Best Not To Engage In An Outrage

stay cool sit there buy Bo's tea
wait
look around
do not join in this rampage of an outrage
this building is burning!

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can A Man Be So Intelligent...

how can a man be so intelligent
to prey upon his own
kind?

he ceases to be a part of his own kind,

he places himself on the throne of his own disaster

he makes his own kingdom of tinmen and
haywomen and iron soldiers and wood servants

he carves his own stone heart ruthlessly he walks and kills whatever displeases him he paves his silver path to his own hell

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can A Tiny Sparrow Sing?

how can a tiny sparrow sing
with a worm on its tiny mouth?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can Be Be Disappointed?

our days and nights
speak well of our sins and redemption

two faces we wear
one for you and for the other: smiles and grimaces stung and dung bleak and beak
spick and span
black and block

sameness of expectations nothing from me and nothing from you how can we be disappointed?

you are on your own convictions and me to my own directions.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Believe You?

all those i meet along the way are animals, and they all lie and cheer
and full of pretenses,
and here you are another animal pretending to be human promising me another day of cheers
another hope
and then at sundown
when i look for shelter you are nowhere to be found
telling the trees and the daffodils that you are but another shadow
slave of the night
and then
disappear

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Bleed? .....

you treat me like an ordinary stone that you step upon
towards the river where you bathe and sing
and remember
the true one, who had long exchanged you for a stone
like me.

here i am.
how can i bleed?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Die?

for the love of it
how can there be boredom?

how can the body tire for the one it loves to do?

for the love of birds you do not fear the disease you love those dogs you never tire feeding them with my love for you

how can i die?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Eat That Apple?

it is half the apple it used to be sliced on the table
named for you

you know that i cannot take it

rotten besides
there is a worm coming out
from inside it

it is taken
you say so

i am glad
it isn't mine

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I End Something That Does Not Leave Me?

at this hour
i hear the sounds of a sweeper it just rained today and i am watching how it ends in the balcony of the house where the road is empty the woman across the road is sweeping the leaves the wind as usual blows and then leaves what it cannot carry...very much like us very much like that woman she sweeps and groups the leaves and leaves them all there only to be blown by the wind again as i watch what too

i cannot carry with me for i am just a spectator whose deep thoughts are carried by the wind only to be left inside with me again. How can i end something that does not leave me?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Ever Be?

how can i ever be a very short moment fluttering in a few minutes and then be gone as a memory without a trace in the labyrinth of man's whims
in the caprices of history in the clasp of serendipity

how can i ever be just a butterfly
in your mind?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Ever Cry Again?

Cry baby, I was, and mother could not rest Her sweet lullabies work somehow I always stop crying when she puts me Safe in her arms

She was always there to wipe My tears
She was always there to assure me
Of her kisses

Somehow I got used to this crying And it does not work anymore
To appease me
And put me to silence and sleep

You never loved me I know My hands always reach out for yours You closed them and open them to another I am in pain but how can I every cry again?

When I do not have tears anymore When crying does not work anymore
To appease me
And put me to sleep and be silent

I have learned how to be tough I have learned this art of self-denial This art of losing and not retreating To always move on, & be silent and strong

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Ever Forget You? ....

to write a feeling is to collect water from your hands and then read them in your fingers

how do i write that i really love you?

you are not mine
you are gone
i want to write that i can forget you

like water dripping
from my hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Fake Some Feelings?

when you fake your orgasm
i know it
by heart, there is no moisture in my thoughts,
dry
as a desert i walk like a bedouin without a song my camel looking for some water in the oasis
mirage,

we too are mutual in this faking game
i do not even have to fake my feelings
loving you

it is the bulb in my head above the bed
where we make love in an intertwine
when the light clicks see another face

forgive me
i have had your fake orgasms multiple in fact but i really do not mind faking my feelings

they are not there anymore i do not have them they have long been buried in the marrow of my bones
the red blood there long dried

i do not even remember where and when

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Finish This One?

Multitasked, five fingers touching different plugs, Two hands holding three coffee cups, a mind that reads a book And looks at the changing hues of the skies, two feet sailing in two separate sailing boats,
A heart that loves and hates a hand that wants to clap alone not in Good rapport with the other, a left ear that closes and a right Ear that opens,
A mouth that eats and wants to speak when it is still full,
A disunity of my parts and confusion of my beliefs,
A rebellion of my cells, unrest of my nerves,
And so how can I ever finish this one?

When all that could have been done is that we all listen

when speaking should only be one at a time when things should have been done one at a time when living should have been only a moment in time when climbing should only be one stair at a time this moment, this time, this you and I, not convoluted not intercalated.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Make A Poem About Children?

let me begin with some diapers to make a poem about children let me add the lines of wetting and crying
some more of the crying and the hunger of the children who have not mastered to use the words to file their complaint let me put the images of thirst a desert
a ricefield cracking without the rain for months let us see the cradle of the child unable to sleep because of the sound of bursting guns and the disagreements among men always warshocked warlike

let this poem be but a lullaby let me put a smile
of a child rocked by the arms of mother
now the child may sleep in her warm bosom

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Say That Your Poem Is Like An Ugly Woman?

i confided to her many lied

for
the truth of the matter is that his recent poem is not the kind that he makes those that mends the broken wings of a bird
enabling it to fly away from all threats

i am an honest man i have told her that but at
this moment
i am having a hard time telling the truth to the sad man who is
licking his wounds like a stray
dog
in the street

i ask if my honesty can do service to his art

she says
how can he ever understand our quest for the lighter state - the way we have been looking for those
beautiful
gossamer wings
on twilight
when the rest have ceased playing
their games

it is dark
and everyone is tired

those depressed
have swallowed the drugs that can make them sleep and for a while forget

ah, why bother?

i write this instead.

To hell with art
I must save the life of a sad man

even if i shall only tell
about illusions

like what the rest of the tribe is doing

here is silence
it is truth's beautiful sister and together they can make a perfect pair...

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Speak About Morality?

All the while they were talking the new code
of morality

she looks at me
with a margarita on one hand and smoke on the other
she looks at me
with disdain
and i think, she feels

so sorry
for my form
and beliefs

she is asking if i am a professional virgin, (of course, i am not)

i rise to go and she follows me her eyes i mean
slowly undressing me seeing my legs and bottoms and waist

she calms down
she waters herself with some hormones running in her
hands
exiting down to her toes

her fingers feel like iron rods
to the fragility of my tissues

how can i speak
about
morality?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Tell The Yellow Daisy?

how can i tell the yellow daisy about the sad truth that her fingers that long to touch the blue clouds high up in the sky cannot be hers?

how can i tell her that she is just wasting her fleeting time and feelings trying to touch that which cannot be touched by her fingers because their worlds are far apart because the sun will not allow it because she is just this tiny little daisy that grows wildly in my little garden?

how can i ever tell her that love too has rules? that love too can be too painful and most of the time addressed to indifference: unrequited?

how can i ever tell her that like her i am also in pain in longing and dying?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I Tell You?

in truth i like to hear all your laughter.
who does not want to be happy like all the rest of the living?
Time is a strainer.
It is separating what is important and necessary.
Now, i have found that i do not need laughter.
It has not served its purpose.
So many have laughed and died
just the same.
There is more perhaps to all these escape goats.

what i need is a green grass.
blue clouds, wide oceans.
a cow beside, a flying bird above.

i need no one now and i am happier.
i do not need your laughter.
I do not need you even then.

And so i am on my own now.
In my silence and curiosities.
What is there? What is beyond me?

This place is nothing.
There is something over there.
How can i tell you?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can I?

how can i put your music in my words?
your dance
your kiss?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can Love Be So Kind?

my right hand holds the essence
of my being

i do not have to fight it again your soft hands shall gently touch it stroke it like it were a gentle dog a fine feathered bird and then we kiss, we kiss, we are on our own now mapping out where true happiness lies just us, tonight, under the blackness of this night

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can My Hands Prevent You From Getting Wet?

grief

the rain starts falling softly
on your hair as we step outside
how can my hands
prevent you from getting wet? just life grief is this rain, that starts to fall and stops a while and falls again and much to chagrin we have never really learned this cycle of pain, this grief that behaves like rain wets us and makes us cold but we keep on going trying to find once again
home.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can One Stop Sharing?

it is the same question as how can one stop one's humanity?

it is our essence,
a nature second to none,

think, the quintessence of what we are,

without the other, we die, without sharing, we lose the salt, we do not look back what we did we left there do not, do not look back Lot's wife is only once.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can Someone Ever Leave You?

how can someone be so vile to leave someone as good and as beautiful as you?

try to remember if you have met that someone even once

where and when and how?
and why?

why must he leave someone as good and as beautiful and as truthful
as you?

unless, it was you who left him because he never showed up even as a shadow.

yes, when someone loves unrequited, in fact, i always remember that red rose for Emily beside the lover's skull.

The town is so silent that i hear the fall of a leaf on a grass so soft and yet so indifferent.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can Something So Beautiful Be Wrong?

because he keeps on talking alone by himself
you do not have to make a guess that something beautiful is really wrong

because he keeps on writing all that is sad and so beautiful how can something be so wrong?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can We Be Now?

now you must dance alone.
you can dance without me.
i am not your feet. i am mine.
than the music stops.
now you must dance alone even without the music.
you must know that the music is in your heart.
it is not with me, it is not
with the world.
it is you. The dance, The music.

now you do not ask any question.
Tired perhaps because there are no answers.

now you are the question.
i am not the question.
you are what you are.
and you shall always be.

without me, without you.
we have turned to air to mist to water in everywhere.

from the beginning we should have learned what we have no names. no self, no hate, no love, no world.

i am imagining once again, what we cannot anymore imagine.
In all gratitude and respect we must thank what we were once for without it how can we be now?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can We Come Back To Ourselves?

Ask that again
How and when

What were we Remember, what were we

We sound alike
We mutualize looks of ourselves

Softly when we both left Marks in our faces and skins

We stole what we dream
We did not return them

When we arrive there
We met regrets

We dream again
What was that what was that

Some images come
We are so afraid and want to stay

Now, now, we cannot go back To destroy worlds

I will walk back in there I will not tell you anymore

This is all that I have now These without you

I will sit and relax Tonight I will not cry.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can We Ever Know?

i am the tree in the forest of your mind.
if you paint, i am just one of the lines in the canvass. if you sing, i will only be one of the notes and if you write, i am but a syllable.

in the same manner, no matter how i tell you the truth about myself, in some shadows of the silhouettes of the night a dark figure in the middle of the dark background you grope as i make some protrusions on the wall you feel something and then the object slips like a fish back into the sea

sometimes i put on my name and you read it. you say, i am that name, but i laugh, i am not a name.
on a moonlit night, i am that bird flying away. you lose sight of me like i am a ball thrown by a child sucked by the night.
on a sunny day, i pretend as one of the petals in your garden less the smell, you dismiss me as one of those that you can always afford to lose.

it is funny, you want to know me, and say you value this getting to know. it is sad, i am not concrete. I am always as fluid as the river.
as fluctuating as a mirage.

i am the desert. I am the rock.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can We Not Write?

there is a bone in
your throat
and water cannot remove it

there is a nail in your foot
a pebble in your mouth
or a blue bird in your hand

there is worm in your hearth
a log in your eyes
a clot in your blood
a stone in your gall bladder

there is a wrench in your arm
an axe to grind in your teeth

there are birds in your hair flowers in your ear

there is a smell in your armpit
tears of joy on your breasts

there is a moon in your iris there is sun in your tongue fat in your belly
a furry cat on your feet butterflies in your abdomen nerves in your fingers nuts in your head

hammers inside your ear a book beside your bladder there are so many things in you so many things in us

how can we not write?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can You Argue Further?

IT is when he said finally that God whispered to his ear
and that the answer is No.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can You Be Like This?

a fan in winter.
a hot shower in summer
the stone in drought silk in rain

wrong timing
the wrong person
in the wrong season

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can You Be Lonely?

hear the sounds of footsteps the ants are moving pulling their catch

for the day

your cornflake
is tasty,

a spill of milk on the floor

a lizard comes down
to drink what you wasted

a dragonfly
is lost and whirls around the
flourescent bulb.

turn it off
it is 6 o'clock

there is no
more shadow

there are rays
of light
wanting to enter the shutters
and the blinds

open them
turn off the light

welcome
this new morning
there is no more reason to be lonely

write it. I am
reborn.

write it. I am
a child of God.
I am a happy
child of God.

write it. I am ready. I am going.

now. Go, go. go.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can You Be So Unforgiving?

many times i watch you you are very near my breath touches your
skin
my tongue is restrained
it is true

you do not bore me you give  life like a song of a dying bird

when i listen you start to play with your wings
and the wind
is perplexed

when i kiss you
you begin to fly away from my tongue which has always been true
as ever
like the ray of the sun to the petal of the rose

that is my only mistake you are not forgiving

my breath touches the shadows
of your footsteps
my tongue licks the mud.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can You Be With Us?

you claim to be with us in our sorrow and joy, this cannot be when i ask you what our dreams are you reason out that these matters are my personal matters that i must keep within my heart no, mother, since you do not know what my dreams are you never know me, and you never love me the interest pushes you to know and the knowledge keeps the love aflame.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can You Ever Imagine Liking Yourself To It?

feeling sorry for yourself for a past that cannot be undone wading in that murky river of self-pity like a wild bird caught on the oil spill of the lake of desolation my friend, that is the worst and last thing that must happen to your life this is the tree without fruit a bush without a flower a sky without sun

how can you ever imagine liking yourself to it?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can You Ever Like A Theme Of Death?

no one likes this kind of theme for no one likes winter and autumn
and night
and dusk
and even the paleness of skin
the kind of feeling that you show to a child covering his bald head
the men and women on pain relievers
and chemotheraphy
and radiation
they are the worst of death's images

or the shock that goes with it
like a flood of blood on cemented streets
after a bomb
explosion
of the plane that crushed where some body parts are scattered on trees and grasses distant
from each other

how can you ever
dislike them?
deny them
but how can you ever deny them when they are true when soon they will also come and say

here is death Now it is your turn.

take your time
do not rush
yourself
do you really have to cry
on a gloomy day?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Can You Quit?

don't tell me lies now do you want to quit the thing that you like?

how can you quit my love the person that you like to have?

don't tell me lies and if you will kiss me first and hug me tight and put on the light and see my body and feel my soul and then tell me if you want to quit and not drink your cup of tea this whole of me...

RIC S. BASTASA
How Cold Was It?

i'm here breathing,
writing, chatting, reading a case, pausing for a while, looking at the yellow green blinds profuse light from the window, murmuring air conditioner, books piling, folders rising, papers to sign,

switching to music, turning it off, listening to a tv opera next to my cubicle, someone is concentrating on a ball game, sounds of a car arriving, a door opens, she is singing, someone is taking a chair pulling it like a pail, another laughing woman,

i imagine if the trees are greener with leaves now after the storm or if the pathway towards Tabon is still muddy what must have happened to father's white horse taken cared of by ronnie?

i promise myself, i will visit the mountain soon sleep on the nipa hut there and watch the fog the following morning
thick on the top of the forest trees how cold was it? i want to remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Come

you move on whatever it takes on what form or shape or color

you join a party
finds some hoax
or opens the fake emotions

crossed, one gets away
for good,
or bad,
one listens, on the
barrage of outbursts of emotions

late at night
mouths are pressed
and the brain dreams of lands so faraway

having discovered a scar
the wound remembers

and then
the night begins to speak it murmurs
it is mum from the beginning strikes past twelve
it stops,

it accepts
what lies there as a nude woman needing
a man

ah, the stone turns into a bird
and one wonders
how come...

RIC S. BASTASA
How Corruption Can Thrive In This Poor Third World Country As Ours

the way we love our dogs
makes me think about how corruption can thrive
in this poor third world country as ours

we like them fat and good looking
shiny noses and big feet and we like their
barks to be fierce and respectful
and so we feed them well
take a walk with them on early mornings and
late afternoons
and we let them inside the house and put them
on their own dog-houses

hence they all remain loyal to a pampering master
siding with them whether they are right or wrong (they do not know anymore how to discern right from wrong
i think)
and whatever happens
the master is always right
like the way it keeps the bones and the steaks
in the closet

mind you,

you haven’t heard of a well-fed dog barking against their masters.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Could I? .....

TELL me that you have crossed the bridge connecting what is real from the unreal tell me that you have touched what i have not that you are as happy as the boundless sea

my eyes may have been deceived and bloated in that search for all these illusions

tell me that you have reached the summit of my disbelief that apex of all successes i am not a fool. i was not born yesterday and i must tell you straight from my eyes: i do not believe you.

how could i? tell me, how could i?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Could We Not Have Known?

at the foot of the hill
after a day of walking we rest on the grass under the mango tree

got my sandwich and you got your cocacola
we both shared what is half of each and the day has become so perfect

how could we not have known how happy are we away from home?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Dare You?

excuse me
i am listening to

Basia’s masterpiece
Time and Tide

and this one How dare you?

excuse me
it is not a dog

it is just a song How dare you?

what about listening: How dare you?

it is not a dog
just one of my favorite songs.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Days Are With You?

days hold you in an embrace there is love
and affection in light
warmth
given by the sun
by the side of the window like a red apple
on the tray

RIC S. BASTASA
How Delicious

how delicious can you get when you get naked before me how delirious can i get when i touch your body when i kiss your lips when your hands hold my hair when you lick my nipples when you sleep with me you give me wings to fly and yet i stay beside you on top of you how blissful this moment how ecstasy takes my soul how short, how time can get too short like my bending knees like my grasp of you like my sighs so incomplete inside your breasts.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Did I Love Those Snails....

my eyes are wide open my heart is into unexplained explorations
which my brain detests, there is a need for distance my feet insist,
my hands too,
for all these years i still really do not know how to choose.

i am not telling my friends.
not my mother.
how i still love those snails.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Did Poetry Change Our Taste?

well something bitter has become sweet.

we have converted hell into heaven.

an abandoned thought into a crowded street.

the face of noise has been transfigured into a face of a church made of silent bricks and indifferent lime.

our sorrows? oh yes, they have become ours. we assume that we also know how to make their sorrows as our sorrows. Life likes it. You are good. Thumbs up.

our house of stone has become a page in poetry our daily routine of boredom has become one kingdom of excitements as to what word to put next on the coming line of our morning literary rituals chants, more chants, om, om, om, oh my god. They're coming. I am coming. And here i come.

What? What are you talking about? Oh yes, I am talking to myself.

That is the beginning of my journey to poetry. Talking to myself and not trying to understand any sound.

Illogical even. But when i write them, well, there is some form, sound, scent, and then i honestly declare. This is what i really like doing.

No signboard. Just plain going.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Did We Write....

one thing
we did not really mind how good or bad it was we simply did it something we like doing go through it
and not overdo it
it is just like
going to the sea
and enjoy everything
worth its salt
all the foams
and waves and all the fish and seagulls
too
what is breezy and fresh and
relaxing to our body and soul
it is just like
sleeping in a hammock
after a swim
and then dream and after that wake up to find the moon stopping by the horizon
like a big lit halogen
lamp
guarding us all throughout the darkness of our night

RIC S. BASTASA
How Did You Experience The Hands Of Time?

the hands of time
could be the hands of my lover there is no rush nothing is as quick as happiness that savor itself slowly in the taste buds of imbibing
love and affection
caress and not duress

on the other hand
the hands of time can be the hands of the master to a slave whipping and humiliating forcefully putting furrows in our foreheads breaking bones and overusing cartilages till they break
as they stretch beyond the limits of their elasticity

it all depends on you you are the master of your own universe make time your ally your best friend let it go gently over your heart let it love you and time with you
is the air that you breathe savored by your nostrils happiness and life to the roots of your lungs.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Did You Kill A White Butterfly?

in your play
with your peers
children
when you catch a white butterfly
in your hand
how did you
kill it?

did you pull
its white wings?
or did you crush
its head
on your nails?

did you detach
its legs one by one
like you pulled the white hairs
of mother?

tell me
if once in your mind
you decide to set it free
and see it fly hovering like a flake of snow
from one
wilting flower
to another?

tell me if you feel the same way
i do
when the clutches
of love finally set me free?
tell me if you know the sound of a door which closes behind you when finally you decide to leave
the house of your birth?

tell me how you
zip your jacket
when you say
it is enough
and then
you feel everything so warm inside
you?

that every inch
fits and you say

i am leaving for good.

did you really kill the butterfly with white wings?

or you set it free?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Did You Use Poke In A Sentence?

intriguing when he said to have sex with you... poke back, or romantically just to make love with you... poke me, or to bang bang and he was too smart to say that he poked her doggie style that evening or all night long thus did Jim on that hot gal.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Do I Forgive And Forget?

it is like being invited to her wedding party and i attend handing

her the gift

and still kiss her

casually

cheek to cheek

and yes

i feel nothing silly

anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Do I Remember You Ms. Belen?

we met as teachers in the college of the arts and sciences, and i was busy with my poems, those that drained my sorrows and longings dragged into some forms of
words,
metaphors kept me bound to some illusions of beauty, as usual the good that i always pursue, and the truth
which always put me in some wars with almost every creature in the world, you will remember me as a poem and how do i remember you, Belen?

since then you were always like the white cherry blossom graceful to the morning sun and not afraid of the heat and resilient to the cold, there was one scene i cannot forget we entered a newly opened noodle restaurant we ordered our favorite and we waited and talked from a to z

did it rain then?
did we have the noodle finally?
did we really enjoy each other's company?

do you still remember?
the sound of the young city the hush of the hands waiving always these departures someday, perhaps we shall have more hellos hey there, i am back, and i am staying here in this courty for good the Philippines.

How Do Prepare For The Coming Famine?

i like the way my father and mother once lived.

they died with all serenity, and there was this banquet we tended, before each passed away, as though there is nothing to worry

they danced their days, their entrance of course was silent, and their exits a little serene, and then we talk as though we understand how to live just like them

there were droughts but father knew how to store water in the house and each of us had its own fill of our thirts there were past hungers but mother has her own skill of using the knife in cutting each share each piece to be nibbled by our mouths and now, we are left here my brothers and sisters, warned about an incoming famine let us remember how it was with father and mother and grandfather's father:

when life was so simple then when there was hunger and yet none died of hunger when there was drought and yet each of us has a glassful of water when there was crisis, yet each had symbiosis

RIC S. BASTASA
How Do We Write Happiness?

hair blown by the wind the two of us in the morning meadows laughing and light as the air that carries us to the sea you hold my hand you lead me you pull the kite with you colors of blue and white spreading in the skies you tie the kite on a tree and we lay ourselves on the grass softness is you and my heart beats the notes of our love song we sit side by side we feel we own this wide world we hear the birds sing we listen to the flow of the river we see how free are the fish riding on the currents we look at each other's eyes, then we by instinct close what was once open, we go inside us, gently our lips touch there is so much color when our eyes closed it tastes so sweet that our souls are like tongues licking the sweetest honey on our skins on our whole bodies we write happiness not in the usual words that they use the ink is invisible the pen moves not with the hand but with the heart with the soul

RIC S. BASTASA
How Do You Expect This Kite To Fly In The Wind?

my friend, how do you expect this kite to fly in the wind its long tail is disconnected from its body like a tree without roots its paper is thin, its skeletons too soft to stand against the wind how do you expect to live in freedom, on uncut navels, on shallow disappointments, on shaky guts, my friend, to live in freedom like the kite, we too must go against the wind the stronger winds against us are much better much wanted

we shall then fly so high against the wind that gives us the lift and when we gain the heights up there, we look on all the things so little before us

RIC S. BASTASA
How Do You Go Away?

going away may mean what means you use in going away a truck where you also leave some dusts for them to remember as they wipe out their tears and dust off their feet, or you take a boat where all the chances of waving your hands after a long story is told,
when the bells of the boat make the sound of warning for the well-wishers to take their time out of the floating moment, then the loud siren shouts, a boat load of memories taken a bag ful of hidden resentments sails aways with you, or you take the jetplane where some sentiments are written on air,
clouds not necessarily bursting with joy as you leave suddenly, away from them someone you do not like to see anymore something you want discarded from your life: the pain inside your heart cease, that is your word for going away, but most of the time you just slam the door pick yourself, carry what you have not spoken, and walk away, just like that never looking back

you only have a handkerchief to comfort you and you go on with your life surviving on the salt of your dried tears the unkind words you keep with you to support you for the coming days, you are sad for a while, and then you are free.

How Do You Know That God Is A Myth?

a myth
like the sphinx
and the phoenix
as the story goes on and on
somehow
there was this death
at the end
and then immortality in the same way that my God
died and lived
forever

killing a myth
can be another myth
like asking how do you kill a myth that does not exist?

when you finally give the correct answer about our humanity
the sphinx gets killed.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Do You Separate The Woman From The Poetess?

she is mad at me and i wonder

how was i not able to separate her being a woman from being a poetess?

is it her lust or her love? she says 13 inches is smaller and i just can't get why should she not make me comment on her creations anymore?

why i have become so indelicate?
is it because my hair is curly?
or my pubic hair too thick?

does she dare touch the most delicate part
of my body?

we are far and she is too sensitive we have not seen each other and yet she is filled with anger.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Do You Show Me The Power Of Your Love?

will it be the whirlwind to begin with one that takes away everything from me?
will it be the strong and heavy rain one that floods me away from where i live? will it be the sun? one that dries me as a river bed one that cracks the soil of my life? will it be the moon? one that is full and yet so cold?

show me the power of your love let it be just a smile, a slight touch of your hand to my hand, let it just be a tap on my shoulder when you say goodbye let it just be a word of consolation

show me the power of your love
show me the intricate ways so that i may learn the art of finally forgetting you you, who already belong to the sun, the moon and the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Do You Win?

it's the lavishness not the denial
it is the immersion not the diversion when soon you get over it not just the imagination you splash and mash you consume what is there and soon get bored with what preoccupies you it is only then when you do not desire it that you finally win....when finally it does not have any effect to you at all.

you win.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Does A Relationship End? ....

in Siayan the woman who broke up with her man ended up dead, he rationalized that if he could not own her let no one can the parents mourn for the death of their baby whom not a fly had ever landed on her skin on his part his life has no meaning anymore he has become the living dead and then with one fatal shot in his head he exploded death

there are two coffins in the neighborhood two funerals

many mourners
ten lamentations

on a tongue in cheek one of those who gambled on those wake nights asked all in the name of Love?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Does A Waiting Passenger Look Like?

some watch tv, some read the news others have coffee and talk with the person they are travelling with.

others are just silent and sleepy and then sleep. They dream.

others stare at the hours. others kill these hours of waiting for the 3 o’clock flight to boracay.

i am one of them. I kill time and this is my tool of killing it.

you are reading this. Time is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Does It Feel To Fly

from a walk early morning you enter the door
of your house

you see a glass vase
with a red rose
alone in the living room

you go near and smell
the rosiness
of the rose and gaze at it
as though it is the only rose of your home

you feel
a heart with wings
you fly
like a very light feather on the wind

RIC S. BASTASA
How Does On Touch Really And Where?

empathy does not have hands. neither does sympathy have lips.

the touch contemplated is not the kind that gives the birth of conflict or scandal that which is based on malice

or molestation of the innocent bleeder or the soul that walks on the ship's corridor screaming

for help,

you ask how do you do the touch and where the gentle tap on the shoulder the handshake

the soothing words of comfort and condolences like a shower of rain to the roses that have not felt the water for weeks

straight from your heart right in my heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Does One Hear The Echoes Of Silence?

silence. Does not speak, silence is dead.
it is buried underneath the mouth, and simply rots there, like dust, with worms. It will be the worms that shall utter silence, but at the end silence is devoured
and gone.

what you hear and see is this emptiness. it has feet and walks in air.
and tinkers in space, some moods and feelings, fleeing, fleeting, this emptiness speaks a lot some words turning themselves from elves to giants to cyclops to monsters of the universe where this emptiness dwells it is in my heart, always, resounding, with lots of echoes as it reaches the walls of the farthest planet and comes back to me like the twinkling of a star.

and then i am full.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Emptiness Is More Felt

noon time love
after,

sleep creeps
on the
stained white linens

the hand falls
on the side
of the bed

without her breasts anymore

thoughts begin waking up

weaving more questions on the ceiling

RIC S. BASTASA
How Good Must It Feel To Have A Walk Under The Rain

How good must it feel to have a walk under the rain at 4: 53 am
	hree dogs still hesitate to step with me on the rain

the park is an empty bowl no grains

the trees are sculptures of stillness in black and white and sometimes as my wife says we need to get wet.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Happiness Is Made...

the old man puts an empty coconut shell beside a mahogany tree and fills it with water

he feeds the dog first and then the cats and then what remains unconsumed

belongs to the birds who wait by the branches of
the trees

to take what belongs to them after all had left...

the old man fans himself under the shade of his humble home and watches the birds peck on the morsels and the grains...

hums his songs again
together with the birds...

RIC S. BASTASA
How He Ended His Life

this is how he ended his life he drove his car as fast as he can and smash it against a very thick cemented

wall

he lays there bloody and dead
and his spirit
comes out of his body
and says:

indeed the wall is impenetrable!

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Wish All Things Are Simpler Then

when no is a no
and yes is a yes
when a spade is a spade when a diamond
remains to be a diamond when you are true
as i was once.

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Can Smell Like Dusts And Molds....

i take a walk this morning in this village of trees where there are no houses of dwellers, i am looking for a peaceful place as i carry with me a load of some thoughts heavy on my hair i do not think that i am being punished with these i am just trying to take my time listening to my own footsteps to the sound of the leaves on those grasses and trees a river walks along with me that is how i see it it is a water traveler wanting a companion towards a far end that it knows too well  for i am but new here a lost stranger to his view a novice of distance

i bring peace in my heart, i have set some pigeons free my gifts to the balding mountains and to the hills with brown grasses no pen, no paper, nothing about personal computers or cellphones no signal, i am satisfied, i am sucking air, words are carried with it in my nostrils the river smiles, flows, and winds itself like a snake smooth on the grass i listen too much, i become this earth the river winds around my hair, birds are building nests, the owl sleeps for the night beside my ears, how peaceful is this place, how foolish had i been for all those years hiding behind those rooms and rooms of books, which explains why the river says that i smell nothing but dusts and molds.

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Have Destroyed Myself...

last night
when i arrive home from work i undress myself before a mirror seeing a worn-out body furrowed by too much stress

who furrowed all these lines who wrinkled all these previous tight skin the smoothness gone who whitened this hair and created the ruffles in my fingers undulating waves
in my thoughts
endlessly rocking my mind to such exhaustion?

the mirror is cruelly silent and if it has only a mouth and a tongue it could have uttered and lashed me with

'You! '

slowly i swallowed the word
I

Time should have been a good companion loyal to my endeavors but i rushed it like a slave and so it has taken its own revenge

these furrows funnels of my Frankenstein's...

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Have Enjoyed Life

the body has changed a lot:
what it does before it ceases doing, at first there is this surprise but sooner things simmer like hot water turning into a cold infusion, you no longer lift your doubts about me, whatever comes, you nod, there is no more question as what to what happens next, whatever is there, it is.

my fidelity to you is a creaking machine it is the same sound though coming out from a rusty mouth,
i tell myself i never change even if you change, even if you leave earlier i will still be here.
your body has transformed into its molecular state.
now i am marking each small bit with flowers.
i light a candle. the wind puts it off. i leave with a sigh. How short life is.
How i have not proved myself.
How i have enjoyed life. How you suffered.

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Have Lived And Thrived In My Parent's Nice Front Yards how i have lived and thrived in my parent's front yard handed to us through generations, i call it luck inheritance of comforts and style but soon

i get tired and i have become one meaningless arrogance away from everyone, so i have decided to go somewhere in the lines of my poetry now in poverty of spirit with so much humility
i offer some lines on some meter and forms of repentance, i'll go away, take the exit doors of this luxury and try to see the backyards of everything i have not seen i have not gone to i see some tattered clothes of tenancies, i feel their tremblings in hunger, i hear the gnashing of their teeth, i feel the shaking of their feet, i think of what they have been conceiving

all these years
i have talked to them in their hunger

to compensate for their lack they will teach me about their revolution i will hear them in this backyard
i will join them

my ancestors will cry and disown me i will give them rebirth create them a new name

time shall judge, who wins?
How I Live...

there is another world where my eyes sojourn like a white yacht anchoring for a while while the storm to my destination rages

this is the place of temporary
hiding

there is another world where my hands permanently reside it is a world of ropes and chains where my fingers are hindered from moving from pointing except to feel what my heart desires

my eyes are too honest they do what they want they feast when they are hungry my fingers are like nuns in the monastery

my hands are the nunneries on two worlds my body lives balancing

the rope, the chains and the pulpit

meanwhile, the confessional is occupied the sins revealed to God in metaphors...

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Must Live

it will be
A child with a home

There's so much Trouble
In the house

The streets are Like the house too

There's no choice
Finally

It is a must
That you take

This journey
The disposition
Must be roadlike

You don't live
On a sidewalk

Roads have no ends
No attachments

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Wish I Could Have Shared With You A Moment Of Its Singing that hour

i concealed a sparrow which sings for
me
a night song

how i wish i could have shared with you
a moment of its singing

i suspect somehow that you will not like it

and so i keep you deaf and blind when you open your eyes you will see a boat

and a very far island like a shadow of a dream

at the other end.

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Wish I Were The Rain

Avoiding me
You get wet
In the rain
Under the tree
At the foot
Of the hill

How I wish
I were the Rain
The tree
And the foot
Of the hill

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Wish That We Become Friends

i have read your stories and poems,
and then i wish we can be
friends
much is common between us, and i want to tell you that i am always a part of those poems, and stories, there is always a link
between us
categorically on the source of sorrow, the spring of
hope
i have seen your trees emptying leaves
birds shedding off flumes i want to take a ride on your bamboo raft
to go the place that i also
know

but you are a cloud and i am a pebble
i gaze at you wanting to hold you
in that moment but then you are always gone always leaving
not telling anymore
anyone
where to?

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Wish The Bell Tolls For Me

for whom the bell tolls?
i ask that it must toll for me, but the bell never really toll for me,
always, it tolls for someone else, a friend for 15 years a relative close to the family, a baby newly born in town, a man conscious of his health, the non-smoker and non-drinker alike, the successful politician, the wife of an expatriate, the rich gambler, oh, the bell tolls for all of them and there were banquets and city lights and eulogies
and expensive garments of the priest

i wish the bell tolls for me, but who am i to really say?

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Wish The World Does Not Have A Hundred Eyes To See Me Naked

how i wish the world is blind to see me naked and broken they always say ever since i was small this little girl is ugly she will not have a promising future (did they think that i better be thrown to the sea and be eaten by sharks or to the forest so i can be the prey to those predators?)

they let me live, however, thanks, nonetheless, and i have grown to be what i am ugly
learning to live this way
ugly
time however has told me a different story about the ugliness that lies only on the surface of things, and living memories have grown in me the seeds

some possibilities for beauty

like i can grow a mind of my own like i can be cultivated like a beautiful flower of my choosing
in my own garden

like i can have the possibility of a sweet scent
or i can be a slender plant that will bear some luscious fruits to feed the world and make it feel that i can quench its thirst or satisfy its hunger
i have learned patiently how to be a better possibility and long time ago when i undressed myself removing some layers of sadness and confusion
skin upon skin upon skin

i was once afraid of everything the windows
the cracks and the crevices i was once afraid of the hundred eyes of this world those walls barring me those writings on the fences of my existence shouting that i am ugly (that i do not have the right to live or anything to live with)

i go naked again
time places another mirror at the center of my thoughts, to see another me

i am beautiful in my nakedness

now, i do not wish anymore a blind world so it can see the unfolding the coming of my thousand possibilities like some kind winds white sea caps and gentle sands, i am beautiful and i really know it now

by heart

this confident soul undressed and still so beautiful.

that you, my lovely world, must start to see.
How I Wish You Do Not Understand My Language speaking in tongues the drops of light fall on the pavement of the church, worse, there were heads banging against other heads and beards. Birds fly away, upon a thud of a pod, pudding, leaves heaping, trees shedding off heaps of leaves, and church bells ringing, i drag my feet drugged against the ragged tags of the rugged rags, Sham, It is still painful.

How i wish you do not understand my language, Yet you are speaking it, like i am the sham shaman of the shah of tehran.

it is your wedding day. I am here.

RIC S. BASTASA
How I Wish You Were Here

how i wish you were here i sit by my window and you are just beside me and i become your face tissue and you are some tears or we could be something else or could be that i am the microphone of the videoke and you are the song or could be otherwise or i could be the sofa and you are the guest sipping beer or a coca-cola or could be that we are all guests and we are all the singers and the rest are the songs and the sofa and the glasses and the wine and the ham and bread

whatever, i only wish that you are here beside me.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Individuality Is Lost

i meet you at the pier somewhere in phuket going to phi phi island and you are as rugged as any american can be in faded jeans, carrying a back pack, smelling like an arabian, half naked, and uncut hair, born in mandaue, raised in new york, now working in california seemingly with no permanent home and not caring what happens next for now it will be you and phi phi snorkeling, surfing, relaxing on one of those huts, enjoying the fire, and simmering and drying your skin under the Thai sun now i understand all these untidiness this mess of yourself how cold is that far country and how insignificant is each body, and strangeness how individuality is lost how everyday has become another route into an anonymity

RIC S. BASTASA
How Is Beauty Seen....

perhaps i must disagree on that,

that beauty lies in the way we put

order to a mess,
pillows on the bed

blankets well folded
clothes hang,

outside the stars
twinkle in random

no lines in this universe no queue

a list of data items,
commands, etc.,

stored so as to be retrievable in a definite order, usually the order of insertion

beauty lies in chaos, in volcanic

eruptions where molten lava flows

and in spontaneity
freezes to the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Is It Possible?

how is it possible
my dear friend
that you write about the sun scorching the earth and wilting
the leaves
and filling the world with nothing but heat and more heat until a certain collapse comes to the birds and goats and rivers
dry out and then you tell me you write with what
you see
that these things see you and nothing
is seen?

how is it to be human
and just be the pole in the middle of the field
so unfeeling?

to stare over a dead beloved and not shed a single tear?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Is It To Really Live For Another Day

tings are geting different
ow

t the earthen jar
outside the house
is filled with
rain

t the glass which you tilted
lays flat on the floor
steady on its newly found
emptiness

t the song of the world keeps on humming
and birds roosted
in the nights of
silence

ings are getting
different
old things are ruined
old thought fade away
old paths are no longer visible

when i arrive here
i think of nothing too amazed with what is not here anymore
with what is different

i have no name
no place and no number
anymore

i pretend i do not know you
and you must do the same

i guess this is how is it to really live for another day in this old place which had never really got its new shape.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Is It Tonight

what is it all about what is it all about tonight
how is it possible
about tonight
that which happened
last night
what is it all about
what is it all about tonight
how is it possible
to hold your hand tonight
how is it possible
the change
the change of mind how is it possible tonight to show my wounded heart

RIC S. BASTASA
How Is It?

how is it
that you go to that famous beach and there is a storm and nobody is there
except yourself?

are you crazy? you keep asking yourself too but you are there
not to take a swim
you are there to watch a storm you are there to watch when everything has gone wrong when everyone runs for safety when everyone is busy for shelter when everyone thinks you are crazy and always at the wrong timing of things what mind have you?

nothing you say you are just crazy, you are just you, and it does not really matter somehow who knows if you have a point too? like the storm

RIC S. BASTASA
How Is It? .....

when i dream of butterflies immigrating to an island you dream of fish hiding in the living corals

when i speak about romance how people fall in love you butt in saying love is irrelevant and you talk of war and the reasons why so many children die, how novels write themselves in chaos and death and sad separations we realize we do not fare out in a synchronized journey my north is your south and my sky happens to be your sea i grieve for this and then you laugh, i say i am leaving for good and you close a door and stay.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Lonely Have You Been All These Years After He Left You

When I first kiss your lips Bit it a little bit Your upper lip bleeds Sending this blood Dark and sad into your heart

When another kiss follows These hot lips of mine
Send the heat and give you Sparks of light Shaking your whole body In the fire of ecstasy

From then the paths
In your body that lead to your soul
Are no longer guarded
By the propriety of your senses

You have given in
To the pleasures that I am giving You have become the river Wanting more the splashes of some Fishes and frogs and even crocodiles

More kisses, more touches More heat, more flames
The hottest of fires Cinders and brimstones!

RIC S. BASTASA
How Love Feels After That...

it feels like
when the heavy downpour of rain stops finally and the winds gone and all the trees and grass are fully at peace with that aftermath: cold and dewy.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Love Shall End?

at this age, who shall ask about how love began? if it came in my mind, it is not because i conceive it, it came by pure
accident, someone mentions a very good beginning, tight lips, vine-like embraces, sweat all over the bodies in a room with no window open.

i am so guilty about what i entertain as a prolonged thought like a scheme of things how a glass is crushed against a rock in slow motion classified as art,
how the tiny pieces gleam against the sound of crashing eyes screaming and hands still hiding inside the pockets of the abdomen like a kangaroo taking away all its bag of thoughts away in safe haven,

i am trying to spell departure, planning to have an exit that graceful one without any shame at all i am wondering if this matter could still be put under the domain of words or on the category of motion.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Lovely Can Ignorance Be...

how can you ever see what i am seeing?

the words are veils
the face remains hidden do you remember my voice?

it is trembling

cascades of meaning yet you can hold nothing

what i have seen
rushes my blood in the middle of my being it is a tryst of myself to myself that i try to capture in syllables understanding makes you leave me so i chose the reverse

i am not there
i am not what you think i am i live on the other side of the river and you do not know the vein going there for years i will be silent to understand myself more i leave no trace

when the time comes you may see a footprint a picture of a footprint and you shall know what suffering did my foot have

it is over soon
i think, it is better that you shall not know as you shall love me still how lovely can ignorance be!

