Sarah Kimberley Blower-Hagan()

I started writing after my sister died. I was taken by Cas and separated from my whole family. I was alone without anyone to help me grieve. At 12 years old I was on the streets because I was not going to be treated like a toy and I wanted to find my other sister. I had no one to talk to so I expressed myself through poetry and was able to work through it all. I had a rough life and have many words to both give motivation as well as to release the pain from my heart.

Sweet Mystery

There was a woman I once knew,
She came and went as the winds blew.
Behind her smile was a secret sorrow.
Here today but gone tomorrow.
I knew the risks but didn't care,
Though all the signs said beware!
As the night came and away went the sun,
I asked myself if it was done.
Who was this woman? Sweet mystery.
I wished only to see her free.
I gave her friendship, I gave her trust.
But in the end it turned to dust.
Do we only see our own projections?
A broken mirrors own reflection.
Are there wounds that never heal?
That we will always have to feel.
Is there love is it real?
Is there really a sacred seal?
These answers are a mystery
Humbled and blind I cannot see.
I think it's time to let her be.
I think it's time to set her free!

Loss

I hope your soul is flying flying free,
I wonder if you still think of me?
You gave me courage and gave me strength you helped me no matter what length
You have done a lot for my kids and me
I hope your soul is flying free
