and i will be left as a hazy background where the dogs play with you one will bark at me as though i am an unwanted guest trying to please you

i do not mind
i promise myself that in your lonely moments i must take every inch patiently up the tree i can behave like a spider weaving my own kind of cobwebs i must meet silence with silence peel upon layers of wisdom like a geologist figuring out what really happened in the past such stories, such interpretation such love which once found its existence among the rugged rocks beneath those buried ruins of a kingdom or an old church long vanished by the forgetfulness of time by the cruelty of the seasons

RIC S. BASTASA
The Peculiar Situation....

Under the pitogo
tree
in the shores of olingan trickles of light fall from the space of leaves

a black butterfly hovers around looking for her own place to rest

there are no flowers
here
and i too ask if there is still a nectar or if it still exists under this peculiar situation

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pendulum Of Time.

i do not really know
why you have to cry every time you come here

i know it has always been an uninvited arrival and we have too become attuned to said crying

and as often as this matter happens we have too become numb not like you always a stranger to births and even to deaths as for me i have learned living and dying to all these so here i am writing about it numb, and stoned, and my only consolation is having to live and die with all these truths and just like everyone else who arrive and leave we too have become just like ordinary waves of light and sound and other natural occurrences we have one thing for sure: we come and go and swing like the pendulum of time.

RIC S. BASTASA
The People In That Place....

i explained to them what cruelty is how savage can savage be how monsters each one another
how fortunes come behind those crimes
i keep on explaining to them the unreasonableness of having too much heavy burdens of fortunes on our back like turtles afraid of losing their homes how uneasy life becomes how wary we can be

i travel lightly
carrying only this body and the mind
this spirit soaring leaving all of them
in their crowded land spilling blood eating their own flesh drinking their own urine munching feces and dung stinking people loveless and lavish in their greed and avarice....

RIC S. BASTASA
The People In The Park

a white child is held by the hands of a mother beside them is the father

quite a scene
about a happy family
to start with two lovers sit under the shady tree one steals a kiss

the other holds the face

the place is filled with laughter and teasing

inside is the turbulence that they all do not know it is inside

me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The People Who Wait For Your Arrival

sometimes by the sound of the clock you know when the last hour ends you see yourself there, hands bound, feet dissolving, and body thinning out like the last breath the you give to the wind,

you look back, you have really wasted so many hours, since you do not know what to do with your future anymore, it is there where the road bends into a certain depth and now one waits for you, dead is no longer interesting, and weeping is out of the question, the maps in your palms blur, there is no rainbow from your head to the road,

it is certain as a day that unfolds tomorrow, why should there be darkness?
light is also a symbol of endings, you live in a cave, and you keep concentrated on the shadows that dance before you, you walk on that tunnel, climb a hole and inch by inch you arrive at the inevitable, that door, that opening, that gives you light and you are surprised, there is no crying here, but only the silence of those who arrive much ahead,

and they tell you, you have possessed the wisdom of lightness,
a property of light,
and they smile, and then laugh why they have done so much struggling when there is actually no need

whatsoever

RIC S. BASTASA
The Perfect Tryst....

it is the mute
room where the perfect happening of love
begins
and ends there where as soon as the door breaks open
nothing is said
about it ever....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Perfection Of A Dance

the perfection of a dance comes only when you begin to dance with me, when you finally too sing
with me when you rise with me like white smoke from the fire
of our hearts
rushing its red hands
to touch
the highest part of the sky

RIC S. BASTASA
The Period In Your Long Sentence

there comes a point in your life when you simply do not care you give love and yet you still do not care if they give you the same love in return they give you pain and still you do not care you have no pain to give them you have actually nothing at that point in your life when pain and love too become nothing at all equate that with that point of no return when you do not look back not even afraid that something may turn into salt or stone you simply do not care because there is nothing to really care because you are nearing the endpoint of your existence and your mind and heart are focused on that something that you do not know but hundred percent sure that it is something that you cannot exchange with what passed between the grip of your hands between the hold of your fingers: nothing snaps, something completes itself you are full and you long for nothing anymore 'it is there! it is there! ' that is the only proclamation. The past fades. The present shrinks.

The world becomes a period in your long sentence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Persistence Of My Memory

i am looking forward to see molten clocks on my table elongated days like rubber heated with the fire from your eyes dripping silver spoons from my porcelain cup of coffee
i expect the flow of lava in my bed

you say you are hot and about to erupt into a multiple orgasm on my linen

well said, but not well done.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pessimist In A Poem...

the sickness of humanity is looking for a cure and trusting about the herbs of
words
humanity keeps on writing until it finds the cure,

there seems to be
nothing,
there is no remedy
on the sickness of our humanity it begs nothing is given it is thirsty and remains to be one it is hungry (for love, for compassion for warmth, and understanding for food and shelter and embrace) and it so remains to be one
hungry world

there is no cure, its sickness remains forever
until you come in to tell the world that it is wrong you are the savior

of this sickness of humanity when you cease to be one of them.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poverty Of The Masses

i have already stopped wondering why the rivers always leave the forest proceeding to the sea emptying all its contents as the sea bloats itself with all the silt salt and brownish water it will always be and you know that fully well the sea is, and will always be rich and yet it is giving nothing back to the river to the forest to the village on top of the mountain

the people there only dream of fish and boats
what they eat are their own bare hands

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pharisees....

The strong hands of strict rules bend the spirit of the law towards more wrongs and after doing so there is no bother if forgiveness is in place it is done and the rocks of this earth shake the waters rise and the heavens come with thunder and whirlwinds and once again the cleansing begins

RIC S. BASTASA
The Phenomenology Of Giving

when you give you give because your heart likes it your abundance flows from a container filled with so much you give because having so much is also painful the tree with many fruits too ripe for the season gives them all away to the ground the passers-by shall pick them and have their thirst and hunger satisfied the tree gives because there is no more reason for holding the stalk gives up the weight that it is carrying the tree has to shed leaves for another cycle when the picker comes, the tree does not ask who is it or for the reason why, whether it deserves it it merely lets go every fruit lest it be its own burden for in truth giving away is also a form of relief a cure of our maladies for greed, a way of unloading our guilt a way of erasing our avarice, the final end to our disgrace.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Phenomenology Of The Sparrow

you have seen a sparrow on a twig pulling with its beak
a ripe guava

you have seen how it flies away after a very short fill do you feel the freedom of its wings?

do you hear the wind beneath its feathers?

do you wish to capture it on a trap using a latex sap?
do you wish to catch it with your hands and feel its softness with your fingers?

when you put it in a cage is it beautiful to see it sad and be not able to fly and to sing on a beautiful morning?

or is it more beautiful flying with the wind singing freely its own songs of freedom rather than be silent and sad in your very own hands?

have you ever felt
once in your life that you are a sparrow too tiny too soft too innocent for another
creature's
cruelty and cunning?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Phenomenal Loneliness

the song
the dance
and the circus of loneliness
will always be here
and when you speak
everyone
says: i am not alone in this.

RIC S. BASTASA
so many of them
parading naked in the memories of nights and days lights of smooth flesh flashing
on the walls
soundlessly

one is good at first and then the other tastes lesser one splashes perfume to lighten
the load
this search this thirst this hunger
that arrives at nothing the mind wanders at night restlessly

there is a whisper from the faraway wind

and then
the ear listens

it is not any of them
not one
it is you and your restlessness
forever
hand in hand
this thirst unquenchable
this hunger
that feeds upon itself insatiable.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Philippine Justice System...

he had trial the whole day and the stenographers are dying he is cruel and the world loves him justice is more cruel demanding and sending them all to oblivion,

the world does not actually honor those who work hard for it those convicted shall condemn and those acquitted to easily forget damn the speed and the errors!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Philosopher Dying Young

do not worry about going into 80 your way of imagining how we may sit at 70 somewhere in the park in the middle of that dark part like Simon's bookends and Garfunkel's rock is too hazy for me, for i have always said to myself i can't grow old someone saw my palm and the lines of my future and which i, gladly accept,

I'd rather die younger, than suffer that loneliness of my own uselessness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Philosopher, A Novice

the fly inside the bottle is caught without a possibility of escape,

it is not dead yet

here is the start of its story, a story that he wants to tell

but cannot, here is the beginning of philosophy
the spectator
says.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Philosopher, The Box, The Fly And The Bottle

do not go inside a box it is dark and you may be lucky if there is a breather in there if you go there it will be sealed and there is no door for an exit

i am in here
and i am telling you
it is true.

i am like a fly figuring out the weakness of a bottle wanting to break out from glass and cork somehow how did such a fly learn to live in a vacuum?

i am the philosopher that you know who can melt also with the snow

Now, look, this is the box and it is now inside my hand....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Philosophy Of This Journey.....

one leaves...........takes a journey...............far.............farther away........

alone,

not stopping, longing, looking for more, but not really definite on what to look for, it searches, passes by every town, takes the road, sees a row of trees, a line of coasts, it rains, there is flood in the river, you do not stop........leaves again, it shines in one place
sun is good,
clouds are as beautiful as one notices from time to time by the window
of the bus, of the plane....... one leaves, takes another journey, one knows what he is searching, a glimpse, but not really definite still along this journey life becomes what it really is,

it is a passing wind that blows your hair but none is taken away from you not even a lock of hair, not even the scent in your skin.

RIC S. BASTASA
and i of course
remember you, Maning

spanish mestizo with nothing but flesh and torso as human investment and here comes Naomi, lonely woman in her forties,

filthy rich and loveless, meeting Maning, willing and healthy physique to fill her empty life to the brim, but lust does not last, and at the end of this menopausal love, comes boredom, a teller of life wasted, use and disuse, discard and throw away what was once just a toy to play with. Out, you dog!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Photograph Of You In B & W i keep it in one of the pages of my favorite book, a love story that is never finished, i keep on reading it till the wee hours, like a dream cut from the sound of the heavy rain, cats and dogs, i keep it there and kiss it all night long and when i sleep i place it on top of my chest my heart beating like a drum to a dream:

making love with you is a routine and i have not heard about my heart complaining about a deprivation, no more, no more, there is this phenomenon of being fed-up, routine that makes a familiarity and arrives at the conclusion of forgiving and forgetting.
i look at old letters. Your picture in b & w the photograph of you looks like an old stamp of a letter that i have no plan sending to you anymore. Got these tired hands. this scissor this matchstick, this trash can, and the final solution. This is the end of pain.
The dispositive portion. No costs.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Photosynthesis Of The Mind..... what i have inside my mind is converted into food,

the mundane
into divine bits

in the same manner that we have accepted how these leaves take in light and live....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Piano

it used to play the music of love on the shores of the sea it used to be

it was thrown finally in the deep and then gone
her legs got strangled intentionally but she changes her mind struggles not to be drowned by her sorrow finding a new love

a new beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
The Picture

beside a tree
he talks and confesses he touched the bark absorbing energy from the sap of the living leaves and the twigs

it used to be that he was the dog that barked
the wrong tree at the time when Cleopatra was finally set aside by Caesar

his first life.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Picture Of Mona Lisa In The Internet

until now
i have not really fathomed the meaning of your smile was it sadness or the anticipation of bliss?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pieces Of Self....

everyday i see myself first as the wholeness of the egg its whiteness ignored cracked by the fork and scrambled and fried

those pearls of white rice cooked and handed over on white porcelain plates breakfast is not strange otherwise if i ask, i will be strange to all that is expected to be familiar

in the bathroom i turn on the light and see the miniature of sun after the pee and the poo i feel the softness of tissue and the cleansing of water

flushing is such a relieving sound and everything is in order now the brushing begins and the mirroring and the parting of hair the shower gives some songs life is cool after all and then one gets used to the usual grooming putting on socks fitting on belts and shoes and buttoning shirts and zippering

one gets outside finally and see the real world feel the real air and hear the real sounds of the traffic one who reads this finds nothing spectacular

after all what is spectacular about routine?

and life is just one of those routines in all your pieces of self that you scatter all over the office, the streets, the house
the room

and in all places of the heart and spleen.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pigs And You

what you thought was a pearl, then
a diamond, which you treasured for years,

the pigs those pigs
keep on eating, preoccupied with left-overs
and chaff and grains muddy but not muddled,
and they

(if you only know)
pity you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Piles Of Folders

today i am bringing another folder at home
i am supposed to read them ah, all these lives of people that i do not personally know, the things that they keep on doing against each other these cains and abels these black sheep and fauns these sphinx and sea monsters i will be learning their minds and studying how to read them how they speak and how they justify evil
how they explain like magicians taking rabbits from black hats and converting newspaper cuttings into money bills it will be fun, i suppose, and i will be spending more time than watching The Piano on tv,
i will be lost in these labyrinths of motives and acts
people kill sometimes for no reason at all i am taught that and some people admit what heinous crimes other people do for nothing at all there are subsumed stories exceptions to the rule of human behaviors and there will be exceptions to the exceptions too ah, my mind is strangulated by these criminals my thoughts becoming too convoluted in a tunnel of plots but i will not be dead neither shall i be intimidated i will not quit
in fact, i will have my last laugh giving what is due to the other clapping for the innocent giving justice
letting the criminal go on the basis of reasonable doubts crying with the widows and consoling the orphans talking to God and making judgments for the poor and then at night i sleep without any pillow at all too tired
i sleep on my hands on the headboard light unswitched
off.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pillars Of Our Society

see the pillars of our society.
the church, the provincial and municipal halls, the university, the house of the family, try to hold these pillars and feel their strength and width, you think that they are too strong to protect you try piercing each pillar with the questions deep from your heart ask if they are that strong to make you strong too and protect you till the last breath of your suffering and pain ask more questions and find out the answers from all these pillars lean on them, and touch them and shoot them with the bullets of your quizzical looks

listen carefully to the correct answers and stare at all of them slowly, these pillars will crumble and turn to powder for in truth there is no other pillar stronger than what they have constructed for you through all these years except the pillar that your body built on your legs from the bottom of your feet it is you ultimately that you can only lean on you to protect you till the last breath of you is finally taken away.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pink Pussycat

The pink pussy cat
lands on its four feet on the blue floor

what you have not seen is her way of scratching the cheeks of air in the middle of her somersault exhibition

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pink Slip

At the bottom of the files it was kept there April 2, 2002
Remember the exact date A pink slip
Among the yellow sheets Inside the big brown envelope

Life does not complete the cycle Without it
You want to forget it
You bury it
On layers and layers of sadness Like sand and gravel and leaves and grass and rocks

It never dies
It shouts the truth that there was this coward Inside you
Crying for justice
Looking for a redemption

Today you take that pink slip again Touching the edges and Rereading the story that it is telling The words there are painful

It is only you who knows what it means It is both freedom and vengeance breathing Life again saying

Tomorrow, yes tomorrow that star Out there shall soon fall And your laughter shall be last Reverberating
Beyond the four corners of The pink slip

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pitiful....

the biggest
tree

what cannot be embraced by a chain of ten natives

the tallest tree here

how the moon pities it when the cold nights come

it has no leaves no fruit....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Place Of My Birth No Longer Recognize Me

the land where i was born mother tells me is a land of mud and rain they always go together and cause the coming of each other once when i have already learned to talk and walk we visited it

there were trees then and some canals and fields of green, ricefields and patches of potato gardens and corn and cassava

the men there are thin and the women bent and mishapen and they always complain that they are hopeless with sick children

they wanted to move to our place where father has prospered

there were no compromises no transfers and no promises we left all of them towards our own home and then there was this war and many were killed we read that on the news and heard it from relatives and then i become a man and in peace visited the place of my birth

the place has changed everything is barren and burned and there are no children and women

either they died and buried on shallow grounds or they left somewhere else for good
those hopeless men

i remember the dead trees and tell them my name who my mother was

it is sad the place of my birth no longer recognizes me

RIC S. BASTASA
The Place Of The Damned

please understand my friend that to keep your sanity here you need not scream or kick or run wild around the four corners of this closed room of loneliness between us there is nobody else except perhaps your theory about holding hands with your soul the reflection of yourself in the mirror you worship as though all these things are holy and if holy must be true this is the world of the damned the inability of accept what is rightly there staring before us truths, truths, these are inevitable truths my friend that we have been born lonely and all the circumstances are nothing but laces of the basket that they fill with fruits and then we go back to the emptiness and this we must face, this is the most reliable truth of our being: we come here all alone, and alone we shall soon go.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Place That She Cannot Find

you trust her she has a gift for the gab she talks about those flowers that bloom from June till November she draws a world in the heavens she comforts you that you belong and that you need her later she demands that you worship her as a gesture of respect you compromise a bit prostrate on the floor bringing her gifts and praises

you know her you keep silent when she begins to destroy your life you escape

and she will not find you anywhere you know yourself better you know a place where you are true just like the rest who live there how can she follow you on that path of truth and righteousness?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Place To Be...

when we arrive there
finally we shall not dance

it is the place where words have no place
anymore

just the gaze of quiet the blending of lights and colors

you don't look for the possibilities of taste

i'd wish i could have said

perfect!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Place Where My Heart Lives

it is on top of a cliff it is an eagle's nest there is a red egg
in the middle of those blue eggs

there is no eagle anymore that flies there
anymore

the blue eggs spoil there is nothing there
the blue egg
-cracks
my heart still sings
the blues

the clouds listen for a while then they cry
the way the rain falls on the plains then they drift away

the blue egg cracks and shall be silent for a while until the black eagle comes and takes it back to the place where it must be

RIC S. BASTASA
most of the time
they talk about the coming of death medicine as a highlight fades like dusk to morning the matter of evidence has become rays of morning light the series of travels from nepal to calcuta to kuala are not exactly the denials that most of them thought

and when the talk has become one routine like a train from pedro gil to edsa it becomes another uninteresting view at the Luneta

well it ends like everyone else Life is like that and will always be an imitation when death comes one holds his cigarette puffs a smoke into the air and then puts a stop to a stare

RIC S. BASTASA
The Places Of Arrival

WORDS come like rain upon the road the wetness runs upon the head the rivers come always running nothing remains always going somewhere nothing is left
as always the silence of the numbness the self that is king without land without a castle the nudity of man the insufficiency of his mind the bareness of the soul barren as sand
the dust of the bones the air of the flesh the catacombs of our existence somehow our footsteps insist about a direction of a place
it is not there like fate that we imagine
like aims like visions that fade like mirage when we arrive

RIC S. BASTASA
The Plain Citizen Of The Republic

the government for sure cannot survive without you plain citizen you are taxed that is the most certain thing that happens in your life as plain citizen of this republic

the property that you own is subject to confiscation from womb to tomb you, plain citizen is bound with a lot of other responsibilities

you make them rich and give them power you let them stay for more than expected and they all laugh like mad men

you do not make a stir on the fold
the law chases you just in case and the prison cell is crowded so plain citizen of the republic be good lick them as they suck you pamper them

as they spare you

plain citizen you sell your right to be king in this republic
now you sit there
and you will be next!
The Plane

when it starts to fly it is being met by this rain.

there is this strong wind ahead of us and some dark clouds the stewardess announces said state and we are 30,000 feet above the mountains

yes, these are the bumpy skyways.
i close my eyes. i think of you, the house, the garden, the room, and the two dogs you are caring.

(will we crash? will this plane fall to the ground? shall we die in an instant?)

i close my eyes.
then the plane steadies. i open my eyes.

there are clear clouds. below is a wide expanse of the blue sea.
i look at the wings of the plane.

and then its wheels touch the ground.
the door opens.

it is another world for me. i feel the importance of the ground. Its glory. Its reign now.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Platter

You know, death doesn’t exist, he said to her.
I know, yes, now that I’m dead, she answered.
Your two shirts are ironed, in the drawer.
The only thing I’m missing is the platter.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Playboy In Town

his beautiful life
as he claims begins

one day with a cup of arabica coffee

some hundred bills in his pocket

a certain obsession from Vogue Magazine and a few flavored & scented condoms.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pleas Of Participation

to be brief will mean a little bit of choosing silence rather than hush
or breathe

to be silent in the rhythm of the breathing nostrils to be still like a post with a light on along the sidewalk of the night of the city to be nothing but a tree to be not able to go with the wings of the wind to be nothing but a rock to be not able to splash with the water to be a nail stuck inside the force of wood to be a watcher of the birds to be an ear merely hearing what sounds arrive how can this be? when i have a set of feet and hands

how can this be when my mind keeps on beaming with thoughts?

only if i allow it
only if i allow it

shall i? shall i love you and kiss you? shall i make love with you?
shall i be the bed? the cover? and the window?

allow me to be a part of your life allow me

will you?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pleasure Upon A Window

upon a window sill
the body lays the hands strokes
every pleasure that the skin gives ecstasy is hard upon its veins
bursting finally on clouds
softness follows
sleep
on a weary heart high
upon a dream of a wet forest grass

RIC S. BASTASA
The Plow Of My Papa

today is the last day to sell the plow of my papa it is a necessary part of his lifetime in fact his lifetime is the plow itself that made the lines of his own poetry in the fields of rice and corn today another man shall have it at the price we all wanted we have sold all that he had the land, the house, the trees he planted when he was still alive when he was still strong and cruel and so imposing his is his only plow and we have decided to dispose it finally to any man

we are now at the stage of reconstructing our lives and the plow of papa must go we shall have our own fields now of rice and corn on a white canvass we draw the new sun, its color shall be warm, something new really to the feel of our skins the darker ones shall be replaced by the flowing color of the clouds like feathers of birds always ready to fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Plunge Of The Child In The Old River

i hear the splash
of the old river

i was that little child diving from a bent coconut tree

i dream of crocodiles

waiting their mouths
wide open

my body so frail
and pale and

in one flash of the wink of an eye

the little child was gone and there came back

the heroic man in me not magic just being stoic

RIC S. BASTASA
when you read my poem you begin to say that i must have been confessing about a past and it is my subconscious who is always speaking apparently you notice the coming and going of a soul to its favorite place talking in the first person sometimes you begin to piece the different forms of metaphor: an image of mother, a naughty son a flock of sheep, an old house by the river, green hills, ripples of the sea, leaves falling,
you connect chain to another chain always bearing in mind that one who tells the truth cannot forget a story.

i used to believe in what i write and chose those which i must believe in but somehow i have changed: i now want to write for those i do not believe anymore.

a black book, an access code, a blue bird, a caterpillar, a cat on top of the dog's head.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poem As A Treasure

for whom it is not dedicated there is this laughter that belittles the poem
as a treasure and for one who cannot relate for lack of sensitivity or imagination
the poem is nothing but a rock along his path
a pest in his garden
a wilted leaf another part of his garbage a burden on his back a howling sound in his stomach

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poem At The Tip Of Your Tongue tell me about the poem at the tip of your tongue wet with wisdom

tell me about it and tell me if you have finally written it on paper tell me if you still keep it in your mind while you busy with other economic ideas

the one which make both ends meet the bread and butter thing tell me if the poem is still there unwritten or if written in haste still unfinished or if finished so sketchy like a quick scratch to an itch of this flea tell me if you have the courage of writing the lines to beauty that you always ignore to gentleness that you set aside to grace that you dislike to God whom you have offended tell me what your silence means let me decipher what you think what you still refuse to write tell me, i know, everything is gone like a whisper of the wind far away from your deaf ears

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poem In A Trance

we are bored, we are like nails we may forgive ourselves and be silent snails eking our way out through our own fluids we somehow fall short of the words and in our bed we look away like strangers i thought we can make a poem together the one about love and freedom
what we have instead are black birds pecking on our wooden windows red ants in a parade of their pheromones looking for an empire beneath our dreams we are lost when we finally covered our faces with the blanket and when you finally switched off the light on our common headboard.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poem In My Mind

you cannot steal my poem it is in my mind you cannot put an end to my poem it is alive
it has the wings of an eagle flying high nesting on a cliff
a very high cliff beyond the grasp of my hands it is wild as wild as the cobra in the forest but when i recall it back in my memory it becomes gentle as a dove as tamed as my dog wagging its tail behind my back it becomes a tamed horse waiting for my ride.

RIC S. BASTASA
now you must learn what poetry is alright, you must agree that it gives sometimes a sense
of pleasure
where emotions begin to play in the dark
in the park
it becomes the hallmark of your freedom
you must have noticed how the words chosen are tilted in your favor because now you are the master of this game of truth
and purity
you must know by now that poetry somehow is a escape
there are exits in its structure where you design your
freedom
your tunnel from that prison wall of closed structures
without windows without
light
this is the sense of selfishness away from the crowd
away from those that humiliate you from those that knows nothing of you except your madness
your introversion into the silent (yet colorful world)
of metaphors
the frogs there sing
the rain does not stop
falling
the rainbows come bridging that gap between your illusion and your reality
you must know
by now what all these means in the most simple term this is your kit for survival
a box of words the most private room
of your
sexy metaphors
your women and your dreams
your treasures and your island
your house without a roof
because all night long you always want to see the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poem Not The Poet

she makes a mistake having loved my poem
than myself,
she arrives at this
that i am more real there than what i am
she loves making love
with the words
rather than my body
my torso she sets aside my poems
the arms and legs
my metaphor the best
tongue ever
that licked the bare shoulders of her soul

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poem That I Love....

After being away
for the last five days, here i am
again
making love with you
in eternity....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poem That Makes You Alive

from the office the paper works pile up like a mountain where you walk only a few steps where it is so steep and you want to rest on the grass because you feel like you are dying in a minute and they understand why sometimes you have to stop and get some air from the window facing the sea when you go home for lunch with your wife your shoulder hangs a little bit down like a hanging plant from a branch of an old tree your eyes are drooping and you lose your appetite not the food but for life itself you have been doing things by compulsion this bread and butter thing this normal course this work that is dictated upon us society moves like a clockwork office like a jail the world like a cell to you you keep your computer open after lunch you sit in front of it again punch the letters and tell the screen this is my life

this could have been my work writing poems, this poem and the rest of the poems this makes you alive without milk without the cradle without the bottle

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poem That Makes You Cry

Why did he write the poem that makes You cry? Did he intend to make you sad For the whole day?
He didn’t. He is simply talking about Himself. It is not about you. It is about his Own sorrow. The dead ants, the shadow Of the sun folded and kept in the corner. The goats that have to go. The lines of your Palms that you follow. The stars in the Heavens. The fact that ultimately there Was no pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. They are true. I have seen how they happen. With him on the grassy plain. There is Always a story to tell. This time you come. And you find yourself immersed. You are Like us and so you cry. It is you in us. It won’t last long anyhow. We shall soon Part ways, as he once did. Earlier.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poem That The Little Child Recited To Papa And Mama

ma
ma

pa pa

(giggle)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poeming Of The Flea....

because he will be away for long
the wife has allowed his dog to sleep with her in bed

and then she infects him with fleas.....

RIC S. BASTASA
so i have written and you have read and you say you understand but i say: no you don't

i will hide in all the images and you will see something so different

you will learn later when everything is deleted.

so what is the head fake?
the poems are not for you.

but just for me.
all dreams end.

i was alone
and there were no trees.
i got no world.

i face the brick wall and then pass through it.

i will be there and i will leave these all.

you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poems As Diary

to know me
there is no other but this poetry to know poetry however please do not read
my diary
for this diary may fail the standards of your poetry
but at any rate everyday poetry is a diary what makes us fume like a mad cow what makes us whistle like a satisfied lover what makes us surrender in defeat and shout victory in triumphs little things and big things all summed up in this new thing: diary as poetry and poetry as diary.

we do not even have to rhyme does life rhyme at all my friend?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poems Everyday In Your Life

it takes a lot of frustrations, a little inspiration but more of melancholic clamor for someone like you to write a poem sometimes only once a year or nothing at all not a poem even when they read it or when you read it yourself

it is a matter of just surviving less the poems which you could have written everyday in your life.

RIC S. BASTASA
on that day pain comes for you failed to pay the rent of your room
and so they take away everything inside and lock the room

it is a pitiful situation but you never cry

silently you take away your possessions towards the road as you wait for a ride

your overused toothbrush your Colgate toothpaste your red slippers dirty jeans and off-white shirts some collections of poems and secondhand books and then the rain pours suddenly

you try to cover the books with your dirty clothes but the rain pours mad and heavy and everything gets wet

this time
a flood of tears rush from your eyes the pain has become unbearable

RIC S. BASTASA
one summer a poet writes about true love
and happiness
and this lonely lady chances upon the lines of this poet and she has tasted the sweetness of happiness that love can bring she loves every word in the poem feels the ecstasy of every line and every night

she says she cannot sleep thinking, feeling,
wanting to be lost and be held in his arms

she decides to love
the poet ultimately she travels to the place stated in his address hoping to see him so she will finally know his love that touches her in the bottom of her heart

only to find out
it is sad
that the address does not exist and the poet does not live there and does not even exist
perhaps only in the imagination of those who want to love and be loved
she is so sad she jumps into a conclusion that love is a lie
that the poet is a liar

since then, she stops reading the poems of that poet (or any other poet)
who never dies
because he for once never ever lived in the first place

except the poem
perhaps which to date still convinces lonely ladies to live and believe to love and be loved that which defines

what love is where love is found

and find it somehow in the arms of one who is real, like it is alive, like it is true to the one beside her who touches her
with his warm hands who melts
her in his eyes

because
even unwritten by any poet this love is still so beautiful....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poet And The Reader

the poet writes his lines they are all dead
unless the reader comes and resurrects them

then the poem becomes alive and begins to read upon itself the meaning of its existence there is a bond between the poet and the reader

a familiarity comes into play one says> this is what it is the other says> i know.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poet As A Flatterer

he loves bukowski and e.e. cummings too, and he colors his world with their shades and hues and the souls of other poets come to him love us too
we are too lonely in here our poems have turned dusty read us too

and out of respect for those who are dead and lonely he takes them all inside his room lights his lamp and burns his eyebrows (literally dissecting each flesh and vein of those poets departed)

he writes at the break of his day i love you all and honor you but sorry, i have my own poems too and like yours... forgive me... they're dusty too and need my reading company.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poet As A Pornographer

without the contours of the body where shall the poet be?

without the feel of the palms skimming through breasts and thighs where can his poems be?

he cannot live on those clouds alone he has no words that must dwell in air his rhyme and rhythm are on their prime on the hips and legs that which lies between and not beyond creates the meaning of his lines the hair and nose and tender loins the lips and tongue and cheeks the poet takes some flowers and smell them but with her something crawls in his head forever do not judge him for he is happy and he does not really care about what you say

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poet As A Thief

the poet travels from one stanza
to another
he utters the syllables like he chews a bubble gum and then he puts air and makes those films and rainbows in the air like a thief he is amazed by all these wonders he takes some and discards some and slowly he builds his own bubble on top of another he sees his face constructed from their own and he feels this elation

i am from you and you and you and you cannot deny me too

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poet As Mere Spectator

and so there was this child left by the mother who was washing her body in another room

the child crawls and walks its way finally to the dining table and pulls the table cloth where a cup of hot coffee is put

hot coffee is poured on its face and the baby screams and screams and screams at the top of his voice

i hear it but what can i do i am the poet
and you give me this job of a mere spectator

next time, tell me, i am more than that i can be superman
to that child
only if you ask.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poet As Politician

every hour the poets knock the door of my senses if you have time my dear please read my latest poem i have read yours and they're good (what does he care? he has his own cares to care for) and they keep on knocking and i keep on lying too with my grin as wide as the cheetah your poems are great just perfect for me.. oh i love this one too how hungry can a poet be as a politician hungry for praise

lusting for honor

wanting to have a name where there are none except perhaps in tombstones yes i will compromise with an epitaph here lies the poet as a politician he is read upon his own request

Requiscat In Pace!

i place the star after his date of birth i place a cross after his date of death.

and of course at the lowest portion upon his request

RSVP.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poet Friend Of Mine

the last time i saw him he wore thick glasses but it did not deter him from being interested with what he cannot see without it.

he uses his hands to feel.
he embraces all those that he love he keeps his imagination alive

from far
i only read his poems

his words are all alive
like water
filling in the cracks of life like clouds

taking subtle shapes and always transient

his spirit spreads throughout the universe
his mind my mind too
after that moment when a certain light arrives
and flickers and then forever gone in the vastness of air

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poet Is Looking For Love Deep &#304;N The Night

sometimes you may find sincerity to a poem as to the date when it is written, the hour particularly tells you that a poem is written when everyone in the house is fast asleep, and that someone cannot sleep, because he has to write some words for someone, who

too, cannot
sleep,

not really because they are insomniacs, much less vampires looking for blood, but perhaps someone

who is looking for love, even in the dark, even in the wee hours even when love

is no longer there, even when the night is dead, even when there is no one alive in this world to tell him that he is alive and must by all means and at all cost, deserve to be happy.

The Poet Laureat

did you get his message today from across the sea?

that life is short you need to take a stop along the way and smell the roses in here to be candid the men and women and children know that too well and look at them the men drink tuba the women spread the rumors and giggle and laugh and the children still play even in the dark as i dabble in poetry there are no roses anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
the older he gets the fewer the words
until such time when nothingness struck him
in bed alone
he merely mumbled
a single syllable
and that was the best poem i heard from him ever

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poet’s Prayer

Lord forgive me
That I have chosen to become a poet Forgive me for what I write The poems of my life Grant me such devotion
To write the poems that I love Grant me the love of poetry That must not distract me From tenderness
Make my desire last long Make my disillusion short Uproot from me these impure desires From those poems that trouble me Let not some images confuse me Let not some metaphors numb me Let not my dullness sadden me Let your radiance descend upon The modesty of my poems As you once gave radiance To the prophets who cannot speak For themselves
Let me be a strong poet Able to love and defend the poems for the women and children and land Grant me the talent to make The poems that they may still Recite and remember Even when I am gone
In my weakness as a poet Make me strong
To scorn the poems that are not pure To shy away from the fires And flames that do not light The lives of other men And women too.

RIC S. BASTASA
This is the place where money has no value, where work is always free because it is loved, because love is always one with its beloved expecting nothing in return loving without measure

always priceless more than a gem beyond gold transcending the fences of our being despite the tiredness of our hands, despite the drying of the rivers of the mind imagination always flies like birds outside the matrix of the boundaries of migration a diaspora of metaphors clinging to nothing but its faith to the ecstasy of the most common words the diaphragm of syllables the bugle of sentences press the keys

you can write some more

face the screen
and bleed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetic Experience...

i had always been faithful to you.
my arms are numb and my fingers are quiet.

every morning i give you some lines.
i listen to the whispers of your songs.

i get nothing actually not even a kiss. ephemeral and illusive you and mirage.

this is the desert without an oasis.
there is a camel but it is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetic....

when i sit down
and begin to think i become so light
and fly
like an atom to my mind

addicted to the wind i flow
slave to the sky
i float
beside the stars
i hang on....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetry At Night Time And Beethoven's Piano Music

dr this is like playing the piano pieces at night when everyone in the neighborhood is already sleeping, ey wonder if there is a ghost in this house someone that cannot accept death someone that claims an unfinished business still roaming in limbo and plays the piano at night ey are all disturbed and will close their windows earlier turn off the lights and retreat inside their thick blankets the piano is heard and it is playing some pieces of Beethoven the story of his death...

it is not the same with your poetry all night long, you write, and there is no stopping and the neighbors think that everything is all right that the lights are on because there is a baby in the house it is you that sob silently inside the limbo of your dreams that refuse to die roaming the streets at night breathing the cold in the darkness the following morning, nothing is changed the neighbors as usual do their normal activities the street is heavy with traffic people are busy chasing the hours and there is no stopping anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetry Circle

ey all meet under the moon under the palm trees of their desert beside the flowing river of an oasis where the camels sleep

ey form a circle and look upon the sorrows of their hearts and then one begins to sing as the other joins with a hum after that song which serves as an opening the leader of the pack formally declares:

let the poetry begin let the rains fall heavily on the desert let there be a flood of tears let there be an emptying of the hearts let all the hands of the soul open let us all be, as we all wished, be fully alive

and then one of those who weeps so hard begins to disrobe and dance.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetry Group In Andibas..

you are funny
i guess you are taking this matter
seriously

as you see this is just past
time, a pasta, a time
in a pasta,

beside a spicy aroma of hot chili or if you are just too lucky

there is a party of happy-go-lucky fools talking
a lot about simple nonsense like well, we are here and we have nothing much to do so we write. Nothing serious like if it is not done then this world would stop revolving or that fish would be over-fried and cannot be eaten. You are funny and most of us are laughing. There is nothing serious here. We as i repeat, are resting and no one is talking and so we relax and write. There is no purpose really.

Nothing noble. we are bored.

or if you ask enough, we are overworked. Our right brains are exploding, so we take some sips of coffee, look at the sky beyond the blue sea, in that one line horizon, and sometimes reflect on this journey of fools sharing notes on nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetry In The Heart Of Hazel far in the hills of cancainap she feels poetry like the winds of the mountain like the forest trees and she writes them line to line each syllable keeps on dripping like the raindrops from the roof to her footsteps

i have read what she sends me day by day through the internet i could have told her that the metaphors are still looking for her because she did not put them i didn't. Finally i did not tell her. In her lines i have seen how her heart is burning like the wildfires in the forest and no kind of criticism has the right to put it off.

i know, perhaps after four summers, she and her metaphors soon shall meet. And there will be a big feast.
A truce, perhaps between feeling and discipline.

Art is always a patient listener and in such slow touches and brushes it paints more beautifully than the warm hands of reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetry In Us

it is not
in the metaphors that we invent from day to day
those that we see in things that we dress for ourselves those that we think can speak what is unspeakable in our beings
which in any way no matter what we do
remain unspeakable because they are.

the poetry in us
is not the poem.

do not ask me
it is nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetry Inside All Of Us...

it's been there
from the beginning

perhaps even before you give birth
to your
eyes

it's been there
embedded in the linings of the
heart

it is experience
it is the past

from the past lives from previous existences

you are awakened and reawakened every day
or year like a morning

you remember the orange color of your sunsets

the scents of the flowers that once were with you
mixed in the water of your many baths

you remember so many hands that caressed your hair

it is the light from the sun that strikes your eyes that sometimes makes your remember and then you piece them all into a pattern of an understanding

the shattered pieces unite into a form

and then you remember that is why you are always writing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetry Inside Us....

we have not mumbled
like bees
all seeking nothing but nectar

we are singing like those birds
after the nest after those grains

we are building rainbow bridges
only for a while but so beautiful

and then gone....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetry That Binds

i want to escape from you how can i? i am bound to every syllable.
your words no longer laces of red silk but chains of stainless steel around my wrists

how perfect is this slavery of words inside this cave of emptiness others boast of the bliss inside the cornucopia of your promises the taste of every consonant ambrosia of sweet sounds the harmony of hollowed halls the blissful rest that every comma provides inside an array of images breathe breathe breathe

i want to escape from you
but here i am stranded again on an island
of metaphors

for today she sends me a message that she feels that i am down and i need to reconstruct every pattern every path of this labyrinth for me to find the final exit of my own freedom

however

i am glad that inside this loneliness there are many of us hanging on clinging to the taps of our fingertips making good at the wings of words and we begin to learn to fly inside the little space of blue clouds and shining sun and blowing air in this cozy corner of the heart this poetry that binds us to bleed and yet so blithe so light so free The Poetry Train...

you have taken this non-stop train to poetry at a certain destination you embark just to feel the rail and touch the soil but then the train runs again and you are still in the destination is unknown the journey is endless and what is riding is not just the body but the whole soul.

this is your poetic damnation.

feel the grace, keep this place, always, always in locomotion there are no wings, but you take flight there is not much food, but you live forever there is no money, but man, you are rich....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poetry Vendor

in the market you sell your poetry, the ones that you wrote for a span of forty years, and it is not selling no one buys
you advertise, you dance, you sing to be noticed this vendor in you
has become too degrading

i must have written the worst ones those bleeding words those crying letters and without any intention of infecting those who are dancing on the streets strolling on the parks those kissing under the trees i keep them all in a bundle bound with a warning: not fit for your reading.

they better be my own secrets lest they all offend this happier world where you claim
you live in....

RIC S. BASTASA
Toreno
we tried. That is the main point.
We tried the best we can
To save ourselves

IF we failed do not dismay Time heals a failure Leaves nothing later but Only a scar & scars do not really last Or if they last
They become our landmarks
So we will never be lost
Again.

Toreno the hills will always be there
The mountain peaks are always Pointing to the Skies
The plains are always filled With rivers and trees and Ricegrains

Things are not always dead Some though lifeless if we try again Shall live again

Now Toreno i shall forgive you For choosing the lifelessness of the stone But for you
Each of us can be moss too
To be friends with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Point That You Are Driving At

of all inanimate
you say you want to be a fruit a mango luscious, sweet, and ripe

i know, your point is that you are ready,
ripe for everything, an end
for itself,

and of all animate,
you say you simply want to be this mosquito
of the female variety, one that sings one that tells you that life sucks

RIC S. BASTASA
The Political Law Class

it is avatar like i am growing roots all over my body
my eyes
through its pupils are giving you
pathways to another dimension
beyond the threshold of the law of this land

i tell you about sandcastles that we keep on building and how every hour the waves of the sea are destroying them

faithful to the law
we keep rebuilding these sandcastles eternal damnation but for a cause we never let ourselves be drowned by the depression of the hours

survival of the fittest so you have to memorize the faces of those around you

they may not make it
after all

i spread my roots to all your noses your hands
fingers
every orifice of your bodies

after three hours
i have lost what i have for that day

going home driving alone
on a dark night
i am surprised
why i have become stronger....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Politician

i see you holding a baby, smiling, father of affection hurling speeches for us all for the good of humanity public welfare and public good for the people by the people

inside my room is the absurdity about you taking a shower standing on the bath tub with your black suit and white tie silver cuff links

watches that stop and a secret journal containing the real you at the end it has these notes poor the people buy the people....

in revenge, the mountains grow the grasses spreading lustily on the plains hiding the arms of those who are really hungry, hopeless, raped, and murdered by your promises and words.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Politician That I Just Met This Afternoon....

When i look at his face, he was looking at something else,

i like to capture
his eyes,
to see how truth
was,

they are wild birds
migrating
to a faraway land
and he cannot promise to take them all back to my home

there is nothing
and i know that this

politician true to his nature

has again lied, and which to me

is the only truth
that he cannot hide.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pony

come little preza
the pony
is for little preza to play the great ranch in her mind the large patches of pastures of her memories
the little white pony with spots of brown is for little preza
to hope for something nice to erase what sadness lies
on the surface
of the table without linen on the plate without food
on the floor without any carpet
the little ponies of our minds play for us
the game that are badly needed in these times of utter adversities

come little preza
come
the grass is cool
the skies are blue
the ponies are playful

ride on one of them and be happy for once

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poo.....

the sea is calm
i stand and watch
early cold morning.

a fat man with white hair is sitting on one of the rocks facing the sea
beside him his white
dog.

the slow sound of the waves are soothing

an old woman carrying a pail leaves her house throwing what is inside the pail to the sea

she is disgusting but she says the fish love what is inside it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pool That Once Was Clean

it is the mirror of your clean shaven face the image of grace
and beauty
was once yours

until you put the ripples on the clear pool until you throw the first stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poor Children In The Municipal Cemetery

the poor children in the municipal cemetery are rushing to the mourners bearing the coffin of their departed

one kid is left out and keeps calling the rest who are far away

'come! come! hurry
hurry! our much awaited lunch is ready! '

one weakling with Chinese eyes stands beside me begging for my jolibee chicken

' please give me one sir, i cannot compete with the rough and the strong'

RIC S. BASTASA
you are in a situation that is utterly uniquely yours

you love much but no one loves you

you make all of them happy but they only hurt you

you want true love
there is none for you

they will love you because of your money that has always been the curse from the day you were born you have all the luxuries, the fame, that honor, that position you have all the money you can hold but there is no love for you well i guess, you must have accepted it it is but fair: you have it all, except love on the other hand, there is this guy who is stripped of everything poor, uneducated, jobless, no house to live, no land to own no money to spend

but someone loves him so truly he is silent, but (i do not have to guess) he is absolutely happy tonight, she is his.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poor Woman

she once received same amount as mine equal shares of our inheritance

he trusted people that much now she's as poor
as before,

i am closing the door
now my charity must know the name of people.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poorest Guy In Town Is Here

Christmas is indeed

for children

for family

and here he is spending Christmas

without any.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pores In Our Skin Are Too Many

no one shuts us
up
when they close our mouths
our hearts open
some more

no one shuts us
out when a door is closed more doors come and wait
outside
waiting to be opened

one one shuts us in
and leaves us
in fear

the pores in our skin
are too many

for emergency exits
at any time
anywhere

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pose Of Desire

the right arm
sits on the left arm
the right hand
lands on the left side of the neck
the left hand situates itself securely on the right armpit
you embrace
yourself
the eyes focus on the object
that they have not seen it is not necessary that a wrinkle
be an accent on the forehead

RIC S. BASTASA
The Possibilities

they all surround me and they all ask me to follow but i did not go they throw feeds in front of me but i did not take any i did not peck upon any grain as though i am a chicken the skies rain but i did not go outside i did not meet anything or anyone

those snakes
those nails
those spears

at the end
the only judgment is this:

it is me
it is only me
i am
my only possibility

nag-alirong kanako
apan wala ako mikuyog nagpasabod sa akong atubangan
apan ni bisan usa
wala ako'y gipunit
nag-ulan sa langit apan wala ako migawas
wala ako'y gisugat

ang mga halas
ang mga lansang
og ang mga bangkaw ang hukom sa
kataposan sa panahon mao lamang kini

ako lamang og ako lamang ang posibilidad
sa akong kaugalingon

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pot Of Gold At The End Of The Rainbow onight she takes us to Dubai the place where new dreams are woven from sand

ey they left the lands of their birth to work in the land where the color of gold is black my friend writes:

the pot of gold is found right here

come, come and be with us there is nothing in the land where you live the promise is broken there is no token

come, come and be with us
let us partake of this sadness from the sand and sun of Dubai you must say goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poverty Of The World

the poverty of the world
the hunger of the children will always be here
no matter what
no matter when

now, tell me what makes you different from their hunger from their poverty?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Poverty Of This World.....

poverty will always be there.
it will not leave
there are reasons for not leaving it gives you wisdom.

poverty is one of the colors in that painting on the wall a smudge of dark black, pitch blood, scarlet,
when you go nearer, you want to suggest to have it blotted but as you stand away and see that color in harmony with other colors of the landscape of the mind
you will see how it blends to create
beauty.

the poverty of the mind the poverty of the spirit
the poverty of this world
will always be, and ever be, there forever.

without it, where can richness
be?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power Of Attraction

mind over matter.
that is a consistent theory.
what i perceive shall become true, in a moment, time hands over what my mind wishes on a basket
filled with flowers like my dreams

the power of attraction
you infect me
you seed in me this positive perspective
of making my life another happy one driving away my misery because i do not think properly
bad things happen
bad luck is a reality no one is to be blamed
for this

i guess we must stop this.
let things be.
let the sky and the ground
meet
let time take its due course.
i like it
when we simply wait and see.

that is my trip.
that is the thrill.
i just receive
God gives.
The Power Of Context

the rainy days
make you dream of umbrella

you are not just what you are
you are also your environment.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power Of Emptiness

in a conversation between an old friend and myself
who too has aged
a bit
with so much anxiety about what the future can bring

i utter the word
emptiness

it came as a big bubble of air
from my mouth

it escapes and floats in air
like a dirigible

we become too tiny for the vast emptiness

and we are carried away and we wander

it is too huge and silent and we have never returned home since then

our journey has turned black and white
in a silent movie
our actions repeat themselves the boredom
is eternal we struggled like paper bits in a room
of fire

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power Of Hope And Imagination

no matter how other hands enclose it
imprison it like a pebble in those callous fingers it escapes still like a burning fire through thick smoke rising changes itself into a swift flying bird into some border-less skies

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power Of Imagination

you fly
on your invented wings

you settle for a while in an imagine place

you arrive at new beginnings without endings

you like it somehow where facts come and do not arrive at any conclusion where questions remain as they are hanging stars in the heavens gleaming without

mornings where people live on forever

i am telling you
what imagination really is

invented wings unnameable places

an eternal line
of words always unspoken

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power Of Imagination Is Here...

when the rain hits the water of the canals

spider webs are formed to make the spiders crawl and make you feel the soundless hairs of their feet

somehow you must seek the aid

of an original thought the magic of imagination to see the needles of the pines on the rain

you must learn to plant those trees on the linings of your iris

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power Of Mighty Silence

to stare and be unmoved by any blocks of inhumanity

the silence to violence the ability to be in place where others stone you

the capacity to endure
the bleeding
when others slice your flesh and eat them like bacon

to stand your ground when you
are right
to be unmoved in silence when others
are laughing and mocking

to be simply christlike and look up to the heavens
when the skies turn black to give in to death and feel the power beyond it

why not?
why not?

be passionate and be dead
and then
be too resurrected

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power Of Prayer

You pray a lot and take pride That your prayers are granted

And you pray some more Like a monk like a priest,

Sometimes I think about Prayerful dogs, what if their Prayers are granted too

Bones and more bones Would surely rain from The heavenly skies.

Oh yes, I pray, but if my Prayers are not granted,

I still know that God loves me He thinks my wants are not the best

For me, and he reserves the rest.
That really suits me best.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power Of Repetitions

repetitions, you say are reinforcements, a promise that there shall be no forgetting between the stalk and the leaf once upon a tree.

there is this river that runs through us and i am at the other side of the bank you do not see me alone, am i as usual without the song

i gaze upon the leaf and the stalk i cut across barks
i rub the knife and sculpt the pain reshaping it for something so practical and useful
like a statue of the town god that i everyday worship purposely to erase the pain to numb the nerves

of my being, alone, am i,
in the repetitions, i have learned how to live and then scribble

on those surfaces
debarked and cleaned.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power Of The Mind

From a lemon peel Rises an iguana

Your hands with A sharp knife makes
It

From your own thoughts Shall rise
Another green iguana
Smelling like
A real green lemon

Your mind with a sharp Scalpel shall Form it

RIC S. BASTASA
The Power.....

i am not so particular about who this Power is who really knows His Name and what He does?

it is something very Personal we talk

sometimes i argue but He does not answer in categorical Yes or No Lie
sometimes
I do not even know if there is an Answer

but there is this feeling, this fleeting feeling that He is here i do not know much i have not seen it well enough somehow a boat must have an anchor

a world must have a light a way must have some steps an anthill to be an anthill must have ants

this essence of my mind trying to grasp the ungraspable, a cup with an ambition to take the ocean inside its cupping.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pragmatist

the popularity of the sun that comes day to day is not the issue for now it is the light that it carries feeding the leaves that feed the cows that feed us too it is not even beauty that golden sheen of its hands that reach upon the breasts of the hills

the thighs of the plains the lips of the waves of the seas it is the food that matters the survival of all who rely on the satisfaction of every hunger

it is not which came first the egg or the chicken it is that which satisfies the hunger of each stomach that matters for now

never shall you write about a sunset
or a sunrise

it is the frying pan and the oil the egg
sunny side up and the fork and the plate

how long has this been that you have become another selfish pragmatist?

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
The Prayer Of Elf

it is a unique
prayer you have there Elf,

that God may grant
you a shorter life
to live

that you may not be a burden to others

a peaceful death
a happy one, O Lord.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Prayer Of Doña Loleng

Doña Loleng
celebrated her 95th birthday
yesterday

she is a widow
ten years ago

she had ten children 25 grand children
and 8 great grand children

the party was grand and well attended by the neighborhood

two cows were butchered
five pigs and wine flowed like a river
and desserts like hills and mountains

food was superb
and the entertainment was more than magnificent singers from the city were hired and there were two clowns for her

grandchildren

how thankful
could she be

that night she could not sleep
she prays that she may be granted finally her much needed appointment
with her
very kind Creator.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Presence Of The Night

ladies,
i did not invent these nights my eyes are not their switches i cannot turn it off and on even if i close and open these weary eyelids.

ladies
on nights like these when twilight cut us short of the weird things that we tickle upon our bodies
i never drove those nights away these nights have their own lives they carry their own capes of darkness their own pleasurable surprises they know how to kill and save they know how to give us either ecstasy or pain but they never force themselves upon us we are simply made to choose we must therefore think wisely and so ladies,

why do you curse the darkness?
why do you blame the night?
why do you cry unnecessarily?
what a waste of moments

ladies,
come with us,
we are your merry gentlemen.
the nights have been made for all of us and nobody must take them all away from us nobody because now we have the right to own them.
The Present Is Still The Best That You Can Have

Time is a good reminder.

for instance, you want to jump out of the window
time tells you: it is cold outside or you want to sail away and time says: there are big waves out there they can swallow you like a whale

you want to back to the past time says: what for? don't you smell the foulness of the dead?

you want to rush yourself to the future and time says: speed is scary you may explode

and so time says: embrace the present savor every hour
every minute
every second

that is the best that time can give you no palpitations no fear, it is there right in your hands like a helpless bird wanting the warmth of your palms looking forward to be fully alive with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Present State Of Spiritual Negligence

we feel sorry everyday to the right God because wrongly we have feed our body
and soul
with the wrong food and we have not become healthy children
of his house
when we only try to find the mirror of righteousness we could have seen how emaciated our body has become how pitiful is our stinking soul defiled
cracking skin and flesh infested by worms
and soul
thinning out like a desert air.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Press Statement

46 million Filipinos Go hungry everyday 3.8 million Filipino Families experienced Having nothing
To eat in 2007
Now, the price of rice
Has increased

So?

I am just writing
Upon Ariel’s prodding.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pretender

At the party
He is the bashing type Gorgeous
Fashionable Renaissance man
With a taste
For flare

Ask him about his Business in the u.s.
He gives you the V sign

'Business is good!
Lots of perks coming!
交替; do most of the traveling
The board takes care
Of its complexities' he said.

The sparkles of champagne And the artistic smoking Expensive communication Gadgets
He got it all

But this i have known
The truth: his wife left him Business was lost Mortgage house foreclosed
And for sale
His children hate him
And divorce is in the offing Nothing about Properties now

None of my business somehow Kept my mouth shut Except this Poem: my confidante.
It can keep a secret Uphold the truth and cannot Hurt...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pretty Lizards....

damn,
we work so
harder,

even the hardest
way possible

we cut trees
gather wood

we cut stones
made into blocks

we even have to carve the stairs
step by step

we look forward
to getting up on the top

we even shove
other bodies to clear our way

someone is blessed God made an elevator and now he is on top of this building

effortlessly, and so special
he is resting to view us

ants, worms,
pretty lizards...
The Prey

early this morning when i go out of my room into a garden of trees and stones
there with all fidelity the spider is spinning its web again in the most usual and visible manner connecting a transparent line from a twig
to another twig of the same
tree

soon another fly or mosquito shall be caught as its unworthy prey
the victim never learns a thing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Price Of Hardwork

well, look here,
my dear,
you will start at the bottom of these all

crawl, prostrate,
bow, look down,
you have no right
to stare,
budget your gaze
they are gods
and they are too cruel if you offend them
and they get angry they will make you disappear
on a click
just that work your way up the traditional hard way

learning your lessons like you are a man
bound to death row

time is forgiving
and triumph comes always at the end

and when you're on top
do not mind
all of them

for now it is your time to take the crown of utter emptiness
did they not tell you that it is lonely at the top?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Price You Pay

we pay a certain price for our lies, these lies which are suppose to protect us
from so much realities (they trouble us and so we cope up in order to proceed to another day of joy and pretense) others pay the higher price of isolation
others have stiffer fines and penalties that island of abandon that river of tears that misty mountain of oblivion on your birthday today no one remembers you because you have written the wrong date in your autobiography

on our guilt you tell the date of your birth and so here we are (on the spirits of Ariel, the gleams of a Gem and the rest of the happy company) singing: happy birthday friend may you have more lies to come! (lol!) ha ha ha typo error, may you have more birthdays to come!

alright, blow your virtual candles on your virtual cake and close your eyes and say your virtual wishes....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Price You Pay Of Course, Is Loss Of Some Parts Of Your Individuality, the sooner you learn that you are not alone, the better your standing will be in this communal living, the price you pay of course, is

loss of some parts
of your individuality,
for you see, this world is a motion
of compromises,
not a win-win situation, you win some
you lose some,
from his viewpoint
you are a boat
moving at sea,
and the way you
advance, you also shoo others away.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pride Of This Body

the sickness of the body confesses upon you that you have done something wrong to it,

and it won't tell you
in straight language of silver

it speaks in pain
and you will feel it
and you shall try hard to figure out
what is it

you ask for the cure?
the body too has its own pride

it won't reveal it has secrets of its own that it will bring even to its garde...-

RIC S. BASTASA
The Prisoner

the afternoon
sun shines upon a row of iron bars

the temperature
has subsided

heads of unknown
men begin to appear
like shadows of mushrooms
upon the dark
mouths of caves

they are some of the questions
still unanswered
by the claim that there is justice
in humanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Privacy Of The Home

there is a party but i am not going
i choose
staying inside the house not watching tv
but just thinking and lying low listening to the silence of the four walls, and then i take the exit outside i go into the garden at night
under the trees
the scents of some flowers pervading
and then i take a seat on a big stone and feel the hardness
of the earth
i am soft in the middle of this garden
i like it
this private dwelling
just the trees and the flowers
in the middle of the night when everyone is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Private Rooom

dthis is a universe in itself with all the planets around it and stars so distant unlike before you scream alone no help comes be it the fireman or the medical aide now the fingers run to places where we have been hiding to thoughts where we have once surrendered because of debilitating weakness now courage is silenced but inside its throat

thoughts shape themselves like dough and then the yeasts of memories make them rise you smell the sweetness of the past that wafts in all the corners of your room
and so
with all these shortcomings and refusals to see light to open the shutters you shall still live and reap the fruits of your isolation these are white flowers that bloom in lonely nights

scented and still proud

RIC S. BASTASA
The Problem

the problem with us is that when we open the computer and begin to read poetry we cannot stop, we do not know when and where to stop we get carried away like a paper boat on the river and we do not know where we shall be taken and not only that in some mysterious ways we too assume the hands of the poet his mind his emotions contaminating us and we (oh let me just talk about myself) and i begin to write myself some lines honestly not knowing where these line come from and like ants they invade me and begin to eat me like a chunk of chocolate or a broken biscuit or a grain of rice that they all carry like a good catch and then i pride myself with the belief that i must still be sweet as chocolate, crisp and tasty like a biscuit, and white and unblemished like a grain of rice

not because i am writing poems but because the ants too, like the river have carried me away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Problem Is..

the problem is that you believe that there is meaning to every encounter that nothing happens by random that there is always a purpose why two people meet
fall in love
and then decide to part ways you always have a reason to rationalize your pain and that makes me love you more granting that you love me too, what could be the possible reason?

tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Problem With Lust Sometimes

the problem with lust sometimes
is structural

there is this rod looking for an orifice
an orifice wanting to be filled with sweet hardness and stiff lengths
its depth utters a name a longing

everything fits and so happiness radiates to each nerve there are other 'incoherences' and lapses of the world of creation on the verge of insatiation

orifice to orifice and the rod striking another rod in loneliness bells and bells no one penetrates and no one is penetrated like plate upon plate of pillar side by side with another pillar each looks somewhere else anticipating much doing a lot of sensing out where is that and where is this

there is nothing but a tree of loneliness on a desert landscape accented by a skull of the wolf without leaves and rotten roots trying to reach for the moon the dead moon, the scorching sun the useless days the dragging hours of the bloodied gladiator the amazon hanging dead on the tree

at the tip of her braided hair

RIC S. BASTASA
The Problem With The Problem

the problem with sorrow is that it eats tomorrow the problem with our problem it does not believe on a dream the problem with lamentation is that it thrives on its own

RIC S. BASTASA
The Problem With The Wind

classic Poem

the problem with the wind
is its senselessness it comes it goes and it seems it does not even know where it is going you think it feels you it doesn't
it simply moves around and comes back around like an accidental whirlpool it is numb it does not even know what a rock and a cloud means the earthworms fear it the birds too
whose wings it breaks without even feeling sorry for the caused calamity the problem with the wind is that it is like silence not because it woos it and carries it away sometimes but because it is cold so cold that it numbs and shatters what was once whole and heartfelt.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Problem With You

is that you are too normal for a man, what normal is, i define it you are too formal like a chair
there are other chair possibilities you have not tried for instance
having only one foot and still be proud to stand as a chair on a chain of possibilities the problem with you is you rhyme like their poem and you become just like them a factory made word another boring mechanism like a wooden panel without beauty without the aha! or what is this? is this man? is this a chair?
is this a poem?

try something else
wobbling, whirling

a tornado, you haven't been one yet a storm, an eye
a vacuum, an eclipse a waste basket, a moon let a planet, a sunrise without light?

do not just be stanza be a word misspelled

be an error uncorrected be a dog with feathers a pink niche, a broken pen an expelled  meteor a fallen angel.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Process Of Selection....

on the other hand,
if everything is fiction, then what could possibly be not?

the possibilities of words they are not just in random picked by some foolish gods and given a form
and the slightest idea connected to a certain belief in meaning

well, there will always be the justification of an experience that something like this once happened but that the recollection is not clear anymore

part bird, part lion, wings or hands, did it have a horn, or a halo?
the images argue among themselves and as a matter of compromise the mind puts everything in a collage a jigsaw puzzle
until a picture is formed and from a distance you take a look at it a little bit true and a little bit false but still sending a message something happened a long time ago you fear remembering it you abstract

take only those colors that you like those words that please you those faces that give you love those hands that once caressed you you throw away those that hurt what is the use of keeping them? unless you are the masochist god

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
the object of the furies the numb flesh
the dead fly
the carcass, that dung, that scar.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Process Of This Manner...

groping for the metaphors to illustrate the dark, light, and
twilight,
going back to the days of childhood trying to see if adulthood is well deserved, the process is tedious, and so much time is wasted, and all for these, in these trying times, the essence of what to really say is lost.

to save this species of speech from extinction, i gather all dusts, equate that patience, raised so many spiders between the frames of my windows, as light is let through, as though there is a saint kneeling on the floor, i must, give this language what mystery it deserves, learn the art of wanting to speak but not speaking at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Profanity

the state of the body is wavering
to the rocks of the wind and there is this shaking that mistakes us for what we really are there is the pillar that you cannot touch and see but you can feel it could be the heart

or the soul
could be the whisper of the truth
it is there
and there is nothing that we can do
to deny it
of its existence

only and only if we do not make profanity of the words

those that we do not really mean
and those that we constantly keep on
not doing

what a pity
for one to go on flaunting what should not
have been in the hands and the palms

RIC S. BASTASA
The Professional Virgin

'i should have
deserved much more than this', says the loser packs her bag and takes her stuff to a new city

there she begins life anew as a virgin again.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Professor

engrossed in an ocean of thoughts drifted on the pages without edges one swims through thick letters his ears drowned by syllables there is neither sun or moon there but alas! there are so many stars against the darkness of his soul he is space spreading like wings of the phoenix amidst his thirsty students

RIC S. BASTASA
The Professor...

in the classroom
i offer words, i stand and make a point and write an accent

this is it, this is important this is above all

i have strokes, all BOLD i bang the board with emphasis, i am doing this not for myself, i am solid.

liquefying all of your dreams letting you see shapes

i sit upon a load of stars.
i stand and touch an orbit.

all of you are my children.
i have none.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Progress In The City

life was so simple then: papa plowed the field mama cooked sweet potatoes water was inside a bamboo pole plates were banana leaves we rode on carabao backs picnicked on nearby rivers climbed coconut trees no one minded us whether we were right or wrong we were happier then

then everything changed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Prologue...
	his you must understand that even before they started they were already looking at different things...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Promise

she was alone
in that nipa shack
for her children were gone
seeking their own destinies
in the city

this was her farm
this muddy place

we met this morning
as i was taking my walk passing by her lonely place

she was there and we talked
she was talking about how her medicine
made her dizzy
and was asking for herbs as substitute

she died
an hour ago
before i came back to bring the banaba leaves

RIC S. BASTASA
The Promise (After Tracy Chapman)

if you wait for me then i will come to you if you think of me then i will be back to you if you miss me once in a while then i will return to you i return and fill that space in your heart

remembering your touch your kiss, your warm embrace i will find my way back to you

if you dream of me that i dream of you in that place that is warm and dark in that place where i can hear the beating of your heart i'll find my way back to you...

i long for you
and i have desired to see your face
your smile
to be with you
wherever you are

i'll find my way back to you
please say that you will be waiting together again
if it feels so good to be in your arms
where all my journeys end i'll vow to come back to you if you say you'll wait for me The Promise (Tracy Chapman)

The Promise

If you wait for me then I’ll come for you Although I’ve traveled far I always hold a place for you in my heart
If you think of me, if you miss me once in awhile Then I’ll return to you I’ll return and fill that space in your heart

Remembering
Your touch
Your kiss
Your warm embrace
I’ll find my way back to you
If you’ll be waiting
If you dream of me like I dream of you In a place that’s warm and dark In a place where I can feel the beating of your heart

Remembering
Your touch
Your kiss
Your warm embrace
I’ll find my way back to you
If you’ll be waiting
I’ve longed for you and I have desired
To see your face your smile
To be with you wherever you are

Remembering
Your touch
Your kiss
Your warm embrace
I’ll find my way back to you
If you’ll be waiting
I’ve longed for you and I have desired
To see your face, your smile
To be with you wherever you are Remembering
Your touch
Your kiss
Your warm embrace
I'll find my way back to you Please say you'll be waiting

Together again
It would feel so good to be
In your arms
Where all my journeys end
If you can make a promise if it’s one that you can keep, I vow to come for you If you wait for me and say you’ll hold A place for me in your heart.

RIC S. BASTASA
do not doubt it
the promise is clear
he said it
do not doubt it
he said it long, long years ago when ears were deaf when eyes were blind
do not doubt it

you shall live forever but you must first
die

to yourself, you must bury your ego
under the soil
of your unbelief
the coffin of
emptiness
you must first stay
and then
after the mourning
you rise
as smoke
from a fire that consumes
itself
until they see not a trace
of you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Promise Of The Healer

i must understand by now that since you did not arrived as promised
then you too must be dead

you promised to heal the sick man here
and he too is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Promise Of The Healer Less The ' D'

i must understand by
now that since you did not arrive
as promised
then you too must be dead

you promised to heal the
sick man here
and he too is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Promise Of The Past

shall we run again to the sea hold each other's hands and plunge again
deeper into ourselves until we find what we lost a long time ago...

make me remember
what i was once to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Promise That Love Always Triumphs In The End

it has been a quite a time sorrow was here it has departed
i am glad

it did not leave casualties here
in the road there is a woman bathing

with sunshine
walking towards the park on an early morning wind meeting a friend

(could be a lover
the way he kissed her on the lips

and held her hands like a fragile
glass figurine
of a princess)

then the rain has put a gentle shower
the rainbow shows unexpectedly above

the poplar trees
poised in the beauty of such a promise that love always triumphs whatever

RIC S. BASTASA
The Promise That Nothing In Us Here Is Wasted....

define next journey is when we carry nothing although we want to carry a basket of flowers or a memory of love & friendship the rule says it clearly: you carry nothing with you we are light as air passing by a flash of images of all time spent the past that we let go with a smile (or perhaps some sighs) the present drips from our fingers like water from a faucet and the future the comes with wings and light and faith that nothing ends without any meaning at all that somehow every inch of our existence is justified in the shores of eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Promise To Love You Forever

if i cease living or loving

i promise you i do not sit lazily watching the fading of the sun

i will take this journey to the last edge of the horizon searching for love and life and meaning and purpose

and then when i living and loving ceases upon me seizes me into silence and nothingness or when death embraces me so tightly i shall still take that last breath exhaling

still what you are really to me

RIC S. BASTASA
The Promised Land......

finally we arrive in an island of hospitable
trees
and accommodating sands our shadows
they accept as part of their brotherhood
and then under the moon a feast of songs and drinks has just began in this manner the memories of storms cannot exist anymore we get drunk and soon forget that journey of tsunamis which on the other hand were blessings in disguise without which we could not have possible arrived

to this promised land

RIC S. BASTASA
The Proverbial Forest

if you do not have me when you do not touch
any of my fingers
clinging to my hands
despite your pleas
the flow of tears
without me
no sorrow is felt no sobbing is heard for without me
loving you
there is also no you
to speak of

RIC S. BASTASA
The Psychiatrist In You

where all eyes feast on the sexy woman walking down the street you look the other way around

your eyes
look at their eyes and they do not notice perhaps only I notice it, i know that you are different and i guess it takes one really to know one

you are so beautiful
you are so mindful, and that makes the real difference

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pure In Heart...

the pure
in heart arrives
at the door
of the hall

it brings not a word
it does not even smile

it simply passes
away.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Purple Crocodile

remember how daughter lost her purple crocodile purse how mama goes to the counter of the hotel reporting the matter how the receptionist asked her to fill up the form and come back three days after when the purple crocodile purse was just right there visible in one of the counter's table but which the receptionist took no action saying three days is three days nothing more nothing less.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Purpose

depth in my heart i know roads always lead us to our destinations, that dreams are born because they are meant to grow and to bloom and become flowers in our midst, that our wishes shall become true that rivers always arrive at the sea of their destinies that someday i shall be the perfect self that i shall become that at the end i will be beyond what i am today.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Purpose In Life Is To Find Its Purpose

it does not matter
really who is at the top the one who shines
like the sun
the best and most useful
the most important and even say
indispensable
like air

it does not really matter
to me
whether you are the sun or the moon
whether you are king or
god

the place does not matter
any name for the matter does not really matter to me

i am here because i want a cure
and what matters most then
is

where is the cure?
or even just
that temporary relief from these series of deaths that we are experiencing
The Purpose Of Metaphors

you like to be candid and yet no matter what honest words in the most simple terms they still refuse to understand what you really want to mean

to say
you shall meet metaphors those that go inside them their tone and color and shape and scent what you have

obviously you begin to hide what they refuse to believe dress them and give them a new face a new set of arms and feet and these all get near them and shake hands with them
and then

they relate and begin to understand
you

how can they ever think of something else beyond what you do not understand you keep the emotion inside you you give them a fragile butterfly from your mouth and awed they start to believe what pains you in your hiding things something new opens

a door, a window, a heart, a mouth
The Purpose...

i have never explained to you what goodbye meant

when i left you, it was raining you want to hold my hand, but it was slippery there was running water in my palm my eyes were blinded by mist i have still all the explanations but still i must keep them and bring these all to my grave buried there with me... it was not that i lack the love that was all reserved for you always remember that....there is nothing that fulfills me

my emptiness is an ocean without fish inside are the glaciers of cold thoughts your boat on fragile sails deserves a better sea calm and clean and clear where corals nest where fish are abundant i have no regret having loved you and left you you are happy now, my departure has served so well the purpose with which it was done.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Pursuit Of Happiness

the irony of this pursuit is this:
the more you pursue it
the more it escapes away from your grasp

you think your hands finally catch
happiness, and you hold on to it
tightly like you are a bird with claws

like an eagle holding on to the monkey
then blood drifts
on the holy mountains

the paradox lies not in the taking of happiness but in giving it away and then the magic happens the mountains dance the caves open

and the rivers sing

it is clear, when you take it you simply release it then you are happy

and the pursuit is nothing but in simply the giving the patience of waiting like a tree whose fruits are ripe where children climb

gather the fruits
and chew and swallow every sweetness of
the pulp,
the fiber
juice sliding smoothly inside innocent their throats

RIC S. BASTASA
The Questions In My Mind....

i send my my hands
free, so many birds in air they are questions for you to answer, yet you whom my heart claims a rock for friends, where they can lay their bodies and rest, have chosen silence, and i look at you, with so much understanding, knowing that you have chosen the comfort of your own safety, i nod, i may agree that your chosen side shall give you the best for the meantime that i bleed, and now, i write upon a stone the names of my true friends. It is you silence that has become stone and sling for the birds that i have set free from my hands.

They fall one by one, all dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Questions You Ask

the questions you ask
are subject to their suspicions of who and what you are the answers you give?

they simply junk as an immaterial irrelevant and impertinent to what they already believe in.

tell them: fine!

RIC S. BASTASA
I.
Summer twilight slices into two Halves of a sweet cantaloupe;
At table, the speckled stargazer Opens its fragrant petals windward;
At my foot, our old cat dreams.
Nothing here betrays the grace We speak of at each meal, together Or alone. Today, while one of us Sits under the tamarinds, And another wades the golden river, I alone sit at table, a mother Attending to the core of fruit Cleaving to the knife, the fuchsia Flower sundered by summer’s heat, The cat purring its ninth life away.
II.
Yesterday night after dinner, we told An old story, pausing at a part We did not love but could not Gnaw off. It is your hurt fathered Into child’s shape, vulnerable To faithlessness. As the story twists In the telling, you speak of a new-born child, whose limbs could break Or neck snap. were one of you to hold The tender heels and swing against a wall.
We need to put this story right.
III.
Long, long ago on a fevered night,
A mother sat by her child’s bed, Damp cloth soothing flame of forehead, Limbs. in her vigil she vowed On pain of death, to beg the life Or health back into those cheeks.
The fever broke, she held her kind And knew the gods had ears.
Son, Daughter, take this story-child With care. In the curve of your arms Your father’s fruit survives the fall, Becomes your bruised but living grace.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Quick Funeral Arrangements In Accordance With His Wish.....

two lawyers
father and son
were shot by a security guard
in cebu city
the mourning widow
is a judge

the whole community mourns
the dead body was buried within 24 hours

no frills whatsoever Just the muffled sound of mourners underneath
the pained sobbing of a woman

The mood was somber and quiet, as dozens paid their last respects to the man they all fondly remember
as very simple and mild-mannered.

And just like him his funeral was very simple with no memorial service before the casket
was lowered
into the ground.
There were no songs, no floral offerings.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Quiet Inside Your Poem

it is there
quiet on the sofa beside a white cat
sleeping

RIC S. BASTASA
The Quiet Storm

A young girl breaks away from her petit bourgeoisie home and her piano lessons to lead an entirely new life, as one of the personnel at an institution for juvenile delinquents in a remote part of Northern Iceland.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Quivers Of The Heart....

THESE ARE our quivers, we have arrived at a dead end, and we face walls, we look for the outline of a door and then a window there is no sketch of a rectangle or square or a hole
we are praying for a leak of light to this dark room existence
they say the sun does not shine anymore the flowers are shy and kept themselves locked in the tightness of their buds these are the quivers of our imagined endings our hands are shaking the world is suffering to an earthquake of values shattered

we like to speak only when we are far away from each other our display of affection is well demonstrated by our constant hiding we have devolved into shadows and invoking words cannot take the substitute of the flesh i am a stranger now arriving at a new place where people do not know me.

as i speak, they continue looking outside, waiting for the right train.

i sit on a chair behind them. I sip my coffee. I pay for what i eat and drink.

i am lost, but this is what i want. I too, look outside, waiting for the right hour to arrive.

these are our quivers. We have no exact hold. Our hands are blistered with so much heat from inside our guts.

temper stored. anger contained. sorrow concealed.

one day, i shall write the poem about an annihilation of us.
when you read it, and that is the right hour, i am already gone.

nowhere. where is it? i also do not know.
RIC S. BASTASA
The Race...

i like you, is a runner too, i hold a torch to light my way but soon i will pass it on to you, and you too, must run as fast as you can but for one thing, hold on to the light, run if you can, but keep that light burning.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Radio Talks About Corruption

As i take breakfast
The radio speaks
About the recent scandal On corruption
Of school funds Ghost Gyms and Ghost schools somewhere In the South
2.5 Million in their pockets

Time has changed
Corruption has become one big cliche In My own society
Nothing will change Except how i view corruption
It is a way of life and I shall learn To live with it.

Meanwhile, i change the station To classical music
That lasts its purity and kindness forever Relaxes my soul
Strenghtens what weakness Wants to die

The radio talks of corruption Nothing's new and I turn it off.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain

There will be rain here
We normally run for shelter
Who wants to be wet in the rain
And look like a helpless chick in the drain?

There will be rain
And we will be seeking shades under the trees
And run towards waiting sheds where the rain Cannot harm our sensibilities,

There will be rain and more rains to come
In our lives, and we always run for secure Shelters, and we always have umbrellas in our hands, And raincoats, and closed cars, we hide to places Where The rain cannot harm us,

But today will be different,
There is rain, and I will take Another action, I will not run for shelter,
Or take shades in trees, or be in waiting sheds,
I will not even open my car, get into it and close it,

I am not afraid of rain now; I have no fears getting wet somehow And look like a helpless chick, I will run in the Middle of the rain, I will play like a child in the rain, I will Be with the rain throughout its pouring,
I will be wet, and it will rain and rain,

Oh! Let it rain and rain and rain
You will not see my tears falling, My tears hiding in the pouring rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain And The Blood

what the rain does symbolism for tears

is to create the walls
between us

you're like needles
falling

without sound we see nothing hurt

but we see blood
mixed with water and then we take the shelter and we keep on saying

we're OK
we are just wet and we are going home

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain And The Dry Earth

for the earth is dry and the clouds have compassion

that noontime
the clouds
shared their rains
for the dry earth

thirst satisfied
so wet so sweet
and wild...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain And The Farm...

i stop after a morning walk

it is raining and i take shelter in the gym of the old university

i sit on the bench and watch the rain
and the farm

fog creeps in
and the panoramic view looks like a wet chinese brush painting

the colors
begin to blot down the frame

i write it here that i did not cry

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain And The Girl

i just met a girl who does not carry an umbrella because she loves
the rain

i do not dare ask her
if she is crying,

if she cries
i am afraid i do not have the right to ask her why when she gets near me i have not dared looking into her eyes i tell myself

it is none of my business

she begins to speak but i who love the sonorous sound of the rain has no time to listen

the sound of rain
is more than enough for me
to know
the meaning of pain

this time
after all those long years of listening i do not think much

the rain speaks
actually for itself

now, i am writing it
and then the girl is gone...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain By Chappel

love it is enough that i have touched your hand do not i, must consume what longing is there
left,
for now i must go outside of this self
and brave the rain
the storm

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain Falls To This Pond

What I see is a dead frog For years there was drought And today
A raindrops are falling on this pond
The frog is alive again Jumping Jumping

Overjoy!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain Falls Tonight

the rain fall tonight on our roof and it brings no explanation and we do not ask
too for any reason.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain Is Gone

You got wet clothes to dry A face to wipe some droplets of rain Some stains
On your breasts Kissing stains
Some bluish marks
On your thighs
You always say
These things, stains and bluing Happen
Because of the rain
The rain that refuses to leave at once And you are caught to his embrace You always say the rain Is responsible, one season to blame Why these things, these stains cling to your body The thoughts of rain Leaving
Saddens you now

How you wish the rain comes back The stains caused by him smells and The scent of sweat makes you sway, gives You the feeling of Stay, I love you, stay, do not go away.

Wonder, how the rain could have removed The stains, smell, sweat, but you say The rain causes it, he cannot leave you

He still has the fear of getting rainy wet.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain Is Like A Man

the rain this early morning has an accompanying wind

i look at them by the window my inner world divided by a thick glass the trees are swaying and some leaves begin to fall like some kind of a dance the rain like a man carries the wind on his arms and the wind leans down i catch a glimpse of how they passionately kiss it is sad and lonely and then the rain stops the morning sun comes and the leaves are at the feet of the trees kind of wet with tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rain On My Roof Tonight

the rain pouring slowly on my roof is the best poem ever composed by you for me tonight

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rainbow Illusion

yesterday i opposed the system of the rainbow

i no longer worship its bright colors

at the back i drench my body with rain

and then i stab the rainbow because of my anger

those who watch say that the rainbow is bleeding

as though
the rainbow is true

===============================================
kagahapon
misupak ko sa sistema sa bangaw

wala na ako
miluhod sa mga bulok

nagpaulan ako sa luyo niini

og gitagbas nako ang bangaw sa akong kalagot

sila nga nakakita miingon nga ang bangaw nasamdan mora bag

ang bangaw tinood

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rainy Days Inside My Mind

it is a summer day but the rainy days still exist inside my mind

it was a Sunday
when the rain was falling softy at the pier the M/V Alfredo was about to leave bound for Manila
and there was you
my love
waving your hands for till then we never saw each other again dthis afternoon i am standing on a pavement on the same pier the M/V Alfredo had long sunk

and i do not know anymore where you destiny placed you

i am hiding my eyes inside this thick sunglasses no one knows how i feel for outside
i am still smiling and then another boat sounds its call

i guess, i have to leave them all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rainy Memory Of You....

oh how many times shall i speak to you about the rain

of my youth and now
of my older age
us, in this that the rain always sings sorrows

how many time have i told you about its many names in patters
each as unique as an ice crystal as a child springing from his mother

it is this rain
that always reminds me of you it amazes me how sadly it falls
ever rising how pure it hits and joins
with the garbage in the canals
perhaps
hoping to convert
what dirt was into something
new

the sound of moving the hint of a destination the scent of another going and disappearing

today
it is raining again
and i am staying pondering whatever memory is it bringing...
The Rape And Murder Story

on top of a hill is a house lighted
by a lamp

since the window is open and the night
is dark
something looks like a firefly
in the sky

along the footpath a naked
woman
is lying unconscious

inside the house
the man is washing his hands

he closed the window
puts off the light
and in the darkness
begins his journey to the world of the wolves.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rapist....

the high school student was charged with rape by a married woman who was unhappy with her old husband who is bald and ugly but rich and landed
and tired,

she said he turned off the light and went wild with his lust and gobbled her trust and that she was ruined

he said she seduced her to have his first flesh and which out of fear he refused
and

scorned she became a dragon spewing lava and breathing fire seven years he suffered in jail until a judge filled with wisdom set him free

justice still served though late

and he cried after justice delayed is no longer justice that he long deserved.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rashness Of Your Youth

your morning opens with a popping out
mechanism
as though you are the soda yourself with all the bubbles
from your mouth
the froth from your rashness

be calm, why should there be a rush
for noon? why should we be too worried about nights?

let things come
let events savor their
existence
wait, stand still,
think,
ponder more
do not run.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rattlesnake

i see to it that i read a poem a day, like an apple,

or a sunrise that i must but watch quickly because i have to go somewhere else what you have to offer is a litany of your pain, that rattlesnake that hid somewhere and which you cannot find despite grandpa's help you molt

i do not have much time left as i too have to chase my own snakes

that make the sound during the night but so silent during the day that no one hears them or believe that they all exist

i make it up for you that there is no snake that cabinets are only for our clothes i eat smiles for breakfast and save every morsel of it when the night comes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ravine

the black raven
flies over the ravine hovers and
shits on the bovine
as two pigs
are makin'
their usual lovin'

RIC S. BASTASA
The Razor

sharp & shining it serves its use only on eyearly mornings

shaving my gorgeous
mustache

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reader Takes The Burden Involved As He Is.

touch and go
i leave all my mistakes behind
and even if i notice it i leave it
there

the reader takes the burden
involved as he is.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Real Enemy...

it is not late
the wind finally knows its enemy it was not the tree that it uprooted in one of its storms not the clouds that it had blown with rage not the sea whose waves it tumbled in a tsunami not even the boats it sank not pitying the passengers and crew who were swallowed its whirlpools have been wrong upon itself it must know its winds its own storms its enemies all
at the end.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Real Feast Begins The Doors Of Heaven Suddenly Open.

what did we have
last night?
nothing
what do we have
this morning
nothing

we can just be honest about these nothingness talk about it and feast about it spread the wonders of these realities the paradox comes like a bird missing its own cage

wanting to peck upon the seeds on the master's hand and then the cup fills itself water begins to move in the river frozen shoulders become alive eyes wake up hands begin to caress other hands the real feast begins the doors of heaven suddenly open.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Real House Where We Ought To Live

the real house where we ought to live
have no pillars and walls and fences no kitchens and sinks
and toilets

do not grumble, that is the truth no wind destroys it no sun scorches it
no rain seeps

it is not the house of nothingness discover it yourself

RIC S. BASTASA
The Real Name After The Fall

you fall down upon a hill just like any john and jill

you just love
also the spilled pail of water

the best part
however is when who rise up from the fall and

then they still call you with your real name.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Real One

i know what is the real one i know that well
enough
it is the one which makes my blood
rush to my brain
stirs my soul
into a whirlpool makes all the stars
in me
burst
vanishes old rants
creates in me
a silence towards a new world

RIC S. BASTASA
The Real Person

even if waltz is the dance of the day for the dictator
there are those who dance the tango
to his dismay

y they reason out that brave people only die once as cowards die
a thousand deaths

y they know how to dance the impossible they are rocks that obstruct the rage, the flow

we call them men of principles they who die earlier than expected mark a name in the fame of stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Real Reason....

one writing to another maybe ten thousand more not until you hit that mark of fame, not even that Nobel prize, which is out of my mind, not a bob Dylan to me, but until i fall out of love from you, until i am cured, until i feel safe with myself........

RIC S. BASTASA
The Real You Falters....

you cannot keep smoke
it always finds its own
exit

for the meantime
you can hide
this or that but you cannot hide it forever

from all those layers
cover to cover the real you shall falter

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reality Of Sisyphus

for truly once a misery is declared dead for all intents another misery is born crying its way towards your heart this baby, yes, this baby with tears in her eyes and blood on its skin and wet hair and closed eyes struggling for an opening

by all means is still beautiful and so, welcome misery, welcome everything, say yes, say yes, baby sisyphus is here giving you another strength for another push for the big stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reality Of These All

at night she tiptoes to the doors of our waking thoughts we are amazed at the images of light eaten by the mouth of darkness the Muse stares at the interplay of good and evil
there is simply no word for who shall win and then we are tired our eyes begin to fail and our body gives in buried in the darkness of the night then we are taken in the world of dreams where everything becomes possible what we were not in those waking days the dreams hand them all broken hearts mended fortunes flow

luck is abundant as the fish in the oceans there is a crowd of success and bliss but you know the limits of all these soundless worlds

and those who refuse to wake up simply die.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reality Of Touch

not everything can be imagined lest your words become the 3D leeches that do not really exist pure breeze from a mountainside of nowhere it is safe to open the door go down the stairs

walk along the street
feel the sun on top of your head swim in the air of this city dive into the crowd hear their open conversations listen to the horns of the cars create more distance tire your feet

sweat things out making thoughts more sensitive to the twitches of the faces of all the people that you meet carefully evaluate the lines of the tongue in cheek scrutinize

slips of their tongues

follow the lines of the curve body of the woman that you love using the soft tip of your tongue the power of taste-buds one cannot really just survive on the theoretical wings of angels the feet of the dragon phoenix the prancing hands of the wooden saint shallow and deflatable as toy balloons are do not draw the street and alleys in your mind with a wind pencil

walk upon them and feel the water and the mud and pebbles and sands to every pore of your skin feel the tickle of the bacteria of the
mind

RIC S. BASTASA
The Realization Of Our Basic Needs...

the one that we love for we care so deeply we turn into sensitive worms finding for that green leaf not for us but for the beloved a butterfly, striated wings, rainbow proboscis, gentle to the air, fluttering before us, amazed, awed and wanting to own completely until we find out as we wake up from this dream that it is a butterfly, just a butterfly that we do not touch that we cannot case inside our hands, and until then when it reaches its unknown death the night before we dream of it.

it is gone and finally we realize it is just a butterfly and we cannot even use it for breakfast.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Realization That I Am Different

everyday in a sense is not really horrible
no one is.

frightening yet
not that prolonged

every moment is a surprise like a birthday

expected yet there are still outbursts of emotions they call it an outrage because life can be so much sometimes raging like a bull with smoke in its nostrils friends, excuse my dust i am fed up and i vomit what is unnecessary like crab meat

i bought a pail and pair of slippers

i have the sea with me and it is free

the trees that i have planted have become robust

i climb upon each feel the world with its leaves and on top of the branch i begin to see myself much different from all of you all angles considered.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reason

drug reason why i do not eat alone
and sleep
alone is not my handsome form or my innate wit
and choosy
sense of humor

it is just that i am
meant to be shared

my hands
open wanting someone to hold

my arms
open always needing someone
to embrace

i am designed for hugs
my lips
for kissing

and i think i will never learn
again
the pain
of learning
how is it
to be alone

and feel
that i am
dying

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reason For Light

the law is there for always

the reason for light
is only to reflect who we are

what we are not
is never there

except the fear

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reason Why I Am Here

people.
the reason why i am here, people is people, satisfied people, looking for more to tickle their tongues for more satisfaction, the reason is people, people who become restless because nothing seems to make them people anymore, people who love people are the reasons for being here people who miss people people who question about being people people who offer answers they look for the content of the poem as answers but there is really nothing contentious about this a poem simply pleases puts forth what is in the heart of people one that teases
and yet cannot be held by the hands of people
one that slips like a fish in your hands one that flies away the moment it hears steps of men coming on its way birds are the reasons, fishes are the reasons the sea, the depths,
the drowning feeling,
the rising and the falling the coming back and forth of waves, are the reasons, so many reasons why we are here
at the end
we look at each other, hands akimbo eyeballs rolling,
without an answer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reason Why I Am Still A Part Of You

from one tree springs the trunk and the branches and it seems to me that each part of us always wants to branch out leaves fall inevitably leaving a bald space

sort of, i want to go this way and sometimes i want a clear butting and i want to cut you away from my life so you can grow on your own independence is a dream of all living creatures

the strangers look at us: one tree, just one tree and so pleasing to their eyes giving shade is enough comfort for a passerby and hence, i know the reason why, you are still part of me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reason Why One Resorts To Poetry

imagine you have a world a government
a neighbor,

the world too cruel for you and you want to hurt it too
but you cannot,
the government that makes you poorer and deceives you and persecutes you and you want to be one of those rebels
but you cannot
a neighbor that closes its door and talks against you and makes higher fences and yet you cannot complain because you have no power weak and helpless and you too lost in the labyrinths of a complex lifestyle no direction, no vision, no hope nothing to lean upon or hold unto those are the reasons why you go inside your room too and begin to write, and somehow, you say i am free, i am happy, i am living, and my house is not burning.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reason Why Pain Is Inflicted Sometimes

Feeling the need
To have pearls Around your neck
I will give you pain
To make you cry

Now you have all
The pearls gleaming
In your eyes, cheeks Then around your white slender neck

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reason Why The Stars Are Too Many

the stars are too many each of us shall have one there shall be no regret the sky is too wide the stars glitter and each hand must take the share i have mine and you shall have yours too, well, maybe, not at the same time, but at the right season for the right person, soon, soon, soon.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reason...........

he knew now
why his Creator has put him at the foot of the lonely hill no grass for goats

no swamps for ducks no prairies for horses no flowers for butterflies no bees

it is a simple existence of a cloud upon a hill of wind just passing by the door a ripe guava by his window

the usual sun and moon and sound sleep at night

he knew now why because there is so much to be written

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reasons

sometimes
tired of the buzzing of the word he gives flesh to it

even wings
and so the bees
come

often the words are empty like a vacant room

or an abandoned
cottage in one of those untamed forest

one can do something as he does after so many experimentation

when words are just wind or air or static space he plants a tree
and leaves become inhabitants

flowers arrive as buds and butterflies
of variant colors
arrive as colonies

must you remember how the void is filled with light and there was light how the islands come dotting the seas?

who likes a void, an empty space?

even God
dislikes it

we are here
because of that.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reasons Of The Heart...

the night is in our heads
the heart has only a bright summer day
to offer
the head collides
and breaks
the heart understands and mends...

that is why.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rebel In Our Own Bodies here is a rebel at the back of each one of us always complaining

discontentment is this backbone which can never be strong enough to carry a burden there is speech in every pore of the skin talking about a hairy revolution
about undressed geese flying in the skies
mistaken as ghosts

there is this hunchback complete with a head and sharp eyes without hands
and feet
it always speaks about the defects of any system predicting the eventual destruction of anything that is stable like some kind of pillars and pavements leading to the old churches where icons are posted like advertisements of a box office movie

when we get tired
we resort to prayers
meanwhile hiding this rebel with a red hood and we pretend as monks walking in the streets spreading forgiveness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rebel On Christmas

i have lived that long to once and for all know that there is beauty in sorrow like the way the rugged terrains of mountains after days of walking and carrying metallic burdens often, and less imagined, lead us to a hidden garden of dahlias behind those walls of antique trees

RIC S. BASTASA
he is tired imagining those villages of yore, hamletted natives, authorities telling them how to live, where, when,

that is the bitter part of the question when do you cease living? the gun is telling everyone the answer follow or you die, not the natural way, they will kill you in an instant and bury you the very same day, without the christian rituals, he is tired of the running and the convincing, taking the chickens of other people and passing through the seven rivers, he is tired of being numb to the consequences of the uprising his ears are painful his arms are failing him he wants to retrace his steps back to the fold but he cannot return and the equation is simple and this he must understand fully no metaphors are needed for him to know that the uprising is unnecessary irrelevant that he himself has become impertinent but the harshest is this he has become the most incompetent decor of the system discarded.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Recent Case Of The Dead Librarian

yhey relayed the bad news of the strict librarian.
each of the reader who uttered a word of silence was severely scolded, humiliated in front of all the books and the bookworms.

today i am informed that she finally succumbed to lung cancer, a disease which consumed most of the cells of librarians. The dust is the culprit.

All those years the library is tense.
Visitors have to step with all hushes.
The dog's tongue had been cut and the termites are exterminated.

she was a different librarian. She treasured books more than the readers.
A dog ear is a crime, and any page which is torn is unforgivable.

Today she died. Many pretend to mourn.
I want to, at least, for a remembrance.
But i cannot, and i wouldn't. She once slammed my brain with book as though i was a door with no feelings at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Recent Fall Of Icarus

i was busy talking to you about poetry and too sad we did not bother listening to the recent fall of Icarus what i heard later was that Icarus did not die

He is alive and so thankful of his melted wax wings the radar did not detect him and so here he is knocking at my door asking for a little time to be with us in this safe house

it was his father who was shot because he was shouting.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Red Ant And The Dead Leaf...

all i did was to protect rights, i tackled the corresponding obligations.
I am a model citizen.
I teach laws.

a group of giants laugh at me there is no trampling still, i wait.
their feet are heavy and one foot one stamp is enough to wipe me out. I am an ant.
I have not anthill to live.

it never saddens me and i got enthralled by one of you.
ready to offer
everything i have.

i know how to climb trees i challenge on of those ivory gods.
the tree gods wait and become curious.
what is this red ant up to?

i will have a good ride on a dry leaf feel the fallen state and write about it.

i could be human only if you want to.
she says, don't... we hate humans.
we are ivory towers and we do not feel.

i will be a red ant. The dry leaf is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Red Ant In This Labyrinth

it hard to accept the truth that the one who will guide you through this labyrinth is a mere red ant, the one insignificant red ant, the one you have always killed by the nail or your thumb when no one minds when no one ever knew how red ants die their ordinary deaths and how they are not buried how they die their skin and two main bodies all bursting under the sun how they turn into mere dust you do not even remember

this is the red ant this is insignificance the most ordinary of all ordinary creatures in the labyrinth of zigzag paths, and rooms closing and opening and deep and down and up and side to the left to the right, the blind red ant sees leading us all to the light away from arrogance.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Red Ants Under His Feet

a man at peace with himself under the shade of the lush mango tree
does not think of killing the red ants
under his feet

RIC S. BASTASA
nothing
is important about
it,
everyone
detest
the built in superstition
the world
gives it up except the hinges trusting that someday
it's entrance and
exit
becomes a fad,
until now
the black widow
is not satisfied about the reality of the red
doors
she hates the fire that she had long lost
to someone else.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Red Gumamela Flower On The Yard

for we are just like a gumamela flower that blooms only for a day

there is no bud
no seed
it is beauty destined only for a day

RIC S. BASTASA
The Red Suntan In My Wife's Garden

she keeps cutting the stalks of the red suntan as i watch with disdain since there will be no more suntan flowers to view this bright morning in the garden she notices my obvious disturbing action and she comes with a clear reaction saying they must be pruned regularly for them to give more flowers for the day it is more like the way God prunes us albeit there may be pain and even bleeding but that's the best way for more flowering the secret to the blooming is in the cutting and then i ask myself deep in my heart i must have caused her so much pain since she has bloomed so well in fact like the red suntan flowers in our garden

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reddest Roses

he had seen
d how the roses bleed
at night

d the following morning d all the petals
d are bloody red.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Refusal

you refusal to hold my hand is the worst form of indignity
that a human being has extended to another human being like me

how can i blame you you have never felt the warmth of my palm is it true that all you know about the human hand is the slap from your husband?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Refusal To Use The Nouns

the Malayan writes admirable poetry and becomes a favorite
there are messages
of friendship
and after a while an invitation is made for a meeting
the one concerned
whoever that is refused
saying that the face
or the body is not as beautiful as the poems
and there is a standing respect for the verb disregarding the identities of the nouns or the substituting pronouns
one must only exclaim without knowing
why...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Regret Of The Snow Princess

i do not know if you have heard about the story of the snow princess who is destined to be paired to the spring prince and come valentine's day they are set for a date in that castle cloud inside the love garden it is said the snow princess has nothing to tell coz that night the spring prince only pinched her ears, no piercing ever happened, and summer may not come joyously and earlier as you expect it to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Regrets Of My Youth

During those early days of youth when we were so vibrant and energy-filled we, upon the advice of those experts of emotion, suppressed, what made us so alive our kicks are halfway eyes not widely open our hands timidly kept inside our pockets we could have done much better spreading our seeds and see them grow on the different sides of the hill we are at a loss now age has arrived bringing all the goods which we can no longer eat all the excitements which we can no longer bear

i regret, i could have run against the tide, i could have evaded all those masters of emotions, i could have run like a child on those long shores of my youth i could have made my deep dives to the sea
i have not seen the corals i have not gathered a clam i have not touched a mussel not even seen the famous basket of Venus deep deep down in that voluptuous sea.

Liars! Oh those liars of my youth!
You have triumphed
and tricked me into this pit
of unwanted unhappiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Repentants...

the thoughts too pollute what clean slate was once there spotted creatures
we become and yet still as beautiful as we were once children of God cleansed by his mercy
silky white
fluttering in the air back to His arms
pure.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reproductive Bill

to argue with you at what point shall life start, call me dumb write to me that i am nonsensical but to all these bickering between brothers i prefer to sit on the grass on a hilltop view the sea
and be silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
in truth i have learned just to be an echo. though you sound hoarse and sharp, i keep mine deep and pleasing. i just want you to be happy and you will never hear any negative comment from me. Not just you. It is for everyone here in this room, though, with my status, i too can go back to my nook and prefer my own importance. This i did not do. I see to it that everyone of you here must realize your importance. I try to justify your errors, smoother the rough edges of your visions, sometime without you knowing i give better words for those cliches. when i go out of this room into the wide windows of the porch, i carry my silence, and mutter to myself, what could have been more frank and mindless. What you heard of me was true, but i have changed. I am old now and hurting all of you to make you better people will serve no purpose. It is almost nighttime and i will be late for home. The children are not there and i have no one to talk to. Only my self, sleepy and tired, and no matter how i justify, the loneliness creeps in, wanting to announce rest.

case is closed. and no one is to blame.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Restfulness Of Death.

why is it
that to a pinch
of happiness
you get a slap
of grief?

why burn a house
to find
a lost coin?

what idiocy is
this
taking all the risks finding so much loss for a taste of such a very simple pleasure
which everyone had taken

oh, you heard it
find love and let it kill you find happiness and die, find pleasure and regret without measure is this the meaning of life?

not the quantity but the quality
not the length but the shortest of the best pleasure in there

why do we shy away from the gift of pain
the trail of purity
the holy grail of mud
the reward of strife

the restfulness of death.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Resting Place

behind us are rivers and rocks

flowing water making a song soaking coldness upon a bed of leaves

we make love
we sought silence
we are separated from the rest
who thirst and hunger too and search for the warmth and understanding
of universality

the love is done and we rest upon the thought of memories
in exhaustion

and i ask myself,
then what?

what is the fruit of happiness?
wave upon wave
comes the meaninglessness of all endeavors

i am searching now for a place where i can rest my head and say: this is it without humanity's bedrock in the simplification of who i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Restless Soul....

the soul that is restless wants to stop and say everything sort of last confession before it finally ends its journey

but it cannot stop for now it is taken by this disease of obsessive-compulsion propulsion
like a meteor into space not having met the wall of space that must explode it
and scatter it into pieces of nothingness

it is a wind without a break not into a placid worship

RIC S. BASTASA
The Retaliation Of The Chickens

dead
rotten on the gutter
worms
live inside its guts

the heavy rain
this morning
pushes it

it falls
upon the pebbled
garden
where the grey hen
and its twelve chicks
find it
and feast upon its delicious
flesh

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reunion In St. Vincent's High

We come back one time at the end of this year to the room where we spent first year high school we wend inside that room of 30 empty chairs

we remembered the brown paint and the litter of crumpled papers and we again heared same words repeated for the nth time which we refused to memorize and we focused our attention to the blackboard where our names were once written but now completely erased by them as new crazy voices emerged replacing our monotonic cadences fading in the hallways enclosed with those rusty iron grills.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Revenge Of The Poem

you are my enemy

i have a gun hidden in this poem

i get the gun and pull its trigger in front of your face bang! bang! bang!

i hit you right at the center of your temple

you fall dead

in front of me

you are not dead?

who cares?

from the point of view of this violent poem

i just shot you and you are dead

you are my enemy

and you are dead

i am relieved

from the point of view of this violent poem

you are my enemy and you are dead now i can go

and live in peace
this violent poem

has done its purpose

i will have another one to compose.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Revenge Of The Short Poem

got this black moth inside my mouth.

i won't spit it out.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Revenge Of Time

narcissus
has a big oblong face
with black thick curly hair
and a beard
to keep thin lips
and everyday he looks at himself in a mirror my eyes to thine
and time takes notice and so envious it made us all look
old and dumb.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Revenge....

because you are too small you become invisible you are of no interest and you are shut off like a speck of dust in the lock door of air and space.

when you are hurt
you are the only one hurt when you shout
you are not heard
you become a mutant
with a nuclear warhead

you aim your anger
to those who do not see you when you explode
the world is annihilated and from that time on you have become one satisfied anonymous the world is destroyed no one lives

you now find yourself alone and so wasted.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Reverse-Learning Of Dreaming

i dream
inorder to forget

on the table
are unopened letters

it is enough:
the more
that i know
the more
i become afraid, the more i become less

in sleep
all the ropes
are untangled

it is best
that i should not know how

RIC S. BASTASA
The Revised One: Murky

and you tiptoe and wriggle and sing for i am winding you take the plunge and you search for my heart the warmth of my floor and the comfort of my banks the tickles of my fish, the power of my pebbles you feel that i own you now and you want some more wanting to stay and savor the embrace of my foams at noon the sun comes at the height of its brightness you realize the mistake & you stand and dress yourself you never want to be a part of me for i have become murky

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rhyme And The Reason

you rhyme
it is nice to hear that you're sweet and people love to hear that too you're reason itself arriving at conclusions based on solid premises

but my dear
you are human too
despite the reasons
you choose not to rhyme
sometimes
you choose to bleed
and even choose to die and people with reason knows how is it not to rhyme sometimes

when a loved one dies when a beloved betrays you
when fortunes are taken at the wink of the eye

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rhyming Poem That You Ask

aye! aye! aye
did you watch the ballet?
at the bay between the beltway of the green beret who did not betray on her birthday somewhere in Bombay she threw the bouquet after the broadway ran to the bikeway and had buffet by the way is there a cachet?
did she do the crochet?
at the chalet and the chambray?
did she love Dante
who dare say on that day was it tooth decay of the deejay on its doomsday by the doorway? why delay and not defray right away?
find the dossier read and no downplay at the driftway and enjoy the fish fillet and the flambe
use the footway don't go astray fly away! hate the folkway! □

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rhythm Of Ritsos

family
tragedies reflec ted in the mir ror
no error

a nice
stay in the tuber culosis
war d.

a political engagement against a dictator

periods of deportation
and arrests.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ricefield After The Harvest Season

bald the field is empty of its grains like a no man's land there exists
this feeling of satisfaction after the season

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rich And The Poor

dr. rich shall enjoy
dr. the long queue of their funeral march on the motif of
dr. yellow and confetti and it will be on tv for months, they have
it all: honor, glory
and fame, and luck.
we are the mourners.
pretending to be true.
we are the poor
grass under their suns.
we are always the worshippers of their heroes. we are poor as always and ever shall be, forever
and ever, amen.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rich Bard

hey bard, i have read a piece of your creation, i am sorry but it does not pass my taste.

and the rich bard answered, hey dude, i am sorry too but i am rich and popular look at you, don’t you pity yourself in anonymity?

and the dude answered,
i may not be rich and popular and famous like you but hey bard i am honest and true.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rich Brat....

i got short changed
you are enraged and about to kill someone whom you do not know so well

i go crazy, and what what you and I, OH, THERE IS STILL something left us, is there us?

dance to the notes of the piano alone in a dark room a record of wrongs, played over and over again

jump over the window, end the dance if you will, jump over the window catch the butterfly of your last dream how i wish that the ending would not be as bizarre as reality, but it is the inevitable, but let us see, well this is it you say you are short changed of love, oh, there must be so much hate now in your heart, fiery, and reddened and fussy there is this little girl with open hands in the market place, left by her mother, she is hungry and abandoned.....there is no need to jump over the window, go there.

feel her, and have life, give it to her she does not want to die...to young to know what is death from you, miserable rich brat.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rich Man And The Poor Young Woman

it is a world of symbiosis
when an old, rich man meets a poor young woman lonely as he is he offers her romance
the moon and the stars
to her bosom

the young woman smiles and too kind enough to answer him with some smiles
and welcoming affections

he says he will marry her and she takes him for a husband he needs love
she needs (so badly)
his cash

and then they live happily shortly after

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rich Man...

he is always laughing
even when alone

this far i can still hear him twenty years ago before he died no one dared to call him mad....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rich Speaking....

the way it was worded
justifies poverty, as though the poor people have not faults too of their own, you

envy the rich, the way they flaunt wealth, and you say, you have not seen them cry, or if they cry at most it could only be once a year, you wish that they too must cry their rivers, groan like galvanized zinc tread by the lost kids in town sniffing methamphetamine you want to see their eyes as red as inflamed bruises after a brawl

the rich too must speak of the poor's lack, their hibernation for all these years, for what they only know to get rid of their sufferings seem only to be a bloody revolution, or that they have not devoted their bodies to dedicated work, that patience of the yellow skin, those eyes that must wake up as earliest birds in the field of hay, for what we are is not found in the stars

or the lines of our palms, we are what we make of ourselves,
that poor man has spent all his nights in drunkenness killing hope he had wanted the easy way out robbing those who earned their pennies in the hours of so much waiting and hard work....
The Riddle

it has a name
in seven letters
three are vowels

the moment
you call its name

it simply disappears

it only requires that you
meditate upon it

when you
shut your mouth
when you
stand still when nothing
falls
even a leaf
when no one
walks when no one
talks
when no one bothers
the world

be it in the city or on top
of the mountain

this state
of being exists (the answer is silence)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Riddle For The Night....

it bites
yet you see no
teeth
or mouth

it holds without
hands
it speaks without
words

though omnipotent
it cries
for help....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Riddle Of That Small City (For Singapore)

in that small city
i promised myself
i can take whatever it is in one day

whatever it is
is still actually undefined and what is undefined is always exciting
for it amounts to anything goes

what falls on my head like a Forest Gump feather
in that small city
is always welcome

and what was undefined and what was so exciting was finally done

you'll never know what it is because you have read this to understand and best understand the undefined means you never have to read whatever it is it is after all

undefined and yet
i must assure you it will, and will always be exciting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Riddle Of The Hand

a river
has five tributaries of unequal lengths

they end upon a dead sea
where the five faces of narcissus
stare blankly at
you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Riddle Of The Matriarch...

clueless
everything in the room is made neat you feel what clean is those cup boards and plates
not a dust
not a mark of dried water just perfect

clueless i think of you but there is a distance that knows how far roads can be made near how a house can be reachable despite the length of the hills the height of skies

you have know
the stained spot no one bothers to call it its own name everyone has that inkling to clean it by itself even me
there was never a time
at dawn
and evenings are too visible and mornings are too preoccupied and busy

it is like a rock in the middle of the road cars change directions not to hit it people who see it do not have the power to remove it but all wanted it removed somehow a pain in the eye

no one dares and it is always there and it will always be a bruise on the cheek even during your death when you give that last smile of concern you did not mention a syllable about it

i know you were so hurt it is me all those times beside you and still you never said a word about it....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Riddles

stay:
some words still dance inside your ear they like it there

departure:
some fruits are ripe for the picking but you are not there they are falling even without the wind

go:
how do you interpret my silence?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Right O Choose

laugh out loud
today
do not worry
let death worry about itself
let life reinvent
its scarred
face.

you are free
to choose

choose laughter
the brighter side of the night's world

warm early morning sun on the shiny locks of your hair.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Right Self

Years shape many forms
I, face, many faces of me In this mirror, one way, I am, finally choosing
One, which i like,
But, which, i am not so happy about,
But i like it. I love it, Myself, square faced, serious, and Above all, keeping Things right....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Right To Choose....

sorrow's eyes look backward
the useless
past, it has toyed us well it is a mere ploy to a play
close all of those eyes better put them all aside in darkness
how can we heal these wounds when these eyes
keep on shedding tears
a sea of salt
it is too painful and we swim in these pains enough, i've had enough of these futility
there is a garden
above it are clouds and birds the flowers bloom and too inviting us to a feast of scents and colors
life, vibrance, vigor, zest, bees
and butterflies and beside it brooks and creeks
a choir of falls between the cliffs this right to choose what to see is here again...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Right To Own A Gun

i have a gun

i need a gun
not because i need to kill but because i need to defend myself from the intruders

do not deny me
then
of my right to own a gun

you own a gun
many guns
and you are the government and i am the plain citizen Kane

do not deny me
the right to own one you are the government and you cannot protect me every moment

inside the walls of my house
i am king
enter without my permission and i must kill for inside my house no matter how humble are the beams and doors and windows
in here

i am king...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ripe Fruit In Paradise...

that part that you are holding
the ripe fruit in paradise
is so delicious, i cannot imagine how can it be a source of discord? all of us can eat it we can share it, it is too many to be consumed
i want to hold it and give it all the compassion that it needs the tenderness
the kindness of my spirit this part of me
that understands you now, in submission to love, i let you touch it
and caress it,
to make it a part of us.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ripe Guavas

on top of a hill beside a cliff
the branches of the guava tree
are filled with ripe fruits

a bird with small wings
flew and perched on one of the branches

it is pecking
on the biggest and the ripest

which at any moment may fall right on the sharp rocks
just below
the cliff

where the hands of death keep on waving

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ripe Sound Of The Gecko....

sorrow is not fond
with words,
it sticks like a gecko
on the old wall of the house and when everyone retires for
sleep
it starts to create that sound
where you soon shall start counting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ripeness Of Unthinking

and then
everything turned ripe
yellow and
soft and sweet,

and fallen, and we who watch
what happens just keep on watching for there is no space for thinking and oh my God it is so sad
and beautiful....

RIC S. BASTASA
there was this little indonesian girl who played hide and seek
in the Soekarno Hatta

we were there as early as 4 o'clock in the afternoon and we waited till 0030 hours when the plane arrive with its flashing lights

the night is cold and the silence outside is visible in its emptiness

it was the same girl who cried all throughout the trip from jakarta to manila

i know all the other passengers were disturbed
death to all the lives of our
ears

but what can we do?
she was but
a little girl and can therefore do no wrong.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ripple Inside The Plane

there was this little
indonesian girl who
played hide and seek
in the Soekarno Hatta

we were there as early
as 4 o'clock in the afternoon
and we waited till
0030 hours when the plane
arrive with its flashing
lights

the night is cold and the
silence outside is visible
in its emptiness

it was the same girl who
cried all throughout the
trip from jakarta to manila

i know all the other passengers
were disturbed
death to all the lives of our
ears

but what can we do?
she was but
a little girl and can therefore
do no wrong.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ripple Of That Last Leaf....

like the leaves falling from the trees yellowed and light blown by the wind to the ponds

like a last sigh from the muteness of its capillaries this last leaf
as it lands on the pond shall make the ripples in your calm
atmosphere....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ripples In My Mind

the ripples of my mind reaching that distance faraway into the sea of your desire and here we are mutually sleepless to the darkness of loneliness

unable to open the doors of our dreams
unable to unlock the secrets of our caving hearts

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ripples Of The Sea

the sea ripples
take me to a journey into your cove of love arms open and lips wanting to kiss me i am into these ripples leading to the bay of your body i am a wave raging into your paradise there is chaos but there are no screams there is this silence of lovers that no one can palm or enclose with the hands but will always be understood in secret and will always be reminisced with another beating anticipation oh, this romantic palpitation countless releases of vivid emotions always enraptured by the lack of vowels...
The Ritual

the ritual is simple a little bird is trapped in the fingers of your hand

you decide
to open your fingers and let free
the little bird

it is you
on that little moment on that ritual
that has been set free

you inhale
and then exhale
and feel
a relief
deep in the chamber of your heart
where your soul sings

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ritual Of Leaving

leave before you decide to say the words unkind

say not the words that hurt they have no hands
to hold you

let leaving be simple let goodbye
be the sigh of love

if you have a single tear hide it inside your eyelid if you have some regrets keep then in your pockets as you step out of the house let the bangs be on your hair

not the door

put up a little smile for the road feel the falling leaf from a tree cross this threshold and then wave on the coming bus step in there immediately sit on the front and never, never look back to the face of the past

leave that wound alone and let it heal with time in the solitude of its own understanding

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ritual Of Morning

I went out early this morning to take a walk and see the world At its unfolding, Skies grey and moving slowly away from light, The dim lights, Pushing away dark clouds vice versa tugging each other Perhaps not wanting to part (Whatever happened last night? Nobody wants to recall) Towards an edge on the right corner of the gym, Everything is shadowy (Like a dawn tryst In a tight room so foul Filled with cheap perfume Beating warmth like Pink baby rats)

A black outline of coconut trees, Some houses appearing as smoke Rising to the skies Like men smoking, Letting go off The sighs inside their hearts
They are huge and keeps a chest full of Frogs wanting to jump Into the pond, their dreams croak and croak Throughout this hot summer Pleading to the white heronFor rain and more rain Lest they die

What arrived instead is the plow, Their territories cut into small pieces And some will have no place to live, I am referring to the frogs like men And the children Of the little space This pond drying itself To death. The air is thin and sharp to the feel Of guts Gathering the early dusts of the south bound road, And few raindrops Fell on the chalky pathways some two or Three farm children running for cover,

I walk fast, trying to outrun The children, the frogs, the men, And the shadowy coconut trees, Fast and faster still Like my thoughts running and running In circles Oval to this gym

The first ray is coming out From the edge of a grey cloud Pushed towards a darker side To my eyes Lights stab and light With more light Gushing forth from the stomach Of dawn.

Someone just performed The ritual of morning The birth Of another day, I walk past time And must go home on time I have my lover for breakfast Waiting And some thoughts Running and running thoughts wanting To stop.
The Rituals Are Man Made...Love Is Born

love conquers all man gives the rituals like marriage and fidelity, and love is conquered by all,
loveless, the journey continues guilty, the mind holds on to nothing, lasts.

RIC S. BASTASA
The River And Her

in the slow history of the river flowing she wants to mark her own name with her fingers religiously she goes there on a ritual of her own naked she dips her skin on the water so soft are her feet on the bed of pebbles depth down the fishes ask for more of her toes touched the river begins to sing a song for her the bamboo leaves keep watching what happens next will love dance on the surface of flimsy reasons? will passion appear and last forever?

the banks want to close in on them: the river and her the sun is worried what will happen next it did end, but it was sad, as sad as the butterfly that lost one of its wings.

the river loses its name as she plunges deep to the tight arms of death.

RIC S. BASTASA
The River And The Snake

your mind has the power to create and judge what appears before your eyes

the river can be a snake a huge and long one that swallows villages or it can be a mother that provides all the thirsty people with the necessary water it is not only us that looks upon them and judge them with how we perceive

they too look upon us they can even make us prisoners stones or birds
children or ticks

so we too must be kind as kindness begets kindness praise the rain
pay homage to the spirits of the trees talk to the river dance with the clouds

RIC S. BASTASA
The River That Runs Dry

shall you worry about the river that runs dry? when the fish all die when the moss all turn to only nothing but dry green patches of the past?

do not fret neither shall you worry from the sands too shall rise another city

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rivers.....

an old woman
catches the attention of the middle aged corporate worker

deleans you she says trees disgrace the crease-less shirt of yours

gress hinder your feel of economics butterflies are irrelevances corporate man leave this place the rocks want to hit your head the rivers rise eager to drown you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Road Leads Back To You Girl....

alone in an evening at least here is still the great
ray charles

jazzy, jazzy

the road leads back to you...girl

RIC S. BASTASA
The Road On The Other Side

first there is the glass jalousie window misty, that is what they are,
no one opens it
but soon i will to see the bushes and then beyond this is the road a cemented road constructed by a Korean Company
the name is Hanjen,
and then i hear two things the thumps of a buffalo's feet there are four because it is tied to a big tree and then the sounds of leaves falling and this is a feat of awareness
hearing the sound of the wind interacting with the veins of the leaves the stalks vibrating a sound to the leaves
on the ground
the songs of the ants
love calls
of the robin on the twig of the gemelina tree its roots slowly crawling against the light
seeking refuge in the hollowness of the soil hearing still the silence of the worms asleep and full.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Road To Dohinob

it used to be a narrow road fit only for the buffalo muddy during the rain and dusty during a sunny day but today
the Road to Dohinob
is the one that leads to heaven

along the road the flowers sings
like the angels of his dreams

from where he is now he imagines the long narrow path expanding a bit giving way to more space for his new life
with her

at the tip of this wider road he hears
the baby laughing

the skies are lighter than the usual blue and the sunflowers are brighter than the stars at night his heart cannot muster a word for this newly found
happiness

overflowing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Road To Greatness..... here is a point that greatness is not planned fame not actually chartered
for instance
bob dylan, what about him?

he simply writes, sings, and that's it, without his knowing and expectation Nobel Prize got in.

it is not dark yet continue my dearest, in whatever passion you are in.

it is the passion, not the prize.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Road To Sergio Osmena...

beside the long and winding road the rivers flow, the hills all green, the forests crown,
thick fogs hang on the shoulders of mountains, birds are migrating and showers of rain pass from time to time... and then sunshine and glossy are the leaves and sunflowers are blooming on the countryside.

'this is still a very beautiful world'
i am telling myself again about this conclusion.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Road To Something Better...

you have to throw it away to get something in return it is not hard to understand that we all have to die in order to live again find the map connect the route of that dusty road to the cabaret.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Roads Have No Ends

we shall take the road to San Jose
we only stop there
soon we shall start our journey again
to a road that has no end everything we are
are circles
the road the mind
the soul

RIC S. BASTASA
The Roads...

all road must lead to you, (myriad options, pretty dilemmas) days are thinking days, and the hours are restless too, what the body can do is always a question, what those mouths are on the leaves and bushes, i am not persuaded, the roads are illusions, and they put you there, as though waiting...

days are thinking days and nights are restless creatures,
i am,
a silent pond, looking at the mirror without ripples,
i suspend time and go into deep sleep testing if i can meet you inside the house of dreams

you are not there, and all along i am right.

your arms are empty holes in galaxies like ships always sailing
away.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Robins And The Rats

the robins are the most visible feeders
of my rice which i have put beside the house

but the rats underneath the pile also take their share of this bounty

i envy them all because from you my dear neighbor you have never shared anything you have fenced yourself so high as though we are your rats and robins that you fear.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rocks And The Cliff In Front Of Me

the rocks in front of me are layered like sheets of paper works a load i must suppose for centuries unread
the grasses of the desert have come to cover a part of the history of their shale
i am the shadow at noonday asking
what these rocks can do for me?
or shall i say rocks, rocks, boulders of rocks tell me the heaviness of your burden
tell the secrets of your strengths
the echoes keep on rebounding sounding like the laughter of a madman asking the questions and figuring out the answers from the same sound

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rocks Want To Hit Your Head The Rivers Rise Eager To Drown You

an old woman

catches the attention of the middle aged corporate worker this place demeanes you she says these trees disgrace the crease-less shirt of yours the grasses hinder your feel of economics butterflies are irrelevances corporate man leave this place the rocks want to hit your head the rivers rise eager to drown you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Role Of A Metaphor

you shall love me as a metaphor i fear that when this metaphor becomes untangled
like a riddle solved,

how can you love me then?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Role Of Grief Via Silence....

for as long as grief does not leave you silence will always speak louder than any

shouts of joy or whispers of romance silence is that brick on the road cars are disturbed by its red elegance women find it not just for the house little in-significances life is more chiseled this time refined garments perfumed feet

shiny white fingernails drops of rain beneath the soiled feet for as long as grief hovers on unrequited love

there will always be more to tell not in words not in words

it is the silence
that dwells on the wounded lips

it is the silence
that creeps in the heart

deadens the tongue glowing soul, winged spirit without wounds now, pure joy like light dispersed in black skies

The Role Of Resistance

the bow must be strong and so must the string be but with more flexibility and the arrow must be sharp and smooth and to the air it must know its ways like the river to its own winding tunnel......

dhe hand pulls the tail the resistance works the arrow against the bow and then you shall see something is gone in such a sudden way
far, far, farther away.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Role Of The Flesh When The Mind Breaks Away...

one does not have to condemn the flesh it too serves some purpose, when the mind goes beyond our fences when we cannot take the pressure anymore there the flesh waits for temporary reliefs it gives you warmth
the pleasures at hand when the intellect abandons you in the middle of your miseries.

the flesh beats us to a dance of life like wine it can make us drunk and we become wild there is that fire in the heart that the flesh can easily so provide there is the laughter and the ecstasy that the flesh only knows when the storm is over, when the night breaks into dusk when light comes again in our eyes the flesh is there beside us it is there, when the mind breaks it is patient to all our desires.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rony Of Your Life

so many things litter empty bottles
wrappers
rugs, slippers with lost pairs dog's hair
banana peelings,

in the kitchen after you eat you are always caught up with so many reasons to leave early

so many things to attend to words to fabricate
sentences to make at the rush hour you risk life at the jammed traffic of the city streets and then when you arrive at your destination you find the irony of life you are caught up in the net of jejune

so many papers piling up like a mountain and then you have no nerve to make the climb

you sit there
look beyond the glass your legs are crossed and then you
do nothing

and that is the final decision.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Room As A Metaphor

the room is a metaphor for an enclosure it says
i keep you safe here i am a field where you grow
your rows of thoughts
i am your home
away from everyone
here you are my only beloved...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Room Is Stoic Playing Blind And Deaf As We Begin To Play The Forbidden Music Of Our Love.....

you wait there too
at the usual place of that secret tryst

a dark room
that smells of our past sweat unwashed linens
and the antiquated silence spoken of by those who love
so discreetly

the room is stoic playing blind
and deaf
as we begin to play the forbidden music
of our love.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Room That Was Locked

we talk about nothing last night and for the past few nights about the room that was locked.
long time ago, even the mere mention of that room they remember, the old folks always reminded us of the penalties, for the mere use of words, and there was fear and there was the suppressed silence that eventually bothered each of those who thought about it, except for one man, who one day, with all his anger, got a bit piece of wood, the one left by the termites, and hit the room that was always locked, and when its doors were broken, they all went in, to know what secret lies inside the abandoned room that was forbidden.

to their aghast, there is nothing there.
except perhaps, the mere fear about its being forbidden.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Roosting Of The Pegions

i did not have the time to appreciate the pigeons roosting on a tree and the way they took flight away from me

i did not mind at all

i am also here on my journey towards a place without a name

PAGBATOG SA MGA SALAPATI

wala ko makahigayon pagdayeg sa pagbatog sa mga salapati ug ang paglupad nila palayo kanako wala na nako matagad pa samtang ako usab nia sa akong pagpanaw paingon sa dapit nga wala pay ngalan

RIC S. BASTASA
The Root Cause Of Insanity

the root cause of insanity, i begin to sift it from you and her and the last one to say he suffers from the meaninglessness of his indescribable quest for the justification of existence after two suicide attempts i look at the mirror of their eyes and i think, i must not be be mistaken, it is this self-centered being this inability to see the other as the most important other this selfishness that like termites keep on eating the fiber

until everything becomes nothing but a hollow space of bad air

there is a need to see how a flower opens its petals to meet the rays of the morning sun and say hello.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Root Is You....

YOU watch a TV show
a night soap,
with lots of new discoveries and twists
lots of tears and slapping
overtures

You wonder why you are watching these kinds of junk

You know that all these are not really true and the writer is a fag receiving his pay
and spend them to his pay-for -love
one night stands

You become angry at yourself You could have spent more time on productive input like trimming your dog or feeding your white cat
by the window
or giving grains to visiting sparrows under the mahogany trees

But this time
there is no one in the house for they have left you

It is not the TV show
Your anger is You.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Root Of Unhappiness

when the reasons for living leave you
you will be left alone groping for religion and sooner you will ask what faith is....you feel like a glass
used and left on the sink dirty and empty.....and you ask where have all these reasons gone?

the mind promises you: i can invent reasons
i can find a book of life for you and the heart too says: i can find you another home there is a garden of love somewhere where you can rest
there is a house of pleasure and i have a key to its door.....

sometimes you give up
not really intent on putting a stop to light switching off and letting go and
just staying there for
nothing.....

you empty everything from a pack and put nothing back but you are not leaving to any place this happens and you have no more reasons no explanations

because all of them have left you and you are tired creating them all again the cause of all lies
the root of unhappiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Roots Of Light

falling star
it does not matter
in truth
i feel for you
from the wishes
of my heart

in the darkness
more stars shall twinkle

now you belong to earth
no one knows where
you are

fallen star.
you have become like us down to earth.

grow your roots
of light.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Roots Of My Papa....

the mountain man named ronnie once invited me for dinner in his hut up the Bulawan Peak and we walk the whole day as i manage every five steps upon such a steep walk on the cliff
resting once in a while gasping for air and this made the difference between our two lifestyles, as he attuned to the ways of the wild and the silence
has learned the patience to take me there
as i figure out how i must have forgotten
the roots of my father.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Roots Of Violence

Time is always wasted in our local wars

money spent not on food
but mortars and bullets

lives most of all wasted for nothing

she says
'this greed for money
and power'

the roots of violence still unfathomed

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rose As The Point Of Reflection

always we look at the petals of a rose beaming with fire

soon
wilted soon ashed

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rose Is You

there is a rose
in my heart

and it has so many thorns

i bleed and i look at the mirror

so beautifully
the bleeding goes on and on

years and years
how can the thorns be so hurting?

it is the rose that matters and it is you...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rose Poem

when i was young as a petal of a rose
i love the hands of the sun cressing
my stalk and thorns and leaves time has betrayed me with wilting gifts

i am not as old but i am feeling the changes the petals fall away and my thorns are dry and not as sharp as any kind of reliable defense there is this beautiful feeling though

that of letting go that of watching the sun set gracefully
and finally saying upon my innermost

that Life is indeed short and that foremost it has been so exciting
so beautiful
and one that last day
still

to the extreme....amazing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Routine

the routine is the path to a prejudice
the stones there becomes our ordinary stones the colors are the same everyday and stopping becomes a stranger the world rotates upon itself and there are no questions addressed to the passing wind
and even the fire that puts itself off without your asking

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ruins

time tiptoed at the church ruins in Camiguin Island, scrutinizing every detail of the burial of the past by the massive lava flow of Hibok-hibok,

Death resides here for a time but travels once again to find a new place
to sit and laugh,

Life comes with a revenge of green mosses covering every stone Until the soil wakes up With a sprouting seed of corn.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ruins Of Your Facades

you are right
Nicole
given the chance

or the option
you could have thrown it
and taken
another

but it is there sticking like a permanent mark of your body

a mole
a black islet in your
heart

given the choice
you want to be someone else somewhere else
where you can be very productive and at ease

the strain is stressful
it took you years to accept the irremovable

and since it cannot be taken away
you must learn to take it
and love it will all
your heart
i am referring to yourself
the best that you have for now
from the ruins of your myriad facades.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ruins, Lacson House

THE fountain
gives the sense of spring on this abandoned place

the ruins
somehow, despite the
emptiness
provides a home
for completeness
as you begin
to fill in what is missing inside
your mind

d this is greatness remaining
despite the horror of time passing by as i touch the pillars i feel a world

beyond us
as i walk the stone floors i know that there is still stability
to what we were once
after we are finally gone

i sip brewed coffee on one of those antique tables as Mozart sonata plays

actually it rained when we arrived here
and it did not stop

and that explains why the pictures were blurred

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ruler

the ruler
gives us an edge

where we shall trust

to make straight lines

from him we make

houses and landscapes

the ruler
this mere instrument this tool
this wood with numbers
a measure

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rules Of Their Games Must Be Yours Too

there will always be rules, a system of weights,

the hands of judgment are always carrying the scales

that may tilt against you
sometimes

and you wait and see and trying to think deeply accurately, balancing and taking so much time and distance
and even force
if needed
and even ruse and pretense
if necessary

how to sway the scales in your favor
is always a dream

how to score with the system of weights is always the most important question

how to meet the rules of the games the games that must be yours too so that you can finally win.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rules Rolled Into One

i never want to argue with her, it is just a waste of time we are a busy couple we sit for breakfast, talk, in between sips of coffee, chew, swallow, wipe our lips with a tissue, talk again, nothing is wrong, we assure ourselves, we can't waste time on something wrong, we move, we keep on moving,

we keep believing that both of us can be right, all at the same time, we come home at night, not at the same time, we take dinner, candle light, soft words, rewind the day, talk about other people of our lives, we make a rule, nothing bad must spoil this moment of our togetherness, time is short, we ponder upon the last light of the candle, and never forget how its perfume smells.

then we sleep together. tired, so tired.
even in dreams we like to talk about ourselves. we never waste time arguing about differences.
it is just a waste of time because we are a busy couple trying to love each other than take in hate.
and these are the rules we make for rules are rules.
Rolled into one. Love

RIC S. BASTASA
The Rumor

the stone of discord that you throw in the beehive
daring and divisive

RIC S. BASTASA
The Runners Of Time

the fact is you are short of the hours but you keep running just the same hoping to be with it shoulder to shoulder the days are Olympiads they zoom out

you give up
sit on the grass and let
the sun
burn you down

those that pass by you
too
are caught red-handed by all the fears

RIC S. BASTASA
The Running Waters Of The River

running water on the river despite the boulders it finds itself its way to where all the waters meet in that destination of everything and everyone running restless souls towards the same destination

it is not divergence it is convergence

it is the oneness of all rivers of all souls

i run and flow
i become everything and everyone at the end from this flow on this journey towards everything and everyone i am gone i am found i am lost i am the drop becoming a part of the ocean's universe

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sacrifice

i've seen you
thirst

i feel what thirst is

you look for
water

or whatever that satisfies

the dreams of your lips & tongue

i thirst for thirst itself

but i do not look for water

or even if there is this pool

i still do not wish to drink anything

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad And Painful Truths.

most truths hurt.

they are not guests.
they stay permanently.
they have needles and threads and fingers.
they sew your lips.
there is blood in your hands.
you cannot complain.

no matter how you shake your brain
to forget
these sad and painful truths stay.
they are bats on the branches of your trees. aphids on your leaves.

soon these truths kill you.
and then
they all set you free.

grateful comes at last before you even say it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad Bird Who Went Voluntarily Inside The Cage And Sang A Song

i have seen a bird which went inside a cage and sings a very sad song in there
for his dear beloved

it once died there on a love unrequited.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad House

the children are locked inside the house if they go out once again they shall be chained like dogs once the hyperactive one fell from the window but its bones are strong and it knew how to land like a cat

on the hard floor

spoiled kids says the mother who is out of the house most of the time they deserve punishment says the father who is sick with lung cancer stuffed toys

these kids without necks they were never allowed to play they have to go direct to become cruel men later
and no one is to blame
no one.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad Life Of The Imitator

you mock me i bite my lips
i keep my mouth shut

i have met life
perhaps
but not love
i have not kissed it
to the full
not touched it that much
genuinely like a lover and a wife

do not mock me
i am just learning how to live how to love
how to be just me

for i have never been me i have imitated everybody if i were myself

i must have been shattered like having been bombed or shelled out

i have lived this life and shall live it for another hundred years if you wish the life of another always in the shoes of another always empathizing

as the heavens fall
as the gates of hell opened.
The Sad Man...

at first what i have in mind as i wake from sleep with all the freshness of the memory
should have been what i must say
to you
or to everyone here but what incapacity is this

the moment i start
i get lost and no matter how try to be back home to sincerity
or to the genuineness of human affections like what i want to do now i always end up with nothing and

so i guess this must be the most natural thing to happen
to a sad man, wordless in his world
orphan to his longings simply because no one is there no one waits no one comes and i am not, much to my disgust, not going.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad Month Of February

you may disagree:
since it has the heart
it keeps what you idolize
as the valentine red heart beating
symbolizing love,

like cats meowing
on their heat
or the dogs yelping
for another round of procreation

it is indeed a hot month they arrested
those whom we know as health workers
and the world is now complaining
yet the president is doing nothing

the saddest month of the year when freedom is killed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad Plains

because i feel you
you have become as beautiful as ever the seasons come and go winter and summer and then i feel you no more and silently i see that ugliness in you but because i love you and because i made a promise to love forever i do not summon words and take shelter among them in the reality of the sound

i stay on this temple above a mountain and beside the cliff

i talk to the wind and gaze forever on the sad faces of the plains

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad Plight Of Progress...

then everything we have is worded separately, not just two cups, or the usual toothbrush, for now it has conflagrated like an australian forest fire

separate beds, separate dreams separate ways, separate expenses separate houses, separate cars separate vacations

how have we changed since the time we have learned to know that we can be on our own with our separate money?

we have not grown so well we have not learned our lessons well in poverty and need we once were one united in despair companions in sorrow

best friends in grief

what has this riches provided us?

there is no more pillow for two heads no common light for one book no common handkerchief for our own tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad Reality Of A Poem

between your poem and the picture which you posted in Facebook simultaneously he 'likes' the picture of the face of the body of a woman in bikini strolling on the beach, your poem? it shall enjoy still the dignity of your silence.

probably, he did not like it or perhaps he does not have that imagination or perhaps he is into the body rather than the word.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad Truth Is

oh yes
i held your hand
i remembered the warmth i heard every beat
of our hearts
but
the warmth did not last like mornings
it faded at the end of the day
the heart beats
mellowed into the comfort of the bosom of
silence

the sad truth is that at the final chapter there is only
one man walking alone
as the sun sets
as you welcome the night as you finally arrive in your house
turn on the lights and cook for yourself and dine
alone
with your own romantic

hands do not last forever heartbeats stop.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sad Woman Of The Othe Side Of The Fence

i sometimes wish to see you upon a chair
knitting a pattern of flowers upon a cloth of silk,

or perhaps mixing the flour and eggs
and finally baking a cake with chocolate
dressing and rose icing

or perhaps spending more time tending the flowers in the garden under the morning sun

it would have been a beautiful view
of a complete woman in my mind but you never really tried what can i possibly write about you?

sitting idly upon a sofa watching so much tv smoke on one hand and a glass of vodka on the other

the room is littered with ash and there are tears in your eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Saddest Fact Is

i admit my friend
the saddest fact in this place is this:

i know everyone
but no one knows me

the happiest moment however is this:

i like it that way
no one solicits for my donations

the sadder part is the town too is unknown

the happier part is everything happens by reason of mere compliance

RIC S. BASTASA
The Saddest Thing That Can Happen To Love

in his journal
two weeks ago when she was sick
and hospitalized
he wrote an entry
which by accident
i have read:

there is joy in your absence.

time is on the good side it is this letting
alone
that makes one
alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sadness Of Other People

when i see the sadness of other people those that walk without aims and look beyond what they have at the hold of their hands something inside me says all is fair in this world to each his own now each man carrying his own burden his cross and as i too carry mine, shall they too carry theirs without asking when will this myth of suffering end? when will this sadness last?

dthis misery that looks for company their load that lightens mine the feeling that theirs is heavier somehow tell about the comfort of this situation

everyday to each his own and in order to have hope one says mine is lighter and i always have the reason to move on with my life and just be silent

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sadness Of The Real Queen

the Sad Queen
has killed her lover

her kingdom demands that she has to be alone

Power is always a jealous companion

the lover is buried in her darkness

today she shall visit her People

Walk with her powdered
face

thick with her laces seriously enough

she is the Queen of Power the Symbol of her People

No lust can keep her Love, she does not worship

Friends she could not keep Kin she must disregard.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sadness Of Your Eyes....

today you set aside books and notes, there is no frenzy about those page turners,

Friday is flying time. Tomorrow must be a diversion from all the days of the boring week.

you choose. You really have to.
there is an island a boat shall take you there. There is a floating house. If you call, a woman shall be there waiting.

You share a conversation above the sea till nighttime. The moon comes out from the breasts of mountains. She will shed off what is not necessary.

The night is all shed off what you think binds you.

The sound of chains shall liberate you. Fading cranks. Into buzzing life.

there is no much to learn inside this boat. No one shall teach you what to do. This is the instinct of beasts inside you. A monster that eats everything in her. And she submits knowing that all these years you have been lonely forgetting about dance and kiss.

Saturday is a memory. She disappears at night. And in the morning the boat takes you back home.

You must leave right away. The boat cannot give you another chance.

The waves grow high and the island disappears from the sadness of your eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Salt Of The Earth

what are we
without the salt
we seem not to understand
we were asking
what are we
when the sweetness
is gone
is it really the salt that really matters
or is it the bitterness that wakes us up
and lets us know what this life is all about

RIC S. BASTASA
The Samal Connection

this is the second
time
compare me to the black bird
that comes to your island
and bring you nothing but you are all excited to see what kind of black feathers
do my wings
have

it's been a year
and then another to recall

because we are distant
we see all the good that our minds are indulging with all anticipation

the moment however when the chickens were released from their coops
the misunderstanding
began

back home how can you all be strangers

same faces i bring
here
same faces i leave
there

and there is no difference to scale

at any rate i thank all of you for giving birth to all of us.

RIC S. BASTASA
The San Rafael Excitement

now i am waiting for a roro bus beside a store with no customer the road is silent as ever and i ask the store vendor what is the time for the next bus to pass

later a green bus full of passengers arrive and i flag it for me to ride

it stops farther and i have to run to catch it when i enter it there is no space

for me
the ladies are looking like men standing while the men have their hard faces clinging to their seats

no one knows me here and i like this liberty of anonymity now i am what i think i am while no one is looking the bus speeds its way to the intestines of this earth and i feel just like another food swallowed by it to be transformed as another fecal matter i am immersed to this world and this is more real The Sands Of My Past

on a long holiday like these days i am swarmed by bees of thoughts and in my head they form a colony of memories i am taken in as a prisoner of the past but as usual i am the most willing victim of these nostalgic moments faces meet me luscious lips in red strawberry flavors pout at me and telling me how much have i wasted time on nothing.

what i have is a mirage and what i tread upon is a desert dry and so barren.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sands Of The Times

i watch you
with a burden,
a big stone and a rope
your neck is thin,
the skin is white and smooth over there is another pitiful creature

with another burden
a sword hangs over his head dwindling

we are watching one another on a Thursday noon
we are all three Sufferers

our mouths are gagged we cannot speak
if only our eyes can speak the language of the helpless and the maimed
the world's ears could have cracked its drums

the world's indifference conceals us
and when we die
we are erased like bad marks on the sand

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sands That Spill From My Fingers

so there you are again why do you come inside my room at the hour when i am so empty and needy of affection

you tease me with that smile and you put your finger between your lips and show your tongue like a bud of a very red rose

i am amazed and ready like i am a water escaping from the hold of this dam

you laugh and then you go outside the door without even closing it i have learned a lot from this and i will not follow

you are simply one of the grains of sands spilling from the hold of my fingers i watch and then i let them all go.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Santol Seeds Against The Morning Sun

last night they sat under the moon two lofty souls and thrive upon the sap and pulp of the three santol seeds

the following morning
at 5
the seeds lie emptied of its essence

but their hopes are as tall and long
as their shadows cast on the arm of the chair

RIC S. BASTASA
The Scarecrows

i have been wanting to say
everything
yes everything from the most trivial to the most important those subdued
those concealed those that beat in protest those that can even kill me or us because we have been too meek because we have been to subservient to the dictates of restraints

look at us
emaciated with suppression too guilty about unused freedoms of tools shining inside the cabinets of some disguises

look at us
we are less human our mouths thin out our ears sealing the orifices
of truth
our minds are nothing but plains without grass
ourselves
scarecrows in the fields

RIC S. BASTASA
The Scars Of Lovers....

a sharp sword
sharpens itself against another sword
metal to metal
to the sound of the gritting teeth one wants to imagine an ecstasy of a wound
blood dropping from a slit on the
hand
there is none here for this is but an affair of a sword to another sword thinking that there is no war but love in the air
sweet sounds of birds sex moans and calls for a mating
of the season

there is this hate that hides inside the chest where there is no option but to sleep with the one that never tickles you not a bit
where love is feigned and subdued
by need by survival by pretenses

that man understands it one can see the scars not the stars......

RIC S. BASTASA
The Scene In Black And White

the sickness of our existence on the last hour looks at everything as a movie trailer, one scene to another flashing, when these flashes end, you put your hands inside your pocket keep your mouth closed, and then you look up, verifying if there is a new opening an entrance where you shall begin anew because in truth you want to live some more live again

forgetting the first trauma years and years ago in one corner of that old hospital in black and white

RIC S. BASTASA
The Scheme

the scheme is concealed and you keep it for a long time now you murmur deep, deep inside you
like
you know well
how you sound
inert, inward, secretly whispering self unto self it is a pact between the heart and the mind a fusion of the bodily and the spiritual inside your sweet being you take a deeper breath whole and fresh so slowly like savoring
a soul
this time you plunge yourself in the magnificence of contented silence.
there is so much beauty when light is finally turned off.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Schools Of Fish

there is no way to call the fish to swim to your shore you are never the sea never the ocean you are an island and they are not part of your place in schools they come and in schools they go they are always gone unlike you, so much unlike you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Scissors

in your poems tonight the fabric audience is cut into sheets

those who appear in porcelain
bodies
broke into pieces on the floors

but there is someone who is not touched, not cut, not broken tell me, i am waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Score Of The Gate

i never counted it
it has escaped
the closing of the gate and its opening the heavy sound of the metal lock the moment it slides again to close
the episode of going

if i really have to note how many left for good and how many came bringing hope
i know how scary shall it be sometimes my fears haunt me

those goodbyes without promises
those leavings
untimely

i close the gate again i listen to the sound of the locking somehow i am glad it is still the two of us comforted
by our sense of privacy

RIC S. BASTASA
The Scorpion That Bites...

how could you ever tell a scorpion not to bite?

and how many times will it answer you that it is never easy
to have such kind of
hands?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Scream Of Edvard Munch

i look at it again. I have read the story how the scream came about as an important piece of art in our history.

it was said that he visited his sister in a mental asylum located at the foot of a hill in the nearby creek in one of the far towns in Norway.

he was sad and had all the pity for his sister.
He felt inside his heart the eruption of Krakatoa her saw the picture how 2/3 of the island was missing by the thickness of the lava.

He saw the mummy of Peru. It was another sad story.

He pieced them together. Fused them all with his own kind of misery.
He was on a small boat heading home.

Nature screams. The volcano. The mummy. And the misery raging inside him.
He screamed.
There was no sound at all.
The two shadows behind him did not bother at all.
The fires behind him are threatening to burn the boat him inside it.

No one hears anyway.
Except us, who keeps on seeing the painting.
It was stolen sometime.
We keep on recalling too.

Somehow we see our own miseries
and we too scream silently
in front of our monitors now.
In a cyberspace that is too empty and huge

and again, no one hears.
Try screaming.
Now.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Scream That I Have Seen And Cannot Forget....

we were in that boat behind us is an erupting volcano vomiting lava

we have to jump out the sinking boat and there is that man

without everything, eyes, nose, ears,
hair
teeth, except a huge mouth like an inflated balloon

then nothing but waves and silence....

RIC S. BASTASA
Who wants to show pain?
no one wants to show it and be pitied pity can kill makes you shrink like dough pressed

with a hammer

everyone wants to show a happy face on the road people walk and each smiles to
everyone

and when the back of the body steals a distance

everyone is back to their serious faces again twisted lips, crashing teeth misshaped jaws gnashing fingers

early that evening

i show pain in the mirror like the palms
of my hands

the mirror laughs it is telling me it is not me and i look funny with it it says i do not fit well as a beggar of affection it teases me

the way sissies sashay on the shiny tiles of the malls
that when in pain i look like a liar an old Pinocchio
with a broken wooden nose reaching the door from the arm of my chair
to the hands of the railing

i insist that this time it is true my tears are rolling like a river on the tributaries of my cheeks the mirror
they are boulders
now

the mirror
finally screams for help of some nearby shadows

i am another movie.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea & The Anonymous Traveler

for every step that i travel
your liquid tongue
erases it,
when i look back
all i see is another clean and empty
slate of sand

you cool my weary feet
you refresh
my body with your breeze

i am traveling again
somewhere
into another exciting unknown

IT is you again
always a mystery

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea And The River....

the dialogue has its twists and turns it is like a river winding its way to the sea, and those who pass by do not really notice that they have stepped upon the running water for eight times already, just like our talk, it is going round and round less sounder,
so trivial, it is always revolving around a mountain, wanting to escape into the sea
and meet the salt of its body, but until when?
there is so much delay for our real purpose until it rains and the river bloated its body and the sea showed a tsunami and everything we have and adore
are all in an instant taken away because we do not really know what we want
perhaps that is the way we really want it not meeting
always going....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea And You....

we're big enough to make a decision like
this

when we finally find it more comforting to be just with this self

the chatter of the birds become disturbing
the cares of other people unnecessary
memories serve no better old friends fade like old friends there is no need for words in solitude

you float in a silky sea above you seagulls

the winds are your friends now and so are the patient sands and so are the coconut trees the hammock most of all tempting you to close your eyes once more

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea As An Erotic Form

you see the waves as tongues not for talking because the sea for centuries have been deprived of words it hums and suffuses you with its rhythm like it is a heart beating the heart of a woman deprived of her own love stories you listen and and then the sea with its vast patience molded by a hundred years of storms and tsunamis shall listen to you, and then you love it and then you bathe with its salt and silence you go deeper trying to find its heart there is none.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea As It Reaches The Shore

it is the art of the waves that fold and unfold unnecessarily by its nature joyous about its arrival from the depths to the shallowness of the water to the silence of the sands.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea Grass And The Waves Of The Sea

i went to the beach this afternoon, the coconut plants that i have planted months ago on the shoreline have grown taller,
the grasses have spread,
and the shoreline has increase its size as though the sea is avoiding a confrontation between sand and
roots,
as though the sand is finally winning against the tide,
the waves are calm,
as though, they miss the leaves of the sea grasses, unperturbed by the beauty that it has not seen on the depths of its being,

i wonder, if the feeling is the same with you, i am the patch of land wanting to own a part of the sea you are the sea, and i think, you miss me too.

RIC S. BASTASA
in my study
today i am given the rules concerning the mouth of the sea
how it sends the waves
like tongues to deposit some corals on the shore which to my imagination has become the lap of my lustful creation
on the other hand the two rivers nearby meet the sea and too give their gifts of soil, sand and silt all offerings to finally create an island
that all the parties now dispute
as exclusively owned by either
never neither

sometimes it is Mother Nature that creates the problem and people die.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea In The City Where The Boat Sinks

in the sea of the city the boat leaks and you are inside it there is no fear
for inside you is a lifesaver you swim to the shore of your comfort zone and take a look finally at the boat that sinks gobbled by all the mouths of the people whose faces you cannot recall anymore

they are taking nothing from you as you have none
to boast anyway

when you go home
you tell her about it

she says nothing
knowing you
from the very beginning of that page of the novel that you have written which she has read
after your wedding

the house is warm
and the air from the sea begins to blow
the light in the room is switched off
and shadows
recently gone begin to moan

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea In Us

i am talking about water, always there is a shortage of what we have in the mountain

the terrains are cracking and the buds
and roots have always been thirsty and strangled

we sit on the floor of this house with big windows looking at the vast expanse of hills overlooking the very wide sea

it seems that everything in our world is sea, or sea -ike, everything so deep and blue
and so silent with all the mysteries
something we still do not understand and then you begin to talk about love that we do not have much something is lacking and something in us speaks about

this hunger and thirst this emptiness that all these resources cannot fill

like the sea i am so silent i am like an ocean not making any sense of waves
like you
we shall also be like the sea silenced by all these mysteries
The Sea Is My World

the little world
in symbols becomes a comfortable pillow

years coiling like
the chambers of the nautilus

secrets abound under a canopy
of leaves

green eyes brown hands
silk palms

i thrive in symbolism now i tell allegories
to you

it is best for me that you do not
understand

for by then when light
comes
i shall be hurt again

how can you
understand a smile atop a giggle

the loudness of your laughter shall drown me

and i become a boat
deep under
the sea is my world
i eat silence

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea Is Still So Far Away....

a stare has to end

it jumps into a river

you touch a nipple

reflecting the face of love and now you are mesmerized with the feeling of rivers

running on bodies of rocks on edges of cliffs the sea still far away...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea Is Very Calm This Morning

the sea is very calm this morning the talisay leaves are not disturbed by the breeze my mama is sitting on a bench combing her long hair saying nothing
under a tree
beside our little nipa hut facing the horizon

on the other side is a big house whose iron gate is painted red a big man comes out rushing as though he is chasing someone holding a stick on his hand shouting at the child playing with my small brother inside the yard
of our house

the child of that man is frightened and runs as fast as he can back to their house his father catches him beating his legs
with the stick on his right hand

i can still hear the cry of that frightened child from the very beating of his own papa what a mess!

i could have told you once again about the peace and the calm and the quiet of the sea on a morning like this but it is not true anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea Of Words

he could have gone to the sea and start collecting the shells again bring each to his ear
to remember

he is stuck in this sea of words picking some syllables to hear a not so distinct sound and to hear a song from his youth he arranges the words again like some old furniture in the home

in the sea of words he splashes
drinks the salt of this earth and begins to drown himself

sooner shall he breathe again and swallow
the whole of the sea and the continents
of this world
as one of the atoms in this vast expanse of nothing but space

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sea This Morning.....

drastic this morning is mother's silk the one which she used in her wedding which grandma treasured
the boats sail peacefully the fishermen cast their nets for the morning catch a white dog is still sleeping on the warm sands
the boy is waiting for the strong wind for him to fly his new kite made by his father who left them last night to find work in the city the seagulls are not in the sky some dead fish float in the water there is not footprint left on the sands of this shore the waves of the sea keep on erasing them what is this fear about things that do not last?
this fear of not having loved that much?
even thoughts are messy and one who reads what you have written
are always asking: where is the sun what is the point? why are you making things scatter in the air?
a caterpillar pretends as a snake for fear that another crazy creature may share on its leaf.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Seagull And The Koi

'are you the
koi who wants to fly?

go back to the yellow river' the seagull reminds the koi

and with a wiggle on its beak, the seagul
continues-

'you will never make it here'

and with a point
finally impresses
upon the koi

'because
the sky is ours'

RIC S. BASTASA
The Search For Peace Is Never Ending

the search for peace is never ending

the way the white doves are thrown to air is never a perfected flair

our peace is just another temporary arrangement as they gather more arms and take more territories their mind is fixed to take us all and then shout to the world that they have finally attained their independence

and what is independence? it comes only when we all die for it is only at that moment when they all live.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Seasons Change

the fields remain the same the trees are taller this time
the seasons change
same stones on the road from time to time on same mornings you meet faces whose names you forget you keep on listening to an old song as you walk your way alone home as it will always be home.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Second Gargoyle

You were at the window
When I left you
In anger

I looked back
Someone projected
From the gutter
Of that same Stinking building

Throwing a spout of rain from a Mouth not Really grotesque
But it was more than an animal,

no doubt
it was you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Second Lover...

there are mountains with the power of air pockets that suck planes and they are surprisingly not ever found not a doll or a shoe,
somehow everything is given in the losing somehow you are like that mountain and i am that plane that gladly falls on your lap happily dying

RIC S. BASTASA
The Second Part: Misleading An Idea Like A Blind Man

my left hand touches the right side of my neck rubbing it and then slides its fingers to my ear i open my mouth to signify that i long for sleep i put my hands on top of my unwashed hair the day’s schedule is hectic like the way a juggler pleases our eyes i open my mouth letting the wall see my egg white teeth and then i close my mouth again sipping air inside my lungs my eyes are like heavy clouds low to the ground becoming fog to the grass

i am sleepy
but i do not want to sleep

i am teasing time since it has no underwear

RIC S. BASTASA
The Second Poem

the woman wears a long gown covering her toes
she veils her face and neck there is no way that you can see her veins her back is covered with fox hair
she wears gloves and her mouth is covered with silk cloth
she looks like a mummy though fashionable in some sense less the context of
death

get nearer she has a very important matter to reveal

RIC S. BASTASA
The Second Woman

When I first met her, she was coy and meek And too kind
I like her, and she likes me too,
And she was aging and needed comfort For her waning days,
She brought along a younger woman One with whom I can Truly make love, and where we can be
That is her motive, Productive.
She is happy and waits for the gift A child to be frank But God must have something against her What she does what she is There is no baby for her
There is no gift
From heaven

Her anger is super, and she plans to take Away from me,
Feeling defrauded, she wants to Take back everything: this house, this car, this Chair, and slowly she carts away my parts: my hands My heart, my arms, my toes, my chest, my head And we struggle, I cannot allow this thievery, I must Not allow this misery; I am taking every lost part back.
She must be stopped.
She says she owns the younger woman and she Must be returned back
At once.
She takes her
And she will die.
She does not care.
She takes what she wants to.
She will be coming back to take what she owns.

She takes one step inside my door.
I have a gun and she is not superwoman.
The Secret

the knight in full armor sits by the side of the window facing the dawning of his time his honor at stake as the morning sun peeps at the black shadows of the mountain must he tell her now?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Secret Of Our Relationship.....

if you want to find me search yourself first and it is only when you find yourself can you find me too.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Secret Paradox Of Giving

you hold it in your hand tightly, your hand like a ball somethings is crushed and lost, turning to dust, i must tell you, the secret of keeping the one that you love most, when you hold it, does not breathe, it cannot be yours totally, you must know the paradox, to make it yours completely, you must learn to give it away, carefully, whatever that be, wherever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Secret Place

i only have the key to that door. i can open it anytime and stay there for a while away from the crowd

away from the daily occurrences it is a closed door conference with myself where i talk and listen at the same time it is dark but it is peaceful it is small but everything in me is there: whole and intact

i only have the key and i am not opening

or when i open it i keep it closed that way it is sacred as sacred as my secret

it is holy
as holy as my soul

it is a mystery
for all the things that i worship

it is mine
and you are not welcome.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Secret Pond

you know the way to the secret pond of my heart meet me there and stay there for a while

do you not notice the wild grass growing there?
think of me as the unintended think of me as the wanton beauty of the grass that plans nothing to spread anywhere think of me as a free vine bringing soon a flower to you lips do you notice the grey stones blunt and the pebbles black? think of me as a certain hardness uncracked by the pain of infidelities, think of me as pebbles that you through after some sweet confidences after some utility think of me as a stone that may kill a mocking bird do you notice the stagnant waters there? still, and quiet, and not flowing it is what my love is all about, no noise, no words, no transferring from one brook to another do you notice my absence? be patient, wait for a while.

soon i may come but like a cloud above that secret pond i may just be a drifter, a passer by, a vagabond, a wisp of air, a hush a ghost, a phantom, an image, a shadow, a mirage.

yes, it will still be sad and lonely.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Secret Sin, The Concealed Pleasure

what appear outside the body
this house of flesh

mostly are the acceptable & at least
what the eyes can tolerate, at least expense of repercussion,
the conformity
parlance

admirable, kissing the woman you say you love and marrying not only her but her family as well, the banquet and the rituals, all perfect a sir, a madam

no turbulence of the heart nothing to
a ripple,
in the hidden depths of human vacuous
longings

those that you cannot say but ultimately giving you indescribable pleasure

you hide but soon
like a second personality speaking during the night
a shape takes you silently into the place where multiplied
ecstasies
spread a view
invites you
to drink and dance and sleep with
it
not sleep really if sleep be just considered as another
obvious metaphor for something
obscene

by recklessness you give in
of course hypocritically
allegedly coerced
by the set of circumstances beyond your restraints,

and indeed
those that have not lied begin to concoct whatever possible
beautiful
excuses that abound
like a bouquet of assorted flowers

saying i cannot imagine having done it

(i can still imagine the magnanimity of the intricate and
detailed design of embroidered pleasure
in that expensive water-bed)
saying how on earth
have i done this exclaiming trying to eradicate the stain of bliss
(or sin and asking how can sin exist on such a beautiful feeling?) it was good, it was extremely

beautiful
i have experience heaven i have seen the face of God in simple prose

you go home devastated though no one knows
except the one who also live in another
island
the one who slept with you and licked your armpit

you ask: Was it worth it?
conscience, shut up!
that is now how you end up like.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Secret Visit Of The Old Self...

i cannot leave
the point of my origin
the place and person that you want me
to erase like a bad memory of my youth

i compromise leaving it and think of another the one that you always speak about

days, years, until i have seen my white hair
and felt the tiredness of
my arms

but i shall return to it
again
for it is my home
i should have told you that without it
and without you knowing it i could not be here
with you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Secrets Of Our Love....

it is enough
that the secrets
lay there
inside the coffin

the shreds of our
flesh
the sanctity of our broken bones

it is enough
that those who do not really know
shed their tears
as offering for a good ending

the silence of the flowers
as adornments
the final steps
feeding towards the grave

do not tell what are those what we did how we did them

for what they do not know
shall not hurt them let those who are alive and happy
remain to be so before we are finally forgotten
The Secrets That You Keep

it is when everyone leaves the room when everyone goes to their respective places that one gets to account for the secrets the fingers begin to count the heart to beat and the body undresses its own skin one faces the mirror and sees the skeletons

in the closet the new clothes are wary to be given attention
'me now? ' i need a structure for my clothes so i may have the shape you choose, as one by one you take the cartilages and flesh some toes and nails to compose yourself again one takes the mask

the one that they shall love and the clothes acceptable for the next party and when they come the conversations begin

'how nice have you grown' and you compliment too 'well this has always been me' and then you sip the tea both of you are suspicious but who cares? the party begins.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Secrets We Keep

we keep secrets, i keep mine, like some jewels inside my heart, they glow in the night even on a very slight stab of light and i keep on hiding them, covering them with so much tenderness like silk cloth and cord keeping a love letter that i have written (unmailed) many years ago, i keep my secrets like i keep my life, like the way i keep my friendship with you for years and years, these secrets keep me alive, giving me the desires to live a good life you sometimes ask me what these are and i give you the hint about my oceans of choices, and you say, these secrets must be anything and i am telling you, no, they are not anything, because there is no such inghting as anything when you know how to love and be still true no matter what, even if you get old and no one remembers you and cares for you, when what is near you is nothing but just the grave and some flowers for the dead,

sigh

you have yours too, keep them, these secrets, treasure them, more than you treasure yourself,
these secrets are the meanings you put to your life not really figments of your imagination, or illusions, or air, or vapor they are something beyond that, let us say, these are the spiritual ones ask me more, nothing in particular, these are those that exist in the ocean of choices, and they are more than anything, if fact they can be everything, but for one thing, let me assure you all these have this ingredient, this element, this main part:

it is still love in there, and the rest could be anything in your mind, that is the secret.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sect Of Our Own Poetics

we were never the poets in their list at their dinner party they shake their heads they rule and they lay down the rules their laws are theirs and we are the outlawed ones but who cares? there's too much war on words already there's just too many who died and who pretended they died as we sail on our waters we continue to sing with our paddles our boats arriving somewhere on a land where we put our feet again and run and run around this island now which we name as our own here the sun shines for us and for us, too, all alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Seduction

down
the lake is silky happiest morning
after
the night's tryst
with the moon
and stars....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Seduction Of The Married Man

you evade me but then i suddenly
look at you and you smile and then turn your head away and then you walk away towards the place where i first met you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Seed And The Fruit

sometimes the seed wonders
after it has seen its fruit if the same
has come from it

sometimes the fruit
is more luscious
sweet and
crunchy,
well loved and
sought, and expensively priced

than what the seed
has expected

for all we know, mortals as we
nature also makes the surprises
of its genes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Seiges Of Dusts...

too tiny to be seen yet on their one final storm all is covered the surroundings
breathless
the towers of eyes cannot see
the grasses nothing but a desert sand in one siege
the whole world learns the powers of dusts
and their returns

RIC S. BASTASA
The Self In The Mirror.....

the best and most
solid oneness actually is not the family that you always take pride with,

Cain and Abel
they are real disappointments

you know what i mean

take yourself
and mold it well solidity it like a fortress against the pirates

stand your ground
face the only enemy you have and then befriend it

look at yourself in the mirror that is the best answer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Self Within Myself

the most terrifying part of course was when they all left the hall, a friend with his wife carrying their son, another friend who just got married and intimate with his wife, and some people whom i cannot remember

anymore
perhaps those who serve the food and drinks and those who clean the mess after that early dinner

the silence is catacomb-like i can hear the wind
i begin to notice the leaves of summer falling from the branches of brown trees,

it is as though the funeral is over and what is left is just the silence of the dead

i take a deep breath and then another i do not want to leave yet i want to check what happens next i am trying to find out if i still live within myself and if we can still talk as friends

when the rest of who came hereleave or when all of them are dead too....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Self....

it does not take one day
to make it,
neither is it a product of pure invention
it carries with it the years
like an age concentric on the inner
tree
it cannot just be ignored it will always be there the heart, the mind, the soul,
how can one hate it?
and how can one so love it well?

no one thinks
the perhaps there is none.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Self....(Edited For A Clerical Error)

it does not take one day
to make it,
neither is it a product of
pure invention
it carries with it the years
like an age
concentric on the inner
tree
it cannot just be ignored
it will always be there
the heart, the mind, the soul,
how can one hate it?
and how can one so love it well?

no one thinks
that perhaps there is none.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Self-Depreciated One.

what they
all hate is self-deprecation

all as usual
want to give you what all expect

same happy form
one reproducing the other using the same formula all over again

who wants to laugh at himself?
who want to
stab one's heart?

unless you are
the subject of a mental study, unless you lost all hope unless all you want
is to die

here, we are in a party and everyone wants to be the center of attraction
it is normal

rejection however is massive. No one's talking.
Everybody knows
however
this fact of life
millions of love
unrequited.
billions of people
hating one another.
a few feeling the superiority of their own race.
trillions want to destroy
those who are greater than them.

the self-depreciated
one is the humblest.
here in an island
he thrives in peace.
dried fish. Yam.
and lots of sea and
sun.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Selfish World

oh, you did not notice it it was just all about you and nothing about the other absorbed in your own vacuum the other does not exist even the flowers in the field passed spring and yet you did not notice how they bloomed and wilted why just you? did you not see the bloated body of the pig floating on the river washed down to the sea yes, why was it just you? and what about the mass graves of those whom you might have known somewhere in that university?

you are all moisture absorbed by the pillow of that window

you are all tears
confined in a hanky
your sorrow is not theirs
and yours is yours
too alone

it is fair you say in this selfish world what matters most is only the self, i and
me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Selfishness Of Kindness

the truth is
i do not think of you
even when we meet and you hug me
i do not think of you
even when you make me live again or so you think
i do not think of you when you think you carry me as a burden and that you are in suffering i still do not think of you do not ask me why it is you who thinks for me you have carried away everything from me that goodness is choking me that kindness is killing me since i cannot move

alone by myself
since you think of me as helpless good-for-nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Selfishness Of My Own Privacy.....

anywhere i go
i promised you
that i shall write a word or two

for me, just for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Self-Preservation Instinct Of Poetry

it is in poetry where you can finally say what you do not want others to understand doubt saves us from the pain of the obvious and confusion creates an illusion of a rainbow it is a monologue

and all the words that turn into sentences are for myself alone, it survives me for another day, and another hour, indefinitely

it shortens my agonies and the more i talk to myself the more i understand myself definition makes limits and it is comforting to an unaccounted distance when you read it, you become too far from me which serves my purpose so well i become intimate to myself and love is grown, relationship bonded it is just between me and myself unloading the heavy stories that accumulate like stones in my chest

i have ciphers, i have landmarks, i end somewhere where you can never see me as me, but as someone else.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Self-Realization Of Dr. Ex...

dr. ex
subdued himself
he has mastered
to keep his mouth shut,
his hands are well placed in his belly as though he is constantly in prayer,
since then after he mastered himself
he ceased to talk about himself or other people,
dr. ex
knows that he is about to die and so he travels around
the world
trying to know that is there that he should never regret
while being alive.

dr. ex
is dead but he never really died...

how can he die?
he never lived
somehow

RIC S. BASTASA
The Self-Righteous People In This World

it is indeed disappointing how other persons who claim to know what love and care is, preach and dictate us, humans as we are on the same category, humans too as they are,
he is,
and like me, all limited minds, what to love, how to love, and when,
'to be more loving,
kinder' or
'change for the better'

haven't they looked at themselves how in this manner they have caused so much disappointment on the other who knows himself much better than all these loving, kinder, self-righteous wolves-in-sheep-clothing animals

in fact, they have become my own demons.
How unfair
how sad!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sentence

We are all loved
by God.
There is no fear
We are all loved so well
by God.

When one feels unloved
We are all affected
We do not hurt those who still feel unloved

We are all loved by God
The same love
That we share for those still untouched....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sentence

as you are praying in the altar i am urinating in the CR and then you fix the bed folding the blankets and dusting off the pillows i stop there for a while for i have been thinking about dust you think that i am catering in to these deadly thoughts or granting that they are not why think of rest when every idea of this world is always labeled with activity

you run away
that is a good idea connoting always an action you cry
that 's drama still watched by the masses who like to shed tears for the star of the show

there is no choice you tell me except to surge to invade
to move on

yes that is the sentence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Separation And The Freedom

when she finally decides to leave him he thought that the world ends there is no pain like this he talks to the mouth inside his chest when will this chaos leave him? he asks the wind and the rain he walks upon the grass spreading free on the gentle hills he rests under the forest trees and spends a lot of his time talking to the full moon till it is eaten by the dark sky he sleeps in caves and makes alliances with the stalactites and the stalagmites he eats the worms and borrowed some drops of the honey from the bees he talks to the trees and the clouds and worships the sun and has become a part of this universe he becomes strong like the rock and stands tall conquering his pain like the cliff then the right season has come for him to fly for he has grown wings and traces his roots to the genealogy of birds, he is finally free at the end, the gods free him from the pains of his humanity his love unrequited has died.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Serengeti Spotted Beast

spots like giant big black lice all over his body specks of long whiskers claim the dominion of his mouth that hides the power of his sharp teeth spotted as sin
yet well revered in the jungle of lawlessness
where restlessness for sure is virtue at its topmost hierarchy
to kill, and eat, to be full and still bloodthirsty very much like to the dovetails of my society

RIC S. BASTASA
The Serial Lover....

you first utter the world love and you take hold of its bounty like a flower still on its stalk by the morning sun, until you pluck it and then you carry it as your own and along the way the beginning of cruelty as like a child you take it away petal by petal until what you have in your hand is a headless stalk, and then you utter love again and then another and she comes across you thinking about love, about you, at first love and then the beginning of violence, you grip her and she is choked into the last word: love love still, love forevermore until she is gone and you continue this journey of guilt, one flower to another, headless stalk, and here you are: a stranger talking to another woman in this village.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Serious Poet In Canada

she pays attention to the details what happens after the storm she even follows where the geese are migrating
listen to their loud sounds and begin to write about them
the problem is
she cannot find the words to describe reality like a fog that settles downtown which from a distance looks like a mirage floating in the desert but really, nothing is more real that what we feel even though we were not there even though things are not really what they appear to be emotions become rivers anger becomes rock confusion becomes clouds cities become dots and hesitation are dashes

whatever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sermon Of Fr. Edgar A.

at the wake of atty. M there fr. edgar a. preaches about the fact that when one dies
one does not hold
a bankbook
in her hands

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sermon Of The Priest

He is kind. His life is all ruled by the Kindness of His Embrace for those who are Rejected. She is cruel and strict and claims That this is what morality is all about. Virtue is not equated with Kindness.

He loves the wounded kid and to Her Whose basis for the Accusation is her own Certainty

She knows people she proudly says. aND dESpite the Doubt she claims That he is the Priest and the Boy is the Molested One.

How unkind for Certainty to Thrive Sans the Proof Without the Sight and Smell.

At the End she sits under a Tree. The Snow Falls. And then she cries.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sex Molester

so it started with a hug and we who were innocent then took the hug as nothing but a hug we do not remain that stupid enough not to feel the dirt inside the hearts of sex molesters.

so the next time you hug me, prepare your face

i have fists.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sexy Neighborhood...

summer has changed
it is wet
but not as wild as you,
you never change
always wet
despite the summers...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shadow Of Doubt

all the faces of great jurists fall except those favored ones who know what right is
and how this right is applied in the correct context of independence

i am shocked
and has just recovered got to move on like a man whose wife left recently for another drunkard.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shadow Of The Stone

at the end of the day you fall in love with the shadow of the stone
you want to take it with you in your mind
it is not the stone not the one with so much weight it is the one that fades with darkness that was too beautiful in the light in the middle of heat that captures you
not the one that you can touch with your hands not the one that hits your head that makes you bleed...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shadow Of The Unknown Past

a shadow rises from the sea that night when the moon was weary the shadow drips and comes near me and without any word touches me i offer a glass of wine to keep it warm to keep it bold so that it may soon speak the word the word that i have never heard before when the sea was calm when the place is deserted the shadow tries to show the face i love the body i long the memory i had been for long wanting to still keep

because i always remember and then the shadow does the trick which i have long embraced and accepted it still leaves me
in this darkness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shadow...

it lives upon someone else's reality, it cannot call itself
the self,
this shadow thriving upon the light of the moon
outside
the mind...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shadows Of The Hills

the shadows of the hills
cast themselves upon the body of the running rivers they hope to run with them they wish to escape to the boundless sea the hills are unmoved they are all silent and numb the sun comes angrily at noon and then decides to annihilate the unwanted someone so fat and ugly under the tree shows with all glee about the death of the hills' shadows

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shadows Of The Reeds

at night, upon the light of the moon,
the shadows of the reeds
float on the river

it shivers
but as usual can't move away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shallow Grief

perhaps your grief is not that deep when the stone is thrown it hits the floor and makes much sound

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shallow Ones....

do not underestimate
those trivial ones
serve you when the most important ones desert you,

the sins sometimes you commit
simply because there is no better use
for the
quest of holiness
when divinity leaves you in doubt you cling to anything that can help you leave because self-annihilation is not a choice.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shallow Waters

on an afternoon
you swear you want something light this time you want to be like some clouds those happy ones
those that change faces and shapes and colors every second something slippery to our senses you dislike permanence and stability
you opt for the floating flimsy things a leaf floating on the water a boy wading on the shore afraid of the depths like the way his mother watches over him you say
you are tired of these philosophical pursuits as though thinking hurts as though every word becomes an argument you like something fashionable like gowns and the latest creations of some gay designers
i am firm and i stay on the depths of my thoughts and i am drowning and as you well see i do not need your help i like this pain of fathoming whatever is there is mine alone and now step out from the yard of my life get out of my fence
i live here and this is my territory this is my loneliness and i am proud of it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shams Of Charms....

i always come back to you surrender all my arms as you embrace me like all those nights when you keep on telling me that someone too loves you truly, once, twice
many years ago
or about a month
recently, one is simply uncertain about love's itinerary

(or is it love? who minds what words are, what they mean?) same story with me and i keep repeating them and i know
you do not really listen well
enough
thinking that i am one of those congenital liars composing poems for the nights

and we ride on that same boat to fantasy dreamboats of rainbow colors after which we disembark as strangers again as we whisper the usual nothings

we know
we know how to manage these kind of
pretenses

a masked party of naked selves on the the bed of roses and (sins)

did we call it sin and in such a whimper?
what is a whimper?
a whim? capering whims?
caprices of mending wounds

something is good and it is neither bad or good it just makes us more human like white breathing newly born worms scattered beneath the rotten roots of palm trees surviving

but anyway
this is it... goodbye and take care for we shall meet again whatever name we call ourselves

i am Gregor and you are Jenny
and we do not know where we live and where we are going...

(shh, aren't we charmingly sham?)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shape Of Our Faces.....

do the silence
was like the empty
glass that you broke on that tiled floor

and once broken
it can not be repaired

you gather the pieces of that silence and finds the shape of our faces

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shape Of Solitude With The Red Ants

it is easy to become a cloud

a mist and then even be part of the dust

it is the shape of solitude assuming the bursting of some past joys it is this feeling of leaves falling from a dead tree

silently reaching the dry ground where the red ants are waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shapes Of Dread

I've known some shapes of dread, someone tells me, i can always decide against dread, or erase fear, that i can be a magician, and then be confident again, as easy as waving a magic wand where rabbits suddenly come out from my black hat,

i confront dread, i paint fear i have them all in canvass with all the colors that i choose mostly shades only of black and white and too preoccupied with the circles of the mind like the scream of the mouth the shock in the eyes the breaking of the ears

i put them all in the gallery of my days and someone comes along glossy with youth and vibrant with inexhaustible energy surging like a waterfall
from the sky
a tornado of force and with calmness and perhaps paying respect for my efforts, a scrutiny is made with gentleness touching the texture of the paint and admiring the etches of gray and spots of emotions still on the cloth,

he quips, ' amazing pain, what grace! what bless! ' there is this sense of humility in me this regret why despair is there when in fact, it would have been unnecessary and i could have moved on with my life with so much ease, verve and like a tornado i could have destroyed them all and never come back for anyone or anything else....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shaping Of These Pots Of Mud

friend, we still decide what we become though what we are
is shaped by
them there is a time when we awake and have the sharpness in our senses
we sculpt a face a body we articulate a soul we use this will and we will it we become because we like to be there are things-in-themselves within-themselves that grow and become parts of us but that is not all neither is it the end of something hopeless our hands shape the pot our mouths say the words at this point
let us say
we are fulfilled.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shell Castle.....

i am obliged to live in this castle of an empty shell

my mind, the sun lights till nighttime
for i am moonless in my roof...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shell For A House Of The Flesh

A SHELL hides its flesh away from the flesh that thrives on the flesh of others hard stubborn house that keeps something so fragile

soft and sweet
not because it keeps all these
wonders
to itself like a narcissus but because it has the power to destroy what lies so peaceful

what is placid and innocent it shall not divulge it shall not devour

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shell....

i once had a beautiful body
many beg to touch it
many want to sleep with me
even without any responsibility

i look at myself
in the mirror
grateful for this body

i had conceit
like a prince of arrogance

time is my enemy
my body wears out skin is loose
and bones become brittle
there is a squeak
when i walk

sometimes i regret having this
body
since i never had used it
the way others
want it
if they had it

i tell myself
that it would have been better
if this body
is the body of the one i love

it would have been more useful
perhaps lovelier
and i would have been happier

my body is silent and indifferent it has no independent mind of its own it is one of those shells where the hermit crab dwells

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ship According To The Gospel Of Arsenio

A ship in the harbor is safe But that is not the reason why ships are built That is not what ships are

They are made to sail
To go not to stay

They are designed To float

“Safety, security and survival Are not the goals of our lives” “Life is an adventure Not maintenance”

At its end
The ship is always for Sinking.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shoe Argument....

there is this connection his feet are too small for the shoes and he is having a hard time fitting in what he expects is something different something that someone may find too usual

the shoes are always thought of as smaller than that of the feet

i am thinking of another point what if we have no feet at all?
and the shoes are all too expensive?

same thing perhaps.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shoes Of Life

Now i will be wearing those shoes

mother wore it first then father
it knows no gender bound by no time
most of them say those shoes hurt

now that i am wearing one of those shoes
a black pair with mud on its soles

i shall eat my words and happily shall i dance (they hurt so bad but i must be true to myself)

see me dancing day and night till i fall (sleepless in pain)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Short Story Of The Droll

a droll little man with a quiet
tongue-in-cheek kind of humor

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shorter Version....

make it shorter
sort of a surfer,

when to cut from the gut

time is an eagleake is fickle.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shortest Moment That The Butterfly Tries To Speak

how many flutters of its wings is its lifetime? not a hundred, this butterfly with blue shaking lines on its wings some dots of black on the lower tip some flaps of dust as you hold it.

we love to see it freely hovering from one flower to another blending with its colors, it is not trying to hide anything beautiful, it is showing itself, beautiful butterfly, how gentle, soft to our hearts as we watch it there is no sound of its wings and its graceful feeding on the nectars then it rests on a leaf. we leave it there.

the wind last night was strong. we see the leaf where it stayed on the pebbled ground. there are no wings. there is no trace where the blue butterfly is.

how many flutters did that butterfly make? such a brief moment, yet so beautiful that is the message of the life of its lost wings.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shouts Of The Maddening Crowd

on this day i hear them the maddening crowd shouting inside an enclosure of the town betting on who wins this time the winner that takes it all and the loser
who cries alone

it is the same crowd who tells you who you must be what to do what to be to be just like one of them in greed and gamble they have a thousand eyes and their mouths speak to you in unison

dare not run against their wishes lest you be an outcast with all you possess stripped away from you your name your past and if you stay a little longer your future

today, it is all over, i am planning my escape to the place of my silence where i can speak and hear what i am speaking where i can be brave where at last i can just be myself there i am an island that even you cannot touch

RIC S. BASTASA
The Show

i have seen this dalmatian, dancing, and taking rightly all the cues of his master.

he adds three plus three equal six. Six barks.
and his tails waggle
for the correct answer.

the people get excited watching the dalmatian, trying to speak the language of numbers and a human display of his emotions.

at the park a woman kisses a man. Lips to lips. The man's hands holding her butt.
The hard bone protrudes.
The palms are wet.

the dalmatian stops his acts.
and people too stop watching him.

they are watching the real show. to lips. Hands and hearts Bold at the park. The grasses are clapping their hands. And the clouds laugh and do not sun pockets a smile. Thumbs up The trees signal.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Show...

in this Act, of this Scene you are not the Actor, you are
the Spectator,
they will use the language that you do not understand it is not the first time that they do this,
 neither is it the first time that you will hear them,
they have been here for so many years, but you were then so busy
and you speak the language of the restless, and the fenced,
the world of cubicles

you are not the Actor, you are
the Spectator,
the language that
you do not understand

it is not the first time that
they do this,
 neither is it the first time that
you will hear them,
they have been here for so many
years, but you were then so busy
and you speak the language
of the restless, and the
fenced,
the world of cubicles

either is it the first time that you will hear them,
they have been here for so many
years, but you were then so busy
and you speak the language
of the restless, and the
fenced,
the world of cubicles

when the Curtains fall and when the other Spectators clap when their eyes close and when there hands are put crossing their breasts then the Show begins to unfold and then Everyone will be lost.

The Shrink And The Brink

he has always an explanation for what we feel what we are he says have roots and he can always trace the reasons and from where we must listen and then we can start living whole again he knows how shattered are we and he has always his incantations: Freud says this and Jung and Erica and Erickson, and Watson and Pavlov i sit on the couch and we keep on talking i am in a trance and i go back to my childhood and there he was the hand guiding me in this play a reenactment that points where the real problem lies incontinence, instability, bed wetting, sexual fantasies unsolved fixations, the phallus and the vulva, the fingertips and biting of the nails slip of the tongues, he is so unforgiving and then he scribbles a lot of things on paper prescriptions for the day: a stroll on the beach, a conversation with someone who died a journey to a dream, a soliloquy, a dialogue of the spirits of the trees and the mountains the sea goddess, the nymphs on the flowers, the fawns and the gorgons, the dragons and the cyclops, medusa and the stones, i have all them in mind my hands tremble, my feet are shaky and here comes the shrink handing me the tablet and the drink: you just don't die, you suffer, you must embrace divine light, and be patient, prostrate, sleep more on the couch, follow my hypnosis.

i like the composure of the shrink, he is patient with my pretenses, ... at the brink.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shrink Of The Lonely Household...

she will mistake
art as a form of disorder it is not unlikely

she fails you in the Rorschach test
where butterflies leave from the frame of a page and goes somewhere else and there will be more stories of its adventures no longer

warranted by the inkblots of her mind

she takes a closer look at your nose
and count how many breaths are you
making in a minute

she will degrade you
into a candidate for an electric cure
write the names of some capsules for your medication and a letter of recommendation to another psychiatric doctor you are not a poet but a madman eating words drinking ink

barking like a dog
at the wrong tree
of this world
you keep you fragile wisdom shut your mouth pack your belongings & leave the place
and grow your tiny flowers somewhere else.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Shy Flower...

you are a very shy flower
isolated,
one day you cannot excuse yourself
from gratitude,
early morning
you carry one dew
for the sun thanking it for something
that you cannot reveal...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sick Man....

that early morning
bath
triggers it all, and
so without having touch a part
the whole day drags
like a sick man
to its bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sick Man....(2)

that early morning
bath
triggers it all, and
so without having touched a part
the whole day drags
like a sick man
to its bed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sickness

he cannot imagine himself
now
swallowing from pill to pill his stomach becoming more like a pharmaceutical storage cabinet

there is a pill for his numb arms
another pill for his acidic stomach
more pills for him
to sleep
another pill for his throat infection
another one for his allergies
side effects of some drugs that he had been taking

this sickness into death until one day
he refuses any pill not that he cannot pay the bill he is ready for the thrill

RIC S. BASTASA
The Siem Reap Experience

the ruins of siem reap

tell a lot of stories
you get tongue tied in wonder

your mind wanders
to the stars at night

how could it be so cheap and lousy?

the roots start to grow on your feet
and you feel like a temple yourself venerated in antiquity

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sigh.....

i really do not
know
how far has the sigh
of a hornet
gone?

it was planted somewhere
here
beside a stone silence
below
a scattered sky
upon the drifting cloud a butterfly once flapped its wings

as expected wings got broken
something is gone for good

to the amazon river till the danube
into madagascar from belgrade

how did the sigh turn into a song
sang by children with drums and bugles
inside the palace of a dethroned king?

RIC S. BASTASA
talking has become a surplusage when thoughts are like a gathering of old friend in the university where we finished college

there is always an ongoing exchange of what if's or oh my God
is that you?
what happened
to the standard bearer
of 1981?

the lips are like tombs whose openings are closed
recently because the dead body is there resting in eternal peace the room has become a very big ocean for the two of us boats without sails

in the middle of darkness going nowhere

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence Of Borders

there is no escape
in this room with both of us all too willing victims of lust and desire where love has become such a cliche that we do not mind uttering it
anymore
in this lost world words keep their own borders
of silence

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence Of Stone (Revised)

take a stone,
from the beginning it was a stone in form
and color and smell

and stone to stone
it shall be stone
unless you take it
in your hand
and keep it warm in the hold of your palm and take it home with you you talk to it

and then it becomes beyond itself

now
it is not just a stone but your beloved
your lover

you will discover that its silence also speaks in tongues

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence Of The Beauty Of The Flowers In The Middle Of The Storm

we are in deep trouble
we do not however make it worse with the use of any word there is nothing more effective as a solution except this enduring silence

our eyes speak
and shall determine if we are still worth our salt

we follow always the principle of the flowers noiseless in their beauty even in the middle of the storm you can never hear the panic of their sepals the petals may have fallen to the ground yet lips sealed & definitely fate is accepted.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence Of The Morning...

in the land of truth, no one writes and no
one reads,

one simply knows where
love makes its own fire,

one simply knows where
the spirits meet,

the words are not experts eyes become closed to these glories, morning light shy cheeks, pale lips.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence Of The Skies

the silence of the skies is as old as the presence of space expanding engulfing what it sees familiar as they are to chaos resolving to disorder dissipating into another
separate universe

the same silence that i keep to everything i have to everything that i give up there is no more keeping secrets dissolving life unfolding and then gone to join the masses of history the presence is always there the future always as always coming we stand here we stand here we are not waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence Of The Snow

tio peping walks with his grandchild six inches of snow above their feet

it is cold, i suppose, but the smiles of grandpa and grandson thaws the coldness inside their hearts

outside
at night, the fires of tiny stars give enough warmth
to keep some tiny creatures going till the next spring

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence Of You....

silence is a big help when the time for fate comes upon
thuds of the loud
noise of the two horses

in the middle of it you become invincible

your heart becomes a rock
which cannot be penetrated by its arrows

at your back two wings begin to sprout and without any sound you fly towards
the sky
to the beatings of your sigh

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence That Is Mistaken As Arrogance noise speaks to silence

silence keeps
itself

noise leaves
grunting
about arrogance

silence stays
its dignity intact
it sits alone by the window
looking at the road

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence That Is Still Raw

from a tree rooted to discontent the silence is still raw another season of cold is needed to make it ripe make all those leaves turn yellow and then that silence simply falls to the ground like all those leaves rot and become forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence That Was There...

it is the silence
that i love most it is worth it
lady-like, reserved,
cool as they
name her,

on the other side of the euphemism
is the muteness of that mutiny of sorrow

they all come and leave at the same time

but it does not matter it is this that remained wholeheartedly

sincere and healing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence That Wraps

it is the silence that wraps the noise

it is the leaving that puts the knot

we know which is hanged by the beam
of this house

of words,
heavy, and dripping tapping like a rhythm of the measured sound of your poem

as though
someone is sobbing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence Was Like This

it was the kind of silence that even the steps of the ants
can be heard
the flutter of the wings of the butterfly
the falling of the leaf from the tree
touching the blades of the grass
it was like the last ever closing of the eyelids
indeed it was so peaceful
but he was no longer around to tell it to you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silence......

try loving the most beautiful sunset of your life, it will always be yours

and then when you are into the dark side of it all let them imagine once more the color of your fading

the silence....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silent And The Invisible

the atom
has since then resisted
visibility

when you probe
it
you can see it dance

in such a beautiful randomness

that mathematics
cannot measure

it bounces like
happiness

it does not talk about it

neither does it
demand that there be meaning to randomness

i guess it has something to do

with the complete
silence
and its invisibility

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silent Atoms

what we know is that we are already tiny shreds independent atomic particles neutrons some, others positrons from where we come from oh, it gets too complicated the shattered ones too admit they do not know clearly they simply have no information nothing accurate whatsoever and then what happens is that there is a void that attracts us all where we gather but not necessarily voluntary but just the same attracted we may call it random coincidence but it is evident to me as a scientific fact that there is an innate magnetic force and all that is metal in us, iron or whatever become convoluted like a cosmic ball and we like it since we feel the invisible fire and there is this rock & roll in vast space that makes us all orgasmically excited we talk a lot we ask questions and we become inebriated and so loquacious that we do not notice anymore the eventuality that happened to all who once were here: the explosion the big bang bang bang bang and we are scattered again back to our sad, sorrowful particulate state somehow i have learned how to define what loneliness and scattering is or solitude as i may call it now it could be, on the other hand, my 4th of July, my own fireworks where now as a tiny piece, i have become an individual free, though dust, watching the stars and all the other suns & meteors, too dusts of this vast moving universe, this space that accommodates us all: all silent atoms.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silent Care.....(Or The Silent Scare?)

early morning
she goes to church
that night
there was silence
something wrong had been going on

the rain suddenly
pours heavily on the roof

he tell the housemaid to bring an umbrella to the church for her to use in going home after.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silent Hardworker

he arrives
one hour before the desired time opens the door himself without his aide
opens his computer
and tunes in for some jazzy music then to something classical he goes to the sofa takes the pillow
and lays his head and then he closes his eyes this he does
privately inside
his office.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silent Letters....

it did not
and it will definitely not matter if you have read the letter it will stay there always waiting it cares for no one to come by and stop for a while busily thinking about what may come
oh, that letter stays silent and hidden in one of those drawers
in an abandoned house years ago and those who once lived there died peacefully got the best burial ceremonies in town
with all those flowers and candles and crying neighbors

it does not matter
if the burning house eats all those written words and leaves only nothing but ash and the sighs of the past about a love
unrequited.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silent Majority

today i tell myself that the cover of my favorite book needs a change

perhaps i need some thickness something much like the darker blue in Atlantic ocean

the wings of my imagination can be clipped hide them within a cloak of the pages of this book

i can be like any other normal as they say silent, deep, and alone on a shelf

the dust may come like a desert storm
and just like the rest of those who have been here
we can be numb and mindless
and all accepting

and i guess we may become likeable
which we may find disgusting but only for a while disgust is our real content but who shall like it?

we are original in this kind of endeavor
but we cannot proclaim it lest we be burned and then be all forgotten

so for the meantime enjoy our silence savor our concealed presence we are the pages of the book that you read and we have no page
not even a single page for a complaint.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silent Old Woman

she is unthinkable
i still think so for in her hands
lies the bomb that she may throw at her enemies
yet she didn't

she stays in the house
reciting the prayers
offered for her dead ancestors

when she opens the window it is because she likes light to filter warmth between the fibers of her orange curtains

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silent Water That Runs Deep Inside My Eyes.

you have a way
with the metaphor of your affections.

orange and green.
smell and touch.
warmth and peace.

did you eat what you
love?

love could be the root
of that cannibal.

did we ever think of
this?

eating someone to make everything there your everything too

deep inside your mouth into your heart and flesh and blood and bones.

does it matter whether it is wrong as they perceive it?

tradition is a veiled woman having pain inside her head and always wanting to hit with a hammer the merry dog on the beach sands.

and the law is a blind woman striking its sharp sword to anyone who comes along wanting to simply drink beer and eat hamburger.
is our view a little bit twisted look, the sun is begging on the river.
the moon is driving away the stars.

look, the mountains are running loose the forest trees are flying away.

look, oh take a look, you are turning into a cliff and children are falling off from your forehead.

be silent for now. Listen, silence is speaking to you. Noise is rubbing your ears taking away the earwax stored for years.

i like the lake without a boat.
just the white swan.

a white swan beside the moon.
and the silent water that runs deep inside my eyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Silent Workers

we did it before we did not explain
they did not like it
we keep silent

we keep on moving and doing what we think is good
not just for one but for all

we will do it again
and we will not explain we know too well
that soon they will understand

and at the end
everything turns out
well
for all of them

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simme And The Big Ouch...

the rainy nights &
the rainy days
36 hours and more
and they all warn about
a blackout,
expect landslides, let not your children
go to school,

the figures of speech for the
heavy rain,
outside this big house, the strong smell of paint shares the pride of the patter actually, one shadow tries to make sense that it is owned by another body, for how can shadows exist if there is nothing tangible as flesh and bones? but the light says i own you, i only reflect you from that perceived owner of your existence for without me behind this mass, you are nowhere to be found

alas!

the rain keeps mocking the road,
striking each corner with a hundred hammers proclaiming alliance with clogged canals
and broken bridges
and chipped off
hills,

how does one make sense with metaphors of rains and heaviness of feelings? overflowing rivers and the embracing arms of the seven seas?
a moment of grief
a few drops of silence....

how does the rain pour and be relieved of the problems of that great space, dark and limitless horrible to the understanding of the sandman?
how come we are all scattered thoughts unable to form a dissertation? life is simple. Life can be simple. As you must like it.

how do you like life? You are complicating the equations threatening calculus without solutions.
how life must be liked? how unreasonable do we really become?
how cowardly do we embrace that sometimes there is nothing more that we can grasp any more any further

and then we say: Lord, i love you with all my heart and soul and mind.

we are limping. Lame, broken bone. Feet of different lengths Tipsy boats. Uneven universe. Twisted bridges of life's codes. Blind, and Deaf structures.

We believe in one God.
That is our chant against the wizards of Ouch.

Forgive me
I am a simmer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simmer And The Big Ouch... these are the rainy nights &

the rainy days
36 hours and more
and they all warn about
a blackout,
expect landslides, let not your children
go to school,

these are the figures of speech for the
heavy rain,
outside this big house, the strong smell of paint
shares the pride of the patter

actually, one shadow tries to make sense that
it is owned by another body,
for how can shadows exist if there is nothing
tangible as flesh and bones? but the light says
i own you, i only reflect you from that
perceived owner of your existence
for without me behind this mass,
you are nowhere to be found
alas!,

the rain keeps mocking the road,
striking each corner with a hundred hammers
proclaiming alliance with clogged canals
and broken bridges
and chipped off
hills,

how does one make sense with metaphors of rains
and heaviness of feelings? overflowing rivers and
the embracing arms of the seven seas?
a moment of grief
a few drops of silence....

how does the rain pour and be relieved of the
problems of that great space, dark and limitless
horrible to the understanding of the sandman?
how come we are all scattered thoughts unable to form a dissertation? life is simple. Life can be simple. As you must like it.

how do you like life? You are complicating the equations threatening calculus without solutions.
how life must be liked? how unreasonable do we really become?
how cowardly do we embrace that sometimes there is nothing more that we can grasp any more any further

and then we
say: Lord, i love you with all my heart and soul and mind.

we are limping. Lame, broken bone. Feet of different lengths Tipsy boats. Uneven universe. Twisted bridges of life's codes. Blind, and Deaf structures.

We believe in one God.
That is our chant against the wizards of Ouch.

Forgive me
I am a simmer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simple Life I Live

An afternoon walk
Seeing the white birds again On these green ricefields And the carabaos wallowing Refreshing their skins in mud holes

It is the beginning of the Planting season again
The weeds are uprooted
The plows run again
To make this land arable
The rain comes and too
The sun and the wind

The hills are greener
The trees are blooming
And so are the flowers Along the footpaths

My dog walks with me
And his friend dog too walks with us
The wind so cool touches my face

The man nearby pastures his carabao
The woman washes some clothes in the river
The waters are still clear reflecting bluer skies There are no sounds of buses in here

Far from the city in this little village Where people are still innocent about greed And grief and self-made confusions The complications, the sophistications

I can live on a cup of rice, this mudfish, This glass of water from the rock’s spring This big banana leaf on my head And the moon above everything else And some stars lighting this lovely darkness The Simplest Bliss

the night as backdrop an easy chair to rest my legs a soft pillow where my head leans an orange glass vase a bud of red rose
a single leaf

hushing wind from the sea my hands on my thighs
i dream
my heart beats always you know

for you,
far, far away
like a distant island on the shoreless sea

how i wish my thoughts
are dead

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simplest Joy...

one day
i gaze upon the window

it is raining
outside

and the Santol tree fronting our house is laden with ripe fruits like one Christmas tree...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simplest Reason I Can Give You

i wish to build a house away from here

i have stored the necessary colors of the paints on the walls of my mind

i wish to stay in that house
alone

i will be in the company of paper and pen

i will fence it
it will be high

simply because
our house is not my home

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simplest Things To Do For The Love Of Country

vote wisely.
обey traffic rules
pay your taxes
work honestly
corruption is a No.
Obey the rules.
Do what you can
for this government.

Nothing new really. Nothing so silly.

My college political law professor suggests a critical mind active citizenship
question some rules
be not blind to what the government say analyze,
suspect every leader trust no one but be kind, and gentle
for this government
that derives power
from the voice of the people.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simplest: Hello, How Are You? Are You There?

affirm my existence.
are you there?
is there anybody here?

i am human.
i am alone in this universe.
i need a confirmation that there is another human being in this planet.

hello, hello, hellllooooo!
i am human. I am here.
I just arrived here.

is this my home?
do you understand what i am saying?

i am human. I am alone. Unless, i hear from you, then i exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simplicity Of Doubt

the absurd is not actually sophisticated, hand in hand with doubt both stroll the park of the obvious: the children on the boat on the pond, the mothers beside them,
the trees carrying leaves with the dignity of their roots,
the absurd laughs
at these pictures of man made realities and doubt smiles
about these illusions
since
what it knows is always subject to the test that these things the following morning
may simply be shadows
carried by too much
light
in a sense,
like a magician
things in themselves volunteer for their disappearances.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simplicity Of Nature

reeds on the side of the lake ripples of water
sand over mud
a green island on the other side shades of the horizon blue and darker sometimes blue skies and fluffy white clouds how this view sings in harmony with the heart of a man sitting in solitude under a tree on the grass

nature is indeed simpler than man more beautiful even without him but who shall know? when man becomes extinct, who shall know? when man is finally excluded, who shall tell?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simplicity Of Thoughts thoughts are simple i see them without color we dress thoughts with words so the other person we love can see we add a little touch of the hand so the other can feel that she is not lonely that i am can also feel that i am not alone but whether we are here or not lonely or otherwise thoughts still roam this world looking for a medium the tree, the cloud, the moss and the rock it is my theory have thoughts the rock is numb the cloud is lifeless the tree is deeply rooted to the earth the moss too green sticking to a rock remembering the rivers that were with it for centuries, they get tired and they do not believe in words anymore too many lies and verbosity

we are the only ones who still have faith and too foolish.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Simplification Of Her Death

she sits on a train the final horn blows
she closes the white curtain
and sleeps

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sinful Lover

you kiss a stone
the river has dried a long time ago no one lives on the river bank anymore all the moss dried like a pocketed silence you kiss a stone hoping that something may grow like another island of moss on its cheek you pray for rain hoping that someday a river may be born again at the junction of two paths the stone sleeps for years mistaken as a dead memory the river dries itself losing its patience to the sky your kiss could be fire and your prayer for rain may be heard and the sky could be kinds someday who knows? you kiss a stone because you too want to be alive to give birth to a new world, but for whom?

who knows? but i will trust you for this the stone may just be pretending, and you must kiss it some more it may still have the heart to love you again shattered world, unjust stranger, sinful lover.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sinner.......Is Gone..... something repeated

becomes boring and so you keep on repeating the same sin
hoping to escape it
just the same

it did not happen that way. The alligator has gobbled that boy in you.

the fires of sin ate you.
too late to admit that hell exists.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sixth Woman

All the women must envy her.
Because she is the woman that I truly love.
I have surrendered every atom of my being.
All my time is hers.
She takes away my education, my career, my past My present, my future.
She takes away my soul.
My liberty, my thoughts My feelings, my rationality
She is everything,
I mumble before her
And I tell everything
There are no secrets

There is only beauty, truth, and goodness.
She is regal.
She takes me whole.
She is eating me whole.
She will break me, she will kill me.
I have nothing left, and she can make me take What belongs to others so I still have something to give her To cater to all her demands Whims
Caprices

She takes my books, my rings, my watches, She takes my house, my car, my attaché case She takes my savings, my fortune She takes everything away from me And I cry before her I laugh like crazy
With what is happening to me And she does not mind Unmoved, unthinking Unbreakable
Undone
Un-self
Un-real
To her real-ness Unbecoming of me
She is unbecoming of me to all the other women in my life She is forever
Omnipresent, omnivorous, Omnipotent,
She is Goddess

All the women say,
I am finished
And I deserve her
And they all wish
My eternal damnation
My eternal suffering
To a hell of perfection

Through her the retaliation is complete The vengeance perfect.

I am helpless
She is the sixth woman,
The sixth sense

She is poetry and I am her slave.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Skeptic

politically he is correct
saying wealth must be distributed to the poor

except his own hacienda
for a start
there lies the stain

RIC S. BASTASA
The Skies Of My Youth

Blue birds sing
blues
in the blue skies of my youth

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sky Is Limitless

Limitless the sky is All its lies
Spread further to the universe

Limitless the sky
Is and I do not know Where to start or to end
The sky is one big circle Limitless is Its deception.

I really thought the sky Is blue and orange
I proved it once
The sky is dust

Limitless is my misunderstanding
Of the sky

Limitless is the sky

I have been deceived the sky is Limitless.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Slave And Pleaser

i will only tell
what you want to hear,

tell me what is it what is it that makes you whole and i will
utter it,

tell me what is missing and i will fill it

i do not play with hints it will leave you hanging like a frozen tear to your cheek at winter time i like the summer in us in full bloom

if you want me to utter love surely i will not waste a second if you wish upon a star i will make more

you will not regret having me here i am a slave and i shall please you do not ask for the truth i am a slave and i shall always please you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Slow Happy Death

what he is watching
slowly
kills him, bit by bit, shred by shred

at first his voice was taken then his feet
his mind
his emotions
lastly his hands

but his eyes keep on watching and they are the ones taking all the joys

his mind did not bother they will all be taken in slow but happy death the emotions calm down like a storm fading forming a spread of silk in that far ocean quiet.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Slurs Of The Blurs

i can't have you back for years i have died in the name of love and love in return with its sympathetic potions redeemed me alive, for love is kind, i know, and i want to still live in the illusion that you are love yourself and that you can also be kind to understand what this is all about, shall i tell you again about the hidden ship underneath the thousand folds of the ocean floor?

shall i take you back to the island without shores?
shall i rename the creatures there which you have not even seen?

this place where i live is unseen by civilization its ways are noxious to the priests and nuns, the people who live here are not puppets no hand can make them live as moppets on a strain of new viruses on the academe, there is still a language unlearned by you a food which you have not ever tasted, a pool where you have not dived.

so i can't really have you back i fell like your wishing star i lost my light
i was shattered on the desert sands no Bedouin finds me no camel saves me.

i shall forget you
that is the simplest sentence i can mete upon
my self,
this prisoner of hopeless desire put to bars by the judges of fire.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Smell Of My Emotions

these emotions are scents, they long, for your perfume, that time, when you were beside me, i want to hold you and kiss you, nothing metaphorical about a kiss, like lips, like tips, tongues, are tongues, tasting like you, and your emotions, they give me a trail, domesticating me to your heart, a home, but not for me, it is you, and i know, i cannot have, but just beside you, in this car, this journey, that i mumble, for how long,
i know, it will be forever,
this longing, this dream,
of one, of wholeness,
i remain, incomplete, i have hands but they are still, like posts, with lights on an evening, and you are below me, as i provide the light, and then you walk away, just like that, just like that, just like that, there is no breath for me there is no place.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Smiling Children...

shallow waters
where we sometimes sink and fail

RIC S. BASTASA
The Smoke Of My Handgun

this 10 mm handgun made in Austria is in my hand.
My coming days are curious say frightened about what i shall do next with it.
My temple is calm.
My head is full like a cup filled with hot water.
There is no taste of coffee
It is 4 o'clock in the morning
And the streets in this town are all empty
Of people.
There is the possibility of using this handgun
To kill those insane witnesses Dragging me to a crime that i have not done Though deep within i want to do it.
Kill! kill! Kill! Shoot them with all the bullets Of this Gun
This is what my mind is screaming.

My cousin is afraid of the possibilities of My life.
I am not. I am certain. There is no way that a smoke From this gun should come out Without a Reason.
It is fragile, and so light, and Like all truths No hand can capture it
And hold it forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Smoke Of Truth....

from fire
always comes out smoke
	his is the one that tells the truth
when it goes out
of the window
it tells the skies
it shows
the telltales
to the earth
intertwines
with the rays of
the sun
bearing witness
then
gone

RIC S. BASTASA
The Smoke Spreading Under The Trees

the smoke spread under the trees from a certain burning firewood on the house not far from where we talk it spreads far and this evening as i get too bored we look at the hazy subject matter as it moves farther to a certain visible distance and despite the pollution i imagine something more artful than this damage to my lungs

under the trees
the smog is beginning to shape itself into a chine painting of the dawn and its mist like a poem written by one of the poets that i love to read

Tu Fu, Li Po, or was it Kulafu?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Smooth Life Of G.E.

Every picture is see is what you describe as perfect. A new baby for the family. The mother looks and smiles. The proud father begs to carry the baby even for a few minutes.

There were pictures of the marriage.
Black and white, old as the ancestral house where the big family once lived.

There is this garden full of perennial flowers
It is as though your life is nothing but Spring.
Nothing of the winter Neither the autumn.

Summer is well spent. The grandchildren are not sickly and grandpa is not drinking any liquor.
The house is well kept. Every object is in order.

The chickens have always the correct feeds.
The cow is fat and the turkeys are ready for Christmas.

Sometimes i think
I must be  is not my family.
What i had was messy.
I need not tell anybody.

But on the other hand,
I think that something so ideal cannot be true.
Like a fairytale.
Like a story fit for kids...ending with And they all live happily ever after.

That is not really true.
That is just an illusion.
I go for something that i have.

The tears wet my pockets.
The novel is too interesting.
The hero falls and dies.
The tragedy like the one written By Sophocles
always give me that catharsis.

Not yours. Not your family.
Not your success.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Snake

sometimes
i feel like i want to shed off all my skin
and molt like a snake
perhaps
to feel what the snake does

one time there was a snake under my bed

it was helpless
as it was molting
i could not bite

i did not touch
it
i did not mind
it

perhaps it is the same reason why people
in the house
too does not mind
me
and never for once ever touch
me

RIC S. BASTASA
The Snake.....

we will be soon forgotten

how will they ever remember

reality bites
everyday and

this pain keeps them busy

looking for a cure when there

is none, when this sickness

unto death is such a snake.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Social Climber

yellow is the color of the social climber like a vine
with yellow flowers the dancing lady variety that thrives on the rotten barks of trees that looks for the sunshine at the top of the trees the calumnist of the Stars its food

the rotten lives of other people!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Soft Rain Today....

how i love
the rain today

ain't heavy
soft and gentle

falling on the grass and on the side of the hill this hair of nature babe's soft whisper

hushing and dashing like the sound of a young river how i love the first rain of the year today

comforting, indifferent a sound of its own

whispering tears
allying fears.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Softness

the softness amidst the hardness of things
the forgiving, the compassionate, the tender silence, the comfort, the mediator, the coolness of home, the warmth of arms, the lullaby the song in the middle of the night the flower that blooms forever the garden of my heart a memory not forgotten the moon inspiration
the silvery pond
the grace when everything seems harsh the love without attached conditions everlasting goodness

she is mother.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Softness Of Imagination...

how soft is this ray of sunlight that daft its way to the dryness of my cheek how fragile wings are butterflies hovering in air which we only feel when it travels like the way our fingers sleep their ways on the table cloth made of silk how soft and beautiful is life how unanticipated only because i have never never really touched you as i in this poem only imagines

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sole Intention Of This Creation

The creative genius within empathizes with you which you have mistaken as the bleeding me

whatever that is, just keep what pleases you.
That is the sole intention of this creation.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Soliloquy Of The Agnostic....

why do we say that those who take their lives earlier than we do, and with their own hands deserve our pity? no one has ever come back and tell us that they regret what they are doing
or what they did was wrong why do others say that they must have died a heroes death and welcomed well by those guarding the gates of heaven?
or are there such gates?
or is there such a place which they call as heaven?
or it there hell?
why do you say that the books are correct? who wrote them?

all we know is we are here we do not know where we come from and where we are going the fact is that is the only fact we know: we all do not know.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Solitude Of Man

Like the planets you take your own orbit away from the rest
eluding this fatal collision you travel alone keeping on your own gravitation balancing the forces of your being outside inside
near and far
coming and going
centrifugal centripetal

that is the way you move
to be alive
then the moment comes when you complete
one revolution

how time trickled
like some drops from a rock you flow
bit by bit
you are so busy then
about almost everything

on the other side
the clear pool of water mirror of the sky and sun and moon

it is you
you have earned it
it is you
on your birthday

RIC S. BASTASA
The Son Of The Father

HE'd seen it all felt it all

but never touched
anything

simply because it is prohibited and

he is
compliant.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song

it was there. You heard it twice.
At first, it was nice
And then, it was painful something sour like lemon, you bleed and there was that lemon from her eyes.
the song becomes a song.
fainting like a faded denim it was like a sinking boat and someone is trapped and the storm was as big as a house of cards, how it be a figure?
circles and circles all over my body, like whirlpools in your mind, wanting to forget and yet something multiplies like a factory made sandwich.
forgive me, but it is still the song of my heart, your song, the song for all those years when sands lose the hold of water.
there is campfire it shall burn a city of lovers.
there is school where children recite rhymes there is this sense of propriety where the dogs tease you with a fake howl.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Is Not Sad.... he once was a wild bird who lives in no one's forest always in flight to an endless journey, until he was caught in the cage of civilization

where he was taught to sing and what to sing
and when to sing the prescribed songs

he had always been a sad black bird for years and years and years until he gets freed because the lock is finally broken and the rails all turn to dust because of rust

when he goes outside with his wings he does not like it anymore he forgets what he was once in the wild he comes back constructs and reconstructs his cage exactly as it was once given to him by force of circumstance locks himself in and then begins to sing again do not tell me that it did not happen to you

the song is not sad.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of An Old Man

i

his song is sad
a white man in the nursing home his children sent him there and they did not bother

ii

the Filipina nurses him everyday she takes care of him as he pees
as he poos
she needs the money
she sends her children back in her country to school
she needs the green bucks to pay her debts she too has a sad song

iii

and there in the nursing home the Filipina and the old white man sing their sad songs they have broken hearts one waits for his happy death another one looks for her sad life

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of David

it is the song of the little stone taken by the slingshot and killed our fears of anything that is Goliath.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of Don Juan

and let him say that he knows the ways of the heart of women and he shows them how big is his heart loving all of them fairly and thoroughly (or is it truly? not really, for there is this truth inside his heart still about to unfold to be freed...)

and he loves many of them, ladies longing for his love ladies in reds and blues, ladies in stilleto shoes, lovely ladies in a row, and he kissed and made love to each of them, without regret, to the envy of other men, but what is it really inside this magnificent don juan, so handsome and so virile like one loving machine?

pity. love. sympathy. fame. glory. fortune. sex, desire, lust, the magnanimous don juan shall have it all and enjoy what the hands of lust have given him freely and abundantly like a bunch of sweet grapes on his mouth at the bottom, of all these pleasures, once, beneath the moon, in the silence of his room he stares at his masculine body, his thighs, and strong arms, this fucking machine to his chest, there lies his broken heart still wanting to be held, and still wanting to please them all he never had what he loved most that someone buried in his past, that someone crying in the grave still calling for his name

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of 'save Me'

A Lot of turmoils
in English language, and the keep on saying
'Save the Queen! '

Long Live America!
they say that too, why?
Is America short lived?

In our Country we say 'Mabuhay! ' Oopps, Are we dying?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of Selfishness

i've seen the truth and heard its sound
i've seen its light surging and strong i've touched its softness caressed its directions i've seen it leave me because i have always said to myself

&lt; I am not ready&gt;

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of Solitude

one cannot hear the lyrics of this song
one can only feel from the tips of the fingers
when all the light is gone when what is left
is nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of The Bedouin

how lonely the desert can be under an orange moon without the bedouin's song

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of The Dedicated Househelp

in London
and in Italy
the domestic housekeeper (euphemism for Filipino maid)
sings
her song:

cleaning another person's house
taking care of another mother's kids
cooking for the master
mopping their lawns
dusting their carpets
wiping their furniture
washing their dirty clothes

all for the money

in her home country her son has become a drug addict,
her house sinks
in the water
there is no food in the refrigerator
her husband is living with another younger
woman
her papa is sick with cancer
her mama is dead
she sends money
for the casket and the wake
she prays some more for her daughter in school

in London
in Italy
she is not a human being

in Hongkong
and in Singapore
some of them
become crazy
and kill their master's kids (who knows?)

the news headlines
says Pinoy househelp
hangs herself
in the bathroom

another one jumps
from the 15th floor
crashing to the ground
like a crushed watermelon

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of The Tantrum...

the suffering that all wars caused did i hear that only the dead knows?

displace all those who suffer and like water they shall soon seek all the common levels they all seek the path of least resistance and they will all come to you the maps of this world will change there will be no more boundaries all land, water, sea, belong to all no masters, no warlords, no emperors no kings and prime ministers no government, no city, no province no nukes, no ships, no guns, no schemes, no double talks, no pretenses, all children now looking for their parks all kindness seeking for their thresholds all humanity without distinctions all roads connect, all continents move now in place, all trees and fruits, all goodness, all cries, all misgivings and love, all love, all love, all tantrums all trauma, all prayers, all senselessness, ...and nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Of Where Were We

Riding on a boat
They sailed One Night
Three of Them
Singing
Where Are We?

And then when the MOON came full above their Heads They begin to Sing fULL mOON i SEE you Standing There

And then the MOON
RESTS on the leaf of the banana
Like a little Bird

And then they came out from the Boat And drank Wine
And then They sand and dance Till Morning

The NEighbors simply Miss them All

They all love the charivari
And sympathy

RIC S. BASTASA
The Song Unheard Of By Everyone....

it has always been
and will always be what you wanted from the very beginning:

walking with the crowd
in the middle of those trees below the clouds heavy with their carried pregnancies of grayness

and when it rains when all the women open their umbrellas and the men ready with their caps and the children hold on to their fathers or mothers you continue walking alone this time whistling a song unheard of by everyone....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Songs Of Birds Early Morning

the songs of early birds are like
light

transcending beyond
my mirror
feelings

inside my heart all
the nerves
begin to dance....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Songs Of Miseries

the songs of miseries
of the east
are theirs alone

the west have doors
of steel
all shut
so the ears
may never hear

RIC S. BASTASA
The Songs Of The Canadian Canary got a friend and i named her my canadian canary she is caring

and sends me some gifts perfume
for my body
fish oil for my heart
some haiku
for my day
some emails to remind me some pictures
and paintings of spring, and some winters too
and oh, the summer
and the worm
and the peony on her table cement friendship

from my canadian canary and how can i not return what she has given

she never asked me

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sonorous Sounds Of The Gentle Rains definitions

the rains are not heavy but gentle
like the soft hairs of a two-year old
creature
it gives the sound of the sonorous earth
there is no tapping on the roof
there is only the dripping of a water flowing
from the gutter
to the stinking canals
there is this weakness of the paper getting wet and then laying flat on the cobbled street the waters walk like an old man without a hat
without a coat.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sons And Daughters Of Farmers

when we were children
in that poor village while our parents work so hard in the fields for food (and not for our education) we learn to count the hours, to measure the length of sticks, and entertain ourselves with our own games.

We were dirty,
and left alone to feed
ourselves.

we were so happy then
that for that time
we were not beaten.

That
our fame was measured by the number of our scars and bruises
our fall from trees
our stumbles on stones,
our skin rashes
and insect bites
how we destroy the kingdom of bees
and how we run as fast as we can to avoid being stung.

we were so happy then
that we were not boxed that once upon a time
we thought
on our own thoughts
freely without codes
and orders from our present
masters....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Son's Curse...

keep the weaving
my dear
his mother said

until his father died with all the disappointments
in this world

and he said when he had grown up fully what
he is pursuant the immensities of mother's love
for him

'to hell, papa', i have this one and only life and i like to live it the way i love.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sooner, The Happier, Perhaps

we have finally arrived at letting you go and hence from now on, your name is a family taboo.

during breakfast we shall talk about all things,
our travels, our shortcomings, our songs, and poems and our tragedies. Your story is out.
Your colors shall not be seen in the other things are thrown away. We cannot give them space.

and so, here we are, living in peace.
savoring our own kind of
happiness.

at night we sail in this small boat
the moon above us the ripples of the sea below singing its own glimmering interchange of sound and light.

if we remember you in the loneliness
of our lives,
we only have regrets, and sometimes no matter how we get rid of all these they stick like stains of blood in our garments.

but don't you worry. We have known this art of killing memories too. perhaps, we have to perfect it.
the sooner, the happier, perhaps
RIC S. BASTASA
The Soul

subsumed in the syllables of the conscience it speaks
at dawn,

'this should have been this the ought and must'

the body feels its softness afraid of its purity the body declares

' i am human and i have needs you must understand'

poles apart, one sleeps the other wakes up upon a disagreement the mind suffers the body wanders throughout the night uttering a justification the soul listens attentively the eyes of the heart now speaks

'there must be a compromise somewhere a middle, the mean, what must, what is'

time plays the game
the body is the boat, the soul its watcher

RIC S. BASTASA
The Soul Is Sick

It is sometimes like releasing bees from our hands since we bite sometimes and the people who are listening scatter like children in fear and trembling bitten and they come back with their injuries now looking

for you

and talking becomes war where the talkers become all victims

but talking can sometimes turn into prayers when we begin talking to someone invisible but whom we trust and those who see us have only empathy why now i talk only to myself after releasing all those terrible bees i understand it somehow, this need for an elocution since the soul is sick and badly it needs the balm of words, a dressing of prayers and more time for waiting so that the healing may complete itself in that litany of confessions.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Soulmate

You amaze me
your scent has taken me back in years i cannot completely remember it is hazy and the trees are misty as though there is a glass window between us and there you are still a shadow in the dusk

i do not even know your name

i have only seen your eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound

the sound of your speech the way you enunciate your vowels create the impression of whether you deserve power or not the hands must not be clumsy but gripping sort of strong and hard and clinging like a vine like a chameleon

change the color of your skin instantly as change of gear in a car to get to the destination and arrive there with so much pretense for grace and success, where are we now? do not ask show a definite stance this is the place of my power our castle of virtue our paths to enlightenment there is the sound of contentment alone but not lonely

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Argument Of Logic

ALONE for quite a while without a choice grabbing the horns of a dilemma i quiver its sister, Loneliness
the other side of its face
which has the power to threaten
everyone
to dissolve in space
and be
gone

you have underestimated
yourself
king of this universe
prince of flexibility precious child of Cheers

Who is Alone? Don't you know that its family name is Everybody?

The true name of Happiness is Nobody,

Come to think of IT.
IT is nothing yet How can you ever let IT control you?

YOU are strong. You have the stars in your hands.
You have the sun in your palm and if you close it
The whole world will be dark as Pitiful.

How can you allow IT to close Paradise?
Grow, make a web, let no Fly snatch the magical gossamer of your Logic.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Images Of Innocence

bathing bare on the river the kids of the neighborhood they have never seen the crocodile

and then the go home
together
spreading laughter
along the path of mud
beside the wild flowers

they pass upon a forest and climbs some trees tease the monkeys
and gather the ripe berries and imitate the wings of black birds

the chase each other without the numbers
never mind their shadows until it gets dark

and then they are home again their mothers singing songs their fathers telling stories about how the tigers roar

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of Bye Bye

i feel at the last moment the weirdness of the situation time hangs itself but you never smell the stinking dead hour you see, i never had that snorkeling it was too cold
the see blurs the fish
the rain comes heavily and so i simply sit the whole day on one of those rattan chairs facing the blue pool of water beside the purple bougainvillea tree i can't say i am sad perhaps i am just too sleepy to remember anything or perhaps i fall upon a chasm of the hours and so i never remember the pain the hours pass gently it is already five in the afternoon the boat arrives and i am taken back to the place where i do not belong

i keep on moving for motion's sake no agenda, no place of destination just an itinerary prepared by someone who thinks that money must be saved as i willing throw them all away the boat sails upon a silvery surface the boat has an eye it is simply doing what must be done under these peculiar circumstances slicing the water

making the sound of bye byes.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of Children

it is their sound that makes this world lovable still under the mango tree when the wind starts to blow when the ripe mangoes fall to the ground and the children starts to scramble for their share of the ripe ones.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of First Rain After Drought

A poor village
Covered with dust
Then the sound
Of first rain Comes from The mountain

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of Morning One Summer Time....

she goes out leaving an empty bed and you are still heavy with your head.

the window is open: the silence comes faint, like the grey color of stone, the world attracts you with its wonders, the birds have awakened from their sleep now fly in the skies, hop from tree to tree, swarm the spaces, look for worms and grains and feed their young, how small are their nests how they not know how to store food in their stockrooms which humans construct for themselves, how humans like us build a future, and yet how still insecure, how unhappy, and how tense the tread upon life, how their brains must have mistrusted, the Hands that made them.

how sorrowful the sound, how fearful the steps, how sleep is unsound, how the rain is disliked.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of My Footsteps

i open the door
i enter this house
its windows closed its chairs set aside
along the corners of the corridors

the sound of my shoes making footsteps reverberates
in the living room

it is like the lonely poem you wrote
for me

footsteps taking
the stairs up the second floor leading to an empty room

nobody lives here
anymore
you explained
one day
this was a happy home until all of them were shot

dead, by the lone gunner,

what was his name again?
you told me once
his name is loneliness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of My Silence

we arrive at the end of the road and there is a single pebble there staring at us smooth and round and too light for our burden

i decide the fate of two souls yours and mine

i lift my eyes to see your sorrow and mine
i lift my foot to walk away leaving an awkward cloud beneath the sand

i run away and you vanish from my mind you take your gaze towards the horizon i pack mine towards the sunless sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of Poverty In My Country

Whooping cough
From morning till night

There are only herbs
Some leaves of grass

Soaked in water
Inside a tin cup

That is prescribed to be taken as Medicine

The sound is reverberating Throughout the town

And no one seems to mind What to do about it

It cannot be stopped
The people simply wait

For another wailing sound Someone bedridden

Just passed away Another cough is on the way

Today and it will be
From morning till night

And as usual the people just wait There is nothing that can be done about it as the sounds of poverty reverberate throughout the country with nothing but faith

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of Sadness

it is not the crackers crisp and deafering such that you cannot hear a movie script such that you cannot figure out what the lead says it is the sound of the wind leaving the treetops

passing through a door which is already closed it is the hush from a mouth sealed forever

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of Sand And Gravel

it is the wheel of this caromata that makes the grinding sound of the sand and gravel spread on the road that shall lead us all to home.

i miss that sound now that i have this innova car well closed and air conditioned with the sound of the cd's rock music says that i must forget you.

you're my home. and i cannot just forget its warm pillow.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of Sunday Is Not Holy

Mauro Giuliani’s guitar Is played

Sonata erotica
I hear it
As I bow down

My head

My right hand
And all five fingers Supporting
Like five pillars
To this temple
Of an unwashed
Face

Attentive to giuliani’s Sonata erotica
On a Sunday

I face a road
Sliced by sounds
Of motorcycles Without any Silencers

Sonata erotica
Flamenco guitar
Entering my ears
Resting on my head

My guests this Sunday noon

Flamenco notes
Dancing
With dainty feet Stamping on My brain

Erotica on Sundays
Flamenco dancers
In pink

My eyes follow
The hands
And the hips
And the feet
To this surging Dainty Desires

In a sense
Sleep is a stranger Whose name
I have yet to spell.

the face of prayer
is a little bit
sketchy

its eyes
closed
its nose blocked
by so much phlegm

i breathe
something erroneous
to my heart

my sister the religious
&
the piety
as usual
is angry.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of Sweeping....

early morning
what i hear is the sound of sweeping

when i look out from my window i see this old woman sweeping the ground
stooping

finding the dead leaves and some grass
making a heap and then burning all these into ashes

she sits down under the mango tree waiting for its fruiting

soon, soon,
somewhere her gaze follows the smoke which finds its way into the heavens....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of The City

ten the sound of the city is all noise like a hammer destroying the walls of my soul
a church, a dome, a mountain hallowed by pigs
and squirrels
there is this mind that conquers all the imagination that converts the noise
into a song
there is this gut that is strong and it is mine
alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of The Rain

donot mislead me with the point-of-view of the frog you croak and you say this is how something beautiful sounds, how ugliness feigns i tell you i like the rain and the frog likes it too, i am one of those frogs bathing and jumping on the pond, but do not mislead me with your sound, it does not sound like the hush of the wind, it has no color of the moon, i am one of the frogs of this pond, but i do not wish to sound like you: i am in love with the sound of the rain, and this is the one that makes me stay. It is not you, your sound is not gentle, it is rough like the skin of the teething toad. I love the rain, the way it sounds, and that is enough for my suffering.

Dripping.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of The Rain One Day In July

you know what year was that it was one day in july
it was raining hard and we were wet
you left your umbrella in that big house where you lived
once

you ran with me
and then we told them our love
had just began

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sound Of Your Poetry

i watch the color of your words dripping on the still pond
i am up on one of the clouds hanging on a tree without leaves i see your last syllable falling from your hand like a silver coin going through a layer of the water where it falls upside down (you have seen it when we were once on the boat watching the Samal children chasing your charity on the sea) until it is gone like a fish taking the deeper part of the ocean floor

then you begin to travel with the last remaining ripple to nowhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Soundless Event

when you were given so much time you simply wasted it you asked questions which were too unnecessary when the hours finally are about to end you suddenly shut your mouth freeze yourself and make a better feel about what to happen next this time you are a piece of wall listening trying to absorb what next shall bombard you when the last second of your life comes you finally close your eyes and welcome such a soundless sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sounds

i heard the sound of the clock ticking some things come
i am remembering these some things burnt, and melting in my forehead, i like the sound of the ticking of grandfather's clock at night, i hear footsteps and drippings of water from the gutter to the floor the window is closed and the wind makes the sound of someone caught between door jambs, creaking sounds creeping on the wall, something is terrible, really terrible and i turn my body to the left side, there is this storm, and the strong rain comes with the grunting wind, and trees are falling unto each other, i hear leaves and twigs, and the roof wanting to leave the house, something is terribly happening on this night of the suicidal darkness, the shimmer of the river looks like a stainless knife who's there? i ask the door. The mirror on the other side answers, how dare you?

it is nobody. it is just myself, my mouth answers.

RIC S. BASTASA
as i flex my muscles and raise my hands and stretch my legs
as you begin to dance and hum a song
as we make each day
different from the rest of the days of the world

so must our poems be so must our lives be

we have decided when we have typed the first word upon those symbols the syllables have given birth to the much awaited
sound

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sounds Of My Day

it is four o' clock in the morning this computers hums the loudest the dogs howl on the road seeing strangers pass that early i can hear the winds of dawnbreak the engine of the bus on the highway going to faraway zamboanga the first trip i suppose the clock is ticking

the door is clicking

some footsteps
on the road going away from me they are all

sounds of departure

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sounds Of Summer

it is the air that blows the song of summer the birds chirp and the sky is ready for their wings.

the sands of the beach are whiter and the waves of the sea are bluer.

the mountains lush and the paths are clear. someone waits for you on the other side the coconut wine is bubbling and the dance with the wind shall soon start for a thanksgiving. The rice cakes on the banana leaves, the pork barbecue, the raw mangoes with shrimp paste and the relatives from the cities are coming.

News, stories from far, bits and pieces and poems, and more merrymaking i heard that she is coming and i am waiting.

This time, we shall explore a new avenue just friendship, and a lot of reminiscing no regrets, a little glance, and then we part.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sounds Of Sunday

i hear the sound of the cold wind from the sea i hear the waking call of the roosters the scratching feet of the dog on some disturbing flea and i hear her steps towards the door as she opens it

she goes to church
and i hear her gently closing the door and the gate too closing in on me

i am alone now with all the other sounds of the house this sound of the growing silence some voices rushing to fill my mind some poems
for the day

it is this silence that feeds me the trickles of my soul

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sounds Of The Jackhammer

today i shall hear the sounds of the jackhammer
as they start breaking the hard cement of this old house’s foundation for soon they shall build a new stair

for the second floor of this new house that we are constructing

we earn twelve years of the peaceful life
love still dwells
our communion strong our vision unwavering

this is our answer to their questions
this is our way of resolving the doubts

up there there shall be no walls and no roof it is the stars and the moon at night that we all want to see we shall have tea and our company

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sour Cat

cat looks at the moon
admires light but it is too far it cannot touch it

sour cat grabs a ball of thread and lets it fall
on the window
as though showing its disgust
for everything round

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sour Grape...

the old grandfather's clock is still alive standing on the corridor of the house swinging making most of the time despite its steady position which perhaps i cannot do unless i am inanimate just like it.

a child soon shall come and hit it with a baseball.

history is made here. Others who want to keep their mouth shut left and will not be returning.

a generation of geckos and dogs and snakes and ticks and mites...

RIC S. BASTASA
Actually it is not me which is the source.

It is you.