RIC S. BASTASA
How Lovely!

nature is no nonsense
thing.
it always repeats itself the way the sun sets
the manner of moon waning water ebbing
rain falling
the way that apple falls
from the tree
birds rising from their sleep
etcetera,

this clock this glass and these girls, they're no nonsense
too

we gape and wonder how wise are they how natural how bountiful
how lovely.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Lyrical?

she chops what should have been seen as a straight line, and we who believe in her think that there is something strange i think, deep in my heart that it is ugly, but those that surround me believe that what she does like the way she holds her glass, putting red wine in it, and spitting out something bitter, is lyrical...

'this is art' she says,

i am attuned to something direct and clear and logical, and i stand up and say

'that is the ugliest thing that i have ever seen and i am telling you i detest it, i dislike it' i leave, and i tell the world that there is something wrong with her.

the world claps its hands. the people bowed. they say, she is beautiful and everything she does, no matter what,

like her spitting at me, is beautiful, a work of art, a mark of history.

i sit here asking still some questions to my hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Many Grains Of Sand Are There On The Beach?

we are on the beach
it is a very bright and warm day the coconut leaves are cooling us the shade is comforting the sands so white
the sea is crystal blue the sea gulls are singing colored fishes come up from time to time hiding in the corals

if you want to know how many grains of white sands are there on this beach begin the count

for the meantime
we are taking our much needed plunge

we leave you for a while enjoy yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Many Miles More?

how many miles more
shall i walk, to make myself complete?
how many oceans shall i sail to make myself a man complete? how many skies more to fly? how many planets more
to step upon?
how many black holes more to explore?
how many deaths?
how many unknowns to solve to make this journey complete?

i do not really know.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Many Nights? ....

IT is the darkness of the enclosure that is trying to kill me it is your face that mocks me it is not time that befriends me with a basket of its mellowing
the flowers of youth its petals falling one by one to the sands of
of loneliness finally slipping through my fingers.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Meanings Are Invented....

if happiness is hard to define how harder is sadness perhaps.

but both are two faces in one body.
taking time with you, how seldom do they face you at the same time? it sometimes rain on a sunny day.

then a rainbow forms against the showers. Meanings are invented.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Mother Made Us A Home

our navels were cut and they were tied on one of the strong walls of this house where we were born
and since then
mother takes pride
about our missing
a home that where ever we are scattered by fate we always come back and feel and fill what is missing inside
is home.
This is where mother died and father too
and the rest of us
shall also be buried here when we finally
die. This is country.
This is life and
This is death. This is our meaning and
This is where we shall always be forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
How My Cousin Wished To Have A White Friend, The American

my cousin had once a wish, to befriend an american the white great man who once fought with his grandfather during the last 2nd world war in Bataan
they were together in their defeat on that Long Black Death March and they miraculously survived and during their veterans' memory programs they always have time together little drinks, nostalgic conversations and then a hug a farewell matching tears and trembling lips of old useless men

but that was long time ago times i guess have changed due to climactic errors global warming
and well
crude, rude, city life that changed gentleness to aloofness,
and when my cousin worked as a nurse in chicago lonely as he was, and so alienated and yes discriminated he changed his views of the white man no longer that christ-the-saviour thing really but that 'get lost' monster that throws him glasses on his head and if it were not for his escaping instincts he would have been dead on arrival in the Philippines, well, i cannot blame him, indeed the times have changed, whites hate browns and looks down on them, the browns too, retaliate and sometimes wish to poison the white man and kill him on his bed with an overdose of his antidepressant drugs or simply leave the white man with his own business as he falls to the floor from his bed, with no one to help him, and i remember what my cousin said, he is the brown man telling the white man

' white man, summon all your green money to help you stand, i am leaving! '

he left, really, he left the old man asking for his help, less the curse and the insult actualy, i like how that story ended.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Not To Overthink.....

they say
to be unhappy is to overthink

do not overthink
that is the
key to the door
of happiness
with rusty door knobs
and dusty
doors you must enter
and

clean. You ask how not
to overthink

there is another door to that door which you have to open again and

once outside you have to feel the rain
the mud and walk away and step into another world, walk to that stretch of road towards the hill circling the bush

but only for a while. When you
return

it will not be the same again

you have changed.
How Not To Write A Short Poem

first give the sigh release it like you are freeing a butterfly from your palm push a hush
then let your finger dance like a dropp of rain hitting a grain
then stop a while
look over the window
and pay homage to the moon's swoon.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Ordinary Language Becomes Poetic do not worry about images leave it to the wise imagination of the reader do not insult his powers of extending the meaning of your ordinary language beyond what you are thinking or saying with utmost intention to drive your point the poetry of indeterminacy the meanings hidden in such plain words as wolf and sheep shepherd to this staff
river to stones
and clouds to rain and rain and rain and rain and yes the trrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrainnnnnnnnnnnnnnnnnnnnn, do not be too concerned with form, the form comes and takes the shape desire before your eyes what i am driving at is that ordinary language becomes too poetic when you shake because it is a very cold rain pouring in your roof and you have no one and you have no other place to go and you cannot call him because he is too busy with other matters of equal importance i could be him and you could be her, in this ordinary language of disappointments why we met and why we regret the meeting and union oh, why speak about something too poetic when ordinary language can be so poetic about pain, and hypocrisy, and mendicancy of emotions, She herself is one of the few constant features on that landscape.

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive

8091


Wary, as always,
of holistic paradigms for the literary history dynamic, interactive condition of experimental poetry today i cannot think of any other recommendation,

Christian Boltanski's simulated documentaries, I cannot think of a better introduction to contemporary

poetry, this, oh,

so you understand a thing?

alright, how do you do?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Poetry May Not Be Taken Seriously

when spontaneously
a poem comes along you grab it like a chicken and choke it with your usual grammatical errors
and words not so well chosen like a stream of erroneous thoughts misspelled and put out of context and then you are too busy to correct it
and post it right away and then it comes back to you when you read it
after a while when you come back from office work and you realize the horror of the Dracula that you made another Frankenstein
all of them bite you
in your neck
and takes your blood sucking them
like water.

devastating indeed.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Sad

how sad to think
that you
think that my marriage is on the verge of wrecking

i like to think
about
this possibility

but come to think
of it
where will we go
when the house
is burned?

shall we eat
the ash on the ground?

and what shall i tell God
about my broken vow?

how shall i repair
my broken soul
my torn heart
this total destruction
this annihilation?

think about it
and the possibilities
other than a break
up
for the meantime
i'll drink my tea
and eat my cake
and relax on a hammock and read a romance novel
and then
sleep

in this life i don't really think much
i just do it.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Shall I Interpret Your Dream Last Night?

you are telling me about this dream: a shadow carrying a bag departing away from the dark
leaving your body
on the pavement

how shall in interpret it for you?

you are weak, so pale beside your very young wife beside your (death) bed...

RIC S. BASTASA
How She Changed The Sayings..

birds of the same feather are same birds

a friend in need
is a friend to avoid

it is not what comes but what remains after.

RIC S. BASTASA
How She Defines Love

love to her is just a hello and goodbye
a little introduction
a drink
a talk
some feelings for common grounds
a night
sleeping together
and packing up
again
to another place
without even having to say goodbye

love has been that way and hence she never really knew what love is.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Should It Be?

it is nice to say that twilight dances and the morning is preoccupied with coffee and cups hotcakes on the plate and lawn mower still asleep.

lightning scratches a field, i see it.
waves move to and fro endlessly signifying infinity.

thoughts are all possibilities until you realize that the hot choco is cold and not minded
it knows how is it to be untended, it dies into a bland taste.

blind moments are there, i pick up a magazine and simply look at the pictures of women skimpy dresses and sexually stimulating ads of softdrinks.

things move by themselves and now i declare no war, no pact of peace, nothing.

i am numb.
and selfish.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Should Mornings Be?

a cup of roasted coffee a toast of bread butter and marmalade
a slice of orange
some lima beans

a little music
some prayers

how nice would a morning be overjoyed

by your presence
sipping same things all over again

with us
how can such a morning be so boring?

RIC S. BASTASA
How Small And Far Can We Be

how small and far can we be when love
breaks, how small is our way of looking at love's other possibilities when love is lost
and gone away,
we shrink in pain and we become so insignificant like a rain dropping to the ocean or a granule of sand
on the shore

yet love is vast its domain is encompassing the earth and space
the whole of this expansive universe so why cry when one love is gone when this or that love leaves you it is just one moment
come to think
a little higher and be lighter to reach the feelings of the stars the fore sightings of the moon learn to love again and be stronger in every loss rise higher from every fall mend that broken heart
and embroider in there the golden threads of another love even lovelier than before because for once you know what love is when it dies
it is reborn resurrects itself always lovelier that ever before..... wipe your tears and let you eyes glow brightly to another soul another face waiting for you, he loves you so....
How Small We Are, How Insignificant.

a dot is a runner making a line, and it ends it rests for a while, it is there where our silence lies, after a night, it runs again the whole day i suppose, and that is where our life moves on,
it runs and stops and runs,
to make a figure, a landscape, and that is where we enter, as we ourselves make the doors, the exits, the bridges, and pools,
and rivers,
as we go along this running,
when we stop, when we are so silent, we go back to this life of a dot,
how small we are, how insignificant.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Soft The Sea Touching Upon My Feet

there is this likeness for shattered pieces falling from the 10th floor of this building a confetti of feelings a falling to the ground a soundless floating until everything settles as though a piece can be gone forever

i have been to the thousand islands of white sands and mountain peaks and green and blue waves and salty breeze clinging to every lock of my black hair

each island is as beautiful as it is like the rest segregated by their own uniqueness of shape
and color

you see it has dawned at me how pieces can be not miserable how island live by their own beautiful silence how suffering can be concealed in the whiteness of thighs and legs well rested on beaches how moon and sun can be beautiful in their own places

how soft the sea touching upon my feet

RIC S. BASTASA
How Stupid

how stupid for the moon once to ask the sun

where will i be without you?
and the sun said

i will still keep shining during the day that is how this world expects me to be

RIC S. BASTASA
How Sublime For Poets

how sublime for poets
who spend sleepless nights writing a poem and posting them at dawn when even all the dusts on the furnitures are still all asleep, and he never expects anything to happen to his life, not even the simplest thank you from an unknown reader, and he, who in turn knows that a reader exists somewhere, he too, never has the chance of saying you are welcome.

it's the spirit, i suppose, that cannot stop, but goes on and on, speaking to itself, like the way its body speaks to the house and listens to the winds of the windows and waits for an opening of his only door.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Sunday Ended Upon Its Own Trembling

the waves are bigger than my dreams
i sit on the sandy shore waiting

you come like a shadow of an afternoon Sunday
broad and firm and strong as you claim yourself
in a name carved in stone

it is late and i am weak

you run to the sea and plunge yourself
you wave your hand before that

i am looking at the horizon

and then the sunset completes itself
with your silence
in that single splash

i think it is horrible but on the other hand
it is divine

i cannot remember how that Sunday ends
i will again say it ends with the splash and then the edifying silence

let me stop and think awhile, a moment of silence

how can i tell you that there is this deleted version of the story
in trembling i arrive home and then i scream

RIC S. BASTASA
How Sweet Can Sweetness Be....

too much honey on my tongue cannot be sweeter upon days when it sticks it has not attracted an ant, boring sweetness that makes the mouth vomit and so i look for something else its opposite: bitter that which we junk becomes a need
for a variation,
we, humans, are not into this contentment longing for sweetness that soon will kill us,
and since we still want to live, we take in something bitter inside us, and for a time again,
we recall, how sweet can sweetness be....

RIC S. BASTASA
How Sweet Of You

how sweet of you
to remember me through the lines of my love poetry? how sweet of you to remember too the poet his face
his hands
his lips
and the kiss he once gave you so tenderly

how sweet of you
old flame, to think that i have loved you with a love that had a beginning and no end like the shore to the sea and to the horizon of eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
How Sweet The Sounds Of Steps Emanating From Those Stairs?

the strength of our love is measured by the spaces that we reserve on that long hour of waiting you ask me what is it that must keep us one?

i am telling you were it not for the emptiness of some moments we would never have cherished the fullness of our longings how beautiful are those windows of the houses that for once we have decided to leave and forget?

how sweet the sounds of steps emanating from those stairs?

RIC S. BASTASA
How That Sunday Ended

the waves are bigger than my dreams
i sit on the sandy shore waiting

you come like a shadow of an afternoon Sunday
broad and firm and strong as you claim yourself
in a name carved in stone

it is late and i am weak

you run to the sea and plunge yourself
you wave your hand before that

i am looking at the horizon

and then the sunset completes itself
with your silence
in that single splash

i think it is horrible but on the other hand
it is divine

i cannot remember how that Sunday ends
i will again say it ends with the splash and then the edifying silence

let me stop and think awhile, a moment of silence

how can i tell you that there is this deleted version of the story
in trembling i arrive home and then i scream

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Dalmatians Come.....

our black
dog
just mated
a white dog

hence,
the dalmatians!

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Day Ended

five decisions
groping for words
and logic
to arrive at justifiable conclusions where the parties may find whatever is reasonable
and necessary

a hard job but this is the meaning
of everything
i am

the day ended on a compromise between the left and the right between
art and the blindness
of justice

i set aside the records and attach the final verdict
to be handed tomorrow with clean hands.

at the end of the day
the conscience sleeps
in peace
in harmony with the best that i can be

tired but fulfilled like the moon resting finally on the marshes glowing and steady with its light
 and poise

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Evil Story Begins

denied of humanity he steps out of the door and asks that be allowed to enter the narrow door
of divinity

he knocks, and the door opens
a question is asked what is his name
and from where?

he answers i am
a man without name
and i come from the humble house of my earth

and then the door is shut
and he walks away

and the evil door opens
for him
and without questions
takes him in

and that is where the story of his life begins....

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Flood Came About....

the waters have arrived with so many surges and they are confused and keep on asking

' this is our place
why are you here? '

the one who filled
this place cannot answer
shows instead its title to the property

' no, no this is our place get out of here'
the water rages.

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Judgment Is Made....

here we will be losing art, all emotions shut, like a butterfly caught and then sealed inside a transparent bottle.
still beautiful but now getting
illogical.

here we are called to be logical, analytical, everything in suspicion, all beliefs suspended.

here we are made to be wit the truth and the truth is silent.

it does not talk, it keeps on seeing accurately what is there what happened.

here we keep the sea calm. the earth sky emptied of all stars at night. The sun is steady.

then when everything is put into a lens, with light, the burning begins and it ends not that long, until the ash is settled.

then the truth speaks, and it judges.

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Leaves Are Blown By The Wind

did i not tell you that these leaves come from the trees? no dispute about it
about them, they grow out from there, those twigs of the trees of life, they get their glow, their sheen, though they have given more honor
to the sun
rather than the roots and the phloem the season for them to mature and fall has come and they all wait for the wind, the great strong wind to blow them all away to their respective destinies some find their way to the river some to the thick heap of other leaves destined to rot and only if you hear them they say they come from nowhere not from the tree of life not from me

the leaves, my poems, the wind my way of throwing, the tree, myself, my roots my mind, my phloem my blood i made them all, but now, they are on their own

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Meaning Escapes Us

someone will tell the story of an eraser its meaning escapes us who never ask

why?

because we have lived in big cities and thrived in huge ambitions we always miss the point when a butterfly closes its wings and then stays at rest behind a leaf

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Poem Is Treated By You

My instruction is very simple Take the poem and read it Casually in your room, do not Force yourself to understand it Just read it and tell me what
You feel,
Be kind to the poem
Like inviting it for tea With just the two of you As you sip
Let the poem drift like A cloud and let it take Its shape
Be compassionate to the poem Let is cry for itself
If it settles for tears And all you can do is Just wipe its face
With your handkerchief

But you are cruel and so Indifferent, you slap the Poem with your right hand And tell it straight That you do not like it That way it has successfully Puzzled you Then you leave the poem in
The rest room
It feels that it is a tissue Paper fit for something So ordinary waiting for What others usually do Wipe their anus after A poo.

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Sadness Of The Other Has Become The Comfort Of Your Moment

you tell a tree without leaves

that bush without
a flower

you tell an orchard
the sadness of having no fruit

you keep on telling what you never hear
for yourself

ah, here comes again this misery that seeks more company

how the sadness of
the other
has become the comfort of your moment

RIC S. BASTASA
How The Words Are Taking The Man

let me start with one word another word takes in another and they begin to talk to one another i let the third word go and they will ask another one to equalize both sides they will soon invite other words until they will make a crowd and the words get so many now with mouths and no ears like the drink the words take the man and after so many words have been uttered you begin to regret every word that got in so many and now you feel so empty.

RIC S. BASTASA
How These Were Born

days words were born because there were no other things done this poem is written because the most important thing to do is set aside.

bread is fed to the the birds diamonds thrown to the pigsty a black bird leaves the blue sky a crocodile is eating a horse days thoughts roam

because of pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Things Really Went

when he turned pale and fainted he blamed it on his dieting he said he did not eat breakfast
that morning

when his eyes turned red at noon he said he got sore eyes and blamed the knob of the door for the infection and on the night when he locked his room he said he wanted to sleep early as he lacked sleep writing his poems

he drank poison a la socrates and when he died
the froth on his mouth looked like the bloom of a while million flower

he did not tell the truth that his wife left him with another man

RIC S. BASTASA
How This Universe Rhyme So Well?

the beginning is chaos
so the end shall be, also chaos there is no order, there is even no beginning, there is no systematic ending wanton is the conception and disorder is the truth, not that this is what you see today or tomorrow or yesterday they are all one there is no space in between yet you refuse to believe and you write to please everyone and make them believe in the pleasing personality of the world of rhymes and clock ticking at the middle of the night you perceive order and you organize the system please yourself and then suddenly tears fall on the letters and smother the print of your orderly paper world you suffuse anger on the pen i ponder upon the blot and rethink what i think was always right back to chaos, i ask how can you like the rhyme and the rhythm? how can you ever live in this fantasy?

in my free verse, i say what i say, and life speaks to me like i am life itself, and freed from hypocrisy, the truth gets in jagged, rugged, and pulsating

RIC S. BASTASA
How Time Betrayed Me

the young dad fetches her daughter in school uniform
early morning
using his bike and they pass by the house as i sit by my window and i realized how time passed how time has betrayed me and how by all complacency did not complain i do not notice how time flowed like a bullet train just in front of me but i have no regrets i am too preoccupied about mapping my way out without causing any trouble not a ripple to the pond when the water grasshopper lands.

RIC S. BASTASA
time flies swiftly much faster than the fastest wings of your mentally concocted bird

because you love

you love everything what you do
what you are
what you want to become

you are in love with yourself
with the world
with every face that you see when you left you were just a child who cannot say any word it was just like a click of a finger a blink of an eye

when we meet
we understand what happened then the graves are ready the grasses sing

we laid everything rested we regret nothing

because we love everything that came and went we embraced what is here and what passed away

with so much love
with so much affection.
How Time Really Swiftly Passes By

again i see this movie i look around me
i close the window panes and then the door and then i go within the movie in one of those characters that keep on chiding me that i have done nothing to make that love come true it keeps on laughing at me

saying
'how time swiftly passed and you are left alone still tending to your wounds as she had sent her boy into manhood and now waits with him at the altar for his bride' bad character i supposed but i am worse

i know how to jump into mud into the situation
and tell myself
' Go, go away
i have more loves
to tend and tender
for another day! '

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Be Still Beautiful Despite

i understand perfectly well if you do not not believe, but this morning the birds fly in the air, and the butterfly flutters and the bees still droning on coconut trees,

and there are no manuals there no books, no tips on how to do it right, how to be still beautiful
despite

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Consume Fear....

fear and desire
mix in a glass of margarita

look at me

i have consumed
all fear
and have never tasted desire

look at the foolish me

dignified and
free....

RIC S. BASTASA

How To Cook

if it is too big chop it to pieces
if it is frozen thaw it
if it is hard soften it
if it is bland
put a little salt
and a little sugar
and some spices
and seasoning

life is simple enough to be compared to cooking use your common sense don't worry be happy

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Deal With A Very Beautiful Disciple

she comes like a princess from the a castle high up there on those blue clouds descending from the sun down to the mountains and the rivers
and to this
pond

i am the grass, and she wants to lie down with me so i can teach her about what, i ask, about poetry she says, no there is no poetry with me for i am the grass, and you signal the wind so you may leave at once and be back to the arms of the heavens but i think a while and change my mind for i am the grass and i am a teacher of all mankind, those who want to die and be covered with my hands, and those who want to stay and be with my greeness, my softness  and i in humility whispers to her my princess, stay with me for a while, lie with me, and sleep with me under the moon, the darkness of the night shall be our blanket, my thick leaves of grass, your pillow, i am the grass, i may not teach you what poetry is, what i have is to spread love and togetherness, and intimacy that i have with the soil my secrets with the worms, my eternity with what death has concealed  from the eyes of your world.

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Fight Him

learn from the sun and the wind how they fight to win him, remember the wind that made the blow, the man held on to his coat and woe remember the sun with warmth emit and made the man undress before it, and so you know how the sun won the man's heart  beats for it till dawn

RIC S. BASTASA
there was this place she bragged about in the hinterland and we had to take a ride for seven hours from Jakarta and she kept on talking that it was where silence is grown and people who went there once wanted always to come

back

she pictured it:

dinner by the river where lotus are flowering beside it reeds and more reeds and shades of old trees where leaves fell and floated on the water which was so still like a mirror to
the moon

when we arrived there we were so tired
that we sleep together and food shall soon be served but we postponed it

and there with her sleeping beside me her head on my shoulder my arms wrapping her i know what she means: how to grow silence in its loveliest form.

it was so
quiet.

RIC S. BASTASA
there was this place she bragged about in the hinterland and we have to take a ride for seven hours from Jakarta and she keeps on talking that it is where silence is grown and
people who went there once wanted always to come
back

she pictured it: dinner by the river where lotus are flowering beside it reeds and more reed and shades of old trees where leaves fell and float on the water which is so still like a mirror to
the moon

when we arrived there we were so tired that we sleep together and food shall soon be served but
we postponed it

and there with her sleeping beside me her head on my shoulder my arms wrapping her i know what she means: how to grown silence in its loveliest form.
How To Grown Silence...(Revised) here was this place she bragged about in the hinterland and we had to take a ride
for seven hours from Jakarta and she kept on
talking that it was where

silence is grown and

people who went there once wanted always to come back

she pictured it: dinner by the river where lotus are flowering beside it reeds and more reeds and shades of old trees where leaves fell and float
on the water which is so still like a mirror to
the moon

when we arrived there we were so tired that we
sleep together and food shall soon be served but
we postponed it

and there with her sleeping beside me her head
on my shoulder my arms wrapping her i know what she means: how to grow silence in its loveliest form.

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Have A Very Sound Sleep

every day
i climb a mountain and i like
it
three more mountains
to go
and it will be dark
and i like it
when i arrive there
i will be very tired and i will have a nice sleep beside the stars on the grass under the moonlit
sky

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Hold The Rose Inside Your Hand a hand knows how to keep fragility in a secret garden like that way you hold a moth inside your mouth feeling the flapping of its powdery wings, you know how to hold the rose inside your hand with all the sweetest intention not to break any of its red petals.

hold me the way i hold you. Keep me the way i keep you.
At night i have not spoken a word about it.

to hold a rose is to hold a secret which to yourself you cannot even mention.

if you keep that secret the rose will be alive and it can even have that desired eternity for flowering for all the seasons.

i have not met anyone like that yet.
This is the eternal wish of the dead well.
The dream for water far exceeds the dream for light that windows have claimed as theirs prior to the dawning of a dream.

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Live A Lifetime
	here are doubts streaks of light coming from the half-open windows

when you wake up
you cover the nakedness of the night
with you

you arrange some strands of the hair
in your head
putting some order of the perceived chaos

you want to understand and the deeper you go you realize that there is really need to understand in order to fully live the shortest life
possible

it can be too taxing and it may cost the moments of your life all beautiful encounters unmade

you say what a waste
what a ruin

more excitements are coming like a mob and you forget to savor each moment because the quest for understanding preoccupies your lifetime you sit for a while to stop & discover

gaze around you to believe that this world has no mind of its own it merely spins all days and nights making itself felt

create the usual revolutions where men who used to conquer turn into loose skins, white hairs, brittle bones
and cadavers

and then back to dust again and for sure no one wants to remember this customary annihilation

one goes to the pizza parlor bites some hot slices fills his hunger
drinks coke
satisfies the thirst and without so much thought lives a lifetime.

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Live....

that morning
was fruitful.
had my cup of coffee while watching TV
at 6 a.m. there
was this bishop and a pastor
discussing the meaning of life showing a very simple formula
for living: first,
know that you have a Creator, know who you are to Him, then
discern your mission,
to please Him,
you do not live
for yourself
but for Him,
so you do all
everything
for Him and His glory.

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Murder Loneliness....

anger is better than pity
killing yourself
is out of the question
at this moment
under rage
you want to kill
rather than
be killed
voila loneliness
is murdered.

RIC S. BASTASA
How To React With A Letter From Maureen well, it is simple.

delet it right away block Maureen
and poor Maureen
she is dead.

everybody happy?

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Sit With Idiots And Listen.

you just don't know how i suffer, it is like jest, on the other side, that cannot be measured,

felt, and savored and in a moment gone, like a winged shadow, fleeting, hovering upon a figment twig, a fragment of gossamer thoughts, a dragon, paper, a scissor hand, a god dog on the wall, behind a blanket authority, yet, allow me to say that you are the cause of this suffering, how to sit with idiots and listen, hard rock on my head, a sword above me, and i am blankly stubborn

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Tell The Story Of The Cloud

you know how is it with the clouds the more with air
and mists

they always change and they do it as quickly as a wink

you know what clouds do the form upon you some stories the rainy ones sometimes and you shed tears in the same manner with the air and mists the air passes and sometimes you do not even feel it and so you miss the story that it is bringing the story of a journey into somewhere

and the mists bring you some notes about what to do in the darkness of the night yet you tarry on the grass and on the side of the hill you miss the essence of our beings we are ghosts and we do not know where we are hidden.

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Treat A Poem....

a poem is a flower that blooms
early morning kissed
by the soft lips of the
sun

do not cut it
do not ever do the
she loves me
she loves me not you will be killing it

let it bloom

do not undress it
do not deprive it of its leaves and
stalk

leave it there
to bloom till the night
comes
till it meets the moon

at night it gives out all its scent
wait there to kiss it.

RIC S. BASTASA
How To Write Happiness....From The Learned Poetess....

the poetess writes happiness on the sand beside the furious waves she is a failure says the boat

'come, ride with me' the boat invites the sun is up and she has no umbrella she begins to write happiness on the water nothing happens of course and then it is night time quite long for sadness

then she writes words for the moon in the air and then the moon smiles the moon understands what happiness is perfectly....

RIC S. BASTASA
How Unfathomable Still Life Really Is......

in this single life realizations are myriad

that this is just a passage
in a dark tunnel towards the exit where light waits like
mother

that everything here
is temporary
in fact just hints as to what is real not really fakes but marks to guide us where we are really going

along the way you meet
someone
which you must never forget that like you this someone too dies

hence once you kiss once you close your eyes do not think of
eternity
think about that moment
only
which as you once felt never really lasts

oh, there are those that speak to you without using words

a leaf blown by the wind eagle migrating to another land a river winding its way along high mountains nests that mother birds left oceans that make you think how unfathomable still life really is.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Unlike I Am To All These Silence?

How can all these creatures live and survive in a place where they are not in talking terms?

how can a butterfly flutter and hover from one flower to another without
singing?

the beautiful garden must be enough the blue sky, the soft rain, the green bushes, the flowering trees, clean air, and just like them the beautiful silence of the sands.

how unlike i am to all these silence?
and so i have decided to leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Unlike You How Painful.

you get tired finally of don’t have to say that there is something ugly in what you see.

it is not the friendship anymore
it is the truth.
it is impersonal.

the next problem is what you have to face squarely

how beautiful is the enemy how wisdom is found in them how unlike you how painful.

RIC S. BASTASA
How We Are Seen By The Child Outside The House...

the big window
of the house
by the breakfast
table
from the perspective
of the child
without a mother and a home
shows it a picture of family and opulence and it looks at this picture
with full envy and sadness
mixed like a salad bowl of bitter gourds and sour grapes drenched with vinaigrette and rotten olives.

RIC S. BASTASA
How We Live

during those times
we did not mind the passing of time we watch the leaves falling and we do not give much significance leaves fall we keep saying nothing but a common recurrence a day to day matter

then one day we see things differently for every leaf that falls we also shed a tear

time begins to laugh at us we who have began to know fear we who have seen the shortness of the sunset we who have become restless no more.

RIC S. BASTASA
we look at ourselves after we run for miles and stop for a while by the side of a peaceful pond along our way back home where we have seen the lines in our foreheads the curves of our jaws the sunken features of our cheeks and then we have changed from quizzical to a certainty as we begin to carve our hopes on that mirror:

not all bread cures our hunger not all water cures our thirsts not all in us can be sold like some kind of properties that can give us a profit for the day

we reflect back then when all experiences are teachers when fear of everyday life has actually made us live for the better when certainty is finally abhorred when life becomes so real as it slips from our fingers when we finally dip our finger to the body of that water that finally erased who we are and how we look like the rest of those we knew.

RIC S. BASTASA
How Weak Is Sweetness?

we are all interconnected just like your past to my future my present to yours and i am getting curious who infects who, is it my bitterness or your sweetness?

how weak is sweetness how easily it becomes one like mine as i too have become like her, old woman whose miserly ways have killed our hopes, our dreams, our tomorrow....

RIC S. BASTASA
How Wrong We Both Were About Each Other, And How Happy We Have Been.

after love
then what?
shall we dine
less the usual
conversations?
shall we take the walk
and look at different directions?
shall i tell you a story about what does not interest you anymore?
after this
then what?

you know it
then tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
How You Can Still Be Light

A number of friends encircling you in your misery is a big comfort but you will be lost inside them and you are in no position anymore to probe the recesses of your sorrow: you will soon forget how to cure it.

try being solitary in that journey to creativity: marvel at all discoveries how your shadow follows you and you control its shape and form and movements against the light. How darkness can be a home and how you can still be light.

RIC S. BASTASA
eventually you will like the way you handle
yourself.
when a news is handed to you, you just keep it you are not the messenger.
you hear something bad, you keep it.
when someone asks, tell him about the good weather.
about how the flowers show the best in themselves on summer describe how is it to be a fish in the water and yet still be friendly with the fishermen. tell all people how exciting is the life in the village how full was the moon last night and how the kiss marks your cheeks without your knowledge. you are glad, show it well.
and do this as a habit. Trouble is trouble.
Love is always lovelier. Peace is a pursuit.
Show them what happiness does.
How small you are. How you have become Unforgettable!

RIC S. BASTASA
However, With The Passing Of Time...Do The Memories Dim And Imperceptibility Become Altered?

i don't exactly remember, i choose that i can't, i remove all the little things that make me remember put all their personal belongings in the box and give them to charity the orphans are happy with the boy's clothes and pants the old women at the senior home took their turns choosing mama's dresses and headbands i choose to forget what and who they are in my life. i move on with a new name, transferred to a place beyond the reach of memories meeting new faces, making love with new bodies not settling long, not being alone, always fluid like a river always blown like a leaf.

RIC S. BASTASA
she lived in that house the windows were like her tight-lipped
their tongue never showed nagpuyo siya anang balaya sama kaniya ang mga bintana sirado

ang ilang dila dili makita the front door was a watchdog it guarded her from harm guarded the doorknob from falling ang pultahan sa atubangan irong gabantay gibantayan siya sa kadaut gibantayan ang trangka nga dili mahulog

one night
as in any other night the lights remain blindfolded a man disguised as the wind stole in through the soles of the door

usa ka gabii
sama sa laing mga gabii ang mga suga natabonan ang lalaki nga nagtakuban nga hangin mikawat og sulod diha sa giwang sa pultahan

in the morning
the watchdog was dead the windows talked endlessly without sense the furniture broke down like nerves pagkabuntag
ang bantay nga iro patay na ang mga bintana nagsalimuang og sulti walay unod
ang mga kasangkapan nangaguba nga morag mga ugat a lock of masculine hair lounged on the floor adunay buhok sa lalaki nga nagtambay sa salog wa na siya hikit-i

she could not be found

RIC S. BASTASA
Hubris

she comes like air inside your nose passing through your esophagus and resides in the chamber of your heart telling you
you're good, and kind, and the best of the rest and she makes you feel at home with yourself until then she begins to make you feel that the rest should behave like you and that this world would have been better if all people are like you she makes you feel the arrogance of the mountain and you become the center of this universe because you have become the sun that star

RIC S. BASTASA
Hubris' Grand Display Of Feathers and so pride stands there like a peacock displaying its grand tail with all its blue pupils green eyelashes

and all the people who view it are unanimous in saying that this is pure folly stupid display dumb expression
contentious zilch.

RIC S. BASTASA
Human Beings Are Nothing But Memories

3020. the year when robots pay homage to human beings
who created them in their own likeness

at most humans could just be idols
to the least they have been reduced to nothing but biblical names and notes of robotic
histories

RIC S. BASTASA
Human Judges On The Suffering Of Others

we read the same books of the law both civil and criminal: you end on an acquittal and i end on a conviction of a conviction.

we are but human judges on the suffering of others.

RIC S. BASTASA
Human Nature.....

and now i remember you
dear scorpion, you, who wanted to cross the river, but you have no fins, only that sting, and you ask the frog to help you, but the frog made you promise not to bite along the way, lest both of you shall drown and die.

you promised.

then in the middle of your river you stung the frog which of course died and both of you drowned
together.

you were asked why?

you just can't hold it.
you sting, even if you shall die yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are times when we do not like to stand not because we cannot since our bones are still strong and our journeys have just started the miles keep on calling and the paths are too taunting there are times when we do not appreciate speed being fast can be too normal like people all people rushing to places and when they arrive there they decide at once to leave and return from where they are only to regret that they have arrived there again

we envy the turtle who does nothing but walk slowly and sleep and begin again
at its own pacing
and so silent
as a fact naked on the road to suspicions

we stop for a while
yes that is the reason why we refuse to stand though we can why we shy away suspend our footsteps and ponder
for once
why we keep on doing things and yet we do not really why we are doing them

RIC S. BASTASA
Humanize With Me

humanize with me
whatever that be
i have beer in my tongue and i taste like beer in my mouth,

kiss me, i have a tongue to offer to you, tonight

humanize with me
let us take the bed and humanize ourselves the whole night
through

do not talk about love it is not humanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Humility

great poet
i can never say more beautiful words as you for i am but your shadow and i have long been muted by the greatness of your words
i have become nothing
but your mimic.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hunahunaon Lang Sa

karong kalmado na ko sa akong kaugalingon ako lang sang hunahunaon pag-ayo ang gihunghong nimo nako sa hangin gikan
sa baybay

lisod na
kon motoo ta dayon karon daghang mga makalanag nga botete diha sa Oslob

mamatay nya tag kalit kanang dili na gani kapanamilit

RIC S. BASTASA
Hunger Games

When i first watch it
i could but cry because of the violence

despite the pomp of the props the fire and the sharpness of
the colors

was the director merely hungry for the blood and the honor?

nope. He shows what we are.
How easily can we forget our violent history

how Cain and Abel were how brother kills brother

i had years reflecting and i guess we deserve more deaths of our own kind to be human again. To be careful that soon we all perish and lose our very own inheritance.

Earth, Peace, Love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hungry For Discernment, (Or Power?)

What shall I tell this great mountain?
That I have seen everything from here?
I breathe thin air here
Day and night
I stretch my hands to the clouds I touch
I tire my eyes to the sun above I follow the birds flying to the other island But I shall not rest
I shall climb this great and high mountain some more To see everything
In a single glance
Without even moving an eyelash.

RIC S. BASTASA
Husband And Wife

well, at the end we have nothing more to offer
'like pearls'
we have consumed
everything
we have nothing to give we just want
together to live together to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Husband's Song

the night is getting late and i am inside my car the cd player is off the silence is too loud to be ignored

at this hour the roads are clear except for the checkpoint at the boundary between this town and the other town the rain starts to drizzle

it is cold
but he is confident that to the place of his destination it will be warm and cozy his wife is waiting for him

to be home again

RIC S. BASTASA
Hushing Hushing

the usual land
escape of pyramid roof
touching the sky
heave
in space and sip
in lights of stars
i am
happier and enjoying things that are far away from me
you
wonder how this is possible on empty arms on hearts without
head ing my way out the en closures
of too much love that is kill ing me

RIC S. BASTASA
He says
I should keep on breaking my heart until it opens

I say
I quit, my heart has opened to the world and the world
is broken

to heal this world
i must seal this heart

it beats in silence
and the world
is at peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Hypochondriac

just a little pain on his teeth
and he thinks of his death

RIC S. BASTASA
Hypocrisy And Civility

We were business class inside the plane in a five-hour flight together bound for pleasure we had champagne and ham and some slices of apples and oranges we did talk a lot from science to politics to love and hatred and that was where we paused a lot and listened

we did not like each other actually but what can we do? this is business class ill motives is the rule and profit is the goal.

We cheered for what is good and profitable and then we looked somewhere to the good things that we really wanted to treasure to places that we really wanted to go and stay

RIC S. BASTASA
Hypocrisy And Ignorance...

cutie the little chihuahua lives inside the bath tub near the music room of tom,

the whole night the chihuahua barks asking for a hot-dog for supper but cruel tom listens to rock

and hears nothing about the tiny barks of the tiny dog,

the following morning
tom gets wild
why his tiny dog died

RIC S. BASTASA
Hypothetical Departures

the kettle is not in its proper place grains of rice
scattered on the path

no birds pecking
this time
the cat on the fence is keen but helpless

leaves in heaps there is no wind this time i think about
burning

the curtains are unmoved dusts settle layered
there is a story
to tell

the archeologists
are not bringing their brushes
of history

even the winds
if you taste them
are bitter

when the gate opens
this time
no hand shall open it
again

a woman sits staring blankly to a humid morning

RIC S. BASTASA
Hysteria Of A Sick Soul From A Friend's Diary

it happened so fast
it was just a blur

i tried to clear
my head of the whisky fuzz

it was just a
blur,
a film over,
just a glaze over a glassy surface hope loses clear vision.

