

Poetry Series

Sasan Parsi
- poems -

Publication Date:
2015

Publisher:
Poemhunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive

Sasan Parsi()

Sasan Parsi is an author, actor and director. He was born in 1975 in Iran. He is graduated from 'Samandarian theater academy' in 1998. In 1995 he also started to study software at 'azad university' in Iran but he left it after 3 years.

Conversation With Lord

Oh Lord, there are too many wide-awake people here, come here
Their heart has been given to the others and they walk cheery
You will never be confused for a blink, a look or a smile
People praise smile for the kindness, here
Oh Lord, remember here, if you see a light at your throne
People drag the sun, light and fire to the corner of the rooms, here
Manifestation of "I" or "You" will never be seen between us
People do not understand "I" but do love each other, here
The gardener sows and nobody picks who wants to enter to the heart of a coquette for a second
The flowers worth on plants, they seat the coquettes in rosary forever, here
Oh Lord, boast this creation named "Human" as much as you want or even you can
From now, our world will be named "Paradise" if you are here, come here, come here

Sasan Parsi

Stay With Me

Come and whisper your pleasing deep affection tonight
Your silence is too heart-rending
Everything is just excruciation in this trackless desolate
Pigeon is fluttering up and down in cage, no way
So, the wet tearful eyes will not sleep till aurora tonight
But when the memory of you is coming, then
To craze of your drunkenness eyes, a potation of your spaceless love
The chalice is overfilled of your pure wine chignon
So coquette like the redness of a rose in your charm and sorcery breeze
If you look at me for an instant
If you warble the ORAMAN* sing
I will lose all my necessity in your embrace at a moment Hang the Singing to the smell of purple and till the rain, stay with me, stay with me.

*Oraman: An old persian song.

A translation of a Persian poem.

Sasan Parsi