I merely mirror what you are saying and behold, you flatter yourself by saying that i am beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Source Of Inspiration

i do not wish to reveal the source
of my inspiration
to you

i know that you will always call it pornographic

and you tell
the rest
that i should have been condemned
since childhood

RIC S. BASTASA
The South Pacific Dreams Of Youth...

the long road of sorrow is never vacant with truckloads of grief beside it a desert of disappointments sometimes there are no trucks during the hottest part of the days of the past but what fills up the road is the coldest air coming from the mountains of regrets and where is the happy part of this landscape ah, there is a migrant bird, small and with frail wings trying to cross the sahara desert alone imagining that somewhere in this map is the south pacific full of majestic islands and dancing natives and monkeys and coconuts.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Space Between Us

the space between us is separated by our own
self-made pillars

in there
i breathe
and take my chances of defining
all over again
what love is what my existence
means

in there
i sigh and stare
and look at you
from a distance
what you are beyond my intimate touch

we agree on it, the need for space and traveling inside ourselves
trying to figure
out
if we still belong to each other's arms
if our kisses
still have the warmth

the promise and the vow that we must question in order

to survive

love and its hazards that only time
and space and emptiness

can tell

RIC S. BASTASA
The Spanish Guitar Song...

gives me that needed break the Spanish guitar playing making me rise from stupor of the computer screen makes me raise my hands my feet stepping out from the floor to the veranda
makes me dance the malangueña....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sparks In Her Head

do not envy the sparks above her hair
you mistake it for wisdom she is having a short circuit in her mind

admire her instead of that grace under distress that peaceful focus as she carries her pains

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sparrow

from the gutters
the little sparrow
sings her song
opening her way
to the beauty of the human heavens

she flew too high
she wanted to burn
her very own wings!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Speaker Of Truth

he's got fire
in his eyes and they all become candles
melting in the coldness of their nights until what is left are the weaknesses of their wicks coiled on the pavements of their naked selves

not one somehow calls for help
not one
shows remorse
not even guilt

RIC S. BASTASA
everyday the fathers escort their kids to school in this place where i live fronting my house where the kindergarten school is built the fathers talk a lot while waiting and i am listening as the distance is just near the window where i sit and observe where i keep on writing a lot of stories and whatever is coming inside my brain... the talk travels on their orbits in circular fashion without a specific direction just passing the hours consuming every minute while waiting then the bell rings and the kids go out from their rooms rushing to the arms of their fathers who pick them up and put them on their seats on the motorcycle it is 12 noon the motorcycles one by one leaves the place and proceeds to their houses this happens every day except during Saturdays and Sundays where the place is so silent and empty except for the rustle of some leaves that fall from the mahogany trees on windy days which is not always i am faithful to this scenery.
i am the spectator watching the fullness and emptiness of some days figuring out relevance.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Spider As My Analogy For You

the black spider
with a yellow mouth and invisible tongue
eyearly in the morning on the jack-fruit tree webs its house, so beautifully transparent against the sun
it is art and functional
at the same time
a house of beauty and a trap for prey

a fly is trapped and breakfast is ready
at the center table of its creation

full, the spider basks
in the rain as i watch it still thinking about you and your house of lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Splendid Silent Sun

'Give me the splendid silent sun, with all his beams full-dazzling.' Walt Whitman (1819 - 1892)

i have seen what you have seen
and it is too much of a good thing to be called wonderful,
the dazzling the
silence
the resplendent sun amidst
the breasts of the hills.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Spoiled Kid...

mother had always made him special from among the six siblings he was the only one as always taken to the pizza house.

the other children are envious but what can they do mother has always loved him more than anybody else...

sorry kid, you are spoiled without mother where will you be?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Spongebob In Law School

what i do not know does not hurt me

it does not
scare me either

and so shall it be in class
this evening

i am not scared of
anyone

and i do not know about anything that can hurt me

and so from all of you who listened

i have known a lot... really

RIC S. BASTASA
The Spontaneous Death Of A Writer....

we want to last
forever
and so we write
we want to recall and keep it there like some statutues or sculptures of beauty and solidity, yet nothing lasts forever, and we know this, yet we still want to write, perhaps, we only express what has been subsumed, or suppressed, something wants to come out, something wants to go into the open without being known, without being exposed, and so we see birds in the air, stars in the skies, moon at night, and fish with mouth open in the pool, or flower blooming and then only to die,
we keep doing this, until there is no more meaning, until we go on writing for writing's sake, to keep the hours pass by, and not knowing how we die.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sportsman

he joined the run
not really just to win but to show them
at the end
that he can be decent and be clean

RIC S. BASTASA
The Spot Where We Find Ourselves....

perhaps we are here on the same spot away from them

you they that make most of what we do not have they, who are who in the world of whos

here we are as clumsy
as ever
despite the commendations i myself recognizes the inferiority of my being

this is the spot where the sun does not shine
where the moon does not pass
where the stars fail to twinkle

RIC S. BASTASA
The Spring
	his afternoon
i watch the coming of a water spring
from the rock that i built
two years ago it was not intended to be concealed
a staff hits it
and water flowed with extreme pressure
rising
looking for the finger
of the sky
i am not surprised things like this happen
like a spring wanting to rise above
the river
i am the river
and it shocks the sense of my water
to find a droplet of rain rising to the sky

i slew it like dew at dawn
from a leaf
and i smash
whatever its nature
is

disrespect to the highest degree behaving beyond what justice
was there
that i thought of

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stages Of Marriage

marriage is indeed relational

at the first part of it she gives you a lover

later the lover becomes your sister and

later the sister turns out to be a mother

it is only when you are dead that she becomes a wife
again

she cries for a while she takes all that you have and if she is still too young and desirable another man
steps into your room and weaves love stories in the conjugal bed that you once bought

that woman is now
a total stranger.....

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
The Stairs Shall Fall To Be Part Of The Dust Again.

the correct rule is non-attachment

this room cannot be mine forever

i must know as early as this

that soon times and things and people
change

like you and i,
not much intimacy

let there be distance like pillars of a house
to make us all stable

that when the time
to say goodbye happens

there will be no tears there will be nothing simultaneous as death

of
one and then the other

for by then the room will be perfectly empty and the stairs shall fall to be part of the dust
again.
The Stairs....

the stairs show us
a door, and we focus to the moment when we arrive at the very doorstep
anticipating about
a day of an opening and see finally what is next what is there

we step upon each plank ascend every next stair
each stair
and the next stair
all the days of our lives
spending time
with little rest
and sometimes with nothing at all

sooner we feel so deceived
having spent so much time already ascending habitually

but not really getting near that attractive door and when we notice that it is too late

our faces have given birth to all the wrinkles our heads have grown all the white hairs

and silences by all means have sewn our lips

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stars Are Brightest

i
the stars are brightest on the deep blackness
of the night

ii
not on those brightest days can you feel the glitter of a single star

iii
no on the deep scarlet of our grief can we for once
change into stars
show that our hearts glow like diamonds
in the ocean floor of our sorrows

iv
twinkle, glitter, glow there is also meaning and beauty in this sorrow

v
we do not have to be mud others have turned to the god of the rocks we can be stars meteors shooting brightness in dark space galaxies expanding to build a new world we can be suns of glory when others explode and be gone for worst The Stars Are Not Beautiful In The Morning

darkness
you deceived me
with those stars

this morning
the stars have become so insignificant

this is me
sitting on a chair

on the table is my cup of coffee

a slice of bread and a German sausage.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stars Are Out Tonight

the stars are out tonight
glittering like diamonds in the sky dthis, tiny firefly tries to fly high glittering too

the stargazer asks,

'who is that nobody? '

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stars In The Heavens....

i was the praying
mantis on the grass
when we first met
here in this
spot of mud and
water

we talked
and i made promises
like turning
dusts into butterflies
and stones into
birds
and birds into
stars
in that black sky above us now i am watching all those stars of you once stones

without minds of their own once dusts without
meaning
once birds flying without directions

i like the way all of you glitter as i sit upon this strip of grass covered by black skies

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stars Of Our Lives....

upon a dark night
let me shine as a star

when you decide upon a bullet and shoot i may fall

have no regrets you may keep on shooting again upon another dark night more stars come hang themselves upon this vast space

be glad upon a dark night that you watch
more than a million stars abound
in the most beautiful silence to life
again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stars That You Have

who cannot love
the stars
in your hair?

you all glitter
the magnanimous sparks
of love
that you are offering to the darkness of my nights

my soul rises from my
body

who cannot love all
the stars
in your eyes?

i close mine

who cannot love the stars gleaming in the corners of your heart?

gentle as i
bleed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stars The Stars

at night
the stars shine
and then early morning they fade away deep within my heart
i know
they do not die

RIC S. BASTASA
The Starter Of The Chaos...

now i have seen it
you, the native is also on the side of aggression

you take what is already taken
and you put the sign of exclusion
and when the other is at the brim
and uses his gun for protection you take it for granted

you promise to kill when necessary
and when that necessity comes you get killed

and then they say that there is injustice
but i have seen it all how you
started it yourself how you teased
this domestic
war
into a dance of shadows and blood

it is your arrogance which started this and now they say that you are not at fault?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Starting Line

it is when air feels like glass
which looks like a mirage which flows like rivers
which branches like hands which touch no one and have become
walls which negate itself and turn into a
sky
which regret not having become
birds
which hate wings and flights

it is so crowded like a forest and beneath are worms eating
rotten wood
which has become more of a boat which wishes that it were nothing but an ordinary human coffin which shall be buried under the grass which without change shall rule the earth

RIC S. BASTASA
The State Of Non-Meaning

so many sands
long term plans
so many grains of sands on the beach on the mind of man oh, i guess so many poems composed each poem has become a grain of sands so many grains
from my mouth
to my hands to my feet to the beach to the sands of time in search for meaning when actually there is none.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Steps Of My Life

i did not bother actually to mind and count of my steps
as i move forward as i climb upwards those hills and even those cliffs
as i go down the mountains and slip and slide and roll and fall as i cross rivers and sail on those seas and hop from one island to another how many steps? what steps?

to Life to Life
always to Life busy with life drunk with life

you sleep on a hammock tired and dreamy

how many steps? what steps?
how can i look back and fall again?

how can i look back and be filled with fear from the height of this mountain that i am in?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sting

countess is right there in the head
the imaginary bee
the lion and the elephant and the pomegranate seeds turning into a hand grenade
it is scary
for the big fish with sharp razor tooth
swallowed the elephant that spit the lion
and give you the necessary injection
and then you sleep and wake up
without remembering anything except that pain in your back.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stone

there is something about the stone that i have been complaining for not being able to understand its choice to be silent and hard and numb and uncommitted when it is thrown in the river it makes no sound of protest when it is ground it does not scream when the rain comes it seems to be contented with being wet just the same when the sun shines and heats it
it makes no bother

until some naughty boy takes a stone and hits my head and when i begin to bleed seeing the very stone used staring at me without guilt for any responsibility at all
on the ground
that i begin to understand all these things what a stone is, how come that a stone shall always be a stone

no matter what.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stone Again

That night i humbled myself, bowed down to the image in the mirror upon a stoic silence i admit that i have been a shadow far away from my body i prostrate on the carpet that you stepped upon gave up my own name and then called myself the idiot happy and much solidified so real that i can feel the stone again inside my hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stone In You

It is your silence
That is full, and dark and deep Impenetrable
A vast desert
Spreading in a mirage Dry, deserted, so lonely To ever conceive
There is no music of the dunes There are no palms, no trees In your wordless existence

I am giving you
My full attention
You’re being alone in your deep darkness
The dawning may not come I have not heard the sound Of the coming of the sun Because of your ego Thick and tall
The silence that blocks you To have life
In the stone that is you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stone Looks Up To Heaven For Light

It starts as a lump of soft soil
The sun scorches it
And for years it has become this Hard stone

It has no face
Just this blank flat and smooth Edge
And some corners that the seasons Shaped

It is strong now Facing the sun looking for more light Mustering some courage to afford A stare
Without being destroyed

Indifference makes it
A name for itself
Hate it shuns out Love, it still has to know Perhaps in another season
The rain may send the message When

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stone That He Was Looking For Which He Found And Knocked Him Down

HE IS looking for something years and years he is looking for something which he found and which he cannot pick up and claim it as his own

it is a stone and the stone wants to knock him down it is the stone that he was looking for years and years until all his hair have turned into silver and this very stone that he found that he love is finally knocking him down the stone has become its marker and may he rest peacefully

forever

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stone That You Love

you are unique
for having loved a stone how did the stone entice you?

are you seduced by
its silence?
are you tempted by its solitude?

you take the pain
poking the stone to
your heart
and you bleed
you rub the stone in the skin of your body hoping that someday
the stone may have feelings and love you

but this is all useless the stone is a stone is a stone and there is no love in its blank stare
there is no softness in its belly

i ponder upon this and come to think of it you and the stone
are the same
on this hardheadedness
this futility
this numbness
this suffering without end the stone can never give a part of its cracks it will never part with its dust

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stone Thrower....

and why did you throw that stone into the sea?

ah, i remember
you want to please the child in me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stones Under My Feet

sometimes the stones amaze me as i tread upon them they hurt and they look at me as though asking questions what is it that hurts you most?

i like to answer but they are all too numb i think to understand any word that i say sometimes i like to hurt them in retaliation but i know i wouldn't work there is no way that they will say they get hurt there is nowhere where i can hurt any stone that i throw to the sea

a stone is gone but not forever as though it has its own feet and comes back to me asking the question again: what is it that hurts you most?

i know this vengeance there is no way that i will tell them my secret too is like a stone and it will come back to you without any word, still, silent, sagacious.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stopping By The Mountainside

i am taking more time going over it
and i probably will not understand
what you are really trying to tell me,
as you
have chosen the words
as carefully as grains for seeding in such a way that i am at a loss at what to say
to interpret
the images of your language

some are hazy as fog and i am the driver of the car that stops
for a while so i may not fall upon a cliff
off-road
exhausted

i get out of the car and wait for the fog to go and vanish
until the hills appear as they are
and not as something else as sister of mist or cloth of nakedness

yes, the things as they are my language are no longer hands no longer eyes even there is no word to match what beauty lies before
me what truth that is never said but this time only felt and unseen
because the eyes
are open.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stories We Long Want To Tell

it is all about stories.
stories we know by heart but still untold
we have fears you know that truth may be too much to take something may burst explode and there may be unnecessary deaths truth like war has to take also a form of chivalry this sense of humanity and grab or destroy only when necessary the least of harm, justify later that all is done in the name of a long and lasting peace love of the world
survival of mankind.

the stories are true you write at the end but the names, and places and events
have been elevated as art, as fiction, as seats arranged to make it look like that we are having a fine dinner all casts dressed regal and dignified.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Storm In My Sea Finally Subsided...

the storm of my sea finally subsides i am a chinese silk spread on the tranquility of the salty water seagulls leave because there is no fish to hunt and take upon their hungry beaks i have no regret, i have finally seen the sun across my whiter horizon i see boats and nets spread on my surface i am a very calm day soon the children will come and play throw balls on my white sands fill this space with laughter and not one of them will ask what a storm was, where there was a house here before but was taken by the rage of the wind

gone,

the children have nothing to do with the past they are not meant for that an old man arrives with a grandson, being helped to sit on one of the chairs in the shore under a shade of a big old tree he is the thinker of this storm this place he knows everything, but he is silent as a dead leaf on his feet he rests his head on a pillow puts his feet and hands in the fold wears his dark sunglasses and stares at the far far horizon i will join him when the sun finally sets, when the color of the horizon turns into orange and then black as i turn off the light.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Storm Last Night

that storm last night was a matter of life and death for both of us
we could not sleep
we clung to our hands we keep each other's bodies and for the worst hours we intertwined like the vines

the morning after there was peace and harmony.

i like that storm last night it would have been perfect for us if it did not stop

RIC S. BASTASA
The Storm Passes Us By....

the storm comes we let it pass upon the strong winds our hair are disheveled but we do not really mind the comb is there on the table with a glass of water and some gel
we just let it there
the storm passes us by
we take a mirror
to see it on its eye how beautiful are these disheveled hair in their natural state
most adorable.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stormy Sea

that boat was too small for this trip to the other island the ladies sat next to me and they were all silent to the sounds of the waves just beside us and i knew that with just one mistake, one mistake from the boatman that boat would have sunk but lo, how the boatman took the boat was kind of a very skilled skipper of the waves of the stormy sea like he was one surfer in California taking sides with each wave with so much art and beauty carefully scaling where safety lied and where danger waited for an ambush i was looking at each side of the huge waves until we reached Crocodile Island of course the ladies knew that it was no longer a joke but a matter of a skilled boatman making a choice between life and death.

we chose life and the ladies and the boatmen very well knew it.

the waves were too big for the small boat but our silence was even bigger. we survived.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Story About All Of Us....

in the rock island
all the blind witches are dreaming of eyes

you used to have two just like us but whatever they see
turn into stones

to lessen the damage one eye is removed yet they keep on looking not resting even during nighttime

for that is their power all seen by them turn to stones and so there was nothing to eat

they too die because they have nothing to eat anymore and so the gods remove all their eyes and now they are all blind but those who know the story still wonder why those who survive still dream about those very eyes that too turn them into stones despite.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Story About Having Two Navels...

could have always been even before navels exist that you have two, and it is really funny, but you always do not mind stories, you like everything alive in you, even for stories which were never true, you give it life, and so until now, the story, seems, and all stories, seem always to be true, but that, you think, how stories must be...alive always.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Story Behind The Fire This Morning before the house was razed by fire the old man visited the house and cried telling me about a young man who promised that if he ever loves another woman the house shall be burned to strip it of its meaning at 6:30 today early morning the firemen called it a day. The house is gone The old man gone. The young man gone.

i like to write the story behind all these misfortune
but i am afraid that some parts of it may not be true or that if true, it may not be fair at all, or that it be totally unjust so that there is no use writing it anymore

The old woman died a year ago She floated in air suffered vertigo
she gave up finally the young man to the world heard the promise of the old man who could not do anything when the house
got burned.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Story Of The Mad Man

at midnight
the old bell of the church roars

there is no funeral
there is no
birth

people imagine a world that is ending

a child cries
mother is dead

RIC S. BASTASA
The Story Of The Piano

because his papa
loves her that much at 12 he gifted her with a piano,

time passed
there were many stories told

at 50 she sold the piano to someone we do not really know there is no way to redeem what was lost forever what we all do not want to remember we simply let go at 60 her only trusted friend is the sunset her only hope

the long and lasting horizon

so much feelings lost until finally she turned numb and restive

RIC S. BASTASA
The Story Of The Sharp Tongue

with the repetitive sound of sighs and symmetrical silence the tongue has become sharp and it stabs hearts it breaks open what has been closed all along and hidden birds start breaking out from cages and feathers are left as memories which somehow the one who is left empty takes it to his heart and becomes his pen the lonely man writes with blood from his bleeding heart stabbed by the sharpness of his own past the sound becomes even more demanding like routine that you cannot refuse and somehow the silence becomes irregular, asymmetrical taking the shape of a scream, which the tongue most sharpened now slices into dust

and this reaches to the conclusion that no matter how sharp the tongue can be it too shall in the end turn into dust..............................

RIC S. BASTASA
The Story Of Utility......

take note
from the symphony of the letters, because sometimes we shroud
the literalness of metaphors and metaphors too become too literal in trying to camouflage

an obvious intellectualism of a fox,

remember the quick brown fox (it was not brown at all, neither was it a fox)

and do not forget that they were telling you that it jumped over the river on the side of the mountain, (for i went there
myself

and there was no river at all, neither a mountain)

in a sense it was the freedom of the mind its capacity for convolutions that makes the difference we throw what we take and we take what we throw away it was all about the typewrite strictly speaking

austerity measures fully considered how on the first day of her secretarial dream

she has to press the keys without anything in mind, and there you are in an overkill, writing the story putting the milky way in its traumatized place.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Straight Jacket

i am trying to shape
a world
with my own private thoughts away from the mob

i am situating myself in a room on closed doors and closed windows except the light that i allow to enter on glassy blocks the walls will always be there air comes through the ceiling on tiny holes

i tried to forget viewing the stars i must survive even without the light of the moon it is less romantic and i am no lunatic

but then she hints on what am i saying: the fish is meant for the sea the dog is always meant for a walk the sparrow cannot live without flying on its wings and she asks me: will you just be a poet?

or will you be the man for the seasons?

before she left, she left a note stuck on the fridge magnetically: you are more than the fish, the sparrow, the dog must i be? i sleep tightly like a straitjacket.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Stranger In The Mirror.....

the people around you make you doubt your goodness,

they are well dressed, ride in their expensive cars, defend their own causes,
at other people's expense, it is always a case of self and vested interest there is no such thing as benevolence or that genuine concern for the welfare of others, when you look at them again with their twisted values which are so unlike their well shaped faces their smooth skin and polished bearings matching well with their maintained luxuries you feel that you are this giant among the elves at the first impression of the moment these ants bite you and you feel so uncomfortable you give back their world of deception and oppression and you retreat in your own private room where your mirror lies, and you look at your face carefully, map out the terrains of your skin with your long fingers

you are a stranger in the world outside you you soon shall forget your name, your real work, your vision and your claimed mission you shall miss your roots you shall not find again your origin

RIC S. BASTASA
The Strong Hands That Touched Four Breasts.... alright, it is just a matter of liking that i like to be with you.

beyond that, what it is?

it is but a liking to be with you, but no, in this real world, liking is not hard like a commitment, words sometimes do not tally with actions.

she says, the house where you live does not tally with the address that you have written.

She is absolutely misled.

he says, this is just being me. To survive the hassle, I must lie.

and you who is so sweet like a pink rose, so gladly embraced it, like my strong hands to your four breasts.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Strong House We Built

When you marry
you just don't marry the bride
not just her but everything connected to her her family
her past
her previous sins and her often told
glories

most of the times you close your eyes and say
let life take me let destiny do the work let the stars of the heavens manage all these things let the zodiac
do the telling about what tomorrow may bring the road is not smooth there are ambushes of surprises there are no more explanations they have become too tiring the house has many windows it has four doors

it has three stairways
but no one leaves no one leaves for good or bad the promises stick like paint and the house is always repainted the distant pillars remain distant carrying this house this room and years upon years layers upon layers of memories have made this old house strong.

The Strong Links Of The Seasons in the chain of our seasons the links must be strong a silver present linked to that golden past and perhaps a titanium future connect them together

and then
hold on to all these links and climb the mountain and cliffs of life again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Struggle Is Endless

after the years of struggle the fighter now savors the spoils of the war he sits on a rocking chair with coffee on one hand and cigar on the other looks at the road in front of his house and cams himself down with the view a car passing by a woman with a green scarf driving her hair free to the directions of the wind some children playing in the park chasing and riding the seesaw on to the swing and the slide and grass he hears laughter and mothers' reminders and fathers fetching wife and kids from work and school now he is unto another struggle he got peace and progress he got wealth and work and whatever tonight when the day is over he sits again and watch the neon lights sipping wine and puffing cigars sleeps with lovers for rent and comes home drunk and tipsy this time it is the struggle within remorse, guilt, loveless forlorn, alone

lifeless, bored waking up in the morning swallowing alka seltzers and other pills
having breakfast with junk and watching TV
on another unsolved murders and scams.
RIC S. BASTASA
The Struggle Of Light And Darkness

the struggle of light and darkness is just like the changing of day and night and night and day where matters are just the routines of nature
changing its face

there are no winners
there are no losers

like a circle without a beginning without an end.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Struggle Within

you want to shoot the dog that bites your friend but you have second thoughts there is a rumor going on that the owner of the dog is your grand master.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Struggle Within Ourselves

the war within rages it is one battle
where the enemies
and friends are one where the antagonist and the protagonist
are the same person
where the answers
and the questions
look the same

RIC S. BASTASA
The Students

and so
all of you are trying to kill
yourselves

and here i am composing all the doubts

RIC S. BASTASA
The Subanen Tribal Elopement

he is seventeen
and she is sixteen and they are all
tight in their glowing skins

and they are so attracted their eyes glued to each other and they left

looking for a place where they cannot be reached

no need to worry
tell the parents
they are too young to start and manage

another seven kids for another native house where parents cannot be blamed for what they too did when they were so young and very much like all of them

RIC S. BASTASA
The Subconscious

inside a dream
it works its own way to you you are as wild as a vine in the forest beautiful as an orchid on the tree top

it is the dancing princess inside your heart the butterfly freely hovering from one flower to another an overflowing river without boundaries
or banks

when you wake up
you rebuild your fences again making them stronger higher

the light of the day creates the impression that you are as strong as your forts as protected as your moats feeling so secure with your forces your soldiers are all there your honor intact

at dawn you are happier the early morning begins in grief but there is so much strength and stronger defenses of your ego

the id is murdered again the super ego folds your arms and raises them for your greater glory you mourn the whole day there is no smile in your face

there is only
that well kept dignity
you post a poem
it is not that you believe in the integrity of the site, or the blog, you do not even attempt to find out who are there and what causes are they supporting you make a poem because the words are there and you do not even choose which word to use whether this rhymes with this or not it is just a matter of a word coming out from your fingertips
and then
they are there no filtering of meanings, no sifting of significances it flows like a river, it runs like a creek, it settles on some ponds it rains, and then it overflows and you make it run again like a flood, over reaching carrying all driftwood and all lost things you go under bridges, you even go on top of canals the words are terrible now on the streams of consciousness and then under the commands of the the subconscious actually you do not know what is happening your hands are merely riding on a wave your sight relying on the ripple you do not even feel that you have wings but Of God you Swear you are flying

the clouds pushing your heels into Space into the sleepy emptiness.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Successful Guy In Our Neighborhood

you see i know how to make a story i am good at inserting myself in the picture do not be angry
stories become more emphatic when we put ourselves there as though we are the characters themselves as though everything is true you may think that all these that i am telling are lies that will be fine with me you do not live in the place where i am living some people here tell the truth using all their possible lies and i believe them and feel them i am infected and i am contaminating those who read me and i tell myself what a success i've been

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sucker

finally you give up a load from your shoulder
the pleasing one that elf that used to flatter you but you did not know at first it has the mouth of a leech the face of the boa
the skin of a porcupine you see how it has hurt you you dislodge it like a louse and with your fingernails you press it against the wall it bursts
and so you go away satisfied with your last laugh
here
revenge is sweeter....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Suicidal In Him

too much intelligence is dangerous
my friend
too much idealism detached from reality one gets restless searching for the Shamala and the Shangrila

with a little sense of humor the ability to be one less of a perfect self the capacity to laugh at our errors to dismiss what is so important and just take things as they are dabbling on the prideless unselfish away from a self-centered universe

i guess, he could not have taken his own life.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Suicide That You Think You Deserve... when you put that bullet

in your heart,
we, who heard the news,
at first listened to the wild noise of the jackals, and then we pretend that no one left that nothing happened we are reading the papers we are focused on the news we, who are innocent, do not receive any blot of guilt,

as usual we do what we have
to do,
slowly, still as gentle as we are,
less still in life, and always well accounted,

we, who are still here, at the living room,
savor the just taste of your well chosen silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Suitor And The Spinster

and so
he sits beside her on that velvet sofa

she, on the other hand, careses
her great dane

the window is overlooking the hill and the chill
is nothing to count
as a spell

the great dane seems not to like this situation, barks at the man
as though
telling him that he is a pachyderm and hence must leave his love is not true.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Summary Execution

we are talking about changes of this country of this self of this and that and i like it

changes for the better, selves shedding off old skins, countries washed away, cleansers and cleansed, wave upon wave of something new and exhilarating those who are taken away we forget easily we the survivors keep on talking there is sense to being here, there is reason why we are still alive there are blessing in disguises then we begin counting off from one to ten to twenty to a hundred, we are seeing a network of cobwebs of people trapped in the matrix of fireflies extinct, and flies still wrapped in the sleep of paralysis, as soon we shall decide whether it will be life or death do we know too that someone bigger than us is watching and deep in his thinking about what to do with us finally?

He says, he can decide, and he can make or unmake us, too?

it is a case again of man dreaming to be a butterfly and butterfly dreaming to be man..., and i get confused, and they say it is a normal happening, it is in fact, a fact.

as the words continue parading during the utterances i remember a forest, and i was inside it, and there were killer chimps and chimpanzees killing each other, eating each other's flesh and saving some of the bones in their safe houses and hideouts, there is a chill in my spine, there is winter in my heart howls of jackals reverberate in my ear, and i am afraid of my own lies, and multiple identities, A-bomb of the class, Bombastic in my youth, Coward in my middle years, and Drunkard in between, and finally Deaf, and turning Eloquent in my near end years, I am change. I travel everyday. I grow stories in my fingertips.

Budding into old age. Forgetting and De-frogging. Kermit, Super Steel.
Soap Opera idol.

Lying low later, and in the heart of the matter, Still judging other le as a worm, Milk spilled over a Heart Breaking.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sun

it is basic the sun shines brightly even if you have to condemn it

it is public knowledge that when you spit
to the sky
you spit at your own
face

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sun Center

for the meantime
the sun center
is the self where all planets revolve,

there is comfort here
a self shining sun without that push outside only the eternal bursting
inside of gases
and fires,

the wars inside are myriad like cells multiplying upon itself in masturbation form

despite all these automated explosions outside is a calm space where what you see is the beautiful light
gently glittering in a faraway darkness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sun Does Not Shine Sometimes...

the sun does not shine
sometimes
paying respect to the gloomy mood
of the day
when it rains and rains
till nighttime
and some of us who are in the same mood as a grieving earth
fully understand
the reasons for a lamentation....

as we listen to the rain and sit alone in a room beside the window
somehow we are relieved
on that great feeling that we are not alone in all these tribulations

and then we cease
the sorrow
as we share a smile
to the passing wind
which too reminds
us

that everything
everything
sorrow or even joy is simply a passing...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sun, Sun Shines Now

the sun shines now
the

sky
is giving it to the surfaces of leaves

the leaves say

it has trapped it
it has taken it inside its veins

the sun goes away

the man says

the sun does not know everyone

it has not penetrated
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sun's Refusal...

tried to buy you a sunny day but my gosh!
the sun has no need for money

RIC S. BASTASA
The Surfaces Of Noise...

INSIDE the car
on a night like this when you go back home alone, you turn off

the music,
to listen to the sound of the engine
and the air-conditioning

you feel the way
how the gentleness of silence is being covered by a layer of the noise that technology has made

without which
the innermost longing that was never satisfied

screams.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Survivor....

the inner struggles
have been
not just few

the thinking
is like going to war and massive killings along the way

the mind is a survivor the body stands still people see you

like a pillar

the house is strong
the beams not trembling and the garden is simply beautiful

clouds hang on the roof

air goes in and out this constant
visitor

the doors are open
here

the windows are enigmatic

worries are like
urine
flooding the legs but the mind is quick like a diaper somehow the self is as elastic as the rubberized path like the one at the gym one goes back to the couch recalls, relates, a boat waits to ferry you back to your throat and heart there you spell the words perfectly and there the blood corpuscles have hands and you hear them clapping well done wait for the next journey outside the veins

RIC S. BASTASA
The Survivors...

it is another December we never look forward for change it will always be the same wind, same veranda, same road all these repetitions if we were to mind what damage could have it caused in our minds?

but look at us? seasoned souls burdened bodies may be, but have always coped up with what hammering is hurled against us.

as this year ends, let us drink again to this survival. It was never easy, but as always, we are okay.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Survivors....

they say
we did not promise you a rose garden we here are devastated
but only for a while we know that promises even when made are always made to be broken but they must know us they should have known us better we know how lies are concocted we understand the beauty and necessity of untruths
for us to survive
we ride with the wind dive into the sea
learning that power not to breath
and yet
live for years growing gills somehow beside our throats
just below the bones of our ears they should have known us we had been there and we keep on going we keep the chunks of clouds under our armpits sunlight in our hearts
under the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
trance.
chant.
focus, the white flowers are blooming on the rolling sides of the hill, the trees are lush with leaves the skies as clear as air, blue clouds hang and then keep on moving along the same direction with the winds
trance,
chant,
focus,
lotus position, the mind as crown
the heart beats
so faintly,
the ants are waiting the worms are calling attention
the grass creeps
as the tomb-keeper
carves a name
on a slab
it has the same letter of your first name..

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sweetest Lie

when i arrive there
the window is closed
i know a shadow
lurking behind it
i sense desire you peep and i see you your eyes speak
that i may come inside the door that is half open
i do not think that much i enter the door
and close it behind me

two shadows fade
when the lights are switched off we feast on such a beautiful silence

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sweetest Pillow Where My Head Rests Tonight that i have done you no wrong

is the softest pillow where i shall rest my head tonight when the goddess of sleep and dreams shall lie with me again forever friends respecting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sweetest Songs Of Peace

the angels have come this early morning in the little room in this little house in this little island in my little time

now they are singing the sweetest songs of peace while i am sleeping

i must be dreaming
pinch me, pinch me

the islands line themselves like boats like men and women in an array in the order of things lining up in this system

they are listening
i must be dreaming
pinch me! pinch me!
wake me! wake me up!
i must be dreaming

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sweetest Sound

i hear the rain
pit-pattering on the roof

after six months of drought.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sweetness Of Us

the sweetness
lies
when the two of us simply wish
upon a single star

when we look forward in the same direction to one sky no matter
how dark

when we wish
for the moon
to shine
upon us

when we do not have
time
to look for the speck of dust in each other's eye

when we close our eyes
and dream
we we lose ourselves
in us
without asking why

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sweetness Of You.

do not ever forget the sweet sound of your own voice.

it is yours.
And for a lifetime, it will always
be yours.

Who in this world has created the standard of what a sweet
voice
can sing?
nobody.
Trust your instincts.
Live the nights.
Listen.

Even the moon is saying,
' you are so sweet with me'

learn to love yourself.
it is the beginning of everything.
By all means,
God understands
the sweetness of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Sweeping Sound Early Morning

early morning the sound of sweeping the street catches your attention, you have just taken a bath, undergoing the require cleansing of the body, combing the hair, checking the nails for dirt, trimming your mustache, wiping the wet portions of your body, perfuming the side of the ears and the hands, it is a ritual, it is like cleaning the body to give the impression that you have also cleaned your soul praying, talking to yourself, grasping for any message from your dream last night, listening to the voice of God, your conscience whispering what to do for the day you take the last button, look at yourself in the mirror, you take the deep breath, open the window, and then face a new day. It is still you, along with you, talking to yourself.

You are brave, and now ready to face the demands of the brand new day.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Swift Wings Of Time haven't you learned your lesson? you call a friend he is busy attending to a new born child you call a cousin

he is getting married and busy preparing for his wedding

the last one you call had already gone to the U.S. on a care giving job

a niece has just flown to Canada
bringing with her
a family of her own
now

you accept it as a fact again you are on your own trail again left out by the swift wings of
time
wondering if you have something to hold on
and survive...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Swing At The Balcony Of The House

WE have changed.
I keep an eye open.
My hands are on my lap.

Patience always knows How to wait.

You sit beside me.
You place your hands beside mine.

You lay your head
Upon my shoulder.

We sit looking towards
The road
AS the sun fades slowly Inside our Silent hearts.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Symbol Of My Clan Is The Frog, But Why?

it must be because it is tailless, aquatic,
semiaquatic,
or terrestrial amphibians
a smooth moist skin,
webbed feet,
and long hind legs adapted for leaping.

or is it because it is wedge-shaped and can very well be taken as a
horny prominence in the sole of a horse's hoof did my ancestors mean a loop fastened to a

to hold a tool
to a weapon?

what if they hinted on an ornamental looped braid
or cord with a button or knot for fastening the front of a garment?

well, a frog can also be understood as a device on intersecting railroad tracks that permits wheels to cross the junction or a spiked or perforated device used to support stems in a flower arrangement or the common nut of a violin bow or the hoarseness

of voices
the phlegm
in our throats or something so disparaging for one who looks like French,

you see, in our reunion
today
with the rest of the clan members they all arrive at one conclusion,

why did our ancestors
choose the frog
of all the creatures
in the river nearby
where they once thrived and lived?

i still suspect
it was meant for survival

the ability to live in both worlds of land
and water

because in truth
they were once doves
escaping
from a very far island to free themselves from the snakes
and crocodiles
and dragons

and they were almost annihilated
in the air
there
oh! how they hated
the fall
from the air
oh! how they disliked air since then

now, they have evolved into frogs, and i feel like
i am
a very interesting tadpole since then

RIC S. BASTASA
The Symbolism In A Painting

There is an stiletto shoe hiding at your back You ponder upon this Looking at a shadow That is taller than Half of your body There is a stone that Marks a place That you wish was not There.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Symbolism That You Gave To The Poems Of Pablo Neruda your feet hangs on the sand your body flat the poems of Pablo are contained in a book Five Decades of Poetry on top of your belly just near the center of your swimming trunks wet and white

your navel is surrounded by masculine hair and the book slides just below there beside is a dark tainted glass and a bottle of mineral water from Nature Springs your feet are shaped like the wings of a dove shielding you from the faint horizon of the sea quite far away blue clouds faint like hues of sky blue Half of your body without a face

RIC S. BASTASA
The Symphony Of Nature In The Mountain Where I Am Stranded

rains fall
and a bird chirps

the rain stops
and the world is silent

clouds drift from one mountain to another

sun creates a shadow on the hills

a wild deer runs towards the forest

a flock of black crows hover on a tree of berries grass spread gently a cow grazes upon it up there a jet slices the sky perhaps wanting to cut it this is the place where i can hear my self tomorrow i shall leave carrying with me fullness.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Taiwanese

when we are chatting i am also chatting with a man from taiwan
who claims he also knows the games of life what games
he says anything from love to weddings to baptisms except....

(and he does not want to mention this) but i tell him, and ask him,

death.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Talk

since you did not come for the much needed talk the old man talks to his horse the spinster talks to the tree the baby talks to its crib the little girl talks to her doll the mother talks to the picture of her daughter the father talks to the bicycle grandma talks to her rocking chair and then i talk to myself like the way i write another letter to you....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Talk By The Door

they were all prim and proper these preachers in town complete with bible on their hands and leaflets

i meet them at the porch and they all smile
for i welcome them and they talk about Jesus

my friend
and they talk about the afterlife my objective too

and then i serve them coffee and pie too
and then i say i am tired and wants to take a nap.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Talks Of The Souls

the spirits talk
last night about their regrets over the bodies, neglected by you look at you

your stomach is bloated your arms are thin like stirring rods
your mustache like some uncut vines in the forest you stink like a skunk your lips crack
and your feet are muddy soon the souls come to the inevitable conclusion that they do not deserve such a body as yours and you shall know what happens next

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tall Edifice That Is Built On Our Land

ey they all look at the tall edifice
build on our very own land
they forget
that no matter how tall the edifice
is how it has become their god
it is still subject to the limitations
of our own ownership and so soon
we shall not even touch it as it begins to crumple itself like the dust in the desert blown
by our own
lawful wind.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tango And The Finale...

the symbol of our
years is the tango

as i advance my steps you retreat

people clap
we are as beautiful

as a pair of love birds inside a cage of silver with gold engravings

containing the date and the exact hour of our union, going back as you advance i too

retreat, that is the rule of fire and water

i touch you, you twirl
the eye signals

powerful, as words turn inutile, we walk with

with pomp and dignity and you bend to rise

and be with my arms
again finally and people clap because we are having that perfect timing the grace of this union the pomp of counted steps until we get exhausted as i let you go

and then i find you looking at another direction.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tango Dance.....

it is not your own fault
alone, we danced
the tango
together, and if i stepped on your shoe
it was because i was no longer
thinking of you
and if you too did not complain
it is probably of the same reason,
you too were thinking of something else
or someone else or
that you have been not thinking
anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tango That We Dance

as i walk towards you you move backwards so i cannot step on your toe,

i pull you down to the floor and you lay yourself open to my kiss

i did not.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Task Every Morning Before Breakfast

maybe it will just be once every dawn

or just once every weekend

or if you ask
may just once a month

because the body maybe is so exhausted

but no
i will not stop

i will still do it twice or even five times every morning even if the body is tired even if you do not like doing it anymore it is delicious

it is wonderful

it is as though i had just an ejaculation it is as though I've seen heaven so here i am with this craft again even if you are no longer around writing poems religiously every morning.

bisag kausa lang sa
matag kaadlawon

bisag kausa na lang
sa matag semana

o kon mohangyo ka
bisag kausa na lang sa matag bulan kay basin og kapoy na kaayo ang lawas

dili mahimo
buhaton ko lang gayod gihapon sa matag buntag

kaduha kalima pa gani

bisag kapoy na kaayo ang lawas bisag dili na nimo gusto

lami man god
mora kog magawsan og kadaghan

lami man god
mora kog kakitag langit

bisan wala ka na
mosulat lang jud ko gihapon og mga balak

RIC S. BASTASA
The Taste Of Blood....

father has a square jaw.
so did grandpa.

when they get angry
it is like the earth sliding its plates.

earthquake of fear
and regrets of the flower opening to a sky.

i inherited a square jaw.
how can i deny this?

both hate poetry. i am deviant.
i love poetry.

both hate me. words are cheap.
and metaphor is sissy.

when i get angry, i take refuge in a cave of silence. i listen to water dripping from the outside world.

i see roots of trees falling and i know where the river is underneath this existence, this life is a tunnel where a red water runs, who knows that it is red when it is dark and flowing?

except perhaps this tongue that knows the taste of blood.
The Tattoos

his arms are filled with tattoos a dragon crawls over his body an eagle on his chest a rose on his back

i have to study more if he is significant at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Teacher

The teacher must know
As Plato once
Well said it
Years ago,

A teacher is but a midwife
But the disciple
The student
Is still the one who Gets himself Impregnated with Ideas

The teacher simply helps In giving the birth Of the ideas that
The student must himself Conceive

When the ideas are born
The teacher cares for them Newly born babies
Now having exciting lives
Of their own

The teacher watches them Very well pleased,
Excited for something new Greater than himself, Rising above
Almost all else, then the teacher Claps his hands & then Happily dies,
His mission is accomplished.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Teacher

be happy
for the one you tutored made it to the top
you are the teacher
your heart must rejoice in this having set aside yourself for someone to excel

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tears From Your Eyes....

even the earth had to rain

do not deny
your eyes
of its tears

soon you will be attuned
to all these
and then
perhaps you will like the saltiness of its taste
sooner

RIC S. BASTASA
The Teaser

So you are alone?
What now, what about your being alone?

You write a poem about it?
Let me see and read it.

(reads like reading an electric bill for January)

there is nothing here, everyone feels like you do except that you write about it, and you call yourself a poet,

I don’t think it will make a difference
Do you drink san mig beer?

Do you smoke 2 packs of Marlboro A day? You don’t? Why not try it?

Let me see your choice of words,

(reads the poem again)

There is nothing in here that Makes you different from the rest Of us, smokers and drinkers and Gamblers. What makes you think You are not like us? Huh?

(crumples the paper where the poem is written and leaves, he picks it up and smoothens it folds it like his blanket and slides it in his pocket like a paycheck) The Teasing Moon....

sometimes to complete the woodenness of the floor you simply have to close the door make the planks exclusive to its beams
with all the nails
sleeping

the windows with open eyes beg to be exempted from the hassle
of privacy

the view of the sea making love to the sky is simply irresistible the moon is teasing you to take the boat but to do this you need to open the door of the house where no one lives.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Teddy Bear In My Room?

i write a poem
for you, and for a time, after a poem or two,

life begins to bore me,
a writer,

and so i decide to go out from this cell, and i open a door and step outside in the cold

afternoon, and i take a stroll hoping to think some more, why life should not be boring

after all,
and i think about nothing and just let my senses go where they want to go,
the eyes to the end of this road, the ears on their interest to the sound of the wind and some gossipy breeze, my feet are complaining and so are the hands,

and this body is not united like this country where i live, and i promise myself to write another poem after this wandering, perhaps about nothing at all, for what is there that has substance?

what is there which tells me about the contentment of content? that which must be snatched from the beautiful hold of this universe and be stuffed like a teddy bear in my room?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Temptation

youth is tempted to step on the island of light of fame
and it pays the price of shedding off its raw skin

the old corruption of the furrowed flesh
laughs the hardest

those who died and
forgotten
all know that at the center of the stage lights there is nothing there except some hurtful shadows
air and sighs.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Temptation Of Marvin

there is an apple
hanging on the tree
there is woman picking it and biting it there is no snake it is dark and the place is just lighted by fireflies and up in the sky the stars are silent

you are naked
bathing with the light of the moon
there is this heat
between your legs
that you feel

she says' the apple is sweet' and wants to share a bite with you

RIC S. BASTASA
i watch a beautiful body sprawled on a white carpet
floor

the floor is sturdy in age
reddish

it looks like fire
as i gaze for long salivating

milk lots of it spilling seeping on the cracks of the aged planks of red hard wood

i salivate like a dog imagining a set of bones
with clinging meat glistening
under the sun

what a beautiful taste could it be only if i had the courage to be a dog mad about bones

kneel on the bed prostrate my self on the floor and lick a milky way into my mouth into my body which is hollow in its bamboo-ness like space without its planets in loneliness

RIC S. BASTASA
it is like a brick
just some bricks
day by day
and day by day
i lay those bricks
some on the brink
of breaking days
day by day
but know what i do not get tired laying those bricks
as always i think of building
our future
cathedral.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tenant

the tenant bought the land owned by my father and he comes here behaving like my father who thought the land is the only world where he can portray him self as a master, ohh, this is not the case any more that what you know i know. The land is gone and so shall my father be ohh, i am very happy, the kind of opression we all tasted is over now. We shall rejoice for this loss.
This is freedom and this is victory. At last i am free. The curse shall now be his own, not mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tent

actually, i do not go for your tent
as a definition of what marriage is
not,

i still think that my marriage is a big house with the convenience of five chambermaids a butler
and a driver.

with a last note,
we have fire inside the chimney
we have smoke
for the atmosphere
and we have warmth
even in summer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tenth

the tenth is always my ending the tenth of a day and the tenth of what i am the rest shall not be yours for the universe owns it the rest scatters itself a no man's land

a place for all air and dusts a place for all the shining stars there is light, and space and

eternity
like the longings of the heart like the droplets
of memories

the tenth as gift
and nothing more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thou shalt not covet
thy neighbor's poem;
neither shalt thou desire...
his metaphors,
nor his similes,
nor his oxymorons,
nor his ironies
his metalepsis
his paradoxes his anthimeria
his litotes,
ellipses,
zeugma,
anapodoton,
epizeuxis,
anaphora,
pleonasm
nor anything
that is his.
etcetera etcetera

The tenth poem forbids
coveting the poems
of another.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Term 'Visitor'

i am trying to delve deeper into the meaning of the word 'visitor' a term once used by him, to explain why he lives on a rented house and keeps just a bed, a table and a chair and some books and poems and stories that he keep on telling nothing more of any sort like a refrigerator or a personal computer, simply because he is just a 'visitor' here, and then there came a 'sickness' for a 'visitor' in the house and that is precisely the moment when i begin to understand what this word really means, why we do not need much, why we discuss nothing about land, or money, or even friends as permanent possessions, as hindrances even to our next journey, why we should not have mansions and flashy cars, why we should not talk that much during dinners, or scream or laugh when either a child is born or when a lighting strikes and hits the one you claim you love.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Terror In Paris

the terror in Paris
spoils all the breakfasts and dinners of humanity

still rising the number of those who are dead and who will die
like flickers of light from a fire cracker at night there is no need to know what is the philosophy behind all these?

there is no justification for terror there is never, never, never one and a thousand rationalization this world shall grieve all those responsible shall be cursed!

RIC S. BASTASA
good morning i am here who's this please?

i am rest.

Rest who?

Eternal Rest.

Eternal Rest Who?

I am death.

Death Who?

I am silence.

Silence who?

Please do not deny Me.
I am Death. I am Real.
I am Coming to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Theater Is Still There.

manuel has been busy all the while preaching about how this world
shall end soon

i wonder how he still copes up with daily living somewhere in uptown chicago taking care of the old people for a fee

i remember those sunrises and sunsets in the philippines when we studied in one of those religious universities getting honors for ourselves until we parted ways

i go for the world and gets flexible with its ways while manuel retreated to the tenets of religion

i guess the world does not
end. My wife says it is we that end. Curtains fall.
The actors are out. The stage remains.

The theater is still there.
As the city lights flicker deep in the nights
where people walk and talk not so conscious of their endings.
The Theory And Remedy

Time in a billion years after Shall cease
And everything grinds to a halt,

Do you not feel the distant stars Moving faster away from you?

Things move away rapidly Stars explode
On the fringes of this universe Shooting through space

Jump then to another
Universe
Before ours gets used up

The luxury of worrying About our age

Shall now dissipate
On a rundown universe

At any rate why Worry? I do not intend to go 60
33 was just perfect.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Theory Of Order And Unity....

in lack in the shortness of our lives and breaths when we have vacated what we are when we have given everything when we have finally divested ourselves with what is borrowed we start to sense the completion of this mission
letting go those birds from their cages opening those doors breaking all the locks letting in the winds of freedom erasing the shadows because we have embraced the light
we we are finally lost into the ocean of this universe reunited with that Being then we are perfect so complete that we do not touch any part of us because we are part of them the vastness of
eternity.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Thief

IT IS
still far better nice to hear the sound of the black bird with red eyes
eating
one of the ripe bananas that hangs
upon its trunk
in my orchard.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Thieves Of Youth....

love cannot thrive that long stealing

were we not once kids stealing eggs from bird's nests?

we cannot be kids
for that long how can there be
birds?

did we not feel excited over another
neighbor's mango?

they will understand how kids are but we are not kids
anymore

we shy away from stolen moments
we take glances and walk away
because now we have understood fully
what is not ours.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Thing In Itself

a white chicken
egg
on top of porcelain saucer
beside a silver spoon

the mahogany table is one legged
with a big round base keeping it balanced amidst this elliptical space

up the ceiling is a round 220 bulb lending light
to the room

the white egg stands
like a zero
above a underline

we let our gaze
stroll at the bridge of our nose

we listen
how these things in themselves relate to us without words.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Things In Our Hands

In the nooks of silence we keep things in our hands not in the shape of a fist but that of a dove

which coos
in the light redness of a rose we drink no water not even dew and be still

with the best of the few the windows that we keep closed one morning shall open upon themselves less the hands of time less the mind of the skies

lights burst but not with the sun

bodies are buried not with the earth and

without the niche that mostly life expects to see

RIC S. BASTASA
The Third Letter To Mac

dear mac, this is what I have to tell you now, I retained for my own everlasting keeping this poem

of death

death
death
death
death

do not read it with your lips it may cast a spell on you don’t say creep it is true it is real who can argue about it who can argue without it if it is giving you shivers then you are not real you are an agnostic who doubts everything even yourself bye bye bye mac

may we have peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Third One

The three of them sat before the window looking at the sea. One talked about the sea. The second listened. The third neither spoke nor listened; he was deep in the sea; he floated. Behind the window panes, his movements were slow, clear in the thin pale blue. He was exploring a sunken ship. He rang the dead bell for the watch; fine bubbles rose bursting with a soft sound - suddenly, 'Did he drown? ' asked one; the other said: 'He drowned.' The third one looked at them helpless from the bottom of the sea, the way one looks at drowned people.

-yannis ritsos

RIC S. BASTASA
The Third Part: Loose Talk

because we have so many things still to be done,
we have lost our sense of time the capacity to grow affections have become nil, in fact, shrinking like the way the speed of light twice its speed has shrunk my eyes into a mongo bean my heart now a tiny part of a red pear that hangs itself upon a very loose talk

RIC S. BASTASA
The Third Witness

he said instead of the warrant of arrest the police officer aimed a gun at him and so he looked at the sky called upon God and then he closed his eyes and bowed and knelled on the ground and kissed the sands and then he ran away
to nowhere.....

he did not know what happened next.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Third Woman

She is the offer whom I accepted.
My heart and my head were bartered.
Such a price that I pay, I have less My heart and my thoughts, but I manage though For all these years

Oh she is beautiful and my flesh trembled
And I surrender without conditions
I am helpless
I am despite,
I am dumb.
But I assure myself, things will turn out just fine As planned
As patiently planned

She will not talk and she will not answer questions About her past and what the future brings her She lies before me, she will be beside me Her mind somewhere else, her heart not on her breast And she tells me she loves me And will do whatever it takes to comply with the contract

She also surrenders
She is helpless
She is despite
She is also dumb like me.

Sometimes I recall, have I ever invited her out for dinner So my friends will know her?
How unkind, she is always designed as a woman-object Fit for my bed.

We are miserable. What we need is a little time to stop this.
We shall figure it out sometime When all the two women are dead.

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
The Third Xanor

coffee cannot help it keeps me awake
but that is not enough to conquer this lousy feeling

tonight the ants
are busy carrying the gifts
the lizards stare
at me
upside down

the window is open
i let the wind come in to join me in this loneliness

i sit staring the darkness i turn off the light
there is no moon there are no stars

the second pill of xanor shall take me
to another true encounter
with you

you that i cannot defeat nothing conquers you this love, this surrender this stupidity!

RIC S. BASTASA
now i have seen your world tumble it is reversed now, the roof has become the floor and you suffer and here i am comforting you that somehow you are a strong woman who can endure all these you can build a new house again
sooner
you can put the windows in the number that you want it some doors of privacy
a garden of red roses a trail of green grass and you can put more stars than what you had before i am silent somehow about what you did when you were one of those heavenly bodied before everything fell off the sky where you lived once was filled with the arrogance of your meteors
the greed of your spaces the deceit of your looks and the inhumanity of your acts have polluted
what once were clear rivers where all used to drink for life

so many died because of your hatred
so many were maimed because of your indifference
and now
the gods must have rewarded you with what is due you and you now complain about an indescribable pain this suffering that seems so endless

you are weighed by the Furies now and you have weighed less than expected

i only have pity for you but to bring you to my world i must not perhaps tell you but i must admit i can't.

because you now deserve to suffer for another hundred years the gods
are thirsty...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Thorns

did the white rose know that the thorns
on her side
just below her petals are the ones that make her appear
pure and beautiful?

it is the logic
of contrast and the art of elimination that work out well
in making us give the most of what we are
and not the idealism
of the category which only says what we ought to be
we become because of constraint and necessity
and so here we are always on the reconstruction not because of the fulfillment of desire
but because of the prosperity and intensity the industry of pain

RIC S. BASTASA
The Threat In Mindanao

there is no need of a crystal ball to see what is really happening and why
we shall all predict the next event it starts with a mild attack and there will be so much talk over tv and the radio where the ears of the masses are stuck they will hear about some ears cut and bodies of children mutilated buses burned and mass evacuation of innocent civilians on the hinterlands of known places

mosques and churches shall not be spared surely these will ignite religious hatred and stir the hearts of all good men

it will take days and days of violence muslims and christians killing one another ignoring their faiths within their hearts that they are brothers under one roof

if we only listen to the laughter of the lying woman who plans all these things to prolong her life for another set of six years or more like the old man who died of lupus
many years back

she learns from him and will work the plan layed beforehand it does not matter who dies and who kills what matters most is power we must not lose track of our belief as brothers keep us in your mosque as we too shall keep your women and children in our churches in our houses and places of peace we shall remain as children of one God let us pray that her lies shall not cause the annihilation of us all we are the true owners of this place and not her or her cohorts her own devils spread wearing the faces of gentle men

RIC S. BASTASA
The Threat....

the river today
is clear, slow in its flow, monotonous

the cloud above it looks for its
face
in today's river

it is this blur that makes it drift

the river rage is not totally gone

tonight it shall tell the moon
what are some possibilities of anger

it is this anger that makes the cloud heavy and it is this heaviness that makes the rain

that finally makes
the storm

RIC S. BASTASA
The Three Gifts Of The Magi

gold symbolizing virtue, frankincense symbolizing prayer, and myrrh symbolizing suffering gold kingship on earth,

frankincense
of priestship,
and myrrh
for death.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Three Lonely Faces

the rain
in trickles has arrived at the right time

jibing with the three lonely faces of women arriving
in one car from a distant city

in a few minutes
the entertainment shall begin

breakfast is served at the back of the house just behind
the dirty kitchen where a native
chicken is roasted

i am sleepy
with my dirty clothes
on my pants smell like a dead rat

i am the usual insomniac coping up with early morning's demands and these visitors too
i must cater

and these lonely ladies noticing my discomfort or inconvenience
this tipsy posture

i think
do not mind at all

for they know me
and i know them well too for quite a long, long time

tonight
we will drink hard liquor and talk about the miseries of other people

& then we will be merry
we will be happier together as we start
all over again
backbiting the moon quite far from where we are falling
drunk, wishing for something much worse than death....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Three Of Them Last Night...

nice watching it is marcelo and his friend and they both work for the pay

gina watches them last night and she writes a poem
about it
last night...she begins... last night... she met

love and makes it leave marcelo and his friend walk away because gina loves the poem more marcelo is no writer to understand what is this poem all about gina the fading night and marcelo is the morning and the friend is a tree carved in the room of their memories.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Three Women Of My Life

morning, noon and nighttime, the girl, the woman, the mother.

beauty, wisdom, and truth the true, the good and the beautiful the gourmet, the philosopher, the sexy lady heaven, earth, fire water, fire, earth,

the word, the phrase, the sentence the doctor, the nurse, the poetess charity, joy, and hope love, lust and both.

dream, reality, fantasy.

sadness, happiness, indifference ey they are all there in the shores of my life i am the wind, the wave, the sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Three-Day Spree Somewhere Somehow Someday

Three days is well planned but the execution turns out a little bit odd on the first day i had Hawaiian pizza and Greek salad and tomato soup and the night goes smooth like a tequila the second day gives me a bitter tongue nothing sour everything bitter nothing for sugar the night has become a horror air con is full but the body still heats up like a turbine electrifying yet nothing about light and breeze the following morning i pack up takes the boat and despite the storm still heads for

home

still you, still you, i surrender, i am this toothless tiger for your extinction

RIC S. BASTASA
The Thrower.....

i am always ready
to throw away everything.

something that you call love, i can throw that away too.

faith, i can throw that away too
if needed

hope, the last one, is hope, do not ask me, but i have thrown that away too many many times, countless times ask me what makes me a survivor?

well, simple, i am a thrower.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Thrownness Existence...

there are no compromises no talks about survival kits
in this
we are into this 'thrownness' and we simply evade what is important to our lives we never discuss what tomorrow will be when we meet we only inform ourselves that tomorrow each will be in another place places that have no junctions not parallel universes that go extinct because we simply do not allow it to move and be free

well this is it, we never understand how we come here anyway where we are going and what we are really meant to be you clean the garden and then leave the plants on their own whether they wither

that is for the next occupant to do we come

we go
we do not come back

in essence, what for?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ticking Clocks

all my cells
are ticking clocks like ticking
bombs
about to explode
like
stars losing their own lights.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Time Comes......

the time comes
when you begin to lose

that belief on yourself and you give way

you walk alone outside without any door to open as everything is spacious filled with myriad choices a line of trees, which tree really? synchronized benches, all white and heaps of dry leaves, mothers watching kids, which lad? lovers kissing on the grass, and then it rains, people run for shelter, mothers taking back their kids, car windows close, and you are left alone, remembering how to dance in the rain, to be finally unmindful of the rest and what happens next, or when the rain stops.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Time For Hovering....

The Time Has Come

the time has come for the arrival of this stranger from a very faraway land. you meet him.
make him sit. ask him if he needs a drink and you give him gin, beer, whatever that pleases him.
you make him comfortable at last
in your home. make him find his room.
the pillows and blankets all to his choosing. the dinner that you serve.
the shower that he has to take.
the nice conversations you will have
for a while
with this stranger. you care for him you assure  tell him you miss him. you bring him to the mirror to see how beautiful has he become for that time that you have been taken apart
you embrace him tightly.
you cry.
you wipe your tears and sit at the center of the living room.
you look carefully how distance must have destroyed the closeness between you and him.

you shake your hand.
it is you now. this stranger is yourself.
you welcome him home
to your very arms.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Time Is Always Now

we face light
and leave darkness
behind

we have these two hands each one can

for the meantime
hold all these things
together:

doubt and certainty
hope and despair
past and future
i, you and others

now is always the time for juggling

RIC S. BASTASA
The Time That Slips On My Hands

the time that slips on my hands splits through my fingers so fast like a dream that cuts itself before dawn when i wake up sweating and feel the need of a glass of cold water

slowly the sands of time fall on my feet

the winds of change blow it
and then
i feel the emptiness of its
departure

the heart is left wondering what is it that is left undone the mind has answers but as usual it fails to consider the reasoning ability of feelings you look at fate in the eye feeling so guilty and wasted

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tinge.....

i am testing
my own sound

voice from deep within, a little

pain, and trickles
of happy moments,

i let a voice go
bouncing upon the side of a mountain

cliff and it comes

back to me, trying to convince me that i am one of those that own a vocal

chord with some poetic, ah, tinge.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tinker Of Words The Imagist At Work

early dawns
are stressed frogs they cannot sing
their croaking throats
there is simply no rain here

they change themselves into poets
to demean you and what you do

they swim in the air (as there is no water here yet
as there is no rain
and that is logical enough
to understand)
and the birds
laugh

their tongues are as small as a punctuation mark of their
poems
that croak like a frog

as i watch all these from the hammock
that mocks
i fall into a deep sleep like Alice
into the big hole
of my indignant indifference

pure imagination
seeking the support of logic yet hollow still because there is really no one there

nothing human like a friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tiny Bird Has Learned To Fly Away

THE meeting is a surprise.

Very brief.

Twas like you were a cliff
and at the tip of your head
i was a bird

Tiny like a sparrow and then you asked me to explore the abyss of your body

i was a little bit suspicious

Going down there
means i have to be careful with my wings
since the excitement was too much

with the last alibi
that my wings are too
tiny
like my claws

i flew away from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tiny Bird Indecisive On My Lap

there is a tiny bird on my lap that wants to fly away

i can be an edge of a cliff for a start and then if it is indecisive to act swiftly on a certain doubt

i can be a finger that makes a snap and tell it

what exactly is time all about time is not time unless we are in it

when we speak and when we become so silent

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tipping Point

you do not need everybody to be yourself life is too simple and what you need is only some important links to get your message across

beware, the rest are nothing but surpluses
and yet they have the nerve and the impulse to feel so important.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tongue Of Albert

of course, i am confident.

You have seen the famous tongue of Albert Einstein
after he wrote the e=mc2
you think he is original on
this
nope, he copied it
from an unknown chemist who believed that man has a soul
not the formula
but the moron
tongue.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tony Encounter At Myrna’s Coffee Shop

I really admire him giving me his time For a good coffee at nine Matched with choco-raisin cake

Bespectacled tony Jesuit priest
White barong
Still slim
And walks
With counted
Composure
He looks at me
With a eye
For a mistake
Keen eyes
Frisking my soul

“You’re flourishing” he said.

I am fat
Tall and pumpkin cheeks I can say
I have a basketball Inside my Pink polo shirt
As gift from an OFW
I sip my coffee
Sliced my choco cake
With a fork
And take a Big bite
I am flabby
After I left
The seminary
Where we were buddies

“you’re strong” I thought.
I could not be stopped Asking him:
how did you manage to stay as Jesuit?
Did you have a lot of struggles?
You like the solitude, do you?
Do you have a strict routinary prayer?
How is you religious life?

How’s your sex life?

"It is a grace, a gift", he blurted.

"We live in poverty
All our salaries go to the Jesuit society".

He gave me the sad news About sonny leaving the novitiate
Years ago
About Roy leaving the priesthood A few months ago,
And Fr. Mac pulled out
From Arvisu and now
Chaplain of the PGH,
A sore.

“What could be the possible explanation Why priests are leaving? ” “Has the Jesuit society studied the trend And found the explanations? ” I asked him.

“We are a few now”
“We will have a new campaign For vocations” he answers.

“I will be leaving for a consultors’ meeting Tomorrow for an early flight to manila Then I will be in Davao for another Important meeting.
Just his afternoon
I met with a benefactor who will give 65 dollars a month for our scholars” still tony talking.

What I cannot forget, as he cancelled my Room reservation at the Jesuit house As I decided to stay in the hotel instead, “You saw the light, and we are still blind”, he said with a rush.

It was ironic, I know, and I will be thinking About his answer, for nights and years.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Touch You Give Me

the touch you give me
is the feel of silk today the color is pink and the scent is this link between you and i

sweet and high

you are so soft
how can i be aloof?

you are so beautiful
naked and full.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tour....

the good poets
are here singing along the stone roads
passing by the pyramids of giza starting from the cobbled stones in jerusalem sailing in tiberias floating in the dead sea and contemplated on the parting of the red sea

the songs are just perfect for me.
around the poets are the merchants along the temptation mountains most of those who ought to listen bought fake perfumes and scarfs and imperfect mosaic of those faces of our revered saints and goddesses

the good poets are silenced by your unbeliefs your faiths have gone cold and bloody

children watch and then die.
icons multiply like mirrors.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tourist Life Of Nineteen Days....

in those early mornings we all rise
always chasing time, the crippled fat man from Cuba had to do the same

we all want to see all the corners of the earth

great canyon, yosemite, fisherman's wharf,
the portolas and the gondolas
the casinos and the shows what did we get? what did we see?

when we arrive home after miami
we want to tell what was there
what happened
we want to talk and keep the rest silent

and they wonder what have we become: selfish from the first hour
till the last

nothing has changed
we left and we have arrived rude and mean as they call it like a certain jay speak it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tragedy Of The Man

for years he followed the fool idolized that foolishness even he lost himself and could not recover back his real identity was he able to drink that witch's potion?

one day his eyes open to the other possibilities realized that the witch is eating him piece by piece until only his bones were left it was too late
he is only a set of bones without any cartilages to link one
to the other

that i think was his tragedy and so we pray
may the witch die
may our potions expire may we know how to graft
flesh
may we know how to wrap with skin
our bones

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tragedy Of This World...

the tragedy of this world is not mine alone this is our greed our very own selfishness we all have a share of this violence

do not underestimate
a poor man
do not despise the rich
given the chance
to interchange their seats they will do the same

do not feel obliged neither you shall feel blessed when you laugh now expect later the equal weight of sorrow.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Trail

the trail to the secret house she marks with stones

she is old and depressed she has no home and there she hides from what? i ask

she murmurs

how can i ever understand what is thought from what is done?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Trail Of Light

no more shall i count
the days
mind them, i stopped they pass
that is what they are markers of
time,

inexhaustible, it is i,
who is
diminishing, but that is,
of course,
not the end, the diminution is but a stage, for something that speaks of wings,
of the vastness of anonymity
that most of those who here
have mistaken as nothing, it is a hazy door
which when
at the right time, opens, becomes
a trail of light, and we,
happily
shall follow.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Train Poem For You

if i were to write a poem for you it should not be sad,
i guess,
it must be something like a train

you are inside it
and you look out to the window and the destination is getting near and the train stops and then you see the man waiting and then surprised he sees you
he waving his hand
happy
that finally you have arrived finally
for him.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Traitor Was A Need To Fulfill History

it is the story of betrayal but the betrayal has to push through with or without the condemned man, with or without the notoriety of history, fate, as it is written a dirty piece of the puzzle is put if only to complete the story

RIC S. BASTASA
The Transformation Of The Selves....

the lives we make like woven fabrics make a good design of how we appear in public

a silky cloth handwoven with intricate designs of our fantasies and fascination about life
and its challenges

and in the river of life where i am a part look at me there without any surprise
sometimes a leaf submissive to the quite surface
or a turtle just silent there looking wise with its sleepy eyes
and sometimes a rock an obstacle
in the middle of the rage and when provoked changing into a black bird agile and strong betraying both land and water to become a new ally
with the
tricky winds....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Traveler

alright i did it upon your wishes
i went to San Isidro
i hate the place
there are no trees

Papa died
even in that last moment he smiled for me
i am his guy
i followed him his every wish

not mine of course i love San Francisco
my friend all live there they made themselves to their own images
nothing
is a mimicry

alright i need not regret it
i have life too
i can buy my own bed
and sleep
the rest of the day feeling
so invigorated
not a bigot
or an ergot

the years are flashes of lighting
one gets attuned to the heavy rain and those who are dead have become mere numbers you shift channels and choose to travel alright i am now in San Francisco the gate is not golden

it is only in the mind

i never calculated that it is even colder than the cold that i imagine my friends are no longer my friends time spent for waiting has become an anger

alright i walk alone but know what? i have no fear i love being alone now i am enjoying sunset

red orange, flaming yet mellow to my eyes the sun is inside my heart and it is burning

RIC S. BASTASA
The Travels Of Thoughts

time flies
too fast

the hands that i once left
have become rivers

the thoughts
that i buried
years ago have become oceans

ships sail
there

and on those rivers families
journey

into other territories on the swifter wings of time's
progenies

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree

when the big tree falls hit by lightning
roared by thunder

when the big tree finally falls and i was there a big sound
of a giant old tree
falling finally to the ground

the arrogance
that used to be

by that big old tree we all looked upon it was so high
and we did not climb it anyhow

for fear
and perhaps respect for its grandeur and today this big tree falls hit by lightning and roared by thunder

the universe claps upon the fall of arrogance and pride and a tree's belief about its hugeness and strength

now this tree falls
and i am here watching it

you are not here
you are in some foreign country

how can i tell you
that this tree has fallen

and there is nothing to fear anymore?

when a tree falls and you are not there your logic tells

there is no tree
there is no tree of such strength and posture there is no tree like that

that can ever fall
all because a lightning hits it and all because the thunder roared

without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree (A Repost)

the tree

when the big tree falls
hit by lightning
roared by thunder

when the big tree finally falls
and i am there
the big sound
of a giant old tree
falling finally to the ground

the arrogance
that used to be

of that big old tree
we all look up
it is so high
and we do not
climb it anyhow

we fear
and perhaps we too pay respect for its grandeur

and today this big tree falls
hit by lightning and roared by thunder

the universe claps upon the
fall of arrogance and pride
and a tree's belief about
its hugeness and
strength

now this tree falls
and i am here watching it
you are not here
you are in some foreign country

how can i tell you
that this tree has fallen
and there is nothing to fear anymore?

when a tree falls and you are not there
your logic tells
there is no tree
there is no tree of such strength and posture
there is no tree like that

that can ever fall
all because a lightning hit it
and all because the thunder roared

without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree And I

dancing leaves that fall and touch me

my skin that wrap my fingers they rub and arrive at a beginning they stay for a while they do not talk they stay longer in a while a dew comes out from the pores of both leaf and finger a glow arises from a glance and then they all look up to the blue skies their gazes long and they are lost and they all sing the praises about these feelings of eternity. They had long been asking what is their beginning and now they are asking if there is an end to all these bitter barks and sticky saps and happy tendrils and hoping seeds.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree And I....

the tree in the forest is real.
i know it is. It had always been the tree to my hand. Some leaves fell on my palm and i keep them as memories since then.

One day i met it finally in that forest. It is real. Its bark feels me. And i feel it too.

We never talked, lest the stranger shall think that i have finally come out of my senses.

i move out. It cannot.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree And Its Legacies...

the tree
full of fruits oblige
with the seasons and as time
dictates it shall fruit in abundance
and when children
pass by
with slingshots and
stones
it will be hit
and defenseless
over this early greed.

soon it will loose its leaves
soon it will die
and you shall never see mourners
for all its fruits and seeds
there will be no remembrances.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree And The Branch

the tree looks upon a branch
where a ripe fruit is hanging

the tree says
it is mine
the branch say
i am holding it

the tree says
the branch too
belongs to it

angry about the tree's greed
the branch lets go off
the ripe fruit

a hungry child
picks it up
and goes home
with a happy heart

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree And The Butterfly

what i love to see in you is when you become a huge tree rooted upon a muted grass hill

above you is a black cloud making rain

your leaves are all wet and your roots are drinking so much water your bark is thick and your trunk so hard and strong and she is there the frail butterfly clinging softly

beneath the big leaf fragile and steady

what i love next is when the rain stops and then the butterfly leaves you helpless and sad and so poetic.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree Is Shedding Off Its Leaves

do not be surprised to see this tree shedding off leaves it is the season for it to become a skeleton it is like

that

giving off everything what it gained from the soil which gives it life the tree is returning heaps and heaps of leaves for the wind

to blow and scatter to the earth

until what is left
is the bareness of it all the one where we are now a destiny into

emptiness

the glory of nothing the splendor of being nothing at all welcome! welcome!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree Of Life

its leaves
money
its roots savings
its buds and
flowers
all investments
its virtue
none
the social impact
is gone
it is all vice avarice
or call it
greed
its creed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree Of Us Together In The Pursuit Of Happiness

and then
we are satisfied

we invite more love
between us

and then we
open a new door

and now
we are three

let us begin by not asking what we can do

there is more
to this sharing

humanity is not limited to intimacy

with us three let there be more clapping let there be a celebration

you shall be at the center and then we shall be tender and gentle and surging
and loving on your side

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tree Without Fruits

the way they handle
a tree without fruits is crazy

it is as though
the leaves do not matter anymore or the roots

or even the wood itself or the living rings
within that tell about a certain
age

they are thinking about a fire

they are cruel
and i think they deserve
to be burned in hell

the value of the tree is not just its fruits

mind you
trees also present memories
of their own

their roots too have beautiful stories to tell their twigs and lentils too have dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
The Trees Without Leaves

when was the first time that i have seen a tree completely without leaves?

and then
i had the impression that soon it will be dead and then it will be simply left
there
with no one to bury what is left of it
by time

no one shall ask about why the roots
might have rotten

in all my years of familiarity such trees have become a common sight and i do not ask anymore whether they are dead whether there is a season when shall they learn to grown leaves

and even show that they can have flowers and then fruits

i dream of a night when these trees shall exude their fragrances
even it it may have only the bland smell of emptiness

or that some stars may come from a lost journey and simply rest at their tops and pretend that it is Christmas

tonight i think of all these trees

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
without leaves
which have learned the way they should be a lifestyle so to speak they gave themselves their own names and then they die

in peace
without a slight disturbance to the sight of others

some natives have become so lucky and they know what good fire-woods are from those dry
twigs
those cracked barks
those soundless trunks.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Trees, The River, The Skies And The Sea

the trees that we cut, the rivers that we pollute, the sea that we abuse, the skies that we cut from our sights, the explosions, the wars, the blunders that man inflicted on his world this is felt and everything destroyed once wriggled in pain on this misery. what have we done? what have all these creatures and landscapes done to deserve our cruelty and insensitivity?

we may be gone at the end, when they take the vengeance the sea opens up and swallows everything the skies spit fire and thunder the trees all die and the land fumes all the lava hidden underneath we will lose every breath and they may rejoice about our deaths and dissolution there will be peace but there will be no more meaning for in truth, whatever we do, on these miserable events they all exist and have meaning because it is still we who give them, their meanings too.

why can’t we live in harmony? the sea, the trees, the land, the clouds, the skies, the rivers, they all want to embrace us we belong to them and they to us.

let us stop this cruelty, they are all our allies, our lovers.
as they worship us, we too must worship them.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Trigger Called Emotion

when emotions run high poems come like
a tornado,

when emotions run low what is happening
to you?

when emotions become too suspicious
what is next to do?

will you pull the trigger of the gun and leave
the handwritten note:

because i love
you so?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Triumph Of Evil

i will always remember the lie that society and religion embedded in my brain
that crime does not pay that the good always triumphs at the end

i am forty-seven years old now neither too young neither too old but i have seen a lot of events and read and write about them that evil triumphs too, and i thought it is temporary and just a passing thing

it is not,

the corrupt ones are crowned, the criminals are the cream of the crowd, the ogres are given the golden medals, the good die young and the bad grows and spreads like the grass on a very fertile land

RIC S. BASTASA
The Triumphant Ones

those who live in the privacy of their rooms are those who have mastered the art of peeping their lives are sheltered by the house of darkness and the world is nothing but a window of the blinds they do not speak much, they have nothing to say, when you pass by, they have seen you, and feasted at you, but you do not know this,

what is in them that makes them know much better? they keep all the stories to themselves, and then when they come out in the open, they insult what light has been bragging. Those that take pride in the light are charred and take the helplessness of the dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The True Motivation...

most of the time
the reason was heart ache it is only seldom when the reason is the joy of freedom most of the time the chains clank the letters

and it will be long and labyrinthine seldom will the reason be the flowers blooming along the hills the crows taking nothing and the fish settling on the lives of the corals beneath the belly of the

sea

seldom does happiness spark most of the time is the darkness of the night that howls
in you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The True Ones....

they come like birds and you become
the tree
where they are roosting and they leave together migrating to nowhere and you are still a tree standing still

you were never a poet
they who leave are the real ones.

much truer to their calling not staying for anything for no one for nothing....

RIC S. BASTASA
The True The Good And The Beautiful

They go together & so even if you are good but not true then you are not beautiful, and even if you are beautiful but you are not true then you are not good or even if you are true but then you are not good

then you are not beautiful

always remember that they always go together so for you to be beautiful and really beautiful you must be also good and you must be always true, this is the goodness of truth and its beauty that all depends on you, now i can go, so please be the true, the good and the beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
The Truth About The Good News

I AM thinking

i agree with what the wind is telling that from afar
some good news are waiting and i bloat myself with hope feeling like cotton soft and useful

the wind left and i waited for days for the coming of good news like a cure for instance for loneliness

or a miracle for the healing of a friend who is dying
beside me

hands clasped towards heaven for the skies to listen

I am thinking that the wind may have simply pitied our situation and lied

and will not come back and stop for we will always remind about him about the good news

I am thinking

there are times when out of pity the ones that come here say words that they do not mean

and then
i sit again holding the hands of the dying friend giving him
the good news from the warmth of my hand it does not speak of healing i does not want to remember anything

RIC S. BASTASA
The Truth About Us

'I feel an indescribable ecstasy and delirium
in melting,
as it were,
into the system of beings, in identifying myself with the whole of nature.' Jean-Jacques Rousseau (1712-1778)

i am not alone
for i am a part to every grain of sand to every sand in dunes
to every particle
in the wind
to every molecule
of water
to every atom
of your being

how can you
deny such truth
in us?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Truth About Your Fiction

the truth about this fiction is your struggle for the release of your bad self from the chains of so much iron clad realities and thus releasing yourself from said clutches you become more of want you want to be than from what you are you close your eyes, you name it and you become it and then you enter that door of fantasy where you are the one who only holds the key to that door, or that password to its secret lock and when you are there take all the possibilities that you can muster have all the fun.

fantasy is not a cruel provider definitely not your greedy neighbor or your strict grandfather or insulting professor take all your time but there is only one thing that you must not forget do not forget the password, do not lose the thread into that labyrinth that leads to the old door of that fugitive which you closed and if the world of fantasy has relieved you of the pain and the sorrow you have to come back on time, use the secret password again, use the key, and then open the door again in the house dinner is served, your servants are smiling, and the chicken soup is just as hot as you desire it, the steak is as you like it cooked medium rare, the red wine not so sweet, and the conversations are ready for your cracking of those same old jokes, those old memories the songs come back like your invited visitors from far oh they all come back, but this time with beautiful faces, sweet perfumes the ones whom you will always love and so your heart floats in the clouds overjoyed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Truth Always Comes Out

Sometimes, two people live in the same house and they behave like posts always stoical in their maintained distances just to make the house stand just to make others who are there
live.

what the passersby hear are the sounds of children chasing themselves in a game of chances sometimes there is strumming of a guitar but it is dark there and you cannot see someone singing what you will hear are merely speculations of the song the shadows on the walls also peep at you by the window and they know that you are confused too wanting to find out what is really going on in there

'there is a happy couple there making love perhaps' that is what you suspect and since the house is always closed and you hear the singing of some voices in the dark, you often make the conclusion that 'they must be happy, they must be happy' and happy people have a world of their own always to the exclusion of other you feel you are an exclusion, but don't you worry the truth always comes out, and whatever that is, i am telling you

'it is beautiful' always beautiful like what you can always be

if you just believe it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Truth In Her...

to save yourself you have learned to lie.
your wife does not want you to live perhaps she hates you this i think i should know, because on every lie you make,
she is there to correct it and claims that it is not so, that this is it, what lies you make, she is there always ready to correct, perhaps, she does not love you that much she loves herself more, and that is the truth

(you are jobless, and old, and ugly, and coping,
you are drunk, and sick,
you are broke, and lonely, you are sinful and foul that is the truth, now, can you manage all these?)

i must make you understand.
i can tolerate your lies, and i do not want you to just die.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Truth Is........

I do not like hamburger for breakfast I do not like eating apples I do not like the snow
I do not like to be put in this freezing situation I do not like to eat wheaties for breakfast I do not like so many chocolates I do not like Nike shoes I do not like the Golden Gate Bridge

I do not like to be a citizen of the United States Of America

I like it here in the Republic of the Philippines I like being brown and small and chinky-eyed I like the tropical climate and the white sandy-beaches Of Boracay, I like the chocolate hills of Bohol I like the stalactites and stalagmites of Palawan I like the SM malls and the Jollibees

*(When the truth is,
The consul denied him a US visa)*

RIC S. BASTASA
The Truth That Kills

the truth that kills
that which Oedipus brings me i am the Sphinx
and i made the promise
the riddle
he solved it he laid the truth before me i am speechless
and i meet my fate
i am shattered
and he gets his due

he married his mother
he killed his father
he is faced with rage too of his own truth that blinds him
he removes his own eyes from his sockets
he is ousted by the rage of his own kingdom

the truth that kills
what freedom is there what comfort
what annihilation
what grief eternal

RIC S. BASTASA
The Truth That Lies Hidden On The Arid Plains

2nyt when we sleep with our backs against each other

our bottoms not really meeting

i will see to it that i shall become the winner of this coldest war of my life

i shall not face you with hate
i shall curl my body in my indifference i will hold tight on my pillow and set my mind high in the air like a big butterfly kite

for me to fly away I'll cut the string with my teeth so i can become a hawk

with my wings now i shall soar higher than the cliffs
of your numbness (or even your betrayal)

perhaps, with this distance this height
and this extreme coldness of the mountain peaks

i may now be prepared to finally see
that hidden truth
on the arid plains.
The Truth The Whole Truth And Nothing But The Truth

the freedom to write what is in your mind without names and places masked with xxx and yyy where now you can tell the truth and nothing but the truth without the threat that you can be guilty of libel.

here is bravery to the utmost. no names no places no exact dates, but all that is being said is true without having to account for the truth.

he was the guilty but his money has spoken.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Try....

the goal is to forget to finally get fed up with it. The tryst had been more often. The whole thing is wrong, you know it. the repetition is to get used to it and then dislodge it. you ask yourself, why is this rotten thing loved, is it really love? but it is there and it is disturbing the orbits of your universe and there may be a crush at the end of this game. You are into it to get rid of it. You design a trap, you entice it only to kill will be a murderer of whatever is desirable to to. You want to justify that this is the best course of action.
the goal is to be bored and finally avoid it.
to know exactly that it is not good.
that it is destructive. that it kills you too.
you are into
it now.
go.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tryst

to Thailand shall i go on a Monday and you shall leave on a Thursday Friday will be perfect as we begin understanding what lovely pretense
can do

in bed i shall not utter your name
shall you too must not forget
what name i have

we are strangers here away from their hatred we meet in the same room like a planned accident

we choose no word
we do what needs to be done in an instant
knowing the value of each passing hour i shall drink the juiciest in you you shall eat the tenderness in me and then on a Sunday we pact and be back to our routines no calls just remembering what feelings were.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tryst And The Trust....

the usual. wine glass on table. a cigar from cuba.
a black shoe.
smoke rising to the air.
dreams.
you go naked to these ambitions.
glass to glass fragility.
someone is too willing.
like you.
one says, do not mention the word love here.
it does not exist.
frame to frame. numbness to numbness.
the story of a slave to a pharaoh. up there and down below. humanity is leveled.
fair fields now.
the ciphers and dippers.
hieroglyphics of madness.
boat in a storm never capsizing.
arrival at ports.
no one is meeting anybody.
no one calls a name.
then the sad departure.
with a note: you do not know me and i do not know you.

what happened in vegas stays in vegas. it was not in vegas. No one is surely telling

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tryst Of Light And The Cliff

when the sun is up the hills
and light is strong and hot
the tryst with the cliff begins surging light
piercing through a slit in the cliff vibrating the tiny bodies of the sands of desire
the moment
is enduring but not that ecstatic
like us.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tryst Of Two Survivors

you're wearing glasses
and drive your car

there is this address that makes you thirsty

a door opens and you disrobe all your fears

someone waits in bed and there will be no more words you remove your glasses and take out everything you have you see what you are and you know you shall cry but for now you set restraint aside you need this in order to live one day more

soon you will be devastated who cares? you tell yourself you take the bite to give your heart a mouthful of lust of love or whatever

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tryst That Never Was

you hold the map to my feelings i put there the markers of my joys some lines lead to an island where desire thrives like a flower there is enough rain and air love breathes and lust sprouts we agree on a date when the moon wanes to give us the fertility of the darkest night to give birth to a hundred stars i waited for the last cycle of the sun the heat scorches me and when you arrive on the day of the tryst agreed by our hearts you will find the dust of my feet the sighs of my songs the imagination of the flowing river and the grassy bed, fragile light, firefly flame these matters of the heart they all go away like the flicker of the mind

the tryst that never was that faint flint fledgling foam on the night water what was it? where did it go?

how shall i ever know?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tryst Under The Full Moon

how can i forget the full moon
on top of
me on top
of you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tsunami And Basho....

the tsunami comes suddenly taking away everything along the way houses, cars, boats, men, women, children
as though it is a thing so mad so angry without a mind of its own exactly the opposite of the poem of Basho

the one that recreates the life of the pond extolling the stillness the quite

and if there be a little tolerable noise for sure
it is only that classic splash of the green frog

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tuba.....

what i am offering you
is something organic

a glass of fermented wine from a coconut tree time makes it
it gives bubbles even without fire

it is riddled
the one how answers it rightly is the drunkard a happy drunkard
one that knows what love really is that all giving love that all open hand

i offer you a glass which you refuse and i am ironic

'so you are class, huh? ' you like beer, you like red wine?

you don't drink
it is all right
nothing is wrong with thinking that if you do not drink then you are a nice man you are class A you are healthy for society had equated a drink with drunkards which is not the case really (deep within think you are an idiot) but never mind, i am still a decent man) so how is life? how is your job?

and you begin to complain life is hard, my job is making me a robot i am not justifiably paid and you begin to talk about your papa who now lives in another house with another woman who pleases him your mother is a witch a religious witch who believes on the priests rather than the dream of a husband i offer you again this drink and you grab it.

nice.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Tulips In Our Minds

the tulips are growing in our minds

the brightness and redness provide light and color to our souls

to make these tulips
very real

give it meaning
by picking them and

offering them to the one you love.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Turtle And The Rabbit

you know the story
and i need not tell it to you again without necessarily insulting your intelligence

(pause, chuckle, breathe and wait
for your turn, let me continue) but there is something you still need to know because i think you did not know it their story did not really end the way we were taught with the ending moral of the story

(don't raise your eyebrow like the nike emblem of the shoe,
relax, and you may divert your attention, as this is not important anyway, but let me continue
still...)

well, this is it
the turtle is really a female and the rabbit is a neuter and know what?

(don't mind, this is still not important you may read another poem because this does not sound one but let me continue alone to say the usual ending of this story...)
yes, the rabbit is a neuter and the turtle is a female and yes, they lived happily everafter!

RIC S. BASTASA
i was once a turtle but i wish i were a rabbit and then i become a rabbit speeding my ways to the ends of the world and then i got so tired and sit below the tree watching the clouds and then i wish i were a turtle again

back to my home that i carry
anywhere

that is it: the home is where the heart is.
not the wood and the steel.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Turtle And The Rabbit.......

you know how the story goes about the modern turtle who defeated the arrogant rabbit in that proverbial race what the turtle did was save money engaged in business took risks and maximized profit

then he bought a Mercedes Benz and the rest becomes history.

p.s.
the turtle has remained humble
and he gave part of his fortune to charity.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Turtle In Us...

a rabbit never shames a turtle,

for distance
is not
a tragedy,

it is the patient persistence
that
wins,

it is not in fact wisdom

neither speed nor perfect
frame

RIC S. BASTASA
The Twins, The Thesis And The Antithesis....

she is free at last but this she did by accepting all those that wait and all those who come now inside her house: failures and successes
sadness and its twin sister
happiness
fears and confidences
wins and losses

the truths are here
all in two's or pairs listen to grief as its partner joy tells her stories come, come, this is the boat that Noah built before the great flood
arrives
the pair elephants
come on, are but metaphors....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Two Blind Men And The Elephant

you are at the tail of the elephant
i am at the
head
and we are two blind men
trying to kill each other
with what we are preaching as absolute truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Two Enemies Inside My Flesh And Bones

inside me
there are two people
always arguing

there is this
black horse and a white horse
and there is only one carriage
to speak of

everyday they quarrel over a lot of nonsense
as i call it but i can do nothing but listen

after all
they are all essential parts of my being

one day
someone so beautiful
sits in one of those chairs
in the cafe

sipping coffee
and steals some looks at me
which despite the distance
sort of
touches me into responding with a smile
as hot as her coffee
on that
very cold rainy day

the two enemies
inside
suddenly
for a moment
stop their word war
and teases me
to stand
cheer up and go near
that thing of beauty

we start a nice conversation
i give my number and there is this promise
to see each other
again

the two enemies
who live inside my flesh and bones
finally
end their stripe

united they
say. ' go, go go,
go
for love! '

and then
i think, and i hope it will last peace has since then reigned
between them.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Two Faces Of The World In One Body...

as i see it now
each has a share of what we all have a chunk of caprice sins and sorrows disheartening diseases
to each his own
others are as silent as the sand agonizing under the scorching sun others chant their pains to the gods and lords,
asking for relief
no one is exempted from all these cycles of human tragedies
i sit upon a mountain top upon a view to look at the eyes of sorrow to hear the songs of grief
to contemplate upon some joys
and happenings

the world has two faces in one body
joy and pain are one and the same like sun and moon
like day and night
like ebb and tide.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Two Of Us

and then the black soul finally takes its last ride on the whitest of all white cars, it is singing a song and i am figuring out what and how it sounds could it be heaven or hell? could it be nothing but swell, oh well....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Two Of Us (Emoting)

now the two of us meet again.
i am behind you.
I see your neck, it is bloated.
i see your black hair
i know they are all white you dye them just this morning before this meeting.
you refuse to look at me
i do not mind.
you look to the other side where the day is young.
i am always behind you always willing to tell the truth

if you emote, i will, later.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Two Of Us Back Home

I SHALL search it in your armpits just like the way the tongue masters its teeth

I'll whistle when i find that hopelessness in not finding it at all i pretend to be happy as do others in their most truthful stances

I'll look for it in the sky at night like the way one finds direction through the stars soon after i will be silent in my own despair but tonight when i come back home and find you back into my arms i will show the best in me: smiling and happy and then i will get a glass of water drink half of it, and share the other half with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Two Of You....

the two of you
are a scenery of a lake and a yacht

clear blue lake
white silver yacht up there the sky
watches with envy
and the sea
finds joy in your melodies

i watch without asking if there is love
there

i said sorry for myself i do not want anymore to be interested i like the farthest distance that the horizon is making i feel for the dry leaf that it has sadly taken.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Two Women...

dual woman
are actually extremes
one is the sun
and the other is the moon but there is this moment
when the day is brighter
when the sun and moon
meet
and they as usual
do not ever speak about their own worlds
with the same
sky

and then what these two
do not know
is the existence of the nightingale
the one that sings at night and flies away
the whole day

it is the one that i love.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Two-Headed Guy....In Us...

well that old man
was right,

take note he was
way ahead from our
dreams,

our nightmares arrive
earlier

i got a mountain
on my back and there is a monster there

i live in the lighted island and i look good there to the boatmen
and the native women

i have a cloak and a hood and i keep hiding my twin brother

in that mountain where other monsters too live and that is the scariest thing that happened to both of us

you want my head and you demand that i should offer it to you in a platter

and you keep assuring kill that monster head of yours all are painful you see and perhaps i cannot tolerate this pain of severances

i live in the lighted place
i turn off the light

and i drive you like a bird strong to your wings

i promise i will shoot you and kill you if you insists i am at peace here in this room my two head play and they agree, to live in peace and harmony in the secrets of my self. No one eats the other.

If one dies, one must abide.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Typhoon Last Night

the typhoon last night
was devastating
it was strong and prolonged the roof almost gave way the windows about to be flown away the floors shook and the walls about to break we hug for comfort
we prayed together and curled together we intertwined like vines
on the tree

that morning after i am thinking about our intimacy tested by storm and darkness and i say to myself, perhaps i need another storm for proof i still could not believe how we made it

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ugly Duck's Independence and so the story goes the ugly duckling turns out to be a swan to regain its independence from those contemptuous

ducks.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ugly Picture

yes that man

who is not home
and has no time
with his lovely wife and beautiful children

indeed, Aldo, you hint, and I shall take it

is the ugliest picture of my very own father.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ugly Truth

the last time that the kid saw it it was uglier than ever and he sees it again when he gained reason

(he has become a handsome prince and soon to inherit a kingdom with the same usual package of a princess for a queen) it becomes less uglier but how can he simply throw it away when it is all the while an essential part of him?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ultimate Message.

my dear heart
try to distinguish
bias from prejudice.
study well the hawk
and the eagle
or the worm and the
glowworm.
fireflies and fireplaces matter a lot.
uuance and accent,
moron and oxymoron.
to an ostrich camels
do not matter, bird is
a prejudice.
camel is not necessarily a meal. or male, or mill.
you have a craft of threads. could be life, a thread outside the eye of a needle.
my dear soul, keep calm.
this body is temporary. You do not need it. You are eternal.
i pity that woman who says that today she is driving her car without a known direction, a place to stay or hide.
men are monsters hungry for his story.
upon equality, same brains and hearts, why should one claim the inferiority of being lost? the caterpillar with its feet finds it hard
to understand.
yes Alice, wonderland is a fact. Cheshire is real.
watch a movie yesterday.
found another Alice.
and some tiny shoes.
do not tell me about Cinderella.
it will make this poem lengthy.

i would be cut short by this.
in here nothing is worth saying.
no one is worth the greatness of his claim.
it is a moonlit night.
all girls are beautiful all boys are in a hurry to become men.
parents are worried.

grandpa is dead.
wife is still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unconvincing Lady

can't write a poem about death

unconvincingly

it is too theoretical and her words are filled with smileys

she rushes
some words which could have been
said
truthfully only after an eulogy has been heard
about
her second husband

RIC S. BASTASA
The Underdog And The Stranger

sometimes we simply have to be vulnerable to be mortal
and it happens when we extend a hand and let the other feel that your hands are real with blood and veins and flesh and bones that when someone gets a sharp knife and slices your wrist you bleed real blood because you are not a ghost, a virtual image of somebody else, because you are not a mannequin or wood, or someone else appearing in another person's name vulnerability is humanity, it happens when you walk alone and you wear your face without a mask, a veil, a hat, a head dress, it happens when you expose yourself to someone and you tell him that you are lonely and you need a friend that the weather is cold and that you need someone to be with simply to talk without any self-interest at all then someone laughs at you and even tells that if you keep following him he will kick you in the ass that there is simply no possibility of a connection between a hand to another hand

anymore

vulnerability is when you finally accept that other people are strangers too and they do not have time for any other intrusion for another stranger like me vulnerability is simply letting the other person know that you have no other name except your name that you have no other reserved spare tire for yourself except yourself that you are yourself and that you are hurt is vulnerability but that is not the end of it all vulnerability is also realizing that you are finally human and that you have learned to live with this humanity despite the strangeness and the weakness as others keep the wall within themselves fortifying fences and excluding others till the end of night till another day

and another
night

RIC S. BASTASA
The Underwear's Reply

you are welcome Lord William

for quite a time
your balls will be safe on cottony stripe

your hairs
shall not be wasted

and the bulge
need not be shamefully exposed with one request Lord William

i need to be relieved

i too need
a little soap
and some detergent
clean water
and more sunshine
and lots of fresh air

RIC S. BASTASA
The Undisturbed Spectator

I Get off the room late bed to meet a perfect day i sit alone on the seventh stair facing the road

it starts to rain gusty winds from the sea are arriving hair is blown away some dreams too

there is this joy you know by simply watching

busy people rushing for shelter waters beginning to rise on the road

you are not disturbed
nobody touches you

you are no less than that railing that corner of the store that road sign that because of too much familiarity in the street nobody asks

no one minds at all

RIC S. BASTASA
to the heart there is never a blank wall the fences do not work they always fail, the bulls of Manawan are at it again, breaking free from the ranch and going back to the Mountain just as the sparrows that by chance entered your room through an open window though there were rice grains on that tray soon shall fly away after every grain is consumed the beasts and birds unlike you do not have a house neither do they know of any home so tell me, how can you understand a vagabond mind like mine?

the bulls always want to break free the birds migrate to distant lands the whales inhabit no permanent ocean every path is a passage and if there are stops, they are just temporary resting stations after a while the journey takes everyone on their feet, their fins and wings
again....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unexpected....

there are things that we cannot but accept

bitter pills to swallow because they say they make us well and there are things too that we must throw away because they are too sweet and can kill us

sometimes in doubt
because of too much noise in the diversity of opinions and we have become exhausted of those ever busy hours making our own and listening to all the chatters of the air we simply stop doing anything we sit and take the quiet at this moment we become too light as we empty whatever we think we have and we realize this is good this is another beginning we have become new and young again

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unfinished Business

things would have ended well and the best goodbye could have been said in a smile the wave of the hand and the letting go of the sigh something perfectly orchestrated by the hand the lips and the feet but something outside holds you to stay and your hair brush against each lock not wanting to go because there is something that was left undone still tangled on the twigs of the burning bush there is a voice there that wants to utter your name telling you

wait, i still love you, please don't go

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unforgiving

you must have thought that others keep on thinking of you perhaps you are wrong they are too busy then with their own state of affairs

you think ill
and can't forgive
you get sick
in return

what have you got then?
this cancer of your brain this sickness unto your own death the grave that you dig your own body
that you throw into such a resting place

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unfriendly Woman Next House

i met a woman at the cottage by the beach with a daughter who by her acts love being unfriendly

i must have misunderstood her right to privacy

i understand it now for like me she must have been nurturing
a wound

rubbing it with the balm of grief's silence leaving it to the cares of time believing that no word from another can heal it no concern can cure it that what hurts should better be left to the care of themselves

automatically healing without anyone's unnecessary intervention when we meet i look the other way as a sign of respect for her chosen indifference perhaps it works for her so many times over and over again perhaps that is the same reason why she is in this place isolated but never ostracized

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unhappiest Moments....

times when you are cconcerned more about yourself what you eat and what you spend

times when you become like an account ledger

computing where you gained and where you lost

are the unhappiest moments of your life....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unhappy Soul

the unhappy soul
waits upon those with broken hearts on the corridors of jealousy and without mercy ambushes those caught unaware by her own wiles

in misery she takes you in and taking revenge for what happened once to her
the roots of her unhappiness taking the depth of darkness the hollow recesses of her own madness

she leads you to the whirlpools of sorrow sucking you in until you cease to breathe and lost to the bottom of another madness

and when you're gone she laughs harder than before and waits again for another soul for another submission

the unhappy soul unmasked is the devil within look inside you

be honest

is it you?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unhappy, Miserable Ones...

ey say
a full stomach cannot make the brain
think,
ey say too much thinking can be dangerous for the mind is one labyrinth that does not stop the exit is hidden and all you meet are walls within walls
ey say
in this world there are so many unhappy people some for a lot of reason a loved one taken so early a home that breaks
a love that is wasted hearts bleeding stabbed by the cruel dagger of the playful
there are those who say some people grieve over nothing and this is the saddest part of all when reason is shattered when that naked body runs away a mad man ey say there are those who lie and kill and rob in order to survive
ey say there are people without conscience anymore too many of them

i agree completely. We have been included in what they have said.
And i can be one
among the rest....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unholy Hour...

the town is always noisy at night, the drunkards are singing in loud voices off tune, without the sense of compassion to the piece or respect to the great composer, at the other side is the basketball in loud speakers, the referee is eating his words and castigating the syllables at this unholy hour, as i write this piece, perhaps literally i feel unperturbed. To each his own noise, to each his own way of finding peace for this indeed is an unholy hour.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Universe

the universe
in a grain of sand
yourself
inside the last sigh the last
beating of your
heart

think small
it is beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
The Universe As Tortoise

when that old lady says that the universe is a big tortoise and under it are a series of turtles one above the other
swimming in the pond,

well, do not say it is being stupid no, not at all,

the old lady was simply poetic she knows that the absurd can only be understood in metaphors.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unjust Woman,

you had been unjust
as we too carry our loads of stones
you stopped carrying yours complaining that you do not deserve this and we who cannot refuse any load have to carry yours while you sit there in your house wondering what party next to attend
what church to visit and speak and brag how you carried the burden of your lies and take upon you the glory that you never for once ever ever deserve....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unknowing Giver

someone struggles through life inch by inch upon its own slime upon a leaf someone is a worm beneath you and you have no mercy at all stamping it with your feet but you have not realized somehow death can be a gift and you have become its unknowing giver.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unpoetic Stage

when you have become too busy reading between the lines of other people's truth and lies you become unpoetic, you do not see how enticing the world becomes you are preoccupied extracting which is real and which is not.

truth is unpoetic. It is bland. It has no friends.
It is blinded and how it sees is a matter of logic. the eyes become useless. It is the mind. It is the numbers that run your world now.
the distance, the measure of what is really there.
There is no more beauty in quality.
It is the quantification, the weight, the blackness and whiteness of squares and circles.

to become poetic once again, one must not believe much on truths.
There is imagination which defies the ugliness of this humanity.

One rearranges beliefs. Put things together. Design beauty and then say all the good there is.

i am in this stage now. And they say that i have served so well.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unsaid Word.....

the consequence of this poem is always:

there is still time.
tomorrow never ends.

i am into this poem which gives me nothing at all.

i am the giver as always subservient to its whisper i sometimes took over the window into the line of trees from this oblongated soundings the birds keep on chirping near the house pecking on the unwary worms the cars on the road are noisy with the usual second hand engines and then the children stopped playing because the rain is profusely pouring the time has changed, as mothers overprotective of their kids no longer want them to play under the rain spontaneity is shut inside the mouth as the esophagus still wants to spit it out.

here comes the lazy tongue still unable to say the word: ............

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unsolved Puzzles....

inside the bus
we simply are huddled in

we pay and service is done by chance we oblige for a talk we visit a lot of places and had our pictures taken these matters are not meant for intimacy, all are casual we walk in and we walk out in that long trip, more thoughts, the last dinner was served tomorrow we all leave and go our separate ways, though emails are given, there is no bother at the end, we are back into our real nooks, reading, typing, thinking again how to solve the same puzzles which we left.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unspoken....

there is a way to speak without speaking there too is a way not to speak
but you have spoken
much

you are the one who can read between those lines
another one reads what was written and comes up with what was not there

ah, love even understands without the use of words as words conceal
what we detest just to please
the one in power

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unused Punctuations

it is with painful
eyes
that i end
this line

they are the punctuations
that you
have been looking for in
this poem

RIC S. BASTASA
The Unwritten Poem

in a garden of
air
i pick up words
well chosen
like ripe berries
in that forest
of empty space
and they i put each word inside my
mouth
a very private room
where some treasures
are kept

i love the taste
and i am not spitting any

RIC S. BASTASA
in a garden of
air
i pick up words
well chosen
like ripe berries
in that forest
of empty space
and then i put each word inside my
mouth
a very private room
where some treasures
are kept

i love the taste
and i am not
spitting any

RIC S. BASTASA
The Urge The Longing For Satisfaction to scratch an itch to caress that which gives us pain the fingers play a song on the body on the hair deep within the lost purity of my soul there is always the satisfaction after the scratching of an itch there is a smile on closed eyes lips wet and body sweat there is a dream

a fantasy somewhere

without you
my thoughts of you my longing about what you are to me there is in my body a black bird wanting to fly away

without you

RIC S. BASTASA
The Urge To Write

it is when there are butterflies in my belly that my hands become pens and when all these butterflies have flown away all the words retreat in the sockets of my eyes i become blind with all these thoughts i am neither myself nor yours. I am no one now.

I am nowhere too. I am lost and cannot be found.
Asleep, just tired asleep in my dark room.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Use Of Laurels..

and talking about regret, it is a word that i have deleted from my vocabulary,
i have had it before about to marry it and live with it and perhaps have kids with such a word...

lucky me, got noodles for summer, ice cream for winter, and cigars in my
silence

oh, you see, we need fans sometimes even in the coldest seasons of the year,
we need fire in the desert
sometimes
we must need what we do not need
sometimes
we must accept what we cannot accept sometimes and just be at home with all these otherwise
what is the use of laurels?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Use Of The Word 'And'

How did you use the word 'and'?

Like part and parcel Like twins, same faces
With no meaning at all.
In all likeness

But I see how it is Used in your country,

Liberty and equality,

How come? Did you not Shiver with the way
How they are paired?

There may be liberty
But where is equality?
Or is it not an irony
That both in the context Of “and”
they do not exist
at all

As free and equal?

can liberty and justice for all

i am
Just asking.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Useless

this drift of having to write
without anything in mind or purpose
sometimes
is actually life running like blood in my fingers in my brain
igniting nerves into tiny fires
magnetic sparks of electricity from insignificant stones and thrown away
twigs

RIC S. BASTASA
The Useless Poem

He knows that his poetry Is a useless endeavor
As you put it,
There is no money for a poet,
Not even fame when he is alive Or even dead, perhaps for some,
Whose lines are judged for greatness

His poetry is nothing but a way of laundering His emotions,
Not even read
Nobody really cared
How many nights did he spend to make a poem?
His heart bleeds
For more pain, his stomach acidifies for more Harmful corrosive liquids rising to his brain Through all his intestines and veins

And he goes groggy Nauseous,
Till dawn breaks he makes his lines Like a fool
He wants to stop and put an end to everything He is suffering
He knows the end

Cannot refer to this poem But to his life
He ends it
His poetry may live on some pages But (again) not even read because nobody

Nobody really cared

Perhaps someday when another useless poet Comes accidentally along Surfing
Or
 Writes the same useless Lines like the way he wrote his By a slim chance
 He shall then
 Be read for once
 Through this poem

 Again
 And again
 Because in fact
 There are many of them
 More than you will expect Rereading the useless poems Still bleeding asking for care and even forgiveness

(The vice of asking for attention The uselessness of recognition)

 Another one reads it this time It is, I will not mind, You

 RIC S. BASTASA
The Uselessness In Arguing About The Proper Use Of Words

those that discuss much about words and how properly they must be used how grammar is murdered and sentences dis-edified must have no talent to pursue into actual use without complaint as to what must be and could have been in fact words are not pillars where buildings stand and become castles words in truth only serve within that curve beyond this fence

and walls
words cannot go over and penetrate

those that you think and remember and keep forever no word has ever conquered
sometimes
mouth-less it cannot utter speechless in air unrecognizable anymore in the word of those unspoken

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Afternoon

we sit facing an old garden we have tea and some chocolate cakes we have the usual talk some jokes and some mindings of some neighbors
their quarrels and their conciliations we notice some changes now the flowers are wilting and the air is hot and humid

the dog is sleepy and the car is rusty we keep on talking and talking as the world keeps narrower as the skies get greyer and greyer it must be the way we chase time how we were left out how we wanted to be with it and love every minute

we keep on joking and joking yet our eyes are ripening with some drops of tears and our hands cannot hide the trembles there will be a time to admit defeat loss of faith loss of love loss of life it will come and we will all be silent as silent as the air is hot and humid by that time we will no longer be afraid we shall have decided already the exact spot of our resting place soft grasses and a dark cold night

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Afternoon Walk

Flying sparrows, worry they do not About what to eat about what tomorrow Shall be, God tells us, so that We humans, his servants, his children, His friends, need not worry too

We know that we are spoken of that God’s love and goodness He feeds the sparrows from the grains Of this field, he makes them drink from The rain, he gives them all the sweetness From the fruits of the trees He had given them limitless skies Where they can all fly
He had given them nests
For them to call home in all the nights
And storms

I walk today on this path, after a hard day’s work I like to think Reassuring ideas as these God’s love and kindness I like to see These birds flying again around me in this Usual afternoon walk
When the sun is about to set On these walling mountains How wonderful to see this scenic view!
How good the feeling to see the sparrows again Though I cannot hold and touch them
The softness of their feathers The agility of their small wings The lightness of their bodies Their quick soars and dives and light landings!

I guess. Now, I am also feeling fine This light body, the small wings of my soul, The flight of my thoughts, soaring and diving and lightly landing to the hands of my God In the twilight of these dusky skies.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Choice

after the rain
comes summer
something wet dries up
the pain ebbs
like a hidden creek
without an exit

remember
those playful baths
the chase
the fun and unsubmerged laughter
we were once
young and unpredictable
so much
joy no thoughts
no rules

forty seven summers
and we learn
the meaning of rain
odds and evens
wrongs and rights
being still like a tree without the wind

summertime it will be fun but not for us
anymore

spectators of
the stars
hiding bodies from midday
light...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Find....

you cross the sea
arrive at a port on a land where you were never for once
has set foot on its rock
you carry your bag
traveling lightly
you follow a road that winds upon
the mountainsides
you cross more rivers
down the valleys
and when you arrive at what he is boasting you actually find
nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Happening

and so it happens
that he finally went to the wilderness because his heart is bleeding and he is in need of the cure the silence in the desert the extreme heat of the sun the hope for the oasis the dream of camels

the mercy of his beloved

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Human Situation

it rains today
the dogs are inside the house resting their heads on beige tile floors

outside the roads are busy with cellophane covered pedicabs

women with colored umbrellas men with their hats on some children are playing under the rain and as usual
i am in my own comfort zone watching

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Loneliness

for five years
already they are sleeping with their backs facing each other
upon a molave bed which their parents
gave as a gift during their marriage

the windows have been kept open
every night as the winds come and go
with all its coldness

when the moon comes no one sees its beauty
anymore
in the house
what is felt is the usual loneliness

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Night

filled with stars
fresh air
songs of leaves
sighs of stones lights turned off sleeping with a lover tight in her arms
open windows
flying drapes
murmurs from the sea envious moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Protest And The Unusual One

the usual protest is when you say something for the person to know that there is something that you do not like and that you want that something to be corrected or at least be improved a bit but what you say falls on deaf ears the unusual one comes next you pretend that there is nothing wrong that nothing is unusual and that everything is smooth as usual and you do not tell anymore that something is wrong and both of you goes on with your lives as though there is nothing wrong and that you are well and too submissive

and of course this pleases her to her core

the other one asks if you're ok in the middle of a cold weather and you will say everything is perfect
despite the shiver

and then she will find out that one day you are gone an empty house shall not even tell her why

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Questions In My Mind

we choose the grains carefully
we throw the chaff
and keep those that can satisfy us
those that can grow
again
to make us see what was the past
all about

in the same manner
when we love?
or marriage?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Song At The Bathroom....

'i'd like to run away from you but i never will i love and hate you and love you hate you but i can never live without you for whatever you do i never never never fall in love with anyone but you....'

(it is raining outside and the temperature is cold i'd have this hot shower in this beautiful world.)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usual Story...

and then the problem comes after the meeting of the
the turtle and the rabbit
after the winning and the losing to each priority
the rabbit to the bushes to the river the turtle goes there is no saying that after all, the warning is given personally, the rabbit will always remember

and so does the turtle there is no point of reconciliation the facts of life are here again nothing to lose nothing to gain.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Usurper

THE MOON
was crescent shaped the star in between floats like a jewel hanging on the ear

what appears to be a hungry mouth
eager to swallow
what does not belong to it

and then
the war started atrocities justifying other atrocities violence begetting
genetic violence TV ads says propaganda keep on saying
there is no one to blame

right fighting for rights body burying another body the ring
the circle of injustice without beginning
without end

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vacuole Of My Life

i went to a forest
it was years back

on the flowering of
my youth
The forest taught me
Love

Something is missing
in my life
so i went back to the forest
hoping for a filling
of this
vacuous thing

the forest is dead
all trees buried
building rose like toothpicks
roads wind like scribbling of an overactive child

they tell me the answers are written by the neon lights
i must immerse to the noise of this new civilization

i have not adjusted to the
change
and so i went back home to this place where i sense i belong

the vacuole of my life
grumbles like an empty stomach it has learned to live emptiness upon emptiness it greedily eats

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vacuum Cleaner And The Cotton

what is it that the vacuum cleaner takes from you? dust and dirt and scattered pieces on the floor
in your room and in your kitchen from the carpets and what is that the cotton takes too?

or the sponge? or the rags?
they will take in water, moisture, and stains
from the walls and your ears

and what does my heart take from you? it will take your gaze your smiles
your breaths and your whispers and your kisses and your warm memories it will take even your rivers your sea
your world your universe the stars and the moon
even your suns

RIC S. BASTASA
do not give me a name,
i got one, do not mention my name,
i like its silence,

do not give me a seat for i like it better when i stand do not give me an address i am not going do not mention a place i am not staying do not give me a list of friends, i do not have any i will not be wanting any

open the door
it is what i like, for i am always leaving.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vagabonder

it is a long trail
it rains so hard you are wet and you come upon a home of an abandoned house to shelter you finally amid the tall trees and wild grass
and darkness

the house has a door which is closed and a window
without light

you try taking the stairs but the snake is there first and it has become its territory

it is tiring
the night is deep
the rain falls so hard you are cold
but by then you have to move some more
to find
time
whether it holds a place for you whether luck
is near whether life still cares.

RIC S. BASTASA
I am the body, and you are the soul. I let you in. You are my guest.
Inside my body, you feel what I know.
What you like I too must like.
What you disgust I too must disgust.
We have become one. Ideally, we go. I go where you go.
I let you stand on my feet
I let you touch the persons and things that you love Through my Hands.

I am the body and you are the Soul. Inside me You are my guest. They say that you are more important.
Holier. More wise. Filled with Understanding, As I let you stay, I have become of lesser importance To those who worship you, through me.

I am the body, and I have become secondary to Your importance. But you are just my guest. I have let you in.
Now I demand that you too must respect my flesh, My bones, My blood. I bleed. You don't. I feel the pain You don't. I now demand that you too My Soul Must understand my simple needs. My need for warmth and Desire.

I am the Body and You are the Soul. I demand respect and understanding otherwise I may use my power to Oust You. I still have the power to put an end To this Body and it is you who must leave.

You must understand me. When I end the life of this Body
As I very well know I can, then you Leave.
I will be left. I may rot. I may turn to Dust. But I have done what is within my Power.

Respect my little lusts. That is my compromise with You.
Have a little understanding to my confusions.
Bear with Me too. Be my Guest. Be the Good One.

My Soul, My friend, My companion. I am your Faithful Body.
The Value Of Each Present Moment soon you will learn the wisdom of living only for today as though is it the last day of your life you begin to like the way the dragonfly hovered on the branch of the flowering calachuchi tree than the numbers found in your bank account

you savor more the rich flavor and taste of the cooked banana ground with coconut shreds and brown sugar than your anticipated profits of a land deal somewhere in Alang-alang you shall learn the value of today, this moment, this hour, than the future which has promised you a basket of happiness the camarin of glory the innumerable promises of life yet to come and which is still not here.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Value Of Having To Write A Poem Or Two

don't you know that i always feel so alive after writing a poem or two?

it is as though
i have not exhaled for years
as though
i have only learned to inhale at this moment

cool fresh air fills my lungs a dance song in my heart aerobics for my veins a view of the landscape of rivers and hills and a house beside with chimney
blowing its smoke for the breakfast menu

at night the moon is full and the birds are tightly asleep all these are in my mind after a poem or two.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Value Of My Life...

and this is the paradox says the monk in saffron the value of life depends on how you value too the life of others
the higher you put others on their pedestals the nearer you are to yourself and to God
much closer even

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vanishing Years....

there is actually nothing repeated after the segregation after one's body is pulled and all the roots are taken someone disappears and everyone that loves it keeps looking in all places

asking all the questions possible that may lead to an answer

but nothing repeats itself to make a trace and leads you to a finding at one final moment one must accept the reality of a disappearance a banishment

from the hell that other have inflicted upon each one that we long and loved and we sit upon this longing in so much
silence

remembering
and always remembering the smiles of every vanishing face their touches
and embraces until all the pain of separation is gone until what we have is ourselves
lucky enough to be still in the room dining with the rest and conversing what we used to speak about
because we have finally forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vase

the vase where your flower is put is filled with mosquitoes

doyou still want to put it there?

in this lousy metaphor
my body is the vase.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Veil That Covered Her Face

That veil was the first symbolism Of her lies, it covered The truth of her origin,

Her face underneath, you never really Saw the truth of her eyes,

You were blinded by the cloth
You were tempted by the part that was still covered,

When the veil was lifted It was then that you saw, the truth, of what was felt,

You wanted to back out,
And stop the ceremony of a commitment

But there were lots of people in the church Ready to clap their hands, after the much awaited kiss

You kissed her, and the people clapped in Jubilation of your beginnings

You did not really mean it,
But it was too late; you have already sealed the contract

With that kiss and all the people in the church clapped their hands
The rest in your life to come shall be without the participation Of your senses.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vengeance Of The Earth....

can the peace of the earth as man ravaged its forests and poisons its seas and rivers the earth does not say anything can the earth welcome every destruction for a time

and then it comes with its vast vengeance take care.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vengeful Poem

you ask if you can burn
a house
then to answer it you burned one

the family house where your mom died a week ago was ashed

you father left unable to stand you

you handed your arms they will not take it they confess
they still love you

when the police officer charged you with arson they put you in a place where no one knows you they still protect as their own brother by blood all that you have in mind is an escape you want to burn another house

one day

you told the man next door that you can kill him he told your brother who asked you about your scheme of your first premeditated murder you said you want to try if you can really kill a man with your bare hands

you have become uncontrollable now a lesson must be given to you you will be captured in this poem it is inside a rectangular perimeter there is no exit

now our world shall be calm and it will be peaceful upon its bed of grass

because
this poem also knows how to kill

RIC S. BASTASA
The Versions Of Our Humanity

there are so many versions of our humanity
and those who strongly believed that they are right come before our table and tell us what to do with our lives.

everything has become do this and do that don't do this and don't do that these rule makers never think if they could be (possibly) wrong
their eyes are so stable focused and i have not seen them blink for a moment sometimes i wonder if they can still see the stars in heaven

sometimes i ask if they also have nights in their homes since all they speak are about light and fullness and happiness they only have days and preoccupations there is no more room for air for space for possibilities and i wonder if they also know how to breathe

RIC S. BASTASA
The Very Wars They Inflict Upon Us

history remembers names sculpted on white marbles of soldiers who died in their own valor

the very wars they inflict upon us perhaps history too must not forget the civilian, the innocent children, the crying women, the mosques, and churches in ashes, the playgrounds missing, the markets all blown up, the trails erased one day, the forest flaming, the art museums gone they planted the mines and those who may have not forgotten still clearly remember on some days while they sleep on bed some explosions still come alive the dead still keep on dying

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vessel....

if i were here
as air
and i left as
air
who was i then?

the vessel claims
me?

i take its shape and it thinks that i am it

i live in there
and it thinks i am it

funny vessel
claiming me now in grief

for mistaking me
as its identity....

indeed, it is miserable not having learned much what air is....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Victim Of Bad Journalism

One morning he comes to you Introducing himself as the journalist from the city

And he comes to interview you about this little conflict About you and the mayor of this town

What can you tell him, except the truth In good faith you say you do not want to be popular

And be likable by the mayor’s taste like you do not want To be his stamp pad maintaining your independent stand

On the issue of life and death of his enemies On the issue of you as the pillar of justice and the mayor

As another pillar of his own, vis-à-vis the people’s will
The voice of this miniature democratic society

He jots down every word that you say as he asks More questions which you answer with all candid honesty

Like you have been this judge for the past 12 years And the mayor simply dislikes your being passive

To his programs for justice (in his subtle way Of telling you what really pleases him)

You tell you live in peace, in independence Free from any dictates, except your conscience

Tomorrow morning the paper headlines read “Town Judge calls Mayor a Stamp Pad! ”

Your wife asks you what is this all about?
And you are silent; you sip your coffee carefully

You read the paper again, you breathe some more You are silent than ever, you ponder some more These powerful people around you do not deserve the Dignity of your answer and you do not want to see the face

Of that journalist again; He successfully made you feel That in this town, honesty can be very serious offense.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Victor......

the waves of fidelity faithful to the years

smoothed the sharp edges of broken glasses fragmented cliffs into soft sands in the spreading fingers of time the victor

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vietnamese Hat...

from dried buri palms she weaves the Vietnamese hat

all for aesthetics
her soft hands make it

despite the hot day
the hat is only for the pompous display...

RIC S. BASTASA
The View At The Top

it is 3000 steps from the ground. You begin climbing on an early morning when the grass are still rich with dew and then the sun starts to shine and then the birds start to gather the sweet sap of the fruit with their tiny, and long, black beaks along the way.

it is not strange to see a variety of colored butterflies hovering from one flower to another. They too gather the nectar from the wildflowers along the way.

you climb slowly each cemented stair of this old shrine you tackle each station of the cross of this catholic rite.

finally at noon you reach the top and see the whole of the city below.

a river winds like a snake. It is the same river that you pass seven times before reaching the ground of this peak.
you see the sea beyond like a basin with still water.
you see boats like floating petals of a white flower, and those biggers ones appear to you like leaves that had fallen to the ground.

you see clouds and clear skies and you feel that up here you are both king and god.

do not look down on this cliff the feeling that everyone pulls down your feet is still there. you have felt it before in the office where you are working and you want to quit.

just like the butterfly that gathers the nectars or the birds that gather the sap of the ripe fruits you come here to gather your spirit. You want to be strong.
You want to be whole again.
You like to move on.

There is so much silence at the top.
There is no noise except the comforting silence of the wind.
There is so much to gather here.
Harmony. The unity of the universe in the palm of your hand.

RIC S. BASTASA
The View For The Morning Show

the sea is pastel gray at the horizon lies the shadow of another place misty blue mountains little boats like dots and dashes of foams
towards a distance dissolving images of some journeys

RIC S. BASTASA
The View From The Judge's Chair

down

down

ric s. bastasa
The View From The Watcher's Face

He was looking at it with all relish and if you were looking at him you will find yourself the way he put his chin on his right hand his face leaning away from the light of the table lamp his knee upon the arm of the black leather covered chair he wears his glass like a writer of a film which hits the market and destroys whatever moral fabric is left by the termites of his time.

RIC S. BASTASA
The View Of The Beautiful Hill

upon a hill covered with green grass a white tower stands beside it a house with two big black windows a red roof
and whitewashed walls above them are clouds a comfort of the view
like the wings of an egg-laying chicken embracing beauty

RIC S. BASTASA
The Vindication Of The Man Thought To Be Mad By Them...

how late was it? it is five past one.
not dusky yet, but it is lonelier. I can hear the soundless pavement now. i sort of know for now that it has nothing to do with what the word means. It is the sound.
It is what i have not heard. It speaks.
It is not the word. But it is the sound it had been keeping throughout the day. It is the humiliation, This being not believed at. This ignorance The way you are being ignored despite the truth of your prophecy that at the end there will be destruction.
It is not the meaning now or the coherence Logic has no place here. It is the unheard sound of your impotence. You are powerless here and she is there laughing at you.

There are cars. There are too many of them and they are going to the cliff and they will all fall and die.

it is five past one. The gecko does not make the sound at this hour. It has nothing to eat.

The night is without stars. There is no rain.
The trees are still. The creek is dry.

now is the time for my redemption.
Tomorrow the bank will be closed. That will be enough for my vindication.

i told you so, but i will never tell you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Violence That You Inflict

The violence you inflict in the boy Is the same violence that he will Inflict with his peers and Even friends through and through From the small petty matters of His childish games to his Affairs in school and then to His fellowmen in the bigger World and it will go on and on

And then you read the papers
This morning and feel threatened By the violence that the world Has inflicted to itself to every Famine stricken country with Bullets and asphyxiating gases And weapons of mass destruction

You ask me and I will tell you It started with you in the form Of some discipline sticks and Mongo beans that you impressed Upon your little boys and girls.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Virgin Flower

a moment
when a white flower receives the first drop of gentle rain
feeling heaven.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Virgins Of Artemis

She meets soulmate

and that is final & irrevocable she writes dear husband dearest the last letter which says 'goodbye and have a goodtime' soulmate is her woman for seven years they were all the virgins of Artemis

RIC S. BASTASA
The Virtue Of Self-Reliance....

i wait for no one
and no one waits for me

copy: i am an island
i touch no one and no one touches me does this sound like poetry at all?

does this sound like an existential angst of one who wants to hold on the hooks of words fished out from the confused waters?

for one, i haven't heard the cries for help there is only the sound of feet and hands flapping like the fins of a fish
as though
someone is short of breath and about to die

i like this,
this way to the door of the music room sitting on a bench
facing a piano
as i begin to press and let my fingers travel distances each note
takes me to nowhere, relying only on the sound of its longing no destination, no purpose ah, like a cocoon hanging on a leaf merely passing the time away without the dream of a butterfly inside its darkness

ah, everything blooms, everything opens

let us see how can this happen to me watch me as i too watch you this must be life then, surprises all surprises how can boredom be so real?

how can jejune be June?
what about the numerical ennui on the month of May?

listen, listen
drink the silence savor this inner peace

<.................>

RIC S. BASTASA
The Visit

Cousin Salud, this visit is brief
We would rather be concise about what we really want to say But there is no way to be blunt About our common miseries, your children not bearing any Children while we too, have survived the years without Knowing how a baby cries, how the diapers would have to be Changed, how we blamed our past and forefathers about their mistakes their sins imputed to us
So we have our present state-of-affairs Pasted on our skins and foreheads

I’ll take a bottle of beer in exchange for the joke Of infertilities, how the egg and the sperm never meet And how the uterus does not want any organism to sleep On its bed, well we do not really mind The misery that we think we have It exists only in your mind This visit will be brief and we would rather be concise With what we really want to say We are not miserable, we live the life of the sojourners The palmers the pilgrims we travel a lot with nothing to carry In our back, except this digital camera that clicks and clicks

You see, we always wear our smiling faces Behind us are the shadows of green hills On the side are the blue seas and coconut trees

If you can only see what is facing us You will be glad They are our friends cheering us telling us always To smile and say Cheez!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Visit On The First Week Of May

when you arrive
the doors do not open by themselves
the locks are asleep

both of you get inside you find that the air is still not really tranquil there is simply no hands
of time
that welcome both of you the bed is ready yet you only put your bags and then leave

the field of loneliness is fertile yet not word has ever grown the seeds rot
and the rain never stops

RIC S. BASTASA
The Voice Of The Crying Child.....

here is still the voice of the child
still alive beyond
the boundaries of midnight

i want to close it switch it off like an unwanted light like an unnecessary
fire

it is still haunting though well fed
it is not hungry
it is not thirsty
but it is still the voice of the crying child beneath the sought
silence and the peace

here is the voice of the child
it is still chanting the harshness of truths

how many nights
how many days
it has not tired crying it does not die

this voice of the small child for centuries
never stopped, never quenched never dead....

RIC S. BASTASA
You are always beyond collection as in truth there is no duplication of you

your voice is the voice of the desert lighted by the moon at night when all the jackals and foxes are awake looking for their prey and you are there silent upon the sands warning those who have come with all their confidences

RIC S. BASTASA
The Voice Within

Alright
there is a voice that speaks
to me at dawn
which does not use words

and so i too hear it without the use of my ears

for even my hands
for years
have not knowN yet
how to
receive it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Voices Within

careful they ask if you have a menagerie of words
a place where they can be filtered into stanzas of beauty and you assure them you are a studious man learned of the art of expression and that you will not fail them of their message you tell them you are not color blind that your sense of smell is not destroyed by the foul smells of this nook your room that becomes the stock of dirty clothes and underwear
unwashed for weeks
your empty coffee mugs your dirty linens spread on the dusty floors
your twisted window frames your urine persistent you smile at them that all things are simply manageable and that they will not regret the consistent efforts of a man worshiping
transshipping extrapolating tons of words into another understandable language of the island
they smile
and then you are taken.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Void Which Is Not Vague Anymore

we were trained to confront
what was not there yet

our ancestors warned us to be always prepared for what it not there yet we do not know what it is what is this all about yet we followed every word every instruction

some have lost faith in this and they begin to drink and be drunk all night and wake up late on the days of their lives

one night
what was not there yet
arrived
in the silence of the tiger's feet on the grasses

it was clear as i have seen it the emptiness that devoured them all in the vast silence of the fields
in the darkness of the night in the hopelessness of dawn which did not fruit to light it is vague to me how all these thing happened but it happened just the same that void which ate them all like rice noodles in one sipping with nothing left finally on the bowl....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Waiting For Some Answers

we have dreams
they are seeds
some have not grown
there is simply no fertile soil
there is no rain
to feed them

some bushes
are beautiful still destined as they are flowerless

we have dreams
without leaves
vines that have not run
because there are no walls
for them to lean on neither trellis or rooftops

but just the same
we take baskets
emptied where we must place them all

we march through these aisles these paths lead
to the same direction

at the end we bow down lay prostrate
we say those prayers of thanks
and like the rest
shall keep on waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
The Waiting Of What Comes Next....

cannot as yet be explained the wind knows what ripe time is every golden grain counts and mounts upon a stalk telling a story to the humus layer of this soil

the master is seated facing a wall eyes closed it sees well what comes next comfortable now every bit of an atom has a carried explanation every vibration is love the wind goes to another place leaving silence satisfied

RIC S. BASTASA
The Waiting....

The waiting has been
all agreed upon,
not too early and
not for long,
when it is time for me to leave leave i must,
the opportunity is over like time
it slips and finally gone there is no worry
when you by all means late you've come by then i must and should have been gone

but look,
what crazy man could i have been
still,
all these days waiting...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Walk

i had a walk at the Great Wall of China last few years ago
i do not wish to remember the exact date it is not important though the place is though each brick of the wall told me of so many deaths and so many unceremonious burials because the wall has a way of continuing its trek despite the thousand deaths it is destiny the great wall says and keeps on saying that time when i made my walk with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Walk Of Faith

it is at the time when there is nowhere to go when all you see are fog and mist and dead ends when God makes you see the bridge under your feet and then you go walk on it crying with
joy.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Walking Foot Pen, The Spreading Legs Of Paper and why should the pen keep walking and the paper keep expanding? why should they all become human, soft and fragile, and too accommodating for all these restlessness of the spirit?

they are our friends, all these poems they are our circle of acquaintances passengers all, waiting on the train station for another transport, to where? that is the surprise
today.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wall Clock And The Stairs....

all the sad and lonely people they are all here
gathered,

all the sad and lonely people
they are all here
and i listen, listen all too well and i ask myself, from where do all these lonely people come from?

and i ask some of them, from where do you come from?

all the lonely and sad people do not answer they are well dressed, and square and straight and prim and proper their lips are sealed and their gazes are deep all the lonely and sad people with their wits on, their wisdom kept in the silence of their boxes that thorax, that ax on their backs no blood at all, no sound, nothing so bad to see from all these sad and lonely people who have gathered here

knowing perhaps that we all look the same, and behave in the same manner of the wall clock and the stairs.

RIC S. BASTASA
always this wall
this wall, always, this,
wall, always
i see, and face, and grasp, and feel with my palms, and touch with my fingers

never love it but i am in here surrounded always, by this, wall, this, wall, this wall,
always, i dream of overcoming this, wall
this height,

i dream of ladders,
and tall feet, and i always,
look beyond this,
this wall, this.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Walls Around Us

there are so many walls in order not to fully understand a wall of rain

a forest of trees

a river up the floor
a cloud on our eyes

between us are thick walls inside us a garden of flowers we hear scents

we taste nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
The War Of Colors Is Here Again in my seven thousand islands and some more rising islands

the war of the colors have just began and soon will end there is the green of the raw mango,

there is an orange of the
the sunset
there is the yellow of the sun there are purples
and reds and whites

pearls and emeralds and rubies multifaceted diamonds

soon this will be over but i have a nice dream about the yellow sun emerging dissolving corruption away shine yellow sun shine fade orange fade

fall green, fall like a premature leaf

i could have loved the pearl but it is deep down the ocean floor where it is destined to be mustache go away

please come back another day!

RIC S. BASTASA
The War That Artists Wage Among Themselves

desert
where a seed of discord grows showered by artists with their poems amazed am I
for the seed has grown into a bush
despite the absence of rain despite the promise of oasis that never came the time for flowering has come upon the usual drought of human emotions bringing forth the flowers which are too beautiful to be ignored and henceforth shamed our chosen silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
The War Within....

there is a way to look at the situation logically you say this is not good it won't lead me to anything this is paving my way to hell it will only be for my destruction somehow you test yourself open your heart and give it eyes then a rush of feelings come and you keep on saying this is not good

it won't lead me to anything
this is paving my way to hell
it will only be for my destruction

there is war within and you watch who wins...

RIC S. BASTASA
The War...Within And Without....

we are numb.
we pass by the boulevard at 5 p.m. and people there enjoy the silence of the setting sun spreading the soft warmth of its fading....

perhaps we have transcended the need for slowing down.

perhaps we are carried away by our own crowded minds.

perhaps we have not time for
this,

for there is war and we are called upon to fight it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Warmth Of The Will

the days passed
they all rushed
as though someone is dying and we all want to save him

we do not notice the markings on the walls the strips of paper on the pavements
we all rushed
because life is waiting

when we reached there the gloom is growing and we begin to ask why and where and when the moment came when breathing stops like an edge of a ruler where measure is cut

we paused and that was the time when we all begin to stop thinking about the where the when and the
why

what was important has become insignificant
like air or sunlight or dew or grass for the goats or river for the horse o twig for the dragonfly the reason has gone like mist upon the hill

it has surrendered to the warmth of the will.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Warning Signs Of My Body

got colds today warning my body
the i have less immunity,

i will take rest
and drink plenty of fluids there is a rush for being again healthy

lots of work to do
lots of deadlines to meet
for the meantime
i need sleep

but this i cannot miss another poem for me and for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wars Within.....

BORN in the forest
raised in the city learned and trained
now you must lead

did we not say that diplomacy is just
and extension of our wars?

did we not learn that we shall always be at war?

peace is temporary war is permanent that is how this world lives now in hibernation

soon the explosion
deep within the hearts of men are the molten lavas of dissensions around this world is a terrain of unseen volcanoes....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Water Lilies Of Knas

ABOVE the water lilies of KNAS
is the whole body sculpture of a national hero in black suit, well defined hair, tight white pants
nice mustache on the face of his bravery on his right arm is the heaviness of books on his left his famous clad taken from the city of Brussels

below this history is a pond of goldfish bubbling
knowing nothing about heroism

RIC S. BASTASA
at four o’clock in the morning you wake up.
blood is boiling and you look for water to quench the fire.
there is no water in the kitchen.
you go upstairs
no one is there.
you open the window
there is no rain.

it is just the silence of the world that becomes the water to your soul.

you drink every moment of this silence.
every dew
in the leaves of the tree of solitude

you are refreshed and from that moment on you know where water
is.

what dew is what leaves are.

there is a thirst that you have just defined.

it is not their water
neither yours.

it is beyond the ownership of everyone.
and you know
now
where to find it because you
also know what it really
is

RIC S. BASTASA
The Waterfalls And Rushing River Drown Them In Their Boundless Bliss....

you made love
by the rock
water from the mountain fall on them
in trickles as they moan with too much
pleasure

the waterfalls and rushing river
drown them in their boundless bliss....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Waters Of The Pond Are So Silent

the waters of the pond
are so silent

i can hear the ripples of the boat of death

coming at the side of this river that bridges us to the other island there is feasting over there

RIC S. BASTASA
The Waves Of Change Are Coming...

the waves of change
are coming
and those who have nowhere to go
shall be taken

oh do not blame me
i have told you
years ago to read all
the books
and prepare for all of these

these crests and troughs these ups and downs these foams and whirls
and all those girls.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Waves Of The Earth As Analogy time is like the waves of the sea carrying some season in between the folds of our consciousness burying some and then after a while taking them back to the shores of our being and we think that there is an end to all these but the folds come back recede and go somewhere to another shore and another shore and another and another and on the limitations of our seeing we do not anymore remember but our hearts still our mouths no longer speaking our tongues however like our noses somehow have the glimpse of the taste and smell

RIC S. BASTASA
The Waves Of The Sea

i launder my whole body to the sea with a bamboo pole i float and facing the horizon i meet every wave every foam i touch an endless coming and coming and coming this must be what the sea is all about everything is coming and yet nothing gets filled.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way A Window Closes Itself At Night In Conspiracy With The Stars.

as he begins to write she was telling her stories for the day

of course
he cannot do two things at this time just like the way how one man cannot serve two masters at the same time in an important quest like this the ears and eyes and mouth collaborate like string to a kite and she could not resist it anymore she stands from bed goes hear him and kisses him hard like a stone hitting a wall

of course
he understands the way a house admits
a stair
the way a window closes itself at night in conspiracy with the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way Guilt Teaches Us Not To Do This And That

it is the guilt that mothers us all

not to repeat what we like and later abhor

it is this guilt
that behaves like an old spinster
teaching a bunch of kindergartens
that this playful thing is not that good
at all

when she comes to me bothering me
i finally decide to offer it a cup of my tea

and freed from her tingling hold
i face her feeling confident about myself
stronger this time
about my next decision

balancing between this toe and that toe
i walk along this rope
high above the air
feeling no fear
about falling
The Way He Paints The Sun And The Trees

He paints the sun in black bold colors Flaming in black smoke and the trees Are tiny and thin all in black like Charred sticks from a huge fire He did not place people in the landscape
The black rays are like the hands of octopuses Crawling and perhaps eating the landscape I look at his eyes, they are all red Blood spurting out from his capillaries With this huge fire of anger Burning the painting the canvass ashed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way I Begin To Miss Home From Boston

what you have
are buildings, tall ones, and i keep on walking lost in those streets
with new names,
and outmoded maps,
and what i have are anxieties, trying to find a way towards a public garden where i can sit on a chair watch the squirrels
and feed them and feel relaxed for a moment, and i begin to miss home where beaches abound where horizons are here and
there
where trees are tall and leaves lush and there even in the fall
of those
dead leaves
so much music
still abound

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way I Have Chosen Myself

i choose an old man i choose his hand that feeds the pigeons on the plaza

i like the way he keeps his cane inside his armpit the way he holds another memory of youth on his right hand i love him more with his uncut beard his mustache untrimmed his shirt and his beret all black from the moment i met him till he died.

i chose him, the way i have chosen myself to meet you soon, when you come back to ask where i was

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way I Want It

as i told you before and i will tell you again
and again
lest you forget

what i was is not what i am
and what we did
is not what i am going to do
to you

what you remember
as a nice memory need not be mine at all my world is always new

to me
and nothing is the same as always

what you are
i may not remember as i have this phenomenon of going and flowing and fluxing

even if
as time needs it
like
a fire
fly

at night
phosphorescent

the way
i want it
RIC S. BASTASA
The Way Life Lives....

it may have no meaning at all

it is just a way for the water to drop

or a surge of the river to pass

or a cloud drifting and then gone

or just a way of gazing at the cow grazing

or just letting your foot touch the grass

life is here and you realize

with or without meaning it stays and goes away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way Nature Makes Love

a woman spreads her legs like the mouth of a river man is the water that runs through it without so much noise the sea in the open waits for silt and then creates another fertile valley a bank of rocks and a blanket of pebbles

a bed of sands

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way Pleasure Finds Its Own Ways....

so this is pleasure
your mind is very creative.
and you are limp, helpless, devoted.

despite the fact that this very pleasure is someone's
pain

you are limp, helpless,
devoted.

mathematics has not solved it yet.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way That Kid Thinks (Taken From Somewhere)

What’s Happy Day, Buddy? ” “It’s a day where everyone is happy. No fighting. No yelling. No work.” “Sounds good to me! What are we celebrating? ” “Jesus died for us and rose again, so we should all be happy.”

RIC S. BASTASA
he was careful in looking for the words to make up his thoughts he hangs his head on the railing of the train closes the glass window looks at the flashes of each passing scene his eyes cannot wink wide to the realities unfolding against the speed of pictures and events the sound of the honks and the ambulance the trains on the byways of his mind the destination finally arrives at the station where everything becomes still where everyone goes out takes the exit to every door and then he raises his hands to the faces that meet him five just five of those sea of faces and he wakes up and he knows this is but an imagination on one of his journeys for they are all dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way This World Is Going

the way this world is going is not really that smooth. in space, in the emptiness of a vast space, there is only darkness the stars may be there to light some portions the moon and the sun

the only sun
lighting only this earth but beyond and beyond our imagination sometimes becomes weak our vision marred

and then inside that passing black hole we are all sucked in on a very sad ending.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is nothing
wrong with believing that when we
die
we simply return to our original nature

atomic particles
reduced neurons
roving neutrons simply untangled from a body

it can be harsh
it can be truthfully harsh but i am given

a choice
whether to be literal or figurative

whether to see a landscape
or simply an array of random particles
floating in air in silence
meaninglessly

what makes me distinct is my imagination

as of now i am
a body
with all my senses
on

when i die
i can still be a flying spirit
unseen
and still as beautiful as i think myself
to be

even if death
reduces me into atomic particles
i can still dance in the mystery of my own
fantasy

i refuse to be simply a meaningless set of dust
beneath the feet of this earth

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way To Live And Die

to be without a shadow or live without a mirror to be an island without a bridge or a city without lights, or a boat without sail or rudder, or a sky without a star, to shrink a seed in the smallest nook or a door without a knob, to have a window without a curtain, a clock that cannot tell time, i tell myself, always, that is not my way how to live my life or how to convince you that i for now, shall deserve an untimely death.....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way To Live....

each step
each step on the ladder

each layer of the stair

each lock, each opening, each reachable star, each level of rising and falling,

mind it. Mind it.
Always mind it.

Do not look up.
Do not look down.

there is no vertigo
here, either of triumph or defeat.

one step leads to another. until the end. and you

are there
even without your knowing.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way To Mend A Broken Heart

first get a knife slice a part of her breast enough to take away the bleeding heart from her

second get a needle put the thread

third with the skill of a dressmaker
mend the broken heart a little sewing
there and a suture
over there

fourth return the heart back
to its place

and then you may leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way To Survival

since the world is too wide for my
dust
i have learned to spread my own private emptiness in a way that can still carry with it a certain gentleness and grace

to every speck is a purpose though it floats and does not know yet where to specifically land it has imbibed the joy of floating in space
meeting light and emitting it to another corner of your world.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way To Survive.....

the way to survive
is to keep calm, do not say a word, do not heave a sigh, do not worry, do not fret, do not ask, do not wink,

do not quiver, it is unnecessary, when you are

noticed you will be shot, there are so many of them around you and their arms are strong and long, and from a distance you hear bursts of emotions and guns, the way to survive, after that mass killing was simply to play dead, bury yourself among the dead piles and bathe yourself with blood from all you companions and friends.

(this he did, he played dead so well, no one noticed that he is alive, no one hears the voice of his fears, no one evies the power of his breathing no one, no one, kills what one thinks is dead. No one, No one)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way To Tame The Words....

tame them
do not quit
be ready with the tenderness of your hands
water them
with your thought
make them a house
a bed,
a stair where they can sit and view the road where cars pass by make dust
and leave that mark of another emptiness
again
the aftermath of which shall be
order.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way To Write The Truth

it is when you write the truth that words become accurate, you become so touching, and those who hear them identify with them in the most sentimental manner perhaps because truth is a sentiment something that strikes the heart rather than the mind it is something so personal that someone does not even want to speak about it again it is not spoken because no words can take it from its clarity every detail is an obvious and intricate design in fact there is a map there that connects you and the speaker & the other listener

over there

the bridge becomes so strong that all men in all walks of life with their women begin to cross in silence but with the full understanding that this is it it is us

sometimes i tell you that i am lying that is the best truth that i can give you for a while that the pain is not that strong for fear that it crosses that path that leads to you
and then
i will be too unfair to give it to all of you like a Trojan horse or the seeds of discord

it is when i write the truth that i feel rested, because by then you will confirm what i feel what i say, what i did not say that i feel and then i become a part of you and then i am not lonely anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way We Hear Them It Seems They Know What They Are Doing the cicadas sing upon a summer the heat hinges from one forest fold to another the world is suffering but just the same the cicadas keep on singing the way we hear them it seems they know what they are doing

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way We Leave...

and so you learn too being on your own this morning you have already your itineraries where to to what to do without me and without you i too have my own whattodos wheretogos life has since become smooth and easier for both of us when we have parted ways though we still cling to the same vine of hope the same house to dwell since our meetings are only at nights when cold comes flat on the floors and open windows and there is no moon and there is nothing to talk about.

i like it this way. Two huge pillars supporting a house distant from each other and yet still feeling responsible that this house may not fall and break everything inside it glasses and dreams

hopes and plates and pages of the past and scribbling of the future we meet again and i do not ask for more you stay as you are my name is the same and i am not sick and ugly

we sleep together
you belong to the side of the mountain i belong to the side of the sea our words are plastic.

our dreams are not that fragile anymore

i do not ask for any touch or retouch
i want you be a bird with large and strong wings like mine

i am thinking of bigger mountains and higher cliffs try thinking of storms and ships and deaths it is this way. The way we leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way We Look At Things At First

the way you look at the woman the way she walks and bears herself along a narrow alley, the way she bends when she picks up a coin, the way she blinks an eye, or look at you when you stare at her white face, black long hair flowing like silk in air, hers lips pouting at you you think she is seducing you her hands on her hips and her legs landing on the ground like a wooden boat at the pier, the way you look at first on the first impression is always on the
flesh
not on the shape of her bones or the strength of her arteries and veins, not always what is inside her guts, or the brains in her that you will not see unless you go towards her, ask her name take time together and ask her what she thinks about loneliness and pain

by then you will know if she is really your woman and it is only you and time to tell the world that the days are still worth living

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way We Were

sipping one coffee licking same ice cream on the cone spraying same perfume drinking one coca-cola eating same slice of pizza bathing together
sleeping in one bed cover one fried egg sunny side up seeing through one empty hole of dunkin' doughnut laughing on grin jokes holding hands while walking on the boulevard admiring the sunset
sitting on the bench
under the moon
your head resting on my shoulder kisses for the night
we made love....

how can we ever forget?
the way we were

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way You Are Trying To Complicate What Used To Be Just A Very Simple Life

why do you
complicate life with your philosophical interpretations of life's most simple routine

louise is not in a deep mood for contemplation

the other one behind that tree is
nothing

someone is just there trying to pee....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way You Describe Greed

I LIKE the way you described greed a continent conqueror warring over a morsel

planets colliding
over a grain of rice

humanity exploding into nothingness

because of the void....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way You Have Taught Us A Lesson...

those who are supposed to be close to us have not shown in any manner how is it to love and care,

so,

unwanted we too have created a distance which is that far enough that even forgiveness cannot connect,

so,

as hinted we have learned to live within the confines of our house how we close our gate how we put down the blinds how we close the door and lock each one.

we have all learned it thoroughly from
them.

now we have mastered this game of numbness we have gained this notoriety for independence this non-indulgence and non-involvement and then here they are trying to tell us that we are

wrong.

it is too late. we have created our own sense of confinement and as we do our own thing water our own plants clean our own backyard dust our own feet as we have worn already our own tinted sunglasses
do not ever ever knock at our door or come up our stairs or enter our gate

we have put the bold marks there:

NO TRESPASSING
WE ARE PRIVATE PERSONS

NO TRESPASSING
THIS IS A PRIVATE LIFE

THIS IS PRIVATE PROPERTY
IF YOU COME
WE WILL SHOOT YOU.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way You Live Your Life

it was never easy
never a soda
quite a soft sofa but never that sleep like,

days in dark nooks
you want the sun
but it is night
most of the time

you live it clean
and short

less the unnecessary
scream

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way You Smile At Me

as we get near at the junction of our new directions i could not help but notice your smile i understand perfectly what you are hinting you will offer something that i dream of like your heart on a golden platter

i would like to take it with my own hands and keep it whole
i want it forever

but no
things do not just stop in there there is also an exchange a price that i must pay you will also take everything i have my soul my body it is there on the curve of the smile like a scythe i am not ready as always to part with what i treasure my body my soul my independence my mind and so i turned back to the old ways of my home

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way You Want Things To Be

you want the sea to have waves and you say that they are more true that way or the leaves to have the wind beside it or the skies to have clouds how i wish however to have crystal clear seas leaves so still as though they only have the sun as companion clear skies

undisturbed blue

do you think that there is something wrong with all these?
i know you will leave me with a blunt answer but let me tell you crystals are virtues of the sea before it was disturbed clear skies have always been peaceful and leaves have always wanted the solitude without the wind

RIC S. BASTASA
The Way Your Mother Once Rocked Your Cradle

i wonder how your mother rocked your cradle. Now that you have gained manhood, you still thrive on the cowardice of did he ever rocked the cradle when you were once a lovable baby?
You have become the prince of cowards of this town.
You shrink from the challenges of our domestic wars the wars that we fight daily within our lives.

Go to the grave of your mother and ask her why.
Bring him the flowers. Say the necessary prayers.
Light ten candles and pray that she may answer.

If you still do not know, try looking at your face in the mirror.
Ask yourself, how gullible have you become.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Ways Of The Heart

i am told to always follow the dictates of my heart
papa and mama and grandpa
when i was young they always remind me follow the paths of least resistance that the heart
gives you
because what is important is that at the end or
in the middle of
your existence
you have always been happy
you have always given priority
to happiness as you grab it
and as it tries to elude you

and so you followed
the heart
that gives you pain in proportion to the happiness
that it gives you

all is fair now you must agree

there is really nothing less
and nothing more
the heart is exact
it's measure to happiness two faces of women
day and night
sorrow and joy
it is the same woman that you kiss and make love with

she is life and death inside that body.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Weaking...

because you have not taken cared of your defenses
look at you
when that big bully has taken your islands
all you did was murmur and you now resort to going back to your old ally
which you had discarded years ago you should have strengthened your backbone stored arms trained your people to take arms when provoked (flex your flesh and bones like an eagle

so that you can eat those monkeys
making trouble in your backyard) you cannot even kick a stone blocking your path in your very own home

RIC S. BASTASA
The Weary Old Man

weary, the old man from his garden goes inside the house with unwashed feet all muddy rests on that bamboo bed, he finds no meaning

why he must still live for another day weary, he closes his eyes forgetting supper prepared by his granddaughter who mother left her under his care

weary the old man is now asleep

as the moon which used to be full fades completely in a very dark sky

on that open window of his room the cold winds are getting in

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wedding At Sylvia's

she says she likes it here fresh air, outdoor, one can see the grass and trees and then the bride and groom finally arrive as the guests wait in excitement perhaps just like everyone else one thinks if ever happiness can be contained in the limited spaces of the heart ey they all have a nice set of teeth she quips too young to be happy the other woman cannot hide her envy the white doves are released from their golden cage and there is that usual sharing of the cake and drinking of the wine life and time dance and the whole event is fast enough our grasp lets go of some memories that we want to recall the wedding is over and people start to leave the place the table covers are left with stains and empty glasses always we do not have ample time always we fall short of what we really need to say.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wedding Ring

this ring does not fit my finger anymore emaciated time and wrinkled promises the tendency on this looseness may soon make this wedding ring fall from my bone & flesh but there is this bond that ties us still.

It shall stay though the hand feels nothing anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wedge

the wedge lays there openly
your hands are moving towards the center
your mouth brings rain your fingers bring a quake your eyes fall and yet you still see everything it is so beautiful but it can never be yours it is owned by it and there is no more giving

RIC S. BASTASA
The Well Sought Happy Ending

desi

that i was once
a flagellum,

beside a paramecium
that in one flick of the finger of time i have risen to be a tuber, and with some little rains, i have grown a tail, lost into a fish, evolved into a turtle and on a fast ambition with the passages of more summers i accepted the gift of wings then feet and hands and then in one glimpse of the cold seasons, four or five,

i found myself in bed as a man reading the morning papers but i do not remember all these now as i stand before another door ready to enter another room i hear a voice of someone that i think i was with a long time ago and for which we shall be together again in a new place

handing me a book for me to read at the first hour of another morning
beside a stranger who shall tell me that love is actually and still is, everywhere and that until i feel it and touch it and sleep with it and live with it, then there will be no more doors, there is one, and it opens to a garden, where i shall never leave again, for when love is found life shall be enough when true love is found that creeps in all the nerves of your spine you decide to stop and stick to where you really is that is the end, and like all endings it is the happy one.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Well That Becomes Dry

your rope and pail shall find no use now for the well that used to give you water has gone dry

utter a word to it
and what you hear is nothing but an echo

dropp a coin
there will be no ripples anymore

a fish lives there now dead buried on the cracks of the soil inside is the emptiness that it will keep till the next rain the rope shall accumulate

dust
the pail shall have its own rust.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wet Blankets Of Childhood

he is tired drowsy

in the middle of this stage
he finds images of melting
memories

same as the old metal wall clock
dripping on the wall

floors like brown sugar mix
with the
carpet and the shoes

you smell black pepper
and steam rice
you see
scalding fish
skin
fins separating
like
locks of hair

the feeling is liquid
flowing like the usual
river
that you have been picturing
since
childhood where you can still hear the dissolving laughter
on that
early night earthen bowl

when darkness is like a cloak
finally covering
your eyes

neither hot nor cold
until you fall asleep

as pain
too
diffuses
like drops of rain from the ceiling
to your
bed

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Bird In My Hand

I LOST A bird,
it is a bird with white wings,
i shape those wings,
and give it strength,

in the wink of an eye
it flies away,

it never sings for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The White China Flower Blooming One Morning

outside the fence of this old house where some flowers grow in the wild along the rugger path i see this little boy cutting the stem of the white china flower all in bloom this early morning and i feel this sense of innocent cruelty which he did to destroy nature's beauty unprotected by the hands of the uneducated young creatures

i could have told him about the phenomenology of the real beauty of things untouched and uncut from their own branches their blooms facing the sun with all unhampered freedom

but the little brown boy already run away.

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Heron

flying low
it circles a spot thrice
it flaps its wide wings retreats its head stops a while then lands in perfect
silence
on the rice paddy.

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Herons And The Black Buffaloes

dinner of fish and rice the family eats as one

how close can a family be in love and friendship

the black buffaloes graze and then wade in the muddy waters above their heads the white herons are flying low gracefully hovering and landing at their backs
some stand beside their thick skins pecking for lice

how close can these creatures be on friendship consistently symbiotically designed by nature's hands

sometimes i wish we can be like all these on a friendship without vested interest on love platonic
in sickness and in health
......

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Horse

from a bottle
alcohol all consumed
the white horse
come flying
low and stands
beside me
all willing to take me where i want to
be

but then i refused
i like it
its wings most but i stick to that part that i still have so many unfinished
business

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Horse...

on that early dawn they arrived. I will not tell you exactly how many were they.
they brought the wild horse again this time it is white and coy they did not speak to me my attention was focused on the beautiful horse
i did not show that i liked it i did not talk too then they brought the horse inside
the house
and then the windows and doors were closed and then the white horse started to dance
and i liked it more

it was then that i realized what are they really and why are they here bringing me a beautiful white horse will they take my antique chairs made of rosewood?

will i bargain my house for a horse?

just for a horse and they whose names i do not really know shall laugh
after they had finally taken the whole of what i have just for a white horse whose talent is just to dance?

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Kitten Beside Me....

beside me is this white kitten with mellow
eyes
and sonorous purring

perhaps she thinks (if ever she thinks at all)

her
constant cressing of my arms
must be pleasurable

her claws and
teeth
are sharp
and danger lurks in her dirty
tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Lady In The Dark And Narrow Room....

she tells you
this is a sad news
something in you
is not functioning well and it must be removed invasive, he has to think it over for weeks without telling anyone

he goes back to the past pages of his life
he had lived well enough
and there is nothing
to be changed

he did not come back to the white lady (how can be so sure of what life is giving and for her to simply eradicate it?)

there is this sense of waiting
for nothing except that feeling that sooner
it must be approached calmly
and gently like a fragile egg that is handed to your hand

and then suddenly break it and end it quickly

simply because you are too eager to begin anew
on a clean slate you write your name you age,
a new place now with someone you can love

you always believe that there is always
a new beginning
for an old ending.

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Man With His Dalmatian

a white man goes fishing to the sea
on his white wooden boat bringing with him his dalmatian

wherever the man looks the tongue of the dalmatian also follows at the other side
the island looks at them the mountains as usual so big for this kind of friendship envious

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Painting

the white painting is actually a white canvass with white paints and white frame which sold for two hundred u.s. dollars and one asks what foolishness is this when i can very well do it myself but the white canvass stares at him who dislikes it saying, 'then why did you not do it?'

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Pearls From Me

as the gray, thick clouds of Jose Dalman bring forth the wild, heavy rain and as the blown mahogany leaves look for life on the grass and the plain

as the intensity of the storms of the Marupay's fierce winds brings forth the strong pleas of  the workers of the land proud of the green orchards asking to be spared and when the eyes of the typhoon meet the eyes of the monkeys and the parakeets and python

so in me, shall come the  arc of the rainbow the subsiding side, the stopping of the rage, and the cool white pearls of the morning dew.

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Poodle

the white poodle rushes inside the living room this early morning when i first open the door
for the air and light to come in

as i stand by the window to see the world again it wags its tail asking for a little attention which i so willingly give
and then
with all affection it sits near my feet

i put my hand on its head and it rubs its head warmly on my palm

as usual
we mark this day
with friendship

and then another day unfolds like a bud blooming for happiness

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Saucer

if i only see a white saucer
on the table
it always spells
to me
the word

incomplete

without the
white porcelain cup.

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Thing On The Street

When i arrive home this morning she is already there waiting by the gate she has grown old with hair uncut and she is stunned for a moment when i get down from the car perhaps she cannot believe that i am home now not having seen me for months she finally verified a scent of myself from a distant air and she dances wildly on the street like a bagel upon a whirlwind

happy to see her again i take her inside my arms and in this friendship deeper than
a certain level of humanity we keep things to ourselves this joy and bliss without having to waste any word.

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Triangular Iron Grills Fronting The Burnt House

the safety you planned did not work out outside the danger
did not come between the two worlds separated by iron grills you thought that nothing ever comes your way you have not anticipated that the monster was inside it spurted the gas and the flint caught it and the tongue of fire came out licking everything you own burning everything you stored for the future dreams and all
and fantasies and hopes now everything is gone what is left is the charred bone a broken Achilles' heel smothered face
and a twisted view

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Winged Pegasus And The Dreamer....

writing most likely as felt (by me) is more of a travel in the past, you reminisce, your nostalgia bloats like a trouble in your kidney you wish to filter all dirt from clean memories, hoping that what finally must be written are only those good and health ones, those that can propel you to a better destination, sometimes Pegasus comes and lands on your writing table to the size of a pen, blows his nose, waggles it tail telling you that he is now ready to take you to that wasted patch of your past, and you take heed, ride on its back, taken by his wings to one segment of your life

with mother, in her birthplace, somewhere in Mindanao, before the war broke
out,
she was with your Aunt Olang, whose U.S. army husband succumb to the bionets of the Japanese platoon, and who for just a short time finds the substitute of the local guerrilla named Magno, who sharpens his bolo to gather coconut wine, in the kitchen you cousin Panit is opening a can of sardines to be cooked with some yellow noddles for supper wood is scarce and so is water, but laughter is innumerable, it seems that people laugh for no reason at all, in the middle of that war you look at the roof with leaks, rain comes at night and everyone is transferring places since the pillows and blankets are all wet there is suffering then, but laughter is always there to cure all the lapses and insufficiency harshness, hardships have no place for people whose hearts are attuned to being contented with what is available for the moment you want to settle there but the winged Pegasus is already restless he has to serve other clients who still want to go back to their pasts you wonder if this white winged horse understand people who want to live and bury their future in the past, accepting the fact that in there they are happier....

RIC S. BASTASA
The White Woman At Sunset Boulevard

she was the woman who left me.
She hands me the back of her bones.
she does not bother looking anymore at the past.
she hates me. she detests every word that i say.
she will not answer my call.
She says i am a liar and had always been lying to her.
The dirt in my arms are terrible, she says, these arms that used to hold her too tightly that she cannot breathe are broken branches of the rotten tree.
She walks away towards the dark side of the sunset boulevard, that place unreachable by the night lights. Beyond the hold of my arms, beyond the grasp of my lips.
she already loosened all the screws and bolts of the bicycle that we used to ride together every afternoon on this sunset boulevard. all the parts are scattered near the shore of the sea.
The waves reached them and they all get too rusty.
She does not talk to me anymore, this white woman at sunset boulevard.
She walks fast.
She runs.
Her eyes sharp, and flaming with anger against the rage of the dark, avay from the city lights, away from my lies, away from the warmth of my whisper.
I am her wrath.
I am the source and cause of her anger.
Her pains, her sorrows for years and years when i left her without leaving any word.
When my name was finally eaten by the waves of the sea in sunset boulevard. When she drowned.

she left rushing like a storm towards another island.
she destroys houses and fell the trees.
She goes away just like that, as quickly as suddenly as a gnashing teeth of the cyclone.
I whispered her name to calm her down.
She hurriedly left.
She did not see that tears too that fell to the sand. They are mine. Salty, fresh tears. Hidden inside my bags for years. Twenty-five years of solitude.
More than that for my loneliness on an unknown island where i was stranded beyond my power. There was not a single boat to take me to her.

She did not look back. She would not believe me.

But she is right.
My tears are not as salty as the whole sea that she swallowed when she drowned on that very day when i left her.
I have not given her the reason. I have them ready from the bottom of my heart.

She tells her friends:
She does not want to be duped again. One of me, is is gone.
I happened to her once in her lifetime. She, is likewise.

RIC S. BASTASA
at the end
of the day my hair are scattered and i go back to the mirror and let the comb gather
the locks back into their places
and when they find themselves
i tell each lock
i am proud of you
you did not leave me then
in the whole day's chaos.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Whole Universe Exists.

in contrast to palatable political talks, lies the crispiness of a romantic talk.

in fact it is your smile that breaks it.

in fact we set aside all the things in the world looking only for a very small space just for the two of us

behind the bushes
the whole universe
exists.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Whole’s Always Greater Than Its Parts

Thank you
for disregarding the
tiny, unlikable pieces
in me,

Thank you for seeing me whole
throughout those years as i have become a beautiful forest to you apart from those dead
rotten trees

RIC S. BASTASA
The Why In You...

when you get old with no one to talk to

because everyone is living their own lives lighting their own dark homes brewing coffee and indulge in the most trivial arguments about life

it is proper timing that you begin to scribble recall, recoil, rebound, reverse, modify scramble the letters of your past life and write

your own tapestry in poetry, and you do not tell them when in the next morning you are wearing a smile something that they cannot figure out

why.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Widower

it is sad, of course, you lost a wife, buried her, and now you are still mourning in black clothes and black pants and black shoes and even your visions must have been blackened by such overwhelming sorrow, how can I comfort you, my friend?
how can I tell you that you are eating some slices and chunks of sorrow which are poisonous? try me, listen to me,
I want to lose a wife, I want to lose not just her,
I want to lose myself, I am losing in this war of emotions,
I am not eating chunks and slices of sorrow, I am being engulfed by this monstrous eclipse, This total eclipse of my heart, my own darkness I am digested by this darkness, I am acidified.

So you see, Melvin, my dear friend there is such thing as a muddier, blacker pasture over here.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wife Of Our Chinese Neighbor

She is strange tonight walking outside their house alone Towards the dark plaza wearing a face that cannot be drawn

From my window I look at her edging her way slowly straight To the other end of this concrete road along a line of trees

What is it that the china man this time did to her native sensitivities?
She was taken from the mountains away from her humble beginnings

Only to find herself in this red big house; bearing him children Giving him the citizenship and when everything is taken from her

The china man now hits him with a hard slap that she is nothing But a used rag, a dirty doormat that all must stamp upon, including her very own cannot believe it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wife Of The Busy Man

she turns the air con
on

pulls the curtain to shy away light from
the window

then she sings a Carpenter song,

was it the Last
Waltz?

meanwhile the mason
keeps on breaking an old wall

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wife With A Sharp Mind

then his ear
was detached and then she whispers all his vileness
and then he says he can clearly
hear it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wild Horses

the wild horses are here again grazing on the grasses of my land always distant and untouchable
they run free after roaming the mountains
resting on cliffs breathing the air of freedom to my envy.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wild Horses And The Snow

last night the horses were there again black, brown, white, gray horses, spotted ones on their furious breaths they ran wildly on the white snow
white as the fleece of a lamb the feathers of the parakeet the hair of the albino hamster they are making the sounds of freedom exploring the distance of distances roaming the earth and the mountains and the plains

all in my head.
subconscious desires waiting for the Freudian explanations.
as usual.

RIC S. BASTASA
The William Challenge

steel cabinets have always been closed and cold that's where treasures are kept and dandruffs are what steel cabinets are made of, rusty feelings, exclusions of the hairsplitting documents and last wills, they all belong there you get dandruff from so much worries, afraid to take the plunge the warm bath, and steel cabinets are pretty much like that, afraid to open, keeping things to themselves, locked in their own

selves,

now you must write about something not about love if you're not convinced about the worth and necessity of writing
about it.

try hate.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Willing Victim Of The Justice System

The two of you
watch me how i meet death
how i look at it
in the confidence of
my eyes

there is no need for both of you
no testimony shall be taken

a dead man cannot file his case in court
he had chosen to seal
his lips

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wind Against Your Body

BEHIND the bold lines of black and the alternating yellow fabric is your body,
the winds against your body the fabric shows well the curve
the pointed breasts
the valley
of cleavage
i cannot stop looking longer this time
and i

exploded into a firework of golden lights
to the skies
to the seas.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Winding Road To Diongan

the winding road to Diongan leads me to all of you your teeth are grinding your feet stamping your mouths shouting your tongues hissing

the winding road to Diongan
leads me all to you

you ask for justice and they have nothing to give you ask for food and the make promises as always the road to Diongan had always been winding and winding leading me to all of you and when we finally meet we go somewhere at the summit of the mountain a volcano erupts and those who are not with us shall be dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Winding Roads

canva runs
for hours on this winding road climbing mountains
we see the green forest beside us
we are on rocky cliffs we see the rivers wind down the mountains
we are inside this silence awed
overlooking the world somehow this break
shall make us ponder how we wasted time
on some nooks
of depression
and unnecessary worries about tomorrow

climbing up this mountain we look back seeing the same winding roads

you say
there is no use going back
we look forward
the thrill up there we do not discount
there is a valley somewhere where we soon stop and relax

then we shall talk about this life about these winding roads that seem endless to our gazes
The Winding Ways Of Gried And Insecurities....

....that grief is, 'like a long valley, a winding valley where any bend may reveal a totally new landscape.' (c.s. lewis)

...we have walked for quite a time in this winding path, we settled on plateaus
and then started again on those winding paths of mountains high crossed rivers for the nth time and rested on grasses with our back dirties sometimes

...the rains are heavy sometimes and we feel the cold and some of us get sick, hard coughs that seem to take away all inside our lungs,
pains that stay on our legs for days the anxieties in our heads as to where is this journey taking
all of us, , , ,

no one really knows,

but the hope is there,
somewhere is a rainbow somewhere is a totally new landscape we imagine what kind of happiness awaits us there

they are not telling us.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Window Gazer

(window gazing) pamintana

lingkod.(sit) lantaw sa unahan.(look farther) atua ang lapad nga dagat.(the wide sea is there) ang iyang mata mao ang adlaw.(its eye is the sun) paminaw.(listen)
awit sa hangin. lantawa. lutaw nga panganod.(the song of the wind. gaze. the clouds drift) hilom ang tanan.(everything is silent) dih, diha, nakigsulti nimo ang tingog(there, there, the voice is speaking to you) gikan sa imong kasingkasing.(from your heart) gikan na ko diha.(i have been there) ug gusto pa nako kining balikbalikan.(and i like going back again and again)

RIC S. BASTASA
The Window That Finally Blinks

There is something in me that wants to be true like a window that stares to a road where women pass by covering their mouths from a dusty road there is no blinking every detail about the color of each woman's scarf is duly taken but there is a boy who comes from the bushes and carries a brown ball and throws it at me and then i close this window in me and i turn into myself coiling like a wounded snake that snake within us it does not hiss anymore but in this hurting hours our eyes are like lamps glaring in the dark

thirsting for vengeance the hurt is long and winding like a road to the cliff and it has no ending except an abyss from then on one takes the truth lightly like a feather plucked from a hen twisting a neck and planning for a fried dinner from hence

i laugh
i laugh out loudly so that you can hear and think finally that i am all right and that i have survived
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Window...

smile,

show that little window in the mirror make yourself feel that you are at home with your heart

smile

open the window
of your house

only when necessary must you close

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wined

sorry but I misspelled it again

the wine
not the wind

taste it it is sour.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wings Of Faith

you meet
a road which has the
dead
end

you face a wall
there is no
exit

you sit down
look upon your feet

you are not as hopeless as a perpetual convict

what you can do is simply close your eyes
and

on the wings of your faith fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wings Of The Mind

faced with a blank wall the mind pass through it over the fences
it goes beyond
kicks and jumps away

reinventing wings and sharpening claws on its personal journey into the unknown more real that what can be touched by the hands

too theoretical ephemeral
as one wakes up for another usual morning the fingers close upon a fist laid upon the navel

one preaches
what is here inside my fist is real
the wings in my head are upcoming unable to flap
resigned.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Winner Poet Speaks

you reap the most coveted award this year, you won in Asia, and the Pacific is listening attentively, and when you speak during the awarding ceremony

they all clap their hands, and even stand and give you the necessary ovation in summary this is what you said:

you hate the war, and you sometimes feel that you are alone in hating the war and you want it stopped, and you feel so alone you cannot stop it, the high tech guns keep flowing and the killing never stops and you say further, that when 'i hear and empathize' with your loneliness, you cease to be lonely for we have become two in hating the war, in wanting it stopped, in vanishing all the conflicts of this earth (with a magic wand? or with the sleigh of the magician's hand?) and then you end your speech with:

yet, how can we, two lonely poets have the power to stop the hate, to stop the war,
to change what is already fixed?

and i too clap my hands,
and i too, stand,
and i too shall give the much needed ovation for you.

there are only two of us in this dusty room.

The rest are the chairs empty,
and looking for those who have not seated yet.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wisdom Of Eustolia

i
it is not really important how big the salary that you are receiving what is important is that there is always something left in your pocket

ii
the golden earrings and the diamond rings are not the gauge whether you can hear and touch what others have not felt

iii
do not think of dusk and the coming darkness they will always be there but think of the twilight that announces the coming of light and there start your life

iv
forgive and have always the gratitude in forgiving build your face on the foundations of your smile

v
love always love much never tarry, never be lazy on loving always be the giver do not be the receiver, go! go! go!

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wise Giver....

this is your rice cake
i am handing this to you this is all yours

on these conditions:

you will not eat it
you have to guard it against the flies and ants take care of it
do not eat it for i do not allow it it gets consumed and then be gone
and that is bad for you & me

at night
guard it still from mosquitoes for they bring diseases see to it that you heat it in the oven
lest it gets moldy and become spoiled

against the light
by that oil lamp
the rice cake casts a shadow
on the table

that is what you can eat that alone
now partake
of my kindness
satisfy your hunger
on that shadow slice it with a knife and on small chunks feed your mouth
nourish your body
till that rice cake is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wise Man....

he considers himself wise in indulging in poetry, you see, he explains it once to me
he saves on expenses of therapy
and he sometimes sees in his poem what he had not seen before and he starts from there repairing some broken
dreams
fixing the missing items of his life
taking some space for growth and with all his words as wings he travels to the places where his soul and heart can sleep and take the needed rest

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wish For A Duet With You

mine is hoarse yours is flat but we as friends wish to sing a duet for them and they will laugh
the moment we start to sing don't be mad
we will still try and we give them the fun
that they are after

but keep the faith
whatever happens
since my voice is hoarse and yours is flat
we still keep this friendship it is not the duet that counts it is this day to day companionship your arms on my shoulder as we walk this life together.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wish For Simplicity And Beauty....

just like you
i for game's sake perhaps also threw a coin at the wishing well at the Eden

i do not have to make any sophistication here

when we have arrived at he place where we are supposed to take the good night's sleep i got only one wish and you very well know it this wordless thing this just being
be...

life is simple
life is beautiful....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wish For Violence....

a boring day calls for a drama

push a button
drama unfolds

a man with a black robe appears from the left nook kills a child lost from the south side

and then runs away

at night you
regret having pushed that button simply to take away that boredom

you wished
for violence....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wish Of A Cat

a cat's wish is to live in a great meritocracy where cats are recognized purely on the basis of their great work,

though,
this is not reality

once in a blue moon
a lucky cat wins in a purr competition but it must cultivate
itself
to preserve its feline fame

otherwise
it will lose it
and henceforth choose the career part of the dogs.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wish That Is Always There this afternoon i arrived too early at the third floor of the building.

i did not enter right away to the room instead i stayed for a while at the bay window with opens to the view of the mountain and the trees and the far-away sea, which gives me too much space where i can perhaps lay down the weariness of my ideas which to me appears like soldiers of war whose only wish is to quit all these fighting pack up, collect all the letters inside the bag, leave the guns and ammunition, and have peace at home, the heart, the fireplace of winter the sun of the summer day, the beach

and

sand, the lovers delighting about each other's touch, talking about nothing but food, company, incoming vacations, camping, bathing in the river pasturing the cows, herding the sheep
fishing and

sleeping in the privacy of the house with all loved ones.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wish To Be Serious In Writing Poetry

i wish somehow that i
be a serious poet,
the one that you must like as though i am
one kind of philosopher and statesman
rolled into one,
but i am not
never been to their rightful places
i have only been to myself in the park at night or the bar
till dawn, i do not wish to pretend that i only go to church on Sundays,
i am not really that religious or even political i like my life
it's my own and it is petty upon its own frivolities
one however that does not hurt anyone
or make others crave for what i cannot give it is just a wish i like to be Whitman or Blake but sorry
it will take time
but for the meantime i will just be
what i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wish To Be Wrong....

i've been looking for myself i know where and so i went in you where i can be home

i feel this frenzy
of heart bursting into flames i dare
look longer to that place where i am truly me there is this tension that swings from ecstasy to ecstasy

there is this call to go back and be at peace it is from faraway now

i dare not to listen
i am now at home and i gaze at that which makes me feel at home on the night where i never sleep but is never tired till the next light of my day there is an outburst of emotional eruptions like geysers from a pool i watch it

long enough and dare myself to be just there standing in such stillness of a post

now without feeling anything anymore it is then when i wish i should have been wrong

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wish To Change Your Lifestyle

against the cliffs of high resistance your habits shall never give you the chance to change you make the resolution to change every word of your sentence

but with the fast palpitations of your pulse every morning you doubt whether these travails have an end trail.

dthis morning you wake up beside the grave of fear

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wish.....

at dawn
we talk about what we have become

we inspire
each other to the idea that we have not rooted like them

they have amassed much as we have given they have fortified their walls and locked their gates and we are outside all these houses
uphill we sit together under
the rain
as we see with comfort all the big waves coming

all set to erase them.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wishes Of My Widowed Aunt

it is not warm enough here to go to Baguio and buy another deep red sweater

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wishing Poem....

poetry had always been
between your legs

you feel it only that you do not speak about it,

perhaps it was the fear that worked most in your lifetime a lifetime perhaps, a lifetime sentence that has not earned a period for itself,

one day you will find poetry between the cleavage of your breasts, supple

firm and so juicy and you wish a man comes by and notices it and wish that he will feel how is it to be bountiful,

ripe,
luicious,

perhaps he will take heed and eat, and suck and lick
and say that this is what a lifetime is all about and finally take for himself

that poem of yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Witch In The Old Castle Nearby...

as you, foolish dog of my life, my life in utter peace, a pond of less ripples, as you, stupid dog of my life barks at my feet, and tries to distract my own solitude, that of the candle still in the middle of my room, the blankets soft on my bed, the pillows all too silent like flower petals on a dew filled morning leaf, as you, twitchy wicked witch calls my name, i finally give up and face myself, and leave you, all cracked up, and i go inside my room and lock my door and tell my windows, to shut you up, do not ruin my life, do not ever attempt to do that which creases my blankets and stabs my pillows, for i shall return to you and burn your furrowed faces, dissolve you in the acids of my test tubes,
erase you like some misspelled words, i am a man of peace, and i am stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Witness

my innate obligation to tell the truth
begins
when your capacity to tell a lie ends

my innate obligation to tell the truth and nothing but the truth
ends
when your capacity to tell all lies and nothing but lies
begins

RIC S. BASTASA
The Windmills

i visited the windmills of my
mind,

the winds are not that strong
to move the hands of power.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woes Of Our Times

The woes are deep seated, not on the softest sofa that you imagine, their emotions are well-contained in those eye bags of silence

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woes Of The Common Worker

we shall all share the fruits

one for you and one for me
and then for you
and for that someone we do not even know

these, the fruits of my own labor

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman

d the woman that i slept with last night is singing this morning while taking his cleansing bath in the running river

she is my wife.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman And The Flower

sa balak ang babaye mao ang bulak

for a poem the woman is the flower

sa bulak ang babaye
dili babaye
dili niya kini masabtan sa iyang pagkabulak

for the flower the woman is not a woman it cannot comprehend this in its flower-nature

sa babaye ang bulak halad sa iyang kasingkasing pako sa iyang kalaay haploy sa iyang aping

to a woman the flower is an offering to her heart a wing to her boredom a caress to her cheek

bulak ang babaye
og ang babaye bulak mao kana ang hukom
sa balak.

the flower is the woman and the woman is the flower that is the judgment of the poem

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman And The Moon

i have seen this woman one night bathing in the cool waters of the river under the full moon &

she was all alone &
that night i got her name hidden inside my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman In The South...

the woman i think is lost but when i talk to her she is the most definite one, direct, candid, and knows what she is doing,
she is an internet preacher of her causes, the rivers are polluted now, and the mountains bald, the green movement is on coal is passe, mining is evil, the corporate lords are killing everybody,

there must be change,
there must be change
there must be change

we can change the system, she shouts, she carries the flag and waves the red colors in the air, she is not afraid of death, she welcomes it anytime.

she is a friend, but i am not with her.

when we are near, there is something else, not the causes, not the effects, it is something else.

and i have not told her yet.
i am irrelevant, and perhaps it is better this way.

i have no inkling. i can't.
i have to say no.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman Next Door

dthis woman is beginning to grow white hair

her hands are rough and the skin there are loosing from the fingers like
hand gloves made of cloth

she has to wear sunglasses even during the rainy seasons when the skies are gray when the world is too cold and the parks are empty
where she finds herself alone strolling under those old trees

she is losing touch of other people who seems not to see her her presence disregarded to hide her disappointments she goes to the mall and buys things that she does not like a matter of compulsion-obsession pulling and pushing her from one corner

to another

quite a pity
she feels miserable and people avoid miserable people they think that misery is contagious and who wants misery?

i am intimately involved with this woman more in the line of pity more on the aspect of empathy there are many things that i must tell her but it will not be for now scattered atoms inside a glass of muddy water need a little settling before one must describe to her what really happened and what to do next who knows? perhaps i really love her.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman That Descended Fromt The Moon

she is still there with no one looking at her anymore

i keep on asking when is this woman gonna leave us all alone?

when shall the lady from the sun take over?

there's got to be a change of the scenery

but no one is minding the page has become one still morning

no wind no sun
no flower
no bee

just the routinized green the pale letters
and the boring silence

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman Who Did Not Analyze Anymore

what she had now are only skin and bones all flesh rotten smile is a stranger
and hope is dead

we look at her
and she submits
to our judgments

she uses no logic
anymore
not even feelings for they are all
ephemeral

she surrenders
in sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman Who Waited For Your Confession....

to the woman who waited that you tell her all the love you have inside for her at the bus station when she was all set to leave, you never really said it best because you never said anything at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman With A Cat In Her House

she lives with her
cat,
they are not talking
a cat
is a metaphor for grooming and silence and that murmur,
she murmurs all day
why no one loves her visits her
and reminds her of those wholesome days where laughter
flies in the room
like some butterflies,

we do not blame her she was born with paws
sharp fingernails
scratching
the faces of those who decided to abandon her
finally...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Woman With A Fever

here i am instead sleeping soundly cradled by your heat

for i am tired and cold when you were hallucinating

RIC S. BASTASA
The Women...

developed color
over the official color of their dresses in conventions, scrutinize every rumor, confrontational in the most irrelevant and unimportant details, you talk much over nothing, change dresses in almost every occasion, you are given the chance to lead, backbite, and lose themselves in much ado’s about nothings.

i watch all these chaos trying to understand, and respond to all their confusions in the secret silences of my smiles.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wonder Of The Tear

from among the liquid forms of this earth

the tear is most unique it knows the meaning of pain it keeps the salt inside itself

and does not thirst for more for those that are clear

itself it does not compare.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wonder Of You...

i do not wonder anymore why in the middle of this summer
you wear winter apparel

i know what you mean.
you are irrelevant.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Word Death...

while driving
he was telling me about the mishap which happened to him and Paul yesterday at noon

ty they were riding in a motorcycle when suddenly
a glitch in the brake came and they were thrown away on the side of the road
and by luck there were no following vehicles which could have killed them both

he has not changed
a bit
while telling me about such a horrible
story

loquacious as ever and
sometimes
with his behavior i think that he should not
have been taken seriously for taking such a sensitive matter
with a grain of salt

on the other hand
i think he is right for what can you do when finally death
knocks at your door?

Paul who is a handsome middle aged man with a family of two kids and a beautiful wife until now has appeared pale and fearful and promised that he will never ride again in tandem with that short and ugly guy.

and i have come to a conclusion: those who have more to lose in life
are the most fearful people in this world

to an extent
the word death should not be spoken

RIC S. BASTASA
The Word Goodbye...

i listen to the rain it rained the whole night it still rains this morning and i am listening still i am studying it well this song of the rain this monotony this sorrow i am learning from all these drops of rain, this meeting with the roof and the tears of

the sky

and so i have finally decided to stay here your party is not important to me your friends are not my friends anyway i have learned this game too well patterned from the persistence of rains this solitude this independence this island of awareness: who i am and who you are.

i am still trying to hone my spelling skills for until now, i have not spelled it so well

the word goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
what i remember is the word space, and the image of a train that speeds its way towards home, it is always crowded and most eyes are sleepy and the hours whisper about things to be done next and next and tomorrow which seems that life is always unfinished business as there is always something to crowd our mind with and i remember you holding a book about a love story which ended upon a tragic image, ah never mind, i like the way you create space between you and the book and the way your head leans on the wall of the train as though telling you that soon there will always be that inevitable happy ending

RIC S. BASTASA
The Word, 'we'

we understand
that everything is personal we like you to know but we have reservations reality is dark, stark, most often, ugly as we call it we invoke art, someone that arranges a scattered room into a good looking house from the point of view of the road and the cars and those that merely

pass by

we call on someone reliable, to calm the dog, to call the bird back to its cage,
to mow the grass
to make all things neat and clean and presentable

we all love beauty, and smoothness we like sweetness, and pine scented outdoors gentle winds, morning lights, sea breeze, a peaceful neighborhood, trimmed grass, well painted doors, a system, a ledger, a well kept note, a record of what happened we understand that everything is personal on the other hand we too understand what privacy is do you want us to tell you only those that you want to hear?

do you want us to lie?

here we are waiting at the outside of things, waiting, and waiting, we are from your ribs, we do not want to hurt.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Words And The Pen And The Paper

in loneliness
he does not know what to do next all plans are suspended what he attempted to do fails upon an empty table lies a sheet of paper

it is blank

he holds a pen as a matter of habit he begins to scribble

words begin to enter in his mind they are his usual guests and companions for now the moment he writes them the paper begins to speak the pen becomes a boat the words become friends and away into the shores and oceans of the empty paper to a picnic of new adventures they all go

later the pen becomes a surfing board as words too become waves

RIC S. BASTASA
The Words As Bridges...

in a true relationship a word is a bridge that can connect two distant cities,

it will take just a syllable to get to know each other and cling like vines on the trellis and give a flower to the passers-by,

others have destroyed many bridges with just one word, the harshest thing that can happen to syllables, like saying bye. And it ends there like a shadow of the western movie against the sun and then the curtains

fall

and we all leave and carry with us the story of guilt and forgiveness....

on my own experience the words are always bridges to old cities and though rusty they still hold the missing gaps and the river or the sea below will always be hungry for some morsels of lives
to fall

in my own world no word destroys, no syllable cuts an umbilical cord,

i place it there. In print.
and time is powerless to erase it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Words I Cannot Say

i have kept the words i cannot say to you because i know in doing so you will
die,

how can i say them? how can i say them now?
i am lost,
they are throwing stones at me on the roads that i take i want to break this silence i want to speak

but you are always beside me your hands, you think you are embracing me, i am choking, i cannot breathe your love has been much beyond what i can take

how can i ever tell you
the word
goodbye, the words, i have changed, the sentence

i am going away, this place is not for me, my heart has no home, i am heartless, i am empty, i am shattered, i am loved but i cannot love i am dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Words In Abundance...

i always have use of these words, ever consumed, always multiplying, never enough, they're like the money that comes inside my pocket with hate, i spend all of them ever retaining a part, because that is what they are meant to be
to be scattered, wasted, always slaves.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Words Of A Liar

your words
are strange they have no place to live
you do not have a house for them
and you do not live
with them

RIC S. BASTASA
The Words Still Unspoken

day are words that need not be spoken like you telling me that i care for you
for how would you know what i feel for you?
it would be too self-assuming
for you to say that i really care for you what if i do not? what if what i do is nothing but an obligation of one human being to another?
what if it is not love at all as you would want to impress me with it? what if it is just a projection of yourself?
you loving me and me not knowing it
me not believing it, simply because you are also afraid to love since i may not return that love with its face value, there are words that need not be spoken matters of the heart, presumptions that good deeds are shadows of hidden desires, vested interests, blessing in disguise, wolves in sheep skins

in love my friend, you just don't make assumptions at the end, you may regret it, for despite my emptiness my ugliness, and my loneliness, i also know how to choose.

it is something that i have never spoken but if i speak it all, it will only be to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Words That I Have Not Written for the words i have not written i accept i have been a coward the moment these words become transparent in my mind, i always tell them gently i have not the strength to write you you have become subjects beyond my power and please understand the consequences of having to write all of you: waiting to be printed and read like the Sphinx and its riddle before Oedipus, if i were to write all of you i may be able to save a kingdom in distress but please understand what happens to me next for like Oedipus i may be compelled to pluck my eyes out from my face and i may roam the earth begging for forgiveness throughout my life because i have been blind by fate for all those years writing you is honesty and it is this honesty that may at the end kill me

and so i am very sorry

RIC S. BASTASA
The Words That Rhyme With Orange

IT IS not a challenge to find a word that rhymes with orange remember the relief of Lozenge try the cool plunge and the wet sponge don’t attempt to scavenge there’s still the lunge

RIC S. BASTASA
The Words That We Do Not Say

how can i say

i hate you, when i need you how can i say i need you when i love you how can i say i love you when i do not love you anymore how can i say stop loving me when by saying so you will die how can i say i want to be free i want to go away when it will mean the destruction of another world tonight you will hear me singing this song, in fact, a classic one please release me, let me go, you must continue singing the next lines... i cannot just say those words

RIC S. BASTASA
The Workers Of Art Without Content

a work of art
without content

the one which you think has no use

it cannot change
the world

the old path
remains muddy

the house is as dusty ever

the kitchen
still shows the same

smoke same charred
situation

how come however that we have survived?

today we shall bury another overused soul

another substantive hardworking animal

he thinks we have done him no good at all

RIC S. BASTASA
The Working Woman

the woman is loaded
carrying her little girl on her shoulder

her right hand carries a basket of unsold fish

her man is drunk
as usual
cursing her

RIC S. BASTASA
The World

the reason why the world is round
is that there are always reasons

circuitous in fact where the premise
sometimes
becomes the conclusion
and vice-versa

where
the end at the end seems to be the beginning
of another
beginning

endless
perpetual eternal

that seems to be what this world
is all about

failures strictly speaking
become successes

and seemingly
enough
successes also become failures

we just don't know what is this
all about
then and now

and where this world is really heading
or tailing

and that is what is this world
is all about
now & then

the surprises, the excitement of what is next to come to follow

calm down baby
let's get moving

on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on it is the journey itself and the feelings not even a thought

it is this moving

on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on and on

so calm down, baby,
go, go, go, go

be always on the go there is always something to say
about it
words cannot enclose it it is beyond spelling
it is beyond utterances it is what you feel inside that keeps on sound and resounding and your tongue merely repeats it and transfers it to your lips

hence the speaking and you keep on saying it over and over again
because it is never heard
because it never arrives at the chamber of understanding of the heart such is your pain that you keep on saying because you have never fully resolved it

time is you patient teacher it is the silence that it preaches its home is always the calmness
the plenitude of
solitude

the consciousness that there is only you in this universe
in your hands is the future in your mind is the moment in your heart always the understanding that there is no other you except yourself
the world is so calm
it is listening to your qualm.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World At Large

when you feel pain you justify it that the world is like this and that that most of its parts is pain and you take every pain as part of you and shall never refuse anything that comes like uninvited guests of your house when you become a voluntary prey to all these parasites and predators

host of all hosts you welcome the code of stupidity but soon you realize that there is no use to all these why pain?

why inflict it upon a self that knows the freedom of choices?

you go away and find the ways of having another life to the world at large that shows to you the vastness of the skies the wideness of the oceans the myriad islands and the unexplored continents the mysterious universe all these tell you, why not try wonder? why not take the side of the happy moments?

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Changes Itself Without Myself

i know that there is something wrong like a stain of black clouds in the sky like a shattered glass on the floor or the white paint in your hair but i, just like those days, never mind those wrongs, - i just watch them hopelessly, upon the idea that nature itself shall correct it, - that changes simply come like rain to drought, like mist upon the grassy hills, - i leave things as they are, for who am i? who am i?

to change this world, to love and change you?

i know that there is something wrong here, but i just do my own thing, - i am this spectator, this traveler, and i do not stop in order to waste my time upon all these the world spits its lava, the tsunami comes upon a clear day, quakes tremble this earth storms rage, fires burn, the world crumbles, and when i come back, i shall only see a clear pond of water, a calm river, a cooler earth, a green mountain, a sunny day, a peaceful night myriad stars come again for their twinkling the moon shines and casts its sheen on the trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Dislikes A Change

it is painful
to see the face of denial

the guy with guts
does not surrender

laughs it out
and takes in what should have been vomited

at once

he omits failures and begins anew

the world has to learn more of this art

it is harsh to any change

unable to open its hands to something

new and beautiful
innovative

the world dislikes
an innovation

but it is going there
sooner

one day it wakes up embracing you
as its hero
its unnamed savior

your death
cannot pay it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Is Alright With Me.

my body takes me
 to you
 as my soul rebels

then you wait for me
 there
 in anticipation as i imagine it
 to be

i make my own lies and plunge into bed with all desire

it will be short and in a while i go back to my shirt move away and pretend that the world is alright with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Is Boasting Now We Are Nobody.

in the dark
we know we both are awake

why have we become tolerant

why the silence?
are the stars more beautiful now the little glitter of far away

we have grown old for the poetry of love

as i hold your hand
words do not exist

i forget your name and you forget mine

but the familiarity is still there

on the grass under the stars we feel that much

my back is one with the earth my eyes glued to far away how small are we how insignificant

the world is boasting now we are nobody.
The World Is Numb...

i had my hair cut short went to a clinic for a skin peeling had my fingernails cleaned and treated for a glossy look bought a new pair of shoes blue jeans and white polo shirt on the first day of the office after i got sick for two weeks i want that they may see another personality in me nobody notices it never was there a new me everyone is as busy as ever and the world is numb.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Looks Upon Us With Worried Eyes look at us who want to really finish the work this afternoon

look at us being looked at the world with worried eyes
it is reminding that if we finish this work on time
the work shall soon finish us earlier than expected look at this world that looks down upon us it is not sleeping
it keeps reminding that there is no apocalypse of earth and rock
the sun will always be there until it finds us all gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Mistrusts Your Freedom to choose between sorrow and joy

one chooses joy

you think you can choose you choose

the world however
gives you sorrows
and the choice has become too limited
there is only sorrow and sorrow and no other

eventually to live
one must accept what is given you say i want to choose now you must give me the choices for i will choose what pleases me

but the world knows you better which you do not actually know you have chosen the joys that have destroyed you and since
then
the world has not trusted you

for with your freedom
you will
on the claim of not knowing destroy
everything

even yourself your family
your kin.
The World Of Either Or

you cannot have the best of both worlds when you have all those chickens you have to sacrifice your flowers these chickens eat flowers for breakfast
on the other hand
when you keep those flowers you must first kill all the chickens as i once told you, this is the world of either or not both

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Of Eli

i am in a world where i am the only one walking

no one speaks to me and i have seen
no one

no shadow, no hint that somewhere over there there must be another creature

a butterfly
or a little bird

or perhaps a fish
or a pebble

or perhaps a sprouting bean it gets lonely

when one speaks only to himself because the rest have taken the stances of being gone into nowhere without a location

i am in this world
too big for me
soundless, empty,

i am in the world of Eli.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Of The Busy Bee

a flight to the petals
of roses
the mission of the nectar
with codes of hormones
and grab
and dab
and tab
and gab
of stings on parasol leaves, discharging tangerines and greens of chlorophyll

orange lights from the sun in voltages and gliding high and low

bzzzzzzzzbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbbb
The World Of The Silent Blooming Lotus

floating like a lotus red concentric petals stretching wanting to kiss the cheek of the sky i am the monk in my own spreading kingdom of a still pond beside me are the frogs listening surrounded by a soldier of tadpoles beneath me is the stock of dirt i keep my purity on top the sun looks at me with pride at night the moon smiles such is the world of this silent lotus calm amidst the night, clean atop the mess.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Out There....

i look at the room where we once shared
happiness,
it is the same room
now
that shall make us live
the season of sadness,

nothing's changed
nothing will be changed here

white walls,
white tiled floors
same fluorescent tube
same switch
on the frame
of the door

the cabinets are still brown though not glossy
with age

how many years?
20 years
swift as the flight of seagulls

white winged birds on sky blue seas

the matrimonial bed is losing its soft cushion

our backs endured all these roughness now when we make no more demands
for life to give us
more

ah, how many years more?
i do not need much 5 can be a surplus

what do i need of 10 years more?

i am a simple man
willing to explore what lies in the unknown

this present is all revealed and i am satisfied,

there is more out there the stars are not telling

the moon is still secretive to the bounty of calm
and beauty

i shall be there in due time
without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Simply Laughs

the single step
of the thousand steps
the world
laughs at
it

it is the beginning of a world in a cliche

the world cannot be intimidated
by your howl
it has silence so many howls
before the first howl
came in the cave of illusions

the world will love you for your silence
your friend
in your solitude
your buddy in your fishing your company
in prayer

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Simply Laughs (Edited)

the single step
of the thousand steps
the world
laughs at
it

it is the beginning of a world in a cliche

the world cannot be intimidated
by your howl
it has silenced so many
howls
before the first howl
came in
the cave of
illusions

the world will love you for your silence
your friend
in your solitude
your buddy in your fishing
your company
in prayer

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Waits For You...

saturday, there are so many choices the hammock lies waiting swaying,
the green fields have trees teeming with the ripeness of their fruits they lack harvesters the pathways are like open arms the junctions are like vendors calling for more customers
the clouds are umbrellas opening without hands to hold them the rains are planning to create more rivers
the valleys are giving in to the clarity of the plains

all for you.

Still asleep on last night's hangover from those wild merry-go-rounds.

RIC S. BASTASA
The World Where You Want Me To Live

the day you met me you claim it is a beautiful day blue clouds, cool green trees on the meadows some mountain mists hanging still like dreams you ask for my name and you said you will like me on that beautiful day you want me flying kites on the wind i flew kites with colors you want me to run with you on the soft grass towards the sea where the breeze plays some games with the locks of our hair
i obey with a smile and always cater to your wishes and dreams whatever wherever whenever you feel like going and doing you ask me to tell stories i tell you stories that please you: fairylands, prince and princess in the castles in the clouds, and you really like me, you want me to stay i thing are are a lie. i am a lie.

we live on what pleases, we live in a world without pain.

it is not my world,
i live in the world of pain, this darkness for years, and this
you must know
all these are what please me, this world that you do not imagine this world that your mind thinks does not exist

i have long accepted, i am human

RIC S. BASTASA
The World's Indifference

when the river runs out of water she sings the sweetest songs still at the side of the bank no one convinces her to give up the hope of the coming rain

when the sea comes with a storm when the wind becomes one rebellious form she sits calmly under the palm and patient with the foam she knows what price is there in the waiting she knows the ebbing flow of the tides the colors of the fading sun the magical show of darkness and the moon the stillness of the waters in the marshes she, like the sleep of the migrating birds on the lilies,

contains the boldness
of the stork
firm in that resolve to
loneliness

'nothing lasts forever' she gladly accepts, offering her smile to the world that has remained indifferent and cruel.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Worm And The Flower

and so it happens
that each kept each nature unique to itself
even in their own terms of loving

the flower bloomed
the worm ate it
petal by petal

time justifies the consumption upon the wings of a beautiful butterfly

the wind still loves the sound of the flutters

RIC S. BASTASA
The Worm Deep Down And Under

because you look at yourself from the point of view of a worm you fear then any bird

you wish you have wings to see the earth from above the clouds to master air
and soon be proud

if you think that you can be anything or anybody
or be someone else more powerful than a bird or a machine if you think that life is fair that others are just if you believe that it is what you get because of what you are by all means you must have been misinformed those who get the laurels are not necessarily the best those who win may have their own hidden schemes those who sit on their thrones are kings may have committed all the sins of power and capture learning from this you go back to your own simple existence still pure and honest

a worm in silence deep down under unmaligned undisturbed.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Worms

Do you wish to ask what are the worms for?
these tiny ones
soon shall change into black and brown moths
they will find light amidst the darkness and burn themselves to ashes

But first you must know the reason for their existence, they are here for you maggots to your flesh
and soon
they'll get you

Your bones shall be their witnesses
Their triumph
the inevitable.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Worms Climbing The Ylang-Ylang Tree

this is the season for the worms to climb the ylang-ylang tree rain or shine
the seemingly endless
quest begins

i sometimes i think do they ever believe that somewhere
at the top of the tree is the largest and the greenest
of all the leaves?

RIC S. BASTASA
The Worms In The Graveyard

the worms in the graveyard
are boasting that the moment they finally sign your papers you will have nothing to take except your hair, your bones, your nails your teeth and they leave such a threatening word

you are a man, and you can do nothing about it.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Worshipper Of Stone

until now
he refuses to tell you the object of his affection

the god that he worships on top of the mountain
his golden possession that looks at him without any affection at all if only you could see it it is nothing but the most common stone any ordinary urchin of the street picks it up and throws it at anybody some bang their heads on it those suicidal fools others merely pass by and sees it without any serious consideration at all

look at him
he is wounded by the one he loves he is scattered like dust and falls upon the places that he never wanted

RIC S. BASTASA
The Worst Choice...

(1) do you do things that you do not like doing?
or
(2) doing those which should not have been done?
(3) or not doing anything at all?

feel me, this day,
try the third option.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Worst Enemy...

you were behind me and i looked back at you you evaded me like we were two ships in an inevitable collision.

I am not afraid.

Got no lighthouse or Port to land this small ship.

You have a continent Scattered islands
You own lighthouses Fierce lights and Friend of the storms.

I am never afraid of you.
I have nothing to lose.

You walk ahead of me
And i hear your laughter.

You are the tower
Her God, and she is my wife.

I am still not afraid at you I can look at you direct to the eye.

Soon you will die.
That is His promise.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Worst Part Of This Democracy
	he worst part of this democracy is always manipulation,

image packaging
popularity
and stabbing at the back

the usual if you cannot beat them, lick them
strategy

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wounded Hands Inside Our Pockets

i've been trying to figure out the cause of your sorrow. it starts with so much love. It takes a step. It whispers.
No one hears. So you grow a set of four hands. Two for you.
You keep them secretly in your pocket.
The other two are birds. You set them to a flight looking for Love. There is no island where their feet can land.
They become the change from time to time.
Hoping that someone may like the shape that they are assuming.
But no one likes it. Weird they say. Your wings are not soft.
The songs are different.

And then your hands come back to you. They prefer the other two hands.
Hiding in your pockets. Shrinking.

They confess. They scream. Love has been unfair. It seeks sameness.
It separates you from the rest of the world.

You spell loneliness to the emptiness of space. It is shapeless.
Looking for a house. A container.

i have figured it too well. And you are not surprised.
We have the same wounded hands. We like to love everyone.
Inside our pockets. Dark, n.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wretched

feel wretched and u become one pity urself and u become dead and i in my confidence shall bury ve that u survive and u become a e don't let them bury u alive

RIC S. BASTASA
The Writ Of Amparo

when you leave this place everything finds no use for me the home crumbles into a house doors lock themselves like silent lips what can i do with a house or an empty chair?

it loses me and i drift like everyone else moving from one place to another not finding the seat of comfort

where is rest? it is not found in the map there is no church
no cottage

all the people that i meet do not speak 'no english', no word, no syllable their heads turn, their arms fold, their feet dusting me out from a lull,

when you leave this place
it will be gone and when you come back what you will find is the darkness of the sea deep within its womb of deadly coldness its unfathomable silence its cruelty in the depths of sleeplessness...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Writ Of Execution

THE lady has a long, black hair,

she is not young and not married
she brings her little girl in court

and tonight they will be homeless

she is crying
and the man stood there
doing nothing

he is the owner of the house
and he is not moved
anymore
by her tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Writer In A Trance

disowning everything he says these are all incoherent pages there is no logic
there is no metaphor
to explain

you agree,
this is the one...

tomorrow, there will be a trance again how can you understand? of no importance is this one, not even a poem i can hear you complain this is the trance of a compulsion, i myself cannot explain this is all too human god’s way of shaming our own humanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Writer In Me
	here is silence
in my struggle
there is dignity
in my suffering

cloth and tie
flawless fabric
of my
existence

there is secrecy
in my quest
there is no sharing of my misery

i have only sorrow
as company of my sorrow i have only some tears for my joys

i always have
open arms for Thy Will I seal my fate with a kiss
i always take the incoming as a form of hope

i keep this silence
i write these words.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Writer Of Everything....(For Sammy)

they tell you that you cannot write
but just the same
you write

a voice within you may say 'you cannot write a poem' but you do not listen

everyday you write what they call as doggerel but just the same you wake with a poem in your hand a poem in your mind and then you write it everywhere: walls, sands, water, clouds, skies,
space,

you write it on waste papers, you write it against the light you write it against everyone's thoughts,

you silence the voice of unbelief, and by all means you have become one writer in your time

RIC S. BASTASA
The Writer On His Oath...

write you must
write you must
blow the dust
blow the dust....

RIC S. BASTASA
The Writer...

IT is not the books not the words neither is there an expert way of fishing for metaphors,

IT is the life lived (and for some cut so shortly like an unfinished tapestry of fallen leaves on top of the flowing skin of the silvery river) IT is the life that is lived to the fullest extent no shortcuts, no surrender of the last glimmer of hope, Till the last day, IT IS our lives that write us and it that unplanned and unexpected death
that says the last words at the last page of this unpublished book.

IT IS LIFE
the writer.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Writer.....

i am just a watcher

i watch how people run how some kill some how they scream and bury their
dead

i am just this spectator

i watch how the powerful drive away the weak how the liars win how the murderer escape and find their own shelter

i am just this by-stander

i look at how time pass me by how rivers run dry how clouds thicken and then rain how this earth is flooded how children turn into men i have done nothing for i can do nothing, except...

to write these lines and leave them for those who know how to read and act on what they know... you are not watchers, you are not spectators you are no by-standers of these times you will be heroes soon and monuments will be built in your honor

i am contented in this,
i just keep my mouth shut for this i do, i write.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wrong Choice...

you must think that he had been feeding the wrong wolf for now he behaves like a pig escaping from its pen running without any definite

direction
hitting the ground with his chin destroying the melons of his master

who finally decides that tomorrow it shall be butchered for good

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wrong Occasion

you arrive in a place it is familiar
the chairs are in your memory
and pillars know you
well
enough like a mother
to her son

you look at yourself you are wearing the wrong dress for the occasion

where it calls for a suit and a pair of glossy black leather shoes
what you have is a lousy loose shirt and cheap sneakers with untied shoelaces

you want to take the exit but the door is too far away from where you are seated you want to say an excuse to the woman beside you but she is busy with her prayers

then the bride comes with her veil and white gown

she is being wed to another man
and the people are not talking
about it.
The Wrong Question

this morning
you cry and with sobbing you report about a child being mauled by the police at the dead end of Del Pilar street near the municipal cemetary

the child was running away from five policemen who kept on chasing him and they caught him and asked his age, his name, his father, his mother and he said he is 19, Kiko, his father is Pepo, and his mother Karing his father a fisherman and his mother a vendor and he is from the far mountain and just arrived to the city and since he is frail and pale and looks like a sick child he reaped the suspicion that he is a drug addict and they mauled him almost to death and he was hospitalized and charged resisting arrest

Someone asks, not bothered at all by an imagination of blood and broken bones and abuse of authority

'But why did he run away, in the first place? '

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wrong Way To Idolize A Famous Writer

there are people whom we adore and the danger lurks where we can be lured into imitation and we slowly become fake, lost out into a world where our originality melts like snow muddy.

with mouth agape, we follow, eyes fixed on what he says, our hands more wiling to undress our bodies only to follow the colors that he is wearing he is always older, he had become wise by his years of experience and you mind every word, every written sentences amazed by what he has to say in every moment

what have become of you? a follower, ready to take the paved paths and you will forget about your own scythe giving up the power of your hands it is a pity. You have become an It.

The light in your forehead is put off.
You lose your form.
Your content is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Wrong Woman For The Man Who Feels He Is The Right Man

it happens all the time when the right man feels that he has wed the wrong woman when the wrong woman too feels that he has
wed the wrong man,
mutuality of affections on errors

i sometimes feel that too and i ask again have i married the wrong woman?

have i been the right man claiming all along that i am the right man?

why? did the trials not work
for both of us?

twelve years
the feeling about right and wrong is over now i wake up early dawn still sleeping beside her at least in the silent lonely hours of my life i have this companion and she is warm beside me and then i think again she can be right

and i can be wrong

who knows?

RIC S. BASTASA
The X And Y

You're own your own now Touch and go
Like an old proposition You cover distances Looking for the right angle Or way by which you may complete The equation
To solve the unknown

The equation is like a long river Without banks
It appears calm but cold

You are an irony
Warm at night
Cold at noon
In the brightness of the whole day You cover your face with your scared hands

RIC S. BASTASA
The Year Of The Rooster.... he first day
of the year of the rooster
no cock crowed
at dawn
we wait
we sharpen our ears
it rains
on the very first day
do not be surprised
if the following days
there will be a rain of tears
for all the needed
salt of the earth

RIC S. BASTASA
The Years Just Keep On Passing By....

another year shall pass me by without any excuse
i shall not mind it
i do my thing it does it.

to one who loves his life time passes by without much noting, for there is always something more important to do, than counting.

the years are just falling leaves blown by the wind and we are the spectators from the bus window going must faster to somewhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Yellow Love Bird

that early morning
the yellow love bird
perhaps tired or perhaps lost
perched on the steel railing of the veranda, and i

approached it
with my arms stretched my hands open

i flew away on a rush perhaps thinking
that i will catch and put it in a cage, it

got me wrong, all i wanted is to see it fly

yes, i want it to fly away where it must really belong

RIC S. BASTASA
The Yellow Magnolias

and in keeping
yellow magnolias alive for more dark nights amid some unexpected storm
we do not grown them
in our pockets

in the garden
amidst the wooden fences we attempt to keep them forever

only the heart knows what real keeping is there are no roots
neither
buds and leaves but my yellow magnolias live there
forever

did you not say once before
that eventual leaving that it is only really the thought that matters most?

i know
you keep telling me magnolias are always white

and you never believe my yellow ones who can forget the yellow ribbon on that old oak tree? tell me.

tomorrow, i shall wear my yellow cap my yellow shirt, my yellow brief, my yellow pants.

my jaundiced eye, my golden yellow ring.
tomorrow, in my country, the sky is yellow.

all steps lead to the yellow brick road. all fruits are ripe and mellow and yellow.

Tomorrow, the country is yellow.
Yellow for integrity, Yellow for change.
Yellow for justice. Yellow for truth.

One day more, and the sun shall rise Yellow as w forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Yes In Me

my yes is cautious

it starts with an if

if i say yes then what will i give what will i lose? there is always a but now unlike before when my eyes were young and too sheltered for harsh lights i know how to give now without losing if i say yes and if i give something i always take back the silence of my own consequences in a box when both of us leave there will be no word not a word shall be wasted for it is expensive perhaps just a glance and then you hear footsteps outside the door

some children will laugh and then the rain

yes just the rain on the road nothing more not even the clicking of an umbrella unless you decide to follow like a kitten

but by then you will have no name of a street and i too will be another coat wearing passenger in that train

going elsewhere to an address unrevealed to anyone

RIC S. BASTASA
The Yes Man...

say yes,
do not misinterpret
say yes
only if you want to...

RIC S. BASTASA
The Yogi Has Turned Into Stone.

there is a need for us to be shaken

you were told a long time ago before you were dismissed from that exclusive house of contemplators

you are holy, you are good, by all means you deserve a shelter of your life

you need to be shaken i laugh it out only to find its meaning just now

i am shaken and i may lose everything i have. I must keep my cool.

perhaps, like you, i needed it too, before i get finally dismissed from this house of life, this house of the unknown.

we wait as you have waited before you were finally lost, until you found yourself.

the yogi has turned into stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
The You In You

what is in you that hides?
what is in you that runs and yet comes back to stay a while?
you keep things like a miser and spends them all in one day when your beloved dies and squanders them all like the rain when the right time comes when this is over you settle like a wilting flower in the silent city.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Young Boy And The Sea

the young boy sees the sea as the sea
what else could it be?

a giant breather in front of his little eyes
the rolling arms that want to catch him in his breast

the boy remembers his mother and runs towards her the big body of the sea stares at him

'soon i will catch you my boy until you become the man who shall search for the pearls inside my belly! '

the boy lays his head upon his mother he closes his eyes but could not remember his dream anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
The Young Lovers

the young lovers
close their rooms too early and they open their rooms
too late for lunch

ey they keep on hugging tightly
to their bones
and marrows

exploding
their ecstacies
and we understand how is it to be lost in the labyrinths of passion

i have tried it once and they all understand what we mean by our actions

they were once
lost too
in the embraces
of their arms

and the rest
too understand

what humans know what human do

they fall in love
and they think they will never be separated
ever again
from this sense

melting away
from shame
and being a stranger to modesty

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Self-Defense

When the incident happened Three of them took turns Mauling the victim
Using firewood they hit His nape, using their fists They hit his face and arms And back and when he knelt For mercy, they still kick him And spit on him, until he fell To the ground Losing his view of what This world is all about

Is this world all about hatred?
Is this world all about violence Inflicted by a brother to another Brother? Is dialogue not a Possibility to settle this war?

That night, he saw dead stars and blood Not the beautiful stars in his poems But the stars of pain & grief when he Lost his consciousness
When his eyes were forced to close

Now he invokes the law Against them who almost Killed him
He invokes the law of the just
On his lacerated lip and Multiple injuries around His human body

And I listened to the defense Of the three accused
They say they were only Defending themselves
Because he wanted to talk To them on the dead of the night And wanted an explanation About the grudge of this world Against him and his kindness He stared at them and they Did not like it, his eyes Stabbed them
With so much light and it Was also painful
The stare was grievous

I looked at the eyes of pain On his complaint and today I made a decision

The verdict, of course
Is Guilty.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Baby

whatever happens
when you cannot forget that innocent smile
those fragile fingers holding on to your hand always think that baby can never be yours
and that you can never be their eternal slave

go, find your own
take time
but first find a man

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Deaths....

an ant, an anteater,
a termite, a bird, a whale, a caterpillar,
a fly,

their lives differ.
when they die, we care less, we fear
our own, we stop to ponder.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Fences And Yours

it is a rainy day and you look for that nearest available shade, this time, your neighbor's house it is fenced and about five steps away their closed door some bushes hide what supposedly should have been an open space
like a warm embrace of the arms the door bell does not sound and you have no other choice you change your mind and walk away back to your house it too is fenced, like what they do.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Gifts

the first child boasts of his gift from his papa a remote controlled toy car the second cannot be outdone with his toy gun with matching laser the third shows his toy chopper still on remote control the fourth one says her mama simply told her that she loves him very much his jealous eyes crave for the toy car, the toy gun, the chopper, and he is sad, thinking that his mama has no gift for him

except love.
just love? he is so sad.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Golden Wedding Anniversary (For A Couple In Chicago)

she wears two platinum bracelets on her wrists

dressed in golden yellow

her reading glasses
on

she poses as he takes her picture
against the yellow leaves
falling

the wind passes
another year is marked

in the autumn of their years

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Love Story

she could not bear it anymore she took her life away he easily accepted events managed to cry some tears for her funeral wore black and would not eat for days but he has a life of his own to live after three months he meets another woman in his life takes her to another place to begin his life anew forget her altogether and live happily ever after.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Love......

the two took refuge in the dark
where they feel each others' souls
fitting perfectly

the light outside is blind
as to what love is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Marriage: Phase 2

ey they sleep early and wake up early

to the splendor of odor the magic of skin all gone back to back with time they have nothing to share except their promise to complete the journey of marriage sailing on mutual affections of pity and sympathy less the excitement silence holding on to silence love shrinking to its essence understanding digs deeper to souls intertwined longing for that final resting place the same God as their witness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Own Circle

i like to join them
in their circle
without much thinking whether i fit

lots of courage you say
wanting
to be in simply for being in and be one of
them

they keep the circle too small
and i am
having a hard time looking for the entrance

i cannot even see the exit

at the last look
i feel a little awkward not to boast

or be arrogant but i just feel
that i am too big
for all of them

and so i stayed in my own rectangular wall, four corners
no roof

no other occupant
just myself
sleeping well within my confines.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Own Interests Most Of All.....

the little boy is
dead

there is dust on his forehead

from the rubble and the trouble

the world condemns
the horror

the newspapers are putting the head
lines

meanwhile the powerful countries
who hold the future of the other little boys still keep discussing how to protect their own interests....

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Precious Indifference

because you have written so many they will hear nothing but traffic have nothing but impatience earn nothing but that familiarity of boredom they will read nothing but many pedestrians crossing the road and will not recall any shoe or tie because they are too many they will see no pearl but only pebbles that they all throw away in the mud until nothing is left but their own precious indifference which they will treasure as gold.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Shore-Less Hearts....

I ENVY you
i like the way you hold your tool
like a garden shovel that takes almost everything to make the flowers
of spring
bloom

i envy you

you have taken
what i long for
and you
have enjoyed it
to the full

i like the way
you dip your tongue
to the petals
and on that nectar's
taste
a bee dances in the sky
in ecstasy

i watch all these events passively
like i were an electric post that lights
the street at night
and still stares endlessly
to all those who are lost on their way to finding the island
delights
of their shore-less
hearts.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Soft And Young Bodies Against The Wall Of Poverty And Indifference.

the best gift i gave to the little boy was the toy plane. I want him to learn how to make it fly. he need not fly.
it will be another
defeating illusion.
i want the boy to dream about the sky
and the wind
and he will become another mythical creature in the slum

the best gift i gave to that little girl was a stuffed puppy with lots of curls and big eyes. she needs a hug from the softness of the body of the puppy.
her nights are always without her mother.
her brother is too hard for her wishes.
her papa is dead.

then they become happy. They will dream all night.
Gentle with their sleep.
their soft and young bodies against the wall of poverty and indifference.

RIC S. BASTASA
Their Way To Freedom
	heir way to freedom is not that easy and simple, they will tell you about what their histories tell them blood so much blood was shed some important people died and they become more important in time, they were worshipped and made as icons immortal heroes where the young must learn what was in their minds by compulsion

and that is the irony of it all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Theirs

too much convolutions like layers of threads and interfering light don't know. I can't pinpoint. Which is which from whom is whom?

too many to hold. Myriad memories.
I cannot grasp what is what.
When is when. Why.

too many bombardments. Less and lesser close-ups.
Woos delayed. Mass growing under the skin.

nothing touched. Distance dissolving. Time melting.
It is better this way. We like it anyway.

It is just watch. We understand nothing.
The meteors do what they deserve. They just pass away.

RIC S. BASTASA
Then we destroyed the fence and we have become another open house we thought it would be just perfect sharing what we are what we have until everything is taken until we lose whatever privacy is left we have misunderstood openness we have misunderstood who they are and what is this place really like we are never the same and they are never us.

and so we reconstructed the fence made it higher and stronger and we look at them down below us for we have learned our lesson so well we give only when necessary we part with what we have only for a reason we are different

and they are them...

RIC S. BASTASA
Theme Song

we had it
we were serious about it long time ago
we listened attentively we felt it
stirring our hearts
whirling with so much love
we look at each other's eyes
full moon

ah, but that was long ago we did not much have of that free will to overcome those obstructions we never hurdled them completely

we embraced the weakness of all those fears we said, we were not meant to be there were other plans that must fulfill
destiny

i went back to that place where they still play that music i still enjoy each lyric but i am already different the feeling has changed and i never felt the urge to dance again

RIC S. BASTASA
Themirrorandthelullaby

ilookatmyselfinthemirror findingafaceaverysadone indeedandiamnotalarmed anymoresitisexpectedwith alltheburdeningyearsigetused tothissomehowconcealing whatisfeltwhatispain? what isthereasonforthisphenomenon ibegintowhistlemother'slullaby stillinmyheartandihearmother herselfsingingtomehersong whatislove? isitlikethesunthat shinesinsidemyheart?
helloiamconcealediamhiding inatrainofwordsdoyoustillseeeme doyoustillwanttoreadme
without theneededspaceforyou
tounderstand
whatisreallythere? whatishereforth moment? cryingonthepillowatnight thereisnomaginanymoreandidonot meananymorewhatasisay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Then I Am  As Lucky As You, Restless Soul.

you wonder,
what is the point?

it is pointless
all these are but exercises,

looking for verbal sufficiency

this articulation of smoothness like

strong liquor to my throat

how does it slide?
like life.

however, if in this journey, i stumble upon God, or Love, then i am

as lucky as you, Restless Soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
Then Love Will Not Sell....

it would have been easier if you love me and
i love you.

nothing obtrusive.
all is well.
smooth as a shell.

but who would like to follow it
line by line?
if love is well,
that will be swell.

no one likes it
and your book will not sell.

humanity loves
the cathartic.
the tragic,
and at the end,
that magic.

RIC S. BASTASA
Then Move On

NO one comes here to vend wares we are bringing nothing for sale

We have arrived because we want to bring more life

we will not stay somehow to make us fixed

there are paradoxes to cross myths to either amaze us or destroy us

No one comes here to make a show far from it

what we want is to silence the scream to settle for what is less and what is only essential and then move on...

RIC S. BASTASA
Then She Asked Me If I Had Had Dinner Already

love can be twins and i can also be double-faced but not really untrue or insincere

love multiplies upon itself when one misses what love truly is all about isn't love sharing?

isn't its essence charity?

i am ready to share my body with you.
but you recited all the codes of morality tsk, tsk, you miss love and it is such a pity....

RIC S. BASTASA
Then The Fish Story Begins To Be Told

POETRY is something that you do
which most of the times others do not really share doing, for one thing for most, it serves no purpose perhaps, except to baffle somehow i keep doing it just like dropping a tiny stone in that sleepy pond to make a ripple where ripple makes more ripples

and then a child begins to see and asks if there is a fish that swims in it.

then the fish story begins to be told until the child has grown up to be a man
ready for more ripples

RIC S. BASTASA
Then The Tears Shall Start To Fall

Another year has ended Summer has come for us to bask in the sun In sandy white beaches with friends, But I must now take leave My time has come Alas, the ylang-ylang trees in our garden Without me
Shall still bloom and spread its scents When the wind comes again
Tonight
Then the tears shall start
To fall

RIC S. BASTASA
Then We Have Changed From Quizzical To A Certainty

we look at ourselves after we run for miles and stop for a while by the side of a peaceful pond along our way back home where we have seen the lines in our foreheads the curves of our jaws the sunken features of our cheeks and then we have changed from quizzical to a certainty as we begin to carve our hopes on that mirror:

not all bread cures our hunger not all water cures our thirsts not all in us can be sold like some kind of properties that can give us a profit for the day

we reflect back then when all experiences are teachers when fear of everyday life has actually made us live for the better when certainty is finally abhorred when life becomes so real as it slips from our fingers when we finally dip our finger to the body of that water that finally erased who we are and how we look like the rest of those we knew.

RIC S. BASTASA
Then You Ask Me If I Am Angry

after betrayal of trust you have the nerve to ask if i am angry

i am not
i am
hurt and that makes the difference

between you and me
there shall be a chasm

an abyss
but you will never hear me shouting

RIC S. BASTASA
Then You Go Inside Yourself.

Excited.
You rush for that travel. The clouds amaze you inside the plane manila bound.

You like it now.
Alone. A walk at SM Night stroll at Roxas boulevard.

You need this.
Go out this room.
Take this walk and that.
Eating alone
Seeing the people
passing by.

Then you go
inside yourself.
No one really knows.
How deep
and silent you have
gone.

RIC S. BASTASA Therapy.......

it is not Sigmund Freud this time sitting beside the sofa as he rests his head while questions are asked taking him to places of his youth where he is going to take the answers, it is not about sex, it is about poetry.

at the ceiling the stars on the walls cling the silence of space.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Just Too Many Unfinished Business

if for a time you get bored for all sorts of reasons try being busy avoiding all the resting places of idleness there are just too many unfinished business. Reinvent yourself.

Change the world.
Plant the trees.
Sow the seeds.
Clean the rivers and Sift the seas.
Try the herculean side of things.

after which you wish you have the nine lives of a cat or even the ten heads of the dragon where finally you find a cave to be alone to restore
your fire.

or a fence
where you can sit in the manner of a cat watching dogs pass by
and feeling
safe that you are on a high place.
Safe and sound.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Many Roads To Take

at this point in my life there are always many roads to take the options are limitless the roads looking like hairs and fibers and swirling octopuses so confusing
so tempting to take those that make me happy

but i have decided to take this rougher road with you, my love

i have taken your hand i have given my word

that is the difference

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Many Ways Of Killing Oneself

a rat poison is cheaper a double edged knife can be good on the wrist
but it's gonna be painful sleeping pills a can full sure fits your mouth and just as good for the stomach
that is the usual way actors and actresses do it better jumping over the highest building either in Dubai or Chicago is expensive for you still have to pay entrance fees or better yet you can take the gun into your mouth and have that relaxing feeling of a sudden bang your brains scatter on the floor and the police will come later someone innocent may even be implicated
because of your action and perhaps that will make you feel better someone's life is choked by the FBI.
A hunger strike is dramatic on social implication you die on purpose like Gandhi the great Mahatma.
Killing yourself is also a responsibility and must be done with extreme caution
like when you cut your wrist staining the carpet or you bed linens
that would be a hard job for laundry and dry cleaning.
These are just the ways to kill oneself and if you are really determined to kill yourself
do it well with art.
We cannot come on your funeral So my dear, just dig a hole beside your garden, and when you really like doing it, just drag yourself an inch away from your self-dug grave and on the last breath
throw yourself in and be gracious enough to leave a note that you are happy and contented now in your self-chosen world.
Feed your dogs, so they may poo and by chance bury you when they scratch the soil.
Nice ending isn't it?

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are No Finishing Touches

in reality no matter what the usual work is always undone you want to finish it?
it finishes you instead look at the pile of books don't you see the fangs on every page? the blood on every chapter
each word the taker of the little flesh left in your mind?

you try putting the finishing touches like a varnish on the well sanded chair you blow your breath and stand at a distance to look at what a finished product should look shiny, yes too shiny and then you miss the sun because what you see is always the mirage beyond your feet still are no master as paths move away as distance stretches itself like light to infinity

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are No Permanent Friends

such is politics
there are no permanent friends
or enemies only permanent vested interests

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are No Pre-Requisites To Friendship

genuine friendship is nothing but just presence there are no per-requisites no demands
no expectations just the honesty of being myself and being yourself
nothing much just the feeling that i am one like you too, in this, in that, that we belong to the same house, on the same journey inside this ordinary boat with us are paddles and rigs admiring the same orange sunset between
the shadows of the hills.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are No Slaves In America....

ricky is pleasing the master of the house.
early to bed early to rise makes a list of what to bring to the beach Saturday morning,

a white bench, a sharp bolo (for cutting the grass) a bowl of salad, a big storage for clean drinking water a big blue beach towel, six red painted chairs, a kettle of Japanese rice, ten live fish, my favorite dog is already at the back of the pick up, the hammock from Cambodia, life jackets for six, dates, and ten bottles of coca-cola and a big ice bucket, no beer this time no cigarettes,

'everything is ready, Sir'

She writes an email from the coast of Costa Rica,

' dear Uncle,

I am feeling lonely here. I miss Ricky and the beach.

Love.

Tina'

well, it is a Saturday and i am exclaiming to the door and windows,

' What a life! '

and the United States of America can wait.

There are no slaves.
There Are No Standards At All.

there is always a person standing by, nitpicking and critically saying: (takes one this one does not meet a standard, you are writing this?

and i answered yes, and i stare at him and sort of asking, who are you? but i let this pass, i do not mind, this is mine and this to me is the best that i have done, it is not for sale, and it is not for praise.

ms., this is not every for your consumption, it is not consumable, it is beyond: commerce, even beyond
death.

it stays here, it is rooted, and i do not intend to bring it there.
coz, everything is inferior there, ..all that is found here.

all these do not meet the standard, because there are no standards.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are No Stars In The Sky Tonight

it is dark and there are no stars tonight the sound of the waves from the sea has been as harsh as it was this morning the trees swing to the dictates of the strong winds and here i am sitting on a chair seeing things move and listening to the sounds of their being how can i just be an ordinary spectator all these years? seeing all the phenomena as they all come and go and not staying even in the memory of my mind i know the reason why, i know it from the very start i am letting go all that confront me not touching them even for fear of interfering what nature wants to accomplish for what each creature deserve to be to each strand of its DNA to each destiny it is the mere seeing of letting nature do what is best for each of us that makes this life alive it is the flower that must open itself with all spontaneity that i must see and feel without the slightest touch of my fingers

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Only The Two Of Us

life would have been simple with just two of us but as simple as we want life
to be
it isn't that way
life becomes a house without windows and furniture and kitchen without the other people who eat with us
when we are too lonely when simplicity is equated with loneliness because the house has not learned to laugh like a kid.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Only Two People In This World

the best slave
and the worst master

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Parts

there are parts in the figure that we deny, and denial can be painful for instance in order not to hear the bad news one can deny that he has ears and so on and so forth

if you are into survival like having experienced how is it to be left alone at sea with only your hands to make you swim you can relate how is it to deny that you have a mind that can delve into what can happen later sharks can be there to eat your fingers or swallow your heart there is only the moon that you can convent into a goddess hoping that this time it can save you and make an island ahead of you so you can land safely and have some coconuts to eat and drink one can be an expert about love or hate and with ease deny the existence of all nerves just one heart

one heart
which you can easily hide with a piece of cloth and then tell the guests of your party that you do not have one at all or that if you have one it has assumed the nature of steel and for a toast you say, Long live love! Long live Love!

but deep inside
you swallow this truth
There is None at all.
There is No One at ALL.

aND it is good.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are People Who Tread Upon The Sands Of This World Leaving No Footsteps there are people who tread upon the sands of this world leaving no footsteps like you they stop somewhere where birds sing no more where Lot's wife cannot look back because there is nothing to love nothing to remember

some who own the footsteps upon the sands and the rocks who can remember the songs so well look back and then cry but like Lot's wife despite knowing the risks turn into stones.

people always love footsteps, the work hard for legacies to leave the earth, some carved words on the trees, some pictures that should not fade, they want to leave their names in glory, their houses firm and tall on the cliff, their tombs secure with epitaphs that everyone must ponder and remember that once they were here.

how useless. The sands speak and then rest in  remember the fingers whose emptiness they pass as they fall quietly back to the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Reasons

there will always be reasons as there are leaves from the trees, why, this word never goes extinct, it is famous, and always gets the good ratings in the scoreboards of our interrogative history, why did you leave me? why did you forsake me?

these are the top questions of those who are in pain, of those you have betrayed, and you hide, wanting to grasp the most convincing answer, like the leaves of the trees,

falling, rotting, decaying, and wanting to come up, rise to the trunks, to the clouds still wishing to explain, to exude the sweet smell of humus, dead is sweet

decay is cool, in rotting shall come the sweetest flavor of the soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Shadows

some nights
those colder ones
when i am alone in bed watching the favorite show on the ceiling of shadows
on an aircon musicale
listening to the comforting whispers of the humming birds inside my mind
i decided to fear
nothing

the shadows of my past are here again my hands do not touch them my hungry eyes feast on their restlessness
my body and soul
all unaffected

after all the dead
cannot harm the living even when they are all sleeping....

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are So Many Of You Here

But only few will be chosen
The rest of them shall survive

They will live another Year of grief Of strife.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are So Many Ways Of Loving

you know that.
you lovely woman, you know what love is.
you know much better than me for i am a bitter man the one who loved so well and yet lost that love and never found it again.

there are so many ways of loving
you know that
and i will not tell you anymore i have loved you once and i think that was all enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Some Questions

there are some questions
that at first glance bring you nothing like an empty basket
with nothing
but wicker spaces
all around it

like: how do you do?
what time is it?

but change these questions to something that slaps us
that makes us think about our existence?

like: how do you do with cancer?
what time is it that you will die?

tragic, but the truth runs like nerves howling for help in your flesh berserk
but then like anybody moving it stops to rest and stares to a world without questions just plain stare and acceptances

some manage however to let hope come inside their mouths
to say:

how do you do mother? what time is it when the next baby comes?
when we will be a family, a home, when we will face the new born babe like a fireplace
near the breakfast table where conversations about baptisms and weddings flourish like some flowers starting to bloom in spring

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Stories

there are stories and there will be more coming next is the love story between a crocodile and a butterfly

did i not once tell you about the tragedy of the ceiling and the floor?
oh, until now, they haven't really kissed despite their pronounced love for each other with the walls as their sole witness

i have more stories for you to tell before you finally leave for that place called oblivion.

i wish i can rewrite the Arabian Nights not in thousands but in millions now vis-a-vis this electronic technology
and there you are listening like grass to the soil with all ears dipped flat on the pebbles and the sands

i understand i will be your entertainer for the next hundred years silly! but that is what we are meant to be an old Spanish church where you are the head priest beside a convent where someone's got to be a nun exempted from the age of time.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Those

that sleep during the day and wake up
at night,

they do not hurt
they hurt themselves and find solutions on neon lights

they smoke their nights away they drink till the flesh is numb till speech is free till the soul clears itself from the burden of the body

they are not like you hope fettered around the walls of the office entrusted to the company Inc.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Those Who Irritate

in the same manner
there are those who are not irritated they know how to maintain poise
despite the storm
to be sensible despite the plagiarism
they become more of themselves as others
go beyond their nature they are silent when you speak they remain silent even if you are silent too oh, they are just themselves
despite the
volcanic eruptions
oh, they remain calm
even if
all are screaming running
even if the world is dead they remain
growing like moss
like lichens
like cockroaches like flies.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Thousands And Thousands

there are thousands and thousands of poems written everyday in this world where we, whether we like it or not, still continue living, breathing, writing, sighing, whatever that we do, singing, bathing, playing, mourning,
there are thousands and thousands of poems thousands of us, doing the same boring things in this world, you are one of us, we are us, us, us, us, thousands, and trillions, we are us, despite, i have my ears for you, my eyes,

all for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Times

when you lose grip of something poetic when the moon is just a moon when a bleeding heart does not occupy any significance when a vacant lot is just another empty space you lose sight of the possibility of someone coming to save you someone that smiles though you do not know who that person is there are times when everything is bland when a hamburger does not satisfy hunger
when you lose sight of what once was beautiful when horses pass your way and you are not moving to feel the ride
when you just sit there and
do nothing
these are the times when you begin to think you realize
you are still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Times When The Sun Does Not Shine

who argues about the rainy days when the sun
does not shine
like a child hiding
on the skirt
of her mother

who disputes
lean times
and hungry days
when we simply
bite our tongue
swallow our saliva
and say we just had lunch

when this happens
we can do nothing
we let all these times come and then wait
when they finally leave for like the sun that does not shine today tomorrow it may come and shine again so brightly!