Her eyes glazed over perhaps from lack of sleep

The haze blurs the hills confuse, obnubilate, obscure barbaric incantations

yes, unclear, indistinct, blurred decisions

Remarks confused
the debate over words

obnubilate
their intentions
blur,
smear,
smudge,
smutch
earth smudges

blear, blur
dim indistinct
The fog blurs my vision dim, slur you're one vague indistinct shadow in the night
garden

The distinctions between two theories about ourselves blurred at the end

goodbye says goodbye to goodbye
just that just that

RIC S. BASTASA
I          Sidorsch         Neider
d O auroral
lace sleeves  obfuscation! - over the hard awn.
grasp of day.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know When To Leave....

if it is handed
to me,
sincerely, i will
take it,
if you close your hand
and shake your
head,
and look at me
with a square face,
i will understand,
it is not mine
it is meant for
the other
and he deserves it
better
you see
i am a just man
i give in to what is higher
i nod my head
and will always be
ready
to leave

RIC S. BASTASA
I Admit I Need To Be Loved

i admit i need to be loved
for without love where can all these poems of mine be?
they live inside your hearts not mine
and it is too self-serving on my own plate
to eat or on my own glass to drink for love lives in the hearts of the other
because narcissism
kills.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Agree

... that before humans destroy the earth
they get destroyed in the first place,

you must be talking about us then for what else can be be?

there is no third person
between us
we breathe the same air and walk on this same land we are destroyed and then i agree again

the earth recovers
when we all are gone

RIC S. BASTASA
I Agree, I Find Long Poems Senseless

i like it brief and quick like zip-less sex
on the train
bound for Zurich
like an exclamation point inside my
mouth.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Agree, It Is Not The Word

it is the hush
and the slight touch on my hand on top of yours,
the sweat on my
belly,
the kiss and not the unsaid
goodbye

i agree, it is not the word
that matters, it is the memory that haunts us both
still,
stuck on the scene one afternoon on that Sunday when they were all not there
just the two of us
enjoying each others'
mystery.

we were too young then we thought we understood life we didn't until this pain subsides

that kiss that union
of souls
still lingers

you came into my life at the wrong moment.
i went out too
at the wrong time

we like to find a moment in history where we can both be right where time becomes friendly.

until now all the doors are closed the heart is numb.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Also Find You There

i speak because something is missing.
i let you know.

i speak again because there is this feeling of emptiness something does not satisfy no matter what color what shape

what it does

i touch it but it is only its image someone touches it and he turns into stone a curse and many people who see him thinks that he should be stoned to death even if he had long become a stone in the middle of the road that no one bothers to call a stone or mind
if it is still a stone
hard and
broken

this is the thirst the hunger that any present cannot fill if you look into my eyes do not be shocked

i also find you there.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Also Know

i also know
how to stare
to a face
and tell myself
i love it

i learned how to just be silent and savor
a love unrequited

takes time
take a lot
of silence
and endure
the pain

takes time
to learn how ecstasy
lingers
even without touching

to shut up
and close
the womb
of your feelings
there
is no birth
of love
or hate
or whatever

to just look and wait
and still wait
even
for a long
time
even for eternity
you savor
the lasting
flavor of your secret longing
the face
that you see
the one
that is meant never to be touched

RIC S. BASTASA
I Also Know How To Keep Misgivings

in my patience
i also learned how to keep misgivings like a sponge
i absorb everything that wets me

everyday
i keep the secrets of my life adding them and putting them all together how hurt i am

how i keep the pains like they were precious gems in my secret pockets of my memories

i do not complain
i have no reasons to support them except that i have surrendered myself in the name of love someday i will be full like a cup unable to keep the foam overflowing

i will not burst like a balloon i will not explode like a bomb you know me very well in my passive silence

there will be no wars or unkind word uttered there will be no questions i will just take my long vacation taking all my necessary belongings with a note that never will i be coming back i always think of a new life i always have in mind another new beginning there in the place where i can breathe freely finally without you

RIC S. BASTASA
they manage to express themselves in some equations to find what they still do not know, such as their x's and y's. for years, i sleep with the number One.
Wanting to get away from the hazards of the Zero, Found help with the Number Two who took away some tens and hundreds from me In favor of Sixteen.
Well, anyway, Number One as always is Patient.
And passionate about my Algebraic State.
As a number, I do not bleed.
My root is numb. My world is always accurate Down to the nth digit.
I had another One, Like Three and Four but they always end up to Null.
In the calculus of the heart, things are always moving.
A change of one thing is also a change of the other.
Finally, i get tired of this world of numbers.
Numb Senses. I go back to Philosophy, and Social Studies.
The lives of the Pop star, the soap opera at night, the latest rumor that Michael Jackson is murdered.
The latest scandal of a certain closet queen matinee idol.
Lots of these, simply to take me away from the Numbness of it all.
Meanwhile, i am taking lunch with a rebel.
I am stepping into the passionate world out there.
The military is jealous. And of course, I am cautious.

The cheese, and the rat, and the trap and the Aerobics exercises. Look at the cat, it is making sense of its ninth life.
Take care. Sleep tight.

Find your code book and decipher the words.
What can i say? Sleep well, You still have other things to do,
To justify your poetry and Your Lousy existence.

Exequator Zorro.
I Also Like You To Think For Yourself

child, they beat you?
and leave you? and not mind you at times?

why? do they justify that you must know pain so you must avoid it at all cost and know how to defend yourself when it is inflicted?
do they say that leaving you prepares you for independence so that you can live by yourself and not rely on anybody?
did they not tell you that they do not mind you so that you will learn not to be conceited and self-centered and that as early as your childhood you will know that this is a wide wild world that there are evil people that this world is a constant battle between the bad and the good?

i understand perfectly daddy that was what you did to me and so i am here
strong, independent and real.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Also Pay Tribute To My Flesh

I do not keep a snob spirit A closed one not open to the realities Of my duality: body and soul Flesh and spirit, to keep myself whole To keep the horses satisfied and make This chariot travel smoothly towards The path I have chosen towards the path Of my true destination
The black horse and the white horse They must too live in harmony
The black horse of my nights
The white horse of my days And this chariot where I ride

I am still the driver in control I drive where I want to go I stop when I want to stop These horses must see me as their master And this chariot where I ride Is nothing But just a useful thing.

Today, I pay tribute to my flesh And my spirit must also understand Love after all hinges on desires And without this body, how can the spirit feel?
And where can guilt be, if love knows That it is always greater and can always win.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Always Find A Way To Be With You

i have my own ways and you do not know clearly how i do them you do not notice the way how my eyes glow when i see you like an early morning sun like a midnight moon looking for some arrays of stars i always have a way to be with you and today we share a meal together and you think that there is nothing special about it when you take some bits of the bread when you sip your coke when you close your eyes to the taste of the gravy when you slowly lick the syrup of the pancake i always have the moment of feasting on your face of traveling to the lines of your cheeks to the luscious lips, i settle my gaze in a matter of just a few seconds my heart keeps on beating and you do not hear it i put my hands on my side i stop for a while to see a very beautiful world in front of me it is you.

until now, you do not know it.
that is the boundary i set because there will be no you and i the gentle space between is lovelier and my heart beats some more so near and yet you are so far away

i like it this way.
my dignified self, the master of self-restraint.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Always Leave When I Do Not Fit....

many times
i was cheated but it is this virtue of simply leaving that always comes into play, and so i always leave thinking perhaps that

that place where
a cheater lives is not for me, for

i think i am an honest and hardworking man and if i continue to stay there, surely

i would not fit and as i am different they would not really like it, so here i am into a different world, where i work hard, keep on this virtue of being honest, and thus live a happy life.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Always Like It Cool

simmering, gliding, and sliding, these kinds of figures of white herons, and hawks, and even gray fish on stones beneath the shallow sea
amaze me, i am silenced by their beauty, and trying to write about them is always a disappointment reading the lines

i am at a loss, i am less of what you are, and my literary journey has not even begun

at any rate, it really depends on how i see it and how you see it too, i like just being what i am and that is the biggest
win.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Always Remember That Movie

it was about the story of a murder of a man by a very ordinary, naive, uneducated woman scorned, she loved him with all her life until she noticed that slowly she was betrayed by him leaving her all too empty and starkly naked
against the
world,
and so she murdered him and buried him under the champaca tree which roots ate everything
of him
that gave it the white bloom the perfumed scent of love spreading in the air on her lonely nights

she is never caught and the people are happy that he is gone away never to be seen never to be heard again

RIC S. BASTASA
I Always Remember The Cool Shade Of The Bamboo Grove

his poverty takes him to long walks on the paths of hill and mountains for days the sun scorches his back he wears his buri hat and covers his body with big anahaw leaves he passes the same river that winds towards his nipa hut, ten times he plunges his weary feet on the running waters of the creek the heavy work he does indeed turns him into a man of the plough and the rugged muddy fields the sweat of his brow and the sighs of his unbroken spirit, the trials and the tribulations of his insignificance above all these, he passes by the bamboo grove where a creek runs gently by he remembers her again his first love his first plunge naked into the water

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am

The black snake that slides through the waters of the creek and the grases of the land
seeking for the tree whose buds, leaves, or bark or root
or whatever
for it to bite and chew to cure
the wound that keeps on bleeding
on that spot where the heart
is dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Daydreamer Too

I am a daydreamer too
for days that always come with promises broken even for nights
that always seem colder (nightdreamer am i too) my blankets thinner
and shorter

i daydream
on the green grass under the trees measuring the movement of the sun rising from the east and setting on the west

i like to sit my chin resting on my legs my hands supporting my body against the ground
my eyes always gazing at the sky above

and my brown street dog always beside me
waggling its tail
as always

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Dream Weaver

from buri palms
i weave a dream of a world
made of steel

i dream that harshness has turned into a flower

i dream that
intolerance has become a smiling neighbor

i dream that
the imperialist is dead
and buried
and we all go home
without fear
of tomorrow

i dream that
the terrorist has come down from his mountain of hate and now spends his long vacation in some beach resort
in boracay

i dream that
finally my enemy has become my friend and we drink beer and laugh and make some nice conversations without second thoughts of betrayal

i dream that
everyday i make poems about love and compassion and a nice life and a confident future free from fears of global warming

i dream that i am in a dream dreaming dreams forgetting that i am just dreaming that soon i wake up again dreaming

to be lost in dreams forever, i dream to be lost in dreams forever
in this dream

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Fast And Furious Learner Too.

when for the first time i summon all instincts to save what is fragile from you i forgive myself from taking all the hassle, but if you do it one more time i may oblige again since i do not like the shattering sound of what is important and broken, but i may soon give up and make myself numb from all these surprising fragility, i may soon surrender and leave things falling and breaking and messy for like a monkey legendary as it is, i also have hands to cover my nose, my ears and my eyes, and for such a feat, i have also learned to sleep well despite all the explosions going on around me. Give me more time. I am a fast and furious learner too.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Finger To You

in bliss
last night
i was not just a finger
to you

during next morning when i wake up and taken back
my senses

i am a finger
still pointing
the way
to justice

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Gentleman

annoy me
and i will transfer to another seat

annoy me some more
i will transfer to another room if you follow me some more i will transfer to another country

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Man

in the morning of my life i need four of you at noon i only need two in the night of my life i will need three now you must know me i am the answer to the riddle of the sphinx
i am man
when the night is gone at dusk
i only need one.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A New Word

i am a new word
to the vocabulary of the flesh and the soul

ey all live in me for this moment and slowly i must define myself gently i must touch the beauty of my soul with the mortal hands of my body there must be a way to harmonize light and darkness living in twilight in the land where light and darkness meet where love and hate embrace where heaven and earth kiss

i am a new word
and in my heart and mind i must define myself

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Path With So Many Conduits

i am a path with so many conduits so please do not follow me every path leads to a hundred paths and you shall be lost but keep the faith and love and soon you will find the only way

leading to my heart

when you reach there (do not use your mind)

you may see yourself grieving i have long been taken away and i have no words or substance no flesh or even bones

use the skin of your fingertips to feel the dust

see the stain and do not ever wash what is there is there

i am the eye staring at you, drowsy about the coming of something that is yet to be known you shall not understand neither shall i.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Piece Of Broken Man

do you see me? what do you really see?
do you see this piece of broken man?

his spine bowed to the earth because it has a huge burden on his back his face with rugged lines, his jaw somehow dislocated, the bones of his body unsymmetrical, his flesh rotting, his skin unable to hold some parts of his broken body, his nose does not smell the sweet perfume of the good life, his tongue attuned to the bitterness of his past, his lips crack with the present catastrophies, it has not defined the kiss of life, he cannot look up now to the bright skies and marvel upon the wonders of creation, the nature of green and red the scent of peach and apples and roses the taste of honey, look at him, look at me, this piece of a broken man, i am not your imagination i am you. you must look at me again, stare at me.

give me your hand, so i can be warm again, so my blood starts to run again, it is you, and you alone, who can make me rise.

i am no other man. I am you.

help me. help yourself. this is the real picture of the man in the mirror of your eyes in that secret chambers of your heart.

help yourself. help me.
we shall are one.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Tree Without Roots

i like it
that way, a tree am i without roots
but i do not die
for i know when to become the cloud that i was when then
i was blue.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Very Hardheaded Humanoid short,

stolen moments,
i write, have placed so much weight like baggage of emotions in my mind

too heavy, i do not dare lifting it with my own fuckin' finger

but i am a very hardheaded humanoid,
always forgetting, from now, then hence, and then
tomorrow,
and missing what i had stolen i turn back and begin again,
as though
nothing happened

i kiss a black spider and shall die a hundred deaths

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Very Poor Electronic Man

i don't have emails to read no one remembers me i do not have a chat mate no one likes to talk with me but i write a poem and you are reading it today that makes me the richest man alive in the internet on a blog known as PH.

Welcome me as I thank you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am A Winner

tried my hands in poetry like i am studying idolatry got nothing in the end just plain useless bend

dthis is just expression no impression
poetry and bigotry
nothing but sultry

entered some poems
in the contests
only to be rejected
and be busted

got this hardhead
always moving ahead
now at PH at my high pitch

here i see my poems printed and i am so excited see? i am a winner
my garbage and litter

RIC S. BASTASA
darkness comes it is routine, nothing is mysterious about it and as usual i am about to sleep but you are there knocking at the door
of my heart
bringing me a bouquet of vowels looking like petals of the blue flowers in the desert i let you in and i take the bouquet of vowels and shower it
sprinkle it
with the salt of my tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Afraid

because i am afraid to really say what i feel about what i love
because my sun cannot fully shine on the rainy day because the clouds do not disperse with the light of my moon because the waves of the sea do not cease to bump the rocks of my shore because i cannot hurt with honesty those that cause me pain because the dog still barks at the wrong tree that is why my dear
i still write poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Afraid I Have To Say It Is Too Hot Too Here

Fighting between Islamic rebels and Philippine troops intensified Sunday, dimming hopes of renewed peace talks with the southern separatists, government and military officials

(ADVERTISEMENT: COCA COLA)

More than 100 Muslim fighters have been killed in four days of clashes with the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) on Mindanao island, said military spokesman Colonel Julieto Ando.

About 90,000 people have been displaced by the upsurge in fighting, according to local and foreign relief agencies operating in the region where government troops have battled insurgents for 40 years.

(ADVERTISEMENT: Britney Spears singing)

'Fighting intensified overnight with battles raging near the towns of Datu Saudi Ampatuan and Datu Piang, all in Maguindanao province, ' said Ando, who blamed recent rebels attacks for the deteriorating situation.

'Ve have done our best to embrace peace, but the MILF started the hostilities by pillaging villages and murdering innocent civilians in Mindanao, ' Ando said.

(ADVERTISEMENT: m & m chocolates)

'Now we are implementing the full force of the law and we will arrest those responsible for the traitorous attacks against civilians.'

The National Disaster Coordinating Council (NDCC) said Sunday that more than 240,000 people have been displaced since the fighting began two weeks ago.

The NDCC put the number killed in two weeks at 50, conflicting with military figures.

Glenn Rabonza, NDCC executive officer, said nearly 100 evacuation centres have been set up across the affected areas in Mindanao.

(ADVERTISEMENT: COKE IS IT!)

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
I Am Alive....

early morning here
night time in your place it is this daily mirroring a kind reflection of what i have become after last night

do not take me seriously it is just a matter of routine checking my hair my mole, grinning my teeth comforting myself: i am alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am All Set With You

there is drama when i first saw you. I ask for a woman with a red rose on her hand and it was you holding this red rose one early morning and it set the beginning of my day with you. we married. we stayed on.
12 years. moving on to 25 years.
we keep the laughter
and the giggle
each night we tell stories
how we begin
always...
in this book of love,
we do not know how to tell the story of an ending.... perhaps we must learn to write about a fairy tale how to keep ourselves happy ever after how to say the clinching lines of a happy ending.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Almost There

slowly i climb the hill, that is my main objective today
my mission
and my vision to finally reach the apex
and join you
in your drink.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Also Moving On In Another Direction..

a woman carries a black umbrella tagging along a boy

a man without a hat
follows them
and he is getting wet for it is raining

this is just a glimpse about what is happening in this world

a boulevard stretches far beside it a stormy sea

i cannot give a complete story about what finally happened

i am also moving on in another direction...

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Always A Part Of The Whole Picture....

i should have stopped a long time ago.
move my way, like another planet to another orbit unto another galaxy, for there are so many options, anyway.
i should have closed the door and the windows, light my own room, and play the flute and listen to the songs of my own soul, contented with the caresses of my own hands the dances of my feet and the gentleness of my breathing,
i am a certain rhythm away from all of you, i have a hammock where my head rests throughout the night, i have my own soft bed of white fleece, the rain outside and the storms can do me no harm,
i could have just listened and do nothing,
i didn’t.

tell me now, have you heard the coldest sound of my regrets? have you heard the flapping of bird wings away from your heart?
have you seen the river moving away from the banks where you are constantly castigated by the howling sounds of your foxes? my nights are your nights now.
come, do not listen to me, come,
i shall listen to all of you.
we're all in this now.
to the journey of our deepest selves, my way of understanding the changes of our lives, the coming of the dawning of light, shadows fading, rains stopping, seeds beginning their sprouts in the coming of our springtime.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Ash

do not threaten me with the fire of your body my love for i am a man borne of fire and shall die of fire i eat fire, i bathe in fire, i swim in the deepest part of fire

i like to burn in the fire that you start
from your flicker, from the flints of your gaze
i like to see this hearth, this warmth, this conflagration
you with me burning like hell

do not threaten me with the fire of your thighs
for i eat fire, my body is fire, it is alive with its heat my sweat fumes are the smokes of fire
my end is the char that stays beside your legs
and tomorrow morning when i finally die
when i am put off by your power
you shall find me as burnt residues
beneath your feet

i am ash
the offering of love to life.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Asleep.

the old man who loves the sea after 70 years built a boat, which you cannot figure out if it is really a boat, for the boat is inverted like a kayak overturned by the waves. so many storms of his life so many riddles.

this is the world turned upside down.
the old man writes the map of his life on the sand.
with his finger, and he has to kneel to be able to do so.
his bone broke. he prostrated.

the old man who loves the sea feeds the sea with his own body.
and the hermit crabs crawled.
they want a taste of his wisdom.

the sea claimed everything. it says: even you, even the land i own.
i am asleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am At The Beach

i am at the beach
it is getting too dark to play with my emotions
there is this woman against the wind her clothes blown outlining the contours of her body her hair black and long she stares at the waves going bigger
i am watching her vigilant on her next move

the sun sets sadly on her face

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Available

when you are sad and lonely
come to me
i am available
when you are rejected and feeling unwanted come to me again for i am always available when you feel that the world is against you
come to me
i am available
when you are lost and need guidance come to me i am still available oh, our mutual miseries always need faithful and available companies

come to me then
i am like you i am available.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Back Home

and guess what?

i still smell like those bags
at the airport

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Beginning To Understand Myself

last night was different inside my dream i was gentle kind to myself there was no blaming no enumeration of sins and no formula for what must be done it was more of taking things like a shallow river i step on it and there is no qualm no sounds of wild ducks just the cool, calm waters with slight ripples from the drops of dew from the leaves of mountain trees, last night, we were different we simply gaze upon our bodies naked as we are to the honesty of who and what we are i kissed you on the mouth and your tongue licked mine we closed our eyes we caressed our bodies with our hands not a word, just a savor of the fleshy feast, no justifications, no explanations we grip our fingers we bite our lips
on joint orgasms, a celebration at last of having discovered our souls, fused, divine, and forgiving.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Best....

when all of you barely
know i exist,

and you do not acclaim
my work,

when you despise me
and call me
foolish

i do not talk
i have no use of oral intercourse

i only write what is given what is there already

and when my work is done
my aim is fulfilled completely

and then you will say

' I could have done better than him in this'

now, i all these
i become
the best.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Bewildered

there is that spider spinning its house of memories trapping some flying strangers wrapping them

putting them in a warped time eating them

is it mourning now?
one hears the sound of the falling of the leaf now on the river spasmodic to a distance rushing rustling rubric breaking finally at the junction of cataclysm change and destruction and then the inner peace of the pond that runs dry

consumed by itself to the pebbles numb to the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Blunt

i am blunt
i do not have expectations from people or things from flora to fauna
from human to bacteria

at this stubborn age
i live my own life now no expectations from wife or kids from mama and papa from house to government

i am blunt
i care for my owe self only i live for today not thinking about tomorrow each second counts
nothing for the year nothing for some

i do not expect from any site nothing from anybody
i live as simply as a worm to a leaf a fish to the sea
a butterfly for a day

i am blunt
i am free.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Bringing You Flowers For Your Hair

don't they think that bringing flowers for women we all love have become so irrelevant?

or that i am so incompetent? and that whay i say to you have become so immaterial?

oh there you are, your notes on evidence have made you so insecure, but i like the allure, someone must be on trial. I am bringing you flowers, they're much better than handcuffs, for love.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Brown

i am brown
like a cacao,
i smell better
in hot water.
i am bitter
but sought
after.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Concerned About Your Today And So. We Are Talking Now.

as i write this i put aside a red apple which i just bit on a hard bound book beside a calendar of my vacation trips for the coming months,

the book is political confronting the state about some of its abuses

the apple appears incomplete without my hand the fingers are groping for the keys

for instance, the key for our liberation

the words seem to be at war against each other

i am concerned about your today and so. we are talking now.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Eating Peanuts

at the very moment when i am thinking of how to plagiarize a part of your creation, i am picking peanuts from a jar, and i stop writing when i have to use two hands to swallow the nuts
and then chew
right there, the ideas pop out that this could have been better if you thought about it
i simply thought of making an improvement from a previous one made by a lousy
man.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Feeling More Hot

MILF chief peace negotiator Mohagher Iqbal warned of a return to full-scale hostilities.

'This is a grim scenario and I don't even want to think about it, but if the peace talks collapse then there will be war again in Mindanao,' he told AFP.

Iqbal blamed hawkish factions of President Gloria Arroyo's government and local Christian politicians opposed to a Muslim homeland.

'The voice of reason is dwarfed by the voice of hatred and prejudice,' he said. 'The peace talks are slowly breaking apart and if this continues, may God help us all.'

Talks to end the insurgency have been going on for 11 years, with a ceasefire officially in force since 2003.

The peace accord would have granted Muslims their own separate state across more than 700 villages in Mindanao, but the Supreme Court on August 4 halted the so-called Memorandum of Agreement on Ancestral Domain.

The peace plan had sparked a series of protests from mostly Christian politicians and residents opposed to the inclusion of their areas into the so-called Bangsamoro (Muslim) Juridical Entity.

Several rebel MILF commanders have since ignored repeated calls by their leaders to stand down and launched attacks on civilians in towns and villages in many parts of Muslim Mindanao.

Some politicians have urged villagers to arm and defend themselves from rebel attacks. Armed militias have also been deployed to guard their communities against further atrocities.

On Saturday MILF chairman Ebrahim Murad called on Malaysia to help resume the peace talks to end weeks of brutal fighting in Mindanao.

Deputy Presidential Spokesman Anthony Golez said the government would continue to pursue peace negotiations with the rebels even if the government enjoys a military advantage over them.
I Am Folding This White Paper

i am folding this paper the way you want it to every corner i give my sigh
in my mind
the paper shall be this bird you want it to be my friend, you always dream

of flight
and this paper soon shall be what you want
to be a bird with strong wings gathering winds
taking in the big storm today it is finished and you shall take it then in your wildest dreams added in the layers of your

years

you shall fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
i
am fortified
by constant practice

i
am feeling at home with my own self-imposed loneliness, it is changing its form into a dignified shape of a young man enjoying his stroll along the bank of this old river the trees are tall touching the morning sun lush of leaves, cool winds, daft of fog

hanging upon my hair,

i am
contented
with my own thoughts birds winging their way out into the open space diving into the face of the ocean an ocean of compassion drops of my chosen existence into the anonymity of my given

universe....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Free I Choose The Peace And Quiet Around Me

i am free. i rest below the light of stars.
i look for the peace of the things around me.
trees that do not move, waters on the pond that are still, birds resting on the nests with their wings clipped in sleep i wait for nothing. i do not think about taxing things.

and when despair comes to meet me i simply move and take refuge in other places where there are no obstructions to the peace and quiet that i decide to choose.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Free, I Tell You So...

your hair is in disarray nails are dirty and just like your feelings all those little things that hang on your body
are in chaos,

i look at you and you stare at me and i look back and you laugh triumphant perhaps in what you are finally from an ordered past to a present pandemonium you come to me and shout at me that you are free, i wonder, is freedom actually chaos?

i am free too,
i have worked my freedom and earned it

i comb my hair
i trim my fingernails
i wash my body
i filter my thoughts
i put things in their proper order
i exercise propriety

i choose my words,
i plan my day
i only buy what i need for the day i write my diary

i decide what book to read i weigh things i throw away what destroys me i don't put myself to danger i protect myself i defend what is right i speak the truth

and i will tell you too,

' i am free! '

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Funny

i am funny
i cry upon hearing the pleas of the goats transported from the market to the slaughterhouse

it is ridiculous
as others think of the goat meat well spiced for their next
sumptuous dinner

i am funny
thinking about the mass killing of natives in the south as other still think of the gain on the next delivery of guns and ammunition

i am not just funny
i am crazy
and they are not ridiculous they are serious
for wars to come and shall never end for the violence they create so they may have all the profits and gain

reality is not funny war is a serious business the government is crazy worshiping a master
this great puppeteer

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Giving All These Condolences To You

at first i encourage you to write a poem you do not have to be a poet to write one inside myself is the fire that keeps on burning no dark night no cold wind no idleness has quelled it it is this art that has keeps me going after a hard day i am confident that i can manage despite the piles of work it is this art that conquers the impossible between us i have long wanted to share this to you as i once if you remember told you to write a poem for me but you did not hesitate to take the snore instead opting for a dream inside the stupor of another world where you are but only the spectator you do not create you do not imagine you have never shared some bits of yourself, and so i am giving all these condolences to you
you are dead.
I Am Giving Way

here they all come beaming with pride and solid  hopes
the upcoming generation, and i give them
all my respect
what is due them now they shall take i have given them
all that i have all that i am
and all that i will ever be

here they all come
i am giving way
i am all fed-up
now is their time to feed us too

here they all come
and so i will go away....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Giving You Up For Another

it has been a nice exchange of wholesome conversation
the past few days when we treat ourselves as friends, what could have made you change?

talks about money, and people, and how life shouldn’t be desperate things and miserable events ships that sink, minds that explode and kids on rehabilitation, mariages on the brink of breaking governments that don’t serve anymore how desperate we could be?

you must have realized that this is my hiding place
as i have no other place to hide
and breathe

we now must part, i want to live.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Glad

i am glad
i do not have winters

if i had
i could have written more
painful haikus.

if i had
i could have saved more silence enough for me to muster more solitude
enough for me to die slowly in blissful silence like a snowflake slowly melting in the warmth of your palm.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Glad She Didn't...

when we were in Indonesia she was confused and doubted the reason for life and it happens that we were brought to a place where lovers were killed it is such a high place resulting from a cataclysm of long ago where volcanoes erupted together bringing one land down and raising another to make those very high cliffs which made her fear her knees trembling and i thought she, like that woman of the story, would jump from the cliff and crush herself down to the rocks down the sea,

i left her to decide for herself since she had been brought in the spirit of freedom

she didn't. I am glad she didn't.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Glad That You Are Into Haiku

i must imagine you sitting on a chair
facing the void
at the window

and then you see what reality has long concealed from you

was it a butterfly
that you have mistaken as another leaf?

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Gone.....

since you asked me then this is my answer: i don't build a bridge for now i don't even like to see how it is built by you i grieve over how you waste time trying to connect two distant islands.
Time is precious. The bridge is there and there is no need to construct any.
You eyes look down the cheek.
To the waist of life, the dance is waiting.
Every night every light is a dance of life.
There is no time to answer the questions even.
Those who were ahead of us, oh, they have the answers but they carry it to their graves.
I get the point about life now.
It is nothing to do with greatness.
It is a very simple proposition: i am life, live me.
I am time, let me pass the way i want to.
I am water let me flow.
I am air let me blow what is left of me.
I am an island. I am a coconut tree.
I am a shell. I am a grain of sand.
I am everything you see and touch and think about.
I am gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Hands

i am those hands and you are the sands slipping from my fragile fingers

i do not understand each grain of you a universe in itself i do not wish to understand to keep you to hold you beyond my grasp

i must let you go

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Handsome In My Own Way

the list shows how deep you are how admirable and the resulting envy could be inevitable

sometimes i wonder if that deep ocean belongs to you and that what i have is only the shallow part of the shore where i content myself with foams and sand and passing wind

i am not yet familiar with the path of the shell the labyrinths of your chosen words but i am not that dumb challenged i shall soon learn all these tricks but not with a dream to be like you or anybody else

i am handsome in my own way
and in some ways untold you are ugly.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Happy I Am.

the gods watch
from the kingdom of the sky

and here i am
too busy with my creations figures of clay women of sands

leaves of butterflies a garland of some lies some notes of survival
fumes of memories

rising to the skies
the blur of life
smudges of beings
flames of fading faces fangs of emptiness
the hunger of attention the love of my shadow the future fizz
whatever

i keep myself busy
the gods watch me
i know i fall short of some standards
i do not measure
myself
i am doing it
just the same with consistency
this ardor for pleasure

the gods talk behind my back then they close the door this exclusivity of
divinity
well, i am happy
i am.

(and i do not really care how i fare)

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Happy Now...

despite all this, the moment you start dipping your finger to eat you do not notice that your finger is being licked and finally eaten, but the magic is there, an illusion, you take back your hand, still warm and gentle, like a moss to that swamp. What I am saying is what you love takes your time away, like a train that consumes the road towards the place where you love calls you giving you a landmark of cherry blossoms. In time you discover sleep and when you wake up the world had already left and there you are alone, filled with another innocence, and full of wonder.

It is not always that you are alone and sad. This time you write a letter to your dead mother saying that...
dear mom, i think i understand. I am happy now.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Happy To See You Flying

i am happy to see you flying freely in the skies like you are making a painting
with the wind

go, take time with the friendly clouds go, be aware of the colors and scents of the winds wait, in a moment, watch the bursting of the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Home Again.....

forgive me
for i have changed

did you also wait for that kiss?
that perfect timing
when we will be the only two in that sad room?

forgive me for i have changed
i go back into that relapse of simply pleasing myself

the wind caressing
my hair
the breeze singing
my lullaby
the sands preparing my bed for the night
and the moon
lighting my head
as i begin to dream
again

back to myself i whisper
to my heart
here, here, i am home
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Human......

i am eating Italian flat bread inside it four rectangular slices of cheese it is a Sunday and the university is at its best in the quiet

the skies are blue and the grasses are green still wearing the dews that glisten against the early sunlight

i sit on a stone bench under the narra tree on the 8th day of July where leaves are plenty i love life because of you. i love this Sunday morning this quiet this solitude still because of you.

i am lost because of you, and without you still i must find myself
because of you.

how i envy the one that owns you, but i must accept this fate
because of you.

you are not what i am
you are not what i can touch you are not what i can never have you are not what i can never find if you read this by chance you must learn to forgive me.

i am human.i am sin.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am In Here

i am in here
inside this system

it does not follow
that i will agree to everything inside this system

there is this
courtesy, there is this hope that someday things will change that i may after all change too and like it i am patient i will wait i will keep my silence

i will be sane, until i explode like a bomb

surely i will die, but i pity you beside me keep your distance then i am about to explode, i am almost there

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am In This Cell

i am in this cell

to live some more i need a very secure and strong cell wall,

tight in my silence and isolation everything will be safe & fine nothing in nothing out this is what it is all about.

i am a dead cell, now, not comes in nothing goes out see, i am shrinking

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Inside This Cage

i am inside this cage
made all of words and images i sometimes think of escaping like a dove winging away from all these rings and vertical lines yet i am still here and one day the cage opens by itself and i go out like a child of the house when mother is away
and i meet the wind and the trees
and the tendrils of the squash

i may have gone outside
for a while
and here i am again getting inside this cage enclosing myself
with its door

i like it here
there are so many words and images
and metaphors.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Interactive

i take your shape when you face me in fact you become me because i am your mirror and whatever you do you do it to yourself

whatever you say it echoes to you

so please be good to me so you will not harm yourself the moment you forget me there will be nothing left of you too in fact we are not twins

whether we like it or not,

this you must know,
we are one: heart and mind

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Just Another Number...

i step into a room of glossy wood facing a number of stoic, pallid, bulky faces,
the stare at me, hold their chins with their pointed fingers, and begin to ask me
questions,

i am careful not to offend these gods, who by all means have blood and veins like myself, and i cannot figure out really any difference except only the fact that i am the one under scrutiny

i feel like a fish for sale a junk for disposal, a letter to be read as they look for lapses of thought and syntax
and content and style

they have no mercy as they violate rule and rule upon my own chosen propriety like 'why do say yeah? ' say 'yes' it's proper and polite, (but i am polite in every aspect) 'no, you're not' the old man with osteoporosis butted in.

it is a belittling experience a humiliation, to a crowd like these i am nothing but a gadget

'is he useful? ' 'will he serve our purpose? '
'does he get a backer to support his destination? '
'does anybody know him?
'can he be our tool for the next election?

and then i was told to go out
to wait.

One writes me a letter. I'm not in.
That's it. For what reason i do not really know.
Who am I to them? 'Kid, you're just another number in there.
More numbers are coming for scrutiny.
And they have no mercy, no compassion at all'.

But then, when it was over, i too made a conclusion
'Who cares? '

And then here i am, free as the wind, and could not care less as anybody else.

Perhaps, it is not my destiny.
Perhaps, God is saying, ' It is harmful for you'

'Leave it. It will do no good for you' my conscience speaks to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Just Another Poor Lover Of Yours

As of this time
I bring you no offering Here I am
Bringing nothing
Just lies

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Just Here....

does not always be possibilities
you give me hope but time has given me another view on the matter of living and loving: i am no longer my past and i do not expect anything from the future,

i am my own moment
i am today
i am here
i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Just Poetic

i have a red melon
which i put on the table

i am concerned
about you
you must be hungry

i like you to eat
and be happy

if you are ready
please take the shadow of my melon before you

slice spirituality and
and satisfy yourself with something virtual

come to think
of it
i am just poetic

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Just Wondering How It Feels To Be New Again

i am just wondering how is it to feel new again like having a new face, a new name, a new beginning

how does it feel to molt and be a new reptile again like an iguana, a turtle, a frog, a croc, a snake?

how does it feel to be born again?

how does it feel to talk to an old friend using a new mouth?

i am just wondering, will you tell me girl?

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Like A Radio

in the morning
early to your loneliness you turn on the radio and it speaks about everything from the latest news to the rumors and in between the ads to remind your senses about some distinctions between wants and needs between luxuries and necessities between utilities and wastes
and you listen
and numb your senses
on such hypnosis
you forget him
you junk love like an unnecessary information

like a radio i speak to you and you do not respond
but you are there
all the way
from five to ten.

you tell yourself
i do not need more trouble in my wasted life.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Like You.....

if you really have to trace the equations of all human relations it boils down to the one and only self that keeps on saying, 'I, me,
and myself'

thus whatever kindness your right hand does always the left brags.

thus whatever justification
you make
to say that you have sacrificed
a lot
for this galaxy, it is always redounds to the esteem you always longed for, this 'i, me and myself' all the way from the soles of your feet to the tips of your hair so whatever happens next, please do not use 'me' as a justification

of 'you'

' i, me, myself' is also nothing but 'me and me
and me'

don't bother much i also know this, lived myself, learned from all these,
and i don't really care too.

it is such a big wide world i can take care of myself.
Don't tire me. Go, search your 'i, me, and myself'

i perfectly understand this human thing.

Do not touch me. I am like you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Looking Towards The Direction Of The Sky

we all do we find the direction
of the sky
what choice
do we have to feel this

comfort
of God
to feel
the place

of the sun
and the moon
and the
stars
day and night
it is always
the sky

the symbol of eternity
of what is
up there

where perhaps the heavens
lie
where perhaps
everything
is bound

where perhaps
our fathers
and forefathers
live

where perhaps
we are
all welcome

where perhaps no dirt
of this earth
is no longer
found

what did they
say?
to the skies
we are meant
to fly

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Lost Again.

when i speak
it is because i am trying to find my way back home, i will ask the guide
of words,

they say i must articulate
otherwise
there is nothing to hear
and see

as though words are roads
and sentences bridges and the whole
poem becomes the
place

i am lost again.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Lost

first is the sound of the wind coming then the wind itself then the sound of the rain is coming and then the rain, we are prepared under a roof of our house and we are not feeling cold and we are not wet, we are the wind come let the rain come.

we are prepared.

but for this sad news, about the sound of your sickness about the sickness itself, about how you say the words without meaning at all, about your restlessness for the night, d this we have not prepared ourselves.

my sister is crying under the rain.
my brother beats his chest with his fist.

i am in the middle of of this storm.
but as i am not prepared for the sad news,
i am lost.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Man And I Am Numb.

it does not mean that since we made love last night that i do not have the courage to say 'bye' this morning.
you say, 'it is too early', but i do not answer you anymore.
Questions about love, (or could be lust)
do not deserve the dignity of an answer.
What did we do when
we made love?
Just once.
Just once.
Did you take my world for that piece of cake?
I don't have to take yours.
I have mine to last me
a lifetime.
It was good.
That is all i can say.
But it is not worth taking with me to the next island.
To the sea.
To the desert where my cacti lie.

I am alone as always Even after love,
a minute after,
when you are asleep,
due to this exhaustion,
I am still alone.

No one makes me happy and whole again.
i was once.
I do not wish to be happy and sad again.
I am man and I am numb.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Merely Passing By

i do not wish to change this world neither do i wish to change myself when i come here and when i leave it will all be the same, i am not involved, i come as a stranger looking at things and people and not even talking about them, & i leave them as they all are i do not take any flesh or bone, for i come as the wind, and i leave as the same wind, i do not change a room, it will be the same tree, if something is lost, or rotten, or by the grace of the heavens, grows and become one beautiful mountain, sea or sky, i only watch them all, as i pass by...

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Mine.....

when everything there is bland or dreary
when you are not elated at all or surprised when everything sounds the same and everyone looks like everyone when there seems to be only one teacher or authority when seemingly the goal is uniformity you finally decide to make it yourself, do the best you can, just to be yourself, apart from everyone who looks down at you because you have become so different, so disgusting but you keep on doing what you love, yes, uniquely yours. and you love it, happy with this feeling, i am not yours, i am mine.

mine and mine alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Myself, And That Is Good Enough For Me.

It is always the temptation to be great like you, every word that you say is gold to me every actuation is a sunny day to my cold winter, every leaving of yours, could be my series of deaths, and every coming is every rapture of my spirit but how sad it is, how reality bites me for i am always different, i am in my coldest night, i am deaths of doors closing and opening, i am always the sadness of departures, and people get bored and people says that it is not good and they want me changed, but sad as it is,
i am unchangeable, hardheaded, and original,

yes, original, and that is the only key that i have to open the real door for me.

i am myself, and that is good enough for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am None Of The Above

the rain
may pour

as the sun
may shine

and there will be no talk about

what was given and

what was returned

the sky
does not measure what vastness
it holds

the river flows
with a song

it does not choose who must
hear it

what is the point to all these?

i am none of the above

and human as i am i am a servant
to numbers
a believer in equations

i give but i also take

and i can't help how my mind
works

and it knows what is unfair.

RIC S. BASTASA
as soon as the storm leaves what we have here are trees without leaves houses disassembled how doors are taken away from their jams windows without a perspective stairs like teeth removed from its gums you tell me that the trees without leaves are hands in prayer

disassembled houses as broken selves wanting repair pieces to be taken back into a logical placement i am tired of this landscape and so i leave giving myself more chances of meeting those still not broken, those trees whose leaves are not shaken off from their twigs the world is too huge and i am not a tree that cannot move.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Afraid Anymore In The Dark

yes, there is nothing to fear in darkness
nothing
is there anyway, nothing to feel in this emptiness emptying itself like evaporating water into vapor in space like a bag of dust spreading like feathers in openness

you feel empty you feel the void wriggling inside your guts
your mind floating so lightly like a dream in your sleep like a mist
of the mountain
like a mist
of the green fields early morning
like a mist
floating in an open sea where a man paddles his life on his small wooden sail be excited as i am excited about you tipsy

in spirits of the red wine and feeling so light so empty like a ray of light like a smoke rising from a cigar filling the room filling your chest be excited as i am excited about you

emptying
like a window opening to the skies to see some shooting stars like eyes gazing to an open ricefield emptying wondering to so much wisdom now rushing back to you like a door opening for an incoming guest like a crevice of your wall letting in a ray of light telling you that morning with the sun is coming

oh be excited as i am excited about you as i watch dawn turning into
day
oh, i am so happy seeing the void expanding how much can you really hold on the next step after so much void?

oh i am so excited!

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Afraid Of Emptiness

i may not have told you, but now i will tell it to you three times, girl, i am not afraid of emptiness the one that walks upon you when you were once this huge space like a Gothic church with doors like mountains and windows like continents the sound of emptiness reverberates like a tin cup that falls on the iron rails of this room it fills every nerve that coils upon itself and forms a hand gripping for waterfalls it closes the ears and rips every rational entries that your eyes write in the pages of your journal it encloses you like a mental jacket of that new patient at ward 6, it walls you in like you are a chair inside the congested kitchen look, who likes the congestion of the spirits? who likes the choking of the nicks of time?
who likes a light imprisoned in its own flames burning itself upon itself like a candle consuming both of its ends?
who like the mezzanine filled with letters that you keep containing love stories of suicide and escape?
look upon your face too crowded with your senses? it is a forest with trees killing each other for an ounce of light roots upon roots and leaves upon leaves this world is too crowded with unraveling thoughts i am not afraid of emptiness i like my windows opening all the days of my life i like doors without locks stairs without rails, houses without walls and roofs i live in open space and yes right here inside my heart i thrive in its empty spaces without the nerves and the veins

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Alone....

since i do not have a sense of direction i just bend a little to accommodate my own shallow fears.

i bend on a window sill.

put my hand on my chin.

and then to every person who passes this road
i take a closer look

trying to figure out
what suffering has he comparing it to mine and then comforting myself

that i am not alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not At Ease

i am not at ease
with anybody

not even with
you. we come here together and then i must leave first
to leave you
at your own kind of ease.

finally, the adage is true again: hell is
other people

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not At Home With You Anymore

i do not intend to waste some words anymore the images have become too hazy lacking the particulars of the eyelashes and the capillaries the roots are too short and few on this very shallow soil the rain has come and the tree with the small touches of the wind shall be uprooted

there is no more dignity to this no honor possible

you pack up and leave goodbye is not even a word anymore it is just the usual hand waving aboard a boat with no known destination

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Bothered

text:

all i do are mere exercises as i flex a word
make it run in the confines of a clause into the sentences of my soul

i take you and i play i create a door and when you are inside a room you may have seen nothing at all because you very well know about the story of the wind it makes you colder and feel that it is just lying there i am always far away from you even if you kiss me passionately all i do is caress a letter and it grows into some pretty words because of love

i sow a vowel into a fertile ground of consonants and then the sounds of concerns begin to hush you see a baby

you baby talk it you surrender the maturity of your thoughts because all it has given you is pain a thousand flowers bloom filling colors to the black array of stones in silence the sands are too beautiful the sea breeze wants to drown them these are the exercises of the mind looking for justifications for some hardships that are left

in the dark
words are not just tools they are also toys to make the child believe that this world is too a playground for joys

there is an experience of so much freedom in every clause in every cause you wonder why i do not dabble into punctuations

anymore
i am not bothered
i am not sour....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Gone

i am
not gone.
How can
i be gone?
Vanish me
from
your mind.
Lust
Rusts.