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Walls

i just learned that there are walls that want to be gates

there are windows that want to be skies and birds there are birds that want to become stars

and there are stars that merely want to be themselves just the glitter

for the night

then fade away
on the first glimpse of light

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Walls Between Us

brother, there are walls between us needles of rain between our faces when i touch your hand you seem so far away like an island to another island without a boat
just a telescope.

you expect too much, like the way you want me to devote all the attention you need:
every need,
every discomfort,
every uneasiness,
every asking ungiven seems to be unforgiven i resign.
i stop
from this unfair brotherhood
that you
impose upon me

there are walls and walls that you are building now and i cannot see and hear you anymore you built them i won't destroy them and i will not ask the reasons why we deserve a distance, a far away distance, perhaps for us to rethink what brotherhood is all about it is not a one-way traffic i suppose so you must understand it as i do i am going inside this road with my own car you take yours and we meet halfway keep those walls, they are yours i keep this road, this bridge, this open space There Are Walls There Are Ceilings

there are walls here and there are ears who listen so well and eyes who see too clearly
you,
there are ceilings too
there are limits to what you can do there are floors between
you
now the cup has overflowed the dams break out a flood will cover you, the floor meets the ceiling and you are sandwiched like a witch,

see..how you crumple?

RIC S. BASTASA
There Are Weights On My Shoulder time knows how to manage burdens and weights and pain, and so here i am before you as you read the last line of my words i am finally attuned i have taken the scales of equivocation and wandered along the spaces of ambiguities

and ironies and paradoxes in such a way that whatever side i take on whatever wall i lean on whatever river i cross and sometime even dream of flying across the boundaries of this human fence

i have learned the art this trick of picking up meanings yes, i have understood the meaning of my life i am lifting the lightness of the weight of my being.

i have wings
without feathers.

RIC S. BASTASA
There At The Cave Door Of The Old Church

there at the cave door of the old church
you shall enter

move farther. move some more until you reach the dead end corner where the windows are little squares lighted by the small fingers of the sun shining all day

find our some truths of squares lights and shadows of the past of this old church on its window and door have you gone to the old church in Baclayon?

have you seen this old door and window?

tell me if it is true that there are no more choices in your life.

what they are saying is not really true.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Comes A Time

there comes a time
you least expect when hiding your true feelings within becomes more painful

than when you let it out open to the sun
letting them wilt like some raisins

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is

there is beauty in smaller things a single red petal of a rose in my pocket
a white pebble hidden in my shoe
a lock of hair of my beloved inserted in a page of my favorite poem a little space where i sit in my garden

a single tree to shade
my head
a little bird singing above my hair

a small rock where i can just sit
and feel the slow movement of this earth

in here
there is peace and quiet
in here
i am king

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Bird Inside My Mouth

there is this blue bird inside my mouth and it is singing and so i decided not to speak lest i cannot hear
its beautiful song

it is love song
and it is calling your name would you like me to stop the bird so i can speak to you about the sad story of a man who just lost his desire for love?

whose heart is broken because you have not kissed him?

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Choice

there is this void
that i think, remains to be a void forever

no matter how you fill it up it remains a void, a chasm and you feel like falling forever on a bottom that seemingly is not there at all

there is also this joy that remains to be a joy forever inside our hearts and it rises and rises forever
you feel like flying up forever and there is no roof of cloud or sky

there you are at the middle of these two contrasts

look up and look down
you choose

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Connection Between You And The Beetle

there is a beetle
inside your tummy
it has been eating
the left side of you
and you wonder if there is a connection between you and the beetle

when it bites you
you think about itself more rather than you wanting and decided to kill it at once

but it knows its place and has its reason when it declares with a challenge that you cannot afford to accept

'when you kill me
be careful
you also kill yourself'

(it is a stalemate)

to live for another day you smile
and the beetle smiles
with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Distinction Between You And Me

It is a basic classic distinction
between you and me
is a big chasm
a black space
they call it a hole
of a doughnut
no one understands it
completely
except myself
that center of understanding that which accepts us for what we are that on the circular edge of substance and sweetness chocolate or orange there is a place i call i own
that domain of having known
nothing

between me and you lies my own acceptance of my own ignorance
that is where i start my birth

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Need For Us To Talk

there is a need for us to talk
i am facing a blank wall and i am left with nothing to write nothing to say, so, i pray, talk to me, and when we begin this oral intercourse, i will be amazed, to a new world before me, as the walls become skies, as the skies grow stars, as the night grows deep into the woods, the mundane and the divine fuse, something ephemeral comes at me, and then i find a door into the world of words, like this.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Need To Repair The Hands Of The Clock

my days are turning into nights and nights transformed into days when you switch on something switches out and you seem not to understand how the hands of the clock are running

counterclockwise
not the usual clockwise clockwork of the tic tac toe, this ticking of the stick like a beating on your feet it pains to know that you are not asleep and then all of them are soundly sleeping and snoring

on the other side of your room you take something to drink and then you dream that your are dead you run away from life no one stops you no one tells you stop, stop, stop this untimely demise because we love you from the bottom of our needs not funny anymore

you wish you do not wake up anymore you wish you are transported in the world where no one dies where no one lives something constant like a straight line and some blinking sounds you swear you love the silence you swear everything needs to be quiet and so you will take it now.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Point In Your Life...(For Mother Earth)

it comes as a surprise even to you when someone looks upon you how you spend so much money on what they call as useless profitless ventures and all their eyes show the worry of a loser

much like a son first meeting the prodigal shape of a face

for you

at this point in your life spend much of what you have in viewing the majesty of a waterfall the trip on the hidden hills the foot-walk and the silence of the bats hanging on those forest trees the springs of water below the foot of those hills and its virginal
rocks

then

you say nothing
you give a smile to yourself to this triumph when what they have viewed as non-essential have become too pleasing to your soul

and

you just know it at the end there is no regret you are merely admiring the beauty of this earth following the curves of its body burying yourself in the coldness of its arms

and telling it

that there is no love greater than this knowing mother
earth
telling her that you want a space between her breasts

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Reason For An Empty Space

papa's carabao
has a favorite mud hole mama's parakeet has a nest

God has a crib in the
in one empty space

in my soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Reason For Everything

nothing happens by random like the atoms
there is a central axis a point where everything revolves
and spins

in our case we call it God
without Whom there is no meaning
to this revolution
to this circular wham without beginnings

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Secret Garden In My Heart

where i grow some weeds
and flowers with colors
and scents
not of your liking

i hide them
there
only for me
to see
and smell
and touch

you do not
know
i am more real in this garden

my home
away from
you

where i can be a weed
a grass
and not the flower
that you always
love

in this garden
where i am alone
where i can be myself
away from the clutches
of your choking
gaze

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is A Way To Write To Make You Understand

there is a way to write to make you understand
like pointing a way and walking through it with us together

but the way to that is dangerous since many have become posts and markers only and those who follow it do not really make it to their known destinations lost, and sweating, and wary where to go next they sit under a tree and begin to talk about themselves instead using such trivial words like the way birds simply fly and roost and then fly again without having to worry about maps i like to state it directly: there is no way for understanding the reasons why we are here and where we are really going: and as pointed by the sage ahead of me, we must understand that we cannot understand, that what we know after all, is what we do not really know.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Also Beauty In Monotony

a cacophony of the sounds of the waves of the sea
on our counted steps leading to a hut with a single light from the moon

there we shed off our worn out faces without eyes we can now sleep soundly it is the ear that reigns but when the nightmare of images comes inside the dream it can be shut off like an old radio of the ancestral house.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Always A Place

there is always a place where i can be myself
without fear,

there is always a room
where i can be myself
and just sleep,

there is always a space where i am at
home

there is always a spot where you are blind where i am shut
where you finally do not know where i am

i am still and rested, like a moon resting on a mountain peak one nice evening with my ever silent stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Always A Resolution

the conflicts are the sand castles
they won't last that long with the waves
leveling everything to the shore
the waves take what is due
them
the sand castles give way
and then there is peace a blank piece
a tabula rasa
that nature offers to the mind persistent
on the truth
the open space
the freedom of the
air
the pigeons moving home
to roost

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Always A Time For Reckoning

those with black conscience shall take all the time to laugh they will have their own time the deepest ocean knows how to listen

there is always a time for reckoning
that is our hope we do not inflict the pain it is the pain that inflicts itself upon themselves

that is the law
it is harsh
and it shall prevail

we who have white souls shall wait
we do nothing to stain our hands with blood to dirty what clean skins we have we shall wait for always the day of reckoning comes it is harsh
it is the law
and surely it will prevail they shall grind their teeth burn themselves eternally in hell

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Always Hope

After the rain
there is always sunshine Behind the clouds are the rays of the new sun And the rainbow promises A world so new After that flood is the flower and the bud For as long as we breathe Hope is there bequeathed.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Always Hope, Mind You

perhaps i shall now figure out
why i always dream of flood under a bridge where i walk upon with all fears because the bridge is weak and trembling

perhaps i can now jibe it with a tsunami
that is chasing me as i run
as fast as i can towards the top
of an old mountain

perhaps i shall be wiser now warned
as i am about an impending chaos or calamity

or perhaps i already know all these like a Cassandra
tortured more on the imagined consequence

rather than what actually happened

who knows that, by luck or by the grace of God or by the power of prayers or with the intercession of the saints and Mother and all the angels of heaven this misfortune shall be finally averted.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Always Hope.... here is hope
in everything
for as long as the rain stops and
continues
to make as a rainbow, for as long as the seed opens us
and then
begin to grow

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Always Less Time....

creativity also says with both hands banging its chest
'there is so much to do but there is less time to do it'

living is always only for the moment tomorrow is just a thought just like yesterday a moment not remembered the other one does not like to remember

'we mellowed down' quips the ripe pomelo which has only a minute more to go before it lands on the grass below.

'we didn't even have life' concludes the stone stuck on the ground

'we are human beings, spare us some more time; we have unfinished business' thus pray the senior citizens at Abbey Home.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Always Something To Write About

for as long as there is experience
there will always be something
to write

for as long as you are sensitive enough in such a way that you can see a needle in the sky or a grain of sand in the deepest trench of surigao

for as long as you keep on living and noting what is happening each day

not just what is there but what is missing
not just what is said but what is not uttered there will always be something

to write

even if it is not poetry at all, even if it is
nothing

there is always something to write about....

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Always This

greed, that sometimes rationalizes itself that it does not exist, and yet when you sleep at night when the room is so silent and it refuses to talk and tell you the truth you soon will discover it to be a part of your being and then you finally admit that you belong to the genealogy of the dragon spitting fire and taking territories and damaging the humanity where you once belong, this soliloquy for instance is a manifestation of greed's guilt, tomorrow, another war is done.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is An Error

You cannot enter
There is no access
There is a problem
You get disconnected

No problem
I’ll change my face
I’ll take some fingers
From my hands
I’ll take the eyeballs
And take yours
I will rearrange my Hair and nose and mouth And realign my teeth

I’ll get your thumb marks
And gee!
I look like you in almost Everything and Gee!
I now appear like I am thinking
Like you

Now I will enter now I will get access There will be no problem I look like you and think like you

Welcome progress welcome peace Welcome to uniformity welcome to loss of identity

Welcome to your definition of democracy.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Fire In My Head

there is fire in my head
i am burning
there are cinders
under my feet
i am glowing

i feel the heat
all around me more fires are seeded
in my eyes

i am hot and wild with free ideas

i am ashamed
of myself
how i have forgotten
the mechanics of crying

water,
tears,
sweat,

i want to cry again
and recover
my true worth

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is More Between Us Going

in that island
we had it all
our hands grope
with what is more
our bodies rub
the heat like flint stones making fire

in a few days
and night
under the light of the moon we shall find that there is something more going between us something that we cannot forget beyond the flesh and the bone of our contentions

i hate to say it but it is love and i hate to accept it that i am weak on this particular aspect

i must pack and leave the soonest before my heart breaks

RIC S. BASTASA
mind you
there is something more to pain than happiness.
first, we always relate to pain, we all have it and there is no need for a doctor's certification that we suffer pain.
second, pain always heals itself, like a lizard rebuilding its own cut feet.
third, whether we like it or not, pain gets in our system telling us that there is something wrong. we are warned and we must take heed and act.
and so mr. failure. ms. dilemma. mr and mrs misfortune fasten your seatbelts in this plane of pain we fly to higher altitudes to destinations of relief, and we land later on the island of happiness. this is the anticipation after the rain is the rainbow after the pain is also joy after this misery bliss.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is More To Unhappiness....

because there are too many options you become speechless

you fret, you fingers are restless what now? you are undecided what to choose,

the thought of consequences come like rain you are drenched all over feeling cold

and so
alone,

you try to figure out that from among these million choices you have to take only one and be happy,

and if you are wrong and become unhappy throughout your lifetime you will be blaming yourself forever and it happens to most of us here who think that this world is unfair, that people are insensitive that the future is bleak the past nothing but recklessness and the present a tragedy, all about regret and waste and throughout our lifetime we choose to be unhappy because we think we made the wrong choice there will be a review, an evaluation, there is more to unhappiness, it is not just that.

There is much weeping Because you have taken so much wisdom Take only what is necessary That which cannot make you weep

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Never A Home For A Vagabond

you arrive from a long trip you take the stairs back home the sound of the jet plane still hounds your ears

you step into a garden and the grass tells you with each blade that you have not arrived
at all

it is always strange
always
you miss home but there is really no home when you step upon the floor of the house you plea for a home but there is really no home no little boy meets you and calls your name no little girl dances for you what you have are the dogs and they have their own language for missing you but they are never enough

when you arrive
in a moment after putting all your dirty clothes in the bin you pack again for shirts and shorts and rubber shoes the long way behind the kitchen door gives you another map for escape you forget home

there is never one
There Is No Choice But To Be Simple

lest i make you confused as others want you to be,

like seaweeds spreading at the bottom of the sea,

i have no choice then but to embrace the simplest words ever got less of the vocabulary of the rich and famous just this way to make you understand that in life there is no choice in fact, we must finally know there is nothing here.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Comparison

there is no comparison
between you and me, there is no similarity or difference

for you are you and i am i in the comfort of ourselves we are parallel lights moving forces
strong and
alive

to each direction
each is
and will always be intentionally
free

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Debate About Love

for love does not argue upon itself
it is patient if you remember it sits and listens and holds your hands and warms your palms
it embraces you
on winter time

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Direction

i admit, there is no direction to follow, my feet keep walking, my mind runs out of control, imagination is an octopus with tentacles, black is the color of its defense, shoots and moves, hides inside a cave of stone,
getting away from
everyone.

where to go?
follow me, says The Feet.
a weak mind
easily submits to be taken
anywhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Direction On These Fears

a trembling hand shows to you that there is no specific explanation for fear the directions of the veins bluish
do not give you the specific symptom

for like fear everything goes and spreads you want to cite a specific explanation
there is none

some let their bodies fall at heights that will not warrant the hint of survival but some knows the trick the let fear pass for all fears pass and wait for the calming of the storm wait for the boat that takes you back home

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Envy For Joy...

finally vanessa gets her visa
and her lover mitchel awaits for her in Japan

now the two are reunited

for him there is no end to happiness
joy is immeasurable
now
nothing really matters
except
love...

i do not feel the envy that others feel

i am in the same state as
him

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Forcing Oneself On The Other

love is a democracy it does not force itself upon other people's hearts when it is welcomed it enters the door and expects to be cared for

when it is time to leave love knows how to make that graceful exit it goes out the door of mutuality leaves the room leaves nothing

it closes the door slowly there is no banging of anything the words are kind when it says goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Going Back

the boats were already burned the bridges all cut the river floods and so we all go to where we shall
end,
there is no turning back there is nothing in there not even a memory
of throats,
there was only the thin slice of bitter taste
there is no you and me
we were all
like salt dissolved in the blandness of our own waters.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Moon Tonight

She asks permission tonight to go out for a while To get some fresh air
She feels her lungs flatten like a damaged tire

I take a peek to the dark skies by the window It is so dark tonight the trees look like ghosts
The road appears like a black inkblot That you can read through different interpretations i look at her face with so much pity She really needs air she takes the look of a ghost i don’t doubt it she belongs to the dark now And to darkness she longs to darkness she likes to live

There is no moon tonight that may be nosy about Her own personal misery, only the night wind can comfort her

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Moving Out Nowhere

at night the socks sleep with the feet
and the feet sleep
pretty well with it

in the morning the socks keep staying there, there is no moving out nowhere

she sees this situation and says 'it sucks!'
quivering on such an unhygienic thing

on unwashed feet the socks smell, but who cares? their love is strong, their bonding pure, sticking it out together forever....

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No One There

in trying to forget he escapes from the house of pain time teaches him about doors that he needs to enter time leads him to the doors of pleasures and one door leads to another,

different lights and warmth and glitter different scents and dance steps of love lust as he must say
later in his life,

some names and places soon he is undressed and he sees his body and face in the mirror his hollow eyes his thirsting heart
his emaciated soul radiating the inner glow of what is about to be lost completely he takes the exit and turns back to the familiar places of this heart under the tree the bark where two names are written a heart carved, an arrow piercing

there is no one there
there is no bird singing anymore the clouds drift and then go away

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Poem

there is no poem that can stop this mess
this furniture of the room are not in place the table is under the rain
outside
the chairs are crumpled like paper in the drain
the books are opening their pages to the skies the pens are shooting like arrows in the air no one can stop the dead not this poem that only counts those who want to be buried no one can stop the grief not this poem, not that poem no poem can stop the flood of all emotions no poem can resist the burden of carrying all these like a carriage like a coffin.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No River

there is no river
anywhere here on earth
which will not accommodate the widest hulls
of our sails

there is no sea
so crowded with vessels there is always a space for whales and sharks

there is no space that can't hold a spaceship there is no cloud
that is ever overfilled with rain

there is always a space
for us
always a corner to rest
there is always
a star for everyone to name
to become even our own
if privacy is a must

why quarrel? why do you make war on anybody?

at the tips of the poles
there is always
a resting place
There Is No Sense At All

just like you i sit on a rock beside the raging waves of the sea some salty water spattering on the foreskin of my head turning into crystal under the hot sun of March i think of the falling leaves from the trees of an old forest i recall the sound of the hush of their departures so much like the constant leaving of the waves that come and then go on the shore there is this drifting so common among us that we are no longer distinguishing one from the other all things taking so many similarities and then someone is lost with no difference

the seagull lonely in its flight towards a distant island is just like any other seagull singing its lonely song within its feathered body the man remembering and hearing again the old songs of love broken shattered pieces of self trying to resemble again an old self is just any man on the street looking for something he can hold perhaps for a lifetime, he picks up something and tries to make a difference a pebble from other pebbles, a cellophane sheet landing on his hand from the air and looks at it against the sun. Something flimsy and so trivial.

He throws it away and continues walking along the lonely streets at night.

There is no one there. There is nothing there. Something unknown still.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Sense At All. I Say coupled is no sense at all figuring the truth coupled is none to boot nothing to say, in this world where words do not exist,

as you go out from that door where syllables are functional you enter the gate of the truth of all.

in perfect understanding without words.
in perfect harmony, without the scales.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Sense Following Me

i am going to a place i do not really know what and where it is i have fears and so i talk to the grass to pretend that i have someone to lean upon some people mention about a resting place

there
but i cannot really imagine what rest is all about i may have so much of this and that
here
and i cannot really relate well what is that

somewhere

i like to say that i like it here but someone tells that this is not the place meant to be all fingers point there and all thoughts think that it must be there if i sit a little longer the eyes of my father stare at me he says if i do that i will be his lifetime failure those long dead give me dreams to walk and take the long journey back home where they are preoccupied with waiting i like it here my heart speaks trying to dominate this conversation the mouth wants to inser what it has long wanted to say and then you arrive and wait under a tree you say you will follow me that you will always be nearer to me i rise from the grass and then my feet take the faster pace

this time

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Sense To Cleansing Or Removing

on that morning
down there is no water down the face needs washing
and you did not wash it down you feel down like not doing
down anything about your skin
down you actually fell like down you have down many layers of skin down on many faces
down that you become so afraid to see the mirror and find out
down what is really wrong or if there is down at least one aspect where something right can exist
even for a moment

eyou let time pass away
you do not hold
a part of its skirt
you are not in the mood for a skirmish
with the seconds or any single minute

you let everything go you have no hold of anything anyway
and you keep yourself
still as steel
unmoved by that feeling of unbecoming
that situation where you feel the mud drying all over
your body

you dream of water
and rain
something to drench
the wall inside you

you are helpless
there is no sense to a cleansing
or a removing

you continue with your task
the one that does not pay
like a crime

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Sound Sleep As Sound As Home

In the foreign land where you live Where the snow is cold and slippery and smooth You say you cannot sleep And all alone not feeling safe In that house made of steel and fortified walls

Here in our country Where walls are weak where beams are but coconut wood Where the sun is hotter Where the dust spread like blanket on the bed Where the noise is simply intolerable Where beggars come asking for food Where poverty and calamities abound

Here in my country I sleep so soundly Because lady, this is my home this is where my heart is Because lady, I am safe in this place that I call my own Because lady, there is no place like home Where sleep is sleep and will always be sound

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Space For Sorrow.

one day i write and feel that i am all hands just hands arising from the little existences of my fingers. i write about anything and i don't really bother what is it that bothers me that bothers you. This intellectual itch that keeps on moving inside our brains our hearts, this restlessness, this spacious injuries that reach as far as the next universe imagined. writing is groping in the dark. You are trying to feel your body. when you close your eyes you see most in fact, and feel the rudiments of your soul.
morning is a basket heavy with smooth ideas like fruits and scented like flowers.
It is a beautiful day.
i like to write about beauty. The things, the scenery outside my window. But these do not last for a long time.
My eyes focus back on the monitor which also monitors me.
How is honesty? How honest have we become beyond the flashes of the camera on the smiles we give to people.
Life is a tragedy. All lives are.
But who wants to spread tragedies to those who are already suffering the tragedies of their lives? we do not want to hurt. We are hurt already.
To hurt the world further would be too much.
There is a mission to writing poetry.
Or the stories that we write.
We re-arrange the mess.
Early morning after we rise from that sleep we comb our hair.
Fold the blankets. Put the pillows in place. We wash our faces.
We flush the toilet. And so on and so forth.

We open the window and the door.
we go out the room and we close the door behind us.

The room is neat and orderly now.
The house is big. And the backyard is waiting.

Hence, there is so much to do.
There is no space for sorrow.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Stopping

a bud
blooms

a car crashes

hairs grow
and fall

got wrinkles and forgetting

watching the beautiful sunset not with sad eyes

sitting on the sand and feeling the fineness of the world plunging into the sea and holding the breath

rising and walking back and laying down

without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Substitute For Presence

the promises of promises are nothing but promises it is absence looking for the perfection of presence when you leave i shall not keep on remembering you

i shall close the door and ring the phone for by then she will come and take care of what you have not done.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Substitute For The Now

he is choosing NOW
he will not exchange it for something else he is gripping it like a wrench
it IS.

BECAUSE he is tired of promises most of them turn out to be empty shells chicken eggs without yolks yellows have become mere illusions he goes for NOW.

IT is what he can hold, he feels it
and seemingly
it cannot be taken away from him until it is taken until he gives it after he held it for the moment

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Substitute For What Is Present... to view an apple in the internet or climb an apple tree with many ripe apples in cyberspace

ey are nothing compared to the ripe mango in my hands to a virtual love that is described as true love making vicarious that is nothing compared to a kiss that i planted on your cheek of peach

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Such Power

there is no such power
that will exist
for a lifetime
there is none of that kind
for everything is just like the wind
it comes and if it is so strong and powerful that some trees are carried
away
like the hurricane scare yet it will just be like everything else so temporary
it goes away
and what remains are us still strong
with our feet rooted to the grounds of our own integrity and morality

we are strong because our hands are clean because our hearts are pure because we are the
the well shaped stones
and not the
corrugated grafts
of the
corrupted culture

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Such Thing As A Meaningless Poem

there is no such thing as a word without meaning each word has a shadow it has its own moon
and marsh
each sigh calls for a word to give it a sound that you can hear inside your heart
each moan has a memory beside it warm and so gentle
each touch is a syllable that you keep in silence as a treasure inside your skin hence there is no such thing as a poem without meaning at all there is always a body
a hand
at night there is always a whisper a love call

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Such Thing As A Toxic Friend

there is no such thing
as a toxic friend since you always welcome everyone and give them the proper attention that they deserve, as each one is as important as the other,

and come to think of it,

how may christs have visited your home and you have given a drink, a talk, a feel of another home.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Such Thing As An Unchanged I

THERE is not such thing as a stagnant self,
a flowing river,
a waterfall,
a pouring rain
an evaporating dew
a gone away mist
sunshine falling
a seed sprouting
tendril curling
the winds blowing,
there is no such thing
as an I,
THAT does not change its form it is the growing I,
THE changing me inside this ever changing body, you cannot touch me
only once
and i who is touched cannot react in one and the same way

this being, this is not just a form and a shape but a process, a journey in constant movement in changing ways
never, never fixed.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Such Thing As Pure White....

there is no
such thing as pure white accept this learn this when you begin to paint the wall of your room

and then be happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Such Thing As Wickedness Only With The Rich Ones...

once he pitied the poor wanted to take them all from poverty
like weeds from a garden where he dream
only of flowers

then he mingled with them lived with them
immersed in them only to find out that they are no less different than him

they are kind
and must be understood beyond that kindness

at some point
as in any other case familiarity breeds contempt and he becomes
like anyone of them

suspicious, insecure, greedy, and always discontented

and they rob him
and killed him and he was not able to tell what was it that he hated with the poor

i didn't know too.
i don't want to be one neither do i wish to live with any one of them nor immerse myself some more into such a distress

we all have our share of the chunks of this valley of tears

again that is fair enough rich or poor
same human weaknesses are there this avarice, this greed and to some extent this capacity to go beyond all these

in due time

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Such Thing As Writer's Block

i am part of the lousy writers' club restless people
with nothing to do but write

hopeless cases of paranoia
biting their pens speeding their fingers on the keys
without much thought whether people believe in their causes

we are part of this useless endeavor
the objective of which is only to express and not really to impress i am part of the lousy people our business is to write and write and writer's block is a crime

we write not really to impress but only to express we are depressed
we are oppressed
we are obsessed
to a fly and wasp and termites and trite

we are not afraid of our own self infected cliches.
There Is No Swan Song

in my world where the sun always shines every morning in the islands of the Pacific there can never be a swan song there will always be some chirping of fledglings in the nests in the trees there is nothing that lasts there are only those firsts.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Us

frankly, there is no us.
there is only me and there is only you.
that is the truth,
the bitter truth, but there was a time oh, it was rare
when i tried to imagine, oh, imagination goes everywhere i think, there is no limit to imagination they say but thinking has

it has walls and fences, thinking limits where tolerance lies,

there was a time when i imagine us hand in hand, arms around arms, forgive my imagination, but there was a time when i imagine that we made love beside the river that we were so exhausted after and that we made a promise to live forever, us, us, together, but as i told you, in that dream, imagination has no limits it is crazy, but thinking is sane, it puts a limit to my illusions and my own delusions about love and togetherness, about us, but thinking says, and it says with straightforwardness of a man decisive about an ending and so i ended it, because i agree, and i definitely agree, our situation is sky and earth, floor and ceiling, we do not meet, even halfway on some compromises there is no us, really, just you and me, at the end, i love myself much better than i love you,

and so here i am,

gone for good, away from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Way That You Can Look At The Mountain

Mountain high
say Hi
To its silent heights
To its deep forest
To its hidden treasures To its undiscovered wild orchids
Say Hi
To the mountain High
That is the only way to be There

And then You Start the Climb
Looking inside your Feet Then Focus up to the nearest Cloud Through the Fog and Mist

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No Word To Describe Us. No One Asks What Love Is.

the dove with the purest of feathers is in my room, white as snow, aive as a roof, easy on the rain, soft on itself, wordlessly, as i caress it, and kissed its beak and hold its wings, and then i release it as my secret to the world, and in the morning, it comes back again, to be my secret once more.

there is no word to describe us.
no one asks what love is.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is No World, No Other World For Me

today, mama, i will tell you now that you are dead today, papa, i will tell you, now that you have long been dead and buried and rotten and dusty

i have no other world for me out there not the law, not the magic of your wish for the sciences, not the purse, not the gun, not the house or the land, not the scent of money, not money, not the cows and carabaos, not the cottage not the beach

this is my world now within the confines of the coffins of poetry.

i am bound. i am caged, i am free
at last.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Not A Path...

listen
there is not just one path
remember
your hand is not just a finger your hand is not just a hand
there are other paths
listen
grab yours and if you follow it congratulations

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Nothing

there are no blue skies no shining sun
there are no birds in the air there is no wind there are no trees on the plains no forest in the mountains there are no seas
neither shall there be islands

without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Nothing Much That I Shall Take Away From You.

now that i have
seen and touched
you from the tips of
your hair
to the tips of your toe
now that i have
tasted each drop and savored each
time
when we were together i shall now leave
with all my confidence for i am now
strong
and peaceful

there is no beauty
that can tempt
me
there is no lust
which can defeat me

all i have is this memory of your love for me and now that i have decided to go
there is nothing
much that i shall take away
from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Nothing Much To Go Deeper Into Life...

everything has a synonym life has a synonym for good food, sushi,
uni, atami

a platter of jasmine rice, beside a hot chocolate
sardines with lots of tomatoes
fried

in fact the synonyms have become substitutes

for our definition of something good and beautiful less the garnishing of truth
to make a synonym of a perfect day just a pinch of sunlight in my forehead
and then a bigger shade of the penumbra of trees and horizons

less the butterflies that flit and then gone....

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Nothing Perfect

basic is the rule
there is nothing perfect
in this world: no perfect person there will always be lapses no perfect planes there will be crashes sometimes no perfect clothes for summer, some colors will still be hot no perfect friends, there will always be betrayals from time to time there is even no perfect time sometimes we caught in a whorl with the whore
in a black hole where we do not know anymore what happens next there is nothing perfect even in moderation
no perfect life
neither death,
ask God, he is not either he was once in error
when he became
man.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Nothing To Boast, Young Man...

be not proud young man
your achievements are nothing but trivial matters to God your many years of keeping is a second of spilling what you built are nothing but

sandcastles

you cannot keep eternity in your head you will lose all your hair do not count your greatness with the rain in a minute they're all gone

be not proud young man
pray, pray always that you shall be forgiven

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Nothing To Learn From Poetry

There is nothing to learn from poetry

if there is, perhaps nothing much but one somehow feels that a certain restlessness is cured a certain light is seen and then felt and when you leave a crowded room heavy with despair

you feel so light like an inflated balloon and you rise to the sky and then you see every house, every road every mountain

and the horse that you want to ride looks at you like an ant on that tiny hillside where you want to escape

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Nothing To See

there is nothing
to see
from this window

a shovel
and a hoe
a farmer without a bolo a puppy taking a muddy shoe
a boy
sitting on a red wheelbarrow

a little girl running naked without a tomorrow

so much
depends not on you

helpless cow

but on them the owners of the black dye the builders of the wonders of Dubai

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Nothing To Sigh For

because he cannot have one he forgets it but others are showing so many of theirs that makes him so insecure that sometimes he feels that
he is an alien in this planet and hence perhaps belongs to another he copes up recovers his composure saying. 'i am different' and ' i don't belong here but i am here somehow' and hence must make the best of what he is and what he can be

anyway, time runs and times runs so fast what they all have they must give back and since he has nothing he does not have to carry anything to give back traveling so lightly like a butterfly floating in air when the ending finally comes.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Nothing To Write

WELL, FACE THE BLANK WALL STARE TO THIS BLANK WALL THERE IS NOTHING TO THIS BLANK WALL
IT IS BLANK
IT IS EMPTY
IT IS A HINDRANCE TO WHAT I WANT TO SEE IT IS AN OBSTRUCTION TO WHAT I WANT TO BECOME THIS WALL
THIS WALL IS MY JAIL
MY PRISON
MY BLINDNESS
THIS WALL MUST BE TORN THIS WALL MUST BE BOMBED THIS BLOCK
THIS WEARINESS OF THE HEART THIS TIREDNESS OF THE SOUL THIS MALADY OF BEING NOTHING THIS HAVING NOTHING AT ALL
THERE IS NOTHING TO WRITE
THERE IS NOTHING
THERE IS

now i will write about something from above

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Peace

in an early morning
walk along a path winding through the hillside

just the wind
brushing with the leaves of trees

and some interfering cicada cacophony
this hot summer
day

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Really Nothing Hard

there is really nothing hard
to write a poem
from the deepest chamber
of your heart

the words come naturally like tendrils from the vine always seeking the light of the sun
to hand in its flowers

without being taught without being fought

RIC S. BASTASA
now, there is so much familiarity between us. when i wink, or when i wiggle a finger, you already know what i mean.
i know too what you mean, what you really mean to me.
(there are times however when i with malice disregard your signals.)

I get bored sometimes.
And in this nauseous state, i set my eyes on other far islands.
i vomit but i do not have to tell you.
what is the use?
we keep on breathing same air.
Cleaning same room.
Sharing secrets.
Brushing our teeth on same stories.

there is a plateau where we live.
There is an edge.
When we go beyond we fall.
the story must end simply.
We keep the fence strong.
The boundaries are in bold strokes.
We have taught our feet first where to step secure and sound.
You may go away.
You didn't and i didn't.

Hence, we still hold hands.
Keep same table.
sit on same chairs.
Breakfast together.
Eyes fixed on the TV.

Morning news.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Something In Her

something that i cannot understand her own emptiness she felt it when the old house burns itself for no cause at all

at the other side of the road i can't help but hum a song whistle within

for i own nothing
and then i dance my way back home along the paths of sharp stones this is my poverty here that no one shares

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Something In Us Always

there is something in us always that closes and opens like fingers there is something inside that watches for love, and waits, and anticipates, something that feels home, and goggles for familiarity, and when it finds it, it opens so confidently, unmindful of any pain, expectant of the excitement, promised and betrayed, and mourning, and then there is something in us that closes, no matter what, it is still closed, despite the death of time, it still closes upon itself, curling, thickening unwilling, wanting to die, but couldn't.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Something In You That I Want Stopped

This moment of my life
I joke about love
In you, but the moment
i am dropping it Like that famous white handkerchief of leading and deceiving You pick it up and then you tell me Love has bloomed
Into a very lovely flower that now I must take and smell and Claim as my own

You know very well that my hands have chains Daisy chains of love Put gently around my neck By you-know-who the woman
I call my own, my possession, my home,

You insist that nothing is wrong With loving and anything loved and adored All these are true and sublime and worth The demands of our time

You are wrong there my darling I sometimes say words without my heart involved Words that I just want to say and Do not really mean
Look at you, how can you ever believe me?
Look at me, how can I ever believe you?
With our chains, melanite chains in our hearts We have long ceased loving We have long ceased living That is something in you that I want stopped Do not believe me
I am not worth it, not anyone like me is worth it
The fight
The trouble, this man, this mannequin This bulge, do you still dream?
your hands are smirking Or even the plain thinking at night when you are alone When you are nothing
But just yourself

You are still so beautiful! Oh! You are still so beautiful!

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Something Inside My Mouth

there is something inside my mouth
coming from my heart moving out through my esophagus

it is inside my mouth.
my tongue cannot hold it anymore.

i spit it out. it is a worm. it is turning into a coccoon.
it is a butterfly.

it is fluttering.
do you think that it can be the poem for my busy day today?

it falls. It is dead. It has turned into a leaf.
dust. another dust that i have bitten.

tomorrow, i will swallow another worm.
but i will not bite it again.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Something Inside My Mouth (2)

there is something singing inside my mouth but i keep my mouth closed i decide when shall the opening be when shall i hear this little thing sing again in the open

for now i have closed whatever is it that opens that sings

it is time to mourn
to be silent
to die

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Something Inside Us

there is something inside us that we love in the same manner that we cannot love but it is here
always inside and won't let us go and won't let us free and we have this struggle within like wanting to shake off this thing
but it will always be here whether we like it or not and so i arrive at a concession that will be good for me and that bad thing learning to accept it as part of me
and not shaking it off like a finger
to my hand
like a parasite
to my head
like a wart to my butt like a splitting hair
at my tip

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Something That We Must Write

we must write about the language that they are using in the common places such as the market or the barbershop or at the playing fields or even in the zoo
we must write nothing new nothing to invent or to make from our very own hands and minds what we must do is simply to look around and discover the shape of the wind and its soft fingers there is nothing new in our making only this sensitivity and this discovering of what is around us that which grows by themselves and blooms and lingers and extends like some tendrils of this flowering vine slowly moving
unnoticed by all except you becoming aware of that was not there

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Something You Need To Know

in my lies are hidden truths

in my fiction
lies realities

the characters are real speaking their lies and deceptions

the plot
goes awry
the tone
a monotone

and i,
as the author
still thinks
about
a happy ending

there is something you need
to know
more

i am always
there

but keep on reading
and understanding

after all, i could be

yourself
There Is The Moon And I Have This Boat And A Paddle

there is this full moon tonight and i have this sailboat and this paddle the river is still and the night is silent on the glassy water this boat slides and this paddle moves me slowly on the other side where you are there scented by the sampaguitas and for me patiently waiting.............

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This And There Is Also Always That

there is always a star and there are always trees that want to reach it there is a cliff that knows the void up there there is always a river that sings for it there are grasses that spread too there are goats and cows to graze over them there are seas that rage with big waves there are rocks waiting for them at the shore there are dreams that do not come true there are those who listen and write about them there are those that die there those who are newly born there are ends

and there are beginnings too war sleeps and peace is awake this world spins and revolves as the sun looks unblinking

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This Fire
	here is this fire
it has not burned you yet here is this rain it has not drowned you yet here is this wind it has not blown you beyond death yet here is this earth that dries and cracks and opens itself to everything here are four empty spaces inside my heart all these are there undivided no one, no one, no one, no one ever, ever understands it, not even this body this mind this soul

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This Island

there is this island
a very small island where i once escaped away from the death that the crowd has inflicted there is this lonely island where the only house i have is just an old chair and throughout the nine full moons i simply sit there gazing looking at the small tree the leaf of which is only one its veins too tiny for my eyes to love it gets lonely here most of the time but i owe all my life to this very small island it saved me once from the death inflicted on me by the crowd my body becomes a geisha of gratitude my mouth becomes the kiss of the slave woman to the nth power of Abram i live in this island and on the last dropp of the day i become forever

there will be another north star in the heavens and it shall have my own name there is this island shaped like a heart and it sheds blood because it is real i am but a white grain of sand perhaps, but i have become this grain of gratitude and i have become a star forever hanging on the heavens.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This Man Who Does Not Know Where To Go

there is this man who does not know where to go his wife left him and his children had already disregarded him there is this man who does not know anymore how to live no one cares about his baldness, his wrinkled skin, his rambling thought gnarled, whorled, his arms do not know what to hold his soul has no anchor his mind whirls

his hopes all burned he is ashed
but not gone

people laugh at him and twist their faces at his back there is still a place for him in the roof of my empathy he takes shelter here and on this last threshold his fears at least, are gone momentarily we shall touch him and we shall watch how he shall quiver

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This Pain...
	hat goes on and on and on and on
and even if you offer all these to relieve yourself they still keep on going on and on and on as though you are a fool not having learned a lesson at all
there is this pain
that justifies you own way of becoming one hardheaded poet
i stays with you and you begin to like it because there is something poetic in its bleeding an elegy
for its death.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is this poet who writes his fear of death thinking that he has been lonely here and that when he dies, the possibility is he might be lonely there again. Eternal loneliness, damn.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This Rain Between My Thighs

there is this rain between my thighs
there is this cloud inside my abdomen it is heavy with something that accumulates somewhere and within there is this tickling and tingling of everything
i feel for you

in your absence
the clouds get so heavy and my abdomen gives in the rain falls under my feet and then i know it is the ripe time for sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
there is this sadness that i want to give to you but of course, you shall not accept it for who is foolish enough to welcome sadness when all hopes of our humanity are pinned on happiness?

but there is this sadness that makes us silent and responsible upon our own shoulders there is this sadness that makes us fully human, and fully alive, there is this sadness that brings you literature and poetry
and then all those fame and fortune that you have been seeking there is this sadness which has another consequence the purification of the soul the everlasting happiness shall you not take it now?

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This Secret Room Of My Life

there is this secret room in my life that will always be closed it is mine, and no one gets in for in so doing they shall find me and if they find me inside this dark room without windows

as they open and i am there and there will be too much light to hurt my eyes

have pity
for i shall die.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This Tiny Voice Inside Us....

there is
a tiny voice
inside
us, it is the voice of
light,
it is warm
and alive
it moves
with the
wind,
it spreads
that perfume
of our
soul,
our being here and
there
and everywhere.

listen to it
feel it then speak its true
language

it is a faithful
voice
it wakes you
up at dawn when everyone is still dreaming

it leads you
to a hearth of that fire that never dies.
There Is This Voice Inside

there is this voice inside me that screams
that this world is hopeless there is this voice inside my heart which whispers

go, take care of yourself, walk gently, and do not ever look back there is this voicelessness now it is silent, and it does not mind

it does not matter

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This Voice That Always Speaks

inside me there is always this little voice that always speaks
everyday

it simply sings
a song
that i barely know

like a little bird
inside my chest
every morning when i just wake up it sings of freedom

and love
it sings of being true

it hints
about love
and
happiness

everyday
like the air i breathe

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is This Worm

there is this worm
as usual slimy and long and despised that gets inside your skin and you cannot just dispel it out from your system it asks for a home and you give one of the pores of you skin it asks for food and you become all too willing to share a part of your flesh and it stays there and you allow it and you begin to talk like friends and you welcome it simply because you have been all too alone now despite this parasitic relationship between you and this worm you keep on keeping it and they are angry at you and always pester you with their own philosophies and one day they become silent you tell them: what do i lose? i have long been nothing anyway. i don't have any. Not even a lock of hair from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Is Way To Tell It With A Difference

there is something
buried within it is not dead
not yet
it wants to speak
it tells the truth
but i am
into a compromise
into a filter
trying to screen out what is mine
and what is his....

it can wait
soon, sooner, and perhaps if no compromise is made, then
never.......
There Lies The Difference

there is no difference
between us
when we went down
the stairs
of the night flight

our bags are black eyes sleepy on that unholy hour

the difference lies at the meeting area

he is met with his wife carrying a baby girl soundly asleep

i hurried myself
to the yellow cab

the driver is asking me the usual question

where to, sir?

RIC S. BASTASA
There Must Be A Reason

there must be a reason for everything a reason for sadness and joy a reason for depression and recovery of the senses
a reason for laughter and tears a reason for leaving and meeting a reason for grieving and celebrating there must be a reason for all these but for the meantime that i am having this little fun with you this drink of beer and little silly talks about failures and broken dreams

a little variety
a shying away from harsh realities talks about other people's miseries let me forget first about reasons either for anything or everything let me feel how is it to be unreasonable unexplainable and unfathomable

let me unbreak what i made whole let me speak the unspeakable let me forget the grounds let me be drunk
and unthinking let me be not myself on this hour on this short moment of my failure let me have this needed laughter

a toast to misery.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Must Be No Words Left For You To Say

i guess you must be full, everything in you, first your mouth it must be full, since it is not talking, shut, or filled with the sweets of life, so you feel there is no use talking like you are a very loud drum sounding Tarzan's sound proclaiming the emptiness of his own forest kingdom without a Jane. I guess your eyes are filled with all the wonderful scenes of your life, you do not see me anymore.
I guess your body is full of all the happy moments, i have not seen it move or dance, i have not seen it take another chance to touch my body again.

i guess you must be happy now.
you never call my name again.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Must Be Nothing Complicated

life is simple
directions are simple
up and down left to right
the middle is there but it is not and must not be considered a complication, and so is doubt at the middle of our beliefs and so is faith the disregards
what should have been doubted
life is simple
like your dimple when you smile when you see me
loving you.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Shall Be No Blank Space Of This Jalousy

she broke a piece of the window, a plank of glass and the cat gets in at night and sleeps on my favorite sofa i never like this i don't like a blank space where a cat slips in and takes a portion of my sofa this is strictly prohibited in my world today the plank of glass is delivered and there is no emptiness left along the lines of this space where the wind is free to to get in and then move out like nothing happened between the cat and the sofa.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Shall Be No Changes, Despite

i make this note that when the boat was about to make its anchor

i did not hide the book that i am reading

neither shall i change it that everything is just as fixed as they are arriving there i disembark and shall wait for the next bus that shall take me to my own destination.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Was A Time When I Got Drunk

there was this time when i got drunk and looked at myself in the mirror to check if the image was really mine. I stared.

I liked what was in there.
I liked to stay something, but i just passed by.

The mirror in the comfort room happened to be so silent, and i was sort of like a word misspelled
uncorrected,

just passing by,
unhampered.

Was it really me?

How handsome could i be when i am drunk
and lonely.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Was No Dance With My Father

ah, father really never danced.

if i learned to dance it was from someone else, and father never liked it for a dance is just a hindrance to the work in the rice fields, if father danced, it was because he was drunk pretty tired from hard work dark brown skin caused by the Asian sun and we simply watched that kind of bad taste perhaps even detesting why we are here all chained by work and struggle perhaps i wished i had a dancing father like yours but you have never learned to dance too despite the dancing father that you had and so i cheer myself today and say: Life is fair.

now i have grown up, and try to recall if father loved me even for once even if he did not dance with us the land and the money the house and the rice & corn fields the coconut farm and the fishing boats and the beach they dance before us and it is enough proof that my father who never knew how to dance did love us too.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Was This Man

and there was this man who blamed himself for not making good in his life fortune seems to be elusive his home shattered by a quake lest he expected it his family vanished in the plague the dumb makes it on top the mediocre thrives so well as leaders and the childish makes it to the throne of greatness others whom he thinks are lower than him made it to fame he is good and wise and well educated surely luck was not on his side or perhaps he did not pray enough....

RIC S. BASTASA
There Were Whispers

there were whispers
coming at dawn
near my ears

it is colder
when i am away from home and the whispers
are a little bit louder like some birds
wanting to enter inside my heart
and make their nests there

the room is dark
and there is no chance that i will ever sleep

there is this voice
always telling me

home, i will be home and tonight is the longest dark night i shall ever have it is the sound of the plane, the clutters of back packs

it is the sound of the taxi
going to an airport

it is the view of clouds up there and some landscapes

some sea caps
and tiny boats
and then the touchdown

some hands are waving

it is 7: 00 a.m.
and the smell of home
is as sweet
as the odor of an old shirt still hanging on a chair
beside my door

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Be A Time

there will be a time
when you will be just yourself and no other and none other but just yourself not even your name or the work that you do or place where you live

it is about a light that comes only once in your room
and there you float
beside your bed
higher than your
body

they will be talking and you will just be listening

some will cry
but you are just yourself in perfect peace
looking at all of them with your sad eyes and then you leave without even sighing

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Be Images

in the mirages
amidst the desert heat
there will be images
fifty or so
for one real tiger multiplying all the fears of being devoured
in the hunger of its mouth
and the sharpness of its fangs

this is the hunger of the mind amidst the heat of the quest for knowledge and truth in the rush what is open for viewing is the scenery of lies the key to the door is the night of peace

the moon in full view to the eyes that weep

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Be More

there will be more things coming inside me staying there
and day by day i carry more weight perhaps something that i can no longer carry the furies of the uncertain world they come too inside my brain
there is no more love that my heart can carry

i will have some ankles broken and i may be compelled to kneel before them there will be more loads to carry do not think that i am unbreakable

beyond the limit you will see me vomit you may even see me dissipate into air
with no telltales

of who i am and what i have finally become

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Be No Laurels On My Head

there will be no laurels on my head

please do not offer any laurel leaves
on my head

i do not deserve it i am not a slice of pork i am neither king
nor poet.

just give me a dew
for i am a leaf just hand me a little moss
and give me that shade of wet and green
a little moisture
for i am also a stone.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Be No More Flowers

you finally decide to leave the garden the grass are taller now and the little flowers are drowned there is nothing worth the keeping and the cultivating the rains have becomes useless seasons like the sun and its sunny days now is the season of departure the packing and letting things go the trees wildly growing the mud sticking and the stones silent living with the moss and the rotten leaves

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Be No Words So Accurate Perhaps...

my wish is to simply tell you what i was, am
and can possibly be, i do not wish that you extend your hand to me and take me to your place
i am here
and that is the only fact that i am i can manage myself just like everyone else i do not know about helping hands i have mine somehow my wish is simple enough to find the words to give you the picture
of what we are
who we were, where can we be
and what shall we be,
the words have not been well enough they are shorter and inaccurate for the size of our dreams i still wish to find the words and i am getting older and older

sooner shall i realize perhaps that there are no such words, that what we are

are but dreams and aspirations and that there are and there will be no words exact for all these when we die, they will bury us, and then they will give us the perfect sigh

and if you take a closer look, they speak through the flowers and the stones their tears and their hands
and then
finally on the marks of their footsteps away from us....

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Be Rain

There will be rain here
We normally run for shelter
Who wants to be wet in the rain
And look like a helpless chick in the drain?

There will be rain
And we will be seeking shades under the trees
And run towards waiting sheds where the rain
Cannot harm our sensibilities,

There will be rain and more rains to come
In our lives, and we always run for secure Shelters, and we always have umbrellas,
And raincoats, and closed cars, we hide to places
Where The rain cannot harm us,

But today, there is rain, and I will take Another action, I will not run for shelter,
Or take shades in trees, or be in waiting sheds,
I will not even open my car, get into it and close it,

I am not afraid of rain now; I have no fears getting wet
And look like a helpless chick, I will run in the Middle of the rain, I will play in the rain, I will Be with the rain throughout its pouring,
I will be wet, and it will rain and rain,
Let it rain and rain and rain
You will not see, my tears falling, tears hiding in the rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Be Substitutes

and for him to be alive for another year he takes the substitutes for such absence he justifies this absence shall make my heart grow fonder he looks at himself in the mirror and feels the gloss of the glass on his face the pain is there and it may subside a little bit but it is there and it has always been there and it will always be there always

the substitutes heal the surface and makes a scar the real pain inside keeps piercing to the bottom

always and it has always been there like a cancer of love always, always creeping, growing

there is no cure

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Be Words Kept Unsaid

that i have decided to keep they have become so beautiful unsaid, keeping the grace in silence, their faces veiled in secrecy, their bodies pale they smell the whiteness of fresh mountain flowers, if they keep their hands, you can feel how cold they are, breathing the cold and trembling hushes of dying mountains.

RIC S. BASTASA
There Will Soon Be Another Tree

when you go to church and you find out that no one is there what do you feel?

if you ask me, i feel nothing.
It is just one of the facts that i have to accept concerning religion.
Shall i demand an explanation from the parish priest?
I may ask perhaps but to demand what cannot be provided anymore is too much of an asking from humanity.
Religion has always been voluntary And its death is voluntary too.

There is nothing wrong with natural death.
It can be even enriching If we think about it.

Like rotten leaves. Like humus under the heaps of rottenness.
After a certain time,
Do not be surprised,
Something sprouts from there.

And a ray of light welcomes it.
There will soon be another tree.
Another forest without a name.

RIC S. BASTASA
There, There The Land Of Bounty Lies

Many fingers point to the land of bounty.
All feet lead to it.
All hearts cry out
and are satisfied.
All thirst quenched.
All needs catered by the Owner of the Land of Bounty He who also owns
the skies and seas.

You are a sad man.
Why?

Why do you always shy away from the Man of Bounty?

This is something that I cannot really understand.
Sad man, you must tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
There’s A New Breeze Coming

There is a new breeze coming
It is whispering to my ear There is a new morning coming There is a new sun
There is a new breeze coming

It is so so refreshing Making all my burdens lighter My heart is not heavy My thoughts are happier

That this new breeze Everything has become light Like the weightlessness of a butterfly Fluttering to the melody of This new soft breeze

There is a new promise
There’s a new breeze coming
There is a new morning
There is a new breeze coming

From my home, sweet home.....

RIC S. BASTASA
There's Gonna Be Eternal Life Not Just Recycling

how candles
consume themselves
is not really dramatic, it's normal for candles to light
themselves
eat themselves
and then
just like that melt and just be nobody or
nothing, and

kids pick them up
again
remelted and shaped into new
entities for sale,

and the buyers
too are like candles
consume themselves
in routine
buy what was wasted

move on with their lives
borrow light
and then too
die not in hopelessness

there's gonna be eternal life
not just recycling

RIC S. BASTASA
These All Entice Me

the sound of a bus leaving the city the picture of a highway and the old town far away from here where i am seated and not waiting for someone to love the sound of a jet plane stabbing the sky for an asian destination the white beaches of Thailand and the old temples of Myan Mar the sound of putting off a television that last clicking sound and then the silence of the room all these are so enticing.

RIC S. BASTASA
These Are All Of Us

what i hear is a life that does not rhyme

i write what i hear
to your chagrin

and then i draw the beauty left of the chaos

upon the mounds of the
earth
upon the sands of the desert

you must see what we have not seen
you must start to hear the beauty of a slur

these are real and these are all of us.

RIC S. BASTASA
These Are All Questions

who you keep a twisted view of your world? you ask me? why do you ask me if i have a twisted view of the world?
have you seen how i have seen this world to be twisted?
did you say that living if just a cliche? how did you arrive at that answer?

do we keep going now?
what time do we leave?
and be apart? for good? for life?
for death?

what time is it? what shall you do now? do i have to keep bugging you?
and you bugging me too?

what day is it? what mood?
what decision? what is your decision?
why? why? do we always have to ask why?

RIC S. BASTASA
These Are My Hands

full of scars calloused
beaten and
still unforgiven

RIC S. BASTASA
These Bits And Bits....

i have forgiven my eyes.
and my fingers too. They seem to have a grudge against each other. And i am the one at this loss. a letter is missing. But you, yes you, are an intelligent reader. I forget the word again.

in a space, what is missing, fits, and it is you, that supplies it. There is an emptiness that you can fill. It completes the pattern and i make it and you are there to make a whole. These bits and bits.

RIC S. BASTASA
These Books Are Damned.

once
when you start learning English
i give you
the warning that this language
knows how to hide
evil intentions,

if you learn it
well enough
you will be like us

mastering irony
not getting direct to the point
euphemisms are tools
of our modern exploitation

soon you will speak like an English gentleman ethical in manners restrained in expressions admirable
to

when you grow up
you will be like us
at first we were eager to change the world
how time must have betrayed us
we have done nothing

we surrender
we raise our hands against the sky some out of pity massaged our brains
our feet
our fingers are worthy to be cut

we failed. you must try some more.
perhaps we were just focused on the blind spots of our education.

in our libraries
these books are damned.

RIC S. BASTASA
These Cold Hands

cold hands
shall remind me of eventual endings

such are not necessarily happy you cannot prevent some to cry because they love you even if you have ceased loving life
itself

you ask me sometimes why my hands are too cold?
i am winter i said

winter in the midst of our summers when all the rodents are gone i stare at these cold hands remembering the story of cold murders somewhere in those hidden mountains where tracks had been concealed where names have long been erased

i cannot remember i once told you when, how, where,
the why is as deep as that ravine where the wolf howls for the blue moon

i keep these cold hands inside my pocket
i walk as fast as i can hoping to forget what is following me.

RIC S. BASTASA
These Goats.

at this hour whenever i look at the shadows of the mountains the way the fog covers the tree like a blanket to my body as i begin to speak to myself like the way the wind speaks to the ears of the skies i must admit it is you that i am thinking of the one that i always hear in my chosen silence you are like the dream that children tell to their moms after they wake up from their sleep no one hears me except these goats.

RIC S. BASTASA
These Lazy Mornings, Thi Lovely Self...

there are mornings that are very much like us lazy, do not want to wake up, light spreads in bed, and fresh air fills the air and sings in our ears yet we cover our eyes, we refuse, we curl our legs, and bury our eyes on the pillow these mornings are nameless and they are many some of these mornings are fruits of those sleeping pills because some nights are cruel insomniacs that hide from us the gifts of sleep,

i like to hate mornings like these and i may hate it till evening but i have already made a promise to understand all these stupid mornings and just be patient and let go off them i write once, that i may hate everything including these lazy mornings that shy away from light and air but i must spare this self that after all i do not really exclusively own.

and so this is it:
i hate this lazy, stupid morning, but i shall never hate myself:
i am sleepy, i am beautiful, i am lovely and witty after all.

you may sing tonight with me:
this love of self, this greatest love of all.
Do not misinterpret it for arrogance, pride or conceit, albeit, i must tell you,
this is just a good gadget for moving on into a sweet and kind survival.

RIC S. BASTASA
These Little Things

ants that show
an empire of discipline soldiers and prolific
queen,

wasps that fly like nuclear planes

paramecium
that show us how neglected
little things can be that damaging
too,

ponder upon a little love
withheld affection
miser lover

RIC S. BASTASA
These Memories Of The 80's

i
Teacher entrusted me the key to the classroom I lost it
That night I could not sleep How to open the room tomorrow morning My friend called he has the duplicate

ii
A lanzones tree full of fruits
I am up there Eating all that I can

iii
On the beach I forgot to bring my trunks I finally decided to dive All naked with you.

iv
The river is deep and murky and muddy I am riding on top of this big black Carabao
i am
whistling i am humming a song i also hear the wind singing with me

v
In the dorm I do not know how to play the guitar My roommates only asked me To sing
A birthday song
we drink some wine
i write some poems in my heart and then we take our sleep
under the stars
our bodies tired on soft green grass after the final exams

RIC S. BASTASA
These Red Strawberries

red as love

more than the roses

cloying

my sense of taste

and smell

to such an attractive

fruit

ornate luxuriously appealing enriched

desire of strawberry

days

your lips and nipples

touching my lips

savor this

delicious feeling

of love

i could have forgotten

but not brave enough

strawberry fields

spreading under the sun

on cold days

of my wasted youth

RIC S. BASTASA
These Three Adjectives And A Question

slow and tender
and then
everlasting

how can you
ever forget?

RIC S. BASTASA
somehow a gust of wind passes by your ear and you begin to remember you are light,

there is a hint of wings, but so unlike the ordinary
wings of a bird

you are given the hint of the rachis
to the quill and you link it to a nostalgia of the universe
where you were once taken from
power

you are
mud, and bound to the river but the sound of the flow of the water
day till nighttime when the moon arrives again floating
like a soul of the earth touches
a tree top and then leaves again
making you remember what it was before the years begin to roll
like the waves of the eternal ocean
kissing
an endless shore

RIC S. BASTASA
They Call It Family

not one less of this family that must stick together and always save one another, be it whatever, a financial distress emotional stress, societal imbalance, technological displacements the family shall be first even in crime passion, the family is one in all conspiracies not one less, each must be saved from shame from destruction

i am tired of this,
i am getting out, i am now a stranger, alone against this family, i speak my mind, i blow the whistle now, kill me

i am a corpse, i have long been dead in the dark chambers of this family
the secrets too deadly, kill me now, i dare, only if you can....

RIC S. BASTASA
They All Pass Away...

i have nothing to keep what i have had always been the courage to give i mark the treasures not for keeping them anymore i put the time when the ripe time comes for giving them all
away

one must realize there is nothing that we can own wood? termites eat them iron? the salt rusts them stones? oh they break and those precious ones if you keep them
and treasure them shall only give you that little sensual pleasure of seeing the stress of robbers will be there for all nights and days time? it just slipped away...

me? i am just another dust and you are another wind...

RIC S. BASTASA
They All Slip Away Just Like That

There is an exhaustion that spreads to the hidden nerve of our lives

when we think of nothing but just the blanket and the bed we experience this cold that is not brought about by a weather which clings like a leech in our skin

after the seven storms we have earned enough defenses we have learned that all these are but illusions shadows on our walls which we try to hold checking whether it is real

they slip away
they all slip away
just like that

RIC S. BASTASA
They Always Ask...

someone yet have to ask why young man do you talk and talk and talk?

the years weigh heavy on our shoulders like ploughs and steel balls and iron chains we grow old and wrinkles grow like onions in a row

someone yet have to ask again why all these deep silence for all those years?

RIC S. BASTASA
They Are Afraid Of The Ordinary

they are afraid of the ordinary so they stand still, stare at an object that long to really take all the details and put them all again, the target is the beautiful that which gives the awe and the wonder the flame of curiosity towards a certain perfection which they can put on the table for you perhaps to cause an envy of what you have not seen and written

i do not fear the mediocre the shallowness of a memory the fun of what is not so beautifully crafted and so i do it every moment i please myself and that is purpose enough.
in a second, it will still be my own imperfection.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Are All Dead....

you wish to see them all again:
there was Tessie
that time always on a necking game with boyfriend grandma was so angry she closed the door and she had gone away instead of stay

there was Oliver
he was fed up upon a daily scrubbing of the floor too shiny on everyone's feet some slipped to death and there was Sonny the faithful peeping tom who dreamed about a hole on the wall where he can see Dulce bathing

and there was grandma her rules are too strict you violate one and you violate all one stain
and you are finished

you wish to see them all?
they are all dead.

you miss them? open a closed door break the lock enter if you can it is not your time yet you are bound to suffer so suffer well

and then you enter again the door may open and there see them
all waiting....
They Are All Here With You

jalouse windows
shut up like a woman finally stopping to speak and nag

a little blue fan keeps giving you air

you breathe
you think you exclude and include you deduce and induce apostrophies. and commas.

you take the freedom of syllabication.

something is wrong
in this house and we are not talking.

a bonsai plant
on top of your table.

a cell phone on a silent mode.
the letters on the keyboard and your fingers make love.

a poem is born.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Are All The Same

can all fishes grouping and scattering on the depths of the dark blue sea

can white flapping wings of birds within the circle of their species, poised to fly far distances can leaves falling from a tree to the ground then blown by the wind towards the desert and the immeasurable mirages

oh, they are all the same ey are going somewhere ey are taken by what their instincts and their hearts say like us here, we are packing we are always leaving so what is the use of crying or even laughing and merry making?

we are destined for some place higher than this one we are meant not for this or for us but for some planes of mystical existence that for now we cannot really understand prepare for that destiny you do not have to carry a cent.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Are Just To Sharp For My Liking

we had been together in one house for years and you take pride of the fact that you know me that very well

when you tell me that i am a good man
i feel like a cat licking my tail
soft and silent on the railing overlooking the road of this city
and i look down at my claws afraid that perhaps they are just to sharp for my liking

RIC S. BASTASA
They Are Not Just Words.
	nthis is a normal
	world
	they say
	to live we kill
	if we don't we get killed

	you take pride

	in God having made
	man
	a ruler of his

creation

	in the city
	you know a jungle
	where a dog eats

	another dog
	and you think

there is nothing
	wrong

	with it as it is just a matter of survival

	in fact
	the survival of the fittest

	is the only law

	possible

	it is a rat race

	honor this

crab mentality

	you have to pull

	in order not to be pulled

to be numb
	to be unforgiving
to be quick and not stupid

is there no choice
left?

there is.
and you know it.

the golden rule
is still golden

like silence

like promises
that were never broken

like oaths

like gentleness
like honor

they are not just words.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Are One....

SHE knows how to keep rage inside a silky pouch and He does not notice any change at all

SHE is a storm well contained inside the refrigerator
HE keeps the power off.

SHE goes to places and asks the housemaid what is going on inside the house why there is so much silence

HE steps out of the door like a fog escaping the hold of the cliff upon his collar.

SHE is the omnipotent goddess who loves and takes care of his affairs.

THERE are no wars waged.
THERE is only the secrecy of keeping and storing nothing dissipated neither is a scandalous matter find any page of the gossip news.

HE and SHE, they deserve each other.
TO keep the bond intact, they offer their little sacrifices to their gods.

THE goddess of restraint.
THE god of concealment.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Are Poets Too, You Are A Poet!

THEY ARE POETS TOO, You are a poet!

THOSE who misspell
And those who are still coping up With their metaphors
The techniques
Of rhyme & beat
Those who think
They do not Know how to Write poetry
And those Who fear
What to say
What to write
What the others say
About their poetry
And those that doubt
Their writing Abilities
Their thoughts

Their feelings
Their feelings
Their feelings
Yes
Yes
Their feelings

Or those who simply Fear that they may only Be displeasing
And disappointing

And those whose Sense of confidence
About this thing
This poetry
This poem thing
Those that still Hide what they Feel to what they Think

Is prose

Those who think that Their life
Is not worth Sharing in the
The beat and Rhyme of poetry

Behold
The mere thought
About life
About a beating heart
The pulse
The eyes that blink
The fingers fidgety
That type the words

Of feelings
Of feelings
Yes
Yes
About feelings
It is all about feelings

The genuine feelings
Of your life
You type them
Each word
To another word
A chain of words
A long chain of words

Like playing the music
To the piano keys
Like strumming
The strings of a Flamenco guitar

A certain music
A certain beat
To the sound
Of your computer keys
Hear the beat
And the rhyme
Of your computer keys
Each word
To another word
To a chain of words
To a longer chain of words You are running a chain of feelings You are chasing a chain of feelings long chained in your hearts wanting to be free

To be free
To be free
Yes
Yes
You, feeling to be free to run free to be all free

Like you were scattering red rose petals to this pedestal Like you were sprinkling waters to this garden Like you were splashing waters in the sea Like you were bathing playing dancing in the rain Like you were humming a tune to a trek on a hill Like you were making love with your beloved the whole night

Behold
A poet in you is born

Behold
You are typing
A poem

You are Feeling
And you are
By all means

Now a poet

I hereby baptize you
With that name.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Are The Anonymous

they offer
everything
nothing is left
every trace is erased
no one remembers
and that is just
perfect
they like it

RIC S. BASTASA
They Are Waiting

let us not be defeated by silly matters
those that make boats sink that swallow souls
of men
into the deepest crevices of hell

we are not destined to be losers sing again: we are the champions float for a while while the ports are not visible to the eye

sight the better destinations islands teeming with coconut trees white sand beaches look out there there they are the dancing ladies clad in yellow soft and slender

they're waving their hands to embrace us

neophytes of love....

RIC S. BASTASA
They Ask Me

they ask me, as they have finally arrived from this long journey they are resting and sipping tea their feet on a stool their fingers with cigarette in between smoke like memories began to rise on the ceiling the wood and the walls start to remember there is this laughter of the intellect there is this humiliation of base desires they all meet here but it will not be long their world is not us and they keep on asking where are the good men? why have evil triumphed for that long? they look at me again quizzical and now seemingly angry: where are the good men? where did the good seeds go? why do you have all the healthy weeds in your garden?

i ask them, if they still need more tea.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Ask You And You Are Not Answering

there is a journey where everybody is going and they keep looking at you because you are staying and as they see it you are not bothered

at all.

and they ask you and you are not answering and they scream at you and you remain silent. There is simply no Point for discussion. There is nothing dignified in letting them know why, and how.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Begin To Put Up Portraits

in a landscape of words the disciples finally get tired and so they begin to put up portraits of their faces, put a patch of grass,

some drops of rain,
scents of roses,
sounds of brooks,
the swiftness of wings of robins

one disciple who is faithful to the last letter says that this is a betrayal and offers flowers to the gods so that they may be forgiven

the landscape of words in black and white
has changed

it is not paper anymore but a prairie where children and dogs begin to play.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Cannot Harm Anymore

mother was writing her lesson plan and i was watching her beside a lamp, that was then when there was no electricity yet available in the barrio the sound of the cicadas were loud and the lizards keep eating the moth on the ceiling i touched a wall eaten with termites and asked mother if termites could do us harm or the wood finally giving in to the hollowness of their skin all substances she said have their terminals wood surrender to the greed of termites and termites build their own empires under the earth so she said do not complain if this house that we live in soon fall to the ground and be nothing but flanks of rotten memories the law of nature is there we are all temporary nothing lasts forever
those that eat and those that are eaten are but part of their paths to destiny.

fate cannot harm, they serve the law and everything has a purpose unique on its own.
i look upon my blank sheet of paper and then i begin to write again.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Crucified Him

He did come for the sinners
And those who thought they have not sinned Crucified Him.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Did Not Say

that in the other side
of this world
what we will miss
are: blue skies
ski and surf
and ice cream
and beer
and hot dogs
and mozzarella cheese
and the scent of apples
and the red in strawberries deprieved of our senses now we try to devalue

eternity
and peace of mind
and quite.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Fall The Hardest

those that fly the highest
are those that fall the hardest unless one adapts to the wings of angels

or those of the fallen ones.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Have Already Taken Away The Sharp Knife

it used to be
beside my seat
that sharp knife...i cannot recall anymore... something happened that i like... but all of them did not like it... some cried like one important member of the family just died... some are silent like stones some have accepted that things like these happen almost everyday to all the people in this world no one to blame
no one...it is a phenomenon...the desire to put off the light.. the wish to end the day...the frightening moment of shying away from something life-giving... i am not talking...i have so many things in my mind.. the desert, the noonday sun.. the sunset, the closing of the doors and the shutting of the windows the darkness, the utter peace that do not give shelter to words.. and even thought..the elimination of phrases the dislike of sentences, the inability to make a rhyme and rhythm
one sleeps with the aid of medication, there is this slumber induced to cure the errors of nature white blankets, some cotton in the trash can, stained with blood, now dried and shall again be thrown away
to forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Have Changed The Rules Of The Game....

if you, by their own made rules, become the lead of this boat race,
surely, they will begin to
think,
it will be ugly to hear what can the world say?
they cannot accept that honor that you should have
deserved,
and so they change the rules and they will say you've made it
as one of the links but you cannot be first, for that would be a shame, and they cannot like a poisonous bait swallow it.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Have Not Slept

i slept early last ached.
Dreams i cannot remember.
Woke up early to read the cases I missed. Lots i missed.
I opened FB only to find other friends whom i thought are early wakers too.
They have not slept. They can't.
Chat.
she is playing chess on the internet.
she says she is crazy.
Lover is not in the house.
Alone, she must cope up.
Chess is another escape when Love is not around.
How bitter can life be.
Love who knows? It may be found within the four corners of the chess board.
Other people do not sleep.
They keep the reasons for themselves.
This is not what you think it should be.
Scribbles. Notes. The life of others.
Too, my own.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Just Wither

Surprising
The grasses
Are flowering
So seldom
Do we Notice

People Pass and Step upon
Them
And they Just wither

RIC S. BASTASA
They Kill For Money

up there
the gods live
and they tell
those down here
to kill
anyone
just anyone without names in any place
anywhere

this is the
verse of terrorism

RIC S. BASTASA
They Last Forever....

it is not good to see an old man begging for fame.

or becoming a preacher on some pulpit how to be popular.

King Fu or Tu Fo
had only a jug of wine a mountain as sole audience a sky as blanket and stars as inspiration.

i guess in their loneliness fame had become so irrelevant.

a crown of laurel is nothing but herbs.

the earth murmurs the pains the poet hears them.

there is no fun in this game of laments. If there is any it is but a coping mechanism to catapult dreams for another day.

one has a shadow for a companion in this journey and talking to this shadow is poetry.

they are dead. their graves no where to be found. There are no children to carry their names.
no wife to mourn for a while.
no government to own them.
no state to honor that demise.
no paper lasts forever. the pen breaks.
inks do not last. but they are memorable.

and i believe them
and they have to last forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Laugh At Me When I Told Them that the best sex i ever had was with my wife and they laugh even harder when i said that it is still true even

today.

am i funny?

RIC S. BASTASA
They Love  But They Were Never Loved In Return and there they are inside the room of beauty and lonely conversations

they roam the world
unable to learn the art of permanence the lessons of staying in one place and be sober they love that much and give themselves all in the name of love yet they are never loved

in return

the reason why they go from one place to another like gypsies
looking for love on dark nights till dawn till the weary morning till noonday
and till the night comes again howling and teasing them loving so loving and yet so unloved

it is nature's curse
a spell not broken till the end and so i see them in this room of beauty and lonely conversations

they cut my hair and clean me with powder and their brushes until the floor is filled with what i am shedding off and then i leave them again and visit them
as often as i feel dirty and unshaven
missing the lonely conversations the hush of loves always unrequited

RIC S. BASTASA
They Love You.....

you always think that if people know you then they will soon not love
you

it could be a fact from your own point of view but take it from my way of looking at the mountain

i do not love myself that much for i am but a child playing with my own
feet
stamping on the sands and feeling each grain
like the last day of my
life

the mountain is always at home with its forest and the path i take always leads me there not for the losing
but for the communing

the mountain loves me and the rest have become mere beliefs that i toggle
with my fingers
and when they fall off
i can only give a little sigh and then let go
without a tear
to signify
a cry....

RIC S. BASTASA
They Miss You

there is always that feeling of wanting to go somewhere
rushing

*
only to be overtaken by that feeling of wanting to go back
again
to the same place where you just left
a moment
ago

*
simply because they miss you
& you miss them too

*
that is never a matter that you
complicate like some jigsaw puzzle spread on the table
&
you piece them together looking for your face and the faces that surround you in the background of
everything

love and loving loved & be loved in return

bliss & overjoy
are the hands
that now gather
the pieces

fit them together with tenderness
until the picture is complete all faces wearing smiles telling you

welcome home honey
we always love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Never Know His Name

It is hard to write this I am writing this with a challenge That i have not forgotten
The father in me
The child that remains inside myself Who for years have lived alone

They shall never know His real name

RIC S. BASTASA
They Pity Me....

i like to take back my parrot. Yellow one
with broken beak, but smart

at least, it knows easily how to mimic me
and i am so
flattered,

i feed it well,
and it got so fat that it cannot lift itself into flight so it stayed just right there on the railing where i put it

parroting everything that i say and i am so pleased
and taken proud of this yellow feathered
creature
with my neighbors

and then for all i
know
they pity me.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Remain Beautiful To Behold

dr. Richard S. Bastasa

there are trees without leaves
there are those
that do not flower that do not give you any fruit at all

yet these trees remain
trees
and i do not entertain any idea
of an ax

RIC S. BASTASA
They Say

to be a better poet
they say, i must take a cat for a pet as though the cat has rhyme and rhythm
just like a beautiful poem

i took the advice of course and i agree that with a cat for a pet i have written about ten poems with the necessary elements of rhyme and rhythm

it was smooth and good until you brought your munchkin in the house & since then
the war poem started to be composed there was chaos & nothing pious.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Say No One Can

there is an urge
inside me
to let something out
and free
it so i can breathe
a little and live fully
alive

i want to see your face
i need it
for me to become
who i am

but there is another landscape in my
heart
that opens a path

logically i do not want it
but my feet are already
there
treading upon its grass
so green and fresh so lovely
and airy
and much to my desire for lust

i hold you with finality and then
leave you

there is this urge that the mind cannot control and which the heart is really fond of

this is the one
that i want to understand for now i wish i dislike it but i can't

ey say
no one can
and that is what old literature
has been declaring

RIC S. BASTASA
They Say Nothing.....

we are the inferior ones who still remain in that old age of
words,

those who are like us still admire staying in the same old place smelling like old rotten rosewood slower than worms or snails we have remained here, the old ways that never die, the old painting that still captivate our weary minds we think death is a door towards a new world, a new liking, a new way at looking ourselves, perhaps, perhaps, how we wish all these would come true, to the same spontaneity of the old, to the same naked expressions, defying the norms and rebelling a morality, those who are ahead of us, are muted, perfect in their new found silence, never returning back, and laughing at our ineptness, and then they move on to the place beyond our imagination, it is like being a tourist taking nothing back, taking nothing going out, and then not returning. They say nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Say The Gods Are Here

on earth
they say the gods are here
and i look at each on each face
and they do not look at all different than me

or you and i touch their skins and feel that they too have bones much like our own brittleness

but they say they are gods and i am but a very insignificant flicker

dust
atom invisible to the importance of themselves

i get lost and they get lost &
at the end
i have no respect left or sense of awe
or ardor
for adoration of whatever sacred name
they put on their breasts or name tags
on their foreheads

holy cow! i tell myself what the hell! i curse the wind what a mess! i type at the end of the haggle
must i be wrong correct me if you may for i have mistaken them as myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Tell Us About The Triumph Of Light

they tell us about light's conquest over a dark night when dawn breaks into a full day,

there is hope they say for every bud that blooms into a flower for every cocoon that turns into a butterfly

sometimes honestly i think that these are but stories told by a fool.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Tell You This And That

day make the rules day play their own games and they decide who's in who's out day's it....

ters we surrender in the nook seeing them play the games day try to understand the rules and abide day sometimes, yes sometimes, just sometimes day feel there's something wrong with their rules just them inside the circle and just us outside their circle and they all laugh at us outsiders, barbars, strangers, aliens got tired about names and labels just like you and i make my own circle circle of friends, circle of principles, circle of rules where i am in and they are out and i also learn my own kind of laughter side by side with them i make my own world with my own kind of building blocks step by step, inch by inch, block by block i make this circle

i am in now and they are outside forever i am free and they are in their own prisons now i laugh and they cry.

this is my world

this is my confidence and from that time on i said to myself i am unique i am indestructible i am no copy cat i am original in my own way i am king and in my own place this is my castle i am myself now.

RIC S. BASTASA
They That Destroy

They that know how to destroy surprisingly, i must confess, as i have seen,
are those that do not really want to create
are those that do not know how to begin anew those that do not know the first cry for life they that roam the world without purpose
they cut and when you ask them to connect
they run and away like mad dogs on the loose carrying sharp knives cutting branches again of trees not understanding what roots are what leaves.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Too Were Dubbed As Morons During Their Harsh Times

Reading the works of those who died and risen from their commonality makes me feel that i am
after all, an inferior if not a mediocre clown juggling with my own kind of lousy choice of words and priority of ideas,

i pause, i sigh, and has come to the brink of simply perusing the tenets of chosen silence, but i keep the faith, i am different, and i belong to my own age now upon a style that they have not taken upon a choice that is lighted by the torch of my own idiosyncrasies i read some more, down to the last details, they too, were dubbed as morons during their harsh times.

with this, i write another one, and since then cannot stop.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Who Know How To Get So Much Money

ye just stand there and see, wait and see, you work day and night, and pity you while you sweat it out and bleed with the blood from your brains, ye always know how to wait and see, where the money is made and then stored and then they always have a way for you who earned it
to give,

smilingly..

that is the rule of this society..

RIC S. BASTASA
They Will All Wear Out Like Cloth, The Moth Will Eat Them Up.

The Lord is my Help
i have said my pieces in my daily trances
there are angry men who shall not forget me but shall i worry then if sometime i fall and then they will tread upon me with their furious feet i shall not be destroyed for the Lord is with me.

His moths are ready to eat them all
rags to his face
rotten clothes
inside canals

RIC S. BASTASA
They Will Just Come And Open Themselves

it is enough that we are all here. need we need more than our respective presences?
the clouds appear above us, the simply pass and we see white skies.

Departures have their own way of leaving, in the same manner as arrivals.

why look for things which we cannot yet find? time ripens and become so sweet for us to gather and savor we are all here and we just wait for the seasons for those that come they are all for us reserved and offered and soon shall be opened.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Will Not Be Seeing Each Other Anymore....

so she worked it out,
love, in some secret codes when she says she is angry, that merely says, i miss you, when she says you leave, or get lost, she means, please stay she had a different way of life, a work which she cannot divulge onight she is finally leaving to another country and she calls i love you, i love you very much, and he knows what she means.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Will See A Desert Of Carcass Where Vultures Wait For Their Double Kill

your desires
are yours secrets
if they become visible they will see a desert of carcass where vultures wait
for their double
kill

what is said
is superficial
these are the
norms and the dictates of good
behavior of our present time

when we arrive
in the house of our best friend
we sit on his chair
inside the house
we are free
to sip coffee and talk about anything
but mind you
we sift, and limit
our drift
' this is not our house' you say
we cannot really
be ourselves
like cows on the pasture
like a pig on its sty.

RIC S. BASTASA
They Will Understand And Hence Ignore.

here comes old age,
where you shall miss a word,
skip a letter,
make mistakes as to what you really mean where love can be left out as funny romance where what used to be exciting be it in the attic or the garage or a nook in the public park
no longer
gives that libidinal click,

here comes old age
dressed in strict civility but loses its ardor its memory

you even forget
it's valentines day

but take comfort
they still have the hugeness of that heart

they will understand
and hence ignore.

RIC S. BASTASA
They......

you always wanted to be straightforward in language

even in lifestyle hoping to be direct, concise, no beating of the bush

to be understood, yet, you are a failure, they still do not understand you, in fact, they despise your being straightforward saying what they love is the curve the enigma, that deep, deep blue part, something that they cannot figure out, to make them restless and cruel.

RIC S. BASTASA
They'Ll Find No Use Of You

one stops digging for roots so much soil will be shoveled you gonna sweat it out dirty yourself sometimes only to find out that when you trace a branching root and know some names, birth and death dates, and even some details, and then you tell a tip that you come from the line of Juan who was born in 1896, they may nod without argument but then they'll find no use of you and so they continue going deeper
and for years they had been doing the same things over and
over again
without you.
they have their own darkness
to keep
and there is no use for whatever light you are bringing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thighs And Bottoms

i switch on to
desire
watching the thigh
and the bottom of a human being

dance of love before me as i open my eyes
for clarity

curves and shapes contours of a landscape where i have been
for quite a time

there's cliff
and i plunge it

liberating
i close my eyes
my hands shout
for joy

this is bliss
my abdomen says.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thine Own Eyes...

my eyes are asking:
hey dude, are you not wasting your sight?

you should have watched bay bodies
rather than look for words, hey eyes, i own you and if i want, i can waste all of you on words.

where am i? the eyes are angry but there shall be no tears.

i am the owner of my eyes and i have always wasted them on
words.

till they close forever but always without tears.

RIC S. BASTASA Thing Is...It Is...

i pray,
do not take me seriously.

do not take this page seriously, i also pray

i pray more, please do not take time reading this writing.

they are not serious.
as all the world is.

i pray
if you read this, eat your burger.
continue with the french fries, put more tomato catsup. consume your pepsi cola.

the real thing is this.
i am not cuteness overload.

what i write is just a break from my realities.

pile of papers to read.
cases to decide. deadlines are spitting cobras. i am alone and no one does anything for me.

thing is. it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Things As They Are....

IT WOULD have been better if i went outside watch the stars at night and walk barefoot on the grass

i could have heard so well the songs of the wind felt the coldness of the earth and seen the glorious glow of the skies

RIC S. BASTASA
Guilty was I,
With you, oh how my heart beat Like a drum, with you, but I was wrong, they will always Say without doubt

I am wrong, I Can never be Right with this

They will judge us Always with conviction
And I go the prison
Of my conscience

A thought of you
Is like a rusty bed Squeaking to my Humiliation but It was something
I always remember
With a titillating
Armpit & sleepy eyes.

I lay there after Wards with eyes Looking beyond
My feet hung on A rocking chair,

So sweet and yet
So guilt stricken &
There shall nothing
Be like this again.

When I see you, I Begin to understand
My own limitations
I love you I always Will love you, always.

That is threshold of My ecstasy & the Fence of what is Mine & mine alone.

You are enough, you
Were so sweet but Better be forgotten

Now, forever you
Pain me, you pain me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Things Do Not Seem To Be Them After A Careful Seeing

a spoon and a fork and they seem to appear with food on a silver platter when we talk we talk like poets now after years

a spoon is no longer just a spoon and neither is the fork and neither is the food the food that we eat on the table and neither is the silver platter a mere silver platter as it seems to be for a spoon may be me and i may also be a tongue and i could be a tongue to your fork, a protrusion that stabs me like a knife and the silver platter could be our mind a garden where we put every seed and the table and the cloth that covers it with leaves and flowers myabe our worlds, covered and uncovered with some intricate designs this could be our world now. a world of poems where everything is a roll of sensitive skin a mind so fertile with its array of metaphors and similes and

exaggerations, and these make us so happy we tiptoe, we choose the word, we equate every object to a meaning, we dance to a lot of its nuances, and then we touch and then we are so silent. we choose not to hurt.

Things Embrace You

things are there in the open field the greenest grass, the reddest rose, the bluest sky, the brownest earth, the coolest wind, the clearest brook, the purest wings of the whitest of birds, the tallest mountain, the rollerest of all hills, the featherest cloud, the sunniest sun, the moonest of all moons, the starriest stars, look at them closely, feel them all, hear what they are all telling you, embrace them all, and they will embrace you too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Things Go... People Die...

mother
sun, center of your planets revolving and spinning orbits holding upon the imaginary
poles

distances make memories more apparent

hospitable thoughts
come to the rescue

what you must know
is this:
there is more beauty in your own
sorrow

mother
sun, soon fades,
darkness in your
universe
reigns,

but the stars
still flicker for you
when,
as expected, mother
sun is
gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Things Happen Even If You Do Not Manipulate The Edges

things happen
light burns
solids become soft after a time you do not need to touch
anything

eye have their own clocks and alarms.

nature keeps its own history, and makes things happen again we cease and so we do not notice the master plan
of the universe

those that survive
for whatever reason
understands.

eye watch and how dry their mouths are the amazement is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is the hitch of this relationship, i whisper my secrets and you pay me with a kiss the kiss we like so much our tongues rolling like lovers on the grassy hill and we feel we have a very good reason for sticking it out together, i trust you,
the next day i see you with another man and it is the same kiss that you offer
again in exchange for his secrets the next day you write in the local paper the different kisses a man gives to a woman how each kiss can be categorized how each man trusts a woman because of a kiss how a man can be fooled by her kisses kisses that mean nothing to her but just a means to an end to explore and to tame to domesticate the crazy men and educate them about women's brains their wits and wiles and their quest to be equal to men and be treated with respect and awe

well, we men have a way of our own in all the kisses we are just working for a compromise and most of the time we are bored and well crazy for nothing at all, but sometimes, we really love deeply, but we do not say anything, when in love

we have nothing to say, it is a serious job needing much attention, less the words that you women, want to be said and spread in your foreheads.

RIC S. BASTASA
Things Pass You By In The Most Simple Manner

sometimes i feel so guilty knowing that things pass me by without so much complication no fuss
no complaints whatsoever

like when the leaves start
falling
on a windy summer on a very hot day
facing the penultimate moment
of their unnoticed existences

like the way the sun sets ending itself surrendering to the power of the dark night as though it is being eaten
slowly

or the pond drying itself giving all its water to the greedy sun
the king of the drought taking away everything

no screams
no suits
no letter of protests
no hunger strike
no wars
no violence against civilians or bombing of markets or mosques
no taking of hostages or exploding trains and shooting pilots
in the air

the world spins slowly completing its journey for the day many things happened since dawn
but just the same i never heard any scream
at the top of its poles

and i wonder how i sit here all day long staring at the horizon and beating the rails with a stick figuring our so many complications when things would have been simpler
if i did not use my mind or wish that things should have been this way or that way

things are simple event are simple and i begin to realize i, must be simple too less the pain
less the thinking.

RIC S. BASTASA
Things Sometimes Do Not Work Out The Way You Expect Them To Be

familiarity
to failure is not a easy task, you get entangled to a confusion and you lose reason
sometimes

emotions pour like lava
you have become this erupting volcano
and time solidifies hot magma solid mountains
of rock
on beautiful formations from a recent fury

like you
like what you feel in the middle of anger let all these make a free flow
and simply wait and watch

patience brings the most beautiful
shape in you

sculpture of angry
thoughts settling
in the contours
of your peace and
quiet

then solidified
understanding
rocks and boulders
strengths and principles and a self newly forged

strong and bold
an edifice of yourself now
like this new mountain silent and daring
to nature imposing

RIC S. BASTASA
Things That Are Not Already There things that you finally realize you miss but are not there anymore either they are taken or lost

either because you have taken them for granted since you did not mind when they are gone
you start to think
and miss them but

is it really late?
go and find them
for there is always time if you really love them

RIC S. BASTASA
Things That Happened

There is a connection between the tree and you between a space of cool air

There is a spark that short moment that shakes you because it is too beautiful
and then gone

You have always returned from far places hoping to see it again

The tree had been tall and proud and someone that you hate cut it into pieces for firewood

You have seen the smoke from far away you are mute

RIC S. BASTASA
Things That I Cannot Forget

there were lots of dry leaves under the mahogany tree
distant from the house where we live
away from the people who are against our relationship

your hands inside my pocket
your tongue inside my
mouth

i cannot forget the story
you told me once
about the prince who finally died in the battle against the dragon
as the princess waits finally to be taken away

today, 45 years after that tryst
i gaze upon a mahogany stump
the wind is strong
my hat is flown away
i do not chase
anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Things That May Greet You One Day

a faucet that leaks a computer that shuts down a cell phone on low batteries a flashlight that does not light a dark bathroom a malfunctioning vcd
a car that does not start a study lamp with a broken switch some things broken you wish they were not

but just the same
you go on with what this broken day has to offer you relax on sad thoughts you mend what you can such are your days

and she never knew

RIC S. BASTASA
Things That Slip From Our Very Hands

water drips from our hands no amount of cupping catches it air escapes from our mouth whatever lip closing you make no matter what you do memories slip like water like air things precious friends so dear love like diamonds

no one keeps them forever the reality is in the cascading and losing and disappearing i could have loved you more and keep you forever inside my heart reality is not with us like air like water like memories evaporating from our human senses

nothing lasts forever
the eternity you talk about when we kiss the promises after love we call these all lies mystical mythical, that my love, my darling, is the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Things That We Can Change, And What We Cannot

i choose the color of my shirt

perhaps

i can also choose the color of my mood

i guess i can deny a present grief

hide it from myself
and then

tell myself that for now

i have decided to be happy just like the way i set aside a black shirt because i can choose to wear

white

a friend of mine laughs at this

for today it is raining

and he asks me
if i can change the rain

and have a sunny
day instead.
RIC S. BASTASA
Things That We Cannot Leave

those that we love we bring them with us but sometimes i think they better be left where they ought to be from places where we found them
where they grow better naturally

RIC S. BASTASA
Things That Will Be

learning not to trust for things that will be something to hope for they will not always last for a lifetime

the seed you bury the worm sometimes eats it the bud you mark remains tight and falls

this you must know
as early as you are born see the light of everyday blunders

for sometimes when you close a door
it does not mean that the window opens

oh well, it is not easy to learn realities damned
dreams broken selves bursting
a world in your eyes annihilating

but of course you may start anew be positive you once say light a candle in the room let no one burn.

RIC S. BASTASA
Things Were Born So Simple Please Do Not Complicate Them

eggs white
a hen keeps them warm
with its feathers
and patience
looking at the busy worms in the garden

the ants as usual
are not arguing with the grasshoppers

it is a sunny day
and nothing spoils it
with words

except this one building stanzas
word upon word
like a tower of babel

expect the scattering
of tribes
of thoughts that cannot get well along even with its own same sound

RIC S. BASTASA
Things With Stories Of Their Own

overused lipstick, abused plate and spoon, molested carpets,
a breakdown of shattered glasses in the living room, wasted wine,
roasted pork,
over fried chicken legs egg broiled
with black sulfur smoked chimney,
candle floors, oiled skins, dyed hair
snake pit, outgrown shoes, dry leaves, crying babies, foul socks, suckers,
milestones, limestone.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are things though small that we cannot leave because they are ours they belong to us and we belong to them
that without them
though small we cannot really live some more there are acts which they call trivial so unimportant like a sigh

or a whisper
but we are so attached to them
that without them
we become nothing

they are a part of us and when they are gone we become blanks unfilled

there are so many things that we can afford to lose and when losing them we do not even notice

simply because we never want them to be a part of us neither do they wish becoming too
a part of what and who we are

we discern and to those that pain us we finally avoid and disregard

to those that we miss that makes our hearts jump with joy like kids with mothers bringing favorite gifts we always remember

they are the ones that usually are earlier
gone
lost

those that we love to stay but as early as dawn before we wake up had already left...

RIC S. BASTASA
Think Like The Sea
	hinth like the sea
be deep
like its oceans
be thoroughly wide
like its domains
arrive at every continent and welcome the newness of their shores

do not just be like any man staying in one place digging his own grave with no lover
crying over his passing
like any other wind
a gust
a push, another
unwanted pus.

RIC S. BASTASA
Think Trickles

if u think in trickles it will just be trickles thoughts trickling like a trick

the mind tricks itself on the trick of the trickles

think about a rush of the waters of the rain

think about a mountain
a river
an ocean

think about how wide can this space be how high can the sky be how deep
can this earth be

think about you as a speck of dust
on this universal hollowness

all things trying to fill up this vast emptiness to no avail,

think about you as another insignificant atom
vibrating in random
with the rest
of this molecular world always in flux
changing and shifting and moving
now, u r as humble
as the leaf about to fall from a twig

now you are as weak as a fading sun
as gentle as the waning moon

as silent as the star
about to die

RIC S. BASTASA
Thinking

Your elbow rests on the table Your chin tangent to your Fist your ears steady on some Hints your eyes focused beyond This wall this common obstruction Of emotional camouflage Your face is the façade Of this serious edifice Your nose smells something Pungent and offensive
Your mind opens
Your heart tries to understand Some winged and flapping Gains momentum and then Flies away to heights
Your mouth is as usual Closed and your teeth grinds There is no food or grain Just air in between

RIC S. BASTASA
Thinking About Your World That Disappears Before Me

in your vast world
i see clouds shaped like a very long river
in the sky

i see houses far for each other well lighted upon the shoulders of a mountain the moon has just disappeared and so are the stars and then the lights of the houses are turned off one by one until what remains is the darkness of the night which has swallowed greedily the river in the sky i drink the rain that takes away the dust from my lips it is a long lonely night and i am not asleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
soon i shall break the news about a failure
about scattered selves like litters of the city after a rally of the oppressed or who think they are

i shall give the details how the famous man died on top of his chosen luxuries
you know him well
and you love him still shall i see tears about to fall from your eyes?

i expect you will enumerate all the excuses and i will pretend that i am convinced that i sympathize with you that i am after all a kind man i have long released you from my hold but i shall not rejoice over this did you see stones inside my heart?

i have learned the art of making faces disappear baking my heart until it assumes the core of steel

you see
if you only care, you should have known you were never mine as i was never yours

i have already finished my own house and it stands firm beside the vultures in the arid desert...

RIC S. BASTASA
Thinking Process..

i go back to the pages and i know i am shocking perhaps to all of you having written much on some things that perhaps i have not thought of so well... but they are there and they confront me that i own them and i feel a little bit awkward when and how have i written these matters of the heart and soul and affection and (well,) alienation and stressful situations, not counting the reality of depressing expressions in the form of concealed metaphoric devices, at any rate, i accept this kind of ability to just be writing for no purpose, except to express, for simply writing what i must say without so much thinking that in the future i may regret what ought not to be written... well, this is it, this is life, and this is what is it all about...a river simply flowing to the sea what more? what should it be?

RIC S. BASTASA
Thinking To Be Happy

we begin with a basic proposition: i decide to be happy today then we go to such deductions as: happiness is just a state of mind so today, you proceed to something personal: i will be happy i will smile, i will not be interfered by those who are sad and disturbed i will decide my own mood, i will not be influenced by those who want me to be sad, and down and depressed and anxious and dissatisfied, i want to enjoy nature's bounty, appreciate the flowers blooming in the field in fact, i have to pick some of them and smell and imagine all the beautiful things around me, the trees, the clouds, the sun, the rivers, and at night of course, the full moon sailing on the sea, and arrayed with a broom of stars a shooting star, a distant glowing planet named Venus and try to see the zodiac and the greeks gods and goddesses posted in the heavens i like to dance and spend my time in ballrooms and bars and drink my favorite beer and talk to my wonderful friends, i like to spend a romantic night with my lover, and have sex and enjoy the warm body and caress the parts of the human being that i like to feast with my hands and fingers and lips, and i like to sleep after a night of passion, and dream and wake up on a beautiful morning, and have coffee and breakfast and have the lively conversation, and i like all the days of my life to be like this: HAPPY i like to think that i am happy, i decide to be happy, i make my moods but let me be honest and frank with you, let me ask you this question:

why am i still NOT?

RIC S. BASTASA
Thinking Too Much

the whole day there is so much thinking and something that i cannot understand runs inside my spine it is like a very thorny vine a porcupine perhaps or some kind of a new breed of an urchin
the whole night they will all be running over my head
under my hair
the conscience who is not a stranger shall listen like a child to his mother the pillow cannot help on this matter of an indecision

to be or not to be me

to hate much
and set aside love

to play and forget the rules

to sleep and wish
death
to wake up early and then
regret

please slay me with your love that which this hate plans to achieve
too quickly

RIC S. BASTASA
Thinking...

it is it that thinks that we think works most too convincing just as it is elucidating trying to give all the answers yet at the end what happens? dead ends
inevitable,
gates locked and there are no keys,
the labyrinths are leading
us to nowhere
and then we sit under the tree unthinking what has been
thought
merely receiving air engulfing it with all the rooms of our lungs breathing and savoring coolness
and gazing at the spread of grass the trips of clouds and then as light dims to make a night we rest on our beds less the thoughts but only the prayers that all is well because we have finally get rid of the belief in thoughts.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wiener Schnitzel in vienna

aunt gomolka
serves a speciality originating from the Italian
'costoletta Milanese' -
breadcrumbed
and fried veal escalope, frequently served with Erdäpfel Salat

RIC S. BASTASA
Third Week Of December

the winds are cold
the sun is shying away from the skies

the paths are wet
and muddy
the houses are crowded

the rains are not stopping
the leaves are singing

these longing songs of the
heart
on windows open

RIC S. BASTASA
Third World Democracy

that little brown boy which picks your tennis ball has grown up to become the court judge of the town that son of the dried fish vendor who always borrowed money from your mama and didn't pay has become the undersecretary of Finance that littly sissy who plays well the rock-a-bye-baby game in school has become the brigidaire general of the 4th infantry division of this island that woman who always goes to church everyday and cross-stitches the whole day in their house has become a spinster and every night she goes surfing in the internet at the facebook or friendster still dreaming about the white man his prince charming to take her away from this malfuctioning democracy

RIC S. BASTASA
Thirsty Glass

IT IS indeed surprising to hear from a glass that is filled with water that it is thirsty still...

RIC S. BASTASA
At first, this is the face I will show you Shallow, thin, smooth Then we feel each other, like some kind of New found friends, I Take another layer, and tell you, this is my face, Some scars, and lines of age, and furrows, Then we write many emails, and remember Common things, like a certain familiarity, Another layer is taken and exposed,
The face of a sick man, with some Disappointments in his mind, Some wounds, wrinkles, and so you Think, are there other layers of faces still To show,
Deeper, deeper is there another layer to show Another face of this man?
Yes, there is another layer, more faces Hidden underneath each layer, As we go on, learning from ourselves,
And me learning from myself,
I will be digging for more faces, Because I am never static I am growing, and for each growth Like molting
Another face comes out

Soon, I hope, I must come out With the most beautiful face The we can be both proud of,

It is just a matter of time Depending on how well you have loved me

RIC S. BASTASA
This 1 S 4 U

be a model
when you speak
of suicide

be brave
and be a man
when you lecture
about suicide

be cool
and be strong and be candid when the theme is suicide

be truthful and be kind when you lecture
about suicide

do not leave us all guilty
be fair and be just when you write a poem about suicide when you say there is nowhere to run there is nowhere to hide be clear and be not hardheaded

when you speak
about this goddamn suicide be sympathetic
have a little empathy
compassion
and be honest when you begin to touch on suicide

have faith
and be specific about it when you speak of suicide say who fix when and what means what end
and be reasonable about
why........
then do it, if you will
if you won't don't ever speak about it
again
if you speak
then you will be
dead
and if you are silent then you
are damned

RIC S. BASTASA
This Afternoon

this afternoon
three black birds hover steadily on the sunset sky beyond my roof
i am looking for the fourth it is not flying it is staying inside my bleeding heart

drinking blood.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Afternoon By The Sea

slept on the sand
the wind was cool

under the old tree between those leaves

skies in small pieces

like
a jigsaw puzzle

RIC S. BASTASA
This Afternoon While Relaxing At The Porch

i see a little bird coming out
from its nest

a fledgling

wanting to fly
testing the power
of its young wings flapping
and flapping
feeling
the wind
keeping

it does not manage
after a brief stint

it falls on the ground now limping &
limping

mother-bird tries to rescue diving wanting to save
the
fledgling

but to no avail

she cannot carry it back
high on that tree

it is heavy

a cat
comes along the way and swallows
little birdie
for dinner

predator-prey -world
this is

nothing sentimental nothing personal
just a matter of survival

RIC S. BASTASA
This Afternoon....

you see a black bird moving opposite your direction there is no identification for any intimacy and tired perhaps of means to get to know you it flies away
northbound

perhaps someone with the capacity for intimacy waits there

who knows
what the language of the black bird is its beak does not woodpeck

RIC S. BASTASA
This Afternoon's Experience

We face each other
I, the judge, and he, the priest Accuser,
He claims he had been swindled
And he was furious
And he could have hit the swindler with his fist Or kicked him
The twist comes
Our souls shifted
I have become the priest
And he becomes
The judge
I have seen the fury in his face His eyebrows positioned like spears Ready for a kill
It is shameful
Some tears fall from my eyes
And he does not notice
The shapes of Compassion

I have long looked to the skies For answers
And this afternoon
I guess i have Found some
I tell him i do not really know Compassion is always A mouth gagged because there is nothing Worth saying.

RIC S. BASTASA
This And This And This...

to see more deeply beauty
beloved
close your eyes

i have no name
you have none

light cannot be this alliance.

this substance
inside our flesh

is beautiful.
it is the one seeing
the truth.

when i turn on
the light
i struggle.

this body chides
me in the mirror

it says i am
ugly
it says i am
horrible

the truth is here in the heart

a flower in the sky
a moon in the reeds
a beautiful word
you put inside my
mouth

that makes me live
for the moment.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Art....

it is just a matter of having it in
and it gives the usual pain or joy, no choice, the feelings are always there and the sense of knowing and being too analytical seemingly destroys the beauty indescribably setting

she gives a sigh when nobody seems to be clapping hands when no one is bowing or saying a name at least that one makes it right and rhyming

'at last, i do not really care' this is autonomy of indiscretions of feelings and all these are but streams of consciousness the usual candle tears taking shape in a bowl of cold water

'we let it go'
we tell ourselves mutually about the release of what had been kept
for years
and we know no one understands what is these all about a sewing machine
a pillow, a veil, a pin, an injecting sting, a rope, a blanket,
an authority, a cushion, a bluffer, a clown, and so on and so forth you are finally misled about all these things a scissor, a triangular cloth, an umbrella,

a starfish,

the usual moon resting upon the trees the sun peeping between two mountains early morning the kid in town finally planting the rice seeds and the buffalo still enjoying the day in mud there is plane that lands at the airport at 2 o' clock in the afternoon when you are still taking your siesta by the verandah and you are irritated and you tell yourself

'oh yes! ' this is all about it.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Belief Of Coming And Going

since i have not found true love
since i have not
tasted the perfect
flavor of the kiss

i wish that death
comes earlier and i promise myself that i will be back again
in another body

searching for the soul mate
that perfect kiss that love that sends me to the perfection of my being

and when this happens i shall wish death again with another promise that i will never be back
in this human form
again

for i am tired of this pain
i am tired of this longing
this imperfection that makes me
want and crave
for more

this eternal damnation
of dissatisfaction
This Book Has 20 Chapters this book has only 20 chapters filled with suspense, romance, and some tragedies at the later part, chapter 12 & 13 at most show how weak the character is, but it does not really matter. I am now reading chapter 19 and i am about to finish the witty ending at the last chapter. I am waiting at the predeparture area, looking beyond the glass door where the plane bound for Thailand is unloading cargoes and passengers and then the rain starts the pour with some gusty winds. Umbrellas start to unfold.

i sit straight like i have a new idea.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Candle

there is this candle in my heart
and it is burning
like my yearning
that is empty and wanting to be filled
like a basin wanting to have water from the rain

there is this void
that can not be filled there is this mouth
that speaks about my beloved

i like this candle
i like this fire
and see, i am burning with
desire
i like too the rain that falls on my basin
see
i am a candle burning with desire
swimming on the water
never dead
never quenched
never stopping

see, you are with me never sleeping
wanting some more see, we are dreaming
we are alive

we are these candles burning
turning into a wildfire.
This Christmas

hospitality has its own fire kindle it this season of mire in the hall of the king let us keep the flame of charity burning

RIC S. BASTASA
This Comfort Of Invisibility

astounding is this comfort of being invisible of this having to see you and you not seeing me wetting my eyes
with tears...

RIC S. BASTASA
This Coming Valentine's Day

what can i tell you now?

you always had it in your mind that i betrayed your love.
i have nothing to say to defend my own self.
i have long been punished by my own lingering
loneliness.
i punished myself like Oedipus.
Blind i walk the lonely alleys
of my life
grappling but still surviving as i do not wish to drag this precious life to my own self-willed destruction

life has its place i too have mine
we are living separately but we are still one
in this
quest for resolution

i cannot offer you my heart you know the reason why.

i cannot offer you my thoughts they are owned by someone.

i have nothing to offer but i have only one request you may not forgive me but please, try forgetting me ask me if i have forgotten you how can i?

this valentine's day
i kiss another lips hoping to forget yours.

time is too cruel for us.
let us blame it.

time deceived us
let us ask it about the truth

time is elusive still we cannot catch my heart does not bleed anymore falling short of blood.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Country Is Ours, The Philippines, For You Brother Pinoy

And we shall not leave
This country we shall build

Because it is ours
Throughout the golden hours

Here we belong
For quite long

Our great forefather
Was buried here

And though in poverty
We must stay

As we enjoy what we have Under the sun we love

The coolness of the moon
We all swoon and don

We shall be proud as a tree
We enjoy our liberty

We shall live we shall die There is no reason to cry

RIC S. BASTASA
This Daily Poetry, .. Or Is It Really?

it has become just like everyday: dusting of
furniture,
washing the plates
cleaning the car

or cutting a daisy
putting it on a vase
on the table

or opening a window to let light in or untying the drapes

to create a privacy

or mopping the floor putting perfume on the room we do it everyday sometimes quickly like turning off a faucet

or killing a fly or releasing a dragonfly

or just spitting it out or defecating, a form of release our poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Day

music and poetry
bon jovi and pavarotti

staying put to art and making the most out of music

ears and hands
a mind that floats

ballet in thoughts tip toe on the soft grasses

of the mind
taking it not giving up seeping and absorbing the nice things

singing and then
dancing

this is life
in happy suspension.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Day Is Always The Best For Me

day is always the best i got it does not think of tomorrow
does not speak of regret of the past it stays in its solitude silent on the river where the moon
nests.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Day Will Be Another Exciting Day

I see how the sun rises today A faint glow crawling slowly On the gray clouds of dawn Making a hole on the blackness Of disappearing night skies

Some white birds still sleep High above the treetops They wake up and fly away On this young horizon

On this golden silence
The morning starts to unfold Rays of light like needles Piercing the colder winds

Some leaves fall gently
The grass receiving them A sparrow has just taken This green fat worm on its beak

The sound of the wind Whispers from the far mountains
It is a nice sunny day for me Exciting Saturday, no work just play.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Distance

distance is killing me and you confirm it
for it too is killing you and we mean that there is something going between us distance kills but let me have some bird-lips lots of birds-lips with wings flying towards you tonight in our mutual dreams wet with rain

petals still dewy warm fingers
and saucy lips

distance cannot kill us now. entwined in our dreams i'll burst like a very ripe plum
to the ground
your mouth opens and catches me
and then
inside that dream you swallow me whole digest me and i become some kind of a sap running like red corpuscles all over you.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Drunkenness

The rain dripping from this Old nipa roof Wakes me up from This drunkenness.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Early Morning

this early morning
we are talking about
something

somehow you are the curious kitten coming near my bed wanting a little warmth
from my hands

and i perfectly understand this need on the cold days
of our lives

a nice morning conversation perhaps something not hot just warm to rub some sparks in our thoughts i begin to talk about some treasures i keep inside my heart how often i open my trunk and simply glance at them they are more than diamonds and gold and certificates of some deposits

for they glitter not in my eyes but in my soul
they make me see clearly the meaning of my life i become young again i can even fly to distant lands where some of my memories are buried

all these make me live and live life the way it must be lived always giving and not taking something somewhere

oh! you will never know but soon you will understand and see when you close your eyes in the darkness and remember too the treasures of your heart

RIC S. BASTASA
This Early Morning With The Lord....

i tell her early this morning

' my dear, do not focus on your problems, they are the works of the devil'

' why not focus on the Lord, our God, for He is happiness, and Love and Goodness, and Peace? ' and she agreed, and so our mornings are happy ones, and we laugh and start doing all the good works again.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Early Morning With You Talking And Talking regret, it is with deep regret that i tell you that i regret sitting on this computer chair and facing the screen and i am here writing for you as you talk and talk and talk and talk like a quacking duck

oh Adam did not lay eggs, or have the temerity to hatch them and so the chickens came first how nice of you

regret that is all i feel now i could have gone out and take my walk
i could have read
the most wonderful poetry of the trail
the line of green mahogany trees blooming with their summer leaves the sun finally coming out with an array of clouds and white herons
gliding and landing on ricefields
and grasses creeping and covering the mud and the stones

indeed, it would have been lovelier that way
and i should have been happier
than simply sitting
and writing
and feeling
what poetry should not be
this early morning
with you

what a hell!

RIC S. BASTASA
This Early Morning./.....

this morning
thoughts come rushing
like
passengers of a train on a rush hour

yet everyone inside
either reads
a book

makes a blank stare
on the window

avoids seeing one
another

and no one is saying
a word
or two

it is like this
at this hour

i am in a journey
and i have no word to say to everyone i meet

we are on the same train of
silence
we adore silence
with all respect

RIC S. BASTASA
This Election Thing....

all the frogs
have always wanted
the white heron
to lead them

and for all these rainy seasons they chant and sing for their chosen leader

after six years or so the singing lessens
both in prosody and timbre

there will be a lesser number of them now
and they wonder where the others are

for the rain have been long and strong and the floods come and

the great heron and all the other herons have all become fat, lazy and too greedy

and all the good frogs still
do nothing....

RIC S. BASTASA
This Evening

this evening is another lovely evening i see stars. i think of some memories. sticky ones. sweet ones. mouthwatering ones between us. in the room dim and cold. warmed by our two s. hugs. touches. caresses. whispers. indeed, this is a lovely evening.
i have a glass of mild wine in my hand. an orange. an apple. some spices of mint and chili. to make me feel hot on this lovely, cold night. the wind blows from the sea. i hear the waves. but they are sounding so gently reminding of a boat where we ride. kisses. hugs. touches. caresses. whispers. making love. the boat stopped in the middle of the ocean.
both of us.
indeed this is a lovely evening. i have another glass of wine. an orange.
some chili. some pepper.
i like it hot. these memories. i have your picture in my hand. your last letter. i have the picture of you and your husband. and your children. they all have grown up. your daughter looks just like you. some smiles. hugs. kisses.
embraces. your family on your last wedding anniversary. in maryland.

indeed this is a lovely evening. an honest one.
everything is accepted. everything is true. and i wish you all the happiness.
for indeed this is a lovely evening. with myself. still strong as ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Ever Foolish Fool...

it is not the body
that i see,
its form and lines
and flesh of hills and
mountains

it is that which makes me remember you
in it,

that makes me love
again,

it is not that body
of the other,
but the memory of you
in it,
that makes me live some
more....

for now i see you in everything, in every shape in every form
in every color and in every fading....

i forgive myself.
this fool.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Ever Lasting Void Which Makes Us Do What We Still Do Not Know

we are looking for goodness and kindness in the body of another who thinks that a hand is out of the sharing the hair exclusive for her head and those thighs are only for display those feet serve nothing but locomotion. Yet everyone demands kindness which everyone does not give.

i would have asked for a kiss but your eyes flame in anger, your fingers close, your lips are bitten by your own teeth.

were these signs of an unhappy childhood? was there trauma still hiding inside those layers of molestation?

if you have only seen how the birds fly and live in those forest ways if you have only felt the freedom of the blood inside your veins
you could have learned to give love even if you do not feel like giving it you could have seen how distress strikes in the eyes of the other
meanwhile the dogs
are howling because you closed the gate
taking their madness to the moon till noon

i've seen rivers
i've seen skies
i feel a free universe floating in a never ending space

it is this smallness that is still unable to contain all these joys these fears
this ever lasting void
which makes us do what we still do not know

RIC S. BASTASA
This Facebook Reality

Oh, how people post their happy faces

happy families, healthy bodies, promising careers, everything good is on Facebook

and you begin to fear about your own health your own life
and your worsening condition
your fading career

oh, know the truth
they're struggling too
to keep up with lies you can just surmise.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Feeling That Keeps On Coming...

the shrinking happens you cut a story, you sharpen a bolo, you say no to some friends, refuse some invitations, you prune a tree, you clip a note, you turn off light,
you shorten a pole,
you put a dead-end to your alley,
you say, it is enough,
you tell them, there is something wrong with the system, and the world knows it literally, the best is yet to come, that sense of pride is evil to some,
who is there? ah, a mediocre, a monkey eating its own tail, why are they clapping? there is no one there, it is only a show of rain, it stops, and the forest is at its silence again.

you tell a friend, ' do you like this? '
yet he does not see what you are actually holding.

it is like shedding leaves, you feel like a tree wanting to set free all that is attached to you, you let them do the cutting of twigs, until what remains in you is the root, nothing but roots all these, the passers-by never see to that dying tree...

what is this feeling all about?

it is like going back to the seed form to find the essence of yourself.

It is necessary.
One has to grow
from the basics again...

one shies away from the show of the clouds from the blinking stars, one goes inside, like an urchin back to the sea,
down to its depth.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Fun

it's fun
in fact it's more fun
being here

i am thinking
a lot

about people that i've met
that i barely know

there are only glimpses
outlines of their lives in such a short conversation

it makes me feel so elated
comforting me that i am not alone
in this...
say,

sorrow joy
sweet-sour memories
like fish and sauce
on a platter

this fun thing
it's more fun really on these islands

i am taking more hours of my life
on the plane

hopping from one island
to another
threshing out stories of real people
that i met
and talk with in such a short
witting hours

i do not care
anymore
if what they are telling are true

does not really matter
sort of
short stories themselves that they are weaving
like spiders
in the far corners of the cities

it's more fun
to be frank with you

merely listening
somehow
the words that travel in my ears make my senses full

i am not alone
all of them
are telling me

this world is a place of stories
sounds and colors

it is real
they are all telling me

how come
that i did not really know that?
must i be dumb?
or was i just sleeping for all those years or simply pretending to know a lot from books and pages of the newspapers

i am seeing a big river i put myself inside a wooden boat take the paddle
and start my way
in the water

i stop a while to touch the ripples

and then
we are going

into something that we have never know

under the moon
my shadow speaks

RIC S. BASTASA
This Game

this game of doubting
sleep
whether you are the butterfly inside your dream or the dream inside a butterfly
whether it is you dreaming about a butterfly or the butterfly dreaming about you

this game of the mind flowering
wonders
fluttering sighs

we like it
we do not want this game stopped because for the meantime they make this stay memorable, dream and reality tugging like a game

on the beach one summer you and i, this dream and this reality time and sleep

bosom and blossom
measure for measure

drag and lag

RIC S. BASTASA
This Gift Of Independence

think of the happiest Christmas you ever had,

it was when you were once a child, sitting on Santa's lap, and he told you you were such a good child, and that you deserved all the gifts you received as rewards of an obedient servant

think about it and then compare what you are now, one, who just had his own wings flapping in the air

of your own
confidence,

you dive at sea, somewhere in the pacific it is all sea,
no island, even a shadow of land,
nothing

and your wings are tired and it will be Christmas,
tomorrow,

this is what you get for getting away from society

an ocean
and sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Girl
	his is the girl
that you kissed ten years ago she was touched and now that she has grown into a woman she comes to ask for your name and plans her own revenge

she wants more from you something real and true and as beautiful when once you kissed her when you thought she never had a seed of feeling inside the heart of the girl did grow the flower that bloomed and now wilting

RIC S. BASTASA
This Goldfish In A Small Bowl For An Aquarium...

at 34 degrees
summer comes here

the roads are fuming
like hot rods
of a machine

it is making flints
with the metal of the shoes the city people abandon their small rooms for a beach in the village white sands, and cool shades of the palms

i stay here writing a poem
like a goldfish lurking
in an aquarium

it is cool here in my little world
of silence.

i shut out with a glass wall buffered by a bowl of water

when i speak
it is only me who hears
it.

i bubble
with happiness.
This Heart.......Right Here Within

if you look for happiness you cannot find it
it is not something to reach for it is not far away like a star like an ocean it is just right here inside this heart that loves and opens and gives and hugs
and beats and sings.....

RIC S. BASTASA
This House This Home

in this house the music of the night is the soft rain from the sky falling upon the grass like tiptoeing mothers watching their young children sleeping and kissing their foreheads there is no burning fire here from wood and there is no smoke from a cigarette it is dark as usual but it is desirable even darker as there are no stars tonight

i am not sad
i am at home with myself in this house i hear the symphony of winds and whispers from the leaves of trees and the chants of earthworms it is cold and so i have closed all the windows and doors & then i curl beneath my blanket of roses

RIC S. BASTASA
This I Do Not Care Attitude.......

i received your text
' you and your family is in the airport waiting for the flight back home'

'sorry, we were not able to talk last night, we could have discussed the future of Pluto.' a braggart.

in my state now, a graduate of grief, i do not really care.
To every event, whatever that is,
be it your death or resurrection, i am not really interested.

i heard the same statement from my wife. She is also not interested.
Hell is other people. They have become walls where i bang my car, my head, my existence.

I am not interested anymore about death, or the death of other people.
The death of loved ones already occurred many times, and i am actually numb, for all these nonsense.

Goodbye, take care. If your plane crashes, let me say, oh, i am sorry. Death as usual is a big surprise, preemptively.

RIC S. BASTASA
This I Tell With A Sigh

THERE IS a name
alright
they baptize us with a name
we had no choice the but to be born
and then die
if we must even if we do not allow it but in between this spaciousness
of life and death
there is an existence of myriad possibilities that give us a sense of freedom
i am at this place
now
thrown in this situation and i am doing most of what i can to call myself free
tomorrow when the same sun that set rises again
i proclaim without timidity
that i am still here with all my options

to live and to live again never to choose death that kills
all my possibilities
the door that closes in saying that it will open
again
but you see it is different there altogether

dthis is it
i must devour all
to be whole again
to keep the pieces intact
within my soul

RIC S. BASTASA
This I Will Say Unto You

we need a walk
early morning under the woods

we need to swim
and free our body
with toxins

we need a friend to share our stories to comment on our poems

is this not a beautiful world to live in?
how beautiful and warm is the sunshine!
how cool the winds that touch on our skin!

RIC S. BASTASA
This Indestructible Faith.

then they will take our land
what our ancestors planted have already borne the desired
fruits which we cannot harvest anymore

when these are taken away to be given to the lazy tribes of Tapolandia
we comfort ourselves it is just land anyway and we are hardworking and can thrive on other equally rewarding evergeavors

our ancestors are angry but they are too
dead.

well we comfort again our incoming generations that was just land with diminishing returns
we are here
on temporary basis
and hence must not feel the grief

now what is the measure of our true worth?
you say it is money
the other one says a high government position shares of stocks
investments
gratuities and insurance

well, you must know it is this soul, this independent mind this God, this indestructible faith.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is A Boat

this is a boat and it is in my hand the hand is the sea and my fingers keep it wavy this is the boat and it is wooden and it is loaded unevenly on its left side and so it leans on the heavy edge like it is a man with a shorter left foot and walks like the floor is uneven

and imperfect

this is my body and it has become an ocean and the boat sails on without the sun my eyes the moon and stars and they are closed

this is the darkness where the boat sails and this is the silence of its journey

this is my mind
and everything: the boat, the sea, the ocean the tilting, the weight of the load, things exist because i let them so this is my hand and this is the sea of waves these emotions

this is the mouth speaking without any sense at all like a woman nude running for life away from the atomic bomb

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is A Discovery

i may not tell you
that in this island where i take my long walks in the morning, i discover something nice,

i am at home with myself and i am happy seeing the vastness
of the white sands

white cotton clouds resting on high cliffs trees on top and birds and a light tower

i think of myself
as another island now.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is A Funny Poem

HA HA HA HA
HA HA HA HA

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is A Lonely Day....

this is my lonely day

at the back
of this house
is a clothesline

three long sleeves
hang there to dry

the rain pours
heavily

the sky is not giving any sign

for the sun to appear

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is A Picture Of Me

it is your body
that makes a steel feeling of my drifting presence

i become present totally beneath you

when i see the wetness of your hair i feel the earth and grass inside me there is rain in my head there is mud on my feet

do not walk away yet i still have many items to offer

there is fire in my eyes there is a commotion in my belly i love to dance with you in my life
tonight

no, nothing is eternal

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is A Rush

this poem is a rush
it is meant to be made in a rush in fact in a second because dinner is served and i have become a very hungry man thinking about you and him on that faraway island where love was born between you and him

i said i love you,
i am not meant for you

it is this dinner, that she has prepared for me. now we are at peace
and i shall be in her love kitchen forever.

i think it is but fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is All About An Expression The Main Ingredient Is Freedom.

This is all about an expression the main ingredient is freedom.

everyday birds land in your hair.
eggs are are the nest.

sometimes a lion takes a bite at you.
One rib is missing. Pain takes residence.

there is a day of a miracle.
There is a window in your eye.
Light has wings. It hovers in your eyelashes. You blink.

on one sunday, you are a blank sheet of paper. you are the old man waiting for a final pronouncement.
A funeral passes by you and you are sitting by the window.

Thursdays are the usual throwbacks.
You open a box of black and white pictures.
You cannot help. You cry alone.

there are days however, as loneliness can also be so boring, that you feel that you are a fountain of water.
You surge. Children stop by and want to touch the drops you make in the park. You can hear the songs of their laughter.

so many events. so many people.

that is why, this is all about an expression & the main ingredient is freedom.
This Is All About Like

the world where we live, and which we say we love is all about like, we operate on the likeness and the unlikeness of it all, forest like an emerald crown of the head
of the mountain
love like ruby ring in my finger
death like sunset fading into darkness
life like bursting waves in the sea
birth like a tight rose bud unfolding to the
sun
and growth like dough becoming bread on yeast like cocoons to butterflies we go and fly

to the next level of our
existence

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is All About Us, Our Beings Lost, Dissipated

the ideas come and they do not wait. they enter your door and they do not knock.
they leave without any permission from your house. they have colored wings and they simply fly away upon their liking.

they are so beautiful and deep and glistening.
enlightening and you miss them now you sit there, speechless on the blankness of your world. why did you not write when they were here beautifully dancing and singing?

you know how is it with the clouds the more with air
and mists

they always change and they do it as quickly as a wink

you know what clouds do the form upon you some stories the rainy ones sometimes and you shed tears in the same manner with the air and mists the air passes and sometimes you do not even feel it and so you miss the story that it is bringing the story of a journey into somewhere

and the mists bring you some notes about what to do in the darkness of the night yet you tarry on the grass and on the side of the hill you miss the essence of our beings we are ghosts and we do not know where we are hidden.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Art, This Is Love, This Is Desire... here is no race
and there is nothing to chase nothing to work for nothing to cope up
it is this love for art itself that pleases that works for itself
the colors blend
the shapes shaping
you look at this canvass this sheet
and you begin to fill each with love and candor desire which has become insatiable
there is no ambition nothing to please for the stars above the trees
the skies and seas
wings of birds and fins of fishes man's hair, woman's breasts fragile hands of children horses fast the meadows cows grazing on the grasses on plains and valleys where is the race? who is being chased?
no one. This is art, This is love.
Desire always insatiable.

who is tired? the dancers never raise an arm.
The painters never say a word.
The poets keep the words which tomorrow may, if it loves to,
may utter.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Happening

this is happening now your eyes stare in an open field burning like newsprint it happens as duly predicted from this room the spilt milk cries all day
the cows are disturbed and moving away to the other greener pastures the avid listener fed up and stands to walk away the cabinet full of unhappiness comes into the open

you pretend you are sleeping

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Home Now

it would have been simpler
like a spoke
to a wheel like
a needle to its eye to its thread
to the mending
of a cut
a mess

but it is you who made it complicate so so complicated
that reality has become a bird chasing
its own wings
a dog trying to catch up its tail
a body
wanting to be a mere shadow how many moons do you really want?

why think of another planet?

dthis is home now.
supper is ready.
we all waited for you.
please, please be comfortable.

even if you have forgotten our names please, please take your time.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Home Now (Revised)

it would have been simpler
like a spoke
to a wheel like
a needle to
its eye to its thread
to the mending
of a cut
a mess

but it is you who made it complicated
so so complicated
that reality has become a bird chasing
its own wings
a dog trying to catch up its tail
a body
wanting to be a mere shadow

how many moons do you really want?
why think of another planet?

this is home now.
supper is ready.
we all waited for you.
please, please be comfortable.

even if you have forgotten our names
please, please take your time.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Home- This Is My Home (A Mantra)

this is home
i chant this is home
i repeat it many times
this is home
i clasp my hands and open them in prayer and then i rest my hands on my chest and keep on repeating
i am home i am home

and then i fall asleep
for this is home this, quite, i call home, this self steady upon this quite, this quite,
this home.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is How Life Is Lived

you may think that an ant
is not that important
small as it is
and soundless until it bites you as you step upon its hill and then reinforcing more your belief of its insignificance you crush it at once smashing its body with your fingertip

and you move on with your life doing what has to be done forgetting the bite of the ant
and feeling nothing

in here guilt is killed and a conclusion is made this is how life is lived

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is How To Survive Life....

focus on yourself
you are a planet spin your own axis
make your own kind
of revolution, ...

then move with all of them as one
galaxy in diversity.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is It, This Must Be

in looking for the gates of heaven i find myself in the room of hell in looking for myself i find nothing within me i pass through all fires heating and charring me but i know the reason for all these i know i had always been nothing but dust charred, cold, and flat on the ground i am and will always be dust to the gates of heaven, i rise myself from dust i am blown by the mercies of God's breaths

His grace his kind arms lifting me up molded again to the shape of the angel back to where i must be and must become and then to his arms i am finally rested.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Just A Hobby

this is just a hobby
pure fun, nothing serious, just a game i play
after a hard day's work, sweating my body, purging all my intellectual juices out to save a life, to free those who are detained without just cause,

this is just a variation of the monotony, it surges, but i keep it stable, still like a wind that i invite inside my room and then i close the window to hear a buzzing sound of consistency,

this is nothing but a sigh, a snore, after a heavy meal, in bed, silenced, finally, plunging into a world of dreams.

this is but a dream, and everything is allowed here.
no rules, all colors, all strokes, this is but a sideline, no money involved, nothing bread-like or buttered,

this is but the time in between the serious muddle.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Just An Exercise

this poem
is a morning poem

i write it when the sun begins to peep between the two hills where my house stands

i write it when the dews are still alive
glistening with life on the green leaves on the white petals
of the flowers

i write it when the birds start to chirp
and in flocks start to leave the trees
where they sleep for the whole dark night

oh, this poem is nothing it is just an idea just an exercise of the mind
this morning

just to assure myself that i am still a rational being in touch with art honored to the skills
of humanity

oh, this is just nothing but a prelude to my day
a day
when we wish
we are not thinking at all

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Just Nothing

he said they were together for days on the island of their desires
just the two of them enjoying the nights there as lovers

she said she remembered all those lovely nights with him her hair watered by his kisses his weight all over her and she was helplessly
in love

he said she was part of his past now that he is old and ugly
and helpless in poverty with another woman caring for him
and a child to be cared by him alone
as he is weak
and dying

she said she had forgotten him her first love
she said she lives alone in a wintry land and knows how to take care of herself she said she is happy and now so free

i told her things may be lost and people may be hurt but chances are there are rainbows sometimes that reconnect hearts bridges that dissolves distances i told her that some missing pieces are found some chains of love become a necklace of reunions and reconciliations

i did not tell her though because it is so hurting
that he did not really love her that whole and true when he made love to her on that island of desire he was thinking of another one his true love that once broke his heart many years ago when once he was whole and true and young and honest and real

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Just One Of Those Places

the pond is gone what took place was a change that replaced it with concrete pavements

the lanzones trees totally vanished
i can still hear the cutting machines shouting victory for change what the sowed instead are low cost houses
thriving like mushrooms

this is just one of those places that the heart wants to remember but who cares?

many may not have known that from the heart of this ruined place once bore the great writer and poetess when once a child she bathed in that pond gathered ripe guavas from those trees rested under the shade of the mabolo tree

composed the great lines that we still love to read till these days of our great depression many will not remember anymore but once there were dwellers here in peace and harmony with nature and themselves

oh, all of them have gone to other places and we who have turned to stone have no way of finding once again their traces.
This Is Life

we leave not because there are reasons departures are silent most of the time they do not speak like storms they are like lovers more like dust on the railways blown away simply because the wind always comes simply because the wind exists and winds by their nature do not stop to blow away what is there that settles but never never permanently

this is life this is the wind

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Love

iths si ovel
levo si sith
tihs is voel

ok...

love is really hard to spel....

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Mumbling This Is Rambling

do not care to read me carefully, just skim over some words that may call your preferential attention. do not mind the smaller ideas, or the images that you find hard to imagine. They may not be images after all but just blotches of my stains, the negligence of my trembling fingers, the lapses of my brains, the slip of my tongues, the cliches of humanity, seeking meaning in the meaninglessness of words.

don’t ever mind what i am writing. this is not about you. or myself, or the society that like sheep simply graze on the grass not knowing that on the next step is the landmine that kills them, or why look for the meaning of loneliness in words or lines or poetry.
are you going home tonight? on a train. sit there. look over the window. see the line of trees, do they shout at you? No.
and move your eyes, as though you are scrolling for names on the cell phone, like roving camera, you do not have to look that far on the 20th person sitting across the other side.

someone is sitting next to you. listen to his silence.
feel the vibrations of all his problems. try to unmask the cover of his face.
are there words covering his face? none.

or if words cover his face and body, try reading them all silently. most of the truths are not said. Not even written. You always see them next to you. Be it on the train, the bus or the plane. Or simply when you walk along the cemented paths of the park. Here comes another lost soul. Talk to him. Do not write poetry.

don’t speak poetry.
write them and let them cover your face. That is the best way to speak.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Must Ask Of You do not try to be too near my breath is warm and acrid and acidic it is so dangerous just like the mind of this wounded man, whose dreams are buried in his heart, unfulfilled, untouched,

for many many years in the silence of the desert in the dryness of the sand under the fury of the sun please do not try to listen to the sounds of dreams exploding!

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is My Body

This is my body that you see It is beautiful carved by God’s hands Smoothened by His breaths

You will love it and want to have it To touch and caress
To be feasted upon by the hunger
Of your eyes and thirst of your lips To be rubbed by the coldness of your body Seeking the warmth of my flesh

This is my body that you will first see But there is more in me than my body This soul that seeks your soul This beautiful soul that seeks the beauty of your soul
The hands of my spirit reaching out to your invisible hands They have all for years been longing to clasp My soul longing to be with your soul So they can be together To be fused with each other as one To be happy and calm and perfect To that final place where this body Shies away because something more beautiful Inside it shines and glows and becomes So beautiful in all eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is My Hiding Place

as a child i was hurt hurt so deeply with nowhere to tell how hurt i was once with no other place to bury my tears to shout my fears there were no skies above me there was no moon to confide there were only walls

i have grown up through layers and layers of silence thick silence thicker than the earth of million years strong and big and always keen and piercing the walls that i have been used to i have seen more about life's pains and felt the dangers that i have escaped and survived i have become a man and found this hiding place

my poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is My Life

Life defines in Metabolism, In reproduction,
we make our miniature selves, our look alike
In the power of adaptation,
like what is in now, What is fashionable,
how I blend with all of you How I mimic you,
how I become a clown to you,

Life in being nice
This is my life A short and a merry one This my life In the middle of my own life To life,
a life,
in the hope of discovering the meaning of my life, My speech my poetry
Come to life with me To the life,
for the life of one like me,
Not taking this life in my own hands, Never,
never,
To life,
this is life
As big as life
as large as life is large In resiliency,
in elasticity Animations, cartooning, animate,
I vivify
I vilify
I quicken
I liken
The life force in my life’s functions Drawn from life to life drawn Dream to life a life full of dreams

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
This liveliness, this sparkle This effervescence of life, this bubbling life like wine This sprightliness like soft Drink like energy drinks This verve,
this vigor
this vivacity
Of life to life as big as life
My life
This is my life
This me I am life
I am energy
i am in this poem trying to run away from everything in my life, running in life
to life and life,
because of life,
for life.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is My Life (2)

ON the bed of roses
On the floor of thorns

Under the sun of caresses On the pathway of splinters

This is my Life
And I am living it.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is My Naked Self

this is my naked self
what you are seeing is my naked truth i am not ashamed of my flesh and body you desire it
you touch it
let my senses live wake me up with the slightest kindness of your touch

this is my naked self
i am seated beside the open shutters of my green bay window little touches of light from the early morning light sketch my shadow
i am here
long waiting for you just you my love my only love

kiss me
touch me
let me live for another day

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is My Voice

This is my voice,
Sad, prolonged, fever pitched,
With some intermittent turbulence In between a concentrated discourse
But
Still in a slow, smooth, sailing like A canoe on a very clear silent running river
And
Some rapids, and rocks somewhere, may distort, This voice
Of mine,
Or
At the edge for which a waterfall rages,
This Voice
Of Mine,
May sound like a violent fall of a hundred heavy waters,
Not a drip, but a hundred heavy, heavy falling waters, As though the whole word is falling down On your Shoulder,
This is my voice, sad, on a prolonged agony, But somehow, when tickled may move into A mystery, not discounting the possibility of An ecstasy,
A fantasy,
And you, my love, my beautiful reader, may hear this voice Speaking to you in a hush of silence,
This is my voice; hear it for what it is, that is all that I ask of you,
I am myself speaking. I am real, this voice of mine.
Listen to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
This is my world, small as it is,
It is a planet by itself with very Small moons, and tiny stars,
And so tiny, you cannot just See me there, I am hiding,
But I still live here just the same,
Breathing atomic air, and drinking Molecular waters, so you see,
How tiny I could be, how tiny I could get, but this is my Small happy world, my smile
My laughter so tiny, that you Cannot hear, you cannot feel,

And that is your world as big
As the sun, with comets and Meteors, and so big and so Wide, with oceans and rivers,
And continents, and gigantic Arctics, and snowy lands, and We are then so different, and
With me, there is no problem,
I, in my small world, can fit In yours, but you, you cannot Fit in mine, that we must Accept, I am a small world,
And you are a space still expanding, Now, do you understand,
why I hide?
why I shy away from you?

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Not A Case
well, let me be frank
like the sun
oh what about the sun
what's the sun got to do with us
or this this is not a case of a poetic exploration
neither is it an exploitation nor a molestation of any metaphoric experience this is a cause of slaughter i won't tell you it is a crime that you have done against me
you rob me of my heart you suck my blood like a vampire heartbreaker!

RIC S. BASTASA
time marks me
i am 11: 40
nearing midnight
and i am no
prince and she is not Cinderella
i have no palace
no father as king
and she has no fairy godmother
this is not a tale of love
this is
a madness in
time
when sleeping seems to be a burden
because you are simply not enough for yourself
there is more
to words
more to poetry but look at you
madman
with blue eyes
the blue of a fistfight
the fight of meaning
the clash of time
and humanity
where death is uninvited
where life is a must
but what for?
what for?

no answer.

even my wife
is angry
impatient restless
for i am nowhere
to be loved.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Not Home...

there is really something wrong a hand misplaced in the ear a head below the right foot there is a wrong note in the song

the ear is about to go crazy

something is missing
we know it
the good man is in prison no one minds

the hammer falls on the wrong corner of this building one sleeps soundly mistaken as another dead bully there is really something wrong here but i do not mind it anymore there is nothing to understand this is not my place and i am bound for another train tomorrow.

i do not mind, this is not home.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Not The Pipe....

this is not a pipe.
i know. it is just a picture of a pipe.
there are two pipes here.
one which you have kept and the other which you have shown.
you have shown what is not a pipe.
it is another world of this pipe.
we who are tired of real pipes and you who still make the most smoke of that hidden pipe.
we who want to take hope back to our nose, and our tongues, take what is not a pipe. What is real to us now is that which is not a pipe.
we shall survive.
we travel inside us and we shall not be
lost.
we will survive.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Only The Beginning

when steps proceed to another journey making marks on the shore the sands are not without understanding what is happening to the waves and the pebbles
the waves arrive on an infinite folding and unfolding on such a monotonous acrobatic of foam and air and hush and push coming back and going away i have the courage to say well, what could all these be but always beginnings...i have not seen any ending at all, where?

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Poetry

leaves of jack fruit like operatic singers their lips singing the song of the wind

sun, moon, and stars steady not on your canvass rivers flowing and when you touch them they are wet you.

not the cheese inside the toilet bowl
not the sound of flushes not the odor that kills the sensibility of art and beauty

not spoons on poos
not forks on fecal matters the mockery of poetry holy mackerel, you love it still

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Pure Fun, A Play, A Dollhouse, A Stack Of Cards

nothing serious, no one dies seriously in this war of words, not really, just plain clean healthy fun, a mahjong game, pong and ping, a ping pong ball thrown to the twilight zone, a dot dissolving in air, and yes, the full moon, and the hide and seek of the trees, pulling seams and putting back the dresses caresses and buttresses no murder here, just plain, clean healthy fun pun, and wits and not tumors, humors, not tremorous but fabulous, marvelous, garrolous, just plain, clean, healthy fun no offense, no malice, no pubic hairs, i like your dollhouse, the dolll has wavy eyelashes, and her panty is clean and neat and white, i like the stack of cards, and the tarot and the cubes, the dice of my luck.
just pure fun really, we say, we choose happiness, and desire and shall i say lust? skip it. this is pure fun, clean and healty and wise.
the birds recite the prayers. the worms their novenas.
the frogs the hymns of paradise, the fishes spotted are all chanting praises, basically gregorian.

a dollhouse, a dole out, layers of dresses. it is so hot and so warm she goes out to breather some air. there is so much dressing the lettuce leaves are buried six feet below the main dish.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is The Game We Play

we have letters, we spread them in our thoughts and we form words, sometimes we like these words to be not understood that so easily, to make a little suspense of our game of words, and we utter some words sometimes, so sweet sounding our saliva pours from our mouths, honey tasting words, a la black forest cakes, we go beyond eating and licking and savoring, we form words of love, (setting aside for a while the evident lust)
we play this game too well no one gets hurt plain sheets of white linen we spread our naked bodies we put words
using our tongues as hands cressing hands

this is just a game of words why do you palpitate that much?

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is The House Of My Father

The termites eat every wall
The beams fall
And the roofs shatter
And the ceiling splits with the gutter

I come back today to remember
The past
And here I am to reconstruct better
The future i must

The present
Shall be this condiment this complement

Now, these hands shall be the hammer To every nail in the mind of this dreamer

This house shall stand again Proud against the wind & rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is The Mind Another Brother Always Preparing To Forget.

I am here
I have this body
This is my soul
Immersed

I am a soul
Bathing in the river
The river runs and runs
It seems endless

I am a body now Forgetting the soul
Because of time
& pain

The pleasures are pieces Simmering like trickles
Of light
Like soft needles of Rain

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is The Next Page

try again.
like you
i haven't marked
what the next page is

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is The Picture Of Us On The Hill his is the picture of us on the chocolate hills that was the time when we passed by Carmen you hugged me tight since it was raining very hard that month of June six years ago on Fridays the 13th.

i got no raincoat
and you got no black umbrella.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is The Politics In My Country....

every one is fond of puppets in a string, one master puppeteer throws mud to another master puppeteer a watcher never likes a puppet on a string and wants to see the face not of the prince puppet but the manipulator of the puppet behind a stage in the dark, no one likes to be a puppet, but everyone here is a puppet no one likes to be himself then but everyone here is themselves all puppets in a string the king that you see there has a puppeteer the king who loves a queen is not really the king but the puppeteer i like not to be anyone's puppet so you see listen to me, it is really really bad to simply be a poet.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is The Tree Where My Eyes Are Hanged.

10: 41

I mark this hour.

This is the tree
where my eyes
are hanged.

i mark this place.

There is no time here
There is a fish. No scales.
No bone.
No flesh either.
But i smell it just the same.

This is the fishy hour.
Where i speak about a rumor and it is all about
myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is The Village Of Happy Idiots....

the subject woke up
earlier
something unusual has happened

the object had gone to church for the morning mass

everything happens quickly between two subjects with which to keep the secret intact
no pronouns are used only verbs that do what they do inside
a locked room

the prayers are long
the sermon of the priest
even longer

when the object arrives everything is already set for a well arranged lie check the chairs

they are well placed in the order of their importance

the food is ready
on the table the scent of bacon and sunny side up eggs and steamed rice permeates the senses of the old room

in this village infidelity is the rule faithfulness is just another pretentious
story told by dirty old men to their hilarious servants

dirty linens should not be exposed under the glare of the mighty sun
keep your mouth shut and let the peace and harmony reign

this is the village of happy idiots....

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Think I Know that when you are holding a thread and you know that the end of the thread is this..

then you don't mind giving up everything whatever that was hidden a hundred fathoms down whatever was unsaid because you have been muted at the end of the last dot you don't mind who listens at you a priest or a prostitute a snail or a snake

you tell them all you let go what winged creature stays in the nest of your hair
and then
you smile

close your eyes
totally embrace the darkness and expect the meeting of another light

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is Third World Speaking....

the recent footage is shown while we were eating our usual breakfast of salted egg, ripe red tomatoes, steamed rice, hot coffee, and some slices of wheat bread and homemade cheese,

what we see is an explosion of light, things run away, black shadows scamper for safety, they do not really know where to go children are crying, mothers keep shelter, one human being explodes itself using the most common pharmaceutical drug as explosive,

we are warned about the images, but here, in this town which is sleepy like the islands, they just look at these things as mere stories, nothing to talk about, when i ask the driver, have you heard the news? have you seen it on tv?

and he answers, sir, i have no tv in my house, and there is no electricity,

the other one, perhaps has tv, and you ask, if he saw the sad news on tv last night, and he says, Sir, i work hard to earn a living i have three kids in school and my wife has no work,

this is third world, speaking.
and i am acting as mere reporter....without pay.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is What He Knew

this is what he knew:
his dad never slapped his mom never kicked her and never for once ever leave her he never spoke about the most sensitive issue about myself he never asked because it will be useless to look for answers that could just hurt both of them
his dad never disowned him and that really hurt her the most that when she died beside her is his dad and there was only this ocean of silence between them and he was at the middle looking at their faces
without really understanding the essence of truth

but this he knew later when his dad was dead and he also traveled on that ocean of
silence
a lonely boat
without a shore.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is What He Said...

der i am stuck bathing on the same river wading on the same
early morning water

thinking, thinking
exerting force without moving

t here is no distance covered

on such a work that is worthless

got the energy but there is no place for me

here, here is an earth
without a tree

here, here is a river without a ripple

there is a fish over there the only fish i see

i see, i see, it is floating it is bloating, it is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is What I Can Say....

when i climb uphill
you know what i do over there, when i go back to the plains and spend more time walking you mistake me for the flower gatherer
or the child at play cutting flowers and segregating petals
giving them to the blowing winds...

what matters to me is what you know but what matters most, is what you guess...

i am no flower gatherer.
i am no longer a child either.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is What I Really Mean

when i said to the wind do not enter and try this sordid game i did not mean that it must go away and leave me here

struggling for another breath grappling for something to hold a pole, a stalk, a twig, a tree imagining the beauty of the sea and a blue boat the sun at noon and the moon sickle on the sky why do you always misunderstand my quest for reaching something far away from me like a star so distant from my wishes?

when i said do not enter i mean it watch me and be with me do not touch me i am fragile as a new born rat pink and helpless and so lovely i should have told you i need you please stay and sing me again the silence of your dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
This Is What Life Is All About

In reality
things really are not that good

most of the time
there is no system
or order

for instance
you worry about a broken glass

or that the bed is in a disarray
as the pillow
is on the floor

the kitchen is a big mess catsup stains
the white cover
of the table

the cat is licking
milk from your morning cup

and the rat is taking the cheese
which you forgot
last evening

and there are so many more disorderly aspects
&
beyond all these little things
missing or broken
or destroyed and even forgotten

you regret being here and you want to be lost somewhere

you do not want to make any repairs
or amends
and you get sick
and you want to go on being sick
without going to the doctor or take the prescribed medication

but despite all these you begin to do the things ought to be done you follow procedures you invent a system

perhaps all these mess are not just yours but also include the rest of the world

and when you are gone they too shall feel the loss and grieve
for your unexpected
passing

at any rate you begin to clean and arrange messy things in your room in your bed
in the kitchen
and invent a system
and take a list of those missing ones

and then you get tired
and sleep,
and then you have so many dreams to recall
and tell your wife and
some friends,

this morning you make your own coffee and sit by the veranda
and look out to the sea

now, you think about
nothing at all
nothing about the mess

for this moment you are one with the world
and then with one sip
and another
you taste what coffee
is all about

you stand after a short while, and take a walk
and conclude that this is what is life all about....

RIC S. BASTASA
This Isn’t A Poem

how is life treating you is not the correct question rephrase it have it reformed into something more active and responsible as this:

how am i treating life?
it will make a difference
really

RIC S. BASTASA
This Kind Of Burying Feeling Without Having To Molest Others Of Their Precious Time

there is this feeling that i am a kind man for daily
i dig my own grave
with
poetry as my shovel and when it is deep enough (in fathom thoughts)
i without so much trouble simply stop
there
lay myself like a bundle of sticks or a bouquet of roses (if you want it beautifully put)
and i let gravity
do the trick
with soft soil falling upon me
and then
bury me absolutely like a logical
category.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Life

I
this life is a borrowed one i did not wish to be here and wan

II
but here i am just the same Let me not put myself in shame

From God I am sprung
And to God must I return not as dung

If I have not Loved You Who must I be? Duh?

RIC S. BASTASA
This Little, Short Journey....

at first we may like the show of human figures, the content of their dialogues, mostly arguments and reason, there is beauty and excitement in all these, we soon, get bored of these human bodies and their words, and sentences, we begin to like only their shadows against the walls inside the caves that we create for all of them then the shadows begin to fade, meanings diminished, we only like to hear the sound, after all, the sound of their fury, less their arms and heads, the sound of their joys, less the glasses and the wine, less the cigarette puffs, images of opulence and affluence, then we realize, we do not need the sounds of the outside world which we have already put in that little box. we only need a room with a window a view of the infinite space above us the sail boat within, the ferry without the machine, the last ride to the other border, the fog kissing the water.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Lonely Train....

into the clarity of dawn
alone
in this train of
thought
this stream of so much
subconsciousness,
enjoying the ride
of this illogical
journey
soundlessly on the tracks
of my convolutions..

RIC S. BASTASA
This Mask

this is the mask you love most and it is you who always ask me to wear it the happy face the look of a rich man to save you from your financial distress the look of desire to save you from loneliness the penetrating eyes lips hungry for your kisses smooth skin for you to feast upon in your caress i will wear this mask today and tomorrow i have nothing to hide i am honest and you have loved me inside this mask

how can i blame you? you also need to relax and feel life even for a moment of this illusion

anyway, reality is always there why bother

RIC S. BASTASA
This Moment In Time

moments come in an instant one click of a finger and then gone
irretrievable

that is why i grab it
and keep it
this moment
and with a snap of my finger too i let it go

it is not really mine
this moment
it is not yours

not for anyone
it is flash and it disappears and those who are sleepy

and tired
do not notice it

and if they ever they say it is a dream and they do not anymore remember

RIC S. BASTASA
This Morning

The hills are filled with daffodils

This morning

The sun shines

And the little boys

Black and white

And brown and yellow

Are playing

On the green patches of the fields

Catching butterflies

Meanwhile the snakes

Are watching
This Morning While I Was Standing By The Window

you step on the river once and twice
you go to and fro it like the pendulum of the clock you wish that the waters shall stay no they don't you wish to trap the wind within your hands inside your mouth

to keep things intact no you can't

nothing stays everything is in flux to make things saner
we go with the flow
the rising and ebbing
of the rides of life

we must belong to a memory to survive the hazards of constant departures

RIC S. BASTASA
This Morning....

light braves the shutters like knives stabbing whatever darkness was left under the bed behind the brown curtains my eyes shun
what glow comes from
outside
without the windows
fearing their own wooden frames
this is a bad day waking up at nine and not knowing what to really do.

RIC S. BASTASA
This My Papa Did.....

the old man
makes a choice leaves the city
and retreated to
the mountain
which once
gave him birth

he plants trees
raise pigs and chickens and buys a horse and builds
a small house
beside the foot of the hill

every morning
he gazes
at birds migrating leaving songs

the view of fog
and mountain peaks
make him feel so light

meals are simple
fish from the spring, bamboo shoots green leaves steamed rice
from the pot

now he discovers
a new reason
for living
away from the choking demands of the city
from all those
forgeries of living
now
into the honesty
of the wilderness
untouched by the fraud of what life had been

classic
this my Papa did.....

RIC S. BASTASA
This Mystery

it is easier to say what it is not than to say what it really is.

it is easier to tell your friend that a cat is not a dog and that a dog is not a gnat it is easier to say that i am not you and you are not me than to say who am i really for i the self is like the deepest ocean where i am the lone diver and have not really gone there myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Need For A Hiding Place

there is a need for a hiding place where you can keep yourself intact like the way you keep your old shoes which you reserve for future use hoping that someday you may change your mind and wear them on what occasion? there are coming events in your life, no, it has nothing with you wearing them, but them letting you wear them again, and they keep you hidden for a while,

thinking about redemption day, about an awakening, they think that you are asleep that you need a break in your life, like going away and then coming back, when?

who knows? someone will know and give you notices. They think you better be dead than alive than being angry or depressed.

and who decides that? oh, they know better, and so you go away, in another hiding place, where you can always wait and decide whether to see them again or not.

preferably, Not.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Nerve.....

oh, so here you are with a broken bone. do not tell you you broke the bone yourself for that is not true. they broke a bone and they are not returning it and you are not looking for it either.
for who needs bones these times of the year?

all the people leaving here are nice and soft deboned by the cruelty of the days, and living without a backbone is now the trend and who dares to wonder whether are still living or dead? ah, it is not impossible anymore to be famous and comfortable without any bone at all is this flesh, this mind, this heart (which has no bone in the first place) that gives us more reasons (now the heart reasons out as a new beginner)

more years shall be harsh and there will be more compliant minds, complacent hearts and ultimately, bones are useless, and must not be remembered anymore so this is a cartilage, this ear. so this is fluid, this tear so this is, watch out, too painful, this cut nerve....

RIC S. BASTASA
This New Year...

outside there will more explosions what they say, the evil spirits are driven away, by the bridge of our desires, colored lights and magnificent display shall all these fireworks achieve i will be inside the room with you not watching any TV

we love somehow, more than we they explode inside our hearts
we shall give more what July 4 can ever achieve.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Nothingness That Makes Us Full

the world grieves
for nothing

i work hard to an extent there are days which are so busy that i have no time to wash my face

or see myself in a mirror plaque builds up inside my gums my teeth feel like a rugged rock

i sweat
i am humid
most of the times
i hurt myself pushing it much like a dagger
to my own arm

and i know i get nothing for all these

it is indeed an honor when i finally get nothing back with me

for it is the essence of our existence this nothingness that shall make us full

RIC S. BASTASA
This One Instead

i wrote
a very short poem

and then
i deleted it

it is not
striking like lightning neither is it calming like moonlight

nor is it
of value like burger

so i deleted it,
and you got this one instead.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Picasso Imaginable Thing...

two faces of a woman

ah

picasso

mooo

ah

is that what it is pain and happiness?

wa ko kabalo ana

picasso has a painting of a woman with two faces I have seen Picasso's work.

Have you seen it?

Never realized that.

Yes, Cubism.

He explained that to me while we were in Barcelona, Spain.

(Har har har)

Hahahaha

Good one.

Poor bald Picasso.
travel jud ang mind 34 AM still having lots of erections despite his ugly legs 34 AM mao ba? 35 AM hoe did u know that/ 35 AM how 35 AM

the indefatigable picasso 35 AM wow 35 AM

we were in the brothels of paris with alexander pope hahaah

mahilig jud ang artist no honestly, i have the book

good

the writers in europe sometimes find themselfed in reunion and communion with whores and drink red whores beer together yes! Edgar Degas too

my fav
This Poem

this poem comes from a cold room popping out
from a worn-out
wall

do not read this poem aloud

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poem Assures You That....

this POEM is not a product of a philosophical quibbling not a part of guidance and counseling like what sometimes nagging mothers do not a scolding like what fathers do to their sons who are feeling lost and unwanted
this poem shall not ask you to confess your sins like what religions do calling for this and that for absolution and deliverance or purification
neither will this poem be a doctor giving you the cure for whatever sickness you have this poem when you read it till the last simply assures you that you are not alone when you read even if you do not try to understand there is this comfort that in our loneliness we are never alone

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poem Badly Needs A Title. Help!

oh yes, Mr. Shaun, the bible was not written in english but in aramaic, hebrew and greek now, let your big brother go, get him a free fish and ask him
why go for danger?
when the truth is
these unicorns are day dreamers going crazy about the daisy asking for compatibility wishing to hear the sound of my innocence see me? this soft and sensual mouth coated with chocolate taste, but go beyond what you can see there are hugs and kisses spare me, because i am your best friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poem Is Disturbed

it is written on a hungry stomach a gas-filled brain

it knows no law
it has only raw, cheap passion

it has but emptiness for a tutor.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poem Is For You Miss Sophisticated

this poem is for you miss sophisticated on stilleto shoes (is my spelling correct and how is my diction?)
and painted face fires of red and sparkling
diamonds all around your dress and expensive
perfume and branded gowns
that flow like a manmade waterfall

this poem
is bad, bad,
nothing
classy at all
for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poem Is For You, ... Forget Me?

you have that rose tattoo on your arm
there is a bleeding heart on the side and when we bathe in the sea the sun shines there and i imagine how things bleed and heal
and get immortalized somehow on your tattoo of love and hate and devotion and then gone for good

you like to retain somehow the lessons of the pain
the memories of the ecstasy and the moment of final separation

i told you last night when we made love i don't keep memories i let them drip like a rain in the gutter and they are kept better be in the canals buried deep inside the earth

i like to grow and touch the sun i am this flower that blooms only once and then die

i don't have a tattoo
i know what i am, i just pass by like a hush, like a sigh.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poem Is Just A Poem

This poem shall remember The port of Dumaguete
The gentle waves of the boulevard Where we once walked Under the moon and stars Where the wind was fresh and cool Where time was once eternal

To your children and husband And to my wife
And even to our friends This poem is nothing After all we never made it

But to me
This poem is more than significant This is a love poem
To be recited again
In Dumaguete

The moon and stars shining at night
And the waves of the sea Bouncing on the boulevard Still so excited

Like how I feel today as I write This poem

I am not sure Somehow somewhere
sometime
If it is still
With you

***********************
and if by chance
you read this do not blame me or anybody
or yourself

do not even blame the stars
they are just taking their own course

***************

this is nothing but just another poem, candice.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poem Is Just A Report About What Happened Here A Night Ago

and so this young man from the mountain arrives on an unholy hour of the night knocking at the door asking for the name of his sister, a housemaid of the family, he brings his eighteen year-old wife carrying a bundle of old clothes, and a baby still on its third month, it is raining, and they are all wet, the baby is crying hard looking for milk and warmth, and she lets them in at the backdoor near the kitchen, and i am on the second floor merely watching them in a hurry, loud words, blames, and cautions, the master may get angry at this unholy hour of the night, warm coffee and some left-over bread, bare hands they like it, chicken soup, and milk for the baby, and warm rags, i am watching them all from the second floor of this house just being this spectator, of a certain phenomenon, this poverty this unequal distribution of wealth, this inability of the state to provide education for its people, this unfairness of this universe, the lights in her room is finally turned off, the baby's cry dissolves in darkness. I do not think that the young malnourished couple still have sex in the middle of this heavy rain, so cold, so unholy, so unjust.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poem This Afternoon

this poem
has nothing much to give you some words discarded that i keep again

on this monitor

perhaps garbage
or dust or pieces of scratch papers,

but somehow
i go on writing,
without any purpose
at all

in mind, just to let the hours pass
by
the minutes wasted
for having to wait
on something else,
the next scene
another event
of my life
a meeting in another room
a riding of a vehicle to the city
and then
wait again for the students in the university

i talk much and write too little for hours and hours until it gets so dark at the late hour
of the night

and then i go home drive my car no talking now just paying attention
to the road
meeting my face

and the faint sound
of the aircon
of the car until i arrive on the side
of the house

the gate opens
i turn on the light and go inside the room
to sleep
on this chilly evening.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poetry

this poetry is a hiding place the only nook left for me running away from every creature of the party,

i take my time
and i do not really mind what i write
whether i rhyme

this is another monologue something i keep saying to myself how can i like this and that
how can i tell you
about what i want to say to you?
there is no way
no place no society
there is no other entrance or exit from these tangles and strangles

it is strange i mumble
i scramble and dabble talking to myself
and pleasing myself
this is my corner
i keep talking and talking you watch the tv series you cry alone and i do not mind if tears flood in this room this is my place this is my silence this is the poetry of escapism i assume the shape of the bird's wing i keep on flying without having to find any place any island any sea any shore the words keep coming, they do not go anywhere anyway, that is how it is intended to be nothing for nothing talking and talking somewhere everywhere alone and everybody

the rain pours heavily on me no one gets wet no one runs for shelter no one really cares halter swelter

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poetry, This Conversation

facing you i begin to say words,
this poetry,
this conversation, i do not really know what i'm gonna say i just keep on saying i never plan it and when i step outside the house to be with the clouds and the sea i get very silent

i do not know what to speak about anymore.
this poetry.
this conversation. this talk about
nothing at all.

whoever put the words into my mouth owes me an explanation tonight.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Poetry....Hence.

the problem is
we love much and we love more we still love those who lack those who fail us even those who infuriate us we want to correct a wrong we want to iron out a mess yet how can we be candid and hurt? how can we alienate those who we still desire to be with us?

hence this poetry, this metaphor this indirectness, this thing that we want understood but in some other compassionate form it is this mercy, this love that makes us create, makes us all weak, and still go on

waiting

we are one, we are still in the midst of this chaos those who are lost we still want
to find
and those who are angry we still want to appease

RIC S. BASTASA
This Puppy In My Heart

you have a bird in your heart wanting to fly you said you keep it closed your heart and you are too soft for that mine is a puppy

a black one, coy and gentle and wags its small, short tail always when i see it i open my heart and set it free
since then
i am so empty and as you see i become so tough since then

RIC S. BASTASA
This River

this river is a wide and long stretch of brown dreams it is silent its ripples are like moving threads it has a song of its own that only your heart can sing we sail this river again this ealy morning when the sun still hides itself in the nipa palms

we sit side by side as the boat takes its time we hold our hands we are still lovers throught the years we look forward to the same direction it will not take that long at the end we will see again the cascades we will hear the flow of the mountain springs we will again remember the harmony of what we once were do you hear that cascading song of the water? that is the song of the river that in my heart i always treasure together and forever we will cascade, my love, like this long, brown river to the sea of our daily affections

RIC S. BASTASA
This Self On The Other Side Of The River Without Any Tracks At All

to demonstrate diffusion a drop of ink is dropped in a beaker dark blue turns into light blue
slowly, the color turns pale and occupies the whole beaker like white smoke into a blue sky

what science is doing to us is to go into the predictability of a situation so that whatever happens again given the same situation we may react as expected thus avoiding danger and even foreclosing the possibility of loss and destruction

but that is not actually what we are going into we are more inclined to surprises the unpredictable the one that makes us live again as though we never knew what happens next

and i want it that way i want to live a life
do not predict me
i am into the metaphysical and i want to take you to something that i never know to someone that you have never touched before this self on the other side of the river without any tracks at all.
This Self This Home This Now.....

i know
with the thousands i
have you smirk
for at the end
i have none

not even a rubber band

not a hand or a finger

i know
now that you are gone
i have none.

it is better now
now that i have
really none

i am freed of
people
i broke the door
and all the windows
flown

it is home this self.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Sphinx Kind Of Love

to love you
is to keep a secret

a rose under the bed an unread letter under the carpet of the floor

to make you know it is to ruin myself to fulfill it is to die.

to explode like a grenade not to recover any of the splinters to love you is to deny myself to make you happy i must be gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Stone...

i am a stone
rub me i will give you
a flint,

takes time before we can make
fire

but rub me again you'll see
the burning bush in Sinai
sooner

RIC S. BASTASA
This Sunday

this Sunday i will be with Tony my cousin with one arm left, a machine ate his left arm, his wife left him and his only son does not recognize him anymore, oh, it's a sad story, and it's pity in real action, but i let him express himself, he is a good mountain walker.

this Sunday, we agreed on a trek in Tabon, where the trees are still trees.
The path is narrow, and the grasses are taller.

we do not hunt for birds, we simply watch them.
we do not speak that much we agreed to simply listen the sound of the forest wind the shadows of the hills cast by the setting sun the mud on our feet

the sweat on our brows

at night, when we are all alone we begin to tell our stories again those where wives are not interested to listen those which do not make husbands cry over a cup of hot coffee i recite a sad poem that i have not the courage to write for once.

now it is not about love it is more about death and revenge

Tony will like it.
This Surprise....

even if you are no longer here by my side
i still do what i think please you
my love
my darling
my valentine always for what you love
is always and will always be what i too love

your absence has become my eternal presence
your loss is my triumph you fading has become my sunshine

for this is it
i have learned how is it to be
just myself

with no one else i have learned this art of
survival

my duty my pleasure
my mission
to take this gift of life to unwrap and be
excited
with what is inside
this unknown this coming
this
surprise....

RIC S. BASTASA
This Surprise....(2)

even if you are no longer here
by my side
i still do what i think pleases you
my love
my darling
my valentine always
for what you love
is always and
will always be what
i too love

your absence has become my eternal presence
your loss is my triumph
you fading has become
my sunshine

for this is it
i have learned how is it to be
just myself

with no one else i have learned this art of
survival

my duty my pleasure
my mission
to take this gift of life
to unwrap and be
excited
with what is inside
this unknown this coming
this
surprise....

RIC S. BASTASA
This Thing Called Discrimination

it is when you walk together with someone you barely know towards a place where there is a door still closed to open at 9 a.m.
and both of you wait for the right hour and then the right hour comes and a strict lady opens the door carries a folder and calls out a name just her name and she smiles at her and she smiles at her too and then she lets her in and she looks at you

without any civility and she closes the door and you do not see anymore what is going inside the room something so private the door tells you that you feel the pain and yet you are not leaving still

i am telling you
you're the craziest Asian that i have ever known in this whole cruel white world.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Time The Heart Wins

there is a choice
between order and disorder when you enter a room
you just have to choose what door the mind knows what is good scaled to what is much better but it simply cannot decide about all these alone the heart is silent but when it is hurt
it screams the loudest like an ambulance
speeding its way to the hospital.

who does not want order?
who is the kind of creature that shuns peace?
who in this world does not want to be happy?

it tried to say that it is a decision
a choice
but what choices have i made so far?

where am i? this is not the place in my mind
the heart is laughing most of the times it lost but this time
it is winning.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Universe

this universe, my friend,
is nothing but myself,
you tell me once,
the universe is seen as a grain
of sand,
now, i am truly a grain of sand, not for the smallness of it or the numbness of the sandness of the sand,
nope, my friend, this universe
is nothing but myself,
when i go, it goes with me when i close my eyes everything disappears you must tell me that it shall remain as your universe
i shall understand

RIC S. BASTASA
This Vileness.......

the passion
that was just recently shown boils my blood evaporates my whole being into the open space of the room and hangs itself in the ceiling of this lettered
room
behaving like a bat
the point of view is that which turns this world upside
down

sometimes the slippers need it becoming not just shoes but bats

black reputation
infamy at its worst
this vileness in all of
us
always kept hidden
as though
a precious gem....

RIC S. BASTASA
This Void, This Sorrow....

ah, i know this
void,
it is here waiting only
to be filled,
ah, i know now more about this sorrow,
it is myself
for all these years
waiting for
you.

i have this candle
inside my heart
ready to be kindled
by you.

RIC S. BASTASA
This Was My Response

that the younger daughter of Xenon recently has been caught on video

sex scandal of some sort that made her drug addict father so mad

and that the mother was so embarrasses that she does not want to go to the market again the whole week Nena closed her door and sobbed

i am still wondering if i really like that fact, all i can say is this:

we are not supposed to intrude into the bedroom of other people it is none of our business and so we must shift the topic:

let us talk about how we can move on with our lives

it is 2012, and there is this Mangyan calendar and it will be weird and hmmm, not really that interesting end of the world again? shift topic, let us talk about money instead.

RIC S. BASTASA
This We Have To Know

we sow seeds
but we never come back for the future fruits,

that is not the reason for our sowing
we sow the seeds
as we travel along the paths of our pains

we may have sown
the confusion and those that follow us always wonder where we are heeding

we are heeding to a place we have never been to so how can we ever know oh, we too follow the beatings of our heart as we fall part by part as we keep on the start always carrying that dart

RIC S. BASTASA
This Will Be Another Boring Day

you wake up
with no one on your side it is still very dark as you open the window
you see
a garden with plants wilting not watered
you see stones
and a concrete fence
without vines

you wear your shorts put on your socks
and shoes
your sweat shirt
your first decision
this early morning
is to walk

you need to think things over about what to do best on this sort of, kind of, boring day.

RIC S. BASTASA
This World........Is Floody

i
in cagayan de oro
cars float on the flooded parking area of the mall and the people watch on the higher floor
wondering what's up with this world
for this is the first time that this happened
the cars look like toys taken away by the murky water towards the sea

ii
in Manukan the farmer is taking his pig out of the water the chickens fly away to the higher land
the houses though tied with a rope finaly give up with the rage of the waters the wife of the farmer wonders what's up with this world this is the first time that this is happening in their place

iii
in Roxas the people were rescued by boats from the high waters which already went above the rooftops they too wonder what is going with this world for this is the first time that this really happened? now i too wonder and ask if global warming is really fictitious?

last night we were not able to cross the road with such a flood.
First time too for such a road to become impassable.

No longer impossible. Really.
And i too wonder. What is up with this world?

RIC S. BASTASA
This You Must Know

dthis you must know

it is not just the feet below you it is not the face
not the eyes alone
but the soul

the memory
the touch that never leaves my skin
the scent
that will always remain

this you must feel for i am not just a body to you
i am a soul
to your finger tips
a word to your tongue and you must speak
even when i am gone

RIC S. BASTASA
This....
a mouth that thirsts
not for water
a heart that is hungry not for love
a stomach that does not murmur for food
a soul that thirsts
not for any heaven
a solitude that stays not in peace
a confusion that is not confused anymore a paradox made clear a conviction that fades
this war in peace this stability that scatters
itself
this mind that has become an eternal prison this escape that wants to run forever and still hoping to find the unfounded shelter this longing that remains without a name this name discarded this oblivion
that settles for a boundary
this and this
who knows
what man is?
or what god
was?
Thorns

to keep a rose garden
one must learn
to live
with
the thorns

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Hands Joining

Great grandma’s hands Grandma’s, mama’s,
sister's hands
Aunt’s and niece’s Hands, they join today

An epic telling the stories About touch, about prayer,
About reaching, about the years Of caressing and holding on To love, persevering and Resting the hands on the Hands of the other hands Those moments of silence When the hands speak more When the mouths accept
The loss of the power of words When even the hearts give in Because the hands are warmer And so comforting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Beautiful Things Inside Our Hearts

what are beautiful are those that still live within our hearts no matter how time attempts to get rid of them

the heart shall always be a basket full of those everlasting flowers!

these are the lightest things within us lighter as clouds that when we try to stand and walk we too begin to float

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Below Us
	here is only one possibility for those below us they go up the ladder of this illusion
and we who are up bears all the fears of going down the drain or if we are not vigilant at all resting on our laurels feasting with the angels soon we find ourselves
falling
finally crushed by the trains of our thoughts long insecure

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Better Years

the farm yielded
more than what the storehouse can ever hold

the mangoes ripen
with no one to pick them up

the birds feast on the grains and the butterflies feast on fruit juices dropping to the grassy ground

the rivers are clean crystal clear creeks
with fish teeming

the seas have white seagulls over them
the bottom all filled with corals and fish crowding

the crabs bite us when we pass the river
we never pick any

the geese abound
and no one uses a gun to kill anyone

there were no cities then no tyrants no conquerors there was peace
and progress

until the discoverers came and named our lands in the name of their king.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Born In Air

those born in air
have already mature wings and we who belong here below them have nothing but all feet that you scorn
were we to fly with those whom you admire
we shall regret
we are not meant for the air
we are meant just to be your ordinary brothers

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Burdens...

sometimes inside the hotel when you are with me and you open my bag and check on my necessities when i lay my body in bed and stare at the ceiling when the noise of little things can be heard as chatter and when you do not stop talking about us: our direction, future, visions and destinations etcetera....
i begin to think of regret having you all the way here sometimes, though i will not tell you, i miss my being alone with myself, without uttering any word and yet feeling so complete and relieved.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Changes Of The Heart

there is a better grip on all those that we have not seen

we hope for what is not yet here strange matters of these hands the past had always been different the future doubtful

what is here always teaches us mixed up, we cry we smile, sometimes we are frozen then thawed and so fluid then we are happy we are blinded moves on with nothing but feelings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Classical Ones

these are the bitter pills of our sad existence what sadness plus bitterness what existence is this but these classical ones the moment they are played at those times through the radio sets of our neighbors
as though the world stops revolving and flowers from the skies all petals fall
our bodies buried beneath them not dead but resurrected
our hands reach the stars and we become so alive like new sprouted beans offered by all the cracks of the dying earth

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Cold Hands

his hands are cold forget ice, it is inferior imagine the hands of the dead
touching you on one of those blackout nights at 3 a.m.
where silence is like
a stainless knife,

he feels death is near but he is arrogant
he has no fear for his heart is a drum
beating and beating memories of his sex-filled life the cat is inferior upon his shamelessness he will both die and not die he lives and that is for certain to the eyes of his unbroken seeds.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Cruel Days Of Our Youth

when we were children
when father beats us thinking that we become angels when thoroughly beaten and prides stepped upon we never really screamed neither did i remember that we went through an extreme silence for a long time as two or three hours since you must perhaps recall that we easily forgot the hurt and when father was gone looking for money we rose again from where we lurked and start to run into the playgrounds of our house and the neighborhood reunited with friends who climbed trees swim in rivers dove those cliffs splashing into deep seas bluer than clouds like slippery fish with scales as hard as turtles sooner did we realize that we carry the house of happiness on our backs like knapsacks ready, always ready to go somewhere else where we cannot be hurt where our prides are never never stepped upon and father was proud and then he died.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Days Of Grief

the heart is the moon on that night of my grief it is raining blood and i am under it
helpless and naked
foul and stinking but never dead....

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Dirty Minds

Those who think like everyone else comes with a definite conclusion that we could not have entered the room of the motel and then we chant the mysteries of the holy rosary honestly, you may not believe and we don't really care what we had was a very lively oral intercourse not what you have still in your dirty mind

Fools! we simply had the best conversation ever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Empty Hours

those are those when we want to make love and yet we do not dare touching each other when our elbows
touch and then when our skins start to have shivers
like a very cold night that spreads itself on the top of old and shiny wooden floors

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Empty People...

for in truth how can days be empty with the sun up high and grasses green below and clouds of blue
in between?

those hollow men
chests filled with air and words without clarity and direction words without meaning
spoken
without flesh and bones promises and promises nothing real shattered principles
broken glass

indeed there are only empty men speaking their empty words

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Failing Eyes.....

my fingers
have failed my eyes weary after too much scrutiny
over words and landscapes

too much watching
finally overlooks
the more important
thoughts

the child in you
is dying
wisdom comes forth in wrinkled states

black lines under the eyelids
vigilant hands still groping

tonight i am throwing
away
what you think you needed most which i think are not essential anymore

the night howls like a wolf
the rain drops like cats and dogs

the roof is strong and the house is unmoved by all these rattled emotions this earth, this sky that moonless night those stars gone by.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Feelings

i

the first exhilaration was when you were issued the visa. in your mind is 'America! America! ' here i come, 'America! ' as though you are going to heaven. the family butchers the 60-kilo pig and the whole village rejoice over your success.

America is your gateway to what you perceive as an escape from poverty. This country is a haven of corruption. This country is not offering you opportunities to rise to a higher level of existence.
The politicians here are good for nothing but promises.
You keep telling yourself. Patriotism is gone.

ii

Then you are in America. You have your first taste of snow inside your room.
Outside it is cold, and you begin to say, this is not what i dream about.
You are one of the jobless. You only fill in for work. Those who promised to help you avoid you. You have become another useless number in the world of perceived lock yourself. Money is hard to find here too.
The parties are not helpful hints about your quest for survival.
You go unhealthily surfing in the internet. No one remembers you.
No one is giving you. Everyone is asking for the money that you promise to send back home. Your mother is sick. Your father is a drunkard.
Your brother is a drug addict. Your sister is pregnant.

iii

Then you begin to feel so alone.
You begin to think about going home.
Back to your country.
It is what you miss. The simplicity of life there.
The sun. The rice field. The fishing on the picnic on the hills.
Under the mango tree. The bath in the river.
The Sunday gathering by the sea.
A game of chess with a friend at the plaza.
The Jaycee activities.
The novena of the Holy Rosary on Wednesdays.
Sunday church.
The loafing. The hammock tied between two coconut trees.
The song of the gentle waves. The coolness of the nipa hut.
The anchovies. Salted fish and raw mangoes.
Coconut vinegar and the raw fish. Chunks of tangigue.
The sweet smell of the pork adobo.
The humba. The rhumba and the tango and the boogie.

The humility of your people.
The carabao ride towards the mountain.
Your friendly tenants. The spring on top of Saluyong hills.
The tuba. Dakak beach and floating restos.

iv

the Dipolog airport is wide and long.
You hear the song of your going back home.
Soon. Soon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Few Weeks...

i may be a surprise
you seeing me strumming the strings of an old guitar and i shall not fail to remember on the first few weeks after our wedding day what a guitarist you are strumming my smooth and glossy guitar cautiously you made my my ribs sing as i trembled with all joy and perhaps you must remember too how i caressed your hair like i was finding some lyrics of my own song for you that night when the sky was young and the stars were newly born

ey were all flickering like some fireflies we must remember....

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Friends Of Yesteryears....

there are some friends of yesteryear
that you accidentally find in Facebook,
you are excited as if you miss them,
and you send a message of 'hi, how are you? '

there is no response,
you back out of course, not your type to push or force yourself on them
perhaps they think that you are lonely and want some company in that imagined
misery,

you are not, you are just
excited,

'hell! ' you say it again,
'hell is other people'.

and so you write poems
it is better this way
you touch no one and no one touches you
at least
on the personal level

you wonder
people have always some motives an agenda in mind thinking that if you greet them hello that you might take some parts of them with you selfish!
i am complete and had always been sufficient survived those college years without talking to anyone during breakfast
at the dorm's cafeteria.

it is better this way.
an island. NO boats allowed here.

From now on. I like doing it alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Gloria Days

People of the Philippines the Gloria Days are over Now it is Noynoy and Binay for a facelift and liposuction.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Good Works

it is the good decision the countryside
those works and not the words the silence and not
the fight
the arms that embrace not the mouth
that argues
it is not a question actually of winning or losing it is the making of the bridge between you and them
no one says who triumphs when the good is finally done

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Greater Ones

we do not compete
who is greater among us our shadows are the same they are black and moving trying to find the best light where they can be more like true shadows to reflect the truth about us
these bodies
trying to keep the comfort of
our souls

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Happy Bees

tyey wallow in the sweetness of their own honey

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Happy Flowers Along The Road

There are flowers along the road that i did not pick when i finally left farther than i think the flowers bloom from dusk till noon and then they wilt happily falling to the ground on that hazy afternoon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Happy Times

i agree with you Benny most of the happy moments we have are those outside the house when the big heads and the righteous old ones are not looking they were our prison guards and they were treating us like convicts of the crimes we did not commit but we maintained the silence because of the respect for old age not really wisdom

i agree the rivers and the seas know us better than there mouths
their beating hands
their gritting teeth cursing us the day we were born poor like they way they lived and survived their own wars their own fates
there was not attempt at all by them to learn to reconstruct old broken selves to heal old worn hearts to free the mind from those that fettered them their parents of course our grandparents as we call them those insensitive looks those shoulders as broad as their indifference that was the farthest place we lived once we live with i am sure of myself

i am liberated
i have freed my minds from the shackles of poverty and prejudices

i am sure
indeed i am sure i cannot live there anymore and coming back to me would be murder as mortal as death as crazy as suicide

well we can send them letters or emails
we can send them chain letters and pictures of saints or the Pope or Mother Teresa
but i guess with their senile minds and cracked bones

everything is now too late it is dark
and remember
we were children once and they never let us play

under the full moon
when the stars glitter when we first learn the magic of imagination when the air was fresh when romance first showed under the bush
when it rains and then we do not run back for shelter when we dance and laugh and chase dreams and ambitions
images and colors rainbows and bridges fairies and kingdoms...

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Helpless Epitaphs

know well these:
not all days are sunny
sun does not say sorry

if you love the rain it will not come again sometimes life does not run as expected

it walks slowly
and then it stops
why life stops
of course they grieve

but know this the grief is not prolonged the next day they are at it again

living their lives
like the way you once did days and nights
and seasons

and there you are forgotten like the rest of the names of those who passed away on helpless epitaphs

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Illusions Of Love....

all the while he is preoccupied with the real thing that fences his life his sweet prison cell where love
still reigns
a love of the self to self shared with no other

and then the sting of pain starts to pinch him and away from his senses while waiting
he begins to write the lines until another real thing comes and deceives him
again

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Ingrates.....

as guests the welcome is made after the roasted chicken and the rice, come the fruits on a silver tray and the cups of red wine,

the conversations link from past to present, laughter decorates the veranda of
the house

glasses clink and the sound of happy sipping pleases all
ears

music is played, and a bed is offered for the night's sleep ey left two days after and it was perfect free accommodation and entertainment for them all they said when you come to their place, just make a call, and indeed on that sunny month of May where you want to make merry you come to their place and make a call,

their cellphones are off, or that they cannot be reached, or that the lines are busy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Killed...

there is always something to say
to make things live, to give life to words, it is like a trip to an unknown destination a kidnap for ransom we keep on talking to assure ourselves that we are still alive
some even whistle and then they were shot they were mistaken for a code asking for help.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Lips

i see you today and you give me a smile no kiss is planted in my lips but just the same i made some notes of our meeting i believe that your spirit is carrying your body like a mask. and so i disregard your body, as it is the one carried because what matters to me is the carrier, the holder, the mover, the real life.

then we meet face to face
  . I disregarded the face.
I like to feel you as spirit.

you should have disregarded my body too.
and there lies the difference you take me as a body,

a face,
a hand,
a navel.

and you are telling me,
that with just one touch from you,
hand to hand,
i am real.

i must have missed something.
i must have forgotten.

those lips.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Litany Of Goodbyes

at the end
he is prepared to present the emptiness of his hands and be thankful about those tiny pinches
which the present has sounded beautifully like a siren song

the way he has learned to let go everything oh how the soft white sands drift from his hair and not looking back like a salt woman of yore

that you have read and forgotten

for tired of so many goodbyes he has finally decided not to make any.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Little Birds In My Country

one is red up the tree
one is blue
down the drain
one is white at the center
of the house
the others eight in all
on each window
one sun
with eight rays no stars
this time
not one
stripe
the Filipino people has learned to hate.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Little Birds In The Yard

yesterday i did not report for work. i told myself, i am fed up and i want to be left alone.
and so i stayed on the yard taking with me a seat for a companion and i focused my gaze on the grass until those little birds arrive struggling to eat most of the rice grains fit for chickens
they were noisy and seemingly on top of their arguments and i listened

and then there was this orange cat with one eye silently sitting on the side of a tree trying to catch a bird for breakfast

how can these creatures be too like us?
astonishing, and then as predicted by your usual experience, i begin to write again this time perhaps an article on sociology vis-a-vis bird-cat
relations.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Mad Dogs That We Feed decay there are mad dogs but still dogs you say and you feed them

in the name of humanity

a mad dog bites you and kills you and it will bite
again
for another day of its mad life still you tell them to feed them as a gesture of your humanity the mad dogs live like bombs in buses in parks, in malls, in churches and mosques

humanity may be diminished but it will always live and thrive like love and hope

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Missing Links....

at times, as you are all wrapped up, in this anxiety, about what you know not what actually, in a word you write, a letter is missing, but they have learned to read somehow, not asking about what it means, they relate, like empty spaces in a cabinet, where a glass is there, broken last night by an unrepentant culprit, but as always, the glass will always be there even in the dark, it glows and shines in our minds, in a sentence, a word is also missing, in the rush of emotions, the thought is taken, no one is complaining, the sorrow is a group undertaking, no one is exempted, everyone is in the unity of misery, the story is complete but no one is telling.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Moments

as you begin
you make decisions that end a certain moment

something escapes like a bird from your hand but that is what it is going to be wings are always wings and the hands and palms are but what you claim you have

there is a satisfaction of flight for those destined to fly in the same manner there is more to a home as it is too destined to stay there is no gauge to all these but the heart that sings during those moments of cold rain there is no point of return for one who has finally decided to be just oneself a home a sofa and a window that you close because finally it is dark ....

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Pains

we finally situate beyond the threshold of pain we sit on a chair
look over the window extend our view to the sea till the horizon
we familiarize with what pains too do
with the shores and the forest
the trees and the grass
then we look again inward like the entrails of the chicken
we feel nothing anymore those pains have become a part of our skin they don't do any harm
anymore
we don't even notice whether they are still here or they are gone for good forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Pictures...

the pictures do not serve the purpose anymore.
you want to go beyond, there is no beyond. you look for more of those pages, there is nothing there. you miss the heart. You want to see that man stepping down.
Because there is no love at the pedestal.
You wait for him to admit that there is something wrong among the choices, that nothing is right, even from those all of the above.
Nikki is right after all. You wait for the heart to come and please you.
When?
The time frame is an illusion. The humiliation is not over yet.
The kneeling starts.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Pigeons Inside My Box…

...nevertheless
do not attempt to call this
art,

not actually nonsense
because these are all landmarks of sorts,

friends without names here but when i scan
i always remember what they did with their lives and how they wish to reshape them to reinvent what broken lines are there furrowed on their faces people that strike me with disbelief lives like the flash of lightning making so much thunder a community bewildered losing hope

expectations crashing down like earthquake
productions

ah, these moments of truths there are all here captured like pigeons inside a box of wood

they will not be killed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Pink Orchids Wilting... here is more to get than what we just see on the surface of those petals
one can deduce what life is

the wilting for instance, the shortness of time
that is left for all of us
sometimes
one must suspect that
all these are but farewell speeches.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Raisin Dreams....

remembering those raisins ah, those dreams long exposed to the sundry suns

& the myriad moons
untouched on dreadful days and somersaulting summers so dry, dark brown, wrinkled, lacking the gloss

of those
happy days of yore

and yet when tasted are still too sweet
the soul
salivates......

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Ripe Grapes....

this morning they arrive as bunches of ripe violet glossy grapes and i am constrained to receive them with all grace though i made a promise not to eat a piece
i only draw them on a piece of paper
someone may paint them for me so i can keep them all like loved ones and then after this short moment i put them in a basket and give them all
to whoever pass me by...

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Ripe Guavas

do not be sad today

when you wake up
open your window first and see
those ripe guavas
hanging on the branch of that tree
that your mother
once planted
in front of the house...

it is only when you remember (mother) that you begin to forget (misery) ...

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Rivers In My Mind...

what we remember
we must too forget

what comes must in any moment go

what arrives necessarily must depart

too, too, these are the goings and goings and comings and comings

despite the waters flowing in the rivers of our minds these are the banks that never stay stuffed forever...

ebbing and
overflowing

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Rumors....

the talk of the town is like a river it runs to the banks of the rivers of other towns and fills in every openings along the way it floods and does not ebb away until it finds the sea with a very big mouth and swallows everything like a whale to all the species of plankton

along the shores of time there lies peace and cool sea breeze and varieties of lovers once again make their usual forbidden trysts under those tall coconut trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Sentences On Those Yellowed Papers

at first glance
a word is just a word

but soon you remember
letters

those yellowed ones
winkled by age

there are sentences
there that you can no longer avoid serving.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Shadows....

shadows
are the most loyal friends we can ever have

faithful during day time
but at night without
the moon
they're lost in their own preoccupations.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Simple Words That I Speak To You

many times i want to go away from simple words those that you can easily understand and hence take for granted words which you think have no life which means that i have too to go away from you

which i cannot because without you i cannot breathe i cannot speak
i may die and perhaps i may only speak those words that will understand only themselves when i am finally taken into their bosoms filled with eternal emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That Die And Wilt And Wrinkle

those that die like the flesh and wilt like your skin
and wrinkle
like your hands

text

these are not
i love
these are not
the reasons
why i am
with you

these do not die:
wit and humor
rumors, stories,
thoughts,
memories at the park
disco nights
and candle-lit dinners and strolling
at the boulevard and pinches
and kisses
sleeping with you
and waking up
with you

these do not die
and these are what i love with you

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That Faithfully Remain....

you think that it is only the sea whose waters ebb and rise, and waves move unceasingly on the sands, or perhaps light, that dissipates, that fades and appears, receding and ceding, and spreading colors and hues.

our feelings too, now here and there, and then gone, but there are those which faithfully remain, the coconut tree beside the house, the dog on the stair, the stone on the hill, grasses, and trusses too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That Have Seen You Never Came Back

You must notice by now Those that have seen you
The birds that once stopped by your window
The vine with flowers climbing the walls Beside your house
They have seen you
My happiness, my love
The birds have flown away and the vines have long wilted After a glance and they have no way wanting to see you again But I, who has seen you, shall come again Even to kneel again before you On a sunset behind your antiquated walls Because I love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That I Accept That Can Never Be Mine

i dare not see much more touch
those that i know
can never be mine for i must not be too cruel to myself and let it suffer
some more
for when i start to glance i then desire to touch
and when i touch like some shreds of iron fillings i become magnetized
and when magnetized
who shall take me
away from such mess?

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That Merely Wait And Unmoved

walking, just walking, sometimes just this no thoughts, no decisions, just plain walking you see the light of the day striking on the trees and plains and the daffodils you are not part of it, you are just walking it you are met by the wind from the mountain you are not talking you are not interested about what this wind these trees these daffodils are bringing you you do not show any interest at all about some leaves falling the light spreads and sprawls on the grass and sand and pebbles you are not dazzled you are not completely covered by light you are just walking, stepping into God's own creation spectator, just plain walking in, not involved, not commenting just plain watching, those that crawl and sprawl, those that stay and leave those that simply lay themselves as plain receptors, grass and sang mountains and trees, and daffodils, those that merely wait and unmoved.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That Must Make Us All Alive And Well

i can always go back and retake what belong to me.
On the other hand
what is it? some lousy papers, some molds of memories
i suppose those other things that i want to bring back are all but dead, carcasses of some cheap
marsupials, pouches that contain nothing but foul
flesh,

and so i have decided to go with you on this flight of all the lighter things in my life those that i have forgiven those that i look forward to a sunlight, a bird song, a reflection of a beautiful soul a tranquil lake
a burst of joy

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That Passed Away

Ricardo was the biggest guy in the class.
He was too tall for Grade Six.
Roberto was the smallest but too smart.
Ricardo, the silent guy and Roberto the noisiest, all of them the spices of those years in elementary grade.

In an update of people for the class reunion in 2010, it is sad to know,
both of them passed away that too early

Ricardo had STD, Roberto had hepatitis.
One had too much sex, the other had too much drink.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That Pretend To Help The Poor

the hypocrites
of the Help the Needy and Deliver the Poor
& The Oppressed

you are Thieves
disguised as Solicitors

They say We care for the Poor and We who are filled with so much Guilt
Upon our abundance
waddling Parted with our Surplus and Say
We have done our Part
we have given
what is due them

They are Fat and Drunk Drinking and Making Merry till dawn We fast and Reflect
We give and
They all Steal

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That Say No

those that say No
to the Establishment bring with them a conviction an integrity that must withstand the pain of dissent
the bite of the snake of resentment

and those that say Yes parade themselves in the wide roads of acceptance display their cards and celebrate what is thoroughly acceptable
they are given chairs and glasses
they have their bread and steak and accolades of greatness those who merely watch those who clap and stand they pass by and survive

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That The Almighty Want Him....

the young man
dislikes untidy people.

there are lots of them in the market place,
at the sidewalk, in places where hope
does not bloom into
a flower,

he cleans his ears
and nails and washes his face and feet and hands
as regularly as he could even gargles anti-bacterial fluids for a cleaner breath

how did time change him?
his hair is uncut
his breath foul his feet muddy
and into so many unhealthy habits
he lives alone in his
world
away from the crowd

into the realm of the mind away from the physical surfaces he is lost only to find himself
taking care of those other much important things those that the Almighty want him.

Those That Walk With Us...

let me see, let me count those that walked with me those that will continue walking with me, it is dark, i can only count them if they make a sound saying yes, i walk with you we are all blind somehow we are bound to the shackles of the goodness within us
we are not free
we are shielded from the powers of evil for which we have long surrendered
and now
saved.

we are the weak and we stay within the shield of His Goodness...

RIC S. BASTASA
Those That Work Till Midnight

there are those that work till midnight even beyond it when all are asleep and busy with their dreams when all the lights of the houses and even the streets are turned off

there are those who cannot sleep and make their nights days there are those who know what their mission in life is not counting the hours not minding the sacrifices like a candle they burn both ends there are those who die earlier than expected these are those who do not complain and not say a word for what they have done they give all that they have and that is what only matters they do not even care if the world remembers you read this poem and it is 11:24 in the evening in this silent hour, you are one of them, i salute you, my dear friend and companion.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Times

you never knew those times were my hardest i was bordering between two walls, the sane and the insane one at night i climbed a tree to see the world below me i sat upon a fence to see cars
passing by
and the nocturnal people who kiss and go separate ways those were my hardest times i tell you again when God faded like a mist when blessings were like dew at noon there was nothing

i had all the pretenses for i knew how to sing and dance and compose the most read poems in the university

it was a form of survival and so when it was over when i got the praises and the approval i packed up my back took a few clothes
and left a note that i would be coming back but you knew too well i have my father as a good excuse and mother too

who cried for me

i went to the mountain to teach the natives how to live and be independent i gave them a play and they recited well the lines i gave them what i got all rhetoric, and sophistry

i have gone back to plant camote catch my own fish
sail my own boat
dive my own waters and hate to remember what drowning was.

when we see each other again i will tell again and again i never belonged there i became free and now oh well, i am happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Traces Of Us...

we started as a form of darkness then light leaked and water was formed more light entered the system giving birth to one celled organisms putting on membranes
multiplying upon itself moss was born and flagellates and paramecium until then the plants that learned to move like vines and jellyfish and turtles to chameleons and tarsiers and civets and deers and lions and monkeys and gorillas then us....men and women what is next in this evolution? sharpened minds into spirits
into gods?

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Unsaid And Untouched By My Lips

my hands shape what you desire in willingness my thoughts form the petals of the flowers of your longings i cater to love i submit to loving naked i stand before the judgment of your eyes you touch me and i become alive in the days of my famine my hunger is satisfied in the days of my thirsts my tongue seeps the dews of dawn when you sleep beside my body your head above my arms unfolded i look at you and i regret not having said all that i have seen in the dark there are images still unspoken there are still feelings unfelt by your innocence i look to the sky beyond the windows of our beings i gather silence like leaves under my feet i walk away feeling triumphant about what i kept the treasures of my heart these i own, and these you must never know for whatever happened for all those years.... i have always been alone and happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Were The Times

those were the busy bustling days
of the cities
where people have no places to go home
and laundry themselves in parties of friends
and friends of their friends till the wee hours

got fed up of those days of smoke and beer
and now i am back to the silence of this little town of my birth

the trees are shedding off their leaves the cows are giving birth the birds black and white fly on the skies and perch on a tree enjoying the ripe fruits today i am going fishing in the river my sail boat is waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
Those White And Red China Roses

The summer breeze Rises on the shore
Of Olingan
And those white
And red china roses
That you see
Are they really flowers
Or not?
Or only your Usual dreams
That fade out
On the beach
When you wake
Up?

RIC S. BASTASA
Those White Pearls Around Her Neck

those white pearls around her neck all come from him he was up her face her tongue circling on his being he begs and kneels
for more
till the much awaited explosion of love gets in on the mutual hunger he gives her all the white pearls she puts the circular lipstick around his veins.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Who Are Dying

those who are dying
have most of the courage and so like a molting cobra eyed off everything that is old and with all pain wears a new body

a shiny color of themselves shining bravely against
the sun

and do not get near them by now they know how to make the quickest bite and make a new kill instead of being killed
by you

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Who Are Ungrateful...

if only you can see the face of suffering
right in the deathbed completed

if only you can hear the last groan of the hopeless cancer stricken
woman

you could not have sided with the pleasures of ungratefulness
the hypocrisy of your confidence the uselessness of believing in the selfishness of your time

if only.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Who Called Them Apes In The Jungle

those who scramble for food and steal and (as you term it) have behaved like apes
in that human struggle to be alive are what you see on TV

You have judged them wrongly

Go there, in the Land of the Rubble walk, take your time, smell the stink, taste the mud,
do not eat for three days,
no food, no water,
no friends, no TV,
no cellphone,
no roof,

beg for a transportation facility then come back home

Tell me then all about it. Let us hear if your anger will be the same Let us see, if your judgment is correct.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Who Know Suffering And Still Suffer....

to live in a gooseflesh is not easy. Mind you, it is horribly cold and traumatically ugly.

well, not knowing it is a blessing.
the thing that you do not know cannot hurt. But that place of gooseflesh is always there and you are always there living in its horror and trauma.

be glad that you have not known about it.
at least, for the meantime you are safe.

you are happy, unlike us. Here we are shaking in this coldness. Traumatized in some ways, at most, in most of all times.

you are very lucky. Your ignorance is helping you a lot. Your world is sealed without wisdom.

you are very lucky. I will put this in my heart.
For we who have seen the horror of the light are frightened till the end of your numbness.

we are these humans in the filth of happy pigs.
we are the pearls thrown into mud. You are blind.

Happy as you are, we will not touch you.
Be glad. You are not one of us. We live in the silence of our grief and we are not saying anything.

We shall see you dance. We shall hear your music.
We are not dancing. We are only listening.

The children will look at us with hatred.
The old people will dismiss us. We are cursed.
Those Who Score Themselves

i agree, perfectly, deserve a ten.

why not? why wait for others to praise us? they set standards, we don't we welcome every word without questioning that oh this is proper this rhymes this is a poem the critics like this and this is just perfect for the next coffee book the next year's anthology all giraffes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Who Truly Loved

they say that those who truly loved have become so vulnerable, euphemistically speaking, they have become so foolish to surrender everything do you remember the lion king who had his sharp teeth removed his claws cut and his roar suppressed? they say it was a fable about love, and they say that the moral lesson of the story is as simple as being so stupid about love and then be defeated by the pretentious lover. Ouch! You're dead.

they say those who truly loved have become the characters of the romantic movies, the famous figures of the opera house, the unforgettable tragedies, the stigma, the catharsis of life.

today i am offering flowers for those who truly loved and offered their lives. They are silent. They are dead.

Ask me. I am alive. I am not a pig.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Who Witnessed The Fire

the doctor was on the other side of the road the house was helpless the fire was like a hundred tongues red and sharp murmuring death for all those who are soundly asleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Witches....

he puts his fate
again in the hands
of dishonest authorities

masochism again

when the paper is sent it will be blackening his vision

he will be shaken again

vain hope,
lessons learned
numb

and he steps again into the open fields of new opportunities

flying kites,
releasing pigeons from their imaginary cages running away

the sea, yes the sea, the wide horizon the moon at night
the singing leaves of the trees silent sands

fool!
you have subject to the dictates of dishonest concocting witches....

RIC S. BASTASA
Those With Fruits And Leaves

what then is the purpose about those who have no leaves or fruits
those bald ones
those dried twigs brown leaves
and broken stones?

you are part of the choirs of nature
each has a gap to fill a place to rot
to shine
to hit and awaken.

RIC S. BASTASA
those years of closed doors, they must be over by now.

the days start to come in trickles of light this early morning bringing sweet memories of the moon and the stars

the venetian blinds are dusted molecules dance at the center stage on such an immense light as you sit and stare and ponder like a new seed breaking its own shell

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Years Of Separation.....

years separated us when we meet again there will be usual questions like how is life? did you marry?

how many kids? how old are they now?
where do you work?
where do you live now?

i am tired of all these questions, frankly i am not interesting and nothing interests me
perhaps
i was made sour by all those years, but sometimes i may compromise (but not a civil as you may think me to be) and so i have my answers now, like life is not really that miserable. i got married, no kids only dogs in the house (not applicable),

oh i work with a gavel,
and i live in my navel.

perhaps i am just dissatisfied with what life has given me,
and you who claim to have kids like grapes work like heaven, house like a castle, and you who is like a story with a happily ever after ending, well, thank God, you are like everybody else, you own a wife, and kids and house, yourself is multiplied, your face is xeroxed, your wealth is not just well preserved but progressed like

hell,

you have chattels and servants and perhaps slaves and submarines and nuclear weapons, you have a brand new car,
an excellent paycheck,
by all means, to my mind, you are a superhero and you have everything
everything

and yet, oh well, just like rest of the people in this world you are never, never contented, you still ask for more how much? how long? how wide? no one knows.

RIC S. BASTASA
Those Younger Years.....

those years
when we were young

we take no malice
naked bathing in the river

we bask our bodies
open to the sun

we feel the flatness of the rock bed in our backs when mother called we have the unison of silence

we rush dressing up leaving our underwears

we did not like school then inferior as it was to the wind and the sea to the cliffs and fog to mountain peaks and waterfalls

we are all misshapen into the cruelty of the literal we are the stuffed toys of this working world

the marionettes
of skyscrapers

when we meet again for the reunion we will not mentions how we have become aliens to ourselves so ashamed that we begin to drown ourselves inside a glass of champagne and whiskey and shallow and silly and superficial conversations.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thought One

i think every word about ourselves is a poem in itself we simply have to re arrange and re-invent
and there we are always a foundling
never named now matter how specific how distinctly said

RIC S. BASTASA
Thoughts

my mind drifts
in the space of
thoughts
passing by some trees
i gather thoughts
bunches
of gloss and refinement,
every morning
i take the pleasure of putting them
here, lest they go away, like fading light
like a voice suppressed
in silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thoughts About The White Bud Turning Into A Lonely Flower..

outside the white bud blooms
alone on an array of heart shaped leaves
how pure
how undisturbed
how lonely
shall it be under the clear
white linen sky

(perhaps,
my thoughts alone,
but nothing
jibing with what it really is,
as usual)

RIC S. BASTASA
Thoughts After Sex

after sex
people sleep

that is the usual exit that people who want to escape seem to know and do

they sleep

the routine keeps going like
house, office,
office, house
roads, doors doors, road

after sex
the usual exit
is closed

you look at the ceiling trying to open another
door

but there isn't any.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thoughts And Thoughts

day the monitor multitasking, whatever is always whatever, and nowhere,
and somewhere, surfing, and writing, whatever word comes inside my brain, linking, i like linking whatever with nowhere, nothing definite, like simply sitting on the shallow part of the river and rinsing my feet, nothing to clean in particular, just looking at the flow of the water, like i am a part of everything yet i belong to no one, just it, this and that, and nothing specific,
this is what i like doing now.
i am no one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thoughts Before The Much Needed Sleep...

one wonders, at times, in the middle of (nowhere)

of the room, where books scatter like chairs after a wild party, that class reunion after 25 long years, (back to the main point) of wonder, when pushed at the edge, whether, the things done, year after year, polishing each, like old shoes that do not break priding of their crocodile skins, are right correct, and justified, whether the conclusions arrived at are, true, useful, and normally good, one lays his head against the tip of the easy chair, supports the neck with both hands and look at the ceiling for answers that do not come out easily, but appear like lizards still waiting for their cockroach and favorite mosquitoes, this office has mosquitoes and cockroaches, and, as the answers are not ready made, but slimy like fishes on the river Kwai, one stares like a blank wall, eyes closed later, fall into sleep and

dream.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thoughts In Disarray

like threads
entangled in themselves
like hair crowded in the temple
where you have no
way of straightening
the confusion
where
you have no time putting things
in their proper places or thoughts
firm in their aligned perspectives

you expect much about my sanity and
system,

i too have times of losing and being somewhere else where you cannot speak
to me
where i am
furious in my silence

i do not wish to hurt you
baby, so please
please
go away

before unkind words are spoken
please please
go away
before another heart bleeds
before another
world shatters

let it be just me
without you

you do not deserve
the cruelties
still thriving
in my heart
like viruses
and worms

now, go away
and do not be hurt
do not even
dare think about me

i am lost and i am finding ways
to finally find myself from the wars of my thoughts
from the rubble
of my perdition

RIC S. BASTASA
Thoughts Of Issa

on the surface
of my river
early that morning
a moth
rides upon a fallen leaf
and then on the flow of the streams of my
thought
they are carried
faraway
until nothing is seen
until nothing is heard
about all of
them

and then the
the battles of my
heart
shall soon begin

RIC S. BASTASA
Thoughts While Watching A Still Painting Of Pears And Cherries

upon a tray
are the still orange pears below are the three cherries and the wilting leaves

i like the way the pears' way of seducing me into biting it the cherries compete with the enticement

the leaves wilt with envy and here i am watching and not even allowed to touch anything

RIC S. BASTASA
Threads

something about threads amazes the balls
how they trace origins and histories of their beings how one is previously that and then upon a flow of
thought
becomes another more important and useful but less recognized than what it must be
at the end

RIC S. BASTASA
Three

How can I ever explain poetry?

To a child it would be easy

Eenie minee minee moe Catch the monkey by the toe

Jack and Jill Went up the hill
To get a pail of water

Is a poem easily understood by A child

But to an adult
How can I ever explain poetry?

Can I explain it with a straight Look in the eye
And I will tell him
Poetry Is looking a person straight in the eye

Yes you have only one more day to live?

Can I explain it to him Like I have a gun and point it straight to his head
And say
Yes poetry kills and it kills you in a minute And for free?

Or can I explain poetry to him Like I am on the tenth floor of this building And I tell him I am so problematic And all I have to do is Jump and kill myself
And he would be there
To tell me
Life is beautiful
There is reason to live
That I am loved
That many people still care
That I have a mission That I have lots of good things to do That this world has meaning That I am the child of this universe That I am no less than the trees and the stars and that by all means

I have the right to be here

That poetry can save That poetry is one saving person holding one back to his senses that poetry is hope, love, kindness it has no word for hate it does not kill or enslave
or annihilate

Poetry is a decision
Not to jump.

That is poetry to me
And as an adult he must understand he must understand what i am really trying to say

RIC S. BASTASA
Three Black Birds High Up In The Air

three black birds high up in the air
flying playing this early morning on their swift wings

i heard a single shot from the hill and one black bird fell the other two birds continue to fly away so frightened

they continue flying away from that hill

a man with a brown cap emerges and picks a dead black bird on the rocky ground

RIC S. BASTASA
Three Characters

you are the hostage of your past demanding a ransom

a huge amount of your present to be debited as payment your future is furious there is so much but it will not yield

RIC S. BASTASA
Three Dark Shadows

Three dark Shadows lurking
In the dark park
On a dark night
One leads
The two others
Follow wearing Black raincoats
On a dark road
I lead
I tell them
My name
My work
My place

The two Did not follow
Since then
They realized
Perhaps that With what I tell them
I am blacker
Than black
On a dark Raincoat
On a dark
Park
On a dark
Road
&
In my dark Mind
It would Be so hard
For them
To follow Through &
Through.
They quit
They split
&
So I Walk alone
In the dark
As one lonely
Shadow
Darker than Dark
&
Now
It is you
Here
Following me?
In fact
We change
And it is
You
In effect
Who is Leading me
Through These lines
Flowing
Slowly
Gradually Getting Darker than Dark

You have Indulged &
Surely
You are Involved
Deeply
Long enough

You win & lose...
Three Ladies Dancing In My Mind

the first one was white and smooth baby lips and natural black hair the second one was aggressive like my mother telling me every details to be done in my life the third one does not speak lurks in the corner and waits.

tyey all dance in my mind not having chosen whom until they all stop and then leave me alone in my indecision

the three women dance in the world taking their other options throwing their legs in crazy steps mechanically less my love and affection.

RIC S. BASTASA
Three Lovely Flowers

inside the vase
there are three lovely flowers delightful accents this morning when the sun arrives
by the window

i do not wish to be a butterfly neither a bee
i simply want to be plain
water.

RIC S. BASTASA
Three Lovely People

oh LOOK
AT THE three lovely people God and Aldo
and Lo!
the third one is
of course

Me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Three Oranges Inside A Wooden Tray

three oranges
inside a wooden tray at the center of the table still amaze me

the smell and the color and the shapes of hemispheres

i still find you there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Three Things

three things
three balls of fire burning and burning before me

1. sex
2. love
3. power

i cannot grab all i may burst and burn and burn and burn

i had sex this morning.
and it is not trite.

now i can have power,
and then who knows i may graduate from the bickering of the parts of my being who knows i can have you finally in the form

of love,
not, a thing, not a thing, not a thing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Three Women Are Talking At The Veranda Of An Old House

a sick old dog walks at the center of the road

three women are talking at the veranda of an old house beside the same road where the sick dog walks at the center and stops there a big reckless truck speeds its way towards Zamboanga and runs over the sick old dog which died instantly its intestines and blood scatter all over the three women keep talking and then they all burst in laughter

RIC S. BASTASA
Threesome

you ask me
about my birthday?

i have a birthday of course but there will be no party

i am tired feeding
people who can eat for themselves

this time
it will be those hungry children in the slums
the innocent prisoners
in jail

the flood victims of iligan and cagayan de oro

this time it will just be me, myself and i

i will toast wine for myself merry, merry
us in three

threesome and so
wholesome...

RIC S. BASTASA
Thriving Upon An Accepted Illusion

The fruit of the center of this Paradise One that i see
One that i always love to see Feast always to my eyes Without failure
One that i gaze upon
A touch on the gloss of the Paper
Closing my eyes and feeling that it is real But it isn't
These images live only inside my dreams They die with the coming of Light They escape on the hours of Waking
I am faithful to these images that do not feel me Do not know me
They are all dead a long time ago
The first time i ever knew them But i insist
ON this illusion for without it, i die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Through The Eyes Of The Child

what we old folks do if what we do are all wrong and pretend they are not to the eyes of the child the wrong becomes right

RIC S. BASTASA
Throwing A Coin In That Beggar's Bowl

i throw a coin
in the beggar's bowl

i hear the sound
of angels
filling the universe with such a very sweet song

RIC S. BASTASA
Throwing Away

i have thrown away
some memories of the past it is the distance that makes us see clearly what we adore before has nothing to restore what we claim we dearly love now we abhor

there is disgust that like some things too
exist forever

distance creates that sense of balance gives us that feeling of wasted time

i shy away from the nearness that blinds me into caring for you now you are on top of the hill worshiping your sun i stay on the plains looking at your small, fragile body casting a sharp shadow on the other part of the hill there are no more echoes to hear for i have closed my ears i put on my shoes and take my first step towards an understanding that all the while i had been wronged.

RIC S. BASTASA
Throwing Away Pain

i look down my feet
passing by my navel

i am naked

i touch the old flower of my youth with the same stunted fingers i wish i am as warm as the palm of your past i am not disappointed

i am real

i feel the coldness of a stem the hopelessness of a rock i know the day is short and so i throw away pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
this is the picture
of you
a past black and white glossy
image of how lovely
a woman can be
and so beautiful still you are not mine and i am not
yours

fate
says so what can we do?
i am so sorry
i cannot be bound by this blackness & whiteness of history
that may destroy the rainbows
of my future

one rainy day
is enough for me i have promised myself about
the sunny days that come and i must make the most of my short life
under the
sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Thrown Into This World

he may have been thrown into this world complaining that this matter is without his consent and he may walk like he does not belong and would not speak their language or adopt to their dance and songs. He may just stand there and watch and tell that he does not like everyone and everything and not gain any confidence from anyone and he may just be a nobody but a protester. Sadly, he is thrown into this world and Gladly, he shall be thrown out. He reaps what he sows. He sows dislike he shall reap disgust and that is fair enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thrushing The Depths Of The Woman

the man is helpless in this strength and for this he needs that support of that depth
the one that he can reach and meet
the one that he can grieve because it so
beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
Thursdays......

for all those that we have not done and tarried and procrastinated we go acidic and our intestinal linings bleed like hell on Thursday nights

and for all those that we have done or claim to have finished on Fridays before we sleep we say after we have prayed for the judgment of our creations
we have so justly
died.

RIC S. BASTASA
Thus The Distance Speaks...

we have freed ourselves from your goodness we were mum at first and we never talked about it we walked away traveled the needed distance climbed those hills and found a valley where we could rest to get the whole view we turned our backs against each other i went west
she went east
and we went beyond
the frame of our social conventions
the causes of the distortions of our own images of ourselves
and theirs too

we have scene the view upon our own truths
you were all blessings in disguises
all of you
with what you did give have made us
love ourselves more
we were rip van winkles awakened from a very deep sleep and now that we have seen all the angles
we have decided
it is better this way
the distances speak so well and we must listen like this
earth...
Thy Faith In Me...

...and there
the danger lies,

when you cannot believe in me when i cannot too believe in myself anymore,

i happened. I am glad, i did not pack
up and leave,

i keep myself
even in my own disbelief, as you left me
for another, i still keep myself, even if i cannot believe in me

anymore, ....

i do not have any other, if i lose myself,
i have nothing.

this is faith.
To keep this self,
in its lowest ebb.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tian 21

i guess, it has something to do with the fountain
it is running out of water and the birds are waiting the seeds have turned into flowers and the trees are running praying for leaves
i watch and run too and i fall down life is not comfortable the sun expands
and the world is getting to be one big bomb

RIC S. BASTASA
Tianmeop 01

i do not compromise with what the government does neither shall i deliver coffins on a buy-one-take-one promotion i do not compromise lives i live inside a bottle sealed for years what do you expect me to say do i have to tell you that i still breathe?

RIC S. BASTASA
Tickle

something is so tickling on my abs, furry, soft, like a rabbit's tail but it is not white

RIC S. BASTASA
Tickle The Skins On My Feet

tickle the skins on my feet
with the tips of the hair in your head, i will smile
you will matter

bow down as i spread my thoughts on the floor like a geisha
you shall pick them up like sesame seeds
and offer them with some steam and tea

tonight
i will be your samurai without a sword

i have this cherry blossom to put in your breast you shall kiss my neck as i am your vase

in the morning
some more cherry blossoms hang on the tree like tiny butterflies

we watch in silence still

RIC S. BASTASA
Tidbits

tidbits and more tidbits to the tongue
some bits and pieces
of desire
and lust
discriminated by taste and prejudice
the love for money
the greed for time
on such wasted hours on grief and grumble

RIC S. BASTASA
Tied Down

all the happy faces
tied up in a frame
from a click which made you stick it out in Badeling, China where the Great Wall appears to be most beautiful

beside you was the beautiful Canadian who accidentally held your
hand
perhaps afraid that she might fall down and
die

your wife was on the
left
preoccupied with what to project with her friend in that not so famous town in the Philippines

you doubt everything
since then
but to cut the story short and to stop all the ambivalence

you crop the picture and you deleted
the one who is more beautiful than her.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tight Lipped

tight lipped
a bud
opens
a little mouth a petal
and sighs
then you smell
the scent
of a rose
a woman

and comes a man
the wind
swallowing
a petal
a woman
in his arms
away
to the dark
night
like a horse
you hear sounds
of hoofs
and
yes
i hear it too
the moans
the moon
and the shadows
of the bud in full bloom
well to tell you frankly i had my days
of walking on tight ropes under the careful watch of my grandpa and i was so frightened then when i was a child
because the moment i fall he beats me with a very hard stick
from the guava tree and i cried alone in the attic
where the black birds are staying steady
with their claws on the power lines
and they never get electrucated and i learned from them sometimes

and i stopped crying and the ballet dancing did not stop under the careful watch of grandmother who too held a stick and beat me when i fell on my broken toes and again i cried in the attic many times when i was once a child and i look over the window and see the clouds drifting near my

hands

i touch them and they are so soft and gentle and i learn too from them and soon when the tears finally consumed themselves i had the wings of the black crow and the puffy touch of the clouds and then i fly

and then i drifted in my dreams my imaginations

kindred spirit
rising to the heavens

i once dreamed. i once died. i learned.

i am alive. and i am writing
poems

for myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Till these eyes pop out from its sockets Drop like marbles on the floor Roll to dust and sand and be gone, Till my back aches no more with A thousand needles pricking me up higher
To my neck, my nape higher all over my head, Till my arms break into quarters of bones Till my hands disjoin from their fingers Till this heart burst to segregated chambers, Till my solid self disintegrates into meaningless pieces Till everything in me returns to dust flies to air, I will never cease composing all of you Words without sounds, sounds without images I will not Stop giving you the image that you desire, the sound that would be musical,
To the ears of this world, to the farthest celestial ears of this universe, My dear words, You all have the right to become my poetry, the poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Till My Life Ends

After one brief tryst
A night as short
A blade of grass Briefly cut
In Silliman-
Must I long for her
Forever
With my whole heart
Till my life ends?

RIC S. BASTASA
Till Next Year.....My Dear

i know where all the lonely people come from

i can tell the shapes of their faces their shadows are too revealing

what is expensive wraps them and conceals whatever is in the offing

i know what they want to say when you meet them in the streets the kind of drinks they take in parties the way they hold their glasses like the way they maintain their

pretenses

it is not easy to be lonely i tell you one gropes for solutions which are not always at hand the nights are knives and they stab you right at the center of your heart and you bleed and you bleed some more alone by yourself in those large empty containers

i know their feelings their longings and their hopes for a cure i know some more and i know you are listening about what i want to say further

but for now let us keep going mind our own kind of lonely business and in tonight's party with all the crowd of lonely people

let us listen to new jokes, updat ourselves with new songs, and be attentive to the latest rumors in town savor the multiple miseries of other lonely people out there
buried in the smoke of cigarettes
in the loud music of the exclusive club

do not lose hope my dear keep the strength
murmur your prayers
think positive
choose suffering
sing lament

share the passions (of Christ)

then perhaps who knows we can be happy again understand this matter to the fullest interpret its hidden meanings remix the nuances of the nooks of silences and live life some more with all the cheers till next year.

RIC S. BASTASA
Till Now, You Still Confuse Me.

you actually confuse me.

i know what giving is.
it is taking a part of me, a skin sometimes, but most often, a chunk of my flesh,
it hurts, i bleed for days,
and the pain is sharp and excruciating,

but that is what precisely what giving is,
a part of me is always taken away by another and sometimes i do not know even who,

i do not ask questions
why a part of myself has to be taken away, whether you deserve it or not it does not matter anymore for a giver has no questions to ask he just gives and feasts upon the silence of that grace.

you actually confuse me.

you have not given anything yet and there you are, saying that you are hurt the most why i have given much.

i almost have nothing now why do you mind me?

you are whole, and burning with desire you are complete and self-sufficient. you have everything which i do not have.
but you have never decided to give an inch of you.
to anyone else.
you actually confuse me.

You keep on saying that you are unhappy and that deep in the night when you cannot
sleep
you actually like to kill yourself.

i am a giver. And i do not ask any questions.
Neither do i have the answer for your sorrow.

that is why, till now, you still confuse me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Till The End Of My Own Time

the tree that i love
is gone
someone cut it
i did not mind at all
my fault then

what i have now are the stories of the tree i see shadows of its leaves and they dance with the wind till night time to appease my longing

i see that tree in everything be it grass or stone or river or even those walls and stairs

i am sick my friend says but i am gone
someone took my real self away and i did not mind
at all

and then i live every moment of
my life
in my shadows in my hands that dance with the wind till the end of my own time

RIC S. BASTASA
Till The Next

farewell
i have to go it is 1:06 in the afternoon and i will be in court trying
all the accused whose destiny
shall lie
on the evidence in the hands
of their
lying lawyers

till the next
my love
my poetry
we shall be parted

but i will be back
soon

when i am sane again

(ha ha ha
just a joke)

RIC S. BASTASA
Till Then

till then when this is over when this face is reshaped to your pleasure i shall face you

till then
when my eyes can see well again like a new sun after the storm
i shall meet you

till then
i shall not tell you anymore about the history of a love rejected there is no use

you have a home
you are a bird with a nest at your comfort you have a place like a stranger stopping for good having found a wife

till then
i shall confront you with the silence of my mind i am at peace
and i am ready to leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
Till Then When I Will Say Finally...

you hurt me
and i do not voice it out and everyday you hurt me every minute
and i become more silent more silent
until then when i shall finally say that once in my life i have loved you...

and then in an instant
that love is gone.

i do not blame you
neither shall i blame myself it is the silence that ought to speak but there is no point in your life that you ever signified that you have ears i blame the silence of the ants they keep on working and then they all leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time

time has always been with us and we have learned to trust
its wisdom, its power to heal, its power to lead us to where destiny waits us
with surprises

time rusts and time shines time kills and time resurrects time gives birth and time gives death and time knows the memories of cycles

time makes the promise and so here we are asking: when?

RIC S. BASTASA
Time After Time

time after time
block upon block brick upon brick
we build
what we dream

time after time
light till another light darkness upon darkness moment upon moment
we grab what is offered before us

we have no choice
layer upon layer of this consciousness opening before us
we awaken
to see what is shown before us phenomenon till another phenomenon i watch what opens before me awe to awe wonder to wonder

i wander i walk i take the distances
of time
to perhaps clearly see

RIC S. BASTASA
Time And Distance

time forgets
the pain, it travels without really getting any inch of distance at all

distance on the other hand
pretends through space

but always with time beneath
its
cloud.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time And Eternity

YOUR smile is old,
and time has changed a lot even a hundredfold

you snob me
you smirk, you tighten your laughter into a frown,

it does not work
ditto,
it just does not tick anymore you've got to change
somehow

i do not really know how or what or when time has a way of changing what it needs,

it discards expectations, it hates the monotony of never changing rules it has a style of its own and no one knows what is really next taste of passion

i like time,
i like its way of experimenting moments,
with all of us, its subjects and objects of its hours and
days

i do not wish that it may like me too on such a vested interest of a mutuality

i hate to accept this but time is with me

(booooo! do i hear boooo?) it likes the way i dislike it and it dislikes me for liking it and claiming that it is with me there is fire in my coldness there is fame in my persistence let the rain come,

i am ready with my own
cracked dryness

let time pass, i like its opposite anyway:

ahhh! eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
you like time that way clockwise always like the hands of the clock stopping is prohibited like you are broken
a disease

you are time you move with accuracy always at a certain point no past just the future not staying longer with the moment that is what people are supposed to be always moving on no crying over spilt milk nothing overwhelming with the past sometimes i just sit in the corner and watch merely curious of what we are and what am i for real i let time go and i stay and i relax myself a bit unmoved, unmoving, i become an object of your disdain theirs too

a clock without hands what can i be? a man without feet with hands but never using any finger i look at the world like i do not belong here i sit obeying no one i deny the sun and i am not talking with the moon and i see a time bending before me begging for me praying that i may go with it or i be left out dying slowly i am staying and i am waiting they ask me why i am doing all these for what reason? under what justification?

and all that i can say is that i am no longer afraid i have enough of what i really need to know to have to hold to cherish and finally to give everything away

RIC S. BASTASA
Time And Leaves And Heaps

time runs
leaves fall
the ground is filled with heaps and heaps of them the world too is thickened by the leaves of time heaps and heaps of what man once was we bury all of them
time
leaves
heaps of leaves
so many times

we fall too like leaves the world is thick of those like us fair enough.

fair enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time And Light And Human Memory

Time is revealed. Sand used to keep it in a glass vial.
Now time escapes and flies and seeks The help of light Takes it to space and travels so fast To cope up with its longing She is somewhere out there with the comets and stars

It is overtaking memory Failing, falling short Human forgetfulness
But there is such a fast catalyst sensing like A magical nose

Love, passion, longing, belonging, seeking, wanting to be complete
To be perfect

Memory smells the sweat of her love And sticks to Faith: this is her, this is her, and there is nobody else I cannot be mistaken there can no one else this is her

And time bends
And time stands still As human memory begs for another meeting for another understanding

Though so short, brief,
It will be a memory of some light years

Smelling sensually sipping the sweat of someone Somewhere now. Here. Here is forever.

Time travels so slowly with the person you love, Light infuses, diffuses and intensifies Pain forces forgetting, letting go what used to be important

Now everything yields, everything must go as destined.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time And Love....

time is the hand that carries love throughout those tests, it is careful not to break it but even if broken it mends it again as though nothing happened clear glossy glasses against the sun on midday without the scars of any wound love rides with the wings of time comforted in loneliness love sings what is past well written

RIC S. BASTASA
space is like an eggwhite enclosing a yellow yolk of this chicken egg,

time grows and becomes the chick

and it may become a hen or a rooster but there is this element of growing up which we call time, time too dies, like that rooster ran-over by a car,

the car is fate, and fate is always acceptable as a comfortable explanation, the explanation becomes your key and you switch it on to make things move

time moves, and this time becomes the key that strikes the ignition to make the engine move and so and the engine becomes your life, and your life moves to places and travels on events of history and sees the strips of a film of trees and post streamlining your forehead against a glass window

but your life can be so stagnant inside a prison, this emptiness and this hollow space becomes your garage, you stay put you refuse to be free and you are the door with lock and key. there are many more, but this time, time becomes so short, like a yelping puppy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time And You

time escapes
your notice

7 turns to 9
and then 1
and you find yourself in the middle of
darkness
it is 3 am and you thought
you were still in a dreamy 5

inwardly
nothing changes
there is no clock
in feelings

which misleads
you into thinking that you are not
human

wrinkled hands
memories forgotten
aching joints
failing sight

time hands you
the wisdom of
death

the silent exit
unto the other wall where no one knows you
and you know no one
you escape time
and it did not notice
you either.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Beside Us....

time has always been beside us and we know that it does not talk it does all its tasks and having been with us since birth or even before that
with them
we had all taken it for granted until it is consumed until it lays us on a niche filled with white roses until what we hear are the cries of those who love us then time closes the lid and takes us to another destination on that imaginary boat without the paddles.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Does Not Make Me Notice

been away
and been busy
the usual answer
to any inquiry

this time
i sit upon a chair
facing the sea
on the porch of the old house
that papa left me when he died
five years ago

the bamboo
on the side facing the big mountains
has grown tall
and its leaves are outreaching
the trees

i feel so small
like a sparrow
and i feel the wings unfurling
feathers on my sides

i have long wished for this:

    flying away from here
    and not coming back

now it is a reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Does Not Sleep This Time. The Window Does Not Close Its Eye time does not sleep this time. the window does not close its eye even if the sky turns gray warning us of the rain,

the floor spreads a beautiful silence waiting for some shoes to come.
the curtains the other day shed off all dust promising to be light and give that ambiance of an accommodating hostess ready to serve a listening mode.
i have given rest to my tongue.
my mouth naive this time.
i look like pouting lips.

my wish to a sleepless night is too simple.
talk to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is time for light shine, shine
and take away the little dark corners drive away the shadows on the fullness of your day and then we will dance and sing and make merry under the fullness of your grace and your loving warmth

come light, come
take away everything that we are not
and we are not supposed to be

come light, come
light our paths so we will see
the truth
that as children of God we are meant to be happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Heals

that is the most important nature of time
the rest
whether when it was born or when it dies whether it shrinks or expands whether it is a woman or man or plain swan are nothing but trivialities things that may confuse us and make us forget that it exists at all time heals the wounds of our birth that is enough for us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Heals...

IT IS still the dog inside us that tries to impress others with the waggling of our invincible tails,

The dragon that spits fire and destroys houses and gardens
within us
still hides and never defeated

Outside our hearts and minds The face shows the glow of the moon calm, gentle
No sign of an earthquake or typhoon Reserved like a table for two Like lovers hugging on the lane by the boulevard

You must admit
IT is a matter of keeping the balance Molten lava inside
Yet a garden of roses and olive trees Outside

One still has to figure out
The outcome
Time heals, Time judges.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Is A Hand....

when the desire conquers you it may leave you
and you worry a lot
and in effect
destroys the peace in yourself, what must we do to eliminate this sorrow?

we get rid of desire that comes and enslaves us

Time is neutral
It has no taste of grief and happiness It is a hand
That opens and takes you It does not promise anything If you do not go with it
It may close and just be silent....

RIC S. BASTASA
that early morning when the dews are pearls on the leaves you appear as a lovely brown woman with tight skin too naive even for a white rose more innocent than twilight i was speechless like the grass i was sprawled and all of me looked up the coming of the skies the sun comes up like a chariot of fire that is how they name what god was there i am amazed with what is going on someone is riding on a horse and charging someone is taken away but not crying someone says, well, this is nothing but a circus there is no abduction since the beloved was too willing to be taken as a hostage of ecstasy then there is the time for surrender the white rose wilted and all its petals lay crushed on the grass i was the grass sprawled on the sun the skies all shut the chariot pass that way and the horses fade like a mirage then you lay there alone your skin too loose, in fact, hanging on your bones your teeth are no longer white as pearls no dews on your lips you are alone now and you wish for death

meanwhile, there is only darkness there is so much silence my heart so empty my mouth utters a word how can i ever forget your name you too fade like time like a betrayal

RIC S. BASTASA
time is cruel
i have seen how rashly she ears off every page
of my calendar

my hair turns white got more furrows
on my face
my arms are slow
my feet like dough

at the last hour
i wait on one of the benches on the park and i shall fade like a premature sunset

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Is Slow For Those Who Wait time is so slow for those who wait too swift for those who fear too long for those who grieve too short for those who rejoice but for those who love time is

eternity..............................................................
..............................................................
..............................................................

let me not wait some more, let me not fear, let me not grieve, let me not have eternity....

let me just rejoice, because my time is too short

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Is Too Short For Sadness

a leaf falls on the ground the poinsettia turns brown from red just a week ago the snow melts and the sun sets for another day the rain stops falling it cannot be forever

nothing lasts forever
happiness like a guest sleeping in your room only for a night or two and takes the road on

the following morning
transfering to another place another time

a bird with bleeding heart stops for a while on your window and gazes at you with pity the wind cannot stay longer it has no love story to really tell these boring sad tales about love unrequited about love lost and never recovered i have no more ears for them another seed of the peanut grows, sprouting to see a beautiful morning sky

you see all these changes and locomotions of wind, earth and sky of man, his heaven, his earth his heart, his legs, his muscle, his skin, his mouth, his lips his thighs, hair, his bulge he is everyday growing for you you ask what are these all about? it is all about love and time and temporalities, swift passing days like that wind and bird on the window it is about the irrelevance of sadness they all gaze at you with pity and they move on without sympathy in haste reminding you: why waste? why fret? why not sing the song of love instead?

why not munch, chew, swallow all desire?

i can feel your heart palpitating asking for more.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Makes Trust Thinner

time is like a flower unfolding
if you are keen to its revelations this you must have felt (as i feel it but perhaps i could be wrong)
time makes us
see
what people keep on denying what history hides what the writes
hint on those pains
inside you see
dead bees
the ants ruling
on their claim for more nectar

i let my mind
flow like a river
traversing dams
and taking all the routes towards the last sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Passes So Swiftly

for indeed
time passes so swiftly

despite this morning i was just a very young boy holding to the virtual hands of mama tonight, to my dismay i have become a man with gray hairs trying to forget every sad memory of my life emptying myself for this last trip for i shall travel with the air and dissolve myself again to the arms of time.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Proves It, And Time Shall Prove It Again

this will never work.

a tooth
for a tooth
and an eye for an eye.

it never worked.
all suffered much
the grief will never be over.

in the land of peace
the great joker cannot laugh again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Runs Fast To A Person Who Loves

when you love you give it all, like you take all your senses for the one you love and then you surrender love takes all you have while you just wait and see how everything in you is taken away you shall experience pain temporarily during the taking of everything you have and when everything is taken away you become so light and so empty again that is temporary time runs too fast
the clock ticks
its hands run like an overspeeding car on the freeway then love comes back to you full of longing and full of everything
for you

you become so full again feeling better
and you want to give away everything again on this day on the other days to come because of love, you love and always you have known what giving is what giving everything away means

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Runs Too Quickly

i wake up at four and start dribbling
words like balls
without so much
thinking for i do not really care what
you say.....

it is 8: 36 in the morning and i have not seen
the sun yet...

this is life
busy bee, and yet
let me frank,
well, i am happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Runs Too Slowly On The Lines

how slow
can time run on the lines of electricity
that which is generated by that poem
that prefers the silence of the lips
that which does not speak but screams
in every letter in everything in between

how slow can time choke us and yet we still refuse to accept its intentions of death

we look at the other side of our melancholy
there is a bridge and there are trees
below
and there is a creek
more likely to be empty before the next summer's day

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Shrinks...

in the kindness of our beings lost in the labyrinths of love and good works we begin to learn what prayers do when we stop because we are too exhausted when we are hurt and feel the pains beneath our bones within our flesh because we have loved that much
and there is nothing
returned.

RIC S. BASTASA
lull of a hammock, arms free, thoughts rest on hair like petals, a book is set aside, beside an eyeglass, another day shuts itself, nothing in particular is accomplished, you are growing seeds of silence amidst the bustle of the season, you remember a child crawling in bed, and then grows its strong legs to walk alone on the floor, as mother watches as father hears the first sound of youth, this is the same house still alive and so old, with nothing to boast.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Swiftly Passes By

this morning
i see the child that he carried
at noontime
the child is a man
anchored to his arms
a pregnant woman
at night
i hear the coughs of same man same child
same memory
ah, time swiftly passes by my poem about
him
has become a brown page
the letters fade
the words
crumple turn to dust and blown by the skirts of time to a never ending horizon to an open ended
question
of where to
and why

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Teaches Finally On What Is Really Right...

technology that you are trying to show in authentic colors, and which thru time i have so well scrutinized faded, green turning gray, violet to lavender,

nostalgic, heading towards the shore of better to be forgotten like a very old memory of you, i have taken a second look, and my heart weighs it too well, logically,
the heart convinced by the pleadings of the mind,
has come to the inevitable decision,

'it is not worth it', and so i quit gently, my fingers close,
regressing into another page of this book,

it is not pleasing anymore, neither can it hurt.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time The Culprit, Shit, Has Changed You...

last night
after the meeting
i was thinking if it was still you
perhaps
time, the culprit has changed you transformed you into another
new-born hypocrite denying a language that we always speak the eye contact is less the hands are moving that fast
meaning is murdered
but i even in that dimming light had a closer look of you it is not you anymore i am facing a stranger
with sad eyes but trying to borrow the glow
of the sun
the moon weeps for you
and then it rained
the candle light on the table in the middle of the green yard beside the palm trees
died.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time Ticks Like Death Crawling In My Skin

at 6: 15
twilight,

darkness chokes the neck of day i hear nothing
i tell the fence, steel and rusty, feeling death itself on its rails,

that death makes no sound, it is only the time ticking like the dripping of the water from the gutter to the rocks
at the foot of the house it is only its hands that move round and round my body feeling the irrationality of my wrist, the mind closes like a window at night the thoughts are turned off like the lights of the village the self loses itself in this darkness you hear nothing of its insanities no one talks no one listens at 8 o'clock in the evening all the eyes pretend that sleep is just nearby in bed my hands argue there is something wrong the feet stamp against themselves at the foot of the bed there are no changes without a bloodshed that is still the philosophy of life this world is not a playground for saints this world spins upon its own foolishness at the center is the hub of all selfishness Time To Be With Myself, This Self, This Self, This Self

I put my hands in the side pocket of my pants Tuck my polo, gel my hair, smooth and stiff Put on my shoes, my wristwatch is tight, Zip my skin to keep both bones and flesh Follow the narrow path and walk Without looking back
It is now this time
For myself
To
Where?

RIC S. BASTASA
Time To Close The Cover Of The Book

at this page
i put the ear of the dog

i close the cover of the book

and set it aside my head
board

i turn off the lamp shade

there is no
one to say goodnight

they are here
darkness
silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time To Drizzle

'Black clouds
In her eyelids
It's time certainly
To drizzle'

eyelids
on dried tears
chili eyes
dreaming
sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
Time To Rest For A While

the letters
on the screen glow like fireflies

my fears come out like bats from a cave

there is a sea urchin
on my nape

some flies hover
on the key board

a bee is circling
on my head

RIC S. BASTASA
Time To Sleep

The day is over
You have come back from your escape
Of the devouring fangs of routine You are tired
Your head lags like the ink of Gentian blue
You loosen the hold of your flesh You undress you change your skin You wind up and coil in the corner You close your mouth
And keep your tongue in cheek Slimy snake you shall now sleep In my arms
In our dreams we shall not be enemies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time To Tear A Picture

i find your picture inside the page of my favorite book and today i look at it again and i feel nothing
anymore

i fold it into two and then i decide to tear it into fine pieces and throw all them away into the big murky river

i guess it is time
to bury old memories to blow off old flames old feelings deep down under the cold
soil

of forgetting

RIC S. BASTASA
Time, Space And Light

you ask
for time
i give all the time you need

you ask for space
no problem
there is so much
space
that i can still give

what more do you
ask?

let me suggest,
this is interrelated

ask for light
yes light

this time
i do not have
it

i am so
sorry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Time
you who is the teller of truth
the finder of the right path
at the end of this maze

why are you so slow?

your days are tortoises
your years are the growth of
trees
your changes are like high mountains and cliffs

the moment you change the face of the earth
no one is there anymore
to tell

the bones have turned to dusts
and all the paths covered with rocks and grass

RIC S. BASTASA
Time's Passing

a red bird flies low
passing by

i walk alone with nothing in my hand

lightly i do not carry much
thought

my feet are dusty since it is the middle of summer

the river flows with a song and the grasses are growing wildly with flowers at their tips the clouds above me drift endlessly casting shadows on the hills time travels so fast and it changes

everything
without even touching anything people pass me by i am heading towards my fading compare me to an afternoon it has no choice but to be with the night again i am with the night but i am not sleeping i am on this journey always going but with nothing definite on where to go and when to stop.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tinkering Folding Keeping Scattering

tinkering
it is something that you like to know what really is there inside the complications of things folding how can you spend so much time folding clothes that you never used

and keeping them again in that closet that you seldom open like a party that you tender only once in a year and scattering

what is it this time that you want to do? what is it that must take you back
something to do
a reason to live after another tinkering that have caused you
sorrow

fold them back and keep them they are useless and there is a need for you to be open again breathe some hidden perfume inside the cabinet of old clothes come back and tell me what did you see there?

RIC S. BASTASA
Tinkering....

what was hidden shall remain there, on the grave that pain, these pearls wrapped with tears no moment wasted, life stirred, the rivers flow, forever slow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tiny Leaves Falling From My Hair

these tiny leaves falling from my hair on this day warm and fair are yours

all yours

you shake my body
this tree of energy

your fingers run through me i moan, i am happy

i close my eyes
and time slowly flies

you kiss my lips
i die in dips.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tiny Moon On The Big Boulders Rising From The Sands deer the big stones

from
Mt. Iraya
climb
the walls of an old
church whose faces of saints are copies
from the very faces of the common
people

hope clings
along its sides vines of sturdy veins
skins of
the dead

i am awed
by the violet bloom

tiny moon
on the big boulders
rising
from the sands

RIC S. BASTASA
everything above the world where he lives is gray, it looks like the dogs and cats are coming.
the euphemisms inside the leaves of new journals do not work for his suppressed silence
now it is time for the circus of cliches in the kiosk of the town comes another exhibition the one who can make the longest distance of his pee there is nothing about those hours of wee the houses of whores and resting places of the plebes some hands are as usual cruel touching nothing but the selfishness of the uncut nails broken lives of the common cranes and ordinary drags, sighs falling to the cobbled stones like trinkets the gypsies still dance for the money on unmapped journeys towards unknown boundaries here in this little Asian space there will always be one thing that i miss the white heron still peacefully on top of the thick faced water buffalo relaxing on his muddy moments.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tip Of The Iceberg

what you know of me for the whole year when you read my poems are not at all true. they are all lies.
words pretending to be hands
and feet.
Lines pretending to be faces and bodies.
i do not wish to tell you that you must disregard them you want them to believe to be true.
i cannot stop you.
the women and their names are lies.
the white horse
that father rode was also a big lie.
It was father who gunned the horse down, and he even sold all the meat and bones of the poor animal in the streets of the town where we live. the places and events and other sighs and moans, the squeaking beds and mournful moons and crying stars: they are all lies. they are but tips of the icebergs of my glacier of lies floating in the middle of the arctic.

you always follow me and i do not wish to stop you.
and i will tell you wrong directions.
i will tell you about the wrong places that i have not ever been to.
i will tell you about the errors.
the wrong things about me. i will tell you exactly the opposite of who i am and where i am going.
you may be lost as i will mislead you.

But, IF you really want to know me, i will compromise.
You must remove your clothes.
Everything.
Even your skin.
Your face.
Your eyes.
Tighten every screw and bolts that hold your bones.
If you want to really know me, not just the tips of the icebergs about me, you must be naked first. Undress everything that covers you.

Then we must swim together. Let us dive under. Let us go deeper together. It is where my soul lives. Deep under the tip of the iceberg.

Do you see me now? I am bigger and wider under. Do you not fear me? Be not afraid, I am the one that you always followed for years and more years to come. I am huge, deep down under. Do not fear me now. Hold me. Do not leave me. I am your truth too.

For one thing, there is no exit going up. Now we must suffer together. IT is forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tiptoeing Moon

THE moon can be as beautiful as its silence
as she tiptoes on the skin of the river or she can be cruel stabbing you with the sharpness of its stainless light your guilt conniving in killing that innocence

of your
original mind

RIC S. BASTASA
Tiptoeing Through Life

to please the power of the season and to dance with the music of those who make the corridors of fame

you throw away the true self and be the face of the person

on the frame

of their carving you lose a lot of who you are

and all through the years you keep on your toes

too careful not to displease
them

what a pity
you have turned yourself into this ballet dancer who forges a fake smile to the crowd only for the applause you lose your world to our dismay it is time, i guess for a little lift, take back your life and come back

with us

RIC S. BASTASA
Tired

she undresses herself and lays naked
on her bed
her body is lighted by the moon
she faces him
and he swallows his promise
not to be promiscuous
this time
she is beautiful and his body has no right to deny
what is there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tired Father

coming home tired
one night
they are all asleep
and i said nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tired Of The Rules Of The Game, I Sit...

i like to think that i owe no one a favor, and so i refuse every opportunity that i may derive when i give favors too
to another,
it is this way that this world looks upon an investment
say of emotions, when one scratches your back you too must give her itch a scratch from you fingers i hate this arrangement but this is how this world operates mind you, i get tired too, having no one scratch my back because i refuse scratching the back of another at one time, i sit on the grass of a busy park, looking and so blank and dumb, feeling that i am not a part of this world, its rules not getting fit for my wholesome existence away from independence into a world of flattery and utilitarianism.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Budding Writer Somewhere In Cebu

it was not him who placed the beautiful flower on your head and so when it wilts it is never his concern, or hers, she lives alone in her own circle, she tries to get some flowers, but they are all already reserved for you, and so when they make you stand before them and they begin to ask what makes you think that you are a goddess for your little poetries, their eyes are flaming with madness. Do not mind them when they tell you that your flowers are nothing but the rotten petals of the lesser breed or variety.

It is your heart that must be followed. It is the mandate of the higher goddess that must be obeyed through and through. So take good care of the flowers that are still growing in your head, the vines from your fingers the buds that are still tight-lipped wanting to bloom for you.

do not let the flames of envy stop the flow of springs from your very see very well the beauty that has arrived, and the courier says, it is now all for you.
Not for him or her. Not even for me. I am just anyhow carefully watching.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Certain B.

we start
with a laugh

get to know
each other

what he writes
his choice of characters

his stories i
ask whether they also reveal him

and then
straight i ask if he is gay

and that is where the music
of silence
begins to play

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Certain Group Of Truth Seekers....

a school of fish is freed from my nets of logic now they are free to search for their own safety in their own corrals underneath this sea of democracy....

there is no need for another briefing or a gathering i am safe now too
within my own niche
i am rested for once not having to say
any word
at all....

for in truth you are armed to your teeth now ready as always to face your inner struggles

there is no use of me now as you swim further to fight your own battles

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Certain Point

each foot leaves the floors of this hall
some had their faces pictured and they display the best pose of their bodies the best smile possible to display the image
of happiness

you sit there at the corner away from the crowd of hands and mouths and you look at each body in silence as though the wire is disconnected a frightening air hovers around you but you refuse to be threatened now you imagine the sounds of their smiles coming over you

you forget somehow that you are alone again.
someone comes beside you and smiles and you oblige with a smile and then you begin to talk to her some words about anything else

then they all leave one by one until you are the only one left on this hall you do not know what to do next or where to go

but somehow your feet begins to walk and you do not argue anymore
to a certain point
there is this craving
for contentment.
To A Classmate Of Mine Who Thinks She Is A Failure

i must admit that when i see the picture of your two kids you beside your husband on a hug

i feel something empty inside myself despite what

with myself posing beside my new villa and flashy car (the recent model)

i feel just like you this inability to appreciate what lies in our hands these eyes that do not see what we have become always lesser than 'them'

we have been fruitless above the trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Country Of Infinite Dawn to a country of infinite dawn when everything you see is grey when mist is the color of their day sunshine becomes a luxury the sun its God and when they come to my tropical country where sunshine is everyday

they say

this is paradise, this is what i have been missing in my life the beach, the green fields, the natural springs these white old men, on retirement, on vacation to this country

they say

do not be fooled

when it gets dark, and when the neon lights start to glitter they begin to ask some names: linda, rowena, baby, celestina oh you know what i mean, they are looking for our women cheaper and cleaner and wait there is another, he is looking for the brown boys the ever younger ones even the uncircumcised

welcome to this paradise, this island of desire, destroy this home

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Dear Friend

when i am silent
do not accuse yourself of crimes
you have never committed

when i am silent
i am not gone

perhaps, i just writing another sweet poem
for you

always remember that....

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Discordant Note

when everything seems so far away and there you are just sitting down upon a chair despite the undeniable fact that they are all there within the reach of your hands: family, friends, co-workers and despite all the noise in jubilation the cheers of victory the laughter of lightheartedness i tell you something is wrong because you feel like a stone so lonely like the sole string of a broken guitar amidst the symphony of humanity's songs amidst their well accepted norms you are a discordant note, and it is painful to the ear of this earth and by all means beware because nature has its own laws, and soon with full force it would have you eliminated.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Dying Friend...

nearing death he posted in Facebook this picture of a barbed wire against the setting sun, and then i clicked the word Like.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Fellow...

i am reading every writing on the wall the letters are so cold, like the arms of a dead man defeated, nothing interests me really, except myself, after having gone into same wars
with you,
the self above self, that seems to be the golden rule now for survival the mind must circumnavigate its own world, convoluted upon its intestines its own trails
it is you that i am worried about, the moron, the destitute, the loquacious duck on the pond, there is no map, and so you have no direction at all,
circular in motion, arriving at no train station
i give you time, a cup of hours, we drink it, i watch every syllable that your mouth is mumbling because i am worried about what the child in you is saying i hear every vowel there and pay attention to the power of your consonants, that which you cannot say, or that which cannot be ever said fool, God’s fool, we are, and you the moron that mumbles what you cannot really understand is king,
the wise man, that baby crawling under the bed in the middle of the bridge as we watch the tilt
if you fall, we all die.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Flower

It was painful when You bloom

But come to think of it
It was more painful

I think
And you know it

When you remained Lurking
In the dark
As tight as a bud

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend

you are on your own now show me your wings

fly away as high and as fast as you can see the world

fly the heavens and the continents
you are on your own now

fly away and tell me more what is there to see

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend From Far

actually
i am not surprised anymore about the waves that you send to my shores which has repeatedly
resounded
its own sonorous
weeping
which to me is nothing but identical to mine and when they fuse
oh my they make such a happy blending
together like a heavenly choir
of innocent angels

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend In Chicago

i may neglect
you for a while
my friend
for i am speaking to a neighbor
just a stone throw away from where i am standing

it is different when i speak using my native tongue
i feel my roots down
under my feet

on the other hand
how it feels is like seeing my old mother
again
back in the house of our childhood

outside the guava
trees are bearing so much fruits
heavy on its branches

tomorrow perhaps all will be ripe
but the sad thing is this: there is no child anymore here who is for the picking

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
To A Friend In State Of Doubt do not try to understand there is nothing worth understanding nothing understands understanding in itself, it longs for the unquenchable doubt for doubt makes understanding a fake princess of the castle on the clouds doubt unlike understanding does not beg doubt scatters and understanding loses in this game of reconciliation

it keeps a heap of leaves only to dry in its stockroom it smells rotten and becomes rotten do not attempt to understand you will be at a loss in this search for wisdom live in the ocean of doubt there is a lot of space for the swimming and the sailing look at them who claim to understand life and death and rebirth and declare that they have attained the state of nirvana

they are all drunk, they live in a crowded room, oisy, boisterous, and so insecure their mouths babble, and they speak so loud the room has become too narrow and there is no ease for breathing

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Long Buried By Time....

(1)

one night
the four feet of the bed moaned

it was something that we were crazy
all about the bed
and its moaning feet

(2)

the years flew
away
with four wings

things change
houses demolished

new waves of people
come
hordes left

rivers change course buildings rise

fields turn into footballs
cars rust highways widen into gulfs

(3)

one day
we meet
our memories
rush
strong as muscles
of healthy men

we remember
the moans of the four feet of the bed

we remember
the song of the night
each note
like the beating of our long lonely
hearts

(4)

we try to savor once
more
what was tasty to the buds of
of our tongues

yet our arms are no longer ours
our heads are full of present
worries

(5)

we meet and then we say tiny little things

they are designed to be discarded and then
be
intentionally forgotten it will do us good
we must suppose.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Maddex

...so this is it even in the wrapper of a Hershey chocolate you see the faces of demons batman, and goats

and in some visions you see the Archangel

and from the fifth floor
you see
tsunamis and sinking lands

so where is Paradise
and where is Eve and the Apple and Adam
and the snake

my friend, it is time to take two options
you either see the Pope

or your Shrink.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Named Sheila

grab the day, seize what is here now it is never less neither more that what is not there yet what is the past? it is useless to quantify neither is there a need to qualify, for it is gone i have the present, it has space, it is certain, there is even no need to imagine
what is it.
I bid you, seize what is here it is opening its arms to embrace you.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Of A Friend

a friend of a friend has been a widow for 20 years this she reveals when she hitched in our car

my wife's face is twisted and she does not speak a lot we cut the story short she gives the direction where she will be dropped like some garbage

i pity her. i really pity her.

at the red gate she waits no one opens the door it is 10 o'clock in the evening the car backs out finding itself passing again by the same red gate she sits on the pavement and holds her bag as though it is her only possession i don't really know if that is her house does she lie still at this age?

my wife lambastes me like thunder unable to hold her contained temper we cut the story shorter we leave her on her own whatever that means

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend On His Critical Moments

you do not touch anymore my aquiline nose
red with blushing blood are you not bored talking about sex and blowjobs with me as your impatient audience?

please read to me a poem about love and
affection...

RIC S. BASTASA
you write and i listen to each word. you are faraway. You speak in repetitive lines.
there are standards of art.
a poem must be so and so. so does a short story.
unity of plot, choice of words, fixing the mood and fortifying the contextual feel.
you are mumbling poetry in winter inside a train that travels on a speed greater than light. tomorrow it will be at ten in the morning when the bullet arrives at its destination you write.... breathtaking views, flashes of memories.

i listen to a chant. i chant myself. speaking to speaking speaking.
we are all alone. yet we cope up without any help from them, damn carpets and dripping roofs.

whether what you write is poetry or prose it is not important anymore.
you are a poem that i care for.
i do not know you but there is a shadow it is enough for me.

damn biters. damn arrivals.
i do the same. Sit back and write.
senselessly. desperately seeking what we still do not know.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend This Moment

you ask me if i am nowhere to be found

why am i nowhere
to be seen,

whether you lose me whether i am lost

no, my friend,
i am always in this nook mysterious as i want it silently watching......

i like staying in this corner where my silence is comfortable like some mildew

allow me to grow.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Out There....

keep going my friend we are the verge of hours not wanting to talk silence creeps in our spine like a spider
we do not mind
sleep is given more attention dreams reign
but we do not really remember as day
breaks out in the open tightly on some invisible ropes we walk our way we utter life is life and it goes on and on and on
like some irresistible refrains of a very old song

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Posing With Her Happy Family Last Christmas

i go for family
as you have yours
all smiling for the season and missing each other after the holidays

i vote for family
a home
a home away from home
a second home
and even a third one

a home in an island another one continental another one global

but, and this is
is the big but i do not really have to have one necessarily

i love the world and still love this world and then i go roaming around it its islands its continents its oceans

and to accomplish it with speed
as life is too short i, may, if you are interested to know,
fly alone by
myself

sail, trek, run,
walk, dash,
rush

alone by myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Somewhere

te the seeds you sow have grown and trees have they become flowering and fruiting and now ripe for us to gather,

when will you come back?
come springtime?

we shall wait for another winter.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Somewhere In Chicago

In your hands you have the sun
In my heart I have the moon & stars We fold this wide distance like A paper, a letter where we have once written Words that rekindle some old fires Long, long time ago

I sleep in the dark and there you are Lost and finding your way out From so much light

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Somewhere In Vienna.

a poem is just a poem words trying to make out a certain significance wanting life, yes, life.

you want me to accept that i am there, that i am not just a magician that in every thought something about me is squeaking, like a rat,
calling for help caught in a trap with cheese unconsumed, taken,
silly, silly. Life. yes.
it is life, but it need not be me.

the world is composed of all of us. I see you there.
I see us. I learn from it and then i write. Just this morning, my body is weak, and to choose between waking up and sleeping till noon, i could have chosen the latter. But who shall wake up for me? for this world? it is only me, not you, not them.

no one can do this, except me. And so i sing my cough.
I stretch an injured leg.
I wave my hand and tell you i meet the morning as usual.
There is no sufficient reason to surrender. Death can wait.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Taking Care Of A Dyslexic In U.K.

Eustess is ease, summer, so many sunsets,

we have not spoken Manuel is what he is, while Eustess does the Mona,

Desde, ante,
memorati, qua
nenti,

we always have codes for what we did
and what we cannot utter,

three shadows fading
away
in the darkness of
this

school of thoughts,
this pack of wolves,

dawn is thinking,
nights pass

i always remember
i always remember

i have risen from my mistakes,
it is not pretense, it
the right way
the right word, the right life,

Procrustes, Hominem, Ebinem, Rhinitis,
Tonsilitis, Diseases,

you stop dancing
choreographer, find

more money in U.K.
leaving, and leaving

back to your smile,
mystical, i could have asked you the right question, but i did not dare, for soon you will despise me, and i will detest that,

my friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend That I Cannot Forget

my congratulations to the person that i admire most
the one
who writes his name in air signing
as a cloud
the one who sings with the wind
the one
who walks under the moon friendly to a cold night
the one who lays his body upon the grass
stars seeping
like memories
to his eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend That I Have Only Felt

if i shall not hear the sound of the wind again i shall think of the shell i shall imagine the flesh that once was there the taste of my own tongue i shall for a while remember but i cannot assure you till when

for i am but a shell myself and time shall wrap me too with emptiness

i shall be carried by the winds too and my tongue shall not remember the taste of flesh the taste of water and my skin shall not feel any coldness of the wind my eyes cannot see what light has been in that previous darkness.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Who Died As A Poet

i have seen the power of your poems
those that
make the blind see the mute finally speaking about beauty the deaf hearing the songs of love and the crippled finally dancing to the rhythm of your lines

i am amazed and so convinced about the magic of the poems that you wrote when you were once alive before they buried you on a shallow grave with their anger and hatred

they were not able to cut your tongue and tear your mouth and break the bones
of the body of
your poetry

now let me ask you if these poems come from the deepest chamber of your heart are its roots your pains and unfathomable sorrows or is it grown from the seeds of your bliss

that when summer comes they bloom into sunflowers?

i see you in your images smiling and i can hear that suppressed laughter on the lake on a clear morning what is this all about my friend?

tell me,
for they do not like my sadness
neither do they share my joys and
happiness

for what i write is nothing but air.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Who Had A Free Lunch With Me...

it's been long,
actually, i have forgotten, that place where we used to be,

i changed, i have told you i know myself, i changed, i will not tell you that i have changed, it will be as bitter as a detachment, of a clover foot, divided into two pieces, it will be still soft, but it will be more of slipping white sands between my fingers,

i do not understand myself, so how can i ever understand you.

you sit on a table fronting me, yet, i do not see you completely in the same manner, that i put my body here, but my mind is flying like a kite somewhere, while my fingers pretend that i still have a grasp about flying strings and wings and thoughts, it's been long, and i talk to you, but i never mean each word, actually, i do not like the color of that plate, the way the spoon and fork are put parallel to each other, the tea tastes like hell.

i could have told you, the tea really tastes like hell,

i have changed,
now i am dishonest.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Who Likes To Have Beauty In Her Hands

you do not gather the flowers that easily from the sides of the hill where you were never there
once
planting the seeds

nothing comes by chance or random nothing sprouts just like magical seeds using the lighted wand of your fairy godmother

the flowers grow and bloom there because someone took the burden of seeding, transplanting, watering and pruning them these flowers are taken cared of by loving hands

do not think that there is no sweat at all shed from the brows for something so beautiful to land in your hands or even by an accidental gaze hovering in the retina of your eyes

he spent the sleepless nights watching the flowers he bowed down to earth as though asking for the mercy of the gods
he prayed and worked hard then beauty comes in the grandeur of its petals in the dignity of its perfume arrayed by the pearls of the dews and salted by the power of his tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Who Says She Loves God That Much

a friend is fond of putting God in all areas of her life

God has a plan
she always stresses that Nothing happens by accident There is no such thing as Random

when she eats God is in every bit, the icing in the cake the sugar in it every grain of rice
every shred of fish every molecule in the cola drink

i find her amazing how could have God so entrenched her every cell with faith?

i couldn't help comparing herself to me and i guess i need a lot of grace if not pity or sympathy for my apathy

She is naive, and she is always prayerful wherever she is be it in a bus, in a ship, on a sled, or a horse, a mule,
or in a magic carpet
perhaps

her mouth always mumbles for God

God is sunshine, God is rain, God is the sea God is land, God is air

...until we talk about money.

The world suddenly changes.
Prayers stopped.
Suspicion, like sunshine spreads to every nook of the heart. And now the language changes from rough to harsh.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Who Says That She Does Not Know How To Write A Poem Anymore

it is sad, when you think that you do not know how to write a poem anymore a simple poem as simple as you what does it take for humanity to write one poem? does it take that much from those who claim they know the way? shall blood be shed to drive another point?

do not lose hope in the power of our ordinary words, for as long as we quiver, poems are written for as long as we lose the consciousness about our beings the metaphors always come and build upon themselves their own meanings take your time, breathe the air of poetry, and let the molecules enter your lungs that long to see the light of the sun, just be patient, keep on waiting, savor the silence, shower yourself with the light of the moon, on another lonely night, sleep soundly, and listen to the sound of your snores, in your dreams, the poems write themselves.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Who Thinks That I Always Win

my dear friend,
you always think that i win, and you hide away from me in the cloak of your jealousy.

is this all about winning and losing?
i am for you.
And all these are for you.
The red rose, the blue sky, the flowing river
the cliffs, and mountain the trails
are all for you.

i do not have any bag
where you say you do not fit.

shall i have the desire to put you there like a sackful of potatoes?

you discover a secret trail you smell the scent out there you want to find me you are searching for me but my friend i belong to the wind i am a dropp of rain to the sea i am the grain of sand on the shore i am but a speck of the dust on that cloudy sky

how can you ever find me then?

listen my dear friend this is not about winning or losing this is about our journey the destination of which is still open like an entrance to a cave without light, damp and dark.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend Who Wants To Borrow Money From Me....

use me
like a carnation to your breast

a tulip to your lips

use me like a mona lisa to your frame

avoid the van gogh
in me
i want still to keep my ears

use me like a fan to
your face

or an eyeglass to your blurry eyes

nothing about beggar's
cup

or a hat to pass please, don't talk about money

i would like to be useless on that.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Friend With Lgbt Dreams Of His Own

too dreams of the beauty of nudities

bareness, smoothness of lines and curves that take you to the places of your
heart

you are the man chosen to a dreamland
of the body of
the woman

you feast upon normal delicacies and you invite that friend for a drink and a show

he is suffering
his mind flies like a lonely hawk in the desert

most of the times
he feels the horror of the vultures

preying upon the rotten flesh of dead lovers
the stink of his unrequited experiences

love is bitter happiness so slippery he can only hold the tails of the fish
the tips of bird's beak he buys a painting that touches his heart and makes him
a bleeding pigeon
throughout the night

if you know him
too well
you should have cried with him

from far this friend writes
a very sad letter

it is all about longing it all about being unloved condemned just like the hands of Midas

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Great Writer

you started with a mask as you assume the name of the anonymous on something so serious as love
and as thrilling as the procedure for betrayal
you explore the religious and the mundane making a mockery of the sanctions
you fly away like a bird and come back as a snake
like a transformer
you turn yourself into a truck a jet a chopper
in the acts of love on the tracks of lust sipping dews
and bathing on the waterfalls of sexy desires
and you do not mind what they say you are happy anyway in your anonymity at the end of the day you die
and then early morning you resurrect yourself on the greatness of your solid and long flesh
you weep when you like it and you laugh the hardest when you want to retrieve what you have lost
you are the modern man of our age as you question their pillars and thrones you sting the king and you made love with the queen and you get away with the princess into the castles of your air into the death of anonymity you live and then you vanish there is no name but you have become great like all the rest who only wanted to think not speaking and still unable to write

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Happy Man......

to a happy man
(one had it last night on the basement the two wine glasses, a blanket and a pillow and some stories about sweet nothings) to a happy man in the morning the rain is a song a statue of venus smiles the trees outside are in a symphony with the wind

from the sea,

even that rock at the center of the garden
sings,
the hot water on the kettle whistles a tune
the carpet on the floor lets go its well kept
silence....

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Heartbreaker

Do not look for the wound I am not hurt
And I do not bleed

You know
You injured me so

Worse
Than you think

But look I still know how To carry myself

I look well
I still wear a smile on my face

I won’t show it
I won’t shed a tear
I won’t make you happy
As you want it to be

Look
I got no wound no bruises Look
You must be surprised
I still keep myself alive

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Little Bird Out From Its Nest

and so
your on your wings now flying low yet flying still to where must you go?
your wings shall lead you do not look back
for the nest had long been destroyed
for the winds have no mercy but the places faraway have open arms
islands out their have warm hearts
fly away
little bird
your destiny is waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Long Lost Relative Somewhere In Kota Kinabalu

when papa died,
and then it was followed by the marriage of Milagros a year later the son of Betty was baptized in the catholic church

i do not like that when i see you next time it will be the funeral of another important figure in the clan let us toast this time let us have more divorces and marriages and baptisms and thanksgivings we will miss you wherever you are

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Long Poem

to a long poem
title it
a litany

to a short poem as this

give it
a little space where it can simply be quiet

let it sleep like a flea

RIC S. BASTASA
suffering is an unseen
ghost
it haunts me in my forest
the worms sometimes sing
and it is more often than not disturbing

specks of light sometimes come in
like a drizzle of rain

it does not wet me but makes me smooth and glowing

a halo of bubbles often comes out from the locks of my hair
but i do not really mind that indeed in every aspect of everyday suffering these bits and bits of miracles do constantly happen

like some sort of givens we sit upon trees like monkeys deprived of our tails eating the ripe bananas in the middle of our lamentations

provided from nowhere and we often ask ourselves how come we have survived for years?

To A Love Poem You Twitch Your Face

This time,
As a critique of a love poem you Read my lines and twitch your face You cannot believe
What I write
that I for once was true That I can now be true to you

For once I make this plea Dust off the fleas
Of sin and prejudice

It is me, I once loved you,
And you knew
It was true but you never believed it, it is me now, ready to love you again

My love,
Love changes everything
And that does not exclude me, Do stamp your feet now Crush all those fleas
And do not twitch your face, hear me, strike me, i deserve the punishment
having left you
long time ago

This is me
Ready to love you again, this is my plea.

please listen, spare, speak to me

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Neighbor

hot noodle soup that's newly cooked outside the night is cold as stars begin to twinkle, the moon to hover on top of the banana palms the sound of bamboo leaves shall serve as music to a choir of cicadas singing can you share your time for a cup of noodle with me?

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Nephew

it is upon my calling that you are here today.
i am very happy.

i am seeing a very tall man now towering like a tree.

look at this place this island the flowers no longer bloom and the trees are shedding off their leaves the corn seeds that i have sown a month ago have not grown and the river on the other side has dried up the sun scorches this place and the moon does not like to rest on the hills let me take you to the window of this house for you to see the rainbow connecting this island to another island

this is the bridge between us and i am giving you the power to cross the sea of this rift

tonight in this harrowing darkness we shall cross to the other side and leave this island for good you shall own the island and sow the corn seeds again the trees shall bow before you and the flowers shall bloom again the rivers shall have their water and the hills are ready for the moon and then i will be gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Nephew (2)

you are already lost
in the woods

you climb a tree to situate yourself

you hope you'd find your way back home

daddy is mad and mommy is crying

the clouds are dark and it is raining heavily how cold your life

could be?

you'd wish you were not
alive
for as you tell me

life is loveless
and the path is a haze

life is a maze
and you have not found

the exit to all these nuances of vibrant anxieties i wish i could teach you where to find the correct door

i have taught you once but you never listened

i can do no more
i am helpless as a cat
outside the house
under the rain
i comfort myself with the idea that Life is the best teacher

and now it is Life itself that does what is right under the circumstances
uniquely you and i wouldn't mind anymore

what happens next

for the meantime
i am taking my own journey

Life too is teaching me Mindlessly....

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Nephew Newly Born

the most absolute beauty of course is your tiny hand i want to put there the warmth of my sighs the roundness of a peeble, the green minty scents of herbs, the little ponderous glances, a sunray, a whisper, a hush at the tips of your fingers wrinkles are always strangers there your skin so tight and magical not this callous hands of my sunset this roof without the moon and stars

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Nephew Who Dislikes Education....

at first my goal is to educate you, even without books to read since you hate
pages.

i take you to travel with me and i answer all your questions.

taste is a matter of cultivation. it is not born it is made.

you are born. I want to make you
sometimes
i am tempted to sculpt you into my own shape to draw you into my own image. It is defeating.
I am only one.

You are the product of the masses
the tendril of technology copied
and pasted
without original
thought.

who sculpted me?
i cannot point to a single name but i take pride in my shape and sound

you say there is so much angst in my face
and you ask where is beauty there?
for now i have no answers.
i am taboo.

i let you go.
let us see how the storms will shape you how the fading light
shall color you

unfinished painting with no
fixed value yet

you have become my new excitement
as nature shall take you
as another
experiment of mankind

next to suffer.
watch out.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Nephew Who Wrote That He Is In A State Of Depression...

first, know what a self
is,

put this matter clearly
at the entrance of your door

second, know what selfishness is
by nature we are
that truly selfish

draw a bold circle around your bed
sleep well
there

third, expect nothing sun neither moon
nor stars

sit by your window
when you wake up
at 3 a.m.

breathe, breathe
the fresh air of
loneliness

grow your wings let night be not a hindrance for your flight.

p.s.
you are too early for sorrow
do not skip that stage
of confusion

it is good for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A New Found Relative In Facebook

if your wish is just to live in peace or even just to be alive then you are just like anybody else in that old abandoned town where the only sound that you can hear is the sound of the bell of the church announcing another
death.

tell me something more: what do you really want to be in the future?
do not tell me that you will just be a vendor, or an ambulant worker, just like your papa, or a shoeshine boy like your grandpa when he was young,

you know, one must have a dream call it an ambition to have hope dreams are free, you do not need to pay that is our freedom do not deny yourself that you can be a lawyer, a doctor, a fireman an engineer,

or even just be a lover,
a man,

do not just exist, or live, think some more there is more to life than just sitting down, waiting, and all too boring...

RIC S. BASTASA
To A New Poet...

he who writes a poem marks a road with many stones gathers leaves and does not burn them
plants a seed and leaves it
to grow
wild as a forest
lives for a while and then goes away in a faraway place without any inkling
of coming back

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Niece Living In The Mountains....

how i wish
my distant niece
writes
another poem
for the
dry land?

how flowers
still grow
despite the
drought

how the mudfish
buries itself
and never die

how free is the hungry dove
flying in the sky?

we never pay
for the cost of the kindness of our words

how clouds
play well when sunset comes

how endless is
the flow of the
river
who never dreams
of sea

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Person Whom I Do Not Like To Speak....

i do not wish that you should know this.
the truth for instance, the question about the truth which you have also kept to yourself because perhaps knowing the answer, you refrained from asking. I also know the truth, but just like you i evade from it. I am not drunk. we are here anyway in one house, talking and living, without mentioning the word about this truth. We have assured life that we can live even without confronting it. we are not denying it, neither are we opening it. It could be a wound, or some cancer cell.

everyday wants to be the same everyday.
to live is to continue doing the ordinary things. no delineation no deviation, unless we are prepared to be shaken, knowing that experiencing this we may not be together, i.e. we may finally decide to part ways, which i think, under the usual circumstances, we still not prepared to embark. We are not drunk. Or if we are, please remain calm, maintain the composure.

is it not a beautiful day still?

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Poet

Poet

how can you mistake a plane for a bird? a mote for a fly? a tattoo for an eagle? a leaf for a butterfly? lament for a romance? reality for an illusion?

poet,

how did you heal a wound? through a balm of mere words? through a promise of after life?

poet

how can you be so kind in the midst of a war?

how did you put order in the chaos of your room? in the randomness of this universe how were you able to build an edifice for a purpose?

poet

how can you love someone who does not love you? care for one who does nothing but harm you? love and still love despite the penetrating pain of indifference?
poet

how can you make such a beautiful poem in the middle of your pain?
how can you have faith in the falling dominoes of doubts?

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Poet Who Writes More Poems When His Poem Is Published

when a poem is published more poems will be born that is the trick of an inspiration
at first

this is the philosophy of confirmation by publicity for a beginning

later, you will grow
and this is more beautiful

it is not anymore a published poem that inspires you to write more but your own spontaneous reaction to that feeling that despite everything you are still alone

you gaze around you
you look up to the heavens asking if the gods are there

you are dying
to live

there is a star and you become alive again

now you rely upon a distant star to write another poem of your life there is a better time
that suits us
and that is when you write even if all the stars in the heavens are dead

when we ourselves
are darkness fused in the darkness of space and the universe

when our silence and the silence of everything dead become inextinguishable

when a poem is published more poems will be born
that is the trick of an inspiration
at first

this is the philosophy of confirmation by publicity
for a beginning

later, you will grow
and this is more beautiful

it is not anymore a published poem that inspires you to write more
but your own spontaneous reaction to
that feeling that despite everything
you are still alone

you gaze around you
you look up to the heavens asking if the gods are there

you are dying
to live

there is a star and you become alive again

now you rely upon a distant star to write another poem of your life
there is a better time
that suits us
and

that is when you write even if all the stars in the heavens are dead

when we ourselves
are darkness fused in the darkness of space and the universe

when our silence and the silence of everything dead
become inextinguishable

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Poet....

Ah,
while you were reading
your opus,
i did not listen

i am a fly trapped in a bottle and i am preoccupied with my own problem

i am not looking for an exit i am not asking for help

i am buzzing
and i will just be buzzing in this short

very short stint....

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Restless Friend

My restless friend
If only you were here
Seeing the limpid river Sleeping
On top
Of Malindang Mountain

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Reverberating Sound

must i have a defective ear that you have to repeat for many times what you have to tell me?

i have heard them all and i wish i can understand the meaning of echoes these words that vibrate like a rattlesnake in the desert these waves of radar that detects a floating ship in the middle of the storm

when will this hypnosis end?

i have heard them all, and i think they are still so beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Rose

a rose
for whatever reason
may change
its name

its petals
could be hurt
its sepals
abused

a rose can hide beside her
thorns

it is hurt
and it can hurt

a rose
wilts
how can it
prevent it?

whatever
happened
the rose is always a part
of my
being

for whatever reason
that it changes its name

a rose will always be
a rose
to me
RIC S. BASTASA
To A Sacred Place

on the last day of June all the petals have fallen on the ground but there is a hill in the place of sanctity where flowers begin to bloom i am walking up there to see this diversity when the petals go and leave no trace when in another place flowers bloom without our notice

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Sickness

on a few steps one grasps for breathe
and stops awhile to rest

the doctors laugh
there is nothing that says that a part of your body is sick

you resign for something embrace what cannot be possible in your matrix of beliefs here comes an old woman with short hands

gnarled fingers and cannot even understand English

she looks at you
her gaze penetrates the layers of your being and touches your soul

she lifts her head to the sky and talks to the sun and says that there is a needle sticking to your left arm you cannot see what it is or where it is

she only asks you to believe and then you are well

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Swindling Distant Relative...

the reason why you come is my money.

you come limping like a frog whose hind foot is bitten by a snake.

you show a face of failure. you lose some teeth. your hair is becoming grey.

you have always lied to me. But i never tire giving you what you want.

when you leave this room i am relieved.

a thorn is lifted from my brain.

i am happy i am not like you.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Teacher/Poet Named Fred

i know Fred
and i remember him he always wrote
about the rain

there was no flood in his rain
i mean
there is no rage or anger in him

just the gentle shower of rain
a soft spoken kind
of rain

a patient shower cressing fine sands on many dark nights when he was always alone watching those stars

those silent stars
he loved loneliness
and loneliness loved him

he did not live
that long
he died at forty

the rain remembered him and in his grave
that day when he was buried the rain, as gentle as the early morning wind fine feathers cotton soft sings the last

hymn for him

it was sad & it was lonely the flowers and the butterflies all sighed

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Wife

he thinks
going nothing to say tonight.

it is better that way than cause unnecessary pain.

the silence stabs.
cuts deeply than what he expected.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Wife Who Is Taking Things For Granted

i am an examination and you fill in the blanks and i decide what answers are right
if you fail
you know what teachers
can do

please pass
please.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Woman That I Think I Know

tonight
i shall climb the old mango tree that papa planted when i was still too young
to understand
the fading of the moon

i shall cling to one of its strong branches but due to my weight it shall crack and given in and fall

i shall fall with it straight to the mud hole where papa's carabao
is wallowing

then i shall ride upon its back hold its tail
and it shall run towards a creek where i shall plunge and clean myself and then rise
from its waters

and then i shall meet you again and you shall tell me how interesting things
have been

i shall ask from you

which has been so interesting?

is it me? or my falling?

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Woman Who Wants To Write To Be Someone Else

hello don't be someone else listen to your voice do not borrow their tone take your intensity just be yourself
listen everyday to the sound of your soul it will always have something to say to you why wait for his door to open?

you have your house
its door is broken and it will just be you doing the repairs it will just be you and no other listen some more hear the harkings of your soul now it is whispering

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Young Man On His Maiden Voyage At Poetry

i am confronted with a very long and wide shore filled with sands and pebbles though the waves are gentle and the clouds so blue and the far horizon as peaceful like a line drawn by a pen on a piece of yellow paper everything seems very familiar nothing new except you little blue bird chirping and i am amazed you are more beautiful than the rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
To A Young Writer

i surf the faces of young writers this one: bites his pencil and wanting to smile at the same time (how could he do both?) the other girl on the right side of the hall with bangs is fat, chinky eyed, wear blue jeans

and collarless white shirt she stares at the PowerPoint four stones above each other and on top a butterfly, a metaphor for transformation each stone is a virtue to achieve a pillar

soon,

the guy wants time to have wings the girl breaks into laughter he says he imagines feathers around his body she breaks into laughter again her point is: birds are not metaphors anymore his point: she is numb, and she does not think anymore awareness, silence, stone silence pointlessly thoughts are useless with what is there it is there already and all we can do is just see, feel, observe and be touched by the hands of time the body of language, the fingers of compassion, the strangled hair of doubt spangled stars and running stripes the eagle that ate all the stars the apple that did not like the eight rays of the sun i am tired this early morning.

Breakfast is served.
To A Younger Brother

it does not matter if you shout at me or even plan to kill me it does not matter if you leave me or take all that i have it does not matter matter if you lose whatever you take from me if you come back i will still be here waiting for you

to give you what you need to heal what is broken within you to cheer you up to let you stand up again and be a man yourself for i have given my word to Mama for i will not lie before Papa's grave for i am your older brother and i was born to take care of you my younger brother

RIC S. BASTASA
To All The Disciples Of Pain

come to me, for i will be your teacher of pain, and lots of its kinds, uANCES and
variations,

come to me and i will teach you how to dissect pain identify its flesh and bones muscle to muscle cartilage to cartilage nerve to nerve to the tiniest cell of this pain in all of us

we study this pain
we learn what is it really this pain, like the way how we dissected the frog nailed before us still alive numbed & dead in chloroform we see how the frog breathes how we skin it how we see how it ceases to have pain

after all is done
we throw the frog away in some trash can after we have deprived it of its skeleton bleached like a blank stare we ask ourselves how do we look at it eye to eye without pity

as we prick it with a long shining needle deep to its backbone and then we remember how pain dissipated in strong chloroform how we ourselves inflicted it without any feeling at all now shall we blame ourselves having pain ourselves when we ourselves love to inflict them in frogs in mankind in the person that we also claim to love?

RIC S. BASTASA
To Always Be The Self Amidst These Cacophonies to always reconcile the myriad sounds

within

a rock cracking in extreme heat
a chirping bird calling
for help
a rushing water on the
river
looking for home to always reconcile and not to leave any sound unattended

when the mundane sounds of the dusts finally reconcile itself with the heavenly songs of clouds and fog and
dew

to always be the self amidst these cacophonies

RIC S. BASTASA
To An Acquaintance In Facebook, Whom, I Could Have Blocked First.

The moon did it
the earth came late
the eclipse has begun.

RIC S. BASTASA
To An Enemy Who Still Keep The War

it is quite a long time already all the flowers that bloomed have already wilted the water in the river ran dry and the pebbles have kept the same silence of the tombstones shall you still wage this war against me my silence had long conquered you and there is nothing to talk about anymore all the words erase themselves there is nothing to swallow anymore yet you are there fully dressed in rusty armors i do not know how to approach you but today i shall keep my mind open i could have laughed so loud that the planets can hear it your eyes are sharp as your sword but they find no relevance anymore
if you only know
before me and long time ago you have been pronounced dead by all my senses.

RIC S. BASTASA
To An Ex....

what we told them that we did was all those games of catching spiders rested in their spun webs on the trees beside the mountain river we we really did they knew so well but how can we ever ever tell?

that what they knew was not all that happened as it was something else more that what spiders are on their transparent webs of illusions upon those trees that in the first place never existed

what we had were more than words and thoughts and so how can we ever tell ourselves truly
that we have already forgotten?

RIC S. BASTASA
To An Old Friend From Utah

even if what you have are mere desert flowers with nothing but tiny blue petals less the dead yellow butterflies and gray grains of sand let me still say thank you for opening my mind towards deserts and dry winds and starless nights and faraway places of the lonely heart you have met freedom as i still have to know what its name really is

RIC S. BASTASA
honestly
i do not write to impress
you
with what i have in mind or what i am
to you or the rest of those who are reading
each word

i write because i have to express myself

it is like a pressure cooker
you know
trying to make the hard meat
soft to my eating
that steam being let go
on those vents

simply to avoid an explosion.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Avoid Rejection

take a part of your pelvic bone

close your eyes
let someone take the flesh

and bone to bone
of your own bone

let it grow
smoothly

to get rid of the pain and start anew

bone to bone
of my contention
following yours
nothing
opposing blood following the flow

RIC S. BASTASA
To B. Who Called Me My Name

you are my mirror
it is easy to understand did you not notice when you look at me when we finally see each other's eagerness to finally keep things to ourselves alone?

you finally utter what i do not want to hear and i blurt it back at you and then we finally erase each other's existence on facebook

there is a decent way to live a lie
and live it fully well as though it is the most beautiful life that we can ever have

i never explain a thing about myself
for there is no need
really

what you see what you hear what you feel is all
that i am
and there is no use of any word for that

who can trust this world?
you play a game
that i too well play
the names we got
are not us

finally i throw back what you said
in your once beautiful
face....

RIC S. BASTASA
it is easy for me to understand why you live in the darkness of your poetry time does not live there. There is no morning light to mark the day, and darkness thrives like a tunnel, without any hint that at the end there is light.
you live there. You live there for a long, long time and you shed off your eyes, and hands, and eventually you lose the sense of a face. you like it there. It is all emotions. Strong as a river inside the cave. You may have lost your eyes, but you have seen more.
You may have lost your hands, but you are feeling and touching more.
It is the darkness that has provided you the sense of eternity. There is no time here. It is dead. And There is no sense of remembering what had been there before.
You flow in this darkness like a river inside a tunnel. The only sound you hear is the journey with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be A Writer

They say, when you have nothing to say
Do not say anything
They say when you have nothing good to say
Do not say anything
He is not convinced
He wants to be a writer and to be one he must write What is in his mind
To be a writer he must write and write and write Even when there is nothing to write Even when there is nothing to say even when nobody listens Even when the word is dead even when there is no sense at all Even when he gets blind and deaf and mute even when his fingers are cut even when his mind is blank even when his consciousness is lost Even when you are angry even when you say what is written is nothing But trash, dung, cadaver, corpse, poo, pee, even when there is nothing
Anymore,
He writes because he is a writer and no one can stop him now.
he is
he is writing
he is writing always he is writing always whatever that needs to be written and here you are foolishly reading. thanks to you, audience of one.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Alone....

and then he said
at the party that night at the veranda overlooking the fronds
where two lovers are kissing

' i hate it here ' he declares drinks more glasses of hard liquor
drunk, ' but why am i here still? ' he looks at me i have a drink too,

' perhaps, you have to leave since you do not like it here? ' the logical me speaking

' i am staying ' he is tipsy.
' i hate it here that is why i am staying ', quizzical idea

'do you like to die?
jump over this building and be gone ', deep inside me but how can i tell him?

i am still strong
and i want to be alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Always Ready....

to be ready

till the end, to be ready when

that end

finally comes,

not to worry,

no one to blame

not to fret,

nothing to give,

to be always ready

like a bird

hit by a bullet,

like a flower

cut from its stem,

like a glass

broken, all pieces scattered

on the floor.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be And Not Be....

i am not that an old man yet and so i cannot tell you that i have taken the prize of wisdom,

i may say i am still at this stage of denial trying to hide my white hairs with that black dye my old smell with spice and my weakness with laughter and wit,

i want to be true to myself and relieve it with the comfort of these lies.I say i miss you.
I say i cannot have you. it is an accepted impossibility.

i have long accepted this.
i set you aside like a flower that i love where i keep saying i do not need flowers and i do not love what delights me.

i say i am content with restraint. I am happy with limitations. I am surviving with the code of my own valor.

this is the hour somehow that i give in and here i am savoring my own presence in the silence of my own chosen hours.

i now give you the reason for writing. Because you cannot love that much, you write how is it to love and be not requited.
this is the sacrifice of all lovers. To love and be not loved in return. To be silent and yet not rebel. To live and just be happy in the slow death of all emotions. To be and not be.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Bold... And Be Naked To The The Body Of Truth...

actually
i may be candid with a lie or pragmatic with this truth
that in these lines along a series of words linked by some chosen letters
sounding like some monotonous syllables
like the calm waves of the sea at night
that i am actually saying nothing like air or sea breeze at night lighted by a cigarette that you you puffing
to air
that this is nothing but air
nothing logical
nothing symmetrical
nothing fleshy
just air
and you nod and say
yes it is air
nothing but air
but somehow makes you feel the cold
and it is really cold
and it is something to be bold.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Brave....

a cat can scare
two buffaloes, or a chick can make a crow fly away, when you simply
try to be brave.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Candid With You....

everyone is looking for that secret garden

with a fountain or spring where eternal youth can be taken

everyone is finding a clue to that perfect hue something to subdue, and only for the few that perfect chew

everyone wants to write the perfect rhyme of a poem that gluttony of fame the avarice of shame

today, i take courage in facing everyone to tell them
candidly, that there is no such thing as a secret garden or that eternal youth of fountain or spring nothing about a perfect clue to a perfect hue,
no such thing as a perfect chew no such thing too as a perfect poem with that perfect rhyme

there is only you,

always searching,
the imperfect one, always looking for something that is not you that is not here
you are you,
you are not perfect
you get old,
and then you die and then you're gone

that is the truth,
and there is no other.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Carried Away Just Like All The Feathers

THERE IS nothing to argue i have discarded that chicken and egg thing i have feathers which i spread in the sky from this cliff it will take much time before they all arrive in the river and then when on the river these feathers will be taken by the water flowing into different places of the heart and the mind and the dispositions of all those who like us still search for homes there is nothing to argue for i do not argue with you i am carried away.....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Content About What Is Missing

i rush to pluck words from the twigs of memory trees lining on the avenues of my mischief

words are flowers
and thoughts are colors my lips are hands with open fingers

i think of you
as always
i feel you like air inside my lungs

i see nothing but i am content about what is missing

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Courteous

to be courteous
to this society where i live i pocket my smile
i swallow my pride

you see me chewing a gum and you order me
to swallow it because you don't like seeing me chewing this mint

i swallow it
in your name
and behave as though nothing happened no i will not tell anybody i will not tell about you or your name i will not retaliate

i will just write
this poem

if you call this a poem at all this shame
and this shamelessness of you

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Drifting And Airborne  And Then Be Gone

he got neither speed nor direction, what he got is truth with him,

that sometimes
like wood on the river fallen from its sturdiness

man floats too
and does nothing about his situation

perhaps fed up or tired or simply enjoys it that way

to rely on the universe its waters and air
to be drifting and airborne

and then be gone

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Empty All Over Again And Move Like The Wind

if you decide to live in the kingdom of
the clouds
learn the tricks of the learned
skies

to float like a dream is a must there is no settling there like the dust

to master the art of silence no chirping birds
no rippling of the water

to take all the heavy ones and keep for a while
and then to burst like thunder
to flow like rain

to be empty all over again
and move like the wind

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Faceless To Be Loveless In A Crowd Alone

tell me honey
how does it feel to be lonely to be faceless
to be loveless
in a crowd of people, thousands of them walking roaming this earth all looking for love and not finding any in a crowd of namelessness always looking at each other in short glimpses without saying
hello?

tell me how does it feel now when he left you and when you told him i do not need you

when your heart
calls for his name saying i still love you,
but you didn't tell me how to tell myself when i have pretended too much not needing anyone when alone in my room now

i wish
i in an instant dies, begging for company
for someone
to touch
warmth

tell me how to breathe now tell me how to live tell me how to love and keep love and live this broken
heart
in this faceless, loveless locomotion in a crowd
where there is practically no one
to say
hello

not even goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Faithful With What We See

perhaps let us
just be faithful with what we see.

it is a green sparrow perched upon a brown twig on a tree
without leaves
on a sunny day
beside a river where a white dog with black spots
is watching.

do not say that the dog is longing for the sparrow and wants to catch it with its paws
or
that the sparrow regrets its green feathers and since then
had lost its appetite for flight
or
that the tree is so depressed losing all its leaves to the greed of the
river
punished to flow
till eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Frank With You

i've read all the answers to your questions and to be frank with
you
not one satisfies my discriminating quest
the words are bland the deductions are not that logical enough to appease
my boredom

but i will not fail you i will let you survive and move on with your life it is your honesty
that makes you live
it is your persistence that must punish you and when your prayers are granted do not ever think that the gods are all pleased.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Free

i am made of dreams
free to weave them

i am made of hope
free to sigh with them

i am made of love
free to be hurt

i am made to be free and like the wind

i am condemned
away from everyone.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Free....

to obtain finally your freedom with words unbound from their clasps
you must not mind
the claps that you all long to long
to hear
and yet to distant like the usual stars
at night
when you are alone standing high on a mountain trying to reach
what you cannot take into your hands into your house.

to be free is to be owned by nothing to long for nothing and to write for nothing at all

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Free....(Revised For The Clerical Error, 'too Instead Of To')

to obtain finally your freedom with words
unbound from their clasps
you must not mind
the claps that you all long to long
to hear
and yet too distant like the usual stars
at night
when you are alone standing high on a mountain
trying to reach
what you cannot take into your hands into your house.

to be free is to be owned by nothing
to long for nothing and to write for nothing at all

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Fully Alive.....

to a certain
phenomenon one need not really understand, one must only gaze,
feel, flow, and float, one need not say anything
to be fully alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Happy Altogether

yesterday the used plates and stained cups and saucers and spilled coffee and bread with molds disturbed me i was thinking about the bugs and the rats and the bacteria and the disease and death, the whole night i could not sleep i am bothered about the negligence of other people their lackadaisical attitude and how i should have remedied situation and cure the diseases of our society it is a matter of social responsibility and environmental if not political maturity saying there is a time for making a difference this morning my eyes sink inside my sockets like marbles inside a black hole and i entertain the idea of the possibility that i may finally go blind because i think too much about what to do and how to do things to make this world a better place to live in and yet i have really done nothing and the possibility that i may have bad karma in the last analysis is not a remote happening

i realized that i am not enjoying my life anymore concerned as i am about the disease the cockroaches the rats and the emerging sharp edges of the sickle that death is carrying in my fields of hay

i make a conclusion that this is not good for me after all i am part of this mess that cockroaches infest that rats crawl and dirty with their tiny feet and stinking tail and that all these bacteria despite what science has been doing still thrive upon their new shapes and wise mutations that virus love this earth and will always be here to stay and kill so many

and so....

i tell myself: stop the worrying learn to accept what is here and then be happy altogether.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Honest With You

the christmas songs are played and i do not remember anything anymore these songs come and go and my years are shorter. last year

is just like today.

there is no meaning anymore.
and i am not giving any chunk of me anymore.

i am sealed. i am a house with doors and windows closed.
i am sleeping inside it.
and it will be years before i wake up.

don't worry. i will not tell them that you are a part of me.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Just Human

i have no wish but just to be human to be before you and we talk and then i say something that is wrong and then you all laugh and i too laugh the way you laugh at me and then i tell you thanks, i am just like you, my brothers and sisters, i ask an apology for my frailty.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Like Them

now is the time to change you said it well you simply like to be yourself and they are so pleased they call you angel.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Loved...

when i come back
it will not be this me, ..unloved, i have loved much,
greater than yours,

i will not be you
i will be another,
whatever that be,
i will not be this,
unloved...i want to be whoever and
whatever,

someone loved by another, much greater than mine,
or i could be something
you can love,
and even if i too in that state
cannot love you
in return, i just want to feel

how is it to be loved
that much.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Nobody One Lonely Christmas

to sit in silence in one corner of the mall inside a flood of
people

no one knows you
and you know no one

you put both arms on the side of the chair
look around
and sip your coffee

it is only once a year that you find yourself here

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Read With The Playing Of Mozart's Clarinet Quintet In A, K 581

I ONCE will remember you entering inside my life like a view from the hills a black bird perched on a branch of mahogany there for hours staring at me tried to shoo you away you stayed like i am this man that owed you something and i have not paid you what you deserve

i closed my door and peeped upon a hole of light you are still there

there was rain and storm and thunder and lightning i closed my door and windows and checked the roof for leaks blackbird you are still there staring at the house unmoved by my injustices you are the black bird undying you are the song insistent upon itself

inside my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Real

to be real as a man to be more
of the man
in our humanity

one must fall into sin
and feel
the misery
of our ancestors

one must experience what falling is in sin
in guilt
in falling from grace

only then can you feel what Adam and Eve felt the first time
only then
can paradise be so meaningful

only then
can the snake and the apple be so real

the hardness of its flesh right
in your own hands
the crispness
of its taste
right in your teeth and tongue

only then
can God be so loud
that you cannot but hear Him
only then
after the fall
that you can feel the gentleness of God
whose hands caress
the entangled hairs
in your head

it is in the falling that grace comes and mercy and compassion so real
and so understandable

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Real I Have To Be Nasty Sometimes

i

I don’t smile
You may think I am giving you
The permission
To think
That I really do not mean What I say
With this grin on my face

ii

I stand my ground now
No backing off
On a wishy-washy
I give weight
To my prime intentions

iii

I tell the truth
I will tell you what I feel I will tell you that I am not comfortable With what you are doing

iv

Tell me I am silly
I will agree
I am not a little bit touchy You are right I am Now take the wind out of your sails

v
I do not have fingers
To point
To make you more defensive I have only my heart
To tell you how I feel
Who are you anyway
To be blamed?

vi

I will make up a list of handy excuses To see what is clearly going on Before I put myself in the fray

vii

I am not afraid
To change my mind Whenever I want to
In a minute or two
I may still have time
To tell you
That sometimes I do not Honor commitments.

now, i will be happier

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Red

i may blend with the red sky again clouds colored black Rising from the earth Floating on red skies

The sun Is gray Rectangular to the Earth shaped like
An ovum
a sensate object
splashes in the sea
Like an inverted comma

He is Icarus
He just drowned

They do not think It is I

The sea is not green
It is black

I am trying to be Off-white

for you
To see

But you can’t You did not try
seeing hard enough.

You have no time
For this
For me
Or anything else.

Sometimes I think
I should have Grown myself into a suicide bomber
And then explode
Inside you.

Perhaps you
Will notice me Finally.

My Color must not Be red.

I may Blend with the Red sky again.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Somebody

it is nice to be somebody like that great man

but it is too sad too harsh and annihilating to lose myself just to be somebody now i like being nobody it is me and there is no other

i can sit and just be alone gazing at all of them panicking

to be that great somebody.
i smile. i am cool. i am myself and you still love me.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Be Strong To Be Brave And Be Unique.

when you speak
everyone listens
no one speaks back
there is fear.

in that yes world
everyone becomes like you in uniformity.

it is a sad duplication of just you and you
and you.

all the food there
tastes the same.
there is so much salt
but no one is
complaining.

all shadows are the same.
all fading at the same time.
no one is in a hurry to be oneself. To be strong to be brave and be unique.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Become A Part In The Harmony Of The Whole

sometimes you feel
that you are a driftwood arriving at a river
with no one
living there

you stay for a while curious like a bird resting upon a twig
upon a long migratory
journey
towards a warmer place
of this earth

then you have to go again drifting
because you have no choice but to drift
hoping that someday
when this flooding is over you shall find someone who will make something out of you

a furniture, or a decorative piece of art in the interior of a beautiful house where children shall ask their mama what kind of art
are you?

you like to answer
i am an abandoned driftwood once i was a part of the great designs of trees in the forest but i was cut off and left out
to rot

now someone gave me significance
a motif, a purpose
a piece of an artwork

and then you like it there you are the center of this theme

art and love, a part of a whole, a mess  fabricated into a harmony of a family in a house

someone plays a violin and then you begin to listen

RIC S. BASTASA
To Begin With

to begin with
he smiles and they begin to like him because he is contagious his smile travels from one place to another like the way the butterfly hovers from one flower another flower in the garden of peace and quiet

to begin with
he keeps a hold on something that makes him happy despite the odds despite the fact that it is his own house that is burning despite the fact that all the bridges going to his place have all been broken

to begin with
he is naked and he has nothing to cover himself anymore
to begin with
he is foremost his own being and it is only this that all of them cannot take anymore and so he keeps the promise to maintain this emptiness so they may all become full and guilty and sad.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Begin With.....

one way to begin
is to rearrange a set of furniture

done this time you want more light from the window more space in the dining area and a blank wall where you can hang a painting of flower fields and a river where a woman brings her body for the bathing

someone is coming back home and you want to show that there are changes

the motif is welcome and colors are as bright as sun rising scents of lemons curtains could be light as they could still be warm too and your dog looks at you waiting for another walk on an early cold morning

perhaps you have not forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
To Belong

Upon a toilet paper
i wrote a love poem.

as i pooed and pooed
i read the poem
with all love

i emoted, and
emoted some more
with no one
watching
crazy.
after the release
comes the
sanity and
peace

short reality.
short time really.

i folded the tissue
and cleaned my ass.

the poem went
happily
into the bowl

happy to where it rightly believes it belongs

RIC S. BASTASA
To Build A House

to build a house, a beautiful one, i just do not need land and nails not just wood, and grass not just beams and roofs, for they are but necessities, projections of the house upon a hill

of the mind,

to build a house, one needs the soul of the home,
the words of memories, the gutters
of our emotions,

unlike you, my house requires the fences
and walls
keeping away the ill winds of publicity, the rumors of who i was, a slope, the steep one, inclined towards no other than the whiteness of the sky

RIC S. BASTASA
To Buy Tranquility

i watch at the
errand boy sewing an old pillow case

i left an instruction to close the mouth of the pillow and then cover it anew
with another green hue of silk cloth
from my wife's cabinet

in this case something so old
is sewn and given a new dress

from young hands
a new body is sculpted
to buy tranquility

RIC S. BASTASA
To C. Who Posts That His Sunday Is Lazy....

ducks here
and dogs, you prefer

the yard has become your Sunday

zoo,

another Sunday
alone with all these animals

i wonder why you have not taken an Eve in this Garden, Adam?

RIC S. BASTASA
two opposite time zones we know it but not so different geographically we must so suppose

you have forgotten to write a poem
for me
but i still write one poem for you
to remember
that someone from one of the islands in the Far East still cares for you and worries much when you start to have insomnia

i will never be cold as a snow there there is not such coldness here in my heart
i will be always as warm as the sun that you first saw here soft as the foams of the sea where you first learned how to swim gentle as the marshes floating on the river where we tried to catch fish on a summer day it is a promise. Good Night.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Change Me?

when you arrive here you change the paint of the house you like it pastel blue on the door white on the walls and green on the windows

you change the landscape except of the wanton garden you opt for a manicured lawn and some of my trees and shrubs have to be cut down,
some flowers have to go you bring in the violets, and lavenders and white champacases you like a scent from around
you
specially during the night when we simply sit on the lawn

now you begin to demand some changes from me
the time when i wake up or sleep
you like soap i like sports you want me to enjoy love stories

the color of my socks my tie my polo shirts

i give in for a while but there is an end to all these tries to change me

you cannot,
i am me before the landscape before the paints of the house i am me before the lawns and flowers and socks and shirts and soap
i am already me before you arrive to my house
to my life

you cannot change me
because i love who i am what i am and i know perfectly just what i want to make
myself
even without you,

make some more attempts to change me and i will ask you to leave at once

RIC S. BASTASA
To Change Or Not To Change That Is No Longer The Question For Me

I Like the way
how things remain unchanged with you

i must like them for i have no choice

you really do not change and i have no one to talk to

if you leave me that could perhaps be the only change there is

and who knows?
i may like it that way too for i am but a practical man to change or not to change that is no longer the question the night has come and what i have is only its darkness my bed shall only be its coldness and silence

RIC S. BASTASA
To Choose Unhappiness.....

it is complicated, i must admit.
 alright, i must admit, for it is true deep from the heart of me, i like you, alright it is not that much i cannot say i love you there is a time of indecision. And honesty. like to have you with me, in a room for a night. but to live with you is a no no a cannot be.

alright, i may like you forever, but i cannot love you this moment. i like to kiss you and hug you and make love with you.

but it is not that easy. i have a face. and this body.
i know what shame is. The fall of almost everyone. thrones broken. Lives falling apart, homes broken.

lives shaken. Despair and hope combined. Another tragedy strikes the home. Leaving and leaving and with no apparent homecoming.

i decide not to touch you. I am strong. I have an A for restraint. I am cool and i am not just a hormone dose.

I am a person and i choose. I choose integrity.
ce and strong suffering.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Connect Himself To God

to make this divine connection from his human ity

he writes a poem about a kite that a child makes from sticks and paper and some paste
to stick them in together like a symbolism
of body and soul

and the child puts the paper tail as rudder
of this kite and then he runs to the field to find the wind to give his kite a lift
to the skies

high spirited like his soul and his body
wanting to be with God up there

after this i will ask him,
the child (or the child in him) or simply him the man who who writes a poem about a kite lifting itself up with the wind of his beautiful words:

do you feel something divine?
was there something divine in this poem about a kite?
did you feel God?
did you see him up in the skies above?

you tell me about angels, now tell me, my friend about the presence of God tell me more, about this kite this flight this wind do not mention anything about power i am always this suspicious believer.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Correct An Error

an error is an error and errors exist for the main reason that they are meant to be corrected it takes the eyes of the loving person to correct the errors of his beloved

gently and carefully away from the mob and the crowd that love the mockery of errors corrected in the middle of the public halls

inside a closed door
i hold your hand
caress your face and your hair
and kiss you and then tell you you taste like a rotten apple.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Create Nothing.... to measure

my responsibility you leave it
blank for me

a white sand
i have become a wave
and i always erase what is written destroy what is built

you measure my responsibility to put everything in place
again

i always arrive
to erase what is there
wave upon wave
tongue after tongue every word there is deleted

white sands
foams and foams of
sea

it is my responsibility
to you
for you created me
to create
nothing....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Cut The Thread......

give me
if i cut the thread

it is not that strong anymore

and so
nothing is really wasted....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Dance And Sing

what do we need to be happy?

no props
we can always dance on bare feet
under the rain

no microphones
we can always sing
the songs of our hearts

we live, dance and sing naked deep in the night the moon watches

on the river
waters splashing

RIC S. BASTASA
To Death...

decath is not a surprise when it comes, one feels the coming inside the heart

you must have heard people telling you a language that lands beyond the moment the one that you understand the moment you arrive there it is that..

because they know, they speak and because you find it hard to accept they utter it in such a way that for now you shall not figure it out completely
a puzzle that seems to have an answer at that point when they have all been gone without having to tell you goodbye

why should you quarrel about death?
decath is just an errand man following orders too from the Great Man

when the time comes do you run away? where? do you ask that you carry your prized possession? or a loved one?

absurd, you can do nothing but be in that boat your mouth sealed, your arms bound, your heart stops your brain blank.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Depression

when you are tipsy
i know what
you will
say

you're not drunk

i do not ask
because i have respect
for those moments
when we need alcohol
most

RIC S. BASTASA
To Die Is To Live

what you can take from me
take it now
for i am destined
for another

to Live with You
is To die
and To die within Me is To live Again with Eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
To Die....

a white butterfly
on a yellow leaf
a brown centipede upon a gray pavement
black and white pebbles on a pink coral beach.

soft winds from the hills golden sun slowly rising showers of rain from the sky what a beautiful day to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Different People

it is about to rain
the clouds are dark and heavy along the road
two people are quarreling about their having forgotten the umbrella
the goat is tied on the tree and the cow is looking for escape
when the rain falls
the driver of the car that got stuck on the canal is cursing

on the other side
the children are playing and shouting they all love
the first rain of summer

RIC S. BASTASA
To Distinguish A Farm From A Forest

the child in her cannot yet distinguish a farm from a forest that having seen for the first time a bunkhouse beneath those coconut trees she told her mommy that they are now in the forest and that she plans to write about tarzan and jane,
and the monkeys and tigers, sometimes i miss kids and sometimes i think i could have been a better teacher

RIC S. BASTASA
To Do Our Duty....

it is 1:05 pm
and it is very hot outside this air-conditioned room
and there are
two old men waiting

do not tell me that it is not time yet
or that you need sleep or ask that question:

why are they too early?
what is it that they want?

open the door. Let them in.
Share the luxury of your position.

Give them air.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Do The Things That You Do Not Like

you set it aside on the left and you take back what you like to do scribbling a poem or two on the wide blank monitor you type a syllable and tells you a sweet sound and inspired you write a word that starts to sing a song and more words that sings to you a melody about love and departure

some loves of course remembered
those that ended happily in bed and

marriage and sweet surrender and living happily ever after this is the fantasy of your fingers and your salivating tongue and your lips biting upon each other: love, love and its memories they keep asking about you that you must speak them again then pain, the twin sister of love gets inside your system your heart bleeds and blood drips from your chest to your abdomen staining the carpet of the floor sad, how sad is this life when one says she is leaving and will not be coming back, that there is and end to this film this fantasy? now it is too much and you decide to take back what you just set aside. now, you swallow the real pill of bitterness, mother says it is good for your health. You take a folder of a case, and then you start reading their stories, their pains and hopes too.

now, you must do what you do not like doing. i guess, let me tell you, it is time to be responsible.
not to think about yourself. how about them?

RIC S. BASTASA
To Dong And Jamila

Soon you will be joined
As one
This marriage of two worlds Apart
Extreme worlds
Moslem and Christian Beyond religion
Beyond culture
Beyond what your families Prohibit
Your love must be true Tested against time
As both of you shall say Yes, I do
The man now takes this woman As his wife

Back then to the free world of love
There will be no differences Or if there be any Your love shall provide the patch Her love shall provide the needle and the threads And both of you shall sew What was torn with Such tender and loving hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Dr. P

Sisyphus my friend
what rock shall we roll
tonight
on this hilltop?

tell me, what size of rock fits my size today, i am big and my shoulders are broad i have a happy disposition i am used to all these burdens and they all seem the same to me i get used to rolling rocks and i like them all they all feel the same to me

RIC S. BASTASA
To Dream....

this Christmas i shall give love i shall dream and i shall share with you whatever i love and whatever
i dream

i am freeing myself from money because what i shall give you
is free.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Drive A Point, I Collect Pebbles And Leaves.

to drive a point i will not use a hammer. oh i like avoidance. Your gaze for instance.
I do not exchange it with mine.
I go to the sea, write on the shore and let the waves do the hiding.

To drive a point, i collect pebbles and leaves.
And then i throw them all away after a hard effort.

You ask what is the point that i am driving at.
I leave a space. I put nothing there.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Each His Own

i've seen this guy
and read his works all centered towards sex: oral, and whatever nothing about missions and i've heard about
this girl
new sprouting writer
in town
focusing on religion and God
i think they make a nice pair.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Each His Own...

that is life.
the mother is breastfeeding her baby on the bus, the father is holding the back pack of clothes.
the driver is looking beyond towards a common
destination.
an old man holds to his cane.
his grandson holds on to his toy.
the man beside you soon shall get out of the bus.
and then you are left on your own figuring out next what to do with your life.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Each His Own.....

because the birds always come here
every morning
render their songs
and stay for a while because you are kind with your grains
not selfish with your time because the trees
offer themselves as homes because the boy was taught to just watch how they fly away
there is no chaos here nothing bloody
there is harmony
because this is it
keeping each in place and in freedom this nook has long yielded itself to peace and quiet....

and this is where home is
to each his own
to sing each song
and wander long....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Each Own Uniqueness...

as the grass grows unique on some serrations the soil too recognizes the uniqueness of its own
striations

the one on top
learns to respect the one at the bottom

that's life says the drifting clouds

RIC S. BASTASA
To Earth

i am not here as a guest i am never served and nothing is free

i pay for every service of yours
i pay the price for every inch of
life

i do not eat a free meal
i always pay the price of anxious hours

i give my skin
i shed off

i barter my mind
i am left blankly staring
at the
sunset

i traded my future for all your stars

and what i have is just this moment

say the word
i am always willing to give it back when i leave let no one say that i owe someone something that i carry what once was borrowed by me

i do not claim ownership i only have my burdens

i am dignified
i always have this freedom to go and be with no one else i do not own anyone and no one owns me

i know the law which i have pawned for nothing less but equity

i paid the price
i give everything away

now i am all empty and as uttered by that old and dying poetess i have also become so ripe so full

falling becomes my own
perfection
my pulp and sweetness and even all my bitterness is enough
to pay the price of every inch of life and when death receives me will both hands

i say nothing because i owe no one and one one owes me

nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
To Ease The Anger Of The Hands

let the hand hold the grains of corn
let these hands
form the knife to stab the water
to feel the
slipping of the sands
to caress the cottons from the summer fields
to hold an egg
of the black bird
to touch
the petals of a flower that blooms
this month
of June

RIC S. BASTASA
To Eat Or To Be Eaten...

that morning when we were watching the sun rising from
the horizon
the white seagulls arrived and like a swarm of bees
dive into the surface of tiny waves and we who are not that strangers to each other know fully well
that they are there because of those fish, their prey
and this is what it is all about it:
everyone comes for
a reason, either to eat or be eaten.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Emily...(And Alice)

As the coldness of the night Comes over my window
I know deep in my heart Your loneliness in the big city

RIC S. BASTASA
To Empty All Today To Catch Up A Tomorrow

To break away from Those rules
Even your own
Waste money and time Squander a self Scatter all kept memories To empty all
Today to catch up
A tomorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
To Feel And To Think....

oft repeated
what pleases you
before
pleases you not
anymore

to finally eradicate what destroys you
you must listen, go into it, and soon feel the numbness that you get it must be you

who must be convinced foremost
that it is not giving you the goodness
that you deserve

listen to your enemy
bond with it
go where it pleases
feel...

and then think.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Feel Humanity...

i have to see
the face of God,
to touch His hands,
to be with His side
to long for Him
All the days of
my Life

i only have to see and feel you,
humanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Feel, To Be Present, To Be Real

do not stretch your mind that far you should know the limit, a border, a fence, an edge,

if you snap out, it will be your end and mine too for i care do not go that far, enough is enough, what you shall know shall kill you, what you do not know for now is this comfort that here i am still in love with you.

do not even talk about an after-life, for as of this moment, when you are around, when my arms wrap you, it is this moment that lives forever. Do not even think, for here we only have to feel, to be present, to be real.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Ferdie Who Says That He Cannot Write

do not live behind a writer's block

if it exists seek the aid of a pole or a wing of a kite, or even the easy flight of leaves

or summon the help
of your legs

jump over it and learn the tricks of birds

fly away
that is what i do

most of the times.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Finally Rest

to be a child again to see the sunny side of the hill to walk back and regress to that moment of the first swim until you learn it and master the feeling only to forget to finally rest and then recall the picture of the hills running into a very small plain where someone waits for you with her all white hair and that weak smile that softer touch, gentle and dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Find Out Where I Am Really Going

I leap from this shallow
River
To the deep
To find out where I am really going

RIC S. BASTASA
To Find The World

to find the world
is to find your world

that is it, this is what is it all about it is about you and the world you finally find
at first in your fingertips spinning and then
inside your heart
you spinning
inside your world

the world spins
finally inside you
and you and the world
you finally find
become one

to find the world
your world
finds you and you are not surprised anymore

the awe and wonder inside your heart
where now
the world lives
in peace

you and your world
in harmony
like body and soul
sleeping together
in twilight

RIC S. BASTASA
To Find What Fills Me...

beautiful creature
i will be with you in your
loneliness
but as you are pure
i will not touch you
i am different
i belong to this earth
you cannot love me as i cannot love you too i will be invisible not even the mist and fog i will just be a gust
of air
in my eyes of emptiness in this hollow self i will watch you until you find the rapture of you
loneliness
watching you in all bliss and when this is over when you finally walk away to find love that suits you i shall leave you too to find what shall fill me.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Fleur De Sac

this is what i learned from that struggle

i won because i fought i did not beg

the old masters taught us well no one gives you things inside a silver platter

there are no clean hands anymore neither is there a need to shed blood you make me win because i deserve winning you have been convinced

i know how it is not to bow not to stoop

with dignity i demand what is due me the years are on my side, my solitude is my sole guide into the place where i must wear my laurels.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Fold And Keep

a few lines
two words

a poem can be
you

or an alter ego

or your ego

or letting go or just plain going and going like being,

but everything is quick and easy

this you may disagree
where
what we seemingly want
done is simply to wash

and wear

and if you have something better

just fold and keep.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Follow It...

i will pursue it

tired as i am for all these years,
i will follow lust
till the edge
i will follow love
till it ends.

if i will not,
how can i tell you
what it is
how can i tell you
what i am...

RIC S. BASTASA
To Forget.....

i let the strong monsoon winds caress my face
the waves of the sea
sing to me the lyrics of our past and here
i am still struggling
to forget
you....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Gather Moss And More Of Moss

to gather moss
be a stone
to gather more moss be a very still stone be a stone still till the end
of time

you stand still and think you want to be the moss rather than a stone to be all moss you must betray the stillness of stone

you must even forget
the importance of what a moss can be

then you think some more to be completely this moss you need to be friendly to the water and to the river then you decide to be the water instead of the moss to be more than the water you wish instead to become the river and so you flow and learn the rush and become the running river until what you want really is just to flow to rush and run and then you become nothing but the motion itself

until you are lost

and then
you become what you are now lost but real always flowing, rushing, running where nobody owns you not even the river

or the stones or the moss

you have become this running, this flowing, this being so real so free

RIC S. BASTASA
To Give And Leave.

you have a bunch
and you give it all i only have a petal left. Take it.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Give You Away....

i am going back to the fields
of grass
cows still pasture there and the flock of sheep still silent and hardheaded

the past as master has lost control of the staff and the trees have gone untrimmed
for years

this is the forest of our future no one minds where the paths are growing
what mountains move somewhere and whether abu comes back again
or not
the women really do not care as they bathe naked in the river i am going back there to recollect the rules of my games for i have lost them that innocence that has kept me so alive the swim in the old river the strength of my legs that excitement about those which were new and so uncertain

i am going there to regain what
i once had
now that i am already ready
to give you away

RIC S. BASTASA
To Go Deeper

is to skin out surfaces, each layer, each
new state, from
hair to skin to something subcutaneous like veins and blood and then the bone
and the marrow of our core existence.

RIC S. BASTASA
To God

MY lines are to GOD scratches of the cat's claws on a wooden pillar of the old deserted house.

To God my silence is noise he hears them just like any ordinary noise on the streets where dreams are dumped and stamped and left behind.

To God, my poems are rotten and he would not care giving them a second of his infinity.

To God i am just like you, the anonymous, the leftover of humanity, the leaf upon a heap of leaves, the sand among the oceans of sands in the desert, a figment of a ray of sunlight, one of the drops of rain in the storm, a dust in the galaxies of planets and stars.

To God, i am nothing.

Deep in my heart however,
I feel that He loves Me.
And so now He listens and Touches truly me.

RIC S. BASTASA
To God Who Is Not Speaking to God who has not spoken i give the benefit of doubt that he is there glancing to God who is merely glancing i give the benefit of the doubt that he is all loving to God who is all loving and not interfering i give the benefit of the doubt that he is simply waiting for the right hour for the right timing for the ripe season to God who is there waiting and all knowing i give the benefit of the doubt that all these sufferings of mankind shall soon end with all his beneficence and magnificence to God for God and by God, i drink to that Cheers! God is coming! Cheers! I have always drank to that.

All night and all day, my heart aches in worship.
To God, Through God, and By God
May he speak, and touch, and save us.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Grab Hope...

we have lost
we have fallen to the enemy let there be no disgust and quarrels

let the phoenixes in us rise from our ashes let the lessons be learned let us live again
to the full for another hundred years
of our own chosen
bliss.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Hate And Not Mind

peep into a room little child to time

compressed

inside a cube
where

oh this, oh
that

how can they ever let

this little child see

how adults
love

to hate and not mind

RIC S. BASTASA
To Have A Balance

to create
a balance
does not mean
equality,

it is more of a hammer and gavel arrangement

roof to floors

pestle to mortar function

ah, like the most common
scene that we always have
from the beginning

to achieve this balance
somehow
there must be a heaven to an earth

there is no such thing as a flat
river
otherwise
what can the sea be?

RIC S. BASTASA
To Have A Feel Of My Food

To have the feel of my food not just the taste of it in my tongue I use my bare hands, the rice I fold between my palms the fish I touch with my fingers, and then my mouth opens to swallow and savor

Just like you tonight, I feel you with my bare hands I taste you With my tongue because you are the food of my soul and my soul Feeds on you as you also feed on mine

We are bare all over, not just our bare hands We touch we feel we lick we breath with our noses On our skins, we feed on our flesh, we go deeper Into our souls, our eyes feast on the food we lay in front of us
The lights of our eyes open in our room the festivity to a beginning

We feed on ourselves we are hungry & greedy & we are never full

RIC S. BASTASA
To Have A Happy Marriage

the tipster married for 42 years and staying married says that to have a happy marriage foremost you have to be happy yourself first

so?

RIC S. BASTASA
THINGS that i own
are not bound, even books they have pages
open, dog-eared
some even torn i own these stained margins
i put my signatures in
them

i own a red bird because i planted a tree beside the house
a branch has become intimated to my window and the red bird
sings there

i own the morning song now but for me to learn to fly
and own the sky too
i must
let the song go

i do not make my hands
as the house
of wings

neither my heart
the the treetops for drifters

for in truth to own red birds is always premised on the respect for their own freedoms....
To Have Sex With An Aids Infected Person

such an adventure
i say i will not regret for i shall have the chance of sharing their pain

like the way the Enlightened one lived with the lepers the blind, the mute
and the sinners

just a wish somehow

RIC S. BASTASA
To Have Suffered Long Enough

Do not equate morality and holiness to priesthood

a priest is no more no less like everyone else seeking for the light and still not finding

if you find the light, do not tell me your name, where you work, where you are, what is your name, or even why do not tell me how, i like to find it myself ey say i have mine but i do not really know where if i had it burning in my head i should have been burned if it were inside my heart my veins would have been charred i do not content myself with light alone i am asking for fire the one so huge, the one that burns the house of my ancestors the one that must burn me alive

because

i have suffered long enough

RIC S. BASTASA
To Have You Without Any Name

it will be better soon after this brief meeting when we meet again
that i will not call you with any other name but to have you and feel you, and only you, in my arms in my lips, in my tongue in my veins....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Have You....

i

we streak molds
to find a behavior
a lifetime

in the same manner
we only take a pinch of our realities to introduce our true names

ii

i do not have to drink
the whole ocean to know what salt is

tersely put
i do not have to know all the details to have you for love

an hour shall be mine and you are mine forever just one slice of you and i shall be full

iii

even if you leave me i shall have everything of you in an atom of a memory

i am not as selfish as this universe that gathers in her breasts all the stars and planets all suns all galaxies

iv
just a dropp of you is already the whole ocean a whole century of rain a continent of space.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Hide This Love Of Poetry, And Into Pottery

forgetting finally that quest for the rainbow's pot of gold,

oh, forgive me my dear
i have wasted so much time all for the love of this craft- - this

pottery....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Hold You Close

to hold you close enough closer than close negating the powers of distance
we smell the smell
of our souls
we taste the taste of our desires

we are so near skin to skin
soul to soul
i penetrate you
the center of your being i fall upon the crater of your longings i lose myself
in this darkness
as i close my eyes
and perhaps forever lost without despair

without regrets

RIC S. BASTASA
To Honesto In Going To The City

as you pack
your jute sack containing your personal belongings:
a pair of pants
an old dirty white shirt a pair of rubber slippers a hat (leave your bolo you can't use it there) do not promise me that you will not be coming back to this poor little town which has not given you the opportunity for a higher wage
as a houseboy

ah, Honesto the city
if you only know
has no pity
it had long forgotten
feelings
and those who cannot adapt to its cruelty
may simply die
beside the sidewalk
of its cold streets
and when the flood comes to clean
its waste
you may be lucky
carried for free
by the big water
to be finally eaten
by the wild fishes
in the murky river

RIC S. BASTASA
To Huff Or Puff....

i huffed.
now i do not know how to distinguish
puff from huff.
perhaps i puffed.
you see, we all
have doubts.
we sometimes
do not know where to go, or what to do
with our own lives.
A long time ago,
i was focused.
I have only one way to go. I know definitely what to do. The people outside my room
are envious.
I huffed.
I do not worry
about myself.
I have given it too much concern already.
I now worry about
soon it will
be over.
You really have to take charge of
yourself.
All people will not be here
forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Ignore The Pain

to ignore the pain
like there is nothing between
us,
on this critical time of our lives either one must leave or one must shut up
away from the other, closed like all the fingers hiding something but it is just the beginning of something bigger
something is gritting beneath, underneath the thickness of the flesh something gnashes
it grows
expands and multiplies and branches out like cancer
the pain with roots and tendrils there is a time for reckoning
the mounds protrude from the bones and your mouth can no longer swallow
everything
fed to you
you cannot be ignored anymore like a bomb hidden under the floor
you explode
lives will be claimed the people will mourn for a while

and there you are
saying
justice is served

RIC S. BASTASA
To Infinity

to infinity
i will not promise you my love may last
but i will not...

i bleed and then
i die
and then i am gone
forever

and the soonest you realize this the better.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Its Loveliness.....

i must, write
you this one,
which i call,

a poem, which
of course, you cannot read, because simply
you cannot,

we could have
relied on speech
which you
disregard feeling
that it is unnecessary because

this thing that happens need not be spoken

or be heard or be seen
as we preferred
finally the secret of the dark

i, must, write you
this, our poem,
intertwining, one is
the need,
the other is the giving,

there is no love
here, i know, you know, there is no love
between us,
we are not designed for this we cannot utter
what love
is

just the same
i write you this,
my poem,

it is not about me, not about you
either,

it is the silence
of understanding,

the time has come
when we do not mention what we shared

we long for another for someone else
we are unsatisfied,
i am, insatiable, i turn my back at you,

you look at the sky
trying to find an angel i hold your hands

tonight, i sleep
soundly, and you too,

tomorrow, we do other things,
we do not look at each other's eyes

for life is more horrible than love,
a vengeance we give to its disparities,

to its unfairness,
to its loveliness...

RIC S. BASTASA
To Jazz.......

to write is to open
a bottle of champagne

to savor the sparkle to taste the spirit

to have another glass to share and jazz...

RIC S. BASTASA
To Jeff And Company

the world did not end Jeff

you missed the party
last night

the milk-fish was everlent
the roast pig was just
perfect
and Caesar's salad
was just as succulent as i expected.

i just hope that
the mountain
trail was not that tedious
and slippery
since the rain was damn long & heavy.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Joy......

a bouquet of white roses which you catches from the bride
in that grand wedding lies on the table
because you have forgotten it, after those laughters and joyous conversations

the lucky one who found it is the waitress who carried it back to her home hugging it in bed closing her eyes to its rosy scent bringing back to her some dreams which never come true just like yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Just Let Secrets Live Their Lives The Way They Like To.

there are so many things which remain as secrets

ey are more beautiful that way, in fact, more peaceful in their closed containers, despite its airless and airtight existence for we are better looking when blind or blinded or blindfolded for we feel much better without them, I assure you, they do a lot of harm when you set them free, from butterflies there, they turn to bats, and vampires when you unlock them, and if you remember

Pandora, then, I must warn you, you better keep the silence, the capacity to just let secrets live their lives the way they like to.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Keep A World Revolving

what i need is a stick, a shadow, a clock
a chair.

what i do not need is your mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Keep Moving And Then Be Happy....

she left perhaps she did not get what she deserves or what she thinks she really deserves
a name,
an acknowledgement perhaps of her presence

i stayed, because i do not need a name, because i have a name that i gave to myself. because i deserve to be here because i still look for something greater than myself, that a name, because recognition is not the reason why the sun shines
why the sea keeps the blue why the moon is soft upon the night skies there are no reasons what we quit we are born to keep on going and soon when we return what was given we rest finally satisfied that we did our best to keep on loving

it is lonely here but we are here and that is enough we are felt and that is more than enough last night i walk alone in the middle of crowd i hear the talks without me involved i've seen and heard a lot and these too are more than enough

to keep moving and then be happy....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Keep On Dancing.....

at the last hour of the
day
when everyone leaves and you are left alone
to figure out
what to do when you have nothing to do anymore, tired of thinking you have to dance.
even when you finally sleep, you have to dance inside that dream.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Kill Time

it is always that when i speak to another stranger that i meet i ask the same questions i anticipate the same
answers
same fun same laughter as though everything is safely repeated
in the same place like flower to a stalk like shoes resting upon the first stair towards the floor, all in place now, and then i find out that it is the other and i am just a person reflecting myself
and expecting that it will just be myself repeating who i am
over and over again
which i cannot anymore explain; whew! what is happening?
i am not lost. I am just creating a game
and i am both
the hero and adversary
killing time.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Kiss Her On The Rain

to kiss her on
the rain
with one raincoat
on, i think, it will be better.

throw that black umbrella
away,

the other woman
needs it
badly

at the other end of the road.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Kiss Your Lips To Say I Love You

you are in bed waiting for me transparent cloth tempting and you close your eyes you signal my body that you are ready for this old time ritual of sweet sweat surrender and worship of the deepest sighs of the marrows.

somewhere inside my heart is this thirst unsatisfied, this insatiability of a bulging rock, the towering cliffs unreachable by your giving in hands.

to kiss your lips, to touch your body once more, to say i love you, all these i cannot anymore do, i leave no note. i find no justification to explain this art of leaving, the intricate threads of goodbye, the feared art of the scissors, cutting and then so clearly there is no blood, just air moved and hearts skillfully split into two, painlessly.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Know Nothing Too........ know by now

and of the past and the future
know each side
know what is up and what is down
know everything and like the river with both banks
like the coin with two sides
like a diamond with multi-faces
know also nothing....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Know What Is Real From The Unreal

when they finally sleep together

and they did this for years and will continue doing so for all the years to come she finds him walking on a bridge as the wild and unreasonable waters rage under and then he jumps into the river and he is gone and she wakes up profusely sweating as though she too is about to be taken

and

to know what is real from the unreal
she holds his hands

now more tightly than ever

RIC S. BASTASA
To Learn To Live Alone...

it will take time
like mastering the lyrics of a song but when it comes you realize what joy is there hidden in such solitude
what bliss is there
in silence
when grief is well understood when longings dissolve into scented air like while cherry blossoms what perfection lies in such a completion....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Learn To Live Without Anxiety

it is all in the shallow part the valley and the flowing river it is in this plateau where the trees are not remarkable where stones are mere stone where sands slow from our hands without so much thought it is not about what happens next from here just here now nothing folded no projections

dreams and goals melting like ice giving way to another summer and so life is smooth so simple

like the way i pretend that there is nothing wrong like the way i tell you that there is no problem

life is smooth and simple
that is how we must think it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Learn Why You Say Nothing At All

light is blinding like joy when it arrives right in our eyes we begin to see nothing except this feeling that reigns and wraps our whole body our senses like sunshine spreading on the hills and valleys i understand you when you say that with happiness you begin to learn why you say nothing at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Let Go What Clots Inside

How can fun
be alone? how can one finger clap?
how can love be just
a man?
how can this earth
be a mere stone?
how can i see this universe as a grain
of sand?
how can running be just with one foot?
how can i be happy
without you?

i can be.
sad in a room.
alone in a bus trip.
sleepy on the plane.
lost outside the hotel.
i can be.
myself, but it is
too
tight, and the pressure gets too high that i have to whistle and then walk in the middle of the night
to let go what clots
inside

RIC S. BASTASA
To Let You Know

it is raining tonight there is light inside my room i sit and watch the darkness outside there is no moon
there are no stars
there are shadows of trees borrowing light from street lamps they keep on moving there are winds coming from the sea they are blowing a while ago they just subsided and then i close the glass windows i sit and watch and listen like i still want to learn despite my 48 years here i still do not know what in essence is loneliness
how to cope with its grip how to set my self free the chairs and tables are dusty outside there is this contrast of coldness and darkness i read some poems and i begin to write my own nothing new not that old either the same feelings the same flow of thoughts like a chain of steel a rope, a big rope, a long rope i bind myself again and i look at my side just near me

there is this brown dog native and too loyal like your own dog or any dog for that matter it is sleeping peacefully as though the world is safe there is this rain
it does not seem to stop to let you know, there are also tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Live

to live
just breathe and when you breathe you become a breather

live your life
be a liver.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Live And Love Some More

we open our eyes
must always open our eyes for new surprises

we do not close it for the twists
and turns of life

everyday is a disclosure every hour
an unfolding of buds into
flowers

spreading scents
pleasing us with its petals and bright colors

handing us more of those memories
nothing is discarded everything is embraced
and kept
and treasured

but like the petals subject to time
and the seasons
we arrive at the alleys of wilting
and drying and crumpling

we too open our eyes
for all these
familiarizing ourselves with the cycles of endings and beginnings the shalls and musts perhapses and maybes
and all the other potentials and possibilities

ah, life is exciting who does not like to live and love some more?

RIC S. BASTASA
To Live In Language

it has been quite a time and i question myself

why all these years i only use

language?

my language has been a tree without leaves.
a house without roof, home for the rain.
a mountain without a trail, no man is coming for a visit.

all weeds, bushes,
i comfort myself sometimes with all the stars that hang at night and despite the distance i feel that i am so near them and i may be crazy if i have to tell you that the stars are talking to me about heaven

that this place where i live now is not what is meant for me

and so i miss each night finding romance and wisdom in its darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
To Live In The House Of The Word...

it is easy to spot the word even easier to give it meaning
what it is what is hard really is our courage to live inside its shell...

x x x x

dali lang makit-an ang pulong mas dali gani usab ang paghatag sa iyang buot ipasabot

ang lisod niini
mao ang atong kaisog
sa pagpuyo
diha sa iyang balayan

RIC S. BASTASA
To Live In The Kingdom Of The Clouds

if you decide to live in the kingdom of
the clouds
learn the tricks of the learned
skies

to float like a dream is a must
there is no settling there
like the dust

to master the art of silence
no chirping birds
no rippling of the water

to take all the heavy ones and
keep for a while
and then to burst like thunder
to flow like rain

to be empty all over again
and move like the wind

RIC S. BASTASA
To Live To Die

in desperately seeking you i am actually desperately seeking myself because U and I,

Because we have long
become One
in This
& That

Because One cannot live Without the Other
Because we had that Vow

To live
To die
Together.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Live To Love

It seems that to live is not the same as to love

look at you who had loved unrequited
you are killing yourself with what you can never have to live this time is to learn to forget love and move on with your life take life, grab it, leave love for a while

take a walk
breathe some more

it is life
it is life that makes you find love again.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Live With The Thorns

the roses learn to live with their thorns, now they all recognize
them
as protection, from the hands of the mad woman cutting roses as offerings of her nightmares,

why can't we learn too to live with the thorns?

the pains and bitterness are in fact our protectors too from too much complacency from the dangers of familiarity.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Live You Must

to live
you must learn what is
every day,
which is nothing but a day and

another day,
there is nothing

special,
it is just the closing
and opening,
the darkness

and
light,
we learn something
new
and a little old of living

just this moment
this moment
and nothing

more.
this is it how to

live,
do not spread
that much

try
settling a bit.
RIC S. BASTASA
To Live.....Yes To Live....

your chickens are scattered on the yard oh, how they have multiplied too easily and your pigs, how fat and happy with their noise even before their food are served you have many sacks of rice still not dried under the sun, oh, how rain can be so hard headed these times of the year you built a big house, strong and mighty in the old neighborhood, but despite all these fortunes and luck as you claim, you have been overwhelmed by your sadness, you claimed all the loneliness for yourself, you wish to die, you keep on being sick, eating less, and keeping things alone by yourself, upon a pain that you cannot describe now. I see your tears in bed, you never care to wipe them now, as though saying, all these are useless, you succumb to despair, saying you surrender, a decision you make, and then in that house with a big window, when you are gone, another woman shall face the road, wave at strangers saying that she is the winner now, and your husband says he is happier now, without you.

p.s. please do not give up. Others fought to live.
others kill to live. yes, live, live, drink life.
To Love And Be Not Loved

to love and be not loved
i accept is crazy but that is the whole story of my life,
there is no sequel

perhaps in the afterlife when i am at home on another realm
another body

another story, another attempt to find a home for this lonely heart this self unloved

RIC S. BASTASA
To Love And Then Die....

i am stricken with grief knowing that when you finally found love, you also die.

in the little corner of our diatribe, love works, like a devil cooks, like a chemist mixes, herbs and nuts, unto a concoction of life.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Love Thyself. ..This Is The New Law

ah, forgive me
at this stage of my enlightenment

after i bent my knees after the begging
and asking for a little of your gaze

the mind soars and transcends
all fences
all walls penetrated like light to glass

this is the time
of waking
the sun, and everything heavens
do not matter

the mind is opened
like a crater everything is expelled
and nothing matters

ah, forgive me
but now i do not recognize you anymore

i do not remember
if ever i have loved and lost you i am freely breathing and there is no more obstruction in my throat

i love this life
and you do not matter

ah forgive me
i have become as selfish as any self could be

this time
i only love myself
and no other.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Love Without Measure

when i say i love you there is no meter to it no scales from one to ten no scores till the hundred there is no depth nothing about height there is nothing to measure nothing to price

for love is as light as air and fills every empty space for love cannot be weighed and beyond what is heavy or burdensome
its depth is beyond comprehension its value is priceless its measure
immeasurable.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Love You More

i must learn not to exist, i must drown in the world of the unfeeling,
i am painless
and i will surrender everything that i have
for you

to love you i must diffuse throughout you like an ink to your flask of water

shake me, shake me more, i become an integral part of your whole being

you see, i join you and i cannot anymore be ejected by you.

this is my love, a diffusion,
an effusion,
as osmotic as you feel it.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Love You More I Must Cease To Exist

i must learn not to exist, i must drown in the world of the unfeeling, i am painless and i will surrender everything that i have for you to love you i must diffuse throughout you like an ink to your flask of water shake me, shake me more, i become an integral part of your whole being you see, i join you and i cannot anymore be ejected by you.

this is my love, a diffusion, an effusion, as osmotic as you feel it.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Lucasta From The Modern Day Richard Lovelace

Lucasta my love
the best of all is the love of self honour not anymore outlawed is war

and to go there
i shall not

go shall i
to the softness of thy rosy-pink breasts lick shall i your white body & thighs love that is all that to thyself give this lust and thrusts

what more?

RIC S. BASTASA
To Lucasta On Choosing Peace

i am kind, tell me now my dear i shall not go to war i shall have a distaste for arms i love your breasts
i love this peace of mind

Honestly, i do not have any mistress not a foe anywhere what for is the gun, the tanks and the nuclear warheads?

I will be consistent in my humble stand and you shall adore
i love you so much and i hate all these wars.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Make It More Beautiful....

we comply
putting all the spaces

that is what they need what they also want

do not say it all.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Mama

I thank God for having given you
To me
When I was a little child With you, my mother beside I have first felt
My great God
Above.

God could not be everywhere and therefore he made mothers.
(Jewish Proverb)

RIC S. BASTASA
To Marina After Giving Birth To A Baby Girl

now you are complete your husband and yourself and baby marina
that you named maria after your great grandmother, your world is a circle closed and we cannot get in there anymore lest we are nothing but planets losing our own orbits

clashing with the privacy of your own galaxy

do not be disturbed as we close our own circles too alone by ourselves
we become stars

distant stars in the skies from your room
as you begin to sing the lullaby

we are different
our glitters dim like dying lights

RIC S. BASTASA
To Mawe In Chicago This Winter

hello mawe, if you are still there alive and listening if you still have the shadow of autumn and spring
if you still stand there beside the glass walls of malls staring at the thick snow beyond you mawe, my friend, please tell me 'what does the snow of chicago tell you? ' please tell me what is it that still bothers

the calm waters of your heart?

merry christmas.
happy new year.

why are you more silent than the snow?

RIC S. BASTASA
To Meet Forever

when i decide to go back to the nooks of the past

i do not just go there for no reason at all

i bring a shovel and bury those which still bleed which still scream i shut their mouths and which still struggle to be saved from oblivion i make them sleep

forever.

and then i dust off what is found on my head

put my sleeves in place and proceed my way to the exit door where light meets me without its quizzical eye and then i close that door

forever

for i have more doors to open more suns to meet

to meet forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Mother Earth From His Earthling

i am away
from you
earth

i am
absorbed
by the company
of the clouds

i am light and drifting
but i am
not lost

i am exploring you earth
from a higher
perspective

i cut my umbilical cord
like the string of the kite

after this
i shall land to your bosom
again

but i will not be you
i will be as unique as not anyone else
to be separate
is life

i have power now
in this independence

look at me
not with anger but with understanding

i come from
you
but i am
not yours

RIC S. BASTASA
To Mr. E....Who Thinks That He Is Alone....

how can you be alone?

with earth as your mother with sun as your father with moon as your sister with wind as your brother keep that love burning soon it will find its sky

how can alone be alone?
with so many of them....of us....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Mrs, J. B.M.

someone close to our hearts dies today after three days of struggle
to be free

i am saying my prayers
i am sending my condolences two hearts are deeply spliced one inside and the other outside she was so young and so beautiful on such an early waste of spool may the gates of heaven open let her go where she'd been.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Ms. S

Do i have to step down and use your language of abuse
so that i can understand your world?

I may have been
air
you may not have felt yet my
water
you have not yet landed to my island
yet this does not give you the power over my soul
and call me just like any person that you have conquered
by putting them within the confines
of your
being the worst idiot
i have ever met

i am sorry too
for having met first the devil in you

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Creator....

THE RESTLESSNESS of my soul has no shore,

the cravings of the heart has no sky

wave upon wave of time i am this wind without any anchor

till You finally hold me.

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Dearest Beloved....

my dearest
i have read your letter
and the poem you
composed
for me
let me be frank
you have wasted a night for they are just words
and i have not seen
the lives
of all emotions.

i have imagined
how dark must the room
be where you composed the lines

there is no
spark of love's light
between those syllables

let me be candid
and take my advice
that you must from now
stop writing at once....

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Dearest....

i have forgotten morning walks on these hard times morning walks become a luxury i miss the coming of the sun from the breasts of mountains

i have forgotten morning walks as poems pop out like popcorn from the frying pans of these hard times

outside the killings continue outside the numbness of the minds of the citizens has multiplied into geometric patterns oh the Pieta had a lot of replicas already tears have become shy or restrained like nuns in the convent the trembling is hidden inside the houses like guns on closed doors and windows the child's cry is heard i have to postpone my morning walks for a while miss the sun and the trails miss the rain and the flowers along the way miss my friends in the club miss my mother and father in their graves miss my brother in the ship miss my sister in the far country where happiness lives...

i have forgotten the good times missed the opportunity to love you even miss the moment to remember you again till then, till the next life, the next world the next movie, the next scene, my dearest.

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Dearly Beloved...

i am not the obvious could be someone who is odious i hide
that remains a fact i speak but do not mean my word
the syllables are fingers pointing to a cloud where a part of me drifts and lives

i hide
i could be inside your shoe i feel what you feel but i do not make you know it i do not cause you pain i am pathetic
and sympathetic

i do nothing
that is what i do
i speak nothing at all that is how a conversation is started silence creeps
and then holds you
i sting

but that is not my point here i have no one and no other
just words
where i put faith for me to live

i am always a slip asleep most often at the tip of your tongue goodbye is a letter i write and kept hidden under my bed....

RIC S. BASTASA
To My First Love

you are the weaver of the dreams of the earth and i am the herder of its cows and how the river of life has parted
us

is not just a myth, it is a fact and now that we are still so many light years apart we grieve

but we were given the promise of the gods that one day we shall meet again soon after the rain

even when the flower of our youth is gone
soon after the rain
we shall meet and make love again even in our mind

that my love,
we must always remember

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Love...

love
a luscious strawberry freshly picked
from the farm in Benguet
inside my mouth
in those long hours while you were picking some more of those ripe ones
as i wait under the shade of the palm tree
waiting
for you....

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Loving Wife

when i fail
i must tell you
i do not hide
my weaknesses
i reveal to you
the inner wars
that i have lost
many times,

i do not pretend
that my love
shall triumph in everything in every-way there are lapses shortcomings that at first i could have kept within me

we love each other
and in my strengths
you shall love me
more perhaps but in those situations that i utterly fail,
i must admit to you
with all courage
that i am down, and

yet you still love me kiss me, and hug me like a child that has come back to you
after having been lost in the park

i am weaker now
so tired and about
to lose hope of the promises that i can be....come with me
sleep with me and make me feel that i am the hawk surfing
the skies for its night stars
once again.

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Muse

there is no way
to tell
when

but i know how to wait
like a dog
on a doorstep

i may sleep and
dream
but i always know when it is time
to rise
and start to walk
and
play and when it is
dark
to gaze upon the promises
of your
stars

there is always
no way for me to tell when is the right
time
for the teasing
or the cheering

or perhaps the weeping
and the wailing (God forbid)

but i have always mastered
the art of waiting
i know not how to wage war
with you
i am always
at peace with
myself
comfortable with the patience of my arms
the gentleness
of my fingers
the sound beating
of my heart

and so i keep on waiting
and sleeping and
dreaming
like a prophet
on the dungeon
or the desert

when you arrive
even as the lightest
waft of the wind
i will always know when and why
and what to do exactly

this is a little bit touchy (or dramatic perhaps)

i only have eyes
for you
i know your scent
i read your mind
i can see your soul
i have and will always love you
even if...
you will not come
for me.

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Nephew For Him To Learn

you want something to hold on i give you my hands and i will hold you
and you will grip it to prevent you from falling and hurting yourself

do not be too confident for there will come a time
in fact
a moment that you will never forget in your entire life for i will loosen my hold on you put grease on my fingers and your hands will slide and you will fall and hurt yourself
that much
that the pain will not just disappear in a day
you will blame me
and tell me that i betray you but that will only be for a while by then the pain and what you think as the betrayal of a trust has given you the hardest lesson in your life you will suffer the way i suffer you will learn the way i learned life from the harshness of your grandfather and that same betrayal too shall not be forgotten in the entire life

of
yours truly.

RIC S. BASTASA
To My New Neighbors

on this morning chat
she says she will be arriving on time for the halloween

she will be lighting candles for her dead parents and other relatives of this old town offer them flowers and prayers that she can muster she will be bringing her middle child who starts to write his poems in his notebook she tells me he is the silent type the one who can thrive without a conversation she shifts the topic about the color of the rails of her new house the verandah is not pink now, it is painted white and she is asking what flowers fit into the picture i suggest the bougainvillas, the flowering ones already sold in the nearby farm by an old lady she is excited, she will be having us, as neighbors finally our fence shall be a line of daisies our yard evergreen, our trees shall be the ones with perfume: the champacas and the ylang-ylangs and expectedly, there will be a lot of laughter and nice conversations of cultured and educated people whose sense of morality would be high the chat is quite long, and i decided i have to end it.

i have still other poems inside my tten.
What bothers me, and for which i am really interested is the poetry of his middle child. I like someone who writes like me. And i do not need a lot of conversations too.

i like my silence. I love the talk inside my silence.
I will burst.

RIC S. BASTASA
To My New Object Of Affection

it does not really matter to me if you tell me a lie if you tell me more lies i will not listen
i will not be feeling betrayed they will tell me that you are dangerous
that you have fangs and claws and that soon like a tigress you shall eat my body
alive

it does not really matter to me now i am in love
and i am ready to die

just one night of love
an hour of passion
a kiss

it does not really matter now kiss me and kill me and gladly shall i comply

i bend my knees
and admit my own foolishness

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Only Brother In Distant Seas

brother
the distance between us has become too wide we have become two islands separated by seven oceans bridges and boats and even wings have become impossible....

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Peer In Philosophy Class Circa 1979

i mark that day
with the ending part of our conversation:

it has something to do with the face of the criminal who bugged you with a silver knife at the subway station and you were so shocked and could not forget it your money taken

and then you came to the irrevocable conclusion that humanity is divided and that some are simply of the irredeemable kind and must be put to sit on electric chairs
for good

and i ask you to look carefully at his face
at that time
when he was mad and so needy

and find finally that he too wears
the same face as yours when you shall be deprived of what you own and have and keep and protect
for now

you are enjoying the world that loves you
you are eating the expensive cuisine on its table and drinking the best wine from Italy and staying at the Shanghai hotel with a window facing the Bund
savoring the beautiful motion and lights of the river

look at him carefully

did you not see that he has the face of God?

and then we stopped
right there
and you did not say a word which i think was the proper face of silence of one who cannot believe the truth

and i have never heard from you again

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Self This Christmas....

GOT NO expectations Let them all be merry Let them ring those bells Let all the children have their carols and gifts Let the family be united In one dining hall in one Sala exchanging their gifts, Let the lanterns be lighted Let the streets shout for Joy

Meanwhile, i listen to the Silent Night
As my wife is asleep Soundly in her bed

As i type the letters to this note: Hello Self I admire you for Being Strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Silent Sufferer....

to make me love you more i strain this evolving relationship with actually unnecessary separations, ... remember my trips alone in the big city? how i dislike a big empty bed that makes me feel in in a highway riding in a small car,

i bleed of course like a cactus, but soon the noonday sun knows how to dry the juicy cut and comfort me with a tiny scar hidden by my thorns,

i heard nothing from you, you keep secrets to yourself, and you have become so beautiful to myself, how i wish that i can be back in the place of my youth where i will miss no one, when i can dive in the river naked, and without any malice to anyone who sees me

i have uttered so many words, and written this experience in a journal, and you continue with that silence, that silence in suffering wanting nothing in return for the love that you have always given like clouds making rain, like seas faithfully making waves like words always there to the picking of the tongue my silent sufferer, i love you more, i suffer in the countless words that i am saying in such way, that i begin to doubt everything, this silence that i surrender, this loss that i have trusted to the company of words, at night, i wish upon a meteor that all my thorns be gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Sister In L.A.

and so you have learned how to take the train and be silent along the way seeing the trees and green patches of grass and buildings and houses rushing to meet you through the glass windows for how long shall you grieve and heal that bleeding heart for how long shall you go away from the clutches of pain

inflicted by a loved one time simply waits

out there
far from us in that foreign land you shall find your balms

take care my dear sister do not let your heart be weakened let it be strong and kind

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Sleeping Princess...

food for the mosquitoes that is what
i am
at this very moment

when i am trying to compose these lines
for you

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Students

with all of you
i have found a family

on a sincere dedication to teach
i have felt compassion a belonging
beyond the scope of things beyond those unblinking eyes like mouths opening hungry for knowledge

i have found love

with all of you
how can i be alone?
with all of you
i have felt the confirmation the worth and meaning of my own existence
beyond all these
i have confessed to God there is meaning.

RIC S. BASTASA
To My Surprise

to my surprise you have found my place a house in the middle of two mountains a green valley with ricefields and a line of mahogany trees covering a pathway towards the sea where the sand is as white as your thighs and porcelain back why are you here for? need i ask? i must be foolish not to know. You look for the room where you think i write my poetry, dimly lit, warm and scented with musk and orange.

i have tequila, your favorite. I have this candle shaped like a heart, i light it up.
I keep a jar of peanut butter, and some marmalades from fresh guavas.
I have green tea if you like, but you take a glass, put some ice and poured your vodka. You like tonight to be chili hot.
It is dark, and you say you are not leaving.
I am cornered, and I still know what to do.

This not the place of a love disappointed.
This is your place now and you shall not regret it.

I am stacking all my clothes and underwears along the stairs. You know that i am hot and naked.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Myself

to myself
be myself
and none other

know myself and just be
myself
feeling no regret but pride
having no arrogance
but humility
in abundance

to myself
be kind
be more understanding to my limitations
be loving
no matter what

because there is no
other self
than myself
because my best friend
my true lover
is just this self
and no other

to myself
i am thankful.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Not Know Anything And Be Thirsty Once More....

i understand you precisely i left because there is nothing more to know you still pursue me what for?

have you not learned everything from us?

i am short of beliefs i look for more i fall short of faith but i do not regret it i am more of into an open world where i get over with what is fixed to see everything new again and feel it more to not know anything and be thirsty once more

RIC S. BASTASA
To Open The Eyes Of The Blind, To Bring Out Prisoners From Confinement, And From The Dungeon, Those Who Live In Darkness.

we are all blind
on wide awake eyes
we are the suns
that cannot see what we lighted

we close in those who have not committed the crimes
we imagined

we are those who live
in the darkness
of our mid-noons

we are here waiting for deliverance we spin around an orbit
that arrives at no specific destination

RIC S. BASTASA
To Osky On His Birthday Today

Like the planets you take your own orbit
away from the rest
eluding this fatal collision
you travel alone keeping on your own gravitation
balancing the forces of your being
outside inside
near and far
coming and going
centrifugal centripetal

that is the way you move
to be alive
then the moment comes
when you complete
one revolution

how time trickled
like some drops from a rock
you flow
bit by bit
you are so busy then
about almost everything

on the other side
the clear pool of water
mirror of the sky and sun and moon

it is you
you have earned it
it is you
on your birthday

RIC S. BASTASA
To Our Brothers/Sisters Out There...

we must always see the greatness of our brothers
we must always acknowledge the efforts their time spent their dreams which even though unfulfilled at times the struggle and the pitfall must always be appreciated we must always hope the prayers all intact within our hearts
the longings kept burning like fire in the desert like moon in winter like comets and meteors dashing forth though sudden
in a very short spark of the moment for it is who we are and what we are all fickle and quick soon to wither like a leaf soon to dry like a creek

RIC S. BASTASA
To Our Readers

let us pause for a moment in a three-minute silence for our dear readers who passed away.

let us pause for a moment
in another three-minute silence for our readers who are dying to read us again and again may they keep on reading us for without them

we shall soon be parted.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Our Youngest

in leaving this place I shall recall
You wearing your Sunday’s best With mama & papa
Still holding hands

RIC S. BASTASA
To Peck Upon The Hands Of God

what i see
every morning
on the same time of
this wrecking hour is what pushes
me
to do
all these writings on the wall

i pity myself
but what can i do?

it creates all
the drum sounds in my heart
and i am dancing wildly in this forest
without the light
of the sun
yet

it caresses my skin
like the massage
that one cannot forget and so keeps on returning

there is nothing
wrong here
nothing evil
it is
the mouth of heaven
speaking
there is no guilt
anymore
but after all these wriggling
what hovers
in the fields are the birds of boredom
and the air of loneliness keeps blowing

i pity myself
this bird that flies high in the sky without the fear
of falling

far from the mountains wanting to peck upon
the hands
of God

RIC S. BASTASA
To Pretend That All Is Well.....

the hands i love
so much
touch me tonight

i close my eyes
and feel
the tenderness of

numbness. I understand
how is it
to love and be not loved
in return
to pretend that all is well

feel the warmth and not believe in it
tired and then i fall into sleep

satisfied that i have not asked much

from life and its complications.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Recall To Recompose

there is a time for recalling what good times are stored in the heap of those emotions hidden in your chests like some petals of dried flowers in your perfume box

there is a time to recompose what used to be an old you molting like a snake and coming up with a new shining skin and good confident hissing and there is also a time for throwing and junking and spitting and vomitting what destroys us then in your heart there will be no names anymore except the whispers of your desires to dusk

RIC S. BASTASA
To Reminisce

to reminisce is not to surrender to the past and be defeated

it is to indulge in what you had been with the people you loved and who loved you truly in the past they are the everlasting flowers from Baguio

that you put in your altar to make your prayers warmer so that the morning in its coldness may also be delighted

RIC S. BASTASA
To Remove A Boredom

anxieties live in the hair like the number of locks the white particles in scalp someone suggests that to remove them one must try loving a goldfish that you put in an aquarium one that you can love and yet cannot love back one that you speak with and yet cannot answer back it is a love in silence where silence becomes a necessity or to see an aggression one need put too little food to so many fish and see how they all display actuation in the middle of their hunger sometimes one feels it too walking under the rain some people are looking yet we cannot look back somethings like what they tell us and caress us with all our hands tightly tied

RIC S. BASTASA
To Rest For A While...

from secrets of the labyrinths of the heart upon a thread of your own goings springs forth these poems of remorse... as i write this, i crave to understand who i am, where i come from and where i must be going... at the end of the line there is always a pause there is meaning there, there is really, but which i still want to know....

the confusions are like fur, some distracting hair, long and tangled, wanting me to unlock what puzzles
are there....

i would be lying if i do not know about this and that,
but simply to whom shall i tell that?
the labyrinths are mine alone and i have become another godly goat, my horns are powers, but you must never see them, for i am still my own man, with a beard and thick hair, and strong hands, and tall built and sharp eyes....

at the end of this line is a pause...i am resting.....

RIC S. BASTASA
To Rose, Ms. Wounded

Rose, do not be lonely with your wounds,
do not cry,
there are too many wounded people in this world,
and as they are too many,
they have formed indeed a one big, happy family and their leader if you must know is the most wounded of them all: Jesus Christ.

Join us then
in this celebration!

RIC S. BASTASA
To Save A Marriage

you do not
you must not expect
that to save a marriage i must lose myself

here i am on this journey trying to trace the footsteps of my old self

i am moving forward to knowing what to keep and what to throw away if at night you are no longer on my side then i might as well talk to myself love myself more and survive

the tests of life

alone in this contest
i take the hurdles at the end you may think that i could be the winner

no dice
if we lose sight of this common destination we both
lose.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Say That I Am Miserable Is To Say That I Am Like Them

my friends will have a hard time figuring out the real compass of my north, for i make the impression that i am bound south, slow and not so sure, i keep walking and they do not really know if i am with them or against them when they begin to talk i pretend that i am their best friend and when they laugh
i do not really join them they always suspect that there is something wrong with my capacity for honesty or they simply leave me for what they think i am, secretive man, always keeping things to himself, only wanting to survive life's harsh treatment of himself, i do not tell them, actually of some
miseries
i fear that i will just be another one like them.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Say That The Man Is Harmless to say that the man is harmless we dig stories about his past, first, how was he educated, and you find out that he finished college with honors in a Presbyterian university somewhere in the most peaceful island of the archipelago

second, you find out that he is a prayerful man goes to church on Sundays makes the sign of the cross and takes the regular communion, third, you also take refuge that he has a family of his own raised his kids in a way that they all live a life in peace and harmony with all the other
children,
finally, you keep track of his services how he serves the poor and the underprivileged the marginalized sector of our community

the last story that you know is that the military arrested the good doctor who was there in that mountain of the poor people curing the sick and giving them medicine

now, he is dubbed as the communist and the rest of the nation is silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
To See A Kite Fly In The Sky

you may say it is beautiful to see a kite fly in the sky it is like a cat wagging its tail a picture of joy perhaps but you should have tried being a kite floating
do you know how is it to float? that feather without wings you do not know how is it to be a cloud or a fog how was it when you are skinned out of love, when we were young and your best friend leaves your place? there was crying, and then the floating begins you are the child without a mom, a stranger without a definite destination
a man scraped of any purpose that student who changes course every semester that woman shifting from one man to another that businessman always losing money from one investment to another you know what i mean. There are so many metaphors of failures. So many stories about losing love and life. you have your own.
and you know what i really mean.
it is hard when you float and so it is good to know how to root.
know this soil. grab the fertility of its secrets.
make roots, the more roots the better life can be.
grow deeper, stab the silence of the earth.
grow more feet and arms and fingers.
hold tightly to what this earth can give you.

live.

RIC S. BASTASA
To See Grace...

a white cat
by the window
licking its fur
and
paws....

RIC S. BASTASA
To See Love

to see love
pure grace
and beauty

to be seen
by love
and be not heard
and felt

to leave too
soon
still untouched

the pain lingering
for a lifetime

the wind passing
love is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
To See The Moon Sitting At The Center Of The Heart Of The Pond

To let go Off the nights in my heart I will go around this pond
To see the moon
Sitting at the center of its heart

RIC S. BASTASA
To See The World...

another day is coming
the sun is up
and a new wind is blowing from distant lands

the trees have shed off old leaves
the stones are washed by
the rain

a few old men have died and have gone to the other side of the great divide the grandchildren are here and would be burying them it is Friday and soon it will be another weekend here a few neighbors are leaving seeking some fun somewhere we too are leaving for Jerusalem then to Amman and Cairo to see Gaza, and Bethlehem to feel the sands and the olives to renew what's old, to see

the world.

RIC S. BASTASA
To See You Again

we shall meet again on the shallow banks of the running river on mossy rocks greener and water drenched by the constant rain darker horizons colder air and shivering silence we meet again as wrinkled skin and white hair bent and weak and surrendering to whatever that comes and finally goes passing us by we will just take a glimpse and confirm the reasons for what happened and why it happened it is enough, we shall take the last look of ourselves and then we close our eyes and die

RIC S. BASTASA
To Show Flare

no one is totally free
hence there will be compromises

you share a room
you cannot just go naked

you work
somehow you learn to swallow your pride

there is a place where you are not allowed to stay

a house where you cannot sleep and a chair which you cannot sit

always there are do's and dont's
you have to eat
even if you do not like it

you say words which you do not mean
and finally you say, Life is not fair
but just the same
you got to show
flare...

RIC S. BASTASA
To Silence A Loquacious Woman

he is right
give her a book
so she may read
and be silent
for a while.

the problem is
she asks for another book again
and to irritate you
using her wisdom
for revenge
she leaves the kitchen and the marital bedroom and read the book
somewhere in
a beach resort sunbathing.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Sit And Not To Stand To Write And Not To Speak.

it is their nature
for rain to fall for clouds to drift
the rise and fall of the sun the ebbs of the sea the seems of the horizon it the nature of the river to take the path of least resistance, the winding here you are this is your nature too to sit and not to stand to write and not to speak.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Sleep Soundly Upon A Late Night

there is a promise of enjoyment about utility measured in just a few moments you have to pay for the intimate hours and then be silent no images, nothing about love nothing about memories to share

and remember

we want it to be brief and explosive
but we never desire that it should stick to our skins and bones another fantasy another longing for something that folds and unfolds

for something that opens and then closes without attachment

i could have grabbed that moment with you but light is too much and i am not blinded

i let it go and i am weary so weary when i arrive again in my room finding nothing but myself with its dignity intact

i can sleep soundly now though it is late already

RIC S. BASTASA
To Soar Again

inanimate one can soar like a rocker on a fuel at the back the falling cannot do any harm for things fall and falling is natural one sometimes soars like a bird on real wings on feathers that cannot withstand the storm the waters hurt and the falling means death but just the same one must soar and fall and die nobody minds.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Soar Upon An Aria

to be a bird again
once again
from that very distant past of your evolution,
to have wings
and lots of winds and skies and dive again
back into the nostalgia
of nowhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Some Of My Ever Selfish Friends

you fail me.. and i am very sorry for myself last night i have fed your mouths i never worry about money last two nights were feasts the evening was my entertainment for our overdue engagements

i have parted a lot from my memories hoping that on the third night you will reciprocate my kindness it is the same selfishness that mankind had given to the past dead gods i am very sorry about all of you the next years will be better the path towards your house are now erased i am going somewhere else to those places where i am reciprocated where i am no longer alone in my own abundance. IF i had to talk to myself

i will

my diary is closed. you will never read any part of my
again.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Someone Who May Claim As The Subject Of This Poem

when you die
i shall not cry

i shall not have you my tears

i will just wave
my hands
like the sea
to the land where it does not belong

i shall not smile what relevance
is earthly joy
to heavenly bliss?

i will give you a wink
like a lover
signaling our future meeting

RIC S. BASTASA
To Someone Whom You Love...

before this ends
i will write you
a letter,

a frame of rain
in a canvass of red and black
shadows of our past
hear the beatings
of our hearts

i will leave it
to someone whom you love.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Stand Before You And Talk About Being Just And Good

when you let me talk i fear that i may not stop talking

after all
the topic is about an eternal quest for what is good and just

i get inside an opening and then i start the walk inside a labyrinth and i feel like i am a lost child
looking for an opening
again
sensing that perhaps there is another light
beyond us

i sailed
and chanced upon an island of uncertainty
and then i disembark from
there
only to find
that there is nobody there except myself
talking

it is so strange
i see mountains and the world is so silent

RIC S. BASTASA
To Stand Tall

all it takes to stand tall is to believe that you are tall

and feel and do what it takes to be tall. You do not need kin or friends or relatives or politics or religion or sorcery

what you need is only to believe and then the length
of your dreams begins
to grow
and become true

this is just a matter between the heart
and the mind

and of course,
the determination to be
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Start

to start you are tempted to throw everything away

love gained trust reposed
honor
and a name

you view yourself
bathing
under the rain

scrubbing your
body
with something that you think cleanses

soaping it hard and wasting so much water

it is all in the head
not with your hands or body

it is all in the mind
this being to itself unto itself

there is no use
discarding
everything

they know when to leave
when you just say it

and soon you will hug regret

RIC S. BASTASA
To Start All Over Again

i would like to start all over again i will not change anything i only have to add
what i did not have once it will be someone not to your liking, it will be someone whom i can share my life with it will be someone whom i could care someone that i could die for someone who can make me live again and make me feel complete

i shall hear someone babbling struggling to talk with me it can be laughter, it can be a cry.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Start All Over Again....

it does not really matter if i do not matter
to you,

though i still care if you are in pain too,

we had always been detached like candy wrappers,

my sweetness to your blandness my kindness to your indifference it does not matter if i do not matter for i have declared before this mirror, that i, matter, that i have this mind, this mind, that to me, thru its independence, still matters much. When it is over, that is how i begin.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Stavro....

there is something chilling
in the question

and so the answer
should have been hotter than expected

it was a pity
the fly wants to be another spider

what was normal to the spider
has become its own
chaos

there was severe coughing in the sea
and the rocks
keep steady

i want to take you
somewhere
from that state of decay
into something more than

life. you laugh
it is not funny.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Still Have The Courage

to still have the courage to go on living
despite all the odds of a life
that seems to refuse life's limited offers of survival

to dream of you
and still keep on dreaming
of you
when reality
on the other hand
flatly tells that you were gone
that in fact you were gone 23 years ago

i wake up
only to find out that life is cruel
and insensitive

courage tells to go on living life
both as a duty
and a right
that life is beautiful
that courage
is indefatigable

RIC S. BASTASA
To Sunshine Which Just Landed In My Skin Today

how many years did it take you to travel in space just to reach me and warm my skin?

do you have a story to tell too?
if you do, please stay a while and tell me, for i am here with nothing to do but listen.

oh you still have so many light years to go? so many surfaces to touch?

you are bound to keep that secret with you. I know how hard it is to take the load of warmth and stay on nobody's skin.

so you are going. Tasked and always going and always taking with you something so confidential.

So go now. I shall not disturb you again.
I shall not ask you to reveal what belongs to the sun and the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Support A World

we must be two opposite poles repelling one another
to support a world
distant apart
we maintain a certain space where we can be strong...

RIC S. BASTASA
To Support This House Of Love

to support this house of love we must be strong pillars lifting these burdens high upon the clouds space and distance apart to each our own silence

RIC S. BASTASA
To Survive

to survive i go for the golden mean not so tall and not so short the tastier, meatier part i suppose is the middle part of the sandwich the smoother flow is the middle part of the river

the safer part is the middle in every location

at the extreme right what do you get?
or at the extreme left?

i sing between you extreme joy is killing you with arrogance your extreme sorrow is killing you with hopelessness

you see,
i live in the middle of everything not so hot and not so cold and they always call it this paradise.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Swim Today

What i love most is a beautiful morning

when ideas are fresh like red daisies still wearing the pearls of dew

when we feel so invigorated like new bodies coming out from the wombs of our mothers

i look outside
the trees are taller leaves swaying to the whispers of the winds beyond me the sea with white foams on their tongues white boats sail with fishermen fishing for the food of the day their wives waiting for what shall be brought inside wicker baskets some kids are playing on the soccer fields goats and cows graze at the other side of the plains more reasons add up to living and i repeat the same phrase to my sad friend in Minnesota'Don't give up. Life is beautiful! ' i do not wish to end. But i too have to go.

Today, i shall swim and have my date with the blue sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Take His Hand.....

Death
comes face to face
with you

you, who demands that all these crazy people must die

you, who shouts that all these terrorists must go to hell

you, who claims that this world is overpopulated and hence birth must cease
even for the meantime

now you are here
face to face with death and he is asking you
to take his hand....

let it start with you,
he says.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Tell Something Original.

She says, you are not original in what you are telling me

Any janitor in your office can always say that seeing that

It is different. I am original in this. I am feeling something.
I am original in this feeling and you do not feel it that way I see these things.

I am leaving you. It is the first time I am feeling this. It is this first time That I am telling you. I am original. I have long searched what words to use To tell something original.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Tell You The Truth Of This Wrangling

...if and only if

i have what you have i could have chosen
silence

if i tasted what your taste buds
have flowered
i could have stared at the clouds
and do nothing

i chatter like a box of fine metal
chips
and you're so dumb to give it
a variety of meanings

if only i had your bed
i could have slept
soundly

i wonder why you follow me
when
i have nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
To That Little Bird In Pain

Something in me is stirred for i can still be unhappy if among the 99 who are pleased one is still there angered by the word that i have uttered

nevertheless there is still time to recompense
either that i be silent for a while face a blank wall and stare at it with wonder looking for a leak
for the light to get in

i may go somewhere else reinvent myself and come back with the gentleness of wind come the first day of august when i have to rethink what word is proper what seed to give
to that little bird in pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Academician....

how pitiful
for you to have learned all the theories
and techniques of swimming yet when you were thrown to the sea
you still do not know how to swim

you sink and drown
and all we can do is pray

the unschooled fish
know best.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Aggies Of Ateneo De Davao Around The World

nostalgia is the word for all these now we have the urge to look out the window and find who we were: the joys of the college years that will tickle us old friends and their memories like innocent children coming on our laps asking for our embraces old pictures make our hearts shrink a little only to grow bigger like a bread from the pan fresh and fuming with the flavor of wheat nostalgia is the word for it and time is its mother that nourishes with its milk the past comes to us always with something greener and a breather of mint and rosemary some peppers and honeyed lemonades

nostalgia is the word for it when our wings have gone far beyond the lands of our births dissolving in the horizons of other lands when our chirps are gone

nostalgia is the word for it when we come back stronger this time and lovelier with our wounds that healed with our pains that lost its trick

nostalgia is the word for it such is she a beautiful woman still even though the hairs have turned gray and the breasts sag and the bones rattling like brittle sticks nostalgia is the word for it and no matter where the winds of this world and its cyclones and waves have taken us we are back looking for the glitter of each other's eyes and then we laugh and then the world has heard us yes, nostalgia is the word that people seldom use as they move on with their respective lives but we are here once again nostalgia is the theme, it is here and soon it will leave we are once again full even for once

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Aliens Who Were With Me In Sedona....

to all those
where goodbyes and hellos do not mean anything anymore
i salute all of you
in your toughness
i have not learned and so here i am still shivering in the coldness of all your hearts.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Ants

their anthill
is the most powerful
territory
they ever built for months now their knows what real business is all about being fed
and then
reproduce for the greatness of their anthill
empire

the anteater comes wanting to disprove
this fact

the truth is everything is nothing but predator-prey

without exception
even your religion.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Artist Of Endelicio

i

the tall man in his sixties when we enter your house says that shattered glasses are bad for feng shui

ii

your garden chair is a mosaic of broken glasses matching with your lampshade of broken bottles and your floors of broken tiles

iii

it is cruel to hear that they view you not as an artist but a mad man

iv

you in your gray hair and thin structure and old skin looks decent enough for me and struggling with all your art works, paintings, sculptures paper mache and stuffed animals

v

outside a gray cat is basking its body under the morning sun on a stone bench beside the banana trees

vi
i take a lot of pictures of all your stuff and this is the first time that i have met you having heard of your name and your cafe cum gallery
a long time ago

vii

back to the shattered glasses and broken bottle and tiles and sculptures of mother earth and man and emaciated natives sometimes i ponder that if i were in your shoes will i do the same?

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Childhood That I Love

how many times
shall i promise you that i will not preach anymore the good times
we had together when you were once a child
like me?

but i must remember in order to live some more and i cannot but do it again
like i am a beggar to this world to grant me more days to pump red blood to my veins

ah, the fresh air of home there are no factories there no tall buildings but green hills bumping against the breeze of the sea bringing the songs of shells ah, those rivers transparent silky cloth showing the fancy colors of fish swimming upon a refraction

i must tell you about all these again and again
so you will not be lost
from me

ah, we were not once we will always be young forever even on that day when i shall pass away

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
the departure though real as rail of the tram must become some kind of smoke from the fireplace

i love you and i will not tire saying so.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Curious Friend....

of course
we know what we love
yet we also know
the limit of what we can do

we know how wide the field is yet you know how fences can be made to stop this chaos

do not ask us
we always know what love is we shy away from hate
we discard indifference we find no use
of them

do not ask if we are happy
we know what happiness is do not utter the word
sadness
we do not use it
here

we know what we cannot have and we do not wish to give you any

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Dancing Faithfuls Of San Vicente

i do not really know what was it that made me cry.

I stopped somewhere in the middle of the crowd who were dancing to the gong beats of senyor san vicente in olingan.

how can a very disappointing life make you dance?

there were stories of course.

that woman cannot bear a child, that man had three kids who died in a car accident. the hunchback of this town has a wish for a healthy spine.
the old lady has no place to live.

and so on and so forth

these are all people with lamentations.

i am only knowing things on the surface. they never allow me to go deeper because if i have to they will bleed some more and their drops of blood become dry on the pavement not everyone has eyes that see meanwhile senyor san vicente keeps spreading its plaster of Paris wings, white with its new paint glossy and decent.

the dancers perhaps do not know the story that he can be in many places at the same time.

what they know is that this saint is miraculous. something amazing will happen in their lives after the saddest sound of their dance steps.

sonorous, monotonous, by analogy it could be like a scream for help,
for justice,
for understanding of what is happening to their lives.

and the eventual acceptance of their fates.

i do not know why i am crying.
I really do not know why.

i too, have a lamentation of my own.
Perhaps.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Disciples...

he always tells them you are not just horses that are led to the brook to drink water to satisfy your thirst, not just empty glasses where hot water is poured where some goes into an expected breaking you are not just shirts and pants to be buttoned and unbuttoned not just headgears to be worn and displayed in school not just any knife to be sharpened or pencils

you are not my things not the objects but will always be subjects with minds of your own with destinies already reserved at the end there is nothing to worry, even if you do not believe it, everything is written,
there are already maps, and what we do is merely to read them and find out where those treasures lie as Socrates once in his short life emphasized he is just the midwife and you are those pregnant women you shall bear the children move them out from your system hear their first cries and feed them and see them grow ah, not to be really like you i am just the spring and you are the great rivers i am just the spectator and you are the actors of the show i am the shadow and you are the bodies you are all suns, and i shall be the moon that will cast that borrowed light into that earth.

so long, be good,
take all the chances
till we meet again
adios.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Editor

after the lightning and thunder last night the mushrooms begin to grow under the banana shrubs on those wet fields

you will see all of them as i see them and i will bring a basket to gather all of them to offer to you

i trust you to choose the edible ones the ones that we feed to those who are hungry i trust you to throw away all the poisonous ones outside the kitchen

but then i will go out again amidst the rain and even deep in the night to collect those that you throw away i will look at them again bring them in my room and try to see why their lives are too short

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Eyes Of The Newcomer

a green plain
a series of hills
some big mountains
tips reaching the clouds
the sun shines
the wind blows
a leaf falls
the first touch of the hand on the petal of a white flower whiteness
and blueness and scents of flowers and trees

cool, warm,
in solitude

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Flower In The Desert.

First, you tell me that this must be done.
I commented, yes, that will be nice.
Second, you suggest that this will be nice in Riza's place.
I suggested otherwise.
It will be better at Nicco's since the trees are taller and the grasses are greener.
Later, you spread the news. It will be at Nicco's.
Ten answered. They will be there.
Then I got sick. Mother Nature says, I am not good.

The ought was not done.
The Thing did not push through because as you said, I was not there, and that I told you that THIS MUST BE DONE.

I am just wondering why the OUGHT cannot be done without me?
Am I the wheel of the truck?
Am I the steer of the ship?
Am I the owner of the place where Nicco's trees are growing taller and his grasses spreading greener?

I am not. I am not the Ought.
Then you said this no time to discuss this matter.
You are in a meeting with God.

You lied. I am not the OUGHT. You schemed me out.
You want be to become the river where your boats will be sailing.

You lied, It is unfair. I am therefore cutting the water.
I cancel myself. I do not exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Foolish One

ah, look at you
you have finally entered in the net of compulsions
you stepped upon the snake pit
and they all bite you
and you feel
no pain anymore
foolish perhaps but

you are still alive
the venom has immunized you and the snakes are but
worms
the net is but the tangles of the spider
as you destroy them all with one slash of your left hand.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Fourth Year Class Preparing For The Major Exams

we are all dead
tired and we are trying to cope up with each page and fine prints of political law
so taxing to the eyes and so damaging
to our brains,
my dear
class, let us take a break, we go to the pizza parlor
order some mugs
of beer and choose those giant Domino pizzas with mushrooms,
large tomatoes,
and lots of shredded mozarella cheese

good luck this sunday.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Frog Clan

This shall be the symbol of my clan
The slime of my ancestors For those whose claim for life and prosperity Is as prolonged as the length of the list found in the clan’s tree

This frog is your frog
It is part of the multitude Taking the power of the ten rivers Its croaking
Is the uproar against the loudest blur of the reigning rains

You are the frog like us

From water to land to grasses to marshes to trenches
Of this earth
We shall remain as the true descendants of the great frog

By our nature
We shall not go hungry
By the power of the longest tongue By the secret poisons of our skins By our rounded views
By our slime
By the strong clinging of our ties We shall all be saved
From the great flood May our dead ancestors
May the great frogs
Lead us to the most secure pond of our future lives And may the frog in us Give us the great leap
The great jump
Taking us to our dream
Our clear cool waters Teeming with mashing marshes
And there
Dear loving frogs of this clan Let all our croaking be one.
Let all our croaking be true.
Let our croaking be love.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Full Time Student In The College Of Law...

as you were taking the midterm examination on double jeopardy and search and seizures i was looking at you closely,

you are so lucky to have with you supportive parents, friends, you have all the recent books, the latest car, the personal computer the laptop that you carry, the complicated cell phone then you were swinging your head rolling your eyes and scratching your head on such a hard examination as you claim it to be beside you is Dan, working student, poor family, dead father, mother is a plain housewife, and why on earth is he doing well in fact, excelling in this endeavor....

such an irony, but i am not surprised i've been there.

seeing myself in Dan.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Gifted One...Or The Lucky One..

here you conquered our world in just two,

just two, do not ask me what it is, just two..

i have a thousand and perhaps a thousand more this is do with love

i have these sands in my hands yet i never had a grain not a sand dune, not a hill nevertheless, i regret nothing you are the gifted

the lucky one

forgive me,

but i don't really mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Goddess

every day i visit you
i kneel
and look for thoughts matching them
with words
i shower the ground with some tears
i genuflect
i scrutinize every nook
of myself
it is intense
it is a deep experience there are whirlpools and there are hands that pull me down to drown me
i struggle
grap for air into the basics of my experience

everyday i worship you because i too
am looking for a cure into the sickness
of my own
humanity

i make this plea
love me.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Gods

to the gods
i honor them with the humble entrance to my abode

my batting eyelash
my dead eyelid
my wry smile
my knife of loneliness
that can stab
anybody

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Hand Painter Who Goes Offline When I Go Online

i lied when i said i like your painting it is a pity
no one
buys it.

the truth is
what i saw in that canvass was a man deprived of happiness craving for sex
but cannot simply accept that his body
needs it

warmth is not all jacket it is better
done with skin
to skin
inside a room where you are naked and so private with another body looking for that much needed intimacy in the middle of this city where indifference
seems to be the mother of mankind.

i wish sometimes that you better do a portrait of yourself in black and while sketches
from a sharp charcoal
on a very white and thick
canvass.
To The Heavens....

what really happened is that i burned bridges. I leave so many boats at the other side of the island. I stop what i have begun before.

i sold phones. Keep the money for my needed silence.

i put all the books inside a box and i sealed all of them. There is no more air.

I refuse appearances. They are too deceiving. Myself deceived included.

The news that they receive is that i got sick, but they refuse to believe it.

I keep my old room. Dust my personal computer. Check the old wires. And i start thinking my own personal thoughts. I am reinventing a self, reconstructing what i do not believe.

I blast my own port. Leave the house built by Papa. And here i am. I write only for myself.

I ask more questions now, and I am different, I expect no answers. Because the world does not have them.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Hypocrite

i

Many kiss the hand
they wish cut off

ii

we despise the pleasure of pleasing people whom we despise

iii

The lips are smiling, but is the heart?

iv

A hypocrite is the kind of politician who would cut down a redwood tree, then mount the stump and make a speech
for conservation

v

The value of an idea has nothing to do with the success
of the man
who expresses it.

vi

It is with pious fraud
as with a bad action;
it begets
a calamitous necessity of going on.
Every man alone is sincere;
at the entrance of a second person hypocrisy begins.

The wolf was sick,
he vowed a monk to be-
But when he got well,
a wolf once more was he.

It is a trick among the dishonest to offer sacrifices that are not needed, or not possible,
to avoid making

For neither man
nor angel can discern hypocrisy, the only evil
that walks invisible.
those that are required.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Indifferent One...

you think
i will miss you?

you think
that i gonna die
when
i won't have you?

i'll make it
clear
i'll state it categorically
clear

i don't
i don't

i don't
i don't

i didn't.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Intelligent Woman

i like to tell you this when you bragged about your intelligence mocking me like i am the only moron in your world of ideas and poetry

save yourself
if intelligence has that record of survival as far as i am concerned so far as i remember fully well there is not 'a word in the gospels in praise of intelligence'

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Lady In Power

i thought
no mother in her right mind would give a snake to her child who is asking for bread

d个项目 time an aberration had taken place right in
the road
where the hungry children flocked to ask for rice

the force of the law was used against the very ones who put them in power

instead of rice
they were given bullets three were killed

the other hundred wounded some disappeared

what a mess!
do they not know that the murderous
shape of bullets are not the same as the gentle grace of rice grains?

they ask for life
and you Madam gave them death

you have no moral right to continue being their mother.....

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Misogynist Brother Of Ours...

i understand
the struggle of the misogynist

i am his brother and i comprehend how hate was a seed how it had grown roots how it became a
tree
in the midst of new york

to cope up
to recompense
what and who he hated
for whatever reason
we have learned to
love
and love so well

to level the field
we have built a statue
for mother
a memorial for sister and gave an honorary ball for wife.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Missing Bell Of Dapitan to reclaim what was once yours lame, your crutch is the silence of this night,

the conscience balm is what is right

soon you will hear the most sorrowful sound of the church bell in Dapitan

stolen from the masses taken to the U.S.

The prayers of the natives are mountains and rivers seeking the ocean of revenge

soon you will find yourself alone in the park still walking in the rain this is the time of drought the grasses are dying

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Modern Creature Of Troy

before you do it
you have to count
ten thousand ships
and a hundred thousand
waves

everything resonate
to an end
some are catastrophic irreversible

now you are beside me my hands are waiting my heart is excited everything in me is anxious for the real thing this action for a hundred explosions of this emotion

i have counted ten thousand and one hundred forty three ships and three hundred thousand waves
and after a while
i have come to the inevitable conclusion:

you are not worth it.
you have not launched a thousand ships
at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Monkey Year....

it is the year of the monkey
nevertheless i am still lucky
as a buffalo i still have a chance to let this playful monkey ride on my back
gather the fruits
of my labor
and on my hard future
savor my fervor.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Moon And Come Back.....

what we did
was done
and it cannot be undone
no matter how we wish it
undone

what we did
we did so with love
and then we
parted

what we did and what we want done again we cannot do otherwise and so here we are wishing and remembering just nothing but reminiscing

but all is not too late if we will
we can
we could have done so
only if
and only if we love and we really love to the hilts down to the bones to the moon
and come back

RIC S. BASTASA
To The New Zealander Who Climbs The Topmost Rocky Mountain

Rocky road leading to the rocky mountain up to the top is the cross that spreads its shadow to the deepest blue sea below us

and you climb the rocks
as i close my eyes

imagining how is it when you fall

and die....

RIC S. BASTASA
mama had favored you.
we were humiliated.
set aside like wastes.
we embraced silence.
no choice. how can we hate mother anyway?
well, it is all about money. Something we never really need.
we only need enough.
we had it somehow.
you shall amass what is unnecessary and we just stare at all these.
you are old, no one lives forever. the days are running fast like a rabbit.
we are contented with what is in our hands.
we travel to places.
we talk to strangers.
we had enough pictures.
we only had ourselves.
Light is free, so is air.
The road is long and wide and winding. Myriad choices whom to be with.
Even in funerals of friends, we avoid you.
Evil spirit. Crazy woman.
Avarice and greed combined.
may you not die.
may you be eternally damned to life and old age.
may you belong to the earth forever.
may you not know where
is home.
To The One I've Known When I Was Younger Then there was something in the past that burnt me

you were there innocent like someone who does not belong
to earth

you never had he wings of an angel or even that of a bird the chicken in you shames me you were telling stories that i had no right to listen because they hurt me you did not know, you were a stranger in my heart i was shattered with the news you laughed at me, that was my first shame, i fetched water from the well, repaired the leaking roof of the house of my father, did not talk to mama for days, regretting that i was born with a limp on my leg, a black mark on my face, a weakness on my heels

i did not change anything, it would be impossible i must live all my years, and you shut your mouth up you know very well, that despite everything i am human and i have the right to be here and you went your way, and i avoided the cross-crossing of our paths

i live my life well, and that is your shame.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The One On Top...

knowing that
his having reached
the top
was an injustice one learns
that the top is not important
at all.

after all
just like you
he is a nobody
too.

RIC S. BASTASA
'To The One Who Cannot Drink, Do Not Show Water'

FAIR lady, be fair to me tonight do not show your naked body inside
my room,

when you knock my heart is a an empty box

when you kiss me
i am a wall without framed pictures

when you make love to me
i am dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The One Who Cannot Read Anymore....

there is always that faith in the silent nurtures of your heart that i can be better than this that i can do much better than that the i am great

though you do not say it lest others mistake it as arrogance or conceit, or the hubris of the roots of adamhood

the sin of confidence? the pride of independence? the conceit of pandora?

there is this confidence that we keep that we are good, and that we could do much better that we are the best so far, but we do not say it, we do not even write it, though we show it in some subtle ways, a trick on ourselves, a hidden truth, always not ready to be uttered, but here i am, as always, i am,

without pretense, without a song, without a carpet, proclaiming, i am alive and that is best enough for me, and i still write

i have never told you and you will never have a chance reading this.

it is my sympathies.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The One Who Feels Superior...

above us
stars

if you can be above it

i will vow
spaceship.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The One Who Gives Me Pain

expect this domino game of pains what you give me
i give to all of them
in return
and surely there will be a collapse
of all emotions
the last one to have it may inflict upon himself the worst
but who cares?
this is a well connected world the moment a butterfly flutters a storm
somewhere is created.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The One Who Keeps Looking On Those Walls

you shall hear no sad word from us we are silent because of you we are watching a clear pond this summer away from you

do not ever think that we entertain anger we have long set that aside like rags come to us, we are forming a circle we are connecting our hands like a perimeter fence we are praying for understanding to come like droplets of lights from the skies like meteorites talk to us, look straight to our eyes there is no reason for an embarrassment look at all of us and see how you can manage this journey you must win this game of weaknesses you are looking at those walls where you cannot pass through come, look at our eyes that love you still: you shall win this game you must, what is the use of our presence here now when you dissolve like ice on a hot desert day come, look at us, we had been there, and we shall not return look at our eyes now, and take the power: you must win this game, you must!

RIC S. BASTASA
To The One Who Recently Left The House Of Love.... and i will be missing your massage

soft and gentle to my chest and i will be regretting throughout
my life
for what which i have not done
lovingly unto you

i shall be teased for only piercing your ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The One Who Says She Is Reading My Poem

let us have a compromise, after reading the first stanza from my magic lines
i will give you
youth, and on the second stanza i will hand you
beauty
on the third stanza i will promise you fortune on the fourth perhaps intelligence
and on the fifth perhaps
fame,

i have this magic wand given by fairy godmother the one used for Cinderella and Snow white and Rapunzel

and Shrek, and so on and so forth, tonight then you must read my poem, but don't you be disappointed, it has only one word.

Fool.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The One Who Was Taken

it does not fit you you're too young
bound to commit
same errors over
and over again

since you persistently prayed for it
and so it was given

you do not deserve it now you must spread the virus of your grief you will kill without your knowing
you will condemn
the innocent
you will be honored
and respected
but only for the meantime the time comes for reckoning and you will lose what is most important you will lose everything everything and yet without your knowing you should have known better that sometimes the gods grant your prayers purposely to punish you and still without your knowing without your knowing.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Oppressor...

there are those without choices left but to live in the comfort of the cave you burned their houses and the only bridge that connects to us

the river swells and crocodiles live there there is no more way
for home,

there are those who commit the crimes because a jail is home it has become a shelter where food is free
where peers are kind where choices are none

there are birds which you put is so many cages to your delight
they have no choice but to stay there till death i have seen their bones and feathers i have kept them all in my home

sooner shall the Furies come, bringing you the cage
the jail,
the cell where you shall dwell forever then you shall know what songs are there inside the teeth gritting

what bitterness is there drilling pain to a tooth decaying and you too shall have no choice i shall see you pass, i will keep your bones.

To The Other World

try standing naked by this mirror see yourself to every detail look closer to your eyes count the waves of your eyelashes open your mouth and see how many teeth you have all white, pure white lining up on your pink gums feel your lips with your fingertips feel the pulp the flesh of the lower lip to the upper lip
touch your hair
do not imagine them all black closely they are not at all move a little bit closer and see your body this beautiful human body flesh, contours, curves, some muscles the whole of your skin wrapping everything in your body holding them all nothing falls, on this erect body, this god before you, standing steel-like with dignity in front of the mirror
do not claim you have seen your soul with your eyes do not lie
be honest to yourself now, alone, you are alone, do not imagine any god, any soul, any spirit, just be honest,
touch your body with your hands feel the joy of having this body your body, pinch a part of it to feel not pain, but just to feel that you are alive, do you ever ask what made these parts stay as one?
look again at the mirror of this stature your body, it is you, touching your body take a hammer, and destroy the mirror shatter everything to pieces this is the world without a mirror there is nothing to reflect you now nothing to imagine, it is you, the real you do you ever ask now, where is that other world?

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Outside Guy

from here
we have the intentions of telling you about ourselves you do not see us in this place

there is no winter here we have never felt ice there is no autumn
we never see the sadness of the
leaves falling
we either have rain or shine

it is only them
who tells us that this is our paradise lost

we wish for something else on sad faces as said the far pastures are always greener

i've been to places and this i tell them this is where i belong this is here where home is where there is no winter neither autumn
but just rain or shine

you are wrong
we have no regrets
neither are we envious about skis and snow balls
To The Person I Love

the person i really love
i have not
said
i love you

the sentence is so enormous
i love you
no promises are enough and thinking about its immortality is too much we just live

according to its import moment by moment

at most uttering i love you

destroy the essence of its purity in silence it the quiet
where it thrives where it reigns in the kingdom of its gaze

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Poet Who Writes About The Inverted Point Of View Of The Bats

it is unfair.
the bat has chosen
privacy
and has not said
anything
about us
humans

upon an inverted
existence
of having days as nights living in caves
and cracks and dark nooks
it has the right
to put on those signals:

do not disturb
please do not disturb us we are bats
we live in peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Poet Whose Poems We Should Not Have Read

i anticipated something horny all i have was thorny

i was excited about the title but up to there only because the whole body was ugly

i promise myself i will not read any of his work again but i must be stupid for i fall on the same mistake again it's alright, we are fools somehow asking ourselves what do we gonna do to make his quit?

to survive i must be numb to be more stupid this time then i will be number one.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Poor Woman I Love

I bought you a dress
Wear it
You are so beautiful
In it
You stand
And I will look
At you
You turn to the left
And to the right
And then
I ask you
To raise your head
With dignity
You will speak
To me
The words
I write on the letter
I sent with the Money
You must say
You love me
Then I will Bow before you
Inside this room
I will ask you
To take out the dress
Again
I want to see
This time
If you are Already real
But you may
Not
If you don’t Really like
It, so I can Now take my honest
exit..
RIC S. BASTASA
To The Rocks

for my youth
i heard all the music of the rocks it was hard but it was good it was rough but we learned to like them all nothing destructive just the surging and the hilarity of the roller coaster ride to the present stage,

and now,
to the rocks shall everything be,
i keep the career
and i cannot keep both,

soon, i shall shy away from any contractual obligations i have my own reasons so shall the other party, and the judge of all time, God, or man, or everyone one,

shall say,

we agree, the binds are too strong but somehow there is a word to loosen it,

they are right,
they have called it by the name of chains iron locks,
nightmare clocks,

at night, you see a face without eyes and ears and there is that big scream on those days you keep on watching how the wind is robbing the trees of their leaves

and then at the end, you realize that there is nothing that you need the nothingness engulfs you and then happily

you embrace its arms, you rest, you are gone you leave a note to the sands, forget everything

leave all as they are.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Sadness Of Everyone And Everywhere.

if only i could love you, i should have done that years ago,

i only said the words which my heart never really meant,

i am only copying the humanity angle of that novel which you wrote
years back,

i never loved you
i was never honest
never that daring to tell the truth,

your love was always greater than my lies,
your pain much deeper than my hypocrisy,

you are such a lovely and passionate woman which i had taken advantage of, for as always your love was always greater than mine to the other whose name i have never revealed to you,

the heart is as always unreasonable, my mind
wants to love you yet my heart had always vehemently refused it.
i am so sorry for all this mess, i would have asked for forgiveness, but you had already left for good, always carrying with you the sweet memory of me,

now that you have settled on your own chosen path with a family of your own, i say, i am happy for you, now that i have remained lonely throughout my life, let me say, let it be, for i so deserve it.

in weighing the scales, i have not lived well, a life in a lie, a life without passion, a leaf floating on the river, carried by the current to the sadness of everyone and everywhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Six Furies Of My Mind...

we,

who are being attacked by the Five Furies

mine now Six

have no other possible defense to protect our minds

but to write these lines

so do not ask me
why i am writing th ese

i am being chased and so i am running away

i have to run away still because i am being chased like wind to another wind like nothing to another nothing

i am
perhaps still afraid of the death of my

mind

the death of the wind the trees will die too

the fireflies turn off their lights the birds fall down the trees i, who want to still think and think to think some more has no other option

i write to make the Six Furies know that i also know how to protect myself
that i am
a survivor

i do not speak here but the Six Furies must stop a while and hear

they must listen lest they shall die in their own noise like fire on their long hair

i make my plea,

i am guilty, i am guilty i know i am guilty of all the lies and deceit but give me more time please

to choose

a happy
death.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Stars On The Wings Of A Pig

be not hopeless
because my dear even with the wings of a pig we can still reach the hands of the stars...

just have that heart the good one of course
the one that redeems the coarseness
of humanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The State...

distance between two decisions is heaven and earth am situated between these two extremes belong to that spot where compromises are made am but compromise too
my nature speaks a lot about this and that and this space in between live here in this place where people wear two faces have four hands and four feet
but we do not display them we fear you.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Sunflower Goddess

i once wrote a poem for you sunflower goddess

each word is tainted with my blood
each line is drawn within the perimeters of my aching heart

i look for you sunflower goddess
i am the moon

you are destined for the harshness of the noonday sun tonight you will be mine but you are dead

sunflower goddess

i will bury you in the embrace of my golden sheen
tonight
my witness shall be a hundred stars

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Thief Of The Night....

it was not what you took away from me
that i cried about
it was you
for you have not changed
still
for the better

we're sorry for
this
we are saddened still for we could have given you more yes, more than what your hands can steal...

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Traveler

may your travel be smooth may your guide be kind may you arrive on time with the Lord shall you dine.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Turle Who Shall Live For A Hundred Years

It is true
i am at loss
if age be the gauge for you can live for a hundred or more years while i can only have less

it is true
you are slow and patient and persistent
and silent
and in fact you have defeated the rabbit
in that classic race

but if i were to carry my own house at my back and anywhere i go i have to hide my head against a war
for my sure survival and if in these struggles i simply have to be silent and meek for another hundred years just to live

forgive me Turtle, but i must tell
that i'd rather be myself still-a man, vulnerable in love and war still in my humanity at par.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Two Unknown Women.... to both of you

i shall not be at the middle of this mess
you do not have to quarrel over nothing

the song that you shall hear from the bottom of my heart is for someone who is not here with the three of us

(she left me a long long time ago and i am still teaching myself how to forget her face)

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Untouchable

every idea
is garnished with a personal touch

every touch
is warm

the night is cold
as indifference

you have always been only an idea to me

despite my touch
in high noon

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Virgins

my mistake was shattering
virgins who did not make use of their time until i was shattered myself
guilt laden
in sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Window

if you are closed today and i cannot open you because you are definite on a holiday
or plain protestation

i open another one
i have this key and i can open this anytime and then like a bird i fly down there
to the tunnel of the cave where no light
at the end
is visible

inward i can find some more of what outside has to offer

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Woman I Once Loved

i have this morning seen this picture of a teen-age girl in facebook,

she carries your chinese eyes and your rosy lips

i am bothered by her nose it is not yours as a matter of prose her eyebrows oh i will always remember black birds which we watched while we drank beer when i was yet your truthful lover when your head once rested on my shoulder when we were seated on a bench of yore facing a row of boats docked ashore i am nurturing a broken heart and so i understand how is it to be hurt this teen-age girl who wears this sweetest smile takes me back to you my dear -in a certain while i smile to myself, i admit i have been so wrong and too must i admit, i am still so strong.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Woman That I Love

i am tired
with time

it is the black cat that bit me

and i cannot anymore recover
i am rabid,
my saliva is flowing
like a leak
in the faucet,

i am not Adam
so please Lady in my nightmare
if you understand
what love is

kindly return back
my rib
so i can complete
myself

to meet death
nicely.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Woman Who Is Always Asking For Cybersex

i am tired
on this virtual reality,
the truth is
i do not ejaculate
with words and images we can do it somewhere where we meet
and do the thing but sorry
i never love you

and even if you think of me as nothing but a condom
i also know that beyond all these things that we never do
there lies this space beyond eroticism

you have never been there that's why

i regret having known
an imagination as you

a mirage without the desert

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Woman Who Slept At The Library Studying Law

as i see it
your left brain has been left out it is that part of the boat without a passenger or a cargo

your right brain is fully loaded with almost everything bread and butter thing
career, studies, plans, it is even carrying the future of all of you there son and husband and dreams what to do next in the next dr months

the boat leans on the right side and it is about to sink do something, now.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The X Chromosome

if i will be made to choose between you and the stone i will choose the stone for it will not make any difference at all.

if you replace it with a flower i will choose the flower i always wish that everything will simply be temporary at wilting time i will be free from your thorns and tendrils if you offer me silence i think i will accept it immediately i like its simplicity i like its being a prelude to something much higher rest, could be, but think a little more, i will give you a hint, the silence of the widower.

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Young Man Who Is Gathering All His Poems In Chapters....

you're too young
like a seed still covered and without yet
a face,
and yet you have started so well deeper than Vulcan
in fact hotter than the fire suppressed
within
the magma of two earths you're too fresh to wilt and tell the world about it i am worried at this moment when you begin to put all your poems in chapters of a book like you are telling them all that you are finally gathering them

all
in order to quit

young man, rest for a while do not hurry this world spins and in our smallness like ants
we shall never notice
any change
until we see another sunset another faded day another darkness of the night where we are told to take rest and sleep...

RIC S. BASTASA
To The Youngest Brother

in your rage
i am not a cage
in your wasteful manner i have seen all the danger in you hysteria
i am but a listening hyena i understand all these without any malice
young brother
i had been there and for the last i shall this tell i am always your mantel.

RIC S. BASTASA
To These Lonely Shadows

tHERE is no reason for such an elongated grief the days are getting shorter and the sun is losing grip of its own rays the winds are talking to you and i am wondering why you are not answering them?

RIC S. BASTASA
To Those Who Manipulated The Scores

buddy
we are always at a loss we have written
so many
we have done all the scratch and have shown the way to the land of the itch
and the hitch
and yet look at us buddy we are ignored and left out sinking at the bottom
of the sea
like ships losing the battle of Manya

despite our (well sad to accept really) genius.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Travel To Wander To Be Away From Anything

today i leave on a journey beyond the sea i shall wander to see the other face of this earth
somewhere
i will be away from anything it is my decision
it is my need,

away, i will wander, away, i will ponder i will be hgher from this place so i can see better from this far i will be silent i will not write i will not make conclusions the wandering will be long i will be alone to the wonders of God's creations unspeakable

unfathomable

i will just watch the flow of days and nights i will be silent still this spectator, this wanderer this worshipper, these eyes will just feel unspeaking

because there are no words equivalent to these wonders that now i will begin to see with so much beauty that will surely shame me

RIC S. BASTASA
To Truly Love...

must i kill myself to love you truly? i guess that would be unfair to the utmost

shall i not too try to love myself who loves you most? i am afraid i must wake up from this horrible nightmare of having to love you the rest of my life i am crazy

but not for long for tomorrow morning i will be ready to sing my first song my love of self my having to begin again to try my luck on someone else to live my life somewhere where love can love me where hope can still grow

RIC S. BASTASA
To Understand My Life And Live It To The Full

At that time
she concluded, 'this matter is not our bread and butter thing and we can do something apart from these somehow we are not the literati who make those split-ends scurry, hurry and bury'

and looking far into that island behind us where we are seated upon a beach bench comfortable with our pizza and beer and coffee and that background music of jazz and wind and coldness of the place under the trees our feet buried on the sands, she finally blurted 'we must be kind and patient we shall encourage those who have yet to start their life in poetry and let them explore some more the world where we do not intend to live for a while and then die unnoticed' this of course, i do not very well understand.

i dare myself, i have come this far
to understand my life and live it to the full.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Understand You

it is like i am studying a new subject matter to teach for another semester because that old professor died cancer of the prostate and i am the substitute, it is time consuming, but for lack of will to refuse i am back again to something that i hate, to begin, to read what i have long forgotten, remembering is always painful, there were less happy days to reckon with, you, i have long dropped the idea of this dead tree growing leaves again, roots not deeply rooted, the bark coming out, but this is an obligation, to be with you, again, to live in a house where life nests time, where the ought becomes a code, as i open the pages for my study, i stopped and think of other ways to really understand you, i gazed at the ceiling and then shifted my strategy to the floor, something flashes,

i must start at the end, and then go back to that previous poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Vanessa Mae

after the fiddle in the wildest harmonies of your classical violin please come to my room and fiddle the best of all the best songs the base, the tip of my top, the giggle of the gigs inside my underwear, there is this fire that damns me to an eternal longing this madness not anymore bound to a second fiddle. play me, please.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Want To Be Liked

to want to be wanted
to want to be liked
to want to be needed indeed for one to be indispensable
hungry for praise
seeking attention
grabbing the glory of whatever shall be

to be loved
to be wanted to be liked

to love
to want to like this is man and this is woman mortal

there is nothing divine in this self in this self searching self that in loving to be loved destroys itself in return to God, is the giving of self outward, opening like fingers spreading to the skies hands that open and never shall close because love so divine always opens unconsumed unexhausted undefeated

RIC S. BASTASA
To Want To Do To Perfect An Art

this is the secret
passed from one mouth
to another
about the greatness of this
art

first is to want then to do
and then to do this and that over and over again because you want it and you want to do it
and so
this is the greatness of this art to want, to do, to perfect the art of fitting words like pipe to pipe
where water runs to quench the thirsty mouth
out there

you and i,
art and fidelity
technique on the opaque
optics of options
wordiness and worthiness
you and i
love and devotion
sun to day
moon to night
hand to mouth
eyes and lips
body and soul
the soundness
and the soundless
bursting of my emotions, tonight.
To What I See I Close My Eyes And Then I Pray.

there are so many doors in this world you are gifted
you see what is unseen
but we are all the same that in this freedom you are allowed to only take one
not both
not many but just one door to freedom just one door to do good but you may choose the bad door which appears attractive to you
you choose
and then take it
you are gifted
you know the consequences and so be wise what i do you have seen me to what i see i close my eyes and then i pray.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Where I Am Seated

i am seated and from where i am my mind travels on my eyes that are closed and i see places where my heart hovers and i taste the salt of tears and i keep a bowl where i keep emptiness i am at rest but it does not mean that i am rested you must know this when you come to the house asking for pieces of my advice i only give you what you deserve and what you are and i tell you about the places where you can be all from my own point of view and you say you are hurt and you will never come back i am seated and i am at rest and i have no plans moving my feet to where you are going i deserve this place and this place deserves me and i ask no more questions for my longing my eyes are closed, and i keep this voice.

RIC S. BASTASA
To While The Hours Away

Without you
I lie among the grasses
In the backyard Listening to The twinkling
Of stars

RIC S. BASTASA
To Whine Or Not To Whine?

to whine or not to whine?
but first ask,
is there someone there
listening there?
is there someone?
someone?
who knows what whining is
who knows

someone who
understands that there is nothing wrong with whining?

is there? can his listening change your world
for the better?
can your whining
do something good
for this, well,
rotten world?

then whine.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Withstand The Crowd

if all of you shall dance to be noticed
i won't, i would be still like
a post
i would stand tall like a wall

if all of you go right to be noticed i will go wrong and if all of you wear yellow
to be noticed
i wear black

and if all of you are so silent like zombies
i will scream and to be notice well i will dress like an angel if on the stage the three of us are displayed

you two tumble
i will make bubbles like a fish as you tumble like the weeds i like to stand in the crowd in the sea of conformity i would like to be the black urchin of your discomfort

if i must bite you i will only to be noticed for you never really care you never really really love me truly that 's the reason why.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Write A Poem That Hurts Somebody to tell the truth that hurts a friend

how to make a poem
like that?
something runs from my fingers to the keyboard
about a friend that i never like to hurt or you
the reader whom i do not know much but expect much from me i shall write the truth of a suffering monk, a human body misshapen by centuries of tradition of women veiled unable to drive their own cars
of children molested by priests of an apologizing Pope about airplane crashes involving your loved ones about boats capsizing in the island off Mali
volleyed by pirates about love that betrayed love about life that cuts itself in one instance
about the blink of an eye and the slashing of the wrist of life writs of censure
and lust

i will continue writing about the other truths tonight one involving you but i shall not finish it but keep it
i wish no pain
never again.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Write A Poem While You Are Mumbling

while you mumble
about the lives of other people those that i am also complaining about knocking at our doors at early dawns
while we are still feeling what the world will be
today

i decided to simply think about myself what can i do
to make a silent exit where no one cares to notice that i am rushing to
for a trip somewhere

i remember
when the door bell rings because she is depressed about the world
what it did to her that she cannot just forgive

i hide myself and pretend that this world is dead and keep my own life to
myself

writing poems
and thinking about more
metaphors
about how to be strong and kind and gentle and compassionate
about
a lost soul
screaming to be taken to our arms

tragic,
ironic,
what i do
is not what i want to do and then she screeched her motorcycle

away
leaving me

writing another poem and feeling so empty

RIC S. BASTASA
To Write About Life….And Love...

i will write about life, upon those eggs that cracked when the chicks start popping up like mushrooms sprouting beside the banana shrubs after a night's
heavy rain,
there will be sounds of hatch-lings and fledgelings inside the nests of seagulls and hawks,
i can hear the cries of baby whales
under the sea,
spawns of corals spurting from their new trunks and protrusions, there will be bulbs of onions, buds of roses slowly starting to bloom to give to the world the transformation of reddish to deep red,
a sunrise, green grass groping for a hold
on the sand,
vines extending tendrils,
a new born baby's first cry to the world, ah, i feel life like blood rushing in my veins once more filling my heart with the abundance of love.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Write About Light And Openness

let light fall upon me let my hands open to Thee let my mouth sing

the songs of love and praises let me worship you let me bow before you

My Lord, have i forgotten you?
You have not ever
forgotten me

i know.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Write About Pain....

it is when a bug bites me
and i could not find it when i remember
that i still have to write about pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Write About The Tree

to write about the tree and the sun how do they ever stand each other?
is it the need? is it the love?
i cannot really write about it.
i always see them there as i sit under the tree's shade.
as i scorch myself under the sun's heat.
i could have written about the unfolding to the red flower and the wonder of the grass. i am helpless now.
i am addicted to something else inside the room.
on a dim light. on a warm bed.
do not say a name. do not mention about the shape of the human body.
yes, it is. and will always be.
the human anatomy speaking about itself.
love is not a word there. it is a view. it is a touch. it is beyond what is good and what is wrong.
it is the silence. it is the swallowing of what we are.
it is the rubbing of skin. until the universe ejaculates what it keeps.
until the earth reveals what is in that womb.
it is the unreasoning of life's rules.
it is merely the flow.
nothing else.

RIC S. BASTASA
i do not just write from a scratch of an idea from anywhere like i get a pen and a piece of yellow paper, a blank sheet of bondpaper, unperfumed like the love letter sent to sensuality, it is not a matter of switching on the light of the lampshade early dawn, rub my eyes, tap my middle finger on the table, and breathe deeply and say, i will write this emptiness, with no one inside this circle of emptiness, like an empty set,

zero, nothing inside some domains,
no,
writing starts with someone in mind not really something lovely that excites my hormones my lust and desire for another sexual fantasies it woudl be too selfish and ignoble,

writing starts with you the concrete you, the once crying inside the room on a wintry night, the one who needs the comfort of my thoughts, the warmth of my concern though distant like the sun to another sun to another star to another star of this galaxy to another galaxy, i think about your worries i reflect upon your quest to be alive again i ponder upon your thirst
for love
something specific something i can touch with the fingers of my mind something that i can bite and check if this something is still tasting the salty taste of the blood of life, as i grow somehow i shall think about the great spaces and places of the other worlds beyond you and me
beyond us,
my mind gaping like an open mouth of a baby opening to the freshness of this world i will start with you your sad eyes, it will start with the question how can i ever wipe your tears how can i ever make you smile again and then the sadness of the world its miseries

how can we ever heal it, how can we ever make it green and alive again

from the very beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
To Write Truthfully About The Rain

i must be here when the rain falls heavily and when the waters rise above canals and manholes where what i see is water everywhere when the rain does not stop i must cross this street to another street taking the middle of this flooded ways without an umbrella
without my clothes on the rain falls in all freedom to the pores of my body penetrating the thickness of my hair my mouth drinks its drops my ears take some more

i may be blinded and even be deaf let the rain fall freely & heavily on my body only then can i truthfully write about this rain this walk this wetness this freedom this oneness on the world that cries on these drops these tears

RIC S. BASTASA
To Write Your Poems The Easy Way down the rhythm is in the huff and puff down the inhale and exhale do of your life, the color is in down the hues of sunrise and sunset do of the taste is right there down in your tongue do the kiss of your lips do sweet and sour and sometimes bitter

down we swallow all these and you hear do how smooth all these in your ears
do like the hush of the wind
one day
in your life

down moment by moment every minute savored
like you have never lived before
like
tomorrow does not come
like you
loving the person who loves you
like a push and down a pull
like both of you engaged to a touch of eternity

do that is the ease of my poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
To You

to you
i come as a gnat
and your black tangled
hair
is always my favorite
niche
well, there is love
who can deny it
i was a gnat
but not that long
i hung like an elephant tusk
a tail, a very long tail to your dreams
your fantasies
of clumps of waterfalls thuds of feet-like creatures
on your thighs
there is this crunch that we cannot forget how can we? we always love it somehow like a trek on morning on the mountain trail
to the top
comes the sun
busting between us.

RIC S. BASTASA
To You I Am Just A Voice

to you i am just a voice there are no hands to rejoice no lips to press
yours to mine
on such a distance

yet even if distance dissolves and what you see is this empty glass still your hand cannot hold it to a mere touch
the glass breaks

i will just a voice in distance i will still be a voice in your head in this presence for i am a slave of air and to the iron rail i am but a train that is passing by

RIC S. BASTASA
To You My Dear Reader

to you my dear reader
my words may appear like some exercises of thought like some briskwalkers and joggers on the park on early mornings wanting to be fit for life as they stretch their legs and use their muscles and shake and whirl and bend and stand and push up and sit and split

to you these words may not mean anything at all something to be read without the involvement of any feeling sensitivity kept like a pocketed smile buried significances

try looking at it from my viewpoint the misery of keeping things to oneself the ability to hide things in symbols and images because they are too hurting to be faced in their real forms because they cannot be tackled and be trampled because in any manner of confronting it there is only defeat
loss
surrender and even death and so you are left with nothing but simply see them as art ciphers, and representations, and codes and then when i become so strong and determined

my confidence shall unravel them and then i shall have moved from poetry
to prose.

RIC S. BASTASA
To You, For You

I am human. I am skin all over hiding The stark reality of bones and veins I keep my blood as rivers inside me My mind as the air and the sea I am human. I am a continent. I am An island hiding this passion and desire Inside my territory. If by chance you come And land on my shores, I am the port The path, I am this garden, I am this grass I am this cloud, I am the sun and the moon, I am human. I am all the changes that you see I am earth, I am water, I am fire. Come!
Enjoy the amenities of my mortality.
I am human. Take everything in me.
It is all yours because You are my God.

RIC S. BASTASA
To You, My Oppressor...

dis-edify me
it does not matter
i am no god.
discredit me
i am not affected
i am not famous.
kill me, take the honor, you cannot destroy me
i am not just human either.
there is someone inside me that knows how to fly
and having no issues with the earth
i go away with having to return.
and mind you,
you are forever,
alone, in that
kingdom of despair.

my oppressor.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Your Ears....

you are air.
your name is air. I know you in some other variations.
aerated, ariel, aerophogastolic, air balloon,
tear gas,

what ill wind brought you here to me this morning?

i could be an ill wind myself to bring sickness to the minds of the sleepy people, but i did not. I stay here, alone and steady. I like to be still.

Still as a steel pipe. Birds may come and check if i am really steel.

i do not mind. I have no more time.
Throw a stone at me, and i will make you some music.

RIC S. BASTASA
To Your My Beloved Upon A Lonely Night

i cannot open the door i have not seen any window there is no backyard to where i can gain entrance no backdoor either the kitchen light is off and the veranda is kept away with a higher fence
this time

i will try next time to enter
your world
but i guess this time you are happier being left alone you shall have the moon somehow beside your glass window

RIC S. BASTASA
To Your Own Voice.....

i won't tell you that things are not okay in the island

the storm has no intention to leave and the trees have long been gone i won't tell you that the children are buried in mud and the women are wailing looking for their men i won't tell you about the faces of suffering the horrible sounds of needing without any sign of help i won't tell you about all these wrongs that you keep on saying we have committed ourselves brother, wherever you live now, we have only one thing to say good luck, keep your conscience intact, listen to your own voice, it is all you've got.

RIC S. BASTASA
To....(Never Mind)

bright sun
white sandy beaches hammock

pinacolada
rhum

soft breeze
a little salty air coconut trees

faint music mozart

later reggae
and dance

would have been perfect

if you were here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today

dwell on the left side of your brain learn the art of everything, of winning and losing of giving and taking

learn the art of loving emote, denote, connote appreciate what this world is all about
rotate, collide, vibrate, revolve, evolve, devolve involve, indulge,

drink what dew and nectar is there
be happy
if literal must i be join the bees
fly with the wind and the butterflies

why not? you are young and the world is not that old enough not to understand.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today As A Present From God To Me

today
is God's present to me a cue from Habib a present too

he accepts from God today

we open the present
today
and we see the sun
and a garden
of flowers
and the wind
and the sea and the mountain inside it

we marvel

and then the clock strikes the bio-rhythm of hunger in our guts

it is breakfast time
and there is still nothing to eat on the table

today is just a present and we still have a lot of work to do

RIC S. BASTASA
Today As I Leave Kk

I see a single stork standing still on one feet upon a lake
beside a busy road leading to the Terminal 2 of this airport

RIC S. BASTASA
Today I Give Pain Its Freedom

i will be a little lax today setting pain carefully and letting them go giving them wings to fly away from me and telling them not to come back for a while, giving them a break i open the entrance at the front door with some streamers and flowers some bees and dragonflies and butterflies on the stairs of the house beside the door and the windows welcome happiness, welcome home!

RIC S. BASTASA
today let me tell you i read about falling contained in your poem which sounds like zen,
something metaphysical from the point of view of taoism which likely you must have learned so well while you were in Tibet when you studied in Thailand when you spent sometime contemplating on the ruins of Myanmar

you tell me that not everything that falls reaches the ground
some of them simply dissolve in the air and the hands and palms of the earth waiting
actually receives nothing like snowflakes overrun by summer heat like your sighs simply dissolving in the clouds but at the conclusion you were honest enough to admit that some are simply falling and keep on falling and falling

to some depths of infinity
on an eternal abyss
that even time has no power to catch and hold them

they just keep on
falling
it is their nature
agape, askance,
behold!

RIC S. BASTASA
Today I Say Thank You For The Silence

thank you for the silence when you tap my shoulder without saying a word that was all that i need thank you for the smile without uttering any word that smile has spoken more than what i need for the day when i finally hit the rocks at the bottom thank you for the company it was more than the flowers and the money and the food even for that short moment way beyond my longer days of sorrow you have given me comfort now, in my solitude, i need more of the silence thank you, you also know how to leave me always at the right time when silence becomes so precious when we call it

golden

RIC S. BASTASA
Today I See You

today i see you again
you are near me and i can smell the sweat that i love, our hands touch and our gazes meet and i stop the world from spinning.

you do not know Sisyphus is my friend and i know what i am going to be and to do.

my role is to love you
yours to feel nothing.
you do not know this how you break my heart.
you do not know how
from the beginning
i have always loved you how your eyes are blind how your hands so unfeeling.

i am happy to see you now your angry eyes your indifferent gaze like strong light stabs my beating heart i have a reason not to love you.

i was born not to love you.
i know, that is the law and i am here not to complain but to follow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today I Shall Give You Congress

this is what congress all about lawmakers lawbreakers
about 250 of them and by their own laws they may increase their number and their salaries and their junket trips abroad with their families and personal staff we feed them

we pamper them
and they give us laws to make us poorer and more miserable

they are all learned men and we adore them

at the end we make them our honorable oppressors and to honor them some more we kiss their hands and for what they say
we listen
and applaud them

i suggest we abolish them and put an end to what must not be but you say on some justifications somewhere in our country we need a grand edifice an institution

at least, something nice to see something to believe and dream and always at our expense so we always keep them

RIC S. BASTASA
Today I Shall Have Three Faces

today i shall have three faces on one neck
like a peculiar mask in a play that you have never seen two faces wear the eyes of tragedy while the last one shall wear the smile of the century you only know that last one since it has been facing you all day

the two others
i keep as my dual realities.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today I Shall Remember Grandmother

she knows what fine clothes are and how jewelries are worn and shown on special occasions she knows what parties fit for congressman as guest or the mayor of the city with their first ladies liking the food and dances and socializing in the big, old house the symbol of her peak times when her name rings when her social graces are accepted as rules

i guess she likes the shape of my face, the color of my skin, the way my hair curl the bridge of my nose the sharp blades of my shoulders she handpicked me away from mother, whom she despised as a woman without culture and taste, she brought me like the son of a man with class and gave me language and pride and disgust for the ordinary and the nonsensical away from mother inside my room of comfort and style it was sad and tragic and something that i cannot forget and which i too despised, and from then on i think i learned what hatred is my first lesson of a family feud the fight between mothers and daughters-in-law and the grandson captured in between wanting to breathe run away and thinking things all over again

RIC S. BASTASA
Today I Should Have Told You

today i should have told you something so true
something so painful

something that can make a twist of our universe
the planets may fall and stars explode
the meteors may regret their long tails of light

today i should have told you about you and me

i could have told you about a river that changed its course and left an island of loneliness at the middle of that deep blue part but i changed my mind there is something in you that is not prepared you are the flower still blooming at the height of this drought and i am the cloud that simply vanished i do not contain any rain i am afraid you do not notice this i am nothing i am useless

RIC S. BASTASA
Today I Try To Pick Up The Shattered Pieces

today i try to pick up the shattered pieces of myself and yourself every piece, and color and shape compared and analyzed to make each fit and be the whole as us again

i put the bond to fix the edges to make them stick as though nothing was ever broken

i do not wish to blink and then fall asleep the hours run like there is no way to tame them they say they are always on a rush and no one has ever stopped them i tremble on some tiny pieces and have a hard time solving the puzzle where do they fit so well?

to deceive our eyes
to give triumph to the healing of the hands i am a failure on some interstices there are leaks of light & tiny holes

there is so much emptiness this hollow wholeness

i have failed and i am lost and so here i am back to your arms wanting to be a definite part of you to seal what leak is there to put off the tiny lights to reconstruct the smoothness of the edges to love you and be loved by you Today Is The Birthday Of Ph Poetess, Candice Salazar

let me wish you
a happy birthday today

may you have more haikus to come

may the good Lord
gift you with metaphors

may your life be happier than ever

may you continue living a good life

may your friends be many may your poems multiply seventy-times seven

may you live happily ever after

RIC S. BASTASA
Today Let Us Devote A Moment Of Silence

to the art of poetry two hours dead ahead of schedule.

and you are late.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today Of This Year

850: Novelist and short story author, Guy de Maupassant born in Château de Miromesnil, Normandy

1858: First transatlantic telegraph cable completed

1906: Academy Award winning screenwriter, director, and actor, John Huston born in Nevada, Missouri

1930: First human to walk on the moon, test pilot, university professor and astronaut, Neil Armstrong born in Wapakoneta, Ohio

1946: Actress Loni Anderson born in Saint Paul, Minnesota

1962: Marilyn Monroe found dead

1981: President Reagan fires 11,359 air-traffic controllers

1983: Divestiture of AT&T

2010: Rose and Arvin posted poems at Poemhunter; Candice Salazar is busy with her work.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today The Body Tomorrow The Heart

pain sometimes behaves like a tourist with all its caprices moves from one place to another

today the body
tomorrow the heart
the next day to you
and on the last day
to me, at last, i, have learned how to shoo it away, i am raising my tolerance for it,
and then it does not come, it fears expensive charges, with costs chargeable to none.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today While Walking Along The Seashore

i realize that departures are lovely like arrivals
they are too
beautiful, more beautiful even than the contentment of having to stay,

i have seen a group of white seagulls feeding upon a fish on the shallow cheek of the the very calm sea and then i am joyed to see them in groups
leaving

as they fly away from me i wonder what relief is left inside my heart i have seen and felt freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today

i need to travel to an unknown
destination,
i need to practice what next uncertainty there is,

will this be exciting? will this make my life more interesting?

i need to tread on new paths, see more people, talk to other colored skins of kids on streets breathe the dusts of the other world out there swim another sea, ride on peculiar steepness, buses without cards and numbers,

today.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today's Beauty  Seems To Be Painted In The Most Horrifying Colors

the hummingbirds are gone. following next are the bluejays.

welcome these eagles and crows. the vultures too their play field is the desert.

mushroom smokes nuclear rock races racing against races. here comes misused religion again.

today's beauty seems to be painted in the most horrifying colors

blood thirsty diplomats are busy with translations.

the hummingbirds are gone. Crows in, vultures dance the zombies.

following next are the bluejays. the sparrows are reborn.
rice out. Bullets
grow. fields crack
in extreme heat.

in these deep chasms, those unwanted shall escape and hide.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today's Blank Wall

just this day
i face a blank wall

it is enticing
its white hand is signaling me to write my thoughts on it it is empty and wants to be full just like myself perhaps who knows i will disappoint it in the same manner that you have disappointed me

i will not go near it i will not say a word

i will not write anything but i will tell it

'you are beautiful'

untouched, unwritten pure, blank, mute....

RIC S. BASTASA
Today's Empty Thoughts....

today
he is unable to focus upon a certain idea it is a waterfall.

he likes to grab a droplet of rain his hands are filled with holes he decides to lay his body on the grass focus his eyes upon a star at night there is no star, his eyes are closed there is this kind of suspended feeling like a frozen river, a fish got stuck on ice a dragonfly trapped upon the web of a spider there is this feeling of: what do i really think? not what i want, but what is in my mind there is this desert where everything that you see is sand no camel, no moon, no oasis, no date palms, not even the shadow of a sand dune the sounds of sighs come you hear your self breathing for emptiness you pause, rethinking, what is this?

you go inside it, trying to find if there is anybody there it is empty. Yourself is not even there.

It is so real that you now doubt if an illusion exists at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today's Prayer

I will praise God
And praise him with all my heart I will sing praises to God And I will sing praises to him at the top of all my voice I will bend before him and lay flat on the ground I will not look at him straight in the eye I will offer all my heart I will offer my entire mind
I will offer all my soul
I will offer him everything That I have
I will offer all that I am

I will make another covenant with him I will make another set of promises

I will sign a new agreement I will execute a new set of promises

I will close my eyes and think of him I will join him
In his silence
In his patience with my broken promises.

RIC S. BASTASA
Today's Reflection...

what seed
are you?
what bird has devoured you?
did you
have joy
without roots?
did you live
with the
thorns?
or that fertile ground
where you shall bear fruit
a hundredfold
or just thirty or just
nothing
but rocks
and sand?

RIC S. BASTASA
Together They Are All Happy...

Madam X says that the latest military corruption saddens her, and boasts that all these money can never be a source of pride and neither shall it cause her envy,

May God curse all of them, says Madam X, her hair is white and she still moves actively despite her being 76,

on TV i watched the generals and the accountants not blinking any eyelash when they say they do not really know what happened inside the envelopes that contain the millions now considered irretrievable.

they have square dignified faces.
smiles lurk inside their cheeks, and on stress therapy, they will sometime spend their beach picnic somewhere in Miami.

RIC S. BASTASA
Togetherness....

when we are happy together it will be healthier no one eats when one is hungry still no one goes when one is left out when the sun fades, everyone goes to the house and sleep together
when the morning breaks, everyone prays and cooks together where shall bickering be?

when can a revolution start?

brother, it is in this togetherness that we become bonded,
one in heart, in spirit and in body one vision, one mission one love, one God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Togetherness........

for once
just for once
we are having no fears
a chain of hands like daisies on
your hair
a link to another link
like roads all connecting like rivers all surrendering to one common sea
to one common dead-end

no one weeps
no one laughs
no one is left out and no one comes out first.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tolerances...

accept
we have different tastes a myriad of
interests
what vomits me satisfies you what salivates you
detests me
what is sweet to you
is bitter for me
yet what can we do?
we are in this
dinner together we are in this civilization
table
our manners tolerate these differences
so i take a cup and you take yours
and we clink the glass
and say
cheers!

RIC S. BASTASA
Tomorrow

I said

Maybe tomorrow
Yes tomorrow

Tomorrow for a new brand day
A new burst self
A flat balloon
On the floor

Maybe tomorrow
Yes tomorrow

Be there.

RIC S. BASTASA
tomorrow always comes.
the sun is confident. always tomorrow comes with all the usual baggages.
bringing a back pack of your past, some bags of your future still bound with the strings of its secrets.

tomorrow always comes. do not deny this fact, that it always comes with the people you love and so with all the people you hurt, and who in turn hurt you in some ways. It comes with hammers and nails and ladders and chairs.
Tomorrow always comes and so do not just stand there and look dumb and stare and think that today is the end of your world. The moon knows.
And so are the stars that tomorrow always comes with baggages.

Help yourself. Face them. Embrace the day. Love the people who love you.

Love too those that do not love you.
Love them. Tomorrow always comes and who knows that like caterpillars tomorrow they become these beautiful butterflies that now seek the comfort of your loving hands.

Believe me. Tomorrow always comes.
Have hope. Relax. And be confident.
Like the sun, the river, the sea. They all know that tomorrow always comes.

Be happy then. Promise you. Tomorrow comes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tomorrow I Will Write It In Prose.

i tell you when i was away, i went to places that could have lost me, everything was delayed, the bus is old, the window is a glass with a crack which i do not touch afraid that it may cause injury to my ring finger, the roads are muddy, and workers are repairing one wooden bridge, we stop from time to time, a child is conducting traffic, the town is crowded, and the street at night has no light, i mix with those passengers carrying so many baggage, old men carrying fighting cocks, students with their ears stuck on cell phones, i talk to no one because no one talks to me, and then the rain pours heavily, and then the world gets darker, my silence is choking me, but then i want to be alive, and so i breathe deep and hard. I realized something. Tomorrow i will write it in prose.

RIC S. BASTASA
when you arrive tomorrow i will not be there the key of the door is found just beneath the earthen jar at the porch

there is an orange cat with one eye
it is not ours but we have become friends after i feed it with a fish that we have not eaten for 3 days we have not seen each other
since then
after we made love in the kitchen

i will not be home for a week you know the reason if you have some questions talk to the orange cat it will tell you some important matters that i haven't told you listen to every meow that he says it is rich with metaphors about lust and longing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Find me a tone for this poem I am having a hard time With putting the proper tone Though I am pretty sure Of its form
What form to use
The shape of the swan
A white swan
On a lake
Alone
Give me a tone
That conveys what I Want to convey
To you
A language
That really means
What it says
Something Creative
A path
That I must Follow
Leading me
To you
Give me a tone
Please
A tone from
You
The one
I really love
The one
That must Love me
Too
Truly,
Tell me
What is the Tone now
Of this poem
Is it begging?

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight

between two steel poles upstairs on the level of the trees that surround the house i will put a hammock where i will put my body to a rest & with some little swings to and fro i will create a sense of journey a slow lull

as i watch the glitter of the distant stars and to the moon just above the roof i shall whisper a wish

for you
& me.

RIC S. BASTASA
'Tonight At Ten'.

If you see him
you may not recognize the old man whose hair is black as asphalt
whose nails shine like the new moon his face a little bit stretched by the magic of dermatological advanced technology as a young woman, 19 to be exact clings over his arms like a sexy leech lifted from the nearby creek

and he struts this news about his new found love in church and in the plaza
and most of the time
at the mall
while he takes charge of all the bills after a hectic shopping schedule of his true love

a young man looks at them and then from his face creates a grin as the young woman winks at him as though saying

'tonight at ten'.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight I Will Have A Nice Sleep

we had nine years of nightmare with the dwarf and the witch with a mole on her right cheek now the nightmare is over we finally won the war of words now we have power another six years of reforms in the castle of the sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight Is Another Night Of My Self-Proclaimed War

i will now present my evidence some exhibits beforehand marked and you will be surprised, there will be no such exhibits as

the moon, the stars, or comets or tails or the fireflies,

tonight, is the night of my argument a life lived without passion a life dedicated to the dictates of reason and bedded to logic

this is my war, i proclaim it against myself it is myself against myself and myself arguing for both opposing selves

why do you invoke poetry? why do you maintain a self torn between softness and harshness between objectivity and confusion between light and Grey enough of the hardbound books of those sandcastles that the BiG sEA destroys from time to tide ebbing and rising and here i am waiting for my verdict, i am guilty, i have always been guilty and i pretend

i never knew.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight Something Hot Is Going On

outside the fence of the house
the dogs

the bitches are doing it tonight

in heat
they bark at each others'
lust

who can fence
lust?

no one stops
a river

no one can keep
the rain
from falling

look at us
how pitiful have we become
because
of civilization

we are inside this house with safe windows with well locked doors

high fences
thick walls

how unhappy
can restraint ever be?

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight Taj

when you sleep tonight rub Vick's Vaporub at your back and around your abdomen so you will not dream of the stinging lion again

brush your teeth well so that no piranhas will ever bother the truth inside your gum ever

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight The Air Is Filled With Love

i cannot sleep tonight i will not sleep tonight for tonight is the night of love under a full moon sitting on top a placid lake beneath the treetops the air is filled with the scent of love there are no birds as they are all asleep but i can hear the songs of all the angels the leaves glisten the stars glitter  the pond with its gentle ripples they all mention your name to me and i am hearing it and my heart beats with all perfect joy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight The Night Is Mine

because i thrive well
in darkness
i bought a night
of my own

it is mine and i will spend it wisely though

definitely not with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight Tonight

tonight i am a tree filled with leaves and you are the bird looking for a nest i have my branches for you to perch to rest and stay for the whole night agains the cold and damp and dark sleep little bird, feel my loneliness

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight With The Half-Moon
	onight
there are stars sailing with a half moon
that looks like a boat lighted against a black sky

they appear to smile
but their shimmer
has some streaks of light with some colors
of blood

at the back of the moon is the wound
that wants to heal

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight, Tonight, Another Love Another Promise

i have given you the key to my room but despite that i have decided to leave the door open despite the danger that thieves instead of you my secret love shall come in...

there will be fears that sooner i may fall asleep
without you
but the anticipation is greater the beating of my heart even louder than the sounds of the rain and the croaking of the twenty frogs combined

tonight yes tonight my love shall be another tryst with you i am waiting naked to the truth of my being that love is not confined within the chains of fidelity that love's essence is its variety a multiplicity of desire a showering rain of affections a flood of kindness and sharing unhindered by any code of marriage
unbound by the chains of the cruelty of the law...

tonight my love
i shall live another nine lives in the heat of your embrace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tonight's Feast Under The Full Moon

the biggest and tallest tree fell today

she thought he was just a cute little boy in the picture with her a week ago but he is the man with a saw and a gun the big rock beneath got crushed with the tallest tree

ants and rats and snakes got crushed too

you wonder what is this place all about to the deaths of them all the village is rejoicing tonight there will be dances and drinks under a very big moon and the music in the air reaches as far as Iceland.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tony And Tita

tony,
widower at 76
just found a woman
of 18
and they are in church holding hands
kneeling beside each other

tita, widowed at 78
has something new to talk about concealed is envy, i suppose

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Close Too Sweet

i know what too sweet means it destroys my teeth and i think what too close also means it gives teeth to contempt the familiarity that kills without notice without knowing so not to close please not too sweet let there be distance let there be bitterness at times between us inside us so we may survive this promise of togetherness too close your hands choke me too sweet you may bite me let their be suspicion too let psyche bring the lamp to cupid's sleepy eyes

now we have a story to tell this love this tragedy so our children may learn what true love really is bittersweet bitter and sweet something tragic something blissful that we must ferret

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Common, Like Nothing At All

there is such thing
as quick poetry,

it is magical, and if you are so meticulous about form
it becomes so familiar

too common, like nothing
at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Early

it is too early
i guess the nights are longer now it is 4:56 a.m. it is cold the air is cold
and the windows are still closed the rooster at the yard keeps on crowing while other roosters of the neighborhood (i live in a rural town with dusty roads still at the other nearby kiosk)
keep on crowing too for an answer, how i wish to make you
a lovely,
happy,
gentle,
peaceful poem
no one screaming on the road not a motorcab screeching neither a bus overspeeding and spreading dust
how i wish to write you a poem
about love
or about that only peaceful star hanging on the early morning sky
just a wish but really
there isn't any it cannot be what with a heart that is grieving a soul that is lost a body that trembles
a mind with thoughts live leaves heap upon heap
without a match to burn them all this hot days of summer.
Too Far Away

I live next door
and i know you live next to mine sometimes we meet and i look at the floor hiding from the beauty
of your eyes

i do not have the courage to say that love exists in me and that its life
is all for you

how sadness slowly kills us both hiding inside the comforting darkness of our doors

i live next door and you are next to mine but we are so far away like star to sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Flimsy A Fling A Swing too flimsy, her flings, she swings to air and back to his arms, like a pendulum less the house of a grandfather's drum, good girl, good dog, good days of god, log in, and click to an icon of images emails malling on the screen of screeches, scream, did you hear the scream of those blogs? I am writing them. Lots of poems, blogged logged and then left for those cleft-lifts, once in a while a smile flashes, and then a reminder: where are you?

i am here, he says. It is dark. No, come here, there is a ray of light, This is the tunnel. There is an end somewhere and see the sun I am here. Come back to me. She listens. too flimsy, this fling. She wings back to him, on a dirty swing.
They meet and mate and then trying to figure out

What is the meaning of regret? Why did Johnny come so late?
He is coming. She is coming.

This is not the Library. But there is so much silence.
Only a little after.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Foolish?

must i be foolish how can i not figure out the correct spelling of love, when you are there undressing and perfuming your bare back and putting puff powder on your cheeks when you let all the curtains fall when you say you are finally sleepy and on a dreamy state as i still face this blank wall looking for the word

the right letter
the next color of my imagination have i not known bridges of steel? pathways of the flesh?

have i not felt once the lusciousness of your lips?

the softness of your thighs and the the spasmodic gestures of your abdomen?

i must be foolish to stick to the word love and lust
i still misspell

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Late To Be Children And Play

HE HAD BEEN too serious laughter is seldom and it is a tool only when badly needed.
This and that.
Hands too busy for all the days of its fingers.
The mind is sun and moon. Routine. Categories.
Structured lives, like city buildings with all the rules of This and That.
The House comes. The car invades. Meetings are like filled calendars.
Nothing to interpolate like a picnic, a river sail, a beach comb, a mountain trek, all days are Mondays. Nothing to Friday Sundays are stripped of their holy vestments.

IT is too late. It is late in the evening and we have ceased to be children going home after a play in order to pray beside Mother, who had long been dead and buried without much needed ceremony.

Now, it is dark forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Late To Know That

...you stoop
to conquer

a la The Shrew
of that English playwright, i know
you know his name,
and i won't ask
you about the obvious

plain simple stupidity, but i am not amazed by this event,

i have long known
women 49 years, two butts a month four legs a day

women who love
to kill
lice and women who like to be licked

with man's old weapon,
who cares now

too late to know
that i am

(be surprised)

i wont say it anymore,
i am tired.

49 years, of dumb
bells.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Many

too many
yes too many
and yes
too meaningless at the end

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Many Of You

too many of you
scattered all over my cells

the tissues of this body call for you name

my mind is a whirlpool taking you inside my system my lips utter your name my mouth wants to taste your being

all these
you are unaware like the sun shining on the earth the earth in ecstasy to the unknowing sun

it is here
i want to be there outside this whole mess i cannot escape this prison of love rising above my head like a moon of the month of March

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Many Of You In One Body

there are too many of you in one body in one truth
too many faces
jibing with different names in different places at first you may deceive and even create surprises but there is a time for discoveries islands have been given their names
marked with specific numbers like some specimens of stuffed cats and dogs and preserved amphibians in the bottles

and here you are again enticing me with a

wow

on another assumed name i know it is you
and for what reason you wear so many faces and have taken so many hands and feet and so many pairs of eyes i cannot guess anymore but this i can say from the deepest chambers of my heart i care

i also know how to love and it does not matter even if you are one of the thousand illusions in my life
despite

there is only one you in my life
and i know
you also care
you also love
and that is all enough
my dear

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Many Stars Did Not Spoil The Heavenly Skies.

too many and too
rubbish you say but you just didn't know how all these can help decompose you.

too many stars did not spoil the heavenly
skies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Many Words

too many words
instead of filling up the gaps multiply the empty blank spaces between the lines where the words try to rule and conquer what thoughts are trying to occupy

i like to make a point.
and this is it.

what do you need?
what do you want?

make the difference. think.
please do not write anything.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Many Words Too Many Forms Of Rashes words have the bad trait of bombarding us not with meanings but just utterances

at some point we select what is necessary
the usual chaff and grain method that the winnows teach us with the winds of time and change
and it happens to me many times as i stand waiting for the plane that shall take me to another new beginning or the bus that leaves the dust behind the wheels of misfortune or the boat that vomits the water at its back where you want to stand and reflect on the dimming of light words can be wars
and there you go pack you bags and walk your journey without them.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Closeness Is Blindness

the familiarity between us has come face to face eye to eye
like two lovers
cheek to cheek,

i of course do not loathe it as it does not mean anything at all the distance considered in too much closeness, somehow has made both of us blind perhaps, this is what we want to happen to keep this bond

both of us must be blind like cows and horses with covers
on their eyes
and for sure, they do not sense any danger beyond

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Familiarity Breeds Contempt

Too much familiarity, all the questions answered not just by yes or no
The explanations as demanded all enumerated, and there are no extrapolations needed,

At the last notice, I think I have spoiled you like my first lover, In giving everything, everything is totally lost, and parting has become inevitable

With you now, I have given trust, but now with limitations however, It is not selfishness, it is something else, it is to keep you because there is something in you

That makes me alive somehow, you make me breathe, and you have given me a space Somehow, I must withhold a little bit about myself, to make this love work,

Now when you ask, I will either make some white lies, and later some big lies or be silent So not everything in me is taken away, and you will think that I am not at all consumed

I am sweet, I will be sweeter still in some measurable unknowns, and you will taste these,
With a note, that not all that is sweet shall be given, some will be bland and even bitter,

I want to keep you for a while; we will be talking some more, like sweet lovers Whispering nothings, I will confuse you a little bit about some beginnings, I will swerve Away a little bit, away from your closeness, this too much familiarity that is slowly Breeding contempt, this familiarity that destroys and has no power to recreate.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Freedom... he irony
of having nothing to do and
having much to accomplish:

when you have nothing to do
the void
expands and you feel like a drop of rain
falling into
an ocean

when you have much to accomplish the void shrinks
and you become a mountain
high and strong
equal to the moon
and sun

it is true
it is this idleness
that leads to sin
this emptiness that kills itself
this too much freedom shackles
us instead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Knowledge Is Death

the gang is here.
the cluster meets tonight,
about your name.
you know too much about the conspiracy your lips are not sealed
they are afraid
and tonight they will hand the judgment
that you shall be killed.
you know much.
and that is very dangerous.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Light Is Blinding

too much light is blinding know that, you close your eyes to feel its fire,
and there was that time when you like being burned you get near
and you do not remember but you did not die

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Love Kills?

how can love kill
you? how can so much of it can be
murderous?
how can love be
death?

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Poetry

so much light
so much of this feeling light bouying lightness of being flying lightness on dancing steps on the clouds on this night near the stars so much poetry to write and read and spread too much feeling and life pulsating to my veins this love

this poetry tonight
even without the wine even without the full moon like what Li Po tells me this world on this glaring monitor alone with my fingers and thoughts

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Talk

there is so much talk
on TV
this morning on some bleak news of the crash
of the financial market the crash of an Indian plane
the crash of the whole world
turning glaciers into
water
the extinction of the prakees and the parakeets the journey of the tadpoles on higher places of the mountains
there is so much talk
so much talk
i turn the TV off
and savor the taste
of my breakfast of
silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Thinking

you are like a window
half-open
still in a crisis of whether
to close
or open or perhaps simply sifting what wind
shall be allowed to enter always indecisive
as to what really must be done	onight perhaps i am thinking that much

about you
underestimating that all you wanted to have
in this sophisticated minding is just the soft light of the moon on that window that is always half-open and that really

there is nothing much to it to debate upon

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Thought...

i rake the boat
going to an island

the trip is long
the sea is calm

people look towards one direction

i close my eyes
lost in the labyrinths of
thoughts

the boat arrives
people disembark

i regret
philosophizing so much

i regret
closing my eyes

a man with his camera
has taken lots of pictures
of the sea,
the islands that we passed the trails of foams that we left behind

with too much thinking
i agree

i missed life
i lost earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Much Truth...

when we arrive here we carried with us our own lies

we keep them
and we survived

when they come and see us for the first time

they keep wondering why unlike them we glow with happiness we did not tell them the truth as usual we believe that it is not necessary from that distant place where we left we have seen how too much of truth has killed the land and its natives how the lies were driven away like flies they swat what are some of the possibilities those white ghosts

those black birds that guide us to places that we never once imagine what we discover are islets of desires those that they shy away from we have masks that protect us from so much brightness we have boots from mud

we have words
and with their pretensions we have learned the art of hedonistic euphemisms the artistry of phrases the promises of incomplete clauses some periods are angry but our commas still smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Old

too,
run, too old,
to run, to run too,
old, to run,
run, to, old, too,
too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Old For Love

it is no longer you whom I wait
by my window

time passes....

my beard
all white reaches
the floor

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Tired To Notice The Storm Of The Earth...

i wake up early today i open the windows and the door

the ground is flooded the trees shed more leaves the chickens' feathers are thoroughly wet

some branches are cut-off from those old tall trees our dog is not wagging its tail the lights at the kitchen are not turned off by the looks of it there was a big storm last night i did not notice it i was dead asleep

too tired of my own inner storms my door is closed,
all my windows are shut.

RIC S. BASTASA
Too Unlucky

unlucky girl Rebecca
who died after slamming
the door

Poor girl Rebecca!

I must be a very lucky man for i have lived

all my life slamming
many doors behind me and look

oh my!

I am
still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tools Of Love And Hidden Desire

an empty mouth is the best speaker of love's secrets the hidden tongue that masters the art of lingering licks is the most beautiful princess of the softest syllable that wakes up the redness of cheeks of love's newest adventures.

RIC S. BASTASA
Toothless Little Girl

to the toothless little girl she smiles
it is not enough to show to you that this world is alright that there is still more to this earth
that hope is alive
that life is contagious
there is more
to what we are
and what we can be the possibilities are endless
and then the child
laughs and runs
and chases
her own version of her dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Top Quote For Today...

let us stay in the house and make love....

RIC S. BASTASA
Torna Y Surriento

come back
come back to me
to Sorrento because

because i miss you
so
no song of the river so song of the man in the boat of life can appease me

come back
come back to me
let me whisper to you again this song of a man in love

come back come back to me in Sorrento
let us feel the torrents of love the caresses of the winds wait not for me to change and find me not in the bosom of another.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Tossed

purple onion rings lettuce leaves
italian dressing

RIC S. BASTASA
Total Abandon

i

the snow on the roof does not mean necessarily that there is no fire in the fireplace

ii

contemplate on the woman with white hair dancing the rumba on the street

in total abandon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Touch And Go

nothing to think about come what may i put my foot forward whether it is better or worse nothing matters
i just do what i want welcome the errors
do not correct anything let them judge
as you judge them
keep going
do not ask for directions let life take you let life take its due course no safety pins
no compass
just close your eyes and ride the clouds for free
hitch upon a dream
like a hook to an eye
keep going
alive
flow
oh!

RIC S. BASTASA
Touch Me If You Still Can.

tomorrow perhaps when you finally find the correct answer of my Sphinx

when my house fall into ruins
when my bridge burns itself when the last boat is taken by the flood when what remains is the stone
in me,

i know what i want to say, shattered, i guess i cannot be silent anymore
and i have to say it to you

i am what i am
and you know it beforehand

all clothes gone
i am naked, touch me if you still can.

RIC S. BASTASA
Touch Of Class

oh well, i hear you speak english to your dogs spanish to the maids and french to your business partners on the phone,

you write your poems in german your essays in portuguese your menu posted on the ref in italian cultured, educated, that is you with a touch of class

but for one thing
now that you have fallen drowning in the sea

oh gosh, you do not even know how to swim!

let your language save you then.

RIC S. BASTASA
Touching The Soul

reading a book
writing a poem
talking to you
and listening,

lots of differences
really, one is a monk in orange walking with his beggar bowl
lighthearted smile,

one is a god sitting on the throne of his own feet, others begin to pray,

the other one is cleansing yourself in a river and regaining what sanity is left and the last one is a window that you open to let sunshine in touch your hair,

cheeks,
soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
Touching You

i do not wish to see tears when you say i touched you give that smile

so i may also live another day
in my life

RIC S. BASTASA
Tourism....!

to become a tourist
he took up AB Tourism,

the other cannot be outdone he took up Criminology, to perfect his sole ambition of becoming the well sought criminal.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tourist Bus 2011

a little world of pleasure seekers
on wheels
where people meet without any intention of really knowing
each other
greet hello
and then leave as usual
saying
bye bye guys have a great
time....

RIC S. BASTASA
Tourist...

how short is short and for how long is long?

tell me, passerby.

RIC S. BASTASA
Towards A Decent War.....

at first
when you first saw it
you were electrified
your bones rattle your veins expanded
blood rushed like people on a black friday sale

then after a while when boredom strikes you only watch it once in a while only when you remember but not that you seek for it and really find it

then just like the rest of the men in town normal as you despite the illusion you do not like even to watch it even if encouraged to make you alive

then it is over you detest it
realizing that it has humiliated you
ever since and
without end

and you think that you are elevated from man to demi-god to god but of what?

you tap your head
it is giving you the sound of an empty can or just another drum wanting to sound like a march
towards a decent war....

RIC S. BASTASA
Towards Home...

it can be beautiful along the way riding a bus in the countryside going back home.

flashes of ricefields, and shorelines, on one side and on the other, then some forest trees and flock of birds migrating to the other country, on some bus stops, you buy delicacies and hear another language of commerce feel the pulses of humanity you sit there in silence not talking to the man beside you just gazing as the bus begins to move faster

towards home....

RIC S. BASTASA
Towards The Hatch

veils are those days mists at dawn
foggy afternoons
soft white blankets
at night on the mountains far from the city lights

eggshell as white as as the purity of fear on an albumin protection the yellow moon slowly grows

RIC S. BASTASA
Towards The Right Attitude

we learn
sooner and better

to accept what is on where is basis

without choosing
life embraces us

and sooner too
without much word

death takes us all
and nothing matters

since then
since when

RIC S. BASTASA
Towhom it may concern

towhom:

Around The World War Is Raging And The Mother Grieves For Her Dead Son And Her Dead Son Can't Be Replaced Because He Is Dead Neither He Can Be Brought Back To Life Because He Only Had One Life To Live That Ended After He Died Fighting In The War

That He Did Not Know That He Did Not Cause
Why why why why why why why why why why why why?

The mother is grieving the mother is asking why?

it may:

Across The Galaxy That Is In The Sky

You

Found The Beautiful Moon

And

She Sat On Top Of One Of The Stars

That

Had Formed The Galaxy

Then The Galaxy Moved On

like A Big Galleon in an Ocean Of Space

Iuttered a Single Sound that Reverberated an Echo

Through The Layers Of Light Years Looking for You.

concern to whom:
Go
To Heaven
In Peace

And Be A Soldier
No
More

itmayconcerntowhomitmayconcern:

My FoolishHeartIsLyingInTheRiverAndTheCurrentPushes MyFoolishHeartAway
&theRiverHadalwaysBeenasUsualHelpful&Practical&Wise

RIC S. BASTASA
Tractitus

I will no longer speak much with you, this is what he says today for he is going back to where his father lives.

the word is fulfilled and now we must begin what he began we too must know the incontestability of his words carved in stone buried in the magma of time that the future must find again to decipher

RIC S. BASTASA
Trading In And Trading Out

he agrees about choices life is a matter of compromises win some lose some taking in and then selling out as simple as inhaling and exhaling air everyday every minute every second nature comes cramping with a tray of choices like fruits in an array like rain falling on the roof like waves rolling and rolling on the shorelines of our destiny

take one or take all it is your decision and that is all that matters we become responsible
by then

who suffers? you who jumps with joy? it is still you.

take it. lose it. for one thing always choose to be happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trading.....

my nights
are trading fireflies
to a tree

and in the morning
the tree pays

a ripe mango on the grass to a hungry stranger
on the road.

RIC S. BASTASA
Traditional Panorama

cows spotted thick skins grazing on the green field with golden rays of sunshine
early morning
birds flying hovering
on tree branches

fences, and boundaries cottage of a farmer blue clouds now starting to hover in place

a girl singing butterflies mother milking the cows and father beginning to plow the corn field

no plane above the skies no rockets

at night some meteors
fall,
wishing stars and zodiac escapades
from the numbing routine of traditions

no one escapes
the panorama is closed and strict
the characters are born marry, beget children,
and then they die
and get buried

years and years
leaves fall, there are no questions.
Tragedy...

what i have grown
for years and years
till date
are the arms of the lustful lover and we have always been together without
words,
voiceless, and i have tried to identify with the voicelessness
of our voices
only to be misled
and be humiliated for what have you are platonic breasts
ready with the milk
for kids.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tramped

we all hear the sounds of the stamps of your children
traveling on foot
from the wombs
of their mothers

they are all gone now.

we shall kiss the lips
of the flowers
of the umbilical cords that set them free

RIC S. BASTASA
Trance

falling into a trance his world curled into a huge wall his arms are too short to make an embrace the house too wide like the sea and the stairs lengthened its rails to heaven

those who watch him in pity of course cannot understand he does not belong to their comprehension anymore neither does he desire to be a part of their too narrow world where his lips are too small to paint a word.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tranquility

always tranquil, a maple leaf floating on a still pond
mirror of a white cloud a ripple vanished.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tranquility Of The Mountain And The Fog

the way
fog hovers on the mountain
side

facing it above a hill
on its dew dressed
grass
you sit and watch

RIC S. BASTASA
Transcend

transcend fame
there is more beyond the sound of the clapping hands transcend even your way of looking at yourself for when you begin to close your eyes and even be blind with what you can see

it is at this moment when you begin to see what everyone has not ever seen

it is everything now not something not someone not where not when not what and not even why wonder and wonder and keep wondering

that is the start and the beginning
and there
there is no time even

RIC S. BASTASA
Transcend What We Once Believed To Be All True

like the way horses do jumping over fences

Like the way fledglings overgrow nests and fly over the trunks of trees

so shall we who are learners of this craft of living

must transcend what we once believed to be all true we were taught how to think like fire from dry wood like heat from sand that offers mirage for real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Transcendence....

in that pit of sorrow shall one descend

until his head is seen no more

what is seen is the plain a desert if you know the sun is cruel

as seen on the skulls of goats and men but one cannot just descend forever into the grief that is so overwhelming that is not the end of this matter for soon one who is scarred & scared with so much sadness learns so carefully and the heart that is broken soon shall heal the strings that snapped from its guitar body and one's trembling fingers can still figure music what just two strings or even one down to that grave of darkness where shadows speak

one day an eye looks for a leak
of light
and finding an opening
wings its way to the world of light where it once lived for it shall remember and rise once again
as spirit as scent of calmness and gentleness

the scars listen and the broken limbs reshape what the spirits reinvent: you see, you must have felt it, because it happens and we are still here all willing to speak and listen.

RIC S. BASTASA
Transcending

lisod apan kaya na nakong buhaton ang pag-ambak sa bintana mosirko sa hangin

tugpa sa yuta nga morag iring

latas sa labat
nga morag irong buang

morag kabayo tigidigtigiding ang dagan

dayog lupad morag
langgam

RIC S. BASTASA
Transformation

A bud sighs a question into the air
The question
Diffuses
Layer by layer
Into another sphere

The bud
Blooms
Into flower

Waiting sadly
It wishes to wither faster To trace the question Gone away

RIC S. BASTASA
Transformation (2)

at first i was just a mere word so i transformed myself into a sentence and then not contented with what i am a mere sound and syllable an idea, a conceived meaning i opted to have some cells i learned how to make myself many so i got duplicates and multiples until i began to have a body some hands and feet until i began to have a definite form like circles and squares and cubes until i became a man and then i regretted all these i went back to what i was a mere word now looking still for my own meaning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Transformation (30)

i have gone beyond, and i feel so secure there is this feeling of satisfaction about how this un-satisfaction had been conquered. No feeling of remorse.

no feeling of want, not having to want, desire lost.
sitting down, unloading, jumping over the fence, finding another uncharted territory something strange, but something that is always amazing to rise beyond the self, to feel a little bit about being god. To forget that i have a body, to know that i am not that completely.

to sit and then be lost to explode and yet still be whole

RIC S. BASTASA
Transformations

THEY Wait
the caterpillar, the flower bud, time is like a hand that does not compel them, because by its unnoticeable grace the process goes on and on the caterpillar is caressed into a cocoon in still air

stiller hours of petals falling one by one giving way to seeds
existence

the buds have no memories what to tell how one morning they all turn into flowers
then wilt
upon the conquest of sunset

some things too have wings that flutter happily
but only for a day

RIC S. BASTASA
Transformations Of Our Being

at first, no matter how trivial each dust becomes special since it comes from your tongue wet with the sweetest saliva of your love, we always want it that way that rainy feel that wets us all over running down our spine
into the hidden nooks of our being
that we do not wish to share with any creature in this exclusive spot that we found

dee
you say it once
and i join you
in this harmony
of our differences

wow is my other word for these ordinary dusts that go inside me

i become a part of the boulevard
where lovers
want to spend the
night
with the winds
that change
the arrangements made by fate

now to dust shall we to dust return but when that time comes we too have assumed the body of the wind
the soul of the earth
the dusts
invincible

RIC S. BASTASA
Transitions....

at first the house is one kind of a party more friends are coming you even let the mailman to have a drink and stay for a while though he has nothing to say just like the masons and some carpenters then the house was almost burned there was so much panic that day the whole village talked about it for weeks of course, the house as usual is silent like most rocks

to regain its solidity it listens to the refreshes of the sea breeze it resumes its pacific nature facing the sea and learning from the past storms then something so horrible happens but no one in the house is telling about it the pillars shook and some walls gave in a part of the roof was taken by the hurricane but the house is still in tact changes come into play the gates are closed the mailman is having a hard time pressing the door bell the mail box is broken and some thieves are anticipating that someday they can get in and make their presence felt perhaps to take what is essential

what they did not know is that no one lives in this house anymore all the memories are put into boxes and kept in the cellars the house has become one mummified pharaoh a pyramid that points to the sun the village only talks about the built-in mysteries it is one kind of a cadaver surrounded by flowers whose heart has been removed a few days ago and then the talk stops and that was only when the last prayer was said.

RIC S. BASTASA
Translating You

You are from us Ribs, remember
You have flown away from us Blackbird, remember

You never return Saying, i am happier in the desert Where the sunset is blood red You left us
Some footprints that I am now busying with some interpretations

You nod
And i move on with some fun Trying to enjoy what is there examining what is it really that you left with us I am digesting gold
And with the precious metals, how can i ever be full?
I should have eaten rice and salted fish
As once my mother wished?

RIC S. BASTASA
Translations

do not be lost in the forest of translations. we live there once.
we live the word of the soothsayers focusing on crystal balls,
do not be amazed with those that we do not really understand those that we categorize as mysteries we suspect after all that they do not exist and now i can glean from your silence as you fathom a deep void
inside my heart
dipping your tongue with something that tastes bland
a little sour like rotten apple you cannot hold me perhaps only on the side like the icing of a cake
at the middle
i am one kind of a doughnut hole.

i am not slippery, neither am i thorny (do not spell it as horny) with all regret when you try to find the house where i live
i am not a forest, i am not a tree even

i have the body of that whisper what is it? you know it. i have no one and i am nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Transparency

a egg shell
white as clear skies
on a cloudless day
i hold it
against the sun
to see
if something
alive is still there
to see if you still
love me
opaque love transparencies
of feelings
concealed pains buried
like egg yolk
inside
this fragile shell

RIC S. BASTASA
Transposition

on the dry pavement
summer stones
and pebbles
and grass with dews

early morning light pearls and diamonds and yellow mantle crawling
spreading

RIC S. BASTASA
Transubstantiation

I NOW EAT
a slice of this flesh this bread
i now drink his blood this wine

yet what do i really see?

it is not what i see stupid.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trauma...

having heard that you had trauma falling on the busy street with no one helping in a bit, i cannot really relate, but i remember in that big city where i once lived trauma is everywhere even in the restaurants where new lovers dine even in boulevards where yachts love their rest even in bed where love is invented trauma has become a way of life like breakfast and special dinners like waking up

in some ways when another person jumps from the 13th floor and then you hear the ambulance screaming you simply dismiss this as another daily routine and so you close the window and watch the soap opera on TV lying on the sofa your thoughts focusing on the most trivial matter that is more of another trauma.

RIC S. BASTASA
Travel

the fast craft slices the oceans of our passage from one island to another
day by day
we see the sea foams
and the skies
that we cut through the sea gulls and the sun meet us on the shore lines of the port

another destination
of this travel this wandering

another arrival greets us smiling faces telling us welcome
welcome
we are offering you this paradise
white sands
cool shady coconut trees sweet queen's pineapple crunchy to your teeth pamper your tongues

beside the blue pools reflecting the clouds and our faces
we splash and take what the jacuzzi offers the sweet conversation begins you are beside me your legs touching mine we make whispers

the water so cool and relaxing you are warmer than the morning sun we confirm again
distances
we confirm again the power of nearness we affirm us in our arms we close our eyes

the world is still and it is indeed beautiful inside us

on soundless splashes the waters in our minds run deep we fall in love again

RIC S. BASTASA
Travel And Life

there is a saying that we travel not to escape life but that life may not escape us and i ask myself if honestly i do as i always want it to be done.

when we were on the beach one Sunday morning the sea was crystal clear and we both see the fish feeding on the weeds.

i went to the deeper part and since you do not know how to swim you only went with me upon a lengthy gaze without speaking a word as it was unnecessary.

the envy was clear since all your life you always wanted to learn how to swim.

sometimes i want to tell you that traveling is like swimming. and that we are the fish and the sea is the world and we feed on seaweeds and no matter how we wanted to be deep, we still remain as shallow as our shortcomings time strains us. and some people like you only gaze and never learn and only stay though they really want to go somewhere else.

RIC S. BASTASA
Travel Diary

The Centre of France is the most quietest part But the great treasure of this region is the Loire valley, with many great castles and beautiful towns.

& of course Chartres with its famous cathedral we prayed for ten minutes

& we went to
The Alps
great for skiing in winter (though we simply looked at the skiers for i have not even touched one)

Aunt Meggie remembers that Albertville, Grenoble and Chamonix have all hosted the Olympic games.

we proceeded to the other nice towns Chambéry & Annecy.

i fell asleep
and missed the view of
the countryside.

RIC S. BASTASA
Travel Lite...

when he leaves
he brings nothing with him except the scent of the passion
fruit

when he comes back he brings nothings with him except the faded scent of the passion fruit.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Travel Poem: Finland

vast forested wildernesses Lemmenjoki National Park and Oulanka National Park wings of hawks and eagles treks among the pines and lakes in summer in far north

It's a golden, sunny season as Finland bursts into life with an explosion of festivals, good cheer

and optimism.

the towns are buzzing,
but it's also a time to head for the lakelands of Mikkeli & around and Lappeenranta.

Sit on the veranda of a waterside wooden cottage and watch the summer sun shining low over the trees, and you'll have experienced one of Finland's ultimate treats;

a real Nordic peace that eases the soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
Traveler (Edited) ...

how evasive has fate been with me now that i have given up what i have in mind i have become a traveler without a destination i have no intention of stopping somehow in this confusion all those years are just a matter of intuition permeating

as
i, the passive weaver, denied, still keep on waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
Traveler, Vagabonder

if you only know
why man has to take his endless journey

you should have known us
too

but i prefer that you do not ask i know you know that on this aspect

i have only
lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Travelers On Light Weight

one place to another shifting
another day another night
drifting

what more escape doors do we really need?

the winds are too kind for drifters like us twirling in the air
as leaves of summer trees

we shift paradigms
we move to more places of our hearts

wanting to cure what footprints of loneliness have been left in the sands of our shore-less souls slowly we travel and scenes of cities and towns flash before our weary eyes trees along the roads have become flowing rivers in our minds stopovers are giving us names of people that we know we do not have to remember this is the journey this is the metaphor of who we really are pilgrims of the shrine of life vagabonds of seasons travelers of light packs trekkers of temporaries and we never ask when will this really end?

RIC S. BASTASA
Travelling

a travel is a metaphor of a journey and a journey is always what life is all about arrivals and departures and i see it well at airports

and well, so well, at pre-departures then we move inside the plane and the doors close and we are lifted to the skies for hours you are beside the clouds but you never have the courage to open the window and touch each fine cotton beside you crazy but sometimes i think that way opening closed windows and think not of the prohibitions and the consequencies, there is so much silence up there and it is the mind that does much of the talking and you listen always for the reminders of the stewardess and the captain telling you that we are 30,000 feet above sea level and out there you see Panay Island

we will be flying for one hour and a half it is a fine day and then the seat belt sign is on for the turbulence but you do not mind you look forward to an arrival and the another opening of a door to a destination touchdown, the plane lands perfectly as always no plane crash, no headlines for the daily news but i do not really think about these matters anymore the stewardess announces an arrival, fifteen minutes earlier than scheduled. Fast plane. My thoughts unconsumed.

we step down. we take our bags. this journey never stops.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trembling Hands Of Sick People

Actually there is nothing to be afraid of.
If you deeply know everybody here and if they are honest to admit, most of their lives have been overspent on fears.
the majority is afraid.
the minority of the minority, seldom discovers that there is nothing to fear except fear itself. And you do not even know who said that. it is funny when all the fearful people come to an assembly the whole people's park will be filled with trembling hands, scattered minds, out of focus, always, always, it is the future that seems to be the preoccupation spilled milk, money that was lost and beyond recovery, budgets, uncertain goals, so many termites eating wooden brains, aphids on illusions of leaves, worms on rotten projections, if you put them all together it is not a very healthy picture of what we want to paint society to be in a canvass of hope
trembling hands of sick people
fit for a mental asylum dump trucks of daily medications those every young who could be children of yours surely would not like it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trendy

most of my friends who went to Chicago on care giving jobs finally left for good the marriage they had in the Philippines, just this morning i had a chat with a close friend whose husband had her declared presumptively dead in court so he can marry another, she says it's a trend marriages are bound to be broken vows have no meaning she did not mind at all if she is 'dead' to him and to the law, she too has a man of her own now a work to attend to, another summer vacation in California and in Paris sometime this April,
and then she enumerates other names who marriages are dissolved, it is not that time is cruel, it is just that with money now, they are free to find love (and lust).
so long, i may meet other names.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tres Pension

how big is this room
but how small is this world i live in

RIC S. BASTASA
Triangle....

x looks at y
and y looks at z
and z looks at nobody.