RIC S. BASTASA
i Am Not Honest Completely As You Expect Me To Be

it is like my test do not anticipate this for an answer because it can be that. i do not go for filling in the blanks for that would be too easy neither will i ask you to enumerate for how can you ever have a good memory, i go for an essay
the one that ask for justifications where white can be black and black white
with a person like me and like you based on the need and our desires
reasons abound like a bunch of ripe grapes sweet sour
we pick them all, make the wine, ferment, and then we sit like lovers
drinking our inventions.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Merely Human

Thus far I've spent my evenings in Hovd translating additional poems by poet L. Olziitogs. I post here one of my favorites from her book The Practice of Loneliness (Ганцаардлайин Дасгал) in its original and first draft English versions.

***

Улыхахаадабийугэдгээмэдэгуунимранаагэрснуюбороошнйдаровэрдєргээнухэлмөгценгөболоошингоныжиргээхэлмөгцөгөлөөгөэдгээнухэлмөгцадаг

Бихүнлбишдөрэлзэухийнцагтарахарныжигэдгээнухэлмөгцадаг

Охийнэмгэддээддэг

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
I look at a mountain and know that I am mountain I observe mist and perceive that I am cloud After rain sprinkles I sense that I am grass As soon as the sparrow's twittering begins, I remember that I am morning

I am not merely human

When a star flares up I know that I am darkness As soon as girls shed their thick winter clothes, I remember that I am spring
When I smell only longing from every person in the universe My ever more tranquil heart understands that it is a fish's I am not merely human

Under a multi-colored sky the immense VOID, From today on I, only...

© Lisa Fink, 16 August 2007

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Old And I Am Not Nasty

hello baby sarah,
i am just experimenting on this craft, an art, i am not old, and i am not nasty, i am just an experimental poet, or trying to be one,
nothing personal, my daddy is dead, and so is my mommy, grandpa too,
i am the fourth of the family of five,
got a brother who is a seaman a sister as political activist, another sister who is a probation officer, the other is jobless don't know but i just feel like writing, though i am not sought or read by many,
this is pure love of the craft, i don't spread my legs and i don't ask you to do the same thing for me, i got mine, long, hairy legs, muscled duo, ready for another art, i won't ask you, but you may ask me, with all respect and courtesy,
i am.

your reader, with the inability to appreciate what you are doing, but let me try, who knows, if i become dumb and deaf, blind and paraplegic, for the meantime, thanks for commenting, nothing hurts, nothing makes me inferior if i do not allow it.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Running Away Anymore...

i should have not loved you, i think, i would have been happier without you.

i should not have pursued a dream, you see, here i am, as you think, i am broken.

i have loved being alone, people think, i am sick, and they always make all these advices...which i have followed.

The old woman
of the village says
she holds wisdom.

that old woman keeps on
saying,
young man follow nature, it shall teach you what you are and who you are and everything will be all right.

I have lived
that long, there were weird wishes then, but i pursued nature.

i am both alive and dead.
i am now both human and
animal.

somehow i feel something that i am not me.

where is the god in me? where is this redeeming
divinity?

i am sitting upon a stone
outside the house

soon it will rain.
clouds are dark,
and heavy

but i am not running away anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Saying This With Finality.

i see you write,
i listen to your voice when you tell me that what you have written
is a poem about your life, i see you dance
and i thought you were all right you never ask me to listen while you cry
if you ask, i could have given it time, and i could have given you a hug,
the last thing i heard was that you ran away, jump over the bridge and there, you were gone.

your body was recovered and prayers were offered.
i was there listening to the prayers and their songs.

we lost you. we never had the best of our times.

if you listen to me and my poetry, which i have kept as a secret from you,

you could have told yourself that you can do much better than me.

well, i am not saying this with finality.
i am still alive, and still writing.

i will tell you perhaps, when i cross my next bridge

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Telling You That I Am Right

my only choice is to talk, and it is not even loud, it is a careful whisper not even to your ear, because i know for sure that you can hear and see,

my choice is to hurt, because i have the truth and it is like a sword, it kills,

forgive me but i am only a tool, and they all use me
to strike at the center of it all, ah, forget it, just like what i said when we first met, i have nothing to say actually.

RIC S. BASTASA
that night
the image of an old church arrives late
there is no priest
there

my gallbladder is full and i let it go

i could be the groom waiting for the bride but it is only a wish

then the image of an old house flashes in my mind later

i wake up
switch on the light at the headboard the clock reads 2 pm

i could have been a black butterfly
the one the old women of the house dread

but i cut it off
i promise them
i do not want to be a pain
in their asses
anymore

i am not that good
enough
at killing them
with what i cannot be.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Not Yours....

my face has misled you my eyes specially are not the best tour guides of this journey

it is your journey still that worries me

no end

you wish to enter the door of my mind you cannot

it is closed with the best locks i have imagined

there is no window to my soul my eyes are not what they call them to be

do not do anything they can only be useless attempts they can even be choking my being

you may kill me in an instant with the very first question in your mouth

let go
do not hold anything in your hand stay beside me rest your head upon my shoulder as we watch the setting of the

sun

disregard the idea relish the feeling

i come and i go

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
any moment from now and then

because
i am not yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Nowhere Now.

papa loved the poor and he let them live in his land
there was this vagabond.
he said he knew how to fish and papa bought him a boat and the net
and the man lived on the shore of papa's land where coconut trees grow beside the sea for they love salt.

he did not live that long to hear from them what happened after.

the poor sometimes are not correct.
they are bound by their poverty in spirit.
bound by their tragedy when they were once children.
their trauma are chains of their afflictions.
unable to rise from their calamitous past.

papa became an alcoholic.
mama did not understand how this matter came into being.
they were like a river which changed course and
split.

when papa was buried i prepare the eulogy.
not much people. the poor were not there. we were not that rich but papa always shared what he had.

papa wanted to believe that everything done turned out good.
i want to think that he was right.

look at me, i tell the children by the sea.
i am that empty shell. Press me to your ear.
My song is strange and you will ask me where i come from.

i am nowhere now.
I Am Of The East And You Are Of The West

i am a man of the east and i am muddy

you are the man of the west and you are shiny

but that is not our main difference i do not look for said difference or any other kinds of differences on an endless enumerations i do not say you're guilty i am not saying i am innocent i do not say that you are the murderer i am not saying that i am the victim i do not say that you're a waste i am not saying that i am this stinking garbage waiting to be burned i am not saying that you're the eagle and i am this monkey or this prey, a chick, to a hawk, the predator of the sky i am not saying that you're the alligator and i am this gazelle drinking water on the river that you claim you own and that you have the right to eat me whole that you are the shark of the food chain and i am the dolphin that you are the sun and i am just a cloud drifting by your strong winds far from it

i do not condemn
i keep my silence and you keep your gaze.

i am looking for our similarities our sad eyes
I Am One Of All Of You

it is when i listen that the grasses begin to grow again to make the hills and pastures those far ones

greener than ever

and women all over
think that i am an excellent lover hot as Mexican chili not because of my bottom but because of my ears

an elephant does not look that bad after all
and the one with the widest ears have become
the favorite of the circus ah, the lonely people of this world they do not need ice cream or coca cola

what they need are blank spaces where they can spread their woes the beauticians after all have outlived the use of shrinks women go there in those social parlors

not to have their hairs or nails fixed and colored they are there for the needed talk and the laughter

i was born to listen and i live myself on that edgeless frames i listen
i give more space for guests
i open my heart to show them that i too knows how to bleed

and then i changed
i become one with the world one of those stars
part of the moon's entourage parcel of emptiness now filled with the meaning of purposeful
silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Part Of The Burden

into the green pasture we all walk
and look for the milk from the breasts of the cows we drink the milk of the years and the scores

we soon shall know that our memories are small places for us to live
some more

we become streams at night in dreams
far away
we become so absorbed in our work
throughout the day

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Pissed Off

So they planned a reunion a gathering of friends a reminiscing of the past a recollection of who we once were wild and carefree
in those days revolutionaries burning night candles immersing trembling feet on the water just to keep eyes waking
and then making most of the hay on those sun shining days of our lives

and now
earning money more and more money though still honestly

i want to come and be a part of
all of you
rags turning to riches fools becoming wise poor to rich guy
children of the farm to executives in the city

but i finally got pissed off when this reunion turns out nothing but another fund raising to a fraudulent scheme (to a certain extend i supposed)
i am telling you
money is always suspicious and big fortunes have always crimes behind them

don't tell me that money too can root out evil contrary to the common belief that money is the root of all evil

shall we debate it, my friend?
hand me the money, so much money, and i will tell you how i become changed

I am not that kind who shall bid for the highest donation and then impress everyone that i am making good in my present life
and that i am paying back for all my crimes

P.S.

don't say anything
i am not done yet.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Proud To Say

the horrors of life, we were there to confront all the horrors of life, at first it was a struggle to be free and then it is not anymore it has become a lifestyle and so we get used to all these horrors and they are not horrors anymore they become facts that we face everyday without anymore the fear these everyday every minute we conquer them with nothing but a blank face this numbness that chews what seemingly is horrible at first but now they have become us.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Raising A White Flag

A truce
Stop pounding my head Bullets of lies
Do not penetrate
Truth proof vests

I am raising the white flag
Of truth
Let us stop this war of lies Keep your face, save it

I’ll keep my own reality This is my own territory

You take fantasy land,
Some fairies, wizards, and elves.

Keep the face of Cinderella

To keep the peace, we will Provide you the prince.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Ready…..

When i come back
the room is empty
i am looking for the reasons

those decorated ones with pretenses

and excuses and i am glad

you cleaned it up
and i am coming

with authenticity
cool,

look at me,
i have an empty mind

feel me,
i am ready.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Real, You Can Touch Me.

i do not live upon a dream
i cannot live so well
in one of those magical rooms of that castle in the
sky

i live here
upon the floors of what is real white sands slipping from the hands of my five fingers
i sleep in this bed
of reality
my pillow this conscience of every hour
of my days

i do not exchange the roughness of the touch of your hands to what is still ideal coming from that future that is yet
to come

what i have is minimal imperfect
what you dream is colossal and well thought of as perfect

i do not envy you
mist upon a mountain
i am the dew upon a leaf
real
glowing to the lights of packet sun
i am
what you can touch and smell and
see
what you can mold
with the skin from your tongue i am massive as a storm that can blow away the walls of your house
do not be afraid
i am for change
and for the better
i do not exempt
destruction
it is one of the steps of the stairs
towards the magnificence of that heavenly dwelling.

RIC S. BASTASA
all your leaves are dead

the strong winds blow them all
away from you

in extreme heat
your fingers pray to
the clouds
in surrender

today i am living
what shall i tell you?

i may have feet
i may have the mind
yet i feel just like you to the many places
i have gone
i have not really
moved out even for once

i am rooted to you
in the desert of
my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Rude

I am in the midst of writing about my life And here comes Someone interrupting me

She rings the doorbell Sounding like what she tells you is very important Like what she is bringing you Heaven and earth

You open the door
And ask her

She is selling herself
It isn’t fine. I am rude.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Seeing The Movie

dawn, alone, i sit in one of the corners it is empty, and there is silence creeping all over the walls like some millipedes,
stare has become mossy, and eyes opening like a crack of light on the wall around me,
sleep has become a word too elusive for my understanding,
i close my eyes only to become a river, waiting to enter into the mouth of the sea, i wait, only to see the unfolding of the movie
of my life

i am the villain and soon the hero shall take the sword and kill me and they all those who wait for the ending love the suspense the thrill and like much the musical score and the flow of the story perhaps, it is only me who did not like it and so i stopped it.

who likes a villain to be the victor at the end?
surely, they wouldn’t.

but i am the maker of the film and i decide how it shall end.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Singing The Songs Of The Rivers

i am singing the songs of the rivers and my notes flow like the rage of the the flood of the waters rushing and rushing all wanting immediately to be with you passing through the mouths
between us

you are the sea of deep desires and i am singing the songs of the rivers i flood into you and be lost forever in love i take the inevitable destination of losing myself and be part of this universal longing

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am So Sorry For You....

yesterday
you remember you were never really an important part of their fabric, for they are a family, and they do things only for themselves and you are there taken for granted.

you had no choice then, but to stay with them, not even as a decor of their house, but an unwanted pest, which of course, by previous indebtedness, they cannot just get rid of you until you surrender, but as i said, you really had no choice but just to be with them for the meantime that you have no wings, no backbone, no feet, and you feel just like those not considered essential, ordinary stick regular wind, always unseen.

Until time comes rewarding you because of your sacrifices.....

your wings will take you anywhere. The world is your playground, everyone else, becomes the same, just like the way you were treated but which you do not wish to remember anymore...

how easily you can forget, now, you treat yourself the way you were treated before. Unable to see your essence. Cruel to everyone. Even wanting to punish those who you think are innocent.

all is fair. all is vain. all is useless. meaning is meaningless. you have never seen the blueness of the skies and the seas.

rock you hit on your head.
your hands are as dumb as your feet.

this stream of consciousness, without reason, without images. just fleeting and free.

believing in the randomness of words.
beyond meaning. just the sound of ticking and clicking and
nothing.

you wasted your time for this.
i am so sorry for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am So Sorry....

must have i forgotten
that you are in control of my life?

why did i doubt? Why did i not call your name at the first instance?

my seas had been stormy all my boats sank. The winds too strong the houses are carried away.

what is left is only myself in this desert. I see the moon at night. And i remember you.

you, the owner of everything.
i am so sorry.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Sorry Voltaire

so sorry
voltaire dear
i have misquoted you

thanks to
adria aka claire dasani..

my sincere appreciation

Ph. D. in Literature,
oh my!

forgive
my ignorance
i crack....

nuts!

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Sorry....

so you really read my poems?
are you then
reading me?
are you going inside my heart and mind?
are you a blood corpuscle now traveling inside my veins?
are you another strange thought on a journey to my brain?
are there lapses or
synapses?
do you see my heart beating inside
my body?

i guess i have to say
i am sorry

it is never me.
I am the other people.

I am the old man who lost a house
I too am the old woman who lost a son
in the war
I am too the child
abandoned in the street

Sometimes i am
the moon resting on the bosom of a river

Last night i was the
sea breeze
refreshing drying the tears
of a woman
abused Tonight i am someone else that i met in the street

soon i will choose whether i should be a carpet or the tick

so will you still read me?

you want to enclose me in my own work?

sorry, you called the wrong number.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Still Thinking

we have not talked for a long time
now
and you are here
back
and i tell you
i miss you so you compensate
with miss you too
i am still thinking
what to say something about love perhaps

but there is none
i may say it without meaning

i think i have nothing to say for now
i am thinking about other things
other birds other flowers i am thinking like the deep blue
sea
with the devil
within

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Stone....

i did not find love,
it came to me, it did not count much,
it wooed me
i did not take heed to its calls, i have no choice then this pretense of loving, and this prayer that time would be changing and forgiving, i have never known what true love is,
it pretended it arrived and i pretended loving it, with all embrace, and kisses, and loving,
but soon the truth finds its shadow fuses itself with its body, and it becomes one,
and love finds me but i have become numb and blind and deaf,
and i have never known love,

and so forgive me.
i am stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Sure This Is Your Plan To Get Me To Leave Or Change My Name... Not Gonna Work Randy.

hello adria
i am not Randy, i am Ric please do not leave
we like you
here

let us make poetry work forget ourselves
our names

it is my real name and i do not have any other to make lies and decorate it with more excuses

i am just this plain poet playing with words
because that is what they want me to do i was so serious and they all laughed

now i am laughing
and damn
you are too serious

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Taken

my mama
had long warned me
about the
catastrophe
that happens
when the sea
marries the
sky
but i did not listen
to her

the tornado is here
and i am
taken.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Taken.

woman you draw a line turning wavy and crooked unto itself
closing in

you have become another exclusive
being,

and you enclose me out of your world

and i have become one happy spectator

i am taken.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Telling You. Poetry.

what cures the flu?
what drives away the boredom of bed?
what makes you sleep so soundly on a couch even without someone to hug?
what makes you occupied when there is nothing worth doing for the night? what tells you that it is alright not to say something?
what makes you feel so comfortable with yourself? what makes them feel betrayed for not posting what they expect to know for tomorrow's examination in law?
what makes you think that you are much better than the rest of the flock? what makes your friends think that they do not know you anymore?
what makes you isolated and yet strong and stable like an island of Nonoc glittering red at night like fire in the middle of darkness? what makes you wonder why are you doing this kind of non-essential pursuit?
what makes an irrelevant thought relevant?
the impertinent gesture pertinent?
the immaterial material?
what makes you feel the bitterness of tea makes you remember beer with her makes you feel like you are a stone sinking in the deepest part of the marianas and yet so calm feeling the nearness of death hearing the music of a funeral march and then wake up and you feel the plumpness of your muscles
and say
this is a different experience and write again i am ok. i am doing fine. i am just into another exploration and that this is temporary and that tomorrow i will be back real as a book starting over on the page that i left back into the arms of the affairs of the state upon a sensible and inanimate stare like any other.

eetc...

i am telling you.
Poetry.
I Am The Man

i am the man
who has a puppet
under the control of my strings

the children watch
and they all
enjoy
that is something
too funny

the old people including the middle aged
understand
this reality

they do not laugh anymore they are angry
to the world that they live in they are the puppets of someone who holds the strings of their lives.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am The Most Ordinary Person That You Meet On The Street

Reading my poems, my essays, my comments, my biography She thinks
I am a manic Depressive
one infested with a bipolar
personality
neurotic
to the utmost psychotic

insane crazy lost bewildered out of this world out of touch in limbo unleashed unsheathed out of touch out of this world o my god

o my!

She is wrong
Completely wrong

I am the most normal, ordinary person that she can meet on the street
In her normal life

I work in an office
With a coat and tie
My hair is shiny
With gel
My hands soft
With ease and comfort
I smell perfume
My nails are clean
You cannot even tell
That these are the fingers That compose
The hand that composed

Those poems
Political, sadistic, masochistic Love, libido, desire Nature, carabaos, birds Violence, war
Irony, paradox
Rape, murder
Food and shit
White sands
And long long vacations

I have the perfect smile
The male version of mona lisa I have the poise of David not Goliath

And you wonder this man is not the poet in the poems that he Writes
I expect him to have The looks of a madman Scattered hair
Looking shit
Foul shit
Emaciated
Eyes with bags Insomniac
Hot tempered

Oh my God
I have the face of angel today And the people always tell me I am God’s gift to them

On this I agree Indeed I am no madman

I am a trance in that poem I am the medium of the higher voice I am simply an instrument And as I write every word I know nothing
I am not responsible for every word in my brain I am a tool
I am a knife
I am a gun
I am a chewing gum
I am a boat
I am a motorbike
I am simply the stenographer for every word that I write

For I am merely a voice From those who cannot speak I am merely the messenger For those who are souls I am just a body
To their wisdom

I speak
What I have is only the courage to be an instrument

When all of them are gone
I am dumb
I am myself
I am the most normal person that you meet

In fact, indeed, in truth,

I am just a nobody.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is something in people that clashes with how you see things how this world behaves or ought to be shaped by your hands and spoken and you keep it to yourself like a pebble inside your palm which serves nothing somehow except that it is there for the keeping you want to say something true but which can hurt really that bad so you choose to swallow your saliva and learn the taste of this mucus thing and then you see her all messed up you wonder how she feels and those who surround her there are faces that show sorrow which you suspect may not be true as you figure out motives, and schemes and practical results you see i want to say something which could have been said directly and be easily understood but there is a choice here to conceal and to be civil about a fact so she passes by your side and you give a wry smile shake her hand and put a little pressure to address condolence and you say no word at all you keep your mouth tightly shut you stand and take your exit passing over her sorrow and at the end you say you do not want to judge but here you are saying to yourself something is wrong and there is really something wrong with what she did you condemn in silence and the word forgiveness cannot be found in any page in that story that you want to tell but which you can't because they are still alive and you do not really know what happens next
who is right and who is wrong time stands there shaking its head as though saying 'i am the only one who has the right to say the word'...and i agree.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Through With It

'Existentialists are monumentally and monotonously serious; they don't like to joke.' Wislawa Szymborska i am through with this seriousness, they all think that i do not know how to joke, look at me closely are not my lips big enough to be your clown?

are not my arms longer than my legs do i not look like a chimpanzee to you as you read my english poetry?

look at my eyes bad, these eyes are bad, with thick eyelashes and thicker eyelids looking like the beard of the walrus how can i see myself in the eye of indifference from the point of view of my master i will always look like a slave a second-class citizen in this modern world that claims that discrimination had long been dead and buried look at me i am no longer human. i am no longer myself. i have always imitated you mime. puppetry. this is practically all about it. and i guess it is time to stop. i am through with all these.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Time

i am time, more than that, i do not have only hands i have feet, but like time, i only move on, i cannot stop, i do not think anymore, i just run
and i go round and round not moving that far, i only move in the mind, like time, i do not see, i have long plucked my eyes from my sockets, but i still feel, like time, i know what darkness is what coldness is, and what anticipation is, i sense the loneliness of my journey the eternity of my dreams, i heal because i forget, and there is one thing that i wish, like time weary of its round-the-clock work, it wants rest, but there is none, it wishes death, but still unknown.
i am time, and like the river i flow, like the mirror, i reflect the lights of the world, uncluttered, unfettered, unbeholden to no one and there you are wanting to hold me, like sand, i slip from the fingers of this world, to space they say i bend, i tell no one,
i am always moving,
and gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Tired

and i imagine her laughing

as though
she is sure of herself

as she removes the patches
covering her eyes

and she tells me
that i am embarrassed

or that i must be embarrassed at the end

she is the woman
so sure of herself

when she wakes up
everyone has left her

for good and they are not coming back anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Tired Of The Rhyme I Am Tired Of The Rhyme

i am tired of the rhyme and rhyme just to rhyme with you at the expense of my thoughts at the loss of my spirit at the defeat of my spontaneity my streams flowing and stopping looking for the proper word that sounds like the previous word until i am drowned by the rage and upsurge of my emotions just let me be myself let me flow like a river without the banks restraining me in the canalization of my dreams i will be nothing but a line parallel to yours and they do not really look and sound right i am afraid to say i am sorry i will not be beautiful with you i will be beautiful alone so alone in my own solitude.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Tired Of The Usual Agony

tell me another story the one which you cannot tell inside a motel where you hold a cigarette on one hand and a bottle of gin on the other do not attempt on another one that begins with

once upon a time
for sure i don't like it and i won't like you beginning such a kind of trash to tickle my dead senses ooops, tell me not a story about pity and sympathy, the one that you always tell to your bed partner when the storms come and in the middle of its harshness you have nowhere to go nothing to do except spend your time wisely in another hotel with a partner whose name you never bother to ask or remember as there is no significance do not tell me about agonies i had them all and will have them soon again or sooner than soonest they always come to a person like me do not describe to me the agony of death or torture or broken hearts or crashing economies or incoming wars between this government and the rebels and soldiers on a coup against their fellow soldiers at the military academy.

do not tell me that, now that we are here inside this room where our clothes and faces do not really matter except our bodies emerging from a hot shower where every moment counts as escape from other agonies that we have mastered

do not tell me about the agony of our times high prices of gas and still rising the possibilities of retrenchment and closing of some companies the possibility of this government getting bankrupt and the working people on mass strikes topping
of a government and the putting up of another by another superpower
out there

do not tell me about such kind of agonies
i want
an agony with you, the warmth of your hands like cinders all over my body the weight of your body over my body the kisses of your tongues that will not make me breath sucking me as though i know eternity your legs blocking mine like i have no way of finding an exit from this prison or labyrinth

this is the agony i want for the moment give it to me and i will give it to you in mutuality

agony for agony

then we shall forget ourselves our faces fade in the dark and then at least we sleep lost in our naked dreams let the storm rage outside us while we make more stories about flesh and moaning glories inside this motel

without us knowing even the room number or the color of the curtains

or when another morning comes slowly on the window panes

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Touched And Will Not Be Able To Sleep

he touched her thru the fingers
of his poem
about the deep
night and the sleepless one
a true story about
him and her
writing, deep,
dee into the night,
about sleeplessness,

why?
did he not tell her once that he never sleeps?
did she not believe him?
did he not tell her that his poems come in the depths of darkness from the dark recesses of his dimming soul?
at a time when twilights have not even sprouted
yet?

that his deep thoughts
come like some strangers capricious and whimsical and on shorter notice leave without goodbyes?

now, the cycle grips him again, he writes unceasingly like he is being chased by his own ghosts,
like he is one cat
disturbed by the shadow of his own rebelling tail, he shall write,

and if she too
is not sleeping at all,
tonight
then she must write,
like him as if both of them are twins in thoughts, and if there is nothing to be written, why not read and tell him what he is blindly writing?

perhaps,
he will soon understand his very own tragedies perhaps she can figure out the answers in his written works

she must touch him, like her brother or even like her lover and even kiss him and he will sleep, perhaps, soundly, tamed by the softness of her love perhaps, the answer to all his questions.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Trying To Write A Love Poem

it is about my ring finger manipulating my right nipple and i am imagining more than what i can to save me from another sleepless night

soon i will have just what i need a satisfaction without having to molest someone else not to despise

this love poem is a fake.
it is utilitarian, narcissistic, and too unkind.
i refuse to understand it our negligence is mutual. you are sleeping in bed, snoring, and embracing yourself feeling cold and coping up with anything to warm you your own hands folded on your sagging breasts.

i am writing a love poem with my shoes still not detached from my feet.
i am imagining someone else.
Erotic like my own ring finger pressing my nipple.

i may sleep beside you, and you may, in sleep embrace me, and savor the warmth of my torso,

but i am no longer yours. I am someone else.
I am an erection to the pillow No more, no less.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Way Behind You

i am way behind you
with no intent to pass by you i am taking time to smell your scent
and trace your footstep so i may finally find my way back home

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am What I Am What I Am....

the speed casts upon us a flash of what we have forgotten who we are slaves of traditions geisha of oppression bars and locks, and meatless contentions, just this noontime

everything flashes on the window of the car unable to piece what all these means i finish the journey go straight to the usual paths and when i go down and talk to the guards of the gates
i am met with indifference asking for myself to make an identification of who am i

something too philosophical analogous to the commands of the gates of Delphi
know thyself

and i remember the burning bushes as i pretend to be another kind of a god, and i utter the words,

i am what i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am With You

on your defeat i am
with you
i am your consolation
your excuse
and voice

let me give you the soothing words
of a poem
that is never read by anybody

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am Writing A Poem That You Can Understand So Easily this is not to insult your intelligence or your sensibility your capacity for managing angst, to see the wholeness of the matter in the eye of the needle where the camel enters where you claim you have seen it, dos, this is it, the quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog near the bank of the river the quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog near the bank of the river the quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog near the bank of the river the quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog near the bank of the river the quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog near the bank of the river the quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog near the bank of the river do you not find wisdom in it, it is filled with questions to be answered:

why is the fox quick
why is it brown? why does it jump on a lazy dog? and is the dog really lazy? is this not offensive to the dogs in the royalty? and why should the river be near?
and this bank of the river? is this where the dog lives? or the fox or the dog, do they relate to the word quick and lazy?

i tell you, there is wisdom in every word, no matter where you place it.
every verb serves its purpose in giving us action, every question calls for an answer and every period serves the purpose it is intended to be.

rest.

the purpose of an easy poem is to understand it, and so the poem is written in the most familiar language that you know and speak,

period.
i don't want to understand things really, there is no point there.

period.

some poems are not meant to be understood, they are only meant to be read.

period.

some poems are not meant to be digested, they are meant to make us full, even only for a while.

period.

some poems are written by Someone Else, and this writer does not even understand it.

period.
rest........

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am You Are

sky
you're too high for me
heaven
are you?

i look for you
clouds
behind me and then

as i wait you
rain
and i take a glimpse
the mirror
my horizon shows me
two faces

of pleasure and pain of bliss and agony

in this state of our fusion sky and earth

blue sky brown earth round and flat

i am. you are.

near and distant.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am wondering if we survive the heat, if the cold having been neglected, and its fading of grays, remaining unexplained by the roughness of those stones, i am wondering what is this wandering all about, moving from one mountain to another, crossing another streams of thoughts, jumping from one border to another and marking the seas we left with the strokes of our fingers
i am wondering what will become of us stuffed, wooded, anesthetized skeletal, deprived of our dreams of skin, and fresh flesh, i am wondering what becomes of these arms, unable to hold you once again like once when the fish inhabit the pond, when the lotuses bloom and give the colors of its hollowed flowers to the moon
i am wondering if wonder still saves us from this desert of
affections,
i ask a diminishing, i forgive nothingness, i am scheming a plan for escape a dignified departure, and you smile, not knowing what goes really inside this tunnel pretending still to have light at the end when there is none
when nothingness is still full of its uncommitted contents.

RIC S. BASTASA
I am, with impurities so tainted My skins stained, my mind blighted My feet muddy, my body Murky with sweat, my reputation Besmirched, and night so well With darkness hug me, I sometimes Shake and rattle my bones, If I am still whole, still intact,
With all these impurities and Mechanical defects, my spiritual Brokenness, these fractured feelings, I am so tainted, I am so dirtied, I am not scared and estranged And stranded, I am, I so assume,
Just being real, and compliant With what a human being Should be, in shades of black White, and some taints and stains And tinting shades of colors Some sounds of pebbles Shaking in a tin can, some Gargles, some spits, some Itches on my head, some silent Nods of my usual acceptances To all these, I clasp my hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Am......

i
transform
myself

i do not create
myself

i do not destroy
myself

i do not have
that power

i am ripe
as a red luscious
fruit

i am not my curse
oh i cease
to be just a word

or a work of
art

beyond wood and metal
beyond
my own canvass,

i fall

so gently

and surrender

to my root

RIC S. BASTASA
I And Thou

FROM my simple understanding you only exist because you are nice to me as i am also nice to you as the world is nice to all of us nice in its usual connotation smooth smile simpler synthesis like you offer me an orange that i squeeze and suck every pulp every drop when things turn sour when fungus strikes when everything is rotten there is nothing more to desire i need a brick wall to bump my head there will be cracks and then it is my turn to be gone that is the exit that i am speaking about myself there is only I, BECAUSE

THOU is simply a delusion there is no such under the state of affairs i cannot even touch it even in my little imagination

RIC S. BASTASA
I Ask A Very Simple Request

i ask a very simple request that you write me a poem about one that makes me ejaculate...

but you are so dry.

probably you do not understand what a horny poem is all about.

bull!

RIC S. BASTASA
I Ask Nothing

from you i shall ask nothing the way the sun makes its presence felt the fields of grass have nothing to ask as gently as the morning arrives handing air and light in that sleepy room
what shall i ask from you some more?
memories? oh no more we had some we had more and so perhaps what we can ask for ourselves perhaps perhaps is just a brief
goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Ask You Friend

i ask you my friend

take leave and give yourself a chance take leave of that self caused, self inflicted pains to rise up from such a depression

use your hands as lever to move & take this world back to its orbit give yourself a chance to choose love and happiness

the good and the
beautiful

surely my friend there are more things to do in this life: in your backyard the flowers are waiting to be watered your roof needs some repairs your faucets leak and need some immediate attention for sealing surely my friend fears are unfounded and if there be foundations, there is a need now to shatter them

surely my friend there are more important feelings than fear and surrender triumph waits patiently and hope look at you from a distance

surely my friend, you must see how this house must stand again you are the pillar that we lost and all of us are waiting.

i ask you my friend to be the rebuild of all our dreams.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Assure You.

the sand has expanded its territory the sea is getting more shallow the vines that crawl on the sand tease the waves into a play you are into some ways finding how to forget how to heal the 50-year old man has a wound and the fat woman is about to cry there is a big bottle of beer in the basket and some butterscotch and crackers all of you are crazy about the first sunset and the bigger waves at the end of the day the one-year old baby is naked and holding tightly on the mother's breast i may be lost too just like the rest here but this is only temporary. I assure you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Bait With My Heart

'When you fish for love, bait with your heart, not your brain.' Mark Twain (1835-1910)

since i shall fish
for love,
so i have love
as bait
not my brain
which has given me more pain
than pleasure
the thoughts
that shy away from the true meaning
of love
looking into the dictionary
of words
rather than deeds
because precisely
God has invented the hug
so we may learn to love sans
the uselessness of words.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Beg You My Friend To Draw Her Back To Me

If a friend true to her
Is you
Is there any way Hidden from me
A gaze
perhaps
That you can do
To draw her back
To me?

RIC S. BASTASA
I Begin Again

and so i begin again from the cold winds of my desert nights where there is no moon where there are no stars in the skies i rest on the sands and lay my head there waiting for tomorrow

tonight i must again think of you the face that makes my blood move like running water on dried river beds on emptied wells on fields cracked by too much dryness tonight i recall again the first kiss from your innocent lips your soft hands holding my body your words of love comforting me to always move on and always be strong and confident deep in this lonely night

i close my eyes
i enter another world before tomorrow comes this world of dreams where we kiss and make love again for another beginning

it is dark and so silent and then the desert begins to sing

RIC S. BASTASA
I Believe

i believe that in the novel written about us it shall not end on the last sentence with a period

i ask the Great Writer to at least end it with a comma the silence of the comma the suspense of the comma and the exclamation point of the Hallelujah!

I do not prefer the eternal rest i pray for that Bliss.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Believe In Evolution....

i believe in evolution, and the best evidence is here, myself evolving, my hands used to be moss, now they are fries of milk fish, tonight they will be bear cubs, be ready, tonight my head will turn into a Chinese dragon, a little reflections a thought of a yellow river soon my body will turn into a koi, and there will be a pond ready, i will be slippery and even without feet for i now have fins and scales, a little more i will learn to jump into wings and cross this wall and join the mountain where the tree of knowledge

grows,

there is evolution
in reverse
for of all wishes
i only want to be just another
stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Belong To This Group Of Men

i belong to this group of men with eyes that look like full moons gazing at some stars not just seeing the glitter but minding the faults as well of the lights that sometime fail and then mete the penalties for failing to live up to the demands of light and orbit against darkness and the bad things that sometimes loneliness can inflict upon us we are human we believe in rules that we make and we impose the standards of our actions

i belong to this group of men tasked to measure the value of each man his strengths and his weaknesses the chambers where the rules are laid the hammers that must be be banged the souls that must be made to suffer the segregation of those unfit from these society of fools i belong to this group of self-righteous men for years and years i will be here not counting the cost of my strangeness this alienation from day to day this segregation of me this falling and falling and falling far from you i have no feelings anymore i am all mind

i am broken i am all mind i am looking for the images of softness
and gentleness and loftiness i long for the humility of sinfulness teach me how can i be human again?

I Better Sleep

to learn to live without anticipation

to live without fear
what does that future bring?

i know now.
it is this.
today, now,
this moment

that train that runs towards
the future
is giving us creeps

this is the couch
i am in here
i guess i better sleep till arrival.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Breathe Poetry

i confess, i am the master and i am asleep for years and years because the curse is there hiding my name in the tomb of fear and shame

i am the master who has not used the power of words for years and years because my tears were frozen inside my eyes and i have not tasted salt inside the niche that was built for me now you come into my life like the winds of the spring bringing me the flowers and the rain and the sound of the river and the songs of the little birds the hush of your sorrow has given me rebirth from the deep sleep.

i am the master, and i wake up with words buried inside my lips. Now i breathe poetry inside your nostrils, and you too become alive.

come hold my hand, and our shadows fuse as one.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Bring You Tidings

i bring you food
you set them aside
you are telling me
you are not hungry

i bring you water
you set it aside
and tell me
you are not thirsty

i bring you stories
you do not listen
you tell me
you do not need any of those

you ask me
to bring you justice
fast and swift and commensurate

now you are thirsty
now you are hungry
now i am listening
to your story

RIC S. BASTASA
I Call It Prayer.

it is when you do nothing like sitting upon a hill looking at the sea and feeling the breeze and letting everything caress
you.

it is this emptiness emptying upon itself

i call it prayer.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can

sacrifice church bells to the craze of my fingers ey they know what they can do and will be doing

as i watch the screen words are climbing their own steep mountains.

they know their names and they are screaming their own chosen joys

to the heavens from the cliffs....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can Be Disastrous....

do not attempt to wear my shirt

it may be calamitous

do not steal my hands it will be disastrous

for what you desire to hold
shall turn to stone

what you kiss shall turn into a snake and it will bite you as it has bitten me

many times have i suffered escaped death like a magician what you eat

shall turn into wind

how can you be satisfied?
you shall be in eternal thirst and hunger no one has the power to fulfill your desires

or your dreams or your queries

do not borrow my pair of shoes
it can burn your feet it may cut your toes
into pieces

by now you must have wondered how i survive all my
years

you see it is not easy never been smooth and easy

i never lived a life like
that
and you may never believe it

now that i am old and shall die in any hour
of my choosing

burn everything i leave behind forget every memory that i have given you

my shoes, my shirt, my hands my mind, my dreams,

do not forget my eyes do not be misled by its visions burn them thoroughly and throw all the ashes to the far ocean
of this earth

do not fish there it can still be disastrous.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can Be My Own Galaxy

closed door.

everything not close,
open fingers.

closer hues,
like purple to red and violet,

eye are closely entwined, but not closed, ey may be close enough to resemble the kind of warmth and ambiance found within the nearness of their hues, but they know, on closer scrutiny, their differences, distinct as sand to sun, separable as clouds

to rain,

and you to me,
i am warm as red,
you are pink as desire,

we blend, i am fire and you are this cinder.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can Be Someone Else In The Faraway Place

in other places
i can be another person
i can be other than myself than you think you know on a paper where you think i fit more as a signature in black and white and in some likelihood of a tendril i can be a black bird perching upon a cable wire and you refuse to believe that i can stand the heat and be not afraid of the city lights and its electricity

in faraway places i can be a faraway tower it has more rooms than you think and there is no more directory where you can find a number of a room and say that i live there i can be someone else whom you meet along the street and you will not recognize me anymore as planned.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can Be The Other Possibilities....

since i have cut my roots and gathered all my leaves what remains of me is nothing but twigs and some branches they give me a name. i am a floating tree.

birds are asking if somehow we are genetically related.

i am mimicking the winds.
and we shall soon play our games.

now i can bark like a dog.

you see, i realized that i can be all the other possibilities.

only if i will it, then what i think becomes real.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can Dream Now....

now i am free

away from your numbers

away from your tips

away from your hold

now i am free

not as a bird
not as the wind
not as the kite cut off from the hold of your hand from that string

now i am free
and i am scrutinizing it why i say that now i am free perhaps because i can say what i want perhaps because i can do what i want now but what is it that i want to say really what is it that i really want to do with my life?

i am tired.
i am free because i want to sleep and i can sleep.

i can dream.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can Hear You

i am here i can hear you.
but just like them i need not bother.
we are all free
we have our own light freely given we are responsible for our own lives
now
you too, no one can be responsible for you.
if you die, die alone.
if you cry, cry alone.
if you smile, and laugh, that is a decision.
if you die, that is a decision.
if you live, that is another decision. a choice.
an ocean of choices.
an ocean of choices over a continent of options.
take your pick
and be yourself.
me? i choose to live. i choose to be happy.
i choose to be responsible. i don't bother sad people or happy people.
I scratch my back when it itches.
i set the correct time for my ejaculations.
i sit and relax at my own pace.
i take a walk and breathe. I fill my lungs with so much air.
I float like a cloud. I jump like a grasshopper.
I see like the sun.
I fly like an eagle.
I get high sometimes and get so low sometimes but i care about myself and live my life the way i want it. i don't humiliate myself with making other people responsible for me.
I can do it.
I don't want other people to drive my car for me i have hands.
I don't let people open the door for me i have fingers.
I live my life. That is my business.
I am a breather, that is what i do.
When life does not have meaning anymore like a wall
i bump it on the wall and then i go.
I know where. I decide that too.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can Never Be Chinaski

i like him, in fact i have all his poems printed and every night before i sleep i read
chinaski
teaching me about his poetry

he talks
to me & that is enough of chinaski

i am
just myself, this man wanting also to talk to himself
in a

boring monologue
and i pretend
i too can write my own poems
and versions
of the

great chinaski

finally, i get tired pretending and imitating his kind of manly, hoarse, candid, direct straightforward voice
guts
firm, strong, determined words

i rise
from my weakness and stand naked before this mirror i am not chinaski and i can never be chinaski
i still have a well kept hair a smooth chin
i still keep some clean sheets of paper on my table a glass of water
to cool my throat
from this chaos

no empty bottles
filling my room or scents of whores and radio music of beethoven or mozart

i only have this silence pervading
still remembering and wondering

how can i start
being a chinaski
when i still keep being

me, oh, i am still me, and yes, perhaps, i still like this being me nobody

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can Never Get Out Of This

This flesh, its demands, its whims And caprices,
I despise, this flesh, but how can I Ever get out of this flesh, When this flesh is in me, Wrapped by my skin,
And loved by the senses of my mind
The taste of wet, the whispers I hear, The smooth touches I feel, the Sensual sights that I see, How I promise to be true to The longings of my pure soul To pure grace
And sublime wishes, as white as light flinging Seraphims and Cherubims, Hands praying in God’s garden, This flesh
Throbs and thrusts like sin, like demon’s Favorite poses and twists This flesh imposes, like these fidgety hands Arguing again, not wanting to be held, These hands now ready, willing For the caprices of my flesh, These hands shall now touch the secrets of The night and how my eyes pretend Not to know,
In such delights, they all now close.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can See It In Your Eyes

THE blue sea.
the black hole.
the whirlpool

THE me
memory,
The future
that is not still there.