RIC S. BASTASA
Triangular

a happy family is triangular

the father and mother
and the sun

divinity is triangular the father and the son and the holy spirit

nature is triangular heaven and earth
and air

we are sitting on the
the quiet patch
of our affections
and we are triangular too

you and i
  and
  God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trickles....

the wilted leaves
are falling

the wind is strong and fast

so many memories
trickling in my mind

unscented petals of red and orange

days without dew happy days are few

RIC S. BASTASA
there is an open hole inviting, and you get inside the hole and there is no coffee there but it is great warm, and soft, and so enticing, you want to stay for a while and there is so much mutual liking, you are the peg on that round hole, no, you're not the pig and she is not a bitch, she's beautiful like a flower less the fruit or the frost, and you are beautiful too plus the grease on her stalks and sepals, she is the open hole and you're the round peg, and there is this war of the roses and the bees and there is this language of love that both of you wish to truly speak. it ended like the wings of the butterfly slashed from its body it is sad it is beautiful brieflessly & breathlessly devoted to
you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trimming The Distance Of A Sigh

learn the style of the pocket

ey say
on a reservation one somehow pockets a smile

as though it is something that you can hide like a pebble in your mouth and pretend that happiness does not exist

and cannot exist between the lips beneath the teeth,

but these principles are true restrained are our hands sometimes our bodies not losing its own orbit in this journey towards a brighter and much orderly universe one day i too must learn to trim the distance covered by my sighs

as though i am
taking a breath beside you your nose touching mine your nipple begging for my tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
Trimming The Trees, Pruning The Twigs....

on the tree of life
there will be more leaves and twigs and flowers on spring
and more luscious fruits for eating

there is somehow a need for trimming
what excesses are there twigs that go awry leaves that lush for too much shade and so we do just that cut some twigs take a look and cut some more remove some leaves for sacrifices for us to some more
and some time
see heaven for once.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tripping...

you go places
riding on a bus
transferring to a boat sitting for a moment on a port
seeing people disembarking on a plank of wood outside a launch
you see children lifted by their fathers mothers with umbrella sunny days
a line of green trees along the seemingly endless road more days to circumnavigate an island of white sands
night when you are alone with everyone
staying for a while checking their bags and clothes
days are going fast passing you by
on wish not to hold on any hour
you flow
like a river, yes always like a river not a part of you wishing a clog a barrier
you are like a rubber stretched nothing snaps

RIC S. BASTASA
Triste

My smoke
as usual floats in the air much lighter than your whisper

RIC S. BASTASA
Triumvirate In A State Of Bliss!

in taking the cue
from Jean Paul when he says that-

'Hell is
Other People'

i have since
then avoided People to include
you

and almost to include
Me

but at the end, how can i avoid

Hell?
or taking another
deeper
reflection upon such cue

why is

Other People
Hell?
or

Does Hell exist really?

People are People and they shall always be people these people of the world you, they, me

How can i be Hell?

so I now declare: i am bliss i am paradise

goodbye Jean Paul now i live here, in this paradise me, i and myself

triumvirate in a state
of bliss!

RIC S. BASTASA
Trivial

sometimes, yes, sometimes seems to be my favorite word of the day, i like (another favorite is i, just like most of us, i, i, i, i, i)
to trivialize a lot of events: funerals, baptisms, even marriage,
sometimes, i ask why, why all these events and things and people (oh yes, the people) have become nothing but images, nothing to be taken seriously about,
i don't grieve at the dead, they are all gone, i don't wonder at new births, nothing to be amazed there is nothing new,
and i don't get excited about other people's marriages don't like to see about the slicing of the cakes or the drinking of the wine, the releasing of the doves, the first kiss, or the lifting of the veil, and the much awaited catching of the bridal bouquet of red roses

they bore me,
i don't itch and twitch,
i am numb but i am not dead yet are you happy now?

alright, there is pain, but let me tell you these are tolerable and don't hurt that much anymore with constant practice, i suppose.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trivial.....

the way
he measures territories
with his
ruler

deleting some with his erasers and
wanting
by marking this and
that
with x's

this coniferous mind
conquer here and
there

kill, kill, kill all obstructions
drop the bombs
drop the bombs
use only seconds
quick is quick
deceive this world
with law and reason

the way to think
of this world
as a figment of your imagination

measuring distances with thumbs

speech is a manipulator words are daggers

humanity is just a compromise men as tins women as cotton children as gums.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trois

when we make love
tonight
between our bodies and minds
as we kiss and hug and moan
and groan
i shall not tell you that between us is a memory of her
and so when i start to close my eyes
and feel the rapid beating
of my heart
i shall hear a rush of the waters
i shall feel the gushing of
the river
inside my mind
and there she stands still waiting for me and there i shall hear the sweetest song
of love from her

and then i explode
like the sun
on this big bang
to create the meteors
and the stars

i live in the universe of my own imagination in there there shall be the three of us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trois.....

we are all the same
towards the destination that island of
desire
tree of us in this boat
body

we do not mention names
what for?
the elements of wind and fire and hands and thighs and tongues

making memories on sands and picking time like pickles licking the toothpick
and opening the

legs of what they do not beforehand
understand as the three of these who are here

unwind and in freedom discover
the secret of what cannot be uttered here leave the hands and mouth
open.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trouble In The Backyard

with only one
rooster
and five hens in my backyard

since then
everyday has become nothing but trouble.

RIC S. BASTASA
True Colors

time only time can give us our true colors we start as bright colored stars others as full golden moons some are silvery rivers running to the morning's dusk glowing to the most blue oceans others as pale as fear and finally some as black as death as red as blood bursting from the fountains of the violence
of this earth
we smell the stink
the foulness of all realities
then we shy away from what used to be just black and white and the promise of something so colorful and adopt the compromise of gray

we have grown and have matured we think the colors are nothing but what we simply fantasize

RIC S. BASTASA
True Fascinations.

Follow your heart
it has no destination for one thing
journeys like these are true
fascinations.

RIC S. BASTASA
True Happiness....

true happiness
is an ocean

if is filling the whole world

fluid and taking the shape of every void

RIC S. BASTASA
True Love

for love to be true it must be an open gate the lover comes and she may stay

and she is free to leave when the love
is gone

and i shall wait
when the lover makes up a mind of her own
to a love that endures
and no longer
held by time

a love beyond our bodies beyond thoughts
beyond us

RIC S. BASTASA
True Love

man
can't believe this one from you to the many places you have gone australia, las vegas, austria, and the rest of europe asia,
oceania, arabic countries deserts and oasis african safaris
the rivers of thailand connecting malaya
at mid 50
you come back
set a party have so many drinks and stories
with an ending cry that you are still in love
with the same woman

and she is already married with five lovely
kids...
you finally divorced
the filler
left the conjugal house &
now
back to this country that will still break
your heart...
man! what a soul!
what a hardheaded creature self-inflicted pain again!
True Love

let her go
set her free
let her find another one perhaps not like you
the one that she says does not excite her anymore her senses numb

let her go
let her know finally that your love is always greater than all her past and new loves combined

RIC S. BASTASA
True Love Finds Its Own Way

like a river
true love
finally overflows
and breaks
with its stored
force
the huge dam
along its way

you prohibit it
it cannot be.

RIC S. BASTASA
True Love Gives Way For Another Person's Happiness

ture love at the end understands that there is no use for it to become true
because
from the beginning it has always been true upon itself and even for its non fulfillment it thrives upon the honor that truth sometimes gives
way
for another person's growth
and happiness

RIC S. BASTASA
True Love Sometimes Gets Unrequitted, And It Is Very Painful how the moon and the stars truly loved the sun

how the sun
with its arrogance keeps busy all the day how the moon hides sometimes on the nights when the stars are away

the moon
feeling so lonely till this day
her true love for the sun still unrequitted

and indeed it is very painful the moon bleeds her tears
and blood flow like her shining moonlight

RIC S. BASTASA
True Love....

hold my hand
take my hand
i hold your hand
i will take you
to the river

our love is fire
that waters cannot kill.

RIC S. BASTASA
True Love?

i know what true love is.
i had it once. How many times will i take pride in this?
NOT once i assure you
There will be another time that i will tell you about it its language is only between the two of us, i fully remember when we were together in church and people laugh and we did not because we know what we feel.
I assure you, it is true love.
It makes the world real, hands that get hurt, hair that gets burned by a lamp, lips that spit blood sometimes but not everything in it is pain there was a time when true love was born inside the car
we had it, we never felt shame we felt so right and wanted a repeat performance we did not speak about it but we always remember it like the full moon.
True love, at the end i tell myself I don't need it
For me to survive.
And indeed, i survive, it is not always painful.
But it is, once, it was very painful.

RIC S. BASTASA
True Love? Is There A Need?

there is no such thing
i now declare
there is no need
one can survive without it this i have learned in my short years of experience children are born

even without it marriage couples
meet anniversaries
less the love
death comes
still without it.

RIC S. BASTASA
True Or False

either you become true or you become false

if you are true
there is only pain

truth does not offer you
happiness

if you keep on hoping no one comes

if you become false
a platter of joys is served that is how they work here falsity has rewards

truth's place is elsewhere it can be eternal

but when is such a question that demands a quick answer truth does not guarantee temporary solutions to your grief falsities are here and if you do not dance you will be a wallflower & i know you will not like it.

RIC S. BASTASA
True To Myself.....

i thought i could be you now. I must have been too eager to deceive myself. I think about you and that kiss,
that night, that short moment, i thought you understand i though you know how to love.

you cannot. I leave all these thoughts behind me.
i leave you.

i wake up in the morning renewed.
Tired of deceiving myself to this illusion.

true to myself, i must say goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
Truly Human

if you screamed
and became silent
if you jumped for joy and chose silence
you have understood.

RIC S. BASTASA
truly i love you
and i keep it all these years i will not be telling you even on a sigh
when you are by my side in the car
in the room
in the movie house
truly i love you
when i touch your hand
electricity runs in my head
in my heart
and i tremble like a man so in love lighting the whole city truly i love you and i will die without you but you are a star that in the literalness of this science
too hot and too huge to burn me
to death
and so
using this logical mind i must go away stay there in the sky
as beautiful as you
are
i am the man in the desert beside my camel watching you
like a
a distant memory.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trust

let yourself
fall off
from a very high cliff

there are no angels
in sight

do you trust God?

commom,
do you trust
God?

you must be sober
now
i know
you are trying to take the side
with reason

and reason
trusts no one

now be serious
do you
trust God?

you are leaving
this poem
like
a trash, it will not stop asking you

do you
trust God?

RIC S. BASTASA
Tusting A Self

like a turtle
i carry myself on my back trusting no one
on my snail-paced journey
to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
you wrap my body with your breasts and i face the pillow my body presses on the softness of materiality, you run your fingers on my arms looking for the secrets of my flesh, and i keep my hands steady on the railing of the bed.

you whisper to my ear the tradition that in true love there are no more secrets.
i smile to the white linen and i close my eyes back to the horrors of my pasts.

you put your chin on my shoulder and you kiss my hair and you caress my head and neck down to my hip and butt.

you kiss me again and you signal that i now must face you in this intimacy. And i look at you and gently i kiss you in return.
I am Cupid and you are Psyche. I must tell you again, i trust no light. Love exists by itself, through itself, for itself, & in-itself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trusting You

it was when you
passed under the tree that i finally let go off my hands gripping on a
a hollow branch.

RIC S. BASTASA
Truth And Pain Finally Departed.

you take a second
glance at to what you once saw was beauty and love

it is not dark anymore morning light came through the window and there the truth lies naked before
you

it is not that beautiful anymore in fact a certain pain comes with it glaring in a little while as you begin to cover your nudity
in front of the mirror

you look at what used to be love with pity and regret but just the same you are forgiving to yourself and the other whom you have endeared with being a beloved

meanwhile the crock crows the sun comes forth the wind blows from the sea your hair begins to dance with the sound of this realization: how enslaved you were now left without much justification.

ah, freedom comes with an announcement: it is never too late to be new again.

Love and beauty in another day of your life.
Truth and pain finally departed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Truth As Quiet.

they say that truth arrives, leaves  and comes back again
to let you know,

sometimes, it is late, to some too premature,

i have heard some sobbing, others go to the extreme scream, others deny, they say they have not seen any,

truth is just around, inside the heart, and those who feel this lives in the quiet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Truth Beyond Words

So he refuses to talk
He twirls a flower Instead between His fingers

Then the other said
I must speak
For words to be Passed on

Then the heavens Speak by Changing the seasons
A hundred more
Are born

He fears
That when the heavens Speak some more
There will be
No more justice
To the words
Of Men

RIC S. BASTASA
Truth In Deathbed

if you brought the truth about me in your deathbed do not worry i am not interested to know i make myself i weave my lies too i am the spider weaving my own house that traps all my prey and i have learned to eat them all sleep well mother do not tell me what heaven is all about

RIC S. BASTASA
to make my sister happy (and foremost confident about herself and be without fear facing other people) mother makes nicer comments about her almond eyes, (how beautiful are you my dear daughter!) which i hear and which lie of course reverberate like an echo of untruths throughout the room but i never made a comment about what is really true for even as a child i understand how mothers love their daughters, to such an extent that they have to lie about disasters.

truth is, my dear sister you owe a lot to mother for what you are now, , , confident as ever and how you have grown to be such a beautiful woman starting from mother's white lie... you ask me to choose between truth

and consequence,

i rather have all the consequences.
you are the truth
and you begin to hurt. I face you again, i have no more tears
attuned am i
to these blunders
and sorrows
and pains, , , ,
to all these
redundancies

a thesaurus of lamentations,

i open a page
of this truth,

i still hope to find this word....

happiness,

i still have faith, that this word is not lost, among the pages of your stories,

some bookmarks
are thrown under the bed, i remember reading this page.

there is this fingerprint of my laughter,
it is still alive and smiling at me.
I still believe, what mother said: keep the marriage there are always threads and needles for whatever is torn.

Father was lucky.

RIC S. BASTASA
'Trutify' The 'I' First

so you want it
simple, free, quiet, true, why not? but first love the 'i'

in you

free the 'i'
quiet the 'i'
free the 'i'
trutify this 'i'

f'i'rst.

RIC S. BASTASA
Try It. It Is Good.

the room can be another prison for one who remains a bud tight as a cork to the bottle necked, and undecided to open up into a complete flower, for years, this is going on and on and on but there is no worry now one gets attuned to the sound of loneliness which has become another nice music over this radio this room, has become one radio, one lasting music for a self loving self unto this self, his individual feudal upon itself, delving into the wholeness of one's independence. Try it. it is good.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is inside you try listening to it because it talks
just like you
so there is familiarity and do not stop there move inside it
and see for yourself
it is you
when you begin to hear your words time stops when you see your face (this i can attest to you) the world becomes too beautiful to even think about and you do not even have to think for any moment since time stops
you shake your hand
it is yours after all but you feel more warmth this time because when time stops
running
when you give it time to feeling and seeing that is the time that the self is assured of the love that you have denied
for years.
you must feel
there are no divided selves nothing split like
a second,
it is one whole self talking and listening at the same time and only love can make this happen

your love.
Try Love

try love and see for yourself the dark sky used to be without a blink is now dotted with a thousand stars the moon walks like a model on a catwalk of glistening clouds as i watch
my hands couldn't help but clap

RIC S. BASTASA
Try Painting Something In Two Colors Only the duality of just red and black red for luck as the chinese sees it and black for goodness (remember good guys wear black as the americans put it)

but i do not really believe what the chinese or the american believes it to be to the French in Les Miserables

red is the color of despair and to us Filipinos, black is the color of mourning equate it with despair when idealism dies
when our ancestors pass away when we do not think of them anymore black, death and red,

blood,
and

something thicker than water darkness, and coldness, and being lost because 'you are drunk and you are standing on the edge of the roof'

RIC S. BASTASA
Try Sipping This

ADVICE TO A LONER

I will attempt not to misspell loneliness at any rate let me inform you that i have always correctly spelled it during those times of extreme depression to spell it correctly i need to see a flower blooming in the desert that i created myself and since someone asks for its scent i have to make the necessary concoctions it could be jasmine or cherry perhaps but i know it all depends on me and my way of imagining people and places colors spring from the rods in my eyes and scents are sensed by the sensory of my nose if you are lonely why not join me in my cup of tea sip this it is good for your tongue.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trying Hard...

the mere possibility that i can have you
even for
one night, shall,
make me live,
but you are telling me,
as fate
is firm on its stand,
it is not possible at all,
never,
and then to live,
some more,
one day at a time,
i tell lies to myself,
no one's hurt,
i have no regrets,
i must live, i must,
no one kills me,
and neither shall i kill
myself
because of you, because of that
mere possibility.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trying Seeing Loneliness

Try to see loneliness
On a mango tree
With just one leaf

RIC S. BASTASA
Trying To Make Something Invisible Immortal....

if you close a bottle
and air is trapped

so with the fruit
fly in there
which, by its tiny size is so insignificant and
at most
is not visible to the naked eye

but somehow this is the test of your poetic sense

the one who sees the dead fruit fly can write
first

the elegy of the insignificant
trying to make something invisible
immortal....

RIC S. BASTASA
Trying To Really Forget You......

it is ten o'clock in the evening and here i am listening to Beethoven.

i imagine ten goats running on evergreen hills. stopping for some herbs.

my eyes are hazy, and i am getting numb and lazy.

piano keys and rats' feet, and this peace
in between

where i insert myself and reflect in a place where there are no mirrors a river perhaps, clear and cool and blue skies. a glass of red wine, no, please, no memory of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Trying...

if your coldness at dawn cannot tackle the morning sunshine
try some amount of time convincing yourself that you also know how to outstrip that coldness
that you also know how to win sometimes that your love for sunshine is a prize that you have to win because if you do not then who will?

RIC S. BASTASA
Tryst.....

the night
is finally gone
and here i am still undecided whether
to rise
for another morning
in my life

your scent still inside me....

RIC S. BASTASA
Tryst

the first to arrive in that safehouse hidden in the suburb was the traitor snappy and emaciated but still looking perfectly fit he went inside the room and smoked his cigar and took a nap with his shiny tool later the liar followed knocked at the door and went there too they knew each other for quite long they drank hard liquor but are not talking he went outside and lay himself on a hammock hang between two trees surround by the bushes and the flowers then the third came bringing nothing but the usual song and never stopped singing and then the three met inside the room which they locked and which i, who is the storyteller cannot peek since the windows are also well closed to keep the secret sealed forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tsung We Wie Chiao

the Chinese bard went to Mountain Tao Tsung Long wanting an absolution
for his malfunction,

along the grass of Wieng Ywi his naked feet tried to feel the vilified

took him forty days to climb the steep steps of Wong Jeing Shrine where the goddess of Shing Jing Tong lives

forty days he fasted too eating nothing but bitter herbs and drinking only dew until he finally died in Fling Flong Dong

and that is the story of Tsung We Wie CHiao
nothing much to complicate for his simple death certificate.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tuesday Evening

AN EVENING
AFTER MONDAY

IS ALDO KRASS'
FAVORITE EVENING

IT IS TUESDAY EVENING AND
IT IS NOT A BUSY
EVENING AND

ALDO LIKES IT
TO BE NOT A BUSY EVENING

WITH HIS JULIET
AFTER WINTER
AND SPRING

IT WILL BE SUMMER
ON A TUESDAY
EVENING AND

IT WILL BE A LOVELY EVENING
ALONE PERHAPS

RIC S. BASTASA
Tuesday Nights....

Tuesday night
is not your Saturday night it is all the same Tuesday nights

words from my mouth falling on the ears of those who want to sit on tomorrow's chair of power

what do they have in mind money, honor, glory and Tuesday night is one of those nights

where they work for what i have all despised and set aside

inconsistent here i am again on Tuesday night
assisting, guiding, letting them see the light of the door that opens to where i have once closed away like you, i do not know what to do with my hands anymore

it is holding the gun and not aiming at anyone

RIC S. BASTASA
Tugpahanan

puting kalapating misulod sa akong lawak mas puti pas kahayag, balahibong mas humok pas lumot sa panit sa kahoy, gihimashimas nako ang iyang dughan gihagkan ko ang iyang sungo, wala kami nagtinutukay, lahi ang among gigikanan lahi sab ang among padulungan, akong gibuhian ug milupad kini sa gawas sa akong balay, usa ka tinipigan nga akong gihatagan ug kaluwasan, ug sa kanunay gihandom ko ang pagbalik niya sa akong abli nga bentana, aron unta mahibalik na usab siya isip akong tinipigan.
walay hisgot kabahin sa gugma.
walay hisgot kabahin sa ugma.
ang karon lamang, ang karon lamang.
nga among gikalipay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tuhoi Ang Mga Pako Sa Imong Mga Damgo

ang kaanindot sa kalibotan nag-agad sa imong panglantaw ayaw saligi ang imong mga mata kay dili kaayo kini kakita adunay mga lugar nga wa pa sukad matultuli sa kasingkasing kini ang adtoa

tuhoi ang mga pako sa imong mga damgo

RIC S. BASTASA
Tuliang's Wisdom

remember my fried that when he kicks your rear it is but obvious that he is at your back

you are still leading so relax.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tulo Ka Bitoon

ang usa alang kanimo ang ikaduha alang kaniya ang ikatulo alang lang gihapon kanimo walay akoa nianang tulo ka bitoon sa langit sa akong mga panganod naandau ko na ang kangiitngit kadtong walay bisag usa ka bitoon

RIC S. BASTASA
Tulo Na Lang Kaadlaw Pista Na Usab Sa Among Lungsod

1. milabay ang sikadsikad
2. milantaw sa duha ka tawo
3. nga punay og katkat
4. mga haligi nga ilang
5. hinayhinayan og patindog
6. ina bay mga buho daan
7. nga bongbong nga
8. mga letra og numero
9. suot ang mga tyorka
10. tuyo aron mahaom
11. niwang og opaw nga
12. tamtong nga lalaki
13. milantaw sa ilang bag-o
14. nahuman nga tolda-tolda
15. ahh! Piyasta na usab diri sa 16. among lungsod
17. duna na usay dagan sa mga
18. bayong walay kinabuhi
19. opusta ko og dayon makadaog 20. og baso, monyeka og mga
21. sa sardinas.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tun-i Pag-Ayo Ang Gugma Nga Matuod

Tun-i pag-ayo ang imong kaugalingon.
Ilha kini siya pag-ayo. Kon masabtan mo Na siya, angayan ka na nga mahigugma.
Kay sa tinood ang tawo nga mahigugma Sa tinood nga gugma magsugod sa Pagsabot sa iyang kaugalingon.
Gikan dinhi, sugdan na niya pag-tan-aw Ang lagyo nga mga butang, sa tumang Pagsabot. Kon nganong gisapot ang adlaw.
Kon ngano nga luoran ang bulan. Kon ngano Nga uwagan lang gihapon ang mga bitoon.
Ang tamsi ug ulod dili na magpanuko Nga moangkon nga amigo mo sila, kon ikaw tinood nga nahigugma.

Ayaw ug too nga dili gamitay ang gugma.
Gamiton mo ang imong kaugalingon ug Ang mga butang aron molambo ang gugma.
Aron mahinog kini. Aron mangalimyon kini.
Dili na gani makwenta kon kinsay gamit kaayo.
Wala na ang kwentahay. Kay kon ikaw wala na Kasabot, apan nagpadayon lang gihapon sa Paghigugma, ikaw ang tinood nga gugma.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tuod No? Unsaon Ba Pagkaon Sa Impyerno

ningala siya sa imong mga pulong gahisgot ka man gud ug impyerno makalilisang nga pulong, midugang sa ilang mga kahadlok, kay ang ilang mga pinulongan kutob ra man unta sa dagan, bakwet, tago, hipos, walay daghang alingasa, dili magpasagad ug lakaw sa gabii, basin ug adunay spray sa bala sa armalite diha sa videokihan ni letecia aw hinoon, wala sila kahisgot bahn sa langit dili nila 'feel' kay wala sila sugod katilaw anang langit sama sa kalinaw, kaasenso, kaedukado, kalimpyo sa balay, kinabuhing haruhay, saktong panginabuhi, steady nga pangita, piskay nga lawas apan, kwidaw, paghisgut mo sa impyerno mitaas ang ilang mga kilay, nanglimbawot ang ilang mga balahibo, mibahag ang ilang mga ikog, apan nagpugong lang sila, morag dedma lang, kay para kanila, ania na kanila ang impyerno nagbaga nga uling sa ilang tugkaran ug ania silas sa ilang talad kan-anan ug mao kini ang ilang mga sud-an: napago nga paglaum hilaw nga mga damgo, gisawsaw sa ilang mga luha, gisilian sa ilang mga kahadlok.

mao kana, cindy, ang ilang pagkaon sa impyerno ug sakto ka, walay tinidor, walay kutsara, ug ako pang idugang: ang uban wala na gani mga kamot kay giputlan ug gitadtad sa ilang mga kapalaran.

RIC S. BASTASA
Turning Hate Around

IF YOU got no love let it be, love shall find a way back into your angry heart,

i got no love too
and those that seek it finds nothing
and they come again staying hoping to find a shadow

I got none. I have hate that i wish i can turn around the other bend,
waiting, i keep waiting for you my buffer.

RIC S. BASTASA
did i not tell you that the sun did not really like to shine today?

but it did. And the moon tonight had sent word that it does not like to be in that lonely sky? But soon it will.

they cannot refuse doing what they are made to.

same here with me to you.
can i refuse to love you?

but why do you hesitate to do what we are born of?

the reason, yes my dear the reason for living is here.

turn off that heart. It has become one such nuisance.

RIC S. BASTASA
Turning Off The Lights

you say, you love light, its brightness that reveals what had long been denied to you by darkness,
you take it, and raise it and put it at the higher place for that should be how it must be everything is now obvious and you begin to see the truth, and you say, at first, that this is beautiful, and good, and you preach about light, its brightness, you want all those that love you to have them too time changes, seasons come and go, tastes not just sweetness but bitterness, this is also truth, but this is not good, this is ugly, and all the scenes pass before your eyes, your parents, and brothers, they are carried by this rage of the river of time, there was thunder and lightning at the background, there is too much lighting, and you begin to dislike what light has given you, brightness has become too harsh for such a short life, there is panic and fear now, you want to run but all the doors are closed, and the windows refuse to open, the clouds make the rain, and rain does not stop, the sun still shines, no promises are broken, all for your love of light, its brightness, now getting too sharp and too jagged, they hurt you sit alone, you let the rain flood over you, you dislike water there is too much of it, just like light, flooding over your senses, they are no longer good, they are so ugly, but what can you do? you wished for it and now it is given for free.

forgetting has taken your beloved away. Such a cruel goddess.
Now you are alone. You remember the night of sound sleep.
You remember when you said, once when we were small,
You want all the lights turned off, light hurts, and you cannot sleep.

and so, i turned off  all the lights now. I shall not tell you anything.
You need sleep and dreams shall be there to comfort you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Turning Point

she was taught nothing but straight lines and her life has always been like the way she was taught a straight one

no curves, no angles, no secants, nothing to decant, nothing foamy, everything is settled like some mathematical principles solid, stoical, hard, sturdy, devoted to nothing but study laughter is strange the frown is welcome, and like a stuffed toy did she become in one of those cabinets she bathes in the antiquity of her silence until she exploded, she was shattered into concentric pieces, tangent minuscules her mouth foamy, her eyes all too hazy her neck strangled, and we took turns looking at her scattered limbs.

on this turning point of her life, the straight line travels dissolving as air in a distance.

RIC S. BASTASA
Turtle Or Bird, Who Cares?

no one

(please enter at least 20 characters in the field)

i have nothing more to say.
i am A
nobody to you
and you are no one to us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Turtles And Rabbits

for my sweet memories i like them to be turtles i like them move so slow as i recall them, i like them to linger like soft fingers caressing the cotton fields of my mind for the bitter ones, i like them to be rabbits i like them to jump away from me i do not like them to pester me like a flea i want them to be doves i like them to fly away i do not want them to have a home i like them to be rivers to flow into the sea i like them all gone

to the bottom
i like them rot in the ground, i like them dead and then forgotten

i think, i am feeling better now with turtles swimming in a pond with green leaves on my bed with rose petals on my head

RIC S. BASTASA
Tv Morning News

mostly bad,
if you take it seriously
it will be
too depressing as though the
world
is not livable anymore

what with markets crashing

new middle east rising leaders toppling
down
icons burned
stone monuments
shattering

what with floods in Thailand
earthquakes in Taiwan and turkey
tsunami in japan

eternal strife in Israel and Palestine

demonetization devaluation of the
the mighty dollar

china rising japan and Russia
conniving

change of guards
off-white
yellow sheen
black gleaming
brown buffer

you shiver upon a scrambled egg
and cold coffee
and oily fried rice
at the hotel that accepts only
the local currency
as mode of payment

credit cards here dishonored
we accept only cash
the sign flashes
again into your mind

change, change there will be changes on this trip to Jerusalem
game

choose well
where you're in and when you're out

analyze the fence
master the north star
rule
do not be too convinced about the
normalcy syndrome

be cautious take the leopard's eye
the talent of the chameleon
do not follow the pack of wolves cover your nose

before you jump

the storm is coming umbrellas have no use.

RIC S. BASTASA
Tv News Tonight

it is all scripted

it is just a game

we all play it.

RIC S. BASTASA
'Twas The Twilight

‘twas the twilight
that we hate during those moments
of our secret tryst
beneath the trees
when darkness and light fuse and then dismember
it is the departure
that begins to put the tinge of pain
the bitterness of having
to say
when.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twelve

a woman in an early morning sweeping some trash away from the house

a heap of garbage thrown on the road for the garbage truck to pick it up...

whistles her way inside the house locks the gates enters the door and opens all the windows of the house meeting a brand new day filled with warm sunshine and cool air breathings from the yard’s green trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twenty

This is my world, small as it is,
It is a planet by itself with very Small moons, and tiny stars,
And so tiny, you cannot just
See me there, I am hiding,
But I still live here just the same,
Breathing atomic air, and drinking Molecular waters, so you see,
How tiny I could be, how tiny
I could get, but this is my Small happy world, my smile
My laughter so tiny, that you Cannot hear, you cannot feel,

And that is your world as big
As the sun, with comets and Meteors, and so big and so Wide, with oceans and rivers,
And continents, and gigantic Arctics, and snowy lands, and
We are then so different, and
With me, there is no problem,
I, in my small world, can fit
In yours, but you, you cannot Fit in mine, that we must Accept, I am a small world,
And you are a space still expanding,
Now, do you understand,
why I hide?
why I shy away from you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Twenty-Five Years

Strong must these teeth be Gnashing for twenty-five years And yet whole and unbroken and sharp

Still willing to bite the dust To chew pride
To masticate pieces of prejudice And let the throat know It must swallow and swallow still

There is so much still to be taken in There is this thirst of the tongue This hunger of the mouth
The craving of the stomach

The eyes study the art of waiting The feet prepare to kick and the arms are ready For the ambush
Of the enemy

RIC S. BASTASA
Twigs In Black Sky In White

trees without leaves
trees which are all but twigs reaching for the summer
sun
like Egyptians in worship
a monochrome of black veins
and capillaries against the gray background of dying light
off-white on such a bleak day.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twilight

twilight bids
night goodbye
dissolving with the first lost
dew in the morning

RIC S. BASTASA
Twilight...

it is still hazy
but we are so sure about the breaking of day

the arrival of morning
on time

it is still a long waiting for the passionate
night

that we still anticipate with hours and hours of
desires....

RIC S. BASTASA
Twilights Of Our Lives

Twilights, dim obscurities of the seasons, An opaque morning, our diffused selves in afternoons We entwine, we have promises in these uncertainties We see a hundred more sunsets and sunrises coming out From the slits of our folded hands,
The morning twilights the afternoon twilights of our lives We always love the glow; we ride in the dusk that slides Over night skies, we descend to the lights of morning
The two of us ushering as pure as the clear lights of noon, Whole and lovely still, then we heat & burn and then We shall, the two of us still like twilights, finally dim then die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twin Mountains In Marawi

the twin mountains in Marawi from a distance as you sit calmly in the sala of your house your window overlooking the misty morning
you shall see how perfect are the breasts of the virginal native brown mountain woman

RIC S. BASTASA
Twist

when he was a bad boy you stick to your being a good girl and when he converted himself into a good boy

you claim you have become a bad girl

the twist is,
bad girl still loves the boy good or bad

well, the good boy waits when the good girl surrenders

RIC S. BASTASA
Twist 10

what we have thrown away as garbage
or extra baggage or unused luggage sometimes come to us asking
why

and since we are definite as eyes that never blink on truth
we respond to all these in that respect of
silence

deep inside we swear we owe no one an explanation
not even
to our very selves

RIC S. BASTASA
Twist 2

understanding need not be imagined injection of what should have been is useless we are the players and the strings are on the air the spectator does not show how much it controls us at first we think we have the anchor and the steer we think our paddles are strong our engines well fueled nay, nay, we are not even shadows of his power when he says we step out we step out one feels it now when one becomes weak so weak as all the forces are removed from within there are compasses of our mere existence we do not think finally that we have the right to live at all days are tricks the nights are magic the hat is black and what comes out is the white rabbit it is the usual story of a magician deceiving us with the speed of his hands our sights have always been losers

Friday, when others fly away he is pushed on the wall curls in bed, chants the words that no one understand

RIC S. BASTASA
there are facts as vivid as the writings in a book nothing changes in black and white they come every morning and stay at nighttime the familiarity of old places and to and fro pendulums one takes a look at them again they never rearrange themselves like furniture of a woman who is still searching for her place in the house one is surprised sometimes as they are seen in another light one that you have never seen before and you think it must be the only one that is real as real as a cemented wall as tough as pillars of the house tomorrow another angle alights from their shapes and you change another belief again until such time that you realize and these they realized a long time ago truth is relative facts are angular nothing is permanent every thing is an atom in constant flux in never ending vibrations and as always invincible.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twist 4

do i have to explain to you that i do not stay forever young? that i was not always righteous?
you do not have to promise me that you must love me forever
i am old and getting older another day another year another night of my life another dusk another breaking of my bone and wrinkle on my skin you do not have to explain the coldness of your hands the silence of our presence we do not owe each one money or feeling when we first met and when we decide to love each other we made a pact: we do not look for what is missing we do not remember what is forever when we leave we leave nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
he lives in two worlds
he has one body, his hands break when he changes places his heart is tough his mind always finds two explanations
two worlds never reconcile
it is this
neither nor situation whatever his eyes see are beautiful
his hands cannot touch any one when he touches it there is death

somehow for all those years there must be a compromise between water and oil

and so he lives in two worlds every morning he rises to live
at night
he sleeps to die
and it has been happening
since then

in the house everyone like to love
him
in one condition that there must only be one world
and so every hour he lives in fear
every minute

but like a dog he learns the tricks he is young two worlds live within him one body one imagination Twist 6

it hurts him to see you lag behind when you are much better the way you write about evil his way of putting good becomes a tail the horns of the stag are always beautiful on the head

it runs as nimble as needle and the threads simply land smoothly on the eye passing the labyrinths of lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twist 7

now back to their old argument Tentorio you lose this time how can you argue about that last dash that moment when they force your eyes
to close

death has and will always be the last and only argument of the wicked it did not work on Jesus Christ neither shall it work on you Tentorio

Now the tentacles of truth are numerous shall they argue again on the heads of ten thousand tentorios? jean shall be tentorio
i shall be tentorio.

i will be an honor to be a tentorio what we wish to close a long time ago you shall be given the honor to do so.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twist 8

if love you must me, you must imagine
someone else

not someone less than me,

love deserves more than what we should have been

as i have loved you

RIC S. BASTASA
Twist 9

i give up everything so you can have
nothing

they clap
their hands for this they all deserve
what i have what i treasure not you who never really loved

someone
like me

RIC S. BASTASA
Twist And Turns

on the twists and turns of my life, when i tumble and i fall, when i rise and claim my due, when i do not surrender even a toe, when with dignity i raise my head and keep my arms on my side when i decide to calm down and simply watch the flowing day like a rush of the water on the mountainside or the creek when the ferns keep on creeping on the side of the trees what silence is there left for me to sip like a strawberry juice inside my glass

i lay my fingertip on the side and try to hear if the song of the wind is still there

RIC S. BASTASA
Twist Of Fate.....

she might have been disappointed when i stopped crying for justice how many are dead? many are unaccounted they have no names, heads are severed and bodies are missing some hands have only two fingers left some feet have no ankles left how many shall be added to the list of those missing? the numbers keep rising like a high tide on the river minds are murky, memories blur, bonds are cut, traditions are gone a brother is on the other side of the fence mother is still grieving for father killed in those daily wars

without end

she might have been disappointed why i changed my mind why my tongue does not speak about injustice anymore she will disown me and call me many names: traitor, deep penetration agent, scum, slime, unwanted, dead, erased,
dirt, cancer,
wound, a disease,
skunk,
a malfunctioning robot,
a rotten pig

whatever,

i am alone in this journey now without a gun in my hand without a load in my shoulder i am going home where there is none and i am making another one i will not disappoint foremost my one and only self... for now i will be selfish in love, between myself and my one country silent in the meadows of my peaceful dreams in love with grass and clouds content upon my own regrets having not love much what solitude shall secretly offer without blood, without bruises, and another scar.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twisted

most people now have a twisted
view
of what charity is when i lend a helping hand they think about the hidden agenda when you give them a treat they think something wrong is going

at their backs

after all the years
of use and misuse charity has no face anymore when you do something good they think you are into something benevolent assimilation convinces no one anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Twisted Dialogues

with you twisted sister i indulge in twisted dialogues reconnecting one word of irrelevance to another that is so insignificant from the foot of the rainbow to the tip of the masculine bluntness to the center of feminine madness

driving is a rainy afternoon after all and i am going no places even in that sacred hearth of the heart
even in heat
i cool myself comforting myself with my own rubber hands i may not have said anything at all something that may shake your booty or what not or what else but i have time

so much time to spend tonight not wanting anything because i know myself, i found it and there is nothing in it except perhaps an assurance that if i wriggle my fingers to check if my nerves are alive then i must be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twisted In Some Sense....

once, i was
a philosopher,
and by chance
i met an ex-disciple
in air
who says
that i was too cruel to twist her brain, but i still talk to myself
becoming proud
that at least
she still keeps
her brain,

though twisted
in some sense.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twisted Memory Lane....

IN SIEM REIP,

rico rides on the elephant's
back with matching
red cambodian
umbrella,

after a while

having finished whether to be or not to be

rico decides finally to climb the steep stairs of Ankor Wat,

(what the heck)

leaving
rica behind teased by those slim monkeys...

RIC S. BASTASA
Twisting

true,
true happiness is just
between us

usual,
the usual stroll in the park
holding hands
sharing cotton candy
and
relaxing later on a bench under the poplar
tree

later, when you go away for your privacy and i am left alone too in my room

from 10: 30 pm till 3: 00 a.m.
i say another thing
to myself:

at least, i can also be happy when i am alone
with myself

thinking, thinking, about not thinking at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twists 1

what i do not know
does not hurt me do not let me then know what i must things invade me somehow events simply come uninvited flowers may be omitted it is not hurting anymore when it comes by the door on a solemn face on warm gentle guiding hands what is expected does not surprise acceptable always is the natural there must be no questions neither must there be answers on this fact

RIC S. BASTASA
Twists And Turns Of Our Lives....

it is not seldom when we meet some twists in a the state of things,

you must have heard about a pig who was more of a dog, and the farmer loves it more for that you will continue hearing about some incredible surprises or perhaps i have many things to hear from your own experience,

we all have these twists and turns and we swear that by God we are happy that we have conquered guilt and that we are ready for some more fun,

i called a friend today, and we have set so many meetings to discuss about these matters, but we never did it, not because we have no time but because we decided to leave these matters to time, the maker of history, the sealer of fate.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twists And Twisters

ice breaker
show us some more of your sense of humor

from a handful of insignificant bricks and cement build us a house
a sculpted shape of wits

splash us with the coldness of your indifference and then horrify us
with our silly expectations

show us how we look
this time
coated with that sense of pride
we are stripped of our eastern sensitivities on some learned so called soft skills

shall we throw now the lotus on the pond?
the frantic frog that fiends sleep to catch the unwary fly?

honestly try looking down
a bit
your fly is open.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two

Eeny, meeny, miny, moe
Catch an Arab by the toe If he bombs you let him go, Eeny, meeny, miny, moe.

Eeny, meeny, miny, moe
Catch a Bush by the toe If he bombs you too let him go, Eeny, meeny, miny, moe.

Eeny, meeny, miny, moe
Catch a musharaff by the toe If he shoots you let him go, Eeny, meeny, miny, moe.

Eeny, meeny, miny, moe
Catch a GMA by the toe
If She lies you let her go, Eeny, meeny, miny, moe.

Now it is your turn take all the fun
still take the pun
still hop and pop
and fart and dart.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Aggressive Lovers

with tattoos

one has the eagle
the other a snake

a rose on the pelvis
a leaf on the hand

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Beliefs

on the belief that too much sunshine makes us a desert
we shy away from play

when we were small they showed us Jack who worked and worked and forgot to play making him a dull boy

which way: a dull boy in the desert?

oh, these beliefs are mere advices try thinking on your own weigh things and decide on your own

play when the dogs are away and do not bark on the wrong tree

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Chickens And A Stone Colored Rooster

this afternoon
the two chickens on light wings roost on a tall tree

the stone colored rooster stays grounded.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Close Filipino Friends

two of them in a tow on top of a rock
a mountain
somewhere in the hidden forest of Mexico behind them are the shadows of tall unexplored mountains misty, around them is the coldness of this tapestry of boulders, and fog and smoke of the breath of the earth fronting them are the mountains again behind and on the sides of their twin existence
being, uncertain, true, insisting, growing, mysterious after this short rest, they move again to complete their journey to the other side edgeless.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Continents

between two continents across the vast oceans

two souls still long for what they always want to hear the songs of lonely birds migrating to another place looking for love trying to find out love's best offer the songs are too lonely the glaciers begin to melt

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Deaths In The Wooden House

father was cleaning his cal.45
on the ground floor of the house
made of wood

son is playing
on the second floor
with a
ball

suddenly a gun burst
is heard

the son is dead how can father bear this?

the police officers come father locks himself in his room

crying

suddenly another gun burst
is heard

and father is dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Different Worlds

most of the time
people who love each other
take time
to be with each other

holding hands and hugging
and taking time just to listen to sweet nothings

there is something however which compels me
to create the distance
between us

sometimes to love and to love truly
one must leave

embrace the wisdom
of solitude
making sacrifices so love may have time to grow so that the world may have its peace

this is us, in two different worlds gazing between light years

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Different Worlds, Spinning, Spinning Not Colliding.

he is weaving words,
the fabric is thoughts there he is sailing on the river of his mind on an early morning's sophistication the words are beautiful compact as a disc,

heavy as dumbbells,
well written like an embroidery of a computerized
machine,

he is happy after it was finished and he reads it to her she is flabbergasted, unable to believe what she hears,

unaccustomed, she shows her disgust about such a waste of time which could have been used for other equally important matters of the office,

she is mundane, he is out of this world, he claims he is into divinity she protests, that it is a comedy, two different worlds inside a room walls rising in the middle of the bed round in a cycle of conflicting views and style and vision and acts, but this world spins and spins and revolves upon the corners of everyday and bound, being so much bound, to that untarnished reputation of how the community sees it to be, the journey continues, round and round like the way each ring sticks it out to the fourth finger.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Distant Worlds

who does not like to put some yellow daisies on your black glossy hair?

you become so beautiful with a chain of yellow daisies in your hair

where i can possibly touch them and caress them and how would you know that this is more than just putting a chain of daisies in your black hair?

you shall never know and that is good enough for me for i am the simplest man that puts those chain of yellow daisies in your hair no prince charming for you, nothing special just another common friend putting those usual yellow daisies in your hair when our hands touch by accident how would you know that i have become a forest burning?

this burning fire that is softly killing me how would you know? your world is open and mine is closed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Eyes Gazing To Eternity

an empty space in my heart could have been filled by another empty space
in your heart

somewhere in that pool surrounded by ferns some fish live isolated by mounds and mounds of earth we felt them

i could have touched you and make you live you could have grown into a tree where i could have taken shade by now by my hands had always been cowards in love's sweet battles unable to defend what could have been true and

necessary

my mouth not speaking my feet had taken that walk away from you
and since then

nothing has been heard, not even any hint that you had died in that war that we once fought our misunderstood restraints where are you now? i have already convinced myself death is a wall and we are runners jumping beyond it wait for me as i wait for you let us connect those broken chains of our unfulfilled dreams of loves unrequited

and perhaps when we find ourselves again back to our arms who knows? we can live again two creatures
under a tree
with happy eyes gazing
to eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Faces

there is a god with two faces one that faces you is a man the other who turns away concealed in the dark is a woman well, they do not talk together for it depends on who is it that they are talking with it is actually an experiment on gender since people are too conscious of it not on the the truth that all these faces are persons who can thrive without the identification of their sexes

that at the end, man or woman, the face does not matter anymore it is the psyche and the Cupid that rule at the end: the trust others call it faith, or hope, but i prefer what i believe in

the love innate and pure.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Faces In My Mind

there are always two remaining faces that dominated my mind, the first one has the face of the body that i want to sleep with but which i cannot really live with it is a cruise

perhaps only for three days then i disembark looking for the next face, the second is one that i want to spend the rest of my life but which does not make me wonder my imagination is shrinking into a barren land, into shores without waves, into skies without the stars, into a night deep into the woods where jackals live in both faces, my blue butterfly of love and affection does not hover, as it merely flutters from one flower to another unable to decide which one i know the reason why my soul is restless my heart had long been dead in both faces, i fear death no more, where shall i go somehow is not my worry i have placed my hands in the hands of God let Him write everything, i shall face Him weeping

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Faces Of Justice....

HOW cruel could they be those seals of the seas burying a dead man's body whose left eye is a hole into the Arabian Sea

IT is not according to the law and customs and religion

This is foul and horrendous To the hearts of the faithful The sorrow is and must be Tremendous

YET how most cruel was once he too burying thousands of screaming bodies in a split second on a building exploding into dusts as planes hijacked crashed on its side

Thousands and thousands of other lives sacrificed for an ideology of terror
still nameless on the roll call of Untimely deaths

And even the those still living They who live everyday in Fear Those who travel in air In a hundred anxieties bear

Still the unfairness reigns One body swallowed finally by the sea

On the other hand
Some thousand hands and eyes or so still unrecoverable From the terrorism of history of the bombs

Those nameless still hungry for justice Those grieving to the more Because the losses are still unbearable

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Forces

while one builds a bridge the other takes its time destroying it while the other grows the branch the other cuts it

one concerns itself with life gentle, tender, sympathetic the other concerns itself with death cruel, hard, indifferent, hateful opposed, true but they go together in the eons of time

hand in hand
like two parallel lines moving in infinity

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Friends

she is too tired to write i perfectly understand this i must tell i know what tired means or the exhaustion
to say the words
i know what dying is i have to tell her about this and then she realizes perhaps that she is not at all alone we have to see each yet face to face

and then i know how a smile looks
like,
how misery is shared and how it becomes one fusion of bliss

two people dying
and not one is scared.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Frogs

two frogs
agree to take shelter on a lone leaf
under a heavy rain

they swear
to croak together
after a storm

they swear
to always live
and love
together

what is perfect
is just between them on a very small pond
just fit for the two
of them

and they both live happily ever after
and then
the tadpoles
come

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Ideas, Two Flames, Two Mouths

two mouths that kiss two lips that burn
inside our minds

two flames
from our hearts burning together fusing in fire

two ideas shared by us sprouting together
like two flowers blooming

this is our love
the fusion of two ideas of two flames
of two mouths

now one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Internet Detached Professionals

this is the time
when we converge
in space

internet hands
eyes
pretending to hear mozart's serenade

not only that claiming to watch me

masturbating.

as i too
not to be outdone
or outwitted

claim to hear her laugh out loud
her own

immeasurable
loneliness.

quits.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Ladies

to describe the two ladies who are closer as friends now i shy away from a word which sounds like the screech of an old and out-modeled car and i joked that the common ground is lovelessness,

which on the other hand, after a while,
as i recoup my senses, though she laughs on the other line, instinctively
and hence without much
careful thinking,
i realize that it is more painful than that word that sounds like a very long screech of that old car as a chosen metaphor,

i listen to it
again
it is worse than a scream.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Lonely Little Things.... we cannot really help but mind the little things

a falling leaf for instance or a butterfly fluttering riding upon a ray of light and finally hovering upon a petal, inserting its proboscis to sip the much needed nectar, you may remember how tired we were as we stand by the railing of a house, a veranda overlooking a vineyard, and i hold upon a glass of dry wine, and i look at you, with such a short gaze, afraid that you too may notice my much kept and well concealed loneliness.

i too cannot help but mind the little things in you, same sadness perhaps, as you sit on the sofa, and made a selfie shot perhaps to keep the self also intact.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Lovely Birds

there were two lovely birds kissing in the air hit by the windshield of my car on that summer day

oh God! how can i be a lousy driver!

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Lovers

it is highly suspicious that two would-be lovers shall soon end an affair which they never really started in the first place
by not talking except writing
each other
offline messages

she writes' i am here'
and he replies ' i am just right here too' and both agree to just keep it that way deep in their hearts they know what next to do

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Lovers Engrossed....

you know this by heart that when you are in the middle of that journey
to love

a boat between two ports sailing
in the quiet history of the silent bursts of ecstasy you never mind the impending sickle of death beside the busy bed

the eyes are closed the bodies giving off heat fire so much fire in the hearts no one is running
no one is running for help this is love, this is love that no one wants to share with anyone else

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Lovers In Their Happy Silence

morning
shower
oh the gentle baby fingers of slow rhythm

breaths of a virgin
touch of new spring

love shower
upon my groin how can two
be lonely?

how can silence
be threatening?
the silence of two bodies crawling upon each others
arms, breasts thighs

sea waves upon the laps of the shores
foams on top
of this turbulence

love erupting
skies opening the gates of love songs

upon the calm face of the blue sea
when the sun fades
sleep closes
in those smiling eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
since i am
grappling in the dark
and you too lost inside this room of less air
and we are
all alone
trying to figure out where to take the
exit
the possibility
is
you may soon
touch me
and i may soon find you
we are anxious our fears are like worms inside
our guts
but if i may soon
hold your hand
and touch your face and your body
who knows
if there is a switch
there
where i can turn on
light
so much light
that will guide us both
to another
world
find me who knows i am a switch myself
who knows
if i also own
light
so much light untapped
undiscovered

discover me
i am waiting
in fear.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Old Friends

when we were children
we were already friends in the middle of our own poverties, we struggled to rise from the lowest echelon. Years passed. And now we see each other again.

His fingers are filled with diamond rings, as big as a fist of a child.
His coat is expensive.
Everything in him is expensive now

His car. A picture of his beautiful wife.
A corporate lawyer too in the city. He will be taking the bill tonight in this expensive restaurant.
The finest wine. The exotic cuisine.

As usual, I will do the talking, as always, since then, he had always been on the side of silence.

Ask him to tell a joke, he says he has none. Ask him to tell a story about himself, he says there is nothing nice about his past. Ask him about his present, he says there is nothing worth talking about himself.

He has all the secrets hidden inside his silent gazes. He smiles to every story that I tell. He likes my company.

Inside my mind, I could have asked him: how many persons have been killed in your name?
How many assets are taken mercilessly from the hands of your economic foes? What brain is this that keeps on acquiring and scheming and killing who obstructs his way?

He is my friend, as always and i do not have the right to ask.

The night is over. It is time to go home. We are on separate cars now and he tells me, 'take care!'

Sometimes, i ask myself if i understand what life is all about really. I am home, And i decided not to preach, even to myself. I honk the car, and the gate opens.

It is 3 o'clock in the morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Options

after the anomaly
she bought a thick nylon cord and tied it around her neck upon a chair she jumps and kills herself
instantly

the other one who bought a new pajero and a house somewhere in Mediatrix using another name is already gone

you see two guilty people exercised different options

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Parallel Lines

The teaching has always been
That two parallel lines never meet

Which is not so with lights Two paths of light Tracing the same darkness Bends finally in the distant space And then they meet
And in a bang Another star is born

Two people in darkness Falling in love
Seeing light where there was none
The impossible happens
Two parallel outlooks Finally meeting in a kiss Bursting emotions
Like a comet’s tail

RIC S. BASTASA
Two People

two people
when they get married at first, they cope up to be just exactly what the other is what he is becomes what
she is
even what she was he also wants to be what she was the bed is busy for the first 60 days
they become exclusive the towels and under-wears and even the kitchen utensils but soon
they must be ready for little changes what is natural comes back again asking for the costs
of compromises
he will begin to be what he is and she will now insists what she is they may still be together
in bed
with their bodies but their thoughts begin to insist that they are different that they can never be the same inside their dreams soon the problems come up like alien invaders in their so called honeymoon which they say is over one makes an issue of an underwear that is left on the floor it was not an issue before soon there will be debates
without end
some have children whom they believe are epoxies of their union they are not
some will have no children and their ways so easily part like the way she parts her hair as a new mode of her fashion then the parting begins with a new poem
how hard will that be she will say
he will too say how this can become a necessity of their union aching for separation like a tooth that must be extracted from the gum because it gets too painful everyday some had it
some will have it at the expenses set by the lawyer not the dentist of course and the silent battle begins people talk you know who is the culprit
who are the irresponsible childish bitch
or monster
and then it is granted
i mean the annulment and then the celebration for freedom begins and then there will be another prison and another one and another one beginnings and endings only to begin again simply because it gets too lonely at night and one has become the risk taker
of his life
stealing happiness and other peoples' hearts like the chicken of a neighbor whose house is not fenced.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two People In Love Inside A Room

when he is in love no door is strong to be opened both are in love and so the door is left open throughout the night
the bed squeaks
the curtains dance
the floors are listening as words from hungry mouths flow like cats and dogs....

RIC S. BASTASA
Two People.....

in the name of love genuine love
i have always lied to you.

i beg for your understanding.

i know
you love me much better than
anybody,

you have seen the
truth
and i thank you for keeping that blind eye.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Reactions...

when you finally concluded that life is beautiful and that it is worth living all i did was to give you a big hug

and then
you winked...

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Rocks Are Speechless.

Buddha
you sit there
the usual silence lovelier
always lovelier
ever
to the utmost
solitude

i am incensed.
i keep on burning
with a flicker and then i thin out until all the smoke in me is consumed by air
that permeates the whole empty body
of this room

this is my sweetest
loss

i empty myself so that i will be gone into nothingness
so that i can be an incense again in
my own
sacred place of
silence

with Buddha beside me
two rocks are speechless.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Seasons

as the city makes sunshine the mountains and plains here make the rain,

i am wrong. I am talking about umbrellas. I should have told her that she is having another season
different from mine.

i could have let her alone.
Her age must decide what must be done.

She is fine between her choices: fire and water.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Selves: The Black And White Horses Of Plato

what you remember
is that time when you look at yourself in the mirror inside a room you lock the door you hear voices you suspect there is a demented spirit with you, ah, the usual closing of the eyes, to start with, it is like you are in a position to start the race, like a gazelle hurdling a forest, you hear a bang it is a gun, you see smoke to the sky, you hear people cheering, there are no colors, just darkness it is twilight and then you open your eyes, this is not real, there is no crowd there are no cheers, you only hear voices and now when you are fully awake you see a face,
and you feel so much pity for it how you have harmed it caused it pain that it does not deserve there is a wall between two people you do not penetrate it, each wants to leave each other but there is no segregation, there are no departures here, no sound of planes or trains, no horns no bells it is just the plain silence of pity enveloping the room locking the room your face still wanting to escape those bars
in the mirror.

you repeat, 'What a pity! ' you only have sympathy for the self that you have never completely become

this is the reality, you are not and never shall be the perfect you.

pockmarked, scarred, twisted gutted, ashed...
Two Silent People, Dying

you are silent
more silent than the stars above us this mountain of sorrow does not know the songs of sighs it is as silent
as you
more silent than all the stars above us i join you in this silence and i take a journey far from you my thoughts are wings and they will not use words as vehicles from my mouth there will be no sound too what are we contemplating for? i ask myself. you think of death, i know, but you have not guessed what i am thinking i am tired of death, let it come when it comes,

i am thinking of those tiny things in my life how they happen, how time flies too fast and i am here with you left behind it like a hundred years i go back to thinking about us bathing in the river since we do not know how to swim we take hold of a driftwood from nowhere

it teaches us how to swim that driftwood from nowhere and it is when that driftwood left us that we struggle for our life and then we have learned how to drift, ultimately how to swim we are here in the middle of this silent struggle it is when it hurts best that we begin to learn how to think how to think well more than the rest of those who are not conscious of the shortness of the time left it is here in the middle of our sorrow that we become more intelligent, wisdom sprouts and grows into a tree in our heads, and we are soon carried to a height where we see them all

away from us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Slices Of Apple

THIS time is am seeing what i
detest
it is about ourselves
those secrets

on one hand we are split like an apple
one slice always misses the other
saying
without you i am an incomplete apple

we fuse again and think that we do not pretend

an apple hanging upon a branch as though it is part
of it
and will never fall again

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Slices Of Apple (2)

THIS time is am seeing what i
detest
it is about ourselves
those secrets

on one hand we are split like
an apple
one slice always misses the other
saying
without you i am an incomplete
apple

we fuse again and think that we do not
pretend

an apple hanging upon a branch
as though it is part
of it
and will never fall again

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Strangers In The Middle Of The Night

creature of my dream
you stand there
in the middle
of my darkest night
patient
about the scrutiny
of my tired eyes
i want to live
my body murmurs
i want to touch your hair
i want to eat your lips
beautiful creature
of my dreams
i love
your compliance
to all my wishes

after all these longings
and bargainings
and compromises
without
the use of
any word
we set ourselves
free
we have never known
who we are....
Two Things

a blue bird on a black bough a watcher by the window.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Things

There are two things:
meaning
& purpose.

One thing:
Birthright.

Always remember this.
You only have to remember.
You do not even have to work for it.
It is there already.
And all you have to do is open the door and let the light of the morning spread on the floor.
The sun is there above the trees.
And all that you have to do Is walk below it.
The world is here already
And all that you have to do is Look around it
Savor its beauty
And enjoy all the days of your life Here and
Then.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Thoughts....

in bed this morning before she wakes up for prayer she looks at the calendar at the side of the wall and says that the days are running so fast it will be March and she is looking forward to a trip in Thailand

all the while my mind is focused on those leaves falling from the dying tree on the yard i am thinking of the fungus and the rotten barks the roots unable to hold anymore the tree's crown she wakes up, dresses for the church's first mass definitely, though i do not have to tell her we're still bound (there must be a better word for this) we're still on everything together....

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Tongues...

i confess i am a man with two tongues
kept on my closed mouth my head is bombarded with dual thoughts
one likes to speak like a native
the other wants to impress others with the twang of my foreign tongue there are two things in mind to swim deeper and just keep the world inside my brain alone on the ocean floor or to grow wings transform myself into a bird
and fly
towards the group of stars in the skies or i just be another meteor shooting into space and be gone
to a certain destination of
another
endless quest...

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Travels

i've gone to more places hazy ones like shadows still not fully boldly outlined by those dark lines pitted against the outbursts of lights from these half-opened windows while simply sitting down flat on the floor

looking for nothing

the trips on those long hours of jetting in the air and trekking on those cobbled streets of kota bahru and the scalding heat of the sun on Poring

still imagining the winds on the canopy walks of kinabalu park on top of trees and just as when my feet lands on those untrodden trails

i feel short of those unsatisfied longings still hungry for breath still thirsty for something beyond water now that i am home

the travel is deeper inside beyond what my heart can beat

perhaps what i have been searching is just here beneath my feet.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Women

She had taken my heart and my soul Another has taken my flesh and mind What is left of me? I may ask now I have nothing more You cannot accuse me now of keeping Something away from you Can I give now what I do not have?
You see, I have already given everything You see, everything has been taken.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Women (Revised) ...

the first is always inside
my mind

the second i make love with every night when i feel so alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Women...

an ex-priest he took her as wife,
well, she was once slim and well poised,
then 15 years
no kids, medically
confirmed,

last night, i also took someone beside me very much like
her in all aspects,

same history, same ex-boyfriends, and when they met at the resto bar where we were trying to have fun or a break from the monotony of this institution

i noticed they did not talk much i guess, their language, which they understood fully
must be different

short cuts, and clarity, words limp...

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Worlds

as he keeps polishing his poem
she also keeps polishing
her porcelain wares.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Worlds In One Body

two worlds are here within me one is this bread and butter thing the other is this kind of bird flying inside my mind
like i am
floating in air

two worlds: law on one hand and poetry on the other strict order and logic on the right and chaos and touch on the left

at the center is myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two Worlds.....

I've seen how fragile
a white butterfly floating in air gently stops on top of a red flower petal and then gently again backs to its floating beauty

what a beauty and i float too like a butterfly

that night in the same garden i've seen one broken wing on the pebbles the other wing and the body of the white butterfly is taken by the red ants what a feast perhaps inside their sand empire got to accept this fact of life here today gone tomorrow one's misery another's reverie one's loss another's boss.

RIC S. BASTASA
Twosome....

you follow me because you know the path you have no questions

you do not talk because we think the same thoughts and talking about all these will be

echoes of redundancies

when i write you read me simply because you are anticipating the same thing from my hand and then you will say

'that is exactly what i am thinking' when i begin to walk you stop

i have become too restlessly boring and any mimicry from you shall not cure it and then when you are left alone, you run to catch up with me because that feeling of emptiness has become unbearable and then you tell me with confidence my misery is your best company.

RIC S. BASTASA
Two-Way Traffic

i am shying away for a while from you.
i've been good, i think, i followed the rules.
i talk to you but i feel that it is only the air talking back to me.
i offer flowers they all wilt without being smelled by you.
i offer food like what the chinese do to their dead beloved.
they get moldy even untouched cockroaches feast on the rice and fish. i visit your place
no one is around there is no note where you are there is no number that i can possible contact you i retrace my steps back to my house and they tell me that you are a spirit and everywhere i must be crazy talking to the air the trees the grass and the clouds i am so empty
you are not here with me my heart is as hollow as a cellophane back filled with my own breath i ask all these questions to you at night when i am all alone i sleep on the rooftop hoping that you will see my despair still you are not there sometimes i ask
is it really true that others besides myself have seen you?
i want a personal experience with you
where are you?
where are your hands?
where is your heart?
where is your mind?
O, Lord.

RIC S. BASTASA
Typhoon

typhoons are not that strong
sometimes
they behave like critics, passing by an island, saying, hey you are not an island after all, you are just a hill fit for a Bollywood scene

I am in that island feeling some itch
of its breeze, but i was too busy then climbing one of the narrative trees
there

and he asks is there such a thing as a narrative tree?
i crack the nut
and drink the clouds
there
and he is filled with so much
awe,
he gets itchy
and scratches
all the skins
and even the bones
he rattles like a snake
and wants to bite

the narrative tree has everything
to offer
gentle, and soft and conversational

but he wants to deny this kind of tree
saying
there is no such thing as that
and this

oh my, what a man
he is structured in his cage
not knowing
that he is meant to be free
from the shackles of his verse
from the narrow alleys
of his rhyme

goodness, we do not even try
grafting the metaphors

i love it here this island where i touch him not but he touches me
i guess
that is envy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Typhus Feathers

a woman
in far away
land sends the signal
that on a specific day she gonna be an eagle scanning
horizons

she must tell me what she can find there

i know
what is there

i am this retired eagle
with a broken beak
and typhus
feathers.

RIC S. BASTASA
Typically Filipino

a woman is picking lice from her son's head

beside her
another woman breastfeeds her newborn

our taxi passed there

the fat woman beside me wished that she had her camera with her a man plows the nearby field another man fishes on the river the fields are green and the skies are gray the road is muddy and the rain seems to be forever

the hut is too small for two families

RIC S. BASTASA
Trying To Be Smooth In Speech

this morning i read some notes
about myself and i notice how i tried to be smooth
in my speech as my notes still want to insist ethical considerations

the motif of my day, the struggle to be always calm and cool
the war against the tendency to hurt another without our conscious knowing
but all seems to be a kind of futile attempt to be kind and gentle
like a dog wagging its tail when you meet along the doorsteps
of your house

i open some pages again of my diary
or journal of the day on a cup of tea
and two pieces of cookies at first the language flows like a river clear and i even tasted a cup of its water smooth to my esophagus

and cool to my gum and i think sweet, even sweet to my tongue and i can feel it flowing again smoothly to my intestines

and then here i am finally vomiting
i suppose nostalgia is nothing but nausea, the speech of loneliness about a memory long gone and very far away the words are smooth
and then
somehow they kill

i close the journal at once i open the window
let the air come in

as i wait for the morning sun to shine and then warm me a bit

RIC S. BASTASA
u unconsciously unleashed

unsatisfied
unzipped

RIC S. BASTASA
U & I

to be true
i must start with the
i
in my poetry

i
am i ncomplete

so
i
can be whole
i
must relate to u

as the cliche goes
u complete
me

so next time when u always see the
i
in my poetry
do
not worry

it is just my way of searching the completion
of the

i
in u

i
am just being true i accepting the fact

that

i,

without u,
am n
nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
U & I (Updated)

You burst first
and then surrender
to the soft pillow
of the bed

i didn't have that magma
the volcano in my
mind
sleeps and the eruption
was just a word that came out unrestrained so you hear it giving you the pleasure
of some stars

i wake up
looking at my own
body
the terrains of my abdomen
show an abandoned
land

my eyes are clouds
hanging on the black sky and then it rains
once again satisfying the thirst of grass
the longing of the river the bareness of
land.

RIC S. BASTASA
U & The Night

Night is a private affair between sleeplessness and pain

the sockets of the eyes are repositories of regrets
the pillows soften trying to comfort what pain inflicts

sleep is forgiving as it comes and then at least for these hours you are rested
in such slumber of forgetting

RIC S. BASTASA
U R Different

u R different
simply because
u luv me.

d lonely seagull
that vanished to a distant horizon becoz of u
is so beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
everyday
the sin of omission looks like an expanding hole of the ozone layer

you get
ultra-violated.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ugh!

ugh is not an ugly word,
say it, and
then move on
with your life and the forget

ugh!
ouch!

got easy now it is just a state of the mind a mirage in the desert as i told you

nothing is important nothing is necessary
nothing is needed

less is beautiful
the mistake is mistaken.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ugly He Was Born

ugly he was born
even her mother had second thoughts loving him his father disliked him junked him from his masculine affairs,
but he learned a lot
from being unloved
he keeps on knowing what love is by loving more those unloved
around him,
he sketched the faces of those who were always set aside or left out those whose faces
do not matter
he learned all these sufferings in his heart kept the feelings inside him like a big book to read
when he is lost
in pain,
he did not stop loving and those unloved
felt him, so real

he is real,
he is real
they call him real

somehow, he felt the comfort of his real self ugly, yet by now so confident

to be himself
and not be somebody else

RIC S. BASTASA
Ugma Na Lang Gayod

sayo sa kaadlawon ikaw nahigmata apan ang imong lawas anaa buot pang magpabilin uban sa habol ug ugnan nanghawid pa ang imong galamhan sa imong mga damgo nga imong gihinayhinayan og hapyod sagad gayod nga ang imong matutokan mao ang kangiob pa sa lapad ug duol kaayo nga kisame nagapos pa ang mga pulong sa imong baba walay litok nga buot mogawas ug ang imong mga hunahuna nanggimok ug nahikot sa imong nagkatuagsa nga buhok unsa na pod kaha ang mahitabo karong adlawa balik sa trabaho sa matag adlaw balik sa mga kisaw sa ordinaryong kalihokan sa imong mga kamot ug mga tiil wala nay mga pako wala na ang mga paglutawlutaw sa kawanangan ug sa mga bitoon nga gitinguhang kuhiton lakip sa bulan nga buot nimong pakigsultihan sa imong atubangan anaa ang mga nagtubo nga mga papeles mga folders mga basahonon ilubong mo una ang imong kauugalingon sama sa usa ka tinagoan nga sulat nga ugma na lang nimo basahon pag-ayo unya na unya na lang ang kabahin kanako

sa pag-abot sa laing gabii ikaw mahanaw sama sa usa ka gamayng bato nga imong gilabay sa tunga sa kangitngit nahulog didto sa tunga sa mga kakahoyan apan wala kay laraw nga imong kuhaoon pagbalik ug kon imo mang sulayan pagkuha anaa diha ang imong mga pasumangil ugma na lang uga na lang gayod

RIC S. BASTASA
Ultimate Solution

for things beyond the grasp of our minds beyond the hold and control of our hands
beyond the help of our trusted friends
beyond the confident powers of science beyond the patience of time beyond the tolerance of space beyond the reach of light

we can only pray.

RIC S. BASTASA
Un Amor

like a cliche
i must discharge
un amor

prove to me something
beyond the ordinary lies beyond the usual excuses let my heart beat some more it is dying.

resuscitate me
this breathless existence

love dies too
and indifference may find a chance to grow revive me kiss me now and hug me and make me feel a certain warmth

that is true not imaginary make my fingers move my body sway

tickle my sadness
and make me soar

find me wings to fly again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unable To Link...

your inability to link even to the simplest vowel have given birth to more consonants and being so
the world cannot anymore speak and now no one hears what ought to be said...

it is always a series of departures a train not stopping and without breaks it falls on a deep ravine without the vowels you shout for help and now it comes back to you the misfortunes that you are giving the consonants bury you soundlessly.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unacceptance

dyeing his hair
this morning and putting on a new pair of trousers a supporter
he attempts to play basketball

somehow he cannot shoot the ball
he fails again on the next attempt

he sweats it out drinks his lemonade and whistles Inamorata a la
Dean Martin

RIC S. BASTASA
Unaccounted Like Everyone Else

he would have been happier if the world was flat and that when he sails at the edge he falls and be no more. Unaccounted like everyone else.
He would have sailed earlier at dawn and then be lost forever.

Neighbors worry. But they do not worry that much.
They do not mean what they are worrying for.

Like you
you are like everyone else.
Nothing of equal importance.
If you are gone then you are gone.

Things end.
People die.
And those who are left soon shall wish the same.
Justly so.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unbecoming And Tasteless...

Sometimes i wonder
about the invincible people they make you feel that they’re here and touch your hair and back of your
feet,
cold, as cold as dawn
and gray as blurred as eyes failing
to see,
and then they leave the message that we have become too tasteless
and too unbearable...

envious perhaps that we are still here caring and loving and writing and praying...

pity them, and offer some prayers light the candles and burn the incense
we thank ourselves too they can never be with us again just as they deserve the fate of oblivion

RIC S. BASTASA
Unbreaking Hearts

wiping tears kissing loneliness goodbye welcoming forgotten desires speaking of loved ones and strumming guitars
again and again
and singing in the rain
and reembracing what is there waiting mending hearts
alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Uncaring

uncaring for words
rhyme or rhythm
you step into this world of freedom
anything goes
just self-expression
where the rules lay at the background watching everything in you grow like wild weeds of the west.

RIC S. BASTASA
Uncertain

no one knows what is waiting behind the darkness of the veil amidst the strength of light one stands in the middle of the road wanting to decide which way until the horrible thing happens.

RIC S. BASTASA
Uncle John

Years ago you climbed the mango tree On an alibi to see both of them

They talked in the sala of your house And went inside your room After they kissed
You did not wait for reason Before they Can undress
You shot him dead
You spared her
Your wife because you loved her

15 years in prison
You were released to find yourself

In this bigger prison Without love

All that you can find in her
And her children are barbed wires

Uncle John, tell me
Which do you prefer now?

RIC S. BASTASA
Uncompromising...

what is this all about?
Time is asking.
What is this rush all about?
These series of silent and prolific outputs?

Symptomatic of what? Cramming examinees to Time's ultimate Quiz

Choosing the best answer In such a short time Making the best essay possible hoping to get a perfect Score.

Time, why are you too short?
Time, why are you so brief and concise and so cruel?

There will be no blanks.
Every choice is made Every empty hole is shaded Filled and Submitted.

Time is time.
All pencils up.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unconfessed...

a blue motorcycle parked under the coconut tree just near the shore the sea is calm

the sands are off white and the breeze is soft on the skin there were broken rocks piled and silence and a shadow a shadow bears no name and it does not matter anyway things are better as secrets the place and what is done poems are happenings and they are deep as unconfessed

RIC S. BASTASA
Unconsciously

one night
beside me
my friend
you touch
my body
with your fingers
you kiss
my lips
with your warm lips

i let you unleash
feelings
perhaps
long buried
like an ancestor

the morning after i ask you why
and you say
you were unconscious
you ask to be forgiven
saying sorry
so sorry &
that the same
may not be repeated

i touch your mouth with my hand & tell you
you have nothing to be afraid
of nothing to be sorry
about

i perfectly
understand
how is it
to be unrequited
this body
is yours
this body
is meant to be shared by another who loves
to touch
who loves
to kiss
who loves
to be in love
who loves
to be a part of the flesh
who loves
to be just the man that you are
consciously

RIC S. BASTASA
those that die young do not give us the lasting impression, if at first we feel so sad not having fully enjoyed the value of their company,
soon,
like everything we have lose itself in time, time like a constrictor gobbles every value
of our presumed greatness we have always been a matter of time’s consumable perishable like a fruit a biscuit
a letter yellowing and become another waste,

i think about this and one day i see light on something within that cannot be consumed

you know it
i will not tell you and you do not have to tell me.

it is light, it is so light.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unconventional...

it will not start with the usual
hello
well goodbye is another usual word people use it every moment sometimes even permanently convenient

some start it well with a
'tell me the story' or
'tell me the truth and nothing but the truth then we perhaps can help you'

others don't. They do not start it all, you start it, that is their demand you must be the first one to open up like a parachute like a child's inquisitive mind that always asks about the moon why it is round
basics, you know

others are unconventional. no word at all. plain touch, sometimes no touch even.
they pretend they don't mind. or honestly, they do not mind at all because they also have their own battles.

sometimes, i like it this way.
silence. closing of the eyes.
relaxing on a beach king of david thing letting people have their own choices.
letting events take their own due course.
like a compass pointing to its own direction.

sometimes i want to break the compass.
what is it to be lost and still be strong?
no fears, no hang-ups
no pent up emotions.

back to silence. sea breeze caressing my body.
leaves falling softly on the sand.
waves monotonous on the shore hypnotic.

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Acacia Tree

that afternoon under the acacia tree the irony of life confronts them she is beautiful, a single mom with a chinese lover she's lonely and does not speak much he is married and his wife cannot bear him a child he weaves a conversation words allure him more he appears happy and sometimes he sings alone the sound of the whistle delights him

in the bathroom

the night came they kiss and then they part ways looking for their home

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Banana Tree

under the banana tree
juan
waited for the magic pebble
to fall
for him to swallow
on the belief
that he will turn into an invisible
juan

the whole
night
he dreamt
that the magic pebble
landed on his mouth
wide open

by an unknown
spell
juan turned into a banana
tree

and all the neighbors
his parents mourned
for him

at least
one thing
sure happened
he floated
turned himself
an invisible
juan
and he looks at all of
them

somewhere
from the top

they call
it
heaven

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Big Pitogo Tree

under the big pitogo tree
i lay my body on the sand put some leaves on my head and then i close my eyes to listen to the wind from the sea feeling the rhythm of life pulsating in the air beside you

RIC S. BASTASA
under the cover of the blanket of darkness we feel the beating of the fears in our hearts and our mouths
mumble the need of
hands

however, lonely as we are we like the beauty of the silent island

not wanting to touch the cloud the wind

simply because there is nothing there

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Cover Of The Night

living so enclosed like a dead man inside a coffin there is no choice but to sleep and inside the dream pray more,

the man keeps reciting the prayers on his fingers to dispel all fears about death when he wakes up however everything becomes a different matter it is not something strange but it was the most certain thing that happens dead upon death

dead of death

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Mango Tree

i like the idea
of doing many things under the mango tree
like watching time go by like it is a stranger
and i am a stranger too watching time pass by like i am so interested with what time can do to me

making me old
making the mango tree bloom and flower and have fruits and they are so many that the mango tree bends
to the ground
and time stays for a while and ripens the fruits and make all of them
in time
fall one by one to the ground like some kind of withered flowers

luscious, sweet, fruits of the mango tree
falling
by the slightest passing of the wind and then the children come and with all joy pick them one by one putting what they can under their shirts and still rushing
to keep
and take some more

under the mango tree
all the people
are so much alike

the rushing, the taking, the joy of always having more and it will never stop as i watch time slowly go by

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Rain....

no one sleeps under
the rain

if there is no shelter or a partner

to share the blessings of
water

there is only one option left run, run, play deaf....

RIC S. BASTASA
tired of the race
i let the wind pass by my shoulder

i sit under the olive tree and watch what you cannot see you wonder why the earth sounds less than what the stone speaks i am tired of the race and i let the winds pass by me i am happier now under the shade of the olive trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Shining Light Of The Moon

with a guitar on hand my lady beside me

oh, i wonder why the frogs are so silent this time?

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Sun

there is so much to do to talk about
to learn and judge and
tell
to forget and forgive to decide to move on

like the grass and the grasshopper
the ants and the butterfly the hill and the
river
like the clouds up the tips of the hills
like the atom and the molecule
like your lips and your teeth
your eyes and
your heart

like the fish on the water the mice on the trap the cheese and the dough

an open mouth
a tongue
a word of thanks of hands waving goodbye the last honk of the car the speeding jet plane in the air the darkness in space Venus and Mars
Jack and the beans

so much to talk about
under the sun

why lonely still?
why so empty still?

yes, you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Tree Beside The School Building on a certain break one sits alone under a shady tree on an afternoon of Saturday

ey left for a certain purpose filling up too
a certain emptiness of their minds (& bodies)

somehow
the wind provides a joy to cool a face calming a mind in chaos the leaves fall

too gently on the grass and they are too graceful too simple for any deeper analysis the grass speak for themselves always a busy day

spreading
expanding its territory

the pebbles as usual mute but always with a desire to speak to move away

there are cars
waiting as the rain begins to fall some have to run and escape being wet

these are everyday occurrences and because i am too sheltered inside the four corners of my study room they have become too unfamiliar and too new there is a longing to belong again to a world without thinking too much something just to occupy a place, the feet to walk the hands to touch

it 's been a long time now i have not seen the world to its practicability like an axe to a firewood mud to my shoes rain on my shoulders

some birds over my head a butterfly stopping on my hand to rest is also an ability i think, i have forgotten.

RIC S. BASTASA
Under The Trees

under the trees
a shadow is lost
above it
some chirping birds
below
the pebbles beside the red ants.

RIC S. BASTASA
Understand

Soul, you must understand how this body sleeps with you.

Soul, you must remember it has separate manners with you.

Soul, learn the sensual pleasures of this body, its twists and turns, its crooked ways, its perverted ways, its insatiability, even its evil ways,

Soul, you have all the patience, when the body is rested before its time is over, Soul, awaken it, shake it, let it shed off its dusts of errors, its stains of lusts, wash it with fasting, and repentance

Soul, be wise, and kind enough to save this Body, until it rusts and to dust it shall return, and Soul when you go up there, Forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
Understanding

We are here
To understand, not to condemn yet Anyone.

I perfectly understand
Darkness
My companion since then Has always been Chaos and Confusion

I agree it is hard to write What beginning there was To point out the opening word And to start writing Sentences

But take love
First, Above All

Just love and take more pondering On compassion
Take the teachings of Empathy

Whether you end with Sadness Or you end with Happiness Whether you arrive at Nothing It does not really matter
Anymore

Just take love
The rest shall follow
The pen shall begin to write the word Itself
And then, mind you
The sentences are too many.

RIC S. BASTASA
Understanding Myself

To be tough on myself and always go For perfection
And be strict and rigid and self-righteous There is so much sadness in here Unnecessary pain

There is always a time to pamper myself With my own foolishness To laugh at myself and humiliate it Before my eyes
To see how it can be humble and be Simply itself
In its own smallness and madness

Behind this faith I must have doubts As a way of self-measure Behind this morality I must have my own Taste of private sins
As a matter of discovering what lies Behind me inside me outside me This personal humanity

When you see me again I shall wear this smile This understanding Of what I am and what are we really Double-faced and double-natured Body and soul, spirit and flesh Feel me as I feel myself Touch me as I too touch myself I dive to earth as body and flesh Then I soar to the skies
As soul as spirit as finally limitless and forever free

RIC S. BASTASA
Understanding The Lack Of What We Are

what we sorely lack we do not talk about, afraid

that this may lead
only to the destruction of our bridge

our love knows that time always keeps its hands
moving, and we

soon accept that this lack is part of the house of love,

in fact, what we lack built us the spaces for windows
to exist for doors
to be real, and so

here we are now
still one, no one is a shadow here,
a true soul cannot project it...

RIC S. BASTASA
Understanding Art

exercises of the mind, this morning chill and the waiting hours,
i open the window
to see what they call is another ordinary day,

a vine hangs in the garden wire freely it gives three flowers which the wind takes away, i take time this is the moment of conversion when the ordinary day becomes special when the three flowers symbolize the trinity of faith, hope and love, the ordinary human eye seeing the whole world

in such a short time
such beauty,

art plus sensitivity and
humanity

RIC S. BASTASA
Undiscovered Skill

we were sitting upon the edge of a cliff

it is time

we spend years worrying horrified on the thought that we soon would fall and die

not thinking

that when such moment comes we have already flown.

RIC S. BASTASA
Undr A Dictatorship

to be or not to be
that is no longer the question
hamletting is the answer

RIC S. BASTASA
Undress Me

my hands are tied my lips are useless
speech is strange
undress me
i am yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Undressing

beyond the undressing
of the fabric
lies the naked necessity
for living
beyond the skin the flesh lies some more of what cannot quench
thirst
beyond all these is an orifice
a wound a penetration of the human skin
vessels of our undefined
sorrows
the cartilage of our despair not finding yet its true name beyond all these quivers something that i confess
i still do not really know. I like it here for the meantime licking ignorance savoring my temporary
presence
on something so obvious like your lips
the tickle beside the ears i am here so i must be here this is fulfillment at a certain stage that i must not regret i cut and slice at the half of what i can hold i sigh at night having taken what i could i stare at the stars still asking.
Unexpectedly......

the juror
whispers to another
juror
which is heard by the friendly wind: that guy, over there,
the one at the last
yes, the one
wearing the black shirt and worn out shoes.
with uncut hair
and sharp eyes
and brown skin
i like him to win

RIC S. BASTASA
Unexpectedly

sometimes on days when we are crumpled like waste papers or drafts unfinished and thrown or set aside for a while when life seems to be nothing but a desert guarded by the angry eyes of the sun at noonday when others seem to be islands set apart by storms and oceans when we feel that we are dried river beds with stinking fish attacked by gnats and worms when everywhere is dark and lonely and when we start to compose words for all these phenomena describing in detail why things are or what are they in shapes and colors and scents drawing from there and then images of shadows and sighs surprisingly when we all keep these inside our hearts and wonder
a moment comes like a shining star giving that little spark of our own genius that we are never defeated that we know how to rise above and beyond our self-imposed limitations like a seed that we throw because we cannot eat it and sooner we see something tiny is growing in our backyard that past into a tree bearing fruits luscious and giving us the extended days in our lives.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unfiltered By Mist

when i appear to you
one of these days

what is it that you want to see?

my hands are hard my ears covered my eyes in haze
my body in trembling

this is not what you want to see i guess you want greek pillars as my feet my eyes as gentle as a roman saint my ears attentive as a echoing mountain my body strong like an old castle but let me tell you how is it to grieve for someone that i have loved and lost how is it to cry and yet not wanting to have tears how is it to be lost and pretend that he has the mastery of the ways that he has the manners of a man mastering the art of cultured restraint tell me if you all know these if you can relate to these miseries perhaps one day when the world is ready for me then i will show myself filled to the brim of reality like a glass emptied of its contents glistening to the rays of light not filtered by the mist

RIC S. BASTASA
Unfinished Business

an unfinished business
a reason to live and shy away from the courage to die,

at twenty, you ask for a little time longer, at thirty, you beg, another ten years you pray, another more, for an unfinished business an house that looks like a face wanting still to have eyes to see what was not even started others passed away at ten and then just the same, even at sixty all shall be forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
Unfinished Business (Revised) and so you walk so confidently finding your exit passing the blue guard looking at you without any question,

you wish the path is not crowded with people you wish there is no vehicle at the parking lot you wish there are no children at the playground there is no thunder to hit you, you are confident about this there is no accident, there is no gun, there are no killers to shoot you now. you are confident. You still have an unfinished business.

deadth has no power over you. and so back to line one yes, you walk confidently, finding not the exit now, but the entrance to another risk, another threat, another escape.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unfinished Conversation

You stutter a bit in this conversation
In twilight,

You do not wait for her to complete the words

I
Love
You

It is you who cannot wait because of the anticipating quiver The coldness of the night

You close her lips with your lips she is able to utter only hhhhmmm....

RIC S. BASTASA
Unfinished Quest

day by day
a revolution of years and scores looking for destinations unceasingly even inside a dream when i see a river and when i undress myself and go naked when i plunge myself and find nothing but filled space and water everywhere asphyxiated

i rise again to an atmosphere of air grasping for breath
always looking for something that must last forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Unfinished....

when you are finished with love you move out wearing another dress code you open the same door which you have just closed behind and you leave nothing except perhaps a little shame and some regrets
but just the same you are into this mode of picking up the broken pieces saying this is love after all and i shall heave no sigh.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unfit.....

does this mean
their names and they have their own group their own kind
and each year
they meet
put garlands
on their necks
and sing praises for
each other.

even if you
are not exclusively too small and i do not exactly
fit.

RIC S. BASTASA
everyday is the same
the sound of the pigs from the farm and the cows from the pastureland and the ducks and turkeys and the bushes and trees everyday they make the same sights nothing is new the skies are there making their blues and the winds push the clouds away those drifters without the constancy of a face and color everyday is the same and you are thinking the same just like everyone and everything

how boring is life you say but it is not with me my love because i still care and the world becomes too interesting the clouds are travelers to the interesting journey as they see fields and rivers and mountains and the mountains eagerly wait for the sun and the pigs roam the bushes and the turkeys are learning how to fly the ducks finding their new rivers as they float on the joys and the skies close and open their windows and the stars give a new glitter for their new night show of lights and i say how interesting life can be as i wear a new pair of eyes as i begin to unfold a new set of wings this world has remain unexplored its mysteries begin to unfold

RIC S. BASTASA
i too, must not content myself with poetry it becomes routine and boring and not challenging at fifty poems a day there is no more ecstasy, i loathe this kind of fantasy i must try another assay
yes
perhaps acting like Clint Eastwood's Unforgiven where i shoot the wild beasts like tin cans firing them with bullets one on one and where i make love with the women agains the setting of the sun and some background music of the winning man

i can be this actor in fame i can get my hollywood name Ric Bastasa, Still Unforgiven.

waiting for my next film Unpretending.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unforgiven Unforgotten....

she will not be talking about me
i understand
i am the unforgiven
i will be the most patient sinner she will be the most living memory
she is unforgotten

her hair as black as ever no age, no time whitens it i am getting older
and in pain
soon, i will embrace another truth
a must
i must learn to forget even though perhaps i am still unforgiven

my silence in ages
must appease the storms

RIC S. BASTASA
Unfulfilled Dreams

Unfulfilled dreams
Become freckled rice
To produce
The foul wine

RIC S. BASTASA
Unhappy Endings....

softer as 100% cotton scented pillow case Chanel 5 your fave cooler as Iceland
whispers of glaciers
changing courses.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unholy Hour

my pants are under the chair my brief on the john my polo shirt on the cabinet my watch below the bed my shoes scatter on the floor my socks no longer pair we're here united at the most unholy hour
of the day
with all regrets
for nudity

RIC S. BASTASA
what you love is the gift the giver has gone away taking away what you want to keep inside you leaving you empty and despised but you must let it be letting go, because what you care most now, is the gift of love this unico hijo, this, one, who is with you in flesh and blood

he too shall take what you have what you keep inside you you open like hands and he will grasp what love is there you have reserved for tomorrow

he too shall take your time, your essence, your future even, and willingly you shall give them all all the love left all the fortunes that you may still take you shall give them all this unico hijo, one, who is with you he has his father's eyes, and even smell but you love him he is the reason why your life moves on why you must keep in touch even go on top

and still be defeated, well, he is the one, this unico hijo, he is the one, the only one left your reason and it does not matter now, if the giver is gone and what is left is his eyes staring at you, this gift, grabbing you again this time, you are more than willing you have learned to die and be dignified standing tall in love's greater name

RIC S. BASTASA
this love of God
always and forever
uniquely mine
too personal
like something from someone
somewhere...

can't say it always mysteriously
inexpressible...

something that sleeps
and slips.

RIC S. BASTASA
United In Pain

my fingers
are not mine anymore
they are running out of control
i do not wish
to write some more to infuriate you
but my hands are rebels coming out from my arms
into their fingers
writing these lines

i am detached severed
from the rest of my parts
i have no more control
about
destiny in the making

birds of blue
feathers
are coming out
from my mouth

and they are not coming back

my fingers are automatons
writing now on their own

i am not
responsible for your anger
i am a useless man
and my fingers
are not mine anymore

my C5 chokes a nerve
i am numb
my fingers are at war against each other now

thoughts converge
without much meaning
united
in pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
United, And Whole Again

a secret lies there on my bed as always, mine, and mine alone, it is beautiful, as it is mine, as i am, too, beautiful, at least to me, it is mine, and i am myself, as beautiful as one can keep it forever, it lies, on my bed, like an intimacy, it breathes, what i am, what i breathe, what i have neglected for the past few days, while i was away, in that dessert, in that room, in that isolation, and now i am back, stronger and renewed, reinvented, renamed, redeemed, and this secret lies, beside me, and then, we fuse as one, united, and whole again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unity In My Country

three islands
one people on May 10

RIC S. BASTASA
Universal...

a dropp of rain when it heads your head is no longer a dropp of rain it becomes an idea and an idea is always

for the universe

it is not at you, neither shall it become yours it becomes an ocean

there is no trace of my name neither yours there is not a hint of any title ownership is strange, it cannot be understood in this realm

what love is there is not just for you
it is not just you it comes, it touches, it changes everyone
everything

do not claim it as exclusively yours, it isn't

RIC S. BASTASA
Universal...(Revised)

a droplet of rain when it hits your head is no longer a droplet of rain

it becomes an idea and an idea is always
for the universe

it is not you, neither shall it become yours
it becomes an ocean

there is no trace of my name neither yours
there is not a hint of any title
ownership is strange, it cannot be understood
in this realm

what love is there is not just for you
it is not just you
it comes, it touches, it changes
everyone
everything

do not claim it as exclusively yours,
it isn't

RIC S. BASTASA
University Woes Circa 80

of university schedules subject loads, the rush to the room, the rainy exits,
the crams for the finals, horrors of the night recitations, it was more of a nightmare the professors only talk to themselves, there was no eye contact possible the people there are indifferent the grouping rests only on their own class, i was isolated
lonely and drunk
to my own poetry and the quest for the best literature

they keep rushing back at me these university woes perhaps i need another round of lying down with freud and jung.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unless We Become Children Again

no one dies
from the viewpoint of our
eyes
as children

everyone is alive and too remember when his papa died
he only sees him
sleeping

surprised why his mama is crying
why clothes have to be black why there is nothing but sobbing
and patting of shoulders and arranging flowers and saying a very lengthy prayer

bored and feeling so strange

he leaves the wake goes outside and looks for his friends
and then they busy themselves with their games and laughter

RIC S. BASTASA
Unlike All Of You....

we keep
the big difference within us we two

we are destined to just pass by

we are conditioned to leave
nothing

not even our footstep no name to be known

unlike you and the rest you leave a trace
you have grown a tree and you leave it towering in the place where you
once lived

all your names are carved on the bark
we cannot find ours
some of your names are listed in stone
you shall be remembered in every land

we do not condemn ourselves on this
we do not blame even the gods we are designed simply to be that

air, space, or dusts we are invisible
when we are gone
no one remembers
they may want to trace our beginnings our end it simply cannot be done

fate seals us our identities our histories forever blocked.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unlike Marlon.....

how young could marlon be how bold and daring
to take with him a girl
from that far flung Serongan

ah, love is blind and unreasonable
takes with it
nothing but this whisper
these usual
sweet-nothings of the ears

on early nights
two heartbeats
on the grass beside the hoppers

i admire his courage and will
for in my youth
i never fought
as i, like hamlet took no action but
doubt.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unlike Them

unlike them
all they need to write are only a few to become the shining stars of the heavens the greatest of them does not even have to say any word to become the sun
the brightest planet shines on the midnight sky even without a hush

you must learn as early as now that they have inherited their thrones from the gods and goddesses
those that do not work and earn their merit through hard work and sacrifices they do not have to burn their candles on both ends for their lights are inside them like living fireflies in automation innate and essential for their own natural existences they do not have to show off to be heavenly and glorious for effortlessly they are victorious but no regrets for we are the ants and the pebbles are on our side in the middle of the thick grass above the sand dunes we look up and we wonder we thirst and we wait for the drops of rain we are empty and we breathe the air at night to be full we are small and insignificant yet we are what we are no promises

in the simplicity of our dreams in the fatigue of our work in the salt of our sweat we earn this essence we are what we are in the smallness of our hidden worlds the gods are sleeping the goddesses are dancing we watch them and we are pleased we all worship and adore them that is glory enough for all of us

RIC S. BASTASA
Unlikely, Unbecoming

envious of the dog
the buffalo begins to behave like one when the master comes it waggles its legs and dances like a puppy the master is angry

'this is unbecoming of you! '

the master about this is not happy and whips the buffalo away

RIC S. BASTASA
Unloved

i always tell myself i have to love
something else
the one that no one
loves
but everyone somehow is loved by someone and so look at what is happening
to me
forever looking for someone
unloved
and there is always
no one
there for me

RIC S. BASTASA
Unlucky In Love

i dread thinking about the way i rush home confessing
how i miss you,

only to find out
that you confess the same
to another.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unmoved

i wish i am an object unmoved by uneven
unequal forces,
i wish i stay as cold
as ice
i wish the night keeps
the darkness
the moon still full
i wish that we be together
a little longer that when we part i shall be unmoved by
sorrow
and that loneliness
this uneven force
within unequal to my state
my heart now cold as ice
i wish there is no sun no light
no warmth to melt these feelings away
i wish time to freeze
when you are inside my arms

RIC S. BASTASA
Unmoved........

the best art
of the self is its being a self

the icon of
numbness, the memories of lost longings, the stone under sun and rain remaining always as it is

unmoved....

RIC S. BASTASA
Unnecessary

we go exploring the Malindang mountain they were speaking about cobras and black widow spiders
we walk and cross rivers and climb cliffs

we only met
white doves.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unnecessary Complication

they were taking so much time
discussing the egg
that i have already fried and eaten for breakfast

got to go find another egg
for tomorrow

i pass by them still on their heated debate

which came first the egg or
the chicken?

RIC S. BASTASA
Unobstructed...

one thing is fine
thoughts will always be thoughts as boys will always be boys naughty and so innocent, one thing is finer with me my thoughts have that fingers of light writing its commands on some tablets of stone a la Moses

whew!

don't care much, whatever it is, it comes, it comes, unobstructed by style words keep on walking, sounds of wailing, or screams of joy, it does not really matter thunder sounds, upon the mountains lightning strikes upon my mind i am awed, i am saying, life is so interesting so beautiful so unconsumed, am i.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unpoetic

got to the usual walk
today
seen the stone and landmarks of this place
had my time looking at the trees and
the clouds
it is a bright and warm day
and they all have nothing to say to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unpolluted (Samal Island)

i stand on the boat's pulpit

at its tip
i watch its keel slice the bluish water

beneath it the school of clown
fish

and the deep green
seaweeds
huge ivory
clams
and tree-like corals

RIC S. BASTASA
you think you know me every inch every color since you have read every poem i have written you equate what i am with what i have written and your equation goes through and through the lines of logic like a telephone pole connecting two islands every sigh is learned from every syllable of my lines every yawn is discerned from every sleepy letter that you meet and see

are there no strangers there that you meet? did you not care to ask for his name?
are there no oceans there?
if there are, there must be some oceanfloors some sinks sinking some whales occupying so much space for your kind understanding and you may find yourself hard of breathing, like a diver whose oxygen tank is leaking. You don't die with me. You don't like my sickness. You don't like to get this infection beyond my own solitude.

you unravel a poem you discover that i have become more covered. A voice tells me, i am not my poems, i am more than them. I am not just a syllable, a word, a line.

I am more than what you have tried to swallow inside your mouth.

i am blood and i am flowing.
you dip your finger once and taste a dropp of my blood and then in a second, i am no longer there. I am a flowing blood and what you have are stains, yes, only stains turning into scars.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unreachable Star

i am tired of you
unreachable star
my hands are numb
my fingers surrender

i am tired of dreaming
you
unreachable star
you are always very far

tonight i am telling you
i quit

there will be a place
so quiet

and there i will bury
everything

to include you
my
unreachable star.

RIC S. BASTASA
'And only now when his head was grey he had fallen properly, really in love -
for the first time in his life'

- from Anton Chekov's The Lady With The Dog

i look at my hair now and they are grey
and then i ask myself if i really love her i like to be true now

i have always been distant from every human being even from her from the very first time when my heart was broken

RIC S. BASTASA
Unrequited Love (As Usual)  For Meggie...

she could have kissed him hard as a lover
all night it is him that she thinks of all days of her life she entertained the hope that he would take her away from her loneliness
she could have done more than what is necessary to be with him
she had offered her body bared her soul
she will die for him and will give up everything

and so on that moment her lips landed on his but his lips are so cold like rain
so dry like sands in the desert exactly the opposite of what she is she is life
and he is death

another stone
where her seed of love sadly landed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unrequited Love Of An Old Man

the sun shines on the hills spreading on the plains and into the vastness of my seas this body my earth this mind my space and sky this love confined to death befriend.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unrequited Love, Lovelessness, Broken Heart, Hopelessness

there is no wound that you can see by all means you will see no visible injury in this place the people that you meet smile at you

and they will say

' he's doing well and taking more fortunes and luck and prosperity' but there is a pain that only your heart feels that which their eyes cannot see that which their hands cannot feel that which their ears never hear

there is this pain
without an open wound

there is no blood dripping but there is pain throbbing there is no bruise

no inflammation
but there is this pus aplenty boiling inside but without a possible exit

there is this voice hidden inside you
screaming

there is this threat of a sudden eruption
at any moment

there is someone inside you praying that now it must perish degenerate and then altogether die and disappear forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Unrequited Love: A Metaphor

early that morning
the sun shines spreading
itself
warmly upon an island
in the middle of
nowhere
the water is dark and deep and so cold
and you shall see black birds flying away
until they are all gone

RIC S. BASTASA
Unrequited....

not everything that shines is a fluorescent bulb there is also an incandescent heart that we point into when we get so mad because we are rejected by the one we love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unrequited: Eve To Adam

she gave him an apple and he took the bite

he did not give her anything back. Except guilt.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are days when i ask, how come my arms are empty still?

despite your hugs
despite those whole nights with you beside me

sometimes i ask
how come the bed is not that warm
anymore?

an empty glass has become more like an empty earthen jar which sometimes becomes one empty room which now has turned into an empty world
and empty universe

the stairs that i have taken have dissolved in air and what confronts me is a space of stairs

these are questions still unresolved

and sometimes i come to silly conclusions
that perhaps these are but realities themselves empty houses do exist like these empty arms like this empty glass

and always for a reason or perhaps for no reason at all?
Unromantic Maybe

the teats
and tongue need not be romantic but it is something that the hands
and fingers
always remember when love breaks
the nerves
cope up with touch
without names
easing
the mind the heart teasing
each vein
with something
to make us
forget

RIC S. BASTASA
Unruly Concoctions

oh yes the
unruly concoctions

of greed and avarice are here again

feasting all
the seasons

the feeding of what is not

the wild sweetness
pours in every glass of unthinking

and so many shall
die

slapped by the ill wind

stabbed by the knives of disaster

the earth sympathizes
with

the herbs and fruits of its bosom

ready for the harvesting

to bring back life
again
to erase what misery
we have brought upon ourselves with so much regretting

RIC S. BASTASA
Unsa Kahay Imong Ikasulti Bahin Kanako?

unsa kahay imong ikasulti bahin kanako
kon masayan mo nga ako nakaangay sa kamatayon sa uban unsa kaha ang imong hukom bahin kanako?

kon masayan mo nga ako miingon nga 'igo nila' samtang gibalita na usab ang laing mga numero nga gipatay didto sa Tondo, ug sa uban pang mga lugar diin gibalita ang pagkatag sa mga adik ug druga, sa mga tulisan ug mga kawatan, unsa kahay imong ikasulti bahin kanako?

kon mahibal-an nimo nga ako dakog pagdumot sa mga politiko nga hagbay rang nangawat sa kaban sa atong kalibotan, ug sa mga gamhanan nga midaog-daog ug nangilad sa katawhan, unya sud sa akong kasingkasing gusto nako nga unta gipangpatay na lang kini silang tanan, unsa kaha ang imong ihingalan kanako?

ikaw, oo, ikaw

nga hugot nga miingon nga bisan kanus-a, ug bisan asa, wala gayod gihatag ni Bathala sa atong mga kamot ang pagkutlo sa kinabuhi bisan kon kini mao ang kinabuhi sa nagkutlo usab sa kinabuhi sa imong minahal?

sayon ingnon nga ang pagpanimalos dili alang kanato, apan, sulayi lang, kon dili ba usab ikaw sama kanako nga sa dihang milantaw ka sa TV unya gipusil ang giila ug gibantog nga 'killer', unya samtang nanihapon, miundang kag ingkit sa fried chicken, aron mobungat nga 'da! igo na niya! gaba na na, gituaw na gayod sa mga kalag! mayra! '

dayon nimog tungab sa imong bugnaw kaayong coke unya imo nang gikalimtan nga ikaw usa sa mga maayong mitubag sa akong law exam kabahin anang pangutana kon unsay ipasabot sa 'due process'.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unsaon Ba Paghinuktok?

Molingkod ka
Sa usa ka silya
Nga tapad sa usa Ka bongbong
O haligi nga lig-on

Idap-ig mo ang
Imong ulo diin ang
Imong mga buhok
Walay sudlay

Misamot ka kulong
Kay wala kay
Kaligo og kagahapon Gipalid kini sa
Hangin daplin
Sa baybayon diin
Ikaw naglakaw
Nga nag-inusara

Iliraw liraw nimo ang Imong mga mata Hangtod mohunong
Kini dapit sa imong Agtang nga morag
Dunay gidudahan
Nga daotang
Mahitabo sa imong Likod

Apan moabot na
Ang pagsugod
Sa paghinuktok
Diin ang baba
Matulog kay
Ang imong utok
Magsugod na
Ug panaw
Paingon sa usa
Ka layo nga
Dapit kadtong
Dili na nila Maabot sa
Ilang kabalaka

Hunong kadyot.
Ang kadyot
Mahimong dugay

Mamati ka
Sa usa ka
Classical nga
Musika
Dayon imong
Pahinayan
Ang kakusgon
Sa mga nota
Sa piano
Ni Mozart

Modagan ang
Panahon nga
Morag hinay
Nga huyop sa
Hangin

Hangtod ikaw
Mahikatulog
Og mawala
Diha sa sulod
Sa imong
Mabulukon
Nga mga damgo

Ambot og Makahinumdom
Ka pa ba.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unseen

something's wrong with mother always cleaning the house and father complains for she does nothing but sweep and scrub and dust and wipe and rub, the floors are shiny and father does not like it he may slide and the children too and each may hurt the body, but mother cannot be stopped and we complain like what father does, but mother does not really mind, for she has become so hardheaded because father slaps her and we make her deaf with our grumblings until then when mother died and father cried and we felt we had all our lives wasted, but there was one in the family who smiled someone who thought that mother simply did what she liked best clean the dirt, mop the floors, get all the spider's cobwebs someone sees the beauty of mother, she's doing her chores still but now unseen

RIC S. BASTASA
some things need not be spoken they serve no purpose

no use, like peripheries of a used clothing

anger for instance
not just any kind of anger but anger for love that was never there in bed, in the first place, when what you offer is only your body your mind goes somewhere in one corner of your self, like a ball of thread

a blue ball of thread rolling on the floor and stopping beside one of the feet of the lonely table

you try to pull the thread endlessly wanting to find the end of this
misery,

there is no end to the bad colors of your dream, there is no light in this darkness

when the morning comes you tell yourself, this is another day another awakening

you go outside and look at the garden and around the fence carefully surfing each pathway you pretend again to like the flowers that bloom for the sun you pretend some more that you are sad of its wilting

at noon
you stop on a shade under a tree and then you begin to think and tell a story to yourself....

once upon a time, there lived a princess far away in a castle on the clouds....

RIC S. BASTASA
there are letters where some stains still stick, like some fading drops of water color on a very clear sheet of perfumed paper you have read them not just once but over and over

for years and years

you still cry. You blame your mother whose genes are sentimental about some broken hearts

you check the trunk again and open a bundle of papers sensing those perfumed ones a dry petal of a rose black bold strokes of a pen, some words that you still want to read:

i will love you forever.

you are taken back to the time when you were a smiling lover beside her

along a boulevard holding hands and talking about sweet nothings

you hear the sound of a boat leaving

and you see some lights flickering dissolving far away
from you
on a
black horizon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unta Karon Na

giisa nako ang akong
duha ka bukton
gitagbo nako ang
duha ka kamot
sa akong alimpulo

duha ka alimpulo
didto gitagkos nako
ang akong mga tudlo

ang akong duha ka
ilok morag duha ka mata sa akong kiliran

sama sa duha ka buta gisulayan ug guyod
ang usa paingon sa
laing lugar samtang

ang dughan nagpunsisok nagsiging antog sa
iyang mga pangandoy

'unta karon na, karon na, samtang wala pa
kaayo mawala ang
imong gamayng paglaum'

ang pag-ampo usahay kontra gusto
hatag-dili, sulti-tak-om hawa-balik.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unthinkable

when you feel that there is a subsumed
trouble, when you have in mind a certain doubt, like doubting
me and my existence,
like you have only
questions for all
the answers.
when you think that the world will stop
revolving,
please try to rest a while, these things are unthinkable.

RIC S. BASTASA
Until Another Published Poem

i like waiting for another day and look forward for another night, sitting, just sitting, and staring at a certain blank wall waiting for another
shadow lost in the coming of a light
from the moon and then another shadow and another and another i look at myself in the mirror of my words and i embrace myself in the tightness of my solitude.

RIC S. BASTASA
Until I Am Yours

until i am yours
My God
I shall not
rest in peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Until I Find You Back

i am attuned to silence. get used to sadness.
learned to take a walk alone. no one is here.
and no one will be there to meet me at the edge of this longing. i get used to other people leaving.
amused sometimes at your coming.
i also celebrate with some things that stay. but i am always prepared to face the sorrows of departures. i leave too without looking back at the door. i also fear turning my body into salt. i too have some regrets.
and wishes, and i too learned the need to hope.
but this time, without you i am giving up everything in me. until i find you back, i will be lost.
until i see you, these eyes shall be blind.
this is our picture.

RIC S. BASTASA
Until I Touch A Peony

i agree
life is dull, except,

until, i touch
your peony

RIC S. BASTASA
Until The Silence Reigns

and so it happens
the clock strikes seven

you dream about curtains catching flames
the house screams
and you discover you are but a wall of this structure

you look at the clock
on your side
it is seven

but seven what?
you get up from bed
and proceed to the CR wash your face feeling like a wall still you rub the soap
and feel your cheek
you slap it

you feel like a wall and the curtains continue to burn themselves the house scream at its loud voice you are still this wall and you do not really care to ash from ash

and to ash you shall return there is no hurry no fright no panic let death come with grace the wall is flat and inanimate let the curtains burn let the house scream until the silence of the ash reigns and so i just learned that you learned the trick albeit after so many years of crying and kicking and running on the road till you reach a dead-end, ah, yes, it arrived when you have nowhere to go.

hope came when everything was hopeless.

and so you are a magician now. a dream come true. but i agree you are much better, more potent than poison.

you take black rabbits from your splitting hair.
and rabbits turn to money.

people clap their hands and the earthquake came.
there was silence but brief. Earthquake is gone.
the shaking did not live that long enough to be minded by the great minds.

your eye sockets turn into irises.
believe me i could not even believe it how did you do it?

and your feet have become gondolas in venice.
and you got all the money. Boatloads of them.

the audience clap some more. Fame reverberating on the walls. The grandfather's clock almost broke its hands.

and time is forgotten. The hours lose themselves in awe and ecstasy. There are no children on the halls only beguiled women with their lonely husbands. only miserly elderly statesmen with their secrets.

i want to end this magical show. And here i can outwit you.
I end it myself. I end myself. And so everything is gone.
Did they not tell you that this is not your home?
That everything here is not real. That what is real is out there always waiting for us to change, to shed off our clothes, our skins to throw away all our bones?

what is real is not mystical. No swindling for now. No deception.
Now is just the two of us out of the hall. The audience all dead.

Hand scatter on the road blown by the wind like litters of tetrapacks, and hamburger wrappers, and banana peelings.

this is the place and it is not here yet. Meanwhile, our cars broke their engines. We walk we keep on walking until we can feel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Until What I Am Is Just You.

it is that feeling which guides the mouth
where to put its tongue and let it rest there it is the same feeling which makes this world stop for a while and learn what love is it is this feeling which makes me shed off myself of my body, my hands, my mind, my soul, until what i am is just you.

RIC S. BASTASA
you submit yourself to the judgment of the gods

they look at your work and they dislike it and you agree and since then you think you are not that good, the gods say so there is something which you are blind of and which they deny from you if you have gone to the top of the mountain and confer with the wind and the stars you could have heard the truth: you are more than the gods, and they do not want you to know it you are in this body, it bleeds, you are in this mind, it is limited beyond all this is you, inside the body inside the mind, until you are set free....

RIC S. BASTASA
Until You Run Away From Me ...

i must have been a tiger and yet i did not know it until you
hinted that i have sharper claws
that i roared
in your silence that i look so hungry
and you
are the innocent prey
i have not really known it
well until you decided to run away from
me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Until Your Favorite Cat Comes

It's what happens after the party which haunts the most.

the left-overs litter on the table
the plates are like faces of people looking at you saying 'what now? what's next?'

you will be keeping memories of those people who leave you because they have their own homes
away from yours

the table will be empty again
the chairs too and the veranda will be very silent

you go out of the room and lean on the railings of the stairs
you look at the heavens
to find out how distant are the stars how beautiful are those which you cannot touch

until your favorite cat comes
and rubs her head under your hands

RIC S. BASTASA
animus

it is what is inside that makes us move the intent
that either makes us guilty or innocent the love we feel or the hate we bear that either makes us an animal or a man a woman or a bitch
a bug or that bed
grass or rock
heaven or hell

it is what grows and grows inside the mind what dwells in the heart that make us human it is what we take inside which is foul

that spoils us

guilt or love

RIC S. BASTASA
nothing more about euphemism can hide the truth that you are not with us do not try to misspell
our intentions
so they may become popular to those who by our standards are the great morons of our society no need to tell that you are not one of us we are finally leaving

we come with nothing
we bring nothing

our journey is far and the place has no name

RIC S. BASTASA
to abandonment
i am already at ease
these happen all the time
and it has no effect
on my blood anymore

these blood that keeps on running without an arrival
these blood that pours when i have no more tears to show you

RIC S. BASTASA
untitled 12

mere touch it passes like a stranger nothing interesting on a hot day

the tongue twists
asking for water
the teeth grits
asking for more

tonight what shall i be?
a wolf? you will fear me i could be the moon
that embraces all of you

i can be the grass
where you sleep and dream a touch from your body makes me a tree
a sky, a world, a universe

i become a meteor living through an infinite space

RIC S. BASTASA
Untitled 13

instant coffee for you hot and
sweet,

an offering for a very hot day

RIC S. BASTASA
sometimes i find comfort in my silence i am listening and then i pretend i am listening and then i continue pretending until then that the talker sees that i am already showing that i am no longer listening that i am no longer interested in whatever is said that words sometimes have no use to ease the pain that we have that we have inherited from the leaves of our family tree from all of them down to the last and true source of our sorrow when Adam gave the apple because he says Eve asked him to do it because Eve was ordered by the Snake because they were all innocent and dumb.

sometimes i look at a space where there are no more trees, no sky, no sun sometimes nothingness becomes the real thing: everything.

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a mountain of words an ocean of words a continent of words

there is a rain of words a flood of words
a river of words and true to their being words ty they also disintegrate as syllables on the other hand some form the clauses conditions and terms some make sentences and paragraphs a world of words full of words i am not a word and i am buried in a mountain of words a sea of words i drown a continent of words i am condemned to walk all the days of my life too may words my ears do not listen anymore. my eyes do not like to read anymore.

i like something not having to do with words.
what about a touch? what about a picture?
what about a kiss?

why don't people just make love without saying a word?
let us start touching the hearts of people to avoid this war of words that lead us to our own perdition.

RIC S. BASTASA
i know what is inside me
it is beautiful
it is more beautiful if i have you in my arms
but this can never be i have my own world
you have yours too
we are distance doubled by our beliefs
you may lie to me
but only for a while
and then the truth comes and you must leave me and then i will understand it but i will be in so much pain and then i will be dead then you laugh and take everything from me
whatever i have
must have been given

RIC S. BASTASA
i am in no position to put you in pedestal
though i love you i love myself more and if by chance i may put you there i know the consequence you will love me
and then someone will die.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is within my power
to change my shape
and be what pleasure is there to give me but i cannot, i won't.
the shape you see
when we first met,
shall be the same
when i will finally leave you. It was not pleasure that was the reason.
It was also something beyond shapes
In fact, the shape
does not matter anymore.
It is temporary.

RIC S. BASTASA
i think a little bit
what is in you that i love what is in me that you cannot love logic tells me

you are never worthy of my love you are not the kind and quality that i am looking for i detest this unexplainable feeling if i think some more i vomit with what i see and see carefully

crazy heart illogical self every moment i long for you every time i see you i become lost thinking about you i cherish your face
i desire your touch
i want to fuse with your body i imagine the warmth and the throbbing heart singing in bliss

my mind says i am crazy but this heart says i am right with you i become a bird with swift wings i can fly to the highest skies with you i can be complete there is no word fit for this this is a river flowing without a mind of its own and yet it has song it has life

it has love.

RIC S. BASTASA
She was very strange, and beautiful, as the violet mist upon the hills before night falls when the hoot owl calls and the cricket trills and the envapored moon hangs low and full.

She was very strange, in a pleasant way, as the hummingbird
flies madly still...
so I drank my fill
of her every word.
What she knew of love, she demurred to say.

She was meant to leave, as the wind must blow as the sun must set,
as the rain must fall.
Though she gave me all,
I had nothing left.
Long I smiled, bereft, in her receding glow.

RIC S. BASTASA
i envy you
you do not have to write anything to create meaning to your life

i envy you
you enjoy life without thinking much you love and you are loved in return

i envy you
for you belong to someone you never belong to me

here i am
moving in circles
nauseated.

RIC S. BASTASA
the first time mama bought me a jockey the first trip to cagayan de oro city the first plane ride to manila the first kiss

first bed

first love
the first broken heart

as i sit empty handed beside my window the first time in my life i begin to smile thinking about all these things the first time.

RIC S. BASTASA
been quite a time
i stayed inside of myself probing what i am, and then the time comes for change i must go out of myself and find who i am, i must answer the questions of my heart without the help of my mind letting go what i feel, and not telling, just like puffing smoke to the air, alone, without you, not saying anything, to the sun it is like sitting on the side of the road where all others stand and wait, and you ask me, 'what are you doing? ' and i tell you, 'Nothing! ', and then you go your way as i stay merely looking, loafing, nothing to do.

RIC S. BASTASA
Untitled 23

i stab
the fried banana
with a fork

pieces eaten
with joy in my heart

i stir coffee with cream hot water inside the cup of white porcelain i hear the ringing of the door bell

and i do not mind
who is it what is it

i expect no one
this early morning

as i begin to piece together broken glasses of memories i dare love no one and i dare no one to love me there is an island of coffee with creams inside the cup of porcelain no one stirs it

except myself

i feed myself piece by piece with a fried banana stiffened with bread crumbs deep fried and well cooked self, selfish upon itself on a Maunday Thursday the silence creeps like soft feet of a white butterfly on my arms the windows are open the air is free to go inside and play and be wary about its own molecules

the door is closed no one is allowed to get in at this hour of my reflection

a day as mirror
a self as shadow cast upon a self upon a self there is no language from the body

this time

only fools, only fools, rising above themselves saving life on some memoirs a biography of another bigot begotten by this ghoul.

RIC S. BASTASA
outside the window
this early morning
blue clouds hover
on the green hill
like the curly hair
of a little boy

on the guava tree
a twig without leaves a bird sings
with blue feathers
the kingfisher
below it a pool
of rippled waters
a fish is seducing
its black beak

RIC S. BASTASA
morning wakes us up
with the gusts of the winds from its whispers,

loneliness creeps again inside our bones
we quiver to this we like to harvest reasons the grains of wisdom are ripe we take the chaff and let them go

we are here with the purity of what is left and on the table now my love we share this grace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Untitled 26

flower petals
hands
trying to reach
out
for the clouds
the sun
meeting at the glimmer flickering
like dragonfly
wings
forgetting how
to fly.

RIC S. BASTASA
to understand how this world works where the stars are kept how this earth intervenes on the affairs of the sun and the moon why the frog sings when it rains why the geese are noisy on their v-shaped migration,

to me, is plain, crazy, we are here not to understand at all we are given gifts to accept we are here to wonder and appreciate why worry? enjoy what you see taste what's so beautiful and delicious on the platter
on the table
we indulge in conversation we toast a drink to this beautiful universe we are amazed by the stars and the heavens
we are caressed by the sun and the moon what more do we have to argue about? such a waste of such a short time span i like to spend it some more bathing in the pond with the swans.

RIC S. BASTASA
i have to be honest now despite the first lie
that after i have slept with you something in me becomes real: i am real, i am alive
i am whistling at midnight

when you wake up and look at me and kiss my lips again i know what it feels the world becomes real too:
this bed, this blanket,
this window and the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Life, friends, is boring. We must not say so.
After all, the sky flashes, the great sea yearns, we ourselves flash and yearn, and moreover, my mother told me as a boy
'Ever to confess you're bored means you have no

Inner Resources.'

I conclude now I have no inner resources, because I am heavy bored.
Peoples bore me,
literature bores me, especially great literature, Sandro bores me, with his plights & gripes as bad as Achilles,

who loves people and valiant art, which bores me.
And the tranquil hills, & gin, look like a drag and somehow a dog has taken itself & its tail considerably away into the mountains or sea or sky, leaving behind: me, wag.

RIC S. BASTASA
Untitled 4

last night shall be the last kiss
we made love
and we were like inside that Shakespearean play the midsummer's night too elusive
and...

we were acting love like it is true i sense it when you close your eyes and shut yourself inside that darkness it was another man's face inside your mind and your heart uttered his name i left earlier this morning and you knew it

i will not come back anymore and i knew it you are like a bird freed now from your own cage.

RIC S. BASTASA
Untitled 5

upon itself the thought reflects
upon a thought

like an image in a mirror my face looks upon itself and my hands touch
my hands

upon itself the self breathes and catches life
to itself

there is life and there is motion
there is this emptiness that looks upon a sky
down upon itself

like a cup still dreaming
of the rain

there is this air that moves
in space
like an infusion of breath upon your mouth

RIC S. BASTASA
now the questions are asking you what now? quo vadis?
where to? what for?
why?

yes, why above all.
the questions are asking you and you must answer with the very same questions to the questions you beg, and they beg too

the answer to the questions

but you have no answers really you have learned the art of wisdom
its own ways
its own manners of not answering with answers

who knows? no one knows?
oh, ahh, i must start from where wisdom
was born

gulf i am and i know nothing....

RIC S. BASTASA
nothing is planned
words to say just come with ease there is no purpose everything becomes light and even if something true and hurting is spoken no bad feelings come since trust prevails that trust that the friend intends nothing but the good the better things ahead for both of them

RIC S. BASTASA
to abandonment
i am already at ease
these happen all the time
and it has no effect
on my blood anymore

these blood that keeps on
running
without an arrival
these blood that pours
when i have no more tears
to show you

RIC S. BASTASA
something is heavy
i cannot lift it myself on such a tense situation as this when everything seems to be pointing at you
with all disfavor

your sigh
heave it yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Untitled One

early morning
it will be the same sound of cocks
crowing,

harbingers of a new day

up on the tree
their only guide whether to take the jump
to the ground is the
sun,

she is safe in sleep as i take the usual journey
again
with all the cocks
crowing

the trees have black leaves roads and fences are bold strokes of the Chinese brush from a painter in Vietnam
i remember
his feet are cut

one wonders if we can be whole
again
when the fragile glasses of our arms are all broken

early mornings when the hens are silent

when the ref murmur
a nameless song

when i sound like an empty gong
love emaciated
like a malnourished African child

one exhibits the boredom of his words like one malling without anything in mind to buy
nothing specific except the will to kill time that does not serve any use

at the pasta room where the tea people are not around on one table the two lesbians are drinking beer while the two queers on the other table near the rest room are exchanging some pleasantries of notes
they are not singing but giggling

a man that they call as dark and handsome passes by
it is strange because he is not wearing anything his face is covered with black cloth as though he is bound for the gallows

there is yet no food on my table the waitress is busy biting her nails the mother beside a kid is slapping herself it is strange here and i put some money on the table and leave

i need some air to breathe this world is suffocating.

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive Unto Life....

life knows always beginnings

diapers and sucklings no-neck monsters he gripes life knows where to mark its head-start again surging like the first wave of heat from the morning sun

ten thousand light years away a new bud unfolds a leaf glistens

hear the first cry of dawn that mother earth cradles with its grass teeming zest colorful awe

RIC S. BASTASA
Unto Sickness....

unto sickness
cheers
unto death sometimes life makes the cheers
to death!

know what is next,
of course,

redemption, that is our only hope to the next
eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unto That Sea Of Fear....

when i was a child
walking along with Papa holding to his big
hands
i felt the fear of the sea

it is so wide and so vast as we sit upon a stone
i hear the sea breathing the sea breeze humming

i see a big tummy inflate and deflate upon its blue body it has a wide mouth always ready to swallow us
both

RIC S. BASTASA
When i arrive i see you and there is this silent grief which i cannot tell you it will be too much for words to shape and assume thoughts that i think must wear only the white veils of holiness

i embrace you like any day telling you how 'tight' can speak for itself how actions can speak separately from the usual letters and yet so clearly and straight like your hair underneath my hand

RIC S. BASTASA
Untrammelled

i try to evade the shore
i want to fly away and never stop flying but i end up upon a branch, gazing on the valleys and the plains and the houses grouping like frogs the wind is singing
i end up listening

i try to evade the things that i like doing those that spoil my bread and butter days the way i try to hone my claws and sharpen my beak but i always end up doing what i do not like doing how can i end this obsession-compulsion thing? how often have i asked that question and i always end up with a wrong answer enough of these, bickering inside me, this internal debate that has leashed me unleash the binds, i eat that stone, choke myself

and then i fly

wingless,
a wind in the air,
crossing the spheres
unto that untrammeled horizon

RIC S. BASTASA
Unwilling Witness

i have seen a black bird high on the leafless tree and i hear a shot once twice thrice
and i see the face of the boy and he runs away he takes away the black bird that falls dead on the pebbled ground

and i follow him
erasing every trace of his footprint

RIC S. BASTASA
Unya Ang Libat  Sipat Sa Iyang Kaanyag.....

dili mo na
paluparon ang mga alibangbang

dili kini tabanog nga imong idagandagan

ang mga buyog dili mo
did-an sa pagpamaak

ang mga kanding dili na kanding kon walay
sungay

kataw-anan ang mga kabaw kon walay ikog

dili mo mabato ang hangin sama sa dili mo malud-an ang bulan

kadtong miingon nimo nga mamukot tag bitoon
nagsulti sa iyang mga tinood nga bakak, kadtong tiguwang nga gihigugma sa batan-ong babaye baga ug

bulsa, unya kadtong dakog abaga nga lalaking taas ug bungot walay sapi, kadtong bata nga walay tingog-tingog makahadlok ang babayeng ganahan sa pusil pusil og kote, pinangga ni tatay ang punoan sa balimbing karaan na kaayo, daghang mga politiko ang naapsan niini. Sayop ang imong panglantaw tungod kay bungi ka, unya ang libat sipat sa iyang kaanyag.

RIC S. BASTASA
Unya Gitulisok Mo Ang Salog.

sa dihang mipakpak
ang tiki sa kisame
sa dihang nagdungan
mog panahalog sa
salog gikan sa higdaanan papkabuntag,

gibasolan sa tiki ang
pagpakpak unya gitulisok mo
ang salog.

RIC S. BASTASA
Up In Baguio

at the Mirador on top of the hill in Baguio there we all lived for a retreat of thirty days in silence and prayer

at 6 p.m. before dinner i sit calmly beside a glass window overlooking the plains below the pine trees and trails winding are all gone now covered by the fog

as though i am now
a resident of the clouds i hear nothing but the sounds of gongs
of the natives played to please their gods

that was in 1982

when Alan got so hysterical that the doctor had to inject him to silence him when Louie stepped out and run at midnight under the rain crying like a child when i started to write the verses of my life because i have forgotten how to cry how to run away how to be hysterical when the fog has then become a secret friend in those thirty days of silence and discovery

RIC S. BASTASA
Up In The Air....

in the sky
another night plane
takes me
slashing through passing by some
stars
there is the full sphere moon

the rest are sleeping my window is open

a silent world
and i am just passing by

RIC S. BASTASA
Up In The Middle And Down Under

As it is in the sky it shall be too on earth and it shall be too underneath.

The analogy is in the roots of trees
and your hair-tips
and follicles.

It shall be in the fungus of our existence. It shall be in the nerves of
mankind.

Heaven, Man, and Earth. Planes and cars and submarines.

RIC S. BASTASA
Up In Those Mountains Somewhere In Bulawan mark this place

you are tiny
here

your problems
tinier.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Up There If You Mind Are The Stars

in the dark
shines the moon

dark is not just dark as the moon shines do you hate this darkness? see the moon

see the lights of the city from this top of the hill the dark is not dark after all a firefly is here

up there if you mind are the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
Up There The Little Gods Are Speaking

Up there i worship little gods dressed in their golden clothes shining like little suns and exuding little sparks of divinities we here must bow and listen.

disregarding contempt i open my ears to hear, my eyes to see i hear the sound of the barbars, whispers of power that i honestly cannot understand.I do not feel the warmth of their tiny lights.

My feet are tired kneeling.

I have to take a walk and ponder Whether i still deserve to be human sane and unfettered by the mandates of old divine codes so inapplicable to my present state of affairs my despair, my imperfectibility

RIC S. BASTASA
Up There, Up There

we feign happiness
sometimes because we long for that moment when we were sad and yet
so fulfilled,

we made enemies and then we befriend them again because we cannot stand the pains of being alone

we have mood swings leaving and comings soon become more like each other and soon love and hate do not make any difference loneliness and sadness all in one face of a woman that we sleep with every night it is a circle and we do not know where to end and begin we search for pleasure and catch each moan with another moan but at what level of satisfaction?

repeated, always repeated and what do you feel? it is this numbness not happiness, not sadness not hate not love not hope not despair up there, up there perhaps, the mind begins to scream

RIC S. BASTASA
Up There....

Life and I

we were holding hands together

we were having fun
and playing under the sun people think that i like to have more years with life,

but i understand it more on a shorter scale

and life offers her hand so we can walk some more stroll and roll and play the ball

but i told Life,
i have had enough of you and you are making me hostage here, in this place not meant for me, and so i refused Life and embraced what beautiful truths that Death has yet unspoken to me

Death and I,

There is no worry,
Let them bury,

Happy is it to die,
Bluish sky.
Upheavel Of The Heart

the lighter
softer things occupy their own places
the veil of orange silk above the black long hair concealing
the face where the softest of all lips
hide
the air occupies all
the space
of this empty heart
always longing for what i love
years ago,
years back and yet
cannot be touched not even in those tender hands of my own dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon  A Beautiful Journey

This is the river and we are on the same boat heeding towards Kalipay.

To each bank, old tall trees, the home of birds migrating.

The mangroves are thick on golden water.

The moon above us, and we are speechless.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Grey Day

on a grey day
the trees are still i thought their leaves
died
when the world stands
still when the air feels like frozen
when we do not know if we have sinned
if we have failed when we do not think
anymore
what to do with our lives for the next moment
since
we are happy anyway doing nothing at all.

on a grey day
when the sun promises to come when the rain pours instead when we are cold inside our homes
when we do not plan
to move

when we simply look at each other contented with what we are since there is nothing sought
nothing wanted
nothing demanded

on that grey day when we know we will end and so what we do
is just to wait.
Upon A Bed Of Rock

got a bedrock for my being not the usual softness of the pillow that mothers usually give to their sons
it is hard on my head it can smash if i meet it headway and so i am as careful as you not to break the rules of engagement
the ethics of conduct the code of life
this is the rock on my head above it the rope
and your hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Chair Not Reserved For Me to sit in a chair not reserved for me is disgrace

at the utmost
to poetry,

in truth
the house on the clouds and winds and seas
a life dedicated to the flitting moon
does not have a chair
neither a feet nor root
of hair...

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Day Of Reckoning

it is always i

who cleans the table from morsels who throws away the trash of what is unconsumed from the kettle

it is always i

who wipes the spilled milk on the floor who takes all the shit on the sink who kills all the bedbugs on the pillow

it is always i

and on the day of reckoning the table and chairs will be smooth and glossy the windows look to the other side without blinking the door shall be mute forever the hinges and frames all numb on the last slamming.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Dead Tree

this morning
i check upon
a dead tree

there are no leaves
what i see
are birds looking like
leaves

the tree is still
dead
and then the twigs are all empty when all the
birds

fly away

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Distance Of 18,000 Miles....

at last i have arrived her let me put a mark let me kiss myself

let me clap for myself let me rest for a while what place is this? just the wind and the range of mountains a road that will never end a mirage out there and this rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Happy Mind

a bare life
who wants a desert? a desert is a bare land a metaphor for a bare life: sands, sands, sands beyond imagination a mirage, summers, all heat in there you dream of oasis, palm trees, birds, wind, sea, you wish for grass, the greenest grass in your mind a bare life you say, an equation of emptiness, a bowl of air transparent all wind, nothing about drops of rain, it is sad, this is all about a bare life

you say,

but one learns to live in this barrenness at night when the sands are gone in the silence of the world there is a cold wind singing to the stars in the sky
to the moon
that sleeps on the dunes shadows flying
hovering somewhere
upon a happy mind

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Harsh Environment

how can words be as soft as flour
to make a dough
of bread that is hard
enough
to break your teeth?

for how long shall the sifting
be done
on such a very fine mess soft rain on the rocks silk scarf on the white slender neck of a woman

waiting for her man to pick her up along a dark alley
towards the city of hope and dreams

i remember i once wrote about a red rose growing upon a crack on the wall on such a rugged environment
and yet
this summer
blooms

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Realization For Having Been So Dumb For All Those Years time pierces what thick wooden illusions lie there it is like a metallic drill that goes right to the nincompoop heart there is a hole

a tiny one, where blood begins to drip like tears the pain is unbearable but it will only be for the first time drifting upon your innocence soon the lessons are learned the eyes open like the sun on a bright morning where lights act like pins piercing upon a numbing skin one evening when the rain is gone when the world is as silent as the feet of the cat you mind makes a conclusion: how dumb was i? how unreasonable have i become all those years when i entertained a wound? how unjust was i to myself and to the rest of my kin? how chronic were my lies cancer of my heart on love that takes pride and romance on being unrequited?

night gifted you with the wisdom of its horrible silence those insomniac hours have become your true friends
the following morning
a white bird lands upon your shoulder tamed and knowing
what to do

back to work,
sanity regained
what a shame!

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Rock By The Sea

another body
sits upon another body on ecstasy

the sea rocks
upon the laps of the sandy shore little waves of glories

the skies watch with envy the sun ascends
upon a joy multiplied

love, oh love,
on such a glorious morning a kiss worshiping upon a kiss penetrating love's pleasures
upon such blissful depths

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Serious Matter

draw perforations upon a plastic sheet which you touch with your finger and you like the manner by which each shall burst you like the sound and it pleases
your mind
this is a serious matter, this explosion in some ways
also misunderstood as taboo, as something that only the mouth of your bathroom
can tell,
for instance what happens in bed what was sucked then like one vacuum cleaner though there is no sign of dust or dirt but only some kind of a flirt and skirt on the floor, it is getting complicated far away from that promised simplicity that there should only be two things to
be done,
entering the door and then switching off the lights.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Song Of Maria Tanase

the time for fame is over, and if we start owning everything we have denied written over here spread like linen on fields of gray sand, what have i got? what have you got to be ashamed of, there is nothing probable, after all, we have nothing to lose, some things i need, something i must decide to forget,

Nothing. probably, NOTHING,

I HAVE nothing to be afraid of finally,
for i am fine,
into the restlessness of my anonymity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Tower Of Red Bricks

The way that poem hypnotizes you is as simple as having parallel lines drawn one upon the other repeatedly until you get tired about the eternal repetitions which numbs your mind into a surrender of jejune, as though what is happening is nothing nothing nothing nothing but a blur in a line of events marring your capacity to imagine disrobing whatever butterfly or flower or vine that hovers, that blooms that clings upon a tower of red bricks....

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon A Yellowed Page....

what i need is only a drop
i do not need that rain what i need is just an atom
so i have to discard your molecule
i need what i cannot see
what i cannot touch
what i cannot conceive
for at this stage of my loneliness
what i need is only to be blasted with
feelings
after which i shall savor
the silence
sweet as age
upon a yellowed page.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon An Empathy...

upon your sorrow
this glass of silence breaks its shatters fall upon the floor of my peace contaminated by sharp pieces
my feet tiptoe upon those empty spaces avoiding steps that hurt like pins and nails

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Being Numb

at the end
one sees what matters

nothing really matters
one finally says yes
to everything

whatever comes without question one embraces as part of its existence

whatever is taken one nods
and admits that it is always rightly taken

at the end
you arrive at a dead
end

it is destiny
it is always that fate that tells you you are here and you have arrived
always at the right hour there are no more questions

and so
as a matter of consequence there too are no more answers it is empty as light and space it is an erasure of everything that is written

at the end
one really can see nothing at all nothing matters
nothing taken nothing given

at the end you smile what a wasted lifetime!

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Gazing At The Cut Sunflowers Of Vincent Van Gogh

upon seeing the cut sunflowers of vincent van gogh i cannot but think about the tragic moment when he cut his ear, when blood oozed when at the end, finally he took his life away, this thing happens when one knows much about

the life of another
this familiarity that breeds contempt, and so gazing again at the painting of vincent, i start with real sunflowers in my mind, the one that mother planted in her garden when she was alive, i think of the sun and the sunshine touching my face i think about warmth and life and oozing verve the vivacity of all things around my little world, the field of sunflowers and the bees and the butterflies and birds

i pretend i have not read about the life of vincent i pretend i have not heard about the stories of mother i just gaze again at the cut sunflowers. just that. now there is joy in my heart. The suicide story does not exist in the bold yellow petals, on those three huge sunflowers look at them again, they are the symbols of our smiles.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Hearing That A Lawyer Dies Of Tongue Cancer

i sent my sympathies and notes of condolences some flowers and a big wreath for the death of a lawyer
suffering from cancer
of the tongue

the delivery boy who carries it to the place where the dead body lies tells the other delivery boy carrying the flowers his tongue deserves it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Her Graduation...

Upon her graduation from law school i see that picture her husband beside her and the (adopted) child wrapped in her arms time mends everything like a grafted branch of a tree the leaves grew from buds

and soon
the flowers bloom giving its sweet scent to the air for everyone to smell

the force of life knows always where to go what to do what to fill up and when

no one notices anyhow the smiles cover what once was very lacking....

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Knowing The Death Of A Friend

long lost friends time's way of letting us know that it is in-charge and can make us forget and then remember
the way old friends were
and when we finally find the entrance to a reminiscing
we in sadness remember some as our dearly beloved
on the other side
of this world.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Learning The Death Of A Dedicated Algebra Teacher

the obituary reads that mr. cruz my algebra teacher in college died the other day
i am saddened
and my mind travels back in time when he taught us how to find the x's in relation to the given y's that a value assigned to some givens can lead me to find an unknown
with the simple way
of finding the right
connection

it is all in the mind
and soon you will find the solution
to a given problem
he once lectured it

bedridden for years
he always lived a very simple life (poverty
the poor professor thriving on a meager income from the university supporting his children to earn a college degree)

and now that he died my classmate who becomes a practitioner of medicine and earning her big bucks for her living says 'i have pity for him' she is correct, but from far i am saying too my prayers for him that his soul may rest in peace as he was restless once with the odd numbers mostly they are not even.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Leaving Arvisu House

the last message of Tony was this: you have finally seen the light we who remain here are still groping in darkness it is hard to understand what Tony really meant by that years passed, 15 years more Tony became a Jesuit Priest then we met in Zamboanga and we talked we avoided this thing about light, we have nothing to say about it, he said 'You are fat'

i have nothing to say much i hid the light inside my fists

Tony is correct in this world where we live, it is a big circle and he hints about something, it is light there is no visible end and there is no visible beginning we only inhabit we fail always to explain

RIC S. BASTASA
When I leave here, I leave without regret, I do not come from here and I have nothing in mind that suggests that this is the place I am meant to be, you know that, and so I go, and when I go, I wed possibilities which are never in my mind, I alliterate, I swallow my pride, I have fluent lungs, I listen, I move fast, I slow down, I exhale air, and take back land, I belong to the untied, maybe always less, but I am prepared, I fall on quicksands, and I am still.

I may come later. No one saves me anyhow. Except my own self.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Our Common Grounds We Shall Speak What We Already Know....

you who have not learned to fly but cannot fall as you are fire treading its steps upon a narrow wall towards the ceiling sky, you whose wings of dawn are broken by the waking of the light you shall teach me how to live again how to furnish these ends with tendrils at the tips of death at the falling of the last leaf upon our common grounds we shall speak what we already know....

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Reading Kazu's Tanka

it's like i plunge myself into a pond

it is raining and so cold but i decide to swim anyway there is something beautiful hiding behind the cold and

trembling

the rain is heavy and does not stop

kazu's tanka is warm and comforting

deep from his heart glowing like diamond in the mud sorrow feeds beauty and beauty never gets fat

Time knows where the heart must rest

Kazu shall soon find it Sorrow in winter

looks forward always to Spring.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Reading The Poems Of Lesbia

de attempt to say what harsh feeling was there was well said on those lines that float like leaves on the river very usual
nothing sophisticated there is that twirl that would have made me dizzy for a while but the heart that knows pain cannot fall on the malady of nausea there were many empty spaces i just watch not having the duty to fill them with my thoughts for mine are in packets and always lacking in content and style
i move around the parks and winding ways of Lesbia weird but not saying anything impressed but there is that lingering desire to move out
somewhere
black birds without islands bridges that fall
boats without anchor a love that has to be spelled still correctly
as you all look at me with anticipated fury this incapacity to raise my thumb and say everything is alright what business do i have writing this poem somehow the lines that throw up the feet that runs away from them all i have this world in my fingertips and it is mine and mine alone small and tight

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Receiving The Wedding Invitation

i once told her marrying the one you love is not just a matter of luck. she has to accept it is not always beauty that wins the updated ones get the best news in town and those who have taken the first move gets the is getting older, and not as beautiful as the rest who already married and sired their man with many children.

the early bird gets the worm.
the beautiful woman loses to the flirt and the daring. it is not just the wisdom, it is also the scheme of things the way she arranges her hair, puts her best foot forward, lying sometimes about age and experience, or whatever, she must know better than i who was also caught in this web of deception where love suffers, where a woman sometimes has to take a man because it is getting darker not the kiss but the child, that which time secures her the days of her wrath the time of her
sunset,

when the flowers finally wilt because the roots have never spread their tips farther now he has to lose because she stoops for no reason at all but to conquer

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon The Acceptance Of My Chains upon the unconditional acceptance of the chains wrapping my whole body upon the acknowledgment that i am bound by you from the first time i saw you till the last day that i lay there hopeless in my prison cell

upon my wish that i have to end this sadness
somewhere else
in the place not known by you i, my love, has declared that i am free.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon The Blades

upon the blades of rice plants the light of the sun lands completing the silence of the red dragonfly

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon The Great Monument Of Dr. Jose Rizal upon his great monument

early this morning
some tiny needles of rain
are falling

lush grasses below his feet untrimmed around him are the mango trees unpruned

the white paint is looking old motorcabs pass by some women with black umbrellas rush along the sidewalks the rain falls heavily now each rushing to take their chosen shades and then stop for a while nobody cares what he really

said
nobody reads what he had written

he is past.

RIC S. BASTASA
it is about to rain
but i insist on staying on the ground i lay my head on a rock look at the trees leaves spreading
everything is green these are what i miss from the ground looking up seeing only leaves and twigs and barks and trunks

and then it rains
i have no time to run
i decide to stay
and look at the same view now wet and mournful.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon The Islands Of Compromises

look at that that is the island of compromises see its shape?
it is irregular
land in there
you can find everything in perfect co-existence if you look at the map there are so many corrections
all tolerated
and there are so many hands that draw the lines to reflect its rugged topography
of large rocks, layers of disagreements covered by the sands of flexibility storms come tsunamis pay their visits earthquakes make the mountains dance
alcoholic drinks are served people smoke
and make merry

at first you find it hard to understand how can this be?
but stop it
ride on and feast somewhere

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon The Shadows Against The Wall.

like you
i do not have enough time to read a long poem.
at first glance
it gives you the feeling that you are climbing a mountain.
you gasp for air
your feet tremble.

a person who doubts has the tendency to write a long explanation until he grasps the essence and pauses and says everything only in one line.

a few words can say what we want to point out. you give time for all the tired people to take their rest.
sometimes
we opt for not saying anything
and yet
be still understood

one time i put my hand against the light and make the shadow speak through a dance.

we understand then how happiness can be put inside our hearts

upon the shadows against the wall.

succinct self.
prostate in silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon The Silence Of The Pond

there is no futility in the silence reigning upon the pond
for the lilies too know how to please those silenced and those who choose to be silent in here the tiny tadpoles dance with their cute tails
beneath the spreading leaves on beautiful choreography of instinct the clouds reflect their changing faces the lotus blooms
a dragonfly hovers upon a blade of grass and rests
its weary transparent wings

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon The Sofa Of Cleanliness

I've been to myself entered its deeper recesses
and there
i find someone whom i know is living in peace and so today let me write about a peaceful pond

no ripple disturbs it it reflects the face of the sky it is listening to the serene song of inner peace and so the bleeding stops like a journey which has found its home

is this heart resting upon the sofa
of cleanliness

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon The Wings Of The Sparrow

upon the wings of the sparrow
shall i be swift

upon the gentle coos of the dove shall i be tranquil upon the patience of the spider (despite you calling it a cliche) shall i always wait

for you....

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon This Promise....

we were in love.
we thought we are love.
or the world as we exclusive and strong.

one day love died.
we cried. we brought flowers.
we said prayers.
we buried love in that silent city.

we looked at each other trying to understand that love which died and which we buried.

you covered your mouth. i put on my sunglasses.
too much light is glaring.
and your tears had to be kept in that white cloth.

we left and arrived at home.
we sat on the the chair facing the sea.
then darkness came and we had dinner we were speechless for a while.

love was gone. It will not be coming back we buried it.

we realize, love is not us. it is different. Distinct. that after all tomorrow we can still move on without it. we did not marry and live with each other for it alone.

it is gone. and we are still here.
still strong without it.

upon this promise.
Upon Visiting A Dying Woman In The Hospital At Room 108

actually the barbecue is more than what it appears to be its scent of meat and the hotness of the spice and delicacy of the sauce
it is the front of something that is hidden there is something behind its shape and odor
i cannot speak to you about it so i offer you that pork barbecue
i know that hunger that does not want to be fed time fills that grief
that cannot be appeased

the barbecue is cold set aside in one of the corners of the table
grease is solidified
no one
not one from those who see the emaciated body of the dying woman
wants to take
the bite

someone does but eventually there is that obstruction in the throat
and so the tongue
expels that piece
of pork barbecue
again

what a waste!
yet we can never voice
this matter out

the eyes speak a lot but you know then they have no voices

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Writing This Poem

you see, everyone is asleep and the rain pours heavily on the tin roof of this old house the white dog lays with its four legs facing the ceiling feeling so contented
i closed the glass windows and let the brown curtains fall
on the floor
as i begin to write the words i am not thinking of anybody else is there someone still who is special to remember during a heavy rain on a night like this when i am already alone by
myself?
i still have a suspended answer to all these questions or perhaps they have no answers still for the past 30 years now with some white hairs and extended forehead i am at home with myself and no rain how heavy and how long can instill in me the fear of its monotonous sound my feet have roots and my hands have tendrils my head is a big sunflower and the void out there is such a beautiful greenfield on a limitless horizon this world is an open window this earth is a big boat and i am now the sailor expectant of islands and welcoming ports bustling cities diamond lights starry skies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Your Request

it is upon your persistent request that they all learned to speak to you
the floor of course keeps its deep voice
like the voice of the cave and the well
and the windows have mastered the songs of the soprano aided by the wind
the ceiling keeps the alto tickled by the spider and the lizards
but the door keeps itself mum treasures its silence
closed
with hinges that never budged that keeps the impossibility of this harmony as others sing that single door shows its protest
you kicked it once
on a Sunday.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upon Your Thoughts

upon itself the thought
reflects
upon a thought

like an image in a mirror
my face looks upon
itself and my hands touch
my hands

upon itself the self
breathes and catches life
to itself

there is life and there is motion
there is this emptiness
that looks upon a sky
down upon itself

like a cup still dreaming
of the rain

there is this air that moves
in space
like an infusion of breath
upon your mouth

RIC S. BASTASA
she stands outside the house leaning on the post of the gate which is painted white
it is raining

she is looking at the roots of the palm tree which she had just caused to be uprooted because she is weak and cannot even cut one of those which was planted here
many years back

she demands that all the roots be taken away not one root must be left so she can sleep well tonight i think i know what she wants to drive at the state of things now she is filled with hate and longs for the time that love again shall fill her up she is no longer the same her eyes are red but they are no longer crying.

RIC S. BASTASA
Upsurge

i walk down the stairs meeting the honorable mayor of this little town i imagine
i am the salmon upsurge the river against the tides and he is the grizzly bear i look the other way around evading a clash of angry eyes
somehow i am not afraid of claws

perhaps, i know who i am and i cannot give in to what he wants.

RIC S. BASTASA
Urinary Tract

You think of a poem
And you try to write it You doubt
How to start it
You wait
Until you feel like urinating You think this is just a dream or something else like you are lost or something You stand up
Go outside the door
You run somewhere else where no one sees you
And there
You empty what is full.

RIC S. BASTASA
you urinated
on the side of the road where the red rose grows

not a good site
you are such a man of bad taste

this morning the red rose blooms again
much better than before

as i see it it likes you and your filthy urine

not good to look at but it is real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Us

The river in you moves Taking the least resistance You shall be the water That seeks your own level In calm and still moments Let me fish
In your moments of rage
I shall be the rock
In the moments of your dryness I shall be the river bed nearby We shall be always here I shall be the bamboo grove And you shall be the waters of the creek Slowly passing, gently flowing by

RIC S. BASTASA
Us

what was said that was sad
if they turn into dust because we left them in that forgotten corner of the room
soon we shall discover as part of the furniture that once
we sit upon again
and we remember all of them not with sadness anymore but with courage
because we survived the turbulence of tears
the unceasing coldness in
the rain
the madness of mud
and we look at each other
again
we are still pure
and imbued still with the beauty of our age.

RIC S. BASTASA
Us And Our Dreams

we have enough firewood
to feed a fire
for our long night
together

now we must sleep and dream about firewood
still?

RIC S. BASTASA
Us To God

Who does not love
the Lord?

Who does not love
the beautiful sadness of a sunset in the boulevard?

The luscious strawberries that the tiny hands of the vines offer to your
solitude

The coolness of the clear river that soothes your naked body wrapped by the water facing the gentle sun with rays as fingers to your skin

Who does not see the Lord in all these?
We are but the smiling children of God who in awe and wonder shall praise Him in all the days of our lives

For who are we?
Ants crawling shamelessly under His feet biting the soles, his Heels?
Parasites to the goodness of the Host sucking every good blood and spitting the bile?
Flowers to crown His Hair Birds above Him singing songs for his Divine Ear?

RIC S. BASTASA
Us, In Our Own Visions Of Cowardice

what is in us that makes them fear
our visibility?

though we have flown
like hawks in their
skies

they seem not to want to see how we have taken the shape of their conquerors

we now like to be seen and be felt
and it will not be terrible as they really expect

on the other hand
we have remained hopeless in our
longings
we struggle to be freed from this invisibility we know the key to that door and it shall open if we will but we are the coward beasts of the rain we like to wade in water but we never dare

and so here we are in this again being heard but shall never be seen possibly forever

RIC S. BASTASA
Usa Ka Pula Nga Rosas Sa Kilid Sa Bungtod

nakita ko ikaw, bag-o nga mibuswak didto sa tiilan sa bungtod

buot nakong kutloon ko ikaw aron akong dalhon sa akong balay sulod sa bulsa dap-ig
sa akong dughan

apan sa imong katahom giwakli nako ang kamatayon ug gitanom akong kaugalingon sa imong kiliran

buot kong motubo
ug mobuswak usab sama kanimo bisan og ako nasayod nga kini mahitabo lamang su'd sa usa ka adlaw

RIC S. BASTASA
Use And Abuse....

when you are hopeless

when misery is inside all your bones you become so beautiful and humanity looks at you with so much pleasure so much lust and you give in

you give what is no longer pleasurable to you
for all of them

you are exhausted and dying they do not mind

they take pleasure in every chunk of your flesh your eyes dilate

when you die in the middle of that moment they call it your misfortune they have nothing to do with you or your pain

when all your bones fall to the ground when your lips crack like dried leaf they leave you they will hate the place and look for another.

RIC S. BASTASA
Use And Disuse

the one who wins the seat and wears the crown declares triumphantly that he is used as he uses

that is the
rule of the game
there is
the law of utilitarianism it works

he laughs at me
the loser
who shies away from the law of winning to be used and to use in order
to make another winner

RIC S. BASTASA
Use Your Mind, Activate Your Instincts

those that know how to please go up the ladder when they are there they too shall dance for the
sky
flatter the clouds
and even make lies to the sun and mislead the moon
with their
mastered smiles and rehearsed
conversations

they do nothing good actually they do not shine their own light they only borrow
the faces of those
that please gods

they have their own motives hidden agenda
to grab what power is their inside the moon

when they finally have it they shed off their masks their clothes
and fake skins
their tails and fangs become evident

and soon those who believe them shall become their slaves even eaten raw
in their hunger for power
you should have
done better,
respect his privacy,

it shows that he was more than willing to use
you too,

that early Monday morning you had coffee
and smoke,

and then he lets you
inside his room,

shows you his pair of pants on top of the cabinet with a note
that last night it
hanged on the wall, and he was looking for it and he found it
with you

and his cabinet lock
was broken
and forced open,
and some things scatter
on the floor
documents perhaps

and his diamond ring
and cellphone are gone, how late for you to know that he is going to use you as a witness to a robbery which actually never happened.

RIC S. BASTASA
Useless

the scissor trims taking only what is necessary for the design the excess becomes

useless, thrown away

and those which are meant to stay stay, and become a part of a new landscape flowers and leaves and stones in her own kind of tapestry and those who are thrown away shall keep the faith of next time nothing diminishes the importance later of what she deems as useless

that night
she thinks that something is missing
yes, the grass.

RIC S. BASTASA
pity, sympathy,
illwill, backbites,
fear, rage, anger,
envy,

need you utter them?
to the man drunk with his failures (or even success)

do not, they serve no purpose but to make pain more serious, intoxicating
seeping, penetrating pain
grief,
lamentations

just a tap,
a hug,
an embrace, a gentle gaze,
a shake of the hand,
or just sitting beside him in silence, , , , , , , , , , ,

RIC S. BASTASA
Using The Word 'Insert'

You read a book
and since there is this bee that hovers on your hair and for fear of any bite you stop for a while and insert a book mark on that page

you stand
go to the kitchen and drink you cold glass of water you just have inserted yourself in that spic and span kitchen mother's gift to your lonesome existence

you have a busy day you look at your calendar one event is missing
you insert
what you think is important and was inadvertently left out

you dress
you admire yourself
you go into the garage
and drive your car
in the city where the crowd lies traffic, pedestrians like mushrooms you insert yourself and be part of the bustle in the office you enter you meet a pile of folders and you insert your hands to begin what you are called for

and then back home it is dark and the lights on the streets begin to flicker you insert yourself in the darkness and mix with all those islands of light
back to your room this time it will be more lonely feeling like dumb because this time and like the other old times you insert with no one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Usual

when they saw me they closed the door and then you came late and they saw you
and you did not have to knock
and they opened the door and you gave them
flowers.

what shall tempt
them with my these big stones
in my hands?

RIC S. BASTASA
Usual Meetings...

meeting is euphoric tracing roots and looking at the leaves and marveling at the fruits then what happens next are the expectations of what one can do
where the scrutiny begins there will be demands
unsatisfied
prayers remain not answered

that serves as a sad ending
and there will be no more surprises

plainly, too human yes all too human and that is what exactly happened between us long before we even started deep within the soul says it is over.

RIC S. BASTASA
Usual Questions 2

de old places of the heart have grown the trees of guilt, its roots spread in my bones
the fungus of nerves are consuming my flesh sad consequences now for which i am left without choice but take them all
slowly
i vomit them and you see how i suffer

must you be happy by now?

how cruel too are those vines of your revenge
choking the visions of your eyes
green with anger
your tongues on fire too consuming your hair and body

who wins? the ashes on my feet?

RIC S. BASTASA
Utilitarian Point Of View as the gray hen cackles looking for a place to lay her eggs the red rooster looks for another white hen to shuffle on the ground, we who see this does not condemn, nay we never think of morality or codes of ethical conduct, as the rooster is just doing the work that nature and man have assigned to it no hen ever complains that the rooster has copulated with the other six hens around the poultry in the backyard and in the garden neither shall we reprimand the rooster for being so restless and cocky and prolific or as we call it engages in promiscuous sex all that we are thinking on that moment are the eggs that each hen can lay, our minds looking forward to every morning's breakfast, when we shall choose, the usual delights: either scrambled or sunny side up or perhaps a hard-boiled egg for our personal consumption.

RIC S. BASTASA
Utilitarians

You mislead me into believing that I am invited to this Wedding party, I do not demand that i be furnished a copy of the wedding invitation
With my name on it, trusting you that the invitation is true, So when I handed my gift to the bride and the groom their Eyes ask for my name and well, thank me for the gift

When the truth is you are only interested for the free Ride that I have given for all three of you, liars!

the bride and groom do not even know my name

RIC S. BASTASA
Utility And Futility

a man in need somewhere in poverty can always sell his body & even his soul if necessary only to live down to the basics of having to eat
a square meal

a lonely lady in opulence in the middle of his turbulence makes a sigh

of which the man in dire need hears and so he comes to her with both needing each other for complimentary reasons they sleep together

inside a room
there they keep on saying that they love each other

that is love in utility life in futility

RIC S. BASTASA
Utopia

laughing at the Establishment
not believing in any system sitting around
not moving keeping sanity
intact
on skepticism

RIC S. BASTASA
v-shaped vandal viagra
vanished

validated voltage

voyeur vanguished

v-shaped vanity

variegated
vent

RIC S. BASTASA
Vacant Space

this is the vacant space of my room, you may come this is the vacant hour you may barge and talk simply talk this is the vacant lot of my being you may build your home this is vacant

fill it with space, drag your hours here, start watering the roses in your garden beside your house

this is a vacant hole in my ear talk simply talk

i am always listening this is my vacant line, please fill in the missing word

RIC S. BASTASA
Vacation Galore

lying on a hammock
under a blue umbrella sky between two coconut trees sea breeze fanning my body each sweet grape luscious to my lips thinking of you i swallow each pulp

RIC S. BASTASA
Vacillation

for matters where indecision plays rook with time one resorts to vacillation, suspend what beliefs are, walk a mile, count sheep, spend a night in a boat alone, sleep in a hammock, ride a horse, bathe in the river, sun bathe on the cliff, sit on a Persian pillow chant, hush, and finally God forbids,
die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vacillation Galore

as usual
i am not doing what i am supposed to do, somehow, all these unnecessary things are filling me with what i do not crave for,

what i crave for i do not have anyway

and so the retaliation comes this way and that way where everything levels up to fair and equal unsatisfactions

what is the use of all these you cannot understand anything about my everything there is this thirst that does not ask for water there is this hunger that does not talk about food there is this home where there is nobody there is this love that hates me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vacillation In Writing A Poem About Happiness

he promises to write a poem about happiness and he will title it
'Tomorrow'

she whispers upon her ear 'Tomorrow never comes? '

what if?
can he?

RIC S. BASTASA
Vacillation, Sleep, Dreams...

when things get worse stop for a while and sleep there are times when dreams talk and give you directions like a mother
to her son
listen
decipher the scenes of mists observe the shadows
trace the source of light learn that the waters get through
here
because there is a way
an exit because there is an entrance

why hurry? delay because death sometimes comes too early...

RIC S. BASTASA
Vacillation....

we refuse to talk about it how many invitations are extended availability is negated the wound itself refuses the temptation of the cure everyone is silent on the incoming

chaos...

RIC S. BASTASA
Vacuoles....

sometimes you write
without thinking, whatever images come you paste, you copy, you post,

it happens, and you let it be,
this stream of consciousness, this
letting go,

the stars in the skies are writing
us a poem,
the universe is singing a song, and the earth keeps spinning memories, and the days are warm and bright and lovely.

the rivers of love keep flowing under our feet, and the oceans of understanding goes beyond the borders of our soul.
it is the exhaustion of love that moves

us away from all these trivialities.
we engulf each other: vacuole to vacuole.

RIC S. BASTASA
sometimes you write
without thinking, whatever images come
you paste, you copy, you post,

it happens, and you let it be,
this stream of consciousness, this
letting go,

the stars in the skies are writing
us a poem,
the universe is singing a song, and

the earth keeps spinning memories, and
the days are warm and bright and lovely.

the rivers of love keep flowing under
our feet, and the oceans of understanding

go beyond the borders of our soul.
it is the exhaustion of love that moves

us away from all these trivialities.
we engulf each other: vacuole to vacuole.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vagabond

i was too small then chinky-eyed
my hands still like buds of roses

i did not remember
thorns only leaves
and roots

the sky was as clear as cellophane
and the the ceiling
hangs high
on the roof

and i did not remember that the lizards
kissed the ground on that sad afternoon

i remember you
as the tower
your hands big bells
your feet like
pillars and your mouth like a boat
blowing like a horn for the final leaving

what i remember most was what you left us before you faded in the haze far away
on the path towards a dissolving horizon

you left only us.
Vaise Sentimentale

RED
petals from the blue
skies

o bright day
upon a rain of red roses

o bright day
bloody red on the plains into valleys
of the dead in hundreds

o bright day
gleaming in horror
of those
rampant shooting

each calls a name
violence upon violence
justice, religion,

o bright day of the few chosen men
strong, mighty
and so blind....

RIC S. BASTASA
it is easy to say that i do not know you, really, likewise much easier for you to say the same, in a party, where comparisons feast upon each other, where insults are hurled without so much minding, sometimes we feel humiliated, belittled like nitwits, how the world becomes too bloated before us where we are but pins, and even mothballs, or nails or some, though still feel like hammers and wrenches and steel balls, or even fire, but in a thorough scrutiny, in deeper thoughts, in our pondering moments as wannabe philosophers of our tiny times, honestly, we too are trapped inside this cave of our ignorances, long before we have entered this winding darkness, we, having not really known too well the mysteries of our lies and deceptions, our surviving skills, our kits of pretenses, our chameleon genes, flexible though not that intelligent to the highest degree of our humanity, adaptable, and always fitting it like some dado joints on that wooden existences at times, thus forgiving our selfishness at times, we say, i am sorry, i still have to shake hands with my self, need more time to know it, master it, restrain it, filter its words, wait for time, and learn what love really is.

the point is, we are better, much better now, left alone with our idiosyncrasies, our uniqueness, to each his own misery, to each his own joy.

perhaps, the right time comes, when the genuine sharing is felt, and having felt it, the intimacy begins.

RIC S. BASTASA
Valediction....

it was never me
there is never a part of me that was there you have misinterpreted the truth about those characters of the novel, the words in that poem the metaphors are outdated refer to another reality, the reality that i have carried upon my shoulders i am the horse, not that horseman, i am not the star, i am just the asteroid at the background i am the silence between your sighs, do not read my silence, you will find a word that cannot stand for me, i am not even that tail of that great meteor that comes to your life once in a century

it is not me that you see in those flowing words, they are those pieces of undecided driftwood that i pick from the great flood those dry falling leaves that land on my forehead from the great tree of life do you really have to find pieces of myself in those lines to make the write-up interesting to you?

i am so sorry
call me a liar, but that is the truth

there is truth in empathy there is truth in putting our feet in some other people's shoes that is what literature is all about read some more and be discouraged fathom and then be enlightened about the sufferings of others their miseries that soon shall provide you company when you sit upon a chair with a smoke in your left hand and a margarita (or black coffee) on your right upon an empty table

facing the sea
witnessing the beautiful fading on another sunset
in your life

do not wish that i shall be there oh, i have long been gone into another island do not attempt to find me i am not there anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
Valentine Bites

for entering the forbidden yard the woman with long hair gets her due from my dog named sam three deep bites on her long legs and here i am paying for her valentine bites

RIC S. BASTASA
a hand on the side
of my pants
a thumb that is still hesitant to go with the
pointing finger
there is a suspense
whether to get the gun and then squeeze the trigger
time is an element of waiting
the spur of the moment
makes the decision to kill or be killed
so when your ground
is right
stand it
pursue that instinct of self-preservation you reason may explain later
of course, with the help of your expensive lawyer.

RIC S. BASTASA
Valo Eguah: A Reversion

i am the wind
without a boat.

you are the boat what direction will you take?

with a wind like me would you care for another direction?

RIC S. BASTASA
Vamos A Bailar

a spanish guitar playing the flamenco

vamos a bailar
i cannot imagine

why are we still all sitting here?

RIC S. BASTASA
Vanishing Into A Vacuum...

you gather each hair
of time
pulling each lock
to the tongue of your fingers
savoring the delicacies of pleasures
possible on this earth
perhaps
the do not have a hint about what is happening around your
universe
that from a distance dims like the star dissolving
into space dust soon each planet
shall understand
why a star for sometime
had been restless for the face of vanishing
comes soon another vacuum is declared
another emptiness
back
upon itself
cupping no a drop
of time

RIC S. BASTASA
Vanity

let us urinate together let us see
which urine reaches the clouds mine reaches only

the mountain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vapid

Blah blah blah
that is what i hear about you, a bland taste of life,
kind of bromidic
attic,
tongue clichéd,
becoming a conventional cornball, what have we become but dull as dishwater,
feeling so dumb,
an everyday humdrum,
you feel for flat-footed,
an expression so hackneyed, ho hum
insipid insect,
more of mundane,
d- noplace,
an old hat of grandpa,
papa's pabulum,
plain pedestrian,
partly platitudinous,
a square-faced tribesman a check that has gone stale, a well cut stereotyped pattern, laughing stock,
stupid cupid,
tired, tripe, trite,
unimaginative,
watery eyes
wishy-washy panty.

ok, just go back to vapid.

RIC S. BASTASA
Variations Of A Structure

graphic that is the word there is a concrete structure a bill of materials a sketch of what must follow there is a salable syllable consistently uttered by the demanding market

poem is actually an architecture of beams and roofing sometimes you throw away stars
they have become
the most abused
cliche

there must be a variation
black bricks
silky white clouds
like shampoo conditioner pumpkin rooms
rat horses
they already had it
books and houses
shoes and brains
bed and bread surprise the mind

with what it thinks
do not really exist
and then we can claim that we are really alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Variations Of A Thought

when a standard is set when only the acceptable is accepted art dies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Variations Of The Word Cry

Wailing, keening, moaning, sobbing, bawling, whimpering, yowling, clamoring, vociferating Screaming, shouting,
The bellowing, the loud cry of a bull, a moose,
The roaring of a lion, that deep, hoarse tumultuous sound of the jungle That yelp, that bark of a dog tied to a tree under a heavy rain

The infant who cries itself to sleep in these times of insurgency.
The lamentation, the grief the suffering of widows whose husbands Die in the war
The scream of a painting now costing millions safe in the museum
The cries over spilt milk by a nagging wife to her henpecked husband The daughter who cries out when her favorite kitten dies The vendors who cry their wares at the flea market to fool you to buy what you do not need
The cry to arms for all oppressed people of the world, the slogan of the revolutions to come, the grievance of the all the people crying for redress The government that cries down, while we, the people cry out, while we cry havoc,
The government that cries out the promises, the dishonor of compromises, The church to cry on, the military general who cries wolf, the people the masses who will now cry out loud,

For the meantime
On the other hand
In the most private manner, you Ejaculate, while she gasps for breath, whimpering for your mercy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Veggie Poetry

steamed okra
round, red, shiny tomatoes violet onion, some white spring ones and hot chili
with black pepper
some olive oil
and rosemary herbs for flavoring a little salt
a little sugar
suit to your exquisite, exotic asian taste add some more other herbs and hot spices

mix them in a bowl
shed some tears
for summer salt
add some green lettuce and black olives
and pickles to taste

pick some then chew

do not swallow yet take your time

enjoy your veggie poetry do not take any meat or poultry

now take your time alone eat

RIC S. BASTASA
Veiled Woman

I understand fully
how you dislike light through your everyday veils

when we speak
i do not mention about sunrise for there will be tears the windows are always closed the doors open only when there is a need for air

i know how it is when someone you love dies taken away by too much light
without your permission.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vent

inflamed mound of flesh

burst out in the open

freeing pus

RIC S. BASTASA
Verbosities

too many words
taking the essence of the real thing.......like leaves of touch me not stay, satiate

silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vers Libres

at the park
i feed pigeons
and they gather around me
and then
having consumed all the grains they all fly away from me it is the flapping of wings the sounds of departures without so much

fuss

RIC S. BASTASA
Versions

1 it is just a matter
of the solid sodium reacting with the
chloride gas, just this chemical romance

and no one is to blame for this crystal salt, this sodium chloride

2
my goodness!
this is not just a chemical romance

this is a relationship this is a commitment!

3 no, this is just a matter without my heart
this is just a matter
of my body to your body, my flesh to your flesh

4 no, you must know
this is someone and another someone
someone's joy
someone's pain

this is about two hands holding on to love and to cherish
this is about love
and care and
knowing and living

5
don't be foolish
i never said
i love you

6
you don't have to
i am seeing it through the eyes of my heart, don't lie to me you love me too

7 i am leaving
i want to be free
i have other places to see

8 go, go where you want to be fly away fly away

i will wait
and when you come back
i want to hear you saying i love you too
i want to live with you i want to die with you

we are meant for each other 9 departure, footsteps,

lights fade, and then silence.

10 an open door.
darkness gets in.

a yellow moon appears above a lamplit window

a woman's shadow
a very quiet night

and then some stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vertebral

on a vertebral impingement a nerve learns to shout
the meaning of pain,
recurring, excruciating, penetrating every marrow of the bone, sometimes the whole arm becomes numb like a bored man assuming too much of the chaos and having learned it all assumes nothing, no responsibility, not looking for any cure, letting things as they are inviting, welcoming and accommodating, soon there will be no problem
the guests are here
these pains in the asses... silence is responsibility do not inform anyone let the pain be as casual as walking without any limping at the lobby of the hotel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Very Sartrean...

he had only one choice and he takes it and survives
at the end

he sowed more choices but eventually in order to live that simply he discarded the other choices

'sacrifices, cuts and trashes' he declares.

and then she who was born with all the fortunes and good genetic lineage is bombarded with a million or more choices as though she is a tiny boat thrown into the Pacific Ocean tossed by all the possibilities which she had no power to ignore

she sinks and drowns herself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vesame Mucho

there was more of us in the knowing that we had the wrong steps we laughed and it was here where the loving strengthens on for the next practice forward
to the best dance	onight

RIC S. BASTASA
Vic 1

THE boat is ready
you hold the paddle
and you step on it
and take the ride
there is this peace that the pond offers there is this solitude
of the heart
that speaks the silence
of the water
the boat wades with
you
then you let everything float away

beside the river bank
a tree grows
with lush leaves

you lay your head
on the side of the boat you close your eyes
and then dream

RIC S. BASTASA
Vic 10

And to our enemies
let lightning hit their boats let all thunders destroy their ears let there be holes in their hulls let there be fire on their sails and let their boats sink let the big waves drown
all of them

and then you pass by with wings on your feet laughing.

RIC S. BASTASA
IN the morning
she wakes up
kisses you on the lips caresses your chest
and then
goes back to sleep

nothing vicarious
it is real.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vic 3

There is this blue cloud floating in your head and your brows try to shake it off

and then it rains
and pillows get wet
the room is cold
and the floors crack

There is this sun glowing in your heart and light enters
in your eyes
the eyelids lose
the shape of shutters

There is this landscape in your mouth
with the contours
of a bay
impressing that big smile
for the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
OUTSIDE the house
the rain pours
heavily,

nothing disturbs
the settings on the table and on the veranda

fronting the window
is the tree filled with fruits

you gaze at it
you hear the loud pouring of the rain

inside
the setting is still perfect now you don't really care about how the placements affect you

you feel the slow movement of the red blood cells in your wrist the fingers relax
the heart rests upon the closed door
of the bone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vic 5

IT IS getting dark
and you do not switch on the light at the veranda of the second floor of this house

you lie on a couch and start speaking to the full moon it is the light of the moon that caresses you into a very sound sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
SOMETIMES i wonder
why i always take time watching the journey of a star

on the sea of black sky without the noise of its waves

silence has a way of contaminating me with its own silence too it heals the heart and lulls my soul

like a baby on the cradle

the wind sings
and the chimes join in faithful harmony

RIC S. BASTASA
ON TOP of the mountain
the fog serves as blanket
to the naked trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
AND THIS is what i can remember about Papa,

we go to the farm and harvest the lanzones fruits and put them on big kaings and bring them all
home

nothing is for sale
the family eats together thanking the Lord for the bounty then upon invitation the neighbors come and eat the fruits with us what God gives him

he also gives in return.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vicarious

you're off to Mindoro on a night flight from Davao to Manila

i am bound for Manila on an early morning flight for a conference in Faura

we're heading finally to a new direction in our lives to start this new year with a lot of missions

you go for the smile
i will try, but for the meantime i keep my mouth shut

i like you (i doubt if this is love, it is just a very sensitive issue) i may follow you and pursue you (till the end of my life, but when? and where?) the hands of morality grip me by the throat giving me the signals that it really means what it says

you know what i mean.
i still have fences to mend.

there will be a nice hello.
hot and sizzling barbecue.

the goodbye will be as cold as frozen meat
who knows, i will eat it raw.
Vicky's Valentine....

valentine's is more like
vicks vaporub...

rub me, make me
warm,
vaporize me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Victims Of The Search For Excellence..

the eyes are always the innocent victims of this search....

the minds are tunnels searching for more light...

the hands are the miners digging for nuggets

the fingers are the slave drivers....

the quest is always an anonymous mistress...

the finding is not a thing it is a manual for another journey...

the diary at the end is a blank page there is no word which says...END.

RIC S. BASTASA
Victoria, You Lose This Time

You lose this time Victoria And you hide yourself in a room Like a puppy frightened by some Firecrackers,

Is this your first time Losing what you wish
And love?

I see you shrink in the park
On thick black sunglasses Your fingers fidgety Beside your hips

You were walking fast Almost running
In steps rushing like Elevator stairs,
Away from everyone
Who knows you,

This must be your first time, Losing,
But you will soon recover, Tears will dry
And the trembling will soon be over,
You will calm down
On some anti-anxiety drugs,

Relax,
you will soon recover,
But there will be more
Losses to follow,

The thing is
We cannot avoid learning this art Of losing & recovering,

This is life, Victoria Welcome, and learn with me,
I will lead you and tell more stories About myself,
When I was your age
Of questioning and resistance Like a little child
So confused.

RIC S. BASTASA
Viene Sul Mar

it feels like hearing mother
sobbing
fearing that father must be gone

into the forest my mind like a black bird is probing
hoping to find something truthful
no matter how sad
what counts
is the arrival at what must be said sternly

into the sea, back to its arms
i have to be a whale again sending songs
to earth's unknown
edge...

RIC S. BASTASA
Viewing The New Day

as you begin to open the shutters letting light in letting them land on that soft white pillow that which comforted your doubts
last night

become interested on the sparrows that dance on the twigs of the tree fronting you lush green leaves a new nest, light of the sun caressing the barks dews diminishing in numbers on a time for surrender listen to the usual sounds of the day exaggerate, sensitize, imagine those that are not there but must satiate our sense of journey the excitement is here when finally the lover is gone for another absence when your heart finds your hands cressing your body again on this tender moment of another solitude.

RIC S. BASTASA
Viewing The World After A Calamity

when you step out the door
the rain stops

you walk avoiding the patches
of water

the trees are still in their
solitude

the wings are cautious even in the making of its whispers the skies are clear, white stainless

the sun shines moderately upon the cold pavement

you climb a mountain and sits on a rock

from the top you see how beautiful is this world still after a storm after a 6.9 quake if it ends as they predict surely you will always miss it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Views From Here....

the afternoon sun leaves its last light cast upon the dusty leaves of the mango tree the sea is calm and from a distance it hardly moves as though it has given all its waves away to the passing winds a red truck parks beside a cemented fence below it so much of gravel and unwanted fragments of rocks as i finish another work deciding upon the liberty of this man wrongfully accused of a crime which he denies as always as not having committed it i am pondering now how to see the truth beyond all these views.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vincent Van Gogh

when Vincent
cut off his ear and gave it to the prostitute
he was not at all selfish and stupid

he was kind enough to leave the other ear
attached

he's still one great artist....

RIC S. BASTASA
Vine

on a sunny day
the vine
on its tendrils carefully cling
on the trellis
like some fingers holding a prisoner in his jail

i look up
and i see some stars
i close my eyes
and you are always here

RIC S. BASTASA
A poem is considered vintage if it was made from 1919 towards the end of 1930.

However, there is debate on the cut-off of the vintage period. The British consider 1930 as the cut-off, while Americans prefer the year 1925, as defined by the Classic Poem Club of America.

There are people who think that the vintage period overlaps the classic period, while others consider the beginning of World War II as the cut-off date for the vintage period.

Most of the poems written during this period are more practical and convenient.

Metaphors such as radio and heating were introduced while the introduction of antifreeze has allowed water-cooled poems to be useful all year round.

A much more reliable four-wheel poem system using a foot pedal and hydraulically-actuated figure of speech were also introduced in this period. Fuel quatrain rating, which allowed comparison between sonnets, and the brief haiku, was among the innovations in this period as well.

RIC S. BASTASA
at this time
of uncertainty
when the head is bald when the pain cannot be pointed where when the locks of hair rests on weary pillows we begin to know what living is: it is today, not tomorrow not before this not long after that it is the word between my lips my air inside my mouth the breath in my nostrils it is the uneasiness in my fingers it is the closure of my eyelids
today viola
life is life, there is no other the promises fall out from their hearts
the warriors in us
step out from the chariots the wings on our feet become skins
and callous harshness
today viola
i embraced the day because there is no other actually.

RIC S. BASTASA
Violating The Tradition Of The Village

it is the custom of this village

we have to visit the
dead
console the bereaved and bring the flowers and offer the prayers

my wife complains there are five who are dead now but i do not really bother i ask her: when i go there shall they wake up and

live again?

RIC S. BASTASA
Violin

a voice
an incredible soaring ability incredible emotions.

a pet with a cuddly
and affectionate feeling she was a child

a partner in the music business
the storm
and red hot vanessa mae

RIC S. BASTASA
Violin In Tokyo

comes a blue butterfly in this garden
without leaves

neither buds
as they refuse to bloom into flowers of

May how come how daring shall this blue butterfly turn into a tail of a dragon turning itself into the passive tendrils of cadena de amor vines
along the rusty trellis to one of the fences of an old city where imagination turn fools into red dotted coy kois silenced in the smallness of

the pond

this city was bombed
and all the dead children and women
offered in the name
of peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
Virgen La Purissima

virgen la purisima
virgin most pure
a family icon brought from the rocky island of bohol to the promised land of mindanao by my great, great ancestors on a wooden sail facing the rough seas for nights and nights as they all ran away from the their oppressors who compelled them to make those big churches of rocks and lime
using their free labor
or face death,

or face the drowning death of the uncertain seas if luck did not side with them if faith they did not have they arrived on this island of mindanao and cleared the forest to build their farms

they married
and built their houses and farmed
and marked their territories that was a hundred years ago the family still lives the tradition alive

the children and grandchildren and greatgrandchildren had since multiplied like the sands of the sea and they all prayed and they still prayed with heads bowed, kneeling in silence, in song, in novenas, in dance, in merrymakings where food is shared where a new child's name is added to the list of this huge family tree where everyone has a name and a responsibility
for centuries
mother mary most pure
virgin most pure
virgin la purisima you have showered this family with intercession some blessings from God the protection from the rough seas the strength of the wooden sails which once sailed from Bohol on that dark night
and for more dark nights when there was no light seen ahead when there was no hope of finding land
it was you
most dear mother
mother pure
virgen la purisima
our Dear Mother Mary, Mother of God Who interceded for Light Who gave the direction For this clan to survive to find land and to find anchor of its restlessnes We are here again, and as always Praying for your guidance and protection.

RIC S. BASTASA
Virgin Flowers Of May

virgin flowers of May
late for the showers of April still dreaming of the white bouquets of June till the carols of December ring too early for buds of January but still on time for valentine's day

RIC S. BASTASA
Virile Male Image

holding his shovel
upside down
he pulls his pants
up without yet zippering in what is in there,

he is half naked
looking around where to bury next his sacred tool.

RIC S. BASTASA
Virtue

unsaid
but well done.

RIC S. BASTASA
Visiting Hiroshima

1> Peace Memorial Museum.

two buildings
the museum surveys the history of Hiroshima and the advent of the nuclear bomb. main focus August 6; the dropping of the bomb and its outcome in human suffering personally it upset me

aph for the A-Bomb Victims

Between the Museum and the A-Bomb Dome
an arched tomb
for those who died
because
initial blast
and then
of exposure to radiation

3. The Register

Below the arch is a stone chest holding a register
of these names,

there
are over 220,000

RIC S. BASTASA
Visiting Something Previous

you take a trip back to the place where meaning was once there. An empty room that you left.
Now someone lives there and he does not know your name, there will be a brief introduction of who you are and what you do for a living and he will ask why you have come back you say that you are just passing by you are looking for the word the spark in your heart somewhere on the study table or on the book shelf a poem, some little notes on the wall, there is nothing there anymore exempt the scent of the nearby comfort room beside your room that stink that made you leave it was that which made you pass by as you were telling the new tenant.

RIC S. BASTASA
Visiting The Wake Of My Teacher

today i visit the wake of a 98-year old retired school teacher

i watch her face inside the coffin she is very peaceful

i begin to remember when i was once her grade 3 pupil in that old Miputak Elementary School

she believed in me
and that is what made me today she made me believe in myself and that made her the best person in the world for me she will not die

she is living in my memory goodbye dear teacher you have done your job too well.

RIC S. BASTASA
Visitors

They visit you sometimes Emptiness’ entourage stares at you With faces of Blank walls and slimy snake hands

They bite
But you do not really die Though you feel a little numb Irritated

So you think of that as something Only scary,

Just like ennui slumping
On an old hunchback’s body Touching your face and squeezes You to some semblances of Pain,

But you are not Even scared a little bit, You learn as early as a Naughty school boy, that

These two and others more Visiting you, lots of other shapes And other weird forms Fire trees burning, and Sea breeze with spikes
And grenade fruits hanging Machine gun fences and Plum dusks and grey metallic Twilights & fire breathing dragons Spitting bullets,
Soon,

By the constancy of Their visits, they, after all
Are not that scary or damaging to you Any more, than you Scaring them with some of Your fits and Seizures

As always they come without Warning and they look at you With their broken shapes and Twisted faces, sometimes

Louder in their Inventions of noise
And psychedelic hysteric
And fanged

And horned Tailed and tasseled
You look at all of them so tired Turn

To another side of your bed Pull a blanket to your head Wiggle a little bit, and slump Your legs on a bigger pillow
With

Now, your back at them, You ultimately Don’t give a damn, you’re tired of These scary boring visitors Uninvited and rude
Then comes the time
Snubbing,
You become rude like them “Go away, leave me alone! ” you mumble

Sound sleep steps in Your room, the weird Visitors can harm no more,
And they leave, or if they stay So what
You are very tired and so used to all their bearings.

“Who scares? ”
nobody, anymore, after all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vivaldi Early Morning

vivaldi
i am telling you
that finally i am going
to New York to feel what sleepless nights are all about
in that city....

RIC S. BASTASA
Vivaldi On Two Mandolins

as it starts to rain on the greenfields
of this rural town
the frogs are busy dancing on the pond
without their tutus

seemingly the synchronized
swimmers are not yet ready

RIC S. BASTASA
Vivaldi, Concerto For Flute

Children playing on a green playground Mothers watching Closely watching
The faces of children Smiling

Cool air
Green leaves brown leaves yellow leaves Soft wind
Leaves falling down to the slow soft wind

Children running Chasing each other
They are playing

A mother feels the soft wind Cool air
And sees the trickles of leaves Blending green brown yellow

With sunshine as canvass Nature and human figures of mothers and children Blending
Amazing
What a beautiful painting has God In quick short brushes Effortlessly with perfect strokes did make

The frame is laughter of children.

I am taking the whole picture for home.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vivid Images

five brown wrinkled fingers coming out from an arm of age ten in all when in loneliness i lay down on a rock and count the years and months
and the toes are added and the tongue forms a word from my thorax
i
love
myself

that is the declaration of my being i stand and raise my arms to embrace the morning sun
i look down
and see a worm
singing
its loneliness too

the leaves are falling like my hair

the fingernails demand the cutting of extremes

the silence of the night sews my lips
seals my mouth

i remember mama
and i take an old picture where she is too young
and beautiful

things are always moving like an age like a helpless wrinkle what do i learn from this world:

nihilist, i leave everything as is
no explanations
just a signal that we are moving forward and there shall be stopping until the last breath is given

off.

RIC S. BASTASA
'Vivien, This Looks Like Something The Lord Made.'

genius
does not have the fence of color

doctorates
are not books
perfect sutures
are not
names

i cried a river when i first saw
it

how vivien hid from the palms
as bartender
as blalock
speaks about his success in his heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Vocal Chords.....

your eloquence
has not served its purpose

the forest fire is not stopping
waters did not spring from rocks

your mastery of the law has not saved those fated to die
has not inspired those who were ordered to continue living

you erudite speaker what word is surgical what sentence is livable? what have you to make a silent city?

we have enough of you soon we shall pass a law to abolish you
and make us free from the cudgels of your well chosen craft your filtered words
your vocal chords....

RIC S. BASTASA
Volcanic Silence

dr the fact is that no one reads you.
the persistent fact is that you are unstopable, you keep on writing still.
most of the hours
are written, not much is orally said. There are no friends anyway.
Even in the market
or at the bus station.
the silly silence seeps into your system.
the fact is that you are hardheaded. What do you get in return for all these writing?
the fact is you keep it to yourself, and like a rain you keep on pouring not knowing that soon you will be causing a flood and even a destruction for those who are not reading, or not listening
at all.

you are blind now to the
world
your eyes are looking within you.
everything is confined
and contained.
restraints are everywhere.

within the breasts of your women are migrating birds singing for themselves
only.

within your heart is the selfishness that you have learned.
a seed turning into a tree with roots
deep, deep into your lungs, your gut.

the fact is i am like you. And the fact is the world is getting to be like you.
looking within and becoming too heavy.
the fire within, and this
volcanic silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Volenti Non Fit Injuriae

did you not let me enter your door when i simply pass by looking for my destiny, did you not call my name when i was thinking of someone else that one so beautiful and yet did so much harm
to my heart
and then you kiss me when i was drunk with pain
promising to heal my wounds and then after so many years when i was awakened from such stupor i took the courage of telling you there was never a pint
of love
never, never, never and then you ran away and jumped into the raging river shall i be then be made responsible for such a true loveless locomotion?

RIC S. BASTASA
Voluptuous Magnificence

if only they have seen your loneliness when they have all gone to their respective settlements,
how you too settle for what your hand can hold and rub
alone,

in voluptuous magnificence letting out what you let go in such selfish sensualities

RIC S. BASTASA
at a certain point what happens is that i take too much of everything so i may savor this art of vomiting things

all things

without exception
love and hate and indifference, things that i embrace like i love all of them and things that finally bore the heart and spoil the soul

i give them all up and wish to go back to the start where i am full again by being empty-handed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Vomit Your Love

try learning to vomit
love
white foams coming out
from your mouth
some green
phlegm
excluded from your system and then you will know it is true love

when you decide
to eat them
all again

you swallow your pride you take in what you have taken out
perhaps you were reckless
perhaps
your were imprudent
on some indiscretions beyond your control

now you want to take in to be back
to where you think you were once happy and determined and settled and stable like a post a pillar

a tongue finally resting within the walls of your teeth within the strong confines of your mouth

in comfortable silence Wa Ka Nako Basola Sa Pagpangahulog Sa Akong Buhok

gibasol nako
ang sudlay sa pagpangahulog sa akong buhok basin sab ang kaisog sa shampoo o kaha ba ang kapalpakan sa conditioner

sunod ayaw nag palit anang baratohon, ha?

RIC S. BASTASA
Wacky

I am 52, reserved, refined, and serious.

i am more of a teddy bear in your cabinet

but when you said 'go wacky'

like the rest i jumped and stretched my arms

forgot the teddy bear in me and well, i was wacky and wants to be wacky for once. But tomorrow i want you to do the same

'shout at me, GO wacky! ! '

i guess at 52 i can still jump a hundred times

but how about you, Mr.70? Can you go wacky too? How about you Ms. Broken Heart

Ms. Forlorn, Mr. Insolvent
Mrs. Unpaid Credit Card

Mr. Failure, Ms. Cauldron
Mr and Mrs. Casserole
Do you like to go wacky too?

at any rate,...hmm
'what is wacky?'

RIC S. BASTASA
there are so many things that attract us when we are alone our skin begins to nibble we try not to be noticed, some taboos still exist things that we think can do more harm to our hair they had been falling like shreds of light on sunsets when we speak we do not really pay attention to words our eyes look beyond the garden fusing with a horizon that marks a line between the past and present sometimes i keep looking for the future like something that i do not really believe that it exists sexists, so many of them around us but we always miss its real definition, we grapple for what we think is reality you hint that it must not be something destructive as unwanted fire in the other side of the room other than the kitchen that it must be as smooth as the edge of a happy thought as constructive as a plane that is so sharp cutting some rough edges of the unwanted wood for the cabinet somehow i like to write in-order to mislead you guessing that this is the only thing that may give birth to an interest in life, to drive you away from a disaster of sleep, to make you skip the harsh trees along the road that draw mishaps people do love what they fail to understand equating it with mystery, with the selves that they want to delete not knowing that it cannot be, because it simply can't be.

a stone no matter how extraordinary at the end becomes the best sculpture carried by the soldiers of the emperor to become the centerpiece of the empress' garden.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wait

wait.
a word.
wait.
sorry.
gtg.

RIC S. BASTASA
you always tell me to wait a second because there is something that you forget and you want to remember it again
it is only when we talk
when you remember
it is only when we see each other
again
that you begin to forget
and when i am gone
you say
yes you remember and tell me
with a sense of cruelty that it is not you that it is not me but someone else someone so far away
hidden by the blanket of time something that you have yet to understand because in a second
as i wait
you again forget

we have become old
we are not perfect we are not eternal
do not forget
we are just human Wait For Years Before You Pass A Place Again

wait for years before you pass a place again

what used to be a seed has become a tree

the vacant place has grown too many houses

the children have married and hold the hands of their children too you remember now the years that pass like a dream

when you wake up
it is totally a strange place you look at your feet as ashes of memories

and you wish for now that everything be better forgotten the heart is full and it cannot carry something more love has become a burden families merely black and white pictures mirror faces fade, promises just air, and you hear again

the falling of sands, soft and too cruel.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting

I wait for the cogon door To lay your name on the floor

After a time you transform into a cloud wearing that crimson shroud you like to gleam Like my new dream

Regally dressed in my sleep
As I fathom words so deep

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting And Waiting Still.....

at the last minute
we are still what we are

we keep
on writing for free
and you read
us for free

it does not really matter
we always lose
anyway

what winning shall
we remember?
losers, losers
we are and will always be losers

not sore anyway,
be keep on losing and
dying

much as we welcome
death
the irony is,

it does not come
much as we expect its entertainment
the reverse is true, it is getting cheap

and illusory, and so we keep on writing losing, and
waiting.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting For Someone

you arrive too early on the tryst a room with a number that you do not tell to anyone thirty minutes
you have already brushed your teeth and taken a bath and sprayed musk oil perfume all over your body your heart beats desire and you pretend the love is here you turn off your cell phone you do not want to be disturbed on this hour of the day on this tryst

you hear something coming near your door you peep at the hole if fulfillment has come it is just this gray cat looking perhaps for its fish.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting For The Light

time is running wild and fast
my heart is beating like a drum of the natives

the sands are consuming
their own
grains

i do not know where is the
door

all windows are closed and it is very dark it is a night without stars it is a roof without a leak for rain time is jumping to another

side

light is coming and i have a hint where i must go
for now

i am in complete ignorance
about what happens next and this is the happiest part of my life uncertainty in the darkness of my night waiting for the light.

Waiting For The Madman

silence has been waiting for the madman to sleep.
it has been so disturbed, distressed
with so much noise
for nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting For The Metal Ride....

At a certain age, a certain point, one gives up what is important what was inherited
what was learned,

now everything is taken for granted, if they come, they must go if they arrive they must leave if something really important is being raised we simply nod, and if there is a disagreement we also shake our heads, i am telling you this the gateway to absurdity, the lounge of all honesty we sip tea, we sit cool, we look by the window we see metal wings, we wait for the final call, we show our boarding passes, without a word, we take our ride back to nowhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting For The Rain

dead grass
cracking face of the earth cinder stones
parched paths thatched roof of the house at the foot of the tired body of the hills dried creeks
rivers that run dry
wells without drops of water left hands in prayed angel without wings
all these chant in prayer
waiting for the first rain after a long drought of summer

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting For The Results

did the lump grown bigger?
what could be the cause of this?
what is next to do?
shall we just go home
and then do nothing,

these are the questions of another woman who is stricken with cancer

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting For The Right Time

up all night too
i wrote something too personal for you i could not find the best metaphor for it
and so i went literally
on the consonants of my grappling

the following morning
i look for beauty

there is none
and so i deleted it

there is no sense of the divine

there is only that mundane grasshopper

singing under the sun nothing about the sacrifices of the ants or the redeeming quality of the turtle

i am not impressed at all about what i am

i am waiting for the right time to find the reason why i must open and bloom

why i should not take the pain some more in the tightness of my bud.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting For The Time That I Have No More To Say

i am simply waiting for the time when i have nothing anymore to say and then i will just sit there in the corner looking at the sun that will no longer rise or set,
not really static,
it simply passes,
as though nothing happens.

and
when i have nothing more to say it simply means,
goodbye,
i have freed myself
at last,
from the bondage
of speech from the oppression
of words,
from the anxiety
of the syllable,
from the demands of certain
letters to finally form
a word,
from the
mandate of a blank slate searching for its own meaning
in whatever i speak.
and write

RIC S. BASTASA
Waiting.....And Waiting....

he writes with a heavy heart
and it is shown how his words are pulling him to the ground, like
ripe rice grains
pulling the stalk
towards the mud in the paddies.

from a distance
however he is a mole.
and farther away
he is dust, and as we walk farther, he is
nothing.

he still writes with
a heavy heart.
still honestly, hoping that someday one may go nearer, view him with pity and make him
die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waking Eyes

you cannot name
what does not exist out there you will never know what is inside: the storms that you cannot fully feel because there is no name yet still to call it the rage within that you write about but which none of them has ever seen you thrive on this solitary confinement of a soul which they read in every word you say but which they discuss with myriad interpretations they cut one head of your dragons another one grows but you still master all these to every pill that tames the wildness of your waking eyes.

Waking Up

waking up...
waking up for the music...

music, wake up, wake up. listen to the music waking up from a deep sleep.
sleep wake up.
listen.
music. wake up. up. up. up.
music, sleep.
waking up to the music lullaby, mother, it is still nighttime
in your life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waking Up At 3: 19 A.M.

hungry and thirsty
i am awakened
i switch on the light and look at my watch it is 3: 19 a.m and i am feeling the unholiness of the hour

hungry and thirsty
i look for food and water for how long shall i conceal the truth of my hunger and thirst?

it is not the water and the sandwich
it is my soul
hungry and thirsty for God

deep within i am moving
away
like a ship in the middle of a storm
yet not wanting an anchor not wanting an island even a shadow of the shore

for when will this hunger and thirst stop
i do not not really know
perhaps God shall soon
tell me

again about Job.
Waking Up Early This Morning

i do not switch on the table light
as i leave your rested body on the marital bed i go to the other side of the structure wandering what to do next with all these
mess.

thinking and thinking
what if i do not come back anymore what if there are no more mornings for me
what if
i lose this sense of balance and collapse
without you
knowing what i really feel damn, damn, damn rivers restrained

repaint the masks and leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waking Up One Day...

it must be funny &
ironic, for all the days of my life, my mind acts like a sponge absorbing all about you: the past, the present and the future, all but ghosts,
my Christmases have all been rags,
and valentines days kitchen sinks,
all the while i am sinking to the bottom of the madness of oceanfloors
when you are there cruising enjoying the horizons, the crushing of the glaciers, snow bears catching fish, eskimos welcoming you
in a party somewhere in the farthest pole

and then i wake up and begin to sew a tattered piece of my shirt on needle new on golden threads hot tea on my side black forest cake
on the table.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waking Up Too Early One Morning

when i wake up today too early this morning when the cocks still crow and the lizards still make the usual sound
as though saying
this world is okay yet my heart still beats this ticking clock of pain longing for love this thing that until now i do not really understand we had sex last night and we slept and had our own sweet dreams in fantasy land

there is still this emptiness that carries me back to you and i ask: Who are you? Are you God?
Is it you?

There is this loneliness despite the sunshine and the little rain of hope that trickles like a caress of thin air so cool in the garden out there

There is this doubt about the source of the voices from within this conscience which has a mouth and knows how to speak the language of truth

Have i forgotten you? Have you forgotten me?
Such questions shall be my breakfast for this morning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waking Up With Pain In My Head

a pain in my head wakes me up

reminds me of my dream last night

falling from the sky
like a meteor

suddenly hitting the ground

breaking and i see that face
'twas me

how can that be?
how can someone fall
and crash so hard and stil find its own face

whole

its body
whole

its mind
whole

its spirit
so unbroken?

RIC S. BASTASA
Wala Daw Tay Buot Pa. Kon Maghisgot Ug Gugma

. naulaw ko kaniadtong misayaw kog lambada diha nimo. Pasko kadto unya ang imong gisuot binurdahan nga blouse.
Itom akong karsones
unya puti ang polo.
Gisura ko nga murag si jose rizal. Unya ikaw kuno ang akong josephine bracken. Abi mo dunay kagilok ang gibati sa akong ilok, labi na adtong gihapohap sa akong mga kamot ang imong bukton.

duna tay larawan nga akong gitagoan. Black and White. glossy, unya ang kilid gikitkitan na sa ok-ok nga seguro wala nahilo sa camphor nga akong gibutang didto sa aparador ni Tatay.

wala pa daw tay buot
kon maghisgot ug gugma.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wala Kaila Ang Kalibotan Kon Unsa Ang Kasakit

ngano kaha nga hayahay man ang
pamati bisan ikaw
lang ang anaa
naghandom sa mga
milabay nga sakit
pa kaayo
apan kadtong dakong
bukid nga imong
giatubang nga
nag-ambo sa lapad
kaayong dagat
dayon gipayongan
sa mga panganod mora mag nakaluag
sa imong dughan
unya ang hugot
kaayo nimong kwelyo
wala na
naghatag og kahasol kanimo

nakita mo ang nawong
sa kalibotan
malinawon gihapon
wala kaila kon unsa
ang kasakit

RIC S. BASTASA
Wala Ko Damha Ang Ulan Sa Oktubre

Ang ulan sa Oktobre wala damha apan miabot kini. Mabisibis sa sagbot nga dugay rang nangalaya, nangluod. Midapig na gani kini sa hulaw ug andam na nga modawat sa pagkawala sa iyang mga dahon nga gitayhop sa hangin sa kasadpan

Miabot ang ulan sa Oktobre.
Hinay. Nipis. Mapailubon. Mihimas sa aping sa yuta. Misubay sa mga ugat sa napiang nga mga kahoy. Mihilot sa nabali nga mga sanga sa mangga ug santol.
Mihapuhap sa mga bulak sa antulanga ug mga pangadlaw.

Miawit kini sa usa ka pag-ampo.
Mialam-alam sa usa ka gugmang pakyas.
Miyubit sa mga pulong kabahin sa pag-antos sa likod sa mga kapa sa itom nga mga panganod.

Nagpaila ang ulan sa iyang tinood nga ngalan. Luha nga dugay na nga nagpahipi sa aping sa langit. Siya unya ang suba nga mohatud nato didto sa dagat, sa kagawasan, ngadto sa kamatuoran, ngadto sa imong kaugalingon. Balik sa panganod. Sa langit. Sa yuta.
Sa bulak. Sa mga sanga nga nangasumpay sa mga gugma nga misaad nga dili na mapakyas.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wala Sa Wali

Kinsang paria
ang gaingon nga ang mga anghel walay otin? Tan-awa ra god.
Naunsa ba kining ilang gipangtudlo nato.
Dili man kumpleto.

Nakapangutana
ang usa ka sikat nga pintor nga miampo sa Diyos sa Kamatuoran. Ug isip protesta anang mga bakak ug kakulangon sa gipangtudlo sa simbahan, nagdebuho siya og usa ka pak-an nga gahawid sa iyang lagay aron ipakita niya kon unsaon ba ang pagpangihi sa Kamatuoran.

Ambot kon unsay tinuod.
Ako igo lang tighatod.

RIC S. BASTASA
Walay Mga Ulo

dimalas ka
wala mitoo ang mga langgam ang mga hulmigas anaa nagpadayon
sa paghakot sa ilang pagkaon

patas lang
nakit-an sab kas bata nga di kamaong mamakak
naglakaw ka
sama nako nga wala nay
ulo

RIC S. BASTASA
Walk Down The Street Of Life

walk down the street
like a good child
walk and walk like you are enjoying every walk
in this road of life
where you
do not know
where you are going
and where
you are
from
but deep inside
you
like a good child
you always have a sense
of home
a sense of direction

in you
the good child
time does not exist
and the world
is nothing but a place
lived
for a moment

nothing permanent nothing worth staying really

RIC S. BASTASA
Walk The Moment Enjoy The Talk.

beneath us
magma

we are on the surface

we think
life is earth

above us
skies

beyond skies
space

everything moves
and we feel it

how we live
is simple

walk the moment
enjoy the talk

sip coffee
crack a cookie

sleep in a room
soundly

let all worry
be gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
where do you live?
i ask him

' I live there' he says, pointing to a far place it is a greenery, a forest opaque to the mist, there is a path that leads there on bare feet, and without any burden to carry on your back,

he says he is an honest man and shall live with it for many years to come he says he comes from a family of honest genealogy and he thrives on simple living and word of honor his face has a very gentle disposition like that of the common lamb

his words are soft like a rose that you enclose with your hand before he left for his intended journey i had a bowl of rice and a dried fish in my kitchen

i almost believe him until my bowl of rice and dried fish are all gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking Along The Halls Of The City Hall

i like it when i walk alone
along the hallway
of this city hall
when no one minds me and i mind no one when i become an island not because i am aloof and selfish
but i just want to have my own peace in this little independence

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking And Fishing

an early morning walk is like a fishing venture where you sail with your boat alone on the waters you wait and some ripples come
and then you remember

you catch fish, you stumble upon a stone you take hold of each, and then the ripples are gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking Back Home

walking back home
this summer

left and right

moments of pain
and happiness

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking Down The Stairs

she walks down the stairs on a symbolism of relinquishing power
he holds her arms
and guides her to her perdition

such is our society the losers of the past
shall spend their last term
in jail
and the same prosecutors become their freedom fighters what they take in they take out in return such is this society all made up of plastic sheets

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking In The Rain With You

with you
walking in the rain
shall turn to singing and dancing
and playing with the rain we get wet
of course, and even off course, we forget what home is or what the sun is all about drops of rain to our lips like bunch of grapes or strawberries,
we go jumping and hopping and the shades under the trees do not matter anymore and then i ask, shall we go naked this time

under the rain?
you smile, for now, you are prepared for freedom, for love, for truth, for the coldness, and the birth of our spirit, and the death of our bodies, how sad, and oh, did i not tell you that this is so beautiful to think on a second thought, hands clasped, then we part, and go our own ways, the rain stopped, and we grope for deeper thoughts to the sound of the rushing waters, where to?

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking Is A Way To Trap Some Fireflies Of Wisdom

some thoughts arrive when you are away busily walking down the trail somewhere in cogon

the trees are lining the trail and the air is pretty cool as the ferns sway their bodies to the eddies of the winds somehow you must believe that walking is a way to trap some fireflies of wisdom that come once in a while during the nights of your life.

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking On A Tight Wire

upon the urging of his girl he walks on a tight wire to prove his love for her the girl watches him as he balances himself on the tight wire from one coconut tree

to another

he finally reaches the other side without much effort and when the task is over she comes and kisses him on his cheek & lips

if you were only there you would have laughed the way the task was done

the tight wire is just laid an inch on top of the soil

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking On Top Of The Cinders

the secret to this walk not to hurt
the soles of your feet:

walk casually and look forward
do not push your weight
do not look down
or behind you do not mind as others
watch
looking for the pain in your face

just like love concerned only with loving not minding the pain just the thrill
and the burning fire
within

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking Out

i like your way of telling me about yourself this morning.
you walk out of your job and you are saying now you are free

i know the feeling
when i first had my freedom

i faced my superiors looked at them straight in the eye and i told them

i quit.
i turned my back at them i took the last nine yards and slammed the door at their faces like a bird i flew away i did not look back i did not have any regret i am brave, i praise myself.

i am happy and free and live in simplicity.

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking The Baby Early Morning

early morning when the sun shines mildly still behind the green trees when the dew still hangs on the blades of the grass when the road is still wet with the rain last
night

it is at this moment when you walk the baby and you hold his hand and you hear him giggle

such a lovely picture of love and a new beginning.......
Walking The Truth... his we cannot do
otherwise
all dressed in white as we run through the grasses
of reminiscences....

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking Through Life

at four o'clock in the morning you wake up and begin to take your walk with life

the wind is cold and the path is rocky and you are walking on bare feet
your clothes are useless

you go on not minding the thin thread of life that you are treading upon you hear the screams of those who fall recently into that abyss of oblivion
you are not disturbed
you already know what is happening if you fall you say that is natural it is not bad luck

if you don't that is alright & understandable for the time being neither is it good luck it is at this moment of your life when you say yes to everything you ask yourself for once if you have the right to say no you don't have really.

they tell you to move on and you ask them
where to?

there is no answer. Their silence confirms too, their search, their own isolation. their unloving distance it is at this moment that you feel so strong because now, you are all alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Walking Under The Morning Sun

the trees line up to you like you are a very important man the sun lights your way
like you are a celebrity the winds of fortune sings you your favorite song
your thoughts prop up like mushrooms
the path unfolds before you you walk on your feet with a very personalized dignity in this walk all the grass look up to you their lord
all the bushes talk about you their anonymous master
their guest uninvited the stones as usual are silent keenly observing
what happens next
and how long will you last in this monotonous Monday.

RIC S. BASTASA
Walky Talky

we take a walk
walky talky
hanky panky

RIC S. BASTASA
Wall And Wall And Wall Upon A Wall

This is my world
And I live here alone Thick with walls Walled with walls
Now I am at last Untouched
By your unwashed hands
Now at last
I cannot see
I cannot hear
You and your impurities.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wall To Another Wall

wall to another
wall

two pillars that must not get too close

our feelings, our fleeing, each as strong as the
other

so that this house of love may not fall.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wall To Wall.........

we were together
but still far apart

this situation never
change
and it will not change us again

we are back into the reality of our situation which upon acceptance sets us both free

into the arms of another we find at last what repulses us and like some thrown stones we find the turning point back into each others' arms we ask: what is the next choice?

and we look at each others' eyes concluding: there is none.

back to living now, this is
the house.
back to our reality: this is what we are.

make me coffee, bring it to me sit beside me, we talk about anything else under the
sun.

you see, we have no other.
you must feel, how is it just to be us, and nobody else.

soul mates. our bodies have parted.
it was not the kiss which bound us. feel me. you are also another stone by now. the winds are cold, but we are here for each other. wall to wall.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wallflowers

count the wallflowers? 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6... you can't count these wallflowers they stick their lives on walls not letting go their deepest desires lying on their teeth covering their faces with thick veils

and hats and masks
heavily tinted sunglasses at noon
and

funny, even at nighttime at the bars
their bodies wrapped with leather and wool

they do not dance with life they fear taking the wrong step or be laughed at they are the spectators of the show they say they are enjoying it somehow no, they are stuffed toys, on their comfort cabinets.

RIC S. BASTASA
Walls

I know your name from what they are telling me.
They say that cruelty is born. That cruelty has a tendency to stay.
It is you. They mention the name of your husband. He died with a forlorn heart.
It is you. They say you never mentioned his name. Not even once. You are cruel.

We meet today in this room. I am not afraid. I am prepared. I will not be fooled when you call me. You mention my name. You appear sweet. Like some candy bar. I cannot be fooled.
I tell myself. I am a wall. I am inside a very thick wall. I cannot hear you.
I do not wish to be a part of you. No matter how sweet you call my name.

They say that cruelty repeats itself. And that I can be a fool sometimes. I am a wall. I do not believe this to happen to myself too.

You look at me. I am about to leave.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waltz

I develop’d into a healthy, strong youth (grew too fast, though, was nearly as big as a man at 15 or 16.
Our family at this period moved back to the country, my dear mother very ill for a long time, but recover’d.
All these years I was down Manawan more or less every summer, now east, now west,
sometimes months at a stretch.

At 16,17, and so on,
was fond of debating societies, and had an active membership with them, off and on,
in Dipolog and one or two towns on the province.

A most omnivorous novel-reader, these and later years, devour’d everything I could get.
Fond of the theatre,
also, in Ateneo de Manila went whenever I could - sometimes witnessing fine performances.

in 1991 work’d as credit chief in a national bank, moved to legal circles, in many cities

Then, when little more than thirty, and for a while afterwards, got to teaching law schools down in the south, in some islands and travelled well
given the chance

This latter I consider one of my best experiences and deepest lessons in human nature behind the scenes,
and in the masses.

I started and publish'd some of my works in my native town, Katipunan . Then returning to the city, work'd on as a judge
and writer,
mostly prose,
but an occasional shy at poetry, till today

waltzing with life

RIC S. BASTASA
Wander....

sailing in space
gathering stars

walking under
the trees
gazing on fallen
leaves

the mind does all
these
and the heart lies silent on the nest
of peace

RIC S. BASTASA
Wanderer's Lust After Midnight

exciting, mouth watering hot and nameless, no strings attached, no asking about backgrounds, no numbers, no words, nothing to stare, there is worship and no singing, just silence and temperamental moans, and grasps and gasps, no buts no ifs, it's a plain hurry, a deal, sign languages as simple as a nod, and a thumbs down, desire at its peak, lots of stripping dressing and undressing, and opening and closing, at the park or at the corner of this dark building they say it's the thrill and the frill the price does not matter. at twilight, everyone turn to leave.

i have never been there.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wanderlust By Tita Lacambra Ayala, 1998

A formal formlessness provinces of thought
denied due process
lines tied up in knots recurring in dawn's wet trees somehow also landscapes are empty full of water yesterday's footprints the clouds in them

how can you believe you are not found
having lost footing
to the elements
splintered
everywhere you look

and you must hold your breath
and keep away from cloistered ravines it will be raining when you get home

there will be lights in the windows

RIC S. BASTASA
Want

he wants
or at least wishes that everyone in the family be intelligent,
but he knows, of course, this is not possible at all,
some come out as morons others turn out later to be nincompoops,

some though with the way they speak and write spelling the words correctly and choosing the right words under the proper context with which they are said
and meant, ...become too promising to appease what he calls as bad karma to the family,

they later give their
ture colors,
yes, intelligent but
very corrupt,

at the end he leaves everything to God,
asking though,

it this really what it has to be?
a family of wrong
people
and hence somewhere along the line
one must settle for compromises

or just leave genetics
as is
and let evolution do the selection of who in the family
becomes fit
to survive

well that 's it
i get away from my wishes
i simply watch the family go by like a story without an expected ending.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wanted

1. a tall well built woman with good ation, who can cook frogs , who appreciates a good fucgarden, classical music and tal-without getting too serious.
please read only lines 1,3, and 5.

(taken from a News Ad)

RIC S. BASTASA
Wanting To Dance The Hours Away...

there is no music
in this place
it appears like a desert
without a caravan of camels

but just the same
i like to dance these hours away
like crazy

independently
i must invent the music within and live fully
without.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wanting To Go In, But Not Really Staying For Long

there is a way towards a closed door without using the key and without knocking or breaking it down

there is no use for diplomacy sometimes worse is violence and worst is deceit there is a way to it and it is the most trivial and most effective: entice the door with a senseless talk it cannot ignore it, and then tell it about a window how sad that it had remained closed for years sunless in the Bahamas and dampened in New York

sometimes something trivial works, something like a feigned sophistication distracts it from what it is locking out one day i tell a joke about a ladder where some steps are missing like some decayed tooth which fly away from the gums and the door laughed since it has no teeth too and so it let me in but to appease it i said i won't be long. I still want to stay outside and play with my life under the trees.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wanting To Say Nothing At All

a time for silence the mind is full like a heap of leaves unswept for days
by the lazy wind

a day of silence
inside the room

a door shut
curtains and windows
stare
giving little mercies to a restless soul
inside a sleepy body.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wanton Imaginations.

You like boxes
where your ideas
take shape
you like air
to be contained in the shape of a balloon
water in the shape of a bottle

i have ideas as birds flying in the air

as bullets hitting no bird

but songs seducing
the moon

tempting the stars
to be meteors

again merely passing
by
to put in flames our dry woods without the fire of

wanton imaginations.

RIC S. BASTASA
War

war is a business and the men engaged in this business are all accordingly at a loss

Gubat

Ang gubat negosyo
Ug ang mga negosyante niini

Puros kuno alkanse

RIC S. BASTASA
War If You Know Is A Good Business

War if you know is a good business

mortars, guns, tanks, choppers, bullets are expensive

we do not manufacture it so we buy it

no arms sales so far for the past few days and this is not healthy and wise for business the gunrunners of the worlds are worried why there is so much peace in town they met and discussed these things in their business war is a a necessity otherwise they will be so lonely so you have wars now, the gunrunners

are busy and they are so happy they party somewhere as deaths and destruction rise in shocking number

RIC S. BASTASA
Warmth....

MY favorite puppy is on my feet napping my head rests on a memory pillow stars hang on the ceiling i sleep with the comfort that you are safe and sound i look forward to see you tomorrow morning

RIC S. BASTASA
Was It For The Love Of The Flame?

attracted by the flame
the moth
flew in there and got burned

given another life
it will
go there to be burned again

was it for the love of the flame

definitely not the love of life

could be the love of
death

or could be that it is so stupid
not having learned the danger of fire

that unforgiving flame that eats even something nonsensical

RIC S. BASTASA
Was It Something Wrong?

and so the moon
in its fullness finally kissed the face of the river

and the river
shimmered
as though it felt the coldness
of the rain

the moon asks the wind if there is something wrong with love

the winds hushed
as though something happened
as though
kissing is shameful
when it is done with the fullness
of desire

the grasses
who buries everything
past and future
as usual, are as silent
as though
nothing is memorable like the indifference of the stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
Was It You Who Wrote Some Poems?

it happens in a crowd or a party or a reunion to be exact and short of any dialogue
you ask,

was it you
who wrote some poems?

and i say
yes
and i ask why?

and you say
oh i like every poem
there

and i ask
which ones?

the one about love
or passion
or compassion
or was it the poem
that hurts
and makes one feel the urge to kill oneself?

and you say
i like the sad ones
those that make me cry
and think of my broken heart

and i say
i never wrote
sad poems

and you say
you swear

i have read
the sad ones
and i really cried
alone

and i say,
i never wrote
them

they write themselves and i do not really cry anymore

and you say
really?

and i say: i am numb.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wasted

how big is the house
how beautiful it is under the big, shady
mahogany tree
and its surrounding garden of flowers

but no one lives
there anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
Wasted Emotions

silence has a certain depth i've been there and there was really no complete measure of the phantom's haven

noise comes as a traffic jam of
feelings

the soul of the night howls and the limping grasses over the fields of memories scatter like a crowd bombed
into pieces of scars

there are no ears
the wisdom loses itself in the hollowness of wasted emotions

RIC S. BASTASA
Wasted Life?

it's home
school home then home office
home
office

no other places
to go
no other places dared

some white sandy beaches for sometime
a trek on a steep mountain
sometimes

visiting old folks no questions asked but only feeling also their sense of loneliness

or lostness in this vast field of humanity

poetry
walk in the morning
poetry
noontime breaks siesta

dinner with wife
and sleep

dawn breaks stunning thoughts
arresting the self
on what next to do
home
home
home

a boring life maybe but i think it is not wasted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wasted Mind....

at this time
i pause

wanting to find an answer to the question which slips at

the tip of my tongue

i find the answer
takes time

but then
on the other hand

i finally dismiss it
unnecessary

always this happens
well sought
well thought of

but at the end
so irrelevant

sick and dirty
fake and temporary

pleasure of these hands

the heart furious
the mind
wasted.
Wasted Moment Of Our Past Lives

you held my hand tightly

you want me
to hold time

but time is just like the

water of our dreams

they slip away
the moment

we gaze as though life

is air as though verily wasted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wasted Proposition

love is not a student.
and you are no teacher.
you cannot teach me.
i am om is an incurable jerk.
I jerk off, alone with my nerves.
In the house, this door
is closed.
The windows gossip.
my shoes are growing
moss.
my shirt is eaten by snails.
the stars on my roof
are fake earrings

mother is beautiful
she is a faded picture of a family memory.

they avoid this kind of confrontation.
it is not essential.

what is essential? i ask that too.
all i have are branded as accessories.

that was a good movie.
the line ends:

do not ever think about loving me.
i am wasted.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wasting My Time

seeing a stack of books and paper works on top of my table i decide to have a break and shy away from all these legalese

i face the screen
of my life and let some intermittent lights flash before my face i put my fingers on the keys and think some more and imagine some images about my past
and how like a blob
a monster it has eaten both my present and future quite scary
but the wizard says that to defeat this malware of my mind i must start to write and keep on writing about this malady
until then when everything gets resolved when the present
breathes life inside my deflated soul and the future like a baby begins to crawl

RIC S. BASTASA
Wasting The Hours

got some hours on my hand and i spill them all like water dripping i am not wet
i get so hot beside you despite the spill despite the wasted hours i don't regret spending time with you in a place as far
like mirage
like an illusion of time and space deny us what truth lies in the metaphors of light and shadows
veils and drapes and grassy paths

RIC S. BASTASA
Watch Out Mr. Martin For The Jihad At Poemhunter

In Islam,
a holy war; a war ordained by God The Koran
teaches

that soldiers who die in jihad go to heaven immediately.

go to heaven  to heaven immediately.
go to heaven  to heaven immediately.
go to heaven  to heaven immediately.
go to heaven  to heaven immediately.
go to heaven  to heaven immediately.
go to heaven  to heaven immediately.
go to heaven  to heaven immediately.
go to heaven  to heaven immediately.
go to heaven  to heaven immediately.

a holy war waged by Muslims against infidels a holy struggle a striving by a Muslim for a moral or spiritual or political goal

Islam
An individual's striving for spiritual self-perfection.
Islam
A Muslim holy war
spiritual struggle against infidels.
A crusade

The war against poetry turning into a jihad against people who hate poetry detonate the metaphor blog!

RIC S. BASTASA
Watch That Which You Do Too

watch what you say
the spirits of the trees may be hurt
and soon
you shall suffer the consequences

of a bloated stomach
and chilling and vomiting

but watch more
that which you do
the people around you are noting

and they may not believe you
soon
when what you do does not jibe with what you say

RIC S. BASTASA
Watch That Which You Do Too And Say

watch what you say
the spirits of the trees may be hurt
and soon
you shall suffer the consequences
of a bloated stomach
and chilling and vomiting

but watch more
that which you do
the people around you are noting and they may not believe you soon when what you do does not jibe with what you say

RIC S. BASTASA
Watch Your Ass

somehow you must graduate,
to the topmost layer
of unmindfulness,
do not be bothered by the silence of others they have their own
jigsaw puzzles
to put together to see the whole picture
of their existence,
do not wait for their bother rest assured they are still your brothers in this circles of cycles

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching

this is plain watching
two souls
two bodies making what they are supposed to do inside a room beside them the white silky curtain caressed by the wind
from the sea
salty and soft and sapphire like in feeling

there is the bursting of stars inside your heads there is the celebration of what
you have become so intimate discovering what long seeped
between your arms
and legs

slowly, love is reborn
the moon

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching A Shooting Star

i like the silence
of the shooting star
i like the wishes that my heart whispers
to my ear
i like the emptiness when the shooting star is gone i like the silence of my heart when now it is full.

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching Again The Count Of Monter Cristo

the classic revenge
using the sword, discovered treasure, and a memory of a friend, now, taking back what was his.
mercedes tells who the real father of her son
the marriage was for convenience,
he was not a pleasure
but a temporary cure for her shame.
finally, Dantes has the world in his hands,
now he is willing to throw hate on the cliff embracing God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching Everything Go And Leave

I let my emails accumulate like Paper stacks Unread. I just let them be themselves.
I let the hours pass away.
No questions asked. I let people go by No reminders.
I let the roads take their curves and Take their own travels.

I let things grow by themselves.
Above the sky expands.
Like a notebook, like a canvass.
I let the night come.
And be the mouth
To eat the stars out.
I let everyone arrive, and one by one I let everyone go.

I let the wave come ashore and Curl upon themselves and then Disappear.

This is the season for just being myself.
They watch me and I watch them.
I take my deepest breath.
They let me go, I let them too.

This is not the time for reasoning.
This is just the time for simply watching.
This is the Phenomenon.

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching From A Distance Two Lovers Kissing In The Dark

how sadly
can i be watching two lovers kissing
in the dark
from a distance

my hands are inside my pocket it is cold
the night is lighted with nothing but a lone star

now i remember her again alone in the dark waiting for me

i offer no explanation for my absence i have nothing on my hand to wipe her tears i have no more words

25 years ago

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching His Transformation

did he start from an egg hatching into a worm
then hid
in a cocoon
and then
turning into
a butterfly?

did you see
him
spread his wings
for the first time?

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching Love Dies In Selfishness...

i watch love
making love upon itself and it impresses upon me that sometimes love is not love at all,

when it takes upon itself desire and decides to keep it for itself unable to think that someone else needs it badly
ever,

when having taken it all it keeps upon its closed hands whatever is wonderful walks away
and denies that somehow thirst has been quenched and hunger
all filled up for love keeps its mouth shut and arms folded and then dies, sadly.

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching Love Making Love makes my armpits alive again makes my blood rush back to my brain makes my body dance to the tune of love's rock makes my eyes blink wild like a bird hovering from one tree to another like a pornographic movie but i really like romance much better that gentle kiss penetrating inside my throat

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching Porn

lots of skin no conversation

you watch
attentively

(at 60) it is all in the mind

all fake
there is no love

too hot a fire
it burns your soul

strange, strange
the head is shaking

it is nauseous
good, good,

you vomit
this alien in you

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching Sins

i sit alone watching sin passing by, i ask it to stop for a while so i can hug it it obliges and there we were dancing, drinking, sleeping on a limited hour sin has to go after i tasted it so many demands its sojourn, hug it, kiss it, sleep with it, but again only for a while, for sin is also like us, it moves and if you allow it it devours, digests, dissolves defecates, what you allow...

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching Something Else...

i spin some letters, mostly consonants for fear that so many vowels can be too noisy sometimes we dwell more on the algebraic x and y

z comes in to add more anonymity to the equations that we grapple with everyday looking for answers with already prepared quadratic equations to simplify life we offer simple equations we reject too many complications and lessen the variables eating breakfast, drinking the water mastering the daily sequences and shying away from new innovations there is no need for more vacations they are all the same roads and seashores same malls and delicacies, routine, colors of those items are not really changed, the taste of that chicken is the same all over the world be it in Austria or France or Punta or Galas or Talisay or Sinonok what matters is the compactness of your belief inside no one can convince you no one can take you somewhere else

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching The Chickens

the strong cock
struts its way towards a group of hens
and as there are too many
of them
hens, the cock in confidence
does what is of most service
to its master

he fucked them
all
for the eggs.

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching The Flowers

i open the window
and look out to the garden below the rain just stopped and every leaf had the share of the morning shower

dewy, each leaf smiles each flower opens each petal anticipating
the sun

fingers of sunlight arrive and there is touching and hugging and kissing
light to dew to leaves flowers to the rays of the sun

such a joy
like an early morning chat with a friend you haven't had a talk for days and you discuss social studies

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching The Rebirth Of Your Star...(Repost)

when your universe breaks in the same manner that other universe does the most natural thing that must happen

i, in my own, planetary motion, watch the shattering and the bursting of the bubble

it is not that i want to see how you destroy yourself i am not that sadistic, the stars know me by heart and the moon likes me for that

it is this
within you, after, shall be the birth of the new star

and this happens all you have to do is just wait
because
as always stars are born after an explosion

tell you what?
it will be the best stage to watch the nicest thing that happens to you also happens
to me

and once again the universe celebrates again

each, happy again,
following each own
planetary orbit
with Sun as God
with the other planets as friends.

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching The Sea And The Rain

from this window
of glass i watch the rain
and the sea

the rain falls gently like
a woman
the sea dances like a
man

when they embrace
there is always this joy in my heart remembering some happy moments of my past

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching The Temples

these temples are build so high their tips wanting to reach the sky like what the heads of our dreams are made of
for what is life without any dream anymore?
what is a life without any aspirations?

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching Tita With A Little Girl On Top Of Autumn Leaves

she holds her hair on extreme fragility that a grandma does to a grand daughter.

two years ago she lost her husband.
it was sudden and at first she could not believe that such parting as abrupt as that could happen.

she was fragile too like a porcelain Austrian doll about to break into pieces
thrown on a stone pavement

she didn't she chose life, to move on

now holding on to the glowing hope
of her grand daughter's peach cheeks

on top of the drying leaves of autumn i can hear the cracks of the heap

RIC S. BASTASA
Watching You

as you were counting the seeds
left after the storm
i watch you
closely as you watch closely what things
what memories are left
for both of us
i must have been so unkind
to cause the furrows
on your skin
it was as smooth
and firm as a child before i go beside you
kissing your forehead
hoping to repair what damage
was done

the seeds are many your counting slow

RIC S. BASTASA
we are leaving for Jakarta
my wife is uneasy

i tell her this is not a vacation this is a mission
to see how mankind
manages the fury of
water

it always seeks it proper level

RIC S. BASTASA
Water Seeking Its Own Level

oh the waters have wisdom for they always know how to seek their own level

they do not mind
what name is given to this mountain
or this plain or that creek

they all know them all and they travel and sleep soundly on their beds soundly without any murmur
or complaint

RIC S. BASTASA
Water......

soon
it will be free flowing

that is what i really like

flowing water
making less fuss about its liquidity

it has always been
my dream
that i too must flow
like water
to the sea finally it is where i become part of everybody where i become a nobody

soon it will be myself freely flowing
like water
to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waterfall

i like this
rush
of waters

falling
down
looks like a race
w/o

a winner
a loser

just the fun
of falling
rushing
as though
all the waters
are
just taking a plunge
in all
laughter

do you
like
the sound
of playful
falling?

RIC S. BASTASA
Waterfall Photoshop

A child catches a waterfall in his white cup
as though
this matter
of a waterfall on this earth
is nothing
but a cup of tea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Waves And Foams On My Feet when my feet steps on the sands and pebbles of the shore

i feel the life
stood upon by my whole body when the waves
come and go like a pendulum on my legs
leaving some sea caps
and foam on the hair
i begin to understand
who i am,
arriving and yet not staying going away and yet coming back in a matter of time between storms and
clear days, and i agree with the seagulls singing about life and fading in a distance

RIC S. BASTASA
Waves And Foams On My Feet (Revised)

when my feet step on the sands
and pebbles of the shore
i feel the life
stood upon by my whole body
when the waves
come and go like a pendulum on
my legs
leaving some sea caps
and foam on the hair
i begin to understand
who i am,
arriving and yet not staying
going away and yet coming back
in a matter of time
between storms and
clear days, and i agree with the seagull singing about life
and fading in a distance

RIC S. BASTASA
Way Sapayan

sa tanang panghitabo tagaig pasalamat

bisag gamay lang god
basta pasalamat lang gayod
ghapon

kon gisagpa
kas too
salamat kay wa maapil
ang wala

kon gitikbas
kas likod
maayo lang gihapon kay
wa maapil
imong suwang

kon gikawatan
kag bugas
pasalamat kay
naa pang
kaldero

sa tanang butang
sa tanang suok
sa tanang panghitabo
pasalamat lang
gayod gihapon

ayaw iapil pagpakawat ang
luna sa
pasalamat

o kon moapil man
ghapon
ayaw nalang pod
iapil ang makanunayong
way sapayan.

RIC S. BASTASA
Ways To God

at five in the morning the church bells sound and she wakes up dresses up and there she goes with her religious rites

at the same hour
when i am alone
i open my computer
scribble some words to make some poems

whichever is the way to God's heart
i do not know
i still have to figure out perhaps, perhaps, perhaps poems as prayers?

RIC S. BASTASA
We

we build the stairs first stair upon stair
wood and nail
and hammer
and hands
and some determined thoughts
dreams to reach the skies focus
and look what have be done we have reached the door

of the room

it is here where we shall hatch all our dreams

like eggs to our warm
hands
like chicks to our cheeks time and stairs and hopes and dreams and nails and hammers and hands

and eyes

be awake and always be vigilant for dreams that do not die like night stars
are we

RIC S. BASTASA
We All Pass This Way Again

there are categories of our existence others wish for a perfect living

life harmonized with nature love and bliss

and a perfect poise

of the flower
dancing against the sun

we stay for the moment we wilt i any minute

those that believe however make a wish

and the wish become true
mind over matter

and then like a boat we pass this way again

dissolving in the mist reechoing a song

that we first offered to the most beautiful maiden that you have seen her smile fading like the shadow of the mountain against the darkness of the night

RIC S. BASTASA
We Always Care About You

there is a little girl that i still remember who keeps on hiding away from her friends so she covers her eyes with her hands and then asks if she has become invisible to all.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Afraid To Ever Tell This Story

we are here upon a page of a book like ears, marking a restful minute since the eyes are aching, we are in this room of a space filled in the order of words systematically placed by a careful writer whose reputation is respected by all his colleagues at the university, we are wary, aching ears, rough skinned faces, drooping eyes, lousy hands, hanging feet, the chairs at the other northeastern part of this room are restless but cannot speak what they feel and they cannot be stopped as they start running towards the balcony jumping into the ground floor of this very silent nook the table starts an exhibition of a circus act tumbles like an acrobat and shouts to the wall and the ceiling that it can fly like a winged fish that no one has ever seen the ceiling fan loosens its neck and falls to the ground screaming the pillow cases escape from their pillows saying it is all over now the carpet rolls upon itself like a man rolling its sleeves now ready for a fistful of bouts

it is midnight and the light bulbs are blinking like an ambulance there is an emergency but everyone in the house is asleep and must not be disturbed we are afraid we are witness to this unruly behavior of things that should not move or scream or tumble or run or jump or brag about some imagined wings we are very silent and the following morning when they all wake up we keep our mouth shut afraid that they will call us crazy or if not, paranoid because the whole night we guarded the house and never for once close our eyes and taste the sweetness of sound sleep We Are After All, Human Skins...

fOR The meantime tHAT tENderness has not arrived yet
the Truth is
we survive with what is present and Available
The one not felt but well used We claim the right still to enjoy The temporary wrong ones Until the upright comes The ONe THAT liberates us from this
Madness
This ticking flesh, this mirage in the middle of our deserts Until we feel the coolness of our Oasis
It is the aridity that is here That makes us drunk with Air NOw, when the promised truth comes We too shall drink to that They must understand what we are made of

We are not made of wood or steel
We are all flesh and blood and bones soft cartilages, elastic veins, hairy skin, nails that do not feel
pain
a little of that,
but more of the vast skin that feels the prick
of the bodkin.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are All Into This....

for into the bridge of flowers we all walk and stand there and wait as the petals fall on the surging river turning into ships towards all the cities of our mundane dreams....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Alone

in this silence
before we sleep
we are alone

amazed on the note that despite this silence

we still understand who we are what we are where we are heading

in silence
love speaks the most

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are And We Cannot...

and why do you
persist?

no one hears you
and no one cares

and why do trees
keep growing?
why does autumn keep on falling?

look at the sun and the
sea

feel the vastness
this ceaseless flow

this eternity this madness for goodness

this faith to life this death this door this entrance to the unknown how can we ever stop?

we are
and we cannot...