IN your eyes,
is the world.

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
I Can Take Things Barefooted

when you left
your shoes down the stairs

i kept them

i wait and i am ready for your return

even if i have to jump over the fence

i can take things barefooted

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can Write About It, I Can'T Write Some More

that is the riddle of the sphinx, but i will make sure you cannot figure it out that your answer shall never be right, for i am the sphinx,
and i still do not want to die.

tell me all the lies so i may live some more.
i will keep this answer till the last breath of my life.
you shall never know it.

be human still, for i am half lion half bird sitting on a hill challenging those that pass before me killing them without pity you are the chosen one to kill me with an answer

you are the answer but you are blind still and too dumb for not loving me and so i live still perhaps forever,

for i am attuned to this pain of loving not and truly not loving still you, my secret, my truth, my death. i live, and only through lies, i live and only through your indifference you must not have the wit you must never learn to love for when this happens i shall be no more.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can’t Write Your Kind

Tried to but I can’t Fell short of courage
Talent
I have lost it and have not recovered Since then

I like you and want to be you You’re up there
I am here
I am not lost anyhow
Can still see what is wrong
What is right

That is all that matters See you soon

I am writing
Only for myself you know

RIC S. BASTASA
I Cannot Attend On Your Wedding Day....

The last time i saw you was when you were still a kid holding tightly tn your mama's skirt,

life has kept me busy constant travels make me forget plans are many mountains and victories are few like diamonds kept preciously inside
a locker,

and then i get a card and i open it.
you're getting married and it will be your grand day and that i must attend so that we can all be happier again but life has kept me busy constant travels make me forget

plans are many mountains
and victories are few like
diamonds kept preciously inside
a locker,

oh, i get puzzled, i forget faces and names because i want to stay here forever and there are so many things missing markers removed, boundaries kept i am old, and it is sad.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Cannot Be...

i cannot be always the guardian angel to your stupidity which like a female cow in heat somehow escapes from the fence when i begin to take my much needed sleep.

when that cat in your hand escapes to eat the moon i cannot always assume the body of the dog for in my own weakness i assume the shadow of the mouse sometimes i let you go and wish that you fall off from that cliff and die for my own good.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Cannot Wait For You

I cannot wait for you
for another thousand years
for now i have assumed the butterfly's body and and its white fragile wings in another minute can be blown away by the wind and then be all torn

at most i can only live and love you for only a day.....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can'T Add On What You Are Saying

there is the story of mommy eagle
you are on the sixth week of your pregnancy,
we, who had a sad story to tell
will remain silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can'T Stop The Rain From Falling

outside
you walk the path
away from me
you run
wanting to finish the episode
in a hurry
there is no
point turning back for you
to take the last
look at me....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Can'T Wait For You...

waiting makes me tense i am restless and i do not have the temerity to
be patient,

when i wait all things seem to run away from me and it is sickening to feel that i am the only one left out at the station

i hate the silence of the pavement when all of them step inside the box and then all their sounds and laughter fade away nobody wants to be left alone in a catacomb of helplessness no one wants to be dead and all alone feeling like a shattered rock and so i have decided that i must go with the crowd inside the train going nowhere.....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Choose The Latter

Reality fades lights die
switches turn off
a world may shrink
and some
shatter
into meaningless
bits

that is a fact
a law
that operates with or without us

everything is flitting
most flee
and have no plans
coming back

we are born
we get old
we die, and then what?

we can do nothing
about our flesh

we can do nothing
about the trees

but we can join the wind
and still be with the clouds again

on one hand reality and on the other imagination

i choose the latter.
I Choose The Questions

You think I am wise Giving you the questions that You cannot answer

On a wide domain of answers A question or two shall be taken

And you will answer them for me

Haven’t you tried thinking
If we shift roles

Ok, so you try asking the questions now I do not answer

I could have answered you Because I can, but I won’t

I think, I have become real myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Choose To Be Your Moon

i always console myself with the idea that i am not at all alone

there are too many of me, of us, that we all become one boring brew of liquefied images coffee flowing on the carpet and wetting it and there is a fume and the dust are captured on the stains what i feel now is the feeling that i do not want anything at all that i just write what comes to my mind without choosing

and i am bombarded with thoughts and i am always on a defensive stance a recipient always, passive and relaxed things that come like rain to an empty earthen vessel gives that feeling of fullness which is too pacifying to the weary mind then the vessel is filled with water and water pours out its liquid body

to the ground
to the grass to the canals racing to another path

we try to follow it it has myriad options and we are at a loss which way shall it be words are like that they pour upon our void others are blind and keep on talking about hair and heads and hands it is just myself that feel emptying and filling and running and taking the journey again what you see is the stillness of the body a shadow on the wall the night and rain sometimes come together

i choose to be your moon

and you are there looking at me i am full, your gaze empties me into a profusion of gentle dancing light on your face

i never said a word in the silence of my own understanding you are so far away like a fallen star.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Claim Reason....

inside the box
where i am also inside it with the rest
i see two human beings crying: one for joy
the other for sorrow

i am stoic. i look at each.
not shedding any tear
i claim reason.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Close My Eyes And Think Of You....

early morning
i take a walk to watch the growing plants
in the yard.

it is cold here
and peaceful.

a dog sleeps by
the door.

a cat licks its
hands.

a leaf falls from
the mahogany tree.

red ants are crawling up the mango
tree.

a wooden bench is wet with mist.

a soft wind blows
my hair.

i close my eyes
and think of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Closed The Door

it was me who had the courage to close the door behind my father's back, he was the lion coming from the mouth of the fish with an injection

he stings me inside my dream he inflicted the pain and i did not run from what i saw and felt but i know how to grow my beard and let my hair grow long like a forest my rage rise into a flood like my anger

i know where to go and gather strength and wait for years till i take my revenge i come back home offering flowers when he found rest
forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Come Back To This Wholeness Less The Cares.

there is a part in you that parts me into two

half of myself is not me anymore

the other struggles to be alive

i stare in the farthest wishing to end this dichotomy there is a sprouting bamboo in the forest

and i come back to this wholeness less the cares.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Come Running

i come running to you
my friend
for all those years
my arms have been so incomplete
without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Complete You And You Shall Lose Me.

there is use in giving you a blank space you make a stare

and when you see nothing you begin to see everything you have no use of me i am a blank stare

yet see me once and you can see everything in you i complete you and you shall lose me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Confess I Love The Kissing More Than Ever....

actually
there is more
joy
emphatically
in the closing of the eyes
and the prolonged kissing
rather than

you know what i mean

you felt it.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Be That Snake

been writing for quite long not anticipating for any change in me or this world not expecting any concrete return of this mental investment

i remember i once saw a snake which got bitten by another snake and looking for a cure went to the forest hoping to find the herb that must give it life

i could be that
who knows.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Be The Moon

i could be the moon
where you can be a body and a shadow

i could be a lake where the moon may shine and you can still be the body
and the shadow
and the voice

i could be a candle in the dark where you may put your hope and you can still be the body and the shadow and the scent

i could all be your moon your lake and your candle and you can still be the body and the shadow and you shall walk

under me (if i were the moon) and around me (if i were the lake) and you may have the power to put me off (if i were just a candle
in the dark

where you are the body and the shadow and the voice and by the mere sigh of your whimper

i may die

so i still prefer to be your moon or your lake so i can be your full light so i can be your mirror larger than your body not helpless to your shadow in silence, i still like to be myself not a slave, not someone whom you can just give away as easily as a flicker of a candle as fickle as you are

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Be The Most Hurting Footnote Of Your Loveless Existence.

i scan the pages
i was never a part of this book

i wrote a note
at the bottom of that torn page

just a scribble intended to be the map where you can find me

i do not exist here but i am beautiful as the last word of the page always meant as a syllable of that happy ending

i have my own world
in that dog-ear which you disregard
after a use, ...i was once a book mark of
you
but how can you not
remember?

find me, oh, i do not mind, if you can't.
i am always a part of your longing.
the missing link of your
future,
the harsh part which you must disregard because if you take the last glance
i could be the most hurting
footnote of your loveless existence.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Be Wrong

i accept the illusion after which i set it aside this could have been mine in my paradise
where the tree grows with luscious fruits and glossy leaves everything is cool here and delightful
i could have been more gentle
and then be drunk
and careless and i could have owned you like a piece of priceless art that i do not deserve
i wonder what happens when we both wake up in our naked view what if our eyes have mouths and exclaim ‘this is all wrong! ’ and the mouth in conspiracy have long silenced its manners without words because it understands
you.

i have carved in stone and it is still there in this arid desert love will not grow

i am wrong that shadow who knows how to kneel so carefully upon its own knees not minding the tease of ill wind show two purple flowers
to the sun
I Could Have

i could have kissed you on your lips and hugged you tight and caressed your breasts and licked your whole white soft body

that night all i did was simply imagine savoring your eyes
with my gaze
i did not even caress your hair
and touch
your finger

that night i was so foolish
when you left
i did not bother asking you to stay

i was so foolish
i simply wrote you this poem

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Been....

there are so many things
already that i have forgotten of which i may remember but always with regret

i could have been something else other than a hammer to a nail

i always dream of wings of a hawk claws of an eagle i still detest i could have been a cloud, soft and blue and drifting

all over the world
watching glaciers break and fall and turn into a flood or water

i could have gone back to where i was once a child and do swimming in the river with my naked innocent friends where we do not plan for the day about what to eat and where to work next and next and next i could have been so irresponsible and innocent and weak and die without regret

young and will always be mourned and remembered and then well oh well just like everything and everyone being let go and simply be forgotten.

RIC S. BASTASA
i could have chose my words carefully to please you all. I could have arranged them the way you all want them like the way you presented your points-of-view like the pillars all aligned to the north star the one that guides the lost ships back to their comfort shores. I could have chosen the tone and specified the context of my intentions. I could have set these words in a musical scheme that pleases your ears while you sip your coffee and had a good view of this world amaze you with beauty and grace like some well-sought and popular entertainer......

but i didn't and i have long decided that i won't.
i have never been a pleader and an entertainer i am not, neither had it become my cup of tea to see to it that there is comfort in my house......

i am just being myself, and like you, no one pleases me too.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Done Other Useful Things Than Writing A Poem

Sometimes I have regrets writing poems Love poems, poems about virtue and heroism Poems that explain myself, that justify This nothingness
That fill this emptiness,

What are these but signs and metaphors of My weaknesses,
Symbols of my hopelessness Ciphers of my uselessness To life’s dreams, unfulfilled, stars that I have not Reach or even touch with the words in my lips

I could have danced, and danced so well Sweat things out shedding sighs and skins on the floors I could have played a role, acted my way out Exiting through the doors of author’s characters And feel this sense of It was her it was him it was not me

Sometimes I feel
To be a poet is to be dumb and dead To demand nothing but this honor This laurel this principle That I cannot eat that I cannot sell that I cannot Make use of,
Useless poetry, trashy, nothing but bad breathes
Of my being Foul and nauseating to my sense of What I dream what I want to be To be this great, respected man of power One that commands rather than take orders From someone claiming superior feathers

I have long wanted to stop but here I am again An addict to poetry destined for rehabilitation In distant cruel word processing centers Just like you, here I am again, not stopping My fingers always wanting to type the words My mind always listening my heart always mouthing Words, words, words, these words
This poem

This poem is born and I am its tributary I am this poet now without a face without a name I am but a mouth, fingers to my hand Always not stopping, how can I tell you why?

When I myself, do not really know. I am this poem With an unknown author, I am this poem just written Taking shape like a candle lighting, Flowing from your thoughts Taking the forms of beings unknown to us We claim we understand we claim we can live with You are now lost asking the way You could have done other things than reading this poem

Precisely this is what I really feel. Do you feel it now?
Yes.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Embraced Simplicity & Candidness

how i want to embrace simplicity

how i want to throw away generalities

i wish i can be specific like a hammer to a nail or my fingers to my hand whom am i clapping

what i idea i detest what movement i follow

but i am afraid to hurt
you &
myself

i therefore now talk like
you

in words veiled
in the content of vagueness

clouds are beautiful too and haze can be thought provoking and murky waters hide the fish

that we all want to catch and then eat.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Enjoyed A Very Nice Conversation Out There At The Mall

i can make choices like i am thrown in an ocean of choices everyday as i decide for myself what to do really

i could have gone to the mall shopping or just enjoying the walk there seeing lots of people and meeting them and knowing their names and having fun with them or get a date with someone else have sex at the motel or have a ride somewhere in the countryside where no one knows me

i could have done all these but i am so foolish for instead here i am writing this low key poetry wanting to figure out what do i really want in my life i can figure it out someday and i will figure it out now as i have been doing this thing everyday every hour: i just love this stuff writing for nobody (but you may read if you want blogging for no one and surfing for more words and idioms and looking for that part where i become an idiot or the everyday moron on the screen at You-tube or facebook or friendster) well i guess, this is it:

just trying to be nobody but a writer like you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Stopped Writing

I could have stopped writing some letters on my wall some words on a clean sheet of paper, i could have stopped many years ago, when things lack the luster of meaning the shining hues of explanations, steps do not traces steps on the floor, and what the windows see sometimes are so untrue and my eyes are blinded with so much light from the slits of light coming from the noonday roof,
i could have stopped writing and tell myself: oh, there are more important things in my life to do, and there i may take some colors for meaning blue for peace and red for love and violets for remembrances,
i could have stopped writing but how could i? my throats dry up my hands shrink, my heart grow holes of hollowness, my lungs collapse, my head falls off from my neck, my body freezes, my ears close inside its lobes,
i die without it. It is my life, so how could i ever stop living?

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Taken You In My Arms

i will die i know i will and so i wish i could have taken you in my arms and kiss your lips and rub your body against mine and take shelter to the warm wings of your soul i could have listened too to the beatings of your heart near mine

i could have listened to the songs of love and desire

but i have become a coward and too soon have i surrendered to the weakness of my soul to the tiredness of my whispers to the smoke of the vespers i lose myself

i travel in my car alone i have covered a distance mountains and roads beside i have left you waiting and i have not left any word where i am going what i shall become what shall i be doing for another set of years throughout this loveless journey i shall be lonely i shall be sad

but it does not matter anymore for soon i shall die and soon i shall take another journey taking with me the wings of time to another place to another moment with you it is then my time to wait until our worlds meet again without a wall without a hindrance

I Could Have Told You

THAT YELLOW
SOLO LEAF floating on a very clear pond, was it last summer?

will it really matter when someone is finally gone?

will the wind remember?
will the deep water of the pond be always true to its clarity and peace?

that yellow leaf that sank on the very clear pond on one peaceful day will someone still remember?

i think, i will,
if i, too, shall live longer than
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Told You About Religion

i could have told you about religion about the angels with white wings and all the saints and holy men long dead who left an imprint on the earth about God and his goodness and his greatness

but then you were sleepy and then when you woke up you said you were busy earning for a living some kids to take care of a house to clean
a garden to tend and so to take your full attention i hinted you about sex.

your world stopped spinning.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Told You More

i could have told you more about love about us about everything within me but in your indifference i decided to shut up and close my fingers back to the fold of my hands i see it in the looks of your eyes there is no us there was never us from the very beginning when i extended my hand for a shake and told you my very first name.

some flowers simply shy away from darker clouds and fear the coming of the rain for petals to open up and bloom the sun must first promise to shine

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Turned Her Into A Toad

when i met her along the way she was so sad and tears kept flowing from her eyes and i, as the great magician of my place, took her inside my room and began to perform the usual tricks,
how my hands are quicker than her eyes, i took a rabbit from my blackhat i made flowers from my long staff crisp money from newspaper shreds yet she is still as sad as a child looking for her mother and her favorite rag doll and i asked her what she really liked she without hesitation said:

'please make yourself vanish in air! ' of course, what i did was wiser, i vanished her myself. with all regrets, i could have turned her into a toad.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Could Have Written The Truth About The Sigh

oh yes, i could have told you that there were so many women to love
and yet
i got only the least time to share

when i leave
let no one weep for i shall lie again....

the one that does not shed any tear shall be the one that i loved most let that one one who really loved me forget me with all ease, time flies so swiftly on wings that never tire.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Couldn'T Believe It

.. that you read
so well now poetry coming from your mouth
read by you
full of beautiful angst like
blue birds
caged in your heart....

a la
bukowski.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Create All Of You.

night has come again. I am restless.

tonight i will watch a show alone.

the theater is the ceiling. There will be birds and insects from my mind.

Soon the insects are consumed. The birds do not fly away. They stay

They dance on the ceiling. They wish

That i be another insect for feeding.

These hungry birds dance death.

I cannot sleep as usual. These birds I keep in Control.

I create all of you. In law, i too destroy you. Now i sleep.

I Cry No River

ey they love me for being
a river,

ey they like
the sway of my flow

the way i surge
and run and rage

and move against rocks
and sticks and timber and even carry rhinos and crocks
on my back

mind you

they love the way
i gargle

the way a toothpick
satisfies
a discriminating matron after dinner

at most they cheer me
for my travels of least resistance

as i curl
from one sleeping mountain to another

as i ignore cliffs
and holes
and sharp
bamboos
and some pythons

they all praise me for being a
river

and fear me for every little uprising
sometimes

because i can be also cruel
when provoked like fallen
grace

i get awarded as the most promising river the committee gave me the Highest Achievement Award for a river

i get the trophies and the cash prizes
and the numerous plaques

(i feel
the inside roughness of
the other
plaque between my teeth and gum)

i am not really happy if only
they ask me

but they didn't

who wants to be a river?
yes, who really wants to be a mere river?
nobody

but love me for this i never cried
a river

i cry no
river no more

(never for once
if i
correctly still remember)

RIC S. BASTASA
I Decided

decision
do not imitate you
and in your justification that everything is yet unfinished
shall not follow

time is this nice feeling that every creation is a beautiful one whole and finished and seen by the eyes as a flowering delight like a window with an orange curtain
a wall with vines
a stair with intricate carvings of wood at the railings

class when i pass by deep within i smile
my heart whispers
this world is whole and complete
and so
beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
I Deleted Your Comments

not that i like them
i may
but i just think they are unnecessary

i like being alone and so please
go

(i did not say to hell)

RIC S. BASTASA
I Desist From Translating You Again

...henceforth
i desist from translating
you again,

i will be lost and it is not easy to be grappling in those alien words that you constantly utter without rhyme or cadence....

i am lost now
drifting like a leaf upon the surface of the river and you are there mumbling still far away from me

RIC S. BASTASA
I Did Not Avoid You

we meet
and then i greet you
hello
you ignore me
by shifting your gaze
to the bus
you turned your head left and right right to left and i wait for you to mind
me
and i stand still and look at you still you are bringing flowers i think they are for me you take the taxi
rushing
you close it and you do not notice me crying
it rains and i get wet and i take a walk back to the park
the winds begin to blow hard on my face
i take a taxi back to my house
i close the door and i sleep
you call me on your cellphone i turn it off

and then you write a poem that i am avoiding you?

RIC S. BASTASA
I Did Not Change......

oh how time passes
swiftly like a multi-winged bird mythical or like a rocket here in the now and then
nowhere
smoke rising in the air
and then
infinity

first it was his father and now the son familiar places in a row of chairs
year after year and the year after they have all changed (hope for the better) the child in their fathers the hands of mothers growing lilies and garlands

and they are all surprised to see
how black my hair still how steady my hands how the bridge of my nose remains unbroken

how i did not change

RIC S. BASTASA
I Did Not Know That He Has Become Serious In His Poetry Writing

until one night i saw him putting his chamber pot beside his personal computer

and his teapot too.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Did Not Like It

i actually did not like it when you rest your head on my shoulders
while we were on bed and you ask if at all you mattered

how could you be so shortminded?

i am tired
and i have no mind
and i can be so dishonest

i do not like it when you compel me to make another lie tonight in my silence

you equated it with
yes....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Did Not Notice That You Are Still There

Though you know it is me That I am here a longer time ahead of you
]
When you arrive
You pretend that
There is no
Presence of me
]

Do you love my absence?
Do you want me
To leave
Or you simply Want a proof of your importance
]

That I notice you are here And that it should be Me first to say hello
to you
]

You always doubt my presence My unequivocal
Love
]

Will it be you or her?
Or you and
Her?
]

Or just you
It is something till today An equivocation Equipoised.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Did Not Say I Love U

there is something wrong with my beliefs perhaps my codes are rambled again my cards are in disarray and my locks of hair are rising to the air i look like an electrified hippie i want to say i care for you and even i love you but i just can't there is a lump in my throat and with my own hands using the mirror of my car, i look at it, there is blood, and there is a porcupine inside it, wanting to come out, but it can't entangled like a hook in the gills of a fluffy fish, poisoned and dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Didn'T Know That Butchered Animals Do Not Feel Pain

sexy, so sexy,
and meaty and
tasty....

tenderloin steak,
spare ribs,
pork barbecue,
menudo,
sausages, and chicharon, and brain chops

sexy, so sexy,
butchered meat
feeling no pain
well cooked and too spicy on my table.

do i hear
the sound of red blood dripping?

send it the specialty of this house.
sexy, so sexy,
and meaty and tender and juicy....

that is how i want things to be.
i don't mind the pain too.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Believe In God

there may be doubts like pebbles along the path towards a house there may be darkness
at the end of day but there is still a candle to light a gas lamp by the side
of the door
outside the house covered by a glass you see how even during the storm

through the window
transparent on the curtains there is still this flickering light despite the wind even in my sleep my nightmares faith still glistens like a distant star

amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not

I do not wish to talk
Today
There is so much
Contempt in so much Familiarity,

We know it. We will not like it.

We should not betray This friendship with so much
Talk,

Senseless, and too tiring.

Let our silence miss us for a while.
Like we think somewhere else.

Like simply listening to what these heavy downpour Of rain is telling us,

Something wet and wild and Wonderful.

God is making a lot of noise. This heavy rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
the way to love
is always to conceal
what we are bringing

if we disclose, even sooner, surely, everything
is lost.

we are here dining in an old restaurant and i order pasta with lots of tomatoes and cheese and you, as usual go for the salad.

i conceal what i really like to eat, what i dream about, and i manage it well.

you ask me if i like what i order and i of course said the yes that you need.

you should have noticed that in love, in a dining moment
like this,

i do not ask questions.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Correct Mistakes ... I Play

it so happens that i post a poem with some errors not of feeling but of grammatical lapses and she is afraid that people may begin to belittle me for such unforgivable simplicities of mistakes unaccounted

but i tell her even beforehand that i am always unapologetic
even unkind
or indifferent

i am a person who does not go back to review and correct errors

i laugh at them knowing that they have deceived me into such a corruption somehow life is like that we rush to get out of a door only to find the wrong key in our hand and we are having a hard time opening that which we closed

and we cannot enter anymore except when when we break the door & open it forcefully
with a hammer

the noise is painful having to break in your own room with locks forced open like an invasion of your own body destroying it breaking your heart or

bones
tearing your skins apart or slicing some flesh because you made a mistake

i like lapses, errors are not supposed to be minded at

life is like that no crying for what is there already

sometimes
i don't even solve puzzles i let them be their own problems as i sit on the sands watching the sun

set
feeling the cool winds when the world starts to lose its light
and surrender all its arms to the power of
darkness

and when it gets too dark i begin to play again like a child left by mother abandoned
by father

under the moon under the rain and all alone.
i like it when i listen to the bliss of my own wild laughter

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Demand Much

i do not demand much
that you give me so much
love,
i have lots of love to give

i am love myself
overflowing
and if i love you
and tell you so that i love you
i do not demand much

i am in love with you
and i do the loving because in truth it is the loving that is the giving and it is not the taking that matters to the one who truly
loves to the one who loves to love being loved is not really that important

when i love
i give i do not take

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Expect That....(For My Wife)

i do not expect that you will be perfect, and sometimes, i wish you to do wrong so that you may be in the future strong, that you commit some errors so you will know the meaning of some tremors i do not expect you to be like God in His Omnipotence,

i like you in this human state so close to me warm and real.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Have It....

i have tasted it
it is bland
i see it it is not what i expect there must be something more
i just feel it
there must be something much much better
i have touched it
it does not really matter
i am dishonest i do not tell you i am too in this groping and hoping at night imagining what could be best tomorrow or the next and the next something beyond something i am sure which is not yet here i have not even told myself yet for i do not have it.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Have To Be......

i do not have to close my eyes to listen fully

i do not have to shed tears to understand what is goodbye and attachment all about

i do not have to burn myself in the fires of the sun to understand how far is it from my earth i do not have to be you to understand you i have enough of me

and then
i have fully understood what is this all about.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Know If You Feel The Same Way

it so happens one moment someone so smooth and so clean
so beautiful
we kiss, and caress, and not contented we feel like eating that someone whole and be a part of us
forever.

(a cannibal loving?
can love be a form of cannibalism?)

i salivate for love my teeth are gritting
my stomach hungers
for the body.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Know You.....

and so you have arrived, and you call, ' i am here' when i heard this, i then

remember

' i am here' i also said that to you, when i arrived there in your place, i was a tree and you are the horseman and you keep on that equestrian pride, and you always pass me by, and i felt betrayed, and diminished and degraded,

i even felt i was just a grain of
sand
and you were the sea

but i am not that foolish, i also learn, i got brains you know and so when you keep on ringing your arrival, i turned my phone off, and when you sent me text messages i just deleted them, all of them so you are here? what is it? now is the time too for me to say

' i am busy' that's pretty cool, but that is still not enough,

'do i know you? ' this could be worse, but i muster the courage now to show who you are, ugly, ill-mannered, manipulative, user, monster, parasite, so here you are?

i am so sorry, i do not know you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Like Long Poems....

inasmuch as i have no liking for long speeches,

for i am an impatient man with other things to do like gazing at stars

dipping on the shallow waters of the river

riding horses and
climbing mountains,

i am sorry, i reject that long poem of

yours. Submit it to the commission, let them know what epic you have written

for those star years for those future trek.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Live In A World Of Flowers & Clouds And Mountains & Rivers & Brooks

I do not live in a world of flowers I do not live in the world of blue clouds and green mountains and ricefields I do not live in running rivers and stretching seas and clear brooks

Though I write about them Though I miss the scent exuded by them in their kindness Though I like the bees and butterflies that busy in their Multicolored world with some rainbows and coolness Of rain showers and warmth of sunshine so like Paradise, so like the Eden of our ancient dreams,

But I do not live in the world of flowers I cannot leave in the world of flowers

My land is this desert scorched by the noonday sun My sea is this sand stretching from shore to shore My outlook, my view is this misleading mirage My clouds are these unresolved doubts and fears And my air is this silence that only the dead can surmise.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Long For Your Eyes

i do not long for your eyes
not your hands
not your breasts
you do not entice me anymore that you used to seduce my
silence,
you have become the noise on my streets of desire, the canals have overflowed
and the flowers on the garden do not have red roses the weeds are thriving but in his house
i must still live with you there is no choice but the same silence that came with you when you seduced me into this trap
i want to spell the word home, love,
fidelity.
Help me spell all the other words for me.
I am groping
for those that lie deep and strange.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Mean You Really

the poems are for the dogs not for you really
yes the dogs do you hear them barking?
they're too many
it's not me

sometimes poems
are not really meant for understanding

just feelings baby not you or her but the universal angst

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Really Mind If You Mind

do you fear me now? do you have doubts that i may know the manners of an angry man?
do you hide away from me avoiding so much familiarity that which does not just breed contempt but numbness as well for all the senses?
do you shy away now that i have known you much better like a secret pathway named after my beloved?

have i done something to kill respect like i am one kind of a murderer who must deserve the hanging of conviction?

why do you hide still when i have opened myself like all the windows of this public hall?

why do you shrink like a plum deprived of moisture and water?
do not turn into a raisin be a fruit to me i am hungry of your sweetness your pulp, your flesh be with me in my sorrow and pain come to my soft bed be the arms that i need be the hands that i can hold

i am a lonely man needing comfort let us talk, let us be closer now let us make love let us turn off the light let us let the light of the moon filter what is pure behind these double curtains

RIC S. BASTASA
i do not run away from grief grief itself is the cure of grief, did you not know that from the thorns grows this rose?
from boulders, that nugget of gold?
that from dead trees
the rare orchid blooms?

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Sing A Lullaby
	his is one thing that i haven't for once
sang

baby you have not arrived

& i have already waited for so long........

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Take Pride About My Loneliness

I do not take pride in my loneliness But I get embarrassed at times And I hide it
As

SOLITUDE

IT gets covered in such term Of lovely loneliness
Of a certain wise man of a certain poet Sitting on a hill Stars lighting his long lonely nights
And the laces of darkness serving as his blanket

No mater how I hide loneliness, however

Loneliness
To such term as Solitude

Loneliness comes in claiming the truth of its name

"I am lonely" say it "I am always lonely" shout it.

I guess I have to tell the truth

I am asking for the true definition of solitude

How does it look like?
Now that I am lonely, how can I ever say "what I have is solitude and my poems tell that so" I take pride on such a camouflage a facade

a skin glowing to the color of sunshine covering a skull that looks like the true face of death.

I do not take pride on this shame on this embarrassment

“I am lonely”, take my hand.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Want To Be Lost In The Crowd Of Tongues In Cheeks

when i left the party i lied, i told someone that i am going to the rest room, i rushed to my car and sped towards my way home, i am not home at parties, they give me gooseflesh,
my hairs like to rise like i were electrocuted,

in my isolation i feel real, a king in my own small territory,
when i am with you
people, i become so scared, scared about what i think i do not really
know, my senses are sharp and it knows that there is danger
of being lost again amidst the crowd their tongues inside their cheeks and you just don't know what happens next, and so i left earlier that you expected, i simply have no more reason to stay and be melted like a candle in that big fire of hypocrisy.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Want To Say Anything At All....

when we speak
we like to tell actually nothing at all what we desire is only to live the moment
so we refrained speaking about the past which we cannot change or the future which we cannot purchase days like these make us lonelier than ever perhaps because we want to tell something else that which we have grasped and about to but not what we are having now this being which we are holding for the time being

i know how hard it is but does it really matter?

did the wind that pass recently tell you something about itself?
does that wave which touches your feet claim otherwise?

no they are not minding you neither do you think really that they mind themselves for you think them as unthinking things so why can't you do the same?

stay
just stay here
just be what you are

even without me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Want To Say It

but really,
after days of absence
and i was away
pleasing myself
with another date in another beautiful place tranquility of the sea and songs of seagulls
and cool summer breeze

but really
i come back again
doing the same things

i do not want to say it
but i really miss you, baby.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Want To See Religion Dancing With Politics

so ugly to look at
as religion is not a good dancer always stepping on the shoes of politics

i abhor them getting married at people's expense for soon
what they shall beget
shall be
hardheaded children of the self chosen gods
and spoiled lectures
about heaven
and hell

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Wish To Die In The Classroom

i do not wish to die in the classroom learning all day about what life is all about i do not wish to die in the comfort of my own home beside my lover embraced by the comfort of warm arms i wish to die like a child wildly free playing and running in the playground of life

i wish that not a single mom watches me as i stumble on a rock or fall from a swing or a seesaw
and then

i simply close my eyes and dream about a certain darkness that shall have no end.

then i will dream of a faint light, a little angel waking me up again

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Wish To Irritate You

am still here, you ask, but i have been away for a while,
with my thoughts, and then you say hey there? are you gone?

and i go back, typing the words, am always here my darling, why can't you notice what i am doing?

i am not asking, i am silent.
i am not answering any question
from you,
but i am always here, ready to talk to you in some normal

ready to say, syllables.

i am here. But not for long.
know that, i am the wind and you are the stone.

you are not hurt.
i do not stay.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Wish To Romanticize....

there are some theories for instance, that we shall only settle on the magical state of our words, do not philosophize do not restructure a world that we are in now, do not disturb the political order do not preach, papa, do not ever preach do not be the church of any order just feel the lyrics of the song the beat of the agony my hands rub your hands in my belly, feel that something in me that is growing and hardening, let the metaphors do the excitement of that strong burst of emotions do not justify,

that is not the intention of our words there is nothing about repair or compensation,
just see the stars,

and feel the light of the moon on your cheeks let someone touch you do not ever think, but just savor the very moment of carpe diems

in other words, romanticize, romanticize, fantasize, nothing about bread or butter, or wine or dessert or red meat or corn or wheat or
bun,

i am sorry,
it is not my cup of tea to simply romanticize, i want some reforms, and i want to make a difference.
i want words with weight, like anchor like anvil like steel bars, balls or stones, scales, and stick and swords and basins,

i want action, punishment and rewards, and restructuring of buildings reconnecting bridges or sinking ships and finding treasures.

i need a map, and i need you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Do Not Wish To Understand You

to understand you is to put you under the control of my mind tie you there and with a scalpel layer by layer i will peel you peek upon the secret nooks of every muscle and take you into pieces as bones and ligaments i can imagine the pain it is not mine of course but

yours

on this thinking i have become grossly unfair and so i leave you in the middle of your mess i guess i must trust you i know you can manage our friendship and trust shall take charge everything shall work and shall make the best of what you are left alone to heal the wounds to grow those scars

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don'T Anymore....

this thing is not the most important to do in my life i have many other important things to manage,
but this one is most addicting because it can be anything from trivial to serious or to nothing but just a matter of expression for the day
like hmm, when i have nothing to say i can always say it here like when i have nothing else to mind i can always put it here you see, we are riding on the same boat of ennui

when we feel riding it
we do,
when we don't we simply turn this thing off
and do something else somewhere nothing kills us, nothing can, as simple as that...you wonder
i don't anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Complain

if the most stupid
among us here
gets the reward
it is not a problem
with me
it's the owner's prerogative i suppose
&
i am just an ordinary employee here
earning my living
&
if the most unqualified
among us here
becomes the boss
well
it's no problem with me it's managerial priority
&
i am nothing but
just their lowly employee to hire and then to fire

i have no right to complain this company is theirs not mine not ours.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Drink Liquor Anymore...

i've been drunk many times not just with wine but with power for which when i am sober the guilt is eating me
over

and so let me be frank with you i do not drink anymore that hard liquor
with those highly spirited vapor why can't we just sit and let the time drink us we be the drinks on the vessels of our emptiness filled by the spirits of the wines of the moment

let these talks take us to the surprising places of our hearts sincere and illuminating like the early morning sun arriving where we are those greenest grass taking in more of those chlorophyll

we shall be drunk with our poetry and dance with the music of our sorrows let us share all these on our highly improved Tu Fu.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Give Up On You Babes

i don't give up on you beautiful Babes, you're sweet and adorable
you fight for me and i am so flattered

i don't surrender Babes, i am into this intercourse
two bodies
pushing and pulling for some meaning
searching and pointing to places
of the heart

i like this way of knowing Babes
touching you when i close my eyes
and kissing you when i feel so alone inside my room

Don't leave me Babes, Don't make things too obvious

Do they think that you are unhappy?
That i am as lonely as a tunnel where birds stop a while and peck on a seed
and then leave me empty again?

Well, Babes, when do we meet again Inside our crazy dreams?
I Don't Have An Arm For A Pillow

i don't have an arm for a pillow
under the yellow moon

but i have all my hands as cups for the tears from my eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Have The Guts To Tell The Truth Anymore of the nine reasons

i had given you
there is only one
which is true:

i lost the guts
to tell the truth
because it is no
longer there
in the first place

if there is any it is concealed in ten colors layered by twenty clothes
in the darkness of thirty walls.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Know What

i don't want to be with you go with anyone else not me go buy a mirror and see for yourself your face that only your mother can love do not look at me like i am guilty i do not know what to do with pity go away and find another one go away and do not just stand i am wondering when i get to rest and simply be my best

go away moron and find yourself your beast.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don'T Look For Miracles

as i listen
you traced the roots of your faith to miracles,

cancer cured
a happy life ever after a renewed life

from broken bones

sometimes in silence i begin to think faith grows too even without miracles and that is the miracle itself

no crutches for my legs to stand no fetish no superstition no stories

plain conversation in the altar of my humanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Mind....

DESPITE
what you did (you cheated me)
am still here
i need your love let me love
you then

despite the humiliation
how you shamed
me
am still here
to love you

for i am the giver and
you are the
taker

for i am love
and not hate
for i am
in unity with
myself
and not in the breaking
of your shaking

am here if you
are broken
call my name
am here
to love you
even if you still do not love me

that is love that is giving

i let go doves
to fly away in the air

i wait at night
time
i don't mind
if they come back
and roost
again in the branching trees of my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Really Know When Will This End

describe when will this end, this silence between us at noon a harsh noon, hot and humid, where I burn like a pile of wood in the forest on a very cold night with you on the other side of the bed facing the full moon and some shooting stars describe between us, when will this end when will the space between our eyes resolve the distance of the seasons night and day and summer and rain i sleep on the bed alone on some scorpion thoughts biting one another inflicting venoms that numb and even kill and there you are rocking yourself on a chair making some sleep like a concoction of vodka and champagne teasing your eyes filled with tears the soap on tv is busy with their stories of pain and twist and turns i pray to end this silence so we can talk and lay down the final plans of our earthy longings some demarcations of pain and tolerance and facts and conclusions this wherefore and therefore finally you turn off the tv, and you lay beside me touching my hand i give in, i still miss you, and i think, the silence has come on the soft wings of a butterfly for a brief flutter at the ceiling looking at ourselves for another sweeter second time beginning the cliche: love is sweeter the second time around is still written on the wall how can i forget it

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Really Mind

when you shout and scream and slam the door
i don't really mind
as i watch TV

I guess i was born to be a perfectly normal and happy person

so, i am really sorry for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
they all remember
their dead,
they make landmarks
of place they've been too they make journals to keep forever what happened when they were still alive they take pictures
preserve them
frame them and hang them in their libraries
and living rooms old faces, beautiful bodies in their dresses of their own times
and suits and
shoes,

sometimes i ask why?
why do we really have to remember?

when we all leave what mind in us may still remember?
and will those who inherited our failures and even fortunes remember us?

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Really Understand, Mama

when you said that Papa is good and that he loves you and that he loves us all i really find it hard to understand Mama till now

why he kicked you with his feet why he hit you with his fists why he left us for such a long time and why he came back always drunk make me understand Mama, i am too old to be dumb.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don'T Understand A Sunset I Just Watch It as i sit on the white sands on the beach watching another sunset i do not think of the sunset

i just watch it
and be amazed about the changing of the hues and then the darkness and then the moon and stars that come like a change of a number in a program that you watch what is it to to be understood? Tell me.

There is nothing to be discussed and written like a thesis these things are meant to be seen and felt and then forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
I Don't Wait In Vain For Your Love

lady you must know that i am a busy man in love, and i am asking you today if you still love me, so i can decide for myself what to do with this love of mine insisting inside my heart

i am a busy man always in love and loving seems to be my thriving business this offering of love till the last supply (of drops) lasts grab it and take it if you really love me because baby, i don't want to wait in vain for an answer love me if you will because if you don't or if you won't i'll take the other chances somewhere else where my love shall fully grow you may be the only flower i see today but i may have to pick other flowers somewhere along my way

RIC S. BASTASA
I Drink Tears To Become The Salt Of This Earth

teardrops from My eyes
to my cheek
slowly
to my lips
my tongue licks it
my mouth
swallows

I need tears
to drink
To become The salt
Of this
Earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Enjoy The Reflections Of Your Light

i enjoy the reflections of your light
from a distance
where you burn when you see me looking at you i enjoy your flame in blue, red, and green and orange hues it is warm from where i stand my hands feel you i go near you i may burn like you and may hurt myself but it does not matter now i have nothing to protect from hurting i have nobody to comfort me i have no choice but to burn myself with you and those who simply watch love and how lovers pain themselves even to the edge of death in conflagration
in the passage of time rotten and to dust returning they will not remember anything.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Envision A Time When We Are Poor

once
out of my loneliness
i sit and envision a moment when we are poor and desolate and we decide to go together for a lunch date and we order
what we really want despite the fact that we fear we cannot afford it yet we do not mind what happens next i have the best chicken curry and jasmine rice and green tea and you have the four seasons-juice and beef steak & mashed potatoes for the main course and leche flan for dessert and we talk on some matters of the heart about the stillness of time and the unchanging mind and we begin to escape the poverty of the hands and the feet & the reality of us

wrinkled and weak

and we laugh and we look at each other and we confirm the power of love.

love wins always we agree

RIC S. BASTASA
I Envy Those Fingers...

an unbuttoned shirt

thanks for the ripe papaya

i envy those fingers....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Exist Only In The Mind

imagine a bubble
crystal
or made of glass
or soap

floating in the air
where i am inside

imagine a quick prick of the needle
from a child's hand

puff!
i flip flop

i am gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Feel So Light Like A Fur, Like A Feather

My heart listens. My arms fold. My hands clasp. I breathe a breastful of air from your scented body. I love this way of finishing a relationship. We make love and then without saying any word We part ways.