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Both Suns.

now i must understate
you. Mere pleasure. A toy doll.
A toy gun. fantasy play. One that i can take and throw away.
a game. and we are children on the sands of time.
there are no days in this plays.
nights do not exist.
time is a hush. i make love to you.
you make the same thing.
expectations are taboo.
today you are on a trip to the hills. i stay in the city.
i watch black birds migrating
to another island.
i imagine boats and clouds.
as i begin to write a letter to myself.
this is my universe.
we are both suns.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are But Mere Paths

we are but mere paths
where their shoes tread upon us their umbrella tips their staff they all touch our surfaces during the rain

the waters run the drain and we become not just the paths of their stamping and running feet we become their canals

we move through histories of men we are their paths and their canals we let their blood flow through us we remain faithful to this tasks taking glimpses of the face of God we face the heavens we believe in the falling of the stars

we are but paths
all histories of men's feet walk upon us we are but the grasses we bury their carcasses

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are But Winds

it is a fact,
love and trust
and lust and
faith,

these are separate entities
apart from us,

and they live
forever,
and they are still there even when we are already
dead

so why grieve for
them?

they are
their own
republics,

and we are
but winds.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Considerate Only If You Give Us A Chance

give us a chance to know you better read us too
do not attempt to please us we will not require much for you to stop writing if it is your cure
we will have the patience of reading every word
from you
every murmur
we will dip our own feet to every creek that you create
we wish you happiness
please understand
we wish no ill
we ask no questions
what ill wind too has taken us here
to be with you

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Drawn Towards The West

we are drawn towards the west
we are from the east

we have many reasons to stay in the west we have more of the many reasons to go back to our point of origin

the east, yet for the time being, we cannot.
the east will always be an enticing art form inside our hungry stomachs

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Fast....

the fast mind does not wait for your arrival you are as gentle, and slow as a snowflake we are the wind, and the unfrozen river, we move and transfer and go elsewhere we have no purpose
we have no specific place for that destination we are not part of you
we are those that you see and then gone in a short moment we do not belong here neither there we do not understand
who we are

sometimes we think we are cursed perhaps punished so wisely we do not stay we are not held we are dews, we are mists, we are merely sounds always faint.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Fine Here Too....

we are fine too
here we are upon a fine day at the balcony of this beach front cottage built years ago by papa, where we remember the songs of conch and colored shiny shells, where as one family we dip into the sea and rise up with our dreams again on a noonday,

we are fine here
away from the wars waged in your home, where what we know is only the news that appear in CNN or AlJazerah, where we know only about distance that does not really hurt us that much as you are in those bombarded places,

we are fine here
under the moon at night sharing stories about our youth and about our departed ancestors who had taught us well how to live in peace and harmony with all.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Fixed....

can't see the way we love each other today has gone beyond the walls of words

no fences of promises nothing about sweet nothings can't see the air con is timely repaired food is on the table coffee is ready when you need it and clothes are clean and ironed for your suiting

no more flowers and chocolates no more unnecessary exhilaration the way we love is anchored on the reality of our accepted limitations no need to change now
we are fixed.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Floating Like Kites Under A Storm.

when we talk you become one of my diversions, like, i do not really mean what i say, so i will tell you my day is loathsome, a kitten made love with me in the kitchen or that a dog gets rabid and bites all the railing of the stair, seeing to it that it does not kill
anyone,
there will be more, but they are parts of one fictional inventions, a red horse full of bubbles, a carabao with its magical horn that moves towards its brains which we have to cut at once, words move in different directions, forked and leading
us to nowhere.

i still live alone, and i do not have you really for an intimate matter. I have nothing to confide, and you have nothing to please me.

here we are floating like kites under a storm.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are From The East

we are from the east
our clothes are saffrons we smell incense

you are from the west on metal clothes and piercing lances
you bring to us the sound of our horrible machines

we are amazed how we see your power that sounds like thunder dehth tolls in numbers increasing we want to like all of you but for now we can't we are still burying our dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Going Flying With My Wings Of Fire.

i am a black Arabic horse wearing a heavily tinted sunglasses
in a summer resort
somewhere in Mars

and you are?

an ice woman serving me orange juice
with your two hands
holding
a silver glass

i don't drink orange juice and you don't like a horse so what happens?

we are here somewhere in Mars
and we have no space ride to take us back
to earth

so?

we might as well enjoy
this moment

leave that orange juice ride with me

we are going flying with my wings of fire.

RIC S. BASTASA
we are here again

gathering around the secret of the rose, society's silenced few
the dews of the darkest nights, flowers of the scarlet leaves, here we are shunning sleep
away from the mob
we are robbed
of the gob-
lets of wisdom, we too take the stances of the philosophers, the murderers of common thoughts, we shape the future of our poplars, so unpopular are we so misunderstood but we are not bothered, here we are again
poets of the morning star

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Here, And That Is Good Enough For Us... i never have an inkling to sit beside the greatness of a

Maya, a Langstone, a Pablo or Robert

i am but a simple blogger in this age of facebook and twitter and email encounters

let me get it straight fame is not my cup of tea all i need is just to be me.

it is all about loneliness all about arriving home with no one to talk to or taking your dinner alone under the light of a bulb and the chatter of TV series it is not about romance even

there is none

it is the other side of reading books and dog-earing a page because your eyes are tired and you need sleep because tomorrow is another routine, of a walk to the office filling up forms, disrobing yourself of the excitement of earthly existence lunch, and the quiet of officer dividers and taking naps like cats evenings without meanings blankets without human warmth pillows like clear consciences guilt like fecal matter flushed on the morning bowl

we all live this way we do not complain because there are no solutions in sight we do not work for a fulfillment we work to pay our bills and be just like the rest of this wave of humanity
arriving and leaving like foams of sea on the shore then like you, we write, poems or non-poems we keep holding to words, hoping that there is a cure to this paper existentialism we write for nothing at all we know we are duped by websites that earn money for themselves we do not care

we are passionate, we contribute the success of others we make them happy, we do not count how much feeling have we invested we do not know, much less do we really care to know. we're here, playing our noise, we do not crave for responses we exist, we make you feel that we exist.

who knows? we are not alone, we also have the rest wave upon wave, sunset upon sunset, all the days of our lives till we die, and this page shall be blank, and then we are deleted.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Into This

it is not just an ordinary swim on shallow waters where our heels
are attacked and
we are not a bit bothered about any possible
consequences,

we are into this
form of art, where we expose a face and at the same time cover
our eyes and nose
and keep on saying
that we are unafraid to be finally our own making a sculpture of ourselves in words and images,

we are into this
not as adept as a magician removing a rabbit from a black hat

until such time that our audience who are children by
heart
finds this art
so cheap and no as amusing as what we used to be doing what they have not ever seen
because
we keep them
sealed, tight lipped,
vacuum,
restrained, cool, civilized,
and unhealthy.

we are into this,
tell me, what is this really?

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Moving People

it is this traveling that perhaps can make you
forget

roads are the roller coasters of our minds trees are trickles of green on each side always moving on and on without exhaustion viewing everything that is always new to our own liking

i do not have a specific destination each place beyond me is a question the sad past like the wind that meets our faces becomes another place of the heart that we leave behind

we are moving people
seated on our couches still in deep thought as scenes change every moment our eyes are always strangers trekking pathways consuming roads

without a definite end on an unknown duration

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Moving To Places Where Our Hands Still Touch

What you did was make this yard of cement Some hard posts and high fences and barbwires You call it safety; you call it clean to see There will be no shrubs, no trees, just this Big house and empty rooms, a garage full Of cars, some phones and TV walls

We move to other places then since we disagree We leave this place of cement and fences and walls We move to the hills where we still have our trees Our long winding rivers, the rocks and grass The winds and skies, we move to places where The birds are not caged, where they sing the sweetest songs Where we and the rest of us are free Where on mountaintops and cliffs and drifting clouds Our hands still touch & shake the Hands of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Never Birds...

to the other
side of the world,
i ask,
Leave us.

They flock together.
For with all these feathers,
they are warm.

winter is not a threat. And with all their wings combined, the world begins
to spin faster,

and time flies,
and changes come.

I still prefer,
this Nook. This self is all I have and you must know my dear,

we are different,
and we try
and no matter how we try
we cannot meet
the rules
and by their standards
we fail.

there is no use
flocking.
we are never

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
birds.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Not Really Meant For Each Other.....

what we did not agree was when i invited you for a bath together

in the secret river of
my love
for you which you have not felt how cool is the water
how clear how clean and so i bathed myself alone

waiting for you
and you never came and then i lay my body on that rock i am beneath the sun as i dry to be warm again

if you only came here even for once or even for curiosity's sake you could have felt what love is how is it to be loved
cleanly and clearly how to flow towards the sea and be lost into love's tremendous power

it is when we fuse when we are one that love comes to take us both into an anonymity

the rain to the sea
the light of the moon on the grassy hills the wind to the leaves of the trees the sands from your hand falling to the shores of the thousand grains i am alone now but not seeking you.

i am complete to myself, whole to its solitude happy with the truth that we are not really meant for each other.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Not Stones.....

i see it
i heard what was said in the midst of the most infidel act lust for love
love lost and love found in bed with another that slap makes an answer: no one is a stone here.

when someone leaves
humanity struggles to fill the absence,

whatever, whatever is done, is justified by this:

we are not stones.
we are not stones.

our nature is to be intimate.
with whoever is free and available.

despise not, the flower that still blooms under the sun despite the rocky waterless
state of affairs.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Pathways

when we begin to think only for the moment we become like a pathway.

there is solidity on its face and even though people walk upon us and leave we become so unaffected.

it is the moment that we seize and then give away
all the while
accepting that this is another fact of our life here.

some flowers begin to bloom seeds sprout.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Ready...

your nipples
and breasts and soft arms
are telling you:

it is time to love,
time to quit thinking and start doing what love so humbly requires,

your lips and tongue and fingers are into
this

love where are you?
we are ready.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Riding On The Same Boat

we do not have to tell really it is useless to say so that we are riding on the same boat on same destination

i lie, if i tell you, that i do not suffer.

i have a Pandora box with me.
i do not open it, You have suffered enough too.

For you to listen to mine is but a cliche, another monotonous redundancy.

let me differ somehow i still make fun, that is my inner core for Fun defeats whatever face of misery is there.

IT is light in darkness, it is sanity in madness.

Do not be solitary. IT is true it is deep and stuffed with so much wisdom. But what for?

Tomorrow may never come.
And today, is the only moment, i still have with you.

Suffer the song with its singing.
Learn to love death, with what Life is still there.

The only dew to the Leaf soon dries.
The sun, how big and warm, soon sets.

This is a message of Joy.
This is the word of Today.

Every second, i savor. Life is nothing but a breath, it is not a curriculum vitae.
We Are Ships And We Have No Anchor

you do not like change life is a big gamble everything is always going towards change

you are afraid on the future your hands grip the present your comfort zone is in this corner i am not afraid of change i deny everything the present is not permanent yes it does not have to i throw away the past like a scratch of paper

all the experiments are there i always name each moment gone my waste

life is an experiment there is no need to think life comes here like somebody else you cannot name it.

i have no names to mention no chants to mumble no magic to assure me that tomorrow with be all right when you wake up tomorrow morning i will not be here anymore i am destined for new places for my mind is the wind you must like it here just the way i feel but,

ad and there is this big but we are ships and we have no anchor

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Silenced....

in a sense
i was never your poet, for

no god am i,
none of those
that
try to change what is there

i see and feel
and leave

that stone remains
to be just
another stone

when i touch it
it does not change
when i put words
into its roughness
nothing happens

just like gratian
we only describe
and leave things as they are

we affirm our humanity
we accept this frailness
this shortness of breath

this loneliness
and this limited grasp of what is there
we see light
we are amazed
we are silenced.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Sorry...

sometimes to survive
this daily ordeal
we must realize that we sometimes say what we do not mean we hurt because we are lost and when we find ourselves it is only this time that we must admit
we do not really mean it our nature, our real nature has always been as soft as water and never cruel...

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Still Living

scorching sun
burning the skin of our bodies
here in the tropics

dehydrated
and broken in spirit

ah, no one cares
and so we must care and move on to his harsh journey

ah, we live
that is good enough for us!

we are still here
that is gift enough

live, sing and dance
no matter what

that is good enough for us!

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Still Safe With The Rain....

ey are not convinced. we had secrets all over the house. and even in the garden.
she even plucked her secret from one of the trees in the park.

is it a secret if one pretends not to know? it is still. We agreed.
sad secrets specially are kept with a will to deny it even if a friend makes an appointment with her in the church, and revelations are made after a prayer, or with the priest.

i guess love understands secrets.
love even conceals what we know.

we had secrets in the roof and we never really mind.
new secrets are found in the pigsty but we keep on feeding the pigs. nice roasts sometime.

i strictly keep a secret inside my pocket.
smaller than a pebble, but it is my life.
it is my sphinx, and there are questions which if my love answers at the end of these pretensions

my world shatters into pieces like a nitrogen frozen dead body.
and when i am gone,
all the secrets go with me.

it is hard to justify this enigmatic probabilities and realities.
but it is here. we are happy and we live in one roof.
and so we are still safe with the rain.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Still The World

amidst all these collisions
when planets shatter
into insignificant pieces
when space
eats all of us dusts to dusts
we shall return
yet we are still
the world
just the two of us

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Stunned At The News And The Rain Never Stops.....

today i remember
mr. fred
my professor in one of those english
electives,

he is a poem
of rain
of hair and rain
between us
barriers between barriers
rain that blurs
trees
and glass windows

inside the
theater he reads
a poem of rain
those who listen
cry
but he didn't he kept on reading until it ended
and those who listened intently carried by the sound of the rain
never felt that
end

he has a beard
uncut
a fat body
he walks slowly
slower than a snail people who do not know him think that he is a sick man today i remember him he died at an early age his only daughter at four leaving a beautiful and lonely and mourning wife we are stunned at the news and the rain never stops..... rain is beautifully sad it haunts us inspires us to live some more and be beautiful at most....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Tested We Must Pass....

a cloudy sky
we agree to be just silent about what we are seeing that this is the sign of an incoming decision something is obstructing what we ought to see

we have agreed fully well we must do nothing
we let it grow to its fullest
doubt
let all the cirrus realize the value of all this nimbus

we are about to engage in the darkness of our dance we must indulge we must not avoid
we are tested we must pass....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are The Poets, The Miners Of Gold

we go deeper
into a long tunnel
we look like
miners with lights in our foreheads
we are looking for nuggets
of gold
it is damp and cold and dark
there and we may die
there
when the earth
caves us
in
we can be eaten with what we are feeding.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are The Puppets Still Moving On Invisible Strings

sad to say i mourn for all of us here we claim we shape our own destinies our hands as maps
our anticipations as compass of what we must become to places of the hearts

this is the irony:
we are still puppets on our invisible strings

on purple clothes
we boast
we are on our own now

our feet
shamed by stones who preferred
the dignity of their being mute

in that silence of leaves upon heaps of those molds and moss stories told....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are The Realities...

we do not deny the greenness of grass the blueness of the clouds the airiness of space the silence of
the world
we conceive them we think we reflect we are the mirrors and through us they must speak through us they must live that greenness, blueness, that air, that space
when we are gone what do they have?
ah, they are nothing they turn into nothing we bear them in the basket of our thoughts when the basket is broken they too are broken for who can tell that the flower has bloomed except our mouths
when this mouth turns to ask no Phoenix shall from ashes rise...

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are The Roots

for we are the roots penetrating the wombs
of mother earth

and up there we see God as the Flower of all of our longings

the sky between us
is the stalk
the clouds are the leaves and the winds are our whispers
to one another

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are The Unknown In The Equation Of Mankind

in the dark
we do not need to know each other we do not have to make a sound we must only listen in so doing
we see a flicker of light and we feel that sense of humanity that was lost
we are but shadows of the facing light if we are in love and lonely we offer our hands to touch a shoulder to lean on a body for warmth because in the dark it is cold and even eerie

we shy away from light because too much of it blinds us we are the new creatures that thrive in our unique greatness in dusk and
twilight

we are not evil
we are those who believe in anonymity

RIC S. BASTASA
We Are Witnesses To View These Deeds

we are here
the living witnesses to view God's creations,

the compact grain of sand containing the whole
of this universe

the drops of rain
his blessings to the earth the wings of birds

the flights of flocks

we are pilgrims
we come naked
we go home naked

we take nothing
we bring nothing

here we are as witnesses in awe in wonder to God's wondrous deeds

Praise Him
forever

the 'hands of my heart are clapping' my lips are singing my heart is jumping with joy

Praise Him
Our God forever....
We Become Strangers Again

your hands are cold and so are mine
the night is not as interesting as what we want to say i look to the sea
you look to the mountains when i begin to say something you come up with more words to this dismay
i begin to look for fireflies there are none.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Begin To Really Know

we keep on blaming them those who steal from us whatever we have given all by heart and mind.

we scheme for another revolution and forgive ourselves for our past losses

many lives, a river of blood a broken bridge. a house burned an explosion at the wrong hour killing those not intended vengeance is blind and terror is so unkind. There is no name for hatred. There is no address for violence.

we lose sight of who are are we sit on the river banks wondering where this water comes from and why is there streaks of blood on the rock and sands old age creeps on our brows white hairs taunt us to stop our legs are weary and our mind start to forget where we are heading

some new faces are learning and will want to follow and ask for our old maps

we look at them with pity we cry for our misfortunes then we have decided to move out to secret islands and unknown caves they lose contacts of us and there we begin to write what horror we have inflicted upon our souls

weary now, we begin to really know.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Build

we build new windows framed with strong wood and carved with flowers and birds we build new doors
we let the vines grown their tendrils again we watch and we keep on building some more new floors and ceilings that know how to sing chairs that are learning how to embrace our hips we begin to see new clouds we busy ourselves to make life click and tick and pick up from where we think we ought to have died we refuse this call for dissolution there are meanings coming up for new beginnings

we build a new house simply because we are uncertain beyond these broken pillars.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Bury Our Burdens

we carry a sack
full of everything the trivial and not so trivial to the others which we sometimes deem to be important

we start cramping things in a small pack
a pair of shoes, a plaque, a bat, white polo shirt, underwear, the certificates, some poems even a book about romance with some molds on the hard cover

where shall i bury all these things?
for i am moving to another place
this morning

i wait for the high tide or which comes first the dusty early morning
on the road
this cranky motor vehicle bound for the dry mountain
where a hole is ready tagging a shovel

RIC S. BASTASA
We Can Never Be....

without them
we can never be
it is us
not me.

i have been searching myself and found none of it until i immersed myself in them until i become not just a raindrop but a part of the sea

until then i have lost every part of me only to find it joyous with the rest of our humanity.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Cannot Live In Your Place Together, Can'T Breathe

in a world veiled by jade silk
i know what is there
i enter the door of tassel and feel cotton
wall and you see me
thinking that i live there too
sorry
but i live in the other side on floor stone
with my bone.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Cannot Really Be Ourselves

your desires
are yours secrets
if they become
visible
they will see a
desert of
carcass where vultures wait
for their double
kill

what is said
is superficial
these are the
norms and the
dictates of good
behavior of our present time

when we arrive
in the house of our
best friend
we sit on his chair
inside the house
we are free
to sip coffee and
talk about anything
but mind you
we sift, and limit
our drift
' this is not our
house' you say
we cannot really
be ourselves
like cows on the
pasture
like a pig on
its sty.
We Complicate We Simplify We Complicate

eyesterday's conversation was a pendulum of grandfather's clock we were there swinging to and fro it was complicated and we discussed to simplify what was complicated that we made so complicated.
we planted such simple seeds on the ground time made it grow into a vine. A squash seed growing into a crown.
A coffin, a carriage. A wreath.
Then back to the crown, and laurels, and trumpets.

you like a simple life, but there isn't baby.
you said you do not want to complicate.
But life has become so sophisticated and Cannot confront simplicity with a short, concise smile.
There are tears. Rivers of tears.

You shy aways from convolutions.
But life is convoluted baby. The turbulence within that you Refuse to state with dignity.
The storms raging inside us.
They shake us and we pretend there is none to speak?

What a mess! What a life!
Repeat it. What a life I have!

I am merry. I am happy. I am whistling. I am singing. I am dancing.
You are the newly crowned fool of this division.

Congratulations.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Could Have Been Someone Else....

sometimes accept the fact that we want to be someone else that part in us which we dislike or hate, we want it trashed, if only we can skin it off from our bones, we could have done so, but in so doing we hurt each nerve, which creeps to the deepest part of our soul, and the pain is so excruciating and we learn this lesson of pain, which we cannot endure and so we just let it be, we just let it be, like those thorns in roses, those prickly things in cactus, those needles in porcupines, those shattered glasses on the road after Christmas, those nails exposed in a broken house.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Decided To Cut Some Trees

we planted the seeds together we were thinking of fruits for our children we were thinking of the shade where they can
in the future play

then the fruits in bounty came mangoes loaded
and some water apples shining on the twigs

the fruits ripen and some birds came and ate them
the fruits ripen and some fell on the ground and some worms came and ate them the trees get tired finally of the seasons flowering, fruiting, falling and rotting and trying to repeat the cycle all over

again
for years and years

we got old of waiting for something new and exciting we got bored of the fruits the children of the neighbors got married and left the place we got old and tired and this day we decided to cut the trees some for the first time we are too shaded we want to see light come we want to know what sunshine is again, after all those years of coldness and darkness under the shady trees

perhaps, this is something new now light and sun and another way to look at our lives
something exciting something to open to see blue skies to see the full moon to feel warmth to let the worms sing to see some precious stones hidden all these years in our common paths

RIC S. BASTASA
We Did Not...

my father is dead
i miss asking

him asking this old question which i had been keeping inside me for all those years: why do we hesitate to say

we love each other?
what is wrong?

today i bring him
flowers in his grave

i light three red candles and i still

keep in silence how we could have said

those words but we really couldn't.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Did What We Could To Make Love So Real

Thank you for the night its coldness and darkness had serve us rightly we did what we could to make love so real

that moment when we part i to the north and you to the south
we fall short of courage to leave the word
on that empty bench

the world remains
what it is
the blue ocean
the green mountain
steady stones
as usual
indifferent and unaffected

to two lonely souls converging and then
be diverted.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Disconnect

we disconnect because the link is weak and the burden on the shoulder is too heavy,

we carry an emptiness like a cape without rain we disconnect only to find other links ready we lose and we shy away from regret the fingers weaken

and the mind gropes for more like hands wanting to touch another soft body in the dark we disconnect only to fuse again this time more cautious whom, what, when

and why

RIC S. BASTASA
We Do Not Bother Finally....

it is the blood in you that is in him too that makes you believe
otherwise

did you not say that this place has changed that much that it used to be peaceful that it used to be beautiful and that now it is as ugly as you detest it to be in such a way that you do not want to return here anymore and if you stay it will not be long as you only wish to visit a dying mother and that after the funeral you are going to fly away like a migrating bird to the melting west let me tell you that people change too we also change the way we see you and you do not belong with us anymore which we have accepted since then when you write no letters when you did not make

a call,

this is our only country our mother whatever it is we remain here loyal and faithful
willing to die
for whatever reason
selfish or false.

now who are you?
and who are we?
strangers now to each other we do not bother
finally....
We Do Not Have To Speak, They Have All Spoken

it is all there at night the stars then the clouds and sky sometimes the rainbow too and the dew and mist on the grass and glass and there are seagulls and cliffs and dolphins and seas.

to understand ourselves and the parallels all isosceles and ice and tips of icebergs.
we do not have to speak, they have all spoken.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Do Not Know Yet Where To Stop

in this journey
we do not know yet where to stop

no one stops us
and there seems to be no final destination yet some stopped suddenly threw themselves overboard this ship somehow we think otherwise as the excitement never ceases what is there? we keep asking we bring nothing and so we give nothing in return we keep an open eye and so we have remained awesome

just that
why do we have to ask for more?

RIC S. BASTASA
We Do Not Make A Difference At All

Some of us who do not know anymore how to live find the issue of wars irrelevant

if it comes, it comes,
we are dying slowly anyway and tomorrow's instant death because two powers blow each other by a nuclear annihilation does not really make a difference.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Do Not Make Things Hard For Us Baby

well we choose roads separate ways
we decide to end
an affair and leave nothing along
the paths
we summon the rain
and the wind and the rush of the waters
to erase any stain
to ease the pain

shadows dissolving
naturally inside
a dark night

RIC S. BASTASA
We Do Not Really Need A Lot Of Things In Our Life

we mend something that is broken
or torn we know how to heal when we are
hurt
we walk away
when it is too crowded
we always know what is lacking
we always know what we discard
we do not really need
much
to be alive

only if we try the fullness
of simplicity

RIC S. BASTASA
We Do Not State The Obvious

we do not state the obvious
redundancy is ugly, what we see we keep on saying, and we do not spoil it with a mention. To keep peace and love, we do the samba, we toast a drink, we offer a smoke,
we just talk about something else unrelated.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Dream Of A Soul

technique roams the earth searching for a place to call home each door that he knocks shuts him out
the world does not have any space for him to be at least
this man for another chance in change
for the better

we tell him
he has a soul
we tell him
he must rise
from his body

so one day he dreams he has one he believes what we had been saying he has a soul
he has a spirit to embolden his body one that rises above his curse his adversity did we not deceive him? leaving him in such a dream redemption, resurrection, those fit for gods and the chosen ones?

look at him
wandering again, knocking from door to door moving from one place to another looking for that bishop who must adopt him

Jean Valjean, in your misery and the coming miseries where can this bishop be?
this century, where beliefs are given where nothing that satisfies your belly is still hidden.

we dream of a soul
we negate this body, this flesh, this daily dying

RIC S. BASTASA
We Filipinos Have Also Our Own Nationalistic Pride like you we are also nationalists in our own brown right try discriminating us and we also know how to discriminate you (of course)

in our country (Lang) only if you are hospitable to us we are even more hospitable to you we have roasted pigs for dinner fresh cocoa, hot with gelatenuous rice (suman) and sweet ripe mangoes served on breakfast and some delicacies of fried frogs, snakes, eels, and dog meat, wild boars, (sa mga bukot bukot lang pud noon) and coconut meat (butong palana ba?) and pork (adobo nga gasinaw sinaw sa tambok tambal sa highblood) we provide you free board and lodging and free ballroom dancing in our barangay with the town mayor even as emcee for your welcome party and lots and lots of free entertainment and it will only take you with little american things to flatter us giving us chocolates and some key chains and books (nga dili pud namo basahon noh kay daghang trabaho sa bukid or book marks to reciprocate us

but take note, if you insult us, the whole barrio shall be against you, and some cannot hold their temper (ag mga adis adis ug mga ilaga kaniadto nga mokilaw ug atay sa tawo kadtong dili madutlan ug bala) they will eat you raw and you embassy will have a hard time tracing your whereabouts or your bones and other body parts scattered in some parts of this philippine archipelago see? welcome to our country. Behave Baby.

No one will skin you alive.
so? be good always, and we will also be good to you.

These are our keys to open our country’s doors.
(galot pud ang pinoy? noh?)
And there are no closing hours.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Fill Again With Our Laughter

I'd sleep for hours and you worry why
at noon i haven't awakened

i am a fish hibernating in the winter of my life don't you worry come summer I'll be with you again alive and human still by that time the ice has melted and a pond is made and we shall wade in the water that we fill again with our laughter

RIC S. BASTASA
We Find New Things And Compare The Old

year by year
we scrutinize tradition

we sort beliefs and well, discard some

we find new things
and compare the old

we know some are wrong and we begin to accept what we think is right, we ponder,

it is still about us, how we must survive

how to play the game and enjoy it more

i like it, that photo, when we all look up to the sky, to the heavens, to what is beyond us.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Go Out From Our Closed Doors

we go out from our closed doors we watch
from their windows

not just a dropp of rain a frozen fern
a haggard stone
a cloud of doubt an iron curtain
a broken tendon
a very thin man
a hard pair of gloves

we shall see birds of the same feathers men of character women of passion
flowing rivers
wide mouth of the seas

we shall see a choir of angels we shall see the face of God

RIC S. BASTASA
We Got Sunshine In The Philippines

we finally got sunshine
after the rain
it is a beautiful showering morning after a night of storm
we got yellow brick roads and confetti
we are a happy people
now
the voice of God
has spoken

RIC S. BASTASA
We Had Lived And Died And Survived

The best people in this world are those who underestimate us these people, bring the best in us you say we are tiny people and we tell them that we really are and we say we like attacking and questioning and even harming the big people out there and that most of us are either dead or or badly injured, dying and salvaged and kept in detentions and solitary places of their wicked hearts

they keep on humiliating us and we keep on blooming as though the insults are water and fertilizers to our beings we become seeds growing underneath their cruelties
for long but they won't last like everyone else
like us

and that is fair enough i suppose when we come out from here perhaps we see each other again

not as priests, or doctors or lawyers or politicians but as naked souls heading for our own reserved places whatever that be

we who had been subjected to the hell of this earth are not surprised if there is hell or heaven
we do not care
we had the former anyway and we had lived and died and survived.
We Hated Goodbyes

i too wish of the wine, the drunkenness, and the togetherness that night, when we have become free-willy, no thoughts, just our bodies, no restraints, nothing about tomorrow, when we were lost, and yet so happy, and when we wake up that morning, we did not really know what we were doing, we're all wet in dryness, lips cracked, bruised bodies, strangled hairs, satisfied navels,
and then, that which we hated,
yes, goodbyes.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have Arrived To This

Ruin. We say we have no more reason to stay. We have no other place to go. How did we ever think about ruin as the last word of our sentence? Now, we are here Breakfast is ready. No one is taking the fork and the sun facing us is nothing but this egg, scrambled.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have Arrived....

the way to survive
this ordeal, after 54 years of intimacy, as the rest of the remaining moments, detest, what is here, and what comes,
is to keep the silence, this fragile flower amidst the rocks, at the top of this cliff, the strong winds roar, leaves have no more ears, and the feet of shrubs no longer creep, it is....
this silence that we keep,
that promises us, not to touch, a wound, our blindness heals, our numbness assures the years, it is this institution, this door which we freely open, and this room which we without haste, enter... there is no time to talk about it, we have split, like wood, we are ready for the fire.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have Been Keeping Too Inside Our Minds

Someone reminds us about our shadows on the wall someone hears the music but no one is dancing someone remembers what we were when we were still small where no one minds where no one takes us seriously like a nail to the hammer someone hides away from us and leaves a note that he is collecting shells and gathering leaves someone misses us so badly but we are drinking to the noise and dancing to the beat of sticks and belts we don't remember that someone anymore his name does not sound like the names our parents gave us yes we forget because we do not agree about how life should be spent in a closed container someone says he is contained and soon shall be exploding like what we have been keeping too inside our minds.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have Been Silent

we have been to silent and they think we are but a pair of sad stories always being told at bedtime i do not like this silence. Deadening my ears have become caves for bats (who cares? i care now i want to see the world with all its noise and troubles)

why? (common let us make all the noise we can muster, let us shout, scream, jump, stamp our feet, hit the walls with our fists, and run wild into the forest, splash our bodies to the rivers
of time..

why? oh why?
(simple. so we can forget our own miseries, these silent murderers shooting us
for nothing.)

let us not be too silent.
are we not mistaken by them as
dead?

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have Changed We Cannot Distinguish Anymore Which Is Which....

we are getting older
and we have changed
a lot

at the store we are not buying anything
at all

the house is full and there is no place
for another
furniture

the grasses have grown tall and the flowers are choking but who cares to weed
what is evil now?

it is like we're at the pre-departure area
leaving for russia

or any place where we have never been before we like to feel this excitement and leave all the sadness behind

we have changed we cannot distinguish anymore
which is which....

RIC S. BASTASA

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
We Have Decided To Start Anew....

under the moon
when talk is less
where poetry is more like gaze and
touch

where words are set aside as flowers from the vase petals plucked thorns and stalk thrown apart

we have decided to start anew
with what prose is left upon another first kiss after fifty-four years

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have Known What The Universe Is.

i think i become.
on that stone page, it says what i think i become.
it is the mind that shapes the eventualities of this and that that body, that stone henge what is justice and what is revenge i become because i think. this is not just the play of words, there is no confusion but all fusions that is what they think and they become. recall that one evening when we lay our bodies on the sand and watch all the stars.

we have known what the universe is.
and the stars sing, and meteors shoot and silence sits on its throne of darkness.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have No Right To Tell Them How To Live..

yesterday we visited
the mountain
we walked for hours and
hours
until we reached this small village of natives who do not speak our language

they say they are free to roam the mountains and the forest and kill animals and eat them for food they say they own everything here and no one tells them what to do with their lives

they hunt: kill and kill they do not till the land they say they own all of these and they are not responsible for any degradation for any consumption

this is paradise and they do not have to work at all.

we stayed for hours listening and watching their world their mountains and forest we who have no right to tell them how to live: the road smells blood

the room of the house is a mess children are left on the grounds without their mothers men smoke their pipes women sit on the stairs pulling some lice

the old men drink hard liquor with the old women when they die they are buried at once without those long rituals this is paradise they say they spend it the way they want to and we merely watch without saying anything: we just pass by and it will be soon that we leave and perhaps forget that this is paradise for them.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have Not Met Yet

as you read my poems you imagine what my face would be given said facts and thoughts like the way i spend my nights writing and facing the computer till twilight, i must be thin, and since i have lesser sleep, i must have dark deep, sunken, almond eyes like the insomniac's night, my lips may have cracked due to many coffee cups giving liveliness to my lines, my shoulders may have fallen,
due to extreme exhaustion, my skin may have dried and my hair may have been scattered by the strong wind like those poets who no longer care for their health and hygiene.

i am sorry but you are wrong.
You have to see me to know me.
You have to touch my hand and feel the warmth of my palms.
You have to touch my hair to feel the softness of my soul.

i will that poet who orders plain mineral water instead of beer.
I may wear a black coat but there will be no white carnations inside the pocket of my chest.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have Ourselves Still Intact Through These Years

she was adamant confused
what good is left what reason to keep her alive

it is dawn
the world is still silent
there is no
light yet outside
the window
there is no moon
no sun

i caress her hair
'my dear
when did the bad
ever triumph over the good?'

have hope
keep the courage
trust God
believe in you

and then we kiss sorrow goodbye
and then we keep peace in our hearts

what do we have?
we have ourselves
still intact through these years

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have The Key

the images
tickle the skin around my thighs

and they always keep telling me
my name

and then i look at them
and they look at me
and without even the sign of my finger

we simply understand
we belong here
we are happy with each other

this place has a name but we are the only ones who can utter it

we have the code
and you shall not see the key
that opens the door
to our freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have The Storms On Time

We have the storms on time in time for more stories to tell

A ship sank carrying a load of 600 passengers lost and unaccounted,

A loaded boat lost in the middle of Surigao Trench, 40 passengers lost and unaccounted including a new born child and a sick mother and the expectant
father:

More stars are shining tonight and then fade against the black clouds and the strong winds.

And in the morning
a fifteen-minute silence for all those that perished, we say all our prayers in solemn silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have This Hope

that crime does not pay
that at the end the good will be triumphant that the good shall be rewarded the bad punished

we have this hope
inside our hearts

we insist on this hope as though we own it

i guess my dear
we must also have some reservations for all these

as you said
in your hometown the bad guys win

RIC S. BASTASA
We Have To Live And Move On With Our Daily Lives..

at first
the killing calls for attention
and attention is poured like champagne
to a glass closely watched by the customer

then the killing becomes too rampant everyday here and there broadcast over the radio tv, and rumored by everyone in the city
and finally

it becomes a routine nothing strange and people get attuned acclimated to the bloody rain to the sounds of gunburst to the harrowing nights of being caught and shot and those who at first watch with curiousity finally give up giving all these attentions

busy with their lives
the do what is usual for
survival
home, office, church, market back home, watch tv, eat dinner, brush teeth, change clothes and make love and sleep tired of the whole's days demands
and so the dead does not care for the dead and so the night passes away the morning comes the day ends
with nothing worth telling
anymore

and so the dead bury their
dead
and so the living says we have to live and move on with our daily lives....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Just Have To Make The Best Of It...

these are the lines of a 90 year-old widower just put in the nursing home trying to put the pieces again those past parts
no longer fit as she agrees with her son that she does not serve any purpose
at all in that old house with a closed door never to be opened again how she resigned from the usual cooking and baking and putting the flowers in the vase half watered as she talks to another wrinkled woman sitting next to her she mutters, 'Lady, we just have to make the best of what we are now'

Then the other quipped, 'Do i look ninety? '

Outside the nursing home, the snow begins to fall.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Keep The Pain Inside Us

we keep the pain inside us, we feel happy too at times but happiness seems to be a bad teacher
whatever lesson is found there we always easily forget pain is magnificent when it comes we really feel it down to the last nerve to the last marrow of our bones even rattling

with the sound of its groans and wailings and so here i am again writing, learning, exposing the poet of pain unswerving, and you may not like this

i, am, this, poet, this, pain, this, universe where, you, also, revolve, take, orbit, where,
you, are, a, part,
of, this, poem, please,
move, on, we, may, have,
this, needless, collision, let me have my way, i am about to explode

RIC S. BASTASA
We Keep You Going

not just me but we, we keep you going riding on that train the images meeting you
in a flash
of lightning
without the sound of muscular thunder

the white wings
of solitude
heigtened in your haiku the clouds of the dry land
the rain trying to make a new river on that dry
bed

RIC S. BASTASA
We Know So Well

that things are seen much better when they are not so obvious, more beautiful in silhouettes
in the opaqueness
of the rain
glass,
in the indirectness of
faith,
in the depths of blue when we learn
to dive.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Land On The Softness Of Home.

I am sitting on a stairway just sitting here

i am not waiting for someone just sitting here anyway

i am watching dusts and birds flying low on the trees, you know what? i have found peace in all that come and go watching all these make me feel like what i am seeing: dusts, birds too light with their own kind of wings, and always moving or drifting and i imagine how serene can nights be when finally we land on the softness of home.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Like To Be Reminded Of Our Presence

we get tired and try to take a nap on a soft sofa in our sala we lay there in silence we do not want to talk we simply want to close our eyes and see things inside us we remember a lot of things a cup of coffee that we sip together on a roadside cafe somewhere in france we remember little things like a pin, a ring, a handkerchief then we move on to something that knows what rotting means a dry leaf, a mossy side of the pool a dead tree, a rolling log, a cabin then we get too engrossed in silence and hazy places, a room dimly lit by this halogen lamp creating a certain warmth that we remember some arms and hands and lips we want something delightful we begin to speak to someone beside us how was your day? have you eaten your dinner?

then you transfer to your bed and then you sleep and dream
with her beside you. You turn off the light.

Outside, it is dark like the color of a woman's hair.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Like To Change Somehow

between our two houses is a high wall and what we see are only
the tips of trees when we climb the stairs
and stay on top
between us is this old feeling of envy
the anger that we have inherited from our origins and then we claim that we are too busy to resolve them we do not bother talking about them and so the houses stand tall and proud as they are our defenses against our craving for oneness
the walls are guards of our weakness our longing to call ourselves with our very own
names

RIC S. BASTASA
We Like To View Reconciliation great movies always have common themes how the weak have become strong or the poor have risen above the levels of their poverty and the defeat of exploitation how mortal enemies after the years of war have finally settled for a reconciliation

the triumph of the good above evil
how love conquers practically all obstructions
how peace defeated war how we have opted to hope rather than be lost in misery

in reality
there are more untruths

you tell me that these are possibilities as i begin to be brave and silent and then move away

RIC S. BASTASA
We Lose Sight Of The Face Of The Blue Clouds

as we step into the clear water of the river we create the ripples we lose sight of the face of the blue clouds we find for ourselves an embroidery of drifting leaves

we dip our bodies to the coolness of the water i search for serene love at the bottom where you are waiting

we kiss and embrace beside the slippery stone the moss is green
each step as slippery as an ell
each kiss and breath a bubble we send to the surface of the river the water flows farther and farther until we begin not to see what happens next.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Love Them...

we give them pork
and let them drink milk we give them superb baths and thick towels
we offer them our beds and let them have tan in our beaches
my wife loves each of
them
and keeps them nice
company
and instructs them english grammar

these dogs!

RIC S. BASTASA
We Love To Do Bad Behind Walls And When We Go Out We Like To Be Seen Unblemished out there you are an angel and they always love the softness of your feathers the innocence of your angelic face your coyness

you make them feel so good and holy, then you go inside your house, close the door and the windows you remove your pair of wings lay them on the corner of your resting place you unlock the secret cover that keeps your holiness you remove some parts here and there and you look at the mirror and smile how you fool everyone you rub your body with the usual throbbings of your truths comes out the sap of evil that your real body secretes foul dirty

pungent
and all these things you really love to eat when you are left all alone, the body of a wolf, the face of the demon, the tail of a snake

the teeth of the shark the poison of the tarantula it is you and your liquids and sap inside you

everything is evil

tonight you will think of other new thoughts schemes, ways and manners of projections for your future
you sleep and dream
accustomed to evil you have killed your conscience tomorrow, soon,

the people will know, something deep within you keeps whispering.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Move On No Matter What....

at that dead end
we let things go
we let people be
we narrow down to what is here and what we are and what we will be.

and so if cesar
does not know how to live or if papa
by his own hands
removes all the
gadgets for life support or if the old neighbor who is abandoned by all his children does not open the window of her house what can we do?

we all let them be.
we all let them be.

and we shall bring flowers for the dead
and we light candles for their souls and we say all the prayers that we can muster
during those long hours of mourning

and then we move on
with our own lives
always learning new things new tricks
new ideas and we make a promise
we go on, we move on no matter what....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Move On, We Have To, If We Do Not, What Are We?

the eye for beauty has malfunctioned

what used to be a sharp color has become a blunted dullness

there were no blinks the stares are stabbing right into the heart of the matter

what is happening to you?
why did you succumb to such a stillness?

idol of the sculptress
the new prince of the trees?

we move on, we have to,
if we do not, what are we?

RIC S. BASTASA
We Need All These

we need some flowers to ease the dimness when darkness shrouds our thoughts we need the moon's sheen to assuage the sickness that invades our spirits after a hard day's work we need to unwind and relax and sit and watch from our chairs the trees below the winding paths

the fading of the light

we need the conversations after the meetings the closed doors that we finally open the sound of steps leaving we need the walk with someone

hand in hand
between the needed silence

we need the sound of spoons and forks the sound of hot water from the teapot we need all these to bring us again to our youthful memories about whatever good we once did about whatever faults we have mended.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Need Not Complicate

in our simplicity here when we ask you if you need dinner we do not allow you to ask for choices we cannot afford it we merely want you to answer either yes
or no.

RIC S. BASTASA
We No Longer Have Cookies This Time.

that capacity to not agree but still tolerate a discussion which gives you that feeling that something's wrong but just the same you continue sitting on that chair fronting his as both of you from time to time
sip hot coffee, black and strong
to make both of you wake up for another acceptable bitterness

Life is always a taxi that you have to take.
You pay every for every ride. Every meter is money.

Still waiting for the spectacular, as you watch beyond this glass which keeps the silence decent.

now we like it as always hot and bitter.
black and will always be black.

we no longer have cookies
this time.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Offer Fifteen Minutes Of Silence For The Japanese Victims......

(R..........................) ........................................
..........................................................................
.........................................................................
........................................................................
........................................................................
........................................................................

RIC S. BASTASA
We Once Had All These

bridges that fell down to the river roads that end
dead,
ships that sink and touch the bottom of the ocean
abandoned houses
forests and murky waters of the lake misty mornings
foggy nights floating states and nowhere thoughts fists clenched
sewn lips, bored teeth, bound legs, and tangled hair bruises and wounds scars and fluffy eyes deaths in November
a December that failed to connect.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Prefer The Mystery Of Our Faith

we always want to like what we do not understand what we understand most becomes too familiar and true to the saying what is too familiar
becomes contemptible
we prefer the mystery of our faith
and to keep us alive we begin to refuse to understand afraid that soon
nothing is interesting anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
We Pretend We Play With Words to soothe the choking effects of the day, and those days that come to us like two walls while we lay helpless in between, we pretend we pretend to play with words, like we are simply children scribbling words on the floor beyond the ambit of paper

we pretend that this writing is nothing but little games. we like to be just light feathers floating in the wind looking at the petal of the flower trying to choose which patch of grass to land, we pretend this is just that doodles, noodles, needles, needles, doddles, we pretend that this writing poetry has nothing to do with what we are: feelings like words in a crossword puzzle we tinker with meanings, we like to experiment with moods, like handpainting on the walls and spraying paint at the fences of our bad neighbors trying to evade laws, of falling and flying and rising and dropping, this is just a play of words, do not ask me again if i am in between the lines if there are tears there, or that laughter and mockery is hidden underneath the cover of heavy sheets of sentences we pretend there is nothing to all these.

when we stop, when that right time comes it will be dark, and we like children all stop playing and shouting and running and kidding and calling each other names when we stop it is always dark. The fear is lost. It is time to go.

Home. Where we are united with our loved ones. Where we begin to speak the truth about us. Where we sleep. Where all the lights are turned off.
We give way for the moon to shine above our silent roofs.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Quit Because Words Are Just Hindrances To What We Become.....

we have long
spoken
our biases are speaking
we have long exposed
what we feel
how we choose words how we arrange them

sometimes we reject
too much thinking

could be destructive and we embrace
spontaneity

writing as we please leaning on first impressions on first thoughts
not sifting
not even sensing what is here and there just this and then go in the long run

we write because there is something in us which we cannot say bluntly and bluntly to others

there is no fear somehow but who knows if we could be wrong?

i've seen sunsets and sunrises i have no thoughts there just the plain viewing of their natural transformations how scenes change without the use of words how light comes and break dawns how morning is here without a greeting it wont be long when we do not use words anymore when we say we quit because words are just hindrances to what we become.....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Rock

whatever it is
political, social, physical,
metaphysical

flesh, spirit, evil good, air earth sand rock bird or stone hammer or nail

keep writing black white yellow brown

we rock.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Shall Give It Sense...

an empty jar
outside the house

it is raining
and the glass windows are misty

the waters begin to rise clouds are still heavy and dark

outside the winds are strong and it is getting colder the coconut trees are dancing and the leaves are flying doves roost in their umbrella house and chickens and roosters keep strict company in the pens an empty jar is filled with water and there is no hole inside it there is an overflowing and it is what i am feeling i am giving it sense

we shall give it sense

this emptiness, this rain, this cold, this umbrella house,

there are no holes in them.
doves and chickens and roosters.
pens.
We Shall Meet Soon

we shall soon meet
and i shall wear the best of what i have an off-white shirt
the khaki pants, clear reading glasses i'll sport my shortest hair i'll wear my black shoes with mud on its side no socks, no wrist watch, no cell phone, nothing to smoke, nothing to say no word from me when we meet i will sip my coffee beside you no promises no talks about heaven neither hell, you talk i will listen, you tell me stories i will be patient tell me more about hellos skip the sad stories about goodbyes. let there be no time that runs you keep on talking i shall listen. And if you wish kiss me and we shall not mind what they will say.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Shall Return There Again

kini ang wala na nimo makita gusto nimong ilubong ang imong hulagway

this is what you have not seen you want to bury those images

diha sa likod sa balay nga nipa sa kilid sa punoan sa nangka nga wala na mamunga sa layo dili na nimo

at the back of your house made of nipa shingles beside the langka tree which did not bear fruits at the distance you cannot kaayo maklaro ang usa ka iro nga puti nga dunay puntik nga itom sa iyang wala nga mata gutom nangarol bahong patay nga baki

anymore see clearly that dog with a black make on its eye hungry and sickly and smelling like a rotten dead toad wala na'y tawo kining balaya hagbay ra namong gibiyaan

no one lives in this house anymore
it was long ago that they left ang nagpabilin lamang mao angmga handurawan nga nagpunay og hinuktok sa kilid sa bintana nga hagbay rang nadugta what is left here are only the memories which are restless

by the side of the window which was also rotten

gibilitik ang iro
ghimong sumsuman
sa mga palaignt

the dog was trapped
made as viand
by the drunkards

ang lubi nga tigulang wala gyoy mga pulak

the old coconut tree did not bear fruits anymore

ang kabaw gikitlan
ug ilang gipaambitan

the buffalo was butchered and they shared the loot ang dalan nangliki na gumikan sa dakong hulaw

the path cracks
because of the drought

kini ang dili mo
gusto nga mabati apan sayod ko sa pag-abot sa saktong panahon ato lang gihapon balikan
this is the one that you do not like to feel but i know that the time will come on that ripe moment
we shall return there again

RIC S. BASTASA
We Shall Soon Be The Same

we shall be one
for sooner
because you keep on following me
wherever i am
you shall sound like me
and then when you look at the mirror
you shall look
like me

misery
has only one
face

now it is ours

misery has
one familiar sound distinctly

ours
now.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Shared The Same River

we shared the same
river
same youth but we parted just the same like everyone who knows what a river is how it branches like a tree
and yet seeing the same
sun
how rivers part like the way we divide our hair still situated on the same
face

i always remember this and i despise regret what we did not do when we could have done it.

RIC S. BASTASA
we sit inside this lonely train on a trip
that we have chosen
i look at you
writing on your laptop but you do not mind when our eyes meet
i evaded you by looking over the window
the trees that pass us and the mountains
like game cards shuffled before us
in such a fast speed
as i see it
you look like this poet wanting to be alone by himself
i am a poet too
in my own right in my own far place
away from you
i want to ask you some existential questions but you are so busy and so engrossed in deep moving thoughts sensing our irreconcilable differences you close everything and transfer to another room
wanting to be alone
with no one to talk to except yourself
and here i am
talking to myself
like a cheap copycat We Start

we start
as usual and as what they always tell us and what we also do
from the beginning
like a lazy waking up
in the morning
and we stretch our arms like a cat yawning
and we move through the day till noontime and we work so hard earning our bread and butter and leaving so many other important things behind us until we reach this darkness of our lives where our flesh surrenders
and the bone gets lonelier each hour
and then we reach the end when we ask
where are we
and why?

sadness
seals what we once left open locking in everything we should have done
that early morning

RIC S. BASTASA
We Still Do Not Really Know Where

do not be tempted to take this matter
as a game of words

words are merely tools

boats where we take ride
for a while

wings which we wear
so we can be in places of the heart

we do not wish to be birds and be birds

neither do we take strengths from rigs and paddles

we are singers here
chanters

we are bringing with us the clarity of our destinations

we sing because there is a need
we speak because our silence needs
be broken sometimes

to comfort us
to bring us to places we long but we still do not really know where
RIC S. BASTASA
We Still Have Love...

we start with the tradition of life we begin as bodies tasting the fire of the flesh savoring each moment of skin and bones
and hair

time has a crucible it tests us about what we are what are our intentions what is in our hearts

our bodies are taken the flesh weakens
the fire subsides
the skin loosens from the hold of the bones the bones crack
the hairs have fallen into surrender

we have become mere minds intangible intentions our hearts lose the sounds of the drums of life we have no more hands to hold with each other we have become the wind we breathe into each other the love that shall then be forgotten we have become the sighs of the earth into the darkness of its nights what then my love? must we transcend the havoc that life has caused upon us?

tomorrow, the eyes of death shall stare at us we must decide let not any stone of earth be disappointed

we still have love
beyond and above.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Take Joy And We Set Aside Sadness

what we share is time but greater than time are the memories that we make and what we mean are the great times of
our lives
both of us having always a good time savoring sushi in saisaki or merely sitting down our faces facing the wind and the sun on that beach island

but greater than these great times are what? there could be none but that which takes us back to square one or ground zero where is that place
and what time is it whom are you with

and then we do not remember but here in this tropical place we have no time to cry we take things lightly
we take joy and we set aside sadness

if we cannot remember they know what we do and we also know what they do we just laugh it out...

RIC S. BASTASA
We The Busy Ones

we proclaim
we are the busy ones they call us the bees
we work all day extending our arms and legs to the night
we work till dawn
we too make love
we compose ourselves arrange our faces
like flowers and leaves and twigs
we work and work till we find that rest....

don't think of death

go find another date gather the ripe dates
in the desert
have a big plate
savor the taste in your palate.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Think Life Stops

life stops like the way we hold each other's hands at dawn
and then we simply feel nothing like the way i put my right leg on top of your thighs and

you say nothing

life stops when we think there is nothing significant about ourselves anymore

there is nothing
in your belly and there is nothing
in my veins

we think life stops
like the way we keep on going because we cannot stop to keep on moving

we think
life stopped

but actually life never stops even when we think it stopped moving even when we actually stop loving

RIC S. BASTASA
We Trace Our Roots

depressed

there are ways of tracing our roots where we come from why we are here

how our forefathers braved the seas and survived the big waves of uncertainties
the cold, dark nights of their fears how they all believed in dreams how they trusted the direction given by the stars how they solidified their hearts with faith and hope

and love

as i listen to all of you talk about the stories of our ancestors
my mind begins to to grow and travel like roots
deep down the earth tracing some humus where i must live again perhaps ever braver than the pioneers they are our ancestors and i think, they still believe that since we come from them we must all be like them, my dear cousin, now we have become the roots ourselves and another child shall come in the future and listen some more, wanting to become branches and leaves and flowers

RIC S. BASTASA
We Two Together...

i do not wish to change you when we met, we already have minds of our own,

i can only love you,
&
it is a love that is so strong, and it can change the course of your river

i can only care for you, and it is so cautious and gentle that it can make you rethink and perhaps change the way you look at things and events, i can only kiss you and hug you and make love with you and it is so intense and intimate that it can make you forget who you were once and can make you know that in this place of earth we two have become one our eyes now looking towards the same direction....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Two, Still In This Together

we sleep too early we must be getting old then we wake up at 2 o'clock and we are not surprised we feel the need to talk about almost anything

we feel thirsty and we go to the kitchen we are the only people here taking emotions till dawn no one hears us in this isolation we are fenced with so much privacy we lose time

we have forgotten to synchronize with the world now when they are asleep here we are waking up to take our meals

we shun television
we go for sitting together and remembering we must be old, and even older than we think we do not talk about love we support each other's need to be with the other we face each other and once again discern about how lonely could this world be if we parted ways and live our lives independently we exchange feelings like gifts and always excited what we can find hidden beneath our hearts opened by the careful hands of our minds...

We Walk Naked In The Rain

we walk in the rain, we walk naked in the rain we like the shower in nude, we like the droppings of rain in our nudity dripping in our curving naked bodies, in eroticism to all the waters slowly crawling around us to all the dainty showers from above us the droplets the heavy rain, the coldness dripping in our chins, our lips, pelvis, legs and toes and the warmth now enclosed between us.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Want To Cage Something That Flies Away Thinking That This Makes Us Happy For A While Until It Dies And We Mourn For Our Own Wrongs....

i must admit that my eyes are failing me but the mind is still as strong as my ambition the hands too which in outsmarting the mind and the heart opens up to hold the air and enclose it like a blue bird.

we want to cage something that flies away
thinking that this makes us happy for a while until it dies and we mourn for our own wrongs....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Were Children Once....

a little girl in the office is a subject of the complaint by the other members of the staff,

a sore presence
a disruption of office work she creates mess and dirties the furniture with candy wrappers

seeing all this i have to decide
i opined, ' she is only a child once,
so let her be'

how can they object?
to the truths of what we once were perhaps even worse....

RIC S. BASTASA
We Were Crazy Enough Not To Believe Them

we had in ateneo during those days of our youth that crazy day where fr. finster wore a basketball net and he did not smile at all while we watch at him wondering why can't we do the same
for he was a man of stature a priest always in the service for others in fact he died while administering God to the prisoners.

oh ask us, we were crazy too and we could not forget that when they told them that we shall arrive at nothing.

we were crazy enough not to believe them
those we believe in themselves too much that they had not doubt whether they were right.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Were Once There Before

on a moonlit night the shadows of the coconut trees and the grasses
and the hut come to my mind
again

and i exclaim
how beautiful are these simple things above them

purple clouds like a cape beside a pearl moon
above it
a tiny star like diamond

RIC S. BASTASA
We Were Talking

about failures and i told her i am not afraid of failures they do not kill me they are but postponed successes
in our lives
that i am no longer bound by failures for long that they do not harm me that we are incharge and things and people harm us only if we allow them we are the kings of our thrones our territories are within our grasp we breathe and we give life to what is near us we are the doors and we only let in those that we love and who can love us in return we shut ourselves from pain
and we make each pillar of our kingdoms strong

we were talking about love and we like to be silent from then on

RIC S. BASTASA
We Were Talking Under The Talisay Tree

we were talking under the talisay tree
about our future
one summer
when the leaves are brown and falling to the ground where the red ants

are busy taking their food under a heap of dry leaves

we will be there to reach our destinies

but we may not be there
together

there is always a season for me and for you
the wisdom lies in the waiting the goodness in the waiting and the beauty that we will see lies in the content of our eyes the tranquility of the pond where the moss begins to grow again

in stones.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Were Their Makers...

and then i told them the truth of this and that and they will not believe that we
who have taught them what life is
and how it should be spent that they have to be somewhere else beyond the limits
of themselves

shall simply remain on the chairs beside the table outdoor sipping the usual
hot green tea
amidst the cold mist
of morning
not being ever tired of watching the last stars to disappear having shone so well last
night
when we were so silent
and simply being sensitive and carefully
watchful

RIC S. BASTASA
We Who Are Patient, We Who Are Silent....

keeping what is due us has always been our noble art, sometimes we are counted as the foolish few, not having anything to brag except our not much spread diary on integrity, we have not multiplied much and most of you hint that perhaps our lineage is cursed, but we do not mind much talk really, our revered silence is another noble outdated technology, we also give what is due to all of you, keeping in mind, that the Goddess of Good Karma is not asleep, but just sitting in patience, slow paced, and cautious not to harm the unwanted harmful grass.

we are patient too, and spiders inhabit in the webs of our overworked eyes, we are mocked, and we lower down our gaze to the feet of the earth we always get rain with the rain scorched, nevertheless by the sun but we are still thriving, despite.

one day, we shall hear about the death of laughter and what we can always show and still be proud of is our restrained smile.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Who Keep These Realities In Our Hearts Are Not Hurt Anymore.

taste buds change
times change a lot
people change as often as the weather of the day
changes change
change changes
we are all open doors
some arrive some leave the door too
has a way of closing and opening itself
sometimes the wind does it the heat though has its own influences leaves fall, buds grow cocoons simply let go what is kept inside it
things happen
as they happen
i know all these we all know these and we who keep these realities in our hearts are not hurt
anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Who Keep Thinking

look at us
we who keep thinking
whose days run like undecided metaphors our bodies are bloating
with words
fattened with what we grope and cannot fully understand eyelashes bent like Nike
eyes that are strangers to blink and wink
there is no more care how this world goes
we, who keep thinking
stand on feet dissolving on fingers that become keyboards
we, are, reduced to nothing but
your thoughts.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Who Want To Do Things Right...

there are many of us still roaming
finding another opening after a series of exits there are less doors
for us
who still want to do things right,

and we keep on looking and we are not finding anything we retreat in a corner and close the door again open the window
for thin air
and here again
back to the lines that comfort us poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Will Be Ready.....

writing upon the surface of the water foams of the sea sprung from winds and seagulls hovering for some fish from the grey clouds upon a cold morning by the port out there the silhouettes of fishing boats and horizon fill our view of this earth while we wait we take coffee and little talks about what happens when our small world is taken away from these terrorists how are we in this waiting contentment our inability to carry arms and be like them willing to kill and die if necessary.

we dread blood and we cannot afford another bloody revolution which caused the disappearances of our forefathers.

when pushed against the wall what can be done? we look at each others' eyes and arrive at the same conclusion: we will be ready.

RIC S. BASTASA
We Will Go Inward To The Mind's Intimate Intricacies

i will be sad today a new road is constructed sort of shortcut leading to my village direct to the veins of the city gloom rules my day
the sun dips below the eaves no tree is spared
old
and many of the new ones too are felled in the name of progress,
i revolt to this but i bow to that i am helpless,

i will be one of the steps going away
back
to that old road where the trees shall grow freely, taller and proud on this long and winding road
intense going inwards to the tranquility of the mind's intimate intricacies

RIC S. BASTASA
We Write Because....

we write
beyond their frames of reference we write because we have traveled so well this journey of life seemingly without end

so many things to see still so many places to traverse rivers to cross
skies to fly our hours

so many bridges of this world so many black birds dissolving in fading afternoons so many waves that sing of folding times so many mountains gummed so many sorrows and joys kids begging on the streets prostitutes strutting their bodies on long and lonely and hungry nights so many decent men and women nonspeaking their ways on airport halls

lots of sounds on the malls sipping silences on private beaches exclusive hotels

blending colors
mixed scents
intriguing dialogues colliding bodies
salty sweat
cranky faces
all sorts, all sorts of intricacies
and idiosyncrasies

a very interesting
world
indeed, indeed!

so many people with their mouths eager to tell the stories of their lives

i walk, i listen, i keep my mouth shut
i write

we write because there are people who want their stories to be written we are all ears now, and fingers too

must you ask me when shall i stop?

let them all shut up.

RIC S. BASTASA
We, Here

water on our toes
we look down the minutest detail
of this
wandering

moss and pebbles
sand and foams
and clouds and winds

up there
we shall not be shut
like night

RIC S. BASTASA
We, Here,

we, here,
we are like stones

there are no hands
that clap
no mouths that make the praise

we are like the stones of the shores of the sea

about to be annihilated by the convolutions of time and thoughts.

RIC S. BASTASA
We, Here, Together

we all die
the goal is not to live forever but to create something that will,

but even though
then or that you have not created something that will last forever

well,
nothing lasts forever,

so just stay cool,
if you die, or i die, and we do not really know when well, it's cool

it our nature,

we don't last forever
we can't last forever,

so, what then?
you're here and i am here that is what really matters

for the moment.

RIC S. BASTASA
We, How Can We Be Lonely?

We. How can we claim that we are lonely?
We raise their skirts, we grow among the wild flowers We are taking the climb of mountains and trees We make windows, and raise brick walls, and Slide on wooden floors
We are sustained by our laughter and whistling On those threatening days Until this day
Not thinking that we end, or that days fold up And lay hidden in the cabinets of silence This cup
How can this be empty? How can life diminish?
We fill this up, we make it overflow its brim.
We make life the way we must.
We are strong and determined.
We believe in ourselves.
We believe in the force within us.
With God, who can be against us?

RIC S. BASTASA
We, The Quantities...

they shall search for one for only one
and take pride in it as treasure of a lifetime

i am not that one
for i belong to the many those series of words like trains like ordinary public commutations boring whirring sounds others call it pollution of traffic sounds in the city

i am not the one i am the many and no one loves this kind the faces of themselves that they hate
in the quantity

the ordinary foulness that's left in the canals where dead rats
lie
those that they avoid reminding them of their own lousy selves

the ordinary air that everyone breathes and yet have taken for granted for air is quantity like the sea and the oceans they are not the one they are the many
the masses, the crowd, the ants and beehives and the pebbles of the rivers whose faces are all the same not one unique

for the altar of fame

we are all in these the quantity....

RIC S. BASTASA
We...

we are the ones
whom they record in their history books as weak
for we are the ones who took sympathies
as friends
we are the ones put in the final chapters of their novels
as the losers
for we are the ones whom they kill at the end of their page we have loved that much even to the destruction of our own images the annihilation of our selves
we are the ones whom they decide to be erased from their bill boards
they think
we are the cause of the failure of the earth the explosion of the star and the melting of the glaciers we have flooded the rivers with unnecessary whimpers
we are the cold ones who have lost the fires of our existence because we have given everything because we have been foolish enough to lose what we have earned because we have loved more than we can afford
and they think that we deserve to perish from their plans and visions

but we never blame them and we do not worry more than they are worried about us we know what we want and we do what we feel we can what we think is just and right yes, we are weak because we have loved more than what is required we have given what we do not even own because we think that this is not the place where we bury our hearts that there is another destination higher and more beautiful more stable
in fact permanent and truthfully as promised
eternal.

RIC S. BASTASA
We....Are... What We Are...

we feast upon words
plate upon plate
and in magnificent courses from the Chinese chef

the words are salty and
the sulfates are somnambulists

we showed bloated
heads
and they begin to laugh
we look like
cheap poets making it
on
not so well attended
blog-sites

we wish we are bombs killing some racists and pigs and pachyderms

the days are over we are into this sickness into this common death like whales finally finding their destinations into some bloody blobs.

RIC S. BASTASA
Weakened

weakened
he finds a place for himself
where he can be out of
touch

he begins to remember
'so long'

'hasta la vista
con dios'

RIC S. BASTASA
Wear Wigs

Conceal yourself in wigs Sunglasses, false eyelashes Colored lens
Wear a mask

And let us kiss
Like Mannequins

Let us see how we feel.

Wait, this is good, I am not Feeling anything. This is very good.

Who wants love, who wants to get hurt?

RIC S. BASTASA
Weary Hands Weary Feet

you long for something intact like a cover of a jar sealed and where air is trapped with the cookies,

something sweet to see the tongue salivates upon of dream inside
a glass

you wish upon something definite the mere yes or no nothing about a sophistication a labyrinthine
scheme into a escape into
somewhere

what you have however in your hand is a pool of thread a circuitous distance concentrated
within

when you spread it it rolls and you leave it there gaping into somewhere

and then
losing hope to find what is at the
end

you walk away
just that

RIC S. BASTASA
Weaving Stories....

i am a bit
weird, mostly suspicious the usual questions i

ask

are you married? how many
kids?
what do you do for a living?

and then i begin to weave my own stories

and people feel how kind
i am

putting them there with that usual ending

and they all live happily ever after

and as you all know most of these are not really true.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wedding Notes (Planta, Bacolod)

i

from the heart
she sings
her passion to the groom
who surprised in such joy profusely tears fall like pearls
on the floor

ii

the food perhaps fall short the simplicity
was
enough
to quell the longings of the heart
it was her passion
above all that made the occasion
more memorable

iii

when passions reach
the heights of flames
when the heart burns
like
a ball of fire
we have no more words we can offer
only bouquets of magnificent silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Weekend To Remember

please don't look at me light that don't gaze at me that long i have a weekend to remember i cannot yet tell you about the excitement of the place the sun there and the sea one day it rains and then the rainbow on time came i smile and take the walk of my life on the white sands and calming waves
the sounds of folding and unfolding palms of the water the shells singing silence in the winds thoughts taking wings and flying to the high mountains trees that know how to dance with me dews on early morning so pearly don't take a hard look at me just understand
i am on my trance again on some things that i want to become true.

go away and understand, i know how to manage my life, i know, i know, i can still sit and stand and dance and sleep.
these basics of living
leave them all to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
We have Become Small Suns In The Darkness Of Our Nights

what you see was simple half of the visible

the rest lies in what we usually want to forget not wanting to see clearly

we bury what we cannot fathom
we throw away what we cannot hold for long

i too was awed by what you claim by heart
you know

when i go there again i saw the same thing
i do what you do
in the silence of our wrongdoings

when we meet again
we keep saying about the midnight candles that we burn

we too have become small suns in the middle of the
night

we take light and we shall never die Weighing The Dolors From The Glories....

he got a measuring tape and measured the length of possible regret the volume of remorse and the chapters of tragedy all possibilities that his personality can afford
all that conscience can buy and he found out that the amount of happiness obtainable is obviously lesser compared to the risk of isolation, the insomniac nights the cost of psychiatric sessions and the prescriptive drugs the wide ocean of guilt and the storms of the raging furies of myths

him against universe, the humanity, how can he ever survive?
and so he stopped,
went back home, sat on the chair facing the window

half-open
his eyes are empty his words are choking him he is gagging to the last scene that it was him that used the gun against himself he did not do it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Weight

uneven weights struggling on the broad shoulders
of the heart
and the slimy forehead of the brain,

the body suffers with no one helping

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome

welcome
brother
i will take you to a succession of images,

my thoughts,
about
this family
all our emotions passing through the ancestral mind

during sleep
we will be the objects seen involuntary  on this daydreaming

the reverie.
an aspiration
do you still need A trip to Europe
your  wild
and vain fancy?

we summon unreal beauty,
charm, we strive for excellence.

oh something in a very remote way

I wouldn't dream of asking you or them to reconsider things and options

suppose,
what if?

i dream away the afternoon.
ideal? hmmm, not really do not turn me off

i am real
touch my fingers they wriggle

i sometimes dream up
the most impossible
plan.

those with unusual vividness,
clarity,
order,
and significance,

do not be turned off
i am real
i am the one that rambles and rumble
and mumble
and bubble up

like a gum on your cheek

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome 2009, Let Happiness Come, And Sadness Too.

you welcome happiness and success then you must also welcome the ugly ones and sadness
with equal lengths of your arms i think, in life, that is fair enough. there shall be no forced happiness there shall be no denial of sadness welcome all, say yes to everything what is there left for us to choose?

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome Back

welcome back brother now back to this place you must change the clothes you are wearing you must talk in our language you must now feel what we are with our longings for peace
with our common vision for our future you must sing our songs and learn the kind of march we do you must listen to our poetry you must learn the prayers of our ancestors and our heroes

now, this is the cup of blood you must now drink it in one shot

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome Back To The Philippines

nice to hear that you're coming home for a vacation
i am (shall we say) overjoyed, is it not an exaggeration of the anticipation, or just an over reaction,
but just the same

we welcome you to our little abode the maroon painted gate will be opened and dinner shall be served: possibly dinuguan (do you still eat a bloody menu?) or ginataan (remember the coconut milk and gabi leaves and some anchovies?) or pork adodo (we will make it crisper) and of course, the lechon de leche (baby pig roasted and crispy to the tongue) just a little feast and some stories to tell with some friends, a little reunion, and talks perhaps about some wounds (that want to heal) and some miserable things (i think i must keep them buried alive in my heart, or these matters may spoil the party, but i know we have them in some ways, and the darker the night, the one without the moon and stars, the more silent and deep the night becomes, when perhaps we get drunk a little bit, sad stories become so relevant and realistic and possibly everyone will have the desire to talk and be honest and just be candid about the realities of pinoy soap) i look forward to your coming, we wait, in fact we are excited, of course, i will tell susan, and the rest of the other happy (& lonely) people of this country that, well, you have postponed your climb of Mt. Fuji, because your guide met an accident, and as an option you have decided to visit your country and your father and his new wife, (something to scrutinize, later)

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome Home

welcome home!

papa is dead, mama is dead
grandpa is dead

welcome home!
this is your home now all for you to own

the sad memories are gone this is home, this is your house now you can be yourself..

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome Stranger To Another World

it is almost dark when i arrive at this place, beside the cemented road a garden of wilting flowers petals are filled with dust the trees along the way towards a bungalow
are shedding off leaves, sonorous, the place is getting strange to me with its own kind of quiet
the door of the house is half open the swing on the side is not moving the air is strong and leaves begin to be flown away
i enter the door
dusting my shoes on the carpet scarlet in hues
light is filtered by dark green curtains i remain standing and you are there waiting for this final talk it is strange for i feel that i do not belong to this place
anymore
i am taking away all my stories and a book of poems there is only one thing i like to say to you we make an agreement
there will be no more elaborations no justifications for our past actions nothing hurting or unkind we are tired of the pain

i am leaving.

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome The Sweet Sound Of Silence

i choose
less but i think they're better
now.
i set aside
the noise of
glib.
i welcome the sweet sound of
silence.
minimize. prune.
cut.
leave only what is best.
i am not alone
in this.
you are with
me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome To A Safehouse

this may look like
the house of a dove for it has but one pillar

for it has many windows without an enclosure

it towers above them almost touching
the hands of the wind

the sounds of cries are as gentle as the early morning waves on storms that fail to come not much words here just signs and gazes

this the house of my mind the doves of my thoughts on the pillar of privacy
on the windows of openness no dogmas here
but freedom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome To The Concrete Jungle

Tarzan and Jane
Are you now ready?

Welcome to this Concrete jungle

Be prepared to kill Without knives and stones

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome To The Door Of Freedom

dthis is the door of freedom you just got in i have a room beyond this room no one has entered yet between this door and my room is a space
this is where some pieces of my are left but soon they will be taken back to be kept inside my palms to be hidden once again from you when you get in you will be introduced to the ritual of knowing what you do not know what you cannot know what shall be hidden forever from you and you shall be a little bit disappointed

but you must insist you have to repeat your name many times you will sort out the letters there are onions and chilies they will make you cry and then you will wish upon another door this time it is your door towards your own room you will doubt about breathing about windows and exits and then you begin to ask if all these are worth it

you decide.

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome To This Place Where Brother Kills Brother

volcanoes erupt
and magma flows and all the sea and land becomes covered with stone

earthquakes come and tsunamis are born
and another race of humanity shall be effaced from the faces of this earth

cataclysms orgasmic violence raptures and departures brokenness of landscapes rigged beauties
plundered floors of oceans shun

structures and men
nature and humanity
man and earth
and sky and mountains

do not be amazed
violence is a stair
you simply have to step and rise and arrive
to the room of our final destination

sleep and rest and be prepared for another day of violence.

it is normal and they do not deny that so must we accept without any feeling of remorse

welcome to this place where brother kills brother where every line divides a territory where gates and fences fail to solve what is in and what is out.

RIC S. BASTASA
there are always two sides one must rationalize that everything will always turn out right inside out when it is too far and tiresome on the other side it makes you see what you have not seen from the nearness of blindness of this side of life you begin to realize there is no end on the other side it always extends and then extends further like a pi and returns again from where you are sitting like a comma of a sentence and from what you have written, tired and lonesome, wanting to put an end to your self defacing sentences you feel like another line has to be made since another door of lengthy thread of thoughts opens for you as soon as you close another paragraph like the way you seal a vent in the wall of your boredom.

always it says: welcome
welcome
welcome and so you rise and tell yourself

i like it
i am alive and each moment is as precious as a grain of sand kept in my pocket after that bath in the midnight sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome, Welcome.

welcome, welcome,
welcome back my friend,
says the room that readies the bed and the dimming light.

welcome, welcome, take your time, do not reflect much, it is not necessary.
hug the bed and talk to the cat.

be sensitive. be kind. be so understanding.
to a confused self, be always a mother.
welcome, welcome.
you are home now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Welcome...

one must always decide to be happy

i always tell myself that others have no time deciding for us

that way

i always do it
giving justice to my
existence

if sadness comes it is not mine

if it stays
because it loves me

so? i am always a lovable person loving to a certain extent what i do not have and cannot own

sadness
is an alien i have all these curiosity to know it well sometimes & so it stays with me comforted by my decision that i welcome
everyone
everything that comes inside my house
my heart

life is a house where i live welcome guests, welcome!
Well, Anyway....

they keep saying God is not a set of teeth which we of course laugh at for we understand the point of his sarcasm

the lady senator did not jump out of the plane to fulfill your wish that she better be dead

she died anyway and now you must be happy then another guy is challenging the not so innocent fat lady for a duel of their bar examination rating he would not resign anyway there are many Pinocchios in this world and Peter Pans too and prophets and MOseses and Eves and Adams, and if you join the band, there will be too many of you in this wagon

i am as guilty as you but you can always deny it.

i go unpunished and you are sad.
You keep on criticizing but you did nothing
just the same.

well, anyway...

RIC S. BASTASA
Well, I Told You Once

do not blame me for this i have already told you once some things be better left buried under the stones under the grass the earth is wise, it knows what and where and when and why you insist somehow to know what is underneath and here you are drowning in tears asking for help i am watching you carried by this river of repercussions where the flow of rage carries you and now you know very well, i can only watch i am stripped of any power to help i am at loss with the use of words now you must help yourself from the mess that you have inflicted upon yourself. Don't blame me for i have warned you and you did not listen. I told you once, take charge.

RIC S. BASTASA
Well, Injustice Works Like That

injustice works that way

you who works day and night burns the candle on both ends passionate about what you are about what to do with all the mess rearranging ugliness into a pathway of daisies and connecting clotheslines to hand souls and dry bodies with molds against the sun to cure an illness of the city the boy at play and irresponsible to his sick mother the shrewd business man inside his luxury car passing by the majority in poverty

well, injustice works like that

in one corner the dying gets to be still dying the fake one gets the limelight the guilty becomes the most innocent a beautiful butterfly removed from its wings

a dog's tail is cut and the mad woman becomes president of your crazy republic

RIC S. BASTASA
Well, Injustice Works Like That (Corrected)

injustice works that way

you who work day and night burn the candle on both ends passionate about what you are about what to do with all the mess rearranging ugliness into a pathway of daisies and connecting clotheslines to hand souls and dry bodies with molds against the sun to cure an illness of the city the boy at play and irresponsible to his sick mother the shrewd business man inside his luxury car passing by the majority in poverty

well, injustice works like that

in one corner the dying gets to be still dying

the fake one gets the limelight the guilty becomes the most innocent a beautiful butterfly removed from its wings

a dog's tail is cut and the mad woman becomes president
of your crazy republic

RIC S. BASTASA
Well, Say It As You See It

it is nice
yes, always the feeling is nice when you call a spade a spade lets your heart out nothing tightens
or chokes
nothing to vomit
at the end
nothing hidden

well, they laid the principle of candid honesty
say it as it pleases you not as it pleases them always, yes, always call a spade a spade

that is rule # one honesty, that lonely word well, i learned it by heart learning to say what is in my mind

but what do i get?
nothing
everyone is displeased
with my honesty
that i am one tactless
form of shit
this monstrous mammal this elephant with a tusk this snake with a venom this mischievous child laughing at the naked emperor
without clothes

well, yes, i still say what i see calling a spade always a spade

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive and what do i get?

yes, this one,
nothing but this one
this poetry

RIC S. BASTASA
Well....

not to frustrate any of the horses of Plato
i take both rides
first on the white one and then the black

and both are happy except perhaps myself

who got kicked on my ass
and now

i have to carry the chariot myself and play the role of Oedipus

in trying to unmask the reality of the Sphinx.

RIC S. BASTASA
Weltschmerz

my hands are always small enough to cover a weeping face, my body too frail to stay at the corner of one hospital where one by one the friends of friends are dying...

my heart too tiny for grief, the universe is grief, and the stars are too small to appease the tears of rain...

my feet are always not enough for the thorns the rocks my brain is a tiny speck of dust to the howling storm of misunderstanding

i wish i had enough space to scatter whatever i have till i am finished with this struggle for emptiness...

RIC S. BASTASA
We'Re All Alone

hope you can remember this song, outside, the rain begins,

...
close your eyes,
long forgotten now,
....
we're all alone
we're all alone
...
let it all begin
learn how to pretend
...
once the story is told it can't help but grow old

RIC S. BASTASA
Were There Really Diamonds In The Sun?

THE night is
diamond studied

we refer to the stars all glowing in the vastness of space as we lie rested on the rooftops of our restlessness

AT noon
i look at the sun
i am blinded by the fury of its light

You must be wrong
i have not seen diamonds in the middle of the strongest day

THE sun at night
is so faraway
for by then it regains its true nature back it is just one of the stars

at night
as we have long misconstrued it
at day

RIC S. BASTASA
We're Very Lucky Indeed

he says we are still lucky to have the blue skies and green fields and clear rivers and wide seas and fish and birds...

i agree.

Despite the burdens,
all these beautiful things surround us
and make us feel so light
and yes...

very lucky.

tonight, i shall count the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
Were We Not Tricked At All?

on the day
we learned to love
and speak well
about love

we bare it all
give it all
and not counting

on the day when
love is gone
when it left us without much talking

we wake up
eyes wide open
asking for accounting what have you given and what i have taken

which one was real?
love or
the unloving?

were we not tricked
by Schopenhauer?

RIC S. BASTASA
Werewolf

The german
Has "wer"

Say "vir" for virility
"wer" meaning man
"wulf" meaning wolf

a vir-wolf
a man-wolf

a man taking the shape of a wolf retaining his virility, his man-ness his madness

about his prey,

the brute that wears my form and face
the werewolf
of my race

RIC S. BASTASA
Westernized Neighbors

the house has a garden at the center is the fountain beside the walls are birdhouses
she loves to accommodate and feed them
the house has two parts and there is a steeple chase and a tower which he painted white at the top is the cross symbolic of their religion there are only two of them in this house which they built using their retirement funds at night all the lights are on any robber can have doubts since there is a dog beside the gate made of steel

they are so enclosed and no one gets in the neighbors say, (and i do not like saying this either)
they have become westernized which if translated simply means (no racism intended)

selfishness, arrogance and 'it is none of their business! ! ' which means that they are no longer part of the whole estranged from their own color their very own roots, their village.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wet All Over

people are running,
trying to find shelter,
you watch,
you are in the middle of the road in an island,
and you stop
you do not want to run like anyone of them you are wet
and it is raining very hard.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wet And Wild

she is wet and wild in the river and she plunges and swims into the depths looking for the golden fish, her dream

she detests my longings for once i was the moon and the night was sad and the whispers of love had all been gone eaten by the mouths of the wind in love with her

i have learned the art of the transformers what she does not know is this:

i have become the river because i love her.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wet Still With All The Love

in fact,
the mind says
with candidness
about this matter, or this mattress
of words sleepy
on the blanket cozy on the pillow, same question is it really poetry?

who knows? who tells you?
keep on running and running and one asks, is it really
running?

and as you pack your clothes compact in the bag,
a bottle of water and a towel,
are you going for a swim?

really? oh really?
i love listening to mojave 3 drifting and
drifting
surfing and surfing
on bigger waves begging for more bigger waves
having so fun with what we notice
suddenly everything turns fine peace and solitude

the people have a chance seeing us all alive are we really? really? oh really?
alive?

feel the pulse of my wrist my temple

or cut my skin
make a door into my world taste my blood
and kiss my lips

our tongues are fine
wet still with all the love.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Are We? What Can We Become?

We can be just snails if we want to,
But we can be sparrows too,
We must choose, we cannot just be silent & undecided

Forever,
If we choose to be snails Then we will know what we want We want a river and some palms To plan our slow travels, If we choose to be sparrows then We at least know what to do next, We shall grow beaks, and wings, and Soon we need the sharp claws too To defend ourselves

At least we also know what we need, Just nests to lay our small eggs, Twigs of trees to rest upon Our weary bodies,

We choose what we are
To become what we can be,
We start on that decision, and then We will see what suits us To be the best from the rest, Who still ask

What are we? what can we become?

RIC S. BASTASA
What A Beautiful World Under....

it is when you lost the desire for air that you decide to jump into the deep sea from a cliff

you want to drown
yourself
and be gone for good but the rainbow colors

of the fish
the corals that look like flowers beside the hill
the greenish blue color of enchantment
of where you find yourself
simply
negate your desire to end it all you pause, take your final gaze then you begin to rise up to the water and take a grasp of precious air....

RIC S. BASTASA
What A Coincidence! Love Is Calling Me Too

this will be my last poem for tonight in here, it is 11: 32 in the evening.

someone is naked inside my room. she is a beautiful bird making her love call.

she is a flower, and i will be her only dew.
she is the only moon, by my open window.

RIC S. BASTASA
What A Happy Naked Life! ! !

it is nice to know that they have parted ways at least they are finally honest

on such an irreconcilable differences

neither is true
all is falling out of love everyone wants to find
love
all over again
as thought there is really any, true and everlasting, which of course, i never believe to be so,

but just the same, just like all of them i took the gamble of being married,

at first happy, then a little bit pissed off, but i took side with silence tolerance, tolerance and more of that tolerance after all, who is perfect?

the formula is know yourself, get to know yourself much better, until you begin to understand the other,

then you know how perfect is it just to ignore, focus on yourself, love yourself, love more
of this self,

no expectations, yes no expectations, born naked, die naked as well.
what a happy naked naked life!
What A Love!

To cast fear aside
on a night when you are left alone sleeplessly

you resort to an imagination rooted to a muddy
ground

it is an imagination of twigs and lush leaves where birds come and perch and then sing with you

some friends of shadows against your moon
come and begin to whistle

and the night becomes so lovely that you begin to remember what life before was all about what a feast! what a love!

RIC S. BASTASA
What A Mess

two turtles
compete
how to fly

and some monkeys
dream how to be
much better
than
birds

some birds
regret having wings envying
turtles in the grace
of their slowness

RIC S. BASTASA
What A Shell Of A Room!

the nude says

her feet flesh rolling on a white floor

i am happy in here

the sea slides in through the door and licks at her hand her happiness tosses itself to the walls

she catches its fall and swallows it all.

she drowns
where she stands.

that was their story.
i am telling you now.

RIC S. BASTASA
What A View Of The Sea Today

it is such a beautiful sunny day at the beach a man with a muscular body rests on the white sand beside a blue boat under a tall coconut tree a woman with a beautiful body, pinkish skin arrives and removes her transparent skirt and plunges to the sea on a black bikini

the tiny waves of the sea glisten like some eyes peeping

RIC S. BASTASA
What A Waste

sometimes
time
spending it here
with you,

i am lost in my thoughts where to go after this what to do from here

somehow
the wasted hours
fade
in this ecstasy

forgetting you is an impossibility i am hooked to love you this lust is a reality your lips your breasts your thighs
the smell of your sweat the sweetness of your voice enthralled
i am your slave waiting for the further instructions of your hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
What A Wasted Look

you groom yourself
put gel on your hair spray some perfume on your whole body
and you wait
she passes by not noticing
the way you look
the way you smell
you curse yourself
on this madness
she is also eaten
by the monsters
of her own sadness.

square and fair
right?

RIC S. BASTASA
What About Us?

I have told you everything about myself and i am willing still to tell you more if you ask, if you are still hungry about what you want to know about me, i am stupid, i am like a woman who spreads my legs to any man who want me in bed, but i can also be a very kind woman who opens my arms for every weary man, i am not stupid, i am kind,

I reveals everything From a to z No secrets now From my family No stone Left unturned No story Untold If it makes You happy Or if it makes You sad And you regret Having listened I am sorry you ask for them so i give them all to you like a basket of flowers and fruits,

(are you sick in the hospital why with these basket of flowers and fruits?)

I have done My duty As the messenger I have achieved What was Left for me To do And It is all Enough i am happy now

The truth is Told and it Has set me free.

(The lies however keep on saying, what about us?)

RIC S. BASTASA
What About You?

yes, i see you
what about you?

you, who once hurt me
yes, what about you?

yes, what about you?
are you there?
doyou exist?

prove it to me

i am whole
i am strong and too i can cause all the pain
that you have caused me

but i am greater
i heal
and pain is no longer this power

i connect again but i shall not destroy i shall not cut a branch but i shall only sow the seed
to grow again
and show the flower
and the fruit

both in our worlds
apart

RIC S. BASTASA
What Am I?

it is you that is eating me everything i own
you take away slowly, the flesh and then the limbs
and they the bones and then the spirit
after all these what do you think shall i become?

nothing. nothing,
precisely, that is what i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Am I? ....

do not blame me for simply telling you stories i am nothing
but a storyteller in my own time

do not blame me for not having to hold your arms i too, am air, like you, too temporary
arriving now and soon leaving in a span of seconds do not blame me for forgetting you as early as now

do not be angry
for i am like you,
the one that assumes a name shakes your hand
and then goes away
shut out
from any enclosure of a memory

RIC S. BASTASA
What Anselma Fished Out Of The Sea

when Anselma's husband who was a fisherman was swallowed by the sea and was gone she says she cannot be outdone by extreme grief and sorrow she went out to fish one day and fished out a man from there and she explains the sea took out her man and so the sea

must pay back with another man

and since then Anselma lives happily ever after

RIC S. BASTASA
What Are Friends For? Really?

ey are not goods, neither are they chattels, neither are they investments something that you sell, or buy, or make as a security for an undertaking,
ey are not taken for some schemes, for some needs, like the need to be in or just let the hours pass by, beating boredom and fatigue,
ey are not puppets where you pull them with your strings from your fingers neither are they muppets that you put in your hands
ey are not your tools like shovels and pliers, neither are they your utensils for eating like spoons and forks, ey are not the notes in your diary or the dog ears in your book or the things-to-be-done ey serve no ends, they are not measures, when they come and you share your time with them they make hours irrelevant they make life livable, they make you belong to a beautiful world where the birds are singing, where the clouds drift, where the rivers flow, where the skies are bluer than blue ey make the sun smile and they make the moon speak and they make the pond teem with fish and foremost, as they all say, they also tell you who you are.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Are We?

1) Two legs sat upon three legs,
With one leg in his lap;
In comes four legs
And runs away with one leg;
Up jumps two legs,
Catches up three legs,
Throws it after four legs,
And makes him dropp one leg.
What are we?

2) Old Mother Twitchett had but one eye,
And a long tail which she let fly;
And every time she went over a gap,
She left a bit of her tail in a trap.

3) Thirty white horses upon a red hill, Now they tramp, now they champ, now they stand still.
What are we?

We have nothing to say today
We are being asked
What are we
And we think we are bullied
Because
Because we think we know what we are Because we think we are the obvious Plain like blue clouds, blue seas, blue kingfishers Blue, blues, blue bruises, blue flag, Blue crayon, blue surplus cars Electric blue, shades of blue

We are black and blue
We feel blue
We think blue
We are blue.

And the obvious is like the biggest mountain ahead of us And they ask: what is that?
And they see us
And ask us what are we?
Aren’t they all crazy?

We respect them and tell them nothing.
we have nothing to say forevermore.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Are We? A Monsoon Wind

we are just the monsoon wind that comes and then goes what we have here what we obtain with labor and store and adore we leave them all here

the trees and the fields the gardens and the flowers the roof and the rail of the stair
the carpet on the floor
the rings in our hands dates embedded on the tombs we all leave them here and they may not even remember

we wish change and change may come and the world may even be more beautiful to feel and see we may catch the glow but then in a moment we are all gone all, all gone....

RIC S. BASTASA
What Are You Doing With Love?

you wake up
in the middle of the night
not really knowing what to do with your time

it is not unnatural you assure yourself
most people do this
most of the time
great writers and music composers
and lovers too

haunted by inspirations of faces and bodies
whom you loved but have never never never really touched...

RIC S. BASTASA
What Astonishes Me

beyond words
this astonishes me:

despite the drought when all the grasses turn brown when the road gets too dusty with just a bike moving passing through a path where feet are tired there is this wild resistant flower blooming amidst the ruins of the season a white butterfly hovers on no one notices it

except myself

RIC S. BASTASA
What Bothers You

got a new car
and you are driving it at the road
towards the boulevard on such a clear day
and then suddenly another car comes rushing
from the north of your direction
and then the inevitable happens bang! the collision occurs the car is smashed like a paper cone

what must bother you
you are still alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Brings Him To The Top

it is not his innate speed for in truth he has none, he traces his genealogy to the turtles those green ones the slowest of the species it is not his intelligence for there is nothing unusual about the shape and weight of his cerebellum
there is nothing exceptionally artistic in his habits all old dog's tricks nothing much about the brightness of the colors of his choice it is just the consistency the everyday life he spends without much highlights each step well accounted each sigh well heard and then he reaches at the top of the hill above the cliffs
he rests and savors all the wonders
within and beyond.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Can A Hug Do In The Eastern World?

this is the Far East no one hugs anybody.

in these islands
the sun shines with all warmth the moon glows perfectly on our skin this is my place no one needs a hug.

this is my healthy world.
hug is not a pretension.

hug is not needed.
there is warmth in every grass
at night
with my beloved.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Can I Do?

i got 25 years of education denied myself
of fun
and thrived on the termites

now the foolish people come for advices

how to solve the stupidities that they are into, lining up the streets

i surrender
i am not the master solution of their very own problems.

i walk away
step in an island
alone
i
sit on a chair and sip gourmet coffee.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Cannot Be Said Directly

so you are in that stage of having to dive like Adrienne in the ocean
finding the wreck,

more interpretations about reality.

you climb the ladder and see another world,

and here you have written another story about something that you cannot say directly the mermaid and the jellyfish the hands of the merman stronger than yours and the death of one the name of whom is not written elsewhere the sand, the sun, and the silence of your deepest wreck.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Changed Here?

except for the new landmarks the erased bank of the river, a new route
a new name of the street another mayor of this town and a few of his selected council, a new market cemented roads, and a purple colored mall, new faces of children
a set of migrants,

nothing really changed here the town still bears the mark of torture silenced screams, disappearing souls still seeking the hall of justice, bodies in pain, faces shrinking, disfigured bones unaccounted names of children used for the choked revolution despite these matters still hold the truth in both hands, they still exist and hound and howl

and haunt us.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Comes Here Simply Moves Around And Then Goes Away

what comes here does not really stay that long it may move around like the whirl of the wind but only for a while it packs up
some leaves go with it and carries itself
like a past whisper
then it is gone

somewhere you know it is there waiting for you
but it is so far away now

RIC S. BASTASA
What Comes Next Is Yours To Imagine a pot of flowering magnolia beside a window below it a man walks innocently

i who sees what happens next closes my eyes in utter invocation of what must be only a simplicity.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Could Have Been An Answer?

it is there
you do not really know why it is there and it is doing you two things it is indifferent

you like to touch it and make love with it it does not know you and it dislikes you like a food that is inside its mouth and it wants to vomit everything

that is the truth
the paradox of your self-proclaimed relationship to yourself

love hate love hate you want it to stay but you cannot hold on to it it gives you that feeling that this world is unending but it ends
your world
the moment you mind it even for a second

do not expect to understand its wisdom is in not completely understanding it if you know it well it can kill you

because it is so sweet and to a certain extent it becomes your own poison

you remember it
you want to always remember it because it makes your heart beat faster like a jumping gazelle but it you remember it quite long it becomes sharp as a knife and starts slicing you heart apart skin by skin

and so you give it away set it free like a blue butterfly from your hand you become so sad tears are inside your eyes wanting to burst like a dam of tons of water raging upon rage itself you are sad now

in fact sadder than sad and no one can help you about it you cannot tell anyone because shame shames you like a reflection of your face in the mirror and so you talk to yourself as though it is another talking shadow beside your shadow from the light of the moon

tonight
you want to confront each other drink lots of hard liqueur and challenge it

what about dying together
this moment?

this second.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Could Have Been Forgotten

what you have
is not forbidden

a white porcelain cup placed on top of a glazed saucer

the jasmine tea that you sip slowly
as light fades away

the decent decorum of well numbered
propriety

eye never taste that good

they are what others are used to do without so much thinking it is the everyday routine that has taken away what makes life

so alive & interesting like some games that we recently know
and begin to play

mornings are same
mornings

nights even with all the stars
glistening
remain boring

the air tastes bland
its coldness is getting to be scary

there is something
to what is forbidden

that is what we yet
do not know

others who regret
all those that they did for once and for more broke their hearts into pieces when they sit beside

the window
watching cars passing
by
one by one
watching people en masse
busy going and going
like the ticking of the hands of the clock

they will not tell
you
that despite the brokenness
despite the still uncollected
pieces

the excitement of what was forbidden and which they did with so much haste

still reclaims upon
itself
the untold
glory
the climax of a series of existences
which time buries
so deeply in the dust bins of personal histories

so that they can all be forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
What Could Have Been Unreal

there is a sorrow that i do not want to speak it is something that i cannot give away there is time that keeps on going and if i stay i will just be left out and buried in this delay there is a grief that cannot really be spoken there is this pain that goes on and one there are empty parks and empty cafes there are closed doors and locked rooms there is this self sometimes that does not open there are fingers that remain closed upon themselves there is a song that i can only sing inside myself there is this poem that keeps on evading what is it that could have been said all these are mine alone and all these keep me moving on remembering, loving in silence, keeping the tears frozen, creating what could have been unreal.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Could Hurt We Refuse To Say

we sleep because we are too exhausted not really because we are enslaved by the king of working ants but we are

we have become the masters of too much worries preoccupying ourselves with this state of unfeeling this loneliness that has dawned in our days widely awake to an unacceptable reality dressed in such a fashion of denial afraid that we shall be the first breakers of the law of tradition people shall mock us at the sacred places scared and scarred for soon we shall be ostracized like over-sized ostriches our heads cannot be contained in closed cages we want to fly but we are too big for flight we sleep because we are too exhausted with the sameness of our faces years have made us twins and we do not really like it we need more moments of silence to make a wall to ship us away from an ocean of familiarity that is killing what we want to want in love there is no fire where we sleep we are cold sculptures heavy in our bed dusts have accumulated on stuffed arms teddy bears that need to be thrown away back to the forests our words are enough to promulgate its judgment we still like it when we hesitate to say and choose not to say what hurts.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Crucifixion Was

it is time to drive a point i nail it.

it is time to see who the hammer is. i make a loud sound.

she hears it.
I drive more nails.

One after the other
to connect.

I want to make her recall

what crucifixion was.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Delights Me No More

peanuts roasted on a white saucer and a glass of coca-cola bursting with bubbles mixed with crushed ice-

prepared by you
one summer

RIC S. BASTASA
What Did That Comrade Say?

comrades he declares while then on the mountains our enemies are our enemies if there be friends categorically they should be if there be a ceasing of this struggle for peace in the name of diplomacy and democracy let that be nothing but an extension of this war for comrades he declares further peace is not given on a silver platter but made meticulously upon an embroidery of blood.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Did The Wind Tell The Rose?

what the wind tells the rose to make it bloom what the sky tells the mountain to make it more green?
what the clouds tell the sea so the boats can sail smoothly what the birds sing to the sun? what the leaves tell the ground in utter peace?
what all this world give to make life more
with life?
it is found here in my heart
singing
a song to my God.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Did You Say?

did you say that you married for the wrong reasons? he, for his handsome face and bulging muscles beneath that corduroy pants, her pleasure she, for her delicate curves and porcelain skin and silky hair, his heaven and the days of marriage drag like someone so heavy and sickly is carried away at bay, conversations lapse, and caresses become boring, and sleeping together has become nothing but routine review what was there, each moment, each time of togetherness, my oh my, both of you smile, feeling so happy...forever?

'this is marriage', you say it. You must say it again.
a happy marriage, because there is no other option, no choice.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do I Have Now?

on the topmost of the mountain higher than all the rocks beside me what do i have?

clouds on my feet
air that cannot speak me its message where it comes from what are the warnings
or the good news?

i stand here
my arms opening to the sky i do not look down for fear of the height that is sucking me down inviting me to jump
like the goddess with a broken heart

what do i have here?
i gaze
and all i have is this view of the sun finally going down
to surrender once more to what is dark
and cold
and silent

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do I Have To Do To Make You Like Me?

what do i have to do to make you like me?

sorry,
seems to be the hardest word
to say
seems to me
to be the hardest word
sorry
so sorry
that you can never forgive me i am sorry
i am so sorry
for not having loved you too

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do I Know......What You Do Not.

i know the spring.
i have traced the source of this water that i drink everyday that which gives me inspiration because all my veins let through the blood and the water seeps through the softness of my skin the labyrinths of my intestines i know spring

the source is here
not in the heart where drought lies, not in the convolutions of my brains where confusion reigns at times overpowering the stillness of my secret pond,

on the darkness of my night i know the source
it is not evil, it does not have horns but there is fire that burns me like a bush and i am unconsumed
it is eternal not this damnation that kills the lives of those who remain to be alone in their messy rooms on their windows that do not allow the light of the moon
the advices of the breeze the comforting messages of the newly hatched eggs on the nests
of the trees

it is not in the heart it is right here where my hands grope for meaning
where my fingers glide where my solitude rests the hammock
of my humanity
as i run to and fro because i do not want to be detached to leave it is here where i stay and write some more it is where where i do not want to be understood by anybody
this secret pond
blind fish mute moss
bubble free
an insect with undeveloped wings walk on the mirror
water.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do I Really Feel?

this is the most important question that i ask to myself in everything that i do in everything that happens to me.

that is never your question.
Yours had always been a different version.
In your philosophy you are more of a practical person and you take pride in the usefulness of each a bucket, a wheel, a plate a car, not that kite, nor that mural, they are not necessary for the movement of things to progress.

You are the opposite of what i own.
I own nothing, you claim that everything is yours. To hold, to have title.

what do i really feel?
you laugh. What is the relevance of that question to your profits?
You are like my doctor Who does not mind my pain but minds his fees.
When a man gets cured
There is no place for sympathy.
It is the money
stupid. You grin.

here we are at the junction of feelings.
I go this way, You go that way.
I will not look for you
You will not look for me.

We then say
How long did we realize that we are still making a beginning to this long pretentious affair?

I am an existentialist but i have never wished you dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do I Really Know? ......

even then we do not need that bed or that pillow

that blanket may be given away

or this room or this carpet

or even the floor of this house

or even the house or even the land where everything is situated or even this island

or even this earth or even this universe

what we need is only
to be happy
just us here

or even if you go
away
or if you are gone and i only have myself
left

or even this self even it it is gone

what do i lose?
what do i know?
a fly is here. oh
never mind,
i'll open the window
i still let it
go....

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do I Really Need?

upon a dining table
i too, ask myself,

what do i really need?

one fried dried fish
a cup of steamed brown rice a pinch of salt
five drops of coconut vinegar a glass of water and then the much needed rest for the night

& with you
my bare hands

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do I Want From You?

i do not want you in the past neither shall i desire to meet you in the future do not be mistaken
there is nothing too to make you mine even today

i have made the choice just myself sitting at night in the park the post unlighted
the air is cold
i keep the fire burning in my heart learning to live my way through this darkness

there is so much to learn and so many things to accept there is so much to unlearn recall and then forever forget.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do We Do To Aldo Kraas?

i have poured
a bucket of cold water to wake him up so he can finish
his poems
that we love
to see
in full
whole

he didn't he holds us in super suspense our feet could have danced all night
our hands could have touched the world in so much thrills and freshness

but he didn't he caught us suspended frozen and almost dead to extinction what do we do to Aldo to finish the poems

we want to read?

i am afraid
hot waters cannot make him finish what ought to be

i am afraid no one
can

because Aldo is Aldo and just like me Ric is Ric
that is how it goes without saying

let them be let me be the freedom to be unfinished

the freedom to be finished

and perhaps be praised or just be scorned

RIC S. BASTASA
do not burn
let the leaves fall to the ground let them stay there
layer by layer
heap upon heap
let mother earth
hug all the leaves let the affection be strong and heavy
let the leaves die
and rot and become water and become dust
to dust
let all of us see this dust we shall do what mother earth and nature loves best to dust we shall return and be its permanent part close to the bosom
of mother earth
forever

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do We Really Wish To See?

dthis is a nice, cool place, we decide to stay a while a thatched nipa roof covering some benches rounded for us to sit awhile, then we see how the sun glows to slowly meet its death

sunset, yellow, orange red, then some black patches we sit for a while for a time we reflect on this loss of light

we welcome darkness we sit beside each other then the lights of the resort are switched on

tthere are no fireflies this season electric lights hang on trees the air comes like a cold feeling it whispers loss and surrender somewhere some hearts are cold our hearts may soon relate but we cannot be just defeated this time, we really wish to see love hanging on the air we wish these things these treasures of our hearts we really wish to fall in love again we see, we wish to see this love again, we work out on it under the rain our hearts are in flames we burn with desire we get what we wish to see we make what we wish to be

i guess, that is simple enough

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do You Really Expect?

what do you really expect
from the horse that you have seen accidentally on the wilderness? it is black and wild and has no name to call as master, and it runs as fast as the wind, and lives on top of cliffs and grazes only on secret places where the grasses are thick and so green,

it knows the secrets of the dearth and knows where to find water and food in abundance, you expect to catch it and caress it with your hands?

it is impossible! this black horse is one of the horses of Zeus and takes orders only from him.

tomorrow the black horse shall be gone forever, and you mortal one shall not forget the griefs on the casualties of the war in Troy.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Do You Really Mean By That?

seeing the face of your lover (the one whom you have not yet revealed what you feel deep inside you,

secret love, suppressed desires, concealed emotions, on a moment of distress for love unrequited, you have been indulged in an inaction, what do you really mean when you say, your world stops revolving?

fool! you're at an age where love has not place to hide, where one cannot be stupid enough to be silent

a bleeding heart? is there such a place this time, for a bleeding heart?

situate yourself. be fair.
speak your mind. open your heart.
unzip that fly.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Does A Hectic Schedule Do To You?

makes you feel young, alive and kicking

you set aside religion and politics

you chase the words of skill and embrace a higher wisdom

you feel your blood rise on your head

your feet dance like
a madman

your hands keep on pressing the letters without seeing the pc has become your god.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Does Hope Tell You?

Hope
will always tell you
as always that the bad ones out there when they arrive at the edge shall be burned like grasses of the long drought even if you tell Hope to be silent
it will always whisper
this to you

even if you do not believe in Hope
it will always believe
in You.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Drives Poetry...

an old
man is driving
his car
of loneliness
in a street
named metaphor

it went well until he meets this simile
lady
and they kiss
and kiss and
hug and hug and then poetry

crashes

without brakes
in that
forgotten cliff

RIC S. BASTASA
What Flicker Is There

what flicker is there in the darkness of my soul what light must continue against the night what flame must throughout remain eternal

God's.

RIC S. BASTASA
What For? If Only The Goat Can Tell.

O! The silly goat could have been a dove White and meek
Soundless in the journey to air Dove to another dove Satisfied from among its likes The horns could have been feathers In a bird’s body

Another completing dove could have waited Only if the silly goat knew The transfiguration of its feet to claw Its whiskers to beak
The goat’s life would have been complete And fulfilled
But this the silly goat will never know & learn and untie & solve the crazy knot
That it has never untangled Never has he learned from all the ages Of his grass life
The seeds that the dove peck
And keep on its throat down to its guts Its tummy

The goat stays
In the open field Preoccupied with grass
And grass alone
Abiding by the rules of his master Imprisoned in its cage
To the rules of their games Suffering
But never understands the same

RIC S. BASTASA
What God

what God takes for granted such as gold and silver and diamonds which he buries on the dark and deep places of the earth, man has taken too seriously to his shame, because what is really important is the heart, fresh air, clean sea, blue clouds, pale moon, rising sun, cool grass, a smile, a bond, a touch, a hand, an embrace a word, a whisper.

RIC S. BASTASA
What God Says To All Those Snakes...

this afternoon some snakes come into the house (literally not those snakes with slimy skin and without feet)
for there are snakes that walk like real people complete with heads and other usual parts like the way your friends look like when you dine and you pay
when they tell you stories and you listen
and you know
that these are all not true but because of respect you nod just the same and say, ok, ok, i agree this afternoon these snakes come to the house and we had coffee and biscuits the usual afternoon talk and bonding i may not have changed, but they do not know that there is also the fox in me but still considerate and forgiving and patient and kind all giving

they ask for rice and viand and they talk about their undeserved poverty and without questions
i give them what they ask and pray for no harm
nothing big for such a kind man like me i am not an angry man my hands are open, my fingers are spread like tributaries from the rivers to the seas sometimes my fingers ache for these friends are snakes and they all love to bite

blood flows from my tips and the carpet gets stained but i am not an angry man and i am as patient as ten spiders webbing from one wall to the other well, normal as i am i get fed up sometimes and tempted to shout and drive them away but i look to the sky and talk to my God and then i begin to ask silently all those questions how to deal with snakes and God says: 'my son, these snakes are your brothers and sisters feed them well, please me for i am the owner of the sea and the land and the sky yours is but a coin a patch, an atom

and so negligible
in fact, my son, you own nothing, you only manage what i own and give you
feed them all, make them comfortable do not argue, do not say a dirty word look at me, they bit me too but did i say a word? you haven't heard me for like you, snake or man or god you are all my children....

RIC S. BASTASA
What Happened When The Lights Went Out

early that evening there was a total blackout in the city for an unknown cause again, and this happens not just for that lonely time only but for the nth time when the hours are lonelier than usual, and to make use of those dark hours since we see nothing more important to do than read, we spend the hours, and hours

talking,

it is you who is doing most of the talking, choosing the words, and arranging them
to perhaps please me, but i was not there anymore,
i was then, and am mostly,
a wanderer amidst the forest of your
sentences,

and i feel like your are sentencing me into a listener imprisoned in those bars of senseless words, and i

as i once told you, always escape as a swift bird,
and you as usual do not notice it when i am already far away into my own kind of personal homeland where you cannot find me or catch me
naked and innocent like a native, and i do not hear about you anymore and when i come back and take the shape of a man you are already fast asleep and then i step silently inside the room via an open window slip on the bed wet with your tears and then i gently sleep beside you and i cannot sleep that night as i judge myself guilty of an injustice which i have inflicted against

love and trust

a la Cupid to Psyche,

and then i, before my own sleepy eyes,
blow that stupid candle
away

and then it is so dark deep into the night i journey burdened like one of the Furies
into the
cliffs of Sisyphus.

RIC S. BASTASA
there were sparrows
they hovered upon the mansanita that i planted they did not stay there for long they left even before the dew on the morning grass has dried that was what happened and what stayed was only the white rose in my garden but sometimes i think

if it has also a pair of strong wings and a close ally of the winds
in the same manner
it would have left me for good things are not as smooth as you see it things like these happen learning always from departures

but just the same
still finding love where tracks still remain

i gaze upon the little pond inside my heart there are no more ripples the leaves that fall there recently are sleeping.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Happens After

i insist
i must go there you warn
that i will have to pay
the higher price
i am hardheaded
i go there
it will be long and blissful
i take the shape of a big stone
i fix myself
defending myself
always
so i cannot be hurt

there are tremors
i shake

when i come back
we feast
on the realities of the square jaws
of our
silence

you still love me
and i do not blame
you

now you are a stone
yourself
imitating me

RIC S. BASTASA
What Happens Instead Is That We Remember

we take a walk
since we like to forget what happens instead
is that
we remember

imaginations fly like birds like dreams becoming unbelievable growing roses in the skies flying kites during a storm i admire your courage getting out of the house when the rain pours

taking a boat without a paddle
alone
when the waves are getting bigger you sail out there not fishing

you have read about Jonah swallowed by that big fish you want it
you check it out
you look for the sea,
the fish
and now offers your own body your faith.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Happens Next? …..

for now i do not go to church and hear Sunday mass, i am coming back as always
early morning
and late at night and between my busy hours to savor this forbidden place with no other objective and wish that i be finally bored in this kind of hell choice and find this place later on to be horrible seriously, and sincerely from the inner conviction of my mind so i may never find myself back to this place again and then finally i tell myself now i am convinced now i win
now i must leave and i will never come back again but when will this really happen?

only when i am dead?
when it is too late?
when it is already irreversible?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Happens On The Discovery Of Fraud

to hate you
is to slap you with my heavy fist in your shame you leave, you swell you disconnect from things through your bruised arms a blue breast
a black sky
it takes time for me to really know you are not there but soon you will know how i am tasting this drought, darkness spreading in the sky my hand shall not take yours it is too much to hold because my heart does not beat and say what should not have been said when i

close the door forever

you are no longer here and everything is liquid with a flow of freedom

you shall be the bitter half of this break-up

you must remember every word and cover your mouth what to declare is certain sorrow when to summarize you hypnotize

to see the house falls without its feet on the grounds of char and smothered cinders.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Happens Then

an early morning walk as we both talk

as our hands hold amidst the cold

under the new shining sun on a pathway of fun

with trees and flowers we breathe their powers

we sit and talk
we are not choked

we face the world
our truths unfurled.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Happens When I Go...

so many times will i watch this there is no way that i can stop watching this show of a beautiful body

when i was about to go, i feel the loss and the grief is like rain at night there is no ceasing of the sounding and pounding of the
pain

i have hesitations of course i am not the familiar kind that goes into the house of the mundane

must i bury myself in the terse tension under my bed?

i cannot betray what myself has been praying
for
to be free for a while and make the most of what time is left and so i go into the familiar places of the heart meeting everyone nurturing the wounds and trying to erase the scars

when i arrive there i feel the shrinking of
my body
my hands are touching my feet the door when it closes suddenly becomes a very tall man

i am looking up to that artificial light i am lost again
and defeated

RIC S. BASTASA
What Has Been Missing?

here you are again
i know
reading me
every morning

i have become coffee to you

i am another page
of a paper

my face is a cover of a book

and what you read
are nights

i know it is dark
and cold

and here you are again
sure of yourself

in the dark in the cold

accepting what is
there
what is read

someday i shall ask
you

what is in me that escaped me

what is in you that catches
what is there
and what has been missing

RIC S. BASTASA
What Have We Become In This Technological Advances?

what i always remember from the old times is trust a family solid on giving personal interest set aside all for the good of everyone

technology on one hand despite the good that it has done shrinking distances storing time in a disc and compressing all memories in miniature containers family bonds are cut off nephews tell lies and sisters and brothers not anymore connected disintegrating into the self quests forgetting roots and discarding values

so many of us now rely on our resources selfishly thinking that we are all islands in the middle of the sea confident that no ocean can destroy us that sun shall be consistent and that moon shall still be romantic on dark nights on those busy hours of the day as traffic in the city jams as doors are locked as people accept their fear upon themselves voluntarily

RIC S. BASTASA
What Have We Learned

we have learned to be alone savor the grace of solitude silent as the moon rising and dawning untangling the shadows from the twigs we have learned to unlearn what others usually do in similar situations we have learned to forget and then continue forgiving we left jealousy on the hedge to slide and fall with the sledge.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Have We To Give, Anyway?

everything we see in this world seem pointless we begin to be like ordinary routines everyday, this everyday, so dulling and lulling the boredom that becomes a kingdom the pointers that do not work what they say have become lies and so useless
we want to prove that we make the difference?
when we arrived here that circle is already a circle and triangles have always remained triangles the clouds cottony and always drift and the roving rivers always flow to the sea never to itself and be so salty and bloated what is the point then of my being here? i have nothing to prove to myself much less to you whom i do not really know you have been a secret to yourself and i have also curled to myself like a comma to my phrases i never asked to be here that is the point and that will make the point pointless there were no conditions attached there was no contract that beforehand i signed and so? What is the difference?

come let us play under the sun let us plunge into the river of life it is meant to be fun there are no bills to pay for this life freely given and must freely be returned there is only this play and we take the games the masks we wear if you flare and dare and then if you are really honest enough with nothing to prove with nothing to be proud of take this nudity plunging into the river of life without guilt without shame because we were all born naked and too innocent because we are the children of God and like fathers and mothers God only wants us to run and play and smile and be with him, what more can we give, anyway?

Proud self-righteous one, do you offer now Your righteousness and morality?
Does God need them? Or does God love you?
May God have mercy. God has always been Love.
Why worry brother and sister? Smile and be happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
What He Did

as law professor teaching civil and political law he did not tell his students that he writes poems during some breaks of their studies. as the students hurdle a legal problem in marriage he preoccupies himself with some images: an old weary man carrying an ax, debarking a tree without leaves. it can carry him far away to some hills in his mind.
clouds and storms dock on his forehead. he shakes his head, and goes back to the legal words right on the page of his book. Finds himself again, strong willed.
A student raises his hand and recites a solution the problem.
He listens and claps his hands.

The class is dismissed and he is left alone in the room
It is 8: 45 in the evening.

Images come again. The tree is finally cut. The barks turn into paper.
He knows now the cause of the decay. Some termites.

The old man is dead. Cut by the ax. The ax is gone.
Who did it? Why?
These are his mind games.

He opens the door of the car and begins to drive himself back home.
He has a poem to write again.

It is about that old man who died beside a tree that he debarked.
It is not more of the ax or termites.

It is the tree. A tree without leaves.
A very lonely tree which is cut.

He is happy now.

RIC S. BASTASA
What He Did....

what he did, he did his best, when asked to sing, he sang when asked to jump, he jumped he did not only become a singer he became a juggler as well, this is because he wants, and all he wanted was to please them
not just her
but all of them,

i pity him, he became a clown at the end of those crazy years of yearning to please the people that he loves specially, that woman because he loves her that much but what about her? she becomes the devil, his devil that consumes every flesh on him every bone she scraped for seasoning

and sometimes i ask myself upon looking at this ghastly situation how did he become a clown and how did she turn herself into a devil?

i don't think love was the reason.
i think, it is something else, and we still did not know it.
until now, accurately.

RIC S. BASTASA
What He Has Is Only Words

FOR THE first time at the top of the mountain
he feels that from now on he rules as king

and he now wears a crown and a scepter and now he shall have his own kingdom
complete with a queen and princes and princesses and soldiers and castles
and canons and balls

i hope he does not miss the essence that what he has is only
words.

RIC S. BASTASA
What He Likes In Her

What he likes in her is that she had his instincts:
He remembers he has strong arms and strong strumming fingers His fingers sing like a man and With a voice so penetrating to the notes of Bold and pure love Determined and purposeful

To her feminine softness Scrupulous inquisitive lips

His boldness to her inquisitive softness His strong fingers opening her scrutinizing lips
And they always
Like said meeting of curiosities Almost childlike, playful.

He surges on her softness as she lay like a helpless white defeated woman He claims victory
But later he surrenders every part of him, his buttocks, his abdomen, his torso, and his legs And even that which Makes him importantly as a man conqueror

She receives him like a weak woman, helpless now She stoops, she bows she crawls over him, in a change of positions

She keeps him strong.
She now conquers him, with a total surrender of everything she also owns Her breasts, her neck, her lips, her hips, her mouth,

Both are lost, and both are looking for their important parts, afterwards There is nothing under the bed, or this sofa.

It will take them a long time to recover the parts that seem to be Unrecoverable.
Once, one part was inside her. Once one part Deluded her mouth disguising as a hot food for dining.

She did not really mind, and she would not tell anyway,
Her mistake is intended for the pleasure of both, and there was no feeling

That something was wrong or even dirty.
It was so lovely, both concluded.
What he likes in her,

Her tight tonguetiedness.
Delights and more delights, for these coming nights.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Her Crystal Ball Says dark clouds hovering on the hills of mid-March and murky waters on the rivers of the last days of April,

a platoon of people
comes to your house
asking for rice and fish bringing with them their empty
bowls

five cows are thin
seven piglets die
and emaciated
black horses drink on empty ponds

moses wearing his rainbow colored coat
perspires under the sun on a very windy portion of the dessert alone and still looking where the oasis are.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Am And What We Are

it is not the wisdom for i have none

could be some instinct for i have some

i bring you something that i do not understand you listen attentively we become your singing birds

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Am Seeing Is Beauty

what i am seeing is beauty

beauty is subjective, this is my happiness my medicine, but take it it will be your poison it will be your way of vomiting what beauty is to the beholder. what i see is a passing black bird on my horizon, it is always a case of leaving and putting back where my soul lies, what i see are colors of sorrows and hideousness this you cannot see because i have a wall for myself.... what i am seeing is beauty, it is the upsurge of my ecstasies... you are curious, you want to be counted it to what beauty is. It is boxed and what is there is the beauty of darkness.

black as the night, cold as the mountain fog, glistening dew of leaves, sparkles of stars, sounds of leaving boats, and the song of the swan.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Am To You

you want to forget me, brush me aside like some thing that you have no use of,
like a broken comb
or a shampoo wrapper or a used toothpaste, and for all the other reasons that you may conceive

i perfectly understand it the words we use shall tell exactly what logic wants us to portray a broken monument shattered pieces of glass a stone thrown away a used clothing where my smell may shout a very sweet memory
of us

a perfume that someone sprayed on the body a body
a hand
a nose

lips and face and caressing fingers, the fate of all these shall lie on the judgment of the brain we tell them to go away we tell them to hide themselves

to forget
but look at them they all refuse
they are still you and forgetting seems to be illogical they have become some parts of you and destroying them has become impossible

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Am To You

who are you?
i am not the sun
i do not have light my hands are not
rays

do not worship me
do not look down
look at me straight in
my eyes
i cannot blind
you

i am a river
come, come to me plunge in me
flow with me
in my own sorrow

do not stand there
and raise your hands
trying to reach me
i am not a cloud

i am a tree so come, come, come to me climb in my branches
pick my fruits have some to eat
i am the kindness of the hill the shade of the tired traveler

do not create a distance i am the grass
sit upon me
lay your body
i am soft and i am cool make yourself comfortable.
What I Believe In

what i really believe in is this thick wall where no human language no matter
how filthy

no matter how holy has ever penetrated

try it, you will be disgusted

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Can Be To You

i can be
whatever you want me to be i can be a whisper to your ear

on storms
i can be the lighthouse of your lost ship

when something sinks give me the sign

i can grieve
and turn off the light
i can offer the consolation of darkness it will be so dark
it will be, it will be

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Cannot Write

what i cannot write
is the answer of the riddle of the sphinx
to me.
i know myself.

hence, i know the answer very well.

i cannot even say it.
thinking about it
shakes my being like an earthquake
to the foundations of my house.

i cannot say or write it.

because if i will everything in me crashes like September 11.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Could Not Forget what i could not really forget during that time was the rain, it fell at the wrong time when we were still walking in the middle of the road on our way back to the dorm

i forgot the color of my coat the color of your blouse the umbrella in your hand i forgot whether there was a boat at the pier or there was none at all what i could not forget was that kiss that landed on my cheek when you said goodbye and i was standing alone waiving

still hoping that we might meet again

somewhere,

i still do not know.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Did Next

and then i went to the rest room to touch the coldness of water my fingers want to feel what numbness is in my head i see the woman crying

i see the child inside the niche everyone is looking for the comfort in each others hands a hold, a stare, a word to date, there is still none.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Feel Today

what i feel today is this i am scooping some ice cream for you five scoops of vanilla flavored ice cream with marshmallow toppings i hand them to you with a very sweet smile and you start licking and munching marshmallows

inside my mind
is this pain inside my heart is my aching tooth

but i am not telling you
or anybody
i am a very considerate man trying always to please you

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Got You Got

what i got surely you also got these hands
and eyes and mouth

now, what if i ask you to surrender all these things to me because i am poor
because i am needing help?

you will.

and you will be another poor man another man needing help the cycle of poverty and need, tell me where you are at this precise time?

be still and be contented and be happy and just be where you are

do not ever move do not ever extend your arm you will fall on this wide chasm where everyone finally dies

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Hate About Reunions

people always keep recalling my old shape

and they always give reminders

change your lifestyle as though telling me that i must stop writing poetry and start jogging the earliest hour of the morning

which is my only hour for reflection

ah, work too much work rushing rushing blood in my veins the man is right it is time to slow down a bit and savor

the scent of the moon
at night

with my beloved.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Have In My Hands

What I have in my hands
Are few petals

Of flowers in different colors
Some pure white, without odors

What I have in my hands too Are little birds with some dreams

Wanting to fly to heights Wanting to erase frights

What I have are some things plain Something direct nothing to explain

Call them an essay or prologue to a play No metaphors inserted nothing to display

Wisdom plain and simple A tribute to a child’s dimple

There is no complication There is no sophistication

Who makes them a poem is you What makes them alive is you too

There is no other
There is no bother

There is no other who gives them a feel Except you and one long electrical eel

What I have in my hands are all yours They are not mine they are free they are all for free

They are meant to be
To be free for you
What I Have Not Ever Seen

what i have never seen does not bother me, it is felt and it gives me all the comfort the stillness
and stability, it is like the hand that holds my hand and gives me
warmth
during the harshness of the rains

i have never seen the fingers and the palms and the veins but i have felt the heat in the coldness of my winter

sometimes there are those unseen yet more real than what is visible to the naked eye

i do nothing. i just believe.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Have Now....

this beautiful feeling
is a conqueror...

it has conquered pain,
transcended religion,

overcome fears, erased
boredom, disregarded shame.

endured and has ignored restrictions. Freedom. Love.

Isolation. Peace. No regrets.
this beautiful feeling

conquers the self. Builds a home. Creates a self again.

and here i am
holding it, holding you.

living, i am living.
Heart beats. Silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Have Written

i have written about
it

thought it was beautiful it mentions of you and me

when we sleep together
and then

when we wake we tell ourselves that we no longer
remember

when we dream no more because there is no more space
where we can place our pieces of
happiness

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Have Written About The Why?

is it like filling an empty space? or making an opening to a closed box? or is it gasping for breath because one is drowning? or is it diving in the water looking for the pearl? or is it finding the universe in the grain of sand? or is it just doing it because we have nothing to do? ....or is it living life to the full? or is it because it is?

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Have Written Before And What I Want To Write Now those were the rage of my youth i was so political and wrote all those protest poems damning the government for all its atrocities i lost. The government won.

Someone, most of us, went to prison
but then
times change, situations go for the better and then we were free the trauma seeps inside the veins of our brains
we learned to love silence mellowed like orange on a wooden tray.

not everything is over yet we age, like you, we get old and old and weak
and strong in wisdom
i suppose, and so i go back what i left before unfinished
i am rewriting an old flame feeling its heat that was there before i am putting back those dead characters in their strong determined dialogues love is patient, love is gentle love is strong, love is eternity love goes beyond

time

i put the dialogues which i deleted before when you left me because i was so crazy about reforms
when i was so hardheaded about raging in the storm
'i love you. Will you marry me?'
'Yes' she says yes this time.

The is now the ending.
And i will not change it again.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Keep Reminiscing.

for as long as twigs grow buds and buds turn to leaves and flowers for as long as light leaks out between the slats of bamboo on our walls i shall continue writing like the way i breathe like the way i keep in touch with every journey that every cell of my blood takes back to my heart

settling back to mind what i keep reminiscing.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Like For Now...

i like direct statements candid words

few nothing curved

fire
shrapnels

murder then vanishment

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Like From You

i like to think that you think that i am not at all serious about memories. memories are not like seeds they do not grow anywhere when thrown memories are selective for instance in our minds these memories think that they are special and must be treated in such ways like an important guest to be fed and pampered there were memories that i killed say i am cruel say i am one of those savages in the mountains killing innocent natives direct to the eye bull's eye bullshit bull's eye the man fell straight to the ravine without the benefit of any doubt at first we shiver but it will only be for that first time and there is the second and there is the nth time and we become numb to ourselves to our own words we embrace the silence of the

whatever whoever whenever the who what where and when there was that woman naked bathing in the river and there was that monkey did you hear the sound again? i wish i have no ears i wish i have no mind at all what have you made out of me? a doughnut, a black hole, a grass a cloud.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Like In You

what i like in you
is that you know how to sing the notes of a whisper

on the side of my pelvis up to the tip of my tongue to the tip of my hair and then back to the tips of my toes

i lie down and bare it all for your lovely gaze

salivating love tickling the tips of my soul

i give in and so you win.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Like Most About The Falling Leaves Of Autumn

i like most the sound of the falling leaves of autumn

just right after we make love when my eyes lay wide awake on the ceiling my mind travels like a falling leaf it is asking: what for? where? and why?

and then i hear the hazy sound of silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Like Most Is After The Act

this is not my room
neither
is it yours, in fact this room too just like us
is a stranger, we open it and then we close it, just like what we do to ourselves hungry, we eat, thirsty we drink, and restless we do things that our minds do not ever think

of
or even remember, it is dark here, and there is no music to lighten the mood, it is hot and we are even hotter
feeling the heat
within us, the intertwining and the changes
and exchanges of top to bottom and bottom to top you have such a nice hair
sometimes they cover my face and i long to a space where i can breathe but you do not really mind, you know i like the way you make me quiver,

we are listless and restless and we want to discover everything unexplored
in our unknown universe, planets are we, losing our orbits and both of us

explode

a big bang and then the silence of the cigarette smokes eyes looking for some crevices on the ceiling you take a drink and i lay on your side facing the wall and then you start a conversation asking me for my name

i like to sleep
i have no answer yet, maybe in a minute

when i regain my confidence to be my real self again i beg that you understand my predicament i just like being so silent this time i like it more if we have no names forever

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Like On Early Mornings

THE trees that surround
this house
are teeming with birds
the early morning
chorale

the winds from the
sea
are violins without visible performers

the hush of the leaves are the usual arias

some stones on the feet of trees are audiences in their respectable
silence

the garden is the stage of all these showings

since no one is in the house i sit on a rock
the best bench there is contemplating on some peaceful thoughts and i feel like someone
who is
an honored recipient of all these graces

i conclude: God is Here.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Lost And What I Gained In Return

i lost it
i am asking my it what did i get when i lost it?
i do not have to be sad i learned that precious lesson of a loss
and that is enough
gain for me.

(sigh)

for sometimes the Greek god grants your wish purposely
to punish your illogical
persistence!

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Love Most Before The Rain

it is that point where the rain is about to fall like a woman blushing
when the clouds turn gray and heavy when it is about to burst and yet it still waits for the first
dropp to fall
it is that point when people are not running yet for shelter
at that point i am at ease
sitting on a bench
waiting for the pandemonium of steps and hands covering heads and women losing their grace and men showing their rage
and people scattering
like ants
that you spray with insecticide
it is that point when people
begin to protect themselves

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Need

a rising sun between two breasts of mountains green and lushing trees and a blanket of daisies on grasses soft and rivers with waters flowing on a bed of rocks and stones and sand, a hushing sound of a song a maiden young and wondering if i this man shall kiss her lips tonight when the moon is full when the stars are glistening like diamonds in the skies.

RIC S. BASTASA
idealism was the first thing i believe in that the good triumphs that the bad at the end is vanguished and buried the corrupt is hanged and the people shall clap their hands while the flag flies in the free air, while the women dance in our liberties while the men take pride in the wars that they have fought and won, that justice prevails that the criminal is always caught and put to jail because crime does not pay, that the rich may soon become poor because in accordance with the cycle of fortunes
no one is poor forever that the only possibility of those who are up is always to go down then one day i notice some white locks of hair in my head my lips crack, my cheeks have wrinkles and my forehead has a number of furroughs my skin dry, my nose falling on my chin, the changes, oh, the changes, in myself have become the

inevitable,

and then, all of the sudden, the idealism is gone, like how government is toppled by another government like how a charismatice leader is shot and another seemingly charismatic leader takes the reigns,
only to find
one robber displacing another robber and this keeps on happening for years, until one day i find myself standing in one corridor staring to the space beyond me to the far mountain to some grey skies it looks it will rain all day in my life

i look at myself in the mirror
to find this ugliness in myself and in everything else it is dark, it is what we call a nice evening and then we do nothing but turn off the light and sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Project

what i project in all those years is what you get and you swallow me hook, line and sinker and you get so nosy with all your questions leading you to all your self-framed answers. what i am inside me
you must know is what i am just between my body and my soul my left hand does not even know what my right hand is holding.
the shadows in that cave and the real body that you may touch bathing in the river
you must have known by now are two different kinds of illusions. What i have in my hand is the real one: it is alive and it is jumping and flying and i am chasing it now, so please, excuse me, i got to go, i still have many things to do, so many questions to make so many answer to fabricate, so many quests, i do not even have to take my rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Really Needed

so sorry, let me be candid, what i need, is, not you,
you are here already,
what can i do? at times i need the past, talk to it, and feel the home that was,
but past is past, the dead sleeps with the dead, and there is no waking up, you see, and so i try to embrace the future, but it was too young then and not prepared to understand, and i take the quiet and the lotus positioning of the man
refusing to be lost on a train of thought into oblivion, i want to quit, but you know i can't,
we have a house and a farm, an apartment and a brand new car, we have a life, we have learned this hate and love and hate and love, this i can never leave without you script, sans the aria, and the long breaths, the notes of agony dissolving
over the brilliance of the sparkles of wine.

what i need, i must agree, is here, and it is you
still.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Really Want

te the whole truth comes to me te the vast continental ocean to my thirst t don't just ask for light t ask for the sun and the galaxy t will give you a hint: the earth, the space, a flight of birds V-shaped in the horizon not just a wind, but the storm

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Remember About Her

it was the first time for me to see a sunflower
the first time really despite the fact that in the barrio where i live my mama had a sunflower garden,
and

it was Tita who made me see a different sunflower, the one which made me open my mouth wide as though i were a kind of a whale, sifting planktons in the deep,

the world is a sunflower, it is another sunflower that van gogh painted, it was so touching, as though someone died in the mountain, killed without mercy, waving a white flag for a surrender,

and Tita spoke about a sunflower and she was not looking at us, but at the window, where a big wall shut us all from the trees, a meter away, a dead end of some shallow interpretations about life, about who we are, when we are not waking.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Saw At The Temple...

in the buddhist monastery somewhere in ho chi minh city an old tourist who travels alone though a roman catholic by option and tradition
lights his incense
buys a blank paper writes his unfulfilled wishes of his long gone youth submits it to the famous Lady of the Sea

the monk in maroon lights the paper and the the smoke goes up to the sky as the gods
begin to deliberate whether this old man deserves it

a young boy left by his mother (as she busies herself on the altar) leans on the 300 year-old wall wondering what is this all about twitching

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Think

what i think is what you get this is all i have a finger, a thought, a tongue i can offer you a hand if you want
if you stay, i can offer you greater than all these you may have my body and if you care for me more than enough
you can even have my soul but if you are true more than enough that you take time burying me when i die
then i can give you more than my soul and my body but you may not like it so i may ask: won't you take my poetry?

don't laugh, i am a serious writer.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Think During That Time...

it has not rained
for a week and nights are humid
the women are using fans
and see through dresses

that early morning
the rain arrives in grandeur
taking glory of its opulence

the trees are drinking
and the grasses
are taking so much pleasure

it is like the sky
and earth
making love exchanging pleasures
of their variations

i have seen their mutual pleasures and i think i am hearing their moans

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Think....

i think i can write
i always think that way and i listen to nobody when someone starts to tell me that i am doing well in this and that and not this, it is too low, too humiliating for one like me to delve into this illogical and free flowing fronts something like a strained though flowing like a water damned, but i always think that i can write, words keep rising from my throat and i watch how each letter goes into the sky and forms the clouds of this oblivion, when they start dissipating into rain and i am left gaping for more water which were just words before and which water has always made me thirsty more than ever what water is this?

i ask the well and there is no answer. It too is craving for water literally drying up like a woman in her mid forties trying to figure out what life
shall be without being wet.
What I Think.....

actually we like that some words are better be unsaid,

that some nuggets remain in their natural state

like diamond unpolished like gold that remains united one with the rocks and deep underground nothing about mercurial segregation or nitric acid detachments to make them more pleasing and yet too artificial

their value so enhanced that people soon begin to kill one another

actually things are better if they remain buried forever in fact that is what grasses take pride that is what volcanic eruptions with their hot lava after having cooled in time achieve with hidden dignity no one remembers the horrors of the past no one recalls the cruelty of those who were very much ahead of us actually it would have been better if we have not met even once had that talk and drink and shared those stories i guess, my life would have been much better (off)

without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Told Mama...

i know mama
for me to move on with my life
i must
travel light,
like a feather
and i must accept
everything
that comes my way

to say yes
and be too pleasing

.....forgive me mama
i do not want to move on with my life i am staying like a navel

RIC S. BASTASA
What I Told You

I will be sad
Having told you everything Those that I have weighed
And kept
Like my hidden gems

Yet I shall have no regrets Some words are meant to be spread And said
To please some lonely hearts Though they may deceive you sometimes Like mirrors reflecting mirrors And you shall have a hard time Pointing where I am My words inhabiting
You like ghosts
They may stay inside you for long Their dark colors
Their own shapes and sizes Pointed, insistent and sometimes Conspicuously hurting

You may return them to me I am waiting and you shall be Relieved and free

RIC S. BASTASA
What If

what if?
i ask you

no ifs
no buts
your answer

RIC S. BASTASA
What If I Have Only One Arm?

if i have only one arm left i still take the pleasure of using to the utmost the remaining arm
i will take my coffee one at a time open a jar with sugar take a spoonful
and take the cup
and pour hot water there i prefer the right arm rather than the left if one arm be lost.

just that, i am right handed and you are left handed we still complement each other and that is the most important thing that can happen to me.

RIC S. BASTASA
What If I Took The Road Less Travelled By?

there were only two choices, that was during his time,
the road less,
and the road more,
whatever that means,
you know it
and i know it
and i have chosen the road more:

more people, more opportunities more laughter, more entertainment, more and more
the more that we can conceive in our minds,
less the soul, more in the body on an imbalanced
trichotomy,

what if i have chosen the road less traveled by?
less the lust,
less the fame,
less the money, more pains, more grief, less the acceptance of the family, and less the looking up smiling faces of society, i could have been dead by now,

betrayed by all of you,
and so, thank me, fate, thank me luck, for i am here with you in this party of rivers of drinks and mountains of food, in this luxuries of lust and favors,
here we are in this ballroom of music and dances

we all smell like rats feel like crocodiles and spit fires like dragons inside the walls of our extinction.

RIC S. BASTASA
What If I Were Not Born?

i know,
if i were not born

there is no world
there is no now
there is no you

there is nothing
it is all in my mind
and i have none

there is nothing
nothing can exist without my knowing without my mind

i, am, the, mind.
i, am, my world,

without me,
there is nothing.

you exist, because i think, you exist.

you love, because
i love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
What If Time Travelled In A Straight Line?

the hands of time travel in a very small circle of our watch.
the sound is minimalistic, only the wrist is disturbed.
or the wall. or the bed.

everyday round the clock. Faithful.

i like it to travel on a very straight line. Have an edge.
I will push it. It will fall. I want it dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
What If You Died?

i have become another wretched creature in this corner of your hidden universe for i, adam like, have swallowed half of your poisoned apple, tonight my left hand shall be refuted. my right shall protect me my mouth shall remain silent for this conquer.

there are inconsistencies of the self which the self may right itself here you are telling me that i must use my heart this time having been tortured by reason and knowledge having believed much on myself rather than the maps of fate

i told you people change that i too knows how to
and what change is only this time when you tell me that i have had hurt you

and all these years
you have carried
it
in the carriage of
silence

what if you died?

RIC S. BASTASA
What If You Were Wrong?

you are using a human mind
limited as mine

why are you so definite?
what if you are wrong like the way it was with myself when i first met you and told you about a definite right?

sometimes i can
be wrong
i told you that before.
you never told me
once

you're not the wise man that i must respect.

RIC S. BASTASA
What If?

what if? what if?
man, that is too hypothetical.

try it. plunge. get wet.
soak. get burned.
touch it. feel it.
love it. hate it.
away.
stay. go. and be
yourself.

now, this is for real.

RIC S. BASTASA
What If? ....

What if
there is nothing
there?

what if beyond
is just an open
gate
a
broken fence?

what if
as we see it
there is nothing but dust and wind?

shall we but laugh
about past
sacrifices?

how many books
are there
how many pages
how many
words
deeds
go into the futility
in time?

cheers! i have this glass and drink all it has
and then
i shall be content
perhaps with only the remaining
emptiness

which
by analogy is still
silence

RIC S. BASTASA
What If? ........

this morning i just read from her who is so far away from me

(we only know each other by name we have never met for once) that there is no 'other' but it does not mean that there is just a 'self' either it is this oneness that makes us what we are and so there is no other no self, like the way how things grow side by side, the tree and the snake, the moss on the rocks, the wind and the sky, the sea and the rivers, there are no boundaries now no fences no walls, this logic of absurdity: what if you do not exist?

what if this world is not what it is?
what if there is no force of gravity? no air?

what if there is no one? what if?
what? what if there is no word?

this morning i realized that i am alive and that asking questions are more beautiful than having the answers, which are where the road ends, and then there is no forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Imagination Does After Reading Your Poem About The Amaranth.... this pen that i am holding is black it turns into a snake once i leave it

and then after we sleep and drink tea at the veranda facing the sunset
i go back to where i left it to find it again

and it turns into a pen again black and inanimate and i imagine it as a tool that i shall use against you

white paper which turns into a floor of an eggshell where anything delicate which i have kept as memories for years and which i have not yet fully grasped shall be laid and written.

you who sips tea with me shall become my mind thinking about what i am not and which after a thorough sifting i shall accept as my oblivion.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is A Good Poem?

It is like a traveler with no fixed plans
where to go
and is not intent of arriving at its undefined destination

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is A Lonely Woman?

when you greet me first and say hello and ask if i am ok when i also talk to you and it will be long and we are not tired honing words like cleaning a bottle or making a glass figurine shine against the light when i listen, when i stop doing other things giving you time,

and then inside myself i make a definition of you
and then
i say, 'oh i perfectly understand the situation' and it doesn't bother me.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is A Writer's Block?

i am looking for a writer's block? what is the number of its street?
what is its name?
what is the number of its block?
what landmark fronts it?
is it near the chapel? is it at the side of the marketplace?

i have never been there
condemned, i shall write without stopping.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Blue?

blue is
when you were young and you could not eat the candy bar because you had no money to pay for it

blue is when you become old and save so much money and you can now afford the candy bar but you cannot eat it because it makes you sick

blue is
you have the candy bar and you can eat it
but then
you are already dead in your bed

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Fair?

soon this restaurant shall close.
the customers are not satisfied discriminatory food is served the waitresses are arrogant and the soup is bland and bugged.

it will be very lonely here the bar will be colder than ever the table dusty, and the chairs empty.

soon i'll pack up too, leave the place and go somewhere else for good.

i shall not leave a word, i am not saying anything.
i shall choose what's next and what is fair.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Friendship?

let me ask that today
what is friendship to you?

me always at the spending end and you always the bill me as the hospitable host always and you as the demanding parasite let me ask that to you now

what is friendship to you?

you do not really care about how i feel it seems i am always the blanket and you are the cold one inside it could be that i am the mat at the footsteps on the door or the rug always ready for the floor or the handkerchief always obliging to your sneeze or the cap covering for your needed nap watch me, for soon

i will take your definition

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Good About Silence?

when you enter a room
you are full and when you leave it without any word wasted you are still full: nothing more nothing less, you feel the goodness of keeping things within yourself like some hidden treasures still undiscovered: you look at them again inside your heart you belong to no one else and no one else belongs to you like the beauty of venus glowing like a star from where you stand

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Happening To You?

I find it strange how we stopped making new beginnings With our two hands we grope no light, with your ring finger You snap a fly and there it dies with nobody mourning, With your eye you touch a stone And throw it to the sky. How strong are your thoughts today?
How crazy, how messy.
In the kitchen with your knife
You slice more onions amazed that you will shed no tears, Proud about your long stares Staying on the stairs

Just beside your apron a cockroach is crawling On used tissue paper. And a fish is leaping like a frog Like a dove just struck a window and Fell to the ground. Soiled bleeding heart. You are always busy asking-Why is this why is that? There is no end to your murmur.
You’re making heat where ice is frozen, making Pancakes when there is no electricity in the oven

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Hard For You...

do i have to tell you what is hard for me all these days?
I have been suffering but i never tell.
The days are hard, and the hours seem to be desert on my journey hammers in my head and my ears have not heard the songs of love and youth, i will not tell you how hard is it for me to live life this way.
I am on your side, silent.
Dignified by your death
years ago,
i will not tell you how hard has this all become for me.
It is getting late.
And the hour may finally come For me to be rested
like you.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Home?

so do you mistake
your hotel as home?
or is home a feeling?
a fleeting feeling that is here today and gone
tomorrow?
is it the lapse of time?
the multiplication of
your family?
is it the sense of being away always from a house?
is home nothing but the heart that always shall long for the presence
of God?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is In A Hello?

all the roses in full bloom and i feel like a new broom and i can't help saying hello to you, simply because you have always been my sun and my moon

my song and my life

hello to you
your silence is killing me.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is It About Distance?

i

it is like the silence of the pebble contemplating
on the the wisdom of the distant star

ii

it is like two hearts
beating
for each other
far away
from the bosom feelings growing fonder

iii

it is like moving away
towards the top
of the cliff
trying to see
the village below
from another holistic point of view

iv

it is the healing of a wound taking the form of a scar hoping sighing
soon, soon, soon....

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is It All About

We try to talk about many things Petty and not so vulgar We try to overwhelm ourselves With so much words as I choose What to put to make you marvel And you pretend you marvel That I make sense, but in truth That is not the point of this meeting Of two souls, it is the meeting of bodies Of two bodies, needing each other’s warmth And wrath, as I tell you about something Interesting, you know that I am just Pretending, my eyes are looking at every Corner of your skin, the tip of your fingers Wanting to touch me, too, The softness of your body, the lines in Your curvatures, swaying towards My lips, I stop, I kneel before your Gentleness, as you close your eyes As you hold my hair, as you caress My neck, my arms, my chest and you Have sympathies for my gentleness My humiliation, you ask me with the Signal of your hands, and eyes, and Lips that I rise up

To kiss you, it is all about it, and We have no chance saying words Again, we breathe each other’s longings We fill our mutual emptiness, like we Are all cups now filled with air.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is It And What Caused It

it was a good seed
after all, -
it is the soil
it is the bad one

it is a spirit pure never adulterated
it was the wrong body
the rotten flesh

there is no one responsible no one is worth the blame Heaven is always a feast
a celebration

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is It Like...

these thoughts
are like the afternoon
beside the sea
there is a storm and
the waves are as big as my rage against a rock
that is never cracked
despite

my head keeps on banging something that is unbearable
indestructible

my love is like that rock and so lies my rage like the waves.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is It That Makes Us Stop To Love?

is it too much familiarity that the other sounds like a blabber and looks like a blubber and smells like a tuber?

is it the hustle and bustle of the daily worries that takes her away from a mystery and you have nothing mystical to maintain that fantasy?

so much reality
this everydayness that shuts you out from the interest of life it must be the desire turned off the will surrendering the heart dying because there is no more blood rushing because the ecstasy had long left both of you staring at the ceiling and waking up as though there is nobody sleeping on your side and closing windows and opening doors stepping out

finding the air of freedom and smelling its new scent feeling the wind and wanting to play even if it is dark and cold and damp on a moonless night on the soft grass under the lushing trees waiting for your dream
to come
where someone will be there

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is It That Must Matter Most?

it is easy to answer that for a believer in God, it is written, and there is an answer there, Love of God, God's Love His Mercy, His saving Grace Salvation of the Soul safe answers, Melvin, answers handed from Adam to his Cain and Abel to the present generation of X's and Y's
and even Jejemons,

but what about Melvin-for those who do not believe in God?

What about these brothers?
What should matter?
What is the answer to Atheism to paganism
to nihilism?

I am interested. Somehow.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is It That You Like?

don't you like this sweetness of my words?
you are bored with this sugar and honey
and cream?
you are afraid you have become sick of such sweet tongue
such sweet indulgence?
oh, you want something bitter something sour now?
some bitter herbs some sour species of green lemons?
try me,
 i am a bitter person
 i am the latest delicacy of all that is sour
and decomposing.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is It?

What is it that looks like an ant?
Walks like an ant, falls in line like an ant, Smells like an ant, eats like an ant, Crawls like an ant, and thinks like an ant.

Of course, nothing but

An ant

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is 'It'?

what is it that must live on? that which neither life nor death cannot destroy?

I have it too
inside myself.

But like Sarah
I won't tell you.

Surely, you must know by now
that

'It' is a secret.

You figure out
in between the lines

You search it out
in all my poems

But i will tell you
You cannot find 'IT'.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Lacking

been thinking what is lacking ah this one been thinking about it
the whole day
wanting to write it tonight i almost forget about it i want to forget about it and then i forget about it but there is a reckoning like a clock with its two hands running counterclockwise and so i remember and now must write it somehow

it is like this: there is an apple the apple of my eyes and i have a tongue and fairly sharp line of teeth like small gods, and i bite the apple and savor its taste and flavor i go to heaven but i leave the apple that sin
that apple of discord turning into a snake with forks as tongue spurned and scorned like a woman now turning into hell with the fires of the dragon running after me
passion, yes passion, you take it, and it won't let you go it will consume you eat you
and you regret it but it is too late heaven has closed its door and hell is here
but can love be hell?
can something which feels so good be that poisonous venom of the snake that apple of your eyes
who says
it loves you forever?

heaven, heaven,
please understand
open your door
i am coming

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Left Of You....

can you make me
come to you

can you make me
come to you

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Life?

a dedication of all seasons,

wet or dry winter or spring autumn and summer
there is forever

lights on and off winking windows and doors close and then soon into an open fingers to the hands rivers to the sea

oh, flitting clouds shaping and re-shaping oh, there is no ending

our fickle minds
our flapping feelings
our body our soul
one with space covered and silenced.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Life? ....

along the trail
of this mountain
passing through
the same river
that winds its way among the rocks and trees
one finds a makeshift
to rest
the night and on the following morning
packs up
all the essentials
and then moves
away again.....

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Love?

as i see you
weeping
and wailing

i comfort myself
as i relate

love too must not stop. It must travel

it needs to.
to forget. to vary.

love too, like life must be a journey. Let us take a walk.

let us take a deep breath.

breathe. breathe.
that is what we can really do.

love too must have some escapades.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Making Me Sad?

here i am reflecting or perhaps grieving for the happiness which i just attained i have to say it just like what you said before in the sky some clouds look twisted in the river some fishes are dead in the road some signs are lost here i am wondering what is it that i just had which i wished for nights

what is making me sad?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Natural Is Best

i built a chicken house but the chickens still prefer

to roost
on the branches of the kamuning tree

last night it rained so hard the chickens are silent

all wet they peck on grains scattered on muddy ground

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Natural Is Best And Yet Most Neglected

the best part
is left unplanned

it comes from the unexpected

like light falling at the back of your head someone not preoccupied with itself notices it

saying, ' happy morning
everyone! '

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is New And Tougher

we wake up
rise from our positions of defeat &

we proclaim
incessantly

i shall soon forget this

it was not me
i am not a loser

you move forward get a mask for a while

wear it
assume another feat

you invite yourself
here's another feast

for new challenges and muster what changes are there what is new and tougher.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Not Natural Can Not Be Felt As Beautiful

draw me a horse
do not put its four feet
make me a boat
without it usual sails
hand me a butterfly
without its wings
find me a bird without its claws and beak
build me a house
without a roof
make love to a woman
without her hair

this i tell you
everything is possible
but what is not
natural can not be felt as beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Our Worth As A People?

we have not moved
as one
we have always noted
differences
it has been that way
always
we have not focused on our similarities our common bonds even if they be chains and locks and knives,
we should have been
more patient about
our shortcomings,
we were not born perfect we all have defects, now you have the guts
to ask why are we poor?
why are we scattered?
why are we oppressed?

we are worth the hundred deaths that we are suffering.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Painful....

upon a love
unrequited

silence is triumphant

your silence
and mine
joined together

to hide from all of them
all

what is painful.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Permanent

who you are when you are born can be permanent a boy another girl a chubby baby on the crib the thin one barely breathing in the cradle the sleepy one sucking milk from the mother's breast sometimes you know there are no choices with what the genes gave to the spine and the skull these are permanent shapes what we can choose is either/or love or hate or both peace or war leave or stay compassion, understanding hope matters of the heart and the soul that only us can sift like flour from the bugs.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Poetry For Me?

it is not the form
not even the rhyme
not even loneliness
or fear
it is not the meter
there is no need
for a ruler
it is not even the metaphor
no technique
is necessary

it is just you
at this moment
speaking

RIC S. BASTASA

perhaps you have taken Lady Freedom so she left you for good. Now you have to get to know well with the other Lady inside your cell.

She is mean but not that cruel.
She will remind you of the rituals which you have forgotten.

You have to comb your hair a hundred times before you sleep.
You have to sleep on a flat bed.
Your view to the world is limited, Only through the slit eyes of those bars can you see the stars

what is really
most important is what you have not seen before.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Really The Gift You Give Me On My Birthday?

what you hand is a box with a reb ribbon you say it is your gift on my birthday and i open it
it is an orange cake with sweet mango slices as toppings and a lone cherry on top of a mound of chocolate and some green candles telling me my exact age and this matchstick
to light the wicks

the cake is on the table and i stand right there surrounded by all of you singing the birthday song and the time comes for my making a wish and the blowing of the little flames of my age after the party you all live one by one like stars fading at dawn and i am left alone with all the litters and the laughters that stick on the walls and curtain and the giggles that spill on the table cloth the gift is not the box it is not the cake it is not the cherry it is not the little green candles that speak of my age it is not the flame because i blow them all it is not even the wish that i make for myself because they are all mine secretly seeping in the crevices of my cranium what is the gift really that you give me on my birthday i know it and you know it how can we not tell each other sometime?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Right Can Sometimes Be Wrong

what is right can sometimes be wrong, like the right of a state to kill,
that to me is wrong,
like the right to have slaves that was wrong, but they once thought it was right, something that feels so right may, sometimes, be also be wrong, like feeling love, and too much love for a neighbor or yourself, it can be intoxicating at times,

and it can kill you,

because what is right exists only in our human minds, limited, too narrow, too confined in our flesh and blood, in the context of our culture, in the frames of our time, to the dictates of religion the liberality of our education, to our biases and prejudices, what we believe in, what we touch with faith in dark places what we try to light with candles, or see in microscopes or see in telescopes, or see with our eyes and hearts wide open,

may still be wrong, or still be not right,

so what is right after all?
Possibly, this can be right, But possibly this can also be wrong,
We can always pray. But the doubt Is always there. Cogito ergo sum.

Who can really be sure?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is The Cloud To The Sun?

For what is the cloud to the sun, It is nothing. The wind has always Driven it away and the sun does not Care. For want of love and care, the Cloud plays with the fields and the River and the sea. Impregnated it Has conceived, and gives Birth to the rain. The fields and the Sea and the rivers feasted. The fields Grow the grass and the flowers.
The sea and the rivers have Seeded its waters with more fish.
The cloud does not like it. It has Always dreamt of the sun but the Wind has always blown it away.
At night the cloud talks to the moon.
And seeing the likeness of its light To the sun that it loves, the cloud Makes love with the shining moon.
It has given birth to the stars.
The following morning, the cloud Is exhausted. It floats with the Chastisements of the wind. There Is no more direction. It still dreams Of the sun. It dies and becomes Taken as part of the wind. The Cloud has become a white, clear Sky. It is nothing. It is what you See, when love is unrequited.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is The Remedy Really?

at dawn
i palpitate
and then
i anticipate
something
difficult and unnecessary like some questions of why can't i really get out from here
how long had i been
here
hibernating in utter fear of what i cannot really fully explain
only if i know it completely perhaps i can find a way
a cure
only if i know the real cause or if as i have predicted i must have refused knowing it despite the face i face
despite the nearness of what i can really
touch
or is it simply because there is no
known remedy for

unrequited love?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is There

a worm inside the home of its hollows at night it sings and i can hear its joys of home and family

a bird rests on a twig of a tree it sleeps beside the quarter moon
the leaves are calm
respectful of the
silence

inside the room
i contemplate on this perfection: nature in harmony with the self
there is joy
indescribable
there is sorrow shared in our solitude

there is this silence that respects the earth
like the stars
in perpetual twinkle

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is These All About?

at 9: 18 p.m.
the head gets the pain
another relief
swallowed

finally you go back to where you
started

page one when you said
you do not miss her

page two and three
empty

pages more pages until you reach that page where you cried dried tears at the middle of the blotted letters

you quickly run your fingers close the notebook

you stand by the window at par with the moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is This All About?

i remember you want everything silvery
the songs, the river
must be silver
never gold, you do not like gold, never about gods, you do not like being a god,
i remember you do not like popcorn
with cheese as flavor
you want
no popcorn
in movie houses
you like to simply
hold my hand
and lay your head as close to the beatings
of my heart
you pretend you are so absorbed in some dialogues
or the scenes
the action
the hero winning
at the end
all the the others
finally dead,

i remember you
yes, this is all about it, i remember you always, and i know you always remember
me, always,

memories like
passing scenes
like some movies
the plot
and the actor and his lady hugging
at the end
behind them the sun set

unlike us, we have no ending still

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is This All About? (2)

some surrender
a long time ago
they made a good start
today they mark
a bad ending
and it is sad

it is not having or giving this is all about becoming
and becoming and becoming
and simply
being

here, there,
being everywhere if you really want
to understand

it is not the cutting of the stalk of that beautiful flower

it is not the catching of the firefly at night and then putting it sealed on a jar

you are killing time you are killing what is beautiful to be simply freed some have already surrendered some have freely killed themselves it is not about them this is something for the world to feel for the world to live for mankind to survive

it is once written it is not about the hammer but the snail how beautiful it is for us to be slow savor every step of this journey celebrate the solitude of every soul in the most beautiful peace of our existences.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is This Life All About?

as i walk today
the sun has not yet shone there is no brightness then on the horizon this is the boundary between light and darkness gray,

the black buffaloes are still resting under the mahogany trees the chickens start to hop land on the ground and begin to feed upon themselves the rain last night created small ponds on the side of the pathways the nipa hut of the old dying woman is still closed there is a possibility that no one shall open it not even herself

abandoned

the grasses are wild and lush there is enough for everyone space to thrive food to eat but i guess there is not much desire to realize what this life is all about

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is This World Made Up Of?

what is this world made up of?

nothing but us.
nothing but us.
just us, just us.
just us, just us.

earth or sea or air
they are not there without us, here.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Wrong With You?

you miss the trees
because you were looking at the forest you miss the journey because you were looking at the destination

you miss the smile because you were looking at the body

you miss me because you were recalling all the memories

you miss the present because you live in the past and you keep on thinking about the future you miss life

because you always contemplate on the harshness of death

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Wrong With Your Poetry?

do not sound like a treaty with terms and conditions penalties for violations much more
do not sound like your are sort of a philosophy the heart would not be pleased with prolixity

be like a bird in the air playful to the emptiness of the sky be like the fish agile to the rages of the current sleek and smart
it a second it escapes and is gone an illusion to your hands it is after all the emotions that we are dealing with here grief, anger, bliss happiness, joy, it is the fireworks that we see on the 4th of July less talk more of that awe

and wonder

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Wrong?

what is wrong
with seeing stars in the afternoon skies?

the poor guy is asking what is wrong with my seeing stars naked in the afternoon skies?

i love stars and i love whatever star is there imagined or real.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Your Choice? .......

there is this desert which is full of love
there is nothing in there except the ostracized ostrich
you like it somehow
saying, ah, love is still
the answer

there is this paradise full of greens and reds fenced by the rules
loveless,
you do not like to live there
despite the
comfort of the apple trees
and the scents of the pines and the coolness of the blueness of the coves and
the clouds

now you must make the choice which one? i have chosen mine.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Is Your Name?

you are well fed and all your complaints are well taken from cough to fever to even the simplest symptom of boredom they are ready of their medicines and good accommodations they protect you from cold and from heat and then you become big and fat and beautiful tonight, they are having a drink, and your name comes out in their happy conversation tomorrow you shall have your last meal you are the next to be butchered what is your name? Mr. Contented Pig.

RIC S. BASTASA
What It Is Really?

somewhere our words take us beyond somehow we write because we must rise some build ships some of us have to create an ocean to make these ships sail some of us must know each feather to make us wings some of us must assure that we too can fly for we are part of this lonely planet looking for a cure of humanity’s universal sickness this emptiness that no one feels if i must, if need be, we too have to create God to create us it is said He created us in His own image and we who are lonely and fearful must accept and simply believe we pay nothing for this we only have an imagination some of us has to settle in that bottom of faith some floors must hold us as we float in space and need to land we create floors we recreate the meaning of floating and settling we are tired and what we need most is this peace the calmness of everything is our dream somewhere somehow we are and so we keep on writing some of us has to imagine that we are at rest some mock us because we seem to be always in motion eternity, infinity, this somehow this somewhere always taking us away from us somehow somewhere we think we understand we grope we feel and yet we are unable to hold any and so we keep on saying and saying and saying but what it is really? what it is really?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Joy Is This That Remains To Be A Failure Of Words? ....

the time has come
when we set each other
free.

i set a dove free
the joy is immense winging to the sky

the tree lets a leaf fall and the grass
celebrates with the hoppers

light surrenders to
darkness
and the night is an embrace

the waves come idolizing the cliffs
the shores bare themselves like legs to tongues

why joy is this that remains the failure of words!

RIC S. BASTASA
What Keeps Us Alive Really

there is this sense of rottenness we keep it
but we do not want to be outdone by it, it stinks deep within us but we keep always believing that this cannot harm us we go on day by day on the common routine the ways that make us livable in the house of our heart there are nails of the past and the hammer that keeps on bogging

we are never destroyed somehow but like stairs
we are built and heightened to become a big house where others too live there is this sense of brokenness

somehow
we start from there and on and on the casualness the smile that you see every morning that we meet we keep telling
i am alive and i am still intact

RIC S. BASTASA
What Lies Over There?

What do you see in everyday?
books piling against its other like layers of geological metamorphic rocks age, and hardened by the volcanic eruptions of the beautiful
mind, (self-proclaimed beauty of those incomplete clauses demanding sentences, and periodic disturbances of unmindful commas, somehow, one feels dogged, tail concealed between the legs because of these towering masters who even in their uttermost silence since they were not created with mouths and tongues own claim the dominance of masters)
you listen to the songs of Solomon the dreams of the singing ABBA dismantled by the intricacies of their islands of
loves

what is in store for the wanderer? the lust that subsides like uncertain ebbs what lies there over the green pastures separated by fences
of restlessness,

you grope thoroughly through some kind of syllabic fingers you have lost the ability to quit.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Loneliness Did....

he builds his wall
to protect himself

he is safe inside this lonely chamber

like a monk he sits calmly and chants

the words of peace
and compassion

and then one night when he completes

what he wants to be
he transcends the wall and flies away like a bird and

opts not to come back inside the walls

where loneliness has claimed another death.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Love Does....

because you
are sincere
and you too
hate evil, in the same manner
because of
you
i have been clinging to what is good.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Love Have You Offered To Give To The World?

you say it is love
and you touch the world saying it is love
it is love
you give what gesture is there in gentleness begging
worshiping
kneeling so that you may take love in return

all that this world can give you
is the usual quizzical look
unable to accept what you have to offer
still asking you: is it love?
is it really love?

RIC S. BASTASA
this morning, you are talking about love and how you think it is a feeling that sometimes hurt and make you not easily forget how time heals and leaves a scar just the same how you were stoned one time by an uncaring lover on your head and since then no hair grows in there you start with feelings of tenderness shaped like a very white ball pure and hanging on some ceiling with a very sensitive string always ready to fall and fell always willing to die and died

how each thread of suffering, that feeling of finally being junked have become a cloth, a veil in your face, and how you finally covered yourself with its blanket and how you walked away to get over with such an overwhelming sorrow others tell you that you have been wrong because love too is

a choice
a selection of this and that, a filling of the blanks like a test of life a quiz where you get scored and rated and judged and declared either to be a winner or a loser

lest you forget, one poet who said, that love is not a noun, but a verb not even just a silly adjective or some sort of an adjective to another adjective a decor on your thought or just an idea to be conceived of from an accident of love at first sight, the giggle and the crush for after all love (again, i must tell you) is a responsibility the capacity to look at the apple of eden and not eat it the patience, not just the pleasing or the appetite the way to obey a commandment: to always want the other to be happy and put yourself last in the line of those hungry and thirsty and those who want to find meaning in the other the beloved, above all yourself, the lips that want to kiss and refrained because love is always the drive to be strong and right and survive

RIC S. BASTASA
What Love Is ...

love reminds soon, time lessens me emaciates me, and you begin to ask, why is love like that? is it not supposed to be eternal? oh yes,
only in thought,
in spirit, but not this body its dead cells lose the luster the gloss
but if you love and truly love, nothing matters, there is no worry, affection blooms in wrinkled skins,
trust sticks on arthritic
bones,
companionship stays
like bark on trees ...

RIC S. BASTASA
What Made The Success Of The Swindler?

in the last analysis it was not his gullibility because it could have been so well learned and the swindling avoided as early as possible, frankly speaking
it was his greed, and nothing but his greed, which made the swindlers have the last laugh greed allows everyone to come and take everything

everything

RIC S. BASTASA
What Makes The Tongue Feel The Divine

i've seen what i am dreaming
no hold bar

i've stared at taboo
long enough
than you thought i can not do

i've flown on prohibited territories stayed on dangerous grounds where life
may be wasted

and you decide to leave me i've not sinned

i've not done anything to suppress life
and quell its forces

i've made the world see how love
can be so nil
and deprived

how those public eyes can be so humiliating
when you die
without having tasted
love
what makes the tongue
feel
so divine

RIC S. BASTASA
What Makes Us Close

it is not the gold
or the silver
it is not related to something metallic it is not the grass
or the tree either
not the whiteness of an eggshell
not the blueness of
the sky
not even the soothing sound of the calm waves of the morning sea
not the soft winds
not even the wings of the afternoon seagull
it is not fishy not even avian
it is not the air or that big blue whale

frank let us admit
it is that itch.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Makes Writing Hard

what makes this writing hard?
your insecurity that they may not like the poem from your heart.
don't mind them, this is not a race.
not a contest. this is your precious right of freedom of thought.
it is free, unlimited texting, it cannot kill you it makes you live, free from the chains of your past.

writing is as easy as defecating.
it is bowel removal. it is the electrocution of the wart.
the shaving of the beard.
the cutting of your hair and making you feel renewed like hell.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Makes You Happy Then?

you feel so normal (mind you) if you commit a mistake
despite
the best that you have shown with what you
are

you feel uneasy with excellence
you feel sorry for the shortness of others
you are disturbed because at the top the winds are colder
and you are
alone

you want to be happy being one of them
the people of the mall
the stranger at the park the common player on the leveled field

when you become the sun and planets revolve around you what use is that light and fire that creates all the storms of hell within you?

they will never know that every hour you burst
that all that you take melt
and that there is not a thing that you can ever
keep
What Matters Most Is Love And Peace

you keep on saying that what matters most is love and peace and then we manage to eke out a living for ourselves then what matters
is hunger
we listen to the sound of our complaining bellies asking for rice
and fish
because there is only water from the river odored foul
by these dead mudfishes now my dear
find me a place where i can sleep where i can chant my pleadings to our gods so they may answer
our little complaints

love and peace you keep saying that please prove that to me on this hunger
and poverty convince
me

RIC S. BASTASA
What Matters To Me

what matters to me
definitely is not the family for i do not have any, and i like to think that what should have mattered to me is a good education

but i have it anyway and all those years that good education has not really turned me into a perfect person and so i think of something else that must matter could be money but it has turned me into a slave could be honor, but it amassed in me more arrogance could be class and rank and societal functions, but they are but parts of my day to day existence and then i go into other matters that most people think really matter: God, divine light,

prostrate, bending and begging, humility, prayer

and i tried all these things, inside and outside, the holy grounds, my sandals left outside the door, kissing the soil, and raising my arms all for the embrace of God, nothing happens, i am still in the chains of my flesh, in the sinning of every hour, in the darkness of my soul, in the middle of my sorrow, and i think some more, and more and more, what matters most is that i must only be patient and i must wait things are here, things are there, whatever is here, whatever is there and they are always unfolding, revealing and always telling what matters most of all, at the end, is always the beginning watching the days go by, vigilant when they come and go and as they once said, what matters most is the journey just the journey

just this journey
just my own journey

to where? who knows?
what matters most is the question not really the answer to where? and why? who knows?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Meaning?

you were with someone before you were friends

though, somewhere there is that wish for an intimacy

the impossibility is obvious with the way hands held each other then you went to different directions as expected

you search for meaning and did not find it you meet again

you remember but everything everything is totally different of course, you forget, and proceed you way into those other differences you say, well, life is like that you meet a friend, then a total stranger no regrets, you keep that statement you accept, there is nothing to find, same question:

what meaning is there?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Might She Say

when i left her i left no note she was in that state of suspension what to really believe there were words on the table but they were vague she had kiss marks but they were confused and she had reasons to be sad at first then she was lost and then she said she was angry to the laziness of time to its withholding of what could have been easily said and should have been well said and well meant life was not easy and life need not be clear to be blunt and be understood with so much pain it is better hanging like a leaf waiting for the gracious wind to pluck it off and fall without so much knowing as though it was merely riding on its puff and huff and then dry, and rot and be gone we shall meet again when our minds are calm and strong when our hearts are toughened by extant sorrows when our faces have thickened when our smiles are smoothed i have already prepared my self with what words to say for 25 years or more that i too have suffered and what she might say i have rehearsed my ears what to hear and be not guilty and be not pained anymore life is easier now i have enough space for guilt a stronger heart to carry them all and then leave and move on with my life as though nothing really happened

RIC S. BASTASA
What Mistake Are You Talking About?

when i see a sunflower van gogh comes into my mind then the fear that i will be next to commit the same mistake as his

i divert my mind for something else perhaps a very red red rose well anyway, what mistake was that?

RIC S. BASTASA
What Mother Tells Me

she is always the first to wake up in the house as she prays the rosary and father follows to check the carabao on the side of the hill and transfer it to a greener pasture while we their children are still asleep always wanting more sleep on those cold days curled in our bed covered with thick blankets and soft pillows on our heads and our ears all covered up against the sound of the kitchen our eyes hiding from the light of the morning sun and mother pulls my blanket and takes my arm and hugs me and tells me wake up! wake up! the night is over go to the river and take your bath there is no one on your side now the rest have gone to their respective tasks wake up! wake up! my son go and clean yourself and face the day because the night is over

and these words still cling to my ears:
the night is over
and another one will be coming

RIC S. BASTASA
What Must A Heart Be?

Confined in a room
with no window
how do you expect the heart to sing?

it goes berserk
looking for the good view of the palm trees
and the flowers and
the grass

you deny it

and then it goes crazy it has become a mad, mad
heart
looking for love thirsting for affection

now you have to spend
money
find a doctor and then be too lonely

the heart must be you should have known a dog playing in the field a bird flying in the sky a ball rolling on the hill.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Must Represent You a stone for the protection against the wind and sun, numbness is not what you asked for but it has always been there and you get used to what you are, just being there and not being a witness to anything

anymore,

you could have stopped right there, but beside you
is this seed, tomorrow a sprout a leaf,

you begin to open the orifice of light seeing clouds,
and then feeling a little rain, the flood and then the dryness you know the river that runs back to regain time the stone, the river, the bud

this time

RIC S. BASTASA
What Must You Do?

oh, those little things like the brown grasses of summer, a flower that blooms in the middle of those rocks the worm that crawls its way slowly to the humid part the black bird that stays alone on a branch the tree that keeps on shedding off its leaves the dry wind, the post in the middle of the rice field a banana leaf torn on its sides a concrete fence surrounding the university these and those that people do not mind are mine to write about we make out our links to all these we make our own definitions of the self with what we also mean to them the black bird staring, the concrete fence of indifference.

RIC S. BASTASA
What My Hand Is For

fallen leaf
at that moment when you are
floating
and not having tasted what a rocky ground is i have already captured
you in my hand

RIC S. BASTASA
What My Mama Utters In Her Deathbed

She is dying of diabetes, all her organs Malfunctioning
On sugared complications, Except some portions of her brain Still asking questions,

Where is Leonora?
She is in the office mama still working And where is Betty?
She is on your bedside mama and she is crying Why? Is she sad? Did she pay her debts to the china man?
And where is Marcelino? Mama he is in Nigeria working On a foreign ship and he has no way of coming, his company is
Not allowing him to take his leave, But his wife is here.
I don’t want her here

Who are you? Mama, I am Ric your son, I am your favorite, don’t you Remember me anymore?
Hold my hand; I am seeing some ghosts of your grandpa and grandma
And they hated me, hold my hand and hug me, I am cold, get me a blanket And where is your papa? Mama, papa will be coming in a minute, but he Is still drunk, but he loves you mama,

Who are you?
I do not know you; I was never a part of your dreams, Leave me.

Mama, I am holding you, you are not cold you are warm, Mama, just sleep

And she goes away just like that, sleeping on a travel, just like that,
And Betty cries,

Did she love her? Did he also love her?
when she died, some of us were there, but i know she would have been happier left alone
to figure out
death herself

RIC S. BASTASA
What My Neighbor Says

not having money, he says money does not matter really having a little education he says education matters a bit for it is something that does not tarnish like silver something that does not decay like organic flesh something that termites cannot eat like the walls and beams of the house

not having any land he says what is land but just enough for him to stay something that is at most only about six feet that he really needs not having any intelligence (i think he is a little dumb) he says what matters most is just good deeds the morality the ethical the religious fervor of his being i think he is wise enough to admit (on this aspect, i may be ironic) that what matters to him is only those which he has

and since we have much as a matter of sour-graping he says at all, to be frank, to him we do not really matter

RIC S. BASTASA
What My Teacher Once Said Was This

and those who cannot do it come and be like
me
study how to teach.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Not To Give What Not To Say to an old man do not with a mirror

gift

to a house where a man is recently executed
never mention a rope

RIC S. BASTASA
What Now Little Bird?

What now little bird?

You look around you
The nest is empty
And mother bird is far away And siblings
Have taken the first jump
To the pond
To learn to float
And then
Fly

You think that mother bird Comes back to feed you with another worm?

No, little bird
No one is coming back for you You do not even Know if you have a father bird to save you

No, little bird
Do not wait
Do not waste your time
The sun shines
And it is time
For you to go too

Fly now
Little bird
Find the real meaning of your wings....

Ric S. Bastasa
What Now?

now the questions are asking you
what now? quo vadis?
where to? what for?
why?

yes, why above all.
the questions are asking you
and you must answer with the very same questions to the questions

you beg, and they beg too
the answer to the questions

but you have no answers really
you have learned the art of wisdom
its own ways
its own manners of not answering with answers

who knows? no one knows?
oh, ahh, i must start from where wisdom
was born

here i am and i know nothing....

RIC S. BASTASA
What One Does Matters

as the butterfly
somewhere in china
flutters its
wings

the sea of Japan starts to grow the biggest tsunami

when the butterfly hovers upon the hair of the geisha the waters recede and once more finds its need for nest

RIC S. BASTASA
What Panic Showed....

do not misconstrue
panic

or hysteria

do not underestimate
schizophrenia

what is buried
come out as a set of hands

looking for
the pair of eyes

so it can see and feel

do not underate
that laughter or scream it was that big boat and behind is that volcano erupting

your silence was then at the loudest

the answers
to all the questions sit on the bench at the dark kiosk proud like a pillar dignified like the bust of the hero in copper and lead.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Papa Do Not Like To See...

a jar on an edge that with a slight push falls and breaks into pieces, a sparrow's egg on its nest between the twigs of the guava tree

a coke bottle put inside the freezer (for he knows that it will crack, and he does not like to see broken glass and spilled colored water inside the frozen floor)

a watermelon on the table with all the possibilities that it will roll and crush itself on the kitchen floor a little boy in the middle of the road's curve and there is a high speeding bus coming... my papa is not weird after all.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Paradise Is?

when he was a child
he dreams of snow
and always love the scent of apples

he hates the rain
and sun in his country he dislikes starapples
and mabolos

his parents are poor and all those days of his life he thought he suffered one day he escaped to America and transferred to Canada and true enough he had lots of apples to eat and heaps and heaps of snow he met

whatever happened to him?
he comes back to his country misses the rain and the sun and the taste of starapples
and mabolos

he asks himself, why have i not realized
what paradise is?

i guess the world does not
end. My wife says it is we
that end. Curtains fall.
The actors are out. The
stage remains.

The theater is still there.
As the city lights flicker
deep in the nights
where people walk and talk
not so conscious of their endings.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Past Lives Are.....

actually it is all about self talk

a self talking to yourself which makes you wonder how many selves do i have as you face a cloud of doubt, a shade of blues and reds and blacks

and it may seem too confusing until you get hold of your hair and hands holding on to your hands and you feel discreetly concretely what is here what is left of you after all the winds blow whatever is not true, whatever is consuming you

the bitter part is left and all too enduring

all the sweetness of you is gone, and you wonder where to mix again, where to start, how sweet is sweet what sweet is sweet,

what past lives are.
What Put Us Together In This

what put us together in the getting to know and liking each other so well are our common miseries and as time would have it we exchange stories of our failures and how we are able to cope with each,
to our amazement we have shared the techniques of sorrow
the art of sadness
the procedure for grief the poems of lamentations and the finishing plots for our novels of survival we put the words so well as others so well praised it on that epilogue portion where we keep on thanking
each other
for the success of our failed endeavors the irony, the paradox of our mild existence our solidifying persistence the elasticity that has not been exceeded by the extreme weights of our burdens: to include those that we realized to be also well, self-caused, self-inflicted we love it: our blindness sometimes on some spots where our Achilles' heels lie.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Really Happened

at 80
the monk who left the monastery in Utah and who gave me a book about The Preacher's Daughter always remembers names like fr. Fabian or fr. Lucas or

fr. Damian

when we arrive there
and i am patient as he is deaf
and agonizing & he asks me to call and check if fr. Fabian is still there he was there in 2000 and the year after fr. Fabian sent him a card the cellphone rings and fr Bruno asks who am i and i pretended to be Ron, the old monk who is with me now tracing his past

trying to look for fr. Fabian who died in Polomolok and he wants to know the cause of death fr Bruno says nothing about asphyxiation but that is the lie that i told Ron and his face changed like an afternoon

and i can feel
that it was heavily raining that is what happened

RIC S. BASTASA
What Scares You?

it is not the darkness
perhaps the light
too much light
that blinds the eyes of the persistent

it is not the series of lies they make you cope up make you live some more without fear

what scares you?
it is the truth
the face beneath that mask
something
for all those years
remaining
unacceptable

so what scares you?
it is the rejection, the unacceptability what can i say?

you are wrong for these are these that we cannot change cannot get rid of

at the end
hell is other people i agree
i am what i am
i accept what i am

in my solitude i am king alone i am happier

RIC S. BASTASA
What Seemingly Is Vis-A-Vis What Really Is

at the shop all the while what you may see is that the two are merely haggling on a piece of cloth a woman customer quite long asking for the right color always asking the man that she does not like this and that she feels the cloth silky on her hands above the man’s hands between the sheet as their mouths keep talking about the price their eyes are speaking about something else hidden beneath what she is really after all, she at her 40's widowed for 2 years he at his 20's looking for a a sugar-coated mama.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Seems To Be

what seems to be
need not necessarily what it must be sometimes in too much anticipation
what happens is an erosion of
the mind
it soon forgets
what it is,

what a thing is in it-self
unfolds before you like the petals of a rose so slowly
as though time does not exist
and so in the middle of your sorrow you fail to understand its chili essence

beauty in full bloom lies wasted unnoticed by the eyes until death wait not such is the salt of goodbyes

RIC S. BASTASA
Civilization,
what shall i bring as an offering to you?
One that does not bore you with the passage of time One that makes your blood rush to the veins of your youth

Civilization,
They must have offered you the white flowers of purity
They purest blood of their revolution to cleanse your land of the evil spirits of their minds Their own minds
Their own pollution Indifference to the feelings of desire How did they kill the beats of the heart the beat of heat of the pulse of love for one another?

Civilization
How many shall be killed more in the name of morality And official religion?

Civilization
I humbly come before you and offer you love Lots of love
Love and love and love
That one which the basket of morality can no longer hold That one which the hands of religion can no longer touch That one which the arms of their gods can no longer embrace

I shall take you to the place beyond common understanding It is love and love and love Beyond what you can take.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Shall I Rhyme With My Life?

shall i rhyme my life with a fife?
nope
or with a fyfe?
nope
or a greiff, rife, slife, streiff, ?
no, no, no.
what about a strife?
definitely not.

i rhyme my life
with my wife

and not with the knife.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Shall The New Year Bring?

oh, i don't mind anymore even if not minded, they always bring what they want to bring anyway, what command have we for the days that sometimes bring us all the grapes of wrath?

those apples of discord?
those serpents that multiply their heads and fork their tongues?

shall we pretend that all the days are feasts?
and that all those hours shall bring us pleasures on food, and the smiles of health?

let us simply be what these days give us, whatever, we must accept, no grudges, no complaint whatsoever for ours is just to obey and bow and worship what is given.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Shall We Do When Confronted With Beautiful Circumstances?

beyond us is the long line of high and steady black shadows of
the mountains
between us is the shimmering dark blue sea
we stand on the shore where the waves keep on teasing us with its foams and sways we are in love with the view we are in love with ourselves now we must do what we must do love me as i have loved you kiss my lips and fill my emptiness

RIC S. BASTASA
What Shall You Do Then?

three fingers shall touch a wooden box

for a time
this box is closed

but you are told
of a surprise that this box shall give you
the moment you give in to the temptation to just touch it

try it and be amazed with what it will give you

there is no name that i shall give to that which gives you pleasure when you agree to touch it

it is pleasurable
i have seen it
but i will not tell you until you touch it
first
with your three
fingers

i will give you another hint be responsible for what you decide specifically for what you

touch

for in pleasure there is always that accompanying pain like the two faces of the woman that you once loved

RIC S. BASTASA
What She Does Not Know

she thinks
he is sissy

he does not mind her advances

she touches
his

he looks at
the moon

she kisses him
he turns his face
down

she is mad
for his evasions

what she does not
know

he already erupted

when she gazes
on him
that very first moment.

RIC S. BASTASA
What She Left

bereft of the cleft
and not deaf but deft heft of a thief and weft
and never right
axite on a backbite
claim of his birthright what a bombsite
with a bobhite
pure calcite
at the campsite
how many bytes?
is the backlight
all right? it looks cordite but really ferrite
and cannot excite
my dendrite despite the dogfight and
the backlight
not a good foresight not forthright like Dwight finite, fistfights and a blight!

RIC S. BASTASA
What She Likes About Pain Is That...

what she likes about the queen of pain is that... she has more things to show that makes us more real, something that is touchable not just another kind of colored imagination like rainbows and auroras that the king of happiness own.

the more she sheds tears the more the lands become more visible to the toes and the feet confront themselves with rocks and pebbles.

for after all counted from the very moment she had first seen
light,
her hands already felt the coldness of the floors the ticks, the prick of the thorns of her hairs all over her body

then one day, after day one, till kingdom come, she becomes the princess of pain herself worshiped by many liked by most

an icon, candles are lighted in her honor the day when she died.

RIC S. BASTASA
What She Must Seek Forgiveness

she wrote an essay about her mother who met an accident
on the road
about how she died
instantly

there were signs and premonitions but she did not really mind them

she cried
of course she knows how to cry and write a poem about death and redemption

i understand
i know the feeling
when mothers are gone without the needed goodbyes life moves on like time it does not wait or tell anything important i just remember and now like everyman entering the halls of old age i begin to reflect like that mirror absorbing light showing some faces

and bodies
some leaves that twirl and tumble
and then
takes its own little space upon the silence of the burial grounds.

RIC S. BASTASA
What She Said When I Said I Love Her

it was on the phone long distance of long time ago six years
when i called her and told her
i still love her

(there was silence
and i guess she was covering the mouthpiece with a handkerchief and then she answered-

'who's this please? '

and i think i know what she meant.
i put down the phone and rang another number this one, perhaps still remembers...

RIC S. BASTASA
What She Thought

what her thoughts are he does not mind anymore
what is important is that he is still intact a whole man despite the years of rage and misunderstanding that after all the deceptions at least he still keeps himself abreast to his own beliefs, not rattled, he keeps some words hidden inside his pockets, he keeps some old pictures which have become invisible and permanently useless, he did not throw them just in case someone so special remembers him again on his last years

he is tired about her thoughts like some cyclones on his peaceful island inside a hill, deep down under is his tunnel of identity, something that no one, no storm, no earthquake can ever destroy

he is not in hiding yet he is in the open for the meantime that is it spring the birds still please him and the clouds with so many images to tell still comfort him

he steps forward soon and draws an exit using his stick
soon, soon,
that has always been his kind of dream a monologue

it is the hope of the stones.
it is this love for a shadow.

RIC S. BASTASA
What She Wrote Was Beautiful

The way she writes
Is like the way she carries herself
and Indeed she writes beautifully Words like tendrils Tenaciously clinging to Barks
Of trees where blooms of orchids Abound,
Like her way of swaying and Sitting on an easy chair
Her white long legs resting
One
On top of the other

She chooses her words
like
She’s choosing pebbles
Of
Different colors segregating
Those pearly ones
From
The ordinary
And takes only what she thinks
Is perfect

So she puts only the best To make her personalized Composition and it will take her Days and days
To make
one

Eclectic, exquisite,
Her work is diamond
studded Indeed she puts all her life
On it

In that work which Indeed
Is so beautifully laid

I am so
awed
It is so
beautiful

Perhaps
because

I cannot understand it
anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Should Be Forgotten Next

nothing in you is diminished
at least
something in the core always persists

that pebble in your hand which you kept since childhood after mother left

even if your hands shuts like a fist or opens like a petal of a flower during your kind summer keep the hardness and let on the other

hand
show the softness of your glow the orange softness of sunset the scent of yellow lemons in the basket the lingering perfume of the handkerchief the redness of a plum the whiteness of the wall around your past the last kiss planted on your cheek nothing lasts as you have accepted that pebble in your shoe which makes you feel the pain

that which makes you remember what should be forgotten next

RIC S. BASTASA
What Should Have Been Done...

To kill someone with all the sweetness you can give To make everyone at home and forget theirs
To love and ask for nothing
in return
To surrender and yet belong to Everyone you care
for
To live and let live
To die happily
and Not really knowing....

RIC S. BASTASA
What Sickness Is There Unto Your Own Death?

there is a need to really reflect
go deeper and find out what was wrong

here you are sad,
for love unrequited
but do you remember
the one you love and ran away from you who came back wanting now to love you?

you refrained, you refused, and you say, you have not really love at all.

it seems that you only love those who cannot love you. It has become a fact of your life.

ponder why, why can't you love the one who loves you? what makes you turned off?
wonder why you only want to love whom you hurt?

go away, find no one to hurt, don't tell me
that you are hurt.
you are hurting the other, you are hurting
yourself.

what sickness is there
unto your own death?
RIC S. BASTASA
What Silence Can Offer

when everything seems to be crowded when everyone speaks in such a chatter
gibberish
and this room becomes a narrow space
filled with nothing but noise

i will be silent
this silence that offers me refuge
a blankness of the mind where i can rest and start all over again where i can think of nothing
but stillness
where i become a closed mouth a blocked heart where i clench my fists and say nothing

then they all look at me and begin to open
this silence demands that it is now my turn
to speak
and they will listen

but it is too late
something has began to tick and so i must leave at once

they must know what suffering in the noise means soonest
What The Body Is Doing For The Meantime

what he did is only to give vent to the building pressure inside which if by indolence
if he stays within the silence of his cell continually

something in him might burst and destroy his existence, like a volcano giving rise to another lava island somewhere in Iceland

so tonight that is what he is doing precisely

and you who is reading this piece expects a flesh,
a destination,

an outburst
of autumn

or perhaps the coldness of winter and the death of some immigrants who still do not have a home

who has not discovered the hidden monastery at the back of this huge mountain where a living saint still feeds on spring

be dismayed
for he is selfish and scheming a wounded snake who is looking
for nothing
but just a cure
to a sickness
within

stop reading,

this piece has no use but to be just

an exit
from the imprisonment of a soul

RIC S. BASTASA
What The Fallen Leaf Said To The Broken Hearted Man...

'\ndo not watch me
as i fall down from this dying
tree,

do not touch
me
i can hurt
your bare hands

my sharp silence
can stab your
heart...'

RIC S. BASTASA
What The Fireflies Must Mean

according to Urias
the fireflies
are the ideas that we let go on a dark night
and they fly
and we do not
catch them

they must go searching for other fireflies
their own kind
of flashes
and blinkings

we are here
watching them in amazement

RIC S. BASTASA
What The Moon Does To You

at night the moon simply does what is expected from it naturally as you stand it is showing you
your own
shadow
afraid that you may see the whole truth
which in some details may be gory
it simply casts you in the general view of a man from a distance
a silhouette
with fingers less the nails
a face
without eyes
nerves
lifted from the darkness of your skin

RIC S. BASTASA
What The Mother Sparrow Later Found Out...

under the jack fruit tree the young sparrow's wings are torn apart caused by a well rounded pebble fired from the slingshot of the laughing

child

among his peers
he is called The Hunter...

because the young sparrow which just alighted
from its nest
could not really fly
that high enough

RIC S. BASTASA
What The Mother Sparrow Told The Young Sparrow

fly high
the children here
are cruel

t heir slings
and stones
have no reason

RIC S. BASTASA
What The Mountain Said To The Squirrel

that it cannot crack a nut,

but it cannot also be moved.

RIC S. BASTASA
What The Mute Uttered

what the mute uttered
you must not have heard so well because your heart had always been closed for the other.

RIC S. BASTASA
What The Oracle Said About My Love For You and so i consulted the oracle of Delphi about my love for you that such must only be felt not touched

because the moment my skin touches yours like the wax wings of Daedalus
i may fall and drown myself and then
i die

tonight when i have the chance to be near you
i will hug you.

RIC S. BASTASA
What The Rat Said To The Lion

hey lion
do not belittle me someday
there is no one to save you but me,
says the rat

hey lion
do not underestimate my power of destruction
my wisdom of retaliation for i am rat.

RIC S. BASTASA
What The White Owl Does Besides Flapping Its Wings

The white owl flaps its wings Deep in the night Hovers on the trees
I think the leaves
I hear the sparrows chirping
In the morning
Some dead feathers are falling

RIC S. BASTASA
What Their Dreams Are...

it is the time
not to speak about how many ripe pomeloes are there how many is your share whether you have the sweetest of them

all

you are in your bed beside you a glass window you can see strangers
passing by
that road farther

upon counted breaths you no longer wonder what their dreams are.

RIC S. BASTASA
they say what is it that i have seen your eyes are too ordinary but i see them as warm suns rising with time for my lonely morning they say your lips are like any other mortal lips but no, they are the luscious sacred flesh too sweet too ripe for my tasting my tongue always dream about fibers and flesh and dripping drops of juice they say you are just one mortal walking on the common streets of this village but no, you're so divine, a goddess, a progeny of light descending from the glory of the heavens to the profanity of my distant world they say i belong to the genealogy of the gods and i must not defy the law that gives justice to our kind but no, i love you, and i am descending from this throne i now sleep on the grass, naked without my crown disrobed, undressed, i am alone now, away from them, yhey that mock me, i am alone now, long waiting for you.

how can you be so unkind? you send the message you are not finally coming to be with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
What They Say We Cannot Do, Actually Can Be Done and the formula is:

believe in yourself
no one believes for you
have faith
determination is a river taking the least resistance of the cliffs
and mountains

pray for wings
pray for the gift of the wings of the winds have silence in the solitude of your heart be calm like a sea after a storm be good like a monk waiting for enlightenment be fair
like a water leveling on the contours of the hills and plains be like the grass always spreading its own understanding of the world
at hand.

RIC S. BASTASA
What They Think Of The Rich.....(Revised)

the way it was worded
justifies poverty, as though
the poor people have no faults
too of their own, you

envy the rich, the way they flaunt
wealth, and you say, you have not
seen them cry, or if they cry at most
it could only be once a year, you

wish that they too must cry their
rivers, groan like galvanized zinc
tread by the lost kids in town
sniffing methamphetamine
you want to see their eyes as red
as inflamed bruises after a brawl

the rich too must speak of the Poor's lack, their hibernation for
all these years, for what they only
know to get rid of their sufferings
seem only to be a bloody revolution, which most of the time fail,

or that they have not devoted
their bodies to dedicated work,
that patience of the yellow skin,
those eyes that must wake up
as earliest birds in the fields of hay,

for what we are is not found in the stars
or the lines of our palms,
we are what we make of ourselves,
that poor man has spent all his nights
in drunkenness killing hope always desiring the easy way out robbing those who earned their dues in the hours of so much waiting and thinking, and years and years of hard work and suffering.....

RIC S. BASTASA
What They Were Looking

what they were looking for
are the answers to their questions the food for their mouths the progress of their future a home for their children a work that pays them well

what they were looking for
is the cure for their sickness the lame to walk the blind to see the deaf to hear again what they were looking from God is their own

sometimes they miss what they should have been looking to find but God understands and God compromises He gave the fish and the bread He made the lame walk, the blind to see, the deaf to hear and even if they did not ask God gave them faith, hope and love.

RIC S. BASTASA
What They Write About

what they write about
are so poetic, and sometimes i feel envious, and think all nights to also write everything poetic like the way they write about the moon, and stars, and sun and clouds and hills and valleys and blooming flowers about summer, but honestly speaking, i think every poetic imagery has only become too routinary, all metaphors conceived of,
are nothing but simply variations adopted from one poet to another like an uncaught plagiarist on the loose, but somehow, i also like it when i think that writing is just a hobby, a diversion, if not a deviation from what we really want to become.
well, i may be a sour grape for staying just to be myself, an imaginary toad in the real garden untended by its owner.

RIC S. BASTASA
What This Either/Or In The Future Brings

Confronted with an either/or early morning one must choose.

you think that choosing is easy and a privilege.

one sometimes is given a he or she
but not both
now you have a problem since
sometimes
you want both

do not give me that wrong notion
by all means
you need a peahen and a peacock a lock and key a peg and a hole
you cannot just have one to really be complete or successful

a race may die and then leave all behind its tracks humanity is an endangered virtue without the yin and yang or both in one empty hand

now it is either you or her
but not both
that is the human condition but we can talk and bargain for time and energy

money talks they say and the ways and means of fate are always unpredictable for in the end it all depends upon the agreements of hands and mouths for in this world it is all about you and me and us depending on how we really understand the fans of happiness the forks of despair the furloughs of chaos and order we, for most, may conjure, injure and perjure and then if we have the courage all these, endure what this either/or in the future brings.

RIC S. BASTASA
What This Poetry Is Trying To Achieve

nothing and no one saves us

from this life death situation

now you must
realize the purpose of poetry

it does not save us from death or hunger or
pain

though it can lessen this misery
like a pillow in our heads when we really badly need
to sleep
& rest

poetry never promised you
redemption
they are just words to say the least

somehow
it changes the way we look at life and death

i love the metamorphosis
metaphor
of that caterpillar, cocoon butterfly thing

this is not a case of a sinking ship where rats are raging furiously out of the mess to save themselves

this is not a house burning where our only dream is an exit or a prison cell where we always speak of liberation

a cave, a tunnel, a pit where light becomes a dream this is but a realistic approach to an existential nihilism we are but spectators of this show and participants as well we all live and leave and then be all silent because we have then decoded the mysteries of our innate truths

again i am into this Rubicon of words trying to untangle and in the very process captured so well in my own imaginary cave, a prison, a darkness which i very well know is just temporary.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Those Closed Rooms Tell

past memories are strong pillars they were different when we were there we thought they were all wrong we detest what they said and what they did to us and we promise to take revenge until they died and we are all left here to feign for ourselves what is left we manage to mend the broken stairs we repaired the roof with leaks the floors are changed and some windows have to be closed

when everything is done we look at the house again
from a distance from where we can see it whole and we remember them, those we thought did not care those we hate only to find out that they only want us to build a much bigger house and much better doors, a stronger door, a happy window memories are coming back like old friends and we begin to understand the meaning of those which we have misunderstood and then we learn what love is what ancestors are what old houses mean what stairs are for what those closed rooms tell.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Those Roots Forget

Those who have roots sometimes forget that we soon shall be uprooted because we are not meant to be just roots

we know that our proper metaphors are wings our home is there.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Those Who Leave First Really Leave Us

let us start with an empty bed they leave us
warmth there
one that has heat in our palms
so hard to forgo
to forget

and they leave us
black and white
pictures of their faces, not ghostly
but lovely faces
of those we still
love

eye never want to leave us
in the first place
they really want to stay, but they were taken just
the same

and that makes us sadder really

then the cabinet where their clothes are: silent and you smell them and closer closer you touch them
and feel them in your heart: pain seeps
a little closer

and then you walk through the door that you just closed and the windows that still refused to admit the fresh air in the morning: you are still mourning in black and not talking much

and on and on
to the backyard the flowers wilting and to the comfort room where their sweats still linger: figments of mildew sketches of their faces
still there
some finger
prints on the mirror when they were still brushing their teeth

after all these
we ask again
what are these people really leaving us?
come to think of it
they are still here and they haven't really left us yet the love is still in our hearts come to think about all these again is there really leaving?

i guess, there is none because for a person who really loves
no one leaves
everyone stays together like eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
What Time Do We Leave Tonight?

what time do we leave tonight?

we can start at six
i will fetch you
and take you to the place of your wanting we shall dine
and have a lovely conversation
under the stars
by the sea on a restaurant the open air
the one we didn't have when we were young and always in hiding

now our white hairs speak a lot some wrinkles tell us of our dignity our words are carefully chosen woven not just by our hearts but by our steady minds disciplined by time
and agony

there is a lonely flower on the table the accent of an affair long forgotten
by time
the food is served hot and spicy white glutenous rice and hot green tea

we do not like to eat much we like the talk
we are like peeling
some potatoes
slicing some onions
and some tears
fall from our eyes
then we laugh

it must be the spices and the onions not the past now hidden, buried, and dead the way we prefer
them now
as it is not as they once were unruly they all say
but really
still very exciting like the chase of children playing in the park one night when the moon was full

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Account For The Morning

when i wake up plans begin to sprout like mongo seeds in my bed and i like a blanket or sack wets again with the unnecessary moisture
of the day
to come

anxiety about what could have been done for another day
rules this game of life

worry about some necessities which were left
forgotten
and now i sit here on a chair beside my bed on the altar of my illimitable greed
my eyes searching
like a tower of light
in the sea
of illusions

there is nothing out there and so to make
something

i decided that i must worry
and then there is meaning sprouting from anywhere
else
even from my armpits

and i guess that is all enough for me now i must go searching again what i have missed what i have forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Do

you get a handful of mud put a little rain and then you begin shaping
a face

carefully you put some tenderness
sculpting forgiveness you mold your vision of integrity

you stop for a while and contemplate on what is it that is missing

your heart is heavy it is filled with the burden
of love

you pour love
more of it like a basin
of water

the mold is so thirsty
until
it is finally broken

your hands after the error
must begin again
to shape the mold
of regrets
until love reassembles
your face

a beautiful face so full of hope &
courage
What To Do Next?

that is the question.

i do not really know.
that is the answer.

please tell me.
this is not a request.

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Do With An Empty Cup?

the presumption is you have consumed the hotness of the tea and now the cup is cold
and empty

at the state of emptiness shall you break it? or shall you keep it instead and not wipe it because there is a mark of the lips of the beloved

some do the cleaning wipe out everything the empty cup shines together with the rest of the utensils, spoons and forks and saucers
in the cabinet

the door of the cabinet is closed and then they all do what has to be done they move on with the other more important events in their lives from an empty cup

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Do With What Is Happening?

What happened?
Tell us what to do
I am just wondering about Jeramie
Goodbye

What to do?
Check all
Delete all selected messages.

Here’s the story:
Three friends named Nobody, Somebody And Everybody say hello in the internet.
Somebody says he loves poetry Nobody likes to read it And Everybody ask Tell me What to Do.
And I was the Fool saying I’ll stay.

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Do, Do Quickly...

on the lean years of our affections the dreams have drawn for us on that piece of sleep this canvass of the night frame twelve emaciated cows grazing on
the desert

what shall we do? if you still have your eyes with
you
kept in those sunken sockets open them
slowly

the sage of Femagas has given you the most practical prognosis you are asleep and all you need to do is wake up you still have 24 hours of regret.

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Do?

paint the night
with your lullabye,
daytime, oh, just
sunny side up.
egg white
and coffee,
black, w/o sugar.

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Grow And What To Cut

the room is dark
light passes through a slit of an old dilapidated wall it is like a visitor that comes uninvited but i do not make any qualms this house seems to make a decision of its own what to allow and what to block

somehow thinking starts here like a burning bush where i, as prophet, takes off my sandals of dust

when i close my eyes
just like the way you once showed love to me
deep in the darkness of
our hearts
i see another world

uphill we climb the silence and then at the top we finally find ourselves looking at different directions and i do not make any qualms

at all
for like the old house this new world too makes a decision
of its own
what to grow and what to cut
what to throw away
and what to keep forever What To Really Do?

as you go back
looking at the pictures of the past you are caught into a choice: whether to stay there and be frozen
like sepia covered with dust or to move on like a lizard which just caught a mosquito with its
tongue
and then wait in ambush again
beside the
ceiling light bulb.

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Say To The Early Day...

four in the morning is usual it is still dark in fact and what surprises is that usual darkness has to offer?

the chickens are not making sounds the pavements are empty of strangers the road is wet with the whole night raining there is this newness of what to do for another day and i say to myself, with all courtesy: good morning.

have i said it before? i must, but always to someone other than myself.
it is unjustified.

at this early hour i have no one to talk to.
darkness is always silent. Twilight is still far.
the morning is not saying anything. but always time moves, darkness fades away
and so we always welcome the light it happens.

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Say When You Are Hurt

Do they hurt you today?
In your mind? In your heart?
What is the color of this blood Flowing from your mind
This bleeding heart
Because they hurt you again
She slapped you he kicked you
And they insulted you
You knelt for mercy
They laughed and they left You alone in your pains Do not clench your hands to Form these fists
Do not let your heart be Conquered by anger
Do not let your mind be poisoned
By the thoughts of revenge What did God tell you when you are hurt?
Forgive them for they do not know What they are doing.
Do you remember that? Do you understand that?
Now you must stand and be counted.
You have the name, you are God’s child.
You have something again to tell him Why not? Now rest your head on his arms.

RIC S. BASTASA
What To Say When You Have Nothing To Say....

keep them
enthralled by the golden sheen of your silence
let no one break it because you are made
of steel.

RIC S. BASTASA
What To You Is Reality?

some people find happiness on closed doors tall gates, so many locks, and hard to get access,

the glass doors and walls amaze them
no end, and they listen to the clink of their wine glasses drunk with their own definitions of success

from here where i sit i see them all on this crystal ball each creature an ant
each world an empire when i decide to break this ball and shatter it against my own wall

just that their worlds are gone

if you ask me how is this possible i will give you a wink and show you how beautiful is it to close both eyes
and then
be there, just that, just that their world is yours your eyes control them reality is relative

it is you that close and it is you that open it again....

RIC S. BASTASA
What Truth?

you hold the truth and show it to me as early as i was six, you had it molded like a sculpture of a well shaped egg,
a chicken egg, showing the fragility of a shell, that when i fail to hold it with care it breaks and cannot be the same again, no matter what or how,

the truth is a model something that we have to imitate but my palms have lines of each own and i was born as a scorpion with scissors in my hands you want me to be your truth and it will be painful and so i must go somewhere where my kind of truth will be respectable there is no place yet for me and so here i am with you exploring all the possibilities of harmony and so i must lie to live with you and be with you for the meantime that my castle is not yet a reality must i tell you the truth? i can't for this spells the death of harmony even the view of your funeral where i can be the pretentious grief the laughter subsumed on the face shedding crocodile tears

i have more to tell you but i am safe now in my silence safe with you and the world and the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Truths Are?

in trying to find them
the paradox is they keep on concealing themselves in shapes you least expect it:

you turn into a clown to let them be children and with their smiles
you find how innocent truths are

but as you grow older you get numb and you become less interested and they too get worried about this dryness this aridity
this stoicism
they pinch you and you do not mind at all you pretend you are not hurt there is no visible grimace on your face then day by day they keep on opening themselves like wounds begging for a cure but you get no medicine at all in this familiarity this contempt for them

you have already said yes
to everything

they come they go and you do not waive your hands anymore they arrive and shake your hands you are no longer excited they are not invited guests your eyes do not speak about who they are what are their names their roots their origins now, they want to befriend you what for? you ask them you have already caused me all the pains you promised to set me free look! i am faceless look at me! is this what you are all about?

the truth is
we get tired we only want to rest we do not need them much too much of them is poison and no one wants no one wishes to die as such

RIC S. BASTASA
What Was It That She Was Thinking?

sleepy
since she says she slept last night at 2 a.m. already what was it that she was thinking?

i won't surmise.

i also slept at 12 midnight

i am not thinking of any Cinderella

i wrote many poems
last night
now i cannot remember what was each all about

i am pretty sure they are all about boredom and emptiness since the void has become my own goddess thinking that perhaps it is more beautiful than being filled up with no space left for me to move about

in this i can say that emptiness has its own indescribable weight

its own length that can measure the depths of the foxhole of my
soul
i am thinking a lot unloading uploading
with only one thing in mind that something that is still hurting and giving me fears shall disappear

that perhaps hope still lurks somewhere in one of those hidden corners
of this empty heart

a fly hovers on my hand i must have been smelling like a spoiled fish because i have not taken a bath already for days and breakfast has been so irregularly eaten

i like it now, i am getting thinner, and deeper now with this dipper of hardly obtained wisps of wisdom.

i am talking to myself.
and i like this clarity now amidst the noise of my academic screaming.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Was There Then?

next time be cautious you have to wear the feet of a cat
you must step upon a red carpet
then if you must enter a room
please do not knock.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Are For The Meantime....

and what did we do?
we simply stand there
and we said we have nothing to do with it,

we are just the spectators we write what we see and we do not judge why all these things happen

we never arranged the facts like colors in a painting we never chose the subject or the place, they are there we are in there but we are not theirs, we do not belong.

we write with our own hands did we claim that we have our own minds?

we did not. we are just the spectators. we just record what we see. Our minds are imprints of before and now. We try to detach, we cannot. we just feel it.

soon this will be over and we will be another kind of spectators, rising from our bodies, like vapors from the heat, we are not yet the rain. we are unseen.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Are Now To Both Ourselves

we are two blue clips of the clothesline we cling to a rope hold on, hold on lest we fall to the ground behind us is this blur of trees and leaves and twigs above us the clouds heavy with rain

then the shower begins hold on, hold on to the rope lest we fall to the ground
dead and then be gone

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Are Really Trying To Achieve

what are we really trying to achieve in a page?

it is like a room with all things out of place, towel on the floor, misplaced pen in the bath tub
a cat inside the cabinet behaving like
your skeletons,
your glass is on the window like a crazy dog wanting to get out from the frame,

what we have are misfits, pieces in chaos, times interpolated, interlaced fabrics, seemingly without a design improprieties,

we have art, we put things in order make them beautiful again back to its ordered beginnings in the midst of these storms tornadoes that dispel our belief systems we go back to work, back to art and

system,

we are tying to piece things threads into a fabric of beauty of thoughts in grace of gentle dreams, of peaceful places these are...and i

am.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Can Do Is Only Pray

things get complicated like strangled hair. The comb does nothing to straighten what used to be smooth and shining. we get lost in paths. we sometimes do not know where is the point of turning and returning. we just go, anywhere, to any place where our feet take us. Without the mind. we still think of our souls. we move on. things get so complicated. sometimes we do not think like sane people on the mall, drinking beer and eating hamburger.

i stop walking for a while. i am silent and still. what i can do, at this moment, is only to pray for you. May God bless all lost souls. May God find them. We are waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Can Remember On Sunday Afternoons

when everyone is gone to church
we find ourselves alone as we lock the door and then begin to have that silly talk on the sofa
as our hands begin to compose
the symphony of
yes, love we call it
love
as our lips begin to search the wetness
of the feelings
as our necks entwine
like vines
as our bodies fuse like a nuclear phenomenon and then we know the beautiful power of explosions below the pink boundaries of our two bodies something that no one can hear
except our two ears

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Did At The Beach House....

it is freedom day for me it is Thursday,

we enter the gate to the beach fresh winds, green coconut palms sea grass and white foams, sea waves and slushy sands, the octagonal cottage and the bamboo tables and chairs, stone silent on the table collected by you,

we are here for no other agenda except to feel the freshness of air recounting those younger years and then savor our sweet silence i rock my body on the hammock you lay asleep on the sofa.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Did In Bed

If only the bed has a tongue of its own and can speak the words

it would have spoken endlessly
all the stories about us always
unfinished

if it has a tongue i’d cut it.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Did In That Place Which Can Never Be A Home

after love
we soften a bit

i do not smoke
and you do not read

you stand up
to dress yourself

i stay for a while....

soon the room will be so silent
i can hear the wind
slipping by the window

i will listen
i will give more time for silence to whisper
its sound
to me

in a while,

i will stand up
and start to cover
my nudity

it is a metaphor for an icing on the cake to conceal
an emptiness
a bitterness
of what i have not done when i was young then when i was so alive
and candid

then i talk to myself:

this is not my house
i cannot call it a home
and so i must leave to search
who i am
again

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Did Last Summer In El Nido

Easier said than done but when it was over

it becomes harder to say there are no sane reasons nothing worth remembering sad matter vomited in air

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Did The Whole Day At The Beach

we pruned the
trees
there is so much
leaves
we sacrifice the
branches.
by all our windows
we have to see
the clouds

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Do Not Know Do Not Hurt Us

can hurt you but which i keep away from you is what you shall never know that which you know but never tell me does not hurt me

too

that which we all know but we never tell never hurt us that which hurt us but we never tell we never know

we stay in this together and people do not know and they are never hurt too

you see
how happy can everybody be?

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Have Become

in the shallow part of the river we decide to play: life is a game we like to believe that our arms drip like cold water on the side of the glass that you hold when you have felt the first thirst

i shall not satisfy you and so i have become the bait
of the fish
you have become more interested on what i have to say not to be mistaken as trivial i have also taken more glances at you i believe you and so with this trust i ask you to go with me to the deep part of the sea i swim first then you follow you know how to swim and you swim well in fact like a fish

at the shallow part i told you that nothing is hidden nothing signifies anything the stones are stones
and nothing else
your questions are just ordinary questions which i have answered to well and you believe me more until we dive deep deeper into the ocean floor where the sands though silent have more to say

than what i can tell you the stones on the sides of the deep now are telling you more and you begin to understand why for all those years on that dry land
i have kept my silence
my distance.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Have Not Yet Understood Because It Still Not Within Our Power

there is a flower that you did not pick because you did not find it to your liking

'there is a standard for the picking there are rules for what beauty is', you tell your friend the stone is not beautiful you use it for hitting someone's head that moron

there is a poem and a non-poem a combatant and a non-combatant self-executing and non-self executing there is a none for fullness

i have confidence and soon even in a hundred awakenings i shall prove you wrong there is a song in a chant

there is a chant
in a sorrow that is silent there is always light in a candle even if it is not lighted

tastes change, rulers are ousted the ants become kings the winds turn to ice to stone to fish

everything is possible
you must watch out, but you shall not reach that point you do not live that long like a layer of histories hidden in a rock in the lines of a tree's trunk

there is poetry in narration there is poetry in chaos there is beauty in the ugliness of things in the madness of men there is still a hidden humanity there is a song in wood there is a lesson learned in paths you just not have the power yet to see all these there is a tomorrow in the past there is a story in the blank wall there is grief in a smile there is life in the bones of men there is still an undiscovered law in mass murder there is at the end

peace in a nuclear destruction.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Have Written Here

what we have written here
stays here and makes a carving of a and mine.
oh, there may be no use of them anymore what is past is past and every verb you have put in any line has thawed like frozen cubes turning into liquid, something that describes us, we are past our age of another year, all these poems become nothing but adjectives simply stated, another part of speech.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Mean....

it is when you are too serious that this land dies, that this sea dries, try making things in a manner that gives you fun learn the games

ride upon the wishes of the ordinary enjoy the ride like a cowboy upon his red horse on the prairie do not close the doors of possibilities that this world is but one playground for all children that we are after all the children the results do not actually matter it is the journey, the fun along the way the picking of the flowers the gathering of all the ripe fruits that the trees have been giving for free you have overworked yourself and that is bad enough

try the power of laughter forget the tough times for they can never be yours forever look at the waves of the sea they keep on playing the highs and downs and they arrive at nothing have fun and then pass the fun for those who have not reflected about this the journey is too exciting the scenes flash like one paradise to another for we are the children of God and He did never mean us to cry.

What We Need

a vent.
something windy like a fan.
an orifice
an exit, oh not yet, let us say just an opening where we can enter and still be together
okay, you want an exit, let us do it
open it, i will get out first, then you go next, i will not wait for you i am rushing this
and you are rushing to
where?
i too, don't know.
cool.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Overuse

what we overuse
comes back to us with revenge
of non-use and if we do not
mind the sound of their gritting
we end up mourning

eye're dead
and not speaking

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Really Are

i cannot stop do not ask me what cannot be stopped

feel it yourself we cannot stop we cannot be stopped

we are unceasing energies of this limitless universes

always transforming from one state to another

into another place another stage another dimension fusing, diffusing, infusing suffusing

never consumed
we cannot we can never stop
no one can

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Saw....

and this is what we all saw, he likes her long hair and she holds her forehead and she looks up to him as she likes his navel and her hands embrace his legs of steel with veins of wires where electricity runs like the one found in the city where every nook is lighted which from a distance shows what romance does in the night of emptiness that summons love to make everything back to life again, stuttering to say a word.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Should Have Forgotten

there is a spider
in the vortex of
my mind

it dwells there
and every day and every night it is weaving

from its mouth
its food
its choice of words
a house
of poems

a kingdom of images
where i shall live
where you shall
read
where you can become another
figment of some imaginations

there is another spider in the vortex of your
mind
that weaves that hunger that thirst
that longing
that feeling of imperfection

its moving like a pendulum
it is revolving like a planet to an eternal circumlocution
these are the spiders in our minds that make us all human always missing something always remembering what we should have forgotten.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Understand Fully

it is a matter of experience, and common knowledge so to speak, that for those we do not understand fully we say, - oh great!

and for those we half understand we say
- something is wrong

and for those we fully understand, perhaps, because they are too obvious and easy to grasp, we proclaim, boring!

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Vomit Is The Saving Grace

what you take in is the error of the matter which makes you dizzy gastritis you say or perhaps amoebic contamination because you have swallowed what was handed by your dirty hands to save yourself from death and which you did not really realize the system stimulates itself for the needed cure

you vomit
and this i can say sometimes it is not the intake that matters most

it is what you spit out
that makes you live.

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Want To Become

we say life has many things to offer for us a name, a birthstone, some signs and we believe it from the start birth, and growth and satisfaction we keep on breathing promises, and some visions of opulence like a bunch of ripe grapes sweet and pleasurable we love to continue
we still have to become whatever that is
but most, of course, is love we put so much about ourselves on this miracle
this thing
this feeling of elation we become hopeful we like to become more about what we are not
we put more on what we are supposed to be there are times however that make us think someone comes with bad news and this happens almost everyday we want to live and become what we think we are

do not be discouraged just be realistic: these do not really happen there are too many illusions, the desert is filled with mirages guess what? just be realistic and learn just to be what you are
from the beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
what we write are all about those which are still alive worms wriggling on their hollow places of the earth mudfish hibernating on the parching, dried mud waiting for the rain the kingfisher perched on the tree without leaves thinking where to fly where to dive and make its beak useful the snail pacing slowly from the rising river up to the smooth edge of the nipa palms this little brown boy replacing the bait of his fishing pole waiting for the catch on the pond these dragonflies hovering on the soft reeds where the ants are finding new ways to reach to the other end of the pond the frogs croaking anticipating the coming rains and hoping to catch and swallow the grasshopper or the cricket resting on one of the blades of a tall grass the butterflies coming out from some cocoons taking the first air of their new wings and then flying away to the new blooms of flowers nearby this is the pulse of my pen in this my heart beats my mind remembers and then imagines what if these are not true? what if these are not real? what if my eyes are but another illusion not seeing that which grows and breathes and spreads and flies away?

meanwhile, a mosquito bites me, sucks my blood, fills itself, i hear it sing, i feel the pain, the loss, the deception, and then i am convinced, all these must be true and real

RIC S. BASTASA
What We Write Sometimes Strike Us

after a day i read what has been written it shocks me sometimes to see a different picture

bearing another interpretation of these realities

it is like a tree bearing new surprises of leaves and flowers

not on its proper season yet June is usually the month of its fruits there must be error for the month of May something strikes me things pop out, a word a phrase losing their meanings

faded, and scratched sometimes i ask, what is this?

this is not it, not me, how come that it is here?

i drag it in a socket of the bone to keep it

it protrudes as a fracture a story with a plot of its own a poem whose metaphor anymore, i cannot decipher.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Were You Once?

have you forgotten how it feels to have nothing? when we were nothing at all when you beg that someone listens to your grief because you are about to become another cracking glass?

let me remind you about the past this is the mirror: you go from house to house looking for breakfast a bread will do, coffee is a bonus. you were so thin, the wind pities you because it can blow you away.
you had dark, sunken eyes, your hunger and thirst cannot make you sleep.
you have the ambiance of a cemetery the smell of a corpse the creaking bones of the abandoned body rotting in a nameless place.

you were a leech, a numb parasite, you have mastered shame.

now you are on top of the situation like a fly on a buffalo's back you have no time to listen to other people's lament you think of them as pests you have no bread to spare for the hungry you think it is their fault you have forgotten about the cracking glass and you have a stone and you break it you love the sound
because you have forgotten.

May God remember you once again May He forgive you. May He love you in your worst form as He had loved you once formless in the cruel space where once the sun exploded and the earth crashed like the ball of your imagination
in those
wars within you.
What Will I Teach For A Start this semester is about to begin another set of faces meet me in this closed classroom, these students who swear they want to be good lawyers ambitious minds

their tongues in cheek their mouths pocketing some ancient motives how to get rich quickly with the law on their fingertips how to move ahead and pin the rest at dead-end streets of their finicky, cunning, twist and turns of logic and fraudulent flings

at their age of suspicion they look at me with a scrutiny this demi-god must teach where the pot of gold lies where the rainbow ends the map must be laid the details verified correctly on the spot

the rules and exceptions the exceptions to the exceptions the laws of property and family relations there is no law about who gets hurt or who gets killed in the process there is only the law of winning the code of the loser is simply not found here today, as an introduction i will lay them the true cards of the study

for a start

everything starts with the rule on compassion the code of humanity the true law is love, and mercy and verisimilitude the palimpsest shall be presented i draw the shape of their hearts drenched with blood they also must learn the value of hope the art of patience the devotion to the law and fidelity to the truth

there shall be no disgust no schemes to defeat the other by guile and ruses

i will teach love and they may laugh for a while afterwhich they can search some more and be fragile like this white chalk crumpling to the solid blackboard questing for correct answers this legal truth from moral ones torn apart in a wide chasm

by all means they can justify as the days go by why they must love the law why they must be human too

RIC S. BASTASA
What Will You Do With Pain?

Keep it for a while, it will not go anyway Let it stay with you and let both of you talk awhile

Give it the warmest bed and the softest pillow And pray that it will have the soundest sleep for the night

Both of you will soon understand each other Why it is here, why it is painful, what is the rationale of its existence?

How it is that it must be with you, and how is it that you do not understand at first,
You and pain become friends now, it explains itself, and hugs you

It will sooner understand you and you will understand it Then it leaves gently, and you wake up the following morning

You cry, you have understood it completely and crazy You miss it somehow; you even wait when it will come back again.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Words Can I Say?

i make life
i want to make life for both of us the one filled with cheers like the sparkling champagne on a thin, fragile, transparent glass so we too can have very careful fingers to hold it or it breaks shatters on the stone floors and you weep picking up the pieces your tears cannot ever glue them whole again

i want to make life and love with you
on words
no no no, not on words alone on actions and concrete hands that touch your face and make it warm
i put the sun
and let the water run on the rivers

i want to make love with you let us leave life for a while let us close our mouths with words and letters and lines tonight, i will put the moon and the stars

i like the windows closed it is too cold
and my bed is small for both of us

RIC S. BASTASA
What Worms?

the strings of the violin are tightened, i guess in your mind a hole deepens on a distortion, it seeps right through your teeth gritting the devil's wisdom, and never stops vibrating inside your brain and from your chair

all the faces of the trees seemed so thirsty with an unbearable misconception from where they stand, you seemed so far away silent, and introverted and praying in truth you were a frog inside croaking praying for the rain and you plunge deeper inside your heart until you tasted pungent blood and talked with the ruling worms that loneliness breeds

RIC S. BASTASA
What Would You Like To Be When You Are Old?

i ask the old man
of our neighborhood
sitting on a chair
in his yard
just in front
our house
as i water
the plants
in my garden,

his answer
is simple enough

'well, i like to die because my friends
and classmates
are all gone, and what use will this life be? '

i agree.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Are Saying

you once said
you are unhappy
you live on this hard shell of a tortoise
and your burden is such that you cannot really move freely
as a bird with its wings

you wish the burden melts into your skin
and it is done

then you say
the skin binds you
and the flesh and bone are burdens too

you want something
lighter like the feathers of a free bird
something light and easy and verily free
and it is done

i am happy to see you flying in the skies doing some acrobatics
in space
chirping some melodies
under the trees
diving in the sea
teasing the rivers
and this hovering
on the cows

and today i hear a different song
a sad song from a bird
by my window
it is you
you want to return to the hard shell of the tortoise
you miss the silence and the privacy
of your hiding

now, you have doubts what burdens are what freedom is
and this cannot just be easily done

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Are To Me

a glass of an ice cold
orange juice
on a very hot day of summer.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Are To Me?

You are freedom, you are my bird Flying and hovering to any place You are power, you have the power To destroy every cell in my body You are decent, you like this and that To be clean and right and bright You are kind and gentle you are The shoulder that I always lean on You are respectful of my weaknesses Understanding of my human frailties Above all you love me, you have mercy You love me for what I am and you You have already saved me. My God!

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Can Always Misspell

you misspell the obvious sometimes precisely
because they are too easy because many always believe them to be notions prejudices
like the fact that leaves are supposed to be green or that sickness be pale or that life always has an ending sometimes we make right on those difficult times we escape jump over fences and breathe inside vacuum containers
and you say
this must be a joke
this cannot be true

but how come you spell what used to be hidden correctly?
you spell hardship correctly and since joy is too easy you do not even bother pronouncing the word you exclaim baloney

but you are sometimes correct in that way life is sometimes a play of words a game in uttering syllables

of course
very much different than the suicide that most of them chose.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Can Do....

dearly beloved promise yourself not to forget poetry you cannot say that, unless you are prepared to be another congenital liar, your lips miss always the metaphors that please your tongue that tastes the sweetness of nectar words inside the receptacles of your flower-mind come, dearly beloved for the meantime leave the daily cares of your search for comfort forget the greenish look of the almighty money come with me

let us sing the songs of our perdition let us ring the bells of of our death to art, say it again, to art i must live and die and live and die and die again

only to be redeemed by the powers of its beauty its grace that saves us ultimately from the evils of boredom of too much familiarity to the insignificant and the worldly,

dearly beloved we set free our butterflies into the infinite skies of our immortal existence.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Did Not Say

what you did not say
was the most important part of the meeting
it was something
that i really understood it was painful
but i respected it because it is
the truth

what you did not say
was this love between us that we keep and take with us
to a certain distance

it may be right but it has grown in the wrong place it may make us feel good but it says that it may be bad for everyone who are not ready for what it really feels this shame of our time as i see it will be the glory of the coming time it is coming my love all we have to do is just wait for the changing of the seasons and the guards in the parapets

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Did To Us...

you gave a little girl her cake
with a caution, 'little girl you cannot eat this you simply have to look at
it'

you gave her a doll too but you said' little girl you cannot play with it you just have to keep it not to destroy it'

there is this cozy room
in the house
with soft pillows
and scented pillowcases

but this you told them

'you cannot sleep in this room
this is reserved for guests next month'

you have to sleep on
the floor
take care of the dogs and feed them well.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Did When Mama And Papa Were Quarelling

A boy hides under a table from a family fight A fried chicken
Falls beside his trembling hands

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Do Comes Back To You

this is always the case of karma
what we do always comes back to us with a lot of surprises

we greet them with a hug and sometimes with a lot of tears some of them become strangers whose names we cannot recall but they smile
others come with sad faces giving us
their revenge

it will be painful but we deserve them just the same we open our arms and feel the pain we gape our mouths and swallow the bitter pill

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Do Not Expect....

you are on your way to the tenth floor
go inside
the room and closed
the door
open the window
and get some fresh air from the sea
you sit on the window sill
and the people down the street
go panicky

you are whistling
a song
and all the while they are praying
that you do not
jump
from that high....

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Do Not Understand Seems To Be The Most Beautiful....

i have a bad voice
so do not expect me to answer your call what you will hear will be the sounds of coarse sands clashing with pebbles not the slushy sand that Matthew hints

on his tryst with Eliza on the secret bank of the lonely river

albeit what i ask of you is just read my letters (or have time with my poems
concealed symbols lurk there like an old church scroll

you will meet an old man who is cantankerous who drinks Tanduay all day
and night
and then forgets everything nasty
and sleeps)

i do not ask for more because i cannot stay that long
here
or somewhere

the more i put my feet on something stable the more aches i have i become sore like my toes and they scream like hungry puppies

the chickens feed on dung and dung becomes justified as a need
somehow

do not find or look for consistency that is passe
have familiarity with one that is so unrelated like a metaphor but strikes deep in the heart of the most logical connection

for all you know what you do not get or understand
at least for the moment seems to be the most beautiful item of your life and then the misery comes when you finally understand it

and it is
bland, it is numb

listen to me
please, read my lips, that is what the old drunkard said to the triumphant
and
startling turtle.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Dream, Earnestly, By Shutting A Friend, Will Not Come True someone shuts you out temporarily from his world because he is writing a poem which he dreams, must win

him an award that he really needs to fulfill his self-esteem as a writer,

he misses the point of inspiration, as, and this i must stress, the source of poetic inspiration is always the other,
not the lonely swim
within,

nevertheless, i look up to the sky, and pray to all the gods,
i take a walk under
the trees,
to pray to all the fairies, that he wins
the prize,

but deep within, i am pretty sure,
he will not make it.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Got Are Lies

what you got from me are lies and it was a test

wrong informations were passed by you to all my friends and they will now ask me if these are true

i will tell them about your lies now, not mine

and now it is you who is in hot water as i relax in my bed figuring out what to do next

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Have

What you have is silence and you will listen to everything I say and you will absorb everything like a sponge

what you have you shall take with you even malice and self-pity in anonymity

take all the love you can get while you are here
with me

soon, I leave it all to God may He bless you may He always love you

I am Noise

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Have Never Known At All

what you have never known at all the song of the soul

the labyrinths of the mystical and the pluperfect

lead you to nowhere

what you have felt is simply the air
passing you by

get to know the absurd it will not tell you its name

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Lack Is The Simplicity Of Reality

my hands on the keyboard on ten fingers
my eyes do not look for the letters the letters find me, i am amazed by this kind of arrangement on the simplicity of reality having a life of its own letters like bees having a cell
of its own
syllables having a mouth speaking about what they can do in a poem

i take this matter lightly there is no rush
this is not a matter of life and death but merely a way of letting time pass beyond our boundaries

i give in to what is beyond me i empty myself of its contents the mouth of my bottle sings of emptiness

this is the simplicity of reality it speaks about nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Love Is The Whole Of It

what you love is the whole
of it
every part and bits and pieces
every shatter
and chatter and all of these
really matter
but you must learn to accept the law of nature it is not at all that beautiful
at all
the ugliness of its horns meet you face to face and you bleed right at your forehead skull crushed and yet still taking time to smile
to recover.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Must Know, Lies At The Last Signal Of His Hand.

not everything shall be said
know that,
not every entanglement is bound by words,
takes time to know that,
so many things shall be
unsaid,
and this you must begin
to understand
the books are not hanged on trees
the letters do not fly in the
sky
for you to know what a bird is what life is,
the old do not write what they want to tell you, you stay beside their death beds
and know that,
what you must know,
lies at the last signal of his hand.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Really Like, Or What You Are Really Like...

it is hard to understand what you really want, for yesterday you said you like meat, balls, and now you say you vomit even the thought of it, and you say you like a lettuce and then when the lettuce came you said you hate it, and you like a rabbit, and i put this black magic, a rabbit in your sleep and you said you are dying with the rabbit, a white rabbit, and then the rabbit dies, and you say you hate rabbits, and you like knives and i stop catering to what you like, you hate rabbits, and i know for now what you want and i really do not like it. I have no knife to begin with, and i do not like knives, or blood or dead rabbits.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Remember....

discover the truth that what turns you on is not what you sleep with whom you touch or kiss and hug, these
are not,
it is what is deep buried in your soul
which you cannot touch but which you will always remember, it is the semblance of the past that you love that makes you live the moment it is the propulsion of a past life, a love unfulfilled, which makes who alive
that flitting
hour.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You See Is What You Get

what i mean
is what you say

and that is what
you will really get.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Should Be?

Be the mind in the act of finding
Not just what will suffice But one that will be nice. Find the place Without a script, the one that gives you Something
With spontaneity, one that changes you Into something else, one that transforms Your present
For the better, and the past that must become merely A souvenir. You must be someone that is Living
Not just something else, one that learns the Speech of the scenes around you
The men and women and children that you meet

Construct a home of this world Like you are a flower at home in a garden Have the delicate ears of The sentiments, the sensationalist expressing His emotions
As thought there are only two persons In a very silent room, Random emotions becoming one Singing the songs of grief and bliss
In unison,

Have the dialogue of the metaphysician Twanging with his tongue, uttering the words Of righteousness, Holistically,
A mind condescending
With a will to rise Above this commonness,

Finding satisfaction
Where there is none Gripping the slippery Tails of hope
Like a hunk surfing on a stormy sea Or a woman belly dancing through the night Or a mother combing her daughter’s hair Or the father teaching his son a skill, Be what you are be what you can be Find some more
Those that may satisfy you

The living

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Unlock

she had it once
unlocking
a box

it was enough to give mankind eternal chaos

her name was Pandora.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Want Is Yours, I Take My Peace.

delicate to live without any glitch is to ignore,

hence the sun has ignored the unruly segments of humanity the moon ignored the noise and hassle of the nights

the morning continues to be cool and easy despite the grumble of the motors and the engines of daily hustle

i too must ignore everything. what you want is yours, i take my peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Want To Still Remember.

been to eleven islands
in Puerto prinsesa
all white sands and
a bright sun
and calm blue sea
with some adorable fishes scattered on the shallow nooks of seaweeds and
red corrals...

you see i am driving you
a point, live life, have fun, go places, and you will even forget what you want to still remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Want To Still Remember.....

been to eleven islands
in Puerto prinsesa
all white sands and
a bright sun
and calm blue sea
with some adorable fishes
scattered on the shallow
nooks of seaweeds and
red corrals...

you see i am driving you
a point, live life, have fun,
go places, and you will even
forget what you want to
still remember.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Will Miss Here

sinugbang tuloy in sicayab beach.
tuba laloy in the local market.
smooth ripe mangoes.

raw mangoes dipped in ginamos.
the spanish sardines of the montano's the bibingka

puto cheese. dinuguan.
san mig beer and pulutan of pork pata.

smooth to the throat is the tanduay rhum asia's best.

a stroll at the boulevard.
seeing the sun set there.

eyearly morning walks at the plaza.
hearing the church bell ring.

a call to prayer.
the sound of the motorcabs on market day.

a hideaway in the farther hill.
early morning chill.

visiting the grave of your mother and father.
getting to know new nephews and nieces.

meeting old classmates and reminiscing those high school days.

you were so thin and dark and naughty.
you're great now, with your white hair as crown.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Will Miss Here Baby

...the ripe bananas
the coconut juice and young meat the local wine
the rice cakes
the fruits that you can pick from the trees the lone line of beaches surrounding practically the whole island the fresh air
the wide expanse of green fields the peace and quite the hospitality of the people we have it just name it and it's all yours for free because we care.