Who cares? We had it, and that was enough fuel to make us Move to another direction. To propel us to heights beyond our control.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Follow The Smoke, And Sigh

at first we like highlights. we want to reach the peak of this and that.
or the lowest point where we can get attention.

the years twirl. The nights curl. The days dance.
Until everything gets numb.

Then we take our reclining chairs when evening is near.
We light the dry grass, build a fire, and produce the smoke that climbs the stairs to the sky.
We sit calmly, our hands free on the side of our body, and then look beyond the distant sea facing us without any emotion.

I look at you, doing the most usual thing.
Merely watching
the passage of quiet moments.

I follow the smoke, and sigh, hoping that in that far place, God may still see us.
No matter how tiny.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Found My Niche

i found my niche
and it is the place of my brothers whose tongues are as forked as mine whose words are as sharp as mine and we understand how to say them
and we say them as we understand them from the roots to the stem of our awakenings some bottles of wine will do in this little niche this country of my people where i am one of those counted to make a stand and speak

there will be singing and touching of hearts through the poems that we compose and read with each other there will be this sense of ourselves back to our own arms this sense of home where each of us

are so alive.
we keep the poems in our own language now.

and if you wish, you must learn what each word means.
come, come, you are invited.
leave your slippers before you enter. There is this burning bush in the middle of our presence.

it is burning. it is burning.
we are in the midst of this worshipping.

come, come, come, stranger.
there is no reason for fear here.
I Give The Sound

i have experienced freedom in the wings of the bird

i taste air
it is bland
i ate space
it is empty

i have experienced doing anything

explored what i have not explored

i have been there
there is nothing

i say i have everything if you wouldn't mind

i shall tell the truth
there is nothing there

nothing satisfies the tongue nothing fills the mind

nothing is forever intimate with this body

nothing is so intertwined with the soul

that when it breaks away i am still intact

nothing is broken
nothing is created
what is this soul?
what is it that always longs for satiation?

there is this empty unlimited space

i give a sound
it has never since then returned to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Give Way To Time Without Much Murmur time comes to my narrow alley it fits, i make things fit there like a snake hissing on its very tiny hole

its fangs sing of clarity it bites without responsibility the frog dies and the rain mourns
for said loss,
time passes me by like we were strangers
my beard turns white my hair diminishing into a death
of its own
chasing the tomb in the forehead one day i look into the mirror seeing another person i swear
it was so haggard in looks deep sunken eyes like an old Spanish church buried by this volcanic eruption somewhere in Camiguin Island.

I ask myself, what is my name?
I smiled, how can i ever give a wrong answer.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Go For Simplicity My Friend

i go for simplicity my friend
because i am poor

i do not go for sophistication
because i am poor

i do not complicate matters
because i am poor

i do not want you to misunderstand
because i am poor

i do not want you to think some more
because i am poor

i do not want to convince you
because i am poor

i do not want you to be with our side because we are poor

i want all things in their simplified forms because we cannot afford any other form of convolutions we cannot afford another revolution it will be expensive and we have no more years to give to pay for the sponsors

RIC S. BASTASA
I Go Out In The Open Field

i go out
she builds fire
earth sghs

RIC S. BASTASA
I Go To The Past And Regret It

i go to the past
barefoot i tread upon its sands

it is cool
funny

really funny
it is very simple and spontaneous like
a smile

i regret
it was too short

very much like a glimpse
of you

and what i see is only a shadow

a moment more like a kiss

which has nothing to boast but its
goodbye

yes, it was shallow but it was really
fun.......
I Got A Boat

i got a boat today
let us all ride in it
its destination is happiness, its name is Happiness,

the boat is a decision, with a flare for precision it is not dependent on luck, or destiny, or dictated by the zodiac, it is a decision to be happy,

come, ride with me
let us all be happy!

RIC S. BASTASA
I Got A New Satin Jockey

IT FEELS so smooth on my skin depth down under my thighs i feel like a
god

my inner glands are so curious about something smooth and new and tickling
like your feather dusters and i like you looking at me like i am a

born-again christian

on the other hand what really matters is not this satin jockey it is still what is bobbing inside that really counts

feel it like your throbbing heart

RIC S. BASTASA
I Guess

i guess today when you arrive you enter the room so tired you lock the room and switch on and switch off the light you sleep
and tell the world for once you have nothing to do with it until the next day when it rains heavily on your roof and the water rises and you ask it where is the door for your next escape

RIC S. BASTASA
I Guess I Must Place It Under My Bed Beside My Socks And Shoes.

i, too, honestly
cannot imagine that hat as an elephant inside a constrictor

i admit i must not have felt everything inside me in the heart

everyday to live this kind of life i have to see a hat as a hat

it is the brain
that works to get us our daily bread

when i followed the heart i go bleeding most of the time

one in a million
we go berserk
over so much drama
and yet
arrive at nothing but our perdition

let me touch my heart at night when i am about to sleep and to sleep well

i guess i must place it under my bed
beside my socks and
shoes.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Guess It Is That Simple.

to win
is a relative
thing

it is like this game of stone, paper and scissor

it all depends on the situation
who faces you now
and what you should be to the scissor

you must be a stone and to the paper
you must be this scissor

i guess it is that simple.

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes I ask
This question if the people out there really read poems?
A laundrywoman for instance Does she even read? Have I told her that there is poem For laundry soap and how her laundry can be magical?
Or the carpenter, does he ever know that poetry exists As he hammers the nail on the stairs or puts the walls Of the house that he is making? Is there a certain beat In the strokes of his sawing the wood from a newly cut Tree? Is there something sentimental about his pencil that cuts the exact plank of wood to make the railings of the veranda?
And what about the garbage collector? Is there poetic sense in the smell of garbage that he collects early morning of the day?
Or about a friend who spent so much to move to some places in the U.S. or Canada or New Zealand looking for a dream for a greener pasture in foreign lands?

Well to tell frankly I write a lot about them, this laundrywoman This carpenter, the garbage collectors and friends who give up the hope of finding a good life in my country?
I guess I have the right to ask, if they ever read the poems about them?
I guess I have to ask if there is really poetry in what they do and what they dream and what they worry about?
I drink so much coffee to extend my nights to reach a certain poetic significance about some uncertainties And the meaning of all these which may not be magical, poetic, which may not after all be, in the most plain sense, Readable.

Sometimes, I go outside this room where I am thinking about them and write about them and just sit there on a rocking chair looking far to the boundless sea And I ask, sometimes, do they really read poetry?
I guess, no one really bothers that much. They are busy.
The guy who stopped writing poetry
reasons out that he falls in love but was not loved in return and so he grieves over such a misfortune

I wonder

Same guy, same unrequited love but he never ceased writing love poems for his beloved

And I wonder some more

The better guy shines like the sun despite the rain still fuller than a full moon despite the storm

When you let the two stand together they mirror one another but I guess someone chose to be more
at par
with the gods sitting in the thrones of the skies

RIC S. BASTASA
I Guess You Can Say That I Am Hungry

I GUESS now that i have packed my bags finally deciding to take this break away from you for some other place that you need not know for someone that may show the care that i need the love that i badly wish for I GUESS you can say that i am hungry not for bread or pasta or steak or
sex,

I AM HUNGRY FOR SOMETHING else for words for some healthy conversations for laughter
for silly talks we use to indulge before for some lighter things, for anything goes,

i need to loaf i need to float i have been anchored that long i sense there is something wrong

RIC S. BASTASA
I Had A Friend I Met So Long Ago

i met him in the hills ago for he was a freedom fighter like me he was shot in the river by the forces of the dictator and his blood flood all over the waters of the land until the sea turned crimson
until the sunset turned scarlet

he did not die
he lives in the lives of more freedom fighters and every sound of the gun sounds his name
and every song of the rain sings his life
and every end of the day starts a new dawn
for this democracy

RIC S. BASTASA
I Had A Talk With A Woman Just A While Ago

I had a talk with a woman just a while ago Well, she is not just a woman,
She is that woman
The other woman,
That he always brags about,
Witty, witty, tweedy, tweet, & shitty
To me, forgive me, but she is

Witty too, wait,

I wish him dead and for weeks I will be wearing black Custom,
Tradition they say,
It will be my color of good riddance
Of this bastard of that woman Sleeping in bed squeezing some drops of life To lengthen that sense of agony, Waiting on a chair
In a hospital room as though I am a passenger On a plane on a flight to nowhere

Well, at least I have shown some chunks of my Being nasty and
Well,
This touch of class that money always Gives,
But I showed my wit,
My shit,
And she did not believe it,
Well,
At least, I am consoled,
I am the lie
And she will be the truth for a time Until Another encounter, with a web cam this time, Perhaps tomorrow
When black will be the color of the week, Or I will Compromise for white,
Just in case, she still insists that I am still a lie Just like him with her in some greenish spacious cyber bed.

Just a while ago, I had a talk with that woman, she will feel what I feel she will.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have A Black Bird

i have this black bird and it does not sing but you confess you love it just the same.

i nod at you and then give you my sweet smile.
your tongue salivates.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have A Friend In Virginia Who Is Talking To His Chihuahua Named Silver,

I am healed.
i have a friend in virginia who is talking to his chihuahua named Silver, do not ask me, of course, he is lonely, and Tolstoy has described it once when the only boy of the horse driver died in an accident one winter time and he had a hard time accepting the loss, and lamented such fact that he wanted to talk to anybody but then no one is there to listen, the snow fell heavily, and the whole world is one thick covered sediment where indifference was so thick that no empathy was possible to penetrate it.

this friend has white hair, wears thick glasses, and i haven't seen him reading a book, but he has his wine, and TV, and some friends to see on some special weekends, he walks with his dog, and has a one way conversation with him because the dog is not talking back this i can say, i can relate, as i too, talk to the car when i drive long distance just to divert my attention from what is found in the house, empty chairs, milk boxes, medicine capsules, celery and lettuce and tomato salad on the dining table inside a white porcelain plate, the scent of black pepper and olive oil, turmeric and ginger juice for my morning ritual, my wife has five dogs, which make us a big crowd in the house, but for one thing i never bother talking to any one of them which has become a lot of noise for me i love white cats but all these dogs drive them away. I like to go to the mountain where Papa planted some trees surrounding an old cottage. No one stays there because of the bandits who killed our caretaker. They cut his penis and hanged it on one of the beams of the old house. He was beheaded. There was hatred for a very uncertain reason. The man was very old, he had ten grandchildren. They all left the land.

i talk to my table when i am left alone in my office. I talk to the trees when i take a walk on early mornings where i can fill my lungs with fresh air.

Talking to something inanimate is not uncommon. I remember this old man too in Fiddler on the Roof.

i guess my friend who is childless like me who works as caregiver in the U.S. of A is just coping up. Boredom is dangerous. Perhaps if he does not talk to his dog, or me talking to a chair, the possibility that the Demons of our Minds will begin talking to us, is not remote.

But there is one thing that i like to share. I was in the hospital for five days, isolated, and drugged to sleep by my doctor, and then i still remember, i held the rosary, and i begin talking to God, not the chair, not the table, not the bulb.

Whatever that is, call it a miracle. I am healed.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Accepted It, Hope You Will.

The scenes flash in a series that runs smoothly without a glare

somehow i have decided not to watch it straight since it can be a source of prolonged and undisturbed pain and so i shift from one frame to another summer and winter landscape and numbers this time sky and then in a moment

sea
somewhere there could be a meeting or none at all the joys are intermittent and i like it the way it should be something that sometimes we are not prepared yet to accept but it is there gazing at us and saying that it has been a part of our very being and they shall concoct stories and offer some explanation and lay the usual rules of the game of life

there are scales which the rainbow fish wears as it swims deep into the sea and soon disappear into what we deem as the unknowable be glad you are here and with this short time we have we cannot really make a lot of difference peace be with you, that is the last offer that is made

i have accepted it, hope you will.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Always Liked Your Silence

as you sit beside me
i have always liked your silence running deep inside
my veins
like good blood.
i hate the way i always talk but i could not stop lest we both be silent and sounding nothing but dead
i am coping up with what lack you have
and i envy you
for that you are determined
in this silence
i am hesitant and prefer my persistent noise at least for the meantime that we are waiting for nothing to come
i like your silence but i guess you have nothing to say and too prefer
my talk, my restlessness
my world
where you cling
in the middle of your
sorrow.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Always Wanted The Sea To Be Calm

i have long wanted the sea to be calm but they too have to comply with the changes of the seasons abide by the rages of the storm and throw of the tornado the weird whirlwinds the cyclic cyclones the typical typhoons

i always envy the stones they belong to no one and they abide to none.
they have no feelings and so they are not hurt. they do not have the heart, and so they do not take the risk of loving.
i envy their stares, they do not blink, neither do they wink. they roll and never break.
and sometimes they are carved and worshiped as gods.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Become Sore....

so many beautiful
bodies

more than sparkling
these glasses of wine
on these tables

so many moments of ecstasy

countless years
of bliss outnumbering the days of
sorrows

i feel guilty
i do not feel any

everything is in order
harmony is everywhere

i feel guilty
i am not a part of any

i am not human
anymore
and to all of them
i am sore.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Chinaski In My Mind

so you like chinaski
i like chinaski
too
i see him make love to many women and drink his wine and write his poems
somewhere
in the dark, damp corners of the post office or in the attic or even in the park while he strolls alone
drinks more than what his mind
can take
and then
he arrives in his apartment gets his typewriter
and writes his thousand poems as though he is just talking mumbling
to himself
all his sighs
and disappointments
of this world
now
well spoken in verse and he signs each with this

bukowski, the man
you will never forget

he shies away
from fame but he takes
the money just the same

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Come From Far To Shake Hands With Myself.

upon a homecoming
i will not be there

you shall perhaps imagine how i have changed perhaps from bad to worse and there will be talks

i have another homecoming to attend and this i must tell you: i have come from far to shake hands with myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Decided To Stay Choosing Tranquility

People come and go Moving away
To new places
Looking for conformity

I am here
Allured by this sweet scent Of champacas
In this mountain
Of contented tranquility
And like the tender Flowers of dove
Orchids
Clinging to The barks tenaciously

I have decided
To stay.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Had A Taste Of Your Badness...

you have bitten my back i thought it was another snake venomous and i thought i have only a few minutes to live and hence i regret the happenings of
my life

when i turn my back i have seen
you
and you have changed me not to believe a beautiful woman's

body
a gentle face a word soft-spoken and i have more trust on myself now finally realized that your bites are not that effective anymore and that i can live more of you each day as just another lousy threat of a bad life

and having become so immune i have disregarded everything in you like a monotonous murmur of a busy day a routinary wave of the sea another ill-wind which need not be minded since it is just passing anyway now i am free and you have become another fog along my way and i pass through it without much thought.

how sad of you, a smoke, another useless and ineffective pollutant.

my world is as fresh and green as ever. more flowers are thriving now
without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Learned To Live Alone.....

i always know how to create a happy world i do not have to wait for a designer of a happy interior

there is no place for a home maker here
i can manage

i cook a stew of happiness here put them in a bowl there is no recipe or choosing of ingredients or even measuring the quantities of salt and pepper to be put there

whatever is available
i cut and make part of the menu if it is hard, i soften it if it tastes bland, i add salt and seasoning
and if i want it sweeter i do not have to ask for an opinion i put whatever is my dream and liking

i have learned to live alone
and happier this time

you must see me perhaps next year
and i will not invite you
anymore
to enter my new house

if you give me a ring
i will not answer it
RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Long Wanted To Make Love With You

inside your car
i have long wanted to make love with you but you were so prim and proper your hands strict on the steering wheel and your eyes looking straight ahead
of the road
beyond us

nothing happens by chance and nothing happens by chance without your permission and so i just closed my eyes (and you did not even notice) i just imagined love and loving alone in the darkness of my soul and even inside that fantasy you were the angel with big wings flying high like a cloud in the sky and you look at me as though i am the ant looking for a morsel of bread under your table) and then, i learned you want to make love with me too,

and then,
how sad, you said

'you blew your chance baby! '

i could have been more brutish on an insistence. Foolish me and hypocrite you.

shall we meet again, this time without chains?

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Loved

i have loved
when i was so young and i thought that it was true my heart was broken and time heals

the pieces become one again there is no sign of a previous crack

i have learned when to love there is the right person and the right time
for me

love is not just love alone so different when we were so young and dumb

love becomes a choice it does not just come we intend it there is this responsibility to commit
even in extreme bitterness
there is still
this companionship
when libido
fades like the night and the sun even in the rain
cold nights
we, in love, sleeps together
in bed
warm and committed
till death
till the next life, on and on, like undissolved
time.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Loved You Through

Sooner my life shall end And when I am gone Beyond this world
And I am forgotten
Let it be remembered
That I have met you
And loved you through

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Managed Familiarize Myself With The Sound Of Rusty Hands, And The Rattles Of Nails, i also know how to close doors, in fact, i have closed so many,

to my own delight,
though, i have to be honest that at times, closing a door leaves in me the sound of sad hinges, nevertheless, i have managed familiarize myself with the sound of rusty hands, and the rattles of nails, after all, learning to survive the hazards of walling in and walling out is the only means that we use to arrive at survival rooms, where we feel safe and take the soundness

of sleep

we take again the cliches of ourselves, the redundancies of our usual beginnings our modest cruelties, our capacity to escape and be strangers to places of our lonely hearts

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Mastered The Art Of Pretending

As i told you, write anything but as i told you once, if you still remember, write anything that tickles our minds, like acupuncture to lessen the pain, with those needles, which to me feels like your thumb, and the ring finger it lingers, like the way i keep your lingerie last night in the room which has no more tongue and teeth which is quite beautiful in its peace and quiet since it cannot tell which one of us did the healing or which one of us inflicted the pain after. What pain is that?
that pain of having you and then losing you and then planning again when to feel the gentleness of the acupuncture needles again? I don't think much now i have no more time for all these. I am alone in this world, and i have mastered the art of pretending.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Never Been To Duhallow

hello my friend, i have heard of Duhallow where trees are thick and green where brooks flow in spring where flowers bloom where the birds sing where women take their baths in rivers so clear and clean where men do wait and gentle as they care where mountains tower where forests prevail where the air is cool where the nights as starry as before hello my friend, i have never been to Duhallow i have always dreamed of Duhallows hello my friend, please take me there with you in Duhallow, to Duhallow, cheers for Duhallow! ..

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have No Heart You Notice It

at the very first glance i see love

and i believe love
and i am
stable as a foot on the solid marble
floor

love is crowded doubt rains
it is a chaos of burns and bruises

pain is like a drought
love dies
love dries itself
like
a cracking field it sings
emptiness from its chasms

then everything
turns into war

within, without,
limitless

understanding is nil
you sleep

you wake up seeing the same reality
unchanged

one complains to the city
i do not understand the language
of your lights

what do you mean?
the posts ask

love is overcrowded
it is a market of barbarian vendors

i am not buying
i am going home without my hands

you notice it
i have no heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have No Need

i have no need for originality anymore
i like the mockingbird singing its song
on the rooftops always mistaken
for myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Not Expectation At All....

i have no expectations at all not even from you, a friend, not even from you
lover,

it is the same way i open my self, unbuttoning buttoning a shirt or zipping and zipping out storage bags,

(how many are alive? no, it is the wrong question, always, it is. how many are dead? injured? maimed? how many are lost?

not how many are found, that is the way to keep records, always for the dead,)

i do not expect you to wait, or read me, i am not a book not your book, i am not your train station, keep going, look at the window, see the passage of everything trees, walls, houses, trucks, roads, yes even roads are passing at us,

keep a watchful eye, look at the sky, today is the hottest,
at noon, do not expect to see stars....

RIC S. BASTASA
i must have been too stupid not having understood what is the meaning of that small finger of yours that touches my chin, thinking that perhaps it is merely accidental, took me two nights to finally think that something deep down under means an ocean, whose wave signals the coming of a permission to that which was denied of me before but which i can do for now, last night the moon was gone and i was grateful of my own stupidity: i have not sinned.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Nothing To Offer To You

when you turn me off what can i have but
silence
i become the inanimate television
that watches you

stoically
i do nothing more than what you can do to yourself

i do not have those eyes that can say yes
neither do i have the courage to say
no to you

i am the wood and wire assembled insignificant because you have decided to deprive me of my own
meaning

i neither have life
nor death
to offer you as relief

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Nothing To Say To You

i have nothing to say anymore
to you
we mutually like the way things ended we're both happier now we say it

i'll make it clear the wind rushes beside my hair and i know you do not trust my moustache anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Nothing To Say To Your Pain

i have nothing to say.
i will sit beside you and just look at your face.
i am at loss of words there is no punctuation to ease the wreck of the sentences of pain not breathing anymore to rest but always wailing as though there is no end to your paragraphs.

what words are needed, i ask myself, to ease your pain?

i was there. i am still here. Past lives that still haunt secretly in the furrows of our foreheads.
was i a nomad in the sahara?
was i a king in one of the kingdoms of Java?
have i killed a brother? or a father?

why are my hands trembling like some stilt houses in the rivers of Kwai?

i am hearing voices from the deepest caves of India.
The past is not past. It is still here in the present trying to tell me about what is there that i have not seen.

i look at you again. You have slept in my arms.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Nothing To Write From My Heart Today

having nothing to write from my heart
having forgotten
some memories
of my love

i decided to write
from my mouth
and my hands
and so look at you
look at me

we feel nothing
we see nothing
that touches us

in the bottom of our souls

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Seen

i have seen her
she smiles at me inside the glass window of the train and she waves her hand and then the train goes on and on and on like a thought throughout the night her face dissolving in an infinite darkness i am not light myself i look for sound inside the forest of my words.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Seen Her

i couldn't believe that what i saw was so abstract i couldn't see a line delineating reality from fantasy, not a bee on that usual flower, there is no house on the hill, no man on the beach, not a woman on the train, the rain is a mere syllable, the clouds mere unseen air, not so dramatic as a leaf falling on a rocky ground, it does not speak of drought or a truck crumpling a dried dung, there is no message what soever that makes an old man think about his passage to the afterlife, there was no cat with nine lives, no electric chair to see a dead man walking, and yet this is the point: it is so popular, and takes the No.1.

something so fishy,
i decided to take my rod and try my luck
for that slimy fraud.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Seen Your Picture With Your Daughters In Kimono

i have seen a long time ago you and your daughters in their colorful kimonos then there was this guitar that you play and the english language that you teach and the education you are giving them there are other many people in this world not just us, we are not living inside walls and fences there are other playgrounds out there where you my children can play

beyond colors beyond chinky eyes are other possibilities with us the firetrees here burn with loneliness

this summer
forgetting the color of your memories Japan, the city of the sun where you now live has claimed the name of your soul

but i know
under the blooms of cherry blossoms this spring your heart still beats for the fire trees here you still love the scent of the champaca miss the yellow ylang-ylang on the hill and the dama de noche has more love stories to tell for the dark nights where fireflies still flicker those that we have long forgotten still exist

we shall meet somehow filled with stories those left untold when we have busied ourselves with what could have been so unnecessary those that we see only after they have been taken away and time shall sit in one corner of the garden's wooden benches
and ponder

was there something wrong with the past?

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Survived You

There is something in me that wants to be true like a window that stares to a road where women pass by covering their mouths from a dusty road there is no blinking

every detail about the color of each woman's scarf is duly taken but there is a boy who comes from the bushes and carries a brown ball and throws it at me and then i close this window in me and i turn into myself coiling like a wounded snake that snake within us it does not hiss anymore but in this hurting hours our eyes are like lamps glaring

in the dark
thirsting for vengeance the hurt is long and excruciating like a road to the cliff and it has no end except an abyss from then on one takes the truth lightly like a feather plucked from a hen twisting a neck and planning for a fried dinner from hence

i laugh
i laugh out loudly so that you can hear and think finally that i am all right and that i have survived
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Taken Your Slice Of Bread

i have taken your slice of bread
from the table

it is for you
as i have already eaten mine early
this morning

forgive me
i have learned to eat more

and took without so much
thinking
your share

the slice of bread
one half bigger than mine

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have This Big Mirror In My Living Room

i have this big mirror in my living room
i guess you must have liked it yesterday you bought one and true to its purpose your living room like mine has become a wide space more fantasies, more time seeping in, more ideas perhaps, more rivers in the mind, more skies, more emptiness, but let me not talk about it for now.

i like it to be broken. Let me tell you in my next poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have To Go I Cannot Stay

i am just a pilgrim and my real job is to walk anywhere i am a vagabond and my place is everywhere i do not even have stars to follow to serve as my guide, i walk and sleep and walk and sleep and walk again under the skies night and day alone

follow me and take the risk, but of course, i will be happy to have you and be my love in this pilgrimage anywhere everywhere somewhere we shall be together when we shall arrive possibly still holding with our mournful gazes cheers... i am not the fine wine just plain water, and you are not the cup just plain cusped hands...

drink, we shall walk again this time, together, beside each other..

we follow Him.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have To Speak....

it is nice to say
nothing
this i always see in the other person
always silent nods when asked shakes his head
when he disagrees
i wonder if being mute is a beautiful feeling for that is what skies and seas do to us we who stroll along the park
trying to figure out
how come we love this noise
and miss it when we are facing
the storms of our lives
i dream to be secretive
for once
hide in the silence of my loneliness
but the dread comes rushing
and if i do not speak i die.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have To Walk Away Again Looking For The Fresh Air

one finds a hard time nowadays looking for fresh air

i step over a good view of the rice fields from an Asian perspective the rice fields are flowering dews still sticking on the blades of grass the sun is slowly rising from the mountains a lot of fog hang on the sides coconut trees are towering not much winds today from the sea a middle aged farmer stands under a tree with his sweater on and his long bolo on his side smoking his cigar the woman in the house is cooking mud fish for breakfast meanwhile she goes out and starts a fire under the mango tree burning a rubber tire to drive some insects away which she thinks are destroying the tiny white flowers of the tree

i smell the smoke coming from the cigar it is floating in the air the smoke from the rubber tire burning is choking me

somehow that is what is being done to this world brought about by ignorance and superstition and bad habits i have to walk away again looking for the fresh air

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Worms Inside My Mouth at first i wanted to spit them all wanting to relieve myself with all the hassle in keeping worms

that my friends detest

they tell me that i must spit them all for reasons of sanitation

or perhaps for my own sanity

i think about it
and the possibilities
of finally throwing up after all i get nauseous

this feeling of trying to hide
some things
inside the mouth

(do you know
about it?)

i could not do the throwing up
and so
the worms are still there it is something about giving them
temporary shelter
a home

i did not listen to myself i did not listen to their advices i decided to keep the worms for good swallowing each worm sliding in my esophagus and finally settling inside the rooms of my heart

i dream about each worm wriggling inside my brain but i keep them still despite the mixed feelings of pleasure and pain

one day
the worms become butterflies and i feel ready for this beautiful eventuality

i look up
to the heavens
on a very bright day

i spit them
all free

to the skies to the clouds and to the trees where they all rightfully belong

RIC S. BASTASA
I Have Written This Poem

i have written this poem
at early dawn
when the heavy rains of the evening
stopped falling when the birds
on the trees
start to fly again

RIC S. BASTASA
I Heal Myself

from a broken heart
i start mending, sewing what was torn from the bleeding
i seal the leaks and wipe the blood i seal my lips
and prepare myself
always for another
love
another new beginning obligated to move on because at the end i must declare
i love myself more than anyone of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Hear Music From The Wind

i hear music from the wind it 's the arias of the diva air.

i hear the sad song from the conch i keep it singing in my ear i see the great love from the rays of the sun spreading embracing me this early morning i taste the coffee-ness of coffee from the cup i love the sweetness of sugar the creaminess of cream i love the liveliness of life i dance its dance and sings its songs and taste its taste i face all things sitting down in a lotus position

RIC S. BASTASA
I Hear The Body Speak

i hear the body speak
today warning the soul that its demands sometimes cannot be granted because the soul is merely its visitor and here on earth the body is the host and as host, it decides what is good for the moment what is best for itself

RIC S. BASTASA
I Heard

i heard that to stop your mama from wasting her life and all the lives of those who also love her
like you
and your brother and sisters and even your papa
you decided to choose
silence
extreme, determined, strong, authoritative silence
in the house
for you were once such a lively little girl dancing in the yard and so sweet with ribbons in your hair and smiling and laughing at the top of your innocent voice
and then
all of a sudden you embraced silence and your mama was stunned, stoned to your quick numbness and afraid about what people say that you have become crazy, a product of a broken home your mama
finally opens her eyes and for the first time in her life sees you a woman who wants to bloom but obstructed by her choking hands she is so afraid finally she lets you grow she sets you free she now calls you
your name.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Heaved A Sigh

i heaved a sigh
passing by the store seeing this handsome man tragically falling on a manhole

(or was he eaten swallowed hole)

because there was this mirror on the store walls and he was looking at himself rather than his steps

his name is Narcissus

RIC S. BASTASA
I Honestly Love You, Some Notes

2 months ago
Had to say this again...

30 yrs ago I fell in love with a girl & she with me.

We both had partners,
so nothing good would've come from it.

I sang this to her -
we cried, kissed & parted.

We met once&65279; more at an office reunion 15 yrs later.
I was single,
she was with the same man, but it didn't matter -

one look was all it took to know that we'd made a mistake.

I found out last year that she died suddenly at home 5 yrs ago
she had breast cancer.

I miss her. That's it.
I just miss her.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Hope I Am Just Like You

i know
that you will be reading this.

This is thinking about man's capacity to quit.
TO dismiss what he grows inside his heart.

He was talking about the stalk of the fruit.
His end like the sap. The white sap of the stain of the stalk of the fruit the banana stalk giving off the white sap from its stalk cut off by the sharp bolo when it ripens

he is talking about the mouth and the last spit of the saliva rabid. The dog finally goes off the street and bites everybody.

I am bitten. And i have no last word to say.
There is no reason to quit. everything ends. There is such thing as a natural death.

soon it will come. I am waiting.
I try to tell you that there will be an end to this.
It is obvious. Too obvious. Like sunlight to my forehead.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Hope You Wouldn't Mind

i have blind spots
i sometimes do not see what you see clearly and i stumble down upon some thorns and hurt myself unnecessarily and i look at myself in the mirror like a curious child wanting to see who i am and what i am only to find some wrinkles
in my mind

i hope you wouldn't mind if i tell you that you and me have some things in common blind in some ways and seeing well in others i live in an island and there is a rock there and a red rose that i keep all day i like you to live with me for i may have the eyes that see the rising and setting of the sun and the hands and fingers that feel the warmth and the coldness of the seasons that whirl around my head may i ask you to please bring your heart for i have long lost mine it was taken by someone who promised to live with me here that bird flew away taking from my lexicon the word 'forever'

RIC S. BASTASA
I Imagine

i imagine
you thinking woman

your elbow
calloused
on the table
by so much
thinking

your legs
scarred
your bottoms bothered by innumerable ideas
coming out
from your head
like the colored sparks
of the fourth of July

i imagine
you sitting on your study a heated
chair
a burning
table

a room crowded with a lot of warring ideas
a bed
not enticing
you to sleep

i imagine
you thinking
woman

scribbling
your poems
burning
a dozen
candles

i imagine
your fury
your disappointments
your disgrace
your fall from their grasp

the bump
of your head on their shallow waters

thinking woman
be pleased
in truth

i have not offended you

all my hairs
have decided to fall
on the floor

and my eyes
have lost
the need
for eyelids

and be happy
we still talk in the lines
of this
unstoppable
poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
I Insist.....Tell Me...

they dream of a well ordered society

a house with a roof without leaks
a window that closes
and opens in perfection
a stair like a complete set of teeth

a society that flowers with hope

manicured lawns
and happy roads without fences
exuding confidences,

for all these years
these dreams did not come true
a fact that is hard to accept or has remained unacceptable to their standards

hence, this is what is happening now
by all means
by hook or by crook

they take the law into their hands
make list of the unfit and then work out for their elimination

we all have the same eyes
and minds
robotics in numbers and will be programmed
by:

who? by who? tell me
i insist.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Just Hope That She Will Be Alive When I Tell Her This.

i understand your predicament the house is as spacious as the whole sky and there are no stars in there i heard once when you speak and there were echoes bouncing from wall to wall and when it arrives to me its only message is ennui, do you want me to tell her that there is a rope in the house which is posing a threat to your existence and that night after night you fear yourself for an inhuman possibility?

that big screen in your living room will not work,
i tell you,
that menagerie of hummers will have no way of appeasing your hunger for affection, the garden of bamboos are neuters all you ask is the human element the one that gives you a glass of beer while you plunge yourself in the sea the one that gives you springtime the one that affirms for once that you are a breather

i will tell her that before the next war erupts before we are all destroyed by this incoming chaos

i just hope that she will be alive when i tell her this.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Just Love Being With You

do not say anything
mislead me
in the labyrinths of your
silence,

i do not worry
i love being lost with you

RIC S. BASTASA
I Just Remember It Today

i remember when we were young reared in want accustomed to nothing
grown with guts
chasing dreams

we pretended that sands were grains of rice that stones were loaves of bread and pebbles as fried meatballs we built a house made of coconut leaves we had tin cans as kettles we only needed a handful of water in order to live in such imaginations i remember when were so young

we were so happy
laughing over our mistakes we did not mind what comes next we were always ready for the best we kept on saying, ' we ain't seen nothing yet! '

RIC S. BASTASA
I Keep A Place Where Everything Is Neither Sacred Nor Mundane

it is a place where what i touch i can touch where what i smell i can smell with all freedom where i can undress and look at my body and see for myself the innermost chamber of my heart where my soul sings for me the real songs of my life there is a pond there where i lay myself down where i can stare at myself through the eyes of my being at peace

the pond is a mirror where i can view the whole of my world its face without any wrinkle its body without any ripple

RIC S. BASTASA
I Keep Looking For More Beyond And Deep Inside And Out

i have often believed in all of you

what you have written
amazed me endlessly

the enigma kept the mysteries buried underneath the wisdom of your fragile spirits

the world listens attentively
but is not impressed

everything is just superficial to its layered wisdom
inside the wombs
of its oceans

you have often focused on your fingers
where petals are dying their mortal textures their redness turning into cracks of brown pieces

i am tempted at times to settle for all these sweet concealment
spirits of men singing what this world feels with all fragile frills and nod with all admission that it is true
and yet it must not be uttered
for fear that we can be wrong too

for who is so certain about what we feel?
for what we cannot really say?

nimble and shivering along the paths of stone i keep looking for more beyond and deep inside
and out

RIC S. BASTASA
I Keep My Fists You Read Your Palms.

well, we can be here for that formality

after all we had those years together

we held our hands like a flower bouquet

twas like a marriage of this sort

i make promises and you listen

i give you all those years and you take them now we are sitting on a chair facing the road

we both leave this place all those years

i go left you go right and since this world is round

we keep the hope, that convergence out there

hope you can meet love hope i can meet hope

the moment of boredom has arrived with an empty hand i keep my fists

you read your palms.
I Keep My Heart

there may be something wrong with the weather, tell me, there is something wrong with the way the temperature is rising today at 30 tomorrow at 36 my blood is boiling my heart is beating that fast and there is nothing to be done about it i am used in keeping my heart broken

RIC S. BASTASA
I Keep My Silence, I Think You Are Simply Seeing What We Really Are.

perhaps i have visited this island for six times, and now it is still amazing, white sands, cool coconut trees, colored pebbles, fresh air, emerald waters, this is the second time with you and there you are lying on the sand without your hats and sunglasses on.

complaining, there is so much heat and you do not like it, the sea is getting polluted, food is boring and the sound of the waves sonorous, i keep my silence, i think you are simply seeing what we really are. and i am so worried about tomorrow.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Keep On Thinking

As we talk
i keep on thinking
who is this man who is talking to me is he my comrade in poetry? he is funny and he is hard he writes too but revises as he says as often as he wants to wanting perfection perhaps?
is perfection a good motive to be a man? or is it nicer to be a man of all the imperfections?
do you wish to insult God with your wish for perfection?
i keep on thinking and then i keep on writing aimlessly firing all my guts to nowhere and then i stop
i like it this way
aimlessly devoted to
me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know

i know what you want to hear from me after tonight
after i untangle my arms around you after i take away my lips from yours after i hide my tongue i know what you want me to utter
after tonight
when the stars fade away when the darkness hovers again like a giant black bird
when there is nothing left between us i know what i can still afford to say:

i love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know For Sure

i know for sure
that when
you see
the sun directly
you close
your eyes
and see
everything
red inside
you

you do not want to be hurt
again

i know for sure
that when you close
your eyes
you see what you
want to see

will it be
me?

or will it
be him?

or will
it just
be yourself?

in pain
alone
I Know How The Grass Works

gthey die and they grow and they repeat this cycle all over again even if we are finally gone and buried underneath them.

i know how they are tended and burned, i like how they spread far and wide and become the green coat of the mountains again.

what i cannot understand is the departure of two lovers who slept once under the moon on a dark night on that same grass.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know I Am Not Getting Any Younger

i look at my face in the mirror and take my comb and start to part my thick black hair in the middle of my forehead,
a black dye cannot hide anymore the white at the bottom of my hair all of them and i stare at myself and begin to fear the hands of the clock ticking

i know i am not getting any younger and i am eating a lot of oysters fresh from San Pedro wanting to recover the lost drives somewhere in San Isidro Labrador how can i lose this hardness of my being?

my life has orbited on this belief that i only live when i am useful to each of you

i return my hair to its original style looking so young again i love this face and i tell myself it must still sink a hundred ships
till i am gone
till i am forgotten by all of them

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know I Have Only One Heart To Give

i have only one heart
to give
and one soul to share

but if all of you wish it divide my heart into four my soul into twenty four for i am not poor in love i open my door.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know That It Is Him Whom You Love And Not Me

i know that it is him whom you love because when i left your backyard despite the silence and the emptiness of that hollow space

despite the absence of the wind the umbrella in your hand begins to dance your foot too caught in the act of pointing a toe as though it will dance a hulaballo he is coming and you can smell the perfume of his shadow seven high mountains away from here despite the fact that i am still about an inch away from the bamboo fence of your house when the wind from the champaca tree whispers his name your heart beats and in an instant you have become a flirt.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know That It Is Unfair. But I Leave It That Way.

I know it is unfair.
The numbers do not lie to me.
The heart keeps on saying that it is the only truth.
I feel it too, but i decide not to do anything.
I keep things to myself.
I know who i am
and what will i become when i am no longer here.
This world is a left-over and this is what those real cockroaches really love.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know That You Know How It Feels Tia Maria

i take a look again
eye to eye
to that white-breasted bird

it flies away in the middle of the rain leaving a leaf
falling

this time it is the leaf always alone
always to the bottom of the wet empty ground

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know That You Still Love Me...

between shakespeare and bukowski

i prefer bukowski

brautigan smells better than shelly

this is my way of telling you that i am shallow and cheap on the other hand when i begin to write like bukowski and brautigan

combined

i know that somehow in that academic pretense of yours you still like me and read a lot about what i write

inside your room
when you are all alone
and then
with affection
you kiss every word that you think i do not really mean writing

and then
you giggle

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know What I Do Not Have...

how shallow
is your water

only toes
how bland is your taste

no finger licking how gullible are you in this thing of getting only the honor which you cannot eat

it is true
one does not live by bread alone

what now? we need salt and pepper

coffee and water and a little sugar beside a slice of bread

sandwiched between honor and
money

do not ask me i know what i do not have.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know What You Feel As Always

when you go to the river where palms are still where a duck floats on top of a crystal water that mirrors the clouds of white and blue where the wind is as fresh as the memories of your morning eyes that look blankly upon a sight of a flowing green mountain range to a horizon that has no end fading like a sleepy word i know what you feel for in here in this seeming perfection

day is where you do not clamor for any change where permanence is the virtue that you now put upon the hands of nature the way you felt loved in the utter silence of its cares.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know Why You Are Following Me...

perhaps you see that we have many things in common something is twisted and yet so beautiful still to follow white hair when all the hair becomes white reminds us about the snow of our lonely imaginations something cold and haunting something pains us but redeems us sometimes all the paradox explains this doubt clarifies what has been too disturbing and it is in the middle of so much noise that we appreciate the tiny silence of our hearts.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know You Are Here

i know you are here
i have this sense of smell of a fox a dog, a cat and i smell your decency in your discreet appearances in the air in the atmosphere where you keep your silence and secret
presence

you love me i know and you would have wanted to touch me as i too
do

but the world has its own rules and laws of nature
and physical dictates its axis
its determined revolutions the way the zodiac put the stars

you are at one end and i am at the other we smell
each other's presence we sense each other's longings even in a distance of lightyears
of this interplanetary distances yet i am the earth and you are the sky i am the sun and you are the moon you are the farthest star and i am the pebble thrown to the deepest part of the ocean floor it is simply this memory that links us something unfulfilled

the empty space
and the passing wind invisible always till the end of time i feel the coldness of us on the skin
of my cheek

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know You Are There

i let you stay there i know you have been there before i arrived
i can't give a reason why i am late again traffic is a silly excuse there will be more hours waiting for more of the coming hours
there are no moments to share
you look at me
as though i am a sick man i am famished
i like to go back home and better spend
my time
with the refrigerator.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know You Are There And I Know You Understand

What I am saying,
I say from my heart
Two faces, happy & sad, Hate & love in one body,
And you see them
In the mirror as you shake your hair For some lies, combing some truths For me to gaze upon like I am This woman asking from your crystal ball

What happens tomorrow?
When I am alone and he is gone, Do I have to speak in riddles for you to Really find the answers? No, I don’t because I am candid about feelings, Ask me again if I am happy And I will show you some scars.

I know you are there and I know you understand

When I tell you that I am crying and sobbing On a laptop of stories, He will neither hear me nor you, but we will all be here, In this tragedy of the hearts

Of two faces, happy & sad, and hate & love, and hate & love, Wanting to go but also wanting to stay
I know you are there and I know you understand, stay, and stay

I will be going away but only for a while.

(a poem for ric, from his wife)

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know You Do Not Feel Anything In Some Of My Lines

i accept my defeat in knowing you i get the shake of your left hand as you keep the other safe and sound in your pocket i can sense the hesitation in your tongue that utters some doublespeaks again in your 'how do you do?' I will always respond with 'I am fine' but deep within this brief exchange of lines i know you do not feel anything anymore in the last two lines that i utter

i hint that what you like most is 'goodbye, i am leaving' and you do not show any sign of holding my arms your right hand is still in your pocket playing with the coin that you toss:
it's the tail this time and i lose

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know You Live A Very Simple Life

i know my friend that you live a very simple life out there waking up in the morning working in the office buying food in the market watch tv
sleep early at night wake up early again
listen to the morning news a visit in the chapel work in the office again a chat with friends a little drink of cali with them sometimes
and no broken heart to nourish like a wound that does not heal.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Know You'Re Hurt

i know you are there in your usual electronic silence, facing the monitor of your laptop. the kind of person who keeps all the hurts inside her heart you bleed and you simply let the blood flow from your hands to the floor, and the blood flows like water spilled from your drinking glass.

the beauty of your pain shows through those beautiful flowers sprouting on the floors all the vines of green and blue tendrils spreading on the window sill, the ceiling, the roof.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Learned A Lot From You Today

first, i like the way you say hello and your concern when sometimes i get disconnected
the way you insist that we still have many things to talk about not just love but politics and perhaps religion

second, i like the way we embrace clean fun now, nothing about sex (though i honestly miss it, and perhaps you too but we take a break from this monotony)

and i even recommend that we talk about philosophy or
poetry
you say you only like to read them when you are lonely but not when you are hot
and... gee

third, i like it when you leave me without saying goodbye i know this thing called love
between us
shall not end... it 's like a comma
looking for the exclamation point

fourth, i like it here when i am alone again i learn to think some more
what to do with my life
when you might be gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Leave For Another Place.....

Up in the sky
gold fish are swimming looking like
kites

down under the white herons are pecking upon humpback whales

there is something wrong really wrong i know

and i ask you and you just laugh
it is funny
but you ask no question as it happens that way this is art, you keep telling me everything is possible and beautiful, but i do mind i still live there

black dogs eating grass and cows grinning with knuckle bones
inside their mouths

i like to change this world beauty is not like this it is something else it is the orderly arrangement of nature from big to small

there are numbers to follow memories to put in writing in cards and waiting for more to count there is a figure in sorrow squares and triangles

but it is the melting that is real you keep on saying and it is indeed funny and real too

i left, and draw a world where windows are windows where spades are called spades because they are.

No games now. No games now.
This is real. I am counting reality as real.

for now i walk alone in peace.
Hope is a giant jellyfish breathing
under the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Leave To Give You Sweet Memories

delighted time.
net to wash my face
i get wet and rub my face with a white towel
and open my eyes and see for once myself, this man, abandoned by time so quickly like yesterday and today and tomorrow
all mixed in a second white locks of hair bony cheeks, and serious eyes, looking through
the mirror
wanting to find if there is yet another me that i can live with for another more time to be reborn
and use the youth
that i have wasted
without much thought.
i see, i am melting,
i see, i am air.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Left You In Your Sleep

after the caress is over when the sweat dries and the trembling subsides when the blankets sought you cover when the pillow finds itself vacant again

one's mind sleeps for a while and then begins to wander again in the forest under the trees one must find another prey just to survive

you have always been the predator in my sleep you left me: i was the prey.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Lied When I Told Her That I Am In Alaska

to make fun of life when you feel that you are like inside a can of milk
i told her by way of a joke that i am in Alaska...

of course she does not believe it for all the while she knows that my only Alaska is no other than the Condensada.

But i get the point though albeit in a manner that is subtle that indeed i am in Alaska that cold round can so sweet with all the condensed reconstituted milk causing Diabetes

RIC S. BASTASA
I Lied.....

to cut off
dreams and that chain of memory
i told you
that it was ugly
that it stinks
that all those are rotten fish
that we both must finally avoid it
bury the dead
and keep away from that foul
place

i lied.

(i just wish you
happiness
you have to leave and find what is best for you

buds are nicer with
the flowers
the dead roots
are simply out of
place

let the new barks
hold the existence
of trees
let the dead
find shelter in the company of the soil happy with the humus where new seeds
must open up and begin to grow another life again)

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like It

i like it when you go classical, something like stating the obvious so i may not have to waste my brain figuring out
what you mean
i like it when you are so natural as simple as rain falling and wetting the grass as simple as you stop and then give way for the sun as simple as sunshine spreading on our hair i like it when you are so light nothing heavy on your eyelids nothing blue and black all white
so pure like a sky not stained with clouds
like a night sky
still bright with the stars i like it when you are so silent like a sailboat on the river without much ripples.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like It Here

this is my place, insignificant, small, fleeting even, like a soft breath coming out of my mouth when i utter the word
you and i, but you are still confused unable to understand each letter like chopped string beans so disconnected from each piece
i understand myself now as intimately as my nose to my lips to smell and sound touching each other
this moment,
i still say convinced as i am like how the window pane agrees to entertain a morning chill and then the light coming,
i still say, i like it here, the view from here, green mountains hairy with forest trees rivers running like children in the parks clouds drifting like butterflies all in the hues of pastel blue and some scratches of white and gray, i like the sea here friendly salt to my tears, i like the gardens here, so alive with flowers and bees and blades of grass, i like it here
and i have no plans ever to leave even with you telling me that you love me till the end of days and nights, you are lying and there is no sense dying in the beds of your dreams so far away like a mythical kingdom.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like It Here (Part Two)

i like it here
i speak my lines i deliver them and there is no one to listen how do i know you listening? but even if i know you are there

it does not really matter

i am here only to speak and i do not want to hear you talking back

i like it here
this place is simply perfect for my circumlocution my monologue
the way i speak to the moon when the stars are so silent and unminding the way i talk to the river when it simply passes by its banks the way i talk to a stone, a tree, a pole, a cloud, the way i talk to a glass one day whose water i have all drank the way i talk to a horse, a dog, a cat, or even to a pillow all wet with my tears.

i like this monologue.
i burst and then i live anew
for another day
tomorrow.

yes, i like it too
talking to your picture that i keep many years ago.
black and white and scented with moth balls.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like It This Time

when the world is so silent because everyone is fast asleep.
when the night is dark when all the lights on the street
are turned off
when no one walks his way back home
because everyone is finally
at home
i like it this time when the wind stops when the leaves find no disturbance
when the paths and roads are finally vacant from feet and cars and buses when every car is parked in the garage when the child sleeps in her mothers arms sucking her nipple when the father is beside mother's
body
when sisters hug each other in bed
i like it this time when the world finally is rested for i am now awakened from my sleep
i like it this time when i begin
to write
when what i hear is this computer machine is buzzing fanning (sighing)
like my long trip
in the plane.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like It When You Are Faraway

well
you are more beautiful
that way

like a tree
on top of the
mountain
fronting me
casting only a shadow

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like My Departure To Be Like A Movie Ending

something like
you will not miss and judge as a flop

i step outside the door i lock the knob
and what you finally see is a big wall

you think if there are stars outside a long road
a very dark and wide sky

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like Talking To You

today i like talking to you i feel that you are stupid and i am at home with you.

hope you are not offended, stupidity begets stupidity.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like That Idea

i like the idea of what boats are meant for i told you once
boats are meant to sail far to the sea
and dissolve in the horizon till they are gone till they sink to the bottom of the sea and kiss its floor
and become the permanent ornaments of the corrals and sands but i like your idea too of boats

like mine sailing to the farthest sea of boats like yours that come back and embrace again the welcoming arms of the ports and the shores and hear the sounds
of men and women
and children
all rejoicing

RIC S. BASTASA
i like that you stay,
for a moment inside my room.

i will ask you, those little things that you can do for me, so you will stay for a while so i may have a smell of you so i may see you even for a few seconds so i may have life.

i ask you to pull the calendar page. It is not october anymore. Time flies. you display me the face of november. a sad one.

a face of uncompromising stance. Not not you. Not your love. you may refuse my feelings, like the way you resist some sweeter spaces between us. i like you.

i like you to stay even for a moment.

you flatten a crumpled piece of paper and you ask:
there is still something important on this page.

i look at it. some words, not supposedly written some words, not to be read by anybody.

you read it. how can you understand?
when i always conceal the meaning of my pain. i am only for me. I understand the rules of this game.

i like you to stay really. i like you.
but then, i open the door and then you leave.

you have never understood, the silent beats of my dying heart.
i like it this way. i touch myself still wanting to touch you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like The Flow Of Language That Is So Natural

like falling rain
hitting a yam leaf,

round drops sliding
to the tendrils
of a vine

like water leaking from a roof saved by a tin can (remember poor Basho's poem

while he was trying to sleep
on a rainy day)

like the sound of lips making a kiss of the ten fingers of the hands sliding on thighs
down to the most sensitive part of the human body

the vulva &
the glans
in mutuality of accepting the rule
of desire

making the most out of the last remaining
moments of
love.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like The Image

of two white butterflies fluttering on top of the blooming blue daisies beside two old graves

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like The Image Of Clouds Keeping On Changing

i am simply amazed with the way the clouds keep on changing themselves and sadly, the winds do not really admit their faults how they blow harder and how they stop when the clouds are carried away in ecstasy and red with sunset the clouds are mad to the coming of the night its blackness overpowering its quest for the good and the true and the beautiful. The moon sits with the stars in meditation, what goes wrong? why so silent?

that seems to be their theme in the motif of stillness and the wind now with the wolves and dogs howl throughout the night telling the trees that they are ready for love and lust.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like The Sound Of The Rain Pouring today i listen to the rain pouring from the roof to the gutter to the polyvinyl pipe down to the ground which i filled with pebbles the water drains to the garden where the roots take all the joyous time of seeping and drinking the pure taste of life's waters it is music to my ears, these slow dripping much like the rhythm of your classical poetry Catullus and Sappho and Emily and Pablo.

i realize then that my poems are too inferior than those unwritten by the grace of nature.
I will not be at a loss, for soon, i shall imitate them.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like The Way You Do Things Effortlessly you simply stay still on the water and then slide away nothing to pack and put on a sack or keep as a memory i despise myself from working

too much

you are in that clear pond and you look at me and there is nothing really done in magnificence to make your eyes show all the wonders of your world in a light & slimy body silent in a pond with the moss on the rocks and the lilies on top of your head and the ripples of the water caused by your fins and your mouth gropes for nothing expensive but just air.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like The Way You Write

narrative poetry in little doses of feelings from the most trivial to the least know, and it is everyday,
i like it that way you make a diary of what happens along the way a glass of water inhabited by a black fish
a room becoming a haven for a blue butterfly the lamp as the center of your universe
the chairs as knights of the night armor applauding waiting orders from your head king of imagination your bed hugging you as the queen of purple hearts words playing like kids in the part at the center of the city of halluballoo (read as hallucination) while their mothers are away doing the marketing calling daddies to fetch their kids back home.

by now you know this is nothing but play: a dolphin catching a ball passing it to the parakeet rumor mongering with another parakeet as the clock of nature ticks and ticks: my ears are tickled by the feathers of triviality.
I Like This Poem

i like this poem of yours, always unfinished, makes my imagination run wild,
i like the words misspelled and the lines without a period no sense of ending no sense of time

i like the senselessness of it all it is so unreal

like most of us

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like This To Be Frank And Simple

you turn me on even your picture turns me on as though i am a bird remembering
bigger wings
to clouds long forgotten
you turn me on
that is a fact that i can no longer deny my mind whirls
looking for an exit
my super ego says
i must me not be turned on by a mere you
by a mere picture of you but you still turn me on oh i love this feeling of you turning me on and my id says let it be open like a bud let the bee share the nectar
but there is in me that stays strong
and now
you cannot turn me on I'm off
closed as a bud
tight as vacuum falling to the ground.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like This To Be Just Mine

what used not to hurt begins to feel

you keep it inside
hoping that it will just shrink

and be gone it spreads and you hide it with a scarf or a hood

it spreads some more like a woman's long black hair which the wind catches that smell that it brings to the sea to another island where the one who really loves you smells and comes back to take you

away from me

as i get stuck on the mud of my own feet deceived by the fairies of my own pride slowly eating me like the pizza with cheese still hanging on your chin waiting to be cleaned

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Believe In Reincarnation

i imagine a room
and you are alone,
i do not like to hear a sound of weeping,

do not
weep,

silence is more decent, it wears the fabric of dignity a suffering with dignity the one with eyes that stare at the incoming death without blinking

the courage of blood corpuscles that keeps on circulating despite the inevitability of an ending

there is a travel that has no destination if we choose to it is like changing clothes because we believe in the series of occasions some wise guys call it a cycle now, tomorrow, tonight

early morning
noon, the fading of the sun the shining moments of little glories

we must believe this in order not to be shocked by constant endings

it is like a window where from time to time we set aside a silk fabric with tiny embroidered flowers

we open it when we like it

and when we are tired
we close it

just that.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Build This Bridge

i like to build this bridge
between us

the river that divides us
is long and wide
and the waters rage like the fury
of the night
that fought against the bright days
of my life

i like to build this bridge between our minds two continents divided by an ocean
seemingly
the shores they're nowhere to be found

i like to build this bridge
let me just tell you that before i finally take my leave

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Dance

i like to dance
early this morning
like a top
whirling whirling
like a top
till i get nauseous
at the end
till i lay flat tired
on the floor
flat footed on the stairs from Jamaica
to the world
as they sing it like love
it will just be love
for my
fading generation.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Keep The Feeling

i am wasted on some feelings i like to keep them but they always end up consumed

gone
lost
evaporated with no mark left for me to understand or recall

how i wish i could have written that feeling
of
love

writing them faithfully like a devotion but i couldn't

my eyes are covered by tears and they cannot see and my hands tremble at the moment of recalling on wasted feelings

i must thrive
alone, without you, without your memory, i muster courage to live without meaning at all

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Love You But...

i like to give you flowers and chocolates and (money, if that will not offend your kind of sensibility)
for you to love me and love me (perhaps) as true as i am and wanna be but i won't you are cold and dead heartless

to my pleas.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To See Love Dance Before Me

i am boredom

i sit on a chair watching a show
it is love
bellydancing its way into the secret room
of my heart

i am lust

i lie on bed and here comes love naked on top of my heart
my ears hear the beating

i am love finally lust overpowered after this darkness that is so sweet love and lust sleep in the silence of their fulfillment

i am flesh closing its eyes i am a spirit soaring in the skies

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Stay With You

if you're a flower
i'll be a bee
and if you're the sun
let me be the earth and if you're the mountain let me be the cloud if you are the sea
let me be the river
if you are the hand let me just be a finger if you are the face let me just be an eye
if you go away
let me go with you
if you stay
let me stay with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Think That All These Are But A Game Of Words that is the impression from the beginning when i started to scribble word, and more words, i assured her that they do not mean anything at all just words, and words and more words that even a sunflower wilting and spreading all the seed on her feet are nothing too but words and more words nothing to grow nothing to expect like a sprouting something thus my loneliness, i again assure here, is nothing but a word my way of taking solitude on the other side to save myself is another word, and she of course, did not believe me saying there is more to these words, there is fire in them and i see you burning there is the sun inside them and the letters glow and the

there is smoke rising from the heads of vowels from the nonspeaking consonants i keep hiding the flowers i bury those that are alive in the silence of my pretensions until one day she grips me like she is a knife wanting to stab me and then she stabbed me right in my throat and there i bleed words, words, and more words coming from the slit bloody words, and she was convinced, until death, ... and then i vanish.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Think That You Are Much Better Than Myself, But...

you are years ahead
i like you to think that you are much better in terms of compassion

knowledge had always been younger than compassion

yet compassion is as meek as it is not assertive

i like to think that you are much better but you have not lived that much you are never water to fire never a tree to a bird

you have taken side with the ax and the flint

there is so much blood around the rocks are bathing confusion flows to the sea the rivers are willing victims you put gasoline on chaos and you dance around that big fire i like to think that you are older and much better than myself

but your hands have grown nails and splinters of glass and like a hand grenade you finally exploded and killed so many and

died
i like to think that i should have done better you have nailed my feet on the floor and splinters wound my soles

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Write A Poem

about a cock roach
that i just stamped
with my right
foot

it is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like To Write An Epic

i like to write an epic about a prince who went away to find his destiny
who met his enemies beasts and bad spirits who slew them all who found his own kingdom on top of the tallest mountains reaching the skies who rode on a Pegasus and swept away another Helen there was this war for a thousand years and there were betrayals and losses and gains and at the end
the tragedy happens the epic is unfinished all the while i will finish it but then my friend you fall short of time at the happy ending when the prince finally comes home as a king
you are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
well, today, i like to write like gary soto and his cotton lines the man next door with a hoe and ticket and dream of food and little children on his lap in his home after hours of work under some masters

i like to write like gary soto on his hitchhike to san francisco with the migratory birds and the waters from the danals dragging him to a richer town but it is so sad, i can't be gary or any other sordid soto, i guess i may not be so dumb but i am not that smart either.

so i will just be me trying this kind of experimental poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like Tomato Sauce

i like tomato sauce
and so i keep lots of
and different kinds of tomato sauces inside the ref and when i open it one night i thought tomato sauce are also water and i am in a trance of some sort or something i drink tomato sauce
and i remember you:

saucy, so saucy
i thought i am floating in the river filled with tomato sauce, yes,

my point is: be proud
i always think of you.

saucy, yes, so saucy.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like Your Silence

i like your silence
now
it is not like the silence we had before

your silence
now is different
it is reminiscing
it is refreshing
it is sensitive to my presence
it is reflective of
who i am
enabling me
to hear my breath
to see and
feel
my very own soul

i like your silence
now
it is the silence
of the memory that cannot be forgotten

it is not death
it is life
it is the blossom of my sorrow
it is the fruit of my despair
it is the silence
of my silence
it is the peace within my
solitude
it has become the center of
my life
the focus of my scattering
the finding of my loss

RIC S. BASTASA
I Like Your Silence For The Past Few Days

i like your silence for the past few days
nonetheless,
i am hearing more what you do not have to say there is this silence of absence that speaks well of you there is this fondness that was not there before there is this whisper that is more patient than the scream gentler, so filled with wisdom more beautiful than the routinized hellos more meaningful than everyday i guess it is when you speak less that you speak most wisely.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Live, Therefore, I Ignore. That Is Me In Descartes.

this is the picture of a snake like scar on my left leg,

long and crooked, you see, i was then a hard headed kid and when mother told me to take my morning bath instead i climbed a sour tree and wondered there how is it to fall and bleed, and indeed i got this long and snake like wound and due to the loss of so much blood i lost consciousness

when i woke up
mother was beside me berating my being the most hard headed kid among her five children that was the time when i learned the art of ignorance: to ignore her again and again, until she died, perhaps believing that i was the most impossible kind,

i have no regrets.
i live happily now ignoring everything: harsh realities are ordinary events, when someone is killed i just turn my head to the other side of the street, or i just close my eyes and live in another world, i live, therefore, i ignore.

that is me in Descartes.

and why am i proud of these scars?
it is understandable.

Obvious as they are,
record my
triumphs.
I Look At Fear

i look at fear
and fear looks at me i am not shaken
i do not allow it
fear looks at me again
and i look at it
straight in the eye
then it smiles
and says
it is enough
the short encounter is over and it turns away leaving

RIC S. BASTASA
dusty pages of a bundle of papers i untie them
so i can look at the past honestly, it could be that i was at fault or simply you ruining my life somehow like a broken piece of glass

a dainty dancer
tiptoeing on a mechanical music box on broken heels

i read again and again and the pain
comes but it is not that as painful when you first come into my life

you claim that both of us are broken i answer with my silence
for years
and there will be more years for this silence
still

you offer your hand in friendship no, i will not receive it i could have been so civil in my manners like anybody else but you must have not noticed something that you cannot find in me anymore

i have lost my face and it is not within your power to ever replace it i will be honest before my God and i may be wicked and too vindictive

i still pray that you may find your soul still burning in there

RIC S. BASTASA
I Look For Her Name On The Top 500 List and she is not there but she writes so well and i must disagree with the rating

oh i know
she uses another name could be whatever and surely she must be there.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Look Up The Sky

i look up
the sky finding you to be a very bright star and i ponder

if i down here
a pebble on the grass silent and left alone
by my companion
if you still remember me

for once i was once a star too
shining beside you

it was love
that pulled me down
to earth
on the mud

and i pray
that it will be the same love that died
shall pull me up to redeem
my lost glory

but somehow
i like it here
beside a mound
where flowers grow
someone i love
is buried by the thick grass
in silence

RIC S. BASTASA
I Love The Moss. A Comfort To The Stones.

my hands
can never hold
the sky

it is my mind that climbs the stairs of your heaven

you are a god
sitting on your throne
why do you seek me?
a stone, a cut flower,
a dead ant,

loneliness is the
sickness too of those who believe they belong there

sun, moon and stars
a bouquet of bodies
you should have known
beforehand
that they are beyond the hands of feelings

look at you, bearded by light, vomiting storms stabbed by the sharp blades of your own thunder

i love the moss.
a comfort to the stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Love You

one that i cannot even
touch
spend my money on it
one that i cannot even remember
someone
yet to come and spur
my wildest
imagination

RIC S. BASTASA
I Love You Because...

the mountain how high still needs the coolness of dew glistening upon a leaf of morning,

the ocean how wide and blue still needs the song of fountains from the tributaries of rivers
from far

the meaning of the desert's life still clings upon the moon above the cactus where a frail violet flower still blooms, my slate of paper though white and pure still needs the grace of your scribblings for words to grow and give it our story for the world to read....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Love You Everyday

how would you know that everyday i love you secretly like my diary always written in some ciphers the longings
not open like the fields visible always to the clouds i like to bleed but it would be too unbecoming of my being a part of this society who installed gods and goddesses out of us victims of morality and restraint i make earnest glances and sometimes i make my gaze stand still to take a closer and longer look at your face and then i say, i love every angle of your cheeks and nose and eyes where i melt like an ice drop all my sweetness dripping down the drain

consumed am i and you did not even notice me, as the single stick remaining all the ice wasted, all my sugar thrown to the cold soil the frigid ground, the indifference that stabs me right in front of you

RIC S. BASTASA
I Love Your Ripe Papayas...

the papaya trees are blooming time runs so fast and there they are with you posing for their fruits like breasts of women from the roots to the top,
and so are your perennial eggplants with all the purple sizes, loaded into crates headed for the market,

your efforts have been converted into profits, or maybe for the service of the demanding consumers.

except you old lady, never married, and never had a kid, or if you had it with a man, it was plain rumors, and you always deny what pleasures are there waiting and available for your picking how you wasted so much time on the flowers and the vegetables and yet how you left yourself into the sorrow of singleness blessed art thou,

i am puzzled, but i am taking this to a stop.
none of my business.

i love your ripe papayas.

RIC S. BASTASA
I May Admit Finally That I Am Lying

in our short conversation when you ask questions about me i may answer you some lies and then you wonder if i am the kind of person who makes lies to you as i wonder too if you are the kind of person deserving to be lied by myself, and so i try to figure out the lies i made before and how honestly you believe them and then i sort of changing myself, and slowly revealing some of the names i keep on using, that these names may refer to one and the same person, which is myself, and you honestly believe me and i am of course, guilt-stricken and then i slowly unravel other names, other places, other circumstances, sorting out my life, page by page, and you listen carefully, and you also tell me there are two of you, two names, and that is the truth, and i honestly admit, i had some lies, lies for me to survive you and this sad world, and then i begin to answer your question with all honesty: you will regret it, there is more pain to the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
I May Blend With The Red Sky Again

clouds colored black Rising from the earth
Floating on red skies
The sun Is gray
Rectangular to the Earth shaped like
An ovum
a sensate object
splashes in the sea
Like an inverted comma

He is Icarus
He just drowned

They do not think
It is I

The sea is not green
It is black

I am trying to be Off-white

for you
To see

But you can’t
You did not try
seeing hard enough.

You have no time
For this
For me
Or anything else.

Sometimes I think
I should have Grown myself
into a suicide bomber
And then explode
Inside you.

Perhaps you
Will notice me
Finally.

My Color must not
Be red.
I may Blend with the Red sky again.

RIC S. BASTASA
I May Have Asked Your Name

i may have asked your name
and i may have mistaken you for someone who feels my pain and who knows where my body lives where my soul rests where my feet dust every bit of dirt where i close my eyes and sleep i may have been noisy and nosy i may have thought of the past neighbors who died whose crosses are removed from their old graveyards.

you who feel my pain and yet has no name you who say you lie you who say you survive what can i really say? Let me hug you Let me be with you Let me play with you In this dark space.

My name is nothingness.

RIC S. BASTASA
I May Still Move On...

if you go away
from the darkness of my room
in the middle of my struggle for a little flicker of light dreaming
of stars and hoping still for fireflies

if you go away
i may still manage to find my way through this mess of crowded chairs and misplaced tables

if you go away
i may still sit beside the window facing the sunset and enduring the darkness without a single star i may still think about you and us reminiscing what used
to be there

i may still be strong and take my self intact with dignity and pride
and be friendly still with
sleep

things may still move on like planets revolving on their orbits

i sigh...things are never the
same again...
I Mean You

Yes you, I have always meant you Because you do not just go away
This time
Of my lonely hour you come like A persistent dream that does not Leave me, I ask
Why?
Yes, you, I have always meant you,
I know
It is not enough to say the words You like to hear
I understand
It makes the difference when you Touch my hand Kiss my lips
Slide your hands in my pants And feel me
There
I know more shall be demanded When I say the words
You do not want them
You need me
In this hour of loneliness Yes, you, I mean you
My love
I will hold you still even if I am dead
Even if my spirit does not know what Flesh is all about
Yes, you, I have always meant you
I cannot touch you now, Let me whisper then
The words you want to hear
This time
It is not my mouth that will speak.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Miss You Too

today, something is broken, the pieces shattering all over the floor a drinking glass just fell my feet are cautious, getting too defensive on those which can possibly hurt, and so is my heart, too numb in fact, but still feels wanting to at least beat and show that it also knows how to survive a wound graduating into a full scar, there are no little things here that remind me of you, your photo with your dedication and signature had long been burned,

i burned it
alone,

when the wound was still fresh when pain was yet a jumping frog, this time however, the rain comes unexpectedly, something unpredicted by the weather bureau

i am looking for a black umbrella this i remember only when it rains something so important in my life one that does not want to get wet and feel the cold and the dampness of my existence, and i remember you beside me there was that rain and we were so warm and close and true, oh, yes, i hate to admit this i still miss you.

I Move

i move and part air infront of me

the air fills every empty space i created

i leave every step and behind me another wholeness comes, like i part the water of the river with my hands

my feet catch what water i parte
and then
everything is whole again

i move, therefore,
to make all emptiness full

RIC S. BASTASA
I Move Around The Bends

i change my mind
now i move around the bends wriggle my waist in every curve hop and hop on the humps beat the bushes and climb some trees up there i look on the ground and see how small things are how seemingly the clouds have turned to nothing but mist and air

i change my mind
i go upstairs and view the windows opening to a path leading to a beautiful garden
towards the sea

i change my mind
the rules need not be that strict we make them
i move around now in circles drunk to repetitions unwinding relaxing a bit embracing too kindly some unknowns

RIC S. BASTASA
I Must Be Lost With You

to find myself
i must find you
and so when you
are lost
i must be lost with
you
if you are lost without
myself
i will be lost forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Must Rise From Where I Fall

To rise from where I fall

Subdued, I lost, I have no choice But to surrender my own voice Now I have to go to places Missing your embraces
I am but just a shadow
In a nook without tomorrow I walk under the rain
Where I am wet & drained
And cold in the night
In darkness I lose my sight This is the time of losing In his arms you are smiling And you will not be with me With him you can only be I understand perfectly what losing is you are not with me, you are his This is not the end however, This is just another fever
I must get out from this wall.
I must rise from where I fall

RIC S. BASTASA
I Need To Know You

Early morning
i need to know you

we exchange notes
about last night

some of them are lies but deep within are truths which we do not need to say during our breakfast together the plates are listening and spoons and forks do not argue i like this ambiance of softness this skin of empathy

your eyes still glow and i love the way they see me still despite the pains of our years we are still the best of friends.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Need To Sleep. Do Not Wait For Me.

"How long shall I wait for you?
Do not wait for me. I am tired and I want to lie down.
Are you tired and do you want to lie down?
Yes, I am tired and I want to lie down" (Mark Strand)

i need to sleep. do not wait for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Never Had Time To Explain Myself

there were stones thrown on the water and so there were ripples like the pain

the pain goes on and on like circles spreading beyond a certain point of my tolerance

my tongue forms some words like hammers to hit the nails right on their faces to break the monotony of destruction without rivets no dovetails but the story has become like a code of the samurai to you, and you swing your head like arms in disbelief how can all these be true he is not like this and you become like a bone in my throat and i like to remove every obstruction one by one but i do not have the pleasure of keeping you my hands inside my pocket are mine alone the pebble inside it is warm and smooth my treasure and like my conscience i keep it inside my heart. I keep seeing ripples and then i do not mind how many stones how far they spread.

i owe no one and no one owes me i am an island and i wish there are no boats docked on my shore any time, somewhere, any more.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Never Said I Was A Poet Just A Man

dear francis,

do not call yourself
'just a man',
do not deprive yourself the laurels of
'a poet'

you are a man, and a man is more than a poet the man with the urge to write is more than a man without an urge even just to write and be this 'poet'

the poets (those taking the top charts) either have died (and take the fame posthumously) or they have rested on laurel leaves, or they have confined themselves on some writers' block

but you francis behold the stars and the other suns has written more and toiled more, your fruits are many and more have eaten them tasted how sweet what wisdom you have i crown you the true laurels these living laurels of poetry moving, alive, toiling, working, always thinking about those that must come next for generations to come i crown you,

Francis Duggan
the true laurels of working, moving, living poetry i give you the title,
the true, living poet.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Never Thought

with the scent of my forest and trees lushing by the side of my three mountains i have given you the hint to follow me where we can be happy

i wish upon a potion of immortality i will give it to you as you promise to stay with me through and through

i promise you my flesh and bones and spirit and i thought you believe me with all these, gleeful sands, and delighting waves of the blue seas and green leaves glistening from the trees, all these who in the world would have believed that i would still lose you?

i am blind now and i do not see my lips are sealed and i cannot speak

RIC S. BASTASA
I Never Thought (About This)

for once in my life
i have never thought that you were that woman who descended the stairs of the moon and to the earth here you come thinking perhaps that you are someone special with the marks of the craters

welcome
now don't think that someone is special in my place

everyone here are nothing but pebbles some prefer to be sand others mind you simply want to be air passing by nothing to be conscious about how they look

if you ask the right word
yes,
most of us are invisible

faceless and cold.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Never Thought, For One, In My Life

i, once, for one, never ever thought, that you, who came later in my life, so ordinary like a single petal of a white rose,
blown by the wind,
falling on my path, which i pick up, without, at first, so much interest, you, that i keep, and set aside,
in one corners of my room, you spread the sweetest rosy scent in my room, filling all the emptiness, that once, was there, now, i take a closer look,
and kiss you, what miracle is there, it happens, you are the best rose, that happened in my life, my white petal my wife, my soul mate.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Never Wish To Escape From You

i never wish to escape from your hands you for once never own me and i for once did not pretend that there is this clasp or a grasp, for in truth, we have been strangers all along, from the beginning when you have seen me as a very tiny flower grieving for my own darkness. There is no freedom, because there was never a keeping.
Do not set me free, you never had me.

Look at me, do you still think that my eyes are sad like the eyes of the widow?
Look at me and try touching my eyes, aren't they as warm as yours?

There was never an entanglement of the unicorn. Never. There is only this river that your feet once trod, and then there is nothing since then. I am free, and will always be.
There is no end, because we never had any beginning. Take your chances.

RIC S. BASTASA
I No Longer Sing The Songs Of Societal Significance

i no longer sing your songs of societal significance i have forgotten them

honestly, i do not remember a word i cannot even hum the tune of your songs of protest (our songs)
against the government, honestly, i do not like them anymore even if i remember

all i remember are unnecessary, premature, untimely deaths of friends of our self-made revolutions when we were so young and full of idealism

in our hearts
now i dim
like a dying light

tempted by the shining sun of new rules and the philosophy of mature contentment

i no longer climb your mountains, i no longer walk the long walks on dark nights, passing the snake rivers and gorilla forests and monkey trees and slippery fins of fish and eels and
eagles,

i no longer have your callous feet i cannot remember you

you ask me
if i love you still, i cannot remember, i have none of your bravery

honestly,
i have become this coward cloud, raining regrets

the peace that i do not deserve the hiding

in open places, without a name, without a trace, mouth shut, tongue clipped,

and then you walk away

RIC S. BASTASA
I Offered A Hand Of Frienship To Adria And This Is Her Answer

'It's in your best interest not to contact me in any way.
I have no desire whatsoever to deal with such an intrusive stranger... that only gets stranger.
Goodbye'

and i like her much for publishing my autobiography

i like her for being such a friendly woman sometimes she likes to have the name Ms. Wren Springs

sometimes she likes to be called Ms. Claire Dasani

and i like her more for assuming so many personalities Oh My,

how i wish to have such a woman as her

chameleon

slippery like an eel and not so biting like a snake she flies like a bird but she stings like a bee even to a 'stranger like Me' thank you Adria Moya

i will surely like yah.
and by the way
i like your poetry.

really, i am serious.
see me. I am smiling with my real mouth.

momma, we love yah.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Once Write To Follow An Idea

writing has a purpose. Words can preach. Or they are like a wind vane, giving you the north, and south and east and west. You ask: why am i heading west? What is in the snow as thick as my agnosticism? and you follow, and ask what is it that i really mean about the sound of a frog croaking? I put some leaves, and twigs and pretend that i am composing a tree. I like the sound of a hush, the wind and the silence of the mists, the insistence of frost. Too early, yes too early to conclude that words must, and must have no other purpose but to convey and idea. About myself. Looking for Myself. I am an idea.