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Will Say Does Not Matter Anymore.....

WHAT you will say
does not matter anymore to me

you are
what matters to me

the winds come
and refreshes me
i am not listening
to its howls

the dogs bark
with so much noise
i mind the tail
that waggles for my presence

you do not listen to the sound of the spray when the perfume
lands on your neck

we do not care
in the same manner
the dying silence of the
night
neither do we notice
the idiosyncrasies of our moans

we did what we did we all moaned for nothing but love

RIC S. BASTASA
What You Write

hey man what you write
last night was brief
concise and direct to the point you were grappling on a metaphor that was not there
but i always understand the feeling
i've been there
and staying, cool, effervescent like sparkling wine, they say it was horrible like a witch riding on her broomstick
i say it was romantic the moon was there it has musk on its ears and something dirty was there at the portion of the right foot of that poem they say it was filthy
i say it was real and cocky it was stiff they was it was hardheaded i say it was real
got the brains and grasped what we mean about last night
the woman was singing in her sleep
i couldn't help but laugh but you were there serious about your stuff if no one says that what you wrote was a poem you bet
i say, i will.

RIC S. BASTASA
hey man what you write
last night was brief
concise and direct to the point
you were grappling on a metaphor
that was not there
but i always understand the feeling
i've been there
and staying, cool, effervescent like
sparkling wine, they say it was horrible
like a witch riding on her broomstick
i say it was romantic the moon was there
it has musk on its ears
and something dirty was there at the
portion of the right foot of that poem
they say it was filthy
i say it was real and cocky
it was stiff they say it was hardheaded
i say it was real
got the brains and grasped what we mean
about last night
the woman was singing in her sleep
i couldn't help but laugh
but you were there serious about your stuff
if no one says that what you wrote was a poem
you bet
i say, i will.

RIC S. BASTASA
What Your Dreams Tell You

a smile from the person that you meet along the road confirms a welcome of your arrival,
the entrance to the door and the sign of the hand to make dinner ready
is their affirmation that you are part of this family, and you sleep in one of their rooms
for the night,
you are safe and cared for, but then tomorrow you leave again, your dreams
tell you that somewhere else, far away, is your home.

RIC S. BASTASA
What?

Beside a multi-colored beach ball a young man lies on the white sand on a beach A tall, suntanned woman hides herself
On the other side
Changing her pink bra
and you were there thirsty
looking completely finding what you have been looking tell them

RIC S. BASTASA
there are many things still to write i should have written it directly like pen to paper without any winding ways i like to be blunt and candid and spiteful and they will call me an angry man a raging sea
a bully,
i stop short of this attack it is not worth it what shall i get when they will know about my complaints?
they will just say, i am reflecting what i have not achieved
that i am just spitting to heaven as i am spitting to my face i am tired, and i have transformed strength to weakness
i am lost in what i want to see i forget the beginning and sometimes i cannot decide where to end
and what to say at the end it is like this: i am mumbling, i do not really mean what i am saying it is deep in the night and i am sleepy and may be hallucinating and you keep on reading because you are too reflecting on the
inevitable,

you expect a wise retort? an ending with a clinch or something?

there is nothing to this. Except

what? ? ? ?

RIC S. BASTASA

is it your last word

but mine was different and you know it whatever that means

i said 'hello'

and what is it that you mean by 'what? '

do you mean ' what you did for love? ' i mean it, my love for you is always a hello and there is no word for 'goodbye' i know how to always begin right from where we started when we made the doodles when we combined the colors (of our longings and wishes) when we painted the flowers and cats and dogs

when everything seems hormonal did we call it a chemical romance?
or just connecting chains from time to time, those chains of
love (i am sounding corny) , yes, the chains of the past, connecting to the present (there we stop to ponder and) i guess, there is no future there is no us, out there but is it not that love is only concerned

with the

now? the moment, the day that we must seize (carpe diem, touchee!)

if and if the future is nothing but this word 'goodbye', i will not proceed to go there i stay here, and savor the moment of today
this 'hello', and your 'what? ' a question an open one

like your arms always willing to embrace me
again
(oh, you never really embraced me)
i guess

you must delet the word 'again' let your arms be open embrace me, i am cold, and let me say this over and over again (without shame)

i always miss you
and i will be with you again even just to see you and not hold you in my arms my love.................................................................(sigh)

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatevah

write
till it does not hurt anymore

write
till all the happy moments are consumed.

write
till all the aches are justified

write
till all your revenge is dissipated

write
till all angles are examined write and keep on writing till all of you is hidden, till all of you is folded back write and keep on writing still because you are your writer and there is no one who knows you well except yourself, and what they know shall only be skin deep

because you want it so, you are the king in the jungle of your uncertainties the Tarzan hitting his chest before Jane came and ruined it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever

soon you will find by analogy
in the kitchen
that like life
finally one realizes that there is no recipe for the food that you decide to take. You may not like it
but you have to swallow
as a matter of
compulsion
what is being fed
to your mouth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever Happened To The Marriages Of Figaro

she says it is sad
the first marriage flunked the second has become two stones in the desert listening to the howling of the wind the third is worst it is the ocean of emptiness burying ships and passengers are swallowed

alive.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever Happens

whatever happens
i always care for you

wherever you are
whatever you do

i see you are crying.
i want to hold you but i cannot. My hands are frozen with the coldness death of distance. My lips are sealed with the threads death of absence. My heart is death, long long time ago, when i erased your name from the bark of the tree.

I could have tried carving your name in stone, but my dear, you are not God and I cannot be Moses forever. I am alone, but i am still as strong as the day you left me for another thanks, but i am a survivor..

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever Happens To The Matters Of The Heart

this early morning
whether the egg
is sunny-side up or scrambled or plain messy

i do not really care for i have more things to do matters to think complicated problems within the cubicle

than the matters of the heart. I told you
i have long given up.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever Happens, I Made A Promise

whatever happens i have made a promise not to self-destruct this self that i have been with.
you may humiliate the inner core of my being you may finally declare an end, i am ready long ready, to leave everything and to go to where i must belong. there is no other, this is all i have and whatever it is, whatever happens i remain loyal to what i am. humiliate me but you cannot destroy me.

i move away, and become whole again.
that is my promise.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever Happens, Move On, Pursue That End

when we begin we already know what distance is we see it in the stars we hear it from the Siberian winds we were telling the trees that our beginning was the smile of the snails that the moss have always been faithful to the stones at the middle we learned the games of the waves and the seagulls there is always the happy chase between respect and dignity like the moon how it sits on the black horizon how it lightens the silence you want to know the intimacy of the wind and the cliff how they have become almost the same in sonorous sounds sometimes you sense the semblance of surrender not wanting to go on and be the roots of the trees and the grass

i have touched the tips of your hair, though short, but that is enough my wings have fully grown and the winds are waiting i am destined for something else beyond the touch of your hands i do not know how my story shall end, but the voices are assuring whatever happens, tell me, for once, that you too shall find yourself do not turn back, pursue the end without the trembling, the remorse of pain

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever He Said

whatever he said to the mountain he got it back through an echo he said we are all fools and the mountain gave it back to him

we are fools, we are fools,
we are fools, we are fools

he nodded and worshipped the mountain his true teacher the echoes have said it all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever She Says

whatever she says
be it about sadness or peace
or war and unhappiness

he did not mind
he is in the mountain
thinking
how the mosquitoes
are pestering him
and he cannot sleep

soon she will be silent and then he begins to write

his shorter poems

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever That Be...

we drove toward the curve
where once
our old house
was,

we view dilapidation
as we stop
for a while

the garden has turned into a wild grassland
the trees became so tall and thick
depriving the flowers of the much needed
light

this is not ours now
and you know the feeling.
what we have, becomes what we had,
you know the feeling.

you must have learned by now, who and what we are, what we become and what we still could not accept.

we ask ourselves what is it that must remain.
at the root of this problem is still us.
we cling to each other's arms like vines to a tree which is dying actually.

we feed on what is rotten thrusting so well under whatever circumstances whatever that be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever Was Spoken Was Already Spoken

whatever was spoken was already spoken and in my state today, the words are no longer retrievable, the car hears them through its mirror ears and i know it understands every word.

it is silent and then it speeds away ashamed of its beginnings.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever You Do

whatever you do
try doing it for free
for love

and try waiting for some fruits

feel the lightness
of your freedom

feel the warmth of this light
inside your heart

see an illumination
of holines
slowly moving
on your skin

do not look back
there is a halo
behind
your head

RIC S. BASTASA
Whatever You Sow You Shall Reap

that is the law
you sow a sigh
you reap the deepest breath from the guts
you sow the seeds of discord you reap the poisonous fruits of chaos
you sow the wind and comes the fruits of your disgust the seven storms of
hell

RIC S. BASTASA
Whattaman

i ask him if he owns a field
dumb,

he is growing all those corny
jokes at the party

since he is new in this country
everyone
obliges with a smile and tongues-in-cheeks.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whe Lovers Lose Their Cellphones?

hmm,

they buy a new one.

eddie.

RIC S. BASTASA
When A Beautiful Singing Bird Comes Near You when this beautiful singing bird comes close to your heart

prepare to open right away what you just closed prepare the place where it must hover give it the best twig let it lay its eggs and let it hatch give it more time to stay on its nest

when it begins to sing, listen savor the pleasure found in its songs it is something so beautiful in your heart savor it you know that this bird seldom comes and when it leaves it leaves without your notice

RIC S. BASTASA
When A Bird Flies Away From Your Hand

when a bird flies away from your hand without taking the little grain of corn
let it be
for in time it has something to tell to its nest and sing on the night when all the world is asleep about love so sweet so pure and yet so sad because like those that died love most of the time is unrequited

RIC S. BASTASA
When A Friend Goes Away....

harsh, but true
when a friend goes away i will surely die

i am my only friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
When A Star Falls

when you said that a star falls in your home i beg to be clarified that you are just in any manner speaking poetically

otherwise
in plain, simple understandable language what you are speaking will mean a catastrophe that will not just be in any way particular but in the gross sense a universal explosion not just of your house or home but of this rotten world where you and i both live.

RIC S. BASTASA
When All The Illusions Are Gone

stripped of our illusions
what are we?

stones on the river
dry leaves on the pavement rusty fan on storage bins dilapidated cottages
abandoned houses
desert, bush, turtles with their backs taken rabbits without ears crocodiles without their
teeth

if we let that be.

but there is no need actually of an illusion because we are real, we touch ourselves, feel the warmth of our bodies i try it by simply being myself less my caprices and whims less the ambition and the dreams reduced in the most simple of simpler terms to the core of it all, i am a happy man knowing now the limits of my domains, settling for what is there nothing more, nothing less

it can be done, illusions are gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
When At Night It Rains

a rainy night
deprives me of the view of the stars.

the moon is hidden by the clouds

coping up the ears grope for the song of the frogs

the soothing sound of the
the song of the rain love's hugs, and kisses love making love warm and memorable

now it is fair
you are sleeping in my arms my nakedness split open to the mirror in the ceiling.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Beauty Touches You....

There is something in the walk after we talk,
i see it in you, how faithful
can you be?
how beautiful!

now i am seeing flowers blooming in different colors along the way, the clouds are bluer, and the grasses are greener,

birds are hovering on my head and hands and then they fly away in a short while dancing in the air like a confetti
of leaves

it is you that make these things possible anew
and i have become one grateful soul now as beautiful as you!

RIC S. BASTASA
When Confronted By A Lousy Poem

After reading another lousy poem (i guess it could be like mine, in the strict sense of your standard
master academic poet, multi awarded poetess)
i decided to pause
for a while,
reflect, meditate,
cogitate,
blink, wink,
think think
Give the writer the benefit of the doubt due to his feelings he must have these within him/her asking myself what prompts him to write

i think it is not for fame, for he will never have, he knows it the world is filled already with a million famous men
and women
and there is no place anymore for one like him (or me, i know, don't bluff me i know, don't ask me)

i think it is because he is like a snake (Nothing bad about snakes nothing metaphorically treacherous) bitten by another snake, bleeding and sliding his way in the sands of the desert
looking for an oasis
a date palm
a branch of an olive tree (is there an olive tree in the desert? i have not gone there anyway
yet)

looking for a cure.
i then make a conclusion, he deserves to be commended for this bravery of writing about
pain
at least writing about it since he still does not know of any cure for pain, or if there is i know, he knows, it is only
temporary

like the pain in our hearts

(or asses if you will)

RIC S. BASTASA
When Confronted With The Unknown

you dislike what i am, but you cannot tell me, i know that,
one day, you take the courage, with the power of your hidden self, and i have engaged in the word war, with the unknown, very much like it, very much like you, and i have no regrets, having known, what worse reality you have seen what you cannot have spoken what is revealed, and how i deal with what i do not know, and i, afterward, learned, how to win,
even with an unknown, which seemingly,
seems to be the truth,
you are cruel, i tell myself, but thanks, i have become wiser by then, even an inch higher than my toes can handle.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Creativity Dies.....

someone will make the rules many will obey
and so they have become all the same similar in all aspects the world has become one uniformity in boredom

someone tells me how to do it dictating the taste of the structure the colors to place
the tone
and even the scent of the piece but i am not into it i am listening to the voice of my heart it is restless it is traveling like a vagabond with no place to call home thus, i do it the way i want it and someday

i will be that someone who will tell this world how to do it but i will not do it

the world will return to another place for bored people
and since then
creativity dies
all of them shall bury it without their knowing

RIC S. BASTASA
When Darkness Comes

when darkness comes
the hands must account for what they have done with the kindness of light

the eyes must close and see what darkness shows apart from the clear showings of the the realities of brightness

the heart must start to sing another song perhaps lovelier this time for some comfort that there is nothing to fear that darkness is not the enemy but just the resting place of those who want to rest and get some sleep and then float
so perfectly in the world of dreams

RIC S. BASTASA
When Darkness Reigns

when darkness reigns
there is another choice to submit myself to the newborn lights of the stars

RIC S. BASTASA
When Dreams Are Born

for what we cannot touch we simply watch for what we cannot hold even
for the moment
we can do nothing
but let go

we stay put sit idly upon a rock

dreams are born.

RIC S. BASTASA
When East Is East

The brown man in saffron Another one in red
Some in pure white

In prayer in meditation In lotus in kneeling in Bowing positions

Bending to the earth Kissing it worshipping Nature, gods, God, and Venerating fellowmen
In contemplation of the Zen and peace and In mystification and awe

And wander in wonder
The sound of a dripping Rain the smell of incense And candles the sight Of mystery and innocence

When east is east
In the grandeur of simplicity And heavenly peace

now, in orange sunset.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Everyone Has Thrown The Last Stone

it was meant to be read aloud as it will be as beautiful as it sounds it was meant to be power the beauty that is found in thunder but i purposely desist you as i detest what you want me to become and so i read it silently as though i have denied myself that power that lies in my teeth and tongue
i prefer it this way, slow, dragging, soundless, for i have taken the cudgel of the deaf and mute and it will be for years, and years, and you will be mad, as you want to know me only in words, in the loudness of my being,
i have chosen what shall destroy you this silence, the way we watch how funerals initiate themselves till the end when everyone has thrown the last stone, and then the covering begins, just like the way how it should end.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Everything Goes Wrong

when it is dark, why not enjoy the darkness? think that she is just beside you.

when the door is closed, why not think that all the while you want to spend your lifetime under the sun and sea?

when the air is hot and humid, why not say that you like it and it is just perfect for your nudity?

when you're sad and lonely, why not take these hours as simply perfect for another volume of poetry?

enjoy what you have and make the best with what is there in your hands and head do not look for what is not found there you may simply be frustrated. Think and be wise.

love what you are, and do the best you can.
there is no other way, and if there is, please tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Everything Is Empty

the fire is burning within a body of fat
it is a niche favored by heat and goes into a journey of melting and flowing into a conflagration into a chaos that consumes

everything

where one is finally lost and gone for good into the air into limitless space after which, all the fears are gone and what is left is only that relief

a calling for the annihilation of what was built and when everything is empty and soundless

another beginning begins to breathe and once again

this earth grows some petals of land leaves of mountains lovers find themselves back in their arms into the pond

sounding the first splash and i shall remember the legend of the frog

RIC S. BASTASA
When Finally I Wanted To Rock

at 49
i surprise myself and the rest of those who are watching:

i want to rock
i want to seal my ears with bass and drum music.

i want to bind myself with the electronic guitar strings.
i want to jump and stamp my feet on the solid rock, i wan to be deaf and be dumb, and be the subject of their talks in the market and in the church, i want to be shamed, and be the object of their ridicule. i want to laugh the hardest like a big rock falling from a cliff and crushing hard on the sea with splashes like cyclones but then at 49, it is too late, it has gone beyond the page of the calendar and it is too late.

Solitude found me. And there was only Mozart with his soft piano his violin on a wintry day.

i sit on a rock and keep on waiting.

RIC S. BASTASA
When God Accepted Me

and then there was this meeting it was dusk yet and the trees are still shadows and He embraced me and said that He accepts me for whatever I am There was nothing said about having to change myself or that I have to do something or make up with what I have not committed

It was the embrace that I cannot forget
for it was warm and sincere

I marked that day when God accepted me as
I am
and that day has become
Forever

A day of Thanksgiving
A day of Love.

RIC S. BASTASA
When God Created Us All, We Were Not Left Alone

it is true and i agree completely when God created us all we were not left alone

he created the rivers and the seas to tell us that we must flow and be deep and be wide with compassion he created the skies that we may always look up to the wide expanse of this unfathomable love, this universe he created the earth where our fellowmen live so we all become coals hot with cinders unsegregated from the fires that burn within us, lest we become cold and nothing but ash, blown by the wind and then forgotten.

RIC S. BASTASA
When God Speaks To You

it is nice to see you praying and praising God that is what we are supposed to do in fact, everyday of the rest of our lives we must whisper

and talk to Him inside our hearts but when God starts to talk to you it is time to see your shrink

I've been there in the land of schizophrenia.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Happiness Arrives

they say happiness comes in moments unexpected comes one early morning knocking to your door and you least expect such a face
bringing you all that happiness promises years of pain has alienated you from her disgusting you say

and you do not feel anything anymore about her she comes and you look at her
happiness

you tell her she is not welcome anymore
happiness
does not work at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Happiness Comes...

at the other end of the world when my morning is her night she just wrote some notes, and reminded me...

about another casualty, the failing light, the fading sunset the shrinking spirit, the falling leaf, the broken twig, the rotting trunk
the muddy ground...

i cannot sleep that night this is always the negative thing at the other end of this border...

somehow i fly away from myself to have a date with some fireflies above the tree that has so many leaves strong twigs, invulnerable roots fungus free, hard barks, strong, tall and proud

beside this is the river lots of ripples and such a comforting sound of flowing water it is leaving on a long journey and i am left

there must be something positive about life those stars speak a lot in their distant silence the moon is so beautiful tonight and the sky has freed all the dark clouds

somehow
i must speak of love and its seductions its progeny of hope and courage life has so much to offer how can i contain these stars in a bowl?

the refrigerator is too small for frozen happiness
the window is too tight for those that are coming the door too narrow the floor does not have that width the ceiling that length how can one compress happiness in just one page?

is there joy in one syllable?

RIC S. BASTASA
When He Goes Fishing In The Sea

during summer his fishing time begins a loner
he is always alone in his boat and think as deep as the sea he doesn't care how time runs how he looks sometimes his mind is focused on the fish and his loneliness
he didn't know that someone out there with a telescope cares about his butt

naked he swims in the sea diving for fish
and cooking his catch right there in the shore
at night building his own bonfire

someone out there sees his naked beauty dreaming that someday his loneliness shall also be
her own

someday, she knows this man shall need a woman beside him to make fire for him to make a man out of his butt.

RIC S. BASTASA
When He Is Lost He can Be Everything To Anyone

he accepts everything and everyone anywhere and whatever when he does not know what to do with his life he can be in any religion with any person a lover a friend an enemy or a stranger in any place be it in the plains or valleys or oceans and nooks he can be a slave or master or cook or shaman or even a woman whatever that the other does to him will always be acceptable he is the sea that takes everything the boats that float and arrive at certain ports and those that sink and forever forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
When He Talked About Love It Was Almost Midnight when he began to talk about love (but to me it was mostly lust) it was past midnight and i was already sleepy (or was it drowsy) for i could not believe every story that he was relating to me it was something miserable (and perhaps too unbelievable why all the pain? where could happiness and her myths be?)

but

out of civility i pretended to listen for deep within me the man in him is crying begging to be listened too even for the last hours of the night then he was asking some more beyond what i could possibly give him (i was thinking of someone else more deserving love as higher than pity empathy as more noble than sympathy) and then i decided to cut short where the sobbing is (i expected more than that

perhaps

the silence would have served us better and the pauses like a comma between two long sentences perhaps respect for feelings and then i finally cut short where he was wanting more i still have tomorrow to take care of more things to do of equal importance like love, family, society, public welfare, like morality and decency and obedience to authority like religion and faith and order and law and justice and tranquility of the human mind.

When He Thought Of Storms

She was thinking of Bridges

He was thinking that
The bridges fell

But she was quick
To make the pieces

Turn into ships on
The sea

He was quick with A storm to sink them

She was always saving
For the ships

Were always
As empty as they can
Be

From the beginning
When she thought

Of bridges when he Thought of storms

RIC S. BASTASA
When He Was A Child

When he was a child
He did a lot of sketches Boats, Stars, Moons, Mountains, Clouds,
Seas, Shadows, Mama, Papa In
His Sketchbook,

He opens them now
As tears flow from his Eyes.

The past becomes a bird Alive hovering on his hair.

RIC S. BASTASA
When He Was Insulted, He Returned No Insult

some questions i will ask for you today, did you show your left cheek when your right was slapped?

did you walk another extra mile when you were ordered to walk the required mile?
did you take his eye because your eye was taken away?
did you take his teeth because your teeth were removed by him?

did you insult him because he insulted you?
did you fight him because he started the fight himself?

did he oppress you and you remained silent? did he steal from you and you tell the police that you freely gave the stolen thing from you to him?

please answer me.

Did it now occur to you that it is hard to be a christian?

please answer me.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Hell Is Hell

if you keep on hiding your skin gets too dark and like the night
it will be accompanied by that unnecessary coldness of stone that knows what numb what silence
tolerated

so many of them
those who have faced the harshness of opening tell you, open up open up since you are a closed gate a locked door
a tight bud

even they tell you open up or you die or you have no meaning at all or you are a brittle bread
a tick afraid of the light of the bulb in that old Persian carpet

and so you open up to the grass to the sun to the clouds and you are badly hurt skin burning like paper bones lighting up like firewood you run like hell and hell is hell (what do we really know about hell?) and fire consumes you and they follow you to check what you have become

it is too shocking to tell for now.
and they want to tell you that they are sorry for you.
and then
they forget

you were such a fool to believe those bunch of fools

RIC S. BASTASA
when her mother died today she couldn't care less for she is like everyone else in the house mourning

there is something though which she cannot forget the harsh words, the unkind hands, the long hair pulled to an end, and this somehow lessens her pains she looks behind and then give a sly smile

in this funeral she hides the honesty of her heart there is more to life she promises herself there is more to mothers and fathers and husbands and children it is someone that she misses a lot herself, a bird flying free from the hassle of family from the branches of the tree she longs for the sea the sunless one

the island in the middle of the ocean the moon without the marshes something so private that no one understands even myself

she is now the veiled woman shying away from light those that hurt her eyes like stabs of the knife silver in
the dark,

RIC S. BASTASA
When He's In Love Again

the clouds are so blue the sea so calm and the night so serene the leaves have forgotten to say a rustle and the skies are whiter
the mountains silent the trees tall and dignified the grasses crawl with the usual determination the birds are singing and the grasshoppers are jumping

inside him rages a very sweet storm

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Am Alone

now i learned what they want me to understand
when i am alone
at least i need someone to talk to someone who listens and when i am as silent as cigarette stick lighted
at least something knows where the smoke may go

i smoke now
but not because i like it it is a necessity the smoke at least talks to me and the light in the cigarette gives me the eye of the cinder
a word of light
a comfort of flame
in the dark

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Am Down And Feeling Lonely

i dress up for the day and prepare myself for a walk and leave a message on the table for you to read

there is nothing between those simple lines

I have to carry them with me I always manage to carry the unseen weight As i do not have to add What i have to yours

I walk at the boulevard Like anyone else Taking more air, exhaling what is Not necessary

It is simple as that There is no need for more complications

When i return home
You are there waiting for me We kiss

And as usual
Nothing happens
Because we keep our own lonely matters Responsibly
On those strong cabinets of our Maturity.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Am In Love

when i am in love
my feet dance the tango alone in the park
even without the music

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Am Nothing At All

sometimes i have vacant days days without content days removed from their usual implantation these are the lazy but happy days days without poems, without a word even days that i do not syllabicate because i claim to be happy on a day without thinking

too much of it chokes me and they say those who see me thinning out like air that i am punishing myself and it will be unfair to my being

so i embrace vacant days days like windows vase without water and flowers trees without leaves
twigs without buds

a door emptied of its dog floors without shoes books on their closed positions rooms without people streets without horses or cars oh i love these days, when i am nothing at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Arrive I See You Half Naked when i arrive from my journey i see you half naked and you are sleeping

i do not wish to wake you up i want to see you in that state where you are what you are without motion but just the form where you cannot say anything to all that i long for i sit beside you and look at your

body
i am feasting i am motionless
i am speechless
to such a beauty of the one
i love

it is new all over again the world stops right here and i do not want it to move to rotate to make its orbit to complete its journey all i want now is a suspension of time and form and place because you are with me because i am with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Arrive There I May Give The Best Smile

i will not wait for the flowers to wilt before i go

for i may bring with me the dryness of every leaf and flower the sound of their cracks the sadness of their deaths

when the flowers are in full bloom when the butterflies are crazy about them when the dew are still on the leaves glistening from the light of the morning sun perhaps i will go and henceforth i shall bring with me all the good times and when i arrive there i may give the best smile the best story, the last hope.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Arrive There.....

even if i have not seen your scars
they will always be there

you do not have to say a story how each scar was once a wound with all its pains our instinct is always to hide them for who wants to be reminded of those stabbing nights?

when i arrive there it will be another full moon the sea will be as calm as silk and silver do not serve upon that tray some pieces of broken dreams there will be a proper time for all of them it will be good if we deviate sometimes on those memories of laughter and child-like innocence when we were young climbing upon those trees gathering the ripe fruits and then eating all of them luscious pulp, sweet juices upon our tongues freed for the worries of old, dead anxieties, alive on some hopes.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Ask Her If She Likes To Write Poetry

when i ask her
if she likes to write poetry
she says
she does not like to go
naked

and when i ask her if she likes to read poetry she answers
with clarity
and with the directness of a cold stare
at a high temperature of her heyday

neither do i like to see naked people
bathing on a sunny beach

she prefers living in her own privacy

inside the discreet pages of her diary

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Become Wise And Numb

when you become storm #1
i remain as a simple cottage
at the foot of the hill

i draw my own blue butterflies fluttering
on the purple
bushes
of my garden

when you become the darkness of my night
i invent a hundred fireflies
on that tall tree
in my mind

i tell you
i am wise and numb
and has become too creative

because of you

i can be anything now and you have become nothing to me

when i take a glimpse of what you are doing
you become a black fish
on the bowl

if i want to
i could have pushed that bowl on the edge of the table and you should have been a minute part

of that
tragedy.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Begin To Fly Without Wings

when i look at your eyes when you touch
my hands
when i kiss your lips when our bodies
rub for each other
when we talk and take a walk together when i am beside you when we dive together inside our dreams
fishing our fantasies
these are the times
when you are mine
when i begin to fly without wings
with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Begin To Read Poetry

when love gazes at me and when i expect its pleasures i surrender my crown and bow upon its whims & caprices

lots of pains here and there a little of bliss
some shares of
ecstasies
subject to the frailness of time the vulnerability of
change
the temporariness of thrills
a firecracker
of giggles
that in seconds
fade
in the darkness

i am tired of love
and its teases got lots of scars
that i can never be proud of
through the folds of
time

in this gamble i am always bound to lose with lots
of sores

in these lovely wars
i am always
left out
loveless upon the twisted arms
of my fate

and so i shift to books venture in politics and hide in the quick blankets of my philosophies

'i am safe' i proclaim
but not until i see you again

'here comes my foolish heart!' i wish i can rewrite feelings

'but i cannot'
i look for that page that shall make me
dumb again
that which does not make me understand even erase
the basic foundation of my being

i run to poetry
asking for help
hide behind her skirt sit down there
with her
and then
i begin to read.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Came Here

when i came here
i find beauty, wanton beauty one that spreads and blooms
uncut
the pruning unknown forests of green vines climbing each branch leaves outreaching for the sun and then falling freely to the cold feet of the earth i simply sit on a rock and do nothing but watch

and indeed
it was beautiful

the sun the moon and the stars and even the winds of the night did the same

even the most powerful hands
of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Cross The Last Bridge

my dear wife
when i cross the last bridge of this marriage let me tell you
that i will be speaking in my own language
not yours
because it is so beautiful so coherent
and so untrue.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Die

when i die, what shame can i have?
do not take the blame, neither all the shame you may bury my body with dignity a coffin made of mahogany with a glass cover and white carnations all over my body
there will be a make-up of my face like i am a freshman of a class A university, but i pity you for that will be too expensive to add the parish priest's fees and the the food and prayers plus the songs of the choir and the cost of candles not to count the wreath and the drinks

oh, you will be buried in debt and you will have all the hard earned years to pay, so, take it easy, it is more for our advantage that i will not die or you perhaps but i have no shame and i take no blame & grrr i don't care about what people say if you die

i will make you a coffin of coconut wood sprinkle your body with flowers from the grass that i can pick along the goat's paths i can pray and sing myself no one eats snacks and i will not invite the parish priest, hire no choir or buy ready made wreaths for i know and you know that these will be very expensive and i have no money or if i have some i will not spend a cent for all these no-sense rituals useless prayers and out-of-tune choirs so we will take it easy now, you can't take it? then fake it let us live and just be ourselves let us survive all these or suffer those consequences.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Die

when i die
i do not choose whether my coffin is made of coconut planks
or metal casing
i cannot choose but only those who mourn for me
if they ever will shall choose what they think must fit me: the color and size of my niche
whether flowers be skipped or snacks be served or blessing be made
i do not choose: what epitaphs must they write or sculpt on marble
or gold

i cannot choose what funeral rites
shall be what church? who the priest shall be that sprinkle water over me?

in truth i do not care for by then i cannot feel
in fact
what they have in truth is only my shell

joyous then shall i escape somewhere an angel guide
perhaps
or what if there's no one
there
or nothing dear?
what do i really care?
i still can't feel.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Die (A Deadball Poem)

when i die,
they promise me, i would be given a tour
a travel for free

as i leave my body
for those who want to water it with tears

so many tears
like rain, a flood of rain a chant of my goodness a concealment of all the bad deeds i have inflicted

when i die
those you love me shall weep for nine days and give a party in my name on the 45th day
of my departure

when i die
those who pretend to love me shall weep with them and assure them about my goodness (their tongues on their cheeks) and too they will eat the food served on the table and drink and be sorry
for me

when i die
i have this assurance that i will be free and who cares about sincerity and plasticity around my dead body behind my memories

i am gone
and let them take care of their troubles

i am taking this complete tour for free on wings that still they do not have....

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Do Not Have You...

skies turn
black
sun is out grieving
seas become frozen
a cold world throughout
flora and fauna
dead

the whole
universe
stops

call me crazy.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Fall In Love The Second Time Around

when i fall in love again happiness rains on my cheeks and my mouth becomes a well full of water and my tongue becomes a garden blooming with red roses music comes out from my breaths rushing to your bosom my eyes become two suns making the bright days for me my eyelashes become the clouds and at night the stars hang there the green grasses of hope spread before my feet where my promises lay

my fingers turn into ten rivers and my hands and arms become long and wide blue oceans my love for you is immeasurable your arms cannot embrace it your eyes glimpse on the length of eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Go Fishing

when i go fishing
i am always reminded of the fish in the pond and the hook, line
and sinker

the bait is this worm this shrimp
and objective is always the fish

in there
one drinks so much silence by the pond
i see the ripples
i see the shadows of fins i drink so much silence i fathom so much depth

i might have missed the elusive fish losing my worm and my shrimp what i bring home is this inner peace and so i never mind the shadows of the fins

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Go Out And Play Under The Sun

when i go out and play under the sun
like a child i run and not minding if i fall i always know how to stand back and hold myself within a frame of bones sometimes without restraint i force myself upon the fingers of light and warmth and then when it is over when darkness begins to claim its rightful share i too know how to surrender i go back from where i come from and take shelter on a roof and close my door and windows i am back in my little nook taking some sleep always remembering the good old days of sun the summer in my mind the darkness and coldness within i keep them all and they all become a part of me. For i am both darkness and light, both child and man, both evil and good, both sun and moon.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Kiss You

did i not tell you
that after each kiss
i always think
of the next,

dead.

(but i do not stop from there
life does not end of the four corners of the niche)

the last kiss i had i begin to think of the next,

resurrection.

and then perhaps we will be together again pure spirits
no longer remembering what kisses are.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Leave You

when this is over
and ironed out when saying goodbye becomes so cordial

i will be the one to first open the door
and leave

i won't walk away
I'll run.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Look At The Time That I Have Wasted Years Ago

i feel like a frozen glass filled with water in the freezer when i look back to all the years that i have wasted doing the things where i can never put my best because that is what father want me to be i leave all the traces of what i love in those years that still ask me where i am where i live what i have been doing lately when they heard that i am into law they all laughed and then sighed

that is not the name that they first know me they have a word for me written in the poems that i once wrote my name was lust and love all bound together in one piece
my name was written in the cover book of the literature book in the maiden issues of the poetry collections of lilia and tita i look back again and they all raise their hands back as though to embrace me back into their bosoms again they are calling my name you are e come back to us. i know the reason why i am sad.

i have forgotten my real name.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Look At You Naked In Bed

i have to be honest now
despite the first lie
that after i have slept with you
something in me becomes
real: i am real, i am alive
i am whistling at midnight

when you wake up and
look at me and kiss my lips again
i know what it feels
the world becomes real too:
this bed, this blanket,
this window and the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Look At Your Lips

i have always remained silent like a dead man but deep within there is always this love growing wanting to kiss your lips and hold you i close my eyes to dream at noon your body and your soul fused into mine

it is this oneness of us in the dream that makes me write the poems and make me live it is this separation of our two realities that make me die every moment

i am the coward of our time i am the one that you can never love

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Love Someone

there are no
if there are no
but

i just do it, like you must, wordlessly under a spell

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Make A Decision I Try To See The Universe
And The Ant

when i make a decision about your life your liberty or your property i always try to see the universe, the paths of the planets, the way they orbit around the sun near and far, bright or dull,
the whole
of this universe in motion like a fluid of fire
i look up
for a sign  a symbol of what ought to be and given the situation how the planets would behave
then
i look down the smallest of the ant its tiny feet its capacity to bite and eat and swallow
the universe
into its mouth and belly, the smallest of all shall be considered, the details of its possibilities the intricacies of its wishes and dreams
tiny
and its relation to the universal, to the great view of the giants,

the forest and the trees, the shadows and the shapes,
light and darkness,

and then liberty may be taken away, property may be forfeited, and life may even be shut out because the law has become the god on that black and white the booking sheet.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Make Love Tonight

when i make love tonight with another
body, i close my eyes and dedicate
my next ejaculation to you

does that make you
happy now?

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Move A Step Forward

there is something that i notice with us when i make a step forward you do the same
when i make a turn, you do the same i don't think that you are my shadow because you look so real that i am even tempted to touch you though i am afraid sometimes that you may not like it at all now i stopped doing a thing and wanted even to stop thinking and here you are still doing the same thing i am definite i am not you and you are not me for we are two different entities facing each other and perhaps wanting to be the same and fuse as one are you my dream? are you my wish not to be alone?

why can't we talk? who knows if we have the same mothers? who knows if i am your twin and mother did not tell us?

when i die, please, to complete this story, will you also die with me?

I doubt fore, you exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Read Your Name

when i read your name
it is enough to remind of all the arrogance of the world it has become a symbol of the woman who refused to be with me because she is used to being lonely and rude

she has become an island to another island they wish to be glaciers, cold and floating, always wanting to move away from everybody only to sink when the sun shines

when the earth
warms itself and tells about the rule of life warm sunshine

love of humanity
interdependence cooperation
unity of the universe

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Rush Upon A Poem For Lack Of Time it is when i rush upon a poem like an acquaintance

i
feel this surprise

a
word comes like someone that i do not know but it strikes softly on my face
and i ask: do i know you?

the syllable snubs me
and says

'of course not! '

then i go on my own way
thinking:

what was that?
like the way the seam of my shirt
has been touched by the famed finger
of the miraculous
just once
but it has lingered
throughout the night

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Said I Tore The Picture Long Hidden

when i said that i tore the picture of you long hidden in the pages of my love book i thought i have found the escape from this ancient longing and that i am already free from this old flame

yes, i tore every fiber, every print of your face only to find that tonight your face lives forever
inside my heart

when i sleep, i close my eyes only to see once again there and i gaze at you in total surrender

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Sit Here And Try Writing My Lines

i sit here again
trying to repeat what it is necessary to be repeated

face the screen
think about the past
rekindle
make more light
come inside me
adjusting the shutters

i am retracing what i had the peace and the quiet of my being

i just lost it
and i am trembling trying to explain what happened
why my guts have become so emptied and drained why my thoughts are scattered like machine gun bullets not hitting any point
any pole

perhaps something
or someone will come along and carry me
and help me find the map
towards
my castle my paradise

my resting place
my home again

i sit again and write some lines perhaps they will have the courage and wisdom to tell me

why and how
When I Talk And Think About Albert

sometimes (did i tell you that this is my favorite word?) i am shocked by my own ingenuity (sometimes i equate it with shallowness a loquacious mouth of the river falling upon a rock and smashing its hands on the floor of the earth)

i blame myself for changing the meaning of a word like the way i am changing the meaning of my life

(or perhaps the lives of other people around me) creating landscapes putting trees where there are no mountain putting talkative women in the house where the house is still a thought

(a student wants to say i am crazy but there is also a doubt whether i am one she has the wisdom of keeping her mouth in the silent mode)

i am not stupid
not crazy i still know what right
is,
i can still tell you who are those in the left side of the equation

one day
i redefined a poem
it need not be a house with a door and windows

i can simply be stairs or path
it can simply be a star
on the roof

it can simply be a conversation without a direction like a Freudian dialogue on the sofa
where comfort is actually moving the paths of meteors
with a broom and
light

(do you always talk to achieve
fulfill a mission?
what is your mission?
what is your
purpose?)

women go to the market buy some things for the kitchen
they do not linger upon a

men go to their work thinking about their kids
most of the time
they do not bother about work really they also dwell in the bodies of other women about those nights away from the eyes of their wives

people have scattered minds unto each other they pretend that they are devoted
into something
worthwhile

kids go to school carrying bags filled with books that they do not bother really reading if they have to be honest about who they are the only care for the games of their minds in those playgrounds and play stations

what kind of world is this there are only so few that live
so many people are going to the places of death without really knowing
each step

the famous man (you know his name) discovered the bomb and from then own
they own all these countries of this world he is the real meaning and so they claim him to be the only meaning of this world a nuclear god who cannot die in that history of pain and misery may his soul (if he has one) rest in peace.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Wake This Morning

last night i had a single pill of 'x'
you know what
it is
do not make any pretensions
it did not obstruct
a word
it slipped right though smooth and easy
and then
the usual things happen i am into this garden they call Eden and there is this Eve and the apple
and of course the snake i still doubt whether i was God or
i was simply
the sinful Adam

when i wake up this morning
my body was as heavy as the Titanic
which as you well know
sank.
my mouth is sewed
with invisible thread
and i can feel
the pain in my lips
my teeth are imprisoned soldiers
i want to eat some of my words for breakfast
but i cannot.
you see? this happens sometimes and so what we can do is simply sit on one of the chairs drenched by last night's rain
at the porch
and just be silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Wake Up In The Morning

i accept it was all me that makes the bed warm

i remember
it was only me who turned off the lights this room has no mouth to speak about love and togetherness.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Was A Child

when i was a child
i used to fish in the nearby river
there was silence
i can hear the songs of the reeds and the whispering sighs of the nipa palms i sat and waited until a fish swallows my hook, line and sinker and the with one pull i got the fish off the water and into the soil it grapples for death for taking my bait.

now, i have become a man and i have nothing to do with the fishes anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Was A Kid, Grandpa Hurt His Head

we are riding on a seesaw i am the kid and you are the old man now you are up

watch out
for i am getting out!

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Was In Rome

take this note
when i was in Rome
i did not become a Roman
neither did i wish to become one
i stayed put and pat on
who i am
and what will i be.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Was Sick

i was thinking about a lot of things messy things like a pool of thread being played by the kitten at the living room and the dogs were flying kites
the mice are taking all the cheese,
i was thinking about a lot of poems with gentle faces
wearing straw hats on the beach, a lot of stories with eyelashes curling and lips lusciously
biting each other,
when i was sick they tell me i was sick my mind is sick and i am not aware about the sensitivity of the situation, which i always consider as nothing but another form of temporary
sensuality,
i was thinking about my favorite dish
and those who dine with me their hands inside my pants.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Will Meet You Again

when i meet you again i will not use words
i will not utter your name i will look at you and go closer my lips closer to your lips my hands caressing your hands your hair your body i will have no use of words they will be unnecessary and time so short shall have no regrets for i shall have your kiss your sweet caress i have no use of words for i shall make love with you the whole night long.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Write

when i write i do not wish to please
anybody
it is more of a selfish endeavor i am lonely and i want to please myself to get rid of this feeling so i can function well in this society
when i write i am engaged in therapy
looking for a cure
of this sickness of humanity
this void inside our hearts something that asks always asks
and we are left without any answers but we go on because we have no choice the world spins itself
even without us
this search for meaning this self wanting to be full i write because there is this sickness upon ourselves it is lovely beautiful and true
feel it, to every syllable, every letter every poem at night when the loneliness becomes deeper when the stars become too far away when the silence stabs when the pain becomes too unbearable the mind opens the words build themselves like stairs, and this is it now... another poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Write About Beauty

when i write about beauty
i always have the sunflower in mind
and the sun
and the soft winds from the evergreen mountains

i will add some chromatic butterflies and a very beautiful morning like some petals of red roses

and i will also think of tiny round leaves like drops of rain showering falling on the spreading patches of glimpses
of grass

and then when everything beautiful is in their proper places with matching colors bright and scents all pleasing to my senses and emotions like to dance with the wind and rays of the sun when feelings are so tranquil like a very calm sea on an early morning when everything now is so lovely
there
then
will i invite you,

come, my friend!
come, my love!

i will be here
waiting for you
it will be beautiful indeed!
When I Write Another Poem

for another head start i read your poem reflect on what you say and what you really feel, and then i look upon myself, searching
on a link to my
soul,
searching the recesses
of my heart
looking for a leveling
field where you my peer can also feel what i
feel,
and then i realize
we are all one in this journey
one boat sailing on a vast ocean
one sky filled with
stars
and storms
and eventually at times seeing auroras of light
lightning and thunder
and emptiness
inside a cup of consumed coffee,
i ponder upon this humanity
of words, and right there and then
i write this one
for you

respecting the flow of thought
linking to the river
of your
expressed
feelings
the rage of a waterfall of emotions
the settlement of ideas
flashes of light reflecting the self
that was there
even before
we have attempted to write.

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Write These Lines

when i write these lines it is as good as thrown paper, some words are written but they are meant to be discarded because they have occupied much of sadness worn out memories overused mumblings

they are meant to be crumpled and thrown away

this one, this one is not meant to be kept it is written but meant simply to be deleted some words are meant to be said and be forgotten

because of pain and because they do not mean anything anymore.
goodbye lines, goodbye take your time, there will be a little waiting until another fool takes you in another poet in the state of an inevitable writer's block

RIC S. BASTASA
When I Wrote The Words I Love You I Miss You I Want You

you will by chance read these ordinary lines that a lover says to another lover faraway, oh! My God! you really tore your heart out of your chest and threw on the computer stand when you write these lines they are ordinarily said, let me tell you again, i love you i miss you i want you on my side, the musings sound like you and i have met and kissed in the subway of strangeness as i hold your hands like you are a train bar so i may not fall away and die like a stupid bum, but i write lines of love and missing as i am born to love and miss those unloved and unfound, what for too is my loneliness and being messy, got to go now, you did not tell me your name, and i did not tell mine, we do not find any importance about knowing each other at all, we just meet, i say i love you i say i miss you, and you listen attentively and pretend you like each word, we recall the rules of our game, for those who believe there is heaven for those who don't keep your little space of earth, and live, wiser, cautious, and better adjusted this time, easy come, easy go, there is not much pain, there is no bargain, and well what is the gain?

now you are learning now you are saying when i go away i miss you i love you i want you and i will not look back at you, your tongue is so adept in your cheek.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Ice Meets Fire

when ice meets fire
expect
too much water

when an ice-cold heart meets a fire-hot heart
expect
too much tears

perhaps
a little persistence in patience
gives birth
to love

this mutuality thing seems to be

force times distance

RIC S. BASTASA
When Imagination Comes True

you read a book
and the night is deep and dark
you insert
a marker and then you feel that gift
of sleep

dreams of rainbows seep in your brain
the heart is an apple beating with the wind-chimes

somehow there is warmth of this chill
feel the softness and the smoothness of scented oil

a kiss lands in your ear and it is not a dream.

RIC S. BASTASA
When In Pain

when in pain
i prefer silence.

but i keep on writing.
and writing.
and writing.
and writing.

when in pain
i prefer always the silence of the stars.

makes me feel like i am a star.
this silence, this pain.

when in silence, like the stars, the pain gets too peaceful
like the stars

and then the pain subsides like an ebbing tide

like an anger subsiding into a still undisturbed mind when i shine like a star i remember the pain and it does not pain anymore.

silence kills the pain like a distant star on a dark night like this one.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Is Enough Enough

enough is enough when you just don't say
enough

just take what is within your reach & you're rich enough

sit down and gaze into the hole of your being and be lost in your own infinity

RIC S. BASTASA
Sometimes he asks in the middle of his sorrow where is that soul mate that must appease longing

Upon a cliff one sees layers of time's scars

Upon cut timber lies epochs myriad circles yet missing that center of the soul

That is the journey of the boat looking for its right port

It longs for the right time to lower finally its stable anchor at the bottom of the ocean floor

The storms are here but who shall care?

RIC S. BASTASA
When It Comes

when it comes
it comes and i am ready
to go

what place is that i do not really know

but it is definite
there is no coming back when will i see you again?

i will never know

you see, i realize everything has always been

uncertain
what they give us was exactly the opposite of what is here with us

everything has always been an image of what is

and what ought to be was not what was ever done you see i am leaving this place without regret

you see this is not my place that is not really my house that is not my garden and that tree had never been mine even from the moment when i planted it as a seed that flower that i love i only touch for a while its petals fall from my fingers and then what i have is nothing but a stem and a leaf and this old ruined self

RIC S. BASTASA
When It Is Just Lust....

i've eaten you
taking you in but shall take you within myself
for a while,

i doubt it if you are love yourself so you have to stay for a while in my
mouth
not in my heart

it is too discriminating
i am telling you
time is its ally
it gives me
this chance
to hold you for the moment

you are not love but lust and so i have to spit you out!

RIC S. BASTASA
When It Is Not For You

when it is not really meant for you
though near to the touch of your fingers
it slips away
like a mud fish from
your hands

like light refracted on deep blue water things become crooked
deflected.

RIC S. BASTASA
When It Rains On The Month Of July

the world if you see it in the garden, in its simplified forms
of leaves
wet with rain
of birds resting below them of waters running from the gutter and spurting
like a vomit of the past and the surging of the rain like the memories
like the ramblings of the day if you only see the world when you stop and put your fist on your chin when you sit alone on an old ancestral chair and simply be silent like a rug on the door

away from the dog
and the wagging tails and the cats and the noisy scratches on the walls if you only begin to see the world you will know that it is sad you will know further that it is more beautiful

that way.

RIC S. BASTASA
When It Was Over, You Did Not Tell Me Where It Really Ended

you show me a scar
in your heart,
you assure yourself it was once the wound of things that ended
years ago

of the wound
that i inflicted

you had anger and now when we meet again
you are smiling
you now have happiness beside him and your children i look deeper inside your eyes showing you also my scars in my own way of telling you about my loneliness for years accumulating like layers of mud and rocks

this loneliness
that never ends like doors that always open to the night skies
without stars

on the surface of my skin lies a wound that never heals you caused it too but i did not tell you let them believe that i am the guilty party the fault of your earth the murderer convicted but was never heard i smile at you this day i am happy on this casual meeting it will be the last i am dressed but i am not prepared to go anywhere

on the surface
how can you see what is on this deep sinking eyes?

the sharks, the pointed rock, the deaths on the ocean floors the corpses there rotting unearthed unnamed.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Justice Fails

when justice fails because the constable has blundered do not be surprised, do not even be discouraged, proceed in procuring justice still with the way how you are trained to do so,
get the fingerprints of your thoughts and present the same to those who doubt and wavered, show them the intricate lines of your own determinations this is how it must be done there is still a map of this destination, when justice fails because the judge and justices have also lost their sense what justice is and how it should be dispensed like a blindfolded lady that you misunderstand with her scales on one hand and a sword on the other,

do not be shaken, do not lose hope, heave a sigh and breathe the remaining clean air, there are still those who in silence still remain steadfast holding on to truth and keeping their hands clean and hearts pure and minds active to the pursuit of this eternal approximation of fairness
there are still those whose eyes still daze to the glitters not of gold but of truth, beauty, and goodness, i will count you in please count me in too

and how about you?
i ask, please be counted we shall stand on the good side of things we shall look for the brightest star the ideal from among the blunders in the darkness of our nights let the hammer fall and let it fall everyday let those in the dark side have their houses full

RIC S. BASTASA
When Kindness Should Not Have Been Told....

i did not
inform my right hand with what kindness my left hand
did

but as always any light spreads itself
in darkness

the right cannot be outwitted

it tells everyone:
feet and knuckles

in this
rumored world
there is no
secret

RIC S. BASTASA
When Labyrinths Were Lovely Too.

have respect for the phenomenon of
presence
for that which is here and for that which we have conceived to be true and yet to come.

do not say any word for that dignity of silence do not disturb the peace of the faded past, its soul rested, its last soil covered with stones.

have respect for what appears and for what disappears just stay there and be seated like a guest
keep your eyes open keep the secrets of those labyrinths,
and if you leave for some other place or for someone that you think you can love and value forever,
close the door
and leave the key
in the same spot where i first know
you
when i first kissed you when i first shared the intricate veil with
you
when labyrinths
were lovely too.
When Light And Air Were Born

When light and air were first born Man came,
And woman followed,
So filled
With awe & wonder,
What is this light that makes them see?
What is this air that makes them breathe and live?
Definitions were made,
In awe and wonder, What it feels when air gets Into their lungs what it feels when they Walk in the light and not stumble on stones?

The years accumulated like layers and layers Of earth and fire and rocks and earth and sea Came then some cataclysmic changes While more and more Men and women and lots of children came Inhabiting this earth
And awe and wonder
Were lost, More changes came that kill and annihilate and Men and women and children were so preoccupied with saving themselves, Forgetting how air first filled their lungs Forgetting how light first guided them not to stumble to stones, Now air and light
Have become so ordinary, & no one really remembers about how it was at first No one really cares to recall what first was,
Men and women and children are so busy Preoccupied with darkness, these choking blankets darkness These poisonous packets of air, so debilitating, so deadly & some of the children Simply dropped dead on the streets, and fear so gripped the men and women gripes and grimes geometrically hurried in their hearts, Night’s darkness
The darkness of insensitivity buried them and indeed things change and everything goes from bad to worst

What was it at first, is now not felt anymore, what was first was taken for granted and finally forgotten,

Where is the awe? Where is the wonder?

Men and women and children, where are you all going?

RIC S. BASTASA
When Love Ends

it is not surprising how things can go wrong how tastes differ

i set aside this one for you i take time so much time to make it it is the most beautiful one in fact i suffered the whole night just to make it for you just for you

when you see it it is nothing to you when you touch it it breaks

it is as fragile as dew as glass
it can crack easily when dropped
it is as temporary as mist corrosive as tears

it is the point of breaking it when my love ends

RIC S. BASTASA
When Love Is Gone...

it is at this moment
when i ask you
not to say any word

it is enough that you set aside my hand
and refuse the rose
of its vase

i know how to close
a door
and close it permanently

i have done it so many times
and always without a sound like air that gets in the window

lift an embroidered drape and leaves
smoothly

the trees outside
do not have a hint
a leaf sometimes
fall off
for no reason at all

love? shall it be redefined?
in how many words?
never mind

the words will find themselves on paper
again
the pen can always wait and the hands
tired sleep like sands on the shore
undisturbed by
ebbs....

RIC S. BASTASA
When Lovers Lose Their Cellphones?

hmm,
they buy a new one.
eddie.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Luck Comes It Rains....

there is a new failure club in town and i am one of its pillars

we always think that failure is simply success delayed

because it is not the ripe time yet because you are not ready yet how to handle the drunkenness of a successful man

if you think that you are a loser it is but temporary mama says there is always a sun that shines for everyone a moon as witness

the sea is too wide for another sailing adventure there are still more continents for our experiments

so baby
don't fret
carry that ball of failure
in your hands

drag those chains of sorrow and satisfy your heart with all the possible regrets papa says

time runs and it soon catches with you bringing you a bunch of success

because when luck comes
it rains.
When Man Writes His Life Away

when sadness comes like an uninvited guest and when it stays longer than you can have it

just be silent

for silence are like seeds that sprout on the little rains of your patience to grow the flowers of hope

when man writes his life away overwhelmed by so much sorrow God steps by the door waits for you
to open it and then when this is done God embraces you

the sun shines by the window of your house the birds chirp again on the surrounding trees the clouds of baby blue cover the grasses as green as the pines scented as perfumes
of your love

RIC S. BASTASA
When My Handsome Friend Writes

when he scribbles his feeling on paper

The women get Hysterical

Half men too.

RIC S. BASTASA
When My Time Comes

when my time comes
i welcome time

when i die
i welcome death
like a long lost friend
of mine

when i am born again like what they always do babies
we start our life with a big cry again

don't you see these occurrences in your skin birth rebirth

don't you see how culture comes in all things and lives in cycles

from fly to
butterfly
from turtle
to myrtle doves

from cell to
you
from a mere thought to enlightenment

from a touch of my finger to the fire of your soul

from the atom
to the big bang
of the universal explosion choose belief have faith in the undertakings of the stars and planets in the sparkles of your

mind

everything comes and goes and entwines and climbs
ladder to ladder
cloud to cloud
space to space

unknown to known to unknown
have
and not have none and full

you do not understand them
now
until one night when you gaze to the heavens and see the distance between you and them

and then you close your eyes and all of them are just right within you

brothers and sisters and kin and parents and ancestors

one big world in the most intimate moment
of this and that i, will, choose, rebirths a thousand times

i, will, choose, pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
When My Wife Quarrels With Me

when she steps upon the Gaza and prepares her rockets and shells fully dressed for a war on for a real killing and desire for an all fight, globalized war
and annihilation
of my own
kind,

i run away and hide in the original paradise where Adam remembers how first she was tempted by Eve together with that Snake with a very sweet apple that now sticks
inside his Throat,

when she follows me all ready for an all out war i open my arms, raise them for a sure surrender kneel before her and kiss her feet and then i go for the real kill in paradise i shall make love with her as the Snake watches and smothers its slimy body with that suicidal Envy.

RIC S. BASTASA
When No One Is Watching

i like it when you stop working
when no one is watching,

i guess you are just being true to yourself alone, you are lazy.

alone, you are thinking what to do next with a broken heart alone, you embrace the truth of this endless pain that you have inflicted upon yourself accept things now alone, alone must you be till the end of your life till someone comes again and watches you wearing that smile, sour as vinegar.

RIC S. BASTASA
When No One Really Cares

my role has always been to fix broken stairs to oil the rusty hinges of the door & wipe those misty glass windows of their haze to plant the runners along the stony pavements of the house i like it when it is green and covered as things appear cool and vibrant against the walls beneath the sun

i replace old lamps
i like it when the room is bright with light at night i like it when everyone of you in this house is comfortable with warm soup on the

table
when the cold nights of November
begins to shiver

when you look for a candle
and a lighter
i always have
them with
me

what i think is hurting is that i am not fixed
myself

i am a broken rail
a malfunctioning lamp
a dark room
a cold soup a rusty hinge
a missing stair
and yet
no one
no one really
cares.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Nothing Is Handed To Us

when nothing is handed to us we learn to acquire what we think we really need this is the instinct of survival and we do not depend on the power of the sun or the mercy of the moon we may ask the tiny stars to lend a little of their light for the darkness of our nights but when there is none even a flicker from the stones will be enough we learn to burn the dryness of our hearts to create this innate fire and when we realize what we really are we begin to find for ourselves the truth we create our own light and we share the warmth we become ourselves and then they look at us we gain so much courage and we do not mind them anymore when nothing is handed we learn for the first time that we have our hands to move

RIC S. BASTASA
When One Begins To Feel Death Coming In His Nerves

one time he felt that he was dying.
he wrote so many things.
he never thought that they are poems

it is like everything has no use anymore and that the only thing to do is simply to sit down and wait and then die, ...or wait for someone to pick you up and leave the house will be empty, and no one shall open the window and the stairs will be filled with dust and then you ask who shall live in this house?

the plants will not be taken cared of all the flowers shall wilt all the remaining things will be taken or sold at public auction he thinks all these things but then nothing really happened so many things were already written so many ideas reflected, but he did not die he lives, and he laughs at himself unable to imagine, how he did all those seemingly, almost, an episode, a script, a drama an emotion....

RIC S. BASTASA
When One Chooses Evil Over Good...

how did one man choose evil from good?
was it a matter of decision to choose one that made him feel right?
i've seen one man choose evil over good and he did not end
that well enough.

were he to be born again and start at square one will he choose evil just the same and meet the same tragic ending?

i guess he will choose it
again
because he always remembers that feeling and it made him feel so good and so right that he never thought it even for once
to be evil

RIC S. BASTASA
When Pain Is Anticipated What Can Pain Be?

after we talked
i already know what you wanted i toyed with that idea

and then when we finally meet each other at the agreed time and place

i already know what to say but i only listened to what i already expected you to say
to me

i toyed with that idea
as always
as i have always done with the past with all of them and they all like me just like the way you like me now

at the end
you say, this kind of thing won't last these toys won't last longer than we think we both toyed with these ideas and we
since we know already this kind of pain

we did not pain that much (perhaps a little like that grain of salt
like the way we toyed with one another)

with tongue-in-our-cheeks we part and we do not use any word any longer

when pain is anticipated what can pain be?

obviously, the one that you already know does nothing to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Papa Gifted Me A Chopper

one day
papa bought me a toy chopper

the body of the chopper
spins with its chopper and i wonder how if the passengers would feel
well?

i wonder if papa
is just drunk why he made such a choice

i was then five or six
at that time
and i think perhaps
i. more of,
needed a gun.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Reality Is Too Much

when reality is too much like a vodka
that you drink
you become drunk
and tipsy
you fall and sleep and you rise from where you fall
and enter into this world you dream about this is my world

welcome
to fantasy welcome to dreams this is where everything comes as easy as it goes

when you finally wake up
the following morning
needing cubes
of ice and another
time for silence

RIC S. BASTASA
When Rivers Run Again Like Children

your doubt cannot be erased by the loud music from the fm radio or the non-stop tv or the addiction that you put on facebook

not even poetry
can cure it completely

there is one thing
about peregrination

these walks at night under the moon passing by those owls

the walks following morning upon grasses still wet with dew day slowly unfolding light curtains
blades of rice plants worshiping the sun
birds migrating and finding places to feed their young it is at this moment when you finally locate those missing items remembering those that trigger the finding of meanings

hope in another light inspiration rushing like a waterfall from the top of your hair
your head full again with memories rivers run again like children

When She Did Not Like It Anymore

it is easy
she pretends the leaves are all dead in the middle of spring when he comes
she did not like it anymore

it is easy
she pretends there are no more flowers that it is time for mourning
when he comes
she is dressed in black and
silence
her lace around her lips veiled
and stony.

RIC S. BASTASA
When She Died At 16

when she died at sixteen that early morning the rain fell

you look at the sky
on the limitless horizon

at the infinite possibilities that she could have become the clouds are darker than you expected

sometimes you do not like the rain the darkness and the scream inside your heart you like to deny them their sad existence but they had always been there even before you learned to defy inside your thoughts crying

RIC S. BASTASA
When She Dies

with all that she did denying to her children what they ought to deserve

she will not get the funeral she asks
no one weeps

but for civil society's norms
for a while she will wear the black veil

he will wear black sunglasses and then he will be back to drinking at night she will we wailing in the desert the moon shall hide behind the dark clouds on a cold evening.

RIC S. BASTASA
When She Dies (Edited)

with all that she did
denying to her children what they ought to deserve

she will not get the funeral she asks
no one weeps

but for civil society's norms
for a while she will wear the black veil

he will wear black sunglasses
and then he will be back to drinking at night

she will be wailing in the desert the moon shall hide behind the dark clouds on a cold evening.

RIC S. BASTASA
When She Falls In Love

when she falls in love
she gives a hundred percent of herself

not even demanding
one percent from her lover and this goes on and one

one betrayal
to another, one lover to another from one pain to another pain, and then the time comes for her to sum up her ecstasies and orgasms vis-a-vis the pain

and she says
she had the scales
of pleasures
in her favor

she gets what she wants
she licks what her tongue desires
and she likes everything that happens in her life and she concludes: she gets used to pain and too

it has become pleasurable
till the last

she gets used to thrills and risks and miscalculations and all because she knows what love is and how to always live for it till the end

my mother

RIC S. BASTASA
When She Fell In Love To A Young Boy

first she lost her work then her husband died
untimely
she mourned
she is overwhelmed with so much grief
and without any direction she moved from one place to another
until she finally found him, a young boy who loves her too
and i just hope that with her depression gone against all odds
that they may both live happily ever after.....

RIC S. BASTASA
When She Makes Love With Him

when she makes love with him
she always takes a good look at the ceiling as though she and the ceiling are in love at the height of his muscular frenzy feasting on her flesh she is asking help from her imagination she is not in love anymore she detests this obligation the walls are wordless of course and the bed squeaks in pity when he is finished she turns her body to the other side. death whispers its name. Death is too inviting.

she travels far into the distant fantasy land of her imagination.
her prince is now waiting in the castle of her dreams.

RIC S. BASTASA
When She Says Goodbye

when she says goodbye
waives her hand
and sort of cry some tears like she will be missing us all a lot,
	ry not looking at her let her be
if you must climb some stairs or feed the chickens or busy yourself with the pigs

let us see
if her goodbye is honest if she does not have some crocodile tears if she comes back again on the same
ship taking her away
let us see
actually, i do not have any plan welcoming her back
i have found my life and she is not a part of it anymore even a doorknob or a button to my shirt or a cuff link her hands are never
true.

RIC S. BASTASA
When She Stopped Circling

desirous still of changing what ugliness is still
left
by lousy time

she wakes up
ahead of him and walks
around the house

same routine of boredom
circling until

she stops and looks at the gray sky
where night stars
still hang and glitter

so many things
she missed
and it is still
up there

perhaps she had looked down upon herself upon
time
and too earthly

there is more up there that hints
about the mysterious and the divine
RIC S. BASTASA
When She Tiptoed

when she tiptoed
she was inside her locked room when she tiptoed and danced the ballet she was inside her locked room & she closed all the windows outside the world sees her as a limp and she likes it that way she is the princess of hypocrisy.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Silence Speaks

when silence
speaks
we know
we must listen

it stabs
right
at the center
of the heart

RIC S. BASTASA
When Solitude Stumbles....

solitude is a dignified lady
but when it
stumbles in the dark
alone, as solitude
actually is,
soon you will
hear the screams of a mad woman in extreme paranoia
calling for help and when you go there
hoping to save her with your
hand,
you will go home
with only one hand
left.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Someone Speaks From His Heart

imagine a big dome
it is filled with people and the sound system is so good that you can hear a child over there
sighing.

imagine the world filled with trees and occupied with running rivers and engulfed by the biggest belly of the ocean imagine that there is a silly urchin chased by a star
fish
finally crunched and powdered and gone
you hear it when it uttered the last word before it was gone.

those are those times when a man begins to speak from his heart when the world though big and too busy
begins to listen

it is the time when you notice a sea urchin from the bottom of the ocean's belly when words become another relevant and important subject matter.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Someone Tells You That You Are Wrong

he stands there with a pointing finger telling you that your skirt is too short and your legs are too long,

whatever, he thinks that you are a mistake of this universe
and that God perhaps lost attention
when nature tried to give you shape

be confident shy away from people like them turn inward
find that light inside the secret place of your heart and listen:

did it not tell you that you are the precious child of the universe that you are no less than the moon and the stars and the trees and that by all means you have the right to be here?

desiderata, right?
recall, and then look straight at that magnified critique don't say anything
dismiss him as nothing but a mistake of the magician's illusion he does not exist
it is only you
and nothing else
who really matters

RIC S. BASTASA
When Summer Is Gone

she reads to me
the story today as i lay on my bed waiting for her to sleep with me

that:

there was this old man holding the hand of an old woman and this young woman was curious about how they were able to keep their love

strong and glowing and the old man said i am holding her because i do not want her to fall down the road that we are walking together

and she said to me
darling how lovely would commitment be

and i said come my love sleep with me

RIC S. BASTASA
When Tears Flow From Your Eyes

always remember my friend that when tears flow from your eyes no matter how far you are like the distant stars my heart beats in sorrow too like the worm wriggling bitten by an ant

under the thick grass inside the hollow earth

RIC S. BASTASA
When That Flower Wilted

on the path
one late afternoon that wild flower wilted

its life was too short yet it bloomed in full beauty that noonday

no one noticed it except the sunset
fading in pastel orange then the world turns into a black sky that flower remains so true

inside my mind

RIC S. BASTASA
the old house of their parents is sold today the chinese businessman who bought it shall take it now it shall be demolished

another high rise building shall be built seven of them are all grown-up with families of their own most of which are already citizens of the united states of america this is the house of their childhood they were raised here by their parents the veranda looks out to the city road now crowded with cars and trucks traffic is heavy and noise has become intolerable the youngest of them in the family is still mourning for the death of his only daughter a juvenile diabetic who also wished to die months before the eldest of the family shall receive his share and after a day leaves back to the U.S. as a retiree a sibling takes time taking pictures of the house, the white fence, the veranda, the huge windows, the grass of the yard, the red roof, and much to my surprise the orange cat grinning seemingly unaffected by this diaspora of old feelings unlike people, cats do not make drama, nothing about nostalgia, they stay and leave and one day at a time, live their nine lives, without much fuss.

there is sadness of course giving up a family house. all the children leave. Most of them have gotten old too.
Some are is very sick. And money is never enough

No matter. Even if an ancestral house is sold, nothing is solved. At most what we have here is change.
And it is constantly occurring.

A friend of theirs who saw the picture of the sold house in Facebook wrote, 'we had happy memories in that house' so far, no comment is made. If no one does, I will,

and it will be about that orange cat.

eternally grinning.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Anger Is Gone

there is anger
plenty of it like ticks of a dog like caterpillars crawling upon the twigs upon the leaves of the trees it is consuming everything that is green and edible,

the night is a night of too much labor until everything is eaten and nothing is left but skulls and skeletons

it is this anger that you do not know that creates all the emptying upon a night filled with so much patience when the morning bursts with its own borrowed light the trees are bare everything turns into skeletal fingers and too the worms are gone it is this annihilation that i have been waiting for i leave nothing

not even footprints since i leave none since i have never been gone but you will see no one you will hear none at all when this anger is gone

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Blue Bird Sings

oh! the wind cries with it when the blue bird begins to sing when the night is so cold when the moon hides behind
the clouds

oh! the leaves begin to hush and sympathize
but the blue bird does not stop singing
and then it stops
at dusk
it is no longer there

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Boat Sinks

when the boat sinks
all the rats have already transferred to the other
boat

the other scheming snakes
have already taken their loot
in their lifesavers
if not submarines

as others scream
and shout and die they are drinking their wines singing their songs and laughing and counting their gains

and then they start planning for more

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Body Is Bound

when the body is bound by an invisible rope of morality and decorum how can the arms and hands scheme and make the discreet meeting with the lustful desires of the feet?
the heart is full. the mind empties itself.
The tongue wants to talk, but the mouth does not open.
the pen writes, and keeps on writing what is never spoken.
that is what happens when age comes when the spirit is willing but the body complains.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Body Starts To Go Broke...

you complain of flu time has now asked for an accounting how your body is used how is it abused
with so much work
and thoughts and stress and waste

you think about drugs and the possibility of a vaccine i say there is more to it we don't live by drugs alone or bread

there is more to this tired body this restless mind

go deeper
ask your heart
and listen

there is more to this sickness the symptoms shout
asking for help
the prescription is right there on those vomit and allergies

sleep a while let your dreams tell the story let that voice tell you where you are and where must you
go
next time

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Cell Phone Was Born

Something happens
When the cell phone was born Beyond sex and gender Beyond race and religion Beyond economic status
Each hand holds
This thing
And says

hi!

Hello, how are you doing?

To every extreme end
Of this world
From the north to the South Pole Passing by the equator
The world now is Too small Too near

Your cell phone is ringing
Then,
This internet thing.....

Write it.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Conscience Speaks...

a beggar arrives home today bringing her story and she talks and talks and convinces me that she deserves to be given food and money...

an intelligent beggar with wits and wiles, and she wins i am parting with some charities
that only God can pay...

well and good,
that is what this feeling says this conscience is not
dead
after all....

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Day Is Over

when the day is over
you walk your way towards home and keep the silence about what happened

your lips, and they say, they cannot help themselves, shall try to mumble and move like a wounded man asking for help, yet, you keep the promise to yourself be gentle, and be so careful let your silence reign let there be no talking pain.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The End Almost Ends

as the end approaches its end i see, some scars become wounds again some pains arrive and it makes me remember that beginning that babe's cry and mommy's lullaby ey will tell you, this all about parkinson's disease.

it is not so. This is when you think that you are about to die and some pains inside your heart starts to give you names...

each name
a pain in my ass.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Eyes Look At The Eyes

the room is crowded and the chairs are fully occupied what i see are mouths strange but i know sometimes how to make an abstract, sometimes i like to see the eyes as fishes swimming and silvery the eyelashes as waves and retina jellyfish, trying to cope up with the change of the seasons blue to pale peace to this entangled points of views

one day
i am caught unaware and i see eyes as eyes and there is this meeting that shakes my whole being it is joy and i savor every minute of it there is this smile that seem to last forever and i look at it for a very long time like i have known what eternity is infatuation with youth that must be that, i am melting before some feet my hands wanting to reach for another set of hands asking for help what to do with love disappearing to the face of my small earth thin air

i am breathing it i am breathing it mercilessly

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Flowers Bloom

when the flowers bloom
do not wait
till they wilt their petals falling on your feet
do not take much of the time witnessing such death
for at the end
of this cycle
when all the petals have fallen and what is left to see is just an empty sepal and a very lonely stalk you shall be reminded of your own you shall be next, the season waits

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Fulfillment Of A Dream Is Inside Another Dream

when the fulfillment of a dream is inside another dream who wants to wake up?
do you?

i don't,

just like this morning, when i wake up finding myself hanging in the middle of a wet dream such sweet dream

almost like another lengthy foreplay less the ejaculation.

the whole day becomes so bad like the winter inside my dream and i am not having anything on yet.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Heavy Clouds Of Black Come when those dark heavy clouds finally come on my roof i will not think anymore of any lamentation

i will not think of the threats that a heavy flood may come and take away my house
and everything

i will change my point of view this angle of sight

i will take sides with the way the trees and the flowers look at its coming

i will think about the growth of leaves the spreading of the roots the blooming of the buds the fruiting of the flowers and the ripening
and the lusciousness and the sweetness of life beyond the dark, heavy clouds beyond the rain and the flood

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Last Petal Falls

the cloud turns pale
when the last petal falls
the sun signed out darkness becomes a blanket to bury
the dead
scarlet then gray

the wind from the sea sings the song of the conch my ear hears the saddest song about another love

unrequited

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Lights Went Out

finally when the lights went out i see you
dissolving in darkness like a very faint light moving away from me a firefly
and then simply a flicker and then i forget

everything
and then i close my eyes wipe a tear
and forced myself to sleep because you are no longer by my side

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Lonely People Come To Your House

remember
misery seeks company

sorrow shared
is half the
sorrow

happiness shared is twice as many

so welcome all the lonely people into your house
a lonely soul
taking shelter into your happy soul
is not the lonely soul
anymore

loneliness adopted
becomes a happy kid.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Love Is About To Melt

for the things that you conceal
i console

for those which you want to save
let me help conceal
let us help them heal

i've seen your latest post in facebook
a picture of one hugging the other arms tight around the body of one who is choked by
love

i like that smile
full of hope like beer bubbling to life
in a mug
cold as ice

it is alright
i understand how is it to feel that love is about to be gone

i was there
i can relate but i survived
somehow
i think i know now how i will join you in that fantasy

how can love grow so cold
despite the
tropical conditions of the
heart?
tonight i will wait for you in the usual place
i got beer Red Horse ready to kick us out of our mutual sorrows.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Mad Boy Hurls A Fist Of Stone At the sparrows fly together like a big boulder of rock from the barren rice field to the other side of the road and like a big brown blanket hover on a patch of green bushes beside a dilapidated house there little birds are so strong and i have never seen them splintered like a window glass shattered when the mad boy hurls a fist of stone at the center of its shadow.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Magic Is Gone

when the magician is gone (hence the magic goes with him)
when the magic is gone
it is easy

leave, it is not your show they will close the room and it will be dark there will be no one there

it is simple,
why don’t we buy another ticket and be back tomorrow night?

you're not available?
me too.

when the magic is gone
let it be.

it is that easy.
face reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Meek Hits The Bully Straight On His Head...

let us all clap our hands
for the meek
who has learned to shape his hand into a fist
and with a determined spirit
struck hard the head
of
that bully that blocked his way towards
home.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Morning Comes

when the morning comes
and you wake up first and i am still left naked beside these white stained cover sheets

you know i will follow you in the kitchen
where breakfast is ready prepared by your own hands

we look at each other
again this time
new eyes new memories
new anticipations

new love, new selves
new covenants
new promises

old memories,
revivals, reminiscings
we remember last night when the hugs were tighter when the sleep was sounder
than ever

what word will i say?
what word? will you tell me?

you hand it my coffee and you sip yours
no cup is cold
and the brew runs wild to the top of the ceiling

what word will i say?
our eyes speak.
we sip each other's presence.
the words are useless.
they must remain unspoken

we confess our love this morning. the words are useless.
they must remain unspoken
our hearts are full.

and then we smile. we sip our souls.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Morning Comes, And We Are Still Alive With Hope it is dark but shall we be afraid forever?

do we not know the promise of dawn the glory of the opening of morning?

it is dark, but it will not be dark forever we know that inside our hearts and we must stand with that hope

Look! darkness is fading and Oh! touch me i am still alive with you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Ordinary Man Proposes Love To You

when the ordinary man proposes love to you and you say no
for sure he does not insist he quits
for gone was the time when he will promise you
the moon and the stars
no one will believe it anyway for gone was the time when he kneels and worships you like the queen of the night honestly he has no time for such a sentimental romance you know very well
he cannot afford you even a brass ring he simply has no money he does not even have any work neither can he find any so if an ordinary man proposes
i love you
just say so if you love him so for time is of the essence and the cab is waiting you are bound
eloping.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Pen Sits Beside A Paper Doing Nothing

there is this time of the day when you sit and stare and think about nothing and so the pen merely places itself idly on the table beside a paper bland and blank

there is this emptiness that does not even speak for itself you cannot write it you cannot also write it off away from you no one speaks there except your thoughts

somehow you want to remember love it smiles at you
and then you spell the word regret always, and as usual, it comes late, makes you chew a memory it is bitter and of course, like what they do, you spit it out.

to where it lands, a beautiful flower grows

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Poet Speaks Of Injustice

inside the board room
i tried to speak the voices of discontent that somehow there is an injustice going
on
served on white platters everyone pretends to listen and i am confident no one shall add to whatever is said and one may say this man is not credible this man is saying something that we cannot comprehend and i give up close my mouth and let all these injustices go untreated like cancer

at that time when no one listens one feels true, i am but,
just a poet...

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Rain Comes

this i can tell to my nephew that when the rain comes all we do is listen to the rhythm of its own sound
there is music to every dripping rain at the gutters of our soul
there is this feeling of having to be with the cry of the world
to be wet with its tears to be divine
and pure

when the rain comes
there is the urge to dance under the sky to be one with the earth and rain as the link between the earth and the sky
our limbs as paths
our feet as thirsty roots our hands stretching
for more
of what is yet to come

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Rain Comes......

the rain comes suddenly it is the least expected and we have no umbrella and we curse the day, the sun for not coming when needed we stay indoors, savoring silence instead, and time is a walking stick, we want it to fly, but its wings are clipped like paper bills,

what can we do? we do not own this situation. Our suffering and impatience change us, we explore new ways,

you walk into the rain, and i follow, you look at the sky and drink drops, and you start to play and dance, and we begin to like what we are doing,

we befriend what we think are our enemies, we cannot go away from them, we join them, but we create a distance, a space, and we show that we are enjoying events despite,

we are wet, and happy, and the rain stops and we go back indoor, change clothes and make peace, make love,

make the most
of what is there.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Rain Stopped

it was when the rain stopped that you left me: i own the umbrella that you do not need now. You return it. It was when the rain stopped that you forget my name. My name is need. And what you need is love.
My name is necessity. But what you need is the luxury of honesty.

it was when the rain stopped that you were honest enough to say:
i do not need you. I do not love you.

and then it rains so hard again and you come knocking on my door. You are wet. You are cold.
You are shivering. You are trembling.

I look at you inside my house looking by the window. I hide behind the blue curtain. And i tell myself: I do not believe you anymore. And i ask myself:

How can i believe you again?

And then the rain stops.
And then you are gone.

And then i open the window.
And then i see the white dove flying and hovering near a tree beside my window.

And then i set my heart free.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Rain Stopped Falling

there is this heavy rain falling on top of your roof and it is so disturbing that you wake up and lock your windows to shut yourself away from the sounds of falling

but you cannot help worrying even when you cannot literally hear the sound of the falling rain you still imagine how they fall inside your mind as though you can hear every syllable that every needle of rain is pricking in your brain your ears

and your eyes still have the image of these series of fellings

that even if the rain finally stopped and you open your window to check in the middle of this time when morning cracks fromt the shutters of your windows you still think like crazy you hear the sound of the wind and it is like the sound of the falling rain

and even if the wind has left like a leaf flown to the eastern side
of your house
even if there is no shadow of the leaf anymore you hear your heart falling from your chest now you must accept

leaving.
now you must accept the pain.
do not deny it.

it is you that is falling out from the grace of her love.
it is you.
cry it out!
shout it!
it is you.!
it is you!
it is not the rain, it is not the wind, it is not the leaf that was blown away towards the eastern part of the is not the design of the house. it is not the purple curtains. it is not the lonely courtyard it is not the red bowl. it is not the tower.
it is not the blank sheets of paper.
it is not the bell.
it is not the winding stairs.
it is not the dirty garage.
it is not the scaffold.
it is not the white paint.
it is not the doorbell.
it is not the turbulence of the plane.
it is not the slap of the hand.
it is not the blue fan.
it is not the cellophance floating in the air and whirling in that corner a dead-end.

it is you! and that is the truth!
be calm now. wipe the tears.
try sleep and dream.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Rain Stops

when the rain stops
life becomes more miserable for those who are stranded with you and with whom you had already established the art of conversation

soon shall leave you and you are left with the memory of the rain which had given you company and now it stops and you are stricken with grief and this sense of being alone again

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Rat Finally Entered The Trap

it is when the rat finally finds itself
inside the trap
figuring out how to outsmart the incoming death
and torturer, it is

at this moment
when philosophizing
begins to begin.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Right Time Comes

when the right time comes
i will tell you that i love you

even when all our hairs have turned to gray even when all the gray hairs have gone away

but now my love
my lips are sealed
my hands are chained
i am inside this cell
my feet are gel

wait a while i am setting myself free help me find my claws my wings my eyes

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Rivers Run Dry

when the rivers run dry
the fishes die
the mosses turn brown the sands and pebbles enslaved by the sun
stare at the clouds looking for the mercy
of rain
the ferns wilt
and those birds and pigs that used to come and stop for a drink
are gone

whatever happens
on such a dryness
i keep faith
on this presence.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Romance Fades....

boredom finally arrives
laying itself in the blue sofa

still dressed
from the usual party it does not spread
its legs

the blanket covers
the rusty arms of
the bed

the shoes are sleepy on the carpeted floor
silence is
at this hour of the night
comforting

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Rooster Crows Again And Again

When i hear the cocking-crowing sounds of the rooster
nine or more times
earlier this morning of course, i remember St. Peter and i remember Christ and i remember myself and i remember you.

i am not saying that we belong to the category of liars
neither
shall i say that we are ever faithful to the second name that i we must not forget as above-mentioned.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Runners Stop I Keep On Running.

when they are fed up, i still munch.

when they declare everything as tiresome and telling me that i am one kind of impossible (lost and vengeful guy) i still go on being one raging and surging self like
a storm

for i don't really care.
I move and keep on moving for if i stay, and be still, i know what happens: i will
fall &

tumble down like a test tube, and if it is not my lucky day, i break into pieces and all of you
shall look at me with all dismay:

he is mad, he breaks when he is doing nothing. He is silent when everyone screams.
He leaves when everyone has arrived. And on a very cold day, he goes naked and then write a poem for summer.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Sacrifice Is Over

and then the time comes for the end of all our sacrifices when we decide to go
to the river
remove our clothes and dip our feet
on such coolness

when we finally take the last breath
and then plunge
ourselves
to its depth

when we see nothing not even
ourselves
as we close our eyes and face
the murkiness
of darkness
trying to find a little
light

shall we find eternal peace in the drowning
under the
cold water?

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Smoke Comes Out

when the smoke comes out
they are there to say that there is fire on the chimney
when the smoke is black they all say i have decided when the smoke is white they keep on praying since no one is chosen to lead the lost flock without their grazing ground during winter time

what if the smoke comes out from my eyes and the smoke is black and there is no fire in my heart?

what if i am lost? shall you care? please don't. I must tell you i am happier when left alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Son Makes The Mistake

when the son makes his mistakes the mother is always there to comfort him and lessen the pain and tell her son to continue what needs to be done the mother tells him the world is so big and wide and it will always understand the world is so big and so wide that there will always be a space for him and from there the son understands what love is: it starts from a loving mother and the son moves on to find a wife whose love like that of his mother must make him a real man since then.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Souls Come In

then we remember
i
too remember how grandmother was left home alone to care for herself

cranky, brittle bones, moving like a snail serving herself
with her own
porridge on such a cold rainy day in the village

i fully remember how she fell on a big basket
unable to rise from that big hole
of a casket seemingly

but mother did not really care as she was also with her business of daily living on how to make both ends
meet
with her five children

as father drowns himself
with his
heavy drinking somehow someone must make us all live
to draw a future
and this my friend is my version of what happens to our thoughts when some souls come in
on this
rainy day
of November

we light a candle for sadness
and it is not just
one.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Storms Come

when the storms of the day come your way

hide, and be safe
save yourself and be calm they will just pass away they're temporary

when the storm is over come out again from your hiding go out and smile and let the world be envious of you

you face the new sun and bathe again on the calm, blue sea sleep on the grass, gather the flowers that bloom along the way
watch all the butterflies fluttering listen to the songs of the birds and roam these patches of peace and savor every piece of serenity and beauty they are all yours

you own them you can hold them you are the ruler

at least, for the meantime that you are here

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Sun Rises Today From The East

what i will do
which i badly need to do is to go naked
on the rooftop of my house for my much missed
sunbathing

oh i like to watch the clouds watching me i always have that feeling of lustful mutuality.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Truth Is........

There is no place like America It is not hot like Manila

The parks are bigger and Clean
The food is cheap and
The snow is smooth
To my cheeks

I like the work here
In dollars I earn

I like Disneyland and Las Vegas

I like the independent lifestyle here (when the truth is he misses the Philippines, the paradise, the maids who cook for her, the tropical weather, the easy lifestyle, & he has yet to earn more money in the US to pay off his debts home)

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Two Faces Of Life Is Revealed And We Are Numbered

we are always together in this estrangement there is no entanglement of necks in fact there is the freedom of the ten fingers locks of hair can fall any moment
and without any regret at all we are always together in this
numbness
(do we have any choice?) we do not suffer neither do we have that innate and genuine joy
we are always in this together a journey to nowhere and when death comes gladly shall we welcome it
what is the use of this life
when neither sadness nor joy befriends us there is no fear in all these case closed.

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Well Spills Out Its Water

the well spills out water what was beneath
rose and everyone
even children touch
the surface

when once it was dry the hollowness
plays mystic to the wind the deep voices sing the notes of what was once interesting now we play on its waters as though there is nothing to know so unimportant

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Wings Are Gone...

it was never
the cliff but the rage of the storms
in the ocean

not the tower
perhaps you missed
the air that travels from end to end

do not be a star
you are not meant to be twinkling or on top of the black skies

it is the river
the one that you cannot hold in your hand

the worms climb the top of the mountain of worms one worm above the other

a butterfly rises above this mess
live for a day and become perfect when its wings are gone....

RIC S. BASTASA
When The Zipper Opens

when the zipper opens
a red bird comes out into the open but would not leave him it loves the nest of black weeds attracting a tongue

a pair of lips, wet with raindrops and honeydew

last night there was a reunion of shadows
the moon by the window was silent as snow

the following morning
his smile is as wide as the zipper of her bag.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Their Baby Came

we know what happens next they cut the bridges stay on the island
fortify their house
make their fence higher and add another room and put there the cradle lullaby is heard at night and after a year they all light the candle sing the birthday song have their picnic
so private and so alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
When There Are No More Stars At Night

your routine catches up with you

you sit on a chair
one night
you stare at the black skies

and there are
no stars

you imagine that fireflies
may soon come to please your dream
of lights

you imagine
that a moon
shall soon float
on the river

there is none
nothing happens
with your dream
for light

and then you dream
of another

drowsy you dream
you are asleep
you dream you
are dead

and true enough
you never thought of waking up
because there is
so much
there to be explored
to be understood

why some people
dream of sleep
dream of dying

why some people
do not talk anymore
and inside that dream you dream you are a poet and you see yourself: writing

simply because there are no more
stars giving light
to your dark nights

RIC S. BASTASA
When There Is No Help Coming...

(are you looking for the miracles that the skies could possibly give?

do not gaze too much to the stars they can make you cross-eyed for that is what fantasy does to its follower do you consult the zodiac animals?

what can a lion do but bite its prey where is the sun?

it is not there anymore it is not an all time giver it gets fed up to when afternoon comes it will stop comforting you not even a streak of light to guide you through the night and what about this darkness that sits beside you?

is there help coming?

the moon is not there yet it is still mourning for the recent death of its lover of light....

RIC S. BASTASA
When There Is Nothing More To Be Done...

got a call and she is dying,
whatever that means
dying to see me
or dying to die
it does not matter to me anymore now that i have burned all the bridges and made holes of those wooden boats and broke all the paddles what then is going to be done
as a matter of
last resort to save what she thinks is still valuable
inside our hearts

we are like those burned houses early dawn with nothing saved we see all the ashes and some smoke still clinging on the charred pieces of furniture and beams of the past

'there is nothing anymore' and i have not opted for those memorized prayers those usual offerings of chicken blood and pork or the newly hatched egg with a squeaking chick hoping that perhaps someday the root cause shall be known how the tree falls off and how the worms begin their feasts on our own stupidities.

RIC S. BASTASA
When There Is Nothing To Talk About

We feel, yes we feel each other’s thoughts
And there will be nothing to talk about, We understand what we mean with what We see and how we feel it, we do not Talk because words would be so empty, In such situations as these when we love And still love, words are unnecessary, With one glance with a little gaze,
And blink and quiver of your eyelashes
And how I flash a sudden wink, There is no need for words, we always Understand, willing to cater to what The other needs what to do this time Till the next, our hands still feel exactly Our wishes granted our dreams fulfilled So what is there to talk about, my love? .

RIC S. BASTASA
do not refuse a chance to be a hero, so on this day,
or tonight, when they call your name
go,
do not tarry, be ready with the raincoat and the flashlight
you just do not know what happens next they will take you to the place a house on the side of the forest at the foot of the mountain there is no fire there no smoke
nothing is cooked for supper there is a bleeding man and he is groaning in pain and they open the door and you enter with your black leather bag and they call you doctor
there is no ideology here nothing to talk about and you begin to take away the bullet that pierced his strong flesh in the arm and on his belly there is no anesthesia and so you put a red cloth on his mouth until he faints and then there is silence no song for the dead even you cannot sleep over this calling until you find light penetrating the holes of the roof it is already morning and they all left and you do not know where they are going a child with sharp eyes calls your name again he lead you to the exit point back to your old house in the subdivision where you live where your wife is waiting your breakfast is ready, your coffee cold.

RIC S. BASTASA
When They Got Married

he was 35 and she was 33 he confessed and she said yes they preferred a small chapel so there will be lesser guests enters the lady of discord hmmm she says this marriage will last for only two years the two will surely split reasons and more reasons but the lady has a story to tell she had pre-marital sex lived with her man for only a year and since then she hopped like lady grasshopper from one shrub to another

today we are on the twelfth year of being married and being just
together
and we think about this love that we want to last this is not about time anymore or marriage as an institution or what our friend and relatives may say this is not about the bed and board this is not about sex or compulsory support or the fear of having to face a family court for a legal separation or annulment of this union no, this is beyond all the predictions and patterns of a broken home

of today's phenomenon where separation had become a rule and we are but the few exceptions this had nothing to do with battered wives or henpecked husbands or flying frying pans and shattered wine glasses unanswered emails lonely breakfasts late dinners

concealed bank accounts unaccounted expenses
dreamhouses
and car change
and shortchanging
and hidden motives inheritance and succession dislike of poetry and thrown plants
and broken pots

dthis is not about desire anymore of bodies that wrinkle and shrink tthis is not about modelling not about a vision even of looking at ourselves with fear and forcing our eyes to a common direction dthis is about love it lasts and it takes us through time that trickles like rain and we do not even know for how long

we just love
being together to places where we have not been yet and back to places where we made memories and to this place where we are at home again this heart
us
today we invited the lady of discord she will come how i like to see her smile and i guess it must be dry

RIC S. BASTASA
When They Learned That Their Mother Has Cervical Cancer

stage III and the son says let us all do what we can to save her we take her to the best hospital in the city have chemotheraphy some radiation
ask for second opinions have the operation

and the daughter says let us try some quacks too, and the herbs and invoke the spirits of our ancestors to heal mother and the son-in-law has no word for this but in his mind he thinks: there is no hope for this let her live for the remaining moments and let death take her gently let her kiss her grandchildren a very gentle and sweet goodbye say something.

RIC S. BASTASA
When They Made Love Inside That Cramped Room...

when they made love that evening
they heard the sounds of the jungle: tiger mating birds on love calls
under the trees
above some elephants screaming
with joy
snakes hissing upon each body
rubbing rubbers

inside their ears
sounds of new winds fresh upon each leaf
on the forest trees.....

RIC S. BASTASA
When Things Are Too Obvious Like Grass On The Plains...

something that cannot be said is well contained too visible as obvious as grass spread on the plains as shining as the sun on the top of the hill why do you ask about something that you have already seen and even touched? what are you? are you a redundant phrase?

in times like these the stare is the star of our show feasting eyes on the surfaces of the skin on silent arms we rest our restlessness in here no preachers are allowed only spectators with discriminating tastes only those who are willing to die and redeem themselves with a raw smile sly and yet so full of the radiance of that first awe....

RIC S. BASTASA
When Things Become Ours Again

Whatever goodness you hold in your hands so carefully,
when you wish so much love,
yours and all yours so totally,
my companion and friend and lover for all seasons rain and sunshine
stare and dare,

you must always give away
without regret
in order for it to become yours
again

RIC S. BASTASA
When Things Go Wrong Babe

when things go wrong babe keep the code of silence do not trust the words that want to get out from the panic of your mouth take the safest step swallow your pride
keep the utmost vigilance of the walls and fences grip the rails and stay within the limits of your boundaries descend the stairs of vanity and open the doors and windows like the way you open your mind when things go wrong babe think of me, close your eyes hold me and feel me for in me arrogance is estranged in my heart is love unchanged

RIC S. BASTASA
When Things Which Should Have Been Simple Become Too Complicated sophistication is investigation. when things which should have been simple become too complicated because there is a reason for it you either have misunderstood it or it cannot be understood at all.

you probe like a pin to a flesh.

you bleed.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Time Clicks Upon A New Point Of View

if you think that poetry is free time, that is, you only do it because you have nothing to do you are wrong. It is at the top of the busy day when pressure becomes too much when you see the two hands of the clock in a race

when not one hand knows how to stop when it is about to have a broken knee when the numbers become like a gasoline meter

you stop a while touch your neck
rub a little balm of balsam or vick’s vaporub

you massage what hurts with the gentleness of your hands you run your fingers as though your vertebral column is a piano
you make music now
so gently

you free your fingers from that tired body face the monitor
free your mind
let loose the blue bird inside your mouth and let it sing

now, you have it
it clicks
the words begin to come out like hermit crabs from their borrowed houses made of rugged shells

RIC S. BASTASA
When Time Shrinks...

i have had
that round faced stone in my hand

i felt its potential for perfect
roundness

it was smooth and it could make a difference

it could be something greater
beyond itself
beyond the concealment
of my hand

i see time shrinking like a drying bubble
of rain
on the ground

and so i threw the stone
away

no one knew it
i was not that interested really about potentials
or about
perfection

time shrank
what is the use of hope?

RIC S. BASTASA
When Trust Is Gone

the self sometimes becomes a prison sometimes to a solitude that is bitter
alone with sad thoughts and bitter memories as constant companion the mind that cohabits
a social skull soon becomes an alien upon itself not knowing each name for soon
what hurts rules and deprives those that still want to be whole of its parts
i, who is set aside,
finally say farewell,
i, who has no more place in this circle,
bid adieu
i make my own world
now fenced
away from you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Two Beards Converge

when two beards
indeed converge
tonight, at least
i have already
a hint about your name, the place where you live,
and the kind of
tongue that you
use. and just in case my lice
land in yours
and yours in mine please be considerate.

RIC S. BASTASA
when we are far away from each other at continent's length we want to reach each other's arms and when we cannot we always have someone some other cause to blame like the zodiac, or the alignment of the stars and the planets, or the society or even the structures like some falling pillars and blasted walls

but in truth when we meet and become so near like a dinner for two or a dance where our cheeks lean over each other we soon realize this feeling of i detest you and you detest me we soon realize, that this feeling of indifference has stayed within our hearts for truly we have identified with the world in pain and to take revenge for a sickness without cure we pretend we are humans missing another likeness. it happens, right there where we exchanged words we must accept, another relationship has ended and we in fact, really do not care less.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Are Frozen

you know about things
unspoken
not because we have not seen or touched them but because we have experienced how our touch destroys them
how our stares seduce them into us
how we have drawn them to our sides how they wished they live with us only to be left out under the rain on that dark night when cold begins to freeze the magnanimity
of our hands.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Are In It Together

when everything in you is complete when every hair, bone, cartilage, nail, skin is in place
you do not anymore mind what is happening outside you be it the crumbling of a hill into one vast plain be it the eruption of a long extinct volcano be it the rising of the oceans and the covering of all earth be it the horrible scream and the fading gradually of silence

you stand still watch everything and then be one with the chaos and the pandemonium
be one with peace
and the eternal silence

when we are in it together
will something ever matter?

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Are Left Alone

it was in macau
when we were finally left on our own waiting till three o’clock with instruction to proceed to gate 11

no one was there except the two of us waiting on cold seats and i was figuring out
where to go
while you simply
hold my hand
lay your head on my shoulder
and then

you start to whistle
a love song

it was a little dark when the boat finally came

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Are Left Alone In The House

just you and me i am 48 and you will be 45 the next day and we are left alone because they all have to be in their homes her mother is sick and she must bring money on the other hand, she is quitting her job and leave us for good to join her lover in the city, her last chance to be married at 36 these domestic help helping themselves to be not like us, loners consumed by the weariness of our flesh for years and years the hours filled with emptiness i can hear the sound of the clock ticking so slowly like the fins of an old goldfish in the glass bowl i bought for you on the day of our marriage today we are left alone in the house you keep yourself busy washing the dishes drying the laundry in the yard figuring out that you may rush again the next minute it will rain the cloud darkens

i keep choosing my words, thinking the idea of this union us for 24 years, just us, just us and nobody else in the same house, the same furnitures unbroken feet and unstained in the living room, where the same color of drapes are changed almost on the same months, the same seasons boredom, too much familiarity, the wear and tear of our gazes i call you from the kitchen, asking you to give me a glass of cold water and you complied like the woman who loves her man more than him loving her

i have more words to choose, more ideas to think, to trap, to keep, to smoothen and polish like a piece of wood sculpted to the form of a woman's beautiful body thank you i said, i thrive on cold water, all the days of my life, i take in the water that slides on my throat smooth like red rhum down to my soul, i could have asked you again if i had the courage, i ask myself if my love is strong if this will survive us, through the boring years that come and yet to come i did not have the courage to ask, if you still love me

with my balding head and wrinkling skin i got colder, i am sure, it is the water, half of the ice in the glass is completely melted.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Are Parted

i finally said that i am going away for good and silence fell like a heavy stone on the tiled floor

you did not look at me but then you started to cry your heart could not deny what we both felt you heaved a sigh
and i heard the loneliness of the room it is too obvious to ignore i could not take the last step away from you i could not close the door of parting

and so i went back retracing my steps back to your embrace i caressed your hair and kissed your cheeks and wiped away the coldness of your tears

we are meant for each other and no one shall ever divide us again.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Ask For Nothing More...

it is not that we all have what we want in life,
that will be pride and arrogance
it is just that we no longer look upon ourselves but in the world like meteors merely passing by and looking forward to its uncertain destination but not anxious anymore as to what happens next.

the world becomes a distant piece of blue marble.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Cry

when we cry
i see the image of the candle burning itself to illuminate what is left
in darkness

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Do Not Do What We Ought To

because you do not love it you carry it as a burden you promise yourself tomorrow this thing is done
this feeling is gone but because you hate getting over it it sticks like a leech in your skin
and you are
drained.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Do Nothing, A Philosophizing

did he tell you that even those who stand and wait also serve?

which means precisely that those who do nothing (also does something) that by doing nothing they also share

what you are thinking right now do we think that writing is doing something that thinking is also doing something?

what is it that which is nothing that we can do?
tell me.

everything is everything and it includes nothing actually.
everything embraces also nothing.

so when you do everything you also do what nothing is.
there is nothing that we can do. everything is here, including this 'nothing' do you really do nothing? try thinking some more. try doing nothing, if it is possible at all.

i tell you, it is not.
really, it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Feel So Weak....

at that moment when we feel so weak we do not remember anymore how warm was sunshine once how refreshing the winds how cool the leaves had been to the weary eyes that we have

as far as i remember all that i am thinking is the way towards home that home in my mind where i once have never been to.

RIC S. BASTASA
THE MOST important thing is the birth of that child. Unlike the rest, when it arrived here it only offered the happiness of its own silence. It came like a footfall upon a soft grass on the hill. THE SUN SOFT in its glow hid behind a castle. When the moon came that evening The stars danced. It was you, that child in the mother's arms the only moon in her eyes

BETWEEN all these hallowed layers of affections is distance, always distance, like pillars not meeting because if they do the House shall fall into bits, so many bits, like sands in the shores of your mind.

Time is always unforgiving. The sentences of wrinkles loosened our hold for each others' affections.

Goodbyes are too many. Pains are unaccountable. We pray that we must become forgetting species.

There is only one tomorrow left and we keep on asking for names, places, and dates.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Get Old My Friend

when we get old my friend when our mustaches and beards and hairs are as white as snow we meet on this part of the plain beside the red palm trees at the foot of this mountain we sit on the soft grass and i get my guitar and we sing a matt monroe song we shall serenade the stars and the moon deep in the cool night and we shall feel the brushes of gentle air on our skins and we shall smell the scent of the night flowers and the salty breeze.

i'll take the first voice and you take the second voice.

let us not talk about Rosario or Alicia, or Rosa or Maria, none of them has learned to live with us in any way.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Go To The Mountains

when we go to the mountains
we always feel the ease of our pains the lessening of our burdens the loosening of the ties that bind our necks and choke our throats

we shall be at the foot of the hills and feel the rivers running under our feet we feel we do not need the buffers of slippers our skins missing the touch of freshness the massaging of the stones the tickling of our nerves the green grasses spreading on the plains the cows grazing the eagles soaring high above us the goats smelling us like aliens the water buffaloes sniffing our city sweats

the natives dance an ethnic number some roasted pigs and yams and brown rice we speak of the wilderness the silence and the peace and the mountains are still listening to our stories: lost souls, destroyed habitats, the rape of nature

the murder of innocence the robbery of everything that used to be beautiful pure and simple

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Grow

when we grow
we actually change

we are like the sprouts of a bean slowly crawling wanting to see and
touch the sun,

we pretend not
to notice because time runs so slowly like cells unseen by us but keen and keep on gaining length and width like the way
we grow eyelids

and we extend our sights and smells, we find love and we embrace lust and we mix them like a kind of a bloody Mary drink,

or scotch on the rocks
and we face walls and we mumble as we begin to meet loneliness,
the spaces that spread like a disease; you and i, in all these, after a lovely night in a tangle of hair and intertwining of fingers

we face darkness
and walls and we begin to ask: what for?
we let the rain fall our roofs leak and our windows begin to open

we find separate paths and we argue and then we decide to take what we really want:

i long for this and you long for that; we take separate ways, and we say goodbye.

we write letters day to day until such time when the silence becomes like a boring hour and the letters are unread and we throw them on the river of time: floating, all the letters dissolving in the cold waters of forgetting.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Grow Old

when we grow old
when our hands begin to lose control to everything that we want to hold there is one part that refuses to go with the crowd it does not flow into weakness it is not silenced by indifference it does not succumb to hopelessness then all of them complain about its hardheadedness its irresponsibility

when i grow old and when i begin to forget it listen to its song it centers me to life

i lose myself
it mourns

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Grow Up?

we look down the road
and remember
all those things that used to tickle we giggle and soon we wake up the smiles do not serve any purpose anymore the stares and silence now control us we are numb

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Have Nothing....

as there are too many tiny little things
dripping from my hands
like sands,

like time seemingly without end like a road heading somewhere
and we are having no
gasoline

where can appreciation lie? where can worship be found?

it is only when there is less when time runs out when there is no more food and space is cut into pieces that we learn,

and learn that well enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Hide In The Open

i hide in the open
you see my body, but you will never see
what is in my mind,
we speak, i tell you what you want to hear and the world is perfectly at peace, what is fought is what is inside the monsters are there the unknown furies are in the heart what we cannot understand and what we cannot name reside there and have become inseparable or that they have become us, and we are threatened we tease them with sleep and we assure that sooner we shall forget and be happy again they face us and tell us we have been there even before you think every before you walk we live in your genetic codes and you cannot escape because we are embedded so i keep on hiding in the open that is where the grasses and the trees live where stars group at night where the moon floats on that silvery water i hide with you, and we hold hands and we kiss and we make love and in those deep moments we see the face of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Kiss

When we kiss
I hold your face and lift your lips
To my lips

We close our eyes
To see the place where we have not been Once

We plunge in the depths of the oceans
Of our emotions
The two of us
In the ecstasy beneath
On the surface of the silent floors

The place where we have not been Once
There we shall be free
From the chains of ourselves There we shall be one Heart beating for love

For life
There our pains are ours
There we shall meet again Not knowing
Who we are
Our names now forgotten

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Leave The Comfort And The Ease

The comfort and ease are what these windows and doors and beds of our house

we have all of these these comfort and ease

but the time has come to close all these and move towards mountains

far towards valleys and hills and cliffs and ravines where our feet are tested
where our minds are tortured by by our self-imposed
loneliness
by our self-chosen hardships to purify what is decaying
inside us

this is the only path to holiness
the way to light
to freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Made Love

i made love to a doctor of medicine
in cyberspace
sort of floating and swimming in black space feeling this black hole
within us
i felt like a stethoscope
hearing the beatings
of my heart
but she loves most and opts for this colonoscopy
thing
after the endoscopy prelude
i complained
because what i really wanted
is something like a bikini cut something frontal
not this pedal

whatever
but i felt lousy after when she said that even
in cyberspace
i must wear
condom.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Made Love This Morning

it was hormonal
brief
mechanical, no words are wasted, no lies, no promises no imagination at all about what is eternity

no fireworks, it was not a celebration of something else, we did not even kiss, we evaded any gaze, we pretended the usual eyes closed, not a moan, just plain rubbing and pressing and holding some parts of me and some parts of you tightly

and then we loosen the hold, you fall from a height, i stay as is keep my posture looking to the sky without stars light comes it from a hole of the window it is the beginning of day earling morning, and we are still the lazy ones feigning sleep as the maids tinker the kitchen & soon the sound of breakfast shall be signalled by a bell we do not care anymore when shall we ever learn not to keep pretending frankly speaking, i still have this pain of not ejaculating

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Make Love

when we make love
someone surrenders
it could be me at the prelude
as i promise you my thighs and arms
my everything

you pretend you believe me

and you take everything
i have

i pretend i have nothing
left
even my dreams
you shall take them even my last hope you shall have them

when everything is over i give you the last kiss i leave
you with nothing.

you surrender
pretense
i take with me
your truths.

you will say
you love me
now it is my time
to say

i don't.
When We Make Love (2)

when we make love
i remember a fruit blend of strawberry
and mango and melon
i like the ground ice inside my head
when i close my eyes
after we make love
i see blue skies and white herons flying

i hear the songs of angels i sense the world slowly revolving and then dissolving into a very hollow space in perfect silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Meet

when we meet and we talk i sit down with you not as your teacher but now i listen to the magnitude of your sorrow as your student in the realm of your emotions

i become a child wondering how you have grown in the bitterest of the conditions so full of regret still feeling the impact of the fall
and yet
you are still so beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Meet Again Sometime This Summer

i tell you, i do not like winters, and i do not wish to go where winter lies. I am intolerant of anything that freezes me, that thaws, that gives me frost, that bites like an ant, that solidifies me like refrigerator ice.

i like summers. Flowers blooming. Green grass spreading. Butterflies in different colors in the garden.
Bees just enough for the buzz. I love trees. I love rivers, and springs and creeks.

Bamboo trees beside the rocks beside the pebbles beside the river. I like the songs of the rivers. Lots of rivers.

When we meet again, i like it to be this summer.
of the hearts of the young on summer time.
Under the cool shades of the trees on summer nights.

I always remember summer g summer winds.
Flown hair. Drying pants and underwears. My legs exposed Beside the brook. I like being naked. I like being on top of everything.

With you, on you, by you, within you, in your mouth all over your face.
Oh summer breeze. See you. Feel you. Love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Meet Sometime In Your Island

when we meet sometime when the Great God so allows in your island in that house with blue windows
i wish to tell you that i do not wish to understand you i will ask no questions neither will i demand a reason for this and that all i want is simply to be with you feel you stroll along the shore with you hold your hands look at you without being querulous for in truth i only go for that which is there though it may not be marvelous or humorous or even hilarious

awareness and feeling a curiosity that need not kill the cat that old sense of awe the oneness of wonder

for i am myself and i do not demand anything

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Reach The Mountaintop

3000 steps up
we climb
we take the rope
beside a cliff
we keep our feet secure we keep our grip strong climbing this trail toward the mountaintop when we reach there
both of us
we see the whole city cars running like ants on its belly
people walking like small worms
the sun like a bulb
the trees like some feathers and the other mountains
bald like brownies
the sea is so blue
from far
the horizon bold like a departure
the boats sail away
to another island
the plane on a touchdown on the cemented pavement
near the shore
some green palms
on the river
look like leaves
of grass
some clouds we touch
cold to our hands 3000 steps up
one hour up to the sky
just to feel
this loneliness
we see what we want to see we feel what we want to feel then we go down again without a word
for ourselves
too tired
we console ourselves

that was solitude
we shall now talk about.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We See Each Other Again

away from the crowd
we step beyond the jambs of this door beyond the sills of these windows we stretch our minds and we in order to survive this madness shall pretend that we have never met i shall be in the hold of another arms and we shall kiss as we have long been lovers you will not glance or if you will you must pretend that you have never seen us you walk further and take another direction we too, shall do the same, but she will never notice why we take the same ride on the plane and you take the far look into the clouds and then it rains and i close the pane she is asleep and i begin talking to the nearby wall.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Shall Meet Again

i have storms within my head some thoughts are flown away and i am left with this usual emptiness that scares me no more must i tell you about it? i won't i know that you too have tornadoes inside your guts and i may prolong it with my own agonies to each his own, to suffer and then to be redeemed again by the strength of our silence when the calm day comes when we all walk with dignities intact perhaps we shall meet each other with a smile we sit upon a chair beside a round table facing the far horizon and we tell ourselves, 'oh we have traveled this far and we know we are still doing well' and then we sip our hot coffees and partake with our cookies over a very cold evening.

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Soar

our spirits sometimes soar we feel the wings of birds inside our hearts
we feel elated by the most simple thing of having seen a white butterfly hovering fluttering upon some tiny yellow flowers of the narra tree

when we close our eyes
when we see nothing at all when it is dark we begin to see how beautiful can everything be

oh, i do not have to travel far and wide
just to be be, just to be with us it is at the moment when our spirits sour into the vastness of our beings
that we become the universe itself wider than space
longer than time

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Thing That What We Think Is Right

It's skewed our view sometimes
selfish

we think the other is in love
with no other but
me,

silly, i've colored
a world

which in fact is colorless at all

black and white against the odds

super bland and scentless

after all, it can rain even in the midst of a drought where plants die because of

shock, because it's skewed when we think

and think that what we think is right....

RIC S. BASTASA
When We Visit Him

when we visit him today he says his heart leaps with joy and we hug him old man Gil and he tells me about my poetry

about the anonymous the house without a resident the world without color the reason without a cause the nothingness of space
and death

he says i am morbid though beautiful
he feels it
and tears start flowing from his eyes his Mechong is dead his one and only beloved since then the dead poem of mine written a long long time ago has assumed its desired shape and now he understands it

RIC S. BASTASA
When West Is West

The noise of your traffic
The acid in your rain
The hole in the ozone
The murders in your malls
The politics of your doubletalk

The wars you rage outside your borders The threats you think you have

That you inflict to violence with violence The consumerism the commercialism The capitalism that is always capitalism

You are the west and will always be
The west the west in haste and noise.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Alone You Become A Thinker

when you are alone
you become a thinker

and then you begin loving it when you are alone and deeply you sink deeper into another depth and you feel not like a river anymore but an ocean where a stone falls silently and remains silent throughout a finished journey nothing is there but you are not drowned in that nothingness albeit you feel like a filled well with water overflowing no one hears you but you never ask.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Appreciated

you are alone
under a moon
and the wind keeps
passing by not minding

blue moon
you talk to the moon
you sing the blue moon but the moon does not listen then you hear a whisper from the farthest star the tiniest star there is the whisper so faint like its glitter hinting that you may be sad but you're so beautiful just that just that then you feel that she's beside you

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Back With Us Somehow

the night's rain was heavy
no flood somehow
in the morning

i wake up
step outside the door
to see
our wet earth

dew on the leaves
of trees
gleaming stones on the yard
cold air and cleansed world

this feeling of newness a rebirth from tears
you should have
felt it too well when you are back home with us
somehow

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Gone

it is only
when you are gone
when you
cannot be reached
anymore
that they begin
to know your presence
as an irony

a field of absence
they now think of you as the wind.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Gone I Must Survive

when you are gone
i must find a way to find myself another way another way of looking at an old house
another style of opening the same door

shaping my lips to utter the same word
in a manner that despite the pain another lovely poem
must be written

i shall wake at a different time and open the window that you used to open for me i will look for the stars again on a brighter flicker on a sweeter twinkle

i must survive
i am still alive

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Hiding Something

you hear
a clicking of the knob
someone
is opening the door

and then
you rush to save yourself you suddenly
close all your windows

when everything appears
to you
you pretend you are doing
nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Lost You Are Not Alone

the tension lies in isolation when you take things all alone and there is no knowing that out there when you are lost and so preoccupied with the fear of being lost with a little light even a flicker

you could have seen a hundred or more faces looking for themselves you could have known that there are too many of us

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Near Me

when you are near me
i become tongue-tied, and i am lost in the maze of my desire, my groins pulsate, wanting to move nearer, my hands are ready posing to hold, my neck bends a little giving in to the incantations of my mouth move closer, move closer smell, kiss, taste, caress, hold, embrace, do not shy away, be the man you want to be,
brake the law, there is always a kind and gentle justification, love has its own reasons, the heart speaks & understands the mind becomes so silent and giving my blood rises my cartilages stiffens, my arms grow strong, my lips are wet, my teeth wanting to chew, my throat swallows a load of fluid, i am thirsty, i am hungry, for you what a shame, my whole body rebels my eyes are shedding tears, my hands slap my cheeks, my calf surrenders and suddenly runs, with my ankle and my knees all my feet walk away

this is not for me, and i am not me.
my will is strong, my head stands high,
i go away, breathe deeply,
and heave a s, i say at the end.
i am strong. I did not do any wrong.
When You Are On Top

when you are on top
you see a very tiny world below you people are dusts lands are patches of colors roads mere lines

you realize how foolish you are to believe that it is the best place you can ever have

you learn to forgive the hazards of distances you accept there is more to land or colors

or pebbles

what strikes you most is the dusty feeling
of humanity

the wind brings you a layer of brownish softness in your skin something lands in your arm

but then you
dust it off

there is a hope that you can finally understand what is this
all about

time always makes hushes in your hair
you comb
doubts with your fingers

but your ears are stubborn listening to
the noise in the moistened lyrics of their songs

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are On Vacation

here i take a walk in the morning by the sea

the talisay trees are booming with green leaves

at the roof tops of the resort is a backdrop of mountains with fog as dress

the horizon is light blue the kayaks are colorfully alined a white child rides on a swing a thin lady is talking his white poodle for a walk

sea breeze touches your cheeks the sound of the waves calm and soothing

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Rejected

When finally you are rejected Just go, don’t feel busted Find another place
Be with someone else
Forget the scar Whatever you are

Go to a place Where you are an ace
Where you smell the air Of love everywhere

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Sleeping

i look carefully at the restive pose, hands on the side, the head inclined towards the window the breathing breast is as calm as the sunset sea the eyelashes like a silk skirt on the side of the eye nothing covers you except the soft breeze your hair spreads like the gentleness of the night your naked feet rests on the white pillow your lips curl like a bow to its arrows love hits me again and i am vulnerable to its caresses, as i stand and hold the frame of this window out there is the wide wild world of my dreams where i do not belong anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are Too Tired

the mind does not complain if the socks and the shoes are still stuck your toes without air keeps on breathing in the darkness of your early dreams

sleeps takes you with your clothes on someone beside you
keeps company and in the middle of your conversation
you do not remember if a kiss is planted on your forehead or your hair or your neck

or was it on your lips?
your eyes close
you do not mind if the lights are still waking

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Are With Them

the guy beside you
is cross-eyed, and he is lonely, and he lives alone in his house with his puppy and he asks you where he can buy the best dogfood in this little town, sitting beside this guy is a short, fat man, and he is a philosopher, and he is ugly and his belly is as big as a baby whale, and he is asking if there is a way to find happiness along this famous beach resort both of them are projecting the idea that they are not happy and that they are looking for a way to get happiness to know where it can be found, he did not find it with his puppy and neither did the other one find in the complicated philosophical precepts we are seated inside a bar and it is six o'clock in the evening we are looking over the sea separated by this glass wall i remove my shorts and shirt, i keep my white swimming trunk on and i told them: let us have a plunge in the cool waters of the blue sea.

i do not have a puppy and i am tired of any philosophical discussion.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Arrive Late In My Life

i was in the garden chasing some butterflies my hat on my left hat the sun was about to set you called my name and i fell down the hill the butterflies escaping free i rose up to see my whole world change i am limping but i am happy.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Arrive Today

when you arrive today
there is no surprise except for the reason that i have not taken any lunch simply because i still have more poems to write, not about you or her,
it is all about an emptiness that lingers so lovingly inside my ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Ask About Her Sorry But She Already Left your question must fall away without an answer

she already left two days ago or perhaps she knew about your question and she did not like it i guess so, but i never asked her she was too fragile for anything like your poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Ask Me To Read Your Poem

There is this gleaming brightness Inside my mind
This momentary flash of light
A short flicker
My eyes are shiny looking wet with tears
The page glistens
The words move
To and fro and I have predicted where they all stop Frozen and steady still like mannequins I throw my glance like a ping-pong ball Bouncing back
I only peeked in fact
I have not seen anything interesting
The two poems
The poem you write that you ask me to read
Is the same poem I wrote recently How come?
There is a tiny, quick flash of light Inside my mind
Did it come from the same God?
We need to sit and talk To discuss the sameness of our boredoms

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Ask Me To Utter The Words

when you ask me to utter the words

i love you

i only say yes, the three letters mean a lot to me they must only be said once the rest who must say them over and over again shall only be my kisses, my hugs, my way of making love with you morning noon and nighttime till death do us part

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Ask Whether I Am Okay

when you ask that question many things come into my mind too

'are you okay? ' such strikes my mind and i retort
with 'why do you ask? '

we live in a mirror world we project

who we are
what we are
where are we going?

your loneliness mirrors
mine
you reflect light
to my mirror

i like to shine like diamond
but i am not

i am dawn fading
and the day does not recognize me

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Become Rare...

perhaps it is because of that feeling that you are rejected or jilted that makes you a sort of a rare appearance to the limelight of my cares
and my attention

perhaps it is the realization that love is not at all present on those times.
that what was there was only a temporary knowing to let time pass, to while the hours away, to seal those emptiness, to cover a mistake,
to escape from a harsh reality, to break some promises to hide,
and for the meantime molt hibernate
like a mud-fish
waiting for the correct season and be plenty and present all over again

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Become....

the big wide plate
unblemished

emptiness spreading like blanket upon a green patch under the trees below the heavens

beside the clouds you dance samsara

you look beautiful with those laces

as the air blows your hair as the darkness begins to infiltrate nerves sing

flesh retires on the floor as you become my roof my window.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Begin A War

when you begin a war
and start it now do not discount the possibility that you too
like any other human being gets hurt captured tortured and even die without any name to the vulture in that desert eventually as an unexpected eventuality, an added casualty
to the war
that you have just began to wage on this page of history who shall soon solely decide the guilty without discounting the possibility that i could only be you
the guilty one
the sore
loser

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Begin To Speak With Your Heart

after dinner my wife leaves to pray inside our room you have no plan leaving the night is deep and dark outside we sit on the grass and you are trying to cope up with softness looking for some tiny stars above us you talk i have always prepared myself to listen to your stories and your poems always sad and dedicated to those who are dying but still wanting to breathe

you sigh you talk about a name he is your son and your minds are two poles apart you want to touch him like a very dear friend

but he already lives in another world in a mind he calls his own at such a very young age you remember a big river meeting this big rock in the middle they parted ways like a paper that you cut and crumple you have more to reveal but my wife has switched off the light in her room and you understand this place is not yours to shed your tears now you must go and find your son again his heart his mind....

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Cannot Find The Reason Still How Can You Sleep?

tired
the whole day
works
me like a horse

facing the monitor
for a poem
i rest my hands
close my eyes

still facing the monitor trying
to survive

when you cannot
find the reason still how can you sleep?

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Cannot Put The Cigaretter Butts Inside The Ashtray

BY now you must realize
that it is time to change
for the better
you must
quit.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Come Back

before you go
you put three things just three things
on the table of your room a red rose, a yellow mongol pencil, a nail cutter,

a nail cutter is nothing but when you come back you find it missing.

you think about the nail cutter that ordinary nail cutter that you can buy at anytime
in any store,

it is not there anymore, the red rose wilted and the yellow mongol pencil is untouched.

you still think about the nail cutter where could it be? who took it?

your world revolves now around the missing nail cutter.

it is like loving an ordinary person, who is now
missing.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Come Back What You See Are Trees

Flowers

the seeds you sowed sprouted the cracks of the soil
gone

when you come back what you see are trees
flowers

on the bark clings the vines and the orchids their roots sticking which used the years
well

the idle woman from her sleep walks around the place and notices that there must be changes for what she does not like roots and trees and vines
all these are the possible ruins of her past she makes the decisions now and everything you work for those seeds and stones in their places uprooted

in this world the madness continues the destroyers prevail and those who work hard keeps on going away to start anew

sowing the seeds, growing those trees, letting the vines grow the roots still wanting to touch the skies

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Come Inside My House

you come without knocking the door is closed and i am lying on my bed
the windows are open
and to my surprise you are here sitting on a chair beside me you look at me and i look at you too we do not talk for you are very silent they tell me about you long before even when i was younger then now i agree about how you look your eyes are gentle your presence comforting to my aches and loneliness it is our first meeting today and i have nothing to say you come upon authority of my Creator and so on your wide black wings i shall take my first and last ride gently i must go and fly with you to the place reserved by my destiny.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Cry

when you cry and when you think that there is something wrong with life you throw away everything from a to z you erase every writing on the wall you want to lose yourself at the end yet somehow you achieve nothing you are still here and even if the walls have become blank still they stand on certain heights before your feet.

you still have to stare at them and figure out the reasons of their manners.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Cut The Branch Of Lust

it is when you step out from that road of desire
that you feel
nobility

when you cut the branch of
lust
and throw it away that you begin to grow like
a bud

when tendrils finally find their way out to a tunnel of a window and rest
on the arms of the sun
light
this morning

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Decide A Case.....

in deciding a case
you remove the colors of a painting
until what is left is the sketch of pure lines curving and then straightened
in a tightjacket
you capture the truth which once had gone mad.

you synthesize
throw away all those
from where the real sap comes
from.....

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Decide To Be Just Yourself

when do you decide to be just all alone? when the rest are out on their own seeking pleasure and their vested interests veiled by their supposed kindness
you give up
friendship and camaraderie following instead your own light like a star alone on its dark paths still lighting itself
despite.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Define A Thing

when you define
a thing, you limit it, it is like fencing
your garden
the garden becomes a set of exclusive flowers, and anything not like it becomes a weed, and anything that moves
becomes a pest

it is not that you do not define, we do it sometimes
only to understand the limits of
understanding,

but we must be open
to other possibilities of a garden,
a garden of stones
a garden of sand
of mud, of water
a fountain, a garden of winds, of clouds

a garden of memories
like a poem
for instance, a garden
of words,
words with arms open
to the magic of further creation
words still trying to define themselves
in the garden
of the unknown
When You Die

let nothing bewilder or surprise you let no one worry about what happens after the last stone is thrown when the first grass creeps above you
she has a job of her own the benefits of insurance the house and the lawn and the nice garden
she knows now how to forget

you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Do Not Talk To Me Anymore

i can always pretend that i am one of those leaves on that big tree not missing the coming of the wind merely hanging in there thinking that soon
with or without you everything falls off
anyway

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Dream They Dream With You Too

when you rest everything seems to be at rest with you
too

the bed is so silent with the blankets and the pillows are at home with the cases when you dream

you dream with you too the ceiling has a gift of skies blue colors diffusing in your mind the windows open themselves eyes waking inside the dream taking you to places that you have long desired ah, dreams make possible what you were not what you never did

and then you wake up refreshed
like a shrub receiving rain on the summer days
of June

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Exhort On A Certain Reality

it is this early morning when you begin to recall what you want to say last night it was something horrible so you decided after all
to keep it within yourself as another secret but then like a smoke from the chimney some things simply escape from their form and shape and show themselves to the open skies this very early morning you write what you refuse to say and then things reshape themselves in automation like clouds and then they drift away floating and there you let them go
you let them be themselves and here you are unattached like a button removed from its cloth.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Feel Nothing At The End

you come to hurt you and you allow pain to penetrate you

you grieve for a while to your helplessness
blame yourself blame the world

they come to hurt you
again and again
and pain at last has no more meaning

you take your revenge you show them your numbness you expose your palm you show them your body so they may hurt you some more someday they will find you with your new skin your new frame of mind unshattered unbeaten unbowing

then they will ask you your name and then they will know how you managed to smile and live like nothing happened you have redeemed what they have destroyed

you win.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Feel The Coming.....

there is a time when you feel the coming of the end of time, mind you, i may be subjective too subjective on this,
i may ask you to pause for a little
understanding
like: we go naked in bed and i do not feel anything and you sleep soundly and the rain comes in through a half-open window and i do not close it but i open the door and naked still i go outside the yard and it is too cold and i let the rain fall throughout my body and i know it is very cold at this hour of
the night
but as i am telling you when you feel the coming of the end of time you disregard cold
and warmth and yes that is it:

you feel nothing anymore
at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Fight Your Own War

there is a vision that haunts you that is,
that moment when you see yourself pushed against a wall against all
you are one,
you are whole, against all,
and you are pushed against a wall, so you defend yourself, dislodge what they force upon you that you are weak, dumb, and insufficient that you succumb to a dismal defeat, all your Waterloos showing, yet, you face them retaliate, injure, harm and hit so many shall be wounded and some shall realize that you do not just take oppression for granted somehow you know what defenses are you have a spear on one hand fire on the other you shoot, you put fire to burn
the windmills,
the donkey, and those strong feet that obstruct your way they will have second-thoughts this man is a fighter this man knows his ground we leave him alone
he is good.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Finally Decide To Write …

it is when a bird mistakes air for glass smashes its head forcefully falling dead on the side of the wall of the house it is when you watch death of a bird and you are so helpless like two broken wings

it is when you know you can fly
but you cannot
when the door is unlocked and yet you decide to stay in that room it is that fly trapped in a bottle in an open mouthed bottle but still could not figure out where to go

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Finally Find Your Hands Empty

on the day when you find your hands empty
and you have nothing to touch or grab when you feel
nothing
to say when you are more delighted on the silence of your solitude
there is no other choice but to close again
all your fingers like a baby curling back
to sleep
because now as you breathe
you have become full again.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Finally Find Your Peace Of Mind...

always remember
it is when you have nothing to write that you have finally find peace,

a tranquil river
does not have any fish to cause a ripple

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Finally Have Nothing

the soil has gone barren rivers run dry
blue clouds fade
the horizon is gray

your hands have nothing and it is this time when you can discern the ture color of your surrounding

when your eyes show the sleepless moment
you see them moving away
from you

you thank that moment when the pool becomes crystal
clear

even the dry leaves that leave sooner
shall tell the truth

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Finally Reveal What You Feel

the time has come
to tell her that she is hurting me

she didn't know

and when she knows finally she offers her hands of silence she wants to go for a while and know some more what has been wrong

with her

when she comes back i am ready for all the consequences of my
words

the doors are open and so are the windows the world is too beautiful to welcome me again to her place

i do not care anymore if it rains when the right time also for her to decide my shoes are ready and it is rocking itself to a new beat

i like to dance but i still have a little restraint respect is still there sticking like a moss which will still miss the wetness of the stones

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Finally Said No

IT IS you sobbing at the end saying NO
that this is enough that there is no way that you would push through with the suit

Your rights are violated.
On two counts of indignity
you surrender
to the Hills and find there your much wanted
peace.

case is dismissed.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Find It, Burn It....

even when i die, i will see to it
that you will not find
the truth

the truth is mind alone for my keeping
and i shall carry it
to my grave

i will not be hurt
anymore

and i do not wish to hurt
you with the truth that i shall
carry into my grave

when you find
it
destroy it
burn it do not attempt to know it

it is you
that i am afraid
of

because i
love you and i did not show it

and i did not tell you.....

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Find The Code

when you find the code of my secret do not tell me about it. Be silent as i have been silent. it is not my own making, it has been there. i have nothing to do with it, it has been embedded to the inner skin of my birth. Blame me if you will. Tell me i am the dirt of the earth.
it does not matter.
it is my duty to breathe. I take in the air and fill my lungs.
I nourish this body. This is all i have.
I am not mine. Neither do i belong to you.
Someone put me here and he does not tell me who he is.
Or where i come from.
I grow like a tree without my own mind.
I spread like the moss, without my volition.
I have no direction like the monsoon wind.
I have no light like the sun.
I do not borrow any like the moon.
I float like any cloud. And i will not complain.
This is myself. I do not even know now what this means.
I am alive. That is what i only know.
I will die. That is what i can see with the rest of those who like me are innocent of our own crimes.

Judge me. I shall have no ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Give

do not let your hand
know

when you
forgive
do not even give hint
to the protests of your mind

touch
the malefactor
with the slightest
sigh
of your forgetting

and let him go
like he never did any wrong
to you

and tell him
he must do the same
to the one who also harms
him

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Give Up Everything In The Name Of Love

here the heart reigns the mind shuts up
the soul rises to the sky and what is left of me is nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Go Away

when you go away
be fair, be frank, tell us why you leave us tell us if we deserve to be given this silence
of the dead

do not leave us with guilt, leave us with dignity and pride leave us like we are your equal your brother your sister we have no more tears for all those

and these years we suffer too we also dread
we also fear we also have tearglands that become dry like the well where we all take our drinking water

we have suffered so much and here you are leaving us simply because you too do not like it here...

thanks, wish us peace and love wish us to go on living we still love you just the same in fact, we still know what forever means

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Grieve

when you grieve upon the death of your beloved you only grieve upon yourself if you only try to look around you they do not believe in the sorrow of your grieving the birds still play with their wings and sing their fledgelings take a bath in the fountains and preoccupies themselves with the art of flying the flowers still bloom and leaves greener as ever the seeds sprout the twigs grow another inch the trees still look for the rays of the sun the sea remain faithful to the accommodation of the waves the winds still blow the sails of ships that arrive and leave the port the seagulls keep their gaze on the school of fish the fishermen keep watch for the spot to throw their nets the children on the beach play as their mothers watch with glee do not be overwhelmed with what you feel soon the sad feelings on fleets shall flee as flitting as they must be take your time watch the world in locomotion prepare your heart, i know, i wait, for your emotion. for soon, it must beat for me, to you i pray.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Have Done Your Best

when you have done your best
and they all begin to like your art
your ways and what you want to become when they also want to become like you when you tell them now where to go and what to do when they are now at home with themselves in their own chosen climates and houses when they have understood their fears and learned to live with their longings when they have learned the power of laughter
when they have learned to dream when they have learned how to talk to a tree,

it is time for you to go you have freed them all from their shackles you have taught them how to fish

it is time for you to go your presence has become useless it is now time to go human reconstructor.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Have Finally Parted....

when you left to the Great Divide

the house had since become empty,

the toys for the grandchild were taken to the other house, the carpets folded and hidden inside the storehouse those who were left felt that there was no need for more chairs

two or three will suffice some tables were sold and so are the extra knives and spoons and forks

classical music has become a no no,

the drapes had become so heavy and they too had to leave,

  yesterday i flew in there
  like a sparrow

  and witnessed the sadness of practically everything

the orchids wilted
  there were no more flowers on the side of the house
the pots kept nothing but dessert sands

i asked the youngest there and he said

that it seemed the heavens are angry

and they could not nothing about this
tragedy

soon there will be battles in their minds

and it will be endless he said

and then i left taking only pictures with me those that bore laughter when you were still their working queen

when everyone were once kids beside the magnificence of your ruffled skirt.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Have Nothing At All To Say

there are days of drudgery hours that drag, months that you think are too long like mountain trails that you feel you cannot really tread years that look like tall buildings without elevators you are stunned by all these you hold the railings of the stairs and wait and then you decide to just sit there the passers-by look at you could be something like disdain you let them stare at you and you do not stare back you look down the dusty floors this is the time when you have nothing at all to say hoping to find that peace within

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Have Nothing To Pay For Love At All.

early morning
you grumble
about love
saying that if it is given because you beg for it
do not receive it

it is not love but pity and pity is never
love

such a pride you have there
beggars do not choice they cannot they must receive what is given

if pity is given
take it
when love is not
there
do you have any choice at all?

take compassion
it is mercy's cousin.
take pity
it is love's neighbor.

if you need love
and it is not there
take other options.

pity at least helps when tomorrow is uncertain
when psychiatrists are nil
when you have nothing to pay for love
at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Have Nothing To Say But Simply Look At Things you feast upon facts.

and facts dance around you showing the best that they can be though not as beautiful
as always
for at times facts can be so damn hurting.

and when hurt
you feel the uselessness of words that like daggers may have only the function of stabbing you more

you bleed and you look at yourself so helplessly bleeding

you have nothing to say you remember only one thing and this they notice with glee

you keep on looking at the injury your hands busy wiping the blood

your mouth blowing the pain away hushing
soothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Have Nothing To Write About

the reader will notice it
you are
flat as flooded rice field bland as
burger without meat and salt
but you must
write
there is no choice
to make
to cover up nonsense

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Have Only Twenty Days To Live....

the numbers become bold and
black,
each number at first counts
a lot,
they diminish
until
you reach zero
but by the time you reach that number before
zero when you
count in reverse,
you have already grasped the full meaning
of each day, and when light shuts you
out,
you tell yourself
it does not matter, and you
recall,
what do i really have
here?

a body, a pair of
hands,
a face, a set of
teeth,
food, sex, love,
relationship,
filial pity,
properties, house
cups and saucers,

if they do not break they rot, or they degrade you, or they break away with you and you have spent
so much time
repairing, forgetting
and excluding,
popping out and
shrinking it,
weakened by all these,

zero becomes so
beautiful
it takes you off from so much hassle
from so much misery

upon summing out everything, everybody.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Hurt Me

when this happens
i shrug my shoulder
i do not mind
you, who hurt me
for you are too small
to be noticed
i am too numbed
to be hurt
no matter how hard
the blow
i cannot mind you
for you are as small as a flagellate
floating in the bacterial
river
i am a whale and i go everywhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Ignore Someone You Love

you keep a busy day a long list of things to do, some travels to make, some friends to entertain, barely there is no time for self,
caring for people that you barely know, just to forget,

you ignore the feeling you have for this someone to discard him like a letter you do not want to read anymore, but you cannot really, this someone that you love, you cannot just ignore, wherever you go, whatever you do, she shines in your heart like the sun where you hide in darkness so nobody sees you bleeding someone that you love is still the moon and the more you hide someone that you love becomes so many like the stars in the skies do not ignore someone that you love show your face show your love surrender and suffer let this someone that you love now take control

feel someone’s hand you shall be the water to drink the air to breath
the soul to someone's body

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Insist That There Is Nothing Wrong With Me

i wriggled and tried to loosen what grips my neck your hands are too strong for love and i get choked at times wanting to breathe the fresh air outside but you assure me this is how to love and your manner of loving terms of endearment you say deep from the heart of you i asked some questions to the stones and i must be so foolish waiting for the answers i tried the power of the birds and i got some answers slowly from their wings flights are good schemes one gets to meet the clouds and they tell you what drifting does what changing shapes are all about what freedom is there with the winds that come and go painlessly from west to east to north to south and sometimes not coming back anymore from where you once came i like wings and i do not want any stopovers since then i like their stories and i am listening still

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Leave The House

i have known a lot of reasons why you leave this house, you want to go shopping early morning when the malls are still closed, but i do not really mind, i think i understand (how is it when love starts to wane like a diminishing moon last night, giving its final light for the month)

you say you want to visit your mother you claim she is sick and dying, i do not really mind at all (you are afraid to face what faces us, this evident eyes of boredom staring at us like we are convicts of finally wanting to cease to love) still i will not mind, you leave again today the kitchen falls short of shrimps and fish there is no more lettuce and some black peppers and red juicy tomatoes, (you are now fond of enumerating things to me, you count your fingers and your toes and you do not see straight in my eyes) the olive oil is gone yesterday, i spend time alone watching the sunset on the boulevard (you are not with me) (i know you want to be preoccupied with something else some things that do not interest me) you are not coming home for a week or two, just a family emergency in the city where you live (did you tell me it is very noisy there?) i watch the sun die finally it is very peaceful outside i wait and take my seat calmly on the cold bench

by the sea
there is no moon tonight
there is only this cold wind from the sea from that distant island on the other side of this routinary existence touching my heart

it is the longing of distance, the past coming back to me the sea breeze still salty to my taste so cold, that i finally shiver and leave at once i cannot withstand this longing this night unlike the other nights is darker but i am still seeing the shadow of your beautiful face

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Let Out That Laughter

when you let out that laughter from your mouth tell me where it finally landed? did it fall on
the clouds
did it finally fall
on the river?
did it fall in the hole of your heart?
did it hide in that old well where we once whispered the validity
of our love?

let me see,
it in your palm

is it falling
and falling
still?

you are not
holding
it yet

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Lie

when you lie i choose not to notice i look at the surface of things all your parts become little things to me your eyes roll like marbles avoiding a one-on-one collision with my eyes

your tongue roll on your cheek like the creaking wheels of the pushcart
your hands do the martial arts kungfu, karate
or judo

you talk about curtains and veils and drapes and long gowns but still the skeleton on the closet makes some rattling sound escaping

like this snake that i cannot even imagine

i do not stop you keep on holding the pillars of your lies
tonight
Delilah, the other liar of your equal caliber shall cut your hair

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Love

when you love
always anticipate that somehow all things end the sunshine that comes after the rain the storm after a very peaceful morning some things do happen unexpectedly, if there is no leaving for sure there is also death have always a margin of error human as we are perfection is a big denial you make love to the full today let it be and then when things change such as an iced melting or a glass of coffee getting colder a touch not as warm as yesterday or the kiss that turned routinary a hug not so revolutionary as to degrade itself to something that is so ordinary do not be shocked as though you are into your first earthquake learn the ways of the wise take love as good as it lusters.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Love Me

When you love me

Do not talk about immortality

I am just a man

And like any other men

I make some lies

I have lots of alibis

=========

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Love You Do Not Lose If You Only Will To Keep It

when you love
when you love deeply and truly like you have placed everything in you inside a small bowl so fragile, breakable and perishable shiny piece, porcelain white, unstained, or a fruit glossy for the moment or a flower blooming only for a day like the way he loves you like the way he changes his mind after you have given it all when love is pronounced dead on arrival do not weep

do not scream do not ever utter a word fit for sorrow and departure keep the love that you still want everlasting depth in your heart that love still clings and still works for your delight be selfish on this, and be so private do not give that up as a nightmare keep it as a dream always and deep in your heart you have so much to gain as a memory that shall last forever and in this way

you have never lost

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Love, Love

when you love
love, do not think of any other thing like a disease HIV, cervical cancer, hepatitis STD,
when you love
love with all your heart kiss the leprosy in her heart hug the virus on her breast love, love, love with all your heart make love with love and savor the moment that love has offered every drop...every moment...every ecstasy...
ever

when i love, i always love, i set aside the mind i take everything at heart i refuse to think about the hurt
the future mess
the possibility of errors i am blind
i just touch
and feel my way all through this maze and when love is gone if ever be

i take all the hurt, the blame, the regrets it is love in me, it is this self-annihilation this dying upon oneself for the other this death that gives my redemption, my resurrection

it is love
and not the thought of love the love that is real that dies upon itself only to be born again When You Move Into A Place

such a lapse happens, when you move into a place
open the door
and without asking any questions you finally find yourself estranged.

the server of course does not know you
but just the same
out of ignorance serves you tea and then you awaken of that fact this is not my place i am meant for some other else you finish that tea look outside and then pack yourself like a cassette and then you move out and you find at last what freedom means.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Read A Poem Do Not Expect Too Much

when you read a poem do not expect too much from every word

my words too falter and fall short of strength like the runner who always wins his sprint and now in his worst state mourns for his knee which is broken

my images too wilt like some red roses that a lover offered once to his true love but now deserted and looks at them in the state of dryness when you read this poem do not therefore expect too much this is just a sigh looking for an opening in the crevices of an understanding heart this poem is just a mirror and you will be the face who must give your smile

the light from the window that shall provide the glimmer

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Read This

when you read this
poem, i am letting you know that i still care, when you continue reading on the next line
you are letting me know what i still know that you still care for me too and then you are angry about how presumptuous can i be and so i make another line and another line and if you continue reading more of these lines in this poem
you are letting me know that you are still angry about my untimely departure that moment when love was still strong
when desire was at its peak and then you think things over how you have been unwittingly betrayed by my words and you keep on reflecting if these lines still say the same meanings and i keep on writing more lines
hoping that you will understand what i have not said because i cannot say them because my self cannot lie by saying them to you because i do not wish to hurt you because i still love you and then i write lines that ask if you still love me but then i must put an end to all these useless writing time has spoken
as the lines of fate and destiny still have it
we were never meant for
each other
the love is there
the bodies still alive
our hands never reach
till then
perhaps in the next life at the right moment perhaps when our parallel lives meet at some point
of convergence
and as you read let me put the last line: goodbye May God make us
meet and love again.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Read This Poem

when you read this poem silently like a prayer written on the wall of an ancient structure and then when you pause upon a word and begin to ponder
like ' what is this poem really trying to say? ' or ' does this poem have in some way something to inform me or touch me or simply waste my time? ' rest assured this poem has made you phrase some questions not about you or about me alone but whether you believe it or not this poem has become a bridge between us taking the shape of a rainbow between two islands and in a moment before you begin to figure it out or even know it it is gone like a sigh passing you by without any significance and not worth remembering but once after you have read till the end once there was this poem and it seems to have no meaning at all except a task

a journey that you have taken arriving at nowhere and giving you the essence of nothing.
When You Receive No For An Answer

i have seen how some people react when they receive no for an answer. The child, he cries so loud, and runs amok, and puts himself on the ground and dirties himself with the grass and mud. Vengeful of his mother who says no he cannot have the toy gun.

The teen-age boy who receives no for his love proposal goes to a certain joint and smokes pot and drinks hard liquor to forget. He whirls in space and loses himself. To forget. To numb his senses. To kill the pain.

The middle aged employee who gets fired. The job applicant who never gets hired. The loyal employee denied of an promotion. They get no for an answer and they roam the streets. They go fast and bang themselves on hard walls. They are in the normal bad moods and get hard to deal with. Outbursts of anger. Denial. Depression. Shut. They shut their doors. They do not open other windows. They do not find the light at the end of their dark tunnels. They do not see birds that fly and lead them to another island. They do not bother about the comets and the wishes of the star that sometimes falls out unexpectedly on dark nights. Lonely corners. Surrender.

Cold and damp. And defeat.

Some however still manage to jump over the other side of the fence. The greener pastures of other dreams hidden by the line of mountains. The hidden lakes on the valleys. The rainbow that comes when you experiene the rain.

Some however simply wait. And while waiting for the right season for them

They just sit there. Gaze at the stars. Paint the clouds. Some still bother to write Poetry.

And they really make a difference. Like now. You read. I write.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Return

when you return
you are merely a thought that at any time
i can always ignore

time is my ally now and with the magic of its wings i can fly with it away from you and it is only when i decide to come back

that you too
shall return to me

time is teaching me
to be in control now what goes out and what comes in now i shall decide

a long time ago
i was in the prison of your hands always following the dictates of your whims

i was lonely and miserable.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Said That Revenge Is Not Your Cup Of Tea

i know what you simply mean: revenge is a jar
for you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Say Diamond

when you say diamond
i do not imagine the luxuries of the glittery world where you live it is all yours, through and through, and somehow
i have never been there and i do not wish to dream to live there
for once
for that cannot be in fact, i live in the world of the tatters and the pebbles so silent and deep in their cursed slumbers, when you say diamond i imagine faces those that i see everyday in you those that deceive and those that pretend not to hurt but those that kill us all slowly to the happy death that you wish to inflict upon us i never like it, and i never like you but here we are, under one roof of the world they shall proclaim the greatness of your value and i shall keep on keeping the lies about your truths.

for why should i be a hero? mortal am i,
and i am not yet ready to die.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Say Goodbye

as you say it
so shall it be done
the word shall speak
for itself

res ipsa loquitur

you shall embrace
a new self again like a creature's way of shedding its skin

like the seasons
like the way everything blooms anew like the flowers

like the wilting of the petals and the rotting of the leaves the fungal deterioration of the roots

like life
like us

we shall venture anew to another world finding a new path where we shall not be hurt we shall have learned how to cut and cut clearly

no regret
you bet.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Say Yes To Me

when you say yes
to me
and i say
hurray!

ah! my world has become my world and your world has become my world too the mountains move the sun brightens and dances the moon keeps on smiling the stars keep on winking the grasses fill the emptiness the rivers sing

the seas keep on waving the clouds are not nimbus ah! whatever that be i know, that our world shall be as beautiful as we are meant to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Say You Love Me You Need Not Mean It

when you say you love me you need not mean it i do not demand that the love i get be pure nothing about its sanctity is a condition of my flesh i always understand how this world works how each creature finds a way to survive that is why i do not really demand much i do not even pay attention i do not weigh words because words are just words and sometimes they hurt

purposely

i do not demand that you mean it for there were many times when i also say them without any meaning at all let me tell once again: what 's love got to do with 'it'?

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Say....

when you say
i am yours
i shudder, and i make you know it with my goose-skin, for even from the beginning when i compromised
you with a kiss

when i made love
with you
after that night i have always told you: i am free and no one owns me

the sun and moon
and the stars
and all the planets
and galaxies
know that.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Speak In Whispers

when you speak
in whispers

to me

like some kind
of vespers

like some code
of the cicadas

i have
actually
second thoughts
listening

i am afraid i always remember

the kind of deaths
fit
for my godfather

lots of
little deaths
and i
ask, which
one

which one is the happy death?
When You Start To Dance

when you start to dance
infront of the mirror
reviewing all the details
of your longings

i feel alive too
now that you are with me asking me
to dance with you
to the music of life

of desire
of passion

to life to all past cares to all that we embrace of what is still left behind that we can still cherish no matter how slim
the chances
no matter how small the world that we still keep even if what is meaningful is nothing but our very own
sorrows

for tomorrows hesitant and trembling

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Start To Talk About Nothing

the moment you start to talk about nothing mind you, this nothing becomes something and this something becomes something more like a raindropp falling becoming a worm the worm becoming a fish the fish becoming a bird the bird becoming a man smaller ones taking bigger shapes until it becomes a part of you until it becomes you until it becomes something bigger than you all it takes is just a simple beginning and you making meaning shaping bigger things more than yourself more than you can ever think of at the end

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Step Into My Garden

when you step in my garden of earth
water
and fire

you are the woman there looking softly daintily whispering to the cherry blossoms

that now they must bloom because love is here and for the moment
it will be full
whole,

stay there
and let the cherry blossoms take a moment with you in excitement
some of them dance with the wind and sadly now you shall watch them softly
daintily falling like some tiny white butterflies still learning how to flutter......................

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Touch Me

when you touch me
something in me grows like a mustard

and then as Jesus once said the mustard becomes a tree and i am here on top of everything

flowering fruiting
blooming ripening

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Touch My Body

when you touch my body with your trembling hands tonight i choose to simply close my eyes too, i am trembling to this passion this desire i have been waiting all these years, when we are nothing but passing glimpses, until one day, i tell you my name, i touch your lips i caress your hair and you are awakened by this kind of love this total undressing this total nudity even in tears and untold quiver in this room, you are with me there will be silence anticipating our joys our confessions our opening up hands to hands and soul to soul we will be losing ourselves tonight i am revealing all my skins and longings

i am naked
i am yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Transferred To Another House

When I ask her
If her love will Last forever
She does not Answer
Now, my thoughts
Are in disarray
Like your books
When you
Transferred
To another house.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Unleash The Dogs That Early Morning

when you unleash the dogs that early morning having first tasted what freedom means ey they rush outside like gaming horses without jockeys go hurriedly to the road leading to the public plaza and there drench the bushes with their squirting fountains of urine.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Unzip Me

when you unzip me
the zipping sound climbs up to my chest
and then
it opens my heart
my mind wanders in fantasy lands

and then
my heart goes singing in springtime my thighs trembling
my toes dancing

your fingers crawl all over my body you lips your tongue......

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Walk Away

do not walk away
when the rain stops
walk when it is still raining so hard show them that you are not afraid
of the rain
and the wind
walk away with integrity intact
like a scar
in your heart
like a wound
still bleeding on your leg when blood
still mixes with water and when everything still knows how to disappear

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Walked Away

the door is still four sided still standing like a firm rectangle the locks are loosened key is still below the flower pot the only flower by the window still blooms the stairs did not decrease its steps the grasses greener and the clouds do not change its usual drifting nothing's changed
not even me...

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Want To Forget Love your picture had long been taken out from my pocket i have thrown it in the river that flows to the sea who knows where it may be

i care not to know i have long forced myself to forget you but then true love no matter what even with forceful forgetting comes to you again whispering her name

it seems that even without your picture you name is still embedded in my brain
your face is a memory that cannot be forgotten in the deepest crevice
of my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Welcome Me

when i go to your place do not welcome me
with flowers

not with a streamer
i am no v.i.p.
not a star of the show

the flowers are for the dead and i am coming home
alive

welcome me like i am a nobody in your heart like i am a new stranger in your town

welcome me like i am a new beginning that is how i want it

i am a beginning
i am alive
i still want to live by your side

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Whisper In My Ear

when you whisper in my ear
you must know that i am not really listening it is this warm breath of yours that tickles my nape and my hair my neck is sending erotic signals to my pelvis i like to turn back to you quickly so our lips may meet and then i shall know what do you really want candidly and spontaneously without words do not tell me for i always understand.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Will Tame Me

You want to tame me
This wild beast
In the jungle Intractable

Do you say
You want to soften me
To harness me
To control me
To make me useful
To cultivate me
As one kind of A plant or a docile
Kind of an animal?
Domesticated and Submissive?
Will you make me
Savageless?
Deprived of zest
And spiritless?
Serviceable shall I be to you,
Harmless and Rendered useful
For any master?

Tame me,
You cannot
I am born a lion
And I shall never Be as tame as your House cat,

I live in the wild
Now and you have Known me by the Same name when We first see each Other eye to eye
On the roof, I have Assumed the Fierceness of the Mockingbird, and
No one has stopped Me mimicking all
Of you- shy and coy, Pusillanimous, gentle,
And so manageable

Insipid and God forbid, Dullish and insipid

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Wish That We Stop Thinking For A While

your life must be messy, like your room with books scattered on the floor dirty socks and shirts and underwears everywhere in bed in the sink in the cabinets open when they should have been closed like a mouth and mind
with nothing good to say but just the same still muttering some words which are not necessary
for the day
which should have been
beautiful

you think that what makes the mess is this ability to think to classify and to prefer what must be
what should have been the standards and some things ethical and proper
and restrained

perhaps, you think, if you stop thinking life would have been nicer and easier to manage like simpy being attuned to the mess and living with what is simply there no ifs
no buts
no 'i wish this were this and this were that'
just wallowing and sleeping when sleepy and eating when hungry and leaving when there is nothing worth staying

to cease thinking when you want to
and life would have been one wonderful state wo/man is a rational animal rationality, thinking, is its essence, and when you cease to think even for a minute

you must suffer the consequence
no ifs
no buts
you too cease, you die, your eyes wide open those that do not blink, like a fish you think is not sleeping or dead

you wish you were unthinking what you wish is after all, the death that lurks in your mind, ask yourself, in truth, you wish for it, but you do not confront it so, why not just live, and think some more, and just let it be

do not die,

open, open it, it is raining now, open it do not close it, in your hand, this umbrella lies

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Write A Poem For God..........

you write a poem
for God
and He must be very happy for you and you go to Heaven
for this

God never wrote.

God never wrote for you even a single line
even a syllable

you know it
He shows it not in words well said, the mellow sunset the gentle sunrise every leaf every grain of sand a bubble in the air fingers of sunshine

feet of clay every nail every lock of hair

God is here.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Write Poetry

Do not be preoccupied
With writing one
The thoughts
Will be disturbed
And will not settle
With the words
You are choosing

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Write.

When you write
You hunt for words
Capture them and put them where you Want them to Symbolize
An idea, words are symbols too And these words can be more than that,
Like the word love Symbolizing how you feel About her
It can be more than that Love as a word can go beyond Its symbolism of Affection
It can be demanding
About other words
Time
Money
Effort
And if you are true enough it Can mean vulnerability
And nudity
One by one you remove every Cover of yourself
From shirt to pants to brief And there is more to that still
What you write
Any word for that matter May demand that you remove Your mind
Your eyes
Your soul even

So that in the end what you write demands That you become completely Nothing. Try it.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You Wrong A Person

when you wrong a person
and you do not think of any reparation when you think that you are happier in your situation

beware
for at the end
the furies come to take their revenge

beware
for the right hour comes for that foolishness to come back to your very own body

beware
do not laugh do not be overconfident no one may come to take back what you have taken

but soon
your hands shall go against your commands and your fingers shall soon begin their take on you self-choked

you take your own death through your own hands, your tongue shall hang out your eyes escaping from their sockets looking at you
with all guilt

take note
it is the self that becomes your own enemy and it is this self that at the end takes you
away from yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
When Your Hand Of Friendship Is Brushed Aside

say thank you

try extending your hand to another hand to the other thousand hands in this world who need other hands those with love in their hearts those with minds still believing in friendship tell yourself she does not deserve your offer assure yourself she is another ghost another virtuality

another waste
a junk

without a name without a soul without a face extend your hand to another hand with real fingers on them and try seeing yourself in the mirror you still have that reflection and that ghost does not have any
be glad you are real and she isn't does she think that you have pain and that you need her friendship badly such that you want to bow before her like she is the goddess of beauty and wisdom and truth?

let her be. She is not a part of you.
why bother?

be yourself and keep that hands of friendship warm for another one who needs it too let the gods reign in the heavens. They live in their clouds stay on earth and be the river for the fishes to swim for the strangers to drink with the cup of their hands for them to quench their thirsts

let your hands of friendships be the seeds of springs the flowers of summers that bloom forever
let your scent spread for those who still need them and let these gods remain as gods because they shall always be worshipped as loveless strangers of this earth

RIC S. BASTASA
When Your Offer Is Refused.....

a peacock
spreads its colors on its feathers
the other one
its plumes and calls
on the trees in the mountains
and we know what flirting is even without having
to give any number...

there is no need
to confess
nothing to say
in the same manner
when no is said...

when that offer for love or sex is refused, you should know perfectly....

RIC S. BASTASA
When You'Re Alone

it is like a tiny flower with lavender petals

under the full orange moon blooming on the desert sands no shadows of camels

no date palms

no wind blowing from the north just a star and yet very far away.

RIC S. BASTASA
When You're Hurt And Then You Also Hurt Others

you speak about justice, taking the law into your own hands the penalty is just too harsh, you become one like them it is when you're hurt that you still love when you become one so unlike them you become one nearing perfection it is when you're hurt and not feeling anything when you don't hurt others in retaliation when hurt is no longer even a word comes then, perfection.

RIC S. BASTASA
When? .....

i bring nothing
and i take nothing

give me nothing as i ask for nothing

leave me nothing
there is nothing to take

accept nothing for there is nothing to receive what i give was the first cry

what you heard was that first cry

then the smile
that one which you wish should have lasted

nothing is forever
nothing remains

the smile is just a whisper
and whispers dissolve
in air

take nothing
leave nothing

that is how we are
what we are
and the only thing is

when.
Whence Do All These Come From?

each drop of rain from the leaking roof rhyming
with the words coming from my thoughts, each hush of the wind cressing my face each kiss of the sun on my hair my lips each road that is offered to my feet my fingers holding smooth thighs

each love, each silence, all from You

to where shall i then go and call someone
a home?

you.

RIC S. BASTASA
When you Are Tired And Simply Want To Be Home

as i drove the car last night i passed by the thick crowd of people in a big circle the old yellow bus stopped and some motorcycles were blinking their lights

the ambulance finally arrived in short seconds

two bodies of bloody unconscious males were hauled away

blood flowed again on the floors
of the night

i did not know who they were what they did and what they dreamed from where they were the women that loved them
... i am not interested i am tired of this routine of deaths almost every night i guessed another alcohol caused mishap, perhaps

i always wanted to be back home and it was already late at night

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Am I And Where Am I Going

those are not questions now.
and i do not need to answer them.
for you.

where am i, i am here, my hands owning a set of fingers. fingers that grope for words. for us.

i like to think
i am groping for
the words of love. for you.
i like to see how a leaf sways caressed by the wind that loves it. gently. for us to think about for a time, being, here. where am i, i am beside a big box. a house. i am inside. this big empty box, where a loud music is played and my ears are dying to be sealed by fate

to deafening indifference of you. from me. i am here.
saving on words. scribbling some meanings. for us.

i am in the middle of an overuse. i am in need of a recluse. for us. to fuse
again.

some birds tweeting
the sound of departure.
is this the mating season of the wind and the water and the river and the sea?
where am i going?
i am going nowhere.
i am staying i am loyal to this seat

i am warm like
a palm. i am going,
let me tell you honestly,

i am going to make a difference.
for us. we shall never be the same again.

you grip my hand. I escape through the fingers of my watery self.

as usual, you will see me: a river, and then i am

the sea.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Am I Heading For?

i've gone to Ireland stopped at the United Kingdom slept in the Virgin Islands and left U.S.A for good after a week
of jet setting there is no Disneyland
in me anymore
no Golden Bridge
nothing like Spring Flowers and Autumn leaves
I search for summer somewhere in South Africa almost had the sting of Salvador's Dali's interpretative painting rendition of what life has for me to offer Got laid in Mexico and had zip-less memories in the train bound for Zurich took my bathe in the French Riviera with some women of means and shallow sensibilities what more do i want of this life? where am i further heading?

My problem not yours Let my poems solve
what miseries i have what doubts
what empty space filled with Nothingness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Am I?

from a stack of papers and folders inside my room i take the chance of taking my rest in the comfort room thinking about
an unfinished poem,
i have stored
so much urine
in my bladder
to feel the
flow
of poetry when i pee.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Am I? I Am In The Middle Of An Idea.

i am in the middle of an idea.
it is like a river always flowing.
at the top are blessings like rain on a clear bright day, and on the ground are glistening dews, like diamonds. On the right side are trees filled with ripe fruits, and below them are bushes filled with yellow flowers. On the left side of this river, are stones, and cliffs, and crevices, and at the height of all these silence, is the call of the west wind.
There is a confusion somewhere.
But there is also a certainty like the brightness of the sun. I am torn between these two choices.
I am in the middle of this idea.
Like a river, i continue flowing.

Like the driftwood, i no longer care.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Am I? Tell Me Lust

i am not you
and i am not with you neither i am with myself: there is no home there is no sense going
or running away
i am not at all ready to be.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Are You Going Little Girl?

the wooden boat
on one end the little girl with her paddle a little longer than her frail body then her mother and her younger sister under a yellow umbrella against the sun i can feel her firm tiny hands that hold the paddle stab the river and stir to make this murkiness she holds it on clear directions she struggles to push the water to move the boat as the sun scorches her brown skin shiny and thin and yet so unfrightened i am asking the philosophical question to you elvi where are they going?

and you where are you going too?

do not answer me with the name of a place it is the usual answer, tell me more about what i do not know the one that stirs the river that one that pushes the boat the one that must make the mother fold her umbrella the one that must make the little girl stop her paddling the answer that exhausts all options the one that must make us shift our paradigms

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Are You? .......

you know who is
at fault
but you cannot just tell it

you know how in love
you are
but you cannot just
say it

God knows what Adam did, and all he asks is
'where are you? '

the poetry that attempts to find its writer
would surely ask the same

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Do We Go From Here?

after 70 years
of so much planning
nothing exciting
really happened in his life,

he concludes everything is wrong
because he is actively doing everything
for him

he did not give fate a chance to shape his own life

it is life that takes us
where to go

and life is a silent friend it does not tell us
anything

we simply wait for the surprises

a boat may arrive from a far horizon and waits upon us at the nearby pier we shall step inside its body & it will take us to a place

intended for our own good a black bird my hover on the window sill of our house and sings

and we who listen to the sweetness of its song shall learn about the most beautiful thing that can happen
out there
the next day shall be another adventure and fun for we are life's children and she is our loving mother we simply have to open our eyes alert our ears

and be sensitive to each and every sign that life
everyday sends us

we simply must enhance the trust and surely it will be good

and beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Do You Find Me?

if you search me if you love me that enough you will find me in the rain
without an umbrella
you do not find me rushing i have no reason to and take the safety of a shed you will find me shivering my hair wet and uncombed you will find me cold my lips are pale my arms are shaking you will find me helpless and weak and almost dying

you have to find me i have no reason to live

please....

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Does God Live?

God does not live in Rome the Pope and the celibates are there and they are too many too crowded
and very intelligent

sometimes i honestly ask if they are still generous and holy or if they still have the hands that stretch

to the poorest of the poor sometimes i am confused and disappointed

but then sometimes too
i look inside
my being

open my heart
and there i see God living in there speaking to me

Do not fear Do not be confused Do not look for me somewhere else

Do not travel too far I am just right here

Resting in your heart sometimes hiding from the crowd sometimes taking time to be silent from so much noise sometimes sleeping because I am so tired

and so here I am amazed to my God dwelling inside my heart my body as his temple my eyes as the windows of his soul on this theological revolution my soul rests my ears listen

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Father Is Buried

tonight
you take the courage of breaking the promises that you give to father

you will break the
backbones he gave you

this will make you
kiss the ground honoring more what this earth has promised you

where father is buried
where his bones are

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Fire Does Not Exist.

there is fire within me which is well contained, though every night it wants to burn me or eat me, but which i have domesticated for years in such a way that with one word i utter it stays on its place, sits like a dog, and dances when told.

if i did not have that skill i would have been burned a long time ago.
i would have turned into ashes.
and the fire would have devoured you too, one who thinks that i am the happiest man in the house where fire does not exist.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where I Am

I am at the second floor of this building Glass doors all over me Overlooking the sea
So calm and peaceful Blue sea without any ripple Or wind and there is a blue, white boat passing by Slicing the sea like a pizza

Between me and the Sea
Is this Road
Near the shore is a deserted house
The dwellers have long transferred to another barrio

There is this fence and trees Beside the road enclosing the deserted House

This is my office and I am inside it.
The rest of the staff left earlier To buy something for the coming Christmas party.

I am alone. I am writing.
And here you come.

At poemhunter. com
Your name is Poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where I Live

i've wanted to clothe myself with the shining armor i made myself choose masks worn some and faced the crowd somehow i did not like it for who wants not to be one's self?

after the event i regretted having spoken for others said what was best but i didn't or perhaps i couldn't so now is the time to be naked and display the mole behind my chest for them to remember that i was and will always be different that i was born not to be admired but just to be dispensable to be dismissed as nothing but a mere idea on this new understanding perhaps i can dwell satisfactorily in the silence of this tower.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where I Live....You Know It.

a house is built made of bricks, red as blood at the center of the island black as a mole
at the middle of your right cheek it is fenced by the locks of your hair it is guarded by the cautious tongue of your face

at the other side
bounded by a big brown river is a cottage no living room, no kitchen not even a restroom it is just a square cottage with roof leaking
where i can see the stars

if you know me well enough for years that i have been with you and for days that i have left you you shall know where i live and if you love me well enough you'll take nothing with you to follow me

and i know you will never be lost until you find the place where my heart sings

RIC S. BASTASA
Where In Hell Is Heaven?

if i judge him and tell him that his life is wasted on those beds with all the kinds of women and drugs

what have i made of myself then?

another equal another push to another equal pull i must be best in the form of my silence if i tell myself that i am happier with all the white vests of my self-imposed restraints of moral codes and ethical considerations

what must i have possibly impressed upon you?

that i can be another listed name in the roll of liars of those who have embraced the messianic sickness?

we are in this same, old, rotten world and i am trying to imagine a garden of roses, a clear pond a set of trees, a line of bushes, some rays of pure light we all still ask the same question: where in hell is heaven?

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Is A? (For A)

he sent me a video of himself humming in Greek

not the literal Greek language that you understand it is strange and (my heart cries perhaps there is this

indescribable sympathy for one in pain)

i may be out of frame attributing pain to one who has not experience pain outside this small world of indifference

it is the distance that understands and i am definite about it i dream of someone who fell upon a cliff deep into the blue ocean beneath and for one thing

i have not heard any cry for help

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Is God?

after all those walks in Bethlehem and Jerusalem even in Horeb or Sinai

after the sail in Galilee and the Nile

having seen the wall and the separated people and the wailing of those faces

on the walls

from the faces of the young soldiers of Israel and the hungry Bedouin children in St. Catherine

this i tell Elias, and also to Anas

God is not on those stones and the walls

God is inside the hearts of men and women

and wherever they are within their hearts there

God Lies.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Is She? Where Is She?

Your voice I have not heard for long Unseeing, you have shun me away Relentless, I shall find another way Inside your heart, I shall sing a song.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Is The Cat?

in the quiet
there is a bird
that i cannot catch

there is loud
thump
on the beam of the ceiling

i do not
own a dog.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Is The Entrance? Where Is The Exit?

the price you
pay for the years of patience:

people think that you should be feared

that your absence is a festivity

that you are sky
and earth at the same time that between all these is an empty space

what you bring is compassion

and they look to every pore of your skin

where is the entrance?
where is the exit?

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Is The Love?

where is the love?

you ask me when i kiss you you doubt the warmth of my lips the truthfulness of my arms the civility of my fingers the trustworthiness of my hands

where is the love?

you look into my eyes like you are a woman swimming in my river you feel the coldness of my waters the silence of my stones the calmness of my sands the coyness of my fish and snails

where is the love?

you ask me
you find the lotus without a flower you find the driftwood on the water my love, try finding love in the sky above do you see love in the sun?

do you feel love with the moon?
do you hear the love from the tiny stars?

tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Is The Prince?

lady, there is something wrong with the story: Cinderella asking for her Romeo?

What can Juliet say
about this
interplay of fate and chance
light and darkness?

Wait, till Mercurochrome meets Paris
at the Hilton or Waterfront?

How sad, such sweet sorrow in the balcony of the broken mind.

RIC S. BASTASA
some people are focused. there is always no time for something else except that focus on what is relevant and important (as to what it is you are the one in the most fitting position to know)
like a glass of lens that receives light from the sun and then burns the paper
where nothing important is written.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Only The Few Can Cry

her father
hides his tongue and when something goes wrong he bites his lips and grits his teeth

his feet run and his hands grip
what should not have been in the course of
life

i like him that way
always misjudged
and i keep seeing him doing the right
thing

and so i write about
him
after he died in that funeral
where flowers are refused

where only the few can cry

RIC S. BASTASA
Where The Crowd Eats Some Parts Of You

you step inside yourself create a home
complete with a window and furniture
flowery drapes and cotton sheets
a bed and a side table
you are into some kind of dimming lights a little of Mozart playing softly

dthis is how to dream and regain what pieces of self you lost
outside where the crowd eats some parts of you

you must be happy now.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where The Heart Is...

her voice was soft as the cotton inside the pillow her words
no more than the lowest intensity of the
whisper
she feels so right
there, there is where her heart is.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where The Home Is

In analyzing fear
i look at my heart
if it is empty or full or if it is still there at all,

and this is what i found, it is when it is empty that fear comes in and takes residence in
there,

for how can fear come when the heart is full of
love (or even hate or whatever?)

and then i check the existence of the heart and ask myself

is it still there?
ah, it is there at home

for where the home is there the heart too dwells

and home is still you and this house and this garden
this bed, this blanket
this floor
this face...

RIC S. BASTASA
Where There Is Darkness....

while the sky
become dark slowly stars come sailing by
with the moon

and you reflect upon all these while sitting on the bench

where there is darkness there are also stars
with the full moon
as bonus.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where To Stop?

where to stop?

stop right
there where
you want

when to stop?

stop when things are over
when you cannot handle
what
to start

but why stop?

life is always a beginning it is death
that ends

are you alive?
then do not ever, ever, ever

stop

RIC S. BASTASA
Where To? ......

the skin of my neck
is tight
and my C5
and C4
are not that passable and neurons
are working hard

it feels like a rope and people talk
and i am not listening

i don't understand
what next to do,
and the Cheshire cat
grins
and says

'does it really matter? '

shit.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where We Are Going.

may you always remember that above us will always be the stars and below us
earth, stones, grass,
leaves

we can look up and be amazed it is us, and us only who knows what to believe

and what we believe ultimately becomes
where we are going.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where We Could Not Find You Anymore

we tried hard enough to please you
to make us sound like the poets in your mind but we couldn't we are into deep sorrow which turned into a rage of
a river
taking us to nowhere where we can no longer find you.

and we keep on moving carrying that lesson from the rage that we were never born to please you or

anybody.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where We Sleep And Dream Again

we walk together
along the shore

you hold my hand
and feel the comfort of who i am,

you see the
sadness of a sunset
and you cry

i smile
remembering
the memories before
that sadness,

i still carry with me the scent of morning the kiss it gave me
the hugs of noon

and sunset is just a passage
that takes us into
the night

where we sleep and then dream again...

RIC S. BASTASA
Where Were You?

where were you when i needed you?

i spilled some lima beans in my bed and my wife shall gather them all to me and i ask her how many are these beans specifically

it will take her time

i spilled ketsup in my white shirt and my wife will have to clean it for me she will wash it with soap and water and dry it in the sun

it will take her time

so, let me tell you i am thinking of you while she picks the lima beans and counts them in specific numbers

so let me tell you that i am thinking of you when she washes my clothes and make them all clean for me

so i will look like a decent man let me tell frankly that i think of you while we make love you are the bulb lighting in the darkness of my mind

i am so unkind
i am thinking of you where were you when i needed you?

you are always in my mind.
that is your place, only in my mind my wife is beside me.

she is concrete love to me.

your place is only in my mind
and you
cannot touch me.

like a cloud you will be here for the meantime the right wind comes and drifts you away

and you will no longer be in my mind i guess things will turn out right when the right wind comes along.

you are just a blue, ephemeral cloud.

RIC S. BASTASA
Where You Go

When we finally part ways I like to see where you escape From the clutches of my hands
I will follow you
As you go to green, cooler fields Or to the white cheerful foams of the sea I shall know
To always follow you
In bliss

If you escape however
And take flight towards the recesses of your heart And the secret paths of your veins I will not follow you
Your body now has walls Impenetrable
I shall be blocked
By the coldness of your heart
There are no doors
Or windows where I can possibly enter You have shut yourself
With all your skins
Where no white bones can ever be seen

RIC S. BASTASA
Where You Really Live

integrity has to start with a house
and then you
utter a word which lives in that house
that you
consider too
as your
home

you have one word
one house
and then they know
where you
really live

RIC S. BASTASA
Where's Loneliness?

and you heard it how i told her she must free herself from her own depression she is too old for it fifteen years, twenty another ten and she is not worth it anymore sorrow overwhelming can be wasteful, sadness seeping is simply a sagging surge of a salvaged symphony, quit, it is quiet, quite a quilt of guilt, quit, now, depression does not deserve her, she is too weak for an escape, going down to your own knees and beg that you must be lamenting forever, when lament knows how to lament by itself alone.

where's loneliness? is it inside you always and alone with you?
girl, this is not the rules of the game.
nature says, everything is temporary, nothing is permanently prim nothing is permanently prime, someone goes down and another one goes up, you are down under, and it is surprising
why,
your only tendency now is to go up, why deny yourself such a right?
go girl, go up, opt for sanity, be dandy be groovy, take the new haircut, the sleazy one, buy yourself a new dictionary of life and find the words fit for your style this year. You're the ox and it is your year. where's loneliness? it is no longer inside you.

I swear.
Gladness also knows how to steal you from the cruel fingers of your foes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whether We Are Dogs Or Men

whether we are dogs or gods
or men
it does not really matter if we believe in nothing at all if we believe that there is no reason why the wind blows to the west why the birds build their own nests why glaciers exist

why we write poems
it matters. why we always want to say something and open our hearts for them to see the white doves flying there

it matters. why we wake up and wash our face.
why we ask. why we look for answers.

whether gods or dogs or simply men.
it matters now when we begin to believe about eternity.
this sense of being incomplete.
the want to be completed. it matters now. whether we are dogs or gods or simply men.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whew! !

i was told, not to worry when i was yet a one-celled body i died, and live again as another complex organism, a tissue, a seed, and then i sprout and turn into a plant and then i die again

and turn into another more complex body
a butterfly
metamorphosed into a bird and then i die again
and born into the body of a cow
and then i die again
and born into the body of a man whew! it is tiresome and so hard to remember what i did as a man,
they say i was once a king,
and then
into, a semi-god, and then i die again and i turn into a god, and so on and so forth, with a point,
i should not fear death because it is taking me into
perfection

a hundred and another hundred years.

RIC S. BASTASA
Which Death? Which Death? Somehow You Have To Choose.

imagine
how painful would it be for the bee not to sting for the snake not to bite or for those scorpions underneath the earth

not to take their trek
on the rocks
on the nights of their hunger
not to eat the prey
which is reserved for
them

would you believe
the promise of the bee, the snake, the scorpion
not to sting and not to take the bite

why do you pity the prey?
which death would you
sympathize?
which foot would you take into empathy with
you?

which death? which death?
somehow you have to choose.

RIC S. BASTASA
Which Dog To Discard

too many dogs
are barking the wrong
tree here

i guess it is time
to decide
which dog to discard
which dog
to retain the one which has gained your trust
all year round.

i still prefer the silent one that which looks at me with a wagging tail sits peacefully beside me and takes me back to my childhood years

i breathe and then
finally sleep in the cover of sweeter
dreams.

RIC S. BASTASA
Which We All Want To Call Reality....

you just don't know that poets are
so many

that one is a postman
the other is a drunkard

that one is
a consul
the other one
is a teacher

that one is
a psychopath
beside him his shrink
both of them
are poets

one is a lawyer shifting from law to poetry
from left to right from truth to fantasy
all rolled into
one

which we all want to call
reality.

RIC S. BASTASA
Which We Still Refuse To Speak....

here in this
house
i think i know
what Antartica is how cold it is perhaps

perhaps, just
perhaps

when love is
gone
when we still continue living

when we still rock in a rocky marriage

well, this is it
tradition, tradition, sticking it out like stain to a white shirt
like the bitterness inside our throats which we still refuse to speak....

RIC S. BASTASA
While Driving Alone At Night From The Law School

the rain starts to fall and so i close the window and then meet the face of
silence

it has sleepy eyes pale skin and a tiny mouth like a scar

since it is dreary and i feel like a prisoner inside a moving cubicle i begin to talk to myself
as though
i have someone other than myself the more i talk and the more i answer my own questions the more i have become enlightened who am i

and what i can possible do under the circumstances the night is solemn and i have known a friend

and we now know that we like each other's company and we love
to be home again

for sure.

RIC S. BASTASA
While Driving My Car Late Evening From School while driving my car late evening from school when the rains fall heavily on the streets

looking like deserted
i talk to myself
unceasingly
like we are very close friends and now for the first time in 20 years meet for this historic reunion

i greet myself with such a warm hello ric
this is ric meet ric how you have not changed for years you still look wonderful tonight and how are things doing with you?
i am fine and doing well and i am at home with myself progressing in my career and happy with what i have and what i am looking forward
to more excitements
of my life
like you do too with your life ric to ric

the talk goes on and on
and then the rain stops
and then i finally arrive and honk my car to this house
where the gate opens all too quickly
with anticipation
like this joy
of an emotion

the lights are all on brightly they shine
on the glass
of the car

i am home
at last

RIC S. BASTASA
While I May Be Too Busy With The Letters Of The Law

i received your letter asking how am i doing you prefer the paper with scent not the emails you find them too impersonal, i am fine. I am bound with the rigors of the law. I am stronger now.

I am focused to what is right and rigid.

thank you.

But while i may be too busy with the letter of the law and its spirit, i sneak sometimes on the little window beside me it looks out to the sea, to the seagulls, to the boats, to the port, to the sands, to the seacaps, to the wind, to an endless horizon beyond me.

RIC S. BASTASA
While I Am Sleeping

what we learn is we are the ones deciding what happens experience proves otherwise natures speaks the reverse that flower that i have never touched or designed this morning unfolded from its closet buds blooming without my consent

and so does others, sun, moon, stars,
sea,

wind, your hands unto mine touching me while i am sleeping

RIC S. BASTASA
While I Was Driving The Car Back Home

while i was driving the car back home
the town suffered a blackout, and all that i can see before me is a sea of darkness but i am not frightened anymore for i have light within me or the car perhaps is well conditioned to travel the tunnel of darkness without people or in places where everyone is asleep,
somehow
i begin to think what if i am the only one left in this world
where everyone finally left somewhere to a place where i have never been to....

and then i begin to think about you. how can i be so cruel to forget such a lovely person as you?
how could i be so indifferent?

and then i stopped the car and veered my way back home to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
While I Was Walking My Way Back Home

a fat woman
sits by the alley
with a blond hair dyed
not natural for her race
her eyes are chinks
and her built as small she is the usual Asian
woman
mindful of who passes by cannot resist talking and putting in contempt a fellow Asian like her.

i wave a hand at her
and call her sister.

RIC S. BASTASA
While I Watch You With Desire

in bed
as you sleep
all in the beauty of
light
your body's lines explaining art
and sending me
back
the delights of
desire

i stand by the side
of the window
looking at all of you painting you
with words in this

early morning
poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
While Jean Is Typing...

sometimes we want to talk to someone just to fill in the hours but people want always to be taken special and cannot appreciate this casual need but no one is really special in this universe it seems that each one is nothing but a speck
of dust
and this disappoints someone somewhere who conceives the idea that the universe needs him and that it would be incomplete without him/her we have wandered for a long time we invent a universe
religion
we want to rationalized always our importance i expect the truth that after all these we are nothing but a product only of an evolution
without any significance at all

RIC S. BASTASA
While Others Are Eager To Go with their selves waiting on line waiting for their trip without anything to carry you are there gathering garbage

at your pleasure
those eager to go look forward to their trip
and they look at you with all pity

RIC S. BASTASA
While Praying...

he is in church
attending the Sunday Mass trying to close his eyes in solemn prayer

at the front row three rows ahead of him is the woman who defrauded him in a land deal

(money is not that important but the fraud pinches
his soul)

beside him is his debtor who just arrived from Dubai on a three-day tour and he did not pay him his debt for two years
now

now the question is:
how can he keep his peace in the middle of his mumbled prayers?

before God his traitors and swindlers
sing their hymns

RIC S. BASTASA
While The Law Sleeps

there is a new trend in the city since the law has been too slow in catching what the people think are the culprits everyday satisfies itself for a new kill another notoriety is summarily executed the people see and do not mind their hearts which are too thirsty for justice make the common nod and the law smiles thinking about how the people have become responsible

while it sleeps.

RIC S. BASTASA
While Waiting

while waiting
be it in the bus
or in the rest rooms for something more important for something that shakes my world or twists my fate

i look inside myself killing the impatience battling with ennui

i write this poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
While Waiting For You

I sit on this desk like a schoolboy Waiting
I tap my fingers i keep my feet Underneath
Nobody is watching
I am looking Outside from here
The green football field
The trees pruned like boys With new haircut
The chapel,
It is where I pray everyday Before going to the usual university quibbles Two hours passed
Still there is no you Or your shadow
Sometimes I think
Most of the time I don’t

This relationship
What am I to you?
That you should make me wait?

I take my notes
And begin writing

Who am i?

I quit this chemistry
I am ready for philosophy

RIC S. BASTASA
While Waiting For You Inside The Car

Two kids are tumbling

their bodies
light as feathers

swift and agile
like cats

on an island of light on the city

that is about to sleep

my eyes negate exhaustion

envious of youth
contemptuous

of the past
unfulfilled about

who i am
without the why

RIC S. BASTASA
While Waiting On The Bus

inside the bus
we are all strangers

bound for the same direction but will be doored out in different stations

sometimes we share stories
most of them here have their mouths
shut

there is an old woman carrying a pack of clothes unable to hold her sorrow she speaks about the house that she just left

i see eyes looking outside the window of the bus
by all means everyone is disinterested

finally the bus is full and ready to go
the engine begins to start on open windows the air keeps cooling the cheeks of those who have impatiently waited

the bus starts to run away from this chaotic city and these hearts all weary are feeling such indescribable relief.
RIC S. BASTASA
While Waiting....

she has no love life in Melbourne

nothing
significant
to say
that love burns
and it burns
like the sun

she is
celibate and
smart
and she says
they now go together

in such a loveless insignificance

they have chosen
no one.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whimper

a whisper can lead to a whimper
and one thing may lead to another
like some whining
when the liking is not the inkling, and then you stay out
and not be counted
like those still lining for the paining, and then claim
you like the Mesmer.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whirlwords

when you enter this room you will meet us

you look at our faces wearing different masks

when you smell us you begin to think of dog's hair you will be confused like a swirling door we anticipated that from the beginning scents interchange and manners well studied get unpredicted

each gesture is mastered but switching hands become a habit you try the way we sound like moooo listening carefully we waver for another idea we anticipated that too we have exchanged our tongues for some lips not to be outwitted you listen to the beatings of our hearts like native drums you have heard everything from 'asshole' to 'zezbomba!' now you have known me but who knows if i have filled myself like a hot balloon and then i am no longer there except the grass and the heat

RIC S. BASTASA
White And Pure

the man is white bald and wearing a pair of glasses a la Mohandas

the woman is brown young and confused

yet knows what to do in this kind of tense situation

she is (forgive me) like a mouse jumping into that big white cruise ship heading for a storm a la Titanic.

RIC S. BASTASA
White And Red

white and red
meeting halfway
between
love and lust

on compromises
something bursts midway

and it was too nice.

RIC S. BASTASA
White Hair

i let the years pass on my busy days this and that
those and there and here contemplation is a monk and he has not come my door is open and the crowd came in. Leaves of years keep falling like it is caused by the cyclone of my moving forward onward this and that and those and there and everywhere until one moment when the last white hair fell and then i shudder to all these and that and those and there and here and nowhere
and nothing, until the monk in saffron cloth came asking me
if i am finally going.

RIC S. BASTASA
White Hair, Gnarled Flesh, Dirty Fingernails,

it was a wrong beginning it starts with a thing you like but you cannot have and so you begin with a lie inorder to survive and you are confident at the end they will always understand and then forgive you.

you are not afraid of wrong beginnings since there are so many of them to begin with there is fear somehow at the middle before the discovery until such time that time like any fruit too becomes ripe

and juicy and as usual falls to the ground as a matter of necessity something that no one can prevent not even your hands that know how to catch a lie and hide it like a butterfly and so the end comes and so many eyes come out to look at you

as though you are a stranger from a faraway land

white hair, gnarled flesh, dirty fingernails, wilted lips, bent bones, and unable to say anything dying as you have to admit who has the courage to curse you?
or tell you that you owe them an answer but as they look at you they have to admit, there is no need anymore.

RIC S. BASTASA
White Herons

As usual
these white herons gather on rice paddies
too many of them
and yet so
silent...

RIC S. BASTASA
White Sea

white sea spreading before me so silky
tiny ripples of the wind from a far bringing some stories from the other island

some leaves fall from the pitogo tree
some flowers pink and white lay on the shore

white sands of silence and peace
seeping in my skin
i am barefoot
i am naked down to the waist
i am waiting for the sun to descend upon the bosom of the horizon
i am dreaming of palm trees soft winds
of summer

a door opens in my mind i get in stepping into something new

RIC S. BASTASA
White Turtledoves And Marriages

she remembers
on their wedding day when both of them cheerfully set two white turtledoves free now, still on their second year of staying together on one roof

they know what a steel cage is and they are sure they are these two white turtledoves whom they must finally
set free

another bond is broken for freedom

RIC S. BASTASA
White Walls

painting the wall white is what is done this morning.
removing the stains and the marks of wrongs some spits and phlegm sticking and we wonder if this shall please him he who had died a long, long time ago who wished all the walls are white and neat and clean.
who wished that it will be like his body or his soul, but then there was not enough time. he never wished to die
that early and so dirty.

RIC S. BASTASA
White Wine

after the flesh of
the fish
we drink together
the white wine

still wet with wine
we dip
lips to lips

this time we taste like sushi
more like that Japanese geisha
lost in Manila

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Am I

i am not what you think, i guess, that is not what i want myself
to be,
i am what you
can touch
i am presence to you
in the same manner
that you must be present to me
to be real
for i do not want any drama
a self is not a play of words an opera of songs and dances
for you to be real
to me
i must touch you.
ditto with me.
i am my body so must
you be.
To be souls, don't mind,
we can be later.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Am I Around You?

you revolve around the biggest sun of this universe where i am not a star or a planet or even a meteor
in your skies

i like to be one of your moons
but i am not
and will never be

you look upon the rest as nothing but stones rushing in random to find their places in the universe

i look with disgust in your arrogance someday i shall be the biggest blackhole someday you will know me the force i have the power i may soon hold someday, i stick to this dream this dust shall create the whirlpools

to become the blackhole giving you the death that you must deserve

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Am I?

I am a good mimic Loud and vocal
I sing through Your nights
When the moon is full
I have repertories
From 50 to 200 songs
I sing the loudest
In the twilights of Early mornings
When the sun is Still lazy on the horizon
I can communicate Specific information
Harsh, raspy, Shall my sound be
When I drive you
Out of my territory
I can make that Wheezing noise
That chuck note
Some very piercing
Series of notes
When I defend My family from
The hawk or the Fierce Falcon.
I am always
A brave defender
Of my home-nest.

I am your Mockingbird.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Am I? .....

in the island of Mindanao papa said it was raining when i
was born,

it was cold and so they wrap
me with a thick blanket

i became papa's guava's eye sweet as it is ripe
and juicy to his liking,

the family was strict about work, and so there was no play
and all are serious towards earning the fruits of our labors

i went on my own to the university finishing my chemistry degree and then proceeded to law school where industry and intelligence wit and logic are daily tools

the government is too kind to appoint me as judge of a court of law where the fate of other people has become within the tips of my fingers within the maps of my own palm

got married then and loves life more than ever and has always time for a nature trip and communion here i am, enslave by the magic of poetry, a therapy for our sorrows,

a cure for our madness,

i am what i am, for i am not my name,
i am not my own possession, i am not a tool, i am human, and everything i am is humanity's opening and closing.

RIC S. BASTASA
in the island of Mindanao papa said it was raining when i
was born,

it was cold and so they wrap
me with a thick blanket

i became papa's guava's eye
sweet as it is ripe
and juicy to his liking,

the family was strict about
work, and so there was no play
and all are serious
towards earning the fruits of
our labors

i went on my own to the university
finishing my chemistry degree
and then proceeded to law school
where industry and intelligence
wit and logic are daily tools

the government is too kind
to appoint me as judge of a court
of law where the fate of other
people has become within the
tips of my fingers within the
maps of my own palm

got married then and loves life
more than ever and has always time
for a nature trip and communion

here i am, enslaved by the magic
of poetry, a therapy for our sorrows,
a cure for our madness,

i am what i am, for i am not my name,
i am not my own possession, i am not a tool, i am human, and everything i am is humanity's opening and closing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who And What We Are And What We Do you are the witch of the night and i am the wizard too

and so here we are
roaming the night with our black wings on half bodies

we are looking for words and metaphors
to eat

we have separated our minds and bodies

there will be more insomniac nights and more bloody encounters among ourselves

some blood and flesh will fall on the ground unnoticed tomorrow morning some flowers with red petals grow the passersby will smell the odor of our lives

we are the poets and the poetesses without our names in the books of their collections

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Are We Anyway?

on a dry season like this arid as cracking lips we wish upon a dream of a rainy night we can be playful again like children watering plants for mama she died ten years ago without tasting a rain dropping from father's skies we were groomed for the gravel our world is a stone till now, we wish there were more of us despite the pain and the horror of falling rocks from cliffs the sounds of pebbles grating against the sands of the shore it has a very indifferent face the one that does not care the one that swears we were never humans but stones and carts and rusty wheels squeaking upon those drifting clouds those that move to no direction at all we sometimes think we are the wind we are those that howl like foxes in those crowded mountains we are the friends of worms still wandering in the hollows of our silent worlds....

RIC S. BASTASA

and he would say let not the killing stop my idol is speaking before some dignified people somewhere in Singapore statistics runs at 6 thousand or so dead countrymen it will go higher and those who favor the killing are not tired of rationalizing they who do evil deserve to die that is our law on the other hand, i sometimes, think, whether i like it or not,

it is them, my brothers and sisters who are put to death.

they who were born out of love, they who were taken cared of from birth no mosquito shall bite, no fly shall land,
no humiliation whatsoever,

'they do not deserve to live' and who are you speaking?
are you not human too?
are you not made of flesh and bone?

i will get a mirror
see your full body
i will get a magnifying mirror see your face
find the craters of the moon the landscape of Mars the darkness of Pluto, everyone is worth dying for,
someone said that some years back and he is a hero,
and here you are now, speaking, everyone is worth killing for.

i have killed a fly. I will kill a cockroach.
But i have never killed a dog.
And given a chance, i will never kill one.

Can i kill a friend? How much is my brother?

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Are You To Judge?

she had been living in sin that is what they say

who are you to judge?
she alone shall be the jury and judge of all her actions she is old to discern she has to decide

what prayer does she say at night? for all those years until one day her man dies and some say she is now free free from what?

from her guts she must know her heart shall tell

we shall be in the funeral and watch her tears fall upon the glass of the dead

when everything is over we all leave one by one and she will be left again

alone

only to be joined by another beloved

will he be his new-found freedom or will he be his prison cell forever

meanwhile i too shall face the consequences of my own self

and this will make me silent too and at night some prayers will be said too private, more personal for i like her, am, too, an individual.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Are You?

and the worm
that looks like a set of thorns
on a glossy leaf
asks the creature above it with some wings..................who are you?

and it answered him
i was once in your body wriggling to be free asking a lot of questions to the air and the tree.............i am what you will soon be,

a butterfly...

and the worm does not believe it greedy as it is with the sap of the leaves somehow it feels something new it is feeling some wings growing, some possibilities lurking inside it.........................how can this be?

it is the same question that you have been asking

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Can Love And Who Is Loved?

creation is relative same with our our idiosyncrasies

and idiocies

sometime you get uneasy and even impatient with the dumbness

or the hardheadedness of the other and you want to show the real thing
inside you

if you care to listen the other has the same feeling for you same impatience same rebellion

but what holds you both into taking the calmness of silence and acceptance is that idea one cannot exist without the other and without the other

who can love and who is loved?

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Can Take This Longing?

there is always a longing upon the mouth of an empty bowl the one that you place beside the house that gapes its gaze towards the sun when it rains you hope that this longing may be sealed by cold water dropp by dropp throughout the whole night when the world is not seeing anything, any ripple in your river

body,

no water can fill it, no rain can boast about its power to level things with its pouring there is one thing though that you wish to happen that a child with a stone hits the body of the bowl so that it can be broken into pieces that finds no semblance from anything whatsoever that it can be beyond repair so that the longing shall be taken away by the pieces now with its shattered voice into the void.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Does Not Like A Dog

a poodle
a very loyal one that wags its tail that looks at you as God
that stays with you in bed and sleeps with you in so much comfort that provides you the needed
warmth
that company that even a lover has not given you
proof of something everlasting

who does not like you?

a dog, as dogged as you as pleasing as a poodle always a dog forever yours and who does not speak the words
you speak.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Does Not Really Want To Write The Best Poem In The World?

yes, a five-star poem.
the one fit for first prize awards, the one that will make you famous worldwide,
who does not like to go on tv? read that famous poem personally.

me? sorry i don't.
i am tired writing the best poem
of my life
been writing for years
i can imagine trying to fit in with the most famous ones dead and alive but i know i can never write it because i can't because i don't because i do not have any reason to write it.

i love to write.
AND that is foremost.
that is final. nothing ambitious.
nothing to change your world or this world or that world nothing to influence another indonesian or turk or swedish or anybody or anything

what advantage do i get when i say i just love to write when i say i do not want to write the best poem in the world?
nothing, except the joy of having to make the deep breath
in my life.

air that fills my lungs and make me dream and make me sleep longer than you do.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Greets Her?

she prays hard in church since it is her birthday today and she arrives and opens the red steel gate of the house and i see her coming with a black umbrella as it is raining and i ask her who remembers her on her birthday today? who greets her a happy birthday?

i guess merian, i expect genie,
or momma, or gerry or any name of the good neighborhood

and she says, candid and true,

'oh, the ants and flies and cats and pigs! '

i guess. like me,
she is just in love
with metaphors again.

i imagine the pigs most.
And i will surely invite the flies who are at war with the ants.

and the cats
are already here, as usual licking their paws
and taking their naps again.
Who Is Foolish?

when somehow you decide who is the fool around here another fool
fools himself into such belief

there are no fools
there are only decent human beings lining up
wanting to be wise.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Is Someone In Your Mind?

when you write tell me
who is someone in your mind?

i know there is someone there perhaps you love to hug and kiss but you cannot really do it for some reason

then you picture a place in your story all filled with walls you are groping for an exit you look up
it is dark
and there is no sign of light whatsoever and you figure out that to find
a door
you simply have to close your eyes
and wait

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Is The Best Among Us? .... i dont ever think about who is best i agree theres no one who deserves the title. nobody no one who is here is an internal struggle others may pretend they know happiness forget the past do not mind the future carpe diem grab what is near you and live for the moment even only for an existence of a second like a mythical moss the flowers that bloom today tomorrow shall be dying why do you worry about who is best is that important is that the gauge of what we are doing is that the temptation the reason the raison d etre for scribbling lots of words and befriending phrases for praises absolutely one who stays longer here agrees that it is not simply because we are here because out there nobody care nobody hears our scream on that not so well painted boat against a lousy pastel horizon beside a nearby volcanic eruption do not read why do you go find another place where you think the best and the mufti-awarded where the laureates exist and be the clapping hands buy tickets for their reading sessions and care to listen leave us we are free to be dumb eager to be idiots lusting to be morons happy to be nincompoops see the world is a wide ocean limitless space and full of the anonymous those great spirits live in heaven as we try our best to thrive in what perhaps you call rightfully as

hell.

RIC S. BASTASA
i am the real problem
i Do not have anything to do with my Life, it has only lonelines as the real cause of its misery.

i am the real problem
i Have figured out the real issue Of the problem and it is not capable of exact Definition,

That seemingly is a problem apparently Appearing to me as life but there is No life in it
The right to call it life Cannot be true, this is just to be frank about it.

I refer to the expertise of sorceress She put some aluminates in cinders And she figures out the illuminated forms of my Problem, a snake is the illuminated form of my misery

There is a snake in my house
Or
could be in my office or could be in my world.

The real problem is i Do not believe the sorceress
And I am left with nothing to do but figure out the real Problem in my dreams

Planes taking off and exploding in mid air Rivers rising flooding and making a town disappear Bamboo poles with lots of coconut oil rubbed on its sides and I cannot climb My way of jumping into murky rivers filled with goldfishes floating dead A brook filled with feces and I am there swimming A snake chasing me and I cannot run as fast as I can and it bites me
And I

Wake up
profusely sweating and trembling

i get a glass of water and ThankGod that everything is simply a bad dream

The real problem really is,
On the other hand,
I waking up
and well,
Honestly wishing that all these dreams be true, nonetheless

nevertheless
Real true, so I explode with the plain in mid-air And they cannot find an inch of me and I will fall to every climb to that oily bamboo pole Down to my graves down to the deepest part of this earth And I will drown in that big flood and disappear with the town and lose myself in the murkiness of the brown river And I will die suffocated in that brook of fecal matter and the snake Finally bites me

and consistently
in reality
and I will be foaming saliva in my mouth frothing like one crazy fool

Dying in an instant.

That is the real problem apparently.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Is The Son Of Man?

as he has
eyes covered by a green apple
to me
he is a window
closed.

mouth shut

still as a pole
all dressed
for the occasion
and yet
going nowhere.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Knows?

so you go places it is always a case of getting inside a vehicle and stepping out checking in a hotel
and checking out
walk a little,
run a little and wanting to stay
and rest
but really can't

you ask for a reason and it is always there you beg and you always beg

for time
for a variation
you want to always go somewhere else to find what you always want
the one
which you know you wanted much but can't touch and own

now in those places where there is no cure
you beg for something else you beg to forget

just to forget and nothing else you want to take back what was new before you hope that it will be exciting as it used to be

who knows?
Who Knows? It Could Be You...

it seems to fit
when without reason

all the senses
make a call that it is
you,

but i am not a fool to all these senses,

my eyes were wrong and my nose cannot tell what scent was that

and hence to sum it all i cannot trust desire

i invoke distance and your absence for at this moment i can not think that

much

i leave for a while and see other places of my heart

when i come back

who knows? it could be you...

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Knows? She Must

her true name is Gloria Villa

in english she is the house of glory

at an early age
she was called Bangengak by her folks since she is not white
and bucktoothed

when she grows up
she may continue
believing that she is ugly and hence she may act like from an ugly duckling to a full grown
ugly duck

if Gloria however reads a lot and transcends how people thought of her

she may become what she is in her mind

she may transform herself into a beauty
from inside her guts to outside the boundaries
of this world

who knows? she must.
Who Knows? Who Feels? .....

AT a different sound level you do not hear the elephants making their calls for help

only they can hear what they are saying as you watch only
silence

and so it will be with the trees and the sands and the sea you stand there thinking that this world is a silent garden but it is not

there is a language of the leaves and the branches there is a talk of the sea and the sands you just could not hear it for you too has a language of your own

in your heart
that you
and only you hear and understand

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Me?

you, yes you,
sly as a fox
insidious, marked with a skill for deception
you, yes, you
cunning woman
often passing for wise, deep machinations
on such schemes
ready always with your slick evasive answers
to questions
prepared overnight sly, tricky Lucy

who me?
not me, you,
yes, you,
yes, you

how dare
you say

you love me.
Attorney Wily

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Says That Life Is Fair?

and so it happened that one day
i told her frankly in class
that life
is not really fair

the rich gets richer
the poor gets poorer
the killer
is on the loose
and the
heirs of the victim still grieving

justice is not in the hands of the innocent

and with a stare
i look at her

and tells her

who says
that life is fair?
raise your hand

and indeed
she raises her
hand

the following day
she kills herself

i guess,
she proves it
slapping
me on my face
with her untimely
death

RIC S. BASTASA
it is a scary world this earth trembles a bit for every rotation which somehow you do not feel because also of your own diversions, like building a new house, buying a red car, kissing a girl mistaken as a daughter of yours no malice, just for fun, like the way sometimes you do not act like your age, licking ice cream in a faraway place like Turkey, like strolling along the banks of the river in Venice,

or buying another pair of expensive shoes, spending money on risky shares of stocks taking the behavior of a rich man who does not remember
death

we die everyday
it is the truth
but who cares? the hurt locker take off every protective gear unlock the bomb cut the wires
take a deep breath
and say

to die is an honor everybody dies anyway live the days as though you die next early hour

such a feeling
now comes this happy fact of acceptances like a speech you prepared last night pleasing to all who still dislike the reality of terror.....

RIC S. BASTASA
Who The Hell Is Charles?

wrinkled and unshaven and foul charles takes pride that two women quarelled over his underwear
just this morning after he just woke up
from his drunken sleep
last night

he smiles in a corner and prides himself about these crazy women competing for the big bulge
between his hairy legs

he is 58
and his abs are gone his legs shaky
and his chest
looks like empty

he laughs
at these women
pulling their hair and tearing their blouses and hitting each other with stilleto shoes

(common charles how much money did you pay for each whore
on this
midlife crisis of your

what the hell is this charles!)
your wife left you, and there you are padding your brief with fresh eggplant and throwing your money
to these cheap whores
at the pub)

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Wants To Live In The Desert?

no one wants to live in the sands of the desert
even if the sun tells you that in there
you and only you
finally owns it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Who Was That Bird In Your Poem?

and who was that bird in your poem?

she asked
you answered
it could be me or her or him
or anybody
and she felt that we conspired against her such a poor bird

what a rich poem!

RIC S. BASTASA
Who You Are And Who I Am

who you are
depends on your choices day by day calendar by moment and so too

as to who I am depends on what I take and what I spit out from my mouth

it is this responsibility of choosing I make and unmake myself I love and unlove
I assemble and disassemble the parts of me until I find myself whole again

you too, and then we,
we take the responsibility of taking the risks of a commitment

something that we can say this is worth living and this is worth dying for

RIC S. BASTASA
Who You Are To Me

if you read these lines this morning these lines that miss you these lines that say i love you these lines are dying to touch you to hug and kiss you these lines that know every inch of you if you read these lines well enough then you know who i am

RIC S. BASTASA
Whoever Brought Me Here

must take me back.

my permission
was never asked.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whom You Think Had Fallen Short Of Love

anything comes here and goes there just a matter of entrance exit, door window, open space sky, air, and tree tops, then fall into the grass, to join with the rest of those that keep moving, ants, hoppers, not, not detesting the caterpillars, and well, you know the story about those that finally get their wings back, as butterflies.

there is this feeling that you have been there, been there been there, nothing astonishing as before, when you first saw a gnat, an ass, a dumb nitwit, a bee, that piece of sting sticking in your navel,

a pin falling on the red carpet, a burst of a gun, contrast of dark and light, and words and silence, and memories flashing in your mind, black and white, oft white and tangerine, mystical in your mind, half asleep, half awake, half-dead, but so awake, beside someone, whom you think had fallen short of love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why

there are reasons why we have gone to other places eye mistook us as hedonists as people who have no pity for money squandering time and lusting on the views of the lakes and yachts despite the hunger of other people somewhere in Africa and the recession in America in Greece the workers are striking people pretend that they know our hearts and they condemn us that they know the language of our minds and they make conclusions ah, we live our lives the way we want it we know our hours and they are short.

but we do not mind them

RIC S. BASTASA
Why A Love Poem Is Always Relevant...

i plan to write why a love poem is no longer relevant, tried to figure out the rationale for trying i stop i pause and then i raise my head went to the mirror and find myself again, and i have arrived to a place where i once left, and where i was once left out, a place where i should have cried but i did not because i simply couldn't let a tear fall for no valid reason, and this is it, a love poem is always relevant, since it never moved a mountain, never consumed the sea, never stopped the clouds, and this i concur, as i have just recently read yours:

it is nice. as always love unrequited blooms like a cactus with red petals above the thorns in the same desert.

over and over again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Are We Here?

there is this sickness that comes and you have no power to block it it is like a monkey that comes at your temple door and you have no way of driving it you leave leaving everything important to that monkey spreading banana peelings on the alter of your sacred nook you watch at a distance where the monkey plays monkey upon itself you are sleepy, you fall into a deep slumber the monkey comes inside that dream and you are helpless without your hands and feet you cough, you struggle to vomit there is no cure for this sickness nothing comes out and you are feeling toxic does that is why we are here.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Are You Against Freedom?

and so
are you this Aladdin
saying
ABRACADADRA
to the wind

look, in this new age,
of freedom,
that cave of despair
no longer
listens

say the dabadabodabubibi shamamimimommu, kalabashibashashi

perhaps,
it will.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Are You Ignoring Me?

friends, we call ourselves friends, used to be
whatever i have
we share, always you get half of the burger i eat, always you share. we always move together on borrowed time, we always read together on borrowed books, those times when we were poor and wretched and disregarded by them,

i guess, you have learned the tricks of distance its fruits, indifference, its ways, hectic schedules, and the flow of which is rapid, like the Niagara, the falls of affection and remembering

you have always ignored me now my hello
muted, what has happened then, tell me?

we always shared half of what i have
you have taken
half of what i am, shall i continue living
on this incompleteness? you have ignored me
always
like you are always, offline, offline, you have challenged me enough after 26 years, i have also learned the tricks of a hundred

indifferences,

i am taking this road, you have taken that you have been silent i beg, i bet, i cannot die alone, i want to live, i want still to know why, my friend, you left, why my friend, you have not spoken? all those years on a cross-eyed point of view or plain sadness out there?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Are You So Stressed?

it is surprising why you are tense all day

stressed to the full when we caught the culprit

i could have asked you if you are the mastermind

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Be A Bukowski Or An Emily? They Are All Dead

hey friend, dear poet why be an emily dickenson or a charles bukowski or a walt whitman or an ezra pound look man, they are all dead they're great, they have given themselves extraordinary fames commensurate to their extraordinary works but they are all dead and they have no more possibilities they are all impotents and faded and (forgive the word)

gone, gone, gone, gone.
let them be but part of our memories, nothing but maps, guides, to the roads that we must now take,
ghosts, famous ghosts, but ghosts just the same, spirits, their poems are here with us as a legacy

but we are alive, we are the possibilities we are more than miserable with our search for meaning our quest to justify our insignificances these little cravings for light and scent and color these little lives we have

if true to our miseries as they were true to theirs we can even be more than what they had in their own time in their own lives

have become......

sail on man, sail on, in the ocean of possibilities in the vast space of our potentialities we can be ourselves, truly ourselves, that to me,
is greatness enough

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Can'T They Say The Word?

a group of ferns hang on the side of the cemented wall of an old building long deserted by its inhabitants

too dusty to ask for drops of water too wilted
too hopeless

when the wind passes by on a rumor
of rain
the ferns snob it

they have learned to accept the reasons behind their fate

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Can'T You Love Me?

Lady, why can't you love me like i were
that Belgian Blue?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did We Laugh?

upon a crazy day i laugh at myself and i congratulate myself for being healthy but the guilt somehow lies when i laugh at other people's miseries, understandably because it makes our less miserable, ha ha ha on the other hand, i too, laugh at my own mistakes, i just can't help it, for no reason at all, ha ha ha which calls to mind that i may also be justified in laughing at yours, ha ha ha, makes me feel more at home with ourselves, laughing at each others' mistakes and miseries, ha ha ha

i guess you must remember, ha ha ha, we are friends. if we fall, we fall together, if we rise, the better ha ha ha.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did God Close That Door?

He closed the door
and touches you but
you do not understand
why.

You silently cry.
He hears it.

You still do not understand why that door is closed.

Until you find smoke
in the sky

Until you hear about the dead people
in the room

Now you know why He kept on closing the door

And here is one that He opens for you

He says Welcome
This is the home reserved for you Beloved.

Inside it is a garden Flowers bloom

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did He Choose Ida Bauer As Her Theme?

ALL over i watch
the story on film, a woman is waiting for the train to arrive at noon
and asks what time does it leave and she always gets the answer 3 a.m.
and she waits
then the train trails slowly disappear from her eyes and the haze in front of her takes her back to her youth in the house where her mother died

the story may not be true as later on it gets too twisted focusing on suppressed desires that of Ida

i read the poem
his later doing and i begin to understand why he writes on something using some images that i can barely figure out it is the haze

it is always the haze that dissolves the rails of the train
that takes us back home to the place where our roots lay rotten

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did He Lie To You?

because you cannot accept the ugliness of his form because you are unable to swim to the beauty of his thought because he is deeper than the ocean where the blue whale lives because he loves you much more than the night loving the moon because what you do not know may hurt you at the end you must understand now that on this situation he must make lies to make love survive to make his world a habitable place to move on

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did He Not Ask?

when he sees
you holding it
he thinks
you are the thief

when he sees
you giving it away
he says you are the briber.

why did he not
ask?
he should have known why.

to me he has become the most dangerous man on earth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did I Buy It?

it is not because i need it not because i like it neither that i love it, but because
i love you,

and through this sale,
i make my plea
that at least
you remember me
sometime
when you begin to add me
as one of your persistent
profits.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did I Choose You?

given the choice
i will not have you given this freedom
i will never choose
you,

look at me
laugh at me

i have this freedom this mind
this free will this multiple choices

why did i choose you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did She Cry?

she is having high fever and yet you ordered her to wipe the dust on the glass walls
of the house

how can the housekeeper tell you
about this?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did That Lawyer Read The Same Poem Over And Over Again...

you are
the same lawyer

whom i caught
reading

a poem and
you keep on

reading it over &
over again

and i wonder
if you are tense

did you lose your case today or did you find a law with lots of

loopholes which web catches only the lesser fish

cheap and insignificant.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did You Burn That Boat?

try living in an island just you and the coconut trees hear the sounds of birds migrating
sounds of flocks fading in a distance
what is left is the song of this river the changing hues of the skies the coldness at night stories that you repeatedly tell upon yourself

there is a boat that is ready for your exit towards the city

what did you burn it?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did You Not Tell Me?

it is Jenny,
why did you not tell me?

the baby girl
lies all wrapped in cotton warm in the hands of mother

and it is you Arjing in your newly found beginning gone shall be the gallivanting days of yore now you are no longer a kid but a father like your father

before

it is a happy day on the smile of the little girl the universe and this galaxy
i tell you
always starts from there

Jenny in the night sky is your moon and Reyajen
is your one and only star can you just be an ordinary spectator?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Did You Stop Dancing?

i wonder what made you stop
dancing
with the words

did the music stop?
did all the other
dancers leave
the hall?
did the hall close
earlier than
we expected?
was there a blackout?

the world somehow
does not stop
revolving
around the sun of beauty
when one chooses the slumber
of nothingness

it may tell you that one quitter does not destroy the beauty of the quiet that still reigns in the pond where the frog keeps splashing
with its hind legs and then croak happily after each
jump

on top of the lily rising with a flower
from the mud
of its past

somehow
the heart of the earth
feels the waste of a fallen leaf
and there is no exact connection for this that one can point

but soon you will discover
that in one corner of this
universe
a star dies
another black hole is born and so many floating creations too shall be lost with it

sucked
into that darkness that we know still exists
but we are still uncertain as

where and
why.

RIC S. BASTASA
'Why do I love' You, Ma'am?
Because—
The River does not require the Clouds To Rain—Wherefore when the Buffalo passes Surely she cannot keep Her Grass

Because He does not know—and Will not You— In the biblical sense of the word And We know not—Enough for Us
The Dumbness be so—

The Eyelids—never asked an Iris Wherefore they shut—when She was by-standing—Because the Heart knows it cannot speak—And reasons not contained——Of Murmur—
There be—preferred by Old Volkswagen—

The Dark Nights—Madam—constrains Me—Because They're dark and cold and damp —and I smoke and drink—Henceforth—Then—
I must pay thee so tenderly—

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do I Write Today?

same question
but a different answer

a matter of point of view a compulsion
a sickness unto
life
a beggar of
words

everything
are glass stirring mechanisms
they stir us into further stirs whirlpools
me, i am another
one

black and white
the gray areas
they are worth their own shades
disregard the colors that do not exist for a while
here

faces and faces
my face
in the mirror
bulging tummies
oh
how did i neglect
my years pamper myself
with the fats of this world
this sickness now into death Also, (forgive this mimicry)

following you behind nothing to see beyond meaningless gestures.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do People Look Back?

they look back because it is important perhaps something so important was left there and there is a need to take it back to make life move on and be normal again they look back because the past is worth the simmer, the sound of the past must have been so lovely to the ears, and recalling emboldens the weak to become lion-hearted but i am looking back for some reasons i left a part of myself in there and here i am bringing my body without a soul, taking an arm without my fingers, a chest without a heart.

i must look back because she is there and she is dying, and i still have other stories to confess, .

because there is still a need for me to be forgiven.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do People That We Love Die?

because my son
they too need to rest

because my son
they are subject to the law
of nature

because my son
they have already loved you, now it is time for you
to love
another.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do We Always Have A Home?

we were there when the sakuras bloom
when the volcano
spews smoke and we were there when the winds of the lake blow the sails of the old boat where children wonder what is this all about, we were there and we took the view of aliens, you have not seen it when they were real actually, i did not like it, when we are far away, we miss as always the old and familiar

why do we always have a home?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do We Write The Poems?

for as long as the words are here
with us
then we must write them for as long as we still rhyme or even if we don't

for the time being
we must write
the poems

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do You Close?

after i have written
the words,
why do you close the
door?
why do you tease me
with this?
as i come in you become dark
when i knock out of respect
you return me
silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do You Post A Poem Posted Days Ago?

i notice it
you keep on posting
and reposting poems days ago
like wares
in the flea market
left unsold
last sunday

on a monday
i see your poem again

looks like a commodity
and you the poet becomes the cheap vendor
shouting
for the
possible
victim?

i see, poems
too are goods
that you display over and over
again

and reading
them makes me feel
like i am
this shopper
repelled
by this persistent
hawker?
ok, today
is another poetic market
day

excuse me, how much
is that poem?

yes the one
with lesser words the one that is worn out
yes, the one
that never sells
yes the one
that is outmoded

discount, please.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do You Think That I Am Ambitious?

you met me a long time ago, 20 years ago, i counted the passing years i did not know what your impression of me
was.

when our paths met a few days ago you wrote me a letter telling me that i am an ambitious man there is nothing wrong with ambition it is a positive trait to go forward in life but i am not really ambitious i live a very simple life not that kind that Basho lived when he was once here on this very place of a simple dwelling a leaking roof where drops of rain serve as count for the rhythm of

a poem

banana leaves to five space for something green a perfectly opened window the one that does not close even at night because we all want to see the hills and trees the landscape of flowers and grass we even want to take the roof out so we can see all the stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do You Think That This World Is Not Interesting?

everything has a reason, that is the tenet, nothing happens by random that is a restatement, perhaps an accent, and emphatic stress for those who still doubt.

every reason explains itself, whether you know it or not, they have mouths and minds. though they do not speak to you, or think of you, they think, they speak. A premise.

the fire tree blooms today, and there is fire all around the wildlife part. Warmth is intentional. Fire for summer. Warmth on a hot day. There is a reason. The petals speak for themselves.

an old pedicab under the mahogany trees, the driver pedals its way on a dusty path. a child wearing an orange shirt sits restlessly wanting to jump screaming. Noise in stillness.

the trees are shedding off yellow leaves and the ground accepts a good cover. There is no sound. the grasses are starting to wilt and the moss on the pebbles are dark brown. Time to die.

the joggers are here feeding an activity to this oval the silence of which is finally broken. Summer. This is rest for most. The holy week and time to reflect. Meanwhile the sun shines on top of the world, the clouds are cottony and so white. The wind blows on my face. There is a reason for everything. That is tenet and i know nothing happens by random.

I scribble some notes on my mind. Stating what is not spoken by the sun, the trees, the mountains, the joggers, the dusty path, the child in orange shirt. The pedals squeak and

I am watching and listening. There are too many reasons wanting to be written.
Anger, and pain and bliss and company and solitude. Why do you think that this world is not interesting?

Are you not amazed with what we still do not know? Did i not tell you the color of the daffodils? Or that the man pedaling its way under the mahogany trees is an old man feeling so useless and that the child in orange is his grandson?

Life need not be what we think we do not have.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Do You Want To Imitate Me?

do you like that other half
of my melon face?

don't you think
we both
are boring?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Does God Make Me Awake Throughout The Night?

i know.
He wants me to be a bulb that glows
the whole night.

i know.
He wants me to be a star beside the moon.

i know
He wants me to vigil over his Sorrow.

i know
He wants me to be different from the rest of you.

i know
He wants me to write a poem about the night.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Does My Dog Whimper?

se he doesn't want to be in the crate so he whines and whimpers which is kind of like a child crying if they don't get what they want. Ignore him if he is whimpering because he just wants attention and to get out of the crate. That is one of the ways of teaching dominance to a dog.

Give him attention when he's not whimpering and whining that way he should stop whimpering.

buying a baby pen or something and some puppy pads. Litter it with some toys so that when you don't have the time to play with him he will have something to do. I assume he pees in order to get your attention and get him out of the crate. He whimpers cause he's sad.; (No one likes to be locked up. You can buy him some puppy bones too. ;) Try to keep him interested and he won't whimper anymore. After he pees, you can let him out for like ten or twenty minutes - best time to potty train him.

3. If he only whimpers when you put him in his crate then it's can be a sign of loneliness or anxiety. Associate the crate with good things E.g. give him a treat when he's in his crate and make sure he has lots of toys in his crate too. To get him used to it you should put him in little but often. Start with 2 minutes giving treats, then let him out. A few minutes later try 5 minutes with treats and a lot of 'good boy' etc, and gradually increase his time in the crate.

him time to adjust and fall into the routine of the family. Don't pull him out and coddle him when he whines, because that reinforces the behavior. At night when he's kenneled, let him whine. As hard as it is to ignore the adorable puppy whine, you have to.

is lonely. Make sure you are not using your crate more than one hour for every month of the dogs age. Crates are useful tools but not a jail. Make sure you are giving your puppy enough of your time.

now, let us ask the dog.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Does This Body Negate The Soul?

it is simple
this sorrow is caused by a body that does not follow the divine instructions of the soul you blame it sometimes but it knows its answer it cannot follow the dictates of one who is not its master

RIC S. BASTASA
Why For So Long?

I am falling
Falling to the bottom Of what I
Do not know

Feeling so empty
I long to be
What I was once Myself seeing
My own eyes
In the mirror
My ears listening
To my sound
In the sky

This is my heart
It is beating
You make me wait
You make me wait
Why for so long?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Fredo's Son Knows How To Play The Piano With Feelings...

fredo was shot to death that Sunday morning
inside his office
in his house
behind the catholic church
by an unidentified man who casually walked
outside
after the murder

his child who was
there
saw the killing

blood oozed
and squirted

some landed on the face of
the child
whose small and fragile
hands
washed his face with blood....

RIC S. BASTASA
Why I Am Cold At Night And Having Chills

the antibiotics have become useless and so the medicine man (quack doctor) came and burned some herbs to cure me

they say that there is nothing wrong if i believe
i have nothing to lose

and he said
my father long dead is angry and wants to be appeased
his soul
i have not offered prayers his resting place
i have not visited

and so every night
his cold spirit comes and sleeps with me missing me
embracing me

i have nothing to lose if i believe and so prayers were offered and a visit was done

today the coldness is gone
i feel the heat
of the memory

of papa and his promise to always protect me and my family

memories rush like sunshine on my face and the sickness is gone

i see the quackdoctor must be right Why I Do Not Have To Ride In The Same Boat With All Of You

i do not wish to arrive on the same boat with all of you

when you are all there there will be hugs, and kisses from children and well-wishing of the family the grandchild will shout for joy as grandma descends from the planks there is this kind of drama that i cannot withstand my envy is stormy and i think i can't stand it without its accompanying sinking

what a poor boat, sinking to the bottom of the ocean as you all depart towards some happy homes all waiting

RIC S. BASTASA
Why I Do Not Have To See You...

somehow our roads must not meet i prefer that they remain to be so many distances apart

there is no need
you are on your own path of bliss there is no need for you to confront me about my own choice

i am dusty
and i have no story to tell about sunshine perhaps there is a tiny thing and it will be about the last rain that fell upon the arms of dead wood there is nothing there except the hollowness the fibers that give you nothing but meaningless lines

RIC S. BASTASA
Why I Love This Surging Feeling Of Massive Destruction And How Things Are Washed Away To Leave This Emptiness Behind Me

even i

am surprised why i like the orchestra of a heavy rain

a rain that does not stop for days to accumulate
a flood

a flood that sweeps
away houses that overflows the feet of bridges that takes away
trees

these things
make me remember
how mother cleans
the canals
the house
the old deep well
the room
where dirty clothes
are in disarray

how father arrived
one day in the place of a broken family how he removed the yoke that bounds the neck of the buffalo
even i

am still surprised
why i love this surging feeling of massive destruction
and how things are washed away
to leave
this emptiness behind
me

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Is It That Your Only Option Is To Move On?

the one that you kissed was a stone
the one whom you slept with was a dead wood
what you once touched was already cold ice under the
sun,

the house where you lived had ashed
the fences flew away like leaves the yard where you once sat on grass and smoked Marlboro had become a pool of mud the way going there had turned into a snake ready to bite you when you turn back

there are no more reasons to make a case no arguments are strong enough all the conclusions are wrong the dog i had did not remember me

anymore
it had become rabid and died the cat could not wait for i am not a fish to its liking, all those ingrates and traitors grew like mushrooms

nearby

mother had her hair cut and she left as another vagabond
in the desert.
i had not a word for father.
i do not want to remember that smells like him.

i too just like the rest had turned to dust moving on to the next endless road....

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Is This Dog Making Me Happy?

the answer is simple it always believes that i am right that i am always its friend that there is no betrayal that the feeding gets to him
on time
that i do not bark like it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Must I Fear?

i clearly know my stand,

and i am afraid about what happens next,
at first

i do not have
that feather in my hand to tickle
you,
man of authority,
i do not have the book
of pleasing you,

man of wisdom, man who can make me into a stone, power of the wand
who in one sway, can turn me into
nothing,

i am not afraid,
i am nothing.
i have always been nothing and no one

so what must i fear?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Not Be Drunk For A While?

to be drunk must be worth trying imitating Li Po somehow
and feeling how the world, the night, the moon and stars can be laid so peacefully inside the heart immersed to majesty of the bubbling margarita.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Not Eat With Gusto An Unbuttered Bread?

at an age where bad cholesterol reigns the kingdom of your veins

do not ever think of butter
and cream
or jellies or margarine

eat some unbuttered bread one that is bland
and even tasteless

ey too serve the palates
of the brave

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Not Elevate The Appreciation To A Higher More Delicate And Softer Shade?

higher than the eagle softer than the cotton higher, higher than the cliff softer, softer than the clouds higher, higher, higher than the highest mountain softer, softer, softer than the dust of the galaxies do you feel it now? do you know where the apex is?

do you hear the sound of that vast empty space?

is that what you are looking for? now tell me if i have to go back inward, inward, inside my heart, inside the molecular structures of my blood corpuscle, the intricacies of my nerve endings, the neurons, the positrons, the smallest particle possible inside us do you feel it too? what do you see in there? is it not the same emptiness that you have seen out there? now tell me where to go next? now, miss, tell me what to do next? and i will always do it for you with all my love with all my human kindness, with all my innate gladness.

tell me if i am lost, tell me if i have to give up hope, tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Not Me?

Look mama I can draw the same Mouse
The same cat that he draws

Why do you like him?
Why not me with you in that old picture?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Not?

we will never know unless we try?
Here we are, in the limited now, let us try it. Who are you? what are you? You are warm and pleasing.
You are whole and human. What is your name? From where are you?
You are whole, warm and pleasing,
I am human. Discard the questions. They do not matter. We are human, we are warm, the night is cold and we are too pleasing. Why not?
The night is cold and it will not be that long. Come.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Poetry?

'what is in poetry? 'sometimes you ask me,

'you can always love me without poetry, why bother about words?
your kiss is enough,
what is the use of the metaphors?
we can always make love all through the night and words become all too useless and images become too superfluous' you ask more that what i can muster to answer.

And this i say:

'i agree, poetry is is useless but like the monk who was asked one day about something that he does like sweeping the floor like climbing the stairs like praying and contemplating…'

let me say
'we have poetry because they are there to be written'

my heart smiles.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Should I Be Like You?

you there. Why do you watch me like a stranger? you there. Why do you offer me silence?

look at your face in the mirror. It is very similar to mine.
Scars. Bruises. Pock marks of youth.
Black heads inflicted by time. Furrows of sorrows' ways.
Some spots, red and white. Little imperfections Inherited from our ancestors. We say we are not happy.
These days do not bring us anything. Even a tiny flower.
We twitch. I flex a muscle on my chin.
You bet, we have many things in common now.
I am speaking to you.

You there. Why are you smiling?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Socrates Did Not Write....

he believes in what must be said thrusting in the recall of what is important you should have paid more attention and kept everything dear inside your heart he never believes in the written word he knows that time keeps on changing and words in print do not, and like Heraclitus, he had always invoked that he can never step on the same river twice i am no Socrates, neither am i Plato i keep notes, and write, but i shall not always be understood.

i trust in the written word, and i must be foolish though.
i believe in epitaphs and tombstones, the tablets, the bytes, those that i leave and soon may rise like the dead must they redeem me soonest that i can perhaps hope.

the words can go on, without me, i keep on murmuring may my words protect me, may my letters make you believe my truths.

may i traverse the right path, and forever, not be punished to be back, here, these valleys of tears, these thalwegs of no return.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why The Pain?

i said i know what love is that we can share the same that i know where to begin and when to end,

love states at me, straight in my face
shaking its head,

'Geee! , that is not the way how love works' love tells me.

No one knows how to love.
No one knows where to begin it.
No one knows how to end it either.
Exactly, no one knows, what exactly
what love is.

coz, it you really know, then why is there pain?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why The Shells Sing?

what does the shell sing
as you put it
near your ear?

and you listen
attentively
to the music

how does it sound?

so hollow
it so lonely so deep

you will tell her tomorrow

RIC S. BASTASA
Why There Are No Seeds Growing In The Garden Anymore?

because the trees
have grown so tall
and the fruits are many...

because the flowers are blooming
and there are no more spaces for the seedlings....

because the beach is so calm and the blueness has become so inviting...

the seeds can wait
always
for the next planting season...

RIC S. BASTASA
Why They Are Not Into Laughter Anymore.

well it's been years and here we are gathered again on the beach with relatives and some close friends.

been from a long journey.
one from madrid, the other from london. Yes, the one from singapore is sleepy.

what is happening here?
everyone is busy with their cellphones and the roasted pig is getting cold. The wine lost the chill already.

i am trying to take you all back into each other's conversation, perhaps, reminiscing childhood
and the common bonds.

Susan is still the silent type, keeping all things to herself. Just saying Madrid is losing grip with its economy period.
And Cely is going back to London, not as a tourist but as another domestic helper part timing as caterer to the rich ones.
She did not marry. She does not have a child either.

Mimi is with her daughter.
She just finished her accountancy and will be taking her board exam this july. Her other daughter married early, got a baby and she did not like her happy-go-lucky husband so she drove him away.

what is this all about? times indeed runs so fast and it changes us. Now we are escaping thru these cellphones. Unable to connect back. Or does not really like to be connected.

someone is taking pictures of the trees which had grown taller. Leaves and heaps of it are gathered on its roots. Rotten ones. keep it healthy.

we know what she is suffering. she told us she can eat anything she wants despite doctor's advice. Roasted pig and medium rare steaks.

the doctor says she has only six months to live. stage four breast cancer. who cares? she said. she has no one. No husband No child. Somewhere in London she lives alone, and she is no longer going back there.

now i understand why are they all busy with their cellphones. Why they are not into laughter anymore.
Why This Poem Is Born

this is my only chance to be alone and be myself again in the middle of this crowd, where all voices speak, and no one is heard this is the voice inside the bottom of my heart

beneath the layers of my thoughts

in the forest
there lies this niche where i can be so
at home and so silent

this is the craving of the restless soul trying to find a place to be in the peace and quiet of its solitude

RIC S. BASTASA
Why Worry?

About the past, it is gone
About the future that you hope for, it is still absent Now, be yourself in this hour
It is you in it now and there is no other

Why worry? Did not God tell you that Everything happens for the best in you Everything happens to bring the best in you

What you need is a sponge to wipe out your past A red rose to make your present sweet And a kiss to salute and meet your future

Why worry then? Relax and take your deep breath.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why You Should Not Stereotype A Slum...

went inside a dark alley in that poor slum which far from what we thought is not that gloomy and glum there are children there without a home and with the music from their empty tin cans they all sing and dance.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why?

why should i carry a heart that hates?
why should i have a smile that fades?
why should i touch inorder to hurt?
why should i have friendships that fail?

the heart must love, the smile must never fade, the touch must not hurt, this friendship we have must not fail are you stil there, my friend?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why? (How Can We Understand Why?) looking at what inspired the man

is not that really good and smooth and flowing

there are rough edges of wood imbalanced perspectives some parts are not really in place there are places that sow the seeds of envy
and lay the grounds for
death

somehow you are put there (without your permission) and you wonder for a while

why?

there are no answers
there are echoes of the mountains that do not know you the clouds are less interested and the sea as usual is noisy

why?

you mend some broken hearts yours is not you walk away looking for something undefined you pick up stars that evade your gaze you follow rivers looking for the outlet to the sea

why?

you concoct answers you lay on the grass rest your body and put your hands on your forehead it is nighttime
there is no one here and you are longing for something undefined and it is always, same, same, same, query

why?

RIC S. BASTASA
Why? Because....

some asks me why i write poems well, i can afford to waste my time.

RIC S. BASTASA

why do you prey
on the lowly?
why do you
argue with the poor?
why do you
mock them with your education?
why do you
kill their aspirations?
why do you
not give them the slightest idea of hope
its flicker, even just a flicker?

what is it that you are telling the Lord when you go to church everyday?

i am just asking you whose anger does not know what subsiding really means.