Yes, this is nothing but colors. Feelings I mean.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Once Wrote A Letter To My Girlfriend

many years ago i once wrote a love letter to my girlfriend in Silliman University in the City of Dumaguete, Philippines and perhaps she really liked the way how the letter was written (it was more of poetry than prose) as i poured all my love and affection like sweet real orange juice to a shiny glass much to the liking of her innocent taste her virginal frame of mind for we were young then and she was so beautiful with her white skin and tight body as i was also so handsome then with my spanish mestizo looks and gentle disposition (let me breathe for a while) she decided to have the love letter read by all her dorm mates it was passed from one hand to another and she was so proud of it and she even framed it like it were the picture of a saint

(i learned it later) i was pondering about my feelings, my secrets passed from one person to another, my deepest emotions known by another at first i felt that my privacy was violated, but on the other hand i assured myself about the truth of said feelings, the authenticity of myself relating to my dearest love, my one and only love, and then i felt free it is the truth and i must not be ashamed of it it is a beautiful feeling that the world must know and feel too and as i recall it again now, i remember another woman, a poetess and truly, i like her too, for spreading the truth about my real self and there is no other, i take pride of myself and i take responsibility for what i am and for all the poems that i have written.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Once Wrote About The Bees And The Beehive

on the web, i see you got pregnant of this brainchild of yours, the beehive, a project from your heart, at the center is the child, instead of the queen bee, and surrounding still are the workers, the drones, the soldiers instead of your lovers, and you ask for my support (perhaps some money but i know they are not that necessary) you may hint on the songs about children
my friends shall send you you may ask for me to read my poems
over some bottles of beer or some tea,
there is no problem, honey,
i will be there buzzing around your beehive
i will ask where the door is and just hang in there for in truth what makes me happy is not that brainchild of yours but just
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Only Wave My Hand To My Neighbor

i only wave my hand to my neighbor
not wanting to go beyond that intimacy or that familiarity which i have always thought of (as others do too)
as a breeder of
contempt
& i do not want that
to happen,

sometimes, we choose the luxury of our own privacy
the dignity of our own hideaway inside the pages of a book in the busy world of our minds
we dance there alone with our own hands to the sounds of the patting of our own feet.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Open The Door And Enter The Room

i open this door and enter this room
i do not have to tell you that i am always here

the moment i enter it i close it
and then i have my own world that you my love has not entered

dare not for this is my world where i am happiest

it is surrounded with mirrors
each wall contains my face

there are no words or other images
and the floors sing
even without lips

i am happy here
without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Point To The Night This Flashlight

A flashlight
I point to the night
Above me
To feel the depth
Of this darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
I Pretend I Do Not Know You

in darkness
as we tryst upon cold hearts
rubbing our skins
to warm the night
there is too much of us in here
in familiarity,
to cure this loneliness, i,
must pretend
that i do not know you not to hurt you
as you pretend too that you have nothing to do with this escapade of the hearts fed up
with love
inhibited.

i like in fact a kiss without
a name.
it is exciting.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Promise You

i promise you

when there are only three stars in heaven when the moon fades behind the clouds of darkness

i promise you

i shall give all these three stars for you to light your way and marvel you till you meet your destiny

i shall have none
i never liked one.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Promised Myself Not To Hurt My Eyes Anymore

last night
my eyes ached a lot like they are protesters of my negligence
overusing them
apart
from the rest of my body parts: the nose not so nosy the ears not hearing much and my skins not feeling well and my mouth and tongues merely sleeping in their safe spaces

my eyes
keep working for days and feel as though they are the only workers
of my body

the eyes
that begin to hate poetry and reading and seeing and watching

i promised these eyes not to hurt them again to give them a vacation somewhere where the trees are greener (since they love greens) where the skies are bluer (since they also love sky blue) somewhere in the beach
where
beautiful bodies entice them and make them excited like ordinary hormonal creatures
but

here i am again
my eyes working again on the lines of this poem the eyes crying on a promise that is always broken I Promised Not To Wake Up Early And Write Again but of course, here i am.

it is 4:25 in the morning.
i wake up earlier than i expected. there is no sense wriggling on the bed that no longer feels my yearning for sleep.
i rise.
i open the computer. i hear its buzzing sound. No problem i am willing to write about nothing nothing at all. call it emptiness. call it weariness. on a very early morning. but it does not matter at all. this is this. this is it.
this is what i am. just going. just coming. just writing.
whatever.

outside the rooster keeps its announcement of a promising morning. the hens are laying their eggs. some steps of strangers pass by. sagging footsteps for an early work to do. opening doors of their stores. dusting, cleaning, baking the bread. displaying wares.
the salesgirl still yawning on an unwashed face.
the dog wakes up and wags its tail on my side.
as i write.

my life begins to unfold. it is another poem. another story.
written and kept. there is nothing more important to do anyway.

you look for a rhyme. You do not find it here. Go somewhere.
That poet over there, the one with the color of dusk keeps some. Talk to him. Meanwhile, I am through.
No promises again this time.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Promised You That We Make Love At Dawn

but then there is this poem inside my heart
and it wants to be written
at dawn

and so i promised you another dawn
tomorrow

you perfectly understand my situation
it is not simple. it is complicated. i make it complicated.

you look at it simple enough.
lack of love for you.
devotion to poetry.

and sooner, you declare a war.
an end. you write a letter telling about the word
goodbye.

i understand it too perfectly.
we have two parting worlds now.
floating stars looking for each nest in some other space.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Put On My Brown Socks

i put on my brown socks
i bend a little to check my knees to feel my bare feet and smell the color of my soles i put on my sneakers at noon i am not eating my lunch i am half naked and i cut four locks of my black hair

i leave my fingernails uncut

i am not running anywhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Put Pearls Around Her Neck

i put the off-white pearls around her neck

she loves all of them because i grow them all myself priceless

she does not intend to tell you how happy she is licking and swallowing each pearl deep down in her heart these pearls are hers forever

RIC S. BASTASA
I Raise My Head

i raise my head towards the heavy rain strong seeds of water hitting my eyes
like i am the cracking earth thirsty of the season

the seeds stay inside my eyelids
my heart and sprouts to become the trees of my life

i am not afraid if i cannot move anymore
with roots coming out from my feet.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Read Some Poems Today

i read some poems
today, and these are poems about the flesh touching another flesh

like the lips touching another lips, a kiss to another kiss, like a body rubbing another body, and then it went higher than that, a spirit touching another spirit, ablaze, like some flints catching fire, like that desolate house of bukowski where parents forbid the children to see that man with beautiful eyes, on his pajama wet with his sweat and carrying a rhum on his right hand and a cigarette between his mouth.

i see, this is all about isolation, a man's way of getting away from the maddening crowd

his way of loving himself and making a part of himself grow and glow.

the door bell rings
someone is calling
'anybody home? '
i am pressing my fingers on some letters
my left hand rests and touches my crouch

the woman with a shrill voice finally stops and leaves and i hear her footsteps departing

i am silent, i am awake finally i find my way home.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Read This Poem For You And Then I Go.

it is a waste of time
the tree is telling me

as i sit beside my window writing another poem

i say it is for you my tree i still love you

but the tree says i have no use of a poem i like you to be with me under my shade i love it more if you still climb on my branches just like once when you were a child picking my ripe fruits and even swinging with me in one of my strong twigs and oh i remember when you fell from me and i could not help you and i say i have no time anymore for you my tree and to comfort you i read this poem for you and then i go.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Reinvent Myself. I Have To Grow My Roots Again

i think much better in english. sorry, but that is how i was brought.
every hour, every book, every lecture in school is in english.

now you are telling me to return to
my home.
be back in my house. familiarize myself again with my childhood bed. my wheelbarrow.
that slingshot, that river,
that swing.

i met old friends again back in that barrio.
we have become strangers.
i have feelings that they simply dismiss as overrated.
i am alone in the midst of my
memories.

i want to run away. But i have nowhere to go.
i am back. I reinvent myself.
i have to grow my roots again.

i will be another tree in this forest.
let the monkeys come.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Remember I Once Loved Someone And Then I Set Her Free

it is sad to remember that once i loved someone who pretended that she loved me too, out of need
so she may survive, i was blinded by desire not thinking about how she would have vomited the taste of my kisses
how she endured those intimate times which were not at all a comfort to her loneliness

i blamed her for not telling me at once her shortsighted honesty all wrapped in fear, and so one day i set her free,

of course, with some money for her to find the only love of her
life.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Remember Once When I Was A Little Child

i remember
when i was a little child i once climbed a tree to take a look of those down below me.
i simply sit there
and feast my eyes on the tall mountain
far away from me.
i see a winding river
flowing to the sea.
i see memories.
i am a little child.
i am the father of that sadness that i left behind a rock.
i am the image of that little boy
behind your face.
i am not noise.
i am the silence
of a very faraway memory on that cone mountain over there with a snow
cap. I am my small world like a bird perched on a twig. A small patch of green grass. A handful of clouds drifting on my shoulder. I am
a silent memory.
I am listening inside
my little corner.
This heart still
of a little boy.
Always wondering.
I Remember That Day In My Life

‘twas early morning when i climbed
the mango tree
and at the top
i sat on the big branch

for a long time
i looked at the tranquility of the barrio where i spent my childhood

i breathed the air
filled my lungs with so much peace

i did not have anything in mind except that little escape from every day's boredom

‘twas a day without words.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Remember The Caterpillar

t'was a story told when i was young

the moth that circled the fire of the lamp
he gets burned

the daedelus on the wings of wax
he flew too high and the sun melted
his wings and to the sea he drowns

the caterpillar that struggled to the top kicking other caterpillars along the way only to find that there is nothing at the top

that on the other side are mountains
of caterpillars that never knew that they are all destined to fly and be some colorful butterflies

it amazes me
it still amazes me how can i not easily understand

my own destiny
RIC S. BASTASA
I Remember The Mimicking Bird

it is perching on a branch of a tree in front of our house facing me
this hottest day of the year when all the leaves are falling like an inevitable misfortune i open the window and it does not fly away i whistle

it whistles too

i sing a song it sings the same song as mine i hum, it hums too

it is mocking me but i like it that way

i don't consider it my enemy not even a flattery perhaps a compliment to my dissent.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Remember The Torture Room

i remember the torture room i thought at first it is hell where hot fires and forks
hurt my skin and pierce the flesh of my body

i imagine it
to be this oven
of cinders where devils with tails
and horns
frighten me

it isn't

the torture room
in fact
is in the big house where people
come and do not talk
where we have no
convergence
of the minds

where she loves him but he loves
another

where wives
hate
and batter
their husbands

where husbands
too
slap their wives and abandon
them
for another

where children
have no
respect for parents

and where parents
do not mind
their children

where governments
run the state
for their own personal profit

where people
sell their votes

where there is no care
and love
where hope cannot thrive

where there is indifference
violence
and perpetual hatred and always for retaliation and revenge

it is indeed a beautiful house an earth filled with colors

but those who live here
have converted
this

into a torture room

we, now live in the room
that we deserve

RIC S. BASTASA
we are walking up towards the peak of an old mountain, where Papa before his demise walked with me

to the top and told me how beautiful life can be when we are near the clouds that dress the trees on the mountain tops with its foggy days,

we have gotten heavy on the plains and our feet are not forgiving us for our lousy days when we reached the top my world changed

as i remember what hurts and having learned
the cause

i breathe life again
like a child.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Remember When My Mouth Was Full

and i too remember when my mouth was full i still wanted to talk to you, there was this thought that keeps on bugging me and it was for you, that time, when my mouth was full, i wish i could talk intelligibly, but how could i? when what i had was everything kept within the four corners of my mouth, sealed by the fence of my teeth, and the lock is in my tongue, and my lips, they keep closing, keeping what palatable food was there.

i vomited. no, i did not.
i swallowed them all, Hook line and sinker. i forgot that i am human.
i thought i was a fish. there were bubbles.
there was that river that swallowed me.
and it too did not talk,

now, i am talking to you. and you are listening.
then what? i have nothing to say.
i am empty.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Repeat

i like you ms. beautiful with your bad habits
i like it when you
are bad sometimes

and you like me when i think luxurious

use you, use me
i will be frank
i am indecent

RIC S. BASTASA
I Rush My Life, Hoping To Arrive There First Ahead Of You.

on the 28th we leave for new york passing hongkong everything is arranged already from shuttle to train to montreal then back to boston passing niagara to stay there for two nights if we by chance shall meet i am bringing Talan with me and perhaps you will like it.

perhaps on a thanksgiving you may share a slice of turkey with me a glass of red wine will do for just a night at the patio of your house overlooking a garden of daffodils i know it is autumn and this world is sadly colorful with some leaves about to fall a hurricane may come, i know, the forecast is surely devastating, an earthquake in mexico, flood in California, and a kneeling athlete on the news, i am a little disturbed, confused, and thus i travel.

if we do not meet, that is actually fine with me.

i rush my life, hoping to arrive there first ahead of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Said I Love You

And I know you love me too

Caught unaware
I kissed you

And you said “Utang na Loob! ”

“For God’s sake! ”

Kiss me again.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Saw Father Cry Over Mother's Photograph

i saw my father cry over mother's photograph on evenings
after our family dinner

i pity him dearly then he followed mother earlier than later

i simply heave my slightest sighs

RIC S. BASTASA
I Say I Love You And I Bring You Flowers

a bit romantic, i come across the procedure to wooing my new found crush just a few cubicles away, sending messages through the cell phone maybe too modern she may not like it calling her through the phone, maybe, sort of fresh and rash, sending chocolates maybe alright, but it will be bad for her health (she is a little bit fat but she is not that gross, she's still pretty) and so i decided to send her flowers she did not like it, she needs money.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Say I Will Always Be Here For You

you left me
and i search for the reasons from every place where we have been to those squeaky beds cannot tell what was it exactly that you have been missing the blankets no longer smell our sweat and they no longer grasp what they used to brag

that i have
and you say you really like they have shun
mouths and tongues
and they all keep
what they do not know

somehow i come back to my senses
and feel the same love i share with you i still feel the warmth of my kisses i still have the dignity of my hugs the purity of my love that you discard

and if by chance you read these lines
i say
i will always be here waiting for you on white hair on long beard on a mind that would have been willing to forget

RIC S. BASTASA
I Say Thank You

even when offended by you
i say thank you
i know
i can do nothing to reform you even when you slap my face let me say thank you God still loves
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I See How Beautiful Is The Light

inside it is dark and yet you close the window i regret having you you are always as silent as a thread and the needle somehow i just feel that you do not care but time is a tutor of your ways to mine, i enter your room one day and i see how beautiful is the light filtering its way through the glass in that usual quiet.

RIC S. BASTASA
I See Lakes On The Pics

and i turn myself instead to those images on the net, i surf: serenity, gratitude, bliss, divinity and eternity, and what appears on screen are pictures of lakes, and there is this

Lake Moraine of Alberta

a lake so placid, a swan taking its way to the other side green trees and an old castle on the other so serene, and there is the figure of a man raising his hands to the sky, on top of a mountain, overlooking a lake, so grateful, perhaps that amidst all these beauty he is there still alive to see, to savor, to praise, to thank, to be silent

RIC S. BASTASA
I See You But You Don'T See Me

i am invisible
i have the powers handed to me by the gods to be invisible
on this site to have many faces to have many forms and colors and dispositions

beyond gender
beyond boundaries religion, beliefs, beyond what you ordinarily call
poetry

i am invisible to anybody's closed eyes narrow alleys
i have wings i can always fly i have horns i can always bully each one of you here

you do not see me but i always see you

when you fall
it will be my poetry
that will stop the falling when you melt
it will be my poetry
that will solidify you

the gods the gods
they must have cursed me i am always invisible even to myself

i touch but i do not feel

RIC S. BASTASA
I See You Entering Buddha's Gate

i see you entering the gate of Buddha moving inside his castle

the Buddha yawns
and i have seen
you
undress
and then wear
the saffron
robes
of perfection

outside
the gate, i sit and yawn
and then
i sleep
and then
i dream you touching my dirty garments
and then
my heart bled

RIC S. BASTASA
I See You Rise Above The Skies

i see you rise above the skies
i am smiling
but i always understand the discrepancies of
this world

honestly, despite the throne that you own (how you obtained that) i keep silent
you never deserve it

the true stars around you too silently are laughing inside their hearts your light is not as bright

RIC S. BASTASA
I Send You Music Instead

the news is bad 7.6 percent unemployment rate and more shall suffer the coming days
of the month

you are afraid
things gonna be worse and some have to give up the united states
and go home to their hometowns until such time that the Obama team recover

i choose my mood
and will not be saddened anymore
by more sad news depressing
moments cannot overwhelm me these days

and so i do not cater to statistics anymore what i send instead is my favorite
kind of music

mozart, tsaicovsky
debussy, whitney,
celine, gary and cynthia

the night is dark
and i am in the mood for listening to music
watching the stars
and the moon
and just be silent
to the marrow of my
bone

RIC S. BASTASA
I Shall Be At Peace

every hour that i am alone is a betrayal

every hour turn into multiplicative hours and i should have been swimming in an ocean of guilt that must drown my soul but i hit my chest with my fist and i swallow all my words saying that i perfectly understand all these every part piece every shred

every brokenness

and then i live on those hours of betrayal and never has it occurred to me that i shall sit with you and tell you honestly
about it

how can i endure the pain that soon this gift of knowledge shall hand you?
a cup of tears
a destination without a sign of an island in the middle of nausea

i sit for long hours and sift one betrayal and another betrayal

i can endure this until i die. And you shall cry believing that i have been faithful throughout and that you never had any regret loving me
forever.

and i shall be at peace
i shall be at peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
i fall upon a cliff
and dive upon the
sea
away from the rocks
i must survive

there is beauty here from where i am lost and then to where i shall find myself without you

the corals sing for me
the fish worship my body the seaweeds too soft and comforting
loneliness is a good companion
together with solitude
mixed
completing me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Shall Have These Hands That Shall Write About Hands....

must have i forgotten
from where all these come?

ah, i have read about your hands and now i shall have to mind about mine once i had these hands whose name is work and struggle and

sacrifice

ey lifted rocks outlined by Sisyphus and roll them from atop the hill
and put them again there in senseless
labor

when i got reason my hands began to think as though they have brains under their nails

tese hands begin the
questions
grapple for answers
and got no satisfaction

ey dabble in poetry
trembling and tense and
looking for a compromise for some fetish

must have i forgotten from where these hands come?

someone says these hands are from the hands of God whose hands hand what we do not have in hand yet

two hands did what was wrong then and covered the face of the penitent and the remorseful two hands that slap a face that triggered a gunfire that lay upon the hardened breasts and held breaths

two hands that write now for you face upside down not asking for anything in return two hands that speak for you as you turn your head for someone else.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Shall Not Look For You

you are gone
and you leave no note on the bed i stare outside this room and sees a field of grass shadows of mountains and a sunset

i shall not look for you i am confident that now you have finally found a home deep inside yourself you shall sing and knowing that at last you are happy with yourself i, too shall move on, close the door and take the walk on the other side of the fence it is nighttime and there are stars in the sky i lay myself on the cold grass and i do not shiver a bit.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Shall Not Run Away From Myself

To tell you the truth
i keep on writing to make myself live if i stop, i die, and if i die no one lives for me

for i am alone by myself
in all these

i do not die neither to i wish to have it myself done, for that would be cowardice at its most one who loves oneself does no lose oneself

for what choice do i have?
except to live and show the courage that i still know how you may be happy now in another lover's arms

what choice do i have?
no one bears all my regrets for me except myself

i am brave, brave as a thousand lonely men who know how to fight and not run

away from myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Shall Not Think Of You

i shall not think of you when i, by necessity, in this soul searching proceedings, shall take back what i thought i left, along the past paths of my own time, i shall not think of you, as i, go back to the river, where my soul once sang, the loneliness, of my stories, the horror of what chose to chase me and shame me, and now i face them back, each step each thought, the bus winds on the steep mountains,
i shall not think of you,
neither shall you think of me, in fairness to the wounds that have taken all their time alone to heal themselves.
i shall not think of you, for now i have regained the crown of peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Shall Pass This Way Again

i shall pass this way again
and stop
for a long long time until i shall remember the hugs and kisses
and the love
that once you gave me just once, and then i shall go away tight lipped like a bud i shall wait for time comes with a gentle comfort and then for once i shall open the door of my heart

for someone
more deserving.....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Should Have Been More Responsible...

i should have been responsible for you suffer for your loss
i could have drawn a map to find you you are lost

it is this regret that i keep on leaving
i, too, has a life of my own to live a mountain to climb a river to cross

a house to build or destroy if i really want to a grave to visit, flowers to throw away
to the winds

it is this disappointment that has kept me alive i could have been more responsible to each of you, sick and needing help or dying and needing even just a prayer but i too, has the time too short to accomplish what i haven't lots of unfinished business too and so i cannot be yet taken i've been empty, so empty that i begin to float i drift like everyone else still undecided where to land and be myself again when i was just born

what i lost, i have not yet recovered, my innocence, what i had was so much, this pride, what i must achieve, seems but only a dream, and it is not coming, no signal, no warning, death for instance... oh, i should have been more responsible than that,

I could have lived the life you've wasted.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Should Have Less Than Five Fingers...

finally i come to the conclusion that friends are not necessary so i may be piqued and enter into compromises
and accounting of whether i have given more or that they have given less and so one by one i keep a list
whom to junk
and whom to keep and oh my

i can't reveal
if i still have ten fingers anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
I Shy Away From Hugs

my first hug
was not from my father.

it was from that man with a hanging tongue.

it was dirty.
he had no heart
but a knife.

since then i shy away from hugs.
youth cannot forget.
what it buries, rises from the grave.

i face it with hatred.
i am a grown up man now.

there are no more hugs
since then.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Simply Like The Word Roost

and its variations, refer to the latest poem i wrote on the word ensconce, it is roost that you use, which signifies about chickens but honestly i prefer the pegions which we had

once in my youth the boy who chased and hit birds feeding on our rice drying under the sun and i did not know what i did stoning birds and killing them not really thinking that they would be happier and nicer to see when they are alive and flying and feeding on the pavements where rice is abundant and it would have been more memorable if i feed them myself

with rice on my palms

which i never really did because in my place a boy is a boy and he must hit the birds with stones from his slingshot

until i have seen real birds and real people shot and killed on the fields like birds but with real ammunitions
from government armalites and brothers killing brothers
which really bothers me a lot
until now

when finally i get tired of thinking when i simply write poems and poems, not judgments not commands, just feelings like hot and cold, fever and the coldness of death

RIC S. BASTASA
I Sing Your Eyes

i walk the dream
where the street
breathes in the shadow of moon-light,
the lovers night.

oh, sweet love
long time coming longer time whispering
us free.

i sing your eyes
as willows stretching into the ever passing winds

i speak the words of my heart i sing the songs of my dreams i see in the water your image
and it’s true...

as i ride the butterfly, i offer the rose.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Sit On A Tree

i sit on a tree
on a strong branch
below me a river flows far away at a distance
a snow-capped cone shaped mountain
some clouds drift
near my shoulder
i am just this little boy trying to see my coming world.

RIC S. BASTASA
when i make love with you, oh, i am honest, we did not, but perhaps in a dream

when i was then too tired and could not remember, but i guess, i must have forgotten it, i made love to you, and when i make love with you,

i close my eyes, hope you do too, it is more intense that way, oh, i have to admit, i imagine someone else, though you hold me tight, and i can not even breathe freely, i have to grasp for gasps, and oh always there is a gap somewhere between our realities, which i think is more real,

i see light, intense light within,

remember i close my eyes, yet i see, another face, forgive me but there is more beauty and desire in there, it does not mean that i do not like you or that there is no love happening, there is,

but there is greater there, it is perhaps my desired perfection of you which is not in you yet, we are artists in some ways during that act of lovemaking, we close our eyes, and we see light within us, perhaps we feel that fire, only that we were so indulged

and
per-occupied, we do not bother naming it,

alright, let me say it, i love you, but (within me there is more to what i love in you, and it is not you, forget me, but i say it here, i may be there but i am not there, within the context of this paradox, i lay in bed

too weak to wake up, and too timid to say that i am still thinking of that place where i am more perfect and you are not yet there with me.

i sleep again wishing that this light does not cease.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Sleep Late Tonight

because i cannot sleep with my enemy

do not ask who my enemy is the one who sleeps with me do not mention the name of the woman who claims she loves me give me space, please.

I Smell Chlorine From A Distance In That Nook stained,

you find a place there in that nook where you can be alone and find some solutions

cleaning some stains sticking to your arms and hands, but it will not be long

i smell chlorine concentrated chlorine from where she works
day and night
graveyard shifts
and other extra hours uncomplaining

she will join you for the cleansing, it will not really take that long just a matter of one hand then it will be over but your eyes will be hurt a little bit

you know it.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Step Out Of The Door

i step out of the door
from my dark room the windows are not opened it is humid
it is cold
and i step out of the door the windows still closed i lock the door and step upon a patch of green grass the dews are hanging on the blades and shaken

i look upon a sky and there is this star still shining despite the opening of the mouth of the morning after a deep sleep

i see your face but i promise there shall be no tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Stick To My Point Darling

i stick to my point my darling love and lust go hand in hand together one cannot exist without the other one cannot just love and not lust for love will always like to last with lust for what is this deep silence without the noise of fire

the tongues of the sun
the pelvis of the moon the fingers of tickling tiny cinders of stars to the heavens of course, we heave, we bend, show me what is kept inside your skirt show me those breasts that enclose the true beatings of the heart i will love you and i cannot help but lust with you.

for i am both air and leaf, river and rock, for i am both bird and sky, i am both mortar and pestle, i am both sun and moon pond and pebble
snake and grass

let me hold you then with the gentleness of my soft hands let my tongue lick every corner of your skin let me love you and eat you and swallow you for by then, you become truly a part of me immersed, flowing, running all over my mouth and veins. my throat, my lips, to my finger tips.

let me love you and let me have you. let no part be absent. let the meeting and tasting be so sweet and enduring.

i love you, and it is not enough. there is more to the bursting of a star. it is endless, it is kind and brutal.
like this big bang of creation. the pain of darkness and the gentleness
of light.

silence cannot lose itself within the calmness of the waters.
dee inside, we partake, the lust of our beings.
we drink this cup, we die and live.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Still Have Fear Getting Out Of The Circle

i am staying
i finally tell myself there is no sense going out of the circle the comfort of its radius being in
for the rest of my life

inside i may suffer
i may bleed in silence but i live and i can still do what i can
to ease the pain

i have seen you leave the circumference you shout at first
you are free

then you suffer alone in agony
then you die
then no one remembers
no one really cares
no one understands completely us, how we both suffer inside and outside us how we suffer everywhere how we live how we die

RIC S. BASTASA
I Still Have No Words For It must i stop writing about love & lust?

do you know what happens to me afterwards?

you ask me to stop you claim that it is disturbing you must i, as you, suggest, write about the pains of

others,
those whose mouths do not know what words are proper for their
sorrows

those whose lips are cracking estranged as they are from the fluency of our learned articulation

i am guilty of this kind of misery
i too have what misery is there but perhaps because i am still attracted enticed to lust and power and love i must have a good reason to laugh and stroll and dance and sing perhaps, this i say, perhaps, my misery is lesser in height and weight it yet cannot see how big is the misery of others i cannot yet speak for them as i still have no words for it.

RIC S. BASTASA
'I Still Have Time'

for things we like to do we just do them and then for things we do not like doing we always say, 'i still have time' and time has no mercy for without us it goes

and then gone

and for all the things we have not done we still say, 'i still have time' and then there is this sunset that fades too quickly orange to black, and then the world is too dark and silent and cold for all the things that we have not done time is dead and we have not done the things that we should have done time is too short for those that we love to do the sinful ones time is too long for those that we ought to do those that could have opened the doors for our salvation time is dead and then we are gone regret laughs the hardest and the door to hell opens like the mouth of the mad one.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Still Love You

How can I not love
This world
And be sad
When I soon leave

When my heart still Beats for you

RIC S. BASTASA
I Still Write These Poems Of Love Again In My Shame

For as long as this heart beats Though erratically now by time and age

Though blinded by numerous desires These hands shall press the letters of love again

These fingers shall caress the lines of love Despite the pain, the sin, the blame

Did you not tell me once, that whenever and wherever love is In whatever form and imagination,
there
is also the pain accompanying?

we love, we pain, we love again we pain, we love, we pain again

RIC S. BASTASA
I Stood Alone In Pasay

lost in the crowd of indifference, wishing i am
back home,
where i can sit and watch nature bloom
far in my provincial home, here in one corner in Pasay

i stood alone
discerning where to go
next
what to do

as the train comes and goes as the door closes and opens as people come and go

as the noise grows deeper i wait for this confusion to sink bury all doubts

so i can rise from these deep ocean in the city so i can finally get myself out from this jungle of cemented dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Bong is happier with his private practice of law in Ortigas.
i CAN deduce that from his smiles as he toured Europe for tax shelter His conscious is clean posing like Alexander the Great at the Acropolis at nighttime.
I like his pictures at Vatican Must be heavenly there Cool and huge architecture simply amazing and i still have the wish to do it better in Amsterdam

Rey loves to shampoo his Beagle in Chicago Puts more time on his dog than himself and it makes his happier too

Guess i am happier here too Tropical climate How can i imagine surviving in the snow as thick and cold as a forest uninhabited by monkeys

I don't rhyme sometimes and does not get the correct metaphors for my existence but well, this is my choice and i still love it.

i can't waste my money on a round trip ticket to Rome or Greece
I haven't even savored yet the seaside of my own place.

TOMorrow i am going to Ponot climb a coconut tree swim in the river
and dry my naked body on top of the cliff.

I can fish and eat my catch.
I can walk faraway and sleep where my feet want to rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Stopped Comparing Myself To You And The Rest Of The Gang

There is no use
there is no cure for this hollowness so let it be

i sometimes think that you are luckier what with a family of three and a house on top of a hill with a red car parked nearby what with a parrot to greet you good mornings inside that silver cage by the window of your cottage at the right side of your daffodil garden

on the other hand
what choice do i have?

i live on my own now rooted to a family history the house is old but smelling still of the bread that mom used to bake the wall still resounding of the nails that father hammered on my younger days so many things so many memories and so i stopped comparing myself to you you are different, so much different to what i am i will be what i can be without you even without this world even in the eternity of emptiness for this universe is nothing but a big burst

of loneliness

coping up with planets and stars moving on somewhere still hoping to catch what happiness is all about.

I Stopped In The Green Rice Field

they pass me by and they did not notice how i stop my walk

and

feasted on the white heron on tall yellow legs

my eyes in wonder
the beauty without

my spirit has wings lifted to the flight of the white wings of that bird, so light, so swift, so free.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Stretch My Mind To The Sky

Everyday

instead of stretching my legs and arms

i stretch my mind to the sky

i can feel my nerves screaming the one at my neck is aching for more comfort

sometimes one feels that the hands are not connected to the arms

like a night emptied of its stars and moon there is chaos because some parts of our selves are no longer in harmony with the old body of the world the streams and rivers get disconnected with the sea

and the ocean waits for all these waters

to come

and be at peace with the silence of the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
I Teach My Child By G. Abad

I.
I teach my child
To survive.
I begin with our words,
    The simple words first
And last.
They are hardest to learn.
    Words like home,
Or friend, or to forgive.
These words are relations.
They are difficult to bear;
Their fruits are unseen.
    Or words that promise
Or dream.
Words like honor, or certainty,
Or cheer.
Rarest of sound,
Their roots run deep;
These are words that aspire,
They cast no shade.
    These are not words
To speak.
These are the words
Of which we consist,
Indefinite,
Without other ground.

II.
    My child
Is without syllables
To utter him,
Captive yet to his origin
In silence.
    By every word
To rule his space,
He is released;
He is shaped by his speech.
    Every act, too,
Is first without words.
There's no rehearsal
To adjust your deed
From direction of its words.
    The words are given,

But there's no script.
Their play is hidden,
We are their stage.
    These are the words
That offer to our care
Both sky and earth,
    These same words
That may elude our acts.
If we speak them
But cannot meet their sound, They strand us still In our void,
Blank like the child
With the uphill silence
Of his words' climb.
    And so,
I teach my child
To survive.
I begin with our words,
    The simple words first
And last.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Tell Her These Things When I Come Home

So much
Has been taken for the quest of something original

Time squeezes to something interesting Something original

I am carried away

I look out this glass window Seeing the sea

Farther blue nearer me is brownish
The river is flooded the rain poured wildly in the mountain

A blue green car passes by below A woman with a basket of something (I cannot see clearly) Holds her boy like a twig of a tree

The wind must be blowing hard There could be typhoon

I see these happening, I am from here. I live here.

I tell her these things when I come home

RIC S. BASTASA
I Thank You For The Little Things

thank you my love for the little things though how little how can i forget? the way you remind me to comb my hair when i begin to forget in so doing to point to me where my glasses are my pen which is just hanging in my collar the taste of the fried chicken that i have almost forgotten hank for those little conversations on the lazy afternoon thank you for the glass of cold lemonade when my throat begins to sore thank you for the notes of a day's reminder on top of my bed when i have overslept

thank you for being with me
for all these years
thank you my love for sticking with me when i have none anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think

i think i can rescue the sky for you the clouds shall uplift me and the blackness of the coming rain disappears,

sunny skies, whiter horizons, and a very gentle mood for the day.

you are welcome

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think I Am In Love

never shall it be a part of me it is not inside a box in fact it is visible to me so open so beautiful but never shall it ever be a part of me
concealed inside my heart this secret intimate love that i only know not even the gods who sowed the seeds of true love in the furrowed field of humanity's indifference

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think I Have Found God.

abdul

you flatter me saying i can be a good thing
to be copied by you sometimes i like to believe this matter

and so i go back to the mirror and look at my own eyes wanting to find what is is there to see and what is it that perhaps i have not seen and yet seen by you

a few minutes i laugh i have memorized this face like the poem of a child

know what i mean,
living life, taking it for granted not expecting to find anything
in the garden

this morning i take my walk i think no thoughts
i feel the wind and see the leaves
falling

and i think, hope you do not oppose my humble conclusion, i think i have found God.

RIC S. BASTASA
i think i know now
a little hint from a shadow a borrower of light an imitator without the gift of gab how one must go on with fidelity to a body and dissolve
when darkness comes when sleep is here where the beginning to another journey
begins....

i think i know now
what i do not know what i should not have known what i should keep a secret and bring it to the depths of my grave

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think I Know What Your Dessert For Lunch Is

you are part of this poverty line that

stand
--
we

within the circle of office and house
we save all
we can

money
time
effort

and yet we find ourselves dry as grass and crippled
like some branches
cut by the storms
of misfortune

you have become emaciated
and you wait
for the fast claim
of

death

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think So.

yes i think so.
it lands.
it stays for a while.
it goes away.
it teases me.
it winks.
it flies away again
it stops
for a while.
it waits.
it winks again.
it dances.
it undresses.
it dresses up again.
it is going anywhere.

it is so beautiful
always from a certain .

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think That Was Friendship All About

when we sat on the grass
and watched the light of the
afternoon sun fade slowly
when we spoke of nothing
because we love the silence
more than ever
when we understood what
was not spoken
when we made no qualms
about who i was and what you were
and what you will become
and what i shall be...

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think You Are Right

when you said that it is harder to hide something which is not there i tried to think upon such a paradox of hiding nothing

you are right
 when there is nothing to hide that becomes a heavy burden when you open my mind and find out that there is nothing in there worth loving worth reading

 the burden becomes unbearable all your castles of expectations fall like the tower of sand
 on the shore

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think You Know What I Mean a young man sits inside his orange car puts his legs above board wipes his face, sweaty, cleans his nose idly, looks around

in silence

he gazes upon a vacant road there is no car
no people,

from where i am seated
i observe him he is contented upon his idleness i can't read his mind of course whether there is sorrow
or bliss

beside his car is a wall enclosing a garden of cassava and papaya trees there is a guava tree laden with its fruits

beyond us is the calm sea plain blue as coconut trees tower like guards

or lighthouses on an early morning contemplation perhaps about what to do next after this gentleness this calm will it be chaos? will it be too much noise? can pandemonium be not far behind the white chickens arrive and pecks upon some grains of rice upon a bowl of clay lies the water that can satisfy thirst

you know what i mean
life is a variation of everything full of color, wanting sound, longing for scents expecting some happenings.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think, ..........

i think,
i like that position when you sit by the window and begin to ask all the questions directed to the world.
The way you stand on stage and take the posture of an authority and then answer the questions was wayward. You do not look like god. You are an elf and if they only have time, they could have thrown you a basket of tomatoes.
I think,
we are more beautiful with our open minds, the thirst of so much knowledge the basket of venus, the open hands of Sophocles bleeding.
I think
we are more credible when we take the pose of children in the park waiting for mother.
I think we know nothing. We are clean with nothing on the wall of our souls.
I think, we are honest now.
We have nothing important to say. We are only passengers waiting at the bus station.
We are only pilgrims.

Look, that is the path. Now, let us walk.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Think, I Know Myself

i think, i know myself, ...i arrive at the conclusion
of who i am, really,
when i look at you,
and i lift my left hand to hold the side of my neck

my right hand
hidden inside
my pocket

i gaze at you that long enough

you do not mind
there is no meaning attached

my hand caresses
my hair

my lips close my eyes open my heart dancing

and you are
that event for this celebration

i look at myself in the mirror
and say, ' a toast! '

RIC S. BASTASA
I Thought I Am Complete

i thought i am complete seeing my fingers
all intact in my hands seeing my toes
in proper places of my feet and my eyes
between the bridge
of my nose
and my hair lushing
on my head and my ears too sensitive for voices and sounds and then something
runs in my spine
like a worm
at first then more like a snake
and i suddenly shudder

and then it was that time that i realize that i am

incomplete
and the thought comes like a sudden flash of
light

i need you
i may not have learned to love you yet

RIC S. BASTASA
I Thought I Cannot Write A Love Poem Anymore

i am 48 years old, and i have loved and lost so many times, the pains that do not hurt anymore come like trickles of rain not ripping any skin with
cold,
those that ripple sadness do not make any sound,
love,
does not intimidate me anymore, neither does it make me quiver, or long
for more,

i am 48 years old and had taken lust as creamer to my bitter and black coffee, stares at the window and never cares who gets in and gets out of my door, this room is empty and these blankets are washed as often as they get dirty, twice a week or thrice and this floor gives the sounds of stilleto shoes and hushes and moans, and there was no love requiring a better sofa to lay my head upon, or some romantic roses as accent on the blue glass vase,

i am 48 years old, and still in love with you, can do nothing about it babe, memories bring more memories like a stack of fantasies, and so here i am back to square one writing you a love poem like tendrils of a vine looking for the best tree to climb upon until i reach that place where i can see you sleeping in your room.

and i will be there for long glancing
i do not wish that you love me too.
This poem serves the purpose.
It is just a matter of remembering.
How can i ever forget
, it is still you.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Thought You Are Asleep My Dear Friend

two o'clock in the morning snow must be colder and thicker but your eyes are awake like an empty basin still wanting to be full of the day's warm air, but my dear you need sleep and you must now sleep and be with your colored dreams they shall speak like friends with gossamer wings, and some will be like jokers
and princes, and princesses

sleep now my dear friend, you need them to guide you what poem to write next when another morning breaks again in the shutters of your mind.

sleep now, step into the world of magic, the garden of fantasy.

who knows someone so lovely waits for you there, saying hey!

RIC S. BASTASA
I Thought You Know Me

I hand a piece of paper
It is cut into halves like the shape of my heart.
And you take the other and read the letters there There is no way you can decipher What I want to mean. You take the other half back and Then you Look at Me and Ask

Is there something here Is there something?
Twice. I said Yes There is Something in There.
And then You Ask for My Name Where I live and what i do.
Who I am?

I ask myself, how come that I have loved you so much?

RIC S. BASTASA
I To I

i do not deny myself anymore of its confidences
it is hard to strain this intimate relationship between this i and i,
for Thou can always sever from me and always shall i be left alone
devastated like a land abandoned by the natives because the conquerors who are too cruel
have just arrived.
from this moment on i promise myself
it is i
and i alone
let no one distract my own attention
to love myself
above all
no matter what blunder has it committed against myself
for it is i too who must forgive and then always
forget

RIC S. BASTASA
I Too, Like An Unfinished Poem

an unfinished poem sounds like an incomplete sentence sometimes just a predicate without a subject like love unrequited a verb without a noun an adjective so misplaced that it calls for an adverb it is more like a mouth that opens but says only some syllables though you as the reader understands what the poet wants to stress and mean and accentuate for some parts of the poem are meant not to be finished sometimes in fact, they are meant to be concealed and well covered like a bikini to your........or the prohibited love you still keep in your........
or the memories that hurt you and are meant to be unsaid.......you still want her not to
know.........
i, too, like an unfinished poem
like the sketch of your secret love many, many years ago, once when you were young the face is unfinished, you have not drawn the eyes of that love so profuse that no canvass could ever contain you still like this love unfinished, who knows the ripe time comes and both of you will finish
the unfinished love poem soon...... or some poems cannot ever be finished because the words to complete them still do not exist
or they are simply missing, too lost like you,

they are not there yet to a feeling so new so fragile and so indescribable..... so rare........

and i, really, like it that way the poem unfinishes itself

RIC S. BASTASA
I Tried To Paint The Canvas tried hard to paint the canvas of my life

using the bright colors in spontaneous strokes

but it rained so hard outside where i watch the view of things
to come

rain like tears erased the picture of
myself
of what i chose
to be
those brighter colors

but it does not really matter i still like pastel, or the darker ones, blue and black.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Understand Aldo

i understand Aldo
he is talking about a certain cynthia buhain who thinks that he is a bogus poet imitating others

art imitating life
aldo imitating other people's words which, out of sheer fun, i also do, but cynthia is new,

and Aldo must also try to understand like  God
Aldo must extend the hands of compassion the witch may live in the Philippines if Aldo believes it so...

meantime, Aldo my friend outstanding poet at PH let us keep PH 7

not 14 not 1

cool man, be neutral, be cool, there is no storm, there is no malice let us keep being first rated mockingbirds

on top of the roof
on top of our voices

let us keep mocking!

RIC S. BASTASA
I Understand Perfectly

the difference between
the abundance of the heart wherein the mouth begins
to speak

the language of green money as crisp as it is signifying the importance of having to earn it with the sweat of thy brow.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Used To Be A Part Of The Herd

long time ago
i used to be part of the herd
following the leader
not having to use my own mind
got no problem then with authority

until then when i met you you with the Light and Reason you who taught me the Way of Awareness of what i am and who i am
and what i can do

Now with my Own Light
i go my way alone, and strong and self-reliant

RIC S. BASTASA
I Wait For A New Day. It Will Surely Come.

it has always been
as always, all about a love unrequited. So much feelings had been wasted. All reasons to garbage.

did we not make love? did you not embrace me
tightly?

i gazed at you. I feel the inanimate in you.
i embraced a tree. I hug a waterfall.
i kissed a stone.

i have a bed of sands. i was with you in an anthill. I was bitten a thousand times. it hurts.

i have thrown away all my education over the window.
i have become a beggar.

for how long shall a king bend over a slave?
give away his kingdom, all for a butterfly?

i wait for a new day. it will surely come.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Waited For Her

actually, this is the story of my marriage i have chosen not to hurt and so i pretend not to like to close the door and shut myself away from everything that bears every scent of her the air outside
the dust inside

i waited for her to feel the core of the story for her to internalize who i was and what i have become i left my shoes so she may finally wear them and there by chance, it was her who shut the door on me i pretended to weep and she hears the knocks to let me in but honestly, i was thinking of something else the blue sea the sunset at the beach the small cottage and this beautiful shadow

RIC S. BASTASA
I Walk Away

this afternoon
something inside me
is a shell

i put my ears
to hear the song

i like to scream
to make you
hear
the song of the shell

what i only have are feet

i walk
away

and so i have only
this
departure to offer

RIC S. BASTASA
I Want It Smooth And Classy

i like to have a glass of wine shaped in the body of a beautiful woman i like to drink
something smooth and classy flowing inside
my throat

on an evening like this.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Want The Best Things In Life

who would not want to be the best?
who would not want to have all the best that life can offer?
i, too want the best things that life can offer. but, it is not what life is all about we too, must share the sacrifices of the few, so others may live, so others may have what we always had.
we are too, the passions of Christ.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Want To Be Us

i have nothing to conceal for i have none of those fortunes in fact i tell all what i know and what the world wants to hear
sort of a storyteller
pleasing the sad ones
listening
to the voices of crowded minds for i am the guard of the mall standing, looking closely to any form of calamity please do not run away from me someone so friendly need not be hurt

and feel
what abandon is

i am myself
because there is nothing more because there is no one except my vision of us....

RIC S. BASTASA
I Want To Fly!

yes, you do.
where do you want to go?
i am looking for a new home how does one grow wings?

i want to fly…

it is the most quiet conversation.
the man begs to understand why the mouth he is blest with does not take the shape of a beak.

the bird sings of many lands the man has not yet been to the little brown bird's heart is a ray of sun but the man does not know inside the wars are all in the making outside it is still calm the bird and the man kiss the bird flies

the man falls asleep
the man flies
the bird is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Want To Go Over There

i want to go over there
i now have the courage of hercules
i now have the wisdom
of prometheus

i want to cross this river
take me
on this sail
silently, gently, gracefully
take me
to the other side

where there is no pain
anymore
where the songs of praise are sung

i want to go over there now and
forever

RIC S. BASTASA
I Want To Keep Love He Says

someone so crazy is handing him lots of money poor handsome man

dusk

he returns it kindly to the lewd hands
of the unrequited

it is not all about money
he says
it is about love and he is keeping it

till night.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Want To Talk To A Horse

at this moment i want to talk to a horse perhaps this animal makes sense at least the horse does not know how is it to be sad and still be human and please my dear classy one don't ever talk to me and please please don't send me any message you might be mistaken as another horse with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
I Want To Write A Sad Poem Today

how i wish to write a sad poem today for instance: wilting grasses and dried river beds stinging heat of the sun cinder like sands of the shore heat waves, and melting ice caps something like there is no place that is cool
to my senses,
how i wish i can write the poem about a mad woman and a husband that always follows her laughter, how i wish not to be affected by such a sad poem

but i am
and i do not wish to add insult to injury for writing it
and so i quit, i will not write a sad poem about other people, that will be too much,
i decided not to write about it anymore.

i will forget about it. I will write something much better.

i will write about
nothing at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