RIC S. BASTASA
Why? In Loneliness We Keep Doing Things like lima beans, loneliness ripens and from its pods things begin to drop soundlessly on top of the grass

the season change and the pods rot and the beans dry in the sun and gets wet in the rain and then something sprouts again another form of lonely lima beans grow on the soil

loneliness begets loneliness and forever keeps the cycle the world knows this in fact, it is this that keeps it going.

RIC S. BASTASA
Whynot?

why do we always have to fish
here?

did we not have enough of these and those
and that?

why not have some sundays
where we just sit watch the water
and leave all those fish alone enjoying their swim
and their freedom?

RIC S. BASTASA
Widowed Justice...

i,
demand justice
says the widow to the people who mourn for her
the flowers wilted and the niche is buried deep down six feet
under, like a movie of sorts, the people left her, alone, headless, veils black and hairs spangled, like worms like she is the rotten body now bare bones
inside her room, sleepless till dawn

there is no justice, time is narrow like a door that admits no one, like a window closed against any air of possibilities

RIC S. BASTASA
Wiener Schnitzel In Vienna

aunt gomolka
serves a speciality originating from the Italian
'costoletta milanese' -
breadcrumbed
and fried veal escalope,
frequently served with
Erdäpfel Salat

RIC S. BASTASA
Wife...

she is the most important lady of the house all the dogs that she is feeding well come and meet her at the door as she is showered by the hairs of their wagging tails.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wild, Wild Heart....

i simply hate
it when you want to become
myself

you tell me
you sacrifice your identity because you love me how cruel can i be to hate you when you only wish to love me?

perhaps is this not a form
of revenge
for the past loves that i had that time when i confessed love

and then
i was simply
laughed?

i need time
to iron out this cycle
of hate,

give me space let me move on with my life for a while

perhaps
i can tame understanding

(o, how can i tame this wild, wild heart of mine?)

RIC S. BASTASA
Will Always Be For Our Own Good...

these are all scribbles of my mind
i have something
inside
wanting to fly away
for years
i struggle to set this bird free
i pity its sad songs
but it is staying in the nest of my emotions
my brain does not work that well
enough
how to get rid of a scourge
but know what
there is nothing that analysis can really bring a cure
a comfort or this compassion for what is understood but which cannot be taken away
for good
well this is life i tell myself over and over again we are inside a high fence and we do not really know what is over there a green grass
a blue sky above us
what we do
we stay, we live, we pray and believe that what happens next will always be
for our own
good.
Will Do.

the way things are going to be running smooth is to write without a comma or even a period which we hate most since it signals death as comma signals sleep or rest the way we want things to be eternal to sound like a gust of air passing by the tips of our hair the way where we think we are going into weightlessness that subtlety of language perfecting itself into nonspeaking because a touch or even a glimpse or just a sigh or the final closing of our eyes will do.

RIC S. BASTASA
Will It Be Solved Sooner?

tinkering
on luck one hits carelessly an oil lick,

beyond control
oil spreads farther than your eyes can see

birds soon bathed in oil, algae no longer growing corals are dying

a marine world destroyed with man’s reckless imprudence,

will it be solved sooner
before it reaches you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Will It Be Too Late?

will it be too late
for you to know that you really love me?
now that i have learned not to love you
anymore
will you come and read to me the poem that i composed for you?
sorry, but that poem has become a stranger to my paradise.
i do not anymore recognize the music within it it is sad, it has always been that way but when i hear you reading it for me it ceases to be me.
there is no more flare in there you have turned off the fire that burns that used to be
day and night
even if you kiss the flame it is as cold
as the waste water at the
the lawn
the one that i throw at dawn i guess, we call it
urine.

RIC S. BASTASA
Will Love Be Gone Too?

when the anger
has left

when fury is gone

love is now asking

if it still has the right

to return

& forever remain?

RIC S. BASTASA
Will There Be Pain In Freedom Finally?

i am happy about this.
this morning, i opened an obsession.
a body, a face, an arm, a leg.
the rule of the game is not to touch but only to think, or imagine.

one can choose, to open your eyes or close them, whichever pleases you the most, you must take.

i open my eyes wide, i keep my legs on foot. Imagination is an eagle searching for its prey. High above the sky.

i spit a part of myself. That is another rule. Swallowing is as hard as swallowing your pride.
Not fattening you say, but it is hideous to me.

what makes me happy is that i am through with this. It does not tickle my armpits anymore.
I am done.I am full and i do not feel that need anymore to be there with you.

i reviewed the images. The colors have turned to black and white and with this colorful life that i have, i have began to dislike it.

i travel a lot. That is color and images.
seas, shores, skies, islands, people, men and women poor and rich, children and servants.
Palaces and gates, and lakes and hands and boars.

there are extremes. You know that very well.
There is an obstruction, we jump over that.
i repeat, perhaps, tomorrow love will stop.
Lust will disappear. God will come beside my bed and He will be pleased.

I do not wish to be in said position and do it myself. I have wanted something to happen at random. Fate shall have hands to touch me and make be new like a sprout of an old seed that history itself with its wiles and caprices had long forgotten.

dthis morning i hear a servant sweeping the yard of this house. The rain had stopped and the wind ceased flying.I mean, the fog is here.

and what i like most about you is that now you have turned into a fog. Fleeting feeling.
You will be here with me in a short while and
then be gone.

It is my happiness. Someone i love finally departs.
Will there be pain in freedom finally?

RIC S. BASTASA
Will You Believe Me If I Speak Of Love?

If I speak of love, it is because love speaks To me, like we are having this conversation About love itself, and I ask love that if I speak Of love, will love believe me?
And love sighed, and finds this question Too self-serving for itself, for love could Be biased too, telling me that if I speak Of her, she will believe me, oh, that would Be too unnecessary of love, to speak about itself, For love to believe in love from love itself Who is asking about love, About me and telling me, she will believe me,
In fact, this would be too confusing, too confusing,
But I speak of her today, and I speak of myself Too, believing about this love of mine,
And so confused we see each other eye to eye,
The eye of love to my eye of true love,
Talking heart to a true heart,
The heart of love talking to the heart of true love, and finally, though confused, and still taking breaths, love, she finally,

Said, yes, love believes me, love believes my love, love speaks of love, love believes in love,
In my love, and there is no other. Love begets love.
That is what human history had always told to itself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Will You Still Write A Lonely Poem?

if the tree is there and stands tall even
without leaves

and if the empty
bench is unmoved by the coldness of the wind

will you still write a lonely poem?

RIC S. BASTASA
Wilted Flowers

my dreams
are flowers to start
with

there is no beauty
in these dreams

oh they will not be of any interest anymore

all wilted flowers
dusted in the attic

dead in the loneliness of cold silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Wilting Time

it's is wilting time says the flower

seduce the sun
let there be conflagration

on the leaves let all these yield to the drying of veins

and dehydration

the sun comes and the flower bows down

it is wilting time & Love says

it's a lovely day
just perfect for me

RIC S. BASTASA
Win And Not Lose

As we talk about the bad things,
The crimes people commit, and how they are caught and punished There blooms a flower of hope A satisfied thirst, that crimes do not pay, That in the long run
The good triumphs over the bad,

But that is not always the case, you know, Though not written,
The bad triumphs too, and they live in their Castles of crimes
Uncaught,

We see all these, and we are convinced,
We cannot be like them as we ought not to be,
We choose sides, we make fences,
We gaze, and then

We say, something must be done,
We can, i can.

And then, after all these,
Some can start writing about us,
We have chosen, and we are good
At the end of the chapter, Sunrise, not sunset, light and not darkness,
Win and not lose.

RIC S. BASTASA
we do not get everything some things simply are set aside when the other is taken we choose we take and cut and take priorities we decide which to give and take which to throw away and keep
for now i have chosen this speechless joy
i have sewn some noisy letters and keep things serene like a lake without rain this purification of pain this savoring of longing love clinging like oysters salivating for pearls to choose words
those joyful chords

RIC S. BASTASA
Win Some Lose Some Babe

win some lose some
that is life
who said that i can have all the candy bars in the store?
nobody
who said that i can be all
that i am?
no one
i have the power of choice the free will
and so
let me tell you
i will celebrate on my winnings i will forget all my losses.

a toast to my success.
a silence to my losses.

RIC S. BASTASA
Winding

winding rivers
like snake enclosing
an island

we tread upon the path of the cow
on this dry season
we sweat

we lay our bodies beside the water

the water moves on and on....

RIC S. BASTASA
Window

a curtain is half-open to have a view of the sailboat alone in the sea

a reflection of that feeling within your empty sea
your breasts like ports without boats coming to anchor
away from the storm

RIC S. BASTASA
Window Shopping

You walk up and down the stairs and then look into the glass windows you pass from one store to another without buying anything you have the card and even the money is ready to buy what you want but you know the reason why you are here you choose just to gaze purposely to please yourself for a while and then perhaps forget

RIC S. BASTASA
Winds Of Change

i throw my sigh
and then it came back as part of the
the winds of change

with some brown leaves and wings of birds
and butterflies
the winds of change
has come

with the rays of the sun with the songs of the day with the hair of my woman
the winds of change
has come

with the yellow sunflower with the humming bees and soft rains
and rainbow
the winds of change has finally come

take me to the magic of this moment
my winds of change

RIC S. BASTASA
Winged Are We

we are flyers
in our own right
we have wings
hidden under the thick cloth
and skin on our backs
we can fly
we know it
since birth
we won't
	his is still our time to be humble

soon the right time comes we shall fly soon when the right time comes our mothers are seagulls we shall hide these wings and fly only soon when the right time comes

RIC S. BASTASA
Winged....

the haunted
house i have escaped

the gates of glory
i have gone away with took away the key
and
finally decided to throw it away in the river
that i tread
and passed

i raised a fist
and lowered my hands opening it to a certain transcendence

the castle of fame
i left
the mountains of ambitions
i left
into the plains and rivers
to the skies
my mind winged.

RIC S. BASTASA
i hold a thread
you call it life so i hold it tightly not to let it go not too strong for it may snap life must not snap
it is too fragile for my hold right now i keep on softness a little hardness sometimes depending on the need and whatever is necessary you are looking at me i am not almost moving holding this thread like butterfly
to my hand
wings clip between my fingers....

RIC S. BASTASA
Winning The War

when you know what to lose and accept the anticipated defeat
when you finally take your retreat
and then learn the lesson when you rest for the night and move on to another edge where the train of morning
takes you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wiping The Sweat

you wipe the sweat
on my brow
with your white handkerchief

do not ever think
that i will feel the comfort of this dryness

you must know the cause of my sorrow
you must press your warm
hands
on my weary heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Wisdom

i accept that we begin this relationship with wonder and when we part i like to end it in the same manner that we have started it that even without you i must still know what wonder is but how can i really begin again without you?

RIC S. BASTASA
Wish Me

Wish me happiness
Wish me good health Wish me peace
Please,
Please do,
And I reciprocate it
With happiness, good health, and peace For the world, Through you,
May, all your dreams come true
Wish me
May you all have these, peace & happiness & good health
The world surely Misses you
You miss the world, in fact.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wish To Hold

Wish to hold
And to cherish
For better or for worse For richer for poorer
In sickness and in health Till sex do us part

RIC S. BASTASA
Wish Upon A Star

falling star
falling star
i am short of wishes on your next fall
bring me one
at least

RIC S. BASTASA
Wish...

i wish that the one
i am chatting with shall disappear for good

i need a magician
to make me disappear

RIC S. BASTASA
Wishes

i wish i do not have wings come Pegasus
i wish i do not have hoofs and horns
i wish i do not have the shield and the sword
i wish i do not kill any dream i wish i have not loved your smile i wish i have forgotten your kisses i wish i am lost and that you cannot find me i wish i have space i wish i have more time all these have been granted with the slight movement of the wand of fantasy

i wish you have not known me.
i wish i have not written any poem at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wishes Of A Love-Hungry Man

beautiful women cascading like Maria Christina Falls

a rain of rose petals from the skies to cover my naked body

a crystal clear river flowing against my mind

you. But i am waiving this wish.
You are painful.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wishes That Remain Ungranted

we thank God for those wishes and prayers that till today remained unanswered
there are reasons
he knows all these reasons and we fall short of our limited explanations we do not have to pray hard for something that we do not deserve for some things that may after all be not good for ourselves the very reason why they remained as not ours to have and to hold those who insisted and those whose prayers are finally answered God says

have been duly punished.

we only pray for what God wills that is wise enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wishful Thinking

reality comes with an attribute that what you wish becomes true

and you are called upon to justify tenuously
what you want to believe

in the comfort of your wishes
thoughts shape
themselves
as though
your hands
made them

RIC S. BASTASA
Wishing That I'D Stop Thinking For A While

your life must be messy,
like your room with books scattered on the floor
dirty socks and shirts and underwears
everywhere in bed in the sink in the cabinets
open when they should have been closed
like a mouth and mind
with nothing good to say
but just the same still muttering
some words which are not necessary
for the day
which should have been
beautiful

you think that what makes the mess is this
ability to think to classify and to prefer
what must be
what should have been
the standards and some things ethical and proper
and restrained

perhaps, you think, if you stop thinking
life would have been nicer and easier to manage
like simpy being attuned to the mess
and living with what is simply there
no ifs
no buts
no 'i wish this were this and this were that'
just wallowing and sleeping when sleepy
and eating when hungry and leaving when there is nothing
worth staying

to cease thinking when you want to
and life would have been one wonderful state

wo/man is a rational animal
rationality, thinking, is its essence, and when you cease to think
even for a minute
you must suffer the consequence
no ifs
no buts
you too cease, you die, your eyes wide open
those that do not blink, like a fish you think is not sleeping
or dead

you wish you were unthinking
what you wish is after all, the death that lurks in your mind, ask yourself, in truth, you wish for it, but you do not confront it

so, why not just live, and think some more, and just let it be
do not die,

open, open it, it is raining now, open it
do not close it, in your hand, this umbrella lies

RIC S. BASTASA
Wit

it is the wit
that makes the tweet

it is not the phrasing or the singing

it is the wit
that makes the lit

it is the rhyme
that is prime

it is the wish that does not piss

i keep this bliss
without a miss.

RIC S. BASTASA
With Me Darling

let us let the kiss
seal our differences

do not put the fence of indifference

let there be no wide chasm between our glances

a rainbow of understanding the bridge between us

when the rain falls
find the warmth in my arms dwell in the house of my love sleep peacefully inside my thoughts

RIC S. BASTASA
With A Happy Face And Standing Back Bone.

then dalila meets
ernie in new york and there is no dull moment with a long lost friend who had remained a mystery as he does not exist

in the memory of one named gras

who loves pinky who leaves danny for

a diony, and the rumor goes on and on

about other people's lives forgetting that we too have our own lack, misdeeds, omissions but for the moment

we feel lucky

blessed, to the fact that our miseries are definitely less than theirs

at least that is what we think

to live a better life
to move on
with a happy face and standing back bone.

RIC S. BASTASA
With All Humility

i accept
i am empty and i am a cup without any tea i am a sack
without sand
a house without a child a monitor without the colors of landscapes

but i am just a man and it is God that makes me full the call for the divine the movement out of the bovine

RIC S. BASTASA
With Caution

it is with caution now that I look at your face and figure out the real meaning of your smile and frown

how you appear
like a dove and in a minute change into a fox is a phenomenon that I have learned to live with

how you devour me like you were leviathan and then spit me like I am the modern Jonah is a miracle that I must not forget

how you have become a god of demigods
how you manage to make and unmake me

these I have learned with so much pain
and humiliation

now, I am invisible
with all caution
I have also learned the art of the chameleon what color do you see when I turn into someone not me? what ill wind do you feel when i also turn invisible, divisible, and into someone impossible?

RIC S. BASTASA
With Foams In Our Hair Seagulls In Our Lair.

well, nothing's gonna change us,
come to think of it,

our wrinkles have multiplied
our hands are sometimes trembling
we have lost control over what is happening

receding forehead falling hair
drying skin, lousy
memories

you see, nothing still changes us, the way we feel and think

we are still the children of the shores
with foams in our hair seagulls in our lair.

RIC S. BASTASA
With God As My Ally

with GOD as my sole ally in this quest for the poems of my life

his voice speaking in the ears of
my heart,

i have never been
to that
writers' block.

do you know where that block is?

RIC S. BASTASA
With God As Our Friend

in God's garden
we are his children and he comes and sit there calling our names and he caresses our hair kiss our cheeks and give us our gifts: innocence, angelic, pure,
and always giving.

RIC S. BASTASA
With Love

with love the stone turns into a rose
with more love the rose turns into a butterfly
with love some more the butterfly turns into a woman
a beautiful woman

with betrayal the woman turns into a very sad moon and when it dies
it becomes a stone again
at the end
hate turns it to dust then grief blows it away
until
it is seen no more

RIC S. BASTASA
With Me

there is no more transient silence the one without a home to call its own for now silence assumes a permanent position as the doorman to my heart no word is allowed to come in unless necessary

remember what necessity is?
it is your mother
of invention.

RIC S. BASTASA
With No One Around

just in case
you come home
and i am not around
sit on the porch and call the orange cat with one eye and talk to it
it is not as insensitive
as you.

RIC S. BASTASA
With Nothing In Hand.

early morning wakings are fine with me what with a fuming coffee
on the table
and this outgoing silence of the kitchen
what with all these unfolded blankets and pillows with your hair still un-gathered from the hell of our unguarded moments last night and more nights to come?

sipping coffee is fine with me in front of this personal computer where my fingers traverse a labyrinth of words and sentences trying to satiate what this thirst has long provided: an empty
throat,

a bloated thought, this sense of trying to gather everything inside your arms, and then

realizing that nothing is kept forever, that each moment is just a passing breath,

that no matter how deep you plunge yourself into the abyss of your longings you surface again

with nothing in hand.

RIC S. BASTASA
With Nothing In Mind

it is always good to start with nothing in mind.
some people kill without motives,
with nothing in mind.
they kill just for the heck of it.
Nothing to do.
And everything hurts.

in poetry it is also good to start on that premise.
nothing to do.
nothing to say.
just for the heck of writing.
no motives.

Do not ever think that with poetry you can change this world. without poetry this is still the same world.
a world which has nothing to say for itself.
nothing to do with you.
nothing in its mind.

That is why we are taking the initiative.
we put our minds to its round head. we pour our misgivings including our amazement and we pretend that it is listening.

poetry in fact is nothing but a murmur.
a chant if you elevate it to a higher level.
a bird if you make it animated.
an ocean of mysteries if you want a little depth.
you sit there. you press the keys.
you expect a miracle.

nothing comes.

you imagine images.
thoughts come spontaneously.
do not manipulate it.
Just write.

you look outside the window.
sunshine arrives on the flowers.
in your window pane.
there are no words which you can see.
you feel. there is warmth.

The leaves of the china flower are eaten by caterpillars.
There is a nest of sparrows.
The ylang-ylang blooms are gone for now.

And then i say goodbye.

RIC S. BASTASA
With Nothing On....

when you enter the room you never mind when they disregard you: after all, who are you?
what are you?

you are just a nobody.
when you die no one notices it. after all what have you done? will you tell them that you have written poetry?

oh they will laugh.
the most nonsensical human being is here who thinks that with his poetry the world will never end that his life will be eternal that his name will be carved not only in stone but in the oceans

how foolish of you but since you are here let me sit beside you hoping that two fools can make it right
and become noticeable by that lady who passes by at us
with nothing on.

RIC S. BASTASA
With Only One Dead.

at the last hour
it will be absurd that with
all these
late things you still have to ask for a pen and paper and write the last poem of your life.

know well, at the last hour, everyone becomes a haze, no one is amazed, and you situate yourself into a maze
of your own
hidden labyrinth. No one says this clearly. No one sees it anyway.

mother's last hour was spend holding
my hands
that comfort her that she will be met by an angel carrying a light in his hands

and with a nod they walk together towards the open door which closes finally admitting no one

the last hour is silent and then a burst of cries come in like a bomb inside the room exploding
with only one
dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
With The Trees And Vines

with the trees surrounding the death of a grasshopper
and the sorrow lessen
with the grass and vines and the breeze grief shortens
its stay

RIC S. BASTASA
With Them

with me is an emerald mountain below the turquoise blue sea with me are the trees and the sun that cast me a shadow with me is a glass of wine and a stick of pork barbecue with me is the night that covers me with stars and a moon colored gold how can i be lonely then? how can i be so alone in the middle of all these treasures these beauty these graces?

RIC S. BASTASA
With These He Mocks I Am Out Of Touch.

we are confronted with paradoxes

i always take that seriously

the more you talk understanding diminishes

more is not grasped in those writings

the higher you go you’ll have less air

the more you move
you feel you sink

the more you try to save yourself

you become so lost
you forget who you are

with these he mocks
i am out of touch.

RIC S. BASTASA
With Thoughts Provoked, How Time Swiftly Flies

Thoughts and feelings, they all come Like undaunted memories When you face them there will Be lots of hugging and pleasantries Exchanged, like long lost friends Meeting in a cafe, some even Shout with joy, tap some shoulders, The usual gimmefives, the Lighter and lighter conversations, Like how you are doing now, Where have you been all these Years, I have seen Rose and Dave In Chicago, while we were going For a cruise, and so on and so Forth, it was still morning, thoughts Of friends, and long years, so well Provoked, some coffees do get Cold, not sipped at all, and you look at Your watch, it is dark, and We have done nothing but talk And get so excited still at all these Thoughts and feelings, & what we All used to say, we all miss you Yes, time swiftly passes us by.

time, time, swiftly flies, and we still do not have the wings.

RIC S. BASTASA
With Us Under the Light Of The Moon

do you wish to understand? what is it that must be understood?
the stars?

situate yourself on the grass and feel its softness

under the moon
feel the warmth of its distant light open your eyes to the beauty of this night

with us together
there is nothing that must be understood we feel it

and that is enough

we love
and that is complete.

RIC S. BASTASA
With You

With you I have dreams
And I follow them Guided by the warmth of your Soft hands
With you I talk about The goodness
Of humanity the light Winning over
The darkness
With you I have Connected again
To the earth
And to the heavens

With you I have become A friend of the gods
With you I have become A man complete

RIC S. BASTASA
With You As My Starting Point

he laughs at me
finding perhaps that it is funny that you are my starting point

of what i asked?

a launching pad of my rockets a field for my crash landing
a garden for my seeds of flowers
a nest for my eggs
a hole for my emptiness a window for me to see
the world out there
calling for my name

RIC S. BASTASA
With You Babe

how can a dark night be dark and damp?
how can a day be so hot and wild?
with you babe,
soft white skin
smooth thighs
button nipples
strawberry lips
eyes telling me
'come here baby
get me get me! '
conquer me!

how can a dark night be dark and damp?
how can a day be so hot and wild?
with you babe,

another day or month another year perhaps how can time be so cruel choking my dreams pushing me to the edge of my existence?

hold me make me live
i am tough i am hard.
love me! '

RIC S. BASTASA
With You On The Cliffs Of Love

with you on the cliffs of love with you on the top of this mountain beside the winds of all our desires, with you i cannot let myself fall no one down there for sure's gonna catch me

for how can you catch me too? you're blind and so in love.

RIC S. BASTASA
With You...

to live in a world
with just a few syllables
and yet
in so many chapters of the novel
we strive
such a state of few words
in so many cares
and whispers....

RIC S. BASTASA
With You.....

hello morning
i make this greeting

it is a beautiful day
and it is nice to be still
with you

my mind is like a petal still drenched with dew.

RIC S. BASTASA
With Your Big Mouth

with your big mouth

Silence--

Devour me

Whole

I want to be eaten

And be peaceful

Inside your belly

RIC S. BASTASA
Withered Leaves And Grasses Finally Burned

Summer loneliness
In my mountain
Grows lonelier
When friends
Are gone like Leaves and grasses
All withered and Finally burned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Within The Circle....

within the circle
there will be always rules,

prescriptions of actions
what not to do
what to do

you have bizarre
thoughts inside you
and you cannot just tell them, those who rule over you

you cannot do what you love doing, within that circle
where you are circling are those rules

which you cannot violate lest you be punished to death

you behave just like everyone else
all stones of you stoning
each other
until you all crack
and shatter

RIC S. BASTASA
Within The Confines Of The Rules Of The Game

as children again we can keep playing our favorite games we run and chase and jump and hide
the whole day under the sun away from mama & papa but there is one rule we should not break no climbing over the fence no trespassing over a neighbor's backyard

when we have grown old
the same rule applies no crossing fences
no trespassing over others' privacies
keep on playing within the confines of the rules of the game.

RIC S. BASTASA
it was dawn
when you went back to
sleep
after saying your prayers
you must be very tired about what had been happening
i stand beside you
gazing with all pity why you chose to love me i went my way
opened the door and stood on one of the stairs that look out into the road without a car
without a man.
the trees line up
along each side without
the wind....
RIC S. BASTASA
sitting on an easy chair
sipping ice cold lemonade at 9 o'clock in the morning Christmas air is blowing

my hair

there is nothing to think about it is all just gazing lazily on the surrounding the ylang-ylang tree has flowered well

last night the scent spread inside the room

the ferns are thriving under
the tree

a spider lives there spinning its web

the mind is emptying and some images are getting in i guess this day will be

perfect
just perfectly gliding without a hitch

RIC S. BASTASA
Without A Promise.....

much of it
are markings of
life

milestone and milestones
of nothing

mistaken sometimes as forms of confession

rather than mirrors
about what was seen before which nobody is telling because in reality these are all harsher than true than truth,

sometimes we speak in order not to be understood because that is what life really is more of what we have not understood but just felt in between those sought clarities are those foggy afternoons where we stop because we cannot see beyond words are maps leading us

to nowhere

which we use simply because we have no choice
we savor the silence we nod we make handshakes to the future that meets us without a promise.

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Affection....

and that is
what happened

at first it was a case of mutualism

then parasitism
and sometimes iniquilism

until we finally live in one house
with boundaries

and then we become martyrs
not minding each other's affairs

the policy of non-intervention to maintain a catholic marriage

me, husband, you wife,
one house,
without affection.

and we wear the saddest smiles of our lives

and as promised we close our doors
with a line, ...and they live happily ever after....

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Any Backpack

Riding on the moon
I am bound to the stars Without any backpack

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Any Dream At All....

you were alone when you found me alone you pick me up like a pebble on your path. you imagine me as a petal, then a bee, then a butterfly, then a dog, until then when you begin to think that i am human.

when love dies, everything goes back. human, to dog, to butterfly, to bee, to a petal, back to a pebble.

then you throw me away, for i am no good to be your human partner, and then i become my real self in the silence of the pebble on the path of my existence...

i do not hear footsteps moving away from me. i am embedded in my own solidity, the very foundation of what i am, what i was and what i will become.

there will be a time when you will feel that way, being thrown away, and then become yourself, alive without any dream at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Any Shore In Sight...

babe
we will no longer
tell you
to move on

we cannot make you move
on

babe
we are inviting you for a swim

on a Saturday
far from the city
into the faraway sea

we jump at the bottom part of this ocean
we all swim

without a shore
in sight.

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Borders In Space

We shall fade
as the sun too accepts the eventual and natural triumph of
darkness

this loss of light is not to be feared it will come as a matter of law and so does fading whatever it is be it the intellect or the ordinary light in the room where you spend the hours staring at space fading is always dying and for those who think more than this or for those who have something beyond the grasp of the narrow alleys of the mind those that do not just have palms and zodiacs or those who fingers do not just feel the cold but also the meteors losing their tails in that limitless horizon there is always a room for falling without any floor rising without reaching there is always an excitement which can never be contained it oozes beyond time

without borders in space

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Bothering Anyone....

your head
lies on my arms

the plane moves smoothly in the night
sky

at dawn it touches in Los Angeles

you smile at me
and i know what is this
all about
for the nth time when the pressures of travel lands on all
of us

and so i did not bother asking your name
where you live
and what you do with your life

cause i know that song, 'what's love got to do with it? '

and i pick up my back pack
move on with my life trying to tell you
that i travel in style
too
without bothering
anyone....

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Direction

Long journeys
make the mind forget a while
what is missing
to the eyes

long bus rides grappling with winding roads

bumpy boats struggling with big waves

planes that seem to feel the casualness of air pockets

time is a stretcher
where we lay our bodies like patients
on the wards

we can be positive
though
about the feelings of going back home

where there is
jubilation for having arrived at last

this sense of being back and being comforted once again

by the arms of home by the softness of pillows and warmth of beds
and blankets
all these
to and fro pendulum like
swinging from here
and there

killing time and burying it decently folded neatly
in its niche

and i shall love it when we sing
the final hymn....

RIC S. BASTASA
Without It Usual Sails Hand Me A Butterfly

draw me a horse
do not put its four feet
make me a boat
without it usual sails
hand me a butterfly
without its wings
find me a bird without
its claws and beak
build me a house
without a roof
make love to a woman
without her hair

dthis i tell you
everything is possible
but what is not
natural can not be
felt as beautiful

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Measure

measure my love
i will love you without measure there you shall fail this love has no number unquantifiable

your measure cannot measure this love immeasurable this love so
unbearable

you measure me again this love like a flame on your oil lamp shall then die

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Much Fuss…

i wish
i write without so much thought like a dance of leaves like the passage of water like the arriving and leaving of a breeze

i wish i could have written
with nothing
deliberative

i want to arrive at a point with nothing to declare

i wish i have nothing to say for i have always wished to be absurd let nothing be logical let nothing be understood

i wish everything is a mystery not a misery

i wish i am just sunshine and for a day
consumed until i become another sunset fading without having to utter any word dying in a moment without much fuss.

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Question This Time

in our noise
we sound like some chirping birds hungry for worms

then time comes with anger over our selfishness our hardheadedness
to respect the wisdom of dusk impatience annihilates us with that big mouth of silence devouring us all they learned and simply watched without questions this time

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Religion

without any religion now except love
i am ready to embrace you

you who possess nothing except faith

about some petals blooming about the essence of withering.

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Resolve

inside a rumor
we delight at the misfortune
of our neighbors

i feel guilty sometimes and i want to quit

on the other hand
it is their miseries
much greater than ours
that make us feel so happy

we start all over again over another cup of coffee
watching time go by like another
unfortunate guy

i feel guilty sometimes but i cannot really quit it is always the misery of

other people
that makes mine so lighter

i guess, this is nothing but survival.

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Strings

if only there were no strings there would have been no puppets of us no marionettes
no domestication of our births in the freedom of the wilderness

there are gods and if you see them you also feel that there are monsters (deep within one asks for once, why can't we just be happy slaves?

contented pigs, singing cows, lapping dogs, sleepy kittens? caged birds?)

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Tears

the way i take an onion is no longer the way my old hands do it.

there is a new technique which i have developed after years of practice how to slice it half and not peel it how to think that unlike us it has no heart at all and with the sharp knife that i have whetted for years wasting so much water under that bridge

i have done it without anymore shedding any drop of tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
Without The Blackouts

without the blackouts
he could have been first for he also loved so well
light,
without the darkness light would not have been too visible
at the beginning of
twilight
without the air
the wings find no use without the waves of the sea the winds would not be felt without my mind the heart will not be important
and without feelings reasons will have no place to stay
all things are of use
to one another
no one is complete everyone is interdependent
a word uttered
can also describe your
silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Without The Use Of Words Your Minds Meet Towards Same Destination on the same path

weary you take rest
seated on the same
stone

preoccupied in your mutual silences
you restart a journey

without the use of
words
your minds meet towards same destination

what is awe to all
is none to yours
same stars, same moon same pains

RIC S. BASTASA
Without The Windows

without the windows
where can the frames be?

without the space where can air be and all those who thrive because there is an emptiness between arms and lips and bodies without my emptiness what is the use of you?

without this space between us where can we be?

this nothingness makes us meet once again let us love it, embrace it and make love to it do we have a choice, my dear?

maybe you, on some uncertain terms, but i have to be honest, i have none, i have only you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Without You

without you
i can go on
it has always been
this way
without you

RIC S. BASTASA
Without You By My Side

Whenever I’m sad
Don’t leave my side
It makes me more sad
If you’re not there

You make my problems go away With just those simple words you say You know exactly what to say To take it all away

I’m very grateful to have you in my life Because you are my angel from up above I don’t ever want to leave you side Because without you nothing else matters

RIC S. BASTASA
Without You From The Beginning

something was nice without you the one for whom my love professed the emptiness is the fertile ground of growth for all those seeds
of poetry....
the time has come to detest your presence and given the choice by the gods poetry or your love and your face to kiss
i have chosen the beauty of words the life of my emotions the conversations with time

RIC S. BASTASA
Without You In My Life

dr the clouds are brown dr the sea black dr the sun blue and the land gray dr the apple violet dr the air rusty
dr
dr everything seems to be dr in disarray
dr the colors not fitting dr life too biting
dr & gone is the rainbow dr my life without you.

dr RIC S. BASTASA Without You In That Big City

away from you
i am inside this big city
trying to please myself with its lights and busy streets
some exotic restaurants
and night
spots

i fell like i am
a car
with a leaking gasoline tank

i have seen the path that i have walked
and there is a line of the leaking gas

i am afraid that another crazy guy
with a matchstick
shall put it to flames

inside my heart
another war of fire
another
conflagration shall happen
and i have no other place to run
for shelter

who can help me
this time?
Without You On A Broken Day

i can live
on a day without you on a broken day

but i cannot live on a wholesome night
without you

RIC S. BASTASA
Without You Tonight

all i need is a pebble inside
the cup
of my palms

there is no need
for words even not a syllable
or a vowel
in my tongue

i need the full moon
above my head

pleasing to my eyes, this time

my heart sings
alone

RIC S. BASTASA
Without You What Are Dreams?

They say
without dreams
what are you?

He says
without you what are dreams?

RIC S. BASTASA
Without Your Permission

some things are meant to be lost others thrown away
just like that

the people you trust, sometimes, are the people taking them away and you begin to think, i am wronged.

trust can be misplaced, like a love that you want to give,
but never taken,

like a seed that you throw away but grows not in your soil.

like a person you leave in the house while you take a break somewhere,

and when you come back
you notice that some things are missing very important details of a landscape

but out of love, or respect, simply that way to buy peace, you simply ignore, and move on with what is next,

because those things are meant to be taken, to be lost, to have been given at the right time, but which had already been taken, always without your permission.

Without.....

the sun without the moon less even if the rain
does not arrive on a windless
day on a cold night even with out you,

the river still flows.

RIC S. BASTASA
heard of the man who after writing a treatise
about the philosophy of language regressed into teaching kindergarten because he wants to discover how language is learned by kids

perhaps in learning how to live we shall do the same

RIC S. BASTASA
Wolves....

there are those, as usual, wolves, in sheep's clothing, but we who live in the castle must learn to distinguish we know, but we shall not act, we dislike, but we shall associate, we are kings, and we pity those who are slaves of their envy, servants of their disappointments, still hungry of their illimitable greed must we, still, be gentle, and meek as doves, as we hold the breathes of fire, beneath the restraints of our tongues.

RIC S. BASTASA
Woman

Eve Priceless diamond
Bezel of Adam’s wedding ring

She has that look in her eyes Of high-
Spirited balloons

Soft hands like cotton Slender fingers-two guitars Fashioned for old love tunes

Hair like Dark bedrooms

RIC S. BASTASA
Woman And Poetry

writing poems together with that woman is so much fun

i write mine, (i am much better than that woman) i ask her to read my poems she obliges with her spectacles as she opens her mouth to syllabicate i gulp some saliva to my mouth this woman is terrible

she makes me giggle

i have her word for word i have her metaphor per metaphor there is no time to discuss

i like her to undress this time i'll take the magic of her word this time i will open my mouth this time i will read all of her i will not discuss i will not understand

i will just feel these metaphors this mouth this tongue this body this most important poetry this love this lust this moment after we have written our poems together.

RIC S. BASTASA
Woman On The Other Side Of The Fence

it is nice to see how you left your soul to dry in the litany of the clothesline hanging there
under the sun
over the fence for the passing air to take all the wetness of your sins

and here i am
too judgmental for you and possibly out of God's graces too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Woman's Fury

you must remember the sweetness of her: her smile and the touch of her soft hands
recall: the green hill and the blue clouds, and the dinner together candlelit and outside the kiss by the door

long ago, twenty three years to be exact, she went ahead and you promised to follow

it did not work out and then she comes back with a mask she writes what you cannot relate, not a hint of what really happened
when things did not really work out between the two of
you

she is emptying herself from anything about you
it would have been a sweet love story now the phantoms and gargoyles are staying in her house she cannot leave

she never outlived what was it that bound her.

this time, love means a lot if you would only say I'm sorry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Women Sometimes

women sometimes
are a handful, a breastful, a body beautiful,

you think they are so easy to handle,
cutie pie, sweetie pie,
pity pie?

sure. they're a handful of pretty pretty breastful pretty, pretty petty bodies..

fondle, coddle, and lots of doodles...

but oh, without them, what will this world of mine be?

a desert. a dry pond.
a well without water.
drought the whole year round.
cracking lips.
labyrinths without an exit.
tunnels without light.
dogs without a master.
birds unfed and dead.
skulls without a skin.
bones without flesh.
blood without veins.
nails without fingers.
pen without a paper.
milk without water.
bed without blankets and pillows.
hands without fingers.
face without eyes.
and so on and so forth.

let me have them all in my crowded room.

RIC S. BASTASA
Women United...

there is a common ground for all the women that i love and that is friendship
love
may come later but friendship must be there first as a rock
of all relationships because when love breaks friendship is still there as a chain
that never snaps

RIC S. BASTASA
Wonder

early morning when you open your eyes
try seeing the newness of everything: wonder.

it is the beginning of wisdom. it is the first day of your life. it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
wonder, everything i have is wonder, every time i have is supposedly wonder, each time as i watch a star, so lonely in the sky swimming in that vast space of darkness,
in an unmediated life,
i stumble, and curse
what stone is there,
muddy, i shall rise again, like that lone star, so distant, and yet i know, so faithful and real

RIC S. BASTASA
Wonder.....

under the stars
focused on the wonders of light one stumbles

too gladly to the mud
of the earth

RIC S. BASTASA
Wondering...

there is this wonder about what is really happening and what is really said, as the words keep pouring like rain in a summer's day, like sunshine amidst the darkness of the room with a roof leaking, like smoke going to the sky, like fire from the heart, like chimney, soothed by soot, like lights turned on at dawn like steps sounding its nearness to the door, like leaves that fall toward the south, like birds resting upon a tree after a long journey things are scattered, and there is no stopping, the winds move in different directions, like thoughts, unstoppable by our grammatical restraints, litters, finally collect themselves like crabs inside a pail of full of water.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wooing

I sit beside You, I am getting Nearer to your Breath
I catch
Some wafts
Of your
Glow
And I whisper
Let us talk
About
Sense

Of touch

Feel me
In the Beatings
Of my heart

Hear the sound
Of drums

Listen
With your Lips.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wooing Summer

because you are lonely you woo for summer to come you ask for the swing and the breeze by the sea under the coconut trees but summer is hard to please and what comes instead is the rain bringing its mournful sound the falling tears of the clouds the heaviness of what it is carrying but because you are lonely and nothing seems to be of remedy you accept the rain as it is you accept its condolences and you begin to understand its sympathies and then you dance and sing with the rain seeking the company of its miseries and then you write: my life is lived, not in vain.

RIC S. BASTASA
Word Play

love is wasted is so much
word play
when what should have been needed is a foreplay.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wordlessness....

in the afternoon
after a walk uphill
exhausted
i sit down and relax
and do nothing

and then i formulate the questions
and usually they remain to
be
as there are in truth no possible
answers

it is this kind of acceptance that makes life so exciting so real

complacency subsumed in uncertainty

the openness of the doors of this tiny world of the grain
of sand
creates the necessary space for breathing

the ocean of beliefs chokes us essentially the myriad choices freeze us to a series of mini-deaths

you shall be like the earth receiving rain and sunshine without communication

RIC S. BASTASA
Words

please remember
my friend
words so unkind
come and go
and so do not mind what do not remain

pick up the pieces scattered on the floor, they are all yours
now,

go and start anew
find someone who loves you true.

RIC S. BASTASA
Words

words comfort me like fairies in my forest
at night
when everything is dark
and cold
and lonely
words are like fireflies on the trees
perhaps
on this therapy
i have become a slave
to words
everyday they command that i write them
forms of worship
terms of endearment
and for such love
and affection
i have become a word
myself
man of letters sounding like
syllables

RIC S. BASTASA
Words And Words

let us have an illusion of words mesmerize ourselves with the movements of its verbs and pretend about the beautiful feeling of its adjectives let nothing be too personal about nouns let us not be too excited about some interjections let us shy away from so many questions no orders, no imperatives no coercions for tonight let there be only demonstrative pronouns lips kissing, arms embracing, neck petting, thighs making on top of each other hands entwine fingers running, abdomens ebbing let all be not just wishes, let it not just be on subjunctive moods let there be verbs of romance, let there be sentences of lust let us forget for once the word much abused by all:

i do not wish to utter it, let not love be feigned.

RIC S. BASTASA
Words Are Hiding Places Of The Heart

words are hiding places our intentions fit in to the sounds of syllabication and most often people mistake us for what we say than do.

RIC S. BASTASA
Words Are Useful

in times of breaking up
words are useful

gently the words must be uttered like some fruits in a silver platter nothing hurtful

no one to blame

words become memories flowers that you pick and then throw away

just like that
as easy as i once know you...

RIC S. BASTASA
Words As Excavation Tools

the blades of the electric fan are making the usual noise in a very warm room where air is nil where loneliness reigns like a queen
of sorrow

its chatter seeps in the green curtains by the window where a bowl lies there empty because the gold fish died because a cat hit it with its paw but did not eat it and it lays wasted on the floor it is noisy gyrating like a body it is boring a hole in my ear

but actually i do not mind it anymore my noise is louder and i am trying to figure out what it is really by writing about it

are words tools of excavation can it exhume a dead idea buried a long time ago because it has been painful?

RIC S. BASTASA
Words As Flowers

ey they let you in and you feel a little bit elated it is their party

ey and they offer you a drink and you like it they tell you stories and you like them ey and then they ask about you all about you not just your name not just the place of your birth not just the name of your parents but about what you do and how much do you earn if you have a car

a house
a business

ey right there they will ask about the details every necessary detail

ey and then after you tell them your story take care of yourself

ey you are now alone they kick you out of their doors and fences ey you should have known too well it is their party and they make the rules ey you bet

you just bit the sand again ey i mean the dust and you feel like an unnecessary humus of the earth.

ey see? i told you. I like it here. In my solitude with the stars words are harmless like red flowers do you remember the red carnations?
Words As Metaphors, Thoughs Too

METAPhors
also exist in the most simple
word
those syllables still unspoken
without grasses in the fields
the brain still manages to imagine
those lilies on the pond need not be real for in our adversities
we can always make them grow
even on the walls
those cemented pavements even rain
can be made to pour on deserts
only if we will them faithfully

RIC S. BASTASA
Words Follow You And You Do Not Catch Them, They Catch You.

as soon as you begin to write from the bottom of your heart fire arrives and you are inside fire that engulfs your whole body but you are never burned never consumed by its hearth by its illusions. And there you are writing like you have never written before. Words follow you and you do not catch them, they catch you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Words Like A Forest Hide Me

words like a forest hide me
and you will not see me crying because my eyes have become leaves without tear glands

words like a wall of rain cover my weeping with the sound of its heavy rainfall and you cannot hear me anymore except the tender sound of a shower and the rolling of the accompanying thunder now i have grown words like a garden of grass and some seeds are groomed to become trees now i have kept my words like wild vines and climbers and they cover everything my grief and lamentations now you ask me where i am, ask my words

oh they will not tell you.
You are my pain.
And there is no word equivalent to your name anymore in this forest, in this grassy garden.

RIC S. BASTASA
Words Like Bombs Do Explode

this poetic terrorism is my jihad
words like bombs
shall now explode
detonated manually from the bottom
of my heart

RIC S. BASTASA
Words Live Deeds Die.

those who said they will help and serve those who say they hate darkness those who say they will come to save the earth to love us all those who say they will care for the poor and the oppressed well, let them be let them be

let us see them do it on the verge of truth

for sometimes things are better done than said words live

deeds die.

RIC S. BASTASA
There are words that need not be spoken
like you telling me that i care for you
for how would you know what i feel for you?
it would be too self-assuming
for you to say that i really care for you
what if i do not? what if what i do is nothing but
an obligation of one human being to another?
what if it is not love at all as you would want to impress
me with it? what if it is just a projection of yourself?
you loving me and me not knowing it
me not believing it, simply because you are also afraid
to love since i may not return that love with its face value,

there are words that need not be spoken
matters of the heart, presumptions that good deeds
are shadows of hidden desires, vested interests,
blessing in disguise, wolves in sheep skins

in love my friend, you just don't make assumptions
at the end, you may regret it, for despite my emptiness
my ugliness, and my loneliness, i also know how to choose.

it is something that i have never spoken
but if i speak it all, it will only be to you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Words, Oh, They Come Later Before The Explosion Actually

words are not just words she cries sometimes and i wonder if i have said something that makes the tears and let them flow like the waterfalls of Maria Cristina

how i still wonder if i have written the words that know how to pierce the conscience and burst the bubble and detonate and explode the grenades and the landmines of the war grounds and theaters of
war

what simply exists there even the word is uttered.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wordsmith

i build my own fire
and keep my own
anvil

everyday
i hammer words

eunuchs
turning into fairies

beasts
into princes

stones
into flowers

a grain of sand
into something
universally divine

RIC S. BASTASA
Work In The Room

THERE are whispers
sometimes i think there are ghosts of my past
am i getting to be a scrooge in this line of work that i am submerged in like a submarine
on a broken machine

It is time to go
The work is eating us all giving us no meaning.

RIC S. BASTASA
Work On That Smell Do Not Remember Anything

then you must learn
adopt to live
only
moment by moment

as you climb
a mountain
you do not look
down

you do not look
up
the sky
for it is too far

you hold on to what is here to what your hand is your eyes seeing a rock
a vine a few inches to your nose

work on that smell
do not remember
anything

RIC S. BASTASA
Working On Some Symbolism

lately i have been working on certain symbolism of his poetry and some paintings: an old man without a foot, a nude woman inside his open stomach, stuff pegions fishing for a parachute or an air balloon and a fish in air a red jacket without a body a man with the head of a big chinese fan a secret exit where a hand feeds a hidden Ernst your painting pains me.
I am lost but soon in your symbols i shall find the entrance of understanding the world within the four corners of your brightly colored canvass.

RIC S. BASTASA
Working With Your Idioms.....

the cat's pajamas are hanging on the clothesline the bee's knees are bending on the floor at the bar's end

the clam's garters snapped out after the little boy stretched it out the eel's ankles broke into pieces due to hurricane maria the gnat's elbow is a little bit twisted after a thorough scrutiny the pig's wings are gossamer like much likely to fool the black widow spider the sardine's whiskers remind me of a national hero who painted the Spolarium while in Spain in the 18th Accenture

RIC S. BASTASA
World Of Wordlessness

ang kaanindot sa kahilom sama sa dagat
nga atong gisalom
daghan kaayong masud-ong the beauty of silence is like the deep ocean we dive

and then we see a lot of things in there ang mga mabulukong mga bulak ang mga bukid ug ang mga walog ang mga nagkadaiyang katahom nga dili matukib

ug dili na masulti

the colorful corals
the hills and mound underneath the valleys beauty that we cannot comprehend we cannot say

kay wala na ang mga pulong nga nakagapos niini

it is the world of wordlessness where everything is set free

RIC S. BASTASA
World On A Sunday

On a sunday
i create a new world

my earth is the hammock it is the breeze of the sea that breathes in me my lungs are the orchards its branches my veins

slowly and gently
i sleep with the hands
of time.

RIC S. BASTASA
World's Worst Poetry Sold For $12,840

now, mine shall sell at $15,000 per line.

EDINBURGH, Scotland – The vocabulary is poor and the rhyme excruciating but a collector paid $12,840 Friday for original works by William Topaz McGonagall, internationally celebrated as the worst poet ever to assault the English language.

Up for auction was a collection of 35 poems McGonagall self-published in the 1890s, in which he rambles about everything from a theatre fire and the life of Robert Burns to women's suffrage and Britain's imperial wars. Bad as it was, it did not reach the top estimate of $15,600 at the sale, conducted by Edinburgh auctioneers Lyon & Turnbull.

Still, McGonagall's work outstripped a collection of rare and inscribed Harry Potter books by Edinburgh resident J.K. Rowling, which fetched $12,000 at the same sale.

McGonagall's lack of talent was matched only by his delusion and ego. Along with the 35 poems were a portfolio of posters and two copies of his rather short autobiography – 'dedicated to himself, knowing none greater.'

RIC S. BASTASA
last night after the usual three-hour lecture of the law i arrive late in the house without the lights on it is a blackout of some metaphors

but the heart has been numbed
and the mind has been shut out
from having any contact with any object of affection

the hands open the car and the feet move on
to the room
where the bed waits

it is dark in here
and the window is closed and the air is thin and the walls are damp with all the mildews still clinging on the white tiles of the bathroom

as though in a trance
i have thrown all the books on the dusty floor and without having to remove
my shirt
and pants and socks
and shoes

i retreat to the nooks of a very sound sleep
i must have been dreaming hearing my own
snore

RIC S. BASTASA
my wife worries
about the dream that i told her about this early morning while we are taking breakfast it is all about a boat

alone
waiting on the bank
of the river
under a shade of trees on filtered light through the leaves

it worries her to know that somehow soon
we shall be that boat's passengers
that accommodate only one of us
and not both

the other side has no name but it is a place so certain and acceptable

RIC S. BASTASA
Worry

the polo shirt
no longer fits
the pair of pants needs to be repaired
everyday the line
of the
weighing scale
moves further
right

quality life
perhaps

RIC S. BASTASA
Worsening A Bad Condition

hardheaded, and enraged to the makings of his own misfortune, created by him alone, but always blaming another, the world and others that care for him, he worsens the condition,

he asks for the verdict of death, and he seems to imply, that those who wish him alive will feel that he is such a kind of wasted value and they would soon feel guilty and finally unhappy.

he's wrong, behind his back he wants him dead, exactly.
soon when he is buried, the will toast for a drink.

RIC S. BASTASA
Worship

worship the word
as it is an offering of your deepest feeling
to God

have reverence feel the awe
of His Presence

His words are now the words of your new creation

You, Poet,
God.

RIC S. BASTASA
Would Today Be Happier?

what if
i have let you touched me if i have closed my eyes
and simply
worked on the feeling

what if
i simply let time
cress my emptiness and had it filled by your
love

what if i just let the feeling
flow like a river
and never thought of the
the obstructions of
the conformity

what if i went with you towards the deepest ocean could i have made perhaps a difference?

if i did not refuse it
would today be happier?

it took me years
to know that you have this space
inside my heart
reserved for you

my heart was then made of
stone.
Would You Like To Write The Most Beautiful Poem Tonight?

The beauty of a poem is directly proportional to the pain you have felt

the choicest words are those which are sounding like
lament

the cuts of each line are griefs multiplied
like the geometry of ice
feel the chill
and the trembling
in the winter of
your soul

would you like to write the most beautiful poem tonight?

RIC S. BASTASA
Would You Like To….

would you like to ride on a ship without a well-defined destination?

would you like some games of cards the result of which is unpredictable?

would you like to embark in an experiment to find a cure to an illness that has killed many people?

would you like to walk in a path filled with fog and you only hear some sounds and yet you see no one beyond?

would you like uncertainties? do you believe in the excitement of a box of chocolates? do you chase butterflies? do you like the silence of the colored fishes beside the corals
under the sea?

would you like to wear a monocle? do you find space walking fun?
do you imagine yourself taking an adventure in another planet?

you do not have to answer each question aloud.
Keep it to yourself. Rate yourself afterward, if you like life

If you still like to continue living If you really understand what life is all about.

Set your scores and have your own standard.
It is you and no one else.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wounds

wounds of the heart bleeding but which cannot be seen yet you feel the agony the pain that seems to permeate the intellect of one who keeps pretending not hurt but burned that feeling of a house ashed one standing to be counted as a survivor of another love
that failed.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wow, Philippines

this country
is blessed with lush rainforest harboring
a variety of tropical flora and fauna
huge ferns
multicolored birds
fishes and
butterflies

crossed by multiple navigable rivers san juanico bridge
mc arthur park
clear waters crystalline
bluer clouds shining sun blooming flowers

pocked by mysterious caverns and refreshing waterfalls atop a wooden raft
some ropes
and splashes

how could i ever ignore this country

my country
my town
that now i am traveling always like a stranger
saying

wow, wow, philippines!
come my friends
we must try again remembering the fresher times of rivers and seas
and clouds and skies

wow, wow, philippines
i have never been
and yet so near the islands of my dreams now these realities

RIC S. BASTASA
Wreaths...

in sleep
your mama
comes

in her middle age
she is still strong with lots of money

your younger brother who married
early
comes with a toddler and begs
for money

you stare at mama
and the fear is
there

she has to choose
whom she loves
and she gives money
to that scoundrel
who laughs at you
and leaves
you with all
contempt....

and you wake up to this lies at 2 o'clock in the morning
sweating and
grasping for breath
wanting to buy
wreaths....
Wrestle Them Out
	his is the puzzle of the wrestle.
no, it is not the mortar and pestle.
not the usual metric matter, but something beyond what your eyes can see, a fusion and diffusion of arms and legs, muscles and cartilages, you look for the abdomen hidden by an abdomen, there are no mouths, strictly no tongues, but there are lots of fingers and toenails.
whose face is that? it is twisted.
Whose mouth is that? it is twitching.
whose faces faces whom? Butts and bottoms. Could be robert's?
Could be ric's? Two bodies wrestling fate. The stars bet their light. The moon is awed. The night gets darker.
No one wants to go home. Everyone is watching the wrestle. All flesh.
The pressure builds like a muscle.
My neck is bound by an elbow.
The elbow is bound by the thigh.
There is prison and bars and rings.
Knobs. Locks. No keys.

We struggle to be free.
We hold and then we loosen.

RIC S. BASTASA
Writ Of Amparo

my love i am lost give that writ of Amparo give my shelter for i am homeless

open your arms
where my body can rest

let me be restful
in the warmth of your thighs

RIC S. BASTASA
Write A Poem For Me....

1. Got a giant (literally) heart shaped balloon from Jude
2. & the kids with inscription,
3. I LOVE YOU TODAY, TOMORROW & FOREVER.
4. It is now floating in our living room.
5. I wish
6. they could just volunteer to do all the chores 7. &
8. the driving errands.
9.
10. Ha, ha, ha, ha.
11. Valentines is FUN with all the roses 12. &
13. chocolates (even in the office).
14. We are lucky and blessed!
15. 'grateful & appreciative

(I am entertaining the possibility of myself being relieved from writing a poem.

Copy and Paste and it is originally from the bottom of the prose of your
heart.

why not?)

RIC S. BASTASA
Write A Poem In Utter Simplicity

do not complicate what is obvious
to our senses

our sense of touch
does not require
so many words

feel and write
do not ever think some more it will just be painful watch the images

pass
just a glance
do not stare much there will be so much glare
so much light
injuring your eyes

in a moment
of truth
close your eyes
and then
open your heart

it will be restful like a good night's sleep a nice dream
where harsh reason cannot have dominion

RIC S. BASTASA
Write About The Desert Rain

canary yellow sand

the lonely man walks on the sands of the desert one evening and whistles to the dying sun

and then as the moon comes out
from where the sun
just left

he stands still and looks for the missing stars the desert rain has come and his eyes are teary
and blurred.

RIC S. BASTASA
Write Erase Write Erase

d this is what happens to this poem when you have nothing to write tonight....write, erase, write, erase

you are waiting
for an inspiration that does not come you keep on waiting and then something comes you write it, you think about it, you read it and you find nothing worth the letter you assign to it then you erase it and you are honest enough to admit that there is nothing

beautiful
not even a purpose, and then you write the word again, you ponder, there is nothing worth its existence there is nothing to grow in that word chosen you erase it again, you write it and then there is this space of thinking, what is it? you ask. what is it really?

it is this denial.
this negation of
what you are
that keeps you writing.

you stand by the window. Look out the road. You see a dog, and it is howling again to the moon
and to the wrong tree
it is barking.

RIC S. BASTASA
Write For Someone Definite

if you write
an old writer says (who never got famous somehow but left an imprint in
you)

write for someone
definite
someone whose name
rings to your ears
like a church bell

pretend you are talking to
a god
and you are offering
your thoughts
and heart and
even your soul

do not say you are here to save the world that would be too much of a burden and you cannot carry it yourself

say you are saving yourself and there is no other way except to state this message to the one greater than you

it is accepted
this is something divine
too solemn to be uttered to sacred to be revealed

and thus the metaphors
come in
like masks to your face the words are said
not for what they mean to be
and so the world grows
flowers on the hills
and the rivers flow in all directions and thus springs
freedom

and beauty too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Write For Someone Definite, ....

if you write
an old writer says
(who never got famous somehow
but left an imprint in
you)

'write for someone
definite,
someone whose name
rings to your ears
like a church bell'....

'pretend you are talking to
a god
and you are offering
your thoughts
and heart and
even your soul'.....

do not say you
are here to save the world that would be too much of a burden
and you cannot carry it yourself

say you are saving yourself and there is no other way excep t to state this message
to the one greater than you

it is accepted
this is something divine
too solemn to be uttered
to sacred to be
revealed

and thus the metaphors
come in
like masks to your face
the words are said
not for what they mean to be

and so the world grows
flowers on the hills
and the rivers flow in all directions
and thus springs
freedom

and beauty too.

RIC S. BASTASA
Write It Still...

at noon
the voice comes

the usual
uninvited guest

this time when you are about to float upon a siesta

when you are too

tight upon a thorough morning scrutiny

of what lies open before you

like an overused
sofa.

RIC S. BASTASA
Write Me A Poem Which Has Nothing To Say...

why should something so important
be said?

or why should....
will that matter?

i am tired of all these bickering

a drop of blood
a dew, a tear
some sweat
drops

a spit, a venom
from your snake,

a smoke, a gun burst,
a bomb, a drop of water
from the sky

a speech of denial,
an euphemism from a well-rounded ambassador of deception,

a divided country
a dumb herd of sheep,
a fleeting school of fish,

a red rose on a glass vase
by the window
facing the sun rising from the hills

a frame of a window and you sitting there as another silhouette of art.

RIC S. BASTASA
Write To Me In Simplicity

Simple words
Put them there
Black and white
No colors no laces no tendrils

“love me”

is enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
Write Your Word And Whirl And Whorl

now is the right time to write your word and whirl and whorl are you sad? tell me you're not are you happy? think about it when someone leaves you you find it hard to accept and you fetter yourself with avoidance and denial and anger now write what you feel on a clean slate of your new beginning it is not that you need a drink or a potion of instant forgetting there is no such thing honey there is only that gentle acceptance of the fact that people do not stay beside us forever that goodbyes are necessities of life that deaths are tests that arrivals are just palliatives that after all, life is here with its sister death that nature is doublefaced with nights and days with stupor and fervor learn the ways of humanity for after all that the kind of stuff that we are made of, bluntness that injures, sharpness that kills, gentleness that cures, love that heals, and death that ends and redemption that promises eternity that hopes.

RIC S. BASTASA
Write, Write, Write

Write in the language you dream in.
But this had never made sense as far as I remember, I’ve never dreamt in nouns and verbs, but always in huge boxes,
or dark abandoned malls, or long flights
where my slippers are lost and my baggage,
missing.

Perhaps i should write in the language that wakes me
That keeps me restless, that feeds my hunger,
that reminds me that i am alive.
it’s a matter of hearing the heartbeat of one’s words

I can’t wait for more writers to write Perhaps if the work of critics and teachers will eventually bear fruit, it will not be too far off that the streets of my town will one day be filled again with the lyrical lilt of my own language

I also can’t blame those who continue to write in English and live in English

which is easy to dismiss as snooty and elitist,
and alien—
even if it is the same village street, the same home
that is being woven into words.

A tongue only becomes alien when we keep it at the gate,
at the door.
The stranger is only as strange as when we do not know his name, and he does not know ours.

the job of the writer is not really to master his language, but to make it his own.
Not just to study its syntax and shape but to invite it into his home.

To kidnap bored English from the court offices and banks
and schools,
and bring it to our beautiful messy rooms.

To tell it our stories, whisper into its ear
our dreams,
and if the timing is right, and the intention is clear, then to show it our hearts and we’ll begin to write.

Really really write.
Without guilt.

* reflections by L.L. YPIL

RIC S. BASTASA
Writer's Block Again?

i
read my lips
i have lots of words in there

open my heart
there are more

ii
do not touch
my fingertips
you may get burned

by the fire of my words

please do not i told you
you see
you are bitten

iii
be gentle
with our distance touch me
not

i am this little butterfly
let me flutter over your head

RIC S. BASTASA
Writer's Block? Here's The Address You're Looking For

201 East Capitol Street, SE Washington, DC 20003

Open: Monday - Saturday, except Federal Holidays Hours: 10 AM to 4 PM
Admission: Free

RIC S. BASTASA
first of all
these considerations
i do not really take writing seriously i write when i feel like writing whatever it is
essay, poetry, novel, or plain comment and notes on the margins of my empty diary,
writing is not my bread and butter i make money in my own little way having inherited property and business from my affluent ancestry my parents specially who left me a house a farm, a beach, an investment house, frankly speaking
i can live even if i do not have to work because others work for me accountants, real estate agents, jewelers, bankers, butlers professors, construction magnates, etcetera etcetera
to cut the story short, without much circuitous explanations not to waste adjectives and expletives i write because i have nothing much important to do
and this is it
i am spoiled i do not edit much less i do not read anything after i have written it i leave it as is
and i do not intend to hire editors and publishers for poetry is not a bankable business poets are bankrupt and beggars
they crave for a name, honor, and
fame
but that is far beyond my simple intentions i write because i am bored filthy rich that i am belonging to no one genuine affection poor man that is what i am despite the money and this very very lousy poetry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing A Few Of The Paradox Of Life

when we are too near more is left behind

when we leave
we carry less in return

we either leave or stay it is neither less or more when we are full

we are speechless

when we want to speak
we think less

then we regret
it would have been

the other way around the culprit is this silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing A Poem Using The Speed Of Light

she thinks i am writing poems using the speed of light
could be
if you speak of fast as fast but it is not that really i write because you feel light or just so right because i see a certain light

and i do not want it to pass me by
just like that

like the light that i see in the cyber eyes of a friend from a very far away land

canada? is it far away?
not really
it is just a click away, even like a wink
from an eye that would be so friendly

believe me
close your eyes
and i am there
in a speed of light laughing
with you

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing A Story Of A Lifetime...

at first there was darkness, (there were lies) and then there was light (then the truth)
and then there was this sea (you were given space and water) and then there was this land (stay put and be rooted) and there was control (now you must rule) and there was man (now you are born) and then there was woman (they say there was chaos) .... and then the story of the lifetime is written:

open the possibilities and move towards the journey we are in this together always questioning: why?

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing About The Rain

one who writes about the rain true enough on a sunny day makes you shiver the way he writes makes you feel cold and as you read further believing in him the roof of your house begins to leak rain pours down to the ceiling into your head and it is not just magical imagination it is real and you get wet and happy to the idea that you yourself is crying and your mother who was dead ten years ago comes back to you not noticing now that you are drenched to the liquid of your own tears.

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing About The Rose

i will be denying myself this talent
of writing a poem about a very red rose without having to include at its last line
the sharpness of the thorn
this ending pain

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing And Talking...

there is nothing to write
for the meantime that i am chatting with you there are lots to say and share it is different on this sphere we are more human on this openness for talks... no motives, no direction just for the sake of having someone to talk to and then perhaps from there there will be more metaphors to find more poems to compose more words

more of us.

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing As A Form Of Exit..... writing is a way of finding

an exit
you feel choked in your own prison fingers
the night is as cold as the hands
of the dead
five days ago, stiff and out of this world,
you are helpless
your calls
and pleas for help
are wilting weeds
there is no rain coming if there is it washes you off it is when you can do nothing about the situation that you opt
to write, feelings concrete and sharp as nails
hammered on paper
stuck, and when it is finished you view it oh, how so unimportant a thing that does not deserve a time of your worry something that they can laugh when you tell them they do not even give it the dignity of their ears
it is a kind of worry about nothing at all
and so you are opened like a tanzan from a coca-cola bubbling, effervescent
and then
gone, it is all air trapped in a short lived bubble.
Writing At That Time When You Were Sick…Or Dying

when you write
when you are sick and having fever throughout the night there is no one beside you there is no electricity, and there is a storm raging on your roof the house is shaking you feel that in a short while this house will be blown away and you just do not know what happens in mid-air when you write these lines you hear voices asking for help as though they are buried by the waves twirled and taken to the bottom of that deep and dark ocean some bodies of children and women some still holding each others' hands lay dead beside the black corrals and the sea porcupines and urchins finally, you are carried by this horror your body shakes in terror like the house shaking its beams and walls in mid-air you give up the pen let go off the paper you give up that consciousness what you have and what you are now is air, strangled like a throat all breaths finally sucked

in a vacuum

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing For Writing's Sake

all i have are sighs no ideas popping out
i don't feel like
a popcorn, sort of
i am feeling more like spilt milk

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing In A Way

writing in a way is like taking a spoon of mayonnaise and you brush it on one side of a sandwich
and you take another
clean sandwich and you join them together into one edible sandwich to fill your empty stomach
and then you
regret having done such a meaningless routine when you could have talked instead to a friend waiting for you at the porch of your house

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing In Thin Slices...

it is like a big tuna that lands in the shores of your mind, you view it and it is too big for your keeping you take a sharp knife then have a thin incision you open the think slimy skin and slice but a very small and thin portion of its raw flesh
less the blood

dthis is sushi poetry your wasabe is the clear sea your chopstick your skinny fingers your long tongue savors the rawness of this delicacy

in real life we do not take much of the fish body only thin slices and then we make conclusions without causing much ruin of what is big and unaccounted for you set the big fish free into the deep ocean

it has its own destiny you have taken the sample of what it tastes of what it is all about & that is surely enough

then you go on with a stick in your hand you scurry the sands for those tiny diamonds under the midday sun.

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing Is Like

One that I had in a dream I was a bird flying high Smooth air on my wings
Then I suddenly Fell down
I did not experience any Cut on any of my wings
They simply stopped flapping And the air slipped Sucked by some Monster in space

It is like writing
I fall down today
From the heights of Inspiration and My mind simply Breaks down
No thought
No dictation
From up there

Every word is sucked
Into nothingness

And all the boredom
That I have confessed to you Once twice and always Such that You believe that I am Simply inventing things
For attention,

All these are true.

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing Is Never A Race

writing is never a race
no one minds who wins and loses a true writer does not mind if there are laurels on his mind.

one writes because there is something inside you that blooms and wilts and dies and grows some seeds without names yet some leaves serrated and veins protruding like pathways to your sorrows and pains and joys and bliss comets carrying their own tails, stars exploding in their own energies, suns keeping themselves at the centers of their universes, snakes molting on their seasons, cocoons turning into butterflies.

writing is a round ring without an end no one quits, no one can, and if you say you quit, you only quit for a day, for tomorrow when you wake up your hands start to miss the keys again your tongue filled with words, your heart filled with emotions and there is no one in your house who can listen.

writing is such a bad neighbor. It is aloof and never thinks what others think of him. It is self-sustaining and survives and thrives on its own.
Like the light of the sun, it never fails to shine. I mean, this inspiration to write.
It does not quit. It does not quench itself with all the waters of this world.
It is this insatiability that takes us all here.
It is this human nature with its incomplete divinity that keeps us writing.

it is this boat that sails towards infinity that keeps me always waiting.
I write because I am.

Quit and you lose the essence of your being.
I am telling you, when you quit, you accept the judgment of death.

The penalty is banishment.
I heard. Total annihilation.

RIC S. BASTASA
Writing Off Debts

writing off debts
crumpling the list of those who owe
what should not have been buried
and forgotten

opening a window letting in air
spread a white sheet
unfold the crumpled feel the silk of seams knead the dough
more to grow

to write and not to say the word

RIC S. BASTASA
Written On A Friday

i must admire you for keeping traditions, each page of the religious book, each text down to the last letter, all obeyed, since it makes you feel guilty if you do not prostrate yourself, kneel, genuflect, do the usual incantations, as a form of communicating with our ancestors and our God, the Creator, Provider, Omniscient, All Powerful, Lord and King, etcetera, etcetera....

It has been fifty-one years of my life, and i have traveled and tried to understand religion, and there are so many, ours have become just one of those thousand official beliefs sanctioned by those who lead and (milk) us....though it boils or amounts to only one thing, that we are inferiors, servants, (or even slaves at their caprice and mercy) , that we have no right to be arrogant, or selfish, that we are not private beings, but a part, always a part of this whole, this universe, this harmony that shall be achieved...this heaven and hell, this rottenness and wellness, Evil and Good,

I am given days, with names, such as Maundy Thursday, Black Friday, a Holy Saturday, and a Glorious Sunday, but with all honesty, these are all the same days to me, call me an idiot, faithless, infidel, nonpracticing roman catholic, but i am at peace with myself, and all these days, i romance myself with the silence and holiness of a searcher, the restless one, dissatisfied, outrageous, groping for words, paving new paths, cleaning roads, questioning rules, asking for more and more and more, etcetera etcetera...

to fill my thirst, and hunger, beyond the altars of candle filled lighted corners...

O, God, I just want to be myself, beside You, away from the crowd, who years ago, have crucified and cursed you to a dishonorable death.

i do not claim complete understanding. I just want to be left alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wrong Anticipation....

burdens without visible weight
not even seen without scent
not foul even and yet you complain
that it is
unbearable?

RIC S. BASTASA
Wrong Construction...

he says
he likes lechon
better than his wife...

prove it.
probe it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wrong Premise

the last leaf
fell off from the branch

he did not
die.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wrong Timing

when you got in i went out
such is the wrong timing
of your
compassion

then we talk about the proper timing
of our desires

you set the time, the place, and the mood now it is not just desire but
love

yes, love, but sometimes i still wonder
what love is
when two people meet at the proper time the proper place, and the proper mood when everything seems right

and yet
feels so wrong when everything is supposedly proper
and yet there is still this feeling of impropriety

i am 48 years old and you are 49 and i am just asking when we all want to be inside the room of ecstasy

and yet they all want us
out

just because they also feel that the timing may be right but it simply does not look all right and then you are a little bit irritated and you ask

finally:

why do you talk too much?

RIC S. BASTASA
Wrong, Wrong, Wrong...

love sometimes
is unrequited, and the best way to respond to this matter is to say that it is not love at all, that this is just pure lust, and every night that you cannot hold what you love most, you always go into the labyrinths of rationalization,
this is not love, it is not love how can love be like this?
at the end you arrive at the threshold of pain, where pain is not pain anymore but a lesson learned, and you still keep on saying proving to yourself that you are right it was love, yes it was the purest of love felt,
but it was wrong and wrong is wrong and nothing but wrong, and you rest your head upon a pillow beside no one,
declaring yourself as King as survivor of the greatest misery of all, love unrequited
as the king of love clapped by the pains of the majority,
well, you ended it well, you have a face, a body, everything in you is intact nothing diminished, nothing gained, whole, and still full of love, despite.

RIC S. BASTASA
Wuss

feeling like a wuss

the feeb
in her

seems to be ineffectual
now
amidst the shrubs and bushes
she breaks away

walking under the sun bowing her head
hiding her eyes
under the shade of her gray fedora hat

she is not
a quitter all she wished is that she becomes another
Bob Dylan

and i know
all the wimps cannot hold her
back

she simply decides to be otherwise
beginning
this day

RIC S. BASTASA
in this house of mine there are many rooms and windows and stairs you are invited to take your rest and mind each piece
of myself
displayed and open for view and even for touch
and even
for your tasting
not even for a moment but for a long time for as long as all these shall last but there is one door that you cannot open one window that is closed one room which is dark

there is nothing there except my secret longing no one opens it for no one can no one sees what is inside it for no one can there is this fruit in my tree of paradise that you cannot taste

and touch
and even see it is only for me and i do not really like it.

RIC S. BASTASA
the conversation last night was the beginning of our own claim that after all our words do not really speak
for ourselves,

that what we are, shall,
remain unannounced,
we keep it, like an opinion, we have diaries, with black hard covers, that every night we open and make some more Notes,

there are surprises within without, there are only the boredom of routines

i am not responsible for what you believe,
i am only, a limited territory for what i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
finding the self in the self gives you the wrong path do not look to the stars you are never there

look at the ground and touch the hand of the blind talk to the mute and be the ears of the deaf

only can you find your eyes in their eyes
your hands can feel the
    warmth
that is not found within the lines of your palms only then can you hear the sounds of your longing that you can only understand from their hunger

yourself is not in yourself it is in the other your heart is not in your chest
it is in the emptiness of another.

RIC S. BASTASA
one's fixed finally like a fly
on that sticky paper unable to remove its legs from those limitations

the wings are useless the winds are of no help the wings of the the mind cannot uplift
where the body is stuck with the connivance of the pelvis
and the hands

dichotomy...
that gap between the flesh and spirit

must be dovetailed
by a prayer of mercy
the faith that makes us sleep
when the eyes are too weary

RIC S. BASTASA
must we imagine a place away from what our hands have long held as home?

must we still dream of those
islands
with white sands and exotic rainbow birds?

the feet have rooted and our bodies are old trees the fruits are teeming and ripe for harvest the migrating birds are here to be catered

happiness flows here like springs without winters everything here is the fun of summer times

on domestic dreams
sleep have i,
climped wings, bubble
world
here is this chosen
earthly eternity

RIC S. BASTASA
there is a moment
for standing still and just be here
listening, there is more to what listening
gives, it is the emptying of all gas,
it is the shhhhh
of this
existence, it the flat tire and then the filling up of all that is flat and empty, and then it goes back
on page one which has the theme of moving and bouncing and flying and
be lost again to the greatness of finally finding the self that is not actually inside
you....

the wind, the sea and the width
and the length and
the unending and the
unedited...

RIC S. BASTASA
the manner of perfection is always the meeting of what is up there and down here, for instance...

man &
God, and that is on the higher plane but there is more to this kind of philosophy,

even in the basest manner of making love, the fusion of two lips the collisions of two pelvic bones

tongue
to tongue

in and out

body to
body

soul to
soul

more likely but the point is

there is more ecstasy

for the lips to reach down the tips
of the toes

God
stepping down to crucifixion
to find
Man

heaven's tongue to earth's
feet,

the sharp rods of thunder piercing the crevices of
the earth

the fingers of the sun
cressing
the roots of grass

the man
bending between the legs
of the woman

on the floor
the carpets crawl
on the carpets
the ceiling drops

undressed
the moon finally rest on the marshes

how a goddess
resigns
from its cloud throne
to have a tryst
with the horny
faun

RIC S. BASTASA
Xeric

i've seen lichens
of men
thriving on a dew
of available
water

desertic
some have to make do with what is there

on some climax vegetation aridity
is virtue still

RIC S. BASTASA
of all the letters of the alphabet
it is you

that has never been satisfied with an answer the questioning mind uses you like

there is nothing more important in this world except an explanation

always searching for the reasons and justifications

always asking
if it is worth it

if this really matters if this is really true and guilt ridden you stumble upon a stone unturned, blood stained the knife that fooled your hand:

why?

RIC S. BASTASA
Y.

of all the questions
this one is the hardest to answer.

Y?

RIC S. BASTASA
it is summer
do not just stay there

what will you do when the beach is blue when the winds
are cool?

what will you do with so much heat?
when the flowers wilt?
when the fields
are turning brown?

lady, do not just stay there go, go,
wear a piece
fall in love

and if you must grab, and if you will be the crab!

RIC S. BASTASA
Yann Tersen

It is an afternoon
Walk by the Beach

An orange sunset Follows me
Like
I am closely Guarded for some Unknown
Danger

I walk alone

The sea foams
surging from Time to time
Touching my heels and toes

An alternate
Of sand Foam
And sea And sunset Rinsing My footsteps

I am looking
For some Shells of My past

On a sunset shore Retracing It to
The mouth Of the river At the Other end

River
Meets Sea as I closely watch

The sunset
is still
closely guarding.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yard Setting

tall tree
a blue recline under brown leaves on my feet

RIC S. BASTASA
Yawning

the letters blur
i am not chewing the word anymore

each letter slides
in my throat like a slimy jelly

the lights in the living room
sleep

the pillows are calling my name
in whispers

some dreams are waiting beside my blanket

they will again sleep with me tonight

the depth of the night is too much

i am sleepy
i am yawning

hmmmmm it is time to close

everything
is dark,

RIC S. BASTASA
Yearning

when i think of you today, i feel the black hair in my armpits moving in one direction like a sponge twirling whirling
all over my body

RIC S. BASTASA
years and years of order, a century of system, what have all these made out of me?

have i become a piece of law?
solid stone?
a bar of gold?
a thread of silence?

have i become so less of myself?
that seed growing and suppressed inside a plastic pot?

where are my tendrils? oh, they have all been pruned and i look so prim and proper like a manicured lawn,

i have always loved the sun and all my leaves wish for its rays, and i have always adored the moon and all my flowers exuded the fragrance for the night but look at me inside the box of civilization the walls of propriety the house of morality

look at me? i am whorled i am misshapen
i am bleeding and i am dying
to be whole again

to be free, i am evaporating into a madness that all my senses are craving a night nude, a day glimmering a ball of fist,

a stab of stares
a burst of a gun beside my butt a scream for love

look at me, do i look so ruined?

RIC S. BASTASA
it is a holiday today, officially the President celebrates the National Heroes' Day with her soldiers offering flowers for Dr. Jose Rizal, Apolinario Mabini, Juan Luna, etcetera, etcetera (sounds of trumpets and gun salutes release the doves that symbolize purity and freedom and peace to the confused and polluted atmosphere)

i sit and write this poem and the other Bisayan poems for my bisdak friends remembering the past and how we must be angry about the present, let us not talk about the future, we may become revolutionaries again, i stop. i stare at the wall. i open the window, Look at the dry fields of rice, and some sparrows yes, the sparrow unit, still killing some policemen and raiding far municipalities and i remember the moslems, their agongs, and malongs and clean rivers and silent determinations to be free...

brothers killing brothers? oh too normal, too sane to kill another brother in this country and the government soldiers, yes, they too kill, as a matter of fact if you are too candid, like me, oh, they may not hesitate too, to kill all of us, but do not take me by mistake, i belong to the government and i still support it, even if is too hot yet to be hot

again.
Yellow Daisies Along The Path

yellow daisies thriving along the path how full they bloom!

a muddy footpath
some pebbles
the silence of this moment footsteps moving away from the house words dissolving from the door the windows close and lights are put off

tomorrow another name cancels itself from the page of the family bible another child's name is added his father is unknown but the mother is brave shameless they call her silence is her only answer

RIC S. BASTASA
Yellow Flower

Pak fah yeow. Yellow flower Scent on the nose Unable to sense The necessary Throw the gold And keep the reason Let her know There is more to Pak fah yeow There is more To reason why the gold was thrown Instead of the yellow flower Pak fah yeow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes For Those That We Cannot Say

yes, my love, for those that i cannot say
i leave to the gentle care
of silence.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes He Went In Hiding To The U.S.

the sultan did not like it, his girl, a princess in their lineage shall marry a christian

an insult to their beliefs but the princess loves him too, in fact,
she got pregnant
to show her rebellion
over tradition

i told you about it,
and i agree,

it's crazy.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes I Too Remember Primary School that time

mama asks me to sell some chocolates but i did not really bother about the sales

i was my own customer, my best and ate some of them, then hide the rest.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes Januar

at a loss of words
one can only give
silence,
broken
this mind that relies on words reality pointing to another reality
one at a time

yes januar
i do not stop
i am sharpening my tools to smoother
the x's and
y's.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes Like Real Life

yes the poem i write sounds like a real life, more like it, sounds very well like it. In fact, it is real.

the man is dying and all that the woman does is watch him, and the baby cries like a piglet asking for milk, and the mother sits there.

we too watch with pity, just this pity. there is nothing to be done, nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes Mama

got you mama
yes mama
i must move on above splinters
and tacks
and nails

yes mama
who knows
that at the end of this darkness is this tunnel
of light?

surprises of life
mama,
on a box
of chocolates

yes mama, life moves on
and i am
yes mama, all carried away like that leaf fallen from a tree

taken by the great river
of our lives...

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes There Will Be Troubles In The Future

yes, there will be troubles in the future
these, all these, we see in our crystal balls, more problems to come planets aligning against our paths the stars are blinking an image of boat sinking another loud scream more dark enemy schemes some traps to avoid some lessons to be learned more failures to come innumerable disappointments expect lamentations list the incoming burdens and harrowing horrors

these are tiresome predilection another unkind prediction let me have my own day now I still have the grass to mow.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes Tony You Are Right

that the problem with poetry is that it traps us at the end
this morning
has turned to night without our knowing until someone calls us to eat
to sleep
and yet we feel we are not hungry and yet we feel we are still not sleepy because the last poem is still not the last and the last line
is still hanging
looking for the
right word for such a very strong
emotion

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes We Are Brothers

YES WE are brothers
we come from one gene from one body and we are born in the same house where we all live we admit our umbilical cords were tied on the same beam of the old house where papa and mama died time is unforgiving and strange feelings are giving us miles and miles of mountains of series of distances of hills where we can no longer see each other eye to eye with honesty

and longing

yes we are brothers but like the rest of the brothers of the world our worlds are torn apart ripped by our very own hands and we have become rugs and tiny pieces of papers shred and thrown away from shut windows of our sinking worlds

yes we are brothers by blood but in spirit no more now we are strangers not knowing anymore our real names not able to trace our roots somehow we end this strife by closing our separate doors our hands are knives our minds explosives

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes What About Jojo?

the kid
just like words also need space
to be understood

yes, what about jojo?
he is just a kid

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes You May Paint My World be ready

paint my world be patient
it is not as white as a canvass
to start with

i am spotted like gerard manley hopkins with his cow
and this trout

i have some red marks on my heart and
some stains
in my brains

i am dark
and you will need
nothing black

paint me
with the color of gentleness
and the color
of your concern

i am not really lovable but you may paint
me with the colors
of your love

if you have doubts
don't worry
make something
abstract about me
i won't bother
i am your brother

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, Let The Sleeping Dogs Just Lie Peacefully On The Beach

yes, mr. clark, let the sleeping dogs just lie peacefully on the white sands of the beach let them sleep well to the songs of the sea breeze

let the waves be gentle and let the one who thinks so well have that clear and calm
eye

let him pass
his way and let his footsteps every footprint
be erased by the winds
by the waves of the gentlest sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, My Poems Are Imaginary

these poems tell about despair and who will ever like despair? you grumble why can't these poems have happiness as its theme a poem that like a belly dancer must entertain weary Bedouins
oasis to the thirsty camels cool green palms to travellers whose feet are dusty and even blistered grass to some snakes and trees to black birds
rest for the night
tent and wine and bread and lyre to our passions but do not worry my friend these poems are imaginary like a garden existing only in our minds we transport some toads and butterflies and clouds and sun and tonight let us have the moon and some glasses of strong wine let us put our bed outside in this garden where the moon shines and creates the silver sheen in our happy faces we love illusions, we can have all the illusions we need when we are drunk, when we dance when we are finally drunk when we even want to make love when we are drunk & when we make love and we do not choose whom to kiss and caress and touch an unknown body with our hands and lips and choose what we remember and what we do not want to remember now i want to write about illusory gardens and imagine despair that despair has no place and must leave right away let me

do not hinder me write what i want about what i can disown but i assure you, whatever that is, these poems i am talking to you, as a friend, and even be a lover at the end, even if the rest are imaginary, and fiction and illusory i am still real amidst this grumble and rubble

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, Simply Gaze Even Without A Thought

do not tell me
art for art's sake

everyone has a
purpose
everything exists
for a reason

absurd is absurd
and it cannot be understood

we did not meet at random
the plan planned
it

why this day?
what that night?
why this moment?

i am not in vain
and so you are.

what makes me alive
is this sense of purpose i once lost it
and it was never easy living without it.

i know what a living dead is. I felt the zombie in me, once, twice, thrice until i found you,

this and that
and compare here and there and one and everyone, and love and lust, and guilt and redemption...

this sense of purpose this doing what must be done regardless of who we are and what i am.

to sit upon a stone beside a rose, under the sun, and simply gaze

yes, simply gaze even without a thought.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, Soren, I Agree

What this age needs is not genius We had enough of them
We need an awakening
Of those who inorder to teach Must first obey the dictates of death We study again this Intriguing machine
Of this person that I am This individual this you Never forgetting how God Has helped us in the hours Of our needs, the last wish Everything is nothing but For his honor and glory.
We speak what we do
We do what we believe

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, The Sands Of The Desert Always Remember

it was taught to know the roots of its suffering
the sands still remember the sea it once owned the salt and
the cover of
water
the corals and the fish
yes, the sands always remember
they always hope
to recover
what they lost to the sun

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, What If God Does Not Speak English At All?

you were not born yesterday and probably heard it before that if your God does not speak english then he must not be God of course, something arrogant hangs in the air of this effortless superiority that

'englishers'
'english-plongplangs'
claim, which, of course, we always oppose and dub as pretty dumb silly

but anyhow, yes, we are asked again
what if?
what if, this God, does not really speak English?

well, of course, he is still God and he must not have considered the english language that important

and i agree, even if i speak it, i still have this language of my soul,

albeit, in english, for you,
who does not speak my own language, yes, of course, for you to perhaps

understand,

but i like it though, this thought that God does not speak the english language, lest, he may sound so englishly, oh well, arrogant.....

dear God
do you really...not speak english?

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, What's Love Got To Do With This?

we're here in paradise the view too alluring a sunrise bringing warmth touching our cheeks sending comfort to our dwindling minds

do not ask so many questions it will be a waste of time plunge and be wet rise and be naked come! sit beside me i will shower you with kisses i shall make you forget what love is all about this is a matter of survival a touch, a hug, a kiss a busting of colors in our mind in there we never need names and ranks and categories colors combining love a nowhere

this is my body
take it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, Yes, Yes, We Got Everything.

what do we get in return?
nothing

what are we really doing?
we are doing nothing.

what do we expect?
really, we expect nothing can we do something about this?

there is nothing we can do about it.

here, here, here is nothing and at the end well, take it, it is actually everything.

yes, yes, yes, we got everything.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, Yoonoos, The Mother Moment

The problem is you write What we do not understand, what we do not even want To think and yet so necessary, so universal As air
As water

The existence that wouldn’t last That which cannot be reborn This division from one to thousands and millions Spreading in the skies Diffusing to all the fluids of this universe

The mother of creation Fifteen minutes of guile Then to Fifteen hundred years of suffering Who can stop this Yoonoos?
This pessimism of man
His hopes that die sooner Than a petal of a rose that I just plucked today

Nature always comes and goes Taking anything and yet leaving everything
To grow
Vanishing and yet still so abundant As far as our eyes can see

Was it just yesterday
There was this heavy rain This flood and everything was mud and water And now look at this sun rising above all the grounds I see the glimpses of grass Worms wriggling, I see life again Always undefeated, always surging!

RIC S. BASTASA
Yes, You....

the whole night
the dog that they tied on the pole exposed to the rain and trembling in the cold was barking too hard it did not rest to call attention
for help
no neighbor came to save it and transfer it to a sheltered place afraid that it may bite as dogs are by their nature

the following morning
the neighbors are complaining and they ask you
about it

you are blind to all these you are deaf
you have no dog to own you want to be angry
you have no time
yet you have nowhere to go and does not want to speak

RIC S. BASTASA
yesterday was a wild wind it blew me everywhere and i was but a mere leaf not knowing what a direction is going to make out of me i hope though that soon this caterpillar shall become another monarch
butterfly to own a chunk of blue sky a capillary of a red petal of a rose that blooms on the month of May,

yesterday was crippling and there was not crutch no screeching wheelchair and i was helplessly bending to a certain pain
i was wriggling and i fall upon a river raging towards a cliff i had become a victim of a waterfall.

the hope is that soon after the wind shall have blown and finished with its rage the leaf shall then become free to fall on the ground where it shall wilt what option has it, when cut from its branch and deprived of roots?

today is the hope of the seed it knows what roots are, what fruits can be today is the grains of the silent sand light and glimmer, look over there there is this dance of the prince and the princess in the castle of the clouds there is this heavy silence after where we shall be again together there is this smile that keeps us alive for the moment there is this hold for a lifetime of hands that grip the softness of our being we must agree and remember and believe there is this tomorrow that never dies there is this sun that we do not know how it works tomorrow it will still be shining there is still us i must suppose because we are tired of options.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yin And Yang

the tall cliffs
and the rough stones and boulders
by the sea

the males

the waves bashing
and dashing
with tongues licking the bodies of stone and rising cliffs
towards the skies

the females

yin and yang
in nature.

the feet that the sea licks the waves as tongues and the tall cliffs as symbols

the phallus and the tongue the rocks and the waves male and female and then the outbursts of morning light spilling

RIC S. BASTASA
Ylang-Ylang

Tonight the ylang-ylang blooms amidst the darkness and the rain spreading its scents still sweetest to my smell you are still the ylang-ylang that i once kissed.

In my rain and darkness you still bloom best.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yogi

it is when you enter that door of silence that the sun begins to believe in your chosen place of dignity

the sun never talks

the mouth must surrender to the greater value of its suicide

you settle upon a floor clap your hands
focus on the the garden through the glass window in front of you to enter the gates of perfection

you must

hand your eyes gracefully into the depths of the wisdom of
silence

RIC S. BASTASA
searching for clarity
the best of which is an empty slate that which we mistake sometimes for clarity actually is one that contains nothing

as though
emptiness is one of those that has nothing inside it as though when things are in their fullness like a flower in full bloom

as though
fullness is mess and must be avoided as though fullness is pain and emptiness is unloading and must heretofore be marked as the ballroom happiness so to speak messy is noise and the empty window is clear but the pool of water without the disturbance of the wind is full and yet mirrors some clarifications that you can see your face unadulterated by grief undiluted by any dropp of lamentation one dives farther to see what is real and perhaps sleep for a while drowsiness of reality illusion is a little bit tipsy because of so much thoughts unthink, undream, unmind.

www.PoemHunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive
Yolanda

a stranger, even suspected as man-made,
devastating woman,
mass murderer,
a thief, a plunderer,
the queen of destruction,
derestimated,
no cry woman,
irritating, champion of
all evil,
tormentor, cruel,
unmerciful,
most hated, most feared,
stripper of properties, ravisher of hopes and breaker of all our dreams

on the other hand,
as you realize after she leaves you
penniless, broke and downtrodden,

she is your first and best teacher.

and in the hardest way you learned more than
well enough.

RIC S. BASTASA
You

he says Fate your parents left the Genes as the Masterplan of the kind of Life you will live
You ride on the Body Your Boat in the Sea of Your Possibilities
The Port of Your Dreams
Your Destiny
You may not think about It But Death shall be One of Your Points of Exit
As Birth was your Entrance To this Door
Called Earth and Every Conversation Or Promise you Make To yourself and To Your Fellowmen Air and Sunshine are They All They will Tell you that Your Final Home As you are but a Transient Visitor
Here
Above is God

For the Meantime
Eat and Drink
Time shall make the Lead

RIC S. BASTASA
You Will Meet Her

you shall soon meet her without her bandana and you will open to her your longings and you shall ask why she remains single all those years when she was such a beautiful maiden with slender arms and soft hands, and you shall have some confessions about some matters of the heart about women who savor the loneliness beneath the deep sunken eyes and you shall tell me there is nothing to be afraid of about loneliness and lovelessness, you relate like two old best friends to the notes of the piano playing in the dark. There is no reason. There is no demand for an explanation. You kiss each other cheek to cheek.

RIC S. BASTASA
You (For My Little Dog)

why so sweet to me
you follow me where i go when i go to the kitchen and have my dinner
you are down there under my seat beside my feet you do not ask anything except my company
when i rise up to go to the bathroom and poo you are there watching and lying down the tiled floors listening the sound of my being.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Advise Me Always To Imagine when i am sad and i walk alone on a road leading to the sea you advise me always to imagine

i follow it. And i imagine people in the market as trees. the vendors who keep walking here and there are boats the road is a big river and i do not wish to cross it for fear of drowning but you keep on saying that to have courage i must imagine and imagine so i imagine myself as an necked, a conger, and vibrant with my electricity moving and sliding and swimming among the corals and weeds and so i cross the street and you wave your hand with a thumbs up sign and you meet me there with a hug and ask me how is it? and i say oh well, i like it, and without your knowing, i imagine you as a port with a lighthouse, and then i have to go, since i still have to imagine, a home.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Ain'T Seen Nothing Yet

when you say
that life is beautiful
live it well
and spend it well some more on those days and nights and listen to the rain and drift with
the clouds
bite a sunset savor a
sun rising from
the breasts of
the earth

say it again
life is so beautiful but....

actually, you ain't seen nothing yet!

RIC S. BASTASA
You Always Have The Poor With You, But You Do Not Always Have Me.'

these are the most abused word: the poor and oppressed the masses, the crowd and mob, the people, always in the name of the people for, by, in,

how many crimes shall be committed still for, by, in,

how many justifications are built like bricks upon a wall a wall that walls us all out from their exclusivity in stolen luxuries that man robs us all in the name of the people that man who washes his hands upon a basin of water there is this man who was murdered suffered an injustice as it is written all in the name of the people the people that kills him the same people that he saves

RIC S. BASTASA
You Always Know Where And When To End

KNOW when to end this familiarity of self even without any sign on the road or in the sky you always know where and when to end

and that makes it look like a planned event nothing surprising
nothing for grieving

it is like going there
arriving
and being still

RIC S. BASTASA
You Amaze Me

drunk always and always drunk as ever vomiting your life away in every minute you let yourself wasted on the floor and on the sink where all dirt take their proper place

when you wake up i feel sleepy all the pity i have for you taking seriously what the university never taught you failure from being true to the words of the jesuits

honesty is the best policy be honest when others are not college was your idealism accolades and honors you reap and then you were thrown to the world where the dog eats another dog where your poetry does not serve any purpose at all then the tall building where you live collapsed

you are inside it
you have no lies, you do not live in lies to cover you at least to protect you for the meantime that the world is not yet changed you are helpless like the rat caught in a trap the cheese is even small as a crap and you cannot take it

this deception this illusion of what is good and what is bad of what is true and what are lies what to do in the midst of this interplay between darkness and light you have not fully learned the gray area where i live this in-between where most of us thrive you amaze me with your death there are no flowers and there will be no eulogy fit for you the idealist, top of the class

RIC S. BASTASA
You And I

while you feast upon the good things in life i run away from everything from everyone, and you chide me enough what am i? this runner, this shy shrinking form melting to the sun and freezing to the moon i always run away and you keep on chasing me assuring me of your love yet i have no ears to listen, always running away from everything from everyone,

till one day you push me to an end where everything is walls and walls you push me hard enough where everyone is hateful and unjust i have no choice but to face these walls and these injustices around me i summon all strengths and call upon my good thoughts i gather all within my means whatever wits and dreams i still have
i take my defenses use all my senses
this little confidences
i still have
whatever is left
i save

ready for combat now, you and i, must fight these wars together then perhaps we win

we shall drink our cups again and by then, i shall never run away again from everything from everyone, from you

i am strong enough, you keep on telling me
i am.

RIC S. BASTASA
You And I In This Little Nook...

your life is never an empty page, every-days are scribbles figures and landscapes of hills and buffaloes and waters making the usual turns on the hillsides there are blue clouds cressing treetops,
birds never rest, and the air keeps on blowing beyond the edges of your margins
i am putting sounds, music, strings, colors,
i am letting the ears of your books hear,
i am speaking in some chapters, want you to
to be be bold and firm
like me
hard cover, book bound.

RIC S. BASTASA
You And I Together

I see a glass
Half empty
And I see your hands Filling an emptiness
That I have Invented.

I am empty now
And then
You fill me
Up to the brim

I am overflowing
And here you
Are
In the full blast
Of your lust
That you Invented
Licking me
From the Bottom
Beyond the brim.

RIC S. BASTASA
You And Me

you and me
we like to whisper
the ripples of the wind we like to touch
the gossamer wings
you and me
in our blissful scarring
you and me
on this twisted dream we bend to meet
what fate wants us
to be
you and me
wanting to be beholden to the reigning silence
of our distance
you and me
finally engulfed in the silence
of our sorrows
you and me
now and then how can we ever be tomorrow’s
loving reality?

RIC S. BASTASA
You And Me In Some Metaphors Of My Mind....

you stand
and tower
in such a beautiful
pose like
the sun
radiating

i will be the silent admiring green
green
green frog
waiting for
the rain

at night you be my moon
i will be the marsh
by the river floating as your bed

this morning
i will be the
window’s shutters
waiting for
the light coming from your fingers

tonight
be my anticipation
feed me more
of your illusions
for i am a dream
gasping for more
i am this shortest moment that is about
to die
You And Me Making Music Together

i am a violin
play me with the gentleness
of your disposition

you must hear
the sadness of my music

you are my guitar
i will strum your strings

it will not be sad

RIC S. BASTASA
You And The Butterfly

the butterfly measures
its life span in just a very short moment and it has enough

you measure yours
in years and years yet there is no moment when you said
you have enough.

why? do tell me.

RIC S. BASTASA
i have written some poems about
children

not the nursery rhymes
for them
honestly i do not like to hear them
reading them to me

do not ask me
i am saddened

these children are never
mine
they are yours as you have taken cared
of them
from the very beginning

from the womb
of their mothers

you must still care
for them
till the tomb of
time

i accept i am of the lesser kind you are the mother of them all when their mothers left them you are water and fire and flower and cloud

and the sun

and the moon when darkness came
RIC S. BASTASA
You And The Flower

you will have a hard time seeing
the pain
of the flowers in the xylem
for
you are always preoccupied savoring
the pleasures
of your senses to the majesty of its
petals

the flowers have this message
for
you

better not taste the bitter fluids
running within its system

you take pleasure

and the flower understands this

you too
have all the bitterness
within you
which the flower
has read
in the labyrinths of your genes
for

it was here before you
come and
then begin to smell
the scent of its temporariness
it
secret you shall not fathom

RIC S. BASTASA
You And The Keyhole

you sleep in bed till 10 o’clock in the morning
the room is closed
the only hum you hear is the electricity
of the aircon,
light from the keyhole
strikes at your leg
it hurts
your eyes half open you want to set it aside you move a leg
and the light is still there sticking to the wall you close your eyes again there is nothing to do yesterday you get fired
and there is no
rumor about another job this is it
let somebody worry about you
there is nothing
you can do about them tonight mouths will scream
at you
the light in the keyhole
is gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
You And The Rain That You Have Been Praying For

the rain that you ask has arrived

do you love the sonorous sound
on the grass?

do you think much
clearly now?
does the rain make you feel luckier?

look at the rest of the creatures they are looking for a place where they do not get wet
where they can have a little warmth
where they can
for another moment
live

do not ask for meaning the rain cannot give it to you for now

RIC S. BASTASA
You And You And You And You... But Just You now i remember about what he, the poet without a comma, once said:

too near yet i cannot touch.

it is you.
i open, yet i must close
i am too near you, yet you cannot see.
i want you and i love you yet i cannot be the love that i want to be.
to forget you i must find you in all the lips in many bodies, always i am an earth unsatisfied with a flood of rain, i love you, yet you are not love, i want to hate you instead but i will be denying you and myself. i have been to places wanting to find you but i always create the distance. it is always you, even when i die. they will get me wrong and tell me the name of another.
it is you and will always be you.
i love death more now.
but what can i do? i must live to have you still.
hope against hope,
at the brink of what finally perhaps may shock you.
that time you may hate me, but that is the truth.
i am the truth, i want you to be a lie.
but you are the truth too.
too near in my heart, but which my mouth must deny.

RIC S. BASTASA
You And Your Words

does not anymore waves of the sea because you never mean them and they who hear them cannot even think of birds winging on the park pecking on some grains thrown by well meaning citizens of this country

the words that you flaunt have become black and white peacocks and the frogs who live on the fog stopped croaking
confused about an evolutionary change that they do not expect coming

simply put because you never mean what you say you have also become nothing to them you are mean and

so
you mean nothing at all

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are A Human Being

You don’t float because Your father is a carpenter

He floats well in water because His father is a duck

On the other hand, he flies Well in air, not because his Father is a vulture, it is obvious

He looks like a hawk and acts like a hawk It is obvious,

He is a hawk himself.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are A Part Of This Poem

You read it today
You sleep
Then you wake up
There is wart
In your heart
Some warts more in your soul

Like grains of sand

The poems become A part of your being

As warts, spiritual warts Irremovable.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Afraid

To write in English is your burden You fear the grammar of the white man You are afraid of its intricacies

why?

because your heart is not?

don't mind it, you simply want to share with full respect to use their language you could have used your own and be smooth with its facilities but you also want to be a part of this world to think american to speak english who know if He finds your poem good Enough if He feels the beating in your heart that There is a flow

Of gladness
In your own way of being a part of this humanity that There is joy
In your outlook that You have a certain projection About love sickness death redemption life

who knows?

Honestly
Now go Write the language where you are
At home
Write the meaning of your riddles At your convenience
Do not be afraid of English or Indian Strictures
do not be afraid to commit mistakes do not be afraid to go to prison You will speak your language You will sing your own song you have been in this prison for how long?

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Always Beyond This And That

at dawn
you wake up
with no one by your side

silence
in its irony
begins
to syllabicate

there is a caress that makes
you
turn into a sea breeze

you float
into myriad possibilities

you become
so many
metaphors

that you can fly
wingless
that you can dive to depths
without fins
you become an
eternity

one is up there looking at one who is down there meditating
some matters escape you
into the folly
of deep sleep

one thing is sure
despite the
doubts

you are never alone and you can always go beyond this and that

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Always Electrifying

by the simple touch of your fingers accidental intimacy like bumping on the street and then quickly parting ways like you don't know me and i do not know you this pretense of strength of white cranes suddenly in motion to the skies as i clap my hands near the lushing cogon grass oh they fly, oh they fly like white pebbles thrown to the sea and then they are gone

i get electrified the moment i see you (how can i ever tell you about this secret that grows like a cancerous mole on my face?) sizzling simply sizzling this feeling of loving with the loved one not knowing anything why flowers bloom and then die why the leaves are falling the white cranes in the rice fields this June oh how they flap and fly like white pebbles thrown to the sea perfect flight of silent love my eyes are so delighted

my heart sings
it has never known how to scream in silence i gaze at you and then you walk away the street where you walk narrows down like a throat choking

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Always There

I am far away from you
I intended it to be
I want to travel this journey alone I am throwing away my crutches

Arriving at the point of no return
There is someone who wants to talk About us
Those rainbow days

I do not like this
What I know is that I am ready

I like to turn off myself like a conversation's Demise
Like a cellphone without a load A battery exhausted

But i can't

You are a scar
And will always be there

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Always Welcome

Welcome, my friend!
Your arrival is my pleasure i give you this usual embrace
cheek to cheek
this bear hug that Russians make with this kindest courtesy i am tendering this humble reception for you we shall welcome change the way we now see things the way we treat the events in our lives there shall even be a welcome of hisses and to some extent some catcalls

but friendly still

because you are my most welcome
visitor
take some rest we shall dine and dance later we have accepted you to our fold you may stay that long and longer still my welcome is never worn

my home is your home now that is my first vow..

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Asking Now For A Metaphor To Understand

i heard you when you said you find it hard to understand my scribblings on the sand words seem not to be related to the next word illogical not having a connection between their close distances how can you connect a star to an ant or an electric eel to a ladle the sea to a cooking pot something too far and something too near the universe to a grain of sand the wilted sunflower to the screw of this motorcycle, make the link, that is a challenge and you complain i am just confusing you there is no meaning to all these bickerings of thoughts and anti-thoughts, you tell me but let me ask you my friend, how do you relate to God?

is He the same as You,
far and near thoughts to anti-thoughts matter to non-matter flesh to spirit

you want a word always to correspond to an object
at first
there is no problem here but go beyond what the word should be or what a word must be to non-objects you need the help somewhere you are asking now for a metaphor

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Beautiful.

white butterfly fluttering and hovering one moment to another moment,
to the flower of time,
sipping a little nectar
to wet its proboscis, tasting sweetness and then dying in another
minute,

in another parallel universe, she goes from one mall to another, windows shopping, men, lots of men, tasting each fluid muscle and solid arms, and then dying in another minute,

you are beautiful.

Her coffin is pink.
Her hair is fake.
Her face is reassembled.
Her body now filled with noxious preservatives, her mother attends
to guests who, a day before despised her.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Carved In My Heart Of Stone

you are lost
like a composition inadvertently deleted but it is not wasted no one can take you away from me not even my own negligence because you are in my head time has carved you in my heart

of stone....

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Crazy

is that your last word

oh i see,

your sentence.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Dressed

you are dressed i see
like me
white as snow
and well ironed like a kimono

i ask you
where are you going from here?
and you said
a question for an answer

how about you
where are you going from here?

and i ask too
a question to another question do you know where you are going to?

and then i tell that man in white: i am staying.
and he went away without telling me where.

when i tell mother about it
she says

good my son, you did not go with him by now, you would have been dead.

mother i know, as always, is superstitious.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Going For Good

this meeting will be brief like twilight we will talk agree on departures of hands waving in the port the ship blows a big sound the ears of the shorelines are deafened

you are going away for good like twilight

on that ship
all your promising mornings are taken away take the noontimes then for your survival and evenings too,

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Gone For Good And I Yet Have To See Your Wings...

to do sometimes
what you do not want
doing

like mingling with sinners

feeding the poor and
the oppressed

praising those who do not deserve
a word

living with dogs and rising with their fleas talking with nonsense and embracing what sometimes is undesirable

you have stooped to the level of the mediocre

living with the dirty kind and getting their own stinky
feelings

immerse yourself
you keep asking me

immerse to the bottom of
humanity

feel them and live with
them
these are the works of God you say

and here i am still detached
from you

wondering: for how long will you compete with God

for how long will this blasphemy last?

you are gone for good and i yet have to see your wings...

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Here

you are here
at this point
you read these few lines

do not panic
about what you will be

that is the business of the future

you do not go there where it will still be they come to you
slowly
do not panic
do not ever be excited do not even think it will just come

to you
for you
you do not change it will change
you

you have no feet
to walk in there no mind to think about what will be
it is futile

the future has a mind
of its own
its rules
and premonitions

it comes and be open it has its own arms
and will soon embrace you for whatever it brings
be glad

things happen
because they always will do not begin it will always be futile

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Here, Alone.

you are here again
where planes land where another load of people is transported to their chosen destinations you are one of them

now. A set of hands waiving.
Some kiss each other
cheek to cheek

you talk to yourself.
you take a walk.
you want to know yourself better.
and you know you will come back again from the beginning.

the sun sets. it is dark.
you go where your mind takes you.
it will be strange, but it will be beautiful.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Into A Relationship

You are on a ship
In a traveling crowd
Alone
And you look at the sea
You have no direction
And seeing you lonely
The sea says “come into me my love for you is boundless my resources for you are limitless” and you look at yourself on a ship

you have no choice
you have nothing to lose you take nothing with you and you jump

into a relationship with the sea

the sea makes love to you you feel nothing
you sink
you sink deeper & deeper into a relationship
and you feel
you are all wrapped
all over with its waves your arms bound your hands can not move you can not help yourself anymore

you sink
you sink deeper & deeper & deeper you see everything about the sea the sea loves you with all its resources with all its love

you feel nothing

you sink
you sink deeper
you feel nothing
you are dead

you were already dead
a long long time ago

when you were
on that ship
you did not make any scream against your own shadow

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Its Garden Of Eden

someone is hooked on you

you avoid a hooker
as though you are
a clean sheet of paper

someone is madly
in love with you
and you refuse to understand it

do you think that the hooked one is a leper sick with you and you want to avoid?

gracious! what the hell has happened to you?
selfish, and aloof
behaving like a wolf

take that love
close your eyes and
feel

in loving you lose
nothing
you give, and the world becomes yours
forever

give love a chance
let it live and bloom you are its garden
of eden
You Are Leaving I Just Got Into

you are leaving to another higher level on that plane of consciousness where i have never been to and you are not laughing at all i am smiling
you are not responding there is that sense of awe that i have not felt and you look at me like i am a small pebble i feel like a grain of sand to your rock to the heights of your cliff and then in the blink of my eye you are gone
i am left scratching my head asking questions that i know you think i am very qualified to answer there is this pinch of fear i shake i admit
i am building this bridge made of rope
you once said
it is enough for my use the sophistication of iron and still is not the answer

i will remember some more the best word is my word for it the most useful tongue is the tongue of my comfort the only journey is to return to myself i am here i point to this mark i am going there i point to that mark i know what to do i know when i start i know where i am going back to you

back to where you were gone from the beginning

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Looking For Me I Heard But You Are Finding Me In The Wrong Places

it is sad
but let there be no tears

you are looking for me i heard
but you are finding me in the wrong places you think that i am but a body and so you look for me with your hands as a body has arms and as hands look for their arms i am not what you think i am the premises have all been wrong i am not a place that you can find i am not a date that you can remember i am not even a why that you can reason out correctly and then if you think that you can find the one that is reasonable and logical then you can declare that you have found me but i am not logic, i am not a number, i am not a reason if you say that finally you are uncertain then you have become so beautiful to me more likely i am.

for i have never agreed on something so certain it deceives. And i am not a deceiver.

let me be the most beautiful uncertainty in your life and if you love me be uncertain about us

and that is where we meet.
You Are More Important

we make food wait
on the table
even money
we make it wait on the terrace
they think we are rich and spoiled

that is not actually
the point

we are more important than the two combined food is not our idol neither is money
our master

let them both wait while we talk

you are the point
and more important

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are My Little Flower

you are my little flower
still growing
in my garden

blooming for me
for eternity

and it does not really matter

if i die
not just once but a hundred times

if i live only once to have a glance

to your
shy petals

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Neither Changed Nor Diminished

You let time pass you by

you are neither changed
nor diminished

nothing added
is felt
somehow

the worst thing that happens
when every part in
you stand still

an island in the middle of an ocean
a rock on a cliff

a tadpole could have served you
better

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Never Mine

It is the moment when you kiss me And hug me that I feel the pain Thinking all the while In said close, tender moment
The shortness of space
Between us

The acceptance that the kiss
The passion shall be short Time kills

Time buries me again
On the widening space of emptiness We left behind us

When you close your eyes
And without a word
You shall go
And be in the arms that own you

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Not A Dream

last night you are the woman undressing before me beside the brook with bamboo trees swaying on its side i am told that you are just a dream the fruit of my weary mind i have seen the waterfalls flowing from your hair i have touched the full moon of your breasts i laid my body on the cool green grass of your body your hands are soft and perfumed like the orange flowers cascading on my face

i feel the rain dripping on my cheeks when you left me

you are not just a dream my love you are real from the very beginning of my sleep

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Not A Fixture Inside A Lonely Room....

the wonderful times are gone but soon they will come, they too, like us, are going on a break a vacation that they too badly need,
somehow

you enter the door of the lonely house when the wonderful times are gone you sit on a chair, listen to the carpets talk to the paintings, and take a cup of coffee you look around, stare at the ceiling, read the papers, and then watch the news it is evening, you light at candle at the dining table, you cook and you eat yourself, and then you undress yourself look at your body in the mirror it is still beautiful and then you take a shower, wipe the water, spray some perfume, drink a glass of water, turn off the TV and the lights at the lawn and then you sleep alone.

you dream.
so many dreams to still dream but you do not wish to remember each episode of this dream too many loads to carry so much to think about so much imaginings
and you do not need them time is too short for so much sentimentalism

when the wonderful times were once here you had a nice dance with her you made love in the morning, you smoke her cigar, you drink and savor the taste of the sweet and sparkling wine you remember the joys of ejaculations intellectually on the romantic stories you have read beside her

the wonderful times are over now you had it, you once had it all, savor the memories
and then you must forget to begin again you leave a house,

go on another destination meet another love, for love is the cure for love when the heart breaks, it is but of essence that it must heal itself because that is life, a thriving, a revival of this heart of fire it beats a pulse, it makes you run and never does it make you stay like some kind of a fixture in that lonely room.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Not A Worm

and the worm asks the bird: why do you like me?
and the bird says: you fill up my hunger can't you like me for some other reason? worm, i do not think, i only eat so when you fly, or when you decide to take me into your guts you do not really think about me?

i have no time for it, i do what my instincts tell me i fly because i have wings i use my beak because i am a bird but why did you take me when there are other worms on that tree?

common, you are the most visible worm the most accessible one and so i had no time looking for some other worms no, you have taken me because you love me and you eat what you love and hence you are so cruel you are not a worm, you are a woman. i am a bird, and i could be a man.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Not Happy Yourself But It Does Not Matter Anymore.

there exists a pretense that very serves the purpose of this world and for which this world thoroughly admires since it suits well everything for the survival of what is today for the future

the suit is well worn gleaming with pride
a white carnation in the pocket natural and alive an orange necktie
a white polo undershirt a pair of shiny black shoes a leather belt
a new pair of pants

you make a speech on a hill everybody listens to you you are well suited for all their dreams

it is not you but you have to sacrifice for everyone's hopes and the realization of all their dreams you disregarded feelings you set aside personal desires you restrained what could have provided you happiness you are the leader of the flock the pride of this community your parents smile on their graves your ancestors carve a name for you in the other world you are not happy yourself but it does not matter anymore.

You Are Not Like The Cat Who Has Seven Lives

you may have seven or eight faces
just like your emotions they’re so many but you are not like the cat who has seven lives always remember that

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Old Now.

when i step into the room
i could have told you but you are the one always speaking

'the king can do no wrong'

i look at the pile of books silent damn books

i am following your footsteps into that hateful anonymity

when time brings us all here we are told we have not really done anything great the books of our lives will be consisting of empty pages you were so engrossed in speaking and i am lost in my

boredom

i was thinking of those that have not arrived here those who have also given hope like me but they are still in some unknown places i turned off my cell phone this time i must confront the void into speechlessness

into my failures for what i have not done before i left the room i took one book it is not that the king can do no wrong there is no king.

You Are Old Now....

...because others had it you want it too,
you work to have it, work so hard,
connect, have a network you push
you pull strings,
even at noon,
when the heat is painful,

(deep within you you do not need it you can live without it, you are different from all these ambitious selfish, power takers)

then, you finally get it but then, when you prepare to go dress yourself well, comb your hair, put some smile in your face, you finally face the truth that this thing is giving you harm and never good this arrogance, and conceit,

and then, you surrender,
throw away
that which you have worked so hard for

you are old now,
and there is no more time left for you to be real.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Prometheus

the hormone
signals you to go
and make you leave and choose what stirs
you like a rippling
water
on a pond

once the ripple finishes itself
into a crystal clear
surface

you mirror
yourself in there and find
for the meantime
the narcissus
in your face but sooner
as mud settles
on the floor
you shall see the beauty
in you

Prometheus!

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Right

DARKNESS, i want to be left alone inside my room.
You knock, i say, Leave me.
My heart is bleeding and there is no sign that it will stop
that way.
I am embraced by grief.

You leave me and I Keep time as company inside my room DARKNESS.

Time kills me. I am alone as i want it to be.
I kill time,
utterly confused, i keep saying and writing, i will never love again.

You are right. Your love is breaking my heart and there is no cure.

I will bury it. Soon. Leave me alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Right Bodoy

you are right about your song of the armalite and its baby
you are realistic about the power of ammunitions these bullets of the times these domestic wars fought between us
brothers
and countrymen

the widows weep, the children are lost, some strangers look for their bags of clothes others for their arms and legs others lose their senses while on the negotiating tables the sponsors of the war are drawing the lines in bold strokes

in percentages: how much goes to the supplier of the armalite
and the baby armalite how much goes to the mercenaries and the soldiers in the field how much goes to the brokers the spokesmen

and how about the civilians those who lose their loved ones

you are right Bodoy
there is nothing for them except perhaps his lousy poem

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Still The Glittering Gold In That Mud....

..and then
through an adversity when life and its pulses are at the lowest,
that you shall know
who your true friends are,

there are only very few pearls left in the box,

be glad, accept
this fact,

if you continue
on weeping, soon,
you shall not see
that there is still a glittering gold
in mud, and it is

you.

RIC S. BASTASA
you are still you on that dimming fading light in the room where we softly talk the years did not diminish you your hair still curly, black and shiny hanging on the side of your ears your forehead did not give in to the furrows of your sorrows no wrinkles reside on your cheeks, tight and smooth on the light of the small gas lamp your gaze lands on my eyes like soft hands caressing my face i gaze in return like the way how we understand each other when we were so young and playful when we tried to defy authority only to end in submission you are still you in your undying love for me as i have unlearned what we have taken as memories for ourselves i, now, in my indifference, accepts what life is the coldness of reason, the grip of necessity, the confidence of being stuck and not moving to a new direction looking at you with pity holding firm for tears not to fall, and then opening the door closing it again and moving away feeling the weakness again running to the streets and not looking back at your face realizing how the years fell heavy on my back how i have betrayed myself you are you, firm and so beautiful leave me, for i am no longer strong, so ugly like a heart that no longer feels

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are The Cloud

the water droplets in you the dusts in your hands and feet you carry them up with your wings to the heavens there is pain
and disgust on your neck and ribs

to those who see when you hang in there lifelessly
you are a reddish cloud as beautiful as a bouquet of roses against a desert sky

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are The Eyes Of The Words

hey, you are what they call the eyes of the words, seeing thoughts and traveling the paths of feelings, beyond this place the trees and beyond the trees the forests and beyond the forests the hills and horizons beyond ourselves

our souls,

i am fixed
on the fetters of my flesh.

hey, you are what they call the eyes of the yes,
the serious seer of my truths, humanity's homunculus

hey, you are what they trusted, the eyes of the world, the word beyond the whorled, tell me, please tell me, what do you see inside my eyes?

what is the color of pain?

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are The Moon

i shall walk the streets alone tonight there is no life at home i must get out to watch the prettier ones i want to talk but they don't listen i want to live, i want to love

You are the moon, on a stormy ocean full moon, uncaring space bright moon with all reservation i must be what i must be for no one's the same Roving streets libidos flow Forgotten Sky, alone you're Dry I want to live, I always want to love

You are the full moon bright on the Sky Hiding your feelings Alone you Cry

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are The One

you are the chosen one fronting the sun
you cast no shadow

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are The Unreachable Star

You are my Everyday.
A cup of Tea. A glass of Coffee.
You are a window. The mirror where i See myself Grieving.

I look at You everyday
And I always ask you to Go with me.
Almost anywhere.
I want to tell you something That may shake my world I decided I won't.

I am your Silence Now. And You are my Only Smile.
We are together in this.
You are the farthest star. And here I am The Sun
And the Moon

And the river and the trees. I am everything Now.
Beside You.

You are my tiny star inside the circle of my two fingers.
My eyes are the center looking.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Translating True Love In The Language That You Like

it is amazing
here you are translating the meaning of true in your own language.
i am amazed.
you love poetry after all? you still love true love i hear the cracks of your broken heart i pretend it is nothing to me i see how you bleed your white shirt bloody

and your hands
cupping some drops of blood from your bosom

i pretend i have not seen such a pitiful sight i have my own broken hearts too but you will never know that you have contempt on my lost loves because you never understand that true love can also be more than what you expect it can be more than one it can be many

the way i love are like ten fingers the caress of ten fingers they move like a tribe of love on the thighs of my beloved on her breasts

how can i be so cruel living with just a finger to love just one?

now i make a poem about true love the one that uses so much of myself to love not just one but all

yes, do not be surprised to love all of humanity and humanity has not just one set of breasts and thighs oh, there are hundreds of them and from their milk a thousand children shall live

RIC S. BASTASA
You Are Wrong

you are wrong.
you were never ugly.
you are not ugly.
you are beautiful
as ever as anyone can be. who can be so ugly with us?

tell me, what is it that makes
them
only
beautiful.
who cannot be beautiful as
us?

who can ever be ugly
when we are in love?

no you are wrong
you are not ugly.
it is only him
who thinks
so. I love you.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Ask If He Is The Kiss And Tell Type

and i said no
and you easily believe me taking always my words at its face value

he kissed you
that is true
and he told me
that is also true

but there is more to that no big deal really
what do you care

and here is the pain he might have kissed you but he never loved you

no big deal really
what do you care?

if you did not really love each other why did you keep that picture of two lovers kissing on the hill

a long, long time ago
ask me if he keeps it still that picture of two lovers kissing

on top of
the chocolate hill

yes, he sent me through the email.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Ask Me If I Am Sad...

I know why you are asking me if I am sad Like Pablo Neruda I have written most of the sad lines The saddest even if you paid
The closest attention

Sunset, dimming nature’s lights Departure of my dearly beloved Drying riverbeds, wilting vines on the fence
The well of the house that finally ran dry The grass that promised to grow some flowers The sadness of the eyes trying to hide in the curves of the smile
The breakfast on that lonely table
The river flowing all alone towards the sea
The birds stopping on this silent tunnel and then flying away

All these you have been reading Every word seeping without a quiver in the bottom of your heart They fall like dead leaves from trees without buds

The silent sands covering the shores of your memories All these you have been seeing, figuring out My sadness and perhaps from your sadness too you begin to ask Why? What could be the reason for all these?

Tonight, I am looking at the moon I am not looking at my wound I have no quibble I am simply seeing things the way they are I have no beginning and I have no end I do not die; I only live every moment of my life I may be shattered but I make myself whole again

Tonight, let us not ask the questions Let us not care about the answers....

RIC S. BASTASA
You Ask Me If I Change

you ask me if i change
i tell you, yes i always change don't you notice it?

some hairs on my head are whiter now, and some have fallen without any sound, my wrinkles move and they beget wrinkles

my eyes fail, my hands tremble, my feet dwindle, my memory of names and places are wanting of particulars

i change. Everything in me changes beside you and how can you not notice it?

i know, we are too near and we are always together in this familiarity where changes are everyday and yes, how could we not notice all these, my dear?

you are laughing, a lock of your hair is falling too.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Ask Me If I Miss The Place

you ask me if i miss home, and i did not answer you i go out the door and see a line of corn growing along the field
that i plowed

the rooster cocks
a long call

and up there
the hawk circles us beside a
dark cloud

RIC S. BASTASA
You Ask Me To Confess

bewildered about what's going on outside your world beyond those veils and curtains you beg that i confess what you see in me is what you really are,

and this you ask that i must confess all my sins so i can be saved from what? my silence is asking.

as a friend there are matters to be reconsidered saving my soul is never any other person's business i even have to find a location for it when it wants to rest my silence is a rock in the middle of the river's rage. there is a black bird there that sings under the whiteness of the clouds drinking every raindrop that we do not expect to fall in the middle of a bright day i need not confess there are so many poems written and scattered everywhere that i made

they have mouths and in the corners of the lonely nights they all sing my own madness both on sadness and joys, they have said everything that you badly want to hear.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Ask Me Who Am I Really?

You have seen my face
You have seen the way I smile the way I bend my back My shoulder leaning on the door As though greeting you
A nice day a promising future
The glow of sun
The coolness of the moon
The splash on the clear blue waters By the pool
By the sea
The sail boat passing by The ship on anchor
By the wharf
And the cotton clouds hanging By the green mountains

The poems I write are sad You read them and you cry You say you relate
You say you feel
The sadness of my lines

Now you ask me
Who am i?
Was I the butterfly dreaming about the sad man?
Or was I the sad man dreaming about the butterfly?

You are confused
I am not; I choose what I want to be
I am what I am
This moment,
And the moments that you imagine me to be

I write what I want
I am what I am
The lines may be lying But read them again
I may be somewhere in the lines between You Ask Me Why I Am So Negative In This

a bee died
and a flower died a marriage broken
another heart is broken a friend walks away another girlfriend calls that it is over

i am negative because everything around me is if you are not on a rush howeve i can make you

a lovely poem
tonight

this is my room number at the seventh floor of this hotel
Room 99.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Ask Yourself Today

we look for patterns of success and we look at their lives those who made it
to the top
and those who amassed what fortunes
are there
on this earth available to all those whom you think deserve

the efforts and strategies the patience and hard work you find yourself without a dime homeless and deprived

there are not patterns
not even luck

there are only those who are there and do nothing and yet they get all

fame and glory and fortune
you ask yourself today

what have i done to deserve all these?
God has no answer.

kneel and just pray.
Your fate will always be yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Become Like The Rest

To be really free is to be nonsensical.

try being reasonable, what do you have?

you become like the rest, bound, and frozen to something that is reasonable what is reasonable is something that is always expected and those we expect are the most disappointing of all what disappoints us makes us depressed and angry and imprisoned to our own cells of discontent what makes us free is what makes us open a closed door may be safe, but who likes to live in it?

when the world was born there are no locks no doors to open our hands have fingers that are not meant to be fists but tributaries where any fish can live where any fallen leaf can drift

our eyes do not even close in the dark they see better there than in the light which we know has blinded us this is the path and it does not even look like a path we are the first to arrive here and so we cut and keep on cutting the grass overthrowing stones

paving

RIC S. BASTASA
You Believe In Laughter, Do You?

since when have i seen you laughing?
twelve years ago?

really? you don't believe in laughter anymore. I will take you to places where laughters are planted and grown. A stroll at the park seeds of laughter are sown by all the children. They run without direction. Life is a play, a game. Life is not a thinking, but a mere being there. I will take you to these fancy restaurants.

See the lovey-dovey teeners over there? They are engaged in whispers-at-nothing really.
Cheek to cheek. The guy is handing a spoonful of macaroni to the girl. And the girl chews.
And the guy takes a glass of coke, so she does not choke.

Laughters are made here.
And they are everywhere.

Do not follow them home.
You may not find the laughter anymore in their own lonely rooms.

Why should our room be devoid of laughter?
Let me make them for you. I start with a can.
I will open it. Don't look at me.
Do i look like a guilty jilted lover?
Now you are laughing.
I told you. It is true.
That affair is over.

We start anew. This canned laughter. Try it.
For once. Please.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Belong There, You’re Out Of Here Anymore

I am glad; you finally found your steps Carved in Japan
He loves you the moments are there
In every festival that you learn In the family that you have Created for yourself
You are happy there
And that is enough
I can sleep well tonight
The stars above my head
And the moon
Give a smile
The wind whispers your name to me Your name is no longer new You have always been

Happiness

For the meantime, I shall gather some Dreams
I have more stories to tell in my sleep.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Bet On Another Day

yes, you must live for another day bet this day bet on another day until you find this love that love that must make your days whole your nights still so exciting you may fail again on this sad day
on this despair of being alone and still murmuring about the pain
in your soul
about the night that rains so cold and becoming so unbearable you want to sleep you cannot the lizards keep bugging your thoughts another failure

another fruitless turmoil you get attuned to these feelings of being low and meaningless this day that day that coming day you bet again for another day you wake up, wash your face, go to the toilet, clean your bed, dress yourself, and look at the mirror to comb your hair and say i'm ok, and this day will be ok and they will all be ok, you keep on entertaining promises you maintain a number a certain faith

who knows? you may hit the jackpot it is near

wipe your tears, wash your face prepare for another sleepless night

RIC S. BASTASA
You Bring Me Closer To The Lord

i am lost. But they say, one who is lost is ultimately found. Be it here.
Or there. I will be found.

by you. You will catch me red handed on a faith that is lost like a sheep and you shall come with your staff and call me by my name. You say

You are mine. You are my long lost child. And you embrace me.
Like the way my father once embraced me.

and i will cry. and i will be comforted. You tell me again

You love me. I love you.
Then we walk hand in hand.
And then so weary
i get tired. and then you pick me up and hold me with your arms. and then you carry
me.

and then i fall asleep.
and dream of you.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Can Have Everything I Have

you can have everything i have my clothes,
shoes,
socks,
house,
car,
shirts
my lot, and lots of things i own
you can have them
and you may take them all
everything
i say, you can have them all that i treasure
because
i love you

i like your face and it is so sweet and i like to kiss your cheek
but if you still do not feel
anything
for me

it is alright, i can wait
forever
take everything then
and leave
me empty like the night without the moon
and the stars

without you

RIC S. BASTASA
You Can Sleep, Sleep In My Arms....

Like a baby bird.
Like a broom among brooms... in a broom closet.
Like a tiny parrot.
Like a whistle.
Like a little song.
A song sung by a forest... within a forest...
a thousand years ago.

(the unbearable lightness of being)

RIC S. BASTASA
You Cannot Make Me Forget Who I Am

from the beginning
when my roots fused to your roots i have always detached my thorns
from your thorns
my tendrils are cautious not to harm myself
neither yours.

i am different and will always be
one
apart from you when you kiss me as i close my eyes
i always think
of myself

soon all these illusions will be gone with the sunshine
and i won't regret it when the rains will start to pour heavily
as i am always ready

i keep a boat ready on the river when this time comes i can always paddle
to the other side where i keep my roots my seeds where i am a tree
of old

always myself, yes, you cannot make me forget
who i am

RIC S. BASTASA
You Cannot Own Me

i do not mind if you are away and i do not know where you are

if you wait if i ask that will be a waste of time and you know it as you know myself too well when you come back, if ever you change your mind, i am still myself in the same house, same stairs, same room

i spin, and i am spinning, not silk, not ideas, i move with time unceasingly as always, i am expelling all cares, all loves, all hate, all indifference

i am not from here. And you cannot own me.

RIC S. BASTASA
you, the unknown planted all the mines.
you invented this war and exploded your bombs.
Inside myself, I am war torn. I am the child running away, and then my brain spilled on the pavement. My arms are no longer connected to my hands.

you created this scenario. Blood and amputated legs. armored cars and nuclear powered planes.
Mushrooms in space. Fireflies without fire. you draw violence. you paint abandon.
you instill fear. You brushed havoc on the clean canvass of humanity.

you committed genocide, and hate and classifications.
then you tell me, this is it, and that is that.
There are justifications.
Philosophies, and Ethical considerations all from your own point of view. The view of an eagle. The elimination of the the earthworms. The destruction of the mountains.
The splintering of islands.

i have long disappeared. Now, you invoke my name.
To justify yourself.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Changed

you changed
i know i see it clearly you begin to like this room surrounded by curtains, white curtains you light a candle

and then you close your eyes you travel inside the labyrinths of your thoughts

you will be lost for a time deep, deep into the sea of your being gently you sail arriving to the port of your heart

you changed
you are better now you have known the haze you have touched the opaque covering of the self welcome we have been waiting for you

RIC S. BASTASA
you come like morning light i have nothing to pay for you come like a routine i have no surprise anymore you come like a spontaneous friend, we talk without a script we worry none for words to speak we suffer none of this unnecessary silence between breaks when God is supposed to pass between us: we have more imagination than realities, we touch more what our hands cannot hold.

we have nothing to lose if God does not know how to speak.

you come like the wind so unexpected like the sea breeze so natural you arrive without a consideration nothing of the asking if you are late or early like a friend from abroad there is always that feeling of joy.

my friend welcome, please sit down and be at home. I am more of a soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Come This Morning And Touch My Weakness

you two come this morning searching the secret place in my body where my weakness lies you gaze at me, like both of you are siamese twins you scan my skin, you listen carefully to the beatings of my heart you move your nose trying to figure out the smell of that secret place you frisk me, you strangle my hair hoping to find the secret between the locks of my hair on top of my forehead and behind the skull covered with thick skin,

you try so hard to find what i am what you find is what i am not because your hearts are hardened by what you are not, in all the years that we have parted

i also listen to the beatings of your hearts and in there there is no more sound of compassion this time you must leave, i am locking my door.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Complain About The System

i agree there are so many things wrong about the system i agree when you complain about it how it smells like a carcass of a stolen goat slaughtered in the field how it executes without any question at all the dragging of due process in the streets of nowhere you have no name for it. it does not deserve any christian name at all. The priests are too compromisings anyhow. Blessing it.
and pouring it some of its holy drops.
the lords are too many for its slaves. there will be nothing left for your children who will be born tomorrow. you complain with your clenched fists. Locked jaws. you have unlearned tears. You are drawing anger in the walls with your blood and sweat.
look at you? with all your doubts, and anger and fears and curses

you are like a house burning and they are not calling any fireman.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Cry Baby And You Cry Alone

you are right. No one is ugly.
each one is as beautiful as one thinks s/he is
to be

everyone has always the possibility of being beautiful if one thinks that s/he is ugly

we are moved by our own
thoughts
how we conceive ourselves to be how we carry our crowns how we sway our arms how we sit with dignity

the mirror speaks but we need not listen
we must insist on who we are from the bottom of
our hearts

remember what they always tell you
you cry baby and you cry alone.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Define A House With People

to have meaning
you define a house with people

a park with lots of them or a mall with more

sometimes i wonder
why you do not like a conversation it gives a living room its own sound why you do not like an interaction of men and women arguing and laughing and flirting and sweating things out

it gives a veranda a smell of vodka and beer and smoke that fills the air

do not worry much about death or noise or petty quarrels i assure you, whether you hinder them or not for sure, they will always come do not hate that apple of discord it is an honored myth.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Did It First

It pains me
indeed that you have lost me.

i never lost you
you are here inside my indiscretions

it pains me much that you did it first

you cut the umbilical cord and i am the baby floating in my own blood grasping for breath

but still very much alive with only hope as food for my darkest night.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Did It...

understand
though that the beginning of wisdom is fear,

you just cannot take it, how can love be feared?

how can one be so wise and fear what he is seeing?

how can one do something with all fear?

this sickness and trembling this leap these fearful ways
how can you not stop
living in the house of fear
and yet still whole
and unbroken?

you did it.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Die Cousin And They Are Not There

Today cousin is the day you die Your wife is in Japan and your kids are out there In the care of your mother Your sister has despised you Your brother does not bother anymore Now that you are nobody, with no money With nothing to make you look like A gentleman
Everyone has deserted you cousin What have you done?
When once you were alive When once you can offer them everything Your kids their education Your wife a house, a car Your sister and brother your money and attention You were so important then

Times have changed
You are down and fettered In alcohol you drown yourself to forget Finally what you wished has been granted

Death, you wish for death

Goodbye cousin, the stories are always long There is no time to tell There is no use to reveal The great heart you still have The generosity that was The love that you have that was always greater Than they all keep for themselves
I know,

Your final rest and your silence You shall now make the final justification To the Great Lord, the Ultimate Reason Why you never build a home?
You, on this lonely tomb You Do Not Have To Capture The Best

do not capture the best neither shall you say i am just keep on gazing and moving into the journey of that soul within which till date you have not really held with your own embrace you do not have to capture the best and say i am the best for it is the best that captures you and then it says: i have the best and of course, you will never know.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Do Not Have To Hear What The Woman Said To The Guy In White...

at the clinical laboratory i have seen how a beautiful woman with long blond-dyed hair stings the guy seated next to him she calls him not with his name but some other word that is so degrading the man's eyes changed from sun to moon, his mind wants to howl like a jackal but he keeps his restrained silence he loves another anyway and she will just be a waste of time for another useless argument.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Do Not Have To Kick It.....

you do not have to kick this love of mine to kill it
i kill it myself even without kicking for you shall never know for i shall never tell you for i know you will never understand it anyway you never feel it in this strange world of mine where butterflies and urchins hug each other in the orange sky.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Do Not Have To Love Me Forever

i do not demand much i only ask you
to love me now

forever is just a wish a mist

RIC S. BASTASA
You Do Not Have...

you do not have to read me
for me to become another poet

i am
and i can be
and i will be even without you

and you are
and you can be
and you shall be even without me

i am a poet
because i have decided to write the poems and the poem shall be there forever until the right reader comes along the one who loves a poem even without me

even without you
even without the world

this poem and that poem shall be even without us
for these are words and words shall be words even without the world for it was the word which came first and shall remain

till eternity.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Do Not Know It

when a door finally closes
and you knock again
pleading
'sorry, i am very sorry' it shall not open and tell you 'please come in'

it has its own reason and you cannot say that you do not know it.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Do Not Make Me Bleed

i place my heart
you do not know it where that is my secret
now
you look at me with suspicion what i have been doing with myself
hiding from you the most important part that which wears the wedding ring
i am hiding my heart it is not where i told you once it is i am a failure to love i am a murmur now
of the night
do not blame me
we are part of this
heavy drama
do not make me bleed
i will not
i have no heart now just this empty
chest
filled with the air of my remorse.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Do Not Notice The Genius Of Other People in your vanity

in the tallness of your price like the tower of babel you stand disunited
and scattered soon
you shall be like leaves blown by the winds
of change

you do not notice the genius of other people
you have looked so profusely inside yourself
and you have not only become one meaningless tower but a cave digging more confusions towards the darkness of your
feet

try opening the eyes between
your eyes
try using the ears embedded in your ten fingers

hear those who have no spoken listen
see those who are like shadows
living in the twilight of your life perhaps you can find yourself the paradox keeps upon itself the truth your heart thrives somewhere your hands have not been holding

RIC S. BASTASA
You Do Not Own It It Is Not Yours  Keep Going Hand It Back To The Giver That Owns It.

going over with that is what mother says when i am down

father used to hide
knives
and keeps another key to my room

till now
i weep for mother
i pity father who had underestimated
my tolerance for failure

failures are simply successes delayed
human personalities
as always remain mysterious
and unpredictable

those that survive know
much better
those that remain in the old house
die their early deaths

if life can be lonelier it can become stronger if life is not taken it can be more

you do not own it
it is not yours
keep going hand it back to the giver that owns it.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Do Not Really Matter Somehow....

i am not
humiliated when
you
underestimate
me

i sometime feel the exclusion

when i extend my hand to yours
i only see the blankness
of your eyes
evasion is your good
answer
to this indifference which has become too mutual for us

but i do not really mind
long before you come into my world
i have already built my own complete with walls and moats
every tower with guards in armors
and i always have a boat ready
in case of emergency

i have another island reserved for me in case of an inevitable
escape
from a defeat

and so you do not really matter that much i have freedom within
freedom
each stacked like
cards of our gambling game....

RIC S. BASTASA
When you are exhausted to even write a letter
do not be afraid about losing yourself
into an abyss of perhaps having outlived your usefulness

This is a normal occurrence when you have given up what does not rightfully belong to you

Because you only live on a borrowed house and what you have is only the body of the sea hermit

Because you bring nothing here and so when you finally leave you ought to bring nothing too
with you

But what place are you going?
do you really know?
what do you have here?
do you really know?

When you are tired now because there are no answers bear in mind, always bear in mind, that that is the only possible truth of our earthly existence

Deep in our hearts
we know of a country
and inside it is a paradise

It is certain but we do not know when it is true but we do not know why

just be patient
just be patient
just be patient

here comes the wind
and you do not see it....

RIC S. BASTASA
You Don’T Have To Read This Part

i never liked honestly enough
those fidgety leaves
those nerves
that fall short of the translation of
the word
in my native language
yours too
but which you must have betrayed
for something lesser than yourself
do not tell me more going away
i know what nerves are too
last night
i could not sleep
thinking that
for all those years
i wasted
myself on you
blackbird...

RIC S. BASTASA
You Don'T Stop Writing Girl, Go Girl Go

You don't stop writing girl You cannot stop, It is part of your nerves now.
Each vein looks for the proper word.
Each red blood corpuscle has become a syllable For an imaginary poem in your mind.

Each beat of your heart recites a rhyme Each curl in your cerebellum thinks of An imagery. Another metaphor comes And you grasp them with each breath.

You are alive girl. Go girl stop watching The snow and make your imagination Run wild like a snowstorm.

The sound of a snowfall. A snowflake Layering on the side of your window pane Speaks to you about this coldness This beautiful sound of a very lonely song Harking for Love.

Far away from your homeland You weep for a while and then recover Compose yourself and see your face in that mirror.
You are strong. You are as vast as the ten thousand miles Away from us.

Go girl. Another poem knocks at the door of your heart.
Write it. Write about a chaff. The grain. The wheat germ.
Go girl. You are one of us, chosen not to speak But to write.

I am waiting for your next poem. Gladly, I am.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Don'T Want To Play?

i have been playing all the mornings of
my life,

and this evening
i quit
it is time to go home clean myself
and sleep

it is late.

you don't want to play?
then sleep with me.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Dream Last Night

that you undressed
before me
and that i touched your whole body with my lips
from the tip of your toe to the tip
of your hair

and this morning
you ask me
to interpret that i may oblige

but first i must see first
the kiss marks
in your legs.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Fall In Love With.

it is the fall that does not hurt at all.

it makes the sun rise
the moon shine
the night though cold makes you stay outside the house with someone

you fall in love with.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Found My Way

you cook so well
and i am so
anticipating about
the new menu
on the white porcelain plate
beside the silver spoon
and fork
and the corrugated
knife fit for the medium rare steak
more rice please
more lemonades
and lots of
lettuce for the salad
a ripe mango and alligator
pear
on a platter

lady, you found your way into my belly.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Give

you give not because you have so much no one has such

you give because you like to give because it makes you feel that you are full and oozing because of no other reason that you like the feeling

makes you high removes the sigh

RIC S. BASTASA
You Go Beyond

there comes a time
when you go beyond
praise and censure

when reward or punishment does not matter
to you anymore more than a slap or a kiss

you are not dead yet you simply become a lotus on the pond
undisturbed by the rain or sunshine
unperturbed by the mud beneath you
unamazed by the blueness
of the sky
above you

when you are you because you are not you when your eyes do not open
to see
when your heart does not beat
to live

when seasons pass and you do not know that they are there passing when you are engulfed by so much openness when you do not know if some doors close if some windows soon open and when there are some more coming and going and leaving that you know that you do not ever know

RIC S. BASTASA
You Go Where The Wind Takes You

i write this with painful eyes and it will be the same pain that sends you off where the winds of change shall take you and i do not ask any questions when you are coming back or where you are going

this is the journey of freedom the journey of a leaf which has fallen from a dead tree and now shall take the course of the river to the sea
to nowhere

you shall take it now as i have taken it before until you find the center of your universe

i do not even ask that you shall remember me.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Have Become A Bone In My Throat

have the conscience set me free for you have become a fish bone inside my throat clinging to a tissue that starts to rot
and smell

i sound as harsh as a stone grating on the banks of the river raging to be free

i gnash my teeth like pebbles thrown upon the tiled floors of the house where no one wants
to live.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Have Been Kept

you have been kept so beautiful inside the darkness of the cave

i, this worshiper
bowed and promised to have you inside my heart

the obstacles are many sharp rocks and snakes and big trees on the forest

i am hopeless outside my desire shoots like a meteor beyond the skies

RIC S. BASTASA
You Have Never Really Learned How To Live…

you are into
defective situations

how come these dusts are not wiped out?

oh, these dead rats
are not buried yet

at night you cannot see stars because of
the rain

you live with someone whom you cannot change

everyday what you think is wrong is kept repeated you take a deep breath and you keep on adopting you keep on forgiving and forgiving until you're about to go insane

there is a way to keep light the load she smiles befriend dusts, why don't you bury the rats yourself?

do you have someone else in mind who can also live with
you?

if you have not met madness if you have not felt numbness

then, she smiles again, you have never really learned how to live.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Have No Particular Reason For Being Happy

you are happiest
when you have no particular reason
to be happy,

you do not look for it
you do not
find it

it finds you,
and you
pick it up
in your hands
this bunch of ripe grapes hanging

falling
direct to your luscious
lips

RIC S. BASTASA
You Have Nothing To Read

worthless
are my days now

so do not wait for me for you you will get nothing when the 7th day arrives i will tell you something from my sleeplessness

=================================================================
=========

walay nada
ang akong mga adlaw karon maong ayaw ako paabota wala kay mahagdaw kanako inig abot sa ika-pitong adlaw diha pa unya ko mag-asoy gikan sa akong pagpulaw...

(translated from the bisayan poem of hazelen cobol)

RIC S. BASTASA
You Have Nowhere To Go

you have nowhere to go
your heart is trapped locked in the gates of her cares, your eyes are covered by the gentleness of her gaze, you are now caught in the truth of her love you hands  bound by her desires your lips  lost in her sweetness, now you dwell in your weaknesses, now you surrender to her longings you now belong entirely  to her, with nowhere to go

you are doomed
to die in her bosom
as her chattel
her prized possession
her love mind you
has turned you
into a thing, a property but you did not mind your heart is made of wood that which was real at first was already taken and this one does not matter anymore anylonger

there is no beating.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Have The Soul Into Your Words

you may have the soul into your words you may have the oil and the canvass and the shapes and forms
to immortalize
what have you

something
for posterity for your immortality

but what use is posterity
what use is this immortality?

RIC S. BASTASA
You Have To Think Very Very Well...

i had been trying to teach you how to think like the way i am teaching you how to walk,

it is not the substance but the process
it is not the rocks on the way but the motion itself
where to and when not the what

for i am a teacher and i cannot teach you anything anymore when i leave there is only one thing that you will be forced to do to think for yourself and with what i have given you that you think well, very very well and not be taken the surface of things

RIC S. BASTASA
You Have Travelled The Distant Places Of This World

your work is confrontational with a lot of faces and races you have a hard time with the black ones and the yellow ones and their accents you call as barbarians of your age and taste you struggle to move to the top to control and be the master it is like
everyone is an enemy and there is always the suspicion that this friend is here to kill you for he too must go to the top
without you

you are getting bald on the side of your head the white hairs are popping out you need a walk by the shores of the sea you need this Confucian walk for a hundred years to think and be whole amidst the wars you have created or imagined

you have travelled the distant places of the world and you are holding the globe with your hands
the red dots the stars marking the lines the shapes of cities are all in your head and then you confront me and plainly say you are unhappy fighting this kind of war this tugging of ropes among countries

on a Sunday morning you call me by your cellphone you are back to your father's ricefield the one he plowed when he was still alive the mud that grew the rice grains the one that sent you to the national university you say you want your feet bare and be muddy you say you want to learn how the farmers work what their hopes and dreams are you laugh with them you are learning now

you are whole again you are telling me you finally found your home this place where they do not know how to write and speak english

your brothers like you now you are eating rice with your bare hands you are walking their soil without your rubber slippers then i said i have to go i too have lots of things to do

RIC S. BASTASA
You In Your Closed Bleeding Hands

The palm that closes Cannot hold anything Just like this narrow mind Unable to grapple with What is newly given

I see your fingers are closed
I tried to tickle you so they may open I tried to tell you something puzzling You closed your fingers some more

What is it that you are hiding there?
It is causing you so much pain Your hands bleed, please open them Is it the nail? Is it a broken glass?

You are not nodding still
Is it something so important?
That even with death you still refuse?
You are not nodding still You shake your head, you keep mum And numb to what I am asking

So be it, close your fingers Hide the lines in your palms Let your hands bleed some more We shall wait what happens next

RIC S. BASTASA
You Just Can't Remember

you have never been to hell

or that Sahara desert
with the skull of the camel beside those vultures
in your dreams

neither have you gone
to heaven

that paradise island with lots of coconut trees and blue seas teeming with fat fish

somehow you know these words: hell, heaven, desert, paradise
but you have never been
there

or perhaps you were once there but
you just can't remember

RIC S. BASTASA
You Know

you know very well
that i cannot live without you and you capitalize on that belief

that i keep telling you and so you are so confident taking me

for granted

not thinking that i as a man of my senses
one day
may have the courage finally to give up
everything
including that belief that i cannot live without you and then one day you will find an empty cabinet all my polo shirts taken transfered to a new home

away from your misplaced confidence

RIC S. BASTASA
You Know Better

you know
the real score
my dear
#2

YOU'RE 60% less prettier
and 40% less intelligent than her

and there you must understand

cope up with what you do not have

your long black hair scented with peaches

your watery mouth
and long
soft tongue

you must get even with her
for she is always in my heart

and i sleep with
you
on the bed mechanical

RIC S. BASTASA
You Know How Is It To Be Blue

you know how is it to be blue you sailed once on top and you plunged depth down under the rage of the river

you know how is it to be inside a certain darkness and silence you know how is it to be just a river this will haunt us forever you know how is it to be inside the cave filled with water and rage and rampage of stone and waves

you know how is it to be a river flowing and going away you know how is it to be bluer than blue and foamy and angry

you know how is it to be deep just being deep and it is enough for me and then you go away.

let me stay on the depths of these mysteries i like the blueness of blue, the deepening of the deep

i like it here, deep and silent, even without you.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Know How To Mix The Oil And The Water between the oil and the water put the soap

or the common detergent that is how they do it in poetry it is not easy to mix the oily feelings with the watery ones and it is hard to check which detergent to use what is it that is having poetic sense?

between them and you
how do you get well along the lines of poetry?
who is the water and who is the oil?
and who is the detergent among the metaphors and the similes?

takes time really.
at first we keep on writing these nonsense comparisons trying to tell which one is best, better and good which one is worse

but sooner you realize that this has nothing to do with comparisons it has only something to do with the clicking of the right switch to give light to the dark room where we live, to give the sound of the singing bird, to give that hush, to make us sleep soundly on a soft pillow, and then dream in another world where we do not talk but merely observe how the colors float how they pass us by and we are nothing but spectators always wanting to have no part

in everything
and that precisely is the light feeling that makes the click

RIC S. BASTASA
You Know That It Aches A Lot

you know that it aches a lot
my dear
so why take it and venture some more
with the exercises of pain and sorrow
and strict discipline
like kung-fu at dawn on top of the cliffs
and mountains

you shy away
and tell yourself
this is the proper time to quit and hide away from this wasted time and unnecessary trouble

you justify: i have other better things to do like licking sweet
strawberry ice cream or drinking my favorite light beer or simply strolling in the park with my favorite dog or having fun with my younger friends and singing the videoke with them on lazy afternoons or visiting gardens during holidays

or making money
and taking time to study and evade with legal validity my taxes

oh well, you make your choice and it does not matter. it is your life and this is my life.

but oh well, wait. when it does not ache anymore, the joy is a hundred times greater than the pain.

you see, i am always feeling it... now in thousands this bliss of expressing myself in the art that the gods have handed years, and many years ago eons, and eons, and so many have really forgotten.

i just love this and i could have taken you to the place of the burning bush the holy ground the love of my life and my way of communing with all the gods.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Know That Well That I Do Not Edit My Poems

there is no aim for fame there is only this gut, this push, this inspiration to write a poem
every morning,
even at noontime when there is so much to do a poem is an icebreaker it is cold to my tongue like a refresher or even at nighttime when everyone is fast asleep dreaming when i am sleepless over a word that strikes in my mind like a bowling pin
i write put on words like a hat and hold it there like a staff for now i am an old man
with no one to talk to
no where to go
no one to sleep with as i think about the memories of my youth summers and rainy days
barefoot on the river socks in my hands
crazy on a covenant as death begins to whisper the last word
for the last poem.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Know What Happens When Love Is Gone

she knows what happens when love is gone:

the sun turns black and the moon becomes red and the trees become like some grass in the
brackish water of the marshes
where the air stinks like a pond
where all the frogs
are dead
and rotten

where the dragonflies are headless
where the wings
of the butterflies
turn into threads

the sea is gray
and the sands
are pins hurting
to our feet

the leaves are skeletal
and the stems are spikes
of bicycles without wheels

you know what happens when your love is gone

but take a look at me when you finally decided to throw my love away
i still bloom
as a mushroom
after the thunder
the lightning
and the storm

RIC S. BASTASA
You Know Who I Am.....

if you curl your hair and make it short like that of our poodle or if you change the positions of the chair and the table or make this room more light and
easy
like the way light from the moon is admitted with all liberality,
will you expect that i change to the way you change things the way you like it?

you know who i am.
i do it my way. And most of the time i do not change what you can see outside as it is the inside which matters most.

i am still thinking how to do it.
That is why i left.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Like An Unfinished Business

you like it
when it is not yet finished life like like life perhaps you like it before it ends perhaps at the middle when you smile and then you stop it short when the cold air comes to touch your brows you like an unfinished journey before you reach a certain home of old pictures i paint a path and you like it when it is just near a river which we are about to cross you like it when i touch your lips and then i leave without letting you taste the kiss i understand how painful endings are like departures

you like an unfinished business perhaps because you like someone to come back to you and give you
forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Long For Silence

you hide
white hair
you want to keep wit
forever
you bury sins
you grow
hope
you throw away what you cannot love and hold you catch up what you miss you sing again
you long for
silence
when you go back
the party starts
noise tells you
'i got much'

RIC S. BASTASA
You Look Pretty

you look pretty in the mirror and you keep on telling yourself that you really look pretty and you turn around with that pink dress a long red ribbon on your waist and a flower in your ear you hold your skirt and take a closer look on your face narrowing down to your lips and nose you need the strictness of silence and you stare at yourself for a long, long time it is the mirror distorting your reality and it takes courage to utter the sentence: i am not real.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Look So Light And I Want To Take You Back Into Your Human Form

you drift as a cloud you look so light and i want to take you back into your human form as another brother
but how can i make you stay and be back home? shall i tie you on a tree? shall i make a kite of you?
i watch you all day drifting. At night i may see you as another star in the sky.
i am so quiet.
Perhaps, like you
i never know what
to do.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Lost....

i could have told you
about the dignity of silence how victorious always is it in the turbulence of the daily noise

in the market of the multitude

those screaming hours
the maddening chatter of the crowd

but then you were too busy feeding the noise

RIC S. BASTASA
You Made Me Choose

it was a case of choosing a stone, a snail, a hammer i chose the hammer

just that i never used it to drive a nail to smash a snail to break a stone

i chose the hammer and kept it
just that i left it in the house (bought a house five years ago) i walked away
and then i whistled my way in the woods

just that

RIC S. BASTASA
You Made Me Happy Too, What Is Wrong?

last night you have shown me everything i love
shall i enumerate all your body parts
the color and taste
and smell

shall i tell you that i have memorized every detail
you may tell me i am so sensitive about those things
parts that bore you since you have them all the days of your sad life
sad?

i have quivered in hell i swallowed every vomit for each breast and arms and
hair
and lips and tongue
i sighed

you have shown me every part that i am and honestly after what happened
i hate to say this but i had a year and so many years
of regret

it is not me, it was never me i am never like that but what can i do
here you are smiling at me teasing me
and piercing my brain shouting to the layer of my conscience

you did it man
you did it
stop pretending
you made me happy too
what is wrong?

RIC S. BASTASA
You May Borrow My Eyes

you may in due time
if you wish borrow my eyes so you may see what is inside
my soul

and my heart too
it always beats for you

RIC S. BASTASA
You May Float For A While

when you are feeling like a butterfly float, you may float for a while since you know very well that you have only one day
to live,

you will break a wing and then dive to earth and have peace, no one sees how you struggled with just one wing
and then
tired you give up breathing and the ant sees you happy that they have your body for their feast

then you are gone forever, you think that way but one of your atoms from your fragile body has been absorbed by a root

and that is where you are taken up to the trunk and then twigs and then leaves and then into
a flower

where a butterfly by chance happens to like you in the petal and sips the nectar and you with it and then you have become a part of the butterfly again you want to remind it about what happened to you but you have no words anymore.

you have the force, but it is as tiny as the ant.

RIC S. BASTASA
You May Start Seeing The Dead Earthworms

for a start you have seen dead earthworms along a muddy pavement

you theorize about their deaths
the reasons
perhaps the waters in the canal rose and drowned them last night when you were asleep

perhaps the sun was so hot the other day while you were working hard in the office and so they were scorched
to death

i like it when you reason out but i like you more when you were sad and wrote something about these dead earthworms

and then i slept for days and dreamed that we hear the earthworms sing their own songs in the notes and lyrics of their own something strange really but i am so happy the earthworms too do not just die they also rise

and they also sing

it will be another beginning for us, a happy one i suppose

RIC S. BASTASA
You May Strike But Hear Me First

start with a board of premises

sound premises
facts verified by all the senses
possible

look around
stretch your hand then if you are definite that no harm
is potential

jump then into conclusions

RIC S. BASTASA
You May Strike, But Hear Him First

Is it not wise and kind To ask first
Why?

Hear his side
And listen
Demand always An Explanation
Or a Justification

Then

If there is reason enough Strike! Strike if you must With a club
Or a fist
Or a very harsh word
A stab
Or hack or shoot or bomb

Be always fair
If you fight as you Think you Finally must

Let him know
Let him
Also prepare
For his Defense

Let there be fairness
In war
And in peace.
You May Walk Ahead

on a dark night like this you may walk ahead and we shall follow you along the streets of loneliness and people who see us will say,

'there, the prince walks along this road moving towards his date somewhere followed by his moron friends'

they're honest, and we like the way they see us.

RIC S. BASTASA
For a start of the day
Write a poem for me
I am weary I am unhappy I make no sense at all After the learning and The knowing, I learn
The senselessness of it all,
This is not my world
This is not the world
We all yearn to live
I quit I stop this thing
It is your turn now
To believe to be awed
To be human to be alive Make me a poem
The best poem you can Read it to me, let me Hear your voice,
You who also ask, you
Who also want to be dead.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Meet The Tempest Headon

do not be a coward meet the tempest
headon
have a collision
and get ready
with your convulsion

RIC S. BASTASA
i hinted that i had dinner alone for she had gone somewhere i will not tell you but there is a reason for separation sometimes this happens i guess to all couples and copulation is missed the caring and loving the tender moments and then you blurted that i must loved her so much because i cannot live without her
in my bed

you got it wrong baby i can't sleep without a body whether its hers or somebody else for in bed
strictly speaking
i am Aristotelian.... i am a social animal and i cannot live without someone else
beside me.

are you jealous?
come with me and drink my tea

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Accept As I Tell You

you must accept as i tell you that your absence for days did not made my heart grow fonder inside my imaginary garden all the real toads are croaking.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Assume Other Names

you must assume other names
as i too shall assume a lot of numbers this is the comfort that i still want to enjoy numb numbers

poems without a lot of words to make you remember me

what do you feel now?
i know. You feel like a page of a book.
A torn page.

You feel like you are walking past
The numbered rooms in the hospital

Finding your way through same faced halls Left turn, right turn

Until you find yourself at a certain dead end.
You see a bench. You sit there.

There is no window. There is no door.
Just the length of the hall and then the silence Of this corridor.

It is. Indeed, it is.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Be Dreaming Within A Dream

at this hour,
you are dreaming within a dream writing what you do not really mean perhaps what you do not even understand, tomorrow when you wake
up
you will check again

something strange
comes up what is it, you still do not know, but it is already written that dream within a dream still sleeping but wanting to wake up with you...

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Be Lucky To Have Found It

they say
one finds true and mutual love
once in every thousand
years

you must be lucky to have found it

some are not that lucky as you

one day they find it and then do not really know
what to do

they fear touching thinking that it could simply be another mound of
dust

or if they touch it it may just go away just like a wink of an eye

or it could just be right inside their palms

but they just forget
already how it feels

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Dropp The Seed

i am the field, plowed fertile field near the river some dogs are buried within me some snakes live here i know their wishes and desire somehow i wait for you as the rain and you as the sower of the seeds

pour some sweat of your brow and let your arms swing let the seeds
fall

that is all i want that is all that i am waiting for just dropp the seed and i will let them grow then you can leave

i will take care of the snakes and i will always remember all the dogs sleeping here now you must leave the seeds shall grow spontaneously as i watch the seasons change

t

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Know I Only Uttered I Love You Once

speaking of love, yes, love, what can i say about love, i cannot speak it without using the word
you, it is always you, because without you, love cannot even exist as a word, or even a thought or even a waft of air to cool my senses,
without you,
love cannot even exist as a blood cell in my heart or a vein or a chamber where love usually sleeps,
it is you,
always it is you that i will always equate with love,
you must know
i only uttered i love you once, and it was true, and it is still true,
the rest
are the words of the drunk man, the broken heart trying to relive what was once truly uttered, reenacting,
imitating but always falling short of the truth
years ago
again the words kneeled before God in an old church
with you
our hands may have clasped in prayer if you remember our hands finally found each other touching and holding tight as i said

i love you

as you said

i love you too

that was many years ago, truth does not know how to die, true love lives in that

i love you,
forever, always,
you,
i love you,
wherever you are now,
you
must know,
that is the truth that until now i live
that until now
i am living and thinking still only of you..........

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Know The Fences Of My World

my world revolves around a fence of 'nots'

not this, not that,
think, think a while, no compromises do not stain a white cloth do not display a dirty linen of the house a dropp of ink can make your world dirty a white sky, pure white sky, why should a black crow fly in there? don't you make a waste of this clean life you have this is the world i live in, a planet revolving to the mandate of its orbits, no deviation, no running away, no escaping
not this, not that don't do this don't do that and now i have travelled that far and all wanting to see you and look at you and hold you despite the odds despite the rules and the prohibitions and i ask for a kiss, just a kiss and tell me if you remember i ask you why?

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Learn To Set Me Free Now you must my dear learn to set me free now it has been time that i have been inside the cell of your self-made light, inside the shackles of your own illusions, i have been free all my life and i can continue to pretend that i am inside your own kind of predictions. i want you to be alive, i want you to be free like the way i free myself from my own shadows.

learn the ways of the clouds unleashing all its rains. cry if you will, grieve if so needed, then take in what is there left from your eyes, breathe your own soul.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Remember An Open Door

The world becomes too tight.
Crowded inside you.
Who likes to live in this kind Of asphyxiation?
You must remember an Open door.
That house with a garden.
A veranda.
An open back door when A child can just Go anywhere.
You heart aches. You unbutton A shirt. Breathe.
You learn too well from a river Without doors.
A mountain made of all Windows.
A cloud that drifts like you.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Must Understand The Mockingbird

at night
the mockingbird still haunts her

it's nature is to mock to imitate
it cannot get away from it otherwise
it dies otherwise it ceases to be one good mocking bird

you must understand
nature
there are those who live to copy
because they are born to be
that way

if you get irritated by the mockingbird
that becomes your own responsibility

pity,
soon you will cease
pity
the mockingbird shall sing a funeral song for you

if not write an elegy.

RIC S. BASTASA
You My Dream

i only like to be a shadow but i know you dream of me so i begin to like it to become my body and i wish this time that you are not a shadow too that you wish to be a body too that both of us become bodies sometime in a moment realities rubbing each other like two dry stones looking for the flint making a huge fire in the forest.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Never Had A Heart......

you have not seen it for it is not a ball or a gadget
or your valuable gem like diamond earrings or that golden necklace

how can you see care?
how can you hold friendship?
how can you ever weigh
tenderness?
how can you ever buy affection?

you have the gall or the eyes
and the guts or the butts but you never had a heart

RIC S. BASTASA
You Never Love Me, I Know, But Comfort Me Just The Same

As you sit beside me
You become my right hand As if you have become Another reliable part of My body

Touch my face, caress my hair Sit down with me on my chair Comfort me again
I have been hurt
By the absence of your being
The heart that was never there Beating

RIC S. BASTASA
You Never Really Learn

watch for quick changes like the latest smile after a week a year of humiliating smirks watch for her nice hello on a moment like this what follows next is what you discover

perhaps it is too late as usual you have been trapped deceived and wasted away

you never learn

RIC S. BASTASA
You On Top Of Me.

Despite my varied escapades

despite the numbers
in my mind

the nights and dawns

the drinks and the see through glasses

the mirrors and
shadows

i keep telling myself i have so many things
to do

but to forget you
and not miss you

is still not possible
i need time

more time more
time

to make you
fade

what a night on such a short hour

i never regret
though that once

i had you
on top of me.
you only feel me once your feet dipping on the rage of the water
of my river
it is cold and it is running always running and you keep on looking at my face on the ripples
it is as hazy as the sand falling on the sea trickles and too many you do not recognize a map of who i am in this land of mystery clouds and smoke and haze and mist and shadows and fog always moving away
you only breathe me once i get in and follow the contours of your
throat
and then i enter in the chamber of your heart
like air
sort of a strange perfume and now the bitterness stays

you say you cannot forget me. i move on and like corpuscles of blood i spread i laugh and this will be my last.

i am the lover of loneliness. I am dying.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Only Need The Heart The Soul

to be a poet (what they think is needed is the discipline to fully master the craft) one needs (however) only the heart
the soul, the rest when summoned
properly
comes without much hesitation, for in time, when you are true and faithful words come like servants and arrange themselves like furniture the chairs walk in to form the dining set with the center table the curtains hang themselves on window borders to form a frame
a perfect perspective to view the sea
of art.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Open It....

i forget
but one thing i remember i
forget

i dont remember what i have
forgotten

i feel insecure about
this matter
and it makes me think
more
why i am always forgetting

i am old
i have too forgotten that old key
to your heart

i can't get in but thanks just the same
you open it
and so i am entering....

RIC S. BASTASA
You Pour Your Mercy.

draw my face when i arrive home at night.
it will not be good to look at.
You pour your mercy.
You ask

why are you doing this?

you open the cover of the cold soup.
There are islands of solidified grease
on the plate.
Sticky rice and fried fish beside each other.

some things are simply done as obligations.
It is not a question of whether another sad person is made happy.

we seldom talk.
we keep the balance of space and presence.
There are taboos here.
There are questions without speaking of answers.

you hand me an exhausted face.
Rugged existence.
A simple life.
A hard bed and an open window
to see the moon.
I sit
quietly in my own nook.

And then i write you a poem.
It will be kept for future reference.
Death has its own careful hands.
But you will never know it.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Pray

that you cannot be caught off-guard in your unguarded moments

oh, the hypocrite in you is deeply religious

so much depends perhaps your life in lies your ways in deception your tongue forked like that of the snake
woman
you body twisted like your mind your soul long lost in the fires of hell

RIC S. BASTASA
You Promised To Stop Loving

and so you promised to stop loving and in trying to ease that pain you change your name you shift some place else you wear another mask you take the side of silence you choose the future and shut your past

you cannot escape
the landscape of loving your heart still speaks the same voice the same words

it still wears the same smile the same eyes

and anywhere you go his eyes still see you

his ears still hear the sameness
of you

and the world in its wisdom still recognizes the beauty
within you

your pain your sorrow

the flower that blooms even in the snow

the grass that remains green even without the rain

RIC S. BASTASA
You Received Flores Para Los Muertos?

maybe because you want them.

i guess. i just guess.
maybe you have masochistic tendencies.
and they are not so obvious.

or maybe you deserve them, or maybe you have the wish to have them just maybe. come to think about it. why did you allow yourself to receive those flowers for the dead?

RIC S. BASTASA
You Respond To The Call Of The Blue Whale

i

and for this reason you shaun
too shall
live,

ii

live too shaun
you and for this reason

iii

the whale is blue and lives in the ocean
blue
blue whale
in a blue ocean deep whale

iv

shaun blue deep blue whale
ocean blue
we are one
i am also blue in deep ocean blue whale

v

s, there is so much to do when blue when whales are blue when oceans are blue when everything is blue blue, blue, blue, blue, yes, thank you

RIC S. BASTASA
You Rise From The Ashes To Become A Star

i see you rise from the ashes to become a star

up there in the skies you glitter
in the deep black night you are glorious in your light the distance between us this separation stone am i in this garden star you are to the heavens there is only silence and up there you do not see me you do not even remember perhaps the significance of any stone or dust

you were once just a dust on a leaf
you once were but a patch of me

oh, i watch you tonight oh, you glorious star in the heavens you have been given a place with the gods and goddesses but in a sense
i do not envy you
in truth i may have missed you and i may have followed you the ways and means that i have taught you how to be a star how to be a shining glory but i didn't

i like it here
i love it here in this little garden of earth where i am but a stone for these little ants where they are building a home You Said It

you said that when you get rich you will throw a big party and invite the flies.

if you invite me,
may i invite the worms?

RIC S. BASTASA
You Said Let Time Fly Its Own Wings

time flies so swiftly
and you say

don't worry let her be can't be my dear

we are taken by the wings of time and we are with her in such a faraway distance where we cannot look back anymore we fade and then we are gone forever

RIC S. BASTASA
You Said You Cannot Write

Beware of its consequence Soon you will Stop
Thinking

Soon the poem intended for you Goes away
Feeling betrayed.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Said You Fear Love

you said you fear love now for yesterday it has betrayed you and you almost died alone and bleeding

not healing quickly
like what others do with their wounds

you fear love and you promised not to hurt yourself once more you're extra careful you learned your lesson and true you shy away from love and when it gets near you you shoo it away like a little bird calling your name by your window you refuse the rose i sent you you close your door you wear a veil to hide your eyes your tears you always walk behind me and then change your way simply to avoid me

i am tired and lonely and sick of your evasions i write this letter and leave you a note:

my dear try hate, why not try having so much hate? or jthese slices of indifference taste them all and swallow them whole try all these reverses and then tell me what is the difference.

RIC S. BASTASA
You See, You Really Never Know Everythin g.

i know and i accepted it there are always blind spots, the sullenness
the impact of the rushing desire to plunge between the breasts
land in the middle of ecstasy then it stops. then there is the stare some things begin to emerge that you do not like you do not really like it.

the honeymoon is over.

yet the love-hate is still there you cannot leave on that stickiness of not knowing how to live without her the pair is perfect they keep on saying they do not know what is inside rotten and foul

but how can you tell them?
and you?

you have invested much.
divorce is unnecessary.

you untangle? then you die.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Shall Be Different

you shall be different from the rest whose business is it is to destroy

you shall create some wonders
you shall be beautiful you shall plant the seeds of flowers you shall make the songs of the world you shall make the poems that will make us ponder you shall dwell on the light you shall propagate the silence of peace you shall make the bridges of distances you shall be the mediator of their conflicts you shall smile amidst all the adversities you shall have no doubts you are the beloved child of God.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Shall Be True To Yourself....

Most people are untrue.

fact # one,
and you too

by circumstances takes that fact

as a necessity,
and so

you become one people with lots of other people: untrue

and once you accept this

as fact, comes fact # 2,

you can choose
and remain

true to yourself, as others too

are trying to be true,

and comes fact
3:

you learn to trust yourself
the self that you know best.

your best friend
ally, and

whatever,
whenever, and
whosoever.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Shall Only Be The Wind

we understand that you as the wind shall pass only for a moment and so you like to help us whenever you are here by accident or chance

wind comb my hair and free it from the dirt of the earth softly and gently sing me your passing song when i like this momentariness, wind, oh wind, i shall go with you

later.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Should Have Finished His Unfinished Poem

the poem was panting when he left it, it was wounded and blood flowed from the veins of its own words
the poem was choking
and you pity it
on its last breath
it was saying
i know you did not love me but i still love you

you should have saved the poem at least from the death he himself inflicted

by finishing it because if you don't
you know what i can do under said circumstances

i'll have to finish it myself, i will put

the question mark
and it will always be open and endless

in fact, with a question as an ending
that poem becomes a line
ad aeternum like a star on its
journey,

never ending

RIC S. BASTASA
You Should Have Known Him In The First Place

he is not what you think he is he is not a bridge, neither is he a river though he claims himself to be but it is not what and how you understand it a bridge of a rainbow a river of souls
it is not as literal as a collection letter neither is it a fantasy of the Cinderella shoe you are given a hint
a foreword
a cinder, a hoe, an ere it is not like the kind of thing that you hold and grip it is something that you see and slip like a kiss on the hair not on the lips nothing is committal but more like the life of the transmitter something blurs but becomes clear sometime
but not for long
something that you doubt after you are made so sure of it something that you find and then lose classic yet cheap harmless yet at the end causes you an excruciating pain cancer that you think benign but so much of a malign a tough thought that those of that which kills and yet redeeming

you are lost i know in pondering but that is what this game is all about i pick you up and then dropp you like the way you dropp them all too hot potato.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Should Have Not Bared It All...

to see a part of you like droplets of water from a pipe is anticipation in short takes like scenery in puzzle then you undress before me and i have seen it all: the world the suspense of a meltdown is gone and you fade away like a mist in darkness it is as if someone has arrived and there is no joy of waiting anymore

RIC S. BASTASA
You Should Have Noticed...

delight in his blurred speech the waning sun in his eyes the tongue that surrenders in darkness the silence of his night his last word, and then the end.... it is sad, but it is the relief of the inevitable every letter spells backward it has periods at every corner it was all air that i feel.....

RIC S. BASTASA
You Silence

i would like to believe in your silence you preach it
between us
sometimes i think it must be your nature
born to it and shall die with it you are promising
in your life's career but there is this silence that i cannot understand what for? so we may listen?
we have been trying to listen?
but you do not find value in the use of words or even symbols

i accept you brother, there must be reasons of your heart that our hearts do not know i agree with you brother in silence perhaps there is a cure for this disease
whatever that is
i make a promise
we love you and we accept whatever you are
wherever you are.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Simply Have To Go.

we look forward to say
'the day is over and i have done my best'

say no more, smell the flowers, listen not to their woes,

bring nothing,
do you have any choice?

you simply have to
go.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Simply Have To Take One Direction

a tip for baking emotions to have consistency you simply have to take

one direction
if counterclockwise
then just the counterclockwise do not violate simple instructions always have the correct measurements and the specified procedure do not innovate
that will be dangerous but if you want to have fun well, do it your way and enjoy the consequences

include that recipe
of how to suffer with grace how to still grieve and yet with poise.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Sing And I Write

you sing and i write
you sing louder
and i write some more as i do not sleep
as early as you want to

to sleep with you and keep you warm and keep you happy and so secure

and then you stop singing as i still go on writing and writing and writing and writing still without minding that you already stopped singing and you wished that this house burns itself that i too burn myself with it that i may finally become ash that i finally be blown by air as nothing but dust and then she may finally continue her singing and even dancing and learn to fiddle the strings her new violin

RIC S. BASTASA
You Sit On The Car And Call Yourself, Stupid

you sit inside the car as i drive on this busy road in the city, on some dangerous intersections, and you hold your hair with your left hand leaning on the mirror seeing the flow of people on the pedestrian lane
and you quip,

why do you love a stupid woman like me?

i focus myself on the road and it begins to rain and people are running everywhere seeking for shelter

you ask,
do you really love me?
i am sorry
putting you on this mess.
i am really sorry,

tears begin to roll from your eyes

the rain goes heavily on the glass and i cannot clearly see the road

it is dark and i turn on the front lights and drive the car slowly on the side of the road. I stop
for a while,
it is hazy, i said.

and i just love to kiss you.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Spend Always For Company

it is always the case

this money that you spend to lavish your friends with anything that you can think of just to keep company alive: a buffet yesterday a dinner by the beach

pizza at the yellow cab and some home made ice cream and some light beer some like it better with tomato cream soup and others ask for a can of coke one orders a bottle of mineral water and then a nice conversation is shared some stories pass from one mouth to another about a friend whose life is messy about a wife who can no longer endure an unhappy marriage with a violent husband to boot making her a punching bag and the latest decision to petition for an annulment of marriage some discover about a two friends finally having a gay affair and the talks become so intriguing you listen, the hours pass, the nights get darker, the music gets louder you just listen, you look at each face facing you without any significance

your mind travels far away from them you get a scoop of vanilla ice cream and they ask about you and you tell them that the ice cream is so good.

It is not so sweet. just enough to tickle your tongue.

then one gets so sleepy, yawns and you say that it is such a very romantic night.

you foot the bill. everyone is happy with you.
a pleasant company.
good night, they say, and again you are left alone walking at dawn, and then the lights are slowly turned off. the beach gets so white, with the coming of the morning sun.
some shadows start to vanish. another set of walkers and blank faces and you say: the night is over.
good morning boracay!

RIC S. BASTASA
You Swear To The Stars That Soon You Are Going Away To Become Someone Else

this place has become too familiar
you keep telling yourself
with so much
contempt and so each night before you sleep you swear to the stars that soon you are going away to become someone else unlike the rest of those who live here without pride

one day you pack your necessities
you put into action what you have been thinking for quite long

you keep on walking but you do not really know where you are going and you remember a friend's father who rushed early dawn to go to the place of his dreams that which the night has always told him and when he reaches there he rushed again to go back to this place of origin and he tells his children

'you can't help it your feet always want to come back to the place where you put your contempt'

and for what reason? they'd ask the father gives a shrug on his shoulder goes outside the house and takes his carabao to plow an old field again.
RIC S. BASTASA
You Taught Me...Love

look at me now.

you should have not taught me
about love,

i regret having met
you

that tryst under the moon under the heap of the dry leaves
of summer

May 1989
when i stumbled upon a scent of magnolias

it was your
silence

it made me
human.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Tell Her To Look At The Sky Instead.

the moment
a question is asked

whether she is
loved

and if so how deep is it

you take her
hand

you go to the
sea

lay your bodies on the shore

you tell her to look at the sky instead.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Think That I Am Hurt?

the years solidify pain they turn into stone they become more silent unmoved untouched think of them are strong and self-sufficient, unaffected, they watch everything pass time and turbulence of the seasons
the overflowing of the rivers they live and survived stones as they are they do breathe they do not speak so you think that i am really hurt?

i am stone. And it is not my new name.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Underestimate Pain And Its Thresholds

i understand fully
why

you underestimate pain and its thresholds

you look down upon persistence equating it with
a compulsion

why you underrate pain as a character trying hard to be felt by an indifferent audience more interested in ball games politics and business and today's weather why you pay lip service to a struggle

a cause

why you consider religion as a set of mores a conduct nothing but a Sunday show of compliance

why you consider depression as a form of dramatic training

why sorrow is a script of an opera that has value only when it registers huge sales in the theater do we share these same events?

are all these present in our old houses as old photographs as memoirs, as a scrapbook of family secrets

a bible of our nights
a clique

a novel that we set aside because we have been reading all the pages

ever since childhood?

RIC S. BASTASA
You Understand Your Reflection In The Mirror and then you face the mirror again staring at the reflection touching the image

with your hands
trying to feel the coldness
of it all

somehow you begin to understand the meaning of a reflection you go inside your door not shutting it
you travel
the hardest journey of your life trying to understand what is it inside you that does not befriend you you experience the loneliest adventure sailing the river alone without a paddle

a map, a compass
a rudder

there is that light that guides you somehow inside the cave of universal darkness you feel like one of those muted tiny glittering stars

RIC S. BASTASA
You Want An Answer?

this new shirt which i have never worn which i have outgrown which i just kept in my aparador for years
since then,
i let go...
and what did i really let go? and what did i really give up? since there is no pain in giving it up, then i have never really given up anything. it is just one happening where you have done literally nothing and hence i have no right to say that this world owes me something.
a little higher now.
this body, i have worn it for 53 years now, it is just kept within my skin, i am outgrowing it as always, it has no use somehow, and humanity, and civilization is asking, if i too can let it go?

you want an answer?

RIC S. BASTASA
You Want Answers. Take Doubts

You want answers.
There are no answers.
You want some questions.
There are no questions now.
You want something,
There is nothing.
You want this.
There is that.
This and that, they do not Always come together
And wanting this
You only get that.
See? See.
You want to live in peace
No there is no peace War has always been with us You know that, not this.
Oh yes, you want certainties.
You just want to be sure What is in my hand Tell me, and I will prove You wrong, always, I want To prove you wrong
About certainties, there is Nothing certain. They just come When they like coming
And they tell you
You dream, we give What is best, it may not be what You are dreaming, or we punish you By giving what you want You prayed so earnestly Oh! These lords these gods This fate this destiny
They always wait for you Always hazy, and taken as X, y, and z
You, it is you that assigns the values And you can be wrong and even Still be puzzled.

There is nothing certain.
So?
Well, take the doubts
They are the only things certain Because they are real.
We live with them everyday.
They are mothers and fathers And yes, they are gods.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Want Me To Simplify My Life..To Be

to be just
simple and say clearly what i what you to understand less words perhaps no signs no picture even just a glance or a touch or a tap on the shoulder to be direct, candid, straighforward to tell the truth, this truth and nothing but the truth no words

how can i tell you? how can i give you the signs how can i be direct and candid and straightforward how can i ever tell the truth when all these years i do not know anymore about anything

when what i know is only to survive at all costs

do you think that i still have the truth or the courage to tell you
about it

the truth? do you really need the truth inorder to live?
tell me, why and what?

learn first and teach me how let us perhaps begin again from the time when we were born from the time when we first give them our big cry.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Want To Help Death Take You Earlier

you want death to take you earlier you take in fat and salt and sugar in extreme doses, you worry a lot, you drink vodka and tequila
you quarrel with everyone how you wish this angry someones shoots you to death with his bullet you sleep late you take in drugs to finish you off sometimes you even start to stop breathing you want to wake up one morning and walk straight to the sea without looking back
you like to imagine how is it if you do it on the 30th floor of the building
you are crazy
you abuse yourself
despite your talent your gift in thoughts your capacity for good you want to die but death has been patient with you biting its tongue closing its mouth unpronouncing on you

there will be time death says there will come a time when death shall come and then you run away because at that moment you still do not want to die and then death takes its revenge on the hush of the wind without any warning or sound dead shall take you

RIC S. BASTASA
You Want To Last Forever?

there are those who want to last forever

all efforts are towards posterity

you dream of a long life seven houses, seven children seven times seven grandchildren you store a fortune you need a bigger storage you save money you make more money you buy land you buy more land you invest and invest and invest some more and one day the Lord God says it is time for you to go

and there you are

gone. gone. gone. gone. gone ozymandiases

oh common, no one lasts forever even the stones, the rocks, the cliffs, the monuments

kiss the gumamela
and the woman from Guatemala.....

RIC S. BASTASA
You Were Amazing Just The Way

The first time
then the second
then the last
that second to the last you were amazing
just the way
you wear me out.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Were Once A Girl

i remember you: once a girl whose hands hold on to mine in school, my first year of teaching then in the university and your mother was there teaching too, how time must have passed!

now you are a lawyer pregnant on your second child and defending a case of your classmate in my court.

how time must have passed!

swiftly, so swiftly like a bird falling out from the edge of the horizon like a gaze falling out from the seams of our visions

how time must have passed!

yet i feel nothing that i have to worry there is no one in my house to stay when my time to leave shall finally come.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Were The Passing Wind Of Our House

you pass by the house like the wind
cold at first we felt we thought we gonna miss you
but by then
we closed the door of the house let one window open

we breathe
to regain what was warm and comforting
once

then we sighed for that wind we are not hopeless somehow the other packets of winds
are coming
from all scattered directions myriad all eager to feel us too our arms are true
our hands softer in our accepted weaknesses

we do not ask anymore what passing must be and where those winds are really going we understand that birds have to migrate to far places

in order to survive

some people simply have to go to map out their own destinies we still live in this house where we weave some dreams in some little ways we embark in the embroidery of the delicate flowers

of our souls

and then we look at everything we have been tasked we nod, there is so much passion still so much passion

yes.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Will Be Keeping Memories Of Those People Who Leave You....

it's what happens after the party which haunts the most.

the left-overs litter on the table
the plates are like faces of people looking at you
saying 'what now? what's next? '

you will be keeping memories
of those people who leave you
because they have their own homes
away from yours

the table will be empty again
the chairs too and the veranda
will be very silent

you go out of the room and lean
on the railings of the stairs
you look at the heavens
to find out how distant are the stars

how beautiful are those which you
cannot touch

until your favorite cat comes
and rubs her head under your hands

RIC S. BASTASA
You Will Feel The Loss,

the usual sands slipping from your fingers, love's departure, much painful than love's death, a dog run-over by a car, your dog, not much about a bad debt, or a friend betraying you, or someone you have not even met but somehow you have felt from far, silly matters make you feel it too, opportunities not grabbed, doors you have not even knocked, a would be lover whom you have decided to forgo, so many losses, yet one thing that you must never lose,
yourself, because when you lose it, you will never feel it again.

you feel the loss of a falling leaf, say to yourself, it is usual and it is just a leaf anyway.
or that key which fell on the canal, that bird which you let go, that food which you did not eat, that new shirt which does not really feet because you now have a big tummy, and so on and so forth, yet one thing i must tell you, be responsible on these losses, ignore, and forget, you must learn this choices.

otherwise, you will lose yourself, and that will be the last thing to lose and never find again

RIC S. BASTASA
You Will Find This Comfort

come, and be with me find comfort in my strangeness as i too, shall find the same in you.

we did not know where were we
when we were children
now we find ourselves in such attractive strangeness

come, come and be with me let us learn to love our own strange ways let us embrace our own uniqueness let us see how love and friendship surprise us.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Will Get Over With Elation

ah soon
you will get over with elation

a feast cannot last for long it becomes another boring explosion of joys repeated like a song played over and over gain painful soon to the
the way how our ears are pierced by nails

ah, soon you will find a comma for a clause rethink about success and conspire for another failure for in truth it is the failure that makes us move towards greater heights
uncharted courses
and more eureka for exhilaration....

a red carnation in your head wilts in time and your hair is back home dry again and need water like a surprise for
rain

the one that makes you think that you shall dance again the happiness of grass, the joy in mud, in those open endless skies

RIC S. BASTASA
You Will Not Feel A Love Like Mine

i look at you
i want to tell you
that you cannot have another love
like mine

i want to tell you
this
but i won’t

you're not just too good for my own kind of subjugation

can you be
my slave driver?

RIC S. BASTASA
You Will Sing Again The Songs Of Love

as you cook breakfast today
for him
thinking about the menu that he loves most you will sing again
the songs of love
that you once sang
only in the bathroom
when the summer
gets so hot when once he was not with you but in some other person's arms in another's warmer
embraces.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Won'T Like Me Man

look at me
i do not give you results for i am a man of reason
i do not believe in compulsion
i believe in the democracy of thoughts
go where you want to
in the same manner
that i do it myself
i swing my arm farther from your nose
as you swing yours
not touching my ear for in truth i believe in your light
same as the light that is freely given to my mind
we are in the same situation and i respect you for that man, i am the kind that do not give results'
i have always respected all people's freedom a la Voltaire.

RIC S. BASTASA
You Write Because Of A Certain Purpose

writing with a purpose. like everything and everyone always with a purpose...

beauty, and hope and sadness and death and redemption...

all these have built-in purposes but whatever that is the things-in-themselves without mouths speak for what they mean outstretched tendrils looking for the ray of the sun blooming petals wanting for someone to adore pathways seeking themselves on a certain destinations seas covering the earth giving way to the existence of maps and so i write, i keep the purpose within my letters my words that you read this poem that shows arms opening to embrace you and also to keep my cold heart warm.

RIC S. BASTASA
you, the beautiful one why have you become prohibited? i adore you
in silence

and all i have to give you is just this glance. Everyday has become a suffering

something so beautiful that makes every nerve of my body quiver for you something so beautiful that i want to touch. My fingers are dying and my lips

as shrinking to the dryness of my unfulfilled dreams

my love is strong and so beautiful too but in your world of self-restraint all these, all these beautiful feelings are simply meant to die and vanish

and never shall they ever be thought of again

ashes, dusts,
dry leaves, and earthworms and graves and silent silky veils.

RIC S. BASTASA
You...

you have this body
see it in the mirror
you have this soul
see it in your heart

feed the one that makes you live
forever....

RIC S. BASTASA
You.......

MY only
sin today is having talked to you about what i do not really like talking, say, i, perhaps, just want to please you so that, well, you may like me, sort of,
an admission on my part
that i am
a lonely guy and i need someone
to talk to
be that one
a simpleton, a moron, or a mongoloid, definitely not smart, yes,

you.

RIC S. BASTASA
You’re Still You

The same hair curling on your head At 49, you look younger,
There are no wrinkles on your forehead The cheeks still smooth and tight Your eyes still glow Like fireflies reflected in the mirror
The moon against the sky

The way you talk defies the years of your absence
The way you look at me Your way your gaze flies like a butterfly Hovering back to me like tender hands
Of a woman
Caressing my face
Like golden yellow wing Fluttering on the petals of a flower

Indeed, you are still you Loving me
In gentle restraint and I am deeply saddened
By my own kind of same Usual indifference
Of the clouds drifting Without even the thought Of stopping by the Peaks of trees

As you open yourself to the sun like A tight bud opening its petals Finally exposing its true gentle colors A flower blooming
To the kindness of sunshine And the freshness of the air That this world can offer

I spread my wings like a yellow butterfly Fluttering away to another garden Young Dog

crickety teeth
my left slipper
gets taken somewhere
my right slipper bitten urine on the sofa poo poo on the garage sliding through the kitchen door

chasing in the yard
scattered books
in the living room

licking my feet
playing bites with my hands this young dog is the star of the house

no kids, eh.

RIC S. BASTASA
Young Poetess, Ignis Fatuus

come with me, come with me we shall be silent under a skyful of stars

come with me come with me and be so so silent like me we will be seeing a dark sky full of stars we shall be silent without their wars we will only be the wisps of the winds whispering whims and hymns

RIC S. BASTASA
that bamboo is muted until you bore a hole for its existence until you give it your breaths your confidences

until you keep it beside you your hands softly holding it until you kiss it like your lover then it sings spontaneously like the breeze to the waves of the sea

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Body Aches

your nerves are too tight and pain grips your fingers in between your moans relax your muscles a bit the tongue can do its task pleasing sounds of gasps and groans the palate knows what the heart misses take this thing as a piece of cake sugar coated and brightly colored pink and red and less of the green bluish and its smells of orangeness and then have that dance, yes, the belly, and why not?

it is just the two of us, why not?
why not try, being not you, for this moment, this truth, this salvage of lost emotions, why not? yes why not? just the two of us and no one is watching except the stars and the moon these paper designs, glistening with artificial pride.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Breasts

a bunch of grapes purple magnified dew on its sides like the gleams of the moons of Jupiter
too luscious pulp
to my tongue always luscious to my tongue like your breasts
like the gleamings moons of my Jupiter

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Dance My Love

you are so beautiful when you start to dance when all the leaves fall off from your arms naked, i have seen everything that your earth has to offer:

your hills and trees and forest, your creeks and rivers, your clouds and seas, your grass and flowers i have seen them all and touched them your hills i have climbed your trees with sweet fruits i have gathered them all and bit and sucked and savored each sap and juice its flesh and fiber

i have slept on your grass i have smelled your flowers i have gazed on your clouds and have taken the dive on your seas
i have sailed on your rivers i have bathed on your creeks i have done everything for you to please you my love yet why are your eyes so sad tonight?

you are like a moon fading in the dark you are like the song of a bird dissolving in distance.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Escapades And Your Having To Wear Red

So you have gone to Burma Blending with the natives in the jungle there You trembled in East Timor Afraid that you cannot return home You were like a louse Hiding in the eye of the storm In the middle of their war In your escapades

Shocks!

And all the rest were also shocked Mr. Takahashi
Has become your new name While you bade goodbye
To the French journalist
At the airport
If the plane somehow crashes Your name on the list is Takahashi

"it is no longer funny" you said

Now you are wearing red Your way of supporting The oppressed monks of Burma Who were tied on the posts In Rangoon
And gunned by the soldiers there Balding themselves
Pretending to be monks

And some were cremated
Alive

And you quipped
"Hello, what I am doing
Is both a political and Fashion statement"
A joke and Something serious
Like you and i
Just like chatting
Could be true
Could be false
I have no trust
What if the person beside me Is only faking Cheating me
What if what he said
Were all lies
We are just playing games Hide and seek Catching flies because Everything is merely
To cover
Boredom

Sandwich fillings
Closing and opening
This lust
Close open
Close open
A baby’s game
Could be also because of missing the Feeling of having to love again Returning to the past
The shells long ago broken Near the white thighs of the Sea..

“Crazy” “Fool”

That is actually what life is all about True and false
Playful
Fate
Sometimes we travel to far places East Timor, Burma, china, united states of America even the sierra madre, the malindang mountains

Got urinated by a tarsier Got pecked by a monkey-eating eagle The white cobra spat on me>

I have always flown away On a plane
Always riding on a bus On train, fast crafts, chopper and even On a submarine then take the pick-up On a pedicab on a motorcycle Went down got on my worn-out sneakers Walk again for hours and hours Always crossing rivers
Eight or the ninth crossing the same river Winding on the same mountain and the same forest and valleys Then again crossing the same river Sometimes too shallow on my heel then deeper up to my neck and chin and sometimes I have to swim
On the murky river and trip on big boulders Walk, swim, and walk, Trek again on the footpaths under the cogon grasses Climb the cliffs
Take narrowing footpaths Sharp stones
And then comes the muddy paths Places which had much rain And get flooded
Because of the rain
But there is another rain
I tell you
The rain of bullets
The rain of screams
For those who died here Rain of sighs
Rain of cries of brains I have seen much of this sort
Of rain
Shouting, crying, running, hiding, Catch, hold, squat, dropp to the ground, Jump, fall, run, catch, run, Tie, beat, tie, and beat, Slap, questions
There are no answers
Threat, ask, threat, Convince,
Hit, box,
Wounds, bruises,
Inflamed, blood,
The wide expanse and the deepening depths
Of silence
Diffusing
All walked away
They left, they journeyed
And what was left on the river Was the sound of a crying child Looking for mother and father And his three siblings

The wind caressed the leaves of the ipil-ipil Stained by blood Sticking
And diffusing on the roots
The Nipa huts
Are dead
Muted by all the sounds of pain A while ago its doors Were kicked and forced open
And there were holes on its windows Where the bullets went through With sparks

I have seen many of those who cried in my journeys
The cry of the widow sounding like cows bridled Cries of children sounding like goats caught by their own rope The cry of the beautiful maiden Tears falling on her cheeks absorbed by her long and thick black hair Sometimes with the many cries I heard and saw The constancy and the frequency Seemingly endless

And other ambiances or funeral senses>

Sometimes sometimes I begin to hear nothing Sometimes I do not see anymore Even if I have to face them I seem to look much farther And see nothing at all near me My thoughts have gone to a very far journey Away from them
Just like you
My thoughts will be traveling far, far away Away from all these that face me

< I HAVE BECOME NUMB TO ALL THESE MELODRAMA OF STRATEGIES AND RETALIATION THIS ENDLESS WAR OF IDEOLOGIES THESE MEANINGLESS STRUGGLES ALL THESE CRAP>

I am now in the faraway jungles of Burma In East Timor, in the United States of America
I always have this dream I have always traveled in this dream

I have to journey towards myself I have to get inside my own brain
And I ask

For everything, for the places I have gone, Have I gone to myself?
Have I ever gone to myself?
Where is this place?
Where is this going to be?
What ride will I take?
Going towards myself?
Hey pedicab driver,
Pedal me, take me
Towards myself
Please take me there
And dropp me by.

AND so in wearing red
And for those, those which you want to do and say
And the other thousand things you want done Surely, There are, surely, still many of them That my fingers cannot count and the other toes included

I will see you and your dreams And your hopes
A face complete with a nose, a mouth, Eyelids and ears
Cheeks and lashes &
Hair

I HAVE UNDERSTOOD NOTHING I AM SEEING FARAWAY THINGS YET I HAVE NOT SEEN ANYTHING I HAVE TRAVELED FAR
YET I HAVE NOT ARRIVED ANYWHERE

These are what I have cried for The cries
I have heard
More horrible than the cries I heard on that river
On that river
Where my friends were gunned And killed
Worst

WORST THAN THE SOUND OF THE SHOVELS THAT DUG THE SHALLOW GRAVES
For ALL OF THEM
THE SOUND MUCH LOUDER THAN THE BULLETS THAT RIPPED THEIR HEARTS
THAT TORE THEIR CHEEKS THAT PENETRATED THEIR SKINS AND FLESH

Had the chance to bite Because mother and father Had kept watch Throughout the night>

This is my cry
Loud cry
Loud crying
Tears flooding from my eyes Like the flood from the mountains Where the tornado fell
But in that thunderous Loud sound
Nonetheless

It is only I
Who heard it

This is
This is
This the cry
Of myself
I am
I am the only
It is only me
Mine alone
I am the only one hearing it.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Eyes

we meet we sit here together on a green grassy grand gig

we look at each others eyes
our mouths are shut but your eyes speak a lot

it is all about love and history.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Eyes In That Picture Insist On Asking Why well, i was yet 15 but i already keep a photograph of you in my pocket, you are the face of my heart beat in black and white i often kiss your tiny lips and put you on my chest as though i feel you one with me in my sleep, that was long time ago and the picture suffered with the way i was keeping it inside my old poetry books in those pages eaten by bookworms some scratches ultimately are inflicted in your cheeks and even your lips have become empty spaces blurred by time what keeps insistent however are your eyes stripped of a nose and lips and even a neck thriving on lesser hair and thin ears they float in that picture still looking at me asking

why?

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Face

your face
it is not beautiful

but nonetheless
your face
fills my mind

you do not mind
everyday
you see not even
me
in some eyelash

yet why?
this love persists
i cannot explain somehow this foolishness
of my dumb heart
unrequited

my brain is angry though but nonetheless
cannot do otherwise

to kill this love so true
that you
today did not for once ever see.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Face Is My Face

your face
is my face
how could you not see it?
your face
is my face
how could not not have felt kissing it?
your face
is my face
and it is the face of God how could you have hated it?
your eyes
are my eyes
and they have long been blinded on bouncing stares like pingpong balls rebounding
reverberating the sound of nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Face...

stay still, do not turn your face to the extreme end, , , this is the right angle i click the camera,

this is the side of happiness, keep your cool, do not move, do not change the angle, now, try moving to the extreme left, this will be the same face, but the extreme one on a 190 degree turn, shows the other side of you, and this i will try to take too, this face of sorrow, this angle of lament, , , , you see, it is the same face with just one turn, a little change, at the extreme, i can see both of you...

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Faith To The Letter Of Poetry

your faith to the letter of poetry (not the law) is measured by your fidelity to its life, today, you keep on writing even though there is really nothing to write even though there is nothing that comes from inside you like you vomit with nothing coming out anymore you mimic what children do when they do not like their parents
feigning sickness and breaking toys and not eating much,
this is it hear the buzz of life but you are not a part of it anymore.

there is this leaf that keeps falling in the abyss of darkness it is different now. There is no bottom.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Fear

you fear writing poems
thoughts coming
in your mind
that you cannot reduce into
words?

fear not reality

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Fear Of Getting Old

your fear of getting old is taking its toll on you your preoccupation to be young
again

look! how fast have you become the witch
of this honorable community!

it is the fear
and nothing but the fear of getting old
that made you appear so old like a whorled peanut like a paper that gets crumpled because of too much

keeping

fragility lost
cracks like the eggshell that you conceal and tightly holding to your fingers

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Feet On Top Of The Stone On The River

you put your feet on top of a stone
on a clear river

you want to feel
the stability of
love
the hardness of a foundation

you want to be on top of the situation where the water flows
and you
on that stone
becomes
unaffected

you let time flow
like water
you let yourself steady like your feet unmoved

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Friend....

i told you once
this is all easy too easy in fact
for you just have to feel and not even think and you
close your eyes and
think of all the colors and scents and listen to the sound and take note of all the landscapes and people there whom you so love inside that dream and then when you open your eyes you start to remember midst this real world
a wall here and a window
over there
and then towards a row of trees and a very long pavement where children play
and whistle

you see it is just plaint talking to yourself and then listening
what you are saying

and voila you have another creation
of your mind
a way to relax and feel that you are not alone
because your sound
is another person
and you
when you hear too
is a friend.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Gauge Is When You Begin To Learn How

as always there is something left unspoken

there is no word
for it yet

you are still not sure whether it can be poetic

your gauge is when you begin to learn how to fly, to go away,

to be nobody.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Gaze

I was naked
and i love it when you clothed
me with your
gaze.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Gaze Has Always Made A Difference

i wonder why your gaze makes a lot of difference from all the gazes i have seen in my lifetime i look at you. I steal a moment to look at you. I am not afraid. I am silent about this gaze. It is true.

Your eyes are different. They speak They sing a love song.
Not necessarily for me.
But i like it that way. For me?

then you gaze at me. I pretend I do not understand the language of your eyelashes. They say, why are you avoiding me?
Don't you know that my eyes did not sleep last night because you were there kissing my lips in the metaphors dancing in the ceiling?

I stop thinking. This cannot be.
How are we speaking in the midst of this crowd without using a word, or even a syllable?

I walk away. No, this cannot be.
This is strange. This is impossible.
Two gazes speaking a language of their own. Saying: this is love.
This is desire. And the night is waiting. It is short. It not demanding in knowing a true name, or a place, or a space in the future.

I close my eyes. I open them again.
I walk away. Now, I am telling myself I cannot hear you. I am safe.
Your Goal....

same poem
with a different title.

same man
with a different name.

sometimes it happens.
your own making.

this is freedom
you do what you want.

if they say it is wrong or it is bad
or it is not beautiful

so what?
this is freedom.
you commit a wrong.

you want to correct it?
oh, let them wait.

freedom is simply minding your own business.

this ' i don't care'
and ' i do what i want'

let the house fall
it is your goal.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your God

there is a big difference of course between a marble eye and a real eye one does not cry

and there is too a big difference between your heart and mine

you out-beat me in this run for life i have weakened and i have long rehearsed the truth of my lines: (that i do not love you anymore)

but you keep on coming back to resuscitate my mouth kissing me, kissing me again, and then thinking that i have already died you screamed to the heavens and even cursed God

i feel so guilty. I resurrected. I take back my cross again.
Telling you, that God is kind and he did not mean to kill me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Grief........

you try to squeeze your heart
with your hands
to deceive pain with another pain

but the pain is still there persisting

so you try to sing
under the moon
the wind accompanies your song
so does the breeze from
the sea
like a whistle

the sleepy cicadas hear
all these

they really want to join you but they have second thoughts they merely listened because the pain seems
to be
unbearable

the following morning there were many dead leaves
at the foot of the big tree in
the forest

even the snakes felt the shock...

..........................................................
ang sakit sa dughan gisulayan og kumot sa kamot aron ang sakit
malimtan sa laing sakit apan nagpabilin ang sakit sa dughan

busa misulay ka og awit diha sa silong sa bulan giduyugan ka sa bugnaw nga hangin sa kagabhion mitayhop og apil ang dagat sama sa usa ka taghoy nadungog kini sa mga nahikatulog nga mga gangis

gusto unta nilang moapil apan nahingawa sila
nabati nila ang imong kasakit og namati lamang sila

pagkaugma pagkadaghan sa mga dahon sa naga nga nangahulog
diha sa tiilan sa usa ka dakong lasang pati gani ang mga

bitin
nalisang...

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Guests, The Moon And Stars........

i knew you
since then but
then
i mastered the art of concealment, which is too beautiful

with all the masks
and sudden
invisibility,

it is a thrill
to see and not be seen

to say and not
feel,

to be there and
not there,

soon, you take light, and then flight and then settle
in solitude,

it is the silence
which you got but
this time

you give up light
and embrace the darkness expecting

your guests, the moon
and stars.
Your Hands As Truths..

when you say you like me
i know
you meant the opposite and then i say that it is over
which you
of course fully understand that i still need another beginning

in this game, i opted for consistency

a tooth for a tooth an eye for an eye

look at us, look at us i need to find your hands and hold them as truths.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Hands Have Become Adept At Doing It Until Your Arms Begin To Feel Its Skill As Art

you have been attuned to setting aside matters then things then people then the world

your hands have become adept at doing it until your arms begin to feel its skill as art

you turn around and move forward and there is no looking back because it is too unnecessary because there is no one there anymore it is a lonely place and no one hears you when you begin to cry.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Incompleteness Completes Me tell what time is it that you come

for i will make ready myself as an empty
cup

tell me what time that you are sad
for i will turn myself into syrup

the moments are all yours and i your pleasant servant
of love
must have nothing in mind but love for you your happiness

it does not matter what shall i become an empty cup and then a sweet syrup
a knob of the door
a kettle or a floor

for i am nothing without you your incompleteness completes me.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Innocence Sometimes Irritates Him

your innocence sometimes irritates him to no end when one day you were bitten by this one-eyed snake and you keep it a secret because you felt this ecstasy that you do not want to share or even say something not a name but a place you find so exciting

look at you
your mouth is bubbling

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Intent

what is your intention writing in the language of your own, not to be understood purposely shutting yourself

inside your mouth
your words

you chew and swallow and hide some treasures circuitously inside your large and small intestines
in time
coming out like the lines that you still like to own now on the ground
dried

your name and your shadow

rained hopefully some little flowers shall start to grow

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Jackfruit

your jackfruit
is sweet and juicy
and i could have eaten it with lots of gusto
but come to think of it and i have reflected on this matter
for quite a time
it is hard to remove the left over latex in my hand
and so i have finally decided not
to...

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Kite

you have the most likable kite the one that casts no shadow on the ground the one that flies the highest reaching the cheek of the sky pulling the strings there for rain

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Last Picture

you in black shirt
wet with sweat
on a blue train
in the city
you are holding a bottle of beer
on your side is the dalmatian
without the usual
rope in your hand

things run smoothly
like the train
like the round body of the bottle of beer
like your dog
lying on the floor
of the train
one night
when all the passengers
are gone.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Last Word

your last word is obscene what? i never loved you.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Lips

wet
like a morning red daisy drenched with dew

a door
half-open
waiting for
my lips
for you are incomplete
without me

at the height of this fantasy you lips become the door of the castle that i shall bombard
with my canon tonight
my tongue to your tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Man Demands Virginity

a chain of daisies on your hair crowning you like a queen

and at the end some nail-like flowers of white champaca

perfumed
now he must kiss you and you do not refuse this ritual on a chain

of love

somehow not to offend him
you must produce

not just sweat and tears of joy but blood

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Mandate

you do not like the image of the bird with a hundred eyes and he follows you because he loves you he exercises restraint on his fingers and sketches a petal you want more of it and so he draws a rose with lots of red petals just to please you but deep within him he wants to be that bird with a hundred eyes on a hundred wings to fly the thousand filaments of winds but because he loves you he stays as a hand waiting for your orders

time knows how to make a solution and it takes you with the hard grip of its hands your breath is taken away and he buries you immediately deeper than you expect to the dampness of
the earth

now he becomes a bird with a hundred eyes and a hundred wings so free so delighted he does not even want to mention your name ever again despite the fact that he still loves you

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Mimicry

one day
you get tired

mimicking the
mynah bird

you only want it to know your language and to bait it with your own style

you mimic it but it does not learn from your mimicking and you stop and one day it looks at you with pity and it speaks its own language from the forest, which is if you listen well enough sad and lonely

and even dying

it speaks of a desire to be returned to its own place it is drawing to you a forest a dark spot,

a hounding sound of its
niche

one day you see the light of its night song a red moon

a drift on the black marsh and so you take it

and release it from your mimicry and both of you are finally free

and the forest is one happy family and the cage of your expectations becomes empty

life has arrived returning back your own tongue

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Mind A Landscape

a farm of coconut trees and horses and cows fenced a buffalo wading in mud beside the river filled with fish a woman naked enjoying the cool waters a man watching hiding behind the thick bushes birds above their heads clouds shifting places

lights fade
the curtains fall

and then we all live and not talk about it

all these
still disturbing our minds

we figure out how these can end

what murder
what prison cell!

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Name....

of all the names,
yours stood among the crowd in the malls
of my confusion,
it must be you,
i hear you laugh
once, and you sound
so well, like you, in the hidden meaning
of your words,
of all my friends,
i know, it is you,
who knows how to
stab at my back,
hide behind the
curtain, slip in the darkness and come back with a smile
and say
ho ho ho,
santa.

RIC S. BASTASA
and so
what is the difference?

compare the moon
and the stars

imagine a fall
a moon falling on the lake

some stars follow
what do you hear?

there is only one
only one moon in your heart when some of these stars fall the loss is negligible

but the moon
how can you endure it?

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Own Fears...

it was your own
fear which ended you

the devil swore
it did not even touch you with a ten-foot pole.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Own Universe....

regarding this matter
good manners are out of the question

to say you are excused is irrelevant to say you are sorry is immaterial this matter of the heart and this matter of survival on one hand are private pursuits inside some dark and hazy rooms where the hands are groping also for such definition of terms such as: what is happiness?

such as: is this freedom? is this good? or fair? amidst the ocean of personalities, one faces the other glum and plum and grim and prim and bull and ram: so be it, take flight, let go, cry alone, be bitter but not for long? you learn to mumble and talk to yourself, nonsen sically, and bruised and framed and rising up like the sun again into a window, glassy and transparent, at first without meaning, but then grappling with all these realities, one builds a sky again, a universe, one sun, one moon and lots of stars.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Paranoia Is As Good As Mine

They say that this little mess in zamboanga is a stage play written by a man who has something better for the future of our country

it is scripted and rehearsed and to make it appear real some people have to play deaf and blind and mute

and those unfortunate ones do not have to play dead

they are
dead,
they have to die
needlessly,
and must be buried
at once

lest they will rise up from their graves and speak
the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but
the truth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Patience And Understanding

for you to satiate me i only need the silence speaking destroys the taste of desire

i do not need words
i do not need to know

we are here to feel and perhaps for you to sacrifice your being i do not invade into your domain not even in the kingdom of your stare i am here only to be here i do not speak a word neither do i entertain a thought you are here as a blooming flower i am autumn.

we belong to different worlds our situations clash

there is no need to fight what is needed is just being beside you the night has been unusually cold and i am a very heavy and dark cloud my being does not rapture it wakes up from deep sleep without a capture you shall never understand how twisted has love become.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Philosophy

you make it candid
nothing of the non-transparent twists and turns direct to the point no holds bar nothing to hide you say what is in your mind you call a spade a spade a square is a square not a queer queer queer ideal, you don't write a poem it is pointless to write any you live your life

you rhyme
you count every step like a meter a haiku
a sonnet

you like it crisp and short and always saying less to anything

a trek on the mountainside feeling the ways of the snake rather than talk and talk duck quacking

you say, 'plunge!' '
live life
do not let it just be written by them

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Poem Is Young

dress it up with an armor
and a helmet
let it go to the battlefield and fight its own wars do not give it tranquility that is not its real color

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Poems

home
i click home
i double click home
and there
your poems are found

how can i ever read them?
robot-like i am

i dream of home
this double-clicking home addicted
i am not doing anything worthwhile i am not dead i am not alive i am pressing keys
i am not thinking i am not feeling i am taking everything
i have nothing

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Poems About Love Revisited

the first poem that you really find it hard to write is to write an image which must tell her that you love her truly from the bottom of your heart, and then the most beautiful poem comes from her when she admits that she also loves you with all her heart and soul and mind, and then the saddest poem was not written.
it was when everything ended.
the years passed.
and you do not even know where she is.
it is always the saddest poem, when you do not know where to find love
anymore.

All corners of the world are looking for it.
They seem not to find it, and all these corners will only stop writing and talking and speaking when love is found
when their hearts are filled, when their mouths cannot utter a word, because of so much abundance, bliss, joy, happiness, these shall make us mute for another hundred years.

for in making love,
words do not have use,
except to call its name again on the intensity of feeling....love.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Poems Are Long And I Have A Hard Time Memorizing

come with me
we shall be holding hands we shall walk under a sky full of stars we will feel the soft caresses of the wind on this hillside

we close our eyes
and we kiss

there is no word that we shall waste in that poem

the memory does not need any utterance

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Poems...

addictive
enslaving, compelling
eccstatic
northern lights
halo
a vent and running
electricity over our bodies
nutritional, redeeming scenic imagery, a painting that speaks to you
a sculpture that seems more real
a running river a deep ocean
a singing shell
a banquet alone a Bedouin riding on his horse towards an oasis
fantasy land
yet so concrete and
touchable

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Poise

in that boat amidst the crowd of so much noise
it is you that is unaffected

your sorrow is deep in the south pacific

how come that ey they never noticed
that?

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Question...

i am confronting you
with a life&death
situation, i remove the life part and straightly death stares at you, and you
look at me, and you
ask:

what can i do?

when i will give you my answers even in the split of a second i know, it will be too late,
and i will ask you too,

yes, what can we do?

and then both of us are gone riding on the wings of eternal sleep, for in truth, when confronted with this last and decisive situation, we surely, can do nothing.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Questions For A Moment May Emasculate Me

after this universe in orgasm, the space opens itself to an ejaculation of stars i float like a planet sticking to its orbit asleep soundly in the usual revolutions

you step upon a black hole forever lost

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Right To Choose....

a poem is just a poem
it can also be just another number,
you can choose a letter to start it with a vowel perhaps so you can make a legible sound so that you can be heard at once like a cat on heat, or you can choose a consonant which can be more poetic with its moan,
or simply a slur of a roof where rust begins to conquer the surfaces of the house's soul,
or you can choose a number
which you
just did, in fact, some numbers too draw some meanings, a choice to create a form in our mind,
a body of a woman another body of an old woman, we can choose depth or settle upon the shallowness of a surface, whichever makes us
comfortable, for in truth, i have this theory in mind, we indulge
because we simply want to be comfortable, it is like getting a chair and then you sit there. if someone comes along and pulls another chair, it will be merrier,
and then we choose again,
to talk or just be silent.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Self-Centeredness

is this world all about you?
if is not about your book it will be about your trip or about your family
your roots and ambitions, and... i am dizzy about these matters for you make me revolve around you and you are never such a glorious sun anyway, and i wonder why you do not have so many friends why you lurk in the dark and cry over your past and fear the future, and when i start telling you that this is not going the right way you show your real nature, a hungry beast wanting to devour anybody who comes your way.

your depression is getting to be infectious and i do not like it. Sorry but i must go and find someone else. Take care, be happy. So long.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Shadow Again....

i am tired.
you think that i do not know how to draw your face from only a few pieces of evidence: an eyelash, lips, a few locks of your
hair,
and a bowl of
water.

that is what you
do,
blackmail.

a shadow waits,
and it will stab you
too.

it is yours.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Silence

You stand on a mountain taking a view of the vast space Like any other men and women you have the right to stand in the middle of these Hills and the rolling sights of everything like some big waves On this forest,
What you cannot stand like the rest is the sound of howling emptiness You are on top of the situation I suppose You are very near the clouds You talk to each of them that drift and pass but you have not heard even a single

Word,
The birds that pass and go away from where you stand know this Each has shed a feather or two as tribute They know much better and they have flown away and lived their ways They know much better and so they have no reason

To complain. Look at you, your silence is growing like cancer in your ears.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Silence Does Not Drown Me how can your silence

drown me
instead it vivifies
what spirit is there
left entwined to every nerve of my body

i live

because your
silence
smiles a lot

i know
love still dwells
inside the pout
of your mouth.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Simple Dream

you have traveled far and studied in different universities and these did not really make you
happy,

your dream is so simple as having to caress
a shoulder
brown and wide enough to fill
your emptiness,

and tonight you fulfill said dream
your palms land on the patch of your simplest dream
to love and simply be loved in return and your eyes look with such a lovely blink like a dim light of the bulb teasing the walls and the ceiling and the window and doors now all shut because of you

they must die in envy with you

and you let love
swim in your swamps fly in your clouds
and walk on your
mountains
you let all the birds sing and the earthworms burrow

there is no patch in you that is lacking
each is full and filled with scent and color and texture

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Skin Melvin

your skin melvin you must accept can never be the color of the clouds
the sun
the moon and the stars

but do not be dismayed your color is the earth where all the other poets
of this universe
write
breathe
and thrive

it is my color too neither is there a shying for shame
nor a need for pride

i am just comfortable by just being
myself.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Smile

your smile
does not have any story if it has any it speaks of how it is owned by the power
of silence

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Sorrow And My Sorrow

your sorrow and my sorrow
are not really ours to keep.
They belong to the earth, to the heart of the earth inside its beautiful bosom.

let us leave them just right there, secure and honed.

we are leaving now to another sphere, the one that we see in our dreams the more colored ones feel the excitement, keep yourself poised to something more lasting more divine.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Stone

Now Loneliness bites you and you go out of the house
alone

You will ask the fresh wind to cool you perhaps trying to find out where happiness
can be found

I am not going out and i shall be content with what bites me which can no longer hurt after all these years nothing pains me anymore

no one can inflict Not even the dreaded Loneliness
of the House

i am no longer human you feel me rightly so

for i have become your stone

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Story

children are prohibited to attend burials death is taboo
in their young minds

once there was a child who was in vacation in Mexico and saw murder, death and injustice

the child went crazy seeing such a reality

in our place however children already know what a revolution is they are trained to fire the guns and aim it at soldiers their parents are proud of them and when they die they are hailed as the new heroes of this goddem republic

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Struggles And My Own

we climb this cliff and up there let us see what is best for us you think about something else like jumping off while i stay and ponder about the meaning of the climbing the significance of cliffs

if you jump off and you think you fly away like a bird
just like that
that is your choice

if i remain here like a stone or a vine or a worm and think that there is something here worth the stay that is my choice too

oh, you fly away like a bird
and i am left
with all the guilt you are leaving me how can you be so treacherous and so unkind?

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Stupidity And Gullibility

who can love still those who betray you?
the relatives take advantage of your goodness,
you lose
and surrender
to their fraudulent fancy

who can still love all of them despite
the odds?

you are never tired
i envy you
for you still love them truthfully and

so God in his Infinite Goodness
too does not tire
giving you all this blessings

for you can love you still despite all your gullibility
and stupidity?

Only God loves
a Forrest Gump.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Thoughts

your thoughts
are keys
to the locks of my doors that i closed a long time
ago

you open them
one by one
and give life at once to the dusty floors

your thoughts
make mine open to the wind
to the sun

i could have been a broken house until your thoughts
came like hammers
and saws

now i have a garden of flowers too roses bloom
because of you

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Three Words

you write about three words, and i predict them from the
beginning,
i look at how your name spells letters arranged
so easy to remember
and you hint
about the three words that i also know....

i know you mean
i love you..
cute, tickle me, like high school sweethearts
you like it
giggling words
i love you

but grow a little bit, grow the length of my arms and muscles on my thighs grow the nails
in my fingers
some dirt in there
some stains
in my hands

grow some more yes, have white hairs and wrinkled forehead and trembling hands

and some sad stories as you go along some griefs
that you cannot contain move on
with such words as i quit
i am fed up

move on, grow, let time eat you bloat in silence
store everything
inside your chest
and hit it with your fists

do not cry
toughen your jaws
have a rope ready loosen it a bit
for a while
on the benefit of a
doubt
something that is reasonable

now, think deep
thoughts
and inhale more air

then exhale
tell me, what are those three words in your throat?

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Unmatched Holiness........ to bow my head

kneel down
and admit that
after all
i am as human
as you
erring in the dignity of our humanity

after which
we understand
those who live
and die before us, those who never said a word, those who merely gaze at
the faults of
other people,

our frailties
are our crowns
of glories
our way of keeping the stones
under the house
not throwing them to the new adulterer in this
worn out village

we understand now
the meaning of dusts
the implications of our common sins
we cooperate now
with the union of forgivers
we know, we keep all these things unwritten, untold, uncomplaining and when we face our God we are ready with our simplest answers: we have sinned and we are always the undeserving worshipers of your unmatched holiness.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Way Of Ignoring I Tell You Won't Work

you hide there
oh i see you, you leave oh you cannot you are so silent
i hear you you are so sad and lonely and so unpredictable these days and i always see you where ever you are.. sorry, so sorry but all road lead to me now.
you cannot deny me
i have become the air invading your lungs and kidneys shaped like the beans we eat everyday.

how can you ever evade me when i always remember you?
don't you wonder why you always bite your tongue everytime you say you like to forget me? that you love him and that you are getting married on the month of June?

how can you ever forget someone who has told you that love has still meaning even in prolonged absence?

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Window Is Open And You Gaze Into A World Abandoned outside the wind howls and the skies are dark and the roads are empty your window is open and you gaze into a world abandoned and then you create what is not there the stars appear and some birds are late for their roosting pass you by like a group of leaves blown by the western wind and then you make the rain in your mind, as the frogs begin to croak as the fireflies take shade around the tree facing your house and the crickets too, on the bushes, make their songs.

RIC S. BASTASA
Your Words Are Here

your words are here	hey are waiting for you	hey are asking where you are living now

they are told that you live in that far house	hey went there walking
from morning till night
only to find out that you are not there anymore

they are now asking for justice and the fulfillment of the reason why you released them from the prisons of your mouth

RIC S. BASTASA
i can't explain why i did not utter the right word to sum up my years and all about me to you my lips trembled my teeth gritted

i begin to lose sight of you the fear is there after an earthquake the honesty could have started its journey into you

there is only one word i need but i never uttered it i simply can't for many nights i think about it what was murky begins to clear itself like i am a strainer

light switches in my window if if were really for you, why should my lips tremble why should my teeth grit and make that harsh sound of distrust?

now i understand it is not you yet, there must be another one yet to come

where i can look at myself and you straight to the eye where i can easily utter the word for all my years and passing if it were you, i do not even have to tell it. if it were you, there is no need for any word.

we could have touched our souls gently, easily, without any effort at all.

RIC S. BASTASA
You're Right

U travel alone
Everyone's busy

When u aryv there U recall some names & then u text
Them
One by one

There's no response
Even from ur Close friend

u realize

It is right
U travel alone

Ther's simply no one out there Who
Is true to u

RIC S. BASTASA
You'Re So Hot

my love is like fat
and you're so hot
for me
day and night
you burn me with heat
and i am
melting away

RIC S. BASTASA
Yours Is Too Crude

i felt the surface
yours is crude, too superficial but i do not mind

i keep touching it and slide my hands around the edges of your thing and then i reflect upon what i have been doing

yes, yours is more like mine crude, superficial

straightforward, and flowing

soft like sky blue linens and cheap for the mindless public but we continue doing it

day by day

truly, sincerely, and therapeutically

what we do
does not kill us anyway

in any way we have found expression in words

and pity (and love perhaps?) yet look at us we do not appear as beggars wearing dark glasses and holding a tin can on our hands

we are here
to speak but i guess

we never beg
for ears

we have legs to stand throughout this agony

and then the children
come around us

wondering if we are humans confused if they too shall be like us everyday we keep repeating what we are

and then the world knows but keeps on spinning

the morning light still lands on the lines of our open palms

RIC S. BASTASA
Yulita

she is coming home in bagong silang to claim

what rightfully belongs to her as a birthright

the coconut land of her father who never married her mother who eloped with a much younger man

in the village where the sound of geckos outlive the songs of the cicadas the silence of the mayas.

RIC S. BASTASA
he passes by the house though there is a doorbell he calls my name (in fact, he is shouting that there is a man with a covered face overtaking him and takes refuge in the flowering bushes beside the fence) i compromise and pretend that i agree with him he is drunk, his wife left him, his children too and lives in the old house
all alone,

and so where is the man? he says it is a shadow a robust one, and it is running too fast past him he is tipsy, his curly hair is glistening with oil i mean it is unwashed for days he is with a gay friend, a transvestite and more beautiful than his wife there is no man, there is no shadow, i know, that he is lost, there is nothing to fear but he has all these fears of insufficiency, the incapacity to know what the real problem

is.
My house is fenced. I cannot invite one like him and have a drink.
I give him a bottle of whiskey, and tells his transvestite friend to take him to the old house, now at least, he is not alone anymore someone is warm, someone loves him now, perhaps higher than his dog, that waggles its tail as soon as the front door is opened.

RIC S. BASTASA
Yvette

what we like in her is her naivete

she snobs you when you are not needed

yet all smiles when she has a request

brought in the strictest principle of utilitarianism

sometimes you feel
that you are nothing but a used

or second-hand thing,

after she drops you like that hot potato her fingers fold

today i meet
and i am ready for once to slay this monster with all my own fire.

i will burn
and vanish her forever.

RIC S. BASTASA
he steps out the door of the house it is late and he walks wherever his feet carry him he wants to be irresponsible about what to do with himself he bathes himself with the light of the moon sits under the tree on the grass it is always this way solitude and loafing of thoughts he looks at the moon and once again stares at its craters its round smiling face glistening in the middle of this darkness all veins of rivers and cliffs and creeks he loses himself in these thoughts so faraway as distant as the stars are tiny these excruciating details of his pain he goes wherever these pains take him

he does not mind anymore

but soon all these will be over he will be oblivious about what happens for the moment he takes his hands and open them before him under the light of the moon he sees the lines of his palm he wakes up from the moonlight stupor he traces now
where for God's sake, where is the trail that now must lead him to joy

RIC S. BASTASA
Zamboanga

A spoiled brother who gets what he wants
as always has made you a ghost town again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Zanny On Top Of Her Hill

zanny stands on top of the hill faces the sun and makes a promise

never shall poverty harm her
again
never shall her lowliness humiliate her

she holds the money now from whatever trace it comes
it does not matter anymore

she knows the principle now:
she who holds the money holds the power.

RIC S. BASTASA
Zapped

i had to zap the system
and completely rebuild
from backups

back off.

RIC S. BASTASA
and then he asked about all these things:

must you
have heard about the ten deaf dwarfs of the islands of Acidophiles?

the sound of one hand clapping on the hills of Pedophilisimones?

in his innocence he prostrates himself upon the ground and listens to the ears of the earth the hands of some roots buried underneath

it is Zen
and the doZen
and the
froZen moments of ZenO

He shakes his head rising up and that is what happens when he finally gets his much deserved Zero, the illegitimate brother of Zorro.

RIC S. BASTASA
Zen Going And Coming And Going

it is just the coming and
going

nothing affects me in the coming neither am i touched by the
going

i watch, i stay, i leave, i know where to go but there is no way of telling

RIC S. BASTASA
the sound
of one hand clapping cannot be written
it can only be heard
as your finger
points to the moon
at night.

RIC S. BASTASA
Monday through Saturday recreation vacation cruise camping nightlife

and on Sundays morning church
for an hour
and then back to the pick-up
picnic on the beach
white sands
and warm sun
in this tropical island of so much fun and run

cocoanuts and rice cakes and pastries and mild drinks
and barbecue
and steak

this is our way of living letting life slide smoothly in our throats like Tanduay rhum nothing obstructed
no hang-ups

and on Sunday afternoons time to fold
the tent and keep the good and useful things and throw the garbage
of our lives

nighttime again
on our beds
with our loved ones
sleeping
together

snorkling in dreams
love of togetherness and being just one family without wasting any sofa or wood

we just like it sticking
together
through thick and thin

without any cotton or foam

RIC S. BASTASA
he does not like to use numbers and so all his numbers are letters and all his thoughts in numbers are written in letters including the date when his poem is written making it the very title of the same and all his emotions are in letters even though he knows that each feeling has a corresponding number and even the colors are numbered in letters. Blue is the number four. Nine is class. Forty-seven is pride. ninety-nine is not perfect and one hundred is too much for an old aging man like him who likes to arrive at zero and then enjoy his much needed rest. He likes to be happy and wants to sleep, so he begins to write, one, two, three, four, five, six.... and so on and so forth.

autistic savant, they all call him.

RIC S. BASTASA
Zeroing....

back to the desert
finding out that the only dater palm is dead the oasis is gone the caravan of camels and Bedouins fade in the distance the woman in silky veil rides in her black horse in the opposite direction the howling sound of the night shakes the full moon

RIC S. BASTASA
on the train of thought in the middle of darkness at the height of the hours at the apex of longing

i am zipless

at the center of my universe on the hardship of my days on the length of my nights at the thickness of my loneliness

i am zipless

on the nudity of my dreams on the warmth of my hair and skin on the gentleness of my fingers on the taste of my tongue

i am zipless

come, my love, i am open there is no lock to my heart there is a space on my chest there is rest on my pelvis

i am always zipless

RIC S. BASTASA
this place is not a room for sadness sorrow is a stranger here and cannot stay that long there are no sonorous eyes here not a place for emaciated cheeks and unshaven beards this is not the place for mourning no one comes here wearing the black shirt of fasting
this is the place for passion (not promiscuity) this is a private place for our shared whispers the zip-less reunion of two souls not wearing any name tags on their bones when you come here it is because you have decided to be free from morality from the mortality of your prisoners welcome, bare yourself, brace yourself for another experience someone you love shall be summoned to completely make you home again.

RIC S. BASTASA
Zipped

short,
sharp
hissing whizzing sound

zip.

just a passing bullet

RIC S. BASTASA
Zipped Winners

because i am hurt
those who see what happened give way
for me to leave

i walk miles and miles until i dissolve at a distance they will gain an empty space that someone may fill again a little boy points to a disturbance there is an ache, there is something that does not fit no amount of rotation, nothing sort of replacement can cure the twisted view, there is no bone on the neck arms fall to the ground, eyes float in air fingernails are removed and buried on the ground here comes the mockingbird singing a man's song: the black birds fall like dry leaves the winds stop going, the clay hardens into stones here comes mockery, the winners lack the ears theirs mouths sewn like zippers on a bag.

RIC S. BASTASA
Zopped

rhizopod

rhi-zop? ? ? o·dan

(-zap? ? ? d? n)
rhi-zop? ? ? o·dal

rhi-zop? ? ? o·dous-d? s....

com/rhizopod - 10k - 2008-05-03

rhi

zopped

zop

z

(go to page 6
for more details

pass the mooncake

do nt

dnt antng.)

RIC S. BASTASA
Zorro's Face

it was the mask that you identify Zorro with his whip and his black cape his swiftness with his sword and his faithful horse

me too
i have sometimes mistaken the face of sorrow with the mask of Zorro

the whip and blackness of his capes and his faithful horse his wars and losses as mere metaphors

RIC S. BASTASA
did he sing
under the moon?

was she there?
did he stay longer...it

rained, how cold is cold

when love is
not there?

did he still sing?

even if he has died?

RIC S. BASTASA
it is 9:08 in the evening
here in this sleepy town.

though i like the silence sometimes you miss the party.

and so to cope up i watch a Greek merrymaking in You Tube a bearded man is singing and the ladies which blonde hair dance in circles and their hands are joined into one ring of happiness i wish i were a part of the circle another link in the line of joy i do not understand a word but depth within i know what they mean.

RIC S. BASTASA
to embrace this kind of thing
first you have to throw away your education out of the window as though, after all those years, it is something to be dreaded,

then you throw too
your future and so you eventually have none but the present

what past do you have?
nothing, since you have to deny what really happened on that indian summer

now you are an empty glass, and what are you
waiting for?

the hand that pours the wine
the lips that must touch the edge of your glassy existence
the tongue that must taste you
the mouth to drink you into the night

what if you finally break?
so, you have to know,
how passion works....
abundance
seeded
boredom, and

there is this
opulence
crushing grapes
on its feet

taking finally the gun
into its mouth.

RIC S. BASTASA